What is the secret of this strong hold the Christian Herald has upon the affections of these good folks, who bear voluntary testimony to its excellence? Well, it is really no great secret after all. It has something for everybody—something that each individual wants and which appeals strongly to his needs. Many cherish a desire for personal connection in Christian work, and it shows them the way. It has assisted many to enter the ministry, and others to get training for missionary service. To tens of thousands it has opened a door whereby they may keep in touch with the work of the Kingdom. For more than a generation, the Christian Herald Family has been a splendid illustration of the virtue and power of union for Christian service.

A WONDERFUL STORY

The growth and development of this wonderful Household is a story of noble self-denial, of spiritual adventure, of the very romance of soul-winning and life-saving. The "Crusades for Christ's sake" which they carried into many lands, and which they are now carrying into half a score countries that are suffering through the Great War, will pass into history as the basis of the vast and far-reaching system of benevolence which now characterizes the United States above all other nations.

But there are other reasons even more powerful in securing for the Christian Herald the affections of its readers. It is the one great interdenominational Christian family magazine on this continent, and it stands pre-eminently as America's greatest religious journal. In its sermonic forum all the denominations are represented by their ablest and soundest preachers. It preaches the living Gospel with boldness and fidelity, and applies it to the daily needs of more than a million souls.

We feel the grave responsibility attached to such a ministry, and we appreciate in the highest sense the splendid opportunity it opens up for spiritual service. That it is a blessing to many is proved by evidence we are constantly receiving. And for all such results we give the glory to Him whose hand is visible in the work, as it has been ever since the first issue of the Christian Herald thirty-eight years ago.

In the field of religious discussion, in the Sunday School, in Evangelism, in Home and Foreign Missions, in the Young People's Societies and in the wonderful activities of the Prayer League, the Christian Herald reaches out to widely distributed spheres of religious activity. These are too well known to need description here.

THE SECULAR SIDE

Turning to the secular side, it affords a great variety of entertainment and information. It has often been said that a membership of the Christian Herald Family Circle is equivalent to an education. It takes its readers out of their own narrow environment and places before them the panorama of modern world progress. The war, the great movements in philanthropy, in social uplift, in economics, in temperance and prohibition, all receive due recognition. The best things in the literature of today are presented: charming serial stories, short tales of human interest, poetry, music, letters of travel are all included in the weekly menu, which is varied enough to suit the whole Family.

If it be true, as the old proverb says, that "reading maketh a full man," it is not stretching a point one particle to assert that reading the Christian Herald makes a well-informed man or woman, for no noteworthy event occurring anywhere is overlooked. Whoever reads it regularly every week keeps well abreast of the times.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD FAMILY

But greater than all, and better, and far more precious than anything we have yet stated, is the fact that it brings Christ into the Home, whether it be in a populous city or out on the lonely prairie, and it gives in every column and on every page His teachings, pressed home to the eager souls of men and women.

These are the reasons why the Christian Herald has so many friends and which explain its hold upon the hearts of all who read it.

The Christian Herald is read every week by over 2,000,000 persons living in over 300,000 homes. If so many people like this paper so well there MUST be a convincing reason why YOU should read it also.

NEW BIBLE PICTURE CONTEST

The Christian Herald is just closing its Bible Picture Contest in which over 60,000 persons took part and in which 419 prizes were offered. Pictures of events in the Bible were published each week in the Christian Herald and readers were asked to send in for each picture the most appropriate Bible verse. The plan was most successful as may be evidenced by the following testimonials:

"Although I may not receive one of the prizes I shall never be sorry I entered the Contest. The help I received in placing different characters and incidents in the different books of the Bible already has been a reward to me, as I have always found this a difficult thing to do heretofore. Wish we might have something similar for the coming winter." (C. M. S., Alma, Kans.)

Here is another:

"It is my soul's delight to read the Bible and hunt out appropriate verses, not for the money only but for the real joy I get out of it. I love the Christian Herald—a lot of good reading and interesting. I hope you will have another contest soon." (Mrs. J. W., Berlin, Mich.)

These are only two of many thousand letters which we have received commending the Bible Picture Contest. So great has been its popularity and so many requests have been made for a repetition that we intend starting a second Bible Picture Contest at once. If you desire to enter this Contest for $5,000 worth of cash rewards, you should write for particulars AT ONCE.

Subscription Price of The Christian Herald until Nov. 10, 1916, is $1.50 a Year

Subscription Price of The Christian Herald after Nov. 10, 1916, will be $2.00 a Year

} YOU SHOULD AT ONCE
SUBSCRIBE

Address THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

832 Bible House, New York

05
A M M

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS LIBRARY
DEC 8 1916

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

Vol. 74

DECEMBER, 1916

No. 12

THE ADORING MAGI

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY, NEW YORK.

H. E. FRITZ, DES.

Make This a Happier Christmas

by giving BOOKS which have a practical value—books which outlive the mere gift and prove the giver.

Miss Phena

By FLORA SWETNAM
With Drawings by ALBERT MATZKE

Miss Phena is one of those whole-souled individuals who make you wish the whole world was made up of just such people. A book for boys and girls.

Cloth, 12mo. 5x7½ inches. 182 pages. Jacketed. Price, net, $1.00 postpaid.

The House of Chimham

By EDGAR WHITAKER WORK, D. D.

This is a Christmas classic which has delighted many thousands of readers. It would be hard to find a choicer gift book for the Christmas-tide than this beautiful setting of an old familiar story.

12mo, 5¼x7¾ in., 55 pages. Cloth, gilt top, boxed, net, 50 cents; by mail, 58 cents. Basket cloth, plain edges, net, 25 cents; by mail, 33 cents. In Envelope Booklet style, net, 15 cents; by mail, 17 cents.

When the Blind Saw

By DAVID de FOREST BURRELL
With Illustrations by R. E. TODHUNTER

A blind beggar lad on the Bethlehem road and his friend, one of the shepherds, set the scenes for this beautifully told and exquisitely arranged Christmas narrative. A jacket appropriately worded carries the gift sentiment and takes the place of a card.

Boards, 16mo. 4x7½ inches. Price, net, 50 cents postpaid.

Tom Kenyon, Schoolboy

By M. HARDING KELLY

This is a capital book to use as a Christmas present for any real live boy, for in this story there is plenty of adventure; and there is a portrayal of character development which cannot fail to act as a stimulus to higher living.

Cloth, 12mo. Colored inlay. Colored illustrations. Price, net, 50 cents; by mail, 60 cents.

In David's Town. By David James Burrell, D.D.
A narrative full of delightful thoughts for the Christmas-time. With four beautiful half-tone illustrations. Cloth and gold, gilt top, 12mo, 86 pp. Price, net, 50 cents; by mail, 58 cents.

The Most Beautiful Thing in the World. By Fletcher Harper Swift.
With four illustrations by George Alfred Williams. Lavender cloth and gold decorations. 12mo, 46 pp. Net, 50 cents; by mail, 54 cents.

Songs for the Little Ones at Home.
Poetical collection. Cloth, with colored inlay. Order decorations. 12 full-page illustrations. 15 songs set to music. 12mo, 256 pp. Net, 50 cents; by mail, 54 cents.

This Wonder-World. By Agnes Gibbons.
A good Christmas present for a boy or girl. Bound in blue cloth, gold and white stamping. 15 illustrations. 12mo, 212 pp. Net, 75 cents; by mail, 85 cents.

The Boy Next Door. By Jean K. Baird.
A fascinating story of a mining town among the Alleghenies, presenting some beautiful characters amid the rugged scenes around which the tale is set. With frontispiece. Cloth, 12mo, 214 pp. Price, net, 50 cents postpaid.

The Junior Parish. By Rev. Herbert W. Lathé.
Contains seventy-four short, crisp sermons to boys and girls. Cloth, 12mo. 278 pp. Price, net, $1.00 postpaid.

At Opening Doors. (A Christian Endeavor Story.) By Howe Benning.
"A charming story of Christian Endeavor life." With frontispiece. Cloth, 351 pp. Price, net, 75 cents postpaid.

The Radiant Morn. By Dr. A. T. Schofield.
A thoughtful little book that sounds a deep, true note of harmony and happiness. White cloth and marbled paper. Gilt top, red page border. 12mo, 115 pp. Price, net, 50 cents; by mail, 58 cents.

Every Day. By Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D.
Provides a delightful reading for every day in the year. Poetic and beautiful; these readings give an uplift and zest to the day's living. Silk cloth, 12mo, 366 pp. Price, net, $1.25 postpaid.

Look Alive! By Amos R. Wells.
Entertaining stories of some wide-awake people. Cloth, illustrated, 12mo, 168 pp. Price, net, 50 cents; by mail, 58 cents.

The Sunday School. By Margaret E. Sangster.
Cloth, 12mo, 200 pp. Price, net, 50 cents postpaid.

Where Heaven Touched the Earth. By Cortland Myers, D.D.
Colored illustrations, 12mo, 239 pp. Price, net, $1.00; by mail, $1.10.

Talks to Boys. By E. A. Hunter.
Cloth, 12mo, 157 pp. Price, net, 50 cents postpaid.

Talks to Girls. By E. A. Hunter.
Cloth, 12mo, 132 pp. Price, net, 50 cents postpaid.

Journeying in the Land Where Jesus Lived. By Gerard B. F. Hallock, D.D.
Profusely illustrated, cloth, 8vo, 302 pp. Price, $1.00, net, postpaid.

Dear Old Stories Told Once More. By Faith Latimer.
Forty Bible stories with full-page fine tinted illustrations, cloth, quarto, 164 pp. Price, net, 75 cents postpaid.

The Self-Explaining Bible.
With introduction and notes. Specially written foreword by Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman. Contains an outline of the harmony of the Gospels and many other desirable helps. Size of page 10x6¾ inches. An ideal family Bible. Bound in Keratol, red edge, boxed; net, $2.50 postpaid. Bound in French Morocco, divinity circuit, Keratol lined, red under gold edge, headband and marker, boxed; net, $5.00 postpaid.

The New Testament with Notes.
With full explanations, helps and illustrations on every page, like the complete Self-Explaining Bible. Pocket edition. Weighs only 11 ounces. Bound in French Morocco. Price, net, $1.00; by mail, $1.08.

Five Christmas Envelope Booklets. All uniform in size but different designs.

How They Came to Bethlehem
A Christmas Vision
The Hermit's Christmas
By the Roadside
The Man Who Never Heard of Christmas
15c. apiece

ALL FIVE FOR 60c. POSTPAID

Any of these books will be forwarded, postpaid, on receipt of price, and money will be refunded if for any reason you are not satisfied with the workmanship of a book and return it unread. Send today for 96-page catalog.

We also carry a full line of unusually attractive Christmas Cards.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY, Park Ave. and 40th St.
New York

The American Messenger

"Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Luke 2:10

Vol. 74. No. 12

DECEMBER, 1916

Copyright, 1916, by American Tract Society.

Terms: 50 cents per annum
Single copy, 5 cents

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

PUBLISHED MONTHLY

BY THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

OFFICERS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President.

JOHN HENRY JOWETT, M.A., D.D., Vice-President.

JUDSON SWIFT, D.D., General Secretary.

LOUIS TAG, Treasurer.

REV. HENRY LEWIS, Ph.D., Recording Secretary.

All of the above-named officers should be addressed at Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Rev. David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.

Rev. Charles Carroll Albertson, D.D.

Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.

Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D.

Rev. George Ernest Merriam.

Entered at the Post Office in New York as second-class matter.

Our Christmas Issue

We are glad to present to our readers what we believe they will find to be an unusually attractive Christmas issue. Among the exceptional features of this number may be mentioned the splendid reproduction of the picture, "The Adoring Magi," by A. Edel-felt, which adorns the front cover page, the striking Editorial Contribution by Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D., entitled, "The Child of Bethlehem and the Child of the Home," which sets before us in a most attractive way a theme of particular appropriateness for the Christmastide, and the very able and timely article entitled, "Our Debt to the Pilgrim Fathers," by Rev. Warren Graham Partridge, D.D., which is peculiarly significant in view of the preparations already begun for the celebration of the Pilgrim Ter-centenary, which is to be observed in the year 1920.

Other features of this issue which are in harmony with the Christmas season, upon which we are entering, include the fascinating story, "Pete's Christmas Eve," by Felicia Buttz Clark, the story, "How Her Opportunity Came," by Sarah N. McCreery, which appears on Our Young Folks' page, and the charming poems, "At the Feet of the Christ Child," by Grace E. Craig, and "The Tidings of Old," by Daisy D. Stephenson.

In addition to its distinctive Christmas features this issue contains much other interesting and valuable reading matter. Various announcements concerning our Special Calendar Offer, our Special Combination Subscription Offers and our attractive Premiums are made in different parts of the paper and to these statements we invite the attention of all our friends.

With this issue go our very best wishes to every reader of the AMERICAN MESSENGER for a Merry Christmas. We hope that the Christmastide may bring to every home the benediction of the Christ, whose birth we celebrate, and that into every heart there may come the consciousness of the presence of the Prince of Peace.

✻ ✻ ✻

Bible Work is Prospering

The recent annual meeting of the New York Bible Society, of which Rev. Dr. George William Carter is Secretary, shows that the work of circulating the Scriptures in the metropolitan area is being carried on both vigorously and efficiently. The annual report showed that 320,715 Bibles were distributed during the year, and that the Society has furnished the Scriptures in fifty-three languages and in the raised type for the blind.

Copies of the Bible have been given to immigrants landing at Ellis Island and a record number of volumes have been presented to the seamen entering New York Harbor.

Announcement was made that on the evening of Bible Sunday (December 10, 1916), the anniversary sermon for the New York Bible Society will be delivered by Bishop Luther B. Wilson in St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church, New York.

Bible Sunday, it is stated, will be observed by thousands of churches of all denominations throughout the country. This is an admirable plan, for in this present age there is a marked tendency toward the neglect of the Scriptures and the nation-wide observance of Bible Sunday should do a great deal to overcome this tendency and to restore the Bible to its proper place in the hearts and homes of the American people.

✻ ✻ ✻

The Temperance Victory

A most pleasing result of the recent elections is the victory for prohibition of the liquor traffic in four States of the Union, together with the election of "dry" governors and legislatures in two additional States, which are expected to adopt legislation favorable to the establishment of prohibition.

As a result of this sweeping temperance victory there are now twenty-five States which may be counted as dry. In other words over half of the States in the Union are now ranged on the side of prohibition, and the temperance movement has assumed proportions which make it seem possible that prohibition will become a national issue in the next presidential election.

It is an encouraging fact to remember that a large majority of all the counties in the United States are already in the prohibition column and that about two-thirds of our entire population are living in areas which are under prohibition régime.

It is to be hoped that the advocates of temperance will go forward bravely in their efforts to free our land from the curse of the drink traffic and that they will not relax their efforts until every saloon is banished from our land and every community has been freed from the domination of the liquor power.

✻ ✻ ✻

Systematic Benevolence

Systematic benevolence is in line with the teachings of the Scripture both of the Old and New Testaments. It is also in accord with the modern ideas of order and efficiency which have been so largely adopted in the business world and which are finding their way into Christian Endeavor circles and other fields of Christian activity.

One of the best aids to the promotion of systematic benevolence is the so-called "Every Member Canvass," which has been adopted in a large number of churches of different denominations. The purpose of the Every Member Canvass is to enroll every church member in some plan of systematic giving. Its goal is "An offering every Sabbath, presented as an act of worship; from every member, according to ability; for every cause, at home and abroad, according to need."

The results of the Every Member Canvass are shown not only in increased gifts but in a quickened interest in giving, which is perhaps the most vital and beneficial feature of the plan.

We commend the Every Member Canvass to every church, where systematic benevolence has not been brought to its maximum of efficiency. It is a plan for developing the financial strength of the Church of God which experience has shown to be exceedingly effective.

✻ ✻ ✻

A Christmas Ship

In view of the distressing facts which have been brought to light concerning the awful conditions under which the Armenians and Syrians are existing in Turkey, the statement that a Christmas Ship will be sent for the relief of their pressing necessities comes as most welcome news.

This Christmas Ship is a United States Government collier, which is being refitted so as to carry under proper sanitary conditions the stores of food which are to constitute its cargo.

The preparations for furnishing this ship with its load of sorely-needed supplies are being made by the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief, aided by the Federal Council of Churches and various relief organizations.

The Christmas Ship will sail about December 1st, and it is estimated that its cargo of foodstuffs will represent more than a quarter of a million of dollars.

With this ship will undoubtedly go the prayers of all the Christians of our land that the terrible massacres of the Armenians may cease, and that those who have survived the recent slaughter may be enabled to make a fresh start in life.

✻ ✻ ✻

A Notable Anniversary

The two hundredth anniversary of the First Presbyterian Church of New York City will be celebrated during the week beginning December 3, 1916. This anniversary is of particular interest since it marks the bi-centennial of Presbyterianism in the metropolitan district, and it will therefore be observed by every church in the New York Presbytery.

Rev. Howard Duffield, D.D., is the pastor of this historic church and this anniversary will mark the completion of his twenty-fifth year in the pastorate of the "Old First," as the church is familiarly and affectionately called. Among the distinguished speakers who will participate in this anniversary are Rev. Dr. John A. Marquis of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, the Moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America; Dr. William Henry Roberts, the Stated Clerk of the Presbyterian Church, and Rev. Harlan G. Mendenhall, D.D., Moderator of the New York Presbytery and of the Synod of New York.

✻ ✻ ✻

Holiday Shopping

There is a large field for applied Christianity in connection with the Christmas shopping which is so striking a feature of the holiday season, especially in our great cities.

Christian people would do well to remember that they may exemplify the spirit of the Master in many ways as they carry on their Christmas shopping. There is a tendency to leave a great deal to the last minute, the result of which is a crush in the large department stores during the few days preceding Christmas, which makes shopping difficult for the customer and doubly trying for the sales people. Much of this congestion might be avoided, if people would do their shopping earlier in the month, and thus lighten the burden of labor which is otherwise crowded into the week before Christmas. A great deal of night work is also forced upon tired clerks and other employes by the thoughtlessness of those who leave their shopping until the evening hour instead of attending to it in the earlier hours of the day. Shop early in the month and early in the day—this is a good way to anticipate the Christmas spirit and to practice the Golden Rule.

Christian people may also show their devotion to the teachings of Christ in many other ways in connection with their Christmas shopping. A pleasant word spoken to the clerk at the counter, a gentle manner in the midst of the holiday crowd, thoughtfulness for the management of the great commercial establishments, whose resources are often taxed to the utmost in the congestion of the holiday rush, these are some of the ways in which a follower of Christ may reveal the altruistic spirit that should distinguish all those who bear the Master's name.

✻ ✻ ✻

"What Will You Give?"

It is a promising sign that in the Christmas celebrations of many Sunday Schools the emphasis is given to the question, "What will you give?" instead of, "What do you expect to receive?"

Most Christian workers have come to realize that the chief purpose of a Christmas festival should be to stimulate the children of the Sunday School in wise plans of beneficence for those who are poorer and less fortunate than themselves. And the result of the adoption of such plans for Christmas celebrations has been most gratifying, both in the matter of increased benefactions for the poor and needy and in the cultivation of the spirit of generosity in the young folks who have found it a real pleasure to try to help others instead of concentrating their attention on their own self-gratification.

✻ ✻ ✻

Prayer for the Federal Council

The third quadrennial session of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America will be held at St. Louis, Mo., during the present month. Inasmuch as matters of the greatest importance in our national and international life will be under consideration at this gathering by the assembled representatives of thirty evangelical denominations, it is requested that on Sunday, December 10, while the Council is in session, intercession be made at the Throne of Grace that the wisdom of God and the Spirit of Christ may guide this body in all its deliberations and plans for service.

Messages for Modern Men

BY REV. FRANK B. McALLISTER

The Sin of Our Time

O wise prophet will depreciate money. The value of it in civilized society is too unquestioned to admit of debate. It is the inordinate love of money that is a root of all kinds of evil. From the sin of covetousness may the good Lord deliver us all, rich and poor alike!

We are told that the United States has produced the world's first billionaire. The individual in question has been the object of much caustic criticism, but a great deal of this criticism has come from individuals who would themselves step into the millionaire class tomorrow, if they could. As a matter of fact, covetousness is peculiar to no one rank of society. One man may be as much in love with ten dollars as his neighbor is with ten thousand. A nickel held close up against the eye may shut out the sun as completely as a gold eagle.

Against covetousness our Lord sounded constant and emphatic warning. One might suppose that other vices would have called forth His strongest rebuke. Impurity, drunkenness, pride and bigotry, all of these surely were rampant in the Palestine of long ago. Covetousness, we might think, could find but small place in the minds of a population that wrung a meager living from fishing nets and a niggard soil. Yet, with what earnest reiteration did the Son of Man warn fishermen, shepherds and husband-men that they "beware of covetousness," since a man's life consists not in the abundance of the things that he possesses. Neither the man who, in the Gospel story, built greater barns nor the rich young ruler, who came to Jesus, had many possessions, according to modern standards. Yet each of them was made to sound a warning against avarice.

Behind in how many of the evils that outrage the human conscience can be discerned the glint of the guinea! Slavery was kept in existence, notwithstanding the inner revolt of thousands of the finer-spirited slave-holders, because it was so profitable. Brewers and saloon-keepers are often kind-hearted and approachable men. Yet, despite a secret loathing for their own business, they will not let go of it, because of the big receipts. The love of money is the force behind this colossal iniquity. An arch fiend of the white slave traffic was recently arraigned in a New York court. He admitted that his attraction toward the business was the money that was in it. "Then money was your god, was it?" demanded the prosecuting attorney. The criminal turned fiercely on his inquisitor. "Yes, it was," he almost shrieked; "and what other god do you know?"

Moral obliquity such as that shocks us, as it ought to. Yet covetousness essentially akin to that of the panderer, although not in the same sordid degree, lurks in many a life that is proud of its integrity. The chase for yellow dust may be made in very respectable garments. Before people fully realize it they are caught in the moral maelstrom. They find their property owns them, instead of they their property. A few bank books may gain a strangle hold on their nominal proprietor that only the grave can break.

How then shall we help ourselves and the world into a higher mood? How shall we make a successful stand against this pre-eminent sin of our time? In a word, by finding a right answer to the old question of Jesus, "What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" We must know and deeply feel that a mere abundance of things does not make a life. Let men refuse to be utterly browbeaten by the material necessities of life.

Let us take time each day for the things that nourish and refresh the spirit. Let us have an eye for the wonders of sunrise and sunset. Let us read the evangel of the flowers and understand the language of the birds. Let us know a few good books. Let us cultivate friendship, human and divine. It is surely better, after all, to lay up treasures in heaven than to struggle all one's life to crowd into a bank more funds than one will ever need.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTION

EDGAR W. WORK, D.D.

The Child of Bethlehem and the Child of the Home

BY

REV. EDGAR WHITAKER WORK, D.D.

Pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian Church, New York City

FEW years ago there appeared on the Christmas book tables a new book with the title, "The Child That Jesus Took." The author made use of the incident of the gospels where Jesus, to settle a dispute of His disciples as to who was greatest, took a little child and set him in the midst of the twelve, and lifting him in his arms, said, "Whosoever shall receive one of such little children in my name, receiveth me." In imagination the author followed the history of the child that Jesus took. Surely, child though he was, he could never forget that the Master touched him and put His arms about him. He could never forget His face as He bent over him, or lose the sound of His voice as He spoke tenderly to him.

It was something more than an isolated act of Jesus—His taking a child and setting him in the midst of His disciples. It is the revelation at once of the power and genius of Christianity. It was the same as saying, "Here is a Kingdom that represents innocence, humility, trustfulness, and also hope, energy and the promise of growth. It is the Kingdom of the child forever." Few more significant sentences were spoken by the Master than this—"Except ye become as little children."

And we like to think that this emphasis of childhood by Jesus in deed and word was a reflection of His own childhood. For the first power of the gospel lies back there at Bethlehem, in the Child of the Manger. Those far-reaching words of the prophet, "For unto us a child is born," seem to link our human history to the great purposes of God. "The central figure of Christianity," some one has said, "is a child in its mother's arms." The beginnings of Christianity are rooted in childhood. Christianity can never grow old, because it is the Gospel of the Divine Child and because it is inextricably mingled with the story of childhood and motherhood in all the generations. The Child of Bethlehem and the child of the home—how intimate this relation is. "Jesus saw in the vision of a child," a writer tells us, "a new heaven and a new earth." As Dr. Horace Bushnell says of the child, "The futurity of God's promise is in him, and, by a kind of sublime anticipation, he is accepted in God's supernatural economy as a believer." Christ sees the future material of His Kingdom in the children.

It has required a long time for man to realize how much Jesus meant when He set a child in the midst of the disciples. As we read the history of earlier centuries there seems to be a striking lack of emphasis upon childhood. The Kingdom of God was for grown-up men and women. The records of earlier days have little to say of children. It has often been noticed that Dante in his writings appears to be aware of all things in heaven and earth except childhood. Milton wrote of high things and deep things, but he has little to say of the most simple of all things—the child. We can scarcely forgive the immortal Shakespeare, that whilst he presents on his stage many kinds of characters, the grave, the gay, the comic, the tragic, he seldom deals with little children. It was the fault of his age. Men had forgotten that the Master set a child in the midst.

The artists were more ready to recognize the child than others. Men of genius with paint and brush apparently understood the relation between the Child of Bethlehem and the children of our homes better than the theologians. Often thus in earlier centuries they painted upon canvas the story of the Divine Child. Most often and most fondly they painted the Madonna with her Holy Child, producing for all generations to come those unfading treasures of art gallery, church and home. In each home and school, or well as in each gallery and library, should hang one of these priceless treasures, contributed by an age when life took on new hope, and turned its face toward childhood again.

Literature was much slower to recognize the child. English literature, it has been said, knew not the child until Goldsmith came. Writers before him had been busy with lords and ladies. The child was scarcely in evidence. When Goldsmith published "The Vicar of Wakefield" in 1766, a beautiful picture was presented to the world of parents and their children. "The Vicar," said Goldsmith, "unites in himself the three greatest characters upon earth; he is a priest, a husbandman, and the father of a family." When the Vicar rescued his children from a burning house on one occasion, his words were memorable—"Now let the flames burn on, and all my possessions perish. Here they are, I have saved my treasure." We remember the Roman matron who was well content to be without jewels, because her sons were her jewels.

The real "discovery of the child," in literature, however, came with William Wordsworth, who put many children into his poems, and who wrote:

"Heaven lies about us in our infancy."

Certain great teachers, too, of more than a century past did much to bring the child into prominence. Pestalozzi was one of these. Froebel was another. These men insisted upon the full recognition of the child, in the spirit of Him who said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me." Men had been unconsciously forbidding the child, but such great teachers as these by their methods of teaching won a place for the child. Even Napoleon when he was appealed to in behalf of Pestalozzi's plans, replied curtly that he had something else besides A. B. C.'s to attend to. We are reminded how the Greek orator Demosthenes ridiculed an opponent on one occasion because he was a teacher of little children. How great is the change in our day, when the skilful teacher of children is highly honored among us, and when men endow chairs in colleges and universities for child-study.

Two or three more friends of the children deserve special mention. One of these is Hans Christian Andersen, who wrote many tales about children, as well as for children. Secure is the fame of one who finds his way to the heart of a child, for the child will carry him in sacred memory, until his own grandchildren gather at his knees to hear the fame of his friend perpetuated. Another is Charles Dickens, who has been called "The English father of true reverence for the child." Dickens said, "It is a crime against a child to rob it of its childhood." He made children his heroes and heroines. Who can ever forget Paul Dombey, Little Nell, Tiny Tim or Oliver Twist? He wrote about the schools, and society began to look after both schools and teachers. An army of little children march up and down the pages of Dickens.

He made a mighty plea for the child. When every one else was down on Pip, Joe Gargary put more gravy on his plate. Dickens' idea was that the child is to be won by sympathy, not by hardness.

There is still another friend of children whose name is writ large in history. This is Robert Raikes, the founder of the Sunday School. His first school was started in the year 1781, and when he died in 1811 Sunday Schools had spread throughout England. Probably no other single department of the work of the church has done so much for the Kingdom as the Sunday School. Robert Raikes, like his Master, set a little child in the midst of the disciples.

The influence of the Child of Bethlehem upon the child-life of the world is incalculable. One measure of that influence is found in the spread of education. If our modern cities have public school houses at many corners it is due in a large degree to Christ's example of emphasizing childhood. Since the Son of God came as a little child into the world, there can be no neglect of children where Christ and His teachings are recognized. At the door of every school house, college and university, we can see the Friend of little children standing. Not only so, but He is standing also at the doors of hospitals, orphanages, and other institutions devoted to the care of children. Men have heard His word, "Whosoever receiveth the child, receiveth me," and forthwith they have set themselves to studying the problems of child-life. Our modern charities for little children are among the most Christlike deeds known to men.

Seneca speaks of the "shambles of infants," at the Lactarian column, where wretched beggars exhibited little children with shortened limbs, broken joints and curved backs. But Christ has taught his followers to regard neglected, poor, sick and deformed children, and to deal with them in the spirit of the Master.

In England Lord Shaftesbury, the seventh Earl, did his great work for English children, rescuing thousands from the mines where they were wearing their young lives out. In America Children's Aid Societies have sprung up all over the land in the wake of Charles Loring Brace's wonderful work of rescue and character-building in New York City. Gifted physicians also have studied deeply the diseases and defects of childhood. Doctor Howe in this country began a splendid work for the blind. Three names tell of what has been done by toil, patience and love for children born with apparently insurmountable limitations. These are Laura Bridgman, Helen Keller and Tommy Stringer. Deaf and dumb and blind! Yet loving hearts and skilful hands have unlocked the treasure of such bereft souls as these. When Jesus walked in Palestine there were no hospitals of any kind, but the writer remembers seeing an Ophthalmic Hospital outside Jerusalem on the road to Bethlehem.

Of all the incidents of the gospels, those seem most characteristic where Jesus is dealing with young hearts, as when for instance he listened to a mother pleading for her afflicted daughter, came down from the Mount of Transfiguration and cured a boy over whom his father mourned, entered with Jairus into the chamber of death and lifted up his daughter, stopped a funeral procession on the way, and gave back her son to the widow of Nain.

Nor can we forget the little lad from whom our Lord took his lunch of cakes and small fishes, wherewith to feed a great multitude. Yet most characteristic of all, and most memorable too, is that scene where mothers, bringing their babes to Jesus, were rebuked by the disciples, while the Master himself said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven."

Christian society has yet many lessons to learn from Jesus about the welfare and care of the child. It may be that we have learned more about the child's physical and mental care, than about his spiritual culture. There is vast carelessness in all our communities about the influences that touch the lives of children. The sight of children playing in the streets causes one to tremble, not alone for the physical, but also for the normal peril. The "plain, bare, monstrous walls" that once made the school-house an unattractive place are fast disappearing. But are we as careful as we ought, to follow the child to the street corner, to the places of amusement, to the social circles as well, to see that right influences await him there?

What is the Church doing for the child? A great deal, but much more might be done. For one thing the Church should never forget that Jesus said, "Of such is the Kingdom." The child is close to the Kingdom, even a type of the Kingdom. The child should be taught early the Saviour's love, the fear of sin and the duty of obedience. Religion should be fitted in naturally and easily to the child's life. If Bushnell's idea of having the child "grow up a Christian" can be realized, it is all the better. Some say, leave the child to himself, so far as religion is concerned, and do not try to prejudice him. Coleridge replied to this by saying that he would not leave his garden to itself, lest when he expected strawberries, it might yield weeds. Society's plain duty is to inculcate moral order and religious reverence.

The Church should go much farther. It is one of the chief responsibilities the church to attend to the moral and religious culture of the children. Blessed are the teachers of little children! They shall have their reward. The child is "the heart of the family," and the hope of the church. Bushnell wrote of "peopling the world with a Godly seed," and of "the out-populating power of the Christian stock." The best asset any community possesses is its Christian families and Christian churches. Its schools also may be classed with these provided they are careful about character as well as learning. Frequently parents can do little for their children in the way of money and education. But one thing they can always do—they can set before their children an example of Godly living. The child's first teachers are those in the home. In these hours the child's mind is "wax to receive and marble to retain." It follows naturally that parents are under obligation to give their children religious instruction.

The child should be taught in simple fashion about God who made and keeps him; about Christ who saves him, and about the Holy Spirit who speaks to him. He should be taught the meaning of life in such terms as love, trust, truth, obedience, reverence, fear, honesty and duty. He should be taught to fear God and keep His commandments. He should be made familiar with God's Holy Book, and should be led to reverence it and follow its teachings. He should be taught to love Christ and try to please Him. He should be taught to love the Church and to value its worship. He should be taught love and duty to others, and the great principles of brotherhood and service.

The Church is the adjunct of the home—not the home the adjunct of the Church. If Christian parents would everywhere realize that they have the first work to do for the child, the work of the Church would be much easier. The whole early life of the child should look forward to church membership. The best age of decision is early rather than late. Our Lord was a youth of twelve when he went up to the Temple. Psychologists tell us that religious decision comes most readily between the ages of ten and seventeen. If the Church is wise, it will not fail to draw the children and youth early to Christ.

When Christmas comes everything is done for the child. The babe scarcely out of his cradle must have his Christmas tree. Shall we not be equally anxious that the children of our homes shall come to know the Child of Bethlehem? Happy is the home at this Christmas tide, where Jesus, the Friend of little children, sheds His light and benediction upon the scene of rejoicing, where parents and children together know and love His Name, and set themselves with glad hearts to do His Holy Will.

At the Feet of the Christ-Child.

BY GRACE E. CRAIG.

*The wintry sky is overcast,
And cold and dark the night;
O, little Child of the Christmas Star,
We come to Thee for light!*

*Great sorrows overshadow us
And cruel cares annoy;
O, little Child of the Tidings Glad,
We come to Thee for Joy!*

*From dark temptation's growing power
We seek a swift release;
O, little Child of the Manger Bed,
We come to Thee for peace!*

*The world lies lonely at our feet;
Heaven is far above;
O, little Child of the Angel Song,
We come to Thee for love!*

*Thy smile was sweet for shepherd rude,
And for the mighty king;
O, Holy Christ, we would kneel to Thee
And feel Thy comforting!*

"Love's Millionaires"

BY EMMA YOUNGLOVE.

"Love's Millionaires" who are they? Are they not those who best keep the first and great commandment: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind," and the second, which is like unto it: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself?"

Peter, whose life henceforth was to be a self-sacrificing proclamation of salvation, and John, whose Epistles especially exalt love and whose Gospel, more than any other, reveals the heart of Christ—these men were love's millionaires. When the impotent man appealed to them for help, though they were without silver or gold, yet they had a richer gift, the gift of healing.

Libraries, universities, and hospitals have received great sums of money in the last few years from men who have amassed colossal fortunes. Many sufferers from flood and earthquake, war and pestilence, have been fed and clothed by the munificence of the wealthy. Mission Boards of various churches have been recipients of great benefactions from similar sources. This is good and profitable giving.

But it is true now, as it has always been, that the greater number of those who give a cup of cold water in the name of a disciple are the lowly of earth. There are so many little kindnesses love can bestow—a smile, a glad greeting, a word of encouragement, a welcome to home or church. One hundred million copper cents or twenty million nickles or ten million silver dimes are worth just as much as a million dollars in stocks and bonds. "I never expect to do any great thing, but perhaps if I do a great many little ones it will count just as much in the end," said one of love's mil-lionaires.

"As the Rose"

BY L. D. STEARNS.

When, in the midst of what seems unfathomable darkness and woe, we lift our eyes and catch a glimpse of the light that ever shines from God, then, indeed, we know the meaning of the words, "And the desert shall blossom as the rose."

There is no gloom so deep but God's presence will turn it into brightness. The matter narrows down to the simple question as to whether we open to Him the inner recesses of our lives, or attempt to go our way alone. It rests with every soul who enters the dark places to let Him in, or to shut Him out. And not alone in the shadow, but in the light and the glow of the bright places does He wait to enter the opened door of the soul. To joy, He adds a thousand-fold more joy.

But especially to those who are sad, or weary, or sick at heart does He cry, "I am the Way!" The things left behind were but fleeting, whether held or lost. God, and the things of God, are sure realities. God satisfies, with the deep and abiding satisfaction and peace nothing can shake. Like the dawn, with its faint tint of rose and gold and pink slowly flushing the sky, so, when the soul opens itself to its Maker, the glory that floods it—soon or late—comes in a soft, sweet and ever fuller glow until one comes not merely to accept, but thank Him, for the pain and darkness that paved the way for so wondrous a joy.

Love—personal comfort—this, or that,—are all as nothing when compared with the solemn knowledge, and sweetness, and security that encompass one who, for a rare moment, stands alone with God. One who has so stood knows with a surety which no words and no after experience of life can shake, that GOD IS GOD and His reality is sure as the everlasting hills; because, on the very edge of eternity, he has stood heart to heart with Him, sensing, in a way impossible to put into words, the touch and presence of the Great and Mighty Maker of the Universe.

OUR DEBT TO THE PILGRIM FATHERS

By Warren Graham Partridge, D.D.

It is fitting that every American and every lover of liberty throughout the world should celebrate the landing of the Pilgrims on Plymouth Rock. And every Christian should mark this date as one of the golden mile-stones in the King's highway of civil and religious liberty. It is in December that we celebrate the birth of the Christ-Child. That date is the pivot of the world's history. And it was about Christmas time in the year 1620 A. D. that the infant Church and the infant State were born on the iron-bound coast of New England.

Let us remember, first of all, that the Pilgrims were immigrants. Immigration is today a burning problem in our body politic. So many million foreigners have come to our shores in recent years that statesmen have feared that these hordes from the Old World would strain our institutions to the breaking point. Their evangelization is one of the crying problems to be solved by Americans at this very hour.

Immigrants Who Were a Godsend

But the immigration of the Pilgrim fathers and mothers was a godsend to this New World. Other colonists had landed on our shores before the Pilgrims saw the sandy shores of Cape Cod. Some of these other colonists were adventurers, criminals, and atheists. If such immigrants had been in the majority in the early days in North America, our land had been as Sodom and Gomorrah. But I believe that God Almighty directed the course and the landing-place of the Mayflower, just as certainly as He directed Abraham to emigrate from Ur of the Chaldees, to found a commonwealth in the land of Canaan. That historic ship, with its precious cargo of Christian heroes and heroines, had as its invisible Pilot the same Divine Commander, who in ancient times led the children of Israel, as emigrants, out of Egypt, and directed them through a pathless wilderness; and blazed the way for them with a pillar of cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night.

If we have spiritual vision we should see the Divine Providence and Leadership in American history, just as clearly as we recognize the divine hand in the history and development of the commonwealth of ancient Israel.

So we are not surprised that this finest of the wheat was thrashed with the flail of bitter persecution, and winnowed by the fierce winds of suffering in the Old World. This pure gold was beaten into purity in "merry England." But England was not willing for Independents in religion to be merry in those days!

In 1590 a young man by the name of William Brewster was living in Scrooby, England. He had been appointed postmaster of that village by Queen Elizabeth. But the young man read and thought, and had heard some bold preaching by the Independent ministers. Robert Brown had the courage to preach the primitive Gospel of the New Testament to crowds in London. And Richard Clifton dared to preach a crucified and risen Saviour, even without the authority of a bishop. The young postmaster at Scrooby became an Independent in religion, even when Independency in religious matters lead to a dungeon and the scaffold. John Copping and Elias Thacher were hung because they tried to have a New Testament Church in England. And John Greenwood and Henry Barrow were sent to jail for the same offense.

There was much drunkenness, immorality, idleness and unbelief at this time; and multitudes had forsaken the churches. The Independents in religion were trying to live pure lives, and evangelize England. But the powers of the State and the Church did not wish to be evangelized. John Penry, a Welshman, wrote a pamphlet teaching that every man has an inalienable right to speak and act according to the dictates of his own conscience in religious matters. But on June 7th, 1593, John Penry was taken out of jail and hanged for writing that innocent little pamphlet!

In those trying days William Brewster, the young postmaster, dared to open his old manor-house at Scrooby, on Sunday, and invite his neighbors to hear Richard Clifton, an aged minister of Christ, preach the Gospel. That was very dangerous business in that day; for everybody then was required by law to attend Queen Elizabeth's Church. On June 8th, 1593, Parliament passed a law to imprison for three months "all persons who do not conform to the Church of the Queen." The punishment also included the confiscation of all their property, and perpetual banishment from England. But a boy from Austerfield, by the name of William Bradford, had the conviction and daring to attend the cottage prayer meetings, and to hear the sermons of Richard Clifton in the manor-house of William Brewster. And these two Williams became two of the immortal Pilgrims of Plymouth Rock.

On March 24th, 1603, Queen Elizabeth died and James the First ascended the throne of England. Several hundred ministers in England, at that time, desired to see the Church return to the simplicity and purity of the Apostolic Church of the First Century. And they presented a petition to King James I, asking for these reforms in the Church. The petition was heard at Hampton Court. And King James interrupted them, saying, "I will have one doctrine, one discipline, one religion. I alone will decide. I will make you conform, or I will harry you out of the land, or else do worse—hang you." And after the audience, King James said in joy to the delighted bishops, "I peppered them soundly."

The Pilgrims in Holland

So the men and women who held Gospel meetings in the old manor-house at Scrooby, and elsewhere in England, decided to become emigrants. And they sold their land and property, and migrated to Holland, the only land in Europe, at that time, where they could worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences. They loved England dearly and it almost broke their hearts to leave forever their native land, but principle was worth more to these heroes and heroines than money, or home, or life itself. Before these exiles could reach Holland, there were many months of imprisonment, indescribable hardships, sufferings and persecutions for the men, the women, and the children. But "the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church." William Brewster gave up his post-office and all hopes of worldly success and preferment, and was the leader of the refugees fleeing for the shores of Holland. William Bradford was only nineteen years of age, but he was one of the bravest of the immortals. When this little band of exiles reached Holland they were in a terrible plight, for nearly all their property was destroyed. They were very poor, and among strangers, who spoke a strange language. William Brewster had a fine property, and was the owner of a fine old manor house, but in Holland he became very poor indeed, and taught school for a living. William Bradford became a weaver. Formerly these men owned their own farms and employed laborers, but now they were glad to labor at any trade for their daily bread.

These people worked hard, saved their money, and bought a house for their pastor, John Robinson. And while many of the inhabitants in Leyden are spending much of the time in the beer-houses on Sundays, or having dances in the fields, these strangers go to their Pastor's house, to pray, and sing, and hear a sermon. They call themselves Pilgrims and Strangers in the land. And they have been called Pilgrims to this day.

The historic voyage of the Mayflower across the stormy Atlantic tested the magnificent heroism of these pioneers. They had lived about twelve years in Holland, but they longed to find a country, which they could call their own. The timid and half-hearted had stayed behind, or returned on the ill-fated Speedwell. The one hundred and two Pilgrims on board the Mayflower have immortalized their names in history. Think of the sixty-four days of that perilous and stormy voyage! It seems almost a miracle that the little, creaking sailing vessel did not go to the bottom with its precious cargo of Faith's Immortals. But prayers and trust saved that little ship, as surely as God in the heavens watched over Noah's Ark. For both vessels were freighted with the choicest remnant of humanity in their respective epochs of history.

The "Cornerstone of the American Republic"

The Covenant which the Pilgrims signed in the cabin of the Mayflower is the Magna Charter of civil and religious liberty. Charles Sumner said of that famous Covenant, "It is the first written constitution of government in human history, and the very corner-stone of the American Republic."

Listen how these immortal words reverberate down through the aisles of the centuries, "In the name of God, Amen. We, whose names are underwritten, . . . by these presents, solemnly and mutually, in the presence of God and one another, covenant and combine ourselves together into a civil body politic, for our better ordering and preservation, and furtherance of the ends aforesaid, and by virtue hereof to enact, constitute, and form such just and equal laws, ordinances, acts, constitutions, and offices, from time to time, as shall be thought most meet and convenient for the general good of the colony, unto which we promise all due submission and obedience."

Charles Sumner says again of this Covenant, "Undoubtedly these were the grandest words of government with the largest promise of any at that time uttered." Here at last was government of the people, by the people and for the people. These words marked the birth of democracy in the Western Hemisphere.

On December 21, 1620, the Pilgrims stepped on Plymouth Rock. As they set foot on the American continent they asked God to guide their footsteps in all their transaction; and then after earnest prayer they took a vote as to where they should build their houses. That was the first town-meeting ever held on this continent, which has been recorded in history. It was popular government, the rule of the majority. Here at last in the history of the world was the rule of the common people. And lords, nobles, kings, emperors, and popes had no dictatorship in this new state in the New World! It was the beginning of a new epoch in human history! The words of their venerable Pastor in Holland, John Robinson, had come true, "But I am confident that the Lord hath more light and truth yet to break forth out of His holy word."

The Pilgrims must not be confounded with the Puritans. Both had their splendid qualities. But the Pilgrims were never intolerant. They were a gentle folk, peaceful, gracious and benign. We find among them, at Plymouth, no bigotry, hatred, or persecution. Their little commonwealth existed for seventy-two years; and then it was united with the Puritan Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Senator George F. Hoar said of the Pilgrim of Plymouth, "He hanged no witches, he whipped no Quakers, he banished no heretics . . . He enacted the mildest code of laws on the face of the earth . . . He had no foot of land not fairly obtained by honest purchase. He treated the Indian with justice and good faith, setting an example, which Vattel, the foremost writer on the law of nations, commends to mankind."

The Pilgrims of the Plymouth Colony had the tolerance and philanthropy of Abraham Lincoln, and his kindly spirit, "with malice toward none and charity for All."

We should never forget the sacrifices and sufferings which the Pilgrim Fathers endured for the sake of conscience, education, religion, purity of life, and for civil and religious liberty. During the first winter forty-six of the people died as the result of exposure and poor food. At one time during that first winter only seven had sufficient strength left to nurse the sick and the dying, and to bury the dead. But their fidelity, trust in Providence, and their indomitable courage never gave out. Hostile savages were on every side; but they made a just treaty with the great Indian Chief, Massasoit, which remained unbroken for fifty-four years.

If the devotion, faith, unselfishness, courage, purity, and childlike trust in prayer, of the Pilgrim Fathers existed in America today, we would witness one of the greatest revivals of evangelical religion in the annals of our land.

The Right Intention

BY CORA S. DAY.

A young boy was promenading about the yard on stilts and enjoying himself hugely. His fond big sister did not exactly share his pleasure in the performance.

"If you fall off those awkward things, Bobby, I'm afraid you will have a broken arm or leg to nurse," she said anxiously. Bobby leaned against the porch rail for a moment's rest while he replied:

"Don't you worry about me, Lucille. I don't intend to fall," and away he stalked with sure strides of his long wooden legs.

That is exactly the right way to go about being good. There's a right and wrong way about that, as much as about using stilts. One can wobble along on them, trying not to fall, hoping yet fearing, stepping out timidly, wondering how soon he will trip and come down—and that is usually what happens. Or he can put fears and doubts out of his mind, step out confidently yet with care, too, fix his eye on a goal and make for it, intend not to fall—and he will soon be master of the tricky poles.

So he can set out to be good. He need not keep his eye on the temptations that might upset him. Better fix heart and mind on the right to be attained; put more strength in the intention to be good and less in fears and doubts and misgivings. So he can avoid many a stumble, meet only the unavoidable difficulties, and learn to walk surely in the paths of righteousness.

The Tidings of Old

BY DAISY D. STEPHENSON.

*Beautiful, wonderful Christmas night,
Filled with a radiant, starry light,
Sweet with the song of the angel band,
Winging its way o'er the dreaming land—*

*Telling the shepherds a wondrous thing:—
"Joy and Good-Will are the tidings we bring;
Go unto Bethlehem, follow the Star!"
Thus rang the heavenly message afar.*

*Still we rejoice each glad Christmas morn,
Singing our praise for the Babe that was born;
All through the earth rings the carol again,
Bringing the message of Peace unto men.*

How We May Enjoy Heaven on Earth

By Rev. James Mudge, D.D.

PRIMARILY and essentially, what is heaven? It is a constant vision of Jesus, a vivid sense of the presence of God, and an absolute oneness with the will divine. These are the essential things. Secondary and superficial are the material joys and immunities which we commonly associate with the state of bliss. These may be possessed without conferring any genuine happiness. They may be absent and yet the all-conquering soul, in the very midst of temporal privations and pains may rise superior to circumstances and assert its glorious supremacy, and its unfettered freedom. That the soul when it reaches its fullest development and its largest liberty, will shape to itself a fitting investiture, may be freely admitted, but the soul it is that rules forevermore, and heaven is mainly a matter of its moods.

Heaven begins for us when we begin to love God and gaze into the reconciled face of our Saviour. Heaven expands around us and within us in proportion as we grow in the knowledge and favor of our heavenly Father, in the communion and fellowship of the Holy Spirit and in the perception of, and assimilation to our Lord Jesus Christ. Heaven does not reach its consummation, or take on supremest meaning to us, until our faith and love have attained their highest possible augmentation and our oneness with the divine will is most complete. And this, as we understand it, will not be in the present earthly life. Hence our association of heaven pre-eminently with another state of existence is correct; but it is neither correct nor wholesome to let the entire meaning of the word be monopolized by the future, or to fix our attention chiefly on mere accessories of a spectacular sort that are of minor consequence. The thing that counts is present character not future surroundings.

Faith is heaven. The poet, after describing a stalwart faith, unflinching, unwavering, unshakable by the tempest's might, defiant of all foes and woes, fearless, firm, fixed immutably on God, abiding invincible to the end, does well to exclaim,

"Lord, give us such a faith as this,
And then whate'er may come,
We'll taste, e'en here, the hallowed bliss
Of an eternal home."

This is literally true. It is lack, weakness, and failure of faith, that keeps heaven out of our lives and robs us of our peace and joy. He who says, "I will not doubt, no matter what may happen. I will not doubt though sorrows fall like rain, and troubles swarm like bees about the hive, I will not doubt though all my ships at sea come drifting home with broken masts and sails," such an one lives in heaven and heaven lives in him. If his faith does not fail, his courage will not quail, and God's care will sure avail, whatever may assail.

Love also is heaven—"love divine, all loves excelling, joy of heaven to earth come down," love and the service to which it prompts, the obedience which from it springs. The doing of God's will is the essence of heaven, and that may be done here as well as hereafter; indeed it must be done here if it is to be done hereafter.

He who knows and does and loves the will divine, always, in every thing, without reservation or hesitation, has been brought into a large and wealthy place for which there is no more suitable name than heaven, for it is in this way that there God's will is accomplished. The chief step into this abode of the blessed is through the gate of an absolutely surrendered personality and the stopping of all contention, even the very least and slightest, with God. When one has no controversy with Him at any point, when one is perfectly satisfied with all His arrangements and appointments, all His delays and denials—what is this but Paradise, the inheritance of the saints in light, where there is no darkness at all, no night, no tears and no death? Their tears God wipes away, their sorrow is turned into joy, they find that in His service pain is pleasure, with His favor loss is gain. Their sun no more goes down, neither does their moon withdraw itself, for the Lord is their everlasting light, their God, their glory, and all the days of their mourning are ended. They cannot die any more, for they are already dead unto sin and self. Dying with Christ, crucified with Him on His cross, with Him they have risen from the grave so that they live in Him and to Him alone they live the resurrection life of power over all evil, the ascended or heavenly life in which they seek the things above where Christ is and set their minds no longer on things of earth. This is heavenly mindedness!

And they who possess it, taken together constitute the celestial city, the new Jerusalem, which has come down to us from God and yet enthrones God, the city made up of those with whom former things are passed away and all things are become new, of those whose names are in the Book of Life, who drink of the water of life, who eat of the fruit of the tree that grows with abundance ever vernal on that rapturous river bank and who wear the crown of perfect righteousness.

All this is ours here and now. So again we say, heaven is within us. It is an atmosphere, a spirit, a policy, a manner and method of walk and work. Oh the blessedness which it shows to be our portion! Oh the gratefulness and joy, the sweet satisfaction and solid security, the riches of glory, the radiant redolent splendor! What a mistake it is to put heaven far away and think of it as beyond the sky. It is ours for the asking, if by asking we mean an absolutely irreversible surrender to the divine will. For that surrender brings a constant vision of the Christ, a communion with the Master over common things which makes the most ordinary life sublime. This is the philosopher's stone which turns the dirt of the streets into purest gold. This is the fountain of perpetual youth, for over these death has no power. Their youth is renewed like the eagle's; their life is redeemed from destruction; they are crowned with loving kindness and tender mercy. Let us all have this; for it belongs to us. Then we shall never think of inquiring as to whether or not we shall go some day to heaven. The question will be an impertinence. Being already in heaven no mere change of season or place can make any change in our state. We shall wake up in that other land in God's good time when the gentle angel of death shall have touched us to free us from our earthly fetters, to pursue with emancipated powers the very same objects that so long have occupied us here, to enjoy the same blessed vision of the Saviour, only with clearer sight, and to meet again in a permanent reunion those loved ones whom for a little season we have sorely missed. Our surroundings will be different and better, no doubt, but exactly the same spirit which bade good night to these familiar scenes will bid good morning to those unfamiliar ones, and the more of heaven we have on these earthly shores the larger and brighter and gladder will be our heaven when Jesus comes yet closer to the enraptured soul!

PRINTED PREACHERS

Among the Soldiers of Italy

In the city of Florence, Italy, are the headquarters of the Italian Tract Society, of which Rev. Odoardo Jalla is Secretary. This society is finding a large field of usefulness among the soldiers who have been called to the colors. A practical illustration of this fact is seen in the picture on this page, which was reproduced from a photograph recently forwarded to the American Tract Society by Rev. Odoardo Jalla.

In this picture we see a missionary colporteur of the Italian Tract Society busily engaged in distributing Christian literature among Italian soldiers. The literature, we are told, is received most gladly, and thus the message of the Gospel is being implanted in the hearts of these men who are fighting for their country.

For many years the American Tract Society has aided the Italian Tract Society by cash appropriations. A good deal of the Christian literature in the Italian language which is distributed by the American Tract Society's missionary colporters here in the United States is procured from the Italian Society.

Thus these two societies are cooperating in winning Italians for Christ, both in their own native land and in the land which so many of them have adopted as their new home.

✻ ✻ ✻

Among Various Nationalities

Rev. Michael Jaeger, who was for many years a very efficient missionary colporteur of the American Tract Society at Ellis Island, New York, has now taken up colportage work among the foreign-speaking population in the State of Massachusetts. In a recent report he writes:

"I have labored most of this month in the suburban towns near Boston. The work has opened with considerable promise and encouragement, and I have had the privilege of speaking to large numbers of people.

"I met many Lithuanians, also Poles, Russians, Ruthenians, and Italians.

"I am sorry to say that I found much literature containing false doctrines among the Poles. This has undermined their faith, and it should stir Christian people as never before to fulfill their duty by sending Gospel literature containing the truth to the homes of the multitudes who have been so deceived by false teaching.

"I have called on 624 families. In the majority of cases I was able to offer a word of prayer. The booklets that met with the widest acceptance were 'The Heart of Man,' 'Christ Received Sinners,' and 'Lame Matthew.' The last-named is a temperance booklet, which has brought a rich blessing into many a drunkard's life."

✻ ✻ ✻

Among the Mormons

Rev. Henry W. Pratt is circulating a great deal of evangelical literature among the Mormons. He has long carried on missionary colportage in Utah and the adjoining States and his labors have resulted in large spiritual benefit to many homes, both Mormon and non-Mormon. In a recent report he writes:

"When visiting in the western part of Salt Lake City I found a low state of religion. In the home of a Danish family I found eight children not one of whom was attending any Sunday School. Neither parents nor children go to church, though they are nominally Lutheran. I gave the name of this family to a missionary, so that he might look them up. In all I found about thirty children not attending any Sunday School, and I gave their names and addresses to the Christian church located in that part of the city.

DISTRIBUTING CHRISTIAN LITERATURE TO ITALIAN SOLDIERS.

"A Presbyterian minister was especially cordial to me. He said he was a life member of the American Tract Society and much interested in its work. He bought some books to give out among needy people in the country circuit where he preaches. In addition I gave him a grant of books, with which he was greatly pleased, and by the aid of which he said he could do much good.

"At the Baptist State Convention held in Salt Lake City I was given a place on the program, and spoke on 'Leaves from a Colporteur's Note Book.' I explained to them why I like to do colportage work among the Mormons on behalf of an interdenominational society. I told them that the Mormons look upon each denomination as a different religion. But when I go to a Mormon home and say that the American Tract Society for nearly ninety-two years has had all evangelical denominations represented in it and working for it, this statement emphasizes to the Mormons the fact of Christian unity and presents a high standard, which commands their respect.

"To illustrate my method of work I told how in a Mormon home the lady selected the Wall Motto Card, 'While We Were Yet Sinners, Christ Died for Us,' and how this gave me the opportunity to speak on the doctrine of the Atonement, a doctrine that Mormons do not take into account, for they hold that salvation is by works.

"As a union missionary colporteur I can reach all the people irrespective of creed and I have been able to find church people from the East who have never attended any church in the towns where they now live. In all such cases I have given their names to various pastors, according to their former denominational affiliations."

For the Foreign-Speaking Population

The work that a missionary colporteur of the American Tract Society may do is set forth in a letter from Rev. George Whitefort, Superintendent of Colportage in our Southern Agency, who writes:

"Rev. Joseph Barton of Granger, Texas, is a Bohemian Pastor among a dense population of Protestant Slavs and Bohemians. The children are being trained to love and obey the Lord Jesus and early join the church and seek light in the Bohemian literature of the American Tract Society. It is wonderful to state that most of the young people are church members and very devout Christians. Christian literature furnished by the American Tract Society is the food on which their souls feed and grow strong, wise and pious.

"This good pastor will visit Oklahoma and more than twenty towns in Texas and Louisiana, where small settlements of his people live. He will report to the Society, and will probably work six or eight months amongst the people as a missionary colporteur."

✻ ✻ ✻

The Testimony of a Pastor

A prominent minister, who has retired from the pastorate in order to serve the Church in another capacity, writes:

"If I were in the pastorate now I would give great attention to the circulation of Christian literature among my people. One of the deep regrets of my life is that when I had the opportunity I did not take more pains to place good books and religious periodicals in the families of my several charges. There is no better way to cultivate the religious life."

These are trenchant words, and they should serve to stimulate pastors and all other Christian workers to use to the utmost the "printed preachers" which are available in the form of Christian tracts, books and periodicals.

Notes upon the Topics Used
in Christian Endeavor
and Other Young People's Societies.

THE PRAYER MEETING

By
Rev. Henry Lewis
Ph.D.

DECEMBER 3. The Consecration of Business Life

Revelation 3:14-22.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Nov. 27. Business spirit. Rom. 12:11.
T. Nov. 28. Danger of prosperity. Rev. 18:7-19.
W. Nov. 29. Haste to grow rich. Neh. 12:15-21.
T. Nov. 30. A wrong principle. Prov. 20:14.
F. Dec. 1. Goods for God. I Chron. 29:10-16.
S. Dec. 2. Remembering God. Deut. 26:1-11.

We have now come to the last one in the series of topics dealing with consecration. Of all the phases of the subject that we have considered, however, there is none important than that which is now presented for our thought.

Business fills a very large place in the life of the average man, and it also occupies the attention of an increasingly large number of young women. For that reason it is imperative that the Christian young man or young woman carry the spirit of consecration into the business hours of the day.

Perils and Temptations

In the world of business there are many perils to be faced and many temptations to be overcome. This statement applies both to big business and to little business, so-called. Competition is felt by both large and small concerns. Dishonesty is as apt to occur in a great corporation as in a little store.

The vital and important thing is to adopt fixed principles in business, which shall be such as to conform to the moral code of Christianity and which will thus enable us to overcome the temptations that are so apt to assail us in the press and hurry of our everyday work.

Employers and Employes

Whether our position in the business world is that of an employer or an employe, our Divine Master calls us to show the spirit of consecration. This means that we shall be "diligent in business," or as it is expressed in the Revised Version, "in diligence not slothful." It means that we shall do with our might what our hands find to do. It means that we shall be considerate, each of the other, whether we are employer or employed. It requires that we shall provide things honest in the sight of all men. It means that we shall be kind in speech, clean in life and pure in heart.

It is a fallacy to say that we cannot mix religion and business. On the contrary, our business life should be a faithful revelation of our Christian character. True religion has a message for every sphere of human life, and any business that is devoid of the Christian spirit and conducted without regard to the principles that were taught by the Lord Jesus Christ is virtually a pagan and heathen enterprise.

The Golden Rule of Business

The Golden Rule of business is the same Golden Rule which was enunciated by the Divine Master. "Do unto others as you would have others do unto you," is a precept, the adoption of which would at once solve many of the great problems that are agitating the business world today. It would end unfair competition, it would settle multitudinous labor disputes and would drive out dishonest practices. In a word it would result in the consecration of business.

DECEMBER 10. Defy Evil

I Kings 21:15-20.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Dec. 4. Resist the devil. Jas. 4:1-10.
T. Dec. 5. Stand and fight. Eph. 6:10-19.
W. Dec. 6. A reason for boldness. 2 Kings 6:8-16.
T. Dec. 7. Fight wrong. I Kings 20:1-21.
F. Dec. 8. The invincibles. Rom. 8:21.
S. Dec. 9. Rebuke evil. Acts 24:24-27.

The Scripture selection for this topic presents a vivid illustration of a righteous man defying evil even at the risk of his life. It was a brave thing for Elijah to antagonize Arab and Jezebel, and it was only because he realized that with him was the God of Israel that this prophet dared to rebuke their flagrant wrongdoing against Naboth. Upon every Christian there rests the obligation to defy evil, wherever it is found.

In Self

Before we can successfully defy evil in others, we must first drive out the evil that there is in self. There are tendencies to wrongdoing in every human heart. We must fight the evil within us in order that we may win the victory over the evil that is without us. We must keep the body under and the spirit in control. We must resist the devil and all his impious suggestions, and enthrone Christ as the King of our hearts.

In Politics

One of the perils of a democracy is the opportunity which it affords for evil men to win and wield great political power. Every Christian young man should rise in his might to defy whatever is evil in politics. Dare to oppose the man of low morals and questionable affiliations who wants to become the political leader of the district, and in his place strive to install some man of high principle and unquestioned morality.

Do not overlook the primary as a means whereby the forces of righteousness may be arrayed against the forces of evil, and take an active part in local affairs so that the men who are selected to serve in a representative capacity may be of worthy character and assured integrity.

In Business

Much that is evil in business has been eliminated in recent years. But there are still great wrongs that should be righted. It is for the Christian to defy all the forces that are doing underhand work and struggling to uphold questionable methods of business. We should oppose all Sunday work that is not absolutely necessary. We should uphold reasonable hours of labor, and co-operate with all those who are striving to eliminate the evil of child labor.

In Diplomacy

There is much that is evil in the world's diplomacy, and we should defy all those evil tendencies in international relations which threaten to add to the burdens under which humanity is staggering.

Let us defy the short-sighted politicians who are trying to stir up strife between our own country and other countries with which we are at peace. Let us oppose the selfish and militaristic statesmen who urge us to prepare for war but who utterly fail to show us how to cultivate those lines of activity and to strengthen those ties of friendship that make for peace between the nations.

DECEMBER 17.

Big Jobs Awaiting Us

Exodus 3:1-14.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Dec. 11. A nation-founder. Gen. 12:1-5.
T. Dec. 12. Joshua's job. Deut. 31:1-8.
W. Dec. 13. Priestly service. Ex. 28:1-5.
T. Dec. 14. A city-builder. Neh. 2:11-20.
F. Dec. 15. A lone apostle. 2 Cor. 10:7-18.
S. Dec. 16. Doing our best. Eccl. 9:10.

Moses was given a big job when the Lord commissioned him to lead the Israelites out of captivity into the Promised Land. There are big jobs to be done in the world to-day, and the biggest of these jobs are spiritual tasks, to accomplish which we must have the help of the divine Master.

Of the many big jobs awaiting us as Christians we will here mention only three, but these three seem to be the most important for us to prosecute at the present moment.

The Destruction of the Liquor Traffic

The greatest foe to the Kingdom in our own country to-day is the liquor traffic. If we can win our fellow-citizens to adopt the principles of total abstinence for the individual and prohibition for the state, we shall take a long step toward the emancipation of our land from the drink habit which is perhaps a greater curse than even human slavery.

This is a job that demands zeal and energy and ability of the most marked degrees. But it is a job which is worthwhile, and one which when accomplished will bring more of happiness to the homes of our nation than any other social reform that can be mentioned.

The Establishment of World Peace

The greatest international task that confronts the United States to-day is the establishment of a world peace. We are the greatest of the neutral nations, and we ought, as it were, to blaze the way to some plan by which the nations of the world shall be bound into a World Peace League.

Christ came to the world as the Prince of Peace, and Christianity should stand for the establishment of a righteous and a lasting peace.

To bring peace among the warring nations of the world is a big job that demands the best efforts of the best men and women. But the humblest and most inconspicuous citizens may aid in this matter by creating an atmosphere that shall dissipate the feelings of suspicion and jealousy that now run rife and that shall promote an era of good feeling between the nations which shall make peace seem the natural and logical thing.

The Evangelization of the World

Undoubtedly the biggest job that awaits the Christian Church to-day is the winning of the world to Christ. It seems a gigantic task, but as some one has wisely said, it means only for each Christian the job of winning his neighbor to Christ.

The task of world evangelization must begin on the home field. The millions of our own countrymen who are unchurched must be reached and won. The immigrants who have come from other lands bringing with them an alien faith must be converted to Christ. But while we are engaged in these tasks in the home-land, we must also send forth the ambassadors of the Gospel to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ to those who dwell in the uttermost parts of the earth.

DECEMBER 24.

Helping to Accomplish the Purpose of Christ's Coming

John 10:1-16.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Dec. 18. Publishing the message. Isa. 40:9-11.
T. Dec. 19. Praying for men. Jas. 5:16-20.
W. Dec. 20. Fishers of men. Matt. 4:18-20.
T. Dec. 21. Examples for men. Titus 3:1, 2.
F. Dec. 22. Lovers of men. I John 3:14-18.
S. Dec. 23. Victory! Rev. 5:6-14.

The date for the consideration of this topic comes on Christmas Eve, and we should plan a Christmas meeting that will prepare us for the joys and the opportunities of the Christmas-tide.

The purpose of Christ's coming is set forth in His own words: "I came that they may have life, and may have it abundantly." He assured to the world the gift of eternal life by vanquishing sin, death and the grave.

The salvation which Christ brought is redemption through His blood. He brought life and immortality to light, and by His work of atonement we are made "at one" with God.

The purpose of Christ's coming was to save the world. He delivered it from the midnight gloom of sin and shame, and by His redemptive sacrifice He has made us kings and priests unto God.

The Christian life is the only life worth living, and this is the life which Christ came to reveal unto men. It is the life hid with Christ in God which is offered unto all who will put their trust in Jesus and will enter into the fold through the door which He has opened.

In view of the blessings which Christ has brought to us it is pertinent to ask what we may do to help to accomplish the purpose of His coming.

He came that we might enjoy the gift of God which is eternal life in Jesus Christ. Let us therefore strive to impart to others the knowledge of this inestimable gift.

Christmas time is a season of gladness for us. Therefore let us strive to bring gladness into the lives of those who are sad and weary. Let us bring the sunshine of the Gospel into hearts and homes that are living in darkness and gloom.

The angels at Bethlehem sang praises unto God at the birth of Christ the Saviour. So let our hearts be filled with adoration to our Heavenly Father as we come to the anniversary of the birth of our Saviour and King.

Peace and good-will were proclaimed at the birth of Jesus, and one great purpose of His coming was to assure a basis on which lasting peace and good-will might be assured both between men and their fellow-men and between men and God. Let us therefore do all that is within our power to promote peace and good-will on earth.

We may help to accomplish the purpose of Christ's coming by reflecting His spirit in our lives. Let us pray that we may have the same mind that was in Christ Jesus, and let us strive to show forth in our words and deeds the indwelling presence of Him who was born in Bethlehem on the first Christmas Day.

DECEMBER 31.

Lessons to Learn from the Past

Ephesians 5:15-21.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Dec. 25. Sloth. Amos 6:1-11.
T. Dec. 26. God's patience. Isa. 46:1-11.
W. Dec. 27. God's care. Luke 12:1-7.
T. Dec. 28. Shortness of time. Ps. 90:1-17.
F. Dec. 29. Joy of service. 2 Cor. 1:12-14.
S. Dec. 30. Our need of power. Matt. 16:21-28.

This topic is particularly appropriate for New Year's Eve. While we look back over the past year, let us also take a forward look into the year that is just about to open, and from the lessons of the past let us learn how best to face the future.

Avoid Temptation

We pray, "Lead us not into temptation," and yet we are not always careful to avoid temptation. Some of the sins of the past would undoubtedly not have been committed, if we had resolutely avoided temptation.

It is true that we cannot always avoid temptation, but let us be careful not to expose ourselves to the wiles of the tempter, except when we are compelled to do so in the line of duty.

Grasp Opportunities.

How many opportunities of service have we missed during the past year, simply because we allowed them to slip from our grasp. And the saddest thing about it all is that most of those opportunities are lost to us forever.

But the New Year will undoubtedly bring to us many new opportunities. Let us have eyes quick to see and hands quick to act and hearts ready to respond to the calls for Christ-like service that will come to us during the hours of each passing day.

Redeem the Time

The most precious commodity in this world is time, and yet how wasteful are we of this God-given asset. Well does the Apostle say, "Look therefore carefully how ye walk, not as unwise, but as wise, redeeming the time."

"Redeeming the time" is literally, "Buying up the opportunity"—the best bargain any one can make, as some one has sagely observed.

Be An Optimist

The experiences of the past should teach us always to look on the bright side. Christianity is essentially optimistic, while paganism is necessarily pessimistic. A pessimistic Christian is a contradiction in terms. Such a one is a spiritual anomaly.

There is always a bright side, no matter how dark may be the clouds that beset us nor how evil the days in which we are living. So let us seek for the sunshine, which we may always find in the presence of God, and let us seek from Him the strength that will make us brave to do and to dare and to conquer in His name.

Our Young Folks

What the Snowflakes Say.

BY MINNIE LEONA UPTON.

*The Snowflakes flit and flurry,
And seem in such a hurry
To reach the garden brown!
Still thicker, thicker, thicker,
And quicker, quicker, quicker,
They fly and flutter down.*

*"O Snowflakes, tell the reason,
At such a chilly season
Why you can bravely dare
To leave your sky-home airy,
And dance like any fairy
Down to the earth so bare?"*

*"Of course we'll tell the reason:
This is the very season
When we are needed here;
The Heavenly Father calls us,
And then, whate'er befalls us,
We answer with good cheer."*

*"He needs us for His flowers
In garden-beds and bowers
All lying fast asleep;
We'll keep them warm and cosy;
Then, golden, white, and rosy,
In spring they'll skyward peep."*

*"Oh, yes, we'd always rather Obey the Heavenly Father,
To work for Him, or rest;
That makes us ever cheery,
And never, never weary,
For always He knows best."*

How Her Opportunity Came

BY SARAH N. M'CREERY.

WHEN Emma Wright touched the door-bell at the Eaton home three voices called "Come in."
"Late," remarked Alice Eaton smilingly and accusingly as Emma entered.

Helen Carr glanced at the watch on her wrist. "Ten minutes late," she reported.

"Then let's get to work at once," and Florence Beatty put some music on the piano and seated herself on the stool. Florence always believed in doing promptly and with her might any duty she had to perform.

The four girls were preparing for a Christmas entertainment that was to be given at the High School; they were to have two songs together, Emma was to whistle and Florence was to give an instrumental solo. When the songs had been rehearsed a half a dozen times, Emma announced that she would whistle her selections and the other girls could pass judgment on them. She started the first piece and her bird-like notes brought a smile of approval to the faces of her friends. Suddenly there was a false note and the whistler stopped; she tried again and made another mistake.

"Why, Emma, I never knew you to do such a thing before!" exclaimed Helen. "You are always so sure of yourself."

"I do not make mistakes—usually, but my thoughts will go wool-gathering today, that is why I made a mistake. I was so busy with my thoughts on the way here that I just strolled and that is the reason I was late."

"What weighty subject so occupies your mind?" inquired Alice with mock gravity.

"It is a weighty subject," agreed Emma. "I have been thinking all week of Dr. Burch's talk on Sunday about the girls and boys in our Southern mountains who try so hard to get an education. The letter he read which that girl named Maud Brewster wrote to the Superintendent of the Mission School was just pathetic. She wants to go to school so badly, and think of her disappointment when she was told there was only work enough for her to do to pay half of the tuition; somebody must send the additional twenty-four dollars or she will not get to school in January. I—"

"That letter was pathetic," interrupted Helen Carr. "Why I just couldn't keep worse off we would be if we hadn't even gone to High School. I wish we might help Maud Brewster."

"But how could we make the money to send to her?" Alice Eaton looked doubtful about the wisdom of the suggestion.

"We don't have to make the money, we can take it from our allowance; that will be real giving because it will mean a sacrifice of something we want ourselves," was Emma's reply. "I had my allowance to-day and I happen to know that you girls get yours about the same time as I do."

"It is so near Christmas that we will need all our money this month," objected gestions. And after a little more discussion the matter was settled on this basis.

"Now I think I can whistle," laughed Emma, and she did whistle like a bird without a moment of hesitation or a single mistake.

That very evening, Emma sent the money by post-office order to Dr. Burch so it would reach Maud Brewster before Christmas. A note was enclosed asking him to say the money was from four interested High School girls, who knew what the opportunity to go to school meant.

It was on the Saturday afternoon before Christmas that Emma Wright telephoned Helen, Florence and Alice to come to her home.

"I heard from Dr. Burch," she announced when they were all in the living-room in answer to the summons. "He was going South himself so he just took the money and gave it to Maud. He said she cried for joy when she saw it. Listen to the message she sent us."

"Tell those four girls," she said, "that I thank them for their good will to me, and I hope their Christmas will be a happy one, as happy as the new dress I shall buy will make me. Tell them, too, they have opened up a new world for me, for I shall study to be a teacher and go back to teach my people. They have helped me, and they will help all whom I shall teach, for it is their gift that has made my opportunity possible."

"Isn't it splendid that Emma made us see that we could give Maud Brewster her opportunity," remarked Helen Carr when the letter was finished. "I didn't mind selecting simple gifts for my friends this Christmas."

"Our gift to Maud Brewster is the one that really counts," Alice Eaton said thoughtfully, "because it was given without a thought of any return. We will all enjoy Christmas better because we made a little sacrifice to help somebody else."

Our Collectors' Column

One of Our Young Folks has sent us an interesting letter for Our Collectors' Column. This is what she writes:

"DEAR EDITOR: I have a collection of stones which I began to save about four years ago. I found most of them during my summer vacations, and when I look at these stones I think of many different places where I have had happy times."

"Some of my stones were given to me by friends. One of them is a large stone which a gentleman brought from the coast of Norway. It is filled with fossils among which are a little shell-fish and other creatures."

"I take my stones to school sometimes for the geography class, and my teacher showed the fossil stone to the college professor, who said it was a fine specimen."

"ANNA LORICCHIO."

We are glad to receive your letter, Anna. You are quite a geological student, and your knowledge of stones must surely add to your pleasure, whenever you go out into the country.

If any of our young readers have taken photographs that would make good illustrations for this page, we would be delighted to receive them. If you send any photographs for Our Young Folks' page, please wrap them securely, so that they will not be injured in the mail.

Please address all letters and photos for this page to the Editor of the AMERICAN MESSENGER, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

A HARVEST HOME BASKET.

the tears back as Dr. Burch told about it."

"Since we know of this need, what are we going to do about it?" asked Emma.

"What are we going to do about it?" the three girls looked at Emma in surprise as the question came simultaneously from their lips.

"Just what do you mean?" It was Florence who made the inquiry.

"You know that Miss Wells always tells us in the Sunday-school class that when a cause interests us and makes us feel that we want to do something and we fail to follow the good impulse, the second appeal will have less effect. We all know how we would feel if there was no chance of going to college after we finish High School this year; how much Helen Carr. She was thinking of the gift she meant to buy for Grace Hayes. Grace was the daughter of wealthy parents and she always gave costly presents, so her friends felt that expensive ones must be given in return.

"I will make my gifts fit my pocket-book, if we decide to do this and I think we should," explained Emma. "It seems to me that the knowledge of the need is our call to service," she unconsciously quoted Dr. Burch.

Florence looked around the little group. "That would mean six dollars for each of us."

"And because it is Christmas let's put in an extra dollar, then Maud can buy a dress or something she needs," it was Helen Carr who made the generous sug-

CHURCH NEWS

Topics for the Week of Prayer

Topics for united prayer during the first week of the New Year, from Sunday, December 31, 1916, to Saturday, January 6, 1917, have been issued by the World's Evangelical Alliance through the agency of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. They are as follows:

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 31st, 1916

TEXTS FOR SERMONS

"Another year's respite."

—LUKE xiii. 8, 9

"Christ the Head of the Church."

—EPH. i. 22, 23

"The triumph of faithfulness in national life."—HAB. ii. 4

"The only 'if.'—JOHN xii. 31, 32

"The God of our fathers."

—I CHRON. xxviii. 9

"The constraint of Christ's love."

—2 COR. v. 14

MONDAY, JANUARY 1st, 1917

THANKSGIVING AND HUMILIATION

THANKSGIVING—For the witness of the living Church and of the Holy Scriptures.

For the deepening of spiritual thought and life within the Church.

HUMILIATION—For our failure to live in "the communion of the Holy Spirit."

For the desecration of the Lord's day, the neglect of the Sanctuary, the contempt of God's Word, and the decay of Family piety.

SCRIPTURE READINGS: Psalm ciii. 1-5; Romans viii. 31-39; Psalm li.; Revelation iii. 14-32.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 2nd, 1917

THE CHURCH UNIVERSAL—THE "ONE BODY" OF WHICH CHRIST IS THE HEAD

PENITENCE—For the failure of the Church to bear such faithful and united witness as would make its influence more deeply felt among professedly Christian nations.

PRAYER—For such a realization of the presence and power of the Holy Spirit as may lead to revival.

For the purification of the Church in every community throughout the world.

For the growth of a spirit of unity amid diversity of operations.

SCRIPTURE READINGS: Isaiah liv. 2-5; John xx. 19-23; Acts ii. 1-4; I Cor. xii. 4-7.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 3rd, 1917

NATIONS AND THEIR RULERS

PRAYER—For the world-wide recognition of the supreme law of love. That righteousness, mutual consideration and forbearance may prevail, and lasting peace be established.

That men of integrity, full of faith and of the Holy Spirit, may rule the nations.

SCRIPTURE READINGS: Psalm xxiv.; Psalm ci.; I Timothy ii. 1-8; I Peter ii. 13-25.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 4th, 1917

MISSIONS AMONG THE HEATHEN

PRAYER—That the Church may give the Gospel in its fulness to the human race.

That a tactful, faithful, and fearless presentation of Christ may be made to Moslems.

That wisdom may be given in dealing with mass movements in India, racial problems in Africa, and tendencies toward materialism in China and Japan.

SCRIPTURE READINGS: Psalm ii.; Luke iv. 40-44; Romans xvi. 25-27.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 5th, 1917

FAMILIES, SCHOOLS, COLLEGES AND THE YOUNG

PRAYER—That Family altars may be multiplied, and parents be influenced to pray with their children as well as for them.

That true Religion may have first place in all education.

That the movement in colleges and schools may be further widened and deepened.

SCRIPTURE READINGS: I Kings iii. 5-15; 2 Timothy iii. 14-17; Matthew xix. 13-15.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 6th, 1917

MISSIONS AT THE HOME BASE

PRAYER—That Christians may no longer remain unconcerned while sin is working death among their neighbors.

That Christians may remember their debt to the Jews, and for Christ's sake seek to help them into the Light.

SCRIPTURE READINGS: Psalm ii.; Luke x. 25-37; Romans xi. 13-24.

Copies of the four-page pamphlet containing these topics together with the Call to the Churches may be secured at $1.00 per hundred from the Federal Council of Churches, No. 105 East 22nd Street, New York City.

Growth in the Philippines

Mr. Robert Speer describes the growth of the Christian Church in the Philippines in this striking way. "When I passed by the Philippine Islands, through the China Sea, eighteen years ago, there was not an evangelical church in the Islands. Now there are nearly 500. Then, I suppose, there was not a member of an evangelical church. Today such are counted by the tens of thousands."

Bible Teachers' Training School

The Bible Teachers' Training School in New York City has entered upon its seventeenth year with 143 students in attendance—the largest number ever enrolled at the opening of the year. In addition to these are many day students. This student body represents thirty-two States of the Union and four foreign countries—China, Japan, Korea and Mexico; seventeen denominations, two of which have made the Bible Teachers' Training School their official seminary for the training of their ministry. Fifty-four colleges, universities and seminaries are also represented. This school is really an aggregation of four schools—School of Theology, School for Bible Teachers, School of Missions, and a graduate school. An Italian department is maintained, which will have this year twenty students preparing for the Christian ministry among their own countrymen.

What One Subscriber Has Done

One of our subscribers, when sending her renewal subscription to the AMERICAN MESSENGER also sent the money to pay for a new subscription for a poor friend who would otherwise have been unable to receive the paper. She ordered a copy of our beautiful Calendar for 1917, entitled, "Making Friends," sent both to herself and friend. The entire expense of this transaction was $1.10. Are there not many others among our friends who will do likewise?

"A Helpful Paper"

A lady in Fremont, Mich., writes: "I find the AMERICAN MESSENGER a very helpful paper."

Now Ready

Successful Teachers Use Peloubet's Select Notes

finding in them a wealth of explanation, suggestion, illustration—in fact, material of all kinds needed to instruct and hold the attention of their classes. This help is given in the most concise, practical form so that it is easily imparted to others, making the lesson hour one of pleasure as well as profit to the pupils.

SEND FOR FREE SAMPLE PAGES

and note how clearly yet concisely the scripture text is explained and illustrated

Cloth, 384 pages, $1.15 net, postpaid $1.25

W. A. WILDE COMPANY BOSTON, MASS. CHICAGO, ILL.

A Splendid Paper for Little Folks

It contains interesting stories, charming bits of poetry, beautiful illustrations, and a full-page treatment of the Sunday-school Lesson, with Memory Verses from the Bible, Lesson Questions, Golden Text and a carefully selected picture bearing on the lesson. Each of the fifty-two weekly issues is well printed on good white paper with beautiful colored ink.

The illustrations employed are drawn from the best sources. They are designed not only to delight but to inform the little folks, and include a large range of subjects, such as child life, animal life, scenes in Holy Land, and many other topics of timely interest and educational value.

A Sunday-school worker in Georgia writes: "Apples of Gold have done more to build up the children's class than any other paper we ever had."

TWO MOTHERS

Should be in every Home in which there are Children

Should be in every Sunday School in the land

The above illustration is a small reproduction of the front cover page of one issue of APPLES OF GOLD. The paper itself is 10 inches by 7 inches in size. Of course, this reproduction does not show the beautiful color effect, so attractive to all children.

SEND FOR FREE SAMPLES

We will gladly send free sample copies of APPLES OF GOLD for one month to any Sunday-school not now using the paper, or free sample copies to any home. Please write to us, stating just how many sample copies you can use.

APPLES OF GOLD is only 30 cents a year for a single subscription; 25 cents a year in clubs of five copies to one address; 20 cents a year in clubs of ten or more to one address; subscriptions received in clubs for 3 months, 6 months or a year. Canadian and foreign subscribers must add 12 cents extra for postage for each single yearly subscription or 6 cents per copy extra for each club subscription.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY, Park Ave. and 40th St., NEW YORK

HIS VINEYARD AND OURS

"In Season and Out of Season"

We have often referred to the activities of the Japan Book and Tract Society, an organization, which was established under the joint auspices of the American Tract Society and the Religious Tract Society of London. We are glad to present herewith a picture illustrating the activities of the missionary colporters of that Society "in season and out of season."

In the illustration we see the entrance to Kabukiza Park in Tokyo, Japan. The colporter has been distributing Christian literature printed in the vernacular to the people who are entering and leaving the park. A close inspection will show that many of them hold in their hands the book or tract which they have received from the colporter. More or less snow can be seen in the foreground of the picture.

GIVING OUT TRACTS AT KABUKIZA PARK, TOKYO, JAPAN.

Winning Lepers to Christ

The Chiengmai Leper Asylum in North Siam is owned and operated by the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States. It is supported by the Mission to Lepers and by gifts from friends in Siam and America. It was established about eight years ago, and since its foundation it has sheltered nearly three hundred lepers. A recent statement concerning its work informs us that the work in this Asylum has been specially blessed not only in its philanthropic aspect, but also, and particularly, in its spiritual results.

The outcast leper has found here protection, food, clothing, and has also found the way of life. Of the more than 180 lepers now in the Asylum, all have become Christians of undoubted sincerity. The genuineness of their profession is evidenced by their changed lives, their fidelity in attending the daily chapel services, and their desire to extend the Kingdom of God, through their prayers and gifts. Prayer, which is not a part of the life or practice of the Buddhist of Siam, has become a very real and very precious experience of these leper Christians.

Hearing that the lepers of Persia were the most needy lepers in the world, they sent a gift of several dollars to them. They have contributed eight dollars to the American Bible Society, and ten dollars to the British and Foreign Bible Society for the distribution of Scriptures in America and Europe. At the communion service, held on the day of the visit of Dr. Speer, Mr. Day and Dr. Bovaird, these leper Christians contributed $12.00 gold "to be sent to lepers in some other land, who are less fortunate than ourselves."

Where do these lepers get their money? They receive forty cents each Saturday to buy all their food for the coming week. Out of this scant allowance, all of which is really needed by themselves, they give with glad hearts to bring blessing both physical and spiritual to others.

The Conversion of a Hindu Carpenter

In the Dnyanodaya, a Christian periodical published in Bombay, India, we are told of the conversion of a man named Damji, a resident of Guzerat, and a carpenter by profession, who belongs to the middle class of Hindu society. The Voluntary Band of the Gospel-spreading Society, first came across him, listening earnestly to the gospel preached by them on the street, after Church service one Sunday afternoon, according to their usual practice. His keen interest was evidenced in his waiting till the end of the preaching, and buying a copy of the gospel in Guzerathi. When accosted by one of the band he asked for their address, saying he would communicate with them. Later he did write to one of the band, expressing his desire to keep up a correspondence. Soon he began to visit in person one or two members of the band, and for several months he has been regularly visiting and seeking after the truth, coming to the pastor at night like Nicodemus and staying sometimes till one in the morning, absorbed in listening to the eternal truths of salvation. Finally, of his own accord, he sought baptism in the Hume Memorial Church, and accepted the Master in public.

Although he had heard the gospel in his own district in Guzerat, and had been favorably impressed with it, he needed personal communion with Christ, through His disciples, before he could be won over. In the prime of youth, and a man of intrepid and independent character, and of understanding, in spite of the lack of much literary education, he is conversant with popular Hinduism. In his early years he had lost faith in idols while tending the cows of a guru in a temple, because of the immoral ways of this guru and his followers, which were a shock to him. He then sought to forsake the world and adopt an ascetic life, but could not beg for his livelihood, as is the practice of sanyasis and gosavis. At this stage he came in contact with a guru of the Sanatan Dharma, and was favorably impressed with his charming ways and teaching, but was disgusted with his obstinate claim of equality with God.

Finally, Christ and His supreme claim won him, as he found in Christ the fullest expression of the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of man. He has tried almost all forms of Hinduism, but could not find peace and joy as now in Christ Jesus in spite of all opposition and trouble. He knew full well what he would have to give up for Christ. His people, his only sister, and his friends, all have forsaken him. He is suffering great inconvenience, being unused to the food and ways of living of the Christian Community, and the few decent Hindu Vegetarian boarding houses in Bombay being now closed to him. But through Christ he is equal to the burden he has to bear.

On inquiry as to the attitude of his former co-religionists towards Christ, he asserts his belief that a great many of them would embrace Christianity were it not for the social ostracism and estrangement, from their people which would be the inevitable consequence. There is ample evidence for the above statement in the fact that hundreds of all classes listen quite earnestly and attentively to the gospel message and the claims of Christ, whenever it is preached to them. This indicates clearly the attitude of India's millions towards Christ. It should also stir up the Lord's people to rise to this golden opportunity to help their countrymen to find Christ.

The Great Need in Central America

"As a superintendent of the American Bible Society," writes Mr. Alfred Hockings, "with three of the Central American republics under my supervision, and having to be constantly travelling through these republics, I have been led to realize the great need here of sound Gospel literature. We have found in our travels that the Central American wants to know things. These are not the days of indifference, but days of seeking after new things, and especially with regard to religions other than the Roman Catholic. The people, entirely dissatisfied, and disgusted with the representations of the Roman Catholic religion in these countries, are looking into Spiritualism, Agnosticism, Atheism, free thinking, etc. We can thank God however that not a few desire earnestly to know what Protestantism is, and especially what the Gospel of God's Grace is.

"In one town especially we spent two hours explaining to the Municipality at their request the soul-saving truths of God's pure Gospel. 'We have the Bible,' they said, 'but we want some explanation, we cannot search these things out for ourselves. Come and live with us, and teach us, or send some one to us, but meanwhile do not neglect to send us literature weekly, and sufficient to distribute around to others.'

"Gospel literature is especially useful to the colporters: often when we cannot leave even a portion of the Word of God, they will accept a tract or monthly Gospel paper. By these means they get so interested that they soon want to buy a Bible to learn more of what the tract teaches.

"On many occasions we have been called back to sell a book because the would-be buyer has read a tract given him a short time before. So it is patent that the Bible and the tract work together, and each help the other.

"On one occasion, while travelling by train in El Salvador we distributed tracts to each of the passengers. All were received gratefully with the exception of one given to a Roman Catholic priest. This priest immediately passed through the train demanding that the Gospel tracts be given up to him for destruction. With just one exception all resolutely refused. He then distributed little handbills full of insults against Protestants and Lutherans as we are called. These handbills described all Protestants as thieves, murderers, drunkards, etc. They were edited by the Roman Catholic Bishop who offered fifty to a hundred days indulgences to all who would read these insults and pray for the conversion of the Protestants.

"The passengers immediately compared our neat, four-page tracts with the insulting little handbills of the Bishop. They were loud in their praises of our tracts, and as loud in their denunciations of the handbills. This made the priest angry, and caused him to indirectly insult us, and challenge us to prove that salvation was by faith and not works. Needless to say the challenge was taken up, and a splendid opportunity for preaching the Gospel was the result. The train at this moment stopped at a wayside farm and the passengers in the other coaches came to inquire into the excitement so that the coach was full of eager listeners, much to the chagrin of the priest.

"In various places we have been asked for literature by the native deacons and Pastors of churches for distribution among the congregations who in their turn seek to pass them on to others for the propagation of the Gospel. We as colporters urgently need Gospel literature to carry into those places where the Bible has not been taken before so that if they do not buy a portion of the Bible, they will not be left without at least a good Gospel message to stir up their desires for better things, and holier lives."

The Flavor of the Gospel

A Chinese evangelist in Shantung discovered a truly remarkable person in a village seldom visited by missionary preachers. About five years ago this old man had by some means secured a large print Gospel of St. John. When the evangelist arrived the old man showed that he understood the message: "I know that Jesus came down from God, from heaven. I have the book that tells about Him, I read it constantly, Yo-han Fu-yin" (John's Good News).

He was told that St. John was one of many sacred writers; he replied: "I do not care for any others; this flavor is excellent; I read this constantly, and ten parts believe in Jesus (i. e., perfectly believe in Jesus). You need not exhort me to trust in Him. For nearly five years I have read about Him in this book, and want nothing better."

The evangelist then taught the old man to pray, and urged him to become acquainted with the communities of Christians near him, with whom he might have fellowship. The nearest missionary says: "We have sent him a large-print New Testament, and invited him to visit us. This man knows no church, no ordinances, no fellowship, no teacher, save Jesus' book and the Holy Spirit, Who reveals the deep things of this simplest, profoundest Gospel."

How the Way Was Prepared

Haitang is a Chinese island about twenty-five miles long, with a population of 70,000. About thirty-seven years ago, it is reported, one of the inhabitants, being on the mainland, heard of Jesus, from a fellow-traveler at a Chinese inn. He accepted the truth, returned to Haitang, and did not rest until he had carried the Gospel to every one of the villages on the island. When the missionaries went, about ten years ago, they found a prepared people. There are now preaching stations in thirty villages. Some of these poor village Christians give one-fourth of their income for the spread of the Gospel.

Our Fireside

Pete's Christmas Eve

By Felicia Buttz Clark

PETE felt he was down on his luck this cold morning. He whistled, but in a minor key, as he went across town to the scene of his duties as chief of a squad of boot-blacks, who worked in the more aristocratic sections of the city, near the men's clubs and on broad avenues where large houses stood and automobiles were waiting.

Pete's home furnished a considerable contrast to these palatial mansions. It consisted of four rooms, in one of which the poor, tired mother cooked for a family of eight children. In a room next to the kitchen, Pete slept with four brothers. The three girls occupied another room, with their father and mother.

This morning Pete's whistle was unusually minor, because his father, who had been in the habit of drinking, but not to excess, had come home thoroughly intoxicated, had struck his mother—Pete doubled up his fists now in impotent anger at the thought—and lay in a heavy sleep when he ought to be at work.

"Now, Jim Riley," said Peter, when he arrived at the scene of his labors, "none o'ye foolishness! You jest git down to work, an' mighty lively too. An' you, Buggy, take this here outfit an' git a move on ye. No idlin' now, no playin'. You've got your livin' to earn."

Jim Riley stuck an impudent face up under his chief's scowling one and made a sigh of derision. "D'ye know what day it is, Pete Dinky?"

"Dunno, an' don't care," was the gruff reply.

This, from a usually cheerful companion, daunted Jim.

"I say, what's come over ye, Pete?"

"Nothin'! Git to work."

"But it's Chris'mus Eve, Petie," Jim's voice held a melancholy quaver now.

"Don't care if it is," Pete gave a majestic wave of his hand and the boys vanished.

For his executive ability, the Polish boy had been chosen head of the small band of boot-blacks, who conscientiously brought him their earnings every night. The nickels and quarters were parted and divided exactly into four parts. The boys relied absolutely on Pete's honesty. "Shine, sir?"

The chief's tone changed completely, as a man came towards the corner where his brass-studded chair stood. Pete forgot the drunken father, the tired mother, the gloomy home and turned his attention to business. He knew this gentleman by name. Mr. Eric Hart, he was, and he lived not far off in one of the finest mansions on the street. To ask him to have a shine was almost superfluous, for he had a lot of men to serve him, but from force of habit Pete hailed him.

To his surprise, Mr. Hart nodded, mounted the chair and Pete began operations. Glancing up quickly he saw the expression on the man's face. He was scowling to such a degree that Pete's own scowl, when Jim looked at him, was almost a smile.

"Down on his luck, too!" thought the boot-black, polishing fast. He wanted to do a good job. "By gum!" thought Pete to himself, "he looks as ef he'd ben eatin' nails."

"Fine day, sir, for Chris'mus Eve."

Mr. Hart grunted.

"Didn't know it was Christmas Eve," he replied, won to speech by the honest blue eyes raised to him.

"Ain't ye no got children?" queried Pete, examining his work on the first shoe with critical eye and giving it a final polish.

"No."

There was silence. No one but Mr. Hart knew how lonely that great brownstone house was, with its handsome furniture, splendid paintings and body of servants sufficient for a large family. It was because he was so horribly lonely that he had declined to enter the costly motor car in which he could ride in solitary grandeur, and was walking, intending to go down town by the plebeian subway. Something within him demanded companionship and life.

Well, it wasn't his fault that he was so lonely. He had asked a beautiful woman to be the light of his life and home and she had declined. Why? Because he was a man who believed that he was his own God, the arbiter of his own destiny. Perhaps they would not have been happy together, anyway, and yet—

His heart stood still just one minute, and then started on furiously as he saw coming toward him a slender figure in blue cloth, a mass of white fur, broad velvet hat with a snowy plume stuck straight on the side, and a muff to which was fastened a big bunch of sweet smelling Parma violets.

Pete had just finished polishing the second shoe to his satisfaction and rose to his feet, flushed with his labor.

Mr. Hart slipped down from his chair and wished that he could get away quickly, but he was not able to pay Pete, for the boy also had caught sight of the lady and his eyes were shining with joy. The boot-black and Ellen Spear! It was a queer combination. Mr. Hart held his dime ready, and watched the little scene with a queer feeling in his throat. Never had she looked so sweet to him, yet that insuperable obstacle lay between them. She believed in God; he did not—or at least he thought that he did not, which is the case with most atheists.

"Oh, Pete," she said, in her rich young voice, utterly oblivious of the man whose shoes had been blackened. "You'll be sure to come to-night to the Christmas tree."

"I was kind o' fraid"—began the boy, his lips quivering as he glanced at his old, gray suit. "I ain't—got—no—clo'es but these."

"As if it mattered! Why, Pete, dear, this is the night when the Christ-child came to bring us love and peace and goodwill. You come just as you are and be sure to ask for me."

Growing suddenly shy in the idea that another person was present, the girl in the white fur lifted a face as pure and sweet as her violets, to the tall man.

"Oh!" she exclaimed, and her cheeks turned scarlet. "Good morning, Mr. Hart."

"Good morning, Miss Spear." He raised his hat and she walked on very briskly.

"Ain't she jest the stunner? An' to think of her stoppin' to speak to sech as me. 'Come jes' as ye are, Pete,' sez she. 'This is the night that the Christ-child come to bring us love, an' peace an' goodwill,' sez she."

Curiosity got the better of the dignified Mr. Hart's habitual reserve. He changed the dime to a quarter and dropped it into Pete's hand.

"I ain't got no change, sir. It's my first job this morning."

"It's all right, Pete, keep it. It's Christmas Eve." This was said shamefacedly, for Eric Hart had not forgotten that only an hour before he had wondered bitterly why people keep up these antiquated customs. He had been obliged to give the servants the usual presents, a mere form, but nothing else would he do.

"Give me the quarter back, boy," he said, quickly.

Pete's face fell, but brightened at once when Mr. Hart held out to him a crisp dollar bill.

"I oughtn't to take so much, sir." The tone was awe-struck. "But are ye givin' it to me because the Christ-child come to earth an' the angels sung?"

Mr. Hart hesitated.

"You keep it, Pete. How do you happen to know that young lady?"

"She's my Sunday School teacher.

One day I was yellowin' her pretty shoes an' she sed: 'Where do you go to Sunday School?' An' I sed: 'Blamed if I go anywhere, Miss. What is Sunday School, anyway?' An' she sez: 'Come an' see.' An' I went an' it was so grand, I was afraid to go in, only she come an' tuk me by the hand, and sed: 'Come. It's the big church up on the avenoo, where the picture-windows is. I ben goin' there now fur six months. She's got a class o' boys jes' like me, mebbe not so poor. And she visits us."

Never had Eric Hart imagined that the elegant Miss Spear, the darling of aristocracy, had done such work as this. In spite of himself a deep respect for her religion took hold of him. She lived it, then. In this present age, the religion that is wanted is the practical religion that makes a man or woman feel the needs of the poor, suffering world, that makes them give of their wealth that the great work of lifting up mankind may go on, that forces them to give themselves, that the world may come nearer to Christ. So Eric Hart came nearer to a knowledge of what the soul-life hidden in God really is, by that little incident of the beautiful woman and the poor boot-black than he had ever done before in all his well-bred life.

"What time is the Christmas-tree?" he asked.

"Half-past five, sir."

"You come around to my house, Pete, at five o'clock and you'll find something you like. Do you know where it is?"

"You bet, sir," cried the delighted

(Continued on next page.)

KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN'S

The Romance of a

Christmas Card

"Everyone who has ever known the joys of an old-fashioned home Christmas will delight in this lovely romance. The glowing Christmas spirit, the beautiful colored illustrations and the dainty binding combine to make this the perfect gift book of the season. $1.00 net.

ELEANOR H. PORTER'S

Just David

This beautiful story by the author of "Pollyanna," "Miss Billy," "Cross Currents," etc., makes an ideal gift for old and young, and carries a message of happiness and inspiration that will be gratefully remembered for years to come. Handsomely bound and illustrated. $1.25 net. Holiday edition in limp leather. $2.00 net.

DR. GRENFELL'S

Tales of The Labrador

Graphic accounts of shipwreck, peril and adventure among the hardy fishermen of the Labrador and their Eskimo neighbors, by the far-famed and much loved missionary doctor. Frontispiece. $1.25 net.

JEAN K. MACKENZIE'S

Black Sheep

Adventures in West Africa

"So eloquent in its simple exposition of missionary effort that it must deeply move every Christian soul."—Milwaukee Free Press. Illustrated. $1.50 net.

Send for Free Holiday and Juvenile Bulletin

HOUGHTON MIFFLIN CO.
4 Park Street Boston

Oxford Bibles

FOR S. S. TEACHERS

With the most accurate, up-to-date and comprehensive helps, arranged in one alphabetical order like a dictionary. From $1.20

FOR CHILDREN

With beautiful illustrations, black and colored, and a number of styles with specially selected helps. From 50c

FOR OLD FOLKS

With extra large, clear type, some printed on "Oxford India Paper,"—easy to read, easy to hold. From $1.35

Send for "A Selected List of Oxford Bibles"—a complete guide to Bible Buyers.

Ask your bookseller to show you an "Oxford India Paper" Bible.

Oxford University Press American Branch
35 West 32nd Street New York

The Flavor Lasts—

In the making of Grape-Nuts there is added to the sweet, rich nutriment of whole wheat, the rare flavor of malted barley, a combination creating a most unusually delicious taste. The palate never tires of it.

People everywhere have found that is the most nutritious and delicious cereal food known.

Grape-Nuts

Every table should have its daily ration of Grape-Nuts.

"There's a Reason"

IMPORTANT

We desire to call the attention of all those whose subscriptions expire with the close of the present year to the desirability of renewing their subscriptions at once, so as to avoid the rush of the holiday season and the possible delay which is apt to occur at that time.

In this connection we would suggest that it would be a very material assistance to the welfare of this paper if each subscriber, when sending the renewal subscription, would also forward one or more new subscriptions.

The sum of $1.50 will pay for five new subscriptions, each of which may be sent to a different address. A single subscription costs 50 cents.

No more appropriate or acceptable Christmas gift could be made than to send the American Messenger for a whole year to someone who does not now receive this helpful and entertaining periodical.

AMERICAN MESSENGER
Park Avenue and 40th St.,
New York

Pete's Christmas Eve

(Continued from page 222.)

Pete, taking off his cap. "Yes, sir, all-right, sir. Shine, sir?" and he was again at business.

It was a new and timid Pete who entered Grace Church at exactly five-thirty that evening. Miss Spear gazed at him in astonishment.

"Why, Pete," she said, a little anxiously. "How did you get those clothes?"

"He gave 'em to me," he whispered with glee.

"He? Who?"

"Mr. Hart, the gentleman I was shinin' for when you come by this morning."

"Oh!" responded Ellen Spear. Eric Hart had dressed Pete up in this nice blue serge suit. Why? She dared not think the answer but her color was a little higher than usual as she went away to take a last look at the tree, whose splendor in lights of green and blue and red and gold would soon dazzle the eyes of five hundred children.

She looked very sweet in the eyes of a man who sat by one of the Gothic pillars, not merely because of her personal beauty, but because of a glimpse he had had into the loveliness of her soul. Never had she been so dear to him as at that moment; never had he longed so intensely to have her for his wife, for his life companion. Yet the obstacles were as insuperable as ever. He did not, could not, believe as she did. To obtain her consent, he could not pretend to believe, for Eric Hart was no hypocrite.

It was with a feeling of sadness that he followed the services, saw the tree lighted, heard the murmur of delight from the children, and listened to the singing of the beautiful Christmas hymns.

He had heard them often in his childhood, when, with his mother, he had sat in this same church, and Ellen Spear, a little girl with long shining hair, had sat just opposite, where he could see her. Eric Hart could not remember when he had not loved Ellen. But, after his mother's death, he had not gone to church any more. He and Ellen had only met in society or in her home.

It is strange how God uses very little things, and very humble instruments to accomplish His great ends. After all, it was Pete, the boot-black, who was the cause of a dawning of truth, the planting of a tiny seed of faith in the soul of a man who scorned hypocrisy, who was almost frightened for fear that love of woman would cause him to attempt to feel something not sincere. That temptation Eric was determined to resist. He would live without her before he would do that.

Idly, he watched the happiness in Pete's face, and a moisture came into his eyes at the remembrance of how Pete had looked when he donned his new suit.

"You must love the Christ-child very much," he had said, and Eric Hart was ashamed.

Pete was singing vigorously, over yonder, those exquisite words of Philips Brooks' song of Bethlehem. The words came straight into the rift in the heart of the world-worn man.

"How silently, how silently,
The wondrous gift is given!
So God imparts to human hearts
The blessings of his heaven.

No ear may hear his coming,
But in this world of sin,
Where meek souls will receive him still,
The dear Christ enters in."

The surgeon lifted his head, after a thorough examination of Pete, who lay, white and peaked, upon the white bed of a hospital ward.

"He's all right," the big man said, cheerily, "only a bit shaken by the fall when the automobile struck him. You'll have a merry Christmas yet, my little man."

"Thank God!" burst from Eric Hart's lips.

Ellen Spear, from her place on the other side of the white bed, where she had been holding Pete's hand, not ashamed of the tears running down her

"THE COMING OF THE LORD DRAWETH NIGH"

An examination of the Scriptures on the Length of THE TIMES OF THE GENTILES, WHEN did they Begin? WHEN will they terminate?
Fifth Edition, Enlarged to 64-page Pamphlet, 75th Thousand, with Appendices and Extracts from Letters. Price, 5c. each, 30c per doz., or $2.00 per 100, Postpaid.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS:

"I consider this one of the most wonderful little books in the world. It seems to me to be a positive revelation from the Lord, a drawing aside of the veil which by infinite wisdom kept the Lord's people ignorant of that which they were better not to know. But at midnight (midnight sorrow exists now) there was a cry heard: 'Behold, the bridegroom cometh.'"

"A genuine shock from which after these days I did not recover as yet, is the result of reading your recent tract. I read it at one sitting and with the Bible in hand. I am surprised beyond measure. I am not yet sufficiently sobered up to distill this very strong draught. But I rejoice secretly in my heart. It may be truth. O, how grand if you really have found the true key to unlock this marvelous mystery."

"Your marvelous booklet on the 'Times of the Gentiles' is finding eager readers."

"It is surely a soul stirring and a rousing word. The Scriptures you bring forward in support of the soon ending Gospel age, seem very conclusive."

"The Times of the Gentiles' is magnificent, one of the best things I have ever read, and carries an unusual amount of conviction."

"It is the most simple, concise, clear, and biblical plea for the year day interpretation I have seen."

"I feel strongly and calmly convinced that the teachings set forth in your little book is the teaching of the Spirit of God."

"I have enjoyed in yours, the tenacity with which you adhere to the Scripture, and the absence of unproved statements."

Address, C. J. BAKER, 621 Wyandotte Street - - - Kansas City, Mo.

cheeks, turned suddenly, and gave Eric a full, long look, which he met with such an expression in his dark eyes that she flushed and bent over Pete again. The last time she had spoken to Eric Hart, he had neither thanked nor praised God. In fact, he had treated her to a long scientific argument as to why there could not be any ruler of the universe.

"Lie still till to-morrow, little Pete," she whispered, conscious of a great happiness filling her heart. "I'll come for you in the morning, and take you away in the motor-car and we'll have a glorious Christmas. Oh, Petie, you were so brave; if it had not been for you—I—"

"I saw the auto a'coming, Miss, an' you was right in front of it, an'—you—didn't see it. I dunno what happened next, till I woke up here. An' Mr. Hart! My new suit is all spoiled and muddy!"

"You shall have a new suit, Pete," Mr. Hart said, with husky voice. If it had not been for the poor little boot-black—he did not dare to think.

Unconsciously, he reached out his hand to the woman opposite him, over the body of Pete, and she clasped it warmly.

"I say—you two—" began Pete. Then his mouth spread with a broad grin.

When they had gone away Pete lay very still in the clean, soft bed. He was very sleepy, and pressed close to his face the bunch of violets, fallen from the dress of Ellen Spear. As they grew warm the fragrance was sweet as that of the wood-violets at the base of a tall oak when the Spring sunshine falls upon them.

"The Christ-child comes to bring love an' peace an' hope," he murmured, and then fell asleep, while the chimes upon a church near by rang out merrily, for Christmas Day had come.

START A FRIENDSHIP BRACELET --- LINK ONLY
Sterling Silver or Rolled Gold
Beaded or Plain designs. 3
Initials Engraved FREE to introduce our Bracelet Links.
Start with Link and Ribbon we give FREE with first
12c order or more. Star
FRIENDSHIP JEWELRY CO. 83 Chambers St., Dept 686, New York

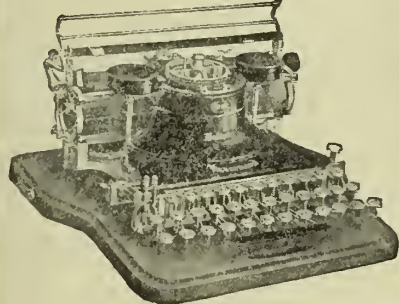

DON'T decide on the new hymn-book for your Church or Sunday School until you have seen HALLOWED HYMNS NEW AND OLD Edited by IRA ALLAN SANKEY Son of the famous Singing-Evangelist Ira D. Sankey OVER 550,000 COPIES ALREADY SOLD Responsive Scripture Readings No Trashy Words No Jingly Music Price $25.00 per 100 not prepaid 35 cents per copy by mail Examine a copy and prove its value in your work. (Returnable if desired.) The Biglow & Main Co., New York Chicago

Your Foot Comfort is guaranteed in EZ WEAR Shoes $2.25 We guarantee to fit your feet perfectly; if we fail or for any reason you are not satisfied, we will refund your money. By Mail Prepared Simon's EZ WEAR Shoes For Men, Women, Children Scientifically made of soft, pliable material on SIMON'S SPECIAL EZWEAR LAST, requiring no breaking in. Have flexible soles, steel arch supports and new live rubber heels and are cut low to tip; unlined, no linings to wrinkle and hurt the feet; feel like an old shoe the minute you put them on. Catalog of over 600 comfortable Ezwear Styles & self-measurement blanks. Write today. FREE THE C. F. SIMON SHOE, 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N.Y.

Indoor Closet More Comfortable, Healthful, Convenient Eliminates the out-door privy, open vault and cess-pool, which are breeding places for germs. Have a warm, sanitary, odorless toilet right in your house. No going out in cold weather. A boon to invalids. Endorsed by State Boards of Health. ABSOLUTELY ODORLESS Put It Anywhere In The House The germs are killed by a chemical process in water in the container, which you empty once a month. Absolutely no odor. No more trouble to empty than ashes. Closet absolutely guaranteed. Write for full description and price. ROWE SANITARY MFG CO. 12171 ROWE BLDG., DETROIT, MICH. Ask about the Ro-San Washstand—Hot and Cold Running Water Without Plumbing

WRITING THAT IS DIFFERENT
WHEN ONE USES THE NEW Multiplex Hammond Writing Machine

INSTANTLY INTERCHANGEABLE TYPE
In construction: the simplest of high grade machines. It has a STANDARD for service and age not exceeded in the typewriter field. It is light and consequently portable. There is an AUTOMATIC type-stroke which gives an even impression of the type irrespective of key-touch. It has great range of work and therefore unusual adaptability. Paper of unlimited width can be accommodated.

It is the Only Typewriter which will carry TWO STYLES OF TYPE, or two to five different languages, carried on the machine AT ONCE. "JUST TURN THE KNOB" and change instantly from Roman Type to Italics, or Miniature Roman, or our Beautiful Script Type, or from English to Greek, Russian, German, French, etc. Any other type or language can be substituted in a few seconds.

365 Styles, also over 50 languages, to select from
A CATALOG for the asking—and gladly.
ASK FOR SPECIAL PROPOSITION.

THE HAMMOND TYPEWRITER COMPANY
571 East 69th Street, New York City, N. Y.

OUR BOOK TABLE

Publishers will confer a favor by sending us announcements of their new books. So far as space will allow, we will ask publishers to send us for review such books as in our judgment will be of interest and value to our readers. We do not promise to review books that are sent to us unsolicited.

Any book here mentioned will be sent upon receipt of the given price, if ordered from the "American Tract Society," Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York City.

Peloubet's Select Notes.—This forty-third annual volume on the International Uniform Sunday School Lessons is a treasure house of information, inspiration and illumination. It stands foremost among all the helps available for Sunday School teachers and Bible students who use the International Lessons. During the first six months of 1917 these lessons will consist of Studies in the Gospel of John; in the latter half of the year the lessons will be taken from the Old Testament books (Kings, Ezra, Nehemiah and the Prophets).

The authors of this volume, Rev. F. N. Peloubet, D.D., and Amos R. Wells, Litt.D., LL.D., bring to their task long experience, profound scholarship and a most complete equipment for Bible study and research. They have put into this book in condensed form the results of many years of study, travel and observation. They have gathered the most telling illustrations and incorporated the most helpful plans and methods in their treatment of the lessons.

We commend this volume most heartily not only to those who are to use the International Lessons but to all students of the sacred Word. (Cloth, 384 pages. Price, $1.15 net; delivered, $1.25. W. A. Wilde Company, 120 Boylston Street, Boston, Mass.)

Mary Slessor of Calabar.—By W. P. Livingstone.

This volume presents a remarkable addition to the missionary literature of the world. It is the story of a simple Scotch factory girl who became a wonderfully successful missionary of the Cross in the wilds of Africa. It is a narrative of pioneer missionary effort which thrills the reader through and through, and which reveals how the Gospel of Christ may become a power unto salvation for the lowest and most degraded savage.

The author of this book, Mr. W. P. Livingstone, is the Editor of the Record of the United Free Church of Scotland. He has compiled the life story of Mary Slessor from varied sources, but chiefly from her own letters, which tell in simple, unaffected fashion of the great work which she was able to accomplish in leading untutored barbarians to a living knowledge of the Gospel of which she was a most devoted and loyal exponent.

Mary Slessor stands out as a shining illustration of what may be done by a simple, earnest woman, endowed with little more than ordinary ability but endowed with a most indefatigable spirit of Christian zeal. By some people this woman would be described as peculiar. By some she might indeed be called a crank, but she demonstrated by her life and work that personal eccentricities are of little significance when one is moved by a holy purpose and filled with the power of the Spirit of God.

There is much that is amusing in the account of "Ma" Slessor's dealing with the natives. At times there is also the pathos of unspeakable tragedy, for, sometimes, even Mary Slessor could not save the natives from the deadly results of their evil habits and their benighted superstitions.

But through the midst of all this narrative there runs as a golden thread the revelation of the power of the Gospel to transform, uplift and uphold. Mary Slessor has passed from her earthly sphere of labor, but the record of her life will serve to stimulate all who read it to a desire to emulate her noble career of loving and self-sacrificing service. (Cloth, 347 pages. 12mo. Price, $1.50 net. George H. Doran Company, 38 West 32nd Street, New York, N. Y.)

The Juniors; How to Teach and Train Them.—By Maud Junkin Baldwin.

This little volume, written by the Superintendent of the Elemental Division of the Pennsylvania State Sabbath Association, deals with the handling of that important group in the Sunday School known as the Junior Department, in which are grouped the boys and girls from nine to twelve years of age. It advocates a high standard for the Junior Department, and sets forth the ways and means by which it is believed that teachers may attain that standard. Christian workers who are dealing with children of the ages named will find many helpful suggestions in this book. (Boards. 107 pages. Price, 45 cents. The Westminster Press, Philadelphia, Pa.)

A FINE CALENDAR FOR CHRISTMAS

9225 MAKING FRIENDS
©1914 OSBORNE COMPANY

MAKING FRIENDS.

MANY words of glowing commendation have been spoken concerning the beautiful Calendar, "Making Friends," which we offer to our subscribers for the year 1917. This Calendar has been secured by arrangement with the Osborne Company, who are specialists in the production of Art Calendars. It measures 10 by 17 inches, and is printed in a rich sepia tint. When the year is ended, the date pad (which does not appear in the illustration) may be detached, and the Calendar will make a choice subject for framing.

We will give this Calendar, postpaid, and one year's subscription to the American Messenger for 60 cents, or we will give the Calendar as a premium to any subscriber who renews his or her own subscription for 1917 and sends one new subscription, remitting $1.00 in all. If the new subscriber in the foregoing case also desires a Calendar, $1.10 must be remitted. For every Canadian subscription 12 cents additional for postage must be remitted, and for every foreign subscription 24 cents.

What finer Christmas remembrance could you present to your friends than the gift of a year's subscription to the American Messenger together with this superb calendar, "Making Friends?"

OUR SPECIAL SUBSCRIPTION OFFER.

All those who subscribe now to the AMERICAN MESSENGER for one year will receive the paper until January 1, 1918. New subscribers will receive both the Thanksgiving and Christmas numbers for 1916 free of cost, if they subscribe at once.

AMERICAN MESSENGER, Park Ave. and 40th St., NEW YORK

The Microscopic Habit

"I suppose science is a great thing," said an old lady, with the doubtful tone of one venturing into unfamiliar regions, "and all these new-fangled fashions of investigating is useful, but seems like we haven't much peace at our house since John's taken to looking at everything through a microscope. The water ain't pure, the vegetables is inhabited, and all the wholesome, comfortable things that we've enjoyed and been thankful for all these years is discovered to have specks and spots, till 'most everything is spoiled."

But the microscope habit is still worse when it invades the moral and spiritual realm. There are those so addicted to it that they are constantly turning the glass upon their fellows and all their doings and exclaiming over the defects that keen scrutiny can bring to light. The home life that looks so beautiful has its flaws, after all; the kind deed that is so helpful holds its alloy of selfishness. The one whose example stirs to emulation is far from perfect. There are mixed motives to be discovered, if one looks closely enough, in the teacher whose words thrill and uplift those about him. Friendship, philanthropy and faith, all are subjected to the ever-ready glass and all pronounced imperfect. The trouble with the microscope people is that they only spoil what we have; they never substitute anything better.—EXCHANGE.

Beautiful Presents

Would you like to secure, absolutely free, valuable articles, such as watches, silverware, china, cameras, fountain pens, books, etc., etc.?

By a little effort in securing new subscriptions for the AMERICAN MESSENGER you can obtain many things which may add to your own pleasure and comfort or which you may use as choice and appropriate presents for your friends at this Christmas season.

Full particulars are given in the AMERICAN MESSENGER for October, 1916, a copy of which will be sent, free and postpaid, upon application.

Remember that the AMERICAN MESSENGER is the best illustrated family religious monthly published in America at the low subscription price of fifty cents per year. It has many thousands of satisfied subscribers. Are you among the number? If so, why not introduce the paper among your friends and acquaintances?

AMERICAN MESSENGER
Park Ave. and 40th St., New York

Think of It—

People cut out tea or coffee before retiring when these beverages interfere with sleep. In the morning they drink freely of them, strangely overlooking the fact that at whatever time of day the cup is drunk the drug, caffeine, in tea and coffee is irritating to the nerves.

More and more people are turning to the drug-free, nourishing, comforting cereal drink.

Instant Postum

"There's a Reason"

Faces As Fair As A Summer's Day

Are Possible If Stuart's Calcium
Wafers Are Used for a Short Time After Each Meal.

Many people have been heard to say that they used creams and lotions for years without effect, yet after five or six days of Stuart's Calcium Wafers their complexions were perfectly clear.

"I Got Rid of Blackheads in a Jiffy by Using Stuart's Calcium Wafers."

They contain no poisonous drug of any kind, are perfectly harmless and can be taken with absolute freedom, and they work almost like magic. Calcium Sulphide, their principal ingredient, is the greatest blood-cleanser known to science.

No matter how bad your skin may be, Stuart's Calcium Wafers will quickly work wonders with it. It's goodby to blackheads, pimples, acne, boils, rash, eczema and a dirty "filled-up" complexion. You can get a box of Stuart's Calcium Wafers at any drug store at 50 cents a box, and you will be positively delighted with their wonderful effect.

Free Trial Coupon ⁴²

F. A. Stuart Co., 342 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich. Send me at once, by return mail, a free trial package of Stuart's Calcium Wafers.

Name

Street

City..... State.....

CHOICE PREMIUMS

WOULD YOU LIKE to earn some of the attractive and useful premiums that we offer for securing new subscribers? A copy of the AMERICAN MESSENGER containing a full list of these very desirable premiums will be sent on request.

AMERICAN MESSENGER, Park Ave. & 40th St., N. Y. City

TREMENDOUS VALUE FOR 15c.

The Pathfinder, Leading Weekly Magazine of Nation's Capital, Makes Remarkably Attractive Offer.

Washington, D. C., Special.—People in every section of the country are hurrying to take advantage of the Pathfinder's wonderful offer to send that splendid illustrated review of the whole world thirteen weeks for 15 cents. It costs the editor a lot of money to do this, but he says it pays to invest in new friends, and that he will keep the offer open until the Pathfinder passes the 200,000 circulation mark, which will be in a few weeks. Fifteen cents mailed at once with your application to Pathfinder, Box 91, Washington, D. C., will keep the whole family informed, entertained, helped and inspired for the next three months.

OUR MEDICINE CHEST

"Your narrative is too highly colored," remarked the editor, returning the bulky manuscript.

"In what way?" inquired the disappointed author.

"Why," replied the editor, "in the very first chapter you make the old man turn purple with rage, the villain turn green with envy, the hero turn white with anger, the heroine turn red with blushes, and the coachman turn blue with cold."

"Dat candidate was a gre't disap'intment to me," said the old colored man. "I dunno when I has been so took down." "Why, he greeted you cordially, and took you by the hand." "Yessah, he tuck me by de han', but when he leggo my han' ag'in dar was'nuffin' in it."

An old negro of Joplin, complaining that he had lost his dog, his employer asked why he didn't advertise for the animal in the newspapers. "Dat wouldn't do no good," returned the old man. "Why not?" asked his employer. "Well, sah, dat dog kain't read," responded the old negro.

A dealer in stuffed animals, who also kept a few live creatures for sale, gave his shopboy, who was permitted to sell the stuffed specimens, orders to call him when any one asked for any of the living animals. One day a gentleman called and demanded a monkey.

"Any one of these?" asked the boy, who was in charge, pointing to the stuffed specimens.

"No, I want a live monkey," answered the customer.

The boy stepped to the door of the back shop, and called to his master:

"You're wanted, sir."

The studio "tea" had been a great success; the one small and very youthful member of the company had walked softly about, looking at the pictures. Just before the party broke up the artist discovered him surveying a picture of a lion with awe and interest.

"Don't be afraid, little chap," said the artist, genially, patting his small guest on the head. "He won't hurt you."

"Oh, I'm not afraid at all," came the response in a clear treble that caused every one to listen. "He doesn't look a bit as if he were alive, you know."

"I certainly won't settle in this place," asserted the newcomer. "I met two men who looked as if they were starving to death."

"Just a proof of our healthy location," was the answer. "They are the doctor and the undertaker."

A colored man entered the general store of a small Ohio town and complained to the storekeeper that a ham that he had purchased there a few days before had proved not to be good.

"The ham is all right, Joe," insisted the storekeeper.

"No, it ain't, boss," insisted the other.

"Dat ham's sure bad."

"How can that be," continued the storekeeper, "when it was cured only last week?"

Joe reflected solemnly a moment, and then suggested:

"Maybe it's don had a relapse."

"I didn't know your little boy had to wear glasses." "Well, y' know, he's not obliged to; but they were a good pair of poor dear 'Enry's, and I thought it such a pity to waste 'em."

Mark Twain, so the story goes, was walking on a Hannibal street when he met a woman with her youthful family. "So this is the little girl, eh?" Mark said to her as she displayed her children. "And this sturdy little urchin in the bib belongs, I suppose, to the contrary sex." "Yassah," the woman replied; "yassah, dat's a girl too."

"Now," said a Boston school teacher to his class in English, "can any one give me a word ending in 'ous,' meaning full of, as 'dangerous,' full of danger, and 'hazardous,' full of hazard?"

For a moment there was a dead silence. Then a small boy raised his hand.

"Well," queried the teacher, "what is your word?"

Then came the reply, "Pious, full of pie!"

Dinah Snow was a colored cook in the home of the Smiths. One morning on going to the kitchen, Mrs. Smith noticed that Dinah looked as if she had been tangled up with a road-roller.

"Why, Dinah!" exclaimed she, "what in the world has happened to you?"

"Was me husband," explained Dinah. "He done went an' beat me ag'in, an' jest fo' nothin', too!"

"Again!" cried Mrs. Smith, with increasing wonder. "Why don't you have him arrested?"

"Been thinkin' ob it several times, missy," was the rejoinder of Dinah, "but I hain't had no money to pay his fine."

A new post office was established at a small village far out West, and the office of postmaster was bestowed on a native of the soil. After a while complaints were made that no mail was sent out from the new office. So an inspector was sent to inquire into the matter. He asked the postmaster why no mail had been sent out. The postmaster pointed to a big and nearly empty mail bag hanging up in a corner and said: "Why, I ain't sent it out because the bag ain't nowhere nigh full yet."

What 15c Will You Bring You from the Nation's Capital

The little matter of 15c in stamps or coin will bring you the Pathfinder 13 weeks on trial. The Pathfinder is an illustrated weekly, published at the Nation's Center, for the Nation; a paper that prints all the news of the world and that tells the truth and only the truth; now in its 23d year. This paper fills the bill without emptying the purse; it costs but $1 a year. If you want to keep posted on what is going on in the world, at the least expense of time or money, this is your means. If you want a paper in your home which is sincere, reliable, entertaining, wholesome, the Pathfinder is yours. If you would appreciate a paper which puts everything clearly, fairly, briefly—here it is. Send 15c to show that you might like such a paper, and we will send the Pathfinder on probation 13 weeks. The 15c does not repay us, but we are glad to invest in new friends. The Pathfinder, Box 91, Washington, D. C.

THE AMERICAN STANDARD BIBLE

Authorized and Edited by The American Revision Committee

"It is no longer necessary to defend, or even to recommend, the American Standard Revision. Its adoption, in 1916, by the Methodist Episcopal General Conference as the basis of the Ritual is at this writing the most recent of the notable tributes to the many great qualities of this Revision."

DAN B. BRUMMITT, Editor of the Epworth Herald.

You can obtain a Bible or Testament in any size type, printed on fine white Bible paper or Nelson's famous India paper, and in all styles of binding. Prices from 12 cents to $60.00.

Your Bookseller can show you the Nelson Bibles. Send for descriptive booklet to the publishers.

THOMAS NELSON & SONS, 381A Fourth Avenue, New York

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT

Reminiscences of James Whitcomb Riley

By CLARA E. LAUGHLIN, Editor and Writer who enjoyed his friendship for more than a score of years

Nationalizing America

By Prof. Edward A. Steiner

Author of "On the Trail of the Immigrant."

How to set in order our national house so as best to face the international crisis at the close of the Great War.

Net $1.00

Preparedness

By William I. Hull of Swarthmore College

An unanswerable indictment of military and naval "preparedness," in which it is shown to be its own judge and executioner.

Cloth. $1.25 Net.

What the War is Teaching

By Dr. Charles E. Jefferson

A book that gathers up in telling fashion the lessons which the red carnage of Europe should bring home to every American.

Cloth. $1.00 Net.

A book of startling incidents and literary legacies from an unusual friendship between the famous poet and the author. Containing many unpublished letters and original verse.

Illustrated. Net 75c.

Klondike Clan

By S. Hall Young

Author of "Alaska Days with John Muir."

A story of breathless interest dealing with the Great Stampede to Yukon in the days of the gold craze.

Illustrated. Net $1.35.

The Trail to the Hearts of Men

By Abe Cory

A story of action and power permeated with the spell of adventure, quickly moving, dramatic and glowing.

Cloth. Net $1.35.

"Tell Me a Hero Story"

By Mary Stewart

Illustrated in Colors by Samuel M. Palmer.

Retells in clear, simple form some old stories found enshrined in mummy-cases and other out-of-the-way places. Delightfully illustrated.

Net $1.25.

The Twins "Pro" and "Con"

By Winifred Arnold

Author of "Little Merry Christmas," etc.

It is difficult to conceive of any girl of Uncle Sam's reading this jolly little story except with rapt interest and gleeful delight.

12mo. Illustrated. Net $1.25.

Billy Topsail, M.D.

By Norman Duncan

The latest of the "Billy Topsail" books is a fascinating tale of adventure with "Dr. Luke of the Laborador," whose prototype, every one knows, is Dr. Grenfell.

Cloth. Net $1.25.

Boy Scout Crusoes

By Edwin C. Burritt

An adventure tale of the South Seas which will take its place in the boy's heart next to "Treasure Island" and "Robinson Crusoe."

Illustrated. Net $1.25.

Ask ANY Bookseller for REVELL'S BOOKS
158 Fifth Avenue, New York
17 N. Wabash Avenue, Chicago

THE TREASURY

SPECIAL NOTICE

OWING to occasional losses of letters, containing money, we would request friends and donors of the American Tract Society to remit by check or Post Office Money Order, which latter can always be duplicated in case of loss.

Receipts of the American Tract Society During October 1916

TOTAL DONATIONS (including $287.87 for Special Objects), $1,871.87.

COLORADO, $3.50.
Mr. Evers, $1.40; Mr. Graham, for Soldier's Text Book, $2.

CONNECTICUT, $171.
Mr. Anschutz, for Mexico, $10; Prof. Beach, for Mexico, $5; Mrs. Fisher, for Mexico, $10; Mr. Gordon, $5; Mrs. Williams $5; Mr. Tur-rill, $5; Miss Morgan, $2; Mr. Miller, $100; Mr. Gibbert, for Mexico, $10; Mr. Talcott, for Mexico, $2; Miss Howard, $10; Miss Colton, for Soldier's Text Book, $2; Mr. Learned, $5.

INDIANA, $15.
Mr. Taylor, $5; Mr. Weidman, $10.

IOWA, $26.82.
Mr. Litterer, $2; Mr. Adengast, $4.67; Mrs. Krop, $10; Wellesburg, Church Collection, $10; Mr. Rickens, $0.15.

LOUISIANA, $3.
Mr. Lepine, $3.

MASSACHUSETTS, $165.45.
Springfield, Church Offering, $4.50; "A Friend," for Soldier's Text Book, $1; Miss Munroe, for Soldier's Text Book, $2; Mr. Fischer, $1; Mrs. Travis, $1; Miss Metcalf, for Mexico, $1; "A Friend," $10; Mr. Bauman, $5; Mrs. Ramsdell, for Mexico, $5; Mrs. Berrien, $5; Mr. Ripley for Latin America, $2; Mr. Mann, for Mexico, $2; Mr. Noyes, for Latin America, $2; Granby, Church Offering, $1.60; Mr. Skiff, $10; Westhampton, Church Offering, $6.10; Mr. Legg, $5; Mr. Marsh, $3; "A Friend," $1; Mrs. Abbott, for Latin America, $10; Miss Allen, for Mexico, $5; Mr. Soule, for Mexico, $10; "A Friend," $5; Miss Ward, for Mexico, $1.25; Mr. Scott, $25; Wellesley Hills, Church Offering, $20; Mr. Pearson, $1; Mr. Murdock, $5; Mr. Stackpole, $5; Hon. Batchelder, $10.

MINNESOTA, $10.
St. Paul, Church Offering, $10.

MICHIGAN, $5.
Mrs. McVittie, $5.

MISSOURI, $11.
Miss J. Hoffmann, $2; Miss A. Hoffmann, $2; Mr. Hoffmann, $5; Dr. Spencer, $2.

NEBRASKA, $37.45.
Mr. Paulson, $0.15; Mrs. Zimmermann, $0.30; Fairmont, Church Collection, $10; Omaha, Church Collection, $5; Cedar Creek, Church Offering, $10; Omaha, Church Collection, $2; Mr. Lolmes, $10.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, $48.
Mr. Murray, to constitute Peyton Murray a Life Member, $30; Miss Pope, $5; Rev. Robie, $5; Mrs. Thompson, for Mexico, $3; for Soldier's Text Book, $3; Mr. and Mrs. Kimball, for Latin America, $2.

NEW JERSEY, $250.64.
Passaic, Church Offering, $12.59; Bloomfield, Church Collection, $5.50; Roseville, Church Collection, $20; Mr. Cortelyou, to constitute Rev. John Y. Brock a Life Director, $100; Cape May, Church Offering, $6.88; New Brunswick, Church Offering, $8; Princeton, Church Collection, $8.76; Mr. Hampson, for Soldier's Text Book, $2; Jersey City, Church Offering, $13.17; Atlantic City, Church Offering, $25; Miss Butler, $1; Passaic, Church Collection, $25.64; New Brunswick, Church Collection, $15; Mrs. Clark, for Soldier's Text Book, $2.10; Mrs. Allen, for Soldier's Text Book, $5.

NEW YORK, $322.78.
New York City, Church Offering, $92.64; Rev. Dr. Mendenhall, $10; Miss Merriam, $5; Mrs. Bissell, for Soldier's Text Book, $1; Yonkers, Church Collection, $47.22; Miss Roeschli, $2.50; Miss Powell, for Colportage work, $5; "A Friend," $5; Mrs. Motley, $20; Miss Burr, $2; Brockport, Church Offering, $15; Miss Van Duzen, $10; Miss Hitchcock, $1; Mrs. Shepard, $50; Mr. Bennet, for Soldier's Text Book, $2; Miss Krehbiel, $5; Southampton, Church Offering, $38.92; Miss Cole, $1; Mrs. Richards, for Soldier's Text Book $1; Mr. and Mrs. Remsen, $2; Miss Ames, $1.50; Mrs. Strong, $5.

OHIO, $85.92.
Mr. Riak, $2; Mr. Hunt, including $2; for German work at Ellis Island, $4; Mrs. Sharpless, $5; Miss Flammer, $1; Mr. Albaugh, $1; Cleveland, Church Collection, $25; Mr. Cushing, $5; Dr. Falls, $5; Mr. Hall, $5; "A Friend," $1; East Liverpool, Church Collection, $0.62; Miss Butler, $2; Dr. Floyd, $1; Dr. McCullough, $2; Mr. Fadden, $1; Dr. Miller, $2; Hon. Richards, $2; Mr. Sarraat, $1; Mrs. Sherrard, $1; Mr. Wannenmacher, $5; Wooster, Church Offering, $8; Youngstown, Church Offering, $3.30; Mr. Haas, $3.

OREGON, $5.
Mr. Voorhies, $5.

PENNSYLVANIA, $576.51.
Mrs. Frederick, $1; Vandegrift, Church Offering, $12; Mrs. Turner, $100; Pittsburgh, Church Collection, $4.93; Shippensburg, Church Collection, $2.55; Mr. Horsburgh, $2; Steelton, Church Offering, $2; Mr. Vinter, for Soldier's Text Book, $2; State College, Church Offering, $8.40; Franklin, Church Collection, $7.98; Rev. Kohler, $0.50; York, Church Collection, $10; Falls Creek, Church Collection, $5.60; Pittsburgh, Church Collection, $9.40; Mr. Torrance, $25; Mr. Schulte, $0.65; Greencastle, Church Collection, $2; Mr. McBrier, $5; Miss Spencer, $5; Mr. Spencer, $10; New Castle, Church Collection, $2.50; Mr. Mackenzie, $5; Miss Hoerr, $1; Mr. Marshall, $10; Mr. Meycan, $10; Mr. Patton, $3; Mr. Booth, $5; Mr. Bryan, $5; Mr. Eckbert, $25; Mrs. Eckbert, $10; Mrs. Emerson, $25; Mr. Emerson, Jr., $25; Mrs. Fertig, $10; Mr. Fayne, $100; Mr. Stewart, $100; Dr. Thompson, $5; Mr. Wheeler, $10; Mr. Kitchen, $3; Mr. Smiley, $1.

SOUTH DAKOTA, $54.15.
Madison, Church Collection, $54.15.

TEXAS, $5.
Rev. Ramsden, $5.

VERMONT, $31.75.
Burlington, Church Collection, $26.25; Essex, Church Collection, $5; "A Friend," $0.50.

VIRGINIA, $6.
Mr. White, $5; Miss Graves, $1.

WISCONSIN, $6.
Mr. Bissell, $5; Mr. Palmer, for Soldier's Text Book, $1.

FOREIGN, $30.
Hawaii, Miss Bond, $30.

LEGACIES, $50.
Fairfax, Vermont, Estate of Mrs. Elizabeth S. Chamberlin, $50.

Income from Trust Funds, $222.75.
Income for Missionary Work, $222.75.

American Tract Society

THIS SOCIETY was organized in 1825. Its work is interdenominational and international in scope, and is commended by all evangelical denominations.

It has published the Gospel messages in 178 languages, dialects and characters. It has been the pioneer for work among the foreign-speaking people in our country, and its missionary colporters are distributing Christian literature in thirty-three languages among the immigrants and making a home-to-home visitation among the spiritually destitute, both in the cities and rural districts, leaving all kinds of Christian literature, also the Bible or portions of the Scriptures.

Its publication of leaflets, volumes and periodicals from the Home Office total 794,639,700 copies. It has made foreign cash appropriations to the amount of $799,456.39, and grants of electrotypes to the value of $61,177.96, by means of which millions of copies of books and tracts have been published at mission stations abroad.

The gratuitous distribution of the past year is to the value of $16,684.99. The grand total of its gratuitous distribution has been to the value of $2,634,505.89, which is the equivalent of 5,269,010,000 tract pages.

The total number of family visits that have been made by the Society's colporters during the last year is 206,167; the total number of volumes distributed by sale or grant is 55,517, making the total number of volumes that have been circulated by colporters in the last seventy-five years 17,382,454, and the total number of family visits that they have made during the same period 18,612,843.

Its work, ever widening, is dependent upon donations and legacies, and greatly needs increased offerings.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President.
JUDSON SWIFT, D.D., General Secretary.
Remittances should be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

Life Members and Directors

THE donation of $30 at one time constitutes a Life Member of the American Tract Society; the addition of $70, or the donation of $100 at one time, constitutes a Life Director. Life members may receive annually copies of the Society's own publications to the value of $1; Life Directors to the value of $2; if applied for within the Society's year, from April 1st to April 1st, in person or by written order. No individual can draw more than one annuity any year for himself. Colporters are not authorized to supply Life Members.

Form of Bequest

I GIVE and bequeath to the "AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY," instituted in the City of New York, May, 1825, the sum of.....dollars to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said Society.

Three witnesses should state that the testator declares this to be his last will and testament, and that they signed at his request, and in his presence and the presence of each other.

FIELD SECRETARIES AND COLPORTAGE SUPERINTENDENTS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.

Rev. Isaac Pierson, Field Secretary for New England, 50 Bromfield Street, Boston, Mass.

Rev. Robert Murray, Field Secretary, Central Agency, 345 Fourth Avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Rev. A. W. Reinhard, Field Secretary and Superintendent of Colportage for the Western and Northwestern States, 721 South 37th Street, Omaha, Nebraska.

Rev. George Whitefort, Superintendent of Colportage, Southern Agency, Crichton, R.F.D., Mobile Co., Ala.

For Those in Need

The publishers of this paper frequently receive letters from people who would be very glad to receive the AMERICAN MESSENGER, but circumstances over which they have no control prevent them from sending even the small amount to pay for a year's subscription. Among such are faithful workers on home missionary fields, where the salary is small, aged men and women living in Homes, without any income of their own, chaplains in prisons and hospitals, and many other needy people.

Among the thousands of subscribers to the AMERICAN MESSENGER, we believe that there are many who would be more than pleased to assist in the Lord's work by sending this paper to one or more of these needy and deserving cases. We are confident that you will be well repaid by responding favorably to this appeal. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Fifty cents will pay for one copy for a year, or $1.50 will pay for five copies to be sent to individual names. Surely a paper of this kind would be appreciated by all receiving it, especially at this Christmas season.

Please send all subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER, Park avenue and Fortieth street, New York City.

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

TERMS: Subscription price, 50 cts. a year, payable in advance. In clubs of five or more, 30 cts. each. Club subscriptions mailed to separate addresses, if desired. Postage on foreign subscriptions, 24 cents additional. Canadian subscriptions, 12 cents additional. Single copies, 5 cents each.

On account of the additional charge which is made by the New York Post Office for mailing to subscribers in New York and Bronx Counties (Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx), no club rates, cash commissions or premiums will be given for subscriptions that must be sent to persons residing in those Counties. Each subscription in New York or Bronx County must be at the rate of 50 cents net.

Remit by Express, Money Order, Draft, Post Office Order or Registered Letter. For very small amounts, postage stamps may be sent at the risk of the sender.

RENEWALS: The date opposite your name shows to what time the subscription has been paid, and a change in the date is the receipt for renewal.

CHANGES: When sending change of address, be sure to send the old address as well as the new one.

OUR ADVERTISERS: We believe that all the advertisements in this paper are from responsible advertisers, and it is our intention to admit only such to our columns. Should, however, any of our subscribers find that any advertiser does not live up to his agreements, we would consider it a favor if they will inform us, and we will at any time give prompt attention to any complaint.

We do not, of course, guarantee that all persons will take the same point of view with the advertisers, and it must be borne in mind that the claims and statements made by advertisers are their assertions, and not ours.

Our readers will confer a favor upon advertisers and also upon us if they will mention the American Messenger when answering advertisements.

Special Combination Subscription Offers

We present herewith some attractive combination subscription offers which afford an excellent opportunity to save money. The subscriptions may be either for yourself or for your friends; they may be either new or renewal. The AMERICAN MESSENGER may be sent to one address and the other periodical to another address.

Should you wish to subscribe for two or more periodicals on the list in connection with the AMERICAN MESSENGER, write us and we will tell you the cost of the combination which you desire, but please remember that in every case the AMERICAN MESSENGER must be included.

When a copy of our Calendar for 1917, entitled "Making Friends," is desired, 10 cents additional must be sent with each subscription.

These Special Offers apply only in the United States and its possessions:

	Regular Subscription Price	Our Price for Both
American Messenger	$0.50	$2.10
Christian Herald	$2.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.65
Christian Endeavor World	$1.50
} To Jan. 1, 1917, only
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.30
Christian Worker's Magazine	$1.00	$1.30
American Messenger	$0.50	$2.10
Youth's Companion	$2.00	$2.10
American Messenger	$0.50	$0.80
American Poultry Advocate	$0.50	$0.80
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.20
Iowa Homestead (Weekly)	$1.00	$1.20
American Messenger (One Year)	$0.50	$1.20
Farm Journal (Five Years)	$1.00	$1.20
American Messenger	$0.50	$2.10
Presbyterian Banner	$2.00	$2.10
American Messenger	$0.50	$3.05
World's Work	$3.00	$3.05
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.50
Mother's Magazine	$1.50	$1.50
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.25
Boys' Life (Boy Scouts' Magazine)	$1.00	$1.25
American Messenger	$0.50	$0.85
The Housewife	$0.50	$0.85
American Messenger	$0.50	$0.85
McCall's Magazine	$0.50	$0.85
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.35
Modern Priscilla	$1.00	$1.35
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.15
Home Needle Work Magazine	$0.75	$1.15
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.65
Woman's Home Companion	$1.50	$1.65
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.65
Physical Culture	$1.50	$1.65
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.75
The Etude	$1.50	$1.75
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.35
Table Talk, The National Food Magazine	$1.00	$1.35
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.25
American Agriculturist	$1.00	$1.25
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.75
The Garden Magazine	$1.50
} To Jan. 1, 1917, only
American Messenger	$0.50	$3.05
Review of Reviews	$3.00

American Messenger, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York

VERY ATTRACTIVE WATCHES AS PREMIUMS

Excellent Time Pieces and Guaranteed to Please

VENUS

This is a Lady's Nickel Silver Watch, Stem Wind and Set with second hand. Splendid timepiece.

This watch will be given for only 8 yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at 50 cents each, or we will give the watch and a year's subscription for $2.40.

ARCALA

This is a very pretty 20-year gold-filled Lady's Watch, plain polished case, fitted with a high-grade 7-jewel lever movement and is guaranteed.

This beautiful Watch will be given for only 22 yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at 50 cents each, or we will give the Watch with a year's subscription for $7.25.

OVERLAND

Here is an excellent timepiece for boys and men. It has a nickel case, stem wind and set.

This watch will be given free and postpaid for only 5 yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at 50 cents each, or we will give the watch and a year's subscription for $1.60.

BARCLAY

This is a 20-year gold-filled, plain polished Gentleman's Watch, fitted with a high-grade 7-jewel lever movement, fully guaranteed in every particular. White dial.

We will give this Watch free and postpaid for only 20 yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at 50 cents each, or we will give the Watch and a year's subscription for $6.50.

The EVANGELINE

Convertible Bracelet Watch

A beautiful little watch with many uses. Bracelet can be removed so that watch can be worn on a chatelaine pin, leather or ribbon strap, sautoir, lavalliere chain, lorgnette chain or in a leather wristlet. The bracelet has patent expansion links adjustable to any wrist, and can be shortened by removing the centre link which is jointed.

The movement is of high grade lever construction, jeweled and adjusted to positions, an accurate and durable mechanism that we unhesitatingly guarantee against mechanical defects for five years.

Cased in twenty-year guaranteed heavy gold stock case, with bracelet of the same quality. This offer includes a handsome plush and satin lined case with alligator skin finish, as illustrated.

We will give this beautiful Watch and Bracelet for only 25 yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at Fifty Cents each, or we will give the set with one year's subscription for $8.50.

AN APPROPRIATE CHRISTMAS GIFT

A Beautiful Solid Gold Lavalliere

This is a very choice and attractive lady's neck piece. Solid gold, 15 inch chain. Two genuine rubies and one baroque pearl, mounted in solid gold setting of neat design. Furnished in a handsome plush-lined box. This is one of the choicest premiums we have ever offered.

We will give this Lavalliere for 15 yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at 50 cents each, or we will give the Lavalliere and one year's subscription for $4.50.

A GOOD COMBINATION OFFER

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER AND THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

Two of the Most Popular Religious Publications in America for only $2.10 a year to any part of the United States or Its Possessions.

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY RELIGIOUS MONTHLY

Regular Subscription Price 50 Cents a Year

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

Fifty-two Times a Year $2.00 a Year

The Christian Herald, interdenominational, is read every week by over two million Americans of the home-loving, deep-thinking class,—because it comes nearer to their real needs and ideals than any other publication. It carries into the home the news of the world, secular as well as religious, the really important happenings of the week, in such a plain straightforward manner that every reader is kept abreast of the times.

Please note that this Special Offer applies only to subscriptions in the United States and its possessions. On Foreign subscriptions $1.24 extra must be added for postage, making a total of $3.34.

If a copy of the beautiful AMERICAN MESSENGER Calendar for 1917, entitled, "Making Friends," is desired, ten cents additional must be added. Please send all combination subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER.

"THE ROAD TO UNDERSTANDING"

By MRS. ELEANOR H. PORTER, Author of "Pollyanna," "Just David," Etc.

The above is the title of a new serial story written by Mrs. Eleanor H. Porter, whose famous story "Pollyanna" was first printed in the Christian Herald. Competent critics who have read the manuscript declare it to be better even than "Pollyanna." The first installment of this remarkable story will be printed in the Christian Herald early during the coming year. It will be preceded by another serial story telling

HOW JANICE DAY WON THE TEMPERANCE FIGHT

This is the story of the strenuous efforts of Janice to stamp out the drink evil from her beloved small town. How she did it is an example which might well be followed by women in many other small towns. Both of these stories will be printed in book form. 100,000 copies of "The Road to Understanding" will be issued from the first printing at $1.35 each. Thousands of copies of the Janice Day book also have been sold in advance for $1.25 each. But by subscribing for the Christian Herald you will be able to read both of these stories without one cent of extra expense. Either one of them is worth the subscription price alone.

OTHER REMARKABLE FEATURES

The Church and Present-Day Problems: This will be a series devoted to the study of the church in looking after the material well-being as well as the spiritual uplift of the people.

The Future of Christianity will deal with the effect which the great war in Europe will have upon religion.

The Church in the Rural Community will be a series of articles which should be of tremendous interest to all who have the welfare of the out-of-town church at heart.

Are We Nearing the End of the Religious Age? This will be a splendid article, which will contain information of tremendous interest to all religious people. There will be articles on the relation of children to church work; the Church and Socialism; the Rising Cost of Living; a review of the progress of all religious denominations during the past year; an article on Memory, and How to Improve It, will be especially instructive.

Through the Orient with that gifted young writer, Maynard Owen Williams, who is now on a trip through the Far East especially for the Christian Herald. He will visit the mission stations of Japan, China and other places in the Orient. His Japan letters, already received, make fascinating reading. This is one of the most entertaining and instructive features of the Christian Herald.

Our Sermonic Department will give the Gospel message a stronger and more confident note than ever before. Among the regular contributors will be Rev. J. H. Jowett, D.D., who, besides contributing the first sermon of each month, will also lead in the Meditations. Other contributors will be Rev. C. H. Parkhurst, Rev. David J. Burrell, Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, Rev. D. H. Steffens, Rev. H. P. Eckhardt, Rev. C. A. Eaton and Dr. F. E. Meyer.

The Mountain Peaks of Prophecy. One of the leading authorities on Prophecy today is Prof. James M. Gray, Dean of Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, already well known to our readers, who has promised to contribute four comprehensive and wonderfully enlightening articles on "The Mountain Peaks of Prophecy," which everyone who loves to look forward to the time of the world's redemption will read with intense interest.

Christian Experiences. The series will continue during a large part of the coming year and will tell of the personal struggles and triumphs of many who have found the way of salvation.

The Reformation Jubilee. Nineteen hundred and seventeen is the four-hundredth anniversary of the Reformation. Protestant America is arranging for a great Jubilee Celebration. All the denominations are interested in it. Special articles, dealing with the leading phases of the Reformation and the influence of Luther's life and work on America and the world, will be contributed by able writers, including Rev. D. H. Steffens, Prof. W. H. T. Dau, Rev. H. P. Eckhardt, Rev. E. H. Pannkoek, and others who are making a special study of the subject.

There will be the Young People's Departments; the news of the day, secular as well as religious; short stories; poems and thousands of illustrations during the coming year.

REWARD TO YOU

FOR TELLING WHAT THIS PICTURE MEANS

The illustration represents a verse in the Old Testament.

If you know an appropriate Bible verse, write it on a sheet of paper or on a post card; sign your name and postal address. Mail it to the address below.

As a reward, you will receive a souvenir, such as a pretty book mark, art panel, or other minor attractive article, a copy of the Christian Herald, with its treasury of interesting pictures, delightful stories by eminent authors, important news topics (impartially printed), aids to right living, chatty information, original witticisms and other worth-while features; also prospectus telling about our Second great Bible Picture Study, in which you may gain $1,000 in cash, or one of 999 other cash rewards for telling the Bible verses that correctly apply to a series of pictures.

$5,628 in Cash Rewards in New Bible Picture Study

A most attractive inducement to Bible study is the contest to be conducted in the Christian Herald.

The Picture shown here is a specimen from the last contest; there were 60 pictures and over three thousand dollars paid in cash rewards.

In the new Bible Picture Study there are rewards amounting to the great sum of $5,628.00 in cash.

It is a fascinating pastime which ingeniously induces everybody—young, middle-aged and old—to devote some of his or her spare time in searching for Bible verses to fit pictures. The pecuniary rewards are generously bestowed upon faithful participants, yet the value of the Bible knowledge, so pleasantly acquired, is a reward of untold worth.

Miss S. A. Zelly wrote: "The contest is a wonderful work; I am finding more and more in God's Word for me as I seek." Chas. F. Harris wrote: "Can hardly wait for each issue of Christian Herald to come; am enjoying the contest very much." Mrs. Jennie Pettit wrote: "I have received unique, fascinating pleasure and spiritual uplift from the contest." These are but a trio from a legion of letters of praise. You will enjoy the Bible Picture Study, too.

Eminent clergymen, educators and the public in general are enthusiastic in their praise of the Christian Herald Bible Picture Study.

Find out for yourself. Answer this advertisement. We want to surprise and delight you.

Address THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

832 Bible House, New York, N. Y.

5
AMM

Vol. 75

No. 1

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

JANUARY, 1917

THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY, NEW YORK

CHURCH NEWS

One Hundred Years Old

The American Sunday School Union of Philadelphia is preparing to celebrate its one hundredth anniversary.

This unique and distinctive organization has grown steadily from the time of its inception until now. It is known throughout the country as one of the most practical and efficient benevolent societies in existence.

Its headquarters are in Philadelphia, where it owns a modern four-story building on the main shopping thoroughfare in the business center of the city. This building contains over twenty thousand square feet of floor space, and is occupied exclusively by the various departments of the organization, including the retail book store, the stock and shipping rooms, editorial department, missionary department, mailing rooms, composing rooms, bindery, etc.

At the present time, there are over 230 active field missionaries promoting the work of the American Sunday School Union in the United States. It is the particular object of these field workers to establish and equip Sunday schools in communities which are without religious development.

The work of these field missionaries is very frequently in undeveloped sections of the country, difficult of access, and many of them have experienced hardships of almost every conceivable kind. It is their work, however, to go where they are most needed, regardless of the sacrifices involved.

The wide scope of the work of the American Sunday School Union is readily recognized by reference to some of the actual statistics. During the past year, nearly fifteen hundred new Sunday schools have been organized, into which over seven thousand teachers and over sixty-eight thousand scholars have been gathered. The society's representatives also visited and rendered aid to 14,753 schools, including 76,156 teachers and 902,109 scholars. And, in connection with this work, 10,770 Bibles were distributed with 25,633 copies of the New Testament Scriptures.

During the entire history of the society, approximately 130,000 Sunday schools have been founded, on an average of about four a day. Thus, literally millions of children have been taught the principles of Christianity and the advantages of upright living—many of whom otherwise would never have known the Word of God nor the meaning of worship in any form. And, in addition to these millions of children, many thousands of parents have become converted to Christian lives as a direct result of the society's work.

With results of such incalculable value to look back upon and still greater results to be attained in the future the American Sunday School Union and all its affiliated workers may justly feel a deep sense of satisfaction and pride in the forthcoming celebration of a whole century of uplifting service.

The American Sunday School Union is undenominational. Its board of managers consists of laymen, representing seven different denominations. The large percentage of the Sunday Schools organized, later become affiliated with, or develop into various denominational churches; all of which is governed entirely by the wishes of the community residents in each case.

The New President of the World's Sunday School Association

Mr. H. T. R. Ferens, of Hull, England, has been chosen to succeed the late Sir Robert Laidlaw. Mr. Ferens has been a member of Parliament for the last ten years, but during that time he has continued to act as superintendent of the Brunswick Wesleyan Methodist Sunday school, of which he has been in charge for forty-two years, and which now has a membership of 2,500. During Parliamentary sessions, Mr. Ferens travels back from London to Hull each Friday, returning Monday morning—about two hundred miles each way—in order to superintend his school on Sunday and conduct the young people's service on Sunday evening. He has been treasurer of the British Section of the World's Sunday School Association since 1913, and in 1908 was president of the London Sunday School Union.

In addition to his Parliamentary duties, Mr. Ferens is Privy Councillor of London, and also High Steward of Hull—an office generally held by a peer of the realm. Political opponents admire him and many vote for him because of his high personal character.

Mr. Ferens is chief director of an industrial firm with a capital of £2,000,000. He entered the firm nearly fifty years ago with an empty pocket, and sterling worth has brought him to the front. He believes in systematic giving; when a man is only moderately well off, one-tenth of his income may suffice, but as he becomes rich his proportion should be raised. He has presented a public park to the city of Hull, has built and endowed a haven of rest for old people, and provided two recreation grounds for tennis, cricket, etc., in different parts of the city.

To such a national and international leader as Sir Robert Laidlaw, Mr. Ferens is a worthy successor; and the World's Association may well feel honored in his selection as the official leader of the Sunday-school hosts which number 31,000,000 souls.

On the Mexican Border

The Army Young Men's Christian Association is now operating forty-two large frame buildings in twenty-two camps of troops on the Mexican border. There are, in addition, six large tents and a traveling equipment consisting of an automobile truck, which is used to transport supplies to the isolated outposts in the Big Bend district of Texas.

Work is also carried on in hospitals, with troops on practice marches, at target ranges and visits are made regularly to the camps of patrol detachments. At intervals of five or six weeks, an expedition by motor truck carries Y. M. C. A. supplies to the men of General Pershing's command in Mexico. The work is in charge of 160 secretaries, who are assisted by committees of officers and men, and is supervised by two field secretaries, one at San Antonio and the other at El Paso. The general headquarters are in New York.

About 130,000 National Guardsmen and regular troops are served. Up to December 1st, 90 tons of writing paper and 80 tons of magazines had been distributed. Each center has a circulating library. Every building has a folding organ and many have pianos. Sixty phonographs are in use and 29 motion picture machines in operation. An average of 60,000 letters a day are written and mailed in the Association buildings.

There are lectures, concerts and entertainments in the evening. A regular educational program is being carried out, the courses including mathematics, English, Spanish and other branches.

Gospel meetings and Bible classes are held regularly and are well attended. The buildings are headquarters for the social life of the camps and are visited by thousands of men daily.

At Brownsville, Texas, there is an unusually successful group of Bible classes. On a single Sunday some 350 men from Virginia regiments attended. An interesting fact in connection with the teaching staff is the varied type of leadership. Among the teachers are one private, one corporal, one sergeant, five first lieutenants, three captains, one major and two Association secretaries.

Recent Temperance Activities

The Anti-Saloon League of New York announces that the Rev. Dr. James Empringham, who resigned the Rectorate of St. Paul's Episcopal Church of Syracuse, N. Y., about a year ago, to become superintendent of the Metropolitan District of the Anti-Saloon League, has resigned that position in order to take charge of the work of the Church Temperance Society of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

The decision of the leaders of the Episcopal Church constituting the Board of the Church Temperance Society to give definite and practical aid in the furtherance of a specific temperance issue in New York following closely upon the endorsement by the recent convention of the Diocese of New York of the Optional Prohibition Bill is the most notable temperance event of the past year next to the dry victories in the recent election.

This endorsement by the Episcopal Convention of the Optional Prohibition program, and the action of the Church Temperance Society in coming for its leadership in this new aggressive policy to the distinguished clergyman of its own church whom the Anti-Saloon League had chosen and developed into an expert, and the fact that Dr. Empringham, although leaving the League to become the official representative of his Church, still holds to the Anti-Saloon League as the most effective agency for co-operative effort, will still further strengthen it in the confidence of the conservative element.

With this latest reinforcement added to the national victories and the outspoken attitude of strong political leaders to the effect that the time has come to recognize the rights of the people of the cities to a voice on the liquor question, the passage of advanced temperance legislation at the coming New York General Assembly is seemingly well assured.

Our Honor Roll

Some time ago we started on Honor Roll on which are placed the names of those into whose homes the AMERICAN MESSENGER has come for fifty years or more. To this Honor Roll we have now added the name of Mrs. Fletcher, of Melrose, Mass., who has been receiving the AMERICAN MESSENGER for sixty years, and also the name of Mrs. McElroy, of Lebanon, Kentucky, who has written us in part as follows:

"DEAR AMERICAN MESSENGER: I have been in a hospital for some time, but am improving now. I can read a little. You are very near my Bible. Your last issue is one of the very best. From childhood I have read you till now I am a very old lady. I am sending you a club of five subscriptions (as I have done for many years), to be sent to those who could not otherwise have the AMERICAN MESSENGER—as a 'little deed of love.' I have been a life member of the American Tract Society for many years, and have it much on my heart."

Many Styles of Type and Many Languages

The Miracle of the MULTIPLEX

Change your type in an instant from one style to another—or any language

APPLICABLE TO ONE MACHINE

Two sets of type in each machine. "Just Turn the Knob" Presto one or the other Simple—Compact—Portable Beautiful work—beyond compare. The favorite for Teachers, Students and the Clergy. If not inclined to a new machine, inquire for our Factory Rebuilds. We Rent Machines of high quality. Patrons: President Woodrow Wilson Cardinal Merry del Val Dr. Alexander Graham Bell Chancellor Rev. B. G. Trant Bishop John G. Murray William Dean Howells also all Colleges and Universities Our special terms to collegians will interest you. Catalog for the asking.

Hammond Typewriter Co.
571 East 69th Street
New York City, N. Y.

Discouraged Teachers

WILL FIND THE SECRET OF SUCCESS IN

PELOUBET'S Select Notes

ON THE

International Lessons for 1917

Forty-third Annual Volume of this Great Commentary

Price, $1.15 net; delivered, $1.25

SEND FOR FREE SAMPLE PAGES

Wilde's Bible Picture Sets

Sixty pictures in an attractive portfolio illustrating the Uniform Lessons for 1917
50 cents, postpaid

W. A. WILDE COMPANY

120 BOYLSTON ST., BOSTON
Rand-McNally Bldg., CHICAGO

FOR SALE AT ALL BOOKSTORES

"GO TO CHURCH" STAMP

BY pasting a "Go to Church" Stamp on all your outgoing mail and packages you will be helping the American Tract Society to spread the Gospel by bringing the people to Church.

The sending of one of these Stamps may be the means of winning over one or more souls to Christ by way of the Church.

We wish to have the Millions who do not attend any Church or Mission receive a Message by the receipt of a "Go to Church" Stamp and we ask you to assist us in doing this.

We sell these stamps at cost.

15 Cents per hundred - - - $1.00 per thousand.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

Park Avenue and 40th Street

New York City

The American Messenger

"Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Luke 2:10

Vol. 75. No. 1

JANUARY, 1917

Copyright, 1916, by American Tract Society.

Terms: 50 cents per annum
Single copy, 5 cents

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

PUBLISHED MONTHLY

BY THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

OFFICERS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President.

JOHN HENRY JOWETT, M.A., D.D., Vice-President.

JUDSON SWIFT, D.D., General Secretary.

LOUIS TAG, Treasurer.

REV. HENRY LEWIS, Ph.D., Recording Secretary.

All of the above-named officers should be addressed at Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Rev. David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.

Rev. Charles Carroll Albertson, D.D.

Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.

Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D.

Rev. George Ernest Merriam.

Entered at the Post Office in New York as second-class matter.

A New Year's Greeting

To all the readers of the AMERICAN MESSENGER we extend our best wishes for a very Happy New Year. We none of us know what the coming months have in store, but there is one thing of which we may be very sure, and that is the fact that God's love broods over all His creatures, and whatever the New Year may bring to us, we know that all things work together for good to them that love Him. So let us enter upon the New Year joyfully, "looking backward," as Marion Lawrance has well said, "long enough to fix the lessons of the year just gone; looking forward until the challenge of the New Year grips us; looking upward for sky-born ideals and God's help to interpret them; looking inward with a personal resolve to live the gospel of happiness, helpfulness and hope."

We believe that in this issue of the AMERICAN MESSENGER our readers will find many features that will help toward the cultivation of such a spirit as will make the New Year one of achievement and of blessing.

We commend especially to the attention of our readers the splendid keynote for the New Year which Dr. David James Burrell has struck in his editorial contribution entitled, "The 1917 Campaign." Many other inspirational articles and poems will be found in this issue, and we trust that both in this number and in those that shall follow there may be found reflected the image of Him who is "The Light of the World."

May we not make a personal appeal to all our friends for their most hearty support in this New Year upon which we are just entering? If every present subscriber would secure at least one new subscription, the usefulness of our paper would be more than doubled, for the effect of such a cumulative effort would go on multiplying itself through all the years to come.

Watch Night

The first Watch Night service is said to have been held by Charles Wesley, and it has been described as an institution peculiar to Methodism. In recent years, however, evangelical churches in general have joined in the observance of this solemn and significant occasion.

As New Year's Day falls on Monday this year, the observance of Watch Night on the preceding Sunday evening will doubtless find favor in many churches.

It gives a peculiar significance to the New Year if we enter it in the spirit of prayer and of consecration which are characteristic of the true Watch Night service. There can be no better way of beginning a New Year than by entering it with prayer and song and in the spirit of worship and devotion that finds expression in the Watch Night gathering.

Charles Wesley made much use of the Watch Night in his long and useful ministry, and since his day many others have found in it a means of great spiritual power and refreshment.

The Church Prayermeeting

The call that has been issued for the observance of the first week of the New Year as a Week of Prayer suggests a timely emphasis upon the value of the church prayermeeting throughout the whole year.

In too many quarters the regular church prayermeeting has been sorely neglected. Indeed so marked has this neglect become that in some cases the church prayermeeting has been abandoned entirely.

As we start upon a New Year we should seek for the sources of spiritual strength that will help us to go forward growing in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ. One such source may surely be found in a church prayermeeting that is supported by faithful and earnest Christians and into which both pastor and people have resolved to put their full strength and energy.

It is a noticeable fact that the almost invariable prelude to a successful revival or evangelistic campaign is the gathering of the people together in prayer, sometimes in the meetings held at the various houses of worship and sometimes in "cottage prayermeetings" held in the different homes.

There is no good reason why the prayermeeting should not be one of the most popular and helpful services of the church. There is the promise of the divine presence where two or three are gathered together in the Master's name, and this means the assurance of power for all who will claim the promise.

If the church prayermeetings throughout our land should be revived and strengthened during the coming weeks it would result in a strong forward impulse for the cause of Christ. The progress of the Kingdom depends upon the spiritual atmosphere of the Church of Christ. There is nothing that will so clear the atmosphere and stimulate the spiritual life as the communion which believers may have with God in the hour of prayer.

By our presence at the church prayermeeting we bear witness to our Christian profession, we gain spiritual strength and comfort, and we encourage our brethren in the faith. Above all we glorify our Father in Heaven, for His house is the house of prayer, and by observance of the weekly hour of prayer we glorify Him.

Buddhists Imitate Christianity

According to a report by Rev. K. Mito, Secretary of the Japan Methodist Sunday School Board, the Buddhist Sunday Schools of Japan have increased by 610 in the space of two months.

A movement to hold the children of Japan for Buddha was inaugurated at the time of the Emperor's coronation in the fall of 1915 and within six months after this event there were 800 Buddhist Sunday Schools in Japan with a registration of 120,000 children.

The Buddhist sect best known for its imitation of Christianity is the Nishi Hongwanji, which has a Sunday School Board that acts for all Japan. This Board gives a banner to the best Buddhist Sunday School, and confers medals for special merit. The child that has the best record in each Buddhist Sunday School is given the privilege of visiting the far-famed buildings and treasures of the West Hongwanji temples.

In every detail the Buddhist Sunday Schools imitate the Christian school, using the same officers and committees and the same classification of departments.

They have also organized Mothers' Meetings, Young Men's Associations, and hold special meetings for children corresponding to our Children's Day, Rally Day, and so forth. The literature distributed in the Buddhist Sunday Schools also conforms closely to that used in Christian Sunday Schools, except that the name of Buddha is substituted for that of Christ.

The climax of imitation is reached in the music. Christian hymns, including both the words and the tunes, have been appropriated. Such songs as "Oh for a Thousand Tongues to Sing," "God is Love," "Jesus Loves Me, This I Know," and "Bringing in the Sheaves," are being used by the Buddhists, practically the only change being the substitution of the name of Buddha for that of Jesus. Many fundamental truths of the Christian religion have been brought into their stories and songs, which refer to Buddha again and again as "Heavenly Father," and ascribe to him many of the attributes of the living God whom Christians worship.

In view of these facts it is plain that the situation demands a strenuous forward movement on the part of the Christian forces in order to win Japan for Christ. It is therefore encouraging to note that during the past two years there has been an increase of 898 Christian Sunday Schools in Japan, with an added enrollment of 41,753 scholars.

It is apparent, however, that still more rapid progress must be made if the Buddhist Sunday School movement is to be outstripped by the Christian Sunday Schools after which they are so largely patterned.

A Heroine of the Switchboard

One of our exchanges tells of the heroism of the central telephone operator in the midst of a fire which threatened the destruction of the village of Jamesburg, N. J. The fire broke out in the dry-goods store underneath the telephone exchange, and swept so rapidly upward that the girl at the telephone was in great danger. But she remained at the switchboard and sent out the alarm of fire in every direction. Only when the flames had caught her clothing did she leave her post to make her escape.

Such cases of heroism, happily, are not at all rare. Men and women in the every-day stations of life are constantly ready for deeds of noble self-sacrifice, whenever the opportunity may arise.

It is the genius of Christianity to inspire deeds of heroism. Furthermore it must be remembered that an heroic spirit may manifest itself in acts of self-abnegation and self-denying service which do not call forth the admiring applause of the general public, but which nevertheless just as surely reveal the spirit of true heroism.

Child Labor Day

By the request of the National Child Labor Committee the last Sunday in January has been designated as Child Labor Day, and it is hoped that on that day the people of our country will give special attention to this vital subject.

The passage of a Federal child labor law by Congress has not removed the necessity for further action, for that law applies only to children engaged in producing goods for interstate commerce. It has been estimated that this Federal law will affect about 150,000 children in mills, factories, canneries, workshops, mines and quarries, but there are about 1,850,000 children from ten to fifteen years old who are entirely outside the scope of this law.

Those who have the welfare of children at heart should therefore press the various State Legislatures for the needed legislation to protect children of tender age. Some States have already enacted excellent laws which afford adequate protection to children from the greed of those who would otherwise exploit their labor regardless of their physical or moral welfare, but many other States have been very lax in this matter.

The Christian citizen who desires to protect children from the evils of child labor should find out what his State has done in this matter. If the legislation needed has not been enacted, then he should bend his energies toward seeing that there are placed upon the statute book the laws that will guard the children, and finally he should see to it that all laws designed to protect the little ones are faithfully observed.

Messages for Modern Men

BY REV. FRANK B. McALLISTER

Travel Light

SCHOOL boys learn that the Latin word for "baggage" is "impedimenta." Caesar had to employ baggage trains, although they often proved just what the word he called them means in English—"impediments," or "obstacles." The army of the old Roman campaigner could not advance far beyond its slow moving wagon loads of supplies. To be anchored to a pack train is a disadvantage, as many a commander in ancient and in modern times has discovered. In war, therefore, nothing superfluous is carried.

Experienced tourists learn to travel light. While some imagine three trunks to be necessary, the instructed ones get along very well with a dress suit case. They prefer a single change of serviceable raiment to a lavish wardrobe. They pack with a careful eye to elimination. Only necessary equipment is included.

The wisdom of the road is applicable to travelers on that highway called life. Millions of human pilgrims are burdened with excess baggage. They are trying to carry too much. To learn to leave behind a lot of the "impedimenta" that cumber life becomes for a multitude of the sons of men a prime duty and a high privilege. In our generation, when the world is almost overwhelmingly with us, the call to a more simple life sounds in our ears as with the clear note of a trumpet.

Simplicity in the present age is an ideal that well nigh requires fighting for. Thousands seem deliberately to have set out to make life complex and difficult. Our normal wants have been increased by artificial demands until the satisfaction of them all becomes a burden grievous to be borne. The high cost of living in our day is very often really the cost of high living. We strive to keep up with the procession and yearn to possess every gewgaw our neighbor may have acquired, sometimes quite irrespective of our ability to pay for the same.

Our days are spent under the tyranny of merchandise. Crowded shop counters demand our money or our lives. Acres of floor space are given over to bewildering assortments of goods, of the very uses of which our great grandparents would have been ignorant. Our sturdy forebears never dreamed of needing fifty per cent of the stuff to possess which we work overtime, to the profitless exhaustion of mind and body. With all the immeasurable advantages that civilization has brought, there have been foisted on us also scores of artificial wants that are no part of our fundamental human needs.

The discontent of men springs largely from mistaken premises. They imagine that they cannot live well unless they live elaborately. "Having food and raiment, let us be therewith content," enjoins the apostle. The spirit of the times laughs the dictum out of court. It lays us under bonds to cumber life with infinite bric-a-brac, on the ground that we need it all. It points to some lack in our material estate as being a pitiful privation when, in eight cases out of ten it is no real privation whatsoever.

How few, after all, are the elemental needs of men! "Man wants but little here below, nor wants that little long." Change the verb to "needs" and the sentiment of the old hymn can not be gainsaid. "Wealth begins," says Emerson, "in a tight roof that keeps rain and wind out; in a good pump that yields you plenty of sweet water; in two suits of clothes, so as to change your dress when you are wet; in dry sticks to burn; in a good, double-wick lamp, and three meals." No one need be a millionaire to possess such wealth as this. The rich man has no monopoly on the real gifts of life. His table may be of rosewood inlaid with gold—but it is for all that no more serviceable than one of pine. His menu may contain such items as ruffled grouse and terrapin—but these are no better food than honest Irish stew, nor as good. For the broker in his limousine the sun is no brighter and the air no fresher than for the laborer in the trolley car. When King Archelaus offered Socrates a princely pension if he would cease teaching morality to the Athenian youth, the sage replied: "Sire, meal is half-penny a peck, and I get water for nothing." The king had no gift that the wise man needed.

Here is suggested a perfectly valid philosophy for those who have the courage to receive and practice it. People could live happily with half of what the age forces upon them. One may snap his fingers at the time spirit who has learned that man's life consists not in the abundance of the things he possesses. The most perfect life our planet has known was surrounded by no luxuries. The Son of Man had not where to lay His head. The mighty Apostle who has stamped his thought on all succeeding generations was so meagerly furnished that an inventory of his goods revealed naught but an old cloak and some parchments. It is one of the rankest of human heresies to think that things make life.

There are some burdens too heavy to be carried along the highway of these earthly years. They ought to be cast aside, as teamsters lighten an overloaded wagon, or as sailors jettison the cargo of a craft that is being worsted in a rough sea. If one is being simply browbeaten by material or social demands, let him make an end of that slavery. Let him declare his independence of things. Let him bid the world know its own place.

Spiritual burdens, too, one must learn to shake off. Worry is one of them—a wretchedly heavy and useless piece of baggage. Grudges, jealousies and prejudices, withal, swell the unnecessary weight. They are drags upon progress. We must add our fears and hatreds, to be classed, nearly all of them, at least, among our "baggage of cares" of which Emerson speaks, that make heavy work upon the road. The Apostle Paul had learned the secret of traveling light. It was his counsel to posterity. "Wherefore," he says, "laying aside every weight and the sin that doth so easily beset us run with patience the race that is set before us."

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTION

DR. DAVID J. BURRELL.

THE 1917 CAMPAIGN

BY

REV. DAVID JAMES BURRELL, D.D., LL.D.

Pastor of the Marble Collegiate Church, New York City

FAREWELL to the Old Year! "Alack, our friend is gone: step from the bier and let him in that standeth at the door." Welcome to the New Year, with all its promises of better things!

Now for the campaign. What shall it be?

Was there ever a country like ours? Never did God deal so with any people. A century and a half ago we were a feeble folk like the colonies; today we are the most prosperous and happy nation on earth. While the skies of all Europe are lurid with war we sit feasting under our vines and fig-trees with none to molest or make us afraid.

But there is a fly in the ointment. We call ourselves a Christian nation; yet there are seventy millions of our people who care nothing for Christ. What do our thirty millions of professing Christians propose to do about that? Nothing? Incredible!

What has our Lord and Master to say about it? "As the Father hath sent me into the world to seek and to save the lost, so send I you." It thus appears that the thirty millions are under commission to go out after the seventy millions, seeking, like the seeking Christ, until they find them and bring them to the Father through Him who said, "No man cometh unto the Father but by Me."

Thus the campaign is marked out for us. Its key-note is evangelism. And the keynote of evangelism is, "Come to Jesus." It is intimated in some quarters that "Come to Jesus" is a superannuated call: but that is impossible so long as Christ Himself continues to say, "Come unto me!"

What a country ours would be if the seventy millions were all Christians!

We should no longer be calling for civic reform; for when a sinner is converted he becomes ipso facto a good citizen. He can be trusted to put his conscience into the discharge of all public duties. No more graft and corruption and malfeasance in office. If the members of our Senate and House of Representatives were all Christians what a Congress that would be!

And social reform would also be an accomplished fact. Capital and labor would adjust their differences without strikes or lockouts. Dens of iniquity would be put out of business; for when gamblers and rumsellers are converted to Christ the doors of their headquarters close automatically. Tramps and hoboes would retire, with ogres and hobgoblins, into the limbo of ancient fairy tales; for when Bartimaeus is converted to Christ he casts away his beggar's cloak and begins to earn an honest living. Old feuds and quarrels would be healed; divorces would cease and wars would be impossible, because the spirit of the Gospel is the Truce of God.

But how shall this be accomplished? Only by a mobilization of the Church. There is a Dutch proverb, Een dracht maakt macht; which may be translated freely, "All at it, always at it, all together at it." The Church needs this spirit in the prosecution of the Holy War for the Kingdom of God. "Our Country for Christ?" We can have it, when we really want it and set about it.

If so, ministers must come to the front. This means that they must give up preaching on side lines and devote themselves to the evangel which is written in this nutshell, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life." New Thought, New Ethics and New Theology do not convert men. Nothing but the preaching of sin can bring sinners to their knees with the cry, "Men and brethren, what shall we do to be saved?" And nothing but the preaching of salvation through Christ can convert them to truth and righteousness.

It is said that Bishop Latimer on one occasion preached a sermon in the Royal Chapel before Henry VIII which greatly offended His Majesty by its frank exposure of certain royal sins. He was ordered to preach again on the next Sabbath and make a suitable apology. At the appointed time he read his text and began thus: "I heard a voice from Heaven saying, 'Hugh Latimer, dost thou realize before whom thou art to preach this day? Consider well; he hath the power of life and death over thee. But forget not on whose errand thou art come. Thou art under commission from the King of Kings; wherefore take heed and preach not as an eye-servant or a man-pleaser, but as one under bonds to declare the whole counsel of God!'"

But while the ministers are expected to lead, the people must follow. "If every one would look to his own reformation how easy it would be to reform the nation." The Christians in our country are to the non-Christians as one to three; wherefore if each were to convert one other annually, in three years we should be singing unanimously, "All hail the power of Jesus' name." Is that too much for the Master to expect of us?

The reader of these lines is asking just now, "Does that mean me?" Certainly it does, if you are a Christian. Did not Christ say, "As the Father hath sent me, so have I sent you?" This then is the commission of every follower of Christ, "to seek and to save." All other businesses must be subordinated to it. "I cobble shoes," said William Carey, "only to support myself while bringing men to the saving knowledge of the grace of God."

Well, then, what do we propose to do about it? Shall we go on feathering our own nests? Shall we content ourselves with singing, "When I can read my title clear to mansions in the skies," or "Oh, how I love Jesus because He first loved me," or "Fly abroad, thou mighty Gospel?"

The Lord would make this new year a year of His own right hand; but He works through His people and invites them to cooperate with Him. He visits the market place where they stand with folded hands and says, "Why stand ye idle all the day? I come from the ingathering of souls. Behold my sickle; here is one also for thee! Say not, 'It is yet four months and then cometh the harvest'; lift up your eyes and see! The fields are white unto the harvest! Come with me; and thou and I will save the people today!"

It is only by such cooperation with Christ that we attain to the full measure of the Christian life. It cannot be done by going to Church on Sunday to "sit and sing our souls away to everlasting bliss." It cannot be done at the communion table or at the family altar or in the trysting place. If we would follow the Master we must go where He goes; out on the dark mountains after the lost, onward to Jacob's well where a woman of the town is waiting for the water of life, or away to the regions beyond where a Gadarene demoniac is helplessly groping for the right way. Always seeking to save! This is the plan of the campaign. Is the Church of Christ ready for it? Are we individually ready for it?

It is not a question to be referred to the Church en masse. You and I must answer it for ourselves. Saint Francis Xavier thought to convert Japan, some centuries ago, by sprinkling holy water on the multitudes who followed him; but nothing came of it. Nothing could come of it, because men are converted one by one. Andrew must go out after Simon, and Philip must go out after Nathaniel if they are to be brought in.

On the wall of my study hangs the picture of a man kneeling alone in an upper room. It was fifty-eight years ago that this man, a tailor by trade but an evangelist by commission, went into the room to supplement his work by prayer for an outpouring of the Spirit of God. A fortnight later that room was full of praying men who went out each to seek another and a few months after, the great revival of '57 was sweeping over the country like a prairie fire. Andrews and Philips were here and there and everywhere campaigning for Christ. The Saturday Review made this satirical comment: "An enthusiast emits a subtle aura which falls upon the nerves and gastric plexus and produces an epidemic." It is such an "epidemic" that our country needs; and individual Christians—such as you, kind reader—must say whether or no we shall have it.

Two things are pre-requisite; willingness and obedience. Here is the gracious promise, "If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land."

It is said that when Ismail, the commander of the Mohammedan army, was asked if he could furnish fifty thousand men for a Holy War, he drew an arrow from his quiver and said, "Send this to my camp among the hills and fifty thousand men will come." "But suppose fifty thousand more were wanted?" he was asked. He then took another arrow from his quiver, saying, "Send this to my camp by the great river and you shall have fifty thousand more." "But what if all Moslems were needed?" "Carry my bow through the borders of Islam and the earth will tremble with the footfalls of multitudes hastening to the Holy War!" This is the spirit that should animate those who profess to follow Christ. His flaming Cross is lifted with a summons to all who profess loyalty to Him. How shall we answer it?

"If ye be willing and obedient." An old-time preacher says "A Christian is marked in the ear and the foot"; meaning that, on hearing, he runs to do the Master's will. Jonah was sent to Nineveh; but taking a slight liberty with his commission, he paid his fare and took passage for Tarshish. He might have known what would follow. The series of adventures that sent him back to take ship for Nineveh marked the turning point of his life. In the discharge of duty, following his instructions to the letter, he later saw the Ninevites clothed in sackcloth and heard them crying mightily unto God.

There is no blessing for Christians who sleep in the holds of vessels bound for Tarshish. All the promises are for the man who goes where the Master sends him.

Let us pray, therefore, that we may be "willing in the day of God's power." If any of the Lord's days can be called par excellence the day of His power it is New Year's day, when He leads us forth into all the possibilities of the future under a rainbow-arch of promise. Wherefore let us pray for the spirit of willingness and obedience; but not without knowing what it means. For an answer from heaven would make evangelists of us all.

"Ye are the salt of the earth," said Jesus, "but if the salt have lost its savor, wherewith shall it be salted; it is thenceforth good for naught but to be cast forth and to be trodden under foot of men. Ye are the light of the world; let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

Are we enlisted for the Campaign? Its banners bear this legend: "America for Christ!" Who lends a hand? If we be willing and obedient we shall see souls coming to Christ as doves to their windows. Roll swifter round, ye wheels of time, and bring the welcome day!

This Year

BY GEORGIA L. NYMAN

This year,

*Should thought unworthy seek thy soul,
That thought deride;
O, let thy nobler self control;
With Him abide.*

This year,

*If word unkind should chill thy heart,
That word forget;
Thy sweetness will bid strife depart
And conquer yet.*

This year,

*Should earth's most valued gifts be thine,
O, let not pride,
Safe, sweet humility divine,
Cast far aside.*

This year,

*If syllables attuned to Love
Should crown thy days,
Forget not Love's sweet source, above,—
To Him, the praise.*

The Power of New Things

BY ANNE GUILBERT MAHON.

THE little child grieving over the broken toy is inconsolable, but the instant that child is given a new plaything or is shown something new, the old trouble is forgotten. The child is happy in the new!

Is it not so with us who are children of an older growth? Is there any hope of accepting our lot, of making the best of our sorrow, of bearing our losses or of overcoming our disappointments while we cling sadly to the past and keep afresh old, unhappy memories?

The only way we can go on happily through life is by turning our eyes and our thoughts from the things that make us sorrowful, from the unhappy past and the old memories, and thankfully and eagerly accepting the new, getting all the good we can out of it, and realizing its power to comfort, to divert and to help us bear what we must.

There are so many new things! If one resolutely sets out to find as many as possible, to look forward expectantly to each new day, with its new experiences, its new blessings, its new opportunities, for the new friends it may bring, the new books one may read, the new places which may be visited, the new ways of doing things which may be found, he will be amazed and delighted. There are so many, many new things just waiting for us to accept them, to enjoy them, to let them enrich our lives and bring us solace and enjoyment. As Susan Coolidge says:

"Every day is a fresh beginning;
Every morn is the world made new;
You who are weary of sorrow and sinning,
Here is a beautiful hope for you—
A hope for me, and a hope for you."

The trouble with us is that we so often shut ourselves up to our grief; we say we can never be solaced, that we can never be happy again, can never bear the loss, the sorrow, the loneliness, and so we cling to all the old unhappiness. We live so much in the past—in a dream, as it were—not in the present, not realizing our opportunities, not reaching out to grasp our blessings.

We are told that there is no surer sign of advancing age than to dwell continually in the past. We are also told, by those who have made a study of such subjects, that those who have been noted for retaining their health and youthfulness far past the average age are those who have looked forward to each new day with the zest and enthusiasm of childhood, sure that even amid the trials and hardships which may come that there will also come new blessings, that there will be sunshine to balance the shadows which are bound at some time to fall on everyone's life.

"What will be new today?" is the motto one woman has printed in large letters on a card in her mirror. Her eyes fall on these words each morning when she arises. The motto stays with her all day. She is constantly on the lookout for the new, for new and better ways of doing things, new blessings, new friends, new experiences and new lessons. She has resolutely turned her back on the troubles of her life. She reaches out eagerly for the good which she feels sure is in store for her—the newness of each new day.

Two objects cannot occupy the mind at one time. If our thoughts are filled with the new and the pleasant things there will be no room in our minds for the old and troublesome ones. Let us accept the new, let us seek for it, reach out for it and get from it its blessing; so only can we bear our burdens, so only can we go on with cheerful hearts and unfaltering steps to do the work which is ours to do, to grasp the present opportunities and to realize the present blessings. Let us not forget the best that was in the old—its lessons, its rich experiences, its happiness, but let us put aside its sorrows and reach out with welcoming hands for the new!

The Scope of the Vision

BY REV. A. MESSLER QUICK

*We thank Thee, O Father, for the year that has flown,
Its blessings were boundless that came from the Throne,
For surely Thou holdest in the palm of Thy hand,
All the years that Thy grace, and Thy goodness have spanned.*

*As the weaver's shuttle through the web swiftly glides,
As speeds the vessel o'er the sea's billowy tides,
So the years in their flight are speeding away
The friendships that held o'er our bosoms their sway.*

*The memories are with us though the moments have sped,
And loves with us linger of those we call dead,
All the sweep of the years will never erase
The stamp of their love or their image efface.*

*When the eye of our faith has its fulness of range,
It leaps over the bounds of sped moments and change,
And sweeps in its vision the sphere of the soul,
The arena of life-work, and the joy of the goal.*

*The goal of the soul; ah, in vain shall we try,
To scale in our vision the veiled glories on high,
Though in thought and by faith 'tis our privilege to soar,
Where our vision is barred from the largess in store.*

*We bide in our faith where our vision is veiled,
Where even the eyes of seraphs have failed,
Assured that veiled things we cannot understand,
Are right, Our Father, in Thy wisdom well planned.*

Quiet Service

BY G. T. RIGHTSSELL.

It is hard for most people to resist the temptation to make a noise in the world. It is natural to wish to have credit and praise and honor for what we do. But the motive that ought to inspire us is to do the things we have to do and to do them well. If honor comes, it is well, but this is not the thing we should strive after.

The life of Dorcas was one of quiet service. She was probably one of those who do not let the left hand know what the right hand is doing. She was modest, not giving herself credit for the good she did, and only properly appreciated till she was gone. Few take notice of the things we do till we are missed.

Some of the quietest lives are accomplishing the most of permanent value. In the process character is being built. Every little act of service leaves its imprint upon the life of the doer, and finally a beautiful character is called home to receive the approval of God.

The world is impatient to see results. It has little sympathy with the man who does not make a noise and commotion as he goes along. The world does not care about the substructure, but the wise man lays the foundation, as if he were building for God's approval, not for man's.

We may even dislike the work we have to do. In the story, "John Halifax, Gentleman," the hero in his youth toiled for years in a tannery, detesting the work, but staying faithfully with it. But he was not only qualifying himself for business success; he was also building up a grand and noble character.

Most of our deeds of service are stepping-stones to higher and more honorable service. As we complete one task another and more responsible service is revealed to us. There is but little need to be looking for something to do. More is usually presented for our doing than we seem to have time to do.

PRINTED PREACHERS

For Fishermen in the West

Rev. Francis E. Smith, a colporter evangelist of the American Tract Society, tells in a recent report how he came into contact with the fishermen at Gig Harbor in the State of Washington. With his report he sent a photograph, which is reproduced on this page, and which shows the fishermen dipping their nets in hot coal tar on the pier which has been erected at the water's edge. A stairway up the face of the bluff appears at the left hand side of the picture. High bluffs are the characteristic feature of the shore line of the Puget Sound region where this photograph was taken.

In his report Rev. Francis E. Smith tells of his work at Gig Harbor and other localities in the Puget Sound district in the following words:

"My work during the month has taken me into many isolated places in the Wollochet Bay district. I have come into touch with ranchers and logging camps. Near the bay is a small church, in which there is quite a congregation of young people. I had the privilege of preaching twice in this church. I hope to be able to get in touch with this community still more fully in the future, for there are some very promising young people in the vicinity.

"At Gig Harbor, Pierce County, there is quite a large settlement where there are many fishermen. To this place I have paid periodical visits for several years. The population is mixed and includes Americans, Scandinavians, Icelanders, Dalmatians and various other nationalities. There are three churches, Presbyterian, Methodist and Roman Catholic. Until recently the Presbyterian church was presided over by an old-time missionary. Many are the interesting things he has told me about the early days in this Puget Sound country. He passed to his reward a few months ago after only a few hours' sickness. His career was truly an eventful one. The Dalmatians are members of the Roman Catholic church and are not easily reached, nevertheless I have managed to put some of our Christian literature into their hands.

"At Olalla in Kitsap County there is a community church composed of members of six denominations. They are working together in harmony and have engaged a retired Methodist minister to preach for them. I have supplied many families there with Christian literature which I am sure will bring good results in the future.

"I am also making regular visits to a Sunday school in a school district about three miles from my home. Here about thirty children gather for Bible study. It is a real treat to go and talk to a group of small children and tell them the story of Jesus. I am glad that through the aid of the American Tract Society I can do this work."

✻ ✻ ✻

In the South

Rev. James M. Carter, who has been circulating "printed preachers" among the people of the South for many years, sends this message from Martinsville, Virginia:

"Once more I stop to give you a few words from my field of labor. I am glad to say that the 'Good News' is being accepted and a hearty welcome is extended to the missionary colporter of the American Tract Society. As the darkness of night is followed by the beautiful sunlight, so beneficial results follow the visits which I make into different communities, and the people are led into reading and searching for the truth.

FISHERMEN DIPPING THEIR NETS IN HOT COAL TAR AT GIG HARBOR, WASH.

"No other agency has so helpful an influence upon the hearts of the people as God's blessed Word, especially as it is presented in the printed page. As one writer has said, 'The best thing that we can do for the people is to influence them to read the blessed Word of God for themselves.' And this statement is certainly true, for I come face to face with so many who speak to this effect: 'The publications of the American Tract Society have opened up a new life for me, because I have in them something to engage my idle moments and something upon which to meditate while I am busy.'

"Our work in distributing Christian literature is highly spoken of by both the rich and the poor. Our Explanatory Bibles and other wholesome literature are helping to a better understanding of the Scriptures."

✻ ✻ ✻

A Spiritual Influence

Rev. August W. Reinhard, Field Secretary of the American Tract Society, who has been visiting a number of the German Presbyterian and German Reformed Churches in the Middle West was also able to visit a number of the families connected with those churches. He writes:

"In almost all these homes I found libraries, consisting for the most part of publications issued by the American Tract Society. Nowhere have I found such spiritual people as in these churches, and I told them that their books had much to do with their healthful religious life. I found the writings of Baxter, Doddridge, Bunyan and the like in nearly every home. It was a joy to visit these dear people of God."

✻ ✻ ✻

A Message from West China

In Chungking, West China, are the headquarters of the West China Religious Tract Society. Cash appropriations have been sent annually by the American Tract Society to the West China Society in aid of its publication work. Recently Rev. Harold J. Howden, General Secretary, sent the following communication:

"It is my happy duty to convey to the American Tract Society the Vote of Thanks, which was passed by the members of the West China Religious Tract Society assembled at the last Annual Meeting. The resolution adopted was to this effect:

"Resolved that the best thanks of this meeting be accorded to the American Tract Society for their substantial help received during the past eighteen months."

"We are glad to be able to report a steady progress and are deeply grateful that the present conflict in Europe has not materially affected our work. Our position indeed is such that we are at the point of strengthening our administration all round and to receive a check would throw our plans back most seriously. However we trust that we shall be allowed to go forward and thus make the printed message reach larger numbers and do more effective work than we have ever done before."

✻ ✻ ✻

For Tamil-Speaking People

A recent letter brings the good news that Rev. A. C. Clayton, who has already devoted ten years of fruitful service to the production of Christian literature in the Tamil language for the people of India, has been appointed as Tamil literature missionary for a third term of five years, beginning January 1, 1917.

Mr. Clayton is a member of the staff of the Wesleyan Mission with headquarters at Madras, India. Much of his time is given to the work of the Christian Literature Society for India, whose headquarters are also in Madras.

RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS

A Special Note to Our Readers

This department of our paper is maintained for the open discussion of any question concerning the religious life, the treatment of which may prove helpful and interesting to the general Christian public. We therefore invite our readers to direct such questions to the Editor of the AMERICAN MESSENGER. Only the initials of the writer will be given in connection with any letter that is printed. The answers to the problems thus presented will be given by Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D., Pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian Church of New York City, and one of the Contributing Editors to our paper.

The interest that has already been awakened by this new department is shown in two letters, which have been received by the Editor of the AMERICAN MESSENGER, and which we venture to quote at this point. One lady writes:

"Dr. Work's beautiful letter on the future life (printed in the Religious Problems department of the October issue of the AMERICAN MESSENGER) has been a source of great comfort to me, as no doubt it has been to many others. The blessed hope of seeing our loved ones again is so strongly implanted in us that it is a subject on which we all love to dwell and which always brings comfort and consolation."

Another subscriber writes:

"I have long been an interested and happy reader of the AMERICAN MESSENGER, but I want to tell you that the last two numbers have been even more interesting than those before them. I think the department 'Religious Problems' a fine addition, and Dr. Work is such an interesting and helpful writer that I am sure many will receive benefit from it."

The question presented for discussion this month and Dr. Work's reply are as follows:

DEAR SIR:

I am very desirous of knowing your views concerning our dear departed friends, whether they enter into the joys of the future life at once, or sleep in their graves until the final resurrection. Will you kindly answer in the next issue?
A. M. G.

DEAR FRIEND:

This question is still pertinent, although it has been many times answered. The Bible itself is in a sense responsible for this idea in the minds of many. Death is so often referred to in the Scriptures as a sleep that it is no wonder that some have concluded that the state of men after death is one of sleep or unconsciousness.

When our Lord spoke to His disciples about Lazarus, he said, "Our friend Lazarus is fallen asleep; but I go, that I may awake him out of sleep." When He saw that they misunderstood His reference to sleep, He said plainly to them, "Lazarus is dead." Another passage that is likely to be misunderstood is the passage in the First Epistle to the Thessalonians, where the Apostle Paul speaks of those who have fallen asleep in Jesus. (See the Revised Version.) These words of the apostle certainly do not even remotely suggest the idea that we shall remain in an unconscious state after death. No doubt the hymn, "Asleep in Jesus," which the church has sung for so many years, has done something to fix the idea of the sleep of the soul in the minds of some.

As a matter of fact there have always been some from the time of the early church down to the present who have held to the idea of soul sleeping. Both Origen and Tertullian argued against it. Calvin wrote a book against it. These psychopannychists, or soul-sleepers, as they have been called, have of course made exaggerated and we believe mistaken use of those portions of Scripture where death is likened to sleep. They also base their conclusion upon a philosophical belief that the soul cannot act without the body, and that therefore it must wait in quietude or sleep until the body is raised. Christian teaching to be sure is that the body must await the resurrection—the body in this sense is asleep in Jesus. But the church universally has held tenaciously to the belief that the soul passes at once into the presence of Christ, as suggested by His own words to the penitent thief, "This day shalt thou be with Me in Paradise." One of the historic denominations of the church uses this language, which may be regarded as a suitable summary of Christian thought on the subject: "The souls of believers are at their death made perfect in holiness and do immediately pass into glory, and their bodies, being still united to Christ, do rest in their graves till the resurrection."

An excellent authority sums up the argument against soul-sleeping as follows:

1. The nature of the soul which implies constant activity. Freedom from the body should mean greater, not less activity.

2. The idea has a cheerless aspect. It makes the future blank. It makes death wholly a catastrophe, especially to those who are called in the midst of great activity. What about the words of Revelation, "They serve Him day and night in the temple."

3. Christian hope, faith and experience are against it. All our Christian anticipation bids us look, not for silence and inaction after death, but for a state of blessedness altogether different from mere slumber.

4. The testimony of Scripture is overwhelmingly against it. What did Paul mean when he said that to be "absent from the body" would be "present with the Lord," if the soul is to slumber after death in unconsciousness?

EDGAR WHITAKER WORK.

✻ ✻ ✻

Silent Evangelists

BY REV. C. A. S. DWIGHT, PH.D.

EVANGELISM is the method by which Christianity has been propagated in every age, but evangelism is of many kinds. Geographically we may divide it into home, city, and foreign missions—or we may say that there is evangelism by voice, by example, and by the printed page.

The invention of the printing press has made the task of the Christian church, both harder and easier. It has supplied the adversaries of souls with multiplied means of undermining the faith of men and of spreading abroad allurements to vice, and it has provided the Church with the instruments of evangelization on a world-wide scale. Tracts, religious newspapers, theological text-books, and good literature generally may be classified under the general head of "silent evangelists." The four great evangelists are Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, but they have been followed by a large host of little gospels, miniature New Testaments, epistles writ in the hearts of men, and acts of modern apostles, which constitute a great body of Christian testimony, ever enlarging, and ever needed to offset the multiplying literatures of the devil.

We are of those who believe that the day of the tract has not gone by, though now perhaps such leaflets should be prepared more artistically, and phrased with greater skill and tact. Much of the "good seed" of the Kingdom consists of just such fugitive leaflets, silent messengers of the Lord of hosts.

On missionary ground the saving value of even a leaf torn from a New Testament, which has fallen by chance (or providence) into the hands of some heathen has been proved again and again. Even in the civilized New World these silent evangelists may accomplish a great work, supplementing though not serving as a substitute for, the spoken word and the force of consecrated example.

Though "their voice is not heard" these printed appeals in behalf of Christ's religion testify effectually for Him. The Church is only now beginning to realize the power and possibility of the religious press, which, as never before, is now called upon to compete with a bewildering variety of good, bad or indifferent offerings of the so-called "secular" journals. Let us keep on hand a supply of these silent evangelists—and then from time to time, as opportunity offers, send them forth on their quiet missions of testimony to the truth as it is in Jesus!

✻ ✻ ✻

The Dawn of Eternal Day

BY KATHLEEN HAY.

Have you ever stood at early dawn and watched the first faint rays of the rising sun, steal earthward, here and there touching a dew-kissed flower, until suddenly and mysteriously the golden rays shine forth on all sides, and the world lies bathed in the golden splendor of glorious morning?

Night with its shadows has gone, one by one the stars above have silently faded, and morning with all of its beauty and gladness has seemingly arisen from behind those far-away hills, and suddenly stretched forth its glory to all the world.

Hundreds of tiny voices blend their notes in a glad harmony for the new-born day. And then—have you stood at evening and watched again across those distant misty hills, the last faint glow of the dying day, as slowly the light in the west faded, leaving no golden rays to brighten the shadowy world?

Morning and evening—sunrise and sunset—and the day is done.

Have you listened to the rippling laughter of a little child, and gazed on a baby's smiling face, and then perchance turned to meet the dim, dark eyes of one across whose shoulders lie the weight of years? The morning sunbeams caress bright flowers along the gilded way to one, as the glory and gladness of coming day overwhelm him, but to the other, in the depths of those shadowy eyes, lie mirrored evening's sunset, as the twilight deepens and the light of earthly day closes around him. And—what then?

What of the day between the glorious dawn and the evening sunset? Symbolical of life is day—the day filled with its joy and sadness, care and song. Life's fair morning with its glorious promise just ahead, then the day of burden and heat, and afterward the evening calm. The glory of morning has vanished in the mist of bygone years, and life's long race is run.

And then?—Then shall the light of another morning gleam brightly, as over the sunset years arises a sun that knows no setting, shedding forth its glory on a fairer morning in the land of rest.

And the peace of the perfect day shall dawn.

✻ ✻ ✻

Fulfillment

BY ANNA B. BRYANT

God is so good He lets us see,

When every year is growing old,

How sure His promises can be—

Seed-time and harvest, heat and cold;

His promise to the changing Year

He keeps, and shall His children fear?

God is so patient! We forget

And doubt, as if He never spake

By prophet-mouth the word that met

Our need when hearts were nigh to break;

His object-lesson of the Year

He sends—oh, fling away thy fear!

HIS VINEYARD AND OURS

"African Advance"

Under the name of African Advance a new missionary periodical has been recently issued by the Rhodesia Mission Conference. It succeeds the Rhodesia Missionary Advocate, and is devoted to the promotion of the work that is being carried forward by the East Central Africa Mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The African Advance is a well illustrated paper containing twenty pages. It is printed on the Rhodesia Mission Press, and the editorial staff is composed of the full corps of missionaries stationed in Rhodesia.

The first issue of this paper gives to the reader a vivid idea of the great needs that exist in the Dark Continent. It tells of millions of square miles of untouched regions with seventy million human souls yet to hear their first Gospel sermon.

Special emphasis is given by the African Advance to the needs and opportunities presented in Rhodesia. Under the caption, "A Bookless People," Mr. Eddy H. Greeley tells of the appalling need for Christian literature. He says:

"In Rhodesia, Africa, the Methodist Episcopal Church has over ten thousand native members, adherents and day school pupils. During the fifteen years in which they have had the Gospel, their only books in the vernacular have been the New Testament, the Junior Catechism, a few hymns and a first and second primer. These have been very useful and still are for the children, but the older boys and girls are crying for more knowledge. They are a people without a written language, and without a literature. They want books. They want to learn. They are determined to learn. They look to us to supply their need. We have given them the Gospel and the appetite for knowledge. They can read but have not the books to read. We have brought them to the door of the library but have not opened the door. 'Behold (they) stand at the door and knock.' They need very much the knowledge they can gain by reading and study. They are hungry for it.

"We have eighteen books, translated and typed ready for the press, among which are Pilgrim's Progress and other most helpful and needed books. The people are pleading for these translations. We have the press (though we are badly in need of a larger one), the type, the typesetters, and the copy, but no money for paper and covers. How happy they and we would be if we could say, God has sent money by one of His servants to help print these books.

"Our pastor teachers have asked earnestly for a book containing the Parables and Miracles of Jesus. They feed upon them with great profit. They preach about them. The parables and miracles seem to be especially adapted to the needs of a people just emerging from heathenism. Our teachers want them all together in one book. We have them ready for the press but no money to buy the necessary paper. We want $250 to get out this much needed help for our pastor-teachers.

"Another book which has been asked for is a Gospel Primer, a book of perhaps 125 pages, for home and school. The Christian mother will especially hail this book with delight, as it teaches mother love, father love, brother and sister love, love of God, etc. It has little Bible stories which teach kindness, truthfulness, faithfulness, honor to God, lessons from Joseph, and love to enemies. All who know it are anxious to have it. We believe God wants them to have it for it certainly will help the advance of His kingdom in this dark land. Only $300 will put this book within the reach of, not only our ten thousand people, but many more who are under the care of other societies in Rhodesia.

"Here is a people utterly helpless in their ignorance and in their superstition. They are in the wake of heathen custom, of disease, of filth and of fear. They have been without a book or a paper or a written word. They are ready, waiting, eager, and, as samples show, great in possibilities. With $1,000 we could make a substantial start in building up a substantial literature for these people. The need is imperative. It is immediate. Our District Superintendent said that had he a thousand dollars and only a thousand dollars to give, he would not hesitate a moment as to where to place it to meet the greatest need and secure the largest and most permanent results."

It will be of interest to our readers to know that the American Tract Society is helping the faithful workers in Rhodesia by annual cash appropriations which are used for publishing Christian literature in the native tongue.

The picture on this page is reproduced from a photograph sent by the Mission Treasurer from Old Umtali, man who has said he can't read, will, if the books are displayed, so that they will catch his eye, commence to read while the colporter talks to him. If he cannot read, an effort is made to inspire him with a desire to learn, and as the colporter is supplied with copies of the Alphabet for free distribution among those purchasers who cannot read, many do learn to read through the efforts of the colporters. This, in itself, is a great asset to the cause of Christian progress. In cases where men have no money, oftentimes such goods as eggs, rice, straw sandals, etc., are taken instead.

"In some villages the presence of a stranger is a rare occurrence, and the attention of the people is directed to the man, rather than his message. On one occasion I remember calling at a house in one of these far-away hamlets. An elderly lady came to the door, and the colporter commenced to explain the why and wherefore of our visit. While people of these islands, who have never before heard the name of Jesus, receiving copies of the Gospel.' In order to stimulate and encourage these men in their work, a staff of instructors is kept, who visit them in their fields, work with them, and seek to help them in every possible way."

Fruits of the Spirit in India

Rev. Harold Cooper, a missionary of the American Board in India, writes:

"Last night, Pastor Samuel Joseph took me to see a man of an unusual type, who desires to become a Christian and who is thinking seriously of taking that step in the near future. The man is nearly blind and has suffered much misfortune. Only a few years ago he was mayor of this town of 30,000 inhabitants. Honors came to him from many sources. His home was headquarters for guests of the city, both European and Indian. He was a benefactor of the community, having given for the public good a building costing 6,000 rupees, which building he endowed with property worth another thousand rupees.

"Now, financial reverses have come to him. His health has given way. His eyes are almost useless. These and other sorrows have caused him to turn to our Lord and Master for the strength and comfort which he alone can give. When this man decides to follow Christ, it will mean that an entrance has been gained to a family of great influence. In this Aruppukottai pastorate, several conversions among the influential class have recently shown that Christianity is reaching upward as well as downward in its life-giving work."

In Northern Siam

From Chiangmai in Northern Siam comes cheering news of the progress of the Kingdom among the Laos people. A medical school, under the direction of the medical missionaries, has just been opened in the new infirmary of Prince Royal's College. The first class consists of seven men, all of whom are able to read and write in the English language. A building for the laboratories of the medical college has been erected and is now rapidly nearing completion.

The Prarachaya School for girls in Chiangmai is doing its usual high-grade work. Miss Van Vranken reports the formation of eight little prayer circles by the students themselves meeting once a day for prayer and serious thinking. The influence of these little prayer groups is already showing itself in many pleasing ways in the life and conduct of the school.

The Prince Royal's College of Chiangmai has a net enrollment of 200 boys. The evangelistic work done by the teachers and older boys on Sabbath afternoons, the religious tone and spirit of the weekly vespers, mainly conducted by the faculty of the school, the attendance and interest taken in the Young Men's Christian Association, conducted by the students, the vim and energy the members of the Boy Scouts put into their work, the enthusiasm shown in the preparation and delivery of the weekly essays and debates in addition to good daily grades and creditable showing in the Government examinations, all manifest unmistakably the value of a first-class school conducted strictly on Christian lines.

Fighting the Plague

In some parts of China the medical missionaries are called upon to inoculate hundreds against the dreaded bubonic plague. Doctor Leshner tells of a trip of many miles on his bicycle, with a supply of vaccine for inoculation. Some received the treatment who would not degrade themselves by entering the house of the Christian God, but this is just the work that in time opens the hearts and homes of the people to the gospel.

NATIVES OF OLD UMTALI, RHODESIA, AFRICA.

Rhodesia, Africa. It portrays two natives of the region, and is especially interesting in showing the costume that they wear.

In Korea

"The work of the colporter," writes Mr. Thomas Hobbs in The Korea Mission Field, "is chiefly among the unbelievers, and for that reason the books that he sells are of the cheapest kind. When he sets out from his home, he starts with a bundle of volumes on his back. He makes his way to a village, and starting at one end he calls at every house and offers his books. Only those who have attempted this work can understand the difficulties and discouragements these men have to face. There is very little variation in the answers given: 'No money.' 'Can't read.' He does not readily accept these answers as final, knowing that in the majority of cases they are not true. Sometimes the he was talking another woman came up, and the two appeared to be extremely interested. On seeing this the colporter's zeal increased, but it was only for a short time, for one of the women turned to the other and said, 'Look at that fellow's teeth.' She had been interested, but not in what had been said, probably she had scarcely heard a word, her whole attention had been turned to the gold fillings in the colporter's teeth.

"Possibly some will ask, 'What is the colporter's idea of the work he is doing; does he consider himself a mere bookseller, or a preacher?' The reports of these men answer that question. Such remarks as the following are to be found in the 'Remarks Column' of their Monthly Report.—'It is beautiful to see the lives of men and women being changed from wrong to right by the power of God's Word.' 'I am praying that the seed sown may bring forth an hundred-fold.' 'It rejoices my heart to see the

Notes upon the Topics Used
in Christian Endeavor
and Other Young People's Societies.

THE PRAYER MEETING

By
Rev. Henry Lewis
Ph.D.

JANUARY 7.

Evading Moral Issues.

Matthew 12:22-30.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Jan. 1. Pilate's evasion. Luke 23:6, 7, 13-24.
T. Jan. 2. Fear the cause of evasion. John 7:11-13.
W. Jan. 3. Aaron's failure. Ex. 32:1-6.
T. Jan. 4. God not deceived. Gal. 6:7, 8.
F. Jan. 5. A clear-cut issue. I Cor. 10:21, 22.
S. Jan. 6. A single heart. Jas. 4:7, 8.

The Pharisees of old evaded the moral issues presented to them by Christ, and drew from the Master the most withering and scorching denunciation that ever fell from His lips.

It is certain that any evasion of moral issues, however slight it may be, is a cause of displeasure to Him, who treated the matter of sin as the most important problem of human life, and who gave up His own life on the Cross in order that He might solve this problem for all humanity.

The Question of Christianity

The most vital question which Christianity presents to men and women to-day is this: "What think ye of Christ?" To evade this question is to evade the greatest moral issue that can possibly be presented to a human soul. Yet multitudes are doing this very thing, and utterly ignoring the claims of the Master upon their hearts and lives.

Christian Endeavorers should use all possible energy in striving to bring those who are indifferent to a recognition of their duty to yield their allegiance to Christ.

The Temperance Issue

The question of temperance is perhaps the greatest moral issue presented to the Christian citizen to-day. Let us see to it that we do not evade this question of such vital and pressing importance to the welfare of our nation, but rather let us face it earnestly and conscientiously and throw all the weight of our influence and example on the side of the forces that are fighting to establish total abstinence as the standard for the individual and prohibition as the organic law for both State and nation.

The Question of Honesty

Many of the problems facing the American people would quickly disappear if they were reduced to a question of simple honesty. And yet, in the last analysis, many of our most vexatious problems are really due to a lack of real honesty. The question of capital and labor is complicated because neither employer nor employed are thoroughly honest with each other. The problem of both big business and little business lies in the difficulty which both large and small business concerns seem to find in squaring all their dealings with a standard of absolute truthfulness and strict integrity.

Christ calls us to face the moral issue in all these matters and bids us follow His example in making our lives an embodiment of truth both in the business world and in every other sphere of activity.

How Shall We Win Peace for the World?

The greatest international problem that faces the world today is the problem of securing a firm and lasting peace between the nations of the earth. "How shall the present European war be ended?" is a question that is in every thoughtful mind. But the solution to this and to the other burning problems of the present age will not be found in evading the moral issues involved, but rather in facing these moral questions and seeing to it that some basis of agreement is reached which will be rooted and grounded upon righteousness rather than upon mere expediency.

The Eternal Question

It has been well said that nothing is ever settled permanently until it is settled right. The eternal question is not, "Will it pay?" or, "Is it the easiest way?" or "Can I do it?" but, "Is it right?"

JANUARY 14.

Ought. (A Pledge Meeting.)

Psalms 50:1-15.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Jan. 8. Duty to obey. Acts 5:17-29.
T. Jan. 9. Duty to pray. Luke 18:1-14.
W. Jan. 10. Duty to serve. John 13:13-15.
T. Jan. 11. Duty to the weak. Acts 20:17-35.
F. Jan. 12. Duty to follow Christ. I John 2:1-6.
S. Jan. 13. Duty to sacrifice. I John 3:13-24.

Our topic suggests several important words that have a vital bearing on the Christian life. One of these words is "duty," and our Daily Bible Readings give us some insight into the meaning and application of this word. Another word suggested by our topic is "obligation." Noblesse oblige is an ancient maxim, and it applies with full force to every Christian man and woman. In this age solemn obligations rest all too lightly upon the hearts and consciences of many professing Christians, and this topic should inspire us to a careful study of our lives, to see whether we are fulfilling all our obligations as we ought to do. Another word which is germane to our topic is "motive."

A Study of Motives

An analysis of the motives that underlie our actions will tell us whether we are responding to the right influences.

Fear is one of the motives that controls a great many people. But fear of man, fear of punishment, fear of consequences, or fear of any external force is not a worthy motive for human action. Only as we are moved by the fear of God can we say that we are responding to a right motive.

Some people are moved by the hope of reward. But whether this is the right motive depends upon the character of the reward that we seek. If we are tempted by earthly rewards, our actions will not be what they ought to be. It is only as we seek "treasures in heaven" that we may feel assured that we have a motive that is worthy of the divine commendation.

The Christian Motive

The highest motive for human action is found in the words of the Apostle Paul, "The love of Christ constraineth us."

If we are moved by the love of Christ, then we shall do what we ought to do. This motive will make us faithful and loyal followers of Him, whose whole life on earth was an illustration of the word, "Ought." It will stimulate us to ready obedience, self-denying service, and exemplary self-sacrifice.

If we yield ourselves wholly to the constraining love of Christ, we shall find that this will solve for us multitudinous problems of conduct. The question, "Ought I do to do this?" will be answered, not by resorting to a specific category of permissible and forbidden actions, but by asking, "What would Jesus have me do?"

The Value of a Pledge

A pledge is a definite statement of purpose. It keeps before us the ideal, towards which we are aiming. It puts into concrete form the object for which we are striving.

Human life would be a loose, uncertain existence without the various pledges that mark our entrance into the different relations of life. The marriage vow is a pledge that is of inestimable value in the family life. The covenant which we make upon uniting with the church is a pledge of vital significance in our Christian life.

The Christian Endeavor pledge has proved its value in the Christian life of millions of young people. True, it has not always been kept. But we do not propose to throw all treaties to the winds, because some treaties have been treated as mere scraps of paper. So it would be folly to discount the usefulness of the Christian Endeavor pledge because there are some instances where it has not been fully kept.

JANUARY 21.

Seeing the Good in Others.

Philippians 2:1-11.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Jan. 15. Good shines. Matt. 5:13-16.
T. Jan. 16. Rejoicing in good. Philemon.
W. Jan. 17. Recognizing good. Acts 9:26-31.
T. Jan. 18. Christ's tolerance. Mark 9:38-41.
F. Jan. 19. Heart free from envy. Num. 11:26-30.
S. Jan. 20. Looking through Love's eyes. I Cor. 13:1-6.

The passage selected in connection with our topic contains the most wonderful description of the humiliation of Jesus that has ever been put into human language. It suggests to us the thought that though in human eyes Jesus was apparently reduced to the lowest position in life, being crucified as a criminal, yet in the divine eyes He was still the Son of God, worthy of the most exalted honor and of universal homage.

What Men Saw in Jesus

Some men saw in Jesus nothing but a man, but those who were spiritually-minded and enlightened by the Holy Spirit saw that Jesus was God in Christ. Those who looked upon Jesus as simply a man looked only on the physical exterior, but those who realized that Jesus was divine looked upon His spiritual character in which were revealed the very lineaments of God Himself.

What Jesus Saw in Men

It was because Jesus saw the potential good in men that He humbled Himself to die upon the Cross. He saw the divine spark in humanity, and by His sacrifice on Calvary He opened up for man the possibility of immortal life.

Jesus saw in man the possibility of a love that would be willing to endure death, if need be, in return for the gift of eternal life. As the Apostle John says, "We love, because He first loved us."

It is easy to see the faults in our neighbors. But Christianity teaches us to look for the good in others. Paul exhorted the Philippian Christians each to count other better than himself.

"Seeing good in others is largely a habit," says one writer. "Criticize, and you will see faults. Be sympathetic, and good appears."

In order to see the good in others we must try to develop the best that is in ourselves. Evil-minded men see only evil in others, but those who have the spirit of good-will are ever ready to see some good in others.

A striking legend is told of Jesus. A mocking crowd was making hateful remarks about a dead dog, but Jesus said, "No ivory can be whiter than his teeth." In other words he found the good, where no one else could see it.

The Power of Sympathy

Perhaps there is nothing that will so effectively help us to see the good in others as sympathy. Sympathy makes us appreciative of the trials and hindrances that enter into the lives of others, and helps to appraise at its true value the virtue that is developed in spite of these obstacles.

True Christian chivalry will lead us to seek for the good even in those who are our enemies. This was the spirit that Jesus showed when He prayed for His enemies, saying, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

Let us never forget that God is the source of all true goodness. Charles Kingsley has well said: "When we see, as it were, countless drops and countless rays of goodness scattered about in the world, a little good in this man, and a little good in that, shall we not say that there must be one great sea, one central sun of goodness, whence all human goodness comes?"

Love is the impelling motive that will enable us to find some good in even the lowest and most degraded specimens of humanity.

JANUARY 28.

Fruits of the Christian Endeavor Tree.

Revelation 22:1-5.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Jan. 22. Decisions. Ex. 32:15-26.
T. Jan. 23. Service. John 12:20-26.
W. Jan. 24. Workers. Matt. 4:18-25.
T. Jan. 25. Organization. Eph. 4:11-16.
F. Jan. 26. Fellowship. Mal. 3:16-18.
S. Jan. 27. Devotional spirit. Matt. 6:1-15.

This topic has been selected in view of the recurrence of Christian Endeavor Day, which falls upon February 2nd. This will be the thirty-fifth anniversary of the organization of the first Christian Endeavor Society. There are now over 70,000 societies with a membership of about 4,000,000.

The fruits that have already been gathered from the Christian Endeavor tree are rich and satisfying. But what concerns us most is not the fruitage of the past but the promise of the future. So let us consider briefly what are some of the desirable fruits that we may hope to gather during the days that are before us.

Greater Fidelity to the Church

The Christian Endeavor motto is "For Christ and the Church." One of the most valuable fruits of Christian Endeavor work is the emphasis which it puts upon our duties and obligations toward the Church of Christ. The existence of a Christian Endeavor Society in any church should insure to that church a larger measure of fidelity on the part of all who have taken the Christian Endeavor pledge.

Larger Service for Humanity

One of the practical results of the Christian Endeavor Society has been the larger service for humanity which it has inspired on the part of its members. The call for such service is still loud and insistent and there are many lines of Christian effort along which the Christian Endeavor Society may profitably occupy itself.

Personal evangelism is a very desirable fruit of the Christian Endeavor tree. The multitude of unconverted souls all around us present a constant invitation to a more vigorous effort to this line of service. "Win one," is a good watchword for every Endeavorer to adopt.

The temperance reform calls for an ever-increasing number of recruits. Though there are many encouraging signs, the battle against intemperance and the liquor traffic is still far from being won. We are now at the most critical period of this reform, and it needs all the strength of the Christian Endeavor hosts to push the conflict to a successful termination.

Social service embraces many forms of Christian activity. In their work for sailors and soldiers, for fresh-air camps and other beneficent causes Christian Endeavorers have already brought forth some choice fruit for the Master. But there is an almost limitless field before us in the realm of social service, and Christian Endeavorers should not overlook the opportunities for toil that are to be found in that realm.

In the mission fields the Christian Endeavor tree has already borne precious fruit. But here the work that still remains to be done is so great that what has been accomplished seems but as a drop in the ocean. Christian Endeavorers may help on the missionary cause in several different ways. They may disseminate more information about the missionary fields. They may secure larger support for the missionary enterprise by pushing the campaign for systematic giving and by enrolling in the Tenth Legion, whose members pledge themselves to give one-tenth of their income to the Lord's work. They may offer themselves as candidates for missionary service in both the home and foreign fields. Or, if not able to go themselves, they may assume the support of a personal representative in some mission field.

Our Young Folks

The Prettiest Freesia.

BY EDITH M. LARRABEE.

CELIA BROOKS walked along the street through the snow of a January morning. She had gone to carry home some sewing to the large house on the hill, and as a reward she had received a box of beautiful flowers from the lady who lived there.

On the way Celia stopped at a little store to buy a few things, and while waiting for her packages to be wrapped up, she opened the box for another look at her precious flowers. One by one she held up the individual stalks. There were six of them. On each grew several trumpet-shaped blossoms, pure white save for a small yellow blotch, and with a sweet, delicate perfume.

"Freesias, Mrs. Morris called them," she remarked to herself. "My, but they're handsome! Just think of her giving them to me. But then she has so many flowers she doesn't mind."

"Hello, Celia! What've you got?" she heard a voice call out. Turning she saw behind her Addie Jones who lived in the tenement house next to her own home.

Celia showed her one of the flower stalks.

"They're freesias." She pronounced the name proudly. "There, my things are ready. I've got to go." She closed the box quickly to shut the blossoms from Addie's sight.

She started on towards home but Addie followed and kept by her side.

"Say, Celia, won't you give me one?" she asked at length. "I never had any pretty flowers like that."

"I never did either," Celia answered. Yet something in Addie's tone produced a change in her feelings.

"I s'pose if she had six and wouldn't give me any I'd think she was stingy," she reflected. "Yes, I'll give you one," she called to Addie, "but you'll have to wait till you get home. I can't take it out here in the cold."

When they had gone some distance farther they met two other children who lived in their neighborhood.

"Celia's got some white flowers," announced Addie. "The prettiest ones you ever saw, and sweet! Why I b'lieve you can smell 'em right through the box. And she's going to give me one."

"Let's see!" the others cried. "I can't," Celia answered. "They'll freeze in this cold air."

"All of you come into my house," suggested Addie.

"O yes, we will," agreed the other two.

"What shall I do?" Celia was thinking. "I'll have to give them all one and they were meant for me. But I promised Addie, so I've got to go."

Just before they reached Addie's home two other girls joined them.

"Celia's got some flowers she's going to show us," cried the first three. "Come in with us."

Celia's heart sank. Would she have to give away all her flowers? "I had so many, and I shall only have one," she thought.

"Now let's see them," exclaimed the impetuous group when all were inside.

Celia opened the box slowly. A chorus of "Oh's" greeted the appearance of the blossoms, then "I wish I had some," was repeated over and over.

Celia looked at the five pairs of long-eyes.

"They don't have flowers either," she considered, "and they want 'em as much as I do. I s'pose I'd feel the same if one of them had 'em."

One after another she picked up the slender stalks with their snowy blossoms and gave them out to the waiting band.

"Don't let 'em freeze," she cautioned. She tore into small pieces the paper which had wrapped the flowers. "Here, put them in this." Then with her lone flower she left the house and went on to her own home.

"I b'lieve I've got the prettiest one anyway," she declared when she took it from the box. She held it up and examined it carefully. "There couldn't be a handsomer one. And maybe, after all, it's better for six people to be happy than just one."

Surely Celia was right, and do you know, I think that it was the sharing of her treasures which imparted such great beauty to the one flower that she kept for herself.

The workmen came to know and like Davy, too, and because he was polite and never meddled with anything they saved the odds and ends of lumber and gave them to him to play with in the garden.

"Davy, dear," called his mother one bright morning, "don't you think that you have learned enough by watching the workmen next door to be a carpenter yourself and build a doll house for your little sister?"

Davy's face was as bright as the day as he ran into the house for the hammer.

"Come on, Agnes," he called, "and show me where you want it put."

Little Agnes followed him into the garden and chose her lot.

"I'll have to drive piles there first to make it safe," Davy said, as he began hammering things into the ground.

Several of the workmen paused to watch Davy, as they passed the garden fence, and to praise his good work.

One sunny morning, when the house was quite complete, Davy and his mother sat under one of the garden trees and watched Agnes move her things in.

"I am glad you are so careful in your building," began his mother. "Did you ever think that people are like houses, my child?"

Davy's face grew puzzled, and he listened eagerly as she continued:

"You see, it's like this. Even little folks can begin by taking the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour and laying a good foundation for their lives, and as they grow older and larger they must not neglect any part of their house, but put all good works into the building."

Davy smiled as her meaning came to him.

"I never thought before of people being like houses!" he exclaimed.

"There are poor cramped houses of weak material in the world, and there are also strong, beautiful houses carefully built," his mother replied softly. "Which kind are you going to try and make your life like, Davy?"

"I mean to try and be like the strong one, mother!"

"Then," she whispered softly, "your building shall not fall, but will remain strong and good throughout all the stormy days of life."

His Life Saved by His Dog

Kelley, an Irish setter, saved his master's life one night last winter when the latter broke through the ice and came near drowning. This is how it happened:

Mr. Bee Church, a farmer and stock-raiser of Richfield, Idaho, was visiting in Shoshone. One evening he set out for a friend's house along with Kelley by a short cut across the river. He had proceeded about half-way over the stream when the ice gave way under his weight and he was plunged into deep water.

As fast as he attempted to pull himself up the ice broke and the swift current threatened every minute to carry him under the ice. But Kelley, ever faithful, was right at hand, saw the desperate plight his master was in, and did the best he could to render help. He pulled and tugged at his master's clothes, but succeeded only in breaking in a bigger hole around him.

After some minutes of struggling and finally getting a good hold on the edges of the ice, Mr. Church shouted to Kelley to go for help. The dog lost no time in returning to the place where Mr. Church had last visited and by his yelps and frantic actions attracted attention and quickly convinced several persons that he and his master were in dire need of assistance. Mr. Church was well-nigh exhausted when human help arrived and pulled him out of the water.

Kelley was nearly beside himself with joy over his master's rescue and expressed his pleasure and gratitude with the heartiest of tail-waggings.

Where Boys Learn How to Sew

In Sweden, we are told, little boys are taught how to sew on buttons, mend stockings and repair their torn garments.

At the primary schools the boys as well as the girls are taught how to knit. In the lessons which are given, large needles about fourteen inches long are used. The yarn also is coarse and thick, so that the whole class can see just how to make the stitches.

THE SNOW FORT.

Davy's Strong Foundation.

BY KATHLEEN HAY.

DAVY stood and watched the workmen as they laid the foundation for the new house next door. He had never before seen a pile-driver, and the great hammer driving the piles was very wonderful and new to Davy.

Day after day found him watching at the fence that divided their garden from the next lot.

After a while the big pile-driver was moved away, and the workmen began using the lumber that lay waiting to build the house. Davy missed watching the huge hammer work, but he soon grew very much interested in the new house.

Agnes started to cry, and mother came to the window to see what the trouble was.

"She wants to see the house go right up, mother," called Davy, "but I've got to make the foundation strong before I begin to build."

"You wouldn't like your house to fall when the first hard wind blows, would you, dear?" asked her mother, joining the children in the garden.

And then, while Davy laid his foundation, she explained to her little daughter something of what Davy had learned all the days he had watched the pile-driver.

Davy took a whole week to build the house, and that seemed a long time to his little sister; but he didn't slight one thing about it, and so when it was finished, it was quite a nice little house.

Our Fireside

Marjorie's Two Talents

By A. Maria Crawford

EVEN as a little girl, Marjorie Dawson gained the reputation of being studious and clever. Later her essays and stories in the college magazine were frequently called brilliant and, when at commencement, she covered herself with distinction by a really excellent class poem, she decided that she would become a writer. Her mother was delighted at the promising future before her only daughter. She resolved that no stumbling block should be allowed to impede the girl's progress or thwart the development of her talent.

"I mean to write every morning and to be really systematic about it," announced Marjorie the night of her arrival home. "Of course I expect to burn up all of my attempts until I do something worth while. Father, you'll let me copy my work on your typewriter at the store until the sale of my stories warrants the purchase of a machine of my own, won't you?"

Mr. Dawson smiled indulgently, "You can use it for your best efforts when we are not busy," he answered. "I think that you will be so well employed helping mother with the housekeeping and the sewing that you won't have time to ride Pegasus very far nor very long," he added hopefully. He had educated his daughter with the expectation that she would be a help and a source of comfort to her mother. He had believed that she would bring a fresh impetus into their life and thought. He had pictured her making the home happy and lifting many little tasks from her mother's weary shoulders. Instead she had come home with the prevalent idea that every girl must develop the special talent with which each individual is thought to be blessed. She evidently did not purpose to sweep, dust, cook and sew.

"I am going to take long walks every day," declared Marjorie, interrupting his train of thought. "One must exercise regularly and develop the body if the mind grows. I am so glad the Williards have moved out on the Kingston road. I can walk out there often and visit Julia, so you see that duty to myself can be happily combined with pleasure."

"Don't neglect the duty of helping your mother, Marjorie! I had rather be the father of a useful member of society than the father of a brilliant writer who thinks only of personal pleasure and attainment. Remember that!"

Marjorie's eyes filled with tears, and her mother was quick to see them. "I want Marjorie to have a good time, father," she said hastily. "She'll never be young but once," she asserted. "I'll be so pleased to have her write and accomplish something."

Mrs. Dawson took great pride the next day in helping Marjorie fit up a room where she could write and be undisturbed. Choice pictures were transferred from the living room, a bookcase and some bric-a-brac were brought from the library and a little tea table was carried down from the attic and covered with Mrs. Dawson's best linen and china.

"When the girls come to see me, I can give them tea and some of the delicious little nut cookies that you make every week. Won't it be fun to have a regular studio tea?" cried the girl seizing her mother around the waist and enthusiastically kissing her as she whirled her about the room.

"Indeed it will," agreed Mrs. Dawson, who was too blinded by love for the girl to think of her as selfish. "I'll make an extra supply Saturday so that you can have plenty. I must get the pretty window-boxes your brother Tom made for my east windows. The flowers will brighten up this room for you."

"Oh do, mother, they will help wonderfully."

Day after day Marjorie sat at her little mahogany desk pouring out her youthful ardor in stories. They were all filled with a sentimental love element. The heroines were strangely like the author, and most of the heroes were borrowed copies of Tom's boy friends who occasionally dropped in to visit him. If Mr. Dawson had any fault to find with the crowd of noisy girls who came every day or two to take tea in the cosy little den, he kept silent. One by one Marjorie's stories were carefully copied, most of them by his obliging stenographer, and then sent away to the magazines by the young aspirant for literary honors. And one by one the stories came back promptly with a polite rejection slip inserted within their white pages.

Tom laughed and joked the girl a good deal about her devoted sheep that always came home bringing their "tales" behind them. At first Marjorie took his raillery good-humoredly. All writers got their first stories back. She was not disappointed. Some day the very editors that refused her stories would write to her, begging the privilege of publishing one of them, at her own price. But after a time, when months of effort had brought no acceptance and no encouraging letters, she grew listless and actually dreaded the postman's merry whistle.

"The editors don't even unfold my manuscript," she sobbed to herself one rainy day when three bulky envelopes holding her most cherished stories had been handed to her. "I'll never try to write again, never, as long as I live."

And indeed she found very little time after that day, for Mrs. Dawson was taken ill with fever and Marjorie discovered real duties and many of them staring her in the face.

"I'll get a good housekeeper," said Mr. Dawson sternly. "You don't know anything about the work and your mother will worry if she thinks things are not going on orderly."

"I—I can manage, father, if you'll be patient with me," said the girl meekly.

"Patient with you? Well, I think I have been. What has come of all your writing? Nothing but a lot of foolish tea parties up there in your den that made extra work for your poor mother. I didn't send you away to school to develop a fad. I sent you there to learn useful things."

"Don't say any more, father. I know I have been blinded by a few compliments from teachers and students. I'll show you that I can be useful."

Mr. Dawson put his hand on the girl's shoulder. "There, there, I didn't mean to be cross. Your mother loved you too well to show you your faults. Maybe I am a bit brutal, but at any rate, I have tried to make you see things as they are."

Marjorie made a few blunders in the beginning, but with old Hannah's help and advice, she soon had the household machinery running as smoothly as an experienced woman. Often the trained nurse would say to Mrs. Dawson, "You have such a capable daughter. The house is immaculate and the meals are lovely." And the sick woman would smile and wonder what had become of Marjorie's writing but she was too weak to question.

A little story kept suggesting itself to Marjorie as she went about her tasks. It was a homely little story of a girl's dreams and how they unexpectedly came true. It ran in her thoughts so insistently that one evening after she had gone to her room, tired as she was after a hard day's work, she began scribbling the story down in a tablet on her knee. In three evenings the story was finished, and when a day or two later, her father playfully pinched her cheek and told her to run out and get some fresh air, promising that he would stay at home with her mother that afternoon, she slipped the tablet in her muff and ran straight to the store. Mr. Dawson's stenographer was busy working on the books, and when she asked if she might use the typewriter for a little while, he told her to go into the next office and use it as long as she liked. So the little story was copied and Marjorie, whispering a prayer, dropped it into the postoffice and then hurried home.

"How bright my girl looks after her walk!" said her father. "I am afraid you have been staying indoors too much. Mother is nearly well now and you must get out oftener. I don't want to have you sick too."

Then turning to his wife he added: "Mother, she has developed into a fine housekeeper. She certainly takes after you when it comes to cleanliness, order and good things to eat."

Mrs. Dawson took the girl's hand in both her thin ones. "Never mind, dear, when I get well, I'll let you make up all this lost time."

Marjorie put her arms about her mother. "Mother," she said, "I have learned such a beautiful lesson since you were ill. Happiness comes from service. I am going to take over all the housekeeping burdens from your shoulders to mine if you will let me. You've had so many weary years of it and I just love to do it. I am happier than I have ever been in my life."

Marjorie was so busy working about the house and entertaining her mother in the days that followed that she forgot about the simple little story she had sent away. Then one morning when the postman handed her a thin blue envelope bearing a strange post mark, she opened it, thinking it was a letter from some unknown relative inquiring about her mother. A check fluttered out, and with it came a letter telling her how much the editor had enjoyed her little story and how glad he was to buy it for his girl readers. He would be pleased to consider anything she might submit to him, he wrote. Marjorie's joy knew no bounds.

"To think, dear folks," she cried excitedly when the letter and check had been passed around, "when I shut myself up selfishly in a den with all the best things in the house to inspire me, I didn't write a story that would sell but just as soon as I did my duty and tried to do it well, a real story suggested itself to me. I might have known that

(Continued on next page.)

Childish Craving

—for something sweet finds pleasant realization in the pure, wholesome, wheat and barley food

Grape-Nuts

No danger of upsetting the stomach—and remember, Grape-Nuts is a true food, good for any meal or between meals.

"There's a Reason"

"The Coming of the Lord Draweth Nigh"

The Scriptures Examined on the Length of the Times of the Gentiles. When They Began Definitely Established. When They Will Close Demonstrated, subject to Uninspired History and Chronology. The Year-Day Principle God Given. Historic and Futurists both at error. The Prophecy of the Seventy Weeks proved to be a Year-Day Period. Light on these questions promised at "the time of the end."

Fifth Edition. Enlarged to 64 pages, with Appendices and Extracts from Letters. Seventy-fifth Thousand. Price, postage paid: 5 cents each; 30 cents per dozen; $2.00 per hundred. This Pamphlet is unique in its teachings, showing the proximity of the Coming of the Lord. We exhort all Christians to procure a copy, and if you agree with its teachings, help us to get it before the world. Procure them by the dozen, hundred or thousand and scatter them among your friends and fellow citizens. They are very cheap; we are selling them at less than cost. We believe there is no truth more important for the world at this time.

PLEASE READ THE LETTERS BELOW
From a Missionary: Very interesting to me was the reading of the numerous comments on your pamphlet (The prospectus). Some of them are truly excellent, and you have done well to publish it to silence the "unwise virgins." I agree with that brother who says, "Advertise!" The "ad." in "Christian Workers' Magazine" is well set. If you could afford it you should run it in every religious sheet in the country at least two times. I am convinced that one million of your booklets would do more good to God's people in America and in England than all the sermons they have heard this year, and all the books they have read. Yea, it is a powerful tract for the unconverted thinkers, also.

Letter from a Baptist Pastor. My dear Brother Baker: For some time I have been reading your advertisement in "The King's Business" of your pamphlet, "The Coming of the Lord Draweth Nigh," and did not order it because I thought that about all had been said that could be said on that subject by such men as I. M. Haldeman, C. I. Scofield, A. C. Gaebelin, R. A. Torrey, and many others too numerous to mention, but about ten days ago I concluded to send you an order and see what you had to say. About one week ago I received your pamphlet; I sat down and read it through, the next morning I read it through again with my Bible and Greek and Hebrew Concordance in hand and examined every passage of Scripture that you use and every passage that I had thought was a refutation of your doctrine. I was once a Post-ite, but for a long time I have been a Pre-ite. I am a believer in the imminent coming of our Lord. I have often said that I did not believe that the year 1920 would find the church on the earth, but I did not think that the time was so clearly pointed out in the Scriptures. But now, I desire to say that I swallow your teaching whole, not because you teach it, but because it is the teaching of Scripture and cannot be refuted. If we had an inspired chronology that we could take our stand by, I am sure that we could point out the year, day and hour of the rapture and the revelation. I thank God for you as an instrument in His hands to point out in the face of an unbelieving, scoffing, rebellious world, and in a great degree an unbelieving and Christ rejecting visible church, the teaching of the Scriptures on this important question and you have done it in such a sweet spirit, with loyalty to the Word and proving yourself "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth," bringing forth things out of the treasure, both new and old. May it please the Lord that this pamphlet may get into the hands of all His servants whose eyes are open to the truth, and will sound aloud the midnight cry, "Behold the bridegroom cometh," that all may be watching with their lamps all trimmed and bright. I am enclosing check, for which please send me 200 of "The Coming of the Lord Draweth Nigh."

Letter from an M. E. Pastor. Dear Sir and Brother: I have hesitated writing to you until I had time to read and re-read your booklets sent me. I have read your booklet, "The Coming of the Lord Draweth Nigh," with a heart bursting with happiness which to me is an internal witness of its truth; I read it in the street car one day and had often to turn my face to the window because of the emotion which overcame me. I am so glad, so glad that you have given the Lord's revelation to the world. Surely God would take your portion out of the "Book of Life" if you had kept back such great truth. And is not our God wonderful! If He had given His revelation to some great D. D. I would have been skeptical about it, for it seems very little spiritual food comes from that source for "He has hidden it from the wise and prudent and revealed it unto babes," but not "babes in Christ," for you have been tasting of strong food ere this or you could not have discovered this hidden treasure. Praying God's blessing upon you and your great work, I remain, Yours under the Blood.

Letter from a Congregational Pastor. Dear Brother: I enclose 30c. in stamps for one dozen copies of "The Coming of the Lord Draweth Nigh." A copy of the above fell into my hands a while ago and I threw it to one side because too busy to examine it and not knowing the author I did not see the importance of it. Later I took time to study it side by side with my Bible. Let me say I have read it over and over again many times, and each time enjoy it more. It has been a great help to me, a real inspiration to Bible study. My spiritual life has been quickened. I heartily endorse your little pamphlet as a clear, concise, non-awakening the feasts is unique. God bless you and your work. I am a pre for years and am looking for Him soon, any time.

Address C. J. Baker, 621 Wynudotte Street, Kansas City, Mo., U. S. A.

DON'T decide on the new hymn-book for your Church or Sunday School until you have seen

HALLOWED HYMNS NEW AND OLD

Edited by IRA ALLAN SANKEY
Son of the famous Singing-Evangelist
Ira D. Sankey

OVER 550,000
COPIES ALREADY SOLD

Responsive Scripture Readings
No Trasy Words No Jingly Music

Price $25.00 per 100 not prepaid
35 cents per copy by mail

Examine a copy and prove its value in your work. (Returnable if desired.)

The Biglow & Main Co., New York
Chicago

A Suitable New Year's Remembrance

What choicer gift for the New Year could you send to a friend than a copy of our exquisite Calendar for 1917, entitled "Making Friends," coupled with a year's subscription to the AMERICAN MESSENGER, whose monthly visits will be a constant and delightful reminder of the donor?

Our superb Calendar has been secured by special arrangement with the Osborne Company, who are famous the world over as producers of Art Calendars. It measures 10 by 17 inches, and is printed in a rich sepia tint. When the year is ended, the date pad may be detached, and the Calendar will make a choice subject for framing.

We will give this Calendar, postpaid, and one year's subscription to the AMERICAN MESSENGER for 60 cents, or we will give the Calendar as a premium to any subscriber who renews his or her own subscription for 1917, and sends one new subscription, remitting $1.00 in all. If the new subscriber in the foregoing case also desires a Calendar, $1.10 must be remitted. For every Canadian subscription 12 cents additional must be remitted for postage, and for every foreign subscription 24 cents.

Upon request we will send a copy of the beautiful Christmas issue for 1916 to every new subscriber, in addition to the full subscription for the year 1917.

AMERICAN MESSENGER
Park Ave. and 40th St., New York

APPLES OF GOLD

An ideal paper for Primary Departments and Infant classes; attractive pictures; every issue printed in color; a splendid full-page picture each week; beautiful half-tones. Single copies, 30 cents; five copies to one address, 25 cents; ten or more, 20 cents each, per year. Postage on Canadian and foreign subscriptions, 6 cents per copy additional.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY
Park Ave. and 40th St., New York City

Marjorie's Two Talents.

(Continued from page 12.)

my sentimental love stories would not prove acceptable."

"I always knew you would succeed," said her mother softly. What a wonderful thing is a mother's faith! What miracles it has wrought!

"One pier doesn't make a bridge, my girl," said Mr. Dawson. "It takes many of them to build a bridge over the river of ambition to the shore of attainment for you have made a fair start and I am proud of you."

"I'll never neglect my duty and my pleasure to serve you. That will come first. Then when I find time, I'll try to write more homely little tales for the glory of the house of Dawson and an additional income for the members thereof," cried the happiest girl in that town. "But I believe my real talent is housekeeping after all, father. What do you think about it?"

"If you hadn't inherited your mother's talent for home-making you would never have succeeded so quickly, but you may be fortunate enough to have two talents, my dear. Only time can tell. You know the story of the talents. Use what you have, for unto every one that hath shall be given."

Training the Nerves

BY THE AUTHOR OF "PRESTON PAPERS."

OW Mr. Sanborn has 'gone to pieces' under this misfortune! And how splendidly Mrs. Sanborn has come to the rescue," said Mrs. Hill to her husband, over the breakfast cups, as they discussed the family and financial troubles of an oldtime family, who had been friends of Mr. Hill's family for three generations.

"Yes," said Mr. Hill, thoughtfully, "and it is just about the result for which we might look, had we known both families and their management, intimately. I remember that my dear mother used to say that if Walter Sanborn didn't become a victim of hysteria it would not be because his nerves had been properly trained, but in spite of this lack," and Mr. Hill sighed at the recollections his own words had aroused.

"Tell me," urged Mrs. Hill. "You know that I haven't progressed as far as you have in these mental studies, and have been more inclined than you have to leave everything to the guiding hand of Providence."

"Which is all right, up to a certain point, Marion," replied Mr. Hill. "But you surely believe that when God gave us good gray matter, He intended us to use it, do you not?" a bit doubtfully.

"Yes, dear."
"And that this can be improved by careful use, and application?"

"Probably; but this goes a bit beyond my depth, Sam."

"It need not," gently replied Mr. Hill. "You know, surely, that even musical expression requires practice, be the instrument never so perfect; that even penmanship, reading, walking, everything that we do, is susceptible of improvement by careful practice, rightly directed?"

"Until we get into the Kingdom of Mind, yes, but there I flounder," said Mrs. Hill, frankly, and with interest.

"But thought governs even these. Brain controls brawn, and the muscles obey the message from the power-house of mind. So, emotions should be trained, and from the start, to quick obedience. Mrs. Graves, Edith Sanborn's mother, knew this, and began the training of her baby very early. She was taught to overcome fear by investigation; to control worry through faith and trust in God; to forget herself in seeking the greatest good for the greatest number of other people; in short, to develop as long as anything imperfect remained. She gained alertness, efficiency, and poise from this, and has been both balance-wheel and air-cushion for Walter many times, and when this last reverse of fortune came, sweeping away the remnants of their once large fortune, she was ready to meet the emergency without a murmur and with quiet faith coupled with a brilliant business foresight and energy that will be almost sure to pull them through."

"And Walter? What was his preparation for the battle of life?" asked Mrs. Hill.

"Almost nil. Indulged by both parents, foolishly so by his mother, he had only to want a thing to get it—regardless of other people's feelings. He was not trained to meet sorrow with hope, disappointment with cheer, distress with energy, pain with endurance; so that part of his manhood 'jellified,' instead of hardening his make-up. And as he was allowed to give way to all his emotions in childhood and youth, when he came into man's estate, through the passing of the years, he stumbled when he should have endured, fell when he should have stood a bulwark against disaster, and now has gone all to pieces, as you well expressed it, when he should have shown himself a well-rounded Christian man, who could run with patience the race set before him."

"Oh, Sam, I'm learning lots from you. I never knew how easy it is to study psychology, nor anything else, until I began my lessons with you! You are a fine teacher!" exclaimed Mrs. Hill, sparkling with enthusiasm.

"And you are a great inspiration," cordially.

"And I know, in the little experience that I have had, that one may overcome nervousness to a certain degree, any way, and largely by forestalling the things that lead to it."

"Yes, dear, and Bible truths are really made practical right through this avenue of Every-Day Living. We have no more right to let our nerves, or temper, or fears, get the mastery over us than we have to let our appetites or our passions dominate us. 'Cast thy burden on the Lord' is a distinct command. So is 'Love one another,' and unless we live what we profess to believe, the world may not be amiss in looking upon us as hypocrites!"

"Why, Sam!" almost in awe, for Mrs. Hill, though married several years, had seldom seen her husband so stirred.

"I mean it all, and even more. We pray, 'Thy Kingdom come; Thy will be done'—and then stand right against work for the Kingdom, because it doesn't happen to be our idea of how it should be done; and when God's will conflicts with ours, there's a cross made of the two, when they should run parallel. We pray for the cause of temperance, and vote with our political affinity, regardless of temperance. We profess faith in God, and run to the doctor to read our 'symptoms,' when a little common sense would be more to the point. We have no business to 'go to pieces' before disaster, and so add to the burdens of others. But that's sermon enough for one breakfast, such a good breakfast too! It really inspired me! Don't take me too seriously, and do come down to lunch with me. Bring son," and Mr. Hill started for the station—for he was a suburbanite!

And, even if he exaggerated a bit—I don't say that he did—he was right, or on the right track!

Perhaps nervous people and super-sensitive ones are not all "selfish monsters," as one has said—but, if they loved their neighbors (or even their families) "as themselves" they would try to look at things differently and with a less exalted ego.

Sorrow comes to all. Every family must meet trouble, of one sort or another—and if one member of it has been petted and pampered and his whims and deficiencies catered to, at the expense of the rest, his feelings and preferences recognized as the dominant note, he is not getting the right preparation for life as it really exists, nor as he'll have to meet it, sooner or later.

It is wiser, then, and kinder, not to overlook even the nerves, in the training of mind and body, and I herewith submit some of the methods used in my classes of private students for more than a quarter of a century, and always with profit:

1. Keep the Golden Rule ever in mind—and with less of self and more of altruism governing conduct, one is less likely to allow a nervous condition to "get ripe."

2. Forestall this possibility, by special attention to personal solitude, extra rest and quiet. One is justified in seeking the seclusion of his room for hours, daily, rather than to inflict unreasonable irritation on his family—as he does if "super-sensitive" or nervous.

3. Give up, for a time, all unnecessary work and social life. Surely, we all feel of importance in our "set"—or rut; and we are; but, to fill it, we must not ride over the dead bodies of our families and friends, and if our "nerves" are calling out anxious care from others, tears where we should reflect cheer, and anxiety which we have no right to implant, then, in justice to ourselves and others, we should give the tired nerves more rest and a chance to relax from the high tension in which they have been held.

4. Change of diet, clothing, exercise, environment, even if only for a few days, may be advisable in extreme cases, with plenty of out-of-door life—preferably in the country, the quiet country, but not the noisy sections. If that is impossible, then take long walks in the late evening and in the early morning, in the city, before "sun-up" while the air is yet charged and surcharged with ozone! But eat something, and take a cup of hot milk (slightly salted) before starting, at 4:30 A. M.

5. Don't read by artificial light, when trying to ward off "nerves" or to recover from them.

6. Avoid debates, and much conversation, for a few days.

7. Bathe often, taking a cool rub or cold plunge in the morning, but a warm or hot one at night.

8. Think of happiness, harmony, God's love, your duty and responsibility, and taboo disagreeable thoughts—until you can meet and slay them in mortal combat.

9. Try to help others and make them happy in little ways.

10. "Hang on" to yourself when inclined to let yourself go. Don't permit the start, and the game is in your own hands.

11. "Cast all your care" upon God—and rest on His promises to shield and help you.

12. Seek to be of the greatest possible good to the greatest possible number of others.

The Answer.

The village had been through the excitement of a fire late that afternoon. It was not strange that the subject should be in the minds and on the lips of those who were out at prayer-meeting in the evening. One good old man brought it up in his prayer.

"Oh, Lord," he petitioned, "be with all those in affliction this night. Bring comfort to the poor widow who lost her little all of worldly goods by fire this day, and raise up friends and helpers for her in her dire need."

He was scarcely through when another man stood up. "Friends," he said, "I believe the Lord has begun to answer that prayer already. He has reminded me that I have a good kitchen table that Martha and I can spare very well, and enough stuff in our cellar to furnish it with three square meals a day for Widow Brown for some time. I believe he will help the rest of you find chairs and a stove and firewood and bedding, and everything else she may need to start her in life again. How many feel the answer working out in their hearts?" And he sat down to make way for others equally ready to help in answering the prayer.

Some one says praying is expensive business, when it is done right. Rather, it leads to good investment—that lending to the Lord to help Him answer prayer, which brings such returns in joy and fellowship with Him as no worldly saving or spending can do.—EXCHANGE.

"A Great Help"

A subscriber who lives in Gobleville, Michigan, writes:

"The AMERICAN MESSENGER is to me the dearest paper ever: so full of religious inspiration: also a great help in the Christian Endeavor work in our church. I have taken it for twenty years and every number grows dearer to me."

Ro-San Indoor Closet

More Comfortable, Healthful, Convenient

Eliminates the out-door privy, open vault and cess-pool, which are breeding places for germs. Have a warm, sanitary, odorless toilet right in your house. No going out in cold weather. A boon to Invalids. Endorsed by State Boards of Health.

ABSOLUTELY ODORLESS

Put It Anywhere In The House
The germs are killed by a chemical process in water in the container, which you empty once a month. Absolutely no odor. No more trouble to empty than ashes. Closet absolutely guaranteed. Write for full description and price.

ROWE SANITARY MFG CO. 117A - ROWE BLDG., DETROIT, MICH.
Ask about the Ro-San Wash-er, Hot and Cold Running Water Without Plumbing

THE TREASURY

SPECIAL NOTICE

OWING to occasional losses of letters, containing money, we would request friends and donors of the American Tract Society to remit by check or Post Office Money Order, which latter can always be duplicated in case of loss.

Receipts of the American Tract Society During November, 1916

TOTAL DONATIONS (including $726.07 for Special Objects), $6,853.21.

CALIFORNIA, $24.65.
Mrs. Keese, $5; Mrs. Rupp, $4.65; Los Angeles, church offering, $15

CONNECTICUT, $79.26.
Mr. Howe, $10; East Haddam, church collection, $3.67; Miss Fowles, $1; Mr. Barstow, $5; Mrs. Green, $1; Mr. Rogers, $2; Miss Acton, for Mexico, $5; Mrs. Frisbie, for Soldiers' Text Book, $2; Mrs. Leete, $5; Miss Manning, $25; Cromwell, church collection, $1.59; Miss Mix, $5; Mr. Brown, for Mexico, $3; Mrs. Hooker, $10.

DELAWARE, $30.
Mrs. Nisbet, $15; Miss Spotswood, $15.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, $25.65.
Mr. Gates, $10; Miss Robertson, $15; Mrs. Zimmerman, $0.65.

FLORIDA, $1.26.
Mr. Greenwood, $1.26.

IDAHO, $2.60.
Mr. Radke, $0.60; Mr. Radke, Sr., $2.

ILLINOIS, $83.14.
Mr. Evers, $0.30; Scales Mound, church offering, $5; Rev. Hochstetler, $5.65; Mr. Zanon, $0.65; Mr. Triller, $3; Forrester, church offering, $26.54; Forrester, church collection, $40; Mrs. Abels, $1; Mrs. Geizemann, $1.

INDIANA, $13.20.
Mr. House, $1; Mrs. Acher, $0.65; Mrs. Kuhn, $0.55; Mr. Holliday, for Soldiers' Text Book, $10; Mrs. Seymour, $1.

IOWA, $51.30.
Mrs. Brouwer, $0.30; Burlington, church offering, $12.50; Mr. Jungling, $0.67; Mr. Breer, $1; Sibley, church collection, $10; Miss Vaughn, $5; Mr. Greenfield, $0.65; Aplington, church collection, $8; Mr. Schwarzenrubler, $1; Mr. Laurance, $2; Mr. Brandt, $0.18; Mr. Jones, $1.00; Mrs. Decker, $2.00; Mr. Hawks, for Soldier's Text Book, $1; Mr. Page, for Soldier's Text Book, $1; Miss Ludwig, $5.

KANSAS, $2.55.
Mr. Penner, $0.15; Mrs. Krehbiel, $0.95; Sister Hillegonder von der Smissen, for Ellis Island, $0.80; Mrs. Krehbiel, $0.65.

KENTUCKY, $16.
Mr. Hunt, $1; Mr. Alexander, $15.

MARYLAND, $11.
Mr. Levering, for Soldier's Text Book, $10; Mr. Adams, $1.

MASSACHUSETTS, $295.
Mr. Rhodes, $5; Mrs. Booth, $2; Mr. Ropes, $2; Mr. Todd, $1; Estate of Amasa Hplmes, $3; Mr. Zenas Crane, $50; Mr. Smith, $10; Miss Laud, for Mexico, $1; a friend, for "Bill Sunday" campaign tracts, $25; Hon. Crane, $100; Hon. Wellman, $10; Miss Pond, $1; Rev. and Mrs. Clark, $5; Mr. Jones, $15; Miss Dawes, $50; Mrs. Titcomb, $10; Misses Pitken, $5.

MINNESOTA, $8.
Mr. Eaton, $3; Mr. Mitchell, $5.

MICHIGAN, $34.51.
Grand Rapids, church collection, $13.36; Mrs. Douglas, $5; Highland, church offering, $10; Mr. Moeller, $0.65; Mrs. Phelps, $0.50; Mr. Dosker, $5.

MISSOURI, $177.57.
St. Louis, church collection, $3.40; Mrs. Schoenhut, $0.67; Mr. Scholand, $5; Mr. Jeffers, $10; Mr. Walker, a life member, $30; Buxton and Skinner Stationery Co., $10; Mr. Brown, $15; Mr. Peters, $100; Webster Grove, church offering, $2; Washington, Sunday school offering, $1.50.

NEBRASKA, $53.10.
Mrs. Schrackenberg, $0.65; Mrs. Brinkena, $0.65; Hastings, church collection, $5; Mrs. Schroeder, $1.30; Omaha, church collection, $5; Glenvil, church collection, $17.50; Cedar Creek, church collection, $20; Mr. Seibert, $3.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, $46.
Mr. Murray, to constitute Alma P. Murray, a life member, $30; Mr. Scelye, $1; Miss Cummings, $1; Miss Parkhurst, $10; Mrs. Gale, $2; Miss Swallow, for Mexico, $2.

NEW JERSEY, $3,668.13.
Mr. Kelsey, $25; Mr. Allen, for Soldier's Text Book, $5; Hightstown, church offering, $5; Rev. Read, $5; Mr. Jarvie, $1,000; Sparta, church offering, $3.60; Frechold, church collection, $2.77; Rev. and Mrs. Boyd, $2; Miss Morris $0.50; a friend, $10; Miss Williamson, $1; Mr. Rower, for Soldier's Text Book, $1; Mrs. Peschel, $1.13; Mrs. Voorhees, $2; $14.58; Mrs. Fleischmann, $0.55; Miss Day, $1; Mr. Boardman, $2; Mr. Day, $10; Mr. Hoffman, $1; Mr. Higbie, $15; Dr. Hepburn, $5; Mr. Conover, $2; Miss Breuster, $2; Mr. Mahon, $5; Miss Knox, $1; Mr. Peters, $1; Miss Parker, $1; Mr. Cutter, $25; Mr. Morse, $2; Mr. Mankin, $3; Mr. Trimble, $1; Mr. Meadowcroft, $2; Miss Hull, $3; Miss Ferric, $1; Mr. Rumsey (deceased), $1; Miss Carson, $2; New Brunswick, church offering, $5.

NEW YORK, $1,066.
King Testimonial Fund, $18; Miss Adams, $10; Mr. Stuart, $10; Mrs. Brinc, $5; Mrs. Hesse, $5; Mr. Wucnsche, $1; Rev. Tilton, Jr., $5; Mr. Schans, $2; Rev. Sehlbrede, $1; Miss Belloni, $1; Mr. Riker, $10; Mr. Cunningham, $1; Mr. Douglas, $50; Mr. Douglas, $10; Mrs. Harkness, $100; Miss Strong, $20; Mr. Greeny, $1; Owasco, church offering, $4; Mrs. Quartius, $0.39; Mr. Martin, $1; Mr.

Bradt, $10; Mrs. Monroe, $500; Mr. Francis, $5; Mr. Jones, $3.25; Mr. Bahler, $2.50; Mr. Damon, $1; Mr. Wagner, $0.65; Mr. Manier, $10; Mr. Ludlow, $100; Mr. Havemeyer, $25; Mrs. Gardner, $1; Mr. Smith, $1; Miss Wood, $2.50; Mrs. Bean, $1; Rev. Sandreckzi, $1; Mrs. Harris, $5; Mr. Eisen, $1.30; Mr. Olmstead, $2; Miss Collier, $10; Dr. Cady, $5; Mr. and Mrs. Muller, $2; Dr. Lewis, $5; a member of the Tompkins Ave. Congregational Church, $1; Mr. and Mrs. Remsen, $2; Mr. Hubbs, $5; Mr. Tag, $5; Mr. Whitmore, $10; Mr. Proctor, $10; Mr. Blauvelt, $3; Mr. Stebbins, $1; Mrs. Dunham, $2; Mr. Bacon, $2.50; Miss Henry, $1; Mr. McDougall, $15; Mr. Manley, $1; Miss Ralpelje, $25; Mrs. Rodger, $5; Mr. and Mrs. Atherton, $1; Rev. Swift, D.D., $25; Mrs. Beer, $2.

NORTH CAROLINA, $2.
Rev. and Mrs. Brown, $2.

NORTH DAKOTA, $1.65.
Mr. Gisse, $1; Mr. Schmekel, $0.65.

OHIO, $77.80.
Cincinnati, church offering, $0.30; Cleveland, church offering, $25; Mr. and Mrs. Lyman, $20; Miss Parker, $1; Mrs. Wagner, $0.50; Miss McChintock, $5; Mr. Currier, $2; Mr. Lust, $5; Mr. List, $1; Misses A. C. and Helen T. Rogers, $5; Mr. Patterson, $5; Mr. Rutledge, $1; Mr. Barrett, $5; Mr. Hurd, $2.

OKLAHOMA, $3.40.
Rev. Voth, $2.90; Rev. Sprunger, $0.50.

OREGON, $21.78.
Mr. Boekli, $4.65; Prairie Dell, church offering, $9.38; Baileyville, church offering, $7.75.

PENNSYLVANIA, $991.40.
Mr. Savage, $75; Rev. Singinaster, $1; Easton, church offering, $2; Mr. Austin, for Cuban Colportage work, $400; Mrs. Turner, $150; Mr. Broadhead, for Soldier's Text Book, $2; Mrs. Rendergast, $3; Mr. McClelland, $1; Mrs. Fender, $2.18; Mrs. Weber, $0.30; Mr. and Mrs. Aldred, $2; Miss Stehley, $1; "In His Name," for Colportage in the West, $5; a friend in Pa., $13.25; Mr. Wertz, for Soldier's Text Book, $5; Rev. Wicand, D.D., $10; Mr. Sharpe, $5; Mrs. Rev. Hooper, $0.50; Mr. Browne, $25; Mr. Bixby, $3; Mr. Dennis, $5; Mr. Gearhart, $1; Mr. Goodwin, $2; Miss Leyda, $2; Mr. Houston, $10; Mr. Gordon, $5; Mr. Glover, $1; Mr. Bare, $5; Rev. De Schweinitz, $1; Rev. Gill, $2; Dr. Taylor, $3; Mr. Harbison, $50; Mrs. Bishop, $0.65; Mrs. Smith, Jr., $5; Mr. Brown, $5; Dr. Leaman, $10; Mr. Finney, $1; Rev. Prugh, D.D., $1; Miss Weir, $5; Mrs. Becker, $5; Mr. Kreitler, $5; Mr. Walter, for Soldier's Text Book, $1; Mr. Clark, $2; Mr. Wagner, $0.65; Miss Bergstresser, $2; Mr. Young, $5; Mr. Britt, $5; Mr. Nease, $1; Mr. Armstrong, $10; Mr. Barker, $5; Mr. Clemson, for Soldier's Text Book, $50; "A Friend," for Soldier's Text Book, $5; Miss Hope, $1; Mr. Kinnear, $10; Dr. McClelland, $5; Mr. Munn, $10; Mrs. Shephard, $5; Mr. Thaw, $5; Mr. Willock, $10; Mr. and Mrs. Woods, for Soldier's Text Book, $5; Wilkinsburg, church offering, $5.72; Wilkinsburg, church collection, $17.15.

SOUTH DAKOTA, $1.
Mr. Manseger, $1.

TENNESSEE, $10.
Memphis, church collection, $10.

TEXAS, $13.50.
"A Friend," $5; Miss Preston, for Soldier's Text Book, $1; Rev. Schwab, for work among foreigners, $2.50; Mr. Powell, $5.

VERMONT, $1.
Mr. Morse, $1.

VIRGINIA, $10.
Col. Dempsey, $3; Mr. Glascock, $1; Rev. Baker, $1; Mr. Williams, $5.

WASHINGTON, $1.
Mr. Annas, $1.

WEST VIRGINIA, $9.30.
Mrs. Isch, $0.30; Mr. Aglinby, $5; Mr. Bishop, $4.

WISCONSIN, $17.75.
Mr. Mayer, $0.60; "A Friend," for Soldier's Text Book, $2; Mr. Lothes, $1.15; Mr. Holt, $10; Mr. Falkenstein, $4.

FOREIGN, $2.71.
Canada, Mr. Friesen, $1; Mr. Epp, $0.59; Canal Zone, Rev. Wood, $1.12.

LEGACIES, $1,530.
Kew Gardens, New York, estate of Samuel S. Scott, $1,000; Rockford, Ill., estate of Mary H. Penfield, $500; Jersey City, N. J., estate of Valentine Klein, $30.

INCOME FROM TRUST FUNDS, $1,300.
Income for missionary work.....$1,250
Income for Annuitants..... 50

ERRATUM.
The following name was not mentioned in the list of donations received in October, 1916, as printed in the November issue of the American Messenger, although the amount was included in the total for the State of Pennsylvania:
Mr. Selden, $5.

Life Members and Directors
THE donation of $30 at one time constitutes a Life Member of the American Tract Society; the addition of $70, or the donation of $100 at one time, constitutes a Life Director. Life members may receive annually copies of the Society's own publications to the value of $1; Life Directors to the value of $2; if applied for within the Society's year, from April 1st to April 1st, in person or by written order. No individual can draw more than one annuity any year for himself. Colporters are not authorized to supply Life Members.

Form of Bequest
I GIVE and bequeath to the "AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY," instituted in the City of New York, May, 1825, the sum of.....dollars to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said Society.

Three witnesses should state that the testator declares this to be his last will and testament, and that they signed at his request, and in his presence and the presence of each other.

American Tract Society

THIS SOCIETY was organized in 1825. Its work is interdenominational and international in scope, and is commended by all evangelical denominations.

It has published the Gospel messages in 178 languages, dialects and characters. It has been the pioneer for work among the foreign-speaking people in our country, and its missionary colporters are distributing Christian literature in thirty-three languages among the immigrants and making a home-to-home visitation among the spiritually destitute, both in the cities and rural districts, leaving all kinds of Christian literature, also the Bible or portions of the Scriptures.

Its publication of leaflets, volumes and periodicals from the Home Office total 794,639,700 copies. It has made foreign cash appropriations to the amount of $799,456.39, and grants of electrotypes to the value of $61,177.96, by means of which millions of copies of books and tracts have been published at mission stations abroad.

The gratuitous distribution of the past year is to the value of $16,684.99. The grand total of its gratuitous distribution has been to the value of $2,634,505.89, which is the equivalent of 5,269,010,000 tract pages.

The total number of family visits that have been made by the Society's colporters during the last year is 206,167; the total number of volumes distributed by sale or grant is 55,517, making the total number of volumes that have been circulated by colporters in the last seventy-five years 17,382,454, and the total number of family visits that they have made during the same period 18,612,843.

The Society is making very special effort in behalf of Latin America, having entered upon the publication of a one volume Bible commentary in Spanish, a long-needed and earnestly prayed-for publication, also other volumes in both Spanish and Portuguese, and its total publications for Latin America reach 14,748,588 copies. Its work, ever widening, is dependent upon donations and legacies, and greatly needs increased offerings.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President.

JUDSON SWIFT, D.D., General Secretary.
Remittances should be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

TERMS: Subscription price, 50 cts. a year, payable in advance. In clubs of five or more, 30 cts. each. Club subscriptions mailed to separate addresses, if desired. Postage on foreign subscriptions, 24 cents additional. Canadian subscription, 12 cents additional. Single copies, 5 cents each.

On account of the additional charge which is made by the New York Post Office for mailing to subscribers in New York and Bronx Counties (Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx), no club rates, cash commissions or premiums will be given for subscriptions that must be sent to persons residing in those Counties. Each subscription in New York or Bronx County must be at the rate of 50 cents net.

Remit by Express, Money Order, Draft, Post Office Order or Registered Letter. For very small amounts, postage stamps may be sent at the risk of the sender.

RENEWALS: The date opposite your name shows to what time the subscription has been paid, and a change in the date is the receipt for renewal.

CHANGES: When sending change of address, be sure to send the old address as well as the new one.

OUR ADVERTISERS: We believe that all the advertisements in this paper are from responsible advertisers, and it is our intention to admit only such to our columns. Should, however, any of our subscribers find that any advertiser does not live up to his agreements, we would consider it a favor if they will inform us, and we will at any time give prompt attention to any complaint.

We do not, of course, guarantee that all persons will take the same point of view with the advertisers, and it must be borne in mind that the claims and statements made by advertisers are their assertions, and not ours.

Our readers will confer a favor upon advertisers and also upon us if they will mention the American Messenger when answering advertisements.

FIELD SECRETARIES AND COLPORTAGE SUPERINTENDENTS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.

Rev. Isaac Pierson, Field Secretary for New England, 50 Bromfield Street, Boston, Mass.

Rev. Robert Murray, Field Secretary, Central Agency, 345 Fourth Avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Rev. A. W. Reinhard, Field Secretary and Superintendent of Colportage for the Western and Northwestern States, 721 South 37th Street, Omaha, Nebraska.

Rev. George Whitefort, Superintendent of Colportage, Southern Agency, Crichton, R.F.D., Mobile Co., Ala.

USEFUL POCKET KNIVES

Splendid Pocket Knives are offered as premiums to those who secure new subscriptions for the AMERICAN MESSENGER. These knives are manufactured by the well-known firm of J. Curley & Bro., New York City. All blades are hand-forged from the best steel.

PEARL-HANDLED KNIFE

Given free and post-paid for only 3 yearly subscriptions at 50c. each, or we will give a year's subscription to the paper and the knife for $1.30.

The handle is of heavy iridescent pearl. The bolsters and lining are German silver. The two blades are fine English hand-forged steel, carefully tempered and hardened. The large blade is a regular cutting blade and the other is a nail cleaner and file. The knife is 2 1/4 inches long. It is suitable for either lady or gentleman.

POCKET KNIFE No. 2274

Given free for only 2 yearly subscriptions at 50c. each, or we will give a year's subscription to the paper and the knife for $1.00.

This Knife for gentlemen has two blades. Each blade opens easily. The blades are made of finest quality of steel. The handle is of patent stag, and is brass lined.

EASY OPENER KNIFE

Given free for only 2 yearly subscriptions at 50c. each, or we will give the knife and a year's subscription to the AMERICAN MESSENGER for $1.00.

This Knife is called the "Easy Opener" because of the way the handle is cut, so as to secure a good grasp of the blade when opening it. No broken nails or sore fingers from trying to open this knife. It has two good, strong, polished hand-forged steel blades, stag-handled, shaped so as to give a good, firm hold. It has a German silver bolster and name plate, and is brass lined. It is a handsome, strong, serviceable knife for either man or boy.

AMERICAN MESSENGER, Park Ave., and 40th St., N. Y. C.

Our Book Table

Publishers will confer a favor by sending us announcements of their new books. So far as space will allow, we will ask publishers to send us for review such books as in our judgment will be of interest and value to our readers. We do not promise to review books that are sent to us unsolicited.

Any book here mentioned will be sent upon receipt of the given price, if ordered from the "American Tract Society," Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York City.

A Book of Family Worship.

This manual has been compiled by a committee, consisting of Rev. Louis F. Benson, D.D.; Cheesman A. Her- rick, Ph.D., LL.D.; Rev. Frank Lukens and Rev. Harold McA. Rob- inson. It contains a Psalm and a Lesson from Scripture for the morn- ing and evening of every day in the year; a morning and an evening prayer for every day in the month; and a copious selection of prayers for special times and occasions. It will doubtless prove of real service for family worship in many homes. (Cloth, 112 pages. Price, 50 cents net. The Presbyterian Board of Pub- lication and Sabbath School Work, Philadelphia, Pa.)

God's Minute. By 365 eminent Clergymen and Laymen.

This book contains 365 daily prayers arranged in calendar form. On each page there is a brief prayer with a verse of Scripture bearing on the sub- ject of intercession.

The idea of the book was suggested by the thought that so many Christian people offer as an excuse for not having family devotions, that they haven't time. This spiritual contribu- tion to the Christian world's litera- ture proves that only a minute daily devoted to the worship of God can be made an inspiring one to begin the duties of the day.

Among the contributors to the book are Wilfred T. Grenfell, Professor W. H. Griffith Thomas, Reverends John Clifford, F. B. Meyer, Washington Gladden, Hugh Black, Timothy Stone, Bishop Quayle, Russell H. Conwell, David James Burrell, Hoyt M. Dobbs, Ira Landrith, Floyd W. Tom- kins, Bishop Woodcock, Maud Bal- lington Booth, President E. Y. Mulin- s and many others eminent in the evangelical religious world. (Cloth, 384 pages. Price, 35 cents, net. The Vir Publishing Company, 200 North Fifteenth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.)

The cheerful feeling you possess after a drink of something hot and flavory should be only the beginning of your satisfaction.

For this very reason more and more people are turning from coffee to

Instant Postum

A lessened tendency to such annoyances as nervousness and sleeplessness repays them.

A ten-day trial of this de- lightful, flavory hot drink has assisted so many to health and comfort that your friend, the Postum drinker, will tell you it's well worth while.

"There's a Reason"

Poems of Mary Artemisia Lath- bury.—This dainty volume opens with an introduction by Bishop John H. Vin- cent, in which he pays an appreciative tribute to the "Poetess of Chautauqua." W. Garrett Horder gives his testimony to the value of Miss Lathbury's work in a second introduction. A brief sketch of the life of the poetess, written by Frances E. Willard, is also included.

The poems of Miss Lathbury are ar- ranged and classified under these head- ings: Chautauqua Carols, Lyrics of Na- ture, Songs of Labor and Other Poems, Hymns and Sacred Songs, Out of Darkness into Light, Personal, Among the Children, Seven Little Maids, Idyls of the Months, April Skies and From Meadow-sweet to Mistletoe.

Concerning Miss Lathbury Bishop Vincent writes: "When the divine Light and Life enter and dominate a person- ality God does, in a measure, re- incarnate Himself. As the glory of the sun may shine like a diamond in a drop of water, and as in a diamond the sun may flash and tremble and dazzle the human eye, so may the Divine Spirit enter, possess and dominate a human soul. She lived in the spiritual world, recognized the beautiful harmonies be- tween the realm of matter and that of spirit, not failing to interpret the one in the light of the other. She had vis- ions, deep subjective experiences, was in constant communion with Heaven, knew the deepest, sweetest feelings of a spirit that had with closed eyes looked into the very face of the invisible God. She was both poetess and saint."

All those who have felt the charm of Miss Lathbury's poems will welcome this volume in which her writings are given an appropriate and beautiful set- ting. (Cloth, 292 pages. Price, $1.25. The Nunc Licet Press, 920 Nicollet Ave., Minneapolis, Minn.)

Give Heed to Reading

No kinder counsel can be given to a friend than that he pay attention to reading. This is the only way to the true cultivation of the mind. Books are real helps to mental growth and moral progress. Those who have had most of this world's goods tell us that they owed much of their purest joys and loftiest purposes to books. Ma- caulay had wealth and fame, rank and power, and yet in a charming letter he tells a little child: "I would rather be a poor man in a garret with plenty of books than a king who did not love reading."

But books on the shelf will not en- rich the mind. They must be read. There is an art in reading as well as in speaking. Some people read vol- umes, but they do not benefit their minds because they fail to concentrate their thoughts. It is of the utmost im- portance that we digest the thoughts of the writer if his book is to do us any mental good.

Someone has well said: "The true uni- versity of these days is a collection of books." A well-read man has a double enjoyment of life, and the time that he spends in study will never be thrown away. In books we discover the mar- vels and beauties in literature; we find help for our problems; we see the se- crets of success, and we obtain strength for the hour of need. The best friend any of us can have is a good book. Poor books weaken the mind as much as good books strengthen it.—EXCHANGE.

A Pleasant Wish

Rev. J. A. Speer of Portland, Oregon, in renewing his subscription for another year, writes:

"Long live the AMERICAN MESSENGER! For many years I have greatly enjoyed reading it, and wish for it all that is good."

"A Kind Friend"

A lady in Skaneateles, N. Y., has sent this message in connection with her renewal subscription:

"I welcome the AMERICAN MESSENGER as a kind friend with its words of cheer and counsel which I need. It indeed brings an uplift on one's pathway through life."

Our Medicine Chest

While visiting in New York City a lady asked the little son of her friend: "Johnny, do you like going to school?" "Yes, ma'am," answered the truthful urchin, "and I like coming home, too; but I don't like staying there between times."

The teacher was instructing the class in the rudiments of the English language. "John," she said, "make a sentence using the word 'indisposition.'" John, who was evidently of a pugilistic turn of mind, assumed an aggressive pose and announced: "When youse want to fight, you stands in dis position."

Tommy's mother had made him a Christmas present of a toy shovel, and sent him up to the nursery to play with his baby brother. "Take care of Baby, now," said his mother, "and don't let anything hurt him."

Presently screams of anguish from Baby sent the distracted parent flying upstairs.

"For goodness' sake, Tommy, what has happened to the baby?" said she, trying to soothe the wailing infant.

"There was a naughty fly biting him on the top of his head, and I killed it with the shovel," was the proud reply.

The teacher was hearing a class in mental arithmetic. It was the first les- son on fractions. "Now," said the teacher, "Mary had eight eggs. After using four for her cake, what part was left?" Lulu waved her hand frantically. "What is it, Lulu?" asked the teacher. "Eggshells," she answered promptly.

"Why, Jacky, open the door and let Katie in. Don't you see it's raining?" cried Jacky's mother. "Can't, mamma," said Jacky. "We are playing Noah's ark. I'm Noah, and Katie is the sinners; and she must stay out in the wet."

What 15c Will You Bring from the Nation's Capital

The little matter of 15c in stamps or coin will bring you the Pathfinder 13 weeks on trial. The Pathfinder is an illustrated weekly, published at the Nation's Center, for the Nation; a paper that prints all the news of the world and that tells the truth and only the truth; now in its 23d year. This paper fills the bill without emptying the purse; it costs but $1 a year. If you want to keep posted on what is going on in the world, at the least expense of time or money, this is your means. If you want a paper in your home which is sincere, reliable, entertaining, wholesome, the Pathfinder is yours. If you would appreciate a paper which puts everything clearly, fairly, briefly—here it is. Send 15c to show that you might like such a paper, and we will send the Pathfinder on probation 13 weeks. The 15c does not repay us, but we are glad to invest in new friends. The Pathfinder, Box 91, Washington, D. C.

Special Combination Subscription Offers

We present herewith some attractive combination subscription offers which afford an excellent opportunity to save money. The subscriptions may be either for yourself or for your friends; they may be either new or renewal. The AMERICAN MESSENGER may be sent to one address and the other periodical to another address.

Should you wish to subscribe for two or more periodicals on the list in connection with the AMERICAN MESSENGER, write us and we will tell you the cost of the combination which you desire, but please remember that in every case the AMERICAN MESSENGER must be included.

When a copy of our Calendar for 1917, entitled "Making Friends," is desired, 10 cents additional must be sent with each subscription.

These Special Offers apply only in the United States and its possessions:

Table with 3 columns: Publication Name, Regular Subscription Price, and Our Price for Both. Includes titles like American Messenger, Christian Herald, American Endeavor World, etc.

BIBLE TEACHERS' TOOLS FOR 1917

THE NEW TESTAMENT WITH NOTES

Indispensable the next six months. Carry it in your pocket or hand-bag.

This volume contains full explanations, helps and instructions on every page. Printed on thin white paper from clear black type. Pocket edition. Size of page, 3¾ x 6 in.; ¾ in. thick; weight 11 ounces.

French morocco, cloth lined, red under gold edges, boxed.

$1.00 net. By mail, $1.08.

Harmony of the Gospels in the Words of the American Standard Edition, and Outline of the Life of Christ.

By Rev. John H. Kerr, D.D. 8vo. Cloth. xxiii, 236 pp. Special Student's Edition. Uniform with Stalker's "Life of Christ."

"It is rich in reference and presents a system of parallel readings in compact form."—Chautauquan.

"To a Bible class teacher a manual of this sort is practically indispensable when the lessons are dealing with the story of Christ."—The Continent.

Price, 60 Cents, postpaid.

DEVOTIONAL BOOKS FOR THE NEW YEAR:

EVERY DAY

By Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D. A delightfully unusual adaptation for the busy person of the Scriptures in their bearing upon daily life.

"Every day will I bless thee," is the keynote of the volume, and it unlocks treasures of thought from God's Word. Each day's message is deep and lofty, full of inspiration and aspiration.

Price, net, $1.25.

THE DAILY PATHWAY

By Margaret E. Sangster. Cloth, embossed design, black and gold. Frontispiece of author. 12mo. 270 pp.

"They give wise advice, speak kindly words and make good suggestions. Every home-maker, and in fact each woman who has to meet the hard places of life, will be helped by studying Mrs. Sangster's cheering words."—Presbyterian Banner.

Price, 30 Cents, postpaid.

THESE WORDS OF MINE

Selected and arranged by Abbie McCammon Brown from American Standard Revised Bible. 64mo. 157 pp. Limp ooze leather stamped in gold, with bookmark.

Net, boxed, 25 Cents. By mail, 27 Cents.

SOLDIER'S POCKET BIBLE

Issued for the use of the army of Oliver Cromwell, A.D. 1643. 32 pp. Sizes 2¾ x 4½ in.

Paper cover. Price, 3 Cents, postpaid.

THE JUNIOR PARISH

By Herbert W. Lathe

Full of just the things you want to illustrate the lessons and to set your scholars to thinking. As a successful talker and more effective writer for children on topics vitally important to the Church and Sunday-school, Mr. Lathe is hardly excelled.

12mo. 278 pp. Cloth.

Price, $1.00, postpaid.

THE TWO ST. JOHN'S OF THE NEW TESTAMENT

By Rev. James Stalker, D.D. 12mo. Cloth. 271 pp. Size 5¼ x 7¾ in.

The careers and characters of John the Evangelist and John the Baptist.

Dr. Stalker's writings are remarkable for originality of method, clearness of style, comprehensiveness of view, and suggestiveness of matter.

Net, 75 Cents. By mail, 85 Cents.

BIBLE DICTIONARY (Revised Edition)

By Rev. W. W. Rand, D.D. Cloth. 8vo. 720 pp. 348 illustrations. 11 maps in colors. Size 6½ x 8½ in. x 7½ in.

The best-low priced Dictionary on the market.

Price, $1.00 net. By mail, $1.20.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST

By Rev. James Stalker, D.D. 12mo. Dark green cloth binding, red stamping. Map frontispiece. Student's Edition. 162 pp. Size 5 x 1½ in.

If you are not using Stalker's Life of Christ, do not wait a day before ordering it. This is essentially the student's book—only 162 pages, but they are written in Dr. Stalker's luminous style: every word counts. The paragraphs are numbered for quick reference, and a synopsis of contents precedes each chapter. Dr. Stalker says in the revised edition that the book "has been translated into more languages, European and Asiatic, than the author can remember."

Price, 60 Cents, net, postpaid.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE

Black leatherette binding, red edges. 8vo. 561 pp. 3 columns to page. Size 5½ x 8½ in.

The best concordance for the price that is printed. This edition is printed on thin paper so that the 561 pages do not bulk heavily, and it is a convenient size for reference. For the Sunday-School teacher it is a necessity.

Price, $1.00, postpaid.

THE MASTER PREACHER

Study of the Homiletics of Jesus

By Albert Richmond Bond, A.M., D.D. 8vo. Cloth. 320 pp. Size 5½ x 8¼ in.

"A very comprehensive study of the preaching and teaching of Jesus, taking practically every phase of it. It is well worth a careful study."—Baptist Standard.

"It is a book full of observation and a really keen analysis of Christ as preacher and teacher."—New York Christian Advocate.

Net, 75 Cents. By mail, 85 Cents.

THREE TIMELY BOOKS FOR MISSION STUDY:

Mission classes everywhere are studying about Latin-America this year. Here are three books that are fine for supplemental study:

THROUGH THE WILDERNESSES OF BRAZIL, BY HORSE, CANOE AND FLOAT

By William Azel Cook. 58 illustrations. Cloth, 3 colored design, green top. 8vo. 487 pp. Size 5¾ x 8½ in.

The wonderful story of this traveller and explorer who climbed the mountains, pierced the jungles and pushed his way through the swamps of Brazil and found darkness of heart and life everywhere in that beautiful land.

"Tells a fascinating tale from beginning to end."—Presbyterian Banner.

Price, $1.25, postpaid.

HORACIO: A TALE OF BRAZIL

By R. W. Fenn. Frontis. 12mo. Cloth. 309 pp. Size 5 x 7½ in.

"The author has shown a good appreciation of the odd elements in the lives of Brazilian folk and the strange factors which influence the lives of a priest-ridden community."—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

Net, $1.00. By mail, $1.10.

VALADERO RANCH

By Hope Daring. 12mo. Cloth. Frontispiece and head bands. 288 pp. Size 5 x 7½ in.

"An interesting story of the early days of California, while it was still under Mexican rule. The scene is a great ranch near San Gabriel Mission, and the reader gets a clear idea of the wealth of the old Catholic missions and of the lives of the priests and their treatment of the Indians."—The Advance.

Price, $1.00, postpaid.

BIBLE READER'S GUIDE

By F. S. Schenck, D.D. Introductory chapter on How to Study the Bible, by D. L. Moody. 16mo. 340 pp. Clear type on thin Bible paper. Black leatherette binding. Size 4¼ x 6¾ in.

A complete and concise outline for studying the entire Bible in one year. Illustrated with maps, charts, diagrams, etc., which clearly fix in one's mind the essential facts, places, events, dates, etc.

Net, 35 Cents. By mail, 43 Cents.

"WE WOULD SEE JESUS"

By David James Burrell. Frontis. 12mo. Cloth, design in red and green. Frontispiece shows Jesus with the doctors in the Temple. 94 pp. Size 5 x 7½ in.

Twelve chapters in this little book tell us where we can find and see Jesus today. We see Him here also through the eyes of Peter and John, Pilate and Paul. Dr. Burrell dedicates the book to his friend, and thereby shows us Christ through the eyes of a present-day apostle.

Price, net, 50 Cents. By mail, 55 Cents.

205
AMM

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

Vol. 75

FEBRUARY, 1917

No. 2

REBEKAH AT THE WELL

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY, NEW YORK.

H. E. FRITZ, DES.

CHURCH NEWS

A Revival Conference

A Revival Conference is being planned for the Thirtieth Reunion of The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, to be held January 31 to February 5, 1917. In the list of speakers already announced are Bishop Luther B. Wilson, D.D., of the Methodist Episcopal Church; Rev. R. A. Torrey, D.D., Dean of the Los Angeles Bible Institute; Rev. A. B. Winchester, D.D., Pastor of Knox Presbyterian Church, Toronto, Canada; Rev. C. I. Scofield, D.D., Editor of the Scofield Reference Bible; and Pastor Paul Rader of the Moody Church. There is expected to be a large gathering of the Alumni of the Institute including evangelists, missionaries, and other Christian workers from all over the world.

An Appealing Field

Many of the representative churches of New Jersey, as well as churches in Pennsylvania and New York, have been privileged in hearing Rev. Malcolm H. MacLeod, of Colorado, speak under the auspices of the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions, concerning the need of evangelizing the Spanish-speaking people of the Southwest and the rural populations of the regions around the Rocky Mountains. The argument was made that rich dividends have already been received in return for work done, and that even richer returns will reward the faithful workers sent forth by the Church to these people who respond so readily when properly approached and ministered to. Attention was called to the fact that there are between 600,000 and 700,000 Spanish-speaking people in our country, the third and fourth generations of a race acquired by land annexation or conquest. Thousands of aliens have come from Mexico during the past four years of disturbance in that country.

The Largest Dry City in America

Petrograd, Russia, is of course the largest dry city in the world, and Toronto, Canada, with 400,000 population, has become by the Ontario prohibition act the largest dry city in America. By this act the province will be under absolute prohibition for three years, then a plebiscite will be taken on the question of its remaining dry permanently.

The Churches and the Sabbath

In speaking on the subject, "The Sabbath Vital to National Welfare," at the convention of the National Reform Association, in Pittsburgh, Pa., Harry L. Bowlby of New York said: "The churches must solve the problem of Sabbath desecration or the forces of Sabbath desecration will dissolve many of our churches. Already we are trying to roll back this mighty tide with the futile bulrushes of occasional Go-to-Church Sundays. These are good things, but they do not go to the heart of the non-church-going problem. The open Sunday saloons, theaters, dance halls, motion picture houses, places of business, the ever present Sunday newspaper, sports of various kinds, these bear witness to the prevailing conditions. Add to these the fact that over four million toilers are at work every Sunday and you have a tremendous problem which must be solved before you have a citizenship meriting the name Christian."

Mormonism and Christianity

The following significant statement is made by the organ of the National Reform Association, which is conducting the national fight for the passage of the Anti-polygamy amendment:

"Mormon missionaries sometimes dispute our statement that Mormonism is an attempted substitution for Christianity. And here comes the Mormon prophet's favorite son and favorite apostle, Hyrum M. Smith, who says in a sermon, printed in the Deseret News: 'Why, my brethren and sisters, Christianity never had the elements of success in it from the first two or three centuries after Christ. It never has succeeded and never will succeed in the world, but let it be remembered that I absolutely and positively differentiate Christianity as it is known in the world today from the gospel of Jesus Christ. There is much of good in it and there is much of bad in it; there is much of truth and there is much of error, but it is lacking in that spirit which enables men to discern the good from the bad and the truth from the error. There is not within it that power that impels men to seek for God and to keep his commandments and to keep themselves from evil. That power is wanting in what is called Christianity."

The Scripture Gift Mission

The Scripture Gift Mission was founded in the year 1888, for the purpose of supplying missionaries and Christian workers in pagan lands, with free grants of attractively illustrated scriptures. It was felt that there were millions of heathen, Mohammedans and others who were too poor to spare even the smallest coin to purchase a copy of the Word of God. Millions more would never get a copy if they had to wait until someone came to sell it to them. Millions were too callous to purchase, but would accept a gift of a beautifully colored illustrated Gospel if offered to them with a word of advice as to its perusal.

In 1909, the Committee of the oldest British Bible Society (the Naval and Military Bible Society, founded in 1780) asked the committee of the Scripture Gift Mission to take over their work, and this was arranged. The Mission has no paid agents. All its work is accomplished through missionaries and Christian workers in almost every part of the world, and the Scriptures (Gospels, portions, and text-cards) are issued in about eighty-eight languages. The Scriptures issued by the Mission are printed in a very attractive form, and mostly illustrated with beautiful pictures of the Holy Land, by James Clark, R.A., and H. A. Harper, and in a way calculated to induce even the careless to accept and read the Word of God. The circulation for the last few years has been as follows, to March 31 of each year: 1914—4,459,698; 1915—8,264,857; 1916—10,503,886. The Mission relies solely upon the support of those of the Lord's people who believe that the Word of God is still "the power of God unto salvation to all who believe," and who, loving the Scriptures themselves, long to help to get them into the hands of those who do not possess them.

The special work which engages the Mission at present is distributing the Scriptures amongst the soldiers and sailors fighting in the European war. This distribution has been very signally blessed by God, and many thousands of soldiers have been won for Christ.

"Good Samaritans."

A new philanthropy, cousin to the Big brother movement, has been inaugurated by the West Side Branch Y. M. C. A., in New York City. It is known as the "Good Samaritans." While the Big Brothers deal with boys, the Good Samaritans deal with men, young or mature, who have missed out in life from one cause or another. The movement grows out of the street and shop meetings, which bring many men to the branch for interviews with business men by appointment. Some are down and out through drink, some through ill health or are in trouble for some other reason, and want advice and help. After an interview some one of the Good Samaritans becomes a brother to the individual, to see him through to better life conditions and stick to him until he makes good or all hope fails and even beyond that. The movement has only just begun, but it has in it the promise of large usefulness.

Libraries Free

The American Tract Society is ready to give a limited number of excellent libraries free of all expense except the cost of transportation to needy Sunday Schools, Mission Churches and Christian schools among the negroes and mountain whites.

This offer is made to cover only those cases in which the recipients are themselves unable to pay anything toward the cost of the books that they need.

Application for such libraries should be made at once to the General Secretary of the American Tract Society, Park avenue and Fortieth street, New York, N. Y.

Each applicant should state the reason why the church or school is unable to pay for the books needed, the number and ages of the scholars, and should also contain a guarantee for the payment of the transportation charges.

A National Fellowship

The opposing forces in the liquor fight are lining up in great industrial centers for the final conflict. One-half the population in the wet territory in this country lives in four great industrial States—New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois and New Jersey, and one-fourth of the people in wet territory live in six great industrial cities—New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, St. Louis, Boston and Cleveland.

The situation is far more serious than most of us imagine. While we have succeeded in keeping the liquor question out of the conventions of the American Federation of Labor, it is nevertheless true that the liquor men today practically dominate every Central Labor Union in America. This is so because they are taking an unfair advantage of the pledge of loyalty of trade-unionists.

Rev. Charles Stelzle, who has made an exhaustive study of the liquor problem from the workingmen's viewpoint, giving substantially two years of his time to this investigation, is about to inaugurate a national campaign among the trade-unionists in America, organizing a national Anti-Saloon Fellowship.

There are many trade-unionists in the churches who should co-operate in this movement and they are urged to communicate with Mr. Stelzle—addressing him at 105 East 22d Street, New York City,—signifying their willingness to help. These church men will be requested to distribute literature among their fellow trade-unionists in shops and labor unions and to enlist as many trade-unionists as possible in the work of the Fellowship.

A Helpful Subscriber

Mr. A. L. Packard, of East Bridgewater, Mass., has written to us expressing his very high appreciation of the value of the AMERICAN MESSENGER. He has shown in a very practical way the sincerity of his appreciation, for he has sent the sum of $2.10 with the names and addresses of seven people to whom he wishes the paper sent for the current year. He says:

"When I saw in the AMERICAN MESSENGER that you would send five copies for a whole year to five different addresses I thought there was no other way in which I could do as much good, as it would be carrying the Gospel message into five different homes."

We hope that there are many other subscribers who will follow Mr. Packard's example by sending us a remittance sufficient to send the AMERICAN MESSENGER into the homes of five or more of their friends and acquaintances at the club price of thirty cents apiece. The monthly visits of the paper will be like the coming of a silent evangelist into the home, and may be the means of bringing a blessing that will endure to all eternity.

A Final Offer

What those who have received our Calendar for 1917, entitled "Making Friends," think of it is indicated in a letter from Mr. Edward B. Morrill of Allston, Mass., who writes:

"Permit me to express my thanks to you for your kindness in sending me the beautiful Calendar, 'Making Friends.' I can assure you I appreciate it. It will have a prominent place in my residence. It is a calendar of inspiration. The artist had a beautiful conception appealing to the human mind and leading to an uplift of thought."

Our superb Calendar has been secured by special arrangement with the Osborne Company, who are famous the world over as producers of Art Calendars. It measures 10 by 17 inches, and is printed in a rich sepia tint. When the year is ended, the date pad may be detached, and the Calendar will make a choice subject for framing.

We will give this Calendar, postpaid, and one year's subscription to the AMERICAN MESSENGER for 60 cents, or we will give the Calendar as a premium to any subscriber who renews his or her own subscription for 1917, and sends one new subscription, remitting $1.00 in all. If the new subscriber in the foregoing case also desires a Calendar, $1.10 must be remitted. For every Canadian subscription 12 cents additional must be remitted for postage, and for every foreign subscription 24 cents.

All those who have not yet attended to the renewal of their subscriptions for the year 1917 are earnestly urged to forward their remittance at once, accompanied by an additional ten cents for the Calendar, "Making Friends," if they desire to receive it.

AMERICAN MESSENGER
Park Ave. and 40th St., New York

Periodicals

for the Home, Church and Sunday School

The American Messenger

founded in 1843, is one of the leading inter-denominational family publications, containing strong, original articles, editorial contributions from prominent writers, bright stories, choice poems, and beautiful illustrations each month, besides helps on the Christian Endeavor Prayer-Meeting Topics, News from the Mission Fields, a page for the Little Folks, and much other interesting and instructive matter, for both young and old. The price is very low, being but 50 cents a year, or in Clubs of five or more, 30 cents apiece for a year's subscription. Postage on foreign subscription, 24 cents additional; Canadian subscription, 12 cents additional.

Apples of Gold

is a delightful paper for the little ones in the home and at Sunday school. It is published monthly, but arranged in four-page parts for weekly distribution. An ideal paper for primary departments and infant classes; charming illustrations; good clear type; every issue printed in color; a splendid full-page picture each week; beautiful half-tones. Single copies, 30 cents; five copies to one address, 25 cents each; ten or more, 20 cents each, per year. Postage on Canadian and foreign subscriptions, 6 cents per copy additional. Subscriptions accepted in clubs for 3 months, 6 months or a year.

Amerikanischer Botschafter

is a family monthly paper for German readers. This paper is ably edited and beautifully illustrated and maintains its rank as one of the best German Monthlies. It is evangelical and unsectarian in tone. The subscription price is 35 cents a year, or in clubs of ten or more 20 cents apiece.

Manzanas de Oro

A beautiful little weekly for Spanish readers, printed in large, clear type in a fine tinted ink. It contains short stories, Sunday-school lessons and beautiful illustrations. The subscription price is 35 cents a year, or in clubs of ten or more, 30 cents a year.

Free Sample Copies on Request.

American Tract Society
Park Ave. and 40th St., New York

The American Messenger

"Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Luke 2:10

Vol. 75. No. 2

FEBRUARY, 1917

Copyright, 1917, by American Tract Society.

Terms: 50 cents per annum
Single copy, 5 cents

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

PUBLISHED MONTHLY

BY THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

OFFICERS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President.
JOHN HENRY JOWETT, M.A., D.D., Vice-President.
JUDSON SWIFT, D.D., General Secretary.
LOUIS TAG, Treasurer.
REV. HENRY LEWIS, Ph.D., Recording Secretary.
All of the above-named officers should be addressed at
Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Rev. David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.
Rev. Charles Carroll Albertson, D.D.
Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.
Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D.
Rev. George Ernest Merriam.

Entered at the Post Office in New York as second-class matter.

Shall Sunday Motion Picture Shows be Legalized?

A vital question has arisen in regard to Sabbath observance in the State of New York. A recent court decision has held that it is illegal to give motion picture performances for personal gain. The case has been appealed to a higher court, but meanwhile strenuous efforts are being made to induce the State Legislature to pass a bill legalizing Sunday motion picture shows to which an admission fee is charged.

The professional Sunday moving picture show is one of the greatest hindrances to Christian work which has developed within recent times. The performances given on Sunday afternoon lure the children away from the Sunday School, and those that are given on Sunday evening conflict with the church service usually held at that time.

Furthermore, the character of many of the films shown at these performances constitute a most glaring desecration of the Sabbath. In many instances they are not fit to be shown on any day of the week, and their exhibition on the Sabbath shows an absolute disregard for the divine command, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy."

There are indications that a desperate endeavor will be made by the great financial interests that are behind the moving picture concerns to force through a law granting to moving picture theaters the right to give exhibitions on Sunday. There is a suggestion that a tax levied upon these concerns would provide a much needed revenue for the State, and it is hinted that the privilege of Sunday performances may be given as an offset to the proposed taxation.

Christian people all over the State should do all in their power to see to it that the Sabbath is protected against the greed of those who would legalize the Sunday motion picture shows in exchange for a mere pecuniary gain to the State revenues.

There are six days and six evenings in the week when the motion picture shows may be seen by all those who desire to witness them. They should not be allowed to encroach upon the day which Christian sentiment dictates should be devoted to rest and worship.

The Lord's Day Alliance of the United States and other organizations for the protection of the Sabbath are taking a vigorous stand in this matter, and they should have the earnest and united support of all those who value the Christian Sabbath and who wish to see it maintained as one of the strong bulwarks of our present civilization.

✻ ✻ ✻

Revival Movements

There is a wave of evangelistic activity that is sweeping over a large part of our land. Revival services are being held in many churches, and organized movements for the stirring of whole communities are being conducted by evangelists of known power and effectiveness in many different centers.

The most conspicuous campaign in progress at the present writing is that conducted by Billy Sunday in Boston, which has stirred that pivotal city in a way which it has never before experienced and which bids fair to eclipse all previous campaigns in which that famous evangelist has engaged.

Preparations are already well under way for the campaign which Billy Sunday is expected to conduct in the city of New York, beginning on the first of April. Arrangements have been made for constructing the largest tabernacle which has yet been erected in any of Billy Sunday's campaigns; a strong committee has been appointed and for purposes of greater efficiency it has been incorporated; prayer meetings are already under way invoking the divine blessing upon the efforts that are to be made to win the great metropolis for Christ; numerous matters of detail are being quietly but carefully provided for in advance of the opening of the actual meetings.

A unique feature in connection with the forthcoming campaign was the coming to New York City on January 14th of hundreds of "Sunday trail hitters," who had been converted in other cities, and who came to awaken in the churches of New York a live interest in the evangelistic effort which Billy Sunday is so soon to inaugurate.

Billy Sunday and his methods have been provocative of much discussion, and many opinions, both favorable and adverse have been expressed concerning the way in which his remarkable campaigns are conducted. It is not our purpose at this time to enter upon this discussion, but simply to say that whatever may be the faults connected with the Billy Sunday campaigns, there is no question but that a very large measure of good has been accomplished by this unique evangelist, for he has been used under God for the turning of many to righteousness and the bringing of salvation to a multitude of human souls.

✻ ✻ ✻

A Noteworthy Temperance Victory

The most important news in regard to the temperance cause that has recently been announced is the fact that the Webb-Kenyon Law has been upheld as constitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States. This law prohibits the shipment of liquor of any sort into States, whose statutes forbid such importation. In other words, the interstate commerce in liquor is made subject to such restrictions as the individual States see fit to impose upon it.

Under the interpretation of the Webb-Kenyon Law, which has just been handed down by the United States Supreme Court, it will be possible for any State to prohibit absolutely the importation of liquor within its borders.

The three States that will immediately feel the benefit of the decision affirming the constitutionality of the Webb-Kenyon Law are West Virginia, Arizona and Oregon. These States all have enacted laws prohibiting the shipment of intoxicating liquor of any sort for personal or beverage use. Doubtless many other Prohibition States will speedily pass similar legislation.

Thus the lines are being drawn tighter and tighter around the liquor traffic, and it is to be hoped that the day is not far distant when this traffic will be outlawed in every State of the Union.

✻ ✻ ✻

An Abuse of the Mails

Attention has been called to the misuse of the United States mails by the liquor interests, in their frantic efforts to bolster up a business which present indications plainly foreshadows is doomed to extinction.

This abuse of the mails consists in flooding the dry States with circulars advertising liquor for sale and inviting orders for the delivery of intoxicants despite the prohibition laws which exist in those States.

This advertising campaign for the sake of exploiting the liquor traffic is being carried on with diabolical ingenuity, and no expense is being spared in order to create and maintain a mail-order demand for liquor, not only on the part of those who are already addicted to its use, but also on the part of women and children, in whom the taste for intoxicants has not yet been formed.

As has been well stated, a law excluding liquor advertising and solicitation from the mails would be in accordance with the precedent that has already excluded from the mails obscene publications, lottery tickets and various other articles designed for illegal and immoral uses.

The Christian citizens of our country are therefore urged to press upon their representatives a united and imperative demand for a law of this kind, which would be eminently fitting and proper for many cogent reasons. The Federal government is directly concerned in this matter because alcohol is a recognized source of weakness, because the extension of the drink trade is always at the expense of other legitimate business, and because it is inimical to health and dangerous in times of national emergency. The Federal government also has exclusive jurisdiction over the mails, and it can therefore put into force immediately whatever restrictions are deemed to be in the best interest of the public welfare.

The Drug Evil

There are few people who realize what a hold habit-forming drugs have secured upon the American people. This evil is closely connected with the drink habit, and it calls for just as careful and drastic treatment as the evils that arise out of the liquor traffic.

A recent pamphlet by Dr. Charles B. Towns points out very clearly the Federal responsibility in the solution of the habit-forming drug problem, and suggests that Congress empower the President to appoint a committee of able men to investigate this whole subject in all its phases, making such appropriations for this purpose as may be found necessary.

"Such action of Congress," it is said, "would mean not only a solution of this subject as far as the Federal government is concerned; it would mean also a solution for the States. And it would establish a legislative, medical and sociological precedent that would give the United States for the first time the primacy it ought to have in asking other countries to join with us once and for all in terminating this evil—an evil which has now become not merely a series of national problems, but a united world problem."

Messages for Modern Men

BY REV. FRANK B. McALLISTER

Exalt the Church

PRAISE of the church to readers of the AMERICAN MESSENGER may seem like bringing coals to Newcastle. Most of you are sympathetic with the purpose of the church and loyal to its traditions. Yet it sometimes appears that too much may not be taken for granted in this direction, even among Christian people. The church today is under fire in some quarters and is underrated in certain others. We are not speaking of those who are outside her fellowship and frankly hostile to her ideals. The wrath of such as these will eventually be overruled to the glory of God. The most serious wounds are dealt her in the house of her friends.

A leading evangelist of the present day, with an enormous following, is frequently moved to give the church sledge-hammer blows of criticism, and to chastise soundly the weak and inefficient ministers who serve it. The wonder is that the average "trail hitters" in these meetings can feel any impulse whatever to ally themselves with so defective and anemic an institution or to submit to guidance by its feeble leaders.

Too many ministers themselves, withal, are tongue-tied on the high theme of the glory of Zion. They preach on many important concerns, but seldom on the claims of the one divine institution on earth. It is widely assumed that Christianity is simply a matter of preserving a filial spirit toward God and therefore, needs no dogma, no form, and no institution to keep it alive. Men are called to work for the Kingdom of God in all places and in all ways and the very word, "church" is tabooed as smacking of a certain narrow ecclesiasticism. Needless to say, this is not true of the Roman Catholic communion in which the glory of the church is the first lesson branded into the consciousness of every child.

For one reason and another, many members of our Protestant churches are apathetic in their membership. They apparently hold the church to be one of a number of excellent institutions on the earth, but with no unique and wonderful mission and with no especial claim for them. The church represents merely one more worthy cause in the community to be supported. And this slothful habit of thought too often finds its way down among the sheep from shepherds who ought to know better. As Rev. Charles E. Jefferson, D.D., said in his Lyman Beecher lectures at Yale University: "When those who sit in the seats of the mighty speak after this fashion, it is not to be wondered at that men lower down begin to think of the church with a slackened interest and to speak of it with a diminished enthusiasm. The church has, to many Christians, become an object to be apologized for, and has ceased to be an institution to be sacrificed for and loved."

It behooves us, therefore, to study anew this ancient institution and to know its wonderful history since the day when the cloud received Jesus from the apostles' sight until now. We are privileged to realize how in all ages the church of Christ has helped the poor, restored the wayward, comforted the sorrowing, taught the ignorant, and healed the sick. We are invited to reflect how, for nineteen centuries, it has been almoner and friend to all humanity. We are bidden to call to mind how, above all else, it has preached to rich and poor alike that gospel of life which means a present and a future salvation. The story of the church, could one wholly know and write it, would be the most glorious in human annals. Subtracting the dross of error, of cowardice and of sloth from her history—since the church has ever been made up of human beings—there still remains enough pure gold of aspiration and achievement to convince the mind and to cheer the heart of every sincere churchman.

Good people today are sometimes dismayed because the church seems to be losing its hold on public attention. A host of organizations have taken over the work the church used to do. No longer is she the sole or chief fount of education, nor the foremost dispenser of charity. No longer, as formerly, does she undertake to control every department of human life. The church of mediaeval days could crown and uncrown kings, regulate the course of jurisprudence, establish current rates of interest, and, in general, direct the whole program of social progress.

It is not so now. These old doors of service have been shut and no man can open them. Yet no loss has come to the church through such diminution of her responsibility. Her great, unique door of opportunity is wide open in the present age and no man can shut it. In the words of a recent thoughtful writer: "The church's proper task, like her Lord's, is to hold up the ideals, furnish the motives and convictions, and provide the devoted men and women, who through the state or private companies or benevolent societies, shall render this social service. The church's function is to inspire, not to direct." The greatest and most pathetically needed service that can be rendered the present generation is to furnish it with religion; to introduce into all its thronging concerns the principles and faith of the Son of God. This is the work of the church.

Exalt the church, then! Be proud of your connection with this institution that reaches back in blessing across all the Christian centuries and that holds the richest promise for tomorrow. It is a high privilege to belong to the church, to feel oneself a member of this mighty and immortal host, to sing the songs of Zion with a sense of proprietorship and to join in her prayers as no alien in the Commonwealth of God. It is a sacred joy to realize one's kinship with "the glorious company of the apostles, the noble army of martyrs." What earthly honor can be given to men higher than that of standing in such a succession? May the great Head of the church forgive us that we esteem the honor so lightly and so often prove faithless to its high behests!

The zealous churchmanship of the men who made Old Testament history puts us to shame. When David would build a temple for Jehovah he planned the finest structure of the age, for "the house of the Lord must be exceeding magnificent, of fame and glory throughout all countries." Our church building need not be magnificent, but it should be the best we can afford; reflecting the wealth and commanding the respect of the community. A drab, ill-kept, and generally unattractive church building is a travesty on religion. The good Hebrew of old loved the spot where dwelt the glory of Jehovah. "I would rather be a doorkeeper," he said, "in the house of my God than to dwell in the tents of wickedness." "I was glad when they said unto me, 'Let us go unto the house of the Lord.'" It is the sort of enthusiasm we need today.

How can any one expect to worship our Father in the hereafter who will not worship Him now? What trick can death perform to change an unloving, irreverent man into one in tune with the Infinite? The church is the school of the spirit. An earthly tabernacle must claim our loyalty till we view the one not made with hands eternal in the heavens. Exalt the church, support it, attend it and pray for it, whether the house of the Lord means for you some stately cathedral, or the little white meeting house on the hill. To the worshipper of a right spirit the simplest service becomes a vehicle of praise, and the humblest conventicle none other than the house of God and the gate of heaven.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTION

GEORGE ERNEST MERRIAM

"NOW," THE TIME OF ACTION

BY

REV. GEORGE ERNEST MERRIAM

Minister of Calvinistic Congregational Church, Fitchburg, Massachusetts

DURING the last month of the year 1900 the various periodicals of the world were crammed with articles giving a review of the Nineteenth Century. The next month every magazine was replete with essays and dissertations presenting a pre-view or prophecy of the one hundred years upon which we were entering. Indeed, with every passing twelve-month crossing the outstretched tape of time in the never-ending race of existence, we exchange our mutual Happy New Year salutations, and Janus-like, gaze with equal intentness over the pathway so recently trodden and over that upon which we are about to enter.

Forefather's Day, in December, and the birth-days of Washington and of Lincoln in February, add their emphasis to the double lesson of the hour. We tell our youth what others have done, trusting thereby to foretell what they also will do or at least to influence them in the same direction.

All of which is good—as far as it goes. Optimism and idealism are thus born. You cannot study the years which have flown without thanksgiving, you cannot peer into the decades to come without hope. In large measure the past may properly become a mirror of the future. Yet there is a danger—namely that of forgetting the present.

So Paul thought at least. Writing to the Corinthians he asserts: "Behold, now is the acceptable time: behold, now is the day of salvation." Men needed the warning then. They need it today. Boston has recently been stirred as no city on earth has ever been stirred before, by the same cry from the lips of a modern evangelist, and in the months just ahead of us we devoutly pray that New York City may be moved to its very foundations by the same message. For it is not the man after all, and it is not the method—it is the message—the Pauline message—"Behold, now is the acceptable time: behold, now is the day of salvation." It has been the note of every true pulpit, years without number. It must needs be the clarion call of the pulpit today, if the Church is to enter into its own.

When Richard of the Lion Heart was imprisoned by his enemies in some out-of-the-way fortress, according to tradition Blondel, his musician, travelled far and wide in search of him. And everywhere he went Blondel played the favorite airs of his royal master. Beneath the walls of many a castle, or on the further side of the encircling moat, he stood and played and listened—without avail, but at last in a strange land in the heart of a dark forest and surrounded by high mountains he came to the unknown stronghold and, as soon as ever an echo could return, he heard from within the answering strain. Others indeed might count it an echo, but he knew the voice of Richard. Once the place of custody was known, the release was a matter of a few weeks or months at the most. So, every true herald of God repeats and reiterates this old time song of the Scriptures with the hope that somewhere, some time, some one—at least—will hear and respond. Oh, that souls imprisoned in self might listen—"Behold, now is the acceptable time: behold, now is the day of salvation."

Not the past then is the favored period of time. My father once remarked that he had "heard of an individual who could not look upon the new moon with any comfort, so great was his respect for the old one which was gone," but he added with a twinkle, "I doubt if such a person ever existed." Yet some would ever preach from the text, "Thus saith the Lord, stand ye in the ways and see and ask for the old paths, where is the good way and walk therein and ye shall find rest for your souls." Such people are apt to live in the days gone by. Memory serves for all. They see little good in the present. They have no hope for the future. They are hidebound, stubborn bigots—not healthy conservatives. They are marking time, and they would mark time on the crackling edge of the ice floe, on the crumbling brink of the precipice, yes, even in the hour of combat when the bugle sounds for an advance. They are automats, like an eight-day clock, wound up to go just so long, their every action in circles—moving without progressing. They are creatures of heredity, as much so as the North American Indians or the Mound Builders. They are shackled by habit, as too frequently has been true of the inhabitants of Spain, or as has been characteristic through past ages of the people of China.

All such are "behind the times." They need the word of a great thinker who says: "Traditions are not manacles to bind us, but a harness to wear in the forward movement." Tradition is experience—that is all—the experience of some one else. Such experience is limited in its value. It is of worth only as you weave it into the present.

What is the use of wishing for the water that has run by; of supposing, "If I could start over again," or of saying, "I would have done this had I lived then, in the good old days when one had a chance." Listen to Helen Hunt Jackson:

"Today is the day of battle,
The brunt is hard to bear;
Stand back! all ye who falter,—
Make room for those who dare!"

You must start where you are and as you are—ignorant, unskilled, lazy, sinful—but you need not remain where you are. The present is the result of the past, and the past must needs affect the present, but it need not control it. Cling to the good in your past, cut loose from its evil—and as for your forebears—hearken to this—a commencement epigram, "Let your ancestors be guide posts—not hitching posts."

Not the past and not the future is the gala day of the soul. Children delight in the days gone by. They are already agog when the story begins "Once upon a time." Why? Because it tells of something beyond their ken and out of their realm of knowledge. So the future is the fairy land of adults. It alone can bring to them that which is new, untried, alluring. And there, in the future, alas, is the habitation of too many—mere dreamers, not idealists aflame with a vision which must be realized. They, the dreamers, are guided by the will-o'-the-wisps, here and there through mazes and into labyrinths where there are no exit and no "open sesame." Fancy's most fantastic phenomena are to them far more than the patent facts of every-day life. They are constantly being misled by some strange illusion or some mirage, as of the City of Bright Promises. Indeed, they will point out to you what are, in their eyes, the well defined minarets and flashing domes of that Mecca of all futurists. To be sure, they mind not the scorching sun above nor the burning sands below and plod onward with ever new zeal till—just as they raise the hand and form the knuckles to strike on those far famed gates of brass—it all disappears, or perhaps reappears at an even greater distance than before. Yet they never faint, neither are they weary in the unending journey, for with them imagination is synonymous with intellect. Indeed, expectation overshadows reality. Such energy and ambition is misplaced and wasted. They should read Macaulay, who says, "I would rather have an acre of ground in Middlesex County than a principality in Utopia," and adds, "Better the slightest actual good than the most magnificent promises of impossibilities," or, as our grandparents would have put it, "Better a bird in the hand than two in the bush."

The future does feed ambition, it does inspire hope, it does encourage zeal. But we never quite overtake it. It is like the water which surrounded and came up to the very chin of Tantalus, yet when he stooped to quench his thirst, the waves receded, leaving his throat still parched and his very lips dry and burning.

It is of little avail for the child to say, "If I were a man"—; he isn't. It is of no use for you or for me to say, "If I were President—;" we are not. It isn't always wise to promise, "We will do so and so." Wait and see. Let the future inspire, let it guide, let it mould! But mark you—we may not cross its threshold, we may not enter its palace, though seemingly so close. It is a sealed book save to the prophet, and he tells us only its chapter headings. It is an unknown land except to the seer, and he only sketches its headlands and its mountain ridges. The future is indeed the promised land, flowing with milk and honey; but Canaan is beyond, the Jordan flows between and we must wait our forty years, or God's own season, before we can pass through the divided waters.

"Behold, now is the acceptable time; behold, now is the day of salvation." The past is gone forever, and above the door of its exit, like that "ominous bird of yore," sits indeed a raven with its croaking fatal, "Never more." As for the future, it will not be hastened by any word or wish of ours, nor have we any mortgage upon it when it comes.

The present is ours. And what is the present? A single moment. It is only a little nugget, but it is of pure gold. It is only a single gem, but it is a diamond without flaw, "of purest ray serene." It is only a perishable drop, but it is the elixir of life, to be spilled on the ground and wasted or to be quaffed with its pledge of eternal life. It is only a fleeting instant, but it is the gateway of opportunity if we will but enter in before it clangs—forever shut—in our very face. Only a moment—one at a time as needed, but how many myriad in sequence—impossible to differentiate between them, impossible to enumerate them as they pass.

In a novel, widely read a decade ago, we are told, "Anticipation, realization, recollection, thus the moment becomes almost synchronous with eternity. And the greatest of these is realization." Something achieved, accomplished! It may be the statue, lifelike and titanic, the masterpiece of genius to be heralded the world around, or only the hammer or mallet which some day the sculptor—or possibly the carpenter, Jesus-like—will use. It may be the immortal poem which will stir the hearts of those as yet unborn, or only the sum in addition, a problem simple indeed, but successfully solved by the growing lad. It may be the aspiration for a world unsaved and in the throes of bestial strife, or only (can we say only?) the prayer for self—a better self—a more unselfish self. Ah the thrill of work that is done or being done!

"Toiling, rejoicing, sorrowing,
Onward through life he goes,
Each morning sees some task begun,
Each evening sees its close.
Something attempted, something done,
Has earned a night's repose.

"Thanks, thanks to thee, my worthy friend,
For the lesson thou hast taught,
Thus at the flaming forge of life,
Our fortunes must be wrought:
Thus on the sounding anvil shaped
Each burning deed and thought."

Often the philosopher had been asked where he found his beautiful thoughts. "In my garden," was the invariable answer. And so his disciples came and knocked at the garden gate. Opened, what was their astonishment; so small and so barren, not a flower, or a shrub or even a piece of statuary. He saw their looks, he knew their thoughts, and smiled: "I know it is not very long, nor very wide, but oh, it is wondrous high." So is it with the moment. Circumscribed. To be sure—but oh! its reach! In a single second light travels nearly 200,000 miles or about eight times around the world. In a single second, thought goes down the ages and back, bringing you the historical fact you desired; it travels from the overburdened heart of sinful man to the responsive, forgiving heart of a gracious God; it lifts a man out of his Hell of despair into a Heaven, that is a haven of hope and of assurance.

The instant changes past tendencies, and controls future results; it gives birth to character—not, Minerva like, full grown and pauoplied in armor, but character, like an infant, destined to grow slowly but surely through subsequent moments, as the moments themselves grow into hours and years. In the twinkling of an eye the desultory volition springs up and changes the course of a day: or a governing purpose is formed—the choice of a trade or a profession; or a supreme choice is made—for the world or for God, for the self or for the Christ. Now we begin to understand Paul, who—forgetting the past and reaching forth to the future—maintained, "I press (the present tense) toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

There is an ancient proverb, "In every today walks a tomorrow." Caesar hesitated at the Rubicon, but when he crossed it the die was cast, the bridges behind him were burned, the history of Rome was already changed. This day can be such for you, far more than the first day of a New Year or of another century if you will but make it so.

"Forward, as warriors bold,
Forward, as men and kings,
The good to have and hold
And all that virtue brings.

"Forward, nor pause nor wait
For time to change nor tide.
The now is at the gate,
We can no longer bide."

How long may we put it off?" asked his disciples of the Rabbi Eliezer—referring to conversion. "Till one day before you die," was the instant answer. "But how shall we know when we are to die?" "Ah!" was the significant reply, "therefore—repent now!" Oh, the danger of procrastination—it is not only the thief of time, but of immortal souls. Said Horace, "Abridge your hopes in proportion to the shortness of the span of human life. Enjoy the present time and trust not too much what the morrow may bring forth. For even while we converse, the hours, as though envious of our pleasures, fleet away." You recognize at once the voice of Epicureanism, with its constant refrain, "Eat, drink and be merry, for to-morrow we die." Christianity prays, "Grant that I may have the will and the skill and the opportunity to serve God in two worlds and not merely in the one to come."

You cannot borrow the glittering garb of the future, nor walk down its broadening avenue. Nor may you return to your innocent childhood. The gates of destiny bar the one though permitting you to glimpse something of its cool shade and overhanging trees. And if you turn toward that earlier Eden you find your way blocked by a turnstile revolving in but one direction and with a golden chain—golden but nevertheless a chain—across the returning section, while within you see an angel with a flaming sword. Thus it is that this word of the Apostle Paul comes home with eternal force, and this is the gist thereof—you must start where you are and as you are, but, forget it not, you can start with Christ and for God.

"Trust no future, howe'er pleasant,
Let the dead Past bury its dead.
Act, act in the living Present,
Heart within and God o'erhead."

The Glory of the Vanquished

BY JAMES ELMER RUSSELL.

It is the glory of achievement and success which the world acclaims. Wealth, position, and power reward those who triumph over the material forces of the universe.

There are, however, rarer and nobler victories to which the world gives little heed—victories of the spirit, which are invisible to the unilluminated eye, but which require the highest sort of courage. Though generally unrecognized there are defeats which are more splendid than the most applauded triumphs. There are vanquished souls far more deserving of the laurel wreath than world's conquerors.

It is the worth of the vanquished which Mercié, the French Sculptor, tried to set forth in his immortal statue, "Gloria Victis." The inspiration to create this statue came to Mercié in 1871 at the close of the Franco-Prussian war, when France, unconquered in spirit, lay prostrate before the might of German arms.

The statue represents a young gladiator who has just received his death blow while facing his foe. As he falls, his broken sword still in his hand, the figure of victory with great outstretched wings swoops down and carries him upward in her arms."

This statue by Mercié was one of which the late Dr. Edward L. Trudeau, of Saranac Lake, the pioneer leader of the anti-tuberculosis crusade in America, was very fond. In his "Autobiography," Dr. Trudeau remarks, "The statue of Gloria Victis typifies many victories I have seen won in Saranac Lake by those whom I learned to love, the victory of the spirit over the body; the victories that demand acquiescence in worldly failure, and in the supreme sacrifice of life to itself as a part of their achievement; the victory of the Nazarene which ever speaks its great message to the ages. As typical of struggles with which I was familiar, long struggles in which even the gloom of death could not smother the triumphant note and which had taught me that the Spirit of God may dwell in a man—a precious message indeed—Mercié's statue was always my favorite statue."

Only a few can be conspicuous for outward success, but that finer inner victory, which Mercié's statue interprets, which many a one fighting a losing fight with tuberculosis, bravely and cheerfully has proved possible, and of which Dr. Trudeau himself was a splendid illustration, may be attained by every one. There is no defeat for those whose souls are unconquered.

"Speak, History—Who are life's victors?
Unroll thy long annals and say.
Are they those whom the world calls the victors,
Who won the success of the day?

The martyrs or Nero? The Spartans
Who fell at Thermopylae's tryst,
Or the Persians and Xerxes? His judges
Or Socrates, Pilate or Christ?"

Saved by a Thread

BY REV. C. A. S. DWIGHT, PH.D.

This world is a labyrinth, and what men supremely need is a principle of guidance which will direct their way finally out into the sunlight of the eternal world. The story is told of a venturesome explorer who impelled by a passion for historic research had the temerity to enter the dark catacombs of Rome without a guide. At the entrance he fastened one end of a thread, and taking the spool in one hand and a lamp in the other, he started forth into the gloomy depths. For a time his mind was engrossed with the memorials of Rome's former greatness, and the relics of its art. In his intense interest, becoming self-forgetful, he stumbled, fell, and his light was extinguished! Thinking he had lost his spool, and overcome by the awful horror of the place, he fainted. But when he revived he found the spool still in his hand, and, rousing himself with an effort, he followed the frail thread (which happily did not break), and after a while, seeing glimmerings of light, he dashed out into the open. He had been saved by a thread! Our situation in this labyrinthine world hardly seems at times more cheerful than was that of the daring explorer of the underworld of Rome. Gloom often surrounds us, depressing mementoes or suggestions of departed things greet the eye on every hand, tales of disaster are brought to us by the daily papers. How then shall we find our way along, how shall we support our courage? Only by holding fast to the guiding principles of God's Word, and by placing our hand in that of the Divine Saviour and Guide. At times the indices of the heavenly course may seem faint and uncertain, but still we must hold fast to the thread which, if unbroken, will lead us out at last into the fadeless light of eternity

PRINTED PREACHERS

At Ellis Island

Though the European War has greatly diminished the volume of immigration, there are still a considerable number of immigrants who arrive at the Port of New York. About forty vessels land their human freight every month at Ellis Island. The average number of immigrants each month is about 13,000.

To care for the spiritual interests of these strangers in a strange land the American Tract Society has long maintained a missionary colporter at Ellis Island, and its present representative is Mr. Charles Carol, who is familiar with several different languages, and is thus enabled to converse with the majority of the immigrants in their own tongue.

Mr. Carol distributes on the average a total of 10,000 tracts each month to the immigrants. These are printed in about a dozen different languages and they carry the message of Gospel truth and spiritual comfort to the immigrants as they stand on the threshold of their newly chosen home.

The picture which appears on this page shows us some Swedish immigrants at Ellis Island. The Scandinavian contingent which comes to our shores is one of the most desirable elements of our foreign immigration, and the evangelical message presented in the printed page usually meets with a warm welcome from those who come to us from Sweden, Norway and Denmark.

Among the Mexicans

Rev. A. H. Sutherland, one of the missionary colporters of the American Tract Society, has recently been engaged in distributing Christian literature in the Spanish language far down into the interior of Mexico. He gives a vivid and unusually interesting view of the situation in the following words:

"It is unnecessary to say that Mexico has a war on hand. All the world knows that. Nor is it an ordinary war, but an unusual one—the worst in Mexico's long, sad history of wars and calamities. It has been raging for six years, and at this writing seems to be renewing its activities and its atrocities. For a while after the entrance of the American 'punitive expedition,' it died down, and the prospects were more favorable than the recognized de facto government would get on its feet and accomplish something in the way of organization and restoration. But as soon as the American troops were commanded to go into camp and stop their active pursuit of Villa, this bandit who has been so often killed and buried, came to life and took the field again, and now appears to be having his own way.

"This situation makes living, traveling and doing business in that country very unhealthful for foreigners, especially for Americans. And yet many of our citizens will occasionally venture down there to look after what is left of their properties. It costs some of them their lives to do this. Others escape the extreme penalty of their temerity by hiding or fleeing to other parts or clearing out of the country, when real danger approaches too near. For the last few years comparatively few Americans have been found in Mexico, and these have been much interfered with in their affairs. During my last visit, for the three weeks I was on the

SWEDISH IMMIGRANTS AT ELLIS ISLAND

Mexican Central Railway from El Paso, Texas, to Mexico City, I met but two Americans and they were the two young women who are serving as Presbyterian missionaries in Aguas Calientes. In fact, all business in Mexico is in a deplorable state. Still in the midst of this awful cataclysm there are some facts that give hope for the future.

"There is a very definite, extensive and energetic effort being made by the Carranza government to establish schools, reconstruct the railroads, and to revive industries and business generally; also to restore municipal, state and federal government, with its courts, legislatures and executive officers.

"But so great has been the upheaval that in social and religious matters the people have been powerfully affected, and they are destined to become a different people from what they were. As usual, this process begins with the loss of faith in their old religion and ends with the rejection of all religion. This development is as much to be feared in Mexico today as it was in the French Revolution.

"There is only one remedy for this situation, and that is to give them the true religion. Two great agencies for this are the American Bible Society and the American Tract Society. The Christian Church is the purveyor of these two great institutions. They furnish the means for producing the literature that we workers in the Master's vineyard must take up and pass on and out to the people. This literature, Biblical and religious, will demolish both Romanism and infidelity. Mexico has been sorely oppressed by the Roman Catholic priesthood for four hundred years, and it is now beginning to be sorely pressed by atheism. Infidelity is permeating all classes of men, and many of them are settling down into a state of religious indifference.

"Some heroic work has been done in Mexico to save the situation. The books furnished by the American Tract Society supplant what is false in their old faith, and teach clearly and attractively the great and saving truths of the evangelical faith.

"During my late visit to a dozen of the principal cities of the interior of Mexico and a number of small towns, I found a greater desire to read than ever before and less fear of the interference of the priests. The people were hungry for something to read. They seized and read with avidity all that I could supply, either of tracts which were given them gratis, or of such books as I could sell to them cheap. They would have bought books worth a dollar in American money, but did not have the forty dollars of Mexican currency to pay for them, for at that time our American dollar was worth forty dollars of their money. At the present writing it is worth more than a hundred dollars of their very best paper money.

"However, better times are coming. They may not yet be in sight, but they are on the way. 'The Lord God omnipotent reigneth,' and this is our hope and it insures the final triumph of the truth and the right."

In and Around the City of Buffalo

Rev. Samuel Goddard, a devoted missionary colporter, thus describes his work in circulating the various publications of the American Tract Society:

"I have this month gone forth again both in the city of Buffalo, N. Y., and into the towns and villages for some forty-five miles around. I have called upon about 4,400 people and have circulated by sale and grant 165 books, 112 mottoes, 350 tracts, 150 cards and 420 papers.

"Calling one day upon a lady in the town of Bridgeburgh, Canada, I found her much concerned about her husband, who did not attend any church. She asked me to see him and also to pray for him. This I did and handed him one of our tracts entitled 'Buy Your Own Cherries.' After a time he seemed to be convinced of the truth of the Gospel, and I have reason to believe that he will now join his wife in attendance upon the house of prayer."

For West Africa

For many years the American Tract Society has been sending foreign cash appropriations for the production of Christian literature in West Africa, until now the aggregate of these remittances amounts to several thousands of dollars.

The last appropriation for the work in West Africa was forwarded to the Batanga Mission of the Presbyterian Board. This is acknowledged in a letter recently received from Rev. Frank D. P. Hickman, who writes from Benito, Spanish Guinea, West Africa, in part as follows:

"Upon my return to Africa from my furlough at home I was assigned to acknowledge the gift from the American Tract Society of one hundred dollars, but, owing to delays of one sort and another, I have not been able to do so until to-day.

"We do thank you most heartily for your gifts to our work, and we always try to apply them where they will do the most good.

"It is expected that your gift this year will be applied in the purchase of additional supplies for our Mission Press, most of which were confiscated during the progress of the present war in Africa.

"Again we thank you for your help in our efforts to get Christian literature into the hands of the people."

RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS

A Word to Our Readers

This department of our paper is maintained for the open discussion of any question concerning the religious life, the treatment of which may prove helpful and interesting to the general public.

We therefore urge our readers to direct such questions to the Editor of the AMERICAN MESSENGER, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York City. Only the initials of the writer will be given in connection with any letter that is printed.

The answers to the problems thus presented will be given by Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D., Pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian Church of New York City, and one of the contributing Editors to our paper.

The question presented for discussion this month and Dr. Work's reply are as follows:

DEAR SIR: I am a sincere believer in the Gospel of Christ. Yet I am strangely lacking in rest and peace. At times indeed I am filled with a spirit of unrest. I do not understand this, for as I read the Bible, God means His people to be at rest. Can you give me any help in my perplexity? Yours anxiously,
C. P. W.

DEAR FRIEND: I fear that there are not a few who are in this situation. There are some whose dispositions do not let them rest. They will not settle down and be at peace, even though God has given them a thousand promises in His Word to rest upon. They yield instead to their natural disposition to worry. Anxiety is their normal frame of mind, and they do not break away from it. Next to sin itself, the shackles of worry are the hardest to break. It is just because God knows how disposed we are to be restless and ill-at-ease that He has given us so many promises that deal with the rest that remaineth for His people. I do not know of a better thing to do than to sit down with one's Bible and make a list of such promises, and from day to day to read them for the sake of their healing power. Yes, God does mean His people to be at rest. He does not wish us to be the prey of carking care. He invites us to cast our care upon Him. To be a daily victim of world-fret, to be a mere creature of heats and colds, to be anxious all our days over a "thousand peering littlenesses"—all this is not of faith. God has something better in store for us.

It is well, however, to understand a little better what is meant by rest. Resting in the Lord is not basking in the Lord. I fear that some believers have an idea that God means to take our burdens clear away from us. They think that all they have to do is just to lay their burdens down at God's feet. This is not so easy, nor is it what God intends. "Every man shall bear his own burden." There are burdens that belong to us, that we never can dispense with. But God intends to relieve the pressure for us by sharing the burden with us. "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me and ye shall find rest unto your souls." The way to find rest therefore is not by throwing every burden off the soul—how impossible that is! That would be imposing upon God—that would be basking in God instead of resting in God. Rather the way to be at rest is to welcome the aid and companionship of Christ in drawing the load. He is our true yoke-fellow, and if we will but accept Him as such there is no burden that the soul has to carry that will not grow lighter. "Ye shall find rest unto your souls."

There is another thing to be remembered about rest. It means what it says—it means really to rest. But some of us do not do that at all. Even whilst we are trying to rest in the Lord, we are holding ourselves back. We do not let ourselves go. Rest in the Lord! Suppose we substitute another word—relax in the Lord. That is just our difficulty. A tired man goes away to the woods or the seashore to rest. His physician's last word is, "Now, just give up and take a real rest." Alas! he does not do it. He keeps holding himself in check. He never really lets go his grip upon himself. His cares and burdens still oppress him—he finds himself still trying to support himself. If he would but relax—let himself go absolutely! If he would but let himself fall away from the grip of self and all the burdens of self!

Have you never lain down on the bed to rest and found yourself trying to hold yourself up? What you needed was just to relax—to let yourself go. Now I cannot resist the conviction that our trouble about realizing the rest and peace of God is somewhat of this nature. We try to rest, but we hold ourselves up. There are some things that God expects us to do for ourselves. But there is one thing that He undertakes to do, and that is to furnish rest to His people. He alone can do this great thing. As for ourselves there is no rest in us. We are cumbered with care and with burden-bearing. The spirit of unrest is in us. But God is otherwise. He is all strength and grace and rest. There is no care, no anxiety, no unrest in God. His very Being is restful. His character is peaceful.

Now the Scripture bids us to rest in the Lord—relax yourself, let yourself go in the ocean of God's rest and peace.

I wonder, dear friend, if your trouble may not have been that you have been trying to hold yourself up, instead of relaxing in the Lord's promises. Faithfully yours,

EDGAR WHITAKER WORK.

A Supreme Example of Patriotism.

BY ELIZABETH D. PRESTON.

"This was the man God gave us when the hour
Proclaimed the dawn of liberty begun;
Who dared a deed, and died when it was done."

FEBRUARY is an exceptionally good month in which to teach,—or to learn, as the case may be—the meaning of patriotism. It contains the birthdays of Lincoln and Washington, in whose memory special programs are given in the public schools, and their annual repetition has probably impressed the deeds and sayings of these national heroes upon the mind of the average boy, making him ready to understand the moral lesson prepared for him:—the distinction between hero-worship and the proper reverence for brave deeds.

That all courageous, noble, self-sacrificing or uplifting acts need not to be accompanied by trumpet and drum, or even to involve physical prowess, is evidenced by the lives of some other February-born men. England, more than America, remembers the birthdays of Dickens, Darwin, and Lamb, in this mid-winter month. Our Daniel Boone and Horace Greeley, successful adventurers each in his way, were born in February.

Because this list can be extended to include more than one hundred names of well known people, February has been called the "birthday month," rivalling, if not preceding April, with its bold array of dates that mark the coming to earth of important personages. However, a man is not remembered because he was born at a certain time of the year; that is an event over which he has no control. His memory is enshrined in the hearts of his countrymen because, after he was born, he did something for the good of humanity, and even after we have read through the brave looking list of February-born men and women, we shall, probably, still continue to think of the month as pre-eminently belonging to George Washington.

There have been generals as great, statesmen as mighty, legislators as foresighted; but never has there been a man with a greater purity of purpose and a more sincere desire to spend every power of mind and body in the service of a just cause, without any regard to personal consequences. As a boy, Washington wrote in his copybook: "Labor to preserve in your bosom that lingering spark of heavenly fire which men call conscience." His subsequent life showed that he had incorporated into it that very principle.

To him, God was not a mere "something that maketh for righteousness"; He was a personal friend, a constant companion. In his inaugural address Washington spoke of the guiding hand of God in establishing and controlling the destiny of the colonies: "No people can be bound to acknowledge and adore the invisible hand which conducts the affairs of men more than the people of the United States." And again he said, "A man must be worse than an infidel who does not see the goodness of God, and has not gratitude enough to acknowledge it."

"Is this a Christian nation?" was a question raised during Washington's presidency. "I have never doubted it," was his reply, "or I would fear for its future." But let us ask the question again, "Is it a Christian nation?" Are we Christian citizens? We call ourselves such, but are we so, in fact? What are the duties of a Christian citizen? Dr. Robert S. McArthur once said that if it were in his power he would refuse the sacraments of the church to the man who declined to go to the ballot-box on election day. Evidently he thought that Christian citizenship demanded that each man should assume some responsibility in civic affairs. Loyalty to causes that are distinctly Christian,—such as the temperance question, for instance,—is a paramount duty of a Christian citizen; he cannot claim to belong to any political organization that sets aside the teachings of Jesus as antiquated or of no importance. There is a point where God's law must be obeyed even at the cost of what may seem to be an unpatriotic action.

Washington practiced what he preached. That in itself was no mean achievement. It was the habitual exercise of this high moral quality that lies at the basis of his greatness. To possess a worthy vision and never to lose sight of it; to determine not to deviate from the straight path of right living, and to carry out this determination, is a very great achievement, indeed. He was neither elated by prosperity, nor depressed by defeat. Repeatedly he expressed the belief that God was guiding the affairs of the nation, whose bright days might come only after storm and stress.

In the making of to-morrow the children of today will be important factors. The civilization of today is, in no inconsiderable degree what it is, because of the influence of Washington and Lincoln. Yet once they were, as far as human judgment could tell, children not superior to those of our own day. Let us teach the latter this sentence from Washington's Farewell Address: "Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports." If this be true, the mission of the Christian church to the nation is as clear as the sun at noonday.

The month of February, as stated in the beginning, is an exceptionally good time in which to teach, or to learn, what patriotism really means.

HIS VINEYARD AND OURS

"A Miracle of Christianity"

Some time ago the American Tract Society received a most interesting photograph from India, which is reproduced on this page. It was sent by Rev. A. C. Clayton, secretary of the Tamil Publication Committee of the Christian Literature Society for India, who writes concerning it:

"This photograph represents a miracle wrought by Christianity. It shows two blind Tamil women reading a Gospel in blind script. The Gospel they are using is in the Tamil language; for one of the 'blind alphabets' has been adapted to represent the sounds of the Tamil language, and these two blind women can read with the certainty and ease of those who are familiar with the ordinary written or printed characters.

"I call it 'a miracle of Christianity' because it was Christianity that inspired some one to produce the Tamil Gospels in blind script, it was Christianity that had compassion on such blind women as these, and it has been Christianity that has brought light and peace and hope into their darkened lives. When they go about and sit down by the roadside or in a Hindu house and are able to read, they are looked on as marvels.

"Few Tamil women can read, and for a blind woman to be able to read is beyond all ordinary Tamil ideas. You may be sure that they get a hearing, and as the book that they read is the Gospel, many, out of curiosity hear the Gospel who would not heed it otherwise."

Once a Gambler Now a Gospeler

"No missionary" writes a Christian worker in Guatemala, "can foretell from just what quarter the future preachers will come. It is quite certain that he would not have gone to the house of a man who had a cockpit and also ran a gambling joint.

"The Spirit of God knew that the man who had power in enticing others into evil ways could be of service in the kingdom, when once changed and made a new creature, so God has turned that shrewdness to good account. Now Flavio Argueta, who once went everywhere gambling, goes to some twenty towns every month preaching the Gospel of Christ. He who once approached men with a view to cheating them out of their money, now approaches them in order to share with them the Bread of Life.

"His ready wit and keen sense of humor that made him a favorite in the old life of sin, are now being used for the glory of God, for thereby he often saves the day and drives home a pointed truth with a jolly laugh and turns aside some bitter thrust at him or his message.

"We have often been with Flavio on our knees, or on mule back on long, hard journeys. We have nursed him back to life from death's door, when we have had him in our own home, before the Mission had a hospital. We have laughed together over our funny experiences in missionary work until our sides were almost split, and we have studied God's Word together, long and earnestly. We have seen him in all lights and shades, in joy and sorrow. We never cease to marvel over what a wonderful thing God did when he took the gambler away from his cockpit and cards and dice and made him a preacher. He is a living testimony to the grace of Christ and the regenerating power of the Holy Spirit of God. It is not any wonder that the man who has experienced such change and blessing in his own life, can present the Gospel with such conviction to others.

"We are constantly loading Flavio up with Christian literature, and as he goes about on trains or trails he is handing out Gospel tracts, so that he preaches not only in over twenty towns but all the way between them.

"We wish we could let you see Flavio and his work. We are sure that you would be stirred up to do more for the extension of the Gospel. There are yet hundreds of others like him, whom some one must catch and train. The harvest is great, but the laborers are few."

A Fiftieth Jubilee Celebration

A very impressive service was held recently in the Temple Hall Presbyterian Church in Chefoo, China, when the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the church was celebrated. Rev. Hunter Corbett, D.D., a veteran missionary, is the pastor of this church and he gives some interesting details concerning this occasion. He writes:

"The first convert here baptized was in 1865; one year later the number had nelius, believed with all their hearts and ordered their households accordingly. It has been our great joy to see many Christian homes established, the children trained for Jesus, the Sabbath observed and liberal contributions given every Sabbath.

"After more than a year's persistent effort to open a school for boys, renting a good building, employing a literary graduate for a teacher, and an offer to provide food, clothing, books, etc., free of cost, a school was opened in 1866 with three pupils. After two days two of the boys, frightened by the threats of their neighbors, never returned, leaving the one boy, now the father and grandfather of a large well-educated Christian family. It was years before prejudice and hatred gave way so as to strange to inhabitants of the United States.

However, there is one town in Brazil where all who borrow a fashion book must read the message of salvation. It is in the state of Rio where there resides a Christian family devoted to the spreading of the gospel. The people round about, while formerly Roman Catholics, are now altogether infidels. Tracts and invitations to gospel meetings are refused with ridicule, but the young women love to borrow the fashion book, which this family possesses.

Now the wife and mother have so arranged the fashion book that the gospel has the pre-eminence in it. On each page side by side with the beautiful patterns, are appropriate Scripture selections which the seeker after "La Moda" is obliged to read in order to find what she wants.

The plan is meeting with success, for the owner of the book is now constantly in receipt of requests for copies of the Bible. Indeed, now a few of the young women are now inquiring the way of life and seeking Him who is able to clothe their souls in "the beauty of holiness."

From a Japanese Point of View

Baron Sakatani, former Mayor of Tokyo, a banker, and one of Japan's most prominent business men, was in conference with officials of the World's Sunday School Association while in New York recently. The Baron has been traveling in Europe, and was in attendance upon the Paris Conference as a representative of his government. He spoke with great regret of the unbrotherly feeling which he had found in Europe as one of the natural results of the strife, and expressed his earnest hope that the World's Sunday School Convention to be held at Tokyo after the close of the European War might be thoroughly representative of all the nations of the world, and that it might promote a world-wide spirit of unity. Baron Sakatani is one of the committee which is promoting the Tokyo Convention, towards the arrangements for which eminent Japanese are making substantial contributions because of their vision of the great service which this convention will render to religious progress and in the development of personal character.

On a recent Sunday Baron Sakatani, together with Sikio Tsurumi, the Japanese Minister of Agriculture, and Kikozo Yabe, Minister of Finance, were the guests of Hon. John Wanamaker at luncheon in Philadelphia. There were also present Mr. French, President of the Chamber of Commerce, Mayor Smith of Philadelphia, and Dr. Geo. W. Bailey, former President of the World's Sunday School Association. Following the luncheon, the party visited Mr. Wanamaker's Sunday School, where the Mayor presented Baron Sakatani with the American flag and the flag of the city of Philadelphia. In return the Baron presented the flag of Japan.

In the course of his address before the Sunday School, the Baron said he believed that the great war now raging in Europe was caused by civilization putting too much weight upon the material side and forgetting the spiritual. "Japan has been making this mistake for the past sixty years," said the Baron, "but now leading Japanese are feeling the necessity of emphasizing the spiritual side." He expressed his opinion that the Sunday-school was the best means of filling up this gap, and leading the people to see the importance of moral training. "The thing which impresses me most about the Sunday-school work in America," said the Baron, "is that so many successful business men are giving so much of their time and energy to the building up of the Sunday-school, and so many workers are giving free service. This safeguards the future of America."

A BLIND TAMIL WOMAN READING A GOSPEL FOR THE BLIND.

increased to 20 members and the church was organized. One elder and one deacon was elected. The following year the Chefoo church was enrolled as one of the churches under the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in America. Up to date the session books contain the names of 1,902 members received and 472 children baptized. As the result of extensive and yearly itineration by missionaries connected with the Chefoo mission and Chinese evangelists 27 additional churches have been organized in various parts of the province.

"A few of the converts after a time, like the Laodiceans, became lukewarm and were unable to do efficient work. Others joined the church mainly to secure a large share of the 'leeks and onions,' and finally, like their ancestors, 'From that time many of His disciples went back and walked no more with Him.' The large majority, like Cor-secure pupils as we wished. Now there are probably 1,000 pupils studying daily, in the Chefoo mission schools, all paying tuition.

"The outcome of this first school has been that nearly one hundred continued study until they graduated from college. At present there are 13 ordained pastors, more than 50 evangelists, many school teachers, several doctors and a number of prominent business men, farmers and others who received their early training here."

Personal Work in Brazil

The young women of Brazil, we are told, are very fond of dress, a characteristic so different from anything we know in these northern climes as to awaken astonishment. A missionary writes that they are fonder of fashion books than the Bible, which sounds very

Notes upon the Topics Used
in Christian Endeavor
and Other Young People's Societies.

THE PRAYER MEETING

By
Rev. Henry Lewis
Ph.D.

FEBRUARY 4.

Visions and Tasks

(Christian Endeavor Decision Day).
Joel 2:28, 29. 2 Chron. 34:1-7.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Jan. 29. Soul-winning. Dan. 12:1-3.
T. Jan. 30. Spreading the Kingdom. I. Cor. 2:1-9.
W. Jan. 31. More givers. 2 Cor. 9:1-15.
T. Feb. 1. Deeper spiritual life. Eph. 3:13-21.
F. Feb. 2. Cleansing our cities. John. 2:13-25.
S. Feb. 3. Working for peace. Matt. 5:9.

The prophet Joel was a man of vision, and in his prophecy he has given us a beautiful picture of the result of the gift of the Spirit. He predicts that the sons and the daughters shall prophesy, the old men shall dream dreams, the young men shall see visions, and even upon the servants and the handmaids shall the Spirit be poured out.

Josiah was a fine illustration of the achievement of great tasks for God. In his early youth he devoted himself to the uprooting of idolatry, and throughout his whole reign he strove for the establishment of the worship of the true God.

On this Christian Endeavor Decision Day let us ask ourselves what visions should occupy our minds and what tasks call for our consecrated endeavors.

Exalted Visions

Young people should cherish the vision of duty. This is an easy-going age, and there is serious danger that the young men and the young women of our time will lose the sense of obligation and fail to hear the call of duty. But there never was a time in the world's history when there was a greater need for fidelity to duty. It is our duty to stand for the right at all costs, to uphold truth and righteousness in all the relations of life, and to maintain our allegiance to those great underlying principles of honor and purity, which are the foundation of both the family and the nation.

Young people should catch the vision of opportunity. The fields are ripe unto the harvest, and opening doors are beckoning on every side. The call for laborers is sounding everywhere. All that is needed is for the young men and the young women of our day to catch the vision and to choose the field of service to which they are willing to consecrate themselves.

We ought to keep ever before us the vision of victory. The cause of Christ is not a losing cause but a winning fight. The day of triumph shall surely dawn, when the Kingdom of God shall be established in all the earth, and the forces of evil shall be permanently vanquished. We must have faith, else we cannot enjoy this vision of victory, but to those who have put their trust in God there can be no question as to the final outcome of the battle for righteousness.

Finally, let us seek the vision of Christ. When we see Jesus only, then are we on the Mount of Transfiguration, and unto us shall be vouchsafed the vision of heavenly things. If we have the vision of Christ ever before us, no duty will be too arduous, no opportunity will be lost sight of, and the certainty of victory will be to us an ever-impelling incentive to deeper consecration.

Great Tasks Awaiting Us

On this Christian Endeavor Decision Day let us resolve upon a complete personal consecration. Let us give ourselves entirely to Christ and let us ask Him to use us for the accomplishment of the great tasks that are awaiting His disciples.

One great task that calls for loyal devotion is the task of civic reform. Our daily newspapers indicate the awful moral conditions that exist in many of our American cities and that call for heroic effort in order that our civic life may be purified from the taint of white slavery. In many quarters there are plain indications of political corruption and illegal practices, which if not eradicated will bring disgrace and disaster to our national life.

FEBRUARY 11.

Confession

Luke 19:1-10.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Feb. 5. Promise of pardon. Jer. 3:11-19.
T. Feb. 6. National confession. Neh. 1:1-11.
W. Feb. 7. The prodigal's confession. Luke 15:11-24.
T. Feb. 8. The shame of David. 2 Sam. 12:1-13.
F. Feb. 9. Mutual confession. Jas. 5:16.
S. Feb. 10. Confession too late. Matt. 27:1-10.

It is suggested that this topic be used for a consecration meeting. In any case it should lead us to a fresh dedication of ourselves to the service of the Master to whom Zacchæus made his confession of faith.

The story of Zacchæus is one of great interest and suggestiveness. His persistent endeavor to see Jesus and the Master's recognition of his zeal by a personal visit to his home led to a frank confession of his past shortcomings and a whole-souled dedication of himself to God. Thus does the Master always reward those who earnestly seek Him by the gift of full and free salvation.

Words and Deeds

Zacchæus showed by his actions as well as by his words that he was sincere in his purpose to serve and honor God.

It is an old but true saying that actions speak louder than words. But it is most desirable that both words and actions should be the harmonious expression of one and the same purpose.

Action is the outward expression of our thought. Our words should also furnish a true index of our thoughts. There are times when we should speak, times when we should act and times when we should both speak and act.

Words without action are often valueless. At times deeds without words are inexplicable. Normally, words and deeds should go together. The great value of the Gospel lies in the fact that they tell us what Jesus both did and taught.

There is nothing so eloquent as the testimony of a consecrated life. As Mr. Cleland B. McAfee has well said, "The weightiest argument for Christ and the weightiest argument against Christ are the same argument—Christians."

To attempt to be a Christian in secret is to rob the Christian life of its strongest appeal—and to lose all the eloquence of a consecrated life.

The Value of a Badge

The value of a badge lies in the fact that the emblem thus worn is an open confession of allegiance. It may not always be necessary or desirable to wear a badge of our religion, but there should always be the same readiness to acknowledge our allegiance that is manifested by those who wear some tangible insignia.

Many Christian Endeavorers wear the C. E. pin and often this proves a real help both to the wearers and to others, for it is an open confession of loyalty to the great Christian Endeavor principles.

The Dynamics of Christianity

Open confession of Christ has been the great moving power of Christianity from the earliest times until now.

The great source of power in the primitive Christian Church lay in the willingness of the early disciples to make an open confession of their faith in Christ. It was their persistence in making their confession despite the most bitter persecution that constituted the inherent strength of the Apostolic Church. The blood of the martyrs was the seed of the Church, and by their open confession these Christians of the first century laid an impregnable foundation for the Church of Christ.

The Danger of Delay

There is a grave peril in delaying our confession of Christ. We know not what the span of life allotted to us may be, and if we put off the declaration of our allegiance too long, we may never have the opportunity of enrolling ourselves under the banner of the Cross.

FEBRUARY 18.

Using What We Have

Acts 3:1-10.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Feb. 12. The neglected talent. Matt. 25:24-30.
T. Feb. 13. Using time. Eph. 5:14-17.
W. Feb. 14. Using money. Acts 2:41-47.
T. Feb. 15. Using prayer. Ex. 32:30-35.
F. Feb. 16. Using service. Amos 7:14-17.
S. Feb. 17. Using love. Jas. 2:1-9.

The Scripture portion upon which our topic is based is the familiar story of the healing of the lame man at the Beautiful Gate of the Temple. When the lame man asked for alms, Peter said to him, "Silver and gold have I none; but what I have that give I thee." And then he spoke the words of power which through faith resulted in the healing of the sufferer.

What Have We

The first practical question that arises in connection with this topic is "What have we?" To this question there will be many different answers, for we are endowed with varying gifts.

There are those who, unlike Peter and John, are endowed with plenty of worldly goods. All such are in duty bound to use their wealth for the glory of God and the uplift of humanity. We are simply stewards, and whatever possessions we have are to be viewed as held in trust for God. When we give to God we are simply returning to Him what really belongs to Him. Whether we have much or little of this world's goods, we ought to use all our means so as to bless others and honor God.

There are comparatively few who are dowered with large means. Most of us are in the position of Peter and John, and we must therefore ask what other gifts we have that we may use for helping forward the Kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

There are some who have what we call genius. This should be used as a gift from God, not for self-aggrandizement but for the blessing of humanity.

Some have many talents and others but one, but whether our talents be few or many, we are under moral obligation to use all our talents so as to promote the welfare of mankind and to hasten the progress of the Kingdom.

Influence is a possession that we all have in common. It is true that some have a larger influence than others, but there is no one who is utterly destitute of this power. We cannot over-emphasize the importance of rightly using whatever influence we possess. Personal influence is a subtle and mysterious power, but it is a most vital force in the affairs of this world. Let us be careful not to disparage this potent asset of personality but let us use it to the utmost for Christ and the Church.

Giving Freely

Peter and John gave freely of that which they had, and thus they brought health and gladness not only into the life of the lame man but into the hearts and lives of countless others who came within the reach of their influence.

So let us give freely of whatever we have, and results may follow that will make the world bless us for what we have done. It is said that the late George Müller began his work for orphans with simply an extra bed in his own room. From this humble beginning came the great institution which has sheltered many thousands of homeless waifs.

Reaping Bountifully

The farmer who does not sow liberally reaps but a poor harvest. "Generous sowing pays—and also generous giving."

Tycho Brahe, the famous Danish astronomer, we are told, began to study astronomy, without a single instrument. He practically invented most of the instruments that he used, and yet with only this crude equipment he made great discoveries. This illustrates the reward of effort.

The unused limb atrophies. So the human soul that fails to exercise its God-given powers for the blessing of others is in danger of spiritual death.

FEBRUARY 25.

The Home Mission Boards of My Denomination: What They Are and What They Do

Isaiah 35:1-10.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Feb. 19. The first board. Acts 6:1-7.
T. Feb. 20. A board of prophets. Acts 13:1-12.
W. Feb. 21. Supporting missionaries. Phil. 4:9-23.
T. Feb. 22. Spreading the gospel. I. Thess. 1:1-10.
F. Feb. 23. Support weak churches. Acts 16:1-5.
S. Feb. 24. A bond of union. Ps. 133:1-3.

The Home Mission Boards are as numerous as the denominations and in addition there are many other interdenominational organizations that are doing home missionary work.

Over sixty different bodies report to the Home Missions Council, and this does not exhaust the list of societies that are engaged in some form of home missionary effort.

The important thing, however, for each Christian Endeavorer is to become acquainted with the home mission boards of his or her own denomination and then to learn what interdenominational societies are aiding their work.

Various Lines of Effort

Home missionary work consists primarily in the proclamation of the Gospel message by missionary workers in the home-land. This may be called the evangelistic phase of home missions, and it is still the first and the most important line of service that is rendered by home missionary agencies.

The scope of home missionary work, however, has been broadened with the passing of the years, and now it includes many other lines of effort besides that of evangelization.

One very important branch of home missions is the educational work carried on under home missionary auspices. This includes the establishment of special schools for the negroes, the mountain whites and other needy classes of our population.

It also includes the nurture and development of higher institutions of learning which are founded upon an evangelical basis, and which have as their aim the education of young men and young women in such a way as to lead them to become Christian citizens. This accounts for the numerous denominational academies and colleges which have sprung up as one of the direct results of home missionary work.

Another line of effort that has grown out of home missions is that of church building. The gathering together of congregations has made necessary some provision for housing the churches thus formed, and so there have sprung up the various denominational church building societies.

Still another line of home missionary service is seen in the great denominational hospitals which are found in various cities of our land, and which make their appeal for support on the basis that they are doing real home missionary work.

City mission work is a very vital and important department of home missions. The cities have become the great centers of population, and the evangelization of those who live within city limits is just as essential as the evangelization of those who live on the frontier.

An Essential Line of Service

Foreign missions have a fascination for many people who quite fail to see the importance of home missions. Yet there is a great deal of romance about home missions, if only we look deeply enough into the matter. But the main fact is that whether clothed with romantic surroundings or not, the home missionary enterprise is absolutely essential to the evangelization and Christianization of our own land. And to a large extent the evangelization of the whole world depends upon the winning of our country for Christ.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS

The Recipe for Joy

BY DAISY D. STEPHENSON.

IT was undoubtedly a rainy day. The sky had mislaid its blue coat, and in a gray ulster was weeping dismally.

After a whole morning of it, even the most cheerful little folks grow restless unless their busy hands find new employment.

The housework had lent wings to the forenoon. Even the Saturday baking was done. Molly had flitted about like an industrious fairy, armed with dusting pan and cloth.

She had played with the baby, making him gurgle gleefully and reach out chubby hands, as she paraded his woolly dog back and forth, or made a merry faced Kewpie perform gymnastics.

Mother smiled and hummed a happy tune, as she took the fine brown loaves from the oven.

"You may have a heel of this warm, crusty loaf for your lunch, Molly, my dear. Yes, and a toe, too, if you are real hungry—with plenty of butter and grape jelly on it. All my tasks seem light as this bread today, little daughter. How glad I am that it didn't rain on a school day! Come here! I'm just through icing the layer cake!"

There was no second hint necessary. Molly dimpled as she tip-toed away from the sleeping baby, nestled among the cushions like a warm pink rosebud.

Joyfully the spoon scraped the icing pan. It was delicious chocolate, and not a speck of it was missed. The pan looked almost clean when Molly laid down the spoon with a sigh of satisfaction.

When mother finished her tasks and went to lie down for a brief rest (snatched chiefly when little Son was in the Lullaby Lady's care) Molly felt a bit lost. She had forgotten to bring home a library book, and she knew all her story books from cover to cover. She didn't feel like sitting still anyway!

"Pitter, patter! Drip—drip!" sang the raindrops. "We mean to keep right on falling and rolling and singing—maybe all night!"

Molly heard them as they slid merrily down the window pane.

"I know what I'll do until supper time!" she thought. "I'll ask mother if I may run over to Mabel's. She got half a dozen new books for her birthday, and a lot of new games."

Molly turned swiftly to the door, her eyes happy as May violets. Then a sudden picture stayed her steps. Into her vision flashed a pale, girlish face with wistful eyes and a pathetic, small pair of crutches ever near at hand.

Jean Allen spent most of her days alone at the front window, where a red geranium did its bravest to add cheer to the room. The crippled child hungrily watched other children playing and romping on a vacant lot near by or going on their way to school.

Molly always waved her hand to Jean as she ran by. Once Jean had opened the window and wistfully asked bright-faced Molly to come in. Mrs. Allen was usually out working until late afternoon every day.

Molly had been on her way to her music lesson that day, but she had promised to come very soon.

Now her cheeks flushed hotly, as she admitted honestly to herself that because she would rather go to see girls who had nice books and plenty of things to amuse them, in short girls who didn't need her, she had failed to fulfill her promise to Jean.

"I'll go now!" declared Molly. "She'll need me today. It's so gloomy. And now I remember that her mother is helping Mabel's mother with house-cleaning today. Mother!" she trilled softly, mindful of the baby.

"May I splash out to see Jean Allen, and take her a story book or two?"

"Yes, do," answered mother. "And select a glass of fresh currant jelly from the fruit closet, dear. Mrs. Allen can't have much time to put up fruit."

Jean's somber, weary eyes shone starry bright, and the droop of her lips curved into a glad smile as Molly appeared, dripping and laughing—a sunbeam disguised in a raincoat.

"How did you guess I was so lonesome?" asked the lonely girl. "I—I cried a little at lunch," she confessed. "Only three tears, though!" she added bravely.

"Oh, oh! Jelly! And story books! Molly, you're a good fairy. Let me see if there aren't wings folded under your raincoat!"

Molly winked away a happy tear that slipped away saying to herself, "Now aren't you glad you came?"

"Here's Emmy Lou," chattered Jean, smiling and eager. "My Sunday School teacher gave it to me for my birthday, and I believe I know it by heart. Have you read it?"

"No, but I'd love to," said Molly, as she scanned its pages.

"Hello, girls!" called Mrs. Allen's cheery voice from the doorway.

"Oh, mother!" Jean was all aglow. "Look! Molly brought us the finest jelly, and—please, if you're not too tired, may we have biscuits for supper?"

"Course I'm not tired!" declared her mother, who had no such word as complain in her dictionary. "Molly, do thank your dear mother for this treat. And," here she bent to kiss the sweet face, in its rubber hood. "Come again—won't you? Jean looks like a different girl this minute! You're a real little rain-dear, Molly!"

Molly sped home in the rain drenched dusk, and rushed happily into her mother's arms.

"The very sunniest, brightest day of the week!" she declared.

"Of course," nodded her mother, who always understood.

She stroked Molly's curls with a tender hand.

"You have found for yourself, my dear, the most reliable recipe for Joy in the whole book of Daily Living," she said. And she added softly, "There is no real happiness in simply having or getting, but only in giving."

day; I am sure it would do them good to get a pretty valentine, unexpectedly—and grown-ups too, for that matter."

"It is an inspiration—nothing less," said Lou, admiringly. "No one else has such lovely thoughts as you, Nora. Let us see about it at once."

In a few moments the table was covered with the pretty Valentines, bright with flowers and birds, filled with greetings and loving thoughts.

"Let's send them by mail," suggested Louise. "It's such fun to get things in the mail."

"But we don't know the names," objected Nora.

"I'm a goose! Well, then, we'll just have to take them to Miss Forbes and ask her to distribute them as she thinks best."

Nora agreed, and the plan worked beautifully. On the eve of Valentine's Day, the two girls, carrying a big box of envelopes, rang the bell at the hospital, and asked to see the matron.

Miss Forbes beamed kindly on her two young visitors when they explained their errand, and promised to deliver the Valentines at mail time the next morning, without fail.

"You don't know," she said, "what pleasure you will give to these dear little sick ones, who are so patient under their sufferings; and some of the older ones, too, will appreciate being remembered—that means a great deal, you know."

"I hope there are enough to go round. Don't tell them where they came from, please," begged Nora, and the girls scurried away in the dusk.

On Valentine's Day the hospital wards seemed to have suddenly blossomed out with birds and flowers. On every cot lay a lovely valentine, and thin fingers lifted them eagerly, while dim eyes brightened with the joy of being remembered.

"Look," said a little pale-faced, lame girl, holding up her treasure for the nurse to see. "Only see what somebody sent me—all those lovely roses, and 'When this you see, remember me.' I wonder who sent it? An angel, I guess. I'm going to get well, now I know somebody cares about me."

"Of course somebody cares," returned the nurse, stooping to kiss the little pale face tenderly.

In another ward, a man lay helpless and despairing, wondering if there were any use in keeping up the losing fight, when there was no one to care whether he lived or died. All at once he noticed on his bed a big square white envelope. A letter? No, there was no one to write to him. There was some mistake, perhaps. Indifferently he opened the envelope, when out fell a beautiful affair of lace paper, birds and flowers, with good wishes and valentine greetings tucked in among the blossoms.

Greetings—to him! Kind wishes—someone had thought enough of him to send them. The thought was like a tonic. He put the valentine aside, muttering "Nonsense!" but again and again his hand sought the envelope, and holding the token of somebody's kindness and good will, his heart gathered courage to face the battle of life anew.

The matron kept her secret well, and no one knew where the Valentines came from; but many times during that day, as she noted the happiness they brought, she said to herself:

"Bless their dear hearts, if they could only see the good they have done. Why do not more girls think of these little kindnesses?"

And Nora and Louise, enjoying the new Valentines which the day had brought, were planning to pass them on again next year, letting them go forth like bright-winged birds and fragrant flowers, on their mission of love and kindness.

ON HORSEBACK

"Take it right home with you!" urged Jean, generously sharing her chief treasure. "See what I've been doing! Mother bought me a crochet needle and this lovely pink cotton, and I'm going to keep my fingers flying and make some lovely handkerchiefs. Miss Thorne, my Sunday School teacher you know, said she would show me a lot of pretty stitches, so I can make lace—and maybe sell it and make some money!" Jean glowed with pride.

"Oh, do show me that pretty edge!" begged Molly. "I've never thought I'd like to crochet, but seeing you do it makes me want to learn." Jean's slender fingers were flying now.

The time fluttered by on butterfly wings.

"Oh, can it be five o'clock? I must hurry!" cried Molly as the clock tinkled briskly, then went on about its usual business of ticking away the minutes.

"I'll wrap Emmy Lou up, so she won't get cold or damp," promised Molly, slipping into coat and rubbers.

"I don't know how to thank you for coming today," Jean's voice was shaky. "Cause just saying it isn't enough!"

The Mission of the Valentines

BY J. L. GLOVER

"WHAT do you do with your Valentines?" asked Nora.

"Why, nothing; just keep them—the pretty ones, that is. The comics I burn up. I don't get many of them—horrid things," replied Lou, with a disdainful sniff.

"No, I should think not. But what do you do with the pretty ones?"

"Oh, I just put them away; there's nothing else to do with them, is there? I like to look over them now and then, and think who sent them to me. I have a drawer full of them. But why all this curiosity about my Valentines?" questioned Lou.

"Because I have an idea," returned Nora. "I have a good many Valentines, too, and the other day it struck me what a pity it was that such pretty things should be doing nobody any good. And then it occurred to me that they might do double duty. They gave me pleasure when they came to me; why couldn't I pass on the pleasure, by sending them on this Valentine's Day to the hospital. Any little thing helps to brighten a sick child's

Our Fireside

Who Built the Handsome Stone Church?

By Grace Boteler Sanders

TO whom shall the credit be given for the handsome stone church, the crowds of interested old folks and enthusiastic young people and the many Christian activities which are the talk of the country in a certain section of our land?

"You will hear many answers to this question in the neighborhood," declared the young man who told me the story of this enterprise. "Some praise the local preacher and give him the credit. Others claim the traveling evangelist did it all. The young folks say that we would still be worshipping in the old mission chapel had it not been for the organized Sunday School class. A few go farther back and tell of the faithful Sunday School Superintendent who drove six miles every Sunday through rain or shine that he might be always at his post, although but a baker's dozen of pupils passed through the chapel door.

"We do know that if he had not persisted, the 'Loyal Daughters' would not have been organized. The Superintendent selected for teacher of that new class a consecrated, tactful woman whom all the youngsters liked and gave her four girls—all we had—for her pupils. That I say was the beginning. One of these girls was Marguerite, the secretary of the school; another was the pianist, the third was the treasurer, and the fourth was just an ordinary High School girl with a pug nose—a nose for news and a bewitching dimple and a splendid disposition; altogether she was the merriest and most taking little piece imaginable.

"These four girls organized their class and chose the southeast corner of the chapel—we had no class rooms—for their stamping ground. They immediately arranged for their first meeting which was to be held at the home of Mrs. Simpson, their teacher. Each girl was to bring one guest.

"The High School girl with the pug nose and charming dimple brought a big, awkward, stuttering, redheaded boy, named Chester, who was the laughing stock of the whole school. His enormous hands and feet were in the road of every one, their owner included. His fellow pupils laughed at him because that was the only way to gloss over an evil which could not be disposed of. One day at High School when his feet were in the aisle—there wasn't room under his desk—Chester tripped the Professor. Every one laughed except Chester and the teacher. Chester tried to apologize and stuttered worse than usual, but that didn't prevent a summons to the Principal's office, where he was warned to be careful about repeating the operation.

"The High School girl knew all these things, but she knew something else—namely, that Chester lived on a farm. When he once went in search of a turkey hen which had stolen her nest or in pursuit of a rabbit or a mad steer, he never stopped until he corralled whatever he went after. She considered these were good qualifications for a class builder. Hence, the reason for invitation number one.

"Marguerite, the secretary, was a modest little girl with the tiniest hands and feet, a demure rosebud mouth and the most innocent baby blue eyes. The Superintendent said she kept the neatest book which he had ever seen; every pupil, offering and visitor lined up, totaled and tucked into the proper niche. She invited Dick, a boy whose parents went picnicking and fishing oftener on Sunday than they went to church. Dick went to all the hops and card parties and picnics and was quite a popular young man. He laughed a little when Marguerite asked him to go to the Sunday School party. But since he was very much in love with Marguerite, the fact that she asked it was enough, so he appeared on time with his violin just as she had requested.

"The pianist's mother was a milliner who had hired as trimmer a girl who had been raised a Roman Catholic. Laura naively confessed that she hadn't attended mass since she went with her mother who had been dead for twenty years. She worked hard all day and had no time for social functions, even if she had been invited. There was nothing for her to attend evenings so she accepted the invitation to come to the weekly meeting of the class because she was glad to go anywhere just for a change.

"The treasurer brought Jennie, the blind girl, who saw the flowers and the books and the pictures with the tips of her sensitive fingers and enjoyed herself as well as any girl with two good eyes. Jennie also amused others. She told entertaining stories and sang alto and she set the pace by signing her name first to the class pledge. When Dick and Chester signed too, the class name had to be changed. From that night it was called 'The Loyal Sons and Daughters.'

"You would have been surprised if you had seen how interested they were immediately. They began to talk of efficiency, and class contests and enrollment meetings and what they could do. Growth was the first idea, and by the time the refreshments were disposed of, the new class had a half a dozen committees. They decided definitely that they would hold an exchange as the first trial, to get cash with which to fill their treasury. For of what use was a treasury without money to treasure?

"Coalton wasn't a large town, but it was surrounded by many wealthy farmers and it had no churches. So when the High School girl with the pug nose and charming dimple and Chester, who forgot to stutter in his excitement, started out as solicitors, they found everything smooth sailing. When the day for the exchange arrived, hosts of delicious pies fairly rolled down hill like so many cart-wheels.

"It chanced—so said unbelievers, but The Loyal Sons and Daughters declared it was an act of Providence—that a trainload of people on the way to a big convention, were detained at Coalton for a whole day because of a wreck farther down the line. There were no hotels. The train-wrecked people soon found that they were hungrier than they had ever been in all their lives. But how could they eat without food?

"The Loyal Sons and Daughters had loads of refreshments at their exchange, which the old folks had declared would be thrown away for the want of a buyer. But the High School girl with a nose for news sensed the situation and she sent Chester flying for his mother's big coffee boiler which she had used on thrashing days. After consultation, Mrs. Simpson sent for her twelve foot table and all her second-best dishes and pots and pans.

"The milliner, who had a colored woman to help on washing and ironing days, suggested that the class get Dinah to wash dishes and help with the dinner. They did this. They held a hurried committee meeting, and so, because of efficiency and an organized class, the ravenous train-wrecked people were surprised a little later by a smiling boy in white cap and blouse—it was Dick—who announced that dinner would be served at the headquarters of The Loyal Sons and Daughters.

"You should have seen the people coming! The boys and girls made splendid waiters, although Chester did spill a cup of coffee down a fat man's back, but there was no serious damage done. The visitors, whose appetites had been whetted by a long fast, fresh air and plenty of exercise, declared this the best dinner they ever tasted and when the hundred travelers rose from the table, they were glad to put one hundred fifty-cent pieces or their equivalent into Dick's money box.

"After the visitors had disappeared over the same hill down which the pies came rolling that morning, the High School girl grabbed that money box and shook it and laughed until all the others laughed too, and then she cried: "Who says that God don't help those who help themselves?" They had fifty dollars and they were hilarious, but after a while they looked over the deserted table and proceeded to take stock for every one of those men, women and children who had said they would be back for supper and many of whom had ordered lunches, too. They soon found that there wasn't enough food on hand to feed a dozen healthy sparrows.

"What could they do but send the High School girl and Chester out to state the case and beg the people to furnish more food? Some folks said they were too busy and others declared that they were tired, but when the mothers learned the amount that the young folks had made from that dinner, they caught the spirit of the occasion and by the time six o'clock came, there was food enough to feed the army of train-wrecked travellers.

"It was late when the tired young folks watched the train depart. But they rejoiced in the possession of a money box which contained one hundred and twenty-five dollars. Oh, but what a stir this news caused in the little village! Every woman was going to do something toward a new church building immediately. But the men laughed and said: 'This never happened before and maybe it never will again. So gradually they forgot, but the Loyals did not. At their next class meeting they initiated four new members. Chester had got on their track and with the same persistence which he used when following a jumping steer, he had kept after them until he hauled them in.

"They had a splendid time at the meeting. The treasurer announced that the hundred and twenty-five dol-

"The Coming of the Lord Draweth Nigh"

The Scriptures Examined on the Length of the Times of the Gentiles, When They Began Definitely Established. When they will close demonstrated, subject to uninspired History and Chronology.

The Rapture and the Revelation demonstrated to occur at the feast of trumpets, which is the Jewish New Year's Day.

The Year-Day Principle God Given.

The Prophecy of the Seventy Weeks proved to be a Year-Day period.

Light on these questions promised at "the time of the end." 64 Pages, Fifth Edition. Enlarged with Appendices and Extracts from letters.

75th Thousand. Price: Postage Paid, 5c each; 30c doz.; $2 per hundred.

This Pamphlet is Unique in its teachings, showing the proximity of the Coming of the Lord.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

"The 'Soon Coming of the Lord Draweth Nigh' has interested me much. Two features stand prominently out. One is the clearness with which the facts of the Times of the Gentiles, etc., are written. The other is the Christ-like spirit reflected throughout.

"I have received light on the times of the Gentiles in this pamphlet that I never before had, although I have spent hours trying to find it for myself, and I cannot overestimate my gratitude for the privilege to study your treatment so remarkable and clear—of this much written—about subject."

"I found the booklet worthy of deep study and wish further to investigate and prove it. It has answered already several questions for me that have both puzzled and fascinated me for years. I am one of the old-fashioned Christians that believe in the Bible from Genesis to Revelation as the revealed word of God."

"I have read your 'The Coming of the Lord Draweth Nigh,' and am of the opinion that it must have been written under inspiration."

"I have read over and over again 'The Coming of The Lord Draweth Nigh.' To say that I have been deeply interested is putting it mildly. Who are you? How were you led to the study of the subject? I hope you are correct, that God has used you to reveal His truth."

"Many times I have purposed to write and tell you how much I thank you for sending me your booklet 'The Coming of The Lord Draweth Nigh.' I have read, re-read and talked with others over its contents. The logic of your conclusion concerning the typical significance of The Feast of Trumpets is to me unanswerable."

"You certainly have the Truth arrayed in such a manner that one is compelled to stop and give it careful attention and consideration. To me it is convincing that the Lord's coming is very near at hand, and my prayer is, Even so come, Lord Jesus."

"Enclosed find 50 cents for 20 copies of 'The Coming of The Lord Draweth Nigh.' The world is much in need of just such a focusing of truth as your pamphlet brings to bear on the present world conditions. The end surely is drawing nigh."

"Enclosed you will find 60 cents for which please send to my address two dozen of your books entitled 'The Coming of The Lord Draweth Nigh.' I have just read it and I want my people to read it also, so I will distribute this number among them. So far as I am able to understand I like your treatment of the subject better than any I have examined."

"Seems to me this is getting pretty close to the truth and am glad I have had a chance to read it."

"I have carefully read one of those sent me and believe your exposition is unanswerable and that my blessed Lord is coming quickly to take me home to glory."

"The dozen you sent me I have given away and every one seems so interested. I believe God has revealed things to you in a wonderful way. Praise the Lord."

"A dear sister, Mrs. H., is delighted with it. She is very deaf, so put in a good time with the Word and the pamphlet, and is sure the Lord is coming at His own appointed time. The more she reads the pamphlet the sweeter and clearer it gets, My Soul says Amen."

"I like your pamphlet very much—like its reasonableness for one thing. It is like a wonder. The growing interest one finds in these things. Also it is a blessed experience to one when the light begins to come to him. I found it so, and I read of similar experiences. It seems to me that you are doing a good work, and I rejoice in the understanding given you."

"Your presentation is very clear and Scriptural. The best I have seen. I want some to hand to friends."

"Surely the Lord is with you in this work, a fact that further persuades me that the time of the end is near in view of the fact that we have His promise of increased knowledge during the latter days."

"Have just finished reading your pamphlet on 'The Times of the Gentiles.' I just stumbled on to your advertisement by chance in an old 'Herald and Presbyter' of a neighbor's. I wouldn't have missed it for anything and I feel like criticizing you for not advertising more extensively—Begging your pardon."

ADDRESS C. J. BAKER, 621 WYANDOTTE STREET, KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI, U. S. A.

There has been No Increase
In the price of
Grape-Nuts
Nor Any Decrease
In the Size of Package
Or Quality
Of the Food

lars were so lonely, that they intended to break out of the strong box and be forever lost to the class, if they were not given company.

"But what can we do?" demanded the worried Loyals.

"Dick spoke. Oh, how eager was his voice. There's nothing to hinder us from giving an entertainment," he said. "Folks are always grumbling, 'cause there's nothing to go to. We'll give 'em something. Mary's a graduate of the Conservatory of Music. Marguerite can sing. I can play the violin a little. Chester's been studying the bass viol. Muggins—he nodded at the High School girl—can recite. Let's practice and see what we can do."

"It's the very thing, old pard. We'll begin tonight," shouted Chester. "We'll begin tonight."

"We advertised our entertainment well. On the night of the performance Laura's uncle, who is a humorist, arrived and offered to help us out. At half-past seven the auditorium of the township house was packed, and Dick had to rig up a sign: 'Standing room only,' and hang it out. The performance went off fine, and when they were all gone and Dick and the treasurer and I were counting the money, somebody laid a bill on top of Dick's pile.

"Cut it out," he growled. He thought some one was joking, but when he saw a fifty dollar sign, he looked up and saw Laura's uncle. His eyes got as big as saucers, but he growled again, 'What are you giving us?'

"It's my contribution to your new church. I never belonged to one," he said, just as if it were a common thing for him to hand over fifty dollar bills, 'but I have concluded that it must be something worth while or it wouldn't have driven you young folks to work as you have done, and when you build your new church, if you ever do, let me know and I will be a charter member.'

"In six months' time the Loyal Sons and Daughters had five hundred dollars to their credit, though if we had mentioned the thought of raising that much, the old folks would have said we could not get five hundred cents.

"But the Superintendent kept on coming, rain or shine, and the High School girl with a nose for news kept finding prospects, and Chester followed them and enrolled them as members. The whole Sunday School was growing.

"The Loyals, who had outgrown their corner, had moved into the back hall and strung the walls with pennants and mottoes. Everybody was watching to see what they would do next. One day they announced that their orchestra would play and the chapel was packed and brought in a large offering. The boys said they would play every Sunday if their music drew like that. In March, Mrs. Winslow, our teacher, offered a prize to that division of the class which furnished the most novel plan and earned the most money.

"We boys did a lot of studying as to what we might do and couldn't think of a thing, but one night Chester met me on the street. He was carrying a big package and he was so excited that he stuttered worse than ever.

"I've got a plan, a dandy one," he began. Uncle Fred sent me prize watermelon seeds enough to plant ten acres, and I thought that would be just the thing for us boys.' There were twenty boys now. 'I was studying out where we could get the best ground and I happened to think of that low field that belongs to old Scrooge.' Old Scrooge was our nickname for William Hamilton, the richest and the stingiest man in town.

"I suppose he donated it," I grinned.

"He did," was the answer. I gasped, but Chester stuttered on, 'and what I don't know about raising melons, you can't find in books.'

"If we work it right and have a good season we'll clear a hundred redheads'—this was Chester's name for five dollar gold pieces—'right off that patch. What do you say?'

"I grabbed Chester's hand, all covered with big red freckles and I ran my hand over his head and I said, 'Three cheers for redheads.'

"Old Scrooge came out just as we were going over the ground for the third time. He seemed as glad as we were when the dusty, three-cornered leaves could be seen across the patch. We didn't allow any striped bugs or fat worms to loaf around those vines.

"We advertised, 'Buy Loyal Melons. Every One Guaranteed to Be Sweet and Perfect.' We took especial pains to have them so too. Chester put a bed on his milk wagon, and he and Dick loaded up before daylight and went miles before noon.

"The housekeepers told each other and we soon had a fine reputation for our melons. We sold every one and when we counted up that fall, we had cleared nine hundred dollars. We did so well that we concluded that we ought to pay old Scrooge something, so we went to his house.

"Dick told him why we had come. I saw a twinkle in the old man's eye as he said, 'Well, you may give me two hundred dollars and we'll be square.'

"You should have heard Chester stutter, 'D-don't you th'think that's pretty high, Mr. Sc-Hamilton?'

"The old man laughed, 'Well, yes, I do,' he said, 'I'm going to give you an extra hundred instead of charging, and I'll do something else when you get ready to build your church. You may head your list with my gift of a thousand dollars.'

"I-I thought you didn't believe in churches,' stuttered Chester.

"I didn't.' Mr. Hamilton pulled a splinter from the fence and whittled it down to the fineness of a toothpick, 'and I let you have the ground to prove that there was nothing in organized classes.' Dick whistled. 'I thought you'd swear and fuss and fight and I watched you'—

"We didn't see you,' interrupted Chester.

"I've a summer house in that old bushy willow and I used my eyes and ears and telescope, but I never heard anything out of the way. All I heard was about helping the other fellow.'

"Mr. Hamilton stuck the finished toothpick in his mouth. 'If an organized class can do that for young folks, I'd like to see if it could reform me.'

"Didn't we grab his hand? We did! The evangelist came later and for six weeks the tabernacle was packed every night. We had six hundred accessions, Laura's uncle included, who came on the last Sunday.

"The church was dedicated without a debt. You should have seen the flowers and the crowd and heard the music. That was five years ago. The numbers have grown and grown. But we don't intend to pull the church up put it in the cellar as did Mr. Finney with his turnip. We expect it to keep on growing until there are churches all over the country which have started from this root. Of course The Loyal Sons and Daughters are busy but there are only a few of the charter members left. The High School girl with a nose for news and Chester who corraled the prospects became so accustomed to going soul seeking together that our preacher tied them into a knot and sent them into a mining camp where there was much work for followers of the Master. They are making it a better place.

"Jennie is teaching and preaching in a blind asylum. Marguerite and Dick are travelling evangelists. Of course we miss them, but the Superintendent still drives six miles, rain or shine, to the Sunday School service. Mrs. Winslow is still teaching. Laura and I are about the only ones left and since our tastes are so similar and our dislikes so much alike, I have decided to make a proposition to her tonight after class meeting. The church is on an independent footing now, and I see nothing to hinder our starting a home of our own."

Good Lord, Forgive

If I have wounded any soul today
If I have caused one foot to go astray,
If I have walked in my own willful way—
Good Lord, forgive!

If I have uttered idle words or vain,
If I have turned aside from want or pain
Lest I myself should suffer through the strain—
Good Lord, forgive!

If I have craved for joys that are not mine,
If I have let my wayward heart repine,
Dwelling on things of earth, not things divine—
Good Lord, forgive!

If I have been perverse, or hard, or cold,
If I have longed for shelter in Thy fold
When Thou hast given me some part to hold—
Good Lord, forgive!

Forgive the sins I have confessed to Thee,
Forgive the secret sins I do not see,
That which I know not, Father, teach Thou me—

Help me to live.

C. MAUD BATTERSEY.

Afterward

BY ANNE GUILBERT MAHON.

A WOMAN who was walking along the street felt herself weighted down by an overwhelming sense of discouragement, disappointment and bitterness in her life's work and her environment.

Unconsciously, her attention was attracted by a honeysuckle vine completely covering the porch of the suburban house she was passing. In spite of herself, she could not but admire it and enjoy its beauty. It was in full bloom. The yellow and white blossoms covered entirely the green vine. But, with all its beauty, there was something lacking. Engrossed in her own affairs as the woman was, she noticed it. "Where is the fragrance?" she asked herself. Suddenly the thought flashed across her that this, too, was a disappointment. The vine was at the climax of its blossoming, but where was the delicate, subtle fragrance always associated with honeysuckle in full bloom? It seemed to her as if this, too, was a disappointment, as if everything in life just then was a disappointment and a defeat.

She walked on, musing bitterly, but she had not taken many steps before she was enveloped in the most delicious and fragrant sweetness that she had ever known. The honeysuckle! The fragrance had not been apparent while passing the vine, but now the wind had wafted it to her afterward—after she had passed.

The question then flashed across the woman's mind, might it not be the same in her own life? Just as there seemed to be no fragrance to the blossoming vine while she passed it, yet afterward it came to her, more fragrant and entrancing than ever, might not the blessings now concealed in the hard experience she was passing through also come to her at some future time—afterward?

The woman went on her way, but her step was lighter, her eyes were brighter and her face more hopeful.

"I can't see now," she mused to herself. "It seems all wrong to me now, but afterward I shall look back and see where it was all right for me, and I will see how even out of these discouraging, bitter experiences good may result."

An elderly woman came to visit a younger one who was passing through a deep sorrow similar to one the older woman had herself experienced.

"I want to tell you," she said, looking at the young woman, earnestly, "that everything works together for good. I've found it so in my life. Everything works together for good!"

"I hope so," responded the younger woman, hopelessly, but in her heart she was saying, "How can this terrible sorrow of mine ever work for good, to me or anyone else? It is impossible that it could."

Years afterward the same young woman, older in years and experience, looking back echoed with all her heart the words of her elderly visitor, "All things work together for good!"

Again, it was a vision of "afterward." Not at the time can we always see the reason for the trials and the sorrows, which beset us so heavily, but, trusting

Many Styles of Type and Many Languages

The Miracle of the MULTIPLEX

Change your type in an instant from one style to another—or any language

APPLICABLE TO ONE MACHINE

Two sets of type in each machine. "Just Turn the Knob" Presto one or the other Simple—Compact—Portable Beautiful work—beyond compare. The favorite for Teachers, Students and the Clergy.

If not inclined to a new machine, inquire for our Factory Rebuilds. We Rent Machines of high quality.

Patrons: President Woodrow Wilson Cardinal Merry del Val Dr. Alexander Graham Bell Chancellor Rev. B. G. Trant Bishop John G. Murray William Dean Howells also all Colleges and Universities

Our special terms to collegians will interest you. Catalog for the asking.

Hammond Typewriter Co.

571 East 69th Street
New York City, N. Y.

decide on the new hymn-book for your Church or Sunday School until you have seen

DON'T HALLOWED HYMNS

NEW AND OLD

Edited by IRA ALLAN SANKEY
Son of the famous Singing-Evangelist
Ira D. Sankey

OVER 550,000 COPIES ALREADY SOLD

Responsive Scripture Readings
No Trashy Words No Jingly Music

Price $25.00 per 100 not prepaid
35 cents per copy by mail

Examine a copy and prove its value in your work. (Returnable if desired.)

The Biglow & Main Co., New York
Chicago

in an all-wise Heavenly Father we need not fear. This same trial, this same sorrow, which seems so unbearable, so inexplicable at the present time will "afterward" be revealed to us in all the strength, all the beauty, all the blessing which God meant should come to us out of it. We shall see how everything has worked together for good.

"God's plans, like lilies pure and white unfold, We must not tear the close shut leaves apart; Time will reveal the calyxes of gold."

In the midst of trouble, of perplexity, of sorrow, when we cannot see or understand, let us learn to lean hard on our all-wise, all-loving Heavenly Father, accepting all things as from His hand, waiting, trusting, accepting cheerfully, knowing that "All things work together for good," and that "afterward," in God's own time, we shall see the beauty and the blessing of what now seems so dark and unexplainable.

A Quaint Reply

A dear old Quaker lady when asked what cosmetic she used to produce such a lovely complexion, replied sweetly: "I use for my lips, truth; for my voice, prayer; for the eyes, pity; for the hands, charity; for the figure, uprightness; for the heart, love." Truth, prayer, pity, charity, uprightness, and love. Could there be a more perfect circlet of jewels to adorn womanhood? They are priceless, yet free to all.

A Pleased Subscriber

A lady in Marion, Ind., in renewing her subscription for another year, writes:

"I am liking the AMERICAN MESSENGER better every month."

THE TREASURY

SPECIAL NOTICE

OWING to occasional losses of letters, containing money, we would request friends and donors of the American Tract Society to remit by check or Post Office Money Order, which latter can always be duplicated in case of loss.

Receipts of the American Tract Society During December, 1916

Total Donations (Including $596.52 for Special Objects), $2,197.83.

- ALABAMA, $1.
Rev. Bell, $1.
- CALIFORNIA, $49.75.
Mr. Ruth, $1.65; Mr. Gates, $1; Miss Bigelow, $1; Mr. Lyman, $10; Mr. Zimmermann, $17; Mrs. Gablemann, $1.30; Mr. Drake, $1; Dr. Harvey, $1; Mrs. Renwick, for Latin America, $5; Women's Christian Temperance Union, $5; Mrs. Fisher, $3; Miss Lalén, for distribution of Tracts, $1; Rev. Lich, $0.65; Mrs. Hunt, $0.50; Mr. Schmitt, $0.65.
- COLORADO, $7.65.
Mr. Sweetland, $1; Pueblo, Church Collection, $5; Mr. Boeking, for Colportage work, $1.65.
- CONNECTICUT, $37.
Miss Elmore, $2; Miss Scudder, $5; Mr. Rossiter, $1; Miss Scudder, $1; Miss Kingsbury, for Mexico, $2; Manchester, Church Offering, $25; Mr. Hovey, for Mexico, $1.
- DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, $7.
Mr. Butler, $2; Miss Wood, $5.
- FLORIDA, $6.
Mrs. Story, $1; Mr. Barton, $5.
- GEORGIA, $2.
Mrs. Morgan, $2.
- ILLINOIS, $66.
Mr. Powell, $3; Mr. Adair, $1; Mr. Kent, $5; Miss Jonkman, $1; Mrs. Egemeyer, $2.30; Mr. Ollendorf, $1; Mr. Paul, $10; Mr. Opitz, $1; Mr. Schmidt, $5; Mr. Schaffer, $2; Mr. Gesebrecht, $0.70; Mrs. Langenberg, $4.65; Warsaw, Church Collection, $5; Mrs. Knackus, $2; Mr. Heeren, $0.65; Mrs. Reinebach, $3.60; Mr. Tamms, $0.30; Mrs. Doehring, $1.15; Mr. Bailey, $1; Mr. Zimmermann, $0.65; Fosterburg, Church Collection, $5; Woodburn, Church Collection, $5; Bethalto, Church Collection, $5.
- INDIANA, $22.75.
Mr. Rothert, $0.55; Mr. Hewinkel, $0.65; "Ungenannt," $10; Mrs. Gerber, $1.55; Mr. & Mrs. Onyett, $5; Dr. & Mrs. Howk, for Soldier's Text Book, $5.
- IOWA, $107.94.
Mr. Silliman, $1; Rudd, Church Offering, $16.15; Mr. Paterni, $0.65; Mrs. Nielander, $5; Miss Walker, $1; "A Friend," $1; Mr. Goeman, $0.75; Rev. Engelke, $11.54; Mr. Van Lanen, $0.65; Mr. Voss, $0.95; Sibley, Church Collection, $6.75; Rev. Huending, $0.90; Mr. Van Horn, for Foreign Mission Work, $2; Mr. Hassebrach, $1.65; Mr. Taylor, $1; Mrs. Klein, $1; Mr. Manthe, $0.65; Mr. Addengast, $5; Mr. F. & Conrad Meier, $5; Mr. Middents, $0.65; Mr. Litterer, $2.00; Mrs. Moery, $0.65; Miss Fuchs, $5; Holland, Church Collection, Special Collection, $37.
- KANSAS, $55.35.
Rev. Wedel, $8; Mrs. Krebbel, $7.50; Mr. Reich, $1; Mr. Hornberger, $0.30; Mr. Bauman, $0.65; Mrs. Haas, $0.65; Mrs. Pauli, $5; Mr. Christians, $5; Mr. Krebbel, $5; Mr. Scheive, $0.30; Mr. Riesen, $0.65; Gideon Stucky, $5; V. A. Stucky, $1.30; Mr. Wilson, for work in South America, $5; Rilet, Church Collection, $10.
- KENTUCKY, $3.
Misses Kobs, $1; Mrs. Stroebel, $2.
- MAINE, $27.
Miss Nason, $1; Miss Longfellow, $1; Mr. Jordan, $1; Mr. Tappen, $1; Mr. Anthony, $5; Mr. Evans, $1; Mrs. Taylor, $1; Miss Whitmore, $1; Miss Sewall, $15.
- MARYLAND, $31.
Miss Ruckdaeschel, $1; "A Friend," $25; "A Friend," $5.
- MASSACHUSETTS, $304.65.
Mr. Robilschek, $2; Mrs. Kliesea, $0.65; Lee Sunday School Collection, $5; Mr. and Mrs. Monroe, $5; Mr. Studley, "Billy Sunday" Tracts, $5; Mrs. Fuller, "Billy Sunday" Tracts, $10; Mr. Clark, for Rev. Jaeger salary, $50; "A Friend," "Billy Sunday" Tracts, $5; Dorchester, Sunday School Collection, $5; Mr. Brewer, $6; Rev. Hood, $10; Mrs. Donkin, $1; Mrs. Crane, $20; Mrs. Dean, $2; Mrs. Brooks, $2; Miss Dudley, $1; Mr. Bruckman, $2; Mrs. Jennings, $10; Miss Kendall, $1; Mrs. Cowl, $2; Mr. Diman, $2; Mrs. Kaufmann, for Rev. Jaeger's past salary, $25; Mr. Bliss, $5; Dr. Hastings, $5; Mrs. McKee, $5; Mrs. Haskell, $5; Miss Montgomery, $2; Mrs. Knowlton, $2; Miss Judd, $1; Miss Leonard, $2; Mrs. Lane, $5; Miss Goldthwait, $1; Mr. Hodgkins, $1; Mr. Hall, $1; Miss Bisbee, $1; Rev. Gleason, D.D., $1; Mr. Carr, $50; Mrs. Nevins, $1; Mr. Marcy, $5; Mr. Cushing, for Soldier's Text Book, $10; Mr. Cummings, for Soldier's Text Book, $15; Mr. Foucar, for Soldier's Text Book, $15.
- MINNESOTA, $59.40.
Mr. Lyman, $10; "M. A. H. Chicago," $25; Mr. Zimmer, $9.65; Mr. Becker, $0.65; Mr. Bolzer, $0.80; Mrs. Anding, $2.30; Mankato, Church Offering, $10; Peace, Church Offering, $1.
- MICHIGAN, $63.64.
Rev. Fleas, $5; Miss Weed, $4; Zealand, Church Offering, $15; Rev. Penner, $1; Mrs. Mills, $1.05; Misses Ruth D. and Louise Bloodgood, $10; Hamilton, Church Offering, $24.94; Mrs. Moeller, $1; Mr. Att, $1.65.
- MISSOURI, $37.
Dr. Hall, $1; Mr. Perkins, $1; "S. N.," $15; Mr. Broer, $1; Mr. Weyland, $1.65; Mr. Maaz, $0.35; Hope, Church Offering, $3; Miss Copp,

- $3; Dr. Galloway, $5; Mrs. McCluney, $2; Mrs. McCluney, for Soldier's Text Book, $1; Mr. Butler, $3.
- NEBRASKA, $62.55.
Miss Hullhorst, $1; Mrs. Hunzicker, $0.30; Mr. Siebert, $0.65; Hastings, Church Offering, $4.65; Miss Kilzer, $2; Mr. Halen, and Miss Kramer, $3.25; Mr. Jantzen, $1.65; Campbell, Church Offering, $10; Mr. Steen, $1.20; Omaha, Church Collection, $2.40; Omaha, Church Offering, $6.35; Portsmouth, Church Collection, $4.50; Mr. McCague, $10; Fremont, Church Collection, $12.80; Ponce, Church Offering, $1.80.
- NEW HAMPSHIRE, $25.
Mr. Newell, $2; Mr. Wetherbee, $5; Mrs. Bartlett, $2; Mr. Morgan, $3; Mr. Fuller, $5; Mrs. Atwood, $1; Mrs. Holmes, $1; Mrs. Blake, $1; Mr. Hoyt, $1; Miss Knapp, $2; Mrs. Hoyt, $2.
- NEW JERSEY, $112.85.
Mrs. Wade, $3; Miss Sheldon, $2.50; Mr. Phelps, $1; Mr. Bartles, $2; Mr. Voorhees, $2.50; Mr. Vreeland, $10; Mr. Honeyman, $5; Mrs. Schuber, $2; Mr. Szakaacs, $2; Mrs. Doolittle, for Colportage work in South America, $10; Mrs. Carter, $3; "A Friend," $1; Miss Wilson, $1; Miss Mattie, $1; Miss Bonnell, $1; Mrs. Soper, $1; Miss Stephens, $5; Miss Williamson, $1; Miss Dennis, $2; Mr. Baldwin, $5; Mr. Machlet, $20; Mr. Knackstedt, $1; Miss Punney, $1; Mr. Rowers, $0.50; Princeton, Church Collection, $15.23; Mrs. Epple, $1; Mr. Peters, $1; Princeton, Church Collection, $9.52; Mrs. Caler, $0.10.
- NEW YORK, $382.45.
Mr. Tailer, $2; Miss Billings, $25; Mrs. Olcott, $5; Mr. Loche, $1; Miss Clark, $2; "A Friend," $1; Miss Morey, $1; Church Collection, $5; Mr. Battle, $2; Mr. Crockett, $1; Mrs. Lord, $5; Church Collection, $10; Mr. Jarvi, $100; Miss Laselle, $1; Miss Santwood, for Soldier's Text Book, $25; Mrs. Haines, $3; Mr. Hall, $5; Miss Veltman, $1; Miss Gibbs, $1; Mr. Brunt, $10; Mrs. Rainey, $10; Miss Warner, $0.50; Miss Ward, $1; Mr. Swan, $5; Mr. Meeker, $5; Mrs. Muser, $1.65; New Baltimore, Church Offering, $297; Mrs. Ferrie, $30; Miss Vandervoort, $5; Miss Schafer, $1; Miss Rathbun, $1; Mrs. Morton, $1; Mrs. Zabriskie, $2; Mr. Porter, $1; Mrs. Jaeger, $2.73; Mr. Millard, $1; "A Friend," $50; Estate of Claus J. Meyer, $5; Mrs. Proctor, $2; Miss Fuller, $1; Mrs. Stiles, $2; Mr. Batchelor, $1; Mrs. Taylor, $1; Mrs. Miller, $4; Mr. Woerle, $1; Mr. Blackman, $1.10; Mrs. Watson, $2; Lyons Falls, Church Offering, $2; Miss Nichols, $1; Mr. Wiley, $5; Mrs. Edwards, $1; Mrs. Peirce, $10; Mrs. Roeschli, $2.50; Mr. Watson, $1; Mr. Empie, $3; Mr. Powley, $5; Mrs. Hart, $1; Mrs. Newton, $2; Miss Seymour, $10; Mr. Cuper, $1.
- NORTH CAROLINA, $2.
Mr. Wills, $2.
- NORTH DAKOTA, $3.20.
Mr. Elker, $0.65; Mrs. Buchholz, $0.65; Mr. Maag, $1.25; Mr. Schulze, $0.65.
- OHIO, $93.25.
Mr. Dodd, $1; Bellaire, Church Offering, $10; Miss Smith, $4.50; Mr. Frank, $0.65; Mr. Schuhunacher, $4.65; Mr. Fetzer, $2.55; Toledo, Church Offering, $1; "A Friend," $0.25; Mrs. Schubach, for Immigrant work, $0.65; Cincinnati, Church Collection, $10; Mr. Lanman, $1; Mr. McKinley, $5; Cincinnati, Church Offering, $5; Mrs. Rossiter, $5; Miss Rossiter, $10; Mr. Staats, $2; Mr. Cochran, $2; Mrs. Gill, $2; Mrs. Mathison, $2; Misses Pauline and Carrie Benninhofer, $10; Miss Wilkins, $3; Miss Edwards, $10; Mr. Mekler, $1.
- OKLAHOMA, $13.
Mr. Galloway, $1; Mr. Hill, $1; Mr. Reints, $10; Miss Ringleman, $1.
- OREGON, $46.30.
Mrs. Flavel, $5; Mrs. Hobby, $0.50; Mrs. Tentz, $1; Miss Prescott, $15; Portland, Sunday School Collection, $3.50; "Ungenannt," $1.90; Mr. Beck, $0.40; Mrs. Hobby, $1; Mrs. Sigrist, $2; Mrs. Oester, $1; Portland, Church Offering, $15.
- PENNSYLVANIA, $445.91.
Mr. Steele, $10; Mr. Wright, $10; Mr. Catline, $5; Mr. Brown, $5; Mrs. Clawson, $1.50; Rev. Singmaster, $1; Mr. Rees, $5; Mr. Wagner, $2.50; Mr. Gibson, $1; Mrs. Brooks, $5; Mr. Smith, $3; Edinboro, Church Offering, $5; Dr. Leaman, $10; Miss Ingraham, $3; Mr. Culver, $10; Miss Stahley, $1; Mr. Branyan, $1; Mr. Wilbur, $5; Mr. Garnett, $10; Mr. Louber, $1.36; Mercer, Church Collection, $3; Mrs. Penrose, $100; Mr. Harvey, $1; Miss Abbot, $1; Mrs. Minor, for Soldier's Text Book, $1; Miss Garrett, $5; Mrs. Dodds, $5; Mr. Schumacher, $2.20; Mrs. Robinson, $3.50; Miss Raymond, $9.70; Mrs. Cain, $5; Mrs. Dubs, $2; Mr. Schinff, $2.65; and two sons, $2; Miss Walker, $2; Miss Waring, for Soldier's Text Book, $2; Mr. Sturdevant, $5; Dunmore, Church Offering, $5; Mr. Martin, $1; Mr. Masland, $5; Mrs. Dull, $15; Mr. Baker, $2.50; Carrick, Church Collection, $21; Pittsburgh, Church Offering, $10; Pittsburgh, Church Collection, $25; Mr. Godfrey, $5; Miss Gregg, $5; Mr. Herren, $10; Mr. Hubby, $10; Mr. King, $1; Mr. Koch, $5; Mrs. McCormick, $10; Mr. Miller, $1; Mr. Paden, $10; Dr. Shaw, $2; Mrs. Thaw, $50.
- SOUTH DAKOTA, $18.50.
Chancellor, Sunday School Collection, $7.50; Mr. Gortmaker, $1; Mr. Bossmann, $5; Mr. Van Bockern, $5.
- TENNESSE, $2.50.
Mr. Phillips, $2.50.
- TEXAS, $2.80.
Mr. Bogue, $1; "Trofen aus Texas," $1.80.
- UTAH, $5.
Mrs. Tuttle, $5.
- VERMONT, $9.
Orleans Church Offering, $3; Mrs. Hard, $1; Mr. Taylor, $5.
- VIRGINIA, $13.30.
Miss Archer, $2; Mr. Gordon, $1; Mrs. Ittner, $0.30; Mr. Traversa, $10.
- WASHINGTON, $5.
Zoar Gemeinde, $5.
- WEST VIRGINIA, $3.
Mr. McCoy, $3.
- WISCONSIN, $36.85.
Mrs. Laabs, $0.65; Mrs. Mayer, $0.65; Mr. Wolfgang, $0.65; Mrs. Woolfe, $2; Mrs. Yoerg, $0.65; Mr. Kuhn, $0.80; Mr. Biscell, $5; Mr.

- Eichman, $0.65; "Gott Bekannt," $2; Mr. Geweiss, $2.05; Mr. Asmus, $0.75; Oostburg, Church Collection, $2; Mrs. Jenny, $2; Mr. Radke, $2; Mr. Lothes, $5; Mr. Esch, Sr., $10.
- FOREIGN, $27.24.
Canada, Mr. Troegel, $2; "Ungenannt," $12.66; I. R. $0.50; W. Sch., $0.50; Mrs. McCrae, $1; Mr. Schact, $0.43; Rev. Lehrer, $1.15; Rev. Lehrer, $2.
Porto Rico, Dr. Rodrigues, $2.
Africa, Mr. Fuller, $5.
- LEGACIES, $75.43.
Detroit, Mich., Estate of Corydon L. Ford. (Final) $75.43.
INCOME FROM TRUST FUNDS, $1,846.16.
Income for Missionary Work..... 1,782.91
Income for Annuitants..... 63.25

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

TERMS: Subscription price, 50 cts. a year, payable in advance. In clubs of five or more, 30 cts. each. Club subscriptions mailed to separate addresses, if desired. Postage on foreign subscriptions, 24 cents additional. Canadian subscription, 12 cents additional. Single copies, 5 cents each.

On account of the additional charge which is made by the New York Post Office for mailing to subscribers in New York and Bronx Counties (Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx), no club rates, cash commissions or premiums will be given for subscriptions that must be sent to persons residing in those Counties. Each subscription in New York or Bronx County must be at the rate of 50 cents net.

Remit by Express, Money Order, Draft, Post Office Order or Registered Letter. For very small amounts, postage stamps may be sent at the risk of the sender.

RENEWALS: The date opposite your name shows to what time the subscription has been paid, and a change in the date is the receipt for renewal.

CHANGES: When sending change of address, be sure to send the old address as well as the new one.

OUR ADVERTISERS: We believe that all the advertisements in this paper are from responsible advertisers, and it is our intention to admit only such to our columns. Should, however, any of our subscribers find that any advertiser does not live up to his agreements, we would consider it a favor if they will inform us, and we will at any time give prompt attention to any complaint.

We do not, of course, guarantee that all persons will take the same point of view with the advertisers, and it must be borne in mind that the claims and statements made by advertisers are their assertions, and not ours.

Our readers will confer a favor upon advertisers and also upon us if they will mention the American Messenger when answering advertisements.

FIELD SECRETARIES AND COLPORTAGE SUPERINTENDENTS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.

- Rev. Isaac Pierson, Field Secretary for New England, 50 Bromfield Street, Boston, Mass.
Rev. Robert Murray, Field Secretary, Central Agency, 345 Fourth Avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa.
Rev. A. W. Reinhard, Field Secretary and Superintendent of Colportage for the Western and Northwestern States, 721 South 37th Street, Omaha, Nebraska.
Rev. George Whitefort, Superintendent of Colportage, Southern Agency, Crichton, R.F.D., Mobile Co., Ala.

Have You Made a Will?

If you have, did you remember the American Tract Society, and in proportion to the good it has been doing for nearly a century? If you have not made any bequest in behalf of the Tract Society, you are earnestly asked to add a codicil to your will to that effect. If you do so, you certainly will be happy in the thought that when you have been translated to your Heavenly home you will still be doing something to perpetuate and enlarge the great and important work of the American Tract Society. Please do not forget.

A Help to a Lonely Life
Mrs. M. C. Harvey, of Harveyville, Kansas, writes:
"These are close times, but the AMERICAN MESSENGER is such a help to me in my lonely life that I do not want to be without it."

Silent Evangelism

BY REV. HOWARD W. POPE.

THE indiscriminate use of tracts by those whose zeal exceeds their wisdom has led some people to question their value. It is foolish, however, to allow any prejudice against poor tracts to blind us to the value of good ones, and good ones can be had. The choicest thoughts of the best writers can now be found in leaflet form, and many a soul has been awakened by one of these silent messengers which God has put into the hand at just the right moment.

A man stepped into a street car in New York, and before taking his seat gave to each passenger a little card bearing the words, "Look to Jesus when tempted, when troubled, when dying." One of the passengers carefully read the card and put it in his pocket. As he left the car he said to the giver:

"Sir, when you gave me this card I was on my way to the ferry, intending to jump from the boat and drown myself. The death of my wife and son had robbed me of all desire to live, but this card has persuaded me to begin life anew. Good-day, and God bless you!"

There is no such thing as chance in this world, and those who seek to be led by the Spirit often find themselves messengers of mercy to some weary soul. A lady once traveled two hundred miles to tell the writer personally how a card which he had given her had led to her conversion. It lay in her bureau drawer, bearing its silent testimony from time to time as she read it, until finally it led her to Christ.

Some ministers make constant use of leaflets in their pastoral work. They open the way for conversation, and often they are better than words, for a soul under conviction is sometimes disposed to quarrel, but one cannot quarrel with a tract. It never loses its temper, never answers back, and it sticks to what it has said. Besides you can send a leaflet into many places where you cannot go yourself.

People in sorrow or sickness love to be remembered, and boys think more of a minister who occasionally gives them a bright leaflet. A man wrote me that in a town where he had used, "Why a Boy Should Be a Christian," forty-five people on their examination for church membership testified that they attributed their conversion mainly to that leaflet.

Housekeepers can use tracts to good advantage. Lay them on the parlor table that callers may read them while waiting. Often there is time enough for one to be converted while a lady is finishing her toilet. Give them to the milk-man, the grocer, the postman; enclose them in letters, library-books and packages.

Business men have fine opportunities for this kind of work. A man once said: "I cannot speak in meeting, but if you will supply me with choice reading matter, I will pay for it and inclose it in the packages which go out of my store." Recently a customer uttered an oath in a New York business house. The proprietor quietly handed him a "Little Preacher" entitled, "Why Do You Swear?" The man read it, tears came to his eyes, and he said:

"I beg your pardon, sir."
"Never mind me," said the other, "but don't you think you had better ask God's pardon? It was His Name that you profaned."

"I will do it, sir," said the man, and he shook his hand warmly.

It is not an easy matter to rebuke a swearer, but any one can say, "Here is a leaflet which you may find helpful," or he can mail one to every profane person whom he knows.

Teachers can make good use of leaflets. Those who cannot talk with their pupils can put into their hands the wise words of others. Old fashioned tracts will not do for boys. They want something which sparkles with life, which rivets the attention, and which stops when it gets there.

This is a busy age, we all know. People have not time, or think that they have not, to read books on religion, but if you put into their hands something which is attractive, interesting, and which can be read in a few minutes, it is sure of attention. I am convinced that any one can easily multiply his influence twenty-fold by a wise use of printer's ink.

Never give away a tract unless you know its contents. Use all the tact you have and pray for more. An old man said to a train boy, "No, I don't want your pop corn, don't you see I haven't any teeth?"

"Buy some gum drops then, nice fresh gum drops."

That boy knew how to adapt himself to his customers, and so should we. Occasionally select a good tract, and printing on it the name of your church or Sunday school with an invitation to attend the services, canvass the whole neighborhood, leaving a tract at every house.

A physician told me recently that three times in three different cities, and at intervals of about a year, some one put into his pocket without his knowledge a little card containing the words, "Have you a home in Heaven, where the angels are, and where your mother is, etc?" The first two cards set him thinking, but the third came at a time when he had just lost his mother, and it led him to Christ. No one of the three people knew that they were supplementing each other's work, and yet they were. None of the three ever knew that any good came from the card which they dropped into the stranger's pocket, but he knew and God knew, and that was enough. We shall never know all the good that comes from this kind of silent preaching, but we know enough to make it almost criminal for us to neglect it.

—CHRISTIAN OBSERVER.

An Appreciative Donor

In sending her annual donation for the work of the American Tract Society Mrs. E. P. Morgan of Georgia writes to the General Secretary:

"I want to tell you how greatly I value the American Tract Society for its grand work in sending the glad news both at home and also to the larger field, the 'uttermost parts.' Latin America needs the Gospel as greatly as the savages of the South Pacific. I cannot help much with money, but I am praying for you, your fellow-workers and your work."

Our Medicine Chest

"You must have had a terrible experience with no food and mosquitoes swarming around you," said a friend to the shipwrecked mariner, who had been cast away upon a tropical island.

"You just bet I had a terrible experience," he acknowledged. "My experience was worse than that of the man who wrote, 'Water, water everywhere, but not a drop to drink.' With me it was bites, bites everywhere, but not a bite to eat."

A man approached a stand upon which some questionable-looking fowls were offered for sale. "What will you sell them for?" he asked, of a shrewd, gray-bearded farmer.

"I sell them for profits," answered that individual.

"Is that so?" answered the customer, in feigned surprise. "I'm glad to know they are prophets. I took them for patriarchs."

"Was I rude this afternoon?" a little girl asked her mother. "I hope not, my dear," said the mother. Little Girl: "Well, our teacher was examining us in poetry—'Casabianca'—and she asked why did the boy stand on the burning deck, and I said because it was too hot for him to sit down; and she made me stand in the corner."

An old negro mammy who was addicted to the pipe was being lectured on the habit by a Sabbath school teacher. Finally the latter said:

"Do you expect to go to heaven?"

"Yes, indeedy!"

"But the Bible says that nothing unclean shall enter there. Now the breath of the smoker is unclean. What do you say to that?"

"Well, I reckon I leave ma bref behin' when I enter dar," was old mammy's response.

"Johnny," said his mother severely, "someone has taken a big piece of ginger cake out of the pantry."

Johnny blushed guiltily.

"Oh, Johnny," she exclaimed, "I didn't think it was in you!"

"It ain't all," replied Johnny. "Part of it's in Elsie."

"Why don't you buy something at my table?" demanded the girl at the charity fair.

"Because I only buy from the homely girls," said the man. "They have a harder time making sales."

The girl was not offended, and he worked this right down the line.

Beautiful Silverware Articles As Premiums

ARTICLES of silverware are always in demand in the home. Many of our friends, no doubt, would like to obtain some of the choice pieces we are offering at this time. With a little effort in securing yearly subscriptions for the American Messenger, one or more of these articles may be obtained and the person who receives this fine silverware will be well repaid for the effort made. These goods are manufactured by the well known firm of Wm. A. Rogers, Ltd.; they are sure to please and give satisfaction. The "Grecian" is the popular style of the goods we are offering. This quality of Electro Silverplate is well known for its beauty of design as well as for its excellent wearing qualities in actual household service. The goods will be shipped by parcel post, upon receipt of order. These offers are good only in the United States, as the duty in foreign countries would be prohibitive. Cash must accompany each order.

NAME OF ARTICLE.	Numbers of subscriptions required to obtain the article free of cost	Or we will give one year's subscription to the American Messenger and the article named for
Three piece Cream Set, consisting of sugar shell, butter knife and cream ladle.....	6		$2.00
1/2 dozen butter-spreaders.....	8		2.50
Sugar tong.....	3		1.15
Eight piece Set, consisting of six teaspoons, butter knife and sugar shell.....	8		2.50
Three piece Child Set, consisting of knife, fork and spoon.....	4		1.60
Meat fork.....	3		1.15
1/2 dozen tablespoons.....	7		2.25
1/2 dozen forks.....	7		2.25
1/2 dozen knives.....	8		2.50
1/2 dozen teaspoons.....	4		1.60
1 berry spoon.....	4		1.60
1 gravy ladle.....	3		1.15
1 soup ladle.....	8		2.50

AMERICAN MESSENGER, Park Ave., and 40th St., N.Y. C.

Before Drinking Coffee, You Should Consider Whether Or Not It Is Harmful
"There's a Reason" for POSTUM

MAKE A RESOLUTION

Obtain your Sunday-school and other Christian-work supplies as well as your book requirements from the Tract Society.

We are publishers of such material ourselves as well as being right in the publishing center of the United States. We make prompt deliveries to your door at very pleasing prices. You will be glad to know in this connection that we have prepared entirely new catalogs in the following three departments of our work: Spanish Literature, Other Foreign Publications, Tracts and Paper-covered Books. Any or all of these will be sent postpaid to those interested. Our regular Book and Supply Catalog No. 91 is full of interesting items.

THE NEW TESTAMENT WITH NOTES

Indispensable the next six months. Carry it in your pocket or hand-bag.

This volume contains full explanations, helps and instructions on every page. Printed on thin white paper from clear black type. Pocket edition. Size of page, $3\frac{3}{4} \times 6$ in.; $\frac{3}{4}$ in. thick; weight 11 ounces.

French morocco, cloth lined, red under gold edges, boxed.

$1.25 net.

HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS

in the Words of the American Standard Edition, and Outline of the Life of Christ.

By Rev. John H. Kerr, D.D. 8vo. Cloth. xxiii, 236 pp. Special Student's Edition. Uniform with Stalker's "Life of Christ."

"It is rich in reference and presents a system of parallel readings in compact form."—Chautauquan.

"To a Bible class teacher a manual of this sort is practically indispensable when the lessons are dealing with the story of Christ."—The Continent.

Price, 60 Cents, net, postpaid.

THE MASTER PREACHER

Study of the Homiletics of Jesus

By Albert Richmond Bond, A.M., D.D. 8vo. Cloth. 320 pp. Size $5\frac{1}{2} \times 8\frac{1}{4}$ in.

"A very comprehensive study of the preaching and teaching of Jesus, taking practically every phase of it. It is well worth a careful study."—Baptist Standard.

"It is a book full of observation and a really keen analysis of Christ as preacher and teacher."—New York Christian Advocate.

Net, 75 Cents. By mail, 85 Cents.

THE JUNIOR PARISH

By Herbert W. Lathe

Full of just the things by which to illustrate the lessons and to set your scholars thinking. As a successful talker and more effective writer for children on topics vitally important to the Church and Sunday-school, Mr. Lathe is hardly excelled.

12mo. 278 pp. Cloth. Price, $1.00, postpaid.

THE TWO ST. JOHN'S OF THE NEW TESTAMENT

By Rev. James Stalker, D.D. 12mo. Cloth. 271 pp. Size $5\frac{1}{4} \times 7\frac{3}{4}$ in.

The careers and characters of John the Evangelist and John the Baptist.

Dr. Stalker's writings are remarkable for originality of method, clearness of style, comprehensiveness of view, and suggestiveness of matter.

Net, 75 Cents. By mail, 85 Cents.

"WE WOULD SEE JESUS"

By David James Burrell. Frontis. 12mo. Cloth, design in red and green. Frontispiece shows Jesus with the doctors in the Temple. 94 pp. Size $5 \times 7\frac{1}{2}$ in.

Twelve chapters in this little book tell us where we can find and see Jesus today. We see Him here also through the eyes of Peter and John, Pilate and Paul. Dr. Burrell dedicates the book to his Friend, and thereby shows us Christ through the eyes of a present-day apostle.

Price, net, 50 Cents. By mail, 55 Cents.

BIBLE DICTIONARY

(Revised Edition)

By Rev. W. W. Rand, D.D. Cloth. 8vo. 720 pp. 348 illustrations. 11 maps in colors. Size $6\frac{1}{2} \times 8\frac{1}{2}$ in. $\times 7\frac{1}{2}$ in.

The best low priced Dictionary on the market.

Price, $1.00 net. By mail, $1.20.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST

By Rev. James Stalker, D.D. 12mo. Dark green cloth binding, red stamping. Map frontispiece. Student's Edition. 162 pp. Size $5 \times 1\frac{1}{2}$ in.

If you are not using Stalker's Life of Christ, do not wait a day before ordering it. This is essentially the student's book—only 162 pages, but they are written in Dr. Stalker's luminous style; every word counts. The paragraphs are numbered for quick reference, and a synopsis of contents precedes each chapter. Dr. Stalker says in the revised edition that the book "has been translated into more languages, European and Asiatic, than the author can remember."

Price, 60 Cents, net, postpaid.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE

Black leatherette binding, red edges. 8vo. 561 pp. 3 columns to page. Size $5\frac{1}{2} \times 8\frac{1}{2}$ in.

The best concordance for the price that is printed. This edition is printed on thin paper so that the 561 pages do not bulk heavily, and it is a convenient size for reference. For the Sunday-School teacher it is a necessity.

Price, $1.00, postpaid.

BIBLE READER'S GUIDE

By F. S. Schenck, D.D. Introductory chapter on How to Study the Bible, by D. L. Moody. 16mo. 340 pp. Clear type on thin Bible paper. Black leatherette binding. Size $4\frac{1}{4} \times 6\frac{3}{4}$ in.

A complete and concise outline for studying the entire Bible in one year. Illustrated with maps, charts, diagrams, etc., which clearly fix in one's mind the essential facts, places, events, dates, etc.

Net, 35 Cents. By mail, 43 Cents.

Two Timely Books for Mission Study:

Mission classes everywhere are studying about Latin-America this year. Here are two books that are fine for supplemental study:

THROUGH THE WILDERNESSES OF BRAZIL, BY HORSE, CANOE AND FLOAT

By William Azel Cook. 58 illustrations. Cloth, 3 colored design, green top. 8vo. 487 pp. Size $5\frac{3}{4} \times 8\frac{1}{2}$ in.

The wonderful story of this traveller and explorer who climbed the mountains, pierced the jungles and pushed his way through the swamps of Brazil and found darkness of heart and life everywhere in that beautiful land.

"Tells a fascinating tale from beginning to end."—Presbyterian Banner.

Price, $1.25, postpaid.

HORACIO: A TALE OF BRAZIL

By R. W. Fenn. Frontis. 12mo. Cloth. 309 pp. Size $5 \times 7\frac{1}{2}$ in.

"The author has shown a good appreciation of the odd elements in the lives of Brazilian folk and the strange factors which influence the lives of a priest-ridden community."—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

Net, $1.00. By mail, $1.10.

Our Christian Workers' Library
at 85 cents per copy by mail, or $7.50 per set prepaid. Twelve volumes of surpassing interest.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY, Park Ave. and 40th St., New York

AMM

UNIVERSITY

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

Vol. 75

MARCH, 1917

No. 3

A PRIMITIVE SCHOOLHOUSE IN THE PUGET SOUND REGION

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY, NEW YORK

H.E. FRITZ

Speedy, Sturdy, "Bikes"

Unquestionably worth one-third to one-half more. A swift, sturdy bicycle—sold on a basis of Satisfaction Guaranteed or Money Back. Carefully constructed of heavy gauge, seamless steel tubing—triple truss forks, arch crown design. Beautifully enameled and striped.

The New Service

Equipped with genuine Majestic, heavily studded, anti-skid, puncture-proof tires—motorcycle type.

$19.95
Up

Get This Beautiful Shipped From Chicago
Bicycle Book—FREE

Filled from cover to cover with wonderful illustrations in colors, of low-priced, high-grade bicycles. Address house nearest you.

Montgomery Ward Co. Dept. G154
New York, Chicago, Kansas City, Ft. Worth, Portland, Ore.

COMPLETE FRIENDSHIP BRACELET 59c

STERLING SILVER WARRANTED ROLLED GOLD

Links Reduced to 8c. each or 2 for 15c. Why not start a Friendship-Maid-Link-BRACELET with one or two links at this reduced price with Bracelet Ribbon FREE or Complete Bracelet at one time (3 initials engraved FREE on all links) at SPECIAL PRICE of 59c. State whether Rolled Gold or Sterling Silver LINKS wanted, also Initials.

Monogram Jewelry Co., 112 Nassau St., Dept. 88, New York

Our Honor Roll.

On Our Honor Roll are placed the names of those subscribers to the AMERICAN MESSENGER into whose homes the paper has come for fifty years or more. To the goodly number of names already on the list we are pleased to add that of Jane E. McCall, of Connecticut, who writes:

"I have had the reading of the AMERICAN MESSENGER from girlhood days, and now at eighty-six years of age I cannot do without it.

"I send one new name with a prayer that the reader may receive a blessed realization of God's goodness."

We appreciate the loyalty of this valued subscriber and her co-operation in extending the influence of our paper. If every present subscriber would send us at least one new name, our circulation would be doubled and the usefulness of the paper would be correspondingly increased.

Another name which we are glad to add to the Honor Roll is that of Mrs. Simmons, of Providence, R. I., who writes:

"I do not want to be without the AMERICAN MESSENGER. I have had the reading of it almost all the seventy years of my life. Others enjoy it with me. The articles in it are fine and helpful to all, especially when one is deprived of Church worship by illness."

If there are others who have received this paper for fifty years or more, we would be pleased to hear from them so that that we may add their names to our Honor Roll.

The Church Taking Command
BY REV. ROY B. GUILD.

A group of men in New York City were planning a nation-wide movement. The most strongly emphasized phase of the work was the creating of public opinion to support a world-wide undertaking—"How can we get the churches back of this Movement?" Several religious leaders were called to the conference to answer this question.

Thus it has been for many years. The churches must furnish the money and the men for all great undertakings looking to the welfare of society. The Church has provided the sinews of war, but has not directed the use of the same except where denominational control has been possible.

But today so many of the splendid things being done for communities are outside the boundaries of denominations. They fill in all the space-between. One needs only to refer to the great charitable institutions of our cities. A more or less irresponsible but well intentioned group of individuals, recognizing a real need in the community, forms a committee and starts forth to secure the money to meet the need. The money is forthcoming; good is done; the church people pay the bills and furnish the officers. Then people criticize the churches for doing so little while they praise the organizations thus maintained.

This method is splendid as far as it goes, but it does not go far enough. The church abounds in good works, but too often loses its opportunity to do the best thing because it has not accepted the responsibility and burden of direction. In many cases it could not. The undertaking was too great for any one church.

Fortunately that day is passing in many of our cities. The churches are coming into their power. Not only do they say "Receive thy sight," but they can also say with more power "Thy sins be forgiven thee."

The greatest advance made in the last five years has been in the discovery of the fact that community needs can be cared for by churches recognizing their community interests. In St. Louis, Missouri, over one hundred churches are thus banded together. When the Associated Bureau of Charities is called upon to render assistance to a family, that assistance is given. Most of the money is provided by Christians. Then if the family is not Hebrew or Catholic, Mr. Clair E. Ames, the secretary of the Federation of Churches of St. Louis, is notified. At once he sees to it that this family is assigned to the church most favorably situated to render spiritual help. Everywhere the social workers say that food, clothing and shelter will not re-establish a family. Religion is the most vital factor. Let the churches so do their work that they may not only manifest the spirit of Christ, but may name His name to those who are helped.

Social Betterment is a favorite aim with Christians—"He went about doing good." We give millions of money seeking to bring in the better day, but turn it over to all kinds of organizations, good, bad and indifferent, which are outside of the Church. Denominational rivalry prevents our giving it to any one church and we are too busy with our own peculiar interests to share the burden.

By learning team play the two hundred churches of Cleveland, representing twelve denominations, were able on one hand to persuade the civic forces to eliminate the red-light district and on the other hand to conduct the simultaneous evangelistic campaign by which ten thousand and ninety-eight members were quietly added to the churches in one year. So runs the story in the cities which have strong Inter-Church organizations and employ men to give all their time to co-ordinating their efforts.

A Chamber of Commerce in a great city is the expression of the desire of the business men of the city not only to furnish the capital of great commercial ventures, but also to direct its use for the good of the city.

An Inter-Church Federation, well organized and having a secretary, is to the religious life of the city what the Chamber of Commerce is to the busi-

DRINK GOOD COFFEE

An opportunity is offered to the readers of the AMERICAN MESSENGER to find out what good coffee really is.

Brill's Incomparable Coffee is now offered by mail for the first time, with an absolute guarantee of satisfaction or money back. You take no risk. If we do not sell you a better coffee at the prices quoted below, than you can buy from your local dealer, our guarantee protects you.

The coffee marked with an * has been the private table coffee of the Brill family in Philadelphia for nearly twenty years. It has been selected from hundreds of grades and is positively the best that can be purchased.

By parcel post at WHOLESALE PRICES in 5-pound packages.

Postage prepaid within 300 miles of Philadelphia. Add 20 cents for postage if order is from a greater distance.

*40c grade, 5 pounds - $1.45
35c grade, 5 pounds - $1.25
30c grade, 5 pounds - $1.00

Send for Trial Order of 5 pounds and be convinced

Brill Brothers, (Established 1898)
2741 Germantown Ave.
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

ness life. Fifteen cities now employ such secretaries. The Church has become the manager as well as the provider of the full equipment.

No! It is not enough for the Church to generously furnish the money and the men for all good undertakings. It must not do less but something more. The "something more" is direct control through organized co-operation. It must accept the responsibility of doing the WHOLE task that in the end it may say to the one it has helped in humble service "Thy sins be forgiven thee," or "Follow Him." While much must be done, as at present, in the efforts to serve humanity, it is the plain duty of the Church to be so related to this work so as to secure the greatest spiritual results.

UNSEARCHABLE

RICHES

is the title of a new little book by

Edgar Whitaker Work

All the priceless jewels of Christ's Kingdom spread out before us in glittering array

A booklet for the bedside table.
A dainty gift

White board cover done in gold. 3 1/2"x5" 20pp

25 cents a copy, postpaid;
2 copies 45 cents; 3 for 60 cents; 5 for 95 cents

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY
NEW YORK

THE SCOFIELD REFERENCE BIBLE

A Wonderful Bible for the English-speaking World

With Many New and Striking Features

Rev. C. I. Scofield, D.D.

1. All the great words of Scripture are clearly defined.
2. Chain references, with final summaries, cover all the great topics of Scripture.
3. Every book has an introduction and analysis, thus facilitating Book study—the true method of Bible study.
4. Helps at the hard places.
5. Apparent contradictions reconciled and explained.
6. The types are explained and illustrated by New Testament references.

7. The Greater Covenants are analyzed and explained. All Scriptures gather around these covenants.
8. The prophecies are harmonized, thus becoming self explanatory.
9. The text is the authorized or King James version, with emendations in the margin where needed.
10. Bound in fine grain cloth, with round corners and red edges. Size, 8 by 5 1/2 by 1 3/8 inches. Clear, black-face type.

Endorsed by Popular Evangelists

J. WILBUR CHAPMAN, D.D., says:

"I have received with the greatest possible pleasure the Scofield Reference Bible, and wish to say that I consider it in every way a most remarkable book. It ought to be greatly used and of the greatest possible blessing to its readers, as I am sure it will be."

RICHARD A. TORREY, D.D., says:

"I am so impressed by it that I feel that every minister and Christian worker should obtain a copy. The introductions to the different books are simply invaluable; they pack more sometimes into a single sentence than other books put in a volume. The references are beyond all comparison better than in any other Bible with which I am acquainted."

WILLIAM A. SUNDAY writes:

"Your Reference Bible is the first I ever endorsed. So many Bible helps are so complicated, the average man has hard work to understand them, but I regard yours as the best I have ever seen. I gladly say this because you have not asked for it."

Offer No. 1—We will give this Bible free and post-paid for only ten yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at 50c each.

Offer No. 2—We will give the Bible for five yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at 50c each, with 75c additional.

Offer No. 3—Or we will give the Bible with one year's subscription to the AMERICAN MESSENGER for $2.25.

AMERICAN MESSENGER, Park Ave., and 40th St., N. Y. C.

What 15c Will Bring You from the Nation's Capital

The little matter of 15c in stamps or coin will bring you the Pathfinder 13 weeks on trial. The Pathfinder is an illustrated weekly, published at the Nation's Center, for the Nation; a paper that prints all the news of the world and that tells the truth and only the truth; now in its 24th year. This paper fills the bill without emptying the purse; it costs but $1 a year. If you want to keep posted on what is going on in the world, at the least expense of time or money, this is your means. If you want a paper in your home which is sincere, reliable, entertaining, wholesome, the Pathfinder is yours. If you would appreciate a paper which puts everything clearly, fully, briefly—here it is. Send 15c to show that you might like such a paper, and we will send the Pathfinder on probation 13 weeks. The 15c does not repay us, but we are glad to invest in new friends. The Pathfinder, Box 91, Washington, D. C.

The American Messenger

"Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Luke 2:10

Vol. 75. No. 3

MARCH, 1917

Copyright, 1917, by American Tract Society.

Terms: 50 cents per annum
Single copy, 5 cents

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

PUBLISHED MONTHLY
BY THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY
Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

OFFICERS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President.
JOHN HENRY JOWETT, M.A., D.D., Vice-President.
JUDSON SWIFT, D.D., General Secretary.
LOUIS TAG, Treasurer.
REV. HENRY LEWIS, Ph.D., Recording Secretary.
All of the above-named officers should be addressed at
Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Rev. David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.
Rev. Charles Carroll Albertson, D.D.
Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.
Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D.
Rev. George Ernest Merriam.

Entered at the Post Office in New York as second-class matter.

A World Crisis

The War between the Entente Allies and the Central Powers of Europe has now reached its bitterest and most violent stage, and its latest development has involved the United States in a situation that is fraught with the direst possibilities.

We face a world crisis, and what the outcome will be no one can predict. The relations of our country, hitherto more or less friendly with all the belligerents, have been changed, and diplomatic intercourse with the German Empire has entirely ceased.

The cause for this situation is clear, for by her resumption of ruthless sea warfare Germany has broken the pledges that she had previously given, and the United States had no other alternative than to carry out the policy which our President had announced would be adopted if such a contingency arose.

The complexion of affairs changes from day to day, and it might be said from hour to hour. It is impossible to forecast the trend of events even in the immediate future, and we have to adjust our action to the varying circumstances of each successive day.

We do not wish to discuss here the political, economic or military aspects of the present situation. But it may not be amiss to say a word as to the proper attitude which a Christian should take toward the crisis which has arisen.

The American people have so long held themselves aloof from the present conflict that when we found ourselves confronted by the necessity of action of some sort, it came as a shock, and even yet there are persons who do not perceive the obligation which rests upon us as a nation to take a definite stand not only in defence of our own rights, but in behalf of the rights of humanity.

The duty of a Christian citizen at this juncture is clear and definite. Loyalty to God and to our nation demands that we support our Government with unswerving fidelity in the stand which it has taken for the protection of American lives and for the upholding of those basic rules of humanity which lie at the very foundation of civilization.

In a crisis like that which now confronts us party lines should be forgotten and the one aim of every man, woman and child should be to support our President in the position which he has so carefully and deliberately taken.

Christian citizenship now has a splendid opportunity to demonstrate its true value. Every follower of Christ may now show that religion and patriotism are not opposed to each other, but that loyalty to God and fidelity to our country are both essential characteristics of those who profess the Christian faith.

The present situation calls for a spirit of prayer on the part of all who love God and desire to promote the best welfare of our land. Not only should special days of prayer be observed, but continuous and importunate petitions should be offered at the Throne of Grace that wisdom from above may be vouchsafed to those who have the direction of our national affairs and that every individual citizen may be found ready to perform the duty which he or she may be called upon to do in defense of our homeland and in behalf of the principles of world-wide justice and righteousness.

✻ ✻ ✻

The Progress of the Kingdom Abroad

The statistics of the work accomplished by the Foreign Missionary Societies of the United States and Canada during the past year present some ground for serious thought. The statistics were prepared by a Special Sub-Committee of the Committee of Reference and Counsel of the Foreign Missions Conference, and are presumably more authoritative than any other figures that can be obtained.

The total combined home income of all the societies has increased over two million dollars during the past year, and now amounts to over $20,000,000. The total native contributions also show an increase and now amount to $4,750,681. There are 10,601 missionaries in the field, which is the largest number on record. There are not quite as many native workers this year as last, the number having fallen from 50,001 to 49,305. The number of teachers and scholars enrolled in the Sunday Schools exceeds by over 50,000 the record of last year and now stands at 1,212,287.

The most marked decrease is that shown in the number of persons in full membership in the churches on the foreign field, in which there is an apparent shrinkage of 4,471. Doubtless this is due in large part to the interruption in missionary work due to the European war, which has shed its baleful influence far and wide. It may be also that the statistics on this point are not as complete as usual. In any case, however, there is food for serious thought in the fact that no advance is recorded this year in this vital matter of church membership.

It is plain that unless more progress is made in this direction, Christianity will not succeed in overtaking the increase of population which goes steadily on in almost every missionary land. Much has been said about evangelizing the world in a single generation, but at the existing rate of advance the heathen world would never be Christianized. And yet we cannot believe that the present check in the rate of conversions will be permanent. During the past hundred years wonderful strides have been made, and we have confidence that in due time the missionary enterprise will again resume a triumphant forward march that will assure the winning of the world to Christ.

One thing is certain. Christians must be very much more in earnest than they are now. Some are faithful, but the great body of those who bear the name of Christ show far too little zeal in the prosecution of the great cause of missions.

Yet if the missionaries on the firing line can be assured of the unstinted support and devotion of the church in the homeland, and if they are only given the re-enforcements, both of men and women, and of money that they need and for which they are eagerly pleading, then we may look for a decided advance and may await with implicit assurance the final victory which our Lord has promised to those who go forth in His name.

✻ ✻ ✻

Henry Cole Smith

In common with many other religious organizations the American Tract Society has sustained a distinct loss in the death of Henry Cole Smith, a member of its Board of Managers, who passed to his eternal rest on February 7, 1917.

For many years Mr. Smith was actively engaged in the work of the Presbyterian Church in New York City. He was an Elder in the Fourth Presbyterian Church and Clerk of its Session at the time of his decease, and he will be sorely missed from the membership of that church, in whose life he bore a prominent and most helpful part. Mr. Smith was also Treasurer of the Presbytery of New York, Chaplain of the Lafayette Post of the Grand Army of the Republic and identified with many other benevolent and religious societies.

At the funeral service, which was held in the Fourth Presbyterian Church, his pastor, Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D., paid an eloquent and touching tribute to the memory of this devoted servant of God, drawing from his life lessons of fidelity, courage and faith, which will always be an inspiration to those who knew Henry Cole Smith.

Christian Living in Army Camps

One of the most important phases of Christian activity during the past year has been the work of the Army Young Men's Christian Association with the troops on the Mexican border.

The strongest and most valuable feature of this service has been the emphasis laid on Christian living. The Association's constant effort has been to bring the unsaved soldiers into the Christian life and to strengthen the spiritual life of those already enrolled as Christians.

Forty-two Y. M. C. A. buildings were maintained in the camps along the border, and in these from two to five services were held on each Sunday. During the week two religious services were usually held in each building. The attendance at all the religious services up to the beginning of the present year was estimated at over half a million.

Throughout the various regiments the Association established organizations such as the "Inner Circles," the members of which devoted their energies to personal work. There were also "clean living" groups and "clean speech" clubs.

In the meetings held in the various buildings, "forward step" cards were passed to the men who were present. These cards contained suggested pledges for the men to check off and sign, such as promising to abstain from liquor, tobacco, profanity, obscene language and unclean living, and promising also to read the Bible and to attend a religious service each week, and as an ultimate step to give their lives to Christ. Up to the present time about twenty thousand soldiers have signed these "forward step" cards, promising to take one or more of the steps indicated.

Bible study was another feature of the work upon which great stress was laid. Over twelve thousand men were enrolled in Bible classes and 12,726 soldiers joined the Enlisted Men's Bible and Prayer League, an organization in which men pledge themselves to daily devotional reading and prayer.

As a result of the evangelistic efforts made by the Association workers co-operating with the ministers, evangelists and army chaplains who addressed the soldiers, there were 12,234 decisions for the Christian life.

Every possible avenue of approach to the men has been used. In the hospitals the Association secretaries made 25,944 visits, and thus they brought a strong Christian influence to bear upon the soldiers at a time when such efforts are unusually helpful.

Very wisely the Army Association has made arrangements for "follow-up" work, when the men on the border return to their homes, and the names of those who have signified their purpose to live the Christian life are sent to the secretaries of home Associations and to pastors of home churches.

Messages for Modern Men

BY REV. FRANK B. McALLISTER

Attractive Piety

AN enterprising firm advertises that, as it can no longer improve its particular product, it will now improve the container the product is sold in. Excellent judgment, indeed, and well calculated to boom business! A good article is doubly valued if put forth in a neat package. Jael acted on this principle when the fugitive Sisera came, hungry and thirsty, to her tent. He asked for water but she "gave him milk; she brought forth butter in a lordly dish."

The yellow-hued dainty was served up in fitting style. I have no doubt that the "lordly dish" bore a few sprigs of garnishing, withal, upon its gleaming surface. The defeated chieftain had never known so dainty a morsel as was now set before him. This last meal was made a feast for his eyes as well as for his palate.

In all our human concerns, inner worth is the first consideration, but outer attractiveness follows, at least, close behind it. Man is constrained to look upon the outer appearance, even if God does look upon the heart. The case that holds the jewel counts. The right thing must be done in the right way, if it is to tell in this world. Righteous character must be beautified and embellished, if it is to be fully efficient.

Why should good people ever be stupid and uninteresting? They never should be. Why should church services ever be prosy and dull? There is no reason for it under the sun. When a young man of high character and earnest life was asked why he elected to remain outside the church, he replied, with much frankness. "Because I don't like the people who are inside." He went on to say that neither moral scruples nor intellectual difficulties deterred him, but only his observation of unlovely and indifferent churchmen. We grant the lad's position to be wholly unjustifiable, but we accept his criticism for what it is worth. There are a good many rough and untutored saints inside the church who need to be waked up to their responsibilities. They command respect, but they do not win converts. If the rough diamonds would only submit to polishing, how they might shine and attract!

Piety becomes attractive when it becomes, first, forceful. The good man must be also good for something. President King of Oberlin, once, in a public speech, referred to a dissertation by a classmate on the theme: "Is goodness interesting?" He did not tell the conclusion of the other man, but put his own position thus: "Goodness knows, goodness is not interesting when it consists only in refraining from evil." We are reminded of the schoolboy who wrote an essay on "Pins." He remarked that pins had "saved the lives of a great many people." When asked how this had come about, he replied: "By their not swallowing them." How widely this negative idea of virtue prevails in the world!

Piety is attractive that will not sit with folded hands, but is up and doing at useful tasks. Unless our faith sets us to work, it will make small appeal to red-blooded men and women of today. The rocking-chair type of Christianity is going out. "Oh, to be nothing!" is no longer sung by enlightened Christians. Says Professor Peabody, naming both a disease and a remedy, "How often the man of affairs is tempted to feel a certain contempt for the Church of Christ, when he turns from the intensely real issues of his week-day world to the abstractness and unreality of religious questions.

. . . Let us learn the lesson which even the grasping, unscrupulous world has to teach—the lesson of an absorbed and disciplined mind giving its entire sagacity to the chief business of life."

There is small demand for cloistered virtues in our modern world. The monks have long since been called out of their cells and Saint Simeon from off his pillar. We feel that piety must be gotten out of storage and into contact with the tremendous problems that vex society. Only so can it be either efficient or attractive.

Attractive piety, moreover, must be thoughtful, gracious, and informed with tact. Good people do not always grip men's sympathies as they might, because they are lacking at these points. How often we go blundering along, hurting those around us, and giving pain where we might as well give pleasure! The pathetic prayer that Sill puts into the mouth of the Fool may well serve as a universal human confession.

"The ill-timed truth we might have kept—
Who knows how sharp it pierced and stung?
The word we had not sense to say—
Who knows how grandly it had rung?"

"Our faults no tenderness should ask,
The chastening stripes must cleanse them all;
But for our blunders—oh, in shame
Before the eyes of heaven we fall!"

For careless sins of omission and commission, may the Lord forgive us all! Who has not realized that the blunders of the good are often more difficult to repair than malicious deeds of evil folk, against which we can all be forewarned and forearmed.

Strength is infinitely more winning when combined, as it may be, with beauty. In the cathedral of St. Mark, in Venice, a building fairly gleaming in Oriental splendor—stand pillars which tradition connects with Solomon's temple. They are of solid alabaster and so transparent that the light glows through them in lovely tints. Yet they are none the less firm and durable because they are beautiful. And so it is in regard to character.

What is needed to put the final touch of victory into many lives is just an infusion of grace and courtesy and charm into daily deportment. There are clergymen, deacons, saints, and "pillars" who are simply suffering for a course of lessons in etiquette. With this subtle touch, their austere virtues would become compelling. Honest people are irresistible when they are also polite. Courtesy may oft seem but a trifle; yet nothing is a trifle that conspires to make perfection.

Ah the little more, and how much it is,
The little less, and what worlds away!

We are wont to say of Christianity that it is a matter of great principles, of mighty, fundamental choices; and that is true. We ejaculate with a kind of relish that, if one is right on the essentials, other things will take care of themselves; and that is only half true. Solid foundations are requisite, but a graceful superstructure is, at least, intensely desirable. On firm walls one may build a palace as readily as a cow barn.

There is every reason why a good life should be also an interesting and attractive life. We are called, in the fine Bible phrase, to "adorn the doctrine of God." We are disciples of Him who was not only the world's most radical reformer, but the foremost Gentleman of all time.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTION

CHARLES C. ALBERTSON, D.D.

UNEXPECTED REVELATIONS

BY

REV. CHARLES CARROLL ALBERTSON, D.D.

Pastor of the Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, New York

IF the first question of theology is this, "Is there a God?" the second immediately follows, "Has He revealed Himself to man?" Reason affirms, "If there is a God, a personal God, and if He is good, He must reveal Himself to man." It is not blasphemy for a man to say, "If I were God I would reveal myself to men." That there has been such a revelation we thoroughly believe. That it is a manifold revelation is equally sure. In creation, in history, in the moral law written in our own natures, in the Holy Scriptures, and supremely in Jesus Christ, God has revealed Himself to us. All who will may receive and apprehend the revelation.

That God has revealed Himself specifically to particular persons, as to Abraham and Moses, to David and Paul, is the declaration of our Christian faith. That He has revealed Himself spiritually to multitudes of people through the ages we believe. The history of these revelations and of what resulted from them is in the biographies of the saints. God revealed Himself to William Penn, the Quaker, and John Bunyan, the Baptist. He revealed Himself to Martin Luther, and Protestantism is the fruit of that revelation. He revealed Himself to John Wesley, and Methodism is the fruit. He reveals Himself to humble men and women of whom the world knows nothing. How He reveals Himself is a story which, if it were fully written, the world could not contain. He reveals Himself as comfort to the stricken; as strength to the fainting; as wisdom to the ignorant; as rest to the weary; as refreshment to the languid; as inspiration to the halting and as light to the blind.

The times of these revelations of God to the spirits of His children are the golden hours of our lives. The late Bishop Foss of the Methodist Episcopal Church, while a resident of Minneapolis, suffered a long and painful illness. After his recovery he spoke, but with a strange degree of guardedness, of revelations which came to him during his illness. He referred to one day as "the pearl of days." The details of that revelation may not be known, but the content of it was God's intimate nearness. The meaning of it, if conveyed in a single word, was communion.

The lives of all the saints, and particularly of the mystics, contain the records of such revelations. There was a missionary in the early history of Canada to whom there came a revelation such as that which tradition says the Emperor Constantine saw in the sky. This missionary says he saw a luminous cross. Some one asked him how large the cross appeared to be, and he replied, "Large enough to crucify us all on." Missionaries in difficult fields and in various crises of their lives have had revelations.

It is as though the Infinite Father, with His eyes on all His children, stoops to touch them and to lift them up when He sees them passing through periods of darkness and danger.

The object of special revelations of God to His personal servants seems often to be to prepare them for definite undertakings. The appearance of the man of Macedonia to Paul was of the nature of a supernatural revelation, and his message called the apostle from one continent to another to inaugurate Christian work in Europe.

If we undertake to discover any fixed law governing the times, places and manner of God's special revelations, we shall find ourselves quite as much in the dark as those who undertake to discover laws governing the inspirations of genius. A poet is seated at his desk, or a painter at his easel. Nothing outwardly different occurs from what has been occurring for days or months. A moment comes, however, when the inner ear hears strange voices and the inner eye sees unwonted pictures. Some of the masterpieces of art and literature have been the work of just such inspired moments. Not a few of the noblest hymns we sing have been written at a single sitting.

Among the strangest facts connected with revelations and inspiration is that often these experiences are entirely unexpected. There is a great element of surprise in them. The law of surprise, however difficult it may be to define, seems to be one of the laws of the Eternal One. He visits His people at unexpected times. This is not saying He does not reveal Himself at expected times. He keeps His appointments with His saints. He does not forget the trysting place. Have we ever failed to find Him at the place of fervent prayer, or in the hour of reverent meditation? But the beautiful thing about it all is that there are times when He comes unheralded, when, to use the language of an old poem, "every joy He brings us comes a glad and new surprise."

When God revealed Himself to Moses in the bush, so far as we know, it was an unexpected revealing. When the angel of the annunciation spoke to Mary, she was startled—she had been looking for no such manifestation. Read again the story of the two disciples on their way to Emmaus. Human judgment would lead us to look for Jesus' revelation of Himself to these friends of His at the moment of His first joining them on the highway, or if not then, at the time when He was talking with them about the Scriptures and about Himself. But the exquisite moment of recognition came later, in the common act of breaking bread.

When Mary came into the garden of Joseph of Arimathea on the first Easter morning, she was looking for the body of Jesus in the rocky cavern where it had been laid. He called to her from another part of the garden, but His revelation was so unexpected that she mistook Him for the gardener. When the disciples saw Jesus on the shore of the lake, after their night of fruitless toil, they thought at first that he was a stranger. If they had anticipated His coming, they would have been looking for Him walking on the water. Jesus proves Himself Godlike by revealing Himself at unexpected times and in unexpected places.

God reveals Himself through unexpected media. Friar Lawrence saw God in the blooming tree in the kitchen garden of the monastery. A few days before, the tree had been apparently lifeless. Now it was bursting into bloom. This was the beginning of the man's spiritual history. We should expect God to reveal Himself to a member of a religious order as he bent above his illuminated manuscript, turned the pages of his breviary, or at least as he fulfilled the humble duties of his office. But God used a tree, a fruit tree in blossom in the springtime, to make Himself known to His servant.

There is a difference of statement as to just when Martin Luther first received his vision of spiritual freedom and liberty. The long-received story is that the sentence, "The just shall live by faith," flashed upon him as he was climbing the Sancta Scala at Rome. But the latest of Luther's biographers tells that it came earlier than Luther's visit to Rome, which was in 1510 or 1511; that it was in Wittenberg, as early as 1508 or 1509, while Luther was reading Paul's Epistle to the Romans.

There was a Protestant clergyman who visited Europe about twenty years ago, and one day he entered a great cathedral. He was interested in the edifice more as a work of art than as a place of worship, for his manner of worship was simple, and his church at home was a plain meeting house. But suddenly, under the vaulted roof of this cathedral, amidst symbols of an alien form of worship, God spoke to his soul. That was his "pearl of days."

There seem to be no fixed times and seasons for spiritual visions and uplift, although there should be fixed times and seasons for our exercises of devotion. The universe of spiritual forces is doubtless governed by law, but the laws which determine the places, times and media of special revelations are beyond our knowledge.

God reserves to Himself liberty to come to us when and where and how He will. He sanctifies very ordinary things as channels for His message to us. A common frugal meal may be to us as holy as the Temple at Jerusalem. The angels surrounded Jacob's stony bed. Let us not be surprised if God comes to us at unexpected times. Let us be prepared to see the thousand forms He employs to make us one with Him.

SOUL WINNING BY MAIL

By Rev. Howard W. Pope

FEW people realize how much Christian work can be accomplished by letter-writing. In some cases a letter is a better instrumentality even than a spoken word, for it can be read and re-read, and pondered at one's leisure. Henry Clay Trumbull says that he was led to Christ by a personal appeal from a friend in a letter. What preaching and the ordinary forms of church work had not accomplished for him was done by a few sentences in a note. As he reflected upon this he began to realize the importance of individual work for individuals, and all his life long he engaged in this form of effort.

A prominent business man in a New England town went to his pastor and said that he would like to unite with the church. When asked how long he had been a Christian he replied that he had taken the step only a few days previously, and that he had been led to do this at the request of a lady who had written him on the subject. He said that preaching had not made much impression on him, but that this letter from a person whom he hardly knew, appealed to him so strongly that he could not resist it.

A little mission Sunday-school in Connecticut organized a home department. One of the workers wrote to a friend who was living in the forests of Canada far from any church, and asked if she would not like to join their home department. The reply was favorable and the home department literature was sent. Soon the friend in Canada wrote saying that she thought she could get some of her neighbors to join the Connecticut school if she had the proper literature. In a short time she succeeded in getting twenty-five more members, all of whom became identified with the little mission school in Connecticut, three or four hundred miles away.

They were so pleased with their work that after a while they organized a Sunday-school of their own. Soon they out-grew their accommodations, and raised money and built a chapel. Then they said, "We ought to have a Christian Endeavor Society," and soon that too, was organized. This went on for a time, but the more they studied the Bible the more hungry they grew, and by-and-by they organized a church and secured a pastor. And all this came from one letter written by an enterprising worker in a little school several hundred miles away.

Why should not Christians aim to make their correspondence count for the Master as well as their conversation? There might be some letters in which it would not be advisable to introduce the subject of religion, but on the other hand if the subject were uppermost in one's mind, opportunities would frequently be found to say a word for Christ, or drop a hint, or enclose a leaflet. I know a business man who was writing a letter one day when he saw a tract on his table. He enclosed it and mailed the letter without much thought. Then the devil whispered to him, "You have made a fool of yourself. What do you suppose that man will think of you for putting a tract in a business letter?" Being a Christian he lifted his heart in prayer to God, saying, "Lord, did I make a mistake?"

Back came the answer, "What is to hinder you from putting a tract in every letter you write?"

"By the grace of God I will," he replied, and for the remainder of his life he followed this practice. He saw so much good coming from this kind of effort that finally he withdrew from business, and devoted his life to writing letters and sending out Christian literature of various kinds. Not every one can do as this man did, but all can do something if they will make an effort, and pray for tact and guidance in it.

I know a lady who, to help a drinking man, took him into her family as a boarder. Soon he committed some misdemeanor and was sent to prison. She did not forsake him in his disgrace, but remembering the Master's words, "I was sick and in prison and ye visited me," she endeavored to help him by writing encouraging letters. Soon other prisoners requested that she write to them, and by degrees this work increased until finally she was writing between two and three hundred letters a year to the inmates of different prisons. Her aim was always to lead her correspondents to Christ, but her letters contained much kindly advice, and often in addition she sent little delicacies, or reading that would interest them.

As soon as a prisoner was led to accept Christ she sent him a Bible and concordance, and tried to interest him in Bible study. If he showed much proficiency in this work she entered his name in a Bible correspondence school which took her proteges at half price. Many of her correspondents became teachers of the Bible, and some of them had large classes in their respective prisons. Some of these prisoners, when their term of service expired, devoted their lives to Christian work, after taking a course of study in some institution. I have heard her say that there are eight pastors of churches who were converted while in state prison through her correspondence. Murderers, infidels and hardened men of all kinds, have been led to Christ by this humble woman through her prayers and letters. She is a farmer's wife, has had only an ordinary education, and has taken in sewing and washing in order to earn money to pay the postage. I have heard her say that there had been months when she could not write a single letter because she had not the money to buy a postage stamp.

If God can so signally bless the work of a patient and humble worker, who has made such sacrifices in order to help the unfortunate and criminal classes, ought not others who have more time and money, to ask themselves what they can do to honor God in their correspondence?

✻ ✻ ✻

Prayer

BY THOMAS CURTIS CLARK.

*True prayer is not asking
For some desired prize;
Nor yet is it seeking
To change the All-Wise;
It is but the yearning
To see with His eyes.*

*God hears all true prayers,
And answers—in love.
Not just as we ask
Does the deed always prove—
But are we more wise
Than the Father above?*

*Would He be worth seeking,
If so He should yield
To any chance longing
Of every loved child?
Refusing us evil,
His love is revealed!*

Man's Deeper Need

BY WILLIAM NORRIS BURR.

In the stamp-mill the noise was as the noise of battle. The boom of a cannon, had it been fired within a distance of twenty feet, could hardly have been distinguished from the deep and continuous thunder of the machinery. Down in the "Glory Hole," out of which gold to the value of many millions of dollars had been taken, men were working who, to the observer standing on the rim of the great quartz bowl, appeared scarcely larger than flies.

"This is the second largest gold mine in the United States, as to production, and as to tonnage the largest gold mine in the world," said the guide, as he led the way from the "Glory Hole" to the comfortable quarters provided by the management of the mine for their workmen—a clean, orderly dining room; a library and reading-room; swimming tank and bath-rooms; social and entertainment room, etc. "Nearly two thousand men are employed here, and one cannot easily think of anything more that could be done for them than has been done by the Company." Then he told of the mine's great gold output since its discovery nearly forty years ago.

The mind of one of the visitors slipped from the gold to the workmen.

"Men are more interesting than gold, and worth infinitely more," he said to himself, as he looked into the faces of a number of the workmen who had just come from their shift in the "Glory Hole." And then he felt his heart going out to them in a great passion of desire for the cleansing and ennobling of their inner life, and he longed to stand before them and tenderly point them to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world.

If there were nothing of a man but his body, his brain and his social nature, then all that he would need would be a good dining-room, a library and reading-room, swimming-pool and bath-room, a social and entertainment room, and similar comforts and conveniences. But "there is a spirit in man." And it is in the very heart of the Divine passion for humanity that the needs of this finer life of man shall not be overlooked.

But is it not possible that in trying to place proper emphasis upon the relation of man to man in this day of "social reconstruction" we have not lost, but dimmed our vision of the relation of the Lamb of God to man and man's proper relation to Him?

✻ ✻ ✻

Getting Just Deserts

BY CORA S. DAY.

"He deserves to be poor and friendless! Years ago, when he was well-to-do, he wouldn't notice poor folks. Now he has wasted his fortune and would be glad of a helping hand, even if it was a bit grimy with common toil. I have no time nor sympathy to waste upon this sort." The tone was quite final, but the hearer ignored that fact.

"You poor fellow! Yes, you! You may not be haughty and spendthrift, but you are hard-hearted and scornful, and they are faults, too, remember. Did you ever hear the query: 'Use every man after his desert, and who shall 'scape whipping?' Not many of us would escape, I'm afraid. If everybody were getting his just deserts to-day—just what he deserves—instead of enjoying the toleration and pity and sympathy and help of his Christian fellowmen and their Master—"

"Say, I take it back. You make me ashamed to go about mwhipped. I think I know of a friend of mine who can give that much-to-be-pitied chap I mentioned a fairly good job. Suppose we go see about it right now. Oh, yes, you are going along to see that I've learned my lesson well," and the repentant one laughed as he marched the other off with him on the errand of kindly service to another.

PRINTED PREACHERS

For Italian Soldiers

A great opportunity for the distribution of "printed preachers" in the form of Bibles, Gospels and Christian books and tracts has been afforded by the mobilization of the Italian troops who are now fighting under the banner of their country.

The distribution of evangelical literature among the Italian soldiers has been effected largely through the agency of the Italian Tract Society, which is one of the many societies abroad that are aided by cash appropriations from the American Tract Society of New York.

Rev. Odoardo Jalla is the efficient and indefatigable Secretary of the Italian Tract Society, and in a recent letter to the American Tract Society he wrote: "I enclose herewith a photograph which illustrates how tracts and Gospels are distributed among our brave soldiers."

From the photograph sent by Rev. Mr. Jalla has been reproduced the picture on this page, which shows one of the colporters of the Italian Tract Society in the act of giving out the Gospels and tracts that are so highly prized by the soldiers.

For the Children

John Martino, a missionary colporteur of the American Tract Society in the State of Pennsylvania, has shown his tact by turning to the children when he has found it impracticable to approach the older people in the homes which he has visited in his house-to-house canvass. He writes:

"When the older people did not pay any attention to me, I turned my attention to a group of little children, asking them if they would like to read something. They all answered 'Yes,' but said that they had no money with which to buy. So I distributed among them copies of Apples of Gold and other Sunday School papers that I had. And to the older ones I gave a copy of the tract, 'Come to Jesus.' Then I had a very interesting conversation with them, and they all showed their gratitude by thanking me for the literature I had given them.

"In Pittsburgh I met a little Serbian child about nine years old. She asked her mother to buy her a copy of 'The Bible in Picture and Story,' and pleaded with her mother until the latter gave her permission to buy it.

"In the same locality a little boy wanted a copy of 'Jessica's First Prayer' in the Serbian language. He asked his mother to buy it for him, but she refused, so he took a couple of nickels out of his little bank and secured the book that he so eagerly desired. And this incident reminded me of the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, 'Verily I say unto you, Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven.'

"In Pittsburgh there is a certain house which I called 'The Lions' Den.' I had been there many times, but I never had a chance to speak plainly about the only remedy that can cure even the worst drunkard. The reason was that I always found the inmates of that home intoxicated. But last week I found them sober, so I had a chance to testify for my Master. Not one of the people said a word against me, but all were very much interested in my testimony."

DISTRIBUTING GOSPELS AND TRACTS TO ITALIAN SOLDIERS

In the Puget Sound Region

Rev. Francis E. Smith is a colporteur evangelist working under the auspices of the American Tract Society in the State of Washington, with headquarters at Tacoma. Mr. Smith has devoted special attention to the Puget Sound country, where he has carried on an energetic and systematic distribution of Christian literature which has had far-reaching results. In his annual letter he says:

"This month completes seven years of evangelistic colportage work in the State of Washington. My wife has been my faithful companion during all these years. More than four years of this time has been spent in the service of the American Tract Society. We have devoted our time to house-to-house visitation, coming in touch with people in every walk of life, conversing with them and preaching the Gospel to them by means of the printed page.

"Everywhere we have gone we have seen good results from the distribution of the Society's literature, and many a home has been brightened by the colporteur's visit and by the book which he has left behind him when leaving the home.

"The past year has been a year of many changes in the far West. The old style of building is fast giving way to modern wooden dwellings. I enclose a photograph of a type of building that was quite common among the early settlers, a reproduction of which appears on the front cover page of this issue of the AMERICAN MESSENGER. This primitive schoolhouse, located in Ashford, near Tacoma, Washington, is built of red cedar shakes: these shakes are split out of the finest cedar trees that ever grew; they are shaped to resemble boards and are nailed on the sides and roof of the building, thus making quite a comfortable house for this climate; they would be of but little use in the more frigid weather of the Rocky Mountain States.

"Our country is making great strides in a material way, but spiritually we seem to be falling behind. There is great indifference about the things pertaining to the Kingdom of God; a large percentage of the people never attend church services; ministers of the Gospel are put to their wits' end to know how to reach the people; children are allowed to grow up without any knowledge of God. Here is where the missionary colporteur can do his work. He visits the home and gets the people interested in his books; the children are delighted, because the books are something new to them, and usually the parents purchase something for the children. They may buy but a small amount at first, but it is enough to enable the colporteur to gain a foothold in the family so that a return visit is welcomed, and thus the family is kept supplied with Christian literature until we see a betterment in conditions. This has been our experience in many cases. We have studied the children that come from the homes that are supplied with our publications and compared them with the children who come from homes destitute of Christian literature, and the comparison is decidedly in favor of the children that are supplied with good, religious reading.

"As the masses of the non-church-going people increase, the field of opportunity for the colporteur widens and he is more and more in demand on the street and in the home.

"During the past year I have circulated nearly five thousand printed sermons as an experiment, and good results have followed, showing what can be done with the printed page in this and other communities."

In New York State

Rev. Samuel Goddard, a missionary colporteur of the American Tract Society in New York State, writes:

"A striking illustration of the wonderful power of prayer was seen in this incident. The mother of a son and a daughter who were members of the Salvation Army asked me to pray for them that they might be good soldiers of the Lord Jesus Christ. This I did, bearing their names before the Throne of Grace. When I called some weeks later the mother exclaimed, 'O, my brother, your prayers have been heard and answered! My dear boy and girl have now been safely brought into the fold of the Good Shepherd. The books you gave them, "Bravely Borne" and "Jessica's First Prayer," have done much in helping them. I shall ever be grateful to you.'"

RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS

What Is Your Problem?

This department of our paper is maintained in order to help our readers in the solution of the problems which confront them in their religious life. We therefore urge all who are interested to send to the Editor of the AMERICAN MESSENGER, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York City, the statement of any question which is troubling them. The problems thus presented will be answered by Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D., Pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian Church of New York City, and one of the Contributing Editors to our paper. Only the initials of the writer will be given in connection with any letter that is printed.

We suggest that during the coming month it might be well to consider questions that arise in regard to Sunday School work, and we will be especially glad to know of any problems that are confronting the workers in that department of church effort.

The questions presented for discussion this month and Dr. Work's replies are as follows:

DEAR SIR: It seems to me that Billy Sunday's theology in some ways misrepresents the Christian religion, and that his methods drag it down to the masses instead of lifting the masses up to it. However, believing him to be sincere in his desire to make communities more religious and more righteous, I have not actively opposed him. On the other hand I have not actively assisted him. Do you consider this a right attitude? My thought has been that the good results from his work probably outweigh the harmful ones so that in his case one may properly remain neutral, not hindering his work, but devoting oneself to other lines of Christian work.

M. L.

DEAR FRIEND: It is reported that a certain Episcopal bishop was asked, "Do you approve of Billy Sunday and his methods?" As quick as a flash the bishop answered, "No, but apparently the Almighty does." This states the case with most of us. The writer does not know of any one who approves of Mr. Sunday wholesale. But that does not seem to matter—the work goes right on with increasing power. The truth is that the Lord often seems to approve of persons and methods which men decry. It would be interesting to examine history on this point. Remember John the Baptist. His wild, unconventional ways were too ultra to be approved by the complacent religionists of Jerusalem. They flocked to hear him, but they never thought of sanctioning his methods. Meantime the great wilderness preacher hacked his way into the hardened heart of the nation. Remember Savonarola and the role of the prophet that he assumed. Of course the rulers of the church could not approve of such a firebrand. He observed no rules, made for himself no barriers or limitations. He broke every bondage of the past, exceeded all restraints of utterance. Yet Savonarola was plainly a man sent of God to help prepare the way for Luther and the Reformation. Remember Jesus Christ. Surely our Lord Himself was unconventional. Recall the buyers and sellers in the Temple, and the whip of cords. Remember the swine driven into the sea. Think of a dozen other unexpected, almost sensational things that He did. Did they approve of Jesus? No—they asked instead their supercilious question, "Can any good come out of Nazareth?" Yet His work has gone on, and His name, as one has said, has not only been written, but ploughed into human history.

A careful review of church history impresses one with the fact that God has found use for a great variety of instruments. There has been no fixed plan of doing Christian work. Whenever the church has fallen into conventional ways, it has grown cold and formal. At such times there has usually come a new voice, like that of Luther or the Wesleys or Christinas Evans in Wales, to sound a new note and to call the church out of her ruts. God is not afraid of a sensation. He can use very unexpected and unusual methods. Jesus' miracles were sensational. He did not hesitate to startle men with the unusual. Some persons who criticize Mr. Sunday severely seem to forget that he is by no means the first eccentric and unconventional preacher. There have been hundreds and thousands of them in Christian history. In fact, almost every really successful preacher has had personal peculiarities. We are not advocating eccentricity or sensationalism. We are only trying to show that God has in every age made use of these things in men. Beecher was certainly full of surprises in the pulpit. Do you recall the day he brought a slave girl into the pulpit for auction? We have heard stories of Alexander Maclaren's personal peculiarities—prince of preachers as he was. The conclusion we reach is that God is far more generous towards His workers than we are apt to be. It means a great deal to Him if any preacher or minister of his is "sincere in his desire to make communities more religious and more righteous." We might be willing even to overlook some imperfections in theology, if only the essential truth of salvation and the doctrines of grace is present. It seems that God is willing to go a long way in tolerating the peculiarities of men who are sincere and earnest in their desire to preach the gospel helpfully to men.

Speaking of theology, whose theology does represent the Christian religion fully? Not mine and not yours. We could pick flaws in one another's theology with perfect ease. Yet let us hope that you and I have been in our way giving some true statement of the everlasting gospel to the world. The longer the writer lives and works with men having a thousand varieties of disposition and approach, the more he is convinced that wise workers for God ought to study every possible way of reaching the soul with the gospel.

Perhaps you will feel after reading the above that we have not answered your question at all. But have we not at least given you some material for an answer of your own? Do you not feel in view of past history, in view of God's wonder-working ways with strange and unusual instruments, in view of the sincerity of the man (in which you say you believe), in view of the fact which you admit "that the good results from his work probably outweigh the harmful ones"—do you not feel that you ought to go a long, long way toward giving Billy Sunday the benefit of the doubt; even if it be true that his "theology in some ways misrepresents the Christian religion, and his methods drag it down to the masses instead of lifting the masses up to it?"

DEAR SIR: Does love or fear lead most souls to Christ?

E. L.

DEAR FRIEND: What led you to Christ? It was certainly not fear. And this answer is the correct answer to your question. Fear alone seldom leads to any truly great action. The trouble is that fear contains an alloy of selfishness. No doubt there are elements of fear in many true religious decisions. Nevertheless it is the love of Christ that constraineth us. If it were fear alone that led most souls to Christ there would be a vast falling away. It is unnecessary to say that the "fear of the Lord" spoken of in the Scripture is not the kind of fear mentioned in the question.

EDGAR WHITAKER WORK.

"Four Anchors"

BY EMMA YOUNGLOVE.

"You remember in that story of the shipwreck of Paul he said that they threw out four anchors and waited for day. I have thrown out in my life those four anchors—my faith in goodness, my faith in the possibility of men's accomplishment of goodness, my faith in Jesus Christ as the ideal of goodness, and my faith in the divine helpfulness in the world to help me to goodness." These are the words of a veteran preacher.

Faith in goodness—it is that which leads us to espouse a cause without regard to its unpopularity, to cling to it despite disastrous consequences to ourselves, to do right unflinchingly because it is right. It is that which makes us know that character is a higher possession than wealth or fame. Faith in the possibility of men's accomplishment of goodness inspires us, without yielding to oft-repeated failure, to seek to grow into the stature of the perfect man. This faith sees the divine hope for the sinner. It instigates prison reform, speaks an encouraging word to the discouraged outcast, and reaches forth a helping hand to the degraded in home and heathen lands. Faith in Jesus as an ideal gives us a perfect standard. We would follow Jesus. We would do as He would do. We would have in us the mind and spirit which was in Christ Jesus. Moreover, faith in the divine help girds us with the power of God. In His strength we can resist temptation and accomplish the high purpose for which He has placed us here.

Blessed is the man who, having thrown out those four anchors of faith, hears the voice of the Son of God saying, "As thou hast believed, so be it done unto thee."

✻ ✻ ✻

Hanging Up the Receiver

BY REV. C. A. S. DWIGHT, PH.D.

In telephone usage—which represents the traffic of ideas, and too often the transit of temper—there is need for the same courtesy and mutual consideration that are demanded in the ordinary social intercourse of men. At times, however—though that may be theoretically forbidden—somebody takes up the telephone wire and pours into it petulance, complaint, and abuse of the person at the other end of the line. And quite as often it happens that the supposed receiver of that lecture or tirade hangs up the receiver, and cuts off the connection. It may be the only way, or the quickest way, to end the harangue, or to administer a mild rebuke—and far better than trying to answer back, in angry tones or with doubtful (because impassioned) argument.

In life we must not infrequently pursue this course of "hanging up the receiver." The world is full of false accents, seductive arguments, angry tones and vicious talking. It can do a Christian only harm to listen to such speech. Sometimes he may, after a Pauline or apostolic manner, rebuke it in stern and peremptory tones, and again he may find it the most effective way simply to turn a deaf ear to the talk—in other words, to hang up the receiver.

We are told in Scripture that "a soft answer turneth away wrath." It was so in the days of Solomon, and it is so now. Mutual recrimination settles nothing, and no man can argue with logical precision and judicial comprehensiveness when his heart is stirred with passion and his pulses beat madly.

Too much distraction is the danger of all good people in this rushing age, for by many calls upon their thought and time the mental and moral energies are dissipated, and little of lasting good is, in consequence, effected. It would be well if many of these "demands" competing for our attention were summarily cut off. Do not become the slave of the man at the other end of the line. Be courageous and cool enough to hang up the receiver!

HIS VINEYARD AND OURS

In the Punjab.

Punjab is the name given to a large northwestern province of British India. It has an area of 133,741 square miles and contains a population of over 20,000,000 souls. The chief occupation of the people is agriculture. Some manufacturing is done, the Oriental domestic methods being most commonly employed.

Since the Punjab lies at the northwest gateway of India, numerous migrations and military expeditions from the west have passed through it, making it the scene of frequent conflicts. The result has been to differentiate this province from the other parts of India. The Caucasian blood is more pronounced, as is also the military spirit. The so-called Jats constitute a considerable part of the population and are largely Hindu in faith. The warlike Sikhs are an offshoot from the Hindu Jats. Other elements in the population are the Pathans and the Beluchis.

Delhi is the largest city of the Punjab. Lahore, the capital, ranks second. Most of the population live in rural villages.

Over one half the people are Mohammedan in faith. The Christian community is comparatively small, but it is gradually growing in numbers and in influence.

One of the most important missionary enterprises in this province is the Punjab Mission of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. This Mission carries on evangelistic, educational, industrial and literary work.

The literary department of the work is under the supervision of Rev. E. M. Wherry, D.D., with headquarters at Ludhiana. The last report available shows the publication in one year of 63,000 books and tracts in the various dialects used in the Punjab.

The American Tract Society has for many years aided the literary work of the Punjab Mission by foreign cash appropriations, which have been used for the publication of books and tracts specially needed for evangelistic purposes among the natives.

Recently Dr. Wherry sent a number of photographs to the American Tract Society, among which was one that shows a happy group of missionaries enjoying a unique trolley ride. We are pleased to present a reproduction of this photograph, which demonstrates the fact that foreign missionaries on an outing can extract as much fun out of the proceedings as their American brothers and sisters under similar circumstances.

The Chinese Tract Society.

The Chinese Tract Society recently held its thirty-eighth annual meeting in Shanghai. The General Secretary, Mr. Zee Vee-wai, read the annual report in English and Chinese. The Board of Trustees welcomed to the meeting Rev. Joshua Vale, who has resumed his work as Editorial Secretary of the Society.

The Treasurer in his report acknowledged the receipt of a cash appropriation of $100 in gold from the American Tract Society. He also stated that the Special Chinese Finance Committee had raised the sum of $1,320.81 (Mexican). This statement is very gratifying as showing that the Chinese Christians are keenly interested in the work of the Society.

A hearty vote thanking the many volunteers who assisted the Society during the past year was passed unanimously.

Owing to lack of funds affected by the great war, Mr. Zee Vee-wai was requested to continue his position as honorary general secretary for the ensuing year, the Board much appreciating this voluntary service.

The total number of books and tracts printed during the year was 766,500 copies, comprising about 5,839,000 pages.

The total distribution was 877,329 copies, equal to 9,385,447 pages.

MISSIONARIES ENJOYING A TROLLEY RIDE IN INDIA

The Embarrassments of Success.

In a recent report of the West Central Africa Mission of the American Board which Rev. John T. Tucker of Dondi has prepared on behalf of the mission he makes the significant statement that the difficulties confronting the mission arise largely from success.

The mission occupies a wide field largely in Angola, in Portuguese West Africa, south of the Belgian Congo and north of what was German territory. The people occupy small communities widely scattered so that roads and bridges are a necessity in keeping in touch with them. Ochileso, a station founded in 1903, reports that last year the mission built two stone and three hardwood bridges and that now four roads start from the station. At Chisamba, one of the older stations, the missionaries were asked by the government to supervise the roadmaking, and Dr. Moffat did hard and continuous work in overseeing the building of a bridge over the Ukolongo River and a road over the marsh land on either side. All this work makes it possible for the natives to get to the missionary and for the missionary to go to the native—but it takes valuable time and strength on the part of men whose main purpose and training has not been for bridge building.

The oldest station of the six main centers of the West Africa Mission is Bailundo, which was opened in 1886, and here are boarding schools for girls and boys, a kindergarten and a dispensary which treated, according to last year's report, nearly 2,000 patients. The total number of treatments given by the missionary doctors at this and other stations last year was 32,670. At Bailundo, owing to the rapid increase in church membership, it is impossible to have all the members who would be glad to do so attend communion at the same time.

Evangelism is given the foremost place in the mission work, although the need of schools and teachers along educational, industrial and agricultural lines make great demands upon the thought and time of the Board's staff. From Ochileso, the most northerly of the mission stations, there were made, last year, eighteen trips for the purpose of reaching those who had never heard the gospel.

Ochileso, too, reports an interesting case where the missionaries acted as peacemakers to good effect. There had been an uprising of the natives in the north, near Pungo Andongo, against the Portuguese authorities and the native chief, who was in hiding, sent a deputation to the missionaries asking for advice. They came, hearing fetiches and with much ceremony. Presently thereafter arrived the wife of the Portuguese official who was said to have been killed and eaten by the natives. She desired medical treatment. The outcome of it all was the establishment of friendly relations all around and the mission promptly placed an outstation school in the disturbed district.

All the stations press the evangelistic work. From Sachikela Sunday afternoon trips are led by Dr. William Cammack; and Mr. Hastings, the newest worker, is already able to help in these preaching tours. Mrs. Ennis, at Sachikela, has also had a class of women evangelists which has gone out to other villages, held meetings, called on the women for personal talk and cultivated acquaintance with the leading women in the villages. From Chisamba natives go out two by two to preach in various villages.

The new Training Institute for pastors and teachers opened at Dondi in the autumn of 1914 had forty-four students in residence last year, drawn from all the mission stations; forty-seven candidates are registered for next year. The Dondi course covers seven years. The object is to so train the men that as pastors and as teachers they will be thoroughly equipped and will keep the sense of freshness and of urgency in their message and thus build up the native church.

The girls' schools have not been neglected. At Chisamba "the Savage-Darborn Girls' Boarding School" opened in 1915 with twenty-three in attendance and five added during the year. The girls are taught housekeeping, sewing, basket-making and agriculture in various phases. At Kamundongo more than a hundred girls of all ages and stages in the main school need very much more attention than the small staff of missionaries can give them, while the attendance at the girls' schools in the outstations brings the number up to 360 or more. The Kamundongo Boys' Schools, station and outstation, number an attendance of over 400, among them four boys from the Basuku tribe, a month's journey to the southward. One of these, the chief's son, is most urgent that teachers be sent to his father's people. But where are the teachers?

There is not space to tell of the good done by the mission doctors and we can only hint at the marvelous work of the translators of the Bible and of other Christian books. In both these directions the work could be multiplied over and over to the great advantage of the people, if the men, the medicines and the nurses in one case and the men, the type, paper and presses in the other were available.

A Phenomenal Demand for the Scriptures

A recent evangelistic tour in Salmas, Persia, among the Moslems and Armenians in their villages, resulted in the distribution among these peoples of numerous copies of Bibles in the Constantinople Armenian dialect. These Bibles had been at Tabriz station for a long time as the language is not used in Persia, but when large numbers of Armenians fled from Turkey to Salmas 300 copies were sent for free distribution. The books met with an enthusiastic reception, and in one place the evangelist was almost mobbed by the people in their eagerness to get them. As a general thing the priests and teachers co-operated with the evangelist, having been under evangelical influences in the American Board schools or orphanages, and were most sympathetic and friendly.

In the matter of Christian literature, two small Turkish tracts have been translated and printed on the Urumia Press. They are taken from the series of story parables brought out by the Nile Mission Press. Turkish readers are pleased with them. There is a phenomenal demand just now for the Scriptures from all the races and tongues of the polyglot country. The two colporters of the British and Foreign Bible Society go out expecting to stay several weeks, taking all the books they think they can dispose of in that time, and return in a few days all sold out and asking for more.

A Chinese Oberlin.

The "Chinese Oberlin" is in Shansi Province. It is concerned with secondary education in a very practical way and is made up of an Academy at Taiku, a grammar school at Fenchow, and eight other grammar schools scattered through the Province of Shansi. In its present form it is a memorial to Oberlin College martyrs who perished in the Boxer outbreak of 1900. An Oberlin-trained Chinaman, Mr. H. H. K'ung, is its leading spirit. "King and K'ung"—the chiefs, respectively, of the institutions in Ohio and Shansi—are frequently coupled in accounts of this offshoot of Oberlin. The group of Chinese schools enrolls 700 pupils and employs forty-three teachers. They are largely financed by the self-sacrificing gifts, amounting to $5,000 yearly, of Oberlin students and faculty members. The plant is already of considerable size, thirty-one buildings upon a nine-acre enclosure. For the future Oberlin looks forward to a complete reduplication in China of its college plant, an institution imbued with Oberlin ideals and the Oberlin spirit. What better thing of equal cost could one wish in China?

A Holy Talk

A missionary, some years ago, returning from South Africa, gave a description of the work which had been accomplished there through the preaching of the Gospel. Among other things, he pictured a little incident of which he had been an eye-witness.

He said that one morning he saw a converted African chieftain sitting under a palm tree, with his Bible open before him. Every now and then he cast his eyes on his book and read a passage. Then he paused and looked up a little while, and his lips were seen to be in motion. Thus he continued, alternately, to look down on the Scriptures and to turn his eyes upwards towards heaven.

The missionary passed by without disturbing the good man, but after a little while he mentioned to him what he had seen, and asked him why it was that sometimes he read and sometimes he looked up.

This was the African's reply: "I look down to the book, and God speaks to me. Then I look up in prayer, and I speak to the Lord. So we keep up in this way a holy talk with each other."

Notes upon the Topics Used
in Christian Endeavor
and Other Young People's Societies.

THE PRAYER MEETING

By
Rev. Henry Lewis
Ph.D.

MARCH 4. Service.

James 1:19-27.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Feb. 26. God's demand. Mic. 6:6-8.
T. Feb. 27. Serving men. Mark 10:35-45.
W. Feb. 28. Undivided service. Luke 16:1-13.
T. Mar. 1. Serving a servant. 1 Kings 19:19-21.
F. Mar. 2. Serving Christ. Eph. 6:1-9.
S. Mar. 3. Reward of service. 2 Tim. 4:5-8.

The Epistle of James is full of practical advice, and the portion selected for our topic is especially valuable in its application to our daily Christian living. In these words James sets before us the fact that Christianity requires that we be doers and not simply hearers of the Divine Word.

An Apostolic Ideal

It is a mistake to suppose that the present emphasis upon service is a late development of our Christian faith. Jesus Christ taught the obligation and the beauty of a life of service, and His teaching is re-echoed by all the writers of the New Testament, and especially by the Apostle James.

Service is the most tangible expression of the spirit of Him who came not to be ministered unto but to minister and to give His life for the redemption of humanity.

"Ich dien," meaning "I serve," is the motto of the Prince of Wales, and it is an equally appropriate motto for every child of the eternal King. The spirit of service is not a badge of dishonor but the most royal emblem that we can possibly adopt.

Let us notice that our service, to be acceptable, must be rendered first of all unto God. What we do for others must be inspired by a love for Christ. Unless we are animated by a desire to serve God, our ministry for others will be weak and unavailing.

Action is the expression of thought, and unless our hearts are filled by the love of God, our words and deeds will not be of real service to mankind.

Serving Humanity

In these modern days there are multitudinous lines of service by which we may render help to humanity. Christianity has developed so many agencies for service that there is no excuse for anyone refusing to help along some line of Christian effort.

The Christian Endeavor Society presents many opportunities for service. Both in its regular work and in its special lines of effort there are many openings for whole-hearted and true-hearted service for God and humanity.

The Sunday School presents another fruitful field for valuable service. Not only the teachers and officers but the scholars also may find alluring opportunities for doing good both at home and abroad. As a single illustration may be mentioned the Department for Utilizing Surplus Material, which is a branch of the work carried on by the World's Sunday School Association. This is a line of effort whereby those in the homeland are brought into direct touch with the missionary forces in the foreign field. Full information concerning this attractive line of service may be obtained by addressing the Superintendent of the Department, Rev. Samuel D. Price, Metropolitan Tower, New York, N. Y. (Be sure to enclose a stamp for reply when writing to Mr. Price.)

Social Service

Great emphasis has been laid in recent times upon what is called Social Service. This is a broad term which includes all efforts for the uplift of human society. It includes service for children, service for the sick, the aged, the destitute, the erring and all other needy classes and conditions of people.

Social Service, when permeated with the spirit of Christ, is of inestimable value for the uplift of the race. It is carrying into effect the teaching of Jesus in the parable wherein He said: "Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me."

MARCH 11. Spreading the Good News.

Acts 8:14-17, John 1:35-42.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Mar. 5. The broad field. Luke 24:44-53.
T. Mar. 6. Pentecostal power. Acts 2:1-13.
W. Mar. 7. Passion for souls. 1 Cor. 9:16-27.
T. Mar. 8. Passion for new fields. 2 Cor. 10:13-18.
F. Mar. 9. Bringing our friends. Mark 2:1-5.
S. Mar. 10. Spirit of soul-winning. Jude 20-25.

The object of this topic is to emphasize the subject of Personal Evangelism. The meeting, therefore, at which this topic is considered should be made as evangelistic as possible in every way. If possible, let some evangelist give a brief address on this theme. In any case it would be well to ask the pastor of the church to give some hints concerning personal, evangelistic work.

The Need for Evangelism

To every Christian there comes the divine bidding, "Do the work of an evangelist." Evangelism means simply the proclamation of the good news of salvation through Christ. While all ministers should be evangelists it is not necessary that every evangelist should be a minister. Every Christian is called to aid in spreading the good news of redemption through Christ, and we are not fulfilling our mission in life unless, as ambassadors of Christ, we are proclaiming the good tidings of His Kingdom.

The need for evangelism today is more pressing than at any previous time in the world's history. Despite the fact that Christ bade His disciples go into all the world and preach the Gospel, there are still hundreds of millions of human souls who have never even heard His name, and there are hundreds of millions of others, living in nominally Christian lands, who are yet to be won to His service.

Preparation for Evangelism

To be an evangelist does not require elaborate preparation. But there are certain things that are absolutely essential. First, there must be a full consecration to the Master. We cannot lead others to become disciples, unless we have surrendered ourselves completely to Christ. Second, there must be an endowment by the Holy Spirit. Only Spirit-filled men and women can successfully lead others to renounce the things of this world and to walk in the Spirit. Third, there must be a watchfulness for opportunities to make known the unsearchable riches of Christ and to persuade men and women to accept the gift of eternal life through faith in His name.

Evangelistic Campaigns

There are two kinds of evangelistic campaigns. One is the special movement carried on by a professional evangelist, who comes to a given community for a specified length of time, and who during that time seeks to enlist as many as possible on the side of Christ. Valuable results are often secured by this kind of effort. But there is another kind of evangelistic campaign which is described by the words, "Personal Evangelism." This does not depend upon the services of a professional evangelist. It is not limited to a specified time, but is carried on continuously, and while it does not produce sensational results, it brings into the Kingdom probably a larger aggregate of converted souls than are reached by any other method.

Results of Personal Evangelism

The results of personal evangelism are found in the upbuilding of the Church and the consequent progress of the Kingdom. Personal evangelism means the steady accession of those who are won by the personal appeal of consecrated men and women, and who enter the service of Christ in response to the influence and example of those who bear His name.

Personal evangelism was responsible for the rapid progress of the early Christian Church. It is the agency through which alone we may expect a rapid evangelization of the world today.

MARCH 18. The Curse of Cowardice.

John 18:15-27.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Mar. 12. The root of cowardice. Isa. 51:12-13.
T. Mar. 13. Giants in the path. Num. 13:26-33.
W. Mar. 14. The apostles' shame. Matt. 26:55, 56, 69-75.
T. Mar. 15. Safety first. 2 Sam. 15:13-23.
F. Mar. 16. A cure for cowardice. Luke 12:1-9.
S. Mar. 17. Fearing man, we defy God. Prov. 29:25.

The Scripture incident upon which this topic is based is Peter's denial of Christ. No more striking illustration of cowardice is given in all literature than this thrice-repeated disowning of Christ by one who had said to the Master but a few hours before, "I will lay down my life for Thee."

The predominant cause of cowardice is fear—not the fear of God but that fear of man which makes cravens of us all when once we yield to that ignoble feeling.

Lack of principle is at the root of a great deal of cowardice. The man or woman who is devoid of moral backbone will be the first to fall before the assault of evil. Fear is often based upon imaginary causes. We see lions in the path, but we fail to see the chains that bind them securely. We try to cross difficult bridges before we come to them, unmindful of the fact that we may never be called upon to cross the particular bridge that we dread.

Selfishness is another prolific source of fear. This is the primal cause of unreasoning panics, in which each individual blindly seeks security for himself instead of striving to assure the safety of all.

Incentives to Courage

It will help us to overcome fear if we remember the example of Christ. With Him fear was an unknown quantity. A consciousness of the right is one of the strongest antidotes to fear that we can possibly have. Right makes might, and when we are on the side of the right, we are spiritually invincible.

Truth is a tremendous incentive to courage. On the New York Public Library are carved these words, "But above all things truth beareth away the victory." It is Emerson who has said, "Truth, crushed to earth, shall rise again. The eternal years of God are hers." Faith makes us brave, because it gives us a spiritual insight into things, which is not available to one who is without faith.

There is no greater incentive to courage than love. Mother love will brave all dangers in the effort to preserve the threatened life of its offspring. The love of God will banish the fear of man. The love of Christ will make us ready to endure all things for His name's sake.

The Reward of Bravery

Courage wins honor among men. The coward is despised by all, but the hero who has overcome fear wins the plaudits of the whole world. Courage wins the divine commendation. God bids us be strong and fear not. When we take God at His word and go forward courageously, then we are absolutely sure of His approving verdict.

A crown of life awaits those who overcome fear. "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee the crown of life" is the divine promise.

Encouragement for the Fearful

Peter tasted of the bitterness of the curse of cowardice, but he also experienced the joy of restoration to the divine favor, for he sincerely repented of his cowardice, and became one of the strongest pillars of the Church of Christ.

So there is encouragement for those who have sinned through cowardice. God will not break the bruised reed nor quench the smoking flax. If we strive to lay aside our fears and to walk in the courage that comes from an abiding faith in Christ, we shall receive divine strength.

MARCH 25.

The Saloon—The Foe of Society.

Isaiah 59:1-8.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Mar. 19. Maker of inefficient. Prov. 23:19-21, 29-32.
T. Mar. 20. Maker of irreligion. Isa. 5:11-16.
W. Mar. 21. Cause of a nation's fall. Isa. 28:1-13.
T. Mar. 22. Maker of fools. 1 Sam. 25:36-38.
F. Mar. 23. Maker of illusions. 1 Kings 20:10-21.
S. Mar. 24. Maker of grafters. Isa. 56:9-12.

In the Scripture selected for our topic Isaiah presents a vivid picture of the wrong-doing of Israel. But nothing that Isaiah says about these Israelitish evildoers is too severe to be said about the saloonkeepers of our own day. Of the latter it may be truthfully said, "Your hands are defiled with blood, and your fingers with iniquity; your lips have spoken lies, your tongue uttereth iniquity."

It Blights the Home

The saloon is the eternal enemy of the home. It brings poverty, disease and death to the family. It weakens the marriage bond and alienates husband and wife. It stunts the growth of childhood and embitters the life of the aged. It is the foe of all that is best in the home.

It Corrupts the State

The saloon is the fountain of political corruption. It furnishes the headquarters for criminals. It is often the ally and adjunct of houses of ill fame, and it is constantly the scene of drunkenness and debauchery. It is a constant and flagrant violator of law and it has no respect for authority, either human or divine.

It Devastates the Nation

The saloon is an enemy to the nation, for it decimates the population through the deaths which are attributable either directly or indirectly to its agency.

The baleful influence of the saloon is the heaviest handicap which any nation can put upon itself. It ties the hands of those who would elevate the tone of citizenship, and it makes impossible the achievement of those high aims which patriotic men and women should always cherish for their country.

It Destroys the Spiritual Life

The saddest result of all the evil wrought by the saloon is the destruction of the spiritual life. Drunkenness destroys all the higher aspirations of the soul, and the Scripture tells us that no drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of God.

The Saloon Must Be Banished

There can be no truce between the saloon and the forces of righteousness. The best interests of society demand that the saloon be eliminated from our national life. There is no room for compromise. Either the saloon must go or society will break down.

Happily the trend of recent events in our country seems to indicate very clearly that the saloon is doomed to extinction. Yet we must not be too confident of a speedy victory. The liquor power is strongly entrenched in certain quarters, and it will take strenuous exertion to banish it entirely from our land.

Total Abstinence the Solution

The only effective way to banish the saloon is to establish total abstinence as the practice of the individual in conjunction with prohibition as the law of the State and the nation. To interdict the saloon and yet to provide ways and means for the continued use of liquor as a beverage will not greatly improve matters. The habit of total abstinence must be cultivated and encouraged in every possible way.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Mar. 26. Surpassing wisdom. Rom. 11:33-36.
T. Mar. 27. Protection for travelers. Ps. 121:1-8.
W. Mar. 28. Care for the body. Matt. 6:25-34.
T. Mar. 29. Reviewing God's ways. Deut. 8:1-9.
F. Mar. 30. God's leading. Ex. 13:17-22.
S. Mar. 31. Trusting the Father. Ps. 91:1-16.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS

The Girl in Silk.

BY J. L. GLOVER.

"MOTHER, I just can't stand that new girl!" And with these words Kitty threw her books on the table and herself into the Morris chair with a frounce, which emphasized her sharp statement.

"What new girl? And what harm has she done my little daughter?" asked Mrs. Preston, with a reproving shake of her head at her vehement little girl.

"It's those new people who have just come to live in that old brown house at the foot of the hill," explained Kitty, taking breath. "There's a girl about my age—Madge, her name is. She came to school today, and she's just as proud as can be, mamma. You ought to see the clothes she wears to school; the prettiest dark blue silk, trimmed with plaid, and silk stockings, and such a lovely coat—grey, trimmed with fur. She's real stuck-up about her fine clothes."

"But how did you know she was stuck-up?" asked mother, with interest.

"Oh, she wouldn't speak to Leila and me at recess—just walked by with her head in the air."

"And did you and Leila speak to her, and ask her to join in your play? Remember she is a stranger, and you ought to make the first advances."

"But mother, we wouldn't demean ourselves, when she looked like that, and all dressed up in silk, too. My frock was only gingham, and Leila's was calico. We couldn't go with young ladies dressed in silk."

"Perhaps she would rather have had on gingham, too, and had a good time," suggested mother. "It is never safe to judge too hastily, little daughter, unless you know all."

Kitty looked unconvinced, but she said no more. The next day, however, she came in from school triumphantly.

"Now, mother, she is proud, and I'll prove it to you. Lou Allen asked her to go blackberrying with us on Saturday, and she said Madge just looked down at her silk dress, and said, 'I can't go in this, it would be ruined.' So now, don't you see?"

"I see," returned Mrs. Preston, "but now I have a story to tell you in my turn, little daughter. I went today to call on Mrs. Lindsey, Madge's mother. She is a sweet-faced woman, very gentle and refined. While she talked to me, she was working on a beautiful dress. She seemed to think that I would be surprised that Madge should have such a handsome dress, for after a while she said very quietly that Madge's aunt in the city sent her daughter Ruth's outgrown dresses to Madge. 'And it is a great help,' she added frankly, 'because otherwise I could hardly afford to dress her suitably for school. I know these dresses are too handsome for our circumstances; and it's a real cross to Madge to have to wear silk and velvet, when her little sisters and I wear calico, and everyone knows we are poor. She would rather have ginghams for school wear, but there are shoes and stockings and so many other things to be bought that she will just have to keep on wearing Ruth's outgrown things.' I guess it isn't a very heavy cross," Mrs. Preston ended, smiling, "but I knew, from what you had told me, that it is a cross, and not a light one, sometimes, to a girl, to be misjudged by her schoolmates. And you girls haven't helped to make it easy for her, have you?"

Kitty looked ashamed. "I'm sorry, mamma; but how could we have guessed such a thing? I wonder if we could fix it up in some way, without hurting her feelings. I know, mother. You remember that blue gingham of mine that was too short, and I've never worn it. Do you think—"

"I think you might suggest in some nice way to lend it to her to wear blackberrying. Do it in a friendly way, and I don't believe she will take offence."

"I'll try it," promised Kitty.

The next day she sought out Madge at recess, and made friends; and soon they were thoroughly "chummy." Madge proved a congenial spirit, and before long a group of girls were eagerly discussing the blackberrying party they had planned for Saturday.

"You'll come with us, won't you, Madge?" asked Kitty, as the two girls walked homeward together, after school. "Do come, we'll have such fun."

And this time Madge answered very frankly:

"I'd like to, Kitty, really, but—I know it sounds funny, but I haven't anything to wear but this," looking down at her handsome suit, "and it would be spoiled

"Thank you," said Madge, simply, "I'll be glad to go blackberrying, then, Kitty. It was just this stupid old dress that stopped me."

So the next day a merry party of girls went to the blackberry fields, and, getting their pails and baskets full of great, juicy berries, they took the girl in the blue gingham dress into their innermost circle of comradeship.

"We had the best time, mother," said Kitty, that night. "Madge is so nice; and she helped everybody pick, and didn't mind whether she had her own basket full or not, and she told funny stories to amuse little Janey when she got tired and began to cry on the way home; and told us how to play some new ing diluted by that chilling rain. He kept on crying his papers until he had only a half dozen left, but those must be sold before he could go home.

The boy finally grew so numb and tired that he crept into the shelter of a hotel side doorway, out of the rain. Of course, there was little chance to sell papers there, but he felt he must rest a bit, out of the rain, discouraged little fellow that he was! The world looked dismal to him just then. And all the while a bright streak was traveling his way to make him happy, though Ted did not know it.

Two gentlemen were coming that way, through the rain, talking earnestly. "Tell me how to be happy," said one man to his friend, who always carried a smiling face.

"Why do you ask that?" came the question.

"Because I would like to do something with my money, and what better thing could I do than to get happiness with it?"

"There is only One who can give you the greatest happiness," said the smiling man, "but you can get a good deal of happiness with your money, by giving it away. Have you tried that?" The other man acknowledged that he had not experimented in this direction to any extent.

"Begin now," said his companion. Just then he looked up. The two had come near to the shivering newsboy in the doorway. "Begin here," the cheerful man said, stopping on the sidewalk, before getting within ear-shot of Ted. "Look at that poor little fellow in the doorway, with the papers that he can't sell, at this late hour. Buy them all and give him fifty cents. See if that does not make him happy, and you too."

"I'll do it, and see," said the other, and the two walked on.

"You still have papers to sell," he said to Ted. "But you haven't much chance to get rid of them here." The boy shook his head.

"How old are you?" asked the man.

"Most ten," was the reply.

"Have you a home?" was the next question.

"Yes," came the answer.

"A mother?"

"Yes."

"Anybody else in the home?"

"Sister two years younger than I—that's all. I help support the family."

"Give me your papers, and take this." The stranger handed the boy a half-dollar, took one paper, and handed back the rest, saying, "Sell these on the way home, if you can."

Ted seemed too dazed with happiness to do more than stammer his thanks, but his radiant face spoke for him, as he presently rushed away, leaving two smiling gentlemen behind him.

"How do you feel?" asked the first.

"Well, it did make me feel better to see that boy's face light up."

"That makes two happy folks," said the other, "and I myself am glad to see the other two, which makes three. You may be sure that the mother and little sister will soon be happy, too. That makes five for fifty cents—a large number to make happy for so small an amount. You'd better go on doing this kind of work."

"I will," was the glad answer.

In a Buttonhole, or in the Soul

The city cousin had an artistic little buttonhole bouquet pinned to the lapel of his coat. He looked at his country cousin, who had none, with disfavor.

"Tom," said he, "don't you country people care anything about flowers?"

"What do you mean?" was the reply.

"Why, you never take the trouble to have a buttonhole bouquet. Why don't you?"

"Well," returned the country boy a little hesitatingly, "maybe it's because the flowers sort of grow in our souls that we don't think about having them pinned to our coats."

PEEK-A-BOO.

with the briars. I'll explain to you about it, some time."

"Oh, but what a pity," said Kitty, impulsively. "Of course you couldn't wear that lovely dress, you want a gingham—something that won't tear, and will wash."

"I know—but I haven't one good enough," said Madge.

"Well, but listen, Madge. I have a pretty little blue gingham I've never worn. It doesn't fit me, but you are just a shade smaller and it would fit you exactly. Please let me lend it to you, and come, Madge. You won't be mad, will you?"

"But suppose it got torn," demurred Madge.

"It wouldn't matter. Come, it's all settled. I'll bring it over this afternoon, shall I?"

games. We wouldn't have had half as much fun without her; to think we called her proud and stuck-up!"

"Judge not, that ye be not judged," quoted mother, softly.

"Well, I'll never judge anybody hastily again—that's positive!" said Kitty.

Madge came to school on Monday in a beautiful brown plaid silk, but nobody thought of calling her proud again. She had won her own place in the little world of school.

Five for Fifty Cents

BY JULIA H. JOHNSON.

POR TED shivered on his newsboy's beat in the wet city street. What a cold rain it was that came pelting down. Ted was not ten, and his stock of courage was in danger of be-

Our Fireside

THE TWO PARKS

By William Norris Burr

IN a city that is reached by way of The-Street-That-Is-Not-Far-From-Every-One-of-Us are two parks. One is known as the Park-of-the-Helpers and the other is called the Do-Not Park.

One day mother was very, very busy, so busy that she was sure she could not stop to help Fred with his kite-making, nor to tie Marian's ribbon, and she did not want to run the risk of being called out to wipe away Teddy's tears if he should stumble over the garden rake that Fred had carelessly left right across the walk in the back yard. So she told the children they might go over to Do-Not Park and play there all the afternoon—only they must be sure not to break any of the park rules.

This was a rare treat for the children, and they started off in high glee. The sky seemed like a great wide canopy of tender blue stretched over them protectingly, and the sunshine was just loving-warm—not the least bit hot and uncomfortable—and the birds were singing sweet little freedom songs, something like:

"Happy and free,
Happy and free,
We are as happy as we can be!"

"So-are-we, so-are-we, so-are-we!" sang the children, for they could not help singing something when everything in all the world about them seemed to be having such a good time!

They soon reached the trim and beautiful Do-Not Park, for it was not very far from their home, and they just skipped through the gateway, they were so light-hearted.

"Oh, what a soft, cushiony lawn!" exclaimed Marian. "It looks just like yards and yards of green velvet. I'm going to lie right down on it and shut my eyes and try to imagine that I am the Queen of the Park reclining on a couch of down."

"The 'downs' are all in your talk, sister," said Fred, with a look spreading over his face that did not seem to harmonize at all with the "happy and free" song of the birds. "That sign there says 'Keep off the grass.'"

"Oh!" sighed Maid Marian, and the Cloudy Feeling began creeping into her heart, crowding out some of the Happy-and-Free Feeling.

They walked on around the curve to the big fountain and stopped to watch the dancing water-drops as they rose and fell and sparkled in the sunshine like diamonds.

"It's easy to imagine they're diamonds," said Marian, a bit dreamily. Marian was "always imagining," Fred often said, with a sniff of masculine contempt for any such weakness.

"I'd rather be a water-drop any day than a cold, hard diamond," he muttered, "only I should think these water-drops 'd get awfully tired jumping up-and-down, up-and-down, just so, all day long."

Somehow the fountain did not seem very satisfying after that, and the children soon trudged on.

"I want a flower," demanded Teddy, as they came to a great clump of shining "Golden-glow."

"No flowers for you to-day, Teddy boy," said Fred. "That sign reads 'Do not pick the flowers.'"

"Why does it?" persisted Teddy.

"Oh, I guess it's just because this is 'Do-Not' Park," explained Fred, his fingers itching to grip his old Barlow knife and cut out every bit of the word 'Not' on that little park sign.

"I'm tired walkin'," hinted Teddy sleepily, as they went on around another curve in the walk.

"So am I," sighed Marian. "Let's rest awhile on that bench over there. Does it say anywhere 'Do not sit on this bench?'"

"No; I guess we can sit there a minute or two if we want to," Fred replied, rather doubtfully. "Oh, fiddle!" he exclaimed a second later, as he was helping Teddy up to a seat on the bench.

"Any more 'Do Nots'?" asked Marian, beginning to feel crawly all over, just as she did once when Miss Caroline Estabrook was reading "The Goblins 'll Git Ye ef Ye Don't Watch Out."

"Same thing," replied Fred. "That one over there reads 'No lurching in this park,' and I've got three cookies here in this paper bag—one for each."

"I want one!" said Teddy, hungrily, reaching out a fat little hand.

"Well, you'll have to wait until we get out of this," said Fred, getting up from the bench. "I guess we'd better go back outside there somewhere and eat our cookies and then go home and play in our own back yard. This park's too 'Don'ty' for me!"

A little later mother heard some very familiar voices just outside the back door.

"Why! Haven't you gone to the park yet?" she asked, appearing in the doorway with her hands filled with her work.

"We've had enough of it!" snapped Fred. "They'll hardly let you breathe over there. You might puff something out of place."

The next day Uncle Doctor came along with his automobile and offered to take the children with him on a trip out near the Park of the Helpers. He was going out there to see a patient or two.

"They can play in the park while I am looking after my sick folks," he said to mother.

The Park of the Helpers was not so easily reached from home as was Do-Not Park. But the children were happy as larks riding with Uncle Doctor, and when they reached the Park of the Helpers they were almost as much in tune with the birds and buttercups and all happy outdoor things as they had been the day before, when they went dancing into Do-Not Park.

Perhaps the Park of the Helpers was not quite so trim and prim as was Do-Not Park, but Fred felt, the minute he found himself inside the entrance, that here was a place where he could take a deep, deep breath—and just as many of them as he wanted to—without fear of puffing a posey all to rags and tatters and blowing the leaves and petals all over the lawn.

"Is that a 'Do-Not?'" asked Marian, when they had gone a little way into the park. She was pointing to a neat sign-board that had been set up where two wide roadways wound away in different directions.

"Not much!" replied Fred, with a ring in his voice that sounded something like the "Glad Christmas Bells" song they sang every winter in Sunday school. "That says 'Help us to keep this park clean and beautiful.' That's business, and we'll make it our business, kiddies, to keep everything as spick and span as we find it, everywhere we go in this beauty spot."

"It's the dandiest place I ever got into, and I'm going over there every chance I get," Fred reported to mother when Uncle Doctor brought them home late in the afternoon.

That night mother told father all about the children's visits to the two parks, and father and mother had a good long talk about it.

Finally father said: "At our next directors' meeting I shall suggest the adoption of the Park of the Helpers' principle in the management of all our affairs at the factory."

And mother added, tenderly: "The two directors of this home of ours, which has three of the dearest children in it that ever were born, will run it on the Park of the Helpers' principle, too."

"That principle is one of the keys to the Boy Problem," declared father. Just at that minute he was thinking a bit wistfully of Fred.

TREMENDOUS VALUE FOR 15c

The Pathfinder, Leading Weekly Magazine of Nation's Capital, Makes Remarkably Attractive Offer.

Washington, D. C., Special—People in every section of the country are hurrying to take advantage of the Pathfinder's wonderful offer to send that splendid illustrated review of the whole world thirteen weeks for 15 cents. It costs the editor a lot of money to do this, but he says it pays to invest in new friends, and that he will keep the offer open until the Pathfinder passes the 200,000 circulation mark, which will be in a few weeks. Fifteen cents mailed at once with your application to Pathfinder, Box 91, Washington, D. C., will keep the whole family informed, entertained, helped and inspired for the next three months.

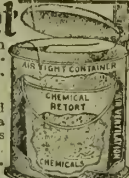

Comfort Indoor Closet

Odorless, Sanitary, Germ-proof. Can be placed anywhere in home. A guarantee of healthy, sanitary conditions.

ABOLISH OUTDOOR CLOSET

Have city conveniences. Germ-life killed instantly by chemicals. Emptied once a month. Needs no other attention. Boards of Health endorse. Write for literature. Agents wanted—exclusive territory.

COMFORT CHEMICAL CLOSET CO.
1943 Factories Bldg. TOLEDO, OHIO

DON'T decide on the new hymn-book for your Church or Sunday School until you have seen

HALLOWED HYMNS
NEW AND OLD

Edited by IRA ALLAN SANKEY
Son of the famous Singing-Evangelist
Ira D. Sankey

OVER 550,000
COPIES ALREADY SOLD

Responsive Scripture Readings
No Trasy Words No Jingly Music

Price $25.00 per 100 not prepaid
35 cents per copy by mail

Examine a copy and prove its value in your work. (Returnable if desired.)

The Biglow & Main Co., New York
Chicago

"The Coming of the Lord Draweth Nigh"

The Scriptures Examined on the Length of the Times of the Gentiles, When They Began Definitely Established. When they will close demonstrated, subject to uninspired History and Chronology.

The Rapture and the Revelation demonstrated to occur at the feast of trumpets, which is the Jewish New Year's Day.

The Year-Day Principle God Given.

The Prophecy of the Seventy Weeks proved to be a Year-Day period.

Light on these questions promised at "the time of the end."

64 Pages, Sixth Edition, Enlarged with Appendices, Extracts from letters, and Last Call for Supper.

125th Thousand. Price: Postage Paid, 5c each; 30c doz.; $2 per hundred.

This Pamphlet is Unique in its teachings, showing the proximity of the Coming of the Lord.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.—Please Read.

"I consider it the most remarkable treatise on the prophecy of the present age and the other matters of which it treats that I have ever read. Some months ago a friend handed me a copy of your March 20th, 1916, edition. I read it with profound interest. I never in all my Christian course read anything that made such a deep impression on me and I believe every Christian ought to know the plain teaching of the Scripture as indicated by the Word you quote."

"Thank you many times for sending me the book, 'The Coming of The Lord Draweth Nigh.' I prize it much more than I can say. I never read any book so clear in my life, and I do rejoice in the bright hope and the blessings so soon to dawn upon us."

"Your presentation of the subject will be most helpful. I myself have had a grip of the precious truth for many years and it has been as an anchor to the soul in times of stress and strain, but like so many other readers or students that view of the Feasts and their antitypes is altogether new, and it grips wonderfully. Thanking you cordially and wishing you increasing light, yours very sincerely."

"I went out visiting and giving away 'The Coming of The Lord Draweth Nigh.' Everyone that has had the former edition seem so keen to get this copy. They beg for extra copies to send to friends. I never have seen such a keen desire for any tract, I have given away before, as there is for the pamphlet. One Presbyterian said, 'It's the sweetest thing I ever read on the Lord's Coming for it is the Pure Word of God.'"

"I have just read your pamphlet and I praise the Lord for the hidden treasure he has yielded up to you."

"Kindly send me 12 copies of 'The Coming of The Lord Draweth Nigh.' I think it is the best book that I have ever read of its kind. I have read the following authors' books on the coming of Jesus, By C. H. M., R. A. Torrey, A. C. Gaebel, C. O. Scofield, Mrs. G. C. Needham, William Redding, W. Scott, A. C. Sims, T. C. Tranberg, W. E. Wine, Marr Murray, F. C. Jennings, Seventh-Day Adventists and others."

"I have just read your tract on 'The Coming of The Lord Draweth Nigh.' I find your tract startlingly suggestive. All the more so, that from a very different angle you reach, in many ways, the same conclusions as a long study of Revelation has led me to adopt."

"Received the booklets you sent me some time ago and find the great truth of His second coming explained in a very convincing way. I have been reading and studying some along this line and your pamphlet is the most concise study I have found yet. May the Lord continue to lead you in this work."

"Enclosed find check for $1.20, for which send me 48 copies by return mail."

"I got one of your tracts the other day, 'The Coming of The Lord Draweth Nigh,' and I just ate it up and it was neither bitter in my mouth or in my belly. It was as David said of the word, it is sweeter than the honey and the honey comb, but I found I had eaten it too fast to digest it and am now reading the second time and oh, how the light is breaking in. I just laid it down and I am sending 60 cents to get some to give out. I am anxious for others to feast upon this living bread. My God bless you, is the prayer of your Brother in Christ."

"I am enclosing 80 cents for which please send me a supply of the pamphlet, 'The Coming of The Lord Draweth Nigh,' for distribution in my Bible Class. I consider this one of the best and most Scriptural expositions of the 'Times of the Gentiles' that I have seen."

ADDRESS C. J. BAKER, 621 WYANDOTTE STREET, KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI, U. S. A.

You Can Snap Your Fingers at the ill effects of caffeine when you change from coffee to

POSTUM

"There's a Reason"

Look for Virtues

BY HELEN M. RICHARDSON.

"THE fact is, mamma is always watching me. If I put on my hat she wants to know where I am going. If I am five minutes late in coming home she wants to know where I have been. I am tempted to all sorts of indiscretions for this very reason. It's extremely annoying to be watched all the time; don't you think so?"

It was during an electric car ride that the above words fell upon my ear. The girls who were talking together sat directly opposite me and I could not help noticing the difference between the two faces,—one discontented and fretful, the other serene and cheerful.

"My mother never nags, she seems always to expect the best from me, and I wouldn't disappoint her for the world," was the quiet answer.

The brows of the first speaker came together in a frown as she went on:

"If mamma would only be less exacting and ever think that I was going to do the right instead of the wrong thing, but I gave up trying to please her long ago, and now one is always satisfied, and that one is myself."

The girl gave a short, flippant laugh, and just at this interesting point in the conversation I was obliged to leave the car; but I had food for reflection, which has not yet been exhausted. Why can we not always expect the best from others, instead of looking for faults that might never appear but for too close an espionage?

Mothers, especially, err in this respect and often bring about the very evils they seek to avert. Human nature is prone to contradictions. Tell a child that he must not play with matches, and ten chances to one he will indulge in the forbidden luxury at the very first opportunity. Tell him he must not deceive you and he will be very apt to try an occasional harmless subterfuge to test your ability as a detective.

To expect the best is a theory which too many guardians of youth utterly ignore in dealing with those committed to their care.

An old lady once made the quaint remark: "I feared a fear and it came upon me." And is it not often true that the evils we are dreading do swoop down upon us, while those we ignore never materialize?

The mother who keeps the idea of wrong-doing ever in her child's mind by continually counseling its avoidance may thus be nurturing the very trait she seeks to guard against. She also shuts out from the child's life much of the sweet and invigorating atmosphere of trust and comradeship so essential to the upbuilding of a character that shall be strong to withstand in the hour of temptation.

A good example is more effective than pages of rules or strings of reprimands. Wise counsel is judicious, but unwise nagging generally defeats its aim.

Begin at the Bottom.

An ambitious young man asked an experienced business expert to tell him how to start his career in a manner that would most nearly insure success and the experienced man said: "Begin at the bottom."

Seeing the look of incredulity on his young friend's face the expert continued: "One of the greatest banes of the business world today is the unwholesome desire of those who are entering the ranks to begin high up—what they term the easy jobs. These same youngsters would at once realize the folly of trying to build the walls of a house before the foundation was securely laid; but they do not seem to realize that it is just as foolish to try to build a life career without first securing an intimate knowledge of the fundamental principles of their chosen profession. Begin at the bottom, young man—but don't stay there."

This fault of trying to rear a structure without first properly laying the foundation is just as common in the religious world as it is in business life. Too often an effort is made to reap when no sowing has been done. We seem to expect our church, Sunday school or young people's society work to move off as if the car of progress was headed down hill instead of up. This will not do. Work—hard work—must be done. Our lessons must be well prepared, assigned work must be faithfully performed, committee duties, even when tiresome and seemingly unimportant, must be properly attended to before we, or our work, will show a healthy forward movement.

Quicker action can be secured by commencing at the top and working downward than by commencing at the bottom and working up, for the same reason that you can slide down a hill much quicker and easier than you can climb up it. But the result is disastrous—the cherished work lands in the valley of defeat instead of on the hill-top of success.

If work of permanent value is to be done an enduring foundation must first be laid. Obstructions must be carefully removed, suitable material for the foundation should be secured, the work on the foundation, even though it is to remain forever out of sight, must be done in the most thorough way. Then the work can proceed in an orderly, substantial manner.

"Begin at the bottom."—KIND WORDS.

A Welcome Guest

A friend in Long Branch, N. J., writes thus to the Editor of the AMERICAN MESSENGER:

"It is with much pleasure that I again enclose another year's subscription to your most excellent and valuable periodical. The AMERICAN MESSENGER is so fraught with interesting as well as profitable reading that it comes as a welcome guest every month and should readily find a place in every home."

"With Great Interest"

A subscriber in Binghamton, N. Y., writes:

"I have taken the AMERICAN MESSENGER twenty-five years, always reading it with great interest, and I pass it along to others."

A Hand on the Shoulder

When a man ain't got a cent,
And he's feeling kind of blue,
And the clouds hang dark an' heavy,
An' won't let the sunshine through,
It's a great thing, O my brethren,
Fer a feller just to lay
His hand upon your shoulder
In a friendly sort o' way.

It makes a man feel curious,
It makes the tear-drops start,
An' you sort o' feel a flutter
In the region of the heart;
You can look up and meet his eyes;
You don't know what to say
When his hand is on your shoulder
In a friendly sort o' way.

Oh, the world's a curious compound,
With its honey and its gall,
With its cares and bitter crosses—
But a good world after all.
An' a good God must have made it—
Leastways, that is what I say
When a hand is on my shoulder
In a friendly sort o' way.

—JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY.

100 Samples of Beautiful Wall Paper FREE

IN our 1917 Wall Paper Book—filled from cover to cover with hundreds of offers that will help you to radically reduce the cost of wall papering your home. Send for book of samples today. Satisfaction on all purchases guaranteed or money back

Address House Near-est You Montgomery Ward Co. Dept. A154
(Satisfaction Guaranteed or Your Money Back)
NEW YORK CHICAGO KANSAS CITY FT. WORTH PORTLAND, ORE.

Club Raisers Wanted

We will allow a very liberal cash commission or some of the beautiful and desirable articles that we offer as premiums.
AMERICAN MESSENGER, Park Ave. & 40th St., N. Y.

"The Leading
FIRE INSURANCE
Co. of America"

Incorporated 1819.

Charter Perpetual.

Cash Capital,	$5,000,000.00
Cash Assets,	26,693,568.89
Total Liabilities,	13,547,121.90
Net Surplus,	8,146,446.99
Surplus for Policy-Holders,	13,146,446.99
Losses Paid in 98 Years,	157,580,593.27

WM. B. CLARK, President.

Vice-Presidents,

HENRY E. REES, A. N. WILLIAMS

E. J. SLOAN, Secretary.

Assistant Secretaries,

E. S. ALLEN, GUY E. BEARDSLEY, RALPH B. IVES

W. F. WHITTELSEY, Marine Vice-President

R. E. STRONACH, Marine Secretary

WESTERN BRANCH, 175 W. Jackson Boule'd. Chicago, Ills.	{	THOS. E. GALLAGHER, Gen'l Agent. L. O. KOHTZ, Ass't Gen'l Agent. L. O. KOHTZ, Marine Gen'l Agent.
PACIFIC BRANCH, 301 California Street, San Francisco, Cal.	{	W. H. BREEDING, General Agent. GEO. E. TOWNSEND, Ass't Gen'l Agent (Fire). E. S. LIVINGSTON, Ass't Gen'l Agent (Marine).
MARINE DEPARTMENT	{	CHICAGO, Ills., 175 W. Jackson Boule'd. NEW YORK, 63-65 Beaver Street. BOSTON, 70 Kilby Street. PHILADELPHIA, 226 Walnut Street. SAN FRANCISCO, 301 California Street.

SPEED

combined with good judgment counts in business now-a-days.

Grape-Nuts
FOOD

supplies balanced nourishment for sturdy muscles and active brains

"There's a Reason"

No change in price, quality or size of package

THE TREASURY

SPECIAL NOTICE

OWING to occasional losses of letters, containing money, we would request friends and donors of the American Tract Society to remit by check or Post Office Money Order, which latter can always be duplicated in case of loss.

Receipts of the American Tract Society During January, 1917

Total Donations (Including $570.10 for Special Objects), $2,547.78.

CALIFORNIA, $101.48.

Mr. Klages, $2; Mr. Tcevs, $0.65; Mr. Mast, $2.15; Mr. Ochs, $0.65; Mr. S. Heer, $1.15; Mr. H. Heer, $2.18; Mr. Beck, $0.50; "A Friend," $5; Mr. White, $5; Rev. Mr. Hills, $50; Mr. Schroeder, $1; Los Angeles, Church Offering, $5; Mr. Vandewater, $1; Mr. Hohermann, $0.25; Miss Bigelow, $1; Mr. Avink, $0.50; Los Angeles, Church Offering, for Soldier's Text Book, $14.70; Mr. Schmidt, $2; San Diego, Church Offering, $6.75.

COLORADO, $5.

Canon City, Church Collection, $5.

CONNECTICUT, $216.62.

Mr. Aytrigg, $5; Norfolk, Church Offering, $32.38; Miss Millard, $1; Coventry, Church Offering, $5; Miss Rankin, $1.50; "A Friend," $1; Hartford, Church Collection, $25; Mrs. Perry, $5; Stratford, Church and Society Collection, $5.50; Enfield, Church Offering, $10.05; "A Friend," $2; Wilton, Church Collection, $5; Miss Rogers, $5; Hartford, Church Offering, $2; Norwich, Church Collection, $1.19; Mrs. Williams, $10; "A Friend," $1; Mrs. Eggleston, $5; Miss Daggett, including $3 for Latin America, $5; Mr. Hawley, $5; Miss Gulliver, $1; Mrs. Barlow, $5; Mr. Mansfield, $7; Mrs. Linsley, $1; Mrs. King, $10; Miss Curtiss, $1; Miss Belden, $3; Mrs. Stearns, $2; Miss Belden, $2; Mrs. Marsh, $1; Rev. Mr. Requa, Jr., $10; New Britain, Church Offering by a member, $20; New Britain, Church Collection, $10; Mr. Nash, $5; Mr. Williams, $1.

DELAWARE, $12.

Mr. Hazard, $2; Miss Smith, $10.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, $12.41.

Mr. Baldwin, $5; Washington, Church Offering, $7.41.

FLORIDA, $5.41.

Mr. Munson, $5.41.

GEORGIA, $3.

Miss Clay, $3.

IDAHO, $10.

Mr. Williams, $10.

ILLINOIS, $39.36.

Mr. Hirstein, $3; Mrs. Lesser, $0.50; Mrs. Anshicks, $1.18; Mr. Frew, $2; Pekin, Sunday School, $10; Eureka, Church Offering, $0.68; Summerfield Church Collection, $5; Elizabeth, Church Offering, $10; Galena, Church Offering, $2; Mr. Palmer, $5.

INDIANA, $17.

Mr. Fassnacht, $3; Mr. Bowser, $2; Miss Newcomer, $2; Mr. McKibben, $10.

IOWA, $111.57.

Mr. Martin, $0.65; Keokuk, Church Offering, $10; Mrs. Rev. Uhlmann, $1; Mr. Pfennings, $0.65; Mrs. Brouwer, $6.20; Mr. Rednius, $0.65; Mr. Voss, $0.65; Storm Lake, Church Offering, $10; Mr. Nielander, $6; Doon, Sunday School Offering, $5; Mr. Seutel, $1; Applington, Church Offering, $5; Mr. Eckhoff, $1.65; Miss Kruse, $1; Mr. Noll, $0.55; Mr. Fotsch, $0.69; Rev. Mr. Dallmus, $1; Mr. Kemper, $0.65; Mrs. Rentzel, $1; Rev. Mr. Zissler, $5; Kamrar, Church Offering, $37.23; Ashton, Church Offering, $11; Breda, Church Offering, $5.

KANSAS, $61.30.

Mr. Haas, $0.65; Mr. Regier, $10; "Ungenannt," $10; Mr. Krehbiel, $2.15; Mr. Meyer, $0.30; Mr. Rupp, $5; Mr. Abrahams, $0.55; Miss Meier, $0.75; Mr. Ruth, $1.65; Mrs. Krehbiel, $3; Mr. Claassen, $3.25; Mr. Reich, $1; Sister Hilleganda von der Smissen, $2; Mrs. Regier, $5; Mr. Unruh, $1; Mr. Mueller, Jr., $5; Mr. Mueller, Sr., $1; Mr. Mueller, $1; Mrs. Van Master, $1; Mr. Lloyd, $1; Mrs. Kilbourne, $1; Mr. Fisher, $5.

KENTUCKY, $6.

Miss Anderson, $1; Miss Steele, $5.

MAINE, $4.

Rev. Mr. Kelly, $1; Prof. Denio, $2; Mr. Parkhurst, $1.

MASSACHUSETTS, $442.03.

Mr. Doughty, $25; Mr. Pease, $5; Springfield, Church Offering, $4; Mrs. Seisel, $1.55; Mrs. Laplin, $2; Rev. Mr. Denison, $20; Miss Phelps, $1; Mrs. Duncan, $10; Miss Richards, $2; Miss Griffin, $5; Miss Hawley, $2; Mr. Carter, for Soldier's Text Book, $5; Miss Harmon, $5; Miss Bailey, $1; East Longmeadow, Church Collection, $5; Miss Howard, $15; Winchester, Church Offering, $0.70; Mrs. Craig, $25; Cranby, Church Offering, $0.50; Miss Hawes, $2; Wellesley Hills, Church Collection, $3; Hollbrook, Church Collection, $2.53; Boston, Church Collection, $50; Miss Crafts, Miss Fales, $2; Miss Hooker, $10; Mrs. Mitchell, $3; Mrs. Leary, $5; Miss Hidden, $1; $15; Miss Clark, $1; Miss Cleaveland, $1; Mr. Lyon, $2; Roslindale, Church Offering, $5; Mrs. Bennett, $5; Mrs. Mac Nutt, $50; Mrs. Duncan, $10; Miss Topliff, $2; Mrs. Palmer, $5; Miss Pressley, $3; Mrs. Richards, $10; Mr. Osborne, $3; Mrs. Quincy, $2; Mrs. Plunkett, $10; "A Friend," $2; Mrs. Peabody, $0.25; Mrs. Shannon, $10; Mr. Thomas, $5; Mrs. Robertson, $1; Mr. Davis, $10; Mr. Walworth, $5; Miss Sanborn, $5; Mrs. Parker, $5; Mrs. Ferry, $2; Mrs. Willard, $1; Mr. Plunkett, $5; Prof. Anne Young, $1; Miss Swift, $1; Rev. Mr. Kelly, $1; Mrs. Ward, $5; Miss Wright, $1; Miss Wilcox, $10; Mrs. Hall, $1; Haverhill, Church Collection, $5; Melrose, Church Offering, $10; Mr. Harrington, $3.50; Mrs. Soule, $10; Mr. White, $5.

MINNESOTA, $48.65.

Mr. Rosenan, $0.65; St. Paul, Ladies' Aid, and Church Collection, $2; Rev. Mr. Wessonberg, $0.30; Mrs. Bassett, $10; Mr. Mitchell, $5; Miss Clynick, $1; Mr. Eaton, $5; Clara City, Church Offering, $24.70.

MICHIGAN, $55.50.

Mrs. Duffield, $5; Mrs. Blaesing, $2; Mr. Walter, $3; Grand Rapids, Church Offering, $40; Mrs. Hatch, $0.50; Central Lakes, Singing School Offering, $5.

MISSOURI, $57.59.

Mr. Krauter, $2.65; Rev. Mr. Gadow, $0.55; "Ungenannt," $4; Mrs. Kaiser, $0.65; St. Louis, Church Collection, $5; Parkville, Church Collection, $4.99; Mr. Lehman, $9.65; Mr. Romang, $2; Mr. Siegfried, $10; Mr. Flottmann, $0.65; Mrs. Backer, $5.15; Mrs. Toddman, $1.65; Mrs. Nullmeyer, $0.65; Mr. Catlin, $5; Mr. Forbes, $5.

NEBRASKA, $46.42.

Mr. Koch, $5; Mr. Jantzen, $5; Mr. Deppe, $2; Mr. Neusborn, $1.30; Mrs. Plambeck, $0.10; Mrs. Bienz, $0.30; Mr. Matthews, $5; Alexandria, Church Collection, $5; Plattsmouth, Church Offering, $8.01; Mrs. Brauer, Sr., $5; Rosemont, Church Offering, $9.71.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, $10.

Rev. Mr. Thayer, $10.

NEW JERSEY, $112.30.

"A Friend," $2; Bloomfield, Church Offering, $9; Mr. Stults, $1; Orange, Church Offering, $5; Miss Rasch, $15; The Misses Convers, $5; Camden, Church Collection, $3; Mrs. Veghte, $5; Miss Silberhorn, $1; Mrs. Gruber, $1; Miss Richards, for Literature for Soldiers and Hospital, $5; East Orange, Church Offering, for Korean Religious Book Society, $10; Mr. Boardman, $1; Mrs. Geyer, $1.30; Atlantic Highlands, Church Offering, $3.

NEW YORK, $486.40.

Mrs. Amerman, $10; Miss Davidson, $5; Mr. Haines, $10; Mrs. Ledaux, $10; New York City, Church Collection, $8.97; Mrs. Osborn, $25; Ladies Aid Society, $10; Mrs. Strasburg, $1; "A Friend," $1; Mrs. J. H. O., $2; Brooklyn, Church Offering, $10; Mrs. Marion, $2.50; Brooklyn Church Offering, $20.71; Rev. Mr. Yeisley, $5; Yonkers, Church Collection, $52.78; Mrs. Rutherford, $6; Mrs. Gardner, $1.34; Mr. Strong, a Life Member, $30; Mrs. Erhardt, $1; Rev. Mr. Sandrezzi, $1; Mr. Colwell, $5; Mr. Windels, $25; Miss Harmon, $5; Elmhurst, Church Collection, $7.30; Wappingers Falls, Church Offering, $4; Mr. Terry, $1.50; Mrs. Edwards, $1; New Hackensack, Church Offering, $8.60; Mrs. Holmes, $5; Mrs. Hedden, $1; Miss Mould, $5.20; Mr. Cook, $3; Friedenskirsche, $5; Mr. Smith, $15; Dr. Swift, Literature for Latin America, $5; Miss Veltman, $1; Miss Roeschli, $2.50; York, Church Collection, $7.50; Mrs. Powell, $0.50; "Est. of S. S.," $100; Mr. Flack, $5; Miss Bancker, $2; Mrs. Saltsman, Jr., $2; Rev. Mr. Fairhead, $1; Miss Van Duzee, $1; Mr. Blank, $5; Mrs. Turnbull, $5; Mr. Strong, for Colportage work, $5; Mrs. Van Arsdale, $1; Port Byron, Church Offering, $5; Mr. Ham, $10; Hammond, Church Collection, $5; Mrs. Lee, $1; "In Memory of Mrs. John Gaul, deceased," $5; Mrs. Yeisley, $5; Brooklyn, Sunday School Collection, $5; Otego, Church Collection, $1; Rev. Dr. Scholl, $1.

OHIO, $75.55.

Mrs. Palmer, $0.65; "A Friend," $1.65; Mr. Hunt, $2; Mr. Ellison, $0.50; Mrs. Hallauer, $0.65; Mr. Risk, $3; Mrs. Stafford, $3; Dr. Fitzpatrick, $3; Mr. and Mrs. Corser, $2; Mr. Bard, $2; Dr. Barker, $2; Miss Breunnam, $3; Mr. Allenstein, $1; Kuhns Brothers, $5; Mrs. Powell, $5; Mrs. Richeson, $1; Mr. Hunt, $5; Mr. Watkins, $1; Norwood, Church Collection, $5.20; Mrs. Jones, $10; Miss Willard, $2; Wooster, Church Offering, $8; Miss Allen, $1; Miss Litzenberg, $2; Youngstown, Church Collection, $3.40; Zanesville, Church Offering, $2.50.

OKLAHOMA, $2.15.

Mr. Hohmann, $1; Mr. Schmidt, $1.15.

OREGON, $24.85.

Mr. Gronke, $1.15; Mr. Voorhees, $10; Mr. Reichen, $5; Rev. Mr. Denny, $0.65; Mrs. Leuthold, $2; Mr. Rieben, $5; Mr. Schulze, $0.55; Mrs. Korman, $0.50.

PENNSYLVANIA, $351.34.

Mr. Selden, $3; Miss Gillespie, $10; Port Carbon, Church Collection, $1; Mr. Klose, $2; Mr. Waller, Jr., $20; Coraopolis, Church Collection, $13.26; Jeanette, Church Offering, $8; Mrs. Berger, $1.20; Franklin, Church Offering, $9.87; Miss De Haven, $3; Miss De Haven, Jr., $3; Shippensburg, Church Offering, $2.88; Easton, Church Offering, $5; Butler, Church Collection, $17; Mr. Lohse, $0.60; Miss Hubbard, $2.50; Mr. Schmidt, $1; York, Church Offering, $10; State College, Church Offering, $6; Wilkinsburg, Church Offering, $25; Mr. Carter, $10; Mrs. Solathe, $4.15; Miss Demuth, for Colportage Work, $1.50; "In His Name," for Colportage in the West, $5; Miss Robinson, $1; Mr. Fritsch, $1; Mr. Tyler, $10; Beaver Falls, Church Offering, $3; Coraopolis, Church Offering, $10.39; Mr. Bicket, $10; Mr. Campbell, $10; Mr. Don-18181-Messenger-THIRTY-THREE nan, a Life Member, $30; Mr. Hall, $0.99; Mr. Lyon, $5; Hon. Mr. Mehard, $5; Mr. Moore, $15; Miss Miller, $15; Mr. Potter, $2; Mr. Rea, $10; Mr. Seymour, $5; Mr. Shaw, $10; Mr. Shea, $10; Mr. Success, $25; Mr. Stevenson, $2; Miss Traphagen, $5; Mr. Urson, $1.

RHODE ISLAND, $53.

Mrs. Carpenter, $5; Miss Kinyon, In Memory of her father, $5; Miss Salisbury, $1; Mrs. Goff, $15; Mrs. Olney, $1; Miss Knowles, $1; Mrs. Sprague, $25.

SOUTH DAKOTA, $23.65.

Lennox, Church Collection, $5; "Friends," $5; Mr. Jurkens, $0.65; Mr. Poppens, $1; Scotland, Church Offering, $12.

TEXAS, $4.

Miss Preston, for Soldier's Text Book, $1; San Angelo, Church Offering, $2; Mr. Startz, $1.

UTAH, $3.

Rev. Mr. Pratt, $3.

VERMONT, $5.

Mr. Sykes, $5.

VIRGINIA, $5.

Mrs. Richardson, $5.

WASHINGTON, $3.60.

Mr. B. Acher, $0.30; Mr. G. Acher, $1.65; Mr. Wilnot, $1; Mr. Zemde, $0.65.

WEST VIRGINIA, $102.

Fairmont, Church Offering, $2; Mr. Hervey, $100.

WISCONSIN, $26.15.

Mr. Iseli, $2.75; Miss Mayer, $1; Mr. Mayer, $1; Mr. Kratt, $1; Rev. Mr. Feurer, $0.70; Rev. Mr. Stucki, $1.65; Mrs. O'Bryan, $1; Mrs. Frank, $1.50; Mr. Theune, $4; North Freedom Church Offerings, $3; Mrs. Guntley, $1.65; Mr. E. Elmer, $3.75; Mr. Abt, $0.65; Mrs. Baumgartner, $2.50.

FOREIGN, $8.05.

Canada, Mr. Troegel, $0.50; Mr. Machado, $2; "M. T. and O. T.," $4; Miss Mann, $1; Africa, Mr. Schultz, $0.55.

INCOME FROM TRUST FUNDS, $385.12.
Income for Missionary Work.....$360.12
Income for Annuitants..... 25.00

Donations

DONATIONS for the missionary work of the American Tract Society may be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

American Tract Society

THIS SOCIETY was organized in 1825. Its work is interdenominational and international in scope, and is commended by all evangelical denominations.

It has published the Gospel messages in 178 languages, dialects and characters. It has been the pioneer for work among the foreign-speaking people in our country, and its missionary colporters are distributing Christian literature in thirty-three languages among the immigrants and making a home-to-home visitation among the spiritually destitute, both in the cities and rural districts, leaving all kinds of Christian literature, also the Bible or portions of the Scriptures.

Its publication of leaflets, volumes and periodicals from the Home Office total 794,639,700 copies. It has made foreign cash appropriations to the amount of $799,456.39, and grants of electrotypes to the value of $61,177.96, by means of which millions of copies of books and tracts have been published at mission stations abroad.

The gratuitous distribution of the past year is to the value of $16,684.99. The grand total of its gratuitous distribution has been to the value of $2,634,505.89, which is the equivalent of 5,269,010,000 tract pages.

The total number of family visits that have been made by the Society's colporters during the last year is 206,167; the total number of volumes distributed by sale or grant is 55,517, making the total number of volumes that have been circulated by colporters in the last seventy-five years 17,382,454, and the total number of family visits that they have made during the same period 18,612,843.

The Society is making very special effort in behalf of Latin America, having entered upon the publication of a one volume Bible commentary in Spanish, a long-needed and earnestly prayed-for publication, also other volumes in both Spanish and Portuguese. Its total publications for Latin America now reach 14,748,588 copies. Its work, ever widening, is dependent upon donations and legacies, and greatly needs increased offerings.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President.

JUDSON SWIFT, D.D., General Secretary.

Remittances should be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

Life Members and Directors

THE donation of $30 at one time constitutes a Life Member of the American Tract Society; the addition of $70, or the donation of $100 at one time, constitutes a Life Director. Life members may receive annually copies of the Society's own publications to the value of $1; Life Directors to the value of $2; if applied for within the Society's year, from April 1st to April 1st, in person or by written order. No individual can draw more than one annuity any year for himself. Colporters are not authorized to supply Life Members.

Form of Bequest

I GIVE and bequeath to the "AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY," instituted in the City of New York, May, 1825, the sum of.....dollars to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said Society.

Three witnesses should state that the testator declares this to be his last will and testament, and that they signed at his request, and in his presence and the presence of each other.

Its Message.

In sending the renewal of her subscription to the AMERICAN MESSENGER, Miss Berger of Jarbolo, Kansas, writes:

"I welcome the coming of the AMERICAN MESSENGER more and more each year, as it brings a message to one and all. It brings joy to hearts that are glad and comfort to the hearts that are sorrowing."

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

TERMS: Subscription price, 50 cts. a year, payable in advance. In clubs of five or more, 30 cts. each. Club subscriptions mailed to separate addresses, if desired. Postage on foreign subscriptions, 24 cents additional. Canadian subscription, 12 cents additional. Single copies, 5 cents each.

On account of the additional charge which is made by the New York Post Office for mailing to subscribers in New York and Bronx Counties (Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx), no club rates, cash commissions or premiums will be given for subscriptions that must be sent to persons residing in those Counties. Each subscription in New York or Bronx County must be at the rate of 50 cents net.

Remit by Express, Money Order, Draft, Post Office Order or Registered Letter. For very small amounts, postage stamps may be sent at the risk of the sender.

RENEWALS: The date opposite your name shows to what time the subscription has been paid, and a change in the date is the receipt for renewal.

CHANGES: When sending change of address, be sure to send the old address as well as the new one.

OUR ADVERTISERS: We believe that all the advertisements in this paper are from responsible advertisers, and it is our intention to admit only such to our columns. Should, however, any of our subscribers find that any advertiser does not live up to his agreements, we would consider it a favor if they will inform us, and we will at any time give prompt attention to any complaint.

We do not, of course, guarantee that all persons will take the same point of view with the advertisers, and it must be borne in mind that the claims and statements made by advertisers are their assertions, and not ours.

Our readers will confer a favor upon advertisers and also upon us if they will mention the American Messenger when answering advertisements.

FIELD SECRETARIES AND COLPORTAGE SUPERINTENDENTS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.

Rev. Isaac Pierson, Field Secretary for New England, 50 Bromfield Street, Boston, Mass.

Rev. Robert Murray, Field Secretary, Central Agency, 345 Fourth Avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Rev. A. W. Reinhard, Field Secretary and Superintendent of Colportage for the Western and Northwestern States, 721 South 37th Street, Omaha, Nebraska.

Rev. George Whitefort, Superintendent of Colportage, Southern Agency, Crichton, R.F.D., Mobile Co., Ala.

IMPORTANT

to all our subscribers

The Publishers of this paper wish to thank all those who have promptly renewed their subscriptions for the year 1917, and to express grateful appreciation for the many messages of kindly commendation that have been received from the readers of the AMERICAN MESSENGER.

There are still some of our subscribers, however, who have not yet complied with the request to forward their renewals. As our fiscal year closes on March 31, 1917, it becomes imperatively necessary to collect all outstanding accounts and to have all arrearages settled before that date.

We would, therefore, urgently request all our friends who have not as yet renewed their subscriptions for the current year to do so at once.

Kindly send all remittances to the

AMERICAN MESSENGER
Park Avenue and Fortieth Street,
New York, N. Y.

FORTIFY—PREPARE AHEAD

When you study the Bible you are always eager to get the most out of it. Questions, however, are bound to arise. Are you content to let them pass without answer? Do your Bible problems go unsolved? Fortify yourself against such occasions by having at hand the Christian Worker's Library. We carefully assembled this library so that the broadest information might be easily accessible, compressed into the fewest volumes possible and offered at a price which is as attractive as the books are interesting. With a knowledge of events, conditions and people of the Bible, insight is given into many doubtful chapters. This library has many interesting and valuable features. Possession of it will make your study four-fold as enjoyable, will answer questions for you, and will help you now and in the future; in fact as long as you need help and assistance. Just examine the titles.

THE ATONEMENT

By James Stalker, D.D.

The Atonement is a master subject and takes a master hand to treat it so that it is understood. Divided into three parts this book deals in a striking and scholarly manner with the New Testament situation, the Old Testament preparation and the modern justification. The book will work wonders in clearing up many of the questions on the subject.

AMONG THE HOLY PLACES

By James Kean, M.A., B.D.

The author takes the reader with him in his journey and enables him to see in the most vivid manner the scenes visited. One can from this book obtain all the advantages of a personal visit to the places described and probably with still greater profit, for the reason that the author has the ability to see all that is worth seeing. Fully illustrated and with index.

BIBLICAL HISTORY AND GEOGRAPHY

By H. S. Osborn, LL.D.

Admirably adapted for use in Bible Classes. Dividing the Old Testament into six periods the author takes up chronologically the prominent events and historical points and defines them. Three chapters are given to the canonizing of the Scriptures and the origin of the Talmud. A description not generally obtainable of the places where the events occur is given in each case. A splendid perspective of events, time and places in all their original forms is thus presented. The New Testament is likewise analyzed. There is an excellent index and many colored maps.

COMPANION TO THE BIBLE

By E. P. Barrows, D.D.

This is a critical study of the books of the Bible in four parts. Part 1 treats of the evidences of revealed religion. Part 2 examines and classifies the books of the Old Testament. Part 3 examines and classifies the books of the New Testament. Part 4 takes up the principle of Biblical interpretation.

EVIDENCES OF CHRISTIANITY

By Charles P. McIlvaine, D.D.

This is one of the standard works on the Evidences. The material as set forth in this volume proves clearly, decisively and conclusively a sufficient basis for faith in the divine origin, nature, methods and results of Christianity. After reading this book a believer in God and His kingdom would become a stronger man with stronger beliefs. An unbeliever would turn from his unbelief to the earnest and continued following of Christ.

THE MASTER PREACHER

By Albert R. Bond, A.M., D.D.

Jesus was a teacher and a preacher with methods, a personality, themes and a success of His own. His methods and themes could be followed with success to-day if it was only known how. Dr. Bond knows how, has done it successfully, and presents in this book for your benefit practically every phase of Christ's methods. Its careful study will well repay any minister.

THE LORD OF GLORY

By Benjamin B. Warfield, D.D., LL.D.

Here is presented the Godhead of Christ on evidence taken from the New Testament. It is an unanswerable plea based on the designations which the New Testament writers apply to Jesus when concurrently speaking of Him. When Dr. Warfield comes to the end no doubt remains that Jesus Christ was indeed the "Lord of Glory." The book has index of designations, passages of Scripture and authors cited. As an aid to the study and preaching of this subject it is without equal.

THE TWO ST. JOHNS OF THE NEW TESTAMENT

By James Stalker, D.D.

Did it ever occur to you to make a study of the two Johns in the New Testament? Dr. Stalker with his remarkably original method, clarity of style, comprehensiveness of view and suggestiveness of matter, contrasts the lives and characters of John the Evangelist and John the Baptist. Full information on a vitally interesting subject.

THE OLD-TIME RELIGION

By David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.

There is not a dull sentence in this whole book, much less a dull page. Full of terseness and vigor, replete with sound thoughts, the book goes to the root of the Christian religion and tells why this religion is so solid and satisfactory. Young and old may read it with profit. Young ministers may well take it to heart.

STUDIES IN THE BOOK OF GENESIS

By H. B. Pratt

This is without doubt one of the best commentaries on the book of Genesis. There are so many doubtful points, overlapping events and apparently conflicting circumstances in the first book of Moses which need satisfactory explanations that this volume meets a demand of students of the Old Testament. It is especially valuable because the subject is handled by a man who has given a life to its study and research. The book makes an excellent companion volume to "Evidences of Christianity."

TRANSFIGURED

By Joseph Hamilton

What "Studies in the Book of Genesis" does to give light on a difficult subject in the Old Testament, "Transfigured" does to explain one of the most talked-of events in the New Testament. "Transfigured" is an unusual volume—a devout and common-sense study of this unparalleled scene. It treats of the unseen and eternal.

THE WONDROUS CROSS

By David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.

We could not resist the temptation to have the twelfth and last volume of this library one of Dr. Burrell's. The Cross is such a vital factor in every life when properly understood that this book seemed more than appropriate to lend dignity to a library intended first of all for the Christian reader and student. It is most acceptable with its pointed truths full of significance.

Our offer saves you one-half. These twelve handsome volumes will be delivered to your door for $7.50. The original selling price was $15.00. The illustration gives but little idea of the beautiful appearance these books make. They will add dignity and strength to any library. Think of it. Twelve books, 4300 and more pages well printed on clear white paper, each book uniformly bound in one of the best library cloths, gold stamping, at the low price of $7.50. Good paper, good printing and good binding. A vast array of information on a multitude of subjects. A library for the Bible student, pastor, teacher and scholar. Send us your order to-day. Delay will mean loss of this opportunity.

American Tract Society
New York

Gentlemen: Enclosed find $7.50, for which please send
THE CHRISTIAN WORKER'S LIBRARY

to the address below.

Name

Street

City

State

—And he arose, and came to his father. But when he was yet a great way off, his father saw him, and had compassion and ran, and fell on his neck, and kissed him. Luke 15 : 20.

—And he dreamed and behold a ladder set up on the earth, and the top of it reached to heaven; and behold the angels of God ascending and descending on it. Gen. 28 : 12.

—But when the morning was now come, Jesus stood on the shore but the disciples knew not that it was Jesus. John 21 : 4.

—But it is happened unto them according to the true proverb, The dog is turned to his own vomit again; and the sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire. 11 Pet. 22.

—In the same hour came forth fingers of a man's hand, and wrote over against the candlestick upon the plaster of the wall of the king's palace; and the king saw the part of the hand that wrote. Dan. 5 : 6.

—Our soul is escaped as a bird out of the snare of the fowlers: the snare is broken, and we are escaped. Psa. 124 : 7.

—And when they were come into the house, they saw the young child with Mary his mother, and fell down, and worshipped him: and when they had opened their treasures, they presented unto him gifts; gold, and frankincense, and myrrh. Matt. 2 : 11.

—The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them. Isa. 11 : 6.

—And it came to pass, before he had done speaking, that, behold, Rebekah came out, who was born to Bethuel, son of Milah, the wife of Nahor Abraham's brother, with her pitcher upon her shoulder. Gen. 24 : 16.

—And Abraham lifted up his eyes and looked, and behold behind him a rain caught in a thicket by his horns; and Abraham went and took the ram, and offered him up for a burnt offering in the stead of his son. Gen. 22 : 13.

YOU COULD HAVE SELECTED THESE WINNING BIBLE VERSES

ERE are some of the pictures from the Christian Herald First Bible Picture Study, with the verses submitted for them by participants.

Thousands, young and old, participated in this unique Bible Study pastime, and declared themselves well repaid by the exercise alone. As an added incentive, $3,500.00 in cash, including a first prize of $1,250.00, was distributed as awards to the winners.

You could have submitted these winning verses, for all that was needed to win was a careful consideration of the Bible verses involved, and then the use of good judgment in selecting the best.

We have outlined the whole story of the fascinating competition in our special Bible Study Issue, beautifully illustrated, in which all the 60 pictures are printed, all the winning verses given, and all the winners announced.

Don't you want a copy of this interesting issue? You can have one, with our compliments and best wishes, for the asking—use the coupon below.

SECOND BIBLE PICTURE STUDY

In addition to presenting you with this full report upon the results of the First Study, we will send you a four-page illustrated pamphlet giving all the particulars of our Second Bible Picture Study, just beginning, in which more than $5,000 in cash will be distributed, in one thousand separate awards, beginning with $1,000 in gold!

You will be surprised and extremely pleased with the news of this Second Study. You can enter it yourself, too, right now, upon equal terms with anyone, anywhere; and there is no reason in the world why you should not excel.

We are sure you will find the Second Bible Picture Study spiritually uplifting—a new and delightful source of Bible knowledge. And while gaining a priceless treasure store of Bible truths you may also be winning one of the cash rewards, with which to realize some dream you have long hoped would come true!

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 932 Bible House, New York.

—SEND THIS COUPON FOR SPECIAL ISSUE—

The Christian Herald, 932 Bible House, New York City.

Please send me your special Bible Picture Study Issue, containing all the results of the First Competition, the 60 pictures, together with the best verses submitted for each, the rewards, winners, etc. Also the illustrated prospectus of the Second Bible Picture Study, in which participants will gain, among other things, one thousand cash awards, aggregating more than $5,000.00.

Name

Address

JUST A MOMENT, PLEASE: Kindly enclose 2-cent stamp with coupon to help pay return postage. Thank you!

—And the ravens brought him bread and flesh in the evening, and he drank of the brook. 1 Kings 17 : 6.

—And the Spirit of the Lord came mightily upon him, and he rent him as he would have rent a kid, and he had nothing in his hand; but he told not his father or his mother what he had done. Judg. 14 : 6.

—And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night. Luke 2 : 8.

—And they came to him, and awoke him, saying, Master, master, we perish. Then he arose, and rebuked the wind and the raging of the water: and they ceased, and there was a calm. Luke 8 : 24.

—Now when Daniel knew that the writing was shewed, he went into his house, and his windows being open in his chamber toward Jerusalem, he kneeled upon his knees three times a day, and prayed, and gave thanks before his God, as he did aforetime. Dan. 6 : 10.

Vol. 75

No. 4

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

APRIL, 1917

Painted by Burne-Jones

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY, NEW YORK

AN UNUSUAL OPPORTUNITY

We offer a Special Trial Subscription to the AMERICAN MESSENGER from April 1, 1917, to December 31, 1917, for only Twenty-five Cents.

This Special offer provides an excellent opportunity to introduce a splendid religious paper into many homes where such a periodical is not now taken. It is hoped that a large number of our subscribers will avail themselves of this generous proposition by sending this helpful, attractive paper to hundreds of homes where there is no other religious reading. There may be a considerable number of such homes in your own immediate neighborhood. Remember that the printed page will carry a message for Christ into many places that could not possibly be reached by your spoken words.

You could not make a choicer Easter remembrance to your friends than to send them a gift subscription to the AMERICAN MESSENGER for the balance of the year. Act promptly and send in your list, while this Special Trial Offer still holds good.

If you are not a subscriber yourself to the AMERICAN MESSENGER, why not send twenty-five cents so that you may receive this paper for the next nine months.

AMERICAN MESSENGER

Park Avenue and 40th Street

NEW YORK

Our Honor Roll

On our Roll of Honor are inscribed the names of those who have received the AMERICAN MESSENGER for the past fifty years or more. To this list we are delighted to add the name of Mary A. Perkins, of Portland, Me., who has written us as follows:

"The AMERICAN MESSENGER comes every month as the face of an old friend. It has come for fifty years or more and I have seen it from childhood. It grows better all through the years. I want my name on the Honor Roll. Please find enclosed my subscription for 1917, and also a gift subscription for some one unable to take it otherwise."

It was a happy thought to add that gift subscription, for we have thereby been enabled to send the paper to a worthy home missionary who would not otherwise have received it. We hope that many others, when they renew their own subscription will make provision for gift subscriptions to those who would not otherwise see this helpful periodical.

Whose Hand Holds?

BY REV. C. B. F. HALLOCK, D.D.

IT MAKES a great deal of difference whether you take hold of God or God takes hold of you. A man once illustrated this truth in this way: "My little girl," he said, "today refused to let me take hold of her hand when we were walking together. She thought she could go alone. But when we came to a place that was slippery she took hold first of my little finger, and then, as it grew more icy, of my whole hand. As we went on, and it was growing worse, she let go entirely, and said: 'Papa, take hold of me.' She knew I was strong, and that she could not fall unless I fell."

Now some of us have been slipping, slipping; and the reason is that we have not put our hands into the hand of God. We have been trying to take hold of him instead of asking him to take hold of us.

An aged man was asked to write the history of his Christian life and experience in the fewest possible words. He wrote the one word "Kept." We are "kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation."

It is well for us to remember whose hand it is that holds. This is especially true for young Christians, as also for those who are but thinking about beginning the Christian life.

There is an interesting reference to this truth in Lord Radstock's life. A well-known officer who had just left the Guards expressed to Lord Radstock his conviction that, being worldly by nature, it would be quite impossible for him to confess Christ, as he would disgrace him by falling away. Lord Radstock replied by taking out his pencil case, and, holding it upright on the table, he asked the officer why it did not fall. "Because you hold it," was the answer. "Then no inherent power in the pencil, but a power outside, is that which keeps it. God, seeing the utter ruin of man, did not tell him to stand upright, but brought in an external power, Himself. And the question of falling depends not upon the power of man, but on the Almighty, who is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory." The message went home. The following year, as the train drew up to the platform at Stockholm, Lord Radstock was greeted by the officer with the words, "God has never let the pencil go for one minute."

God does not let go. His hand does not slip. The true Christian trusts God and is then "kept by the power of God, through faith, unto salvation."

The attainment is difficult. Dangers arise. Christians are not free from them. These dangers come from our own corruption, from the temptations of the world and from the power and malice of Satan. Yet is salvation certain because the believer is kept by the power of God.

There are two forms under which the power of God expresses itself. One is under His providence. The other is under His grace. The one is outward and the other inward. Providence includes all the oversight and guarding which God exercises over his people; in ordering their circumstances, in protecting them from their enemies and persecutors, and in restraining and conquering Satan. Grace includes all the inward operations of the Holy Spirit; in teaching and revealing truth, in sanctifying and consoling, and in sustaining under temptation and every stress.

We are kept amid all our conflicts by God. We are in a well-fortified garrison, in it God is with us.

And it is through faith that we are kept—a personal faith in God's Son, a faith embracing every promise that God has given us in his Word. Faith is used in two senses, or two kinds of exercises are included under the term. One exercise is that of acts of credence toward the truth, an abiding conviction of the truth of God and of the Gospel

He has revealed. The other is that of acts of confidence in Christ—confidence in His being what He is declared to be—confidence in His protection—confidence in His merit, and in the prevalence of His intercession.

The Christian has the privilege of reposing himself securely, assured that he is guarded as in a citadel, that he is kept by the power of God. He knows whose hand holds. He also knows that God's protection and support are to be continued until the end. He is kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, "ready to be revealed in the last time."

Be patient. Be hopeful. Be holy. Cultivate confidence. Cherish love to God. Console and help others.—THE HERALD AND PRESBYTER.

The Church Paper

The truth is that the Church paper must be recognized for just what it is—a missionary agency of tremendous value in providing the people with knowledge and stimulus which are absolutely essential for the growth of the Church. Therefore, whether they pay their own way or not, they should be supported just as a pastor is supported, but particularly as a missionary pastor is supported, in order that the people may have what they need for their development in Christian activity. The Church paper should not seek first to make money—nor should the Church nor the Christian college. All of these institutions should seek first to promote the Kingdom of God and, if financial assistance is necessary in order to success, that financial assistance should be provided. For the average church, the Church paper is just as essential as its Sabbath-school literature. Many churches are coming to discover this truth. When all have discovered it, they will do what some have already done, make provision in their budget that every family in the church may receive the visit of some good church paper—EXCHANGE.

The Man with the Lantern

He passed down the street in the silence of the night. There was a brightness about his feet which threw every stone in the pavement into relief and glowed on the terrace along the way. I could not see his face, nor tell the manner of his dress, but the light showed his direction. I could not see the hand that carried the light. It was invisible in the darkness, but I could see the circle of light as it moved along the way and the feet of the man as they followed the light. And out of the darkness and the gleam of the lantern there came back to me this thought: How little we know of our fellow pilgrims. We are journeying in the same direction, he following his best light and I following mine, but we are both on the same pavement and both going in the same direction, yet each is absorbed in his individual affairs. We live in our own narrow circle of light—narrow as compared to the great world round about us, and the vaster worlds far above us. We move on and into the eternities with scarcely a knowledge of

The Threshold

BY PRISCILLA LEONARD.

The threshold of the day—
Step over it with prayer,

For who can ever say
What shall await him there?
It holds within its span
For each a chance to be Noble beyond his plan,
Beyond his hoping, free.

The threshold of the day—
Pause, and gird up the heart,
And on the Future's way
With shining footsteps start;
It leads, perchance, to fame,
To happiness, to power;
Let neither stain nor shame
Sully the beckoning hour.

The threshold of the day—
For each, for all, it waits,
And none who breathes but may
Press from its welcoming gates
On toward the hours that bring
The choices of the soul,
On, till the angels sing
The victory and the goal.

—FORWARD.

Save Money

$9²⁶

Paints this House Two Full Coats

Write For Free Book

Color cards and estimate. Coverall Paint is guaranteed. No cracking, no peeling.

Address House Nearest You Montgomery Ward Co. Dept. B 254

(Satisfaction Guaranteed or Your Money Back)

NEW YORK CHICAGO KANSAS CITY FT. WORTH PORTLAND, ORE.

Buy your paint direct from the factory. The house illustrated is 26 ft. wide and 34 ft. long—2 full coats. Coverall Paint with trimmings, for this house cost only $9.26. Reduce your painting expense—have a better looking, longer lasting job.

each other's life or destiny. The reason, no doubt, is in ourselves; maybe in others, or in the circumstances that surround us. But the thoughts that absorb us and the duties that engross us are but little known to the man with the other lantern. He is following his onward moving circle of light engrossed with the affairs that concern him. But were we to raise a cry of distress, how quickly that man would reverse his direction and come to our help. The cry of need is the link that unites. It is that call that joins his circle of light and mine. And so I reverse my opinion about the man with the lantern. It seemed as though he thought only of himself, there in the darkness as he moved along. Man's heart is more sympathetic than we suppose, as we see him with all his cares and responsibilities crowding upon him. But when the need comes, when the suffering call, then we discover that the heart is nearer the light than the head and the appeal of the needy is not in vain. We can always trust the man with the lantern when his light is the light of life.—THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

"GO TO CHURCH" STAMP

BY pasting a "Go to Church" Stamp on all your outgoing mail and packages you will be helping the American Tract Society to spread the Gospel by bringing the people to Church.

The sending of one of these Stamps may be the means of winning over one or more souls to Christ by way of the Church.

We wish to have the Millions who do not attend any Church or Mission receive a Message by the receipt of a "Go to Church" Stamp and we ask you to assist us in doing this.

We sell these stamps at cost.

15 Cents per hundred - - - $1.00 per thousand.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

Park Avenue and 40th Street

New York City

The American Messenger

"Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Luke 2:10

Vol. 75. No. 4

APRIL, 1917

Copyright, 1917, by American Tract Society.

Terms: 50 cents per annum
Single copy, 5 cents

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

PUBLISHED MONTHLY

BY THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

OFFICERS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President.

JOHN HENRY JOWETT, M.A., D.D., Vice-President.

JUDSON SWIFT, D.D., General Secretary.

LOUIS TAG, Treasurer.

REV. HENRY LEWIS, Ph.D., Recording Secretary.

All of the above-named officers should be addressed at Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Rev. David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.

Rev. Charles Carroll Albertson, D.D.

Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.

Rev. Edgar Whitaker, D.D.

Rev. George Ernest Merriam.

Entered at the Post Office in New York as second-class matter.

A Stirring Evangelistic Campaign

On Easter Sunday, April 8, 1917, will begin the tabernacle services of the Billy Sunday Evangelistic Campaign in New York City, which is scheduled to last for six weeks.

Great preparations have been made for the successful prosecution of this campaign, which bids fair to be the largest and most important effort that has yet been undertaken by this famous evangelist.

For many weeks prayer meetings have been held in the homes of the city, the object of which is to invoke the special power of God upon the evangelist and all officially connected with the work; to seek the restoration of backslidden church members and the prayerful, working co-operation of all Christians; to secure the awakening of the entire community to the importance of right personal relations to God; and to bring every unsaved person face to face with the question of the acceptance of Christ as the Saviour.

It is hoped that the Billy Sunday Campaign may mark the beginning of a new era of spiritual growth in the great metropolis of the Western Hemisphere. Hundreds of churches are co-operating in this evangelistic movement and thousands of Christian workers have been enrolled to carry on the various lines of activity that are necessary to its success.

Christians all over the land will be interested in the outcome of this campaign, and it would be well if a concert of prayer should be held throughout all the churches in our country, asking that the divine blessing may accompany this movement and that its results may be even larger and more permanent than its most optimistic supporters have hoped.

To the churches of New York City this campaign offers a great opportunity. The subject of religion will be probably more discussed on the street and in the newspapers than ever before. There will be an air of expectation and a spiritual fervor such as do not ordinarily prevail. The question of a decision for Christ will be presented more persistently and doubtless more persuasively than it has ever been presented before to a vast multitude of human souls.

We trust that the opportunity thus presented may be most wisely used, and that the progress of the Kingdom may be greatly advanced by the Billy Sunday Campaign in New York.

* * *

Lord's Day Week

Lord's Day Week begins on the first Sunday after Easter and continues through to the following Sunday. It is set apart by the various evangelical denominations as a season of prayer in behalf of the observance of the Christian Sabbath.

Christians are asked to unite their petitions to the Throne of Grace, asking that the Christian Sabbath may be preserved as a sacred day; that the members of the Christian churches may be led to reverence the Sabbath more highly and by their influence and example to maintain the standards of this holy day; that the laws protecting the Sabbath may be upheld and that constructive legislation may be secured that will further safeguard the observance of the Sabbath as a civil institution.

As it has been well stated, with the tide of Sabbath desecration flowing so strongly against the gates of this priceless inheritance and bulwark of the faith, it is incumbent upon every Christian to give careful attention to this question and to strive to make Lord's Day Week a vital power in strengthening the hands of those who are striving to defend the Sabbath from the encroachments that threaten it on every side.

* * *

Planning for Child Welfare

Over five hundred communities have notified the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor that they intend to co-operate in the movement to promote the welfare of the children by celebrating what is known as Baby Week.

In the majority of cases Baby Week will be observed during the first week of May. State-wide plans for the celebration of this event are already under way in at least thirty-four States representing every section of the country. Several State committees have selected some one phase of infant-welfare work for special emphasis in this year's campaign.

In the State of Delaware the campaign is to be devoted to the prevention of infantile paralysis. North Dakota is to consider the needs of children under school age.

The details of local plans develop later than the State plans, but it seems that local committees are commonly choosing one or more specific purposes in order that the campaign may have permanent results, even in States for which no specific program is suggested.

The Children's Bureau, at Washington, D. C., has a bulletin on the planning and carrying out of Baby Week campaigns and also other material of assistance to local committees, which it is glad to send upon request.

It is hoped that a strong religious emphasis may be given to this movement by calling attention to the importance of the Cradle Roll, which should exist in every Sunday School. Where there is no organized Cradle Roll, Christian workers should seize upon Baby Week as a most suitable opportunity for the introduction of this beneficent institution, which seeks to assure the future spiritual welfare of those who are too young to be in attendance upon the sessions of the Sunday School.

* * *

The Growth of the Churches

Some interesting facts are brought to light in the recently published statistics of the churches of the United States for the year 1916, which were prepared by Dr. H. K. Carroll for the Year Book of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

The figures show a grand total of 40,016,709 members of all religious bodies in the United States. This total includes not only Protestants, Catholics and Jews but also Spiritualists, Theosophists, Mormons, Christian Scientists, and members of various other independent religious organizations. This grand total shows a gain over the preceding year of 747,000. Of this gain about 216,000 represented the increase of the Roman Catholic Churches and about 500,000 the increase of the Protestant denominations. The Methodist Churches gained about 136,000, the Baptist 132,000, the Presbyterians 67,000, the Protestant Episcopal 27,000, and the Lutheran churches 20,000 members.

The gain in the number of churches was only 117, but there was an increase in the number of ministers amounting to 2,643, of which the largest proportion was furnished by the Roman Catholic Church, amounting to 478, next to which came the Baptists with 365, and the Lutherans with 159 more ministers than in the preceding year.

In explanation of the small increase in the number of churches it is suggested that many churches, particularly in the rural regions, are being closed or merged for the sake of economy and efficiency.

Perhaps the most encouraging item is found in the fact that the returns from the Sunday Schools in the United States for 1916 show a much larger aggregate of scholars than any previous report has given, and that the total net increase in the last ten years is more than 6,300,000 with a gain of over 15,000 schools.

✻ ✻ ✻

Daylight Saving

The movement for the adoption of what is known as the Daylight Saving Plan is growing in public favor. Under this plan the clocks of the country would be set forward one hour in the summertime in order to secure an additional hour of daylight for recreation in the afternoon.

Briefly stated the essence of this plan is to take such steps as will induce the public to begin their waking and therefore their working day an hour earlier in summer than in winter. It is not intended that men shall be compelled to work longer than under the present system, but if by setting the clocks forward the working day is made to begin an hour earlier in summer it will also end an hour earlier, and thus increase by one hour that part of the afternoon daylight, which remains for rest or recreation, after the working day is done. And in all cases where overtime work is necessary, there will be available an additional afternoon daylight hour, thus decreasing by so much the strain resulting from artificial light and the actual cost of the artificial light itself.

The United States was the leading nation in effecting the Standard Time improvement, which was afterward adopted throughout Europe. Europe has now become the pioneer in daylight saving, and it would be well if the United States might follow in the adoption of this plan for utilizing the daylight hours to the best advantage.

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States is supporting this movement, and the reports received as to the operation of the plan abroad are decidedly in its favor.

✻ ✻ ✻

A Decision and Vocation Day

The General Sunday School Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, have designated the first Sunday in April as a Decision and Vocation Day. As Decision Day it is to be made the occasion of a special effort to turn the hearts of the unconverted to Christ, and to induce those not already in the Church to apply for membership. As Vocation Day it is to be utilized in an endeavor to direct the attention of young Christians to the duty of selecting and preparing for definite lines of Christian work.

It would be well if a Decision and Vocation Day should be observed in every Sunday School in our land. The date suggested, which is the Sunday preceding Easter, is a fitting occasion on which to press the unconverted for a decision for Christ and to urge those who are already Christian to select some line of special service.

✻ ✻ ✻

A Union of Temperance Forces

An important step in the interest of temperance work has been taken in the union of the National Temperance Society with the Commission on Temperance of the Federal Council of Churches.

In this union we have a combination of the oldest temperance society in the United States with what is perhaps the newest temperance organization at work in our land. The significance of this association of forces is well set forth by Dr. D. Stuart Dodge, president of the National Temperance Society, who says:

Messages for Modern Men

BY REV. FRANK B. McALLISTER

The Measure of Success

THE distinction between making a life and making a living is important to remember. How often, in our crowded times, the main business is obscured by the side issue! Occupations by which men win bread become veritable prison houses, restricting the free and full development of the soul. How many toiling mortals will finally merit the epitaph of the merchant of whom it was written, "He was a man and died a grocer!"

In fact, success is not the narrow and material thing the world would have us believe. It is not spelled $ucce$$$. It is generally accompanied, to be sure, by some visible achievement. The successful person, as a rule, has something tangible in the way of financial rewards or social honors to show for his success—but not always. The prize may be hidden within the depths of his own heart and mind, where no eye but that of God can see it.

The test of success is subjective rather than objective. It is not alone the achievement but what has come to the worker in its attainment that counts. The question is not only, what has this or that one done? but, what has he himself become in the doing of it? On this ground, some of the choicest spirits who ever dwelt on our planet have been content not to succeed, in the usually accepted way. They have refused to lower their ideals or deny their visions. To win the husk by forfeiting the kernel has been counted too great a sacrifice. The humorist, George Fitch, hit the bull's eye of truth when he remarked: "Many a man is a business failure and has to rub along on $75 a month because he has spent all the rest of his fortune buying a reputation that can go on his tombstone without making anyone wink and grin."

"The kingdom of heaven is within you," declared the Master of life. He who holds heaven in his heart has a secure possession. He is independently rich. Nothing else really counts. To be wealthy on this splendid scale, moreover, is a universal human privilege. No single one of the sons of men is shut out from it. Millionaires and crossing tenders are on a par here. To think otherwise is to be the victim of moral humbug.

Visitors to a certain great American exposition saw a motto displayed on a panel in the stadium where the athletic games were held: "He who fails bravely has not truly failed, but is himself a conqueror." The truth applies to contests bigger than hurdling and the hammer throw. What is called defeat in life lies less in the loss of any material good whatever than in one's attitude toward that loss. To keep a brave heart under the "slings and arrows of outrageous fortune," to do the day's work with a quiet mind, to face the sunrise, and greet the unseen with a cheer—this is itself victory.

Could an X-ray be turned on the spirits as well as on the bodies of men, startling dis-

"For the National Temperance Society this means association with the most powerful religious organization in America to-day, if not indeed in the world. Its potency is great and its potentiality is greater. The National Temperance Society avails itself of the Federal Council's splendid staff of General, Executive and Field Secretaries, an office in Washington with the constant services of a secretary for temperance interests connected with the National Capital, and above all, obtains relations with and access to the thirty denominations of the Council with their temperance committee and the 140,000 churches included in the Federal Council.

"The National Temperance Society has secured the service of Dr. Macfarland for general supervision, and the Rev. Charles Stelzle who is doing such a wide educational work for temperance among working men, and as soon as the right man can be found, will also have a secretary for the combined work who will give his entire time to its development."

✻ ✻ ✻

A Veteran Colporter Gone

We regret to record the sudden death of Mr. Henry Secord, one of our veteran missionary colporters in Canada, who passed to his eternal rest on February 28, 1917.

Mr. Secord began colportage work when about twenty-five years of age and carried it on continuously until the time of his death, when he was almost eighty-one years of age. He labored first with the American Tract Society. Then he took up work for the British American Book and Tract Society of Halifax, Nova Scotia. When that society went out of existence, he returned to the American Tract Society, and continued in its service up to the day of his death.

Mr. Secord was an earnest and consecrated Christian worker, an efficient colporter and a faithful and loyal servant of the Master.

coveries might be made. We might find many a fair exterior wholly unmatched by any beauty within. The reality would not seldom give the lie to the appearance. By and by, in the light of more searching judgments than mortals can apply, the matter will be straightened out. Our estimates of success will be re-aligned. "The last shall be first and the first last."

The success then that is worth talking about is spiritual victory. "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty, and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city." Said Abraham Lincoln: "I am not bound to win, but I am bound to be true. I am not bound to succeed, but I am bound to live by the light that I have." It is a sentiment to be graven on the hearts of youth who will soon be the leaders of the race.

A fallacy is sending half the sons of men on fools' errands. It is the fallacy that success is an external rather than an internal matter; that the goal of life is to make money, or to gain office, or to win popularity, rather than to make a character established in righteousness. Let Christians correct the mistake, preach the truth, and strive to live it.

"The race is not to the swift nor the battle to the strong." How foolish the paradox sounds in modern ears, till the truth dawns upon us that spiritual forces are, after all, the mightiest, that the most significant battles going on in this world are in the souls of men, and that the ultimate victories are moral ones!

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTION

EDGAR W. WORK, D.D.

THE ROYAL DAY

BY

REV. EDGAR WHITAKER WORK, D.D.

Pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian Church, New York City

EASTER is the greatest day in the religious calendar. Coming as it does at a time when nature returns to her hopes, and the world is garmented again in life, Easter is thus surrounded by an atmosphere of genial life and praise. But still more, it is the outstanding day in the spiritual life of the world, for each returning Easter summons the world to cherish high hopes and eager aspirations.

The world grows old and jaded. Its cares are many, and despair is never far away. But Easter comes to revive all our dying hopes, to quicken the waning flame of the heart's love, and to spur the pulses of our truest life. It is the day of hope made new. It is the day of growth and of promise. The early Christians changed the day of rest from the seventh to the first—so profound was their sense of importance in the day. It is the festival of immortality—for on this day we realize that "life and immortality" have been brought to light. Every dead thing in our souls seems to be touched on this day as by some Hand of Power, and a Voice that is like the sound of many waters is heard in our hearts—"Awake from the dead."

One of the early fathers of the church spoke of Easter as "the royal day among days." The word is well chosen and may rightly claim our attention. Yes, it is a royal day indeed. Well may nature put on her royal robes on this day, and appear in new splendor, for the world's true King is here. It is His day. On this day He burst the bondage of His tomb and came forth again. "I am He that liveth and was dead; and behold, I am alive forever more." It is His day, and it is a royal day.

His True Coronation Day

First of all, it is His true coronation day. The crown is upon His head today, and we hail Him as Lord of all. This is not the usual way of conceiving of our Lord's coronation; nevertheless it is true. We are more apt to think of the Ascension as the Lord's crowning time. Or we remember those stupendous descriptions of the Book of Revelation, where a crown was given unto Him that sat on the white horse, "and he came forth conquering and to conquer." Or we recall the description of the great hour of harvest and judgment when one like unto a son of man is seen "having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle," and thrusting in his sickle upon the earth to reap. Or we think of His second coming as His true crowning day, when many crowns are upon His head, and He is arrayed in a garment sprinkled with blood, and He hath on His garment, and on His thigh a name written, King of Kings, and Lord of Lords. It was amid scenes such as these that the mind of the gifted hymn-writer was moving, when he wrote the words:

"All hail the power of Jesus' name!
Let angels prostrate fall,
Bring forth the royal diadem
And crown Him Lord of all."

But our blessed Lord was truly crowned long before the times that are pictured in the apostle John's apocalyptic visions. His true crowning day was the day on which He arose from the dead. It was then that He was proclaimed King; it was then, as the apostle says, that He was "declared to be the Son of God with power . . . by His resurrection from the dead." Other facts and events declared Him to be the Son of God; the resurrection declared Him so with power.

The first evidence of this is seen in the way the early disciples went about their work. Every remnant of doubt left them, and they gave their testimony with assurance and power. They saw the risen Lord crowned before them by His resurrection from the dead, and it was the risen Lord whom they proclaimed. They preached the crucifixion of Christ, but they did not stop with the dead Christ. By many infallible proofs they knew that He had risen from the tomb. Before this indisputable fact all their doubts fled away. For them He had been declared to be the Son of God, not weakly, or inconclusively, but with power. He had conquered the last enemy, Death. Thus the Resurrection Day was truly His crowning day.

It is impressive to see from the sermons of the apostles recorded in the Acts of the Apostles how deeply satisfied they were on this subject, and how profoundly it affected their faith. Their thought of the risen Lord colored all their faith. Their faith took on the royal brightness of the resurrection. The resurrection brought to them a new quality of energy and power. From the beginning Christianity has been a strong faith. The energy of the resurrection has ever pulsed through the very being of this faith. It is not a dying faith, for it has not a dead Lord, but a risen Lord.

Yes, Easter is the royal day among all the days of our Christian calendar. On this day we feel how wonderful our dear Lord is. We look into His face, and behold in Him every King-like quality. We hear the old words spoken again, not now in derision, but in joy—"Behold your King." We look upon the ruin of many hopes, the shattered heap of our disappointments and our sorrows; but we see that Jesus Christ is standing over against these troubles of ours. We see that He is standing over against the fact of Death, and over against the inevitable fact of the tomb, and over against all the darkness of life—and with an overwhelming joy we cry aloud—"Thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

And it is in this spirit that we are to celebrate Easter. It is a coronation celebration. The crown is now upon Jesus' head, not the crown of thorns, but the crown of living gems—of Life. All the brightness and energy of faith should assert themselves today. Let not despair reign in the soul of any believer, but victory—such victory as takes its color from the victory of Christ.

It Brings the Spirit of Victory

For this is another reason why Easter is truly a royal day—it brings the spirit of victory into life. The resurrection is not a mere fact of history. It is very wonderful as history, but that is not all. The facts of history are apt to grow cold and distant, unless we clothe them with the warmth of feeling and experience. When Christ arose from the tomb He did more even than win a victory over death. By His rising from the dead He put the spirit of victory into life.

There is an old tradition that when Jesus arose from the grave and walked abroad, flowers sprang up in His pathway and blossomed out at every footstep. Is there not a precious truth in this? "I will make the place of my feet glorious," says the prophet Isaiah. Where Christ walks or stands, glory comes. He makes the place of His feet glorious in whatsoever place He is. The field where the shepherds watched their flocks, the manger where the Holy Child was cradled, the streets of Nazareth and the house and the carpenter shop, and the shores of Galilee—every place is full of glory. And most of all the pathway to the tomb is made glorious since Jesus walked there. Not only so, but the pathway from the tomb is made glorious. For Jesus has led us away from the grave. The grave could not hold Him; neither can it hold us. On this royal day we see our Lord walking away from the tomb, and He is taking us with Him. The apostle Peter declares, that God hath begotten us again "unto a living hope by the resurrection of Jesus-Christ from the dead." We like the old word of the King James version even better—a "lively hope." For this is the wonderful thing about the resurrection gospel—it is full of life and energy. Wherever the risen Lord walks, His footsteps are marked by the living green of the resurrection hope. He makes all things lively—or as it really means, life-like. The semblance of death passes away; the sombreness of life's pain and sorrow passes away; the darkness itself passes away. All things are life-like.

Now all this the apostle meant when he declared that the resurrection of Jesus has begotten us again unto a living hope. He has given us the spirit of victory and of life by His resurrection. He has invaded our dead and dying hopes with a new energy and power. He has poured forth the elixir of His resurrection upon everything about us and in us that threatens to die. Nathaniel Hawthorne tells us in one of his books of a weird old professor who brewed in his laboratory a strange elixir. And one day some drops of the wonderful mixture fell upon a stunted plant, and forthwith it began to put forth new leaves, and to take on new signs of life. It is even so with the resurrection of Christ—it has let fall into our life an awakening influence, a quickening power, a new quality of victory, a rare and wonderful joy. All things become life-like in the risen Lord! "Behold, I make all things new."

How much this ought to mean to believers every day. It is the risen Lord who gives a new sense of reality to life. His resurrection clothes all the bareness and hardness of life with the radiancy of a new and enlarged hope. The world gives us many things to hope in; but the world's hopes are dying hopes, Christ's hope is a living hope. It is this to which we have been begotten by His resurrection. We are heirs through the risen Christ of an "inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away." Easter shall indeed be a royal day to us if it shall bring to our hearts a new sense of victory over death—the death which is trying to drag us down every day and hour.

Are you seeking reality in life? You shall find it in the Risen Lord. He can take the darkness of your life and touch it everywhere with light. He can take the fragments of your life and bind them together in a unity of truth and reality that shall bring new symmetry and new power. He can take your very life—"sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought" and can write across it the message of His resurrection—"Whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die."

Tennyson thought that death was "a laughable impossibility" in view of the resurrection of Jesus. He has made life so strong, so victorious—He has so imbued it with a living hope, and a hope of living, that death no longer reigns in us. This is something of what it means to be begotten again unto a living hope through the resurrection of Christ. The Apostle Paul called such a life a "risen life." It is the life that all live who have truly taken the power of the resurrection into their faith.

For truly the day of our Lord's resurrection is a royal day, because it represents the coronation of believers with power. The early believers realized very soon that the resurrection was more than a fact—it was a power. Paul desired to know the power of his Lord's resurrection. He wanted to have the full vitalizing force of Christ's resurrection coming into his life. What a wonderful wish! What a transfiguring prayer—"That I may know Him and the power of His resurrection."

There are many believers who accept the resurrection of Christ who do not know its power. They have not got its warmth and strength in their hearts; they have not felt the full thrill of its energy.

The power of Christ's resurrection may manifest itself in the most ordinary life, and in the most commonplace circumstances. We need the power of His resurrection in our patience. Our human patience is so easily exhausted. It is always in danger of running out—it needs the quickening, re-vitalizing power of the resurrection. If we are to be partakers "in the tribulation and Kingdom and patience which are in Jesus," we must needs feel daily in the contacts and contests, the irritations and frictions of life the stimulating powers of the resurrection of our blessed Lord.

The power of the resurrection is needed to vitalize and strengthen our faith. For there is ever a danger lest believers may be satisfied with faith that is dull and listless. They may have faith to be sure, but their faith is not a large and buoyant possession. It is no mountain-climber, "leaping from rock to rock." It is too well content with lower levels and with poor achievements. Faith needs to be broadened and deepened and heightened by the resurrection of Christ. We need a resurrection faith—a faith that finds its measure and its spirit in the resurrection of Jesus—a faith that "lieth foursquare, like the New Jerusalem—the length thereof is as great as the breadth." In other words, the resurrection gives magnitude to our faith, lifts it out of its narrowness, its ruts, its complacencies, its "peering littlenesses." Do we not see then why the apostle Paul, stating the terms of salvation, said, "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth Jesus as Lord, and shalt believe in thy heart that God raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved."

We need the power of the resurrection too, to work destruction to our sin. Our trouble often is that we are too easy with sin. We play fast and loose with it. We let it come and go. We cast the devils out, but we leave the house empty—we fail to barricade the door. Soon the unclean things are with us again. Nothing less than the power of our Lord's resurrection will avail to do the thorough work that is required in dealing with sin. The blood of His atonement on the Cross seals for us the pardon of sin. Now the risen Lord must come with the power of His resurrection and sweep the evil out of the heart. There are strongholds of sin that will not yield to a gentle touch. They must be blasted out as by the power of dynamite. There are secret sins too that are so elusive and so obscure that they must needs be searched out in their lair and driven forth mercilessly into the open. Yes, we need such power as that which broke the tomb of Christ on the first Easter morn to shatter for us completely the power of sin in our souls. Royal day indeed is that day when the risen Lord comes to reign in us and over us.

And we need the power of His resurrection in our work, that it may be strong and vital and enduring. Even our common toil needs this power that it may be lifted high and made uncommon by a new quality of energy and reality.

An artist painted a picture of the resurrection scene, and in his picture he put something unusual and unexpected. He painted Jesus coming away from the open tomb with a mattock on His shoulder! At first thought it seems like an intrusion. Why this common implement of toil in such a transcendent scene? Then as we think upon it, we realize that this commonplace tool belongs there—even on the shoulder of the risen Lord. For He comes in the power of His resurrection to touch our common everyday toil, and to touch even the tools with which we do our work, and to give us help. He comes to give strength to the right arm of the toiler and courage to the heart of every one that is weary. He comes to empower us so that we "can do all things in Him that strengtheneth us." It is a wonderful thing to feel day by day, as we work with our tools, as we wind our clocks, as we walk upon our appointed way, that there is a great power of gravitation that is helping us. But there is something more wonderful than this—and that is to feel when we put our hands to the commonplace task in this world, that the thrill of power which comes from the resurrection of Jesus Christ our Lord may nerve us for our endeavor and quicken us in our labor. What a privilege is this, to do our everyday work as "children of the resurrection."

Like Wordsworth's lark, we are nested in the earth, but we have the freedom of the upper air. We are doing many ordinary things in this world, but we need not do them in ordinary ways. The sons of the resurrection may be breaking clods on the rough highway, but they can do it like kings, for they have royal power.

A Rogue Among Flowers

BY EMMA YOUNGLOVE

IN Southern California vast quantities of flower seeds are grown for Eastern seedsmen. It is essential, in the eyes of the professional grower, that a plant be true to type, that is, that its flowers closely resemble those of the parent plant.

One season a grower took a contract to furnish seven tons of sweet pea seed. He rented a field in one place and a few acres in another and a hillside in another. Here he planted seeds of white peas; there, of pink; and in a third spot, of lavender. When blossoming time came, he watched his fields day by day to see whether pink or lavender flowers bloomed in the white field, or the reverse. Every day men and girls were sent into the fields—into the white field to uproot every plant which bore a colored flower, into the pink field to destroy every vine whose flowers were not the correct kind of pink, and into the lavender field to see that none but lavender-colored blossoms were allowed to mature.

This process of elimination is known among florists as roguing, and the plant which is not true to type is called a rogue. A rogue may bear beautiful blossoms, but it has no value for seed.

So in the Master's garden a human being cannot serve the divine purpose unless he or she is right in heart. The Christian type is that which He desires, and nothing else can atone for the lack of Christian character.

Harbingers of Spring

BY REV. A. MESSLER QUICK.

*Hark! the piping of the robin—
Notes of promise and of cheer,
Tell us winter now is passing,
Buds and flowers will soon appear.
Nature's garb will clothe the meadows,
Where the snow so long has lain,
Balmy days of spring will follow,
When the robins come again.*

*Though the forests yet are leafless,
And the skies are lowering still,
Music from the early songsters
Now with cheer our bosoms thrill,
For we have the gladsome promise,
Icy king shall lose his reign,
When the robins pipe their greetings,
And the bluebids come again.*

*Never is the sylvan music'
Of the birds that later sing,
Sweet as notes of early warblers,
Heralds of the coming spring.
Later songs in fields and forest
May have more of warbler's art,
But the song when days are dreary,
Is the song that stirs the heart.*

*Nature's Easter matin sonnet—
Life anew from deathlike sleep—
Is the song redbreast is singing,
Causing hearts with joy to leap.
Ere the winter has departed,
These are notes of sweetest strain,
For we know we're nearing springtime,
When the robins come again.*

PRINTED PREACHERS

Deepening the Spiritual Life

Mr. Louis Toth has served as a missionary colporter of the American Tract Society for many years. He works largely among the foreign-speaking population, many of whom he finds are sunk in formalism which lacks almost all the characteristics of true religion. His constant effort is to use the printed page as a means for deepening the spiritual life of those whose homes he visits.

Some time ago Mr. Toth sent an interesting photograph of the Sunday School which he has gathered together in a small town. This photograph is reproduced on this page of our paper. Mr. Toth himself is seen standing at the extreme right hand side of the picture. In his report Mr. Toth wrote:

"During the immediate past I have felt the presence of the Almighty more than ever before, and it seems that the people also have responded more readily to the Gospel than ever before.

"In my travels among the Hungarians and the people of other nationalities I have had opportunity to speak to them very earnestly about their souls' salvation and the deeper things of the Christian life, and I have tried to lead them into the prayer life.

"Many of these people have never associated religion with anything else but form. A great number on coming to this land have understood it to be a free country, and being glad to get rid of the 'old religion' of the Old World when landing on American soil, they swing to the other extreme of the pendulum as it were, and drop everything that has the word 'religion' in connection with it.

"There are a few who are true to their ancestral faith and cling tenaciously to the religion of their fathers. But a great many become atheistic and anarchistic socialists. These are the hardest ones to deal with of all whom I meet.

"In spite of all the hardships that I suffer the joy that I get out of my work as a missionary colporter is over and above all else in my life.

"One evening after one of my cottage prayer meetings I was assigned to a home to stay over night. After a little conversation with the members of the family I found out that they were atheistic socialists. They were a little hostile at first, but later they accepted some Christian literature and read it. In the morning I had an opportunity to talk to the man of the house, and he promised to buy a Bible the next time I came. I feel confident that the next time I will be asked to have a service at this home, and am trusting that they will accept Jesus as their personal Saviour.

"My usual method of approach to the people is to go into a town and get some family interested enough to agree to have a cottage prayer meeting at their home, inviting the neighbors to attend.

"I am sending you a picture of my Sunday School in a small town. In the picture there appears an old man with his son, daughter-in-law and seven grandchildren who have been led out of formalism into the real life in Jesus Christ.

"I am so thankful that you keep the light of the Gospel shining for my fellow-countrymen who otherwise might never hear the Gospel in its purity as revealed by the Lord Jesus Christ."

COLPORTER LOUIS TOTH AND HIS SUNDAY SCHOOL.

In the State of Utah

Rev. Henry W. Pratt who is carrying on missionary colportage among the Mormons in Utah and the adjoining States, tells us that the past winter was one of unusual severity in his field. He went forward bravely, however, and succeeded in distributing a considerable amount of Christian literature, which experience has shown is the best antidote to Mormonism that can be supplied. He writes:

"February of this year will be looked upon as a memorable month in the State of Utah. A prohibitory law was at last enacted after having been passed three times by the State legislature in the last seven or eight years. Our present Governor, Hon. Simon Bamberger, signed the prohibition bill on February 8, 1917, and the law goes into effect on August first of the present year. A few months ago the Governor said: 'This is the hand that will sign the bill that shall emancipate the State of Utah from the liquor traffic.'

"Another fact worth mentioning in this connection is that the State Senate voted unanimously for the bill. All the members of the lower House also voted in its favor except one member from Salt Lake City, who voted, 'No.' I do not think any other State legislature has come up to that record. On February first the legislature adopted a resolution providing for a constitutional amendment in favor of prohibition, to be voted on by the people in November of this year.

"It is always pleasant to receive orders for books coming from those in the remote parts of the State. This month brought an order from a missionary of the Methodist Episcopal Church living down in the State twenty miles from the railroad. He wrote, 'Send me fifteen more copies of "Daily Food." I know that these little books are doing good on my field.'

"When calling at a home the lady asked, 'Have you one of those motto cards,—"Christ is the Head of this house"?' I was glad to be able to furnish her with this card. She has five or six children and she is an earnest Christian mother. It will emphasize her purpose in her home to have the words constantly before her children, 'Christ is the head of this house.'

"In these days not so much is said of 'Blood Atonement' as it used to be taught in the Mormon Church in the days of Brigham Young. Apostates from Mormonism do not have to suffer that treatment now, as the State laws do not permit it. A Mormon woman said to me, 'I was once threatened as a subject for Blood Atonement, and told that I would be put in the dogs' den.' She was cut off from the Mormon Church long ago but escaped any punishment.

"I called upon a man who joined the Mormon Church in the year 1839, about eight years before the Mormons emigrated to Utah. He said, 'I sent in my resignation three years ago and now I do not go to any church.' So many Mormons do this and become infidels."

Quiet Faithful Service

Among the missionary colporters of the American Tract Society is a quiet, earnest woman, Miss Sara E. Stambaugh, who in spite of various hindrances continues to aid the progress of the Kingdom by the circulation of Christian literature. She writes:

"Although you have not heard from me for some time, I am thankful that I can report some good work done. I know that I do not circulate many books, but I am sure that my tract work has done untold good, though I cannot tell how much.

"I have talked to children both in and out of meetings. I have distributed tracts and talked with the discouraged and the perplexed and with young Christians and many who are sick. I have not been able to visit as much as I should like, but many have come to me. It makes me feel very humble, and I long to help them aright, which is not easy in these days, when so much of error is being taught.

"I do not expect to see the fruit of my labors now, but I feel sure of a good harvest since I know that I am not sowing in vain, though it is often in tears.

"I heartily thank you for your good service and for the privilege of working with you. I could do almost nothing if it were not for the commission which you have given me as a missionary colporter of the American Tract Society.

"The publications I am circulating will doubtless be read and will help the readers long after I am gone. I believe all who receive them from me keep and prize them, and they cannot fail to do good."

AGGRESSIVE EVANGELISM

By Rev. Warren G. Partridge, D.D.

THE call of this hour in America is for an aggressive propaganda of the Christian religion. This country can be Christianized only by the whole-hearted co-operation of all churches and all Christians, in a supreme endeavor to obey our divine Commander's Great Commission, "Go and preach the Gospel to every creature."

Our one hundred million population can never be evangelized alone by ministers and professional evangelists. We must go back to the methods of Apostolic Christianity, when every disciple was commanded to be a missionary and an evangelist. In Acts 8: 4 we read, "Therefore they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word." The bulk of these persecuted Christians in Jerusalem were the laity. But these men and women and young people became militant and eager soul-winners. They all became the flaming evangelists of the new religion. The Twentieth Century needs the same holy passion for souls, which set on fire the affections and will of the men and women who followed the Nazarene in the First Century.

A Startling Lack of Growth

The Christian Church was started by personal work. Individual Christians labored to win individuals, one by one, into the kingdom of heaven. The last decade has not witnessed an adequate growth numerically in membership among our Christian Churches. One able authority says, "The percentage of increase in Protestantism in the last decade has been the smallest of any decade in a hundred years." But we cannot place the blame on the great Head of the Church. "He shall see of the travail of His soul and shall be satisfied." When? He will be satisfied when every disciple becomes another John the Baptist. For John was a "bright and a shining light." He was a courageous and faithful witness of the Messiah. His bugle blast to his age was, "Behold the Lamb of God." And the Baptist's testimony won such heroes of the faith as Andrew, James, and the other immortals.

We need today the proclamation of the evangelistic message from every man, woman, and child in our Christian Churches. President Mackenzie has truly said: "Evangelism is the only true regenerative of the human heart, the only real cleanser of the life of a nation."

Every Church member should be a soul-winner. Ministers and evangelists have no monopoly in this business. In Christ's conception, the Pastor is simply the Leader in a band of soul-winners. The modern Church can accomplish the magnificent achievements of Gideon and his immortal Band of Heroes, if every church member has a holy passion for winning the souls of men.

Serious Facts to be Faced

Suppose that a Church has one hundred members, and it has only four additions to its membership on Confession of faith, in one year. Then, on an average, it has taken twenty-five church members one whole year to win a single individual to Christ! And perhaps one member alone won that new member, while twenty-four members folded their arms! And yet many Christian churches show a smaller gain in membership than this. There are some city churches, surrounded by dense population, whose gain in membership year after year is less than their loss by death and removals! In many of our cities church membership is not keeping pace with the growth of population.

All Christian Churches should face these serious facts. And each church member should ask himself, "Have I been a personal worker to win men to Christ?"

We must have evangelistic hearts if we are to win men to Christ. We must enter into His holy service with glowing ardor and a sublime abandon. Good authorities tell us that in our American Protestant Churches there are one million less men than women. That would indicate that our men in the pews have not said to themselves: "I am my brother's keeper." The men of our churches have a man's job in winning other men to Christ.

Our Sunday Schools should have tens of thousands of recruits at once. Here is the whitest field for evangelism in all the wide world. The Church with an aggressive, wide-awake, and up-to-date Sunday School is sure of growth and prosperity. For with officers and teachers, who have a passion for souls, such a Sunday School is a missionary field of wonderful promise. Eighty-five per cent or more of church members are won through this mighty arm of the Church. But the Sunday School gains increase in membership, just as the Church is increased by the personal work of individuals for individuals. This was Christ's own method of securing disciples. Our divine Master had wonderful success as a personal worker, thus "leaving us an example that we should follow in his steps." The world is waiting for this personal touch in the home, the shop, the factory, the school, the bank, the office, and upon the street. And no disciple is excused from this holy war. Let there be no shirkers in this mobilization for the conquest of this world for King Emmanuel.

Remarkable Possibilities

Think for one moment of the startling results, if every church member was a personal worker to bring men to Christ. Suppose that there was only one Christian in the world, and that he labored a year to win one individual to accept Christ as his Saviour and that those two Christians kept on winning each year another convert; and that every person won to Christ brought another soul into the kingdom every year. Think of the remarkable result. Why, good mathematicians have figured out that in only thirty-two years every person in the world would be brought into Christ's kingdom! "But this kind goes forth only by faith and prayer." We need, each of us, for this glorious work, a new Pentecost. And we can have it if we pay the price.

There must be a deeper consecration, more heart-searching prayer, more searching study of the Word of God, and more hours of holy communion with our Lord. If we have a new vision of the suffering Saviour, who now is on His throne, and a new vision of the worth of one human soul, we can be successful co-laborers together with God.

Thousands are waiting for our message. It is said that a blacksmith in Glasgow said of Dr. Norman McLeod, "He never came into my shop without talking to me as if he had been a blacksmith all his life; but he never went away without leaving Christ in my heart." The laboring men and women, the business men and women, the professional men and women of this country, the young people and the boys and girls are famishing by thousands for the Bread of Life; and they need the visit and personal testimony of such soul-winners as Dr. McLeod, so that each one can say, "But he never went away without leaving Christ in my heart."

Where Opportunity Waits

BY DAISY D. STEVENSON

Contrary to her old custom of knocking once at doors, then vanishing in short order, Opportunity has decided to establish herself permanently in the city of Denver, Colorado.

"Opportunity School"—and there's a world of truth in the name—is the successful experiment of a wide-awake progressive Superintendent, and is supervised by a broad-minded, big-hearted woman Principal.

Old or young may enter this splendid trade school at any time, choosing those subjects they desire to study, attending only such hours day or night, as are most convenient. The fame of this institution and what it freely offered anyone with aims and hopes, spread like a forest fire uphill. During the first term over sixteen hundred pupils, representing twenty different nationalities, were enrolled.

Foreigners are taught correctly, and in a short time, to speak the English language. Young men or women who must toil all day for a mere pittance, take advantage of night school to learn a trade, or to acquire a complete business or High School course. Besides the usual school subjects, there are courses in drawing, electricity, wood work, domestic science, millinery, manicuring, dressmaking and dentistry. Before long it is planned to add a number of interesting new departments such as nursing, telegraphy, and automobile school, with experienced, competent instructors for each.

This remarkable mine of opportunity is free to all and through its help anyone who has the desire and the pluck to study and endeavor may strike a gold bearing vein that will broaden and enrich his whole future life.

Brighter Days

BY CORA S. DAY

Lucile closed the book of old pioneer-day tales with a little sigh.

"Such a sad, pathetic story," she said. "Have you read it—the one about John Burke and his wife, the young couple in a fort besieged by Indians? They had given up all hope of holding the fort. The savages were breaking into the stockade. The men prepared to sell their lives dearly. But first John Burke took his bride in his arms, kissed her—and shot her through the heart, to save her from capture by the Indians. Then as he turned to fight to the last, a cheer was heard and a rescuing force appeared. But John Burke was not rescued. They found his lifeless body beside his wife's, both dead by his own hands because he despaired just a minute too soon."

"What a pity—two young lives wasted," agreed Harriet. "I saw a line that John Burke should have known, only today," and after a moment's thought she repeated it:

"Beware of desperate steps. The darkest day, Live till tomorrow, will have passed away."

"Yes, I think that is really true of most of our dark days. I've known it to work out with me—and every time it makes me ashamed that I am so slow to realize that God has brighter days ahead for me, and a lesson of hope and patience for me to learn from the dark ones," said Lucile softly.

An Easter Thought

BY HELEN M. RICHARDSON.

*Our Easter promise is the life that throbs Beneath the snowdrift, clothed again with power;
The homing instinct of the sure-winged bird,—
The glad return of each unto its dower.*

*Our Easter pledge should be a purpose true, Harnessed to effort, clothed anew with might;—
Determination of the striving soul
To win its way into a clearer light.*

HIS VINEYARD AND OURS

Ploughing in India

A little while ago Rev. J. Passmore, Secretary of the Christian Literature Society for India, sent a striking photograph, a reproduction of which appears on this page of the AMERICAN MESSENGER.

This picture illustrates the extremely primitive methods of agriculture that prevail in India. It is a thoroughly characteristic scene, and it offers a remarkable contrast to the advanced methods of farming which are used here in America.

We have presented this picture not only for the light which it casts upon the daily life of the Indian agriculturist, but because its title suggests a striking metaphor for the spiritual process which is going on, as the old heathen faiths of India are being overturned in order that the truths of the Christian faith may be implanted in the minds and hearts of the people of that great country.

The metaphor of ploughing may seem to be a strenuous one to employ, but it represents the actual truth, for the heathen faiths of India are of such a nature that they must be completely overturned and, as it were, ploughed under, ere the minds of the people are prepared to receive the truths of the Gospel of Christ.

Christian literature in the vernacular is one of the main instrumentalities whereby the heathen religions of India are being displaced in order to make way for the introduction of the teachings of Christianity. The Christian Literature Society for India is one of the most important agencies engaged in this work, and by its recent amalgamation with the Madras Religious Tract and Book Society its efficiency and influence have been greatly increased.

During the last year the Christian Literature Society for India reported a total of 195 new publications printed in a dozen different dialects. Since the formation of the Society a total of over 50,000,000 copies of books, tracts and periodicals have been printed and circulated.

It may be of interest to note that this Christian Literature Society for India is one of the many foreign missionary organizations that have been aided by cash appropriations from the American Tract Society of New York.

Union Work in Korea

In a very interesting discussion of the subject of "Church Union and Efficiency," which appears in a recent issue of The Korea Mission Field, Rev. Herbert E. Blair sets forth some of the benefits that have already become apparent through the work of the Religious Tract Society of Korea and the Federal Council. He writes:

"Two of the most vital elements in evangelizing a nation are the translation of the Bible and the creation of a hymnal. United acceptance of the one Bible translation and the one hymnal by practically all churches in Korea makes possible a more powerful impress upon the life of the church and nation than could be possible, had each church its separate productions. Also through the Tract Society a common literature has fed the minds of the Christian communities.

"The Federal Council is a product of church unity among missionaries, but its influence has permeated the Korean church and guided its progress during the period the churches were not ready themselves for such union. The council has accomplished great things for the whole church. Probably no one will be found who would want to take one backward step from the unity attained in the Council nor would any question the great efficiency and economy resulting from its services even though it has not been able to keep some from independent action at times.

"The Federal Council's union newspaper for the whole country, the common Sunday School helps and the united prayer calendar carry the whole church along with a common church intelligence. Union in medical work, in school work, in the Senate, the division of territory, and the conformity secured in church terminology though very small; all have led to efficiency, strength and intensiveness of impact on the part of all and have weakened the life work of none. Our chronicle of union work, though it has broken down in a few particular cases, is long and praiseworthy. Its blessings have been more than we have taken time to realize."

PLOUGHING IN INDIA.

Preaching to Japanese Policemen

James Cuthbertson, Superintendent of the Japan Branch of the International Christian Police Association, is making a special effort to reach the native police of Japan with the Gospel message of salvation. In a recent issue of The Evangelical Christian he thus describes his work:

"My two months' experience of motor car evangelism has brought me to the point of wondering why cars are not in general mission use. I have preached the Gospel to more police sub-inspectors, inspectors and superintendents during these two months than all my previous eleven years in Japan. We have travelled over seven hundred miles, visited thirty to forty police stations, distributed New Testaments and spiritual literature, preached in several of the stations, and, using the car as a pulpit, an attraction in itself, have preached to small crowds by the roadside on sundry occasions. Most of all do I appreciate the fact that I have been able to enter the chief's private office and to lay before him the claims of God and the Way of Life. I have been greatly encouraged by the response. Occasionally my reception has been chilly, but generally it has been warm. Some seriously-minded men have been laid on my heart as a result of this work, and I am confident God is starting a work amongst the higher rank of police officials. We are believing for and expecting revival blessing. God has given us sips to whet our appetite, but that full soul-satisfying draught our souls long for, has still to come. But we believe it is coming.

"We have been greatly encouraged by the increasing attendance of new policemen at our Tokyo meetings. Nearly all are members of my English classes. Not only have they come, but, thank God, several have been saved, five policemen and two policemen's wives. Several others are under conviction, and will shortly be brought in. Also a few civilians have entered 'The Gate Beautiful' and are now walking the narrow path which leads to life.

"God has sent another worker to help us. His name also is Suzuki San. He comes to help us for the greater part of the month. He receives no fixed salary, but trusts God to supply his needs. I also trust God to supply this need, for there is no obvious earthly source of supply. This man was in the police for ten years and has been in Christian work for six or seven years since.

"Good reports are coming in from our worker in the South, Tsuge San. He took Kako San's place. The work in Sakai is being greatly blessed. The Prison Governor is keen and meetings are being held in his house. Our old friend, the police sergeant in Sakai, was greatly helped through Tsuge San, and is now in the Japan Evangelistic Band Bible School for training as an evangelist."

The Burma "Northfield"

Nearly ten years ago a movement was got under way for the inauguration of an annual gathering of Missionaries and native Christians in Burma, with objects similar to those of the American Northfield. "The Assembly for Bible Study," is the title of the organization, and the first meeting was in 1908 on the premises of the Rangoon Baptist College. For four years the meetings were held there, but then it was decided to seek quarters in a more healthy location than the hot capital of Burmah.

Mawmyo, the centre at which the Assembly meets, is a beautiful hill station, and here spiritual refreshment is combined with the enjoyment of bracing air and invigorating climate. Various denominations co-operate in the work of the Assembly.

An Illustration of Grace

A correspondent of the Bombay Guardian writes of Edward Cornelius, who for forty-eight years labored among the Santals of India. He was the son of a tanner in Hernosend, Sweden. Going to sea as a lad, he fell into dissolute habits, but a tract by Bishop Ryle made a deep impression upon him. One day at sea the Spirit of God so strove with him that he crept away under one of the boat decks and cried to God for mercy. When he arose he was a new creature in Christ Jesus and began to tell others of the Saviour he had found.

When the ship reached Calcutta he decided to leave the sea to preach Christ to the natives of India. Trusting God for his daily bread, he started on foot, following the railway line to Rampur Hant, where he met some of his fellow countrymen who were missionaries. He remained with them for five years, after which he settled at Jamtara, beginning his work there in 1873. Much pioneering was done, and the one mission station has become seven with a band of European and Indian workers.

In Northern Siam

A Mission Press is maintained among the Laos people at Chiengmai in Northern Siam. Rev. D. G. Collins, the superintendent of this Press, has sent the following report of the past year's work.

"During most of the year we have employed twenty-eight men and women for the Mission and American Bible Society we have kept seven men employed setting Lao type, while most of the time we have kept three and sometimes four men setting Siamese. We now have the whole of the Lao New Testament in print and eleven books of the Old Testament.

"The native paper in the vernacular with the Sabbath school helps has been issued monthly. Almost eleven hundred copies of this valuable publication go into the homes of our Christians. The Laos News, in English, with about a thousand names on our list, has been issued quarterly, and is mailed to hundreds of Presbyterian homes in the United States.

"The American Tract Society as in previous years has donated one hundred dollars for the publication of tracts. This gift is greatly appreciated."

The total number of publications printed during the year amounted to 150,737 copies, comprising in all 5,609,000 pages.

A Baptism of Lepers

On a recent occasion as many as eighty lepers received Christian baptism in the large asylum maintained by the Mission to Lepers at Purulia, India, while from many other stations there are similar reports, if not perhaps on so large a scale.

At Purulia, Rev. E. Cannon, who is now superintendent, says, referring to these eighty candidates: "For all these new converts from Hinduism, and for their confession of Christ, we give thanks. They have been carefully instructed in the main facts of the Faith for at least six months previously. . . . I had examined them and found them sincere in desire to embrace Christianity and renounce Hinduism. The faith of some of them was very touching, and one could see that they had learnt to love Christ and trust in Him in a way that they had never trusted in their heathen gods."

American Indians Converted

The Rev. Fred G. Mitchell of Tolchaco, Ariz., a missionary among the Navajo Indians under the Presbyterian Board, tells how the Indians receive the Gospel in these words:

"We have seen the heathen sitting spellbound as they listened to the words of sin and salvation. We have seen the desire for the truth kindle in their faces. We have heard their appeals for more as they listened for the first time to the holy words from the Book in their own tongue. We have seen young hearts surrendered; and young men and women from the schools who have received the Lord Jesus are asking us to train them that they may take up the great work of bringing the gospel that breaks a nation's chains. Rejoice with us, you who have carried this work on your hearts. The victory was assured in heaven long ago, but to see it on earth is a tree of life to the hungry heart of the laborer. The pioneer stage of our work is passing. We shall need your prayers and gifts no less in the new order. The opportunity is ours to train a fine native force for the effective evangelization of this people."

Good News from Nigeria

From the Church Mission Society Mission in Nigeria, Africa, comes the good news that nearly 5,000 people among the Sofo section of the Igabos have forsaken idolatrous practices. Mothers, who formerly abandoned infants to starvation because they had cried at birth, are now raising them. Twins, too, are no longer looked upon with suspicious fear, but are allowed to live.

Notes upon the Topics Used
in Christian Endeavor
and Other Young People's Societies.

THE PRAYER MEETING

By
Rev. Henry Lewis
Ph.D.

APRIL 1.

The Quiet Ways of God's Providence

I Kings, 19:1-13.

The Daily Readings for this topic were printed in the last issue of our paper. They present a number of different instances in which we may observe the quiet way in which God works out His Providence.

Noise Does Not Make Power

The greatest forces in nature are the silent forces. Gravitation is the power which holds the universe in balance, but it works in perfect silence. Light is one of the strongest forces in producing chemical changes and yet it effects these changes without any audible sound.

Noise does not make power. It is rather the indication of a futile effort to resist some irresistible power, as when a river surges and bubbles when it passes through a narrow gorge or roars in impotent defiance as it is hurled over some mighty cataract.

So in the spiritual life the greatest force is the silent influence of God's Spirit, impelling men onward and upward in the line of Christian duty.

An Irresistible Influence

Though it works so quietly, God's Providence is an irresistible force. Men may oppose it, but their opposition is all in vain, for the Will of God is supreme, and in the end the divine purpose is sure to be accomplished.

Let us seek, therefore, to ascertain what is God's Will, and then let us put ourselves in the attitude of willing co-operation so that we may become fellow laborers with Him.

A Precious Promise

There is a blessed assurance of the beneficent results of the Divine Providence in the words of Paul: "We know that to them that love God all things work together for good."

Let us realize that this statement holds good under all circumstances, at all times, and in all places. There is only one condition and that is it applies solely "to them that love God."

God's Providence Rules in All Things

God's providence applies to individual lives. Elijah's life was crowded with marked instances of God's special dealing with him. But every believer may have the assurance of the same watchful care and protecting power as this prophet of old, if only he has the same faith.

God's providence applies to the nations of the earth. The history of Israel is a strong illustration of this truth. But God is still dealing with the nations, and there is every reason to believe that the nations which honor Him to-day will be just as richly blessed as were the chosen people of old.

APRIL 8.

The Significance of Easter

I. Corinthians 15:50-58.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Apr. 2. Angels in the tomb. Mark 16:1-7.
T. Apr. 3. Immortality demonstrated. 2 Tim. 1:10.
W. Apr. 4. The invisible made real. 2 Cor. 4:17-18; 5:1-9.
T. Apr. 5. Christ enthroned. Eph. 1:17-23.
F. Apr. 6. A day of reckoning. 2 Cor. 5:10-21.
S. Apr. 7. Resurrection life now. Col. 3:1-11.

The Scripture portion assigned for our topic is the conclusion of Paul's masterly argument for the immortality of the soul and the resurrection of the dead. The significance of Easter is well summed up in these closing words of the Apostle's great plea for a firm belief in the reality of Christ's resurrection and in the resurrection of all those who by faith are one with Christ.

What Easter Means to You and Me
Let us try to summarize briefly some of the precious truths that Easter stands for.

Easter means a Risen Lord and Saviour. This was what it meant to the first disciples. This is still its glorious meaning to those who are His disciples now.

Easter means the resurrection of the dead in Christ. The Risen Christ has brought eternal life and immortality to light.

Easter means that death is conquered and the grave is vanquished. The assurance of the resurrection has robbed the tomb of all its terrors.

The Joy of the Eastertide

Easter is a time of joy. The awakening of nature from its long winter sleep thrills us through and through with the consciousness of the renewal of the life that seemed to have been suspended. The songs of the birds, the budding of the flowers, and all the vernal surroundings of the season arouse in us a note of joy.

But the greatest cause for rejoicing to the Christian at Easter tide is not the awakening of Nature but the remembrance of the fact that Jesus rose from the dead and that by His resurrection He has shown Himself to be the eternal and unchanging Light of the world.

An Incentive to Service

Upon every Christian rests the obligation and the privilege of making known unto others the precious significance of Easter.

At the end of his wonderful argument for the reality of the resurrection Paul draws this conclusion: "Wherefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."

Easter makes all Christian toil worth while. It emphasizes the fact that what we do for others we are doing for immortal souls. It stresses the "Resurrection life," and bids us order our lives with the eternal destinies of our fellow-men in view.

A Message of Comfort

Easter brings the most comforting message that humanity has ever known. It teaches us not to sorrow without hope for those that have died in the Lord, but to rejoice in their exaltation.

The thought of Easter transforms the thought of death. A silversmith throws broken metal into a melting pot, and out of old and battered material forms a new and beautiful cup. So God brings beauty out of the grave by giving to every human soul a new and spiritual body.

APRIL 15.

The Lord's Day the Best Day

Nehemiah 13:15-22.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Apr. 9. Best for meditation. Rev. 1:10-20.
T. Apr. 10. Best for instruction. Acts 16:12-15.
W. Apr. 11. Best for rest. Ex. 20:8-11.
T. Apr. 12. Best for worship. Ps. 118:24-29.
F. Apr. 13. Best for fellowship. Acts 20:7-12.
S. Apr. 14. Best for service. John 5:1-13.

The wording of this topic is a very happy one. In times not so very far past there was a tendency to regard the Sabbath as not the best, but the most tiresome and monotonous day of all the week. In those days when religion was looked upon by some people as almost synonymous with gloom, Sunday was of all days the most miserable, and instead of being considered the best it was often felt to be the worst day of all the seven. In these modern days the Lord's Day is looked upon in an entirely different light. It is regarded as a day to be enjoyed and not simply endured. It is prized as an opportunity for spiritual exaltation instead of morbid depression. It is employed by right-minded Christian people as an occasion for joyous service rather than for self-condemnatory introspection.

The Lord's Day is the best day for meditation, instruction, rest, worship, fellowship and service, as suggested in the Daily Bible Readings. It is also the best in many other ways, a few of which we will now consider briefly.

A Character Builder

The Lord's Day is the best for the upbuilding of character. Through the privileges which we enjoy on this holy day the moral fibre of our nature is strengthened. By the instruction and fellowship which we enjoy in the Christian sanctuary we are made strong for the battle of our daily lives. By the contemplation of the spiritual verities of our most holy faith we are stimulated and inspired for the daily struggle with things which are of the earth earthy.

A Golden Opportunity

The Lord's Day is the best for specific Christian work. This does not mean that our religion is not to be a weekday as well as a Sunday profession. But unquestionably the Lord's Day brings a golden opportunity for a great deal of direct personal service which it is not easy to perform on any other day of the week. In other words the environment of the Lord's Day is distinctly helpful to the rendering of personal Christian service.

A Day to Be Guarded

Since the Lord's Day is the best, it must be jealously guarded from the foes that threaten it. Nehemiah showed a resolute spirit in dealing with those who profaned the sanctity of the Sabbath in his day, and we should be equally vigilant and determined in dealing with those who would weaken the observance of the Lord's Day at the present time.

Let us uphold the hands of those who are fighting to maintain the integrity of the Lord's Day. The need of a day of rest is ingrained in man's physical, moral and spiritual nature. Let us cherish the Lord's Day as a gift from God which is to be used to His Honor and glory and for the blessing of the human race.

APRIL 22.

How Lying Undermines Character

Lev. 19:11,12; Prov. 6:16-19.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Apr. 16. The first lies. Gen. 3:4-12.
T. Apr. 17. Cain's lie a subterfuge. Gen. 4:9.
W. Apr. 18. Leads to deception. Matt. 2:1-8.
T. Apr. 19. Leads to meanness. Luke 20:20-26.
F. Apr. 20. Lying fears man, dares God. Acts 5:1-11.
S. Apr. 21. Where lying ends. Rev. 21:8.

No one can study the Bible carefully without coming to the conclusion that God is a lover of truth and a hater of lies. Both the Old and the New Testament unite in teaching that truth is an essential attribute of God and that He requires truth as one of the characteristics of His children.

A lie is an abomination unto God. He whose very essence is truth cannot look upon that which is false without loathing. A lie is an offense unto God because it contravenes His very nature.

Untruthfulness in word or deed is a sin against mankind. Normal human relations are based upon truth, and nothing is more destructive to the maintenance of the right relations between men as the introduction of a falsehood.

It has been well said: "An untrue man is a moral murderer, his mouth the deadly weapon, and his neighbor the victim."

Lying leads to an inevitable deterioration of character. The utterance of one falsehood usually leads to the utterance of another and that to another, and so on. In other words the evil effect of lying is cumulative.

The moral result of a career of falsehood is illustrated in the incident that is told of Denades, the Athenian, who, in addressing the populace, said: "I call the gods to witness the truth of what I say." But the people, who knew his habit of lying, replied, "And we call the gods to witness that we will not believe what you say."

The habit of lying undermines character because he who values truth lightly is not apt to have a high regard for any of the other virtues.

Whatever temporary triumph may seem to be won by lying, let us remember that in the final analysis truth is always victorious. "Wisdom and truth are immortal," says Robert Hall, "cunning and deception, after glittering for a moment, pass away forever."

APRIL 29.

Missionary Opportunities in Latin-America

Isaiah 60:1-5.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Apr. 23. Educational opportunities. Acts 19:15-20.
T. Apr. 24. Religious example. I Pet. 2:9-20.
W. Apr. 25. Ready to listen. Acts 17:10-14.
T. Apr. 26. Opportunities to serve. Rom. 12:17-21.
F. Apr. 27. Reconstruction. Zech. 3:1-7.
S. Apr. 28. The power that saves. I Cor. 1:17-25.

Latin America is now being studied as a missionary field more extensively than ever before. The problem which it presents is not simple but complex. Despite the difficulties that are involved, large and substantial progress is being made in arriving at a program of action, and ere long it is hoped that advanced steps may be taken in winning Latin America for Christ.

Missionary work in foreign lands is now carried on under several well-defined divisions or departments. Among these are included evangelistic, educational, medical, industrial and literary lines of effort.

There is room in Latin America for all these different branches of missionary endeavor.

The population in Latin America includes the South American aborigines, who are most of them practically heathen. There is a large element of the population, who were once Roman Catholic, but who are now infidels, agnostics and atheists. A certain proportion of the people still cling closely to the Roman Catholic Church. Finally there is the Protestant element, which is small, but which holds out the brightest possibilities for the religious future of Latin America.

Evangelistic missionary work is needed in Latin America to proclaim the simple truths of a pure Gospel both to those who are heathen and agnostic and also to those who are living in the darkness of superstition and error.

There is a wide field for the educational department of missionary effort in Latin America, for illiteracy is widespread and educational institutions are few and far between.

Unfortunately too, atheism and infidelity are the dominant influences in those schools and colleges which exist apart from the missionary enterprise. Hence the crying need for the establishing of Christian institutions of learning to disseminate a system of education founded upon the principles of the Gospel.

There is sore need of medical missions in Latin-America. Vice is one of the plague spots of all South American countries, and medical missions and wise sanitary regulations are needed to counteract the evil results that have followed an unbridled regime of lust and impurity.

Industrial missions find an appropriate field among the uncivilized natives of Latin-America.

Probably the most important agency for the evangelization of Latin-America lies in the use of Christian literature prepared in the Spanish and Portuguese languages. The great bulk of the population use one or the other of these two languages.

There are vast regions where as yet the Protestant missionaries have not yet secured a footing, but Christian books and tracts may be scattered far and wide, if only the necessary financial means be provided, and each book or tract may be a silent evangelist, winning souls to a saving knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ.

For many years the American Tract Society has been supplying Christian literature for Latin-America. It has already published over 15,000,000 copies of books, tracts and periodicals in the Spanish and Portuguese languages, and it is now making comprehensive plans for the issue of new and greatly needed publications, including a One Volume Bible Commentary in Spanish and other books that will be of invaluable service.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS

Easter Joy Bells

BY CHARA BROUGHTON CONANT

*How silver-sweet the Joy Bells ring!
Hark! They proclaim again
The Resurrection of our King,
Whose right it is to reign,
White clouds in the blue sky above
Like angels' pinions gleam.
O Day of joy, of peace and love,
Thou art no poet's dream!*

*We know in whom we have believed—
He for our ransom came,
His Gospel we in faith received,
Confessed His Holy Name.
O Blessed Christ! the crown of thorns
Oppressed Thy sinless brow;
A peerless diadem adorns
The Victor's temples now.*

*Saviour and King, we cleave to Thee!
Each glorious Easter day
Illumes life's unresting sea,
That bears us all away.
Sweet Joy Bells peal! Your silver chime
Resounding o'er and o'er
Reminds us of the heavenly clime
Where death shall be no more.*

*No tears, no sorrow—best of all,
No sin to cloud our peace;
Father! As we Thy love recall,
May all forebodings cease.
We bless Thee for the matchless love
That sent the Saviour down;
This Easter Day, enthroned above,
He wears the Victor's crown.*

A Pair of Spectacles

BY JEAN MATEER BEEMAN.

"HOW would you like to go over to the prison with me this afternoon, Marion?" asked Mrs. Thornton of Marion Mills, her young niece from America, who had come to pay her missionary aunt a visit at Tai Yuan Fu in North China.

"Oh, I'd love to go, Aunt Madge. Tell me something about the work, won't you, so I'll know what to expect. It's rather a novel experience, going to prison, you know," laughed the girl as she turned inquiringly toward the older woman.

"Several years ago," replied Mrs. Thornton, "the governor of this Province went to Japan to study prison work and upon his return he set about the establishing of a model prison here in our city of Tai Yuan Fu. The women prisoners usually number less than a score. The male prisoners number four hundred at the present time. Each woman has her separate cell, and as soon as the day's work is done and the evening meal is over, each prisoner is locked into her cell until the morning and no light is allowed her. Extreme cleanliness and orderliness is insisted upon. The diet is simple, but abundant. All the prisoners are compelled to work, the men in the various workshops, or at building, gardening, and so forth, the women with the laundry and needle work. One of the old women has been a great trial to me; she has been sentenced to serve for fifteen years, is very talkative, and so far has absolutely refused to listen to the Gospel message."

"It's all so interesting!" exclaimed Marion. "The letters you have written have told so much about the terrible conditions in the usual Chinese prison, that it is indeed good to know of a governor who has the welfare of his prisoners so much at heart!"

That afternoon when Mrs. Thornton and Marion Mills reached the Tai Yuan Fu Model Prison the women were busy at their work. A warden led the callers to the women's quarters, unlocked the door of the courtyard and called to the wardress, who came forward to receive the foreigners. The order was given and instantly the women hurried to their cells to smooth their hair or hastily put on their outer garments. As the ladies entered the narrow court each prisoner stood at the door of her cell with head bowed and eyes down.

Then at a few cordial words of encouragement from the missionary the poor souls crowded around her with many requests. One woman wanted stuff with which to patch her clothes, another material for the soles of shoes, another ties for her hair, and so on.

The troublesome old woman, sentenced to fifteen years, finally slowly approached the missionary; she had never before done such a thing, always running into her cell and refusing to be talked to about the "Jesus Doctrine." But on this particular day she seemed eager to converse. In her hands she carried an old pair of Chinese spectacles, which she held out to Mrs. Thornton, saying breathlessly:

"I cannot see through them. Do you think you could exchange them for a stronger pair? The days are so dreary—but if I had some good glasses, I could do mending and help the other women to keep their clothes in shape."

Mrs. Thornton was pleased at the request and promised to see what could be done about the spectacles—perhaps it might be the salvation of this poor soul who had so long resisted the Gospel Message.

For the next few days, after her visit to the Chinese prison, Marion Mills was life. She was always losing her spectacles and I made it my special duty to keep track of them for her. Just the day before she left us, for her Heavenly home, she called me to her bedside, saying softly: 'Dear child, I want you to have my glasses as a keepsake, but if there should ever come a time when they can do any good in the world, be sure to pass them on. I had thought that their day of usefulness was over, but who knows—perhaps a new day may dawn for them.'

For a few moments it was very still in the little parlor of the missionary home, as both Mrs. Thornton and her niece recalled to mind the one they had loved so much.

"I was thinking, Auntie, that the 'new day' has come, and that Grandmother's spectacles might do a great deal of good if we gave them to Mrs. Li," said Marion wistfully.

"I am sure of it, dear," was Mrs. Thornton's quick reply, as she gathered Marion into her arms and told her that her gift would surely bear fruit unto a golden harvest.

When the next weekly visit to the prison came around, a box filled with a variety of things was unpacked before the eager eyes of the women prisoners.

WASHING DAY.

strangely silent, and finally her aunt said to her:

"What's wrong, girlie? Are you worried over anything? You haven't seemed quite happy since your visit to the prison."

A tender smile lit up the face of the young girl.

"I cannot forget that poor Mrs. Li, who begged so hard for new spectacles. Have you taken hers yet for exchange to any of the native shops?" she asked eagerly.

"Not yet, I had planned to attend to that to-morrow. But why do you ask?"

Marion bent forward quickly, laying her hand upon her aunt's arm, as she said:

"You needn't search further, Auntie—I have the spectacles for her."

"You!" exclaimed Mrs. Thornton in astonishment. "Where did you get them?"

"They are Grandmother's spectacles!" "Grandmother's spectacles! My own mother's glasses! Why, child, how do you happen to have them?" inquired the aunt.

Marion pulled a chair up beside her aunt and quietly proceeded to explain.

"You know that Grandmother lived with us for the last few years of her

Then Grandmother's spectacles appeared! The old lady cried for joy, stretching out her hands eagerly for the treasure!

"But they may not suit your eyes!" said Mrs. Thornton anxiously. The glasses were immediately tried on—and they suited perfectly!

Old Mrs. Li turned to young Marion Mills, who had brought the gift and said regretfully: "I'm afraid these will cost more money than I can raise in a long time."

"Tell her," replied Marion, turning to her Aunt as interpreter, "that I give them to her free. Tell her they were Grandmother's!" and her voice was a bit choked.

"No! no!" insisted the prisoner, "I cannot take them that way! The young lady from over the seas is too good. She must accept these cash—they are all I have in the world—but I'll pay more just as soon as I can make some with the sewing."

"Tell her again," said Marion gently, "that I would not think of taking money for Grandmother's spectacles. She is in Heaven with the Christ, who died to save us all! Tell her that it is a free gift, just as the Heavenly Father freely offers His salvation to her to-day."

In the next hour the wretchedness of the prison life was forgotten as the women listened eagerly to the story to which the gift of Grandmother's spectacles opened the way—the tale of the welcoming love of the Heavenly Father, waiting to receive every repentant sinner.

At the close of the talk, old Mrs. Li—who had long been considered the most hardened of all the prisoners, took both the hands of Marion Mills into her own rough palms, and there was a new and wonderful light in her face as she said earnestly: "Thank you so much for your gift! I'm going to study the 'Jesus Doctrine' with all my might—and someday, perhaps in the other world—I can thank your dear grandmother for her spectacles!"

One Millionaire

"He's a millionaire, that boy is," I said to a young friend at my side.

The boy with whom I was walking looked across the way at the lad of whom my words were spoken. There was certainly nothing about the latter to suggest his wealth.

"You don't say so! It can't really be so; he looks almost shabby."

"No matter for that. I live in the same block and I know. But I did not say that he was worth a million of money."

"Oh!" The boy who was listening looked rather disappointed. Still, he was anxious to know what the other one might have, anyhow, so he asked, "What, then?"

"He is what is called a 'millionaire of cheerfulness.' He is merry and bright the whole day long, not alone when all is sweetness and light, but when it isn't. He has such pluck and spirit, and such unfailing good nature, that he must have a million to draw upon, though he pays no taxes upon his capital. You never see him scowling or hear him whining. So he scatters his fortune all about and is a blessing to the neighborhood. I wish there were more millionaires of cheerfulness. There might be, if everybody gathered up all the sunshine to be had and gave it out as royally as Rob, who goes whistling yonder."

Then I went on, leaving Dick to wonder whether he were as rich as Rob, and if not, why not?—EXCHANGE.

Laugh It Off

Does your work get into kinks?

Laugh it off.

Are you near all sorts of brinks?

Laugh it off.

If it's sanity you're after

There's no recipe like laughter—

Laugh it off.

Our Fireside

How They Faced the Parting of the Ways

By Charles A. Ingraham

ORRIN OLMSTED sat by the fireside gazing steadily at a picture of a boy, holding it at different angles, endeavoring evidently to gain as realistic a sense of it as possible. Everything in the room betokened comfortable living; a great, soft lounge seemed to invite you to a quiet nap, an old-fashioned, roomy rocker with hospitable arms seemed yearning for companionship, and an ancient tall clock, with a quaint hood and dial, ticked lazily in the corner. A lamp burned brightly on the center table, on either side of which was a well-worn arm chair, which had been occupied by Orrin and Molly Olmsted for upwards of sixty years. When Molly had taken her accustomed place, Orrin said:

"Molly, while I was getting together the things I wish to take with me to the Home, in rummaging around I found this old picture of Sammy Hawkins. Don't you remember him; that little boy who lived next door and was about my own age? Well, there he is, and I declare, I hadn't thought of him in many, many years. Sammy gave me the picture at the station when he was leaving with the family to settle in another State. It was hard for us youngsters to separate, and I remember that Sammy's father had to pull us apart, for we were locked in each other's arms. It was no wonder, for we had been much together, so that the neighbors called us 'The Twins.' I can recall just how Sammy looked, with his face all red and tear-stained as the train moved away, and then he threw this picture to me from the car and burst out crying again harder than ever."

Orrin Olmsted laid the photograph on the table, removed his spectacles and gazed thoughtfully into the fire before him. He was a man of noble countenance, and his high, broad forehead and shaven, well-chiseled features in which there beamed always an amiable light, made him attractive and restful to look upon. He was contented and ever happy, feeling confident that everything was running on in a proper manner and that he need not worry about the future, that somehow and in some way he and his, namely, Molly, the canary, Dan the dog, Jack the cat, Old Frank the horse, Kate the cow, and twelve hens would fare as well in the future as they had in the past.

Molly was of the same optimistic temperament; quiet, happy and uncomplaining. Even in the crisis which was upon them, they manifested little if any anxiety or sorrow.

"Molly," Orrin would say, "God is good, and that is all we need to know." And she would smile at him in a trustful, reassuring way, quite indifferent to the cloud which was hanging over them.

Orrin and Molly—thus they were associated by all the villagers—had come in their old age to their greatest trial. They owned their little place; a house with a few acres of land, but their money was gone, and it had been arranged that Orrin would go to dwell in the Masonic Home and that Molly would live at the Home for Aged Women, widely separated from each other. Thus their long and happy wedded life was to be sundered. The people loved Orrin and Molly, and the sentiment being reciprocated, their only desire was to live on among their life-long friends and at last to be buried on the hill in the pleasant field of the dead, which looked out on the river winding on through the valley. Their home was on one of the less frequented streets and in the outskirts of the village and looked directly against the embankment of the railway, upon which night and day, trains thundered by.

For many years Orrin Olmsted had been the village postmaster, but the place had been secured by a younger and a more energetic man, and with the little cash laid by for the future exhausted, there was nothing for the old couple but to accept the offerings of charity.

But when Orrin and Molly walked out to church on the last Sabbath that they were to be in the town, both were in their accustomed good spirits, greeting everyone cordially and wearing the gracious smiles of which all so much enjoyed being recipients. No one would have considered them other than affluent, both being of portly build, tastefully clad and carrying with them a general atmosphere of dignity and opulent security.

Yet, as the day of separation came nearer, their excellent spirits began to lag, for it was impossible for them to be cheerful under such depressing circumstances, and though it had been arranged that all harassing features of the leave-taking should be avoided, there was yet unspoken to each other and hardly acknowledged by themselves, a great burden of grief in the hearts of the venerable couple. Everything that ingenuity could contrive to ease the shock of the inevitable calamity had been accomplished, each endeavoring to hide from themselves and from others the dread reality of the fateful day now almost at hand. A married nephew of Orrin had been secured to dwell in the home with the understanding that in all respects, even to detail, the house and the out-buildings with all they contained were to be undisturbed, and that the domestic animals were to be provided for on the premises during life. All this having been settled, Orrin and Molly, when the sad day should arrive, were merely to walk away as if going for a visit.

It was now but a few days ere the time set for their departure, and as Orrin opened the morning mail he was pleased to find an invitation for himself and Molly to the golden wedding of friends whom they had known from childhood. A sunny smile shone on his face as he gave the note to Molly and said:

"That will be an enjoyable occasion, and you and I must be on hand early and stay late. All the old boys and girls will be there and it will be a happy renewal of life to meet so many of them again and under such pleasant circumstances."

Molly, too, was delighted, and even began singing a bit of an old love ditty, when she suddenly paused in her sewing and with her hands lying listlessly in her lap looked sadly towards Orrin who was taking the wrapper from a newspaper:

"Orrin," she said, "when the wedding is held we will be—" her voice failed and she hurried from the room, while Orrin lifted his paper to conceal his face. It was the first time that they had allowed themselves to betray their feelings.

Orrin went slowly to the stable and gave Old Frank a pail of water. It was a pleasing Spring morning, the birds were singing and the grass was freshening the lawn. Oh! it was hard to leave forever the little home endeared through the happy associations of so many years. Though he had tried to minimize, conceal and gloss over the ordeal now so near at hand, even the anticipation of the event was almost more than he could bear.

Old Frank appropriated the water with relish and the pleasant look that he gave his master was an additional pang of regret to the old man, and taking his neck in his arms he said brokenly:

"Old Frank, we have companioned together many a day, but soon we must part; yet I have made the future secure for you, old horse. You will always enjoy excellent care, dwelling right here where you have lived so long. Molly and I will remember you and think fondly of you frequently, for you have always served us faithfully, taken us on lots of pleasant drives, and you have never done us a mean trick. God bless you, Old Frank!" And Orrin gave him a liberal ration of salt and brushed down his coat caressingly.

But Orrin and Molly soon recovered their usual composure and sat down to dinner in cheerful spirits. Said Orrin:

"Molly, I've been thinking that our plans, though they may not seem very attractive, are on the whole what will be better for us than if we were to remain here. Very likely the house would be struck by lightning or catch fire, or a frightful accident would befall one or both of us, or a calamity of some kind would overtake us. Then, in our new homes, there will likely be found enjoyments which we do not anticipate. Anyway, I am of the positive conviction that everything is working for our eventual good, and I am going to stick to that belief even if the earth should open and swallow us up."

"Orrin," replied Molly with emphasis, "I've been thinking out those very same ideas. I'm sure that we are being wisely directed, and if trouble is sent to us, then trouble is what we stand in need of. Yes, Orrin, I am perfectly reconciled to whatever the future has in store for us."

Molly's reassuring philosophy was interrupted by the joyful notes of a bobolink, the first of the season, and she went to the door the better to hear the wild, exultant music of the song bird.

All too soon the final day arrived in which they might enjoy their home, and they were sitting at supper, the last they would partake of under the old home roof; but they were cheerful outwardly, whatever may have been their sufferings. They heard the roar of a train as it dashed by, jingling the spoon in the sugar

Well Constructed of Hand-somely Embossed Genuine Oak in Golden Finish

Save 1/3 On This Solid Comfort Rocker

Our Rocker No. 166Z2055. Equipped with yielding springs. Comfortable and well upholstered in a dependable grade of artificial black leather. A good value for the money. Satisfaction guaranteed or money back. But it is only one of hundreds offered you by

The Book of Furniture Bargains

Surprising money-saving prices on everything you need in furniture. Free

Montgomery Ward Co. Dept. DB154

New York Chicago Kansas City Ft. Worth Portland, Ore. Write House Most Convenient

DON'T decide on the new hymn-book for your Church or Sunday School until you have seen

HALLOWED HYMNS

NEW AND OLD

Edited by IRA ALLAN SANKEY

Son of the famous Singing-Evangelist

Ira D. Sankey

OVER 550,000

COPIES ALREADY SOLD

Responsive Scripture Readings

No Trashy Words No Jingly Music

Price $25.00 per 100 not prepaid

35 cents per copy by mail

Examine a copy and prove its value in your work. (Returnable if desired.)

The Biglow & Main Co., New York Chicago

FREE BILLY SUNDAY ON BOOZE

Stirring Sensational Inspiring

Send us your name and those of two others who would be interested in distributing his message and we will send you a copy free. Big terms to representatives.

Write for $100.00 bonus offer.

International Bible Press, Dept. BD, Philadelphia

bowl, while a faint, pungent whiff of engine smoke wafted in through the open windows. Orrin glanced at the clock and remarked:

"The 'six-twenty' is on time all right." But it was the last evening, he sadly thought, upon which he would hear it thunder past the pleasant old home.

He walked over to the post office for the evening mail, receiving from those he met expressions of regard mingled with words of regret. Even the children came to him, bidding him goodbye and clinging to his hands, a bevy of them walking with him along the street. For the first time the villagers were realizing that Orrin and Molly had been a power in the place, ever exerting by their genial and kindly personalities a cheering and helpful influence; and now that they were about to depart, they could not sufficiently express their affection for them and sorrow at their removal from their midst.

As Orrin was returning, at the railroad crossing he noticed that the station agent was turning the switch, and inquiring as to the meaning of it was told that a special was due from the junction, twenty-five miles away. A few persons had collected to see the train arrive, and Orrin joined them. Presently a locomotive with a single coach drew into the siding and a plain, keen-visaged man, its only occupant, alighted and gazed vaguely around. He was of advanced years, but well preserved and with a quick step and business-like air. Observing that he seemed at a loss as to where he should proceed, Orrin approached and bidding him good evening, inquired if he could be of any assistance.

"Thank you," said the stranger. "I was looking for the Peterson House, but it seems not to be visible, or else I have lost my bearings."

"The Peterson House!" exclaimed

There's a good way to keep growing boys and girls healthy and happy and that is to give them for breakfast.

Grape-Nuts

This wonderfully nourishing food has a sweet, nutty flavor that makes it popular with children.

One of the few sweet foods that does not harm digestion, but builds them strong and bright.

At grocers everywhere.

Orrin. "Why! that tavern was torn down thirty years ago. That brick building yonder, Benton's Block, stands where the old hotel stood."

The stranger removed his hat and wiping his forehead remarked that time and he had not kept very good track of each other, and inquired where he might find the leading hotel.

"This way," said Orrin, promptly, and the two moved from the group who, greatly disappointed, esteemed Orrin a favored mortal in that without doubt he would arrive at a full degree of information as to the name, residence and errand of the visitor.

Having shown him to the hotel, Orrin proceeded home and remarked to Molly that a special had just come in bearing a stranger on mysterious business.

"Oh, that was the man who tipped his hat to me as the train passed a little while ago," said she.

"Did you return his bow, Molly?" inquired Orrin.

"Of course I did; you are not jealous, I hope," she replied archly.

"Not at all," Orrin hastened to explain. "I only wanted to be sure that you did, for he is a civil man and of considerable importance of some kind, I am sure. Funny though that he should be bowing to people along the road."

O, the tragedy of that last evening in the dear old home! They sat in their places by the center table, but in spite of themselves there was silence, deep and heavy. Their thoughts went back to the happy time so long ago when they had come after their marriage into this house and had sat in this very room. Here, even, Orrin had been born, and throughout his life had known no other home. Of childhood days they dreamed, and saw themselves hand in hand coming from the village school, lovers even then. Had they not, they thought, deserved something better for their old age? Was it not a cruel providence that was driving them from their home and friends? Such thoughts would obtrude in spite of their efforts to maintain a spirit of resignation.

"Molly," said Orrin at last, breaking the long and painful silence, "it seems that sometime or somewhere I have met that stranger that came on the special. I have thought of it repeatedly ever since I saw him; it is like a dream; something in his voice, looks and manner seems familiar but somehow I cannot place him."

There was a tap on the door and answering it, Orrin saw before him the stranger of whom he had been speaking.

"Orry," exclaimed the caller, "you don't know me! I am Sammy Hawkins." The two old men looked eagerly at each other for a few moments and then fell into an embrace.

After the surprise and the pleasurable emotions had in a measure subsided, Hawkins explained that he had read an item in the local village paper which stated that his old friends were about to leave the place, and how that hastening from his home in Chicago he had barely the possibility of reaching the town before the event would be consummated.

"Orry," said he, "I am here to help you and if I can prevent it, you will never leave this roof. I have been a long while in Chicago, but I have never forgotten you, and when I remember our loyal friendship, and how we suffered when we were separated, it gives me a better opinion of humanity, and I will say here that it is the recollection of our love for each other that has kept me from a good many mean acts. You would have heard from me long ago, only that I have had a hard fight with the world and have had no time and little disposition to interest myself in anything but business."

While Hawkins was thus making himself understood, the house dog arose from his slumbers, and having gaped and stretched himself, came familiarly up to the caller and placed his chin on his knee and looked kindly into his face. Unconsciously he stroked the dog's head, while the cat taking courage, sprang up and settled himself comfortably in his lap.

"Now Orry," Hawkins went on, "I want to pay you what is really yours. Many years ago my father had a deal with yours which involved the sale to the former of a certain piece of land. This property my father disposed of to a mill company who were damming the river and were compelled to purchase the ground that would be flooded by the impounded waters, and realized a large advance in the sale. My father had inside information of what was coming and secured at a low price the land which thus was to be in demand at higher figures. I have always felt that in equity you should be reimbursed and I am here to do so with compound interest from the date of the sale. It foots up to a nice sum of money, Orry, and you will find it to your credit in the bank here whenever you may call for it."

With a business-like air Hawkins took up his hat and cane and arose to take his leave. Orrin and Molly were too overcome to speak, and could only hold his hands and look their gratitude.

That night Samuel Hawkins, millionaire, slept in the "spare room" of the Olmsted house, for Orrin and Molly would not permit him to return to the hotel. Never had he felt happier than when he lay thinking of the joy he had brought into this modest home and to the hearts of his childhood's playmates, and just before lapsing into sleep he heard Orrin saying:

"Molly, I kept telling you that God is good."

Sharing With Others.

A practical tribute to the value of the AMERICAN MESSENGER is given by one of its valued subscribers, Mrs. Bruce of New Rochelle, N. Y. This esteemed lady, who is nearly ninety years of age, has recently sent us not only her own renewal but also a new subscription to be sent to a friend. We would be deeply gratified if every subscriber when renewing would also send one or more new subscriptions, thus increasing the circulation of the paper and widening its helpful influence.

What 15c Will Bring You from the Nation's Capital

The little matter of 15c in stamps or coin will bring you the Pathfinder 13 weeks on trial. The Pathfinder is an illustrated weekly, published at the Nation's Center, for the Nation; a paper that prints all the news of the world and that tells the truth and only the truth; now in its 23d year. This paper fills the bill without emptying the purse; it costs but $1 a year. If you want to keep posted on what is going on in the world, at the least expense of time or money, this is your means. If you want a paper in your home which is sincere, reliable, entertaining, wholesome, the Pathfinder is yours. If you would appreciate a paper which puts everything clearly, fairly, briefly—here it is. Send 15c to show that you might like such a paper, and we will send the Pathfinder on probation 13 weeks. The 15c does not repay us, but we are glad to invest in new friends. The Pathfinder, Box 91, Washington, D. C.

"THE COMING OF THE LORD DRAWETH NIGH"

The Scriptures Examined on the length of The TIMES of the GENTILES. When They began Definitely Established. When they will close demonstrated, subject to un-inspired History and Chronology.

The Rapture and the Revelation demonstrated to occur at the Feast of Trumpets, which is the Jewish New Year's Day.

The Year-Day Principle God Given.

The Prophecy of the Seventy Weeks proved to be a Year-Day period.

Light on these questions promised at "the time of the end."

64 Pages, Sixth Edition, Enlarged with Appendices and Extracts from Letters 125th Thousand. Price: Postage paid, 5c each; 30c. doz.; $2 per hundred.

This pamphlet is unique in its teachings, showing the proximity of the Coming of the Lord.

We Believe there is no Truth More Important for the World at This Time.

ADDRESS C. J. BAKER

621 Wyandotte Street

KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI, U. S. A.

"The Leading

FIRE INSURANCE

Co. of America"

Incorporated 1819.

Charter Perpetual.

Cash Capital,	$5,000,000.00
Cash Assets,	26,693,568.89
Total Liabilities,	13,547,121.90
Net Surplus,	8,146,446.99
Surplus for Policy-Holders,	13,146,446.99
Losses Paid in 98 Years,	157,580,593.27

WM. B. CLARK, President.

Vice-Presidents,

HENRY E. REES, A. N. WILLIAMS

E. J. SLOAN, Secretary.

Assistant Secretaries,

E. S. ALLEN, GUY E. BEARDSLEY, RALPH B. IVES

W. F. WHITTELEY, Marine Vice-President

R. E. STRONACH, Marine Secretary

WESTERN BRANCH, 175 W. Jackson Boule'd, Chicago, Ills.	{ THOS. E. GALLAGHER, Gen'l Agent. L. O. KOHTZ, Ass't Gen'l Agent. L. O. KOHTZ, Marine Gen'l Agent.
PACIFIC BRANCH, 301 California Street, San Francisco, Cal.	{ W. H. BREEDING, General Agent. GEO. E. TOWNSEND, Ass't Gen'l Agent (Fire). E. S. LIVINGSTON; Ass't Gen'l Agent (Marine).
MARINE DEPARTMENT	{ CHICAGO, Ills., 175 W. Jackson Boule'd. NEW YORK, 63-65 Beaver Street. BOSTON, 70 Kilby Street. PHILADELPHIA, 226 Walnut Street. SAN FRANCISCO, 301 California Street.

Have You Ever Suspected that the cause of various annoying ills might lie in the daily cup of tea or coffee?

A sure and easy way out of Coffee and tea troubles is to shift to

Instant Postum

There's no caffeine nor anything harmful in this delightful, pure food-drink—just the nourishing goodness of wheat.

Postum has put thousands of former tea and coffee drinkers on the Road to Wellville.

"There's a Reason"

THE TREASURY

SPECIAL NOTICE

OWING to occasional losses of letters, containing money, we would request friends and donors of the American Tract Society to remit by check or Post Office Money Order, which latter can always be duplicated in case of loss.

Receipts of the American Tract Society During February, 1917

Total Donations (Including $286.53 for Special Objects), $1,720.99.

CALIFORNIA, $35.65.
Mr. Stewart, $25; Mr. Smith, $5; Mrs. Nolting, $4.65; Dr. Esgate, $1.

COLORADO, $1.
Miss Hall, for Soldier's Text Books, $1.

CONNECTICUT, $218.28.
Mr. Baldwin, $20; Mrs. Mead, $25; Mr. Lummis, $2.50; Mrs. Walter, $5; Miss Reynolds, $5; Prof. Farnam, $10; Mr. Lewis, $10; Miss Sterling, $2; Mrs. Cameron, $5; Mrs. Barber, $4; Mr. Nettleton, $2.50; Mrs. Stone, $1; Farmington, Church Collection, $20.48; Mrs. Williams, $1; Miss Shipman, $5; Mr. Tatem, $5; Mrs. Avery, $1; Mrs. Chapin, $2; Mr. Beecher, $5; Miss Clark, $2; Miss Pier-son, $1; Mrs. Osgood, $10; Mrs. Curtis, $2; Mrs. Colt, $5; Southington, Church Offering, $10; Mrs. Griswold, $5; Mr. Dean, $2; Mr. Jennings, for Aid of Gospel Work, $10; Mrs. Beard, $5; Westchester, Church offering, $2.80; "A Friend," $1.00; Mr. Wells, $3.00; Mrs. Wil-lard, $1; Mr. Cooke, $5; Miss Ernesty, $1; Miss Sill, $5; Mrs. Fitzsimmons, $10; "A Friend," $5; Mr. Stettbacher, $1.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, $55.
Washington, Church Collection, $5; Wash-ington, Church Offering, $50.

GEORGIA, $5.
"Griffin," $5.

IDAHO, $3.
Mr. Froese, $3.

ILLINOIS, $46.
Sutter, Church Offering, by a member, $2; Rev. Mr. Hildenstein, $0.65; Kirkwood, Church Collection, $1.35; Mrs. Klein, $2; Mr. Schmidt, $15; Forrester, Ladies Society Col-lection, $25.

INDIANA, $20.33
Connersville, Church Collection, $4; Mrs. Anderson, $0.50; Mrs. Woodward, $0.35; Greensburg, Church Collection, $3.48; Mr. Humphe, $2; Dr. and Mrs. Hawk, $10.

IOWA, $65.18.
Orange City, Church Collection, $10; Mr. Meyer, $5; Mr. Schmidt, $5; Mr. Kraemer, $5; Sac City, Church Collection, $10; Breda, Church Collection, $30.18.

KANSAS, $16.20.
Mr. Graeber, $2.65; Mr. Epp, $2.30; Mr. Regier, $4.30; Mr. Fred and Mrs. Haas, $2; Mrs. Regier, $0.65; Mrs. Heim, $2.30; Mr. and Mrs. Carlson, $2.

KENTUCKY, $10.
Mayville, Church Collection, $10.

MAINE, $13.
Mrs. Eaton, $5; Bath, Church Offering, $5; "A Friend," $2; Mr. Liscomb, $1.

MARYLAND, $13.
Baltimore, Church Offering, $8; German-town, Church Collection, $5.

MASSACHUSETTS, $164.97.
Mr. Hofmeyer, $0.65; Miss Bates, $1; Miss Sedgwick, $5; Mrs. Sylvan, $1; Miss Thacher, $2; Miss Thompson, $3; Mrs. Mehaffey, $5; Mr. Crosby, $10; Miss Belcher, $1; Mr. Wy-man, $1; Mr. Brewster, $2; "A Friend," $1; Miss Choate, $1; Mrs. Brooks, $1; Dr. Berry, $2; Dr. Byrne, $2; Mrs. Bird, $2; Mr. Brooks, $5; Miss Fountain, $1; Mrs. Keyes, $0.90; Mr. Wight, $2; Mrs. Dole, $5; "A Friend," $5; Mr. Dyer, $1; Mrs. Jenkins, $5; Miss Southworth, $5; Mr. Hills, $1; Miss Driver, $1; Mr. Haskell, $5; Miss Richards, $1; Miss Fales, $1; Miss Buttrick, $2; Mr. Buffinton, $2; Mrs. Dearborn, $1; Miss Galpin, $1; Mr. Bailey, $3; Mrs. Alcott, $2; Miss Estabrook, $1; Miss Haynes, $1; Miss MacKenzie, $0.25; Mrs. Connor, $5; Miss Mann, $1; Mrs. Belcher, $3; Mrs. Love, $1; Miss Strong, $1; Mrs. Knowles, $5; Miss Leonard, $0.25; Mr. Stearns, $1; Mr. Wales, $5; Mr. Whittemore, for distribution of Literature, $25; Miss John-son, $1; Miss Means, $2; Mrs. Kimball, $2; Mr. Childs, $1; Mr. Pomeroy, $2; Miss Speare, $5; Miss Prescott, $1; Rev. Mr. Bying-ton, $1; Mr. Robinson, $1; Mrs. Smith, $0.42; Mrs. Cannon, $0.50; Mr. Chase, $5; Mrs. Deane, $1; Rev. Mr. Enrich, D. D., $2.

MINNESOTA, $5.
Miss Green, $3; Mr. Houliston, $2.

MICHIGAN, $26.30.
Mr. Blackmon, $25; Mrs. Schindler, $1.30.

MISSOURI, $24.65.
Mr. Mallinckrodt, Sr., $1.65; St. Louis, Ladies Aid Society Collection, $5; St. Louis, Church Offering, $3; Mrs. Vetter, $3; Mr. Campbell, $10; Webster Groves, Church Col-lection, $2.

NEBRASKA, $47.95.
Rev. Mr. Hammann, $0.95; Mr. Nuss, $2; Hickman, Sunday School Collection, $10; Hickman, Ladies Missionary Society Collec-tion, $10; Rev. Mr. Reinhard, $25.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, $14.
Miss Benn, $2; Mrs. Day, $2; Mrs. Buswell, $1; Mr. Williams, $2; Mrs. Haskell, $1; Mrs. Rollins, $5; Mrs. Rowell, $1.

NEW JERSEY, $161.64.
Miss Pennwell, $2; Miss Alden, $5; Cape May, Church Offering, $3.88; High Bridge, Church Collection, $4; Orange, Church Col-lection, $5; Westfield, Church Offering, $39.23; Mr. Voorhees, for Soldier's Text Books, $2.50; Jersey City, Church Collection, $2; Mrs. Williams, $5; Princeton, Church Offer-ing, $4.68; Burlington Church Collection, $5; Newark, Church Offering, $5; Trenton, Church Offering, $20; Miss Bonnell, $2; Miss Carter, $10; Mrs. Ferris, for Soldier's Text Books, $2; Salem, Church Offering, $5.58; Middle Valley, Church Collection, $3; South Orange, Church Collection, $20.90; Atlantic City, Church Offering, $2; Chatham, Church Offer-ing, $1.39; Mrs. Holmes, $7; Freehold, Church Collection, $4.48.

NEW YORK, $237.82.
King Testimonial Fund, $18; The Christian Herald, $1; Mr. Brinker, $0.53; Miss Holgate, $2; New York City, Church Offering, $3; Mrs. Hyde, $50; New Brighton, Church Of-fering, $25; Miss Strong $20; Setauket, L. I., Church Offering, $13.29; Miss Lockwood, $25; Oriskany, Church Collection, $5; Rochester, Church Offering, $20; Mr. Otis, $10; Miss Krehbiel, $5; Mr. Ramsey, for Soldier's Text Books, $2; Miss Tatlock, $1; Mr. Downs, $5; Mr. Francis, $5; Miss Brown, $5; Mr. Hoyt, $0.50; Mrs. Duncan, for Soldier's Text Book, $10; Mrs. Cowee, $5; Utica, Church Offering, $5; Mr. Burrell, $1.50.

OHIO, $242.15.
Mrs. Bassenhorst, $0.65; Cincinnati, Church Collection, $2.50; Mr. Rutledge, $1.50; Mr. Buss, $5; Mr. Corner, $5; Mr. Hopkins, $5; Mr. Kirkpatrick, $5; Mr. Kite, $5; S. Morton & Sons, $5; Mabley & Carew Co., $5; Mr. Meininger, $10; Mr. Richardson, $1; John Shillito Co., $5; Miss Thorp, $5; Dr. Walton, $1; Dr. Withrow, $2; Mr. Adair, $1; Mr. Baker, $3; Mr. Bright, $2; Hon. Mr. Duncan, $2; Mr. Dunn, $5; Mrs. Gill, $3; Mr. Har-rington, $2; Mrs. Holmes, $7; Mr. Hughes, $1; Mr. McManigal, $1; Mr. Putman, $2; Dr. Tinberman, $5; Mrs. Ackley, $30; Mr. Carr, $5; Dr. Dunham, $10; Hon. Mr. Mc-Cann, $2; Rev. Mr. Wilson, D.D., $1; Messrs. C. & P. Benninghofer, $10; First National Bank, $5; Dr. Francis, $2; Miss McKee, $1; Second National Bank, $5; Mrs. Kohl, $3; Mrs. Black, $0.50; Dr. Bliss, $0.50; Mr. A. Barrett, $1; Mr. E. Barrett, $1; Mr. G. Brain, $3; Miss Brain, $1; Mr. W. Brain, $2; Miss Burrowes, $1; Mr. Carson, including $5 for Soldier's Text Book, $10; Mr. Corry, $1; Mr. Craig, $1; Dr. Davy, $1; Mrs. Geiger, $5; Mrs. Gotwald, $3; Miss Hunt, $2; Col. King, $1; Dr. Oldham, $0.50; Mr. Pierce, $1; Mr. Price, $5; Mr. Rodgers, $2; Miss Rodgers, $1; Miss Starrett, $1; Mr. Thomas, $5; Mrs. Tresler, $2; Mr. G. Winger, $1; Mr. J. Winger, $2; Wooster, Church Collection, $10; Mrs. Brine, $5; Mr. Brauer, $1.

OKLAHOMA, $1.
Mr. Ben Hill, $1.

OREGON, $22.
"Ein Freund," for German Sailors, $5; "A Friend," $5; Mr. Voorhies, $10; Mr. Bartelt, $2.

PENNSYLVANIA, $195.75.
Frauenverein der evangel Christugemeinde, $5; Mrs. Clawson, $2; Rev. Mr. Kelly, $1; Penfield, Church Collection, $1; Missions Schwestern Verein, $1; Miss Merkle, $1.65; Philadelphia, Sunday School Offering, $26; Miss Walker, $2; Slovak National Union, $5; Reading, Church Collection, $5; Clearfield, Church Offering, $5; Philadelphia, Church Of-fering, $8.23; Miss Lehman, $5; Mr. Menzie, $5; Pittsburgh, Church Collection, $7.02; Miss Thomas, $10; Scranton, Church Collection, $10; Mr. Denison, $10; Mr. Magill, for Literature to Russian Prisoners of War, $5; Germantown, Church Offering, $5; Mrs. Ireland, $0.50; Sewickley, Church Offering, $25; Mr. Pietzsch, $5.85; Library, Church Collection, $5; New Castle, Church Offering, $4.50; Pittsburgh, Church Collection, $25; Warren, Church Offer-ing, $10.

RHODE ISLAND, $16.
Miss Day, $2; Miss Bushee, $1; Dr. Moore, $2; Providence, Church Collection, given by C. H. Leonard, M.D., $3; Mr. Gamwell, $5; Miss Leavitt, $3.

SOUTH DAKOTA, $16.
Sioux Falls, Church Collection, $15; Mr. Timmermann, $1.

TENNESSEE, $1.
Knoxville, Church Offering, $1.

TEXAS, $1.
Mr. Goode, $1.

VERMONT, $16.50.
Miss Goodhue, $1; Miss Keyes, $2; "A Friend," $1; Miss Higley, $1; Mrs. Kilburn, $0.50; Rev. Mr. Barnes, $7; Mrs. Hall, $2; Mrs. Pease, $1; Mrs. Notting, $1.

VIRGINIA, $6.
Mr. Blackstone, $1; Mr. Simmons, $5.

WASHINGTON, $4.65.
Mr. Gredel, $4.65.

WISCONSIN, $8.30.
Mr. Ott, Jr., $0.65; Mrs. Kolb, $1.65; Water-town, Church Offering, $1; Mr. Wintermantel, $5.

FOREIGN, $6.67.
Canada, Rev. Mr. Ritzmann, $2.04; Mr. Loewen, $1.15; Mrs. McCrae, $1.48; Turkey, Rev. Mr. Christie, $2.

LEGACIES, $190.
Clarion, Pa., Estate of M. E. Bittenbender, $190.

INCOME FROM TRUST FUNDS.... $754.24
Income for Missionary Work..... 754.24

Life Members and Directors

THE donation of $30 at one time constitutes a Life Member of the American Tract Society; the addition of $70, or the donation of $100 at one time, constitutes a Life Director. Life members may receive annually copies of the Society's own publications to the value of $1; Life Directors to the value of $2; if applied for within the Society's year, from April 1st to April 1st, in person or by written order. No individual can draw more than one annuity any year for himself. Colporters are not au-thorized to supply Life Members.

Form of Bequest

I GIVE and bequeath to the "AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY," instituted in the City of New York, May, 1825, the sum of.....dollars to be ap-plied to the charitable uses and purposes of said Society.

Three witnesses should state that the testator declares this to be his last will and testament, and that they signed at his request, and in his presence and the presence of each other.

To the Friends and Donors of the American Tract Society in the West and Northwest

Correspondence has been received at the Home Office of the American Tract Society, New York, N. Y., which reveals the fact that there is a decided misap-prehension on the part of many people as to the relations existing between the American Tract Society and the Chicago Tract Society.

Connection between these two Societies was severed more than two years ago, and since that time they have been, and are now as distinctively separate as it is possible for two organizations to be.

Gifts or legacies in behalf of the Chi-cago Tract Society do not reach the treasury of the American Tract Society, nor do they in any way aid the world-wide work of the latter Society.

Gifts sent to the Chicago Tract So-ciety support the local work of that So-ciety among the immigrants.

Donations and legacies in behalf of the American Tract Society are used for the creation and distribution of Chris-tian literature throughout the mission fields of the world, including a large service among the foreign-speaking peo-ple in our own country.

All those, therefore, in the West and Northwest, who wish to aid the world-wide work of the American Tract Society should send their donations to Rev. A. W. Reinhard, Field Secretary of the American Tract Society for the Western and Northwestern States, 721 South 37th Street, Omaha, Nebraska, or to Louis Tag, Treasurer of the American Tract Society, Park Avenue and 40th Street, New York, N. Y.

Welcomed as a Friend.

Mrs. Heath of Palo, Michigan, in re-newing her subscription to the AMERI-CAN MESSENGER writes:

"I have taken the AMERICAN MESSEN-GER for a number of years, and don't feel like giving it up. I welcome it as a friend with its words of cheer and coun-sel which I need."

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

TERMS: Subscription price, 50 cts. a year, payable in advance. In clubs of five or more, 30 cts. each. Club subscriptions mailed to separate addresses, if desired. Postage on foreign subscriptions, 24 cents additional. Canadian subscription, 12 cents additional. Single copies, 5 cents each.

On account of the additional charge which is made by the New York Post Office for mail-ing to subscribers in New York and Bronx Counties (Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx), no club rates, cash commissions or premiums will be given for subscriptions that must be sent to persons residing in those Coun-ties. Each subscription in New York or Bronx County must be at the rate of 50 cents net.

Remit by Express, Money Order, Draft, Post Office Order or Registered Letter. For very small amounts, postage stamps may be sent at the risk of the sender.

RENEWALS: The date opposite your name shows to what time the subscription has been paid, and a change in the date is the receipt for renewal.

CHANGES: When sending change of ad-dress, be sure to send the old address as well as the new one.

OUR ADVERTISERS: We believe that all the advertisements in this paper are from re-sponsible advertisers, and it is our intention to admit only such of our columns. Should, how-ever, any of our subscribers find that any ad-vertiser does not live up to his agreements, we would consider it a favor if they will inform us, and we will at any time give prompt atten-tion to any complaint.

We do not, of course, guarantee that all persons will take the same point of view with the advertisers, and it must be borne in mind that the claims and statements made by ad-vertisers are their assertions, and not ours.

Our readers will confer a favor upon adver-tisers and also upon us if they will mention the American Messenger when answering advertise-ments.

FIELD SECRETARIES AND COLPORTAGE SUPERINTENDENTS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.

Rev. Isaac Pierson, Field Secretary for New England, 50 Bromfield Street, Boston, Mass.

Rev. Robert Murray, Field Secretary, Cen-tral Agency, 345 Fourth Avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Rev. A. W. Reinhard, Field Secretary and Superintendent of Colportage for the Western and Northwestern States, 721 South 37th Street, Omaha, Nebraska.

Rev. George Whitefort, Superintendent of Colportage, Southern Agency, Crichton, R.F.D., Mobile Co., Ala.

THE SCOFIELD REFERENCE BIBLE

A Wonderful Bible for the English-speaking World

With Many New and Striking Features

Rev. C. I. Scofield, D.D

1. All the great words of Scripture are clearly defined.
2. Chain references, with final sum-maries, cover all the great topics of Scripture.
3. Every book has an introduction and analysis, thus facilitating Book study—the true method of Bible study.
4. Helps at the hard places.
5. Apparent contradictions reconciled and explained.
6. The types are explained and illustrated by New Testament references.

7. The Greater Covenants are analyzed and explained. All Scriptures gather around these covenants.
8. The prophecies are harmonized, thus becoming self explanatory.
9. The text is the authorized or King James version, with emendations in the margin where needed.
10. Bound in fine grain cloth, with round corners and red edges. Size, 8 by 5 1/2 by 1 3/8 inches. Clear, black-face type.

Endorsed by Popular Evangelists

J. WILBUR CHAPMAN, D.D., says:
"I have received with the greatest possible pleasure the Scofield Reference Bible, and wish to say that I consider it in every way a most remarkable book. It ought to be greatly used and of the greatest possible blessing to its readers, as I am sure it will be."

RICHARD A. TORREY, D.D., says:
"I am so impressed by it that I feel that every minister and Christian worker should obtain a copy. The introductions to the different books are simply invaluable; they pack more sometimes into a single sentence than other books put in a volume. The references are beyond all comparison better than in any other Bible with which I am acquainted."

WILLIAM A. SUNDAY writes:
"Your Reference Bible is the first I ever endorsed. So many Bible helps are so complicated, the average man has hard work to understand them, but I regard yours as the best I have ever seen. I gladly say this because you have not asked for it."

- Offer No. 1—We will give this Bible free and post-paid for only ten yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at 50c each.
- Offer No. 2—We will give the Bible for five yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at 50c each, with 75c additional.
- Offer No. 3—Or we will give the Bible with one year's subscription to the AMERICAN MESSENGER for $2.25.

AMERICAN MESSENGER, Park Ave., and 40th St., N. Y. C.

American Tract Society

THIS SOCIETY was organized in 1825. Its work is interdenominational and international in scope, and is commended by all evangelical denominations.

It has published the Gospel messages in 178 languages, dialects and characters. It has been the pioneer for work among the foreign-speaking people in our country, and its missionary colporters are distributing Christian literature in thirty-three languages among the immigrants and making a home-to-home visitation among the spiritually destitute, both in the cities and rural districts, leaving all kinds of Christian literature, also the Bible or portions of the Scriptures.

Its publication of leaflets, volumes and periodicals from the Home Office total 794,639,700 copies. It has made foreign cash appropriations to the amount of $799,456.39, and grants of electrotypes to the value of $61,177.96, by means of which millions of copies of books and tracts have been published at mission stations abroad.

The gratuitous distribution of the past year is to the value of $16,684.99. The grand total of its gratuitous distribution has been to the value of $2,634,505.89, which is the equivalent of 5,269,010,000 tract pages.

The total number of family visits that have been made by the Society's colporters during the last year is 206,167; the total number of volumes distributed by sale or grant is 55,517 making the total number of volumes that have been circulated by colporters in the last seven years 17,382,454, and the total number of family visits that they have made during the same period 18,612,843.

The Society is making very special effort in behalf of Latin America, having entered upon the publication of a one volume Bible commentary in Spanish, a long-needed and earnestly prayed-for publication, also other volumes in both Spanish and Portuguese. Its total publications for Latin America now reach 14,748,588 copies. Its work, ever widening, is dependent upon donations and legacies, and greatly needs increased offerings.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President.

JUDSON SWIFT, D.D., General Secretary.

Remittances should be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

Draughts from the Living Water
BY EDGAR L. VINCENT.

One of the most serious problems in time of war is how to supply a great army with fresh, pure water. Often the sources are so unlike what they ought to be as to be positively dangerous. Only when driven to do so by stern necessity are the brave soldier boys impelled to use the water at all. Think of the suffering which must follow the deprivation of water! Try to realize what it must mean from a sanitary point of view to be compelled to drink water every drop of which is loaded with impurity! And then to know that rivers of pure, crystal-clear water are every moment coursing their way through the land, but always beyond the reach of those who need it most.

No one would willingly drink water from a tainted source of supply when he might slake his thirst at a hillside spring. Still, that is what many do when it comes to satisfying the soul with needed drink.

Now think of the books and papers men are reading today. Most of these are beautiful. Never was more or better work done by the artists and painters of the world than today. But what about the inside of these papers? Are they written out of a pure heart? Will they make the heart better? Do they inspire to higher, holier, truer living? These are serious questions, for the health of the soul depends upon the nourishment it takes. What are you reading?

A gentleman whose writings are a source of help and inspiration to all who read them says that before he sits down at his desk in the morning to begin the work of the day, he takes up the best book he can and reads in it for a little while. Most often it is the Book of books that is thus honored. Then he goes to his writing with a heart in tune with the choicest thought possible.

"And I always find," he says, "that if I miss my morning's dip into the fountain of pure literature it makes a difference with the quality of my work. When I come to my desk with heart bounding with the fire of some other soul that is reaching out after the good, the true and the beautiful, my own thoughts strike out for the higher peaks."

Think what a spur it is to better living when you have been for a little while in the presence of a friend who never lets his mind run in low channels, but whose very best thought is always given out, no matter how trivial may be the work in hand! It is not necessary that one should be a writer of books or of stirring magazine articles to carry an uplift of spirit to those one meets. One may think high when doing work of a lowly sort. Some of the choicest thoughts a man ever has may come to him hoeing out in the fields.

Just a word now about high thinking and lowly working. Have we not all noticed that when we are lying awake at night, our thoughts strike a level that is wonderfully more clear than when we are busy about the day's work! But in the morning we have lost the thread—we cannot find it anywhere. The thought has vanished.

It is often so with the things we think when about our everyday tasks. We are sorry we have forgotten the good thought which was given to us. Now, here is a way of making the thought really ours, ours to think of over and over again, ours to pass on to others: When we go out to our work, we may take with us a little book with blank leaves and a bit of pencil in the pocket. Then when the thoughts come which we would like to keep, we may write them down. It is even worth while to get up at night if we are blessed by the coming of a choice thought and set it down for reference in the morning.

Here we come to this most helpful thing: Thoughts of good are the whisperings of God. Built into the web and woof of life, they become a part of the spirit we shall take with us into the life beyond. He who sends these thoughts wants us to use them and make the most of them. He would not have us soil our soul's garment by trailing it through the dust of bad books or papers or by companionship with those who, thoughtlessly or otherwise, speak the things which are calculated to mar and to spoil the soul's beauty.

At the fountain of pure water, then, let us always drink. The best of books, the purest of literature in papers and magazines may always be had; and if we turn toward these, the time will soon and surely come when it will hurt the delicate thing we call the soul to come in contact with evil expressions in the conversation of others or in what we read. We will no longer be satisfied with anything but the best, and upon that best our lives will grow more and more into the image and the likeness of the One whose every thought and every action were away up on the highest possible plane.

CHRISTIAN OBSERVER.

Every Day

BY W. H. DAVENPORT.

There's a prayer that should be said,
And a Book that should be read
Every day.

There's a work that should be wrought,
And a battle to be fought,
Every day.

There are duties to be done,
And victories to be won,
As soars and sets the sun
Every day.

There's a cross that must be borne,
And a thorny chaplet worn
Every day.
And God's dawn shall follow night,
And darkness yield to light
Every day.

If in patience we are strong,
We shall not suffer long,
But shall beat down fraud and wrong.
Every day.

There's a prayer that should be read,
"Give us our daily bread,"
Every day.

While we grapple with our sin,
O, Christ, Thy work begin,
Every day.
And when the race is run,
And the battle has been won,
We shall rest—our life's work done—
Every day.

Our Medicine Chest

Mr. Dean, the head of a large manufacturing business, built up his success by his own dogged and persistent toil. He had never felt that he could spare the time for a vacation. Not long ago he decided that he was getting along in years and was entitled to a rest. Calling his son Ellis into the library one evening, he said:

"Ellis, I've worked pretty hard for quite a while now and have done pretty well, so I have about decided to retire and turn the business over to you. What do you say?"

Ellis pondered the situation gravely for a moment, then his face brightened and he replied:

"Say, pop, how would it do for you to work a few years longer and then the two of us retire together?"

A Hebrew boy was a fever patient in a hospital, and had shown a disposition to whine and complain at all times. The nurse was giving him an alcohol sponge bath and, thinking to divert his mind, she said to him as she rubbed under his arms:

"Ticklish?"
Still whining, the youngster said:
"No; Yiddish."

"Tommy," said the boy's father sternly, "where are those six apples I left on the table?" "Father," said the boy, "I did not touch one." "Then how is it that there is only one apple left?" demanded the father. "That," replied Tommy, "is the one I didn't touch."

Two little boys who had been naughty all day were told by their teacher that they must stay after school and write their names 500 times.

After the other pupils had gone they fell to work, and for several minutes wrote away without a sound. Then one of them stopped writing and began to watch the other unhappily.

"Why don't you write, Tommy?" asked his teacher.

Tommy burst into tears. "'Tisn't fair!" he said between his sobs. "His name's Lee and mine's Schluttermeyer!"

A wealthy American girl was attending a social function at a country house in England.

"You American girls have not such healthy complexions as we have," said an English duchess to the girl. "I always wonder why our noblemen take a fancy to your white faces."

"It isn't our white faces that attracts them," responded the American; "it's our green backs."

"Mother," said Bobby, after a full week of obedience, "have I been a good boy lately?"

"Yes, dear," replied his mother, "a very good boy."

"And do you trust me?" he continued. "Why, of course, mother trusts her little boy," she answered.

But the chastened child was not pacified. "I mean really, really trust me, you know," he explained.

"Yes, I really, really trust you," nodded his mother. "Why do you ask?"

"Just because," said Bobby, diving his hands into his pockets and looking her in the face, "if you trust me like you say you do, why do you go on hiding the jam?"

WATCHES FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

Every boy and every girl would like to have a watch. Here is a good opportunity to secure one free. Boys and girls in different sections of our country have gone to work and within a very short time, and with very little effort, they have become the owners of beautiful watches. Our youthful readers can do likewise. Boys, try it and see how easy it is to secure only 4 subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at 50 cents each. Girls, you certainly can obtain the names of 7 of your friends as subscribers to aid you to secure this watch. Why not go to work now?

Girl's Nickel Watch

Boy's Nickel Watch

This Boy's Watch given FREE and POSTPAID for only 4 yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER

Guaranteed by the Manufacturers

This beautiful little watch is finished in solid nickel silver case with fancy engraved edges and is stem wind and stem set. The dial has plain figures, and the crystal is made of heavy beveled glass. We have used this watch as a premium in the past and it has given the best of satisfaction.

The Watch will be sent FREE and all charges PREPAID for only 7 yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at 50 cents each.

This watch is an up-to-date, American-made serviceable watch, stem wind and stem set, and is a good timekeeper. It has a highly polished open-face nickel silver case. A guarantee for one year goes with each watch. The illustration given herewith is an exact reproduction of the watch we are offering.

As a special inducement, we will send to each new subscriber a copy of our beautiful picture in colors, "The Good Shepherd," size 14½ x 20 inches.

American Messenger, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York

YOUR PROBLEMS SOLVED

When you study the Bible you are always eager to get the most out of it. Questions, however, are bound to arise. Are you content to let them pass without answer? Do your Bible problems go unsolved? Fortify yourself against such occasions by having at hand the Christian Worker's Library. We carefully assembled this library so that the broadest information might be easily accessible, compressed into the fewest volumes possible and offered at a price which is as attractive as the books are interesting. With a knowledge of events, conditions and people of the Bible, insight is given into many doubtful chapters. This library has many interesting and valuable features. Possession of it will make your study four-fold as enjoyable, will answer questions for you, and will help you now and in the future; in fact as long as you need help and assistance. Just examine the titles.

THE ATONEMENT

By James Stalker, D.D.

The Atonement is a master subject and takes a master hand to treat it so that it is understood. Divided into three parts this book deals in a striking and scholarly manner with the New Testament situation, the Old Testament preparation and the modern justification. The book will work wonders in clearing up many of the questions on the subject.

AMONG THE HOLY PLACES

By James Kean, M.A., B.D.

The author takes the reader with him in his journey and enables him to see in the most vivid manner the scenes visited. One can from this book obtain all the advantages of a personal visit to the places described and probably with still greater profit, for the reason that the author has the ability to see all that is worth seeing. Fully illustrated and with index.

BIBLICAL HISTORY AND GEOGRAPHY

By H. S. Osborn, LL.D.

Admirably adapted for use in Bible Classes. Dividing the Old Testament into six periods the author takes up chronologically the prominent events and historical points and defines them. Three chapters are given to the canonizing of the Scriptures and the origin of the Talmud. A description not generally obtainable of the places where the events occur is given in each case. A splendid perspective of events, time and places in all their original forms is thus presented. The New Testament is likewise analyzed. There is an excellent index and many colored maps.

COMPANION TO THE BIBLE

By E. P. Barrows, D.D.

This is a critical study of the books of the Bible in four parts. Part 1 treats of the evidences of revealed religion. Part 2 examines and classifies the books of the Old Testament. Part 3 examines and classifies the books of the New Testament. Part 4 takes up the principle of Biblical interpretation.

EVIDENCES OF CHRISTIANITY

By Charles P. McIlvaine, D.D.

This is one of the standard works on the Evidences. The material as set forth in this volume proves clearly, decisively and conclusively a sufficient basis for faith in the divine origin, nature, methods and results of Christianity. After reading this book a believer in God and His kingdom would become a stronger man with stronger beliefs. An unbeliever would turn from his unbelief to the earnest and continued following of Christ.

THE MASTER PREACHER

By Albert R. Bond, A.M., D.D.

Jesus was a teacher and a preacher with methods, a personality, themes and a success of His own. His methods and themes could be followed with success to-day if it was only known how. Dr. Bond knows how, has done it successfully, and presents in this book for your benefit practically every phase of Christ's methods. Its careful study will well repay any minister.

THE LORD OF GLORY

By Benjamin B. Warfield, D.D., LL.D.

Here is presented the Godhead of Christ on evidence taken from the New Testament. It is an unanswerable plea based on the designations which the New Testament writers apply to Jesus when concurrently speaking of Him. When Dr. Warfield comes to the end no doubt remains that Jesus Christ was indeed the "Lord of Glory." The book has index of designations, passages of Scripture and authors cited. As an aid to the study and preaching of this subject it is without equal.

THE TWO ST. JOHNS OF THE NEW TESTAMENT

By James Stalker, D.D.

Did it ever occur to you to make a study of the two Johns in the New Testament? Dr. Stalker with his remarkably original method, clarity of style, comprehensiveness of view and suggestiveness of matter, contrasts the lives and characters of John the Evangelist and John the Baptist. Full information on a vitally interesting subject.

THE OLD-TIME RELIGION

By David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.

There is not a dull sentence in this whole book, much less a dull page. Full of terseness and vigor, replete with sound thoughts, the book goes to the root of the Christian religion and tells why this religion is so solid and satisfactory. Young and old may read it with profit. Young ministers may well take it to heart.

STUDIES IN THE BOOK OF GENESIS

By H. B. Pratt

This is without doubt one of the best commentaries on the book of Genesis. There are so many doubtful points, overlapping events and apparently conflicting circumstances in the first book of Moses which need satisfactory explanations that this volume meets a demand of students of the Old Testament. It is especially valuable because the subject is handled by a man who has given a life to its study and research. The book makes an excellent companion volume to "Evidences of Christianity."

TRANSFIGURED

By Joseph Hamilton

What "Studies in the Book of Genesis" does to give light on a difficult subject in the Old Testament, "Transfigured" does to explain one of the most talked-of events in the New Testament. "Transfigured" is an unusual volume—a devout and common-sense study of this unparalleled scene. It treats of the unseen and eternal.

THE WONDROUS CROSS

By David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.

We could not resist the temptation to have the twelfth and last volume of this library one of Dr. Burrell's. The Cross is such a vital factor in every life when properly understood that this book seemed more than appropriate to lend dignity to a library intended first of all for the Christian reader and student. It is most acceptable with its pointed truths full of significance.

Our offer saves you one-half. These twelve handsome volumes will be delivered to your door for $7.50. The original selling price was $15.00. The illustration gives but little idea of the beautiful appearance these books make. They will add dignity and strength to any library. Think of it. Twelve books, 4300 and more pages well printed on clear white paper, each book uniformly bound in one of the best library cloths, gold stamping, at the low price of $7.50. Good paper, good printing and good binding. A vast array of information on a multitude of subjects. A library for the Bible student, pastor, teacher and scholar. Send us your order to-day. Delay will mean loss of this opportunity.

American Tract Society
New York

Gentlemen: Enclosed find $7.50, for which please send THE CHRISTIAN WORKER'S LIBRARY

to the address below.

Name
Street
City
State

3
A M M

SOCIETY OF PUBLISHERS

THE
AMERICAN MESSENGER

Vol. 75. No. 5.

MAY, 1917.

50 cents a year.
Single copy, 3 cents.

The SEAT OF GOVERNMENT

UNITED STATES CAPITOL
WASHINGTON, D. C.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY, NEW YORK.

The Heart of the Tree

BY HENRY CULVER BUNNER.

What does he plant who plants a tree?
He plants the friend of the sun and sky,
He plants the flag of the breezes free;
The shaft of beauty towering high;
He plants a home to heaven anigh
For song and mother-croon of bird
In hushed and happy twilight heard—
The treble of heaven's harmony—
These things he plants who plants a tree.

What does he plant who plants a tree?
He plants cool shade and tender rain
And seed and bud of days to be,
And years that flush and fade again;
He plants the glory of the plain;
He plants the forest's heritage;
The harvest of a coming age;
The joy that unborn eyes shall see—
These things he plants who plants a tree.

What does he plant who plants a tree?
He plants, in sap and leaf and wood,
In love of home and loyalty
And far-cast thought of civic good
His blessing on the neighborhood
Who in the hollow of His hand
Holds all the growth of all our land—
A nation's growth from sea to sea
Stirs in his heart who plants a tree.

The Reading of Books

Why should we read? The question sounds absurd, yet few devote themselves constantly and consistently to the careful reading of great books. We have spoiled ourselves by "easy reading," which is not reading at all. We are blind to the value of the reading habit in relation to the building of character and the enriching of life. The number of people who really understand and appreciate the untold wealth that lies concealed beneath the covers of a good book is comparatively small.

When Livingstone returned from his first journey through the Dark Continent he brought with him to England certain of the native chiefs who had befriended him in his travels. It is said that of all they saw in London nothing seemed so utterly inexplicable to these men as the great library of the British Museum. Not London Bridge, nor the White Tower, nor the crowded shipping of the Thames, nor even Westminster impressed them so deeply. When they stood under the dome of the library and saw the vast expanse crowded with books to the ceiling, and marked the eagerness with which a hundred readers, seated at the long tables, pored over the pages open before them, those simple black men were confronted with a mystery to them insoluble. To most of us, enlightened and educated though we be, the library remains a sealed mystery. We are familiar with the backs of books. We do not share the startled wonder of the savage in presence of the stored learning, the precious treasure of the thought-life of the ages; but our very indifference is our condemnation.

Many men who have themselves become famous have acknowledged their indebtedness to certain books that influenced profoundly the development of their intellectual life. Robert Murray McCheyne gained inspirations of incalculable value through the repeated perusal of Edwards's Freedom of the Will. Dr. Samuel Johnson testified that he became a Christian through the reading of Law's Serious Call. Sir W. Robertson Nicoll once said that he had known six men who attributed their choice of the foreign mission field to the reading of the Life of Henry Martyn, one of the rarest revelations that has ever been made of the aspirations of a Christly soul. Gladstone was a tireless student of Homer and Bishop Butler. Benjamin Franklin tells us that Mather's Essays to do Good affected all the principal events of his life. Keats affirms that the reading of the Faerie Queen was the decisive factor in shaping his career and inflaming him with the poetic passion. Why, then, should we read? That we may grow thereby.

When should we read? The times are strenuous. The insistent urge of one's chosen occupation often crowds the hours which should be given to leisure, with tasks and duties carried

THIS OFFER STILL HOLDS GOOD

We offer a Special Trial Subscription to the AMERICAN MESSENGER for the balance of the year, that is until December 31, 1917, for only Twenty-five Cents

This Special offer provides an excellent opportunity to introduce a splendid religious paper into many homes where such a periodical is not now taken. It is hoped that a large number of our subscribers will avail themselves of this generous proposition by sending this helpful, attractive paper to hundreds of homes where there is no other religious reading. There may be a considerable number of such homes in your own immediate neighborhood. Remember that the printed page will carry a message for Christ into many places that could not possibly be reached by your spoken words.

You could not make a choicer gift to any of your friends than to send them a subscription to the AMERICAN MESSENGER for the balance of the year. As a birthday remembrance or a graduation gift this paper would prove a most acceptable and appropriate present. Do not miss this unusual opportunity, but act promptly and send in your list of gift subscriptions, while this Special Trial Offer still holds good.

If you are not a subscriber yourself to the AMERICAN MESSENGER, why not send twenty-five cents so that you may receive this paper for the remaining months of this year.

American Messenger, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street New York

over from the stated hours of work. So we content ourselves in our rest time with the daily paper and the ephemeral magazine. It might be a boon to our intellectual life if all the daily papers were issued only once a day and at the same hour. The successive editions appeal to our craving for the latest news, so we keep buying and consuming our precious time in exploring the pages when our minds should be busy with greater things. The everlasting magazines shout at us from the news-stands. The newest novels thrust themselves on our attention, through circulars, advertisements and review articles. We yield to the pressure and feed upon the poorly-cooked dishes, while the nourishing and life-giving books remain untasted.

We try to deceive ourselves by asserting that we are brain-weary and have just time enough to read a racy story or a clever sketch. We fail to realize that a brain that is fagged by attention to the external details of our business is refreshed and renewed by fellowship with the ripest thought of the finest minds. The practical man, the everyday man, needs this fellowship, this personal contact, for the invigoration of his own soul. Otherwise he becomes a dull creature and more or less of an automaton. The man should arrange his time in such fashion that he shall sip the cool draught from the mountain spring each day. It is chiefly a matter of careful planning and determined purpose. The temple exalts; the machine degrades. Men must enter the temple of learning. The more intense their life the more frequent must their visits be. History is full of illustrations of men who used the fag-ends of time for the enlargement of their souls. What others have done we can do. We need but the courage of high resolve, the will to do well.

What should we read? This question is quite as vital as either of the other two. We should read whatever our tastes direct, provided it be wholesome. We should find out what our tastes really are, and train them. One man has a fondness for history; another likes to learn and quote poetry; another has a philosophical bent; another likes a good story; while still another is mightily quickened by the higher inspirations of religious literature. Every man should seek something apart from and above his daily occupation. Except in the case of science the old books are likely to be the best books. No matter what a man's particular predilections may be he cannot afford to neglect the Bible. It is a literary masterpiece as well as a spiritual revelation. Here are history, poetry, philosophy, narrative, and practical wisdom.

Books are worth more than gold or silver, stocks or bonds, houses or lands. "Give me a book, health and a day in June," said Emerson, "and I will make the pomp of kings ridiculous." In a letter written by Longfellow in 1843 are these words: "How different from this gossip is the Divine Comedy with which I begin the morning! I write a few lines every day before breakfast. It is the first thing I do—the morning prayer—the keynote of the day." He prefixed a fine sonnet to his translation of the Inferno, in which, after recalling the vision of a laborer laying down his burden and kneeling in the vast quiet of some dim cathedral, he adds:

So as I enter here from day to day,
And leave my burden at this minster gate,
Kneeling to pray and not ashamed to pray,
The tumult of the time disconsolate
To inarticulate murmurs dies away
While the eternal ages watch and wait.

—THE WATCHMAN EXAMINER.

A Bible Written by Hand.

Visitors to the Congressional Library at Washington are shown a Bible which could not be matched today by the best printing office in the world. It was written by a monk in the sixteenth century, and was the work of a lifetime. Even under the microscope not a single flaw can be found in all its thousand pages.

The general lettering, which is in German text, is arranged in two columns on each page, and nowhere is there the slightest irregularity of line or space. At the beginning of each chapter the first letter is usually two or three inches long, and is brightly illuminated in red and blue ink. Within each of these capitals is drawn the figure of a character of whom the chapter treats.

A legend relates that a young man who had sinned deeply became a monk and resolved to do penance for his misdeeds. He determined to copy the Bible that he might learn every letter of the divine commands which he had violated. Every day for many years he patiently pursued his task. Each letter was wrought with reverence and love, and when the last touch was given to the last letter, the artificer, then an old man, reverently kissed the page and folded the sheets together.

The parchment still is in a perfect state of preservation. The volume is kept under a glass case, which sometimes is lifted to show the visitor that all the pages of the book are as perfect as the two which lie open.—EXCHANGE.

What True Gospel Tracts Can Do

Every true gospel tract is a cup of cold water, of which the Lord says, "Whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink in my name . . . he shall not lose his reward" (Mark 9:41).

Good tracts are almost always well received. Commander Salwey wrote when in Paris lately, "People are more interested than ever, and when the suspicion wears off come round and say, 'Give me, please.' So many speak English—girls and young men, tradesmen, gendarmes even. One gendarme forgot his dignity to entreat one." And again, "I came into a stream of business folk returning for lunch. I explained I only had English tracts left. Every one I had was soon gone, a fight almost taking place to get them. Fancy seeing stolid English folk doing that in Regent Street; and these were not the poorer of the people! We must pray that the Spirit may take of the things of God and reveal them to some."

It was the regular practice of a gentleman, who was thought rather eccentric for his pains, to frequent the busy railroad junction of O— when the early morning trains were arriving and departing, and offer tracts to passengers at the car windows. He did so to three young men one morning, each of whom in turn refused to accept the offered tract. "You may refuse my tracts," said our friend, "but remember you have each a soul to be saved." The remark so impressed one of the young men that he seemed to hear each telegraph pole which the train passed, repeating the words, "Remember you have a soul to be saved." He had no relief from the power of the words till he came to Jesus, who saved him. Not only so, but he was led to offer himself for the ministry of bringing others to the Saviour, and is now a most useful and much blessed clergyman of the Church of England.

A young man in Scotland who was in sore distress of soul went privately to his minister; but he thought it was not a case for his services, and advised him to see a doctor. The medical man, finding nothing seriously wrong with his body, advised him to try some place of amusement as a diversion for his mind. With a shrinking from theatre and music hall, he went to an institution where he expected to obtain spiritual help, but only to hear some comic discussion going on. Distressed, disheartened, and in despair, on his way home he found, lying on the road, a gospel tract, and in it the very news his heart was craving for.

Tracts go where no person can. A drummer in India writes: "I am a soldier worker in my regiment for the Lord Jesus Christ . . . and having to get a good number of books from the regimental library every week, if I can get any suitable tracts I have been in the habit of putting them in the books given round the hospital; this often gives the chance of talking to a sick comrade about the Lord Jesus Christ and His love for us. I shall be very pleased if you can send me a parcel every month."

One word on a tract may be blessed of the Spirit. One writes: "I was arrested when a godless young man of twenty by that one word, 'Eternity.' It was the title of a booklet handed me by a fellow-worker in the factory, and as I read it I became deeply concerned about my soul's condition, and where I would spend that Eternity. I had no rest, no peace after that, till I came as a sinner to Jesus the Saviour, and was saved by him alone."

Many years ago a lady gave some leaflets to two actors. One of the actors was led by his tract to attend church, and was converted. It was Dr. George Lorimer, pastor of Tremont Temple, Boston. Through his influence Russell H. Conwell was led into the ministry. Thus the great Baptist Temple in Philadelphia, together with the work of Tremont Temple, and the personal influence of these two notable pulpit speakers, is really traceable in its origin to one little leaflet in the hands of a woman. Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, founder of the great China Inland Mission, was led to Christ by means of a tract.—EXCHANGE

The American Messenger

"Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Luke 2:10

Vol. 75. No. 5

MAY, 1917

Copyright, 1917, by American Tract Society.

Terms: 50 cents per annum
Single copy, 5 cents

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

PUBLISHED MONTHLY

BY THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

OFFICERS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President.

JOHN HENRY JOWETT, M.A., D.D., Vice-President.

JUDSON SWIFT, D.D., General Secretary.

LOUIS TAG, Treasurer.

REV. HENRY LEWIS, Ph.D., Recording Secretary.

All of the above-named officers should be addressed at Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Rev. David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.

Rev. Charles Carroll Albertson, D.D.

Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.

Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D.

Rev. George Ernest Merriam.

Entered at the Post Office in New York as second-class matter.

Ninety-Second Anniversary of the American Tract Society

The ninety-second anniversary of the American Tract Society will be held in the Marble Collegiate Church, Fifth Avenue and Twenty-ninth Street, New York City, on Wednesday, May 9, 1917, at 4 p. m.

A report of the year's work will be presented by the General Secretary, Rev. Judson Swift, D. D., and officers for the coming year will be elected. Mr. William Phillips Hall, president of the society, will preside.

The evening session will begin at 8 o'clock and will be addressed by Rev. John N. Mills, D. D., on "A Tourist's Impressions of the Needs of Latin-America," and Rev. William B. Stelle of the North China Mission of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, on "China Seeks the Printed Truth."

» » »

In the World War for Humanity

The month of April, 1917, will ever be memorable in the annals of our country, because it marks the entrance of the United States into the world-wide struggle which is being waged for the cause of democracy and humanity.

It is not necessary here to enumerate the steps by which the United States advanced to the position which she now holds, for the historical facts are fresh in all our minds. But there is one outstanding fact that is worthy of special mention, and that is the substantial unanimity with which the American people have arrayed themselves beneath the standard upheld by our honored President.

Never before in all our history was a war entered with more deliberation than in the present instance. No one can say that this country was swerved by sudden passion or that it was stampeded into a conflict without due notice. Indeed it may be truthfully stated that our Administration endeavored in every way to avert the dread scourge of war, and only recognized the existence of hostilities, when every other alternative had been tried except that of yielding to cowardice, selfishness and dishonor.

Now the United States is at war with the Central Powers of Europe and stands as an ally beside the many other nations of the world who have decided that a righteous war is preferable to a dishonorable peace.

President Wilson has issued a notable proclamation in which he urges upon every man, woman and child in this country the duty of service and self-sacrifice in order to bring this struggle to an honorable and successful conclusion. He pleads for efficiency, co-operation and untiring devotion to duty on the part of all classes of our population. The farmers especially are urged to use all their resources in producing the food that is so imperatively needed to sustain life both at home and abroad.

"The supreme test of the nation has come. We must all speak, act and serve together," are the inspiring words with which the President closes his ringing summons to the American people, and to this clarion call to duty let us all respond to the very limit of our strength and ability.

» » »

Bible Presentation at West Point

The annual presentation of Bibles to the one hundred and thirty-nine members of the graduating class at the United States Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., took place on Sunday morning, April 15, 1917, in the beautiful chapel which is located on the army reservation at that place.

Rev. Dr. Judson Swift, General Secretary of the American Tract Society, presented the Bibles to the cadets on behalf of the Society.

Forty-seven years ago Mrs. E. T. Throop Martin, of Auburn, N. Y., established a fund of $3500.00, the income of which is used annually for the purpose of presenting a Bible to each member of the Senior Class at the Academy. Each cadet is allowed to select in what version and language he shall receive the Scriptures, and the name of each recipient is stamped in gilt letters upon the copy of the Bible that he receives.

On account of the existing state of war the Class of 1917 was graduated on April 20th instead of waiting until the usual date in June. The exercises held on Sunday, April 15th, partook of a double character since they included both the graduating sermon preached by the Rev. H. Percy Silver, Chaplain of the Academy, as well as the presentation of the Bibles. It was a unique and impressive service and was attended by the entire corps of cadets, numbering 697 men, in full uniform. They sang with vigor the national anthem, "America" and "Alma Mater," being led in the singing by the choir composed entirely of cadets. At the close of the sermon the chaplain, who came to West Point four years ago, at the same time as the present outgoing class, gave the cadets an eloquent parting address, exhorting them to hold to high ideals in all things as they answered the nation's call to assume the training of other men for service.

Dr. Judson Swift, in presenting the Bibles to the cadets, said in a few brief words that it was their arsenal of munitions and that they would be strong men if they would let the Bible have a large place in their lives.

» » »

Gospel Munitions

The American Tract Society has undertaken to furnish Gospel munitions in large quantities for the United States soldiers and sailors. The value and urgency of Gospel munitions is set forth in the following testimonies:

Capt. J. Madison Hare, the Chaplain of the Fourth New Jersey Infantry, while on the Mexican border said: "I desire to thank the American Tract Society for the Soldier's Text Books sent to our men. They were greatly appreciated." Another Chaplain on the border telegraphed: "Send me by express 10,500 copies of the Soldier's Text Book, also leaflets—all urgently needed."

President Wilson has said: "Right is more precious than peace, and we shall fight for the things which we have always carried nearest our hearts. America is privileged to spend her blood and her might for the principles that gave her birth and happiness and the peace which she has treasured. God helping her, she can do no other."

The Tract Society appeals for not less than sixty thousand dollars ($60,000) to supply more than two million copies of the Soldier's Text Book and Cromwell's Soldier's Pocket Bible, also hundreds of thousands of leaflets, among them The Converted Soldier, Pivot Battles in Life and Sunny Jim's First-Aid Package, all being especially prepared for and adapted to meet the needs of the men in both the Army and Navy. The supply of Gospel munitions in the quantities needed is dependent upon special donations, and a most earnest appeal is made for this vital and important work.

Donations may be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and 40th Street, New York, N. Y.

A Sunday School Centennial Day

A national observance of the One Hundredth Anniversary of organized Sunday School work in the United States of America is being arranged for Sunday, May 6, 1917.

Every Sunday School in the country is invited to participate in this important event, which is intended not only to commemorate the beginning of that helpful institution which has rendered such valuable service in the spiritual development of our nation, but also to promote greater interest and co-operation in Sunday School work in the days to come.

Coincident with this celebration of the beginning of Sunday School work in our country will be the Centennial Anniversary of the American Sunday School Union, the leading features of which will be held in the city of Philadelphia, where the headquarters of the Society are located.

✻ ✻ ✻

Mother's Day

In these strenuous times let us not overlook the recurrence of the day consecrated to the mothers of our land.

Mother's Day falls upon the second Sunday of the month, May 13th, and on that day we are called upon to pay our tribute to the one who stands upon the highest pedestal upon which any human being can ever be placed.

Mother's Day, it has been well said, affords an opportunity for us as a nation to pay tribute to the women who, as pioneers, colonists, and as "best citizens" in war and peace, rendered to their country noble and valiant service through their sufferings, privations and heroism. These "heroes of heroes" not only sacrificed their own lives through their sufferings, hardships and sorrows, but loyally gave to their country lives more precious than their own—the lives of their husbands, sons, fathers and brothers! These heroic women are not—and could not be re-buried in our national cemeteries, but the memory of their heroism, privations and sufferings is enshrined in the mother-loving and patriot hearts of our people.

✻ ✻ ✻

An Unusual Worker Exalted

We regret to record the passing away of a most faithful and indefatigable worker in the person of Mr. Pedro Pozo, a missionary colporteur of the American Tract Society in Cuba. He labored under the immediate superintendence of Rev. J. Milton Greene, D.D. of Havana, who has sent this tribute to his memory:

"Our dear brother and tireless co-worker, Pedro Pozo, passed to his reward on April 6, 1917. I was with him for an hour before and at the time of his death. He had been a great sufferer for three months, but no one heard from him a word of complaint. His death was the most peaceful and tranquil I have ever witnessed. He was conscious almost to the last moment and indicated by a pressure of the hand his response to God's Word and to our prayers. His body was laid to rest in the Protestant Cemetery. He leaves a widow and seven children of whom two are under twelve years of age. He died very poor in all but his faith and usefulness.

"For thirteen years he had labored for the American Tract Society under my direction and I have never met his equal as a missionary colporteur. He distributed not less than 10,000 Christian publications in Cuba. His consecration, humility, conscientiousness, enthusiasm, self-denial and tact in dealing with all classes won for him the most profound respect and love of the brethren of all the churches.

"Mr. Pozo sought souls, not comfort, and because of this he visited not only towns, but the scattered homes in the country districts. He aimed to leave in every home at least a tract or a copy of Manzanas de Oro, the beautiful little Spanish Sunday School paper published by the Society. His favorite publication was Manzanas de Oro, for the reason that its pictures disarmed the fears of the Romanists.

"At different times Mr. Pozo expressed himself as deeply grateful for the consideration with which the American Tract Society had treated him. For seventeen years previous to his work in Cuba he labored in Spain under the British and Foreign Bible Society, being stoned near Bilbao on one occasion and often suffering great annoyances at the hands of the authorities."

Messages for Modern Men

BY REV. FRANK B. McALLISTER

Hold Your Tiller True

IT IS related that Marcus Aurelius, Emperor of Rome, had in his employ a brave pilot who had served him long and faithfully. When affairs of state called the ruler to distant parts of his vast empire, this trusted man was his constant companion. On one occasion, during an imperial journey, they were caught in a terrific storm on the Mediterranean and, for a time, it seemed certain that the galley with all aboard of her must surely go to the bottom. Up on deck and lashed to his post in the stern, the old pilot was steering; and, as he held the lumbering craft in the teeth of the gale, he muttered his prayers. It was a time when the ancient faith of Rome had begun to lose its hold over men, while nothing better had yet taken its place. The old seaman was not sure about the power of Jupiter or Neptune, as his ancestors had been, but still he was praying to them, and this was his prayer: "Oh, Father Jupiter! Oh, Father Neptune! You may sink us, if you will; you may save us, if you will; but, whether you sink us or save us, I'll hold my tiller true."

Let the old Roman, with his dim faith, be our teacher, for the moment, at least. His is the mood, surely, in which any of us should strive to encounter the vast perils and uncertainties of this mortal life. When the tempest rages, when fears or doubts assail, it is our part to press on in the right way, to steer the truest course we know.

Hours come when the best of people feel the weight of this "weary and unintelligible world." Awful things have happened in Christendom during the past two or three years, and are happening still, every day. The world war, with its frightful losses and barbarities, has confused the thinking of millions of minds. A measure of moral uncertainty prevails, because of the breaking up of many of the sanctions of human society that we had considered settled and sacred. Amid the clash of arms and the no-less bitter clash of opinions, men are asking where the right is and how they may find it. The answer to the query is, of course, a very simple one. They may find the right by striving to do the right. Clear vision is conditioned on a will dedicated to righteousness.

The mood of doubt is commoner than we often think, and frequently difficult to deal with. Young people (some of the best of them, too), as well as those who are older, find themselves perplexed on matters of faith and of philosophy. There are times when the mysteries of life oppress and even appall them. They cannot understand all the creeds of the churches, nor accept all the explanations of the preachers. Some valued friends of the writer have been thoughtful doubters of this kind.

How shall any of us meet these hours when thinking is perplexed, when the mystery of life baffles us, when questions arise to which no man is able to give a sufficient answer? There is a need then for the courage of the old Roman pilot. Let the life mariner hold his tiller true. Let him do the best to steer a morally straight course. Even should doubts arise like a cloud of fog about one's head, there are always some fixed stars to pierce the gloom. There is always the duty of living a white, honorable, and useful life.

The late Professor Sharp of Oxford University wrote a little poem that has been a challenge to many students passing through periods of religious doubt.

"I have a life with Christ to live;
But ere I live it must I wait
Till learning can clear answer give
Of this and that book's date?
I have a life in Christ to live;
I have a death in Christ to die
And must I wait till Science gives
All doubts a full reply?"

The scholar's answer is that no one needs, nor should wait for, a full reply to all his questionings before he begins to do the things that Jesus commands. There is duty enough immediately at hand and perfectly clear to keep us busy, without waiting to settle every question of life or death that our curiosity might suggest.

Another Englishman, the great preacher Frederick Robertson, once touched the truth with striking power. In an address to workmen, he said: "If there be no God, and no future state, yet even then it is better to be generous than selfish, better to be chaste than licentious, better to be true than false, better to be brave than a coward. Blessed beyond all earthly blessedness is the man who in the tempestuous darkness of the soul has dared to hold fast to these venerable landmarks."

Let us heartily acknowledge that the obligation of Christian conduct is on us all, whether or not we have solved all the problems of the universe. Not even a college sophomore is in duty bound to have evolved a complete explanation of human life. But he is bound to be true. He is not compelled to justify all the mysterious ways of God, nor weigh the earth in balances, nor mete out heaven with a span. But he is under bonds to practice righteousness.

The best thing about holding the tiller true is that by steering in this way we are sure to run out of the tempest and, by and by, to reach a happy harbor of faith. That was Robertson's experience. The way to grow into true and comfortable beliefs is by steadily doing right deeds. The great, heartening convictions that keep humanity from despair never have come from the loafers, nor the sneaks, nor the profligates; but always from those earnest about doing their Father's business. Those people are getting the best philosophy of life who are putting the best work into it.

Long ago, the divine Teacher of Galilee assured us: "If any man willeth to do his will, he shall know of the doctrine." The way to learn more is to practice the best we know already. No matter, then, how the wind blows, or the spray flies, or the waves smite our ongoing bark, the steersman who hopes to make port at last will hold his tiller true.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTION

DR. J. WILBUR CHAPMAN.

The Old-Time Secret of Evangelistic Power

BY REV. J. WILBUR CHAPMAN, D.D.

It is folly to suggest that we must change our methods of preaching to meet modern conditions. I have studied very carefully the work of Whitfield, Wesley, Finney, Moody, and the modern evangelists, and in so far as they have been successful, they have been possessed of the same spirit.

While attending the funeral service of Mr. Moody at Northfield, I heard a distinguished minister utter the following expression:

"I do not know whether I dare say what I am about to speak to you. I asked a brother minister this afternoon, and he would not take the responsibility, but after thinking it over I will say it. I believe if Christ had actually lived in the body of our dear brother and had been subject to the same limitations that met him, he would have filled up his life much as Dwight L. Moody filled up his, and for that reason I say, after the most careful thought, that I had rather be Dwight L. Moody lying dead in his coffin than to be the greatest man alive in the world today."

This remarkable tribute was paid by Dr. H. G. Weston, of the Crozier Theological Seminary, Chester, Pa., and when he had finished it, there was a wave of sympathetic expression and approval which swept over the entire audience, and his remarkable utterance was greeted with quiet Amens and suppressed sobs.

Naturally I am a hero worshipper. There are certain names that have always stirred me, and certain personalities that have ever been my inspiration. No name, however, has ever been more sacred among the names of men than that of Moody, and no character has ever so taken hold of my very being as his.

Written in large letters on my list was the name of Charles H. Spurgeon, and it has ever been the regret of my ministry that before it was given to me to cross the sea God had called him to cross over into the better land.

But of all the names written, none stood out so plainly before me as that of Dwight L. Moody. I had somehow made up my mind from what I had heard of him, and from what the newspapers had printed of his work, that he was to move me more mightily than any other man in the world, and I bear glad testimony to the fact that the after-years proved my expectation to be true. He exercised the most profound influence over me from the very first moment I met him, an influence which only increased with the passing years, and still abides, although he is now in the presence of his God.

In the providence of God I was frequently with him in services; notably, at the World's Fair meetings in Chicago, when he was not only the genial host of the workers with whom he was surrounded, but was the leader of a great force of Christian ministers and laymen, commanding the city for God with as great genius as ever an officer commanded and led his soldiers against the enemy on the field of battle.

He invited me to be with him in Pittsburgh in the year 1898, and one of the most tender memories of my life is that which I have of him in connection with the meetings held in the Exposition Building.

I saw him in frequent conferences when I was pastor in Philadelphia, when his great heart yearned over the cities in the East, much as did the heart of the Master when looking down upon the city of his love, He said, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem!"

I was with him in the special campaign in New York when from early morning till late at night in the Grand Central Palace, he not only preached himself, but called to his assistance workers and friends from many other cities.

I used to love to watch him in the meetings he conducted. His eyes were always open to take in the most minute detail of the services, and things to which other men would be blind he was ever seeing. I frequently almost lost the message he was giving in my admiration for the messenger. While he was sitting in the first part of the service he would make a dive into his pocket, take out a little piece of paper and write a message to some of his workers, put down an illustration or record something which was to be the seed thought for a future sermon. Sometimes you would scarcely think he was noticing what was going on, and suddenly he would be on his feet announcing a hymn, and while he could not sing himself, yet he was superb in his power to make other people sing. "Isn't that magnificent," he would say, as voice after voice took up the great chorus. "Now the galleries sing, that is my choir up in the gallery, now show the people what you can do; now the men, now the women, now altogether," until it would seem as if greater singing one had never heard in all his life.

He was a master in moving men. I can shut my eyes now and see him, with tears rolling down his cheeks, as he pleaded with men to turn to Christ; sobs breaking his utterance as he told of the love of God to men and of God's special love to himself. He was as sincere a man as ever stood on the platform to preach, and it was for this reason that people of all classes and grades believed in him. When the New York dailies came out with great headlines saying, "Moody is dead," a Jew in one of the courts turned to a friend of mine to say, "He was a good man," and when his death was being discussed in one of the great clubs in the City of New York, a man who was an infidel said, "I think he was the best man this generation has known, and if I should ever be a Christian I should want to be one just like Moody if I could."

There were times when Moody was more than eloquent, when every gesture was a sermon. Who can ever forget his description of Elijah going up by a whirlwind into heaven. When carried away by the power of his own emotions, he lifted his hands while his audience seemed to be lifted with him, and raising them higher and higher, I can hear him say the words, "Up, up, up, I can see Elijah going, and I see heaven open to receive him as he rises." The impression on his audience was profound.

To have known him at all was a blessing, but to have known him with any degree of intimacy was one of the rarest privileges of a minister's life.

HERE is a constantly increasing interest in evangelistic work throughout the United States. I am quite sure that there has not been a time in years, and perhaps there has never been a time, when so many ministers were interested in evangelism as at the present day, when so many evangelistic campaigns were being conducted, and when so many great cities were either considering the question of entering upon such a campaign, or were seeking to gather the results of services which have already been conducted.

In my own evangelistic experience I do not recall a time when I have been in receipt of more invitations to do this work. These invitations have come not only from the United States, but from all parts of the world, and I am quite sure that I could make out my schedule for three or four years in advance, if I wished to accept the invitations which are coming for the services of Mr. Alexander and myself.

I have been so many years in the field that I have visited practically all the large cities in the United States, and it is extremely encouraging to be receiving at this time invitations to return to cities which I visited fifteen or twenty years ago. This in itself is a proof that evangelism is worth while, and that evangelistic campaigns leave an abiding impression upon the communities where they may be conducted.

I have no hesitation in saying that I believe credit must be given to Mr. William Sunday for much of the increase of interest in evangelistic work at the present time. His personality is so striking, his message so stirring, his spirit so sincere, that all must be interested in him, whether they agree with him or not, while the space given to him by the daily press makes him not only a national, but an international character.

It has seemed to me that in the light of this increase of interest in evangelism, it would be well for us to consider some of the characteristics of Dwight L. Moody, and fortunately my connection with him was so intimate, and the help he gave me was so great, that I am in a position to write some things about him which others possibly might not be able to write.

Great as may be the influence of other men, I firmly believe that no greater blessing could come to any city in the United States than to have Dwight L. Moody back again, and preaching as he used to preach, praying as he used to pray, and living as he used to live.

Moody's was a wonderful life. In one of Tissot's pictures there is seen a great multitude of people lame and halt and blind in the way along which Jesus of Nazareth is to come, and then there is a view representing Him passing, and as He moves along only those before Him are sick, while all behind Him are well. This was a symbol of Mr. Moody's life. All that was behind him felt the touch of his power. The Chicago Bible Institute has become an object lesson to Christian workers everywhere. Northfield is a center of influence forth from which streams of blessing flow to the very ends of the earth. England, Ireland, and Scotland have felt the touch of his consecrated life, millions of lives the world over thank God that he ever lived, and those who were lame, halt and blind spiritually now leap and praise God for the work of Dwight L. Moody.

He was so very thoughtful of other people. The last time I rode with him to Mount Hermon he stopped to talk a few minutes with the men at the old ferry, asked them about their homes and spoke a cheering word concerning their work and said as he drove on, "I want them to know that I am interested in them."

Driving up from the station at the last students' conference at Northfield, he stopped every student trudging along with his baggage and took the bag into his buggy until it was piled up with luggage, and the greater the number of men whose burdens he lifted, the happier he became.

The first time I saw him is a memorable day in my life. I was a student at Lake Forest University, and he was to speak in Chicago. Four times he preached the Gospel that day, and I was present at every service; but the service of all services was that of the afternoon in old Farwell Hall; it was for men only. The place was filled to overflowing with men; the singing was superb, so said my friends, but I lost the power of the music in the sight of this man of God of whom I had heard so much. His text was, "Be not deceived, God is not mock; whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." The sermon is remembered because, under God, it has been used to lead so many to Christ. Under the power of it I saw my own heart, and then I saw the Saviour, who was waiting to make it clean.

The next impression was in connection with the brief conferences held throughout the country when five days were spent in Albany and Troy, and the meetings were held in the First Reformed Church, of which I afterwards became pastor. I came down from my country church with many other ministers from different parts of the State. The great church was crowded; I was obliged to stand in the aisle, but I forgot all discomfort in the impression that was made upon me by this mighty man of God. I followed him from one city to another and then went back to my own church to preach to my people on the story of the Moody meetings. The power of God was not only on his work, but was on the very mention of it, so that my church officers came together and said that this work must go on, and more than a hundred people came to Christ because of it. In the day when rewards are given for service, I am very sure that my dear friend will share in the glory of these who came to Christ indirectly through his ministry.

In his day no one was closer to Mr. Moody than Prof. Henry Drummond, and he said this of his friend: "Whether estimated by the moral qualities which go to the making up of a personal character, or to the extent to which he has impressed these upon communities of men on both sides of the Atlantic, there is, perhaps, no more truly great man living than Dwight L. Moody. By moral influences in this connection, I mean the influence which, with whatever doctrinal accompaniment, leads men to better lives and higher ideals. I have never heard Mr. Moody defend any particular church.

I have never heard him quoted as a theologian. But I know of large numbers of men and women of all churches and creeds, of many countries and ranks, from the poorest to the richest, and from the most ignorant to the most wise, upon whom he has placed an ineffaceable moral mark."

Had Mr. Moody lived he would have been eighty years old on the fifth day of February, 1917, but it seems quite unnecessary to use such an expression as this, because while in one sense he is dead, in another sense he is very much alive today throughout the world.

When Mr. Alexander and I were in Scotland three years ago, our workers were the converts of Mr. Moody's meetings, and they always spoke of him as if he had held his services a few days, instead of years before.

We began our meetings in Edinburgh exactly forty years, to a day after he had closed his services. Our chairman was his chairman; our ushers and personal workers had either served in his meetings, or had been converted under his preaching.

When we visited London we found men speaking of him as if he had visited the city but recently, and indeed, wherever we have gone around the world, we have found the same thing to be true.

He is indeed very much alive, although years have passed by since he was buried at Northfield.

We have found the fruit of his labors everywhere—in China, Japan, Korea, in Great Britain and in her Colonies, and we have seldom conducted a service when some one did not come forward to say, "I came to Christ under Moody's preaching."

His was a marvelous evangelistic career, and because he is so firmly entrenched in the thoughts and affections of the people, there must be some special secrets of his power, and these I would mention briefly.

He was called to preach the Gospel. He was not ordained of men, but he was fore-ordained of God, and because he knew that he had a divine commission, he preached with boldness and seemed to fear no man. This was one of the secrets of his great strength as a preacher.

He must have frequently been conscious of the fact that he had been denied the privileges of a collegiate education, but he must also have been conscious of the fact that like Paul of old in Arabia, he had passed through an experience which gave him quite as complete an equipment for preaching as many another man has possessed who has taken college honors.

He was a completely consecrated Christian. I have been told that after he had been preaching for some time there came to him a wonderful experience of the infilling of the Holy Ghost. I have also been told that Harry Morehouse, the Irish Evangelist, exercised a profound influence over him. But of this I am sure—that from the first day he preached until the closing day of his great ministry, just so far as he knew he was yielded to God, he kept back no part of the price, and he counted no sacrifice too great to make for his Master.

He was a man of great faith. He absolutely believed in God. He knew that God would keep His Word with him. He accepted God's promises as being worth while, and he used them as men would use a check given to them. He just cashed them in at the Bank of Heaven, and with urgent voice and ever-increasing faith, he walked in the power of God's fulfilled promises, and all who heard him preach were made conscious of the fact that here was a man who was preaching without doubt, and with the most intense conviction that God would do for him exceeding abundantly above all that he could ask or think.

He was a man of one book, and that book was the Bible. He was not a narrow man. He was exceedingly broad, but the Bible was the book of his counsel. He knew this book thoroughly; he believed it implicitly; he proclaimed its truths faithfully; he loved it dearly, and so when he rose to speak and said, "Thus saith the Lord," men believed because Moody believed, and I wish with all my heart that he could come back again and preach with this same intense conviction. What rebuke he would be to the men who in their preaching today are unsettling the faith of the people and dimming their vision of Jesus Christ.

He was a man of prayer. Over and over again I have seen him on his knees and heard him pray with sobs. One time I remember hearing him say, as he was pleading with God, "My heart will break if the cities are not moved." He forgot to eat and to sleep, because of his spirit of prayer. He not only walked with God, but he talked with God, and his sermons were great, and his appeals to men irresistible, because he preached in an atmosphere of prayer.

The average minister fails today because he prays so little. I have seen Moody pray with tears rolling down his cheeks. I have heard him pray when sobs would choke his utterance, and I have learned from him that nothing can take the place of prayer, if one would be a successful preacher of the Gospel.

He was a man of passion in preaching. His voice was so tremulous at time, his tones so pleading that men would hear him almost with breaking hearts, and when the invitation would be given they would throng the after-meetings and would sob their way into the Kingdom of God.

He never gave his approval to any form of evangelism which did not mean a serious and thoughtful consideration of the claims of Jesus Christ. He never stood for surface work in evangelism. He never was led astray by numbers. Like his Master, he felt that he was fulfilling his mission when speaking to a single individual, and I recall, as if it were yesterday, that he came and sat by me when I was a student and pleaded with me as if I were the only person in all the world.

He was indifferent to financial returns. It is a very beautiful thing to remember that Dwight L. Moody died a poor man so far as money is concerned, but he died a rich man in the affections of the people and in their ever-increasing confidence in him as a great preacher of the Gospel.

If we are to have an evangelism which is worth-while, I am persuaded that we must be possessed of the spirit of Mr. Moody. I think that this is the only thing that can break the hearts of men and bend their stubborn wills. I believe that the evangelism for which he stood is the evangelism which will mean a permanent strength to the church, an inspiration to the ministers, and an invincible appeal to the men who do not believe in Christ.

Memorial Day

BY LIZZIE DE ARMOND

*To-day the stars and stripes shall wave
O'er many a fallen hero's grave;
Their silent forms in death serene,
Lie 'neath the flow'r strewn mounds of green;
They sleep alike in storm or shine,
Within His care, the Lord divine.*

*No more they hear the call to arms,
They rest secure from war's alarms;
Though swiftly roll the years away,
Their memory shall live for aye.
We pledge to them our promise true,
For freedom's cause brave things to do.*

*To-day the stars and stripes shall wave,
Where peaceful rest the noble brave;
With loving hearts we breathe a prayer,
That they may find an entrance there
Where Christ our Captain waiting stands,
With victors' crowns in His dear hands.*

PRINTED PREACHERS

Progress in Porto Rico

Public interest has been directed toward the people of Porto Rico during the past month because of their entry into the rights and privileges of full United States citizenship. This means much for the future progress of this important island possession, and there is no doubt that a new era of advancement has been inaugurated which will bring increasing prosperity to these fellow-citizens of ours.

The spiritual needs of Porto Rico are not being overlooked, for the missionary campaign for the evangelization of the population of that island is being pushed with increasing energy.

Substantial churches are being erected for the use of evangelical congregations. On this page is a picture of the building used by the Presbyterian church in Aguadilla, and this is simply a single illustration of the fact that the Protestant faith with its teachings of a pure simple Gospel is taking a firm foothold in this island which was once described as a nominally Roman Catholic country without true religion.

Christian literature in the Spanish language is playing a vital part in the transformation of the people of Porto Rico. The American Tract Society has had several colporters in this island, and they have distributed a large amount of evangelical reading. Among these colporters is Mr. Fernando Muniz, who has labored in Aguadilla and the surrounding country and who furnished the photograph from which our illustration was reproduced.

During the past year Colporter Muniz has circulated over a thousand volumes. He has made 9,033 family visits and has held 257 gospel meetings.

✻ ✻ ✻

In Many Languages

Rev. Samuel Mueller, a missionary colporter of the American Tract Society, who has been distributing printed preachers in the form of Christian books and tracts in many languages in the State of Oregon, tells of his recent labors in the following words:

"During the past month I met people of all nationalities in homes, stores, lodgings, railroad camps, and on farm wagons, automobiles, street cars, railroad trains and river boats.

"I distributed the printed page carrying the Gospel message, spoke to men concerning their souls' salvation, and did this work in season and out of season. In logging camps I tacked up sixty-one pages of Scripture reading taken from Wall Rolls. To an Israelite I gave Yiddish tracts which he read with interest; he was a junk man, stopping with his team before a farmhouse. He expressed the wish to have a New Testament and a Christian presented him with a Bible. At another home I prayed for a fever-stricken young girl.

"One of the great joys of my heart is to distribute free Christian literature to the men in camps and quarries.

"I find difficulty in dealing with Mormons, Christian Scientists, Seventh-Day Adventists, Russellites, Anarchists and others. It requires grace, forbearance, love and self-denial to visit these people.

"In one home I had a long conversation with a Roman Catholic to whom I read from the Scriptures. She confessed that she knew little of the Bible.

"In the hilly country at Mountindale I visited a family whose seventeen-year-old boy was very ill with heart disease.

"I prayed with the boy, for which the family was very grateful.

"During this month I distributed Christian literature in thirteen different languages."

✻ ✻ ✻

In Missouri

Rev. J. H. Holland, a missionary colporter of the American Tract Society, whose headquarters have been at Struther, Mo., writes:

"This report closes the record of another colportage year. I hope that it has been one of the best years of work for Christ in the history of the Society.

"I have not made many public addresses, but I have done a great deal of personal work in my house-to-house visitation. Many who were strangers to grace have freely talked about the Way of Life, and I have tried to point them to the Cross of Christ.

A PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH IN PORTO RICO.

"I have found a great many homes destitute of the Bible and of religious books. I am thankful to the dear old Society that by means of its grants and the low prices at which it furnishes Bibles and good books that I have been able to supply many destitute families. In one family consisting of father, mother and six children, I found no Bible and scarcely anything else in their little two-room house. The floor was bare and everything bespoke poverty. I gave them the 'Good News in Story and Song.'

"May God's richest blessing rest on the Society and all its work."

✻ ✻ ✻

Among Many Nationalities

Mr. John Martinco, who has been engaged for many years in the work of circulating Christian literature, writes:

"This is the fourteenth year of my work as a missionary colporter of the American Tract Society.

"Most of my time recently has been spent in Pittsburgh and vicinity. Altogether I have canvassed over seventy-five towns and villages. The people I have met are largely of Slavic race; there are also a good many Hungarians and Italians. Their occupation is chiefly iron-working and mining. In religion the majority belong to the Roman Catholic and the Greek Catholic Churches. Ninety per cent of the Slovaks are loyal to the American cause and they are ready to sacrifice their lives for their adopted country, if necessary. The Roman Catholics are well organized and very few of their children attend the public school for fear that they would be excluded from the Holy Communion. The reading of the Bible and Protestant literature is strictly forbidden by the priest. Nevertheless they are powerless to stop me from entering many homes where I am gladly welcomed by the people.

"During the last year I visited over four thousand families and circulated Christian literature to the value of over $400.00. I had nice conversations with many of the people, including some young children. Some of them have since gone away from this section, but they correspond with me very often. I am glad to say that I feel that the American Tract Society is doing a great work through its missionary colporters."

✻ ✻ ✻

Hungry for the Gospel

For several years the American Tract Society has sent a cash appropriation to the Mission which is sustained by the Board of Foreign Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Old Umtali, Rhodesia, Africa. This appropriation is used to supply "printed preachers" in the form of Christian tracts and books in the vernacular. A recent letter from Rev. John R. Gates, District Superintendent of the Rhodesia Mission gives some interesting news concerning the work. He writes:

"Since I wrote you last the work has been most encouraging in the way the people have received the Gospel. They have been most responsive to every form of Gospel presentation. I have never seen them more hungry for the truth than now.

"I am not able to give you the exact figures, but in spite of so many stations being closed and so few missionaries being at work on the field there has been an increase of two or three hundred full members and probationers. More than a hundred children have been baptized and in every place that I have visited delegations have come asking that a teacher be sent to them.

"Certainly the words of our Saviour, 'And when I am lifted up, I will draw all men unto me,' were never more truly demonstrated than here on this field. People from everywhere come asking to be taught about Him. If we truly lift Him up, the people will surely come. Our difficulty is that we cannot care for them all.

"The American Tract Society is helping more than it is possible to tell in lifting up the world's great Saviour. The mission through your help and that of others, has brought Christian songs to take the place of heathen and obscene chants. It has brought the Bible and the ability to read it whereas before they had not seen a book of any kind. It is gradually bringing about the emancipation of women who have hitherto been bought and sold as cattle.

"Thank you for your help."

RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS

Have You a Question to be Answered?

This department of our paper is maintained in order to help our readers in the solution of the problems that they meet in their religious life. Any question concerning the Christian life may be sent to the Editor of the AMERICAN MESSENGER, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York City. All the problems thus presented, the discussion of which is likely to be of interest and profit to our readers, will be answered by Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D., Pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian Church of New York City, and one of the Contributing Editors to our paper. Only the initials of the writer will be given in connection with any letter that is printed.

The questions that have been presented for discussion this month and Dr. Work's replies are as follows:

DEAR SIR: I have heard it said that Melchizedek was Christ, but I can't think so. I would like to have it explained. R. A. S.

DEAR FRIEND: Nothing more is claimed for Melchizedek than that he was a type of the Messiah especially in his kingship and priesthood. Read carefully the three passages that refer to him, Gen. 14:18-20, Ps. 110:4 and Heb. chapters 5, 6, and 7. The key to the whole matter is the statement made about Abraham, that "he gave him (Melchizedek) a tenth of all." David in the psalm, where he is apparently picturing the Messiah, makes use of the dim and far-away figure of Melchizedek unto whom Abraham gave a tenth of all—"Thou art a priest forever after the order of Melchizedek." The author of Hebrews makes use of both these passages and draws out the comparison at considerable length. The point of emphasis is that Christ's priesthood was of the nature or order of Melchizedek's, that is, it was superior to all earthly priesthoods. In the person of Abraham the whole Jewish priesthood represented by Levi paid tithes to the higher priesthood of Melchizedek. The argument of Hebrews is that if Abraham, who was the father of the faithful and the ancestor of the sons of Levi acknowledged the dignity and superiority of Melchizedek, then Christ is worthy to take his place as the High Priest of men above all other mediators. "Thou art a Priest forever after the order of Melchizedek." Nothing is known about Melchizedek historically. His sudden appearance, his majesty, his evident independence and superiority, his exalted claim to the attention of such a representative person as Abraham—all this fixed itself upon the minds of later Biblical writers as a wonderful type of the eternal royalty and priesthood of Christ.

DEAR SIR: I am praying for one who at one time acknowledged Christ as his Saviour, but he has wandered away from Him. I am praying earnestly and yet I am told that God never saves any unless they are willing and will open their hearts to Him. When I think of this, the terrible thought comes to me that if it depends on one's own self, what is the use of praying when that one seems to be drifting farther and farther away? I want also to ask what warrant we have for changing the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week? M. M.

DEAR FRIEND: It is true that God does not save anyone against his will. It is also true that God moves in mysterious ways His wonders to perform. Our knowledge of the spiritual forces that are at work in the world of mankind is necessarily very limited. We only know that God's grace is very wonderful, and His Providence is very far-reaching. Often when souls seem to us to be wandering far away from God they are in reality very near to Him. They may soon "turn again home." Who could have told that Saul of Tarsus was so near to the Kingdom when he went to Damascus breathing out slaughter against the Christians? The sainted Monica prayed earnestly that her wandering son Augustine might not go to a certain city, but Augustine went to that city. There however he met a great bishop of the church who was the means of his conversion. The point is that we must never allow ourselves to give a soul up as a hopeless wanderer. It is not God's way: it should not be ours. Prayer is only one of the mysterious and wonderful influences that God desires us to make use of in dealing with souls. The rule is, "Pray without ceasing." Our counsel then is, "Do not yield to your 'terrible thought' about the wanderer, and keep on working, praying and hoping."

There is no place in the Scripture where the change from the seventh to the first day is expressly prescribed. It is very plain however from the hints that are contained in the New Testament that the first day of the week at once assumed a prominent place in the minds of the disciples. Very soon it seems to have been called the Lord's Day (See Rev. 1:10) being observed as the anniversary of the resurrection of Jesus. The change was probably not made all at once. But little by little the groups of Christian believers formed the habit of observing the Lord's Day as the Christian Sabbath. That such a momentous change was made without the mind of the Spirit is scarcely conceivable. So far as the modern church is concerned therefore the warrant for observing the first day of the week is found in the example of the early Christians.

DEAR SIR: I would like to ask your opinion upon the nearness of the coming of the Lord. I would like also to inquire concerning the practice of tithing, just what a tenth should be, whether of the entire income or simply of the profit? I should like to know for instance how a man making ten per cent on an investment and needing to re-stock at regular intervals, as in a store, could meet his tithing requirements justly. Is the law of tithing a present Christian obligation? C. S. D.

DEAR FRIEND: "It is not for you to know times or seasons, which the Father hath set within His own authority." Acts 1:7. "Of that day or that hour knoweth no one, not even the angels in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father." Mark 13:32. "Watch therefore, for ye know not on what day your Lord cometh." Matt. 24:22. "Be always ready, for in an hour that ye think not, the Son of Man cometh." Matt. 24:44; "The day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night." I Thes. 5:2. "What manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy living and godliness, looking for and earnestly desiring the coming of the day of God." II Peter 3:11, 12. "I come quickly." Rev. 3:11. "Amen, come Lord Jesus." Rev. 22:20. We conclude from these and other passages that God does not intend us to know the time. It will be sudden, quick, unexpected. We must therefore watch and be ready: for "the Lord is at hand," (Phil. 4:4). We are to live daily in expectation of His coming. Many however are not content with these statements of Scripture and must needs begin to figure out the time of His coming. Answering the question directly, the writer has no opinion upon the nearness of the coming of the Lord. He only knows that the Lord is coming again.

If one who receives a salary of one thousand dollars gives a tenth of it to God, wherein does the case of a business man who does a thousand dollar business differ from his case? The difficulties that arise are to be met in general by making tithe-giving a regular part of one's business, and thus calculating it in with everything else in the course of the business. The question as to whether tithing is a present Christian obligation is much debated. It is remarkable that the last book of the Old Testament contains these memorable words, "Bring ye the whole tithe into the store-house." Our Lord seems to recognize the tithe. "You give tithes and this ye ought to have done." The principle of proportionate giving is certainly thoroughly established in the Word of God, and Christian stewardship cannot be developed without it. We believe that the Old Testament tithe is to be accepted as an expression of what is permanently right and convenient in the matter of giving. The New Testament rule, "as God hath prospered you," is only an expansion and application of the principle of proportionate giving. If C. S. D. will send name and address to the writer in care of the AMERICAN MESSENGER, Office of the American Tract Society, he would like to send a recent and masterly discussion of tithe-giving by a well-known writer.

DEAR SIR: Supposing that we ourselves have come to such a stage in our spiritual life that money-getting and exciting pleasures are secondary to us, how can we preach this gospel of putting first things first to men immersed in business and to those who are caught in the whirl of pleasure-getting? F. N.

DEAR FRIEND: Phillips Brooks once said that what men need most is not a syllogism but an example. All the argument one can bring to bear upon worldly men is not half so convincing as one true redeemed, uplifted life. Go on living and working in the light of the Gospel. Lose no opportunity to preach and teach and even argue if you can—but be assured all the while that the power of your right example will reach farther and go deeper than your words. It is often true that the best personal asset a community possesses is not the preacher in his pulpit, but the believer in business, or in the home, or in the social circle, who truly lives the Gospel of Christ.

DEAR SIR: I feel that Jesus has been such a good friend to me through life. He has comforted me in trouble and has given me the sweet assurance that I am saved, so that it seems that He is nearer and dearer than the Father to me, and I feel that I love Him more than I do the Father. Do you think that God will hold me responsible for that? W. T. C.

DEAR FRIEND: Study prayerfully such passages as John 1:14, "We beheld His glory, glory as of the only-begotten from the Father," John 1:18. "No man hath seen God at any time: the only-begotten Son, who is in the bosom of the Father, He hath declared Him." John 6:38. "I am come down from heaven not to do mine own will, but the will of Him that sent me." John 5:19. "The Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father doing." John 5:23. "That all may honor the Son, even as they honor the Father." John 5:17. "My Father worketh even until now and I work." John 8:16. "I am not alone, but I and the Father that sent me." Do you not feel that Jesus is very jealous for the honor of the Father? There is no rivalry between the Father and the Son. The Son reveals the Father. The Father glorifies the Son. The Son brings us to the Father. The Father makes us joint heirs with the Son. We are never to forget that when Jesus taught His disciples to pray He bade them say, "Our Father." See also Romans 8:14-17.

EDGAR WHITAKER WORK.

HIS VINEYARD AND OURS

Tract Work in Hainan

One of the agencies for the production and circulation of Christian literature in China is the American Presbyterian Mission located on the Island of Hainan, which has a population of 2,000,000 souls.

Recently the American Tract Society sent a cash appropriation for the support of the literary work of the Mission in Hainan. This remittance was most gratefully received, and used to the best possible advantage.

The people of China have various amusements. One form of diversion is shown in the picture before us which was reproduced from a photograph sent by the Hainan Mission.

CHINESE CONTORTIONISTS.

The North Fukien Tract Society

A recent mail from China has brought a report of the year's work of the North Fukien Religious Tract Society. Mr. William Muller, Secretary of the Society, writes:

"A proper Book Depot is the great need for our work, and we really hope to do something in this direction almost at once, for the Committee has resumed its search for suitable premises, and I believe there is good reason for expecting that the British and Foreign Bible Society will join us in this effort.

"We have instituted a Subscription Membership which we hope will be successful and add not only to the funds of the Society but to the general interest, especially as the Chinese are also invited to become members, and already have three members on the Executive Committee.

"This Society is very grateful to the American Tract Society for its generous help and passed a hearty vote of thanks at its Annual Meeting. It also requested me to solicit an equal generosity for the current year, and indeed if we are to go on with our work we shall need it more than ever."

At the twenty-fifth Annual Meeting of the North Fukien Religious Tract Society a Revised Constitution was adopted. Rev. L. P. Peet was re-elected President and Mr. William Muller, Secretary-Treasurer.

In Central and Northern China

The Religious Tract Society of North and Central China has its headquarters in the city of Hankow. A review of the year's work was recently received from this Society, and from it we glean the following salient paragraphs:

"The year just ended has been one of comparative quiet in Central China. The agitation which arose over the question of the restoration of the Monarchy subsided very quickly when President Yuan died and his position passed to the great general Li Yuan Hung. The reassembling of the Parliament and the cancellation of the various declarations of independence have resulted in a great lull in the political storm.

"So far as the Churches are concerned there has been no serious case of persecution and the work of preacher and colporteur has proceeded in quietness and comfort. The Board of Education has framed certain regulations which if enforced will prevent Christian Day Schools from securing a place in the national system of education, but thus far the sale of our educational publications has not been affected.

"Great interest has been created by the preparation of 'a study of Christian Literature suitable for evangelistic purposes.' This book is the work of Pastor Cheng Ching-yi, the Chinese secretary of the China Continuation Committee, whose speeches at Edinburgh won for him an almost world-wide recognition. The book aims at selecting a list of four hundred books and tracts suitable especially for use by those who are conducting the great evangelistic campaigns which have been a feature of Chinese Church work in recent years. We may be pardoned for mentioning that seventy-six of the books and tracts selected by Pastor Cheng will be found in the Catalogue of our Society.

"There have been grave difficulties during the year, owing to the abnormal rise in the price of paper, in maintaining our stock and issuing new publications. Books and tracts have run out of print with a speed which would have been enheartening in any ordinary year, but which has been embarrassing in the year now closed. A detailed report of all that has been discussed at the monthly meetings of our Publication Committee would amaze our friends. Qualities of paper, possibilities of using cheaper qualities, how large an edition of this or that we dare print on such paper as we could get, whether such a tract should remain out of print, whether we should issue any new publications, whether we could get any paper at all—these are questions which have been dealt with at various meetings.

"The circulation for the year will cheer the hearts of all our friends. In times such as these, when the missionary is faced with a lessened income from the Home Board owing to the disastrous rise in the price of silver and when we have advanced our prices, one might have expected some falling-off in the orders received. But instead we find that the total of our issues from the Hankow depot has grown from 1,092,145 last year to 1,417,203 this year, while the value of these issues is correspondingly increased. To this latter total must be added the issues from the Tientsin depot, which have amounted to many hundreds of thousands. It has not yet been possible to secure a record of total issues of the North China Religious Tract Society prior to the amalgamation, but the total output of books and tracts from the Hankow depot has now reached about 34,000,000 and to this may be added about 16,000,000 tracts freely distributed for other Societies.

"Among the new publications of the year are the following titles: Perpetua and Felicitas, A Miner's Salvation, Christian Privileges and Duties, A Home Prayer Manual, Christianity and Confucianism, A Guide to Reform and The Light of the World.

"Beside these seven new issues we are glad to announce that after long delay, the Hymnal has been published and that the first edition of 5,000 copies is exhausted. A second edition is now ready. The Calendar for 1917 has been designed by a highly gifted missionary, the Rev. A. J. MacFarlane, M.A. Following the precedent set last year by Miss W. I. Coxon, who took as the theme of her beautiful calendar the idea of 'Light,' Mr. MacFarlane decided to use the thought of 'Power' and he has skilfully worked out this thought in letterpress, illustrations and border. We feel that these two Calendars mark a distinct advance in the work of producing annually a Calendar which shall on the one hand compete successfully with the native productions and on the other convey a Christian truth to the mind of him who uses it."

Converted Through Wondrous Grace

Mr. C. H. Stevens of the China Inland Mission, gives two interesting cases of conversion as the result of the efforts of Mr. Yang, a Chinese worker in one of his out-stations, which show that the Gospel is adapted to the needs of even the most depraved. He writes:

"Mr. Liu was given up as hopeless, being a physical wreck when Mr. Yang met him. Liu besought Yang to help him with medicine. Mr. Yang responded by telling him that if he were willing to kneel down just where he was and in faith call upon the Lord to heal and help him, he could yet be saved. He did so, and to-day the man is free from opium, and physically stronger than many an ordinary individual who has never touched the drug. He bears testimony to the wonderful grace of God shown towards him.

"The other man, a Mr. Feng, comes of a wealthy family. His father was a scholar with a M.A. degree, and Mr. Feng himself has taught in a school. The father died some years ago and alas! the home was finally ruined through opium. When Mr. Yang took Feng in hand, the latter was a moral wreck. I understand that even outsiders intimated that if Mr. Feng could be reclaimed, Christianity was certainly divine. To-day Mr. Feng is 'clothed and in his right mind,' and while I write this is taking his part in evening prayers."

A Village Christian Saint in India

Baba Karam, an Indian Christian who fell ill and died recently, was not a paid agent of any missionary society, but he was a real missionary called of God.

His silent and faithful work has been the means of forming three congregations in three different villages in the field of the National Missionary Society. His life has a great interest, in that it shows how Christ can make use of even the poor and illiterate Christians of our villages when they are swayed by a real missionary spirit. He was a Christian from among the low caste. Even before he became a Christian, he was anxious to know about God.

During the last ten years of his Christian life since his baptism, the more his body grew feeble on account of his old age, the more his missionary spirit grew in him. Though advanced in age he took great pains to learn to read so that he might be able to read the Word of God himself. Often he had to go a long distance to learn a lesson with the help of non-Christians who were not quite willing to teach him.

Baba Karam earned his living as a tenant under a Hindu landlord. During the months of the year when there was not much work in the fields, he went about from village to village to deliver his message. Thus a large number of Christian congregations found in him a natural religious leader able to help them in various ways.

Besides this, wherever non-Christians got to know him they respected him. He was respected by all communities in his own village, and was known as an honest, hard-working, and humble man, zealous for his own religion. As Christianity was a new thing in this district, he had plenty of opportunities every day to witness for his faith, for people asked him again and again why he became a Christian. He welcomed such opportunities, and was only too glad to tell everyone the good news. Although there were many Christians in his own village and in the villages around him, yet he was called "Karam Isai" (i.e., Karam the Christian).

Growth in Uganda

Recent returns from the Church Missionary Society Mission in the Uganda Protectorate in Africa indicate progress. The Protestant Christian community in the mission now numbers 114,570, almost exactly double the total of ten years ago; the communicants (29,000) have very nearly doubled their number during that period; the contributions of the people have almost trebled; the students and pupils in the schools have more than trebled.

The Power of His Word

A missionary from South America writes: "Some Roman Catholics were burning a pile of Bibles in the public park. The wind caught a leaf of the gospel by Luke and carried it the length of a number of streets until at last it ended its journey by entering an open window. A lady saw it, picked it up and read; that was the first step in her conversion. Truly the winds obey Him. A sacrist, or man who helps the priest, was curious to know more about a pile of books that the priest was going to burn, so he stole one, a New Testament, which resulted in his salvation."

Generous Gifts

An encouraging feature of the work in Japan is the fact that the Japanese Church is beginning to develop some large givers. For example, we are told that an alumnus of the Methodist College in Tokyo has come forward with a gift of 150,000 yen ($75,000) to provide much-needed buildings for that institution; alumni of the Doshisha College (Congregationalist) have collected 300,000 yen ($150,000) for an endowment fund. Baron Morimura, a wealthy Christian, is personally financing Mr. Kimura, the Japanese evangelist, and his assistants on their evangelistic tour in the Hokkaido.

A Bright Outlook

Rev. A. Stuart McNairn, General Secretary in London of the Evangelical Union of South America, has recently returned from a tour of Argentine, Brazil and Peru. He says the response of Brazil to the gospel is wonderful; the fields are white, and it is only a question of gathering in the harvest. In Gamelleira, in Goyaz State, a Brazilian "Keswick" was held, attended by five hundred people, some of whom journeyed two or three weeks on horse-back, or in ox-wagons, or on foot in order to be present. The Christian community is a light to all the country around, and believers in other parts of the State wish to move there because of the Christian atmosphere.

Notes upon the Topics Used
in Christian Endeavor
and Other Young People's Societies.

THE PRAYER MEETING

By
Rev. Henry Lewis
Ph.D.

MAY 6. Love

I Corinthians 13.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M. Apr. 30. Forgiving love. 2 Sam. 18:1-5, 27-33.
T. May 1. Patient love. 1 Pet. 4:12-19.
W. May 2. Pardoning love. John 3:14-17.
T. May 3. Serving love. Gal. 5:1-15.
F. May 4. Seeking love. Luke 15:1-10.
S. May 5. Yielding love. Gen. 13:1-11.

The Scripture selected in connection with this topic is one of the choicest passages in all the Bible. It is an inspired commentary on the most vital subject that has ever engaged the attention of the human mind. Love, according to Professor Drummond, is the greatest thing in the world, and his statement has met with universal assent and approval.

A Divine Quality

If we ask for the source of love, we find the answer to this question in the statement of the Scriptures that God is love. Love is a divine quality, and hence its exalted character. God is the source and spring of all true love, and He has given to the world a matchless exhibition of this attribute in the gift of His Son to be the Saviour of the world.

God has implanted the natural affection in human hearts which finds its expression in family love. The impulse to friendship, which finds its only secure basis in mutual love, is a God-given instinct. The spiritual love upon which rests our fellowship with believers is the gift of God's Holy Spirit. Moreover, our love toward God is inspired by Him. "We love Him, because He first loved us."

The Crowning Virtue

The Apostle Paul ranks love as the crowning virtue. He subordinates it to all other Christian graces and gives it the highest place in the category of human virtues.

Love is not the only virtue, nor is it antagonistic to justice, righteousness or any of the other moral attributes required for a perfect character. But love is complementary and supplementary to all other moral qualities. It bathes in its warm glow those virtues which by themselves alone might tend to produce an austere and unattractive personality. "Love," it has well been said, "is the ground of Christian character, the soil out of which deeds must grow. Without love we may have artificial trees in our lives, but no real fruit."

The Power of Love

Who can measure the power of love? In these days, when it seems as if all the world had turned to physical force as the most effective means for attaining desired ends, let us remember that the power of love still transcends the might of all material forces. Indeed, as we look closer into the present situation, we may see that the love of righteousness is still the controlling instinct in the majority of human hearts, and the love of humanity still reigns in human lives that are being freely offered for the defense of our home land and the suppression of the menace to human liberty that lurks beyond and beneath the sea.

What is the most powerful thing in the world? It is not money, for there are many things which money cannot buy. It is not physical force, for there are things which the strongest artillery cannot accomplish. It is not self-interest, for the world is witnessing a self-almegation and a yielding of oneself to service and to sacrifice such as has never been seen before in all the range of secular history.

The most powerful thing in the world is love. This is the motive which animates the mother who gives her life for her child. This is the motive that actuates the patriot who gives up his life for his country. This is the motive that inspires the missionary of the Cross, who lays down his life as the result of his devotion to the Master

MAY 13.

Fellowship with God (The Quiet Hour)

Psalms 119:97-104.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M. May 7. Fellowship in prayer. I John 5:14-15.
T. May 8. Fellowship in suffering. Mark 14:32-42.
W. May 9. Condition of fellowship. I John 1:5-10.
T. May 10. Meditation. Gen. 24:63.
F. May 11. Fellowship in toil. I Cor. 3:1-9.
S. May 12. Joy of fellowship. Ps. 23:1-6.

The Scripture portion for this topic is a part of the 119th Psalm, which is both the longest and in some respects the most remarkable of all the Psalms. It has been called the "Psalm of the Law," "the Psalm of the Saints," and "the Alphabet of Divine Love." Some one has described it as "the Christian's golden ABC of the praise, love, power and use of the Word of God."

The entire Psalm is eminently appropriate for use in the Quiet Hour. The opening verse of the section selected for our consideration is especially suitable for our topic: "O, how love I thy law! It is my meditation all the day."

The Blessing of Meditation

In this rushing, tumultuous age there is great need for the observance of a time of meditation, when the soul may hold fellowship with God and dwell upon the essential realities of life.

Meditation does not preclude action, but it helps to direct action in the right channel. Men of action are usually also men of thought, and the more important the interests committed to their charge, the more careful should be their thought.

"Study to be Quiet"

A most helpful little book that bears directly on our topic is "Study to be Quiet," by Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D. In the opening chapter of that book entitled "A Pauline Sentence," Dr. Work writes:

"It is trite to say that our age is hasty and restless. But it has not yet been too often said that Christianity's message in part to the world is a message of quiet strength and rejoicing amidst turmoil and haste. The Christian faith, to be sure, is dynamic in its influence upon men, yet at the same time it is ever summoning men back to the silent sources to the steady processes of faith, where life may obtain its poise, secure its own legitimate privacy, inherit the gifts and graces of Quiet. The terminology of the subject—'silence,' 'stillness,' 'calm,' the 'inner life'—has a strange sound in the ears of these noisy generations.

"The apostle Paul was no mystic. He writes indeed of being carried into the seventh heaven of vision and he has much to say of the deep things of the Christian faith. Yet he is always the most practical of men, teaching ever the insistence of task, as well as the importance of vision. Paul illustrates a combination of qualities. He puts duty with doctrine, action with vision, service with thought, works with faith. He calls men to a personal and growing acquaintance with Jesus Christ their Lord, in order that they may go out and do His work with loving hearts. Keenly alive as he is to the need of activity, Paul also insists upon Quiet, such Quiet for the Christian as is described by Fellowship, Meditation, Communion, Growth. The great apostle himself must have his quiet years in Arabia before he could begin his apostolic labors.

"This Pauline counsel is very valuable to-day. The Christian of to-day needs silence, including, as the word does, whatever is of the inner life, whatever is preparatory in the heart, whatever represents the deepening of the soul's experience. Study to be Quiet means, not less activity, less doing, but more thought, more worship, more prayer, more secret, personal education of the heart in grace and knowledge."

MAY 20.

Growing As Christ Grew

Luke 2:41-52.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M. May 14. Growing in God's House. I Sam. 2:18-20, 26.
T. May 15. Growing in grace. I Pet. 2:1-4, 20.
W. May 16. Growth of character. 2 Pet. 1:1-11.
T. May 17. Arrested growth. Heb. 5:12-14, 6:1-3.
F. May 18. Growth in good. Col. 1:1-14.
S. May 19. Perfect Manhood. Eph. 4:26-32.

It is suggested that the meeting at which this topic is considered be a union meeting with the Juniors and Intermediates. This is a good suggestion, and such a meeting should be very helpful.

The thought which every young person should carry away from a study of this topic is the desirability of growing as Christ grew. Let us consider briefly some of the ways in which Christ developed and in which we should follow in His steps.

In Spiritual Insight

Christ grew "in wisdom." This may refer in part to the acquirement of intellectual knowledge, but we are inclined to think that it includes also the gift of spiritual discernment. The danger of the present day with many young people is that while they are growing in earthly wisdom they are gaining all too little of that wisdom from above which alone can serve to guide us safely through the journey of life.

Jesus found the source of wisdom in the Scriptures, in His contact with those about Him and in communion with His heavenly Father. So we, by the study of the Bible, by fellowship with those who are Christian and by seeking the presence of God in the Quiet Hour, may find the springs of that wisdom from above which we need to equip us for the race that we have to run.

In Physical Power

As Jesus advanced "in stature" He doubtless increased in physical strength. To perform the duties of life properly we need to have a strong, healthy constitution. We must care for our bodies as well as for our minds. There are well-meaning Christians who overlook this fact, and who seem to think that piety and anemia are practically synonymous terms. This is a great mistake. Christianity is virile, and the more robust we are physically the more valuable the service that we can render to our Lord and King.

In Favor with God and Men

It seems but natural that Christ should grow in favor with God. And yet should it not be natural for us, who are children of God also to grow in favor with our heavenly Father?

Jesus grew in favor with God because of His essential oneness with the Father. And the more closely we are united to God by faith in Christ, the more we shall grow in favor with Him.

Jesus grew in favor with men because of the perfection of His character. He was winsome; He was true; He was kind; He was generous; He was unselfish; He was merciful; He was self-sacrificing. In short, He was perfect in every attribute of character.

If we would grow in favor with our fellowmen, we must seek the same perfection of character that was exemplified in Christ. "Be ye perfect" was His bidding to His disciples. Because perfection seems unattainable in this present life, let us not be discouraged, but let us remember that the more nearly we approach to the character of Jesus, the more nearly do we approximate to His ideal of character.

In Efficiency for Service

Let us aim to grow in efficiency for service. Ministry for others was the goal which Christ set before Himself, and in which He grew increasingly effective until he reached the consummation of His ideal in His death on the Cross.

MAY 27.

Financing the Kingdom

Luke 19:11-26.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M. May 21. God's gold. Ps. 50:1-15.
T. May 22. God's tenth. Mal. 3:7-18.
W. May 23. Systematic giving. I Cor. 16:1-9.
T. May 24. Proportionate giving. 2 Cor. 8:7-15.
F. May 25. Liberal giving. 2 Cor. 8:1-6.
S. May 26. Cheerful giving. 2 Cor. 9:1-15.

Financing the Kingdom is a vital matter for every Christian to consider. A nation cannot prosper if it is not upon a sound financial basis. We cannot expect the Kingdom of God to progress if the proper financial support is not given by those who are its citizens.

The Jewish Law

In the Old Dispensation a standard of giving was established for the chosen people of God. That standard is known as the tithe. Under this requirement the Israelites were expected to give to God one-tenth of the produce of their fields, trees, flocks, and herds. This was devoted to the maintenance of the Levites in their respective cities. But this did not fulfill all the obligations of a pious Jew, for a second tithe seems to have been required for the maintenance of the temple, and in addition gifts were required for the support of the poor.

These requirements do not seem to have been found burdensome by those who were religiously inclined, and the divine blessing followed those who were faithful in their tithing. There were many, however, who disregarded this obligation, and one of the reproaches uttered by the prophet Malachi was directed at those who had failed to render the whole tithe.

The Christian Ideal

When we come to the New Dispensation we find no specific commands laid upon Christians in regard to the practice of tithing. By implication, however, this practice is commended, and the whole subject of giving receives strong and repeated emphasis.

In his Epistles the Apostle Paul teaches the duty of systematic, proportionate, liberal and cheerful giving, and this constitutes the Christian ideal, which every follower of Christ should adopt.

The Tenth Legion

In recent years a strong movement has been inaugurated, which seeks to urge upon Christians the duty and privilege of giving at least one-tenth of their income for the Lord's work. This is one of the offshoots of the Christian Endeavor Movement and is known as the Tenth Legion. Full particulars concerning this admirable movement may be secured from the United Society of Christian Endeavor, Boston, Mass.

Another enrollment of tithe givers has been made by the Layman Company under the title of the America Tithers Union, and all those who desire to be enrolled on that list and to receive the Certificate of Membership offered should address the Layman Company, No. 143 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

The Call for Giving

Never before in the world's history has there been such a loud call for giving as at the present time. The appeal for beneficence is universal and the channels of benevolence are practically unlimited.

With such a multiplicity of demands the need for wise discrimination is urgent and the obligation to consecrated liberality is imperative.

As the needs are world-wide so should our gifts be world-wide in their scope. We should give not only to our own local church but to the boards and societies which are carrying out the Master's command to evangelize the world. Furthermore we should aim to help all branches of the missionary enterprise, not forgetting the department of Christian Literature, which has in it the promise of the largest possible influence in hastening the coming of the Kingdom of God.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS

The Tree Choir

BY MINNIE LEONA UPTON.

*I know a vested choir
Who sing at early dawn,
When dewdrops shine and sparkle
On field and wood and lawn;
They're always fresh and spotless,
And shine with daintiness,
Although they rise so early,
With little time to dress.*

*And then again at twilight,
When all the world is still,
Their music echoes sweetly
From orchard, grove, and hill;
A song of true thanksgiving
They jubilantly sing,
And then each little singer
Tucks head 'neath downy wing.*

The May Day Fairies.

BY A. MARIA CRAWFORD.

TO-MORROW is May Day," said Miss Freeman to the girls in her class, "and I hope that you will remember to send these lovely baskets you have made here to people who have very little to cheer them. Unselfishness is the keynote of real happiness."

Several of the girls exchanged glances meaningly. Then Mary Elizabeth said, "Why Miss Freeman, I want to return some social favors with my baskets. There is Mrs. Crockett, who is always having parties and inviting me! I simply owe her one of these baskets."

"You can do as you please about it, Mary Elizabeth," said the pleasant young teacher, "but Mrs. Crockett has everything that money can buy and there are so many lonely, poor people to whom a May basket of bright flowers would mean so very much. Think it over, girls!" she admonished as they gathered up their baskets to leave.

"I planned to give this elegant cream basket filled with lovely jonquils to Ted Rae's mother," declared Marjorie O'Neil.

"Oh, ho," laughed the girls, "so it's Ted Rae this week, is it?"

"I think that you are all horrid." Marjorie tossed her black curls and pretended to be very angry, but she was secretly pleased at the teasing. "You know that Ted has taken me to several parties lately and his people are rich and go in the best society, so I think, in view of the fact that I will soon be a young lady, it is good policy to be nice to them."

"So do I," said Mary Elizabeth, sympathetically. "Now Miss Freeman has just spoiled everything with her old-fashioned ideas of giving to those who have little of this world's goods," she mimicked.

"They may be old-fashioned ideas, but they are lovely and I am going to try to carry them out to the letter," said little Eleanor Monroe. "My prettiest basket, this pale green one, I am going to fill with arbutus and give it to mother. The other baskets I am going to send to mother's poorest friends."

"Where are you going to get the arbutus?"

"Brother Tom has gone to the ridge for it. You know there is always so much of it up there," answered Eleanor.

"Haven't you any other flowers to put in your baskets? I planted bowls of bulbs weeks ago and they are blooming wonderfully just in time," said Marjorie.

"No. I counted on the arbutus blooming in time." Eleanor smiled very bravely although her lips were trembling. Surely the girls knew that she had not been able to afford even a few bulbs after her mother's hospital bill had been paid.

"What will you do if the arbutus hasn't bloomed yet?" asked Marjorie O'Neil, voicing the fear that had been growing in Eleanor's heart.

"I—I don't know." When they reached the little gray cottage where she lived, Eleanor said goodbye to the girls and hurried around to the side door to keep her mother from seeing the lovely green basket intended for her.

It was when she was showing the other baskets she had made that the doorbell rang and she ran to answer it. Mrs. Crockett's automobile waited at the curb and that lady herself, resplendent in a beautiful gray silk dress, stood on the porch.

"How do you do?" she said. "Are you Eleanor Monroe?"

"Yes, ma'am. Will you come in?" Eleanor managed to stammer.

"They are exquisite, just what I want. I will give you two dollars apiece for them. But where is the pale green one? Miss Freeman spoke of it especially. She said it was worth at least three dollars and a half. I have some pale pink tulips in bloom and I want the green basket for them."

Eleanor's face was very red as she stood there wondering what to say. Her mother was looking at her.

"Where is it, daughter?" she asked. Eleanor thought of three dollars and a half and what a substantial gift it would buy for mother. Something in her eyes made her mother understand.

"Dear, you have hidden that basket to give it to me, haven't you?"

"Mother, dear, I wanted you to find it to-morrow, hanging on our door. I meant to fill it with arbutus, if Tom finds any on the ridge."

to the cottage and generously offered some of their flowers, provided Tom had not found the arbutus in bloom. Mrs. Monroe told them the story of Eleanor's baskets and more than one of those girls turned away to hide the tears that suddenly moistened their eyelids.

"Tom didn't find any arbutus but he brought a handful of blue-bells, and I am sure that Eleanor intends to make a little basket for them to-night," Mrs. Monroe explained.

Sure enough, Eleanor slipped away to her room that evening after the supper dishes had been washed and with her apron full of materials, she set to work to weave a tiny basket to hold the blue-bells. She waked up early the next morning, long before sunrise and opening the front door softly, she hung her little gift of love on the door knob outside. An hour later, when her mother opened the door, a wealth of lovely baskets met their eyes and in the center stood Eleanor's own pale green basket filled with hot house tulips.

"Why, mother, who sent all these beautiful baskets of flowers?" she cried happily, lovingly touching the basket she had fashioned for her mother.

"The fairies," answered her mother, just as elated as Eleanor herself. But in their hearts both of them knew that Mrs. Crockett and Eleanor's school-mates had masqueraded as fairies early in the morning on that lovely May Day.

Won by Song

Celestina is a little girl about eight years old, who lives in Brazil. Near the place where she lives is a "Bible Church," as the Protestant churches are called in Brazil. Celestina was attracted by the singing she heard in this church; it sounded quite wonderful to her and she insisted upon going in to listen. Her mother and grandmother very strongly objected to their little girl going into a Protestant church. But Celestina's father was a free thinker and it made little difference to him what kind of religious meetings his daughter attended. So her humored her, and against the will of mother and grandmother, she went to the meeting.

The music particularly attracted her, and she went again, this time staying for Sunday-school, which greatly interested her.

It was not long after Celestina started to go to Sunday-school that she desired to confess Christ as her Saviour and unite with the church. She succeeded in obtaining consent from her father to do this, although her mother was very unwilling. She soon began bringing back into the home some of the things she found in the Bible church. One thing she brought home was her Bible. She repeated the lessons that were taught her, and sang the beloved hymns that she had learned.

Her father saw that some great blessing had come into his little girl's life, and after a time he went to the meeting to see what it was that she had found. He found himself listening eagerly to the Word, then this father who professed no religious belief took heed to what he heard,—and he followed Christ.

It was not long before Celestina's mother and her grandmother went to the wonderful church, and they, too, were converted, and the rest of the family as well. And happy little Celestina's father is now an officer in that church.—SUNDAY SCHOOL TIMES.

Share Your Good Things

Happiness is a cloak that is always big enough to stretch and cover two. Be sure you find some one to "go halves with", no matter what the nice thing is that happens to you. A little boy came into the house one day with a very sober face. He wanted a playmate. "All the nice games are made for two—or a lot," he said. "Even candy doesn't taste good without some one to divide it with and help you eat it!"

CHERRY BLOSSOMS

"Miss Freeman has just told me of the lovely baskets that you made in her class-room and I am wondering if you will be willing to sell them to me?"

Sell her lovely baskets, the ones she had made to send to mother's poorest friends? Sacrifice all the pleasure she had expected in doing something that would make mother happy? Then she thought of her mother's face that morning when she had said, "Daughter dear, I wish that I could buy new shoes for you and for Tom. The ones you are wearing are worn almost through to the ground. Perhaps, in a few weeks, we can manage it. If I could only have stayed well so that we would not have had those awful hospital bills!"

Eleanor decided quickly. "Yes, ma'am. Will you come in and look at them?"

She shyly introduced her mother, then presented her baskets for Mrs. Crockett's inspection.

"Well," said Mrs. Crockett, "that's all right, Eleanor, and quite the sweetest thing I have heard of a young girl doing in a long time. I'll try to buy a green one at the florist's."

"I will sell mine to you and give the money to mother," cried Eleanor, and ran to get the basket from the place where she had hidden it.

Mrs. Monroe touched it lovingly, perhaps enviously, for had not Eleanor's slim young fingers fashioned it in love for her? Mrs. Crockett's eyes were full of tears as she patted Eleanor on the shoulder and wished her a happy, happy May Day. Then she put a roll of bills in her hand and Eleanor immediately transferred the money to her mother. There was enough for shoes for herself and for Tom and five whole dollars for mother to spend as she pleased.

After Eleanor had taken her brother to town to select new shoes that afternoon, the girls in her class went around

Our Fireside

"A Tribute to Mother"

By Grace Boteler Sanders

FOR the first time since she had received it, Anna Knox consulted the Women's Club program. It was a neat, little affair printed in black and gold on deckle-edged lavender paper and tied with a silken cord of deep heliotrope. The scent of heliotrope lingered. The sweet, subtle fragrance which came stealing to her nostrils brought back the remembrance of one snowy winter's day when the Club Secretary laid the card in her lap and placed her hand upon her shoulder.

"Mrs. Knox, won't you come?" The appeal flashed forth by the dark eyes was so intense, that Anna Knox, the woman of a thousand and one social duties, deliberated. When the secretary continued, "You can't imagine what it would mean to us to have you at even one meeting," Anna Knox promised to be present.

But that was in winter-time, snowy and cold. Mrs. Knox shuddered at the very thought of that winter, the first which she had not spent in Florida since her marriage. To drive away the troublesome memories, she turned her gaze to the window to look at the laughing, pulsating, joyous eyes of the springtime which had spread its loveliness before her window like a great panorama.

Smiling eyes peeped from the buds of the nearest peach tree. Wizen little faces with leering brown eyes peered from those blossoms which had blown and were about to die. Flirting, nodding, cunning eyes laughed from the maple leaves, shaking out their glorious skirts of green and gold. It was the month of May and her promise to attend the club had not as yet been kept. Yesterday the secretary reminded her.

She had been so busy. Anna Knox thrust her feet into her slippers and glided noiselessly across to the window to throw herself in a reclining chair, where the brilliant moonlight threw fantastic shadows upon the letters of black and gold which set forth the first number on the program for the May day meeting.

"Response to Roll Call—A Tribute to Mother from Your Favorite Author." Why did her heart bound so strangely? Why did her hand seek her heaving breast? She had worried because she had not kept her promise to the club, but what about her promise to her mother?

She threw off the query with a forced laugh. How could the busy wife of a professor, the mother of five children, the mistress of social affairs and a leader in political economies and reforms of all kinds, do everything? Memory reminded her that only a few real things required the attention of Anna Knox.

As the professor's wife, she must entertain and grace the college functions and aid church and school and community affairs. The prominence which she had gained as a public speaker, made her greatly in demand. She had servants, it was true, but there were many things which servants could not do. For instance they could not visit this club meeting and respond, as she must with "a tribute to mother."

Oh, if she had breath—Anna Knox here alone in her room waxed eloquent—had she ten thousand voices they could not adequately sing the praise of the mother who had sewed at night and done washing in the daytime so that she might keep her only daughter in school. Of course she should have visited mother oftener—but she was so busy. Yet for once this excuse seemed pitifully tame. She felt that she must go to see her at once. And now, all unconsciously, she fell into a trance, in which the real and the unreal were inextricably blended. Driven by an impelling force, she exchanged her lounging robe for a street costume and with bag and purse hurried out into the silence of the night. At the station she boarded the train for her home town and lay back in her seat absorbed in deep thought. Just as the clocks were striking nine, the train stopped at the depot, from which every morning in her girlhood days she had taken the train to the city where she had secured her education and had found her husband, her children, her wealth, her social position and everything she held dear.

Down the street she hurried past half a hundred chimneys from which the smoke of the morning fires was lazily rising. Snow was heaped high in the hollows and on many a walk, and the disgust which some city dwellers feel for small towns, surged up in the breast of Anna Knox. How could they bear it?

As she passed an awkward lad with his push cart filled with mail sacks, she sarcastically compared them with the shining auto and uniformed driver that yesterday stopped at her door. But when she reached the foot of the hill on which stood her mother's little green house, she stopped aghast at the crowd which had gathered about the door. She pushed past them and across the threshhold. Then a neighbor told her quietly that mother was dead!

Anna Knox sank down in the faded old Morris chair, where so many times she had learned her lessons, and tried to realize what had happened. Dead and alone! Ah, at that moment, she remembered the neglect she had displayed during the hours, days and weeks when she had not written or called or visited.

There as she sat in the quiet room not far from the silent figure of her departed mother magical pictures floated across the screen of her mind. There was a certain Thanksgiving day which she had promised to spend at home. She had not known that her mother cared so much, but this picture showed a little woman trotting happily about, mixing, baking, bending over buckets and crocks and pans that she might make "gran-ma's cookies which the dear children loved," and mince pies and twisted crullers. Mother was very tired when she stood smilingly inspecting the long rows spread out on the pantry shelf, so tired that she could not kneel to say her prayers, but lay in bed plaintively murmuring: "Excuse me Lord, because of my poor old knees." She could not sleep well. She was too tired and rose before dawn to set the big table with the best linen and company dishes and silver and glass and some flowers which the minister had sent. She was stripping the old lean purse of her whole month's allowance and telling herself that she'd get along somehow when Anna Knox looked at the feast.

The little house was set in perfect order, the chicken done to a turn, the snow-drift potatoes and the scalloped oysters all ready with crispy celery and crimson cranberries for the coming of the noon train. But when the chicken had dried to wisps and the oysters and potatoes were ruined, and the little woman had trotted out into the street a dozen times to stand with her hand over her eyes to watch the holiday crowd which poured from every train, and when at last she saw there was no chance of her daughter's coming, she fled to the house and this very chair in which Anna Knox was now seeing dreams and sobbed until her troublesome heart gave warning.

And then there was Christmas. Anna had promised to be home, but when, at the last minute, the governor asked her as an especial favor to him, to speak at the mother's meeting and afterward to banquet with the crowd, Anna Knox had tucked a shining gift into a box, and sent it in lieu of herself. She saw now her mother's trembling fingers untying the cords which bound that box. She saw her take the gold piece from the blue cotton bed and toss it into the corner with unveiled wrath. Anna Knox hadn't meant it for an insult, this bestowing of something which had not cost her an effort nor a sacrifice. But she knew now that she had wounded mother sorely by giving gold and not self on Christmas day.

"A Tribute to Mother" would be a mockery from such as her, society leader, church member and reformer though she was. She had neglected the one who had borne and molded her. What punishment was enough? She went dazedly through the trials, the funeral, the falling of clods upon a coffin lid, and thought of a certain time set for mother's visit, when she proposed a postponement, because she said she feared the children's noise would worry grandmother. In reality, it had been because the children were entertaining fashionable company and did not wish to be bothered.

At that last farewell, the daughter took the work-hardened hand in her soft, white palm, and dropped kisses and tributes which would have brought exquisite joy to the recipient a few days before. Mother did not answer. It was too late. In overhauling the house and getting ready for the sale, Anna Knox found in an old bureau her first shoe, the grandson's first letter, Katherine's post card book and many things which grandmother had treasured. The auctioneer came and laid sacrilegious hands on the Morris chair which had once been a place of prayer. And then came that "going-going-gone," which seemed the end of every homely joy.

Speedy, Sturdy Bikes

Unquestionably worth one-third to one-half more. A swift, sturdy bicycle—sold on a basis of Satisfaction Guaranteed or Money Back. Carefully constructed of heavy gauge, seamless steel tubing—triple truss forks, arch crown design. Beautifully enameled and striped.

The New Service

Equipped with genuine Majestic, heavily studded, anti-skid, puncture-proof tires—motorcycle type.

$19⁹⁵ Up

Get This Beautiful Shipped From Chicago

Bicycle Book—FREE

Filled from cover to cover with wonderful illustrations in colors, of low-priced, high-grade bicycles. Address house nearest you.

Montgomery Ward & Co. Dept. G154
New York, Chicago, Kansas City, Ft. Worth, Portland, Ore.

DON'T decide on the new hymn-book for your Church or Sunday School until you have seen

HALLOWED HYMNS

NEW AND OLD
Edited by IRA ALLAN SANKEY
Son of the famous Singing-Evangelist
Ira D. Sankey

OVER 550,000
COPIES ALREADY SOLD
Responsive Scripture Readings
No Trashy Words No Jingly Music

Price $25.00 per 100 not prepaid
35 cents per copy by mail
Examine a copy and prove its value in your work. (Returnable if desired.)

The Biglow & Main Co., New York Chicago

FREE BILLY SUNDAY ON BOOZE

Stirring Sensational Inspiring
Send us your name and those of two others who would be interested in distributing his message and we will send you a copy free. Big terms to representatives. Write for $100.00 bonus offer.

International Bible Press, Dept. BD, Philadelphia

A tribute to mother? She would be glad now, if she could lighten labor and shower gifts upon her who deserved everything. But it was too late. With a moan she sank to her knees on the threshold of her old home and then—opened her eyes in her luxurious room lighted by moonlight and made sweet by the breathing of the children in the adjoining room. In the room below, she heard the tread of her husband. She dashed away her tears, but it was not until she caught up the heliotrope program which lay on the floor that Anna Knox fully realized that the words of the black and gold announcement were a reality and the other experience a dream.

It was not December, cold and snowy, a season of open graves and dead hopes. It was May, joyous, blossoming spring when every bud and blossoming thing were pulsating with life. Neither was mother dead, but probably sleeping in the green little house. Mother should have her tribute, and have it now.

Pink-shod feet slid quickly down the stairs and into the study that two arms might clasp her husband's neck as a voice, between sobs, told the story, ending with the words, "I didn't mean to be thoughtless, but I'm going right away, Bob, to tell her. Will you take me to the station now?" The professor nodded. "And will you pray—pray that I won't find it so?"

"I will," promised the professor gravely.

Anna Knox reached the railroad depot in the old home town as the birds twittered in the apple trees against a rosy sky. Oh, how beautiful were the blossoming lawns and the air of homely comfort on the streets through which she passed! At the foot of the hill, her heart thumping with fear, she paused to look up at the little green house which sat so quietly against the sky. There was no crowd, no sign of life, except an exquisitely thin line of smoke which was curling slowly upward from the chimney.

Over the path worn by her childish feet, Anna hurried and saw through the

THOUSANDS UPON THOUSANDS OF HEALTHY BOYS & GIRLS EAT
Grape-Nuts
AND CREAM EVERY MORNING BECAUSE
WISE MOTHERS KNOW
"There's a Reason"

kitchen window a white head bowed over a plate and cup and saucer. She heard a murmured name—it was her own—and rushed to clasp her beloved mother to her heart.

"I've come for breakfast, mother; what have you?" she cried.

The mother held up her hands in delight. "You poor child, did you stay up all night on that old train to come to visit your poor old homely mother?" she asked reproachfully.

"You're not a homely mother. You're a pretty one," laughed happy Anna Knox, "and I've come to take you for a long, long visit."

The little mother hung back. "I've no clothes fine enough for such fashionable folk," she demurred.

"As if that were any excuse in these days of ready-mades," laughed the daughter. "Of course you'll go."

On the happiness of that trip on the train, followed by the shopping excursions, the concerts, the music and the flowers! But the happiest time of all was a guest day at the Women's Club when the two joined a company of women who carried heliotrope programs to a fine house on the hill which was appropriately decorated for Mother's Day. There a happy party gathered about a little woman in satin with real lace at neck and wrists, a smiling little woman, who listened with glowing face when her daughter, responded to Roll Call—when queenly Anna Knox told, word for word, this story of her dream vision.

Not a woman thought of weariness although the telling of the story took almost an hour. Many sobbed and resolved mentally that they would be more thoughtful; but it was the young secretary to whom Anna Knox turned with her humble confession.

"My dear, had it not been for you I might not have enjoyed these days with mother nor the anticipation of happier future hours, and so I have decided, if the society will permit, to become an active instead of an honorary member, so that I may help all I can."

And then how they crowded about her and the little mother, and every one declared that of all the responses to the roll call, that of Anna Knox was the very best.

Little Things.

BY MRS. A. R. PERHAM.

*Only a little post card,
With loving words of cheer,
Made glad a heart so lonely
And dried the falling tear.
It said, "I'm thinking of you,
Though I am far away;
I cannot come to see you,
So send this card to-day."*

*Only a smile but it gladdened
A little child one day;
Only a tract but it led a soul
To choose the better way.
A little deed of kindness
Done unto one in need,
A little burden lifted
Is Christlike work indeed.*

*Then let us scatter sunshine
In loving deeds each day,
E'en little things may gladden
Some heart upon the way.
We know 'tis not expected
Of all great things to do,
But simply in His service
Faithful to be and true.*

Help in Temptation

An English naval officer told a grateful story of the way he was helped and saved from dishonor in his first experience in battle. He was a midshipman, fourteen years old. The volleys of the enemy's musketry so terrified him that he almost fainted. The officer over him saw his state and came close beside him, keeping his own face toward the enemy, and held the midshipman's hand, saying in a calm, quiet, affectionate way: "Courage, my boy. You will recover in a minute or two. I was just so when I went into my first battle." The young man said afterwards that it was as if an angel had come to him and put new strength into him. The whole burden of his agony of fear was gone, and from that moment he was as brave as the oldest of the men. If the officer had dealt sternly with the midshipman, he might have driven him to cowardly failure. His kindly sympathy with him dispelled all fear, put courage into his heart, and made him brave for battle.

It was thus that Christ is touched with a feeling of our infirmity when, assailed by sudden temptation, we quail and are afraid. He comes up close beside us and says: "I understand. I met a temptation just like yours that tried me very sorely. I felt the same dread you feel. I suffered bitterly that day. I remember it. Be brave and strong and your fear will vanish and you will be victorious." Then He takes our hand, and the thrill of His sympathy and of His strength comes into our heart, dispelling all fear.—SELECTED.

A Famous Picture

"How long did it take you to paint that picture?" an artist was asked when his greatest painting was exhibited.

"Twenty years," was his reply. The answer astonished the questioner, but it did not surprise any other artist. The painting, like other famous pictures, had grown from a sketch into its present perfect form. It had long been before the painter's mind, and its meaning had been worked out into every detail. The paint had actually been put on the canvas in a year or two; but that was only a fraction of the time involved in making the picture what it was.

Meaning makes a life, just as it makes a picture. What is in a man's heart works out in his character, year after year. The Bible speaks continually of a man's heart, because the heart is where the first designs of living are formed. When a man means with all his heart to be a Christian, he has begun to paint in his life a picture of Christ that all the world shall see some day.

From a Subscriber

One of our valued subscribers in Newark, Ohio, Mrs. Baker, when renewing her subscription for the current year, wrote:

"I have learned to love the AMERICAN MESSENGER, and cannot express to you the blessing it has been to my life."

"THE COMING OF THE LORD DRAWETH NIGH"

The Scriptures Examined on the length of The TIMES of the GENTILES, When They began Definitely Established. When they will close demonstrated, subject to un-inspired History and Chronology.

The Rapture and the Revelation demonstrated to occur at the Feast of Trumpets, which is the Jewish New Year's Day. The Year-Day Principle God Given. The Prophecy of the Seventy Weeks proved to be: a Year-Day period. Light on these questions promised at "the time of the end." 64 Pages, Sixth Edition, Enlarged with Appendices and Extracts from Letters 125th Thousand. Price: Postage paid, 5c each; 30c. doz.; $2 per hundred. This pamphlet is unique in its teachings, showing the proximity of the Coming of the Lord.

We Believe there is no Truth More Important for the World at This Time.

ADDRESS C. J. BAKER

621 Wyandotte Street

KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI, U. S. A.

Under the Management of
LEON D. BROOKS
Proprietor

Your patronage is not only sought, but your comfort and enjoyment after your arrival, is the main object of the management. Wire, phone or write, your inquiry will be given every consideration.

Rooms With or Without Private Baths

American Plan

Open wood fire-place in the library, which is furnished with large easy chairs and every convenience of the home.

PINE BLUFF INN, POINT PLEASANT, NEW JERSEY

Right in the heart of the famous Pine Belt of Jersey. Easy walking distance of the ocean, on the banks of the beautiful Manasquan River, one of the most picturesque spots on the Jersey Coast

Let us send you one of our folders telling more about it.

GOLF on our own private 9 hole course.
TENNIS: Three of the finest tennis courts in New Jersey.
CANOEING and SAILING on the beautiful Manasquan River.
BATHING: One of the best bathing beaches along the coast.

FISHING and CRABBING.

MOTORING: The roads for miles in all directions are unsurpassed. Eight miles from Asbury Park. Hotel Garage.

BARNEGAT BAY. the mecca of fishing grounds, one mile from the hotel.

An Easy Way to Secure an Excellent Fountain Pen

A Fountain Pen is always a necessity and here is an opportunity of securing a good one with only a little effort (see offer below).

The publishers of the AMERICAN MESSENGER are very desirous of increasing the circulation of this admirable publication, and it is for that purpose in view, we are offering this splendid Fountain Pen. The Pen is known as the Commercial Fountain Pen.

The pen is six and one half inches long, and suitable for either lady or gentleman, and fully guaranteed. In the construction of this pen only the best of materials are used. The rubber parts are hand-turned Para rubber. The gold nib is 14 karat solid gold tipped with the best grade of hard iridium.

OFFER No. 1 We will send one of these fountain pens absolutely free to any one who sends us three new yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at the regular price, 50 cents each.

OFFER No. 2 We will give one fountain pen and a year's subscription to the AMERICAN MESSENGER for only $1.20.

Any of our present subscribers may take advantage of offer No. 2 by extending their subscription one year, and remitting $1.20 in payment for the same.

Our young friends will find this, a very good method of securing a Fountain Pen for themselves. Try it and see how easy it is to secure only 3 new yearly subscriptions at 50 cents each.

American Messenger, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York

Scientific facts prove the drug, caffeine, in coffee is harmful to many, while the pure food-drink—is not only free from drugs, but is economical, delicious and nourishing.

POSTUM

Made of wheat and a bit of wholesome molasses, Postum is highly recommended by physicians for those with whom coffee disagrees.

Postum is especially suitable for children.

"There's a Reason"

Sold by Grocers.

THE TREASURY

SPECIAL NOTICE

Owing to occasional losses of letters, containing money, we would request friends and donors of the American Tract Society to remit by check or Post Office Money Order, which latter can always be duplicated in case of loss.

Receipts of the American Tract Society During March, 1917

Total Donations (Including $734.87, for Special Objects) $6,710.31.

ARIZONA, $1.

Miss Hubert, $1.
CALIFORNIA, $86.50.
Oakland, Church Offering, $4.50; Santa Barbara, Church Offering, $5; Rev. Mr. Ainslie, $1; Mr. Vanderveer, $30; Rev. Mr. Babcock, for Soldier's Text Book, $5; Los Angeles, Church Collection, $10; Berkeley, Church Collection, $25; Mrs. Parker, $5; Mr. Miles, $1.

COLORADO, $22.50.

Wray, Church Collection, $3; Denver, Church Offering, $5; Denver, Church Collection, $5; Boulder, Church Offering, $7.50; Mr. Evers, $2.

CONNECTICUT, $179.91.

Greenwich, Church Offering, $10; Mr. Hawley, for Soldier's Text Books, $5; Mrs. Taylor, $2; Mr. Morgan, $1; Mrs. Troland, $2; Mrs. Capron, $1; "A Friend," $2; Meriden, Church Offering, $5; Southport, Church Offering, $48.65; Miss Hotchkiss, $0.50; Mrs. Kelsey, $1; Mr. Estabrook, $3.76; Stamford, Church Offering, $10; Mrs. Greene, $1; Mr. White, $50; Miss Mix, $5; Mrs. Speeler, $1; Dr. Smith, $2; Mrs. Burnham, $25; Mrs. Lindsay and Mrs. Baker, $1; Mrs. Gay, $3.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, $21.

Mr. Rotheimer, $5; Miss Robertson, $5; Washington, Church Offering, $6; Mr. Baldwin, $5.

IDAHO, $2.

Mrs. Baumann, $2.

ILLINOIS, $123.25.

Rev. Mr. Barrett, $1; Mr. Sprick, $10; Elgin, Church Collection, $5; Mr. Buss, $5; Mrs. Reinebach, for Soldier's Text Book, $5; Mr. Ollendorf, $2; Du Quoin, Church Collection, $3; Freeport, Church Offering, $5; Carbondale, Church Collection, $5; Maywood, Church Collection, $10; Alton, Church Offering, $5; Eureka, Church Offering, $0.40; Lawrenceville, Church Collection, $2; Chicago, Church Offering, $4.85; Mr. Blosser, $1; Rev. Mr. Northrup, $1; Rev. Mr. Britt, $5; Philo, Church Collection, $5; Lake Forest, Church Offering, $30; Mr. Reed, $5; Towanda, Church Offering, $3; Minonk, Church Collection, $5; Miss Keith, $5.

INDIANA, $29.50.

Crown Point, Church Offering, $5; Hanover, Church Offering, $2; Richmond, Church Collection, $5; Monticello, Church Collection, $2; Vincennes, Church Collection, $5; Shelbyville, Church Collection, $2.50; Bedford, Church Offering, $5; Mr. Best, $1; South Bend, Church Collection, $2.

IOWA, $60.20.

Mr. Hardin, for Soldier's Text Books, $2; Mr. Frech, $5.20; Audubon, Church Offering, $5; Greene, Church Collection, $1; Family Penn Litterer, $5; Mr. Ramsburg, for Soldier's Text Books, $1; Oelwein, Church Collection, $2; Mrs. Pommer, $5; Nevada, Church Collection, $5; Griswold, Church Collection, $2; Miss Warner, $1; Winterset, Church Collection, for Soldier's Text Books, $5; Stacyville, Church Offering, $6; Rock Rapids, Church Collection, $15.

KANSAS, $141.60.

Mr. Lohrenz, $1.30; Mr. Todd, $1; Mr. Schwalter, $1.50; Junction City, Church Offering, $5; Mr. Epp, $20; Mr. Funk, $4.65; Miss Wiebe, for German work including Ellis Island, $100; Mr. Krebber, $2.65; Mrs. Bloecher, $0.50; Garden City, Church Collection, $5.

KENTUCKY, $6.

Miss Wynne, $1; Rev. Mr. Penneman, $5.

MAINE, $5.

Portland, Church Collection, 2; Miss Harding, $1; Mr. Marston, $1; Dea Pope, $1.

MARYLAND, $12.

Berwyn, Church Collection, $2; Baltimore, Church Offering, $10.

MASSACHUSETTS, $466.65.

"A Friend," Salem Mass., $10; Miss Horton, $1; Mr. Buclow, $1.65; Mrs. Brayton, $2; Mrs. French, $2; Mrs. Whitcomb, $2; Miss Richardson, $2; "A. W. K.," $5; Hallowbrook, Church Collection, $11; Mrs. Bessey, $1; Mrs. Rusk, $1; Mrs. Tufts, $5; Rev. Mr. Peabody, $1; Mr. Bowers, $1; Mrs. Whitehead, $25; Mr. Clark, $1; Mr. Pearson, $1; Miss Duncan, $10; Mrs. Gaylord, $5; Mr. Rich, $25; Mr. Johnson, $10; Mrs. Greenwood, $2; Capt. Hinckley, $50; Mr. Scott, $25; Rev. Mr. Piske, $50; Mr. McCully, $3; Mr. Jones, $50; Mr. Vialle, $10; "A Friend," $25; Miss Rickey, $1; Mr. Cole, $5; Mr. Conant, $2; Mr. Bull, $1; Mr. Newcomb, $1; Mrs. Moore, $5; Mr. Fletcher, $10; Mrs. Mear, $3; Miss Daniels, $5; Mrs. Dunbar, $5; "A Friend," $2; Mr. Griswold, $1. Mrs. More, $25; Mr. Tufts, $1; Mr. Gardner, $5; Mrs. Barley, $5; Mrs. Buttrick, for Soldier's Text Books, $3; Mrs. Hodgkins, $3; Mrs. Teal, $10; Dea Carleton, $5; "A Friend," $2; Mrs. Abbott, $10; Miss Clapp, $1; A. W. & W. T. Tilton, $2; Mrs. Edes, $1; Mr. Rockwood, $5; Mr. Carter, $10.

MINNESOTA, $13.

Clara City, Church Offering, $5; Bethel Deaconess Hospital, $2; Minneapolis, Church Collection, $5; Mrs. Baumberger, $1.

MICHIGAN, $44.40.

Mr. Doster, $3.40; Detroit, Church Collection, $10; Holland Church Offering, $25; Mr. & Mrs. Stulp, $3; Detroit, Church Offering, $3.

MISSISSIPPI, $150.

Miss Murray, $1; Verona, Church Offering, $2.50.

MISSOURI, $157.68.

Mrs. Hobein, $2; Mr. Busse, $0.65; St. Louis, Church Offering, $2; Family A. J. Hofer, $3; Parkville, Church Offering, $4.43; Miss Dietz, $4.60; Webb City, Church Collection, $10; St. Joseph, Church Collection, $5; Mr. Eyerly, $5; Springfield, Church Collection, $5; Brookfield, Church Offering, $5; Butler Church Collection, $5; Oregon, Church Offering, $1; Miss Boyle, $100; St. Louis, Church Collection, $3; Webster Groves, Church Offering, $2.

NEBRASKA, $68.09.

"Ungenannt," $2; Schwestern Missions-Verein der Baptist Gemeinde, $6; Mrs. Lay, $1; Mr. Baumann, $1; Mrs. Meyer, $6; Lyons, Church Offering, $6.93; Rev. Mr. Clark, $5; "A Friend," $1; Miss Hawley, $5; Miss Cooke, $5; Cedar Creek, Church Offering, $14.16; Mr. Ault, $5; Mr. Lohnes, $10.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, $7.

Mrs. Williams, for Soldier's Text Books, $1; Miss Marden, $3; Miss Wentworth, $3.

NEW JERSEY, $703.84.

Jersey City, Church Collection, $10; Mrs. Fritsche, $0.65; Mrs. Grant, $5; Millstone, Church Collection, $38.05; Mrs. Ballentine, for Soldier's Text Book, $10; Flemington, Church Offering, $5; Jersey City, Church Offering, $10.94; Elizabeth, Church Collection, $10; Camden, Church Offering, $5; Bloomfield, Church Collection, $10; Mr. Parnly, $5; Dayton, Church Collection, $5; Trenton, Church Offering, $5; Paterson Church Collection, $5; Red Bank, Church Offering, $5; "A Friend," $10; Mr. Pearson, for Soldier's Text Books, $1; Miss Halsey, $100, to constitute Rev. Dr. King a Life Director, $130; Summit, Church Collection, $5; Miss Simms, $2; Mrs. Woodruff, to constitute Miss Riddle, Ravenna, Ohio, a Life Member, $30; Wenonah, Sabbath School Collection, $5; Dr. Watson, $10; Caldwell, Church Collection, $10; Arlington Church Collection, $5; Rev. Mr. Machen, $5; Miss Duryea, $5; Williamstown, Church Collection, $5; Beverly Church Offering, $10; Clinton, Church Offering, $8.89; Newark, Church Collection, $56.80; New Brunswick, Church Offering, $8; Phillipsburg, Church Collection, $2; Wenonah, Church Offering, $10; Newark, Church Collection, $5; Morristown, Church Collection, $40.16; Miss Pfleger, $5; Trenton, Church Offering, $5; Succasunna, Church Offering, $4; Boonton, Church Collection, $2.68; Boonton, Sunday School Offering, $2.32; Perth Amboy, Church Offering, $5.84; Collingswood, Church Collection, $5; Princeton, Church Collection, $7.27; Verona, Church Collection, $1; Jersey City, Church Offering, $5; Hamilton Square, Church Collection, $5; Hanover, Church Collection, $10; New Brunswick, Church Offering, $15; South Orange, Church Offering, $27.48; Cape May, Church Collection, $3.08; Bridgeton, Church Collection, $5; Westfield, Bible School Offering, $5; Bloomfield, Church Offering, $5.91; Basking Ridge, Church Offering, $15; Audubon, Church Collection, $5; Newark, Church Collection, $5; Pennington, Church Offering, $5; East Orange, Church Offering, $45.77; Newark, Church Collection, $10; Plainfield, Church Offering, $5.

NEW YORK, $2,567.49.

New York, Church Collection, $5; New York, Church Offering, $5; Mr. Underwood, $1,000; New York City, Church Collection, $799.73; Harlem, New York, Church Offering, $25; New York City, Church Collection, $10; Mr. Nagel, for Soldier's Text Books, $1; New York City, Church Collection, $25; New York City, Church Offering, $10; Mrs. Stevens, $1; Mrs. Quick, $1; Camillus, Church Collection, $2; Mrs. Barnett, $2; Mrs. Bodelmann, $3; Miss Doscher, $3; Middletown, Church Offering, $13.47; Mrs. Staiser, $1; Mrs. Gardner, $2.75; Lancaster, Church Collection, $3; Binghamton, Sunday School Offering, $5; Mr. Murray, to constitute Miss Murray a Life Member, $30; Mr. Oliver, for Soldier's Text Books, $1; Miss Gilbert, $2; Miss Mills, $10; Mrs. Lawrence, for Soldier's Text Books, $1; Miss Tinning, $10; Mr. Tinning, $5; Miss Simkin, $1; Troy, Church Offering, $10; Brooklyn, Church Offering, $25; Mrs. Hoag, for Soldier's Text Books, $2; Mrs. Taylor, for Soldier's Text Books, $1; Miss Kyte, $2; Mr. Bettys, $1; Pleasantville, Church Offering, $5; Waterloo, Church Collection, $5; Mr. Reed, $1; Bergen, Church Offering, $4; Utica, Church Collection, $10; Mr. Johnson, for Soldier's Text Books, $25; Miss Meye, $1; Seneca Falls, Church Offering, $5; Miss Roeschly, $2.50; Penn Yan, Church Collection, $10; Mr. Crosby, $200; Mrs. Rogers, $2; Morristown, Church Offering, $5; Haverstraw, Church Offering, $5; Mr. Bowers, for Soldier's Text Books, $25; Otsego Church Collection, $2; Brooklyn, Church Collection, $12.28; Gates, Church Collection, $1; Hobart, Church Collection, $5; Hempstead, Church Collection, $15; Middletown, Church Offering, $25; Clinton, Church Offering, $5; Troy, Church Collection, $4; Iliion, Church Collection, $10; Miss Van Duzee, $1; Wyoming, Church Offering, $2; Monticello, Church Collection, $4.84; Brooklyn, Church Offering, $12; Mr. Webster, for Soldier's Text Books, $5; Brockport, Church Collection, $6.28; Dolbs Ferry, Church Offering, $8.52; Mrs. Garlock, $5; Auburn, Church Collection, $10; Welcott, Church Offering, $6; Astoria, Long Island, Church Offering, $18; Elmira, Church Offering, $4; Sodas, Church Offering, $5; Brooklyn, Church Offering, $23.12; Buffalo, Church Offering, $50; Endicott, Church Offering, $2; Mrs. White, $1.

NORTH CAROLINA, $1.

Mrs. Savage, for Soldier's Text Books, $1.

NORTH DAKOTA, $5.

Towner, Church Offering, $5.

OHIO, $700.07.

Cincinnati, Church Collection, $10; Huntsville, Church Offering, $1; Mrs. Baker, $7; Cleveland, Church Offering, $10; Mrs. Dunlap, $1.50; Toledo, Church Offering, $10; Bradford, Church Collection, $1; Madisonville, Church Collection, $5; Cincinnati, Church Offering, $10; Mr. McCollor, for Soldier's Text Books, $1; Peuberville, Church Offering, $3; Cleveland, Church Offering, $5; Troy, Church Offering, $5; Bridgeport, Church Offering, $10; Nello, Church Collection, $2; Mrs. Zuchelmeyer, $0.30; Middleport, Church Offering, $3; Mrs. Richard, $1; Chillicothe, Church Offering, $8; Bucyrus, Church Offering, $7.50; Mr. Settlage, for Soldier's Text Books, $5; Mr. Wick, $500; Cadiz, Church Offering, $8; Cincinnati, Church Collection, $10; Cincinnati, Church Offering, $5; Mrs. Burke, $15; East Liverpool, Church Offering, $0.68; Maysville, Church Offering, $2; Newark, Church Collection, $18; Norwood, Church Collection, $5.20; Dr. Gotwald, $5; Springfield, Church Offering, $2.04; Upper Sandusky, Church Collection, $3; Wooster, Church Collection, $16.35; Youngstown, Church Offering, $3.50.

OKLAHOMA, $7.50.

Blackwell, Church Offering, $5; Muskogee, Church Collection, $2.50.

OREGON, $6.70.

Mrs. Sneed, $0.70; Mrs. Byers, $1; Mr. Voorhies, $5.

PENNSYLVANIA, $1,151.50.

Mrs. Grauer, $0.65; New Park, Sunday School Collection, $8.29; Mrs. Semple, $5; Mr. Hoover, $2; Mr. Miller, for Soldier's Text Books, $5; Beaver Falls, Church Offering, $5; Powell Knitting Co., $5; Millburg, Church Collection, $10; Philadelphia, Church Offering, $10; Newtown, Church Collection, $5; Mr. Stewart, $100; Mr. Abbot, $1; Mr. Schadt, $5; Mrs. Blight, for Soldier's Text Books, $1; Vanport, Church Offering, $2; Rev. Mr. Webster, $5; New Castle, Church Offering, $5; Greenville, Church Offering, $10; Carlisle, Church Collection, $20; Mrs. Burns, $2; Philadelphia, Church Offering, $15; Scranton, Church Offering, $10; Chester, Church Collection, $3; Weatherby, Church Offering, $1; "In His Name," for Colportage in the West, $5; Narberth, Church Collection, $8.28; Philadelphia, Church Offering, $25; New Alexandria, Church Offering, $5; Natrona, Church Offering, $5; Johnsonburg, Church Offering, $2; Wilcox, Church Offering, $1; Miss Rebbman, $1; Mrs. Scharph, $0.30; New Brighton, Church Offering, $10; Franklin, Church Offering, $3; Wilkinsburg, Church Collection, $15.70; Mr. Crutchfield, $5; Mrs. Reynolds, $5; Mr. Warner, for Soldier's Text Books, $1; State College, Church Collection, $9.60; Rev. Mr. Ferry, for Soldier's Text Books, $10; Quarryville, Church Collection, $5; Mr. Gearhart, for Soldier's Text Books, $1; Erie, Church Offering, $2; Paxtang, Church Collection, $5; Shamokin, Church Collection, $10; Vandergrift, Church Offering, $18; Buffalo, Church Collection, $5; North Girard, Church Offering, $5; East Brady, Church Offering, $1; Steelton, Church Offering, $2; Ansonville, Sabbath School Collection, $2; Mahoningtown, Church Offering, $5; Sayre, Church Collection $5; Jamestown, Church Offering, $5; Greencastle, Church Offering, $5.40; Falls Creek, Church Offering, $5; Mr. Fleming, $5; Philadelphia, Church Collection, $5; Pittsburg, Church Collection, $6.70; Mr. Barnett, $10; Germantown, Church Offering, $25; Franklin, Church Offering, $8.48; McKeesport, Church Collection, $10; Mrs. Wilharm, $1; Easton, Church Collection, $2; Pittsburgh, Church Offering, $10; Monongahela, Church Offering, $10; Carbondale, Church Collection, $30; Philadelphia, Church Collection, $10; Volant, Church Offering, $2; Bellevue, Church Offering, $25; Coraopolis, Church Collection, $8.71; Erie Church Collection, $20; Homestead, Church Offering, $10; McKees Rocks, Church Collection, $1; New Wilmington, Church Collection, $5; Oil City, Church Collection, $10; Mr. Armstrong, $1; Dr. Arthur, $5; Mr. Clapp, $1; Miss Dalzell, $5; Mr. Dain, $5; Messrs. P. Duff & Sons, $5; Mr. Follansbee, $25; Pittsburg, Church Offering, $10; Pittsburgh Church Collection, $12.91; Mr. Gillespie, $1; Mr. Kay, $5; Mr. Lazear, $5; Mr. Lockhart, $100; Mr. McKnight, $5; Mr. Magee, $5; Mr. Morrison, $5; Mr. Neely, $5; Mr. Orr, to constitute himself a Life Director, $100; Mr. Park, $20; Mr. Pears, $5; Mr. Patterson, $10; Mr. Phillips, $3; Mr. Ralph, $1; Mr. Rennie, $3; Pittsburgh, Church Collection, $10; Pittsburgh, Church Offering, $100; Mr. Torrance, $25; Dr. Wright, $5; Uniontown, Church Collection, $15; Wilkinsburg, Church Offering, $5.48.

RHODE ISLAND, $32.

Mr. Johnson, for Soldier's Text Books, $10; "A Fellow Christian," $2; Mr. Wells, $10; Providence, Sunday School Collection, $5; Mr. Hunt, $5.

SOUTH CAROLINA, $1.

Mrs. Prince, for Soldier's Text Book, $1.

SOUTH DAKOTA, $4.35.

Mr. Ohling, $0.65; Mrs. Janssen, $3.70.

TENNESSEE, $4.

Harriman, Church Collection, $2; Miss Chamberlin, $2.

UTAH, $3.

Mr. Pratt, $3.

VERMONT, $2.

Mrs. Gillilan, $2.

VIRGINIA, $12.

Mr. Coybill, for Soldier's Text Books, $2; Mr. Taylor, for Soldier's Text Books, $10.

WISCONSIN, $18.30.

Rev. Mr. Kempf, $2; Frau Emelia Graf, $1; Mr. Walenta and family, $2.50; Rev. Mr. Zeh, $0.65; Reedsburg, Church Offering, $2.50; Mrs. Freitag, $5; Ungenannt, $2.65; Milwaukee, Church Collection, $2.

FOREIGN, $39.78.

Central America, Miss Garcia, $0.25. Canada, "Ungenannt Canada," $9.53. Hawaii, Miss Atherton, to constitute herself a Life Member, $30.

LEGACIES, $902.60.

Emsworth, Pa., Estate of McAllister Dunlap, $402.60. Ionia, Mich., Estate of Ira F. Le Valley, $500.

INCOME FROM TRUST FUNDS, $1,540.00.
Income for Missionary work, $1,477.50.
Income for Annuitants, $62.50.

Form of Bequest

I GIVE and bequeath to the "AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY," instituted in the City of New York, May, 1825, the sum of dollars to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said Society.

Three witnesses should state that the testator declares this to be his last will and testament, and that they signed at his request, and in his presence and the presence of each other.

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

TERMS: Subscription price, 50 cts. a year, payable in advance. In clubs of five or more, 30 cts. each. Club subscriptions mailed to separate addresses, if desired. Postage on foreign subscription, 24 cents additional. Canadian subscription, 12 cents additional. Single copies, 5 cents each.

On account of the additional charge which is made by the New York Post Office for mailing to subscribers in New York and Bronx Counties (Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx), no club rates, cash commissions or premiums will be given for subscriptions that must be sent to persons residing in those Counties. Each subscription in New York or Bronx County must be at the rate of 50 cents net.

Remit by Express, Money Order, Draft, Post Office Order or Registered Letter. For very small amounts, postage stamps may be sent at the risk of the sender.

RENEWALS: The date opposite your name shows to what time the subscription has been paid, and a change in the date is the receipt for renewal.

CHANGES: When sending change of address, be sure to send the old address as well as the new one.

OUR ADVERTISERS: We believe that all the advertisements in this paper are from responsible advertisers, and it is our intention to admit only such to our columns. Should, however, any of our subscribers find that any advertiser does not live up to his agreements, we would consider it a favor if they will inform us, and we will at any time give prompt attention to any complaint.

We do not, of course, guarantee that all persons will take the same point of view with the advertisers, and it must be borne in mind that the claims and statements made by advertisers are their assertions, and not ours.

Our readers will confer a favor upon advertisers and also upon us if they will mention the American Messenger when answering advertisements.

FIELD SECRETARIES AND COLPORTAGE SUPERINTENDENTS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.

Rev. Isaac Pierson, Field Secretary for New England, 50 Bromfield Street, Boston, Mass.

Rev. Robert Murray, Field Secretary, Central Agency, 345 Fourth Avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Rev. A. W. Reinhard, Field Secretary and Superintendent of Colportage for the Western and Northwestern States, 721 South 37th Street, Omaha, Nebraska.

Rev. George Whitefort, Superintendent of Colportage, Southern Agency, Crichton, R.F.D., Mobile Co., Ala.

American Tract Society

THIS SOCIETY was organized in 1825. Its work is interdenominational and international in scope, and is commended by all evangelical denominations.

It has published the Gospel messages in 178 languages, dialects and characters. It has been the pioneer for work among the foreign-speaking people in our country, and its missionary colporters are distributing Christian literature in thirty-three languages among the immigrants and making a home-to-home visitation among the spiritually destitute, both in the cities and rural districts, leaving all kinds of Christian literature, also the Bible or portions of the Scriptures.

Its publication of leaflets, volumes and periodicals from the Home Office total 794,639,700 copies. It has made foreign cash appropriations to the amount of $799,456.39, and grants of electrotypes to the value of $61,177.96, by means of which millions of copies of books and tracts have been published at mission stations abroad.

The gratuitous distribution of the past year is to the value of $16,684.99. The grand total of its gratuitous distribution has been to the value of $2,634,505.89, which is the equivalent of 5,269,010,000 tract pages.

The total number of family visits that have been made by the Society's colporters during the last year is 206,167; the total number of volumes distributed by sale or grant is 55,517, making the total number of volumes that have been circulated by colporters in the last seventy-five years 17,382,454, and the total number of family visits that they have made during the same period 18,612,843.

The Society is making very special effort in behalf of Latin America, having entered upon the publication of a one volume Bible commentary in Spanish, a long-needed and earnestly prayed-for publication, also other volumes in both Spanish and Portuguese. Its total publications for Latin America now reach 14,748,588 copies. Its work, ever widening, is dependent upon donations and legacies, and greatly needs increased offerings.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President.

JUDSON SWIFT, D.D., General Secretary.

Remittances should be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

To the Friends and Donors of the American Tract Society in the West and Northwest

Correspondence has been received at the Home Office of the American Tract Society, New York, N. Y., which reveals the fact that there is a decided misapprehension on the part of many people as to the relations existing between the American Tract Society and the Chicago Tract Society.

Connection between these two Societies was severed more than two years ago, and since that time they have been, and are now as distinctively separate as it is possible for two organizations to be.

Gifts or legacies in behalf of the Chicago Tract Society do not reach the treasury of the American Tract Society, nor do they in any way aid the world-wide work of the latter Society.

Gifts sent to the Chicago Tract Society support the local work of that Society among the immigrants.

Donations and legacies in behalf of the American Tract Society are used for the creation and distribution of Christian literature throughout the mission fields of the world, including a large service among the foreign-speaking people in our own country.

All those, therefore, in the West and Northwest, who wish to aid the world-wide work of the American Tract Society should send their donations to Rev. A. W. Reinhard, Field Secretary of the American Tract Society for the Western and Northwestern States, 721 South 37th Street, Omaha, Nebraska, or to Louis Tag, Treasurer of the American Tract Society, Park Avenue and 40th Street New York, N. Y.

Advertising and Selling Cost

The rising cost of living is the great universal hardship of the present day. So great and so many have these rises been that few people stop to realize that there have been any exceptions to the general rule. But the fact is that there have been numerous exceptions and all of these exceptions belong to the same great class—that of nationally advertised goods.

The old idea that the cost of advertising raises prices dies hard. But the business man knows better. He knows that selling goods is costly business—no matter what the goods or what the selling methods. And he knows that anything which creates demand on a large scale, and thus makes selling easier, is bound to reduce selling costs and thus helps to reduce prices.

But evidence is better than argument; facts are better than theories. The Association of National Advertisers, an organization of 260 of the leading advertisers of the country, has been at great pains to collect the facts. It has secured an immense body of data from its members which proves that advertising does reduce selling costs and thus tends to reduce the selling price of advertised goods. "The proof of the pudding" is the argument that settles everything.

To present all the evidence, instance by instance, is impossible within these limits. A few representative cases will suffice.

The makers of a famous photographic camera, when they began advertising twenty-eight years ago, made one camera which took a 2½ inch picture and which sold at $25. Today they make a far better camera which sells for $10.

Another, which took a 4 x 5 picture, sold for $60. Today they sell a far better one for $20. And so on through the line.

A prominent hat manufacturer has, by means of advertising, reduced his selling cost seven cents per hat. Result—the buyer gets a hat of better quality at no increase in price; this despite increased cost of raw material and workmanship.

When the manufacturer of a famous breakfast food specialty began advertising, his goods sold at 15 cents a package. Today the package is fifty per cent larger and the price has been reduced to 10 cents. Again advertising did it, the same causes producing the same results.

Twenty years ago a nationally advertised shaving stick was sold in a cheap metal leatherette covered box. Today a stick containing 20 per cent more soap is sold in a handsome nickel box at the same price.

Then take the most conspicuous example of them all—the automobile business; and compare the $5,000 or $10,000 cars of ten years ago with the equally good cars of today, selling for a fraction of the money.

And so on through a long list. In nearly every case, the manufacturer either has been able to lower the cost or improve the quality at no increase in price.

How has he done it? By means of advertising, which has created demand on a larger scale and thus permitted production and distribution on a large scale. Result—improved manufacturing efficiency and reduced selling costs. And all of this in the face of a steady increase in the cost of labor and raw materials which, with advertising eliminated, might in many cases have fairly doubled the price of the goods.

"A triumph of economical marketing" is the only possible verdict for advertising in the face of these facts.

An Appreciation of the Printer

Christianity owes much for its world-wide influence to the printer. Without the printing press, the circulation of the millions of Bibles would have been impossible. It has been the wings to the Gospel and enabled it to fly abroad and conquer hearts for God. To the printer belongs the credit for all the books, periodicals and papers that flood the world. What training it requires to produce the fine specimens of the printer's art! Nowhere is mental discipline so exact and constant as in a printing office. Some of the best men in the world have been graduates from the press-rooms. Benjamin Franklin was a companion of types. He found an education there that made him most helpful to mankind. It is always a sign of defective culture when persons sneer at printers. There is no occasion for it. It is a noble occupation. It develops talent. It encourages genius. There is a charm in the touch of types that is magnetic. Printing makes men ready thinkers and correct talkers.

Many valuable lessons are taught by the printer as you see him at work. The printer works at a sort of desk, known as a stand, upon which rest two cases, the upper and the lower, in which the type is found. Letter by letter the pages of books and papers are made up. Out of the little apartments have come all the words in all the books and periodicals in circulation. The influence for good or evil upon the millions of readers will depend upon the subject matter.

Human life is built up in the same way as a book or paper. Time is the alphabet. Every day is a page. The entire life is the completed volume. You can make your life read like an impure novel or a gospel of peace according to your copy and your choice. And as the printer's page is not read by the world until issued, so neither is a man's life read until he appears on the stage of action. Let the world read a pure gospel in our lives. Let each letter be in its proper place so that our words may spell out the gospel of salvation to dying men.—REFORMED CHURCH MESSENGER.

Our Medicine Chest

A Southern senator, so the story goes, once rented a plot of several acres to one of his black neighbors. The land was to be planted in corn, and the senator was to receive one-fourth. The corn was duly harvested, but the senator did not receive his fourth. Meeting the negro one day, he said: "Look here, Sam, have you harvested your corn?" "Yes, sah, boss; long go." "Well, wasn't I to get a fourth?" "Yes, sah, boss; dat's de truf, but dar warn't no fo'th. Dar was jes' three loads, and dey was mine."

Goldski (dictating a letter): "My dear Mr. Schankelhausenheimer"—Miss Keytap: "How do you spell that name?" Goldski: "S-c-h-O, py der vay, I dink you petter pegin der letter 'My Dear Sir,' und zave de vear and tear on de machine."—Exchange.

"I'll tell you, Pat, my boy," the big man of the town confided, laying a patronizing hand on the young Irishman's shoulder, "I wish I had your tongue." "Sure, sor," grinned Pat, "but it would do yez no good without me brains."

On a train going West a little old lady became dreadfully bored by the unending acres of alfalfa passed. "Now ain't this land the limit!" she finally observed. "All they can raise is alpaca, and they have to irritate that!"

"Sir," said the angry woman, "I understand you said I had a face that would stop a street-car in the middle of the block." "Yes, that's what I said," calmly answered the mere man. "It takes an unusually handsome face to induce a motorman to make a stop like that."

Picking her way daintily through the locomotive works, a young woman visitor viewed the huge operations with awe. Finally she turned to a young man who was showing her through and asked, "What is that big thing over there?"

"That's a locomotive boiler," he replied.

She puckered her brows. "And what do they boil locomotives for?"

"To make the locomotive tender." And the young man from the office never smiled.

A Boston school teacher had read Whittier's "Maud Muller" to her pupils, and at the close of her reading spoke of the sorrowful significance of the words "It might have been." She asked the boys and girls if they could think of any four sadder words. One alert youngster of a dozen years held up his hand and said: "I know two sadder words." "What are they?" asked the teacher. "Please remit."

In a recent examination paper for a boy clerk's post was this question:

"If the premier and all the members of the cabinet should die, who would officiate?"

Robert, a boy of fourteen, thought for a time, trying in vain to recall who came next in succession. At last a happy inspiration came to him, and he answered:

"The undertaker."

"Bill," the poet gasped, staggering into his friend's room.

"Why, what's wrong?" the friend enquired, startled as he grasped hold of the frottering man.

"Wrong!" the poet muttered. "Just see! I wrote a poem about my little boy. I began the first verse with these lines:

"My son! My pigmy counterpart."

"Yes? Yes?"

The poet drew a long breath as he took a newspaper from his pocket.

"Read!" he blazed suddenly. "See what that criminal compositor did to my opening line.

The friend read aloud: "My son! my pig, my counterpart!"

The Composition of Coca-Cola and its Relation to Tea

Prompted by the desire that the public shall be thoroughly informed as to the composition and dietetic character of Coca-Cola, the Company has issued a booklet giving a detailed analysis of its recipe which is as follows:

Water, sterilized by boiling (carbonated); sugar, granulated, first quality; fruit flavoring extracts with caramel; acid flavorings, citric (lemon) and phosphoric; essence of tea—the refreshing principle.

The following analysis, by the late Dr. John W. Mallet, Fellow of the Royal Society and for nearly forty years Professor of Chemistry in the University of Virginia, shows the comparative stimulating or refreshing strength of tea and Coca-Cola, measured in terms of the refreshing principle:

Black tea—1 cupful	1.54
<small>(hot) (5 fl. oz.)</small>
Green tea—1 glassful	2.02
<small>(cold) (8 fl. oz. exclusive of ice)</small>
Coca-Cola—1 drink, 8 fl. oz.	1.21
<small>(fountain) (prepared with 1 fl. oz. Syrup)</small>
Coca-Cola—1 drink, 8 fl. oz.	1.12
<small>(bottlers) (prepared with 1 fl. oz. Syrup)</small>

From the above recipe and analysis, which are confirmed by all chemists who have analyzed these beverages, it is apparent that Coca-Cola is a carbonated, fruit-flavored modification of tea of a little more than one-half its stimulating strength.

A copy of the booklet referred to above will be mailed free on request, and The Coca-Cola Company especially invites inquiry from those who are interested in pure food and public health propaganda. Address

The Coca-Cola Co., Dept. J., Atlanta, Ga., U. S. A.

The New Testament

With Notes, Instructions and References.

POCKET EDITION.

DR. CHAPMAN'S INDORSEMENT.

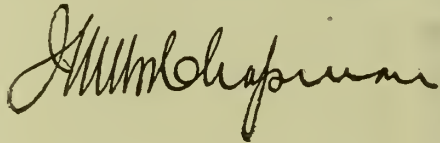

The New Testament with Notes cannot but be helpful to its readers.

The Introductions to the several Books have been prepared by an expert in Biblical scholarship. Taken together it would be impossible to find in the same compass Introductions that present in a better way the salient features of each Book while giving information at the same time concerning questions of authorship, date, purpose and destination.

The Notes upon the text are themselves marvels of scholarly condensation. They aim to present a concise explanation of the words of Scripture, selecting those passages which need such explanation. The writers of these Notes have used rare discrimination in their preparation, and possessors of this book will find in it a perfect mine of information at their command.

The Instructions are designed to make a practical application of the truth. This feature, which is unique, makes the volume one of rare value, and those who read these Instructions will not only have the truth brought directly and forcibly home to their own lives, but will also be furnished with material that will be of inestimable value to them in Christian service and work.

The Outline of the Harmony of the Gospels given is based upon the Standard American Revised Version, which is unquestionably the best modern Version and presents an outline of the Life of Christ that will commend itself to those who make use of it.

John exalts Christ.

JOHN IV.

Salvation by faith.

30 He must increase, but I must decrease.

31 He that cometh from above is above all:^a he that is of the earth is earthly,^b and speaketh of the earth: he that cometh from heaven is above all.

32 And what he hath seen and heard, that he testifieth; and no man receiveth his testimony.^c

33 He that hath received his testimony, hath set to his seal that God is true.^d

34 For he whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God:^e for God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto him.^f

35 The Father loveth the Son,

^a Ch. 6:33; 8:23; Eph. 1:20, 21. ^b 1 Cor. 15:47. ^c ch. 1:11. ^d 1 John 5:10. ^e ch. 7:16. ^f Psa. 45:7; Isa. 11:2; 69:21; ch. 1:16; Col.

now rejoices to be lost sight of in his greater glory.

30. He; Christ. Must increase; in influence and honor.

31. He that cometh; Christ. Is above all; in character and work, and ought to be honored above all. Is of the earth; as are John and all merely human teachers. Is earthly; inferior in character and teaching, and ought to hold an inferior place.

32. Seen and heard; in heaven with his Father. No man; few compared with the whole, and none uninfluenced by the Holy Spirit.

33. Hath set to his seal that God is true; by believing in Christ, he acknowledged that what God hath said concerning him is true.

34. By measure; John and the apostles received the Holy Spirit only in a certain measure, but Christ without measure.

35. Hath given all things; pertaining to the salvation of men. Into his hand; as Mediator, that he might give eternal life to all who should believe in him. Compare chap. 17:2.

INSTRUCTIONS.

7. As all men are naturally destitute of the love of God, no one should think it strange that he must experience that change which Christ called being born again.

9. It is not necessary, in order to believe a fact and receive the benefit of it, that a man should understand the manner in which it is ac-

and hath given all things A. D. 24 into his hand.^g

36 He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life:^h and he that believeth not the Son, shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him.ⁱ

CHAPTER IV.

¹ Christ talketh with a woman of Samaria, and revealeth himself unto her. ²⁷ His disciples marvel. ³¹ He declareth to them his zeal to God's glory. ³⁹ Many Samaritans believe on him. ⁴³ He departeth into Galilee, and healeth the ruler's son that lay sick at Capernaum.

WHEN therefore the Lord knew how the Pharisees

^{1:19.} ^g Matt. 28:18. ^h Hab. 2:4; ver. 16, 16. ⁱ Rom. 1:18.

complished; and he should not let his ignorance of what God has not revealed hinder him from receiving and treating as true what he has revealed.

11. As Jesus knew the truth of what he taught, all are bound to believe it, and to let it have its due influence over their hearts and lives.

20. The reason why men do not believe what Christ has taught is, that they love error, they do evil, and his truth on this account condemns them.

26. When sinners in great numbers come to the Saviour, some men, if it lessen the number who follow them, are greatly grieved. But good men, with right views, rejoice in every accession to the number of Christ's followers. They are delighted to see him increase, though it cause them to decrease.

30. It is a high spiritual attainment to be willing that others should excel us in usefulness and honor.

35. As all things pertaining to the souls of men are in the hands of Christ and at his disposal, the eternal life of those who believe in him, and the eternal death of those who continue to reject him, are certain.

CHAPTER IV.

1. How the Pharisees had heard; he was aware that the knowledge of his growing popularity excited their envy and ill-will, which he wished for the present to avoid.

Exact size of page and type.

Under Fire

With shells bursting in every direction, a little company of French soldiers kept their place in the trenches. They expected to meet death at any minute. One of these men pulled a well-worn Testament from his pocket and distributed a part of it to each of his comrades. There, in the din of battle and bombardment, a small Testament consoled and strengthened these men. When they might otherwise have lost courage and turned their backs, this little Testament acted as a shield and a comforter. It was Christ's message, which carried a meaning and had a force as at no other time and under no other conditions.

Perhaps you have a son or a loved one who would give anything he possessed to have the comforting Testament in his time of trouble and to know the message it conveyed. Why not put a NEW TESTAMENT WITH NOTES into the kit of every "soldier lad" you know—whether he is now serving or expects to be called? Make it a necessary part of his equipment. It will mean a new life for him.

Bound in silk cloth. We offer, for a short time, the little Testament above depicted at 75 cents a copy, postpaid. Better prices in quantities.

American Tract Society
Publishers and Booksellers
Park Avenue and 40th Street
New York

A M M

VERMITY OF
MAY 3 1917

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

Vol. 75

JUNE, 1917

No. 6

SENDING OUT CHRISTIAN LITERATURE FROM THE JAPAN BOOK AND TRACT SOCIETY'S DEPOT IN TOKYO

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY, NEW YORK.

W. E. FRITZ, DES.

BOOKS OF THE HOUR

Life and Adventures of Jack Philip, Rear Admiral, U. S. N.

By Edgar Stanton Maclay, A. M. Bound in cloth, 288 pages, 16 illustrations. Price 75 cents postpaid.

It is the well-told life of one of the most modest and noble heroes of the great American navy. Admiral Philip was a Paul Jones of our later sea-fighting line. Brimming over with action, written in admirable spirit, this book will be an inspiration to all patriotic fathers and sons. If we must have war, Admiral Jack Philip should be the hero of every last man.

The Islands of the Pacific

By James M. Alexander. Bound in cloth, 369 pages, 37 illustrations, 9 maps. Price $1.00 postpaid.

A timely volume dealing with the more important of the Pacific Islands, relating the almost incredible experiences and the remarkable accomplishments of people who have gone to the various groups. Special chapters on the Society, the Pearl, the Fiji, the Austral, Pitcairn and Norfolk Islands, Hawaii and New Zealand. An extremely informative history.

An Observer in the Philippines

By John Bancroft Devins. With a foreword by Ex-President Taft, and an appendix containing extracts of addresses by William McKinley, Theodore Roosevelt, Judge Alton B. Parker, Elihu Root and Luke E. Wright. Bound in cloth, 416 pages, 64 illustrations. Price, $2.00 postpaid.

Dr. Devins made a thoroughly personal study of the Philippine Islands. He travelled extensively among the natives, knew their customs, habits, peculiarities and latent possibilities. This book is an authority as to whether or not the Filipino is capable of governing himself and how he would do it, if given a chance. Dr. Devins also realized the commercial value and diplomatic advantage of this group of Islands. Read what we, as a nation, received for our $20,000,000 purchase price. Read whether it is wise for us to lose our right and release our supervision over the Philippines, especially at this time.

Religious Life of Famous Americans

By Louis Albert Banks. Bound in cloth. Frontispiece. 248 pages. Price, 50 cents postpaid.

All of our famous men and women made religion a part of their every-day life. It was this faith and practice which was the base of their success, which gave to them strength in times of stress and care and carried them onward. It is especially invigorating for our boys and girls and even their elders to know how much the great leaders of our land exercised Faith and Trust.

Among the well-known men and women cited are Abraham Lincoln, Rufus Choate, Samuel F. B. Morse, John Quincy Adams, James A. Garfield, Emma Willard, Abigail Adams, "Stonewall" Jackson and Robert E. Lee.

Small Volumes for the Kit, the Package, or the Pocket

Soldier's Text Book

Compiled by J. R. Macduff, D.D. Art Paper Cover. Price, 5 cents a copy (by mail 7 cents). $5.00 per hundred postpaid.

A little pocket volume of 46 pages containing a reading and a verse of Scripture especially adapted for the soldier for thirty-one mornings and thirty-one evenings. Four pages of sanitary directions gleaned from long campaign experience at the back. This little volume is a splendid companion for every soldier.

"These Words of Mine"

Selected and arranged by Abbie McCammon Brown. Bound in limp leather with book mark. Boxed. Price, 30 cents net (by mail 32 cents).

A little pocket book of 157 pages divided into months, with a selection of Scripture for every day in each month. Selected with special reference to conduct and character. A special page for special occasions. Beatitudes, Lord's Prayer, Commandments, etc., at the back.

New Testament with Notes

Silk cloth bound. Thin paper. Clear type. Red edges. Printed jacket with band of red, white and blue. 75 cents a copy postpaid for a short time. Better prices in quantities.

This New Testament is in answer to the demand for a pocket-size book with all the advantages of notes and explanations embodied in our complete Self-Explaining Bible. Concise explanations and instructions making daily application of the Word at the bottom of each page. Very helpful.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

PARK AVENUE AND 40th STREET

NEW YORK

The American Messenger

"Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Luke 2:10

Vol. 75. No. 6

JUNE, 1917

Copyright, 1917, by American Tract Society.

Terms: 50 cents per annum
Single copy, 5 cents

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

PUBLISHED MONTHLY

BY THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

OFFICERS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President.

JOHN HENRY JOWETT, M.A., D.D., Vice-President.

JUDSON SWIFT, D.D., General Secretary.

LOUIS TAG, Treasurer.

REV. HENRY LEWIS, Ph.D., Recording Secretary.

All of the above-named officers should be addressed at Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Rev. David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.

Rev. Charles Carroll Albertson, D.D.

Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.

Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D.

Rev. George Ernest Merriam.

Entered at the Post Office in New York as second-class matter.

Flag Day

On June 14th we come to a day, which, though not a national holiday, has a peculiar and significant meaning for every American. It is the day which has been selected for paying special honor to our national flag, and which is therefore known as Flag Day.

Flag Day has never been observed before under circumstances fraught with more tremendous possibilities than it will be this year. Never before has the nation faced a situation which called for such loyal service and such devoted allegiance as does the present crisis. These are times which try men's souls, and which reveal as never before the moral and the spiritual fibre of every citizen of our great Republic.

Under these circumstances therefore, we should make the most of Flag Day, and seek by our observance of that occasion to stimulate in the lives and hearts of all our citizens the largest possible measure of self-sacrificing devotion to the public welfare.

Bishop Charles H. Brent has well said, "A national flag is not an ornament, but a symbol, ranking next the Cross and the Sacraments that flow from it; therefore we reverence the flag. It is a symbol of the past and the future; of achievement and responsibility, full of history and inspiration, crammed with risks. The flag of to-day is richer than the flag of yesterday. The symbol is the same, but that for which it stands is a hundred-fold greater. Every true citizen makes his contribution to the flag."

We honor the flag, not merely by spreading it to the breeze, but by living lives of fidelity and integrity. A Christian patriot is the finest product of civilization, and there is no citizen so humble or obscure but that he may show forth his love for the country and for its flag.

Remember the Children

Among the many significant features of the month of June is the celebration of Children's Day, which has become one of the most delightful events in the calendar of most of the Protestant Churches.

The largest possible emphasis should be given to Children's Day this year because in these days of stress and anxiety we need the inspiration that comes from contact with the little ones of whom the Master said, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven."

Many churches in their celebration of Children's Day combine with it what may be called a Floral Sunday in which flowers in the most lavish profusion are used for the decoration of the church building. The juxtaposition of the flowers and the children in the house of God is a happy and a significant combination. Our Savior drew many choice and helpful lessons from the flowers, while He exalted, as had no other teacher, the limitless possibilities and the imperative claims of childhood.

Both now and in the days that stretch before us let us remember the children with their varied needs and their boundless possibilities. Though our nation is at war, let us strive in every way to protect the little ones, for it is upon them that the future destiny and fate of our country will finally depend. And above all other things, let us care for their spiritual welfare, and seek to bring them early to the knowledge and service of Him, who said, "Feed my lambs."

Filipinos Learning English

A fact which has a very important bearing upon the future success of missionary work in the Philippines is disclosed in the recently published report of the Department of Public Instruction in those islands, which states that there are now 621,000 pupils in the schools and that they are all taught in the English language and use text-books written in that language.

This indicates that in due time all of the Filipino boys and girls, who now speak various dialects, will eventually be familiar with the English language. This will make available a wealth of literature which it would take many years to translate into the different dialects.

Thus the laborious and expensive process of preparing a Christian literature in the vernacular will be obviated to a very large degree, and we may hope to see the Christian Church in the Philippines making far more rapid strides than in any other section where the missionaries are dependent upon the scanty amount of Christian literature that is available in the native languages.

Ninety-second Annual Meeting of the American Tract Society

The ninety-second annual meeting of the American Tract Society was held in the Marble Collegiate Church, Fifth avenue and Twenty-ninth street, New York, N. Y., on Wednesday afternoon and evening, May 9, 1917. Mr. William Phillips Hall, President of the Society, occupied the chair.

Devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. John E. Lloyd, D. D.

The minutes of the last annual meeting of the Society were approved. A general review of the operations of the Society during the past year was given in the reports presented by the Treasurer, Mr. Louis Tag, and the General Secretary, Rev. Judson Swift, D. D.

The following resolution was then adopted:

Resolved, That the Annual Report, an abstract of which has been presented in the reports of its officers be approved, and published under the direction of the Executive Committee.

A brief statement was made concerning the Society's work among the immigrants at Ellis Island. The following resolution was then adopted:

Whereas, the American Tract Society has for seventy-five years been carrying on a non-sectarian and interdenominational work in behalf of the immigrants at Castle Garden and Ellis Island, for the sole purpose of helping them to become worthy citizens of a Christian Republic, and, whereas, this work has recently been suspended by the Immigration authorities at Washington, it is

Resolved, That the General Secretary of the American Tract Society be directed to forward an official request to the authorities at Washington, and to urge upon them the fact that it is more important under the present war conditions that the work above outlined should be carried on among the immigrants than at any previous time.

On behalf of the committee appointed to present nominations for officers of the Society, Rev. David James Burrell, D. D., its chairman, presented the following recommendation:

Recommended, That the Board of Managers for the coming year be the same as last year, as shown in the printed copy of the Ninety-first Annual Report of the Society, except that in place of Mr. Henry Cole Smith (deceased), Mr. Adolph Pfender (resigned), Rev. William P. Stevenson, D. D. (removed from the vicinity), Rev. Robert Scott Inglis, D. D. (to be transferred to the Distributing Committee), Rev. C. Rexford Raymond, D. D. (to be transferred to the Publishing Committee), and to fill vacancies now existing on the Board, the following be elected: Rev. Elliott W. Brown, D. D.; Mr. William L. Amerman, Rev. Finis S. Idleman, D. D.; Mr. W. W. Carman, Rev. Oscar M. Voorhees, D. D.; Rev. William H. Kephart, D. D.; Mr. Alexander Lyman, and Mr. Lewis L. Tribus.

Motion was made, seconded and carried, that the report of the Nominating Committee be received, and that the Recording Secretary be authorized to cast one ballot for the election of the Board of Managers, in accordance with the above recommendation.

Thereupon the Recording Secretary cast the ballot and the President declared the Board of Managers elected in accordance with the above recommendation.

Motion was made, seconded and carried, that the matter of securing a closer relation between the American Tract Society and the Mission Boards and Societies of the various denominations be referred to the Publishing Committee.

The following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That the Ninety-second Anniversary of the American Tract Society be further celebrated by a Sermon to be preached by Rev. Walter Duncan Buchanan, D. D., in the Broadway Presbyterian Church, New York City, on Sunday morning, May 20, 1917, at 11 o'clock.

At this point a recess was taken, while the President and Board of Managers met in an adjoining room.

Upon the return of the President to the chair announcement was made that the Board of Managers had elected the following officers of the Society to serve for the ensuing year:

PRESIDENT: Mr. William Phillips Hall.

VICE-PRESIDENT: Rev. John Henry Jowett, M. A., D. D.

HONORARY VICE-PRESIDENTS: The same as last year, as shown in the printed copy of the Ninety-first Annual Report of the Society, except that in place of Rev. Timothy Dwight, D. D., deceased, and Mr. Joshua L. Bailey, deceased, the following were elected: Rev. Cortland Myers, D. D., and Hon. Carl E. Milliken.

It was also reported that the Board of Managers had elected the following members of the Executive Committee:

On the Publishing Committee, for three years, from May, 1917, to May, 1920, Rev. J. W. Kemp, D. D., and Rev. C. Rexford Raymond, D. D.

On the Distributing Committee, for three years, from May, 1917, to May, 1920, Rev. Harlan G. Mendenhall, D. D., and Rev. Robert Watson, D. D.; and for one year, from May, 1917, to May, 1918, Rev. Robert Scott Inglis, D. D.

On the Finance Committee for three years, from May, 1917, to May, 1920, Mr. Edward L. Suffern and Mr. John T. Underwood.

The following resolution was adopted for transmission to President Wilson:

Resolved: In view of the fact that ours is a Christian nation, that the President of the United States be respectfully requested in the name of this Society by its President and General Secretary to appoint a Day of Prayer:

Messages for Modern Men

BY REV. FRANK B. McALLISTER
The Soldier Spirit

IT IS impossible to love either the theory or the practice of war. Some of the finest soldiers who ever lived have confessed that they loathed war as a brutal and bitter, even if a necessary, business. The time is coming, if we have eyes of faith to pierce the present gloom, when the profession of the soldier shall be done away with. "They shall beat their swords into ploughshares and their spears into pruning hooks."

But that stands as a dim prophecy and a wistful yearning. Today, the soldier stands to the fore, a strategic figure in the life of the nations. Khaki has become the primary color. In the present, fearful stress of world events, the military aspect of life has been forced upon us all, whether we will or no.

Our Lord saw soldiers in the streets of Jerusalem centuries ago. The Apostle Paul saw them and was on intimate terms with some of them. The Roman centurion cannot be eliminated from the pages of the New Testament. Think of Cornelius of Caesarea, that broad-minded man; of Julius, Paul's escort to Rome, who treated the Apostle kindly; of the two centurions who believed in Jesus, the one at Capernaum, and the other at the Cross. Surely there are hardly any other characters in the sacred narrative to exceed these fighters of old Rome in nobility of nature and of purpose.

It is interesting to note how often Paul uses military imagery. He is one who fights the good fight of faith. His protection against the wiles of the devil is investiture with the whole armor of God. His counsel to Timothy, his beloved son in the faith is: "Endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ."

If the work of the soldier must often be of a cruel and repellent sort, the character demanded of him has points both of strength and beauty. The reason parents send their sons to "military" schools is not to make fighters of them, but to make men of them. No better lesson can be learned by thousands of us than that of submission to authority. It is in the very alphabet of the soldier.

Sublime things are going on, these days, in the terrible fields of France. At the word of command, ten thousand men will leave the shelter of the trenches and step out into an inferno of shell fire. It takes courage—for all that a man hath will he give for his life—but hesitancy is unknown. Well did the London Times say: "When a monument is erected on the Somme battlefield, it should bear the simple inscription—'There were no stragglers.'"

Obedience is the glory of the soldierly man—of the good soldier of Jesus Christ. What cannot God do with the man who will obey? When Paul met Jesus on the Damascus road he yielded his whole life in instant and complete consecration. "Wherefore," he says, "I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision." No wonder his cause triumphed. He has told us the reason.

If the chariot wheels of the Kingdom drag heavily in our community, if the life of our church is bound in shallows and in miseries, may it not be because so many of us are disobedient to our visions? We hear the voice, but do not heed the commands of our great Captain.

The good soldier must accept the general "hardness" of life from the outset of his career. Rigid discipline is his portion from the moment of enlistment. Look at an average day in the life of a West Point cadet! There is the awakening on signal; there are the drills, the inspections, the classes, the study hours, the meals, all on schedule time. There is an inflexible decorum for all occasions and situations. Superiors are to be saluted; rooms to be kept in order; arms and uniforms kept spotless. It all makes for efficiency. The young officer goes out at last with a trained mind and body. The sentiment of order has been made a part of his very being.

The soul must be made spiritually efficient through discipline. There is a manual of arms that may not be neglected save with loss. "Pray without ceasing"; "Search the scriptures"; "Neglect not the assembling of yourselves together"—such exercises as these have stood the test of time. It is by the use of them that choice souls in all the years have come into

First, to pray for Divine wisdom and guidance for the Leaders of our nation and its Allies in this time of supreme trial in the world's history; second, to pray for the blessing of Almighty God upon all enterprises that may be undertaken, and all efforts that may be put forth by this Government and the Governments of its Allies in the meeting of the great issues of the hour; and, third, to pray for such an early and lasting peace between all the nations of the earth as may be consistent with the Divine purpose.

The following resolution was also adopted:

Resolved, That the President appoint a Nominating Committee of three to present nominations for officers of the Society at the next annual meeting.

At the evening session devotional exercises were conducted by Dr. David James Burrell, pastor of the Marble Collegiate Church.

Rev. John N. Mills, D. D., of Washington, D. C., spoke on "A Tourist's Impression of the Needs of Latin-America."

Rev. William B. Stelle, of the North China Mission of the American Board, spoke on "China Seeks the Printed Truth," and gave several telling illustrations of the usefulness of Christian literature, which had come under his own personal observation.

A closing prayer was offered by Mr. William Phillips Hall. The meeting then adjourned.

spiritual stature. He who assumes to dispense with such means of grace is trying an extremely doubtful experiment.

The good soldier belongs to a regiment. He would never think of taking his rifle and going out all alone, hoping, as an independent, to get in a few shots at the enemy. He enlists, dons a uniform, drills, marches, fights in association with his fellows. We have heard of people who thought they could be good soldiers of Jesus Christ in utter isolation from the Christian church—but we have not been impressed with their success.

The call for good soldiers is a loud one in these portentous days. The "hardness" incident to war comes mainly on the brave boys who go to the front, but not upon them solely. There is work for those who stay by the stuff, as well as for those who serve in the trenches. Our social practices must be, in some regards, modified. Economies must be practiced and unwanted forms of work engaged in. It is possible that we may see our taxes doubled and trebled.

Now that the Rubicon has been crossed, let us press on bravely. Let us bear the discomfort involved, the inconvenience, the downright sacrifice it may be, without complaining. Let us give to the multifarious causes to relieve human need as the Lord hath prospered us, let us do our bit for God and country, let us keep the altar fires burning.

The nation must not fail; the holy church of Christ must not fail. Neither shall fail, if you and I and our neighbor will each bear a soldier's part.

In our Lord's last words to his people the blessing is promised "to him that overcometh." No attractive prospect is held out to slackers.

Not to the vanquished
Heaven opens its portals;
Rest is the glory given
To crowned immortals.

Think not of mere release
Welcomed victorious;
God giveth more than peace,
His rest is glorious.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTION

DR. DAVID J. BURRELL.

"SCHOOL'S OUT"

BY

REV. DAVID JAMES BURRELL, D.D., LL.D.

Pastor of the Marble Collegiate Church, New York City

JUNE is the month of "Commencements." Boys and girls are leaving the public schools with proud and happy hearts. The graduates of our colleges and universities are saying goodby to the campus and going out into life with diplomas in hand. They have been drinking at the Pierian spring of knowledge; and now the question that confronts them is:

What Will They Do With It?

For knowledge of itself is a vain thing. It has value only for what it will do. In this respect it is precisely like gold, which stored away in a vault, is no better than iron pyrites. It must be molten, minted and stamped with the image and superscription of the King and put into circulation so that it may go about doing good, or else one might as well not have it.

There is nothing finer in literature than Milton's eulogy of Truth:

"Upon her head she wears a crown of stars,
Through which her orient hair waves to her waist,
By which believing mortals hold her fast
And in those golden cords are carried even Till with her breath she blows them up to heaven.
Her spacious arms do reach from east to west,
And you may see her heart shine through her breast:
Her right hand holds a sun with burning rays,
Her left a curious bunch of golden keys:
Her voice is like a trumpet, loud and shrill,
Which bids all sounds in earth and heaven be still!"

Nevertheless Truth as an objective thing is as little worth as fruit that hangs unplucked and rotting on a tree. Here is a fact for truth-seekers to ponder. In the Metropolitan Museum of Art there is a picture by Larolle called "The Rehearsal." A young girl is on trial for a position in the choir. The organist is at the keyboard; the other singers are standing by to observe how the candidate will pass the ordeal. Her lips are open to sing. I never pass that picture without wishing that I might hear her voice. Will she make good? One feels a like concern for those who are now graduating from our institutions of learning. Will they make good?

But the question is one of large application. We, of maturer years, are all, so to speak, but school children. We have learned a little; and that little, with whatever may be added in the curriculum of life, is our equipment for the business in hand. It is a true saying that "knowledge is power;" but it is more than power; it is happiness and usefulness; it is character and influence; it is life and immortality. It is all this if only our knowledge is truth and used in the right way.

It is safe to say that people, as a rule, do not know as much as they imagine they do. The graduating class is always wiser in its own esteem than the Faculty, just as fledglings are more confident than older birds. But everybody knows some thing, if it be only "Cogito ergo sum," and "every little bit, added to what we've got, makes a little bit more."

He is but a poor makeshift of a man who cannot lay his hand on something or other and say "This I know." It may be only the postulate that there is a God. Here, at least, is a starting point. Possibly he can go further and affirm that God has revealed Himself in His only-begotten Son. It is a straight path from the manger to the Cross, and from the Cross to the open sepulcher, and from the open sepulcher to the gate of heaven. But there must be no standing still. "Then shall we know, if we follow on to know." It is like promotion in the public schools, out of one "grade" into another, until by God's grace we graduate summa cum laude.

But, as Socrates wisely said, "There are two ways of learning; one is by absorption and the other by communication." Latent power is no power at all. Whether we increase our modicum of knowledge is largely dependent on what we do with it. We can use it in three ways.

First, for our own personal advantage. We may do as certain capitalists are said to have done with an alleged leakage of inside information from Washington; that is, we may feather our own nests with it. This is what Solomon did with his singular gift of wisdom until he learned better in his later years.

The best of the personal uses to which knowledge can be put is the building of character. A man's character is never better than his creed. If a Christian believes that he "liveth unto himself" he will spend his days and nights in worrying about his own salvation and sanctification; in which case he will be "saved so as by fire" with nothing else to show for it.

Second, we can use our sum total of knowledge for the benefit of our fellow men: as it is written, "To do good and to communicate, forget not." The things that we know are a splendid asset in the business of beneficence. The man who discovers gold is a miser (literally, a miserable man), if he keeps it to himself. A farmer's well is sweeter when he allows his neighbors to draw from it. Therefore, if you know a good thing, tell it.

"That man may breathe, but never lives,
Who much receives and nothing gives;
Whom none can praise, whom none can thank;
Creation's blot, creation's blank!"

Diffusiveness is the genius of Christianity. The air is vibrant with a cry for help; and he who knows anything has something wherewith to answer it.

There are some kinds of knowledge that are simply calculated to make this world a better place to live in: for example, an acquaintance with the laws of health and economics. So far forth, the social scientist and reformer can smooth the pathway of the unfortunate to the furtherest verge of this present life; but no further. There his beneficence ends. Time and sense are its horizons.

But the knowledge of spiritual things covers a wider scope and entails a corresponding responsibility. One who has learned that God is love and that He has manifested His love in atoning grace, is under bonds to pass that knowledge on. His beneficence knows no such limit as three score years and ten. By putting the cup of living water to thirsty lips he helps men on to live forever.

We are sometimes derided for "otherworldliness." So be it. A human animal belongs to one world, but a Christian belongs to two; and the world beyond is as much more important than the world here and now as the sun is larger than the least infinitesimal mote flying in a sunbeam. To know this and not to live accordingly is the height of stupidity. For a Christian to have such knowledge and not use it for the benefit of others is worse than stupidity; it is selfishness so gross that it lays his profession wide open to the charge of insincerity. It is difficult to see how a candle once lit at the Light of the world can help shining. "A city set upon a hill cannot be hid."

To share our loaf of religious knowledge with the hungry is not only our duty but our splendid privilege as followers of Christ. It is thus that we make for ourselves a large and wealthy place in heaven. A lonely sort of heaven it will surely be for any Christian who has kept his knowledge of the Gospel to himself and exhausted his vocal chords in singing "When I can read my title clear." But blessed is the man who, in looking after the spiritual welfare of others, has prepared for himself a welcome at the hands of those whom he has brought to a saving knowledge of the grace of God! This was in the mind of Rutherford, the saintly pastor of the little church at Anworth when he wrote:

"If but one soul from Anworth
Meet me at God's right hand,
My heaven will be two heavens
In Immanuel's land!"

But the third use of our knowledge is the supremely important one, namely to invest it with an eye single to the glory of God.

No man has really begun to live until he is able to answer the first question in the Shorter Catechism by saying without the slightest hesitation, "The chief end of man is to glorify God." For God is not only the source but the ultimate of life. He is Alpha and Omega; that is, the beginning of every right purpose and the end of every noble enterprise.

In the book of Ecclesiastes we have the autobiography of a man who was singularly endowed with knowledge, but was long uncertain what to do with it. For a while he esteemed it for its own sake; saying, "Go to, I will be wise, I will search and find out the reason of things." But presently he perceived that knowledge of itself, without a worthy end in view, was mere "vanity and vexation of spirit." He then resolved on using his wisdom for the acquisition of wealth; with this result: "I gathered me silver and gold with the peculiar treasure of kings and of the provinces; and I looked on all the labor that I had labored to do, and behold, it was vanity and vexation of spirit; and there was no profit under the sun." Then he thought of pleasure as worth while, saying, "Go to, I will prove thee with mirth;" but the apples of Sodom turned to ashes on his lips. He heard the call of ambition and resolved on being the greatest of kings: "So I was great and increased above all that were before me." The Queen of Sheba was amazed at his magnificence. But listen to him: "Better is an handful with quietness than both the hands full with travail and vexation of spirit; better is a poor wise child than an old foolish king; what profit hath he that laboreth for the wind?" So the years passed, and at length this man Solomon, "the wisest of men," was driven to this final conclusion: "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity! Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God and keep his commandments; for this is the whole of man." (The word "duty" does not occur in the original Hebrew text of this passage. It is therefore correctly rendered as here given, "This is the whole of man.")

And this brings us directly to Christ: who said, "I am the truth." In Him we are made acquainted with God and brought into vital union with Him. To know Christ and to cooperate with Him is to enter into the secret place of truth. This is where Pilate failed. He said to Jesus, with a skeptical lifting of his eyebrows, "What is truth?" while then and there the incarnate Truth stood before him! Thus do many truth-seekers go groping like blind men along the wall. To reject Christ is to leave school without a diploma and to enter eternity with no equipment for it.

The happiest hour of the days of my boyhood was four o'clock in the afternoon. It was then that the head-master struck the bell and announced "School's out!" Later on, in the college course, we looked forward to "Commencement" as the time when the doors were to open into life, and the lessons of the class-room would be translated into larger tasks and responsibilities. What we call "death" is Commencement. We then enter upon our post-graduate course; and for this the interminable aeons are before us. Here "We know in part and prophecy in part; but when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away. Now we see through a glass darkly, but then face to face. Now we know in part, but then shall we know even as we are known."

Thus the vistas of truth open before us. The post-graduate course of one who has become personally acquainted with the Truth as it is in Christ Jesus is destined to go on forever and ever. The noble quest is ours. This is heaven; to know the life-giving Truth as through the succeeding ages we "follow on to know it."

Supplication

BY KATHLEEN HAY.

*Father, keep us lest we stray, far from Thy hold,
Where all Thy loved ones rest within the fold;
Help us to bear in mind Thy promise full of love
Awaiting those who serve Thee, far above.*

*When sore at heart and fainting on the way,
O, tender Father, pity us we pray,
And help us bear our cross of pain below
Remembering ever, the cross that Thou once bore.*

*Oh, keep us lest we stray from sight,
Far from the home of Thy eternal light;
So when the evening comes, and life is o'er
Shall come sweet rest, and sorrow nevermore.*

*Father, bless us from the great, white throne,
As stumbling, blind, we tread the path alone,
Oh, guard Thy weary ones along the way,
Till night is past and we can see Thy day!*

The Message in Particular

By William Norris Burr

OMEWHERE I have read of a minister who one day asked a member of his flock how he was led to turn from the old life of indifference and sin to the new life that seemed now to be meaning so much to him. And the man replied, that it was through hearing the minister read one day at service the words: "As the Lord of hosts liveth, before whom I stand." The minister remarked that those were striking words, but he asked, "How did those words help to lead you into a new life?" "Why, don't you see, sir," the man replied, "when I heard those words, I felt myself standing before God, and I had to yield my life to Him when I woke up to the fact that all my life long I had been standing before God. When a man 'finds himself,' sir, he always finds himself standing before God; and when he begins to realize where he is every day of his life—standing before God!—O, sir, I don't see how it can help but make a new man of him!"

We have a great many conceptions of human need. The great humanitarian movements, the social service ideals, a multitude of schemes for human betterment press their claims upon us; and many of them deserve our thoughtful attention. But there is one supreme need that overtops them all. Man's greatest need is to know God; and the highest service that any man can possibly render to a fellow-man is to help him to get his eyes open to the fact that every day of his life he stands before God, and that the great need of his life is to know the God before whom he stands.

And God has commissioned His church to go about throughout all the world carrying this as its supreme message: Know God! Love God! Serve God! Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and His righteousness. The church has an obligation along social service lines, along good citizenship lines, and clean politics lines, and along any line that makes for betterment in human affairs. But its supreme business, its message in particular, is to be calling men to God, to saturate the world with a sense of God, to thrill the souls of men with a divine patriotism that is born of devotion to the kingdom of God. Even love for one's fellow-man must not be allowed to obscure his vision of God; and the Christian church dims its vision of its message if it falls into the way of emphasizing neighbor-love above the obligation to know and love God. Each has its place; but, as Rev. Albert W. Palmer has put it, in his book, "The Drift Toward Religion": "The world cannot be saved by any merely social regeneration, though it is a part of the whole. The supreme task of the church is not accomplished until it has brought the individual soul face to face with God. The world is glad Jesus was a carpenter, but at its deepest moments that fact merges into the greater fact that he was the Son of God. It is because through Jesus we come not merely to brotherhood but also to God that we cleave to Him. The parable of the Good Samaritan does not stand alone—the tenderer story of the Prodigal Son must ever be bound in the same volume."

This accords with the teaching of the Author and Finisher of our faith. A lawyer one day asked Him a question, to test Him: "Teacher, which is the great commandment in the law?" and the Master answered: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God, with all thy heart and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the great and first commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

There has drifted into the minds of a great many people the idea that the church is a superfluous institution, that the world can get along now very well without it; and many have yielded to the inclination to try the experiment of getting along without the church. May it not be that the church itself is somewhat at fault and that in its zeal to meet the demands of the second command it has lost power by dimming its vision of the first and great command?

To the church has been given a distinctive mission. It is not here as another social service institution, another industrial organization, another temperance society, or just to furnish another club house for the physical and social upbuilding of the people. It is not here to be "another" anything! It is unique among institutions for human betterment. It is out of place as a competitor—in the highest drift of its service. Properly focussed its one aim is to make the Eternal Christ real and vivid to men, that God may be revealed to them through Christ. We shall not find God through serving men; we must know God that we may best serve our fellows. As another has said: "The truth as it is in Jesus is equal to all our vicissitudes, all our calamities, all our problems, whether of war or of peace; what we need now and always in America, in England, everywhere, is not a new religion, but religion anew; a deeper realization of religion in personal experience that there may be a wider application of it in social, industrial and national life."

Men are standing every day of their lives before God, and they do not realize it. Their eyes do not see Him, their senses do not discover Him, they are not awed by His greatness, they are not melted by His love. It is the business of the church to awaken them to a sense of God, before whom they stand.

Children of Light

BY CORA S. DAY.

It was a fine house, with large and beautifully kept grounds. A daintily dressed little girl played upon the lawn, tossing her golden curls and laughing as she ran after her pet kitten; while a trim nurse watched her carefully.

Outside the low stone wall stood a child of the slums; ragged, grimy, unkempt and unsmiling, she watched the other more fortunate little one. Suddenly the child within saw her. She ran to her gaily.

"Come in and get some flowers, and see my kitten—and nurse will get you some cake," she cried hospitably. Nurse evidently was used to this, for she did her part in giving the poor child one hour of pure delight. To her the rich little girl was indeed a child of light, giving her a glimpse of such joy and beauty as she never forgot.

We may all be children of light if we will and that not only to have the joy of the Light for ourselves, but to shed its brightness upon other lives as well. Indeed the latter is one of the greatest joys and duties of those who possess the Light themselves. As Mrs. Wylie says:

"Children of light, till the day-dawn appeareth, God has commanded you ever to shine."

Let us then, make sure that we are truly children of Light; and so shine that those who see us will never forget the joy and the beauty of a consecrated life.

A NOTE OF VICTORY

By Judson Swift, D.D.

We are living in the days when every follower of Christ and every laborer in His vineyard must hear and be sensitive to both the near and far cry of human need; when we must have a world vision, beholding all the nations and peoples bounded by the whole horizon, and place ourselves in the relation of sympathy to them. We must, moreover, realize that God is in His heaven, and if all does not seem right to us in the world, God in His own time will make it right. "He taketh up the isles as a very little thing, and the nations are as a drop in the bucket," flowing and mingling according to His will and purpose.

Our Creator and Heavenly Father is eternally triumphant and victorious. The word, "defeat" has never been heard and is not known throughout His Kingdom and universal reign. In His onward marching the dominant note is the note of victory. He who holds and guides the stars in their courses is the omnipotent Creator and our Heavenly Father. Hence we go forth to our work always conscious of final success and triumph. Fear is banished, assurance and certainty taking its place. In every line of Christly service, there is and must be the consciousness of finally overcoming and defeating evil throughout the world. In this spirit we all need to do our work, there being born in our hearts the impulse and in our wills the decision to give our entire selves for the betterment of humanity.

Faith in God and the thought and note of victory have been the inspiration for another year of service on the part of the American Tract Society, whose thought and purpose is to diffuse a knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ as the Redeemer of sinners and to promote the interests of vital religion and sound morality through the publication and circulation of the Gospel Message in the form of Christian literature.

New Publications

There have been added to the Society's list during the last year ten new publications: two in Spanish, namely, "Principles of Biblical Interpretation," by Rev. E. P. Barrows, D.D., translated into Spanish by Alfredo S. Rodriguez y Garcia, and "The Christ of History," by Rev. John Young, translated into Spanish by Rev. Daniel Hall; and eight in English, five of these being volumes, and three of them tracts or leaflets. A total of 175,300 volumes were issued during the year. The number of leaflets and tracts issued during the Society's ninety-second year reaches 843,700. The Society has published during the year four periodicals, The American Messenger and Apples of Gold in English, Amerikanischer Botschafter in German, and Manzanas de Oro in Spanish. The total of these periodicals for the year is 2,046,000. There have also been issued 85,000 "Go to Church Stamps," which added to the 125,000 issued and distributed one year ago totals 210,000. This Stamp was originated by the American Tract Society, and is the only one of its kind in existence.

Missionary Colportage

Missionary colportage was organized seventy-six years ago for the purpose of increasing the distribution of the Society's tract and volume publications. The colporters went forth bearing the precious seed of the Gospel, sowing it in the individual home and also in the individual heart wherever and whenever opportunity offered. The evangelical Churches with their millions of members and millions of dollars expended are not making a perceptible advance in lessening the percentage of the non-Church-going,—fully 60,000,000 of our 100,000,000 population not attending either Church or Mission. Only through missionary colportage can the Gospel Message be carried to these tens of thousands of our fellow citizens.

During the past year the Tract Society's colporters have made 200,000 family visits, distributed 55,712 volumes of Christian literature, and conducted 7,117 religious meetings, while the colportage distribution at Ellis Island has amounted to 119,925 copies of books and tracts.

SOME OF THE READERS OF OUR SPANISH PAPER, MANZANAS DE ORO

Gratis Distribution

"Freely ye have received, freely give," are among the most precious words spoken by Christ. Giving the Gospel Message without money and without price has carried salvation to millions of unconverted souls, scores of thousands of whom have not only heard the Gospel, but accepted it and become earnest and devoted Christians. Requests and appeals for Gospel leaflets and volumes are constant and often persistent. These appeals come from all the States in the Union, and frequently from beyond the oceans. The distribution, as a rule, goes to those most destitute of wholesome and inspiring reading.

During the year nineteen libraries have been granted to poor Sunday Schools and Mission Churches. The total value of free distribution for the year is $18,461.65, making the grand total of free distribution $2,652,967.54, the equivalent of 5,305,938,080 pages of leaflets or tracts.

In Behalf of Latin America

The Congress on Christian Work in Latin America, held in Panama in February, 1916, has borne abundant fruit in the way of awakening a deep interest in behalf of the many millions of people living immediately south of us. Special courses of study have been prepared and pursued with earnestness and zeal, while many of the Missionary Boards have undertaken the raising of additional funds for enlarging the educational work and increasing the number of missionaries at the mission stations. The great and overwhelming need is that of an abundant supply of Christian literature in the Spanish and Portuguese languages. The American Tract Society is bending its energies towards meeting this demand, and appealing for special funds to provide the literature so earnestly and continuously sought and prayed for. The publication of a One Volume Bible Commentary in Spanish has been decided upon, and is now in the hands of a competent Committee, and there is under consideration the publishing of "The Principles of Jesus," "How to Pray," "With Christ in the School of Prayer," "How to Bring Men to Christ," "The Way to God," and other titles in the Spanish language, and in Portuguese, "The Teacher's Manual," Stalker's "Life of St. Paul," a "One Volume Bible Commentary," "The Bible Text Book," and other important publications. If the funds are forthcoming, there is no doubt as to the furnishing of the literature required.

The Foreign Field

Notwithstanding the titanic world war, the work in the foreign mission field has gone forward not only encouragingly but amazingly. While it is true that the increasing demand for men at the front has lessened the number of missionaries going out from Protestant Europe, it is also a fact that the Mission Boards in North America report the sailing of a larger number of missionaries than a year ago. In the United States the Foreign Mission Boards with few exceptions report an increase of funds and in some instances the largest income ever received, the total cash receipts reported from one hundred and thirty Societies reaching over $24,688,000.

It is, however, true that the white harvest fields throughout the non-Christian world remain unreaped and ungarnered for Christ, and cannot be gathered until the sickle of Christian literature is grasped by the hand of the entire Christian Church and a united movement is made to carry the Gospel Message on the printed page to every unsaved human soul. Christian literature above and beyond all other instrumentalities is the one thing now lacking. It is, indeed, true that the problem of greatest importance is the creation of a good Christian literature in the vernacular, and in every land throughout the foreign mission field it is both conceded and recognized that Christian literature is the crying need. It is not sufficient to translate standard religious books now existing in Europe and the United States. It is of prime necessity to create a new literature, and this is among the greatest of tasks, which, however, can be accomplished if the funds are provided. The Tract Society's foreign cash appropriations for the year amount to $3,510, while $1,140,93 have been sent to the foreign field for other purposes, the objects being designated by the donors, making the total sent to the foreign field $4,650.93.

Total of Work Performed

It is of impressive interest to note that the American Tract Society has published the Gospel Message in one hundred and seventy-eight languages and dialects, and that the grand total of all its publications issued from the Home Office has reached 797,704,700 copies, of which 35,188,890 are volumes, 299,567,168 periodicals and 461,929,642 tracts.

The missionary colporters of the Tract Society have made a total of 18,812,806 family visits have distributed 17,438,166 volumes, and held 599,410 religious meetings.

In the Spanish and Portuguese languages, chiefly for Latin America, there have been issued a total of 16,012,088 volumes, tracts and periodicals, including 158,500 Spanish hymnals, the whole of these issues amounting in value to $642,918.87.

In foreign lands 5,667 titles of distinct publications, whose circulation aggregates many millions of copies, have been issued by the aid of the Society's foreign cash appropriations, now amounting to $802,966.39 and its grants of electrotypes valued at $61,177.96, thus making the grand total expended for Christian literature in foreign lands $864,144.35.

During the past year there have also been issued and distributed to the Army, principally to those serving on the Mexican border, 28,500 copies of tracts and "The Soldier's Text Book," and 70,400 leaflets have been issued and distributed in the William A. Sunday Evangelistic Campaign.

The Gospel Triumphant

Gospel Munitions must no longer be discounted. The power and effectiveness of the printed page have never yet been understood or fully realized. It is the one mighty warrior that flings itself into and beyond all barriers; the barbed wires of ignorance and all forms of evil are torn asunder and go down before it. All weapons are dulled and twisted in combat with it. Its power is simply marvelous, going forth undaunted and in the full consciousness of its power to regenerate and save the human heart and triumph over falsehood and wrongdoing; and it goes unhindered to all classes and conditions in the community.

For ninety-two years the American Tract Society has been to the full extent of its ability preparing and publishing Christian literature. A hundredfold larger work would have been performed, if the Society's benevolent income through donations and legacies had been many times multiplied. There is an imperative need that all the friends of the American Tract Society, both those near to it and those farther away, should realize the necessity of a more generous support. It is not sufficient to be well-wishers and time-givers. It is, indeed, of vital necessity that we experience a consecration to the service of our Lord, the fruitage of which will be the sacrificing of the best and most costly things that we possess, and the giving of our silver and gold.

The Teaching

BY ARTHUR WALLACE PEACH.

*After the silence, song;
After the sorrow, laughter;
Failure bravely met
Means triumph after.*

*Brightest the morning seems
Where dark was thickest;
Ever where winds are strong
The sails are quickest.*

*This is the truth our lives
Are ever teaching;
This is the faith the years
Are ever preaching:*

*Happiness waits beyond
Our pain and sorrow;
Always the dark day has
A brighter morrow!*

A Call to Immediate Service

By Rev. I. Mench Chambers, D.D.

IT IS an exceptional privilege to be called of God to aid in the carrying forward of the work and word of reconciliation. The only one who is qualified to entreat and enlist others for the new life in Christ is he who lives rightly himself. That laborer will fail who is not constructive; he must be a doer of the word.

Your gift for service, dear reader, is of God. Reckon with it now. We are workers together with Him, and this fact means that we shall have light and guidance and blessing in our undertakings. We must not forget what God has done for us. He has heard us in a time accepted. In the day of salvation He has succored us. We are the redeemed of God in Jesus Christ, and have been given the new hope through His cross and resurrection.

The Father has a just expectation of us. We are to work out our soul's salvation. We are to effect that for which God redeemed us. Now is the available time. Make His gift to you effective in your service for Him. Do not live a negative life. That is to fail. Do not deal in futurities. Bend down over the needs and calls of today with all the force of your begotten nature. This is the only time of which you are sure. God asks your best, and many along the dusty road of life need that best just now.

Give out your kindness now. Jesus did. He went about doing good daily. "So send I you," He says. Extend your kindness in the home. Live Christ among your own. Be kind to the aged who seek shelter with you for a little while longer. In the place of toil oil the bearings of life, for the lives of many who stand close at your side are filled with friction.

The words and deeds which may be given for Christ will place a new spirit of helpfulness in your office or store. To friend or stranger strive to be one of God's angels in charge of some special blessing, and your life will have a precious asset added to it.

Your immortality in the minds of men lies in the deeds of love scattered today.

To be worth while you must learn to serve your fellows today. It is not yesterday or tomorrow, it is today.

"I do not want your roses when I am gone," said one. Bear one another's burdens today.

An aged Christian minister entered his blessed home and God shut the door so he never could come back. He had toiled under deep conviction for God and the truth for forty years. He was a rare spirit, one of God's choice servants. His life had been laid down daily for others in their joy and sorrows, and yet his flock had failed to give him a word of appreciation when often he bore a heavy load. There were no flowers at Christmas. He oft received thorns of criticism from those who did not value his devotion and sacrifices. When he passed on, many of those who through neglect had hurt his heart, brought their "American beauties" and laid them on his bier. It was too late.

Do not save your kindness
For tomorrow's sky,
For the ones who need you
Now are passing by;
Live your best this moment,
That's the better way.
Cheer God's needy children
Just today, today.

Give God your best service now. Dedicate your gifts to His service. Give your voice to sing, your hand and heart and offerings today. Make life worth while around you. Live to bless, and ask God daily to deepen your consecration to Him.

"Crown Him with many crowns, Crown Him Lord of all."

A little ragged girl came into a mission in Philadelphia one night. She had been taken from a drunkard's home where curses and cruelty had seared her life. A kind friend had wrought the rescue for Christ's sake. She was thankful to God for what He had done for her. Testimonies were given, and she desired to join in this, but had no words; so she arose and sang in her child's sincerity a simple hymn which had been taught her.

"I love Him, I love Him,
Because He first loved me.
And purchased my salvation
On Calvary's tree."

The pathos and feeling of her soul went with her words and God used her testimony to break up many stony hearts that were present. Men and women steeped in sin were touched to tears by a little child's message who was sent to lead them back to God.

Place your gift on the altar and see what God will do with it. You will be surprised and rejoiced at His blessing when you are ready to give Him all and to say "God bless me." Give your heart and life to Jesus today. He has waited a long while for you to come back home. He has been infinitely patient. Do not wait until you have naught to bring but wasted gifts and years. Come now, make haste while Jesus calls for you with all the power of His presence. Hear Him say "Come" today, and then obey, and find the peace which passeth knowledge. He will pardon all your sin. He will give you the inward witness of His spirit. He will make you a child of God and put heaven at the end of a life which even here is sensitive to the glory that awaits His coming.

Wishbone or Backbone?

BY REV. C. A. S. DWIGHT, PH.D.

Is the symbol of your life a wishbone, or a backbone? Are you forever desiring, and rarely doing things? Are you a broken reed, or a strong pillar in the Temple? Is your zeal but smoking flax, or is it like a Burning Bush by life's roadway? These are serious questions, and each of us must answer them for himself.

The trouble with much of American life today is it is vapid, flabby, nerveless and resultless. It may mean this or that, but it never means anything very much, or for very long. It is covetous of all sorts of favors, but scant in faith, and short on duty. Of formal, wishy-washy religious profession there is plenty, but not enough of the John the Baptist style of downright witness, and of Cromwellian non-conformity. So many people are busy "wishing it on themselves" that they forget to secure a backbone, that is, a vertebrate morality which will enable them to stand up, like a sturdy oak, against all possible blasts of temptation. We are afraid that the wishbone does our churches great harm, for so many men seek after all kinds of things that they neglect the central value of a really indispensable Christianity. In this connection we are reminded of a prayer which old Father Taylor of Boston was wont to offer. "Lord, grant that men of principle may be our principal men!"

At all costs get on the right side of every question, and then stay there. Never allow your desire to outrun your duty. Don't let your wishbone be where your backbone ought to be!

HIS VINEYARD AND OURS

Christian Literature in Japan

Advance proofs of the last annual report of the Japan Book and Tract Society show a steady continuance of the work of furnishing Christian literature for the people of Japan. The total publications for the year reached a total of over 10,500,000 pages. Five new books were issued, among which were "Quiet Talks on Prayer," by Rev. S. D. Gordon, and "The Traveler's Guide." The last named book has been under preparation for two years or more and the call for it is so great that the first edition of 10,000 copies is already nearly exhausted. Concerning this book a Japanese pastor and evangelist writes:

"I have read your precious book, 'The Traveler's Guide,' with much interest. It is especially valuable, not only because it has so many passages from the Bible, but because so many explanations are given to lead truth-seekers on into salvation. The book, therefore, is a most suitable one for giving to truth-seekers as well as to believers. I wish, therefore, to use this book as an instrument to show forth the glory of God."

Grants of tracts were made by the Japan Book and Tract Society to missionaries and Japanese Christian workers. Among these were a grant of 10,000 tracts for distribution among the people who went to see the exhibition of cherry flowers at Mukojima, 9,000 tracts for use at the Gospel Hall at Asakusa, 2,000 tracts for giving away at a Holiday Meeting of Office Boys and a number of tracts given to prisoners and other specially needy cases.

The Japan Book and Tract Society represents the American Tract Society and the Religious Tract Society of London. The American Tract Society has recently forwarded a cash appropriation for the support of the work in Tokyo, and the total of the cash appropriations that have thus been sent now amounts to many thousands of dollars.

Recently the Japan Book and Tract Society sent some interesting photographs, two of which are reproduced in this issue of the AMERICAN MESSENGER. On the front cover page of our paper will be seen a picture taken on January 23, 1917, showing packages of the Japanese "Traveler's Guide" and other books and tracts just leaving the Japan Book and Tract Society's depot at Tokyo. The other picture, which appears on this page gives a view of Yushima Park, Tokyo, Japan. A colporter of the Japan Book and Tract Society has just been passing through this section of the park, and in the picture the people may be seen reading the tracts which they have just received from him.

Remarkable Church Growth

In a recent issue of the Missionary Review of the World Dr. A. W. Halsey tells the wonderful story of the growth of a church in West Africa. He says: "In November, 1916, there were received into the Presbyterian Church at Elat, West Africa, over 1,000 on confession of faith. This is the third consecutive year that the additions by confession of faith have exceeded 1,000. There are 280 Bible readers, supported by the church, or giving their services gratuitously.

"During the past year thirty-two candidates for the ministry have been received. There is an average of seven to each church. The catechumen classes, as last reported, numbered 18,883—under constant instruction for two years. Practically these catechumens are all envelope givers. Think of a church with 15,000 envelope contributors and the amount of detail work involved; where the contributor cannot read, certain marks, such as a red check on the envelope, indicates to the donor whether payment has been made or not.

"Some of the work which these men can do can be seen. During the twelve months ending August, 1915, 7,500 persons confessed Christ at the Elat Church.

DISTRIBUTING GOSPEL TRACTS IN YUSHIMA PARK, TOKYO, JAPAN. •

Of these, 5,000 were led to Christ by the native workers, the missionary not having had any personal touch with any of them until they were brought to him to make confession and give up their fetishes. For efficient development of native evangelistic activity, I doubt whether this record is to be found excelled, certainly not in any of the missions under the care of the Presbyterian Church which it has been my privilege to serve."

A Great Opportunity

The Japanese government is showing active interest in the life of its young men between the time they leave school and the time when they go for their military service, especially in the rural communities. At present about thirty thousand clubs or societies have been organized in the villages and smaller cities among such young men. The clubs are largely under military influence. A leading Japanese paper has editorially commented on these clubs as being a great opportunity for the Christian church, and especially for the Y. M. C. A., saying that the government would be glad to have these societies become "a moral force with the help of religion," and of agencies for character building and public service.

Lantern Evangelism in Korea

In Pyeng Yang, Korea, there is great rejoicing over the fact that two thousand new believers have been brought into the churches of the city through a recent series of revival meetings. The efficient way in which this evangelistic program has been planned and carried out, as described by Rev. J. G. Holdcroft, representing the World's Sunday School Association in Korea, is worthy of special attention.

The men and women who were to participate in this work were first prepared through special Bible study classes. Over 1,100 Korean men have been enrolled in these classes in Pyeng Yang since the beginning of the year. Following this preparation, a week of union prayer services were held in the churches of the city.

At 2 o'clock every afternoon during the revival meetings, a workers' prayer meeting was held, and the workers were then divided into eleven bands and sent to every section of the city for house-to-house preaching, and to distribute specially prepared tracts. Of these, 10,000 were used daily, and 1,000 big red posters in prominent places all over the city helped give the invitation to come and believe. There are 1,000 Christian homes and shops among the 10,000 houses of Pyeng Yang, and nearly every one of these displayed a paper lantern at night with invitations to "believe in Jesus," written upon it, so that the "Jesus doctrine" for the time being was thrust into even more prominent notice than the cigarette advertising which usually holds the field in that city.

Huge parades of Christian men and boys with bands and banners, songs and shouted invitations to "Yei-su mit-oo-si-o" (believe in Jesus) marched through the city on two separate days. Every morning the church bells pealed forth their invitation to rise and join in prayer for the city. Every praying home sang "Hover O'er Me, Holy Spirit" so that thousands of non-Christians roused themselves for the day's work to the notes of this hymn, and in one way or another all day long were persistently invited to do what even in that heathen city the great majority of people deep down in their hearts feel they ought to do—give their hearts to Jesus.

And many of the people did. At night scores of willing workers brought to church those who during the day had promised to attend the meetings, and by the close of the week 2,000 people had signified their desire to become Christians. These new inquirers were immediately enrolled in Bible classes, so that they might later, in their turn, join in the effort to lead others to Christ. This particular revival is but a part of the evangelistic movement which has been sweeping over the Orient during the past two years, and which is enlisting among its workers every member of the Christian church in the different communities.

The Chinese Tract Society

A recent mail from China has brought the Annual Report of the Chinese Tract Society, whose headquarters are at Shanghai. Besides many reprints of former publications the report announces the issue of one new book entitled "Analysis of Romans," by H. Westnidge, and two new tracts, entitled "Temporary and Eternal Blessings" and "The Gate of Believers."

An encouraging fact is the raising of the sum of $1,320.81 through the efforts of the Chinese Special Finance Committee. It is of interest to note that this amount was contributed by some 872 individual Chinese Christians and 53 churches.

The report acknowledges the receipt of the cash appropriation of $100.00 sent by the American Tract Society for the support of the work.

Among other items of interest we find the following statements made by the officers of the Chinese Tract Society:

"It is gratifying that for another year we have been allowed to be His fellow-workers in distributing and circulating Christian literature throughout the great Republic of China. We are thankful also that notwithstanding unrest and conflict—both within and without—the Chinese Tract Society has not only stood firm, but has continued to prosper during the year. As our publications are adapted to all classes and ranks of readers they find a ready acceptance in all the provinces of the Republic and in all parts of the world where Chinese reside.

"From our report it will be seen that we have printed some 75,500 books equal to 5,148,000 pages, and 763,000 sheet tracts. We have also distributed 877,329 copies of books and tracts equalling 9,385,447 pages.

"We have received orders and donations not only from Chinese Christians in China but also from Chinese emigrants in America, New Zealand, Australia, Canada, England, and many other countries.

"Our Society, being established on the same principles as those of the Religious Tract Society of London, and the American Tract Society of New York, is of great assistance to preachers and evangelists, because the printed page can enter the homes of the people, official Yamens, and other places where preachers could not go and there exert their silent influence, leading men and women to a knowledge of the truth and a saving faith in Christ."

Well Used Bibles

A missionary of the Canadian Presbyterian Church thus describes his experience as a newcomer to Korea: "What has struck me more than any one thing is the universal use and well-thumbed appearance of the Bible in Christian homes. Last autumn I visited a Korean Christian, who lived with his wife and two children alone in a remote and secluded valley. He was extremely poor, and entertained me to dinner on potatoes and salt. But when we sat down to worship God, three Bibles were produced, and each person, except the youngest, fingered his or her treasure."

Among South America Indians

Mr. W. B. Grubb, who is carrying on missions among the Indians of Paraguay, says that at the present time the Roman Catholic Church has generally abandoned its efforts to Christianize these people. "To such an extent is this so that in all my experience we have never come into collision nor have been brought into contact with them. In vast districts, over wide areas, that Church is not even known, nor have the Indians here any tradition concerning it. We are unquestionably the first and only people who have attempted to reach many of these tribes."

On the official government maps a large district is marked "Evangelical Missions Established under the Patronage of the National Government." Since 1891 Mr. Grubb and his associates have been officially nominated by the government as their authority in this part of the republic,—in fact, as the commissioners for these Indian territories. Their stations are registered as townships. The Argentine government is equally complacent. It stands ready at any time to grant land to the mission. The State Museum publishes at its own expense the grammars and dictionaries which the mission prepares. Pioneer work is going on among the Matacos and Tobas of the Argentine Chaco and is projected among the Choroti of Bolivia, whose language has been reduced to writing by the mission staff.

Notes upon the Topics Used
in Christian Endeavor
and Other Young People's Societies.

THE PRAYER MEETING

By
Rev. Henry Lewis
Ph.D.

JUNE 3.

Confidence and How to Get It Nehemiah 6:1-16.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. May 28. Joshua's confidence. Num. 14:1-10.
T. May 29. A song of trust. Isa. 12:1-6.
W. May 30. Men of faith. Heb. 11:1-10.
T. May 31. Do right and trust. Dan. 3:8-25.
F. June 1. Confidence through prayer. 2 Cor. 12:1-9.
S. June 2. Confidence by obedience. Exod. 14:13-31.

The Scripture portion upon which our topic is based presents to us one of the heroes of the Old Testament. Nehemiah, the cup-bearer to Artaxerxes, stands out in the sacred narrative of a man of courage, tenacity, sagacity and consecration. He was of a chivalrous nature, eager to help his fellow-countrymen in their desolation and distress, and in his character he displayed a deep-seated reverence for God and a passion for righteousness, which made him a model ruler for the people of Israel and a worthy example for all succeeding generations.

Hindrances and Obstacles

The notable thing about Nehemiah was his persistent confidence in the final success of his efforts to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem and to restore the temple, in spite of all the hindrances and obstacles that confronted him.

In order to accomplish his aim, Nehemiah had to contend not only with the ordinary difficulties inherent in a task of such magnitude, but he had to face the hindrances and obstacles that were put in his way by bitter and unscrupulous enemies. He had to contend against plots and conspiracies devised by Israel's foes and also to overcome the timidity and inertia that were present in many of his own countrymen.

The secret of Nehemiah's confidence is found in his consciousness of the fact that he had undertaken a God-given task. He saw the forces that were striving against him, but he also had a sustaining vision of the divine presence, which kept him firm and strong in the midst of all opposition.

With the example of Nehemiah before us, we may now proceed to consider how we may secure the necessary confidence in order to accomplish the tasks which God has committed to our hands.

A Sure Foundation

A prime requisite for confidence is a sure foundation. Faith in God furnishes the only sure foundation for confidence. When we know that we are backed by the divine strength, then we can go forward with the utmost confidence in our ultimate success.

The consciousness that we are in the right gives to us a feeling of confidence that nothing else can bestow. We know that we are in the right when we know that we are doing the Will of God, and it is therefore of the utmost importance that we use all diligence to ascertain what is really the divine purpose.

We may gain enlightenment concerning the Will of God by the study of His revealed Word. Through the exercise of prayer we may be taught by the Holy Spirit as to what God's plan is concerning us. The counsel of wise Christian friends will also help us to determine God's Will.

Helps to Confidence

There are some simple helps to confidence which we should not neglect. It is an old saying that practice makes perfect, and this maxim applies to the performance of Christian duty as well as to the ordinary tasks of life.

When we first rise to testify in a Christian Endeavor meeting, we may feel a lack of confidence, but if we continue our effort in this line, we shall finally gain a feeling of confidence that will make it a joy and a privilege to testify for the Master.

Careful preparation for the duties that we assume will help us in maintaining our confidence. The better we are equipped, the surer will be our confidence.

JUNE 10.

Sins of the Mind Romans 8:1-11.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. June 4. Carnal mind. Rom. 1:28-32.
T. June 5. Cause of sin. Eph. 4:17-19.
W. June 6. Religious sins. Col. 2:18-23.
T. June 7. Unclean minds. Tit. 1:10-16.
F. June 8. Sins to put off. Col. 3:5-15.
S. June 9. The cleansing bath. Tit. 3:1-9.

In considering this topic let us notice at the very outset that it presupposes the existence of sin. To-day there are far too many people who would have us believe that there is no such thing as sin. But the Scriptures give us no ground for such an opinion. On the contrary, the existence of sin is taught by all the inspired writers, and the Apostle Paul is especially clear on this subject.

By "sins of the mind" may be designated those infractions of the Divine law which are committed in the realm of our spiritual life as contrasted with the "sins of the flesh" by which we transgress against the Divine law with our bodies. It should be noted, however, that sins of the flesh grow out of sins of the mind, and therefore it is all the more imperative to keep our minds pure and holy.

Some Familiar Examples

Among the common sins of the mind we may mention worry, envy, pride, selfishness, anger and covetousness. This is not an exhaustive but rather a suggestive list of the sins to which our minds are prone. There are many other sins by which we offend against the spiritual welfare of our being, and we should each examine into our own souls so that we may find out whether we are harboring any of the sins that so easily poison the life of the spirit. We should continually use the prayer of the Psalmist: "Search me, O God, and know my heart; Try me and know my thoughts; And see if there be any wicked way in me."

And lead me in the way everlasting."

The Cure for Sins of the Mind

Christ is the Saviour from all sin, and in the indwelling Spirit of Christ we may find release from the thralldom of all sins of the mind. Sin cannot abide in the heart that is fully possessed of the Spirit of Christ. Light and darkness are irreconcilable, and so the Light of the World inevitably drives away the darkness of sin.

We may keep ourselves from sins of the mind by occupying our minds with the affairs of the Kingdom of God. By concentrating our thoughts on the work of Christ and by devoting ourselves to the interests of His Kingdom we will find that we shall crowd out the temptations to evil which might otherwise press in upon us.

It is not enough simply to banish the evil thoughts out of which grow the sins of the mind. We must fill our souls with the precious and beautiful thoughts of our most holy faith, so that out of these there may grow the deeds of love that will make our lives fragrant in the memories of those around us.

Incentives to High Thinking

To keep ourselves from sins of the mind let us seek the incentive of high thinking which comes from communion with the best books. First of all let us devote ourselves to the Book of books, from which we may draw the inspiration of the life of Him who is the world's greatest and noblest example. Then let us seek for the incentive that comes from reading books that will stimulate high thinking and pure living. Let us read the biographies of great leaders, the life-stories of men and women who have not spared themselves but have freely devoted their lives for the service and uplift of humanity. Let us read of the achievements of the missionaries of the Cross at home and abroad, of the doings of those who have been apostles of social righteousness, and of the transformations wrought by those who have been great reformers, such as Luther, Huss, Zwingli, Melancthon, and others.

JUNE 17.

What is Reverence and Why Should We Be Reverent?

Hebrew 12:18-29.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. June 11. Reverence defined. Hab. 2:20.
T. June 12. Honor God. Exod. 3:1-5.
W. June 13. Revere the aged. Lev. 19:32.
T. June 14. Honor God's house. Matt. 21:12-17.
F. June 15. Honor God's Son. John 12:26.
S. June 16. Reverence for parents. Matt. 15:1-9.

Reverence is the instinctive feeling of a truly religious mind. It is prompted by sentiments of respect, awe, veneration and adoration. The foundation of reverence is love; without the element of love reverence becomes little more than a feeling of fear.

Reverence is one of the bulwarks that protect the most sacred things of life. It promotes a due regard for all those things which we hold most precious in the fabric of human society.

Reverence gives sanction to all law, both human and divine. It acts as a safeguard in times of crisis and stress. It throws a protecting mantle about the most important institutions in the home, the state and the nation. It is the mark of every soul that has been touched with a sense of the divine fitness and order of the universe.

Things We Should Reverence

One of the most helpful ways in which we can use this topic is to consider what are the things in life that call for our reverence.

First and foremost among the things which we should reverence let us name God's Holy Word. The Bible claims our reverence because it is an inspired book, bearing to us the revelation of God Himself. We need not fear to subject the Bible to every test that can be suggested in order to prove its authenticity, its authority, and its inspiration. But let us ever remember that it is a sacred book, that it has been given to us as the infallible guide of our lives, and let us render to it not a superstitious veneration, but that whole-hearted reverence due to its sacred character.

The Lord's Day is a divine institution that claims our utmost reverence. There is grave peril at the present time that this day of days shall lose its distinctive character as a day of rest and worship and that it shall become rather a day of feasting and sport. Let us do all in our power to stimulate the spirit of reverence for this sacred day and thus save it from extinction in the flood of twentieth century secularism.

The Christian Church is another divine institution that calls for reverence. We should revere it, because it was founded by Christ and because it is His representative in the world to-day. We should honor not only the body of believers who constitute the Christian Church, but we should show a becoming reverence for all that is connected with the church—for its place of meeting, for its sacraments and for its ministry.

The family altar calls for our reverent allegiance. In these rushing, strenuous days, there is a growing neglect of this hallowed institution, but a rich reward awaits all those who will maintain this instrumentality of divine grace.

Reverence for parents is a quality of character which needs to be cultivated in many homes. Too often is the divine injunction, "Honor thy father and thy mother," forgotten, and yet filial piety is one of the cornerstones of a Christian republic.

Reverence for the marriage relation is another crying need in many quarters of our land. The growing prevalence of divorce as well as the multitude of cases of separation between husband and wife indicate all too plainly how lightly matrimonial ties rest upon many shoulders. Let us strive to exalt the sacred character of the marital bond and lead the men and women of our land to a deeper reverence for the holy ties that bind together man and wife.

JUNE 24.

Mission Work in Our Cities Psalm 87:1-7.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. June 18. Passion for a city. Rom. 1:8-15.
T. June 19. Prayer for a city. Gen. 18:23-33.
W. June 20. A superstitious city. Acts 17:23-34.
T. June 21. A godless city. Ezek. 9:1-11.
F. June 22. Cleansing the city. Isa. 1:1-20.
S. June 23. Street Preaching. Jonah 3:1-10.

The Psalm selected as the Scripture portion for this topic gives us a picture of Zion, the City of God, as the mother of nations. It depicts Zion as the metropolis of the universal kingdom of God, into which all nations are adopted as citizens.

Thus, as it has been well said, the Psalm is a prediction of the incorporation of all nations into the Church of Christ, and the establishment of the new and universal nationality of the kingdom of God. It is the prophecy in Old Testament language of "the Jerusalem that is above, which is our mother" (Gal. 4:26). It looks forward to the time when the Gentiles shall no longer be alienated from the commonwealth of Israel, but become fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God." (Eph. 2:12, 19).

Cities are Strategic

The importance of carrying on mission work in our cities lies in the fact that cities are the strategic points of our modern civilization. As go the cities, so goes the nation. Therefore, if our country is to be won for Christ, we must win the cities to Him.

In most American cities there is an increasing element of foreign population. Special efforts to reach the foreigners must therefore be undertaken, and this is one form of mission work that is greatly needed.

The use of Christian literature in many languages is one of the indispensable instrumentalities for ministering to the spiritual needs of the foreigners who dwell in our cities. This is a line of service that is vigorously maintained by the American Tract Society, whose publications are issued in scores of different languages so that they may be used by the city missionaries and the pastors and Christian workers in the foreign-speaking churches.

Social Service

Social service is one of the valuable auxiliaries in carrying on city mission work. Poverty, crime, atheism, and many other forms of evil abound in our cities, and to combat them various forms of social service must be employed. By improving material and industrial conditions we may often prepare the way for uplifting the moral and spiritual conditions of city dwellers.

Social service attacks many of the problems which hinder the progress of the Kingdom in the cities of our land. It seeks to grapple with the housing conditions, with the question of sanitation, with the problem of the saloon and with many other vital and pressing situations.

Gospel Evangelism

Mission work in our cities cannot succeed unless it includes evangelistic effort. Gospel evangelism is an absolute essential for advancing the kingdom, and the preaching of the Gospel of salvation through the blood of Christ must form an integral part of our program, if we are to win the cities of our land.

In city mission work we must preach a simple Gospel such as may be understood by the most unlearned and ignorant people. Yet if we are faithful ambassadors, we shall so present the truth that the people will recognize in it the unsearchable riches of Christ.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. June 25. Procrastination. Prov. 6:1-11.
T. June 26. Missions. Eccl. 10:1-3.
W. June 27. Lack of judgment. Heb. 12:15-17.
T. June 28. A little word. Prov. 15:23-33.
F. June 29. A little love. John 12:1-8.
S. June 30. A chance meeting. John 4:1-15.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS

Tell Me, Baby

BY E. A. BRINNSTOOL.

*Little wee maiden, with love-lit eyes,
Lying here in my arms tonight,
What of the Dreamland beyond the skies,*

Whither you drift in the soft firelight?

*Tell me, lassie, the places fair
Way out yonder, which you behold,*

*Magic castles and sights so rare,
Over beyond the sunset's gold.*

*Tell me, baby, with eyes of blue,
What you see in that fairy land!
Lead me there with your wee, pink
hand,*

*Little charmer, those sights to view,
Let me wander along with you,
Down in the dewy dells out there,
Which in the distant Past I knew,
Far removed from the Days of Care.*

Little wee maiden, with curls of night,

*Drowsing here in the firelight's glow,
Tell me, dear, of each rapturous sight*

*You behold, as the sun dips low.
Hark to the wavelets against the strand,*

Where the spires of Sleep-Town gleam!

*Lead me, sweet, with your baby
hand*

Into that beautiful Land of Dream.

*Tell me, baby, with drooping eyes,
What you see in that magic clime.
Sing to me of its joys sublime,
Far removed from that crimson
skies.*

*Little dreamer, what is the prize
Which you seek on your journey there?*

Tell me, baby, with sleep-bound eyes,

All the charms of that city fair.

Butterfly Lane.

BY KATHLEEN HAY.

BETTY was a blue-eyed, golden-haired little girl of seven summers. She had recently moved into the white farmhouse on the hill, with her mother and father and aunt Kitty.

Betty had lived in the city before, and everything seemed wonderful and new at Brookland Farm. The first warm days had come, and here and there she discovered little green patches springing up like a pretty green carpet.

Betty named the lane that ran for a mile behind the house, Butterfly Lane, for here, each day, she found bright yellow butterflies, flying over the flowers, and she loved best of all to play there among them. One day she took Blossom and Violet, her twin dolls, from her trunk and carried them out for a walk.

There had been so many strange, new things to take up the time since they moved into Brookland Farm, that a whole month had gone by before the twins were unpacked.

Betty turned down the lane, rolling them in front of her, while she talked aloud to the butterflies. "How I wish you could talk," she was saying, pausing now and then to wave her hands to them as they flitted past. "but anyway, I'm sure you are a lot of company, even if you can't"

She stayed a long time in Butterfly Lane that morning, showing the twins the pretty flowers along the way, and the hours passed very happily. Betty grew to love the farm so well that she begged her father never to move away from Brookland.

There was just one thing lacking to make it complete! She wanted another little girl to share all of her good times.

The animals, and flowers and butterflies, were great company but she needed a playmate too. One afternoon as she and the twins were walking in the lane, a very strange thing happened. Under one of the trees, where Betty had played all morning, someone had left a hat! Betty grasped it excitedly, her eyes big with wonder. She peeped around on the other side of the tree—and there curled upon the grass, lay the most marvelous surprise in the world—a little girl fast asleep.

Betty gave one little scream, then sat down beside her in a small heap, too delighted almost to breathe. The twins leaned against the old tree, bolt upright, their eyes wide and staring.

Even the yellow butterflies, flew gently over the small stranger, to fan her flushed cheeks while she slept.

"Isn't it lovely that we've found her," whispered Betty, never for a moment

The next morning she took Una to visit the animals, and while they were feeding Brownie, the pony, up dashed a horse and buggy at a very fast pace, and stopped at Brookland Farm gate.

Una gave a glad little cry, and was off in a flash, and Betty watched while the strange lady took her in her arms happily.

She didn't wait to see any more, but turned and ran as fast as she could down the lane. She had gone a long way before she stopped to rest, and even the yellow butterflies seemed to know that something was wrong with Betty that morning, and came and alighted on the bright flowers around her.

"You see," she said addressing them sadly, "I had so wanted Una to live with us, and now I am afraid the strange lady will take her away." Betty sat a long time down in Butterfly Lane that morning, until the sound of running feet made her start up quickly. Una came flying along, gaily waving her hat in the air, with her cheeks brilliantly pink, as she reached Betty, almost breathless!

"We're going to stay on and on at Brookland Farm," she cried, "come and hear about it, Betty, they've sent me for you."

The two little girls joined hands and flew down Butterfly Lane as fast as

The Tall Blue Lady

BY MABEL S. MERRILL.

GUY and Stella Wentworth lived in a long dusty street in a big dusty city. They had seen very few flowers except those in the flower shop window.

"They're nice flowers," Stella would say, "but they cost so much we never can have any. What I'd like to see is the flowers in the real country—whole fields of them, so that everybody can pick some. Only think of that, Guy!"

The two children saved all the pictures of wild flowers they could find and pasted them into an old book. Guy made paintings of the prettiest ones whenever the artist who lived at the top of the house would give him an old tube of paint squeezed almost dry. Stella had no paints, but she used to make paper ladies, as she called them. They were dolls made to look as much like the flowers as possible.

One day the children found a card in the waste paper basket—a plain card with one tall blue flower on it. They did not know what flower it was, but it was so pretty that Guy jumped for his paints to make a picture of it while Stella ran for her box of colored paper scraps.

"I shall call that flower the tall blue lady," she said, "and try to make the paper lady look like it."

When the picture and the paper doll were finished, they put them side by side and looked at them.

"Your picture is pretty enough to give to Mr. Heath," declared Stella. Mr. Heath was the artist at the top of the house, and he had been ill for a week.

"All right, I'll take it up to him," said Guy. "Give him the paper doll, too, Stella. It may make him laugh, and laughing is good for sick folks."

They carried their gifts upstairs and left them at Mr. Heath's door. For three days after that they heard nothing from the artist except the message of thanks he sent down to them. But on the fourth day he came down stairs early in the morning, declaring he was quite well and that he would like to have Stella and Guy go to ride with him.

They went out of the city on a trolley car, far out into the real country. Then they walked across some fields and up a little lane past some willow trees.

"Now look," said Mr. Heath as they came out from behind the willows.

They looked and saw a small field, low and wet, with a shining pool of water at the lowest part. In and around this pool and half way across the field were sheets of lovely blue made by their flowers, "the tall blue ladies."

"It is the blue iris, or as some call it, blue flag," explained Mr. Heath. "It grows wild in wet places like this. It's worth coming all these miles to see, isn't it?"

They spent a happy half hour with their tall blue ladies and went home with their arms full of the flowers.

"I feel as if I'd been to fairyland," said Stella as they stepped into the house.

"Perhaps the fairies have been here while we were gone," suggested the artist, picking up two boxes which lay in the hall. "Anyway, here's a gift for each of you."

Guy's box was smaller than Stella's, but when he opened it he declared you couldn't tell by the size how valuable a thing was. It was full of paint tubes, not old squeezed ones, but new tubes well-filled with colors. But Stella could hardly stop to look at them because her box held a doll dressed like the paper lady she had made for the artist, only in real silk and velvet. Her skirt was of green silk just the color of the long iris leaves standing up around the stem of the flower. Her waist was blue velvet and on her head was a blue hat as much like an iris blossom as it could be made.

"She's really a tall blue lady," cried Stella, "and of course her name couldn't be anything but Iris."

READY TO GO TO MARKET.

lifting her eyes from the little girl's face. "I always knew," she continued, drawing in her breath happily, "that Butterfly Lane was the nicest place in the world."

A passing breeze stirred the soft brown hair of the small sleeper—then very slowly, she opened her eyes wide, and saw Betty's eager face.

"I don't know where I am," began the small stranger, starting up quickly. "Oh, yes, I remember now, I got lost and the train left without me, and then I walked and walked until I got here, and sat under this tree to rest."

"I'm so glad you found your way into Butterfly Lane," Betty said quickly—"and behind us about a quarter of a mile, is Brookland Farm, where we live, and it can be your home now, too."

The little girl smiled, and held out her hand shyly.

"My name is Una," she said, "and I'd like first to find my mother, but the train left with her on it, while I was lost."

Betty was very happy as they walked down the lane, hand in hand, toward Brookland Farm. Una spent the night, because there was no train for her to go on to the next station. She told her story again, to Betty's father and mother, with Betty breaking in eagerly, now and then, to tell of how she discovered her under the tree, fast asleep.

their feet could carry them. And then when they reached home, Betty heard the whole lovely story, or rather the whole lovely truth. Una's mother had been teaching to support herself and her little girl, ever since Una's father had died, some years before. She was on her way to find a new position, when Una had gotten lost, and then of course she took the first train back to Brookland, where she had last been seen.

Betty's father and mother, had then thought up a plan.

They were very soon going to advertise for a governess to teach their little girl, and if Una's mother would consent to stay on at Brookland Farm and fill the place, it would suit beautifully.

There were two empty rooms on the west end of the house that they could occupy, and fix as their home. Una's mother gladly consented to stay and be Betty's governess, and so the two little girls were made very happy.

Betty declared that if it hadn't been for Butterfly Lane, she would never have found Una, and Una was glad that she had wandered off that day and gotten lost, since it all turned out so well.

And the grown people, and the animals, the twins and the butterflies, and the two little girls, were all glad and happy together at dear, old Brookland Farm.

Our Fireside

"These Little Ones"

By Anna Burnham Bryant

THE chief benefactor of the Orphanage had passed away at midnight. The old pastor and lifelong friend of the Orphanage had himself been housed for a week with sudden illness. To him, next morning, therefore, came his young assistant with a message from the house of mourning.

"You don't mean he is dead, Rockwell?"

The old pastor faced him with a sharp amazement. In all his plans for the Orphanage—his pet project for half a lifetime—it had never occurred to him that its chief patron could take his hand from the lever. That the hand could ever grow still in death had been equally absent from his calculations. Grief for his old friend suddenly softened his sharpness. He sank down between the outstretched arms of his old study chair, so white and trembling that Richard Rockwell took an alarmed step forward. But the old man waved him off, and then, resting his elbows on the shabby old horsehair arms of the chair he leaned forward and made a piteous gesture. His voice had almost a wail in it.

"You said 'dead,' Richard! What will become of my poor Orphanage?"

Again the public loss overwhelmed the private one. The Orphanage had been born in the old doctor's loving heart and brain, but it had lived and had its being ever since out of the liberal gifts of the man whose death was that morning chronicled in the newspapers. The pastor's brain was nimble. He foresaw results that might break his heart, for the loyal old roots of it were twined about that Orphanage.

"He may have left it well endowed," suggested the younger man, hopefully. "You often begged him to do it."

"True! I did—I did! He may have done it—he always refused to. Still, he may have done it at the last. He may—he may!"

Three days later there was a hasty summons that brought the young man from his working study in the church.

"He has left us nothing—nothing, sir!" cried the doctor, pacing the floor distractedly. "No will, and not a word in any of his private papers! And we are bankrupt, that's the plain English of it. It means a locked door and the curtains down and those poor children scattered."

Richard Rockwell was too young a man to be considered as the official colleague of the venerable pastor of the First Church of Granby, and from the beginning he had not left it to any one else to say so. He well understood that he must be like a staff to the hand for the good old doctor, and, strong as he was, he doubted his ability to be leaned on so heavily. His very frankness captivated the people, and he let himself be persuaded. This was one of the times when he had a chance to be sorry.

"Isn't there any other man to take his place?" he asked, sitting down thoughtfully to consider the question. "There's Griswold—would it do any good to talk to him?"

The old pastor stared at him solemnly with pursed-out lips for a moment.

"Griswold went to sleep years ago," he said impressively, "when he began to pile up money at compound interest. Dead asleep! And the chances are that he will never wake up. If anything ever does wake him, it will be a still, small voice that speaks to his heart and his conscience—not yours or mine, Richard Rockwell!"

"Then you've tried him?"

"He told me the last time I spoke to him that if I ever said the word 'Orphanage' to him again, he would move out of town," confessed the old man whimsically. "I dare say I did pester him. I do everybody. But somehow I've always been willing to be the Lord's beggar."

"You've no equal in that line!" said the young man warmly. "I've heard your Orphanage Day sermons. I know it used to make me feel as if the Lord himself stood over against the Treasury. If you appealed to the people—" he began hopefully, as if a new thought had struck him, and then broke off, studying the intricate pattern of the rug as if he meant to reproduce it.

"Rockwell, you've hit it!" cried the pastor, standing upright in his enthusiasm. "It isn't the sermon—it's the subject! The appeal is in that. It's the Children's Age, man! Age of invention, yes! Age of discovery, no doubt about it. But above all, and beyond everything, it is the Age of the Child. Never can you get away from it. Nowhere can you get out of the sound of it. And that is why I think we are getting back nearer and nearer to the spirit of Him who said, 'Suffer the little children.' The subject only needs to be presented and it does its own special pleading. I'll preach 'em a sermon. No, I know it's nowhere near Orphanage Day. All the better—I'll show them there's a special exigency. The general is dead on the field of battle. I'll call the rank and file to the rescue!"

The young man's face lighted responsively. It was as he had said; on these annual "Days," the aged pastor was the old man eloquent. The love and labor of a lifetime seemed to take visible, tangible form and speak with his voice, look out of his eyes, and persuade with his presence and gesture.

"It's the very thing!" Rockwell replied heartily. "If I can be of any assistance—making arrangements or seeing people—I'll keep close by."

"Thank you—Right Hand!" said the pastor, affectionately, sending him back to his study in the church. "I'll occupy the pulpit next Sunday!"

The week wore on to Saturday. Without orders or further consultation Rockwell did "see people." He held no formal interviews, but he followed the regular routine of parish calls, in which it was easy to come around naturally to the subject, and plant seeds of suggestion in favor of the newly-orphaned Orphanage.

Between whiles they talked it over together, the old man and the young one. His subject had come to him in a flash of inspiration—"A Cup of Cold Water." The tenderness of the text about the "least of these little ones" suffused the whole sermon. Even in these private rehearsals, Rockwell himself was affected, and he rejoiced in the impression he felt sure it would make on the following Sunday. So it was doubly disconcerting when, late Saturday afternoon, he was hastily summoned to find the prospective preacher unexpectedly and entirely disabled. He was sitting in his armchair, which he had wheeled round to face the window, through which he could see the red roofs and tower of his beloved Orphanage.

"It was foreordained you should preach this sermon!" he remarked in greeting.

"I!" cried Rockwell. "What has happened?"

"The doctor has happened!" cried the old man, testily. "Drops into dead languages and talks about organs I never heard of. Old age has happened, my young friend," he added sadly, "and—oh, it's an old trouble, and I dare say this excitement, as he says—"

"What is it?" demanded the other. "What does it mean? You were all right yesterday!"

"Oh, yes, and I shall be again day after to-morrow, likely. The doctor prescribed rest—a medicine you can't take out of a bottle. And it means you've got to take this sermon and preach it!"

Rockwell was used to preaching. But he liked to begin before Saturday night to prepare his outline.

"Here it is—all the heads of it!" said the doctor, holding up a scrap of paper on which certain suggestive "heads" were jotted down in paragraphs. "That's all I ever have, and I don't take that into the pulpit. You can go by that."

Foreordination is a stubborn thing, even if it exists only in a man's imagination. In the end Rockwell made up his mind to try to do what was expected of him. There was nothing else to do. He tried to get what comfort he could out of the thought that the whole line of treatment was as familiar as the text itself, that he had every illustration at his tongue-tip, that even the old doctor's persuasive inflections were in his mind, and rightly his to use if he wished to do so.

"Talk of foreordination!" he muttered to himself grimly enough, as he struggled into his pulpit coat, and prepared to go to the scene of his martyrdom, as it verily seemed to him on his way thither. "I'm foreordained to fail, and the old doctor's heart will break square in two when I tell him what I've done to his Orphanage!"

"Oh, Mr. Rockwell! Mr. Rockwell!" called a breathless child's voice at the foot of the steps of his boarding-place. "The teachers wants to know is the Old Doctor going to pritch a sermon about US? An' if he is, we're all going to git to hear him!"

"No, he's sick to-day. I'm going to preach his sermon for him," he told her. "O-o-oh!" in a long-drawn sigh of unmistakable disappointment. Orphanage outings were too blissful to be lightly relinquished. The next moment she came closer, her round, freckled face lifted, and her little hands held up as if she were praying.

"Kin we come just the same, if it's only you? The Old Doctor loved to have us, and he says things just for us right in the middle of the grown-up stuff. Couldn't you—just a little few things? Kin I tell the teachers you said so?"

Rockwell stopped short and looked at the dusty mite, standing there in the blazing sun, hatless and imploring. The form of her appeal touched, amused and appalled him. He never thought of resenting it.

"You've always left US out, you know!" suggested his unconscious accuser. Her reference to herself and the other Orphanage children was always in

DON'T decide on the new hymn-book for your Church or Sunday School until you have seen

HALLOWED HYMNS
NEW AND OLD

Edited by IRA ALLAN SANKEY
Son of the famous Singing-Evangelist
Ira D. Sankey

OVER 550,000
COPIES ALREADY SOLD

Responsive Scripture Readings
No Trashy Words No Jingly Music

Price $25.00 per 100 not prepaid
35 cents per copy by mail

Examine a copy and prove its value in your work. (Returnable if desired.)

The Biglow & Main Co., New York
Chicago

capitals. Plainly, to themselves, at least, they were important.

"Yes! yes! tell them to come," he said, a sudden compassion blurring his eyes and making his voice so gentle that she instantly presumed on it.

"And kin I bring my little sister? She's a new one!"

He nodded back a smiling "Yes," and the child sped homeward to give her message to the "Teachers."

"What difference does it make?" he soliloquized, his head down-bent, like one already defeated. "I'm going out in Saul's armor, and failure is a foregone conclusion. But the little ones shall come. Perhaps they will make their own appeal. God helping me I'll say a 'little few' things to the children after this, as well as about them!"

As he walked on, he was conscious of a curious thrill of interest in the coming service. Success, as he defined it to himself that morning, meant interesting and arousing the people to empty their pockets in behalf of the Orphanage. Since sleepless midnight he had relinquished all thought of doing that. Yet the exhilaration of a new idea and a new purpose possessed him. The Orphanage had suddenly resolved itself into a collection of little children—children with round, eager, wistful eyes, and sweet, chirpy voices, and tiny hands that tugged at coat and fingers. So that was what the doctor thought of when he talked about his Orphanage. And then—they really were little intelligences! They wanted to hear and understand, if there was anything for them to understand. Once in the pulpit, he looked instinctively over to their corner, the wing reserved for them in the old doctor's day, and still well-filled whenever he was advertised to fill the pulpit. It was empty, but presently they filed in, demure little things in brown dresses and blue sailor suits and all marshalled by the watchful teachers.

Then he looked down along the aisles and reekoped up the rest of the audience. Was there a man or woman among them to respond to a philanthropic appeal like that which he had come to make to them? Where was the money to come from? The one rich man—Griswold—was never seen in his pew on Orphanage days. He did not see him there to-day. There was no question of even trying to wake him up.

The sermon went lamely enough in the beginning. A miserable consciousness that he was weakly presenting the doctor's best arguments and spoiling his most winning pleas came over him, and he saw in the faces of his hearers his own feeling reflected. Faintness half overcame him, to the degree that his white face attracted the attention of one of the ushers, who quietly set a glass of water on the desk beside him. It occasioned no comment beyond a whispered comment that the day was too hot for preaching. It was indeed one of summer's most torrid days and all the fans were going. He took up the glass and was about to drain it, when a child's piping voice broke the stillness. It was the little "new" sister of the Orphanage.

"P'ease, don't d'ink it all up! Leave me just a 'ittle d'op!"

For an instant he stood with poised hand, while all eyes gazed at him, and at the tiny disturber who stood a-tip-toe in her seat one of the teachers, red-faced, tugging at her little skirts. She was near the platform and stood her ground, holding out her little hands confidently. It seemed minutes that he stood there, a crowd of confusing thoughts rushing through his mind, before one came with is excellently attained by adding to the daily menu a ration of

ECONOMY WITH GOOD LIVING

Grape-Nuts

Goodness—Energy—Ease of Digestion—Excellent Flavor—are all found in this truly remarkable wheat and barley food.

lightning flash that cleared all others away. It was as if he heard it spoken, audibly and plainly, the words of his text applying to the present instance:

"And whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only, in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you he shall in no wise lose his reward."

Into her waiting hands he gave the untasted glass, holding it carefully and gently to her lips till she had finished; then, thanked by her sweet smile, walked gravely back to the pulpit, while she subsided, refreshed, into the seat beside her scandalized elders. But all over the house a murmur of satisfaction and approval showed the feeling the act had awakened. As he stepped back to his place, a change came over his face and manner as well as his preaching.

"Friends," he said, leaning forward earnestly, as if to get closer to them, "I have been trying to preach another man's sermon to you and failed. Bear with me while I try to say a few words to you of my own. Seldom, surely, does a speaker have an unrehearsed illustration of his subject furnished ready to his hand. If that doesn't make its appeal to you I do not know what can! What was that little one's request but the voice of little children everywhere, and especially these of our own Orphanage, crying out confidently to each one of us, holding to our lips our cup of prosperity and comfort, of joy and ease and pleasantness—to you, to me, to all of us—'Don't drink it all up! Save at least one little drop for me!' Friends, I dared not! Tell me, do you dare?"

That was the end of the sermon. It was a very, very short sermon, with minutes to spare, if he had chosen to use them. He did not choose.

"That object-lesson was the sermon," he said to himself, walking soberly homeward, speaking to no one. "It was all there was to it. I wonder what the old doctor would have said!"

He presently found out what the doctor wanted to say. Before night he was startled by the doctor's voice over the phone, with a jubilant ring in it that promised revelations.

"Great news!" he called. "Come over." Rockwell lost no time in "going over." He had wanted to be summoned, feeling sensitive and diffident.

"That paper has just been handed me."

said the doctor, reaching out a long roll of foolscap with names and subscriptions. They were in small sums, from men, women, and children, all over the parish; and their amount exceeded the running expenses of any former year.

Rockwell was dumb with sheer delight and amazement, but more was to come.

"What did I tell you this morning?" cried the doctor. "Did you preach my sermon?"

"As well as I could," answered Rockwell, literal and truthful. "That is, not well at all. I—I talked a little, and something happened."

"I should think there did!" almost shouted the old doctor in glorious excitement. "I should think something did happen! Who do you think has been here?"

Rockwell only shook his head. "I am waiting for wonders."

"Well, you'll get 'em!" The door has just closed on him—Griswold!

"Griswold! I didn't know he was there. He must have come in late. What did he want?"

"Wanted to give to the Orphanage!"

"Along with the rest, eh?"

"No! All by himself—support the whole thing. Of course he can afford it. I told him No."

"You—told—him—No!"

"I—told—him—No!" mimicked the doctor. "Told him I'd made up my mind to move out of town if ever he came around pestering me about giving to that Orphanage!"

"What did he say?" asked Rockwell, in sympathy with the doctor's glee, though not fully comprehending it.

"This is what he said. He said, 'Oh, come now, don't hold grudges! I know I've held you off on this business, but it came over me this morning that a cup of cold water isn't much to give to anybody, and these babies don't ask but a drop or two out of our cup, anyway. I don't mind telling you that this morning's brought me to the point of being willing to share mine.'"

"Good enough!" cried Rockwell, wringing the doctor's hand delightedly. "I'll warrant you didn't tell him No to that."

"Not exactly. I told him he could help if he wanted to. But I showed him this," holding out the subscription list proudly. "He was pretty crestfallen, for a few minutes, and then he brightened up and offered to give us a new building. We're going over the plans to-morrow. Oh, it's a great text—that is! 'Whosoever giveth a cup of cold water!' I thought it would take hold—I thought it would! But I own I never thought that it would wake up Griswold."

Children in War Time

Thousands of children besides war orphans and refugees have been directly affected by the war, according to reports from belligerent countries which have come to the Children's Bureau of the U. S. Department of Labor. Juvenile delinquency has increased, more children have been employed under adverse conditions, special measures have been necessary to protect the health of mothers and babies, and home life has been broken up by the increased employment of mothers.

The Bureau believes that the experience of other countries should be carefully considered in order that all possible provision may be made to prevent similar harm to children in the United States. The Bureau has therefore begun a brief review of foreign experience, in so far as it can be understood from available reports, and will shortly publish a series of special articles about children in war time.

A preliminary survey of the foreign material emphasizes the importance of a strict enforcement of all child-labor and school-attendance laws and a generous development of infant-welfare work by public and private agencies.

To those who are especially interested in working children, the Bureau's new report on the Employment-Certificate System in New York State will show certain points which are essential if an age limit for children's work is to be effective.

"THE COMING OF THE LORD DRAWETH NIGH"

An examination of the Scriptures on the Length of THE TIMES OF THE GENTILES WHEN Did they Begin? WHEN Will they Terminate?

The Rapture and the Revelation shown to occur at the Feast of Trumpets which is the Jewish New Year's Day

64 Page Pamphlet, Sixth Edition, Revised, 125th Thousand, Price 5c each, 30c per doz., or $2.00 per 100 Postpaid

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS

"I have never read such a scriptural calculation of the Times of the Gentiles, and I intend letting all my friends have one."

"This subject is of the utmost importance in these stirring times. We are much interested in the exposition you give of the Scriptures on the subject."

"It is surely a soulstirring and rousing word. The Scriptures you bring forward in support of the soon ending gospel age, seem very conclusive."

"Your exposition looks very reasonable to me, and according to the Book."

"It produced a profound impression on me, making me feel keenly, that my sojourn here is very brief."

"One is always thankful for a pamphlet such as yours, carefully examining these important Scriptures."

"The subject has stirred up much interest in my mind and heart."

Address: C. J. BAKER, 621 Wyandotte Street, Kansas City, Missouri

"I have always been suspicious of setting dates—but your reasoning from Scripture looks very good to me."

"I am very much interested in that piece of Scripture research, and would like to pass it on."

"Page 28 is very striking about feast of trumpets being antitypical of the Rapture."

"The Times of the Gentiles' is magnificent, one of the best things I have ever read, and carries an unusual amount of conviction."

"We have surely enjoyed the reading of this book, and are doing all we can to spread it among our customers."

"It seems to me that it would be rather difficult to prove from the Scriptures that what you say is not according to the teaching of the same."

"It is the most simple, concise, clear and biblical plea for the year day interpretation, I have seen."

Subscription price only fifty cents a year.

The American Tract Society would like to secure an agent in every section of our country to solicit subscriptions for the AMERICAN MESSENGER.

Our representatives have found it easy to secure new subscriptions, as this periodical is well known and has found favor among the best American families during the past seventy-five years.

Some of our agents have secured scores of subscriptions, and since a liberal commission is given for every new subscription obtained, they have thus realized a very desirable addition to their incomes.

Boys and girls may find here an excellent opportunity to earn some money during vacation time, if they will become agents for the AMERICAN MESSENGER.

Should any one prefer to work for a premium instead of a cash commission we are prepared to submit a choice list of attractive and useful articles which are given to those securing new subscriptions.

WHY PEOPLE SUBSCRIBE FOR THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

1. This paper is carefully edited and gives a world-wide view of the religious activities of every land.
2. Its contributed articles are prepared by some of the best and most widely known religious writers of the present time.
3. It aims to be of practical service to all its readers, of whatever age or position, especially in fostering high standards and lofty ideals.
4. It is a long established periodical, having behind it the experience of seventy-five years of successful religious journalism.
5. It gives more reading matter in a single year than is contained in a 300-page book, and all this is the work of the best writers in the religious world.
6. It makes a strong appeal to the Young Folks, not only in the special department devoted to their interests, but in many other features of the paper.
7. It is helpful to Christian workers in many ways, especially in its treatment of the Christian Endeavor Prayer-meeting Topics and its missionary news.
8. It contains bright and attractive stories, which are not only true to life but are stimulating, healthful and inspiring.
9. Its miscellaneous articles cover a wide range of subjects, and its poems and short articles are of an unusually high order.
10. It is undenominational in character, evangelical in tone, and thoroughly wholesome throughout. Its pages reflect the progress of the Kingdom in all lands, and it stands for the evangelization of the world.
11. Its subscription price is only fifty cents a year, and it is generally regarded as the best family religious illustrated monthly published at so low a price.
12. It wins its way on its merits. In thousands of homes it has become a family necessity, bringing help and good cheer to every member of the household, and influencing lives for time and for eternity.

If you are interested, please send us your name and address and we will furnish you with sample copies of the paper, terms and instructions.

American Messenger, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York

Christian Training for Military Camps

The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, has lent one of its professors, E. O. Sellers, to the International Y. M. C. A. for evangelistic service in the English Camps. He gave some time last year to the Canadian camps. The Institute is desirous of living up to its pseudonym of "The West Point of Christian Service," by being prepared for any demand on its student body for workers in the United States camps in the evangelistic field, or through the channel of the Red Cross or in other ways. Some of its graduates at the close of the last term were called into Christian work in the army and others are expecting service as chaplains in the navy. The training is entirely free for Christian men and women of any state, nation, or denomination when references are satisfactory.

"Tithing and Prosperity"

Until August 30, 1917, the 100-page volume, entitled "Tithing and Prosperity," also enough of two tithing pamphlets to supply one to each family represented in any Church or Sunday School will be sent gratis to any address on very easy conditions.

Write for samples and particulars, mentioning the name of this paper, to The Layman Company, 143 No. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

WHAT!
NO SLEEP
LAST NIGHT?

If coffee was the cause change to
POSTUM
and sleep!

"There's a Reason"

THE TREASURY

SPECIAL NOTICE

Owing to occasional losses of letters, containing money, we would request friends and donors of the American Tract Society to remit by check or Post Office Money Order, which latter can always be duplicated in case of loss.

Receipts of the American Tract Society During April, 1917

Total Donations (Including $272.21 for Special Objects) $1,728.36.

CALIFORNIA, $17.58.
Mennoniten Gemeinde, $3.58; Redlands Church Offering, $10; Mr. Hodges, $2; Mr. Touzcan, for Colportage Work, $1; Mrs. Alexander, $1.

CONNECTICUT, $122.10.
A Friend, $5; Mr. Learned, $10.10; Mr. Cowles, $1; Mrs. Davison, $10; Mrs. Russ, $5; Mrs. Hawley, for Soldier's Text Books, $5; Mrs. Chapman, $5; Mrs. Wade, $10; Norwich, Church Offering, $40; Pomfret, Women's Benevolent Society of the First Congregational Church, for Soldier's Text Books, $5; Miss Couzelman, $1; Mrs. Colton, $2; Rev. Mr. Washburn, $1; Mrs. Alyn, $1; Mr. Prior, $5; Mr. Burgess, Thank Offering for children Foster, Harold and Rachel in Heaven, $15; Mr. Wakeman, $1.

DELAWARE, $2.50.
Smyna, Church Collection, $2; Mr. Warren, $0.50.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, $14.
Washington, Church Offering, $14.

IDAHO, $1.
Mr. Cowden, for Soldier's Text Books, $1.

ILLINOIS, $17.
Miss Derrrel, $2; Miss Jonkman, $1; Mr. Schmidt, $1; Mattson, Church Offering, $5; Mr. Kent, $5; Mr. Schaeffer, $2; Mrs. Clark, $1.

INDIANA, $19.92.
Port Wayne, Church Collection, $1; Mr. Weidman, $5; Mr. Kemper, $1; Rev. Mr. Nagler, $3.50; Mrs. Petrig, $0.50; Greensburg, Church Offering, $3.92; "A Friend," $5.

IOWA, $3.90.
Mrs. Mathews, $0.50; Mr. Wetzley, $0.15; Sibley, Presbyterian Gemeinde, $3.25.

KANSAS, $36.80.
Clinton, Church Collection, $1; Mr. Muller, $2; Mrs. Gaeddert, $0.30; Mr. Holcomb, for Soldier's Text Books, $1; Elmo, Sunday School Collection, $15; Mr. Seaman, $3; Baldwin City, Gemeinde, $2; Rev. Mr. Klingler, $0.50; Mr. Dyck, $2; Wichita, Church Offering, $10.

KENTUCKY, $8.
Mr. Hunt, for Soldier's Text Books, $2; Mr. Kelly, for Soldier's Text Books, $2.50; Misses Harriet and Laura Shaw, $1.50; Dr. Douglas, $1; Mr. Spurling, $1.

MAINE, $3.
Dea. Gray, for Soldier's Text Books, $1; Miss Cutter, $2.

MASSACHUSETTS, $156.10.
Mrs. Fenn, $10; Holyoke, Church Offering, $5; Hatfield, Church Collection, $15; Miss Talbot, $1; Mrs. Guy, $1; Mr. Peifers, $2; Mrs. Averill, $1; Mrs. Hosmer, $1; Mr. Farley, $5; Mrs. Freeman, $2; Miss Helen Cobb, $2.50; Miss Annie Cobb, $2.50; Mr. Simmons, $1; Miss Boynton, $0.50; Mr. Bacon, $1; Mrs. Gregory, $5; Miss King, $5; Miss Bodman, $2; Northfield, Sunday School Offering, $5.31; Mrs. Downe, $2; Miss Holmes, $2; Miss Clark, for Soldier's Text Books, $2; Wellesley Hills, Church Collection, $14.29; Mrs. Palmer, for Literature for Soldiers, $2; Mrs. Woods, $5; Mrs. Clary, $1; "A Friend," $2; Mrs. Calins, $1; Miss Houghton, $10; Miss Sparrow, for Soldier's Text Books, $5; Mrs. Creed, $1; Mrs. Fales, $5; Mrs. Bruce, for Immigrant Literature, $1; Mrs. Johnson, $1; Miss Glidden, for Soldier's Text Books, $2; Mrs. Brigham, $1; Misses Georgia and Lillian Hilton, $10; Mr. Plumer, $5; Mrs. Plumer, $2; Mrs. King, $10; Mrs. Holt, $5.

MICHIGAN, $58.
Highland Park, Church Offering, $5; Mrs. Williamson, for Latin America, $10; Mrs. Findlay, $2; Grand Rapids, Church Collection, $40; Mrs. Earl, Easter Offering, $1.

MINNESOTA, $12.25.
Miss Clynick, $1; Mr. Schramm, $0.65; Mr. Eaton, $5; Mr. Stomberg, $0.30; Butterfield, Mennoniten Simmons Nahverein, $5; Mr. Bender, $0.30.

MISSOURI, $212.
St. Louis, Church Collection, $50; Kansas City, Church Offering, $10; Mrs. Ten Brock, $25; Mr. Hall, $2; Centerville, Church Offering, $1; Mr. Handfield, $2; A. C. Clayton & Sons Printing Co., $5; Miss Davis, $1; Mr. Bacon, $2; Mrs. Booth, $5; Mr. Buckingham, $1; Mrs. Coulter, $1; Mr. Dyer, $2; Mr. Fogg, $5; Mr. Forber, $5; Mr. Frisco, $2; Mr. Gallup, $5; Mr. Gentles, $1; Mr. Gentry, $5; W. F. Gooding Box Co., $5; Mr. Green, $3; Mr. Habig, $2; Mr. Harpot, $20; Lanzingberg Bros. Co., $10; Mr. Lubke, Jr., $5; Miss Ludington, $10; Dr. McLean, $5; Mr. Mas, $5; Mr. Nicholas, $5; Miss Peter, $2; Mr. Peter, $5; Shipley Hardware Co., $5.

NEBRASKA, $46.76.
Omaha, Church Offering, $5; Mr. Welch, $1.30; Mrs. Schneider, $2; Mr. Dem, $2.30; Mr. Fornoff, $10; Mr. Meisinger, Jr., $5; Mr. Fetzer, $8; "Cedar Creek," $4.16; "Anonymous," $5; Tecamah, Church Collection, $3; Omaha, Church Offering, $2.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, $20.
Mr. Rogers, $5; Mrs. Whitney, $1.

NEW JERSEY, $245.03.
Shrewsbury, Church Collection, $10; Franklin, Church Offering, $5; Passaic, Church Collection, $62.34; Mr. Rowen, for distribution of Tracts, $0.12; Mrs. Murray, $1; Mr. Doolittle, $25; Rolle, Church Collection, $10; Passaic, Church Offering, $7.02; Lakewood, Church Collection, $10.43; Mrs. Hyman, $0.65; Mr. Holden, $3; Mr. Sutphen, for distribution of Tracts, $0.25; Mr. Donohue, $2; Hoboken, Church Offering, $5; Ashbury Park, Church Collection, $7.07; Weehawken, Church Offering, $50; Jersey City, Church Collection, $2; Riverton, Church Offering, $5; Mrs. Harris, $2; Mr. Moore, $2; Mrs. Nicoll, $5; Miss Carson, $2; Miss Day, $1; Miss Sheldon, $5; Mrs. Bate, $1; Mrs. Clark, for distribution of Tracts and Testaments, $2.15; Dr. Lemmerz, $3.

NEW MEXICO, $3.
Santa Fe, Church Collection, $3.

NEW YORK, $230.21.
Mr. Lincoln, for Soldier's Text Books, $5; Mr. Colgate, $25; Mr. Washington Presbyterian Church to Constitute Mrs. Hamilton a Life Member, $30; New York City, Church Offering, $5.53; Brooklyn, Church Offering, $5; Mrs. Tarbox, $5; Brooklyn, Church Collection, $10; Fayetteville, Church Offering, $10; Watertown, Church Offering, $2; Lansingburgh, Church Collection, $5; Waterford, Church Offering, $7.15; Pelham Manor, Church Collection, $10; Coxsackie, Church Collection, $11.01; Mrs. Sankey, for Soldier's Text Books, $1; Forest Hills, Church Collection, $5; Mr. Mosely, for Soldier's Text Books, $3; Kinderhook, Church Collection, $15.82; Miss Simkin, $2; Hageron, Church Offering, $9.36; Mrs. Hoyt, $1; Brooklyn, Church Collection, $14.34; Mrs. Fuchs, $2; Corning, Church Collection, $10; Mr. Woehrl, $1; Utica, Sunday School Offering, $5; General Ludington, $1; Miss Andrews, $1; Rev. Mr. Fairhead, $1; Mr. Hamlin, $5; Mr. Edwards, $20; Mrs. Swartz, $1; Miss Stevenson, for Literature for Brazil, $1.

NORTH CAROLINA, $3.50.
Mrs. Phillips, $1; Mr. Stockton, $2.50.

NORTH DAKOTA, $6.
Mr. Kelly, for Soldier's Text Books, $2; Miss Unkenholz, $4.

OHIO, $71.23.
Wooster, Church Offering, $1; Cincinnati, Church Collection, $5; Niles, Church Offering, $0.38; Rev. Mr. Rusch, $0.30; Miss Compher, $0.75; Mrs. Leuders, $1.65; Mr. List, $0.65; Mrs. Deering, $1; Mrs. Seymour, $25; Elmore, Church Offering, $3; Mr. McCarty, $5; Norwood, Sunday School Collection, $12.50; Miss King, $15.

OKLAHOMA, $6.75.
Oklahoma City, Church Collection, $5; Zerger & Co., $1.75.

OREGON, $1.65.
Mrs. Sigrist, $1.15; Portland, Missions Frauen Verein, for Christian Literature for Prisoners of War, $0.50.

PENNSYLVANIA, $291.65.
Grove City, Church Collection, $25; Lock Haven, Church Offering, $5; Philadelphia, Church Collection, $22.37; Miss Bruen, $25; Pittsburgh, Church Offering, $2.46; Monessen, Church Offering, $1; Carriek, Church Collection, $10; Shippensburg, Church Offering, $2.70; Rev. Mr. Perry, for Soldier's Text Books, $3; Washington, Church Collection, $25; Philadelphia, Church Offering, for Distribution of Tracts, $5; Mrs. Haines, $5; Mrs. Wagner, $0.65; Danville, Church Collection, $5; Erie, Church Offering, $5; Mr. Marsh, for Soldier's Text Books, $10; Mr. Bare, $5; Lansdowne, Sabbath School Collection, $10; Mr. Ludington, $5; Miss Pearson, $10; Mrs. Strong, $5; Estate of Francis W. Lang, $25; Dr. Leet, M. D., $5; Mr. Grover, $1; Mrs. Hooper, $1; Miss Scott, $2; Miss Kell, $1; Mr. McCormick, Jr., $25; Erie, Church Collection, $25; Mahoningtown, Church Offering, $4.47; Mr. Carson, $5; Mr. Jamison, $5; Mr. Wardrop, $5.

RHODE ISLAND, $50.
Providence, Church Collection, $50.

SOUTH DAKOTA, $2.05.
Mr. Mansager, for Soldier's Text Books, $1; Rev. Mr. De Buhr, $1.05.

TENNESSEE, $25.
Knoxville, Church Collection, $10; Miss Muse, for distribution of Tracts, $15.

UTAH, $2.
Mr. Pratt, $2.

VERMONT, $30.
Dea. Cross, for Soldier's Text Books for a Regiment, $30.

VIRGINIA, $1.
Mr. Blackstone, $1.

WISCONSIN, $0.65.
Mr. Boehel, Sr., $0.65.

FOREIGN, $6.73.
Canada, "Ungenannt Canada," $6.73; Mr. Schon, $1.

LEGACIES, $7,782.35.
West Manchester Township, Pa., Estate of Jacob Bare, on account, $1,482.35; Middletown, N. Y., Estate of Mary E. Robson, $300; Philipstown, N. Y., Estate of Anna B. Warner, on account, $6,000.

INCOME FROM TRUST FUNDS, $228.75.
Income for Missionary Work, $228.75.

Books for Prisoners

A grant of books for the Prison Relief Society in Tennessee was acknowledged by the President of the Society, Mrs. Mattie E. Hunter. In her letter addressed to Dr. Judson Swift, General Secretary of the American Tract Society, she writes:

"I thank you so much for your kindness in sending the books and am sure the boys in the Branch Prison will be greatly delighted and benefited. Thank you for your expressions of interest in my work. I am so thankful that God has called me to this needy field. It is in some ways a hard and, to the human eye, a barren field, but the Lord of the harvest I am sure will give the increase, and there will be a time of reaping."

A Welcome Library Gift

In response to a call for books for a library in Mt. Pleasant, Utah, a grant of selected volumes was forwarded by the American Tract Society. This gift is gratefully acknowledged in the following communication from Rev. R. B. Norton, Pastor of the First Presbyterian Church:

"An express package of twelve splendid books has arrived in response to my request for Christian books for our public library in this Mormon community. I am deeply grateful to you for the interest you have shown in our work, and for the excellent selection of books. The attractive bindings will aid in the circulation of the volumes."

"I have pasted on the inside front cover of each volume this legend: 'This Book was given to the Mt. Pleasant Public Library by the American Tract Society of New York City through the Presbyterian Church of Mt. Pleasant, Utah.'"

"Today I will place the books in the Library, and they will begin their Christian mission at once."

"A Sympathetic Note"

The AMERICAN MESSENGER is sent to many Theological Seminaries in our land. Rev. E. Lyman Hood, M.A., Ph.D., President of Atlanta Theological Seminary, has sent this acknowledgment of the copy received by that institution, which is the only Congregational Divinity School in the South.

"Again I write to thank you for a complimentary copy of the AMERICAN MESSENGER, which has been duly received and placed on file during the year in the reading room of the Seminary."

"The Southland is both evangelical and evangelistic; consequently there is a sympathetic note always heard in the pages of this paper. We trust that the American Tract Society will be able to do even more for the Southern people in the coming years. In our country districts, the people are still poor and illiterate to a degree not known in the North. We are therefore grateful for any help from any quarter."

A Great Inspiration

Some kindly words of appreciation concerning our paper have been written by one of our subscribers in Decker-ville, Mich., which we desire to share with our readers. In renewing her subscription for another year this friend says:

"I am truly glad that I can have the AMERICAN MESSENGER yet another year. It is ever a welcome visitor, and I can never tell you how great an inspiration it has been to me and what help it has given me in enabling me to understand more clearly the way of the Lord. May God ever bless you and may many homes be helped by the coming of this paper is the wish of your friend."

Donations

DONATIONS for the missionary work of the American Tract Society may be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

TERMS: Subscription price, 50 cts. a year, payable in advance. In clubs of five or more, 30 cts. each. Club subscriptions mailed to separate addresses, if desired. Postage on foreign subscription, 24 cents additional. Canadian subscription, 12 cents additional. Single copies, 5 cents each.

On account of the additional charge which is made by the New York Post Office for mailing to subscribers in New York and Bronx Counties (Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx), no club rates, cash commissions or premiums will be given for subscriptions that must be sent to persons residing in those Counties. Each subscription in New York or Bronx County must be at the rate of 50 cents net.

Remit by Express, Money Order, Draft, Post Office Order or Registered Letter. For very small amounts, postage stamps may be sent at the risk of the sender.

RENEWALS: The date opposite your name shows to what time the subscription has been paid, and a change in the date is the receipt for renewal.

CHANGES: When sending change of address, be sure to send the old address as well as the new one.

OUR ADVERTISERS: We believe that all the advertisements in this paper are from responsible advertisers, and it is our intention to admit only such to our columns. Should, however, any of our subscribers find that any advertiser does not live up to his agreements, we would consider it a favor if they will inform us, and we will at any time give prompt attention to any complaint.

We do not, of course, guarantee that all persons will take the same point of view with the advertisers, and it must be borne in mind that the claims and statements made by advertisers are their assertions, and not ours.

Our readers will confer a favor upon advertisers and also upon us if they will mention the American Messenger when answering advertisements.

FIELD SECRETARIES AND COLPORTAGE SUPERINTENDENTS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.

Rev. Isaac Pierson, Field Secretary for New England, 50 Bromfield Street, Boston, Mass.

Rev. A. W. Reinhard, Field Secretary and Superintendent of Colportage for the Western and Northwestern States, 721 South 37th Street, Omaha, Nebraska.

Rev. George Whitefort, Superintendent of Colportage, Southern Agency, Crichton, R.F.D., Mobile Co., Ala.

CHOICE PREMIUMS

WOULD YOU LIKE to earn some of the attractive and useful premiums that we offer for securing new subscribers? A copy of the AMERICAN MESSENGER containing a full list of these very desirable premiums will be sent on request.

AMERICAN MESSENGER, Park Ave. & 40th St., N. Y. City

Have You Made a Will?

If you have, did you remember the American Tract Society, and in proportion to the good it has been doing for nearly a century? If you have not made any bequest in behalf of the Tract Society, you are earnestly asked to add a codicil to your will to that effect. If you do so, you certainly will be happy in the thought that when you have been translated to your Heavenly home you will still be doing something to perpetuate and enlarge the great and important work of the American Tract Society. Please do not forget.

Our Book Table

Publishers will confer a favor by sending us announcements of their new books. So far as space will allow, we will ask publishers to send us for review such books as in our judgment will be of interest and value to our readers. We do not promise to review books that are sent to us unsolicited.

Any book here mentioned will be sent upon receipt of the given price (plus postage in the case of "net" books), if ordered from the "American Tract Society," Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York City.

The War of Democracy.—This volume presents the causes and conditions of the European War as seen from the point of view of the Entente Allies. Its twenty-one chapters have been written by some fourteen different writers, among whom are James Bryce, Arthur J. Balfour, Lloyd George, Edward Grey and Mr. G. M. Trevelyan of Great Britain and various representatives of France and Belgium. The strong interest in this volume lies in the fact that therein have been brought together for the first time authoritative statements of the aims of the Allies collected especially for American readers. (Cloth, 441 pages. Prices, $2.00. Doubleday, Page & Co., New York.)

Their Call to Service.—By Philip E. Howard.

This little volume contains an illuminating study in the partnership of business and religion as illustrated in the life stories of ten men, whose names have become familiar to almost every American household. It demonstrates out of the actual experience of practical and successful Christian business men the truth of the statement that there should be business in our religion and religion in our business. Indeed, it goes a step further, and shows that religion is our supreme business and that all our affairs should be adjusted so as to further the interests of the Kingdom of God, to which we owe our un-failing and complete allegiance. Among those whose life story is briefly told in these inspiring pages are General Samuel C. Armstrong, George H. Stuart, John H. Converse, John S. Huyler, Cyrus H. McCormick, and Henry Clay Trumbull. (Cloth, 157 pages. Price, 60 cents net. Westminster Press, Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia, Pa.)

When Faith Flash Out: Essays in Spiritual Replenishment.—By David Baines Griffiths, M. A.

Here is a choice collection of essays, sparkling with vitality and dealing with subjects that are of deepest interest to all thoughtful minds. The author is a writer of rare charm, and he handles his varied themes in a way not only to delight and entertain, but also to enlighten and inspire his readers. There are twenty-five essays in all, and it is the third essay in the book that has given the name to this attractive volume. Other titles that illustrate the trend of the author's thought are, "The Beatitude of Insight," "Faith and Fidelity," "The Scholar's Yoke," "Badge of the Gentle Heart," "The Spiritual Sources of Democracy," and "Bring Back the Age of Gold." Essays are not always interesting to the general reader, but anyone who is fortunate enough to scan the pages of this volume will find therein a source of unalloyed pleasure, for these essays fascinate the reader by their subtle thought, their beautiful imagery and their wealth of illustration. (Cloth, 192 pages. Price, $1.00 net. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York.)

An African Trail.—By Jean Kenyon Mackenzie.

Those who follow the trail indicated in this book will find themselves face to face with a picture of conditions in Africa that is most illuminating. Here is an intimate and withal a sympathetic portrayal of the Bulu, first in his native pagan state, and then as he appears when he has come to a saving knowledge of the Gospel and has experienced the great change which Christianity brings into every human heart and life. Miss Mackenzie, the author of this volume, is an experienced missionary and a skilled writer, and in this work she has made a valuable contribution to the missionary literature dealing with Africa. (Illustrated, 222 pages. Paper covers, 30 cents net; boards, 50 cents net. Central Committee on the United Study of Foreign Missions, West Medford, Mass.)

Books and Reading

It has been well said, that books are the best of friends, since they advise without flattery, and reprove without anger. What an emporium of wisdom is the mind of the widely read man! Truly, as our Lord declared, the Scribe instructed in the Kingdom of heaven is like the merchant bringing out of his treasury things new and old. Carlyle's simile was apt, when he compared the trained intellect to a well-stored arsenal. His own writings have shown how ably a deep knowledge of literature can be used in the spiritual combat of noble ideals against the base.

The thoughtful gather truth from the mart of many lands. They may not speak often, but when they do, it is as though they had opened their treasury to our wondering minds. It is not so much what is said in the sermon, or written in the book, that has impressed us most; rather, what is unsaid, that which a chastened restraint conceals—the reference, the quotation, that flash of light, which reveals back of the spoken word deep depths of knowledge—vistas that lead out to the infinite. We know that there is an intellect stored with truth as Joseph filled the granaries of Egypt in the years of plenty. Hence Bacon wrote: "Reading maketh a full man, conference a ready man, and writing an exact man. Therefore, if a man write little he had need of a great memory; if he confer little he had need of a present wit; and if he read little, he had need of much cunning to seem to know that he doth not." So, "reading maketh a full man," yet not reading in a trout-fly manner, skimming along the surface of shallow pools—not the reading of many books (non multa, sed multum) not many things, but much; the deep reading of great books.—SELECTED.

Judge Not

Judge not; the workings of his brain

And of his heart thou canst not see;

What looks to thy dim eyes a stain,

In God's pure light may only be

A scar, brought from some well-won field,

Where thou wouldst only faint and yield.

The look, the air, that frets thy sight

May be a token that below

The soul has closed in deadly fight

With some infernal fiery foe,

Whose glance would scorch thy smiling grace,

And cast thee shuddering on thy face!

The fall thou darest to despise,—

May be the angel's slackened hand

Has suffered it, that he may rise

And take a firmer, surer stand;

Or, trusting less to earthly things,

May henceforth learn to use his wings.

And judge none lost; but wait and see,

With hopeful pity, not disdain;

The depth of the abyss may be

The measure of the height of pain

And love and glory that may raise

This soul to God in after days!

—ADELAIDE ANNE PROCTER.

Our Medicine Chest

The favored suitor rang the door bell.

"Is Miss Blank at home?" he inquired.

"O yes, sir," replied the maid, and she ushered him into the drawing room.

Having waited for almost an hour, he summoned the maid again.

"Did you forget to tell Miss Blank that I was here?" he asked impatiently.

"No, sir," was the reply. "Miss Blank hasn't got back from shopping yet."

"But you said she was at home."

"Yes, sir. She told me positively that she was always at home to you sir."

First Horseman—"Pulling, is he?"

Why don't you try riding him on the curb?"

Second Horseman: "Ride him on the kerb? Good heavens, I can't scarcely ride 'im in the middle of the road!"

Wife (enthusiastically): "How much do you think we took in at the bazaar?"

Husband (quietly)—"How many, you mean."

"Pa, what is a diplomat?"

"A diplomat, my son, is a man who remembers a lady's birthday, but forgets her age."

Maude: "What makes you think his intentions are serious?"

Mabel: "When he first began to call,

he used to talk about the books I like to read."

Maude: "And now?"

Mabel: "Now he talks about the things he likes to eat."

During a social evening a woman sang for the guests. One of the guests turned to a meek-looking little man sitting at his side and said: "How awful! Who can she be?" "That," replied the man addressed, "is my wife." "Oh, I h-b-eg your pardon!" stuttered the other. "She's really a—I know she'd sing beautifully

if she made a better selection of her music. Who do you suppose wrote that song?" "I am the author of that song!"

replied the meek-looking little man.

"Do animals possess the sentiment of affection?" asked the teacher of small

Margaret. "Yes, ma'am, almost always."

"Correct," said the teacher. Turning to young Harold: "And now tell me what animal has the greatest natural fondness for man." With but a slight pause the little fellow answered, "Woman."

Jones—Do you know, I fancy I have quite a literary bent.

Friend—All right, old boy. Keep on and you'll be worse than bent; you'll be broke.

Willie (aged four)—Has you got any more speaking tubes?

Telephone Repairer—Yes, my little man; lots of 'em.

Willie—Well, I wish you would put one in our baby, 'cause he can't speak a word.

"Why do you consider women superior to men in intelligence?"

"A bald-headed man buys hair restorer by the quart, doesn't he?"

"Er, yes."

"Well, a woman doesn't waste time on hair restorer; she buys hair."

As the stage coach careened toward the edge of the cliff the timid tourist gazed anxiously down at the brawling stream hundreds of feet below. "Do people fall over this precipice often?"

she asked. The driver clucked to his broncos. "No, madam," he returned placidly; "never but once."

Pat was in the museum looking at a copy of the "Winged Victory." "And what may yez call thot?" he asked an attendant. "That is a statue of Victory, sir," was the answer. Pat surveyed the headless and armless statue with renewed interest. "Vichtry, is it?" he said.

"Thin, begorry, Oid loike to see the other fellow."

The Composition of Coca-Cola and its Relation to Tea

Prompted by the desire that the public shall be thoroughly informed as to the composition and dietetic character of Coca-Cola, the Company has issued a booklet giving a detailed analysis of its recipe which is as follows:

Water, sterilized by boiling (carbonated); sugar, granulated, first quality; fruit flavoring extracts with caramel; acid flavorings, citric (lemon) and phosphoric; essence of tea—the refreshing principle.

The following analysis, by the late Dr. John W. Mallet, Fellow of the Royal Society and for nearly forty years Professor of Chemistry in the University of Virginia, shows the comparative stimulating or refreshing strength of tea and Coca-Cola, measured in terms of the refreshing principle:

Black tea—1 cupful..... 1.54
(hot) (5 fl. oz.)

Green tea—1 glassful..... 2.02
(cold) (8 fl. oz. exclusive of ice)

Coca-Cola—1 drink, 8 fl. oz..... 1.21
(fountain) (prepared with 1 fl. oz. Syrup)

Coca-Cola—1 drink, 8 fl. oz..... 1.12
(bottlers) (prepared with 1 fl. oz. Syrup)

From the above recipe and analysis, which are confirmed by all chemists who have analyzed these beverages, it is apparent that Coca-Cola is a carbonated, fruit-flavored modification of tea of a little more than one-half its stimulating strength.

A copy of the booklet referred to above will be mailed free on request, and The Coca-Cola Company especially invites inquiry from those who are interested in pure food and public health propaganda. Address

The Coca-Cola Co., Dept. J., Atlanta, Ga., U. S. A.

Complete $1.40 Novel for 50 Cents

"THE ROAD TO UNDERSTANDING"

By ELEANOR H. PORTER, Author of "Pollyanna"

THIS delightful story, now appearing serially in the Christian Herald, has all the sweetness, inspiration and human appeal of the "Pollyanna" stories, so justly famous, which first appeared in the pages of the Christian Herald. It is charmingly written, and in the telling Mrs. Porter reveals a truly wonderful insight into human nature—especially the feminine side of it.

It is a love story, the best that has ever come from her pen, with a plot novel, and cleverly worked out.

"The Road to Understanding" will continue in every issue of the Christian Herald for several months. It is also published in book form at $1.40. You will get this story complete by taking advantage of the introductory offer noted in coupon.

BILLY SUNDAY'S NEW YORK REVIVAL

BILLY Sunday's revival meetings, which are now in progress in New York, are the biggest ever held. The Tabernacle seats 20,000 persons, who listen twice a day to the evangelist. Forty thousand people hear him speak daily! More than 300 churches are actively interested in the movement. A special effort is being made to enroll 50,000 men in the Bible classes. Among the picturesque features

It might almost be called a problem novel—though it isn't. But we mustn't anticipate, preferring to let those who read the story find out for themselves all about Helen, what she did, and why, and what happened afterward.

In illustrating the story Mrs. Blumenschein has caught the spirit of Mrs. Porter's theme and the personality of her characters, so that the story is one of those rare ones in which story and pictures are in gratifying harmony.

are the trained choruses of 2,000 voices each, arranged in three distinct choirs—that is to say 6,000 voices.

The Christian Herald is publishing a weekly sermon by Billy Sunday, selected by himself, during his campaign in New York, and, being on the spot and in touch with the great evangelist, we believe our descriptions will give an intimate insight into this the greatest of all revivals.

THE GREATER UNITED STATES

By FRANK G. CARPENTER

THE Christian Herald has just begun publication of a series of travel articles by Mr. Carpenter. The aim of these travels is to learn just what the United States has in resources and industry, and how they may be protected, developed and made most efficient for the American people.

Mr. Carpenter will make extensive trips covering the great agricultural and industrial centers. He will take up the great industries and show the new things that are taking place in them, especially drugs, dyes, etc. These articles will deal with New England, with the Newest South, with the bread and meat lands of the Mississippi Valley and will tell what is going on in and about the Great Lakes from Buffalo to Duluth.

Mr. Carpenter will visit and tell about the fast-growing Southwest, and also the Northwest and the Pacific Slope.

The Rockies, with their gold and silver, and the mountains of copper now being mined with steam shovels, will give interesting stories, as will also Uncle Sam's work in exploiting our National Parks, and in reclaiming the desert and in draining the swamps. Don't miss this series of articles; see coupon below.

TRAVEL STORIES FROM THE PHILIPPINES AND CHINA

By MAYNARD OWEN WILLIAMS

MR. Williams has had unusual opportunities for studying conditions in the Orient and, as Christian Herald readers already know, he has a most felicitous way of writing. His series of letters from Japan have been widely and warmly appreciated. Mr. Williams seems to catch the spirit of the Oriental people and gain a clear insight into their customs and institutions. He also has special talent for surveying and estimating the cumulative value of Christian mission work.

Mr. Williams having completed his travels for the Christian

Herald through Japan is now making an extensive tour through the Philippines to be followed by a trip through China. His experiences and observations will be embodied in a series of articles that will be of intense interest. The articles on the Philippines will be especially interesting as they will tell of the life of the wonderful Igorrotes under the new territorial government of the United States. The new Republic of China will also afford unusual matter of very timely value. Note introductory offer in coupon below.

THE AGE OF PROPHETIC FULFILLMENT

By DR. JAMES M. GRAY, D.D., Dean Moody Bible Institute

THIS forthcoming series on "The Mountain Peaks of Prophecy" to appear in the Christian Herald will shed light on the World's Great Problems. The series will include five or six articles, and will be among the outstanding events of the coming months. They will be welcomed by all Bible lovers.

Among earnest Christian people everywhere, there is a growing conviction that we are living in an age of wonderful events that need spiritual interpretation. One of the ablest thinkers in England, H. G. Wells, whose writings on the war have been widely read on both sides of the Atlantic, in a new book just issued boldly declares that organized Christianity is unable even to influence, much less to settle, the world's quarrels. He proclaims the conviction that nothing short of "the world Kingdom of God" can do it, and that the time is drawing near. Dr. Gray's articles turn the Bible Searchlight on the great prophetic mysteries, and give the spiritual interpretation needed. Don't miss even one of these contributions.

INTRODUCTORY FOUR MONTHS' SUBSCRIPTION

TO THE

CHRISTIAN HERALD

CONTAINING ABOVE SPECIAL FEATURES

50c

Everyone taking advantage of this offer will be sent all the installments of "The Road to Understanding"

INTRODUCTORY COUPON

CHRISTIAN HERALD,
539 Bible House, New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen: For the enclosed 50 cents, send the Christian Herald for 4 months including all the installments of Mrs. Porter's new story, "The Road to Understanding," to Name.....

Address.....

INTRODUCTORY FOUR MONTHS' SUBSCRIPTION

TO THE

CHRISTIAN HERALD

CONTAINING ABOVE SPECIAL FEATURES

50c

Everyone taking advantage of this offer will be sent all the installments of "The Road to Understanding"

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS LIBRARY

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

Vol. 75

JULY, 1917

No 7

"THE MINUTE MAN" AT CONCORD BRIDGE, MASSACHUSETTS

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY, NEW YORK

H. E. FRITZ

Our Honor Roll

On Our Honor Roll are placed the names of those into whose homes the AMERICAN MESSENGER has been a constant visitor for fifty years or more. To the goodly list of names already thus enrolled we are pleased to add the name of Miss Focht of Tipton, Iowa, who writes:

"The AMERICAN MESSENGER has been in our home since the year 1845 (which is only two years after it first began publication). Mother told me that my parents had taken it from the time they were married. I have taken it myself since my parents died in 1894, and will always have it come to my home as long as I live."

Another name which we are glad to place on Our Honor Roll is that of Mr. Randolph, of Salem, West Virginia, who writes:

"My father took the AMERICAN MESSENGER more than seventy years ago, when I was a small lad. Its coming is like renewing old friendships. I love it."

We should be delighted to hear from others into whose homes the AMERICAN MESSENGER has gone for the last fifty years or more, so that we may add their names to Our Honor Roll.

Contradicting the Golden Rule

BY HELENA H. THOMAS.

IT is generally conceded that, in the part of California where the writer lives, the "Japs" excel all other nationalities in the culture of small fruits and vegetables. Hence, it is a common thing to hear a housewife say, "I prefer to buy of the Jap peddler, his vegetables are always fresh from the truck gardens."

Indeed, I, too, have come to feel that way, and count myself very fortunate in a choice I made six months ago. This particular son of the Orient, who appears at our door every week day with the most tempting fruit and vegetables the season affords, is surely an honor to his race. He is a man of about twenty-five years of age, I should judge. He has a keen, intelligent face, bright laughing eyes, and he could not be more courtly in manners if his patrons belonged to royalty.

As from time to time I have noted that he is seemingly a stranger to tricks of the trade, in his line, and that he strives not only to please but to deal honorably, I have become greatly interested in him and have asked questions which elicited the information that he is associated with an older brother in running a ranch, and raising berries and vegetables.

He gave me to understand, too, that it was his choice to cultivate, rather than peddle, but that his brother, who has been "much years" in this country, said he would never learn to talk like an American if he stuck to garden work, so he was obliged to do what was not so much to his liking.

I had not found it easy, however, betwixt and between selecting fruit and vegetables, to lead up to what I wanted to know—whether the man who so faithfully served us had become interested in the flourishing "Japanese Mission" in our city, but one morning it all came out in a most unexpected and surprising way.

I had priced some luscious looking grape-fruit, and received the reply: "Six for two bits (twenty-five cents), lady. I pick out all big ones for you!" as he reached for the largest.

"Oh, no," rejoined I, "take them just as they come. It wouldn't be fair to your other customers for me to have the best."

The Jap gave me a surprised look, and then, with a shrug of his shoulders, said, with a rising inflection.

"I think you try for to keep it, lady. I like it so."

He evidently saw that I was puzzled, and tried to make his meaning clear by adding:

"(Christian, Golden Rule, I mean, lady, you forget it not."

Unusually Attractive Premium Offers

DURING the month of July we are offering to new subscribers a Special Short Term Subscription to the AMERICAN MESSENGER, from July, 1917, to December, 1917, inclusive, (six months), for only Twenty-five Cents.

As you are a reader of the AMERICAN MESSENGER, we are confident that you appreciate its unique value. It is exceedingly helpful to young people in aiding them to participate in the Christian Endeavor Prayer Meetings, and it contains interesting and inspiring reading for every member of the family circle, whether young or old.

To those who secure Short Term Subscriptions among their friends and neighbors, we are offering the choice of a number of very attractive premiums, which will richly reward them for their co-operation with us in increasing the circulation of this paper.

For each new Short Term Subscription the sum of Twenty-five cents must be remitted in full. The subscription, as stated above, will run from July, 1917, to December, 1917, inclusive, making six issues in all. As a reward for securing such Short Term Subscriptions we present the following Offers. In each and every case the premium will be sent free and postpaid.

For Three (3) Short Term Subscriptions we will give any one of the following books, which are attractively bound in cloth:

Daily Food for Christians, Kept for the Master's Use, Advice to Young Christians, Arrow Head Light, Dairyman's Daughter, Nellie's New Home, Beside Still Water, Christian Living, Pilgrim's Progress, Fritz's Ranch, May Stanhope, Emily Ashton.

For Six (6) Short Term Subscriptions, we offer the choice of any one of the following premiums:

The New Testament with Notes (cloth bound).
A fine Fountain Pen with 14 karat solid gold nibs.
An Easy Opener Knife.
One Meat Fork (Wm. A. Rogers Ltd. Silverware).

For Eight (8) Short Term Subscriptions, we offer the choice of any one of the following:

A Pearl Handle Penknife, suitable for either lady or gentleman.
A Three Piece Child's Set, consisting of Spoon, Knife and Fork (W. A. Rogers, Ltd. Silverware).

For Ten (10) Short Term Subscriptions, we offer the choice of either of the following:

An Overland Nickel Watch, suitable for men and boys.
One Scholar's Companion Set, which contains the following articles: one Rex Fountain Pen with 14 karat gold pen, guaranteed, one filler for same, one Spear Pencil, with extra box of leads, one Magic Knife, one Rubber Eraser, one Combination Pen and Pencil Holder, and one dozen assorted Steel Pens.

For Fourteen (14) Short Term Subscriptions, we offer:

A Venus Nickel Watch, suitable for ladies.

For Fifteen (15) Short Term Subscriptions, we offer choice of the following articles in Wm. A. Rogers, Ltd. Silverware:

One half dozen Medium Forks.
One half dozen Medium Knives.
One half dozen Butter Spreaders.

For Sixteen (16) Short Term Subscriptions, we offer

A Scofield Reference Bible, cloth bound, size 5½ by 13½ inches, clear, black-faced type. An ideal Bible for Christian Endeavorers.

American Messenger, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street New York

Wishing to draw him out still further, but not on the street, I made no reply, but concluded my purchases and followed the peddler to the rear of the house and when he had emptied his basket I ventured to say:

"I judge by your remark that you are on the lookout to see if your customers live up to the Golden Rule in this so-called Christian country."

"Yes, yes," was the hesitating reply, "but I not find many. Week days, when they want the best I got for half worth, mos' times, they forget Golden Rule, See?"

Yes, I did see, but was speechless. The Jap halted, however, and then, with a catch in his voice, pointing to another block, queried:

"You know lady in that big, big house?"

I knew her only by reputation as a woman of large means, and "near," as well, so I answered in the negative, at which my interrogator said:

"She no Golden Rule Clistian! No!" It seemed difficult for him to proceed, and so I ventured:

"One cannot always judge rightly, you know."

"But I make no mistake, lady!" The Jap who was all eagerness now, as if to right himself, continued rapidly: "It was like this—My brother say to go to Mission Bible School on Sunday. 'You learn English better.' I go. The lady in that big house my teacher. My, she talk good! so much Jesus talk I think some days I want to be Clistian like her. She teach us the Golden Rule, too, an' ev'ry day after I learn that I put jus' as big berries on bottom of boxes all times. You understand, lady, I try to live it, like she say."

"Yes, I understand," was my reply, deeply touched to see how much more ready this foreigner was to put the Golden Rule into practice than many of our own people who have heard it all their lives, "and I am greatly interested, too. Please continue."

"I likes not to tell you," was the way he proceeded, with a sorry shake of the head. "But I goes not to Bible school any more! My—my teacher she talk good, but she live bad—worsen'n Pagan!"

I was too distressed for words and my looks must have betrayed me, for the Jap with a low bow, and the air of one who wanted to drop into the proverbial "knot-hole," continued:

"Excuse me, lady, if I makes you sorry, but I tells you the truth. I sure thinks much of my teacher other days—more'n anybody 'cept in Japan. Her Jesus talk som' good till—till I peddle. When I sees her come to my wagon for to buy of me I so glad I laugh out loud. But, lady, I tell you true, she forget Golden Rule, 'cept Sunday. She fin' fault! She want the best I got an' beat me down so's I not one cent make. Some days she say 'I got no money,' an' then she forget to pay an' gets mad when I ask her. So I quit her, an' I quit Bible school, too. Golden Rule no good for her, no good for me!"

It is needless to add that the one to whom he had so unburdened himself endeavored to make the "Almost persuaded" Jap see his mistake in thus stifling his inclinations to accept Christ because of the unfaithfulness of his teacher; but her efforts evidently availed little. He listened, with head bent low, but the only comment he made was:

"Some day maybe I forget how she fool me! I try for it, lady!"

A Church Revived

The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago endeavors to perpetuate the spirit of its founder, Dwight L. Moody, and to minister to neglected classes and weaker churches. A member of its Extension Department, Rev. C. P. Meeker, recently conducted an interesting series of meetings at Niles, Ohio, in a section of the city south of the river, where only one church edifice was standing. At one time services were conducted in this building in the Welsh tongue, but had been abandoned for years. In this section was a large and growing community without church privileges.

When Mr. Meeker and his singer arrived, they found that no preparation of any kind had been made for the meetings. They had to begin by getting the furnace of the old church repaired, the carpet mended, and the broken window panes replaced. They provided oil lamps and made a cinder walk through the mud so the people could reach the church.

After getting the building in shape, they sought to reach the people by a house to house canvas and by advertising. Much time was spent in earnest prayer. The audiences at first were very small, but steadily grew as the work continued, so that before the close of the meetings, the church was packed and interest at white heat.

There were about eighty professed conversions, and at the end of the four weeks, a new church organization was formed with a Sunday School of ninety-three. This enrolment has been increased to 125. The church now has the largest prayer meeting in the city, with an attendance of seventy or more, and 150 or more at the Sunday evening services. This is an illustration of what can be done in neglected communities where the old time Gospel is preached in the old time power.

Christian Endeavor Convention Postponed

For patriotic reasons and in the interests of the safety of the thousands of young people who would have been entrusted to their care the trustees of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, with the indorsement of the local Convention committee, have postponed for one year, if the war shall then be over, the International Christian Endeavor Convention which had been called for New York, July 4-9, 1917.

Arrangements for the Convention were virtually completed, and several thousands of dollars had already been expended. But with the heavy additional burdens placed upon the transportation systems of the country as the result of war, the added risk or travel, and the necessity for conserving every public and private energy of the nation, the United Society came unanimously to the conclusion that this radical step must be taken.

The advice of competent authorities was virtually unanimous; the facts before the trustees, which were supported by letters from officers of some of the largest State unions, left the committee no other choice.

It is planned now to hold a small conference of field-secretaries, State presidents, and other representatives in some central place of the country, July 3-6 inclusive, for the vitally essential planning and consultation of State and national leaders.

In the meantime the Campaign for Millions will be vigorously pressed, and all other activities of Christian Endeavor will go forward.

The American Messenger

"Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Luke 2:10

Vol. 75. No. 7

JULY, 1917

Copyright, 1917, by American Tract Society.

Terms: 50 cents per annum
Single copy, 5 cents

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

PUBLISHED MONTHLY

By THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

OFFICERS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President.

JOHN HENRY JOWETT, M.A., D.D., Vice-President.

JUDSON SWIFT, D.D., General Secretary.

LOUIS TAG, Treasurer.

REV. HENRY LEWIS, Ph.D., Recording Secretary.

All of the above-named officers should be addressed at
Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Rev. David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.

Rev. Charles Carroll Albertson, D.D.

Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.

Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D.

Rev. George Ernest Merriam.

Entered at the Post Office in New York as second-class matter.

Patriotic Sunday

From several different quarters the suggestion has come that the first Sunday of July, which this year falls upon July 1st, should be observed as Patriotic Sunday. This suggestion is especially appropriate in view of the fact that the date indicated is the Sunday immediately preceding Independence Day.

The International Sunday School Association has appointed a Special Committee to formulate and direct a campaign whereby the Sunday Schools of our land may be enlisted in some form of patriotic service during the existence of the war in which our country is now engaged. This Committee has urged that special emphasis be given to Patriotic Sunday, and that an effort be made on that day to enlist all Sunday School members in some form of beneficent service for our country.

Patriotic Sunday should be made a day for supplication to the Throne of Grace for the divine blessing upon our own country and its Allies in this time of supreme trial in the world's history. Prayer should be offered in behalf of the leaders of our nation that they may receive divine wisdom and guidance so that they may rightly direct both the civil and military policy of our country. Petition should also be made that the people of our land may be actuated only by the highest of patriotic motives so that they may see eye to eye and stand shoulder to shoulder in defense of our precious heritage of liberty and may fight manfully so that the other peoples of the earth may also enjoy the blessings of freedom.

It has been suggested by the Federal Council of Churches that on Patriotic Sunday the subject of the Conservation of Food be considered in all the pulpits of our land and that an effort be made through the co-operation of religious and civic bodies to enlist every American citizen in a campaign for Food Saving.

On this subject Mr. Herbert C. Hoover, the National Food Director, has written to all the pastors of the country to this effect:

"As a minister of God, a leader of the people and a lover of liberty and of your fellow men, your co-operation is earnestly desired and greatly needed. In such a time as this the people naturally turn to the church. It will be a calamity to the nation and to the churches if their chosen ministers neglect to exercise their proper leadership in the great cause of feeding a world in need. For the world is in want of food.

"To meet the needs of the war and of the world we must produce generously, give freely to our allies, ourselves eat as much, but no more than we need, and especially save the waste. Lasting disgrace will fall upon us if lack of self-restraint should prevent us from taking our proper part in the great conflict against the doctrine that might makes right."

In this matter of food saving we must naturally look largely to the women in the home. We doubt not that they will eagerly respond to this appeal, for the saving of food is directly within their sphere, and without food conservation we cannot win the war upon which we have entered for the protection of American lives and for the liberation of humanity from the threatened despotism of a cruel and relentless military autocracy.

While the first Sunday of July has been designated as Patriotic Sunday, we should not limit patriotic service to this one day. Rather let each and every Sunday and week-day too, be made the occasion for continuous, self-sacrificing acts of devotion that shall serve the best and highest interests of our beloved land.

Independence Day reminds us of the heroic deeds and the loyal service performed by those of a by-gone generation in order that this nation might be made free. To those who are living to-day there has come a call for deeds of heroism and patriotic service in behalf of a cause as sacred as that for which the Continental soldiers fought in the War of the American Revolution. May the call to duty, whatever it may be, find us ready and willing to respond to the very limit of our ability.

✻ ✻ ✻

"We Brothers of 99"

A few months ago a Bible Class of thirty young men in the Student Church at Manila in the Philippine Islands organized under the name of "We Brothers of 99," the significance of the numeral 99 being that they hoped to attain that membership. As a matter of fact on a recent Sunday there were 717 members present, thus making it the largest Bible Class in the Philippine Islands.

"Practically all who joined this class were not evangelical at the time, and most of them are not yet so," writes Rev. J. L. McLaughlin, who is the World's Sunday School Secretary for the Islands, "but on a recent Sunday morning some fifty members of the class knelt at the altar and pledged membership to the church in which they had been led to find Christ."

From this and from similar classes a great harvest of recruits for the organized evangelical churches is expected. The idea of the organized class has met with a ready response among the student body, it is said, as nothing, perhaps, appeals more to the average young Filipino than the idea of organization and office holding. This situation presents a great opportunity, especially when we consider that the majority of the student body in the Philippines are without religious belief of any kind, and are, therefore, particularly open to Christian teaching.

✻ ✻ ✻

The Call for Prohibition

The war situation has already brought about many striking results, one of which is the imperative call for the prohibition of the liquor traffic that is being heard on all sides.

Every argument in favor of prohibition in time of peace applies with still greater force in a time of war. War conditions furnish additional arguments in favor of the abolition of the liquor traffic which are absolutely irrefutable.

On the ground of efficiency, nation-wide prohibition ought to be adopted without further delay. It is not enough merely to forbid the men in uniform from procuring or receiving liquor. Present conditions demand that every man whether in civil or military life should attain the highest possible degree of efficiency. Nothing so robs a man of every element of efficiency as the use of strong drink, and herein lies one of the strong arguments for nation-wide prohibition.

The conservation of the food resources of the nation demand that grain be used to the utmost possible advantage and with the greatest possible economy. The most wasteful use to which grain can be put is to turn it into liquor, and a sound economical policy forbids the continued employment of the precious food materials of the nation for the manufacture of intoxicating liquor.

But the strongest argument of all is the moral reason which demands the enactment of prohibition as a safeguard against the evil influences that are all too prevalent in a time of war. Sad results have followed the lax conditions in regard to the use of liquor that prevail in some of the European countries. The United States should not repeat the history of Great Britain, whose leaders have allowed the liquor traffic to work infinite harm to the material, social and spiritual life of the country by their failure to control the use of intoxicants.

Every effort should be made by the friends of temperance to influence both our national Congress and our State Legislatures to enact the laws needed not merely for the regulation but for the abolition of this deadly traffic.

The argument that our country needs the revenue to be obtained from the taxation of the liquor traffic is a fallacious one. A nation without the liquor traffic is richer than one which tolerates this industry, no matter what may be the apparent loss of revenue, because whatever debauches the people impoverishes the nation, and there is nothing in this world that so debauches the physical, mental, moral and spiritual life of a people as the indulgence in strong drink.

Show Your Colors

Never before in the history of our country has there been such a lavish display of the national ensign as is seen at the present time. The streets and avenues of our cities are fairly alive with color and everywhere that we turn our eyes we are greeted by the sight of the Red, White and Blue, with which are freely mingled the colors of our Allies in the great conflict in which we are now engaged.

There is little need to urge patriotic citizens to display their flags at the present time, for every true citizen is proud to show his allegiance by displaying the national ensign. But it is not at all unnecessary to urge upon all soldiers of the Cross the duty and the privilege of showing their allegiance to the great Captain of our salvation.

The stress of war time demands from every follower of Christ the fullest expression of loyalty to the great principles of the Christian faith. In such times as those through which we are now passing there is a great temptation to side-step moral issues, to obscure great spiritual truths, and to lower the standards of morality that should govern all our relations in life.

Now is the time for every Christian to display his moral courage, to withstand all the forces of iniquity, and to show his colors in the battles for righteousness which must be waged not only on foreign soil but right here in our own land, where the forces of evil are eagerly watching every opportunity to gain the mastery.

Christian young men who are called to the front during the present month and in the months to come will have a splendid opportunity to test their moral fibre as they face the conditions of camp life. As the days go by they will find that the temptations to evil increase rather than diminish. May they have the grace and the grit to stand firm for the divine Master and by showing their colors may they lead others to take their stand under the ever-glorious banner of the Cross.

A Pioneer Worker Among the Mexicans

We regret to record the recent death of Rev. A. H. Sutherland, who passed to his eternal reward after spending one-third of a century in faithful missionary work amongst the Mexican people dwelling in the Valley of the Rio Grande.

As a missionary colporter of the American Tract Society his work consisted in circulating the Gospel message in the printed page from house to house. His first convert, we are told, was Alajo Hernandez, who was brought to the service of Christ by reading a copy of one of the Society's Spanish publications, entitled "Noches con los Romanistas."

Rev. George Whitefort, Superintendent of the Southern Agency of the American Tract Society, under whose immediate direction Mr. Sutherland carried on his work writes:

"When Rev. A. H. Sutherland began his work, there were no Protestants on the Mexican Border, though many had ceased to be Romanists. Now there are more than forty evangelical churches and more than 5,000 Protestant Mexicans on the Border. Mr. Sutherland was prominent in this good work. He went far into Mexico, preaching the Gospel and scattering the issues of the Bible and Tract Societies. During the last few years of his life he had given himself exclusively to missionary colportage, and at the time of his death was publishing a monthly Spanish periodical (El Libertador) for the Mexican families of the Border. He was a Christian and a gentleman, always full of hope and zeal for the evangelization of the Mexicans. Like Barnabas, he was a good man, full of faith and the Holy Spirit, and much people were added unto the Lord as the result of his consecrated labors."

God's Hiding Places

BY EDGAR L. VINCENT

MY little child loves to hide things from me. He enjoys nothing more than to creep away with some treasure, bidding me the while to be sure and not "peek a single bit"—not even between my fingers—until he is all ready for my search. Then how he laughs at me when I am "cold," and tries all his tricks to call me aside when I begin to come too near the trinket he has hidden!

But the greatest sport of all is when he tip-toes away himself, his face all aglow with delight, and hides for me to find him! When at last I have pulled aside some curtain which he has wrapped about him, or opened some door behind which my darling is snuggled away, oh! the ripples of laughter which break from his lips, sweeter to me than the gurgling of the prettiest and most star-lit brook.

Sometimes it seems quite as if my Heavenly Father finds joy in hiding from me for a little while something I hold most precious. Is not that a way He has with many a beautiful thing? We find His richest gems deep buried in the hills or at the bottom of the sea. In how many out-of-the-way places does He conceal the things we need most and which we prize most dearly!

In the very heart of some rock we may all unexpectedly discover the shell He has kept hidden from human sight, for who knows how long? Then on some day when the frost or man's inquisitive hand breaks the stone, there lies the tiny thing, waiting to tell its story of the ages which have swept on since the little creature which once made that shell his home crept into it for the last time, to stay till God called "Ready!"

There are other things I covet even more dearly than I do the pearl or the shell from the rock. Some days it seems to me I cannot wait for my Father to brush the clouds out of the sky with His hand and let the sunshine flood the world. How long and how dreary have been the hours since last I looked into the face of the blue heaven! Winds have blown, rain has fallen, the earth has been all a-drip. Every tree and flower and grass-plant has been bending its head in a subdued, lonely way.

Then all at once away the shadows flee! It may be just as the sun drops over the western hills! But that one moment when God brings from His hiding sky, sunshine, field, flower and wood is enough to waken in my heart a song of joy and thanksgiving! For now I know that it was only for a moment that He hid away my treasures. They were all safe in His keeping! He was only keeping them from me for a little while, so that I might love them the more when He came to me with them again!

Why is it that some things for which I long with all my heart, things which I have worked for, things which my very soul cries out after, why are these hidden from me, it may be for years? Here is the dear one I have loved so fondly. I have tried so hard to help him to know the very best in life. When I have been alone, I have sent my very soul up to God, pleading that the day might come when the desire of my heart should be granted. He knows how I yearn over my friend; how I would if I could, give all I have and all I am so that the mists may be swept from the eyes of the one I love, so that he might become a child of God.

But how long God hides from me this longing of my heart! Some times it seems to me that it never will come to me to see the joy light up the soul of my friend; that I must, after all, fold my hands and say, "It is not for me to know that happiness." Then suddenly the treasure breaks on my sight! My tears and my prayers and my hopes have not been for nothing! God has only been holding my jewel in His keeping until the best time—His own blessed time—should come!

And now, how is it, I wonder, that I do not sooner see the fulfilling of my dreams? Is it because I have not learned to say, and say with all my heart, "In Thine own time, my Father?" Is it because I have not caught the secret that it is not for me to know when the souls I love, and for which I am praying, shall see the rapture of God's great love, but that my part is just to sow the seed, to do my little day's work and go on, sure that the day will come when the harvest ears will hang heavy in their golden ripeness, ready for the Master's gathering?

How shall I learn the sweet lesson of patient working, trusting, waiting, earnest watching? Oh, my Father, teach me the lesson of the gem hidden in the field! It was only when he who had found it sold all he had and laid it down with joy, that the field and treasure became his own! I want the treasure; and yet, I do so cling to my little gold! I cannot pay the price unless Thou dost help me to know how small is any price by the side of the good that will come when I yield all I have, all I am, all I ever expect to be, a glad offering to Thee!

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTION

GEORGE ERNEST MERRIAM

THE MESSAGE OF OUR FLAG

BY

REV. GEORGE ERNEST MERRIAM

Minister of Calvinistic Congregational Church, Fitchburg, Massachusetts

NO MORE thrilling sight ever greets the human eye than the display on gala occasions of the ensigns of the nations of the world. And among all such national emblems fluttering in the breeze there is none so beautiful to the eyes of an American as our own "Old Glory."

Shrouded in more or less mystery as is the origin of the flag of the colonies, we cannot but bow in wonder and almost in reverence before Betsy Ross and General George Washington and others, known and unknown, as they met and counselled in the humble Arch Street cottage of bygone days. Was it the spirit of prophecy or of poetry that breathed forth from their hearts and breathed into mere fabric and colors the breath of national life? Or was there a higher personality in their midst who gave genesis to the Stars and Stripes? You remember the question of James Whitcomb Riley, and the response that he received from the only source of authority:

"Who gave you the name of Old Glory, and why
Are we thrilled at the name of Old Glory?
Then the old banner leaped like a sail in the blast,
And fluttered an audible answer at last.
And it spake, with a shake of its voice, and it said:
"By the driven snow-white and the living blood-red
Of my bars, and their heaven of stars overhead—
My name is as old as the Glory of God.
So I came by the name of Old Glory!"

How can an American be superstitious as to the number thirteen, remembering those early days and the action of our forefathers—thirteen States in the federation, thirteen battleships ordered to properly represent them, thirteen rattles to be counted on the warlike reptile of that early banner with its motto, "Don't Tread on Me," thirteen arrows in the talons of the eagle, thirteen stars in the original field of blue, and, save for the earliest years the unchanging thirteen bars of red and white. Let such superstition be far from us, for thirteen has been for the United States a veritable slogan of progress and prosperity.

Flags have a language of their own—"dipped" in salutation, "struck" in the hour of surrender and, "lowered" to half mast in the time of mourning. Red bespeaks revolution, black the spirit of piracy, yellow of quarantine, and white of peace, temporary or permanent. But the red, white and blue are a symphony of colors; their language has a music of its own, hinted but only hinted at in "America" and "The Star Spangled Banner." It is the song of the redeemed that they sing, and, as we trust, the song of those who understand the cost of redemption, and who are willing to pay the price for the redemption of the world.

Even the eagle perched upon the banner's crest sings the song of aspiration. We think of it as emblematic of the spirit of liberty, and so it is. But it is typical also of that higher aspiration which involves not merely personal freedom but spiritual vision and unselfish impulses. Witness the eagle with widespread wings holding the Word of God Himself, the lectern of the Christian Church throughout the ages. This "lion of the air" in the thought of the early heralds is noted for its strong and lofty flight with consequent range of vision and purity and vigor of atmosphere—just what we desire and what we should earnestly supplicate for our citizens of to-day and especially our youth.

Indeed the eagle should be the ensign of young manhood here in America. The Japanese boy has a flag of his own, flown over every Japanese home having a male child on one day in the year: that flag represents the carp, a fish noted for its pluck and endurance in swimming up stream, mounting the lesser waterfalls with ease and even leaping some of the swiftly flowing cataracts. In the same spirit let us give to our boys—men in the making—the American eagle as their particular standard, representative not of ambition, political or otherwise, not even of emulation in the search for popularity and position, profits and pleasure, but of aspiration—the reaching out and up in ideals of virtue, usefulness, influence and patriotism.

Thus shall we teach them and ourselves that it is not selfish to wish for a noble character. Only so can we help others and build up the nation. The mountain climber does not go behind and push, but goes ahead and from a superior height reaches down his helping hand. So only can we induce foreign peoples coming to our shores to ascend with us the heights of national greatness. We believe in national expansion, but only in self-forgetful integrity—the integrity of the nation, which is after all the sum of the integrity of millions of individual men, women and children. Integrity is not necessarily success any more than it is pugnacity. Richard Watson Gilder placed upon one of the pylons at the Pan-American Exposition the words, "He who fails bravely has not truly failed but is himself a conqueror." Washington came near to defeat, indeed on occasions he knew defeat, and yet of him it was written, "He never turned his back, but marched breast forward." Integrity looks back in the spirit of Kipling's "Lest we forget," but forward with a sense of aspiration commingled with responsibility, for it is written, "Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee, that it may be displayed because of the truth."

How significant just now are the words of John Hay:

"Not in dumb resignation we lift our hands on high;
Not like the nerveless fatalist, content to do and die.
Our faith springs like eagles, who soar to meet the sun
And cries exulting unto Thee, 'O Lord, Thy will be done!'"

"When tyrant feet are trampling upon the common weal,
Thou dost not bid us bend and writhe beneath the iron heel.
In Thy name we assert our right, by sword, or tongue or pen,—

And e'en the headsman's axe may flash Thy message unto men.

"Thy will—it bids the weak be strong, it bids the strong be just.

No lips to fawn, no hand to beg, no brow to seek the dust.
Wherever man oppresses man beneath the liberal sun,
O Lord be there! Thine arm make bare! Thy righteous will be done."

So too the colors of our flag tell of loyalty, sacrifice and citizenship. What else could that field of blue mean but undying loyalty. Blue is the color of the firmament, telling of the harmony of the spheres, of heaven's own laws and truth and constancy. Our fidelity to country and to principle should be as unswerving as that of the compass to the pole star. In words not to be forgotten we say, "Our country, right or wrong!" and we should add, "If right, to keep her right: if wrong, to make her right."

Our patriotism is not to be a patriotism like that of Benedict Arnold, for the tragedy of his life was that for years his patriotism was at the full, only to wane like a changing moon—a shifting patriotism. Our patriotism is to be like that of Patrick Henry—"Give me liberty or give me death!" The dying soldier lifting his head on the field of battle—and for him the field of death—urges on the other men surging past over his prostrate body with the words: "Follow—the—flag—boys!" Can we in the midst of health and wealth say less? So let us help to give power to the colors, exclaiming with the loving enthusiasm of the Psalmist, "Thou art fair, O my love, as Pisgah, comely as Jerusalem, terrible as an army with banners." Let loyalty express itself—and let it count, for as the late President William McKinley maintained, "A government like ours rests upon the intelligence, morality and patriotism of the people."

Nevertheless—forget it not—patriotism without service and sacrifice is like iron pyrites—fool's gold. It may deceive the very elect, but it is worthless. The red stripes in our national prism are the color of blood—blood, the most precious thing in life—blood which is life itself. It spells sacrifice. Think of the blood poured out in sacrifice—the blood of victims on the altar, of the Son of God upon the Cross, of Christian martyrs and of heroes down through the ages, of men upon the battlefields of freedom in other lands and in our own. This outpouring of blood means sacrifice and it is written into the red bars upon our banner—written there by the patriots of colonial days—written by the soldier dead of the Civil War, who like that Roman knight of old closed the awful chasm in our midst by themselves leaping into the yawning abyss. As Hancock in our Colonial Congress gave his voice in favor of razing every house in Boston to the ground, if need be, though all his own property was within its limits, and as Governor Nelson gave directions to train the cannon upon his own mansion in Yorktown as the probable headquarters of Cornwallis, and as John Brown mounted the scaffold counting it a privilege to "die for a cause," and as by such readiness to sacrifice, the nation was made and kept whole, so must it ever be.

"O banner blazoned in the sky,
Fling out the royal red—
Each deeper hue of crimson dye
Won by our sainted dead."

Yet blood need not be shed—its swift flow within arteries and veins with consequent thought and action may mean even more. Florence Nightingale was worth a regiment in the Crimea, as with her lamp she walked the hospital corridors. And so our nation must needs thank farmer and mechanic and men in the coast patrol and life-saving stations as well as heroes on the field of crimson. Mothers know better, sometimes, than soldier boys the sacrifice of war. One such has recently written from England of her own lads, wounded, lost in unknown trenches or starting for the front, closing with the significant words, "But it ever has been so and ever must be so—there is no redemption without cost."

And finally the white stripes—color of the snow, freshly fallen from the skies—emblem of purity and of unselfish service and citizenship. For this is the color of the toga virilis, assumed by the Roman youth on entering the ranks of manhood, and also of the toga candida, a robe of glistening white worn by political candidates as a sign and symbol of untainted character, a fair mark for mud-slinging if reputation did not conform to the honors sought. But at least those garments stood for an ideal, an ideal which was really embodied in our own George Washington, so ready to serve without pay and in spite of cruel criticism. We need such men in office to-day, but we cannot have them without clean-handed voters, clean-minded mothers, wives and sweethearts, and clean-hearted boys and girls. You and I are citizens, whether we vote or not. Universal suffrage in a short time seems possible and even probable. In any case all influence votes, for all exert an influence, for good or evil, upon the character of voters. True citizenship is based not on position but on loyal and aspiring service.

Alpheus Hardy's soul was wrung while in Andover Academy by the thought that he could not be a Christian minister, but he became a great merchant, and as a steward of God he fathered the stowaway Neesima, sending him to Andover and then to Amherst College—Neesima, the great missionary and the greater statesman, the leader of Japan. So you and I may feel that we cannot be present at Armageddon, but we can help to equip the soldier, and we can stand back of the Red Cross and the Y. M. C. A. and other beneficent organizations as they seek to provide for his spiritual welfare, and we can try to awaken the military authorities to a realization of the dignity and power of religion and to make the name of chaplain something other than a by-word in the ranks.

All hail to the red, white and blue—colors of the ruby and the pearl and the sapphire. The Other Wise Man sold his all, we are told by Henry Van Dyke, and purchased a ruby red as the heart's blood, a sapphire blue as the sky at midnight, and a pearl as white as the snow on the mountain's summit bathed in the sunlight. He thought to lay them at the feet of the Infant Prince to rival gold, frankincense and myrrh. But no—they went, one by one, for the weal of humanity on the journey and in long wandering in Egypt and the last—the pearl—was given to save a girl from the band of the Roman soldiers—but the Other Wise Man had his reward—the voice of the Crucified Master—whom he would have saved but could not—and in these words, "Inasmuch—the least—my brethren—me"

In an Oriental City one bell has rung the midnight hour for a century and a half and more. Tradition says that twice the molding of the bell was a failure and that one more opportunity was given to the bell-maker, his own life to be forfeit if on the third attempt the bell did not ring true. A large crowd was present in the final hour of trial, whether in sympathy or cruel curiosity, who shall say? Present also was the bell-maker's daughter, knowing full well from the oracles that success could not crown this final effort save as a virgin's blood mingled with the bronze. Pale and strained was her look as the great doors of the furnace were thrown open, but pity for her was not prolonged, since with one cry—"For my father"—she leaped into the molten, gleaming mass. And when at last the great bell was hung in place, it pealed forth a silvery note at once sacrificial and triumphant.

So in the present day, as the furnace door of world strife is thrown open and we feel the burning breath of fiery war and gaze upon the white-hot but reddening stream issuing thence, we shall see many a fearless one plunge therein and so lose himself in that silver tone of the new master bell which is being molded—the bell of universal liberty, whose vibrant note shall soon be heard around the world. So shall the aspirations and prayers of Christendom be answered through loyalty to God and sacrifice for the brotherhood.

"So, in the name of our God we will set up our banners." The outcome is in the hands of the Eternal Father of us all.

"Truth forever on the scaffold,
Wrong forever on the throne—
But that scaffold sways the future
And behind the great unknown,
Standeth God within the shadows
Keeping watch above His own."

Recruiting Scottish Soldiers for Christ

THE gathering of large bodies of men in military camps in Great Britain has furnished unusual opportunities for evangelistic efforts, and Christian workers have not been unmindful of these openings for service.

One of the most hopeful lines of work has been that carried on by the Pocket Testament League among the Scottish soldiers. A recent letter from George T. B. Davis, whose name will be remembered by some of our subscribers because of his inspiring contributions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER describing the Chapman-Alexander Evangelistic Campaign some years ago, gives us an insight into the work that is going on. He writes:

"More than two years ago I was invited to Scotland to visit the military camps and speak to the soldiers by the Rt. Hon. Sir Joseph Mac-lay Bart, the President of the Pocket Testament League in Scotland, and now the Shipping Controller in the British Ministry. The invitation was accepted and since then I have had blessed and glorious times speaking to multitudes of soldiers throughout Scotland; enrolling them in the Pocket Testament League; and seeking to win them for the Master.

"Since coming to Scotland more than 60,000 soldiers have been enrolled in the Pocket Testament League, and have received League Testaments; and more than 36,000 men have marked 'A. C.' in the corner of their League cards, thus signifying that they 'Accept Christ' as their personal Saviour. I do not say that 36,000 soldiers have been born again into the Kingdom, but I am sure that multitudes have been saved, and that many who marked A. C. on their cards, and have since lost their lives, are in glory to-day because of their decision.

"Recently I conducted a most interesting mission in a Scottish Camp where every man in the camp had been out at the front at least once, and some of them several times. Rarely have I enjoyed a mission more than that one. The men attended the meetings in large numbers, and literally drank in the messages. A large proportion of the men declared their acceptance of Christ. One night a Sergeant joined the Pocket Testament League and made a simple but definite decision. He had come over for the night from a neighbouring camp. A few days ago I received a beautiful letter from him in which he told how he had gathered a band of seventeen men to read God's Word, and pray, and sing together. He says: 'It makes a wonderful difference, and I am still striving to fight the good fight of Faith, and keeping my group together. We always remember you in our prayers, at the same time trusting in Him who died for us.'

"Another man who made a beautiful decision during the same mission was a Lance-Corporal who was an old soldier, having joined the army seventeen years ago. He has been both in France and Mesopotamia. He had two brothers in the Army, one having been killed and the other taken prisoner. The first night of the mission he was in the canteen drunk. The second night he came into the Y. M. C. A. Institution, while the meeting was in progress, to make a purchase. He was gripped by the Spirit of God, and joined the League that night, but did not make a decision. The following evening he came up at the close of the meeting and asked for a special interview. When I met him in the manager's room of the Y. M. C. A. the next morning he was just waiting to go on his knees to make a full surrender. He said 'Every time I woke up during the night I just felt that I was practically saved already. I am not taking this step for a month nor a year but for life.' A few days later a party of soldiers went from this camp to a neighbouring one where I was holding meetings, to bear witness to the saving and keeping power of the Lord Jesus Christ. The Lance Corporal intended to have gone with them but was prevented through being sent away on escort duty.

"At another camp where I recently conducted a mission one of those who came out for Christ early in the meetings was a Corporal. He gladly said he would get a little group together for Bible reading and prayer. Later in sending a report of how he was progressing he wrote: 'We have arranged to get the ante-room of the Baptist Church for two nights in the week just for a quiet talk together. Of course, we still read a few chapters of the Pocket Testament at night, but this will help us to bring together more of our chums.' A little later, when writing of his meeting in the Baptist Church, he said, 'I was surprised at the heart and soul way my comrades went into it. We started off with a prayer; we sang two hymns, and then read seven chapters of the Pocket Testament. Then we had a prayer all round and we did not forget to pray for you and your good work.'

"Another who came out clearly for Christ in that mission was a man who had been one of the roughest and wildest men in the Battalion. He said that he had scarcely been to Church twice in his life, and although he had been to the front and been wounded, he had never thought of carrying a Testament with him. He asked me to write and tell his mother of the change that had come over his life. On a half-holiday that occurred during the mission, when many of the other men were away this man stayed in the billet most of the afternoon, and read St. Matthew's Gospel right through, and on the last night of the mission he told me that he and a chum had formed a little band of men for Bible reading and prayer, and that one or two of his comrades had signified their acceptance of Christ."

This is surely a heartening account of how Scottish soldiers are being recruited for Christ. Mr. Davis requests the prayers of our readers for the continuance of the Divine blessing upon this work, and we are confident that his request will be gladly heeded.

PRINTED PREACHERS

In the Philippine Islands

Among the cash appropriations recently forwarded by the American Tract Society to mission stations abroad for the production and distribution of Christian literature in the vernacular was a remittance of $100.00 to the Publication Committee of the Evangelical Union of the Philippine Islands, whose headquarters are at Manila.

The total amount of the appropriations that have been sent by the Society to this Committee is now $1,800.00, and the money has been very wisely and judiciously disbursed.

By the aid of these appropriations a volume entitled, "Teacher Training Lessons" has been issued in three of the Filipino dialects, namely, Tagalog, Ilocano and Visayan.

It is planned to issue an Ilocano hymn book, which will undoubtedly have a wide circulation and prove of great assistance in the work. It is expected that Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress will also be published in Ilocano at an early date and other volumes will follow as fast as they can be provided for.

As illustrating the class of young people who are helped by the publication of evangelical literature in the Philippines we reproduce on this page the photograph of a group of native workers taken at a mission school at Jaro.

A glance at this interesting assemblage reveals many indications of promise, and it is a great joy to the officers of the American Tract Society to be able to aid in ministering to the spiritual needs of the rising generation in these far-away islands, whose destiny has been largely committed to our care.

In Pennsylvania

Mr. John Martinco, a missionary colporter of the American Tract Society in Pennsylvania, tells of some practical results of the distribution of Christian literature among the foreign-speaking people in these words:

"Most of my time during the last month was spent around Pittsburg, which seems to be the Mecca for all nations. At the present time the people are somewhat suspicious of every one, because they fear Government spies, and so it is not easy even for the colporter to gain their confidence. Nevertheless, I was able to hold many conversations with them, since my aim is not only to circulate the books but also to lead the people to Christ.

"A young man lives in Allegheny, who thinks that he has consumption and has spent a good deal of money on doctors and medicine, but has found no relief. I told him to go out of the city on a farm where he would have pure air and might be able to save his life. And then I reminded him of the Great Physician, Jesus Christ, who is able not only to cure the body but also to save the soul. He was touched very much by my words and promised to do the best he could. He also took a New Testament.

"There is a young man in Pittsburg whom I have known for several years and I have had many conversations with him about Christianity, but never before has he shown such appreciation as he did last week when he told me that he believed that every word which I spoke is really true and that he wished to live a Christian life, if he only could."

NATIVE FILIPINO CHRISTIAN WORKERS.

In the Empire State

Rev. Samuel Goddard, a missionary colporter of the American Tract Society who is distributing Christian literature in Buffalo and vicinity, in New York State, writes:

"During the past month I have been able to go out into some of the villages around the city of Buffalo. I have been able to effect a somewhat larger circulation of Christian literature, and I hope as the season advances to increase the record.

"The Billy Sunday meetings held in Buffalo have stirred up the people a great deal, and I have reason to believe that many will be led into the churches.

"My visits to the Ingleside Home, the Buffalo Orphan Asylum and to various Sunday Schools were well received. I have also had many welcome words of thanks from the people to whom I have been able to speak. The blessed Word of God and the prayers offered in their homes have been of much comfort unto them.

"One lady upon whom I called had just lost her boy. With tears she thanked me for the comfort she had received and for the cheering words of faith and hope drawn from the Holy Scriptures. She said, 'Praise the Lord for sending you unto me. May the dear Lord bless you in your work of love for Him. You have greatly comforted me.'"

For the Intemperate

Mr. Adam Folta, a missionary colporter in Pennsylvania, tells in a recent report how he tried to help a drunkard whom he found in one of the homes he visited.

"The other week when visiting from house to house I came to one family where I had previously left some tracts. I had given these tracts free, but now the family called me into their home and told me that if I had any good books, they wished to buy some from me, and after I showed them what I had they took several different volumes, including 'Come to Jesus.'

"I went to another row of houses, where a number of my Slovak countrymen used to live. I asked whether there were any more Slovak people there, and they said yes. Then they told me of one home where there was an old man who was a great drunkard. I went to that house and there was the old man and his family. His wife said to me, 'He has been drinking so much that we do not know what to do with him.' I told her that Jesus could alone cure this man of his appetite for drink, and that if they would go to Him in prayer, He would help the drunkard to get rid of his drinking habit. I talked to the people for an hour, and they listened very attentively and thanked me very heartily as I went out."

In the Old Dominion State

Rev. James M. Carter thus describes some of his recent experiences while engaged as a missionary colporter in the distribution of Christian literature in the State of Virginia:

"Recently I traveled through a section of country far from any railroad. I find that the counties in this district have not been visited much by missionaries and therefore they offer an inviting field.

"It is delightful to go to these back counties, far from the railroad, as there is so much hospitality shown to a missionary colporter. While the people are hospitable, a goodly number of them are not professing Christians. Here I have an opportunity to proclaim the message which I am sent to declare, and the people listen with much interest to the Master's Word. I did not have enough books to supply the demand, and as I would leave the homes, the people would say, 'Come again, and bring us some more good books and cheer us with your message, for we feel that your visit has been a blessing to us.' I hope that I may be privileged to meet these people again. There is so much of this work yet to be done, and oh, how greatly it is needed!

"I have distributed Christian literature this month to all classes of people, from the highest society whites to the poorest colored people. The work continues to brighten and to help fallen humanity to see God and what He requires of man.

"The most lasting influence I can leave with my people is the Word of God in print. They want to know what the Scriptures say. Then I have a good opportunity to read from the Bible in answer to their questions and thus to rivet His Word deep into their souls."

WORDS

By Clarence E. Flynn

WORDS determine the trend of human events. They make sad or glad the years we live. Like flowers or tares, sown along the highway of life, they make every landscape a little brighter or a little less lovely.

The tongue is equally capable of being the messenger of angels or of spirits of evil. It can sting like an adder. A thrust of the dagger or the sharp sting of a bullet, and all is over; but the sting of a hard word abides through the years. It warps, withers, and embitters everything it touches. The human heart shrivels under it like the drooping of a tender plant beneath the direct rays of the burning sun.

But a word in due season, how good is it! It helps the weary to take courage again. It helps the broken life to make another effort. It revives drooping hopes and purposes. It counts for more than could a gift of gold or a bestowal of power.

A dozen years ago a school boy was standing, tired and discouraged, in the shadow of a dark stairway on the public square of the town. He was away from home, and he was almost down to his last cent. He was not sure whether his hard efforts were worth the while. He heard an approaching step. It was one of his teachers. He drew farther back, not expecting the teacher to see him, but the teacher did. He stopped and said a good word for something the young fellow had done. That was all it took to put fresh courage into a weary heart. Today that boy, now become a man, is still toiling on, trying to do something worth the doing. He is still at it for the sake of a simple sentence or two—in due season.

The value of a word is so great that the name best befits the nature of the Master. In the first chapter of the Gospel, according to John, we find that Jesus is repeatedly referred to as the Word of God. He is, indeed, an expression of that which men had so long thought to be inexpressible. A Word, made flesh, He came and dwelt among us, and we beheld His glory.

Words slip back the shutters from the windows of the inner life. It is out of the abundance of the heart that the mouth is sure to speak. The tongue is daily engaged in drawing an open picture of the heart. The very vocabulary of a person will tell you the story of what goes on in the silence of his thoughts.

The power of uplifting speech and the right to enjoy helpful conversation are high privileges. When a group of people are together, a splendid opportunity is afforded for conversation which is not only self-improving, but also mutually helpful. It is worse than a tragedy when that never-recurring time is spent in conversation concerning what is foolish and evil. Is it not a standing wonder that, when there are so many worthy themes, anyone should be willing to allow his conversation to keep the slimy level of the soil?

Words should pay respect to the dignity and beauty of language. Language has a majesty peculiarly its own, and its sanctity ought never to be violated. It is violated, frequently, in two especial ways.

The first is by the way of slang. Those who allow themselves to grow accustomed to slangy expressions do themselves and their language alike a great injustice. They do themselves an injustice, because speech so surely marks the man, and the world will always take it as an indicator of character. They do their language an injustice because every deviation from its defined paths tends to break down its dignity and power.

Of course, slang is not a cardinal sin, but it is like a good many other things that are not cardinal sins in that the tendency is a bad one. The cardinal sins are less dangerous because we are more afraid of them.

The second is by the way of extravagant and untrue utterance. Enough people have gone "simply crazy" about things to fill all the insane asylums to overflowing, and it is a marvel how the cemeteries continue to provide room for all the people who have been tickled or scared "to death" or who have encountered so many things that were "simply killing." The users of these terms are people who have not stopped to contemplate the fact that simple English is always sufficient for the telling of the whole truth.

Words are certain to react upon the speaker. The effect upon others of a word let fly is equalled only by its effect upon the person who says it. In other words, speech possesses boomerang qualities.

Just after William Henry Harrison had been nominated for the presidency in 1840, a Baltimore newspaper contemptuously called attention to his humble habitat by referring to him as "Log Cabin Harrison." Instead of arousing prejudice against him, as the utterance was meant to do, it only stirred up a great popular enthusiasm in his behalf. The public took up the cry as a slogan; the log cabin became the campaign symbol; and William Henry Harrison was elected.

When John Wesley and a number of his fellow students who felt a desire for a deeper religious life formed a "Holy Club" at Oxford University, they became so methodical in their habits and work that other students of the university dubbed them. "Methodists." The name not only did not militate against them, but John Wesley remained a Methodist, and tens of thousands have been proud to bear the name that was first bestowed as an epithet of disgrace.

If there was anything derisive in the voice of Pilate when he exclaimed "Behold the man," his derision has been increasingly mocked by the voice of history. All the years have been obeying the command of the Roman governor. They have been beholding not only Jesus, but Pilate also, to the increasing fame and power of the one and the growing shame of the other.

If there was any taint of sarcasm in the words Pilate ordered placed at the head of the Cross, the years have turned it into living truth. The words have risen up to mock their maker.

Slander is more than half the time the offspring of jealousy and envy. The reason for a great deal of unjust and unkind comment is to be found in the proneness of man to condemn his brother most fiercely for that fault which lies most deeply imbedded in his own life. Adverse criticism is never a proper topic of conversation. The chances are so great against the justice and truth of a harsh judgment that it should never have a place in human speech.

One reason for this is the fact that one never knows the inner story of his neighbor's life. It is easy to fail to take into account the secret effort, the unknown struggle, the unheralded difficulty. Others have battles to fight and obstacles with which to contend of which we will never know. It may be, furthermore, that in their situation we would not do so well as they.

Another reason is the fact that we are not commissioned a race of judges and set to determine the guilt and weigh the faults of mankind. Even if it were our business to be judges, we should be poor ones indeed if we failed to give the accused the benefit of the doubt. There is plenty of time to speak when one can speak from indisputable facts.

There is an unwritten law which forbids speaking against the dead. It may be wrong to speak against those who can no longer lift their voices in their own defense, but it may also be remembered that, though the dead cannot defend themselves, neither do they need to do so. They can no longer be harmed by the shaft of malice, and will slumber as sweetly under the poison breath of the fault-finder as beneath the perfumed words of affection and appreciation. With the living it is different. They still care what men think of and say about them. They can feel the stir of joy and the sting of pain. They respond to kindness and recoil from the bitter and unjust word. If a word is to be spoken against anybody, it is far better that it be against the dead and that the living be spared the destruction of their all.

One of the best services to render to the world is to breathe a helpful word upon it. It will be like a shower of cooling moisture on a field grown dry and dead. In it you send forth a messenger imperishable. It will echo where you little know, and it will speak for you when your lips of clay can speak no more.

Leaving Out the Sky

BY JULIA H. JOHNSTON.

"Don't leave the sky out of your landscape." So runs a bit of excellent admonition which merits our careful attention.

Imagine a picture taken from nature, with the sky left out. Any painter of landscapes who tried to put a bit of the Infinite Artist's great out-of-doors without a sky-line, or a glimpse of the brooding heavens, would fail utterly in making a picture. Even if he made anything which he called by that name, no one would ever care to buy it.

Why must the sky go into the picture? Because it belongs to the landscape. It is always there. It overarches all the earth and sea. It may be overcast with clouds and riven with vivid lightning, but "behind the clouds is the sun still shining," and the black curtain makes a background for the rainbow, when the storm is over. Again the blue appears when clouds are gone. It was there all the while. It is sometimes murky weather as we take our ways through life. "It rains and the wind seems never weary." What then? Shall we look only at the puddles in the path? Shall we glance no higher than the roof on which the hurrying raindrops patter?

If we are so "foolish and unwise" as this, then we shall lose half of what belongs to our picture. Even weeping skies bring showers of refreshing that never fall out of the blue. But if we look up, and resolutely include the heaven-side, we shall catch the first glimpse of returning sunshine as it parts the clouds, and rejoice in its light.

We can not leave out the sky in the sense of extinguishing or destroying it, for God has set the perpetual arch above us. But to leave it out of our own view or out of consideration in estimating our surroundings and thus to judge only from the earthward side, is to rob ourselves of God-given comfort.

The Gates of Dawn

BY HERBERT CROMBIE HOWE.

*In full retreat, the legions of the dark
Thin and take flight before the sun's approach;
The beacons blaze to eastward, cloud by cloud,
Till earth responds to heaven—peak on peak,
The spectral snows are lit with sacred fire.
Afar they burn, paling, as now draws near,
And now forth issues through the gates of dawn,
The glory of that God whose first command
Revealed Himself, saying, "Let there be light."*

HIS VINEYARD AND OURS

Conditions in India

The interesting picture on this page gives us an insight into one of the modes of travel used in India. Camels are extensively employed both for riding purposes and for bearing burdens. That they may also be used for carriage purposes is shown in this unique illustration, reproduced from a photograph sent to us by the Rev. E. M. Wherry, D. D., of the Punjab Mission of the Presbyterian Church.

The last annual report of the Punjab Mission gives an encouraging outlook upon the progress of the missionary enterprise in that section of India. After describing other features of the work, the report says:

"The progress made in the sphere of Christian literature, both in English and the vernaculars, is worthy of mention, and it is adapting itself to the changing conditions that are making new requirements and are affording new opportunities. Some notable books have been published in recent years; others are in the Press, and still others are in course of preparation. Dr. Griswold is one of the editors of a new series, called 'The Quest of India' series. The Y. M. C. A. and the Christian Literature Society, not to speak of other agencies, are making constant contributions. It is a delight to look over the lists of new books that already are, or soon will be, available—to see the range of subjects and the names of the authors, which are a guarantee of work at once scholarly and popular.

"There is another class of literature that is issued in cheap editions and sold in the railway bookstalls, that should not be overlooked; I refer to an ever-increasing number of works of fiction dealing with life and work in India in which no religious motive is apparent, but that are healthy in tone and are of value in giving an insight into many phases of life, Indian, Anglo-Indian, and European. These may be welcomed as at least indirectly serving a missionary purpose.

"Friends of mission work in India must often wonder under what conditions it is carried on in this, the third year of the war; and all the more so because of the sensational reports that have found a place from time to time in the home press. The fact is that the work is carried on with the completest sense of security. The missionary hospitals are thronged with patients; the missionary schools and colleges have to turn away students for whom there is no room, and the spirit among them in this part of India, certainly, was never better. Itinerant missionaries go everywhere, and never have had kindlier treatment, or received a more sympathetic hearing. Men with an anti-foreign spirit are not in evidence in this part of India. Sikhs, Jats, Mohammedans, Gurkhas, Garhwallis and others of the fighting races of the north are freely enlisting, and all classes, from the rulers of the great feudatory states to the small shopkeepers, are loyally and generously giving to the support of the government, and to the comfort of the soldiers at the front and in the war hospitals. Indeed, missionaries in India have everything to be thankful for."

While the general conditions are encouraging, specific hindrances have been met in conducting the work of the Punjab Mission Press at Ludhiana. These difficulties are frankly set forth by Dr. Wherry, who is superintendent of this branch of the work. He writes:

"The work of preparing and publishing books during the past year has been hindered by a number of circumstances of an unusual character, and first among these has been the effect of the war on the price of printing paper. Not only so, but it has been almost impossible to get it. With the greatest difficulty we succeeded in getting Norwegian paper at six annas a pound. This is more than double the ordinary price of paper of the same quality. Another obstacle in our way was the breaking down of the lithographic steam press, due to the wearing out of the rollers because of the heat of the weather. The material for replacing the rollers was also most difficult to find, especially the particularly fine quality used. The consequence was that the printing was so bad as to be almost impossible for book work.

A CAMEL CARRIAGE IN INDIA.

"However, the Bible Stories for Little Ones (illustrated), in the press last year, was completed, and 2,000 copies were published. The Nur Afshan was issued regularly and 500 copies were issued weekly. In this paper we have tried to push the work of the evangelistic campaign as far as possible. The articles published will soon appear in pamphlet form, and form a sort of text book for use this winter. The Garden of the Heart, a publication for women, also has suffered, and thus far only two numbers have been issued. About twenty manuscripts are in the printer's hands. These will be published some time in the future, provided the paper can be secured.

"We desire to acknowledge with hearty thanks the usual grant from the American Tract Society of $100. The total issue from the book depot at Ludhiana was 32,850 volumes.

"The total sales and gifts of the mission for the year was about 46,000 volumes. The reports indicate an increasing desire among the people to read Christian books, and especially the Scriptures."

How Christian literature is distributed in the Hoshiarpur District of the Punjab Mission is told by the Rev. A. B. Gould in the following words:

"As for supplying the Bible to non-Christians, our greatest opportunity is at 'melas' (fairs). Originally religious, these gatherings of the people are now largely worldly in their nature.

"The tombs of the 'saints' are usually the centres for melas. Thither on the appointed day groups of people from the same village come from all the neighborhood round about, within a radius of from ten to fifty miles, according to the fame of the shrine. Several days ahead the enterprising shopkeepers of the towns send out their men with all sorts of merchandise to sell. These squat on the ground under temporary awnings of cloth, and display their wares spread out on a 'durrie' (cotton carpet) on the ground. Cooked food, candy, dry goods, soap (a little), trinkets and cheap jewelry are the chief attractions at these 'al fresco' shops. For amusement there are always jugglers of various descriptions, and one or more miniature Ferris wheels, ten or fifteen feet high, and turned by man power. At the largest melas there will usually be several side shows: wrestling, a 'flying Dutchman,' and possibly a 'movie.' The attendance ranges from one to ten thousand in this district. We take along a band of ten or twelve Christian teachers and preachers, a preaching tent, stereopticon, Sunday School lesson picture roll, a musical instrument, and a big box of Bibles and other Christian literature. Generally we sell 500 or more copies of portions of the Bible, but sometimes very few. In June last we had a sample of small sales, and thereby hangs a tale. We went out to the 'sacred' spot, some thirty-five miles from the city, prepared to sell any amount of books in several languages, but somehow the whole mela seemed a fiasco. The crowds were thin and suspicious. Something had frightened them off. That something turned out to be a most innocent European commercial traveler, who had come here to do big business for a certain famous tea company. He had boxes and boxes of tea to give away. But nobody would touch it, for some one had started the story that he was a secret recruiting agent of the government, and that his scheme was to induce the people to drink this free tea, in which he had already mixed some intoxicating drug, the object being to get their signature or thumb impression while under the influence of the drug, and then draft them off to the war! It is marvelous how easily the common people will swallow such ridiculous rumors and refuse to accept sound truth.

"During the past year we, together with our Indian assistants, were privileged to sell 933 Gospels, 3,173 books, and to distribute free 15,832 tracts. Will you not add your prayers to ours that the people may, through this printed word, come to see and know Christ, the living Word, whom to know is life eternal?"

Evangelization in Central America

Concerning the Central American Mission, of which Dr. C. I. Scofield is the General Secretary, it is reported that last year was in many ways the best year in the Mission's history. In the Central American Bulletin we read: "Of course testimony for Jesus was the most extensive in all this land because we had more witnesses, including natives in active service, now numbering about fifty.

"Our missionaries are not much at furnishing numerical results of evangelical work, but prefer to leave the question of the number of converts with the Lord, where it only belongs. So we are only able to say that as far as we can judge from the letters of our missionaries and their personal testimony while visiting the home land, this has been the most fruitful year of this Mission, for which all praise is due to the Lord.

"We feel sure that more people sitting in darkness in these lands, have heard the pure Gospel. And this is our responsibility and privilege, for the Lord has definitely promised that His Word shall not return unto Him void. So if we in the home land can be definitely established on the fact that it is ours to preach the Word, as our missionaries seem to be, then it would add greatly to our peace and comfort. One who faithfully gives the Gospel to those who reject it, will be as fully rewarded when the Lord comes, as when given to those who accept it. 'Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life.'

"Not only has this been a great year for service, but the Lord's hand has been wide open in supplying all the needs of the Mission. 'My God shall supply all your needs according to His riches in glory by Christ Jesus', has been fully verified during the whole year. Two new missionaries have gone to the field, and some on sick leave have returned well; new friends have been raised up by the Lord to help with gifts and prayer, and the lives of all the missionaries and council have been preserved, so that we can say with the Psalmist, 'Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord. Praise ye the Lord.'"

The Value of Medical Missions

In a recent issue of The Korea Magazine, Dr. W. T. Reid of Songdo, Korea, says:

"The work of medical missions produces fruit in many brands plucked from the burning and many souls brought from death unto life, from darkness to light and from ignorance to the knowledge of God and that which is thus blessed and used of God in the salvation of souls is worth all the church can put into it and far more than the church has been putting into it in the past.

"To illustrate by a concrete example: it has scarcely been a month since we discharged cured from the hospital a man whose whole attitude to Christianity was changed by his treatment here. It appears that of the whole clan this man's aunt and her daughter were the only Christians. His father at one time seriously considered becoming a Christian but was prevented by the violent opposition of this man and his younger brother. Not long since he was brought to the hospital in a very dangerous condition from abscess of the liver and without operation would have died. His life was saved by the operation, however, and during the two or three weeks in the ward he opened his heart to the Gospel and made confession of faith in Christ before he left. I now hear that his brother also has been impressed and now has a believing mind. Thus opposition has been removed and we may confidently expect other members of the family to also turn to God and to His truth in Christ. To pluck one such soul from the error of darkness to the light of life is worth more throughout the endless ages of eternity than can be computed in terms of material value and finite time.

"Thus the medical mission fulfils its purpose and the angels of God rejoice more over one soul that repenteth than over ninety and nine that need no repentance."

A Vital Need

According to the Assembly Herald the Mission and Government schools of India are producing not less than 200,000 new literates every year—young men and young women who are learning to read, and they are not being supplied by the missions with sufficient reading material.

Secular agencies have discovered, however, that Missions have created a great reading public, a great market, and they are quick to enter into that market with their secular and often antagonistic literature from the standpoint of Christianity. Much of the literature which is being provided for this large and rapidly increasing reading public is destructive both of morals and of the right conception of truth.

Notes upon the Topics Used
in Christian Endeavor
and Other Young People's Societies.

THE PRAYER MEETING

By
Rev. Henry Lewis
Ph.D.

JULY 1.

Little Things That Make or Mar Song of Solomon, 2:15; Prov. 25:11.

The Daily Bible Readings for this topic which were printed in the last issue of our paper suggested a few of the many little things that make or mar the beauty of human character.

"Trifles make perfection; but perfection is no trifle," said Michael Angelo. So in our study of this topic, let us remember that nothing is unimportant which contributes in any way to the up-building of Christian character and the determination of human destiny.

Human life may be divided into three spheres—thought, speech and action. In each of these realms little things may be productive of great results.

A passing thought may become the great life purpose of some human soul. How vital then is it for us to guard the channels of our thoughts so that they may be focussed upon the things that will make for the attainment of high purposes and the realization of high ideals.

A thoughtless word may mean the marring of a whole lifetime. It may result in the sundering of some precious friendship, the breaking of family ties, the blasting of a fine reputation, the disruption of social relations or even the upheaval of governmental authority.

An apparently insignificant action may have infinitely important results. As Amiel has finely said, "What we call little things are merely the causes of great things. One simple black speck may be the beginning of a gangrene, of a storm, of a revolution. From one insignificant misunderstanding hatred and separation may finally issue. An enormous avalanche begins with the displacement of an atom."

"Sow a thought and you reap an act; sow an act and you reap a habit; sow a habit and you reap a character; sow a character and you reap a destiny." How true is this statement, and how vital then is it for us to watch each thought and act, so that our final reaping may be fraught with happiness rather than despair.

The trained ear of an orchestra leader can detect the slightest error on the part of the humblest member of the orchestra. In other words one man may mar the performance of the entire orchestra. So by some slight act we may spoil the harmony of a human life.

A great machine is made up of hundreds and often thousands of different parts. The imperfection of a single part may render the entire machine useless and valueless. So by some little word or act we may paralyze the whole influence of our Christian profession.

Constant watchfulness is the price of safety. This is true not only in the realm of our physical existence but also in the moral and spiritual sphere of life.

We need divine help in order that we may successfully guard ourselves against the little things that mar human life and destiny.

We also need divine aid in order that we may think and say and do the things that will make this life worth the living and assure us of lasting happiness in the world to come. The Lord Jesus Christ will give us the help that we need, and let us consecrate ourselves anew to His service so that we may have His aid.

JULY 8.

Tried and Proved. A Promise Meeting

Hebrews 6:9-20.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. July 2. Great promises. 2 Pet. 1:1-8.
T. July 3. To the afflicted. Isa. 43:1-5.
W. July 4. To believers. Mark 11:22-26.
T. July 5. To the humble. Luke 9:46-50.
F. July 6. To the obedient. Josh. 1:1-9.
S. July 7. To the penitent. Ps. 51:1-19.

"The promises of God," says a quaint old writer, "are the kind declarations of His Word, in which He hath assured us He will bestow His blessings upon His people."

The Scriptures are full of promises, some of which relate to the Messiah, some to the Church, and some to the believer. One writer has said that the Bible contains ten thousand promises.

The value of a promise lies in the ability and the willingness of the one who has made the promise to fulfill it. Measured by this standard, the promises of God are of infinite value, for He is both able and willing to fulfill every promise.

As Christians we do not avail ourselves as fully as we ought of the splendid promises which are recorded in God's Word. A promise of whose existence we are ignorant is of no service to us, and we should seek to familiarize ourselves more fully with the precious promises that are scattered through the Scriptures.

"Tried and proved" are the key-words of our topic, and practical testimony as to the value of God's promises should be made a prominent feature of the meeting at which this subject is discussed.

God's "precious and exceeding great promises" are directed to all classes and conditions of humanity. They are for the rich and the poor, the young and the old, the weak and the strong, the wise and the unlearned, the prosperous and the unfortunate. They cover all the varied realms of life, and deal with both material and spiritual matters.

The greatest promise ever made by God to man was the promise of a Saviour, and that promise is fulfilled in the Lord Jesus Christ.

In the city of Venice, we are told, a line of red stones is laid in the crooked streets, and by following that line we come to the Cathedral of Venice. So in the Bible, God has laid a red line of promise that leads us to Christ.

If we did not rely upon the promises of God, life would have a barren and hopeless outlook. It is only as we rely on God's Word that we gain the vision of the better and brighter things that are in store for those who through faith and patience, inherit the promises.

The Christian who takes firm hold on God's promises has as an anchor of the soul a hope both sure and steadfast. Nothing can shake his confidence, for he knows that the promises of God are based upon infinite power and infinite love.

Some one has well said: "Every promise is built upon four pillars: God's justice or holiness, which will not suffer Him to deceive; His grace or goodness, which will not suffer Him to forget; His truth, which will not suffer Him to change; and His power, which makes Him able to accomplish."

JULY 15.

God Our Helper

Psalms 121:1-8.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. July 9. The eternal Helper. Deut. 33:26-29.
T. July 10. Strong and tender. Isa. 40:9-12.
W. July 11. Help in perplexity. Ex. 5:22, 23; 6:1.
T. July 12. Shelter in adversity. Ps. 46:1-11.
F. July 13. Comfort in sorrow. 2 Cor. 1:1-11.
S. July 14. Protection in danger. Zech. 2:1-5.

The Scripture assigned for this topic is one of a series of Psalms which has been called "The Pilgrims' Songs of Ascents" (Psalms 120 to 134).

Psalms 121 is really a poem of four stanzas, each stanza consisting of two verses as printed in our English version. It presents God as our Helper, or to use the words of the Psalm itself, its theme is "The Lord Thy Keeper."

Dr. A. F. Kirkpatrick, in his admirable Commentary on the Psalms, says: "This exquisite Psalm, inspired by perfect trust in Jehovah's guardianship of His people, was probably composed to be sung by pilgrims going up to the Feasts at Jerusalem, possibly at the point where they first caught sight of the goal of their journey. We seem to hear in it the voices of the pilgrims encouraging one another with words of faith and hope, as they journeyed to Jerusalem, once more in the centre of national life and worship to realize the relation of Jehovah to Israel and to each individual Israelite as their guardian in all the vicissitudes of life."

As this Psalm cheered and encouraged the Israelites of old, so it should serve to inspire and strengthen us as Christians to-day, as we walk the pathway of life, with our faces turned toward the heavenly Jerusalem.

God is our Helper as long as we look unto Him. His power as the creator of heaven and earth assures us that His might and His wisdom will be sufficient for all the experiences of life. He is ever watchful to hear our cry, for He neither slumbers nor sleeps.

At a time of crisis, like that through which our nation is now passing, it is reassuring to remember that the Lord is our keeper. Whether we are at home or abroad, on sea or on land, at the battle-front or in some sheltered and protected post of duty, let us remember the blessed assurance of the Psalmist, "He shall preserve thy soul."

This Psalm is full of comfort for those who are afflicted in any way. Whatever the burden that rests upon us, we may rejoice in the presence of the Lord, in whose hand is our going out and our coming in, from this time forth and for evermore.

As a ship in distress uses the wireless to summon aid, so when we are in any danger whatsoever, we should seek help from God by the use of prayer.

In human warfare the enemy often succeeds in cutting the line of communication, but in the battle of life nothing can sever us from our divine Helper save our own lack of faith.

JULY 22.

Applying the Golden Rule to Life Matthew 7:7-12.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. July 16. Good for evil. Matt. 5:43-48.
T. July 17. David's generosity. 1 Sam. 24:1-19.
W. July 18. Feed the enemy. 2 Kings 6:15-23.
T. July 19. Put yourself in his place. Jas. 2:8.
F. July 20. Open house. Heb. 13:1-3.
S. July 21. A golden motto. Heb. 13:18.

This is a very practical topic. The Golden Rule is a beautiful ethical maxim, but unless and until it is applied to our daily living, it is of no tangible service either to ourselves or to others.

In the Golden Rule we have the New Testament interpretation of the Old Testament law, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." (Leviticus 19:18).

The Golden Rule gives us "the substance of all relative duty; all Scripture in a nutshell." It is an incomparable summary of "the law and the prophets." Well does James speak of this as "the royal law" (James 2:8).

"It is true," writes one commentator, "that similar maxims are found floating in the writings of the cultured Greeks and Romans, and naturally enough in the Rabbinical writings. But expressed as it is here—in immediate connection with, and as the sum of such duties as had been just enjoined, and such principles as had been before taught—it is to be found nowhere else. And the best commentary upon this fact is, that never till our Lord came down thus to teach did men effectually and widely exemplify it in their practice."

The Golden Rule is a precept for positive action. Confucius taught a negative form of this injunction, but Christ put it into a form that calls for practical exercise. It is not enough simply to refrain from doing what we would not like to have our neighbor do unto us. We must see to it that we do unto him the things that we would like to have him do unto us.

We should apply the Golden Rule to all the relations of life. In the home, at school, in business, on the street, in the trolley car, on the railway train, in political life, in social life, in church life—everywhere we should strive to follow this royal law so clearly enunciated by our Master.

In time of war the Golden Rule, like the other teachings of Christianity, is apt to be disregarded. And yet, it is a principle which should never be abandoned. If followed, the Golden Rule becomes one of the amenities by which the scourge of war is tempered, and the more fully it is heeded, the more it tends to palliate the horrors of strife.

Should the Golden Rule be adopted as a principle of action by nations as well as individuals, it would undoubtedly lead to a peace more firm and lasting than any gained by a mere preponderance in arms.

JULY 29.

Evangelistic, Educational, Medi- cal and Industrial Work in Foreign Missions

Isaiah 61:1-3.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. July 23. Evangelistic work. Matt. 28:16-20.
T. July 24. Educational work. Prov. 8:1-8.
W. July 25. Medical work. Mark 16:14-20.
T. July 26. Industrial work. I Thess. 4:9-12.
F. July 27. Work we can do. Matt. 9:35-38.
S. July 28. The healing message. Ezek. 47:1-9.

Four of the great sub-divisions of missionary work in the foreign field are named in our topic. There is still another branch of work, which is complementary and supplementary to all other lines of effort, and without which the missionary enterprise cannot make marked advance in any direction. This fifth sub-division is what may be called the Christian literature branch of missions, and it is as fundamental in its importance as any form of service that is being carried on in the mission field abroad.

Christian literature in the vernacular is a vital aid to each of the four branches of work that are named in our topic. When the missionary goes forth to preach, that is to evangelize the people, he finds in the printed page a means of reaching many who are beyond the sound of his spoken words. Furthermore he finds that even in the case of those who hear his voice a book or a tract serves to impress upon the hearts of his hearers the gospel message which he has uttered by word of mouth.

In the educational work Christian literature is both invaluable and indispensable. The printed page is an absolute necessity for the schools, colleges and theological seminaries that are maintained at the mission stations abroad. Without books the great educational work of all the foreign mission boards and societies could not be carried on for a single day.

In medical work the printed page often plays a very helpful part. The patient who comes to the mission hospital may receive a gospel leaflet to read while in the waiting room, and this may be the initial step in the conversion of that soul to Christ. Or, perhaps, while an inmate in some ward of the hospital during weary hours of convalescence, the patient may be given a tract or a book to while away the time, and while reading simply for diversion, the gospel truth may find entrance into that soul.

One of the important branches of industrial mission work is the preparation of Christian literature. Many mission stations maintain a printing establishment as an industrial feature of their work, and the publication of Christian literature usually constitutes the chief activity of such a mission press. For example, in connection with the East Central Africa Methodist Mission a printing plant is run by the boys of the training school at Old Umtali, and this mission press renders great service to the missionaries by publishing Christian books, tracts and periodicals in the native language.

Thus the Christian literature branch of missions serves to strengthen and support all the other branches of missionary work. And while we support the evangelistic, educational, medical and industrial activities on the foreign field, let us not overlook nor neglect the effective instrumentality of the printed page, which is the strong right arm to all these beneficent forms of service.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS

Betty's Adventure

BY CORA S. DAY.

FATHER, Mother and Betty were going to see a big Fourth of July parade. There would be flags and marching soldiers, and wonderful scenes on floats and bands playing gay music. For days and days a lot of workmen had been busy all along the street where the parade was to pass. They were building great wooden grandstands, where people would sit to watch the parade go by. Of course they had to buy tickets for these seats. Father had promised to get three tickets, so they could all have a good view of the beautiful sight.

Betty went into a flutter of excitement when Father came home one evening and said:

"Feel what's in my pocket, Betty."

"Oh, it's the parade tickets, I know," Betty cried gleefully, and sure enough it was. Her small fingers soon found and pulled out the three bits of pink pasteboard.

"One might think they were tickets to fairyland," mother laughed as Betty danced about with them and then brought them to her to put safely away.

Independence Day came at last, bright and sunny. Betty was so glad and excited that she could scarcely stand still to be dressed. Then, just at the last minute before they were to start, some one came in and delayed them. So when they came to the street where the parade was to pass, the sidewalks were already packed with people who stood in deep rows behind the ropes that stretched along the curb.

Betty's father soon found it useless to try to push through the crowd. So they got in line with those moving the way they wished to go, and moved along slowly with them. Everybody was good-natured, and Betty thought it was quite jolly, until her father said:

"Our seats are on the other side of the street."

"Oh, how will we ever get to them?" gasped Betty. She was holding fast to his hand so she would not get pushed away from him and her mother and be lost in the crowd. "The policemen are not letting any one cross the street."

Betty thought they would have to stand on the sidewalk, like the hundreds of people who had no grandstand seat tickets in their pockets. Then they would lose the nice seats father had paid for, and the good view which they had hoped to have of the parade.

"Wait," Father answered smilingly. Pretty soon they came to a cross street on which cars ran. Here the ropes were parted every few minutes to let the cars pass; and Betty saw that then people were allowed to cross. Here they stopped to wait their chance, close by the rope.

A half dozen boys were waiting. Betty heard one of them say:

"Now boys, watch and follow me when the ropes part. And all keep together."

Right beside Betty stood a little old lady. She seemed to be alone and instead of looking happy and eager, like everybody else, she seemed worried and half frightened. Just then the ropes parted, the line of cars began to move, and the crowd pushed forward.

The little old lady started too, in nervous haste. Betty and a big policeman both caught her arm just in time to keep her from stepping in front of a moving car.

"Wait a minute, lady, while the cars pass," the blue-coat said kindly. The little old lady looked up at him with scared, faded blue eyes.

"Oh, please, I must hurry. I lost my folks in the crowd. I must try to find them," she said. Betty squeezed her arm gently and smiled up into the troubled old face.

"We'll take you across with us," she said kindly. "Will we not, father?"

"To be sure," said father heartily. The boys were listening now. Betty's kind interest made them interested, too.

"We'll all look out for you going over, lady," the leader said. The frightened look vanished from the dear old face as the lost one found herself surrounded by new friends ready to serve as a body-guard.

Then the last car passed; Betty kept a protecting hold of the old lady's arm; father said: "Now boys," and then they all swept across the street together. There the lost one was landed right in the midst of her "folks," who were anxiously waiting and watching for her. And stranger still, the folks were Betty's dearest friend Flora and her father and mother; and the little old lady was

Why Emeline Refused

BY THE AUTHOR OF "PRESTON PAPERS."

"No, Marie, I just can't go on that auto ride with you, much as I'd like to if things were different," and Emeline's voice almost broke into a sob as she turned her head away.

"I don't see why," said Marie, a bit impatiently, for she was fond of the fun-loving Emeline, though often out of patience with her chum's "old-fashioned notions," as she called them. "Your mother didn't tell you not to, before she went away; and certainly you've earned the right to a little amusement by taking care them, and no matter how much I may wish that I could go, I would never question her judgment, nor the love for me which prompts her care, even in such matters."

"And you nearly seventeen, and in your last year of High School!" almost scornfully.

"Yes, dear," laughing; and that cheery, whole-souled laugh drove the shadow of disappointment from her face, and the echo of its tone from her voice. "I am that very mature and highly-educated person! Yet, Marie, Mamma is at least six weeks older and a lot wiser than I. She knows best, even if she also knows that I'm goose enough to prefer what isn't best nor even proper, according to her social code and standard," firmly, even for Emeline whose reputation was "like a flint, for Right."

"It will break up the party, for I shan't go if you don't, though I've no mother to honor by my obedience to her known wishes," said Marie, thoughtfully, almost wistfully, as a tear shone in either eye.

"How I wish that you had, dear! You'd feel, as I do, that you'd rather forego a dozen auto rides or anything, which she felt to be unworthy! But come with me, upstairs, and let me show Mamma's picture as she was at seventeen. Then we'll see what Bridget's planning for dinner, set the table, and visit until Leonard finishes his nap. When Papa comes home, he'll help us forget about the auto ride, for he has so much to tell us about his day in town, the war news, business, and other current events."

"How happy you always seem in your home life Emeline," said Marie, as they went up the broad stairs, their arms interlaced about each other.

"Therefore, the least that I can do is to help keep the home atmosphere free of chill or cloud. You were away the Sunday that we had the Fifth Commandment for the day's lesson; but besides making it all very plain, the point that was most strongly impressed on me was when Miss Preston said: 'We may often honor one quite as much by refraining from doing something of which they do not approve, as we can by doing something which is sure to have their sanction.' Isn't it so?"

"It certainly is. The one is only negative, it is true, and the other positive; but it is sometimes true that the negative force is even more powerful than the positive," replied Marie, again radiant.

And all of us may honor our parents, by respecting not only their more mature judgment—even in little things—but their wishes, their preferences and even their personal peculiarities. It is a blessed way to pile up pleasant memories, too: for to all must come the day when Father's work for us is done, his account book closed, and mother's busy hands are folded for the last time on earth.

Happy the girl or boy who can look back upon the days when they honored the living parents by consulting them upon the little things of life—dress, books, friendships, business, amusements, studies, etc., as well as upon the larger ones of greater and graver importance.

And now is none too soon to begin what may be an eternal bank account in favor of young people who so "lay up treasures" "where moth and rust do not corrupt, nor thieves break through and steal." To-day is yours; to-morrow may be too late.

Pointed Paragraphs

Live in the sunshine; you will live longer.

Tell the truth; neither God nor man has any use for a liar.

Obey your parents; the world loves the boy or man who loves and respects his mother.

Join the Church; for your own good as well as for the good that you can do, you should line up with God's people.—EXCHANGE.

CELEBRATING INDEPENDENCE DAY

Flora's grandmother, who had come to visit them and see the parade. Best of all they had seats on the same stand, close to Betty. Soon they were all seated comfortably, and Betty and Flora were smiling back and forth. Then there came a faint strain of gay music, growing louder and closer every minute. Then the flags and soldiers and wonderful floats and splendid bands came sweeping down the street.

The people cheered and clapped their hands joyfully at the brave sight. But among them all there was not one happier child than Betty. Her own good time was made all the brighter by the adventure on the way, for it had given her the chance to help the dear old lady, and to plant the seeds of kindly helpfulness in half a dozen boyish hearts.

of this house and family while she's away!"

"So far as earning anything is concerned, I think you're wrong, Marie dear. I happen to know something of my High School expenses for this year, to say nothing of room-rent, board, and clothing, all of which are very expensive items at present—as you, too, know. But it is the fact that I am sure that Mamma would not approve of the party as it is being arranged, which keeps me from saying 'Yes, and thank you!' Personally I don't see the harm, as they are all girls and boys from our 'set,' if it weren't for the late hour which the long ride will mean, the supper at some public place and the going without a chaperone. But these are just the points where Mamma has her own convictions, and a right to

Our Fireside

Ngai Tsz—The Story-Teller's Daughter

By Jean Mateer Beeman

ONE bright beautiful morning in the Spring of the year a Chinese pastor's wife went to the village stream to wash her bowl of millet before it was to be cooked for breakfast.

As soon as the grain had been thoroughly cleansed and she was about to return home, her attention was attracted by peculiar sounds which came from an odd little bundle lying exposed on the stones along the water's edge.

Making a closer inspection, the woman gave a gasp of astonishment, lifted the bundle tenderly in her arms, then hid it within the folds of her loosely flowing garment and turned homeward with flying footsteps.

Rushing breathlessly into her courtyard, where she met her husband, she exclaimed joyfully:

"See! See! What I have found!"

"What is it?" inquired her husband curiously as he followed his wife into the bedroom where she gently laid her burden upon the couch.

"Look!" exclaimed she, standing proudly aside to give a better view.

"A babe! Where did it come from?" he inquired, now much interested.

"I found it down by the stream. And it's a little girl, but we'll keep her anyway, won't we?" and the woman looked appealingly into the manly face of her husband.

For a little time the man did not reply. There had been a childless home. Formerly Mr. Wang was a professional story-teller, going about Shantung Province, making a livelihood as best he could by entertaining the people with his recital of the folk lore of their land. They had spent a great deal of money in offerings at the temples that they might be blessed with a son. A few years previous to the opening of our story they had heard of the "Jesus Doctrine," had consecrated their lives to God, and were spreading broadcast the news of the Bible stories and yet all their prayers to Heaven for a child of their very own had as yet gone unanswered. They would have preferred to have a son, for that is a natural wish of the Chinese—and yet, perhaps this little waif was the answer to their prayer!

The young native evangelist bent thoughtfully over the little bundle and just then the babe opened its tiny black eyes and smiled up into his face. He smiled in return, raised the child into his strong arms, and said to his wife:

"Yes, she shall be our daughter. Let us dedicate her to God now and to the service of the Church!"

Still holding the wee stranger closely to him, the husband knelt with his wife upon the earthen floor of their humble home and earnestly, reverently and joyfully gave unreservedly into God's keeping His new gift to them.

And so, it happened that glorious Spring day, that a poor, forlorn, abandoned babe from some unwelcome home, was received gratefully into the hearts of its foster father and mother—who loved it and treasured it above every earthly possession.

Thus the years passed quickly by. They called their daughter "Ngai Tsz"—"God's gift"—because He had sent her to be the sunshine and blessing of their home. The child grew strong and robust in body, and early developed an unusually bright mind and sweetness of character, which won for her a host of friends.

When she reached school age her foster father took great pride in teaching her himself, so that she kept far ahead of her fellow pupils in the little country school which was taught by a graduate of the Wei Hsien High School for Girls. Mrs. Wang was an adept needlewoman and a skilled housewife and delighted in training her little girl in all those things which would some day make her a good wife and mother—capable of efficiently managing a home of her own.

Little Ngai Tsz was never quite so happy as when, out of school hours, she would gather her heathen schoolmates about her, sing to them the sweet Gospel hymns and tell them in her quaint childish way the beautiful stories to be found in the "Jesus Book"—the Bible. In this way, her own heart bubbling over with love for the Christ, she was able to lead a great many of the children of the village to a knowledge of the "Jesus Doctrine," and they in turn told their parents and urged them to go to the Christian Chapel to see and hear the wonderful things for themselves.

So the years, as they flew by, brought marvelous changes to the "Flowery Kingdom." Telegraphs, telephones, post offices, electric lighting, newspapers, and other modern inventions were widely introduced. Railroads were built across many provinces. The old Empress Dowager issued an edict urging the women of the nation to cease the binding of their feet. While, most wonderful of all, throughout the Empire there suddenly sprang up everywhere Government schools for girls, fostered by the highest officials of the land and attended by girls of all classes, from the poor beggar lassies who must be self-supporting all the way up the line of rank to the daughters of court officers and Imperial Princes of the realm.

Finally there was flashed over the Empire the welcome news that the Imperial family at Peking had been overthrown and a republic was to be set up in place of the old tyrannical rule of the Manchu Dynasty.

This new state of affairs ushered in a wonderful new day for China's daughters, and the nation awoke at last to its responsibility and privilege in giving to its girls every educational advantage open to its sons.

When Ngai Tsz had finished the course in the grade schools, her parents sent her for four happy, profitable years to the excellent Girls' High School at Wei Hsien. Through all her life in the missionary compound Ngai Tsz was a universal favorite with schoolmates, teachers and foreign friends, who were soon convinced that this young girl, with such a bright intellect and such a sweet Christian character, had indeed been raised up of God for a definite purpose, that He might be glorified.

When the graduation time came, one lovely June afternoon Mr. and Mrs. Wang were justly proud of their daughter as she sat upon the beautiful decorated platform among her fellow classmates; and finally, their hearts overflowed with praise to God as she arose modestly and gave the valedictory address entitled: "Women's Work For The New Republic."

During the summer vacation following her graduation there came to Wang Ngai Tsz a very attractive offer of a position as Principal of a Government School for Girls to be opened that Autumn in a little township some miles distant from her own home. It would not be a large school at the beginning, for it was only an experiment in that particular locality—the Mandarin being strongly opposed to the education of girls and being especially bitter against "the foreign devils' religion"—he himself being an ardent Buddhist adherent.

And so, at the appointed time, equipped with her splendid mental training and fortified with her deep consecration to the service of her Master, the young graduate assumed her new duties in the small but attractive building which had been erected for the purpose, and enthusiastically she entered into the work among the twenty-five enrolled heathen girls.

For many miles in every direction there was no Christian church of any kind, and Ngai Tsz had a very difficult time persuading the high and mighty Mandarin to permit the reading of the Bible in the school—but finally he was constrained to give his reluctant consent.

We cannot here follow this earnest young worker through all the mingled experiences of that wonderful year. But toward the close of the Spring Semester a remarkable thing happened, which we shall briefly relate. The Mandarin—the highest official of the county—caused to be circulated broadcast the news that upon a certain day in June every man, woman and child who could possibly come, should gather at the great Temple at An Kiu.

At once there was a tremendous excitement among the people. What could be the object of such a gathering? It was not one of their Feast Days. It was not their New Year Time, when all were supposed to go before their gods to burn incense and offer gifts of flowers, food and paper money. What could it all mean?

The Mandarin would answer no questions; he remained silent, secretive—but smiling. He knew he had indeed a surprise for his people.

When the day arrived, the town was simply thronged with a vast mob of chattering, laughing, wondering souls—ready to be enlightened as to the meaning of this very unusual occasion.

Before the stone steps of the large Buddhist temple there had been erected a platform, upon which sat the Mandarin clothed with all the splendor of his robes of office while about him were grouped his assistants and underlings.

Suddenly he arose and in quick, decisive sentences he made the following announcement:

"Just a year ago there came to our township a young woman teacher from the foreign devils' school yonder at Wei Hsien. She insisted upon the privilege of reading each day portions of 'the Jesus Doctrine Book.' As you know, I have always worshipped Buddha, as we have

DON'T decide on the new hymn-book for your Church or Sunday School until you have seen

HALLOWED HYMNS
NEW AND OLD

Edited by IRA ALLAN SANKEY
Son of the famous Singing-Evangelist
Ira D. Sankey
OVER 550,000
COPIES ALREADY SOLD

Responsive Scripture Readings
No Trashy Words No Jingly Music

Price $25.00 per 100 not prepaid
35 cents per copy by mail

Examine a copy and prove its value in your work. (Returnable if desired.)

The Biglow & Main Co., New York
Chicago

all been taught to do. But my own daughter happened to be a pupil of our new Girls' School. She brought into my home a copy of the book of the white man's religion.

"At first I would not read it—but gradually I became curious. I closely watched the life of this young woman, so different from the rest of us. I decided that she had found something worth while—and she claimed it was because she was a Christian and got her orders from the King of Heaven. So I began to read her book—day and night I have read it—and I have been convinced that it is far superior to the teachings of the Buddhist faith, which give us no hope either for this life or any future existence.

"I have called you here to-day, my people, to make this my public profession of my faith in the 'Jesus Doctrine'—and in the name of the only true God, I invite you each one to investigate and see for yourselves if I have not found the Better Way.

"I want to say also that I have given orders for the immediate total destruction of this temple. Upon this site there is to be erected before another school year begins, large and commodious buildings, where our girls may have every advantage for culture and advancement—that they may be trained, under the able leadership of their Christian teacher to take their places as useful, enlightened citizens of our great Republic of China."

The Girl That Counts

There are cloudy days and days of sunshine. The cloudy days have their limitations; for certain conditions they are acceptable and we welcome the gray sky, the heavy rains. But the day of sunshine has no limitations; it is always welcome, always joybearing. The sick, the helpless, the laborer, the weary, all hail the day of sunbeams, and this is just what happens to the girl who scatters sunshine. The gloomy girl is given standing room, but the girl who leaves a ray of sunshine everywhere is the girl that every one welcomes. The girl who works with a smile, the girl who looks on the bright side, who always has a cheery word, who can find time to take a bunch of flowers to a friend, or write a word of sympathy to the one in need—in short, the girl who can transform sadness into gladness, by the force of her sunny presence, is the girl that counts wherever she may be found.—SELECTED.

Not Happy

Rev. John Gunn, who has been for thirty-three years a missionary of the Free Church of Scotland on the Island of Futuna, in the New Hebrides, has made this significant statement:

"Some persons who think the natives should be left alone to live their simple happy lives, free from care, should live among them. Quite happy, are they? In daily fear of malignant spirits; dreading to omit the smallest detail in their ceremonies, lest they should be smitten with disease, or their gardens be blighted; in terror they move at night from their huts lest they should fall under the unseen bullet of the hidden enemy—their lives were miserable, and it is the greatest mockery to say they were happy."

It is the splendid mission of the Gospel to change all this, and by the preaching of the truth as it is in Jesus to bring true happiness into the hearts and lives of those who are dwelling in the darkness of heathendom.

For Building Up Quickly

probably the very best food you can select is

Grape-Nuts.

It contains the mineral salts and energy values—all the nutriment of whole wheat and barley—digests easily and quickly, and the flavor is delicious.

"There's a Reason"

for

Grape-Nuts

The Romance of Self Denial

BY MARY DAVIS.

I DROPPED in at the home of the Winchesters the other day on my way home from office. They are a merry hearted family and enjoy life and each other. There was a great shout as I entered the dining room.

"Aunt Mary will have to eat some of our corn meal mush," shrieked the twins.

"Yes, do have some mush, Mary," coaxed their mother with a twinkle in her eyes.

The table was set out as daintily as usual and the little candles cast a rosy light from under their silk shades, but mush was the only article of food on the table.

I am an old friend, so Mrs. Winchester explained simply, "Miss Abby Wright is convalescing from the grippe and the doctor says she needs appetizing food. I wanted to buy her a chicken, but our budget for charity was exhausted so we sent her our chicken and are eating mush ourselves."

"Last week we sent our ice cream to Susie Tibbetts," boasted the Girl Twin. The Boy Twin nodded happily as he ate a second helping of mush with gusto.

I told the story of the mush to the girls at the office. Dorothy, who is as quick-witted as a fox, said in a minute, "We could do that too! Now, listen! We four are each going to pay a dollar for our tickets to Madame Burton's concert. Now if we contented ourselves with seventy-five cent seats we could take little Helen along too. She is crazy over music."

"All right," agreed the others, so our little office girl had a treat because of the Winchesters' mush.

Mr. Wallace, the manager of our office, must have heard about the tickets. Perhaps Dorothy told him about the mush too. But at any rate he told us the tale of his new coat. "I was going to pay twenty-five dollars more for a coat that I liked a little better than this one. Then I decided to send a check for the twenty-five to our minister's boy who is putting himself through college.

And the youngster wrote back that he bought a suit of clothes with it." Mr. Wallace looked ten years younger as he told the story.

Out of the bowl of mush came our tax for luxuries. Quick-witted Dorothy proposed it, but it won the approval of the entire office force. Whenever we buy flowers, magazines, candy or other unnecessary trifles we drop a small coin into the "Iron Man." During the year the funds in that "Iron Man" have bought shoes for poor children, sent a religious paper to a little woman "up country," and provided dainties for the sick. All out of our abundance!

When I was a child, the hardest and most difficult text in the Bible was, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

Now I feel the truth of it. The bowls of mush made the merry-hearted Winchesters feel the ties of brotherhood to the great human family. We enjoyed our concert better because of little Helen's glowing face, and Mr. Wallace felt warmer because the minister's boy had a decent suit of clothes. And the girls in the office were as happy as crickets over fitting out the ragged, darling little Smiths.

That body of water is never stagnant that has an outlet. The stagnant waters of the soul, morbid thoughts, selfishness and sordidness turn into higher, nobler passions as we bestow our bounty cheerfully upon the unfortunate and we find that instead of impoverishing ourselves we are astonishingly rich. As Elizabeth Barret Browning sings,

"A child's kiss
Set on thy sighing lips shall make thee glad;
A poor man served by thee, shall make thee rich;
A sick man served by thee, shall make thee strong;
Thou shalt be served thyself by every sense
Of service which thou renderest."

"Not Uncertainly"

BY REV. C. A. S. DWIGHT, PH.D.

Paul of Tarsus declared to the Corinthians—who were particularly in need of steadying counsel—that in the race of life he did not progress "uncertainly." The adverb in the Greek denotes that which is "not manifest," or, as we would say, a "dubious" course. This caution against indecision, vacillation and erratic wandering is needed in every age. Too many Christians pursue only a zig-zag course toward heaven—they belong to the church's force of Irregulars. What is needed in their lives is more of the single eye, more accuracy of moral aim, more sureness of approach to the goals of God.

Vacillating souls, easily diverted from the narrow way to the side-shows of evil, ought to adopt as their own Paul's motto—"Not as uncertainly!" The certainty, too, should apply to matters of belief as well as to conduct. It has been said that the difference between the two English leaders, Mr. Balfour and Mr. Bonar Law, is that in Parliament, when some member of the opposing party would ask a pointed question, Mr. Law would reply "Certainly," whereas Mr. Balfour never could be betrayed into giving a positive answer either way to such an inquiry—or perhaps would simply look up to the ceiling. There are times in life when very properly judgment may be reserved, but just as truly there are many occasions when the attitude of uncertainty, or of hesitating reserve, is unseemly.

When we are dealing with the great doctrines of the Christian faith we need "blessed assurance," not weak equivocation. In doctrine as well as in practical life "not as uncertainly" should be our motto. The Bible does not indeed ask any man to believe without evidence, but it does demand that all men accept the evidence which is abundantly presented for the historic facts of the New Testament record, and the truth of the spiritual message which the sacred Book contains. No man need abide in ignorance regarding God's will, or become the prey of bewildering and numbing doubt.

But what is the price of this religious certainty? What is the condition on which "blessed assurance" can be obtained? It is a close fellowship with Christ, an abiding in the Word of God. They who walk close to the Master have no doubt of His divinity, of the reality of the spiritual life, of the need of salvation from sin, or of the adequacy of the redemption provided in Jesus Christ.

If anything is sure, Jesus is sure, and satisfying. Unrest and dismal doubt have then no place in the plans and purposes of a true Christian, who, alike in his beliefs and his daily walk and conversation, approves and fulfills the motto of that noble and far-seeing scholar-missionary from Tarsus: "not as uncertainly."

Longing—and Working

If we could ever realize when our natures are becoming poverty-stricken, arid and dry, perhaps we could alter them before it is too late. If only we could be brave enough to come close to life and say to it: "I am willing to be plowed deep if that is the only way I can be made tender. Send sorrow, if it must be, that tears may fall on my sterile heart and soften it. Give me as much joy as I can earn, or can be trusted with, that sunshine may help to make me sweeter and more fertile; only teach me to live in the depths of myself, giving all I have to give, holding nothing back, lest it dwindle and die in the holding."

It does not mean conceit or vanity when you believe in those powers that enable you to give generously, even royally, such things as smiles, kind words, praise, comfort, good cheer, courage, happiness, love, compassion, heart's ease. All those, we sometimes say, "cost nothing." Alas which one of us would say that it costs nothing to cultivate a golden heart? If it were easy, if it could be attained by a momentary impulse for good, most of us would be saints at this very moment.

Longing lights the lovely fire; but Longing brings thee still no higher
To thy heart's desire.
Work: work, and thou shalt know!

SELECTED.

Our Big Little Savings

It is said that the national Bureau of Engraving and Printing uses every day from twenty to twenty-five miles of twenty-two-inch cloth just in wiping surplus ink from the plates used in printing bills and postage-stamps. After a single using, the cloth must be thrown away. But now a company in Virginia buys these discarded cloths, and gets from them every year 3,500,000 pounds of fine ink, black, green, red, and orange. These inks the company transforms into pastes and ready mixed paints of all colors, and turns a handsome penny by the operation, besides enriching the United States government.

This is a lesson we all sadly need in our daily lives, the lesson of economy. How much waste time we wipe off of our daily work and play! How much waste effort we throw into the scrap-basket of our lives! How much waste emotion, waste thought, waste manhood and womanhood, goes on to the rubbish-heap from our heedless years!

It is because we do not plan carefully and wisely. We do not husband our resources. We print our hours and days from a lavish press as if paper and ink were ours from an exhaustless storehouse and at no cost. Then, the first thing we know, a staggering bill is presented. Perhaps we find bankruptcy facing us—bankruptcy of health, or of ideas, or of courage, or of faith. There are many bankruptcies worse than the financial kind.

Let us save the waste ink. Let us save all the odds and ends. Let us utilize the fragments. As in Christ's miracle, they will make twelve basketfuls, and they will feed us for many days.

—CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR WORLD.

APPLES OF GOLD

An ideal paper for Primary Departments and infant classes and for little children in the home. Single copies, 30 cents; five copies to one address, 25 cents; ten or more, 20 cents each, per year. Postage on Canadian and foreign subscriptions, 6 cents per copy additional. Sample copies sent on request.
AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY
Park Ave. and 40th St., New York City

PARENTS who love to gratify children's desire for the same articles of food and drink that grown-ups use, find just the thing.

INSTANT POSTUM

"There's a Reason"

A Splendid Fountain Pen for Vacation Use

A Fountain Pen is always a necessity and here is an opportunity of securing a good one with only a little effort (see offer below).

The publishers of the AMERICAN MESSENGER are very desirous of increasing the circulation of this admirable publication, and it is for that purpose in view, we are offering this splendid Fountain Pen. The Pen is known as the Commercial Fountain Pen.

The pen is six and one half inches long, and suitable for either lady or gentleman, and fully guaranteed. In the construction of this pen only the best of materials are used. The rubber parts are hand-turned Para rubber. The gold nib is 14 karat solid gold tipped with the best grade of hard iridium.

OFFER No. 1 We will send one of these fountain pens

absolutely free to any one who sends us three new yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at the regular price, 50 cents each.

OFFER No. 2 We will give one fountain pen and a year's subscription to the AMERICAN MESSENGER for only $1.20.

Any of our present subscribers may take advantage of offer No. 2 by extending their subscription one year, and remitting $1.20 in payment for the same.

Our young friends will find this, a very good method of securing a Fountain Pen for themselves. Try it and see how easy it is to secure only 3 new yearly subscriptions at 50 cents each.

American Messenger, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York

THE TREASURY

SPECIAL NOTICE

Owing to occasional losses of letters, containing money, we would request friends and donors of the American Tract Society to remit by check or Post Office Money Order, which latter can always be duplicated in case of loss.

Receipts of the American Tract Society During May, 1917

Total Donations (Including $537.79 for Special Objects), $4,548.43.

CALIFORNIA, $7.50. Mrs. Walker, $6.50; Miss Hills, $1. COLORADO, $1. Mr. Croston, for tracts for Army and Navy, $1. CONNECTICUT, $117.90. Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Woolworth, $5; Mrs. Lane, $2; "A Friend," $1; Hartford, Church Offering, for Soldier's Text Books, $5; Mrs. Green, for Soldier's Text Books, $20; Mr. Clark, for Soldier's Text Books, $25; Thompson, Church Collection, $7.90; Mr. Platt, $25; Mr. Taylor, $1; Mrs. Churchill, $5; Misses M. H. and S. P. Rogers, $10; Judge Perry, for Soldier's Text Books, $10; Miss Andrews, $1.

ILLINOIS, $16. "A Friend," $5; Mrs. Bradford, $5; Miss Jonkman, $1; Mr. Brooks, $5. INDIANA, $1. Evansville, Church Offering, $1. IOWA, $253.21. Miss Roth, $1; Mr. McGregor, $10; Mr. Kinsman, $5; Mr. Addengast, $5; Miss Weed, $5; Miss Baird, for work in the Army and Navy, $1.50; Mrs. Christie, $5; George, Church Collection, $54.84; George, Church Offering, $8.55; Sibley, Church Collection, $13.34; Lyon Co., No. 1, Church Offering, $43.35; Ashton, Church Collection, $33.74; George, Church Offering, $11.25; Mr. Freerks, $2; Mr. Groot, $5; Mr. Klinkenborg, $2; Little Rock, Church Collection, $46.64.

KANSAS, $10.75. Mrs. Bergmann, $1; Mr. Entz, $4.15; Rev. Mr. Entz, $3; "A Friend," $1; Mr. Lichte, $0.65; Rev. Mr. Klitzing, $0.30; Mr. Kaufmann, $0.65.

KENTUCKY, $44.35. Dr. Clarke, $5; Mr. Curran, $5; Mrs. De Long, $1; Hon. Mr. Hunt, $0.35; Mr. Lyle, $1; Mr. McCann, $1; Mr. Massie, $1; Mrs. Payne, for Soldier's Text Books, $5; Mr. Ross, $2; Mr. H. Barrett, $1; Mr. Barrett, $1; Mr. J. Barrett, $2; Mr. Davis, $5; Mr. Dortch, $5; Mr. Meldrum, $2; Mr. Newbold, $1; Dr. Tileston, $1; Mr. Wheat, $5. MARYLAND, $2. Miss Birnie, $2.

MASSACHUSETTS, $51. Mr. Hendry, $1; Mr. Perry, $1; Mrs. Howland, $5; "A Friend," $5; Mrs. Stimpson, for Soldier's Text Books for 100 Soldiers, $3; Dr. Miles, $3; Mr. Wyman, $10; Mrs. Allen, $0.25; "A Friend," $0.25; Boston, Church Offering, $0.50; Mr. Webster, $2; Mrs. Mason, $10; Mr. Brewer, for Soldier's Text Books, $5; Mr. Marcy, for Soldier's Text Books, $5.

MICHIGAN, $10. Jackson, Church Offering, $10. MINNESOTA, $2. Mrs. Wyss, $2. MISSOURI, $124. Mr. Lease, $5; Miss Gibson, for work among Soldiers, $5; W. H. Markham & Co., $5; Mr. Andrews, $5; Mr. Ballard, $5; Mr. Bousack, $5; Mr. Brimsmade, $2; Mr. Galt, $1; Mr. Herriot, $1; Mrs. Holmes, $10; Mr. Langenberg, $1; Mr. Manning, $1; Mr. Miller, $5; Mr. Pauley, $5; Mr. Peters, $10; Dr. Post, $1; Dr. Rehfeldt, $5; Hon. Mr. Spencer, $10; Miss Switzer, $3; Mr. Ten Broek, $15; Mr. Waterworth, $2; Mr. Whitchill, $5; Mr. Wiggins, $5; Winkle-Terra Cotta Co., $10; Webster Groves, Church Offering, $2.

NEBRASKA, $6.20. Mr. Haub, $0.20; Mr. Woods, $1; Lyons, Church Offering, $5.

NEVADA, $1. Mr. Buterbaugh, $1.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, $15. Mr. Wetherbee, $15.

NEW JERSEY, $2,709.20. Miss Davis, $5; Mr. Cowan, $2; West Hoboken, Church Collection, $8; Mr. Indersoll, $1; Caldwell, Church Collection, $10; Mrs. Voorhees, $2,508.20; Miss Calkins, for distribution of Bible Literature, $25; Miss Littell, $3; Mr. Cook, $5; Miss Brown, $2; "A Friend," $1; Mr. Hoffman, $1; Mr. Cortelyou, to constitute Mr. Woodward a Life Director, $100; Dr. Franklin, $2; Mrs. Lynde, $20; Miss P. Dwyer, $1; Rev. Mr. Honeyman, $5; "Ein Freund," $10.

NEW YORK, $746.86. Mrs. Crockett, for Soldier's Text Books, $1; The Memorial Fund, $18; Dr. Buchanan, $100; Miss Davison, $2; Mr. Bayne, $5; Mr. R. Keen, $10; New York City, Church Collection, $27.49; New York City, Church Collection, $366.74; Miss Strong, $20; Miss Dooley, In Memory of Her Father, Rev. H. T. Dooley, $5; Mrs. Hawkins, $10; Mr. Frank, $2; Mr. Watson, $1; Miss Zabriskie, $2; Miss Mills, $10; East Bloomfield, Church Offering, $18.80; Miss Andrus, $1; Irvington-on-Hudson, Church Collection, $25; Mrs. D. L. ... $2; Mr. Peckham, $3; Miss Davison, for Soldier's Text Books and general work, $5; Meadow Brook, Church Collection, $5; Miss Masters, $1; Watertown, Church Offering, $10; Miss Bowen, $3; Mrs. Brown, for work in Army and Navy, $5; Mr. King, $10; Mrs. Cole, $1; Mrs. Rothberg, $0.53; Mrs. ... $1; Mr. Johnson, $4.50.

NORTH DAKOTA, $10. ... $10. OHIO, $91.46. Mr. Hunt, $2; Mr. Behner, $5; Mr. Ring, $1; Mr. ... $5; Rev. Mr. Crook, $2. Mr. ... $5; Mr. ... $5. Miss ... $10; Prof. ... $1; Mr. Meacham, $5; Mr. Ponnford, $5; Mr. Ritchie, $5; Mr. Shipley, $10; Mr. Stearns, $10; Dr. Chase, $1; Mr. Gump, $1; Mr. Irwin, $1; Mr. Kumber, $1; Mr. McKee, $2; Mr. Marietta, $1; Mr. Perrine, $1; Mr. Phelps, $3; Mr. Frank, $1; Mr. Wintchiet, $3; East Liverpool, Church Offering, $1.46.

PENNSYLVANIA, $264.90. Mr. Neff, $5; Mrs. Buckman, for Literature for Soldiers, $10; Mr. Albert, for distribution of Tracts and other Literature, $15; McKeesport, Church Offering, $10; Mrs. Cain, $100; Mr. Trexler, $10; The Misses Weigle, for Literature for Soldiers, $2; "In His Name," for Colportage in the West, $5; Mr. Patton, $5; Mrs. McCormick, $10; Mr. Heilig, $1; Miss Coleman, $10; Mr. Wertz, $4.90; Miss Cole, $5; Rev. Mr. Frith, $5; Mr. Kerrick, for Soldier's Text Books, $2; Mr. Wilbur, $5; Mrs. Hailman, $5; Mr. Eiler, $5; Mrs. Langhin, Jr., $50.

SOUTH CAROLINA, $7. Misses Ella and Ida Dudley, $2; Rev. Mr. Andrews, for work among the Soldiers, $5.

TENNESSEE, $2. Mrs. Williams, $2.

TEXAS, $2. Mrs. Johnston, $2.

VERMONT, $25. Miss Worcester, $1; Mrs. Benedict, for Soldier's Text Books, $5; Mr. Crane, $5; Mr. Howe, $5; Mr. Perkins, $5; Gen. Peck, for Soldier's Text Books, $1; "A Friend," $1; Mr. Ritchie, $2.

VIRGINIA, $15. John L. William & Sons, $15.

WASHINGTON, $7. Dr. Chapman, for Soldier's Text Books, $7.

WEST VIRGINIA, $2. Mr. McCoy, $2.

WISCONSIN, $2.10. "Ungenannt," $1.80; Mrs. Arpke, $0.30.

FOREIGN, $1. Canada, Mrs. McCrae, $1.

LEGACIES, $644.77. Warsaw, N. Y., Estate of Adelia C. Walker, $69.77; Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Estate of Sarah M. Pells, $570; West Manchester Township, Pa., Estate of Jacob Bare, on account, $5.

INCOME FROM TRUST FUNDS, $1,225. Income for Missionary Work, $1,225.

Donations

DONATIONS for the missionary work of the American Tract Society may be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

Life Members and Directors

THE donation of $30 at one time constitutes a Life Member of the American Tract Society; the addition of $70, or the donation of $100 at one time, constitutes a Life Director. Life members may receive annually copies of the Society's own publications to the value of $1; Life Directors to the value of $2; if applied for within the Society's year, from April 1st to April 1st, in person or by written order. No individual can draw more than one annuity any year for himself. Colporters are not authorized to supply Life Members.

Form of Bequest

I GIVE and bequeath to the "AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY," instituted in the City of New York, May, 1825, the sum ofdollars to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said Society.

Three witnesses should state that the testator declares this to be his last will and testament, and that they signed at his request, and in his presence and the presence of each other.

"Behold, I Am Living"

One of the inquirers recently baptised in the Congo Mission of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, was Iyeza Nkoi, an old Nkum or feudal lord. His name might signify Lord Leopard. So far as we have been able to ascertain, he is the only man of his class who has been baptised. He did some really heroic things to become a Christian, and he has endured persecution for the cause. He washed his body with water—an unheard of thing for an Nkum to do. He broke his vow, he bared his head to the gaze of all as he was baptised. An Nkum must appear in men's presence with covered head. Some of his family, though Christians, were afraid that he would drop dead as he uncovered his head. But he braved it all. He said to us one day as we were at supper: "Teachers, I have washed my body with water, and done other things that an Nkum never does, and behold I am living; should I longer fear to uncover my head?"

From a Subscriber

In renewing her subscription for the AMERICAN MESSENGER, Mrs. Fitch of Mattoon, writes: "I find the AMERICAN MESSENGER one of the best magazines I ever have taken for the money. It carries a true, clear spiritual inspiration."

American Tract Society

THIS SOCIETY was organized in 1825. Its work is interdenominational and international in scope, and is commended by all evangelical denominations.

It has published the Gospel messages in 178 languages, dialects and characters. It has been the pioneer for work among the foreign-speaking people in our country, and its missionary colporters are distributing Christian literature in many languages among our foreign-speaking population and making a home-to-home visitation among the spiritually destitute, both in the cities and rural districts, leaving all kinds of Christian literature, also the Bible or portions of the Scriptures.

Its publication of leaflets, volumes and periodicals from the Home Office total 797,704,700 copies. It has made foreign cash appropriations to the amount of $802,966.39, and grants of electrotypes to the value of $61,177.96, by means of which millions of copies of books and tracts have been published at mission stations abroad.

The gratuitous distribution of the past year is to the value of $18,461.65. The grand total of its gratuitous distribution has been to the value of $2,652,967.54, which is the equivalent of 5,305,935,080 tract pages.

The total number of family visits that have been made by the Society's colporters during the last year is 199,963; the total number of volumes distributed by sale or grant is 55,712, making the total number of volumes that have been circulated by colporters in the last seventy-six years 17,438,166, and the total number of family visits that they have made during the same period 18,812,806.

The Society is making very special effort in behalf of Latin America, having entered upon the publication of a one volume Bible commentary in Spanish, a long-needed and earnestly prayed-for publication, and several other important volumes in both Spanish and Portuguese. Its total publications for Latin America now reach 16,012,088 copies. Its work, ever widening, is dependent upon donations and legacies, and greatly needs increased offerings.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President. JUDSON SWIFT, D. D., General Secretary. Remittances should be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

For a Sunday School Library

A grant of books for a Sunday School Library in Menomonic, Wisconsin, has brought forth the following acknowledgment:

"The books for a Sunday School Library in our church are at hand. We are delighted with them, and desire to extend to the American Tract Society our sincerest thanks for this lift in our 'labor of love' for a none-too-encouraging field of labor. If the time should ever come that we can do anything to assist the Society in its greater 'labor of love' it will be a pleasure to render such service."

The American Tract Society

- 1. It is a GREAT MISSIONARY PUBLICATION SOCIETY, having printed and distributed at home and abroad the Gospel Truth in 178 languages or dialects, thereby multiplying many times the power of the missionary.
2. Its UNION MISSIONARY COLPORTAGE reaches the dense population of the city and the scattered population of the country.
3.—Its WORK AMONG THE IMMIGRANTS is most successful. Its colporters are native foreigners speaking Christian Truth in the tongues of those to whom they are sent.
4.—By its GRANTS of cash, publications and electrotypes to missions and societies in the foreign field it enables them to print and circulate an undenominational Christian vernacular literature.

WHY IT SHOULD BE SUPPORTED

- 1.—Because the printed page finds tens of thousands who never learn of Christ in any other way.
2.—Because through its publications many souls are converted both on the home and foreign fields.
3.—Because its volumes and tracts and periodicals develop the spiritual life of Christians.
4.—Because its publications counteract the influence of impure and evil literature.

HOW I CAN HELP IT

- 1.—By making an Annual offering.
2.—By speaking of its work to my friends.
3.—By asking God's blessing upon its work and workers.
4.—By increasing the circulation of its publication.

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

TERMS: Subscription price, 50 cts. a year, payable in advance. In clubs of five or more, 30 cts. each. Club subscriptions mailed to separate addresses, if desired. Postage on foreign subscription, 24 cents additional. Canadian subscription, 12 cents additional. Single copies, 5 cents each.

On account of the additional charge which is made by the New York Post Office for mailing to subscribers in New York and Bronx Counties (Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx), no club rates, cash commissions or premiums will be given for subscriptions that must be sent to persons residing in those Counties. Each subscription in New York or Bronx County must be at the rate of 50 cents net.

Remit by Express, Money Order, Draft, Post Office Order or Registered Letter. For very small amounts, postage stamps may be sent at the risk of the sender.

RENEWALS: The date opposite your name shows to what time the subscription has been paid, and a change in the date is the receipt for renewal.

CHANGES: When sending change of address, be sure to send the old address as well as the new one.

OUR ADVERTISERS: We believe that all the advertisements in this paper are from responsible advertisers, and it is our intention to admit only such to our columns. Should, however, any of our subscribers find that any advertiser does not live up to his agreements, we would consider it a favor if they will inform us, and we will at any time give prompt attention to any complaint.

We do not, of course, guarantee that all persons will take the same point of view with the advertisers, and it must be borne in mind that the claims and statements made by advertisers are their assertions, and not ours.

Our readers will confer a favor upon advertisers and also upon us if they will mention the AMERICAN MESSENGER when answering advertisements.

FIELD SECRETARIES AND COLPORTAGE SUPERINTENDENTS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.

Rev. Isaac Pierson, Field Secretary for New England, 50 Bromfield Street, Boston, Mass.

Rev. A. W. Reinhard, Field Secretary and Superintendent of Colportage for the Western and Northwestern States, 721 South 37th Street, Omaha, Nebraska.

Rev. George Whitefort, Superintendent of Colportage, Southern Agency, Crichton, R.F.D., Mobile Co., Ala.

MANZANAS DE ORO

A charming little paper for Spanish readers. Published monthly and arranged in four-page parts for weekly distribution. In large part a reproduction in Spanish of the Tract Society's well known juvenile periodical entitled, Apples of Gold. Beautiful pictures; large, clear type; every issue printed in color. Single copy, 35 cents per year. Ten or more copies to one address, 30 cents each. A rebate of half these prices is given as a grant to missions and Sunday-schools. In all foreign countries except Cuba, Porto Rico and Mexico, 6 cents per copy must be added to the subscription price to cover postage. For individual subscriptions, the postage is 12 cents additional. American Tract Society, Park Ave. and 40th St., New York.

Recreation in the National Forests

That over a million and a half people use the National Forests as playgrounds each year was the statement recently made by Henry S. Graves, Chief of the Forest Service, before the American Forestry Association. "Located as they are," said Mr. Graves, "The National Forests comprise many regions of superb scenery and unexcelled recreation attraction. In a very real sense these attractions of the Forests constitute a natural resource that must be safeguarded, utilized, and developed."

Mr. Graves stated that a quarter of a century had passed since the establishment of the first National Forests by a law which marked the beginning of a new and more enlightened method of public land administration. The nineteenth century land system, he said, was one wholly of land distribution, which was successful as applied to agricultural lands but unsuccessful as applied to non-agricultural lands chiefly valuable for growing timber. The keynote of the present-day policy is to secure such a disposition, use, and development of the public lands as will render a maximum service to the public. "The country has recognized that public lands of chief value for forest purposes and essential to protect water resources should remain under public control," Mr. Graves continued. "The struggle is now on as to who shall own and control the public water-power sites, the coal, oil, phosphate, and potassium deposits and the common grazing lands that are not suited to development by individuals under any of the homestead laws."

"Ten States in the East have invited the Government to establish National Forests in their borders by purchase of mountain lands, while others have inaugurated a policy of acquiring State Forests. Underlying this movement is the recognized principle that there are public interests in mountain forests that can not or will not be safeguarded under private ownership. Private ownership of timberlands has been for the most part speculative and temporary in character. Where public interests are involved, the public must protect itself by direct ownership, co-operation, and ultimately a measure of regulation."

More and more of the larger private holdings are being posted with "No Trespassing" signs, and are closed to the public, so Mr. Graves stated. The closing of private lands points to the value of publicly owned forest lands where people living in cities and hot agricultural regions can find an opportunity for the refreshment and recreation that can be secured by a sojourn in the Forests.

Innumerable localities on the National Forests, which are not generally known, have a wealth of scenic beauty. A very practical problem is that of opening up and making these great public properties available for as wide use as possible by people of little means as well as by the wealthy.

In the National Forests of Colorado alone, there were last summer 676,000 visitors. Thousands came in automobiles and used the roads built by the Forest Service under the law which provides that ten per cent of all receipts of the National Forests shall be spent for road and trail building.

The recreation features of the National Forests are fostered in a variety of ways. Areas of scenic value are set aside as camping sites and are withdrawn from any use which would reduce their beauty. Roads and trails are built by the Forest Service to open up points of scenic interest, streams are stocked with fish, and sites for summer homes can be leased for long periods.

About 25,000 miles of trails and 3,000 miles of roads have been built on the Forests. Congress has appropriated a special fund of ten million dollars for road building on the National Forests, which will become available at the rate of a million dollars a year. This money, added to the quarter of a million dollars now annually available from the receipts of the Forests, will result in opening up many regions now inaccessible for industrial use and also for recreation.

"In developing the recreational resources of the Forests," said Mr. Graves, "we are planning systematically and far ahead. Problems of landscape and sanitary engineering present themselves in large numbers and we have associated with us a distinguished landscape engineer to guide our work. Our system of scenic highways when worked out will be comprehensive in character, and ultimately routes of tourist travel will be furnished with comfortable hotels and rest houses. This development will be of great economic importance to the local communities, both on account of the added business which the tourist trade will bring and the permanent improvements which will be made."

Bible Against Hatchet

Some years ago a scow was tied up in Brooklyn harbor. The captain was a profane and ill-tempered man. One day a quiet, friendly caller visited the scow. He was a Swede, and he brought with him some Bibles to sell or give to the crews on board the freighters along the docks.

The captain flew into a rage. He rushed below decks and came back with a hatchet. Raising it over the Swede's head, he said loudly that he would kill him for bringing a Bible aboard his boat.

The colporter was quiet, but he also was brave. He stood perfectly still, waiting for the hatchet to descend. As it was raised higher, he said calmly: "I am not here in my own name. The Master I serve could strike you down immediately."

At this the captain, awed in spite of himself, dropped his weapon. Sullenly he stood and listened as the Swede read from the Bible and explained the Scriptures to the curious crew gathered about him. When the Bible-reading was over, no comment was made, and the Swede went on to another scow, where he was received with more courtesy. He wrote down in his report that night, "I feel assured that in this case the Word of God will not be without fruit." But why he felt that assurance he did not explain, for the incident would have been a truly discouraging one for most people.

Two years later this same Swede made the following report, which is printed in the Bible Society Record: "During this year I had the opportunity to be in a little soul-saving station on Manhattan Island. After the meeting was over, I was told that a certain man wished to speak to me. I went over toward him, and he said, 'Come over here and take this chair, which I have kept for the sailor's Bible man. You do not need to be afraid of me or of my hatchet any more. I am a new man now, and if you only can, forgive me!'"

It was the same captain who had once lifted the hatchet so murderously over the colporter's head. More powerful, more keen than any weapon forged by mortal hand, the two-edged sword of the Spirit had pierced his stubborn soul that day. He was no longer an enemy, but a brother of the brave and peaceful messenger who had brought him God's message two years before.

Its Message.

In sending the renewal of her subscription to the AMERICAN MESSENGER, Miss Berger of Jarbolo, Kansas, writes: "I welcome the coming of the AMERICAN MESSENGER more and more each year, as it brings a message to one and all. It brings joy to hearts that are glad and comfort to the hearts that are sorrowing."

Our Medicine Chest

Cholly—"When I was a boy, you know, the doctor said if I didn't stop smoking cigarettes I would become feeble-minded."

Miss Keen—"Well, why didn't you stop?"

"The meanest man that ever lived," says E. A. F., "lived in Vermont and had a chronic cold and used to wait for a sneeze so as to blow out the candle without wasting his breath."

Patience: "Your brother is a great bargain hunter, I hear."

Patrice: "He sure is. And he's quite excited just now."

"What about?"

"Oh, he's a confirmed bachelor, you know, but he read an advertisement yesterday in the paper about great bargains in wedding rings, and now he's all upset."

"Why don't you take the trouble to find out the way I like to have things done?" asked the mistress. "It's not worth while, mum," replied the new girl, "I never stay in a place long."

"I'm afraid you went to sleep during that learned discourse," said the woman with a strong sense of duty. "Yes," replied her husband; "when it started I was afraid I wouldn't."

Little Willie was missed by his mother one day for some time, and when he reappeared she asked: "Where have you been, my pet?"

"Playing postman," replied her "pet." "I gave letters to all the houses in our street. Real letters, too."

"Where on earth did you get them?" questioned his mother.

"They were those old ones in your wardrobe drawer, tied up with ribbon," was the innocent reply.

"I understand that after waiting twenty years she married a struggling young man."

"Yes, poor chap. He struggled the best he knew how, but she landed him."

Little six-year-old Harry was asked by his Sunday school teacher: "And, Harry, what are you going to give your darling little brother for Christmas this year?" "I dunno," said Harry; "I gave him the measles last year."

The young girl was visiting her girl friend for the first time after her marriage.

"And does your husband give you all the money you want?" she asked.

"Why, no dear. There isn't that much money."

Stubbs was feeling his way to the kitchen stove in the dark when he fell over the coal scuttle.

"Oh John," called Mrs. Stubbs sweetly. "I know what you need. You should get what they have on battleships."

"What's that?" growled Stubbs, as he rubbed his shins.

"Why a range finder."

"You remember that you sold me a horse last week?" said the cabman angrily to the horse dealer.

"Yes. What about him?"

"He fell dead yesterday."

"Well, I never!" said the dealer. "I told you he had some funny little ways, but upon my word I never knew him to do that before."

The Frenchman did not like the look of the barking dog barring his way.

"It's all right," said his host: "don't you know the proverb: 'Barking dogs don't bite?'"

"Ah, yes," said the Frenchman. "I know ze proverb, you know ze proverb; but ze dog—does he know ze proverb?"

"Conscience," said Uncle Eben, "is only a still small voice, an' half de time when it tries to speak up it finds dat de line is busy."

The Composition of Coca-Cola and its Relation to Tea

Prompted by the desire that the public shall be thoroughly informed as to the composition and dietetic character of Coca-Cola, the Company has issued a booklet giving a detailed analysis of its recipe which is as follows:

Water, sterilized by boiling (carbonated); sugar, granulated, first quality; fruit flavoring extracts with caramel; acid flavorings, citric (lemon) and phosphoric; essence of tea—the refreshing principle.

The following analysis, by the late Dr. John W. Mallet, Fellow of the Royal Society and for nearly forty years Professor of Chemistry in the University of Virginia, shows the comparative stimulating or refreshing strength of tea and Coca-Cola, measured in terms of the refreshing principle:

Black tea—1 cupful	1.54
(hot) (5 fl. oz.)
Green tea—1 glassful	2.02
(cold) (8 fl. oz. exclusive of ice)
Coca-Cola—1 drink, 8 fl. oz.	1.21
(fountain) (prepared with 1 fl. oz. Syrup)
Coca-Cola—1 drink, 8 fl. oz.	1.12
(bottlers) (prepared with 1 fl. oz. Syrup)

From the above recipe and analysis, which are confirmed by all chemists who have analyzed these beverages, it is apparent that Coca-Cola is a carbonated, fruit-flavored modification of tea of a little more than one-half its stimulating strength.

A copy of the booklet referred to above will be mailed free on request, and The Coca-Cola Company especially invites inquiry from those who are interested in pure food and public health propaganda. Address

The Coca-Cola Co., Dept. J., Atlanta, Ga., U. S. A.

BOOKS OF THE HOUR

Life and Adventures of Jack Philip, Rear Admiral, U. S. N.

By Edgar Stanton Maclay, A. M. Bound in cloth, 288 pages, 16 illustrations. Price 75 cents postpaid.

It is the well-told life of one of the most modest and noble heroes of the great American navy. Admiral Philip was a Paul Jones of our later sea-fighting line. Brimming over with action, written in admirable spirit, this book will be an inspiration to all patriotic fathers and sons. If we must have war, Admiral Jack Philip should be the hero of every last man.

The Islands of the Pacific

By James M. Alexander. Bound in cloth, 369 pages, 37 illustrations, 9 maps. Price $1.00 postpaid.

A timely volume dealing with the more important of the Pacific Islands, relating the almost incredible experiences and the remarkable accomplishments of people who have gone to the various groups. Special chapters on the Society, the Pearl, the Fiji, the Austral, Pitcairn and Norfolk Islands, Hawaii and New Zealand. An extremely informative history.

An Observer in the Philippines

By John Bancroft Devins. With a foreword by Ex-President Taft, and an appendix containing extracts of addresses by William McKinley, Theodore Roosevelt, Judge Alton B. Parker, Elihu Root and Luke E. Wright. Bound in cloth, 416 pages, 64 illustrations. Price, $2.00 postpaid.

Dr. Devins made a thoroughly personal study of the Philippine Islands. He travelled extensively among the natives, knew their customs, habits, peculiarities and latent possibilities. This book is an authority as to whether or not the Filipino is capable of governing himself and how he would do it, if given a chance. Dr. Devins also realized the commercial value and diplomatic advantage of this group of Islands. Read what we, as a nation, received for our $20,000,000 purchase price. Read whether it is wise for us to lose our right and release our supervision over the Philippines, especially at this time.

Religious Life of Famous Americans

By Louis Albert Banks. Bound in cloth. Frontispiece. 248 pages. Price, 50 cents postpaid.

All of our famous men and women made religion a part of their every-day life. It was this faith and practice which was the base of their success, which gave to them strength in times of stress and care and carried them onward. It is especially invigorating for our boys and girls and even their elders to know how much the great leaders of our land exercised Faith and Trust.

Among the well-known men and women cited are Abraham Lincoln, Rufus Choate, Samuel F. B. Morse, John Quincy Adams, James A. Garfield, Emma Willard, Abigail Adams, "Stonewall" Jackson and Robert E. Lee.

Small Volumes for the Kit, the Package, or the Pocket

Soldier's Text Book

Compiled by J. R. Macduff, D.D. Art Paper Cover. Price, 5 cents a copy (by mail 7 cents). $5.00 per hundred postpaid.

A little pocket volume of 46 pages containing a reading and a verse of Scripture especially adapted for the soldier for thirty-one mornings and thirty-one evenings. Four pages of sanitary directions gleaned from long campaign experience at the back. This little volume is a splendid companion for every soldier.

"These Words of Mine"

Selected and arranged by Abbie McCammon Brown. Bound in limp leather with book mark. Boxed. Price, 30 cents net (by mail 32 cents).

A little pocket book of 157 pages divided into months, with a selection of Scripture for every day in each month. Selected with special reference to conduct and character. A special page for special occasions. Beatitudes, Lord's Prayer, Commandments, etc., at the back.

New Testament with Notes

Silk cloth bound. Thin paper. Clear type. Red edges. Printed jacket with band of red, white and blue. 75 cents a copy postpaid for a short time. Better prices in quantities.

This New Testament is in answer to the demand for a pocket-size book with all the advantages of notes and explanations embodied in our complete Self-Explaining Bible. Concise explanations and instructions making daily application of the Word at the bottom of each page. Very helpful.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

PARK AVENUE AND 40th STREET

NEW YORK

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE LIBRARY

18 3 0 1917

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

Vol. 75

AUGUST, 1917

No. 8

JESUS AND THE MINISTERING WOMEN

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY, NEW YORK.

W.E. FRITZ. DES.

Our Honor Roll

On Our Honor Roll are placed the names of those into whose homes the AMERICAN MESSENGER has come for the last fifty years or more. To the growing list of those whose connection with this paper dates back for half a century or more we are pleased to add the name of Mr. Richard Lewis of Gillett, Pa., who writes in part as follows:

"My grandfather, David Sayre, used to get subscribers for the AMERICAN MESSENGER when my mother was a little girl. My mother is living with me now and is seventy-five years of age. She says the AMERICAN MESSENGER was a large two leaf (four-page) paper then. We think very much of the AMERICAN MESSENGER."

We are delighted to receive this communication from Mr. Lewis, and trust that he and his mother may continue to be readers of the AMERICAN MESSENGER for many years to come.

If there are others, whose connection with our paper extends back for fifty years or more, we shall be very pleased to hear from them.

The Man With the Basket of Fruit

Amos was a man of the fields. He loved the scent of the vines, the olives and the pomegranates. The orchards were his delight. He saw the blooming of the trees and he dreamed of the coming of the golden fruit. And one day as he thought on the strange providence which evolved so much beauty, fragrance and prophecy out of the earth and the trees, the God of the open air spoke to him, and said, "Amos, what seest thou?" and the farmer-prophet answered: "A basket of summer fruit." That is just what we would expect him to see, this man of the trees. The basket of fruit had filled the horizon of his dreams. Had he not gone to the open field and planted the trees? Had not his nurturing care been the good providence that had watched over them? Had he not seen the young trees grow until the blossoms shone like jewels among the leaves, and he dreamed of the good day when the Lord would transform those blossoms into fruit? Did he not hope for the day when he would go out with his basket to the trees and gather the treasures which the grateful boughs had brought from those secret byways along which no wheel has ever rolled? It was a basket of summer fruit that filled his prophetic vision. That is what he had a right to see, and, trusting God, had a right to expect.

"But," said this prophet of the green fields, "this is what the Lord Jehovah showed me." Of course. Who else could show it to him? What other power could bring those striped, pink and white miracles, fragrant with the sweetness of a land unseen, and hold them up before his gaze? Who could put an apple where no apple had ever been before. Who could call out of the secrets and the mysteries such delights and wave them before his sight—who but the Lord Jehovah? Amos did well to say that he saw a basket of summer fruit, for he had worked for it. He did well to say that the God of the trees showed it to him, for no other power could teach the roots of his trees to take hold on the earth and gather out of its night and silence the elements of the fiber and the leaf and the blossom and the fruit, ripen them in the sunshine and the breeze and turn them over to him as the wages of his toil and patience.

What may we not see in a basket of fruit if we will only put on our glasses, sit down beneath the trees, take the apples from the basket or the bough, invite God to come and sit down by our side and do a little research work on our own account! That basket of fruit will carry us back to the days when the earth was young and God was new to His own universe. It will lead us along paths which no human foot has ever trodden, and "the vulture's eye hath not seen," down into the earth where the juices are brewed and carried by invisible aqueducts out of the undiscoverable

Special Short Term Subscription Offer

WE have decided to continue for one month longer our offer to new subscribers of a Special Short Term Subscription to the AMERICAN MESSENGER from July, 1917, to December, 1917, inclusive (six months), for only Twenty-five Cents.

As you are a reader of the AMERICAN MESSENGER, we are confident that you appreciate its unique value. It is exceedingly helpful to young people in aiding them to participate in the Christian Endeavor Prayer Meetings, and it contains interesting and inspiring reading for every member of the family circle, whether young or old.

To those who secure Short Term Subscriptions among their friends and neighbors, we are offering the choice of a number of very attractive premiums, which will richly reward them for their co-operation with us in increasing the circulation of this paper.

For each new Short Term Subscription the sum of Twenty-five cents must be remitted in full. The subscription, as stated above, will run from July, 1917, to December, 1917, inclusive, making six issues in all. As a reward for securing such Short Term Subscriptions we present the following Offers. In each and every case the premium will be sent free and postpaid.

For Three (3) Short Term Subscriptions we will give (3) one of the following books, which are attractively bound in cloth:

Daily Food for Christians, Kept for the Master's Use, Advice to Young Christians, Arrow Head Light, Dairyman's Daughter, Nellie's New Home, Beside Still Water, Christian Living, Pilgrim's Progress, Fritz's Ranch, May Stanhope, Emily Ashton.

For Six (6) Short Term Subscriptions, we offer the choice of any one of the following premiums:

The New Testament with Notes (cloth bound).
A fine Fountain Pen with 14 karat solid gold nibs.
An Easy Opener Knife.
One Meat Fork (Wm. A. Rogers Ltd. Silverware).

For Eight (8) Short Term Subscriptions, we offer the choice of any one of the following:

A Pearl Handle Penknife, suitable for either lady or gentleman.
A Three Piece Child's Set, consisting of Spoon, Knife and Fork (W. A. Rogers, Ltd. Silverware).

For Ten (10) Short Term Subscriptions, we offer the choice of either of the following:

An Overland Nickel Watch, suitable for men and boys.
One Scholar's Companion Set, which contains the following articles: one Rex Fountain Pen with 14 karat gold pen, guaranteed, one filler for same, one Spear Pencil, with extra box of leads, one Magic Knife, one Rubber Eraser, one Combination Pen and Pencil Holder, and one dozen assorted Steel Pens.

For Fourteen (14) Short Term Subscriptions, we offer:

A Venus Nickel Watch, suitable for ladies.

For Fifteen (15) Short Term Subscriptions, we offer choice of the following articles in Wm. A. Rogers, Ltd. Silverware:

One half dozen Medium Forks.
One half dozen Medium Knives.
One half dozen Butter Spreaders.

For Sixteen (16) Short Term Subscriptions, we offer

A Scofield Reference Bible, cloth bound, size 5½ by 13½ inches, clear, black-faced type. An ideal Bible for Christian Endeavorers.

American Messenger, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street New York

reservoirs into the upper air to be wrought into woody structure, green leaf, pink and gray blossom and tempting fruit. It will pilot us into the secrets of the sunbeam and carry us away on the wings of the wind. It will tell us of the changing seasons and the needs of man. It will convey us to the market place to exchange the fruit for gold, and in turn make glad the grocer, the clothier and men of many trades. We are glad of the answer of Amos. Into how many avenues his basket of summer fruit leads us, and along every line of exploration we find God and man at work together. It takes two to make a basket of summer fruit.

—THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

Christian Endeavor and the War

South Africa will hold no national Christian Endeavor convention this year on account of the war, but only provincial conventions.

The Christian Endeavor Army of Production and Food Economy in America has received warm indorsement from many leading citizens, including a number of State governors.

Hardly a Christian Endeavor society in the United States but has already lost some of its young men to the regular army and navy, the ambulance and other special forces, or the training-camps.

A Life of Poise

BY JOHN TIMOTHY STONE.

Anxious, troubled lives are not strong lives. Great strength is seen in that which is calm, quiet and composed. The loud voice and the irritable nature suggest a lack of composure. The great ocean, with its unfathomed depth, its regularity of tides, its unlimited power and its far-reaching, never-ending shores, is quiet and calm in its matchless strength. The tides are regular and sure. In its wild commotion and extreme fury it is not stronger than in its placid, regular, constant, unceasing ebb and flow.

The rugged, snow-covered mountains, with their solid granite sides and their vast, far-stretching forests, are serene and sublime in their stillness and strength. The stars and planets which illustrate infinity send their rays of light and twinkle on amid the darkness of the night without noise or confusion. They move in their courses, undisturbed and never changing.

Solitude is truly "the mother country of the strong," and in "quietness and confidence" we are told to "possess our souls." To be known as calm and reliable is to reveal character and power. The source of this strength is a faith in the divine. It means permanence and stability, and these mean character. "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee, because he trusteth in Thee."

The one of whom we think is the one who controls our motives and purposes. If our minds are stayed upon God, if we trust Him, we will ever be kept in perfect peace and have the power of control as well as the control of power.

Concentration of mental development means the development of the mind and growth in intellectual capacity. When this is coupled with a reality of faith in the unseen God, man becomes mighty because God enters into his very being and controls his motives. Kept by the power of God day by day and hour by hour, means the development of that calm, deliberate strength and unvarying influence which marks the real giant of these times.

All kinds of irritabilities arise during the day, unexpected changes, conditions which have not been anticipated, errors of judgment on the part of others, quick words and hasty sentences, loss of temper, exasperating remarks, cynical looks, unfair and untruthful statements, wrong judgments—all these are bound to occur, but the one whose mind is stayed on Christ will be sustained, will be kept "in perfect peace." His mind and heart are centered on the unseen God, the Eternal Mind, the holy justice of the loving heart of the Master. He will be kept because he trusts in the Unseen, because he is shielded from unseen foes by faith.

Abiding in Christ suggests mental harmony with him, the human heart and mind in touch and in sympathy with the divine life of the Master.

—THE CONTINENT.

The Printed Word

The regard which the Chinese have for anything printed is proverbial. The coolie on the street will pick up a flying bit of newspaper, brush it carefully, and tuck it away where it cannot be trodden under feet. And this, although he may not be able to read a word of it.

All of which emphasizes the value of an ample and effective Christian literature for China, and gives point to the effort now being made by the mission boards unitedly to promote that achievement. And not for China alone, but for Japan, for all the Orient, and all mission lands. The worth of the printed word, the silent and wide-spread preacher, that can find its way where no missionary would be admitted and that can remain to be pondered over and over when the missionary is gone, this multiplied and pervasive voice for the gospel is being newly appraised in these days. A missionary department is recognized, equal in definiteness and influence to the evangelistic, the educational, and the medical, which may be called the Literary Department, and which addresses itself to this quiet method of approach and appeal. It has been in limited operation almost from the beginning of foreign missionary work—translations, particularly of the Bible, text books, hymn books, and a few treatises and tales have been wrought into almost all the vernaculars. But now, it is felt, the time has come for a more adequate and comprehensive effort to provide a real Christian literature for lands where literacy is growing fast, and where a base or hurtful literature is being commercially imported.—MISSIONARY HERALD.

The Secret Place

BY C. K. OBER.

I know an old house on a hill,
A mountain road, a grove, a rill,
And billowed hilltops, stretching far
To sunset and the evening star.

I take a path through glade and wood,
Deep drinking of its solitude;
And find a spot, o'erarched and still,
Where peace and poise the spirit fill.

The Master's presence there is near,
The Master's plan again is clear;
And far removed from work or strife,
I re-appraise the worth of life.

The hill, the outlook and the wood,
The time, the place, the attitude,
Hold not the secret of the prayer;
The secret place is anywhere.

The American Messenger

"Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Luke 2:10

Vol. 75. No. 8

AUGUST, 1917

Copyright, 1917, by American Tract Society.

Terms: 50 cents per annum
Single copy, 5 cents

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

PUBLISHED MONTHLY

BY THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

OFFICERS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President.

JOHN HENRY JOWETT, M.A., D.D., Vice-President.

JUDSON SWIFT, D.D., General Secretary.

LOUIS TAG, Treasurer.

REV. HENRY LEWIS, Ph.D., Recording Secretary.

All of the above-named officers should be addressed at Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Rev. David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.

Rev. Charles Carroll Albertson, D.D.

Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.

Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D.

Rev. George Ernest Merriam.

Entered at the Post Office in New York as second-class matter.

The Vacation Season

August is preeminently the vacation period, for undoubtedly more people take this month for their vacation season than any other month in the entire year.

The need of a season of rest and change is widely recognized, and there are few people who do not try in some way to secure for themselves at least a limited vacation so that body and mind may be recuperated.

The benefits of a vacation period are many and indisputable. The relief from the ordinary routine of business or household duties, the change of air and scene which the vacation trip usually affords, the fresh viewpoint that is obtained by a change of locality, the insight into the beauty of the world of nature that is gained during even a limited sojourn in the country—these are but a few of the beneficial results likely to be secured during the annual vacation period.

There are spiritual blessings that may be enjoyed in the vacation season. As we draw near to Nature's heart, we are also drawn nearer to the heart of the Eternal Father.

In his splendid Editorial Contribution for this issue of the AMERICAN MESSENGER, Dr. Charles Carroll Albertson has set forth what are some of the spiritual aids to bodily health, and in his telling message we may find a spiritual tonic that will help us not only during the summer vacation period but throughout the course of the entire year.

To our readers who are to enjoy their vacation period this month we extend best wishes, with the hope that all may find in their contact with the world of nature a vision of Him whose handiwork is so clearly revealed in earth and sea and sky.

A Vital Duty

With the mobilization of the troops of the National Guard of the different States, which is to be followed very shortly by the assembling in their cantonments of the so-called National Army composed of those who have been selected by the conscriptive draft, a vast number of young men will soon be under training for prospective service abroad.

The task of providing for the physical needs and the military equipment of these soldiers belongs to the Federal Government. But there is a vital duty which rests upon the people at large, and that is the obligation to care for the moral and spiritual welfare of these young men.

These soldiers of our country are practically free from physical defects. They have brought to the service of the home-land all the bodily vigor of their superb young manhood. Now let us, as citizens of the United States, do all in our power to develop the spiritual character of these soldier boys and see to it that they are enlisted not only under their country's flag but under the banner of the great Captain of our salvation.

"Gospel munitions" in the form of Christian literature will be an indispensable aid in promoting the spiritual welfare of the men who have enlisted to fight for our country. Some of our readers have already responded to the appeal recently made by the American Tract Society for funds with which to supply these Gospel Munitions, and we hope that many others will forward a gift for this purpose, so that the men of our army and of our navy, too, may be supplied with the message of the Gospel in printed form.

The presence of these vast bodies of young men in their encampments will call for a friendly attitude on the part of the people who dwell in the various communities where the cantonments are located, but it is not too soon to say a cautionary word to both the soldier lads and the girls whom they may meet, urging that no undue familiarity be permitted between the sexes, but that the men in uniform may show their respect for womanhood by treating every one of the gentler sex with unfailing honor and courtesy.

✻ ✻ ✻

Improving Relations Between the United States and Japan

Present indications point to a steady improvement in the relations between our country and Japan. Various causes are doubtless contributing to the better understanding which seems to prevail, and it is to be hoped that wise legislation may eventually remove the causes for friction that have hitherto existed between the two countries.

Pending the final adjustment of the disputed questions that call for settlement on the part of the diplomatic representatives of the United States and Japan, the strongest possible effort should be made to cement the sympathy that has made these two countries allies in a common cause and to promote a mutual understanding that shall make it easier to eradicate the points of difference that admittedly exist.

Recent statements have been made in a letter from Mr. J. E. Sakamota, a California correspondent, to Dr. Sidney L. Gulick, Secretary of the Federal Council's Commission on Relations with the Orient, which indicate a much better sentiment between the Japanese and the people of the State of California.

In our dealings with the Japanese people there is a fine opportunity for the manifestation of the true Christian spirit. Sometimes, unfortunately, this spirit has been wholly lacking, especially on the part of selfish politicians, who have put personal gain above any consideration of Christian ethics.

But if the problem of our relations with the Japanese is to be solved successfully, it must be solved in the spirit of Christian altruism and of international justice, and only upon such a basis can we expect that a satisfactory and a permanent understanding will be reached.

✻ ✻ ✻

Guard the Welfare of the Children

A note of warning needs to be repeatedly sounded against the efforts that are being made in several States to suspend child protective legislation and thus imperil the welfare of the children during this time of war.

Under the plea of a war emergency the safeguards that have been erected against the exploitation of child labor are being seriously weakened and in certain States they have been practically swept away.

Dr. Worth M. Tippy, Executive Secretary of the Federal Council's Commission on the Church and Social Service, has well said:

"In the hasty enactment of this legislation little or no consideration was given to the fact that laws for the protection of children have not been adopted arbitrarily but are based on physiological laws which no state of war renders less true and therefore less necessary. No child under fourteen is old enough or developed enough to leave school for employment in a factory, cannery or store, and there are many children of that age who are not strong enough to work at all or can work only in light occupations. There are many hazardous occupations in which no young people under sixteen or eighteen should be engaged, and night work or working day in excess of eight hours are both harmful in their effect on children under sixteen.

"These are some of the reasons back of our child labor laws. England thought herself forced to ignore them under the necessity of increasing her output, only to find that she was using up her labor force more rapidly than she was increasing her munitions, and that the laws safeguarding labor were based, not on sentiment, but on sound common sense. She also found that other child protective measures hastily set aside would have to be restored. Thousands of children were excused from school to work on the farms as well as in the factories; children under six were turned out of the schools for economy's sake; recreation centers were closed, settlement classes were discontinued, special classes in the schools were abolished, and child protective societies discontinued. The country then woke up to the fact that many children were being needlessly sacrificed because the supply of female labor was not exhausted, and that the complete breakdown of the schools and child welfare organizations had resulted in a striking increase in juvenile delinquency. She is now working strenuously to re-establish her educational system.

"The same conditions will develop here unless we insist that child welfare laws be maintained. The makers of munitions, clothing, leather goods and all other war supplies will urge the necessity of working children longer hours and at night if they are to fill their contracts. These demands should be refused and the child labor law enforced to the letter. The canners will ask exemptions from the law on the ground that there will be a shortage in the food supply if they cannot employ children more than eight hours a day as the federal child labor law specifies. The farms will argue that they cannot produce the food the country demands unless they can keep their children out of school to help them. The rural child receives 65 days of schooling per year for every 100 days received by the city child in times of peace. After three years of war England is recommending, not further exemptions from her compulsory education laws, but a more stringent law than she had before the war."

"We are learning many things in this great and terrible day of judgment through which our nation is passing," said the head of one of England's large high schools. "Not the least among these truths which the stern logic of common events is cutting into the common mind of us all is the paramount value of the children of the nation. Thus we realize that as the children are the nation's future, we must see to it that they are fit to inherit so great a responsibility."

Ministers and church people are requested to watch the welfare of children in their communities during the war. There are likely to be efforts to evade the laws in canneries, mills and truck gardens. The churches will work most effectually if known instances of evasion of child labor laws, and of lengthened hours for young people are reported directly to the National Child Labor Committee, 105 East 22nd Street, New York City. The Federal Council is co-operating with the National Child Labor Committee in its effort to maintain child labor standards which have been secured after many years of effort. The committee has a large force of investigators, and the names of those giving information will be kept confidential if so desired. It is very important that reports should be based on accurate information and not on hearsay evidence.

A Foundation for the Advancement of Preaching

It has been well suggested that the provision made for aged and disabled ministers should be looked at, not in the light of a gratuity or a charity but as a "foundation for the advancement of preaching."

Men who have given the best years of their lives to the preaching of the Gospel deserve better treatment from the Church of Christ than some of them have received in the past. The question was raised several years ago, "Shall the Old Minister be shot?" and though vigorous denial was made at the time that this was the proper method by which to dispose of one who had grown aged and infirm in the Gospel ministry, still there are few churches which have as yet made adequate provision for the care of the declining years of those who have been worn out in their service and who are no longer able to support themselves by any service that they can render.

Happily, during the recent past, an increasing interest has been taken in the question of providing for these veterans of the Cross, and by a wise combination of relief and annuity plans various denominations are beginning to make due provision for those who have toiled all their active years in the Gospel ministry and who find at the sunset of life that they have been unable to accumulate a sufficient sum to provide for the necessities of existence.

Christianity as Interpreted by the War

BY JAMES ELMER RUSSELL

AN EDITORIAL writer in a daily newspaper recently said, "The presence of the war is forcing home to humanity, with far more strength than can be exerted by all the evangelists of the world, the great truths of religion." Of like import is the statement of Rev. Dr. John Henry Jowett that he has welcomed more converts in the last years of the war than in the previous ten years.

It is a reason for gratitude that in the midst of so much that is almost unendurably terrible the experience of war is forcing people to come back to Christianity for comfort and for courage; and as they interpret Christianity in the light of the war, they realize, perhaps for the first time, how sane and satisfying is the Christian faith.

Thinking in World Terms

For example Christianity insists upon our thinking in world terms. "The field is the world." We are to go into all the world and make disciples of all the nations. But from this world vision even many professed Christians have shrunk back. With this world task they would have nothing to do. They have been opposed to the foreign missionary work of the church. "There is enough to do at home," they have said, and they have gone their way with a petty and provincial point of view instead of with a world outlook.

And now the war has come, and in spite of themselves men have been forced to think as citizens of the world. It was an assassination on the other side of the globe from America which kindled the world into a burning, fiery furnace. Into this war we have gone for the sake of world freedom and to make democracy safe in the world, as President Wilson has so finely described our ideal. But a patriotic world vision demands a Christian world vision as its background and support. No person can be really loyal to the ideal of world freedom without at the same time being loyal to the still higher and broader ideal of winning all men to the spirit and purpose of Christ.

The Supremacy of the Cross

Always the Christian church has preached Jesus Christ and Him crucified. But in the days of Paul as well as in our own day the preaching of the Cross has been to many foolishness. They have wanted the ethics of Christ without His sacrifice.

But what is the war but one stupendous illustration of vicarious atonement? Are not thousands of those who have died really filling up that which was lacking in the sufferings of Christ?

We are learning from the war that the innocent must suffer for the guilty; that the loving must give their lives for those whose hearts are filled with hatred and bitterness; that those who wish peace must die for those who are war-mad; and that democracy must bleed that autocracy may come to an end. As those whom we have known and loved fall, their death will still more clearly show us that without the shedding of blood there can be no remission of sin.

All or Nothing

Jesus demanded an absolute surrender of those who would be His disciples. He said, "He that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me; and he that loveth son or daughter more than me is not worthy of me. And he that doth not take his cross and follow after me, is not worthy of me."

People have refused to take the word of Jesus seriously. They have fancied they could be half-and-half Christians. They have professed to serve Christ, but when any sacrifice of time or money or pleasure was asked, they have asked, "I pray thee have me excused." There are people in the Twentieth Century who think that such a missionary career as that of John G. Paton in the New Hebrides was an altogether unnecessary throwing of life away.

But how the war illuminates the absolute demands of Jesus. Since our country has the right to ask us to give up property and home and even life itself, then the Master of us all has a still higher right to ask a complete surrender of ourselves, for His cause is a higher and nobler cause than any earthly claim.

A Good God Over All

Christianity teaches that over all is a good God, our Heavenly Father, and that He makes all things work together for good to those who love Him.

It is this conception of God that the war compels a thinking man to gain. Either this world is a madhouse of which we are the inmates, or over this world is a good God who will make even the wrath of men to praise Him. When Mr. Britling saw through the bewilderment of the war he found God.

The faith in God which may come to all in the midst of the war shines out in this letter from a father whose son had just enlisted, "The war is beginning to reach its long fingers into this family, and what changes may be ahead of us God only knows. But I am grateful for a religion which leaves me no qualms with relation to my own patriotic duty, and for a Christ who inspires me to meet this new situation with the courage of sacrifice and confidence in the Eternal realities. My faith is buoyant. I greet the unseen with a cheer."

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTION

CHARLES C. ALBERTSON, D.D.

SPIRITUAL AIDS TO BODILY HEALTH

BY

REV. CHARLES CARROLL ALBERTSON, D. D.

Pastor of the Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, New York

THE First Epistle of John is really a manual of Christian ethics. The Second and Third Epistles are personal letters, the second addressed to an "elect lady," whose name is not known, the third to a man named Gaius, whose name is mentioned four times in Paul's Epistles, but of whom we know no more than that he was an active, busy, helpful Christian, "walking in the truth."

This Third Epistle is a very brief one, consisting of but fourteen verses, but tenderly conceived, and gracefully expressed. It opens with a salutation which is followed by this characteristic bit of courteous, fatherly, pastorly solicitude for the temporal prosperity and bodily health of his correspondent: "Beloved, I wish above all things that thou mayest prosper and be in health, even as thy soul prospereth."

There is not much mention in the New Testament of temporal prosperity. That thought occurs much more frequently in the Old Testament.

Dr. Trumbull reminds us that prosperity is the blessing of the Old Testament, but adversity is the blessing of the New. Certain it is that in the New Testament there is no such emphasis put on prosperity as a sign of God's favor as in the Old. So this sentiment is all the more remarkable for its rare occurrence at a time when, too often, peace and plenty could be secured only at the cost of conformity to old systems of faith, Mosaic or pagan.

Certain it is that Jesus and all His apostles strongly emphasize that necessity of spiritual prosperity, even at the sacrifice of worldly honor and ease. There is no plea here for poverty and pain, self-inflicted, for their own sake, but there is everywhere made plain the duty of superiority to the moral code of the world which was practically the worship of temporalities. Over against the maxims of the world, Jesus put the royal law, "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God." He did not say the other things are worthless—that we are to care nothing for health and comfort, but that the first business of life is to be alive to God.

Here is this man Gaius. He had "put first things first." His soul was prosperous. He was rich in good works. His faith was vigorous. "Now," says the Apostle, "I wish for thee temporal prosperity and physical vigor, to correspond to thy spiritual state."

What are some of the spiritual aids to bodily health? First of all, it must be so obvious as not to need proof that the moral habits cultivated by the Christian type of spirituality are actively promotive of bodily vigor. The ten commandments include seven which concern human relationships. The first three have reference to our relationship to God, and are founded on the nature of the human soul. But the other seven have reference to social and economic relationships, and are founded on the very physical constitution of man.

Mr. Ernest Thompson-Seton has recently written a book, "The Natural History of the Ten Commandments," in which he argues that four or five of these commandments are written in the physical constitution of the lower animals.

Does any man doubt that obedience to the commandments which forbid Sabbath desecration, disobedience to parents, impurity, murder, dishonesty, falsehood and covetousness, not only promotes the highest moral order of the race, but is absolutely necessary to its physical welfare?

Take Sabbath desecration. Differ as we may, and as men will, as to the best method of keeping the Sabbath holy, there is no doubt in the minds of most students and observers that it is not for the best interest of working men to use it as a holiday. In some sections it has come to pass, because of the use of the Sabbath for pleasure, that the days of the week are named as follows: "Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, Saturday, Holiday, Reaction Day."

And as to the other commandments, violation of which is commonly counted sin, their relation to the bodily health of man is intimated by the saying which had become a proverb among the Hebrews: "The sinner shall not live out half his days." And there is a modern proverb which intimates how true the Hebrew saying is: "A short life and a merry one," to which should be added, "and a sad one for your children."

What are habits of the consistent Christian? They are all included in that "Jacob's Ladder" of the apostle who points out how we may "rise from the lowly earth to the vaulted skies"—"faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, charity." We call these graces, and graces they are, but they are more. They are aids to bodily health. Other things being equal, that is, with the same start in life, as to vigor and vitality, he who learns these lessons has a vastly better chance in the world, in every way, than one who is deceived by what has been called "the primrose path of dalliance," or than one who dares to pluck the crimson flowers that grow upon the crater's ashen edge.

But not alone in matters of habit involving repeated acts, but in matters of attitude, involving only passive states of mind, is Christian spirituality an aid to bodily health. There are certain mental attitudes which are hostile, and certain others which are friendly, to physical health. We all know that joy is a positive aid to digestion. And we all know that contentment, ease of conscience, and freedom from selfish ambition, are eminently conducive to wholesome sleep. Some of the diseases from which we suffer longest and most keenly have their seat in the nervous system. The nerves are so related to the conscious mind that what affects it affects them. So whatever operates to quiet the mind, to keep it well composed, and free from morbid thought, operates to the prevention and cure of certain nervous disorders.

Anger is poison. It results in chemical changes in the blood, and cellular deterioration in the brain. And we all know the beneficent physical effect of an habitual spirit of charity, which "suffereth long, and is kind."

Worry is the deep disease of the modern business man and business woman. It is a disease, and it is hard to cure. But it is easy to prevent. And the remedy is a simple one. We call it trust, but it is simply love, human love, fixed upon a Divine Person, and resting on that Person's Word and Power. If God is, and if He is what we think He is; if we are His children by creation, and we are, and His special heirs by grace, as we may be, then the only consistent attitude for us to assume is one of absolute confidence in His wisdom and care. The Lord is our Shepherd—we shall not want. He is our Defender—we shall not be defeated. He is our Counsellor—we shall not be ashamed. He is our Rock—waters shall not overwhelm us. He is our Redeemer—we shall not wholly die. He is our Helper. Therefore we will not fear though the earth tremble and the mountains be removed! Talk about nervous apprehension? Not while you cast your cares on Him.

Ask any physician and he will tell you that what interferes with his treatment and defeats his purposes in many cases is an unreasoning and unreasonable apprehensiveness on the part of the patient, a vague and indefinite fear, which robs the mind of its buoyancy, and fetters nature in her effort to restore the impaired equilibrium of forces. "There is something on your mind," the physician will say. And there is something! "Oh, everything!"

Cannot we learn something from that experience-meeting of some women held informally, in which it was proposed that each should tell candidly the worst thing, the keenest trial, the severest loss, that ever happened to her? The leader said: "I confess the worst thing that ever befell me was something that didn't happen at all, but I suffered just as much as if it had happened!" And the others testified they had had that experience.

I have read the opinion of an eminent physician who says that the danger in insomnia is not so much from the lack or loss of sleep as from the nervous consequences of fear. He says: "Many a man suffering from inability to sleep would sleep much more certainly if he were to cease worrying about the possible consequences of insomnia." He continues: "It is well to know that a man may live for years on a very little sleep—only three or four hours daily—if he only dismisses fear from the mind, and lies still, so resting his muscles and making it easier for the heart to pump the blood to the extremities." But possibly the shrewdest and sanest advice that any physician can give is that of a great English practitioner who unites with vast knowledge of science deep faith in the divine function of the Christian religion in the life of man. I give you his words: "I often comfort myself—and I would comfort all who hear me or read these words—in the reflection that nature is only another name for God, and nature is good, even as God is good. Therefore, He is on our side. However wise the physician, or however skilful the surgeon, the Invisible God is wiser and more skilful, and He is at work in the body of man, picking up dropped threads, battling with infinitesimal enemies, and doing His utmost to prolong life to the farthest limit of years. We are therefore only workers together with Him. I, for one, have confidence in nature. There, as in grace, 'all things are working together for good.'" This sounds like a sermon, but the preacher is a doctor who knows how the spiritual underlies and interpenetrates the physical, and how many—how very many—are the religious aids to bodily health!

Perhaps no single chapter of the Word of God has soothed so many restless souls and brought health—or conserved it—for so many bodies in jeopardy, as the Shepherd Psalm, the psalm Mr. Spurgeon used to call the "nightingale of psalms." The New Testament parallel of it is in Jesus' parable of the sparrow's fall, and again in Paul's injunction—"casting all your care upon Him, for He careth." He careth for kings and kingdoms? No. For institutions and organizations? No. FOR YOU.

Magnifying Minutiae

BY REV. C. A. S. DWIGHT, PH.D.

In order to success in life a sense of the right proportion between opportunities and duties is important, and should be cultivated. Not all opportunities are equally opportune; among duties there is always one and one only which ought to be done at any one particular time and place. "Duties never conflict"—therefore the paramount obligation just then and there should be divined, and executed. Many people blunder through life, missing its higher moral attainments, and perhaps failing even of lower temporal rewards, because they minify magnitudes and magnify minutiae. Such persons look through the wrong end of the telescope in each instance. Turning the spy-glass on small objects near at hand they make the latter seem unduly large, and then at other times, holding the glass the other way around, they gain a curiously diminished view of really large matters.

Every object in life ought to be viewed in its proper shape, size, light and juxtaposition—for each has its place, but that is not every place, and the petty trifles that tend to deflect attention from the path of urgent duty, and the upstart distractions that fritter away strength in valueless ways, must be kept on their own lower level of comparative unimportance. There is no doubt at the present time a widespread tendency to magnify unduly minute matters. The very "efficiency" campaigns that are being conducted put the emphasis on small savings, utilization of by-products, and the like, and that is right, for both the church and the secular world should "gather up the fragments"—if they are to be successful in their respective spheres. But the main product is more than the by-product, and the major loaf than the minor bit that is broken off. This scale of relative importance runs through all of life, and the ability and willingness to distinguish the essential from the trivial and the lasting from the temporary mark the normal and efficient man from the weakling or the fanatic. To the fool all things look equally large, but the wise man magnifies only magnitudes, and above all seeks first the Kingdom of God, which includes all values that are really worth while.

The House of Mercy

By William Norris Burr

IT IS not altogether unlikely that the impotent man lying beside the pool of Bethesda was reaping the harvest of a reckless life led during a "wild oats" period in his earlier years. This is implied in the Master's admonition, "Sin no more, lest a worse thing come upon thee." Amenable to "the severity of God" he persistently sought the place called Bethesda, which means literally "the House of Mercy," and Mercy found him there, and he was made whole.

A teacher in a small country Sunday-school was greatly tried by the coarse frivolities of the young people whom she attempted to instruct. Week after week she met with no response to her lesson appeals save some coarse jest, spoken to create a laugh, and not infrequently an open insult. Evidently the young people came to the Sunday School only because it was a convenient place for them to gather for "a good time." At times she was sorely tempted to "scold," but for many weeks she refrained from speaking a word of rebuke, fearing that she might lose her self-control to some degree that would result in harm both to herself and to the class.

"Why don't you call them down with a good sharp talking-to? That's what their other teacher used to do," said a sympathetic friend one day.

"I would not for the world alienate them from the school," was the reply. "Have you ever seriously faced the fact that not one member of that large class comes from a church family? They have all drifted in from homes where there is no religious instruction. Their parents seldom, some of them never, attend church. These young people are almost wholly untouched by religious influence save that which is thrown about them in our Sunday School. One day when I was urging them to bring either their Bibles or their quarterlies to the class, one of the girls snapped out, 'You may be mighty thankful that you get us. It is about all we can do to get ourselves here, without stopping to hunt up Bibles and quarterlies.' And remembering the homes from which they came I felt that there was truth in the girl's words, though she may not have viewed the matter through the same perspective that I did. I do not know just what to do with them, but I am convinced that 'a good talking-to' in a spirit of severity would not be wise. I feel that something must be said or done, for it is not well for them to allow them to go on week after week without being restrained in some way; but just what to do I do not know."

The next Sunday when the whispering and giggling was at its height and there was not one attentive pupil in the class, the teacher, without premeditation but impelled wholly by the moment's impulse, suddenly closed her Bible, and casting a look of tender, yearning love upon the faces before her she closed her eyes and began to pray audibly but softly, yearningly, for each member of the class. The lesson period ended just as she closed the prayer, and soon the class dispersed for that day.

The next Sunday, while there was little response to her lesson work there was marked improvement in the deportment of most of her pupils. Some of the more giddy ones, however, were still inclined to go on in the old way, and finally, with the tender glow in her heart reflected in her face and sounding in the tones of her voice, the teacher said: "I wish, girls and boys, that I knew how to show you, so that you would fully sense it, how much I think of you. I would do anything for you that it is in my power to do. Won't you let me do something for you—anything that I can do that is really worth while?"

That was the beginning of a new era in the history of that class. Unlike the impotent man these young people had come to the place of mercy with no sense of need; but one met them there who "saw" and "knew" their need, and because she dealt with them in mercy rather than in impulsive severity, some of them began to realize their need, and were "made whole."

Christ Ever Present

BY EMMA YOUNGLOVE

"Heaven lies about us in our infancy!"

So sings the poet.

Jesus Himself set a little child in the midst of His disciples and said, "Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." He also said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of heaven." And He took them up in His arms, put His hands upon them, and blessed them. Children, even in their earliest years, are His, and they need Him.

A young man came running to Jesus, and asked Him, "Good Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?" Many young men ask that question. Youth is the season when the largest proportional number come to Jesus and accept Him as their Saviour and Lord. Then the heart is tender, and the sacrifice on Calvary makes the greatest appeal and wins the most ready surrender of soul and life. Jesus loves the youth and the maiden.

Jesus performed His first miracle at the marriage in Cana of Galilee. His relation to the church is symbolized by that of husband to wife. He who spoke of Himself as the bridegroom is ready to bless whenever a man and a woman enter upon this holy relation. Shall He not be a welcome guest?

A baby is born, and father and mother are drawn nearer to each other by a new bond of love. Jesus would be with them as they bend over the cradle. He who was born in Bethlehem on the children's Christmas, increases love and joy in every home to which He is admitted.

Death comes into the home and a dear one is taken. In that dark hour Jesus is very near and He whispers, as He once did to Martha, "I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die."

When the responsibilities of life increase, perplexities distract, and burdens grow too heavy to bear alone, the assuring voice of Jesus is heard: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

When life on earth draws near its close and the aged saint faces for himself "the great adventure," he may still realize and anticipate Christ.

"We do not pray that the Lord may add yet many years to your days on earth," wrote a pastor to one who was celebrating her one hundredth birthday, "but we do pray that those that remain to you may be like those that have gone before, a pledge and a foretaste of that larger, more joyful life which must soon open to you. In the dawning of that day may the Lord receive you to Himself, and to the life which knows no end of days or beginning of centuries, in which even your first glimpse of His glory may reveal to you more than the century in which you have seen as through a glass darkly."

DR. BUCHANAN

The Gospel Preached by the Printed Page

A Sermon in Commemoration of the Ninety-second Anniversary of the American Tract Society

BY

WALTER DUNCAN BUCHANAN, D.D., LL.D.

Pastor of the Broadway Presbyterian Church, New York

TEXT:—"And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."—Mark 16:15.

THE words of our text express not only the last statement made by our blessed Master, but the great and final commission of the Church which He founded. "Freely ye have received, freely give." Christianity is missionary or it is nothing. Heralds are sent forth, fleet of foot, that to all the world around them, wherever man is found, they may declare the priceless blessings of redeeming grace. Hearts that have learned the story of a Saviour's love must, by that very fact, love to tell the story to others who know it not. One name there is, above every name, that is to be proclaimed and enlarged upon as the healing message for all tribes and peoples upon earth, the name of Jesus, our Redeemer, who by His death at Calvary has paid the price of the sin of the whole world. The voice of accusing conscience is thus soothed to rest and a new hope of eternal life, which is a sure anchor of the soul, is begotten in the heart of every one who believeth.

It is worthy of note in passing that the year of the organization of the American Tract Society, upon whose work we here dwell, is the same as the date of the organization of the historic Broadway Presbyterian Church, the year 1825. It is also with great joy that we recall that through all the years of the history of the American Tract Society this church has been in active and sympathetic association with it.

An Age of Printing Presses and Publications

There is no limitation in the sacred Writ as to the manner or the means to be employed in the world-wide circulation of the story of the Cross. It was the purpose of the American Tract Society, as its constitution states, to diffuse the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ by means of the printed page, and this purpose has never been altered even by the development of Missionary Colportage which has become so important a feature of its work. Never was there a time in the history of the church, when this manner of spreading abroad the gospel was so powerful or so far-reaching. We are living in what may be described as an age of printing presses and publications; it is an age of writing and of reading; a period of most unfortunate speculation, when men are turning more and more to the productions of the press rather than to the preaching of the Scriptures in their simplicity, and the old-fashioned evangelism is belittled. The majority of books, periodicals and the like, which come from the printing presses of our land, are to a very large extent lacking in reverence of Divine things; they diverge from the inspired truth and are attractive to the masses, very largely, because of new theories of interpretation and even contradictions of Divine revelation. Publications that only a few years ago would scarcely have been allowed to have seen the light, are now largely advertised and sold extensively and read with rare interest by people who would then have refused to have them in their homes. Christian types and simple evangelistic stories and treatises are sneered at, and "the books of the day" are at once calculated to unsettle religious belief and at the same time to beget within the mind of the reader a spirit of criticism of the very Book of Books. It arrests our imagination when we are face to face with the fact that out of a population of 100,000,000 there are not more than 40,000,000 people who attend the services of the sanctuary with any regularity whatsoever. How many of the brilliant writers of to-day know anything of the spirit of Miss Louisa M. Alcott, who in the pinch of poverty, was tempted to produce what she believed would be unworthy of her better self, but who worked out her problem to success along the line of not only high ideals, but Christian ideals?

Interdenominational, Evangelistic and International

In such a time as this, what cause for gratitude we have in the fact that the American Tract Society stands four-square for evangelism and strict adherence to the full inspiration of the Bible. Its field is the world, and its mission is to all classes and people. It is interdenominational in its character, evangelistic in its principles, and international in its scope. There are none of its books that I know of, which deal with the Word of God from the standpoint of the mere critic; while in the current literature of to-day we are flooded with books that are profane assaults upon the integrity of the Word of God.

The American Tract Society unswervingly from its very inception, has held true to the faith once delivered to the saints. How incalculable is the effect thus produced. Only eternity will reveal what the Society has accomplished for a true and pure gospel, both in its distinct utterances and in its antagonism to anything and everything in the way of an attempt to cast contumely upon the holy Word of God. As we dwell upon this grand work to-day, we must be impressed with the immensity of the enterprise and the far-reaching power of the books and tracts thus sent broadcast until they have practically reached the entire world.

Some years ago it was commented on by travelers in all remote parts of the globe, that in the window seats or upon the book tables of inns and hotels would be found books and sermons of such great and sainted men as Spurgeon, Talmage and Moody. Think of the tremendous power for good that was effected by such a circulation of religious literature! Stop and think for a moment of the healing influence of the Tract Society in its output in tracts and volumes making a grand total of 797,704,700 copies.

Some years ago in a railroad train two men were engaged in animated conversation. One commented, with evident satisfaction, upon the far-reaching impression which had been made upon young men, and upon large numbers of them, by a book which he had recently produced. The book was entitled "The Mistakes of Moses," and he asserted that it was fast undoing the hold that Christianity had upon the men of the day. As they left the train, the other man remarked: "I will write a book that will turn hundreds to Christ for every one that your book turns from Him." The book was duly written and published under the name of "Ben Hur," and the author of it was Gen. Lew Wallace. The latter book was read the world around and we all know how influential it was in turning thousands to righteousness. To-day the other book, "The Mistakes of Moses," by Col. Robert Ingersoll has practically been forgotten and most people do not even know it was ever published.

The Printed Page and the Kingdom of Christ

The power of the printed page in the extension of the Kingdom of Christ—how wonderful has been its results! It would repay any one to visit the offices of the American Tract Society and look over some of the marvelous volumes which they have put forth.

There are a succession of books, the history of which is as fascinating as it is wonderful. They have well been called "the precious chain of books," by which tens of thousands of souls have been converted, and the glorious work is still going on. A Puritan, Dr. Sibbes, wrote a book called, "The Bruised Reed," which fell, at just the right time, into the hands of Richard Baxter and brought him under the enlightening power of the Spirit of God. In turn he wrote a book entitled, "The Call to the Unconverted," which continued to impress vast numbers of people long after his hand was still in death, and went on preaching until it fell into the hands of Philip Doddridge, and awakened him to a new conception of Divine truth. Then followed that wonderful book by Doddridge entitled, "The Rise and Progress of Religion in the Soul." In turn this book fell into the hands of William Wilberforce in a most critical period of his experience and led him to write "Practical Christianity." This book was read by Legh Richmond, a clergyman far down in the Isle of Wight and fired his heart with new consecration. Then he produced the beautiful story entitled "The Dairyman's Daughter." It seems almost impossible to determine into how many languages that tract has been translated. Hosts of people were converted by the reading of it. A copy of it was procured by a young minister in a secluded parish in Scotland and he underwent what he called his "second conversion" and all Scotland rang with the eloquence of Thomas Chalmers. The sad, sad pity is that such books with their uplifting and quickening power are not more generally read to-day, for they would doubtless do for thousands of others what they have already accomplished in a multitude of instances.

Not many months ago a poor Frenchman who had been wounded in the war was languishing in a hospital, when his eye was attracted by a leaflet which lay on the cover. He took it up and read it slowly. It told him of the way of everlasting life and of the great Captain of our salvation who had shed His blood that He might free us from sin and its awful stain. As he read, the wondrous light broke in upon his tortured soul and then he cried to the Saviour for the blessings which He alone could bestow, and upon his soul there shone a new light, that of the blessed revelation and the burden of sin and sorrow rolled away. Not long after he died. Think what that little tract did! Think of that poor soul dying out of devotion to his country sweeping up the celestial heights to the truest victory ever man knew, to rest and to home!

It is seventy-seven years since the American Tract Society inaugurated its unique mission of missionary colportage work which is a most important feature of the Society's undertaking. Its colporters labor among the immigrants in all sections of our land and in our Island possessions. Its publications have been printed in one hundred and seventy-eight different languages. It constitutes one of the most important forms of work for the advancement of the Kingdom of Jesus Christ. It is a work with a single purpose, that of evangelizing the globe. What is it worth? Nay ask the more pertinent question, by the measure of your own salvation, what is it worth to you?

For the past three years things have been transpiring that no one would ever have dreamed of. The awful war, with its horrible-ness, which has so largely engaged the forces of all Europe, has cast its baneful shadows over all the world. We are staggered at the very thought of the ferocity and outrage of this inhuman conflict. And now, the land we love has been brought into a condition of participation in this war, not because we believe in war or love war except when war is thrust upon us in the cause of righteousness. War to us at this time means nothing less than a struggle for the right. We stand where we do because of our traditions and our conscientious belief in democracy for all nations. While our hearts are saddened under these conditions we are not cast down. As a people we are simply re-writing the history of the right of every nation and people as against the attempted wrong of those who would strive to deny us the rights of God's inalienable trust. We are thinking, with pride, and love of our noble men that are going forth to the greatest encounter the world has ever known. Our hearts turn tenderly alike to those who are in training camps and are nearing the firing line. The attitude of the entire nation is inspiring beyond measure. This glorious nation believes in God, believes in its own righteous cause and will fight on until the forces of sin and iniquity which oppose us are conquered. Does the heart of any American beat so sluggishly that he raises the question what is the cost? The glory of the cause practically eliminates the question of its cost, and we are looking forward confidently to the hour of victory when the flag of freedom will be unfurled over all the earth.

But a greater conquest is coming—one that is permanent and eternal. It will come as the termination of conflict between the forces of Satan and sin on the one hand and of righteousness and eternal life on the other. Look at that poor soldier referred to above. Was not the voice which came to him on that bed of anguish beyond all computation of cost? It cost the blood that was shed at Calvary and it cost the expenditure of money in sending that little tract to that sick cot for his reading and his healing. Does the American Tract Society fulfill its mission? Is not the work it is doing greater and grander than any conquest of marching armies in the affairs of men on earth? Now I beseech you to lay this matter conscientiously to heart. What is the worth and what is the cost of the world's evangelization and of the work which the American Tract Society is performing in this great campaign? Its cost is comparatively inconsiderable: its worth can only be dreamed of now and realized when the mighty hosts, redeemed by the great Captain of our salvation, out of every nation and kindred and tribe, cast their crowns before the throne and sing the song of Moses and the Lamb.

REJOICE ALWAYS

By Rev. Fred L. Kingsbury

It is evident that the third and fourth Psalms constitute a pair; they imply the same circumstances, have the same features and contain some of the same expressions. The traditional title of the former says, "When he fled from Absalom his son." The Third Psalm is for the morning and the fourth for the evening. The culmination of the thought in both is the seventh verse of the fourth Psalm. David always reaches the apex of religious enthusiasm when he attributes, as in this instance, the gladness in his heart to the only source whence cometh every good and perfect gift.

In the third Psalm the sweet singer of Israel says, "I laid me down and slept; I awaked for the Lord sustained me; I will not be afraid." The king was a fugitive; at any moment he might be attacked by his enemies. The day passes, night has fallen. Amid the darkness and silence of the surrounding hills he says, "I will both lay me down in peace, and sleep: for Thou, Lord, only makest me dwell in safety." It is a crucial time in David's experience. Dark thoughts keep him awake. He knows not how he and his troop are to be fed. The contrast between him and his rebellious son is not reassuring. Uncrowned and poor, in the midst of the darkness and terror, still other thoughts arise in his mind dispelling his fears, and in his gladness he cries out, "Lord, lift Thou up the light of Thy countenance upon us. Thou hast put gladness in my heart, more than in the time that their corn and their wine increased."

A great thought permeating the Bible is that God can turn darkness into light and awaken songs in sufferers. David was in deep sorrow when he uttered the gladsome text. It was said to the Man of Sorrows, "God has anointed Thee with the oil of gladness above Thy fellows." So we may come to join with the Psalmist here or with the prophet in those other words: "Although the fig tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines; the labor of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat; the flock shall be cut off from the fold and there shall be no herd in the stalls: yet I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation."

It would be easy to present an impossible ideal and thus seem to upbraid the depressed: but it is an equally possible task to remind ourselves that it is a sacred duty to be glad. God does not make light of the sufferings He sends; He does not afflict willingly nor grieve the children of men. To afflict us is to afflict Himself, for in all our afflictions He is afflicted. The rod that does not hurt does not correct the child; the fire that does not burn does not destroy the dross. He who wept at the grave has thus sanctified His people's tears. The more we advance in spirituality, the larger our area of sympathy with the Redeemer in His love for the world, the more complete our growing brotherhood with men in their sins and woes,—the more we shall see that these are a permanent and very fruitful source of sadness to the man of God. Gladness in the sense of exuberance and mirth was, so far as we know, rarely seen in Jesus. Yet the Bible commands us to rejoice. So these two are in some sense one as Paul wrote, "As sorrowing yet always rejoicing." What is evidently required of us is not joy with sorrow gone, but joy in the midst and in the very time of sorrow. It is not the sparkle of the wave when the storm has died and the surface of the ocean is as smooth as glass; it is the muffled calm of the water far beneath the surface when the storm is at its height. It was with the shadow of the Cross athwart His path that Christ proclaimed His Peace.

This gladness is a duty because it reveals the blessedness of the Redeemer. Satan is always ready with the suggestion that a follower of Christ is gloomy; we should be a living testimony against such a thought. It is reported that Mr. Darwin visited Tahiti after it had been Christianized. He had been told that the missionaries had made the natives a gloomy race. He says: "It would be difficult even in Europe to pick out of a crowd half so many happy faces." As the transfigured Christ was clad in garments white and glistening "so as no fuller on earth can white them," so the faces of His people, like those of Moses and Stephen, though scarred by suffering and half-blinded by tears, should make others see that even in our griefs we are glad in Him. The lighted lamp is scarcely seen at noon, in the full glare of the sun, but it attracts all eyes as it shines in the dark. The lights of a city set upon a hill cannot be hid. Take heed that the light that is in thee be not darkness.

Depression of spirit weakens us. The Israelites at the borders of Canaan sat down and wept. In that condition it would have been useless to have led them against their enemies; how different it was when they were free from fear? Any burden places us at a disadvantage. So Paul says, "Lay aside every weight." No burden is so heavy or so enfeebling as a burden of the heart; it exposes us to many a temptation, it paralyzed the arm for conflict or toil. Unless we learn the lessons of Christian gladness we have no chance to occupy high places of experience and triumph; our first duty is to "lift up the hands that hang down and confirm the feeble knees."

Matthew Arnold in one of his poems has beautifully said:

'Twas August, and the fierce sun overhead
Smote on the squalid streets of Bethnal Green,
And the pale weaver, through his windows seen
In Spitalfield, looked thrice dispirited.
I met a preacher there, I knew, and said,
'Ill and o'erworked, how fare you in this scene?'"
'Bravely,' said he, 'for I of late have been Much cheered with thoughts of Christ, the Living Bread.'

In Christ we have joys that circumstances may not affect, that material loss need not destroy, that the greatest suffering need not quench, nor time lessen. They grow brighter in the dark hour, with increasing years and are perfected at death.

In Extremis

BY SOPHIE BRONSON TITTERINGTON.

Dear Lord, this fragrant summer time of Thine
When earth is putting on her fairest dress,
Is paling; and the sun can dimly shine,
So clouded is the world with storm and stress.
For War's black portent hovers in the sky,
And veils the sunshine till the flowers fade.

Humanity, in anguish, sends a cry:—
"How long, O Lord? for we are sore afraid!
For millions of our sons and brothers die,
Till earth hath scarcely room for new-made graves.
Stern, ruthless hands are writing History's page
With bayonets for pens, and blood for ink!
How long, O Lord, must bloody carnage rage,
The bitter cup our trembling lips must drink?"

Above the cry of anguish 'neath the rod,
Comes clear a Voice, assuring, sweet, and strong:—
"Be still, my children, for I am thy God,
My conflict is with Satan's hosts of wrong;
My Hand is guiding in the battle-fray,
While thrones are falling, crowns lie in the dust;
And ruthless murder meets its Judgment Day.
My own I surely keep; be still and trust,
Till all this tempest shall be overpast;
The battle over, and the victory won,
Thou earth, redeemed, shall find her peace at last,
And thankful hearts shall pray—"Thy Will be done!"

HIS VINEYARD AND OURS

Christian Literature in China

Events in the political life of China follow each other with almost kaleidoscopic rapidity. So swiftly have changes taken place in the governmental conditions of that country within the past month that it is not safe to prophesy from one day to another what the outcome will be.

Meanwhile, however, judging by the experience of the past few years, the work carried on by the missionaries of the Cross goes steadily forward. Hindrances and obstacles abound, it is true, but in spite of all outward disturbances there is a steady progression of the forces of Christianity, and by its helpful and quieting influence the Gospel is doing much to uplift and steady the lives of the people of China.

During the past year the American Tract Society has sent foreign cash appropriations to eight different points in China for the production and dissemination of Christian literature in the vernacular. These include the South Fukien Religious Tract Society at Amoy, the South China Religious Tract Society and the Presbyterian Mission at Canton, the North Fukien Religious Tract Society at Foochow, the Religious Tract Society of North and Central China at Hankow, the West China Religious Tract Society at Chungking, the Presbyterian Mission Press at Hainan, and the Chinese Religious Tract Society at Shanghai.

Recently Mr. Zee Vee Wai, acting General Secretary of the Chinese Tract Society, sent us a photograph of one of the important streets in Shanghai, of which an excellent reproduction appears on this page of the AMERICAN MESSENGER.

The Chinese Tract Society is a very active organization, and its last annual report records the publication during the past year of 802,700 copies of books, tracts and magazines.

After Many Days

Rev. Charles M. Warren of the American Board of Missions in Japan tells the following incident, which illustrates the value of Christian literature:

"There has just come to my notice an instance of bread cast on the waters which has returned after many days. When we were at Tottori, there lived quite near us a man with partial paralysis. He felt the need of the solace of religion, and came frequently to our meetings, finally receiving baptism, I believe. Mrs. Funakoshi, his wife, is very deaf, so that she did not attend the meetings as much as he; but she responded to the advances of the Bible woman and became a Christian. When the husband died, our ladies were of great help to the family in making the preparations for a Christian funeral.

"The feeling of clan, family and locality is very strong here in Japan, and the village from which these people originally came—their homes—sent two men as representatives to the funeral. One of these was the brother of the widow. I was as polite as possible to these two men—it gave me a fine opportunity to tell them something of Christian truth. They were impressed with what they saw and experienced of the spirit of Christianity. On their return home they wrote, I remember, a very appreciative letter of thanks for themselves and in the name of the village, whose real duty it was, they felt, to see the man properly buried.

"This village is a remote mountain hamlet not near any work of ours, but only six miles or so farther into the hills than some work that the fine Church Missionary Society missionary, my good friend Knight, was carrying on through the stated visits of one of his evangelists. Mrs. Funakoshi's brother read the literature I gave him, welcomed the Church Missionary Society evangelist, soon became a Christian, and received baptism. He made his home the center of Christian work in that region, led several others to Christ, and keeps up a Sunday school.

A VIEW OF NANKING ROAD IN SHANGHAI, CHINA.

"When Mrs. Warren was in Kyoto, Mrs. Funakoshi, who is now in a missionary's family there, came to see her, and told her this story of her brother. Such a thing might happen anywhere in the world, but the non-Christian countries have more than the homelands of such 'naturally Christian' men, who need merely to be told in order to receive joyfully."

The Chosen Christian College of Korea

A recent issue of The Korea Mission Field informs us that the Chosen Christian College, of which Rev. Dr. Horace G. Underwood was the founder and first President, received its charter under the educational regulations of the Government General of Chosen (Korea) on April 7, 1917.

This charter establishes it as a Special School of the College Grade, working in harmony with the Government system and entitled to all the privileges of a Government School.

The charter has been drawn up with special care, both on the part of the Government and of the Mission bodies, as both felt that this document would be taken as an interpretation of the real meaning of the new regulations issued by the Japanese Government which caused so much perturbation in Korean mission circles.

The result of the effort has made manifest the fact that the attitude of the Government towards Christianity and towards education under Christian influences is not inimical and this must be very reassuring to all who are interested in the spread of Christianity in Korea.

The site for the Institution has been selected and purchased at a point about three miles from the center of Seoul just off the road leading to the Foreign Cemetery. It consists of about 300 acres of well wooded hills and valleys which in the opinion of all who have inspected it constitute a most beautiful and adaptable site.

Plans for a "lay-out" are already well advanced and the first draft of a plan for the first building is now being made. As soon as this has been completed and accepted the sum of $25,000 will become available for its erection.

The Board of Managers hopes to be in a position to begin building in the Fall of this year.

Work in the first three years of the course is going on in the rooms of the Seoul Y.M.C.A., about seventy students being in attendance.

Dr. O. R. Avison has been elected President of the Chosen Christian College to succeed the late Dr. Underwood.

Street Waifs in Buenos Aires

Scores of children are picked up on the streets of Buenos Aires and cared for by the Boca Sunday School of the Methodist Episcopal Church. This Sunday School is in one of the neediest sections of the city.

The police records of Buenos Aires state that there are 5,000 abandoned children on the streets. An influential magazine, Munde Argentino, is doing its best to stir up the public mind to a realization of the neglect to which these children are subject. This publication states that the principal amusements of the children are gambling and smoking. The children of South America have not yet come into their own. Here is a great field for the Sunday School workers of the Protestant churches.

A Remarkable Conversion

A missionary magazine tells us of a Korean young man who heard the Gospel and accepted Christ. He had been a wild, profligate fellow and a constant grief to his parents. But when he announced that he had become a Christian, consternation reigned in the family circle. Remonstrances, upbraidings, appeals and finally stern paternal commands were of no avail to change the determination of this young man to lead a Christian life. So he was driven from home and told to shift for himself.

He went down the road a mile or so and secured a small house and moved his family. Then gathering the few simple tools necessary, and because he had never learned any trade, he started to braiding straw shoes for a living. He stuck to it morning and night, sold the shoes at the market, and finally through thorough workmanship came to make a very fine article.

One market day he had completed a man-load of very well made shoes, and in the morning started his servant off to market with them. As the servant left the young man said to him, "On your way put your load down in front of the old gentleman's house and go in and salute him. He will probably ask you where you got the load of shoes. Tell him that I braided them; that since I became a Christian I have ceased gambling, drinking, and profligacy, and have settled down to be honest, hard-working, and to make a living for my family. Tell him that this is the teaching of Christianity."

The servant shouldered his load and set out. When he entered the father's house he ostentatiously set down the load in a place where it could be seen, went into the guest room and saluted the old gentleman as he sat among a number of old friends and companions. After the salutations the father made some casual inquiries about the young man, and then asked where he had gotten the load of shoes and where he was going with them. The servant spoke as he had been bidden by his master, and said that he was going to market to sell them. The old father was rather inclined to scorn the information and pass it by without comment, but his old cronies took it up. "What was that? The thing was not possible. That wild spendthrift and profligate turned honest and gone to work! Nonsense. Let's see what sort of shoes he can make. What, these? Why these are well made. He braided all these? What! Only one lot of what he has done! And how did you say it happened? Through becoming a Christian? Is that the way it works? Well, well, I wish my boy could get a dose of the same." The old gentleman sat by, and volunteered no remarks and the servant shouldered his load and went on.

The young man marked a number of suitable and remarkable passages in his New Testament and laid it by. A few days after the previous occasion he saw his father come sauntering down the road. The young man turned down the leaves at the marked passages and laid the book casually near the warm place at the head of the room, and continued his work. The old gentleman sauntered in and the young man rose, made his salutations, and returned to his work, while the father sat and smoked his long pipe. In a few moments the open book and a marked passage caught his eye. He was a scholar and it was a book new to him. Pretending to be looking out of the door and smoking he glanced at it out of the corner of his eye. He read the passage several times. The leaves turned over. His eye caught another passage, between puffs. He forgot to smoke. He turned more leaves. It seemed to open of itself to those marked passages. The young man sat, said nothing, braided shoes and prayed. "Eh! What? You rascal. What book is this?" asked the old gentleman. "It is a sacred writing, honored father," was the reply. "It is different from other books. It is the words of God to men telling them his will for them." Silence again. Finally the old gentleman roused, struck his pipe sharply upon the door-sill, slipped the book into the large sleeve of his coat, and with only a grunt in answer to his son's farewell, sauntered back up the road. But that day the Lord passed by and touched him, and in the days after, salvation came to him and to his household.

Family Worship in a Chinese Home

A missionary worker in China tells the following interesting incident. When on his way from Kihcheo to Taning, Shansi, to give help in a conference, he stayed one night in the home of a Christian family named Wang. The old father has been prospered financially, and has seven married sons, all Christians, who, with their Christian wives, live in his home. The missionary writes: "It was inspiring to gather with this family at evening worship. Men, women, boys and girls, in all the number of about thirty, were present. From a paper pasted on the wall, I saw that worship was a regular thing, each son being deputed in turn to lead, often together with his wife, the list commencing with the father and mother."

Notes upon the Topics Used
in Christian Endeavor
and Other Young People's Societies.

THE PRAYER MEETING

By
Rev. Henry Lewis
Ph.D.

AUGUST 5.

How Men Cheat Themselves

Prov. 14:12; Ps. 1:1-6.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M. July 30. By trust in evil. Ps. 36:1-4.
T. July 31. By over-confidence. Gal. 6:1-5.
W. Aug. 1. The snare of wealth. I. Tim. 6: 9, 10, 17-19.
T. Aug. 2. By self-righteousness. Matt. 23: 23-30.
F. Aug. 3. By external religion. Jer. 7:1-7.
S. Aug. 4. By belief of lies. 2 Thess. 1:1-12.

"There is a way which seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of death." These are weighty words and present in the most vivid way the fatal consequences that ensue when men cheat themselves concerning the moral issues of life.

There are many ways in which men deceive themselves concerning the spiritual verities of life, some of which are suggested in the Daily Bible Readings. Let us consider briefly a few of the things that lead men to a wrong estimate of moral values.

External Appearances

Men often cheat themselves by looking only at external appearances. Experience has shown repeatedly that mere appearances are often deceiving. A fair exterior does not necessarily imply a good interior. The goodly apple is often rotten at the core. Christ referred to the sepulchers that were outwardly glistening white but within were full of corruption.

The outward appearance of a building does not determine its moral character. A fine palace is sometimes used as a gambling house. Travelers tell us that Monte Carlo, the most notorious gambling resort in the world, is to the eye one of the most beautiful spots which human ingenuity has ever constructed.

The world is full of sham and pretence. A thin veneer often conceals the plainest of wood. Imitation jewelry is flaunted everywhere as if it were genuine. Instead of genuine articles dummies are frequently employed to deceive the unwary. "Gold bricks" are proverbial as a means for enticing the covetous and unsophisticated to part with real money in exchange for what is worthless.

Temporary Considerations

Too often men are misled by considerations that are only of passing moment. For a temporary consideration thoughtless people have been induced to part with possessions of permanent value. They fail to remember the words of the Apostle Paul: "The things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal."

Let us be mindful of the fact that character building is a matter of eternal moment.

Temporary considerations have no significance when viewed in the light of eternity.

Pitfalls for the Unwary

Men cheat themselves when they discount the real values of life. Money is not the true measure of real values in this life. What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?

Men cheat themselves by postponing the most vital decisions of life. There is nothing so important to a man as the determination of his relation to God, for upon that depends his eternal destiny. Yet men put off the question of a decision for Christ until, too often the death angel comes to them with this most important of questions still undecided.

Here is a query which every man and woman should ponder: "How shall we escape if we neglect so great a salvation?"

Our Only True Guide

Jesus Christ is the only teacher to whom we may look as a sure guide to the true value of life. If we follow His leadership, we shall place the right estimate upon the spiritual values of life, and we shall be saved from that self-deception, the end whereof is disaster and death.

AUGUST 12.

The Sin of Gossip and Scandal

Ps. 120:1-7; Exod. 20:16.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M. Aug. 6. The busybody. 2 Thess. 3:7-18.
T. Aug. 7. The talebearer. Prov. 11:9.
W. Aug. 8. Gossip's brood. 2 Cor. 12:20.
T. Aug. 9. Green-eyed slander. 2 Sam. 10: 1-5.
F. Aug. 10. Inventors of evil. Luke 7:24-35.
S. Aug. 11. A great little enemy. Jas. 3:1-18.

Psalms 120 is the first of the fifteen Psalms bearing the title, "A Song of Ascents." These Psalms were probably sung by the Jewish people as they went up to Jerusalem to celebrate the great festivals such as the Passover.

Concerning verses 2-4 of the 120th Psalm Dr. A. F. Kirkpatrick makes this apt comment in his Commentary on the Book of Psalms: "The earnestness of the prayer and the severity of the condemnation point to a person or a party, fomenting feud and strife in the community by calumny and false accusations, and resolutely refusing all attempts to promote harmony."

The judgment visited upon the owner of the slanderous tongue is expressed by two vivid metaphors, "sharp arrows of the mighty" and "coals of juniper." The latter expression is best explained by reference to the literal meaning of the Hebrew word, translated "juniper," which indicates a kind of broom from which the Arabs manufacture charcoal of the finest quality, which makes the hottest fire and retains heat for the longest time.

A Strong Temptation

There is no doubt that the temptation to idle gossip makes itself felt with a great deal of power. Idle gossip almost inevitably leads to scandal and slander. Therefore we should resist with all our might the tendency to gossip which shows itself whenever a group of people are assembled together.

Just as a snowball rolled in the snow tends to grow constantly larger, so a piece of idle gossip, repeated many times, tends to exaggeration as it passes from lip to lip until the final version bears hardly any resemblance to the original statement.

There is nothing more cruel than a slanderous attack upon the personal character of one whose life is beyond reproach. Such an attack works more harm than any bodily assault, and is more to be dreaded than any other misfortune.

How to Combat This Evil

Perhaps the best way to displace gossip and scandal is to refuse absolutely to listen to any would-be talebearers. One can be firm as well as polite, and the way to meet those who would pour into our ears their slanderous remarks about others is to decline to hear anything that has about it the least breath of scandal.

When groups of people are gathered together, those who have the gift of conversation should endeavor to direct the line of thought along those high planes which will forestall the introduction of bits of petty gossip or of ill-considered scandal.

Overcome evil with good, is an excellent maxim for us to remember in this connection. If we introduce helpful topics of conversation among the people whom we meet, there will be little opportunity to suggest the evil lines of talk which result in gossip and scandal.

Some Suggestive Thoughts

Manufacturers sometimes make warp of cotton and woof of wool, the result of this process being a half-and-half piece of cloth. Scandal is somewhat similar, for it usually presents a half truth, which is wholly false and doubly dangerous.

Carlyle has well said, "I am for fumigating the atmosphere when I suspect that falsehood, like pestilence, breathes around me."

A small fire may lead to a great conflagration. So a little gossip may blast a good reputation, and destroy the usefulness of a whole lifetime.

AUGUST 19.

A Definite Purpose and the Success It Wins

I Kings 9:1-9.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M. Aug. 13. God's purpose with man. Eph. 2:10.
T. Aug. 14. Purpose to cleave. Acts 11:22-26.
W. Aug. 15. A man's task. Tit. 1:1-10.
T. Aug. 16. A woman's purpose. Ruth, 1:8-18.
F. Aug. 17. The highest purpose. Heb. 12:1-8.
S. Aug. 18. A royal purpose. 2 Sam. 7:1-10.

In his early years Solomon set before himself a definite purpose. He sought wisdom, and Jehovah honored his aspiration and made him not only wise but rich and honored as well.

When the Lord appeared unto Solomon at Gibeon for the second time, He called upon him to continue to seek after the highest and the best things. If he followed after these high aims, the Lord assured him that he would have prosperity and success. If, however, he should fail to continue to walk in the way of the Lord, then he was assured that he and his people should come to a miserable end.

The history of Solomon shows that so far as he adhered to his early ideals in life, so far he was blessed with prosperity. But when he departed from the way of the Lord he laid up for himself and his people a weight of woe that proved to be more than Israel could bear.

The Modern Application

Every young man and young woman has the opportunity of adopting a definite purpose in life. Whether that purpose be high or low depends upon the individual choice. God calls each one of us to choose Christ as our Master and to follow Him in the path of lowly service that will finally lead to heavenly exaltation. "Follow me," is the summons of Christ to every man and woman today just as surely as it was to the fishermen who stood by the Sea of Galilee.

Some Christian Ideals

As Christians we should all have a definite purpose in life, and that purpose should be to seek after the highest ideals. Among these ideals we may name consecration, which is one of the cardinal features of the Christian Endeavor Society. Indeed the word consecration has become so familiar that there is always a danger that its fullest and deepest meaning may be lost sight of.

Service is one of the high purposes to which every Christian should devote himself or herself. Just as faith without works is dead, so Christianity without service is a lifeless and unmeaning thing. Never was there a time in the world's history when there was such a call as there is now for all forms of Christian service, and a failure to respond to this call is a sad dereliction indeed.

Self-sacrifice is an ideal that calls us to lay self upon the altar in order that we may worthily follow the Master, who gave Himself upon the Cross. This is an ideal that is most difficult of attainment, but the reward that comes to those who are thus willing to forget self is most satisfying. He that saveth his life for himself shall lose it, but whosoever shall lose his life for the sake of Jesus shall find it.

Great Life Purposes

There are certain objects in life to which we may well devote ourselves, making them the great purposes of our attainment.

Evangelism should be one of these great life purposes. We cannot all be professional evangelists, but we can all do evangelistic work by proclaiming the Gospel of Christ as the one essential way of salvation.

The world brotherhood of man is one of the unattained ideals of the twentieth century. With almost the whole world at war it seems as if such an ideal were but an iridescent dream. Yet we may well adopt this as one of the great life purposes for which to strive with all the energy at our command.

AUGUST 26.

"Thou Shalt Love Thy Neighbor As Thyself"

Galatians 5:13-26.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M. Aug. 20. The saloon tested. Matt. 7:15-20.
T. Aug. 21. The saloon's fate. Deut. 17:1-7.
W. Aug. 22. The saloon beast. Rev. 13:1-9.
T. Aug. 23. Neighborly responsibility. Mark 12:28-34.
F. Aug. 24. Our example. Rom. 14:15-23.
S. Aug. 25. Who is our neighbor? Luke 10: 30-37.

This topic has been selected for use at a temperance meeting, and it is particularly timely and appropriate for that purpose.

Our country is passing through a crisis, and the co-operation of all our citizens is needed in order to enable us to do the tasks that await us in helping to free humanity from the curse of auto-cruacy and to establish the world democracy that will assure liberty for the individual and freedom for the small states throughout the earth.

At a time like this the admonition, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself" gives us the clue to the line of action that will enable us to meet the issues of the day and to emerge triumphant from the struggle in which we are engaged.

The worst foe that we have to dread at the present time in our home land is the liquor traffic, which in utter defiance of the best interests of our country is trying to maintain a strangle hold upon our newspapers, our legislators, our soldier boys and our homes.

At a time when food is a most essential element both for ourselves and our allies, the liquor interests propose to continue to divert from food purposes hundreds of millions of bushels of grain and to turn this grain into intoxicating drink, which all experience has shown is the greatest handicap that any nation can carry into war.

Strong drink is a curse to the soldier in camp and in the field. It is a curse to the home and to the nation. It disturbs the economic, the social and the political life of the republic. It is the frequent cause and the almost constant accompaniment of crime, riot and disorder of every kind.

Love for our neighbor should make us demand the abolition of this drag upon our civilization. It should make us willing for our brother's sake to do without wine or beer or intoxicating liquor of any description.

Already the wise regulation has been promulgated that no soldier in uniform shall be served with intoxicating liquor. If we require this abstinence on the part of our soldiers—and it is a wise and beneficent regulation—why should we not make the same requirement of all those who are rendering service for the nation in shops and factories, on farms and ranches and in every line of industrial toil. Why should not soldier and civilian be subject to the same law—"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself"?

Local option and state prohibition are good as far as they go, but we should aim for nation-wide prohibition, for only when federal authorities work in harmony with state and local officials can we secure an effective and thorough-going enforcement of anti-liquor legislation.

While we strive for national prohibition, let us remember that total abstinence is a matter for each individual citizen. The sooner we become a nation of total abstainers the sooner will national prohibition come into full effect. So let us try to persuade every man and woman to adopt the rule of personal total abstinence, for nothing will so hasten the victory for temperance as the adoption of this principle by each individual.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M. Aug. 27. The first Bible song. Ex. 15:1-13.
T. Aug. 28. Moses' great song. Deut. 33:1-7.
W. Aug. 29. A Christian hymn. Acts 4:23-31.
T. Aug. 30. Mary's hymn. Luke 1:46-55.
F. Aug. 31. Songs in the heart. Eph. 5:17-20.
S. Sept. 1. Music of heaven. Rev. 5:9-14.
S. Sept. 2. My Favorite Hymn. Ps. 33:1-22.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS

Making Sunshine.

BY HELEN M. RICHARDSON.

"WHAT a dreary day!" exclaimed Patty with a sigh as she looked out of the window. Then she took up a magazine and began idly to turn the pages.

"What a weebegone face!" Patty looked up with a start into the bright face of her chum, Sally Lascom. "Hello, Sally! Glad to see you! Isn't this a dreary day?" cried Patty, as she got quickly to her feet with an outstretched hand.

"Dreary? Why, I think it is fine. A little cloudy, perhaps, but that will only make the sun seem brighter when it does show itself," was the cheery response.

"If it ever does," Patty said glumly. "Why, Patty Ludden! Whatever is the matter with you? Don't you expect it?"

"What—the sun? Y—es, I suppose it will appear—some time. But I do just hate dull days, Sally."

"Patty, you're a pessimist—an out-and-out pessimist," Sally exclaimed, giving her friend an impatient little shake. "Some days just have to be cloudy. You don't expect a person to laugh all the time. It would soon grow monotonous.

"Well, all the same, I don't believe I would ever tire of the sunshine," Patty asserted.

Sally was silent for a moment. "I have a notion that our occupations have a great deal to do with our opinion of the weather," she observed in a musing tone. "What have you been doing today?" she suddenly asked.

"Nothing—absolutely nothing. There is no inspiration in clouds," Patty replied with a yawn.

"Oh, that's the way you feel. I plainly see you haven't been taught to make your own sunshine. Mother long ago gave me lessons in the art. It cannot be acquired all at once, but it is well worth the time you put into it. Get your hat. I'm going to make a call and I'd like your company."

Patty obeyed automatically. Once out in the air her spirits revived a bit, and she asked: "Where are you going?"

"To several places. I make most of my calls on such days as this."

"But—but I'm not dressed for calling," Patty demurred.

"Neither am I, but that doesn't matter. The friends I go to see pay little attention to my clothes," smiled Sally.

The smile was contagious. Patty felt the corners of her mouth curving, and as the girls started down the steps she was actually smiling.

"Mercy! whom do you know here?" exclaimed Patty in astonishment as her companion paused before a dilapidated building and gave a vigorous knock. In response a little pale-faced boy threw the door wide open and seizing Sally's hand smiled joyously up into her face.

"I'm so glad you've come, Miss Lascom. Mother has been watching for you all the morning," he said as he danced along beside her.

"Isn't she as well, Jamie?" Sally asked.

"About the same, Miss Lascom, but she is always watching for you on cloudy days like this," the little boy replied.

"I have brought a friend with me today, Jamie. I hope the sight of a stranger will not disturb her," Sally announced.

"Oh, no indeed; she always likes to see people, especially on dull days; she says they do her about as much good as the sun," the child chatted on.

There was a queer feeling in Patty's throat as the door opened into a poorly but neatly furnished room, and disclosed the figure of a woman with two crutches beside her. The look on this woman's face as Sally approached and grasped the eagerly outstretched hand Patty did not soon forget. She had never seen a sunbeam that equaled it.

Patty stifled a sob at sight of the sweet, patient face that followed Sally's every movement as if it were a veritable sunbeam flitting to and fro about the meagerly furnished room.

"I understand—now," she said in a choked voice as they left the house when their visit was ended. "Are all your calls like this?" she asked.

"All my cloudy day visits are," Sally replied.

"And this is what you meant by making our own sunshine?" Patty queried.

A Cheerful Expecter

BY JULIA H. JOHNSTON.

"COME in, come in," cried a cheerful voice from the other side of the door, as a visitor knocked outside.

A friendly hand turned the knob and entered, whereupon a figure on a couch half rose, and a cordial greeting met the one coming in.

"Oh, it is you, Mrs. Brand. How good of you to come, when you are so busy all the time. Bring a chair up close. We'll have a good visit. I'm so glad to see you."

"Tell me first of all about your ant to happen. I hear a footstep outside, and think 'Somebody's coming in. How pleasant!' And when it comes time for Martha to be home, I look forward to having a bright bit of out-of-doors brought in. I'm always expecting the mail, too, and looking for something nice to come to me—it's just a bit exciting to wonder what it will be."

"But what if it should be bad news?" said the visitor.

"Well then, it would only be half as bad as if I'd dreaded it, and borne it before it came. When I expect good things, I fill up my cup with pleasure in looking forward, and when they come, my cup runs over. Why should I put in a bitter drop at first by expecting evil? That wouldn't sweeten the bitter thing if it came. I have such a good time remembering, as I stay on my couch and think of all the good things that have come to me, that this helps me to look forward to more. His love in time past forbids me to think He'll leave me at last in trouble to sink."

"You've taught me a lesson," said the friend. "You are such a cheerful expecter."

Going Uphill

BY CORA S. DAY.

"I don't see much fun in this uphill travelling. It's just a lot of hard climbing, with nothing to look at ahead but the road to the top." The stout member of the walking party stopped to regain his breath and mop his heated brow. The others laughingly railed at him for a lazy fellow, but good-naturedly stopped and waited for him. One grasped the chance to voice a somewhat different opinion of hill climbing.

"Oh, there's a lot of fun in it if you look at it right, Clyde," he protested. "It's good exercise, you know." Clyde groaned in assent. "Then there's all the fun of getting the view from the top, and the easy trip down on the other side. It's well worth all the effort. Come along," and they resumed their tramp.

Have you a hard lesson to learn, a difficult task to do, a tiresome duty to perform, a moral or mental or spiritual hill to climb? You can make it harder or easier by your way of looking at it and going at it. Try considering it in the light of good exercise, that will strengthen you for the next hill. Set your heart upon doing the climb so well that the things beyond—the view from the summit—will be beautiful by your own zeal and joy in success. Then in truth the travelling beyond will prove easy and pleasant, and the effort will prove itself well worth while, in every sense.

Keeping Rank

There is something fascinating about the soldier-step. The rhythmic beat of marching feet speaks of patient drill, strict obedience to orders, and the ability to step in unison with others in unbroken rank. Long ago it was said of the men of Zebulon that they were men who could keep rank and were not of double heart. This made them invincible soldiers. And later Joel describes the "strong people" who shall execute judgment, as marching—"every one in his ways, and they shall not break their ranks, neither shall one thrust another; they shall walk every one in his path." Now what do you think? Is not good work and progress sometimes hindered today because some of the soldiers break rank, do not keep step with the rest, and thrust others from the path? "Together" is the watchword of today. Harmony in the ranks, concerted movement, onward as one man—so shall victory be won by the young soldiers who are marching under the leadership of our great Captain Jesus Christ.

THE INTRUDER

"Yes. Don't you think it rather a nice way of getting the best of the weather?" Sally asked, brightly.

A thoughtful look came over Patty's face. Then she turned swiftly and faced her companion.

"You called me a pessimist a little while ago, Sally Lascom; and I now pronounce you to be an out-and-out optimist," she declared, twining her arm lovingly around her friend's waist. "No more dreary days for me now if I may be allowed to accompany you on your sunshine walks," she declared.

"Agreed! And with two optimists to brighten the dreary days the sun may hide its face for a week at a time and not be missed," Sally assented, as she gave Patty's hand a delighted squeeze.

'offending member.' Is the broken leg doing well?"

"Yes, indeed," was the prompt reply. "It's attending to its knitting as properly as can be, I expected it to behave well. It had the best of care, and I've had it, too, with Martha to look after me, while laid aside this way."

"But you have to be alone while your good daughter is away to her work," said the visitor, as she looked sympathetic. She lived herself in the midst of a bustling family, and was accustomed to entertain company at all times.

"Well, it's no hardship to be alone," said the victim of the accident. "I have plenty of time for good reading and to think 'gude thoughts,' as the old Scotch woman said. Then, you see, I'm always expecting something pleas-

Our Fireside

Alma Dinock's Rest Cure

By Felicia Buttz Clark

"I T'S no use, doctor, I simply cannot go away now. What would Ralph do, and the boys? Then, there are other reasons," and with these words Alma Dinock leaned her head back, wearily, on the pillow of an easy-chair.

The old family doctor looked at her keenly. He knew well enough that there were other reasons. It was not that Ralph Dinock had not worked hard, dear, good fellow! He would have been willing to slave day and night for his loved ones—but he did not have the gift of securing a good income. And this was among the other reasons why the pretty woman, looking so pale and used up, could not have the vacation that she longed for and so greatly needed.

"Well, Alma, I'm sorry. You ought to drop the reins for a while. But if you can't, that settles it. We'll have to try something else. I'll leave you a new prescription for a tonic."

"I don't want any more tonics!" exclaimed Alma Dinock, with more energy than the doctor believed her capable of. "I just won't take any more medicine."

There are moments when even the family physician is puzzled. He saw that the woman whom he had known ever since she was a girl was in no mood to be reasoned with.

He rose and picked up his Panama hat and driving gloves.

Alma rose, too, and his heart was moved as he saw her lips tremble. She was almost at the end of her strength.

The doctor spoke impulsively. "You work too hard, Alma. Let some things go. Take life easier. There's a lot of beauty in this world, but we look right over it and keep our minds on the things that don't matter. You've simply got to rest. Your mother would want you to."

He did not stop to see the tears that welled up in her dark eyes but he knew that she had flung herself face down on the chintz-covered couch in the dining room and was weeping bitterly. "Poor child!" he murmured. In a moment doctor and car were out of sight down the dusty yellow road.

Dinock's place was small but exquisitely kept. At night, Ralph and the boys, who were already out at work in order to help the family finances, kept the grass as smooth as velvet, weeded the pansy beds and trained up the roses. Inside, the house was neat as wax—Alma saw to that. It was her joy and pride that no one ever found dust on her tables or a single article out of its accustomed place.

Ralph sometimes wished that Alma was not such an immaculate house-keeper. There were moments when he would like to have dropped a newspaper on the floor without having a guilty feeling, or to have laid a book down on the table without finding it carefully closed when he came back and the place lost where he had been reading. He felt an extraordinary desire sometimes to do foolish things, spill ashes or turn up corners of rugs, just to see what would happen. But all the time he admired Alma extremely, and he loved her very much.

Only that morning, at breakfast, he had said: "Dear, you look pale and tired. I'm going to phone, and ask Dr. Peters to come in and see you."

"He'll only say that I need—"

Alma bit her lip. Ralph flushed a little. "That you need a change. I wonder if we can't manage it."

"Oh, Ralph dearest," Alma was sobbing on his shoulder now, a sure sign that something serious was the matter, "I'm all right. Of course, we can't manage it. And I wouldn't be so selfish as to go and leave you to work on alone. You had no vacation at all last summer. And here I can stay in this lovely cool house all the time, while you and the boys are at the hot office. No, indeed, I wouldn't think of it."

Ralph Dinock kissed her good-bye and hurried to call the doctor before he ran for the train. He was anxious about Alma. She worked too hard. Yet, what could he do? A good strong girl to help her would be the remedy, but maids were at a premium in the suburban town.

Ralph threw off his cares at the office, for business must be attended to and fell to dictating letters with more energy than was suited to the day. The mercury was careering gayly in the nineties and the humidity was ninety-eight!

Suddenly, the girl who was writing gave a little cry. There was a thud and a fall. She had fainted.

"No more work for you today, Miss Evans," said Mr. Dinock kindly, when she came to herself again. "It's too hot for you. That's the matter. Better go home."

"I think that I can continue," she replied.

"Why don't you want to go home?" Dinock inquired, with some curiosity.

The girl raised a white face to him. "If you want the real truth," she blurted out, "I'd rather stay here. It's cooler. My room is an oven. I thought I'd die last night, it was so hot. Thank you, Mr. Dinock," she resumed her usual tone. "Shall we go on?"

Ralph's thoughts flew to the woman he loved in the home in the country. She, too, had been white and worri-

And here was this girl. "Cooler here in the office!" What could her room be when this was a furnace?

* * *

Alma wept her heart out and then she lifted her head and looked around her. Was the old doctor right? Had she looked over the beautiful things of life and seen only the specks of dust and the marks on the silver?

Evidently, it was necessary for her to live easier; she felt that she must do it, or fail utterly. Was it possible to do only the necessary things, to make some radical change which would do away with the deadly monotony of existence Ralph and the boys would be only too happy to do whatever she wished.

What would mother say, if she were here? The mother with the gentle, placid face. She could hear her now saying: "Does it really matter, dear?"

No. It didn't really matter. There were other things in life that were worth while. She and Ralph and the boys were going to enjoy them.

Now, Alma Dinock had one serious weakness; she loved to save, not money, but things. She loved to have, rather than to use. The dining room was clean and neat, but in the most unpleasant part of the house. The parlor, a beautiful room, had four large windows, looking out upon the garden Ralph took so much pride in.

There was nothing very handsome in the parlor, but what there was, was swathed in muslin covers and mosquito netting. The windows were tight shut, to keep out dust. Occasionally, the room was opened for guests and then closed up again. A remark made by her younger son, John, came to her mind now.

"It's so pretty here, mama. I wish we could live here always."

Had the boys and Ralph wanted beauty and had she held them away from it?

With quick step, she went and threw open the parlor doors. It smelled musty and unused. She opened all the windows and let in the air. It was hot, very hot, but it carried in odors of lilies and pinks and jasmine. A great oak cast deep shade. Through its leaves, the sunbeams danced on the soft green carpet. They had done this room up in green. Today it looked cool and restful.

She took the muslin coverings from the chairs, then put them back again. It was cooler that way. But off from the pictures, the few good engravings and carbon photographs that she and Ralph had bought with so much care, Alma snatched the mosquito netting.

She sat down in front of one of the pictures in a carved wood frame and looked at it a long time. A friend had brought it to them from Italy. It was a green carbon, representing the garden of the Villa d'Este in Tivoli. Tall, straight cypresses rose into the air. It had required four centuries to bring them to such perfection. Marble statues, brown with the passage of time, gleamed against a background of ivied walls. Ferns were there and tall pines.

"Yes, the doctor was right. We have spent too much time on the things that did not count and overlooked the beauty in the world," she thought.

It was so cool and restful in the shaded parlor that Alma yielded to temptation, lay down on the sofa at ten o'clock in the morning and went sound asleep.

Ralph Dinock did a lot of thinking while he ate his plain lunch in the coolest place he could find. It was sweltering in the city. No wonder the girl who did the typewriting had succumbed to the heat. Here were two women all used up. How happy he would be if he could go back to Alma, place a fat roll of bills in her hand and tell her to go away to the mountains!

Ralph sighed. This was impossible. But was there not some other way to solve the difficult problem?

Miss Evans was clicking fast on her machine as he entered the office.

She lifted an astonished face, when he said to her kindly: "Miss Evans,

A Splendid Fountain Pen for Vacation Use

A Fountain Pen is always a necessity and here is an opportunity of securing a good one with only a little effort (see offer below).

The publishers of the AMERICAN MESSENGER are very desirous of increasing the circulation of this admirable publication, and it is for that purpose in view, we are offering this splendid Fountain Pen. The Pen is known as the Commercial Fountain Pen.

The pen is six and one half inches long, and suitable for either lady or gentleman, and fully guaranteed. In the construction of this pen only the best of materials are used. The rubber parts are hand-turned Para rubber. The gold nib is 14 karat solid gold tipped with the best grade of hard iridium.

OFFER No. 1 We will send one of these fountain pens

absolutely free to any one who sends us three new yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at the regular price, 50 cents each.

OFFER No. 2 We will give one fountain pen and a year's subscription to the AMERICAN MESSENGER for only $1.20.

Any of our present subscribers may take advantage of offer No. 2 by extending their subscription one year, and remitting $1.20 in payment for the same.

Our young friends will find this, a very good method of securing a Fountain Pen for themselves. Try it and see how easy it is to secure only 3 new yearly subscriptions at 50 cents each.

American Messenger, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York

Whole Wheat

and

Malted Barley

skillfully blended and processed make a most delicious food in flavor as well as a great body, brain and nerve builder.

Grape-Nuts

"There's a Reason"

you said that your room was very hot. Do you live at home? Pardon me for asking."

"I—I have no home, Mr. Dinock." To his surprise, the girl who was half sick with exhaustion, burst into tears. In a moment, she controlled herself and went on: "My father died several years ago. He was a well-known physician. Everybody loved him. Mother and I struggled along after his death, for he left little beside the house, and that we were obliged to sell in order to live. Then mother died and I came to the city. I live in a boarding-house on the East Side."

"Thank you for telling me," Ralph Dinock said gently. He wondered why he had not had more consideration for his stenographer. She came and went so quietly, was so silent and worked so swiftly that he had thought of her almost as a machine.

He dictated a letter and then spoke suddenly: "Do you like to do housework or to cook, Miss Evans?"

The girl began to fear that the heat had affected her employer's brain.

"Why, yes, Mr. Dinock. I like to cook better than anything else. Mother said that I was a born cook. But I have no use for such an accomplishment now," she added bitterly. "There's no money in it."

Mr. Dinock drummed on the desk. He had a vision of the white-faced wife at home, who so sorely needed a helping hand.

"I'll tell you what we'll do, Miss Evans. You go to your room as quickly as you can and pack a few things in a grip. Then you meet me at the station at five-thirty."

The girl looked startled. Ralph continued quickly: "We've got a house in the suburbs, my wife and I. There's green grass out there at Farewoods, and flowers and the birds sing. My wife's just tired out. If you'd be willing to help her—a little—a month's rest won't hurt you. Come, hurry, or we'll miss that train."

"Oh, Mr. Dinock!" was all that Helma Evans could say.

All the way to her room, while she was packing her bag, the lonely girl's heart was singing. God had not forgotten her! Green grass, singing birds, fresh air, after this boiling city where the very bricks were scorched. It was too good to be true. She had seen Mrs. Dinock once or twice when she came to the office. She was a sweet-faced woman, one whom she could love.

And there would be cooking to do! As the train neared Farewoods, Ralph began to question. Perhaps Alma would not be pleased to have him bring home a comparatively strange young lady for a month's visit. Perhaps Miss Evans would prove a burden rather than a help. He knew little about her except that she was a self-contained, capable stenographer.

The door of the house stood wide open.

"Will you wait just a moment, Miss Evans? I will call Mrs. Dinock."

"I'll find her lying down, poor dear," he thought.

Upstairs he went, but he found no wife; but the spare bed-rooms, the best in the house, on the shady side, were thrown open.

"Some company must have come," commented Ralph.

In the kitchen, no wife. Ralph began to be frightened when a voice called: "Ralph dear, come out into the garden."

There stood Alma, dressed in white, looking rested, with a delicate pink tint in her face like she used to have. Beside her was a dainty supper-table, set with the prettiest china and the silver so rarely used that Ralph had forgotten they owned it. A bunch of roses was in a glass vase. The air was cool and refreshing.

Ralph drew a long breath. He had never said anything before, because he feared that Alma would be overworked if things moved out of their regular course, but he had so detested the hot dining-room after the long day in the city.

Here, in the shade of the great tree, it was restful.

"The boys did almost everything for me," she explained. "I've thought it all over. We've never half enjoyed our beautiful garden and the pleasant parlor. Everything is arranged, and I'm going to take my rest-cure at home."

When Miss Evans had been cordially welcomed, and they had eaten their supper, the two boys, delighted to be allowed to share their mother's work, cleared away everything and whistled while they washed dishes.

"I'm going to do all the cooking," said Helma, "and you shall have a good rest."

Mrs. Dinock leaned her head back on the comfortable rattan chair and looked up at the big, golden moon peeping good-naturedly at her through the branches of the big tree.

"I'm glad you came, my dear. Not because you will cook. We'll do the work together, but because this is a red-letter day in my life."

"Why is that?" asked the doctor's voice, behind her.

Alma held out her hand to her old friend.

"Because you taught me a lesson, dear old Esculapius. I've begun to see the beauty in my own little world."

"And who is this young lady?"

"I am Helma Evans, sir."

"From where?"

"My father was Dr. James Evans, of Hampton."

"And I saw you when you were a baby. Ralph Dinock, where did you pick up the daughter of one of the best men I ever knew?"

"I didn't pick her up, doctor. I think—"

Helma slipped her hand into that of the old family physician.

"It was God who did it, doctor. I've found my bit of heaven."

They turned toward Mrs. Dinock. Her head lay restfully on the pillow. She was sound asleep, with the cool evening breezes playing about her.

Truly, Alma Dinock's Rest Cure had begun.

Miss Maria's Providence

BY KATHLEEN HAY.

OR the sake o' mercy, Marcella, and what will you be asking for next—a party indeed. I suppose you'll be wanting white dresses with blue sashes for Joy and you, and a table set out on the lawn with half the children in town invited. Well, to be sure there's never any telling what will happen next."

Miss Maria Ansley paused a moment, her eyes fixed sternly on her small niece, who stood near the door, shifting nervously from one foot to the other, all the while edging backward, ready to escape from her aunt's vengeance.

"A party indeed—if that isn't impertinence, Marcella Ansley, and me working my fingers to the bone to keep you two fed and clothed."

"There's not many that would have taken on two troublesome children, situated as I am, but Providence just seemed to settle you on me, and there seems no way out now."

Miss Maria paused again, the torrent of her indignant words for the moment being spent. Marcella's last hope for the party was completely gone as she moved slowly backward, one small hand closing tightly over the door knob.

"Good-night, Aunt Maria, I'm sorry," she said and started down the hall rapidly when her aunt's sharp voice arrested her again.

"Go straight to bed, Marcella; both of you, and don't be long getting there either with that candle wasting all the time. In my day children went to bed without any light. I'm sure I don't know what the world is coming to soon. If this last request don't beat all."

The small, old-fashioned room was empty, save of her own presence, as Miss Maria finished speaking and sank into a high, stiff chair drawn near the dying fire. Five, ten, fifteen minutes passed and still she sat rigid, her eyes riveted on the few remaining coals.

She started up suddenly as the sound of voices came indistinctly through the walls.

"Well, I never, if it isn't those two children talking yet, and that forbidden long ago. I'll stop that game or my name ain't Maria Ansley." With an impatient gesture she arose, her thin lips drawn together in a sharp line. The parlor door opened softly and by the faint light shining through the door she stole down the hall toward the noise. Marcella was speaking in a soothing tone.

"You must not mind so much about the party, Joy—I didn't think that Aunt Maria would let us have it, but when I grow up I mean to give you the best one in the world."

"But I want it now," wailed Joy, the thought of the coming years holding no place in the cry of disappointment, "and—Aunt Maria's mean, and I don't love her a bit."

"Hush, Joy." Another small voice from out the darkness spoke quickly. "You must not talk so dreadfully." She paused a second and then went on pleading Aunt Maria's cause.

"She takes care of us both, Joy, since Providence—" she stumbled hurriedly over the impressive word, "has thrown us at her, and she has only us to love her you know."

By degrees Joy had grown quieter, Marcella's words softening her wrath. "I'm a little sorry I called her mean, but—anyway I don't believe she loves us one bit."

"But we have each other, Joy, and poor Aunt Maria has nobody."

"I never thought of that Marcella," Joy answered sleepily, "and I'm sorry, 'cause I guess she must be pretty lonesome."

"Well, we'll go to sleep now, Joy, and remember that we are going to try and love Aunt Maria a lot—and—make her real happy again."

The silent listener at their door turned softly away and crept noiselessly back toward the parlor. She walked over to the stiff, high chair that she had not long left, but with a gesture of weariness passed by it and sank into a rocker helplessly. Tears long since abandoned, coursed slowly down her face as a smothered sob escaped her lips.

DON'T decide on the new hymn-book for your Church or Sunday School until you have seen HALLOWED HYMNS NEW AND OLD Edited by IRA ALLAN SANKEY Son of the famous Singing-Evangelist Ira D. Sankey OVER 550,000 COPIES ALREADY SOLD Responsive Scripture Readings No Trashy Words No Jingly Music Price $25.00 per 100 not prepaid 35 cents per copy by mail Examine a copy and prove its value in your work. (Returnable if desired.) The Biglow & Main Co., New York Chicago

"If the Lord hasn't sent you a lesson worth learning this night, Maria Ansley—and, 'out of the mouths of babes, too.' Some one to love and—some one to make you happy once more." Breathlessly she paused, her tired frame shaken by feelings long pent up.

"To love me—" she whispered into the silence—"such as me."

Far into the night Miss Maria did not stir. A softened expression had stolen over her hardened features, smoothing away some of the lines of care.

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these," she repeated slowly, a dawning of the true meaning coming into her heart, "and—and you have never done a thing, Maria Ansley—but the Lord willing, it's a new life you'll be living from now on."

Her head sank lower into her hands, a little smothered cry broke the silence of the room. And then again her lips moved and words that she had long since learned and forgotten came crowding back.

"Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not—for of such—of such is the Kingdom of Heaven."

She raised her head as the first faint streaks of dawn came in through the window.

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these—" she whispered softly, "ye have done it unto Me."

And the light of an awakened love shone sweetly now in Miss Maria's soul.

The Boston Public Library

It is not generally known that this library has the largest circulation of books of any in the United States. The Congressional Library at Washington has the largest collection of volumes, periodicals, newspapers and photographs, but as the efficiency of a library is popularly supposed to be measured by the number of books lent for home use, the Boston Library is easily in the lead, with New York second and the Congressional Library third in this point of efficiency.

The Boston Public Library is a great educational organization under the direction of trained experts, and consists of the Central Library in Copley Square with fourteen branch libraries and sixteen reading-rooms distributed over the city at thirty strategic centers. The records show that almost two million books circulated last year, these being taken from the Central Library and its branches to be used at home. The library co-operates with the public and private schools, beginning with the very youngest of school age. It has a well-equipped children's department under the supervision of trained specialists, it co-operates with the numerous colleges, universities and other institutions of higher learning in and about Boston, and it ranks among the most complete American libraries in accommodation for scholars and authors in their research and writing.

The equipment for this educational service represents a capital investment of eight million dollars, given in part by the State of Massachusetts, in part by public-spirited citizens, but for the most part by the city of Boston.

Instant Postum

A table drink that has taken the place of coffee in thousands of American homes.

"There's a Reason"

Delightful Flavor Rich aroma Healthful Economical

Sold by grocers everywhere.

THE TREASURY

SPECIAL NOTICE

Owing to occasional losses of letters, containing money, we would request friends and donors of the American Tract Society to remit by check or Post Office Money Order, which latter can always be duplicated in case of loss.

Receipts of the American Tract Society During June, 1917

Total Donations (Including $1,015.50 for Special Objects), $3,493.63.

ALABAMA, $15.10. Mr. Liddell, $5.10; Miss Pratt, $5; Mr. Newman, $5.

ARKANSAS, $2.50. Mr. Moore, $2.50.

CALIFORNIA, $57.50. Mr. S. G. Gibson and wife, $10; Mr. Patrick, $1; Dr. Harris, $5; Mr. Ainslie, $1; Miss Scates, $2; Mrs. Pew, for Gospel Munitions, $1.50; Mr. White, $5; Rev. Mr. Vandewater, $1; Mr. Hill, $10; Mr. Drake, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Mr. Tonzau, for Gospel Munitions, $1; Mrs. Ford, $10; Mr. Sweigard, $5.

COLORADO, $4.50. Mrs. Murray, $2; Mr. Faris, $2.50.

CONNECTICUT, $111.50. Miss Elmore, for Gospel Munitions, $2; Miss Allyn, $1; Mr. Proctor, $5; Litchfield, offering, $20.50; Dr. Beach, $1; Miss Comstock, $2; Mr. Boardman, $5; Mrs. Van Tassel, $5; Mr. Dalby, $1; Miss Bartlett, $5; Mrs. Armstrong, $5; "A Friend," $2; "A Friend," $1; Miss Sisson, $5; Mr. Hutchins, $2; Mrs. Cowdrey, $1; Mrs. Williams, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Miss Huntington, $2; Mrs. Grosvenor, for Gospel Munitions, $2; Dr. Smith, $1; Miss Hart, $1; Miss Slater, $1; Mrs. Panton and sister, $2; Mrs. Wiard, $1; Miss Ely, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Miss Sturtevant, for Gospel Munitions, $10; Miss Elmore, for Gospel Munitions, $2; Miss Penfield, $3; Mr. Parker, $1; Mr. Barnes, $5; Mr. Thatcher, $2; Miss Prudden, $5.

DELAWARE, $28. Miss Smith, $5; Miss Ball, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Miss Janvier, $3; Miss Nisbet, $15.

FLORIDA, $0.50. Mrs. Howard, $0.50.

GEORGIA, $2. Miss Glover, $2.

ILLINOIS, $59. Mrs. Morrison, $5; "A Friend," $5; Mr. Helm, $5; Mr. Ollendorf, $1; Mr. Farrington, $2; Miss Bradley, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Mr. Scott, $10; Rev. Mr. Northrup, for Gospel Munitions, $1; Mr. Kent, $5; Miss Powell, $2; Mr. Wessells, $10; Mr. Schmidt, $1; Mr. Reed, $5; Mrs. Clark, $1; Mrs. Campbell, $1.

INDIANA, $12.50. Rev. Mr. Baur, $1.50; Mr. Taylor, $5; Miss Jacobs, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Mrs. Killian, for Gospel Munitions, $1.

IOWA, $58.40. Rev. Mr. Lowry, $5; Mr. Ramsburg, $2; Mrs. Sheriff, $10; Mr. Hardin, $5; Mr. Dohman, $0.40; Mr. Young, $2; Mr. Foster, $10; Mr. Rix, $10; Mr. Lieberknecht, $5; Mrs. Desmist, $1; Mrs. Drew, $3; Mr. Addengast, $5.

KANSAS, $8. Mr. Ebinger, $2; Mr. and Mrs. Carlson, $1; Mr. Kemble, $1; Mrs. Van Master, for Gospel Munitions, $2; Mr. Dyck, $2.

KENTUCKY, $8.12. Mr. Hunt, $1; Miss Wynne, for Soldiers' Text Book, $1.12; Miss Anderson, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Mr. Spurling, $1.

LOUISIANA, $6. Mr. Ginder, $5; Mrs. Mann, for Gospel Munitions, $1.

MAINE, $6. Mr. Pope, $1; Mr. and Mrs. Jackman, $2; Miss Wells, $2; Mr. Lord, for Gospel Munitions, $1.

MARYLAND, $13. Mrs. Coffrey, $10; Mr. Shay, $2; Mr. Adams, $1.

MASSACHUSETTS, $441. Mrs. Thurston, $5; Mrs. Loring, $25; Mr. Stetson, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Mr. Dinsman, $5; Mr. Brown, $0.50; Mr. Muchten, $1; Mr. Carcy, $5; Miss Clark, $1; Williamstown, Church Offering, for Gospel Munitions, $1; Miss Brayton, $5; Mr. Davis, $1; Mr. Hathaway, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Mr. Chadwick, $2; Mr. Robertscheik, $2; Miss Perkins, for Gospel Munitions, $10; Mrs. Renwick, $5; Miss Cranc, $25; "A Friend," $20; Miss Cummings, $2; Mrs. Morgan, $1; Mr. Moore, for Soldier's Text Book, $25; Mr. Clark, for Soldier's Text Book, $15; Mrs. Severance, $5; Mr. Cutler, for Soldier's Text Book, $5; Mrs. Brittain, for Soldier's Text Book, $1; Mr. Walworth, $5; Miss Hoehle, $1; Mr. Davis, for Soldier's Text Book, $5; Mrs. Gurney, $5; Miss Houghton, $1; Mrs. Ripley, $5; Miss Edwards, $1; Miss Hyde, $2; Mrs. Speare, $10; Mr. Richardson, $2; Mr. Allyn, $5; Rev. Mr. Lalabee, for Tract Distribution, $1; Miss Munroe, for Soldier's Text Book, $3; Miss Borden, for Soldier's Text Book, $10; Mrs. Hathaway, $15; Mr. Robinson, $5; Miss Sinclair, $1; Mrs. Thacher, for Gospel Munitions, $2; Mr. Hazen, $2; Miss Fletcher, $5; Mrs. Hobart, for Gospel Munitions, $2; Miss Pond, for Gospel Munitions, $1; Mr. Hall, for Gospel Munitions, $10; Miss Miller, $2; Mr. Richardson, $2; Mrs. Peabody, $1; Mrs. Goddard, $1; Miss Porter, $1; Miss Gordon, $1; Miss Rand, $1.50; Mrs. Rand, $1; Miss Nova, $1; Mr. Curtis, $2; Miss Barnard, $0.50; Miss Ward, $1; "A Friend," $1; Mrs. Shapleigh, $1; Miss Davis, $5; Mrs. Reed, $5; Mrs. Read, $1; Mrs. Ollin, $1; Miss Chandler, $0.50; Miss Crombie, $3; Miss Cross, $5; Mrs. Little, for Gospel Munitions, $1; "A Friend," for Gospel Munitions, $1; Miss Wheeler, for Gospel Munitions, $10; Mrs. Stone, $1; Mrs. Whittemore, for Gospel Munitions, $10; Mrs. O'Brien, $2; Mr. Russell, $10; Miss Hutchins, for Gospel Munitions, $0.50; Mrs. Lovett, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Mrs. Butler, for Gospel Munitions, $1.50; Mr. McHaffey, $5; Mrs. Hayward, $5; Miss Montgomery, $1; Mr. Judd, for Gospel Munitions, $10; Mr. Jerry, $5; Miss Dewing, $5; Miss Morgan, for Gospel Munitions, $2; Mr. Warren, $1; Mr. Plunkett, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Mr. and Mrs. Shedd, $10; Mrs. Wood, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Mr. Holbrook, $5; Mrs. Keith, $2; Mrs. Dunbar, for Gospel Munitions, $2; Mr. Price, $20; Hon. Fosdick, for Gospel Munitions, $1; Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland, $1.

MICHIGAN, $21. Mrs. Scotten, $10; Rev. Schmidt, $1; Mr. Hulsmit, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Mrs. Wilkinson, $2; Mr. and Mrs. Stulp, for Gospel Munitions, $2; Mrs. Bovee, $1.

MINNESOTA, $22. Mr. Clynick, $1; "M. A. H., Chicago," for Gospel Munitions, $15; General McG. Reeve, $5; Mrs. Herring, $1.

MISSISSIPPI, $5. Mr. and Mrs. Guthrie, $5.

MISSOURI, $44. Mrs. Barry, $25; Mrs. Martin, for Soldier's Text Book, $1; "A Friend," $2; Miss Howe, $5; Miss Wehrmann, $10; Mrs. Davis, $1.

MONTANA, $5. Mr. Miles, $1; Mr. Beatty, $2; Mr. McKibben, $2.

NEBRASKA, $4.70. "A Friend," $1; "Ungenannt," $2; "A Friend," $1; Mr. Hayes, $0.25; Mr. Epp, $0.15; Mr. Wehrli, $0.30.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, $40. Mrs. Ford, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Miss MacFarland, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Mr. Eaton, $5; Miss Priest, $4; Mrs. Holmes, $1; Mr. Marden, $1; Mrs. Whitney, for Gospel Munitions, $10; Miss Burr, for Gospel Munitions, $1; Miss Flanders, $5; Mrs. McDuffee, $2; Mrs. Page, for Gospel Munitions, $1.

NEW JERSEY, $319.15. Elizabeth, Church Collection, $10; Miss Tenney, $5; Miss Simms, $3; Miss Lockward, $5; Miss Brown, $2; Miss Abbot, $1; Freehold, offering, $3.37; Mrs. Acker, $2; Mrs. Rowen, $0.50; Miss Sheldon, for Gospel Munitions, $5; North Branch, Church Offering, $8.28; Mrs. Milliken, $10; Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Read, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Mr. Morse, $1; Miss Mundy, $1; Mr. Mahon, $2; Mrs. Veghte, $5; Miss Halsey, $20; Miss Howell, for Gospel Munitions, $1; Miss Wilson, for Gospel Munitions, $1.50; Mr. Marvin, $3; Mr. Machen, $5; Miss Voorhes, $5; Mr. Hughes, $1; Mrs. Reeve, $1; Mr. Austin, $1; Mrs. Allen, $25; Dr. Franklin, $2; Mr. Hampson, for Gospel Munitions, $2; Mrs. Woodruff, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Miss Gilchrist, for Gospel Munitions, $50; Miss Drury, $2; Z. P. Fletcher, M. D., $2; Mrs. Grant, $5; Miss Alden, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Mr. Tiebout, $5; Miss Sutphen, for Gospel Munitions, $0.25; Mrs. Rosa Epple, for Gospel Munitions, $1; Mr. Ritchie, $3; Miss Carson, $2; Miss Hull, $3; Mrs. Peters, $10; Mr. Richards, $10; Miss Price, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Miss Atterbury, $5; Mr. Hull, $10; Miss Soper, $1; Miss McLeod, $1; Mrs. Harris, $2; Princeton, Church Collection, $9.77; Mrs. Douglas, $5; "A Friend," for Gospel Munitions, $10; Chatham, Church Offering, $5; Dr. Lemmerz, $2.50; Mr. Boardman, $1; Chatham, Church Collection, $19.98; Mrs. Devins, $2.

NEW MEXICO, $5. Mr. McCullough, $5.

NEW YORK, $1,143.63. New York City, Church Collection, $34.96; Mrs. Moses, for Gospel Munitions, $5; New York City, Church Offering, $88.82; Dr. Dodge, $50; Mrs. Woolverton, $5; Mr. Stuart, $10; Mrs. Crockett, for Gospel Munitions, $1; Rev. Mr. Schibred, $1; Parker & Graff, for Gospel Munitions, $100; Rev. Mr. Gebhard, $3; Mr. Wuensche, $1; Miss Belloni, $1; Mr. Aikman, $10; Mrs. Dwight, $10; Mr. Barnes, $2; Mrs. Brine, $3; Rev. Mr. Tilton, Jr., for Gospel Munitions, $5; Miss Taylor, for Gospel Munitions, $1; Miss Acton, $5; Mr. Chambers, $10; Mr. Nagel, $1; Mrs. Eaton, for Gospel Munitions, $3; Mr. Erbsloh, $5; Mr. Battle, for Gospel Munitions, $2; Miss Smith, $5; Mr. Arthur, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Miss Wakeman, $100; Mrs. Huntington, for Gospel Munitions, $20; "A Friend," $1; Mrs. Lee, $5; Mr. Havemeyer, $25; Miss McGeach, for Gospel Munitions, $1; Miss Van Duzee, $1; Miss Bean, $1; Miss Tuthill, $5; Miss Rickard, $5; Mr. Taylor, $5; Mr. Hallock, $10; Miss Smith, $0.25; Miss Brown, $1; Rev. Mr. Krahrmer, $1; "Judson Swift," $25; Miss Marshall, $1; Miss Parsons, for Gospel Munitions, $4; Miss Munson, $10; Mr. Van Brunt, for Gospel Munitions, $25; Miss Veltman, for Gospel Munitions, $1; Miss Hart, $2; Mr. Manier, $5; Mrs. Whitehouse, $10; Mr. Whittemore, $10; Mr. Ludlow, $100; Mr. Moseley, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Miss Hitchcock, $1; Mrs. Rogers, $2; Mr. Lansing, $25; Mr. Johnson, for Gospel Munitions, $25; Miss McDowell, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Mrs. Strong, for Colportage Work, $5; Elmira, Church Offering, $13; Mrs. Winslow, $50; Mrs. Finch, for Gospel Munitions, $10; Miss Stevenson, for Gospel Munitions, $1; Mrs. Taylor, $1; Mrs. Moreaux, $0.50; Mrs. Sanky, $1; Miss Ward, $1; Mr. Frost, $5; Mrs. Hodgkins, $5; Mrs. Gorton, $25; Mr. Revels, $2; Miss Rapalii, $25; Mr. Buchanan, $1; Mrs. Tarbox, $1; Mrs. Stiles, for Gospel Munitions, $3; Mr. Culver, $5; Montgomery Church Offering, $10; Mrs. Black, for Gospel Munitions, $20; Mr. and Mrs. Ham, $10; Mrs. Wells, $2; Mrs. McCartney, $5; Mr. Cluett, $25; Miss Moall, $0.10; Mr. Myers, for Tracts, $5; Mr. Parker, $1; Mr. McClair, $5; Mrs. Cook, for Gospel Munitions, $1; Mrs. Carrier, $2; Mrs. Harris, $2; Miss Powell, $2; Mr. Howes, $1; Rev. Mr. Smith, $0.50; Mr. Chamberlain, $1; Mrs. Newton, $1.50; Mrs. Gardner, $1; Mrs. Yeisley, including $5 in memory of her Mother, Mrs. John Galt, for Gospel Munitions, $10; Mrs. Duncan, $10; Miss Fraser, $5; Miss Simkin, $1; Miss Bookstaver, $1; Amsterdam, Church Collection, $10; Mrs. Harris, $1; Mr. Hubbs, $5; Miss Willets, one-half for Gospel Munitions and one-half for General Work, $10; Mr. Hoyt, for Gospel Munitions, $2; Mr. Greeny, $1; Mr. Sweetman, $30; Mrs. Goldsmith, for Gospel Munitions, $1; Mr. Damon, $2.

NORTH CAROLINA, $12. Mr. Wills, $2; Mr. Snaugh, $10. NORTH DAKOTA, $2. Mr. Clark, for Gospel Munitions, $2. OHIO, $114.65. "Zampa," $5; Mr. Keller, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Mrs. Rossiter, $10; Mr. Kyrk, $3; Mr. Fenn, $10; Mr. Gamble, $50; Mr. Stearns, $10; Mrs. McK. Stafford, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Mr. Settlage, $2; Mr. Lust, $5; Miss Mathews, for Gospel Munitions, $2; Miss Compher, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Mrs. Beal, $0.65; Mr. Currier, $2. OREGON, $18.35. Rev. Mr. Watch, $5; Miss Prescott, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Portland, Sunday School Collection, $8.35.

PENNSYLVANIA, $756. Mr. Wagenseller, $5; Rural Valley, O. A. B. Class Collection, $5; Dr. Arthur, $5; Mrs. Hodge, $2; Mr. Leitch, for Gospel Munitions, $1; Mr. Hubley, $10; Mr. Horton, $1; Estate of S. P. Harbison, for Soldier's Text Book, $100; Mr. Bixby, $3; Mr. McAteer, $2; Mrs. Strong, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Mr. Pattison, $5; Mr. Delp, $1; Mrs. Miner, $1; Miss Strong, $10; Mr. Paist, $1; Mr. Kirby, $25; Rev. Mr. Whitmer, $2; Miss Buchanan, $5; Miss Weir, $5; Mr. Miller, $25; Mr. Glover, $1; Rev. Mr. Wiand, $5; Mr. and Mrs. Aldred, $2; Dr. Leet, for Gospel Munitions, $1; Mr. Amout, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Miss Beadle, $10; Miss Myers, $2; Misses Bard, for Gospel Munitions, $10; Miss Lehman, for Gospel Munitions, $100; Mr. Craig, $5; Mr. Martin, $2; Mr. Hollenback, $20; Mr. Fenn, $1; Mr. Bond, for Gospel Munitions, $1; Mr. Hand, for Soldier's Text Book, $1; Phila. Church Collection, $5; Mrs. Berry, for Gospel Munitions, $1; Mr. and Mrs. Walp, $3; Mr. Crutchfield, $10; Mrs. Hastie, $1; Mrs. Huber, $2; Mr. Bougher, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Mr. Spencer, $5; Mrs. Watson, $10; Mr. Kreidler, $5; Mr. Emerson, $10; Mr. Duncan, $10; Mr. Trexler, $15; Dr. Callen, $5; Miss Demuth, $2; Mr. Brown, $1; Mrs. Greene, $1; Miss Vail, $2; Mrs. Thomas, $5; Mr. Thomas, $5; Rev. Mr. Eisenbach, $2; Miss Cassidy, $20; Mr. McKenzie, $5; Rev. Mr. Prugh, M. D., $2; Mr. Bare, $5; Mr. Ricketts, $5; Miss Bergstresser, $1; Sewickley Church Collection, $20; Mrs. Dull, for Gospel Munitions, $25; Mrs. Wallace, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Miss Pearsall, $5; Mrs. Crozer, $5; Mr. Rau, $10; Mr. Teaz, $5; Mr. Finney, for Gospel Munitions, $1; Mr. Munn, $10; Mr. Tyler, $6; Mr. Garman, $2; Mr. Ward, $1; Philadelphia Quartz Co., $25; Mr. Archbald, $2; Miss Converse, $10; Arnot, Sunday School Offering, $2; Mr. Waller, Jr., $50; Easton, Church Collection, $7; Mr. Jordan, $5; Mr. Miller, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Mrs. Allison, $5; Mrs. Newton, $2; Chapman and Mrs. Springer, $10; Dr. Leaman, $10.

RHODE ISLAND, $25. Mrs. Pearson, $1; Mr. Reynolds, $5; Mrs. Bacon, $10; Miss Gage, $1; Mrs. Danielson, $5; Mr. Bellows, $3.

TENNESSEE, $5. Mr. Robb, M. D., $5.

TEXAS, $9. Miss Harlow, $1; Miss Clayton, $2; "A Friend," $1; Mr. Powell, $5.

VERMONT, $30. Mrs. Crowell, $10; Mr. Sykes, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Miss Lamb, for Gospel Munitions, $10; Deacon Powell, $5.

VIRGINIA, $33. Mrs. Richardson, $5; Dr. Upshur, $1; Hon. Mr. Fletcher, Jr., for Gospel Munitions, $5; Mr. Blackstone, $1; Mr. Travers, $10; Miss Gregory, $1; O. L. Morton, $10.

WASHINGTON, $5. Mr. Edwards, for Gospel Munitions, $5.

WEST VIRGINIA, $1. Miss Atkinson, $1.

WISCONSIN, $36.53. Mr. Bissell, $5; Mrs. Frank, $1; Mr. Gibson, $5; Mrs. Bryan, $1; Mrs. Kolb, $2; Miss Jones, $0.75; N. L. Sweet, $1; F. D. Hopkins, $0.43; F. C. Wedge, $0.50; Morris Hanson, $1; Mrs. Dr. McCornac, $0.50; H. H. Morenson, $0.50; E. H. Rud, $0.50; Mrs. Hensel, $0.25; Mrs. Larson, $0.25; Mrs. Van Tassel, $0.25; Mrs. Mason, $0.25; Mrs. Twen, $0.15; G. Paderson, $0.50; C. F. Hulcat, $0.50; Mr. Elstad, $0.25; Wright, $0.50; O. Skatem, $0.25; Mrs. D. Woods, $0.10; L. Solsend, $1; Somebody, $0.25; Johnson, $0.10; C. Van Tassel, $1; Mr. Solsend, $0.25; Mr. Web, $0.50; Mr. Palmer, $1; Miss Houghton, $10.

FOREIGN, $3. Canada, Mr. Machado, $2; Mr. Lehrer, $1. LEGACIES, $5,000.

New York, N. Y., Estate of Archibald M. Stewart, $5,000. INCOME FROM TRUST FUNDS, $1,287.50. Income for Missionary Work, $1,174.25. Income for Annuitants, $113.25.

Form of Bequest

I give and bequeath to the "AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY," instituted in the City of New York, May, 1825, the sum of.....dollars to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said Society.

Three witnesses should state that the testator declares this to be his last will and testament, and that they signed at his request, and in his presence and the presence of each other.

Life Members and Directors

The donation of $30 at one time constitutes a Life Member of the American Tract Society; the addition of $70, or the donation of $100 at one time, constitutes a Life Director.

Life members may receive annually copies of the Society's own publications to the value of $1; Life Directors to the value of $2; if applied for within the Society's year, from April 1st to April 1st, in person or by written order. No individual can draw more than one annuity any year for himself. Colporters are not authorized to supply Life Members.

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

TERMS: Subscription price, 50 cts. a year, payable in advance. In clubs of five or more, 30 cts. each. Club subscriptions mailed to separate addresses, if desired. Postage on foreign subscription, 24 cents additional. Canadian subscription, 12 cents additional. Single copies, 5 cents each.

On account of the additional charge which is made by the New York Post Office for mailing to subscribers in New York and Bronx Counties (Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx), no club rates, cash commissions or premiums will be given for subscriptions that must be sent to persons residing in those Counties. Each subscription in New York or Bronx County must be at the rate of 50 cents net.

Remit by Express, Money Order, Draft, Post Office Order or Registered Letter. For very small amounts, postage stamps may be sent at the risk of the sender.

RENEWALS: The date opposite your name shows to what time the subscription has been paid, and a change in the date is the receipt for renewal.

CHANGES: When sending change of address, be sure to send the old address as well as the new one.

OUR ADVERTISERS: We believe that all the advertisements in this paper are from responsible advertisers, and it is our intention to admit only such to our columns. Should, however, any of our subscribers find that any advertiser does not live up to his agreements, we would consider it a favor if they will inform us, and we will at any time give prompt attention to any complaint.

We do not, of course, guarantee that all persons will take the same point of view with the advertisers, and it must be borne in mind that the claims and statements made by advertisers are their assertions, and not ours.

Our readers will confer a favor upon advertisers and also upon us if they will mention the AMERICAN MESSENGER when answering advertisements.

FIELD SECRETARIES AND COLPORTAGE SUPERINTENDENTS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.

Rev. Isaac Pierson, Field Secretary for New England, 50 Bromfield Street, Boston, Mass.

Rev. A. W. Reinhard, Field Secretary and Superintendent of Colportage for the Western and Northwestern States, 313 Y. M. C. A. Building, Omaha, Nebraska.

Rev. George Whitefort, Superintendent of Colportage, Southern Agency, Crichton, R.F.D., Mobile Co., Ala.

American Tract Society

THIS SOCIETY was organized in 1825. Its work is interdenominational and international in scope, and is commended by all evangelical denominations.

It has published the Gospel messages in 178 languages, dialects and characters. It has been the pioneer for work among the foreign-speaking people in our country, and its missionary colporters are distributing Christian literature in many languages among our foreign-speaking population and making a home-to-home visitation among the spiritually destitute, both in the cities and rural districts, leaving all kinds of Christian literature, also the Bible or portions of the Scriptures.

Its publication of leaflets, volumes and periodicals from the Home Office total 797,704,700 copies. It has made former cash appropriations to the amount of $802,966.39, and grants of electrotypes to the value of $61,177.96, by means of which millions of copies of books and tracts have been published at mission stations abroad.

The gratuitous distribution of the past year is to the value of $18,461.65. The grand total of its gratuitous distribution has been to the value of $2,652,967.54, which is the equivalent of 5,305,935,080 tract pages.

The total number of family visits that have been made by the Society's colporters during the last year is 199,963; the total number of volumes distributed by sale or grant is 55,712, making the total number of volumes that have been circulated by colporters in the last seventy-six years 17,438,166, and the total number of family visits that they have made during the same period 18,812,806.

The Society is making very special effort in behalf of Latin America, having entered upon the publication of a one volume Bible commentary in Spanish, a long-needed and earnestly prayed-for publication, and several other important volumes in both Spanish and Portuguese. Its total publications for Latin America now reach 16,012,088 copies. Its work, ever widening, is dependent upon donations and legacies, and greatly needs increased offerings.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President. JUDSON SWIFT, D. D., General Secretary. Remittances should be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

Our Medicine Chest

Little Mary had never seen her Aunt Anna and was much delighted when a visit was promised by the aunt. When the day arrived that the aunt was due a telegram was delivered at Mary's home which read: "Missed train. Will start at same time to-morrow." Mary stood quietly by while her mother read the telegram, and then burst into tears. "Why, darling," cried the mother, anxiously, "what in the world is the matter?" "Oh, mother," replied the child between her sobs, "I will never see my Auntie Anna, after all." "Never see her!" exclaimed the mother in surprise. "What do you mean, dear?" "Why, mother," explained the child, "she says she will start the same time to-morrow, and if she does, she will lose her train again, won't she?"

Dealer in Second-hand Garments (to assistant): "We can't mark this suit Fashionable; it's too shabby."
Assistant (a humorist): "No; but you might mark it Very Much Worn."

She—"Did you have any trouble with your French while you were in Paris?"
He—"No, but the Parisians did."

Why does a man's hair turn grey sooner than his moustache? Because it is about twenty-one years older.

Medical Professor—"What would you do in the case of a person eating poisonous mushrooms?"
Student—"Recommend a change of diet."

A sailor fell off his ship on to the wharf one night, and injured his hand. A week or so afterwards, when he was getting better, he asked the doctor anxiously:

"Say, doc, when this hand of mine gets well, will I be able to play the banjo?"

"Certainly you will—certainly," said the doctor.

"Thanks, doc. You're certainly a wonder," said the sailor. "I never could be fore."

A minister inadvertently said lately in an interesting sermon, and with great emphasis, "I fear that we do not heed the sacred call to the Christian ministry as did our sons and grandsons before us." It reminded us of the remark of a former pastor of Tremont Temple, who announced to a bewildered congregation: "We are expecting to have a sociable on Thursday evening, but in order that there may be no confusion, I will say that if on Thursday evening the weather is inclement, the sociable will be held on the previous evening."

"I've been looking for my husband for the last two hours," said an agitated woman to a calm one.

"Don't get excited, madam," replied the latter. "I've been looking for a husband for the last twenty-five years."

What a change a wife often makes in a man's life, and what a lot of change she requires while making it!

"Do they give little Johnnie any nicknames at school?"

"Yes, they call him 'Corns.'"

"Why?"

"He's always at the foot."

A little boy, suffering from eating too many hard apples, sat under a tree in a farmer's orchard doubled up with pain. The farmer, a kindly man, and a recent convert to Christian science, asked the trouble.

"Oh, I ache so in my stomach," said the youngster.

"No, you don't, either," remonstrated the follower of Mrs. Eddy. "You only think you do."

"It's all right for you to think," said the boy, "but I've got inside information."

Indian negroes live and work in both sections. The Canal Zone itself is protected morally by strict laws, with military enforcement. The terrible dens of vice in Panama and Colon are, however, more largely patronized by Americans than by any others.

"Panama may become a moral menace to the world. The people need Christian education. A Union Christian College would help to educate the people, not only in that Republic, but would also reach the five republics of Central America, Colombia, Venezuela and Ecuador. In all of these eight republics there are only two mission schools that go beyond the sixth grade. Panama City also needs a Y. M. C. A. which could do for it many things that are furnished by various philanthropic and governmental agencies in North American cities, such as—libraries, playgrounds, popular lectures, night classes, etc., but which are entirely lacking in Panama."

Plan for Christmas Now

Though there is a most urgent and persistent call in these days for all kinds of service, the needs on the foreign mission fields must not be forgotten. Christmas brings a special call and the response has hitherto been generous. The missionaries lay away many things which come during the year and bring them out for distribution at the Christmas season. They are always asking for simply dressed dolls. These should be of the go-to-sleep variety and about ten inches in length. Dolls can be sent to many countries by parcel post, and that rate is twelve cents per pound.

Pictures by the thousand are needed at every foreign mission station. A missionary in China just wrote, "Yesterday thirty-five boys more than usual came to the Sunday School and registered their names. They heard about the pictures and calendars. I am sure that most of them, if not all, came only because of the pictures. But they came and heard about Jesus, and I will try to make them come again. These pictures are a real help to us." Picture time abroad is any time during the year.

Gifts for use at the Christmas season should be forwarded by October 15, and can be prepared during this delightful summer season of the year. The Surplus Material Department of the World's Sunday School Association, 216 Metropolitan Tower, New York City, has an interesting leaflet about this special work. Please mention your own particular denomination when you write for the information.

A Day of Prayer for Schools

Following its annual custom, the National Reform Association offers to send appropriate literature, free of charge, to all pastors who will on the Second Lord's Day of September, the Day of Prayer for Schools, or on a contiguous Sabbath, discuss in their pulpits the vital necessity of training the youth of our country in Christian morality to make them desirable citizens. The literature proffered this year, as heretofore, is strictly undenominational, yet specifically Christian. It consists of suggestive sermon outlines, carefully prepared articles in favor of Christian public education, and an authentic report on the present day status of Bible reading in all the schools of our own and other countries. All pastors desiring this literature should order at once. Ask for literature for Day of Prayer for Schools. Address, The National Reform Association, 602-604 Publication Building, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Donations

DONATIONS for the missionary work of the American Tract Society may be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

Notice to Authors

Authors who submit manuscripts for publication to the American Tract Society are reminded that the Society does not hold itself responsible for the return of any manuscript. If a remittance is sent to cover the full cost of postage and registry, the Society will transmit a manuscript by registered mail upon the request of the author.

are making thousands of comfort-bags.

Special honor-rolls are being prepared for the enrolment of all Endeavorers who engage in any form of military, relief, or food-production service.

In the army itself, wherever practicable, regimental Christian Endeavor societies will be organized. The first society of this kind has already been organized by the Second Engineers at El Paso.

Mr. Poling stated that because the Christian Endeavor movement is found in every country in the world, and because it deals with the young people whose prejudices have not been finally fixed, and because its ideals have been developed in the atmosphere of true internationalism and Christian brotherhood, it will be able to render a service of inestimable value to the whole world when the war is over.

In sounding the patriotic note Mr. Poling declared that "America as no other nation holds the hopes of all war-ravaged peoples," and he concluded: "Patriotism, like every other virtue, begins at home. True internationalism in the United States will declare allegiance first of all to the Stars and Stripes. We must save America to serve the world."

Moral Plagues in Panama

Yellow fever has been stamped out of the Canal Zone by scientific sanitation but there is still danger of a worse infection from the moral cesspools of Panama, bordering on the zone. Rev. S. G. Inman writes of this in the Missionary Review of the World as follows:

"The Zone towns of Ancon and Cristobal are only across the street from the Panama and Colon, and so many Americans visit them that their moral problems cannot be separated. The West

The Composition of Coca-Cola and its Relation to Tea

Prompted by the desire that the public shall be thoroughly informed as to the composition and dietetic character of Coca-Cola, the Company has issued a booklet giving a detailed analysis of its recipe which is as follows:

Water, sterilized by boiling (carbonated); sugar, granulated, first quality; fruit flavoring extracts with caramel; acid flavorings, citric (lemon) and phosphoric; essence of tea—the refreshing principle.

The following analysis, by the late Dr. John W. Mallet, Fellow of the Royal Society and for nearly forty years Professor of Chemistry in the University of Virginia, shows the comparative stimulating or refreshing strength of tea and Coca-Cola, measured in terms of the refreshing principle:

Black tea—1 cupful	1.54
<small>(hot) (5 fl. oz.)</small>
Green tea—1 glassful	2.02
<small>(cold) (8 fl. oz. exclusive of ice)</small>
Coca-Cola—1 drink, 8 fl. oz.	1.21
<small>(fountain) (prepared with 1 fl. oz. Syrup)</small>
Coca-Cola—1 drink, 8 fl. oz.	1.12
<small>(bottlers) (prepared with 1 fl. oz. Syrup)</small>

From the above recipe and analysis, which are confirmed by all chemists who have analyzed these beverages, it is apparent that Coca-Cola is a carbonated, fruit-flavored modification of tea of a little more than one-half its stimulating strength.

A copy of the booklet referred to above will be mailed free on request, and The Coca-Cola Company especially invites inquiry from those who are interested in pure food and public health propoganda. Address

The Coca-Cola Co., Dept. J., Atlanta, Ga., U. S. A.

The New Testament

With Notes, Instructions and References.

POCKET EDITION.

DR. CHAPMAN'S INDORSEMENT.

The New Testament with Notes cannot but be helpful to its readers.

The Introductions to the several Books have been prepared by an expert in Biblical scholarship. Taken together it would be impossible to find in the same compass Introductions that present in a better way the salient features of each Book while giving information at the same time concerning questions of authorship, date, purpose and destination.

The Notes upon the text are themselves marvels of scholarly condensation. They aim to present a concise explanation of the words of Scripture, selecting those passages which need such explanation. The writers of these Notes have used rare discrimination in their preparation, and possessors of this book will find in it a perfect mine of information at their command.

The Instructions are designed to make a practical application of the truth. This feature, which is unique, makes the volume one of rare value, and those who read these Instructions will not only have the truth brought directly and forcibly home to their own lives, but will also be furnished with material that will be of inestimable value to them in Christian service and work.

The Outline of the Harmony of the Gospels given is based upon the Standard American Revised Version, which is unquestionably the best modern Version and presents an outline of the Life of Christ that will commend itself to those who make use of it.

John exalts Christ.

JOHN IV.

Salvation by faith.

30 He must increase, but I must decrease.

31 He that cometh from above is above all:^a he that is of the earth is earthly,^b and speaketh of the earth: he that cometh from heaven is above all.

32 And what he hath seen and heard, that he testifieth; and no man receiveth his testimony.^c

33 He that hath received his testimony, hath set to his seal that God is true.^d

34 For he whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God:^e for God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto him.^f

35 The Father loveth the Son,

^a Ch. 6:33; 8:23; Eph. 1:20, 21. ^b 1 Cor. 15:47. ^c ch. 1:11. ^d 1 John 5:10. ^e ch. 7:16. ^f Psa. 45:7; Isa. 11:2; 59:21; ch. 1:16; Col.

now rejoices to be lost sight of in his greater glory.

30. He; Christ. Must increase; in influence and honor.

31. He that cometh; Christ. Is above all; in character and work, and ought to be honored above all. Is of the earth; as are John and all merely human teachers. Is earthly; inferior in character and teaching, and ought to hold an inferior place.

32. Seen and heard; in heaven with his Father. No man; few compared with the whole, and none uninfluenced by the Holy Spirit.

33. Hath set to his seal that God is true; by believing in Christ, he acknowledged that what God hath said concerning him is true.

34. By measure; John and the apostles received the Holy Spirit only in a certain measure, but Christ without measure.

35. Hath given all things; pertaining to the salvation of men. Into his hand; as Mediator, that he might give eternal life to all who should believe in him. Compare chap. 17:2.

INSTRUCTIONS.

7. As all men are naturally destitute of the love of God, no one should think it strange that he must experience that change which Christ called being born again.

9. It is not necessary, in order to believe a fact and receive the benefit of it, that a man should understand the manner in which it is ac-

and hath given all things A. D. 30 into his hand.^g

36 He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life:^h and he that believeth not the Son, shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him.ⁱ

CHAPTER IV.

¹ Christ talketh with a woman of Samaria, and revealeth himself unto her. ²⁷ His disciples marvel. ³¹ He declareth to them his zeal to God's glory. ³⁹ Many Samaritans believe on him. ⁴³ He departeth into Galilee, and healeth the ruler's son that lay sick at Capernaum.

WHEN therefore the Lord knew how the Pharisees

¹ 19. ^g Matt. 28:18. ^h Hab. 2:4; ver. 16, 16. ⁱ Rom. 1:18.

complished; and he should not let his ignorance of what God has not revealed hinder him from receiving and treating as true what he has revealed.

11. As Jesus knew the truth of what he taught, all are bound to believe it, and to let it have its due influence over their hearts and lives.

20. The reason why men do not believe what Christ has taught is, that they love error, they do evil, and his truth on this account condemns them.

26. When sinners in great numbers come to the Saviour, some men, if it lessen the number who follow them, are greatly grieved. But good men, with right views, rejoice in every accession to the number of Christ's followers. They are delighted to see him increase, though it cause them to decrease.

30. It is a high spiritual attainment to be willing that others should excel us in usefulness and honor.

35. As all things pertaining to the souls of men are in the hands of Christ and at his disposal, the eternal life of those who believe in him, and the eternal death of those who continue to reject him, are certain.

CHAPTER IV.

1. How the Pharisees had heard; he was aware that the knowledge of his growing popularity excited their envy and ill-will, which he wished for the present to avoid.

Exact size of page and type.

Comfort Testaments

Consider what a comfort you have always taken with your New Testament and how much more comfort you got out of it when you were alone. Then consider how great a comfort any soldier boy who is always away from home and friends can get with a New Testament in his pocket. And how much more satisfactory is the NEW TESTAMENT WITH NOTES! It will smooth over many lonely hours and prove the means of salvation for many a man at the front. It just fits the pocket, kit or package. Bound in Silk Cloth. Price, 75 cents a copy, postpaid, for a short time. Better prices in quantities. Be sure to give every soldier lad or any one else that you know who is entering the service a NEW TESTAMENT WITH NOTES.

American Tract Society
Publishers and Booksellers
Park Avenue and 40th Street
New York

A M M

Vol. 75

No. 9

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

SEPTEMBER, 1917

"I AM THE VINE; YE ARE THE BRANCHES"

WE DECLARE UNTO YOU GLAD TIDINGS

BREACH THE GOSPEL TO EVERY CREATURE

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY, NEW YORK

HENRY E. FRITZ.

Our Honor Roll

On Our Honor Roll are placed the names of those who have been receiving the AMERICAN MESSENGER for the past fifty years or more. To this Roll of Honor we are pleased to add the name of Mr. Earl, of St. Louis, Mich., who recently sent a donation for the American Tract Society, and who wrote in part as follows:

"I highly appreciate the work the Society has done and is doing for the spread of the Gospel. I served three years and thirty-seven days in the Civil War. There I became interested with the Society's work and shared in the distribution of the Society's literature.

"The AMERICAN MESSENGER has been a regular visitor to my home ever since the Civil War closed."

Another name which we are glad to add to our Honor Roll is that of Mrs. Simms, of Boonton, N. J., who writes:

"We have taken the AMERICAN MESSENGER in our family ever since I was a child. My father subscribed for it until his death at seventy-five years, and I have taken in since then. I am nearly seventy-five years old. We cannot do without the paper."

If there are others into whose homes the AMERICAN MESSENGER has been going for fifty years or more, we should be delighted to hear from them so that we may place their names upon Our Honor Roll.

Faith's Anchors

BY REV. R. T. COIT.

IN the twenty-seventh chapter of Acts where Paul gives an account of his voyage to Rome, there is a very suggestive passage. It was midnight and a fearful storm was beating upon them while the ship was being driven here and there, and they were fearful lest at any moment they might be dashed upon the rocks and the ship be lost. "And fearing lest haply we should be cast upon rocky ground, they let go four anchors from the stern and wished for the day."

There come times to each one of us when some storm bursts suddenly upon us, when all is dark, and God seems to have forgotten us. We seem driven here and there by winds of fate and we fear shipwreck. It is well for us at such times to cast out the anchors of faith and patiently wait and hope for the day.

I wish to suggest some of these anchors which have been proven and found to hold in the fiercest storms that ever burst upon us. The first of these anchors is found in Matthew 7:11: "If ye being evil know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father in Heaven give good things to them that ask Him." I am my Father's child and nothing may happen to me except what He permits. My Father placed me here and He will sustain me while here and bring me out glorified in His own time.

The second anchor is, if possible, the strongest of all, a mighty anchor that requires a strong chain of faith. It is found in the First Epistle to the Romans 8:28: "All things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to His purpose." What a mighty anchor. As that goes down into life's troubled, stormy sea and lays hold on the rock of God's Word, it holds against every wind of adversity. He takes all our mistakes, all the machinations of the evil one, all sorrow, trouble and misfortune, and by His wonderful power makes them all to work together for the good of His own.

The third anchor is found in Psalm 17:15: "I shall be satisfied when I awake in His likeness." That is God's answer to the mystery of His Providence. God cannot explain to us the reason for many of His dealings with us, nor can He unfold all the wonderful realities of our Heavenly Home. Doubt ever raises

The American Tract Society

ITS OBJECT. The object of the American Tract Society is to diffuse a knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ, by means of the circulation of the word of Gospel truth on the printed page.

ITS FIELD. The field of the Society's operations is the world. Its mission is to all classes and conditions of people. It is interdenominational in character, evangelical in principle, and international in scope.

ITS WORK. Union Missionary Colportage is an important feature of the work of the Society. Its colporters labor among the immigrants in all sections of our own land, and in our island possessions. Its publications have been printed in 178 different languages. The grand total of all its issues from the home office alone, including books, periodicals, tracts, leaflets, etc., is over 797,000,000 copies.

ITS NEEDS. To maintain its force of consecrated workers and to furnish the supplies of Christian literature, urgently demanded in the home and foreign field, the Society needs generous donations from both large and small givers.

$1.00 will provide 1600 pages of English tracts, each of which may become a messenger of saving truth.

$15.00 will send 100 copies of "Manzanas de Oro," a beautiful Spanish weekly, to some Sunday school in Latin America for one year.

$50.00 will provide a tract in some foreign language for each of 4000 immigrants arriving at New York.

$100.00 will provide a cash appropriation for printing books or tracts at a foreign mission station.

$500.00 will provide for the support of a missionary colporter in the home land for a whole year.

$1000.00 invested in Christian literature and colporters to distribute it will render invaluable service in extending Christ's Kingdom.

Donations may be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer,

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY, Park Ave. and Fortieth St., New York, N. Y.

the question, Why? But faith replies: "Though He slay me yet will I trust Him;" and I shall be satisfied then, when all the clouds have rolled away.

Of the same kind is faith's fourth anchor, "What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter." A letter is just to hand from a friend who has passed through his first great sorrow, in the loss of a dear mother, and he asks why she should thus suffer, and why God who loves us should ask His children to go through such a trial? "Think it over and let me hear," he writes. Here is God's own answer in the words of Christ to Peter, as found in John 13:7. Some day He will take us by the hand and in words of wonderful tenderness and love explain to us why He permitted these fierce storms of sorrow, these sudden gusts of pain.

Hebrews 12:11 admits us to the fifth great anchor: "Now no suffering for the present seemeth to be joyous but grievous, nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness to those who are exercised thereby. Wherefore lift up the feeble hands." Ah, that word "Afterward!" Await God's time for the unfolding of His purpose, but let us take care that we are exercised by the suffering, pain or sorrow. Our hands are ever feeble in the service of the King. Let us lift them up today in a great and lasting devotion to our Father's cause as we yield Him the obedience of a wholly surrendered will. Only thus can we be fitted to be partakers of His holiness.

The sixth anchor is in that wonderful chapter of Revelation—Revelation 21:4: "And God Himself shall wipe away all tears from their eyes and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away." These light afflictions are but passing, as are all things earthly. But though passing they work for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. And in the day when God wipes all tears away, we shall see with undimmed sight His wonderful grace and love, and praise Him for those mysterious ways which now cause our eyes to be blinded with tears. We shall then triumph over our arch-enemy Death, and be enabled to shout, "Oh Grave, where is thy victory?"

The last anchor I shall mention is found in the latter part of the fourth chapter of the First Epistle to the Thessalonians. Here Christ tells us through Paul that He would not have us sorrow as those who have no hope, for "If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also who sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him." He is coming again, and the day is nigh at hand. "Let not your hearts be troubled." "I will come again," said Jesus. And in that glorious day when we shall see Him face to face, and meet once more those whom we have loved long since and lost awhile," faith shall be lost in sight and hope in fruition, the storms which so sorely tried us will be gone and we may lift anchor, for we shall be in the peaceful harbor of Heaven.

The Master is in the boat with us, though He may seem to be asleep. "I will be with thee and keep thee in all thy ways." For the strengthening of faith, God has drawn aside the curtain at times and shewed us even on this side of the grave, that there is a wonderful purpose of love, back of all His strange dealings. Jacob lived to see the day when he could thank God for the loss of Joseph and all those years of sorrow. Surely He that spared not His own Son but delivered him up for us all, will with Him freely give us all good things.

THE CHRISTIAN OBSERVER.

Why Books Are Needed in the Mission Field

Rev. J. L. Gerdine of Korea, has set forth recently the vital function of books in the furnishing of the Christian worker in the foreign mission field. What he has said is worthy of attention, since it confirms the high estimate which has been put upon the usefulness of Christian literature by other missionary leaders. He says:

"Our first deduction is that books are essential to the production of an epochal leader. Such a leader is needed in every Mission field, and he must come from among the people of the land. Before the church can take the place it should among the people, it must demonstrate that it can produce men qualified to move and lead a people.

"We need such a man or men in Korea. There are foundations yet to be laid and a mighty structure yet to be erected in the midst of this people, which result only awaits the development of Korean leadership in the church. We may well ask ourselves the question as to whether or not we have created conditions that will make the production of such leaders possible. We would probably be most discouraged when considering this, from the standpoint whether or not there is a literature in Korea to give the necessary mental equipment for such leadership.

"Our first thought is that books are necessary to prevent mental decline in the mentally furnished worker.

"How many who give promise of becoming useful workers fail at this point! Either they have not the books to read or have not acquired the habit of reading and hence retrograde in efficiency. We are giving much thought and attention to higher education for the youth of our Korean church, but do we not need now to look further and raise the question as to what provision we are making to keep our graduates up to a proper intellectual standard after they shall have finished their college courses?"

"In the next place, books are necessary to prevent the spread of false doctrines throughout the Christian community. Among the educated Christians there are those who will refuse to allow their mental powers to atrophy. Rather than do this they will buy and read books which are not sound and wholesome. In the schools a taste for acquiring knowledge has been formed. This taste they will satisfy if possible. Even if Christian literature is not available there are on the market other publications which are often found to be interesting and mentally stimulating. A friend told me recently of an especially bright young man of one of the most prominent families in Korea who, after being active and efficient in church work, had discontinued church attendance. It was found that he was reading translations of the works of German critics. Such a young man would have found the mental food he desired in Christian literature of the conservative school if such had been obtainable. Such reading would have satisfied not only his mental taste but would have deepened his Christian faith. It is said that there is so little of this type of literature, even in Japan, that many, even among Japanese Christians, have the impression that there is no scholarly defense for conservative Christian teaching.

"In the last place, books are necessary for a growing power in the knowledge and use of the Bible. It is popular to say that the Bible is its own best commentary but this is only a half truth. There can be no substitute for direct contact with the Bible itself, but if the Bible student does not have proper help he must necessarily leave unanswered many questions that arise during the course of his study."

Her Monument

Alice Freeman Palmer, the president of Wellesley College, who did so much to advance the higher education of young women, lived a really wonderful life. Yet it was not a life whose story could easily be written. In his introduction to her biography her husband says: "There was in her a wastefulness like that of the blossoming tree. 'Why wilt thou,' I used to say, 'give all this time to speaking to uninstructed audiences, to endless discussions and anxious interviews? You would exhaust yourself less in writing books of lasting consequence. At present you are building no monument. When you are gone people will ask who you were, and nobody will be able to say.' But I always received the same indifferent answer: 'Well, why should they say? I am trying to make girls wiser and happier. Books don't help much toward that; it is people that count. You want to put yourself into people; they touch other people; these, others still, and so you go on working forever.'"

Just how she felt, just what she meant to do for her girls Mrs. Palmer expressed still more clearly in one of her letters: "Looking on and into them, I said: 'I will try to be a friend to them all, and put all that is truest and sweetest, sunniest and strongest, that I can gather into their lives. I will give, too, all that the years have brought to my own soul. God help me to give what He gave—myself—and make that self worth something to somebody; teach me to love all He has loved, for the sake of the infinite possibilities locked up in the human soul.'"

What Counts

It isn't what you mean to do a week ahead,
It isn't what you know you'll gain
When all annoyances have fled;
It isn't what you dreamed and planned—
Such hopes are but a phantom band—
The day's work counts.

The day's work counts
It isn't much,
The gain of those few painful hours;
But be content if there is shown
Some product of those sacred powers
Which guide each mind, uphold each hand,
Strive with the best at your command—
The day's work counts.

The American Messenger

"Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Luke 2:10

Vol. 75. No. 9

SEPTEMBER, 1917

Copyright, 1917, by American Tract Society.

Terms: 50 cents per annum
Single copy, 5 cents

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

PUBLISHED MONTHLY

BY THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

OFFICERS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President.

JOHN HENRY JOWETT, M.A., D.D., Vice-President.

JUDSON SWIFT, D.D., General Secretary.

LOUIS TAG, Treasurer.

REV. HENRY LEWIS, Ph.D., Recording Secretary.

All of the above-named officers should be addressed at Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Rev. David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.

Rev. Charles Carroll Albertson, D.D.

Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.

Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D.

Rev. George Ernest Merriam.

Entered at the Post Office in New York as second-class matter.

The Fall Campaign

Rally Day comes in the month of September to remind us that the most important campaign that we face is not the struggle of contending armies in Europe or Mesopotamia or any other point on the present battlefield but the campaign for the upbuilding of Christian character and the development of the spiritual life. This is a world-wide campaign, and in it every Christian man and woman should take an active and devoted part.

We look naturally to the Christian forces of our land to lead in this great spiritual campaign, and the significance of Rally Day is that it summons the churches and Sunday Schools to renewed endeavor and larger zeal in the effort to advance the progress of the Kingdom of Christ.

The opportunities for Christian service at home and abroad were never so great as they are at the present moment, and for this reason the Church of Christ should rally to its appointed tasks with greater earnestness than ever before.

Great bodies of men are being mobilized in our country for military service, and the presence of these men in camps and cantonments offers to Christian workers a fine opportunity both for social service and for evangelistic effort.

The forces of our country are being rapidly organized for national service of every description. It is also the imperative duty of the Christian churches to organize their work so as to secure the largest possible degree of efficiency. The call of Rally Day is to meet this situation and to bring the churches to a keen realization of the splendid opportunities for Christian service that are everywhere present.

A Congress on Church Efficiency

An important conference is scheduled to be held at Pittsburgh, Pa., October 1-4, 1917. The watchword for this gathering is "Mobilize the Churches for community service," and its object is to promote efficiency in Christian work.

Among the subjects that will be discussed at this Inter-Church Congress are, "Community Evangelism," "Social Service," "World Evangelism," "Religious Education," "International Justice and Goodwill," and other timely topics.

Particular attention will be given to the subject of the organization of Inter-Church Federations, and there will be a report on "Work for Churches near Army Training Camps."

The subject of Church Efficiency is a very vital one. The statistics that are given concerning the results of church work in many of the denominations reveal the undeniable fact that there are many individual churches that are lamentably inefficient.

A church that during the course of an entire year cannot record a single addition on confession of faith shows a lack of evangelistic power. In other words, such a church is spiritually inefficient. A church that cannot record any gifts for the extension of the Kingdom of God through missionary agencies shows a lack of zeal for the propagation of the faith. Such a church is also spiritually inefficient.

By these and by other tests, it is easy to discover a widespread condition of spiritual inefficiency among the churches. Such a condition calls for remedial measures, and Christians everywhere should seek to discover ways and means by which this spiritual inefficiency may be eliminated, and the churches brought into a condition to render effective Christian service.

Information, preparation, and consecration are three elemental requisites for church efficiency. Let churches make themselves better informed concerning the needs of the community about them and of the world at large. Let them make more adequate preparation for the great tasks of community uplift and world evangelization that confront them. Above all things else, let the churches consecrate themselves more devotedly to the work to which Christ has called them.

By fulfilling these conditions the churches will help to make themselves truly efficient. Every inefficient church is a drag upon Christianity and constitutes a serious obstacle to the progress of the Kingdom.

The Inter-Church Congress to be held next month in Pittsburgh should prove of great service in stimulating larger spiritual efficiency, and it is to be hoped that many churches will be represented in this important gathering.

A Unique Book for Prisoners

The American Tract Society has just published an unusual book, prepared by its General Secretary, Rev. Judson Swift, D.D.

This book is entitled, "Looking Forward Day by Day," and it is designed to minister to the spiritual needs of those who are in prison. There is a section for each day in the month, and every section contains a selected verse of Scripture, a prayer, a meditation, a helpful quotation, and a Scripture Reading. In addition there are prayers for use on special occasions, such as "On going to trial," "Before sentence," "After sentence," and on the "Day of release."

Colonel Roosevelt has written the Foreword for this volume, in which he says:

"I am glad that the American Tract Society is publishing this little book. Christianity alone is the religion of comfort for the weary and heavy laden and of hope for the errant. We must not get sentimental about ourselves, and think that we shall be relieved from all punishment for the wrongs we have done; but, on the other hand, if there is one lesson that Christianity teaches it is that, although each one of us stumbles now and then, yet if only we resolve once more to turn into the straight path, no matter how much we have stumbled in the past, there will be a light to keep our feet from stumbling in the future."

The publication of this admirable and unique little volume fills a long-felt need, for Christian workers engaged in evangelistic efforts among prisoners have felt very deeply the lack of just such a booklet as this.

The prison chaplains who have seen advance copies of this beautiful book have expressed the warmest appreciation of its value. Rev. Thomas R. Taylor, Chaplain of the New Jersey State Prison at Trenton, writes:

"Allow me to commend 'Looking Forward Day by Day' as most perfectly fulfilling and supplying chaplains with a help that they have greatly needed. I know nothing to which I can compare it."

It is proposed to circulate a large number of copies of this book throughout the prisons of our land, and chaplains who would like to distribute it free of charge among the prisoners under their care are invited to apply for the supply that they need. A retail price of 15 cents has been fixed for single copies of the book, and Christian workers who wish to share with the Society in the expense of circulating it may secure copies in quantities on the half grant basis, i. e., at half the retail price.

The Day of Prayer for Schools

It has been correctly stated that America will mobilize two great armies in the month of September. One will be an army of over 500,000 soldiers of the new National Army, and the other will be the army of over 20,000,000 children who will take their places in the schools of the land.

This vast army of school children will mobilize in almost a day. It will be brought together, not by the sound of the bugle, but by the ringing of the school bell. It will prepare not for the pursuit of war but for the acquisition of knowledge.

Not since the days of the Civil War have the school children of our country stood in more need of Christian help than now. They need our prayers and watchful interest. Many are in danger of losing the opportunity to secure an education, owing to the pressure of work in agriculture and manufacturing. Predatory interests demand the repeal of laws against child labor as a patriotic act. There is grave danger of an increase of youthful crime due to the lack of parental care when fathers are at war and mothers at work.

There are therefore more than the usual cogent reasons why the Second Sabbath in September (September 9, 1917) should be observed as the Day of Prayer for Schools. The observance of this day was suggested by the National Reform Association fifteen years ago. It has been approved by many religious bodies, and is more and more widely recognized each year, because at this time the schools are opening, and it is realized that the school term cannot be better begun than by praying for the children and youth and considering their moral and spiritual as well as their intellectual needs.

✻ ✻ ✻

Christian Endeavor Progress

Various items of news have been recently received which show the continued prosperity and steady growth of the Christian Endeavor movement.

A few weeks ago the corner-stone of the handsome building which is to serve as Christian Endeavor International Headquarters was laid in Boston, Mass. Dr. Francis E. Clark, the beloved founder of the Christian Endeavor Society, laid the corner-stone of this important structure, and fitting addresses were made by members of the Board of Trustees and national officers.

At a conference of the trustees and field secretaries of the United Society of Christian Endeavor which was held at Winona, Ind., complete and far-reaching plans for the coming two years were carefully formed. The organization of "Christian Endeavor Alumni" was set on foot. It was decided to aim to enroll a million in the Christian Endeavor Army of Universal Patriotic Service. Timely themes for emphasis in Christian Endeavor papers and union meetings were fixed for each month of the year.

The Christian Endeavor spirit is illustrated by tidings that come from abroad. Two British Christian Endeavor unions, so adversely affected by the war that they were on the point of giving up their work, we are told, have chosen as their motto, "Fear God and Work Hard," and have resolved to continue their work. A Christian Endeavor worker on a British troop-ship won twenty men for Christ in a single morning at the wharves.

Do You Really Want a Revival?

BY REV. HOWARD W. POPE

GOOD many people think they want a revival when really they do not. They do not crave a real spiritual refreshing for themselves, nor are they especially anxious for the conversion of others. They have no real soul hunger for God. They cannot honestly say with David, "As the heart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee O God. My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God." What they do desire is the enjoyment of some of the secondary benefits which flow from a revival. For instance, a woman once expressed a desire for the conversion of her husband. When she was questioned closely as to her motive, it appeared that all she had in mind was that if her husband were a Christian, he would go with her to prayer meeting on mid-week evening, and she would not have to go alone. She had no concern about his lost soul, nor was she troubled that he was still living in rebellion against God, but she simply wanted a companion to go with her to meeting.

I was once invited to conduct services in a church. Upon my arrival I found that the church itself had had nothing to say about the meetings. The pastor realized that his hold upon the church was failing and unless something was done to produce results, his stay in that town would be very short. For that reason, he wanted revival meetings held. Some of his most spiritual members said to me at the outset, "On general principles we should desire to have these meetings succeed, but if it means that we must put up with that man for six months more, we cannot honestly desire success for the meetings."

Sometimes one church is jealous of another church and is willing to do anything in order to attract the crowds and gain an advantage over that church. Of course, one cannot expect that God will bless evangelistic services which are inaugurated under such circumstances and which have behind them motives that are purely worldly and selfish. On the other hand, where a revival is really desired by God's people, no power on earth can prevent them from succeeding. The great Ulster revivals in Ireland, which mark an epoch in the spiritual history of Europe and America, began in the following way. A young Christian was hungry for spiritual fellowship and having no like-minded comrade, he began to pray that God would give him a yokefellow. In a little time, God gave him such a friend, and the two began to pray daily that God would enlarge their circle. In a little time, their daily meetings were greatly enlarged and the Spirit of God was poured out upon the whole community. Then the revival spread into adjoining towns and all over Ireland, and in fact, it went around the world.

A revival is not a thing of chance. If it has come, it is because someone has set in motion spiritual forces which make a revival inevitable.

On one occasion, when Dr. Lyman Beecher was pastor of the church at Litchfield, Conn., a remarkable work of grace occurred. Its coming was sudden and unexpected. There had been no extra meetings, nor were there any indications of special interest such as usually precedes an outpouring of the Holy Spirit. No one could account for this strange manifestation of divine power. When the interest had somewhat subsided, Dr. Beecher began to take up his regular pastoral work again, and called, among other places, at the house of a sick man who lived in the outskirts of the parish. The shut-in asked many questions about the revival and the various people who had been converted, and then he told his pastor the following story:

He said that as he lay on his bed he had felt greatly depressed at the thought of his utter uselessness. Finally it occurred to him that he could at least pray for people if he could not visit and talk with them. He began to pray for his next door neighbor, and then for the one who lived in the next house, and the next, and so on, until he had prayed his way to the end of the street, taking in every family, and praying for every individual as far as he knew them. Then he took another street, and another, until he prayed his way all through the parish. Then he began again, and prayed his way through the parish a second time; and then came the revival which he was expecting, but of which the church and pastor had had no intimation, and for which, indeed, they do not appear to have been responsible.

When Dr. Beecher heard that recital, he said: "Now I know where that revival had its earthly origin. It was in the sick-room of that godly man."

Our Saviour has an intense concern for souls. During His earthly life he worked so zealously that He reminded His disciples of the passage which says, "The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up." He arose early in the morning to pray; indeed, He often prayed all night, we may believe. He wept over Jerusalem; He even sweat blood under the crushing weight of His personal responsibility.

Christ expects His church to share this concern for souls with Him. The church is the bride of Christ and the mother of God's children. A husband and wife ought to think alike and feel alike. Their interests are identical and their hearts should throb as one. Unless the bride of Christ shares with her Lord in this concern for souls there will be no spiritual children born, for children are not born of one parent, in either the natural or the spiritual world. Indeed, it would be a calamity if children should be born under such conditions. You might as well put a babe in the arms of a dead mother as to put converts into the care of a cold, unsympathizing church. Those who have experience know that the hardest thing to accomplish in revival work is to secure an atmosphere which is favorable to the new birth, and after that the work is very easy.

On the other hand, where there is real concern for souls, conversions will occur.

A wife in England resolved to pray for her husband's conversion every day for a year. At the end of that time he was apparently as far from Christ as ever. She decided that she would try it six months longer. At the end of that time her husband was still indifferent. She was discouraged, and thought she might as well give up; but, when she faced squarely the question of giving up as lost the one whom God had manifestly entrusted to her spiritual care, she said to herself: "No, I will never give him up. I will pray for him as long as I live."

That very day, when her husband came home to dinner, he passed her in the hall and went up-stairs. She waited for him until she became alarmed, and then went up to his room. There was her husband on his knees, crying to God for mercy. He became an earnest Christian worker.

"As soon as Zion travailed she brought forth children." Let us not look for the twentieth century revival until we have become revived ourselves, for conviction of sin will not come to others until a concern for souls has come to us.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTION

EDGAR W. WORK, D.D.

GOD SPEAKING IN THE WHIRLWIND

BY

REV. EDGAR WHITAKER WORK, D. D.

Pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian Church, New York City

WE are told of Thomas Carlyle that late at night in London, England, he sometimes read the Book of Job. Now and again he would go to the window of his study, and look out upon the silent city so full of sorrow and sin, and then he would return to his reading of Job. There was something, apparently in the stormy spirit of this book, that fitted the mood of his own soul, and that helped him to understand the world with its pains and problems. One who reads the writings of Carlyle attentively would say that he has caught the spirit of Job. His very ruggedness, his heroic attitude toward life, his broken but persistent faith—all these things remind us of the suffering man of God.

There are times in our experience when we are greatly helped and strengthened by what may be called the stormy element of the Bible, its appeal to the heroic within us, its summons to persevere in faith even through pain and trouble. How often we feel as Job must have felt when the Lord answered him "out of the whirlwind," and said, "Gird up thy loins now like a man."

The Bible has something for every mood of the soul, for the hours of gladness as well as for the hours of gloom. There is "a time to weep and a time to laugh; a time to mourn and a time to dance." For all the varied experiences of life, whether gay or grave, the Bible has words of wise counsel. It is a myriad-sided Book. But we are impressed above all else with the frequent approach of the Word of God to our troubled life. God is always speaking to men in His Word out of the whirlwind. In this sense the Bible is a stormy book. How often in all the history of Israel the Word of the Lord came to the people through cloud and storm. "The Lord hath his way in the whirlwind and in the storm," declared the prophet Nahum, "and the clouds are the dust of his feet." God has many easy and quiet ways, and many mild measures. Often He speaks with a still small voice. Again He comes in thunders and lightnings, in whirlwinds and storms. It is worthy of notice that many of the prophets received their messages to the accompaniment of storm and whirlwind. When the Word of the Lord came to Ezekiel the priest in the land of the Chaldeans by the River Chebar, he says, "I looked and behold a whirlwind came out of the north, a great cloud and a fire." Symbols all of them of Jehovah's presence!

Remember with what symphonies of storm the law was given—"thunders and lightnings and a thick cloud upon the mount, and the voice of the trumpet exceeding loud, so that all the people that was in the camp trembled." Go back to the days of an early patriarch. When Jehovah revealed Himself to Noah, it was in the flood of great waters. The fountains of the great deep were broken up." "The windows of heaven were opened." There was Moses whom God called to be a leader of His people. Was there not whirlwind enough in the hours of His call? Were there not stress and storm indeed in the hard and bitter bondage, in the tale of bricks without straw? And one day, as the shepherd walked on the slopes of the mountain, tending his sheep, a fire broke out at his very feet. Then God spake to him. It is often so. We are going on quietly in our usual way, and suddenly God comes in some whirlwind or fire of life.

Remember another man whom God called—Gideon. There was whirlwind in his day, too. It was the swarm of the Midianites that represented the storm to him. They came up as grasshoppers for multitude, and left no sustenance for sheep or ox or ass. A ruthless band were they that feared neither God nor man. Then suddenly out of this storm there came a call to a man. A man named Gideon was threshing wheat behind the wine press to hide it from the Midianites. And an angel of the Lord came and sat under an oak tree. Imagine that! An angel sitting under a tree. But God wants us to understand how near He is to us—how near is glory to the dust. He spoke to Gideon out of the whirlwind of need. Do not forget Nehemiah in his snug position in the palace at Shushan as cup-bearer of the king. One day word reached him that the walls of Jerusalem were broken down and the gates were burned with fire. Then Nehemiah, "sat down and wept and mourned and fasted and prayed." Was that all? No, that was not all. The next time he went in before the king to bear the wine, he had a sad countenance. The result was a commission to go and re-build the wasted city of his fathers. It was the whirlwind of desolation that brought him the Lord's call.

Oh, this Bible is wonderful! Its stormy scenes remind us of our own life, for no book is so close to life as the Word of God. Its heroic men and women, too, ever inspire us with strength and courage. Emerson was right when he said that the search after great men is one of the chief occupations of the mind, young or old. The Bible is the literature of power for one reason, because it shows God speaking to men out of the whirlwind. There is no mawkish sentimentality here, no lily-fingered helplessness. When men have something to do, they are told expressly to go and do it.

Thus it is that the Bible is a book of action, even of battle. Men say, how is it that the Bible contains the story of so many battlefields? The simplest answer is just this—there was work that had to be done. Suppose that there were no battles for God in the Bible. Suppose that there were only exhortations to men to stand up for God, but no actual contending for God by men of heroic mold. It would be a different book. It would be lacking in the message of the whirlwind. If the Bible does not hesitate to paint battlefields, to tell the story now and then of calamity and catastrophe, we realize at least that God must speak at times in terms of storm and trouble.

There are occasions when soft tones are of no avail; the message must sound forth out of the heart of the storm.

Everywhere the Bible puts its stamp of approval upon the magnificence of human courage. If you want "companionship with the heroes of the race," you will find it here. Times out of mind men have talked of the labors of Hercules until these have become a classic symbol for the conquest of difficulty. But not more inspiring are these labors of Hercules than the toils of Samson, the struggles of David, the victories of Nehemiah, the courage of Joseph, and the suffering of Job.

The distinctive thing about courage in the Bible is its moral quality. God is speaking through the strong actions of men. David's wild courage as a freebooter carries us back in memory to Samuel and his anointing horn of oil. Daniel defies the edict of the king, but not without having his windows open toward Jerusalem. Nehemiah's boldness is explained by the fact that he "prayed to the God of heaven." Gideon's courageous enterprise dates back to the threshing-floor and the rock where his offering was consumed, and to his wet and dry fleece. Joseph's story is not rightly understood except in the light of heroic faith. And Job's suffering has its rightful interpretation in the light of a trustful spirit.

The most pathetic, yet the most impressive, instance of human courage ever recorded is written down in the Old Testament. No wonder the English laureate Tennyson thought it worthy to be embodied in a poem. We refer to the story of how Rizpah watched over the bodies of her slain sons, spreading her sackcloth on a rock—mind you on a rock! "from the beginning of harvest until the water dropped upon them out of heaven," lest wild beasts might prey upon the bodies of her dead—has ever such a beautiful picture been painted of the moral courage of motherhood?

We are thinking of this scene to-day when all over the land mothers are saying farewell to their sons, with tear-stained faces, but with unfaltering courage of the heart. It is woman who suffers most in war. Hers is the heart that must make the greatest sacrifice. The world has millions of brave Rizpahs to-day. May the Father's love and comfort keep them in His perfect peace. And if any of them are called to mourn over their dead, may He inspire them nevertheless with the faith and courage of believing souls, and may they not fail to hear the voice of Jehovah in the whirlwind of their sorrow.

When men turn to the Bible in the great crises of life they find that it never fails to speak a strong word. The Lord answers men in their need out of the whirlwind. When Cromwell and his Ironsides saw the mists lifting over Dunbar, he sang his hope of victory in the words of Scripture, "Let God arise, and let his enemies be scattered. Like as the smoke vanisheth, so shalt thou drive them away." We like to feel that our courage is God-given. We rejoice to know that God is with us in the heart of the storm.

When God speaks to us out of the whirlwind He is telling us that life is something more than play. There are times when life seems to grow appallingly frivolous. There is no seriousness, no dignity of purpose with men. There is a great lack of earnestness and of moral desire. At such times life moves wholly on planes of ease and pleasure, and men ask, "What can I get out of life?" rather than "What can I give to life?" Then the whirlwind comes, and God speaks to men saying, "Gird up thy loins now like a man." This is the moral meaning of every national crisis. God is calling us away from our sloth and indifference, our easy-going ways of life, into a great and solemn seriousness of soul. Surely there can be no mistaking the moral call of the present hour. Would that every young man who answers the call of duty to-day may feel in his heart the reality and depth of the summons. For him now as never before—"life is real, life is earnest." And not only is this true of those who go forth to battle: it is true of all citizens. We are all called of God out of this whirlwind to greater seriousness of purpose. If we have been playing with life in any manner, if we have not before met the real issues of life, in those solemn hours of destiny we are called to face life's reality with its solemn rôle of Providence and destiny. God grant that we may hear Him speaking to us thus about life itself out of the whirlwind.

And God's call out of the whirlwind tells us another thing—that life has much struggle and many a problem. The message of the storm to us is that nothing really valuable can be obtained and held without conflict. Men need this call of the whirlwind to rebuke their complacency and their self-satisfaction. We grow so accustomed to our blessings, that we come to believe that they can never be taken away from us. We live in the midst of wonderful gifts of nature and Providence, and seldom trouble our minds to think of how precious these gifts are and how much we should be impoverished if we were to lose them. Then suddenly the whirlwind comes and we hear God speaking to us and telling us that the blessings we have held dear in the past are worth contending for.

It is so of our precious boon of liberty. We have grown pathetically accustomed to being a free people. We have folded our hands in ease and have gone on enjoying our freedom, with scarce a thought of any danger. But now the whirlwind is upon us, and God is calling us to contend for what we believe, even to fight for our sacred possessions. It is an awakening call, a startling summons. The cry out of the heart of the whirlwind is no mild-voiced cry. It is the startling cry of Providence to those who have grown sleepy and indolent, and have ceased to watch over the precious things of life—"Awake thou that sleepest." There are, let us believe, awakened nations to-day, and multitudes of awakened souls, who know that they must fight, else they cannot keep the valued gifts which God has bestowed upon them. God is arousing them by the whirlwind.

There is then a mighty invitation to personal consecration in the call of the whirlwind. The poet Tennyson is said to have had a great admiration for the Italian patriot Garibaldi—he of whom these words were written,

"That gentle hero who
Dethroned an unjust King and then withdrew
To tend his farm."

One day Tennyson was visiting Garibaldi in his retirement—his son relates the incident in the biography of his father—and during the visit the old man stretched out his wounded leg in the presence of his visitor and exclaimed, "There's a campaign in me yet." The patriot had not ceased to feel the personal call to heroic service. He was ready even in old age to "do his bit."

"Gird up thy loins now like a man." The whirlwind must not pass over your head leaving you the same as before. There is something for you to do. There is work to be undertaken. There is duty to be done. This is the practical call of the whirlwind. If men would only learn to regard their sorrows in this light as calls of God to deeper consecration, how many precious gifts of the whirlwind's power might be scattered upon this earth.

Every sorrow of humanity, every loss and pain, every crisis in this world's life—the voice of God is in every such whirlwind. Our troubles should make us more sensitive to God's presence and power, and more quick to hear His voice. Let us but trust Him in our calamities, and He will make us stronger and better men. No more devout prayer of the heart can be cherished than just this—that out of the scourge and storm of war there may arise a great multitude of men with their hearts alive with God's presence, and their loins girded anew for His service.

And so it is sublimely, beautifully true that God reveals Himself in the whirlwind. A child went with his father one day to a high mountain top, and while they were there a mighty storm of thunder and lightning came. In the midst of the wonderful display of power the child cried out to his father—"Father, this is like the doxology?" It was the revelation of God in the storm that impressed the child mind.

Are we looking for God in the storm? Are we listening for His voice out of the whirlwind? Are we discovering Him anew in the darkness of these tragic hours in the world's history? One who sat for days in the presence of death, and has since gone down to death, wrote such words as these about the impression of a soul in danger—"A man couldn't sit in a trench hour after hour, and day after day, with shells whizzing through the air over his head, or bursting thunderously ten yards from him, without trying to get some grip of his mental attitude towards them." Yes, not merely his attitude toward whizzing shells, but toward God Himself. A man could not, he goes on, see his comrades falling about him without defining his views of life and death and duty and destiny. The whirlwind teaches men to trust, and believe, and pray, as well as act.

God is revealing Himself to-day as never before to the world. Underneath the crash of world-wreckage, the alarming sound of the old order that passes away to give place to the new, the lightning of human hatred, and the thunder of human fear—underneath all this there is the still small voice. God is speaking in the whirlwind.

The Magnet

BY ANNE PORTER JOHNSON.

BACK in the dear, happy days a little boy rambled in his play up and down the purple hills, over the daisied meadows, across the swishing brook, and through the woods of the old farm, with never a thought of what it all really meant to him.

Each morning he watched the sun roll up over the deep, dark woods at the back of the white cottage. He fancied that the great King of Day, from his glowing chariot, waved him a morning greeting. The two were great friends.

Every stone and shrub of the hills he knew well. As he ran over the meadows, the flowers laughed with him. The gay little brook tumbled frantically to meet him. The friendly trees of the woods took him in their arms and held him close.

The great red barn always was coaxing him. The wide, graveled path loved the patter of his nimble feet. The lilac tree and the rose bush held out to him their choicest blooms.

In the evening time he leaned against the pasture bars and watched until his royal friend of the dawn, disappearing over the earth's farthest rim, called a good-night message to him.

It was home.

As the years went by the boy began to wonder what lay beyond the hill. One day something called! It set his blood tingling—he must follow. He bade good-bye to the old home. As he turned for a farewell look at the precious scenes of his childhood the fairest picture he saw was the face of his mother as she stood in the doorway of the white cottage.

Until he said "Good-bye" he had not known that his mother was so beautiful. Now in the parting hour he knew—he saw the tender eyes and the yearning smile.

That day as he closed the little gate and turned to go he did not dream that the road on which he had started would stretch away and away so far! How could he know that his eyes would long for the familiar scenes and that his heart would ache for the fireside story and song? How was he to know that the voice would coax and coax, always leading farther and farther from home?

On and on he went until he had roamed the earth's most distant lands. But always the vision of a sweet face went with him—sometimes in the center of the picture, sometimes in the background, but always present. It seemed to be the one thing never missing.

After years of absence the longing to see that face overcame him. He turned and set his face toward home.

And so one day he stands by the little gate and waits, with a clutching fear at his heart. Will the old place know him? The hills, the meadows, the brook, the woods, the lilac and the white cottage are there. But over all the old-time beauty and glory there lies a mystic spell, a change—the crafty sorcery of the years. Oh, will the dear scenes give him greeting, or is he a stranger to them, only a passerby resting a moment by the little gate?

He walks on softly beneath the old locusts, between the potted geraniums on the step. He stands at the door with the fear still at his heart. What will he find inside? Is it home now, the same as then?

The door swings open, and he sees his mother's face! Ah, all fear and questioning are gone now—it is home, it is home!

Invocation

BY LOUIS M. GRICE

*Almighty God, to thee we raise
A passionate voice in prayer and praise;
To Thee our wayward hearts incline;
Illumine our souls with light divine;
Oh, teach us, Lord, the cross to bear,
The cruel crown of thorns to wear,
A host of human ills to take
Without complaint, for Thy dear sake.*

*Before us place the shining shield
Of Faith, and may we bravely wield
The flaming sword of Truth, to slay
The frowning doubts that bar the way.
Oh, lead us through the cheerless night
Up to the land of living light,
And unto Thee whom we adore,
Shall be the glory, evermore.*

PRINTED PREACHERS

Reaching the Lumber Men

One of the distinctive features of missionary colportage is that it reaches people who are living far away from any Christian church and brings to their door the message of Gospel truth which could not reach them in any other way.

The picture that appears on this page illustrates this fact. It shows us a remote and isolated lumber camp visited by Rev. Francis E. Smith, a colporter evangelist of the American Tract Society, who has gone to hundreds of homes in out-of-way places and has left with them the message of salvation in the form of Christian tracts and books.

Concerning the value of this kind of work, Rev. August W. Reinhard, Superintendent of Colportage for the Western and Northwestern States, writes:

"The picture of the MacDonald Post Office is a typical illustration of the work of Colporter Smith, indeed of all the colporters on the Pacific coast, who visit thousands of such remote places. No class of people are more appreciative of the American Tract Society's colportage work than are these lonely people.

"Several years ago I received a letter from a woman living in the Cascade Mountains, thirty miles from the nearest post office. The letter showed marks of tears. She thanked the Society for the visit of its colporter, who held a cottage prayer meeting in her home, and supplied her with Christian books that she was glad to procure."

In an Isolated Region of Virginia

Rev. J. M. Carter, a missionary colporter of the American Tract Society who is scattering printed preachers in the form of Christian books and tracts among the people of the South, writes:

"This will tell you that I am about my Master's work. I find that the people are just as anxious for our Christian literature as they were years ago. In those isolated places where no railroad runs and where hundreds of families dwell, they seldom meet an opportunity to purchase good, wholesome literature, but your humble servant finds a hearty welcome in their midst.

"Here I have an opportunity to do my best work for I find so much need. Many people came seven and eight miles on foot just to hear me talk for one hour. This will tell you how great need there is for this work of spreading the Glad Tidings among the humble people of this region."

In New York State

Rev. Samuel Goddard, a missionary colporter of the American Tract Society in the Empire State, thus records his recent activities:

"My field of labor has been in Buffalo and the adjoining cities and villages for some forty miles around. The reception I have met at the various homes I have visited has been very satisfactory. I have distributed, by sale and grant, 160 books, 150 mottoes, 360 tracts, 175 cards, and 420 periodicals, representing a total value of $86.00.

"My visit to the Buffalo Orphan Asylum and the grants made there were thankfully received.

MACDONALD POST OFFICE AT A LUMBER CAMP IN CLALLAM COUNTY, WASH.

My visits to the churches and Sunday Schools were also well received.

"One day I called upon a lady who has taken the AMERICAN MESSENGER for many years. Here I met a missionary from China, who spoke of the great amount of good accomplished by the American Tract Society. We had a helpful season of prayer together.

"During my visit to the city of Batavia I called one day at a house on Main Street. Here an aged gentleman came to the door. I handed him one of the Society's tracts and asked him if he would like to purchase a book. He took a copy of 'Beulah Land.' Then he said, 'I am a retired minister, but it gives me very great pleasure to meet one of the colporters of the American Tract Society, for I have heard my people speak of your work in this city and also in some of the villages. You are doing a wonderful work for the Divine Master, and may God's richest blessing be upon you and speed you on in the blessed task of leading many to Jesus Christ.'"

In West China

Despite the civil and political turmoil that has prevailed in China for some years past the work of spreading the Good News of salvation through Christ by means of printed preachers in the form of Christian tracts and books in the vernacular has gone steadily forward, and some interesting facts concerning the work are found in recent communications from the West China Religious Tract Society, whose headquarters are at Chungking.

Rev. H. J. Howden, who has long served as General Secretary of this Society, has been recalled to pastoral duties further inland, and his place has been taken by Rev. W. L. L. Knipe, who has devoted himself especially to the literary side of missionary work. In a recent letter Rev. Mr. Knipe gives these facts concerning the use of the cash appropriation sent by the American Tract Society to the West China Religious Tract Society:

"Your appropriation is put in a Special Fund for Broadcast Grants, and is used for making grants of sheet tracts to missionaries for distribution on their fields. During a period of nine months, by your aid, we have sent out from the head depot 285,000 sheet tracts to sixty missionaries, and perhaps nearly half as much again from the sub-depot at Chentu. I question whether you could lay out your money to better advantage in any other of the Mission fields.

"A missionary writes to us as follows, 'The grant you so kindly gave me is nearly gone, so I am writing to ask you to kindly supply more—a good thumping lot, please, say 50,000 Broadcast Tracts. I am indeed grateful to you and all the other friends who furnish us with the necessary munitions for our Christian warfare.' But the state of our funds enabled us to send this missionary only 15,000 instead of the 50,000 tracts for which he asked.

"A Province-Wide Evangelistic Campaign is being planned for next year. Books and tracts are needed in large numbers, first for training personal workers, second, for widespread distribution among non-Christians, and, third, for the follow-up work among inquirers. The list of tracts needed includes about fifty varieties, and most of them are wanted in 10,000 lots. We shall be glad of all the help that the American Tract Society can give us in providing for this special literature, as well as for the ordinary grants of sheet tracts.

"Our total circulation for the last ten months is a record one, being 1,582,719 copies. It very nearly reaches the total output for the first ten years of this Society's existence. This is the nineteenth year since the Society's formation, and in spite of political troubles and disturbances the work continues to grow apace. Thanks be to God! We trust that you will be enabled to help us to extend further our borders."

Windows Open Toward Jerusalem

By Pearl Howard Campbell

ONE of the most beautiful of the Old Testament stories appealing alike to old and young of every generation is that of Daniel. A Jewish captive in an alien land, raised to a high position in a luxurious and idolatrous court, he is true to the faith of his fathers and unflinching in his loyalty to the one God of Israel.

There is no hint in the story of who his mother was and we do not even know her name. Yet she shines forth in the life of her son, until it is easy to picture her character. Wise as Deborah, brave as Esther, and showing the same tenderness and fidelity as Ruth, such must have been this woman of the Old Dispensation who gave her own sterling qualities to her son. It is impossible to think of her otherwise than as deeply religious, instilling into the mind of the little lad at her knee those practices and customs which unconsciously strengthened and fortified him for the test that came later. The atmosphere of that Jewish home must have been like that of the Alpine valleys, clear and pure and bracing.

Religion in Daniel's home must have been not something to be manifested only on the Sabbath, but a matter of daily, yes, even hourly concern. The boy Daniel must have seen in those about him the beautiful example of consecrated parenthood, firm in discipline, wise, yet tenderly affectionate toward the children that were "an heritage of the Lord."

How sadly homes like this are needed in the present day, when family worship, family prayers and family church attendance seem in danger of being submerged beneath the almost universal desire for amusement.

The story of Daniel is valuable not only for its historical interest, but for its wonderful moral teaching. It shows how a thoroughly religious man may keep the unsullied purity of his soul amid surroundings which tend in the opposite direction. Daniel in this respect is the greatest of the Old Testament heroes.

The secret of the power that made Daniel able to withstand the subtle temptations of the pagan court in Babylon and to pass unharmed through the den of lions, was as he tells us, because "his windows being open toward Jerusalem, he kneeled upon his knees and gave thanks before his God, as he did aforetime."

It is all told so simply and naturally. The captive Jewish lad had become a power in the realm, and men were jealous of him. Like One who long centuries afterward was to be brought a prisoner before Pilate, "they could find no fault in him," except they found it concerning the law of his God. And so they spread the snare.

There is a striking analogy here between Daniel and our Lord, when Satan promised Jesus all the kingdoms of the world, if He would but bow down and worship him.

Daniel must have loved his position, next in power to the king. How easy it would have been for him to follow along the line of least resistance as many another man has done when wealth or ambition or politics came between him and religion. Yet there seems to have been no question in his mind and no fear of the consequences. We must not overlook the force of that word "aforetime." It was not merely hours of distress that sent Daniel to his knees. It was his thrice daily custom to worship and give thanks to God.

If we may believe reports from overseas, the war has led thousands of men, who have not prayed since childhood, to appeal in the face of almost certain death, to the Force that is mightier than any shrapnel shell. The story of the White Comrade may be only a beautiful myth, but it is a splendid proof that in the hour of their great extremity men look for a Divine Saviour.

The really great danger facing the American people is not the ease with which a foreign army might enter our ports and conquer us; but it is our spiritual unpreparedness, the fact that in this land which God has so signally blessed, there are so few "windows open toward Jerusalem." The neglect of worship, both public and private, and the fact that so many people consider it eminently respectable to stay away from Church and to use the Lord's day for their own selfish purposes, are matters of grave concern, touching issues more vital to the freedom of the nation than battleships or submarines.

"We tend to grow into the likeness of the things we long for and think about most. The gods we worship write their names on our faces," said Emerson. The "windows open toward Jerusalem" must produce in those who look often through them the spirituality and fearlessness that were characteristics of Daniel. He trusted God and had no fear for the result.

The strength of Mohammedanism, rendering it the most formidable adversary that Christianity faces, is the habit of prayer it inculcates in its followers. The pity is that people so intensely religious should be followers of the false prophet. A story in a recent magazine gives a beautiful illustration of what some of these people did, when like Daniel, they were strangers in a strange land.

They had just arrived, a little brown group of Lascars and Malays, and they stood close together in the big waiting room of the Seamen's Church Institute in New York waiting to be assigned to cots and food. Suddenly one of them emerged from the center of the massed formation and found courage to speak to the House Steward.

"The East?" he asked timidly, "the East, where is she?"

The Steward long ago learned not to wonder at any strange questions, so he pointed in the direction desired. "Right there," he answered.

The Mohammedan at once produced his tiny prayer mat from beneath his coat and facing the East, he knelt and prayed. While they stayed at the Institute these men of an alien religion were a shining example to the Christians. They never forgot their prayers. They took off their shoes, leaving on their hats, when they entered the Chapel and one of them spent all of one afternoon in prayer to Allah, never once rising from his knees.

What a contrast these devout Mohammedans presented to Christians who find it difficult to pray or to converse with God for even a few moments at a time, and who take from Him the gifts which He bestows so lavishly with never a word of thanks.

In a book of sermons entitled "The Wind on the Heath," by the Rev. G. H. Morrison, of Glasgow, is a beautiful story of Sir Walter Scott. When he was building Abbotsford, he put the bowling green in a peculiar place. In one corner of it he built a little summer-house where he might sit after dinner in the long Scotch twilight which lasts until almost ten o'clock. His reason for locating it in this particular place was not because the view was beautiful just there, but so that he might sit and listen to the evening worship of his coachman. Old Peter had all the characteristics of a Scottish servant. He would not have talked religion for the world. Yet every nightfall in the year, he opened his Bible and "waled a portion wi' judicious care." Then the Psalm was raised and doubtless the prayer in which the old servant commended his soul to the care of Him who neither slumbers nor sleeps. Sir Walter, listening unseen, was comforted by the faith of this man who in his humble way was a Daniel.

The exiled Prophet looking out from the windows of the Babylonian palace, saw in imagination, the scenes of his boyhood, the green and fertile fields, the fruitful vineyards and more than all these the marvelous beauty of the temple of the Holy City where the one true God was worshipped. Daniel belonged to the Old Dispensation. To him was not given to know the tender love of the Saviour, who disclaiming not our human flesh, bore our infirmities and endured the shame and agony of the Cross, to make atonement for us. But we, if we will only open the windows of our soul, may catch the vision of the New Jerusalem in all its beauty and perfection.

✻ ✻ ✻

Laughter

BY CORA S. DAY.

"The new girl in our class seems very friendly and pleasant," reported Annette to her mother. "But somehow I do not like her laugh. It sounds too much as if she were laughing at you instead of with you." And, sure enough, the High School girl's judgment proved correct. On longer acquaintance the new class-mate showed an unpleasing disposition to poke fun at others—not the merry, comradely sort, but the critical sneering kind. Her laugh had revealed what her assumed friendliness might have successfully covered for a long time.

"I dislike strange workmen about the house," said a somewhat nervous lady. "But it was necessary to have a man sent out by the furniture firm with whom we had dealt, to do some polishing to a rubbed piece. He was a brisk, business-like chap but when, in reply to some remark made to him, he gave a pleasant reply and a genial little laugh, I felt as if I knew and could trust him—and he did a very good job of work."

Gracian is the one who sums up this matter by saying: "If a man laughs always, set him down as foolish; if never, as false." He might add: "As a man's laugh rings true or false, so is he. For a frowning face may hide a heart good or bad beneath, but a laugh is bound to sound the real note of the soul."

✻ ✻ ✻

The Birthright

BY ELEANOR DUNCAN WOOD.

*"Behold the pottage lures us. We are faint
And soon shall perish! Of what moment then
This ghostly right of birth?" The age-old plaint Beats through the silence. Praise of shallower men,
Glitter of gold and gem, Life's wine a-glow,
These but await the barter. Is it well
To pass all by, and unrewarded go
On that steep path whose end no man may tell?*

*Aye, it is well! Dearer than joy or gold
Or the World's plaudits is the right divine
To struggle toward the highest, make each hold
Thy feet have gained, a vantage on the line
Of upward climbing. Thou art not alone;
Comrades unseen the rocky way have trod
And still are treading. Wherefore make no moan,
But go thou singing on the road to God.*

HIS VINEYARD AND OURS

Pilgrims Bathing at Puri, India

The town of Puri, in Orissa, India, is one of the chief places of pilgrimage in India. For many years the so-called Golden Tooth of the Buddha was preserved at Puri, but it owes its reputation now to a temple erected there in honor of Vishnu under his aspect of Jagannath or Juggernaut.

The deity of Jagannath is represented by an image which is exposed to view for three days each year. On the first of these days, called the Suan jattra or "bathing procession," the god is publicly bathed. Ten days later, on the Rath jattra or car festival, the image is drawn on the famous Car of Juggernaut to some neighboring temple. A week later in somewhat diminished pomp, the god is brought back to his own magnificent temple.

One of the characteristic scenes at Puri is shown in the accompanying picture which is reproduced from a photograph that was sent to the American Tract Society some time ago by Rev. I. G. Pike of Cuttack, Orissa. This shows the Hindu pilgrims bathing in the sacred Narundon Tank.

Orissa is the name of a large district of British India, whose population, including that of the native adjoining states, numbers over 6,000,000 souls. The capital of the district of Orissa is Cuttack, with a population of about 50,000.

Missionary work is carried on in Cuttack, and a Mission Press was established there nearly eighty years ago, which has long been aided by cash appropriations from the American Tract Society.

A Spanish Tract Society

One of the evangelical forces at work for the enlightenment of the people of Spain is the Spanish Religious Tract and Book Society, whose headquarters are at Figueras, in the Province of Gerona. From a recent issue of the Record, published by that society, we glean the following interesting facts:

Thousands of persons have received from this Spanish Tract Society Bibles, Testaments, Gospels, tracts, periodicals and other Christian literature who would never have obtained them had not the books been given free. By mail Christian literature is sent to places where even colporters could not penetrate and where the people are too fanatical or too poor to buy.

The total distribution during the past year amounted to about 130,000 copies. No paid agents are employed by the Society, but the distribution is carried on by missionaries and other Christian workers. Through the mail Christian literature is sent to priests of the Roman Catholic Church, mayors, judges, government officials, professional men and others who, it is thought, may be influenced by the presentation of pure evangelical truth. The sphere of the Society's work includes Spain, South America, the Philippine Islands, Cuba and all other countries where Spanish is spoken.

Medical Aid for the Filipinos

The Rockefeller Foundation which is cooperating with Christian missions in China in bringing medical relief to the Chinese Empire is now turning to the wild peoples of the Philippines with similar Samaritan aid. From a Bulletin of the Foundation we get the following information:

"For more than two hundred years efforts have been made by force to bring the Moros of the Sulu archipelago under the influence of civilization. These Moros are the famous Malay pirates that terrorized the Malay seas and devastated the Philippine Islands to the north. They are of good physique, quick mind and active habits. Their medical needs are very great. They suffer from malnutrition and from diseases fostered by filth and negligence. The common diseases are, skin diseases in their worst forms, malaria, hookworm disease, dysentery and some of the other preventable infections.

HINDU PILGRIMS BATHING AT PURI, ORISSA, INDIA.

"Experience has shown that even the wildest of the Moros that have resisted all other means of contact may be appealed to through hospital relief. The medical work done in Mindanao is paving the way for establishing industrial and regular schools. These people can be reached by a hospital ship. They live along the coast, and the markets, where the people congregate at least weekly, bring the whole population to the coast."

The hospital ship which the Foundation is providing will go from island to island meeting the people at established points, bringing medical relief to the afflicted, giving general instruction to the people and guiding and stimulating them to self-help. It is expected that this ship will serve as an agency for the promotion of peace and order and that it will help to establish friendly relations between the Filipinos and their Moro neighbors. The International Health Board has entered into a cooperative arrangement with the Philippine government for the equipment of such a ship and for its maintenance for a period of five years. After that time it is probable that the government will continue the work with the aid of local support.

Where Demons are Gods

Rev. J. L. Hartzell, of Lampang, Siam, writes in a recent issue of the Missionary Review of the World:

"Demonolatry is a marked characteristic of the Tai people as it is of other primitive races. Among the Laos of Northern Siam I have never met any who do not believe in the reality of spirits. They believe the body to be composed of thirty-two principles or elements, each of which is connected in some way with a spirit. If a person becomes sick it is supposed to be due to the fact that one of these elements has escaped from the body, and measures are taken to coax back the wandering spirit and prevent others from leaving.

"Buddhistic teachings forbid the worship of spirits, but before the Laos people accepted Buddhism this Animism was their religion, and they simply took on the religion of Buddha and wore it over their old religion as a tramp might put a new coat over his rags. The old coat is nearest the heart, while Buddhism is only a veneer. Priests and people alike are steeped in spirit worship, and from this ignorance, superstition and degradation, which Buddhism failed to dispel, the religion of Jesus Christ is gradually delivering them."

Sunday School Work in China

China's population is 400,000,000. Of the sixty million children of school age only four million are being publicly educated. The Christian Primary School with its Bible teaching will be for many years the principal hope for the education of these millions. As showing the advance in Sunday School work in China, there has been an increase of 60,000 in the weekly distribution of Lesson Helps during the past year. The following statement regarding Sunday-school work has been made by J. W. Bashford, Methodist Bishop for China: "The Sunday School work in China appeals to lovers of men in America, first, because of the great economy with which it has been conducted in connection with our schools and churches; second, because it lays hold on the young life of China and helps to cast that life into the Christian mold; third, because China is the largest nation in the world, and fourth, because China is now passing through the greatest transition in her history. If she can be guided in this transition by Christian ideals, we shall see something like one-fourth of the human race enter upon a new civilization and become a strong factor in bringing the Kingdom of Heaven to earth."

In the Philippine Islands

The Panayan Sunday School Association recently held its annual convention and the reports show real progress. Two years ago their total membership was only about five thousand; one year ago a little over seven thousand five hundred; now they have over fifteen thousand.

In the province of Bulacan, as the result of special effort to increase Sunday School interest during the last two years, the Sunday School membership has grown from twenty-five hundred to eight thousand, and there have been two thousand additions to the church as a part of this plan.

A "Bible Revival" has been in progress in Pampanga, under the special leadership of Rev. E. L. Housley, who is happy only when in the midst of a genuine revival. He has twenty-six circuits in Pampanga and these are being worked in three allotments. While working one set the pastors from the others come over to unite with the ones working. Each set is worked eight days and nights. They start off the campaign with a rousing revival meeting at night, enlisting volunteers to help canvass the whole town in teams of two and two. The pastors are especially busy in this work. During the daytime visits are made from house to house, taking every one in succession on given streets. They ask if the house contains a copy of the Scriptures, and if not, then they donate a Gospel. This leads to conversation and oftentimes sales of the Bible follow. The subject matter of the Scriptures is a natural subject of conversation and invitations to attend the Sunday School are freely extended.

At the end of the first section they held a Workers' Conference that was a real benediction. The workers came in with their stories of successes and their difficulties. For a whole day they dealt with definite concrete items of how to enter a house, to open the conversation, whether to sit down or stand up, to carry their books under their coats or in open hands, etc. The reports were large with results. About 800 Gospels had been donated, 2,000 were sold, 2,800 homes were visited for the first time, 250 were added to the Sunday Schools and forty-nine to the church membership. Then these workers started off for the second instalment of circuits.

Enlisting the Boys

Rev. Edward H. Smith, of the Foochow Mission of the American Board, who is now in this country on furlough, has sent this sketch of the summer work of an Ingтай student, which emphasizes the importance of the part the Christian schoolboys are playing in the evangelization of China. Mr. Smith says:

"Each summer the Ingтай boys are eager to enlist for summer work, and we send them into the first line of trenches. Out into heathen villages they go for two months of hard work. Last summer ten boys went out to do their bit, and came back rejoicing, bearing their sheaves with them.

"At the end of the summer one wrote me: 'What shall I do? Through these weeks the people have crowded into the chapel evening after evening, so that we could not get them out until midnight. The Lord has opened a great door of opportunity for us, and sixty-seven men have enrolled as learners of Christianity. Moreover, they are desirous of starting a Christian school here next year, and they are ready to provide and furnish the plant if only a preacher can be sent to them. If you do not send a preacher, I must stay and do the work myself, for the Lord has opened a great door before us.'

"Of course, we could not consent to his giving up his education, and he came back to Foochow College for the fall term; but at the winter vacation he did not forget his flock up in Chiu Leng. He took with him a teacher, and after they had spent a week there he proposed to the teacher that he resign from his present school, since that position could be filled, and go up to Chiu Leng. The man agreed he would like to go if the station conference would send him.

"So this student went before the station conference, made his appeal, and won the day, for the station voted to send Ce Ing to Chiu Leng to preach and conduct the school for 1917. Thus, as a result of one boy's summer work, a chapel has been opened in this large village center. The wife of the preacher assists him, and a normal school boy has gone with them as regular teacher in the village school of some forty pupils; the preacher's mother acts as the Bible-woman, going about among the homes and teaching the women the story of the gospel.

"It costs less than ten dollars to send out one of these boys for a summer; and aside from the evangelization—in this case of a village of 8,000 people—a most important result is the good done the boys. For having once learned the joy of preaching Christ they are eager to give their lives to the work. Long before they graduate from the seminary they receive loud calls from the numerous cities and towns that are waiting for the gospel."

Notes upon the Topics Used
in Christian Endeavor
and Other Young People's Societies.

THE PRAYER MEETING

By
Rev. Henry Lewis
Ph.D.

SEPTEMBER 2.

My Favorite Hymn. Tell Why.

Psalm 33:1-22.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M. Aug. 27. The first Bible song. Ex. 15:1-13.
T. Aug. 28. Moses' great song. Deut. 33:1-7.
W. Aug. 29. A Christian hymn. Acts 4:23-31.
T. Aug. 30. Mary's hymn. Luke 1:46-55.
F. Aug. 31. Songs in the heart. Eph. 5:17-20.
S. Sept. 1. Music of heaven. Rev. 5:9-14.

Christianity is a songful and tuneful religion. Hymns are the natural means for expressing our praise to the Creator, and they are also the medium for expressing the deepest truths of our Christian faith.

When we know the history that lies back of a hymn or a tune we are in a better position to tell which is our favorite and why. There is a capital volume published by the American Tract Society, entitled, "The Story of the Hymns and Tunes," by Theron Brown and Hezekiah Butterworth, which will give very great assistance in the handling of this topic. (It will be sent postpaid, for the sum of $1.50.)

Doubtless many of our readers have not one but several favorite hymns, for there are hymns suited to every occasion and to every varying mood. So we may have a favorite missionary hymn, a favorite devotional hymn, a favorite revival hymn, and so on.

As an illustration of how our interest in a hymn is increased when we know the particular circumstances under which it was written we may mention the origin of the beautiful sacred lyric beginning,

"I love to steal awhile away
From every cumbering care."

Left an orphan at two years of age, Phebe Hinsdale fell into the hands of a relative who kept the county jail, and her childhood knew little but the bitter fare and ceaseless monotony of domestic drudgery. She married Timothy H. Brown, a house-painter, and lived in a humble home in Ellington, Conn. Here her four children were born, and it was while caring for her own little family of four and a sick sister that the incident occurred (in August, 1818) which called forth the touching hymn, which has endeared itself to so many devout souls. She was a devoted Christian, and in pleasant weather, whenever she could find the leisure, she would "steal away" at sunset from her burdens a little while, to rest and commune with God. Her favorite resort was a wealthy neighbor's large and beautiful flower garden. A servant reported her visits there to the mistress of the house, who called the "intruder" to account.

"If you want anything, why don't you come in?" was the rude question, followed by a plain hint that no stealthy person was welcome.

Wounded by the ill-natured rebuff, the sensitive woman sat down the next evening with her baby in her lap, and half-blinded by her tears, she wrote "An Apology for My Twilight Rambles," which is the source of the beautiful hymn, known everywhere by its opening words, "I love to steal awhile away."

Christian hymnology has been enriched with the passing of the years until now we have a collection of hymns which cover all the experiences of life, and upon which we may fall back for comfort and inspiration in all the varying vicissitudes of our earthly pilgrimage. It will reward us to make a study of the best Christian hymns of the ages, and to be prepared to say which are our favorite hymns and why.

SEPTEMBER 9.

Are You a Yes—But?

Exodus 4:1-17

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M. Sept. 4. Two kinds of men. Matt. 21:28-31
T. Sept. 5. Thank—but. Matt. 22:1-14
W. Sept. 6. "I am but a child." Jer. 1:1-10
T. Sept. 7. "I am too poor." Judges 6:11-16
F. Sept. 8. "I don't not." Matt. 25:14-28
S. Sept. 9. "I have no time now." Acts 24:21-27.

This topic brings before us the subject of excuses. There are two kinds of excuses—valid and invalid, or as we are wont to say in common parlance, good and bad excuses.

For the non-performance of certain secular duties we may sometimes be able to offer a good excuse, but for the failure to accept and obey Christ we can never offer a valid excuse. Nevertheless, the appeal to those who are not Christians to follow Christ is met very frequently by such poor excuses as the following:

"I am not good enough." Yet Christian discipleship is not a matter of one's own accumulated righteousness, but of accepting Him who is able and willing to clothe us with His own perfect righteousness. Let us take Christ as our Saviour, and by His help we will be made good enough to stand in the presence of God without shame.

"I fear I cannot hold out." But the love of Christ casteth out fear, and with Him as Friend and Helper, we shall be able to endure steadfast unto the end.

"I can be as good as many Christians I know." The test of character is not to be met by comparison with others who have not lived up fully to their confessional vows, but by comparison with the requirements of Him who said, "Follow me."

"I will become a Christian a little later on." The only time of which we are sure is the present moment. If we defer our decision for Christ to a later date, we may never live to reach that date. Now is the accepted time; now is the day of salvation.

"I tried once but failed." This does not prove that another effort will not meet with success. Jerry McAuley failed not once but many times in his efforts to lead a Christian life. Yet he persevered and finally become one of the most effective Christian workers that the world has ever seen. And Jerry McAuley's experience is but typical of many others.

"I cannot meet the financial obligations that church membership involves." But God does not expect us to give beyond our ability. We are to give, as God hath prospered us, and surely there is no one who cannot measure up to this standard.

"I cannot believe all that there is in the Bible." The first question to be answered is, "Do you believe in Christ?" If we believe in Christ, He will help us to accept His word. We may never be able to understand all that is in the Bible, but if Christ is our Saviour, then we shall be willing to accept even what we cannot fully understand in the pages of His Holy Word.

"I do not want to give up worldly amusement." But Christ does not ask you to give up any amusement that is suitable or right. It is only questionable amusements that He asks us to discard, and we are far better off by refraining from such doubtful diversions.

SEPTEMBER 16.

A Christian's Power.

Acts 1:1-8.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M. Sept. 10. Power from God. 2 Cor. 13:1-9.
T. Sept. 11. Power over the flesh. Rom. 6:1-9.
W. Sept. 12. Power to testify. Acts 16:25-32.
T. Sept. 13. Power to suffer. 2 Cor. 11:22-33.
F. Sept. 14. Power to forgive. Matt. 18:21-35.
S. Sept. 15. Power to love. 1 John 4:7-21.

A Christian without power is an anomaly in the spiritual world. The promise of Jesus to all His disciples was, "Ye shall receive power, when the Holy Spirit is come upon you." If spiritual power is lacking in our lives, it is a sure indication that we have not yet received the gift of the Holy Spirit.

To stand fast against all opposition is one of the indications of a Christian's power. The most subtle form of opposition that confronts a Christian is the temptation to sin. But there is no temptation so great but what it may be overcome by the power of the Holy Spirit.

To win souls for Christ is a sure evidence of the power of God working in and through a believer. By this power it is possible for Christians to evangelize nations and thus to transform the world. The winning of a single soul for Christ is an achievement of spiritual power, and this is a line of effort that calls for our constant endeavor.

To brighten the pathway of life is one of the elements of a Christian's power. We should reflect the brightness of the Light of the world, and should let our light so shine that others may see our good works and glorify our Father which is in Heaven.

To comfort those in sorrow and distress is one of the choicest prerogatives in the power of any Christian. The world is full of sadness. What a splendid privilege it is for a Christian to be able to comfort those that mourn by pointing them to Him who is the source of all consolation.

It is within the power of every Christian to help to advance the progress of the Kingdom. God has ordained that the growth of His Kingdom in the world shall depend in large measure upon the work of those who bear the name of Christ. We are called to be fellow-laborers with God, and by our toils and sacrifices we may help to bring to this earth the blessed reign of the kingdom of heaven.

Christianity is a positive force for good. Therefore Christians are able to vanquish the forces of evil and to put to flight the hosts of iniquity that are marshalled under the banner of Satan.

By the power of the Holy Spirit a Christian is enabled to walk in the footsteps of the Master. When we follow in His steps, we have with us the irresistible force of divine strength, and we are then enabled to accomplish even greater works than those that were done by Jesus, according to the promise which He gave to His disciples.

SEPTEMBER 23.

How We Should Work Together.

John 17:20-26.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M. Sept. 17. Work with God. Mark 16:14-20.
T. Sept. 18. Co-operation in prayer. Exod. 17:10-16.
W. Sept. 19. Building a school. 2 Kings 6:1-7.
T. Sept. 20. Division of labor. Neh. 4:12-23.
F. Sept. 21. Evangelistic team-work. Luke 9:1-6.
S. Sept. 22. The spirit of co-operation. Eph. 4:1-13.

This is an age of co-operation along business and commercial lines. Experience has shown that where a number of persons co-operate, a great deal more can be accomplished than if each were to work along individual lines.

Co-operation should be the watchword along every line of human endeavor. We should work together in what may be called humanitarian service. By united efforts vastly more can be accomplished for the cause of charity than if each one works separately. Co-operation in humanitarian work means greater economy, larger efficiency and more beneficent results.

Co-operation is the secret of success in civic and political reform. The lack of united action on the part of the forces of righteousness has often enabled the forces of evil to triumph in local, municipal and state elections. We should work together for the establishment and maintenance of purity in politics. It is the lack of cohesion on the part of the righteous elements of society that leads to such deplorable results as were witnessed in East St. Louis not very long ago.

Social service calls for united action on the part of those who are interested in the uplift of society. By concerted action much can be done to ameliorate the working conditions in shops and factories, to check the evil of child labor, and to better the environment of the poor.

United action also leads the way to the largest sphere of usefulness for philanthropic effort. It is by the union of many small gifts that the large endowments are secured which make possible the handling of philanthropic enterprises to the best possible advantage. There is always a field for individual initiative, it is true, and it is unwise to push co-operation to such an extent that no opportunity is left for personal acts of bounty or charity. But in the main, it has been shown that co-operation brings the largest and best results in the field of philanthropy as well as in other lines of human activity.

Co-operation has come to be a recognized force in the mission fields both at home and abroad. Happily, the old days of competition and rivalry in missionary work have passed away, and comity and co-operation are the controlling factors in the policy of the missionary organizations of the present day.

Among the churches the spirit of co-operation is evident in many ways. Federation is an accomplished fact between many of the principal evangelical denominations, and in many cities and towns there are local federations in which all the Protestant churches are linked together in various lines of Christian service.

There is still room for a great advance in this matter of co-operation. We have referred to the hopeful and encouraging signs, but it must be admitted that there are still many churches and individuals that have not risen to the height of our Master's teaching, "that they all may be one."

Christian Endeavor is one of the strong forces working for the union of Christendom. So are the American Tract Society, the Young Men's Christian Association, the Young Women's Christian Association, the American Bible Society and a host of similar organizations that are demonstrating in the most practical and efficient way the value of co-operation in carrying on the work of the Kingdom.

SEPTEMBER 30.

Home Mission Work Among Immigrants.

Psalm 67:1-7.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M. Sept. 24. An immigrant's welcome. Ruth 2:1-22.
T. Sept. 25. Preaching to strangers. Acts 2:1-12.
W. Sept. 26. Teaching. 2 Kings 17:16-28.
T. Sept. 27. Aiding. Acts 9:36-43.
F. Sept. 28. Hospitable hearts. Exod. 23:1-9.
S. Sept. 29. Home-coming. Rev. 7:9-17.

Home missionary work for the immigrants begins when they land on our shores. At Castle Garden and at Ellis Island for seventy-five years these strangers from foreign lands have been met by missionary colporters, who have given them a word of Christian greeting, and have placed in their hands the Gospel message in printed form.

In the various communities where these immigrants have settled they have been followed by home missionary workers. Missionary colporters of the American Tract Society have visited them in their new-made homes, home missionary pastors of the various denominations have gathered them into the membership of Christian churches, and through these methods of work, many immigrants have been led out of atheism and infidelity into an abiding Christian faith.

Though the volume of immigration has greatly lessened, owing to the result of the great world war in which most of the nations of the earth are now engaged, there is still a steady stream of immigrants who come to our shores, chiefly from neutral countries.

Moreover, the great body of immigrants who have come in former years and have settled in various portions of our country still need the watchful care and attention of the home missionary societies, for until our foreign-speaking population is thoroughly evangelized and Christianized, it is a source of constant peril to the welfare of our republic.

Individual Christians can do home missionary work. The late Josiah Strong has well said, "Personal, vital touch is the essential thing, the great power in all redemptive work."

OUR YOUNG FOLKS

Rain or Sun?

BY L. D. STEARNS

IT WAS the darkest, rainiest and altogether most disagreeable day small Isabelle ever remembered; and to make it far worse it was her birthday and seven little girls had been invited for a birthday party.

There were eight heart-shaped cakes in the pantry, with the loveliest pink frosting and half an English walnut on each; and a big three-layer chocolate cake, all ready to be cut into squares; there were eight gold-rimmed dishes all ready to be filled with ice cream; and there was chicken for sandwiches, and jolly tarts and candy; and now, at the very last, each one of the seven mothers had telephoned that on account of the storm her little girl would not be able to come.

In the center of the rug, before the sitting-room fire, Isabelle sat sobbing as if her heart would break.

Once more the telephone bell rang; but the small figure on the rug did not move. What good were telephones now? The party was off!

Whir-r-r-r! Again it called.

Mrs. Graves came in from the kitchen and crossed to the hall. After a moment she called Isabelle. "Mrs. Dean wants to speak to you, dear," she said.

Swallowing a fresh throatful of sobs Isabelle lagged disconsolately toward the hall. Much as she loved Mrs. Dean she could not muster a smile.

Taking the receiver from her mother she sat down. "How do you do?" she said politely; and the cheery, bright voice her Sunday School teacher called back, "You said Saturday was your birthday, my dear, and I just wanted to remind you not to let the clouds that are in the sky get into your heart."

"Oh, but the party's all gone!" Isabelle's voice quavered. "Not a single one's coming, Mrs. Dean. Isn't it just awful?" Two big tears splashed to the polished table.

"Awful? honey, don't you believe it!" Isabelle heard a little ripple of laughter over the wire. "Why, lassie, you were wishing the other day for a chance to make some sun, and how do you know but God has given you the chance, just to take you at your word? The day's half gone. You'll have to hurry!"

A few minutes she sat staring straight ahead into the rain. It was true. Only last Sunday Mrs. Dean had been talking about the Sun of Righteousness, and telling them how, if one but lived up to the example set by Christ, the sun would shine through them so brightly they would forget even clouds and rain. "The rule of Christ," she said, "is to 'do all things in love,'" and Isabelle had chimed in, "But I don't see, Mrs. Dean, how that would make you forget rain. I'd like to try. I hate rain!"

Now, as she returned to the sitting-room, there was a perplexed pucker between her eyes. What if God really had taken her at her word? but what was there to do in love, anyhow? "I s'pose," she faltered, "I could wipe those dishes for mother," and turning slowly she went into the kitchen—it seemed to her, just then, there was nothing on earth she so disliked to do as wipe dishes! But somehow, when she saw the light come into her mother's eyes she forgot all about that, and before long she was chattering away like a magpie.

As the last dishes was dried she caught sight of the almost empty wood-box. "If I fill that," she nodded, "Daddy won't have it to do tonight; and that'll be in love, too." Then, over a sudden thought, she grew rosy and bright as a fresh-opened flower. "You haven't had a party for a long time, mother," said she. "I never even remember you having one."

Something she didn't quite understand came into her mother's eyes. "I never had one, dearie, since I was a little girl," she replied.

There was nothing more said for a long time and it was a very grave-faced Isabelle who marched back and forth from wood-box to shed until the box was full. Then she came and stood before her mother, who was just taking off her apron. She had forgotten all about either sun or rain, now. One fact, only, stood out big and clear. "Mother," begged she, "please may I make a party for you, to-day?"

"Why, dearie—"

Reaching up, Isabelle stopped her words with a kiss. "I can," she declared. "Oh, mother, please let me, 'cause it's my birthday, you know."

With a little hop-skip she ran to the window and peered out. "You just put on your bestest dress," said she, "an' I'll do the rest."

Her mother crossed to the window, after an irresolute moment, and kissed her: "All right, little daughter," she

In the center of the table was the three-layer cake, and all the other birthday goodies were ranged about it, while under Aunt Emma's direction Isabelle—her eyes like stars—waited on the table, and her mother sat as happy as a queen. Then the guests went into the parlor, and she and Aunt Emma did up the work.

Just as she was drying the last dish, her mother came into the kitchen. "They're gone," she said, "and you don't know what a splendid time it has been! Why! I feel like a girl again!" Bending, she kissed Isabelle, and then—whir-r-r-r!—the telephone rang.

Flying in, Isabelle took the receiver. "Which is it," asked Mrs. Dean, "rain or shine?"

"Why—why!"—a little laugh rang gaily over the wire—"oh, I forgot all about it!" cried she. "But it's sun, Mrs. Dean—the dearest sun! and the loveliest—very loveliest birthday ever!"

AMONG THE TREES

How Ruth Helped

BY MAY ELLIS NICHOLS.

DOROTHY HARVEY was going to have a party, and Ruth Davis, whose mother was a widow and supported herself and Ruth by making cake and rolls, was ready to go to it. "Help make the party a happy one," was her mother's good-bye to her.

Ruth waved her hand and called back, "I will."

Ruth walked slowly up the gravel walk to Judge Harvey's stately house. There was a red carpet on the broad steps, and palms and flowers in the hall. For a minute Ruth felt shy, and then she saw Dorothy standing at the parlor door with her mother and forgot everything else. Dorothy had on a lacey pink frock, all caught up with pink rosebuds, and wore pink silk stockings and slippers. She did not look at all as she did at school. But Ruth never once thought of the difference between Dorothy's pink net and her own dark blue serge dress. She just said,

"Oh, Dorothy, how nice you look!"

Dorothy's mother smiled a queer but very sweet smile, and stooped and kissed her little guest.

"And so do you look very nice, dear," she said.

In a minute the little girls were all playing a new kind of blind-man's buff.

"Who will be it?" was the question. Now no one really liked to be "it," but Ruth thought, "Maybe this is the way to make the party happy," so she said,

"I'll be it."

Again Dorothy's mother smiled that queer sweet smile.

But Ruth was to find it harder than that to help make the party happy. After some more little girls came, Mrs. Harvey called Dorothy into the dining-room and in a minute she came back with a pout on her pretty face.

"It's just too mean," she whispered to Ruth. "Mamma had the cunningest little favors for us all—baby dolls in baskets, one for each of us. But what do you think? Sally Mason's two cousins came to visit her to-day and she brought them along without an invitation, so there are not enough dolls to go round. Even if I go without mine, there will be one lacking. I think Sally Mason should go without one herself. Come and see them."

Dorothy led the way and Ruth followed. There they were in a row—twenty of them—the prettiest baby dolls all lying in the daintiest of baby baskets! It was enough to make any little girl's heart leap, and Ruth had never had such a baby doll in all her life.

"Help make the party happy," mother had said, but she surely never meant, "Make yourself unhappy, Ruth," and how could Ruth help being unhappy if she had to give up her own little baby doll? That was the question she asked herself.

But after a minute she knew that she could; still, there was a little catch in her throat when she said, "Tell your mother, Dorothy, that I don't care so very much for baby dolls, and she may give mine to one of Sally's cousins."

Mrs. Harvey looked relieved enough when she received the message, and for the third time that afternoon she smiled that queer sweet smile at Ruth.

But that was not the end of the matter.

Three days later, Judge Harvey's big car stopped at Mrs. Davis's small house and Mrs. Harvey and Dorothy got out. Dorothy fairly danced up the walk with an express package that she thrust into Ruth's hands.

"Open it!" was all she said. "It's for you."

And what do you think was in the box? The very prettiest baby doll that any little girl ever mothered. She had long white clothes exactly like a real baby's, and soft rings of real hair, and the loveliest blue eyes that she could open and shut, and when Ruth hugged her—Ruth would not have poked or struck her for the world—she said "Mamma" just as plainly as if she were a real live baby.

While Dorothy and Ruth were looking at this wonderful baby's wardrobe, Mrs. Harvey was saying to Ruth's mother,

"She is such a dear little girl, what a comfort she must be to you! She did more than any one else to make Dorothy's party a success."

Pointed Paragraphs

Cultivate a love for nature; he who lives close to nature may more easily live close to nature's God.

Give your heart to Jesus; no amount of education will prepare you for life's duties if you are not right with God.

Our Fireside

The Eleventh Hour

By Fannie Medbury Pendleton

MISS DELICIA AVERY stood by the sunny south window of her little dining-room, looking out into the beautiful world of nature. Yet her eyes were unseeing and her ears heedless of the song that rose from the myriads of happy living creatures to whom the span of a summer's day was life and joy and all things wonderful. The roses nodded to her from the garden, the tall spires of the tiger lilies bent in friendly recognition, a breath which was the incense of the flower world was wafted toward her through the open window; but little Miss Delicia noticed nothing of all this. Her gentle heart was bowed down with a weight which even the glorious song of summer could not lighten and her eyes were blinded by hot tears that scorched her cheeks as they fell. Her delicate hands were gripped upon the back of an ancient rocker as though without that support, she must fall. Miss Delicia, sweet, blameless, and lovely with the beauty that radiates from the soul, was facing the great crisis of her life.

She brushed the tears away and her sad eyes fell upon the tall lily without the window. And the thought came that, lovely as was the bloom in its own place in the garden, should it be plucked it must wither soon and droop and die away from the nourishment of the plant. So it would be with her, for the little white house with its hospitable porch, its garden and its air of a true home was hers no longer. Days, fewer than she dared to number, must see her, whose very life was bound up in the place where she had been born and had lived all her years, a wanderer upon the face of the earth. She had nothing. The dear house, her roses, the birds that came year after year to nest in the tall trees, the thousand and one bits of human treasure that filled the rooms were—unbelievable though it seemed—no longer hers. Like their former owner they were to pass away from the familiar locality and be scattered as the petals of a full blown rose borne afar by the wind.

Miss Delicia pressed both hands hard upon her eyes. This was her last day at home. She wondered what sort of a woman it would be who would move about on the morrow, gathering her few clothes and a trinket or two and who would answer to the name of Delicia Avery, but whose soul would be lying dead under the feet of a cruel fate. One day more and then chaos. Her mind refused to picture what other days could be. Surely the world would end tonight.

As though the very briefness of her allotted time spurred her, she wiped her eyes and a new look brightened her face, a look full of decision and purpose. She had one day to live and she would live it. God helping her, she would forget the morrow; for just this twenty-four hours, she would do as she pleased.

She opened the door and went into the garden, where she gathered a large bunch of roses. These she arranged in the silver bowl in the centre of her table. Then she got down her best china which for years had been only used on special occasions, and she set it out. It was dainty china with a delicate gold band and a green fern sprig. It was dear to Miss Delicia's heart. The little breakfast table was quite festive when she had added the plate of crisp toast and the silver pot of tea. She took off her apron and sat down. It was the last breakfast but one in the little house, but she resolutely put that thought aside and poured out her tea with a steady hand. She was going to visit a cousin who lived over on the south hill until she could make up her mind what to do. It was not a pleasant prospect—that visit—but she brushed that thought aside also.

A bird sang lustily just outside the window, and its note of cheer found an echo in the brave little heart of Miss Delicia. Not for naught was she the descendant of those sturdy men and women who had conquered the country, first from nature and then from those who would forbid their free thought and ownership. The portrait of her father looked down at her from the opposite wall. Alvord Avery had died ten years before. He had been an invalid, and not quite right in his mind for some time before his death; and Delicia had resolutely put by all her woman's interests in her care for him. Not that she could ever cease being the most womanly of women, crowned with the sacrifice whose thorns drop away and give place to roses as the years go on. Far back in the lapse of time she had had a lover, but matters had gone ill, and he was now the husband of a neighbor and the father of five sturdy lads and lasses. Nor did Delicia regret him. It was as though her very gentle soul had grown fast to her little home until the two were welded into one with the magic that comes of love alone. And now—but she would not think of that—

She washed the dishes and put them away; then she went into her little bedroom and took off her print gown.

The room was clustering with memories, and just for one moment she dropped upon her knees beside the bed. But it was a brave white face that looked back at her from the little muslin-draped mirror, as she smoothed the soft brown coils of her heavy hair and donned her best gray silk.

She did not stop to consider why she did this; she only knew that for this day she would live to the uttermost, and gala attire might serve to cover the vast ache in her heart. Her mother's cameo brooch was made to fasten the collar of delicate thread lace. It came to her with a sense of surprise that she was not old. Her face was almost unlined. But the custom of the little country town had set the seal of age upon her forty years by inexorable decree. Young she might be at heart as the girl of sixteen who sang and laughed next door, and with a soul as full of dreams; but her time had slipped away, gently, indeed almost imperceptibly, and yet for eternity. She did not think of all this; she was wont to feel rather than to think deeply; but something made the corners of her mouth droop for a moment to right themselves bravely as she stepped out of the side door into the garden.

A great jacqueminot rose bowed to her with stately courtesy. She gathered it and put it in her hair. She went back and brought out her embroidery and sat down upon the porch. The birds came very near, as though realizing a kinship with the little woman.

Dinner time arrived and she went in; but she did not set the table. She took a bit of lunch, standing by the kitchen shelf, and then she went out of doors again.

The afternoon dragged on. Miss Delicia's hands had dropped idly in her lap. Her head was leaning back against the cushions of her chair. Her eyes were full of dreams. One by one she was going over the years that had passed since she had been born in the little house. One by one she called them up and made them pass before her and gravely dismissed them again into the chambers of memory.

The vision of her mother was as real to her as though she stood by her chair. She had had no brothers or sisters. One by one her girlhood friends had married, but Delicia had been always just a girl. Then her father had sickened and the next few years had been given to loving care of him. It seemed to her that he must be sitting in his chair by the window. She rose and looked into the door.

"Coming, father," she said softly, as though he had called her. She went in and shook up once more the cushions of the ancient rocker, as though to rest an aged head.

She turned away to glance at the heavy clock with the hand pointing to eleven. A sad little smile flickered for an instant across her face. This clock had ticked so loudly; her father could not bear the sound, and she had stopped it many years ago. And habit had been so strong upon her that, after her father's death, it had stayed as it was, pointing to the hour of eleven, motionless and voiceless.

She remembered how in her father's last illness it had seemed to be upon his mind, and in his delirium he had tried to tell her to start it, speaking wildly about the eleventh hour. She turned away. The old clock would go with the other things on the morrow.

The auction would be at ten o'clock. Aside from a very few of her most personal belongings which she had packed, everything must go. There was the mortgage, which had so worried her father, and the long unpaid interest that would take everything. She clenched her teeth at the thought.

The afternoon passed slowly as she sat on the porch. No one came to disturb her. At length the sun was low and the shadows lengthened. She rose and went in, for the air had suddenly grown chill. She shut the door and lighted the lamp, then she sat down with her Bible. She tried to read, but the printed words upon the pages blurred. She tried to pray, but her stiff lips refused to move. One thought was going over and over

A Call to Your Grocer

will bring a package of

Grape-Nuts

A delicious, healthful food and a pleasing lesson in economy.

"There's a Reason"

USEFUL POCKET KNIVES

Splendid Pocket Knives are offered as premiums to those who secure new subscriptions for the AMERICAN MESSENGER. These knives are manufactured by the well-known firm of J. Curley & Bro., New York City. All blades are hand-forged from the best steel.

PEARL-HANDLED KNIFE

Given free and post-paid for only 4 yearly subscriptions at 50c. each, or we will give a year's subscription to the paper and the knife for $1.30.

The handle is of heavy iridescent pearl. The bolsters and lining are German silver. The two blades are fine English hand-forged steel, carefully tempered and hardened. The large blade is a regular cutting blade and the other is a nail cleaner and file. The Knife is 2 3/4 inches long. It is suitable for either lady or gentleman.

POCKET KNIFE No. 2164

Given free for only 3 yearly subscriptions at 50c. each, or we will give a year's subscription to the paper and the knife for $1.00.

This Knife for gentlemen has two blades. Each blade opens easily. The blades are made of finest quality of steel. The handle is of patent stag, and is brass lined.

EASY OPENER KNIFE

Given free for only 3 yearly subscriptions at 50c. each, or we will give the Knife and a year's subscription to the AMERICAN MESSENGER for $1.00.

This Knife is called the "Easy Opener" because of the way the handle is cut, so as to secure a good grasp of the blade when opening it. No broken nails or sore fingers from trying to open this knife. It has two good, strong, polished hand-forged steel blades, stag-handled, shaped so as to give a good, firm hold. It has a German silver bolster and name plate, and is brass lined. It is a handsome, strong, serviceable knife for either man or boy.

AMERICAN MESSENGER, Park Ave., and 40th St., N. Y. C.

in her mind like a prayer. "Dear Lord," she was thinking, "I am so tired—so tired."

Suddenly she started. It had seemed to her that the old clock was ticking. "The eleventh hour," it was saying in measured strokes, "the eleventh hour."

She rose from her chair resolutely and, going into her little room, prepared for bed. Habit was strong upon her, and underneath it all was a little sense of pride that she must not seem worn and grief-stricken to curious eyes upon the morrow.

Morning found her staring at the ceiling. She had not slept.

She rose and dressed; then she packed up the few things remaining to which she had a right. She tried to drink her tea, but it choked her.

Her little trunk was locked and ready. Her bonnet and cloak lay upon it. For the last time she walked through the little house and then with a strange numb feeling at her heart she went out and locked the door. She was going to Elvira's. At the gate she turned and came back. She would take the hill road for it did not seem to her that she could walk through the streets of the little town and face the people whom she had known from childhood.

A damask rose caught her skirt with detaining clutch. She gently detached it and passed on through the little back gate up the old path over the hill. She had ceased to think or even to sorrow. It seemed to her that the end of the world had come. A sympathetic face from a window of the house next door watched her slender figure as it plodded slowly along, watched it until it disappeared in the grove beyond. Then it turned to study a knot of women who were coming down the street. They were the first comers at the auction.

Already the auctioneer had opened the little house and was setting certain things out in readiness for sale. Several men came. A woman who had known Delicia Avery from early years raised her voice.

"If each one of us buys something, she will get quite a lot back. It isn't so much the furniture as it is the little keepsakes that count. I'm going to bid in her china set if it takes all my egg and butter money."

"There's her father's chair," another put in. "I'll bid on that. Her grandmother pieced the cushions."

Thus it went, but the little house—the real home soul of it all must pass to Clinton Ackerson who held the mortgage, for he was known to want the lot to build a modern home, and he had more money than any man in Cypressville.

There was a hush as the auctioneer took his stand on the porch. He held up the china vases from the dining-room mantel. Quaint, of no particular value to any but their gentle owner, they were bid in for twenty cents by warm-hearted Bridget Casey, who announced her intention of at once restoring them.

"Sure an it's foine they'd look on me mantel," she said, "but it's Miss Delicy shall hav' the likes o' them intoirely."

Even, the auctioneer, was holding up the silent clock.

"What am I offered for this fine time-piece," he called. "Solid mahogany case. A clock anyone would be pleased to own."

"It ain't goin'," suggested some unquiet spirit. "Maybe it ain't got no works."

The auctioneer set the clock down upon a box and wound it with a key. There was a whirr inside and then it stopped.

"Shake 'er up," advised a bystander.

But the auctioneer was opening the back of the case.

Suddenly an expression of astonishment swept his face. He had reached in to start the pendulum to swinging when his exploring fingers touched a package of papers. He drew it out. The outer wrapper was yellow with age. Josephus Tready was standing close at his elbow, and Josephus was a curious man. He stood on tiptoe and trained his near-sighted eyes upon the papers in the hands of the auctioneer.

"My livin' exultin' stars!" he cried in his thin cracked voice, "if it ain't gov'munt bonds. Oh, Jerushy!"

And "Oh, Jerushy!" echoed the hearts of all the people in the crowd.

There was a hubbub immediately. "Where's Delicy?" "Somebody get Delicy!"

It was Madeline Truman, the young girl who had watched Delicia starting on her pilgrimage up the hill, that flew through the garden gate like a flash.

"Miss Delicia," she called, with an intuition that poor Miss Delicia could not have gone far.

A forlorn, little heap rose up from beside a tree in the edge of the grove. Unseen she had watched the assembling of the people and the opening of the auction, with the same feeling that bids the sorrower linger as long as possible by the earthly remains of the one who had passed away.

Her eyes were swollen with tears. Her slender form shook with silent sobs. Madeline with tears in her own eyes threw her arms about her.

"Miss Delicia," she cried brokenly. "Oh, dear Miss Delicia, it is going to be all right. They want you down there. Come quick."

Delicia looked at her uncomprehendingly, but she allowed the girl to lead her slowly down the path.

The babel of voices died down at their approach. Every eye was fixed upon Judge Thayer who held the papers in his hand. He cleared his throat importantly.

"I have the pleasure of informing you, ma'am—" he began in his most important manner which he wore only when deeply impressed; but Bridget Casey was before him.

She rushed forward toward Delicia, a china vase in each hand.

"Sure and they're yours intoirely," she cried, "and it's a rich woman they say ye are—"

The judge raised his voice. "You need not sell your home, Miss Delicia. You have enough to pay off the mortgage and keep you in comfort." He took off his spectacles and hemmed loudly as though he had a cold.

Miss Delicia swayed like a lily on a stem. "Not sell—not—"

"Sure and it's a goldmine they found in the clock, me darlin'."

The face of Miss Delicia grew whiter and whiter, and it was the motherly arms of Mrs. Casey that received her. Then quite suddenly she straightened herself and turned her pale face toward her assembled neighbors.

"I don't quite understand," she said quietly, "but you say it's all right, and I—I think I'll go—home."

The Burning Bush

BY A. MARIA CRAWFORD.

AM going to give up my class in Sunday School, Aunt Agatha," said Anne Leighton, coming into the room where the patient little cripple sat reading her Bible in the sunny south window that was filled with boxes of blooming flowers.

"Tell me all about it! You're just discouraged because you expect too much of the little folks, perhaps."

Anne dropped her close fitting little hat on the table, and running her fingers through her fluffy hair, she crossed the room and kissed Aunt Agatha on her smooth white forehead. There were no wrinkles in the sweet, placid face, although Aunt Agatha had suffered excruciating pain at times for twenty years. Her affliction had acted like yeast to leaven the natural sweet cheerfulness she had always exhibited.

"Every class in the school seems to grow larger than mine. All the children take more interest in the general work than my little folks do. The fault can't rest with them. It is with me, and I am going to resign so that a more competent person can take charge."

Everybody brought Aunt Agatha their problems, both those of the flesh and those of the spirit. It seemed that she could heal anything from a stubbed toe to a broken heart. There was magic in her mercy. There was balm for everything in the touch of her slender white hands, that were made doubly useful because of the poor crippled feet.

"I think you are wrong, dear. You are a good girl and a conscientious, painstaking teacher."

"Good?" questioned Anne, dismally. "Yes, in a way, a sort of negative goodness. The things that tempt most girls have no attraction for me. I never fancy people to whom father and mother have any objection. I am not interested in trashy love stories as many girls are. So you see, the usual temptations are not alluring to me. I overcome nothing. I am negatively good."

She turned and laid her strong young hands over Aunt Agatha's. "I have prayed and prayed to make a success of my work in the Sunday School and it seems that I have just been beating my head against a stone wall all the time. Mother is so gratified, because I am willing and anxious to take up the work she used to do in the church but I am realizing to-day, more than ever before, that I have not the capacity for service possessed by mother. I have ten little girls down there. About eight of them come regularly and not one of them is enthusiastic enough to want to bring her friends. The children in the other classes are keen on enlarging their membership, but it is all that I can do to hold my little band together. So I have made up my mind to give it up."

Aunt Agatha had traveled the same road of disillusionment and had been forced to acknowledge, ultimately, that her capacity had limitations. She, too, had blindly and futilely beaten out her wings against a rock wall when just at one side, there was a beautiful opening, easy of access.

"Perhaps the sermon to-day sounded some note that will help to illumine the way!" suggested Aunt Agatha hopefully.

"It was about the voice in the burning bush, but the truth of the matter, dear, I was so distressed over my class when I saw an increase in every other class marked up on the blackboard that I did not hear half the minister said. I just sat through the whole sermon with my eyes on the pulpit, but I heard practically nothing. I was more or less dazed, wondering what on earth was right for me to do. Of course mother will be disappointed to have me give up the work. There must be something for me to do somewhere. I simply have not found myself."

"Seek, and ye shall find," quoted Aunt Agatha softly. "Dear child, the sermon had a message for you, but you closed your eyes and stopped your ears. You must learn the great fundamental truth of all spiritual growth. Keep your heart and mind receptive! God created the lovely miracle of dawn, yet hundreds

DON'T decide on the new hymn-book for your Church or Sunday School until you have seen

HALLOWED HYMNS
NEW AND OLD

Edited by IRA ALLAN SANKEY
Son of the famous Singing-Evangelist
Ira D. Sankey
OVER 550,000
COPIES ALREADY SOLD

Responsive Scripture Readings
No Trashy Words No Jingly Music

Price $25.00 per 100 not prepaid
35 cents per copy by mail

Examine a copy and prove its value in your work. (Returnable if desired.)

The Biglow & Main Co., New York
Chicago

of thousands only see in the light of a new day the beginning of another period of toil. There is in their mind no appreciation of what magnificent canvas, touched to life by the faultless stroke of a master hand and swung across the eastern horizon for all mankind to see and admire. There is only a whining complaint about having to get out of bed, a hurried or leisurely breakfast, as the case may be, and then work or idleness to fill the day. And yet any day may bring our heart's desire! The seeing eye, my dear, the hearing ear! When Moses saw the burning bush, he might have passed by with unseeing eyes and because of unheeding ears, have gone on and never heard the Lord's command to deliver the children of Israel out of bondage and lead them into the promised land, flowing with milk and honey. The sermon was meant for you to-day, but you closed your ears and did not hear. Moses saw that the bush was burning but was not consumed, so he turned aside to see and because his heart and mind were receptive, he heard the voice of God. God may try to speak to you and to me every day, but because our eyes are blinded by worldly things and our ears are filled with worldly news, we see Him not, and we hear Him not!

"You're right, Aunt Agatha, you're right about everything. I have neither seen nor heard God but I have gone on, humanly selfish, believing but not receiving the personal message," was Anne's reply.

"An old book laid on the dusty shelf of a little shop in Florence for one hundred years. Men came and went, thumping it lightly, or passing it by. Then one day there came a clear-eyed poet with heart and mind receptive to all the beautiful things in God's world, and he saw the discarded old book, steeped in the dust of a century. He opened it and began reading, lightly at first, then lovingly, and out of that story, ignored for ten decades, Robert Browning, with scholarly ability, created his wonderful 'The Ring and the Book.'"

"Why, you have preached me a sermon, Aunt Agatha, and every word of the beautiful truth of it has gone right down into my heart. I will find a way to succeed for my little folks. I won't give up, not yet," cried Anne happily, flushed with an eager zest to accomplish her cherished aim in life.

"Take the great poet of nature, Wordsworth, who wrote, 'To me the meanest flower that blows can give Thoughts that do often lie too deep for tears.' And again he sings,

'Enough of Science and of Art;
Close up those barren leaves;
Come forth, and bring with you a heart
That watches and receives.'

"A girl with a pretty face may pass you by and be to you merely a lovely human being, but to an artist with a seeing eye, she may represent the Madonna for a cherished masterpiece. A storm may break in a forest. If you were near, you would probably hear only the wind in the trees but to a musician with a trained ear, the sound might be the inspiration for the theme of a great, soul-stirring sonata. You must carry through life, if you would succeed," admonished Aunt Agatha, "a heart that watches and receives."

CLUB RAISERS WANTED

We will give to those who secure new subscriptions either a very liberal cash commission or some of the beautiful and desirable articles that we offer as premiums.

AMERICAN MESSENGER, Park Ave. & 40th St., N. Y.

INSTANT
POSTUM
as coffee's successor on the family table makes for better health and more comfort.
Preferred by Thousands
"There's a Reason"

THE TREASURY

SPECIAL NOTICE

OWING to occasional losses of letters, containing money, we would request friends and donors of the American Tract Society to remit by check or Post Office Money Order, which latter can always be duplicated in case of loss.

Receipts of the American Tract Society During July, 1917

Total Donations (Including $1,972.10 for Special Objects) $3,867.22.

ALABAMA, $1.

Rev. Mr. Bell, $1.
CALIFORNIA, $10.
 Mrs. Miller, $1; Miss Daleau, $1; Miss Wheeler, including $3 from Intermediate and Junior Societies of First Congregational Church, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Miss Hammond, $2; Miss Wyckoff, $1.

COLORADO, $35.

Miss McCrosky, $5; Miss Ruth, $5; Mr. Tagg, $25.

CONNECTICUT, $233.15.

Miss Ayerick, $5; Miss Copp, $3; Bridgeport, Sunday School Offering, for Christian Literature for Soldiers and Sailors, $5.50; Mrs. Lawrentz, $0.65; Miss Hague, for Gospel Munitions, $1; Mrs. Osborne, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Mrs. Turrill, $5; Mrs. Squire, $1; Mrs. Baldwin, for Gospel Munitions, $1; Mrs. Fowler, $1; Mr. Hart, $25; Mr. Hallock, $2; Miss Acton, $10; Miss Stoddard, for Gospel Munitions, $2; Mr. Catlin, $5; Mrs. Welcher, for work among the Soldiers and Sailors, $125; Mrs. Fisher, $10; Miss Dickerman, $1; Miss Adams, $1; Dr. Roberts, $2; Mr. Mitchell, $10; Rev. Mr. Arnold, $1; Mrs. Kelly, $2; Mrs. Carter, $5; Mr. Fitch, for work among Soldiers and Sailors, $1; Miss Daggett, for work among Soldiers and Sailors, $3.

DELAWARE, $5.

Mrs. Mendenhall, for Gospel Munitions, $5.
DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, $20.
 Mr. Rothermel, $2.50; Washington, Church Collection, $5.50; Miss Robertson, $10; Mrs. Browne, $1; Rev. Mr. Shemeld, $1.

GEORGIA, $8.

Mr. Telford, $7; Mr. Floding, $1.
ILLINOIS, $41.37.
 Eureka, Church Offering, $0.55; "A Friend," $5; Mr. Blosser, for Christian Literature for Soldiers, $1; Sutter, Church Collection, $8.96; Freeport, Church Offering, $1.60; Harper, Church Collection, $14.26; Chicago, Church Collection, $10.

INDIANA, $14.

Mr. Miller, $3; Mr. Taylor, $5; Mr. Garritt, $2; Mr. Bowser, $2; Mr. Hogue, for Gospel Munitions, $2.

IOWA, $36.23.

Mr. Jones, $2; Mrs. Bauman, $0.65; Mr. Muntinga, $1.65; Mr. Pluth, $2; Mrs. Acheson, $2; Sibley, Church Offering, $1.93; Mr. Ernst, $5; George, Sunday School Class of Dr. Dallmann, $5; Dr. Dallmann, $1; "A Friend," for Soldier's Text Books, $5; Lennox, Church Collection, $10.

KANSAS, $28.30.

Mrs. Oberer, $0.30; Mr. Sherman, $1; Mrs. Wilde, $2; Mr. Potter, $25.

KENTUCKY, $18.

Mr. Mourning, for Gospel Munitions, $2; Mr. Diehl, for tracts for Soldiers, $5; Mrs. Graves, for Gospel Munitions, $10; Mr. Hunt, $1.

MAINE, $70.

Mr. Breneman, $5; Misses E. H. and M. A. Libby, $50; "A Friend," $5; Mr. Dana, for Gospel Munitions, $10.

MARYLAND, $15.

The Misses Childs, $15.

MASSACHUSETTS, $339.25.

"A Friend," $25; "A Friend," for distribution of Christian Literature among Soldiers, $5; "Ungenannt," $5; Mrs. Miller, $2; Mr. Leach, $3; Rev. Mr. Covell, $2; Rev. Mr. Carter, for Gospel Munitions, $2; "A Friend," $1; Mrs. Crane, for Gospel Munitions, $15; Mr. Hart, $1; Miss Clapp, $3; Miss Montgomery, $1; Miss Putnam, $2; Mrs. Torrey, Literature and Bibles for Soldiers and Sailors, $50; Miss Wight, $2; Dea. Wilde, for Gospel Munitions, $10; Mr. Culver, $0.25; Mrs. Miller, $2; Rev. Dr. Carier, $5; Mrs. Soule, $20; Mr. Noyes, $2; Miss Macurdy, $1; Miss Rice, for Literature for Sailors, $1; Mrs. Power, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Mrs. Gould, $1; Florence, Sunday School Collection, $3; Mrs. Ilaven, $1; Miss Dawes, $10; Mr. Bemis, $10; Mrs. Field, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Mr. Bennett, for Gospel Munitions for Soldiers and Sailors, $1; Wellesley Hills, Church Collection, $25; Mrs. French, $2; Mrs. Look, $5; Mr. Ripley, $3; Mr. Buck, $5; Mrs. Clark, for Gospel Munitions for Soldiers and Sailors, $1; Mr. Crane, $1; Mr. Brooks, $50; Miss Fitch, $1; Mrs. MacNitt, $50.

MICHIGAN, $22.65.

Mr. Earl, $1; Misses Louise and Ruth D. Bloodgood, for Soldier's Text Books for the Army and Navy, $20; Mrs. Gaensle, $1.65.

MINNESOTA, $19.65.

Mrs. Baumberger, $1; Mrs. Sloane, for Gospel Munitions, $1; Mr. Weber, $2; Mr. Sellhorn, $0.65; Ellsworth, Church Collection, $15.

MISSOURI, $6.30.

Rev. Mr. Bleitner, $0.30; Mr. Spencer, $1; Mr. William, $5.

NEBRASKA, $76.97.

Hastings, Church Offering, $5; Mr. Balli, $1 05; Mr. Hunzicker, $1.55; Mr. Beams, wife and son, $6; "Cedar Creek," $34.21; Cedar Creek, Church Collection, $29.16.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, $34.

Mrs. Herr, $15; Mrs. Fletcher, $5; Mr. Morgan, $1; Mr. Hastings, for work among Soldiers and Sailors, $5; Miss Childs, $1; Mrs. Blaisdell, $2; Rev. Mr. Bliss, $1.

NEW JERSEY, $1,207.93.

New Brunswick, Church Collection, $8; Butler, Sunday School Collection, $13.75; Mr.

Clark, for Literature for Soldiers, $3; "A Friend," $2; Mr. Moreau, $1; I. E. Hueber, $2; Mr. Meadowcroft, $2; Miss Walker, $1; Mr. Voorhees, $1; Miss Rasch, for distribution of testaments among Soldiers, $5; Mr. Taylor, for Gospel Munitions, $1; Bloomfield, Church Offering, $7.50; Miss Butler, $1; Mrs. Pine, $5; Mrs. Reid, $5; "A Reader," $1; Mr. Pierce, $10; Mr. Halls, Jr., $25; Mrs. Hart, for work among Soldiers and Sailors, $1; Mrs. Voorhees, for Prisoners' Text Books, $1,000; Miss Brooks, for Gospel Munitions, $1; Mrs. Hartig, $1; Miss E. M. Martin, $1; Miss I. D. Martin, $2; Passaic, Church Collection, $30.03; Mrs. Cunningham, for distribution of Christian Literature, $25; Mrs. Fries, $1.65; Mrs. Ballentine, for Soldier's Text Book, $4; Newark, Church Collection, $20; Miss Woodruff, for work in the Navy, $1; Miss Walker, for Gospel Munitions, $1; Miss Morse, $5; Mrs. Goodnow, $20.

NEW YORK, $733.77.

Mr. Jarvie, for Gospel Munitions, $500; Mrs. Sibley, $15; Mr. Auchincloss, $20; Miss Isaacs, $10; Mr. Millsbaugh, $25; Miss Roeder, $10; Mrs. Meeker, $5; Miss Ames, $5; Miss Walker, $5; "A Friend," for Gospel Munitions, $2; "Kingston, N. Y.," $50; Miss Young, $1.50; Misses Mary and Fannie Brodhead, for Gospel Munitions, $1; Mrs. Beebe, for Soldier's Text Book for Army and Navy, $4; Miss Phillips, $1; Mr. Farnam, $5; Brooklyn, Church Collection, $14.47; Mrs. Hoyt, for work in the Army and Navy, $1; Lyons Falls, Church Offering, $3; Miss Pintler, for Gospel Munitions, $1; Mr. Mead, $2; Brooklyn, Church Collection, $18.80; Mr. Knight, $10; Mrs. Cooper, tracts for Soldiers, $1; Mrs. Sherman, $5; Miss Sabine, for Gospel Munitions for Soldiers and Sailors, $10; Mrs. Gerow, $5; Mrs. Rissmeyer, $1; Mr. Bowen, $1; Dr. Spaulding, for Soldier's Text Book, $1.

OHIO, $199.29.

Norwood, Church Offering, $6.40; Youngstown, Church Offering, $2.49; Mr. Reihl, $10; Miss Murdock, $1; Mr. Roers, $1; Mr. Hollister, $5; Mr. Brown, $20; Mr. Kittredge, $25; Mr. Kirkpatrick, $10; Mrs. Rosseter, $5; Mr. Helfenstein, $1; Mrs. Plummer, $5; Mr. Stafford, $10; Mrs. Brooks, for Gospel Munitions, $1; Mrs. Fried, $3; Miss Peebles, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Mrs. Powell, $5; Mr. Drury, $10; Dr. Emery, $1; Miss Babcock, $20; East Liverpool, Church Offering, $0.40; Mr. Kirkpatrick, $2; Mr. Chase, $5; Mr. Meacham, $5; Mr. McFadden, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Mr. Mains, Sr., $10; Mr. Battelle, $25.

OREGON, $15.20.

Mrs. Weinhard, $15; "A Friend," $0.20.

PENNSYLVANIA, $446.25.

Mr. W. N. Judson, including $2 for son at home, $17; E. B. Judson, $19.26; Mr. Hall, $2; "Friend in Pa.," $25; Rev. Mr. Minnich, $1; Dr. Lewis, $5; Coraopolis, Church Collection, $9.05; Coraopolis, Sunday School Offering, $0.93; Miss Dosch, $1.50; Shippensburg, Church Offering, $3; Miss Strong, $1.08; The Misses Luders, $5; "A Friend," for distribution of Christian Literature among Soldiers, $1; Miss Pollock, $2; Harrisburg, Church Collection, $10; Mr. Smith, for Gospel Munitions, $5; "In His Name," for Colportage in the West, $5; Mr. Hoover, $2.25; Franklin, Church Collection, $9.42; Mr. Huston, $50; Mrs. Lugg, for Gospel Munitions, $5; Stoneboro, Church Offering, $5; Mr. Degelman, $1; Miss Wallace, $10; Mr. Shaw, $10; Mrs. Ingraham, for Gospel Munitions, $0.50; Mr. McAteer, $2.50; State College, Church Offering, $6.45; Mrs. Turner, $50; Miss Smith, for Soldier's Text Book, $1; Mr. Phillips, $25; Wilkingsburg, Church Collection, $31.31; Mr. Kuhn, $5; Mr. Bickel, $10; Mr. and Mrs. Aldred, $2; Mrs. Laupplin, Jr., for Soldier's Text Book, $10; The Hostetter Co., $25; Miss Stahel, $1; Mrs. Ayers, $1; Miss Matson, for Gospel Munitions, $2; Mr. Renshaw, for Gospel Munitions, $5; York, Church Offering, $12; Miss Duckham, $1; Mrs. McCormick, $10; Mr. Eckhart, $25; Mr. Lowen, tracts for Soldiers and Sailors, $1; Aspinwall, Church Collection, for Soldier's Text Book, $14.

RHODE ISLAND, $14.

Mr. Carpenter, $10; Miss Olney, $1; "A Friend," $2; Mr. Rankin, $1.

SOUTH DAKOTA, $27.91.

Monroe, Church Offering, $6.85; Chancellor, Church Collection, $12.23; Lennox, Church Offering, $8.83.

TENNESSEE, $10.

Mr. Phillips, $10.

TEXAS, $12.

San Angelo, Church Offering, $2; Mr. Hunt, $10.

UTAH, $3.

Mr. Pratt, for Soldier's Text Book, $3.

VERMONT, $23.

"A Friend," $5; Mrs. Gay, $3; Miss Lease, one-half for Immigrants' work one-half for work among Soldiers, $5; Miss Brigham, $10.

VIRGINIA, $10.

Richmond, Bible Class of Centenary Methodist Church South for Christian Literature for Soldiers and Sailors, $10.

WEST VIRGINIA, $106.

Mr. Priestley, $1; Mrs. Jones, Gospel Munitions for Soldiers and Sailors, $5; Mr. Paull, $100.

WISCONSIN, $22.

Mrs. Leoler, $3; Mrs. Baumgartner, $2; Mr. Gowiess, $2; Mrs. Jenkins, for distribution of tracts, $5; Mrs. Kreul, $10.

FOREIGN, $3.

Canada, Mrs. McCrac, $1; Rev. Mr. Lehrer, $2.

INCOME FROM TRUST FUND.

Income for Missionary work.....$481.35
 Income for Annuitants.....28.05

American Tract Society

THIS SOCIETY was organized in 1825. Its work is interdenominational and international in scope, and is commended by all evangelical denominations.

It has published the Gospel messages in 178 languages, dialects and characters. It has been the pioneer for work among the foreign-speaking people in our country, and its missionary colporters are distributing Christian literature in many languages among our foreign-speaking population and making a home-to-home visitation among the spiritually destitute, both in the cities and rural districts, leaving all kinds of Christian literature, also the Bible or portions of the Scriptures.

Its publication of leaflets, volumes and periodicals from the Home Office total 797,704,700 copies. It has made foreign cash appropriations to the amount of $802,966.39, and grants of electrotypes to the value of $61,177.96, by means of which millions of copies of books and tracts have been published at mission stations abroad.

The gratuitous distribution of the past year is to the value of $18,461.65. The grand total of its gratuitous distribution has been to the value of $2,652,967.54, which is the equivalent of 5,305,935,080 tract pages.

The total number of family visits that have been made by the Society's colporters during the last year is 199,963; the total number of volumes distributed by sale or grant is 55,712, making the total number of volumes that have been circulated by colporters in the last seventy-six years 17,438,166, and the total number of family visits that they have made during the same period 18,812,806.

The Society is making very special effort in behalf of Latin America, having entered upon the publication of a one volume Bible commentary in Spanish, a long-needed and earnestly prayed-for publication, and several other important volumes in both Spanish and Portuguese. Its total publications for Latin America now reach 16,012,088 copies. Its work, ever widening, is dependent upon donations and legacies, and greatly needs increased offerings.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President.

JUDSON SWIFT, D. D., General Secretary.

Remittances should be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

Life Members and Directors

THE donation of $30 at one time constitutes a Life Member of the American Tract Society; the addition of $70, or the donation of $100 at one time, constitutes a Life Director. Life members may receive annually copies of the Society's own publications to the value of $1; Life Directors to the value of $2; if applied for within the Society's year, from April 1st to April 1st, in person or by written order. No individual can draw more than one annuity any year for himself. Colporters are not authorized to supply Life Members.

To Our Subscribers

A RULING of the Post Office Department states that copies of the AMERICAN MESSENGER may not be mailed to persons whose subscriptions are in arrears for a period exceeding twelve months. In other words, the regulations of the Post Office Department compel us to remove from our regular mailing list the names of all who delay the payment of their subscriptions longer than twelve months. In view of this fact we urge upon all our friends the necessity of attending promptly to the renewal of their subscriptions. A glance at the address label on the wrapper of the paper will show at what date each subscription expires.

Notice to Authors

Authors who submit manuscripts for publication to the American Tract Society are reminded that the Society does not hold itself responsible for the return of any manuscript. If a remittance is sent to cover the full cost of postage and registry, the Society will transmit a manuscript by registered mail upon the request of the author.

A Grateful Acknowledgment

In response to a grant recently sent by the American Tract Society, Mr. John B. Irons of Geneseo, N. Y., has written: "I thank you very much for your nice bundle of tracts. Your work as a Society is truly most useful as well as much needed. The longer I live the more I see the great need as well as the great usefulness of spreading Bibles and tracts everywhere."

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

TERMS: Subscription price, 50 cts. a year, payable in advance. In clubs of five or more, 30 cts. each. Club subscriptions mailed to separate addresses, if desired. Postage on foreign subscription, 24 cents additional. Canadian subscription, 12 cents additional. Single copies, 5 cents each.

On account of the additional charge which is made by the New York Post Office for mailing to subscribers in New York and Bronx Counties (Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx), no club rates, cash commissions or premiums will be given for subscriptions that must be sent to persons residing in those Counties. Each subscription in New York or Bronx County must be at the rate of 50 cents net.

Remit by Express Money Order, Draft, Post Office Order or Registered Letter. For very small amounts, postage stamps may be sent at the risk of the sender.

RENEWALS: The date opposite your name shows to what time the subscription has been paid, and a change in the date is the receipt for renewal.

CHANGES: When sending change of address, be sure to send the old address as well as the new one.

OUR ADVERTISERS: We believe that all the advertisements in this paper are from responsible advertisers, and it is our intention to admit only such to our columns. Should, however, any of our subscribers find that any advertiser does not live up to his agreements, we would consider it a favor if they will inform us, and we will at any time give prompt attention to any complaint.

We do not, of course, guarantee that all persons will take the same point of view with the advertisers, and it must be borne in mind that the claims and statements made by advertisers are their assertions, and not ours.

Our readers will confer a favor upon advertisers and also upon us if they will mention the AMERICAN MESSENGER when answering advertisements.

FIELD SECRETARIES AND COLPORTAGE SUPERINTENDENTS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.

Rev. Isaac Pierson, Field Secretary for New England, 50 Bromfield Street, Boston, Mass.

Rev. A. W. Reinhard, Field Secretary and Superintendent of Colportage for the Western and Northwestern States, 313 Y. M. C. A. Building, Omaha, Nebraska.

Rev. George Whitefort, Superintendent of Colportage, Southern Agency, Crichton, R.F.D., Mobile Co., Ala.

Have You Made a Will?

If you have, did you remember the American Tract Society, and in proportion to the good it has been doing for nearly a century? If you have not made any bequest in behalf of the Tract Society, you are earnestly asked to add a codicil to your will to that effect. If you do so, you certainly will be happy in the thought that when you have been translated to your Heavenly home you will still be doing something to perpetuate and enlarge the great and important work of the American Tract Society. Please do not forget.

A Remarkable Bible

A Giant Bible has been bound by the Oxford University Press for the Bible Crusade, of Horbury Hall, Notting Hill Gate, London, England. When standing on end the volume is over 5 feet 2 inches high, and nearly 3 feet 6 inches wide. The width of the back is 10 inches, so that when the book is opened flat it measures about 7 feet 10 inches across. It is bound in rich red levant morocco leather of the best quality; 12 large goat-skins having been used for the binding. The front cover is surrounded by the arms of the counties of England and Scotland inlaid in blue morocco leather, and decorated in gold; while on the back of the book are displayed the arms of the Welsh counties similarly treated. In the centre of the front cover is a panel of royal blue morocco leather, containing the royal arms, inlaid with the heraldic colors.

The book contains 175 sheets of stout paper boards attached by means of linen hinges to strips of similar material, which form the back of the book. It is sewn with twine, in the old-fashioned way, round 6 stout hempen ropes (each rope containing 70 strands of hemp) much thicker than the ordinary clothes-line, and four of these ropes are laced into mill-boards, 1/2 inch thick, which form the foundations for the leather covering.

In order to facilitate the handling of the book during the various processes of binding it was found necessary to erect a wooden staging, from the cross beam of which depended an iron chain and pulley block, and by this means the position of the book was altered from time to time. Without the aid of the block and pulley the assistance of 6 men would have been necessary to manipulate the volume. No fewer than 4,476 copies of the smallest Oxford Bible could be contained within the compass of this huge book, but they might not have arrested so much attention—such is the opinion and the purpose of the Bible Crusade—as this unique "edition."

Gifts of the Forest

In addition to the ordinary uses of wood with which we are familiar, mankind is dependent upon the forest for a variety of products whose appearance does not indicate their origin, say members of the Forest Service. Numerous as these products are, and as extensive as is their use at the present time, science is constantly learning new constituents which enter into the makeup of wood and is finding new uses to which these constituents and those already known can be put.

Pure wood alcohol is the only substance which can be converted commercially into formaldehyde, which is universally used for disinfection against such contagious diseases as smallpox, scarlet fever, and tuberculosis. The experts at the Forest Products Laboratory have conducted extensive experiments on the production of grain or ethyl alcohol from wood and have been successful in experimental work in raising the yield and lowering the cost of production. If this process can be put on a commercial basis, the foresters say, it will result in putting the millions of tons of coniferous sawdust and other material which is now wasted every year to a profitable use.

By converting cellulose, one of the elements of wood, into a gelatinous material, known as viscose, a wide field is opened up for the utilization of wood waste, and a new line of products, varying all the way from sausage casings to tapestry, is added to the already lengthy list. Many of the so-called "silk" socks, neckties and fancy braids now on the market contain artificial silk made from wood.

About nine-tenths of all the paper which we use is made from wood. Besides the detailed investigations of the methods of making newsprint paper, and of the production of paper from woods hitherto unused for that purpose, which have been conducted, kraft paper, which compares favorably with the best on the market, has been produced experimentally at the Forest Products Laboratory from longleaf pine mill waste. This kraft paper is brown in color and is very much stronger than ordinary papers. It is used for a variety of purposes, and, cut into strips, is spun or twisted into thread which is then woven into onion and coffee bags, matting, suitcases and wall covering, similar to burlap, and furniture closely resembling that made from reeds, as well as other articles of common use.

Within the past year the Forest Products Laboratory has, by co-operating with manufacturers, succeeded in getting a dye made from mill waste of osage orange put on the market as a substitute for fustic, which we import from Jamaica and Tehuantepec.

These are only a few examples of the various lines of work carried on at the Forest Products Laboratory, say the men in charge. Other activities, ranging all the way from the study of decay in wood to that of the resistance of wood to fire, are in progress, and new discoveries are constantly being made. Incidentally, the Forest Products Laboratory, at Madison, Wisconsin, was the first of its kind in the world and is probably still the best equipped. With one possible exception, no other country has done as much as the United States systematically to investigate the possibilities of its forest resources.

Our Medicine Chest

Aviator (home from the war on leave)—"And then when you are up pretty high—three or four miles, say—and you look down, it's positively sickening. It is stupendous, awful. A great height is a fearful thing, I can tell you."

Lady (feelingly)—"Yes, I can sympathize with you, poor boy. I feel just that way myself when I'm on top of a stepladder."

Gladstone, when a boy, was visiting in the country, and the farmer was showing him around. Coming to a field that contained a large bull, the farmer said, "There's a fine, strong bull over there, Master William, and it's only two years old."

"How do you tell its age?" queried the boy.

"Why, by its horns," said the farmer. "By its horns?" Young Gladstone looked thoughtful for a moment, then his face cleared. "Ah, I see. Two horns—two years."

General Sherman once stopped at a country home, where a tin basin and roller towel sufficed for the family's ablutions. For two mornings the small boy of the household watched the visitor make his toilet. When, on the third day, the toothbrush, nail file, and whisk broom had been duly used, he asked, "Say, mister, air you always that much trouble to you'se'f?"

"I would like to show you our new vacuum-cleaner," began the agent, when the door opened.

"We ain't got no vacuum to clean," snapped the hard-faced woman as she slammed the door.

"What are you doing with that homely dog, Tommy?"

"Takin' him to the dog show."
"But you can't win a prize with him!"
"Well, they may give me a special prize for showin' the kind of a dog that no dog ought to be."

"Phawt are thim buckets for on the shilf in the hall?"

"Can't yez read, ye fool? It says on them, 'For Fire Only.'"
"Thin why hov they put wather in them?"

"So you're making your will," said Mrs. Twickembury, "and who is to be your executioner?"

"Were you ever rewarded for bravery?"

"Oh, yaas."
"Did you get the Iron Cross?"
"Nope."
"The Victoria Cross?"
"Naw; I got the Maltese cross."
"How did you get the Maltese cross?"
"I stepped on her tail."

Mrs. Nimble—"Oh, you're making fancy work presents for Christmas, aren't you?"

Miss Kimball—"Mercy, no! Nobody wants these foolish things! I'm just making them for the charity bazaar!"

A gentleman being asked to recommend some good tonic for nervous persons, replied to the anxious inquirer he knew of none and added: "What I want to find is a good tonic for those who have to live with them."

"It is very easy to be misled nowadays," said Miss Cayenne. "In what way?" "When you smell gasolene you can't tell whether a person has been cleaning gloves or riding in an automobile."

Hon. Benjamin Kimball is said to have complained to one of the butchers at Gilford about the quality of meat supplied, saying: "That lamb you sold me must have been old enough to vote. It was so tough I could hardly cut it." "Oh," said the butcher, "that is nothing: Tom Fuller said the last piece of meat he bought of me was so tough he couldn't get his fork into the gravy."

The Composition of Coca-Cola and its Relation to Tea

Prompted by the desire that the public shall be thoroughly informed as to the composition and dietetic character of Coca-Cola, the Company has issued a booklet giving a detailed analysis of its recipe which is as follows:

Water, sterilized by boiling (carbonated); sugar, granulated, first quality; fruit flavoring extracts with caramel; acid flavorings, citric (lemon) and phosphoric; essence of tea—the refreshing principle.

The following analysis, by the late Dr. John W. Mallet, Fellow of the Royal Society and for nearly forty years Professor of Chemistry in the University of Virginia, shows the comparative stimulating or refreshing strength of tea and Coca-Cola, measured in terms of the refreshing principle:

Black tea—1 cupful	1.54
<small>(hot) (5 fl. oz.)</small>
Green tea—1 glassful	2.02
<small>(cold) (8 fl. oz. exclusive of ice)</small>
Coca-Cola—1 drink, 8 fl. oz.	1.21
<small>(fountain) (prepared with 1 fl. oz. Syrup)</small>
Coca-Cola—1 drink, 8 fl. oz.	1.12
<small>(bottlers) (prepared with 1 fl. oz. Syrup)</small>

From the above recipe and analysis, which are confirmed by all chemists who have analyzed these beverages, it is apparent that Coca-Cola is a carbonated, fruit-flavored modification of tea of a little more than one-half its stimulating strength.

A copy of the booklet referred to above will be mailed free on request, and The Coca-Cola Company especially invites inquiry from those who are interested in pure food and public health propaganda. Address

The Coca-Cola Co., Dept. J., Atlanta, Ga., U. S. A.

The Chess Player

Many years ago Paul Morphy was the champion chess player of the world. A friend one day invited him to come and look at a valuable painting he had just purchased. It was called "The Chess Player," and represented Satan playing chess with a young man, the stake being the man's soul. The game had reached the stage where it was the young man's move; but apparently there was no move that he could make that would not mean defeat for him, and the strong feature of the picture was the look of awful despair that was on the man's face as he realized his soul was lost, and the sneer upon the face of Satan as he saw the victory.

Morphy studied the picture for a time (he knew more about chess than the artist who painted the picture), and then called for a chessboard and men. Placing them in the same position they were in the painting, he said: "I'll take the young man's place and make the move;" and he made the move that would have set the young man free.

When I heard this story, I thought it was just like my life. In the game of life I was worsted. It was my move, but death was in every direction. I was in despair, when I saw One come on the scene who knew all about my life, and I recognized the only One who could help me. I turned to Him, and He made the move that set me free.

—SELECTED.

Little Things

Only a little shriveled seed—
It might be a flower or grass or weed;
Only a box of earth on the edge
Of a narrow, dusty window ledge;
Only a few scant summer showers,
Only a few clear, shining hours—
That was all. Yet God could make
Out of these for a sick child's sake
A blossom wonder as fair and sweet
As ever broke at an angel's feet.

Only a life of barren pain,
Wet with sorrowful tears for rain,
Warmed sometimes by a wandering gleam
Of Joy that seemed but a happy dream;
A life as common and brown and bare
As the box of earth in the window there.
Yet it bore at last the precious bloom
Of a perfect soul in a narrow room
Pure as the snowy leaves that fold
Over the flower's heart of gold.

HENRY VAN DYKE.

For the Boy Who Is Going to the Front

Small Volumes for the Kit, the Package, or the Pocket.

SOLDIER'S TEXT BOOK

Compiled by J. R. Macduff, D.D.
Art Paper Cover. Price, 5 cents a copy
(by mail 7 cents). $5.00 per hundred postpaid.

A little pocket volume of 46 pages containing a reading and a verse of Scripture especially adapted for the soldier for thirty-one mornings and thirty-one evenings. Four pages of sanitary directions at the back gleaned from long campaign experience. This little volume is a splendid companion for every soldier.

DAILY FOOD

Cloth, 2¼ by 3¼ in. Price, 15 cents postpaid.

"THESE WORDS OF MINE"

Selected and arranged by Abbie McCammon Brown. Bound in limp leather with book mark. Boxed. Price, 30 cents net (by mail 32 cents).

A little pocket book of 157 pages divided into months, with a selection of Scripture for every day in each month. A special page for special occasions. Beatitudes, Lord's Prayer, Commandments, etc., at the back.

CROMWELL'S POCKET BIBLE

Art paper cover, 3 by 4½ in. Price, 5 cents a copy, (by mail 7 cents.) $5.00 per hundred, postpaid.

NEW TESTAMENT WITH NOTES

Silk cloth bound. Thin paper. Clear type. Red edges. Printed jacket with band of red, white and blue. 75 cents a copy postpaid for a short time. Better prices in quantities.

This New Testament is in answer to the demand for a pocket-size book with all the advantages of notes and explanations embodied in our complete Self-Explaining Bible. Concise explanations and instructions making daily application of the Word at the bottom of each page. Very helpful.

LIFE AND ADVENTURES OF JACK PHILIP, REAR ADMIRAL, U. S. N.

By Edgar Stanton Maclay, A. M. Bound in cloth, 288 pages, 16 illustrations. Price 75 cents postpaid.

It is the well-told life of one of the most modest and noble heroes of the great American navy. Admiral Philip was a Paul Jones of our later sea-fighting line. Brimming over with action, written in admirable spirit, this book will be an inspiration to all patriotic fathers and sons. If we must have war, Admiral Jack Philip should be the hero of every last man.

THE ISLANDS OF THE PACIFIC

By James M. Alexander. Bound in cloth, 369 pages, 37 illustrations, 9 maps. Price $1.00 postpaid.

A timely volume dealing with the more important of the Pacific Islands, relating the almost incredible experiences and the remarkable accomplishments of people who have gone to the various groups. Special chapters on the Society, the Pearl, the Fiji, the Austral, Pitcairn and Norfolk Islands, Hawaii and New Zealand. An extremely informative history.

AN OBSERVER IN THE PHILIPPINES

By John Bancroft Devins. With a foreword by Ex-President Taft, and an appendix containing extracts of addresses by William McKinley, Theodore Roosevelt, Judge Alton B. Parker, Elihu Root and Luke E. Wright. Bound in cloth, 416 pages, 64 illustrations. Price, $2.00 postpaid.

Dr. Devins made a thoroughly personal study of the Philippine Islands. He travelled extensively among the natives, knew their customs, habits, peculiarities and latent possibilities. This book is an authority as to whether or not the Filipino is capable of governing himself and how he would do it, if given a chance. Dr. Devins also realized the commercial value and diplomatic advantage of this group of Islands. Read what we, as a nation, received for our $20,000,000 purchase price. Read whether it is wise for us to lose our right and release our supervision over the Philippines, especially at this time.

RELIGIOUS LIFE OF FAMOUS AMERICANS

By Louis Albert Banks. Bound in cloth. Frontispiece. 248 pages. Price, 50 cents postpaid.

All of our famous men and women made religion a part of their every-day life. It was this faith and practice which was the base of their success, which gave to them strength in times of stress and care and carried them onward. It is especially invigorating for our boys and girls and even their elders to know how much the great leaders of our land exercised Faith and Trust.

Among the well-known men and women cited are Abraham Lincoln, Rufus Choate, Samuel F. B. Morse, John Quincy Adams, James A. Garfield, Emma Willard, Abigail Adams, "Stonewall" Jackson and Robert E. Lee.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

PARK AVENUE AND 40th STREET

NEW YORK

205
A-MM

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

Vol. 75

OCTOBER, 1917

No. 10

GRASMERE CHURCH, WESTMORELAND, ENGLAND

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY, NEW YORK.

Forthcoming Features and a Special Offer

J. WILBUR CHAPMAN, D.D.

CHARLES C. ALBERTSON, D.D.

MRS. GRACE B. SANDERS.

EDGAR W. WORK, D.D.

REV. G. ERNEST MERRIAM.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS

The Editorial Contributors of the American Messenger are men of splendid ability and of distinguished attainments both in the field of religious literature and in other realms of Christian activity.

Rev. David J. Burrell, D.D., LL.D., the famous pastor of the Marble Collegiate Church of New York City, is a great preacher, the author of many popular volumes, and a frequent and forceful contributor to the religious press. Through his active connection with numerous organizations of a benevolent and philanthropic character he is able to give our readers a broad insight into the world of Christian effort.

Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman is known throughout the Christian world as an Evangelist of rare power, and he has been the leader of some of the most stirring revivals which this country has ever known. He has had a wide experience in various lines of Christian service, and has recently been elected as Moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States.

Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D., is the successful pastor of the West End Presbyterian Church in New York City. He is a speaker of rare gifts and has a wonderful facility of expression. He is also a writer of great charm, author of "The House of Chimham," "The Art of Sailing On," and several other delightful volumes.

Dr. Charles Carroll Albertson is well known as the pastor of the historic Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church of Brooklyn, New York. He is a man of ripe experience and large vision, a thoughtful and scholarly writer, and his messages through the medium of the printed page are of real power and constant interest to a large circle of readers.

Rev. George Ernest Merriam is pastor of the Calvinistic Congregational Church of Fitchburg, Mass., and has been for many years a welcome contributor to various religious periodicals. His articles in the American Messenger have always been greatly prized, and he is now a valued member of our staff of Editorial Contributors.

SPECIAL DEPARTMENTS

The Prayer Meeting page is devoted to a suggestive and discriminating treatment of the Topics used in Christian Endeavor and other Young People's Meetings. In these notes, prepared by one who has had large experience in Christian Endeavor work, young people will find just the material that they need in preparation either for leading the prayer meeting or participating in it. Daily Bible Readings are printed in connection with the topics for each week.

Our Young Folks' page is described by many as one of the most interesting features of the whole paper. On this page there is always a beautiful illustration, reproduced from an original photograph depicting varied phases of life at home and abroad which are sure to charm the young folks. The stories printed on this page are written by authors who are skilled in the art of entertaining boys and girls, and who know how to impart to their work that high tone which furnishes the strongest incentive to the building of noble character.

"In His Vineyard and Ours" is the title of a department dealing with the progress of the Kingdom throughout the whole wide world. The pictures on this page are reproduced from photographs that come literally from the ends of the earth. They illustrate life in India, China, Japan, Korea, South Africa and other parts of the missionary field. The outlook here given on the evangelization of the world is gained from a careful reading of the tidings that come from the missionary headquarters of all the denominations.

SPLENDID ARTICLES

Among the articles that we shall publish from our regular contributors during coming months are: "The Fountain of Youth," by Clarence E. Flynn; "How to Win Friends," by Emma Younglove; "The Watcher in the Doorway," by Edgar L. Vincent; "Differing Gifts," by Cora S. Day; "Safety first for Others but Not for Himself," by Rev. Howard W. Pope; and "Reaction to Duty," by Rev. C. A. S. Dwight, Ph.D.

Fascinating stories, true to life, which will appear in our columns include "For All Thy Mercies," a Thanksgiving story by L. D. Stearns; "A Vision Realized," by Felicia Buttz Clark; "Harriet Boswell's Christmas," by Hilda Richmond; "The Way Ye Know," by Allan Phillip; "Tommy's Eyes," by Earl Reed Silvers; "On Quien Sabe Creek," by Cora G. Parmelee; "The No-Excuse Lady," by Mary E. Chase; and "The Night and the Morning," by John Alister Stewart.

Many authors contribute beautiful poems to our columns, and among the choice verses that we shall publish are: "The Awakening," by Thomas C. Clark; "God's Sequence," by Mary Davis; "The Forgotten Guests," by Eugene C. Dolson; "Suggestions," by Arthur W. Peach; "Soul Purified," by George L. Andrews; and "The Christmas Spirit," by Helen M. Richardson.

Among the attractive stories that will appear in Our Young Folks' page are: "The Birds' Thanksgiving," by Erroll Hay Colcock; "The Little House in the Snow," by Kathleen Hay; "The Prairie Palace," by Esther Smith; "The Children of Mount Vernon," by Mary F. Richardson; and "The Last Trip by the Toll Bridge," by Mabel S. Merrill.

In Our Fireside department of the American Messenger there is always a fine story. In addition there is usually an article dealing with some phase of the home life. Among those awaiting future publication are three articles by the Author of "Preston Papers," entitled: "The Purse Bearer," "The Child's Money," and "Emergency Preparations."

UNIQUE FEATURES.

In the Editorial Notes which appear in each issue of the American Messenger there is given a broad outlook on the whole field of Christian effort. Timely comments are made upon events of international importance. The great subjects of social service, child welfare, evangelistic work and kindred topics receive sympathetic and thought-provoking treatment.

Christian News from everywhere finds a place in the columns of the American Messenger.

Its publication office being situated in New York City, which is fast becoming the world's metropolis, has facilities for coming in touch with every line of Christian activity, and it receives advance information concerning great religious movements at the original sources of information.

The subject of Christian Literature receives special attention in the American Messenger. For over ninety-two years the American Tract Society has been a pioneer in this field, and through the columns of this paper the Society seeks to disseminate the essential and most pertinent facts concerning the publication and dissemination of Christian truth in the form of the printed page. The story of the spread of Christian literature in foreign fields is as fascinating as any romance ever written, and from the American Messenger the Christian public may secure information and enlightenment on this subject such as can not be procured elsewhere.

A BEAUTIFUL YEAR BOOK

Instead of a Calendar we offer to our subscribers this year a copy of the very attractive little book entitled, "Daily Food for Christians." This contains a Bible reading for every day in the year, the Lord's Prayer, the Ten Commandments, the Apostles' Creed, and carefully selected verses from choice hymns. The book is bound in cloth and is of convenient size for carrying in the pocket or handbag, if so desired.

Our readers will please notice carefully the conditions upon which this book will be furnished to those who desire it. We will give a copy of "Daily Food," postpaid, and one year's subscription, new or renewal, to the American Messenger for 60 cents, or we will give the book as a premium to any subscriber who renews his or her own subscription for 1917 and sends one new subscription, remitting $1.00 in all. If the new subscriber in the foregoing case desires a copy of "Daily Food," $1.10 must be remitted. For every Canadian subscription 12 cents additional must be remitted, and for every foreign subscription 24 cents additional.

OUR SPECIAL SUBSCRIPTION OFFER:

scribers will thus receive both the Thanksgiving and Christmas numbers for 1917, free of cost, if they subscribe at once. They will also be entitled to receive a copy of the book entitled "Daily Food for Christians," upon the payment of only ten cents additional.

AMERICAN MESSENGER, Park Avenue and 40th Street, NEW YORK

The American Messenger

"Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Luke 2:10

Vol. 75. No. 10

OCTOBER, 1917

Copyright, 1917, by American Tract Society.

Terms: 50 cents per annum
Single copy, 5 cents

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

PUBLISHED MONTHLY

BY THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

OFFICERS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President.

JOHN HENRY JOWETT, M.A., D.D., Vice-President.

JUDSON SWIFT, D.D., General Secretary.

LOUIS TAG, Treasurer.

REV. HENRY LEWIS, Ph.D., Recording Secretary.

All of the above-named officers should be addressed at Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Rev. David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.

Rev. Charles Carroll Albertson, D.D.

Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.

Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D.

Rev. George Ernest Merriam.

Entered at the Post Office in New York as second-class matter.

Our Announcement and Special Offer

On page 146 of this issue of the AMERICAN MESSENGER will be found a statement of the forthcoming features of this periodical and a special offer, whereby those who renew their subscriptions promptly may, by the payment of only ten cents additional, secure a copy of our beautiful little yearbook entitled, "Daily Food for Christians."

In our Announcement will be found mention of some of the interesting features that are in store for our readers during the coming months. It must be remembered, however, that since ours is a paper that aims to keep abreast of the times, there will be many desirable features of which it is impossible to give advance notice at this time. Furthermore the limitations of space prevent a complete statement of all the attractive articles that we have on hand or an enumeration of all the able writers whose contributions we are privileged to print in our columns.

As our present subscribers well know, the AMERICAN MESSENGER is inspirational in character, evangelical in tone and interdenominational in its affiliations. It stands for a pure, simple Gospel and it aims to promote in every possible way the progress of the Kingdom of God.

We are engaged at this time in a special effort to extend the circulation of the AMERICAN MESSENGER, for we believe that no home is really complete without a copy of this periodical, which contains something of value for every member of the family. We therefore bespeak the assistance of all our readers in increasing its circulation and thus aiding the cause of pure evangelical Christianity.

The Patriot Library

Literature in large and increasing quantities for the men on the battleships and for the soldiers in training and going to France is being furnished by the American Tract Society.

In addition to "The Soldier's Text Book," "Cromwell's Soldier's Pocket Bible," and several leaflets especially prepared for the Army and Navy, a capital library consisting of twenty volumes and entitled, "The Patriot Library for Our Soldiers and Sailors," has been selected and is being forwarded to the battleships and also to the various cantonments and camps and wherever the soldiers are in training. The value of the library is $20.00; a donation of $12.00 will provide one Patriot Library, the Tract Society furnishing the balance.

Our soldiers and sailors need and must have wholesome and uplifting literature. It is a real necessity; indeed, it is more needed by our boys than all other equipment. The Chaplain of one of the U. S. Battleships wrote:

"I am delighted with your offering of literature to meet the needs of the men aboard this ship. Our greatest need is attractive and wholesome literature. The grants you are making are a great help, and any more that you are able to do will be greatly appreciated."

One Hundred Thousand Dollars ($100,000.00) is urgently and immediately needed for this work, which is dependent upon special donations. A most earnest appeal is therefore made for this vital and important object. Donations should be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, American Tract Society, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

The Need for Watchfulness

The necessity for guarding against the insidious approaches of false religious teachers is disclosed in the recent revelation of the fact that the authorities of the Mormon Church have been putting forth an edition of the Bible containing a section inserted between the Old and New Testaments consisting of 118 pages of Mormon teaching. There was no mark on the outside of this Bible to distinguish it from the ordinary King James Version. The only indication of the evil hand of the Mormon Church was on the title page of the Mormon section, which stated that it was "Copyrighted, 1917, by Joseph F. Smith, Trustee in Trust for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." Most misleading was the statement which it carried that this edition of the Bible was "designed for the use of missionaries and other students of the Scriptures."

We are told that the publication of this edition of the Bible has been discontinued by the well-known publishing house which was inveigled into handling it for the Mormon authorities. But it is significant that this action was not taken until vigorous protests had been made by various Christian organizations which felt outraged by this insidious attempt to propagate the Mormon doctrine and to palm off Mormon teachings under the guise of Christian literature.

This episode shows that Christians must be on the alert even in purchasing copies of the Scriptures to see that they are securing the Bible in its integrity, free from any combination with either Mormon or other false religious teachings.

The New Liberty Loan

The religious papers of our land have been asked by the United States Government to aid in the promotion of the new Liberty Loan, subscriptions for which will soon be asked from the general public.

We are confident that the Christian people of this land realize the seriousness of the struggle in which our nation is now engaged, and that they will give generous support to the Government in its plans to provide in part for the necessary expenses of this war by the issue of the new series of Liberty Bonds, the first output of which was so liberally over-subscribed.

Some have expressed the opinion that it would be difficult to dispose of the new Liberty Bonds, but we hope and believe that the American people will see to it that this new issue is no less successful than the first, and we bespeak the patriotic co-operation of our readers in this matter which is of such vital importance to the welfare of our nation.

Bibles for West Point Cadets

For the second time in the history of our country the entire Senior Class in the United States Military Academy at West Point was graduated a year ahead of time. The graduating exercises of this class took place in the latter part of August, and great simplicity marked the event.

The distribution of Bibles was not overlooked, and on August 26, 1917, the one hundred and fifty-two members of the graduating class were presented with Bibles provided by the American Tract Society in accordance with its regular custom. Eighty-six of the Bibles presented were in the Revised Version, fourteen in the Authorized or King James Version, forty-four in the Douai Version and eight in the Spanish Version.

Subscription Blanks

In this issue of the AMERICAN MESSENGER we enclose a subscription blank for the convenience of our subscribers in renewing their subscriptions to this paper.

If your own subscription is already paid in advance we suggest that you use the blank for sending us the name and address of some friend to whom you would like to make the gift of a year's subscription to this paper.

We are confident that such a gift would be highly appreciated, especially since the friend for whom you subscribe will receive the Thanksgiving and Christmas issues of this year free;

if you send ten cents additional, your friend will also receive a copy of our beautiful little yearbook entitled, "Daily Food."

Please look for the date on the address label of your paper, as it indicates to what time your subscription is paid. It would be a great accommodation to us if you would send in your subscription orders at once, thereby avoiding the delays that may occur later, when the rush of the winter season has begun.

The War Duty of Our Boys

We have been impressed by an editorial in a recent issue of The American Boy, which advises the boys of our land, who are not yet of military age to return to school this Fall and thus fit themselves for better service for their country in later years. This is sound counsel, and it carries the endorsement of the leading officials of our Government as well as the foremost educators of our land. Many boys will undoubtedly feel tempted to run away from school and to enlist in the Army or Navy. But that boy will render the greatest service to his country who remains at school and fits himself to render skilled service in the coming days, when there will be a greater demand than ever for trained and educated workers.

Physical Aids to Spiritual Health

BY JAMES MUDGE, D. D.

IN THAT truly wonderful poem, "Rabbi Ben Ezra," so deep, weighty and inspiring, Robert Browning sings, as perhaps no other has done, the worth of life and the glories of old age, giving also enthusiastic yet chastened expression to the supremacy of soul over body and of mind over matter. Nevertheless, the great poet, a veritable seer, with marvellous insight, both philosophical and spiritual, fully recognizes the other side of the situation in the following lines:

"Let us not always say,
Spite of this flesh today

I strove, made head, gained ground upon the whole!"

As the bird wings and sings,

Let us cry, 'All good things, [soul!]"

Are ours, nor soul helps flesh more now than flesh helps

Yes, flesh helps, or hinders, soul, and the "body at its best" can potently "project the soul on its lone way." But if the body be not at its best, then there is obstruction and retardment. A weak body commands the soul and tyrannizes over it; a strong body obeys the soul. The spirit cannot easily do what it will when the fleshy instrument, through which it must operate, is a continual impediment and embarrassment. To overcome that encumbrance uses up strength which might otherwise have gone into increased efficiency. That many have overcome, and "in spite of this flesh" have most nobly gained ground is to their everlasting credit. But in most cases they would surely have gone further, had there been less interference.

No part of us can be really perfect, that is perfect in anything but a modified and approximate fashion, unless all is perfect. That fact follows from the close, inextricable way in which we are linked together through mysterious joints and bands, made one throughout from top to toe, from center to circumference. We may not be prepared to say with old Samuel Johnson, "Every man is a rascal as soon as he is sick." That, of course, is an exaggeration, as is also Emerson's somewhat similar dictum, "Sickness is felony."

But there is important truth at the bottom of such sayings as those just quoted. The spiritual development is dependent upon the intellectual at many points, as is evident to every judicious observer. And the intellectual condition is in turn most intimately dependent upon the physical. Mind, body and soul, under their present conditions of conjunction are inseparably interpenetrative and indissolubly integrated. Every disease has certain specific mental and spiritual effects readily traceable, as all physicians know. All abnormal physical states, however slight, are accompanied by more or less abnormal mental and spiritual states, up to pronounced insanity or the total overthrow of reason, which is usually but the result of violated laws of health. Phillips Brooks fitly and truly says, "Every man has in his bodily constitution the physical basis of the most subtle and transcendent parts of his profoundest life. Out from the very marrow of his bones comes something which his finest affections never outgo, and which gives a color to his soul's loftiest visions. It is on the harp of his nervous system that the psalm of his life is played. There is a physical basis to his most spiritual life. A man thinks well and loves well and prays well because of the red running of his blood." In the words of Paul, "That is not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; and then that which is spiritual." Dyspepsia and indigestion give the devil a great advantage. That distinguished divine who, when asked if he enjoyed the full assurance of salvation, replied, "Yes, except when the wind is in the East," put his finger on a vital spot and has the sympathy of many fellow-sufferers.

We must then keep in good health if we would be most effective in God's service and most acceptable in His sight. God's realm of law is one. Carelessness and disobedience on the physical side will naturally and necessarily promote the same characteristics on the spiritual side. He who is particular as to exact observance of the smallest rules which the Almighty has laid down for the care of these clay temples of the Holy Ghost will find it easy to give similar heed in every other direction. They who dishonor their bodies will be very likely to dishonor their souls, too.

The highest spiritual attainments cannot be reached without a great deal of energy. No lackadaisical, nerveless, half-hearted, irresolute endeavor will accomplish anything. The same ambition, vigor, initiative, and fixed purpose which carries a man to the top in business will carry him to the top in piety if that be his aim. Weakness of mind or body will inevitably slow down the advance and detract from the outcome. Furthermore, that is a very poor sort of religion which has not a large infusion of cheerfulness; and this goes almost as a matter of course with good health. Mental balance also belongs in this same category, and dispenses with the vast swarms of superstitions and fanaticisms which have so sadly impeded the progress of mankind.

It is of high significance that in the experiences of good men, fasting and prayer are so often connected. The former helps the body to obey; the latter helps the soul to command. The mind is clearer when not weighed down by the accumulations of the gross elements that minister to the flesh, and the spirit soars the higher when liberated in some measure from bondage to the earthly.

Spiritual health, by which we mean right relations with God and constant activity in His cause, is promoted, therefore, in part, by close attention to the state of our bodies; and he is a very foolish man who forgets this. Physical health is not, of course, all, but it is something; something we cannot afford to do without. "Bodily exercise," says Paul to Timothy, "is profitable for a little." Eating, drinking, bathing and sleeping in right ways are also profitable. And when these are all put together they make a vast difference both in the physical and the spiritual condition. It is not too much to say that among the price requisites to success in saintliness must be a vigilant preserving of that "earthly vessel" in which is contained the heavenly "treasure," a jealous watchfulness over the "temple" which the Lord condescends to use for His dwelling place. Rules in this matter are by no means to be despised. Indeed, without rules there is pretty sure to be ruin.

One good rule is, look after minutiae and despise not trifles. It pays to take pains with whatever relates to so important a matter as health. It is foolish to run risks which might be escaped by a little trouble. The old motto, "Avoid beginnings," is nowhere more pertinent than here. "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." How often have the seeds of fatal disease been implanted by a few moments of heedless exposure. Many a person has died because he thought it silly or too burdensome to put on wraps for going across the street or to wear rubbers on a wet day, or to keep out of a draught when in perspiration, or to take advice betimes from a physician.

Another rule is, keep a good margin of health. In other words, do not let your stock of vitality run low, or get drawn upon till there is little or no supply available for the emergencies which are liable at any time to spring up. This is the ever-present peril of over-work. A man may be all right for ordinary occasions, and may think that to be sufficient. He learns his mistake when all of a sudden some extraordinary call is made upon him and he is unable to meet it successfully. If he had not been run down he could easily have weathered the gale, but as it was, he went under. He who keeps in tip-top condition has a staying power which staves off death, when otherwise dissolution would be speedy.

Both these rules for bodily health apply to soul health as well. He who forms a habit of heeding them in the one direction will be likely to apply them in the other. He will also be aided in that most important matter of connecting God with all material or physical things. He will say to himself, "My body is the Lord's, everything is His, and since I am His and He is mine, everything is mine. I am a freeman of the universe and all is well." Such an one is clad in a coat of mail which no weapon can penetrate, he rides above the storms, he communes continually with the Infinite Friendliness and he lives in glory almost divine.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTION

DR. DAVID J. BURRELL.

THE LAUGHTER OF GOD

BY

REV. DAVID JAMES BURRELL, D.D., LL.D.

Pastor of the Marble Collegiate Church, New York City

LET no devout reader be shocked at the bold suggestion of the headline of this article. For God does laugh. He laughs at the proud defiance of men, at the reckless impiety of nations, and at the grotesque folly of the so-called "Great Powers" that array themselves against Him. Why not? Is there no occasion for laughter when earth-worms lift their heads from the dust to block the progress of the King's chariot?

You may find this startling figure of speech in the Second Psalm, which seems to have been written in anticipation of the very days in which we are now living. It is appropriately entitled, "Kings are exhorted to accept the Kingdom of Christ." Here is food for contemplation at a time when principalities and powers are setting the heavens afire and disturbing the foundations of the great deep. Woe to the nations that would bind the God of Peace with the green withers of an unrighteous war! But be patient and you shall see how He maketh the wrath of men and nations to praise Him.

O thou of little faith, wherefore dost thou doubt? Our God is a great God and greatly to be feared above all gods. He sitteth upon a throne high and lifted up; so high that the nations are but as the small dust of the balance before Him.

When the red clouds of Armageddon roll by, we shall have "a new world wherein dwell eth righteousness;" and it will be a distinctly better world to live in. We shall see then that justice and mercy meet together in the divine character; and Reverence will join hands with Love in our devotions. For while we have been saying, "God is love," it is greatly to be feared that we have overlooked a proposition which He is now writing in flame across the skies, to wit, "Our God is a consuming fire." This is the time to lay our hands upon our mouths and hearken to His word, "Be still and know that I am God."

Now is come the testing of our faith. To pray on a bright morning, "Thy Kingdom come" is mere lip-service unless, when Gog and Magog sound the tocsin that midnight, we can say, "Now, Lord, Thy Kingdom cometh!" The knees of Little-faith tremble when he sees the armies of Syria encamped about the walls of Dothan; but when his eyes are opened, "Behold the mountains are full of the horses and chariots of God!"

The Second Psalm was written to celebrate the coming of Messiah to His throne. One who reads between the lines (as the disciples did in Acts 4:25) beholds Him on His invisible march along the centuries, like Henry of Navarre, whose white plume ever waved in the forefront of the battle-line. The whole Psalm is intensely dramatic. It is divided into four stanzas of three verses each.

In the first stanza we find ourselves in the midst of a tumult of the nations. The heathen are raging: the people are yielding themselves to a vain, ungovernable frenzy; their sovereigns and rulers are taking counsel together against—what? "Against the Lord and his Anointed;" that is against God and His only begotten Son! They are crying, "Let us break their bonds asunder and cast away their cords from us." These are the bonds of law; these are the cords of righteousness; but the reckless nations will have none of them. They revolt against all salutary restraints and refuse to have God's Anointed rule over them.

In the second stanza we hear the burst of laughter from the throne of God. "He that sitteth in the heavens will laugh: the Lord will have them in derision." So impotent are the champions of wrong and frightfulness. It is as if a swarm of gnats were to conspire against Euroclydon; or as if a nest of blind adders were to lift themselves against the noon-day sun. With what supreme contempt must the Omnipotent view the opposition of such creatures of His hand! What wonder that He laughs?

Then does He "vex them in his sore displeasure." Vexation is the inevitable fruit of impiety. Was there ever a time in history when the arrogant and self-sufficient Powers were so utterly at their wits' end as now? Starved, impoverished, desperate and still holding out! Vexed unto death, yet fighting on in the scarred earth and the heavens above and the waters under the earth! Groaning under the sore displeasure of God and still refusing to acknowledge Him! And alas, so long as the Hittites and the Perizzites are on the field the hosts of Israel must be there to defend justice and humanity. But when shall the end be?

The Lord is further represented as speaking unto them in His wrath. Hear Him as He reads the Riot Act: "Yet I have set my King upon my holy hill of Zion." There is a world of meaning in that "yet." It intimates that all the impious plans which are devised against God shall ultimately vanish into thin air. "Despite your counseling and raging, your puny militarism and boast of victory, my Anointed shall sit supreme among the nations and rule the world from His holy hill,"—this is the divine ultimatum. From the beginning of the ages the conquest of Emmanuel has been so determined that even the wrath of His enemies shall be subsidized to accomplish it,

"For right is right, since God is God,
And right the day must win;
To doubt would be disloyalty,
To falter would be sin."

In the third stanza the Heir apparent presents himself in person, and offers his credentials. "I will tell of the decree," he says, and thereupon he proceeds, as it were, to unfold a parchment, bearing the signature of Jehovah and sealed with His signet, in which Christ is named Viceregent of the world. It reads thus: "Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee. Ask of me, and I will give the nations for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession."

Observe, first, that the Anointed (literally, the Christ) here vindicates His Sonship and consequent title to the throne. Observe, second, He affirms that His royal title was assured to Him on a certain day—"this day." Peter tells us that this was the day when He triumphed over death: "We declare unto you glad tidings, how that the promise which was made unto the fathers, God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children in that he hath raised up Jesus again; as it is also written in the Second Psalm, Thou art my son; this day have I begotten thee." We drink of the paschal cup, accordingly, in celebration of "this day," and look forward with glad anticipation to another day when all our Sabbath assemblies shall be gathered into one under the great dome of heaven to crown Him Lord of all. Observe, third, the decree is made doubly sure by a promise, "Ask of me, and I will give thee the nations for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." Did Christ ever ask this? Was there ever such a prayer as He offered when, with His hands stretched upon the Cross, He lifted up His eyes to heaven? "Give me, O Father, the fruit of the travail of my soul! Give me the heathen for my inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for my possession!" Will that prayer be answered? Aye, by the God who said, "When he shall give his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand."

But there is another side to the outlook and a darker one. The powers that defy His authority are to be broken "with a rod of iron," and dashed in pieces "like a potter's vessel." The paths of history are lined with the sad memorials of nations that have died for running on the bosses of His shield. Will America survive? That depends on our loyalty to the Christian principles on which our Government was founded. If these go by default, we shall join the long procession of dynasties that have gone before us.

In the fourth stanza the Psalmist exhorts the rebellious to lay down their arms and fall in with the beneficent plan of God: "Be wise, O ye kings; be instructed, ye judges of the earth."

The part of wisdom is to bow humbly before God. The merest simpleton who acknowledges the government of the Most High is wiser than any undevout philosopher; because the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom. At the center of the divine administration stands

Christ, in whose final reign all the lines of history converge. Therefore to reject Christ is to commit lese majeste: and this is the unpardonable sin. It is a sin against the Father, against the Son, and against the Holy Spirit, whose official function is to take of the things of Jesus and show them unto us.

Let us hear now the conclusion of the whole matter: "Serve Jehovah with fear, and rejoice with trembling. Kiss the Son, lest He be angry, and ye perish in the way, for His wrath will soon be kindled." To kiss the prince in ancient times, was a token of fealty. "To kiss the Son" is to pass under His yoke, to submit to His authority, to surrender all to Him. And in view of what He has done for us, this is the reasonable service of every man.

In an autographic album of my school days at Andover, dated 1861, is a page bearing this familiar quotation:

"We are living, we are dwelling,
In a grand and awful time;
In an age on ages telling
To be living is sublime."

The lines are significant but made doubly so by the name inscribed beneath them—Harriet Beecher Stowe. She wrote that page in the opening year of our Civil War. What would she think, if she were living today, when the whole world is aflame? Hers was a strong faith, strong enough, I believe, to lay hold on the final triumph of truth and goodness, yea, though the earth be removed and the mountains be cast into the midst of the sea.

"Blessed are all they that take refuge in him." So ends this wonderful up-to-date Psalm. Let not our faith in Omnipotent Goodness fail us in these troublous days. The decree has gone forth:

"Jesus shall reign where'er the sun
Doth his successive journeys run;
His Kingdom stretch from shore to shore,
Till moons shall wax and wane no more."

Thus it is written, and thus it shall be; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.

Buying Up Opportunities

BY REV. C. A. S. DWIGHT, PH. D.

Opportunity, which forms a favorite theme with the moralist, is generally thought of as a kind of chance value, or haphazard thing, which falls as unheralded as a snow-flake, or sweeps around hither and thither as mysteriously as the wind.

The term "opportunity" does indeed etymologically signify "opposite the harbor" (from the Latin words ob and portus), and might therefore seem to denote a real or apparent appositeness of means to ends (as when Paul found at Fair Havens a ship ready to sail to Italy) or a conjunction of circumstances assumed to be propitious. But the barque of our hopes may not always lie for us anchored conveniently "before the harbor"—it may have to be painfully sought, or even purchased outright. In the New Testament we are told that we should be found "redeeming the time," which phrase might be translated "buying up opportunities."

In a certain limited but real sense every man may make his own opportunities. If he cannot wholly control circumstances he may control himself—he may so train his own powers, so husband and develop his personal resources, and so adapt means to ends that when the favorable conjunction of circumstances occurs (which the crowd calls a "chance") he is all ready to go in and to make the most of the "troubling of the water." Too many individuals loiter or sleep by Bethesda's Pool when they should be eagerly watching for the angel.

"Opportunity" lies as much in us as without us. It is of little value to wait for something to turn up—the better way is to turn up good things while waiting. Instead of wasting time while the irons feebly glow in the unworked forge, stir up the embers, put on the draft, and make the tools red hot for quick and earnest use.

Values We Cannot Reckon

By Rev. I. Mench Chambers, D.D.

HERE is a great temptation in these days to lose sight of the real values of life. The emphasis is too frequently placed on toleration and freedom. Pleasures run to seed. So much time is lost to the things that are vital. The home has put the soft pedal on discipline. Bible instruction and study are practically omitted. Family worship seems out of date, and in many homes even "grace" at meals is an obsolete practice.

The young people of our generation are growing up with the idea that the real value of life lies in the things seen. We have departed from the old and proven standards, and the very people who fail to show reverence for God, are asking, "What is the matter with the Church?" The real fault is usually with the questioner who has failed to fulfill the teaching of the Church, and who has lost a due sense of the relative values of things.

Jesus refers us to a young man who neglected to make the right choice. There was later a vein of sadness in that young man's life. His fault lay in the fact that he refused to give to his life its true adjustment to God. The true values of life are only found when you honestly relate your whole life to God through Jesus Christ, and then persist daily in following Him.

There are but two kinds of treasures to be found—those of earth and those of heaven. The former are left here; no earthly treasures are ever taken away. The treasures in heaven are gathered here and kept there. These are our true spiritual asset. Earthly treasures reach beyond time, only when they are used for God.

Jesus taught a life of service for others. The work He did was all for others. The world has not yet begun to measure its value. We are only beginning to understand Jesus Christ. All the gains of higher civilization inhere in Him. The home, the sanctity of life and the Church, have but one fountain.

Take two great thoughts enforced by the Master—God as Father, and human brotherhood. How these ideas became lost in man's carnal dream. We witness the cataclysm of brute force in Europe. The spirit of hate engendered by this awful conflict will blur the sense of brotherhood and put back the Kingdom of God for a generation. This is man's doing.

Few of us have been doing all the good that we could down through the years. But just suppose that we had! Our best asset today is that of unselfish service. What are you worth today? I do not mean your material holdings. The real value of your treasure lies in what you have been, for that has conditioned what you have done that is worth while. Every one who thinks he is rich is not. We may be rich in this world's goods and not be rich toward God through good works. Two men live in the same town. Yes, they reside on the same street. They live side by side but a great distance lies between their purposes. These two men die. The one leaves his wealth here. The other goes to find his beyond. The one grew rich by making others poor; the other man was poor as this world measures values, yet through his poverty was always enriching others. Christ's words and example have something important to teach us all concerning the true values of life.

It is an unvarying law that two things will return to you as their owner sooner or later. The one is the wrong you do, and the other is the good you do. God's established value of life cannot be abrogated. Give and it shall be given unto you. Nothing but a good life pays in the end, and we are coming nearer to this point each day. No blessing given to help another on will be lost in the day of reckoning. That soul is rich who can say with one of old: "There is laid up for me in heaven the real treasure of love's service."

The temptation may come to be selfish like so many around you, and to cease to care for those who pass you on the road of life. It might be easier to go on in a heedless fashion, but to deny your Lord and Master your share of ministry is to come home at eventide with a heavy and troubled heart. To even try, though it costs you much, to be like Him for the whole term of life is the only way to live. This is the way to come home rejoicing, and to miss this satisfaction, is to lose out whatever else you gain.

There are three things you cannot duplicate anywhere:

First, a good seed dropped in the furrow of life.

Second, a good conscience, all your own, because you planted it.

Third, God's eternal promise, "Ye shall reap if ye faint not."

Bruce Barton, speaking of the influence for good which his lamented father left upon the world through a beautiful ministry of fifty years, said after detailing the reach of the feeling of grief at his departure, "but a life that for fifty years has sweetened other lives a hundred times a day—who can see to its real horizon?"

Yes, there are some values we cannot reckon here. They lodge in realms beyond the finite grasp. These values may be associated with a humble and common-place life. They inhere in the quiet and substantial good you do in God's name for others as the days go by. Your Father will gather and hold them as the blest treasures of heaven to be received in that sweet day when God shall accord you the profits of a good life. Let us not forget this, for,

"There is no end to the sky,
And the stars are everywhere,
And time is eternity,
And the here is over There;
For the common deeds of the common day
Are ringing bells in the far-away."

An Undivided Loyalty

BY REV. HENRY LEWIS, PH. D.

The time has come when there can be no compromise on the question of loyalty to our country. There is no room for a divided allegiance. Every man, woman and child in the United States must choose between loyalty and disloyalty, between patriotism or treason.

Our country is engaged in the greatest struggle upon which it has ever entered; it has become a participant in the greatest war known to the world's history. Into that contest it must throw all its power so that victory may be achieved for the righteous cause for which we fight.

In this hour of trial we must loyally support the government. If there be need of criticism let that criticism be given in a helpful, constructive way, which will not serve in the slightest way to give aid or comfort to our enemies.

We are engaged in a war which calls for sacrifice and service not only on the part of those who are called to the colors but on the part of all who love the cause of democracy, and who desire that "government of the people, by the people and for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

The Gift of God: A Reformation Study

By Rev. Frederick H. Knubel, D.D.

THE noise of a world-conflict fills our ears. He who harkens will discern also the echo of a conflict four centuries ago. The two struggles are related, but we cannot consider the relationship here. The whole earth will be blessed, however, if it will try to hear that echo from the past, and will heed the call just now to celebrate the 400th anniversary of the Reformation. This is the year, and October 31 is the special date that is to be observed.

Many inviting reasons urge us to study what happened in that past, and thus to understand the present celebration. A right regard for history demands it. The pages of history are often dull reading, until we realize that men like us suffered or rejoiced in the times of which we read. When thus seen, history becomes the story of our fathers, who bequeathed to us the riches their lives earned. It becomes a wonderful school of human experience to us. It becomes a revelation of the unity of mankind, for we feel the likeness of men in all times and places. In such a right regard for history, the Reformation stands forth as the second age of the world in importance. The time of Jesus is first. History therefore bids us study the Reformation.

A Search for Vital Truth

The love of truth demands it also. Are we lovers of truth? We say we hate a lie. We are insulted if we are called liars. We are angered whenever we have been deceived. But do we long for truth above pleasure, honor and gold? Are we akin to those who have wooed the truth in lonely deserts and dark catacombs and bought it with blood and treasure and life itself? If God may be known, do we realize that indifference, half-heartedness or contentment with anything but positiveness as to Him, is sin in the climax? If we love the truth, then let us know that the Reformation was supremely concerned about truth. It was vital truth also, which goes to the foundation of thinking.

True Americanism should compel us to understand the Reformation. We rejoice in the principles and privileges of our nation. Civic and religious liberty, freedom of conscience, the right of private judgment and the expression thereof, separation of Church and State, public education! What charm those phrases hold. Whence did they arise? Who were those who came to these shores and shaped the course of our national thought? They were the children of the Reformation. Can we rightly understand and develop our privileges unless we go to their source?

Our souls' joys call upon us to appreciate the Reformation. We refer to the joys of Christians—of those into whose hearts the full light of Protestantism's glory has shone. We mean the joy of a gracious forgiveness, once for all complete, whatever our sin—not a partial forgiveness, for the completion of which we must offer some amends; the joy of a wonderful Saviour who expiated our guilt; the perfect rest in Him from an accusing conscience; the "at-homeness" and "freedom of speech," as we go to that God and Saviour directly, with no need of priest or virgin or saint to intervene; the delight in searching His open Word freely, and expecting Him to speak there; the exhilaration of the effort to do the right, not because commanded nor in fear nor to win His favor, but simply out of love for Him; the growing possibility in His love, of loving others and dying unto selfhood; all the liberty, the beauty and the power of these supreme joys. If we know them at all we long to talk with the men in whose lives these things were worked out by our God. Our hearts reach back to touch the time when the fulness of these joys became known to the world. That time was the Reformation.

All of the above reasons for understanding and celebrating the Reformation may be summed up in one—gratitude to God. We would not despise His unspeakable gifts. All that have been mentioned—the bequests from our fathers, final truth, the privileges of our national life, the Christian joys—are clearly the gifts of God. Only as His gift can we rightly appreciate that world movement four hundred years ago. That is why this article bears the title, "The Gift of God—A Reformation Study."

The Challenge of a Soul Athirst for God

As we turn now to those times it is not our purpose to retell their story. That is known, or may easily be known by all. It is a thrilling story of strong human lives. A number of them fill leading parts. In one life, however, may the whole movement be seen and known. One man's experiences embodied the gift to the world. That man was Martin Luther. It was an act of his on October 31, 1517, which provides the Reformation date. That act was not one of supreme importance, being merely the nailing of ninety-five theses or statements of religious belief to the door of the Castle Church at Wittenberg. It was a customary summons for public debate. The theses formed, however, the hot challenge of a soul athirst for God. With what preceded and followed, with the developing antagonism to and the defence of those propositions, through the controlling Providence of God, the gateway of modern history was thrown open, the world's thoughts mounted to wide horizons and the world's life breathed the freer air.

We may clearly understand the Reformation if we understand Luther. That seems, however, a difficult task. The passing years have studied him more and more. New points of view are ever being gained. Some one has said, "Estimated by the catalog of the British Museum, which would certainly not err in favor of the German, more has been written about the Reformer than about Shakespeare or Napoleon or Dante. In fact, no other name in this catalog, save that of Jesus Christ, exceeds or approaches the amount of space given to registering the titles of works about Martin Luther." Is his personality then so hopelessly confusing? Is there no purposeful harmony to his character? Does his life leave a vague message to men? He was indeed a many-sided man. He was a mystic, though a statesman; an educator, though a jovial companion; a philosopher, though a poet and a musician; a man of restless, limitless activity, though a genial house-father; one who spoke at times with rough, course, fiery invective, though a friend of children. In spite of all these seeming contradictions, he is the simplest of men to understand. His greatness is the greatness of simplicity. One central fact alone needs to be recognized, and all seeming complexity of character, of personality, disappears. That one fact is the reality of Jesus Christ. To Luther nothing was so powerfully real nor so really powerful as Jesus. In understanding the Reformation that fact must be understood concerning the Reformer.

Unseen, spiritual existences were always intensely real, even to the boy Martin. This he learned, even to the extent of superstition, from his mother. In the years of youth he was afraid of God with a real terror. The saints were present realities. The later legend of the inkstand thrown at the devil is altogether in keeping with his customary, vivid appreciation of spiritual beings. The exhausting, ceaseless struggles as a monk to satisfy the righteousness of God came from his keen vision of an exacting Personality from whom there was no escape. There could be and there was no peace for such a mind, alive not only to its own confusions and to the confusions of the seen world but also to the seemingly worse confusions of the spiritual world until Luther saw clearly the One who graciously rules things seen and unseen. Quickly, surely, increasingly this glorious Reality became the centre of his life. For him to live was Christ.

The Secret of Luther's Courage

Everywhere in his life and writings this controlling factor of Christ's reality is manifest. It explains his dauntless courage—his fearlessness, for instance, in the epoch-making scene at the Diet of Worms, declaring as he stood there, "I can do no other," though his death seemed sure. "He endured, as seeing Him who is invisible." That factor explains just as well the exuberant joviality of his spirits. It was youthful joy through the reality of his living Friend. We understand likewise the source of his poetry. The poet is always one whose eyes have been opened to see the unseen. With the poetry and the joy and the courage arose his songs of faith in the unseen Christ, such as, "There Fights for Us the Proper One." We can understand with equal clearness the strong mystic strain in all his thought. He practiced the presence of Christ. In every hour of discouragement his consolation had that same origin, the reality of the living Christ. It is a well-known story that once Melancthon came to him at a time when matters had gone ill with the Reformation. It was night, and he found Luther alone in the dark, seated before a desk. When lights were brought, Melancthon saw that the Reformer had amid his disheartened thoughts written with chalk in large letters upon the desk the Latin words, "Vivit, vivit"—"He lives! He lives!" The same dominating thought in Luther's life controlled naturally all of his theological convictions. When writing, for instance, of predestination, he would say plainly, "Do not pry into things too high for you. He who is wise will stick to the track here staked off. God has given us His Son, Jesus Christ; of Him we should think daily, and in Him we should see ourselves mirrored; there predestination will solve itself most beautifully. For aside from Christ, all is sheer danger, death and devil; but in Him all is unalloyed felicity." "The best thing theology can teach us is to know Christ." He had the same test by which to judge the books of the Bible, "What teaches Christ, that is Scripture, even if Judas and Pilate had written it."

Luther is therefore no complex personality. The common people understood and may understand him readily. In knowing him they know the Reformation. Such an understanding involves merely a vivid appreciation of the reality of Jesus Christ, God's unspeakable gift. To study the Reformation is to know the gift of God. Thus once more our theme is emphasized.

The reader may be ready to ask, however, whether this truth was new to the world. Were there not saints before the Reformation times to whom the reality of the unseen Christ was quite as emphatic as it was to Luther? We know, for instance, the beautiful hymn of Bernard of Clairvaux:

"Jesus, the very thought of Thee
With gladness fills my breast;
But dearer far Thy face to see,
And in Thy presence rest."

That is true. There had always been Christians who had seen with joy the present, powerful Christ. It was not until the Reformation, however, that men came to see and to realize Him as a perfect Saviour from sin. Only then came the appreciation that by His atonement man's debt of sin has been once for all completely paid. Only then did it become clear that a man may be credited with the sinlessness, the perfect righteousness of Christ,—that he may fully have as his own before God all the merits which belong to his Saviour. Only then was the way to God seen as standing wide open to all. Only then was it possible for a man to know the certainty of his salvation now and forever. All of this salvation was and is his, if he merely look to that Christ with faith, if he merely accept the salvation with loving confidence. This is the ringing slogan of the Reformation, "Justified by faith alone."

The Christian world had long known its sin, had long seen its Saviour, had long yearned and struggled to know the way of an assured salvation. Into that struggle Luther's soul was plunged. It was the black darkness of his troubled heart, it was sin-burdened conscience crying for peace and finding none, it was the agony of his dark consciousness of guilt before God longing for the light of a reconciled Father's face—it was this upon which the light shone: "I believe in the forgiveness of sins." "The just shall live by faith." This truth formed the keynote of the ninety-five theses which Luther nailed before the world. Joyously, confidently echoed and re-echoed by him, it became the war-cry of that mighty controversy, that tremendous conflict which shook Europe from end to end in the sixteenth century. Let us state it in other words. The certainty of salvation depends alone upon an unreserved acceptance of that which God offers in Jesus Christ. This unreserved acceptance the Apostle Paul (and after him Luther) calls faith.

The Reformation tells us what faith secures—an assured salvation. It is not, however, faith which does the saving. The great Christ whom faith grasps does that. The very faith itself is a gift of God. "By grace are ye saved through faith; and that (faith) not of yourselves; it is the gift of God." We are only returning again to our thought throughout. He who studies the Reformation discovers over and over the gifts of God. It is all from God's gift, from God's grace that we are saved.

Indeed, let us say it in conclusion, and as a summary of the whole discussion, our study of Luther and of the Reformation cannot be complete until we see the reality of Jesus Christ and the offer made to faith—until we see them as gifts of God—until above all we see them as gifts which are ours as freely and fully as they were Luther's.

The Path of Joy

BY GEORGE L. NYMAN.

*When on thee dawns another day,
Thy strength renewed
By Slumber's soft sweet lullaby,
List not for Trouble's fretful cry,
Woo not her brood,
But follow Joy along her way.*

*Seek pure delights that children know,
In sweet wild rose,
In nodding clover's fragrant heart
A message from the world apart,
That Love bestows,
With countless blessings here below.*

A VISIT TO GRASMERE

By Annette L. Noble

FEW places are more often visited and written about than the Lake Region of England. This is not wholly due to the fact that the country is superlatively beautiful; it is rather because the so-called Lake poets dwelt among its lakes and hills, its wild mountain crags and green, sunny valleys. Even to many persons, who have never crossed the ocean, all this lovely scenery is, in a way, familiar, owing often to their appreciation of Wordsworth's poems. For more than sixty years his body has rested in the old graveyard of the Grasmere church and innumerable pilgrims to that literary shrine have read the epitaph on his tombstone:

"To the memory of William Wordsworth, a true philosopher and poet, who by a special gift and calling of Almighty God, whether he discoursed on man or nature, failed not to lift up the heart to holy things, tired not of maintaining the cause of the poor and simple, and so in perilous times was raised up to be a chief minister, not only of noblest poetry, but of high and sacred truth."

Now it is as true of Wordsworth, as it is of many other well-known writers, that his work has been both under and over-rated; today few critics would agree that his place is among the really greatest poets of all time. Still, neither this poet nor his poetry will be forgotten because both are lovingly associated with every sight and sound of this exquisitely beautiful region—Grasmere, Ambleside and Windermere. Wordsworth loved, with a kind of passionate rapture, every aspect of nature: wild storms in the mountain passes or sunny days when "golden daffodils" were found by him—

"Beside the Lake beneath the trees, Fluttering and dancing in the breeze."

Rydal Mount, where Wordsworth died, is a much more pretentious house than the little cottage where his earlier life was spent; but to most visitors the homelier dwelling is of far greater interest. It is such a quaint, humble, little house and it is wisely kept almost the same as when the poet lived there in happy, if comparative poverty. In these little, low rooms he communed with friends, many of whom are now secure of literary fame. But while he ate and slept within walls, his waking hours were usually spent out-of-doors. Often, in the company of his much-loved sister Dorothy, he would start out, "while bright and red uprose the morning sun," to spend the whole day, wandering, musing happy, because he wrote:

"Thanks to the human heart, by which we live,
Thanks to its tenderness, its joys and fears,
To me the meanest flower that blows can give Thoughts that do often lie too deep for tears."

Any one must know that Wordsworth was out under the blue heavens when he heard that skylark—"singing, singing"—or when he saw that green linnnet—"On the tuft of hazel trees," and calls him so aptly, "a brother of the dancing leaves."

Not long ago, the writer revisited Grasmere and this first home of Wordsworth, having there again that sensation one often experiences in homes where vivid personalities have once lived. Longfellow describes these dwellings as "Haunted Houses," where—

"Through the open doors
The harmless phantoms on their errands glide
With feet that make no sound upon the floor."

The tiny living-room still holds many of Wordsworth's belongings; on the walls are likenesses of his friends, autographs and books of Coleridge, Southey, De Quincy and Charles Lamb. Even the dingy kitchen, with its ancient pots and kettles, suggested the old-time living and, by contrast, it recalled such lordly homes as Walter Scott's at Abbotsford.

This cottage of Wordsworth's is shut in by a stone wall, covered with roses, and just across from the entrance is a little rustic shop, where one may buy fascinating pictures (prints from portraits) of every celebrity who has lived in this region. Haydon's likeness shows the poet in his later life, with head bent and a vast expanse of forehead, Mrs. Wordsworth is serene-looking with mild eyes and large nose, and his sister Dorothy appears round of face and placidly jolly in a queer ruffled hood and muffler as if about to start on one of those twenty-mile tramps which were as nothing to her when with her brother. Hartley Coleridge is a beautiful boy, De Quincy looks gentle but in feeble health. Samuel Taylor Coleridge seems most surprising of all. One would take his picture for that of a good-natured, beef-eating, country squire, a mighty huntsman perhaps, but no scholar.

Wordsworth died in the year 1850, and since then many have written of his life and works, but, while this recent visit to Grasmere was fresh in mind, by an odd chance, the writer found a copy of an old magazine in which was an article by a personal friend of Wordsworth, giving the kind of gossip, little facts one likes to know about celebrities. He pictures him thus: "His deep-set grey eyes steeped in contemplation, his hand buried in his waistcoat, one leg crossed over the other, reciting in a deep voice a passage from Milton—or himself—the only two poets he honored by quotations." "There was a strange mixture of the sublime and the ridiculous in his composition. He would discant on the principles of poetry with freshness and vigor and the next minute utter such astounding opinions about steamboats, reforms, human progress and politics as would make a child of ten years smile." "Early poverty had forced upon him a sense of the importance of little matters which others would think trifles. He would walk a dozen miles and call at a dozen houses to recover an old cotton umbrella, not worth a shilling." Meanwhile he might be perfecting as sublime a poem as his "Intimations of Immortality."

Building

BY CORA S. DAY.

There are some things that cannot be done by the old rule of beginning at the bottom and working toward the top. One of these exceptions is found in digging a well. Another is encountered in building a character. And even these two exceptions differ from each other. For you must start at the ground level to dig your well; while a character must be built, not from the level of earth but of heaven. From that high starting point it must reach down to the lowest depths of a human heart.

In building a character, as in building anything else, there must first be a foundation. And that foundation is faith—faith founded in turn upon the word of God.

"How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord,
Is laid for your faith in His excellent word," sings the old hymn writer triumphantly.

Let then the Word, well-read and well-pondered, underlie your faith, a living rock upon which to set your faith-foundation. Let your faith-built and strengthened character show forth the works that the Word declares to be its true fruit; and you will build day by day such a character as no man can weaken or destroy; a character built right, from Above.

HIS VINEYARD AND OURS

Primitive Conditions in India

Primitive conditions in India are illustrated in a striking way by the picture that appears on this page, which has been reproduced from a photograph sent to the American Tract Society by Rev. Joseph Passmore, Secretary of the Christian Literature Society for India, whose headquarters are at Madras.

The oil mill shown in the picture is evidently of the most primitive type, and yet the oil industry of the country is carried on largely by means of such crude machinery as is here represented. Other industries of the country are carried on in large part by equally primitive appliances.

The Christian Literature Society for India is endeavoring to provide for India a body of Christian literature in the native languages which shall serve as a means of spiritual enlightenment to that benighted land. The last available annual report of this organization shows a marked increase in its publication work. A total of 269 titles were issued in eleven different languages. Of these titles 2,978,465 copies were printed, comprising 88,974,794 pages. Since the founding of the Society a total of 54,455,756 copies of publications have been printed and circulated.

The Christian Literature Society is now in possession of a commodious plant in Madras, where a staff of 150 workers find employment, constituting the largest publishing house in India.

The American Tract Society has long aided the Christian Literature Society of India by foreign cash appropriations, and during the past year forwarded a remittance of $100.00 to aid it in the production of Christian publications in the native languages of India.

Gold From a Scrap-Heap

The "scrap-heap" was a human "scrap-heap," a criminal tribe of Hindus whose existence was largely one continual round of thieving, getting caught, and imprisonment. When asked why they did not give up such a life, their usual reply was something like this: It was the will of the gods that they should be thus, why should they seek to fashion their own destiny? Further, thieving was their business; if they gave that up what would they do? What could they do to make an honest living? Who would trust them? Besides were there not many sacred traditions of the tribe to be honored and lived up to? Had not many of their ancestors been perfectly respectable thieves, and heroically suffered stripes and imprisonment even, that flour and oil might remain in the family larder?

Truly, their case seemed hopeless to the first mission workers who went among them; and even when a few did come to the point of desiring baptism it was found that their motive in it all was that the Mission might be able to secure them immunity from punishment for their crimes; still, the work went on and gradually the truth of the Gospel began to sink down into their hearts. Some began to give up stealing and went to farming, but the police refused to believe in their good intentions and many were the merciless persecutions that occurred. But finally a very agreeable arrangement was suggested by the District Superintendent of Police himself. He proposed that a suitable village be found where there was arable land available for settlers, and then that all of this criminal tribe who desired to live a new life of honesty, be invited to come and settle in this village under the special care and oversight of a Christian pastor and teacher. Gradually the news of this admirable arrangement spread, and whole families soon began to move to the village and take up land. A house for the pastor was immediately erected with mud walls and a thatched roof, and he at once began the work of instruction and spiritual leadership. The result has been almost phenomenal. Evening prayers have for a long time now been the daily feature of this unique Christian community, and those living in this village have so far reformed that the removal of their names from the police black-list has been secured to the great astonishment of the Hindu and Mohammedan police officers. They recognize the change in the lives of these people, and ask, "How did you do it?" The best of all is, as has been indicated, these people are really converted; the whole tribe of several hundreds has a reason for its faith, and some of the best and most zealous preachers are beginning to come from their midst. This is truly "gold" from the "scrap-heap."

AN OIL MILL IN INDIA.

Work in the Gilbert Islands

The Gilbert Islands hold a warm place in the affection of both American and European Christians. Hiram Bingham is a name to conjure with when speaking of the Pacific Island Missions, and the various ships called Morning Star have successively sailed into the imagination and confidence of thousands of Sunday school scholars.

The American Board's missions in the Gilberts comprised the islands north of the equator, while the London Missionary Society occupied those south of that line. Thus two Congregational missionary Boards, one English and the other American, were carrying on two separate missions for a single group of islands with a total population of not more than 27,000 people. The cost of transportation, of workers and supplies, was large, as the story of the Morning Stars will show. The London Missionary Society has a large ship, the John Williams, that plies among all the islands occupied by them in the South Seas, including their portion of the Gilbert Group.

After much careful investigation and consideration, it has been made clear that either Board could conduct the work of the entire group more economically and with far greater efficiency than two Boards can do it. Because the islands are under the British flag, and since the London Missionary Society has an experienced and most efficient missionary in Mr. Goward, and a vessel capable of caring for all transportation needs, the Prudential Committee of the American Board some time ago offered to transfer to the London Missionary Society all of its right and title to its missionary holdings in the Gilbert Islands, and to pay the Society annually for five years a sum approximating what the maintenance of the work has cost the Board each year for the last five years, if that Society would take upon itself all responsibility for all of the missionary work of the entire group. After a deputation consisting of Secretary Lenwood and Rev. A. J. Viner had visited the Islands and made their report, the London Missionary Society decided to accept the offer of the Prudential Committee, and has assumed all the responsibility hitherto carried by the American Board for missionary work in the Gilbert Islands.

Still Bearing Fruit

The revival which began in the Pandita Ramabai's schools ten years ago is still bearing fruit, we are told. Women students engage in evangelization of Indian villages. Thus, recently, three or four went in company with a directing missionary, evangelizing in more than 150 villages. From the mission presses thousands of books and tracts are constantly pouring forth. The typesetting for this literature is done by Hindu girls in the Pandita's school. Not only do they learn to set English and Marathi but even Greek and Hebrew. The 217 acres of land belonging to the school are farmed by women and provide food for the school. The church on the compound holds 2000 people.

A Brave Witness

A professor in a college in Lucknow, India, relates the following incident which happened recently. It is a worthy pendant to the story told in the Sixteenth Chapter of Acts:

"Panjabi was my classmate in school and an earnest Christian. Some time ago when in Tibet, he visited a noted shrine and started preaching the gospel to the priests and worshippers. He was interrupted and told not to preach further, but he insisted on continuing. Then they arrested him and put him in jail, but he began preaching to the prisoners. This was unexpected and word soon reached the officer in charge. Panjabi was ordered to keep still but he felt no call so to do. Then they bound him hand and foot and cast him into solitary confinement. This indeed seemed a hindrance to his work of giving the Message of the Kingdom. Yet he could sing and the old prison was soon ringing with Christian hymns. The jailers were at first disconcerted. After some consideration on their part the door of the cell opened and a man appeared with a basket on his head. The contents were sprinkled over the prisoner's naked body, and he saw to his horror that some three dozen hungry leeches were attacking him. Bound as he was he could not protect himself against them.

"He suffered terribly but prayed for help. It seems that a report concerning him had reached the ears of a higher official. Finding on inquiry that the man had done no harm he ordered his release. Panjabi has recently been preaching in Jubbulpore."

A Black Hero

We learn from Association Men that Mr. Max Yergan, the first colored Y. M. C. A. secretary among the troops in German East Africa, is making good in many directions. He has faced fevers and hyenas, and his tent canvas is full of bullet holes. He has served both as pastor and undertaker, moving-picture operator and hospital visitor. Now he is asked to "say a word" over a body long unburied, now to place the body itself in a shallow grave; to close the eyes of a dying soldier and to write a message to the home. He ministers not only to native East Africans, but to West Indian troops, Hindus and British. The officers furnished him with a Ford auto to go from hospital to camp. He had the privilege last Christmas of telling the story of Christ to 3,000 men who heard it for the first time.

Why an Indian Adopted a School

The Rev. Alden H. Clark, of Ahmednagar, India, tells in the Missionary Review of the World this interesting story of a devoted Christian in India.

"Rambhau is a sturdy, middle-aged Christian, of the village of Khandala. He and his wife had a great sorrow, their childlessness. For years the Christian community in Khandala had been in a moribund state, but some time ago Rambhau decided that he would give the village mission school and church the place in his life which a child would have taken. And so he set about 'adopting' the church. A mission night school was started and oil was needed for the lamp. Rambhau supplied it, saying nothing to anybody. The attendance at school was poor and irregular until Rambhau decided to see to it that the parents sent their children. Since then there has been no trouble. The teacher was a bit lazy and neglectful of his duties, but with the kindly, vigilant eye of this unlettered villager constantly upon him, there is now no chance of his shirking his work. Scarcely a week goes by that he does not walk the eight miles to the missionary's bungalow and back again, bringing some suggestion for the school and church—his 'adopted' child."

The Story of a Tract

An Indian teacher somehow got hold of a tract about prayer, and, carrying it home to his village, he collected his disciples and read it to them. A woman in the village was ill with fever just then; and, believing what the tract said, the people gathered round her and prayed with her, and God answered their prayers by making her well. By-and-by they got four or five more tracts, and they made them into a little book, and tried to follow what they taught. They knew very little, for they had no Bible and no missionary, but they tried to keep these three rules:

"Speak the truth.

Come with us.

Cling to the Master."

At last, after five years, a missionary came to the neighborhood, and some of them went to him and said, "We have read these tracts; we want to learn more about Jesus." For three weeks the missionary taught them, and then they were baptised, and went back home, taking with them a Bible. Others followed, and now there are thousands of Christians in that district.

Notes upon the Topics Used
in Christian Endeavor
and Other Young People's Societies.

THE PRAYER MEETING

By
Rev. Henry Lewis
Ph.D.

OCTOBER 7.

Christ's Yoke: What It Is and How to Wear It

Matthew 11:25-30.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Oct. 1. Yoke of obedience. Heb. 5:1-10.
T. Oct. 2. Yoke of God's will. John 4:31-34.
W. Oct. 3. Wear it meekly. John 19:1-12.
T. Oct. 4. Joyfully. Ps. 27:1-8.
F. Oct. 5. Christ's Master. John 5:19, 20.
S. Oct. 6. Our Master. Matt. 23:1-12.

This topic has been selected as especially appropriate for a Consecration meeting. It serves to remind us of the obligations which every Christian Endeavorer has assumed in taking the pledge, and it should stimulate renewed faithfulness on the part of all who have professed allegiance to Christ.

What Christ's Yoke Is Not

The yoke which Christ bids us take upon ourselves is not the yoke of formalism. Mere form can never satisfy the requirements of the One who declared that God is a Spirit and they that worship Him must worship in spirit and in truth.

The yoke of Christ is not ecclesiasticism. Church organization is necessary for Christian efficiency, but Christ never intended that His followers should be bound down by rigid rules of ecclesiastical procedure, or that the visible church organization should be exalted above everything else.

Sacerdotalism is also foreign to the spirit of true Christianity. Priestcraft has no proper place in the Christian religion and we cannot believe that Christ ordained any set of men to be the final arbiters of our spiritual destiny or to exercise over His followers the authority which belongs alone to Him.

What Christ's Yoke Involves

To take Christ's yoke upon us implies, first, a devoted love for Him. Unless we love the Master we cannot truthfully say that we have taken His yoke upon us. The law of the Kingdom which Christ came to establish is love, and that love must be manifested toward Him whose name we bear and whose example we are striving to follow.

Christ's yoke involves implicit obedience toward Him who is the Captain of our salvation. It means obedience not only to His expressed commands but to the vital principles which constitute the foundation of our Christian faith. It requires us to comply with what we feel would be the wishes of Jesus in respect to all the concerns of our lives.

Faithfulness to the Master's cause is required of those who take His yoke upon themselves. When we enlist under Christ's banner, we enlist, not for time but for eternity. We are summoned to the exercise of the greatest fidelity; we are called upon to be faithful even unto death.

Service in His Kingdom is a necessary consequence of taking Christ's yoke. True love for the Master will inevitably manifest itself in service for Him. The mainspring of our service for Christ is found in love. We are not driven by fear but we are constrained by the love of Christ to yield Him most loyal service.

The service which we are called upon to render unto Christ will depend upon our individual lives. Some may be called into missionary toil, some may be called to the work of the Gospel ministry, some into other lines of Christian work, while still others may find that in following the ordinary pursuits of life with a consecrated purpose to do the Will of God in the day's work, whatever it may be, they are yielding to Christ the most efficient service that they can render.

How to Wear Christ's Yoke

The yoke of Christ should be borne willingly. Unwilling service is not acceptable to the Master. Indeed, unless our wills are yielded to Him, we cannot take His yoke upon us, for Christ never forces a human soul into the Kingdom.

OCTOBER 14.

What is Committed to You

2 Timothy 1:1-14.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Oct. 8. Faithfulness. 1 Cor. 4:1-8.
T. Oct. 9. The gospel committed. Gal. 2:1-10.
W. Oct. 10. Diversity of gift. 1 Pet. 4:8-16.
T. Oct. 11. Breaking new ground. Rom. 15:14-21.
F. Oct. 12. Sunshine spirit. Prov. 15:13, 14.
S. Oct. 13. Watching unto prayer. Col. 4:2-6.

This topic has been selected for a "Committee-work meeting," and it should prove a very practical and profitable subject for discussion.

Paul's injunction to Timothy was, "That good thing which was committed unto thee, guard through the Holy Spirit which dwelleth in us." The good thing committed unto Timothy seems to have been the confession of faith in Christ Jesus. The rendering of this verse as given in the Twentieth Century New Testament is interesting and suggestive. It runs: "Guard by the help of the Holy Spirit, who is within us, the glorious trust that has been committed to you."

Every duty that is required of a Christian is a trust committed to us. In the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor many important duties are assigned to various committees, and a large part of the Society's work is carried on by means of these committees.

Committee-work, when efficiently managed has been found to be the most effective way of accomplishing definite results. Every Young People's Society should therefore see to it that its committee-work is well organized, and if possible, every member should be assigned to work on at least one committee.

A Successful Committee

One of the prime requisites of a successful committee is a good chairman. A feeling of modesty, however, does not constitute a barrier to becoming a good committee chairman. Indeed the best chairman is often the one who is least confident of his or her own ability to serve in that capacity.

A well-thought-out plan is essential to successful committee work. As some one has well said, "A committee without plans is like an architect without a blueprint. It will never know what it is for or what it is trying to do."

Every efficient committee must have regular meetings, and each meeting should be opened with prayer. A committee should have its secretary as well as its chairman, and careful records should be kept of the various suggestions and plans that are brought forward at each meeting.

Careful attention should be given to the matter of rendering a report of the committee work to the regular meetings of the Society. The effect of a good report both upon a committee that has prepared it and upon the Society that listens to it is beneficial in every way.

Some Useful Committees

An efficient Young People's Society should have a distinct committee for every important line of work in which it is engaged. Among those that are essential are a Lookout, a Prayer-meeting, a Missionary, a Social, a Good Citizenship, a Temperance, a Good Literature, a Sunday School, and a Calling Committee.

Societies that are engaged in special lines of service such as Junior work, settlement work, seamen's work, fresh-air work, etc., will find it necessary to appoint committees to carry on these special lines of activity. In a small society it will often be found necessary to entrust two or three different lines of work to a single committee.

Membership on the various committees should be arranged in rotation, as far as possible, so that all the members of the Society may become familiar with the different lines of work that are carried on. A varied experience in Christian work is always helpful to young people, and those who secure this experience are likely to become more efficient workers in the Church in after years.

OCTOBER 21.

Putting Religion into Politics

Isaiah 1:10-17.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Oct. 15. A lost city. Gen. 19:1-7, 24, 25.
T. Oct. 16. Godless power. Dan. 4:24-33.
W. Oct. 17. A city without God. Rev. 18:1-20.
T. Oct. 18. A city redeemed. Isa. 52:1-15.
F. Oct. 19. A penitent city. Zech. 12:9-14.
S. Oct. 20. A prophet in politics. Amos 6:1-11.

This topic is designated for "Good Citizenship Day." We should be good citizens every day of the year, but it is well that on this particular day special emphasis should be given to the subject of our relation as Christians to political affairs.

The Meaning of Politics

The leading definition of the word, "politics," as given in the Standard Dictionary is as follows: "The branch of civics that treats of the principles of civil government and the conduct of state affairs; the administration of public affairs in the interest of the peace, prosperity and safety of the state; statecraft; political science; in a wide sense embracing the science of government and civil polity."

How different the conception of politics is this from the all-too-common use of the word which is shown in the secondary definition, which reads as follows: "Political affairs in a party sense; the administration of public affairs or the conduct of political matters so as to carry elections and secure public offices; party intrigues; political wire-pulling; trickery."

The Meaning of Religion

Religion is that which unites the human soul with God. It is the belief that binds the spiritual nature of man to a supernatural being on whom he consciously depends. It is through religion that man establishes his relationship with God, and by the principles of religion he patterns his life after the divine image of the Son of God.

Religion concerns itself with the affairs of our daily life, because the outward conduct is an expression of the spirit within. The distinction between religious and secular things is often convenient, but in reality it is often misleading, for as a matter of fact the man who is truly religious feels that no part of his life is apart from God.

Religion and Politics

Religion and politics should never be divorced. Rather they should be most closely related. Politics without religion is a godless affair, and any profession of religion which ignores the vital question of politics, (that is our civic relations with our brother man) is lacking in one of the essentials of true religion.

One of the great tasks that faces every Christian is that of putting religion into politics, that is of suffusing the affairs of government with the spirit that springs from a consciousness of bearing the right relation toward God.

Putting religion into politics will make politics conform to the highest definition that we can possibly frame for that word. It will make politics clean, honest, law-abiding, unselfish and pure. It will transform petty politicians into broad-minded statesmen. It will help toward the realization of that vision of the City of God, which is the fond hope of every true Christian.

The Duties of a Good Citizen

Every good citizen should take an interest in the primaries, for under our system of party government, the primaries are the source of political power, and unless good citizens make their power felt at their respective primaries they cannot control the subsequent elections.

It goes without saying that every good citizen should exercise the privilege of suffrage, which is the very corner-stone of democracy. And every true lover of the republic should see to it that the right to vote is conferred upon every worthy citizen.

OCTOBER 28.

Ministering to Christ

Matthew 25:31-46.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Oct. 22. A church in prison. Acts 16:25-34.
T. Oct. 23. Prison work. Acts 12:1-10.
W. Oct. 24. Work for the sick. Jas. 5:9-20.
T. Oct. 25. Sunshine work. Gal. 2:10.
F. Oct. 26. Teaching strangers. Deut. 31:9-13.
S. Oct. 27. Angels unawares. Gen. 18:1-8.

This topic has been chosen with special reference to work for prisoners, strangers and the sick. The last Sunday of October is observed by many churches as Prison Sunday, and this topic is therefore especially timely.

A Ministering Religion.

The religion taught by Jesus Christ is a ministering religion. Both by example and by precept Jesus taught His followers that they should minister to all the various needs of humanity. The Christian Church has been somewhat slow to appreciate this fact and to take up the duty of ministering to the physical and social as well as the spiritual necessities of mankind. But now an awakening has come, and Christian people realize that social service is as vital a part of religion as any other ministry that can be rendered. Jesus performed many acts of kindly ministrations during His earthly life. He fed the hungry, healed the sick, gave sight unto the blind, and in many other ways showed that He came, not to be ministered unto but to minister unto the needs of others.

Caring for Those in Prison.

Few people realize how many there are in prison. When we count the inmates of the jails, penitentiaries, reformatories, state prisons, and other correctional institutions, we find that there are a multitude behind prison bars, and these men, women and children call for our earnest Christian solicitude.

The American Tract Society has just published a little book, prepared by its General Secretary, Dr. Judson Swift, which will be of great usefulness to all those who are engaged in work for prisoners. It is called "Looking Forward Day by Day," and it carries a message of Christian hope and encouragement which cannot fail to help those who read its pages. The expense of publishing the first edition of this helpful book was provided by the gift of a generous donor, and free copies for distribution will be furnished to all prison chaplains and other Christian workers who are ministering to the spiritual needs of prisoners.

Looking Out for the Stranger.

Work for the immigrants is one of the effective ways of caring for the stranger. Those who come as strangers to a strange land deserve especial attention, and this is one of the special features of Home Missionary work at the present time. The American Tract Society has long done an important work in behalf of the immigrants, for the Society's missionary colporters meet them as they land upon our shores and visit them when they have settled in their new found homes.

Remembering the Sick.

It is a Christian duty to remember those who are sick. Those who lie on beds of sickness either in their own homes or in hospitals need the cheering and comforting ministrations of those who are followers of the Great Physician.

Gifts of flowers, the loan of a good book or magazine, the sending of a pretty postcard, these are some of the ways by which we can minister to the sick. Music is often very soothing, and those who have musical gifts cannot employ them to better advantage than by singing or playing for the sick.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Oct. 29. Persevere in abiding. John 15:1-11.
T. Oct. 30. Climbing into life. Rom. 2:11.
W. Oct. 31. Persevering in prayer. Luke, 11:1-10.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS

An Unpaid Car Fare.

BY D. ANDREW M'COMB.

"SAY, Uncle, do you remember the day that I came home from the county fair when you promised that some time you would tell me a railroad story?" said fourteen-year-old Edson to his uncle, who was loved and known by every boy within many miles around as Uncle Nym. "When will you be ready to tell it, Uncle?"

"I haven't forgotten it, my boy," replied Uncle Nym. "I guess we might as well attend to that this evening," he continued with his usual winning smile for boys. "I see your mother has cleared the dining table and has left the hanging lamp burning bright above it, just as if she had us in mind. You get the other two boys, Edson, and each of you bring a chair to the table and we will begin."

The table was soon surrounded by four; one on each of the four sides of the table.

"The story I promised you," began Uncle Nym, "is about a friend of mine who owns an interurban railroad, and who also owns a shoe store in one of the towns along his railroad. Like all railroad men, my friend always tries to get honest men in his cars as conductors; men who will be courteous to the passengers, and who will be careful to collect all the fares."

"That would be jolly," interrupted Orwood. "If I was only going to be one of them. I always thought I'd like to be conductor. I'd see that nobody got missed, when the fare was collected."

"I know a boy who lets the conductor miss him every time he gets a chance," Homer added.

"I don't blame him if he does," said Edson. "It's no harm to ride free, if you can. If the conductor don't see you, it's not your fault. I wouldn't run after him to give him the money. It's his business to come after it."

Uncle Nym never took sides in an argument. He only waited patiently with a smile until it was all over.

"Some months ago," Uncle Nym continued, "there was a circus in one of the towns along my friend's railroad. A big crowd of people came to town that day to see the show and to do trading in the stores. After the performance a great many people went into my friend's store to buy."

"Oh, that would be jollier yet," Orwood again broke in. "I think I would rather be a clerk than a car conductor."

"So would I," agreed Homer. "It's not like collecting fares where you have to watch everybody to get the fare. You can have your goods all in show cases and on shelves where people can't get them without paying for them."

"Well," struck in Edson, "if you have a store you don't expect people to pick up a pair of shoes and walk off without paying for them. That would be different from riding free if the conductor missed you. Carrying off a pair of shoes would be stealing. I wouldn't think of stealing."

Uncle Nym again allowed all the time required by the boys for their discussion, and with his accustomed smile, listened. After they quieted down, he began again.

"As I just said," he continued, "the clerks were very busy; so busy that they couldn't wait on all the people at once. Just then a boy came in to buy a pair of overshoes. But he saw that the clerk was too busy to notice him, so he looked around until he found a pair his size, and while the clerk's back was toward him he walked out with the shoes. Now what do you think of a lad like that, boys?"

"Thief!" "Rascal!" "He stole them!" the three boys exclaimed, each in his own way. "He ought to be arrested," one of them added.

"Why should he be arrested?" Uncle Nym asked.

"Because he took what wasn't his," Edson answered.

"Whose shoes were they?"

"Your friend's," they all replied.

"Had the boy any right to them?"

"No, sir," they all agreed.

"But if the clerk couldn't get to him, or if he didn't see him, wouldn't it have been all right for the boy to take them free?"

"No, sir. He should have gone to the clerk and given him the money," Edson again answered.

"Then you all agree that the boy had no right to anything he didn't pay for, and that in doing as he did, he both cheated and stole."

"That's what we do, Uncle," they all declared.

"But now," Uncle continued, "let us go back and talk a little more about my friend's railroad, which you remember runs through this same town where his store is."

"Yes, we understand that," one answered for all.

"Well, that same evening after the circus one of his cars was so crowded with people that it was almost impossible for the conductor to get to all of them. He did his best to get all the fares but a passenger who happened to be on the paying. Both are stealing. Isn't that right, Uncle Nym?"

"That is very sound reasoning, my dear boy," was the reply. "I wish that more boys and men too could see as clearly as you do, that the same principle of dishonesty is back of both actions."

The next day Edson was a little uneasy until he got a chance to talk alone with his uncle.

"Say, Uncle," he began, with a look of perfect confidence in good old Uncle Nym. "Say, Uncle, I didn't want to talk about it before the boys last night because they would tease me, but you cornered me up awfully on that free ride business. I never stopped before to think it over in that way. It's plain enough to me now that a car ride belongs to the railroad company until it is paid for just as much as a loaf of bread belongs to the baker, and that it is just as wrong to steal a ride as to carry off a pair of skates from a hardware store when you find them hanging out for a sign. You'll never again hear me say that I came home from the county fair nor any place else without paying my fare just because the conductor missed me. I remember telling you how I got home from the fair. I plants and bent over them with tears in her eyes.

"I've got to leave you," she said sadly. "I'm going a long distance away to live and after all the care I've given you I never shall see you blossom again."

The leaves of the irises swayed in the cool breeze. They were waving their regrets. What should they do without this kind lady to tend them and love them?

"I wish I could take you with me," she continued, "but since I can't I'm going to cover you just as if I were to stay and when you blossom next summer I hope there will be someone who will enjoy you as much as I have done. You must do your best for them as you have for me."

She covered them tenderly with the evergreen boughs just as she always had done. Many strange sounds came to the irises during the next few days and then all was still. Their loved friend had gone.

After a time the snowflakes sifted in among the evergreen coverings and soon the plants were buried beneath a warm, white blanket. Then they went to sleep.

It seemed as if it were a long, long time before they awakened but at last there was a mild feeling in the air and the twitterings of bluebirds sounded overhead.

Then the irises heard the sound of talking.

"I wonder what is under these boughs," said a deep voice and a softer one answered:

"It must be flowering plants of some kind. Let's uncover them and see."

So the irises were uncovered by strange hands, but the man and woman who stood beside them could not tell their name.

"We shall have to wait and see," declared the soft voice.

All through the spring the irises kept on growing but they learned that the new family who had come to live in the white cottage were passing through a hard experience. A little girl lay sick in the house and from conversations which came to them the irises knew that for weeks she was at the point of death. Then when the danger was past and she had begun to recover there was a long period of anxiety.

One day the little girl was drawn out upon the porch, such a thin, wasted little being that the irises were touched with pity at the sight of her. She did not look toward them but lay back among her pillows with eyes that gazed only into vacancy.

Now surely the irises must obey the lady and do their best. They were beginning to form their buds and into these they put their whole strength. At last in the hot summer sunshine the colors began to appear and these attracted the little girl's attention.

"There are some flowers," she exclaimed to her mother. "See how pretty the buds are! I wish I could go to them."

That was the beginning of her progress toward health. With the aid at first of her father or mother or of the nurse, then all alone by herself, she came every day to look at the unfolding flowers. And when all were opened what a beautiful sight greeted her! The strip of ground was a mass of large, wonderful blossoms of the richest blues and purples mingled with white ones marked with soft colors.

The irises rejoiced as they saw the pink glow return to the white cheeks and the animation which came into the little girl's eyes. It was their work and it was just as the lady would have wished.

"If only we could tell her!" they murmured to each other. "How glad she would be!"

"But we will do our best always just as she told us," they added, "and every year when our blossoming time comes perhaps we shall be able to give pleasure to some one, just as she wanted us to do."

HER TWO PETS

car told my friend that he noticed a young fellow who seemed to act strangely, and who had under his arm a pair of overshoes that were not wrapped. He also said that the conductor passed by the boy in the crowd without noticing him and the boy kept the money and did not offer to pay his fare because he knew the conductor didn't see him. After a while the car stopped and the boy got off. What do you think of that?" Uncle Nym asked.

"He was a thief," Homer answered.

"He stole a ride," said Osgood.

"How can you make that out, boys?" Uncle asked, not appearing to notice that Edson was silent this time.

"He took what didn't belong to him," Osgood replied.

"What then is the difference between stealing a ride as you say, and stealing shoes?"

"No difference at all," both boys agreed.

"Can you tell me why there is no difference?" Uncle again asked.

"Because, Uncle Nym," continued Osgood, who was the oldest of the three boys, "your friend sells shoes in his store, and he sells rides in his cars. They both belong to him and they both cost him money, and nobody has any more right to take a ride on the car without paying than he has to take a pair of shoes from the store without didn't think then that was stealing, but now I see that it was."

"That's right, my dear boy," said Uncle Nym. "I was sure you wouldn't think of doing wrong by dodging your car fare, only you didn't understand. I am more than glad to find you so willing to take the right view of it. And I am proud of a boy who, when he sees the difference between right and wrong is so ready to choose the right. We'll just keep this little secret to ourselves, Edson," said Uncle Nym as the two joined in a friendly laugh and handshake.

The Iris Garden

BY EDITH M. LARRABEE.

"THE Japanese irises stood in a long row at one side of a little white cottage. In front was a small green lawn and at the back was the vegetable garden. The strip of irises was the only bed of flowers in the little yard.

The plants had been set out by the lady several years before and each summer bore the great heads of beautiful blossoms which she loved. In the fall she covered them with boughs for their winter sleep and in the spring removed the covering with her own hands.

One Autumn day she came to the

Our Fireside

The Little Old Lady of the Tenement A Hallowe'en Story

By Grace Boteler Sanders

MRS. OGLESBEE often watched the little old lady rocking upon the third floor tenement porch. She was dainty and neat, so different from the other tenement dwellers that Mrs. Oglesbee, who was romantic as well as thoughtless, often wondered how the little old lady had come to this! To her, the tenement was the depth of degradation. She had no idea that the people who lived there aspired to better things or coveted luxuries for their children. In her mind, these people born to poverty and suffering, were of different clay and consequently she supposed they were contented with their lot. But the little old lady was different.

One day when Mrs. Oglesbee was walking in her garden in the cool of the evening, she heard a low, sweet song like the murmur of a gentle breeze. It was the little old lady singing. Mrs. Oglesbee looked to catch a glimpse of the aged singer. She could not help it.

The sun invested the old lady's face with a holy radiance as with clasped hands and reverent air, she sang a familiar hymn with her eyes fixed on the sunset clouds.

Then Mrs. Oglesbee was sure that the old lady was different. "I wish I could do something for the poor old dear," she sighed and then she promptly forgot all about it.

That summer passed quickly. What with Red Cross parties and sewing societies and benefits, Mrs. Oglesbee was so occupied that she quite overlooked the tenement and its dainty dweller. She might have sent her auto to take the old lady out into the country for a whiff of God's pure air; she might have filled her lap with flowers or her hands with fresh vegetables—Mrs. Oglesbee needed only to say the word, and any one of a thousand things would have been done, but since she had never felt the deprivation of any necessity or luxury she did not think of the old lady, and while in her cool, beautiful garments, she sewed for sweet charity's sake, the sufferer almost at her very doorway grew a little thinner in that awful heat and a little more despondent.

It was in October when the ladies of the fashionable church to which Mrs. Oglesbee belonged came to her with a request.

"We have planned an old-fashioned Hallowe'en party with pumpkin pie and other things such as our grandmothers would have served on their lawns fifty years ago, and since you have the largest lawn in the parish, the minister suggested that we ask you if you would—"

They stopped. They were a little afraid of Mrs. Oglesbee, who attended church services only on Easter Sunday and at Christmas, and seemed to content herself with giving largely of her means but not herself. They did not know that she had grown a little ashamed of being so negligent. If she had not had that feeling, she would not have answered so graciously in these words:

"I will be glad to offer my lawn. We could decorate with Japanese lanterns and lighted pumpkin faces and have tables covered with crepe paper, and what else would you suggest, ladies?"

"I don't know exactly what the old folks would have served except pumpkin pie and popcorn and apples. If we only had a grandmother," wailed the youngest member of the delegation, "a real old-fashioned kind," and at that very moment she spied the little old lady rocking on the porch of the third floor tenement.

"O there's one!" she exclaimed, "Isn't she a picture! I suppose you wouldn't dare," she saw the curious look on Mrs. Oglesbee's face, and fearing that she had offended this leading member hurried to say, "Of course I know you don't mix with tenement folks, but somehow she seems different."

Mrs. Oglesbee nodded. "I never could take a dare," she said in a voice that was soft and sweet. "I have been watching the old dear and wishing for a chance to know her. I didn't feel exactly like calling. This is our opportunity. No doubt she is lacking in means. Suppose I go to see her and ask her if she will direct our menu and service for a slight consideration."

"Oh, would you?" cried the ladies. They were doubly joyous because they believed that with Mrs. Oglesbee aroused they would gain a valuable worker.

"I will, this very afternoon," graciously smiled the little lady of the big house. It was when the men were returning all grimy and weary from the factories and every street car was loaded with living freight, that she daintily entered the lower floor of that big brick tenement.

The smells and the dust were terrible. Mrs. Oglesbee's nose was tilted and her eyes caught the ceilings which were smoked and webbed with the work of ancient spiders. The children stared at her from the different floors and whispered and jeered, but Mrs. Oglesbee heroically persisted and saw more of human misery in that brief visit than she had even imagined could exist.

Somehow she was ill at ease and for the first time in her life she lost her self-possession when she was led out on the back porch and into the presence of the little old lady rocking in her chair.

"You are the little lady from the big house," smiled Grandma placidly. "I do so love to watch you, my dear."

"And I, you," laughed Mrs. Oglesbee, tucking herself into the baby chair as a little girl would have done. "I've been thinking and wishing I knew you, but no one gave me a chance to be introduced, so I took the opportunity myself."

"Oh!" breathed Grandma, clasping her little wrinkled hands.

"Our church is going to have an old-fashioned Hallowe'en party in my garden, and when they were thinking of a real Grandma to 'boss' it," Mrs. Oglesbee showed her white teeth when she used the word, "one of the ladies spied you, and dear Mrs. —"

"Harper," supplied the little old lady.

"Do you know anything about such affairs, and would you give us your services, if we—er—pay you well?"

Mrs. Oglesbee looking closely saw just a faint tinge of wild rose creep over the old lady's cheek. Pride in a tenement? Perhaps after all, these people did have some feelings!

"I should know. I have given many such an affair," said the little old lady with dignity. "I am from the South; Chestnut Ridge was the name of the plantation where I lived." Mrs. Oglesbee wondered more. "I shall be glad to do anything that I can to help," she continued. "I hope I should not so far forget myself as to accept pay for helping a neighbor."

Indeed she was different. She made no explanation as to why she was living in a tenement, but she promised to meet the committee next day at Mrs. Oglesbee's home.

The little lady of the big house wondered all evening. When they met next day she wanted to hug the little old lady in her white dress and cap, who did not lose her dignity when in conference with some of the best ladies of the town.

She proved a most valuable helper, suggesting, planning and even going into the big kitchen and instructing the chef as to the proper way to make beaten biscuit and pumpkin pie and sorghum candy just as it was served in the olden time.

And then when Hallowe'en came and she appeared in a costume of old-time splendor, every guest at that wonderful supper begged to make her acquaintance and demanded of Mrs. Oglesbee an explanation of her presence.

(Continued on page 157.)

DON'T decide on the new hymn-book for your Church or Sunday School until you have seen

HALLOWED HYMNS
NEW AND OLD

Edited by IRA ALLAN SANKEY
Son of the famous Singing-Evangelist
Ira D. Sankey
OVER 550,000
COPIES ALREADY SOLD

Responsive Scripture Readings
No Trashy Words No Jingly Music

Price $25.00 per 100 not prepaid
35 cents per copy by mail

Examine a copy and prove its value in your work. (Returnable if desired.)

The Biglow & Main Co., New York
Chicago

FOR OUR SOLDIER BOYS

WOULD you like to send a copy of a fine religious periodical to some soldier boy who is at one of the various cantonments, encampments or officers' training camps? Many of these young men will be in training for the next six months, and they will miss many of the comforts of home.

Why not send a copy of the AMERICAN MESSENGER to your soldier boy friend and thus provide him with some splendid reading which he will be sure to enjoy in his leisure moments in camp?

We believe that there are many of our readers who would like to send the AMERICAN MESSENGER to one or more of the soldier boys, and we therefore make a Special Short Term Subscription Offer, whereby, in return for the sum of Twenty-five cents we will send this paper to the address of any soldier stationed in the United States for Six Months, that is, from October, 1917, to March, 1918, inclusive.

A copy of the AMERICAN MESSENGER may prove a godsend to some lonely soldier boy, who is far from home amid strange surroundings and unknown companions. Think over the list of the boys and young men of your acquaintance who have gone into training camps to fit themselves for heroic service for their country, and then send us a goodly list of names accompanied by a remittance of 25 cents for each Special Short Term Subscription that you wish to send.

Perhaps some of our friends would like to supply several copies of the AMERICAN MESSENGER to some particular regiment or encampment. For five or more Special Short Term Subscriptions to be sent to one address we offer a Special rate of only 15 cents per copy for the six months' period, from October, 1917 to March, 1918. On this basis, five copies would cost 75 cents, 10 copies, $1.50 and so on. Please address all Special Short Term Subscriptions to

AMERICAN MESSENGER,
Park Avenue and 40th Street,
New York.

✠

If you never tasted

Grape-Nuts
FOOD you have missed one of the good things in life

✠

"The best book that Mrs. Porter has ever written"

—Chicago News.

THE ROAD TO UNDERSTANDING

By Eleanor H. Porter
Author of "Just David," "Pollyanna," etc.

"The very best of the many admirable stories by Eleanor H. Porter, a tale full of meaning to every married couple; moving swiftly and dramatically and holding the attention closely on every page."
—THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR WORLD.

Most books you can borrow from the library, but books of joy and inspiration like "The Road to Understanding" you need to own. You can buy it in handsome red and gold binding, with illustrations in full color, at any bookstore for $1.50, or by mail (postpaid) from

HOUGHTON MIFFLIN CO., 4 Park St., Boston

The Little Old Lady of the Tenement
(Continued from page 156).

It was when the guests were gone and the money had all been counted that the little lady of the big house and the old lady of the tenement sat together in the big drawing room. Suddenly the younger woman spoke: "Grandma, you must tell me. How came you to be in that tenement? Why are you masquerading? Who are you?"

The old lady waited for a moment before she replied. "I am only a foolish old woman, dear, who lost her money and fled from every one whom she had loved, because she could not bear the humiliation of being poor where she had been a leader of society."

Mrs. Oglesbee sighed in exultation. She had known this little old lady was different. "I had only money enough to live very simply. At first I was very sick, but presently I recovered and when I saw so much all about me that needed doing, I concluded to try to help the people of the tenement."

"There was much I could teach the poor mothers who, having had no education, did not know how to raise or train their children. We have had Bible classes every Sunday. Gradually I have become accustomed to the place, where every one is kind to me. Sometimes I believe the dear Lord sent me there to show His beauty to those who know Him not."

The little lady of the big house fell on her knees and took the aged visitor's hand in hers. "Grandma, I have no mother to teach me the beauty of Christian living. Can't you move into the big house and show me?"

"Why, my dear, my dear—you can't mean it," stammered the amazed little old lady. "I never thought of such a thing."

"Neither did I until He inspired it," and the younger woman's voice was very reverent. "The people in the tenements are not the only folks who need Christianizing. When will you come?"

"My rent is due today, and the agent threatened to turn me out, just after I had prayed for help," said the little woman simply.

"He shan't have the chance. I want you," cried little Mrs. Oglesbee as she hid her face on Grandma's breast.

And do you know Mrs. Oglesbee attends church now not only on Easter and at Christmas, but on every single Sunday, and with her is an old lady who has become the happiest and busiest church worker in the town.

For the Folks at Home

BY REV. ROY B. GUILD.

No question has been asked with greater frequency and greater earnestness during the past few months than this, "What can we do for the soldiers?"

The answers have been as varied as are the needs of men and again and again the churches near the training and mobilization camps have been urged to minister to the desires of the men for wholesome social fellowship.

The soldiers are taken to the churches for Sunday services and home parties. The old-fashioned "Church Social" has been the means of practising the Gospel of good cheer. The women of the churches have taken their "socials" out to the Y. M. C. A. huts. Church dinners have been enthusiastically patronized. Companionship is a fine Christian ministry thoroughly appreciated.

But has it ever occurred to you that what is good for the soldier boys in the training camp is equally good for the folks at home? The strenuous, stirring life of the camp keeps mind and heart occupied. Not so with the father and mother, wife or sweetheart left behind. The quieter the community the greater will be the sense of loneliness.

"What shall we do for the home folks?" This question should be answered in every community. The old-fashioned church social that brings the whole community together should be revived where it has fallen into oblivion. The nation has its committee on camp activities to keep the soldier in good spirits. Every community that has sent its quota to the army needs its "Committee on Community Activities."

Community singing by the soldiers has become most popular. It is soul-stirring to hear five thousand men sing. What community will not meet its problems and bear its heart aches better if it sings:

"Pack up your troubles
In your old kit bag
And smile, smile, smile."

One who has had much experience in work with soldiers advised that the churches near the cantonments plan on Sunday evenings to have, besides the other services, one great meeting where the soldiers can do most of the singing. That advice is good for every village and city in America.

This will be a winter when all will need the ministry of human sociability. On Sunday evening community song services will furnish this.

The churches and the Young Men's Christian Associations can furnish entertainment, which will meet the needs of the anxious and burdened hearts and which will prepare for the terrible shocks that must come to so many, better than can the usual entertainment furnished through promoters of commercialized amusements.

How wonderfully the communities have rallied for Red Cross and relief work. It affords some diversion. Yet as the wife winds the bandage, as the mother knits the sock, as the father saves for each contribution to the hospital unit, there is back in the mind of each a longing for the boys in the trenches.

The cheer of Christian song, the pleasure of well-planned social fellowship, such as Jesus gave to those with whom he mingled, is the best antidote for haunting fears and loneliness.

While we plan for the soldiers at the front let us not forget "the folks back home."

Knitting on the Train

Time spent in traveling may be utilized just as effectively as that spent in Red Cross workrooms. So one of the Denver members proved recently on a trip from Denver to the Pacific Coast. Finding herself in an unaccustomed state of idleness, and noticing several other women in the car also idle, she got off at one of the stations, made a quick purchase of yarn and knitting needles and, returning to the train, proceeded to enlist volunteers. Practically every woman in the Pullman car was glad of the opportunity to do worthwhile work, and by the time the train arrived at San Diego there were a number of new knitted articles ready to turn over to the Red Cross.

Cosmopolitan Christian Endeavor

The Madura Mission of India has 36 churches and 288 Christian Endeavor societies. One church has 25 societies, another 24, and so on.

Since the last annual meeting of the Japan Christian Endeavor union, when an especially large number of societies was reported, eighteen new societies have been formed.

The recent convention of the Punjab Christian Endeavor union of India did much bazaar preaching. This union increased during the past year by fifty societies and 855 members.

Two active Filipino Endeavorers, Pastor Ygloria and Pastor Royola, are now doing missionary work among the large number of Filipinos in Hawaii.

London Endeavorers have recently held a Christian Endeavor Prayer Day in Christ Church, hourly meetings being held throughout the day, with an earnest consecration address by the pastor of the church, Dr. F. B. Meyer.

A native Endeavorer in India recently gave a month to Christian Endeavor work, organizing ten new village societies with 150 members.

A Most Attractive Paper

For Children in the Home
and Sunday School

APPLES OF GOLD

This is a really ideal weekly paper for use in Primary Departments and Infant Classes in all Sunday Schools. It is finely illustrated, uses large, clear type, and is printed in beautiful colored ink. Each week there is a splendid full-page picture, short stories, choice poems and a helpful illustrated treatment of the International Sunday School Lesson. It is issued monthly but is arranged for weekly distribution in four-page parts. Price, single copies, 30 cents; five copies to one address, 25 cents each; ten or more copies, 20 cents each, per year. Postage on Canadian and foreign subscriptions, 6 cents per copy additional. Subscriptions accepted in clubs for 3 months, 6 months or a year.

Sample Copies Sent Free.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

Park Ave., and Fortieth St., New York.

"The Leading

FIRE INSURANCE

Co. of America"

Incorporated 1819.

Charter Perpetual.

Cash Capital,	$5,000,000.00
Cash Assets,	26,693,568.89
Total Liabilities,	13,547,121.90
Net Surplus,	8,146,446.99
Surplus for Policy-Holders,	13,146,446.99
Losses Paid in 98 years,	157,580,593.27

WM. B. CLARK, President.

Vice-Presidents,

HENRY E. REES. A. N. WILLIAMS

E. J. SLOAN, Secretary.

Assistant Secretaries,

E. S. ALLEN, GUY E. BEARDSLEY, RALPH B. IVES

W. F. WHITTELEY, Marine Vice-President
R. E. STRONACH, Marine Secretary

WESTERN BRANCH, 175 W. Jackson Boule'd, Chicago, Ills.	{ THOS. E. GALLAGHER, Gen'l Agent. L. O. KOHTZ, Ass't Gen'l Agent. L. O. KOHTZ, Marine Gen'l Agent.
PACIFIC BRANCH, 301 California Street, San Francisco, Cal.	{ W. H. BREEDING, General Agent. GEO. E. TOWNSEND, Ass't Gen'l Agent (Fire). E. S. LIVINGSTON, Ass't Gen'l Agent (Marine).
MARINE DEPARTMENT	{ CHICAGO, Ills., 175 W. Jackson Boule'd. NEW YORK, 63-65 Beaver Street. BOSTON, 70 Kilby Street. PHILADELPHIA, 226 Walnut Street. SAN FRANCISCO, 301 California Street.

POSTUM

A wholesome table beverage with winning flavor.

Used everywhere by folks who find that coffee disagrees.

"There's a Reason"

THE TREASURY

SPECIAL NOTICE

OWING to occasional losses of letters, containing money, we would request friends and donors to the American Tract Society to remit by check or Post Office Money Order, which latter can always be duplicated in case of loss.

Receipts of the American Tract Society During August, 1917

Total Donations (Including $782.13 for Special Objects) $2,191.87.

- ARKANSAS, $0.73. Miss Keeler, $0.73.
- CALIFORNIA, $37.15. Santa Cruz, S. S. Collection, $1.50; Rev. Mr. Horsch, $0.65; Mrs. Williams, $10; Mrs. Hersmon, $5; Los Angeles, Church Collection, $7.50; Los Angeles, Church Offering, $8.50; Los Angeles, Church Collection, $2; Anaheim, Church Offering, $2.
- CONNECTICUT, $31. Mrs. Bigelow, $10; Mr. Wilcox, $5; Mr. & Mrs. Shedd, $5; Mrs. Northrup, $10; Mrs. Congdon, $1.
- FLORIDA, $4. Mr. Ferris, $1; Mrs. Weaver, $1; Mrs. Dinwoodie, $2.
- GEORGIA, $3. Miss Cochran, $3.
- ILLINOIS, $32. Mrs. Curtis, $1; Mr. and Mrs. Bent, $5; Mr. Boyles, $1; Forrester, Church Collection, $25.
- INDIANA, $30. Mr. Holliday, for Soldier's Text Book, $25; Mrs. Wason, $3; Mr. Taylor, $2.
- IOWA, $25.60. Mrs. Mathews, $1; Mrs. McDesmid, $1; Mr. Reintz, $23.60.
- KANSAS, $10. Mr. Butler, $3; Mrs. Hawry, $1; Mr. Parsons, $1; Mr. Angell, $5.
- KENTUCKY, $70.08. Mrs. Stoll, $5; Mrs. Hay, $1; Mrs. Covington, $1; Mr. Hardy, $5; A Friend, $1; Miss Shaw, $2.08; Miss Steele, $5; Estate Augusta Emilie Hollenkamp, $50.
- MARYLAND, $8. Oakland, Church Collection, $6; Mrs. Moran, $2.
- MASSACHUSETTS, $253. A Friend, $1; Mr. Carr, for Soldier's Text Book, $25; Mrs. Winsor, $2; Rev. Mr. Alcott, $3; Mrs. Armes, $25; Lee, Church Collection, $2; A Friend, $5; Miss Brewer, $2; Mr. Towle, $5; Mr. Wilbor, $2; Mrs. Fiske, $5; Mr. Sawtelle, $5; Mr. Miller, $10; Mr. Jones, $25; Mrs. Duncan, $10; Misses Lummus, $2; East Longmeadow, Church Offering, $4; Mrs. Fiske, $100; Miss Marsh, $1; Mrs. Poole, $2; Mr. Moody, $1; Enfield, Church Collection, $15; Mr. Alden, $1.
- MICHIGAN, $18.02. Dearborn, Church Offering, $1.55; Inkster, Church Offering, $3.45; Mrs. Mills, $1.02; Kalamazoo, Church Collection, $10; Mr. Stulp, $2.
- MINNESOTA, $30. Mr. L. H. & Mr. C. R. Williams, $25; Gen'l McG. Reeve, $5.
- MISSOURI, $109.65. Miss Copp, $5; Mr. Gibson, $5; Mrs. McCluney, $5; Mr. Rudolph, $5; Mr. Markham, $10; Mrs. Gamble, $5; Mr. Jeffers, $10; St. Louis, Church Collection, $50; Miss Peters, $5; Miss Schoenhut, $0.65; Mr. Bacon, $2; Miss Lehman, $5; Mr. Ohmann, $2.
- NEBRASKA, $5. Cedar Creek, Sunday School Collection, $5.
- NEW HAMPSHIRE, $57. Mrs. Johnson, $2; Miss Cummings, $5; Mr. Henry, $50.
- NEW JERSEY, $60.46. Miss Handel, $3; Mrs. Van Orden, $1; Ein Freund, $10; Mrs. Dey, $2; Mr. Wyckoff, $5; Belle Mead, Church Offering, $19.86; Miss Beecher, $7.50; Mrs. Simms, $1; Mrs. Mason, $5; Miss Condit, $5; Mrs. Harting, $1; A Friend, $0.10.
- NEW YORK, $299.60. King Testimonial Fund, $18; Mr. Curtis, $3; Mr. & Mrs. Spring, $100; Gen'l Ludington, $2; Jamaica, Church Offering, $48.10; Mr. Edson, $1; Miss Wood, $5; Mr. Decker, $25; Miss Strong, $20; Mrs. Coe, $1; Mr. Powell, $0.50; Mr. Denker, $5; Miss Coon, $5; Astoria, Church Collection, $3; Mr. Laing, $5; Miss Hitchcock, $1; Mrs. Bennett, $2; Mr. Wood, $20; Mr. Clark, $5; Mr. Burnett, $1; Mr. Langdon, $2; Richfield Springs, Church Collection, $10; "A Friend," $6; Mr. Blackman, $1; Mr. Rand, $10.
- NORTH DAKOTA, $10. Miss Unkenholz, $10.
- OHIO, $690.30. Mr. Hendricks, $5; Mr. Whatkins, $1; Miss Smith, $20; Mrs. Robinson, $1; Mrs. Wilson, $10; Mr. Olmstead, $2.50; Dr. Fitzpatrick, $2; Mr. Rutledge, $2; Mr. Lardie, $0.80; Miss Lusby and mother, $2; Mrs. Taylor, $100; Mr. Weber, $2; Mr. Norton and sons, $5; Mr. Stark, $10; Mr. Peck, $1; Miss Rielly, $2; Miss Fowler, $2; Miss Wilkins, $2; Mr. J. E. & M. M. Woods, $5; Mr. Wick, $500; Cincinnati, Church Collection, $5; Cincinnati, Church Offering, $10.
- PENNSYLVANIA, $217. Mrs. Morris, $2; Mrs. Rea, $10; Mr. Cox, $1; Miss Lewis, $1; Mrs. Foster, $2; Mr. J. G. McCandless, In Memory of the late Dr. G. J. McCandless, $5; Mr. Wightman, $10; Mr. Kely, $10; Wilkinsburg, Church Collection, $10; Mrs. Culver, $10; Mr. Cautchfield, $50; East Butler, Church Offering, $5; Mr. Soutter, $3; Mr. Wallace, $5; Mr. Pritsch, $1; Mr. Savage, $75; Mr. Huston, $2; Mr. Lincen, $10; Mrs. Porter, $5.
- RHODE ISLAND, $21.28. Huldah M., Mary A., Ellen A., and J. Pauline Slater, $5.28; Miss Lawton, $1; Mr. Clavin, $10; Miss Hazard, $5.
- SOUTH DAKOTA, $93.17. Lennox, Church Offering, $9.78; Davis, Church Offering, $18.86; Davis, Church Collec-

- tion, $30; Lennox, Church Offering, $1.53; Lennox, Church Collection, $33.
- TENNESSEE, $7. Jackson, Church Collection, $2; Mr. Rhea, $5; TEXAS, $5. Mr. Gubble, $5.
- VIRGINIA, $3.50. Miss Lanier, $1.50; Mrs. Gregory, $1; Mr. Brown, $1.
- WASHINGTON, $10.33. Mrs. Acker, $10; Mr. King, $0.33.
- FOREIGN, $50. Hawaii, Mr. and Mrs. Richards, $50.
- LEGACIES, $951.23. Berlin, Ct., Estate of Julia Hovey, $951.23.
- INCOME FROM TRUST FUNDS, $1,024.75.
- Income for Missionary Work, $1,024.75.

Donations

DONATIONS for the missionary work of the American Tract Society may be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

Form of Bequest

I GIVE and bequeath to the "AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY," instituted in the City of New York, May, 1825, the sum of.....dollars to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said Society.

Three witnesses should state that the testator declares this to be his last will and testament, and that they signed at his request, and in his presence and the presence of each other.

Life Members and Directors

THE donation of $30 at one time constitutes a Life Member of the American Tract Society; the addition of $70, or the donation of $100 at one time, constitutes a Life Director. Life members may receive annually copies of the Society's own publications to the value of $1; Life Directors to the value of $2; if applied for within the Society's year, from April 1st to April 1st, in person or by written order. No individual can draw more than one annuity any year for himself. Colporters are not authorized to supply Life Members.

To Our Subscribers

A RULING of the Post Office Department states that copies of the AMERICAN MESSENGER may not be mailed to persons whose subscriptions are in arrears for a period exceeding twelve months. In other words, the regulations of the Post Office Department compel us to remove from our regular mailing list the names of all who delay the payment of their subscriptions longer than twelve months. In view of this fact we urge upon all our friends the necessity of attending promptly to the renewal of their subscriptions. A glance at the address label on the wrapper of the paper will show at what date each subscription expires.

American Tract Society

THIS SOCIETY was organized in 1825. Its work is interdenominational and international in scope, and is commended by all evangelical denominations.

It has published the Gospel messages in 178 languages, dialects and characters. It has been the pioneer for work among the foreign-speaking people in our country, and its missionary colporters are distributing Christian literature in many languages among our foreign-speaking population and making a home-to-home visitation among the spiritually destitute, both in the cities and rural districts, leaving all kinds of Christian literature, also the Bible or portions of the Scriptures.

Its publication of leaflets, volumes and periodicals from the Home Office total 797,704,700 copies. It has made foreign cash appropriations to the amount of $802,966.39, and grants of electrotypes to the value of $61,177.96, by means of which millions of copies of books and tracts have been published at mission stations abroad.

The gratuitous distribution of the past year is to the value of $18,461.65. The grand total of its gratuitous distribution has been to the value of $2,652,967.54, which is the equivalent of 5,305,935,080 tract pages.

The total number of family visits that have been made by the Society's colporters during the last year is 199,963; the total number of volumes distributed by sale or grant is 55,712, making the total number of volumes that have been circulated by colporters in the last seventy-six years 17,438,166, and the total number of family visits that they have made during the same period 18,812,806.

The Society is making very special effort in behalf of Latin America, having entered upon the publication of a one volume Bible commentary in Spanish, a long-needed and earnestly prayed-for publication, and several other important volumes in both Spanish and Portuguese. Its total publications for Latin America now reach 16,012,088 copies. Its work, ever widening, is dependent upon donations and legacies, and greatly needs increased offerings.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President. JUDSON SWIFT, D. D., General Secretary. Remittances should be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

FIELD SECRETARIES AND COLPORTAGE SUPERINTENDENTS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.

Rev. Isaac Pierson, Field Secretary for New England, 50 Bromfield Street, Boston, Mass.

Rev. A. W. Reinhard, Field Secretary and Superintendent of Colportage for the Western and Northwestern States, 313 Y. M. C. A. Building, Omaha, Nebraska.

Rev. George Whitefort, Superintendent of Colportage, Southern Agency, Crichton, R.F.D., Mobile Co., Ala.

Cheering Words.

How the work of the American Tract Society is regarded by one of its donors is disclosed in the following communication from an old-time friend and supporter, who writes:

"I send you a donation of $10.00 for your great and good work. Such work as you conduct for righteousness is of priceless value. Since my childhood, when my father took your paper, the AMERICAN MESSENGER, I have been interested in the American Tract Society. My father was Dr. David Nelson, who wrote a book on 'Infidelity' in the year 1836. He died in 1844. Of his twelve children I alone remain. I am eighty-one years old. It pains me to have so little to send to you for so wide a field as your work covers."

An Appreciated Grant.

A grant of books sent by the American Tract Society to the Florence Crittenton League was thus acknowledged:

"We desire to thank you heartily for your kind donation of copies of 'Good News in Story and Song,' and wish to assure you of our appreciation of your generosity in this matter."

For the Soldiers.

A grant of Cromwell's Pocket Bibles sent to the soldiers at Montgomery, Ala., by the American Tract Society brought forth this response from Mr. R. L. Alexander, Secretary of the Army Branch of the Y. M. C. A. at that point:

"I wish to acknowledge the package of Cromwell's Pocket Bibles which you so graciously sent to me for distribution among the men of the army.

"Permit me the liberty of thanking you for this gift in behalf of both the Y. M. C. A. and the soldiers."

Tracts for Open Air Meetings.

Rev. Robert D. Scott, Associate Minister of the Olivet Institute Church of Chicago, Ill., has thus acknowledged a grant sent by the American Tract Society:

"I am writing to express to you our very sincere appreciation of the grant of tracts to be used for free distribution at our open air meetings. We have found these tracts very useful and they have been well received and generally read."

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

TERMS: Subscription price, 50 cts. a year, payable in advance. In clubs of five or more, 30 cts. each. Club subscriptions mailed to separate addresses, if desired. Charge for foreign subscription, 24 cents additional. Canadian subscription, 12 cents additional. Single copies, 5 cents each.

On account of the additional charge which is made by the New York Post Office for mailing to subscribers in New York and Bronx Counties (Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx), no club rates, cash commissions or premiums will be given for subscriptions that must be sent to persons residing in those Counties. Each subscription in New York or Bronx County must be at the rate of 50 cents net.

Remit by Express Money Order, Draft, Post Office Order or Registered Letter. For very small amounts, postage stamps may be sent at the risk of the sender.

RENEWALS: The date opposite your name shows to what time the subscription has been paid, and a change in the date is the receipt for renewal.

CHANGES: When sending change of address, be sure to send the old address as well as the new one.

OUR ADVERTISERS: We believe that all the advertisements in this paper are from responsible advertisers, and it is our intention to admit only such to our columns. Should, however, any of our subscribers find that any advertiser does not live up to his agreements, we would consider it a favor if they will inform us, and we will at any time give prompt attention to any complaint.

We do not, of course, guarantee that all persons will take the same point of view with the advertisers, and it must be borne in mind that the claims and statements made by advertisers are their assertions, and not ours.

Our readers will confer a favor upon advertisers and also upon us if they will mention the AMERICAN MESSENGER when answering advertisements.

THE ORIGINAL CHEMICAL
Indoor Closet
30,000 SOLD—FIFTH YEAR
More Comfortable, Healthful, Convenient
Eliminates the out-house, open vault and cess-pool, which are breeding places for germs. Have a warm, sanitary, odorless toilet right in your house. No going out in cold weather. A boon to invalids. Endorsed by State Boards of Health.

ABSOLUTELY ODORLESS
Put It Anywhere In The House
The germs are killed by a chemical process in water in the container. Empty once a month. No more trouble to empty than ashes. Closet absolutely guaranteed. Guaranteed on file in the office of this publication. Ask for catalog and price.

RO-SAN SANITARY MFG. CO. 610 6th ST., DETROIT, MICH.
Ask about the Ro-San Washstand—Hot and Cold Running Water Without Plumbing

Sunday School Libraries

The American Tract Society publishes many books for Sunday School Libraries. Catalogue sent on request. Address AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY Park Ave. and 40th St., New York

A FINE COMBINATION OFFER

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER AND THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

Two of the Most Popular Religious Publications in America for only $2.25 a year to any part of the United States or Its Possessions.

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY RELIGIOUS MONTHLY

Regular Subscription Price 50 Cents a Year

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

Fifty-two Times a Year $2.00 a Year

The Christian Herald, interdenominational, is read every week by over two million Americans of the home-loving, deep-thinking class. It carries into the family circle the news of the world, secular as well as religious, in such a plain straightforward manner that every reader is kept abreast of the times.

Please note that this Special Offer applies only to subscriptions in the United States and its possessions. On Foreign subscriptions $1.24 extra must be added for postage, making a total of $3.49.

If a copy of the beautiful little year book entitled "Daily Food," is desired, ten cents additional must be added. Please send all combination subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER.

Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York

Food Conservation

The United States Food Administration has from the first relied largely on the churches for aid in carrying out the campaign for food conservation. On account of their ideals and their organization the churches were recognized as pre-eminently fitted for this patriotic work, which involves a moral and religious motive. To the appeal made the churches responded promptly and enthusiastically through their representatives. Clergy and laity of all denominations offered their co-operation. It soon became evident, from the requests that poured in from religious leaders, that those who desired to speak for this cause from pulpit and platform must be armed with accurate and explicit information along the many lines of this national duty of thrift of food in order that we may do our share in the world war for democracy.

Accordingly, largely in response to requests from the ministers, a three days' school of instruction was recently arranged for, to which representatives of all denominations were invited. They were asked to go to Washington at their own expense, attend the sessions faithfully, and then pledge themselves to be ready to present the subject to churches of their own city, town or neighborhood, and to church gatherings and conventions, as opportunity might be given. To many it seemed an impossibility to secure students for such a school, under such limitations. But the American people are vitally interested in the war, and the program of Food Conservation has commanded widespread interest, respect and approval. So when the school was opened in the assembly hall of the New National Museum, there were more than 125 enrolled, pledged students.

The program had been carefully prepared and was carried through without break and with cumulative interest. Experts had gladly responded to this call for service, and these men, each eminent in his specialty, presented such subjects as the Work of the Food Survey, Wheat Needs of the World, Wheat Production in the United States, Milk Needs of the Nation, Transportation Problems, and What to Eat in War Time. Opportunity for quiz and discussion was given after each address, and the discussions proved of keen interest. There were no wasted words by the men who were advocating wasteless meals, and it would be difficult to find a higher grade of instruction in any school than was furnished these students by all the speakers, from the first to the last.

The sessions were held morning and evening, and the six hours or more a day were packed with information. The school was opened by prayer, in recognition of the fact that the program of food conservation needs the divine guidance, and it was continued in the same spirit. Many of the things said would have sounded well from any pulpit, and few sermons could exceed in spiritual power the address of Doctor Alonzo Taylor, with its superb tribute to the women of France and its appeal to the women of America to rise to a like height of self-sacrifice and religious fervor. Secretary Vrooman's address, too, at the first session, was distinctly a religious appeal. He said:

"Business will never be done again in this country as before the war; it will be raised to a higher plane, shot through with a new moral purpose. If there is any spiritual vitality in the world, it is now going to come to realization. If the nation will mobilize its spiritual resources as the army and agriculture are mobilizing theirs, then our baptism of blood will also be a baptism of the spirit; then living for country will attain something of the distinction of dying for country. America will have demonstrated its ability to spiritualize its unequalled material power; to become the master, not the slave, of its erstwhile gods of gold. I want to see every man, woman and child in this nation put at some work involving sacrifice, and anyone not willing to do this is a poor excuse for an American. We have our opportunity to do our part in the war. I have told our farmers that their work in the furrow is as important as that of the soldiers in the trenches, but not as dangerous. If we give up all we have, we wouldn't be making as much of a sacrifice as the boys who are offering their bodies as a bulwark for democracy. They are laying their precious youth on the altar of country, that a free America and a free world may live. Let us back up their sacrifice with ours, in kitchen, in dining room, in workshop, everywhere. If we are not sacrificing until it hurts, we are not sacrificing enough. It will not be enough until we are doing everything which is humanly possible for us to do. The American people must become imbued with this spirit. Then we will have a hundred million crusaders for food conservation, and the bloody battles won in Europe will be the result of bloodless battles fought here."

The New York Anti-Saloon League

The Anti-Saloon League of New York started its fall drive by inaugurating a new state-wide educational campaign with an exhibit of scientific charts and diagrams and a stereo-motorgraph with temperance slides, at the Fourth National Exposition of Safety and Sanitation, under the joint auspices of the American Museum of Safety and the National Safety Council, at the Grand Central Palace, New York City.

The League employed the Scientific Temperance Federation, a national organization with headquarters at Boston, and the recognized scientific authority on the temperance question in America, to prepare and exhibit this material.

As a part of the same general campaign, the League has contracted for four traveling exhibits also prepared by the Scientific Temperance Federation, to remain from one to three weeks in a place, and these will be made available to some thirty cities which will vote next April under the new Hill-Wheeler City Local Option Law.

In addition to this, the league is pushing the use of scientific posters in public places under the direction of churches and young people's societies, which maintain the bulletin boards and change the posters, and also in industrial plants as part of the welfare work done by the management.

This work, designed to help in no license contests, does not take the place of, but is in addition to the regular legislative activity of the league in behalf of the submission of a prohibition amendment to the state constitution and the passage of the optional prohibition remonstrance bill which will be pushed in the next session of the legislature.

The Anti-Saloon League is also organizing a speaker's bureau for the assistance of local committees in the town wet-and-dry fights under the Raines law this fall, and under the City Local Option law next spring, and is also arranging to supply literature for such campaigns.

Gospel Munitions.

Chaplain J. Madison Hare, Chaplain of the Fourth Regiment, New Jersey Infantry, writes:

"On behalf of the officers and men of the 4th N. J. Infantry, I want to thank the American Tract Society for the donation of 2,000 copies of the Soldier's Text Book and 'Pivot Battles of Life.' I am sure that they will do great good."

Our Medicine Chest

Summer Boarder—"You wrote me that mosquitoes were nowhere in this neighborhood."

Farmer—"I reckon there's some mistake, pardner. I must o' writ that mosquitoes were now here in the neighborhood."

"Give three reasons for saying the earth is round," confronted Sandy in an examination paper.

"My teacher says it's round, the book says it's round, and a man told me it was round."

Elizabeth was studying about the discovery of the Pacific ocean by Balboa. "Well," said she, looking up from her history, "what I don't understand is how Balboa knew it was the Pacific ocean when he had never seen it before."

The teacher had spent some time in giving emphasis to the importance of cultivating a good conscience. She had told the class that conscience would grow strong and large, and when the boys became men they would have it as a friend and helper. Johnny raised his hand. "What is it, Johnny?" He stood up like a soldier on parade and said, stroking his chin, "I am not going to have any conscience. I am going to have whiskers on my chin."

"Now, me good man," said the pompous stranger, who had signed "Viscount Hardcastle, London," on the register, "what are your terms here?" "Cash in advance," replied the shrewd hotel clerk promptly.

The Nervous Guest (asked to sit next to his hostess and opposite the goose)—"Am I to sit so close to the goose (suddenly feeling this may be misunderstood)—er—I mean the roast one."

"Do you think that the automobile will displace the horse?" asked the conversational young woman. "It will," answered the nervous young man as he gazed down the road, "if it ever hits him."

Two Irishmen were philosophizing. Said Pat to Mike: "Did yez iver shtop to think that wan-half the world don't know how the other half gets along?" "You're right," said Mike, "and neither does the other half."

Margaret, aged five, had been very rude to a little guest, and after the child had gone home Margaret's mother told her very feelingly how grieved she was at her rudeness.

"I've tried so hard to make you a good child, Margaret, to teach you to be polite and kind to others; and yet, in spite of all my efforts, you are so rude and so naughty."

Margaret, deeply moved, looked sadly at her mother and said, "What a failure you are, mother!"

Edith had just returned from her first ride behind the new horse.

"Well, how do you like it?" asked her mother, as the child came running in. "Oh, mamma!" she cried, "it's the best turnarounder you ever saw."

"Mother, you must have known our principal when you went to school."

"Why, yes, I guess I did."

"He seemed to remember you today. He told me what a bright girl I was, and then he said, 'It doesn't seem possible that you can be Amy Jones' daughter.'"

"George," said the small boy's father sternly, "where are those seven pears I left on the table this morning?"

"Father," replied the child, "I haven't touched one of them."

"Then how does it happen that there is only one pear remaining?" demanded the father.

"Because," said truthful George, "that is the one I did not touch."

The Composition of Coca-Cola and its Relation to Tea

Prompted by the desire that the public shall be thoroughly informed as to the composition and dietetic character of Coca-Cola, the Company has issued a booklet giving a detailed analysis of its recipe which is as follows:

Water, sterilized by boiling (carbonated); sugar, granulated, first quality; fruit flavoring extracts with caramel; acid flavorings, citric (lemon) and phosphoric; essence of tea—the refreshing principle.

The following analysis, by the late Dr. John W. Mallet, Fellow of the Royal Society and for nearly forty years Professor of Chemistry in the University of Virginia, shows the comparative stimulating or refreshing strength of tea and Coca-Cola, measured in terms of the refreshing principle:

Black tea—1 cupful..... 1.54
(hot) (5 fl. oz.)

Green tea—1 glassful..... 2.02
(cold) (8 fl. oz. exclusive of ice)

Coca-Cola—1 drink, 8 fl. oz..... 1.21
(fountain) (prepared with 1 fl. oz. Syrup)

Coca-Cola—1 drink, 8 fl. oz..... 1.12
(bottlers) (prepared with 1 fl. oz. Syrup)

From the above recipe and analysis, which are confirmed by all chemists who have analyzed these beverages, it is apparent that Coca-Cola is a carbonated, fruit-flavored modification of tea of a little more than one-half its stimulating strength.

A copy of the booklet referred to above will be mailed free on request, and The Coca-Cola Company especially invites inquiry from those who are interested in pure food and public health propaganda. Address

The Coca-Cola Co., Dept. J., Atlanta, Ga., U.S.A.

For the Boy Who Is Going to the Front

Small Volumes for the Kit, the Package, or the Pocket.

SOLDIER'S TEXT BOOK

Compiled by J. R. Macduff, D.D.
Art Paper Cover. Price, 5 cents a copy
(by mail 7 cents). $5.00 per hundred
postpaid.

A little pocket volume of 46 pages containing a reading and a verse of Scripture especially adapted for the soldier for thirty-one mornings and thirty-one evenings. Four pages of sanitary directions at the back gleaned from long campaign experience. This little volume is a splendid companion for every soldier.

DAILY FOOD

Cloth, 2¼ by 3¼ in. Price, 15 cents postpaid.

"THESE WORDS OF MINE"

Selected and arranged by Abbie McCammon Brown. Bound in limp leather with book mark. Boxed. Price, 30 cents net (by mail 32 cents).

A little pocket book of 157 pages divided into months, with a selection of Scripture for every day in each month. A special page for special occasions. Beatitudes, Lord's Prayer, Commandments, etc., at the back.

CROMWELL'S POCKET BIBLE

Art paper cover, 3 by 4½ in. Price, 5 cents a copy, (by mail 7 cents.) $5.00 per hundred, postpaid.

NEW TESTAMENT WITH NOTES

Silk cloth bound. Thin paper. Clear type. Red edges. Printed jacket with band of red, white and blue. 75 cents a copy postpaid for a short time. Better prices in quantities.

This New Testament is in answer to the demand for a pocket-size book with all the advantages of notes and explanations embodied in our complete Self-Explaining Bible. Concise explanations and instructions making daily application of the Word at the bottom of each page. Very helpful.

LIFE AND ADVENTURES OF JACK PHILIP, REAR ADMIRAL, U. S. N.

By Edgar Stanton Maclay, A. M.
Bound in cloth, 288 pages, 16 illustrations. Price 75 cents postpaid.

It is the well-told life of one of the most modest and noble heroes of the great American navy. Admiral Philip was a Paul Jones of our later sea-fighting line. Brimming over with action, written in admirable spirit, this book will be an inspiration to all patriotic fathers and sons. If we must have war, Admiral Jack Philip should be the hero of every last man.

THE ISLANDS OF THE PACIFIC

By James M. Alexander. Bound in cloth, 369 pages, 37 illustrations, 9 maps. Price $1.00 postpaid.

A timely volume dealing with the more important of the Pacific Islands, relating the almost incredible experiences and the remarkable accomplishments of people who have gone to the various groups. Special chapters on the Society, the Pearl, the Fiji, the Austral, Pitcairn and Norfolk Islands, Hawaii and New Zealand. An extremely informative history.

AN OBSERVER IN THE PHILIPPINES

By John Bancroft Devins. With a foreword by Ex-President Taft, and an appendix containing extracts of addresses by William McKinley, Theodore Roosevelt, Judge Alton B. Parker, Elihu Root and Luke E. Wright. Bound in cloth, 416 pages, 64 illustrations. Price, $2.00 postpaid.

Dr. Devins made a thoroughly personal study of the Philippine Islands. He travelled extensively among the natives, knew their customs, habits, peculiarities and latent possibilities. This book is an authority as to whether or not the Filipino is capable of governing himself and how he would do it, if given a chance. Dr. Devins also realized the commercial value and diplomatic advantage of this group of Islands. Read what we, as a nation, received for our $20,000,000 purchase price. Read whether it is wise for us to lose our right and release our supervision over the Philippines, especially at this time.

RELIGIOUS LIFE OF FAMOUS AMERICANS

By Louis Albert Banks. Bound in cloth. Frontispiece. 248 pages. Price, 50 cents postpaid.

All of our famous men and women made religion a part of their every-day life. It was this faith and practice which was the base of their success, which gave to them strength in times of stress and care and carried them onward. It is especially invigorating for our boys and girls and even their elders to know how much the great leaders of our land exercised Faith and Trust.

Among the well-known men and women cited are Abraham Lincoln, Rufus Choate, Samuel F. B. Morse, John Quincy Adams, James A. Garfield, Emma Willard, Abigail Adams, "Stonewall" Jackson and Robert E. Lee.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

PARK AVENUE AND 40th STREET

NEW YORK

AMM

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

PROPERTY OF BARNES LIBRARY
72 25 117

Vol. 75

NOVEMBER, 1917

No. 11

CHRIST IN THE PEASANT'S HOME

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY, NEW YORK.

W. E. FRITZ, DES.

KEEP ABREAST BY READING

NEW PUBLICATIONS, FALL, 1917

THE PROPHETS AND THE WAR

By Charles Carroll Albertson, D.D.

What is to come after the war? This is a volume of prophecy with a real application to the events of today and tomorrow. A great message and lesson are still to be gained in this world war from Hosea, Habakkuk and Isaiah. Dr. Albertson in his "Prophets and the War" has shown what is happening and what will happen after the war. With the interest lately shown in prophecy, it is a very important book.

12mo. Cloth 80 pages Jacketed Price, net $1.00.

THE HIGH ROAD

By Emma S. Allen, author of "The Awakening of the Hartwells"

Original drawings by H. A. Weiss

A remarkable story of Prohibition. A group of young people cast themselves into the vortex of a State Prohibition Campaign. Both sides work vigorously for their respective causes. How one "took the High Road" and one "took the Low Road" and met after long deviations, not on the shores of "bonnie Loch Lomond," but on the shores of San Francisco Bay, is delightfully narrated by this Western authoress.

12mo. Cloth 326 pages Jacket in 2 colors Price, net $1.35

AS HIS MOTHER SAW HIM

By Charlotte E. Gray

A really beautiful picture of the home at Nazareth, the girl Mary, the exultant woman Mary, and the Mary bowed with grief. The relation of Mary and Jesus is most delicately and tactfully defined. The story will help young people as well as their elders to a clearer perception of the life of our Saviour.

16mo. Half cloth 254 pages Jacketed Price, net $1.00

ANNA COOPE: SKY PILOT OF THE SAN BLAS INDIANS

An Autobiography. With map and illustrations from author's photographs

This is the story of a young girl who was confident she had a work to do in the world. What Mary Slessor did for her African people, Anna Coope is doing for her Panamanian Indians. It is a romance hardly believable, yet so simply and straightforwardly told that there can be no doubt of its truth. Every page breathes life and faith.

12mo. Cloth 180 pages Jacketed Price, net $1.25

ALMETTA OF GABRIEL'S RUN

By Louise S. Murdoch. Original drawings by H. A. Weiss

A realistic story of the Mountain Whites. The scene is laid in the Cumberland Mountains, and Almetta is a true-going little heroine. Through her this new authoress reveals the homes and hearts, the romances and the tragedies, of the people she has so intimately known and so long loved. Through their external sturdiness and uncouthness she makes us see a heart and love akin to our own.

12mo. Cloth 244 pages Jacketed Price, net $1.25

All books sent, postpaid, on receipt of price

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

The Meridian Press

Park Ave. and 40th St., New York

Our complete new catalogue No. 93 will be ready November 1st.
Send for a copy.

The American Messenger

"Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Luke 2:10

Vol. 75. No. 11

NOVEMBER, 1917

Copyright, 1917, by American Tract Society.

Terms: 50 cents per annum
Single copy, 5 cents

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

PUBLISHED MONTHLY

BY THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

OFFICERS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President.

JOHN HENRY JOWETT, M.A., D.D., Vice-President.

JUDSON SWIFT, D.D., General Secretary.

LOUIS TAG, Treasurer.

REV. HENRY LEWIS, Ph.D., Recording Secretary.

All of the above-named officers should be addressed at Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Rev. David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.

Rev. Charles Carroll Albertson, D.D.

Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.

Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D.

Rev. George Ernest Merriam.

Entered at the Post Office in New York as second-class matter.

The Thanksgiving Season

As we approach the Thanksgiving season this year, we realize that this will be a different Thanksgiving from any that we have hitherto experienced. Our country, it is true, has abundant reasons for thanksgiving, but we are facing responsibilities the full weight of which we have hardly begun to feel, and we have entered upon a crisis in our international relations such as we have never before known.

The full crops that have been garnered in are an especially cogent reason for thankfulness at this time of universal need. The duty that rests upon us to conserve this food supply and to use it to the utmost possible advantage in providing subsistence for ourselves and our allies is an imperative one. There can be no excuse for the wasting of food, and the obligation to practice a wise economy in regard to all the necessities of life rests upon every man, woman and child in our land.

We may be thankful, at this time, that our country has not evaded its moral obligations, but has faced and decided the great issues of right and wrong. We may be thankful that it has stood for the sanctity of treaties and the rights of humanity. We may rejoice that it has dared to uphold righteousness and to resist the evil influences that would fain have made us acquiesce in the domination of a cruel and unscrupulous militarism.

So we approach the Thanksgiving season, not with levity but with a sober and thoughtful realization of the situation in which our nation is placed, and with faith that the divine favor which has rested upon us through all the past years will continue with us through all the vicissitudes through which we may be called to pass.

The Gathering of Our National Army

During the past weeks the process of assembling the men who have been drafted into the new National Army of the United States has gone steadily forward, and now there are gathered in the various cantonments about half a million young men who have responded to the selective draft and have gone forth to prepare themselves to defend the honor of our country wherever they may be sent.

The presence of these large bodies of young men in different sections of our land constitutes a challenge to the communities in their immediate vicinity, for the character of these young men will inevitably be influenced by the environment by which they are surrounded.

A heavy responsibility therefore rests upon those who live in the vicinity of these training camps to see that every effort is made to provide a safe, clean and morally uplifting atmosphere for these young soldiers who are in the making.

Those who are in governmental authority in the cities, towns and villages near these cantonments should see that evil resorts are driven out and that abundant opportunity is furnished for wholesome recreation.

Churches and other Christian organizations should plan for community welfare work, which will prove a blessing both to the young soldiers and to the localities where they are stationed.

Especial attention should be given to the matter of furnishing good Christian reading for the soldiers. An excellent means of accomplishing this end is provided by the Patriot Library for Our Soldiers and Sailors, which the American Tract Society has prepared to meet this specific need, and for the circulation of which it solicits generous gifts from the Christian public, so that this Library may be placed in every army cantonment and sent to every battleship and cruiser in the United States Navy.

The Opening of the Catskill Aqueduct

The completion of the Catskill Water Supply System for New York City was celebrated with appropriate ceremonies on October 12-14, 1917. The construction of this Catskill Aqueduct has been characterized as the greatest piece of water supply engineering ever accomplished and it ranks with the Panama Canal as one of the most wonderful engineering achievements of any kind in the world.

Starting at an elevation of 610 feet above tide level in the Catskill Mountains, and creating four large lakes on its way, the aqueduct burrows under valleys, tunnels through mountains, dives under rivers to a depth of 1,114 feet below sea-level, bores through the solid rock of Manhattan Island, and delivers pure mountain water to every borough of what in all probability will be one day the world's greatest city.

In the completion of this great aqueduct we may find occasion for thanksgiving to God, who "sendest the springs into the valleys which run among the hills." Water plays a most important part in the life of man, and the Bible is full of symbolism based upon this fact. The health and safety of a city depend upon its water supply, and it is a matter of congratulation that the needs of the great metropolis of our country have been so abundantly provided for by the successful completion of the great Catskill water supply system.

Women's Service for Our Country

The great Red Cross Parade in New York City which took place a few weeks ago was a wonderful spectacle. It suggested not only the strength of the Red Cross Society but it called to mind the large and ever-increasing service which women are rendering in the life of our nation as it enters more and more deeply into the great World War.

All honor is due to these brave women, who have offered themselves for nursing at the front. We know that they take a very real risk, when they enter upon the war zone and take up the work of caring for sick, wounded and dying soldiers close to the battlefield.

But not only to these Red Cross nurses must praise be given at this time. Let us not forget the wives and mothers in thousands of homes who have sent forth their nearest and dearest to battle for the cause of righteousness, not with sorrow and repining, but in the spirit of willing devotion, rejoicing to make this sacrifice so that their husbands and sons may help to make this world a safer and a better place to live in, even though it be at the expense of their own lives.

In every line of effort women are rendering service of incalculable value to the nation in this time of crisis, and we may rest assured that they will rise to any emergency that the future may present.

A Great Evangelistic Campaign in China

A recent communication from the Foreign Missions Conference of North America calls attention to the special evangelistic campaign which is being carried forward in China.

This campaign is a continuation and development of the forward movement in evangelism which has been pushed by the Christian forces in China during the past four years. It aims to reach especially the large numbers of men who in previous campaigns have promised to study the Gospel and to obey its truth. A strong effort will be made to bring these inquirers to an open profession of faith in Christ and to lead them into church membership and Christian service.

In this movement the Christian forces of all denominations are uniting in special campaigns, centering in fifteen or more of the largest cities.

The churches at the home base should share very definitely in the responsibility for this evangelistic campaign and by their interest and their intercession they should sustain the hands of those who are carrying forward this effort.

The Fountain of Youth

BY CLARENCE E. FLYNN

THE past ages had a remarkable story about a fountain of youth, the waters of which possessed the power to keep one young forever. Some of the early explorers of America were lured on their way by the hope of finding that spring of unending vitality somewhere in the Western World. But they died without having realized their dream. They failed to realize it because they had supposed the fountain of youth to be a localized thing. As a matter of fact, location has little to do with it.

There is a fountain of youth. Its place, however, is limited neither by the balmy waters of the southern seas nor by the icy fastnesses of arctic regions. Such as it is, it exists everywhere. The healing of its waters is not denied to any seeker. Like most priceless things, it is as well within the reach of the poor as of the rich. It is the privilege and opportunity of high and lowly alike.

One of the paths to the fountain of youth is a right attitude of mind and right habits of thought. While many have been seeking vainly through the world for the desired fountain, they were all the while unconsciously carrying it about within their own inner lives.

One is as old as the spirit within him. The outer life simply takes the mould of the inner thought. The marks of age take possession of one's frame in approximate proportion to the degree of his surrender to them. A landscape bears the color of the spectacles of the beholder. The whole world has for a norm the attitude of the individual toward it. When the mind grows sluggish and purposeless, the spirit of age has laid hold upon its possessor. While the mind remains clear and fresh, with its vigor unabated, the individual still shares in the saving waters of the immortal fountain. The date of one's birth may be misleading, but the spirit of his soul never is.

One stands each moment upon the threshold between the past and the future. It is for him to decide which shall claim his thought. Youth dwells upon the future, because the future holds its hopes and plans. Age dwells upon the past, because the past holds the memory of its activities and kindred ties. While one keeps his face to the future, he remains young. When he begins to live in the past, he is allowing himself to grow old. There is a sweetness about an occasional hour spent in roaming the halls of memory, but in to-morrow lie life's supreme considerations.

Those who keep thinking and toiling grow old more slowly than do those who relinquish their hold upon the activities and the concerns

A National Evil

Betting on the results of elections has become a national evil. The amount of money staked on the result of the last national election was said to total millions of dollars, and in practically every election that is held betting has become a sinister feature of the campaign.

Christian people should do all in their power to discourage this aspect of American life. Betting on the election tends to encourage all other forms of gambling, and gambling is one of the most dangerous evils of our age.

Someone has truly said, "There is a recrudescence of gambling all over the land just when it seemed to be almost conquered. It must be shown by moral leaders more faithfully that gambling is about the oldest and meanest and least excusable of the vices. When gambling is done as a business it comes under the ban of the saying, 'Only a fair exchange is no robbery.' When it is done at games or in other social hours, it comes under the ban as 'dragging shop' into our leisure hours. And at elections it calls up that picture of an empty mind, 'A bet is a fool's argument.'"

The streams of our political life should be kept clear and pure. Betting on elections may easily lead to the corrupt use of money to influence the election in order to obtain a desired result. It is manifestly in the interest of sound citizenship to eliminate anything that threatens in any way, however slight, to interfere with the integrity of the ballot or the honesty of an election.

of life. Body and spirit alike begin the process of atrophy on the day when interests begin to decay. When the mind and the hand pass to rest, the body may be expected to soon share their slumber. This is the reason why so many busy people grow old so courageously. It also suggests the reason why so many fail to long outlive their active days. Only while the mind craves knowledge and the heart feels the throb of the social impulse does the eye remain undimmed and the natural force unabated.

A second path to the fountain of youth is that of right living. This is not merely implicit obedience to arbitrary law. It is living in harmony with the universe. Without it youth can never long remain.

A very marked type of divine healing is to be found in the abounding health which is the result of living in accord with the divine laws of nature. The finest instances of that healing are perhaps to be found in the absence of diseases that have never occurred. In other words, its chief usefulness is preventive.

In a wholly Christian race of men there would be but a minimum of disease. Insurance companies understand this fact. The physical decay of the body is chiefly the result of inroads made by disease, and the greatest fostering influence of disease is wrongdoing. Both directly and indirectly sin works havoc with mankind. Physical abnormalities root in someone's disregard for established laws. In one case the sin may be one of intentional wrongdoing, and in another it may be the equally disastrous one of common ignorance and carelessness.

The Hebrews furnish a notable instance of racial vitality. They are what they are to-day largely as a result of the fact that their remote forefathers were born and nurtured in camps and cities where uncleanness was a disgrace and where a violation of the laws of life was a sin. The laws of right living are not merely a list of arbitrary regulations, the highest design of which is to prove the willingness of men to obey them. They are the provisions of a kind Providence for humanity's own welfare and progress.

A third path to the fountain of youth is the conservation of health along scientific lines. This may involve medical means frequently, and it may, on occasion, even involve surgical means. It will most generally, however, involve conformity to a liberal knowledge of the ways of nature.

Dr. Metchnikoff, the great Russian scientist, who spent his last years in Paris, has given to the world some illuminating discoveries upon this question of old age. He long suspected that the thing we have been calling by the name of old age, was simply the physical indication of the inroads made by disease germs to which the increasing weakness of advancing years opened a freer way. He proved to his own satisfaction, and to that of many others as well, that the apparent signs of age are the result of the ravages of a certain bacillus which inhabits the intestinal tract. He also proved the sour principle of buttermilk to be fairly fatal to that germ. One of the evidences of his latter conclusion, is the fact that some of the most noted cases of longevity have been those of regular drinkers of sour milk. Physical decay seems to be only a symptom of inner attacks, which will sooner or later break down an organ, or result in a general collapse.

It is not to be supposed that any regard for the laws of health, however strict it might be, will make it impossible ever to grow old. Physical decay is inevitable and physical death is certain. It is possible, however, to long preserve the physical condition of youth by keeping the resistance of the body at the highest possible point. This can be done only by preserving the best possible continual state of health.

The sedentary character of much of the life of to-day is one of the weakening habits of our age. On the other hand, we have an army of people who are so over-exercised at their daily toil, that their bodies are sapped of all vitality and their minds are robbed of all vigor. Between these two extremes lies a golden mean. Well-directed use of all the muscles and regular movement of all the organs, does afford vast help in keeping the body fresh and youthful.

We are the victims of another age-producing habit in the excessive quantity and richness of the food we consume. We are too willing to eat all we can get and contain. We are over-disposed, too, to truckle to the demands of palates that have been trained to enjoy unnatural and unwholesome tastes.

Any experience which would drive us all back to plain living, simple eating, and active habits would probably result in large benefit to us. If our plan of living were re-established upon a childlike plane, we might again expect to enjoy childlike vitality, with its intermingling of childlike activity and childlike slumber.

An Old Testament story tells how a Hebrew king prayed for a new hold upon life, and how his prayer resulted in the turning of the shadow upon the dial. That invisible hand which turned the shadow upon the dial of the days of a king waits ever to preserve the lives of the members of the race. The One, however, who heard the prayer of Hezekiah was the same One who established the laws of life and nature. Obedience to those laws is still the key by which the very years may be swung backward in their flight.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTION

REV. G. ERNEST MERRIAM.

CREDO: "I BELIEVE"

BY

REV. GEORGE ERNEST MERRIAM

Minister of Calvinistic Congregational Church, Fitchburg, Massachusetts

THE first word of the beginner in the Christian life and the last word of experienced faith as he goes down the western slope should be, "Credo—I Believe." Credo means a creed. It is the first word in the Latin version of the Apostle's Creed. Hence it has come to represent that creed as a whole, or any creed, long or short, accepted by the believer. Frequently it is used to represent the statement of doctrine prepared by the candidate for the ministry or the candidate for a new pulpit, which he presents before the ecclesiastical court or council in which is vested the authority to ordain or to install. Not only the prophet of God, but the man of affairs has need of a creed; above all he who would be busy about the King's business.

At this point some man of affairs may rise and insist that deeds are of more avail than creeds. Yes, that is true, but there are good deeds and bad deeds and indifferent deeds. Such pronouncements are after all but platitudes. We are all guilty of using such truisms. We do well to remember they are well nigh falsisms. At best, they represent only half the truth, and we do well to supplement them with some further expression of our thought. The fact is that the deed depends upon the creed. This is the psychology of theology. Witness Professor Scripture's little volume on, "Thinking, Feeling, Doing." When first issued, it created a quite a stir as bringing the attention of the people to the fact that knowledge was fundamental to any deep emotion, just as emotion was a necessary intermediate step to decision or action. To many it was a revelation. It was, however, by no means a new discovery, but simply a restatement of an old position. Listen to the Master of men as He speaks to the father of the demoniac son. The latter has just pleaded the case of his boy, ending with the words, "If thou canst do anything, have compassion on us and help us." Jesus turns upon him and says, "If thou canst! All things are possible to him that believeth."

The right to believe is the right to feel deeply, the right to serve, and even the right to be. According to the first great dictionary maker, Dr. Samuel Johnson, this word belief was from "belcifen," an Anglo-Saxon word meaning—that by which we live.

Now, such a belief starts with faith, it is rooted in, nay, even seeded in some faith, however simple or however complex. Of course, this is to make a distinction between belief and faith, as we should do, for the one is largely intellectual, while the other is essentially spiritual. It is the dictum of empirical psychology that what cannot be demonstrated should be treated as though it did not exist. According to this postulate man must needs doubt. He must doubt everything which he cannot prove, or which is not known to him by actual experience. But if he doubts consistently he comes to the point, according to one of the great philosophers, where he is conscious of the doubting, and knows at least that there is a doubter. So belief finds the first rung upon the ladder of scientific knowledge, or lays the first cable of the suspension bridge which is finally to link the individual man to society or even to his God.

This process is all very well for the classroom, this first-hand knowledge tested step by step, thread by thread, subject by subject. But in real life, we must depend for a working knowledge largely upon others. We must have faith in what they have learned and in that which they tell to us. What knowledge can a child have of geography or of locality? He is on a road hitherto untraveled by him and in a section that is entirely strange as yet. He knows only that which he learns from parent, teacher or friend. And the adult is still a child. Thus man's knowledge generally is very limited—that is, his absolute knowledge. What can he know of history? He cannot be transported back into ages that are gone and learn for himself what actually occurred. He cannot even delve into the sources as a rule, and set authority against authority. He reads the books suggested by others and accepts the statements of the author as they are made page by page.

So in every department we have our specialists, in zoology, in philosophy, in ethics and in theology. We believe in them, we accept them as our authority, and if we study them closely we shall find that even they have changing standards. There is the old and the new. In science there is ever a better view of the unchanging truth. The truth itself changes not. Jesus Christ says, "I am the Way, the Truth and the Life," and He changes not, but is the same yesterday, to-day and forever. He knows: we sit at his feet and listen. We know whom we have believed. His belief is our faith, and if as a great scholar has maintained, the word faith comes to us through the ancient languages with the original figure of a cable, surely this is the faith—the cable which binds us to the throne of God and at the same time to the hearts and tasks of our fellows.

Belief is not only to be seeded in faith; it is to grow in an atmosphere of tolerance. Only in such an atmosphere can it grow strong and straight, ready to be crowned with foliage, with blossoms and finally with fruit. We have heard of a great man who accused his opponent of being dogmatic and, when it was suggested to him that he also might be guilty of the same sin, replied, "Yes, but I am dogmatic and right, he is dogmatic and wrong." Such conviction is striking, even magnetic, but dangerous, for the best of men have often made mistakes

What we would say to the young Christian is this:—save as you can convince others of the truth you have no occasion to dogmatize. The geometrician can be dogmatic. He begins with axioms that are plain to the youngest of his pupils, and he goes from theorem to theorem, stage by stage, in a sequence that is absolutely logical. A Galileo can say of the world, even though it be beneath his breath, "Still it does move." You and I, on the other hand, must discriminate between our convictions, that is between our absolute knowledge of certain essentials, and our assurance which depends not upon our first-hand knowledge, but upon that knowledge which comes to us from those authorities which are not to be questioned or doubted.

Christian belief, seeded in faith and growing in the atmosphere of tolerance should speedily flower in action. Jesus said, "If ye know these things, happy are ye, if ye do them." We think of Paul and James as two gladiators standing back to back in the arena of life, facing mutual enemies, the one doubt, the other indolence: the one fighting for faith and the other striving for works, but James certainly enunciated the truth when he wrote, "Even so, faith if it have not works is dead." Peter would prove not only his faith but the faith of his fellows and their utter belief in the Master, when he says, "We have left all and followed Thee." And again, after the Saviour's death, before the Sanhedrin, he sums it all up by saying, "We cannot but speak the things we have seen and heard."

So it has ever been. The martyrs for the faith were witnesses not only in death, but in life as to the power of the crucified Saviour. The missionaries of the cross have ever represented as well as presented not only the gospel of the lips, but the gospel of the daily task. Their faith has blossomed not only into beautiful sentences but into beautiful deeds. Of every true Christian the same thing can be said. Consider John S. Huyler, as an illustration of this fact; throughout the latter years of his life, whenever there was a winter's night unusually sharp and severe, he would call up the Water Street Mission and as soon as he knew that he was speaking with John Callahan, he would say, "Put the boys to bed for me to-night, John." It was one John speaking to another. It was John the beloved with the tender heart speaking to John the Baptist, living in the wilderness of the wreckage of the world, warning men of the judgment that was to come. And while he was feeding thousands of men and sheltering them in this way, all of them strangers to him, he was never forgetful of the needs of those whom he employed.

What of us? We believe in the fatherhood of God. We believe in the divine leadership of Jesus. We believe in the transforming influence of the Holy Spirit. We believe in the power and the joy of religion. This then should pledge our obedience, our following in the footsteps of the Master, our communion with the Heavenly Father. Ah, that we might be true, that our creed should be fully expressed in words and in deeds. By words, I do not mean the repetition of the articles of our faith but, as suggested in Dr. Watson's little sketch, "His Mither's Sermon," by speaking "a gude word for Jesus Christ." Nor can we follow Christ, nor can we even be His spokesman in any true sense, save as we are acting the part of a brother to those who need us most, save as we are winning souls from some lower level to a higher plane of life.

When this is true, then we may be sure that our creed is beginning to bear fruit. The fruitage is character. "As a man thinketh in his heart (or within himself), so is he." Within the tiny seed is the tiny tree, but tiny as is that tree, it includes the trunk and the roots and the foliage with all the length and outreach and crowning glory of the years that are to come. So thought involves temperament, and from creed comes character. We stand in awe of the transfiguration of the Christ, when rather we should remember that this transformation came "as He was praying." We ought also to recall that on another occasion as He was praying, His disciples came to Him and were so impressed by His bearing and by the halo, not about His face but rather about His personality, that they pleaded with Him that He should teach them also how to pray. Something of the creed of Jesus is surely expressed in the Lord's Prayer, but if you would know all His creed you will understand that it could not be couched in human language. It is as infinite as was His life, that life of trust and Sonship and brotherhood, that life which overflowed into the lives of His disciples until, as the leaven works in the lump, others took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus.

Some years ago, Maud Ballington Booth wrote a series of articles entitled, "In Prison Shadows." One could see the long line of men as, leaving their stripes behind them at the prison doors, they passed into and through Hope Hall and thence out into the world, with lives renewed and transfigured through the influence of her speech, her presence and her sympathy. Some failures there were of course, here and there a reverting to type, a falling back into the old ways, a new entanglement in sin. But how wonderful the successes, transformations of character, reinstatements in life, new ideals of service, ideals that were realized in hard labor and made glorious by genuine consecration. No one could read these articles without realizing the power of a creed, simple as it might be, a creed that perhaps was summed up in the simple word, "Saviour," or in two words, "my Saviour." In those articles there is to be seen the secret of soul-winning. Mrs. Booth began with herself; she had an ideal, she was an ideal, and moreover she was an idealist. And if we have any word for the young Christian or indeed for any Christian who would make his life more efficient for the cause of Christ, as he enters into a new church relationship or would make the old relationship more efficient, it should be this: first have an ideal—the Christ; second, be an ideal—be a Christian; third, be an idealist—Christianize others.

Christ is in every soul waiting to be revealed, waiting perhaps your touch or your word, and that touch, that word is awaiting the time when your creed, like a refilled lamp, once more shall be set aflame by the fire of divine love and faith.

The Master was right. All things are possible to him that believeth. If this or that which you desire to do is impossible, as yet, it is because your faith is weak, because your belief is too limited, because you have not sufficiently studied and prayed. You need to enlarge the horizon of your vision, to increase the radius of your spiritual knowledge, and day by day, with new knowledge will come a stronger, steadier faith and a far greater power to accomplish. Especially is this true in the realm of character building, for "with the heart man believeth unto righteousness and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation."

Listen to the whisperings of God in His world and out of His word. Study until you understand or at least think that you understand. Pragmatize and become a modern philosopher. Make your creed credible, not merely to yourself but to others. Preach as Jesus did, but with your preaching, withal, practise as did Jesus. Follow no man but the Christ, determined to know nothing among men save Jesus Christ and Him crucified. So shall your faith stand, not in the wisdom of men but in the power of God, and you shall finally be able to maintain, "I know Him whom I have believed." Let His creed be your creed, let His belief be at least your faith. So can you say, "Credo—I believe," and in that creed you will find for self and others comfort and joy and ever increasing influence.

If you would know the relationship of creed to deed, read "The Three Things," by Mary Raymond Shipman Andrews. Philip Morton Landicutt is a lad of twenty-three going into the European war at its very beginning because his conscience compels him thereto. Hard as it is for his mother, she lets him go, because she sees to use his own expression that he "must live his own life" and perchance work out his own salvation. He enters that war differing from his dear and good little mother in three things. To put it in his own language, "It's odd with you and me such friends and so agreed about 'slithers of things, that we're all apart on two or three big ones. You believe in the masses—I don't take stock in the great unwashed. Then you're rather deeply religious, while I'm a plain unbeliever: you're generous enough to look for good in all humanity, even in a German, and I'm sure they're a nation of swine. We are different, Meggy, and I have to live my own life—my own life!"

In that war he comes in touch with life at its best and its worst, he faces peril in the trenches and in the charge he is wounded, not once but twice; he is saved by one of the common class, Lefty, an ex-chauffeur from London with a cockney accent, one who proves to be his own blood-cousin though with a very different station in life,—one who is willing to serve him and who finally gives his life for him. He listens to an eccentric soldier, Albert Mullins, as, day after day, he reads aloud from the book of Psalms until the words are written deep into his mind, though he thinks they have no part in his heart, and on the battle-field some of those words come back to him until, hardly realizing what he does they leap from his lips, "Out of the depths have I called unto Thee, O Lord. O, Lord, hear my voice!" And the words are echoed by other voices on that battle-field until one who has been a singer in some great cathedral chants it in the Latin, "De profundis clamavi, ad te, Domine," and souls are cheered and saved thereby. Finally in the hospital he lies between two Germans, a boy and a man, and out of bitter hatred he comes to love them because of the heroism of the man and the interest shown in Mother's letter. So one by one, the articles of his creed are changed. The old class distinction is buried in the unknown grave of Lefty, the chauffeur cousin with the cockney accent. Irreligion has changed to religious fervor upon the battle-field, and in the hospital he has learned that one can, as well as that one should, love one's enemy. And best of all he lives to tell his mother all about it, to tell her of the changes and how he believes with her in the three great things—that he believes in democracy, that he has faith in the ever-living God and that there is good in all men. It has cost much but it has proven worth while.

Strength in Weakness

BY EMMA YOUNGLOVE.

In the Second Mycenian War the Spartans were told by an oracle to take a leader from among the Athenians and so conquer their enemies. Jealous of the success of the Spartans, yet not daring to oppose the oracle, the Athenians sent as the leader Tyrtæus, a lame schoolmaster—an occupation then held in contempt. But Tyrtæus was a poet. By his songs this cripple quieted the internal dissensions of the Spartans and roused their martial spirit, until, under his leadership, they became invincible in battle.

In Tyrtæus these pagan Greeks recognized a spirit which rose above the limitations of a feeble body. Even savage tribes have a courageous loyalty to the chief, which sustains a warrior wounded unto death.

In the world which has been influenced by the life and teachings of Jesus Christ, such exaltation of spirit, when clothed in a weak frame, is more frequent, more varied in manifestation and more divine in character.

When Paul was preaching in Lystra, he observed in his audience a cripple. In spite of this man's weakness, he plainly showed to the keen eye of the apostle a strength of soul, which included "faith to be healed."

A mother whom I knew lingered for months through the agonies of cancer and laid down her life, without revealing to her daughter the nature of her disease or the extent of her sufferings. Her mother love shielded this girl in her teens from sharing these sufferings through sympathy.

Mr. Moody once visited a sick man in Dundee. Though the latter was very ill, he was able to give Mr. Moody as much comfort as he received from his guest. While leaving the house Mr. Moody remarked, "I guess when the angels pass over Dundee, they will stop at that house for refreshment."

Sometimes, indeed, God finds human weakness an indispensable condition to the working out of the divine purpose in a man or a woman. When Paul besought the Lord three times that his infirmity might depart from him, the answer was rendered, "My strength is made perfect in weakness." And Paul's conclusion was, "Most gladly therefore will I glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me."

Health, strength and vigor are not to be despised, but when weakness, illness and old age come, may we have grace to accept them in the spirit of Paul, and through our infirmities reveal the power of Christ.

✻ ✻ ✻

The Simple Things of Life

BY MISS Z. I. DAVIS.

Jesus said, "I came that ye might have life, and have it more abundantly." How can we have more abundant life, that shall mean something to us far more than a mere existence?

The true, the good and the beautiful constitute the real riches of life. Primitive man has little capacity for these things. The natural heart, the Gentile spirit, apart from the Divine nature, chiefly seeks to have its physical wants met, and is not greatly concerned beyond having enough to eat, to wear and to keep warm.

Jesus saw the need of our having a capacity for mental and spiritual things. He not only can give us this capacity, but He can satisfy us when we have put on the new nature that He wants us to receive.

The true, the good and the beautiful are among the necessities and not the luxuries. The place in which we live should receive that touch which will make our environment a reflection of our souls.

Let our hearts and minds go out to be enriched by the beautiful, the good and the true. Let us take time for religion, and give the King of Kings His rightful place in our lives.

PRINTED PREACHERS

An Indefatigable Worker

The missionary colporters of the American Tract Society are devoted Christian men and women, whose lives are consecrated to the spread of the Kingdom of Christ by means of the dissemination of the printed page bearing the Gospel message.

As a typical illustration of effective missionary colportage we are pleased to call attention to the splendid work that is being done by Rev. Samuel Mueller, whose picture appears on this page, showing him with the equipment that he usually carries from place to place.

Rev. A. W. Reinhard, Superintendent of Colportage for the Western and Northwestern States, under whose immediate superintendence Mr. Mueller carries on his work, writes thus concerning this devoted servant of Christ:

"Rev. Samuel Mueller is the American Tract Society's colporter for Northern Oregon and Southern Washington. He is the son of a missionary, and was born in the town of Bethlehem in the land of Palestine.

"He speaks three languages, and a harder working and more earnest seeker after souls can scarcely be found.

"The States of Washington and Oregon have each about 5,000 sawmills. Mr. Mueller ferrets out every one of these on his territory, as also the remote homes in the wilds of Oregon and in the foothills of the Cascade Mountains.

"He has a very large constituency of families and individuals, to whom he is the only messenger that comes in the name of the Lord. He is one of those faithful servants that go out into the hedges and highways and invite, indeed, compel the people to come in.

"This brother is an earnest personal worker. He seeks after souls, whether he is on the highway or on the cars or in the lumber camps—everywhere he speaks to men concerning their salvation. He distributes very many Bibles and reads the Word of God to the people wherever opportunity is offered.

"In his last report Mr. Mueller says that he distributed the Soldier's Text Book in four camps of soldiers."

It is a great source of satisfaction to the officers of the American Tract Society to hear of the fidelity and devotion of this missionary colporter, and to know that this is simply typical of the scores of consecrated toilers who are serving as missionary colporters of the Society.

• • •

Among the Slovaks

For many years Mr. John Martinco has been scattering Christian literature among his Slovak fellow countrymen in the region around Allegheny, Pa. He tells of a unique experience in the following words:

"On one occasion I was traveling from house to house soon after pay day—a day which means much to the laboring man and more for the saloonkeepers, as they usually reap a good harvest at this time. I entered a house in Braddock, Pa., where I found a group of men. As soon as I entered one man arose and began to use very profane language and tried to chase me away from the house. But the rest of the men, although not friendly to me, told this man to be quiet. Then they offered me a glass of whiskey, which of course, I refused to take. Then they offered a glass of beer which I also refused. At this they seemed greatly surprised. Then

I asked them to allow me to explain to them about the influence of liquor. They all agreed to hear me, and I told them of some of the experiences which I had myself before I quit drinking. I told them of the misery and the many crimes which liquor causes every day. I also told them of what the Bible says about drunkenness, and I reminded them of a certain hymn in the Lutheran Hymnal, with which I thought they might be familiar. At this they were all surprised and some of them were almost moved to tears. I then had a very interesting talk with them, which caught the attention even of the man who had tried to chase me away. The result was that every one of these men took a book, or several small tracts. Instead of whiskey they then offered me a very good supper, which I certainly did not refuse, because I was hungry. They all apologized to me for their rudeness, and so I went on my way rejoicing."

REV. SAMUEL MUELLER, MISSIONARY COLPORTER

In the Northwest

Mr. W. T. Chapman, who has been recently commissioned as a colporter of the American Tract Society, thus describes the character of the field in which he has been working:

"The railways radiating from Chehalis, Wash., as a centre, give easy access to many mills and timber camps, where the missionary colporter finds a ready welcome, and usually some good ground for the Gospel seed.

"At Littell, only a few miles west from here, an unused church is being prepared, and I am to open it up with public service next Sunday. Last Sunday I met a few there in a private house.

"There is much good territory yet in Oregon that I hope to cover before returning to New England."

Reaching the Immigrants

Despite the almost revolutionary changes that have taken place in the matter of immigration since the entry of the United States into the world war, there is still work to be done in reaching the immigrants with the Gospel.

As illustrating the varied nationalities represented by the immigrants arriving at New York, it may be of interest to note that Christian literature was distributed by Mr. Charles Carol, missionary colporter of the American Tract Society to the immigrants, in the following languages during a recent period of three months: Armenian, Bohemian, Bulgarian, Chinese, Croatian, Danish, Dutch, English, Finnish, French, Greek, Hungarian, Italian, Lithuanian, Norwegian, Polish, Portuguese, Rumanian, Russian, Ruthenian, Servian, Slovak, Slovenian, Spanish and Swedish. • • •

In Japan

A testimony to the value of the printed page in the evangelization of Japan is given by Rev. S. H. Wainwright, D.D., General Secretary of the Christian Literature Society of Japan. After gratefully acknowledging a cash appropriation of $100.00 from the American Tract Society, he writes:

"We issued a great number of tracts last year. We are finding that Japan is ripe for evangelistic activities. The tract is very useful as a means for testing a neighborhood as to its attitude towards the Gospel, as well as a means of introducing Christian truths among those who do not attend the public services.

"Two or three days ago a missionary in the interior of Japan told me that a man called upon him having in his possession a well-worn tract, which he had received two years before. He had traveled to the place of residence of the missionary, in order to get answers to questions awakened in his mind by the tract."

• • •

Opportunities in China

What the printed page bearing the Gospel message means for China, is set forth in stirring words by Rev. A. A. Fulton, of the American Presbyterian Mission in Canton, China, who writes:

"We now have magnificent opportunities in China for work in villages and cities, and there is a wide demand for tracts bearing on the needs of this stumbling, discordant, helpless combination of millions, called a Republic. What the issue of the present disturbances may be, no one knows, but one thing is everlastingly sure, that without the Gospel there will be no morning for this land, and in that case the peace of the world will not be settled by the war in Europe.

"I am a great believer in the power of tracts, and at this stage of the work we need millions of tracts to enable us to open the eyes of the Chinese people. If the American Tract Society can do anything for us, we shall be glad."

Last year the American Tract Society sent substantial cash appropriations, both to the Presbyterian Mission at Canton with which Dr. Fulton is connected and also to the South China Religious Tract Society, of which he is president. We hope that the generous gifts of donors will make it possible for the American Tract Society to send still larger appropriations in the year to come.

"THE WAY YE KNOW"

By Allan Phillip

GEORGE SONNERS was one of those men of whom there are many up and down the land of England who are born in the midst of an intensely religious atmosphere and trained from early days in the strict ways of religious life and duty. To him Sunday was a day of limitations and invested with a routine that seemed an irksome bondage. Regularity in church attendance was a feature of his upbringing. Prizes lined his shelves and bore witness to his faultless conduct in the Sunday School and his unfailing regularity at class; while certificates upon the walls testified to diligence in study and success in religious examination. Clever, studious, guided by a strong sense of duty, he nevertheless experienced no joy, no real personal pleasure in the religion he professed: It had never taken hold of him; rather he had taken hold of it because he felt he ought, and the sense of obligation turned religion into a bondage in which the note of gladness had no share.

Then came the dawn of manhood, the choice of a vocation, the setting forth from home to face life and its claims and to strive along the upward pathways of success; and with the first overwhelming consciousness of liberty he cast off utterly and entirely the habits of his early life. Without compunction or qualms of conscience Sunday became to him the one great day of pleasure and revelry. The pealing church bells had no call for him, the Bible never appeared among his books, prayer became an unknown experience, and his glance was never turned upward toward the great unseen. The goal of his ambition now lay along the pathways of the world and he had no higher longing than to attain the success that would fill his hand with gold and set him high among the mighty ones of the earth. With this he was content and with utter indifference he watched the great doors that led to loftier experiences close before him and heard the bolts slipped in the gateways of the past.

Three years followed. He thought them quite the happiest years of his life, and in those three years he climbed high and climbed swiftly. His was the merriest laughter in the company of his associates, his the most daring ventures in the realm of irreligion and extravagant indulgence.

Then came the great war and the deep persistent call of a new duty. He watched many answering that call and surrendering post and place and power to take some share in the perilous stand for righteousness; but to him it seemed the call came not. Why should he surrender what he had so dearly won for a quarrel in which he had no share? Why risk life and prosperity by entering into the disputes of other men?

But in an unexpected way the pressure came upon him and the business upon which his prosperity depended became undermined by the strange and wide reaching influences of the war, and he saw all that he had wrought for and won so hardly now slipping from him. The door of trade along his way was suddenly closed and in a moment of bitter disappointment and annoyance he gave himself to fight for the cause of his country. It was not that he cared for the right of the enterprise, but he hoped that he might somehow retaliate in his small way against the enemy who had thrust himself like a grim shadow across the pathway of all his hopes.

So it came to pass that George Somners found himself in the trenches at last and saw on every hand the tragic realities of war. Death which had been a stranger to him now haunted him with its persistent terrors, and poignant suffering of which he had hitherto known so little became his constant companion.

At first he had been the 'life' of his unit. His contagious laughter had driven seriousness from the camp. His songs and jokes had occasioned untold mirth among his fellows. But in the face of such great and clamant facts frivolity could not long hold its own, and by unconscious degrees Somners grew serious, thoughtful and finally almost morose. The loss of his buoyant merriment was to him the loss of everything. He felt himself without foundation amid the shifting and uncertain sands, without anchor on the ever moving currents of the great sea, without hope or assurance of anything beyond the scene that spread visibly before his eyes, and that vision was one of tragic change, sudden destruction and the ever haunting spectre of death.

One night, before setting forth to relieve a company in the front trenches a number of men gathered in a ruined cottage for prayer. Somners crept with them into the shadowy gloom of the building, scarcely knowing why, but conscious of a sense of satisfaction in so doing.

The chaplain was there and he prayed with the men; then someone struck a match and lighted a candle and by its flickering light read a verse from the fourteenth chapter of St. John's Gospel. He passed both candle and book to the man next to him, who also read and again passed it on.

They were strangely uncertain voices that read these familiar words "Let not your heart be troubled. Ye believe in God, also in me." Then again, "I go to prepare a place for you, and if I go and prepare a place for you I will come again and receive you unto myself that where I am there ye may be also."

Then a soldier put the sacred book into Somners' hand, whispering 'verse 4.' And Somners read in a voice so unlike his own that it startled him, "Whither I go ye know, and the way ye know."

He handed candle and book to the man at his side, but he did not hear what others read, for one thought had fixed itself upon his mind. He saw the way opening up into the great beyond, the pathway through the smoke of battle and the gloom of the night into the gleam of light that lay somewhere yonder, and the vision would not pass away.

"God be with you!" said the chaplain as he grasped Somners by the hand before he passed out into the darkness, and the words sent a thrill of fear and yet of hope through him.

It was a night of much activity along the front trench and many men fell to rise no more on the bullet-swept zone between the opposing ranks, and as Somners watched one after another go down, the words rang in his ears, "Whither I go ye know," and they seemed to apply to these men who were entering the gates of death. For they were starting on the long journey, taking that final way into the larger things of life.

It was as he watched and thought that great memories came surging up from the forgotten past and the lessons learnt in his youth from the open Bible came back with a new meaning and a mighty power. The truth took hold of him now and would not let him go. For the first time he felt the mastering power of the call of Christ, and longed to enter into assurance and peace and to know that the pathway was opened for him if he should fall.

It was while these thoughts were lingering in his mind that a stray bullet struck him and he was carried back to the rear, badly wounded.

In his delirium he was ever repeating the words, "Whither I go ye know," and when at last consciousness returned and the chaplain was able to talk with him, it was those words that formed the subject of conversation.

"Yes," he answered when asked if he knew the meaning of the words. "Yes, but I never thought of them in connection with myself, and I don't like the thought of the journey beyond. It's dark, strangely dark."

"Jesus died to take away sin," said the chaplain. "Faith in him means forgiveness, and it is only sin that darkens that way, and brings fear in the thought of the journey. The Lord has said 'I will come again and take you.' He forgives and leads us into the glory of the larger life. There is no darkness on the path by which He goes. He that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness but shall have the light of life.' If you cast yourself upon the love of God in Jesus Christ, and accept His offered mercy, there's nothing to fear."

"Ah, I have known all these things for years," answered the man. "I have known them, but I haven't cared about them. I've let them slip, and now I feel the need of something I haven't got, and I believe it's just that—giving myself up to Him and trusting Him."

"It is, my friend. It's that and nothing else. Only trusting, and there's nothing to fear."

Somners was silent for awhile, then he answered with a strong, clear accent:

"I've done it, sir. I've given myself to Him. Will you pray for me?"

The chaplain knelt at the bedside and prayed earnestly, and when he rose, Somners grasped him by the hand and said, "Thank you, sir. It's all light now, light and peace."

Somners pulled through and went back after a rest to take his place again in the firing line, but it was as a servant of the Great King, and whenever the opportunity came he tried to help his companions into the peace and joy that he had found. Thus many who received the final summons found the way open and a great light shining on the path because George Somners had led them to trust in the Lord Jesus Christ as Saviour, Companion and Friend.

God Answers Prayer

BY Z. I. DAVIS

*Our Father in Heaven is gracious,
His eye follows us in His love,
How rich are the infinite mercies,
He showers on us from above.*

*He cares for the poor and the needy,
He sends us the sunshine and rain,
And those who in faith call upon Him,
Ne'er sought for His comfort in vain.*

*We utter to God our petitions,
And lift unto Heaven our cry,
Assured if we will obey Him,
That He unto us will draw nigh.*

*Oh, pray in the name of our Saviour,
At morning and evening each day,
And while thy heart's cry is ascending,
The answer will speed on its way.*

HIS VINEYARD AND OURS

In Hainan, China

The island of Hainan is located south of the mainland of China, and is 155 miles long and 115 miles wide. Its area is estimated at 13,600 square miles. In the interior of this island there are several densely wooded mountain chains. The coasts are level and well watered, and the chief rivers are navigable for flat boats, a picture of one of which is seen in the illustration on this page. It is interesting to note in passing that it is upon this style of boat that a great deal of Christian literature is transported from place to place in China.

Hainan is a fruitful island, and among the flora are the areca-palm, cocconut tree, banana tree and various other tropical plants. Among the animals found in Hainan are the tiger, rhinoceros and several species of monkey. The chief agricultural products are sugar-cane, cotton, tobacco and cocoanuts.

The population of the island is estimated at over 2,000,000, and consists partly of Chinese who immigrated to the island during the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, and the aborigines. The latter somewhat resemble the Malays, and are of small stature, and far from prepossessing in appearance.

A strong mission is maintained in Hainan by the Presbyterian Board, which entered that field in 1881. The Mission carries on work at three stations—Kiongchow, Kachek and Nodoo. Among the various activities that are carried on are the Paxton Training School at Kiongchow, a Hospital and Dispensary at Hoihow, medical work for the lepers at Hoihow, the Pitkin Memorial Girls' School and a Mission Press.

The Mission Press is under the superintendence of Dr. N. Bercovitz. The American Tract Society has sent several cash appropriations for this Press and recently remitted the sum of $100.00 for the support of its work.

A recent issue of the Hainan News Letter published by the American Presbyterian Mission tells of the political unrest throughout China. In Hainan the soldiers under Gen. Lung Tsi Koang have been mobilized and are drilling strenuously. "There are rumors," says the Editor of the News Letter, "that Gen. Lung, being of the old school will do his best to support a monarchy, while Canton Province of which Hainan is a part, will support the republic. At this date it seems to be a fight between the new and old school politicians. During this period of political transition, however, these words may not at all apply to the situation a month hence. In the midst of all this change and unrest our work has gone forward progressively and without interruption, for we are working under the government of Him, who is the same yesterday, today and forever."

Tamil Publication Work

The Christian Literature Society for India maintains a Special Committee for the Tamil Language area. The Secretary of this Committee is Rev. A. C. Clayton of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, and for several years the American Tract Society has contributed toward his support, so that he might devote his entire time to the preparation of Christian literature in the Tamil language.

Although the manuscript of the Tamil Bible Dictionary was completed in November, 1915, and Part IV was in the press by the end of that year the reading of the proofs of Parts IV and V and the making of the Index took much of Mr. Clayton's working time in 1916 and the publication of the last part only occurred towards the end of 1916. The five parts altogether contain over 900 large pages, with two columns to a page, and they have had a welcome which shows that the Tamil preachers, teachers and Bible women for whom they are more especially intended are finding them helpful.

A RIVER-BOAT NEAR HAINAN, CHINA

In 1916 Mr. Clayton's other work was much as in previous years. A number of small Tamil tracts were written by him, and he revised several others for printing. He also prepared a short Life of Miss Cavell for the press and read the proofs.

He read a large number of Tamil manuscripts sent on to him by the Christian Literature Society for opinion as to their suitability for publication.

Mr. Clayton also entirely revised and corrected a new edition of the Life of Dr. Carey in the Anna Library.

He also completed the revision of the Bazaar Book as far as it can be revised. Several of the sections which form it have been omitted because the method of argument and in some cases the arguments used are not suited to the conditions of today.

Some years ago the Rev. T. Walker, M.A., of Tinnevely, one of the ablest Tamil scholars that South India has ever seen, undertook the preparation of a translation of the Apocrypha in Tamil. He died when he had finished two-thirds of the work. The completion of this translation was undertaken by Mr. Clayton and is being carried out at intervals as his other work allows.

Mr. Clayton's second term of service as the Tamil literature missionary ended in July, 1917. It was necessary therefore for the Missions that unite to support the appointment to say whether they wished to continue. When the question was discussed they decided that the Wesleyan Missionary Society should be asked to allow Mr. Clayton to go on with this work till 1922. The Wesleyan Missionary Society agreed to do this, so that Mr. Clayton has entered on his third five-year term of work during this present year.

For years it has been felt that a series of Graded Bible Lessons from the infant class to the upper forms was urgently needed for use in mission schools. Mr. Clayton has undertaken the preparation of this series, and has drawn up the detailed syllabus giving a complete list of the lessons, with the passages of scripture on which they are based and memory texts, from the First School Year to the High School. This list is now being circulated. It is no easy thing to draw up a course of Bible instruction covering seven years and involving the selection of 310 distinct topics (apart from review lessons) in the first eight school years. This detailed syllabus is published in a tentative edition. It is intended for criticism.

At the same time it may be announced that after much correspondence and consideration it has been decided that the Graded Bible Lessons shall be illustrated by an excellent series of colored illustrations. These will be issued as little books to be put into the hands of the pupils.

Sunday School Progress In Brazil

The activity of the Brazil Sunday School Union, of which Rev. H. C. Tucker is the Secretary, was shown by a number of publications and certificates which were recently received at the office of the World's Sunday School Association. Many schools in the United States are not as up-to-date in their methods. The Cradle Roll Department (Departamento do Berco) is thoroughly provided for. All the printing is, of course, in Portuguese. An index card was provided which had no less than twenty-one questions to be answered. Then there is a letter of greeting and explanation which is sent by the superintendent to the mother. This has an illustration of a mother who has just taken her baby from the cradle. The style of the cradles pictured is quite like those used here many years ago—a box on rockers. The individual cradle roll certificate was neatly prepared and had places for the signatures of the department and school superintendents and also the pastor of the church. Two scripture references were printed: Mark 10:14 and Psalm 127:3. The Rol do Berco for the school was 14 by 22 inches. The Brazilian cradle was again shown on this roll and the baby was enjoying a fair sized bottle. On the cradle were pictures of four beautiful Portuguese babies. A miniature membership card of the cradle with baby in it is sent to the parents and a duplicate strung on ribbons and hung with the "Rol do Berco."

Other items of printed matter used in developing Sunday school activity in Brazil were of decided interest. The large school diploma has places for eight seals to indicate points of excellence that have been attained. There is a copy of Oliver's teacher-training course, "Preparation of the Teacher," of which over 1,200 copies in Portuguese have been sold, and a certificate for those who have successfully passed the examination. There are sizable booklets on various phases of Sunday school work by McKinney, Faris and Horns. There are instructions and constitutions for an organized class, and numerous leaflets which tell about the various standards of the model school.

Practical methods work successfully in Brazil as well as in the United States as can be seen from the letter which came from an interior town in the state of Sao Paulo:

"This church never had a properly organized Sunday school until 1915. In the year 1911 I moved to this region but, living outside of the city, could not do much for the school. By and by the Lord sent the right man for the right place; it is remarkable to note the interest he takes as a superintendent. There was a small class of children when he began, which increased year after year until the young preacher, Sr. Epaminondas Mello do Amaral, came in 1915 and organized the Sunday school after the standard of the Brazil Union. He encountered great difficulties; the older elements of the church had never seen such a complicated organization as was proposed and such an expenditure of money as would be necessary for literature and outfit. However, the struggle ended in victory. Very soon members of the new Home Department transferred to other classes to be present every Sunday. Another notable change was that members of the church who had been backward and indifferent began to talk, pray in public and work for the cause. All in the school became interested in the public worship and the sermons. It is interesting to note the preponderance of children in the school who attend with regularity. There is one pupil 13 years old who walks 8 kilometers even on rainy Sundays to attend the school; another 9 years of age, son of a widow in the Home Department, walks 5 kilometers every Sunday. There are others whose parents are not believers who attend regularly without any encouragement from home. There is one negro boy 16 years old who has not missed a single Sunday in four years; he works in a factory and attends a night school assiduously."

Reciprocity of Foreign Missions

In the matter of foreign missions, not all the obligation is on one side. The West helps the East, but the East also helps the West. Fresh emphasis on this fact appears in a statement recently issued by Rev. C. A. Nelson, of the American Board's South China Mission at Canton. He remarks upon the aid which has been received from Chinese in America; not only directly for the Board's undertakings, but also for work that by this means has become self-supporting and self-governing. Two organizations, the China Congregational Church of Hongkong and the China Congregational Missionary Society of Canton, are outgrowths of the work of the mission and contributory to its influence and reach. Both are under the direction of Chinese converted in California, Rev. Yung Pak and Rev. Joe Jet. The former received native contributions in 1916 of $5,500 (gold), maintains three outstations besides the central church, has several unordained preachers and teachers, 425 members, two Sunday schools, and four primary schools. The missionary society sustains six unordained preachers besides teachers and Bible-women, five outstations, five primary schools, and has an income amounting to $850 (gold). With these two leaders are associated other Chinese converted abroad who are interested and helpful laymen.

On the other hand, the South China Mission has quite directly served America. It has furnished several workers for home mission fields in the United States, including Hawaii, and in Canada. The Chinese who go abroad go mostly from Kwangtung province; they belong to the working class, and as a rule are not well educated. Chinese congregations in America need educated men to teach and lead them. It is, therefore, a necessary part of South China Mission's work not only to raise up a native ministry for the locality, but also for service among the Chinese abroad. For this the equipment is now greatly improved. Three years ago eight leading missions in Canton united in organizing the Canton Union Theological College. With more adequate staff, buildings, and courses of study, it is hoped to provide training for pastors, evangelists, and other Christian workers in greater numbers and with still better qualifications. South China and foreign missions there may be of yet larger help to America and home missions here.

Notes upon the Topics Used in Christian Endeavor and Other Young People's Societies.

THE PRAYER MEETING

By Rev. Henry Lewis Ph.D.

NOVEMBER 4.

Perseverance

Ephesians 6:10-20.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Oct. 29. Persevere in abiding. John 15: 1-11.
- T. Oct. 30. Climbing into life. Rom. 2:1-11.
- W. Oct. 31. Persevering in prayer. Luke 11:1-10.
- T. Nov. 1. Watchful faith. Rev. 3:1-6.
- F. Nov. 2. Pressing onward. Phil. 3:7-16.
- S. Nov. 3. Clinging to God. Heb. 10:32-39.

This topic is suggested as especially suitable for a consecration meeting. It emphasizes what some people may consider one of the old-fashioned virtues, but this virtue has not outlived its usefulness. Rather may we say that it is one of the most important qualifications today not only for success in material things but for progress in the spiritual life.

Christian Perseverance

In order that we may make our treatment of this topic both definite and helpful let us name five things in which every Christian should persevere.

First, let us persevere in prayer. It is prayer that links us with our unseen God and Father. Prayer is the channel of communication by which we are able to secure divine help for the battle of life. Through prayer we may draw on the reserves of divine power which will make us able to do all things through our Lord Jesus Christ.

Second, let us persevere in faith. Faith is more than mere belief. It stands for that vital union between the believer and Christ, which enables the Christian to say with absolute truthfulness, "Christ dwelleth in me."

Third, let us persevere in hope. Hope is the anchor of the soul. It is our mainstay in time of storm and disaster. Nil desperandum was a good motto for the old Romans. It is also a good watchword for the Christian today.

Fourth, let us persevere in love. We say this advisedly, even in this time of world war. While Christians must ever hate the vile and unspeakable things that have been done by our foes, yet let us remember that Christ bade us love our enemies. So let not hate take possession of our hearts, but let us persevere in love.

Fifth, let us persevere in Christian service. One weakness of the Christian Church today is that there are so many who weary so soon in their tasks of Christian service. They begin to teach a Sunday school class, but soon they grow tired and there is a vacancy in the ranks of the teachers which it is hard for the superintendent to fill.

Christian perseverance should be aggressive. Simply to drift with the tide—this is not true perseverance. The Christian should persevere in active hostility to every form of evil. We should fight the good fight of faith, and fight it constantly. It has often been remarked that in the Christian armor described in the sixth chapter of the Epistle to the Ephesians no mention is made of any protection for the back. The moment a Christian turns his back to the enemy he is in danger of being overcome.

We must not make any truce with the evil of intemperance. To declare an armistice with the social evil or with any of the moral foes of modern society is to begin losing the battle for righteousness which every Christian should wage.

While we continually oppose what is bad, let us as constantly advocate what is good. Constructive work for humanity is just as important as the destruction of those things that are a bane to mankind. The expulsive power of a new affection is a powerful lever with which to displace evil tendencies in man's inner nature.

The Fisherman's Prayer

That was a beautiful prayer of the old Greek fisherman, when caught in a fierce storm: "Whether I live or die, help me to keep my rudder true." Here was a fine example of the spirit of perseverance which it would be well for every Christian to cultivate.

NOVEMBER 11.

Seeking Worth-While Things

Prov. 8:10-21; Matt. 6:33.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Nov. 5. Seeking the Lord. Isa. 40: 25-31.
- T. Nov. 6. Seeking Wisdom. Prov. 2:1-12.
- W. Nov. 7. Supreme desire. Ps. 63: 1-11.
- T. Nov. 8. Seeking God's will. John 5:30.
- F. Nov. 9. Seeking immortality. Heb. 11: 13, 16.
- S. Nov. 10. The divine response. Heb. 11: 1-6.

The Scripture selected for this topic gives us two answers, one from the Old Testament and the other from the New Testament, and to the question, What are the most worth-while things?

The writer of the Proverbs sums up his answer in the one word, Wisdom; while our Divine Master gives us His response in the words, "His Kingdom."

Wisdom That Is Better Than Rubies
The wisdom that is better than rubies is not mere intellectual knowledge. It is something more than ordinary human understanding. It means more than acquaintance with learned books or ponderous treatises. The word as used by the writer of the Proverbs indicates a divine illumination of the human mind and soul so that the individual is able to grasp the relation of things in all their bearings, and to order one's life so as to be in harmony with the divine plan.

The Kingdom of God

By the Kingdom of God our divine Master meant the new order of things which He came to proclaim. This new order, however, is really a re-affirmation of the divine order revealed from the beginning through the voice of prophet and priest. The revelation of the Kingdom given by Christ is simply the culmination of the divine teaching. What is peculiarly distinctive of the Kingdom of God as revealed by Christ is the fact that in His own person Christ exemplified the highest principles of that Kingdom.

Christian Character

One of the worth-while things for which we should strive is the attainment of a perfect Christian character. The most enduring thing in this world is character, and the finest type of character for which we can strive is that which bears the impress of the Master Himself.

Eternal Life

Eternal life is one of the worth-while things that are set before us as the goal of the Christian race. This goal can be attained only through faith in Christ, who alone has brought life and immortality to light. The values of earthly things are rightly appraised only when viewed in the light of the eternal life which is set before us as the real end of our existence.

We should weigh things not in reference to our earthly span of life but with reference to their bearing upon our attainment of that life which is promised only to those whose hearts are fixed upon God.

The Common Welfare

One of the worth-while things for which we should seek is the common welfare. This is in pursuance of our Master's teaching, for He set before us the Golden Rule as one of the guiding principles of the Christian life.

In the critical days through which we are passing, we are constantly reminded, by governmental regulation, of the fact that we are all bound together and that what concerns one concerns all. Let us see to it that we are as solicitous for our neighbor's spiritual welfare as for his temporal prosperity.

Freedom

There are many other worth-while things that might be mentioned as worthy of our seeking. Justice, honor, righteousness—these and other moral equivalents are among the things for which every Christian should seek. But let us mention, in conclusion, the great element of freedom as one of the crowning objects in the attainment of which it is worth while for us to give even our earthly lives.

NOVEMBER 18.

Our Denominational Foreign Mission Boards: Their History and Achievements

Isaiah 55:1-13.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Nov. 12. A board of elders. Ex. 24:1-3.
- T. Nov. 13. A church board. I Tim. 3:1-13.
- W. Nov. 14. A board of leaders. I Chron. 13:1-14.
- T. Nov. 15. An apostle's report. Acts 11: 1-18.
- F. Nov. 16. A sample mission. Acts 14:1-18.
- S. Nov. 17. A missionary's support. Rom. 15:22-33.

The fifty-fifth chapter of Isaiah is one of the great missionary chapters of the Bible. It teaches us that the church and her members are the channels by which the water of life is to be carried to all those who are athirst. It suggests the thought that was so beautifully expressed by Augustine, when he said, "Our hearts are weary until they rest in Thee," for it shows us that human souls are dissatisfied until they find the true Bread of Life. It contains a beautiful picture of the power of God's Word and gives us the definite assurance that this divine Word shall not return void, but shall accomplish God's purpose.

The History of Missions

The first beginnings of the missionary enterprise are found in the sending out of the disciples by Christ. In the Book of the Acts of the Apostles we find the development and extension of the missionary idea.

While the denominational missionary boards of today are mostly of recent origin, they are simply the modern expression of the missionary spirit which has always been one of the manifestations of true Christianity.

We cannot undertake in these columns to set forth the history and achievements of the many different organizations which are doing the missionary work of the various denominations. It will be best to write to the headquarters of these different missionary societies, and each board or society will very willingly supply information concerning its origin, history, fields of labor and methods of work.

It may be said, however, in passing, that the denominational missionary boards, as a rule, are among the strongest institutions of our country. So well are they conducted that their financial credit is of the very highest order. So efficient are they in their work on the foreign field that our government has often turned to them for aid.

While the aim of these missionary organizations has been the evangelization of the world, they have contributed in no small degree to the social and industrial welfare of the heathen communities in which they have labored. Their work has been manifold, for they have carried on educational, medical, industrial, and evangelistic lines of service. They have done pioneer work in introducing the ways of civilization among barbaric and degraded peoples.

Comity and Cooperation

One of the most hopeful signs of the times is the spirit of comity and cooperation which now prevails between the missionary societies. This has found expression in the Foreign Missions Conference and the Home Missions Council. The Foreign Missions Conference is a representative body, in which practically all the evangelical boards and societies doing work in foreign lands have a part. By means of this Conference friction and overlapping have been eliminated, and a large degree of cooperation has been attained.

A large measure of unity has also been secured on the foreign field by the union of the native churches on a broad evangelical basis. The perpetuation of denominational differences on the foreign-mission field is no longer regarded as a desirable end in itself, and through federation and co-operation, the way is being prepared for a realization of the Master's prayer, "that they all may be one."

NOVEMBER 25.

For What Am I Grateful?

Psalms 34:1-22.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Nov. 19. Grateful for health. Luke 17: 11-19.
- T. Nov. 20. For spiritual sight. John 9: 13-25.
- W. Nov. 21. For earth's blessings. Lev. 23: 9-14.
- T. Nov. 22. For God's gift. Jas. 1: 1-8, 17.
- F. Nov. 23. For divine protection. Ps. 100: 1-5.
- S. Nov. 24. For true friends. 2 Tim. 1:16-18.

Some years ago the Congregationalist and Christian World offered a prize for the best answer to the question: "For What Should My Neighbor Be Grateful?" The answer which took the prize was entitled, "His Millions," and was sent by L. Etta Avery. It may suggest to us a number of reasons why we ourselves should be grateful. We take pleasure in quoting the entire answer as follows:

"His Millions"

"My neighbor should be thankful because he is a multimillionaire. He could not be induced to part with his reason for one million spot cash. He would not consider one million for his eyesight. It may not be exactly perfect, but such as it is, money could not buy it.

"Neither could money buy a limb, and he has four of them, to say nothing of the subdivisions, and these items bring the millions up with a bound. The power to use limbs and subdivisions, and the faculties he possesses, in the way of work and enjoyment, surely exceed the million point.

"In our mental stock-taking we have not yet mentioned the gifts of hearing, smelling, tasting and feeling. If you were willing to close the bargain with him on the spot for a million each, he would politely request you to pass on.

"My neighbor has enough to sustain life and some overplus—and he has friends. A million would be a cold kind of comfort if he had not a friend in the world.

"Then he has this beautiful world to look out upon and enjoy, with all its wealth of sun, moon and stars. With its mountains, gorges, glens and falls, oceans, rivers, fields, trees, flowers and birds.

"The treasure houses of the past and present swing wide their doors inviting him to enjoy their sculpture and painting, prose and poetry and all the art and inventions of the ages, while the lives of the great and good are a benediction of untold value. He has the privilege of doing good and being a blessing to others all along the journey through this beautiful world to the better country and he may be sure of God's love and guidance in both.

"A multimillionaire indeed!"

Our National Situation

This Thanksgiving finds our country engaged in the greatest war that this world has ever known. Already many of our soldiers and sailors are on the other side of the ocean, while hundreds of thousands of others are preparing to follow them. Can we have grateful hearts while our country faces what in all probability will be the severest trial it has ever known? To this question we may give an unqualified affirmative answer. Sorrow and suffering will undoubtedly come to many hearts and homes during the days and months to come, but let us say to all those who are thus called upon to lay their nearest and their dearest upon the altar of sacrifice, "You have given your best, and your sacrifice shall not be in vain, for as the result of this awful war the world will be made a better place in which to live through all the years to come."

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Nov. 26. Block sin. Rom. 6:12.
- T. Nov. 27. Control in food. Dan. 1:8-21.
- W. Nov. 28. In drink. Jer. 35:1-11.
- T. Nov. 29. In speech. 1 Pet. 3:8-13.
- F. Nov. 30. Meekness is control. 2 Sam. 16:5-14.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS

The Birds' Thanksgiving

BY ERROLL HAY COLCOCK.

ALL day long the birds had been in a state of wild despair! The first snow of the season had fallen the night before, covering everything with a mantle of white, and completely upsetting their plans for the big Thanksgiving feast to be given the following day.

The blue-jays had been quarreling all morning, shrieking discordantly every time a robin or sparrow flew anywhere near.

"If there is anything to be found, I'll find it," one of them eagerly cried. "The garden around here belongs to me."

"It is mine more than yours," replied Robin Redbreast with an indignant ruffle of his feathers. "I built a nest in the old oak tree long before you ever came this way."

The sparrow chirped angrily from the frosted bough of a neighboring hickory.

"I'm sure I have as great a right to the garden as either of you," he asserted. "I built my nest in the eave of the porch just after the big house was finished, and Mistress Dorothea liked it, and made them let it stay."

"I wish the house wasn't closed," sighed a hermit thrush which had joined the group of quarreling birds, "and that Mistress Dorothea were here. She always loved my singing, and would not let me starve."

"She liked me just as much as you!" exclaimed Robin Redbreast jealously. "You needn't think—"

"That either of you are her special pet," cut in the Sparrow sharply, "for she always took my side when others ran me down, and threw bread-crumbs my way first of all."

The Blue-Jay glanced at his own rich plumage and held his head high with conscious pride.

"So she might," he remarked, looking down from his lofty perch. "But she thinks me much the handsomer, and the finest in every way. Don't forget the saying that 'fine feathers make fine birds,'" he boasted vainly.

"Oh, yes," retorted the Sparrow with a sniffling twitter. "You may look up at me, but pray remember that 'Handsome is as handsome does,' and you are quite so popular as you may think."

"Who said I wasn't?" scoffed the other. "Not Miss Dorothea!"

"Well, all the same, it doesn't matter who said it," said the Red Bird, which shivered despairingly upon an icy bough. "The fact remains that she isn't here to feed us, and we have to provide for ourselves, and whatever shall we do with ice and snow everywhere, and not a berry or worm in sight!"

A fluttering of wings was suddenly heard, and a little gray Dove flew among the group, cooing softly a time or two.

"No use for you to come this way," rudely greeted the Blue-Jay. "There's no room for any one else in this garden, and not the first sign of a thing to eat."

The Dove quietly perched upon the banister of the porch and looked reproachfully from one to the other.

"I'm here to try and make peace," she began very softly. "Instead of quarreling so bitterly all the time, why don't you try to live more happily together? Suppose you agree to promise not to fight or quarrel during the coming year, and see if Mistress Dorothea won't be pleased when she comes back in the summer-time."

The birds began to exchange inquiring glances, but none of them made the move to agree to what the newcomer proposed.

"I hear you complaining of the heavy fall of snow," continued the Dove, "but although we may be hungry and cold to-day, there is no reason to imagine we shall starve, and for us to be cross and fault-finding. To-morrow is Thanksgiving Day, and if we stop to think a moment, we can find much to be thankful for, even though we may be cut out of our usual big Thanksgiving dinner this year. Think how grateful we should be that none of us have been shot down and killed by some bad, cruel boy, as were so many other birds last summer; let us be thankful we are alive to-day in God's beautiful world. Just try to remember there is nothing so bad that it couldn't be worse. Now, over my way," she added sadly, "poor Bill and Coo lost their pet dovelet a day or two ago, and there is a robin with a broken wing who finds it twice as hard to fly around in all this wintry weather. He is longing, like the rest of us, for the happy Green Meadow days in the spring-time which we shall love twice as well for having through the snow, drew up in front of the big, empty house, and a little girl with rosy cheeks and sparkling eyes alighted, followed by her parents and a number of guests. "Just listen how bravely my birds are singing, and upon this snowy day when you'd think the music would freeze in their little throats. Oh, such a Thanksgiving dinner as we'll give them, and aren't you glad we decided to come to the country for the weekend if for no other reason than to make them happy?"

And upon the following day such a feast among the birds was given as had never been known before! All of the feathered tribe from miles around were invited to join in the festivities of the Turtle Dove for teaching us a lesson we shouldn't forget, never to lose sight of our many blessings, nor cease to be grateful that things aren't often worse than they really are. Therefore, no matter how dark the clouds may sometimes be, let us look for the bright lining, let us resolve never to show the 'white feather' when frightened, and let us realize we should always be thankful."

And as the birds joyfully offered up their thanks, and gayly applauded Robin Redbreast's clever speech, the little gray Dove breathed a silent prayer that the promise for peace would be kept, and that soon the sunshine would banish the snow-clouds so that everything would be bright and smiling once again.

Firemen Save a Pigeon

A crowd may look complacently at birds or animals held prisoners in cages, far from the home where alone they can be happy, but not so when a pigeon, just a common, unbeautiful, all-the-year-round dweller of the city gets itself inextricably caught in some outside portion of a public building. It is then that the crowd looks pityingly at the little, distressed bird and would have it released from its captivity.

At the sight of a pigeon, fluttering for freedom but trapped in the coping of the big Filene building in the heart of Boston, men and women paused and waited while efforts were being made to set the captive free. Many telephone calls had informed the custodian of the building of the little bird's predicament and attempts were made to reach the bird, without avail.

It was Ladder 17 of the Fort Hill station of the Fire Department that came to the rescue. Not an unusual summons was it, for firemen, brave and humane, are prompt at the call for saving life. The big motor truck hurries to the scene and the tall hydraulic ladder is raised. Up goes a fireman to the top and in a few moments the work of rescue is done. Such an act of mercy is well entitled to receive the thanks of all the humane-hearted.

Animals That Work

Some of the wasps are paper makers; the spiders are spinners and the worms are weavers.

The ants are great workers and have a well organized system of labor.

Certain species of East Indian ants are gardeners; they raise mushrooms, upon which they feed their young.

The bees are expert builders; their cells are built with the smallest quantity of material, so as to have the largest size rooms and the least possible loss of wall spaces.

Good builders also are the ant-lions, whose funnel-shaped traps are exactly correct in form, as if they had been made by the most skilled human architects with the aid of the best instruments.

The beaver is an architect, engineer and wood cutter; he builds houses and dams watercourses with a skill and dispatch that would do credit to human hands and brains. We all know what it means to "work like a beaver."

One Log Makes a Cozy Cabin

There is a cabin in Golden Gate Park, San Francisco, which is constructed of a single log of redwood. It is about twelve feet long and rests upon a heavy platform of timbers which support the weight of the hollowed log. A doorway about five feet high and eighteen inches wide admits visitors to the interior, which forms a fair-sized room. The appearance of the cabin is striking because the front view presents a cross section of a large redwood tree with the bark intact.

IN AUTUMN DAYS.

battled with the ice and snow. Therefore, let us get together and sing a song of thanksgiving for our many blessings."

The birds had unconsciously flown nearer and nearer the little gray Dove, who seemed to bring a ray of sunshine to them through the gloom of the bleak, November day, and they agreed among themselves to do as she suggested.

Accordingly they assembled and burst into a joyous chorus of praise, each tiny throat thrilling its sweetest notes which rang out clear and true upon the frosted air.

"Oh, Daddy, listen!" exclaimed Mistress Dorothea, as a handsome limousine, which had silently ploughed its way day, and came in great flocks to partake of the feast, for Mistress Dorothea had set a table large enough for many guests in the snowy garden, decorated with berries bright and red, and covered with everything good to eat and drink.

Robin Redbreast perched at the head of the table, and during the dinner flapped his wings loudly together so that everyone would listen to what he had to say.

"Ladies and gentlemen," he began ceremoniously. "We owe the pleasure of this happy occasion to Mistress Dorothea, who kindly remembered we were hungry with nothing to eat; but we also owe our sincere thanks to little Miss

Our Fireside

"For All Thy Mercies"

By L. D. Stearns

DELE WINTON was singing,—that is, if so doleful a sound could be termed singing,—a little frown puckering her fair brow, a little shadow dulling the brown of her eyes—eyes which, seemingly, had forgotten how to smile in these last months and years. She did not realize she was singing—it was John's tune—and her fingers were busy with a rent in an old-rose silk waist, her mind far from the words of the hymn.

"Nearer, my God, to Thee,
Nearer to Thee,—"

As she turned the waist about, scanning it critically, the song ceased. "Life's a care, love's a woe; all things bright and cheerful go," she quoted half flip-pantly, half gloomily, "and this waist's the last bright and cheerful thing I have left. Like all the rest, it's about ready to—go." Rising, she tossed it bitterly upon the bed and went down stairs.

"I suppose," she confessed, looking about the big, airy kitchen, "I ought to cook something extra—a batch of cookies, and a mince pie, at least. To-morrow's Thanksgiving, and John always thinks so much of Thanksgiving."

Crossing to the window she stood gazing musingly outward. As far as eye could reach was leaden sky—gaunt, bare trees—brown, dry earth—and something hard and dry came into her throat. "I guess I miss people, and noise," she stated dispassionately. "I might have known I wasn't cut out for farm life and—scrimping. It's five years since I've seen—any one—worth—seeing."

With sudden flurry the wind dived into a furrow of dead leaves and sent them whirling in a brown mass about the yard. "Thanksgiving!" her tone was bitter; "I guess those who have things to be thankful for can have the fun of baking cookies and pies. But that's not—me."

As she glanced at the clock the frown in her eyes deepened. "I suppose I ought to mend that coat of John's," she confessed. "There's about time before I have to start dinner. He said he would be late from town, anyhow; but I hate mending."

Stepping to the little hall she brought in the coat, surveying it ruefully. Then she threaded a needle, drew the little rocker to the window and settled to the task. At half past eleven she got up and put a few potatoes on to boil. Her lip curled a little. "We'll have potatoes and sausage to-day," she murmured, "and sausage and potatoes to-morrow. What difference would it make if I did bake a mince pie! Besides—I've only one more can of mincemeat, and if anybody ever should come it would come in handy. Dear knows when I'll get another!" and quite to her dismay a sudden tear splashed to the shining stove.

Dele Winton was not given to showing emotion. A couple of red spots came hotly to her cheeks. "Don't be a baby," she said sharply to herself, and turned toward the pantry.

As she came out, table-cloth in hand, the door opened and her husband came into the room with a load of bundles in his arms. "It's cold," he informed her cheerily. "Thanksgiving weather, all right. I wished more than once you were with me—it's just the sort of air that makes your blood tingle through and through." Then he sniffed. "Doesn't smell very Thanksgivingy," he laughed. "Got your baking all off, and aired out, I suppose."

The red in Dele's cheeks grew a trifle more pronounced. "John," said she stiffly, "I wish you would stop acting like a child. What if it is Thanksgiving! You and I can't fool ourselves, if we do try to fool other people. You and I know we've small call to be thankful. There's the mortgage to pay, with the interest every six months; and there's your mother's doctor's bill to meet; and there's scrimping, and planning, and working, day in and day out. Thanksgiving, indeed! I've nothing to be thankful for! I guess—not!"

As John pulled out of his coat his movements seemed a little slower than usual. Crossing to the stove he held his hands over it for a moment in silence; then he went to the sink and began to wash up.

"What's in all those parcels?" inquired Dele sharply. "Do they belong in the pantry, or in the barn?"

Returning the towel to its hook he re-crossed to the table. "That's nails," said he, pushing a bundle one side, "and that's horse liniment for Dolly's leg. There's your crash, and that's sugar. Those are spices and salt. This's a new curry-com. That—a sort of brick red climbed slowly into his face, and as it climbed it struck a spark of fire in his eyes into a sudden red blaze—"is nothing." Picking up a small, square package he strode to the stove and lifting the cover pushed it in.

Dele carried her share of the parcels to the pantry, and on the way back, with sudden curiosity, she raised the stove cover and looked in. Then she wheeled. "John—Winton!" she cried.

Winton—his arms full of bundles—had started for the barn, but at her exclamation he turned. "I didn't think curiosity was one of your failings, Dele," he remarked nonchalantly. "Since it is, I may as well confess. I was extravagant enough to buy a box of chocolates when I found I'd got an extra dollar for the eggs. I thought, it being Thanksgiving—." He paused. "I'm sorry you lifted that cover," he said. "I'm sorry you're unhappy. I'll try and not aggravate it, and maybe by Christmas time you can get home for a spell. Yes—" his jaw suddenly set in a firm line—"we'll make it, Dele, one way or another. You plan on going home Christmas for a spell."

His steps echoed back as he stamped slowly along the boarded walk to the barn, and Dele did not notice that he was not whistling as usual.

She sat suddenly down and covered her face with two trembling hands. Home! could she? The home-sickness of months and years pressed suddenly about her heart. She had not realized before quite how desolate she had been. Then, rising and crowding back her emotions, she went on with her preparations for dinner. But as she worked her thoughts ran riot again. Home! how good it would seem! how wonderful! She could almost see the kindly, smiling face of her mother—the grave, studious one of her father. She could hear the twins' gay chatter. Then there was the great host of friends—the lectures—the concerts—the Church!

With a quick breath she stopped. From somewhere—almost as in a dream—she seemed to hear the words, "For all Thy mercies, Lord, we give Thee praise."

Next moment, almost a smile touched her eyes. She knew just how her father's voice would sound as he repeated the words to-morrow, and again at Christmas time; for it was a very special and much used form of prayer with her father. But only once had she heard the words with just that peculiar note of solemnity, and praise, and love that she had seemed to hear in them but a moment since, and that was the night

(Continued on next page.)

TREMENDOUS VALUE FOR 15c.

Washington, D. C., Special—An unusual offer is being made by the publishers of the Pathfinder, to send the paper to new readers 13 weeks for 15 cents. This well known national weekly magazine contains all the worth while news of the world, illustrated and presented in a most entertaining manner. It is clean, sincere, non-partisan, reliable—well printed in large type. It puts everything clearly, fairly and briefly.

Washington is the fountain head of the activities and progress of the day; the Pathfinder is right on the ground—the only big national publication at the seat of government. $1 for a year, or send 15 cents for thirteen weeks' trial subscription to the Pathfinder, Box 91, Washington, D. C. The 15 cents does not repay them, but they are glad to invest in new friends.—Adv.

A Most Attractive Paper

For Children in the Home and Sunday School

APPLES OF GOLD

This is a really ideal weekly paper for use in Primary Departments and Infant Classes in all Sunday Schools. It is finely illustrated, uses large, clear type, and is printed in beautiful colored ink. Each week there is a splendid full-page picture, short stories, choice poems and a helpful illustrated treatment of the International Sunday School Lesson. It is issued monthly but is arranged for weekly distribution in four-page parts. Price, single copies, 30 cents; five copies to one address, 25 cents each; ten or more copies, 20 cents each, per year. Postage on Canadian and foreign subscriptions, 6 cents per copy additional. Subscriptions accepted in clubs for 3 months, 6 months or a year.

Sample Copies Sent Free.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY
Park Ave., and Fortieth St., New York.

DON'T decide on the new hymn-book for your Church or Sunday School until you have seen

HALLOWED HYMNS

NEW AND OLD
Edited by IRA ALLAN SANKEY
Son of the famous Singing-Evangelist
Ira D. Sankey
OVER 550,000
COPIES ALREADY SOLD
Responsive Scripture Readings
No Trashy Words No Jingly Music
Price $25.00 per 100 not prepaid
35 cents per copy by mail
Examine a copy and prove its value in your work. (Returnable if desired.)
The Biglow & Main Co., New York Chicago

THE ORIGINAL CHEMICAL
Indoor Closet
30,000 SOLD—FIFTH YEAR
More Comfortable,
Healthful, Convenient
Eliminates the out-house, open vault and cess pool, which are breeding places for germs. Have a warm, sanitary, odorless toilet right in your house. No going out in cold weather. A boon to invalids. Endorsed by State Boards of Health.
ABSOLUTELY ODORLESS
Put It Anywhere In The House
The germs are killed by a chemical process in water in the container. Empty once a month. No more trouble to empty than ashes. Closet absolutely guaranteed. Guarantee on file in the office of this publication. Ask for catalog and price
ROWE SANITARY MFG. CO 160 6th ST., DETROIT, MICH.
Ask about the Ro-San Washstand—Hot and Cold Running Water Without Plumbing

When answering any of the advertisements, please be sure to state that you saw it in the AMERICAN MESSENGER.

Boys & Girls THRIVE on the easily digested wheat and barley food
Grape-Nuts
"There's a Reason"

A THE S
A M E R I C A N B I B L E
READ the most accurate translation of the Bible
THE AMERICAN STANDARD VERSION
LEARN the truth through the PARAGRAPHS DIVISION used by the American Revision Committee in
THE AMERICAN STANDARD VERSION
UNDERSTAND in plain English the exact thought and meaning of the inspired men who first wrote the Bible in Hebrew and Greek by using
THE AMERICAN STANDARD VERSION
Know then
The American Standard Bible stands for Accuracy, Sufficiency, Beauty
Made in all sizes of type and over 200 styles of binding. Price, 45 cents up
For sale by all booksellers or send for descriptive price list and free booklet
THOMAS NELSON & SONS
Bible Publishers for over 100 years
381-385 Y Fourth Avenue, New York

A FINE COMBINATION OFFER
THE AMERICAN MESSENGER and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Two of the Most Popular Religious Publications in America for only $2.25
a year to any part of the United States or Its Possessions.
THE AMERICAN MESSENGER
AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY RELIGIOUS MONTHLY
Regular Subscription Price 50 Cents a Year
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Fifty-two Times a Year $2.00 a Year
Please note that this Special Offer applies only to subscriptions in the United States and its possessions. On Foreign subscriptions $1.24 extra must be added for postage, making a total of $3.49.
If a copy of the beautiful little year book entitled "Daily Food," is desired, ten cents additional must be added. Please send all combination subscriptions to the
AMERICAN MESSENGER
Park Ave. and Fortieth St., N. Y.

Our Beautiful Year Book and Special Subscription Offer

INSTEAD of a Calendar we offer to our subscribers this year a very attractive little book entitled, "Daily Food for Christians." This contains a Bible reading for every day in the year, the Lord's Prayer, the Ten Commandments, the Apostles' Creed, and carefully selected verses from choice hymns. The book is bound in cloth and is of convenient size for carrying in the pocket or handbag, if so desired.

Our readers will please notice carefully the conditions upon which this book will be furnished to those who desire it. We will give a copy of "Daily Food," postpaid, and one year's subscription, new or renewal, to the American Messenger for 60 cents, or we will give the book as a premium to any subscriber who renews his or her own subscription for 1917 and sends one new subscription, remitting $1.00 in all. If the new subscriber in the foregoing case desires a copy of "Daily Food," $1.10 must be remitted. For every Canadian subscription 12 cents additional must be remitted, and for every foreign subscription 24 cents additional.

All those who subscribe now to the American Messenger for one year at fifty cents will receive the paper until January 1, 1919. New subscribers will thus receive both the Thanksgiving and Christmas numbers for 1917 free of cost, if they subscribe at once. They will also be entitled to receive a copy of the book entitled, "Daily Food for Christians," upon the payment of only ten cents additional.

AMERICAN MESSENGER
Park Ave. and 40th St., New York

Oxford Bibles

For S. S. Teachers
With the most accurate, up-to-date and comprehensive helps, arranged in one alphabetical order like a dictionary. From $1.65 up.

For Children
With beautiful illustrations, black and colored, and a number of styles with specially selected helps. From 70c up.

For Older Folks
With extra large, clear type, some printed on "Oxford India Paper"—easy to read, easy to hold. From $1.50 up.

At all Booksellers. Send for catalogue

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS AMERICAN BRANCH
35 West 32nd Street, - - - New York

Sunday School Libraries

The American Tract Society publishes many books for Sunday School Libraries
Catalogue sent on request. Address

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY
Park Ave. and 40th St., New York

"For All Thy Mercies"
(Continued from page 172.)

after she had knelt down in the old home Church and pledged her life to God.

With moist eyes she glanced outward into the leaden November day. Why! she had even forgotten how it seemed to pray!

Dinner was almost a silent meal. John ate his potatoes and sausage abstractedly. Then he reached for a slice of bread. "I'll ride over to-morrow, after breakfast, and see if mother'll come and stay while you're gone," he said at last. "I guess she will. When'll you want to go?"

"I wish I could go to-morrow." For a moment there seemed to be a peculiar heaviness in the silence that settled over the big, homey room. Then Winton reached into his pocket and pulled out a roll of bills. "I was going up to-night to settle with Dr. Elliott," he said slowly, "but I suppose he'll wait another spell. I guess I'd best sell the Jersey, after all. Dean wants her. You might as well go. I'll take you into town for that 6:10 train in the morning."

"But supposing," an eager catch was in her voice, "your mother can't come." "She'll come." Dele did not notice that the hand holding the coffee to his lips was shaking; she did not notice the little grey line about his tensed lips as he put down the cup. "She'll come," he repeated a little thickly, and pushing back his chair took up his cap and left the room.

Slowly, Dele counted the bills—fifty dollars! What a long time they had been saving it! But—"It's Thanksgiving," she declared almost defiantly, "and I guess I've earned it." Then, with quick steps, she began to bustle about the little room.

"Nearer, my God, to Thee,
Nearer to Thee,—"

She was singing again—not joyously—merely a little less gloomily than in the morning. "Glad I mended that old-rose waist," she said, folding it and putting it into her bag.

"'E'en though it be a cross,
That raiseth me.'"

With a sudden start she paused in the act of folding a skirt. In the next room she could hear John moving about, getting ready for bed.

"'E'en though it be a cross,
That raiseth me.'"

As the words of the song penetrated her inner consciousness she seemed yet again to hear her father's voice—"For all Thy mercies, Lord, we give Thee praise."

Crossing to the window she pushed up the shade. How many times she had told John she wished he would find something else to sing—that she was tired of hearing the same old thing from morning until night. And here she had taken to humming it herself—singing it, even. Her lips were suddenly dry. There was a pressure in her throat that hurt. Dele Winton had always prided herself on saying exactly what she meant, and only what she meant; yet here she was singing words that she had not the least intention of meaning.

Mechanically, she watched a huge tree swing its gaunt branches in the strong breeze; mechanically she wondered how it would seem to stand in the home Church again; mechanically, still, she remembered how she and John had stood under that very tree on her first day in the new home, and looking into the clear, clean distance of earth and sky had repeated softly together, "For all Thy mercies, Lord, we give Thee praise." And then—sharply, now,—she remembered the look on his face when he had crowded the box of chocolates into the stove.

"I'm tired," she said irritably, half turning from the window, "and nervous. I'm over-wrought."

As if in answer came the words, so plainly they seemed almost spoken in her ears, "For all Thy mercies Lord," and with a queer, choked little sound—half sob, half mere breath—she turned back and dropped to her knees.

She had forgotten how to pray, she told herself. Was she sure—quite sure she wanted to begin over again? Suddenly, she realized that the sounds in the next room had ceased; half interestedly she realized that the way she decided meant either the giving up of her trip home, or the taking of it.

"'E'en though it be a cross,
That raiseth me.'"

The words left her lips unconsciously,—she did not even know she had spoken them.

The clock downstairs struck eleven. With a half smile she thought of her treasured can of mincemeat; then—abruptly—the smile twisted into a sob and she bowed her head. "'E'en though it be a cross,' oh, God," she said slowly and distinctly now, "that raiseth me!" Then she was very still.

As the clock struck the half hour she arose, turning back half wonderingly to the room in all its confusion of packing. "Oh," she breathed softly, "Oh! I'd forgotten the Cross meant—glory!"

For a swift moment she covered her shining eyes with her hand, then, turning once more to the window, she reached up to draw down the shade, but paused—hand in mid-air. Straight and still—dimly outlined against the night—John Winton was standing beneath the great bare tree below.

Catching up a shawl she went flying down the stairs. Another moment, and she was standing by his side. "John," she cried, her eyes raised to the sky, one warm hand slipping softly into his cold one, "there are the stars; and heaven; and God. There's love and home. There's—" her voice broke into a tender little laugh that was still almost a sob—"mince pies to bake in the morning, and cookies, and maybe a cake. There's your mother to come to dinner with us, and my own dear ones to send a thought of love to. I'm happy—happy, John! There's the chance to make of life what we may. There's the chance to say—" she paused, but John's voice—a little thick and unsteady—took up the words,—

"For all Thy mercies, Lord, we give Thee praise!"

Pointed Paragraphs

Breathe deeply; there is plenty of air, and it is free.

Have a high ideal; the archer must aim above the target if he hopes to hit the bull's-eye.

The Composition of Coca-Cola and its Relation to Tea

Prompted by the desire that the public shall be thoroughly informed as to the composition and dietetic character of Coca-Cola, the Company has issued a booklet giving a detailed analysis of its recipe which is as follows:

Water, sterilized by boiling (carbonated); sugar, granulated, first quality; fruit flavoring extracts with caramel; acid flavorings, citric (lemon) and phosphoric; essence of tea—the refreshing principle.

The following analysis, by the late Dr. John W. Mallet, Fellow of the Royal Society and for nearly forty years Professor of Chemistry in the University of Virginia, shows the comparative stimulating or refreshing strength of tea and Coca-Cola, measured in terms of the refreshing principle:

Black tea—1 cupful.....	1.54
(hot) (5 fl. oz.)
Green tea—1 glassful.....	2.02
(cold) (8 fl. oz. exclusive of ice)
Coca-Cola—1 drink, 8 fl. oz.....	1.21
(fountain) (prepared with 1 fl. oz. Syrup)
Coca-Cola—1 drink, 8 fl. oz.....	1.12
(bottlers) (prepared with 1 fl. oz. Syrup)

From the above recipe and analysis, which are confirmed by all chemists who have analyzed these beverages, it is apparent that Coca-Cola is a carbonated, fruit-flavored modification of tea of a little more than one-half its stimulating strength.

A copy of the booklet referred to above will be mailed free on request, and The Coca-Cola Company especially invites inquiry from those who are interested in pure food and public health propaganda. Address

The Coca-Cola Co., Dept. J., Atlanta, Ga., U. S. A.

THERE'S NO DOUBT ABOUT
POSTUM
AS A HEALTH IMPROVEMENT
OVER COFFEE

THE TREASURY

SPECIAL NOTICE

OWING to occasional losses of letters, containing money, we would request friends and donors of the American Tract Society to remit by check or Post Office Money Order, which latter can always be duplicated in case of loss.

Receipts of the American Tract Society During September, 1917

Total Donations (including $615.04 for Special Objects), $1,092.14.

- ALABAMA, $5. "A Friend," $5.
- ARKANSAS, $2.30. Mrs. Rowland, $1; Mrs. Thomason, $0.30; Mr. Watson, $1.
- CALIFORNIA, $0.20. Mrs. Hancock, $0.20.
- COLORADO, $7.50. Denver, Church Collection, $5; Mr. Bocking, $2.50.
- CONNECTICUT, $2. "A Friend," $2.
- DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, $6. Mr. Abbott, $1; Mr. Baldwin, $5.
- GEORGIA, $5. Miss Clay, $5.
- ILLINOIS, $22.25. "A Friend," $10; Mattoon, Church Offering, $5; Mr. Jacobs, $5; Mr. Jougst, $2.25.
- INDIANA, $15.15. Mr. & Mrs. Onyett, $5; Miss Carter, $5; Mrs. Pole, $0.50; Greensburg, Church Collection, $4.65.
- IOWA, $57.04. Mrs. Denise, $1; Mrs. Marty, $0.15; Rock Rapids, Church Offering, $5; Mrs. Koop, $10; Mr. Addengast, $4.65; Miss Taylor, $1; Sibley Church Collection, $21.67; Sibley, Sunday School Collection, $1.90; Sibley, Church Offering, $11.67.
- KENTUCKY, $30. Mr. Spratt, $10; Miss Anderson, $5; Mr. Alexander, $15.
- MAINE, $26. Mr. Southworth, $5; Mr. Evans, $1; Miss Sewall, $20.
- MARYLAND, $0.30. Mrs. Villmar, $0.30.
- MASSACHUSETTS, $341.25. Springfield, Church Collection, $5; Mrs. Fuller, $100; Mr. Spaulding, Jr., $5; Mr. Todd, $5; Miss Freeman, $1; Mr. Parker, $2; Beverly, Church Offering, $10; Miss Thurlow, $2; Mrs. Turner, $3; Mr. Riley, $75; Mr. Culver, $0.25; Mr. Scott, $25; Mr. Kendall, $5; Capt. Hinkley, for Chinese Literature, $50; Mrs. Foucar, $30; Mr. Tarbox, $10; Mrs. Ramsdell, $5; Miss Munroe, $5; Miss Abbe, $3.
- MICHIGAN, $17.52. Fremont, Church Offering, $12.52; Mr. Hammond, $1; Mrs. Boyce, $2; Mrs. Watson, $2.
- MINNESOTA, $0.65. Rev. Mr. Penner, $0.65.
- MISSOURI, $6.65. Webster Grove, Church Offering, $2; Mr. Petersmeier, $0.65; Miss Gibson, $3.50; Miss Bates, $0.50.
- NEBRASKA, $45.10. Louisville, M. E. Church, $3; Cedar Creek, Presby. Church, $42.10.
- NEW HAMPSHIRE, $5. Rev. Mr. Thompson, $5.
- NEW JERSEY, $74.71. Mr. Conover, $1; Mr. Sutphen, $5; Mrs. Williams, $10; Miss Bonnell, $5; "A Friend," $0.05; Cape May, Church Collection, $3.39; Mr. Ferguson, $5; Mr. Boardman, $1; Miss Day, $2; Mrs. Nevins, $10; Clinton Church Collection, $9.07; Newark, Church Offering, $23.20.
- NEW YORK, $224.62. Mr. Benton, $20; Mr. Bowers, $50; Newburgh, Church Collection, $1.35; Miss Roeschli, $5; Mrs. Bernert, $2; Miss Nott, $2; Mr. Foster, $10; Miss Bogart, $2; Mrs. Whitehouse, $10; Brooklyn, Church Offering, $4.45; Miss Smith, $4; Mr. Winans, $1; Brooklyn, Church Offering, $56; Mr. Alsop, $3; Yonkers, Church Collection, $28.32; Miss Reynolds, $20; Kingston, Church Collection, $4; "A Friend," $1; Kingston, Church Collection, $0.50.
- OHIO, $26.50. Mrs. Sharpless, $5; Miss Kyle, $5; Prof. Slocum, $5; Mrs. Gray, $1; Dr. Cline, $4.50; Miss Reakett, $1; Mr. Fillmore, $5.
- OREGON, $3.28. Mrs. Kraft, $3.03; Mrs. Lehman, $0.25.
- PENNSYLVANIA, $117. Mr. Darsie, $5; Mr. Gutbub, $1; Mr. Ralph, $5; Miss Dickey, $5; Dillsburgh, Church Collection, $7; Mr. Laycock, $5; Miss Abbott, $1; Aspinwall, Church Collection $6; Mr. Vinter, $2; Rev. Mr. Dittmer, $1; Mr. Ran, $5; Mr. Horsburgh, $2; Mrs. Preston, $5; "In His Name," $5; Pittshurh Women's Mission Society, $10; Miss Skillman, $2; Mr. Howland, $50.
- RHODE ISLAND, $22. Miss Hazard, $20; Mr. Wilmot, $2.
- South Dakota, $12.12. "Friend," $5; "Friends," $7.12.
- VERMONT, $2. Mr. Noyes, $2.
- VIRGINIA, $2. Mrs. Armstrong, $2.
- WASHINGTON, $7. Dorcas Class, $7.
- WISCONSIN, $4. Mrs. Hillyer, $2; Highland, Church Offering, $2.
- FOREIGN, $2. Hawaii Mrs. Goerr, $1; Canada, Rev. Mr. Lehrer, $1.
- LEGACIES, $5,520.55. Brooklyn, N. Y., Estate of Emmeline C. Davies, $2,000. Philadelphia, Pa., Estate of Ellen B. Foster, $3,520.55.

American Tract Society

THIS SOCIETY was organized in 1825. Its work is interdenominational and international in scope, and is commended by all evangelical denominations.

It has published the Gospel messages in 178 languages, dialects and characters. It has been the pioneer for work among the foreign-speaking people in our country, and its missionary colporters are distributing Christian literature in many languages among our foreign-speaking population and making a home-to-home visitation among the spiritually destitute, both in the cities and rural districts, leaving all kinds of Christian literature, also the Bible or portions of the Scriptures.

Its publication of leaflets, volumes and periodicals from the Home Office total 797,704,700 copies. It has made foreign cash appropriations to the amount of $802,966.39, and grants of electrotypes to the value of $61,177.96, by means of which millions of copies of books and tracts have been published at mission stations abroad.

The gratuitous distribution of the past year is to the value of $18,461.65. The grand total of its gratuitous distribution has been to the value of $2,652,967.54, which is the equivalent of 5,305,935,080 tract pages.

The total number of family visits that have been made by the Society's colporters during the last year is 199,963; the total number of volumes distributed by sale or grant is 55,712, making the total number of volumes that have been circulated by colporters in the last seventy-six years 17,438,166, and the total number of family visits that they have made during the same period 18,812,806.

The Society is making very special effort in behalf of Latin America, having entered upon the publication of a One-volume Bible commentary in Spanish, a long-needed and earnestly prayed-for publication, and several other important volumes in both Spanish and Portuguese. Its total publications for Latin America now reach 16,012,088 copies. Its work, ever widening, is dependent upon donations and legacies, and greatly needs increased offerings.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, PRESIDENT. JUDSON SWIFT, D. D., General Secretary. Remittances should be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

FIELD SECRETARIES AND COLPORTAGE SUPERINTENDENTS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.

Rev. Isaac Pierson, Field Secretary for New England, 50 Bromfield Street, Boston, Mass.

Rev. A. W. Reinhard, Field Secretary and Superintendent of Colportage for the Western and Northwestern States, 313 Y. M. C. A. Building, Omaha, Nebraska.

Rev. George Whitefort, Superintendent of Colportage, Southern Agency, Crichton, R.F.D., Mobile Co., Ala.

Form of Bequest

I GIVE and bequeath to the "AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY," instituted in the City of New York, May, 1825, the sum of.....dollars to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said Society.

Three witnesses should state that the testator declares this to be his last will and testament, and that they signed at his request, and in his presence and the presence of each other.

Life Members and Directors

THE donation of $30 at one time constitutes a Life Member of the American Tract Society; the addition of $70, or the donation of $100 at one time, constitutes a Life Director. Life members may receive annually copies of the Society's own publications to the value of $1; Life Directors to the value of $2; if applied for within the Society's year, from April 1st to April 1st, in person or by written order.

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

TERMS: Subscription price, 50 cts. a year, payable in advance. In clubs of five or more, 30 cts. each. Club subscriptions mailed to separate addresses, if desired. Charge for foreign subscription, 24 cents additional. Canadian subscription, 12 cents additional. Single copies, 5 cents each.

On account of the additional charge which is made by the New York Post Office for mailing to subscribers in New York and Bronx Counties (Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx), no club rates, cash commissions or premiums will be given for subscriptions that must be sent to persons residing in those Counties. Each subscription in New York or Bronx County must be at the rate of 50 cents net.

Remit by Express Money Order, Draft, Post Office Order or Registered Letter. For very small amounts, postage stamps may be sent at the risk of the sender.

Renewals: The date opposite your name shows to what time the subscription has been paid, and a change in the date is the receipt for renewal.

CHANGES: When sending change of address, be sure to send the old address as well as the new one.

OUR ADVERTISERS: We believe that all the advertisements in this paper are from responsible advertisers, and it is our intention to admit only such to our columns. Should, however, any of our subscribers find that any advertiser does not live up to his agreements, we would consider it a favor if they will inform us, and we will at any time give prompt attention to any complaint.

We do not, of course, guarantee that all persons will take the same point of view with the advertisers, and it must be borne in mind that the claims and statements made by advertisers are their assertions, and not ours.

Our readers will confer a favor upon advertisers and also upon us if they will mention the AMERICAN MESSENGER when answering advertisements.

THE PATRIOT LIBRARY

for Our Soldiers and Sailors

THE greatest need of our soldiers and sailors is wholesome, uplifting and saving religious reading. One of the men in the Navy writes, "Seven hundred men on one of the Battleships are without Christian reading, and it is greatly needed," and the Chaplain on another Battleship writes, "I am delighted with the American Tract Society's offering of literature to meet the needs of the men aboard this ship. Our Greatest Need is attractive and wholesome literature. The books and booklets you are sending us are a great help and additional quantities will be greatly appreciated"; while an Army Chaplain says, "I desire to thank the Society for the books and leaflets sent to our men. They were greatly appreciated."

In addition to the many thousands of copies of The Soldier's Text Book, Cromwell's Soldier's Pocket Bible and several leaflets especially prepared for the Army and Navy, thousands of which have already been distributed and will continue to be distributed during the period of the War, the American Tract Society is now publishing THE PATRIOT LIBRARY consisting of twenty carefully selected volumes, and is forwarding it direct to the Battleships, and through the Y. M. C. A. to the Cantonments and Camps, also to our men in France. The value of the library is Twenty Dollars. Too much emphasis cannot be placed upon the necessity of furnishing "Our Boys" with THE PATRIOT LIBRARY; it is, indeed, a necessity. It stands upon its own individuality, is forceful in moral and spiritual uplift, and is in demand quite independently of other reading.

One Hundred Thousand Dollars ($100,000) is needed at once for the publication and distribution of the Library, which is dependent upon special donations. Each and all desiring to have a share in this splendid work should send their donations to Louis Tag, Treasurer, American Tract Society, Park Avenue and 40th Street, New York, N. Y.

What 15c Will Bring You from the Nation's Capital

Washington, the home of the Pathfinder, is the nerve-center of civilization; history is being made at this world capital. The Pathfinder's illustrated weekly review gives you a clear, impartial and correct diagnosis of public affairs during these strenuous, epoch-making days. The title matter of 15c in stamps or coin will bring you the Pathfinder 13 weeks on trial. The Pathfinder is an illustrated weekly, published at the Nation's center, for the Nation; a paper that prints all the news of the world and tells the truth and only the truth; now in its 24th year. This paper fills the bill without emptying the purse; it costs but $1 a year. If you want to keep posted on what's going on in the world, at the least expense of time or money, this is your means. If you want a paper in your home which is sincere, reliable, entertaining, wholesome, the Pathfinder is yours. If you would appreciate a paper which puts everything clearly, fairly, briefly—here it is. A dollar bill mailed at our risk will bring you the Pathfinder for a full year, or simply send 15c to show that you might like such a paper, and we will send the Pathfinder on probation for 13 weeks. The 15c does not repay us, but we are glad to invest in new friends. Pathfinder, Box 91, Washington, D. C.

Dr. FOULKES, Secretary of the Presbyterian Ministerial Relief Fund, recommends this book to every church-going man or woman "Read it and also give a copy to your minister," he says

DOMINIE DEAN

By ELLIS PARKER BUTLER
Author of "PIGS IS PIGS"

"If it could be circulated in the thousands of communities of the kind in which David Dean lived, it would pay for its writing many times over."—Evening Post.
12mo. Cloth. Net $1.35

MARY CAROLINE HOLMES
Who Follows in Their Train
The charmingly written account of an American girl's adventures in the land of Syria. Those who read and succumbed to the fascination of "The Lady of the Decoration," may anticipate a similar pleasure from this delightful volume.
Net $1.25

EDGAR WHITAKER WORK, D.D.
The Bible in English Literature
A volume of singular freshness, by the author of "The Fascination of the Book," to be read with delight and to be studied with profit.
Net $1.25

P. WHITWELL WILSON
The Christ We Forget
A Life of Our Lord for Men of To-day
Dr. Chapman, Moderator of the General Assembly says: "I consider it one of the greatest books I've ever read. The more I read it, the more profoundly am I impressed."
Net 1.50

J. WILBUR CHAPMAN, D.D.
When Home is Heaven
The various aspects of domestic life, the right training of children, the value of the home in which God's name is honored, containing 122 of Dr. Chapman's Word Illustrations.
Net $1.25

CHARLES L. THOMPSON, D.D.
The Religious Foundations of America
A survey of the elements which from various European sources went to the making of America. The Reformation principles are traced to their original Old World channels, and their culminating influence measured and appraised.
Net $1.50

FRANCIS GEORGE
The Only Nancy
A Tale of the Kentucky Mountains
A story of a Southern mountain community, told with vividness and power. The author's long association with these people enables him to write with freedom and fidelity of the region made famous by John Fox, Jr.
Net $1.25

WILLIAM HIRAM FOULKES, D.D.
Sunset by the Lakeside
"Vesper Messages to Young People
"Dr. Foulkes is alive, and what is more, alive and alert. A book that quickens thought, strengthens purpose and brings a thrill to the heart."
Christian Intelligence.
Net 60c.

ROBERT E. SPEER, D.D.
The Stuff of Manhood
Some Needed Notes in American Character
In forceful, convincing fashion Robert Speer enlarges on some elements of character especially needful to American manhood in these critical times.
Net $1.00

BEAUTIFUL AND USEFUL PREMIUMS

HEART-LIFE CLASSICS

16mo. 6½x4¼ in. In new and attractive cloth binding.

A choice list of whole-standard titles by authors well known in their fields. Each title is a gem.

Any one of the following volumes of the "Heart Life Classics" will be given FREE and POSTPAID for only 1 new (not your own) yearly subscription to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at 50 cents each.

- ABIDE IN CHRIST.....Rev. Andrew Murray.
- ADVICE TO A YOUNG CHRISTIAN.....Rev. Dr. A. Alexander.
- ALONE IN LONDON.....Hesba Stretton.
- A BAG OF STORIES.....Anna B. Warner.
- A CALL TO THE UNCONVERTED.....Richard Baxter.
- ANXIOUS INQUIRER.....Rev. John A. James.
- BEULAH LAND.....Rev. T. L. Cuyler, D.D.
- BLOOD OF JESUS.....Rev. Wm. Reid.
- BLUE FLAG, THE.....Mrs. S. S. Baker.
- BREAK IN SCHEDULE TIME, AND A BAKER'S DOZEN.....Faye Huntington.
- CHRISTIAN LIVING.....Rev. F. B. Meyer.
- CHRISTIE'S OLD ORGAN.....Mrs. Walton.
- DAILY FOOD FOR CHRISTIANS.....Mrs. Walton.
- DAILY LIGHT ON THE DAILY PATH (Morning Hour).....Mrs. Walton.
- DAIRYMAN'S DAUGHTER.....Legh Richmond.
- DOWN IN A MINE.....Mrs. Walton.
- EXPECTATION CORNER AND CONFLICTING DUTIES.....Mrs. Walton.
- GOLD DUST.....Mrs. Walton.
- HEART LIFE.....Rev. T. L. Cuyler, D.D.
- HELPS OVER HARD PLACES, BOYS.....Lynde Palmer.
- HELPS OVER HARD PLACES, GIRLS.....Lynde Palmer.
- HERE A LITTLE AND THERE A LITTLE.....Mrs. M. Mortimer.
- HOME SONGS FOR LITTLE PEOPLE.....Mrs. M. Mortimer.
- IMITATION OF CHRIST.....Thomas à Kempis.
- JESSICA'S FIRST PRAYER, AND JESSICA'S MOTHER.....Hesba Stretton.
- JOHN PLOUGHMAN'S TALK.....Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
- JOHN PLOUGHMAN'S PICTURES.....Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
- JOYFUL LIFE.....Margaret E. Sangster.
- KEPT FOR THE MASTER'S USE, AND MYRING.....Frances R. Havergal.
- LIKE CHRIST.....Rev. Andrew Murray.
- LINE UPON LINE.....Mrs. M. Mortimer.
- LITTLE CAPTAIN (Lynde Palmer) AND BUY YOUR OWN CHERRIES.....Dr. J. W. Kirton.
- LITTLE MEG'S CHILDREN.....Hesba Stretton.
- MISS LOONEY'S MISSION, AND LADDIE.....Mrs. Walton.
- MY FAVORITE LISTED.....Rev. T. L. Cuyler, D.D.
- MY FAVORITE MOVES ME.....Mrs. Walton.
- MY FAVORITE STORY.....Mrs. Walton.
- MY FAVORITE DAY.....Mrs. M. Mortimer.
- PILGRIM'S PROGRESS.....John Bunyan.
- PRECEPT UPON PRECEPT.....Mrs. M. Mortimer.
- ROUND THE CIRCLE.....Cora S. Day.
- SAVED AT SEA, AND LITTLE FAITH.....Mrs. Walton.
- SEVEN CARDINAL VIRTUES.....James Stalker, D.D.
- SHEPHERD PSALM.....Rev. F. B. Meyer.
- TALKS BETWEEN TIMES.....Margaret E. Sangster.
- TRUTH THAT SAVES.....Rev. J. A. R. Dickson.
- TWO BLIZZARDS.....Lynde Palmer.
- TWINKLE AND WRINKLE.....Lynde Palmer.
- WEE DAVIE, AND MAN'S THANKSGIVING.....Dr. Norman McLeod.
- WHITER THAN SNOW, AND FISHERMAN'S DAUGHTER.....Walton, Harrison.
- WILSON'S KINDLING DEPOT.....Mrs. C. E. R. Parker.
- WITH CHRIST IN THE SCHOOL OF PRAYER.....Rev. Andrew Murray.

FINE, RELIABLE WATCHES

Every boy and every girl would like to have a watch. Here is a good opportunity to secure one free. Boys and girls in different sections of our country have gone to work and within a very short time, and with very little effort, they have become the owners of beautiful watches. Our youthful readers can do likewise. Boys, try it and see how easy it is to secure only 4 subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at 50 cents each. Girls, you certainly can obtain the names of 7 of your friends as subscribers to aid you to secure this watch. Why not go to work now?

Boy's Nickel Watch

This Boy's Watch given FREE and POSTPAID for only 4 yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER

Guaranteed by the Manufacturers

This watch is an up-to-date, American-made serviceable watch, stem wind and stem set, and is a good timekeeper. It has a highly polished open-face nickel silver case. A guarantee for one year goes with each watch. The illustration given herewith is an exact reproduction of the watch we are offering.

Girl's Nickel Watch

This beautiful little watch is finished in solid nickel silver case with fancy engraved edges and is stem wind and stem set. The dial has plain figures, and the crystal is made of heavy beveled glass. We have used this watch as a premium in the past and it has given the best of satisfaction.

The Watch will be sent FREE and all charges PREPAID for only 7 yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at 50 cents each.

SCRIPTURE WALL ROLLS

Who can measure the extent of silent influence? We refer specifically to the effect which Scripture Wall Rolls, hung on bedroom, parlor, dining-room or kitchen walls, exert over the minds and hearts of the inmates of the home. The child takes in as by breathing every day the enlightening, soothing, elevating influence of these silent teachers. Some of God's most powerful agencies in the material realm are the most silent; for instance, the sunshine scattering gladness and life everywhere, illuminating ten thousand landscapes, painting the flowers with many colors and beautifying the cheek of merry childhood. So the silent Scripture Wall Roll, with the beautiful setting which it gives to the carefully selected Scripture verses, cannot fail to make a lasting impression for good.

Here is something for both young and old in every family. Many thousands of these popular Wall Rolls have been sold, and no Christian home should be without one.

THE GOSPEL IN PICTURE AND TEXT

A beautiful Wall Roll, with 27 large illustrations. Arranged by Miss K. F. Clark. 27 pp.; size, 25x16 inches.

"This Wall Roll deserves the warmest commendation. Every page contains an admirable reproduction of one of Hofmann's exquisite series of Bible paintings. The texts are well selected, and well printed in large, clear type."

Given for only 4 yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at 50 cents each.

LIGHT ON LIFE'S PATH

A selection of passages for every day in the month, with a leading text, elegant large type, and black walnut roller. 32 pp. and cover; size, 20x13½ inches.

Given for only 3 yearly subscriptions at 50 cents each.

MORNING SUNBEAMS

Selected by Mrs. Prentiss for daily use. Large Roll, 32 pp. and cover, 13½x20 inches. Large, clear type, easy to read across the room.

Given for only 2 yearly subscriptions at 50 cents each.

SPLENDID FOUNTAIN PENS

These Pens are Suitable for Either Ladies or Gentlemen

No. 1. Plain Pen. It will be given for only 3 subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at 50 cents.

No. 2. Gold Bands Fountain Pen. This Pen has two engraved one-quarter inch Gold Bands and is six and one-half inches long. It will be given for 5 subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at 50 cents each.

In the construction of these pens only the best of materials are used. The rubber parts are hand-turned Para rubber. The gold nibs are 14 karat solid gold tipped with the best grade of hard iridium. The mountings are 18 karat 1-10 stock. These pens will be found to render eminently satisfactory service.

AMERICAN MESSENGER, Park Avenue and 40th Street, New York

WHY 300,000 FAMILIES LOVE CHRISTIAN HERALD

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is doing something more than merely placing interesting reading matter in the homes of its readers. It is giving them a part in great enterprises. It is giving them spiritual and material helpfulness. It is the one magazine that represents in the most vital way all of the interests of Protestant Christianity and of the on-marching Church of Christ. Week by week, the Christian Herald is giving its readers issues of absorbing interest. You should be a regular reader of the Christian Herald and enjoy these special features which are now appearing:

NEXT to the Bible The Christian Herald takes its place in the homes of America. It is the one great interdenominational Christian family magazine. All denominations are represented by the ablest and soundest preachers who through The Christian Herald present the Gospel with boldness and fidelity. In the field of religious discussion, in the Sunday School, in evangelism, in Home and Foreign Missions, in the Young People's Societies and in the wonderful activities of the Prayer League, The Christian Herald reaches out to widely distributed spheres.

HOWARD CHASE

A New Novel by REV. CHAS. M. SHELDON, D.D.

Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, D.D.

DR. SHELDON, the famous Kansas clergyman, has established for himself wide and growing popularity as an author through such gripping and enduring books as "In His Steps" and "Jesus is Here."

"Howard Chase," Dr. Sheldon's new novel, seems to us to surpass all of his previous works in thrilling human interest and moral power. It is a story of a big man in a small town. It is a church story, but intensely human and dealing unsparingly with the follies and foibles of church members in their church, community and domestic lives.

"Howard Chase" will be published serially in the Christian Herald. It alone is well worth the subscription price.

THE MILLENNIUM, WHAT, WHEN AND WHERE

By PROF. JAMES M. GRAY, D.D.

Prof. James M. Gray, D.D.

THE Mountain Peaks of Prophecy," Prof. Gray's first series of articles on Prophecy, which appeared recently in the Christian Herald, brought forth such a number of inquiries from students and Bible readers all over the country, that this additional series became a necessity.

Tens of thousands of Americans, of all denominations, who have been deeply interested in the first series, will welcome these additional articles with genuine satisfaction.

They are contributions of the most valuable character to the prophetic literature of the times in which we are now living—a period which in the opinion of all of the best Bible expositors is one of tremendous prophetic fulfillment.

The new series will bear the following titles: "What Does the Bible Teach About Russia?" "What Does the Bible Teach About the Restoration of Babylon?" "The Millennium, What, When and Where?" "The Present War and Coming Events."

DRAWINGS AND POEMS. By Robert Riggs and Margaret E. Sangster ADVENTURES IN NEIGHBORING
By Vera L. Connolly

WEEKLY SERMON by a distinguished pastor
DAILY MEDITATIONS
SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON by Dr. Allison
YOUNG PEOPLE'S SOCIETIES

TRAVEL STORIES FROM RUSSIA

By Maynard Owen Williams

Maynard Owen Williams

MR. WILLIAMS, whose stories of the Orient have made clear so many things before so half understood, is now in Russia, right at the center of the turmoil and ferment of revolutionary plot and counterplot. Mr. Williams' articles, which appear regularly in the Christian Herald, reveal the action of the forces within the nation which is to-day so wrapped in mystery.

THE GREATER UNITED STATES

By FRANK G. CARPENTER

Frank G. Carpenter

IN every Chautauqua Association and in nearly every town and village of the United States, Frank G. Carpenter is known as the man who can come back from some place and then tell about it so that you think you have been there. After going into all the odd corners of the world, Mr. Carpenter has now turned his steps toward the farms and factories of his native land. Already he has told stories in the Christian Herald of steel and of cotton, of sugar and of sulphur, of oil and lumber, and he has only just made a beginning. Balance of the series will appear in the Christian Herald.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPICS
BEAUTIFUL COVERS, Many in colors
WEEKLY DOUBLE PAGE OF ILLUSTRATIONS

REVIEW OF THE NEWS OF THE WEEK SPIRITUAL WORK IN THE CAMPS
THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

FREE

FOR THE ASKING

A Series of Striking Pictures of Bible Scenes BEAUTIFULLY COLORED

With a Collection of Applicable Bible Verses Carefully Selected

By fitting the appropriate verses to pictures the reader actually takes a unique and fascinating journey to Bible Land.

This is the Christian Herald plan in which $9,128.00 in cash has been awarded to encourage more general Bible reading

Do you want to go into the beloved land of Bible days?

Do you want to travel to some of the scenes the Bible tells us of so beautifully?

GO with us, and as our guests. As you go you will be carried back to the Bible period; you will meet for a brief time some of the characters of the eternal story.

And as you go the story will be brought home to you perhaps as never before, for you will be comparing the scenes with Bible verses that tell of them—you will actually be seeking out and fitting together the Bible verses that best apply to the pictures.

Thus while feasting your eyes and diverting your mind you will be learning more and more of the Bible, seeing more and more the significance of the Bible story.

Yet so delightful will the journey be that you may not awaken until later to the good it has done you. While learning much you will be enjoying much; because of the interest in your journey you will be acquiring, almost unconsciously, a better understanding of the Bible.

Wonderful Aid to Sunday-School Teachers

The "Picture Journey" plan is that of our National Bible Picture Study, a great competition, based on the International Sunday School Lessons, in which $5,000.00 in cash will be awarded. Teachers will be intensely interested in this wonderful study-entertainment, for it will cover the ground of the lessons which they are studying. First reward will be $1,000.00 in cash!

This Will Surprise and Delight You, Too

Send in the free Request Coupon, and let us present you, as an outright gift, postpaid by us, the inspiring and beautiful "Picture Journey." We know it will delight you, and surprise you, too. Send for it—right now, while you are thinking of it. You put off too many things—do not procrastinate in this. Cut out the Request Coupon and send it in—NOW! There is positively no obligation.

Introductory Subscription Coupon

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
1179 Bible House, New York, N. Y.
Gentlemen: For the enclosed 25 cents send the Christian Herald for 13 weeks as per your Half Price Introductory Offer to new subscribers.

Name _____
Address _____

Subscription, 1 year (52 issues), $2.00
SAMPLE COPY SENT ON REQUEST

HALF-PRICE OFFER TO NEW READERS
3 MONTHS' SUBSCRIPTION
(13 ISSUES) 25c

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
1179 Bible House, New York, N. Y.

FREE REQUEST COUPON

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
1180 Bible House, New York, N. Y.

Kindly send me, free and postpaid, the complete booklet, "A Picture Journey into Bible Story Land," containing the series of beautifully colored Bible pictures, the selection of Bible verses, and instructions for fitting the appropriate verses to the pictures.

Name _____
Address _____

Vol. 75

No. 12

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

DECEMBER, 1917

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS LIBRARY
173.2 2 1917

WE
 DECLARE UNTO YOU GLAD TIDINGS

PREACH THE GOSPEL TO EVERY CREATURE

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY, NEW YORK

CHOICE PREMIUMS SUITABLE FOR CHRISTMAS GIFTS

Beautiful Silverware Articles

ARTICLES of silverware are always in demand in the home and they make most acceptable gifts for Christmas. Many of our friends, no doubt, would like to obtain some of the choice pieces we are offering at this time. With a little effort in securing yearly subscriptions for the American Messenger, one or more of these articles may be obtained, and the person who receives this fine silverware will be greatly pleased and delighted.

These goods are manufactured by the well known firm of Wm. A. Rogers, Ltd.; they are sure to please and give satisfaction. The "Grecian" is the popular style of the goods we are offering. This quality of Electro Silverplate is well known for its beauty of design as well as for its excellent wearing qualities in actual household service. The goods will be shipped by parcel post, upon receipt of order. These offers are good only in the United States, as the duty in foreign countries would be prohibitive.

Cash must accompany each order.

NAME OF ARTICLE	Numbers of subscriptions required to obtain the article free of cost
Three piece Cream Set, consisting of sugar shell, butter knife and cream ladle.....	8
1/2 dozen butter-spreaders.....	10
Sugar tong.....	4
Eight piece Set, consisting of 6 teaspoons, butter knife and sugar shell.....	10
Three piece Child Set, consisting of knife, fork and spoon.....	6
Meat fork.....	4
1/2 dozen tablespoons.....	9
1/2 dozen forks.....	9
1/2 dozen knives.....	10
1/2 dozen teaspoons.....	6
1 berry spoon.....	6
1 gravy ladle.....	4
1 soup ladle.....	10

A Handsome Solid Gold Lavalliere

THIS is a very choice and attractive lady's neck piece. Solid gold, 15 inch chain. Two genuine rubies and one baroque pearl, mounted in solid gold setting of neat design. Furnished in a handsome plush-lined box. This is one of the choicest premiums we have ever offered. It will make a most charming Christmas gift.

We will give this Lavalliere for 20 yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at 50 cents each.

The Evangeline Convertible Bracelet Watch

THIS is a beautiful little watch with many uses. The bracelet can be removed so that watch can be worn on a chatelaine pin, leather or ribbon strap, sautoir, lavalliere chain, lorgnette chain or in a leather wristlet. The bracelet has patent expansion links adjustable to any wrist, and can be shortened by removing the centre link which is jointed.

The movement is of high grade lever construction, jeweled and adjusted to positions, an accurate and durable mechanism that we unhesitatingly guarantee against mechanical defects for five years.

Cased in twenty-year guaranteed heavy gold stock case, with bracelet of the same quality. This offer includes a handsome plush and satin lined case with alligator skin finish, as illustrated.

We will give this beautiful Evangeline Convertible Watch and Bracelet for only 30 yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at fifty Cents each.

The Barclay Watch for Gentlemen

THIS is a 20-year gold-filled, plain polished Gentleman's Watch, fitted with a high-grade 7-jewel lever movement, fully guaranteed in every particular.

We will give this Barclay Watch free and post paid for only 25 yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at 50 cents each.

The Arcala Watch for Ladies

THIS is a very pretty 20-year gold-filled Lady's Watch, plain polished case, fitted with a high-grade 7-jewel lever movement and is guaranteed.

This beautiful Arcala Watch will be given for only 30 yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at 50 cents each.

The American Messenger

"Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Luke 2:10

Vol. 75. No. 12

DECEMBER, 1917

Copyright, 1917, by American Tract Society.

Terms: 50 cents per annum
Single copy, 5 cents

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

PUBLISHED MONTHLY

BY THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

OFFICERS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President.

JOHN HENRY JOWETT, M.A., D.D., Vice-President.

JUDSON SWIFT, D.D., General Secretary.

LOUIS TAG, Treasurer.

REV. HENRY LEWIS, Ph.D., Recording Secretary.

All of the above-named officers should be addressed at Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Rev. David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.

Rev. Charles Carroll Albertson, D.D.

Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.

Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D.

Rev. George Ernest Merriam.

Entered at the Post Office in New York as second-class matter.

A Christmas Message to Our Readers

To all our readers we extend most cordial Christmas greetings. Despite the shadow of the great war that now hangs across our land, we believe the advent of the Christmas season will bring joy and gladness to many hearts, and we believe further, that Christian people should do their utmost to spread the spirit of good cheer at this Christmas season, for the word of the angel is still true, "Behold I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be to all people."

In this issue of the AMERICAN MESSENGER our readers will find many features appropriate to the Christmas-tide, and we trust that it may carry into every home the spirit of gladness and good cheer.

There are two or three matters to which we desire to call special attention. In the first place, we would remind those whose subscriptions expire with the close of the present year of the desirability of renewing their subscriptions at once, so as to avoid the rush of the holiday season and the possible delay which is apt to occur at that time.

In this connection we would suggest that it would be a very material assistance to the welfare of this paper if each subscriber, when sending the renewal subscription, would also forward one or more new subscriptions. The sum of $1.50 will pay for five new subscriptions, each of which may be sent to a different address. A single subscription costs 50 cents. No more appropriate or acceptable Christmas gift could be made than to send the AMERICAN MESSENGER for a whole year to some one who does not now receive this helpful and entertaining periodical. For ten cents additional a copy of our beautiful little year-book entitled, "Daily Food for Christians," will be sent, and this will serve to impart a still more personal touch to your gift.

We also desire to emphasize the fact that by a little effort in obtaining new subscriptions for the AMERICAN MESSENGER, various articles may be secured which will serve as very choice and appropriate presents at this Christmas season. On another page our readers will find a list of very attractive premium offers, of which we hope many will take advantage.

The AMERICAN MESSENGER is considered the best illustrated family religious monthly published in America at the low subscription price of fifty cents per year. To maintain our rank as a religious periodical and to secure the increased number of subscribers which are needed in order to meet the constantly increasing cost of production, we need the effective assistance of all our friends. We therefore urge our readers to make a personal effort to secure a large number of new subscribers, for we are confident that in so doing they will not only aid the AMERICAN MESSENGER but they will confer a lasting benefit on all those into whose homes this paper is introduced.

The Patriot Library

During the past few weeks many sets of the Patriot Library have been sent by the American Tract Society to the soldiers and sailors of our Army and Navy. Commander C. F. Owens, commanding one of the Battleships of the U. S. Navy, has written:

"It is with pleasure that I acknowledge the receipt of the Patriot Library. In the few weeks it has been on board there are already signs of considerable usage. The books are of such a nature that they appeal directly to the men. They are instructive, wholesome and uplifting, and meet a need that has been sadly lacking in our library. Please accept my sincere thanks for the gift, and be well assured that it is highly appreciated, and enjoyed not only by the crew but by the officers as well."

One of the General Camp Secretaries of the Young Men's Christian Association writes:

"The Patriot Library arrived to-day, and I thank you very much for sending it. It is deeply appreciated by the men in our Camp, and meets a long-felt need."

This Patriot Library has been selected with great care. It should be sent to every Y. M. C. A. Building in the Cantonments and Camps, to all the Battleships and Cruisers of the U. S. Navy, and to the Y. M. C. A. huts on the battle lines in France and Belgium.

Mr. Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, has sent his word of commendation in behalf of the Patriot Library, as has also Mr. Baker, Secretary of War.

The American Tract Society has entered into covenant to send a very large number of these Patriot Libraries to the Cantonments, Camps and Battleships. For the $100,000 required to meet the cost of this undertaking the Society must look to the Christian people of our land.

Everything possible is being done for the physical welfare of our soldiers and sailors. Their spiritual needs, however, are not fully met. Wholesome and saving Christian literature is a prime necessity, and the Tract Society is doing its utmost to furnish this literature.

All those who desire to help circulate the Patriot Library among the men of our Army and Navy may forward their offerings to Mr. Louis Tag, Treasurer, American Tract Society, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y. The value of each set of the Patriot Library is $20.00, and both large and small contributions are needed to assure its widest possible distribution.

More Army Chaplains Needed

At its last session Congress failed to make provision for army chaplains in numbers sufficient for the needs of the new army. The present law authorizes one chaplain to a regiment, but now that each regiment contains about 3,600 men, the inadequacy of the existing arrangement is self-evident.

The religious forces of the country are united in the demand that Congress authorize the appointment of one chaplain to every 1,200 men. It is felt that it is impossible for one chaplain to care properly for the spiritual interests of more than the number named, and it is hoped that the so-called Chamberlain Bill, which establishes the rule of one chaplain for every 1,200 men, will be speedily enacted into law at the Congressional session which begins this month.

Meanwhile it is suggested that the churches do what they can to meet special needs in training camps and cantonments, by providing voluntary Christian workers, wherever practicable and by aiding in every possible way in the religious work carried on among the soldiers.

An insufficient ministry in the army, it has been wisely stated, is as costly as an inefficient commissary. The Christian people of our land should impress upon their representatives in Congress the necessity of making adequate provision for the spiritual needs of our new army by authorizing the desired increase in the number of chaplains.

The Entire Literature of a People

A recent issue of The African Advance, published by the Rhodesia Mission, whose headquarters are at Old Umtali, has made a striking presentation of the crying need for Christian literature for the people of that region. It enumerates five books, which are all that the people of that district have to-day in their own language.

The titles of these five books are as follows: First Primer, Second Primer, Catechism, Hymn Book and New Testament. These books contain only a few hundred pages, they weigh a little over a pound, and they constitute "the entire literature of a people."

The same issue of The African Advance gives a list of a score of manuscripts, which have been prepared in typewritten form, and are "just waiting for some one to make it possible to have them published." Among these are: A Gospel Primer, Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, Outline Life of St. Paul, Short Story of the Life of Christ, Daily Food for One Year, The Miracles and Parables of Christ, and a Temperance Catechism.

What a splendid opportunity is here offered for doing constructive missionary work by furnishing the means needed to supply Christian literature for these natives of the Dark Continent!

The Second Liberty Loan a Success

Every Christian patriot rejoiced to know that the second Liberty Loan was a complete success, and that not only was the full amount of the $3,000,000,000 taken, but that there was a large oversubscription.

There is no doubt that other loans will be called for by our Government in order to provide for the vast expenditures that are necessitated by the war. But there is no doubt that the American people will loyally and generously sustain the Government by responding to every call that may be made so as to prosecute effectively the great war into which our country has entered for the cause of humanity and democracy.

"Making America Christian"

The current number of Men and Missions has put forward a startling proposition in talking about "making America Christian." Nevertheless, a little reflection will show us how far we are from being a really Christian country. As one distinguished speaker has said, we are Christian only in spots. In other words, there are large sections of our population that are not really Christian, in any accurate sense of that word.

In this time of stress, we can do no better service for our country than to aid in every possible way the progress of the Kingdom, for only as America becomes thoroughly Christian will she escape the moral and spiritual perils that threaten to engulf our national life on every hand.

An Important Question

One of the most important questions that will come before Congress this winter is the matter of submitting the national prohibition amendment to the individual States. The Sheppard resolution providing for this action was passed by the Senate at its last session, but action by the House was deferred.

Realizing the importance of pushing this matter to a final settlement, the New York Anti-Saloon League has entered upon a campaign to secure an affirmative vote on the part of the New York representatives when this question shall come before the lower house of Congress.

It should not be necessary to argue the vital necessity of adopting the proposed prohibition amendment to the Constitution. Every consideration of economy, efficiency and morality leads us to the conclusion that this country would be better off in every way without the liquor traffic. It is to be hoped that Congress will see the necessity of action and will take the steps required to allow the people of our country to settle this vital question for themselves.

The Fruitage of Unrest

BY JOHN T. FARIS, D. D.

EVERYONE knows days, perhaps months, and even years, when peace and quiet seem absolutely out of the question, when those who tell of the possibility of enjoying these blessings seem to speak in riddles, and when the assurance that some day the life will be rich and noble because of what is so destructive of serenity sounds like a jest. Yet countless thousands testify that these things are so.

As a young man Charles Kingsley had a bitter experience of unrest. "The conflict between faith and unbelief, and between hope and fears was so fierce and bitter that he . . . nearly gave up all for lost," Mrs. Kingsley wrote, in her story of her gifted husband's life. "But through all God kept him for a work he little dreamed of." His difficulties came by reason of his attempts to explain to himself the riddle of life and this world. At last he found that "no explanation was so complete as the one which one had learned at one's mother's knee." So he came to feel that the only possible rest for his troubled soul was to become a preacher of purity and holiness.

Trials were not all put behind him when he became a Christian. The parents of Fanny Grenfell opposed his marriage to her. But he had learned to trust God, so he was not cast down. "I can understand people's losing by trusting too little to God," he wrote, "but I cannot understand anyone's losing by trusting too much to Him." Then, most unexpectedly, the barriers were removed. "From that moment a river of blessings heaped one on the other, as if the merciful God were turned prodigal in His undeserved love," was his own statement of the fact. "Therefore take heart, my friend," he pleaded, "only humble yourself utterly; be still, and say, 'My Father, thy will be done.' And why shouldn't it be with you as it was with me?"

Years later he wrote of this period of testing: "God knows how valuable it was to me; and that I rank that period of misery as the most priceless passage of my whole existence . . . It taught me to realize that providence was a reality, and prayer the highest sacrament; that to the blessed Lord alone we must look for the fulfillment of our desires. . . . What an awful weapon prayer is. Mark 11:24 saved me from madness in my twelve months' sorrows, and it is so simple and so wide—wide as eternity, simple as light, true as God Himself."

A present day author has told of an experience that taught him the same lesson. In the midst of a busy year a serious illness came to him, and one result was that he walked on crutches for six months. At first he was disturbed because of the serious interruption to his plans. He wondered how anything good could come out of those trying weeks. He might have given way to despair, but the memory of the lesson learned years before from a godly father and mother saved him. He not only found peace for himself, but he wondered how his lesson might be turned to advantage for somebody else. "I got to thinking how much more sad the lot of a lame boy must be when he had not yet formed a philosophy of life and was at a period when life and its activities are mostly legs," was his statement of the problem he tried to solve when he ceased to pity himself because of his privations.

One result of his thinking was the preparation of the story of a lame boy which attracted wide attention very soon after it was published. The book told of a boy whose early life was saddened by the thought of his lameness; of a mother who could enter fully into the thoughts of her handicapped son and could appreciate fully the motives of one for whom she had more fondness than for his brothers, for the very reason that he needed her tenderness most; of a father who encouraged the boy to fight his own battles, and so supplemented the mother's tenderness; of brothers who did not mean to hurt the feelings of the lame lad by calling him "Limpy"; when they stopped to think they would not use the nickname; of the rare acquaintances who were tactful enough to treat him as if he were not different from other boys.

These acquaintances helped the lame boy to ignore what had been to him a sore point. But there came a day when he learned something better than ignoring his handicap; he would use it as a help to better things. He turned a liability into an asset when, after years of shrinking from his nickname, he realized that a nickname is a help to good fellowship. Thus, at least, he was on equal terms with his mates.

The boy took another step when his self-pity gave place to pity for one who was less fortunate than himself. When Limpy met an old soldier with a peg leg his affection went out to the man, and from that moment he had a stouter heart. He marveled to hear the unfortunate man laugh. "He was amazed that Jonas belittled his infirmity, optimistically asserting that you could have just as much fun with one leg as with two, and gallantly declaring that you were even better off, for if you broke your wooden leg it didn't hurt."

The author succeeded in his purpose to cheer the afflicted even better than he had hoped, for the book was soon put in raised type for those most afflicted people, the blind, and he began to receive from some of his new readers the most wonderfully cheerful and philosophic letters.

Thus his privation not only brought peace to him, but it was the means of adding peace to the lives of those others who had far more reason than he had ever had for being gloomy and downcast.

But isn't it a fair question after all, if there is ever a good reason for being seriously cast down? For while "all chastening seemeth for the present to be not joyous but grievous; yet afterward it yieldeth peaceable fruit unto them that have been exercised thereby."

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTION

CHARLES C. ALBERTSON, D.D.

THE BABE THAT TROUBLED A KING

BY

REV. CHARLES CARROLL ALBERTSON, D. D.

Pastor of the Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, New York

NOT without reason was King Herod troubled, when he heard the query of the Wise Men, "Where is he that is born King of the Jews?" Conscientious of his corruption, Herod knew his insecurity.

His kingdom was honeycombed with fraud. The pillars which supported it were violence and crime. He knew what he represented—Cæsarism, imperialism, institutionalism—the state everything, the individual man, nothing. Is a man in Herod's way? Strike him down. Is a province in his way? Blot it out—strike it off the map. Is a race in his way? Put your heel on their necks. "Down Eros, up Mars!" So Herod was troubled. And Felix was troubled, a little later, when a representative of this Babe reasoned of temperance, righteousness and judgment to come. It is recorded that Nero fell in a fit when one of his courtiers told him a martyr had died in the arena crying, "Christ shall yet be Emperor of Rome!" It is said a modern atheist, in his dying delirium, imagined he saw Christ in the room, and breathed his last in a paroxysm of anger and fear. These all are associates of Herod—the sight of the star troubles them.

We do not often think of Christ as bringing trouble. Especially at Christmas time we think of Him as a bringer of joy. "Let the joy bells ring." But the plain fact is, the messenger of joy to one is the messenger of trouble to another. Jesus is the Prince of Peace. An olive branch is in His hand. His life on earth is "the white truce of God" to alien and rebellious man. But whether truce brings peace or trouble depends upon the attitude of those to whom the truce is offered. Is an olive branch in His hand? It is also written, "Out of His mouth goeth a sharp sword." He himself said, "I am come to bring a sword." Strange contrasts are these—an olive branch and a sword, a lamb and a lion, a flower and a fire, peace-giver and troubler.

It sounds like sacrilege to speak of Christ as a troubler, yet here He is troubling Herod. And presently we shall see a rich young ruler troubled, after an interview with Jesus. He is troubled by the necessity of self-denial. And Nicodemus is troubled by the mystery of the new birth. The Pharisees are troubled by His plain speech about the vanity of mere formalism. The priests are troubled by His condemnation of their slavish literalism. Truly this is a troublesome man! and to put an end to the trouble, there is the cross. Let Him die, and be buried in a cavern among the hills, and let a great stone keep Him well down and securely in. But, on the third day after He is buried, the trouble breaks out afresh. The grave in Joseph's garden bursts as bursts the sullen sod in spring, upheaved by vital forces. All Jerusalem is troubled now, for a new spirit is in the air. It spreads to Damascus and Joppa, to Ephesus and Corinth, to Philippi and Colossæ, to Athens and to Rome, and men with blanched cheeks are whispering to one another, "They that have turned the world upside down have come hither also."

All that Herod asked was to be let alone. That was all Agrippa asked, all that Felix asked. All that paganism ever asked, and all that heathenism asks now is to be let alone. The ancestral tablets of China and the temple gods of India ask only to be let alone. Conservative spirits in paganism ask, "Why do you trouble us? You are breaking up our social system and liberating new forces which we can not control." And there are not a few critical minds even among Christians who say, "Missionary work is an unwarranted interference with the affairs of other nations, and can only bring trouble; think of the Sepoy rebellion in India and the Boxer outbreak in China." It is the old, old story of Christ troubling Herod.

But do we not know that the only thing for us to do is to plead guilty, and to be guilty of troubling every kingdom that is not a kingdom of righteousness? The existence of evil is the only explanation of the Incarnation. If the church is the church of Christ it must trouble Herod until Herod lays down his scepter and surrenders his throne.

It seems altogether absurd for a king to be troubled by a mere babe. Yet kings are not altogether unwise. They know that great movements are but the lengthened shadows of great men, and that great men are not born great, neither are they born men. There was a time when the Protestant Reformation lay in a cradle. World leaders of fifty years hence are playing with Christmas toys today. Let us not despise the day of small things. Let us cherish the child; let us keep alive the little spark of fire, of genius, of poetry and of patriotism. The spark may yet become a torch, and the torch a conflagration.

To be troubled by the thought of Christ is not an ancient experience. There are modern Herods. It is no serious indictment of Christianity that Christianity troubles the consciences of many. Many a school child thinks his teacher is troublesome, and many a teacher is actually troublesome. Some are needlessly so. Many a citizen regards the tax collector as troublesome. But our taxes are the price we pay for comfort and safety. The teacher troubles the boy, when he says, "Sit at that desk until you solve the problem," but after the boy has solved the problem, and sees its meaning clearly, he is glad the teacher troubled him. I know a boy to whom a teacher said, "Remain in your place after school and write the multiplication table seven times." The boy would much rather have gone skating or coasting. But after he had written the table seven times he needed never to write it again. A doctor troubles a patient when he probes or cauterizes a wound, but, after all, it is a benevolent trouble, a trouble that brings peace and healing.

The sweetest comfort we know is the fruit of trouble. It troubles us to overcome moral weakness, but we exult in strength. It troubles us to remain silent under unjust suspicion, but when time vindicates us, we have our satisfaction. It troubles us to confess our faults to one another, but sweet is the forgiving word. It troubles us to learn the divine art of magnanimity, but having learned it, it would trouble us far more to unlearn it.

We must not forget that the beginning of our Christian life is a troubling sense of sin. Not even Christmas joy can make us wholly forgetful of the fact of sin. There is the stain on the hand. There is the pain in the heart. There is the wearying burden of guilt. There is the keen desire for the consciousness of pardon. Then Jesus speaks to us, and the world is made new, and the Father whispers, "My child, my own!" Is not this our history? Or does Christ still trouble us? Everything depends upon our attitude toward Him. If we doubt Him, deny Him, dishonor Him, He will trouble us. But if we accept Him, confess Him, obey Him, He will transform our troubles into blessings, our trials into triumphs, our sorrows into sacraments, our losses into gains, our murky midnight into morning.

All the lessons of this Christmas meditation are summed up thus: Jesus brings no trouble to His friends. He troubles us only that He may be our Saviour. From all other troubles He is our refuge, a refreshing shadow in a weary land, a river of water in a dry place, a covert from the tempest, the Rock of Ages, the inextinguishable light, the inalienable joy, a pavilion from the strife of tongues, the crowning of life's high endeavor. His star is emblem of all this, and even in the darkest night the world has ever seen, the eye of faith beholds the morning star, the star of Bethlehem!

The Christmas Spirit

BY HELEN M. RICHARDSON

*Carry the Christmas spirit
Into the days that wait
Ready to bear your message
On through the New Year's gate.
Let not the loving bounty
Cease from your hand to flow,
As from the Old Year's presence
Into the New you go.*

*Carry the joy of giving
Into the days to be;
Let not the Christ love falter,—
Pour it out cheerfully.
Then from your sunny presence
Mid all the stress of life,
Hearts you have blessed may gather
Strength for the coming strife.*

"And The Word Was Made Flesh"

By Pearl H. Campbell

WHENEVER men have wished to communicate with each other by other means than the spoken word they have used the materials that were easiest to obtain. The Indian, in the days when the New World lay waiting for the coming of the white man, traced his tribal history on the rocks, the skins of his wigwam, or the totem pole which he reared before his lodge.

In the Old World, where humanity had its beginning, the reeds growing in the marshes of the sluggish Nile furnished the Egyptian with papyrus, a paper which was sufficient for the demands of business; while the rock-chambered tombs of the kings yielded space for the national history.

In ancient Babylonia the mud of the river shaped into tablets and baked beneath the sun's fierce glare fulfilled the needs of a simple people. In this connection it is interesting to read this news item in a recent magazine:

"A Babylonian letter written four thousand years ago has just been opened and read for the first time. It was opened at the University of Pennsylvania with a mallet, for it was sealed in a clay envelope. A Sumerian scholar found that it was a complaint about a supply of flour that had been ordered. Plainly there is nothing new under the sun either in problems about food or in the vexations of delayed mail."

Yet painted rocks and river clay and even the heart of forest trees, of which our present books are made, are as fleeting and as perishable as the civilization of nations. So when God wished to send a message to men He fashioned it of a substance which could not change and was eternal, even of Himself. We are told: "In the beginning was the Word and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. . . . And the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us."

That was God's message to the world, His own Son, the perfect Man, full of grace and truth. All the wonder of the Incarnation the world has never been able to grasp, because it listens with dull ears that cannot sense the heavenly symphony. But this much it has known that from the very beginning the Message was one of cheer and hopefulness.

There was not the faintest echo of this in the ears of men, either for this world or the life to come until the Word was made flesh. The Romans who had the most splendid civilization of ancient times believed in living in the present because the grave was the doorway, not to peace and happiness in the presence of God, but rather to an unspeakably dreary existence. Therefore the Roman could look unmoved upon the suffering of slaves, the exposure of children, the torture of captives in the arena. The gods did not care; why should he? He saw no reason for founding hospitals, or establishing asylums for the insane.

Nor has any religion founded by man been able to reach a higher plane. Mohammedanism which literally teaches its followers to "pray without ceasing" cannot give them the blessed certainty that if they seek they shall find. It cannot point them to an all-loving Saviour who is not willing that any should perish and who gave His life as a ransom for mankind.

In a current religious paper we find this incident: "A friend has described to us his visit to a mosque during the hour of prayer. He says the wailing, screaming and imploring of the people was pitiful. The poor worshippers really seemed to be seeking for God and longing for Him, 'if haply they might find Him.' But it was all in the minor key. There was no note of joy, or of victory; nothing to indicate that they had really found God. Why this terrible strain without success? Christ explains it all: 'No man cometh unto the Father but by Me.' Our friend said that he wished those Mohammedan worshippers could have heard a truly Christian congregation singing: 'Joy to the world, the Lord has come! Let earth receive her King!'

In that wonderful first chapter of his gospel the Apostle John says, "And as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God."

So in a lesser way we, too, like our Elder Brother, are God's messengers, and every pure and holy life is a Word of the Father written not on brick or stone but on that imperishable thing which is character.

Gossip and Culture

BY NATALIE H. SNYDER.

THERE is in the wide range of social life nothing that works so much evil as the light and oftentimes unconsidered words that are spoken. Daily and hourly from lips intending no harm fall words that shatter the reputation or bring sorrow into the life of the one discussed. Comment upon the actions of one's neighbor necessarily forms a large part of our conversation, for there is nothing in all the world so attractive as human interests. It is not possible to mingle with the great tide of life and maintain only an abstract interest in humanity. If this were so, the feeling of sympathy would be missing and that touch of nature that makes the whole world kin would be unknown. So long as the discussion of others is kindly no harm is done, but when one allows his neighbor's affairs to assume undue proportions and makes them a matter of frequent comment the dividing line is reached where interest becomes gossip.

Country districts and villages afford prolific soil for gossip. Especially is this true if a stranger comes into a community. "I have known a country society which withered away all to nothing under the dry rot of gossip only," said a writer in England, and the same may be said of many a country neighborhood upon this side of the water. The best cure for gossip lies in culture. The mind is fed by the food placed before it, and sometimes merely because of having nothing to think about, really good-natured people tear in tatters the characters of those about them. If the thought could be directed into more elevated channels the privacy of the lives of others would not then be so often invaded and the affairs with which no one has the right to meddle would be left unmolested. The repetition of commonplace things said or done does not tend to improve the mind or elevate the character.

Great care should be taken as to those in whom confidence is reposed. No one can catch the exact shade of thought that speech seeks to convey, and often harmless expressions are construed into something very foreign to their author's idea. It does not matter how plainly a fact may be stated or how kindly a criticism is expressed, if given the opportunity, "The world will bend the passing word, though its shortest course be straight." There are some who take delight in bending words from their true meaning and in giving them a twist entirely foreign to them, while others are so reckless in their speech that at their "every word a reputation dies." Many a sensitive soul has been done to death by slanderous tongues.

The talebearer is one of the most dangerous characters in social life. In Norse mythology the great ash tree of life that spread its immense branches over the world, a shelter and a protection, was guarded by an eagle with a falcon perched between his eyes, which watched for any approaching enemies, while at its root a dreadful dragon gnawed to destroy it. Between the eagle and the dragon a little squirrel scampered to and fro, carrying tales, the type of the modern tale-bearer. The one who spends his time in carrying tales is both contemptible and malicious.

It is useless to try to escape comment and even undeserved censure, until there is a sweeping reform in the matter of sins of the tongue. Martin Luther said quaintly, "Whoever has a good work to do must let the devil's tongue run as it pleases." There are times when the whitest lives must walk amid assailing voices which whisper and defame the motives and the character, but time silences these and brings vindication to those who deserve it.

Gifts

BY L. D. STEARNS

Once more crisp old December and the Yuletide cheer have come. Once more the chime of Christmas Bells strikes an answering chord from heart of man to man. Once more hurrying throngs crowd streets and stores. But in the midst of the Christmas rush do not forget that back of every Christmas greeting or token the same message is sounding that was sent through the earth, so many centuries ago, by an Angel Band "On earth, peace; good-will toward men!"

With a great multitude, times are hard; pocket-books are thin, and the Christmas season is a time of perplexity and anxious planning, as we wonder how we can make one dollar do the work of three,—what is the least we can spend and keep our self-respect,—and we draw a long sigh—some of us—and whisper, "I'll be glad—so glad, when it's over!" Meanwhile a little frown settles perplexedly between our brows, and somehow the corners of our mouths get to turning down, instead of up.

We love to give—oh, yes! If only that thin purse was plumper!

Let us throw the windows wide, draw in deep breaths of God's clear December air, and listen for a bit to the Angel's song of Peace and Good-Will.

"For Jesus Christ, the Saviour,
Was born on Christmas Day!"

Gifts! Shall we let them absorb all our thought while the heart of all the world is reaching out for love, and kindness, and a word of cheer!

Since the night Christ prayed alone—for-saken by those He loved—in the Garden of Gethsemane, men, and the sons of men, have gone their ways, lonely and sad! Yet the gift that is above price—the gift that strikes, and calls into life, a chord of joy in every breast—it is in your power, and mine, to give; the gift of kindly love, and service.

Perchance a penny to the little newsboy, a helping hand to father or mother, a tender hand-clasp and a "Happy Christmas, dear!" will make the heart sing as no mere monied gift has ever done, or ever could do.

With generous soul and hand put love and a broad and tolerant understanding and sympathy into whatever you give; smile, with the echo of the old-time song resounding in your heart; bestow a little added touch of brightness, cheer and love about the home, letting it flow outward to the stranger passing by, and you will make of the Christmas tide a time of joy, while your own heart and the hearts of those whom you may touch will be cleaner, sweeter dwelling places for Him whose Son—the Christ—was born for man in Bethlehem on the first Christmas Day.

KEEP THE ALTAR FIRE BURNING

By Rev. Harlan G. Mendenhall, D. D.

THIS solemn injunction was given to the Jewish priesthood in connection with the laws that had to do with the tabernacle service:—"The fire shall ever be burning on the altar; it shall never go out." The altar to which reference is here made was for the burnt offerings, and was so called because upon it the sacrifices were consumed by fire. In the wilderness it was simple and portable; but with the building of the temple it became more elaborate and costly. There was this striking thing about that altar: on it was kindled a fire which never went out. When the sacrifices had been consumed, the ashes were removed; but the fire burned on. Day and night this flame continued to burn. Amid all the changes of place and time the fire was never lost. Priests were detailed day and night for the service of keeping the coals alive. This fire was the symbol of a continuous worship of God; if the sacrificial fire went out, religion would be extinguished.

We have come upon marked times in the life of our country and the church. Men by the thousands have enlisted in the Army and Navy for foreign service. They are leaving their places in business houses and in the church to answer their country's call to engage in a conflict that has to do, we believe, with the safety of the state and the church. To us who are left behind has been committed the keeping of the altar fire.

The Altar of Patriotism

The fire burning on the altar of patriotism must never go out. Men have gone from us, stirred with love of country and devotion to the flag, to keep pure and holy the ideals of our nation. Now that they have gone, it is for us to look after their vacant places. If we are true to them and appreciate their sacrifices, we will be true to the duties that called them to this service and show ourselves willing to make sacrifices at home.

It is for us to see that no unholy hands are laid upon the altar of liberty by which the fire kindled by our fathers, may be put out. We have inherited this fire from them—the liberty of the individual and the form of a republican government which have become the ideals of a world seeking a true democracy. Men here may try to subvert it; may try to overthrow it; may try to undermine it. The flag may be soiled by unholy hands. Men may cast reproach upon the call for service; they may play into the hands of the foe by fomenting strikes and stirring up passions. Wrong political principles may be inculcated; wrong ideals of government given forth; wrong methods of administration suggested. While our boys may be dying for our nation abroad, shall we permit the nation to die at home? While Moses was fighting his way against the Amorites and other heathen foes, the church kept the fire burning as it prayed for the success of the army. Rebellion arose among the people; it was put down with a stern hand. The law given on Sinai must be upheld—it must be kept! Joshua had the same help in his conquest of Canaan—the priests forgot not their ministrations.

Our country can tolerate no foes at home. Men of unworthy ambitions, low ideals, impure motives, seek, as in Russia, to remove the ancient landmark which the fathers set. They are willing that the ship of state may be set adrift and wrecked upon the rocks of their selfish desires.

The government of the nation, state and city must be maintained; laws kept; schools open; business carried on; courts of justice respected and the rights of the people preserved.

Shall democracy be made safe for France by our soldiers and shall we make democracy unsafe for our soldiers when they come home? Shall our boys give up their lives in the trenches of Europe and we not be willing to make sacrifices here that the principles for which they die may not be perpetuated by us? Let us see to it that the fire on the altar of liberty never goes out. When our soldiers and sailors return to us, may they see the old flame of patriotism which burned for them in youth as bright and warm as when they sailed away. An Englishman standing on the deck of a steamer as it sailed into the harbor of New York saw the flag as it was hoisted to its place with the boom of the sunrise gun. As it reached its position and its folds were open to the rays of the sun, he exclaimed, "That is the most beautiful picture I have ever seen!" When our boys sail into our harbor at the close of this war and see on their own soil the flag as opened by the breeze, they will say, "That flag is more beautiful than ever; the people at home have kept it unsoiled, unharmed."

"Flag of the free heart's hope and home
By angel hands to valor given
Thy stars have lit the welkin dome
And all thy hues were born in heaven."

The Altar of Religious Worship

Keep the fire burning on the altar of worship to God. In the churches of our land there are many vacant places. The Presbyterian churches in New York City alone have had perhaps two thousand men go from them. The young men from our Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies have enlisted,—men from the city, from the village, from the country. They carry with them precious memories of the old church in the countryside as well as the city. Pictures will often come to them in the camp of the service in the church and of their pastor. On Sunday they will hear the bells as they ring out for worship; they will see their minister in the pulpit; they will listen to the hymns of the Sunday School; they will recall the prayers in the meetings of the Young People's Society.

What shall they find on their return? Shall our churches have cobwebs on their pulpits, their pews empty and deserted, the doors rusting on their hinges, the Sunday School deserted, the Endeavor Society only a memory—the fire of devotion gone out? Nay, nay! As Christian men and women we ought to be more devoted than ever in our worship. Only when the ancient temple was desecrated by mammon, when the synagogues were deserted, when false religions came in and when the fire of a holy worship went out, was Israel defeated and scattered, and her people carried into captivity.

More earnest ought we to be in maintaining the sanctity of the Sabbath, so that it be not a day given to revelry and riotous living, but observed as God's holy day. Our churches must be kept open and faithful worshippers must be there at every service; the children are to be trained in the Sunday School and taught God's Word; our young people are to be instructed in prayer, and all the agencies of the church kept in operation.

If church members have neglected the means of grace, now more than ever should they renew their vows and crowd the places of prayer. A praying people make a victorious people. Lincoln said, "I knew not what I should do if I did not know that Christian people in their churches are praying for me."

We are sending our clergymen to France to assist in Y. M. C. A. work and carry on religious services in the camps. Bibles are being distributed by the thousands. Our soldiers are keeping a religious fire burning in France; shall we let it go out here?

The Altar of Faith in God

Let not the fire go out on the altar of Faith in God. An elder in one of the churches wrote me a letter recently in which he said: "The whole world seems to be turned upside down. What is the cause and where are we going? Never was there a greater test of Christian faith. Personally I am fearfully burdened with the effects of the war. As you know, I am on the District Exemption Board. They insisted on my taking the Liberty Loan chairmanship again, and with the Y. M. C. A. and other things here I have had to practically abandon my business. I do not regret that so much and am glad to do it if we could only see a little light and the end of these conditions."

If ever we needed implicit faith in God the time is here and now. It is testing time. But God lives and reigns—our Eternal Sovereign God. The world has had its dark days, but in those times faith in God gave us John Knox of Scotland; John Calvin of Switzerland; Martin Luther of Germany; Admiral Coligny of France; William the Silent of Holland and Oliver Cromwell of England.

When Lincoln was assassinated, great crowds gathered in Newspaper Row, New York City, ready to go everywhere spreading destruction in their wake. General Garfield was in the old Tribune Building; going to a window with an uplifted hand he quieted the crowd and then in a voice that could be heard far away, solemnly cried:

"The Lord reigneth. Clouds and darkness are round about him; righteousness and judgment are the habitation of his throne."

Against the foe in vales below
Let all our strength be hurled;
Faith is the victory we know
That overcomes the world.

The Altar of Righteousness

Keep burning on the altar of Righteousness your zeal for better things. This is the time to overthrow the autocracy of Satan. Shall this fair land of ours be debauched by vice, by sinful pleasure? Shall we find a worse world after the war or a better world? Oh, that our zeal for purity and for righteousness might flame out against all sin, with the saloons closed and the scarlet line no longer seen, so that when our boys come home they will see a new land wherein dwelleth righteousness; cleaner cities; a more beautiful America than the one they left, a land where songs of praise shall take the place of the dirges of sin, where light and love and peace shall reign, where the glory of Christ shall be reflected in every heart and home! Yes, His stately steppings will yet be seen in every land, and His power will be felt on every sea, when people everywhere will hail Him as the Prince of Peace—when the Kingdom of the world is to become the Kingdom of our Lord and His Christ and He shall reign forever and ever.

Brightly beams our Father's mercy
From the light-house ever more,
But to us He gives the keeping
Of the lights along the shore.

Dark the night of sin has settled
Lord the angry billows roar;
Eager eyes are watching, longing
For the lights along the shore.

The fire shall ever be burning on the altar; it shall never go out!

Notes upon the Topics Used
in Christian Endeavor
and Other Young People's Societies.

THE PRAYER MEETING

By
Rev. Henry Lewis
Ph.D.

DECEMBER 2.

Self-Control

I Cor. 9:24-27.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Nov. 26. Block sin. Rom. 6:12.
T. Nov. 27. Control in food. Dan. 1:8-21.
W. Nov. 28. In drink. Jer. 35:1-11.
T. Nov. 29. In speech. I Pet. 3:8-13.
F. Nov. 30. Meekness in control. 2 Sam. 16:5-14.
S. Dec. 1. Snubbing one's self. Matt. 16:21-28.

This is a most timely topic. It has been chosen especially for use at a consecration meeting, but it is equally suitable for any other meeting during this trying period in the world's history, when self-control is so greatly needed, both in the individual and in the national life.

Essential for Success

Paul pointed out to the Christians of Corinth that self-control was essential to victory in the athletic games which filled so large a part in the thought and life of the Grecian nation. The victorious contestant in those games must be temperate in all things. So at the present time experience shows that the winner in our modern athletic contests must also exercise scrupulous self-control. In other words, he must be temperate in the use of food and drink. He must keep the body under watchful care and practice the most exacting restraint in order that he may gain the victory over his opponents.

What is true with regard to athletic games is also true in every other sphere of life. In order to succeed in any calling self-control must be practiced.

Self-control is a priceless asset at this critical juncture in our national life. We face problems such as have never before been presented. We are walking in new and untried paths. Suffering, privation, bereavement and death are among the possibilities that confront every household in the land. Under these circumstances, how vitally important is it for every citizen to show his patriotism by exercising the utmost self-control!

There should be no need to emphasize the importance of self-control or temperance in regard to strong drink. Total abstinence is required of our soldiers and sailors, and it should be practiced by every citizen in the land.

Self-control in regard to food has become a world necessity. We who are blessed with abundance must share with those whose supply is scant. In order to do this self-control is essential.

Self-control is a Christian virtue. Its highest exemplar is found in the Lord Jesus Christ. His matchless self-control was due to His perfect union with Him who controls the universe. If we will let God dwell in us, we, too, shall be able to control ourselves, and thus to order our lives in harmony with the Divine plan.

DECEMBER 9.

Here Am I: Send Me

Isaiah 6:6-8.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Dec. 3. Call to serve. Matt. 9:9.
T. Dec. 4. "I am ready." Rom. 1:15.
W. Dec. 5. A call necessary. Heb. 5:1-6.
T. Dec. 6. The voice within. Jer. 20:7-13.
F. Dec. 7. Equipment. 2 Tim. 3:14-17.
S. Dec. 8. Preparation. Heb. 11:23-30.

This topic has been selected as especially appropriate for the Life-Work Recruits. These are young people who have indicated their intention to give their lives to some form of personal Christian service.

Opportunities for Service

There are many ways in which young men and young women may devote themselves to Christian service. They may fit themselves for the Christian ministry in the home land or become missionaries in the foreign field. They may become secretaries in the Young Men's or the Young Women's Christian Associations. They may become teachers in Christian institutions of learning or Red Cross nurses or settlement workers.

In order to become an effective Christian worker, special training is necessary to fit oneself to take up some specified line of Christian service. A college education is desirable, and in certain cases is absolutely essential. But there are many positions which may be filled acceptably by those who have been trained at Bible Schools such as those which are maintained in New York, Northfield, Chicago and Los Angeles.

Opportunities for Christian service are offered in various lines of church work. There is a call for trained Sunday School Superintendents, Bible Class teachers, pastoral helpers, church secretaries and visitors. Life-Work Recruits may well fit themselves for these lines of service, which afford opportunities of great usefulness.

The Spirit Required

One who purposes to devote his whole life to some special form of Christian service must have the spirit of sacrifice. The monetary return in every line of Christian work is small. There is no financial gain to be had in adopting the Christian ministry or any other branch of Christian service as a life work. True, there are rich rewards for faithful service, but these rewards are spiritual, not material, and one who toils for Christ must be content with meager compensation, so far as earthly remuneration is concerned.

Spiritual Bridge-Building

Some one has very aptly compared the task of the Christian worker to bridge-building: "Bridge-building is man's work. So is bridge-building to eternity. No calling is higher than this—servant of humanity, as doctor, nurse, missionary, pastor, secretary, social worker."

Let every young person who reads these words consider whether or not to become a Life-Work Recruit. Present conditions have multiplied the opportunities for Christian service. Let us ask ourselves seriously whether God is not calling us to devote our entire lives to some line of Christian work.

DECEMBER 16.

Christ Is Our Peace

National Ideals: War or Peace. Which?

Isa. 9:6; Eph. 2:14-17.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Dec. 10. Peace and plenty. 1 Kings 4:20-25.
