T. Dec. 11. War's judgments. Joel 2:1-14.
W. Dec. 12. War of revolt. Judg. 6:1-10.
T. Dec. 13. The divine ideal. Luke 2:14.
F. Dec. 14. Peace through transformation. Isa. 2:1-4.
S. Dec. 15. Earth's hope: justice. 2 Pet. 3:13.

When this topic was selected for consideration over a year ago our country was at peace. Now we are engaged in war, but we must not let that fact obscure the divine and eternal truth expressed in the words, "Christ is our peace."

The root meaning of the word religion is that of binding the soul of man to God, its maker. The central truth of the Gospel of Christ is reconciliation, which means the cementing of peace between God and man and between man and man.

While we are engaged in war, let us not forget that the ultimate aim of this great struggle in which we are participants is a just and lasting peace, founded upon the principles of righteousness.

There is a phrase that is much in use in commercial circles. It is this: "After the war." Contracts are being made by business men for fulfillment, "after the war." Plans are being developed for the extension of trade, "after the war." Financial arrangements have been made for adjustment, "after the war."

Should not Christian people also be planning for the moral and spiritual uplift of the world, "after the war"? The cause of Christ has suffered in various ways on account of this war. Missionary work has been interrupted, and in some cases has been entirely disrupted by the conditions created by this war. Why should not the Church of Christ make large and comprehensive plans, not only to recover the lost ground, but to make a great advance, "after the war"?

Our National Ideal

Let our national ideal be righteousness. Sometimes it is necessary to fight for the right. War is a national catastrophe, but it is better to fight for humanity than to submit to an ignoble peace.

Jesus Christ, who was the Prince of Peace, once uttered these words: "Think not that I came to send peace on the earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword." And in this utterance the Master voiced the truth that between right and wrong there is an eternal and inevitable conflict, which in some cases can only be settled by the use of the sword.

DECEMBER 23.

Christmas Giving

Matthew 2:1-12.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Dec. 17. Giving ourselves. 2 Cor. 8:1-5.
T. Dec. 18. Giving the best. Hag. 1:7-11.
W. Dec. 19. Feasting the poor. Prov. 19:17.
T. Dec. 20. Feasting the poor. Luke 14:1-14.
F. Dec. 21. True religion. Isa. 58:5-10.
S. Dec. 22. A gift that grew. 1 Kings 17:8-16.

Ever since the Wise Men of old showered their gifts at the feet of the Christ Child, Christmas has been associated with giving, and it is right that there should be this association of ideas. The first Christmas marked the advent of the choicest gift that humanity ever received—the gift of God's only begotten Son, and it is fitting that in our celebration of this gift of God to men we should cultivate and cherish the spirit of true giving.

Christmas giving has not always been wise or appropriate. Therefore it is advisable for us to bestow some thought upon this topic, and to consider what is the right kind of giving for us to practice at the Christmas tide.

Christmas giving should be discriminate. Many gifts that are made at this time are useless to the recipients because they have not been selected with discrimination. Often this lack of discrimination is due to the fact that Christmas purchases are delayed till the last minute, with the result that in the final rush misfits are made, which would be ludicrous, if they were not really regrettable.

Christmas giving should be uncalculating. Too often the custom of making Christmas gifts degenerates into a mere exchange of articles, which lacks all elements of spontaneity or true affection. A gift should be the expression of true friendship, not a matter of barter and exchange. The question whether we shall receive a present in exchange for the gift that we propose to make should not enter into our calculations.

Christmas giving should be generous. This does not mean that we shall make a lavish display of the gifts that we bestow, but it means that we shall be liberal in spirit and that we shall give things that are of real worth, not because of their monetary value, but because of the thought and care that we have bestowed upon them. It means, also, that we should give to those who are unable to reciprocate, but who will appreciate our generosity and whose minds and hearts will be turned toward the Christ whose birth we celebrate on Christmas day.

Christmas giving should be conscientious. We should not spend more than we can properly afford, but we should plan our Christmas expenditures with due reference to all our other obligations. To make expensive gifts and at the same time to keep our creditors waiting for the money to which they are justly entitled is not in accord with the spirit of true Christmas giving.

Our Christmas spirit should reflect the spirit of Christ Himself. As Christ gave Himself to the world, so we should give ourselves, for the gift without the giver is indeed bare and unsatisfying. Our Christmas giving should be a sign of human brotherhood. It should also serve as a token of our Divine sonship.

DECEMBER 30.

Planning for the Future

Matthew 25:1-13.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Dec. 24. "If God will." Jas. 4:13-17.
T. Dec. 25. A plan that failed. Gen. 11:1-9.
W. Dec. 26. Plan to do good. Rom. 13:1-7.
T. Dec. 27. To be Christlike. Rom. 8:28-29.
F. Dec. 28. To make salvation sure. 2 Pet. 1:10.
S. Dec. 29. To be true to God. Rev. 2:10.

We have come to the close of another year, and now we are to take a forward look into the year that is just before us. We are forbidden to take any anxious thought for the morrow, but it is the teaching of divine wisdom that we should plan for the future.

The parable of the Wise and Foolish Virgins throws a strong light upon the topic before us. The wise virgins were those who prepared for the hours of waiting which they knew might be encountered, while the foolish virgins gave no thought to the possible needs of the future. Those that had carefully planned for possible eventualities were rewarded by entrance to the marriage feast, while those who had been heedless were shut out.

The Endeavorer's Daily Companion gives these suggestive thoughts on this topic, which are well worth remembering:

"Our plan, to be successful, must be the same as God's plan for our life. Therefore we must pray much, seek divine light and leading.

"Plan your education, bending it to your life's goal. Along with special subjects, however, seek general culture, which is the fragrance of life.

"Plan your days. Some have found help in having a regular scheme of duties. Review each day, too, and you will see how necessary plan is, if you are to achieve big things.

"Plan your reading. This will affect all your future. Lay aside trashy novels. Read history, devotional books, science. Fill the mind with useful information, storing it for future use."

With Christ in the Coming Year

The most important thing that we can plan for the future is to have Christ as our Redeemer, Friend, and Guide during the New Year upon which we are so soon to enter.

With Christ we may be confident of success through all the coming year. Without Him there can be nothing but moral and spiritual failure.

We should plan, not only for our future years on this earth, but for the eternity which is to be spent beyond. Heaven is the final goal for which we should aim, and we should so order our present life that it may be a fitting preparation for the life to come.

If our lives are hid with Christ in God, then we shall be prepared for all the future, both in time and in eternity. If we make Christ the Master of our hearts and lives, then we shall be found ready and waiting when the call shall come for us to go in to the marriage feast.

While we plan for our own future, let us help those about us also to plan wisely and well for their future, so that they with us may find an abundant entrance into the eternal Kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

HIS VINEYARD AND OURS

In Old Umtali

At Old Umtali are the headquarters of the Rhodesia Mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Here a splendid work is being done for the evangelization of the natives of that part of Africa.

At a recent meeting of the Conference at Old Umtali the native Christians were gathered in station groups, each group being equipped with a banner. The photograph reproduced on this page of our paper shows some of these station groups as they appeared on "Native Assembly Day" and reveals how they have progressed in the ways of civilization as well as in Christian teaching and doctrine.

Rev. John R. Gates, District Superintendent of this Mission, has sent a letter to the General Secretary of the American Tract Society, in the course of which he says:

"The appropriation of $100 sent to us by the American Tract Society is very helpful. We send out 2,000 copies of the Sunday School Lesson Sheets each week. These with the few books noted in a recent publication of The African Advance are all that the people have in the way of literature. If ever a people needed a literature, these do. They entertain each other with native stories, some of which are harmless, while others are partly or entirely obscene and heathen. In this story-telling, which is often coupled with dancing, drinking and even immorality, they find their chief amusement. It is not surprising that our native converts lacking the uplifting influence of interesting and helpful books, sometimes fall into this form of amusement, and thus bring reproach upon the cause of Christ. Christian literature, we feel, is our very greatest need.

"We have a little foot-press, which must do all our publishing. Most of the time we have no printer, but whoever among the missionaries can look after our native type-setters and printers has to do this work. Even with this little press we have sent out thousands of pieces of literature.

NATIVE ASSEMBLY DAY AT OLD UMTALI, AFRICA.

"We realize that perhaps Africa is not yet ready for undertaking colportage work, but if we had an adequate press and a printer who would be permanently employed and paper and the necessary material for making books, our pastors-teachers could supply all the people who are able to read with this literature, and thus the same work would be accomplished as is done by colportage, but of course this would be limited to those who have been in touch with our mission in some way as only those can read.

"We need a press, we need more and better type-setters, we need money for the publication of the manuscripts we have on hand and others that will follow. Speaking of type-setters, sometimes they do fairly well, considering the little time they have had to learn such things, but recently in one page of proof the proofreader found 104 mistakes. Part of this was due to bad type, but most of it was due to the carelessness and ignorance of the native type-setter.

"Our people are begging for literature, or crying for it, as they express it. When out on 'treks' with the boys, they carry what books they have with them, and read while resting.

"Recently some of our missionaries took a trip to Victoria Falls, and crossed over the Zambesi to an island. One of the oarsmen had a book with him which he read every spare moment of the trip. They are hungry for the Gospel and also hungry for knowledge of every kind, and Christian literature is what they need to satisfy this hunger.

"It would not perhaps be practicable just yet for our needed literature to be printed in America, but any help to do this work here would meet the same need. We are grateful for the help received for Sunday School publication work, and if the American Tract Society would like to publish some of the other literature so urgently wanted, we should appreciate it."

A Noble Japanese Giver

About thirty years ago a poor young man started north to join an expedition to the Kurile Islands. When he had gone about twenty miles from Tokyo his money gave out and he became discouraged. He pawned his watch and started back to Tokyo in a third-class car. On the same car with him were Bishop Honda, then president of the Ayoma Gakuin, and Dr. J. O. Spencer. President Honda noted the discouraged look of the boy and engaged him in conversation. He advised him to enter the academy of Ayoma Gakuin. The boy did so, learned of Christianity, was baptized, and after graduation entered the business world of Japan. His shipping interests prospered to a remarkable degree, especially after the beginning of the war, and he is now rated to be several times a millionaire.

His name is Katsuta and his portrait is to be seen in many newspapers and magazines of Japan. Last year he agreed to give President Takagi $40,000 for a new college building. Later plans have increased the estimate, so that the gift will now reach $100,000. This is the largest gift ever made by a mission school graduate in Japan. Mr. Katsuta's life is upright and he is held up as a model to the youth of Japan. Mr. Katsuta has also given $5,000 for the erection of a residence for President Takagi on the school grounds.

One of the greatest banks of Tokyo has subscribed $2,500, the first gift of its kind ever made to a mission school. Several of its employees are graduates of the school and have so commanded the respect and confidence of the bank officers that the school has received this financial recognition from them.

Chinese Students For America

The Government Preparatory School of Honan, China, is soon to graduate a class of one hundred after a course of five years. The Assembly of the Province has decided that the twenty best students of this class will be sent to America for a special course, part of which must be science. The students will stay in the West from five to seven years and will receive about $900 gold a year. In addition to these twenty fortunate ones another twenty will be selected by competitive examination, these to come from the Province at large; they will receive the same benefits and training with the others. Such students when properly trained and returned to Honan ought to do much to develop the resources of this great country.

Her Gift to Christ

At the hospital in Canton, China, one woman, who was very ill, heard of Christ and learned to love Him. One day she asked:

"Doctor, how much longer can I live if I stay in the hospital?"

"About four months," was the doctor's reluctant reply.

"And how long if I go home?"

"Not more than two months."

"Then I am going home."

"But you will lose half of the life which is left to you," the doctor objected.

A glad light flashed over her face, and she cried in a tone of exultation:

"Do you not think I would be glad to give half of my life for the sake of telling my people of Christ's love?"

She accordingly left the hospital, and went home to spend the short span of life left to her in spreading the glad tidings which had been such a source of comfort to her. Truly "she loved much."

A Better Babies Crusade in China

Rev. Milton I. Stauffer, of the China Continuation Committee, tells of a unique exhibition in Canton, China. It was a Baby Show, the meagre beginning of a sort of "Better Babies" crusade. It was one of the funniest things ever perpetrated. The weather had been so rainy that all thought of giving it in the garden next door to the Young Women's Christian Association was put out of mind, until the very morning, which dawned sunny and warm; so arrangements at the eleventh hour had to be changed. The children up to five years had been previously registered and tags made out for them. Their height and weight were taken and noted, though with considerable lack of scientific accuracy due to clothes and such like hindrances. In a vacant room in the nearby residence the superintendent of nurses for the Canton Hospital bathed a three-days-old baby before an interested group of mothers, who asked many questions and seemed to receive some needed information. A group of children from a church kindergarten gave an exhibition and during the entire afternoon representatives from a well-known milk company dispensed modified milk and baby food to both mothers and children. One was reminded of the "Food Fairs" at home and the usual enthusiasm of people to get a taste or a sample of everything.

A suitable prize was awarded to the healthiest child in each of six classes—those below a year and for each year up to six. Though it was surprising and gratifying to see how clean and healthy most of the children were, the judges did discover and call to the attention of the mothers cases of trachoma, anaemia, defective teeth, skin diseases, etc., and made suggestions as to treatment or urged that a doctor be consulted. It is along this line that further help can be given in the future. In addition to the prizes, each child was given a toy and trudging away or was carried off sleepy but serene.

Our Beautiful Year Book AND Special Subscription Offer

INSTEAD of a Calendar we offer to our subscribers this year a very attractive little book entitled, "Daily Food for Christians." This contains a Bible reading for every day in the year, the Lord's Prayer, the Ten Commandments, the Apostles' Creed, and carefully selected verses from choice hymns. The book is bound in cloth and is of convenient size for carrying in the pocket or handbag, if so desired.

Our readers will please notice carefully the conditions upon which this book will be furnished to those who desire it. We will give a copy of "Daily Food," postpaid, and one year's subscription, new or renewal, to the American Messenger for 60 cents, or we will give the book as a premium to any subscriber who renews his or her own subscription for 1917 and sends one new subscription, remitting $1.00 in all. If the new subscriber in the foregoing case desires a copy of "Daily Food," $1.10 must be remitted. For every Canadian subscription 12 cents additional must be remitted, and for every foreign subscription 24 cents additional.

All those who subscribe now to the American Messenger for one year at fifty cents will receive the paper until January 1, 1919. New subscribers will thus receive both the Thanksgiving and Christmas numbers for 1917 free of cost, if they subscribe at once. They will also be entitled to receive a copy of the book entitled, "Daily Food for Christians," upon the payment of only ten cents additional.

AMERICAN MESSENGER
Park Ave. and 40th St., New York

A SPLENDID COMBINATION OFFER

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER
and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Two of the Most Popular Religious
Publications in America for only a year to any part of the United States or Its Possessions.

$2.25

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER
AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY
RELIGIOUS MONTHLY

Regular Subscription Price
50 Cents a Year

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED NEWS
WEEKLY FOR THE HOME

Regular Subscription Price
$2.00 a Year

Please note that this Special Offer applies only to subscriptions in the United States and its possessions. On Foreign subscriptions $1.24 extra must be added for postage, making a total of $3.49.

If a copy of the beautiful little year book entitled "Daily Food," is desired, ten cents additional must be added.
Please send all combination subscriptions to the

AMERICAN MESSENGER
Park Ave. and 40th St., New York

Topics for the Week of Prayer

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 30, 1917
TOPIC FOR SERMONS
"The Eternal Things."—Dan. 4:3; II Cor. 4:18; Heb. 11:10; 12:27.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 31, 1917
THANKSGIVING AND CONFES-
SION

THANKSGIVING—For the mercies of the year.
CONFESSIO—That Christian witness, even at its best, so little reflects the mind of Christ.

PRAYER—That the followers of Christ, speaking the Truth in love, may make no compromise with evil. That the number of those who look for His glorious appearing may be increased.

SCRIPTURE READINGS: Acts 17: 24-28; Mat. 11:28-30; I Pet. 2:21-25; I John 2:3-6; I Thes. 5:22.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 1, 1918
THE CHURCH UNIVERSAL

THANKSGIVING—For the body of Christian witness throughout the ages.

CONFESSIO—That when the Church has failed, the cause is not in her Lord, but in herself.

PETITIONS—That 1918 may witness new advances towards Christian Unity. That the primary duty of the Church to evangelize may be given its true place.

SCRIPTURE READINGS. Eph. 2: 13-22; Heb. 11:32-12:2; Eph. 4:10-16.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 2, 1918
NATIONS AND THEIR RULERS

PRAYER—That the purposes of God in Christ may be sought and known among the nations. That in the development of their national ideals, the nations may find Christ. That efforts for the establishment of lasting peace among the nations may be divinely guided.

SCRIPTURE READINGS—Prov. 14:34; 21:1; I Peter 4:19; II Peter 3:9; John 12:20-32; Isa. 2:2-4; I Cor. 4:1-5.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 3, 1918
FAMILIES, SCHOOLS, COLLEGES AND THE YOUNG

THANKSGIVING—For the blessing attached to family life. For the comfort and assurance of a blessed immortality in bereavements.

PETITIONS—That the privileges and responsibilities of parenthood may be gladly accepted. That in households, family worship, and "the nurture and admonition of the Lord" may have first place. That in their readings, amusements, and companionship, the young may be kept unspotted from the world. For blessing on all teachers.

SCRIPTURE READINGS—Ps. 127; II Cor. 1:4; I Cor. 15:54-57; Mat. 28: 1-6; Prov. 1:7; 9:10-12.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 4, 1918
HOME MISSIONS

PETITION—That the needs of every class in the community may find an echo in the heart of the Church. That Christian sympathy, fair dealing, and mutual respect as between employers and employed may bring men together in mutual regard.

SCRIPTURE READINGS—Mat. 22: 1-10; Prov. 22: 1-2; Jas. 2:1-9.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 5, 1918
MISSIONS AMONG MOSLEMS AND HEATHEN

THANKSGIVING—That even a world-wide war cannot delay the wheels of His chariot. That the Churches in the Mission Field are frankly assuming their responsibilities.

PRAYER For Churches and Missions suffering through the war. That the heritage of the Church may be enriched by the faith and fresh experience of the young churches. That amid the necessary modifications of form and method, the Lord's messengers may hold fast eternal Truth.

SCRIPTURE READINGS. Dan. 2: 34, 35, 45; 4:1-3; Isa. 40:1-8; Mat. 2: 1-11; Eph. 4:1-6.

Copies of the four-page pamphlet containing these topics together with the Call to the Churches issued by the Evangelical Alliance may be secured at $1.00 per hundred from the Federal Council of Churches, No. 105 East 22d Street, New York, N. Y.

OUR BOOK PRICES NOT INCREASING TO BE CONVINCED—read this advertisement

Notwithstanding the fact that the Publishers, owing to increased cost of material used in making books, have raised their prices from 15% to 25%, we are able to offer our customers some extraordinary values in books bought by us in large quantities at prices far below the actual cost to produce.

A glance at this list of unusual titles by well known authors will prove this statement beyond contradiction. All prices include delivery charges to you.

It will pay you to buy NOW and to buy LIBERALLY while prices are SO GREATLY REDUCED.

Send for our CATALOGUE of BOOK BARGAINS. It will mean a big saving to you in your Book Purchases.

NOTE OUR BIG REDUCTIONS

Every book new and guaranteed perfect. For reference—this magazine.

Table with 4 columns: Author, Title, Regular Price, Our Postp'd Price. Lists various books such as 'The Atonement', 'The Divine Artist', 'The Hope of the Gospel', etc., with their respective prices.

VERY SPECIAL To any reader of this magazine who will order any five books from the above list, we will send FREE a new copy of FEAR GOD, AND TAKE YOUR OWN PART, by Theodore Roosevelt—a book formerly published at $1.50, and one of the best books published in years.

THE WESTMINSTER PRESS, Dept. A.M.

509 SO. WABASH AVE.

CHICAGO DEPOSITORY, W. P. BLESSING, Manager

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

American Tract Society

THIS SOCIETY was organized in 1825. Its work is interdenominational and international in scope, and is commended by all evangelical denominations.

It has published the Gospel messages in 178 languages, dialects and characters. It has been the pioneer for work among the foreign-speaking people in our country, and its missionary colporters are distributing Christian literature in many languages among our foreign-speaking population and making a home-to-home visitation among the spiritually destitute, both in the cities and rural districts, leaving all kinds of Christian literature, also the Bible or portions of the Scriptures.

Its publication of leaflets, volumes and periodicals from the Home Office total 797,704,700 copies. It has made foreign cash appropriations to the amount of $802,966.39, and grants of electrotypes to the value of $61,177.96, by means of which millions of copies of books and tracts have been published at mission stations abroad.

The gratuitous distribution of the past year is to the value of $18,461.65. The grand total of its gratuitous distribution has been to the value of $2,652,967.54, which is the equivalent of 5,305,935,080 tract pages.

The total number of family visits that have been made by the Society's colporters during the last year is 199,963; the total number of volumes distributed by sale or grant is 55,712, making the total number of volumes that have been circulated by colporters in the last seventy-six years 17,438,166, and the total number of family visits that they have made during the same period 18,812,806.

A large distribution of Christian literature is being made among the soldiers and sailors, and the Society aims to furnish the Patriot Library to every Cantonment in the Army and to every battleship and cruiser in the Navy.

The Society is making very special effort in behalf of Latin America, having entered upon the publication of a One-volume Bible commentary in Spanish, a long-needed and earnestly prayed-for publication, and several other important volumes in both Spanish and Portuguese. Its total publications for Latin America now reach 16,012,088 copies. Its work, ever widening, is dependent upon donations and legacies, and greatly needs increased offerings.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, PRESIDENT.
EDMON SWIFT, D. D., General Secretary.
Remittances should be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

What 15c Will You Bring from the Nation's Capital

Washington, the home of the Pathfinder, is the nerve-center of civilization; history is being made at this world capital. The Pathfinder's illustrated weekly review gives you a clear, impartial and correct diagnosis of public affairs during these strenuous, epoch-making days.

HALF ON THE BEACH
ATLANTIC CITY
ALWAYS OPEN
THE LEEDS COMPANY

OUR YOUNG FOLKS

A Joyful Christmas

BY Z. I. DAVIS

*The silver bells are ringing,
And the sky is all aglow,
For a wondrous light is shining
From the Star of long ago.*

*The joyful music echoes
In homes of love and mirth,
A great and holy gladness
Descends o'er all the earth.*

*The little children carol
The story o'er again,
Of the Infant in the Manger,
And peace, good will to men.*

*They carol of the Shepherds
To whom that gladsome night
A choir of Heaven's angels
Appeared in shining light.*

*The silver bells are ringing
On this glad Christmas morn,
And all the world rejoices
That Christ, the Lord, is born.*

The Little House In the Snow

BY KATHLEEN HAY

IT was snowing in great white flakes, that fell slowly down through the air at first, and then faster and faster until Eric could see only a short distance in front. Although he had always lived in a land of snow, and therefore was quite accustomed to the world being covered with a soft carpet of white—still he was lost for the first time in all of his seven years. The white snow flakes fell softly around him, and Eric paused and drew his fur collar still higher around his neck. "If it wasn't getting so late," he said aloud, looking around, "I think I might find my way home."

But the snow fell faster and faster and little Eric walked on—and on—and on—all the time getting farther away from home.

After a while, however, the storm abated and he saw in front of him a great clump of fir trees—beautiful trees with green showing here and there through the snow-laden branches. As he went nearer there came into view a small red-topped house, set down in the midst of the thicket.

"My, what a beautiful place!" Eric thought. The fir trees grew up to the very door of the cottage and their white branches reached far out over the red roof.

"It looks like a great Christmas tree, all ready for the candles to be lit!" There was a little noise and then someone spoke out loud.

"The stars will be the candles and soon begin to shine now—but where did you come from, little lad?"

Eric looked around quickly at the sound of the voice.

"I am lost," he answered, looking up into the kindly face, "the snow fell so fast and thick that I couldn't find the way back home, and I've been walking for a long time."

"Poor little chap," the other said, "you must be cold and hungry—come."

They walked on together through the fir trees until they came up to the front door and then the old man paused.

"See," he said, "you will find welcome there in the little house in the snow, which bears the name of Welcome Cottage."

The door opened and they passed on in. Eric could hardly keep from clapping his hands. There was warmth and love shining inside and the face of a tiny old lady was as bright as the room itself.

"Come in, my child, and welcome too," she began cheerily, "and soon we'll have you warm and cozy." Eric felt himself placed in a great armchair, while the fire blazed up and a feeling of delicious warmth stole over him. All the time the tiny old lady beamed down at him happily.

"We'll get you back home safe and well and almost before they have time to miss you," she said reassuringly, "and in the meantime we want you to be happy in Welcome Cottage."

"I couldn't help being welcome here," Eric said, looking around slowly and then back into the two pleased faces. Directly his eyes fell upon the prettiest little green tree growing in one corner of the room. Several candles burned brightly among the branches and cast a soft glow over the green.

"Oh," gasped Eric, clasping his hands together, "it looks like a beautiful Christmas tree!"

"It is our gift tree," the little old lady answered, "because always it holds somewhere among its branches a gift

She bundled him up quickly, and then stooped and left a kiss on his brow.

"May I come again?" Eric asked eagerly, looking up into the gentle face near him.

"Indeed you must come to us as often as possible—the little house will bid you welcome always."

The door opened and the light shone out far across the snow-white world. Outside the sleigh was awaiting him.

"Won't you come too?" Eric asked, but she gently shook her head and smiled after them as they moved off. He turned to catch the last sight of her. The lights shone brightly out from the little house with its snow-topped roof, and the stars twinkled protectingly above it.

"I'll come again," cried Eric happily, as the bells jingled out merrily once more. Then through the open doorway the gift tree seemed to wave its branches in answer to him, as the sleigh bore them over the deep snow and away out of sight.

A SKATING PARTY

for someone—yours is hanging there now."

She unfastened a bright ball from the small fir tree and passed it over to Eric.

"Our little green gift tree never fails us," she said with a tender smile, looking back toward the shining branches, almost as if she expected it to understand, Eric thought.

And then he leaned back in the old armchair and because he was so comfortable and warm he fell asleep. Eric dreamed that the gift tree beckoned one of its green branches towards him as if calling him to the corner where it grew. It waved back and forth several times before he got up because he felt so strange to think that a tree was calling to him. Eric went close up to the shining branches and they seemed to smile down on him too.

"There is always love and gladness here," whispered the small green tree, "and I wanted to bid you welcome too to the little house in the snow." And then there seemed to steal out from the waving branches, the softest, sweetest music that Eric had ever heard. He stretched out his arms to the small green tree, as if he would catch and hold the beautiful sound when suddenly—he opened his eyes. The tinkling of sleigh bells was filling the room and the little old lady stood beside his chair holding his coat and cap.

"If you're quite warm and rested now, we'll have you at home in a hurry, and you will forget the long miles that you came."

Her Inexhaustible Riches

BY DAISY D. STEPHENSON.

"WHAT has happened, Clare?" inquired her friend Margaret, stopping in on her way to work. "The last time I saw you, you looked as glum and gloomy as Pussy there in a mud puddle. You were seething with bitterness against all editors in general—and the ones who scorned your stories, in particular. Explain the magic."

Clare laughed merrily.

"I did feel abused," she confessed, "but I took a wonderful tonic. I went to call on 'Aunt Lucy' Marshall last evening."

"You mean that poor invalid on Ash Street? The one I see out in a wheel chair sometimes?"

"Oh, but she isn't poor!" cried Clare quickly. "She is so rich in qualities in which most of us are poor, that I have come to depend on her when my reserve fund runs low."

Margaret's eyes questioned her friend, who went on brightly:

"You will understand when you know her, and I intend that shall be soon, for your sake and hers. She welcomes a new friend as a source of interest and a cause for thanksgiving. In short, 'Aunt Lucy's' admirers consider her an inexhaustible store-house of cheer and courage. She will never put her feet to the floor again, but you would never guess she ever thought of her great trouble. She is like the old philosopher who said:

"Be as the bird that chancing to alight,
Upon a bough too slight,
Feels it give way beneath her—yet sings—
Knowing that she hath wings."

"I shall count on knowing her," sighed Margaret, who had her hands full in the effort to make a living for herself and two younger sisters.

"Yesterday," Clare went on thoughtfully, "I felt that persistence and honest effort had no reward here below, and that I might as well give up my ambitions and be somebody's second maid! But today the world looks rosy."

"What did Aunt Lucy do and say to have wrought this miracle?" asked Margaret eagerly.

"Nothing about my work. When I went to her she was enjoying a wonderful sunset which I had failed to notice. A friend had sent her some post-cards from the Grand Canyon and the San Diego Exposition, which set me to chattering and describing them as I saw them.

"Oh!" she exclaimed, with sparkling eyes, "I should think you could be happy the rest of your life to remember those experiences!"

"Then her new neighbor has a fine Victrola—and instead of being nervous on account of the noise, Aunt Lucy was so excited because she had heard Caruso, McCormack, and Elman that day. 'I can sit right by my window and attend concerts now!' she said with delight.

"About that time her niece telephoned that she had passed her bugaboo teachers' examination successfully, and really, you'd have thought Aunt Lucy had fallen heir to at least ten thousand!"

Margaret nodded understandingly. "She gets joy from daily trifles," she murmured.

"Yes, such countless little avenues of happiness seem to run right into Aunt Lucy's heart. A cardinal that nests in the maple near her window; the baby across the way—it is learning to walk and throws kisses to Aunt Lucy. The fact that the Smiths are out of debt now, or that the Joneses' have a new car. You can see why I decided I had no cause for complaint whatever and am going to work so hopefully and philosophically."

Margaret smiled brightly as she started away.

"I mustn't be late to work," she explained. "I feel like conquering half a dozen worlds today."

A Legendary Maid

Cinderella really lived, we are told by historians. Her real name was Rhodope, and she was a beautiful Egyptian maiden, who lived six hundred and seventy years before the Christian era and during the reign of Psammeticus, one of the kings of Egypt. One day Rhodope ventured to go in bathing in a clear stream near her home, and meanwhile left her shoes, which must have been unusually small, lying on the bank. An eagle, passing above, chanced to catch sight of the little sandals, and mistaking them for a toothsome titbit, pounced down and carried one off in his beak. The bird then unwittingly played the part of fairy godmother, for, flying directly over Memphis, where King Psammeticus was dispensing justice, it let the shoe fall right into the king's lap. Its size, beauty, and daintiness immediately attracted the royal eye, and the king, determined upon knowing the wearer of so cunning a shoe sent throughout all his kingdom in search of the foot that would fit it. As in the story of Cinderella, the messengers finally discovered Rhodope, fitted on the shoe, and carried her in triumph to Memphis, where she became the queen of King Psammeticus, and the foundation of a fairy tale that was to delight boys and girls twenty-five hundred years later.

Our Fireside

Harriet Boswell's Christmas

By Hilda Richmond

NO, I don't want your money! I want you!" said Mrs. Norman, wearily waving aside the bank bill which Harriet Boswell offered her. "This is going to be a hard winter, and we want to make sure that each and every poor child has a real Christmas. We will send out baskets of provisions, of course, but we want a number of young ladies to look after individual families and see that they get suitable things for Christmas. I have given you Ruth Fisher and John Gross as your helpers. Now, Harriet, I know it's four weeks until Christmas but it's none too soon to get to work."

"But, Mrs. Norman, you don't know how busy I am," said Harriet. "I must help with Betty Nelson's shower, and finish my Christmas gifts—well, I'm overwhelmed with tasks. I'm sorry for the poor, but you'd better find somebody else."

"But I can't," said Mrs. Norman, rising. "I've tried two dozen people this morning. If you can't do it, Harriet, the Slimmons family will have to go without any Christmas except the customary basket. I must hurry on, as it is long past time for the meeting I must attend. Goodbye!"

"Wait a minute!" called Harriet. "I'll do what I can. I truly will. You'll think I'm hard-hearted but I'm not. I simply am not the person to do such things."

Mrs. Norman feared even when Harriet promised, that she would do nothing—in fact she had only asked Harriet after a number of more reliable persons had declined the task. However she gave the girl all the necessary instructions and then hurried on to the next place. As in every other town Norwood was poorly supplied with people who would do personal work among the poor. A pathetic appeal in the local paper would bring forth a donation of orders for coal and groceries, new and old clothing and money, but it never brought forth a sufficient number of volunteer workers to see that the gifts were properly and judiciously handled.

"Well, about the twentieth of December will be time enough to hunt up the Slimmons family and notify my committee," said Harriet nonchalantly to herself. "I'll get the names and ages of the children and we'll buy them some toys and candy. I'll get Belle and Helen to look through their things for some materials for doll clothes, and I'll make George hunt up some of his old neckties if there are any boys. Poor people must not expect to get a great many presents on Christmas."

Exactly as Mrs. Norman had feared, by the time that the twentieth of December had arrived, Harriet had forgotten all about the poor people left to her care. Mrs. Norman would have reminded her of the task, but that lady was sick in bed under the care of a trained nurse and was ordered to forget both rich and poor alike until she recovered. Harriet went serenely on with her pleasures and her daily tasks, and two days before the twenty-fifth of December she had no more idea of the number of children in the Slimmons family and their ages and needs than she had of the people of darkest Africa. She went happily off to sing at a concert in Westville, partly to oblige the people who were giving the concert and partly because her best friend, Helen Parker, was to sing there, and the two girls could be together an entire day, which seldom happened because Helen was a business girl with few holidays.

"Well, I think I have everything ready for Christmas," sighed Harriet happily as she started for home the afternoon of December twenty-fourth. "This concert was really a blessing in disguise as it made me wrap and mark and send every single gift in time for once. I feel so free and easy I don't know what to do. I'm going to put on my kimono this evening and toast my feet before the fire luxuriously. I think after this I'll always be forehanded."

A sudden jerk threw her off the car seat and when she picked herself up the male passengers were rushing out to see what was wrong. "Narrow escape!" cried an excited man running back to tell the news. "Bridge washed out by the flood and a small boy signalled our train in the nick of time."

The passengers walked back to the little village a few rods from the foaming river and the inhabitants received them with open arms. It was storming furiously, the rain of a few hours before having given way to a blinding snow blizzard, and shelter of any sort was very welcome. Harriet found herself in the center of an excited, sympathetic group of bobbing heads while a kindly young woman, on the edge of the group of children, all talking at once, was handing her a cup of hot tea over their heads, and trying with one hand to draw back some of the children.

"Only five of them are mine," she explained with a cheery laugh when order had been restored. "The rest are visitors. During the Christmas preparations we mothers take turns keeping the flocks and it's my turn to-day. You just make yourself at home and get good and warm. It will be some time before that train can move on account of the storm everywhere."

"But I don't want to be thrust upon you in this fashion," said Harriet. "It is too bad to have company the day before Christmas. Isn't there some place—a hotel—where I could be less in the way?"

"Our little town doesn't boast a hotel," said the young matron. "You must not think of bother. We are glad to have you. You may help me in the kitchen with the Christmas cakes, as it is less noisy out there." She could see that her guest was not used to children so she made that way of escape for her. "I am baking a little cake for old Mrs. Terry," she explained, "and some cup cakes for the little Bliss children. You may ice the cup cakes and pack the basket if you like."

"What cunning things!" exclaimed Harriet, looking over the array of homemade dolls, mittens, stuffed animals and

(Continued on next page)

Oxford Bibles

For S. S. Teachers

With the most accurate, up-to-date and comprehensive helps, arranged in one alphabetical order like a dictionary. From $1.65 up.

For Children

With beautiful illustrations, black and colored, and a number of styles with specially selected helps. From 70c up.

For Older Folks

With extra large, clear type, some printed on "Oxford India Paper"—easy to read, easy to hold. From $1.50 up.

At all Booksellers. Send for catalogue

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS AMERICAN BRANCH
35 West 32nd Street, - - - New York

Sunday School Libraries

The American Tract Society publishes many books for Sunday School Libraries

New Catalogue sent on request.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY
Park Ave. and 40th St., New York

BOOKS WITH PURPOSE

Published by Association Press

ASSOCIATION PRESS

is the Publication Department of the International Committee of Young Men's Christian Associations

SHERWOOD EDDY'S New Book
"With Our Soldiers in France"
(Cloth, $1.00.)

Sherwood Eddy has just returned from the front. He has been with the American forces in camp, on the road, and in the training-school for the trenches. In this book he pictures the surroundings in which our boys in France are to live, the physical and moral dangers they will have to face, and the efforts of the Young Men's Christian Association to help them endure the terrible strain of the great conflict.

For France and the Faith
By Alfred Eugene Casalis
Translated by W. E. Bristol, (Paper Boards, 60 cents.)

Fragments of letters written from barrack rooms and the front by a young French soldier. These letters of unusual charm reflect the spirit of the consecrated youth of France, the courage, patriotism, and large vision of duty which a soldier of Jesus Christ owes his country as well as his God.

FOSDICK'S NEW BOOK
The Challenge of the Present Crisis
By Harry Emerson Fosdick
(Paper boards, 50 cents.)

The author of "The Meaning of Prayer" and "The Manhood of the Master" again shows his remarkable skill for summing up what men are thinking about. The challenge of the present crisis is recognized in all its enormous seriousness—yet the message of the book is one of stirring optimism.

Moffatt's New Translation of the New Testament

(Art leather, pocket size, $1.00. India paper, $1.50. Pigskin, India paper, pocket size, $3.00.)

This masterly work is generally recognized as the most vigorous and enlightening translation of the New Testament into modern language. This translation has a "freshness and virility" that appeals to every reader.

Everyday Life Books

(Thin paper, round corners, pocket size, 60 cents each.)

Stimulating and most helpful companion books—meeting the needs of men in their every day life in a strong, vigorous inspiring way—

The Manhood of the Master
By HARRY EMERSON FOSDICK

The Meaning of Prayer
By HARRY EMERSON FOSDICK

Meeting the Master
By OZORA S. DAVIS

Under the Highest Leadership
By JOHN DOUGLAS ADAM

Palms of the Social Life
By CLELAND B. McAFEE

The Many Sided David
By PHILIP E. HOWARD

The Christian According to Paul
By JOHN T. PARIS and many others.

ASSOCIATION PRESS
124 EAST 28th ST., NEW YORK

The Composition of Coca-Cola and its Relation to Tea

Prompted by the desire that the public shall be thoroughly informed as to the composition and dietetic character of Coca-Cola, the Company has issued a booklet giving a detailed analysis of its recipe which is as follows:

Water, sterilized by boiling (carbonated); sugar, granulated, first quality; fruit flavoring extracts with caramel; acid flavorings, citric (lemon) and phosphoric; essence of tea—the refreshing principle.

The following analysis, by the late Dr. John W. Mallet, Fellow of the Royal Society and for nearly forty years Professor of Chemistry in the University of Virginia, shows the comparative stimulating or refreshing strength of tea and Coca-Cola, measured in terms of the refreshing principle:

Black tea—1 cupful	1.54
(hot) (5 fl. oz.)
Green tea—1 glassful	2.02
(cold) (8 fl. oz. exclusive of ice)
Coca-Cola—1 drink, 8 fl. oz.	1.21
(fountain) (prepared with 1 fl. oz. Syrup)
Coca-Cola—1 drink, 8 fl. oz.	1.12
(bottlers) (prepared with 1 fl. oz. Syrup)

From the above recipe and analysis, which are confirmed by all chemists who have analyzed these beverages, it is apparent that Coca-Cola is a carbonated, fruit-flavored modification of tea of a little more than one-half its stimulating strength.

A copy of the booklet referred to above will be mailed free on request, and The Coca-Cola Company especially invites inquiry from those who are interested in pure food and public health propaganda. Address

The Coca-Cola Co., Dept. J., Atlanta, Ga., U. S. A.

Harriet Boswell's Christmas

(Continued from page 188)

little useful things her hostess brought out as soon as the kitchen door was safely shut. "How dear!"

"The little Bliss children never get much, so they will think them wonderful and fine," said the lady. "Some people give such unsuitable gifts at holiday time. I can't do much but I can take Mrs. Terry and the little Bliss children under my wing at Christmas and see that they get things they will enjoy."

"They will surely get pleasure out of these things," said Harriet. "Oh, dear me! I wonder if the long-distance telephone is too busy for a message. After I sent a telegram to my mother I thought I had done my whole duty. I must get to that telephone at once."

"It is storming too hard now," said the lady. "You had better wait."

But Harriet made her way to the office and waited her turn in the line for the privilege of sending a message. When she finally had her turn she was quick and decisive in her words. "Ruth? Ruth Fisher? Is it you? I want you to go right out and buy some toys for the Slimmons family—Slimmons! Slimmons! S-L-L-M-M-O-N-S! Can't you hear? Slimmons—Maple Alley. Oh, dear! Slimmons! I'm stranded in a little village and won't get home until tomorrow noon, if I get there then. Try to hear, Ruth. Slimmons! They won't have a thing unless you get there."

The young lady at the other end of the wire made every effort to hear, but the howling of the storm and the fact that damaged wires made roundabout connections necessary militated against them. In despair, Harriet tried to call John Gross, but the impatient travelers behind her entered a vigorous protest.

"You've held the line fifteen minutes, madam!" said a prosperous-looking man behind her, "and it's time to let some of the rest of us have a turn. I have a sick wife at home and am anxious that no news of the bridge going out shall reach her before I get a chance to tell that I'm all right."

So Harriet went back, sad at heart, but she did not forget another errand. She stopped at the only general store in the village and loaded herself with toys and candy, and then battled the storm back to the cottage. Mrs. Sloan drove the eager children into the sitting room with flapping skirts, like a motherly hen, and then bribed them with a box of candy to keep out of the way until she and Harriet could sort out the things and pack them up.

"It's an ill wind that blows nobody good," she quoted happily. "I'm sorry you're delayed just at Christmas, but a number of poor children will have their first Christmas. You see, the miners are so numerous and they have such big families that it's hard to provide for them all. We have a regular little settlement of foreigners about a quarter of a mile back from the village in the hills. My! Won't they be happy when they see these things?"

Yielding to the earnest solicitation of the Sloan children, Harriet hung up a long stocking which she bought at the village store on purpose for Santa Claus to fill. She had the hope of getting home by noon next day and that thought sustained her, but when she thought of the Slimmons children—she took it for granted that there were children—who would wake next morning with no gifts because she had been selfish enough to forget them, she shed many and bitter tears. At dusk the storm suddenly ceased, but it was bitter cold, and she and Mrs. Sloan busied themselves putting the last touches to the children's gifts and decorating the little tree which had been hidden until bedtime in the wood house. For the sake of her kindly hostess and host she tried to be brave, but the remorse of neglected duties kept her heart heavy.

"Now you look the other way and I'll fill your stocking," said Mrs. Sloan when the tasks were about done. "The gifts are trifling, but the children will be happy if they know that Santa Claus has not forgotten you."

A loud knocking at the door made them scurry to silence the people outside lest the children should waken. "It's about that young woman you've got here," said the muffled man at the door. "Some of the town folks are making up a load to drive to Bakersville and I want to know if she wants to go, too. They can catch the nine o'clock express and be in town by nine-thirty. It's three dollars apiece, owing to the roads and all. We've got to take two men and a team along to break the road."

"I don't care if it's ten dollars!" cried Harriet, recklessly. "I'm ready now. Hurry! Hurry!"

She plunged into her wraps and thankfully piled into the big sled along with a number of other elated passengers. "Here's your stocking!" cried Mr. Sloan, running alongside to fling in the knobby black stocking his wife had torn from the little mantel. "The kids would be awfully disappointed if you didn't get it. Goodbye! Merry Christmas! Goodbye!"

Harriet astonished her anxious family by bursting in upon them at ten o'clock that night, and she would not remove her wraps. "Call John Gross and Ruth Fisher, some of you, while I get my breath," she begged. "I'm so happy to be home in time to get the Slimmons family some Christmas gifts that I don't know what to do. Every one of you give me some contributions. I'm going straight downtown to attend to them."

This somewhat mixed-up sentence seemed to electrify the family. "I forgot all about the poor family I promised to look after!" said Belle, while George whistled long and loudly as he recalled the fact that he was on the committee with Lucille West to look after another family and nothing had been done about it.

"Won't to-morrow do?" asked easy-going Mr. Boswell, from his armchair, "I don't see the use in being so excited about a little thing like that. The poor people will get their baskets early in the morning and perhaps that is all they are expecting."

"Oh, papa! Don't say that!" cried Harriet, rushing to throw her arms around his neck. "When I felt sure that I would be away this one Christmas eve my hear was almost broken! And to think of those poor little children who never have anything. I'm so sorry and so ashamed of myself."

"Well! Well!" said Mr. Boswell, patting his daughter's head. "If you feel that way about it I'll go along and lend a hand. Come on, Mamma! I think we have all been a trifle careless about poor people. If you have no money, charge the things to me and I'll settle the day after Christmas."

"Here's something all ready to hang!" said George Boswell, flourishing the long stocking Mrs. Sloan had stuffed with gifts only a few hours before. "Just look at the presents."

Harriet gathered up the plump tomato pin cushion, the cheap handkerchief, the childish bottle of perfume, the big oranges and the cakes wrapped in tissue paper that her brother had awkwardly upset and replaced them in the stocking. "I'm going to play I didn't see a thing until morning," she said. "Santa Claus left that for me at the Sloan house. Come on, every one of you, or the stores will be closed."

Not only the Slimmons family was remembered that night, but many others, for the Boswells and the members of their committees took time to spur up other friends and relatives as they went around buying gifts that night. It was near midnight when they trooped home, tired and footsore, but happier than they had ever been in their lives. As they passed the Norman home they saw Mr. Norman sitting wearily at the window, watching the people hurry past, and Harriet had a sudden inspiration.

"How is Mrs. Norman?" she asked, running lightly up the steps and tapping at the door. "We saw you sitting there and wanted to know."

"Not a bit well!" he said, despondently. "She's worrying about 'her poor people,' as she calls them. I tried to send some gifts but the winter has been hard and I've had to stay here so closely that many of them will be forgotten. If we could only make her forget their sufferings in some way she would soon be well."

"You tell her for me that I don't believe there will be a single poor person forgotten this time," said the girl impulsively. "I wish I could see her myself. Oh, may I run up to her room for just one moment? I'm so glad."

With eyes like stars, she burst into the sick room noiselessly, and said: "Oh, Mrs. Norman, we were late about doing it, and I'm sorry, but there are forty families that we know of going to get splendid things to-morrow. You must hurry and get well so you can hear all about it. And here's your Christmas gift. We're all going to lend a hand and not forget again. Honest we are! Good night, and Merry Christmas!"

Mrs. Norman put out a feeble hand to detain the girl, but she was gone. "I don't think I'll need anything to make me sleep to-night," she said happily to the nurse. "I'm going to get well now. Merry Christmas!"

Your Boy—Your Brother Your Friend Will Soon Be in the Training Camps of Europe

Professor Sellers and his son Rodney who is now serving in France.

Prof. E. O. Sellers, a member of the faculty of the Moody Bible Institute, was one of the six men invited by the British National Council of the Y. M. C. A. to make a tour of the training camps in France and England. He spent several months in those two countries, doing evangelistic work and taking part in the activities of the Y. M. C. A. He was also in London during an air raid. He tells a great story of his experiences and also of the wonderful work being done among the soldiers and prisoners of war by the Y. M. C. A., which is an inspiration in itself. Being an able writer, Prof. Sellers knows how to tell what he has seen and describes in a vivid manner the conditions into which our chaps are going. The story of his experiences will be told in a series of articles to appear exclusively in the Christian Workers' Magazine, so that every one may quickly become familiar with the Christian work that is being done among the soldiers in Europe.

There also appears in The Christian Workers Magazine illustrated articles by Mrs. Ralph C. Norton on "Work Among the Belgian Soldiers," and Mrs. Ada Wallace Unruh on "The Soldiers and Moral Restraints." Beginning in December will be another collection of touching articles from the pen of F. C. Hoggarth of Huddlesfield, England, entitled "Short Studies on War Incidents."

Dr. James M. Gray writes regularly for The Christian Workers Magazine. He is known the world over as one of the leading writers on prophecy, and during the next year his articles will be of unusual importance to Christian people.

God's Call to the Christian in Regard to the War

What is the Christian's duty in the world war? Why are wars dreaded and hated as they are? Is God the author of war? Is war a consequence of sin? Is war a divine punishment for sin? What about the Christian who has conscientious scruples concerning war? These questions are clearly answered in a recent lecture entitled—

Dr. James M. Gray

"What The Bible Teaches About War"

AND THE CHRISTIAN'S ATTITUDE IN THE PRESENT CRISIS
By Dr. James M. Gray, Editor of The Christian Workers Magazine

THE CHRISTIAN WORKERS MAGAZINE

The Leading Independent Religious Monthly

Dr. James M. Gray, Editor

In each issue appear articles by Dr. Gray on one or more subjects; also many strong helpful articles by leading religious writers. All these valuable contributions appear in addition to the regular departments.

In November, Now Ready:

- "The Great Thanksgiving Psalm" Rev. J. H. Jowett, D. D.
- "The Overcoming Life" Rev. A. B. Winchester
- "Our Lord Jesus Christ in the Epistle to the Hebrews" Rev. Harris H. Gregg, D. D.
- "Work Among the Belgian Soldiers" Mrs. Ralph C. Norton
- "The Soldiers and Moral Restraints" Mrs. Ada Wallace Unruh

Seven Interesting Departments

The Sunday School Department—Contains the explanation of the Sunday School lessons.
Young People's Society Topics—Rich in suggestions for meetings.
Practical and perplexing Questions—Answered for readers that are troubled by difficult questions on the Bible.
For Sermon and Scrap Book—Full of good stories and illustrations.
Foreign Missions Department—News and letters from the field and timely articles on present conditions.
The Evangelistic Field—News of the work of evangelists.
Book Notices—Carefully edited to warn against false teaching.

In response to many inquiries received by Dr. Gray regarding these questions, this lecture is an attempt to answer these numerous inquiries as to the Christian's relation to war in the light of prophecy. Thousands of people have anxiously waited for this lecture, which is now published in booklet form and will be sent free to all that send in the coupon; also we will send you free booklet containing the remarkable lecture

THE BATTLE OF ARMAGEDDON

By Dr. James M. Gray

This lecture answers the question regarding the great war and its relation to the battle of Armageddon mentioned in the Book of Revelation; also its relation to the end of the age or the second coming of Christ. Thousands of copies of this lecture have been distributed, and only a limited supply is left.

Write Today—Use the Coupon

Send $1.50 today; and we will enter your year's subscription to The Christian Workers Magazine beginning with the current issue, and we will mail you free both of Dr. Gray's lectures in booklet form. These lectures are very instructive. They set forth the facts regarding the relation of the world war to the Bible prophecy in a clear and conclusive manner. You will find The Christian Workers Magazine worth many times the subscription price. No Christian worker can afford to be without it. Send in your subscription today, sure.

The Christian Workers Magazine

136 Institute Place
Chicago, Illinois

Enclosed find $1.50. Enter my year's subscription to Christian Workers Magazine beginning with the current issue, also send me FREE booklets "What the Bible Teaches About War," and "The Battle of Armageddon," by Dr. Gray.

Name.....

City.....

State.....

The Christian Workers Magazine
136 Institute Place, Chicago, Ill.

REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON, D.D., Pastor
Author of "In His Steps"

LIFE is a story. Your life is. That's why you like a tale that lives. Some tales are written, some are forged upon the anvil of the author's necessities, some grow day by day,—like life. Now and then an author lives the tale he writes. Now and then some rare author is able to weave into his tale the drama, the sorrow, the joy, the struggle, the failure, the success, the doubt, the faith of the life of men, and to weave them skillfully into a story so vivid that, as you read, you see its action filmed upon the screen of your mind.

But only one author of whom we know acts his stories. Charles H. Sheldon does. Every episode of

"HOWARD CHASE"

A New Novel by

Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, D.D.

to appear exclusively in the

CHRISTIAN HERALD

beginning December 12th

has been portrayed by the author before his Sunday evening congregations. Every dramatic climax, every incident has been tried on his sympathetic hearers. They found it good and only when they did was Dr. Sheldon willing to give it to the world. Thus this story lives as few do, for it has been lived and it vibrates with the vital force of real life. It is not wholly fiction. In fact it is largely true and its characters are only faintly camouflaged so that old acquaintances might easily recognize in them the very human folks they once have known. But we aren't going to tell you the story here. We couldn't do it well enough.

Dr. Sheldon's new novel surpasses all of his previous works in thrilling human interest and moral power. It is a story of a big man in a small town.

"Howard Chase" is a church story, but intensely human and deals unsparingly with the follies and foibles of church members in their church, community and domestic lives.

It is a thrilling, inspiring, soul-cleansing story of high motives, rapid action, love, humor and pathos.

There is much that is charming and humorous and intensely human in the whole of this story by the pastor-author.

"Howard Chase" will be published serially in the Christian Herald. It may eventually be published in book form, but subscribers to the Christian Herald will be able to read it without one cent of extra expense. Dr. Sheldon's new story alone is well worth the subscription price of the Christian Herald.

Other Outstanding Features

THE MILLENNIUM—WHAT, WHEN, AND WHERE.
Articles on Prophecy by America's Greatest Expositor, James M. Gray, D.D., Dean of the Moody Bible Institute.

VITAL HUMAN STORIES FROM RUSSIA. By Maynard Owen Williams.

THE GREATER UNITED STATES. By Frank G. Carpenter.

DRAWINGS AND POEMS. By Robert Riggs and Margaret E. Sangster.

WOMEN AND THEIR WAYS, and other articles. By Margaret E. Sangster.

ADVENTURES IN NEIGHBORING. By Vera L. Connolly.

WEEKLY SERMON. By a distinguished pastor.

DAILY MEDITATIONS.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON. By Dr. Allison.

NATIONAL BIBLE PICTURE STUDY.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SOCIETIES.

BEAUTIFUL COVERS. Many in colors.

WEEKLY DOUBLE PAGE OF ILLUSTRATIONS.

REVIEW OF THE NEWS OF THE WEEK.

SPIRITUAL WORK IN THE CAMPS.

INTRODUCTORY 13 WEEKS
SUBSCRIPTION 25c

Subscription, 1 year (52 issues) $2.00
Sample Copy sent on request

CHRISTIAN HERALD, 1279 Bible House, New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen: For the enclosed 25 cents send the Christian Herald for 13 weeks beginning with the December 12th issue, containing the first installment of Dr. Sheldon's story as per your Half Price Introductory Offer to new subscribers.

Name

Address

THE TREASURY

SPECIAL NOTICE

OWING to occasional losses of letters, containing money, we would request friends and donors of the American Tract Society to remit by check or Post Office Money Order, which latter can always be duplicated in case of loss.

Receipts of the American Tract Society During October, 1917

Total Donations (including $646.13 for Special Objects), $1,625.91.

CALIFORNIA, $10.
Mr. Barrett, $10.

COLORADO, $5.
Miss Hall, $5.

CONNECTICUT, $95.50.
Mr. Learned, for Patriot Library, $5; Mr. Proctor, for Patriot Library, $1; Mrs. Richards, $5; Mrs. Welcher, for Patriot Library, $50; "A Friend," $2; South Windsor, Church Collection, $3.50; Miss Packard, $1; Miss Barber, for Patriot Library, $10; Mrs. Hall, for Patriot Library, $2; Miss Lewis, $2; Mr. Wooster, for Patriot Library, $1; Mrs. MacDonald, $1; Mrs. Bixler, for Patriot Library, $5; "A Friend," $1; Mrs. Curtiss, $3; Miss Harris, $1; Miss Harris, $2.

IDAHO, $1.
Mrs. Entee, $1.

ILLINOIS, $5.39.
Eureka, Church Offering, $0.39; Mr. Reinback, $5.

IOWA, $65.25.
Mrs. Roth, $1; Aplington, Church Collection, $6; Miss Shaw, $5; Little Rock, Church Offering, $12.50; George, Church Collection, $18.75; George, Church Offering, $20; Rudd, Church Collection, $2.

KANSAS, $2.
Rev. Mr. Hild, $1; Clinton, Church Offering, $1.

KENTUCKY, $1.
Mr. Spurling, $1.

MAINE, $2.75.
Miss Snow, $0.75; Mr. and Mrs. Dow, $2.

MARYLAND, $3.80.
Mrs. Hopper, $3; Miss Ruckdaeschel, $0.80.

MASSACHUSETTS, $265.91.
Miss Cole, for Patriot Library, $19.25; Mr. Courier, for Patriot Library, $1; Mr. Lewis, for Patriot Library, $1; Mr. Fobes, $10; Mr. McCreary, $1; Miss Rice, for Patriot Library, $1; Miss Miller, for Patriot Library, $5; Miss Baylie, $1; Boston, Church Collection, $50.66; Mrs. Fulcher, $1; Mr. Bailey, $3; Mr. Perry, $10; "A Friend," $1; Mrs. Richmond, $1; Mr. Atherton, for Soldiers Tracts, $10; Mrs. Allen, for Patriot Library, $10; Mr. Fuller, for Patriot Library, $5; Mrs. Noyes, for Patriot Library, $1; Miss Ballard, for Patriot Library, $20; Mr. White, for Patriot Library, $5; Mr. Liffler, for Patriot Library, $25; Mrs. Ripley, for Patriot Library, $15; Mr. Jones, $50; Newburyport, Church Collection, $2; Mr. Ilsley, $1; Mr. Boynton, $1; "A Friend," $2; Mrs. Day, $3; Mrs. Davis, $2; Mr. Woodbury, $1; Mrs. Smith, $1; Mrs. Norton, for Patriot Library, $5; Mrs. Benedict, $1.

MICHIGAN, $3.75.
Alligan, Church Offering, $3.75.

MINNESOTA, $17.23.
St. Paul, Church Collection, $5; Rushmore, Church Offering, $12.23.

MISSOURI, $49.14.
Mr. Bender, $2.75; Parkville, Church Collection, $6.39; Dr. McLean, $5; Mr. Sutherland, $10; St. Louis, Church Offering, $25.

NEBRASKA, $87.33.
Hastings, Church Collection, $5; Mr. Steen, $15; Holland, Church Offering, $42.33; Dr. Patton, $25.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, $8.
"A Friend," $1; Miss Hatch, $1; Miss Guild, $5; Miss Hadley, $1.

NEW JERSEY, $233.83.
Holmdel, Church Collection, $5.60; Salem, Church Offering, $17.20; Freehold, Church Collection, $2.59; "A Friend," $0.10; Mrs. Doolittle, $10; Mr. Stryker, $5; Mrs. De Mott, $5; Jersey City, Church Offering, $16.66; New Brunswick, Church Collection, $15; Mr. Bartles, $2; Bloomfield, Church Offering, $6.50; Passaic, Church Collection, $12.33; Princeton, Church Offering, $12.69; "A Friend," $0.10; Jersey City, Church Collection, $2.95; Atlantic City, Church Offering, for Patriot Library, $22.50; Miss Calkins, for Patriot Library, $25; Mr. Dean, $3; Mr. Hampson, for Patriot Library, $2; Mr. Horr, for Patriot Library, $25; "A Friend," for Patriot Library, $1; Mrs. Simms, for Patriot Library, $2; Miss Brewster, $4.30.

NEW YORK, $457.61.
Miss Santvoord, $50; Mr. Small, $1; Mr. Jenkins, for Patriot Library, $25; Mr. Stuart, for Patriot Library, $10; Miss Fiske, $3; Mr. Carp, $2.50; Miss Fellows, $1; Miss Hunn, $3; Miss Plenzic, $5; Mrs. Molley, $20; Mrs. Fowler, $1; Walkkill, Church Offering, $12.08; Middletown, Church Collection, $5.84; Brooklyn, Church Offering, $8.08; Mrs. Bush, for Patriot Library, $5; Mr. Parmelee, $10; Mrs. Willard, $2; Mrs. Woodin, for Patriot Library, $1; Miss Van Duzee, $2; Brooklyn, Church Collection, $29.46; Miss Hitchcock, $1; Miss Cole, $1; Mr. Waterburg, $3; Mrs. Lytle, $2; Mrs. Bissell, $1; Mr. Knowlton, $5; Mr. Osborn, for Patriot Library, $5; Miss Van Duzee, for Patriot Library, $2; Mrs. Osborne, for Patriot Library, $5; Mr. Randall, $10; Miss Monroe, including $100 for Patriot Library, $200; Southampton, Church Offering, $24.65; Mrs. Taylor, $1.

OHIO, $48.72.
Cleveland, Church Collection, $25; Miss Fowler, $1; Norwood, Church Offering, $5.20;

Miss Dunlap, $2; Chatfield, Church Collection, $10; Youngstown, Church Offering, $2.15; Mr. Hunt, $2; Mrs. Linn, $1; East Liverpool, Church Collection, $0.37.

OKLAHOMA, $5.45.
Mr. Rankman, $0.45; Mr. Claassen, $5.

OREGON, $7.
Mrs. and Mr. Rieben, $2; Mr. Faunler, $5.

PENNSYLVANIA, $190.18.
Vandergrift, Church Offering, $45; Mrs. Thomas, $5; Mr. Smith, $1; Coraopolis, Church Collection, $8.39; Sunday School, Collection, $0.77; Easton, Church Offering, $7; Mr. Klenk, $0.60; Shippensburg, Church Collection, $3; Mr. Mundy, $1; Mrs. Rogers, for Patriot Library, $50; Miss Eckman, for Patriot Library, $12; Mr. and Mrs. Walp, $2; Steelton, Church Offering, $2; Mrs. Colton, $10; Wilkingsburg, Church Offering, $5.22; Mrs. Boggs, for Patriot Library, $2; A Presby. Banner Reader, for Patriot Library, $3; Franklin, Church Collection, $5.20; Easton, Church Offering, $2; York, Church Collection, $12; Mrs. Robinson, $3; Mr. Hodge, for Patriot Library, $5; Mr. Koch, $5.

RHODE ISLAND, $6.
Miss Rathbun, $5; Mrs. Bucklin, $1.

SOUTH CAROLINA, $1.50.
"A Friend," $0.50; Mr. Prince, (incl. $0.50 for Patriot Library), $1.

SOUTH DAKOTA, $48.57.
Harrison, Church Collection, $4.68; Canton, Church Offering, $37.78; Canton, Church Collection, $6.11.

VERMONT, $1.
"A Friend," $1.

VIRGINIA, $2.
Mrs. Agnew, $2.

FOREIGN, $1.
Canada, Miss Foster, $1.

LEGACIES, $1866.88.
Newark, N. J., Estate of Henrietta D. Crane, on account, $1866.88.

INCOME FROM TRUST FUNDS, $228.75
Income for Missionary work, $228.75

Donations

DONATIONS for the missionary work of the American Tract Society may be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

FIELD SECRETARIES AND COLPORTAGE SUPERINTENDENTS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.

Rev. Isaac Pierson, Field Secretary for New England, 50 Bromfield Street, Boston, Mass.

Rev. A. W. Reinhard, Field Secretary and Superintendent of Colportage for the Western and Northwestern States, 313 Y. M. C. A. Building, Omaha, Nebraska.

Rev. George Whitefort, Superintendent of Colportage, Southern Agency, Crichton, R.F.D., Mobile Co., Ala.

Form of Bequest

I GIVE and bequeath to the "AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY," instituted in the City of New York, May, 1825, the sum of.....dollars to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said Society.

Three witnesses should state that the testator declares this to be his last will and testament, and that they signed at his request, and in his presence and the presence of each other.

Life Members and Directors

THE donation of $30 at one time constitutes a Life Member of the American Tract Society; the addition of $70, or the donation of $100 at one time, constitutes a Life Director. Life members may receive annually copies of the Society's own publications to the value of $1; Life Directors to the value of $2; if applied for within the Society's year, from April 1st to April 1st, in person or by written order.

The Road to Understanding

By ELEANOR H PORTER
"The very best of the many admirable stories by Eleanor H. Porter (author of 'Just David,' 'Pollyanna,' etc.)."
—Christian Endeavor World.
Pictures in color. $1.40 net

All in IT

By MAJOR IAN HAY BEITH
The exploits of "K1" at Ypres and the Somme described with all the vividness, humor and human interest that made "The First Hundred Thousand" the "greatest book of the war." $1.50 net.

Polly and the Princess

By EMMA C. DOWD
Author of "Polly of the Hospital Staff."
These further adventures of Polly are just as happy and enjoyable as "Doodles" and the other "Polly" stories. Illustrated in color by M. L. Kirk. $1.35 net.

A Reversible Santa Claus

By MEREDITH NICHOLSON
A Christmas story of mysterious surprises and joyful holiday spirit, showing the author of "The House of a Thousand Candles" at his best. Illustrated. $1.00 net.

The Plattsburgers

By ARTHUR S. PIER
A vivid and entertaining story of the experiences of some college boys at Plattsburg. Illustrated. $1.25 net.

The Belgian Twins

By LUCY FITCH PERKINS
American children who are giving their pennies to help take care of little Belgian children will find this one of the most interesting of the "Twin" Books. Illustrated. $1.25 net.

Militant America and Jesus Christ

By ABRAHAM M. RIHBANY
This profoundly significant book shows that, so far from being a pacifist, Jesus would have resisted Germany with the sword. 65 cents net.

Holiday Bulletin and circulars of Children's Books FREE on request.
HOUGHTON MIFFLIN CO
4 Park Street Boston

DON'T HALLOWED HYMNS

decide on the new hymn-book for your Church or Sunday School until you have seen
NEW AND OLD
Edited by IRA ALLAN SANKEY
Son of the famous Singing-Evangelist Ira D. Sankey
OVER 550,000 COPIES ALREADY SOLD
Responsive Scripture Readings
No Trashy Words No Jingly Music
Price $25.00 per 100 not prepaid
35 cents per copy by mail
Examine a copy and prove its value in your work. (Returnable if desired.)
The Biglow & Main Co., New York Chicago

APPLES OF GOLD

This is a really ideal weekly paper for use in Primary Departments and Infant Classes in all Sunday Schools. It is finely illustrated, uses large, clear type and is printed in beautiful colored ink. Each week there is a splendid full-page picture, short stories, choice poems and a helpful illustrated treatment of the International Sunday School Lesson. It is issued monthly but is arranged for weekly distribution in four-page parts. Price, single copies, 30 cents; five copies to one address, 25 cents each; ten or more copies, 20 cents each, per year. Postage on Canadian and foreign subscriptions, 6 cents per copy additional. Subscriptions accepted in clubs for 3 months, 6 months or a year.
Simple Copies Sent Free.
AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY
Park Ave. and 40th St., New York.

At the Sign of the Meridian Press

New Publications, Fall 1917 — Books of Quality

THE PROPHETS AND THE WAR

By Charles Carroll Albertson, D.D.

What is to come after the war? This is a volume of prophecy with a real application to the events of today and tomorrow. A great message and lesson are still to be gained in this world war from Hosea, Habakkuk and Isaiah. Dr. Albertson in his "Prophets and the War" has shown what is happening and what will happen after the war. With the interest lately shown in prophecy, it is a very important book.

12mo Cloth 80 pages Jacketed Price, net $1.00.

THE HIGH ROAD

By Emma S. Allen, author of "The Awakening of the Hartwells"
With original drawings

A remarkable story of Prohibition. A group of young people cast themselves into the vortex of a State Prohibition Campaign. Both sides work vigorously for their respective causes. How one "took the High Road" and one "took the Low Road" and met after long deviations, not on the shores of "bonnie Loch Lomond," but on the shores of San Francisco Bay, is delightfully narrated by this Western authoress.

12mo Cloth 326 pages Jacket in 2 colors Price, net $1.35

AS HIS MOTHER SAW HIM

By Charlotte E. Gray

A really beautiful picture of the home at Nazareth, the girl Mary, the exultant woman Mary, and the Mary bowed with grief. The relation of Mary and Jesus is most delicately and tactfully defined. The story will help young people as well as their elders to a clearer perception of the life of our Saviour.

16mo Half cloth 254 pages Jacketed Price, net $1.00

ANNA COOPE: SKY PILOT OF THE SAN BLAS INDIANS

An Autobiography. With map and illustrations from author's photographs

This is the story of a young girl who was confident she had a work to do in the world. What Mary Slessor did for her African people, Anna Coope is doing for her Panamanian Indians. It is a romance hardly believable, yet so simply and straightforwardly told that there can be no doubt of its truth. Every page breathes life and faith.

12mo Cloth 180 pages Jacketed Price, net $1.25

ALMETTA OF GABRIEL'S RUN

By Louise S. Murdoch. With original drawings

A realistic story of the Mountain Whites. The scene is laid in the Cumberland Mountains, and Almetta is a true-going little heroine. Through her this new authoress reveals the homes and hearts, the romances and the tragedies, of the people she has so intimately known and so long loved. Through their external sturdiness and uncouthness she makes us see a heart and love akin to our own.

12mo Cloth 244 pages Jacket in two colors Price, net $1.25

All books sent, postpaid, on receipt of price

Have you sent for our new catalogue
No. 93? A splendid Christmas list of books in it.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

The Meridian Press

Park Ave. and 40th St., New York

December 10th Last Day

At This Low Price

IF you send this coupon at once you can get your set of Mark Twain at the present price based on former low prices on paper. We have kept the price low on these books because Mark Twain wanted every American home to own his books at a reasonable price, in a good binding, with fine paper and clear type.

A flood of orders on Mark Twain has used all the paper that we could get even at a fairly reasonable price.

And the low-price sale must close—paper costs too much—cloth—everything that goes into the making of books has climbed to such heights that we estimate our present supply cannot last very much longer. So after December 10th, we must raise the price on these sets.

Get your set now at the low price—while you can.

MARK TWAIN

His Spirit Cheers and Comforts a Tired World

In him a tired world finds relief—finds laughter and cheer. But in him there is something more than just joy: there is life, and knowledge, and sympathy. For now Mark Twain has passed on and the charm and magnetism of his presence is no longer here, we can see more clearly than ever the greatness of his genius.

Never has there been a citizen of this country so magnificently welcomed in England, so beloved on the continent of Europe, so eagerly read in Asia and Australia. Even the Chinese read Mark Twain, and if they must have his books, surely you must have the work of this greatest of all Americans.

One day there appeared a new book from his pen, so spiritual, so true, so lofty, that those who did not know him well were amazed. Joan of Arc was the work of a poet—a historian—a seer. Mark Twain was all of these.

A Real American

Mark Twain was a steamboat pilot—a searcher for gold in the Far West—a printer. He worked bitterly hard. Then, with the opening of the great wide West, Mark Twain's genius bloomed. He had found his great place.

His fame spread through the nation. From then on, the path of fame lay straight to the high places. But his troubles were not over. At the height of his fame he lost all his money. He was heavily in debt, but though sixty years old, he started afresh and paid every cent. It was the last heroic touch that drew him close to the hearts of his countrymen.

The world has asked is there an American literature? Mark Twain is the answer.

Don't Miss This Opportunity

25 VOLUMES — Novels, Stories, Humor, Essays, Travel, History.

This is Mark Twain's own set—the set we planned with him—and this is a low price, after Mark Twain's own heart. Remember December 10th is the last day at this low price.

There never will be such a set offered at such a price. As you know, the United States Government has placed an embargo on freight and express shipments. This necessarily delays ordinary shipments; hence, in order to be sure that your set will reach you within a reasonable time, it is urged that you sign and send the coupon at once. Don't wait and be too late. Send the coupon NOW. Orders must be forwarded not later than midnight of December 10th, 1917. Send the coupon now to be certain of the low price.

HARPER & BROTHERS

1817-1917

New York

HARPER & BROTHERS
Franklin Sq., N.Y.

Send me, all charges prepaid, a set of Mark Twain's works in twenty-five volumes, illustrated, bound in handsome green cloth stamped in gold, and trimmed edges. If not satisfactory, I will return them at your expense. Otherwise I will send you $2.00 within 5 days and $2.00 a month for 12 months, thus getting the benefit of your half-price sale. American Messenger 12-17

Name _____

Address _____

Occupation _____

For our beautiful red half-leather edition, change above terms to $2.50 after examination and $3.00 a mo. for 20 mos.

PELOUBET'S

Select Notes

On the INTERNATIONAL LESSONS for 1918

Forty-fourth Annual Volume of this Great Commentary

Price $1.25 net; delivered, $1.35

Your old friend, Peloubet's SELECT NOTES, is now ready for 1918, with many new and striking features made possible by the Improved Uniform Graded Lessons.

You will find in it a rare combination of carefully culled facts, explanations, helpful comments and practical suggestions which will make the lesson a pleasure to teach and a delight and inspiration to the class.

W. A. WILDE COMPANY

Rand-McNally Bldg., Chicago

120 Boylston St., Boston

For Sale at all Bookstores

THE AMERICAN STANDARD BIBLE

Authorized and Edited by the American Revision Committee

Read the most accurate Bible to-day. Translated by America's greatest known Biblical Scholars from the oldest and most complete authentic copies of the original manuscripts.

Learn the truth of the Scriptures. Be brought closer to the divine message of the inspired writers by reading the PARAGRAPH DIVISIONS used by them, and adopted by the American Revision Committee.

Understand in your mother tongue. Get the full meaning of the words which are hard to understand, grasp the exact thought of the men of God who first wrote the Bible in Hebrew and Greek by using

The AMERICAN STANDARD BIBLE

Every Christian worker should have The American Standard Bible.
W. R. MOODY, Moody Bible School
We believe it is the best English version of the Bible published.
PROF. W. W. WHITE, President, Bible Training School

In over 200 styles of binding, including Bibles and Testaments for every want and every occasion.

Nelson's Soldiers and Sailors Special Testaments

Fit the Vest Pocket and Pack Snugly in the Kit

For Sale by all Booksellers or send for Descriptive Price List and Free Booklet

THOMAS NELSON & SONS, Bible Publishers for Over 50 Years 385Y Fourth Ave., NEW YORK

A NEW BOOK OF SPECIAL INTEREST TO MINISTERS

By Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D. D.

Moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A.

WHEN HOME IS HEAVEN

As Enjoyable as "The Lady of the Decoration."

WHO FOLLOWS IN THEIR TRAIN?

By Mary Caroline Holmes.

A Syrian Romance. The charmingly written account of an American girl's adventures in the land of Syria. Those who read and succumbed to the fascination of "The Lady of the Decoration" may anticipate a similar pleasure from this delightful volume. Net, $1.25.

"Dr. Chapman is revealed as a preacher of deep sincerity and crystal clarity, illustrating his point and purpose with a wealth of illustration and personal experience which carries conviction." — Christian Work.

One hundred and twenty-two word illustrations Cloth, net, $1.25

THE CHRIST WE FORGET

P. Whitwell Wilson
A Life of our Lord for Men Today.

A book with scarcely a peer in contemporary publishing. The author, a brilliant journalist, writes the story of Jesus of Nazareth in a wonderfully arresting fashion. A picture of Jesus which, while actually new, is astonishingly convincing. Cloth, net, $1.50.

WHAT DID JESUS REALLY TEACH ABOUT WAR?

By Edward Leigh Pell, D.D.

Unquestionably war is a matter of conscience. But in Dr. Pell's opinion what America is suffering from just now is not a troubled conscience as much as from an untroubled conscience. That is why this book does not stop with clearing up troublesome questions. Cloth, net, $1.00.

THE NORTH AMERICAN IDEA

James A. MacDonnald, LL.D.
Dr. MacDonnald discusses the growth and development of that spirit of liberality, just government and freedom of individual action in the light of its relation to the Great World War. Cloth, net, $1.25.

THE RELIGIOUS FOUNDATIONS OF AMERICA

Charles L. Thompson, D.D.
A survey of the religious elements which from various European sources went to the making of America. Cloth, net, $1.50.

NEW BOOK "RED-HOT" FROM THE TRENCHES

THE CROSS AT THE FRONT

By THOMAS TIPLADY, Field Chaplain in Flanders

Among all the War Books none quite parallels the purpose of these sketches from the blood-soaked fields of Flanders. Out of a chorus of pain comes a note of joy and optimism, revealing a phase of the World-War hitherto left untouched.

Net, $1.00

AMM

Vol. 76

No. 1

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

JANUARY, 1918

JESUS HEALING THE SICK.

WE DECLARE UNTO YOU GLAD TIDINGS

THE GOSPEL TO EVERY CREATURE
BREACH

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY, NEW YORK

HENRY E. FRITZ.

DESIRABLE AND WORTH-WHILE PREMIUMS

Prohibition is a most vital issue in the United States. "The High Road," by Emma S. Allen, is a fascinating story which deals with this vital problem. The great wave of public opinion which is now sweeping over the entire country demanding prohibition makes this a doubly worth-while publication. It is a book full of action—and one of truth for everybody.

This book will be given free and postpaid for five yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at 50 cents each.

Inspired by the thought from St. John, "Men ought always to pray," Judson Swift, D.D., author of "Prayer and Meditation," has wrought out an entirely original series of meditations and prayers which touch the deeper needs of the heart. There is a scripture selection, a prayer, a prose and poetic meditation, and a suggested scripture reading for thirty-one mornings and evenings. This is without question one of the most helpful devotional books ever published.

This book will be given free and postpaid for three yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at 50 cents each.

"Almetta of Gabriel's Run," by Louise S. Murdock, is an actual story of the Mountain Whites, who have been so long shut away from the rest of the world that they have become a people by themselves. The scene is laid in the Cumberland Mountains, and Almetta is a true-going little heroine. In these pages the authoress pictures the homes and hearts, the romances and tragedies of the people she has so intimately known and so long loved.

This book will be given free and postpaid for five yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at 50 cents each.

In "Anna Coope, Sky Pilot of the San Blas Indians," we have the autobiography of a young girl who was confident she had a mission to fulfill in the world, and was determined in spite of every obstacle to find and do her task. What Mary Slessor did for the African people Anna Coope is doing for the Panamanian Indians.

This book will be given free and postpaid for five yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at 50 cents each.

"As His Mother Saw Him," by Charlotte E. Gray, gives a really beautiful picture of the home at Nazareth. The relation of Mary and Jesus is most delicately and tactfully defined. After the public life of the Saviour begins, Mary learns that while she is of it, she is also apart from it, and finally emerges into the supreme renunciation as she enters into a spiritual understanding of the Divine mission of Jesus.

This book will be given free and postpaid for four yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at 50 cents each.

In "The Prophets and the War," Charles Carroll Albertson, D.D., discusses the burning question of what is to come after the war. This is a volume of prophecy with a practical application to the events of to-day and to-morrow. In the midst of the world war in which our nation is engaged there are still great lessons to be learned from the ancient prophets of Israel. In view of the renewed interest in regard to the subject of prophecy, this is a very important volume.

This book will be sent free and postpaid for four yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at 50 cents each.

SCHOLAR'S COMPANION

The set will be given for 4 yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at 50 cents each.

PEARL-HANDLED KNIFE

This Pocket Knife is manufactured by the well-known firm of J. Curley and Bro., New York City. The handle is of heavy iridescent pearl. The two blades are fine English hand-forged steel, carefully tempered and hardened. The large blade is a regular cutting blade and the other is a nail cleaner and file. The Knife is 2 3/4 inches long. It is suitable for either lady or gentleman.

This Set Consists of
 "REX" FOUNTAIN PEN
 WITH 14 KARAT GOLD
 PEN, GUARANTEED.
 FILLER FOR SAME.
 "SPEAR" PENCIL WITH EX-TRA BOX OF LEADS.
 MAGIC KNIFE.
 RUBBER ERASER.
 COMBINATION PEN AND PENCIL HOLDER.
 METAL BOX CONTAINING ONE DOZEN ASSORTED
 STEEL PENS.

The set is enclosed in a handsome box, and the combination is just the thing wanted for school work.

Given free and postpaid for only 4 yearly subscription at 50c each.

"Ever-Ready" Safety Razor Outfit

Easily Cleaned
 Mechanically Perfect
 Self-Adjusting Instantly Ready
 Rust-proof

The frame is made indestructible of heavy brass, triple nicked and sanitary, easy to clean and guaranteed for ten years of continuous service. Nothing to adjust—nothing to get out of order. Insert the Ever-Ready Blade—close frame and it is automatically adjusted for shaving.

There are 12 "Radio Steel" blades in each outfit.

Each detail of each razor—each blade in each outfit is UNCONDITIONALLY GUARANTEED to give UNQUESTIONED SATISFACTION to every user. The American Safety Razor Co., Brooklyn, New York, the makers, will make good this guarantee.

The case is a solid wood base, richly lined in red velvet and covered with a black leatherette of a tough, water-proof texture.

The complete set is given free and postpaid for only 5 yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at 50 cents each.

The American Messenger

"Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Luke 2:10

Vol. 76. No. 1

JANUARY, 1918

Copyright, 1917, by American Tract Society.

Terms: 50 cents per annum
Single copy, 5 cents

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

PUBLISHED MONTHLY

BY THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

OFFICERS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President.

JOHN HENRY JOWETT, M.A., D.D., Vice-President.

JUDSON SWIFT, D.D., General Secretary.

LOUIS TAG, Treasurer.

REV. HENRY LEWIS, Ph.D., Recording Secretary.

All of the above-named officers should be addressed at Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Rev. David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.

Rev. Charles Carroll Albertson, D.D.

Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.

Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D.

Rev. George Ernest Merriam.

Entered at the Post Office in New York as second-class matter.

Our Seventy-fifth Anniversary

This issue of the AMERICAN MESSENGER marks the seventy-fifth anniversary of the founding of our paper, whose first number bore the date, January, 1843.

For three quarters of a century the AMERICAN MESSENGER has gone forth as the bearer of good tidings of great joy, and has sought to fulfill its mission as a herald of the Gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

We rejoice in the completion of the seventy-five years of service which our paper has rendered in the cause of evangelical journalism. From its very inception it has stood for the essentials of the Christian faith, and has striven to disseminate the teachings of a pure and simple Gospel. It has advocated unity in essentials, liberty in non-essentials, and charity in all things.

The AMERICAN MESSENGER has ever maintained the integrity of the Bible and has upheld the divine inspiration of the Scriptures in the largest and fullest sense. It has had absolutely no sympathy with those who would in any way weaken the authority of the Word of God or impair its value as an infallible guide.

As we begin a new volume of this paper, we desire to re-affirm our adherence to those fundamental principles of truth for which this periodical has ever stood.

We live in a world of change, and the AMERICAN MESSENGER celebrates its seventy-fifth anniversary in what is universally regarded as the most critical epoch in the history of the world. But amid the changing vicissitudes of life and the noise and din of battle there are eternal unchanging verities, and upon these undying truths the AMERICAN MESSENGER will stand with unflinching faith during all the days and years to come.

We regard it as part of the mission of this paper always to champion the cause of righteousness, whatever may be the cost. We wish to uphold every reform which is in the interest of virtue and uprightness. We went to be on the popular side, when that side is right; but we are always willing to be in a minority with God.

We are grateful for the continued support of so many of our old-time subscribers. To illustrate the spirit which animates these long-time friends of our paper let us quote from a letter just received from one of our oldest subscribers, who writes:

"Enclosed please find check for $1.50, for which please send the AMERICAN MESSENGER to the five names on opposite side of this sheet. I am thankful I am again able to send this good paper another year. For myself I cannot give it up, after reading it about seventy years. It is the first thing I remember reading except my schoolbooks. It is like an old friend coming with good words of cheer every month."

We are also grateful for the hosts of new friends whose names have been added to our subscription list during recent years.

It so happens that the anniversary of the AMERICAN MESSENGER coincides with New Year's Day. As we go forward into this New Year, we know not what it has in store for any of us. We trust that for all our readers it may be in the deepest and truest sense a Happy New Year. For the AMERICAN MESSENGER we hope and pray that it may be a year of enlarging service and of increasing influence and that when the year is ended it may prove to have been the best in its history.

✻ ✻ ✻

Jerusalem in Christian Hands

One event that has brought rejoicing to Christian hearts is the wresting of the city of Jerusalem from the hands of the Turks and its occupation by the representatives of a great Christian nation.

It is too early to prophesy what shall be the future status of the Holy City, when the present war shall have ended and the final adjustments are made between the nations that are now engaged in deadly conflict. We cannot but hope, however, that the city of Jerusalem will never be returned to infidel hands. Its associations are so sacred and its history so interwoven with the life of our Lord that we feel that it should always remain under the control of a Christian power, and that no Mohammedan ruler should ever be permitted to exercise sovereignty over it.

Unquestionably the providence of God is directing affairs so that at the appointed time there shall be a wondrous fulfillment of the prophecies that center around this ancient city. We cannot interpret the details of those prophecies and must await the issue of the stirring events that are taking place before we can with certainty say what shall be the final destiny of that city toward which so many eyes are now looking with expectation and hope. But we should be prepared to follow the leadings of the divine Providence wherever they may direct, and we may rest confidently in the assurance that no prophetic word shall ever fail of fulfillment.

✻ ✻ ✻

A National Duty

Conservation of our resources as a nation has now become an imperative duty. The most concise as well as the most convincing presentation of the reason for the need of economy and saving that has come to our notice is found in the following statement issued by the Government:

"When we put a million and a half soldiers in the field, we withdraw those men from productive enterprises. They do not while they are actually in training or in service produce anything. They do, on the other hand, consume much. There is nothing more expensive on earth than to support and maintain a great army in the field, especially if it is on the fighting line. The attrition of supplies and everything else is tremendously great when we have a fighting army in the field.

"America is the one great remaining storehouse in the world of supplies and credit. We must maintain and make effective as possible our own soldiers and the soldiers of those nations who are fighting for us. We must therefore draw as little as possible upon our common store of supplies and money. The more we lessen our domestic demand, the more we can contribute to the support and effectiveness of our allied armies.

"Economy is now a national duty, such a duty upon the people at home as fighting is upon those Americans who are bravely offering their lives for the honor of America and the preservation of liberty and justice."

✻ ✻ ✻

The Work of the Red Cross Society

During the past few months the work of the American Red Cross Society has increased by leaps and by bounds. The first semi-annual report of the War Council of the Society, which was issued last month, is a striking presentation of the growth and development of the manifold activities of this beneficent organization, and reveals also the wise and careful disbursement of the large funds that have been committed to its care.

The aim of the American Red Cross is to be ready to care for our soldiers and sailors on duty, wherever and whenever that care may be needed; to shorten the war—by strengthening the morale of the allied peoples and their armies and by alleviating their sufferings; and to lay foundations for an enduring peace—by extending a message of practical relief and sympathy to the civilian population among our Allies, carrying to them the expression of the finest side of the American character.

In the carrying out of this aim the Red Cross Society has made large preparation for the eventualities of the future when there may be need of its ministrations by thousands upon thousands of our sick and wounded soldiers and sailors. It has done a marvelous work among the suffering civilian population in the different allied countries, its activities in Belgium and in France being of particular note for both their magnitude and efficiency.

Large provision has been made for the possible need of nurses in the future and already 14,000 have been enrolled as Red Cross Nurses, some two thousand of whom are now working abroad.

The work done for the relief of refugees and for the children in the devastated regions in France has been most helpful. Remarkable progress has also been made in the Sanitary Service and in military medical research.

Meanwhile the Red Cross has not neglected its function as a channel of relief in time of special disaster, and its service for the stricken city of Halifax is a fresh illustration of its efficiency in this line of service.

The Red Cross Society makes a universal appeal because it ministers to universal need. Its unprecedented growth during the past year is one of the relieving features of a world situation that is full of sadness, for it shows that throughout humanity there runs a responsiveness to the call of human need, irrespective of any distinctions of class or creed.

A Manly Pledge

The Young Men's Christian Association is doing a noble work in behalf of the moral and spiritual as well as the physical welfare of our soldiers. It endeavors to line up every man as a follower of Christ and to this end it asks each soldier to sign this manly pledge:

"I hereby pledge allegiance to the Lord Jesus Christ as my Saviour and King, and by God's help I will fight His battles for the glory of His Kingdom."

Thousands of young men have taken this pledge of allegiance to the Master, and by so doing they have indicated their desire to be not only loyal soldiers of our country but good soldiers of Jesus Christ.

For the Protection of Childhood

The National Child Labor Committee announces that the fourth Sunday in January (January 27, 1918) has been designated as Child Labor Sunday, and asks that the day be used to remind the people of the United States of their special duty to children in war time. The churches are requested to consider ways and means of keeping up our educational and labor standards, of promoting industrial education, and in short, of protecting American children.

Mr. Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War writes:

"The ravages of hostilities bear heavily indeed on the present generation, but we must not permit the effects of it to be visited upon the children of the nation. The tribulations borne by the present should make us conserve to as great a degree as possible the health and energies of the coming generations. Let me add my endorsement to the centering of our attention on Child Labor Day."

The International Lessons

The International Uniform Lesson Series for the year 1918 presents an interesting course of Bible study. For the first six months of the year the lessons are taken from the Gospel of Mark, thus affording a fine opportunity for a consecutive study of the life of Christ. The lessons of the third quarter are entitled, "Studies in the Christian Life," and are based upon selections made from both the Old and New Testaments. The lessons of the fourth quarter deal with the patriarchs and the early leaders of Israel from Abraham to the settlement in Canaan.

The American Tract Society publishes a number of books which will be found of service in connection with these International Lessons, and the attention of our readers is called to the announcement of these volumes which appears on the back cover page of this issue of our paper.

The Wider Vision

BY REV. I. MENCH CHAMBERS, D.D.

OD ever stands back of the obedient life to make it a blessing. This applies both to the individual and the nation. Without the Divine blessing our resources fail in their purpose. Jesus knew the economics of the Kingdom and postulated a great truth when He said, "Give and it shall be given unto you." We are only beginning to realize what this saying of the Master means, and too often men and nations have hesitated to give it full credence.

The majority live to acquire and keep. Selfishness has been the root sin of the ages. Christ interpreted a new law for the blessed life. He gave mankind the wider vision of service. Ministry in whatever form its benefactions are bestowed is sure of a substantial and rich reward. God's favor always follows a generous life.

The man who gets the least out of life is he who tries to keep all. No man liveth to himself from God's point of view. You cannot draw a selfish circle about your life and live His life. Christianity is cosmopolitan. Those who left the deepest impress for good upon the race followed the law of service as outlined by Jesus. They lived what they professed. They prayed to see and imitate Him who poured His wealth of being into the world's need. Paul said, "I am crucified with Christ. I am dead to everything but a life which follows the teaching and spirit of the Son of God." The old law and tradition were both supplemented by the mind and will of Christ.

From the Master's point of view that soul gets the cream of life who loves his fellow men and lives to advance their spiritual interests.

To live each day with the certainty of Christ's promise is to know the joy of life.

"A faith that looks time's shadows through,
And keeps eternity in view;
Yet with the talents God hath lent,
Is on some useful mission bent—
Such faith be mine."

As a nation we are passing through an epoch that shall live in history. It is a period when obedience or disobedience to the law of Christ, "give and it shall be given you" shall determine the making or the marring of our national glory. We have never had such opportunity for world-wide spiritual and social service. It is ours to feed the hungry, house the homeless, care for the destitution and need of little children, heal the sick, and liberate the imprisoned. We may act so that millions shall rise to call us a blessed nation, or act that both God and the world shall designate us as Iahobd. Our bushel is full. We stand like Joseph of old in command of a full granary before a famishing world. Ours is the day of testing to show the Saviour's spirit of service. We best preach the Gospel of Christ when we exemplify its principles. In a very real sense God's call to us is

"Rescue the perishing,
Care for the dying,
Snatch them in pity
From sin and the grave."

He has opened to America a wider vision of humanitarian service than has ever been accorded any other nation in the history of the world. Hitherto with most nations, we have been provincial. "Enough for me," has been the slogan. We have lived on the same street, but never shared the contents of our larder. When famine pinched in China or India, or some local disaster appealed to our sympathy we opened our heart. Real generosity has never been put to the crucial test as now. Today God is sounding almost a world call, saying, "Feed the nations. Go in my name. Give and it shall be given unto you."

Our national spirit shall be widened by this new relationship. It shall be the expansion of practical democracy. New bonds of world brotherhood will be formed and cemented. Before the end is reached we may have to help feed even our foes. "If thine enemy hunger, feed him," is still the divine injunction. Hate must be obliterated somehow from the national heart. Love is the touchstone of the world. Time shadows are vanishing. God is eradicating selfishness. He is giving America a new heart through the opportunity of an enlarged service. In the Pentecost of the world's sorrows may we as a nation be born again by the spirit of service from on high.

We are looking toward the day of big returned blessing, a time when God Almighty, who marks our response to the world's cry, will put back into the bosom of America a blessing in His own way and in His own form, which will astound the world.

"This is an age on ages telling
To be living is sublime."

This is an epoch which is not only revealing the Fatherhood of God, but opening in a wonderful expansion the practical demonstration of the brotherhood of all mankind, which shall make even this terrible war a source of good, insofar as its created demands quicken within a nation's heart the Christ-spirit. In view of what we see, and in which we are privileged to have a share, let us all say in gratitude to God who has ordained our lot, "I am thankful I am an American citizen and a Christian."

"O brother man, fold to thy heart thy brother,
Where pity dwells, the peace of God is there;
To worship rightly, is to love each other,
Each smile a hymn, each kindly deed a prayer."

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTION

J. WILBUR CHAPMAN, D.D.

THE OUTPUT OF A HOME

BY

REV. J. WILBUR CHAPMAN, D. D.

Moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A.

HOME is properly built when its foundation is the Word of God, when its strength is the result of keeping the commands of God, when Christ is its center, and when faith binds the members of such a household together, not only for time, but for eternity.

In the Old Testament times a father was the spiritual head of his household. Alas, in these modern days we seem to have gotten away from this ideal, and yet it may be that a reaction will soon set in and homes shall be as once they were; then fathers will be truer, mothers will be more consistent, children will be more properly trained, and forth from the home again shall go streams of influence to make the world better.

Give us better homes and we shall do wonderful things in our day and generation.

The following bit of history proves this. It is the story of the influence of one man and of those who came after him.

He was born in England in Queen Elizabeth's time. He became a clergyman, and lived an upright life; and so did his wife. Their son came to the United States, settled in Hartford, Connecticut, and became an honorable merchant. His son, in turn, also became a merchant, upright and honored. His son became a minister, and so honored was he that Harvard University conferred two degrees on him the same day—one in the morning and one in the afternoon. This learned man had a son, and he became a minister. Jonathan Edwards was his name.

In the year 1900 we are told what this family, founded by a consecrated man and woman who lived upright lives and gave the best heritage to their children, produced. Of the descendants of these two 1,394 persons have been traced and identified: 295 were college graduates, 13 were college professors, 30 were judges, 101 were lawyers, 60 were physicians, 65 were professors, 108 were clergymen, one was Vice-President of the United States, 75 were army and navy officers, 60 were prominent authors, and 16 were railroad and steamship presidents. And in the entire record not one has ever been convicted of a crime. It pays to live along upright lines and hand a clean life down to one's children.

If fathers could be made to understand their position of responsibility, then no effort would be too great to hold their households for time and eternity. It is always true that when there is physical danger, the concern felt is great.

As a result of his efforts to save his son in a fierce storm which swept over Long Island Sound a father became a physical wreck, his hour's battle with the waves having taken all his strength. The family had a summer home on an island and the father and son started to go there in a boat. When they had got half way to the island a sudden gust of wind overturned the boat and threw them into the water. The father could swim, but the boy could not; the father seized his son by the coat and swam toward the boat. The seas tore the son from the father, and while the latter was getting hold of him again, the boat was overturned by the waves. This happened twice more and after the last time the father could not find his son. He swam frantically about near the boat for nearly an hour, and then, overcome by cold and exhaustion, had just strength enough to climb upon the boat. He later swam ashore, and weak and delirious, crawled on his hands and knees to the home of a fisherman near by.

The mother was notified and, despite the storm, insisted on crossing the rough water and caring for her husband, who was completely exhausted. The body of the son was thrown on shore the following day. We can quite understand the agonizing effort of this father, inasmuch as his son was in physical danger, but why should we not be equally concerned when the danger is spiritual and moral? God now declares, "He that believeth not is condemned already," but we seem to be indifferent to this fact.

As an illustration of what may be expected from a true home it is well to refer to some special households which may in a sense at least be considered as ideal. It is not claimed that ministers' homes are always all that they should be, but it is a striking and remarkable fact that forth from the homes of ministers have gone some of the world's most remarkable people.

For some of the following statements I am indebted to some one whose name I do not know, but who was responsible for an article which appeared in one of the papers in Glasgow, Scotland. I am also indebted to Lauriston Bullard, who has written a most interesting article on the Daughters of Clergymen.

Measured by statistics, the North American manse stands high in the scale. Out of twelve thousand prominent Americans in "Who's Who?"—almost one thousand are sons of ministers. It is a very large percentage. Proportionately we should expect only fifty of our better known American contemporaries to be sons of ministers.

In Protestant Europe the rectory or the manse has played a part almost if not more than equal to that of the homes of the same class in the United States. It has produced great philosophers like Hobbes, Fichte, Schelling, Schleiermacher, Godwin and Mill (who was the son of a minister if he was not a son of the manse); great scientists like Linnaeus, Euler, Berzelius, Olbers, Agassiz, and Jenner; poets like Ben Jonson, Thomas, Goldsmith, Armstrong, Young, Churchill, Mickle, Mason, Cowper, Lloyd, West, Keble, and, greatest of them all, Coleridge; artists like Wren and Reynolds; critics like Lessing and Hazlitt; scholars like Arnold, Pattison and Robertson Smith; novelists like Björnson, Edna Lyall and Rhoda Broughton; engineers like William Froude; historians like Hallam and Anthony Froude; missionaries like Mackay of Uganda. The list, which might easily be lengthened, is such a roll of honor as no other profession can show.

In Scotland, as well as in the United States, there have been dynasties of ministers, church leaders, and authors who have sprung from the manse. The Bar and the Bench, medicine and literature, have in Scotland been abundantly fed from this overflowing fountain. The rectory and the manse are the glories of Protestantism.

There is, or used to be, a proverb to the effect that clergymen's children are prone to turn out badly. There never was any good evidence of the truth of this cynical adage. On the contrary, there is abundant proof of its falsity. Imposing lists of names have been prepared, showing by the incontrovertible methods of the accountant and statistician that the sons of ministers have achieved eminence in greater proportional numbers, that they have rendered the state a larger service, and that they have played a larger part in the history of the United States, Great Britain and France than the scions of any other classes.

In computing the number of clergymen's sons who have made good their claims to fame, the chronicler is compelled to confine himself to the centuries since the Reformation, during which Protestant ministers have been permitted to marry.

But the feminine half of the children of the manse are not to be overlooked. When the first Mrs. Woodrow Wilson took possession of the White House, the Executive Mansion was occupied for the seventh time by a minister's daughter. The daughters of clergymen who have presided over the Mansion in which the United States houses its chief magistrate illustrate what may be called "the domestic product of the parsonage." They have been model wives and sisters, and they are all of them outstanding examples of the product of homes where Christ is honored.

Abigail Adams of Quincy, Massachusetts, daughter and granddaughter of clergymen, was the first lady to be installed in the original White House, which later, in 1814, was burned. She was the wife of one President and the mother of another.

In 1850, when the death of Zachary Taylor brought Millard Fillmore to the Presidential office, another minister's daughter, the youngest child of the Rev. Lemuel Powers, became mistress of the nation.

Fillmore's successor was Franklin Pierce, and he also married the daughter of a clergyman—Jane Appleton, whose father was president of Bowdoin College.

In 1880 the son of a minister, Chester A. Arthur, was chosen Vice-President, and within a year the assassination of Garfield gave to him the higher office, and his sister, Mrs. McElroy, because he was a widower, was the mistress of the Executive Mansion.

Grover Cleveland, another son of the manse, also brought a sister to the White House, and there she lived until she surrendered the place to her brother's bride.

Four years later there came to the Capitol, as first lady of the land, another daughter and granddaughter of clergymen—Caroline Harrison, the wife of Benjamin Harrison, and not only has the White House been graced by the daughters of ministers, but the children of the manse have also made great literary successes and have been first and foremost in the special work of helping to uplift the more unfortunate in life.

A separate paragraph belongs to the Booth family. London gave one of the most wonderful funerals of a century to Catherine Booth, "the mother of the Salvation Army." She was the daughter of a minister, she married a minister, and the family they founded has become known all around the earth for its work through the unique agency they introduced for the alleviation of the world's needs.

These statements all go to prove that homes, when rightly ordered, become the fountains of blessing, and forth from them flow streams of influence to make the whole world better. It is, however, not necessary that we should turn simply to the homes of ministers, for on every side of us we find other homes governed by the same principles and sending forth the same blessings.

What is needed therefore today is a return to old-fashioned living, praying and singing. We may boast as much as we please concerning the blessings of modern times, but the spiritual heritage which has come to us from those who have lived well before us, and who have walked with humble confidence in God and faith in His Word, is beyond our power to estimate.

The homes of ministers have sent forth such streams of blessing to the world because God's Word has been honored and His Word faithfully taught.

One of the great friends of my early ministry was Major D. W. Whittle. He was one of the eminent Christians of his day. Turning from a lucrative position in the business world he entered the field of evangelism. He was all afire with a passion for Jesus and a love for the souls of men. He was a marvelous expository preacher, and he being dead still speaks. He is quoted the world over as an interpreter of God's Word, and all over the world I have found the fruit of his labors. I think the secret of his greatness is largely to be found in his love for the Bible. This was his testimony set in verse:

"We've traveled together, my Bible and I,
Through all kinds of weather, with smile or with sigh!
In sorrow or sunshine, in tempest or calm,
Its friendship unchanging, my lamp and my song!

"We've traveled together, my Bible and I,
When life had grown weary and death e'en was nigh;
But all through the darkness of mist or of wrong,
I found it a solace, a prayer and a song!

"So now who shall part us, my Bible and I?
Shall isms or schisms, or 'new lights,' who try?
Shall shadow for substance, or stone for good bread,
Supplant its sound wisdom, give folly instead?

"Ah, no! my dear Bible, exponent of light!
Thou Sword of the Spirit, put error to flight;
And still through life's journey, until my last sigh,
We'll travel together, my Bible and I."

His public testimony throughout the world was great, and his influence in his home was wonderful.

There is a time in every child's life that is critical, and it is perilous to the child for the parents to be indifferent to that time. So many danger signals are lifted warning us not to be neglectful or thoughtless, and yet in spite of them all our lives are absorbed by other things, our energies are wasted in other efforts that count for little or nothing, the critical time comes and goes, and we fail to act, and the results are sad indeed.

Those homes have been greatest in influence where parents have been careful to see that their children are early instructed in the ways of Christian living, and are urged not to delay their acceptance of Christ.

At the mouth of the Columbia River hundreds of fishing boats, each with its two fishermen, go out with the evening sun to set their nets for the catch of the salmon in their season. They sail to the spot chosen for setting their nets, their white sails glinting beautifully in the sun's almost horizontal rays. The boatman reaches his chosen point near the northern shore of the river and at which he deems a safe distance from the sea. He sets his net while the tide is coming in. Boat and net drift safely upward with the tide. Then the night comes on, and in the night the tide turns and boat and net drift downward toward the sea. The morning begins to dawn and boat and net and man have drifted near to what are known to be dangerous breakers. But this is the time when it is hoped to catch the more fish, and the man desiring a great haul sometimes neglects or disregards the approaching danger. At last even the hardy fisherman dares to go no further. He begins to haul in his net, drifting all the time nearer to what he knows is death. He works with a will to save himself, but something holds his net; it catches on a snag, it is full of fish and not easily handled, and before he has overcome the difficulties it often happens that he has drifted into the breakers, his boat is overturned, and man and boat and net are washed to sea and reported missing.

The fisherman is lost because he failed to act at the critical moment; just because he disregarded the point of danger; and many parents fail to influence their children aright because they do not take advantage of opportune times to turn their attention to spiritual matters of Eternal import. The children grow to youth, then to manhood or womanhood, and the tides of the world set in, and the current is swift, and they are swept beyond the reach of Christian influences.

"Behold now is the accepted time; behold now is the day of salvation."

✻ ✻ ✻

Honoring The Master

BY THOMAS CURTIS CLARK.

I may have seemed a little, insignificant thing that Mary did for Jesus when she poured the ointment upon his feet. Other meaner souls criticized her for wasting the valuable oil rather than selling it so that the poor might be fed and clothed from the profits. Even Martha, no doubt, thought her sister should have been busy getting dinner or cleaning up the house for "company." But Mary chose to do this good thing, out of the wisdom of her heart.

And how the little act was appreciated by the Master! It was to Him as a beautiful bouquet of lilies. It was a sentimental act, but that was the kind of thing Jesus was then in need of. The whole world apparently had turned against Him, with its hard heart, and this tender act brought to Him like a flood the consciousness that all had not forsaken Him. She had done what she could—but could she have done anything more pleasing to her Lord?

We do not always realize the tremendous significance of a small act. Heavenly possibilities are everywhere about us. How many prophets of God have been sheltered unawares in the humble homes of the righteous poor!

A story is told of a certain old lady who lived in a hamlet not far from London. She had always loved Queen Victoria, but had never seen her. Her one ambition was to see the popular Queen. One day an open carriage stopped before her door. A heavy rain was just beginning. The coachman asked for the loan of an umbrella. The old lady, it happened, had two umbrellas, one of silk, the other of cotton. For a moment she weighed in her simple mind the ponderous question as to which one she should loan to the rich woman who waited in the rain without; then with characteristic selfishness she handed out the old cotton umbrella. The carriage drove rapidly away. A few days after, the coachman again stood before the door. He was returning the old, faded umbrella and as he handed it back, he said, "Queen Victoria wishes me to thank you for the loan of your umbrella."

The emotions of the old woman may easily be imagined. Whether the story is true or not does not make any material difference. It illustrates the principle at least that one should always do what he can. It could not be said of this old woman, "She hath done what she could." She did the very least that she could. If she had had in her possession a still more faded umbrella, perhaps her hard heart would have clung to the second-best one, and she would have handed out the poorest of the lot.

The generous soul always wins. The liberal soul is the one that is made fat. God always sees that the giving hand does not get the bad end of the bargain. The reward may not come in terms of substance, but it comes at least in that joy of soul which passeth the understanding of the man who looks always on the material side of the things. Perhaps the joy which Mary experienced in this little deed for her Lord was afterward considered by her the greatest treasure of her life. After His death, what a consolation it must have been to her to remember that she had done what she could to make His sorrowful earthly life a little less sorrowful; to put a gleam of pure, unselfish love into the dark-tinted warp and woof of His tragic existence.

"She hath done what she could"—and she taught the whole world a great life lesson. How well hath she wrought! Only the ages can estimate the results of that little act of one woman on a certain busy day of her life.

✻ ✻ ✻

The New Dawn.

BY REV. A. MESSLER QUICK.

Haste from your gloomy Past! Dawn follows night—

*With faith and hope, the days have clearer light;
For lost sweet dreams the heart may often ache,
But upward look, and a brighter day will break.*

*Haste from your evil Past! Alas, the shame—
Live hence anew, retrieve a tarnished name.
Wage inner warfare for the good and true,
And peace shall await you, and honor, too.*

*Up from the troublous Past! Learn well the art,
To hold Messiah's star above your trembling heart;
To harbor doubts and fears be not enticed,
But seek communion with the pitying Christ.*

Haste from your sorrowing Past! Those severed ties, Loved friends and kin, are safe yond farthest skies.

*Their lives and love shall with your memory stay,
And o'er your spirit like angel whispers play.*

*Haste from your darkened path! Your chart revise,
A new dawn will break, as a sweet surprise.
In the white way Divine leading securé,
And the years to come will be sweet and pure.*

PRINTED PREACHERS

For the Telugus

Printed preachers, in the form of Christian books and tracts in the vernacular have long been at work among the Telugu people in India. Year after year the American Tract Society has sent cash appropriations for the production and distribution of Christian literature among the Telugu-speaking population until the grand total of the remittances amounts to many thousands of dollars.

The American Baptist Foreign Mission Society maintains an important mission among the Telugus in South India. Publication work has been carried on at the station in Nellore, where for many years Dr. David Downie (now at Coonoor) was in charge of this important branch of activity.

The educational work at Nellore is large and growing apace. The Coles-Ackerman Memorial High School for Boys, of which an excellent picture appears on this page, is doing a splendid work. The cornerstone of this building was laid in the year 1911. One year later it had an attendance of 320 students. The last report received gives the enrollment as 800, and adds, "Although our accommodations have been steadily increased, they have not kept pace with the increase of pupils."

The vital necessity of providing Christian literature in the Telugu language for these high school students cannot be too strongly emphasized. There is a startling paucity of the kind of literature suited to the needs of the youth of India, and every effort must be made to add to the existing supply, otherwise the minds and hearts of these Indian boys and girls will be poisoned by the native heathen literature, most of which is unspeakably vile and degrading.

For the Cubans

Missionary colportage work is carried on in Cuba by the American Tract Society, whose representative, Marcelino Talavera, sends the following account of one of his recent experiences:

"The city of Havana, Cuba, is surrounded with small villages and towns, which are good places for the work of a missionary colporter.

"One morning during the past month, after having kneeled down and given thanks to God for His many blessings and having asked for His renewed blessing for the day, I went out to my work in one of these towns named La Ceiba de Marianao. As I looked over the passengers in the car, I saw that they were of all classes, but not one of them seemed to be thinking of spiritual things. Each one was thinking of his business, his pleasure and his material concerns. The merchant was thinking of his store, the politician was thinking of politics, and the cooks were thinking of the high prices of food. Not one was thinking of his soul.

"Leaning upon the promises of God I stood up and distributed some seventy or eighty tracts, and thus with the help of the Lord I turned the thoughts of the passengers from material things to thoughts of God. We cannot doubt but that the words of Christ on the Galilean mountain are fulfilled at all times, 'Lo, I am with you alway.'"

THE COLES-ACKERMAN MEMORIAL HIGH SCHOOL AT NELLORE, INDIA

On the Pacific Coast

Mr. James Dunlap, missionary colporter of the American Tract Society in Los Angeles, Cal., and vicinity, reports an increase in his circulation of Christian literature for the past month. He writes:

"Los Angeles and vicinity has had the privilege of having a series of evangelistic meetings conducted by Billy Sunday. One result has been the voting out of the open saloon in Los Angeles, and there have also been a number of additions to the churches and the formation of a strong federation of the churches (290 in all) for the conservation of the work. I am hoping there will also be a greater demand for evangelical literature.

"Wherever I find people from New York or New Jersey, they are familiar with the publications of the American Tract Society and are glad to procure them, for Southern California has been flooded with the false teachings of Christian Science, Russellism, Theosophy, New Thought, Spiritism, etc., etc.

"The Spanish-speaking people here are very destitute. They receive the tracts, but rarely purchase any standard religious works.

"There is at this time a call for small books, such as 'Daily Food.' One English lady said: 'This little book will help me when I am down-hearted.' So I take courage and go forward with the work of distributing Christian literature wherever I can."

In the Empire State

Rev. Samuel Goddard tells of his recent toils as a missionary colporter in these words:

"I have the privilege of recording a most remarkable answer to prayer. One day when calling at a certain house, a lady asked me to come in and show her the books and cards which I had. This I did, and she purchased three books. Then she looked into my face and said, 'Dear Sir, I see you are a man of God. I am in distress on account of my husband. He is a good man, but he does not believe in the religion of the Christian Church.

Oh, if I could only induce him to become a Christian, how happy I should be!' I pointed this woman to the blessed Word of God, and told her there was only one thing to do—pray and believe. I left a book for her to give to him, and asked for his name so that I might remember him at the Throne of Grace.

"One month later I called at this home, and the wife greeted me with these words, 'Sir, your prayers have been answered! That book and our prayers have brought my husband to Jesus, and he has now joined the church. Praise the Lord!' With tears in her eyes she continued, 'I shall never forget you and the Society you represent. May God bless you in the good work you are doing.'

"I need hardly say that I left that home with a joyful heart and renewed strength to go on with my work."

In the Old Dominion State

Rev. J. M. Carter, who has been carrying on missionary colportage work for many years under the auspices of the American Tract Society, writes:

"I have been seeking out the homes of the people who live in the mountains of Virginia. After climbing many rugged cliffs to find those who seem to be cut off from the rest of the world, a missionary colporter gets such a welcome as is seldom received in the towns and cities in the forefront of our civilization. The warmth of the welcome thus received can be accounted for by the fact that it is seldom that any one with a religious message finds his way into these parts.

"I have sought to find the homes in these mountains just as you would seek to find something you had lost. When we lose ourselves, so to speak, in this cause and realize that we are feeding the people with God's own Word and that they rejoice to receive it, then we have a foretaste of the sweetest spiritual blessings. It seems to me that missionary colportage comes the nearest to doing the works of Jesus of anything that I know."

The Secret of Endurance

By Rev. Fred. L. Kingsbury

IT is remarkable that although the Bible comparatively seldom speaks of spiritual enterprises and great activities, it says much about the quiet graces. This is not only true of the pages of the Bible, but we find that literature is enriched by thoughts of these invisible fields where humanity fights its severest battles.

Our Heavenly Father subjects our characters to perpetual discipline, while perhaps those very near us are uncongenial, inflicting silent, "subtle strokes," aimed at the "unseen centres of hope and courage." In the family, there are infirmities and frictions that are hard to bear. In the church, many trials come through the self-assertive, the indolent, the quarrelsome or the unlovely. A child once said to its mother, "How happy we should all be if father was different!" There is someone who constitutes the cloud in our sky, the thorn in our nest, the one bitter drop in our cup. In the midst of such environment Cowper says we are to beware of desperate steps. "The darkest sky, live till tomorrow, will have passed away." And in his Epistle the Apostle James says, "Behold we count them happy (or blessed) who endure."

Our Heavenly Father never loses sight of the sensitiveness of our spirit: there is no heart in all the world that is so all-knowing, so all-sympathetic, so conscious of our infirmities, as well as so pitiful of them as is His. And yet He tells us simply to "endure." Bear it, however prolonged it may be, however provoking it may be; bear it in a sweet and gentle way which has forgiveness and pity concealed within it. Bear it just as He did, who gave a tender, healing touch to the wounded ear of the man who was binding Him with cords to lead Him to the judgment hall.

In the year 1715 A. D. French Protestantism, pierced with a thousand wounds, and bleeding from every pore, seemed only to be awaiting death. Antoine Court, the then leader of the forces of the Reformation, was a man of immovable constancy and tenaciously maintained the principles of religious freedom. He was gifted with a firm will, a clear mind, great physical energy and a cool spirit. Having collected a congregation, he advanced warily, step by step, leading his people from cavern to cavern, where they held their worship. Court was only nineteen years of age, but he changed the threatened ruin of the Camisard cause into a condition of almost prophetic inspiration. He endured as seeing the invisible One.

Endurance is most hard to practice in times of oppressive darkness. We can bear anything if we know that we have the favor and companionship of our dear Lord. There are periods as well as tests of endurance when the waves threaten to engulf us, and our Lord sleeps in the boat. Our wants unmet, our prayer unanswered, our spiritual tenderness gone, with heart dead as stone, we cry out, "Oh, that I knew where I might find Him!" while the tempter (like Job's wife) continually whispers, "Curse God and die!" What then? Why then, endure. Doubt not; rebel not; waver not; though He slay thee, trust Him.

"It were not hard to suffer by His hand,
If thou could'st see His face;—but in the dark!
That is the one last trial; be it so.
Christ was forsaken, so must thou be, too.
How could'st thou suffer but in seeming else?
Thou wilt not see the face, nor feel the hand,
Only the cruel crushing of the feet
When through the bitter night, the Lord comes down
To tread the winepress. Not by sight, but faith Endure. Endure. Be faithful to the end."

Suffering is misery—it must be; but change the suffering into endurance, and it becomes blessed. Many things in nature are noxious, which by the magic touch (perhaps of chemistry) become wholesome and even delightful. The alchemists labored to find the philosopher's stone which would turn everything into gold; we need not labor for the secret which turns suffering into joy, because it is disclosed in the words, "They are blessed who endure." Suffering is for some a vocation: such are called not even to be workers, but sufferers. We can perhaps say that it is the highest vocation to which some are called. Our Lord was never so regal as when crowned with thorns.

"Who is the angel that cometh? Pain.
Let us arise and go forth to greet him. Not in vain
Is the summons come for us to meet him.
He will stay and darken our sun; he will stay
A desolate night, and a weary day.
Since in that shadow our work is done,
And in that shadow our crowns are won,
Let us say while his bitter chalice
Slowly into our hearts is poured:
'Blessed is this that cometh in the Name of the Lord.'"

✻ ✻ ✻

The Diligent Use of Average Powers

BY REV. C. A. S. DWIGHT, PH.D.

It is probably a fact that the bulk of the world work is done by people of average powers, or, to use the figure in the parable, by men of two talents. The geniuses, or five-talent men, are scarce, and, even when extraordinary talent does make an appearance it is apt to exhaust itself in simply one direction. Moreover, geniuses are apt to be temperamentally unfitted for many of the necessary tasks of life, having an aversion for drudgery, neglecting details, and gaining a reputation for being "unpractical." At the other social extreme are the one-talent men, who, like the poor, are always with us, but never very helpfully with us. The imbeciles of course must at once be counted out from the productive factors of society, and besides them there is a large army of weaklings, who are poor in mental efficiency and physical strength or ambition, and who, though they may accomplish something for the upkeep of the world, are not the really efficient factors in stimulating its better life.

The two-talent men occupy the median line between these extremes. They are not consciously so strong and mighty as to feel themselves above the world's more prosaic work, while realizing that they are possessed of fair abilities, they are lifted above that deep discouragement which is apt to beset those who have but one talent, and that frequently mortgaged by sad circumstance. "Give me neither poverty nor riches" said a wise man long ago—and his saying indicates, even in these modern days, a comfortable lot midway between the extremes of care-bringing wealth and strength-sapping penury. As the great majority of people belong somewhere in between the over-rich and the desperately poor, it is safe to conclude that the bulk of the work of the world is done by them.

But what is required in any case is that each man shall make diligent use of just those powers which he himself possesses. God expects returns on the basis of the capital which he has invested in humanity. In the Parable of the Talents it is said that the Master travelling into a far country, gave to each of his servants "according to his several ability." The same amount was not expected from each servant, but one thing was exacted from all—diligence. Each man was expected to be both intelligent and industrious in the use of opportunity. No allowance was made for selfishness, sloth, or ignorance of market conditions. The two-talent man was not asked to be a genius, but he was required to make good. He was expected to "stir up" the gift of God which was in him, and to build on the basis of his average ability.

It is the men of fairly respectable gifts who, composing so large a proportion of its membership, are the hope of the church to-day. In too many instances reliance is placed almost exclusively on a few, rich or very influential five-talent men, while the poor are treated with neglect or condescension and not afforded the opportunity of contributing even their mite. The ideal condition is such a distribution of responsibility as will lead all to accept their proportionate share of the church's burdens. There is such a thing as making a great use of small means. Do your best, and God will see to it that the results of your life will work gloriously into the great plan of His growing Kingdom.

✻ ✻ ✻

Assets and Liabilities

BY L. D. STEARNS.

Here, at the beginning of another year, they rise before us—Assets and Liabilities.

A year ago you marshaled them forth, and set your face for life's twelvemonth to come. Has the year shown gain? Yet, after all, that is a question none, except your own soul and God, may ask. The year has gone. If its record has spelled success you can be glad, and with increased effort go forward in the days to come; and if it has held failure you can remember how men have risen from the ruins of failure to far, fair heights. The all-important thing is to go on; to build; to strengthen each asset, adding new ones to the list; and to cut down the liabilities.

Take a little time to look over the years that have passed—not with discouragement or repining, but as a business man studies his business to find where leakage exists and to note the special points to be strengthened; and as you look across them, note how many of the things you once reckoned as liabilities have proved assets. God never harnesses one with a handicap that may not be turned into a crown.

When He puts us here He endows each soul with just those powers which it will need in the great school of life, and places in our consciousness a draft of the specifications by which we should work. The trouble is, we fail to understand because we do not search earnestly and deeply enough. As our senses become tuned to earth's language we forget the secret things God implanted in our soul, and so, as we draw our balance sheet, we get our items twisted, putting assets for liabilities and liabilities for assets until some sudden turning of life's mirror shows us we are wrong, and in a flash of understanding we cry, "For these, oh God, I thank Thee! lo! they are golden, and I thought them dross!"

It is the steady going on, the persistent working at possibilities, the strong, firm grasping of realities that brings one at length to that point where life blooms into glad, full fruition.

Thus—with eyes upraised toward the hills of God—let us in the coming year do worthy battle, remembering that if failure comes today, tomorrow is still before us; striving so to order our lives that we may some day stand triumphant, seeing, with glad, clear vision it may be, that what we once counted as our greatest liability has proved our strongest asset, because it has taught, from heights and depths of pain, a tender sympathy for those who fail, a knowledge of self-weakness, and a sense of God's vast power.

HIS VINEYARD AND OURS

Progress in Korea

A recent communication from the Korean Religious Tract Society, of which Mr. Gerald Bonwick is the efficient General Secretary, contains a list of fourteen new publications in the Korean language which have just been added to the Society's list, and are now ready for circulation.

These publications include a number of important titles, among which may be mentioned "Essentials of the Bible," which contains a most helpful digest of Biblical facts under 289 headings; "Geography of the Holy Land," "Fundamental Truths Concerning the Work of Christ," "How to Lead Men to Christ," by Dr. Torrey, translated by Rev. F. S. Miller; "Sunday School Teacher Training," "The Bible Text Book," a revised edition; "Study of the Epistles to the Romans," "Daily Light on the Daily Path," "The Life of John Wesley," and "The Essentials of Christianity."

The Korean Religious Tract Society has been making marked progress during the past few years, and the issuance of such a considerable number of new and important publications is an evidence of the strength and virility of this Society.

In accordance with the modern principles of religious publication work in foreign lands, the Korean Religious Tract Society has on its Board of Trustees representatives of the various evangelical denominations which are carrying on missionary work in Korea.

The American Tract Society has for many years co-operated with the Korean Religious Tract Society and sends an annual cash appropriation for the support of its work.

How the Korean Tract Society circulates Christian literature among all classes of the native population is illustrated in the picture on this page, which shows the distribution of Christian tracts at a street meeting in Seoul.

Making Strong Bodies in India

How the missionary force is quick to avail itself of every possible opening for service is told by Rev. L. Henry Gates of Sholapur, in the Marathi Mission of the American Board. He writes:

"So far as I know there has been no organized effort to develop the physique of the boys in our schools. The Educational Department has not required it; but the lack of attention to the health of the pupils has been the cause of disease, low scholarship, and much else that is detrimental to society. The boys have been encouraged to play games, but rather spasmodically and individually. Gymnasium apparatus has been only too much of an unknown quantity. The careless habits into which scholars and teachers alike have fallen have not been a credit to any school.

"Now we are beginning to awake to the need of greater attention to physical development. The Educational Department is already sounding the superintendents and principals as to what is being done along such lines, and the missions are taking keen interest in building up this side of school life.

"It is especially needful that the leadership be taken and held as far as possible by Christian teachers, therefore the offer on the part of the Physical Department of the Young Men's Christian Association of India to conduct, at Mahabeshwar, the training of a group of teachers for two or three of the Western India missions afforded an opportunity which we were quick to grasp.

"There were twenty regular teachers in attendance at Mahabeshwar, which is the hill station for a number of missionaries during the hot season; and which, because of its picturesque, mountainous character, was a drawing card for our Indian teachers, who had never been far away from their villages and perhaps had never seen the mountains.

DISTRIBUTING CHRISTIAN LITERATURE ON THE STREET IN SEOUL, KOREA.

Besides the twenty regular students, five or six others took advantage of the chance to take physical exercises. On some days, even the missionaries enjoyed standing in the ranks and participating in the vigorous motions.

"Before the sun had made it hot in the morning, two hours were spent in outdoor drilling, setting-up exercises, and games. In the afternoons were classes where the teachers learned fundamental principles of anatomy and 'first aid' and the theories of physical culture.

"The class was in session for a full month, at the end of which an exhibition was given for the benefit of the missionaries who had sent the men. Governmental officials were also invited to the outdoor exhibition. Demonstrations were given of basket ball, baseball, etc.

"The teachers took hold enthusiastically, and gave abundant evidence that they realized the importance and value of the course. They have come back to the work in their schools determined to help develop the pupils along physical as well as mental lines. Many show a remarkable grasp of the principles given them in the class. In and out of the drill periods they demonstrate that they have learned new ways of influencing boys for their good.

"This success was due almost wholly to the admirable leadership of Dr. J. Henry Gray, of Calcutta, who spent his thought and time and energy in making sure the class had not gone to Mahabeshwar in vain. His unlimited perseverance, boundless patience and tact, and his hearty good nature were always in evidence, and before the end of the month he had proved his friendship for each and all. They will look back to him for many years as their ideal of physical Christian manhood and character."

Work in Guatemala

The Guatemala Mission of the Presbyterian Church is not in one of the nations taking part in the great European war, but the fact that there are residing in Guatemala many people of different nationalities makes the work at the present time more difficult to carry on. Another of their problems at the present time is the world cry of the "high cost of living."

But it is not all shadow, for even with the pressing need of another missionary family at Quezaltenango the number of congregations have increased from three to twenty-five, the membership from 100 to nearly 600, the church buildings from one to five. One missionary has to look after all of this work and besides take care of the added work entailed in German and English preaching, and the directions of a small printing establishment.

The church building at Quezaltenango is being enlarged with voluntary subscriptions of money and labor, the people doing the work themselves, and it will not be long before the Board will have to send another missionary to labor with Mr. Burgess.

There is a wide-open door in Guatemala for the physician. The advancement of God's kingdom in this Republic through the medium of the hospital and the medical missionary is as of as much importance as the presence of the physician on the battle front of France.

Plans are under way where a boys' school shall be started with a limited number of pupils, but with shops where the boys themselves can do the manual work of making doors and window frames for the school buildings, and their own furniture. The same need of establishing Christian schools in the United States is felt in Guatemala where the Government education is either openly infidel or anti-Christian.

The Surplus Material Department

More than twelve hundred missionaries received Christmas gifts for their work through the Surplus Material Department of the World's Sunday School Association. Each year, long before Christmas, a "Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year" letter leaves the office of the World's Association, 216 Metropolitan Tower, New York, for each missionary with whom the Surplus Material Department is in active relationship. With each letter a number of helpful things are sent.

This year the packet contained thirteen enclosures. First in continued usefulness were two daily Bible Reading Sunday School calendars. Many missionaries, in writing their thanks, say that they have no other way of knowing where the uniform lessons are found. Then there was a copy of 1917 "Gist of the Lesson." The lessons used in the United States during the year 1917 will be studied in the Philippines and Korea in 1918. The "Gist" is also useful as a small-sized commentary and makes a fine gift to a native pastor who can speak English. Two different publishers gave a Christmas musical service for each of the 1,200 missionaries. The total weight of each packet was about a half pound, making nearly 600 pounds for Uncle Sam to start on the long journey.

Letters of thanks will arrive from the missionaries in a few weeks and they will then indicate some special things that they need greatly in their work. The home folks can have a part in honoring these special requests. During the past months many parcel post packages containing such things as dolls, marbles, knives, handkerchiefs, etc., have been sent to the missionaries for distribution at the Christmas season. Many schools and classes begin the preparation of such things during the summer months.

Information can be had by writing to the World's Sunday School Association, Surplus Material Department, 216 Metropolitan Tower, New York. Name your denomination that you may receive an introduction to a missionary in your own church. About 26,000 have been thus related here to a missionary abroad.

"GO TO CHURCH" STAMP

BY pasting a "Go to Church" Stamp on all your outgoing mail and packages you will be helping the American Tract Society to spread the Gospel by bringing the people to Church.

The sending of one of these Stamps may be the means of winning over one or more souls to Christ by way of the Church.

We wish to have the Millions who do not attend any Church or Mission receive a Message by the receipt of a "Go to Church" Stamp and we ask you to assist us in doing this.

We sell these stamps at cost.

15 Cents per hundred. By mail, 17 Cents.
$1.00 per thousand. By mail, $1.05.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

Park Avenue and 40th Street

New York City

Notes upon the Topics Used
in Christian Endeavor
and Other Young People's Societies.

THE PRAYER MEETING

By
Rev. Henry Lewis
Ph.D.

JANUARY 6.

Christian Duty and Privilege Becoming a Christian

Acts 26:13-15.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Dec. 31. An awakened conscience. Acts 16:25-34.
T. Jan. 1. Faith first. John 3:1-8, 16.
W. Jan. 2. Repentance second. Acts 2:37-47.
T. Jan. 3. Obedience third. Acts 9:1-6.
F. Jan. 4. The result: pardon. Acts 3:13-21.
S. Jan. 5. Grateful service. Phil. 2:12-16.

We begin the New Year with a general topic which will be considered under different aspects on the first Sunday of each month for the first half of the year.

There are many different circumstances under which people have become Christians, and the case of the Apostle Paul, which is described in the Scripture portion selected for our topic furnishes but one illustration of the many ways in which souls have been led to Christ.

How Men Come to Christ

There are many who become Christians in early years. Indeed, it may be safely said that the large majority of Christians enter the Christian life in childhood days. This is the best time to begin, and every effort should be made to lead the little ones to Christ before they have learned the evil ways of the world.

Young manhood and young womanhood are the period at which a considerable number begin the Christian life. Students in high schools and colleges are responsive to evangelistic influences, and no effort should be omitted to bring to bear upon the young people in our educational institutions the spiritual pressure that will constrain them to declare themselves on the Lord's side.

Mature men and women are not so readily influenced as those who are younger, but when once led to make a decision, they usually become faithful and robust Christians. A strong effort should be made to induce people of ripened years to begin the Christian life, for in this way the Christian Church would be very materially strengthened.

There is no age limit as to the time when one may become a Christian. Therefore we should not rest content until even the most aged have been urged to enter the Christian life. Even though but a short span of life of earthly life remain, there is opportunity for service, and it is never too late to embrace the proffered gift of salvation.

Conversion means a turning about. It marks a change in tendency. It indicates a change in our relations toward God and toward our fellow-man. Conversion is the result of our faith in Christ, our repentance for sin, and our obedience to the divine command to confess Christ among men.

Conversion is the fruit of the regenerating work of the Holy Spirit within the human heart. It is the evidence of the believer's compliance with the command of Christ, "Follow me."

Conversion means that we become different from what we were before we were converted. It means that we have different likes and dislikes, different hopes and aspirations, different aims and ideals.

What Christ Requires

What Christ requires of us in order that we may become Christians is very simple. The injunction, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved," indicates what is required for entrance into the Kingdom.

Christianity is a growth, and the Christian life follows the law of development. We are not expected to bear the ripened fruit of all the Christian graces at the very outset, but we are to grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Christ requires faith, repentance, obedience and service, but He is very tender with those who are just beginning to enter the Christian life and if only our hearts are right, He will be very patient with us while we are learning to bring forth the fruits of the Spirit.

JANUARY 13.

Young Christians Reaching Upward

Psalms 63:1-8.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Jan. 7. Looking upward. Heb. 12:1-6.
T. Jan. 8. Yearning upward. Col. 3:1-8.
W. Jan. 9. High aims. Phil. 3:7-14.
T. Jan. 10. Rising through prayer. Eph. 3:14-21.
F. Jan. 11. The upward path. Col. 3:9-15.
S. Jan. 12. Helping others upward. I Cor. 9:19-23.

This is a particularly appropriate subject in these opening days of the New Year. High aims are essential to high accomplishment, and it is well that we should be reminded of the necessity for looking upward, if we are to excel in the Christian life.

There are many ways by which young Christians may reach upward toward heavenly things. Let us consider some of the most important means by which we may attain to those things which are above.

Communion With Nature

When we come near to the heart of Nature, we are brought near to the heart of God, for God is the Creator of the world of nature, and the sun, the stars, the sea, the lakes, the mountains, the flowers, the trees, the birds and all the features of the natural world point us to Him who is their Maker.

When we study the great characters of the Bible, we see that they were in nearly every instance men and women who lived close to the heart of nature. David, the sweet singer of Israel, Elijah, the great prophet, and Miriam, the prophetess, are illustrations of this fact.

The Hour of Meditation

The observance of the Quiet Hour is one of the means by which young Christians may reach upward. In this rushing, war-stricken age we need the hour of meditation in which to gain poise for our troubled spirits. We need to spend some of our time in quiet contemplation in order that we may attain unto high achievement.

The value of the Quiet Hour will be lost to us, if we spend it in merely idle thought. We should focus our minds on the great spiritual realities of life, and by so doing we shall reach upward to the eternal verities.

The Use of Prayer

Prayer is the gateway to heaven. By communion with God and with His Son Jesus Christ we reach upward to the great moral certainties of life.

In this age there is grave danger that prayer will be neglected. Yet nothing is more effectual than prayer, and if we wish to have true success, there is no more fatal error than to overlook the ministry of prayer.

Helpful Associations

We must choose our associates carefully if we would reach upward. We cannot have low associations and expect to attain a high plane. Either we must lift others up or they will drag us down. We cannot have degraded companions and expect to live on an exalted plane.

Man is a gregarious being, and his natural impulse is to join in groups. Young people are especially susceptible to the influence of their associates, and it is therefore imperative that they exercise the greatest care in choosing their associates.

The Best Model

There are noble men and women whom we may take as our example, but let us ever remember that the best model for us to follow is found in the person of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. In Him there are no imperfections, and we are safe in following in His steps, wherever He may lead.

Let us take the Lord Jesus as our model in sacrificial service. What our nation needs and what the world needs today is this kind of service. Some are already giving their all, but there are many who are giving little or nothing in response to the world's cry of need.

JANUARY 20.

Young Christians Reaching Outward

Galatians 6:1-10.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Jan. 14. Reaching the needy. Luke 10:25-37.
T. Jan. 15. Reaching out to rescue. Jude 20-25.
W. Jan. 16. Reaching regions beyond. Acts 16:9-15.
T. Jan. 17. Reaching out to comfort. 2 Cor. 1:1-7.
F. Jan. 18. Reaching out to reform. John 2:13-17.
S. Jan. 19. Reaching out to bless. Rom. 1:8-15.

Our last topic, "Reaching Upward," is followed naturally and logically by the present one, "Reaching Outward." The upward look inspires the outward reach, for the rule of Christianity is ever, "Look unto God and help your brother man."

In the Daily Bible Readings for this week are many of the ways in which young Christians may reach outward. Other ways will suggest themselves to active Endeavorers, whose pledge of service calls for fulfillment along every possible line.

Philanthropic Endeavor

One way of reaching outward is through philanthropic service. This means caring for the poor and needy, not only at Thanksgiving and Christmas time, but all through the year. It means not simply the giving of alms to those who are poverty-stricken but the adoption of ways and means whereby the poor shall be enabled to help themselves.

Philanthropic endeavor includes such lines of service as the Red Cross Society is pushing for the relief of those who suffer from war, pestilence, famine, fire and flood.

It includes hospital work and work for those who are shut-in by the infirmities of age or by reason of sickness.

Social Service

Young Christians may reach outward by taking up lines of social service, by which we mean what has been often called, "applied Christianity."

Social service is a new term, but it signifies the carrying out of principles that are as old as the Sermon on the Mount. It means that the Christian Church should interest itself in whatever concerns the welfare of humanity, caring for the bodily as well as for the spiritual needs of mankind. It means that as Christians we should strive to see to it that men, women and children are comfortably housed, adequately fed, and properly educated. It means that sanitary and hygienic conditions shall be considered as well as moral and spiritual needs.

Evangelistic Enterprise

One way in which young Christians may reach outward is by cultivating the evangelistic spirit.

It is the strong conviction of the writer that the time is ripe for a great evangelistic movement throughout the churches all over our land, and young people can do a great deal to advance such a movement.

An evangelistic movement through the churches would undoubtedly lead to increased evangelistic efforts to reach the soldiers who are gathered in training camps in various parts of our land.

The presence of these large bodies of troops furnishes a splendid opportunity for evangelistic service, which ought not to be passed by. Many of these men and boys will respond to the Gospel appeal, if only it is presented in manly, earnest fashion. Here is a fine chance to reach outward, and by faithful evangelistic service to lead these soldiers of our country to become soldiers of the Cross.

Missionary Work

Missionary work may be considered a specialized form of the evangelistic enterprise. It is one of the most effective means by which young Christians can reach outward and bring untold blessing to the human race.

JANUARY 27.

Christian Endeavor Goals and How to Reach Them

Romans 12:1-13.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Jan. 21. Winning others. Acts 8:26-40.
T. Jan. 22. Training. Rom. 12:3-8.
W. Jan. 23. Fellowship. 2 Cor. 6:1-18.
T. Jan. 24. Confession. 1 John 2:27-29.
F. Jan. 25. Worship. Isa. 12:1-6.
S. Jan. 26. Consecration. Ps. 40:1-11.

This topic has been chosen in view of the recurrence of the anniversary of the founding of the first Christian Endeavor Society which was organized on February 2, 1881, in the Williston Church of Portland, Maine, under the leadership of Dr. Francis E. Clark, now affectionately known as Father Endeavor Clark.

This is an age in which the value of organizations is measured largely if not entirely by their efficiency in doing things. Even in religious circles the same practical test is being applied, and the value of a religious society is measured today largely by what it actually does.

Measured by this test, the Christian Endeavor Society is one of the most efficient instrumentalities of the Christian Church. Its principles are such as to command the warmest approval from every lover of the Kingdom, and its deeds are such as to merit the highest praise.

Some Definite Aims

The Christian Endeavor Society has clear definite aims. It is striving for more members, more societies, more active committees, more consecrated workers and larger spiritual results.

One admirable goal which the Christian Endeavor Society has emphasized in recent years is that of securing a larger number of "life recruits," by which are meant young men and young women who are willing to devote their entire lives to some definite form of Christian service.

In these times there is some danger that the claims of Christian service may be overlooked on account of the unparalleled demand for war workers of various kinds. Certainly no deaf ear should be turned to the call of our country to serve her in this time of need. But the question may very properly be raised, how may I serve my country best? And the answer to this question will sometimes reveal the fact that we may serve our country best by engaging in some form of Christian service which will help to conserve the moral and spiritual welfare of the nation.

Essential Elements to Success

In order to reach the goals which the Christian Endeavor Society has set for itself, there must be patience, persistence and prayer.

Often we are too impatient to see the direct results of our work. Let us do our work faithfully and be content to leave the results with God. One Christian Endeavor Society helped to support an Italian worker. He finally gave his life in an attempt to rescue two men from drowning. The churches of the city, moved by his sacrifice, erected a church for the Italian mission. The Endeavorers who supported that Italian worker could not foresee the result of their work, but they were rewarded for their loyal support of a faithful worker.

In order to attain true success we must love our work. "Fervent in spirit," says one writer, "means to have our spirits aglow with warm interest and sympathy—and this applies to all goals and tasks. We accomplish little, if we do not love our work."

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Jan. 28. Bringing others. Mark 2:1-5.
T. Jan. 29. Persuading others. Acts 26:24-32.
W. Jan. 30. Winning by example. 1 Pet. 2:11-25.
T. Jan. 31. Winning by prayer. Acts 1:14; 2:1-4.
F. Feb. 1. Winning by kindness. Matt. 5:43-48.
S. Feb. 2. Winning by preaching. Luke 10:1-6, 17-20.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS

The New Year Bells.

BY DONALD A. FRASER.

From out the turrets clang the bells,
The bells that knell the Old Year's flight
Each solemn tongue the message tells Earth's watch is changing in the night;
And all their tones united chime
This lesson of the stride of Time:
Time lives,
And Life allures;
Time dies,
But God endures.

But, Hark! outpeal the merry bells,
The bells that hail the New Year born,
And as each note the chorus swells
That greets with joy the world's new morn,
Glad Hope's sweet carol rings amain,
With Love's low, murmuring refrain:
Time lives,
And Life allures;
Time dies,
But God endures.

Memory Books.

BY MARY E. CHASE.

THE Newest Girl in the boarding school was from the country. That was evident. Her clothes were decidedly home-made, and her hair was done in a distinctly old-fashioned style. Moreover, as Sally Wallace said, Mary Nelson was plainly "not used to things." Her manners were good and simple, but she lacked the ease and self-possession of Sally herself, who had always been surrounded by every luxury, and of the other girls, many of whom had attended Miss Williams' School for many years.

Mary roomed with Sally. The arrangement did not please Sally at all, who had wanted Kitty Richards, but Miss Williams had decided, and Miss Williams' decisions were not easily set aside. Moreover, Miss Williams had written Sally's father and mother that she thought each girl had something to give the other; and, although Sally remarked scornfully to herself and to Kitty Richards as well that she felt sure the giving would be all on one side, no change was forthcoming.

The Newest Girl began at once to fulfill Miss Williams' prophecy. She did learn from Sally. The Newest Girl wanted to learn. She realized that her life in a tiny village had lacked many of the advantages that Sally Wallace had enjoyed, and she eagerly asked and accepted Sally's advice about clothes and hair-dressing and the proper ways of doing things. Sally gave the advice in a good-natured but more or less superior way. In spite of her disappointment, she was beginning to like the Newest Girl—her sense of humor, her willingness to learn, and her thoughtfulness of others—but she would never have admitted for a moment that she, Sally Wallace, could learn anything from plain Mary Nelson.

But she did learn, and her first lesson took place before October was half gone. It happened one rainy Saturday when Sally and Kitty Richards and Dot Crawford and Mary were together in the very room assigned to the still disappointed Sally. They were all, except the Newest Girl, engaged in pasting the first souvenirs of the year in brand-new Memory Books. Mary was looking on, as interested as ever.

"I don't suppose," remarked Sally in her most superior tone, "I don't suppose you ever saw or heard of a Memory Book before, Mary?"

Mary stifled a desire to speak angrily, and smiled instead. Sally was exasperating in her ever-present attitude of teaching someone far more ignorant than she herself, and yet one might as well be good-natured. She owed much to Sally. She was quite ready to admit that. Still it was with a heightened color that she replied to Sally's repeated question.

"Yes, I've kept one for three years now," she said, "so they are not so new to me as you might think. Of course," she added, as the three girls looked up from their work with surprised faces, "of course, I don't pretend my Memory Book is like yours. It isn't, but it's a Memory Book all the same, and—in a way I think it means more than yours do."

"If it's here," Sally announced sarcastically and in a commanding tone, "bring it out. We might get some ideas, and Miss Williams always says we should never lose a chance of learning something." She gave Kitty Richards a knowing glance.

The Newest Girl considered for a moment. Apparently she was not anxious to show her Memory Book to Sally and Kitty and Dot. But at last she mother a letter on the anniversary of the day that Grandfather died. It's only a little thing to do, but it means a lot to her. Then, if I didn't have it down, I'd forget that Martha Smith's birthday is the 10th of May. She's an invalid, you see, and a letter means a lot to her, too. Sometimes I send her some flowers. There are a great many persons, I've found, whom you just can't write to regularly, but you can at least once a year—persons who appreciate it so much."

It was a long speech for the Newest Girl, who generally listened while the others talked, but Sally and Kitty and Dot were so interested that they actually made her talk some more. How did she find out about all the birthdays, they asked her. It would spoil the fun and the pleasure of surprising people, if one asked outright for the dates.

The Newest Girl never asked out-ory Book, Mary, and it certainly does mean a heap more than ours do. I'm going to begin one this very day. You've given me a brand-new idea, and I'm glad of it."

"You've given Dot and me one, too," echoed Kitty Richards. "I guess everyone learns things from everyone else, after all."

"A Temperate Dispute"

BY CORA S. DAY.

"I tell you he's the most valuable dog in this village." Audrey's tone was heated as well as positive. Walter had just spoken slightly of Brownie and now he laughed.

"I wouldn't give five dollars for a dozen like him," he declared teasingly. At these words Audrey fairly bristled.

"You wouldn't, eh? That shows what you know! Uncle George wouldn't sell him to a man who offered twenty-five dollars for him last fall," he replied scornfully.

"He must have been getting rid of his money on a wager," Walter scoffed smilingly. Audrey would have replied angrily, but just then Uncle George appeared and stopped the discussion.

"Never mind, Audrey. Walter knows Brownie's good points well. He's jollying you. But anyway, getting angry and shouting at him wouldn't convince him a mite," he said.

It is well to remember that a good cause "needs not to be patroned by passion, but can sustain itself upon a temperate dispute," according to Sir Thomas Browne.

Any good cause will surely gain in honor, dignity and respect, if good temper, kindness and quiet dignity champion it. Bluster and loud words and hard feelings never yet won any worthy victory. When you feel it your duty to stand for a good cause, do it with simple earnestness and sincerity, free from passion or bitterness. Let your honest conviction find utterance in temperate speech, and it will win when heated passion would fail.

"Keep Your Lantern By You"

"Keep your lantern by you. If anything should happen, you may be at one end of the car and your lantern at the other." The words were spoken somewhat sharply by the conductor of an evening train to a new hand who had just come on duty.

We thought of others besides inexperienced brakemen who sometimes put their lamps where they would be of little use in an emergency. They make a profession of religion, but do not take their religion with them in daily life.

There are many people, young and old, who go to places where they cannot take their religion with them. And then, how can they be prepared to help others who are in danger? How shall they give them light to guide them or help them out of their trouble if their light is away in some other place when the emergency arises? "Ye are the light of the world," said Jesus to His disciples.

Where Cooks Have No Fire

The Maoris of northern New Zealand eat cooked food, yet they have no fire and are never troubled about coal or gas bills. When the Maori housewife of that particular district wishes to cook a meal she places her kettle in a pond of boiling water nearby and waits until the water in the kettle boils. The natives have been careful to build their huts near friendly hot-water geysers.

When the housewife wishes to cook meat she puts it in a dish with a grating for the bottom, and places the dish above one of the many holes through which steam escapes from the ground. This dish is covered, and the steam soon cooks the meat.

MAKING HER FIRST BISCUITS.

crossed to her desk, and returned in a moment with a tiny red book, which she passed to the surprised Sally.

"You see, it isn't at all like yours, Sally," she said, "but it means a lot to me, and people tell me that it has meant a lot to them, too."

Sally, with Kitty and Dot bending over her shoulders, was examining the tiny book. It was divided into twelve sections, each indexed with the name of a month, and each containing the dates of certain days.

"January 12th," read the still puzzled Sally, "'Mother's birthday.' 'January 25th, the day Grandfather died.' I confess I can't see the point, Mary."

"Can't you?" asked the Newest Girl, a little embarrassed under the scrutiny of three. "The dates mean the days I want especially to remember, you see. For instance, I always write Grand-right, she told them. Sometimes a mutual friend would be able to tell her, sometimes the information would be given most casually so that the person who gave it would never realize that anyone especially cared. In the case of the days when sorrow came, she remembered those herself, and wrote them down at once.

Kitty and Dot and Sally, even, were very quiet when the Newest Girl had finished, and had taken the little red Memory Book back to her desk. Sally was realizing that Miss Williams' prophecy had come true—that she had learned something well worth the knowing from Mary Nelson. And because Sally with all her faults was honest to the core, she put her arm around the Newest Girl, and said bravely with her eyes on Kitty Richards' face:

"I'm glad to know about your Mem-

Our Fireside

Elinor's New Year

By Lloyd Logan

"I give you the end of a golden string;
Only wind it into a ball,
It will lead you in at Heaven's gate,
Built in Jerusalem's wall."

It is simply a wonderful night. I dearly love this boat trip. It makes a perfect, beautiful lull between the tiresome rush at home, the tumult and roar of the city, and the thousand and one things that you wish to do."

Elinor was most gracefully seated in her steamer chair. She glanced with complacent satisfaction at her well shod feet, poked up in full view. The slippers were not new, but she liked them very well, for the exquisite material and workmanship displayed her small foot to advantage. For that matter nothing that Elinor had worn on the ship was entirely new, but everything rather suggested a selection from a well-stocked wardrobe.

"I absolutely adore this outing," Marcia replied. "It is such a rest. It seems impossible to prepare to go anywhere without wearing out the whole family, though Mother and I have been planning for this trip for the longest time."

Marcia sighed and glanced at her shoes. They were neat, inexpensive and brand new. "Bought for this especial occasion," they fairly shrieked.

"How odd," Elinor spoke almost to herself, "I never prepare to go anywhere in my life. I just pack and go. In New York the shopping is so much easier and better. I loathe to hurry. I never will."

Elinor's tone was permeated with self-satisfaction and the satiety of all good things. Marcia glanced quickly at Elinor's face, whose perfect composure and sweet expression bespoke merely sheer thoughtlessness. Many twists and turns in life had taught Marcia instant divination between rude, cruel thrusts,—or just chance jabs in the general fray.

"You are going to Columbia University?" Marcia asked courteously.

"Yes, for painting. Mother could not leave until fall. This gives me six weeks more in the city. Florida is so tiresome in the summer."

"You do not care for Columbia?" Marcia asked by way of conversation.

"Yes, indeed. I shall work very hard; even so it is incidental." After a pause she continued, "Marcia, why don't you go to Columbia? Wouldn't you care to?"

"Care to?" Marcia repeated, "Care to? I'd love it. Oh! if I could. Teaching all the winter, I have not had the opportunity of studying since we graduated from high school. If I could just complete certain lines, I would receive so much more salary. This summer I visit an Aunt who is very lame. I hardly think that I can leave her often."

She did not add that the Aunt's lameness was the reason of her invitation. Marcia immediately spoke of other things. She always felt that her own troubles were her own private, particular property. She was rather embarrassed at their being dragged out for others' surveillance. Elinor quickly followed the new trend, feeling that she had ruthlessly intruded. Secretly she resolved she would make amends to Marcia. Twice she had offended.

The girls from the night of the high school commencement had seen little of each other. They trod diverging paths. Elinor found the way paved and prepared; Marcia was blazing the trail.

Elinor, to her very genuine surprise, was not able to be what she considered nice to Marcia. Amid the little gaieties and festivities on board Marcia shone. Her composure and poise were perfect. Even her clothes required no apology; to be sure the white serge skirt had been laundered, but her exquisite blouses were entirely finger work. Elinor complimented them.

"Well you see," Marcia explained, "Since Father became helpless with this stroke of paralysis the noise of the machine annoys him. He wants Mother to sit with him, all the time, so she made my blouses by hand."

"They are lovely," Elinor replied admiringly.

The captain of the boat paid Marcia quite a bit of attention. It seemed she had been given transportation, since her brother held a responsible position on another line. Elinor was not consciously snobbish in her intended patronage of Marcia. Her attitude really sprang from very kind thoughts.

That Elinor felt herself superior to Marcia was perfectly the result of her training. Her poise and composure were due only to the assiduous cultivation of her mind and manners. She had been taught an overwhelming deference to all conventionality. Even so she somehow failed in her attempts to be nice to Marcia—Marcia who had enjoyed so few advantages; Marcia who had been tried by fire, whose quick courtesies to others came from an understanding sympathy, and whose charm of manner was the direct result of the cultivation of her soul. These were depths of culture that Elinor neither reached nor understood.

So the summer passed. After their return home during the fall and early winter the girls did not happen to meet, except occasionally on the street, when their cordial recognition was a distinct pleasure to each. They both really wished that they could see something of the other, but somehow Elinor was much engaged with her social and club duties and Marcia was teaching school.

Of course the climate of Florida, with the air of the pine woods was just as beneficial to those who lived in the small house, a mile beyond the car line, where Marcia lived, as to those who dwelt on the fashionable boulevard where Elinor's home was located. And the climate was the point that held Marcia's family.

It was during the Christmas holidays that Elinor happened to be traveling out in the suburb in the direction of Marcia's home. Boarding the car, who should be there but Marcia's mother. Elinor smiled her recognition, and took her seat beside her.

It was one of those warm balmy days on which the reputation of Florida is based, and of which she is so justly proud. White dresses and summer apparel were a comfort and delight, and much affected by the fashionable tourists at the various hotels and resorts. The conventions of the city, however, seemed to demand coat-suits, and on the streets only dark clothes were seen.

Elinor's coat was open and her handsome fur thrown back. Marcia's mother wore a straw hat on which the ribbon had been turned. Her lawn dress had been laundered many times. Originally the material was covered with sprigs of roses, but now only a few of them could be indistinctly seen here and there. The lace about her neck was fine however, and held in place by an old-fashioned brooch of exquisite design. Marcia's mother was not dressed in summer attire, because she was a fashionable tourist. She had probably snatched the warm day as opportune, a gift of providence, that she might go to town.

"Tell me about Marcia. I so enjoyed meeting her on the trip last summer." Elinor inquired with interest. "Every one on the ship loved Marcia."

"Yes, every one loves Marcia," her mother acquiesced.

Her hands were calmly folded in her lap and her gentle face showed the composure of perfect control. Marcia's mother was a small woman. The lines on her thin face were the more accentuated, as it had once been so round and dimpled. She looked spare and frail.

"Has Marcia been teaching this winter?" Elinor continued.

"She was teaching, but she had to give it up. I couldn't do it alone. I tried, but I could not. You see

(Continued on next page)

A SPLENDID COMBINATION OFFER

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER
and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Two of the Most Popular Religious
Publications in America for only a year to any part of the United States or Its Possessions.

$2.25

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY RELIGIOUS MONTHLY

Regular Subscription Price
50 Cents a Year

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED NEWS WEEKLY FOR THE HOME

Regular Subscription Price
$2.00 a Year

Please note that this Special Offer applies only to subscriptions in the United States and its possessions. On Foreign subscriptions $1.24 extra must be added for postage, making a total of $3.49.

If a copy of the beautiful little year book entitled "Daily Food," is desired, ten cents additional must be added. Please send all combination subscriptions to the

AMERICAN MESSENGER
Park Ave. and 40th St., New York

A New "Wear-Well" Binding
Will Stand a Year's Rough Usage

Gist of the Lesson

By R. A. TORREY

The old reliable vest-pocket S. S. Lesson Companion. World-famed for its condensed thought, concise expression, pertinent illustration and spiritual appeal.

FLEMING H. REVELL COMPANY
158 5th Avenue, New York
17 N. Wabash Avenue, Chicago

DON'T HALLOWED HYMNS

NEW AND OLD

Edited by IRA ALLAN SANKEY

Son of the famous Singing-Evangelist
Ira D. Sankey

OVER 550,000

COPIES ALREADY SOLD

Responsive Scripture Readings
No Trashy Words No Jingly Music

Price $25.00 per 100 not prepaid
35 cents per copy by mail

Examine a copy and prove its value in your work. (Returnable if desired.)

The Biglow & Main Co., New York
Chicago

DR. CHAPMAN'S NEW BOOK

WHEN HOME IS HEAVEN

By J. WILBUR CHAPMAN. NET $1.25

The various aspects of domestic life—the right training of children—the value to the community of a God-ordered home—a wealth of reminiscent incident in the well-known evangelist's best style.

F. H. REVELL CO., 158 Fifth Av., N. Y.; 17 N. Wabash Av., Chicago

Six Minute Pudding

Here's a new one—a most delicious desert that can be made in a hurry.

To one and one-half cups of milk add one cup of

Grape-Nuts

and one level tablespoonful of sugar, boil six minutes, cool and serve with milk or cream. Add raisins if desired.

Get a package of Grape-Nuts from your grocer and try this pleasing recipe.

HALFONTE ON THE BEACH
ATLANTIC CITY
ALWAYS OPEN
THE LEEDS COMPANY

Elinor's New Year
(Continued from page 12)

Marcia's father is nearing death now—he has had another stroke." She paused.

"I beg your pardon, I did not know." Elinor's voice was quiet and sympathetic.

"No you did not know." Marcia's mother repeated slowly. "He may pass away now at any time. I just hope he will live till I get home,—but he may not. I thought that while I had the chance I had better go and arrange everything. He has realized his condition for some time. He wants to be taken to his father's home, and buried on the family estate, with his father and mother. The estate belongs to his brother. They had a difference many years ago, and have not spoken since."

"Well, that is what you also would most wish to do, is it not?" Elinor asked, merely to follow her trend of thought.

"It will be very expensive," she replied with deliberation.

"Is it far?"

"Yes, in northern Alabama." Her lips closed tightly, her eyes expanded, and for the instant she stared into space as if trying to see the way. "That is why I am going to town this morning, to make all the arrangements. It will be so much better for me to do it now. There won't be any time then, and there is no one else to do it."

Elinor shuddered. She did not comprehend how any one could leave a dying loved one.

"If it was only next week! Oh if he only would linger until next week. You see Leonard, my son, will not reach port until next week. Then he will send me money. I think though that I can borrow from the bank on that prospect in case—" She paused. "Yes," she murmured, "the bank, that is the first place to go, then if I succeed I can afford to have everything ready."

Poverty demands its toll. The poor, even the genteel poor, can hardly bury their dead without paying their tribute to its unrelenting demands.

"Is there no one to help?" asked Elinor.

"Oh yes, several have offered to come in and sit up all night with him. But Marcia and I prefer to do everything ourselves, as long as we can. It would hurt me inexpressibly to have strangers around, at least I feel that way about it, wouldn't you?"

"I have never been placed exactly in that way, but I am sure that I would," Elinor replied.

For a long while they were silent. Elinor was trying to adjust these harsh facts, with the gentle, worn little woman by her side—hoping that her husband would live long enough that she would not have to borrow the money for his funeral.

The car sped on, winding its way through varied scenes; across the river picturesque in its tropical beauty; through the pine woods, where the sighing of the winds through these tall sentinels of the forests is quite unlike anything else, then through the orange groves, the air heavy with the perfume of their waxen blossoms, while the trees are laden with the golden fruit. Ordinarily Elinor loved this long ride of seven miles. Now neither she nor Marcia's mother saw anything of their surroundings.

"Prepared," Elinor kept saying to herself. Marcia had prepared, Marcia's mother was prepared; while she had accomplished none of life's work, merely accepting the quantities of good things that had so lavishly been bestowed upon her.

"You and Marcia are always ready," Elinor voiced her thoughts with admiration and appreciation. The dignity and strength of this gentle woman bent on so strange a mission filled her with awe.

"Yes," Marcia's mother answered almost smiling, "It seems to me all of life is just one preparation after another. We are told that in this life we are to 'set our house in order.' But it has always been a relief to me that it ends there. For we are assured that when the struggle is all over that the mansions are prepared for us." But I know now that every year that rolls around will bring its especial demands. I always liked the New Year, though, it always seems like a new era, all over again every time and particularly so in Florida. The first green of spring is beginning to show, new life is everywhere, and thousands of tourists fill the streets. It always seems each year that prosperity will surely come this time. Other joys have grown so dim, but for me the light of hope is always trailing in the distance. I doubt not through the ages, one increasing purpose runs,—and we are each doing our own little part to help along."

"But I do nothing," Elinor replied. "I do not know anything that I can do. It looks as if my every day life had been prepared for me. What could I do—in the New Year?"

Marcia's mother turned and gazed at Elinor with evident admiration for her radiant beauty, her lovely clothes and her every action so redolent with abundant health and life.

"Why Elinor!" she exclaimed, for the moment lifted out of her own anxieties, "You are a wonderful creature. Every one has their bit to perform. Mine is just within my four walls; inconspicuous work, no one will ever know aught of. I suppose that I am not big enough to be given the more important things. You have had your home work prepared that you might leave it for other responsibilities."

"What other responsibilities," mused Elinor.

"Oh, I do not know what suits you best. The highest places are the hardest to fill,—so few are competent. Dr. Warder told me last evening—he is chairman of the Red Cross for the city—that he could not find a suitable person for the chairman for the First Aid classes. It required some one of personality and charm, who could discreetly—not familiarly, manage the one hundred and seventy-five women in the various classes; some one with plenty of leisure, accustomed to social prominence,—some one with their own motor car. It is a very important position. You are important,—while I have just the other simple things to do."

Marcia's mother subsided again; while her face assumed the anxious care-worn lines.

"Two blocks from here is where I must leave you," Elinor's voice vibrated with a new note. "I wish that there was something that Mother or I could do for you."

"Thank you, no. That is the difficulty. There is nothing that any one can do for me,—but, I'll manage," she answered, straightening slightly.

"Let me wish that the New Year will bring you much peace," Elinor hesitated, "and what you most desire."

Marcia's mother smiled sweetly.

"Thank you, Elinor, it is always the dawn of a new era for me,—may it be that for you also. 'For the drama of life is not in the circumstance, but in the soul.'"

Our Honor Roll

On Our Honor Roll are placed the names of those into whose homes the AMERICAN MESSENGER has gone for fifty years or more. To the lengthening list we are pleased to add the name of Fanny Traphagen Field, who has written:

"I so often wish that your good paper could be in every home as it was in my home. From the time I can remember until I left home, it was there. I think all parents should have such a paper in the family. I am now eighty-three years old, and I love to have the AMERICAN MESSENGER."

We welcome this long-time friend to a place on Our Honor Roll. We are glad also to put on Our Honor Roll the name of Mr. Edward H. Morrill, of Allston, Mass., who writes:

"Enclosed please find $1.50 for five copies of the AMERICAN MESSENGER for 1918. I distribute these among the sick and shut in. I have been a subscriber to the AMERICAN MESSENGER for fifty years. I have taken great pleasure in circulating this periodical for I felt that it was scattering and sowing Gospel seed. Your paper has always maintained such a high and elevated standard true to the principles of the Master and his teachings that I firmly believe it will ever bring a rich harvest."

PELOUBETS SELECT NOTES

On the International Lessons for 1918

Over two million copies have been sold
Forty-Fourth Annual Volume of this Great Commentary

THE volume for 1918 is now ready, with many new and striking features made possible by the Improved Uniform Graded Lessons.

You will find in it a rare combination of carefully culled facts, explanations, helpful comments and practical suggestions which will make the lesson a pleasure to teach and a delight and inspiration to the class.

Price, $1.25; net delivered, $1.35

Send for sample pages

W. A. Wilde Company
Rand-McNally Building - Chicago
120 Boylston Street - Boston

For sale at all bookstores

JUST OFF THE PRES'S

Herald of Praise

"The King of Song Books"

Edited by 200 Leading Evangelists and Ministers
Contains 256 pages of the best old and new hymns.

Regardless of cost the editors tried to make this The Greatest Song Book Published for Churches, Sunday Schools, Evangelistic Services and Young People's Meetings

Best manila binding, 15c; 100, $13.00 (not prepaid).
Flexible cloth binding, 20c; 100, $18.00 (not prepaid).
Cloth board binding, 30c; 100, $25.00 (not prepaid).
10 per cent discount for cash with order.
Send for free returnable sample copy.

The Glad Tidings Publishing Co.
202 S. Clark Street, Chicago, Ill.

THE ORIGINAL CHEMICAL

Indoor Closet

30,000 SOLD—FIFTH YEAR

More Comfortable, Healthful, Convenient

Eliminates the out-house, open vault and cess-pool, which are breeding places for germs. Have a warm, sanitary, odorless toilet right in your house. No going out in cold weather. A boon to invalids. Endorsed by State Boards of Health.

ABSOLUTELY ODORLESS

Put It Anywhere In The House
The germs are killed by a chemical process in water in the container. Empty once a month. No more trouble to empty than ashes. Closet absolutely guaranteed. Guarantee on file in office of this publication. Ask for catalog and price

ROWE SANITARY MFG. CO. 612 6th ST., DETROIT, MICH.
Ask about the Ro-San Washstand—Hot and Cold Running Water Without Plumbing

What 15c Will You Bring You from the Nation's Capital

Washington, the home of the Pathfinder, is the nerve-center of civilization; history is being made at this world capital. The Pathfinder's illustrated weekly review gives you a clear, impartial and correct diagnosis of public affairs during these strenuous, epoch-making days.

The little matter of 15c in stamps or coin will bring you the Pathfinder 13 weeks on trial. The Pathfinder is an illustrated weekly, published at the Nation's center, for the Nation; a paper that prints all the news of the world and tells the truth and only the truth; now in its 25th year. This paper fills the bill without emptying the purse; it costs but $1 a year. If you want to keep posted on what's going on in the world, at the least expense of time or money, this is your means. If you want a paper in your home which is sincere, reliable, entertaining, wholesome, the Pathfinder is yours. If you would appreciate a paper which puts everything clearly, fairly, briefly—here it is. Send 15c to show that you might like such a paper, and we will send the Pathfinder on probation 13 weeks. The 15c does not repay us, but we are glad to invest in new friends. The Pathfinder, BOX 91 Washington, D. C.

Can YOU Answer This ?

What Bible Incident does this picture represent? Look at it closely. Ask a friend to help you if you are not posted. Write your answer in a few words, simply mentioning in what part of the Bible the story or parable appears or what the picture means.

Give your name and full address in your letter; put 3-cent stamp on and mail it to Bible Treasure Search Editor, Box 5-A, Station N, Cincinnati, Ohio. You will be rewarded positively with a set of beautiful picture cards in colors, two illustrated stories and other interesting reading matter; also an opportunity to gain $500.00 in cash and other rewards by solving more pictures. Don't miss this if you would like to be surprised and delighted.

Just watch and see what you'll get!

Instant Postum

fits the spirit of the times perfectly. It is Purely American

Economical (without loss of pleasure)

Convenient (ready for instant use) and is a pleasing, wholesome, drug-free drink good for both young and old.

"There's a Reason"

THE TREASURY

SPECIAL NOTICE

Owing to occasional losses of letters, containing money, we would request friends and donors of the American Tract Society to remit by check or Post Office Money Order, which latter can always be duplicated in case of loss.

Receipts of the American Tract Society During November, 1917

Total Donations (including $1,213.40 for Special Objects), $2,528.31.

ARKANSAS, $7. Mr. Moore, for Patriot Library, $5; Mrs. Hubbard, $2.

CALIFORNIA, $28.15. Mr. Marston, for Patriot Library, $20; Mrs. White, Sr., for Patriot Library, $0.50; Mr. Elkinton, for Patriot Library, $5; Rev. Mr. Lich, $0.65; Mrs. Armstrong, for Patriot Library, $2.

COLORADO, $2. Mr. Evers, $2.

CONNECTICUT, $73.09. Miss Belden, for Patriot Library, $1; Miss Belden, for Patriot Library, $3; Mr. Miller, for Patriot Library, $1; Mr. Guild, for Patriot Library, $2; Moodus, Church Collection, $3.09; Mr. Loomis, $1; Mr. Panton, for Patriot Library, $1; Mrs. Warren, $1; Mr. Angering, for Patriot Library, $1; Miss Carrington, $1; Miss Action, $5; Miss Hough, $2; Mrs. Wiley, $1; Mrs. Brown, $5; Mr. Mills, $3; Mrs. Hill, for Patriot Library, $1; Mrs. Hooker, $5; Mr. Mansfield, $10; Mrs. Wilcox, $3; Mr. Chandler, $1; Mr. Roser, for Patriot Library, $3; Mr. Harrington, for Patriot Library, $1; Miss Sterling, $2; Miss Scudder, $5; Mr. Brown, $3; Mrs. Denforth, $2; Mrs. Bacon, $2; Mrs. Bassett, $2; Mr. Hart, for Patriot Library, $1; Mrs. Skiff, for Patriot Library, $1.

DELAWARE, $1. Dr. Marshall, $1.

IDAHO, $2. Mrs. Cowden, for Patriot Library, $2.

ILLINOIS, $139.89. Mr. Uphoff, $0.65; Mr. Rowland, for Patriot Library, $1; Mr. Keller, for Patriot Library, $5; Mr. Blosser, for Patriot Library, $2; Mr. Helen, for Patriot Library, $5; Mrs. Hubbard for Patriot Library, $20; Mrs. Dehring, $0.65; Mr. Schmidt, $50; Chicago Church Collection, $16.94; Mrs. Campbell, for Patriot Library, $1; Mr. Zanani, $0.65; Mrs. Eggemeyer, $2; Summerfield, Church Offering, $35.

INDIANA, $20.65. Mr. and Mrs. Onyett, for Patriot Library, $2; Mr. Weidman, $10; Mr. Barnett, $2; Mr. Rothert, $0.65; Mr. Heinwinkel, $5; Mrs. Acher, $0.65; Mr. Lichty, $0.35.

IOWA, $234.17. Rev. Mr. Engelke, $7; Mrs. Mathews, for Patriot Library, $1; Mr. Schluter, $0.65; Miss Roth, $1; Mr. Ramsburg, for Patriot Library, $5; Mr. Ubben, $0.30; Miss Vaughn, for Patriot Library, $5; Mrs. Uhlmann, $1; Mrs. Barth, $5; Mr. Juengling, $0.70; Mrs. Brouwer, $0.30; Mr. Addengast, $5; Mr. Greenfield, $0.65; Mr. Voss, $0.65; Mr. Dinges, for Patriot Library, $15; Mr. Breer, $3; Council Bluffs, Church Collection, $10; Everly, Church Offering, $44.44; Sheldon, Church Collection, $10.74; Mr. Williams, $10; Sibley, Church Offering, $6.13; Mr. Kemper, $20; Ackley, Church Collection, $5; Sibley, Church Offering, $5.36; Mr. Frey, $1; Mr. Harberts, $1; Mr. Fruling, $1; Mr. Arends, $1; Mr. Henning, $1; Mr. Cruis, $1; Mr. Willemssen, $0.75; Mr. Odens, $1; Mr. Havenga, $5; Mr. Bergmann, $2; Mr. Feldkamp, $2; Mr. Wolf, $3; Mr. Rose, $3; Mrs. Meyers, $1.50; Mr. Ernst, $10; Mr. Willemssen, $5; Mr. De Vriess, $2; Mr. Odenga, $1; Mr. Janssen, $2; Mr. Moet, $5; Mr. Mueller, $1; Mr. Odenga, $2; Mr. Graves, $1.50; Mrs. Heeren, $1; Mr. Brother, $0.50; Mr. Emmenga, $5; Mr. Eiders, $2; Mrs. Symens, $2; Mr. Behrend, $2; Mr. Heeren, $2; Mr. Henning, $1; Mr. Abels, $2.

KANSAS, $8. Miss Miller, for Patriot Library, $1; Miss Forbes, for Patriot Library, $1; Mrs. Holcomb, for Patriot Library, $1; Mrs. Parsons, $1.40; Mrs. Krehbiel, $0.30; Mrs. Krehbiel, $1.65; Mr. Reich, $0.65; Mr. Lefebore, $1.

KENTUCKY, $23. Miss Wynne, for Patriot Library, $0.50; Mr. Kelley, $2.50; Mrs. Hughes, for Patriot Library, $20.

LOUISIANA, $1. Mrs. Mann, for Patriot Library, $1.

MAINE, $20.25. Misses Wells, for Patriot Library, $2; Mrs. Stowers, for Patriot Library, $0.25; Miss Wood, for Patriot Library, $5; Mr. Jordan, $1; Miss Duran, for Patriot Library, $1; Miss Nason, for Patriot Library, $2; Mrs. Hough, $3; Mrs. Eaton, for Patriot Library, $5; Mrs. McPherson, $1.

MASSACHUSETTS, $523.10. Mrs. Torrey, for Patriot Library, $20; Mr. Chadwick, for Patriot Library, $2; Miss Perkins, for Patriot Library, $20; Mrs. Brayton, for Patriot Library, $10; Mr. Carey, for Patriot Library, $5; Mrs. Rugg, for Patriot Library, $2; Mrs. French, $5; Miss Minter, for Patriot Library, $3; Mr. and Mrs. Orton, for Patriot Library, $4; Mrs. Rice, $1; Mrs. Hunt, for Patriot Library, $5; Mrs. Allen, $1; Mrs. Cook, $2; Mr. Hodgekins, $1; Miss Anstin, $2; Westhampton, Church Collection, $5; Miss Hawes, $2; Mr. Cushing, for Patriot Library, $25; Mr. Lyon, for Patriot Library, $5; "A Friend," for Patriot Library, $15; Miss Munroe, for Patriot Library, $1; Mrs. Bird, for Patriot Library, $1; Mr. Chapin, for Patriot Library, $1; Mr. Bauman, for Patriot Library, $1; Mrs. Bement, for Patriot Library, $5; Mrs. Brown, $1; Miss Kendall, $1; "A Friend," $1; Miss Gibbs, $1; Mrs. Perry, for Patriot Library, $5; Miss Johnson, for Patriot Library, $1; "A Friend," $5; Mrs. Brooks, $2; Rev. Mr. Hood, for Patriot Library, $10; Mrs. Bowen, $2; Mr. Osborne, $2; Mr. Monroe, $10; Mr. Twitchell, $2; Miss Trumpler, for Patriot Library, $1; Mrs. Bliss, $1; The Misses Torrey, $1; Miss Magill, $1; Mr. Marsh, $1; Mrs. Smith, for Patriot Library, $25; Mrs. Weissbrod, $1; Miss Barnett, $1; Miss Swift, $1; Mrs. Goodrich, $1; Mr. Lovell, $1; Mrs. Jennings, $5; Miss Townsend, $2; Mr. Whitney, for Patriot Library, $20; "A Soldier's Widow," for Patriot Library, $1; Mrs. Amsden, $2; Mr. Atwood, $2; Boston, Church Collection, $50; Mr. Packard, $5; Miss Harmon, $1; Miss Brooks, $2; Mr. Emerson, for Patriot Library, $2; Miss Dudley, for Patriot Library, $1; Miss Bemis, $5; Miss Wiggins, for Patriot Library, $1; Miss Battelle and Miss Williams, $0.60; Mr. Haskell, $11; Miss Stoddard, for Patriot Library, $2; Mrs. Walworth, $10; Mrs. Parker, $1; Mr. Wight, $5; Mrs. Donkin, for Patriot Library, $2; Mr. Crane, $50; Mrs. Knowlton, $2; Hon. Mr. Crane, $100; Miss Ward, for Patriot Library, $1.50; Mrs. Dresser, for Patriot Library, $1; Miss Seaver, $1; "A Friend," $1; Mr. Stevens, $10; Mrs. Rockwood, for Patriot Library, $3; Mrs. Dearborn, $1.

MICHIGAN, $113.65. Mrs. McVittie, $5; Miss Shepherd, $1; Mr. Huston, $100; Rev. Mr. Frank, $0.65; Mrs. Blankenship, $2; Wyandotte, Church Offering, $5.

MINNESOTA, $33.30. Miss Krause, for Patriot Library, $15; Mr. Lyman, for Patriot Library, $10; Rev. Mr. Smith, $5; Mr. Dungan, $2; Mr. Rosenan, $0.65; Mr. Bengen, $0.65.

MISSOURI, $71.41. Mr. Peters, for Patriot Library, $50; Mr. Jones, for Patriot Library, $5; Parkville, Church Collection, $4.26; St. Louis, Church Offering, $2; Mr. Thicdke, $0.15; Mr. Sass, $10.

MONTANA, $1. Mrs. Fisher, $1.

NEBRASKA, $39.65. Mr. Lampe, for Patriot Library, $5; Mrs. Schnackenberg, $5; Mrs. Kilzer, $1; Cedar Creek, Church Collection, $23.65; Mr. Seibert, $5.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, $25. Mrs. Rowell, for Patriot Library, $1; Mrs. Carter, for Patriot Library, $1; Miss Tarrant, for Patriot Library, $1; Mrs. Blake, $1; Mrs. Gale, $1; Miss Knapp, for Patriot Library, $1; Mrs. Holmes, for Patriot Library, $1; Miss Busiel, for Patriot Library, $2; Rev. Mr. Bouton, for Patriot Library, $1; Mrs. Kimball, $3; Mrs. Bartlet, $2; Miss Hubbard, $5; Mrs. Read, $5.

NEW JERSEY, $177.59. Mrs. Bartels, for Patriot Library, $3; Mr. Pfeiffer, for Patriot Library, $2; New Brunswick, Church Offering, $8; Miss Williamson, for Patriot Library, $1; Miss Bryant, $1; Hoboken, Church Collection, $15; Mr. Peters, $2; Oradell, Church Offering, $7.59; Blawston, Church Collection, for Patriot Library, $5; Mr. Wm. Maver, for Patriot Library, $1; Dr. Chadwell, $5; Rev. Mr. Read, for Patriot Library, $5; "A Friend," $10; Mr. Minton, for Patriot Library, $5; Mr. Cook, for Patriot Library, $5; Mr. Halls, Jr., for Patriot Library, $20; Miss Morris, $0.50; Mrs. Porter, for Patriot Library, $10; Union, Church Offering, $34.50; Miss Clark, for Patriot Library, $10; Camden, Church Collection, $4; Miss Price, for Patriot Library, $5; Newark, Church Offering, $10; Rev. Rundall, for Patriot Library, $2; Miss Day, $1; Miss Cross, for Patriot Library, $5.

NEW YORK, $425.94. King Testimonial Fund, $18; Mr. Kelsey, $25; Miss Conover, $1; Bishop Rudolph, $10; Mrs. Harkness, $100; Mr. Douglass, $50; Mrs. Cook, $3.50; North Haven, Church Collection, $9.59; Miss Strong, $20; Mr. Bahler, $2.50; Sister Christine, $12; Miss Smith, $0.25; Miss Corsa, $5; Brooklyn, Church Offering, $31; Mrs. Gardner, $3.50; Mr. Peckham, $10.95; Mrs. Wagner, $1; The following for Patriot Library: Mrs. Dwight, $10; Mrs. Veisley, $5; Mrs. Huntington, $20; Dr. Swift, $10; Mr. Hallock, $5; Mr. Hoffman, $1; Mr. Chapman, $5; Mr. Francis, $5; Miss Hart, $1; Mr. Procton, $10; Mrs. Hollister, $1; Miss Bement, $1; Mrs. Hankins, $10; Mrs. Mager, $8; Mrs. Beer, $0.25; Mrs. Meeker, $2; Mrs. Knickerhocker, $1; Mrs. Meigs, $20; Miss White, $1; Mr. Empie, $3; Mrs. Weil, $3.40.

NORTH CAROLINA, $9. Mrs. Pratt, for Patriot Library, $5; Mr. Comming, for Patriot Library, $2; Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Brown, for Patriot Library, $2.

OHIO, $41.65. Mrs. Baker, for Patriot Library, $1; Cleveland, Church Collection, $25; "A Friend," $1; Mrs. Hegemer, $1; Mr. Hunt, $2; Mr. Meslah, $0.65; Mr. Bingham, for Patriot Library, $5; Mrs. Wadsworth, for Patriot Library, $2; Mr. and Miss Binder, $2; Mr. Hunt, $2.

OREGON, $12.35. Mr. Clark, for Patriot Library, $1; Mr. Beck, $0.30; German S. S. Convention, $10.80; "A Friend," $0.25.

PENNSYLVANIA, $345.03. Mr. Huston, $10; State College, Church Offering, $8.58; Mrs. Turner, $175; Mr. Bronson, $1; Rev. Mr. Sengmaster, $1; Mrs. Fender, $2.65; Mr. Wright, $10; Miss Lang, $3; Pottsville, Church Collection, $2; Mr. Dennis, $5; Mr. Schulte, $0.65; Dunmore, Church Offering, $5; Mr. and Mrs. Brown, $5; Mr. Wagner, $0.65; The following for Patriot Library: Rev. Mr. Barcraft, $10; Mr. Stelle, $2; Mr. Kinsloc, $5; Miss Cline, $5; Mrs. Paulding, $5; Mr. Godfrey, $10; Rev. Mr. Breed, $5; Mr. Ricketts, $5; Mr. Bixby, $3; Mrs. Reynolds, $5; Mr. Lyne, $2.50; Mrs. Cassidy, $10; Mr. Miller, $10; Mr. Warger, $1; Miss Pollock, $3; Mrs. Allred, $2; Mr. Linn, $10; Mrs. Brodhead, $2; Mr. Latta, $10; Mr. Brubaker, $5; Mrs. Walker, $5.

RHODE ISLAND, $11. Rev. Mr. Cornell, $1; Miss Simmons, for Patriot Library, $1; Mr. Waterman, $1; Miss Salisbury, $1; Mrs. Pierce, $2; Dr. Whitmarsh, $5.

SOUTH CAROLINA, $1. Dr. Smith, for Patriot Library, $1.

SOUTH DAKOTA, $69.23. Wentworth, Church Collection, $4.68; Lennox, Church Offering, $16.89; Avon, Church Collection, $30; Avon, Church Offering, $17.66.

TENNESSEE, $5. Miss Tilden, $5.

TEXAS, $5. Mrs. Horne, for Patriot Library, $5.

VERMONT, $14. Mr. Webster, $2; Mr. Taylor, $5; Mr. and Mrs. Morse, $2; Mr. Robinson, for Patriot Library, $1; Mrs. Beeman, $1; Miss Greene, $2; Mrs. Reynolds, for Patriot Library, $1.

VIRGINIA, $13.50. Mr. McBlencowe, $2.50; Miss Ivey, for Patriot Library, $10; Mr. Gordon, $1.

WEST VIRGINIA, $1. Miss Athinson, $1.

WISCONSIN, $9.15. Rev. Mr. Sweet, $1; Mrs. and Mr. Frank, $1; Mr. Lothes, $1.15; Miss Mayer, $0.60; Mrs. Frickenstein, $0.50; Miss Mayer, $0.65; Mrs. Woelfle, $2.30; Mrs. Asmus, $1; Miss Felsman, $0.95.

FOREIGN, $20.56. Canada, Mrs. McCrae, $0.56; "A Friend," $1. Hawaii, Mrs. Goess, $1. China, Miss Allyn, $18.

LEGACIES, $600. Guilderland, N. Y., Estate of M. A. Winne, $300; Salem, Mass., Estate of M. N. Cleaveland, $300. INCOME FROM TRUST FUNDS...$1,087.50 Income for Missionary Work..... 1,037.50 Income for Annuitants..... 50.00

Donations

DONATIONS for the missionary work of the American Tract Society may be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

FIELD SECRETARIES AND COLPORTAGE SUPERINTENDENTS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.

Rev. Isaac Pierson, Field Secretary for New England, 50 Bromfield Street, Boston, Mass.

Rev. A. W. Reinhard, Field Secretary and Superintendent of Colportage for the Western and Northwestern States, 313 Y. M. C. A. Building, Omaha, Nebraska.

Rev. George Whitefort, Superintendent of Colportage, Southern Agency, Crichton, R.F.D., Mobile Co., Ala.

Form of Bequest

I GIVE and bequeath to the "AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY," instituted in the City of New York, May, 1825, the sum of.....dollars to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said Society.

Three witnesses should state that the testator declares this to be his last will and testament, and that they signed at his request, and in his presence and the presence of each other.

Life Members and Directors

The donation of $30 at one time constitutes a Life Member of the American Tract Society; the addition of $70, or the donation of $100 at one time, constitutes a Life Director. Life members may receive annually copies of the Society's own publications to the value of $1; Life Directors to the value of $2; if applied for within the Society's year, from April 1st to April 1st, in person or by written order.

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

TERMS: Subscription price, 50 cts. a year, payable in advance. In clubs of five or more, 30 cts. each. Club subscriptions mailed to separate addresses, if desired. Charge for foreign subscription, 24 cents additional. Canadian subscription, 12 cents additional. Single copies, 5 cents each. On account of the additional charge which is made by the New York Post Office for mailing to subscribers in New York and Bronx Counties (Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx), no club rates, cash commissions or premiums will be given for subscriptions that must be sent to persons residing in those Counties. Each subscription in New York or Bronx County must be at the rate of 50 cents net. Remit by Express Money Order, Draft, Post Office Order or Registered Letter. For very small amounts, postage stamps may be sent at the risk of the sender. CHANGES: When sending change of address, be sure to send the old address as well as the new one. OUR ADVERTISERS: We believe that all the advertisements in this paper are from responsible advertisers, and it is our intention to admit only such to our columns. Should, however, any of our subscribers find that any advertiser does not live up to his agreements, we would consider it a favor if they will inform us, and we will at any time give prompt attention to any complaint. We do not, of course, guarantee that all persons will take the same point of view with the advertisers, and it must be borne in mind that the claims and statements made by advertisers are their assertions, and not ours. Our readers will confer a favor upon advertisers and also upon us if they will mention the AMERICAN MESSENGER when answering advertisements.

Our readers are reminded of the American Tract Society's urgent appeal for $100,000.00 to finance the great enterprise of furnishing this Patriot Library, wherever it is needed. Donations for this purpose may be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, American Tract Society, Park Avenue and 40th Street, New York, N. Y.

The Usefulness of the Patriot Library.

The readers of the AMERICAN MESSENGER are already familiar with the plans made by the American Tract Society for placing the Patriot Library aboard the U. S. Battleships and Cruisers and sending them to the soldiers in training at the various Camps as well as to the men in France. What President Wilson thinks of these plans is shown in the following letter:

THE WHITE HOUSE WASHINGTON

23 November, 1917

My Dear Doctor Swift:

I have learned with the greatest interest and with entire approval of the plans of the American Tract Society for THE PATRIOT LIBRARY and it gives me pleasure to express the hope that your plans will be carried out to the great benefit of the men who are in the fighting forces.

Cordially and Sincerely yours

Woodrow Wilson

Rev. Judson Swift, Gen. Sec. American Tract Society New York City

How the Patriot Library is valued by those who receive it is shown by the many glowing letters which have come from Commanders and Chaplains of the U. S. warships and from chaplains and Y. M. C. A. Secretaries at the Camps to which sets of this library have been forwarded.

Captain Spencer S. Wood, commanding one of the U. S. Battleships writes:

"We have just received the excellent set of books, The Patriot Library. Please accept my thanks and those of the crew for this interesting set of books which will add so greatly to the comfort and welfare of the men of this ship. We indeed appreciate your interest and kind thoughts of us."

Mr. Charles L. Neibel, Religious Work Director at Camp Logan, Houston, Texas, writes:

"Thank you for three sets of the Patriot Library. I have placed them in the three busiest buildings at our camp, and I am sure they will be eagerly read by the men who are interested in religious literature. We could use at least three more sets of books, if you can send them."

Our readers are reminded of the American Tract Society's urgent appeal for $100,000.00 to finance the great enterprise of furnishing this Patriot Library, wherever it is needed. Donations for this purpose may be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, American Tract Society, Park Avenue and 40th Street, New York, N. Y.

APPLES OF GOLD

An ideal paper for Primary Departments and infant classes and for little children in the home. Single copies, 30 cents; five copies to one address, 25 cents; ten or more, 20 cents each, per year. Postage on Canadian and foreign subscriptions, 6 cents per copy additional. Sample copies sent on request.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY Park Ave. and 40th St., New York City

This FREE Shoe Book. Best offering with photographs and descriptions of EZ WEAR shoes for Men, Women and Children. EZ WEAR shoes are sent post-paid, guaranteed to combine comfort, style and quality, to fit perfectly or money back. Amazingly low prices. Send for copy to-day. THE FN Simon Shoe 150 BROADWAY BROOKLYN NY

What Is An Internal Bath?

By R. W. BEAL

MUCH has been said and volumes have been written describing at length the many kinds of baths civilized man has indulged in from time to time. Every possible resource of the human mind has been brought into play to fashion new methods of bathing, but strange as it may seem the most important, as well as the most beneficial of all baths, the "Internal Bath," has been given little thought.

The reason for this is probably due to the fact that few people seem to realize the tremendous part that internal bathing plays in the acquiring and maintaining of health.

If you were to ask a dozen people to define an internal bath, you would have as many different definitions and the probability is that not one of them would be correct. To avoid any misconception as to what constitutes an internal bath, let it be said that a hot water enema is no more an internal bath than a bill of fare is a dinner.

If it were possible and agreeable to take the great mass of thinking people to witness an average post mortem, the sights they would see and the things they would learn would prove of such lasting benefit and impress them so profoundly that further argument in favor of internal bathing would be unnecessary to convince them.

Unfortunately, however, it is not possible to do this, profitable as such an experience would doubtless prove to be. There is then, only one other way to get this information into their hands and that is by acquainting them with such knowledge as will enable them to appreciate the value of this long-sought-for health-producing necessity.

Few people realize what a very little thing is necessary sometimes to improve their physical condition. Also, they have almost no conception of how little carelessness, indifference or neglect can be the fundamental cause of the most virulent disease.

For instance, that universal disorder from which almost all humanity is suffering, known as "constipation," "auto-intoxication," "auto-infection," and a multitude of other terms, is not only curable but preventable through the consistent practice of internal bathing.

How many people realize that normal functioning of the bowels and a clean intestinal tract make it impossible to become sick? "Man of today is only fifty per cent. efficient." Reduced to simple English this means that most men are trying to do a man's portion of work on half a man's power. This applies equally to women.

That it is impossible to continue to do this indefinitely must be apparent to all. Nature never intended the delicate human organism to be operated on a hundred per cent. overload. A machine could not stand this and not break down and the body certainly cannot do more than a machine. There is entirely too much unnecessary and avoidable sickness in the world.

How many people can you name, including yourself, who are physically vigorous, healthy and strong? The number is appallingly small.

It is not a complex matter to keep in condition, but it takes a little time, and in these strenuous days people have time to do everything else necessary for the attainment of happiness but the most essential thing of all, that of giving their bodies their proper care.

Would you believe that five to ten minutes of time devoted to systematic internal bathing can make you healthy and maintain your physical efficiency indefinitely? Granting that such a simple procedure as this will do what is claimed for it, is it not worth while to learn more about that which will accomplish this end?

Internal bathing will do this, and it will do it for people of all ages and in all conditions of health and disease.

People don't seem to realize, strange to say, how important it is to keep the body free from accumulated body-waste poisons. Their doing so would prevent the absorption into the blood of the poisonous excretions of the body, and health would be the inevitable result.

If you would keep your blood pure, your heart normal, your eyes clear, your complexion clean, your mind keen, your blood pressure normal, your nerves relaxed and be able to enjoy the vigor of youth in your declining years, practice internal bathing and begin today.

Now that your attention has been called to the importance of internal bathing, it may be that a number of questions will suggest themselves to your mind. You will probably want to know WHAT an Internal Bath is, WHY people should take them, and the WAY to take them. These and countless other questions are all answered in a booklet entitled "THE WHAT, THE WHY and THE WAY OF INTERNAL BATHING," written by Doctor Chas. A. Tyrrell, the inventor of the "J. B. L. Cascade," whose lifelong study and research along this line make him the preeminent authority on this subject.

Not only has internal bathing saved and prolonged Dr. Tyrrell's own life, but the lives of a multitude of hopeless individuals have been equally spared and prolonged. No book has ever been written containing such a vast amount of practical information to the business man, the worker, and the housewife; all that is necessary to secure this book is to write to Dr. Chas. A. Tyrrell at Number 134 West 65th Street, New York City, and mention having read this article in the AMERICAN MESSENGER, and the same will be immediately mailed to you free of all cost or obligation.

Perhaps you realize now, more than ever, the truth of these statements, and, if the reading of this article will result in a proper appreciation on your part of the value of internal bathing, it will have served its purpose. What will you want to do now is to avail yourself of the opportunity for learning more about the subject, and your writing for this book will give you that information. Do not put off doing this, but send for the book now while the matter is fresh in your mind.

"Procrastination is the thief of time." A thief is one who steals something. Don't allow procrastination to cheat you out of your opportunity to get this valuable information which is free for the asking. If you would be natural, be healthy. It is unnatural to be sick. Why be unnatural, when it is such a simple thing to be well?

Just For Fun

"I think I'll start a magazine to be called Umbrage." "Why that somewhat unusual name?" "People are so apt to take it."

"There's no danger," said the doctor. "It's only a carbuncle coming on the back of your neck. But you must keep your eye on it!"

Mistress: "Why don't you keep the baby quiet, Kate?" Kate: "I can't keep him quiet, ma'am, unless I let him make a noise."

"Is your husband an even-tempered man?" "Yes," answered Mrs. Corn-tossel. "He's jes' about as cross one day as another."

The teacher had recited "The Landing of the Pilgrims." Then she requested each pupil to draw from his or her imagination a picture of Plymouth Rock. Most of them went to work at once, but one little fellow hesitated, and at length raised his hand. "Well, Willie, what is it?" asked the teacher. "Please, ma'am, do you want us to draw a hen or a rooster?"

Dr. Blank was a man who took his profession seriously, and he had an immense practise. What annoyed him was to be sent for by fussy women to treat the most trifling ailments. One woman was particularly aggravating in this respect, and he resolved to cure her. One day she observed a red spot on her hand, and at once telephoned for him. He came, looked at the spot, and said, "You did well to send for me early." "Is it dangerous, then?" she asked. "Certainly not," said the doctor, "but tomorrow it would have disappeared, and I should have lost my fee for this visit."

Mrs. Davenport gave her two children some fruit one afternoon. Handing it to Joseph, she bade him let the little sister have the first choice. Shortly after she called him and said, "Joseph, I notice that your little sister took a very small apple. Did you let her have her choice, as I told you to?" "Yes, mother," replied the boy, "I told her she could have the little one or none at all, and she chose the little one."

"Now," said the doctor to the young married man, "if you will take this medicine you will sleep like a baby."

"Well, doctor," he answered, "if you mean like our baby, I guess I won't take it."

The train was approaching Joplin, and the colored porter walked briskly up to Mr. Carter, of Missouri, and, smiling broadly, asked:

"Shall I jest brush you off, sah?" "Not on your life," replied Mr. Carter. "I'll get off this train in the regular way, as soon as it stops."

FOOT COMFORT ASSURED

Brooklyn Man Solves the Problem

It is no longer necessary to suffer agonies that are caused by misfit shoes, for Mr. Simon of Brooklyn, N. Y., has proven that he can fit perfectly by mail. Simon's Ezwear shoes are built to give every possible foot comfort; they are soft and stylish and do not need breaking in. They fit like the proverbial old pair, the minute you wear them. Every pair is guaranteed to give satisfaction and to fit perfectly.

Mr. F. N. Simon will gladly send a free catalogue of over 500 styles of Ezwear shoes to all who write him, along with his scientific self-measuring blank. Write for your copy today and give your feet their much needed happiness. Address all communications to Mr. F. N. Simon, 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., and you will receive personal attention.

Our Book Table

Any book here mentioned will be sent upon receipt of the given price (plus postage in the case of "net" books), if ordered from the "American Tract Society," Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York City.

Select Notes on the International Sunday School Lessons.—By Rev. F. N. Peloubet, D.D., and Amos R. Wells, Litt.D., LL.D.

This forty-fourth annual volume of Peloubet's Select Notes maintains the high standard of its predecessors. It presents a treatment of the Improved Uniform Lesson Series which constitutes an admirable basis for teaching all grades in the Sunday School. It gives broad views of the Scripture history, making one consecutive history out of the detached lesson portions. It contains lucid explanations of the lesson text, appropriate and abundant illustrations, valuable library references and other useful helps. All students of the International Uniform Sunday School Lessons for 1918 will find this volume a most satisfactory commentary. (Cloth, 383 pages. $1.25 net; by mail, $1.35. W. A. Wilde Co.).

The Gospel of Mark: An Exposition.—By Charles R. Erdman.

The fact that the International Sunday School Lessons for the first six months of 1918 are taken from the Gospel of Mark makes this concise and well-arranged volume very timely. Dr. Erdman is Professor in Princeton Theological Seminary, and here gives the ripe fruit of his wide study and broad experience.

Dr. Erdman's analysis of Mark's Gospel will be found exceedingly helpful to all Bible students and Sunday School teachers. (Cloth, 200 pages. Price 60 cents, net, postpaid. Westminster Press, Philadelphia, Pa.).

A Most Desirable New Year's Gift

The gift of a year's subscription to the AMERICAN MESSENGER, coupled with a copy of the attractive little year book entitled, "Daily Food for Christians," will make a most acceptable New Year's remembrance. It costs but sixty cents to send this remembrance anywhere in the United States or its possessions.

Hundreds of our subscribers have already secured a copy of "Daily Food" in connection with the renewal of their subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER, and we present one more opportunity whereby all those who wish may procure this helpful and uplifting little book, which has been the means of inspiration and comfort to thousands upon thousands of human souls.

We will give a copy of "Daily Food," postpaid, and one year's subscription, new or renewal, to the AMERICAN MESSENGER for 60 cents, or we will give the book as a premium to any subscriber who renews his or her own subscription and sends one new subscription, remitting $1.00 in all. If the new subscriber in the foregoing case desires a copy of "Daily Food," $1.10 must be remitted. For every Canadian subscription 12 cents additional must be remitted, and for every foreign subscription 24 cents additional.

Upon request, we will send a copy of the beautiful Christmas issue for 1917 to every new subscriber, in addition to the full subscription for the year 1918.

AMERICAN MESSENGER
Park Ave. and 40th St., New York

THE KEY THAT UNLOCKS THE "NEW IMPROVED" LESSONS

Tarbell's Teachers' Guide, 1918

By MARTHA TARBELL, Ph.D.

is the only lesson handbook that divides and treats the new International lesson by grades. Whatever "Helps" you use next year Tarbell's will be found indispensable.

"The best Manual to the International Sunday School Lessons."—Christian Advocate.

$1.25 Net ($1.35 postpaid)

FLEMING H REVELL COMPANY New York, 158 5th Ave. Chicago 17 N. Wabash Av.

For the International Lessons 1918

1st and 2nd Quarters, January—June

THE GOSPEL OF THE SON OF GOD:
STUDIES IN MARK

3rd Quarter, July—September

STUDIES IN THE CHRISTIAN LIFE

4th Quarter, October—December

THE PATRIARCHS AND EARLY
LEADERS OF ISRAEL: FROM ABRA-HAM TO THE SETTLEMENT IN CANAAN

Published by American Tract Society—The Meridian Press
New York

For the third Quarter

RELIGIOUS LIFE OF FAMOUS AMERICANS

By LOUIS ALBERT BANKS

Although the International Lessons in this quarter deal more especially with the early Christian lives we must not forget that our practically present-day famous men and women were equally people of Christian-life importance. They, too, made Christ a part of their every-day life and belief.

It was this faith and practice which was the base of their successes, which gave to them strength in times of stress and care and carried them onward. Among these well-known men and women are Abraham Lincoln, Rufus Choate, Samuel F. B. Morse, John Quincy Adams, James A. Garfield, Emma Willard, Abigail Adams, "Stonewall" Jackson and Robert E. Lee.

Cloth. 12mo. Frontispiece. 248 pages.
Price, 50 cents, postpaid.

EVIDENCES OF CHRISTIANITY

By CHARLES P. McILVAINE, D. D.

At 75 cents (by mail, 85 cents) can be equally used with profit in the third quarter.

For the first and second Quarters

JOHN MARK: THE MAKING OF A SAINT

By JAMES D. HUNTER, D. D. Introduction
by FLOYD W. TOMPKINS, D. D.

This is not an ordinary biography or formal treatise of John Mark. It is a blending of the biographical and the didactical. The aim is to make John Mark live before us and instruct by his examples at every turn. It is good to know how St. Mark the Evangelist lived and fought and fell and conquered. In this volume his career is made to come very close to the life of the young Christian today and is full of teachings about meeting opportunities and temptations in the twentieth century. The book is divided into five sections which correspond with the five distinct periods of the Evangelist.

Cloth. 12mo. 113 pages with Index.
Price, 50 cents. (By mail, 55 cents.)

For the fourth Quarter

STUDIES IN THE BOOK OF GENE- SIS

By H. B. PRATT

The whole fourth quarter is taken up in Genesis. No better volume on the Book of Genesis can be found than this one. There are so many doubtful points, overlapping events and apparently conflicting circumstances in the first book of Moses which need satisfactory explanations that this volume meets a demand of students of the Old Testament. It is especially valuable because the subject is handled by a man who has given a life to its study and research. The book makes an excellent companion volume to "Evidences of Christianity."

8vo. Cloth. Frontispiece. 530 pages.
Price, net 75 cents. (By mail, 85 cents.)

For the first and second Quarters

STUDIES IN MARK'S GOSPEL

By CHARLES S. ROBINSON, D. D.

This is a standard volume dealing with the main incidents in our Lord's ministry as recorded by Mark. There are twenty-eight big chapters complete with clear expository detail, with illustrations and enforcements easily joined together.

They follow the gospel history and doctrine in orderly progress through the narrative of the evangelist Mark, taking up consecutive passages so that all harmonize and make a consistent whole. It is this important feature which makes the book of great usefulness. Because of the reasonable price it can be extensively used, and because of the subject treated and arrangement it will be of immense advantage for use in the International Lessons.

Paper bound. 12mo. 299 pages.
Price, 30 cents. (By mail, 35 cents.)

For Continuous Use

NEW TESTAMENT WITH NOTES

Prefatory Note by
J. WILBUR CHAPMAN, D. D.

This New Testament is an innovation for complete notes and explanations on the Scriptures in compact form. It is in answer to the demand for a pocket-size book with all the advantages of our larger complete Self-Explaining Bible. There is an introductory synopsis at the beginning of each chapter, notes and explanations at the bottom of each page, and instructions which make daily application of the Word. This is in the King James Version with references.

In two bindings:

Silk Cloth, red edges, with printed jacket,
net 85 cents, postpaid;

Limp morocco, divinity circuit, red under gold edges, boxed, net $1.25, postpaid.

Order from
American Tract Society—The Meridian Press
Park Avenue and 40th Street
New York

Our Complete Catalog No. 93 is now ready. Let us send you your copy.

THE
AMERICAN MESSENGER

Vol. 76. No. 2.

FEBRUARY, 1918

50 Cents a Year
Single Copy, 5 Cents

OUTSIDE THE JOPPA GATE AT JERUSALEM

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY, NEW YORK.

For the first and second Quarters

JOHN MARK: THE MAKING OF A SAINTBy JAMES D. HUNTER, D. D. Introduction
by FLOYD W. TOMPKINS, D. D.

This is not an ordinary biography or formal treatise of John Mark. It is a blending of the biographical and the didactical. The aim is to make John Mark live before us and instruct by his examples at every turn. It is good to know how St. Mark the Evangelist lived and fought and fell and conquered. In this volume his career is made to come very close to the life of the young Christian today and is full of teachings about meeting opportunities and temptations in the twentieth century. The book is divided into five sections which correspond with the five distinct periods of the Evangelist.

Cloth. 12mo. 113 pages with Index.
Price, 50 cents. (By mail, 55 cents.)

For the third Quarter

RELIGIOUS LIFE OF FAMOUS AMERICANS

By LOUIS ALBERT BANKS

Although the International Lessons in this quarter deal more especially with the early Christian lives we must not forget that our practically present-day famous men and women were equally people of Christian-life importance. They, too, made Christ a part of their every-day life and belief. It was this faith and practice which was the base of their successes, which gave to them strength in times of stress and care and carried them onward. Among these well-known men and women are Abraham Lincoln, Rufus Choate, Samuel F. B. Morse, John Quincy Adams, James A. Garfield, Emma Willard, Abigail Adams, "Stonewall" Jackson and Robert E. Lee.

Cloth. 12mo. Frontispiece. 248 pages.
Price, 50 cents, postpaid.

EVIDENCES OF CHRISTIANITY

By CHARLES P. McILVAINE, D. D.

At 75 cents (by mail, 85 cents) can be equally used with profit in the third quarter.

You need these timely books for the

INTERNATIONAL LESSONS

1918

1st and 2nd Quarters, January-June

THE GOSPEL OF THE SON OF GOD:
STUDIES IN MARKRead "John Mark: The Making of a Saint" and also "Studies in Mark's Gospel"

3rd Quarter, July-September

STUDIES IN THE CHRISTIAN LIFE

Read "Religious Life of Famous Americans"

4th Quarter, October-December

THE PATRIARCHS AND EARLY LEADERS OF ISRAEL: FROM ABRAHAM TO THE SETTLEMENT IN CANAAN

Read "Studies in the Book of Genesis"

You will find these books enlightening and very timely. Their reading affords excellent preparation for the lessons.

Published by

The American Tract Society—The Meridian Press
New York

For the fourth Quarter

STUDIES IN THE BOOK OF GENESIS

By H. B. PRATT

The whole fourth quarter is taken up in Genesis. No better volume on the Book of Genesis can be found than this one. There are so many doubtful points, overlapping events and apparently conflicting circumstances in the first book of Moses which need satisfactory explanations that this volume meets a demand of students of the Old Testament. It is especially valuable because the subject is handled by a man who has given a life to its study and research. The book makes an excellent companion volume to "Evidences of Christianity."

8vo. Cloth. Frontispiece. 530 pages.
Price, net 75 cents. (By mail, 85 cents.)

For the first and second Quarters

STUDIES IN MARK'S GOSPEL

By CHARLES S. ROBINSON, D. D.

This is a standard volume dealing with the main incidents in our Lord's ministry as recorded by Mark. There are twenty-eight big chapters complete with clear expository detail, with illustrations and enforcements easily joined together.

They follow the gospel history and doctrine in orderly progress through the narrative of the evangelist Mark, taking up consecutive passages so that all harmonize and make a consistent whole. It is this important feature which makes the book of great usefulness. Because of the reasonable price it can be extensively used, and because of the subject treated and arrangement it will be of immense advantage for use in the International Lessons.

Paper bound. 12mo. 299 pages.
Price, 30 cents. (By mail, 35 cents.)

For Continuous Use

NEW TESTAMENT WITH NOTESPrefatory Note by
J. WILBUR CHAPMAN, D. D.

This New Testament is an innovation for complete notes and explanations on the Scriptures in compact form. It is in answer to the demand for a pocket-size book with all the advantages of our larger complete Self-Explaining Bible. There is an introductory synopsis at the beginning of each chapter, notes and explanations at the bottom of each page, and instructions which make daily application of the Word. This is in the King James Version with references.

In two bindings:
Silk Cloth, red edges, with printed jacket, net 85 cents, postpaid;
Limp morocco, divinity circuit, red under gold edges, boxed, net $1.25, postpaid.

Order your books from American Tract Society—The Meridian Press
Park Avenue and 40th Street
New York

Our Complete Catalog No. 93 is now ready. Let us send you your copy.

The American Messenger

"Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Luke 2:10

Vol. 76. No. 2

FEBRUARY, 1918

Copyright, 1918, by American Tract Society.

Terms: 50 cents per annum
Single copy, 5 cents

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

PUBLISHED MONTHLY

BY THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

OFFICERS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President.

JOHN HENRY JOWETT, M.A., D.D., Vice-President.

JUDSON SWIFT, D.D., General Secretary.

LOUIS TAG, Treasurer.

REV. HENRY LEWIS, Ph.D., Recording Secretary.

All of the above-named officers should be addressed at Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Rev. David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.

Rev. Charles Carroll Albertson, D.D.

Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.

Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D.

Rev. George Ernest Merriam.

Entered at the Post Office in New York as second-class matter.

Serving Our Country

The month of February contains the birthday anniversaries of Washington and Lincoln, and that fact always stirs the feeling of patriotism in our hearts. These two men, one the founder and the other in a very real sense the saviour of this nation, will always shine as splendid examples of self-sacrifice and devotion calling for emulation on the part of every true lover of his country.

At the present time there is a louder call for the spirit that was shown by Washington and Lincoln than at any previous time in our history. We need the qualities of unswerving loyalty, courage, patience and endurance which they showed, for we have before us an even greater task than they confronted.

Every man, woman and child should ask the question, how may I serve my country best? And then, without hesitation and in the spirit of self-forgetfulness, we should take up the line of service which will help our country most in this time of stress.

As the days and months pass, it becomes increasingly plain that the path before us is one that will entail privation and loss. Let us be manly and courageous to endure the hard and the bitter things that may come, remembering that it is only through suffering that we can be made perfect.

The thought of patriotism will take on new meaning as we pass through the experiences of self-denial and restriction imposed by present conditions. But it will have a higher and better meaning if our spirits respond to the ideal set before us, and we realize that by serving our country well we are serving God and humanity.

Twenty-Five Years of Devoted Service

On January 2, 1918, Rev. Judson Swift, D.D. completed twenty-five years of service with the American Tract Society. His fellow-workers felt that this occasion should not pass unnoticed, and accordingly the following congratulatory message was prepared and presented to him, bearing the signatures of all those enrolled in the office force at the Society's headquarters in New York:

"On this twenty-fifth anniversary of your entrance upon the work of the American Tract Society we desire to express to you our heartiest congratulations upon the completion of a quarter of a century's service for the cause of Christian literature, and to express our earnest hope for a long continuance of your efficient toil in this branch of the Master's Kingdom.

"We rejoice at the splendid achievements wrought for the American Tract Society during this long period of service, for your courageous leadership in dark and troubled days, and for your successful mastery of adverse conditions so that the Society now rests upon a firmer foundation than ever before. We appreciate most highly the spirit of self-sacrifice that has constantly dominated your spirit and which has shown itself in so many ways as you have carried forward the heavy burden of responsibility that has rested upon your shoulders.

"We are grateful at the prospect for a widening of the Society's influence through its work for the soldiers and sailors, and through the broadening of its efforts for the people of Latin America. We believe that the best days of the American Tract Society are those yet to come, because of the magnificent opportunities that lie before it and because of the splendid impetus which has been given to its activities through your splendid leadership.

"As we look forward to the year before us we do so with the hope and prayer that it may be one of unparalleled accomplishment for the Society, and that for the honored and beloved General Secretary of our Society it may be indeed a most Happy New Year."

Dr. Swift responded fittingly to this message by expressing his warm appreciation of the sentiments which it contained and of the thoughtfulness which had prompted its presentation.

* * *

Roger Williams Day

There is a general agreement among the Baptist churches of the country to observe Sunday, February 17, 1918 as Roger Williams Day.

This emphasis upon the life and work of one of the pioneers of our early colonial history comes at an opportune time, for Roger Williams stood for the fullest possible measure of liberty, and by his firm stand he did much to establish the principle of religious freedom as one of the fundamental laws of the land.

Special Prize Offer

Two cash prizes, the First $500.00 and the Second $300.00, will be given for the two best original manuscripts submitted subject to the following conditions:

1. The manuscripts to be available for publication in book form, and of a religious character with a strong Christian motive.

2. The manuscripts desired are a story for children, a story for young people, a story for adults, and a manuscript setting forth the necessity of the conservation of the moral and spiritual forces of our nation. Manuscripts of biographies and missionary achievements, also other manuscripts carrying a strong Christian message will be eligible.

3. The usual royalty on book publications will be paid to the author in addition to the cash prize. The manuscripts receiving the prizes shall become the property of the American Tract Society.

4. The manuscripts submitted must be typewritten, and on one side of the sheet only, and the length of the manuscript is not to exceed 75,000 words.

5. The manuscripts are to be in the hands of the Publishing Committee not later than May 15th, 1918, and are to be addressed to Rev. Judson Swift, D.D., General Secretary, Park Avenue and 40th Street, New York, N. Y.

6. Manuscripts not receiving either of the prizes, but accepted, will be published on the royalty basis by mutual agreement.

7. The prizes will be awarded by the Publishing Committee.

8. All manuscripts are forwarded at the risk of the author.

9. The prize books will be published under the imprint of THE MERIDIAN PRESS.

10. The cash for these prizes is provided from the income of the George Wood Premium Fund.

* * *

For Our Soldiers and Sailors

Reading matter of a high Christian character is being furnished to our soldiers and sailors by the American Tract Society. Since the United States entered the War the Society has issued and distributed a million and a quarter carefully selected tracts especially adapted to the spiritual needs of our boys, 50,000 Soldier's Text Books, 41,000 copies of Cromwell's Soldier's Pocket Bible, 2,500 copies of "Daily Food" in khaki, and 150 sets totalling 3,000 volumes of the Patriot Library.

It is the purpose of the American Tract Society to continue this helpful distribution of Christian literature during the entire period of the War. When all the U. S. Battleships and Cruisers and the Y. M. C. A. Buildings in the various Army Cantonments have been supplied with the twenty volumes of the Patriot Library, the Society proposes to forward another set of twenty volumes to each Y. M. C. A. Building and every Battleship and Cruiser in commission in the United States Navy.

The responses received from Commanders of the U. S. Battleships and from the Y. M. C. A. Camp General Secretaries express very high appreciation of the reading matter that has been already provided by the Tract Society, and the statement is repeatedly made that this Christian literature is meeting a very real need and accomplishing much in the way of moral and spiritual uplift for the men in both our Army and our Navy.

✻ ✻ ✻

An Evidence of Good-Will from Japan

An evidence of good-will was presented in the recent gift of $10,000.00 which was brought by the Japanese Y. M. C. A. Deputation to aid the Y. M. C. A. in the United States.

This gift, of which one-half was contributed by the Emperor and Empress of Japan, is an expression of appreciation of the splendid work done by the Y. M. C. A. in the Japanese Army at the time of the Russo-Japanese War.

The Deputation of the Japanese Y. M. C. A. has been sent to the Allied Armies, and will visit the camps here and in Europe. They have brought flags and gifts from Japan which they will distribute in the various centers.

Major General Hibiki, of the Imperial Japanese Army and Chief of the Deputation, states that there are already many Christians in the administrative departments of the Japanese government and high in position of responsibility. When these numbers can be multiplied two or three fold, there is little doubt that the international policies of Japan will be found in thorough accord with the principles of Christianity.

✻ ✻ ✻

Ratify the Prohibition Amendment

The most important piece of temperance work that faces the country at the present time is the ratification of the proposed Prohibition Amendment.

It is evident at the outset that the liquor forces will endeavor to defeat the ratification of this amendment by the State Legislatures by employing all kinds of dilatory tactics. For example, it is proposed in New York State that instead of acting at once upon this measure a referendum be submitted to the voters, and that no vote be taken by the Legislature until after this referendum. Similar efforts will doubtless be made in other States to delay the ratification of the amendment.

All such efforts to delay action should be swept aside. Our country faces the greatest crisis that it has ever known in its history, and every means should be adopted whereby it may safely master this crisis. There is no doubt that the prohibition of the liquor traffic would be one of the most helpful measures that could be adopted in order to enable our country to triumph over the difficulties that confront it.

✻ ✻ ✻

The Patriot Library in France

The Patriot Library is being very gratefully received wherever it is sent. Glowing acknowledgments have come to the American Tract Society from Commanders and Chaplains of the U. S. Battleships and from the Y. M. C. A. workers in the U. S. Army Camps and Cantonnments, which show how highly these books are appreciated by the soldiers and sailors.

Mr George Forrand Taylor writes from the General Hospital in Rouen, France:

"I have the greatest pleasure in acknowledging your splendid gift of the Patriot Library, a gift to the troops it would indeed be difficult to better. The appreciation of good reading matter is wonderfully keen among the lads who pass many a long hour engrossed in interesting reading matter such as you have so generously sent us."

Safety First for Others but Not for Himself

BY REV. HOWARD W. POPE

AS I was returning on the train one night after preaching in the suburbs of a western city, the conductor stopped to take my ticket. As I handed it to him, I also gave him a tract, saying as I did so, "You railroad men do not have many opportunities to attend church. Here is a tract to take the place of the sermon that you did not hear today."

He took it with a smile saying "Oh, we have pretty fair opportunities." Evidently he read the tract, for after collecting his tickets, he returned to talk with me.

"Yes," he said, "they allow us one Sunday in four, but usually a fellow is so tired that he sleeps nearly all the forenoon. However, my wife and children attend church very regularly."

"That is good so far as they are concerned," I said, "but what your wife and children do will not help your soul."

"No, I suppose not," he replied, "but I used to attend church very regularly myself, before I took this job."

"How long have you been on this job," I inquired.

"About fourteen years," was the reply.

"Fourteen years," I said, "man alive, do you realize what you are doing to yourself?"

"Doing to myself? No, what do you mean?"

"I mean that you are committing spiritual suicide."

"Explain yourself," he added, for evidently he was becoming alarmed.

"I mean just this," I said. "You have a body, but suppose you gave it a good square meal only once a month, where would your body be in a couple of weeks? Out in the cemetery. You have a mind, but suppose you used it only once a month, in a little while you would not have brains enough to count your tickets, or to make change. Now, you also have a spiritual nature. You were made to know God and enjoy Him, to worship and serve Him. But, if you do not exercise your spiritual faculties, if you do not think of God, or pray to Him, or read His Word only once a month, don't you see that in a little while your spiritual nature will become dwarfed and stunted and you will be a dead man spiritually?"

Seeing that the man was interested, I moved into the seat, so that he could sit down with me. Then, assuming that he did not know how to become a Christian, I said to him, "How long did it take you to become the owner of that tract which I gave you?"

"About a second, I suppose," he replied.

"Do you realize that you can become a Christian as quickly as you became owner of that tract?"

No, he did not realize it, according to his own admission.

Then I showed him that the difference between a Christian and other people is that the Christian has Christ dwelling in his heart. "He that hath the Son, hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life." (John 5:12.) Then I explained to him that sin is having one's own way instead of walking in God's way. "All we like sheep have gone astray, we have turned everyone to his own way," (Isaiah 53:6.) "Your way," I said, "may not be an immoral way, or a dishonest way, but it is your way, and not God's way, in which you ought to walk."

I showed him that Christ was standing at the door of his heart, knocking for admission, and that if he would open the door, Christ would come in and take possession of his heart, and so change it that he would actually love God's will better than his own. Furthermore, I told him that if he would obey Christ's commandments, He would so manifest Himself to him that he would be conscious of His presence. "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them—I will manifest myself to him." (John 14:21.)

Then, having shown him from the Bible that he was a sinner, and needed a Saviour, and that Jesus Christ was the Saviour he needed, I said, "There are just three steps in becoming a Christian—the first is to accept Christ as your Saviour, just as you accepted my leaflet, and you can do it in a minute. The second step is to confess Christ as your Saviour, and that will not take a minute. The third step is to obey Christ as your Saviour, and that will take all your life. With this understanding of what it is to become a Christian, will you take the first step now? Will you accept Christ as your Saviour, and give me your hand on it?"

As I held out my hand, he grasped it heartily, and said, "Yes sir, I will, I will accept Christ as my Saviour now."

The next minute he shouted, "Last station, everybody out," and away he went for the door as if he had been shot out of a cannon. While I had been talking, we had reached our final destination and his business was to land his passengers, but he was helping them out as a Christian gentleman, with a new purpose in his heart, and a new hope in his life.

Here was an intelligent man, an efficient and faithful servant of the public, but he was neglecting his own spiritual welfare. Doubtless he would have risked his life to save mine, had there been an occasion for it, but he was risking his soul without an occasion. His policy was "Safety First" for others, but not for himself. The least I could do was to point out his danger, and show him how to avoid it, his great opportunity, and how to improve it. He landed me safely in the city which I desired to reach, and I did my best to help him to reach Heaven.

Do we realize what a multitude of train and trolley men are daily risking their lives for us? Do not forget to thank them for it, or to express your appreciation of their patience, courtesy, and faithfulness. Some of them may die for us some day, and there is One who has already died for us, and for them. Speak to them about Him occasionally, for they have much in common with Him. They know by experience the meaning of those words. "He saved others; Himself He cannot save."

And because He would not save Himself in His hour of crucifixion, He is now "able to save to the uttermost them that come unto God by Him, seeing He ever liveth to make intercession for them."

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTION

EDGAR W. WORK, D.D.

The Coronation of the Young Man

BY

REV. EDGAR WHITAKER WORK, D. D.

Pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian Church, New York City

THERE is a page in the Old Testament which no one with red blood in his veins can ever forget. First of all we see a great, strong, blatant personage, full of his own conceit, spouting rage and boastfulness like a furnace; waving a mighty spear like a weaver's beam in defiance of a whole army; terrifying all lesser men with his six cubits and a span, his coat of mail, his helmet and greaves of brass, and most of all with the roar of his voice—Goliath of Gath, the champion of the Philistines!

Days went by, and the heart of Israel died in dismay as they witnessed the strutting of the Philistine giant before them. Then Israel's champion came. But from what an unexpected quarter, and in what a surprising form! No giant of equal size, no man of threatening mien, no warrior in armor clad—a mere shepherd lad!

We see him first on the Bethlehem hills, tending his father's sheep. An altogether simple background it is. The outdoor life had tanned his skin, and the exercise of shepherd life had toughened his limbs. His few adventures with lions and bears, and with the wandering flocks that led him into peril, had fired his spirit within him.

He had come on a family errand to the army to bring parched corn and loaves of bread to his brothers. As he talked with them the Philistine came forth and strutted and spouted as before. In that hour the champion of Israel was born. To him, with his shepherd instinct of right and wrong, with his clear-cut vision of a man's duty when evil was abroad, it seemed a shameful thing that the Philistine should defy the armies of the living God. His big brothers saw the stripling's rising anger. They detected the flashing fire of his eye, and the mighty flame of his spirit. "Go back to those few sheep in the wilderness," they said; but he was nothing daunted.

Next we see him donning Saul's armor. Think of it—the stripling shepherd in a royal coat of mail! It was too much for him; he was like to stumble and fall. A needed lesson this was that came in time. Presently we see him stooping down at the brook and choosing five smooth stones which he hid away in his shepherd bag. Five smooth stones and a shepherd's sling—that was all! When the Philistine saw this unarmed youth come forth to meet him, he raved and fumed more than before. He could not believe his senses. Israel had sent forth a mere boy to meet him. "He was but a youth, and ruddy, and of a fair countenance." No wonder the giant disdained him.

But though the Philistine despised David, history took him to her heart. The spectacle has ever fascinated men. Sculptors like Michelangelo have carved in marble the figure of the shepherd; painters, too, have reproduced this scene on their canvases; and most of all, the pride of humanity finds always something in this scene to stir the pulse and fire the blood. "He was but a youth, and ruddy, and of a fair countenance." Nevertheless history pressed her crown here and now to the shepherd's brow. It is the coronation of youth that illuminates this Old Testament page, and again and again like scenes have been enacted in the generations.

Let us linger upon this thought of how the young man is crowned. First of all there is the coronation of nature—her gift to the young man is the gift of strength. "I write unto you, young men, because you are strong." The world is ever in need of strength. There are great enterprises to be undertaken, large tasks to be discharged. As men grow older strength begins to wane. The climax of a man's physical power and prowess comes early—it is remarkable how early it comes. Somewhere about twenty or twenty-one years of age the thews of a young man's strength grow more solid, his muscles begin to harden, and he begins to be ready for his work. Not yet is he fully endowed with wisdom, but nature goes beforehand and make him rich in strength.

Nature has a further gift for the young man—it is the gift of hot blood. Physiologists tell us that this is literal truth, for the temperature of the blood of adolescence is at least a degree higher. Here is nature's foundation for certain characteristics of youth which are often blamed—for example, the trait of rashness. One would have said that this young shepherd lad, going out to meet the giant with no protective armor and no other arms than his sling and the stones from the brook, was the very embodiment of the rashness of youth. Perhaps so. Nevertheless it is just this daring of youth that makes the enterprise of the world's life. One thinks of the splendid adventure and daring of Elizabethan days: it was the hot blood of youth that sent men out upon voyages of discovery. You can never have a great age without the dash and eagerness of youth.

Moreover the hot blood of youth is the red blood of courage. It is wonderful how nature makes heroes out of mere striplings, boys who are scarcely out of leading-strings. It has been the way of the world always that heroism should not wait upon age. We are witnessing now the capacity of youth to dare and to be strong. Such growth of heroism in the young men of this old world is a noble tribute to the blood that is in them. These are not armies of old and seasoned men that are going out, for the most part, they are lads. That is the pity of it—but also the glory of it. They are but youths, and ruddy, and of a fair countenance. How beautiful they are!

Nature crowns young manhood with another gift of strength—it is the gift of vision and hopefulness. This is the peculiar ability of youth, the ability to believe in the future. Older men fear the future because they remember their experiences of the past, but young hearts take no counsel of their fears. They see life as an open book, and they are ready to write in it. Their great life-problems have not fully unfolded before them. They see only a straight path, they hear only one clear call. In every hour of duty the world is indebted to the wisdom of older men, but it is also indebted to the strength and hopefulness of youth.

It is this that we see in the picture of young David, going out against the strength of the giant. Look at him! There goes the spirit of youth, and it is a fine and noble thing. It may have limitations. It does not know all. It is hasty, impetuous, over-confident, rash; but also it is ready, it is quick, it is nothing daunted, it abounds in hope and power of action. This is nature's coronation of the young man—the coronation of strength.

History too has done much to recognize the value of these qualities of youth. History always finds large place for youth; quite early she claims him for service. Men are apt to speak of the present age as pre-eminently the age of young hearts. But every age has found use for young men. It is remarkable what records men have made in history before they were of age at all as we count life. The lesson of history seems to be that the die of life is cast early. Men make their major choices when life is still ruddy and the countenance still unfurrowed. There is no law that requires a youth to wait for the beginning of his life-work. He may begin now.

Did not our Lord Himself set the crown upon the brow of young manhood when he called His apostles about him? So far as we are informed, they were everyone in the bloom of early manhood; they had the world before them. We think of John the apostle as being, like David, "ruddy and of a fair countenance." What promise was in that young life! The Fourth Gospel was latent in his soul—that matchless story of the Master's life, with sentences that glow with light and feeling, sentences that have thrilled the souls of men for sixty generations. And Simon Peter—we see him step forth into the arena as a disciple. What, this raw young fisherman, this mere enthusiast, this man of hasty mood and changing temper? Yes, even he, for wrapped up within the life of this man was the rock-like capacity of firmness, the power of love and devotion that would in after-time give him the gift of martyrdom. Yes, our Lord Himself crowned young manhood.

History at large has attended to the coronation of youth. Look at the pages of history and you shall see how hard it is to keep back the boys and young men who come crowding to the front. They are ruddy and of a fair countenance. Some, like the giant, would disdain them, but they come crowding on. Victor Hugo was but fifteen when he read his first poem in the French Academy. Michelangelo was only seventeen when he was at work in the palace of Lorenzo de' Medici. Spurgeon began to preach at eighteen. George Washington was a major at nineteen. Beethoven's fame was already established at twenty-one. Our Lord Himself came to the temple at twelve, and asked and answered questions. At thirty-three His earthly work was done. How the early years of life count!

You say, these were geniuses and their power budded early; but the hands and brains of youth are everywhere busy. You cannot crowd them back. They are willing to work and willing to serve. The world needs them, too, especially when great emergencies arise. Then the heart of youth is ready. Too ready, we say. Yes, it is true, too ready. But is it not nature's way, and is it not the way of Providence? If there are great burdens to bear, the shoulders of youth are fitted to bear them, if there are hills to be climbed in the ascent of humanity the strong-hearted youth is ready. This it seems is the lesson of history. History, like nature, crowns young manhood.

Let us say a word about ancestry, for this also is important. The ruddy look and fair countenance of the youth are not his alone: they have been distilled through generations by the alchemy which God alone understands. What makes the hot blood of youth? Not his own wilful spirit certainly, not the mere stubbornness of his will, not the mere insistence of his own forward personality. It is so easy to misunderstand the heart of youth. We forget what blood is in them. We fail to realize what forces have come down to them by inheritance—bred in their bones, distilled in their blood. We refuse often to see ourselves in them—our own high-souled youth—our own bravery and rashness. Have a care lest we do injustice to the heart of youth!

He is not himself alone. He is brought out of deep infiltration of the past. He has come like a stream from the hilltops in a long procession of spirits who have preceded him. If you would know why your boy is so eager to be at the front today, turn back to some forgotten album, or search in the garret for some neglected canvas on which through the dimness of years you can still discover the face of some strong ancestor who in his youth had a ruddy color and countenance fair to look upon. This is the young man's gift—and likewise his coronation.

It is the beauty of this hour of young manhood's devotion. It is the old spirit of the race flashing out—the spirit that has fought on many a battle-field for right and righteousness. We speak of the "Spirit of '76," and this is what we mean. We mean that our racial spirit, our ancestral fire, our historic devotion is flaming out once more. We mean that the old protests of men's souls against wrong and oppression, the deep insistence of men's spirits upon right and freedom and equality—these are speaking once more. We have not educated our young men in vain. They know the spirit of their ancestors, they know the history of their race, and they have given their response.

It is the spirit of the mothers of men, too, quite as much as their fathers, that flashes out in such a time. These are their mothers' sons who have gone out to fight the battles of the republic. When David Livingstone went up and down the wilderness of Africa as an explorer and missionary, the savages often paused in their purposed work of destruction because they felt a strong power in his presence. It was said of Livingstone that he had his mother's eye. It was the light of his eyes that caused the savages to quail. These boys have their mother's eye, their mother's courage! For no courage in all the world equals the courage of woman; none is so dauntless, none so deeply dyed with the power of silent sacrifice. You mothers, you could not withhold your sons. Nay, more, you would not. It is the young man's coronation, the coronation of the mother's love and courage.

One thing more. In the ruddy face of youth and the countenance fair to look upon, one sees the marks of many hands that have touched him, many minds that have impressed him. One sees, in other words, the instruction he has received, the lessons of many teachers that have been taught him. This especially is the characteristic of young men who have been brought up under a free democracy. They have gone to school not only to teachers and books, but to ideas. It is the best of all schools—the school where youth comes into possession of those ideals that are constructive of life and character. This is how the youth is crowned—by the lessons of many teachers.

And shall we not trust them to be true to what they have learned? Shall we not expect them to carry out their instruction in the history of the times? Shall we not believe that they will enact the truths which have been absorbed in their spirits? The youth is not a philosopher, he is not a wiseacre with knitted brows, nor is he a saint in all his ways. Nevertheless he has received, especially in this free land of ours, the coronation of those ideas and truths that are precious to us as a people. The spirit of freedom—has it not been instilled into him by many books and teachers, by many institutions and symbols? The bright colors of Old Glory that first caught his eye in the cradle, now with all the influence of the years in which he has seen this flashing light before his eyes—can we not understand with what devotion the hot blood of youth looks to-day upon that precious symbol of our nation's life, and with what untiring abandon he is willing to follow it to the end, and if need be die with its beauty floating over him?

They are thinking old thoughts to-day, this vast company of our youth, this army of young men. They are thinking the long thoughts of men's hearts that have to do with freedom, and right and a world made clear for men to live their life and to accomplish their work before God and man.

This is the comfort of the church, too, in relation to the men who go forth from her walls. The church believes that it is not in vain that she has laid a consecrating hand upon her young men; that it is not in vain that she has taught them the lessons of life and eternity, the truths of God's being and God's will and purpose, the truths of Jesus' life and sacrifice, and our ever-blessed redemption by His blood; that it is not in vain that she has taught her young men to trust in God and do their duty; that it is not in vain that she has taught them to feel that come what may to the body there is an inviolable safety and sacredness of the soul of man in the sight of God. The church rejoices that she has given her young men the coronation of these faiths and of the vows which accompany them. And the church believes that her young men will be true to what they have learned!

You who have taught them most of all, fathers and mothers, are you not happy to-day that your young men know the touch of God's word? They know how to pray. They know how to feel in their hearts the presence of God's will, helping and buoying them. They know the old hymns, and they are singing them, too. The home touch is upon them, and the touch of the church is upon them. They can carry their atmosphere with them if they will. They can dominate their environment if they will. They can reproduce the sanctuary in the camp and in the trench if they will.

In all this great company of young men who are ruddy and of a fair countenance we see the promise of a better day for this world. May God in His infinite mercy minimize the sacrifice, but may He also magnify in the heart of youth the worth and magnitude of the Cause! God keep them true! God keep them safe!

The Richest Treasury of Literature

BY THOMAS CURTIS CLARK

The Bible is the Book of Life of the world. But it is also the richest treasury of literary values. It is in fact not simply a book, but a library, embracing many books of various nature. "There is scarcely any part of knowledge worthy of the mind of man, but from Scripture it may have some direction and light," said Hooker. "There is no book like the Bible for excellent learning, wisdom and use," wrote Sir Matthew Hale. And the historian Ewald wrote to Dean Arthur P. Stanley: "In this book is all the wisdom of the world."

If one wishes to acquaint himself with the history of the Providence of God as seen in the development of the great nations of the world from the very beginning to the time of the Christ, where is there a book of history so informing and at the same time so thrilling as the Bible? It describes the events and great personalities that make the nations of Assyria, Babylonia, and Egypt a part of classical history. It carries us back to the very source of the Hebrew race in the turning of Abram to God in the far eastern land and puts before us as in motion pictures the story of this most interesting of all peoples. With God leading them, they pass through their training at the hands of the neighboring nations and develop their national individuality amid the hard conditions of living in the hills of Palestine. Because of their wicked turning away from God and the truth, they are sent to the "furnace of affliction" by the waters of Babylon, and after many years they are permitted to return, a small remnant, regenerated and subdued; then from this little band after several centuries comes the Crown of that most spiritual of nations, the very Son of God.

Can there be found anywhere else such enlightening and fascinating history?

If one is looking for biography, how slender seems the whole world of extra-Biblical life stories as compared with the wealth of portrayal of men and women which the Bible affords? Abraham, the emigrant; Isaac, the meek lover of quiet tent life; Jacob, the shrewd but spiritual adventurer and merchant; Joseph, the man who out of misfortune carved a splendid career; Moses, the world's greatest law-giver and a nation-builder; Joshua, courageous man of war for God's cause; Gideon, Samson, Jephtha, rude warriors and judges; Samuel, who saved the nation for many years and turned it over to the care of the kings; Saul the bold, David the singer, Solomon the splendid—all kings of the people of Israel; Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, prophets, in their turn guiding the destinies of the nation after the kings had failed. Then in the New Testament what gripping stories of men and women: Peter, John, James and the other disciples; Paul, born out of due time to introduce the nation into a new stage of its development; and the august portrayal of that divine life lived among men—where can be found its equal, for interest, for character-building and for destiny?

But, besides history and biography, there are other numerous forms of literature to be found in the Bible. There are law codes, orations, poems, proverbs, romances, parables, dreams, riddles. Is there any kind of literature which may not be found in this matchless library!

It is an old story, but a good one, told of Benjamin Franklin, how he took an old copy of the Bible and read therefrom the beautiful story of Ruth to the French courtiers who waited upon his wisdom; and how they, after the reading, spell-bound, asked him what wonderful volume contained such a perfect piece of literature!

In our zeal for modern things shall we neglect the gift that has come down for our enlightenment in the providence of God?

PRINTED PREACHERS

In Tokyo, Japan

The missionary colporters of the Japan Book and Tract Society find various opportunities of circulating Christian books and tracts in the native language. They hand these "printed preachers" to the people whom they meet in the parks, at the Zoological Garden, at the entrance to the heathen temples, and elsewhere.

In the illustration that appears on this page may be seen a colporter of the Japan Book and Tract Society, who is distributing tracts on the main street in the city of Tokyo. A little snow is lying on the ground, which shows that the Japan Book and Tract Society is urgent both in season and out of season in its efforts to proclaim the saving truths of the Gospel by means of the printed page to all whom it can reach.

As most of our readers know, the Japan Book and Tract Society was organized by the help of the American Tract Society, and it is aided every year by a cash appropriation from that Society, so that it may continue its efficient work of evangelization through the publication and distribution of Christian literature in the Japanese language.

In Idaho and Utah

In a recent letter, Rev. Henry W. Pratt, a veteran missionary colporter of the American Tract Society, tells of his efforts to circulate Christian literature in the States of Idaho and Utah. He writes:

"I spent two weeks in Gooding, Idaho, a town with a population of 3,000 souls, including both Mormons and non-Mormons. The latter are coming in large numbers, and are carrying on active church work. There are four Protestant Churches, Baptist, Presbyterian, Episcopalian and Methodist. When I visited this region fourteen years ago there were only a few homes and no churches. The land all around is very productive and crops this year have been large. Dry farming as well as irrigation is carried on. A new Methodist college was completed in Gooding last summer and the outlook is good for a prosperous institution.

"I made many calls upon the people and found them generally interested in the books issued by the American Tract Society. One lady said, 'I remember your call two years ago, and the books I secured from you then were read by myself and by the family with interest and profit. I like to have my family read this kind of books.' I made another call upon a Roman Catholic lady and her husband, who was a Jew. She evidently knew the worth of good books, and bought a number of those I showed her.

"The Public Library of Gooding bought some books, which were selected by the County Superintendent of Schools. I am always glad to get religious books into the public libraries. Often I find people in town who take the books I offer, and after they have read them they contribute them to the library. The pastors of the churches were also interested in my work.

"In Ogden, Utah, I circulated some books, although I find that in large cities my distribution does not amount to as much as in the smaller places, where the opportunities to get books are not so easy. One friend of the work bought thirty-six books to distribute.

"I visited one family where sickness had prevailed and brought financial distress. Here I felt there was an opportunity to do good by helping to make the children happy for Christmas, so I made a grant of some books suitable for the ages of the children, and the mother was most grateful for this gift."

In the Philippine Islands

Printed preachers in the form of Christian books and tracts in the native dialects are prepared and distributed in the Philippine Islands by the Evangelical Union, of which Rev. Bruce S. Wright is President and Rev. S. B. Kurtz, Secretary and Treasurer. A recent communication from the latter addressed to the General Secretary of the American Tract Society reads in part as follows:

"I hope you will pardon this very late acknowledgment of the American Tract Society's annual contribution of $100.00 to the Literature Department of our Evangelical Union.

"The United Brethren Mission, under which Mission I labor, has a publishing house located at San Fernando, Union Province, which is kept very busy all the time trying to supply the increasing demand for good literature. Ever since the establishment of our mission in Union Province in 1904 we have laid special emphasis upon developing a pure and constructive Christian literature for our people, and we are very happy to state that the results appear in our church life.

ON THE MAIN STREET IN TOKYO, JAPAN.

"I have no doubt that you have received a report concerning the Teacher Training books that were published by the use of the funds the American Tract Society has so kindly placed at the service of the United cause in the Philippines. These books are sold at a reasonable price, and so the fund is kept constantly at work in the production of additional books. It is hoped that two new books will be issued during the present year.

"On behalf of the Evangelical Union I wish to thank the American Tract Society for its cooperation with us in this department of Christian literature. The Union is trying very hard to meet the growing demands, and to keep abreast with the times."

In West China

Rev. William L. L. Knipe, General Secretary of the West China Religious Tract Society, whose headquarters are at Chungking, has sent us some very interesting facts concerning tract distribution and the evangelistic campaign in West China, compiled by the Rev. D. A. Calum, of the Church Missionary Society, who writes:

"For the first ten days of the Chinese New Year we took part in a Special Evangelistic Campaign which was being carried on during those ten days throughout the whole of China.

"The Christians helped splendidly, some for longer and some for shorter periods. The first two days we visited An Hsien city, and preached, sung, pasted tracts, and sold books all over the city.

"The next two days we spent in Hwang Tu Chang, a large village about seven miles from An Hsien. Here we sold about 2,000 Gospel portions and pasted the whole village with tracts and posters. We gave two lantern lectures, which were crowded. There was a company of soldiers stationed there, and the officers professed interest in the Christian Doctrine, and two of them gave addresses from the temple stage. We were asked to open a preaching place there.

"From Hwang Tu Chang we went on to a village called Sang Tsao Yuen, seven miles the other side of An Hsien. Here we preached to large numbers, pasted up tracts, sold quite another 2,000 books, and had two crowded lantern meetings. Here also we were urged to open up work, and premises were offered.

"From there we went on to Tah Shui Chiao, a large market town ruled partly by An Hsien and partly by Chang Ming. I had previously heard of a number of men in that village, mainly scholars and gentry, who were desirous of being instructed in the Faith. They had sent me a list of names. When Mr. Spreckley and I got there we found that accommodation had been prepared for us and our party of about twenty Chinese voluntary helpers, in the Temple where the government schools were situated; in fact, we had the school premises, the lecture hall to have meetings in, the dining hall for meals, and other rooms for sleeping. The school was on holiday. We had also the courtyard for mass meetings, so everything was ready for us. We had special meetings for instructing the interested ones—they numbered over seventy when we got there—we preached and pasted tracts and sold about 5,000 copies of Scripture portions and had great lantern meetings. The Chinese Christians who were helping had many opportunities for speaking of the Lord Jesus. Here we responded to the urgent appeal to open a preaching place, and as a suitable house in good repair was offered, after a few weeks we took it, and it was formally opened later on. The local inquirers bore two-thirds of the expense. There are over 200 names on the books, but only about 50 come to worship. The place has got a name for lawlessness. Please pray for Tah Shui Chiao, which name means Pagoda Water Bridge.

"During the year we have sold about 14,000 scriptures and tracts. The lantern has been used a good deal, and thousands have heard the Gospel. During all the unrest throughout the district I have been able to go on with my journeys and work and have been kept free from fear. The brigands, soldiers, people and officials are all friendly. The Gospel is winning its way, though slowly, and will go on more strongly as the time goes on, until the Lord comes."

LIFE'S HANDICAPS

By Clarence E. Flynn

ONE day a group of Galilean people wanted to carry a sick friend to Jesus to be healed. He was in a house, and when they came near they found such a crowd about the doors and windows that they could not get in. Not to be defeated in their purpose, they cut an opening through the roof and let the sick man, bed and all, down to where the Great Physician was. Of course, the result was that the afflicted person received the gift of a whole body as the reward for their insistent attitude. The story is simply another version of the value of impurity in seeking the gifts of the Great Helper.

This story of the long ago indicates one of the great principles of life, and one which has played a part in the activities and struggles of every age. It suggests that one may at any time have to reckon with handicaps, but that there is usually a way to overcome them, if one has the will to seek and follow that way. There is something highly admirable about the spirit of this group of people who, when they could not accomplish their desire in one way, promptly found another in which they could accomplish it.

The Scriptures say a good many things by implication which they do not say in exactly so many words. It is said that in an experience meeting in which the attendants fell to quoting favorite passages of Scripture, an old lady arose and stated that of all the beautiful and helpful Scripture texts in which she had found strength and comfort, her favorite was this: "Grin and bear it." The Bible does not contain such a text, but it does contain such a teaching, and the old lady was not so far wrong after all.

This Scripture story of the sick man and his friends suggests another adage of the world, which has expression at least by implication in the Scriptures. The Bible does not contain such a text as: "Where there's a will there's a way," yet such is the exact teaching implied in the story outlined above.

Along whatever way one's path may happen to lie, and whatever may be the task which he undertakes to perform, his life would be utterly unnatural if it were devoid of difficulties. A life without handicaps would be no more natural than a summer without showers or a year without a winter. It is not even desirable that one should live without encountering more or less resistance to his efforts to realize his best and highest hopes.

Furthermore, these difficulties are often unforeseen. They cannot be calculated, but they must be allowed for. At the beginning of the carrying out of any enterprise, the proper thing to do is to reckon one's resources and to count the cost. At the beginning of any journey the barriers in the way must be a calculation in the plan. At the outset of any endeavor, one must realize that not every part of his task will be altogether easy. If it were, the finished product would hardly be worth while, and certainly the toiler himself would not have benefited largely from his labor. Difficulties, expected and unexpected, are as certain to come as is the succession of the days and nights.

Life is frequently likened to a race. It is true that it is a progress toward a goal, and that in it there are many who are contending against each other for what they look upon as a victory. Life is not a race, however, in which every element of the situation is ideal for every runner. It is only in dreams where such perfect conditions may be found. In the hard facts of life it is otherwise. In the real race each contestant has at least some odds against him.

Life, then, is a race in which each runner is hampered with a handicap. Each situation presents some difficulty, and occasionally the most brilliant of successes is made in spite of this hindrance. The ideal race would not be one without handicaps. It is rather one in which a man plays his part well in spite of handicaps. The ideal victory is not that which is won because the contestant had everything in his favor. It is rather the one which is gained in spite of the odds which the contestant had against him.

Homer and Milton were blind, yet each won for himself a secure place among the world's small group of immortal poets. It would have been easy for either to have made his affliction an excuse for failure. Instead, each made his handicap an added reason for success. Each learned to glimpse a glory which is hidden to most who are blessed with faultless vision.

Demosthenes was born with a faulty utterance and with a hollow chest. Nevertheless, he conceived a great desire to be an orator. Most men would have found their physical unfitness a sufficient handicap to discourage them from any effort. Demosthenes determined to overcome the hindrances which had been born with him. He sought a remote and secluded place; shaved his head in order that he might not soon venture back among his friends, and exercised his voice and body until the weakness of both had been overcome. All the world is familiar with the final results of his efforts.

On the day when Demosthenes was uttering the amazing words which so tellingly advocated his right to receive a crown at the hands of his fellow citizens, the explanation of his achievement did not lie in his birth. It lay rather in the fact that he had willed to overcome the limitations with which nature had surrounded him. It is true that he had seized a psychological moment, but he was able to seize that moment because he had not feared the long period of painstaking effort which had been necessary to overcome his handicaps. The secret of his success was not opportunity, but toil. He had merely refused to surrender to the forces which would have destroyed the usefulness of many men. His triumph was but the result of a task patiently performed in spite of its difficulty.

During the last century, Spain produced a remarkable artist in the person of Daniel Vierge. He attained eminence in his work while still a young man. At the early age of thirty, however, he suffered complete paralysis of the right side. It would have been easy to have admitted that his work with the brush and pencil was done, and to have resigned himself to what seemed to be a hard fate. Such was not his spirit, however. He had no intention of relinquishing the tools of his art. He still had the use of his left arm, and he determined that it should be trained to possess the power which the other had lost.

The long and tedious period of training had to be gone through again. He accomplished his task, however, and in spite of the difficulty which he had encountered he learned to draw nearly as well with his left hand as he had ever been able to do with the other. By making the most of the one resource which was left to him, he managed to retain his place in the front rank of his profession as an illustrator. The work which he produced after his affliction can scarcely be distinguished in quality from his earlier efforts.

Dr. Holmes once said that the best way to live long is to become afflicted with some serious disease. What he meant was that such an affliction sometimes teaches people the care of their bodies, when enduring health would leave them utterly careless of the essential laws of well-being. It does sometimes happen that, even in this regard, a handicap is found to be a helpful thing. There are cases on record which tell the story of renewed effort to cultivate health and strength, when life was rapidly slipping away, and of the crowning of that effort with success, health, and long life.

The old story of the hare and the tortoise is re-enacted daily in modern life. The battle does not always go to the strong, nor is victory in the race the inevitable portion of the swift. The winner is more apt to be the patient toiler who has chosen a purpose, and who struggles in the direction of his goal in spite of handicaps. His progress may not always be swift, but it is at least continuous.

✻ ✻ ✻

"BUT IF NOT"

BY EMMA YOUNGLOVE.

Wonderful was the faith of the three Jews who defied the despotic king Nebuchadnezzar. They believed that, in some way, they knew not how, their God would deliver them out of the cruel land of the tyrant. The story stands, a beautiful and satisfying illustration of faith and its fitting reward.

But, though Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego knew that Jehovah could circumvent or overcome Nebuchadnezzar, and though they trusted that He would rescue them from the wicked earthly ruler, their faith did not end there. They realized that it was for God, not for them, to decide what He would do. As for them, whether He left them to a cruel fate or sent His angel to walk with them unscathed, they would be loyal to the God whom they worshipped.

A little girl in India, a child of ten years, was tortured to make her abjure the Christian religion. It was without avail, and the attempt was abandoned. Strange to say, she was brought back to the mission school, where she could receive further Christian training. When asked how she remained true in spite of the torture, she replied: "I thought of the three men in the furnace. The fire was not allowed to burn anything but the cords that bound them. I knew it was the same with me; the fire could not burn anything but the cords that bound me."

Having such confidence in the divine wisdom and power and goodness, men can say with Job, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him"; men can join with the three Jews in the Babylonian court in saying, "God is able to deliver us and He will deliver us; but if not, we will not serve thy gods, nor worship the golden image." Like Jesus in Gethsemane, men can pray, "Not my will, but thine, be done."

In these awful days of suffering and horror, when the furnace is heated seven times more than it is wont to be heated, may God sustain our faith in Him, that we may know that the fire cannot burn anything except the cords that bind us.

✻ ✻ ✻

The Awakening

BY THOMAS CURTIS CLARK.

*I walked in pride; I knew not love;
All men were alien unto me;
For me there dwelt no God above.
How blind proud man can be!*

*Then Sorrow took my hand and led
By rivers wild, through valleys drear;
My heart with grief and anguish bled—
But Love to me drew near.*

*She taught me all the ways of God;
She told me of the griefs of men;
Then did I see and humbly trod
The path of peace again.*

HIS VINEYARD AND OURS

Christian Literature for India

A very interesting report on Protestant Tamil Christian Literature has just been issued by the Christian Literature Society for India. This report has been prepared by Rev. A. C. Clayton, a missionary who for the past ten years has devoted all his time to the production of Christian literature in the Tamil language, and in support of whose work the American Tract Society has made an annual cash appropriation for several years. There are about 20,000,000 people who speak the Tamil language. Of these the number who can read is estimated at about 2,000,000.

Printing in the Tamil language was begun in the latter part of the sixteenth century. Mention is made of a book printed at Goa in 1561. Dr. Murdoch in his "Classified Catalogue of Tamil Christian Literature" says that the first Tamil book printed was the "Doctrina Christiana" of Giovanni Gonsalvez, who is said to have first cast Tamulic characters in 1577.

There are several societies and missions that publish in Tamil. Among them are the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, whose press at Vepery, Madras, is one of the largest in India and the Christian Literature Society, with which is amalgamated the Madras Religious Tract and Book Society.

The Christian Literature Society was established by Protestant Christians under the name of the Christian Vernacular Education Society as a Memorial of the Indian Mutiny, and is now the largest missionary publishing agency in India as well as the chief publishing house for Tamil Christian Literature. Its headquarters are in London, England. Its principal office and depot in India is in Madras, but it has branches in Colombo, Jaffna, Calcutta, Bombay, Mysore, Ludhiana, Allahabad, Rangoon and Cuttack. It publishes in about a dozen different languages besides English.

The catalogue of Tamil Christian Literature which has been issued under Mr. Clayton's editorship shows what has already been accomplished, and in view of the limited financial means that have been available the result is highly creditable to the missionary force in India.

But there are other pressing needs which are still to be met, and which are summarized by Mr. Clayton as follows:

- (1) One strong, well edited, interesting, up-to-date, illustrated magazine for the Christian family circle.
- (2) New and thoroughly satisfactory handbills and small tracts.
- (3) Commentaries and expositions of books of the Old and New Testament most likely to help the Tamil preacher and catechist.
- (4) Good healthy stories.
- (5) Inspiring biographies.
- (6) Books on the health of the body, of the mind, and of the community.

In his report Mr. Clayton shows a firm grasp on the whole question of Tamil Christian Literature, and his suggestions for future development are well calculated to advance the progress of the Kingdom through the agency of the printed page.

The illustration that appears on this page of the AMERICAN MESSENGER is reproduced from a photograph forwarded to us by the Christian Literature Society for India. It portrays one phase of the domestic life of India, which is almost wholly dependent upon manual labor.

The Latest Edition of the Arabic Bible

The romantic story of the latest edition of the Arabic Bible is told by Dr. Franklin E. Hoskins in these words:

"Twelve years ago the Syria Mission Bible Society voted to produce the latest edition of the Arabic Bible. Ten years ago the Mission Press purchased a supply of paper, new machinery, etc., and began the long task. Had one of the actions in the chains of providence been omitted at the right time, we could not, for many reasons, have regained the lost ground in another ten years. One year went in preparation, seven years in the adaptation of the new references and the making of the greater part of the plates and one year in carrying the edition through the press. The printing of the final pages was completed on the very day that we left Beirut for our long journey to America, June 26, 1916.

TWO WOMEN GRINDING CORN IN INDIA

"The work during the last two years was carried on under the greatest difficulties, from the lack of ordinary and proper materials for the casting of the type and the making of the plates and the printing. The city gas works in Beirut went out of business at the very beginning of the war. Our suction plant, where we made our own gas for a time, was rendered useless by the lack of coke—which we had been able to purchase while the city gas works were still in operation. We were then thrown back on the use of an old steam engine, which has figured in many annual reports, and which has long been suspected of a desire to blow itself to pieces. It was fed with wood as long as wood was obtainable at anything like reasonable prices. Then for many months we purchased olive stones from the refuse found near the native olive oil presses and this kind of fuel, like the olive trees in Zechariah, kept the wheels revolving for the printing of the Word of Life. When alcohol failed for the cleansing of the type and the plates, we made use of arak or the native whiskey. At one time in the lack of lubricating oil we made use of dibs or native molasses. When rubber washers for the valves wore out, others were substituted, made of cross sections of old automobile tires.

"Finally, we have to report that while a dozen bound copies of the finished Bible have been distributed to the various stations throughout the Mission and preserved above and below ground, and while there are two copies also in Constantinople, only one single copy is outside the Turkish Empire. That one is safe in the American Bible Society in New York. How I succeeded in getting this one copy, piecemeal, beyond the bounds of the Empire is a story too long to tell here. The importance of the single copy is this: that in case any accident should occur to the various copies in Syria and to the unbound sheets of the whole edition and to the plates themselves, the labor and toil and expense of these nine years can be preserved and multiplied by the reproduction of this unique volume by means of photography.

see with how fine a spirit he had taken his punishment. He told me that if he had kept that sin in his heart he never would have found peace but now his heart was at rest. When he came into my study he gave my secretary money with which to buy a New Testament to send to a man in the Yyeng Yang prison to whom he had preached and who showed some interest in Christian things. That evening he attended the prayer meeting and testified to the grace and peace that he had received. The next day he started for his home in the North."

Religious Education In West China

No one should think lightly of any place because of its geographic situation. Fine suggestions concerning religious education are coming from West China. In a letter recently received by the World's Sunday School Association it was stated that the West China University has an organized system of religious education which reaches into 280 cities of that province. There the Sunday school lesson is not the matter of an hour a day on Sunday, but an hour every day of the week. Then these students form the nucleus of every Sunday school that is organized in the various churches. In speaking of the Sunday school work in West China and the United States this significant statement is added: "The character of the work which we desire to do in these schools is very much the same as that to which the Sunday school is dedicated in America, the instruction of the young and the formation of Christian character. It differs only in that we are endeavoring to make it much more systematic and thorough."

Child-Sacrifice In Angola

How child life in Africa is sacrificed because of the superstition and ignorance of the parents is pointed out by Mrs. Robert Shields, who writes from the Methodist mission in Angola: "Many a babe is killed by striking it on the bridge of the nose, or drowned in a neighboring stream because the manner of its birth is declared ominous. Twins are seldom allowed to live. By slow starvation one at least is left to die.

"Let a child cut its upper teeth first and it is doomed, for, they say, if permitted to live, it will bring ruin and death to the other members of the family. Often a sick child is subjected to the most brutal of torture. The parents usually call in a witch-doctor who cuts the little one on the arms, hands, face, legs and feet. We recently counted fifty cuts on a babe only five months old. This is done, they say, just to let out the evil spirits."

A Faithful Worker Gone

A copy of the North Siam News, published by the North Siam Mission, brings us the tidings of the passing away of Rev. D. G. Collins, who was the efficient manager of the Presbyterian Mission Press at Chiengmai, which is one of the mission stations aided by cash appropriations from the American Tract Society.

For over thirty years Mr. Collins gave himself without reserve to Christian work in North Siam, his entire missionary career being spent in one station, Chiengmai. He was a man of warm evangelistic spirit and entered deeply into the lives of the people of the village churches that were assigned to his care.

The great work of his later life was connected with the Mission Press at Chiengmai. Under his supervision this important institution has been the means of making the Word of God accessible to the millions of Laos-speaking people in Northern Siam and Southwestern China, and from it have poured not only copies of the Scriptures, but thousands of tracts, pamphlets, books and hymnals in the native language.

"Since our arrival in the United States another link has been added to the chain of Providence. All seaports of Syria having been closed it is impossible to obtain necessary material for binding the Bibles already lying printed in Beirut. Thousands had been ordered before hostilities broke out, for India, Egypt and London.

"The American Bible Society here felt the urgency of having the Scriptures to ship abroad for Arabic-speaking people and undertook to reproduce at once the New Testament Scriptures in an emergency edition. This has been done by a new photographic process in New York, and very successfully too. From this edition, about five hundred copies of this New Testament are now on their way to Egypt to be used in the work among the Arabic speaking troops."

The Working of a Christian Conscience

A missionary in Korea, Rev. C. D. Morris, relates a striking incident of his ministry in the following words:

"During the early part of 1914, while helping with a Bible class for men in Yeng Byen (Korea), we met each morning before daybreak for prayer. Among those who came from the country was a man named Pak who was brought under deep conviction for a crime committed years before he became a Christian. At that time he went off to the hills and made counterfeit silver coins. When these got into circulation he was arrested on suspicion but as he refused to confess and there was no direct proof that he was guilty he was released. He then became a merchant in his town and was respected by all,—his past not being known. Later he accepted Christ and seemed very faithful to his Christian duties.

"During this Bible class, however, he was so convicted in heart because of this crime that he could not rest and made full confession at one of the meetings. He then decided that that was not enough but that he must also confess to the authorities to whom he had formerly denied his guilt. He accordingly went to the police station and surrendered himself. Later he was sent to Sin Wiju for trial, his wife accompanying him since she had been partner in his guilt. They were sentenced to a year and a half of imprisonment, but the wife was released on parole. Pak served his sentence in Pyeng Yang and Chinnampo. I heard from him twice while he was in prison and he assured me that I need have no anxiety about him. I waited patiently for the day of his release and was filled with joy to

Notes upon the Topics Used
in Christian Endeavor
and Other Young People's Societies.

THE PRAYER MEETING

By
Rev. Henry Lewis
Ph.D.

FEBRUARY 3.

Christian Duty and Privilege: Winning Others to Christ

John 1:35-46.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS

- M. Jan. 28. Bringing others. Mark 2:1-5.
T. Jan. 29. Persuading others. Acts 26:24-32.
W. Jan. 30. Winning by example. I Pet. 2:11-25.
T. Jan. 31. Winning by prayer. Acts 1:14; 2:1-4.
F. Feb. 1. Winning by kindness. Matt. 5:43-48.
S. Feb. 2. Winning by preaching. Luke 10:1-6, 17-30.

This topic has been selected with a view of its appropriateness for both a consecration meeting and Christian Endeavor Decision Day. It reminds us that the primary object of Christian Endeavor as well as of other forms of church work is to bring souls to Christ. In other words, Christianity is essentially evangelistic, and unless our Christian toil is suffused with the spirit of evangelism, it lacks the one thing needful.

A Personal Duty

To bring others to Christ is the divinely appointed task of every Christian. No one is excused from this service, and it must be rendered by our own personal effort.

By personal work, we mean bringing others to Christ. Every Christian should be a personal worker, and should seek in every way to become effective in this line of endeavor.

A High Privilege

It is not only a personal duty but a high privilege to bring others to Christ. To belong to the army of the Lord is a distinction which should be counted as a high honor, and to bring recruits into the Lord's army to fight under the banner of the Cross should be regarded as a splendid privilege.

Ways of Working

Souls are not brought into the Kingdom of God by the exclusive use of any one method of approach. As we study the New Testament we see that the Apostles were brought to Christ in a variety of ways, and they, in turn, used various means for winning others to the Master.

So in these modern days, experience has shown that souls are drawn into the Kingdom in many different ways, and he who would be a successful personal worker must learn to adopt various methods to lead others to make the great decision.

Many are won to Christ by a spoken word, and we must be quick to discern the opportunity of saying the word in season which will bring a human soul to make a full surrender to Christ. Oftentimes this word may be spoken in the home, by a Christian father, mother, brother or sister. Sometimes it may be uttered by a Christian friend, or it may be spoken by a pastor, Sunday School teacher or Christian worker.

A letter may be used as the means for bringing a soul to Christ. Sometimes the insertion of a tract or leaflet in the letter or the affixing of a Go-to-Church stamp on the envelope may give the impulse which is needed to bring a wavering soul into the Kingdom.

Evangelistic Efforts

All our Christian work should be definitely evangelistic. Every member of the church as well as the pastor should consider himself or herself an ambassador of Christ to carry the message of salvation to others and to win them to His service.

Every gathering of the church should be regarded as an opportunity for evangelistic effort, and the end and aim of all the church activities should be to win souls for Christ.

Special evangelistic efforts are sometimes necessary, but the more desirable plan is to have a continuous evangelistic spirit pervading the whole membership of the church with the result that pastor and people alike are found doing the work of an evangelist.

FEBRUARY 10.

What My Church Stands For

I Peter 2:9-12.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS

- M. Feb. 4. Faith in Christ. John 20:30, 31; 21:24, 25.
T. Feb. 5. Salvation through Christ. Acts 4:1-12.
W. Feb. 6. The Word of God. 2 Tim. 3:10-17.
T. Feb. 7. Power through the Spirit. John 16:7-14.
F. Feb. 8. The sanctified life. Rom. 6:1-14.
S. Feb. 9. Immortality. 2 Cor. 5:1-10.

By "my church" the framers of this topic may have had in mind the denominational bodies to which we severally belong.

Loyalty to denominational connection is one of the principles for which the Christian Endeavor Society stands.

In an army each soldier belongs to some regiment, and if he is to be an effective force in the army he must be loyal to the regiment in which he is enrolled.

So the church of Christ may be conceived as made up of the various denominational bodies, and in order to be effective members of the church we must be loyal to the denominational unit to which we belong.

Loyalty to our own denomination does not preclude all due honor and respect to the other denominations. Between the various evangelical Christian denominations there should prevail not the spirit of competition and rivalry but rather the spirit of fellowship and cooperation.

The words "my church" suggest not only the denominational body to which we belong but also the whole body of the Church of Christ, that is the church universal. Let us ask what are some of the things for which our church stands, when viewed in this larger light.

Loyalty to Christ

The church stands for loyalty to its divine Founder, the Lord Jesus Christ. Greater than Calvin, Zwingli, Luther, Wesley, or any denominational leader stands the Master Himself, who established the church and gave His own precious life in so doing.

To the Christian, Christ stands as the supreme Leader. No human thinker or philosopher may take rank with Him. No sage or teacher, be it Buddha or Confucius or Zoroaster, or any other prophet of religion may take a stand beside Jesus the peerless and perfect Son of God.

Love for Humanity

The Church of Christ stands for love to our brother man. It teaches the principle of fraternity and upholds the doctrine of human equality in the sight of God.

Love for humanity involves the principle of justice, and the church stands for just dealing between man and man. The church cannot afford to condone injustice in any way, shape or form. It should make its voice heard in strong protest, whenever a country is ravished as was Belgium, or a people are outraged as the Armenians, or childhood is oppressed or woman downtrodden, or the laboring man defrauded. Too often in the past has the church been silent in the face of injustice, and now it must stand at whatever cost for the highest ideal of justice.

A Passion for Righteousness

The church stands for righteousness. It cannot compromise with evil, but must insist on what is right. It is a light divine, shining in the midst of a world darkened by sin. It stands for the eternal verities revealed in and through our Lord Jesus Christ. It stands for Christian faith, hope and love. It is the herald of the Gospel and should stand as the embodiment of Christian charity. The church stands for the fellowship of believers and for the dissemination of the Gospel message to the uttermost parts of the earth.

FEBRUARY 17.

What My Church Is Doing

I. Thessalonians 1:2-8.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS

- M. Feb. 11. Preaching. Rev. 2:7-12.
T. Feb. 12. Building up the saints. Eph. 3:1-16.
W. Feb. 13. Missionary work. Acts 13:1-12.
T. Feb. 14. Teaching the young. Deut. 6:3-9.
F. Feb. 15. Social work. John 12:1-8.
S. Feb. 16. Community work. Acts 9:36-43.

The term, "my church," may mean the individual local church, the denominational body, or the church universal. It may be helpful in considering the topic before us to use all three of these possible applications.

The Work of the Local Church

Many individual local churches are doing splendid work. They are active along evangelistic, missionary, social and institutional lines. Both pastor and people are busy about the Master's Vineyard, and are preparing for a bounteous spiritual harvest.

There are many other local churches, however, that are moribund and inactive. Their annual reports show no ingathering of souls, no gifts for the missionary enterprise, no service for the community, and no signs of spiritual life. It is a sad fact that the year-books of the various denominations show literally thousands of such inactive church organizations. This topic should therefore come as a ringing call to all such churches to arise from their spiritual lethargy and to show themselves doers of the word and not hearers only.

Denominational Work

Comparatively few Christians are fully informed as to what their respective denominations are doing. The question, "What is my church doing?" comes, therefore, as a summons to us all to acquaint ourselves more fully with our various denominational activities.

It may be said to the credit of most denominations that they are carrying forward a great deal of work. The tendency during the past few years has been to enlarge the scope of denominational activity, and to greatly increase the amount of work done along missionary, benevolent, charitable and philanthropic lines.

Despite the development of various forms of church federation and interdenominational cooperation, the denominational life of the churches seems to be more vigorous and pronounced than ever, and while there are signs of increasing fellowship between the churches there are no indications of the weakening of the denominational lines which separate the various communions.

Much of our Christian work must necessarily be done through denominational agencies. Every Christian Endeavorer should loyally support the missionary work of his or her own denominational body, and should strive to aid in the other lines of service which are carried on by the denomination.

Interdenominational Activity

But in addition to denominational there are still broader lines of activity which are carried on by the Christian church as a whole. Such interdenominational agencies, for example, as the American Bible Society, the American Tract Society, the Young Men's and the Young Women's Christian Associations and many other organizations that might be mentioned are representative of the church as a whole and depend for their maintenance upon the loyal support of the members of all branches of the church.

Perhaps it may not be amiss here to refer to what is being done for the cause of Christian literature by the American Tract Society. Most of our readers know something of what that organization is doing, but upon request the Society will be glad to send leaflets which will tell in fuller detail both what is being accomplished and what is needed in order to enlarge its work and meet the growing demand.

FEBRUARY 24.

The Power of the Cross in Asia

Psalms 96:1-13.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS

- M. Feb. 18. The Cross foretold. John 3:14-21.
T. Feb. 19. In Jerusalem. Acts 4:32-37.
W. Feb. 20. In Samaria. Acts 8:5-12.
T. Feb. 21. In Caesarea. Acts 10:34-48.
F. Feb. 22. Healing disease. Acts 2:1-10.
S. Feb. 23. Stephen's power. Acts 6:8-15.

The power of the Cross of Christ was first made manifest in Asia. Then it swept over Europe. Later Mohammed arose, and for a time it seemed as if every Christian might be driven out of Asia. But Mohammedanism could not exterminate Christianity, and the Christian faith persisted despite all opposition and persecution.

The nineteenth century witnessed a great forward movement in Asia through the development of Protestant missionary effort. The twentieth century has seen this missionary effort enlarged and strengthened. Now, despite the disruption caused by the great world war, the Gospel is still being preached and the power of the Cross is becoming daily more manifest in the great continent in which Christianity first had its birth.

The Light of Asia

Not Buddha but Christ is the true Light of Asia. Under the baleful influence of all heathen faiths the people of Asia groped in vain for release from the vain and cruel superstitions that held them in thrall. But with the preaching of the Cross of Christ and the introduction of Christian influences there has come at least a partial removal of those bonds of superstition, and when the light of the Gospel has penetrated to the furthestmost confines of Asia, we may expect that all shackles will be burst asunder and the people will walk in the joyous liberty that comes only to those who are made free by Christ.

The Triumphs of Faith

When we consider the obstacles that had to be overcome, the progress that Christianity has made in Asia is truly remarkable.

In India the Christian community has grown from a mere handful to about a million and a half. In China a century of Christian effort has resulted in a Christian community of about half a million, with the prospect that the present century will see the number of converts multiplied many times.

Korea, though a small country, has a Christian community of about a quarter of a million, and the outlook is favorable for a steady and substantial growth every year, because of the splendid hold which the Christian church has secured upon the minds and hearts of the native population.

The one bright spot in Asiatic Turkey is the record of the Christian missions, which have ministered to the needs of all classes of the population, irrespective of race or creed, and have shown forth the spirit of Christ in the midst of conditions that are too awful to describe.

Japan does not show a large numerical membership in the Christian church, but the spirit of Christianity has permeated a large section of the population, and many of the leading men of the Empire are avowed Christians.

In the Philippine Islands Christianity is making substantial progress, and the rising generation are being trained under Christian auspices and learning to know and aspire to Christian ideals.

The island of Ceylon is one of the places where the power of the Cross has been made evident. It has a Christian community of over 50,000 souls, and its Christian homes are a sure and indubitable testimony to the value of the Christian faith.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS

- M. Feb. 25. Private prayer. Dan. 6:4-10.
T. Feb. 26. The model prayer. Matt. 6:5-15.
W. Feb. 27. Prayer of Faith. Jas. 5:12-20.
T. Feb. 28. Faith in prayer. Mark 11:20-26.
F. Mar. 1. United prayer. Matt. 18:19-20.
S. Mar. 2. The praying man's aid. Rom. 8:22-28.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS

The Children of Mt. Vernon

BY MARY F. RICHARDSON.

"OH, Mother," cried Janey, "what a lovely place to play!"

The little girl who uttered these words stood on the long piazza at Mt. Vernon looking over the broad lawns. Mother had brought Jack and Janey to spend the day at Washington's home, and in the charming old house they had gazed with awed eyes at the rooms where he had lived. They had seen his sword and camp kit, his desk and chair, and even the very bed he slept in! Now they were going to look into the out-buildings and gardens.

"Many children played on this lawn in Washington's time," declared Mother, smiling at Janey's eager face. "First of all, there was young George Washington himself. When he was a boy, the place belonged to his brother Lawrence and George often visited here. He was about thirteen when he first came, and I imagine he was a large boy, rather old for his years. You know at seventeen, he went out to the wild country beyond the Blue Ridge, to survey a tract of land for Lord Fairfax.

"After his brother died, George became owner of Mt. Vernon. He married a young widow, Mrs. Martha Custis, who had a little boy of six and a tiny girl of four. Although Washington never had any children of his own, he was as kind and tender to little John and Martha Custis as if they were his own.

"It was Springtime when Washington brought his bride and her little ones home to Mt. Vernon. They all drove out from Williamsburg in a great coach with four horses. Can you picture the scene as the coach drew up at the door? The negro servants were all excitement, gathering to greet their master and the new mistress, while the dogs were barking a welcome! The children were lifted from the high coach, interested in everything, while Washington in his stately way, welcomed his wife to her home.

"Jack and Martha Custis were happy at Mt. Vernon. Washington was fond of them, and did all in his power to make them happy. There was a tutor who gave them lessons in the little school house in the garden. A dancing master had classes, either at Mt. Vernon or at Gunston Hall, a nearby estate, and all the children in the neighborhood came to them. After the lesson, the teacher retired, candles were brought and the children played games and Washington loved to watch them.

"Washington sent to England for many different things and among the lists is an order 'For Miss Custis, 6 years old,' which includes such items as: 'one pair little scissors, one fashionable dressed doll, one box gingerbread toys and sugarcomfits, a small neat Bible bound in Turkey, and Martha Parke Custis wrote on the inside in gilt letters, a small Prayer Book, neat and in the same manner,' and also 'one fashionable Cap or fillet, with bib apron, and Ruffles and Tucker—to be laced.' So you see, 'little Patt' as they called her, sometimes wore her best bib and tucker!

"Time passed, and the children grew up. Little Patt died and Jack Custis married. In 1781 he went with General Washington as Aide-de-camp, and soon after died. Washington adopted his two youngest children, George Washington Parke Custis, who was only a baby, and Eleanor Parke Custis, two years and a half old. Mr. and Mrs. Washington were devoted to these two children. Before Washington came home, after the Revolution, he took time to stop in Philadelphia to buy toys for little Nelly, as they called Eleanor. Mrs. Washington taught Nelly to sew and knit and spin, I am sure she did not neglect her religious training, for Mrs. Washington was very devout. Every morning she retired to her room to pray and read her Bible for an hour, before she took up her household duties.

"The children must have enjoyed watching the workers in the Spinning House. In those days," explained Mother, leading the way to that building, "the flax was spun into thread and the thread woven into cloth in this building. Don't you imagine that the children loved to come in here, when the rooms were busy and the wheels whirred? And now I want to show you the old coach. Come this way."

"Oh, Mother," exclaimed Jack, looking into the Coach House, "What a funny old carriage! Was that the one Washington used?"

"No, but it was one very much like it, but more magnificent. Washington's coach came from England, but it was destroyed after his death.

by a cavalcade of gentlemen and escorted into the town, where a band played, and, in the evening, fireworks were set off. All the way they were greeted with enthusiasm, and I have no doubt that the children were petted by everybody.

"The Custis children lived at Mt. Vernon until they grew up, and beside them were other children who came there. Both Mr. and Mrs. Washington had many nieces and nephews who made long visits to their Aunt and Uncle. They were always sure of a warm welcome, and Washington did all he could to make them happy.

"So you see, many children loved Mt. Vernon in Washington's day, and I always think of the beautiful old estate as a happy place for little ones."

"THE FATHER OF HIS COUNTRY."

"In Colonial Days there were no steam cars, and whenever the Washingtons went away from home they travelled in their coach. On Sundays they drove to Alexandria to church, for Washington was a regular attendant, and a vestryman of Christ's Church, Alexandria. And they often rode to visit friends at Alexandria or even Baltimore. When Washington was made President, after the Revolution, Mrs. Washington went to New York, and then to the Capitol, to join her husband, taking Nelly and little George with her, accompanied by a small escort on horseback. The children must have enjoyed the trip, for at Philadelphia their chaise was met

Some Things Worth Doing
Smiling.
Speaking kind words.
Showing respect for the aged.
Telling the truth under all circumstances.
Choosing only the good for daily companions.
Reading books that instruct and inspire rather than excite.
Keeping the Sabbath day holy as God has commanded.
Forming the habit of close observation and careful study.
Accepting the Bible as the only true guide for this life.

WORDS OF CHEER.

Hushaby Time

BY E. A. BRININSTOOL.

*Hushaby time at the nursery door,
Rockaby time, for the daylight is o'er!
Lullaby time, for the shadows now creep
In where the babies will soon be asleep.*

*Curly heads nod, and wee eyelids droop down,
Just on the border of Slumberland Town,
As we go rocking and rocking away,
Out through the dim, misty portals of day.*

*Down from the heavens the silvery stars
Slip through the half-open, day-ending bars,
Gleaming in splendor, and sending their light
Twinkling and flashing all through the long night.*

*Now there's the hail of the Sand Man who goes
Out from his castle on soft tippy-toes,
Looking for babies who sleepily roam,
Luring them off to his magical home.*

*Ah, what a beauteous, shining brigade,
Marching away as the long shadows fade!
While from the heights comes a lullaby song,
Echoing sweetly and drifting along!*

*Hushaby time at the nursery door,
Rockaby time, for the daylight is o'er!
Lullaby time, for the shadows now peep
In where the babies are snuggled asleep!*

Living or Existing

We have heard of a little boy who was asked what good resolution he was going to make on New Year's Day. The little fellow replied, "I resolve to be a year older next New Year's Day." How many people there are who live as if they had no higher aim in life than merely to live on for another twelve months. There is quite a difference between merely existing and really living. To live one must have a goal; one must aim at something; one must have a purpose that is really worth while, and bend every energy to the accomplishment of it.

"I'm Pretty Little, But I'll Try"

She was only seven years old, Eileen Martin, the section foreman's daughter, as she stood reaching up to a telephone at the little town in California one Saturday, telling the agent at the nearest station that a rail was broken. Child-like, she knew the semaphore signals, had come to the track to see the Overland Limited train whirl by, and had watched the long finger drop, letting the train into the block.

"I'm pretty little, but I'll try," she said, when the station agent asked her if she could not stop the train that was past him, and started out with her sister of fourteen, who had just appeared. They ran down the track, stopped the train, and saved a wreck. The alert attention which knew the semaphore signal, the quick wit which understood what a broken rail meant, the decision and initiative which alone sought the telephone, the courage with which she and her sister started up the track, waving their aprons to stop the big Overland Limited as it bore down upon them—these are the qualities which through life bring self-help, help for others, success and happiness.

And she was only seven years old, "pretty little," but ready to "try."

How a Church Bell Was Made

A native Christian in India, brought a heavy burden to a missionary one day which proved to be a sack containing idols. He said that he did not want them any more, but suggested that they might be melted and made into a bell for the church. This was done, and now the dumb idols have found a voice and summon worshipers to praise and prayer.

Our Fireside

On Quien Sabe Creek

By Cora Goodrich Parmelee

"W HOA!" cried Ezra Hay. Then he turned to Joe Woods who was seated beside him, saying, "Jest hold them lines a minute, Joe, while I take in the things I've brought from town fr the Hermit. Don't look 'sif that feller'd been outside the door fr some time, does it?" he continued, ploughing his way through the snow. Repeated knockings brought no response, so he opened the door and went in. The Hermit, dimly seen in the early winter twilight, was seated before a table, his head fallen on his arms.

"He ain't asleep—he's sick," affirmed Ezra. "Help me get him into bed, an' then one of us can phone fr the doctor. The nearest phone, I guess, is at the Ranger Station."

"And look here," suggested Joe, who had a strain of romance, "he was writin' a letter—I guess 'twas to that girl whose picter he had stuck up in front of him. He's got the envelope already addressed. The letter begins, 'Dearest Elizabeth,' so it's someone he thinks lots of. I don't like to read any more. But let's send a telegram to her."

"Well, it can't do no harm," agreed Ezra, thoughtfully, "though there ain't much to say."

"An' I tell you what," he went on, "if you don't mind, I'll go an' telephone an' then I'll get my wife an' bring her back with me. She's a good hand in sickness, an' this feller hadn't order be left alone. We c'n bundle up the kids an' leave 'em at Birchs."

On the way to the Ranger Station he mused over the wording of the telegram. "Unknown man very ill. Was writin' to you." How'd that do? I'm most certain the name he goes by ain't his own. He don't never answer to it right quick like a man would to his own name. So it ain't no use to give that. It'd only confuse her. That ain't much, though, for the telegram. I don't reckon she'll come. I wouldn't blame her."

A few days later the narrow-gauge engine was puffing slowly up the canyon, carrying its long train of freight cars and one combination baggage and passenger coach. The seats were nearly all occupied by jabbering Mexicans and the air was close with the mingled smells of bad whiskey and smoking lamps. But Elizabeth Howland noticed these things only with a feeling of detachment. Was it she herself who was here in these strange surroundings—or another? She was coming in response to a very vague telegram, and her friends—those she had had time to see—had tried to dissuade her. But she had acted on impulse—she, who was usually so reserved and self-controlled. "But suppose this is Harry, sick and among strangers," she told herself, stifling a sob. "Oh, it is all my fault—I sent him away—and then—and then—he disappeared."

She pressed her lips together and looked around. Her sense of humor came to her rescue. "So these are the Western desperadoes," she reflected. "Where are their six-shooters? I can't imagine people who talk so fast as that ever taking time to kill anyone." And she giggled nervously.

But now they must be almost at their destination—it was the terminus of the road—for the people were all collecting their belongings.

As she dismounted, she was accosted by a kindly-faced ranchman whose sunburn all the rigors of winter had not served to bleach.

"Miss Howland, I reckon?" he ven-ured. "I'm Ezra Hay, the man who sent you the telegram."

She followed him to a low, rough sled—not much more than a box on runners—but no courtier could have been more kind and attentive than he as he tucked the old quilt around her.

"We'll go to the hotel first an' have some supper," he began, "an' I'll tell you all I know about him."

All he knew was not much.

"The man is pretty sick—pneumonia. Us folks out there is takin' turns carin' fr him. Me an' my wife has been there considerable, seein' as we live near—only about a mile away."

"But tell me about him. How does he look? What sort of a man is he?" Ezra Hay smiled, then took a long and noisy swallow of coffee before answering.

"Well, he's a curly-headed, handsome feller, 'bout thirty years old, I sh'd judge—goes by the name of Will Johnson."

Elizabeth's face fell.

"But I'm most certain that ain't his right name. An' he ain't a born rancher—I c'n tell that. But he's jest so pleasant that everyone likes him. He won't never go to town though. We allays take his things out to him, but we don't mind that, he's so accommodatin' to us in lots of ways. An' he won't never go to the dances at the school house—he's funny that away. An' oh yes, one thing made me think I was on the right track in sendin' for you—I've took out lots of mail to him a'ready an' there's been papers from that place you come from."

Elizabeth's eyes gleamed. She thought "He wanted the papers to come to an assumed name. And that is the way he knew I was still—"

She did not finish the sentence, even to herself. She was not sure yet that this was Harry.

"We might's well be goin'."

Ezra Hay's voice struck in on her meditations.

He produced a quantity of extra wraps which he insisted on her wearing. There was a man's heavy sweater which she was to wear over her coat and a thick veil which had to be tied down over her hat to keep her ears warm. He also was having the brick for his foot-warmer heated.

"It's twelve miles out there," he replied in answer to her wondering comments.

It was a beautiful, moonlit night and the sky a deep indigo. The snow on the far-stretching, undulating hills was all blue, from the faint, grayish tinge in the foreground to the deep, mysterious shadows of the distant hills. The far-off range lay outlined against the sky by its uneven line of snow-clad peaks painted into the landscape with a fine brush carrying pigment of a steely gray. Single sentinel pines pointed weird blue fingers to the sky and others huddled together, sheltering mournfully howling coyotes. The crisp, cold air seemed vibrant with a blue light. The clear stillness produced a breathless, hushed expectancy—of what?

All this Elizabeth felt rather than thought. Everything was mysterious and unknown but she was not afraid. Perhaps at last those sleigh bells were her wedding bells. What had—Harry—been writing?

Her companion was silent. He had said his say and no other point of contact had been found.

In a surprisingly short time, so it seemed they reached the cabin from which shone the only light for miles around. At first, as Elizabeth stood in the doorway, she realized that her glasses were befogged. She snatched them off impatiently and then caught a glimpse of the bed in the farther corner of the room. Quickly she crossed to it. The face on the pillow was thin and white—but it was her Harry's.

She turned in dumb gratitude to the people in the room, seated by the table with its one small lamp, their faces averted.

As she approached them, one woman rose and went to the stove, remarking, "It's a cold night, Miss. I'll have a cup o' tea for you in a minute."

And Ezra Hay introduced Elizabeth to his wife who, he said, would remain with her that night.

She tried to protest but was interrupted by, "You got to have sleep if you'll be any good at all. I've made a bed fr you there on the floor. I'm used to bein' up nights with them kids o' mine. Here's your tea. An' I thought this chokecherry jelly with bread an' butter'd sort o' taste good."

The others, after introductions and commonplace, irrelevant remarks, left the cabin and Elizabeth's long waiting began. But in the days that followed she was surprised at how many people there were to drop in for a greeting or to relieve her watch.

"Good mornin'," one would say, "I jest stopped to bring you this glass of sarvice-berry jelly. I thought you might like it. Yes, I gathered them berries last summer up in Coyote Park. Thought maybe you'd like to taste 'em. How is he this mornin'? We all like him so much. One time we was goin' to hev a concert at the school house. There ain't much goin' on around here, an' that's about all the chance we get to see folks, seems like. I was dead set on goin' but one of the kids was sick, an' do you know, he come in an' said he'd take care o' them kids—for me to go to the concert. He did too, jest as good's a woman. I wasn't a bit uneasy."

Or the presentation of votive offering and the testimony would run like this:

"I jest brought you some of our home-cured ham this mornin' an' called to see how he was. He was mighty good to us last summer. We was jest in the midst o' hayin' and hurryin' fer all we was worth to git through before it rained when one of our men was taken sick an' a horse got hurt at the same time. He come right over with his team an' went to work. Left his own hayin' too an' wouldn't take no pay fer what he done. Seems like he don't care whether he gits ahead or not. I don't think he makes much more'n enough to live on. But he says that time, when Charlie told him he hadn't order, he says, 'You got your wife an' kids to feed. I ain't got nobody, only myself.' Now you go'n lay down an' let me take care of him fer a while. I c'n stay jest's well's not."

One woman told her, "At first we was afraid of him—thought he had killed a man or somethin', because he never would go to town an' seemed so afraid somehow o' bein' with people. Then he was allays so nice an' kind an' ready to do a favor that we decided there wasn't no harm about him an' we didn't care about his past. You know it is that way out in these parts. It's what a man is thet counts, not what he's been or what his folks was."

At last there came the day when the crisis was expected, and those in the little cabin watched breathlessly for the change. It came—and the patient started his weary climb upward.

"If he had been a drinking man, we never could have pulled him through," remarked the doctor.

Elizabeth started. Then he was not drinking and had not been drinking for some time! It was true there had been no hint of that in anything she had found in the cabin or that the people had told her, but—it seemed like disloyalty even to think about it now.

The next day she came across the unfinished letter which had been so carefully put away that it was mislaid.

It read, "I could not resist when with others; but for your sake, though I have lost you, I have not touched a drop in years. I am sick—I think it will be my finish. But I wanted you to know what—" In a rush she understood it all—his fear of going to town or even to the little social gatherings among the ranchers on Quien Sabe Creek. She knew what it meant to a bright, sociable fellow like her Harry, but now she could share his isolation and loneliness and help him to look to Christ for strength in his constant struggle against the temptation that had so often beset him in the past. At last in the little cabin, far off from the associations she had known, in the company of one who was at that moment too sick to understand or share her joy, she was happy, and the bells that jingled on the passing sleighs outside sounded in her ears like a prophecy of wedding bells to come.

APPLES OF GOLD

This is a really ideal weekly paper for use in Primary Departments and Infant Classes in all Sunday Schools. It is finely illustrated, uses large, clear type and is printed in beautiful colored ink. Each week there is a splendid full-page picture, short stories, choice poems and a helpful illustrated treatment of the International Sunday School Lesson. It is issued monthly but is arranged for weekly distribution in four-page parts. Price, single copies, 30 cents; five copies to one address, 25 cents each; ten or more copies, 20 cents each, per year. Postage on Canadian and foreign subscriptions, 6 cents per copy additional. Subscriptions accepted in clubs for 3 months, 6 months or a year.

Sample Copies Sent Free.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY
Park Ave. and 40th St., New York.

HALFONTE ON THE BEACH
ATLANTIC CITY
ALWAYS OPEN
THE LEEDS COMPANY

The Child's Money.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "PRESTON PAPERS."

"WELL, I don't believe in paying children to help in the home," said little Mrs. Weston, at a Mothers' meeting, where the theme for the afternoon was "The Child's Money," and the discussion was getting warm over the question of how it should reach the child—whether as a gift from parents and friends; as a solicited gratuity; or as a wage for faithful service.

"Why not?" asked Miss Richmond, blandly. She was the teacher of the Sixth Grade in the school where two of Mrs. Weston's children attended, and both had been in her class; so she knew of Mrs. Weston's leading hobbies and theories—for Miss Richmond made it a part of her school work, to know the parents, and to see the children in their regular environment. "I couldn't understand the children, if I didn't first understand their setting and equipment," she had often said, when asked why she spent so much time and strength in visiting the homes.

"Mainly because I want my children to feel that each of them has a certain responsibility for the home which they all share. It seems to me that they are in duty bound to perform such child-like services as are within their reach, and to do it because it is home instead of because they want to earn money," replied Mrs. Weston, with some vigor and not without warmth.

A wave of interest was quite apparent in the Priscilla Club, of which both speakers were members, for many needles were stopped as their owners listened, or prepared to speak. Some women just can't sew and talk too, nor even sew and listen! And all wanted to hear Miss Richmond's argument, for she was not only very popular but very practical in her management of "difficult" children—and of other people!

"You are right, I am sure, so far. But, and perhaps I am wrong—it seems to me that in order to provide for future financial responsibilities, they must be taught the value of money from the start, and that this can be done in no other way so well as by earning it, and earning it for a definite end, even if that end is merely to spend it again—provided that no other spending money is arranged for."

Miss Richmond spoke quietly; but the sincerity was convincing, and as if backed by experience, or observation, or both. Therefore Mrs. McGill asked: "Just how would you do, Miss Richmond?"

"Oh, I'm not at all sure," laughed Miss Richmond. "It is hard for anyone to know just what would be done, under given circumstances, although it is easy to theorize. But I have seen some plans work out in real life, from cause to effect; and I have drawn my conclusions."

"A story! A story!" chorused two or three; and Miss Richmond, still knitting, which seemed to be her favorite occupation at these meetings, began:

"My cousin insisted that no money be used by his children, except as he gave or sanctioned it. They had to ask him for everything, even their Sunday School contributions, having no financial freedom, and no financial responsibility. When they went into business, on a salary, they had no judgment in money matters, and had to learn it by hard knocks.

"One of my friends gave each child an allowance; but as the money was a gift, they did not know its value; and they, too, came to grief several times before they learned that it takes a hundred cents to make a dollar, and that you can't get more than a hundred cents out of a dollar.

"My sister taught her children to wait on themselves, from the start, and to do certain little things for the up-keep of the home. For certain other things, they were paid a weekly wage, from which a proportionate deduction was made for neglect of these duties or for defective or inefficient performance of them. Each weekly sum was divided into 'altruistic fund,' 'educational,' 'clothing,' 'bank-book,' and 'spending.' This last they were at liberty to use as they pleased, and without even asking advice as to what was best or desirable—though they often did ask."

"How perfectly ideal!" exclaimed Mrs. Norris, the hostess. "They were at once trained in altruism, in providing for present wants and for future emergencies; a 'bent' was given toward economy, system, and progress; and they grew in judgment, responsibility, independence and inter-dependence."

"And how did they turn out, at maturity?" asked Mrs. Weston.

"Clara, nineteen, is away at boarding school this year," replied Miss Richmond. "Her educational fund had amounted to $95.00. So, when she decided that she wanted a year at the school, with the study of elocution as an extra, she had the means ready with which to pay for her special education, or to furnish her with pocket-money, while away from home. Her bank-book fund has not been touched yet, but has about the same amount to her credit, ready to invest in whatever way she deems best whenever she wishes to go into business or to buy a home. Carl, seventeen, has bought a typewriter with his money, and is earning quite a bit by copying, by taking charge of certain lines of correspondence for three local tradesmen, and for his High School principal. Margaret, almost fifteen, has about thirty-five dollars in her educational fund, and nearly the same in her bank fund. All seem to have enough in each division to draw from for any desired purpose—but in a family emergency, I am sure that they would 'pool their issues' and come to the general rescue."

"The very best thing about such training perhaps, is that it practically prevents family emergencies," said Mrs. Johnson. "Children who are taught from the start to live within their income, however small that is, so forestall and avoid disaster"

Just then the maid came in with the plates, napkins and cups which foretold the light refreshments to which the club was limited; and the subject was "tabled" in favor of sandwiches and coffee.

But—I have an idea that many parents might do well to think on these things, adopting such suggestions as they may—and adopting or rejecting others. The main thing is to think, not neglect, and then to act on one's best judgment.

Doing Plain Things in a Beautiful Way

BY ELIZABETH DEVINA NEVISON

Every girl wants to be beautiful, and rightly so; but not all girls are blessed with beauty of face and form. But there is one kind of beauty which every girl may cultivate; and if she makes it the daily habit of her life, in time even the plainest features will take on a form of loveliness, the reflection of inner beauty.

What is it that every girl may cultivate? It is doing things in a beautiful way. The most humble task may be made lovely by doing it in a beautiful way, and unconsciously the one who does this grows an inner beauty that radiates from her personality, giving it a charm all its own.

There is all the difference in the world between a task done in a beautiful way and the same task done in an unlovely way. This is true in the home, in school, in social life, in business, and in our church and Sunday school work, and every girl can cultivate the beautiful way of doing things. There are many tasks in the world that do not seem very lovely in themselves—tasks that are hard and unappreciated and some that even seem like drudgery—but if they are necessary tasks they are noble ones, and we can make them dignified and lovely if we do them in a beautiful way. Then there are some tasks which come to all of us—like the simple one of saying "Good morning" to our families, which may be done in one of two ways. Have you noticed that some folks say "Good morning" in so ungracious a way as to upset others for hours and hours, while some give the greeting with such kindness and charm as to cast a radiance over the entire day?

The motive which prompts a deed and the way in which we do it is quite as important as the deed itself. In every home, for example, dishes must be washed. Now, the daughter may help mother wash the dishes because she feels that she must, and she may sulk throughout the process. Or she may have chosen as an ideal to do things in a beautiful way; and knowing dish-washing to be a necessary task, she recognizes it as an opportunity for service, and with the fixed purpose of being truly helpful and doing all things in a lovely spirit, she washes the dishes, filling the kitchen and mother's heart with sunshine as she does so. One may light a fire in a grate in so beautiful a way as not only to warm the physical bodies, but to cheer the heart and refresh the spirit as well. One may set a table and serve a meal in a way that will not only satisfy physical hunger, but give spiritual strength and comfort.

And this principle applies in our social life, our school and Church work. The most brilliant social affair planned by a committee is a failure if jealousy or selfishness or touchiness is allowed to come in among the committee workers. The most remarkable record of a class president is not a success if the girl has worked from desire for praise or for self-glory. The most humble class task performed from the desire truly to serve and done in a beautiful way, with love the motive, is the real success. And so in all life's relationships the spirit of our deeds, the way in which we do them, is the thing which determines their real value in the eternal reckonings.

To do things, from the simple, most humble task of the daily routine to the most responsible and exalted one of special opportunity, in a beautiful way is to grow in grace and loveliness, radiating beauty and joy wherever one goes. This is an ideal worthy of every girl's choice.—THE VISITOR.

Our Honor Roll

On Our Honor Roll are inscribed the names of those into whose homes the AMERICAN MESSENGER has gone for the past fifty years or more. To the lengthening list of names we are pleased to add that of Mr. R. N. Hodgman of Cleveland, Ohio, who writes:

"I think my mother began taking the AMERICAN MESSENGER during the second year of its publication. In 1854, when I was a boy of six years I began to read its pages. I remember well how it looked. It has been a welcome visitor since 1847. It is a paper of almost sacred memories and has been filled with earnest, tender lessons of Jesus, 'the Way, the Truth and the Life.' May it live until the whole earth is filled with the knowledge of Christ the Lord."

Another name which we are pleased to add to Our Honor Roll is that of Fannie L. Rogers, of West Cornwall, Conn., who writes:

"My grandfather, Henry S. Rogers, took the AMERICAN MESSENGER for years from the time it was first started, as long as he lived, and it has never been stopped. When he died, grandmother kept taking it, and at her death my mother renewed the subscription in her own name. We are all very fond of the AMERICAN MESSENGER.

We welcome this long-time friend to a place on Our Honor Roll. We should be pleased to hear from any others whose acquaintance with the AMERICAN MESSENGER extends back for fifty years or more.

Tithing Pamphlets

The Layman Company, No. 143 North Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill., offers to send gratis, postpaid, to any minister who desires to inaugurate the tithing system in his church, a package containing samples of tithing literature comprising about two hundred pages.

Accompanying the package will be an offer by which he or his people can obtain all or any portion of the pamphlets at half price.

Please mention that you saw this offer in the AMERICAN MESSENGER.

Laymen interested in Tithing are invited to call their Pastor's attention to this offer.

BOOKS FOR
Sunday School Libraries
New Catalogue sent on request.
AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY
Park Ave. and 40th St., New York

A SPLENDID COMBINATION OFFER
THE AMERICAN MESSENGER
AND THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Two of the Most Popular Religious
Publications in America for only a year to any part of the United States or Its Possessions.
$2.25

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY
RELIGIOUS MONTHLY
Regular Subscription Price
50 Cents a Year

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED NEWS
WEEKLY FOR THE
HOME
Regular Subscription Price
$2.00 a Year

Please note that this Special Offer applies only to subscriptions in the United States and its possessions. On Foreign subscriptions $1.24 extra must be added for postage, making a total of $3.49.

If a copy of the beautiful little year book entitled "Daily Food," is desired, ten cents additional must be added. Please send all combination subscriptions to the

AMERICAN MESSENGER
Park Ave. and 40th St., New York

DON'T decide on the new hymn-book for your Church or Sunday School until you have seen
HALLOWED HYMNS
NEW AND OLD
Edited by IRA ALLAN SANKEY
Son of the famous Singing-Evangelist
Ira D. Sankey
OVER 550,000
COPIES ALREADY SOLD
Responsive Scripture Readings
No Trashy Words No Jingly Music
Price $25.00 per 100 not prepaid
35 cents per copy by mail
Examine a copy and prove its value in your work. (Returnable if desired.)
The Biglow & Main Co., New York
Chicago

A New "Wear-Well" Binding
Will Stand a Year's Rough Usage
Gist of the Lesson
By R. A. TORREY
The old reliable vest-pocket S. S. Lesson Companion. World-famed for its condensed thought, concise expression, pertinent illustration and spiritual appeal.
FLEMING H. REVELL COMPANY
154 5th Avenue, New York
17 N. Wabash Avenue, Chicago

This FREE Shoe Book
with photographs and descriptions of 22 WEAR SHOES for Men, Women and Children. WEAR SHOES are sent postpaid, guaranteed to combine comfort, style and quality, to fit perfectly or money back. Illustrations and prices. Send for copy to-day.
THE F.N. SIMON SHOE CO. 1589 BROADWAY BROOKLYN

What 15c Will Bring You from the Nation's Capital
Washington, the home of the Pathfinder, is the nerve-center of civilization; history is being made at this world capital. The Pathfinder's illustrated weekly review gives you a clear, impartial and correct diagnosis of public affairs during these strenuous, epoch-making days.
The little matter of 15c in stamps or coin will bring you the Pathfinder 13 weeks on trial. The Pathfinder is an illustrated weekly, published at the Nation's center, for the Nation; a paper that prints all the news of the world and tells the truth and only the truth; now in its 25th year. This paper fills the bill without emptying the purse; it costs but $1 a year. If you want to keep posted on what's going on in the world, at the least expense of time or money, this is your means. If you want a paper in your home clearly, fairly, briefly—here it is. Send 15c to show that you might like such a paper, and we will send the Pathfinder on probation 13 weeks. The 15c does not repay us, but we are glad to invest in new friends. The Pathfinder, BOX 91 Washington, D. C.

THE TREASURY

SPECIAL NOTICE

Owing to occasional losses of letters, containing money, we would request friends and donors of the American Tract Society to remit by check or Post Office Money Order, which latter can always be duplicated in case of loss.

Receipts of the American Tract Society During December, 1917

Total Donations (including $992.40 for Special Objects), $4,177.67.

ALABAMA, $2.
Mr. Dodd, for Patriot Library, $2.

ARKANSAS, $1.
Rev. Mr. Fitzgerald, $1.

CALIFORNIA, $84.27.
Mr. and Mrs. Ayars, $50; "A Friend," for Patriot Library, $2; Rev. Mr. Beck, $0.15; Mr. Zimmermann, $17.12; Saratoga, Church Collection for Patriot Library, $10; Miss Bigelow, $5.

COLORADO, $3.15.
Mr. Boeking, $1.15; Mr. Evers, $2.

CONNECTICUT, $92.
Mrs. Thommen, $0.65; Mr. Roser, $4.30; Mrs. Burghardt, $1.65; Miss Keeney, $0.40; Mrs. Goodwin, $1; Mr. Hinckley, $5; Miss Dudley, for Patriot Library, $2; Mr. Scranton, $1; Miss Scudder, $1; Prof. Pratt, for Patriot Library, $3; Miss Stillson, for Patriot Library, $1; Manchester Church Offering, $25; Mrs. Greene, $1; The Misses Eastman, $10; Talcottville, Church Collection, $35.

DELAWARE, $2.
Mr. Hazard, for Patriot Library, $2.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, $8.
Washington, Church Offering, $8.

IDAHO, $5.
Mrs. Butt, for Patriot Library, $5.

ILLINOIS, $250.86.
Mr. Helper, $0.70; Mr. Kucera, $5; Mr. Schaeffer, for Patriot Library, $2; Mr. Hemenway, to constitute his daughter, Nellie Hemenway, a Life Member, $30; Mr. Gronewald, $7.55; Miss Dickinson, $0.40; Mr. Zahn, $0.65; Mrs. Anshicks, $1.16; Mrs. Reeverts, $1; Mrs. Knackmus, $4; Mr. Huneke, Sr., $4.65; Mrs. Schoenheider, $1; Mrs. Doll, $1; Miss Kramer, $1; Mrs. Kramer, $1; Mrs. Olson, $0.65; Mr. Opitz, $1; Miss Schowalter, $4; Ungenannt, $1.25; Mrs. Henricks, $1; Bethalto, Church Collection, $16.84; Mrs. Langenberg, $5; Eleroy, Church Offering, $26.76; Eleroy, Sunday School Collection, $8.75; Members of the Forrester Presbyterian Church, $124.50, of which amount $100 is to constitute Rev. Mr. Manus a Life-Dirctor.

INDIANA, $15.65.
Mrs. Gerber, $1; Mr. Starr, $5; Mr. Therman, $1; Mr. Pauli, $1; Mr. Roth, $1; Mrs. Brink, $0.65; Miss Sander, $1; Mr. Fassnacht, $5.

IOWA, $52.40.
Mrs. Baumann, $1; Mr. Litterer, $3; Mrs. Schmidt, $0.15; Mr. Meier, $5; Mr. Wiechmann, $1.55; Mrs. Kemper, $0.65; Mr. Goeman, $0.75; Mr. Brandt, $0.65; Mr. Siekmeier, $5; Mrs. Nielander, $3.25; Mr. Van Horn, $5; Mr. Redenius, $1; Mr. Noll, $0.65; Mr. Middents, $0.65; Mr. Koch, $2.40; Mr. Wiechman, $4.65; Mr. Pfenninger, $1.65; Mrs. Nielander, $5; Mr. Hassebrook, $5; Miss Fuchs, $1; Woden, Church Offering, $2.40; Mr. Odenga, $2.

KANSAS, $99.45.
Mr. Schrag, $0.65; Mrs. Krebiel, $15; Mr. Schmutz, $4; Mr. Funk, $4.30; Sister Hillegonda, $1.65; Mr. Krebiel, $2.15; Mr. Haas, $1.65; Miss Gabelmann, $0.30; Mr. Kaufman, $5; Mr. Regier, $10; Mr. Baumann, $0.65; Mr. Penner, $1.65; Mr. Claesen, $5; Mr. Regier, $4.65; Mr. Hornberger, $1; Mr. Hirschler, $0.15; Mrs. Dester, $0.50; Mr. Mueller, Jr., $3; Mr. Hornberger, $0.65; Mr. Schowalter, $1; Mr. Kupp, $25; Mr. Meyer, $10; Ungenannt, $1.50.

KENTUCKY, $1.
Mr. Spurling, $1.

MAINE, $50.50.
Mr. Southworth, for Patriot Library, $2; Mrs. Perry, $1; Mrs. Getchell, $2.50; Mr. Sewall, $35; Miss Sewall, $10.

MARYLAND, $67.75.
Mr. Moore, for Patriot Library, $10; Miss Ruckdaeschel, $2.75; "A Friend," $50; Oakland, Church Collection, for Patriot Library, $5.

MASSACHUSETTS, $67.85.
Mr. Klicsa, $0.65; Mrs. Yenker, $0.50; Miss Beals, $0.20; Lec, Sunday School Offering, $5; Mrs. Hazelwood, for Patriot Library, $0.50; Miss Rockwood, for Patriot Library, $0.50; Mrs. Walker, $2; Mrs. Lamson, $10; Miss Barlow, $0.50; Mrs. Parker, $5; Mrs. Palmer, $2; Miss Topliff, $2; Miss Wilkinson, $1; Mr. Engren, $3; Miss Bliss, $2; Mrs. Stoddard, $1; "A Friend," $2; Miss Whittemore, $1; Dr. Rogers, $5; Miss Goldthwait, for Patriot Library, $1; Mr. Pease, for Patriot Library, $5; Mr. Copeland, for Patriot Library, $1; Mr. Learoyd, $1; Miss French, $5; Mr. Spillar, $5; Mr. Lewis, $5; Mr. Wellington, $1.

MICHIGAN, $43.89.
Mrs. Hoch, $1.65; Mrs. Sommer, $1; Iron Mountain, Church Collection, $4.84; Mr. Front, $0.15; Detroit, Church Offering, $10; Iamilton, Church Collection, $15; Highland Park, Church Offering, $10; Mrs. Mueller, $0.60; Mrs. Schwanbeck, $0.65.

MINNESOTA, $7.35.
Mr. Sietsma, $0.65; Mr. Elbert, $1.65; Mr. Brouwer, $1.95; Mr. Reichmuth, $1.30; Mr. Schmidt, $0.80; Mr. Peiner, $1.

MISSISSIPPI, $5.
Miss Young, $5.

MISSOURI, $56.20.

Mrs. Toedtmann, $1.65; Mrs. Nullmeyer, $1.65; "A Friend," $20; Mr. Broer, $2; Mr. Weyland, $1.65; Mr. Flottmann, $0.65; Mrs. Niewold, $5; Mrs. Toedtmann, $5; Mrs. Wolf, $0.65; Mrs. Hinnah, $1.65; Mr. Scholand, $5; St. Louis, Church Collection, $2; Mrs. Eberhardt, $0.65; Mr. Fritze, $4; Mrs. Roedel, $4.65.

NEBRASKA, $18.55.

Mr. Hunzeker, $3.75; Mrs. Bruett, $0.15; Mr. Siebert, $2.65; Sister of Mennonite Dea. Hospital, $0.50; Mr. and Mrs. Hahn, and Mrs. Kramer, $7.05; Mr. Meusborn, $1.15; Mrs. Brinkema, $0.65; Mr. Jantzen, $2.65.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, $5.50.

Mrs. Walker, for Patriot Library, $2; Miss Sanborn and Brother, for Patriot Library, $0.50; Mrs. Guild, $2; "A Friend," for Patriot Library, $1.

NEW JERSEY, $2,616.24.

Mr. Witt, $0.30; Patterson, Church Offering, $3; Cape May, Church Collection, $3.68; Mr. Dean, $3; Mrs. Voorhees, $2,504.25; Mrs. Fleishman, $0.65; Princeton, Church Offering, $5.63; "A Friend," $1; Rev. Mr. Currier, $2; Mr. Boardmann, for Patriot Library, $0.50; Miss Howell, for Patriot Library, $1; Rev. Mr. Rundall, for Patriot Library, $2.50; Passaic Church Collection, $4.84; Mrs. Peschel, $1.27; Freehold Church Offering, $3.02; Mr. Trimble, for Patriot Library, $1; Miss Butler, for Patriot Library, $1; Mr. Boardmann, for Patriot Library, $1; Mr. Peters, $2; Mr. Kraemer, $16; Trenton, Church Collection, $20; Mr. Riestler, $1; Mr. Dittmars, $0.30; Miss Williamson, $1; Mr. Meyer, $1; "Ein Freund," $5; Mr. Lullwitz, $1; Mrs. Sheuber, $2; Sheiber Brothers, $4; Mr. Day, $10; Mrs. Krehl, $1.65; Miss Carson, for Patriot Library, $5; Mr. Schmitt, $1.65; Miss Ballard, for Patriot Library, $5.

NEW YORK, $246.70

Mr. Holmes, for Patriot Library, $10; L. M., for Patriot Library, $1; Mr. Butler, for Patriot Library, $5; Mrs. Hesse, $5; Mr. Riker, for Patriot Library, $10; Rev. Mr. Sehldrige, for Patriot Library, $1.50; Rev. Mr. Tilton, Jr., $5; Mr. Barnes, for Patriot Library, $2; Mrs. Schaus, $5; Miss Laselle, $1; Mr. Douglas, $10; Rev. Mr. Pretzsch, for Patriot Library, $1; Warwick, Church Offering, $28.43; Stillwater, Church Collections, for Patriot Library, $4.35; Skaneateles, Church Offering, $1.80; Miss Langworthy, for Patriot Library, $1; Mr. Troegel, $0.30; Miss Bishel, for Patriot Library, $2; Miss Meyer, $1; Mr. Barton, $5; Mr. Revels, for Patriot Library, $2; Mr. Greeny, $2; Mr. Bacon, $1.90; New Baltimore, Church Collection, $2.93; Mr. Manier, $10; Miss Rogers, $2.50; Miss Rogers, $2.50; Mr. Stebbins, for Patriot Library, $2; Hobart, Church Offering, $5; Mr. Proctor, (including $2 for Patriot Library), $12; Mrs. Roeschel, $4.65; Miss Cole, for Patriot Library, $1; Mr. Blauvelt, $3; Rev. Mr. Sandreckzi, $4.12; Mrs. Settner, $1; Mary and Ruth Riexinger, $5; Mrs. Walter, $2; Brooklyn, Church Collection, $7.42; Mrs. Meusgeier, $2; Mr. Wintermeyer, $0.65; Miss Meyer, $5; Mr. Buck, $1.65; Miss Rapalje, for Patriot Library, $20; Miss Seymour, $10; Miss Fryer, to constitute herself a Life Member, $30; Mr. and Mrs. Wagner, $5; Mrs. Beer, $1.

OHIO, $65.90.

Mr. Haskell, for Patriot Library, $5; Mr. Werren, $0.15; Mrs. Flammer, $2; Youngstown, Church Offering, for Patriot Library, $50; Miss Craft, for Patriot Library, $1; Mr. Fetzer, $2.65; Mrs. Schmidt, $1; Mr. Synder, $3.10; Mr. Sellman, $1.

OREGON, $34.93.

Mr. Vogt, $10; Miss Sneed, for Patriot Library, $5; Mrs. Mayer, $2.13; Mr. Bartelt, $1.15; "Ungenannt," $0.50; Mr. Schroeder, $5; Mr. Voorhies, $4.50; Mr. Schulz, $1.65; Mr. Boeckli, $5.

PENNSYLVANIA, $139.29.

Mr. Fausen, $0.50; Mrs. Frederick, $2; Miss Weber, $1; Corry, Church Collection, for Patriot Library, $10; Williamsport, Church Offering, $20; Greencastle, Church Collection, $3.40; Philadelphia, Church Offering, $20.44; Mrs. Prendergast, $5; Mr. Branyan, $1; Mr. Schumacher, $1.65; Mr. Walter, for Patriot Library, $5; Mr. Martin, for Patriot Library, $5; Mrs. Wagner, $0.60; Mr. Wagner, $2.90; Miss Wood, $5; Miss Richards, for Patriot Library, $5; Mr. Kraemer, $5; Mr. Klose, $1.65; Mr. Lang, $2; Mr. Baker, $2.50; Mr. Shaffer, Jr. for Patriot Library, $5; Vanderbilt, Church Collection, for Patriot Library, $20; Mr. Masland, for Patriot Library, $5; Miss Berger, $5; Mr. Fritsch, $2; Mr. Schimpf, $2.65.

RHODE ISLAND, $6.

Miss Olney, for Patriot Library, $1; Mr. Thresher, $5.

SO. CAROLINA, $5.

The Misses Dudley, for Patriot Library, $5;

SO. DAKOTA, $40.10.

Scotland, Church Offering, $15.40; Mrs. Gortmaker, $1.15; Mr. Mansager, for Patriot Library, $1; Avon, Church Collection, $22.55.

VERMONT, $3.

Mrs. Fairbanks, $3.

WASHINGTON, $3.25.

Rev. Mr. Keppler, $1.95; Mr. Zemke, $0.65; Mr. Scherpf, $0.65.

WEST VIRGINIA, $0.65.

Mrs. Isch, $0.65.

WISCONSIN, $55.60.

Mr. Asmus, $1.15; Mrs. Laabs, $1.30; Mr. Schenk, $1.65; Mr. Gewiess, $4.65; Mrs. Wittenberger, $1.30; Mr. Wolfgang, $0.65; Mrs. Jenny, $3; Mr. Dehnen, $1; Rev. Mr. Fisher, $0.50; Mr. Grunkau, $2; Mr. Straus, $0.60; Mr. Bissell, for Patriot Library, $10; Mr. Kolb, $10; Mr. Ott, $0.65; Lisbon, Church Offering, for Patriot Library, $6.80; Mr. Abt, $1.65; Mrs. Jacobs, $0.65; Mr. Iseli, $0.75; Mr. Walenta, $5; Mr. Rettig, $1.65; Mr. Reich, $0.65.

FOREIGN, $21.64.

Canada, 3 Botschafer Readers, $4.50; 1 Botschafer Reader, $10.14; Miss Troegel, $5; Mr. Baldwin, $2.

INCOME FROM TRUST FUNDS... $1,425.00
Income for Missionary Work 1,361.75
Income for Annuitants 63.25

Donations

DONATIONS for the missionary work of the American Tract Society may be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

FIELD SECRETARIES AND COLPORTAGE SUPERINTENDENTS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.

Rev. Isaac Pierson, Field Secretary for New England, 50 Bromfield Street, Boston, Mass.

Rev. A. W. Reinhard, Field Secretary and Superintendent of Colportage for the Western and Northwestern States, 313 Y. M. C. A. Building, Omaha, Nebraska.

Rev. George Whitefort, Superintendent of Colportage, Southern Agency, Chricton, R. F. D., Mobile Co., Ala.

Form of Bequest

I GIVE and bequeath to the "AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY," instituted in the City of New York, May, 1825, the sum ofdollars to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said Society.

Three witnesses should state that the testator declares this to be his last will and testament, and that they signed at his request, and in his presence and the presence of each other.

Life Members and Directors

THE donation of $30 at one time constitutes a Life Member of the American Tract Society; the addition of $70, or the donation of $100 at one time, constitutes a Life Director. Life members may receive annually copies of the Society's own publications to the value of $1; Life Directors to the value of $2; if applied for within the Society's year, from April 1st to April 1st, in person or by written order.

From a Christian Worker

A grant of Christian literature sent by the American Tract Society to Mrs. Dickson, of Tupelo, Miss., is thus acknowledged:

"I thank you so much for the tracts and leaflets sent me. Perhaps it will be gratifying for you to know that they have done a great deal of good. They have been the means of cheering and helping those who never get help from any other source. I have sent these tracts into the country, and have heard many wonderful results worked out in the lives of those who have read them.

"The negroes are also delighted with them, and their call for more has prompted me to write and ask you please to send as many as you can spare.

"This is a work that is far-reaching, and I assure you that it is gratefully appreciated by a people whose needs are as great as human needs can be."

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

TERMS: Subscription price, 50 cts. a year, payable in advance. In clubs of five or more, 30 cts. each. Club subscriptions mailed to separate addresses, if desired. Charge for foreign subscription, 24 cents additional. Canadian subscription, 12 cents additional. Single copies, 5 cents each.

On account of the additional charge which is made by the New York Post Office for mailing to subscribers in New York and Bronx Counties (Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx), no club rates, cash commissions or premiums will be given for subscriptions that must be sent to persons residing in those Counties. Each subscription in New York or Bronx County must be at the rate of 50 cents net.

Remit by Express Money Order, Draft, Post Office Order or Registered Letter. For very small amounts, postage stamps may be sent at the risk of the sender.

CHANGES: When sending change of address, be sure to send the old address as well as the new one.

OUR ADVERTISERS: We believe that all the advertisements in this paper are from responsible advertisers, and it is our intention to admit only such to our columns. Should, however, any of our subscribers find that any advertiser does not live up to his agreements, we would consider it a favor if they will inform us, and we will at any time give prompt attention to any complaint.

We do not, of course, guarantee that all persons will take the same point of view with the advertisers, and it must be borne in mind that the claims and statements made by advertisers are their assertions, and not ours.

Our readers will confer a favor upon advertisers and also upon us if they will mention the AMERICAN MESSENGER when answering advertisements.

American Tract Society

THIS SOCIETY was organized in 1825. Its work is interdenominational and international in scope, and is commended by all evangelical denominations.

It has published the Gospel messages in 178 languages, dialects and characters. It has been the pioneer for work among the foreign-speaking people in our country, and its missionary colporters are distributing Christian literature in many languages among our foreign-speaking population and making a home-to-home visitation among the spiritually destitute, both in the cities and rural districts, leaving all kinds of Christian literature, also the Bible or portions of the Scriptures.

Its publication of leaflets, volumes and periodicals from the Home Office total 797,704,700 copies. It has made foreign cash appropriations to the amount of $802,966.39, and grants of electrotypes to the value of $61,177.96, by means of which millions of copies of books and tracts have been published at mission stations abroad.

The gratuitous distribution of the past year is to the value of $18,461.65. The grand total of its gratuitous distribution has been to the value of $2,652,967.54, which is the equivalent of 5,305,935,080 tract pages.

The total number of family visits that have been made by the Society's colporters during the last year is 199,963; the total number of volumes distributed by sale or grant is 55,712, making the total number of volumes that have been circulated by colporters in the last seventy-six years 17,438,166, and the total number of family visits that they have made during the same period 18,812,806.

A large distribution of Christian literature is being made among the soldiers and sailors, and the Society aims to furnish the Patriot Library to every Cantonment in the Army and to every battleship and cruiser in the Navy.

The Society is making very special effort in behalf of Latin America, having entered upon the publication of a One-volume Bible commentary in Spanish, a long-needed and earnestly prayed-for publication, and several other important volumes in both Spanish and Portuguese. Its total publications for Latin America now reach 16,012,088 copies. Its work, ever widening, is dependent upon donations and legacies, and greatly needs increased offerings.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, PRESIDENT.

JUDSON SWIFT, D. D., General Secretary.

Remittances should be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

Have You Made a Will?

If you have, did you remember the American Tract Society, and in proportion to the good it has been doing for nearly a century? If you have not made any bequest in behalf of the Tract Society, you are earnestly asked to add a codicil to your will to that effect. If you do so, you certainly will be happy in the thought that when you have been translated to your Heavenly home you will still be doing something to perpetuate and enlarge the great and important work of the American Tract Society. Please do not forget.

Beautiful Religious Pictures

25^{c.}
each, or 3 for 50^{c.}

25^{c.}
each, or 3 for
50^{c.}

CHRIST AND THE RICH YOUNG MAN.

LIST OF PICTURES FROM WHICH YOU MAY CHOOSE

- | | |
|---|---|
| The Birth of Christ. 20x27 inches | The Child Jesus in the Temple. 18x22 inches |
| Good Shepherd, in colors. 14½x20 inches | Last Supper. 22x36 inches |
| Suffer Little Children. 18x22 inches | Christ and the Rich Young Man. 18x22 inches |

These pictures have been made by a photographic process which admirably reproduces the exquisite beauty of expression in the original painting. They are all ready for framing. Such pictures as these should be in every home and Sunday School, for they serve as an ornament appealing to the best in every nature, educating to high ideals, and furnishing an inspiration and stimulus to right living.

AMERICAN MESSENGER, Park Ave. and 40th St. New York City

How You May Help the Needy

The publishers of this paper frequently receive letters from people who would be very glad to receive the AMERICAN MESSENGER, but circumstances over which they have no control prevent them from sending even the small amount to pay for a year's subscription. Among such are faithful workers on home missionary fields, where the salary is small, aged men and women living in Homes, without any income of their own, the inmates of hospitals and asylums, and many other needy people.

Among the thousands of subscribers to the AMERICAN MESSENGER, we believe that there are many who would be more than pleased to assist in the Lord's work by sending this paper to one or more of these needy and deserving cases. We are confident that you will be well repaid by responding favorably to this appeal. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Fifty cents will pay for one copy for a year, or $1.50 will pay for five copies to be sent to individual names. Surely a paper of this kind would be appreciated by all receiving it, especially at this critical time when the high cost of living has made the conditions of living so trying.

Please send all subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER, Park avenue and Fortieth street, New York City.

A Strong Moral Force

BY HOWARD B. GROSE, D.D.

From the point of view of morals and religion the United States Food Administration is a new thing in our government. It is calling out the sacrificial spirit in the religious bodies of the country and the highest moral qualities in business men by its direct appeal to patriotic service. What holds out finer promise for the future conduct of commerce, for example, than such action as was taken by the Eastern Canned Goods Commission representatives, after their conference with The Food Administrator and his associates? They pledged themselves specifically not to engage in speculation in food products of any kind; to decline to buy or sell for any customer purchasing beyond his normal needs; not to hoard food products; and to load cars to their fullest capacity and urge their customers to do the same. They asked that the Food Administration license all commission merchants and others dealing in staple foods, including the more important canned goods, for the protection of the men who are observing the regulations and of the public.

This action is mentioned because of its significance, and because it is representative of similar action by other commercial organizations which have large influence and outreach. Take in connection with it the fact that the Packers' Committee, representing all classes of packers, after conference with the Food Administrator, approved of the Government's placing the entire industry under license and declared its desire to co-operate with the Food Administration in working out war problems. Realize that the great packers of the country are included in this compact, and that these men combined have power to prevent speculation, war profiteering and greed in the industry they represent. Nor have these leaders in vast enterprises been dragged or dragooned into this action. They have come to Washington at the invitation of the Food Administration as patriotic citizens ready to aid the Government in every possible way in the prosecution of a righteous war, and under the persuasive presentation of the food situation have assented to propositions that in ordinary times would have been regarded as chimerical.

This has happened time and time again, and is one of the marvels of this movement. It means a kind of co-operation, inspired by the highest motives, that must tell upon the entire business life of the nation. When the wholesaler and manufacturer each pledges himself to help keep down the cost of living and stop profiteering, the retailer will have to take notice and govern himself accordingly, or else give an account to those above and to the public. Once let this new principle come to prevail, and it will be difficult to return to a lower standard when the war is over. Thus the Food Administration is exerting today directly and indirectly a tremendous moral impact upon the business world.

Its impact upon the religious life of the nation is equally strong. It has placed a high estimate upon the religious organizations; has freely and fully recognized their indispensableness in enlisting the homes in this food conservation campaign, and has called upon them for a large and definite service. The results cannot fail to be as beneficial to the churches as to the commercial interests. When our people come to see that food conservation and national preservation are inseparably linked, the response of the religious and commercial forces will not be doubtful, no matter what sacrifice may be involved.

How the Churches May Help the Soldiers

It is easy to be deceived as to the relative importance of the religious work that is to be done by the churches for the soldiers, in connection with the great war. The interest of everybody is irresistibly drawn to the training camps, and to the work of the chaplains and the Christian Associations in France, and it could be easily overlooked that every church from which men go the front has a great opportunity and responsibility right at home, with regard to these men and their families. To honor these soldiers of liberty and democracy, to keep in touch with them in camp and field, to maintain intimate relations with their families, and to do all that can be done in anxiety and sorrow: these are noble and powerful ministries.

The Committee of the Churches on War Work recommends to the proper denominational authorities, that each of their local churches be urged to set up the following work for their own enlisted men and their families:

1. That every local church have its honor roll, properly framed and hung in a conspicuous place, with the names of all its soldiers and sailors inscribed thereon.
2. That everything be done to honor these men when they go, and when they return.
3. That the churches provide membership cards to be sent to the men, indicating if possible membership in the church, the congregation, or homes of the church.
4. That regular correspondence be kept up with these men by the pastors or by a committee on correspondence, and that these letters be as newsy as possible.
5. That the women of the church get together to prepare packages for the men, to include knitted goods, clippings, papers, dainties and other articles. These packages should be sent not only at Christmas time but at regular intervals. Women from the households of the soldiers should be invited to assist.
6. That pastors and Sunday schools give special attention during the war to the families of enlisted men, in order to assist wives and mothers, and to provide against juvenile delinquency. The committee advises frequent visitation in homes, careful shepherding by pastors and teachers, development of club activities during the week to keep children interested and off the streets, and watchfulness against truancy.

The Joy of Service

It is well worth while to become a Christian. Rather let us say it is infinitely worth while. Only thus can we secure the gift of eternal life. And beyond the peace that comes from the assurance that we are saved through Christ, there is the joy of service, which is the Christian's constant possession, and which is worth immeasurably more than any earthly prize that we can secure.

Just For Fun

District Visitor—"And how is the little girl to-day?"

Mrs. Tuttle—"Law, miss, the doctor 'e 'xamined 'er with 'is telescope an' took 'er temper an' all, an' 'e said as 'er utensils was out of order."

A patriotic school teacher recited "The Landing of the Pilgrims" to her pupils, then asked each of them to draw from their imagination a picture of Plymouth Rock. One little fellow hesitated and then raised his hand. "Well, Willie, what is it?" "Please, Miss Brown, do you want us to draw a hen or a rooster?"

Teacher—"Now, children, our reader says, 'John has a beautiful nosegay.' Can any little boy tell what a nosegay is?"

Tom—"I can, teacher. A nosegay is a nose like the principal's. It's red."

"The auto followed the trolley, and the airship follows the auto. What do you expect to follow the airship?"

"The ambulance."

William Wilberforce, the slave liberator, had a sister who was a hustler. She hustled for William on the hustings and succeeded in getting him elected to Parliament. On one occasion, when she had concluded her stump speech, some enthusiasts in the crowd shouted: "Miss Wilberforce forever!" The lady stepped forward "Gentlemen, I thank you," she said; "but, believe me, I do not wish to be Miss Wilberforce forever."

"Suppose I take seventeen boys," began the teacher, "and one pie, and I divide the pie equally among them, what, Willie Robinson, will one of those pieces amount to?"

"One swallow," answered Willie.

A little chap who thinks that a watch is one thing that makes life worth living was told that for the present a watch could not be given to him, says an exchange.

But he continued to tease for one, until the whole family were wearied. Then his father, after explaining that he should certainly have a watch when he was older, forbade him to mention the subject again.

The next Sunday the children, as was the custom in that family, repeated Bible verses at the breakfast table. When it was the boy's turn he astonished them all by saying:

"What I say unto you, I say unto you all: Watch!"

One afternoon a traveler was rambling along a country road, when he observed a small boy sitting on a bridge, watching a great red glow in the western sky. "Young man," said he, enthusiastically, "I am glad to see you so interested in beautiful scenery." "Yes, sir," assented the youngster. "There is nothing more beautiful at times than the setting sun," pursued the traveler. "Do you often come here to watch it?" "That ain't no settin' sun!" exclaimed the boy, turning to the other with a happy expression. "That's our school-house burnin' down."

Colored pastor, dismissing congregation: "De membahs what am pervided wid umbrellas will please wait till I take a look at 'em. Since de mysterious disappearance ob my own umbrella last Sunday dar am a cloud of suspicion floating ober dis yer church which has got to be dispelled."

Upon looking under his berth in the morning, a passenger on an east-bound train found one black shoe and one tan shoe. He called the porter's attention to the error. The porter scratched his woolly head in bewilderment.

"Well, an' don't dat beat all!" he exclaimed. "Dat's de second time dis mawnin' dat dat mistake's happened!"

FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT

The AMERICAN MESSENGER is found very acceptable by the Home Departments of many Sabbath Schools. What better publication could be secured for home reading at the price at which this paper is offered? When ordered in clubs of five or more, the price is only 30 cents a year. The papers may be mailed to individual names, or they may be sent in one package to be distributed by the Sabbath School Visitor—whichever way is preferred. We trust that the Good Literature Committees in all Churches, Sabbath Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies will consider the AMERICAN MESSENGER in ordering their supplies.

AMERICAN MESSENGER

Park Ave. and 40th St. New York

VERY ATTRACTIVE AND USEFUL PREMIUMS

ARLINGTON COMBINATION SET

This set consists of a 10-year gold-filled, 7-jeweled man's watch, a pair of 14Kt. gold shell cuff links and a gold-filled pocket knife, also a gold-filled chain, packed in an attractive display box. The movement in the watch is covered by a five-year mechanical guaranty. The rest of the jewelry will undoubtedly wear ten years. This set will be given free and postpaid for only 35 yearly subscriptions to the American Messenger at fifty cents each.

A RADIUM GUN METAL WATCH

A genuine gun metal watch, fitted with a 7-jeweled, 5 year guaranteed movement. The hands and numbers on the watch are coated with a radium luminous material which permits the time to be seen in the dark without the aid of any other light. This material is guaranteed to retain its luminosity for ten years. Just the watch for the soldier boy. We have the same grade watch in a solid nickel case. We will give either of these watches, all postpaid, for only 20 yearly subscriptions to the American Messenger at fifty cents each.

REGULAR DIAL WRIST COMPASS

This compass is nickel and the points of the compass as well as the tip of the needle is coated with a radium luminous material, allowing the direction to be seen in the dark. We will give this compass free and postpaid for only 5 yearly subscriptions to the American Messenger at fifty cents each.

A SPLENDID SET FOR GENTLEMEN

This is a very serviceable set, consisting of a pair of 14Kt. gold shell cuff links, a tie clasp and a stick pin, packed in an attractive display box. We will give this set free and postpaid for only 5 yearly subscriptions to the American Messenger at fifty cents each.

FLOATING DIAL COMPASS

This compass is also nickel, but it has a floating dial which brings the various points of direction closer to the eyes, and is considered a little more accurate. We will give this compass free and postpaid for only 6 yearly subscriptions to the American Messenger at fifty cents each.

A Beautiful Three Piece Bracelet Watch

We are offering a three-piece set for ladies, consisting of a 20-year gold-filled, 7-jeweled convertible bracelet watch with a gold finish dial, a gold-filled convertible bracelet and a ribbon bracelet with gold-filled clasps packed in an attractive box. The movement is guaranteed free from mechanical defects for five years, except as to mainsprings, which are guaranteed for one year, and the case and bracelet will wear twenty years. The watch is guaranteed an accurate timepiece. This beautiful set is sure to please, and we will give it for only 35 yearly subscriptions to the American Messenger at fifty cents each.

POCKET KNIFE No. 2164

Given free for only 4 yearly subscriptions at 50c. each.

This Knife for gentlemen has two blades. Each blade opens easily. The blades are made of finest quality of steel. The handle is of patent stag, and is brass lined.

EASY OPENER KNIFE

Given free for only 4 yearly subscriptions at 50c. each.

This Knife is called the "Easy Opener" because of the way the handle is cut, so as to secure a good grasp of the blade when opening it. No broken nails or sore fingers from trying to open this knife. It has two good, strong, polished hand-forged steel blades, stag-handled, shaped so as to give a good, firm hold. It is a handsome, strong, serviceable knife for either man or boy.

SPLENDID FOUNTAIN PENS

These Pens Are Suitable for Either Ladies or Gentlemen

No. 1. Plain Pen. It will be given for only 3 subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at 50 cents.

No. 2. Gold Bands Fountain Pen. This Pen has two engraved one-quarter inch Gold Bands and is six and one-half inches long. It will be given for 5 subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at 50 cents each.

In the construction of these pens only the best of materials are used. The rubber parts are hand-turned Para rubber. The gold nibs are 14 karat solid gold tipped with the best grade of hard iridium. The mountings are 18 karat 1-10 stock. These pens will be found to render eminently satisfactory service.

AMERICAN MESSENGER, Park Avenue and 40th Street, New York

205
AMM

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO

Vol. 76

MARCH, 1918

No. 3

A CASTE GIRL OF INDIA

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY, NEW YORK

H.E. FRITZ.

Growth of the Moody Bible Institute

BY JOSEPH B. BOWLES.

The historic building which served until recently as the home of the Moody Church, Chicago, formerly known as the Chicago Avenue Church, has been purchased by the Moody Bible Institute, together with the adjoining Young People's Building, and the ground on which the two structures stand.

There has seldom been a more important transaction of the sort, viewed as to its significance for the proclamation of the gospel. The Moody Church, always aggressively evangelistic, was compelled to seek larger quarters over two years ago, and erected a tabernacle of 5,000 seating capacity a mile north of its old location. On the other hand, the Moody Bible Institute has long been urgently in need of increased class room facilities, and especially a large auditorium for public conferences. Hence this famous church structure, the scene of unceasing revival, will witness hereafter the training of thousands of young men and women for Christian service in all lands, while continuing as a rallying point for Christian leaders the world over. Of a truth, Dwight L. Moody's works do follow him.

Contrary to the general impression, these two Chicago organizations, founded by the great evangelist, are separate, independent institutions. The Moody Church, pursuing its God-given ministry as a congregation of believers, has no organic connection whatever with the Moody Bible Institute, raised up of God to send forth trained gospel workers, into all the world. The methods of the two are different, the control is different, the appeal is different. The church is undenominational, but the Institute is strongly interdenominational, as represented in its trustees, its faculty, its student body, the character of its curriculum, and its basis of financial support. All the churches and all the mission boards appeal to it for helpers, and it is glad to be able to respond to all.

The host of friends and former co-workers of D. L. Moody around the world will rejoice to learn that the purchase of this sanctuary of sacred memory signalizes, in many important respects, a new stage in the growth and development of the Moody Bible Institute, which is now the largest of its kind in the world, with property assets now exceeding $1,500,000. Its total enrollment in all departments has passed 25,000.

There are at present over 1,100 students in attendance at the day and evening classes, and more than 3,500 scattered throughout the world are taking its correspondence courses. It maintains an Extension Department, with a staff of Bible teachers, preachers and evangelists constantly at work in various parts of the country.

Its Music Department has recently been enlarged and the music faculty strengthened, providing for instruction in more advanced work than hitherto, so as to raise the quality of gospel hymn music both in composition and in rendition in the evangelistic field; and a summer music school has been instituted, teaching gospel playing and singing for the sake of those who cannot attend at any other time.

Under the pressure of current conditions in the world, the Moody Bible Institute has made plans for four additional buildings besides the church—a men's dormitory, a women's dormitory, a dormitory for married students, and an administration building. It has also enlarged its provision for missionary preparation by the addition of special missionary courses, and now has in operation a literal "training camp" for volunteers for home and foreign missions, on a scale perhaps not fully duplicated in any other Bible school in the world.

The Moody Institute is a monument to its consecrated founders more enduring and a thousand times more useful than any mere memorial in stone.

A Call for United Prayer

The General War-Time Commission of the Churches, of which Dr. Robert E. Speer is chairman, at the request of the War Commissions of several Communions, has sent out a call to the Church throughout the United States for the joint observance of the month of March as a time of special penitence and prayer and intercession. A booklet, "New Ventures in Faith," for the use of churches or of small groups or of individuals, containing meditations and suggestions for prayer for the entire month, and so arranged as to be of service in following months, has been prepared and can be obtained at ten cents a copy or $10.00 per hundred copies from the General War-Time Commission of the Churches, 105 East 22d Street, New York City, and from the War Commission of each denomination.

The last week of March begins with Palm Sunday and ends with Easter Day. The various Communions will have their own special forms of observance of this week, and the Federal Council of the Churches will also issue a special call with suggestions for these days.

In behalf of the General War-Time Commission of the Churches the following suggestions are offered as to the possibility of finding special occasions this year for interdenominational and community acts of co-operation and unity.

1. Hundreds of men have been called and hundreds more will be called from the ministry of the churches to service as chaplains in the army and navy. Wherever a chaplain goes forth to this great service it is suggested that all the churches of the community join in a general consecration service, sending him forth, bearing the ordination of his own body, but with the blessing of all and with the consecration of the community from which he goes to the ministry of the nation.

2. It would not be advisable, in view of fuel conditions, that all the churches of the community should be kept open throughout the month, but it is suggested that such arrangements be made as will provide some one open church or parish house throughout the entire month to which Christian people may resort by day and by night for prayer.

3. As a means of fellowship and unity in common intercession, as well as of a just observance of the government's call for the husbanding of every resource, an enlarged number of union services among such churches as may find it possible is proposed.

4. Whenever it is found to be possible, intercommunion celebrations of the Lord's Supper should be held.

5. In a few months the government will summon the second enrollment of men under the military registration. In advance of the call it is suggested that the churches in every community come into touch with all the men in Class I of the government registration so that when these men are summoned to the camps they may go forth with such a work of love and faithfulness already done in their behalf as may steady and uphold them.

Our Honor Roll

On Our Honor Roll are inscribed the names of those into whose homes the AMERICAN MESSENGER has gone for the space of fifty years or more. To the lengthening list of those thus enrolled we are pleased to add the name of Miss Laura Steele, of Perth Amboy, N. J., who writes:

"I could hardly get along without the AMERICAN MESSENGER, and feel that I really belong on your Honor Roll, for the paper has been in my family for over sixty years. Though possibly it has not come consecutively, yet I cannot remember when it has not been in our home, for my grandmother, Mrs. N. V. Steele, of Somerville, N. J., read it to me as early as I can remember."

We should be glad to hear from others who can claim an acquaintance with the AMERICAN MESSENGER during the last fifty years or more.

HALF ON THE BEACH
ATLANTIC CITY
ALWAYS OPEN
THE LEEDS COMPANY

A Welcome Grant

Mr. R. W. Sanders, of Greenville, S. C., has thus acknowledged a grant of tracts from the American Tract Society.

"I thank you most cordially for the large budget of beautiful tracts lately received. With God's help and guidance I will try to use them to the very best advantage in and around Camp Greene. Oh, the need of spiritual support for the young Christian soldiers, and of saving grace for the converted ones so tempted to be reckless! Pray that the Lord's strength and wisdom may be given me."

DON'T decide on the new hymn-book for your Church or Sunday School until you have seen

HALLOWED HYMNS
NEW AND OLD

Edited by IRA ALLAN SANKEY
Son of the famous Singing-Evangelist
Ira D. Sankey

OVER 550,000 COPIES ALREADY SOLD

Responsive Scripture Readings
No Trashy Words No Jingly Music

Price $25.00 per 100 not prepaid
35 cents per copy by mail

Examine a copy and prove its value in your work. (Returnable if desired.)

The Biglow & Main Co., New York
Chicago

This FREE Shoe Book

is crowded with photographs and descriptions of E-Z-WEAR Shoes for Men, Women and Children. E-Z-WEAR Shoes are sent post-paid, guaranteed to combine comfort, style and quality, to fit perfectly or money back. Amazingly low prices. Send for copy to-day.

THE EN SIMON SHOE CO. 1589 BRADWAY BROOKLYN N.Y.

What 15c Will Buy You from the Nation's Capital

Washington, the home of the Pathfinder, is the nerve-center of civilization; history is being made at this world capital. The Pathfinder's illustrated weekly review gives you a clear, impartial and correct diagnosis of public affairs during these strenuous, epoch-making days.

The little matter of 15c in stamps or coin will bring you the Pathfinder 13 weeks on trial. The Pathfinder is an illustrated weekly, published at the Nation's center, for the Nation; a paper that prints all the news of the world and tells the truth and only the truth; now in its 25th year. This paper fills the bill without emptying the purse; it costs but $1 a year. If you want to keep posted on what's going on in the world, at the least expense of time or money, this is your means. If you want a paper in your home which is sincere, reliable, entertaining, wholesome, the Pathfinder is yours. If you would appreciate a paper which puts everything clearly, fairly, briefly—here it is. Send 15c to show that you might like such a paper, and we will send the Pathfinder on probation 13 weeks. The 15c does not repay us, but we are glad to invest in new friends. The Pathfinder, BOX #1, Washington, D. C.

Beautiful Religious Pictures

25c.

each, or

3 for 50c.

CHRIST AND THE RICH YOUNG MAN.

25c.

each, or

3 for 50c.

LIST OF PICTURES FROM WHICH YOU MAY CHOOSE

The Birth of Christ. 20x27 inches	The Child Jesus in the Temple. 18x22 inches
Good Shepherd, in colors. 14 1/2 x 20 inches	Last Supper. 22x36 inches
Suffer Little Children. 18x22 inches	Christ and the Rich Young Man. 18x22 inches

These pictures have been made by a photographic process which admirably reproduces the exquisite beauty of expression in the original painting. They are all ready for framing. Such pictures as these should be in every home and Sunday School, for they serve as an ornament appealing to the best in every nature, educating to high ideals, and furnishing an inspiration and stimulus to right living.

AMERICAN MESSENGER, Park Ave. and 40th St. New York City

The American Messenger

"Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Luke 2:10

Vol. 76. No. 3

MARCH, 1918

Copyright, 1918, by American Tract Society.

Terms: 50 cents per annum
Single copy, 5 cents

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

PUBLISHED MONTHLY

By THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

OFFICERS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President.

JOHN HENRY JOWETT, M.A., D.D., Vice-President.

JUDSON SWIFT, D.D., General Secretary.

LOUIS TAG, Treasurer.

REV. HENRY LEWIS, Ph.D., Recording Secretary.

All of the above-named officers should be addressed at Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Rev. David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.

Rev. Charles Carroll Albertson, D.D.

Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.

Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D.

Rev. George Ernest Merriam.

Entered at the Post Office in New York as second-class matter.

What Hinders Our Victory?

Whether or not we belong to one of the great Communions which specially set aside the forty days preceding Easter as a time of self sacrifice and confession, it would be well for all of us, especially this year, when the cloud of a World War hangs over us, and when there are such multitudes of homes from which some loved member has gone out to active service at the front or to prepare for it, to observe these days in earnest, yes, agonizing prayer, and in practical work for our own men and those of our allies.

Our lads are very precious to us; and now that such numbers of them are actually in the trenches, on the sea, or in ambulance or aviation service, we feel as never before the tremendous gravity of the situation. Is this terrible war to drag on until the earth is saturated with the blood of hundreds of thousands of our clear-eyed, vigorous men, or will these coming months see the close of the struggle and a victorious peace for the upholders of righteousness and justice?

As nation after nation becomes involved, till it seems as though the world were a house of cards and everything were dropping into confusion, is it not a time for us to stop and inquire what the meaning is and if there is some great underlying cause which, being removed, peace might come? Is it not a time for us to search our hearts to see if in our life as a nation there is something which keeps us from claiming the deliverance which we know that God can bring?

The whole Bible is a succession of moving pictures, one might say, of nations which "knew not God," or which knowing Him had fallen away from allegiance to Him, and the means by which He either terminated their existence or brought them back to their allegiance to Him. Can we who live at the end of the ages view this procession of nations either downward or upward and not feel that there is some meaning behind this world upheaval which we have not grasped, which, if we did grasp it, would send us to our knees in an agony of repentance and pleading?

Have the nations of the Old World lost regard for human rights and the sacredness of personal liberty and looked upon weak nations as pawns on the chessboard of their statecraft? Have we in this New World been forgetting in our rush for money and power and fame the right of the humble and the weak to "a place in the sun"? And have we in our pursuit of wealth and pleasure forgotten God?

Let us turn to our God in these days when we especially remember the bitter way by which our Saviour climbed to Gethsemane and Calvary, and the sin and forgetfulness of the world which made His supreme sacrifice necessary, and open our hearts for His cleansing and saving.

We talk of national sins; but each one of us is an integral part of the nation, and if we are to expect forgiveness and help for our nation we must first seek it for ourselves. "Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me and know my thoughts." When we have cast the sin out of our own hearts then shall we be able to plead powerfully for the redemption of the world.

May this season of prayer and meditation bring a new vision and a new trust in God and a reconsecration of ourselves and all that we have as individuals and as a nation to His service. And in the new vision and consecration may there come a power from God of which we have not even dreamed, a victorious power because the Lord of Hosts is with us!

✻ ✻ ✻

Cheer-Up Letters to Our Soldiers

It seems to be human nature to write about the more serious side of life in letters to friends. Our letters are what our prayers too often are—recitals of troubles with thankfulness for the bright and happy things left out.

This has been noticed by those who have to do with our soldiers in camp, and Mr. Lee F. Hanmer asks the Council of National Defence if word cannot be sent out to the home people to make their letters brighter and more cheerful. He says:

"Camp authorities are feeling that the kinds of letters written by the home folks to the boys in camp are making it more difficult to keep their minds on their work in hand and to develop the spirit for the service that is most necessary. Without thinking of what effect their letters have on the boys, the home folks write about their various troubles, tending to disturb the boys in camp and to center their attention on home affairs, which they are generally unable under present conditions to do anything to remedy. One camp commander put it—'They write about the mortgage coming due, that father has pneumonia, a horse died, or a building burned, etc., etc.'

"It is quite natural that such letters should be sent, but if the home folks in some way were made to realize that it is difficult enough for the boys to concentrate on the serious task in hand, and give their best thought and energy to training for service, they would no doubt be glad to refrain from bringing to their attention such matters as indicated above, and would write instead of the more encouraging side of things and such matters as would help instead of hinder."

Let us spread this warning broadcast, for the sake of the boys, who are homesick enough already, without added cause.

✻ ✻ ✻

The Moody Bible Institute

On another page we give an interesting account of the recent enlargement of the Moody Bible Institute by the purchase of the Moody Church and the Young People's Building. All who know the splendid work of the Institute, which is constantly sending out finely trained workers for all forms of evangelistic and social service work, will rejoice in its prosperity. On Founder's Day, February 5, Mr. Moody's birthday was observed by a prayer and praise service in the morning, with an address by Mr. Al. Saunders of Scranton, Pa., and in the evening at 6 o'clock a banquet was tendered the pastors and members of the Executive Committee of the Moody Church by the faculty and business staff of the Moody Bible Institute, and at 8 o'clock a special praise and testimony service, Mr. Henry P. Crowell, President of the Institute, presiding, was held in the Moody Auditorium, where former co-workers of Mr. Moody participated. Mr. John Morrison, Rev. Wm. S. Jacoby, and Dr. D. B. Towner related interesting personal reminiscences, and Mr. J. B. Bowles read parts of a new book, soon to be published, on the early life of Mr. Moody.

✻ ✻ ✻

The Red Triangle at the Front

John Oxenham, the English author, who writes from his own observation on the West Front, tells of the work of the Y. M. C. A. at the advance of Messines, when thirty-four little relief stations were opened just back of the firing lines. Here the wounded were rushed for first aid. "The men went over the top following the travelling line of fire, and a few minutes later the front posts were receiving their first guests—welcoming them with cheery words, handing out hot drinks, coffee, cocoa, lemonade, Oxo and chocolates and cakes, and speeding them on their way down the slippery tracks to the next house of call, where just the same attentions awaited them, and so to the next and the next, till they arrived at last at the railway evacuating post. How some of them would ever have got there without the assistance of the Red Triangle it is hard to say." He says:

"That little Red Triangle on the black ground has done more to win this war, and still much more to save men's bodies and souls, than we at home as yet fully recognize. But the Army chiefs out there know it to the full and their appreciation is large and warm. To hundreds of thousands of our men it represents a new evangel,—the gospel of practical and most genial Christianity. Thank God for the wisdom that lifted it out of its old-time narrow groove, and gave it a new birth, and opened its lusty new-born arms wide enough to take in the whole world.

"The Red Triangle asks no questions, requires no creeds, when it offers its help. Like the Samaritan in the parable, it sees simply the need and to the uttermost of its power supplies it."

Reading for the Soldiers and Sailors

The American Tract Society is responding to the call for good reading for our soldiers and sailors, in this way building up their spiritual life just as the Red Cross is ministering to their bodies. One of the workers at the front has said that the men welcome really good reading, and that he has been surprised to see how they pass by what is light and ephemeral to take up papers and books that bring information and uplift.

To meet just this desire the Tract Society has forwarded to the battleships, cruisers and cantonments 1,366,500 copies of volumes, booklets and leaflets, and the General Secretary says that never in the history of the Society have such warm words of appreciation been received as are coming by every mail from those who have received this reading.

What Tithing Does

Men and Missions for February tells the story of the church in Geneva, N. Y., which when finished three or four years ago found itself loaded with a debt of $82,000. The pastor who came to the church in 1915 found a depressing situation; but the very hopelessness of it spurred him on. Interesting several men of the church, a meeting was held which resulted in the "Geneva Tithing Movement," which in nine months produced some astonishing results. First of all there was a genuine religious revival in the church, and secondly the financial problem was solved. During this last year the members of the church have paid for all purposes a total of $26,000, while the church debt stands reduced to $50,000. Other Central New York churches have caught the vision and the tithing movement is being enlarged. If all church members, those in the Sunday-schools and in the young people's societies, became tithers, there would be no lack of money to carry on the work of God's Kingdom.

Evangelism in China

Sherwood Eddy, who is on his way to China for an evangelistic tour, writes earnestly of conditions there. He says:

"Think of China. Here are one-quarter of the human race, four hundred millions of our brothers, who have been kept and prepared these 4,000 years for some great providential purposes. In no other nation of the world are the non-Christian students, officials and leaders so open to an earnest consideration of the claims of Christ and His Gospel. No other nation has greater need. America has stood as China's best friend. We hold no foot of her soil; we gave back the Boxer indemnity money; we stand as a sister republic. A great era of reconstruction is to follow this war. Now is the time to lay deep foundations for character building if we are to claim these lands for a truly Christian civilization and reconstruction after the war.

"If you believe in God and if you believe in prayer will you remember China during the next four months of this evangelistic campaign?"

The Religious Life of Two Great Authors

BY PAUL V. D. HOYSRADT

WHEN mention is made of the Victorian novelists, most people think instinctively of Dickens and Thackeray as the two names standing at the head of the list. Certainly these men were both writers of marvelous genius and in the field of literature their influence will probably be felt through many centuries to come. But why is it that to-day so little is said about their strong Christian faith, the existence of which is a fact to which their most intimate friends have borne ample testimony? Is it because we are naturally more reticent in these times about discussing such a thing as a great man's religion? Or is it because the simple faith of an earlier day is not as popular a subject for consideration among the cultivated, intellectual classes as it was fifty or more years ago? If the latter fact is the true explanation, then we may well tremble for the bent of scholarship and literature in our own day.

But perhaps the real reason after all for the absence of discussion along this line is the general ignorance that exists in regard to the faith of these two eminent novelists. "Where is the evidence in regard to their Christianity?" many ask, who have probably read all the works of both writers and yet never read between the lines. Concrete proof is in great demand these days, not only in law courts, but also in the class rooms where the characters of writers are carefully dissected.

Without going into the matter very fully it would probably be worth while for many people to examine James T. Fields' volume, "Yesterdays with Authors," for the light thrown on the Christian character of the two greatest novelists of their day. Mr. Fields was one of the few American publishers who enjoyed an intimacy with both writers. A man of a rare and charming personality, a lover of the finest and noblest things in literature as well as in life, it is no wonder Dickens and Thackeray both carried their affection for him to the point of correspondence, and in addition to the happy outings recorded in this volume of reminiscences, there are letters and extracts from letters which passed from them to their devoted American friend. In short, Mr. Fields was well fitted to act as an interpreter of these novelists to their somewhat reserved American public.

His assertions in regard to the strong Christian faith of Dickens are interesting, to say the least. "If anywhere, out of the Bible," Mr. Fields declares, "God's goodness and mercy are solemnly commended to the world's attention, it is in the pages of Dickens." And speaking of the novelist's religious belief, he said, "He was no scoffer or doubter. His religion was of the heart and his faith beyond questioning." By way of illustration, however, Mr. Fields quotes the following passage from Dickens' last will and testament, dated May 12, 1869, adding that he believed "these written words of his would forever remain an emphatic testimony to his Christian faith":

"I commit my soul to the mercy of God, through our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and I exhort my dear children humbly to try to guide themselves by the teachings of the New Testament."

Mr. Fields' chapter on Thackeray contains a still more striking illustration of this great novelist's faith than any he includes in his recollections of Dickens. This will be all the more surprising then to those who have thought of Thackeray only as a worldly-minded satirist or an irreligious cynic; for the author of "Vanity Fair" was probably as profoundly religious at heart as any true Christian could be though he never paraded his faith for the benefit of the curious. In proving this not very well-known point it matters little that Mr. Fields quotes the following incident in the words of Doctor John Brown, the famous Scotch writer, by whom it was first chronicled:

"One Sunday evening in December Thackeray was walking with two friends along the Dean Road, to the west of Edinburgh—one of the noblest outlets to any city. It was a lovely evening; such a sunset as one never forgets; a rich dark bar of cloud hovered over the sun, going down behind the highland hills, lying bathed in amethystine bloom; between this cloud and the hills there was a narrow slip of the pure ether, of a tender cowslip color, lucid and as if it were the very body of heaven in its clearness; every object standing out as if etched upon the sky. The northwest end of Corstorphine Hill, with its trees and rocks, lay in the heart of this pure radiance; and there a wooden crane, used in the granary below, was so placed as to assume the figure of a cross; there it was, unmistakable, lifted up against the crystalline sky. All three gazed at it silently. As they gazed, Thackeray gave utterance in a tremulous, gentle, and rapid voice to what all were feeling, in the word, 'Calvary!' The friends walked on in silence, and then turned to other things. All that evening he was very gentle and serious, speaking as he seldom did of divine things—of death, of sin, of eternity, of salvation, expressing his simple faith in God and in his Saviour."

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTION

DR. DAVID J. BURRELL.

MEATLESS DAYS IN CORINTH

A Lenten Homily

BY

REV. DAVID JAMES BURRELL, D.D., LL.D.

Pastor of the Marble Collegiate Church, New York City

If meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth.—1 Cor. 8:13

MAJORITY of the Christians in the world are accustomed to keep Lent as a season of more or less serious fasting for forty days.

The custom of fasting in Lent or at other times not only in the Greek, Catholic and other liturgical branches of the Christian Church but even in the Mohammedan and pagan religions, is so general as to challenge the inquiry whether or no there is really a divine warrant for it.

In the Old Testament the Great Day of Atonement was set apart for sacred observance in these words: "The tenth day of this seventh month . . . shall be a holy convocation unto you. And ye shall afflict your souls: for it is a day to make an atonement for you before the Lord your God." (Lev. 23:27-28.) The people observed the day accordingly by fasting as the most obvious manner of "afflicting their souls."

This was the only fast enjoined under the Levitical law. In connection with the sacrifices of the Great Day of Atonement it served to keep the people in remembrance of the coming of Christ as the sacrificial Lamb of God.

In the course of time other fasts were instituted, but without the authority of definite law. At the beginning of the Christian era it was customary for the more orthodox Jews to fast twice every week and to do this very rigidly and ostentatiously, as if there were some saving virtue in it.

In the New Testament fasting is treated as a voluntary service, as "the outward form of an inward grace."

The forty days' fast of Jesus in the wilderness was so obviously miraculous as to forestall any suggestion that it furnishes an example for us.

The stated fasts which were observed by the Jews generally were not kept by Christ and His disciples. The fault-finders asked of Him, "Why do the disciples of John and of the Pharisees fast, but Thy disciples fast not?" (Mark 2:18.)

He did not forbid fasting; but He deprecated its theatrical observance in the most scathing terms, saying, "When ye fast, be not, as the hypocrites, of a sad countenance; for they disfigure their faces that they may appear unto men to fast. Verily I say unto you, They have their reward. But thou, when thou fastest, anoint thy head and wash thy face; that thou appear not unto men to fast but unto thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly." He instituted one feast but never a fast—and the feast referred to is the simplest the world ever saw.

His definition of true fasting sounds like an echo of Isaiah's words: "Is it such a fast that I have chosen; a day for a man to afflict his soul? Is it to bow down his head as a bulrush and to spread sackcloth and ashes under him? Wilt thou call this a fast and an acceptable day to the Lord? Is not this the fast that I have chosen; to loose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens, and to let the oppressed go free and that ye break every yoke? Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thy house; when thou seest the naked, that thou cover him; and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh?"

This leads us to inquire What is the object of fasting? If we are to observe the Lenten season in this manner let us know the reason why.

I. To begin with it should be understood that the mere abstinence from food has no spiritual value. It may be physically beneficial, since pretty much everybody eats too much. On the other hand it may be spiritually hurtful. There is truth in the old proverb which says, "The way to a man's soul is through his stomach." Satan took advantage of this fact in the first temptation; which some folks say left its memorial in a projection of the thyroid cartilage called "Adam's apple." But neither eating nor refraining from eating has any spiritual virtue except for its relation to divine law. Gluttony is a sin; so is abstinence when no good and sufficient reason can be given for it.

II. In time of deep trouble or bereavement one naturally refrains from eating. When David lost his son under distressing circumstances he "fasted and lay all night upon the earth"; not because of any injunction in Leviticus to that effect but simply in obedience to the natural law that the edge of hunger is dulled by pain. For a like reason Jesus said to His fault-finders, "Can the children of the bridechamber fast while the Bridegroom is with them? But when the Bridegroom shall be taken away from them, then shall they fast in those days." (Mark 2:19.) It is safe to say that there was much of fasting among the disciples in the dark shadow of their Lord's farewell; not because He required it but because they loved Him so that they could not help it.

III. The deepest sorrow in human experience is when a soul is under conviction of sin. The best laid table has no attractions for the man who beats upon his breast (just there because he knows that what ails him is a disease of the heart), crying, "God be merciful to me a sinner!" He fasts not because it is Lent but because eating has no charms for him.

When presently he hears the Lord say, "Thy sins are forgiven thee," he will partake of a feast of fat things and wine upon the lees; but not yet. In the philosophy of grace fasting comes before feasting and sackcloth before the wedding dress.

When the King of Nineveh was warned of coming retribution for his sins and those of his people he caused it to be proclaimed, "Let neither man nor beast, herd nor flock, taste anything or drink water, but be covered with sackcloth and cry mightily unto the Lord, that we perish not." (Jonah 3:7.)

IV. The complement of fasting is abstinence from everything that savors of sin. It was for this reason that in Isaiah's time the fasts of Israel were rejected of God. "Wherefore have we fasted, say they, and thou seest not? Wherefore have we afflicted our soul and thou takest no knowledge?" Here is the Lord's answer: "Behold, in the day of your fast ye find pleasure and exact all your labors. Behold, ye fast for strife and debate and to smite with the fist of wickedness." In another place he intimates that this sort of fasting afflicts the Lord with a divine sort of nausea, saying, "I am weary to bear it; I cannot away with it." And here is the remedy he proposes, "Cease to do evil; learn to do well. Come now, let us reason together; though your sins be as scarlet they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." (Isaiah 1:10-20.)

This is quaintly paraphrased by old Robert Herrick in the familiar lines:

"Is this a fast; to keep
The larder lean
And clean
From fat of veals and sheep?"

"Is it to quit the dish
Of flesh, yet still
To fill
The platter high with fish?"

"Is it to fast an hour,
Or ragged to go,
Or show
A downcast look and sour?"

"No; 'tis a fast to dole
Thy sheaf of wheat
And meat
Unto the hungry soul.

"It is to fast from strife,
From old debate
And hate
To circumcise thy life;

"To show a heart grief-rent;
To starve thy sin,
Not bin,—
And that's to keep thy Lent."

V. In general terms fasting means self-denial for the attainment of a holy end. This brings us to the Corinthian Church. We are having "meatless days" just now in the interest of food conservation for the benefit of the starving people of the world; but there was a special reason why the Christians of Corinth were enjoined to refrain from the use of certain kinds of meat. They were not infrequently invited to dine with neighbors who had on their tables meats that had been previously laid upon the altars of pagan gods. To a thoughtful Christian this was no reason why he should not partake, since as Paul says, "We know that an idol is nothing in the world"; but, as he adds, "Not every man has that knowledge," and to people of a weaker conscience "your liberty may be a stumbling-block." Then comes this noble manifesto, "If meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth!" This is a true fast; not to stand upon one's rights but to put all personal rights under foot if another may walk over them into the Kingdom of God. The first step into the Christian life is self-abnegation; as Jesus said, "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow Me."

VI. From another point of view a true fast is separateness from the world. The followers of Christ are designated as "a peculiar people"; wherefore we are enjoined to "come out from the world and be separate." This does not mean that we are to wear a peculiar garb or long faces or anything of the sort; but that we are, not at any particular time or season but always, to refrain from any sensual comfort or pleasure that could dampen the ardor of our devotion to Christ.

We cannot help being in the world but we must not be of it. In our Lord's sacerdotal prayer for his disciples He asks the Father "not that they may be taken out of the world, but that they may be kept from the evil that is in it." He has no end of blessings for those who prefer his company to any other. He leads us into mounts of vision where we behold "things not lawful to be uttered." But to catch those visions we must leave the world with its sin, and fret, and worry, and frivolity behind us. This means more than to deny ourselves of some particular kind of food for forty days. That may be incidental to it; but to intimate that the test of piety is a difference between flesh and fish is mere grotesquerie. Piety is something far and away beyond it.

To fast after this manner is to keep a true Lent; and "this shall be a perpetual observance unto you." Great are the blessings that attend it: "Then shall thy light rise in obscurity and thy darkness be as the noonday. The Lord shall guide thee continually, and satisfy thy soul in drought and make fat thy bones; and thou shalt be like a watered garden, and like a spring of water whose waters fail not."

ONE BY ONE

BY ALLAN PHILLIP.

THEY are coming up out of the darkness one by one; wanderers returning home sad and broken hearted; lost children of the one loving Father finding their way to the joy of the kingdom of eternal peace; and if there is gladness among the angels of heaven when sinners are converted, it is also granted to God's servants here to feel something of that same joy as they see them coming in one by one, and the thrill of that gladness no one knows but those who have toiled in the Master's vineyard and have watched with earnest prayer for the breaking of the dawn.

But miracles of grace are being wrought to-day as they were wrought in the faraway days when our Lord Himself trod the fields of Palestine and laid His healing hand upon the sick and said to the sinful children of men, "Thy sins be forgiven thee." Quietly and unseen by the eye of the world the great work of redeeming love is going on. In shadowed ways and in dark haunts of the busy world great spiritual battles are being fought and wonderful victories gained, and the promise of the Lord is coming true in a way that fills the hearts of His followers with infinite hope and expectation. "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." The constraining, winning, power of the love of Christ is working mightily where it is least expected, and only as the hearts of men are opened in confiding trustfulness are we privileged to know how wonderfully and how secretly the divine work goes on and the Kingdom grows among men.

In the very centre of a city's busy life, where the thronging tide of humanity ebbs and flows ceaselessly by day and by night, stands a gospel hall with its open doors and its genial welcome to the passers-by. The rays of light gleam out into the darkness where lonely pilgrims burdened with sorrows which they can tell into no human ear are moving up and down the world's hard way, seeking comfort and finding none; and out into the darkness and away down the narrow streets where evil influences linger and evil deeds are done, the servants of the Lord are going and seeking to win the lost back to the great Home.

It is a wonderful work, and the story of its victories will never be written on the pages of history; but a record which time cannot efface is kept somewhere, written by a divine hand, of the souls that are passing from death to life and from the world's broad way of destruction into the narrow way and through the straight gate that leads to the Paradise of God.

There are so many in this world who "will not come," for the power of sin binds them and the love of sin enchains them, and the dread of the light makes them afraid. There are so many who do not know themselves and cannot understand the meaning of the great call unless someone tells them. So many, too, who feeling a desire to be better and do better are still groping their way in blindness, seeking someone to lead them by the hand. Oh, how large is the field of service, how great the need of more laborers in the Lord's harvest! And how glorious beyond all telling is it to be used of God for the great ingathering!

"Compel them to come in," said the Master; and it is wonderful how powerful love is to compel and win them back from the ways of sin.

One of the great conquests in the hall above mentioned was a rough uncouth man, a veritable child of the devil, who by reason of his reckless life of passionate indulgence and his unrestrained violence had for long been a "character" in the town and a terror in that portion of the slums where he dwelt. No one ever thought of him as a possible recruit for the King's service, no one dared to speak to him of higher things; so deeply had he fallen that he was generally regarded as a hopeless case; but if only we can believe it, there is good in the heart of every man, something that God can lay hold of, something that love can touch—a spark that may somehow be kindled into a great flame, lighted from the torch of heavenly love and purity.

This man had been reared and trained in an atmosphere of crime; led to the saloon as a little child, sent there on frequent errands as the years came and went, till the going and the coming to and from the place of temptation became the habit of his life. It was indeed the only place of which he knew where he might find light and comfort and congenial companionship, and there, when under the influence of drink, his extravagantly prodigal nature gathered about him a great following of flatterers and he was well pleased.

But there was something good even in the heart of Dick Strange, and something touched it one day. His own folly resulted in a severe accident which almost cost him his life, and just when the horror of death gripped him, someone was at his side speaking in tender tones of the unfailing love and mercy of God in Jesus Christ and of the forgiveness through the cross of Calvary. He did not seem to hear or heed the message, but in his fear and dread of death and his terrible weakness he felt the need of something. He did not know what it was, but he was like a man out of his depth and with nothing to hold to in the swiftly flowing current, in danger of being carried away to the great sea and lost; and amid the gloom he tried to lay hold of the hope that seemed like a faint light in the darkness of his life.

He recovered from the accident and was ere long back again in the slums and the old slum life; but evidently he was fighting a battle of which no one knew, for he was strangely silent, morose, unwilling to talk, shunning the saloon and the companionship of his former friends; and some weeks after his recovery he entered the gospel hall of his own accord. He said nothing in answer to the welcome offered him, not one word did he speak, but he came again and again, and they prayed for him night after night when the meeting had closed, for they saw that a struggle was taking place in his heart and they knew that the Lord was working toward victory.

After a whole week had passed he gave in and when the hall was cleared he came with tears coursing down his face to find peace.

He is a child of God to-day, living a straight and noble life. He found the way to the Cross and surrendered himself to the saving grace of Jesus Christ, and knows that he has been washed in the blood of the Lamb.

He has not left his home in the slums, but the little rooms are adorned now with texts, and the Bible is always open on the table. He is laughed at and ridiculed and called a hypocrite by those he once called his friends; but if anything proves the change that has taken place it is the life he lives and his kind and genial spirit of forgiveness toward those who are trying now to lure him back to the old ways of sin.

New light is shining down in those narrow ways, for Dick Strange in his own rough way has become a worker for the Lord. He does not know much about theology, and his ideas of many things are still somewhat crude, but he knows that there is salvation in the Cross for every sinner and that God can make the very worst a child of his Kingdom; and he is to-day leading others to the Lord. They do not laugh at him as they did at first. He is too great, too earnest, too manly in his new love for the Lord Jesus.

They look on amazed, they refuse his invitation, they do all they can to keep out of his way; but they are giving in, one by one, and many are being helped toward a better life by this man who was himself led toward the light by a word of kindness spoken when he was face to face with death.

The Forgotten Guests

BY EUGENE C. DOLSON

*At my portal that night there were two did knock,
What did I then but the door unlock?
They entered! Oh, would I had barred them out!
I knew them now—they were Fear and Doubt.*

*I gave them welcome, the board I spread;
My guests were seated, we broke the bread;
Yet few were the words at our feast; we three
Were only a joyless company.*

*Anon, as the lone night dragged along,
To break the silence I sang a song;
And there came to my mind a purpose true,
Some work put by to begin anew.*

*The strange newcomers I soon forgot;
When they took their leave I knew it not;
But into the night the twain fared on,
For I looked about and my guests were gone!*

PRINTED PREACHERS

For Chinese Shopkeepers

Mr. Zee Vee Wai, Acting General Secretary of the Chinese Tract Society, whose headquarters are at 18 Peking Road, Shanghai, makes a strong plea for Christian literature for distribution among the Chinese shopkeepers. He writes:

"Although there are many missionaries preaching the gospel to the Chinese here and there, yet China is a vast country, and there are multitudes of Chinese even in the treaty port cities, who are still worshipping idols and burning incense to false gods without having heard the gospel message.

"My heart burns with pain as I write to you, thinking of the condition of our poor Chinese brethren who never have any chance to hear the gospel or to go to church, because they cannot leave their business in the shops. Yet these men have plenty of time to read when they are not waiting on their customers. They read Chinese novels or story-books, but if we can send our colporter to offer them a good tract, it may be the means of winning them to Christ."

By its foreign cash appropriations the American Tract Society is helping to provide the Christian literature which is so sorely needed for this evangelistic work among the Chinese shopkeepers. But there is need for far greater liberality on the part of donors in the homeland in order that the opportunities outlined by Mr. Zee Vee Wai may be used to the greatest possible advantage.

With his communication Mr. Zee Vee Wai sent us a photograph which is reproduced on this page. It shows a busy section of Foochow Road in Shanghai, where there are numerous shops, in which Christian literature could be distributed with the prospect of most encouraging results.

A Record Year

The West China Religious Tract Society, whose headquarters are at Chungking, has sent out the cheering information that its circulation during the past year reached a record figure. The grand total was 1,705,030 issues. The issues since the formation of the Society about nineteen years ago have now reached a total of 12,498,371 copies.

New publications added to the list during the year were a tract for Mohammedans entitled, "All Men Have Sinned," "Christianity and the Republic," of which two editions have already been sold out and a third reprint called for. "The Hygiene Tracts," three numbers of the "Present Day Tracts" for Y. M. C. A. use and "No. 3 of the Teacher Training Series, Junior Department."

To illustrate the mode of tract distribution the following may be quoted:

"The Festival of the Goddess of Mercy was attended by greater numbers this year than for many years has been the case. Hence the opportunities for making the gospel known by preaching, conversation and distribution of literature were correspondingly increased. The regular Chinese workers from the city and outstations gathered up for the work. Three places were fixed for constant preaching and dissemination of literature. Day by day after a prayer meeting the workers went to one or other of these places, all being manned either by men or women workers during the mornings or afternoons. The reception given to our message seemed to many of us to be more friendly than formerly. We found a real spirit of inquiry in many unexpected places. Men and women would show their interest by asking pertinent questions about the subject of the discourses. They would also state their own beliefs and why they thought it was really worth while to come so far to worship the idols. Quite a number who heard the Gospel once, came again and again to hear more of our message. We distributed about 30,000 sheet tracts and sold nearly 5,000 Gospels and book tracts."

FOOCHOW ROAD IN SHANGHAI, CHINA

Mention is made of the cash appropriation received from the American Tract Society which exchanged for $199.52 Mexican. This sum was devoted to grants of 5,000 Broadcast Tracts and the applications were so numerous that the fund was exhausted before the end of the year. Thus the need of more generous aid is clearly indicated, and it is hoped that the friends of tract distribution in China will provide the means whereby larger sums may be remitted so as to carry on this fruitful and beneficent work.

In New York State

Rev. Samuel Goddard, who has been for many years a missionary colporter of the American Tract Society, has sent this account of his recent labors:

"This month, on account of the severe weather, I have spent but a few days in the country. Most of my labors have been in the city of Buffalo. I have made some 2,750 calls and have circulated by sale or grant 93 books, 75 mottoes, 200 cards, 300 tracts, 325 periodicals.

"This year will be my tenth year in the service of the American Tract Society, and upon taking a review of my labors I have much reason to be thankful to my Heavenly Father for His bountiful love and His rich mercy in helping me and granting unto me the blessing of good health, and also His sustaining grace in enabling me to carry on the work in His vineyard.

"The number of calls I have made during the past year exceeds 44,000. I have circulated 1,895 books, 1,120 mottoes, 1,230 cards and 4,500 tracts and periodicals. The number of people I have been able to reach and the loving cordiality of the rectors and pastors of the churches and the Sunday School children in receiving my visits has caused my heart to rejoice and to sing praise unto my dear Lord and Master, who maketh my feet like hinds' feet to carry His blessed word to the people in this my field of labor. This it is that makes up for all the trials and troubles I have had to endure.

"I shall be very grateful if you will remember me in your prayers at the Throne of Grace, that strength may be granted me to carry on the blessed work of the Master."

Patriot Libraries

The commanding officer of the U. S. S. Alabama writes thanks for "your welcome books, the Patriot Library, which have just arrived," and adds:

"The volumes contain a wealth of excellent reading matter which is beneficial and wholesome—the sort which sets the mind in good channels—and are a valuable addition to the ship's library. The good books will be much appreciated."

Chaplain O. W. Behrens of the U. S. Battleship Texas writes:

"We have just received the Patriot Library. The books have been placed with the Crew's Library, where they will be accessible to all the men of the ship. I have glanced over all of them, and it is my opinion that they are very well selected and that they will be greatly used by our men."

Mr. A. C. Trowbridge, Educational Work Director of the Army Young Men's Christian Association at Camp Dodge, Iowa, writes:

"The three packages of the Patriot Library have been received and placed in three of our buildings. I shall be glad to receive from you seven other packages for use in our other seven buildings."

"PEARLS FROM THE MARGE"

By Rev. Frederick W. Palmer, D.D.

THIS fragment of forgotten verse floated into consciousness as I was glancing down the margins in a popular edition of the Scriptures—"Pearls from the Marge." There is a great deal in our Bibles as we have them besides the inspired text: chapter headings, running synopses at the top of the pages, and particularly the notes in the margins.

Let us go along the shore on either side of the stream that flows down the page and look for some of the Pearls from the Marge. They are to be had for the picking up. You find them in profusion in Teachers' Bibles; they are numerous in any reference Bible and in the Standard Revision. Almost invariably they disclose new values or give stimulating suggestions. Some of them serve to fix attention on the real meaning of familiar words—so familiar that they have lost their grip on us. Let us look at a few illustrations gathered almost at random.

Psalm 139:24. "See if there be any wicked way in me." "Way of pain or grief," says the margin of the King James or Authorized Version. "Way of pain," says the Revised Version. There is something here to ponder on as we ask, What is wickedness?

Psalm 37:26, "He is ever merciful and lendeth." The good man's character which the psalmist here celebrated, gains a life-like touch as we note in the margin that the Hebrew is "all the day." What a picture of a noble, patient generosity,—"merciful all the day!"

Some of these margin renderings lend an added sweetness to dear old comforting words. Malachi 3:17. "They shall be mine in that day when I make up my jewels." There are tender associations in the hymn which this verse inspired, "When He cometh to make up His Jewels," and they become the richer when the margin tells us that "jewels" means "special treasures." We often quote from II Corinthians: 12:9, "That the power of Christ may rest upon me." The note in the Revised Version suggests that this is not so much an energizing power as a protective power—"Cover me." Greek, literally, "Spread a tabernacle over me." A restful refuge indeed this offers for the weary saint.

How many of us know the origin of the great hymn, "Rock of Ages"? Turn to Isaiah 26:4, "In the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength." The margin is "Rock of Ages." It must have been that passage which with the mighty truth of the atonement stirred Toplady's genius to this immortal song.

Daniel 12:3. "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament." Faithful Sunday School teachers need have no doubt that they will be rewarded, but it heartens them in their discouragements to learn from the marginal note, "They that be teachers shall shine as the brightness of the firmament."

Naturally we find here many helps to accuracy. Often we are brought back from the studied interpretations of the translator to the simple pictorial Hebrew word. Psalm 104:24. "Full of thy riches," is literally "full of thy creatures." Daniel 6:27. Daniel was delivered from the hand, not the power of the lions. Psalm 27:11. "Lead me in a plain path because of mine enemies," reads in the Hebrew, "because of those that observe me." This widens the use of the prayer. Few of us have enemies, but all of us have critics.

Here and there are hints of doctrinal truths, unnoticed in the texts. Luke 2:40. "The child (Jesus) grew and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom." The Revised Version margin puts it, "becoming full of wisdom." It is another ray of light on the mystery of the person of the Incarnate Redeemer.

Lastly, important practical lessons will not fail to come to us in these Pearls from the Marge. Jer. 13:23. "Then may ye also do good that are accustomed to do evil." We are likely to miss the full thought in the word "accustomed." It is not mechanical habit, but custom created by false teaching. The margin of both the King James and the Revised Versions refers us to the Hebrew "taught." Could there be a more vivid lesson of the influence of education and environment? Many a moral leopard or social Ethiopian is so by reason of false teaching. It is a warning against the material atmosphere of the market, the environment of the slum, the distillation into men's souls of rotten novels and conscienceless newspapers.

Hebrew 2:1. "Lest at any time we should let them slip." The caution is needed. We must not let slip the things which we have heard, but the margin makes the danger more vivid. Revised Version, "Lest haply we drift away from them." Just as many Christians lose by drifting as by letting go their hold on truths. But perhaps there is more loss of vital piety and faith by leakage than by either drifting or letting slip. The margin of the King James Version tells us that according to the Greek it should be, "Lest they let them run out as leaking vessels."

These are a few of the many Pearls along the banks of the Scripture streams. They are worth while. If we have few books, here is a commentary by which we may be more thoroughly furnished. The scholars that prepared these annotations are forgotten, but they have served generations yet to be.

Preparing the Way

BY WILLIAM NORRIS BURR

Harry Lauder, the well-known Scotch entertainer, visited the great Canadian camps on "the rolling Downs" some time ago, and while there, with ten thousand soldier boys about him, he sang for them. But the sight of so many fine, brave men inspired him to offer them something deeper than an entertainment—he could not refrain from speaking to them out from his heart.

He told them how one evening in a northern town he had watched an old lamplighter at his task. The venerable man appeared in the gloaming and made a lamp across the way to dance into brightness. Then he went on down the street making other lamps flash into flame until, when finally he went off into a side street, he left behind him "an avenue of lights through the traffic and dangers of the city."

"Now, boys," urged the big-hearted little Scotchman, "think of that man who lit the lamps, for you are his successors, only in a much nobler and grander way. You are not lighting for a few hours the darkness of passing night. You are to be lighting an avenue of lights that will make it safe for the generations of all time. Therefore you must be earnest to do the right . . . The first burst of illumination that the world had was in the lamp lit by Jesus, or rather He was the Light Himself. He said truly, 'I am the Light of the world.' Light your torches at His flame, and push out into the world's darkness. Be careful how you bear yourselves. Quit you like men! Be strong!"

This little story reminds us of the words of Luke: "After these things the Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two before His face into every city and place whither He Himself would come." (Luke 10:1).

Our Lord demands a prepared way. He is not likely to be forcing Himself into the hearts of men who love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil. Emerson has said: "God will not make Himself manifest to a coward." Nor does He arbitrarily thrust Himself upon regions or communities nor among affairs. He would have some follower of His to go before and herald His coming, and so prepare the way for Him—some man or woman with heart aglow with the Christ-passion, to point Him out and cry "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." "One loving heart sets another on fire," said Augustine. And so let this be our prayer:

"O God, light of the hearts that see Thee, give to Thy children everywhere clearer vision of Him whom Thou hast highly exalted, and given a name that is above every name, that one here and another there, in love of Him who is the Light of the world, may be setting other hearts on fire with the light wherewith they are lighted. In the day when men feel themselves perplexed and baffled in mind, seeing no way for the world out of the tangle in which it has been caught, bring forward Thine own light-bearers who shall steadfastly turn from all lesser lights and point those who grope in darkness to the True Light of life that cannot fade nor flee."

Faith

BY CORA S. DAY.

A devout Christian woman had just heard an ethical lecture, in which the speaker sighed dramatically for "the perfect faith of Nature, where all wild things, all beautiful growing things, live out their span of life undoubting."

"Such nonsense!" was her practical verdict. "What do birds and butterflies and daisies know of God or faith? He made them with certain powers and instincts, and they live happily enough, no doubt, along their lines. But as for conscious faith! That is our sole privilege, I believe; and we've no need to envy Nature's mindless peace. Ours is, or can be, the real, intelligent, living faith, that trusts Him here and hereafter, in a glorious future of which Nature knows nothing. I like to hear a good lecture, with beautiful ideas and wonderful phrases. But when a man tries to talk about faith, I insist first of all upon sound common sense."

In Remembrance

BY Z. I. DAVIS.

*When the hope in morning's promise
Tints our thoughts with colors bright,
Think of Him who in our sadness
Touched our life and made it bright.*

*It was He who wove the silver
In the clouds along our way,
Till their shadows were transfigured
And a halo o'er them lay.*

*But when life is full of sorrow,
And our heart is pent with grief,
Then remember Him who led us
To the Fountain of relief.*

*On the Cross to which they nailed Him
Jesus suffered all for me;
Help me drink thy cup of blessing,
In remembrance, Lord, of Thee.*

HIS VINEYARD AND OURS

Christianity in Assam

Assam is the name given to the extreme northeastern part of British India. It embraces an area of 52,078 square miles and borders on China, Burma, Manipur and Bengal.

The interior of Assam belongs chiefly to the fertile valley of the Brahmaputra River, while the territory on both sides of the river plain is mountainous. The climate is moderate as regards temperature. The annual rainfall in some sections is the heaviest on the globe. The frequent recurrence of earthquakes is a great hindrance to the development of the country.

Assam has a population of more than six million people, over half of whom are Hindu in faith. The Mohammedans number about a million and a half.

The Assamese people are supposed to be a mixture of Hindu and Mongolian stock, the Hindu element being predominant. They are short and thickset, with coarse black hair, and their faces indicate plainly the Mongolian strain in their blood.

Over seventy different dialects are spoken in Assam, and this of course has increased the difficulty of prosecuting missionary work among them. Nevertheless the Gospel is being preached among them and converts are being won.

The picture which appears on this page is reproduced from a photograph furnished by the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society. It shows us a group of Christian converts at Sadija, where a flourishing mission station is located.

It will be of interest to our readers to know that the matter of Christian literature has not been overlooked, but that in past years the American Tract Society has sent a total of $5,000 in foreign cash appropriations for the production and distribution of Christian books and tracts for the Assamese people.

Railway Missions in Japan

Mr. Charles A. Logan is evangelizing among the railway men of Japan. He has recently visited all the twenty-four stations along the Tokushima line with an evangelist. The programme was so arranged that he might arrive at the stations in the afternoon as much as possible, as the men are usually busy in the morning hours. The superintendents on receipt of this programme sent it down the line with instructions to assemble the employees, the freight coolies and the track workmen in the station. Forty minutes talk at each station was allowed and three stations a day were covered. The addresses were to be of an ethical character:

"But in every place, of course, we stated that we believe in 'the Lord Jesus Christ and that we knew that His life and power were efficient means of uplift.' The evangelist who accompanied me usually chose as his subject, 'New Life,' and laid emphasis on the truth that men must be born again, that they need the life of God to come into their hearts to enable them to be upright, moral men.

"The stationmasters take notes on the addresses and report them to the superintendent and he sends them to headquarters. I saw quite a batch of the reports that had come in to him and told him that I expected they reported that our talks were strongly flavored with Christianity. He said that that was natural, for if he made an address it had the odor of the railroad; if a Buddhist priest made one it should have that of Buddhism, and of course the address of a Christian missionary ought to have the odor of Christianity.

"We left a copy of the Gospel of John in the hands of every one of the employees, and a copy of the 'Christian News' in the stations. For the most part the men heard us gladly, though there may be some who would not have come to hear us unless an order had come down from headquarters."

SADIJA CHRISTIANS IN ASSAM.

An Apostle to Latin Americans

What the Jew is and is to be as missionary of the Cross when Israel returns to God comes out in notices of the recent revival meetings in Porto Rico. These were led by Señor A. B. De Roos, a converted Jew, who has been evangelizing in Mexico and Central America with great power. A writer in the Puerto Rico Evangelico declares that his three months' ministry has been the most powerful and effective in the history of missionary work on the island. He declares Mr. De Roos to be a great benediction which the Lord has given to Latin America. Saxon America has various evangelists of note, Latin America, this one. He is the most powerful spiritual personality which we have had here. His preaching, simple, penetrating, saturated with power from on high, denouncing sin with somber severity and fighting it furiously with the sword of the Spirit, vivifies passages and persons from the Bible in such a way as to make them of the present day. He travels without choir, without organization, without advertising, trusting only in the power of the Cross, in the work of the Holy Spirit and in the co-operation which the churches may be able to give him. In the cities of Carolina, Rio Piedras, Ponce, Playa de Ponce, Yauco, Manati, Ciales, Barceloneta, Trujillo, etc., there were over 300 professions of faith, among them a considerable number of professors in the public schools.

From the Methodist Mission in the Philippines

The Rev. Marvin A. Rader writes: "On a Sunday some weeks ago we had 742 in Sunday school, of which number about 650 were young men. Our church will not hold more than 350. We are simply swamped. I taught one division of the Bible class back of the church. In that division, by actual count, there in the shade of the building and in the sunshine there were 324. Another group composed of sixty-eight young women met in a private house. We immediately organized the class in three divisions. One group meets at my house, another in the church, and a third in a tent back of the church.

"We are laying our plans for a great campaign to begin when the students will return to take up their work in the university. I have no doubt but that we could secure an attendance of a thousand young men if we could have the room in which to house and take care of them. We have found out that they may be won. We had one Sunday morning Commissioner Theodore R. Yango, the wealthiest man in the Philippines, speak to a crowded house in our Central Church. He is now our representative in Washington. Both he and Senator Quezon, the most popular Filipino in the islands, are very sympathetic toward our work. Last year the increase of membership in our Methodist churches was 7,231—bringing the total up to more than 47,000 members."

A Mission in Tokyo

The Spirit of Missions gives, in a recent number, an account of a mission founded and carried on in the poorest part of Tokyo by the Rev. P. K. Goto, a Japanese Episcopalian pastor. The record of conversions is very striking. Mr. Goto bases his work on the following five principles:

1. Smiling principle: that is, be always cheerful.
2. Fire-generating principle: that is, to make fire by steadfast prayer.
3. Co-operating principle: that is, each must do his own part and there must not be any lazy member.
4. Faith principle: that is, we must do all by faith, putting God's words into practice by the power of living faith; more doing than discussing.
5. Self-supporting principle: that is, all must do their best towards the self-supporting of the Church.

Real Heroism

I maintain that the true heroes and heroines of our day are not the Pearys, the Scotts, and the Shackletons, who set about discovering the North Pole and the South Pole, and who either lose their lives outright in the quest, or return home to honors, dignities, and wealth; but the missionaries, both men and women, who from year's end to year's end, and sometimes for long periods at a time, undertake toilsome journeys, settle on remote and isolated stations, dwell in tiny huts, with few or none of the comforts to which civilization has accustomed them, and submit to all the privations inseparable from this existence, without the least prospect of being crowned with laurels, and without even the honor of being accorded "honorable mention" in the columns of the daily press. These, however, are the people to whom I take off my hat.—From Thrice Through the Dark Continent, by Prof. J. Du Plessis.

Rum's Curse in Africa

The ravage which rum works on the African is beyond words to describe. So says Mr. Tucker, of Dondi, in the American Board's West Africa Mission. He praises the Portuguese for the firm hand with which they have restrained the drink evil in their territory, and that in the face of no little agitation on the part of colonists for a return to the old lax conditions. Two classes want the traffic restored: the brewers and retailers and the agriculturists. The latter seek cheap labor; to get that the native must be made miserably poor. The surest way to make him poor is to give him access to strong drink.

As has been noted in these columns in past years, the United States has been entangled in the wretched business through her line of ships carrying New England rum to the West Coast. Liquor interests there have used the arguments:

"1. The United States exports rum and the Americans are an enlightened people. Is it a had thing after all?"

"2. The United States is very strong: who can stand up against her? We are relatively small."

It is heartening to realize that the new law called forth by war-time prohibition has put a stop to this shameful commerce between America and Africa. We have it upon the highest authority that no rum has been shipped from Boston since August last, and that so far as is known no shipment is contemplated. For this relief, much thanks.—Missionary Herald.

A Bible Class Wanted

One of the Y. W. C. A. secretaries in Calcutta has been asked by a leader of the Brahmo-Samaj sect to open a Bible class, in the Life of Christ, among the women of his community. When questioned as to his reason for making so unusual a request he replied: "We are getting afraid of our new women. They have freedom from seclusion and advanced ideas. We have allowed them that by the rules of our community. Yet they have not that safeguarding influence that we see in the lives of Christian women, and it is for this reason that we feel that a class in the life of Christ would be of value to them."

—Record of Christian Work.

Beirut College

In the "Syrian Notes" of The Near East recently appeared a statement that the Beirut Protestant College, although ordered closed by the Vali on the rupture of diplomatic relations between Turkey and the United States, was after about two weeks ordered by the Ottoman government to open again and has continued its normal course. In spite of the prevailing famine outside, the college has been helped to secure sufficient food for its staff and students. These favors are due to the recognized value of the college to the community and to the prestige of its president with the authorities.

A Great Change

The Salvation Army in India numbers to-day 3,114 corps and outposts, 500 schools, 109 social institutions, 3 hospitals, 16 village banks, 9 dispensaries and 34 criminal settlements. The first thing that happened to Commissioner Booth-Tucker when he landed in India thirty-five years ago was imprisonment in jail for a month for "disturbance." In 1913 he was given the Kaiser-i-Hind order "for public service in India." This is typical of the change in sentiment toward Christianity in all parts of the world.

Notes upon the Topics Used
in Christian Endeavor
and Other Young People's Societies.

THE PRAYER MEETING

By
Rev. Henry Lewis
Ph.D.

MARCH 3.

Christian Duty and Privilege

John 14:12-17.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

CONSECRATION MEETING

- M. Feb. 25. Private prayer. Dan. 6:4-10.
T. Feb. 26. The model prayer. Matt. 6:5-15.
W. Feb. 27. Prayer of faith. Jas. 5:12-20.
T. Feb. 28. Faith in prayer. Mark 11:20-26.
F. Mar. 1. United prayer. Matt. 18:19, 20.
S. Mar. 2. The praying man's aid. Rom. 8:22-28.

These words from the Gospel of John remind us that great thoughts may be expressed amid quiet conditions. The words are not formal, spoken on a special occasion, but spoken at the conclusion of a meal eaten in an upper room. Yet, what words they are! They contain three remarkable assertions as suggested by three words.

"Greater"

The statement startles at the first reading. A follower of Christ can do the works that Christ did. More than this, he can do greater works than Christ did. Christ compares Himself with His follower and to the advantage of His follower. There is, however one clause in the statement that needs to be pondered. It is: "Because I go to the Father." The "greater works" is conditioned upon the departure of Christ.

"Whatsoever"

This statement, also, is tremendous in its reach. But read the words carefully. Christ as He speaks thinks of Himself as with the Father. The believer, that he may do the "whatsoever," is praying in the name of his Master. Also, he who prays is striving to live according to the teachings of his Master. The granting of the disciples' requests through Christ will bring the Saviour into very close and precious relation with the believer, and it will follow almost as a sequence that the believer will be keeping the law of Christ in his heart of hearts. Given these two conditions and prayer becomes something sacred and precious. The "whatsoever" takes on a deeper meaning.

"Another"

Christ has gone away, yet Christ remains with the believer. Because He goes away the believer through prayer can do greater works. The believer does greater works because Christ remains with him. These are paradoxes of the Christian life. Of course, the explanation is that Christ departs in the flesh that He may be present in the Spirit. The Christian believes in a living Christ, one alive in the year 1918. This baffles the world. A young woman lived a beautiful Christian life. After her death they found a locket on her bosom with the inscription: "Whom not having seen yet we love."

A man recently died who during the war attended the church that President Lincoln attended. He told of the President appearing at the prayer meeting. Soon a change was necessary, owing to the importunity of office seekers. So, rather than give up the meeting, each week he entered by a side door, and sat in the pastor's room, which adjoined the lecture room. There unseen by the audience he was part of the service. He felt the need of prayer.

MARCH 10

Making the Most of Ourselves

Ephesians 4:11-16

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Mar. 4. Seeking high gifts. 1 Cor. 14:1-12.
T. Mar. 5. The best in life. 1 Cor. 13:1-13.
W. Mar. 6. Training in solitude. Gal. 1:13-24.
T. Mar. 7. Using our talents. Matt. 25:14-30.
F. Mar. 8. Putting zeal into service. Neh. 4:12-23.
S. Mar. 9. The best calls for faith. Heb. 11:1-10.

It is of value to know what Napoleon thought an army should be; what Gladstone thought a State should be; what Shakespeare thought literature should be; so Paul's thought as to what a Church should be. And these words indicate that Paul thought of the Church as neither an institution nor an organization. It was, to use his mystical yet practical language, "the body of Christ."

Life

The Church was an organism. Being this, an opportunity is given a member to make the most of himself. For to do this, there must be life—an animating force. This animating force is Christ. A person may try to make the most of himself. But he may fail, because the spirit is not the finest. But failure there need not be for one who has the spirit of Christ, which is love.

Expression

In Paul's conception of the Church there is opportunity for everyone to express his life. Verse 11 tells of the different kinds of people in the Church. In this list the last man is counted in. There is an office for each life. Only a few can be apostles; a limited number pastors; not many prophets or teachers; but all can be evangelists. That is, all can tell others about Christ. In doing so you can make the most of yourself.

Growth

This is implied if the Church is the body of Christ. Things that are made do not grow. A machine is made. A life grows. So a Christian does not make the most of himself in a day. But his purpose being this, he each day makes more of himself. A man built a cottage by the seashore. During the winter he planned how it should be built. Then for a couple of weeks each summer for several years he worked building it. Last summer he said he had lost his interest. When asked why, he replied: "Because it is finished." The charm of making the most of yourself is that the job is for eternity.

Effect

A person can make the most of himself only as he helps others do the same. This is the thought that lies in the language about the body of Christ. Supposing the Church be defined as a brotherhood of believers, knit together by love, and so acting under the inspiration of Christ's Spirit that they make the most of themselves. But notice: they are not trying to make the most for themselves, which is the world's way every time, but the most of themselves. And they are doing this because they want to be the very best and most useful instruments possible for the building up of the Kingdom of their Lord and Saviour. To fail to make the most of ourselves is to be disloyal to Christ.

MARCH 17

The Art of Living With Others

1 Peter 3:8-16

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Mar. 11. Art of sympathy. 1 John 3:16-24.
T. Mar. 12. Living at peace. Rom. 14:10-19.
W. Mar. 13. Art of co-operation. John 4:31-38.
T. Mar. 14. Be generous. Gen. 13:5-18.
F. Mar. 15. Be patient. Num. 12:1-13.
S. Mar. 16. Be silent. Prov. 17:27, 28.

There is nothing theoretical in this topic. It suggests a problem all of us are up against every day. For life is a series of contacts. Elbow touches elbow day in and day out. Failure at this point is costly. Success here is the finest life yields. To learn this art is to be an educated person. Without this art other learning has little value. The Scripture says something about this.

Attitude

To practise the art begin with what you are. That is, your success will depend upon the spirit that dominates your life. Is there a chip on your shoulder? Are you looking for trouble? Do you have the horns out in front? If so you cannot practise the art. Read the 8th and 9th verses for this thought.

Negative

What a person is, finds expression in what is not done. Elimination is part of selection. The things you are strong enough not to do, will determine your success in practising the art. Among such is loose speaking. Many a difficult position in life has been met by letting the other fellow do the talking. And more than one fine opportunity has been lost by not keeping the mouth shut. "Let him refrain his tongue from evil."

Positive

The apostle in the next verse states an important law of psychology which is: Every thought tends to pass into action unless hindered by an opposite thought. Someone has wronged you. Brood over it, and either you will become morose or you will explode into speech. To guard against this, "do good" and "seek peace." The colored boy could not prevent his mouth watering at sight of the watermelon in the field save as he ran away. He was a philosopher. It is one of the fine arts of life to run away from temptation.

Encouragement

It is worth while practising this art, because of the satisfaction it brings. After all, there is no life so attractive as the life that has mastered this art. But life will not always flow smoothly for such a one. Trouble will come caused by others that you live with. This ought not to be so. But seeing this fact in life the apostle reminds us of Christ. Why should any human being have wanted to harm Him? The spirit of His life was like the music of angels. His deeds one lovely poem. Yet they put Him to death. "Because Christ also suffered." Perhaps there is a necessary discipline in having to suffer through no fault of our own. "For this is acceptable, if for conscience toward God a man endureth griefs, suffering wrongfully." 1 Peter 2:19.

MARCH 24

Remedies for Intemperance

Ephesians 5:15-21

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Mar. 18. Personal abstinence. Rom. 14:21.
T. Mar. 19. Education. Prov. 23:29-32.
W. Mar. 20. The gospel cure. 1 John 3:1-3.
T. Mar. 21. The law of love. Rom. 13:8-10.
F. Mar. 22. The law of force. Exod. 21:28-36.
S. Mar. 23. Temperance pledges. Jer. 35:1-11.

There is a clause in the second verse that gives to our subject a peculiar significance. The clause is: "Because the days are evil." The words were written by Paul in the days of Nero. The world seemed falling to pieces. And such are these days in 1918. From this standpoint let us consider the topic.

Perilous

Perhaps twenty million men are bearing arms on sea and land at this time. Most of these men are, of necessity, living under abnormal conditions. They are away from the home, the Church, gentle friendships. Like young saplings they have been pulled up by the roots and transplanted to new and strange conditions. This places a terrific moral strain upon their characters. Let there be no mistake about this.

Responsibility

They may be unconscious of it, but they are taking a great moral risk. In most instances they are doing this from a sense of duty. An element in the moral risk is intemperance. The physical reactions, along with a desire for something else, of military life, gives the devil his chance. And he is doing his best to make the most of it in this war. What can those of us do who are at home? For one thing, we can bring constant pressure to bear upon the government that there may be no relaxation in the law as regards the army. Another thing we can do is to take high ground on temperance here at home.

Opportunity

These are days to recall the maxim,— "Strike while the iron is hot." The nations are all in a serious mood. Suffering and anxiety know no national boundaries. The hearts of the people are easily reached on any subject having to do with the war. Now is the time to push temperance. Reform that is radical may be accomplished. Why not put the saloon out of business? It can be done to-day. It may not be possible to do it to-morrow.

Substitute

But the significant thought in the Scripture is the substitute offered. Instead of wine the Spirit is offered. When the Spirit of Christ really fills a life there is neither room nor desire for the gross things that pull down and destroy. We must by prayer and by personal messages and work help our boys to be filled with the Spirit, and the Church must meet these young men when they return to civil life with a type of social Christianity that will replace the saloon. These are days to overhaul our young people's societies and get ready for a great work. What is your Society doing?

MARCH 31

Lessons from the Risen Christ's Forty Days

John 21:10-17

EASTER MEETING.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Mar. 25. Death abolished. 2 Tim. 1:7-10.
T. Mar. 26. Personality persists. John 20:11-18.
W. Mar. 27. Christ's thoughtful care. Mark 16:7.
T. Mar. 28. Christ drawn to His own. John 20:19-23.
F. Mar. 29. Risen with Christ. Rom. 8:1-13.
S. Mar. 30. Christ in the heart. Gal. 2:19-21.

Easter is the supreme revelation of power to the world. This thought must not be missed in these days. Armies numbering millions and wealth mounting to billions are nothing as revelations of power when compared with Easter.

Two Days

The Christ who rose on Sunday morning had died on Friday afternoon. The tomb follows the cross—the cross a revelation of love; the tomb a revelation of power. It was this that impressed the disciples during the forty days. In retrospect they recalled what He had said about His death and resurrection. As the Holy Spirit illumined their minds they came upon the truth that in some way God had suffered for them on the cross, because only by the power of God could Christ who suffered rise again.

Personality

There is mystery here. It is useless to attempt a solution. But the appearance during the forty days answers two questions of the heart. First, Shall we after death be as we are now before death? And the answer is, No. For we shall be changed. At death some things will be left behind. Second, Shall individuality be lost? Again the answer is, No. The disciples knew the Saviour and had fellowship with Him during the forty days.

Living

It is a beautiful thought that Christ appeared to His disciples in the midst of their ordinary tasks. In the Scripture lesson they had returned to fishing. He stands on the shore and speaks to them. He sits with them during the breakfast. Nothing spectacular about His appearance. The thoughts He expressed were like the thoughts expressed before His death.

Something More

How changed, however are the disciples! Think of Peter and his denial a few days before. Recall Thomas and his crass scepticism. But a change came. They could never again be the same men. Into their lives had come something of this power. They were to do old things, but in a new way. The sun, ninety million miles away, touches a flower. The resurrection power of Christ reaches down into our lives. The endless life begins on the lake shore with fish broiling over the coals.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS

When Patty Lost Her Mittens

BY PEARL HOWARD CAMPBELL

"HAS anybody seen my gray angora mittens?" cried Patty, flying through the house like a small whirlwind.

She was all ready for school, even to her overshoes and the blue velvet cap that perched so jauntily on her curls. Her lunch box, her book bag and the rosy-cheeked apple she liked to eat at recess were waiting on the hall table; but the soft, furry mittens Grandma gave her on her birthday were nowhere to be found.

"Look under the lounge," said Brother Tom, pretending to nibble her apple.

"I have," Patty answered, "and there's nothing there."

"Maybe you lost them when you went coasting last night" said Sister Mabel.

"No, I didn't. I had them when I came home. Oh dear, I shall be late if somebody don't help me find them."

Forthwith Tom and Mabel and Grandma began to hunt. They looked under the davenport and at the back of the piano. They shook the chair cushions and ransacked the closets and the drawers, but the soft little gray mittens, as if lured by fairy hands, refused to be found.

"Patty," said Mother, reproachfully, "that's the third pair within two weeks. What shall I do with such a careless little daughter? You said when Papa bought you the kid ones with the fur tops, after you lost the white pair, that you would keep them always. They lasted just a week. Now you have lost those that Grandma worked so hard to finish for you."

"I'm sorry," Patty murmured, "but Mama I'll be late if I hunt much longer."

"Take your muff," said Mabel. "Your hands won't be cold so long as you keep them in it and you can't possibly lose it if the ribbon is around your neck."

So Patty caught up her little white muff and hurried to the corner. The school she attended was so far away that she usually took the car. When she paid her fare and slipped into a seat she found she was right beside little Rachel Levi.

Rachel wore an old blue coat that was patched in two places with cloth of a different color; she had shabby little shoes and a dress that looked pathetically thin and old beside Patty's warm, pretty serge. Besides she had neither muff nor mittens. The thin little hands that held her books looked so blue and cold that Patty's heart leaped up in loving sympathy. She knew what a hard time Rachel's parents had to feed and clothe their little brood of children.

"Oh Rachel," she cried, "did you lose your mittens, too?"

Two spots of color crimsoned Rachel's cheeks and her dark eyes sparkled like diamonds.

"Yes, no," she stammered. "I didn't have any to lose, Patty. It takes most of the money Father earns for coal and rent and potatoes and," she added proudly, "we're going to buy a Liberty bond, 'cause we're all so glad we are here, 'stead of over in Poland. I don't mind having cold fingers if I can help America that way."

"Oh!" said Patty, softly, "I see."

And dimly she did see what it meant to wear faded, thin clothes and eat very plain food, and yet love one's adopted country with all one's heart. Somehow Rachel's blue little hands made her think of other hands that were cold and bare in that dreadful winter when Washington and his patriots fought for American freedom.

"Take my muff," begged Patty. "Please do. See, I can put my hands in my pockets. They are wide and deep."

That night when Patty came home from school Grandma called: "Here are your mittens, Pattikin. We found them back of the bookcase. We think Taffy must have carried them there to play with."

Taffy, washing his yellow coat before the glowing fire in the grate, paused to meow an assent.

Then Patty got her little chair and sat down beside Grandma.

"Could you teach me to knit some them in a box with a card which said: "For a patriotic little American," and mailed them to Rachel Levi.

The next morning Patty rode to school with a happy child who held out two little red mittened hands to her.

"They're a perfect fit," she said. "Thank you more'n a thousand times. Father's bought that bond and we're so glad."

"I am glad, too," said Patty. "I am even glad Taffy carried off my mittens that night. Else I don't suppose I should have noticed other folks' cold hands."

wish we had a flower garden with great lily beds and rose hedges."

This time Mama Day looked up in surprise. The Days had always had a tiny, tiny yard and this was an unheard of wish for Mollie to make. Mama resumed the patching and Mollie looked out of the window for a long time and then said: "I wish we had a piano."

The Day cottage was very small, so small that when all the little Days were inside there was scarcely a corner large enough for a piano to stand, and when Papa Day's wages had been divided up into bread, butter, hats, caps, shoes, dresses and coats for all the little Days—seven in all, a whole week of them—there was not enough left to buy a piano key, not to mention a whole piano, even had there been space to set it in the room.

"You are a wish girl today," said Mama. "Why are you wishing for a voice, a flower garden and a piano all at one time?"

"Because I want to help the Sunday school," replied Mollie. "I don't want all of these things, but I would be glad of just one. Teacher said all of us could help in some way, but I have been thinking and thinking and I can't find any way to help. Louise Morris brings the most beautiful flowers for the vases; Mamie Green sings lovely and stands by the piano and often chooses the songs; and Edna Simpson plays splendidly, and sometimes teacher lets her play for the class."

"Never mind," comforted Mama Day, "where there is a will there is a way. If you really and truly want to help and keep thinking about it you will find some way."

Mollie took up her sewing again and began to think hard, but soon she saw Nellie Davis come out on the porch and tapped with her thimble on the window and beckoned for her to come over. Nellie's parents had just moved into the cottage next to the Days and there were almost as many children as in the Day family. Mollie knew that they would have fine times together when she could get out to play.

When Nellie came in, they began to cut out and dress paper dolls, and soon Mollie said: "Now let's play go to church. Do you love to go to church, Nellie?"

"Why, yes," said Nellie, "but I haven't been since we moved to the city, and I don't know the way."

"I'll show you the way," said Mollie, and then suddenly she jumped up and clapped her hands, at the risk of waking baby Day, saying—"I've found the way. I'll take Nellie, Alice and Bessie to Sunday school next Sunday, and then I'll watch all the new families moving in on our street and take the children to Sunday school, and that's the way I'll help."

All Play and No Work

"All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," says a queer old proverb, and it is quite as true of Jack's sister. That is why there are so many pleasant breaks in your school work. Before you have had time to get really tired, recess begins, and if your teacher sees you are getting dull and sleepy she reads you a funny story, or sets you to doing gymnastics to wake you up. Then every week comes Saturday with its fun. There is enough play sprinkled in with your work to keep you from becoming dull girls and boys.

But all play and no work is nearly as bad as all work and no play. The girls and boys who do nothing but romp and play all summer really grow tired of it. They are likely to be fretful and restless, and it is very hard to start work again in the fall. Try helping mother a little bit every day and see if that does not make a pleasant change. You will have all the better time for doing something useful. All play and no work is likely to make Jack a lazy or a selfish boy.

THE SNOW MAN.

mittens?" she asked eagerly. "You know I learned how to knit Red Cross wash cloths for the soldiers, but I want some steel needles and some dark red yarn."

Then she told about Rachel and the Liberty bond and the cold little hands. Grandma said she was sure she could learn. And forthwith she showed Patty how to "set up" a little red mitten and how to knit the wrist.

For a long time afterwards whenever Patty had any spare time she clicked her shining needles, and with many a lift from Grandma the mittens grew and grew until the cunning little thumbs were finished and the ends narrowed off.

At last one joyful day Patty wrapped them in snowy paper, placed

Mollie's Wish

BY MRS. W. THORBURN CLARK

Little Mollie Day was worried, no doubt of it; to be sure she had a very bad cold on account of which she had to stay indoors, but this usually happy little girl would not look so sober about a cold. As she sat by the window learning to sew she said under her breath: "I wish I could sing."

Now Mollie could hardly carry a tune and when she sang to the baby it sounded more like a recitation than a song, but baby was pleased and obligingly went to sleep.

Mama Day was busy fitting a big patch on a pair of well-worn trousers, and made no comment on Mollie's wish.

After stitching away for some time, Mollie sighed a big sigh and said, "I

Our Fireside

The Night and the Morning

By J. A. Stewart

THE minister sat alone in his vestry. He was discouraged. It was the evening he had set apart to meet intending communicants and no one had come in response to his earnest appeal of the previous Sunday. He had worked hard and long. He had preached faithfully and visited much, but it seemed useless. He had toiled and caught nothing.

Was it worth while, all this work and worry of the winter days; the tireless efforts to keep each organization in running trim; the times he had swallowed his pride and calmly and smilingly met difficult situations and still more difficult people; above all, the prayerful, studious hours he had spent in the preparation of a "living message"? Men in other walks of life expected results and got them, otherwise the world considered them failures. Failures! The minister trembled at the word. Perhaps he had failed!

A faint knock came to the door. "Come in," he said, with just a touch of impatience. The hour was late for vestry callers.

The door opened slowly. A little girl, pale and delicate in appearance, with large, serious eyes that seemed, at that moment, to look into his soul, entered quietly and stood before him. She had really seen fifteen summers, but she looked younger, much younger indeed, and so frail.

"My name is Estelle Wheeler," she began, "and, please, sir, I could not come sooner. My father works late and I help mother in the evenings. There are six of us, you see, and there is always work to do. But I wanted to see you to-night, sir, and I thought you might still be here."

She paused thoughtfully for a moment, and then she said quietly: "I heard what you said last Sunday. I didn't understand it all, but I—I know I love Jesus and—and—"

The minister understood, as every minister does who has sought to lead a young trembling soul into the fold of the Good Shepherd. They "talked it over" and when the conversation ended there was a new joy in Estelle's heart and a light on her face that was not there before.

"Thank you, sir. I'm sure I understand now," she said, with child-like confidence. "It seems so wonderful. What did the others think? Were they glad, too?"

"What others, child?" the minister asked in surprise.

"Why, the others who came to-night, of course."

"There were no others," he answered sadly, and as he said it, the fearful depression again seemed to grip his heart.

"No others!" she exclaimed. "Oh, sir, surely they did not understand. If they only knew, they would come. Now that I know, I am going to tell them!"

"Bless your dear heart!" he murmured, his hand resting kindly on her head and a tear glistening in his eye. "Would to God every one who knows would tell others!"

"And don't they?" she asked quickly. "Surely if you asked them to speak they would do it. If you were to tell them it was the Jesus way, just as you have told me to-night, wouldn't they help?"

"I have told them; that is, I have spoken in a general way, but perhaps—well, I'll think about it, child. Thank you and God bless you! Good-night." Long after the door closed, the minister sat at his desk, buried in deep thought. Somehow the situation had changed in the past few minutes. Truly the Master had promised "greater things," and why should he or any consecrated follower think of failure? There was something wrong. Surely the Spirit's power was just as great today as in the days of old, and yet the evidence was not here. Was he to blame? Were his people at fault? These were the questions which he turned over and over in his mind.

"I have it," he cried at last. "Great things have not been done, because no one thought they could be done. We have gone along lines old and familiar because we have been quite satisfied to do so. If Christ's promise means anything, it must stand the test here and now. We must, therefore, act in accordance with that promise. We shall launch out into the deep and, God helping us, we shall not fail!"

Oh what a new thrill of power seemed to pass through his soul as he said this! As the brave knights of old put on their armor to battle for all that was good, so now he seemed to have put on the whole armor of God. The possibilities were unlimited because the power was unlimited. As he knelt in an agonized prayer for help and guidance, it seemed as though the very gates of heaven were thrown wide open and the angels of God about the throne were chanting Amen.

As he stepped out from his vestry the great clock on the tower, two blocks away, slowly struck the midnight hour. A new day had come.

* * * * *

The plan which the minister fashioned was at once simple and comprehensive. At the communion service the following Sunday morning he would state the need for a more aggressive Christianity. He would show the field of opportunity that lay, not only in some distant part of the world, but right in the community where the church was situated. He would call for volunteers who would go forth into this harvest field. These should be specially set apart for this work at the mid-week service the following week.

Up to this time the church had been perfectly satisfied with from thirty to forty additions to its membership yearly. Now the Spirit seemed to direct that for this one effort not less than one hundred should be the minimum and, if possible, many more. These should be received into full communion on Easter Sunday morning, five weeks later.

There was not a large crowd at the service that memorable Wednesday evening. Great movements seldom begin with crowds. Some looked with misgiving on the whole procedure. Others showed certain interest and sympathy but considered themselves "unfit" or "too busy" to lend any practical assistance. Only seventeen declared that they were ready for any work which the minister, under God, might assign to them.

A simple Gospel invitation card was prepared bearing these words: "God and Your Church Need You," and on each card was a space for the name and address of the inquirer.

These cards were distributed amongst the seventeen workers. They, in turn, aimed to enlist the interest of all persons possible, by personal interviews, letters or otherwise. Lists of all likely persons in the community were carefully prepared, these, of course, being added to from time to time as further information came to hand. The main object was to give all an opportunity of definitely "accepting" or "rejecting" the in-itation to an open confession of their faith.

As the days passed, the work of these consecrated seventeen gradually began to have its effect. Wives came with the names of husbands, long since thought hopeless; fathers with those of sons; boys and girls of the Sunday School with those of their chums. Sweethearts had the joy of leading their loved ones to Christ, and, in one instance, an old man, seventy years of age, heretofore an avowed infidel, came with tottering step to the vestry and brokenly said, "I have found Him."

"This work is great," said an enthusiastic travelling salesman, who had entered heartily into the movement. "I find that I can apply every rule of salesmanship in talking to men about Christ." He brought eleven persons.

"It's an answer to prayer," said a mother, as her two daughters presented themselves.

"This is good business," said a man of the world. "It was such a straight proposition that I simply could not turn it down."

And so it was that on Easter Sunday morning, not one hundred only but one hundred and thirty persons openly confessed their faith in Christ. As they stood waiting to be formally received into full communion, their faces set towards the light of eternity, the minister's eyes filled with tears of joy and gratitude. Never had there been such a day in his experience. The vast congregation seemed to throb with a new spiritual life. There was no demonstration. There was no sound of a strange tongue. There was only the still, small voice of the Spirit's calm, but there were many who heard it with great joy in their hearts. God Himself had come down and was finding a place in their very midst. The work was not in vain. The church had still a place on earth. The Lord had not forsaken His servant and the minister was not a failure. "Christ's touch had still its ancient power; No word from Him could fruitless fall."

* * * * *

That evening, long after the other members of the household had retired to rest, the minister sat in his study. The events of the day stood vividly before him and sleep refused to come. Turning to his New Testament, he read, "Now . . . He said unto Simon, Launch out into the deep and let down your nets for a draught. And Simon answering said unto Him, Master, we have toiled all the night and have taken nothing; nevertheless at Thy word I will let down the net. And when they had this done, they inclosed a great multitude of fishes: and their net brake."

The midnight hour was again striking. He stepped out into the chilly night and listened to the hum of the great city. The wonderful lights blazed and flickered as far as the eye could see. What a place it was! What crowds of beings thronged the streets, the music halls and the restaurants! What a challenge every human soul was making to the church of God!

He looked into the clear sky, where the moon was slowly moving across the heavens, followed by a lonely bright star, with now and then white flying clouds playing in the silvery beams. Then, from beyond the star and the flying clouds, a voice seemed to come down, bringing the music of confidence and hope as it found its way to his listening heart:

"Launch out into the deep . . . He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches."

ENDORSED by RECOGNIZED AUTHORITIES

"A Guide to Bible Study"

by Harry E. Richards, A.M., M.D.

The Continent: "The plan is a carefully graded one; its governing thought being to bring the pupil straight to the Bible and give him knowledge of the Bible as a whole, not merely of fragmental parts. Commentary is condensed and restricted. The point of view is modern, but not the most stubborn conservative could impeach the loyalty of the series in any part to the Word of God."

The Sunday School Times: "It is a real guide to Bible study, sending pupil and teacher to the Word itself to get its consecutive teaching. It does away with scrappy study."

The Sunday-School World: "The thought in each lesson is developed in such a clear, orderly way that it is a pleasure to follow it, and the interest deepens as the study proceeds."

The Evangelical Messenger: "Admirably adapted for Bible study. Condensed, suggestive and stimulative."

The Assembly Herald: "Simplicity, practicality and the power to grip not only the attention of the scholar, but also to make a most effective teacher out of an ordinary one, give to this Guide unusual value; and then, too, it provides against the disconnected lessons of the past by providing a consecutive course of study, which is always a great aid to sustained interest."

The Religious Telescope: "The methods used by the author are adapted to the attainment of a clear and complete knowledge of the Bible."

The Christian Nation: "Graded, practical, systematic, and eminently teachable, understandable, and incomparably helpful."

The Congregationalist and Christian World: "Sunday-School superintendents and teachers before choosing lessons for class work would be wise to examine this series. Its main purpose is to increase the use of the Bible in the class and to promote study directly from its pages, a greatly needed reform in Sunday-School practice."

The Christian Endeavor World: "Intended for Sunday Schools, family worship, and independent Bible study; also for classes in secular schools and colleges. For all these purposes it is admirably adapted, and no one could follow this series of lessons faithfully without gaining a splendid knowledge of Holy Writ."

The Baptist Standard: "In this day of unprecedented Bible study, a help or guide to that study, such as is furnished by this course, is valuable beyond expression."

The Christian Work: "Written to meet the demand for a systematic and comprehensive course of graded lessons. As an illumination of the Scriptures it should prove of great value."

New York Evening Post: "Studying the Bible in this systematic and natural way the pupil unconsciously imbibes its theology. Gradually he comes to an understanding knowledge of God the Father, of Jesus Christ His Son, and of the mission and power of the Holy Spirit. This knowledge is not forced upon him by the conceptions and comments of others, but is derived from the study of the Bible itself."

The Watchman-Examiner: "It greatly exalts the Bible by letting the Bible speak for itself and by sending the student to the Bible itself, rather than to books about the Bible."

The Christian Intelligencer: "The present work is done with great thoroughness and will interest all to whom is intrusted the religious training of the young."

- | | |
|--|--|
| Part 1. Genesis to Ruth. | } Junior Course. |
| " 2. 1 Samuel to Nehemiah. | |
| " 3. The Gospels and the Acts. | |
| " 4. Genesis to 2 Samuel. | } Advanced Course (S.S. "Intermediate"). |
| " 5. 1 Kings to Nehemiah (portions of nine prophetic books). | |
| " 6. Life of Christ. | |
| " 7. The Acts and the Epistles. | |

Paper, each Part $0.30
 Cloth, each Part45
 Parts 1 to 3 in one volume, cloth . . . 1.25
 Parts 4 to 7 in one volume, cloth . . . 1.50

A Copy on Inspection or Descriptive Pamphlet on request

INDEX PUBLISHING COMPANY
 Box 12, Bloomfield, N. J.

"Private Peat" pays high compliment to the Sky-Pilots in the trenches—
READ this book by one of them!

The Cross At The Front

By Chaplain Thomas Tiplady

S. D. Gordon, author of "Quiet Talks," says: One of the most helpful of the war books, fine insight, pathos, humanness."
 "A sincere faith, unflinching courage and thorough manliness."—Providence Journal.

At All Bookellers Cloth $1.00 Net
 F. H. Revell Co., 158 5th Ave., N. Y., 17 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago

The Last Trip by the Toll Bridge

BY MABEL S. MERRILL.

MARJORIE WINN wore a troubled look as she sought out the old housekeeper in the busy kitchen.

"Mrs. Simons," began the girl, "I saw Joe Hanson out in the road just now and he says poor old Granny Mains, across the river, is sick. You know where she lives—in that little ragged house at the end of the bridge. There are no neighbors on that side fit to take care of a sick person, and I'm afraid, from what Joe says, that Granny has pneumonia. He stopped there last night for a few minutes—and you know how long it takes him to get his wits to work. He has been all this time getting around to tell us about it."

"Well, there isn't a thing you can do about it, as I see," Mrs. Simons, struggling with her washing, was somewhat tart in her manner. "Not a live thing can get across the river unless it had wings, or time enough to go way up to Prout's Ferry. The old bridge is going out to sea any minute, so they say, and the toll house went sailing downstream right after breakfast. Your pa won't be home till to-morrow night, either."

But Marjorie was proof against these discouragements. "Anyhow, I'm going out to see if I can find someone to get me across to Granny's house. You can tell daddy I did it on my own responsibility. And send him over after me, if I'm not here when he comes. He'll find a way to get to us."

Marjorie's father was the only doctor in a remote country neighborhood, and the necessity of often acting as his assistant had made the girl prompt in emergencies. In her father's office at the front of the house she found what medicines she wanted, and put them in a bag with her nurse's outfit. She strapped the bag to the carrier of her bicycle and was presently speeding along the river road.

Joe had told her that the sudden rise of the water had carried off all the boats, and she soon made sure that this was true. The breaking of a dam somewhere above had quickly brimmed the little river to the top of its banks, and landmarks along the margin were fast disappearing.

"It's out of the question to swim across," mused the girl, as she eyed the black torrent which tore at the banks. "Now if I ride up to Prout's Ferry and down on the other side—well, that's twenty miles of terrible roads. It would take hours, and even minutes may mean a life when it's pneumonia. I must have a look at the old toll bridge; it's my only hope, I'm thinking."

Marjorie sped up the road, which ran parallel with the river. At the bit of cross road which led down to the bridge she halted with an exclamation of dismay.

The bridge was still there, but it seemed only a question of seconds before it would lose its hold upon the bank. She could see it heave through its whole length with the surging of the water. It hung there, a mere thread across the swollen stream, yet still drawn straight from bank to bank. About a quarter of a mile from the other end of the bridge Marjorie could see the fireless chimney of Granny's little house.

"If I don't go, the chances are she'll die there all alone. I'm going to try it. The distance isn't much; it's only a question of keeping cool and riding like lightning. This little old wheel is as reliable as the almanac, too."

The bit of cross road dropped sharply to the river, but it was smooth and hard. In a moment Marjorie was down upon the planks of the bridge, speeding with all her might for the other side.

"It's like skating for dear life on thin ice," was the thought that went through the rider's head. "Sometimes it almost seems as if just your will power prevents the whole thing from giving way under you—There!"

Within two yards of the other bank the thing happened. With a last groan of its strained timbers the bridge broke away from the bank Marjorie had left. It swung swiftly downstream and began to go to pieces. Marjorie tore her precious bag from the carrier and tossed it ashore. Then as the other end of the bridge left the land she jumped from the dipping planks and landed ankle-deep in the ooze of the margin.

It was sometime the next day that Dr. Winn, coming by way of Prout's Ferry in his automobile, stopped at the door of Granny's house. He looked relieved at the sight of Marjorie's face.

"All right, nurse?" he inquired. "Joe Hanson saw your performance and he has found the remains of your wheel down in the eddy at the bend. Look here, Marjorie, I shall have to get you a runabout if you're bound to go tearing across country like this. I'm afraid no really up-to-date heroine rides a bicycle these days, anyway. Too old-fashioned, my dear."

Marjorie's eyes laughed, but her voice was subdued as she drew him into the clean, quiet room.

"She's easier, daddy. But oh, such a scene of misery as it was when I got here! I was so thankful I came. And you won't call me reckless and headstrong, will you, partner? Because you know well enough you'd have done it yourself if you'd been here. Besides, it gives me a chance to go down in history as the very last person who made the trip by the old toll bridge."

The doctor was bending over the bed from which Granny's labored breathing sounded loud in the still room. After a few moments he looked up at the girl, who had come close to answer his low-voiced questions.

"She's pulled through the worst of it. With good care she'll do all right. There's no doubt, my girl, that the last trip by the toll bridge saved a life."

Alone With God

Why are modern Christians so reluctant to be alone with God? With every suggestion of seasons for meditation; with the return of the time of Lent, more or less observed by our churches; with the practical problems of the midweek devotional meetings, in which many seem to feel that a period of silence is the one thing to be avoided; the question returns. We look out upon the needs and sorrows of the world. We look in upon the desires and disappointments of our own life. Why should it be so difficult, or even tedious, to spend a little time in looking up for intimate communion with Him from whom everything good in heart and life derives? It has not been so among great Christians in any earlier age of the church.

Our modern doctors tell us that a means toward health is found in the occasional practice of resting times—times when we adjust ourselves, with minds withdrawn from the agitations of the world and folded hands, to a deliberate tranquillity. Sleep is good, but some preliminary slowing down of the machinery of life is necessary for refreshment in sleep. They counsel us to put all agitations out of mind, to shut out worry, to welcome pleasant thoughts and give them a deliberate hospitality of attention. Why would not our worship and our meetings of common thought and prayer gain largely in power, and in refreshment if we prepared our minds for their enjoyment? Every true leader of the worship of the people desires to go at once from private prayer to public leadership. If the minister needs that preparation of a little time alone with God, do not the people need and owe it also? The significance of common worship would gain much from such a habit of making ready at home. A good use of Lent for all our readers would be, not merely to go to common worship, but to go prepared by a little time alone with God. That would certainly bring encouragement to pastors and other leaders of the meetings. The iron would be ready for the hammering if all who came were already in the mood of worship. It would mean much also to be assured that those who, for one reason or another, could not come, were in the fellowship of the common mood at home.

In times of special sorrow and temptation our churches need this deeper sense of God's presence in all the affairs of life. Too many, even among Christians, think and act as if God were an absentee, for whose ultimate but uncertain return we must somehow make a provision, but who will not meet us at any corner of our street today or tomorrow. From that mood comes peril of inattention and neglect which works out into a thousand failures of true proportion in our thoughts and lives. The remedy is that of Enoch, of Abraham, of Jesus—men who walked with God.

Why should not thought of God, our Father and our Helper, be welcome and cherished in every pause of life's insistent claims and in every opportunity of leisure? Why should we need distraction always, when we might turn home? Why not make this year a new beginning in the joyful habit of being often alone with God? It is an opportunity of the Lenten season. It tends to helpfulness because it tends to godliness. We become like that with which our thoughts are busied and those with whom we choose to spend our time. And the chief need of the world and the church alike today is that of godly men and women in the ways of common life.

—EXCHANGE.

"The Leading FIRE INSURANCE Co. of America"

Incorporated 1819.

Charter Perpetual

Cash Capital,	$5,000,000.00
Cash Assets,	29,833,490.58
Total Liabilities,	16,627,291.73
Net Surplus,	8,206,198.85
Surplus for Policy-Holders,	13,206,198.85
Losses Paid in 99 Years,	165,896,007.97

NOTE—The Security Valuations on which this Statement is based are those fixed by the Insurance Commissioners.

WM. B. CLARK, President.

Vice-Presidents,

HENRY E. REES, A. N. WILLIAMS.

E. J. SLOAN, Secretary.

Assistant Secretaries,

E. S. ALLEN, GUY E. BEARDSLEY RALPH B. IVES.

W. F. WHITTELSEY, Marine Vice-President.

R. E. STRONACH, Marine Secretary.

- WESTERN BRANCH
175 W. Jackson Boule'd,
Chicago, Ills.
 - THOS E. GALLAGHER, Gen'l Agent.
 - L. O. KOHTZ, Ass't Gen'l Agent.
 - L. O. KOHTZ, Marine Gen'l Agent.
 - R. B. IVES, Assistant Secretary.
- PACIFIC BRANCH
301 California Street
San Francisco, Cal.
 - W. H. BREEDING, General Agent.
 - GEO. E. TOWNSEND, Ass't Gen'l Agent (Fire).
 - E. S. LIVINGSTON, Ass't Gen'l Agent (Marine).
- MARINE DEPARTMENT
 - CHICAGO, Ills. 175 W. Jackson Boule'd.
 - NEW YORK, 63-65 Beaver Street.
 - BOSTON, 70 Kilby Street.
 - PHILADELPHIA, 226 Walnut Street.
 - SAN FRANCISCO, 325 California Street.

FOURTH EDITION

The Christ We Forget

By P. Whitwell Wilson
PARLIAMENTARY CORRESPONDENT
"London Daily News"

Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman [Moderator of the General Assembly] says: "I consider it one of the greatest books I have ever read—it really ought to be in every minister's hands. Is there not some way to arrange it?"

Doctor Nehemiah Boynton, President N.Y. Federation of Churches: "What a combination of spiritual and social insight, humor and felicity of phrase appear in 'The Christ We Forget'! I am glad that we are publicly recommending it for reading during Lent."

At All Bookellers Cloth, $1.50 Net
F. H. Revell Co., 158 5th Ave., N.Y. 17 W. Wabash Ave., Chicago

THE TREASURY

SPECIAL NOTICE

OWING to occasional losses of letters, containing money, we would request friends and donors of the American Tract Society to remit by check or Post Office Money Order, which latter can always be duplicated in case of loss.

Receipts of the American Tract Society During January, 1918

Total Donations (including $1,484.34 for Special Objects), $2,356.74.

CALIFORNIA, $48.45.
Mr. Most, $2.15; Mrs. Hirschler, $1.50; "A Friend," $5; Rev. Mr. Horsch, $1; Mr. Isaac, $5; Rev. Mr. Hege, $4.65; Mr. Lichti, $3.95; Mr. Landes, $1.65; Mr. Avink, $0.50; Menonite Mission, $2; Mr. Ruth, $5; Mr. Meyer, $1.50; Mrs. Zimmerman, $0.55; Mr. Hodel, $3; Miss Buehner, $1; Mr. Wiebe, $5; "A Friend," $5.
COLORADO, $2.
Mr. Mathesius, $2.

CONNECTICUT, $95.75.
Miss Allen, for Patriot Library, $1; Norfolk Church Collection, $22.74; Coventry, Church Offering, $2.50; "A Friend," $1; Mrs. Thomen, $1; Mrs. Lawertz, $0.65; Mr. Barstow, for Immig. Literature, $5; Mrs. Rossister, $1; Stratford, Church Collection, $19.25; Farmington, Church Offering, $20.61; Wilton, Church Collection, $5; Rev. Mr. Beadle, $1; Mrs. Perry, $5; Hartford, Church Offering, $5; New Britain, Church Collection, $5.

DELAWARE, $1.
Mrs. Warren, $1.
DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, $16.65.
Miss Fora, $1; Mrs. Zimmermann, $0.65; Miss Robertson, for Patriot Library, $15.

GEORGIA, $4.
Miss Clay, for Patriot Library, $4.
IDAHO, $13.15.
Mr. & Mrs. Becker, $4.65; Mr. Fraese, $5; Miss Bauman, $1; Mrs. Marler, $2; Miss Mangold, $0.50.

ILLINOIS, $80.73.
Pekin, Church Collection, $24.85; Mr. Zimmermann, $0.65; Mr. Zahn, $1.10; Mrs. Doehring, $2; Shannon, Church Offering, $3.50; Miss Engelmann, $0.30; Mrs. Reimbach, $2.65; Mr. Powell, for Patriot Library, $3; Mr. Melchers, $2; Mrs. Burkert, $1; Mr. Bruckner, for Patriot Library, $1; Eureka, Church Collection, $0.61; "A Friend," $20; Adeline, Church Offering, $13.07; Mr. Keller, $3; Miss Klein, $2.

INDIANA, $6.60.
Mr. Kirsch, $1; Mrs. Kuhn, $1; Mr. Brakhage, $2; Mr. Bixel, $0.15; Mr. Zurfuh, $1.80; Rev. Mr. Schlundt, $0.65.

IOWA, $147.85.
Mr. Kehret, $9.65; Mr. Kleine, $1; Mr. Saath, $4.65; Rev. Mr. Huendling, $0.90; Mr. Kramer, $5; Burlington, Church Collection, $12.50; Mr. Engelke, $3; Rev. Mr. Little, $2; Mrs. Kreimeyer, $1; Mrs. Kreimeyer, $5; Mr. Krehbiel, $4; Mr. Ackermann, $0.50; Mr. Schuerer, $1; Mr. Hess, $0.50; Mr. Froehlich, $0.50; Mr. Kiesau, $0.30; Mrs. Reutzell, $2; Stout, Frauenverein of the Ref. Church, $16.15; Mr. Von Glahn, $4.30; Mrs. Moery, $1; Mr. Konzett, $1; Mr. Litterer, $2; Waukon, Church Offering, $20; Mr. Eckhoff, $2.65; Mr. Schnebele, $1; Kamrar, Sunday School Collection, $6; Mr. Muntinga, $1.65; Little Rock, Frauenverein of the Ref. Church, $20; Mr. Tesch, $0.95; Breda, Church Offering, $4; Mr. Brower, $7.65; "A Friend," $5; Mrs. Taylor, $1.

KANSAS, $113.75.
Mr. Schrag, $0.15; Mr. Rupp, $25; Mr. Mueller, Jr., $0.40; Mrs. Regier, $8; Mr. Wiebe, $20; Mr. Regner, $4.65; Mr. Reich, $1; Rev. Mr. Harder, $5; Mr. Christians, $3; Mr. Epp, $14.65; Mr. Richert, $1.20; Mr. Knak, $0.65; Mr. Riesen, $4.65; Mr. Brenner, $1; Mr. Walner, $4.30; Mr. Schaefernotte, $2.30; Miss Krehbiel, $10; Mr. Haas, $2.65; Mr. Krehbiel, $4.15; Mr. Kracker, $1.

MAINE, $5.
Miss Hutchins, $3; Prof. Denio, $2.
MARYLAND, $8.15.
Mr. Vilmar, $2; Mrs. Heimel, $1; Mrs. Baumgartner, $5; Miss Speer, $0.15.

MASSACHUSETTS, $180.70.
Mrs. Kogel, $1; Mr. Arendt, $1.30; Springfield, Church Collection, $5; Mr. Skiff, for Patriot Library, $5; Miss Pheps, $1.20; Miss Morgan, for Patriot Library, $1; Miss Coles, $0.70; Brookline, Church Collection, $10; Mrs. Reed, $2; Miss Lond, for Patriot Library, $2; Roslindale, Church Offering, $5; Miss Hooker, for Patriot Library, $20; Miss Means, for Patriot Library, $2; Winchester, Church Collection, $2.50; Mr. Hunt, $1; Mrs. Arnes, $9; Mr. & Mrs. Booth, $2; Mrs. Hall, $1; Mr. Hill, for Patriot Library, $15; Miss Holt, $0.50; Miss Barlow, $0.50; Miss Whipple, $1; Sharon, Church Offering, $5; Mr. Bacon, $1; Mr. Cobb, $10; Miss Judd, $5; Mrs. Duncan, for Patriot Library, $20; Mrs. Henry, for Patriot Library, $5; Miss Campbell, for Patriot Library, $10; Mrs. Knapp, $10; Mr. Bailey, $1; Mr. Taylor, for Tract Distribution, $25.

MICHIGAN, $24.61.
Mr. Moeller, $0.65; Miss Walter, $2; Mr. Ott, $1; Fremont, Church Offering, $7.92; Rev. Mr. Husted, $0.50; Grand Rapids, Sunday School Collection, $6.54; Vogel Center, Ladies' Aid Society, $5; "N. N.," $1.
Rev. Mr. Hibin, $1; Mr. Becker, $1; Mr. Zimmer, $25; Mr. Weinhagen, $1; Mr. Lyman, for Patriot Library, $12; Mrs. Kroch, $1.30; Mr. Popken, $3.50.

MINNESOTA, $44.80.
Rev. Mr. Hibin, $1; Mr. Becker, $1; Mr. Zimmer, $25; Mr. Weinhagen, $1; Mr. Lyman, for Patriot Library, $12; Mrs. Kroch, $1.30; Mr. Popken, $3.50.

MISSOURI, $108.15.
Mr. Wandersee, $0.65; Mr. Riemer, $1; Mrs. Gerdel, $5; Mrs. Hill, for Patriot Library, $3; Mrs. Seucker, $0.65; Mr. Bender, $25; Mr.

Mallinkerodt, Sr., $2.65; Mr. Beining, $5; Miss Krauler, $3; Miss Hammacher, $6; Curtis Pneumatic Machinery Co., $10; Mr. Ahmann, $1; Mr. Bischoff, $1; Mr. Brookner, $1; Mr. Grumke, $1; Mrs. Vivian, $0.25; Mr. Siegfried, $20; Mr. Scheidegger and Sister, $6.30; Mr. Gerber, $8; Rev. Mr. Bode, $0.65; Mr. Stallmann, $5; St. Louis, Church Collection, $3.

MONTANA, $1.
Mrs. Fisher, $1.

NEBRASKA, $73.73.
Mr. Hunzeker, $10; Mr. Depp, Sr., $0.65; Mr. Jantzen, $5; Mr. Maerz, $1.65; Table Rock, Church Offering, $2.50; Mrs. Bienz, $3.65; Mr. Ulrich, $6; Hickman, Church Collection, $20; Hickman, Ladies' Aid Society of the Presbyterian Church, $10; Rosemont, Church Offering, $9.78; Hanover, Church Collection, $3.50; Mrs. Brinkema, $1.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, $61.
Miss Parkhurst, for Patriot Library, $10; Miss Eastman, $1; Mr. Henry, $50.

NEW JERSEY, $188.41.
Elizabeth, Church Offering, for Patriot Library, $6; Mrs. Dorhafer, $0.65; Mr. Buser, $0.30; Mrs. Fuizel, $1; Miss Knapp, $1; Rev. Mr. Hunter, for Patriot Library, $10; Mr. Nitsche, $0.65; Mrs. Hartig, $1.25; Mrs. Haefner, $1.30; Mr. Staehle, $1; Mrs. Hyman, $0.65; Mrs. Fritsche, $0.65; Mrs. Soper, $1; Mrs. Banzhof, $0.65; Rev. Mr. Egger, $2.65; Bloomfield, Church Collection, $7; Mrs. Clark, for Patriot Library, $3; Miss Erhardt, $2.30; Mr. Hoffman, $1; Miss Demarest, $1; Miss Wirth, $1; East Orange, Church Offering, $50; Mrs. Geyer, $10; Miss Friess, $5; Passaic, Church Collection, $14.05; Mr. Hintermeier, $0.16; Westfield, Church Offering, $27.45; Mr. Hueber, $1.30; Mrs. Dennis, for Patriot Library, $2; Miss Rasch, $5; Mr. Giger, $5; Orange, Church Collection, $10; Mrs. Baalk, $5; Atlantic Highlands, Church Offering, $3; Miss Vincent, $5; Mrs. Harris, $1.40.

NEW YORK, $567.40.
New York, Church Collection, $4.69; Miss Billings, for Patriot Library, $25; Mr. Holmes, $5; Mrs. Crockett, for Patriot Library, $2; Mr. Westlake, $25; Miss Van Santvoord, for Patriot Library, $24; Mrs. Osborn, $25; Mr. Nagel, $1; Mr. & Mrs. Remsen, for Patriot Library, $2; Brooklyn, Church Offering, $5.34; Mr. Ketchum, for Patriot Library, $250; Mr. Harder, $0.65; Mrs. Marvin, $4.50; Mrs. Jaeger, $4.15; Miss Gibbs, for Patriot Library, $1; Miss Veltman, $1; Mrs. Bornkessel, $0.15; Mrs. Beer, $3; Mrs. Miller, $10; Mr. Muser, $3.75; Elmhurst, Church Collection, $5.10; Miss Easter, for Patriot Library, $0.60; Rochester, Church Offering, $20; North Clymer, Church Collection, $3.60; Brooklyn, Church Offering, $24.04; Miss Krehbiel, for Patriot Library, $10; Mrs. Taylor, for Patriot Library, $1; Interlaken, Church Collection, $6.37; Miss Roeder, for Patriot Library, $5; Port Byron, Church Offering, $6; Lyons Falls, Church Collection, $2; Miss Ward, $1; Miss Harmon, $5; Mrs. Statesir, $1; Forest Hills, Church Offering, $3.42; Mr. Blackman, for Patriot Library, $5; Hammond, Church Collection, $5; Rochester, Church Offering, $3; Miss Mould, for Patriot Library, $20; Mrs. Cook, for Patriot Library, $1; Setauket, Church Collection, $18.14; Miss Roeder, $5; Mrs. Kober, $2; Miss Veltman, $1; Mr. Randall, $5; Miss Barnett, $3; Dr. Van Doran, for Patriot Library, $1; Mr. Anderson, $5; Mr. Hough, $0.90; Miss Stanley, $1.

NORTH DAKOTA, $4.40.
Mr. Philip and Daniel Elker, $4; Mr. Thomas, $0.40.

OHIO, $77.22.
Rev. Mr. Grover, for Patriot Library, $20; Mrs. Kominski, $1; Mr. Wyss, $4.30; Miss Wolf, $2.80; Mr. Hunt, $2; Mr. Volk, $0.65; Cincinnati, Church Offering, $11.25; Norwood, Church Collection, $4.60; Cincinnati, Church Offering, $20; Youngstown, Church Collection, $2.40; East Liverpool, Church Offering, $0.22; Mrs. Sharpless, $5; Miss Millard, for Patriot Library, $3.

OKLAHOMA, $36.35.
Mr. Voth, $5; Miss Ringelman, $0.60; Mr. Stauber, $1; Rev. Mr. Lichti, $0.75; Mr. Kuehny, $0.25; Mr. Dester, $0.65; Mr. Holmann, $1; Mrs. Lehman, $0.65; Mr. Reints, $24.50; Mr. Claassen, $1.95.

OREGON, $72.26.
Mr. Reichen, $3; Mr. Abderhalden, $0.30; Mr. Bartelt, $2; Mrs. Weinhard, $10; Mrs. Kaufmann, $1.65; Mr. Beck, $1; Rev. Mr. Denny, $0.60; Mr. Rieben, $6; Miss Prescott, for Patriot Library, $6; Colportage Work, $15; Hillsdale, Church Collection, $10.56; Portland, Ladies' Aid Society, $15; Mr. Leuthold, $1.15.

PENNSYLVANIA, $226.41.
Pittsburgh, Church Offering, $50; Dr. Taylor, $3; Mr. J. C. K., $1; Pittsburgh, Church Collection, $5.76; Shippensburg, Church Offering, $3; Allegheny, Sunday School Collection, $5; Mr. Tyler, $10; State College, Church Offering, $6.60; Mrs. Wilham, $2; Miss De Haven, $3; Miss De Haven, Jr., $3; Mr. & Mrs. Wertz, for Patriot Library, $4.90; Miss Demuth, $2; "A Friend," for Patriot Library, $0.45; Franklin, Church Collection, $11.33; Mrs. Salathe, $4.15; Unionville, Church Offering, $1; Easton, Church Collection, $5; Pittsburgh, Church Offering, $12.34; Steelton, Church Collection, $2; Mrs. Huber, for Patriot Library, $4; Mr. Schulte, $2; McKeesport, Church Offering, $15; Mrs. Berger, $1.30; Miss Bishop, $0.90; Wilkingsburg, Church Offering, $30.40; Mr. Lohse, $2.50; Mr. Knittel, $1; Coraopolis, Church Collection, $6.81; Sunday School Offering, $0.87; Coraopolis, Church Collection, $3.10; York, Church Offering, $10; Miss Southern, $6; Dr. Romig, $1; Mr. Spencer, $5; Penfield, Church Collection, $1.

SOUTH DAKOTA, $24.33.
Mrs. Van Bockern, $5; Lenox, Frauenverein, Presbyterian Church, $7; Mrs. Bunger, $5; Monroe, Church Collection, $7.33.

TENNESSEE, $5.
Dr. Robb, $5.

TEXAS, $3.
Rev. Mr. Morhinweg, $5; Mrs. Hinze, $2.
UTAH, $7.50.
Mrs. Tuttle, $5; Mr. Hallock, $2.50.

VIRGINIA, $13.
Mrs. Ittner, $1; Mr. Williams, for Patriot Library, $12.

WASHINGTON, $12.50.
North Yakima, Church Offering, $5; Mr. Acker, $5; Mr. Young, $2.50.

WISCONSIN, $59.67.
Mr. Ott, Sr., $0.95; Mr. Kratt, $2.25; Mr. Flath, $0.65; Mrs. Suess, $0.95; Henry Esch Sons & Co., $10; Mr. Elmer, $2.15; Mr. Moor, $0.65; Mr. Ebling, $5; Mr. Knight, $1; Miss Peters, $0.50; Mr. Ott and Mrs. Marty, $1.50; Mrs. Untied, $0.65; Mrs. Freitag, $10; Rev. Mr. Zeh, $1.65; Mr. Kolb, $0.30; Mr. Klumb, $0.65; Mrs. Bryan, $0.50; Mrs. Sitte, $1.65; Miss Knies, $0.80; Mrs. Wittenberger, $5; Miss Mayer, $2; Oosting, Church Collection, $8.87; Rev. Mr. Peterson, for Patriot Library, $2.

FOREIGN, $22.22.
Canada, Mr. Ritzmann, $5; Mr. Schacht, $1.03; Mr. Hiltbrand, $1.06; Mr. Loewen, $1.15; Mr. Dallmus, $0.53; Rev. Mr. Lehrer, $2; Hawaii, Mrs. Goess, $1.45; Miss Bond, $10.

LEGACIES, $297.70.
Washington, D. C., Estate of Mary I. Banks, on account, $297.70.

INCOME FROM TRUST FUNDS, $764.40
Income for Missionary Work, $730.55
Income for Annuitants, $33.85

Donations

DONATIONS for the missionary work of the American Tract Society may be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

FIELD SECRETARIES AND COLPORTAGE SUPERINTENDENTS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.

Rev. Isaac Pierson, Field Secretary for New England, 50 Bromfield Street, Boston, Mass.

Rev. A. W. Reinhard, Field Secretary and Superintendent of Colportage for the Western and Northwestern States, 4029A De Tonty Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Rev. George Whitefort, Superintendent of Colportage, Southern Agency, Chricton, R. F. D., Mobile Co., Ala.

Form of Bequest

I GIVE and bequeath to the "AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY," instituted in the City of New York, May, 1825, the sum of.....dollars to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said Society.

Three witnesses should state that the testator declares this to be his last will and testament, and that they signed at his request, and in his presence and the presence of each other.

Life Members and Directors

THE donation of $30 at one time constitutes a Life Member of the American Tract Society; the addition of $70, or the donation of $100 at one time, constitutes a Life Director. Life members may receive annually copies of the Society's own publications to the value of $1; Life Directors to the value of $2; if applied for within the Society's year, from April 1st to April 1st, in person or by written order.

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

TERMS: Subscription price, 50 cts. a year, payable in advance. In clubs of five or more, 30 cts. each. Club subscriptions mailed to separate addresses, if desired. Charge for foreign subscriptions, 24 cents additional. Canadian subscriptions, 12 cents additional. Single copies, 5 cents each.

On account of the additional charge which is made by the New York Post Office for mailing to subscribers in New York and Bronx Counties (Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx), no club rates, cash commissions or premiums will be given for subscriptions that must be sent to persons residing in those Counties. Each subscription in New York or Bronx County must be at the rate of 50 cents net.

Remit by Express Money Order, Draft, Post Office Order or Registered Letter. For very small amounts, postage stamps may be sent at the risk of the sender.

CHANGES: When sending change of address, be sure to send the old address as well as the new one.

OUR ADVERTISERS: We believe that all the advertisements in this paper are from responsible advertisers, and it is our intention to admit only such to our columns. Should, however, any of our subscribers find that any advertiser does not live up to his agreements, we would consider it a favor, if they will inform us, and we will at any time give prompt attention to any complaint.

We do not, of course, guarantee that all persons will take the same point of view with the advertisers, and it must be borne in mind that the claims and statements made by advertisers are their assertions, and not ours.

Our readers will confer a favor upon advertisers and also upon us if they will mention the AMERICAN MESSENGER when answering advertisements.

A Good Book for Bible Study

A Guide to Bible Study by Harry E. Richards, A.M., M.D., (Index Pub. Co., Bloomfield, N. J.). In 7 parts. Paper, each Part 30c; cloth, 45c; Parts 1-3, 1 vol. cloth $1.25; Parts 4-7, 1 vol. cloth $1.50.

In "A Guide to Bible Study" we have a simple, practical course of Bible study worked out in years of actual experience in a Sunday School. Its simplicity and thoroughness commends it to any one looking for help in the study of the Word of God itself. It is unique in that it holds to the consecutive Bible narrative, so that the student of either the Junior or Advanced Course follows the Bible's own story in his studies in both Old and New Testaments. It is suggestive, illuminating and stimulating.

American Tract Society

THIS SOCIETY was organized in 1825. Its work is interdenominational and international in scope, and is commended by all evangelical denominations.

It has published the Gospel messages in 178 languages, dialects and characters. It has been the pioneer for work among the foreign-speaking people in our country, and its missionary colporters are distributing Christian literature in many languages among our foreign-speaking population and making a home-to-home visitation among the spiritually destitute, both in the cities and rural districts, leaving all kinds of Christian literature, also the Bible or portions of the Scriptures.

Its publication of leaflets, volumes and periodicals from the Home Office total 797,704,700 copies. It has made foreign cash appropriations to the amount of $802,966.39, and grants of electrotypes to the value of $61,177.96, by means of which millions of copies of books and tracts have been published at mission stations abroad.

The gratuitous distribution of the past year is to the value of $18,461.65. The grand total of its gratuitous distribution has been to the value of $2,652,967.54, which is the equivalent of 5,305,935,080 tract pages.

The total number of family visits that have been made by the Society's colporters during the last year is 199,963; the total number of volumes distributed by sale or grant is 55,712, making the total number of volumes that have been circulated by colporters in the last seventy-six years 17,438,166, and the total number of family visits that they have made during the same period 18,812,806.

A large distribution of Christian literature is being made among the soldiers and sailors, and the Society aims to furnish the Patriot Library to every Cantonment in the Army and to every battleship and cruiser in the Navy.

The Society is making very special effort in behalf of Latin America, having entered upon the publication of a One-volume Bible commentary in Spanish, a long-needed and earnestly prayed-for publication, and several other important volumes in both Spanish and Portuguese. Its total publications for Latin America now reach 16,012,088 copies. Its work, ever widening, is dependent upon donations and legacies, and greatly needs increased offerings.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, PRESIDENT.
JUDSON SWIFT, D. D., General Secretary.
Remittances should be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

AN IMPORTANT QUESTION

Have you renewed your subscription to the AMERICAN MESSENGER for the year 1918? If so, we thank you heartily. If not, we ask you to remit promptly, inasmuch as our fiscal year closes on March 31, 1918, and it is an imperative necessity for us to collect all outstanding accounts settled before that date.

Once more, we would urgently request all our friends who have not as yet renewed their subscriptions for the current year to do so at once.

Kindly send all remittances to the
AMERICAN MESSENGER
Park Avenue and Fortieth Street,
New York, N. Y.

AN UNUSUALLY ATTRACTIVE SPECIAL OFFER

A Special
Ten Months'
Trial
Subscription Offer to New Subscribers
Only
for Twenty-five Cents

You are a reader of the AMERICAN MESSENGER. You know how good it is and you wish you might help others to know its value and to enjoy it month by month. Here is your opportunity.

We are making for the coming month a SPECIAL TEN MONTHS' TRIAL OFFER of the AMERICAN MESSENGER (from March 1st to December 31st, 1918) for only TWENTY-FIVE CENTS. This Special Trial Offer applies to New Subscribers only.

Tell all your friends about this and urge them to subscribe. Send the paper as AN EASTER GIFT to all whom you delight to remember at this season. Nothing could please them better.

Our men and boys in the Army and Navy need the very best reading. Send the AMERICAN MESSENGER to them for ten months. Remit to us the money for one or more subscriptions, (each twenty-five cents), and we will mail as many copies of the AMERICAN MESSENGER as you order to whatever Camp or Naval Station you may designate.

Valuable Departments

The AMERICAN MESSENGER has many departments of great value to all classes of readers. Its Editorial Contributions are furnished by Rev. David J. Burrell, D.D., pastor of the Marble Collegiate Church of New York; Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, Moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church; Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D., Dr. Charles Carroll Albertson, and Rev. George Ernest Merriam. Our Young Folks' page, with its beautiful illustrations and original stories and poems is a constant delight to the boys and girls. "In His Vineyard and Curs" is the title of a department which deals with the progress of the Kingdom throughout the wide world. "Our Fireside" is a department devoted to the best interests of the home. The "Prayer Meeting" page with its suggestive treatment of the Topics used in Christian Endeavor and other Young People's meetings is especially valuable to the young people.

Notable Contributors

In addition to its Editorial Contributors many other successful and popular writers contribute to the columns of the AMERICAN MESSENGER, among whom are Lloyd Logan, Rev. Howard W. Pope, Annette L. Noble, Rev. Warren G. Partridge, D.D., Cora S. Day, Mary Davis, L. D. Stearns, Allan Phillip, Earl Reed Silvers, Clarence E. Flynn, Edgar L. Vincent and many others.

Remember this special offer is for new subscribers only, and is good for a limited time, therefore please forward subscription at once. This special offer is good for subscriptions in the United States only, as foreign subscriptions require extra postage.

Special Introductory Price Coupons

A 10 Months' Special Subscription Offer for Only 25 Cents

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER
Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York City

SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY PRICE COUPON.

This coupon and 25 Cents good for a 10 months' trial subscription to the American Messenger.

Name

Address

For New Subscribers Only.

If at present a subscriber, please hand this coupon to a friend.

SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY PRICE COUPON.

This coupon and 25 Cents good for a 10 months' trial subscription to the American Messenger.

Name

Address

For New Subscribers Only.

If at present a subscriber, please hand this coupon to a friend.

SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY PRICE COUPON.

This coupon and 25 Cents good for a 10 months' trial subscription to the American Messenger.

Name

Address

For New Subscribers Only.

If at present a subscriber, please hand this coupon to a friend.

SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY PRICE COUPON.

This coupon and 25 Cents good for a 10 months' trial subscription to the American Messenger.

Name

Address

For New Subscribers Only.

If at present a subscriber, please hand this coupon to a friend.

GIFT BOOKS for EASTER-TIDE

In what way can you bind friends closer through the years than by giving a carefully selected Easter book? Such books will be opened and read many, many times by your friend in the years to come, and always the thought of the giver must come to mind. Truly a bond of friendship! And will it be costly to you? Some of the Easter remembrances below cost but 20 cents, nevertheless are exquisite examples of printing and binding.

Write for some beautiful Easter token for the friend you have in mind, and it will be sent you immediately.

Don't glance over this list quickly. Consider every title carefully. Consider your list of friends. You will think of a friend and find just the right remembrance.

BEAUTIFUL ENVELOPE BOOK-LETS

So beautiful and durable are these booklets that they are treasured through all the years. Each has about 30 pages. Text pages are bordered with drawn designs in delicate colors. Bound with silk in flapped covers. Enclosed in an envelope of the same material as the cover. Cover and envelope decorated. Size 4x7 inches.

In what better way can one remember friends and in turn be remembered than by sending one of these exquisite booklets?

By Mail 22 cents5 for $1.00

FOUR EASTER TITLES TO CHOOSE FROM:

THE ROYAL DAY

by Edgar Whitaker Work.

A beautiful Easter essay. Christ's true coronation day. "Their faith took on the royal brightness of the resurrection." This booklet, never before published, is destined to win a welcome in many homes. Covers and envelope of white watered-silk paper. Cover designs in purple.

AN ABIDING EASTER MESSAGE,

by George Ernest Merriam.

"These pages may, like an Easter chime, bring peace to troubled hearts." The reality of Divine Love—its uplift and its transforming power—this is the abiding Easter message. Covers and envelope of white paper marbled in purple. Cover designs in purple.

EASTER MORNING,

by John Henry Jowett, LL.D.

"The night is over and gone. It is sweet and beautiful morning." A beautiful booklet for the Easter-tide. Covers and envelope in cream linen paper. Cover designs in purple.

THE LIFE BEAUTIFUL,

by Wayland Hoyt.

An inspiring booklet containing four titles: The Life Beautiful; The Guest Chamber; Gracious Answers to Great Questions; Heaven.

Covers and envelope of light brown watered-silk paper. Cover designs in orange.

THE RADIANT MORN,

by A. T. Schofield, M.D.

A rarely appropriate Easter book. Nearly half of the front cover of this book is cream-white cloth, beautifully figured with fine gold lines. The other half of the front cover is in rich dark, marbled brown. A striking and attractive binding. Size 4½ x 7 inches, 115 pages. The purpose of "The Radiant Morn" is to show that Christianity, rightly understood and enjoyed, instead of constricting our outlook and destroying our pleasures, enlarges both, and brings to our lives a truer, deeper sense of happiness.

By mail, 58 cents.

THESE WORDS OF MINE.

A handsome little book, bound in limp, velvety brown leather stamped in gold, with bookmark. In its white pasteboard box it is an attractive gift, indeed. Size 2½ x 3½ inches, 157 pages. Texts from the American Revised Version of the Holy Scriptures, with a few from the authorized Version, selected and arranged by Abbie McCammon Brown. A most acceptable Easter remembrance.

By mail, 50 cents.

PRAYER AND MEDITATION,

by Judson Swift, D.D.

Bound in dark brown Leathercraft. Lined with end papers of mottled brown. Size 3¼ x 5¼ inches, 89 pages. A little book of strength and encouragement. The author has prepared an original series of meditations and prayers which will meet a daily need; a Scripture selection, a prayer, a prose and poetic meditation and a suggested Scripture reading for thirty-one mornings and evenings.

Remember that this book is of a proper size for the pocket—so small that it may be slipped into the pocket and carried indefinitely—available at any spare minute.

By mail, 50 cents.

DAILY FOOD.

A Scriptural portion, a promise, and a verse of a hymn for every day in the year.

In white cloth, gilt edges, boxed, size 2¼ x 3¼ inches, 200 pages. An appropriate and inexpensive Easter remembrance.

By mail, 25 cents.

FOR SOLDIERS.

Daily Food, bound in Khaki cloth. Vest-pocket size. By mail, 25 cents.

FOR SOLDIERS AND SAILORS

A MANUAL OF DEVOTION FOR SOLDIERS AND SAILORS,

by Judson Swift, D.D.

Note the title of this book. A new devotional book written expressly for the use of the men of our Army and Navy. You will find a Scripture selection, a prayer, and a meditation for each morning and evening for thirty-one days.

If you could read one of the special prayers, such, for instance, as the "Prayer before Going into Battle" on page 94, you would realize the heartening influence of this book on a man at the front. If you know any of our boys who are in our country's service or about to go, this guide and comforter will stand in good stead in some trying hour. Size 3¼ x 5¼ inches. 104 pages. By mail, 35 cents.

WHERE HEAVEN TOUCHED THE EARTH,

by Cortland Myers, D.D.

Green cloth, stamped in gold and white. Colored illustrations. 239 pages. Size 5 x 7½ inches.

Read this testimonial from the Christian Observer: "Dr. Myers has selected certain places in Palestine where in the life of Christ Heaven seemed more nearly to 'touch the earth,' on which to base this treatise on our Lord's life . . . Into the story of these places he weaves lessons not to be forgotten . . . Altogether the work is not only delightful to read, but beautifully helpful."

By mail, $1.10.

JOURNEYING IN THE LAND WHERE JESUS LIVED,

by Gerard B. F. Hallock, D.D.

A very handsome book, bound in cloth and stamped in green and gold. 35 illustrations. 302 pages. Size 5½ x 8 inches.

"Dr. Hallock's only wish is that the readers might see the land through his eyes, and really see it." Reformed Church Messenger. The Auburn Seminary Review declares the book to be "a delight and an inspiration."

By mail, $1.00.

THE NEW TESTAMENT, With Notes, Instructions and References. Pocket Edition.

Printed on fine, thin paper, bound in leather, divinity circuit, red under gold edges. Size 6x3¼x¾ inches. $1.33 by mail. Most helpful to its readers. The Introductions present the salient features of each book very clearly. The Notes give a concise explanation of the passages which need explanation. The Instructions are designed to bring the truth home to the lives of the readers—and to furnish them with material of value in Christian service and work. The Outline of the Harmony of the Gospels gives an outline of the Life of Christ that will commend itself to those who make use of it.

NEW BOOKS

AS HIS MOTHER SAW HIM,

by Charlotte E. Gray.

A beautiful picture of the home at Nazareth, the girl Mary, the exultant woman Mary, the Mary bowed with grief. She, the Mother, emerges into the supreme renunciation as she enters into a spiritual understanding of the divine mission of the Saviour. The story gives a clear and excellent view of the life of our Saviour. Size 4x6¼ inches. 254 pages. By mail, $1.05.

THE HIGH ROAD,

by Emma S. Allen.

A Prohibition theme, interwoven with a delightful romance. The girl's father is a California wine-merchant, the boy's parents are Prohibitionists.

The boy "took the High Road," and, backed by his father's wealth, battled mightily for Prohibition.

The girl "took the Low Road," and doubtfully followed her father's leading.

But read this book of the California vineyards and of Victoria's turning. Cloth, size 5x7½ inches. 326 pages. By mail, $1.35.

ANNA COOPE, Sky Pilot of the San Blas Indians.

An Autobiography.

Spreading the Word among the Indians of Central America. A portrayal of the work of a heroic woman, true and as interesting and danger-filled as could be the life of a brave soldier of God among wild tribes.

Marvelous deliverances through prayer and faith. Many photographs of the natives' strange customs. Did you ever pit your wits against those of an Indian chief? Or move your belongings in a native canoe while a sea-storm was raging? Cloth, 5x7½ inches. 180 pages. By mail, $1.30.

THE PROPHETS AND THE WAR,

by Charles Carroll Albertson, D.D.

A great lesson is still to be learned in this world war from Hosea, Habakkuk and Isaiah. The purpose of this book is to give us an apprehension of truths which may enable us to discern "the inflow of God into human events, and the outflow of human events back to God." Size 5¼x7½ inches. Cloth. By mail, $1.00.

ALMETTA OF GABRIEL'S RUN,

by Louise S. Murdoch.

Let this book take you to the Cumberlands of Kentucky. Read it in some secluded nook. For hours you will live with the mountain-folk—and with Almetta; with Pepper's Mary, Uncle Gabe, and Granny Pop—the high peaks, the ravines and the lonely, rustling forests of the little-known Cumberlands around you. Written by one who knows the Cumberlands and the strange mountain people.

You will delight in the doings of this outcast child of the hills and in Gran's quaint courtship. Cloth, size 5x7½ inches. 244 pages. By mail, $1.30.

Several times we have urged the reading of two of our books by those who are using the International Lessons. They contain most valuable matter.

These books are:

JOHN MARK, OR THE MAKING OF A SAINT,

by Rev. James D. Hunter, D.D.

Linen cloth binding, 113 pages, size 5x7½ inches. By mail, 50 cents, and

STUDIES IN MARK'S GOSPEL,

by Rev. C. S. Robinson, D.D.

Paper covers, decoration in green, 300 pages, size 5¼ x 7½ inches. By mail, 30 cents.

Vol. 76

No. 4

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

THE THREE MARYS

Painted by Ary Scheffer

UNTO YOU. GLAD TIDINGS
 WE DECLARE

PREACH THE
 GOSPEL TO EVERY CREATURE

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY, NEW YORK

1843

1918

SEVENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY

For Three-quarters of a Century the AMERICAN MESSENGER has been carrying the Good News of Great Joy into thousands upon thousands of homes in every section of the country, and has sought to fulfil its mission as a herald of the Gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Many Saints now in Glory were led to a knowledge of the Master through the reading of this admirable religious publication, and testimonies are constantly being received, telling us that the AMERICAN MESSENGER brings Good Cheer and Comfort into their homes each month. It certainly inspires the heart and mind to seek and choose the best things in life.

The AMERICAN MESSENGER has ever maintained the integrity of the Bible and has upheld the divine inspiration of the Scriptures in the largest and fullest sense. It has had absolutely no sympathy with those who would in any way weaken the authority of the Word of God or impair its value as an infallible guide.

We rejoice in the seventy-five years of service which our paper has rendered in the cause of evangelical journalism. From its very inception in 1843, it has stood for the essentials of the Christian faith, and has striven to disseminate the teachings of a pure and simple Gospel. It has advocated unity in essentials, liberty in non-essentials, and charity in all things.

The publishers of the AMERICAN MESSENGER desire to increase its usefulness and extend its influence more widely than ever before, and at this time we are offering a special inducement. For TWENTY-FIVE CENTS we will send the AMERICAN MESSENGER from April 1 to December 31 (nine months) to any address in the United States.

We would like to have all our friends co-operate with us, and help to celebrate this seventy-fifth anniversary of the founding of the AMERICAN MESSENGER by increasing its subscription list by many thousand names during the coming month. This is one of the ways in which you may have a part in doing a splendid missionary work.

An appropriate Easter remembrance to a friend would be a subscription to the AMERICAN MESSENGER for the nine months.

This special offer applies to NEW subscribers only.

25 Cents
9 MONTHS

If every present subscriber would send only ONE NEW 9 months' subscription, it would help wonderfully

Address: THE AMERICAN MESSENGER
PARK AVENUE AND 40TH ST. NEW YORK, N. Y.

25 Cents
9 MONTHS

The Stone Is Rolled Away

*A band of women true and brave,
Came early to the Savior's grave;
Their faces sad, and soft their tone,
For who should roll away the stone?*

*Their hands were filled with spices rare,
Their hearts with heavier load of care;
For what avail was woman's zeal
To break the royal Pilate's seal?*

*The darkness of the cross is past,
The light of life has come at last;
The angel cries sweet Easter morn,
And joy to all the world is born.*

*The mighty stone is rolled away,
The Christian's joy begins to-day;
The darkness of the grave is past,
The light of life has come at last.*

Mrs. George C. Needham.

A Call to Sunday-School Workers

The "Call to the Colors" has peculiar significance these days when the most familiar sounds we hear are the beating of drums and the measured tread of marching feet, and the most familiar sights, those of waving flags, and countless soldiers preparing to start to the front.

All honor to the noble men who have responded to their Country's call! Our hearts and our prayers go with them.

Let those of us who remain at home recognize that the same call of patriotism and loyalty to which our soldiers have responded is just as truly a call of patriotism and loyalty to us to defend our homes, our churches, and our country by building up clean citizenship and moral character among the youth of the nation. The International Sunday School Association is making a large contribution to this end, and has its peculiar part to perform in these trying times. The Sunday Schools have been recognized in a definite way by our Government, and have been requested to undertake specific lines of activity in connection with the war. We must recognize our opportunity and responsibility now, and measure up to our privileges, or we shall prove ourselves unworthy of the place we occupy and of our splendid past.

Mr. Gerald W. Birks, Supervisor of the Y. M. C. A. work among Canadian troops in Europe, writing from Great Britain to our International Office, puts up a tremendous challenge to us in these words:

"While readily appreciating the magnificent opportunities of Christian service over here, I am every day becoming more and more impressed with the fact that the real constructive work of the Kingdom is what is being done at home by the Sunday School, Y. M. C. A. and kindred organizations, for there seems but little chance of a man coming through these awful experiences straight, unless his feet have been firmly planted on the rock before he leaves home. So I urge upon you, as this war may possibly be drawn out for years, to do your part with the older boys who are now being called to the Colors."

This discriminating appreciation as to the value of proper training for the boys during their teen age is certainly a challenge to all Sunday School workers to do their best. The great psychologist, William James, said that the world needed a moral equivalent for war. We certainly have it in the Sunday School, for here we contend against the most dangerous and insidious of enemies, one who can destroy the soul as well as the body. There can be no mightier incentive for Sunday School workers than to set the feet of our boys and girls in the paths of righteousness.

Therefore, The Executive Committee of the International Sunday School Association officially announces that it will hold its Fifteenth Convention in the city of Buffalo, New York, June 19 to 25, inclusive, in the year Nineteen Hundred and Eighteen.

This is a delegated convention, and all

Sunday School workers desiring to attend are requested to confer with the General Secretaries of their State or Provincial Sunday School Associations.

Let all who read this Call join in earnest prayer that God will so fill the Buffalo Convention with His Spirit in this crucial hour of the world's history, that the Sunday School hosts of North America may be consecrated to His service as never before.

EDWARD K. WARREN, President.
FRED A. WELLS, Executive Chairman.
E. O. EXCELL, Treasurer.
MARION LAWRENCE, General Secretary.

For the Soldiers at Camp Sheridan

The Alabama Bible Society has been carrying forward a fine work among the soldiers at Camp Sheridan. The American Tract Society has aided in this work by a grant which was acknowledged by Rev. W. J. Elliott, Superintendent of the Alabama Bible Society in these words:

"We are in receipt of the Cromwell's Soldier's Pocket Bibles and hasten to extend our thanks to the American Tract Society for this liberal donation. We are distributing these books to the soldiers in our Camp as wisely as we know how."

For the National Gospel Workers

A grant of Christian literature was recently sent to the National Gospel Workers' Aid Society of Washington, D. C., whose object is to better religious conditions in country districts and to organize neighborhood Bible Study Clubs wherever possible. This grant was acknowledged by Rev. J. Milton Waldron, D. D., President of the organization, as follows:

"The bundle of tracts the American Tract Society so kindly sent to us came to hand a few days ago, and I am writing on behalf of myself and our Society to thank you for these very valuable tracts, and to assure you that we appreciate them and will place them where they will be of service in winning the unsaved to Christ and in strengthening the faithful believers in Christ."

"A Very Great Help"

A subscriber, in renewing her subscription for another year, writes: "I find the AMERICAN MESSENGER a very great help in my preparation for the Christian Endeavor meeting. It contains many messages for the Christians of America."

Life and Service Hymns

A new collection of 370 hymns that are melodious, singable, reverent and permanent in value — rich in hymns that appeal for dedication of life to Christian service. Compiled from suggestions asked from 900 pastors, evangelists and Christian workers, and includes the cream of the church classics and the best product of modern hymn writers.

A choice list of absolutely new hymns by prominent authors appears for the first time in this book.

Contains 40 hymns for the Beginners, Primary and Junior Departments.

Mr. Bentley D. Aekley (for eight years secretary and accompanist of "Billy" Sunday) a song writer of nation-wide reputation, is our musical editor. His latest and best hymns appear in this book. Music edition only.

Returnable sample sent on request.
Full Cloth Board 30c, or $25.00 per 100.
Limp Cloth 20c, or $17.50 per 100.
Delivery charges extra.

ONWARD PRESS
DEPT. A

RICHMOND, VA. TEXARKANA, ARK.-TEX.

The American Messenger

"Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Luke 2:10

Vol. 76. No. 4

APRIL, 1918

Copyright, 1918, by American Tract Society.

Terms: 50 cents per annum
Single copy, 5 cents

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

PUBLISHED MONTHLY

BY THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

OFFICERS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President.

JOHN HENRY JOWETT, M.A., D.D., Vice-President.

JUDSON SWIFT, D.D., General Secretary.

LOUIS TAG, Treasurer.

REV. HENRY LEWIS, Ph.D., Recording Secretary.

All of the above-named officers should be addressed at Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Rev. David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.

Rev. Charles Carroll Albertson, D.D.

Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.

Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D.

Rev. George Ernest Merriam.

Entered at the Post Office in New York as second-class matter.

"The Lord Is Risen"

The Fact. Once every week in the year, according to the Christian calendar, one day is set apart and observed as a day of religious observance and rest from ordinary daily toil. That day is Sunday, the first day of the week. From ancient times the Jewish people, according to the law given through Moses, have set apart and observed the seventh day of the week for the same purposes. Very few people have ever acquainted themselves with the reason why the Christian world observes the first, and not the seventh, day of the week for rest and religious observance. The answer, and only true answer, is that the first, and not the seventh, day of the week marks the weekly anniversary of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ from the dead.

There is no other fact in human history so frequently and emphatically testified to each week of the year throughout the world as the resurrection of Christ. Well may Dr. A. H. Strong say: "The resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ—by which we mean his coming forth from the sepulchre in body as well as in spirit—is demonstrated by evidence as varied and as conclusive as that which proves to us any single fact of human history. Without it Christianity itself is inexplicable, as is shown by the failure of all modern theories to account for its rise and progress."

Its Lessons. Says Canon Liddon: "The literal resurrection of Jesus was the cardinal fact upon which the earliest preachers of Christianity based their appeal to the Jewish people. St. Paul, writing to a Gentile Church, expressly makes Christianity answer with its life for the literal truth of the resurrection. 'If Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain. . . . Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished.' (I Cor. 15:14, 18). Some modern writers would possibly have reproached St. Paul with offering a harsh alternative instead of an argument. But St. Paul would have replied, first, that our Lord's honor and credit were entirely staked upon the issue, since He had foretold His Resurrection as the 'sign' which would justify His claims (Matt. 12:39, 40); and, secondly, that the fact of the resurrection was attested by evidence which must outweigh everything except an 'a priori' conviction of the impossibility of miracle, since it was attested by the word of more than two hundred and fifty living persons who had actually seen the Risen Jesus (I Cor. 15:6).

"Christ, although crucified and slain, is yet the Leader or Prince (or 'Author') of Life (Acts 3:15). That He should be held in bondage by the might of death was impossible (Acts 2:24). The heavens must receive Him (Acts 3:21), and He is now the Lord of all things (Acts 10:36). It is He Who from His heavenly throne has poured out upon the earth the gifts of Pentecost (Acts 2:33). His name spoken on earth has a wonder-working power (Acts 3:6); as unveiling His nature and office, it is a symbol which faith reverently treasures, and by the might of which the servants of God can relieve even physical suffering (Acts 3:16). As a refuge for sinners the name of Jesus stands alone; no other name has been given under heaven among men whereby the one true salvation can be guaranteed to the sons of men (Acts 4:12). Here St. Peter clearly implies that the religion of Jesus is the true, and universal, and absolute religion."

He who disbelieves in the resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ from the dead disbelieves in one of the most fully established facts in all history. And he who so disbelieves cuts himself off from an acceptance of the fact that actually certifies the divine validity of all the teachings and claims and commandments of the Son of God. As St. Paul says, "If Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain."

While the resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ establishes the fact of the full effectiveness of his atonement for the sins of the world, and furnishes the ground and assurance of our own resurrection, and proves the divine validity of his teachings and commandments, its chief accomplishment is discovered in its revelation of his deity. He repeatedly made claim to such deity during the days of his ministry in the flesh; and it cannot be successfully denied that—such being the case—as He was subsequently raised from the dead by that very God the Father with Whom He always claimed to be essentially and eternally one, by that fact He was proved to be very God of very God. For God, Who raised His Son from the dead, would not—nay, could not—have raised Him if He had not been the very one whom He had claimed Himself to be—not merely "a son" but—the Son of God in the most unique and exclusive sense of that term!

With this clear view and understanding of "the Truth," of Him who once declared himself to be "I AM, . . . the Truth," in the full light of the glory of the resurrection morn, we may well join with the immortal Charles Wesley in his thrilling words:

"Christ, by highest heaven adored,
Christ, the everlasting Lord;
Veiled in flesh the Godhead see:
Hail, incarnate Deity!"

* * *

A Resurrection In Me

It would be a pity to let this season of the special remembrance of Christ's resurrection pass without a renewal by prayer and meditation of the spiritual life in our own souls. The very joy of the contemplation of the eternal life ought to bring a waking of our love for God and man and a widening and deepening of our life while here on earth. The Epworth Outlook puts the thought beautifully before us:

"Is there anything dead in me that needs a resurrection? Is faith in God dead? Is belief in prayer dormant? Have I talents wrapped in the graveclothes of disuse? Has my interest in humanity grown emotionless? Have I lost the joy of living so that I wake with no gladness to front a new day? Is my heart cold to the claims of friendship, so that I chill those who would fain give me love? Is there no response when duty beckons me to follow? Then truly I have need of resurrection. Let me haste to implore the only One who can 'raise me from the dead.' Beyond a show of doubt He will speak to me, as to Lazarus, the potent 'Come forth.'"

* * *

At the Feet of Jesus

A stirring address was made at a recent meeting in Philadelphia by Major Lauchlan MacLean Watt, chaplain of the Second Gordon Highlanders, who is pastor of St. Stephen's Presbyterian Church, Edinburgh. In closing he said:

"What is the war going to mean? It must mean the assurance of liberty for the ages. It must mean the putting down of that arrogance and cruelty that have broken the heart of civilization.

"You'll never win that victory, American people, by talking. It will take the bravest effort of our empire and the bravest effort of your federated States to beat down that arrogance and prevent it from raising its head again.

"America—men and women—before victory comes to us, we must prostrate ourselves at the feet of Jesus, those dear feet that were wounded for us. Prostrate on our faces we must seek His help that we may face in His strength the struggle that is imminent, and the sorrows that may befall. Only He can give us the strength that will meet these things. On Him you must rely. His aid you must seek."

* * *

The Liberty Loan Honor Flag

The third Liberty Loan, the campaign for which is to start on April 6, will be, as before, an appeal to the loyal Americans of every station in life to do something for our Government, and so for our boys at the front, and to do it now. Surely every one must heed the appeal of our country, and respond either through the buying of Liberty Bonds or War-Saving Certificates or Thrift Stamps.

To speed up the campaign, every city or town in the country which subscribes more than its quota of Liberty bonds will be awarded by the Treasury Department an Honor Flag.

The flag will be 36 inches wide and 54 inches long. The body of the flag will be white with a broad red border, and three broad blue vertical stripes denoting the Third Loan. The flags, which will be of the same quality as the flags of the Navy, are already being manufactured and will be awarded as fast as the right to fly them is won. Though awarded by the Treasury Department, they will be distributed by the Liberty loan committees of the different districts.

There will also be a National Honor Flag for each State, to be flown at the State capitol, with the name of each town winning a flag inscribed upon it. There will be also preserved in the United States Treasury a National Honor Flag, with the record of each State recorded on it.

Stars, to be placed on the flag of each city or town doubling its quota, will be also awarded, and an additional star for each time the quota is doubled.

An Honor Roll, containing the names of all subscribers, but not the amount of the individual subscriptions, will be kept in each community. A window card, bearing a representation of the Honor Flag, will be given each subscriber to the loan, to be displayed at the home or place of business.

* * *

Thirty-Seven Years of Christian Endeavor

Dr. Francis E. Clark, the President of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, writes a very pleasant letter recognizing the friendly attitude of the AMERICAN MESSENGER towards the Christian Endeavor movement and speaking of the excellent expositions of the weekly prayer meeting topic which appear in our columns each month. He encloses some items concerning the work of that Society for thirty-seven years, which are exceedingly interesting:

1. More than one hundred thousand societies built on the Christian Endeavor plan, in thirty-seven years, nearly four-fifths of which bear our interdenominational name.

2. Fifteen millions of members trained in some degree for Christian service and in the practice of Christian fellowship.

3. One hundred million prayer-meetings held, each of which has exerted some influence for good, and given opportunity for the expression of the religious life.

4. Hundreds of thousands of committees formed, which have committed some form of definite, voluntary welfare work to these millions of young Christians.

5. Tens of thousands of union meetings and conventions held, varying in size from a few score to fifty thousand in attendance, thus vastly promoting the fellowship of the denominations.

6. Societies formed in practically every land and every evangelical denomination; over one hundred countries and their colonies and over one hundred distinct denominations in this list.

7. Uplift and rescue work undertaken for and by soldiers, sailors, and in hospitals, prisons, fresh air camps, in engine houses, on street corners, and in every conceivable place of opportunity.

8. Some forty weekly or monthly Christian Endeavor publications, in a dozen languages, and a large library of helpful literature published.

9. An eager response, since the war began, to the country's call for food production and economy, for Red Cross, Y. M. C. A., and Y. W. C. A. work, etc.

10. A hundred thousand Endeavorers in training camps or at the front, and societies formed in cantonments, regiments, and naval quarters.

11. This last year the best of all the thirty-seven, in increase and efficiency, in most of the countries from which the war allows us to obtain reports.

* * *

"That They May Be One."

The American Tract Society has from its beginning, ninety-three years ago, stood for Christian union, a working together of all denominations for the upbuilding of the Kingdom of Christ and the saving of men. The world is moving, the Church of Christ is coming to have this vision also. In some of our mission fields the duplication of workers and buildings is being obviated by a union of forces or so apportioning the work that only one denomination occupies a given territory. Dr. F. Mason North recently declared that the time has come for each denomination to consider whether "in the new fires of the time the barriers which separate denominations may not be burned away."

In work for our Army and Navy the Y. M. C. A. and the Red Cross are fine illustrations of what can be done when we sink differences and exalt the points on which we all agree. The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America is working along the same line in carrying on distinctly religious work for our soldiers and sailors. From that organization comes word of the opening of a chapel and parish house at Camp Upton, which we are glad to publish in the interests of Christian unity:

On Sunday, February 24, there took place at Camp Upton a remarkable service. It was the opening of the new church headquarters on ground adjoining the administration building of the Young Men's Christian Association and just opposite the building of the Knights of Columbus. The building, which consists of an attractive chapel, with a parish house adjoining, was erected by a committee, of which the Rev. John F. Carson, D. D., was chairman, representing six different communions: the Baptists, the Congregationalists, the Episcopalians, the Lutherans, the Methodists, and the Presbyterians. The building is designed to provide a place for those religious services which require more quiet and detachment than is easily obtainable in the buildings of the Young Men's Christian Association and the Knights of Columbus, which must serve other interests as well. It is open freely, as far as time and space will permit, to all the religious bodies represented in the camp. This fact was impressively recognized in the opening service, in which all the religious interests were represented—regular and voluntary chaplains, Protestants, Jews and Catholics, as well as the Young Men's Christian Association and the Knights of Columbus. The meeting was addressed by the commanding general, who expressed his cordial sympathy with the project, and paid an impressive tribute to the contribution of the religious forces to the morale of his troops. Music was furnished by a choir of the Young Men's Christian Association, and the orchestra of the 152d Depot Brigade. The service was largely attended and most impressive.

The significant thing about this service is the fact that it involved no sacrifice of principle on the part of any of the participants. The Upton building is not a union church; it is a headquarters of the churches where each communion in its own way may make provision for those more intimate needs of the personal religious life which cannot be adequately cared for in a larger gathering which includes all. It is an impressive exhibition of the unity in diversity for which democracy stands. What has been going on in Camp Upton has been repeating itself in various ways in the different cantonments and training stations throughout the country, and what is more encouraging, in the religious bodies which are represented in the work which has been carried on there. During the months that are past, in quiet and unobtrusive ways, much has been done toward unifying the efforts of the churches in a constructive program of co-operative work.

* * *

Delay in the Mails

We are constantly receiving letters saying that the AMERICAN MESSENGER does not reach its subscribers on time. A minister in Missouri says that it does not reach him until the middle of the month, so that he loses the help he needs for two Christian Endeavor meetings. Another in South Carolina says: "We use the Christian Endeavor page in our meetings, but the paper usually comes too late for one of the meetings, sometimes for two. Would it be possible to send my paper a little earlier?" A third in South Dakota says that the paper comes a month late.

We are not delaying the printing or sending out of the AMERICAN MESSENGER from the New York end. We bring it out just as promptly as we have done in years past. Therefore the complaints of our subscribers must be due to delays in transportation. Probably in the pressure for the shipping of food stuffs and materials of all kinds needed for manufacturing and for export, mail-trains which carry second-class matter, by which we mean papers and magazines, are held back or in some way delayed in order to give freight and express trains right of way.

This being so, we ask our readers to be patient. We are passing through a crisis time in our country, and if our own privileges and pleasures are interfered with we must be patriotic and bear it with cheerfulness.

We are sending out this issue several days in advance of the usual time, hoping that it will reach all our readers before Easter Sunday. We hope it will bring a special message of hope and cheer to every one who receives it. Meanwhile, if anything can be done to expedite the sending of future numbers we will find a way.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTION

REV. G. ERNEST MERRIAM.

THE CROSS OF THE CHRISTIAN

BY

REV. GEORGE ERNEST MERRIAM

Minister of Calvinistic Congregational Church, Fitchburg, Massachusetts

FRIEND of the writer, a physician, once spoke with great enthusiasm of a sermon which he had heard in his youth. Sermons are so seldom remembered that this seemed an opportunity to be seized. Who preached the sermon, and when, and where? Was it replete with illustrations? Was it epigrammatic? Was it notable for its logical sequence? Strangely enough, such questions brought only a negative answer. This man who had been so greatly impressed must needs confess that he had forgotten the name of the preacher, was not quite sure of the place or the time when he had listened so eagerly, could not repeat the text or the theme or the outline, or even a single outstanding metaphor or illustration. A full confession elicited the fact that one sentence only had been characterized on mind and heart, and woven into the very life of the hearer. It was the sentence with which the speaker had begun and also had concluded his address. And these were the words—worthy of being written in the memory book of each and all—"The world has nothing but contempt for the Christian who comes down from his cross."

This single sentence not only made a lasting impression upon at least one hearer, but indirectly upon many others, for it has been quoted since again and again by the writer, with the result that it has been re-echoed later in conversation with his parishioners. It almost seems that no one can hear it without catching something of its challenge, without feeling something of its irony. And it is true—the world has nothing but contempt for the Christian who comes down from his cross. The Jews of old asserted that if the Master would come down from the cross they would believe on Him. Would it have been so? Quite otherwise. Greater miracles than this He had wrought, and they had not believed on Him. To have come down would have shown, possibly, superhuman strength, but it would not have proven His teachings concerning Himself or the great Father whom He represented. He could have come down as a question of power. He could not come down as a matter of principle. And because He did not come down, the cross has been wrought into the architecture of the world, into the fabric of history, into the warp and woof of human existence.

The supreme command of the Master was, to him who would be His disciple, "Let him take up his cross and follow Me." What was this cross which He himself bore up the steep of Calvary and which others must needs bear after him? Was it not a cross of suffering, of submission, of service, and above all else of sympathy? We think of the suffering often; that is, His suffering, but how seldom do we link it with our own! And the same is to be said of the toil of the hands and of the outpourings of the heart of love and of obedience.

By the cross we measure the pain that He endured, the physical pain, the mental pain. We do not like to look upon those paintings of Tissot which, ranged one after the other in the art gallery of the Brooklyn Institute, reproduce for us the agonies of the crucifixion. It is a sight that should make the strongest shudder and the weakest turn away. Are we blinded by the glory of it all or are we ashamed that to so little a degree we have been partakers of His sufferings? Think of the blows that He received, the taunts to which He listened, and even of the crown of thorns and the cruel, cruel nails! It ought to drive away base ingratitude and to spur us on to high endeavor. Perchance we might even rejoice in the suffering we ourselves are called upon to endure.

Frederick Robertson of Brighton, in his final illness, said that it was easier for him to bear his own pain as he looked upon the thorn-crowned head of the Christ (probably that of Da Vinci). There is something noble in such suffering. Bishop Latimer, in a letter to Ridley, wrote, "Pardon me and pray for me, I say, for I am sometimes so fearful, that I would creep into a mouse-hole." And yet we find this same man saying to the same Ridley, his fellow-martyr, when both were fastened to the stake with the faggots heaped about them, already ablaze and singeing the flesh, "Be of good comfort, Master Ridley. Play the man! We shall this day light such a candle, by God's grace, in England, as I trust shall never be put out." Here indeed is one who stayed upon his cross. Can you? Can I? Remember, to complain is to come down. That was the view of the Christ; it is the world's view; it must needs be ours. The Christ did not come down. Can we say as much?

The cross of the Christ was also the cross of submission. He said, "I came not to do my own will but the will of Him that sent me." Of Him it is written that He came "emptying Himself" and "despising the shame." His was a life of submission, not alone to suffering, but to lesser things; submission to petty trials, misunderstanding, obedience to the laws of God and of man, those laws which were framed in the beginning when He was with God and when by Him were all things made and without Him nothing was made which was made, and all those other laws of conventionality or of state and society which were regnant in His day. He submitted to what losses, what bereavements, as that of Lazarus, and what betrayals—not alone that of Judas, but of Peter who denied and of the others who followed afar off. This was the monument of the Christ, not only that He died upon the cross but that He lived the life of crucifixion.

What other has left so indestructible a monument as this? The traveler enters into St. Paul's in London and looks upon the words, "Si monumentum requiris, circumspice"—"If you seek a monument, look about you." That building, planned by his mind, carried out under his instruction, his great masterpiece—what better monument than this could any one desire. It becomes emblematic of the man. Equally symbolical is the monument erected to the Father of his Country upon the banks of the Potomac. Yet even this monument pales before that of the simple cross, cut in marble, chiseled in granite, or moulded in the bronze. How often you see it in the cemeteries of to-day! I wonder what it means. Does it mean a simple trust in the cross that has become historic, in the death and life and power of the risen Lord—as it were a statement of a creed—or does it tell something of the life of the one over whose grave it is erected? Surely we have a right to expect the latter as well as to look for the former. But do we feel that, if the end of life should come to us now, we would be worthy of such a monument as this?

Is this the meaning of the cross to us?

The cross of the Nazarene was one likewise of service. He came "not to be ministered unto, but to minister." He was known as a carpenter, indeed as "the carpenter." Are we to understand by this that he was known, not merely in the village but at great distance, as the best of carpenters, the one to be trusted, the one whose work was both painstaking and finished? I doubt it not. Here too was submission, for surely His daily task must have been a trial when life loomed before Him in terms that were unknown to any other mortal who lived in Palestine, or indeed in the whole world. But His service, as we think of it now, is not to be counted in blows of the mallet or in the handling of the saw. Rather it is summed up in this, "He went about doing good." This is the epitome of His days, His biography in miniature. His was a life of helpfulness, yet how unappreciated! Even His mother and Joseph could not understand Him when in those early days He said, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" Honest, faithful, unremitting, how many have followed in His pathway?

Unconsciously there have been thousands who have borne this cross. Think of Colonel Waring as he trains his "White-wings" to service, whether in the great metropolis or in Havana in its days of cleansing, teaching that the elimination of filth is an act of Christianity and of patriotism. So Livingstone has the vision of service; listen to his cry, "O God, help me to paint this dark continent white!" Kipling writes of the "White man's burden." Others propose and carry out a Big Brother movement. We find the Red Cross not only in the past of Cuba but in the awful, immanent present of Europe. Every decade sees service glorified in its own way. But what of your path and mine? It seems so inconspicuous, so comparatively worthless, and yet it may be in its own way very important.

Last of all, the cross of the Master was one of sympathy. We are told that Jesus died of a broken heart. This is the testimony of more than one physician. It was sympathy, suffering with and for others, that rent the heart of Jesus on the cross. This is the meaning of the atonement, the at-one-ment, the throbbing of the heart of God with the heart of a little child. This is the meaning of His compassion, not alone for the lost, but for the wayward and the unlovely and the self-centered and the blind of heart. It is the spirit which has been re-incarnated again and again in the lives of His disciples. Consider Florence Nightingale, "the Lady of the Lamp," as in the camps of the Crimea she shows forth the eloquence of action, the beauties of that Love which is the greatest thing in the world.

Is not the Saviour nearest of all to the man in the gutter, to the woman who is an outcast, to the heart filled with grief and lust and uncontrollable passion? Alas, that such a one is unconscious of this fact and so practically is farther away! The gulf has been self-made, but it is there and will be bridged over only as it is done by you or by me. In the presence of all such, you and I should hear a voice saying, "The whole have no need of a physician." Be forbearing, be forgiving, be transforming, "not weary in well doing."

In the glass factories, they say, there is certain work for which no instrument has yet been invented because it demands the touch of the human hand, and there is a work that can be done only by the touch of the cross, the cross of the Christ or the cross of the Christian. And the cross of the Christian is that of the good Samaritan or of the good shepherd. Again and again you and I hear its insistent call. To fail to respond to these calls as made is to come down from the cross. To become pessimistic and to say that we cannot reach these souls imprisoned in self is to refuse to see the cross. To be indifferent and not to care is to refuse to walk up the slope of Calvary.

Of old, Constantine saw the cross in the sky and thought that he read the heavenly command, "In hoc signo vinces"—"In this sign conquer." It represents the standard of Christian success; it always has been so, it always will be so. But the cross is also a testimony, a testimony to the power of suffering and of submission and of service and of sympathy. To stay upon the cross and not to come down is to conquer not only the self but the world.

Those who stood beneath the cross and could not or would not understand and who scoffed at Him—saying, "He saved others, Himself He cannot save"—were perhaps nearer the truth than they knew, because He could not find it in His heart to save Himself, when through losing self He might find others. He challenges thereby the attention of one of the centurions, a man of cruel war; for this was his testimony, "Truly this man was the Son of God!"

Thus was the cross glorified because He, the Master, stayed upon it. And for this reason, on Sunday mornings it is always "the cross at the peak." For upon our battleships, even the stars and stripes come down at the hour of religious service; and when they again ascend they are surmounted by the church flag, the white pennant with the blue cross, sign and symbol of worship. And all this because He did not come down from His cross.

"Must Jesus bear the cross alone, and all the world go free?" We sang it in our childhood; let us sing it again and let us answer, No.

But the cross is not a curse. "Via crucis, via lucis," said the ancients. Yes, and the cross is not only the way of light but of life and of leadership. When Bishop Brooks went to preach in Westminster Abbey and was asked from what text he should preach, he answered, "Text! I have but one, Jesus' words, 'I am come that they might have life and that they might have it more abundantly.'" Through the cross we rise to a beauty and spirituality that we should never have known if self had not first been crucified. There could have been no Easter if there had not first been Calvary, and for us, as for Christ, the suffering of the cross brings the Easter vision.

There is a little book which I frequently see on the stands in front of the second hand book stores. I never leave it there. I always purchase it, even if it is only to give to a comparative stranger. I do it in memory of my mother, for it contains a poem I once heard her read or recite at a village prayer-meeting in New Hampshire. It is entitled, as is the book, "The Changed Cross." It tells of one who complained of her cross, and who in a vision was led by the Master of all into a place where were many crosses from which she was bidden to select. Under this canopy of love, crosses of divers shapes and sizes were seen, among them a little one with jewels set in gold. This she took, only to find the weight too heavy for her strength. Another one with fair flowers entwined about its sculptured form proved to have thorns that made known its hidden sorrows. So one by one she proved and found them wrong, till she found that which best suited her shoulders, a cross of plainest form with words of love carved upon it, only to learn as she bore it away that it was her old cross again. The Master knows the cross He puts upon our shoulders and He gives us strength to bear it, and through it to be led through the grave of crucified self to new life "more abundantly."

The Heroism of Faith

BY REV. GEORGE S. PAYSON, D.D.

The heroism of the battlefield is fine, and we praise the heroic self-sacrifice of the soldier. But the heroism of the home, the nursery and the kitchen is finer, for it is not praised. Men take it as a matter of course. There is no enthusiasm of numbers to sustain it, as when a regiment or a brigade rushes upon the foe and all are shouting, "Hurrah boys! Over the top and at them!"

The mother, the nurse and the cook receive no notice in the public prints, but the patience and pluck of self-sacrifice are demanded in the kitchen and in the nursery, and are given there as well as on the battlefield. And for the reason that this silent heroism is unheralded and unsung, it is more commendable than much that receives the adulation of the world.

Still nobler is the heroism of faith. Abraham was a pioneer in faith, and met the taunts and sneers of unbelievers with the dauntlessness of a heroic pioneer. And many a hidden life is tested and tried and proved heroic by the constancy of a faith like that of Christ upon the cross, who in the face of everything that seemed to scoff at such a faith—the injustice and wrongs and perfidy which He bore in His person on the tree—still held fast to the conviction that God was His Father, loving, good and almighty. Did not His resurrection prove this constancy of faith the most heroic element of strength and of the life that is life indeed?

Often we see obscure lives that illustrate the perseverance of the saints and we are led anew to admire the wisdom of the promise, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee the crown of life." There is an aged woman, eighty-seven years old, who keeps lodgers to eke out the limited allowance which her denominational Board of Relief sends for her support. Last summer she lived each week on two loaves of bread and a little tea. Too feeble to sweep her five rooms while standing, she went down on her hands and knees and swept them. In order to make the beds she drew a chair near, spread the sheets and rested; then spread the other coverings and rested; and finally put the pillows in place. Yet recently she wrote these words of undaunted faith:

"So now, if hope and courage fail, and only fear is strong, My heart will sing, as in the past, the unforgotten song— 'God is my Refuge and my Strength,' I will not be afraid; And though the night be wild and dark, I'll meet it undismayed."

The heroism of a faith like this is the finest product of human discipline, and discipline is the development of a disciple.

The vital and victorious faith of Christ is emulated by all who love God and who strive to live and to serve as He lived and served. And though few may illustrate the power of Christian faith as admirably as this old lady, it tends to heroism of the highest type in every humble soul that cherishes it.

"Fag Ends for God"

BY EMMA YOUNGLOVE

"S. O. S." and "Fag Ends For God" were the subjects advertised for morning and evening service in the pulpit of a city church on a recent Sunday. Again and again they have recurred to my mind as I thought of the neglect of public worship by many Christian people. Many are giving the brightest and best Sabbath days to pleasure and physical refreshment and are attending church only occasionally if at all.

At a gathering of ministers the discussion centered in the question whether nature could exalt a man to true worship. "Whether mountains and forests can rouse the impulse of praise and adoration is not the practical question: the real question is 'Do they?'" said one minister. "Do the pleasure parties which spend the Sabbath day in the park feel that the groves were God's first temples? Do those who visit the beach glorify God by their worship there?"

"Too much automobile, I guess," was the response of one church member, when he was asked why he did not attend services. The answer was lightly made, but when the doors of the house of the Lord are shut, by his own act, to any human being, the condition is alarming. That soul might appropriately send out the S. O. S. call.

From an early time in their history, faithfulness to the house of God was recognized by the Jews as very closely allied to faithfulness to God himself. The Psalms give beautiful expression to this loyalty to the house of Jehovah.

Luke says, "He came to Nazareth, where he had been brought up: and, as his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day, and stood up for to read." The personal habit of Jesus is indicated here by a little phrase, apparently dropped almost by accident—"as his custom was." His habit included attending and participating in the service. Here, too, is a thought for us. Perfunctory church-going is not enough. The presence of the spirit as well as the body is requisite. As Phillips Brooks once expressed it, "When the procession of your powers goes up to worship in the temple, leave not the noblest of them all behind to cook the dinner and to keep the house. Give your intelligence to God."

Burdens

BY HELEN M. RICHARDSON.

*If life moved onward like a placid stream
With naught to vex or pain or to annoy;
If sun ne'er knew eclipse, or if the moon
Hid not its face behind some passing cloud;—
If day by day the quiet joys of life
Palled by their sameness, would our souls not miss*

*The thrill of viet'ry that has feared defeat?
The harvest never would be so complete
If furrowing plowshares had not first been laid Upon the virgin soil. Failure but spurs
To greater effort. It is this that brings
The weary laborer home at nightfall, spent,
Yet ready for the morrow's strife and toil.
There is no happiness in folded hands
To those who once have grappled against odds
And known a conqueror's joy. Thou fear not pain,
Since they who suffer only can attain
Life's full fruition. Lift the burden then
And walk erect among your brother men.*

PRINTED PREACHERS

Saturday Night at Camp Dix

It is Saturday night; the red sun that early dropped below the horizon has brought a cold winter day to its close. Night has closed down upon the camp. Scattered over a windy plain, some three miles by four, great, ugly, unpainted houses stand out in the twilight, and now, with the day's routine finished, thousands of the dwellers in these shacks, virile young men, are free to do as they please, within certain limitations. This is one of our Cantonments and these embryo soldiers are the boys from our homes. Many of them are thinking of other Saturday nights of only a few short weeks ago, and of other houses, so different from the bare Army barracks.

It is only six o'clock, but mess is over and already the men are coming in. Here is one who wants a money order: he is sending his pay to his mother. This one wants a library book, and that one a set of checkers; here comes a couple who want a quiet corner where they can play chess. By-and-by the whole place resounds with the noise of indoor hockey and the thud of the punching bag is heard in the land. Very soon the none too comfortable benches are filling up; groups are sitting round chatting, some are writing letters, here and there a lonely man is day-dreaming.

A TENT LIBRARY

Then one of the secretaries in charge mounts the platform and leads the crowd in singing the songs which have been distributed in sheet form. How they do sing, "The Yanks Are Coming," "Keep the Home Fires Burning" and "Uncle Sam He Needs the Infantry!"

Promptly on the hour, with a soldier at the piano and another running the machine, the movies begin. Tonight the first film is a comic one and for a time, at least, other things are forgotten, as peal after peal of laughter is interspersed with humorous, good natured comment. You'd think a pack of youngsters was sitting out there in the dark. But it's very quiet when the next reel begins to unwind. It's the battle front in Italy and they are seeing some of the scenes in which very soon they may be actors.

A WARM WELCOME AT THE CAMP DIX Y. M. C. A.

On this particular night the secretary has discovered among the workmen one who has seen over two years of service in Gallipoli and France. For half an hour he tells of trench warfare, and miraculous escapes in the midst of hellish battles, and again the men realize what is before them.

The show is now over, most of the men wander back to their barracks, perhaps taking along a library book to read in their bunks till taps sounds; a few linger, and as likely as not share in a box of home-made cookies some mother has sent to the camp that day. Soon all are gone and the secretaries, forming a broom brigade, sweep the floor so that the place is clean for Sunday morning.—William D. Murray, in Association Men.

Patriot Libraries Popular

The Rev. Robert Scott Inglis, D.D., writes from Camp Dodge, Des Moines, Iowa:

"I am in camp in the service of our Presbyterian War Commission. I note the presence of the Patriot Library in some of the Y. M. C. A. libraries. Of the set of twenty volumes in one of the buildings ten volumes were out, which was a larger proportion than of any other books."

That is the best possible recommendation of the books, a practical one. Every one of the story books in the library has a high purpose. One is a telling temperance story, two others are stories of missionary work, and the rest are an inspiration for good to every young fellow. Good clean fiction and books of travel and earnest, practical religious talks—they are just what the boys need, and that is what the American Tract Society is giving them.

Among the Slavs in Pennsylvania

Mr. John Martinco has for many years been distributing the evangelical publications of the American Tract Society among his fellow-countrymen of Slavic origin in the State of Pennsylvania. In a recent report he writes:

"During the last month my entire time was spent around the vicinity of Pittsburgh. I believe that missionary colporteur work is more needful and more helpful at the present time than ever before. It also presents certain difficult complications because we have in this region a mixture of different nationalities, and therefore a colporteur has to be very careful wherever he goes not to discuss the war but to turn the minds of the people to something else. However, it is not easy to do this, especially when you find a mother whose son is in the training camp or already in France. There are many mothers who bear the separation from their sons heroically, but not all, and such need help and comfort in their distress. But who can better carry a message of comfort than the missionary colporteur? Indeed, there is scarcely any one else who can render this service.

"In one home a lady told me how pleased she was with the little book she had secured from me on a previous visit. It was entitled, 'Without God in the World.' In another home I had a long conversation with two men, who finally took some of the Christian literature I carried."

ONE OF MANY CAMP LIBRARIES AT FORT THOMAS, KY.

LIGHT IN PLACE OF DARKNESS

By Pearl Howard Campbell

IT is interesting to note how many passages of our Lord's teaching refer to life. "I am come that they might have life more abundant," "I am the Resurrection and the life." And so we might go on. We believe in the Incarnation, in the Life made flesh that dwelt among us, in the life after death with Him.

Thus the Church which He founded has stood for life and light in sharp contrast to the religions of the past and the unreligion of the present which lives for to-day and has no hope for to-morrow. Neither Roman mythology nor Grecian philosophy held out any hope for those who mourned.

Death to the pagan was not the portal to a larger, more perfect life, but either the end of all things or else the beginning of an unspeakably dreary existence. The rock of death lies heavy upon the heathen world to-day. Evil spirits that pursue the freed soul, relentless gods that hold it in torment, or personality and will destroyed by absorption into the god-head itself, these are the states of future life to which the dying pagan looks forward.

How different is our sure and certain knowledge of "those halls of Zion, all jubilant with song," where wait the blessed dead. It is our Father's House, of which Jesus said, "I go to prepare a place for you." We know that the life which had its beginning here shall find its continuation there, if we are faithful. And we have good reason to believe that nothing which we hold dear in this world will be lost to us in the next.

There is a fragment of a poem by E. E. Holmes which beautifully expresses this trust.

"Thou, Abba, know'st how dear
My little child's poor playthings are to her.
Yet when she stands between my knees
To kiss good-night she does not sob in sorrow,
'Oh, father, do not break or injure them!'
She knows that I shall fondly lay them by
For happiness to-morrow.
So leaves them trustfully.
And shall not I?"

After the Resurrection the grave became a chamber of light. The rock of human misery no longer had the same power to crush and distort lives. If by some magician's wand we could see Rome at the height of its splendor a marvellously beautiful city would lie before us. Marble palaces gleam amid the green of orchards and smiling vineyards. There are temples adorned with perfect statues, there are baths the most luxurious the world has ever seen. There are courts of law, schools for the education of both boys and girls; there are even libraries, theatres and places of amusement.

Yet we shall look in vain for any single building devoted to the alleviation of misery. Homes for the insane and the feeble-minded, schools for the blind, hospitals, orphanages, there are none. Slavery, exposure of children, infanticide, inhuman treatment of prisoners, shameless laxity in regard to marriage and divorce—these are some of the things that flaunt themselves boldly in the streets of old Rome.

As the religion of Christ which is based upon love grew in power and influence, suffering, as a matter of course, grew less. There has been cruelty enough in the past ages known only to the God who alone knows all the "comfortless troubles of the poor," and cruelty still exists; but pain and suffering do not bring the hopeless misery the world witnessed before the coming of our Lord.

When the war in Europe began there were not wanting those who boldly stated that this stupendous catastrophe was the rock that would crush Christianity. "Darkness has conquered light," said the prophets of evil. "Might is greater than right." Yet has it proven so? Quite the contrary. Everywhere there are signs of an awakened spiritual life.

France, which was in danger of becoming a nation of agnostics, is once more being evangelized, while from Belgium, crushed and trampled under foot, comes this story. At the close of day when the German gunners were firing their sunset salute a little company of children, thin, half-famished little waifs from a cellar school, made their way homeward under the watchful eyes of a company of Belgian soldiers. Nearer still and nearer to the defenceless little ones fell the rain of death. Then the eldest, Marie, led her companions to a wayside shrine and began the Lord's Prayer.

"Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy Name. Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven," lisped the children. "Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive—"

Over this petition they faltered, those little Belgian girls who had shared the sufferings of their country and lost, some of them, all that they held dear, homes and loved ones, through the invasion of Germany, and lifted accusing eyes to their leader.

And then the tall soldier in the worn old uniform who lingered, listening, came out of the shadows. "And forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us," said Albert, the King.

John R. Mott said after one of his trips to Europe that he did not find a single selfish man or woman. "Holland has six millions of Dutch people, but two days after the fall of Antwerp they had taken in two million Belgian refugees. Little Holland is helping to bear the burden of a war with which she had nothing to do and saying nothing about it."

The Risen Christ is still the conqueror. Nothing can dim His glory, and that light must continue to shine until all the darkened places of earth and the hearts of men are made light.

In the Realm of Eternal Spring

BY KATHLEEN HAY.

Down where the little brook ripples over the rocks and the sunlight sparkles and shines along its banks, the grass once more has sprung, and after winter's bareness, a soft, green carpet has seemingly been spread across the world.

From tall swaying trees joyous bird-notes float out filling the air with melody, while here and there a flower lifts its face to a gentle breeze that wafts the sweet perfume abroad.

Spring, the beautiful season of resurrection, floods the world.

The awakening call has stirred within the hearts of all beings as well as in the inanimate things. The blooming flowers and mantle of green, the tiny-winged creatures with song after song swelling their throats and bursting forth into notes of gladness, proclaim that it is so. And as the fresh green, the perfume of flowers and the gay melodies whisper to us of the springtime, just so the season speaks of the resurrection that shall some day dawn for us all.

Only sleeping, as when the flowers seemingly bid good-night to the world and fade away until the time of blooming again . . . only sleeping then are we, as with tired eyes we bid farewell to scenes below.

Awaiting what? A resurrection so glorious, an awakening so divine, that the whole world, filled with its garlands of flowers and loveliest song and flooded with golden sunlight, must sink into oblivion as we stand awed on the threshold of that great resurrection.

And then, for those prepared to pass up higher, shall come into view the great white throne, and angels clothed in pure white shall sing forever there.

Yes, the golden city, not made by hands, awaits the soul-awakening, and there a perpetual springtime that shall neither sleep nor slumber, where flowers cannot fade nor glorious song grow still.

And the heavenly gate stands open, and angels clothed in white beckon from over there.

Shall we turn our faces upward and follow in the footpath that will lead us safe beyond earth's transient season, and into that realm of eternal spring?

Somewhere the flowers bloom
Never to fade again,
Somewhere sweet voices blend
Quite free from earthly pain.

Somewhere 'tis always spring.
There, where the sun shines bright,
Some day our souls shall wake,
In God's eternal light.

Out of the Shadow

BY GRACE E. CRAIG

*The waning light fell softly through the tinted panes,
And the Good Friday hush lay heavily
Upon the congregation watching through the hours
When the Lord Christ hung on the cruel tree.*

*The preacher, wise and strong to comfort troubled souls,
Looking upon the throng of waiting folk,
Saw there before him in the faces lifted up
An urgent plea for cheer, and gently spoke.*

*"Christ died that day," he said, "upon the shameful cross,
And, to those watching near, it seemed the end,
The end of all His claims, of all the loving hopes
Which they had cherished for their tender Friend.*

*"But in the ages since that hour by darkness swept
The opened eyes of men have come to see
That the dear Christ drew nearest to His human kin
There in His bitter time of agony.*

*"The world might doubt a God Who knew not grief nor pain,
A God enthroned behind the sky's bright veil,
But to a Christ Who died on lonely Calvary
It turns, assured of love that will not fail.*

*"So, though the travail of these darkened, war-torn years
Must cause our souls to shrink and hearts to bleed,
And, though we may be called to sacrifice supreme,
Be sure there is a help for all our need,*

*"And, when the path is roughest, we shall always find,
Outstretched to aid, the sympathetic hands
Of the sweet Christ, Who walked in tears earth's saddest ways
And all of earthly sorrow understands."*

*He ceased, and through the holy dimness of the church
Sounded the music of the organ's voice,
And, blent with it, a whisper, "On the cross I bore Man's grief; with Me he shall at last rejoice."*

HIS VINEYARD AND OURS

Africa's Need

Africa has not been neglected so long by the rest of the world because it is insignificant, for it is the largest of all the continents of the world. Even in this day of a new world knowledge and a new world consciousness, however, few persons get any conception of its size. The United States, Europe, China, and India could be placed on the surface of Africa and there would be room to spare. It contains approximately 140,000,000 people talking 500 languages and 300 dialects. It is surrounded by oceans; and its different districts are isolated by deserts and swamps. It is cursed by plagues of disease-bearing insects and exploited by the rest of the world until it has become known largely as a land of the shadow of death. Only within the memory of this generation has it come definitely into the thinking of the world as a large factor in world politics and world evangelization. . . .

There have been political changes in the continent due to the war, and in some mission areas these changes will call for radical readjustment. The Moslem advance continues southward unabated and is a serious menace to the pagan tribes among whom it is finding a place. After the war, there is bound to be a new era of thought with reference to most things, and with reference to missions along with other things. The Church should be in the forefront of that new era of thinking. In the course of the spread of missionary activity in Africa, there has not been a definite plan of evangelization for the continent as a whole and due attention to the distribution of Christian forces. This important subject cannot have attention at too early a date in the interest of the most advantageous occupation of the continent.—Men and Missions.

A Japanese Christian Giver

Baron Morimura is a man of wealth and a sincere Christian. It was he who, during the great Japanese Evangelistic Campaign which closed last year, financed the newspaper evangelism which brought Christian teaching daily to about six million readers. In 1917 Baron Morimura gave one hundred thousand dollars to establish a chair of Christianity in the Imperial University at Tokyo. This university has been known as a centre of materialism and agnosticism.

No Toys in Korea

The simple matter of toys for the children, alone, would make the life of the Korean children happier and richer. Do you know that there are in Korea no children's toys to speak of? Take the toys out of your own children's life and imagine the bareness and emptiness. No wonder the children come to know sin in some of its worst forms, for they have nothing else to do and the Devil finds work for these young hands as well as for older ones that are not kept occupied.—The Korea Mission Field.

A Yale Hospital

A new hospital, to be used as a teaching hospital in connection with the Hunan-Yale College of Medicine at Changsha, China, has been given at the cost of $170,000 by a Yale graduate. It is of brick, with re-enforced concrete floors, is steam heated and electric lighted, and is to accommodate 120 patients.

A "Self-Going Buggy"

While in America Mr. C. L. Phillips, missionary in Korea, received as a gift a Ford automobile. It is a great help and a pleasure to himself and others. He says:

"We have given many rides to Koreans who have never been in a car before. You can always tell that kind by the way he climbs into the machine. He will invariably take off his shoes and leave them outside on the running board before he enters. One man whom we took for a ride the other day did this without our noticing, and when he got ready to alight his shoes were gone! One dear old grandma, eighty-nine years old, was most appreciative. When we put our aged friend down at the door of her thatched cottage she turned around to us and said, 'I am not going to thank you. This isn't your automobile anyway. I'll give thanks when I say my prayers to-night.'"

Mrs. Yamamuro of Japan

The wife of Colonel Yamamuro, the story: A woman came home with a little book which she gave to her ten-year-old boy. He asked where she got it, and she replied that she had bought it of a stranger on the train for one sen (a half a cent). The boy was fascinated with the book and read it again and again. The book was the Gospel of Mark. When fifteen, the boy went to the Middle School and there told how his interest in Christianity had been aroused by reading the little book. He was given a copy of the New Testament which he read from cover to cover, but always loving his "little book" best, and expressing a desire to be like the early Christians whose story was told in Acts. At seventeen he heard his first sermon at a mis-most dignified of its bishoprics to be filled by one of the Japanese race, Bishop Boutflower intends to stay on, if he be wanted as suffragan to that bishop, with charge of work among Europeans in that diocese.

Here is a Christian humility such as must challenge the admiration of the world. Voluntarily to give up his diocese, and then humbly to serve as assistant to a newly consecrated bishop much his junior and of another race, is one of the noblest things recorded in modern missionary annals.

Houseboats as Seminaries

The Los Angeles Bible Institute, called "A Modern School of Prophets" by religious newspapers, has lately established itself in the province of Honan, China. Its work is done by means of houseboats in which the students travel and pursue their studies, propagating the gospel in houseboats and towns. It is proposed to increase the fleet to twelve boats and to erect also an institute building, for which ground has already been purchased, where after two years' study and service on the boats, the graduates may receive another year of preparation, together with such students from other missions as may wish to take the regular institute course of intense Bible study.

The Y. M. C. A. in Egypt

There are now sixty-five Y. M. C. A. centers in Egypt, more than twenty of them being along the Suez Canal, from the Mediterranean to the Red Sea, while others are located far out in the desert. Supplies for the Canteen Departments for these centers have to be moved often by camel caravan. The size of the Canteen Departments can be realized from the fact that the sales for a penny or five cents average $100,000 a month. Eighty secretaries are in charge of these Egyptian centers.

What About the Girls?

In the current number of Asia, Professor Nitobe, of the Imperial University in Tokyo, is quoted as having said, "The education of boys would probably have been taken care of by the government, but the girls would have fared badly without the example and inspiration of the missions."

Who Will Go?

The great cry of heaven and earth is this: "Who will go?" That is the cry that has been heard through all the centuries. God and the angels wait for a man to answer. It is God's way to work through men. It is man's way to work through methods. God does not wait on methods. He waits on men. It is man's way to work through machinery. It is God's way to work through individuals. God does not trust to policies and to politics but to persons; and through all the days and through all the nights, if we have ears to hear, we will discover this same cry which awoke this young man of the upper classes (Isaiah) and bade him respond to that call.

Isaiah stood on the threshold of his life-work with youth and talent and high purpose in his possession; and, hearing all and seeing all, he stood upon his feet and cried, "Here am I; send me." And God sent him. God sent that young man, single-handed and alone, out into the nation until his voice was heard in the lanes and streets of his native land, and men and women looked up from their selfish pleasure, saw him and heard his message, and followed along the path of service and duty and worship. It is wonderful what God can do through one young man; and I am praying as I preach that some one of you will make this same response to the call which is as personal for you as for Isaiah, and say, "Here am I; send me!"—Hugh L. Kerr, D. D.

POUNDING CORN IN MORTARS, UMTALI, RHODESIA, AFRICA. - leader of the Salvation Army in Japan, died recently. She was a college woman of rare ability and sweetness, mother of a large family and co-director with her husband of the activities of the army. Twenty members of parliament, forty college professors, leading business men and members of the nobility attended her funeral. Her dying words were: "True happiness is beside the Cross of Jesus." Her diary, which was read after her decease, recorded her determination not to make herself a new garment till she was fifty years old, so that she could give her utmost to the William Booth Memorial Tuberculosis Sanatorium which was opened recently near Tokyo.

How He Will Thank Him

The Rev. K. E. Aurel, of the American Bible Society in Japan, tells the following mission. His heart was so prepared by familiarity with the Scriptures that he quickly understood Christian truth and became an earnest Christian worker. He says: "The first thing I will do when I get to heaven and see the Lord Jesus, will be to ask Him who that foreigner is who sold my mother the Gospel, so that I may meet him to express my gratitude for that precious Book."—Christian Link.

A Beautiful Humility

A remarkable story comes from the Church in Japan. In order to make way for the election of a Japanese bishop, the English Bishop Cecil Boutflower, Bishop of South Tokyo, has resigned his see. But he is not expecting to retire from work in Japan. Leaving one of the

Notes upon the Topics Used
in Christian Endeavor
and Other Young People's Societies.

THE PRAYER MEETING

By
Rev. Henry Lewis
Ph.D.

APRIL 7.

Bible Reading Consecration Meeting Psalm 119:9-16.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Apr. 1. Bible-study. Acts 17:10-15.
T. Apr. 2. Memory work. Josh. 1:6-9.
W. Apr. 3. Meditation. Ps. 1:1-6.
T. Apr. 4. Aim of the Bible. 1 Cor. 10:1-11.
F. Apr. 5. The Word in the heart. Deut. 11:18-25.
S. Apr. 6. Obedience. Jas. 1:21-27.

These words are addressed to young men. There is a meaning in this. For habits are formed in the early years. And Bible reading is a habit.

Purpose

A young man has a right to ask for a reason when called upon to do a thing. And this is given in the ninth verse: "Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way?" He is asked to read the Bible because of its effect on his character. Matthew Arnold often said that "conduct is three-fourths of life, and the Bible is the great book of conduct." The thing demanded is important. For that which makes a man stronger, in actual living is very much worth while.

Claim

Why is this so? Certainly not because the Bible contains moral maxims of life. Other books contain these. The Psalmist's answer is, God. "With my whole heart have I sought thee." This is a wonderful statement. A young man does not get hold of it at once. But if the statement be true, the whole question of conduct is lifted to a higher level. Conduct no longer becomes a question of rules but of life. The man who lives right has the right life. And the right life is God as revealed in the Bible.

Method

Again a question: How find God in the Scripture? Two answers are given. One is suggested by the words, "Teach me thy statutes." That is, know the book. Use common sense and read the Bible as you would read any other book. Pay no attention to theories. Read it as you would read a newspaper or magazine. Read it to know what it contains. This is what Moody did for years. The result was, Gladstone said he was the greatest master of English since Bunyan. All that is meant is, use your head.

The Psalmist, however, says something about the heart: "Thy word have I laid up in my heart." Certainly, for one must be a poet as well as scientist to get much out of life. There must be the fact, plus. And the plus is conditioned upon the heart. A huge boulder is a fact. But touched by light at the sunset hour it is something more. The Bible is a book of facts. Illuminated by the Spirit shining through the heart, these facts take on a new meaning.

Results

Give a young man the Bible in this sense and what will follow?

First, he will become a very real man. He will say, "I have rejoiced in the way of thy testimonies, as much as in all riches." He has something inside of him that cannot be taken away.

Second, he will be a growing man. Life without will react upon his personal life as he discovers opportunities for applying the truths of the Bible. Because God comes to one through the Bible, the Bible finds a man. And it finds him by giving him a chance to test the truth in the life he actually lives.

APRIL 14.

How to Enjoy Sunday Isaiah 58:5-14.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Apr. 8. Enjoy Sunday by church-going. Luke 4:14-30.
T. Apr. 9. By Bible reading. Ps. 119:41-48.
W. Apr. 10. By resting. Exod. 20:8-11.
T. Apr. 11. By service. Mat. 12:9-21.
F. Apr. 12. By worship. Rev. 1:9-20.
S. Apr. 13. By Christian fellowship. 1 John 1:1-10.

There are two things about the topic for to-day that should be noticed. One is the wording. It is not, "How to observe Sunday," but, "How to enjoy Sunday." The other is the Scripture from the Old Testament. Usually the words of Christ are quoted, the inference being that in the New Testament alone is found the correct teaching regarding the day. This is a mistake. Read these words of the prophet, and you will find in them the truth about the day. They are a commentary on the words of Christ, "The Sabbath was made for man." There is joy and strength in them.

Question

How? Let us admit the question of Sunday is up for discussion. It has always been a mooted question. It was such in the days of the prophet, also in the days of Christ. Certainly it is before the Church to-day. It is a question that will not stay down. A change has come in America, more of a change than most of us welcome. And perhaps a greater change is just ahead. Here is a question to discuss: Suppose in the prosecution of the war several million of young men cross to Europe. What influence will the "Continental Sunday" have upon them? This is a very serious question. And this is the time to think about the answer.

Affirmation

A question may be an affirmation. And such is this question. For the question is, "How enjoy Sunday?" It is assumed that the proper use of Sunday means enjoyment. And this is as it should be. For unless Sunday is for us all a rich, full day, it is not what God intends it shall be. And the Christian must see to it that the day means more for him than for the man of the world.

That it does admits of no doubt. The difficulty, however, is to make the man of the world see that it does. The solution of the Sunday question is in competition. It resolves itself into "delivering the goods." The Christian who knows his Bible and is trying to live according to its precepts knows that he has the man of the world, as regards enjoyment, "beaten a mile" when it comes to Sunday.

Failures

But all Christians are not living up to their privileges. For some the day is a sort of "fifty-fifty." It is neither a day of the world nor the Lord's day. Such Christians are living a divided life: that is, doing certain things to satisfy conscience and other things to satisfy self. And nothing is so dreary as the attempt to live with one foot in the world and the other foot in religion.

Training

Those of us who are parents have a responsibility. Our boys and girls must be made to feel that Sunday is a joyous day. More is needed than the demand that they do certain things and refrain from doing other things. There must be a blend of church with its services and the home with the life. Our children as they grow to mature years must not look back and excuse themselves on the ground of having had too much of religion when they were young.

Planning

The day must be mapped out. The routine of the week is laid aside. Because of this, the need of planning for the day is more necessary. Find time for rest, worship, and service. This is done by many fifty-two times a year. And they enjoy Sunday.

APRIL 21.

How and What to Read

Philippians 4:8; 1 Timothy 4:13.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Apr. 15. Read the Bible. Deut. 17:14-20.
T. Apr. 16. Read thoughtfully. Ps. 119:17-24.
W. Apr. 17. Read for guidance. Matt. 7:24-29.
T. Apr. 18. Read history. Rom. 15:4.
F. Apr. 19. Read biography. Ruth. 1:1-18.
S. Apr. 20. Read to become wise. Prov. 2:1-11.

What a subject! Who can do anything with it in these days? Newspapers, magazines, and pamphlets must be read. For history is being made. Yet there must be a place for books.

Attitude

When the Moslem hosts were sweeping over Africa they came to Alexandria where was the great library. Should it with its countless treasures be destroyed? The decision rested with Omar. His answer was: "These books either contain what is in the Koran or something else; in either case they are superfluous." So the library was destroyed. You must feel the need of books or they will have no value for you.

To-day

Books of a certain kind, that is, historical books, will have a special value to-day. Take an illustration. Suppose at some time you became interested in the Napoleonic era and read two or three good books on that subject. What is happening now, as the map of the world is being re-made, will have a clearer meaning for you. The comparison of then and now will suggest itself at every turn.

Leaders

Changes are taking place in the policy of government. Some are perplexed because of the shift in position of such great leaders as Woodrow Wilson and Lloyd George. But read two or three great biographies, for example, Morley's "Life of Gladstone," or Nicolay and Hay's "Life of Lincoln," and you come upon the fact that great leaders, because they are great, are compelled to change their positions in a crisis. Lincoln changed his position on slavery four times in five years.

Personal

The effect of good books upon conduct can be easily traced in the lives of men. One of the great agencies at work in the world to-day is the Red Cross Society. The founder of this Society was Henri Dunant, who lived in Geneva, Switzerland. The facts of his life are known by few. Yet among these facts is one of profound significance. The inspiration to begin the work came from reading the "Life of John Williams," a missionary in the South Sea Islands.

Ideas and Ideals

There is a distinction. A man of ideas does not always amount to much. But the man with ideals will count. And good books help form the ideals of life. Moncure D. Conway was telling J. S. Mill of a day in Virginia when walking along a road he came upon a sentence in Emerson that changed his view of life. Mill interrupted him and said: "Return at once to Virginia and place a monument where that thought came to you." And he was right. The thinker who gives to his fellow man a truth is a benefactor of the race. Such thinkers are within the reach of us all.

System

But to get anywhere you must have system in your reading. A given time should be set apart; a careful selection of books should be made. Confer with your pastor about them. Do not take many, for the best books need to be digested, and this requires time. Buy a book now and then. Gradually form a little library of friends on the shelf. Thumb them and mark them. And before long you will be a well-read person. Try it.

Lack of time cannot be accepted as an excuse for neglecting really important things. Every one has time to eat and sleep. Every one must take time for reading the best books, for forming helpful friendships, for doing kindnesses, for that quiet look inward which is back of all real growth. Weed out the superfluous. Omit the non-essentials. Make your life simple as you will. But take time for the things which count, which alone make life worth living.

APRIL 28

The Power of the Cross in City Slums

Luke 14:15-23.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

- M. Apr. 22. Slums of Sodom. Gen. 18:20-33.
T. Apr. 23. Light for the slum. Prov. 6:20-23.
W. Apr. 24. Jonah in the slums. Jonah 3:1-10.
T. Apr. 25. The cleansing stream. Ezek. 47:1-12.
F. Apr. 26. The Roman ghetto. Acts 28:16-24.
S. Apr. 27. The transforming message. 1 Cor. 2:1-5.

The subject for to-day is unfolded by the use of a story. This was a favorite method with Christ. He was a master in the use of the short story. When He tells one there can never be any doubt as to its meaning. And so this story has only to be read. Interpretation is not necessary.

Reason for Telling

He was a guest at a banquet. There was something in the attitude of the host and others present that did not appeal to Him. It was evidently a "social function"—a give and receive affair. They did not appreciate the significance of His presence. Those about the table were well groomed, well fed, and well satisfied with themselves. There was no thought of doing for others, and for others less fortunate than themselves.

Something Lacking

And this suggested the lack of something deeper in their lives. Men who are satisfied with themselves of course have no sense of personal need. And those fortunate in the possession of worldly goods too often lack this deeper sense of need. Christian workers know about this. The tough propositions are found mainly among the well-to-do. Christ secures better results with the woman of Samaria than with Nicodemus. There was a pretty thick crust on the lawyer that had to be broken. It is this thought that Jesus has in mind in the story when he mentions the excuses offered.

Something for All

Because the well-to-do have no sense of need, those less well off are to be invited. But the supper they are invited to is the same supper that had been prepared for the respectable people. This is important in the teaching of Christ. There is not a gospel for one class and another gospel for another class, but a "great supper" for all. Do not go to the slums with a sandwich, a dish of soup and a night's lodging. These things may be offered, but unless there are in addition "great suppers" the going there will not be worth while.

Preparation

So, before starting for the slums to reach the poor, be sure you have something that the poor really need. The need there as elsewhere in life is enormous. Baffled and battered as they are by life, they are all children of God. Being such, they need God. Nothing less than a great supper can satisfy them. But can you furnish this? Where have you spread this banquet? Is the church of which you are a member the place to come for such a feast? The true church of God always is. It may be located in a well-to-do residence section or in a crowded tenement section. But its great supper is the cross of Christ made of human lives inspired by the love of Christ.

Surprise

If the Church has spread such a feast, surely those who are hungry will come. Yes, if they are hungry. But the poor are not always hungry. When the art gallery with its masterpieces is opened do people flock to see the pictures? When the library with its shelves lined with books is placed at the disposal of the public is the capacity of the library taxed? Ask civic workers in these departments. No, there must be ingenuity, persistence, to secure any results. So with taking the cross to the slums. Be prepared for work and plenty of it. Here the long haul is called for, with victory often farther on.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS

The Wake-Up Time.

BY M. T.

*Mother hen had a worried look;
She clucked from morn 'til night.
"What's the matter?" said Willow Bud;
"You seem to fuss a sight."*

*"It's getting near a certain day!
I hope they'll all hatch out."
"Don't you worry," said Willow Bud;
"They will, without a doubt."*

*"And I'll be there in a pearl-gray gown,
Lily will join us, too;
She'll wear the prettiest one of all,
'Twill be all white and new."*

*"Little green worm lies fast asleep;
I hope he knows the date,
He'll make a lovely butterfly,
If only he's not late!"*

*They all were there at wake-up time,
Bonny and bright and gay;
It made the world a lovely spot,
For it was Easter day.*

An Easter Plan.

BY MARION LOUISE TENNEY.

Toby's brother was in France with the army, while Toby, without being consulted, had been left behind. It was decidedly humiliating to be debarred simply because you were too small.

If Major Gordon had only taken him into his confidence, Toby would have proved to him that he was perfectly fit, and that he could have brought good luck to the army. Now he would be considered a slacker! He gave a yelp at the thought, which brought Marjory down the garden path on a run.

"Poor puppy, you wish you could have gone with father, too, don't you? How we miss him! And to-morrow will be Easter. How shall we get through the day without him?"

Marjory's head bent lower and lower, while two big tears trickled down her cheeks. As if perfectly understanding the situation, a cold nose was thrust into her hand.

Suddenly father's last words came to her: "Remember, Marjory, you are a soldier's daughter. Be brave and smiling and helpful for mother's sake, and that will help me to do my best 'over there.'"

Crying wasn't being brave, nor would it help any, so hastily brushing the tears away she sat in deep thought for a long time. At last her face became wreathed in smiles, and reaching over she gathered Toby into her arms with an ecstatic little hug.

"Oh, Toby, I have a perfectly beautiful plan for Easter! And you're a part of it. But I must talk it over with mother first, so you take a nap." And off she flew to the house.

"Mothers are such comfortable folks to talk to. They seem to understand children so well. Mine does anyway," said Marjory in a deep tone of conviction, after laying her plan before her mother. "Now I'll have a lovely Easter, I'm sure. And father will be so happy when he hears about it."

"The plan" did not unfold Easter morning, for mother and Marjory went to church first and saw the beautiful flowers and heard the Easter music and sermon. A lump came into Marjory's throat just once. That was when the congregation were singing, "Christ the Lord Is Risen To-day." It was father's favorite hymn. But again those stirring words came into her mind, "Remember, Marjory, you are a soldier's daughter."

Marjory could hardly finish her dinner; something inside of her kept thumping and thumping. She wanted to dance all around the table for joy.

"Couldn't I go now, mother," she said at last. "I have a great deal to do, you know. I wish you could go, too, mother! If only Harold wasn't a baby, you could, couldn't you?"

"Suppose I gather the jonquils," said mother, "and then I'll have a share in your Easter plan."

Marjory's face brightened, but as quickly fell again. "Oh, mother! I never thought how bare the windows will look without the flowers growing in them."

"But we raised them for to-day," said mother consolingly. "And think how much pleasure they will give."

It was a very happy little girl who hurried down the street in the afternoon, with Toby in one arm and the flowers him. The doctor says it's a bad break, and that he won't be able to go to school for a month.

"Well, it was time then to go to Susie Dean's. My, wasn't she glad to see us! She hugged and hugged me, and even squeezed Toby a little, but he growled, and showed he didn't like it. It must be awful to lie on your back all the time like Susie has to. I felt so sorry for her that I gave her a big bunch of jonquils. And you ought to have seen her eyes!"

"It was growing dark then, so Toby and I hurried off. But, mother, I just had to run across the fields and leave a few flowers for Uncle Dan. His wife said he was asleep then, but I couldn't stop anyway, for Toby was growing heavier every minute."

Ruth's Mistake

BY GEORGIA L. NYMAN.

"Mamma, mamma, come quick!"

The tired mother, leaving her work of trying to make the strange new rooms look like home, came to the window, and looked out across the street. "Why, dearie," she exclaimed, "what is there to see? I see only a very dusty street, a beautiful house and garden, to be sure, but—"

"Oh, there she is now! She was on her knees, hidden behind that lovely rosebush, mamma. See! She's the little girl you wanted me to know. You thought she looked so nice, but look, she's stealing those pink roses as fast as she can pull them off the bush! She—"

"Stop, Ruth," said Mrs. Lindsay. "Doesn't she live there?"

"No, mamma," persisted Ruth, "she lives on our side of the street in a homely old house, so what is she doing in that lady's lovely garden?"

Mrs. Lindsay always liked to hear good of others. She spoke kindly of people, or else not at all.

Her eyes looked troubled as she answered, firmly: "Well, my little girl, we have been here only one day, so we know little about our neighbors, but—"

"O mamma, look!" interrupted Ruth, forgetting to be polite in her excitement. "O look! That lady is going to send those beauties over here."

A tall, motherly lady was smiling on the pretty child and whispering some message in her ear. Instantly the little girl, with delight in her errand, ran across the street.

Large pink roses overflowed her dimpled hands and even crowded up to her rosy cheeks. On she came to their very door.

When Mrs. Lindsay opened the front door, the fragrance of the roses greeted mother and child, seeming all the sweeter as the happy little girl exclaimed: "Mrs. Ayer, mamma's best friend, sent these roses over to you. And she let me pick them, too! She is coming over to see you just as soon as you get settled. So is mamma." And the child had handed over the lovely gift of neighborly welcome, with a smile that was a gift in itself.

Mrs. Lindsay drew the dear little messenger into her arms, thanking her for her kindness with a loving kiss, while Ruth stood silent, wishing to speak, but feeling so ashamed of her unkind thoughts of a few moments before that the kind words seemed to be glued to her tongue.

But after the lovely little neighbor had gone, Ruth went to her mother's arms and whispered, "I am so sorry I said she stole the flowers, mamma, but it did look queer, didn't it?"

The mother held her little girl close, as she answered: "Yes. It certainly did look queer to see anyone in another's garden, pulling rare roses, but you see, dearie, we did not know her side of the story. And, darling, always remember this event, and never forget the fact that many a homely old house has held men and women that this world has been only too proud to honor."

Thou Art Not Dead

In every trembling bud and bloom
That cleaves the earth, a flowery sword,

I see Thee come from out the tomb,
Thou Risen Lord.

In every April wind that sings
Down lanes that make the heart rejoice;

Yea, in the word the wood-thrush brings,
I hear Thy voice.

Thou art not dead! Thou art the whole
Of life that quickens in the sod;

Green April is Thy very soul.
Thou great Lord God!

—Charles Hanson Towne.

THE EASTER PICTURE THAT WENT TO FATHER.

in the other. And it was a very happy but tired little girl who retraced her steps some hours later.

"Mother, it worked beautifully!" she cried excitedly. "I made five calls, and they all said they were glad I came. Mrs. Stubbs said it was the happiest Easter she ever spent. And she cried over the flowers. I think it must be pretty hard to be lame and never go out."

"I left Toby with Donald Keene while I took some flowers to Mrs. Brown. She wasn't a bit cross like the boys say she is. She asked me in real polite, and talked to me about father. And she said it was real kind of me to remember an old woman like her."

"When I got back to Donald he said he hadn't felt the pain in his leg nearly as much since he'd had Toby to amuse him. By this time Marjory's breath was nearly expended, but she managed to add, "Oh, mother, it's been a wonderful afternoon! Won't father be glad when he hears?" Then she added, "Mother, your eyes are all shiny. You look as if you had a surprise. Is it for me?"

Mrs. Gordon drew Marjory to her and said, "How would you like me to take a picture to-morrow morning of you and Toby and the jonquils and send it to father?"

"It would be just the thing, mother," said Marjory. "But we gave the flowers all away. What shall we do?"

"Suppose," said mother cheerfully, "you hold a plant in your arm instead. Father will like it just as well."

"Oh, mother," said Marjory, "yours is the loveliest Easter plan of all!"

Our Fireside

"As for Me and My House—"

By Lloyd Logan

HE joys that were so needed by the heart
And all the tender dreams you saw depart—
Nothing is lost forever that the soul
Cried out for; all is waiting at the goal."

The first floor of the Golf Clubhouse was a vision of artistic woodland beauty, created for that purpose, and complete and exquisite to the least detail. Gazing through any of the windows or open doors, it seemed as if it was but the continuation of the far-distant country—in its excellence—brought to you.

"This is wonderful. The long strands of gray moss are used to such advantage." Mrs. Milikan sighed her complete satisfaction.

"Well, it does certainly harmonize perfectly with golden rod and quantities of yellow daisies," Mrs. Scott admitted.

"Those magnificent yellow asters and dahlias on the table give just the required touch of elegance. Marion Desmond is an artist, a diplomat, and a leader."

"Bother!" replied Mrs. Scott with a slight shade of annoyance. "Who is Marion Desmond? A few years ago no one had ever heard of her."

"Just the same, she is very efficient. Notice her guests," with a slight comprehensive gesture of her lorgnette toward the hundred or so ladies. "They are carefully chosen, calculatingly if you insist, but not one mistake."

"Nevertheless I do not care for her in the least. I came because my husband did not wish me to refuse. Mr. Desmond is retained as counsel in that big case, you know." Mrs. Scott spoke apologetically.

"Even so, Mr. Desmond was important enough to bring you. For my part I like to see young people succeed. For who are coming on to take our places? Marion Desmond has slowly won every step of the ground. She has a right to occupy her possessions. She has a delightful voice well cultivated." Just admiration permeated every word.

Marion came over to them in a most charming manner and graciously invited them to the links, where the party was to be concluded. She was quite a beautiful woman something under thirty.

The ladies passed out, breaking up in various little groups. The soft light of the closing day was but an added attraction. The green velvet sod beyond the woodland, again the paved road could be seen here and there; the architecture of the clubhouse was displayed with striking excellence by its very isolation; the many cars parked in readiness, for the Golf Club was far from the disturbance of street cars—all of this was a beautiful picture of the peace, prosperity and pleasure that this fair land of ours affords.

Not six months had passed. War had been declared, the selective draft system established. Marion Desmond and her husband were on the broad veranda of their comfortable bungalow, built with every convenience and a great deference to style.

It was on the bayshore. The moon rose, leaving its illusive pathway clear and distinct. Little boats and large vessels, here and there, far and near, could be discerned.

"Phil, do you remember when we bought this lot?"

"Exactly, as if it were yesterday. It was a vital part of me. 'Now,' I thought, 'I've made a start. I have Marion and the lot.'"

"And the house, Phil?" Marion's voice trembled.

"Yes, dear, and every stick of furniture; just which piece was bought first, and why."

Philip Desmond pushed back his chair, rose and slowly walked back and forth on the veranda.

"Oh, Phil, don't you care?"

"Care!" he reiterated, stopping in front of her. Then abruptly he turned his back and gazed far out on the water; the water so serene, beautiful, not a hint of what lies beyond.

Marion came and slipped her arm through his.

"Phil," she choked, "you promised me, promised, you would never ask anything hard of me again, never, if I would be married by your minister and not the priest. You know my family almost disown me. It has been very hard. I have never talked about it, because I did not care, Phil. Oh!" she cried, burying her face on his shoulder, "why, oh, why do you have to go?"

"Because it is right," Philip answered quietly, tenderly.

"Why don't you wait until you are drafted?"

"It is just this way, Marion, just like the Sunday golf. I am compelled to take the initiative as I understand it. 'As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord.' It leaves me no alternative. You remember at first it seemed as if we could scarcely weather the storm of good-natured banter and derision when I said that we would not play on Sunday. We did stick it out though, and found our place. I'll admit that you are a wonderful diplomat, to do it and keep from appearing as if we thought ourselves more righteous than they." Philip almost smiled as if the memory was a keen satisfaction, a victory as it were.

"I know," Marion rejoined with little interest. She remembered, but it all seemed so long ago, as if it had happened in another age, to some one else. That was past. The past had been obliterated by the tremendous present.

"But why must you enlist for the officers' reserve camp? Why don't you wait for the draft?"

"All of my life, Marion, I've worked up to this point. We've just finished paying for the home. We can afford our mode of life. Just now I had reached the place where I could begin to lay by money. If I win a commission I could still take care of you. If not, you could not possibly live on a private's pay. I have no just grounds for exemption.

Even if I had, unless they were very strenuous, I would answer the call of my country."

Marion was very quiet. She felt deeply, thought rapidly, lived years in those few tense minutes. Her active mind and sensitive heart gave her a clear vision of the part demanded of her.

Marion Desmond stepped back and put her hands on either of her husband's shoulders, raising a brave smiling face to his.

"So will I," she said. She had made herself equal to the emergency and had risen to the call. "But we won't talk about it any more to-night," she added tremulously.

"No," Phil replied lightly.

So they took a swift little walk to the bay and back. They persistently talked of other things.

A week later found them in the living-room, with piles of papers of legal aspect on the table before them.

"You see, Marion, the car is sold for a good price, sheer luck! That means just so much ready money in the bank."

"Well, I'll use it as sparingly as possible. I have dismissed the servant."

"I know, dear," Phil leaned over to the other side and picked up something from the floor. "I've completed all the business of the office that I could," he resumed in a minute, "and arranged for the rest to be finished by others. My stenographer will remain a week after I leave. I want you to see her every day. You may have my typewriter or sell it as you wish."

Marion went over each paper again, that she might be assured that she was familiar with every detail.

"I believe I'd sell the house. Yes, I believe I would, if I were you," he continued thoughtfully.

"Phil, don't you think that I would better just rent it? Perhaps after a while, Phil, why, we would want it again," Marion hesitated.

"It's a long chance, dear. You see in the winter you might get a big price from a tourist, in normal times, but it's uncertain. If you sold you would have a positive sum you could count on. Yes, by all means sell the house. Don't sacrifice it, but sell. Taxes now are enormous, insurance is soaring, mortgages are being foreclosed every day. If you have the chance sell."

Philip Desmond left for the officers' training-camp. The parting was just the parting that has reached so many firesides. It was just the same in Marion Desmond's life as in that of countless hundreds.

One afternoon a few weeks later Marion was at the home of a friend, the occasion being a little informal tea, to give the opportunity of saying goodbye to several of her friends, who were leaving that they might be near the camps where their husbands were stationed.

Almost every one present had been

"A Guide to Bible Study"

By Harry E. Richards, A. M., M. D.

YES, JUST THAT!

A simple, practical help to guide you in your careful reading or study of that matchless Book!

A GUIDE to show you definitely what to read and what to look for as you read.

A GUIDE to that direct, personal acquaintance with the Scriptures which you are seeking.

A GUIDE so simple that it will not detract from the goal sought—one that is unencumbered with an embarrassment of outside material.

A GUIDE which will aid you to become familiar with the facts and teachings of God's Word and to its proper understanding, because with its use it is absolutely necessary to "search the Scriptures."

A GUIDE which holds directly to the study of the Bible itself, and by the definite simplicity of its questions aids the student to form his own opinions and do independent thinking.

ENDORSED BY RECOGNIZED AUTHORITIES

Others have found it helpful—so will you

A Business Man: "It is a real companion to the Bible, and should be on the desk of every man."

A Business Man: "Your book (Part 1) is the best I have ever used and I will send for Part 2 as soon as I have finished this one."

A Bible Student: "This is what I have been trying to find for a long time. I have been hoping that someone would make a course of study like this. To say that you have succeeded is putting it mild—you have done it up brown."

A Professional Man: "I think the lessons fine."

A Business Man: "I am today returning Vol. 3 that you sent me for inspection, not that it is unsatisfactory, but because it commends itself enough to me to enclose my check for the Advanced Course in one volume in cloth."

A Lawyer: "I have gone carefully through the books up to number five, which I am now occupied with, and find them most instructive."

Y. M. C. A. Worker: "It is the best thing of the kind I have ever seen."

A Woman in the Home: "Part 6 came yesterday, and I think it is the best help I have ever seen to systematic Bible study."

Part 1. Genesis to Ruth. } Junior Course

Part 2. I Samuel to Nehemiah. } Junior Course

Part 3. The Gospels and the Acts. } Junior Course

Part 4. Genesis to II Samuel. } Junior Course

Part 5. I Kings to Nehemiah } Advanced Course (S. S. "Intermediate")

Part 6. Life of Christ. } Advanced Course

Part 7. The Acts and the Epistles. } Advanced Course

Paper, each Part.....$.30

Cloth, each Part..... .45

Parts 1 to 3 in one volume, cloth..... 1.25

Parts 4 to 7 in one volume, cloth..... 1.50

A Copy on Inspection, or Descriptive Pamphlet

Index Publishing Company

Box 12, Bloomfield, N. J.

DON'T decide on the new hymn-book for your Church or Sunday School until you have seen

HALLOWED HYMNS
NEW AND OLD

Edited by IRA ALLAN SANKEY
Son of the famous Singing-Evangelist
Ira D. Sankey

OVER 550,000 COPIES ALREADY SOLD

Responsive Scripture Readings
No Trashy Words No Jingly Music

Price $25.00 per 100 not prepaid
35 cents per copy by mail

Examine a copy and prove its value in your work. (Returnable if desired.)

The Biglow & Main Co., New York
Chicago

AN IMPORTANT QUESTION

Have you renewed your subscription to the AMERICAN MESSENGER for the year 1918? If so, we thank you heartily. If not, we ask you to remit promptly, inasmuch as our fiscal year is about to close and it is an imperative necessity for us to collect all outstanding accounts and to have all arrearages settled before that date.

Once more, we would urgently request all our friends who have not as yet renewed their subscriptions for the current year to do so at once.

Kindly send all remittances to the
AMERICAN MESSENGER
Park Avenue and Fortieth Street,
New York, N. Y.

HALF ON THE BEACH
ATLANTIC CITY
ALWAYS OPEN
THE LEEDS COMPANY

nearly touched by the war—a brother, a fiancé, a husband. Nothing else was thought of, nothing else was spoken of.

Marion was the center of a little group who were listening with intense interest to what she was saying. "Indeed it is fascinating; you just can't imagine!"

"How long are your hours, Marion?" asked one.

"Three hours every morning. I will soon be ready to take dictation."

"How perfectly wonderful. I wish I could learn it."

"I never would have dreamed," Marion laughed pleasantly, "that I would consider the portals of a business college might be the open sesame for my future."

The conversation drifted. The atmosphere was so charged with the solemn, serious thoughts, the heaviness of heart, portentous of such uncertain results, of these young women that their brave attempts at cheerfulness were unavailing.

More weeks slipped by. Philip Desmond, for some intricate reason, did not succeed in receiving a commission. Marion did not go to live in her father's home for several reasons. There was quite a large family. Each remembered that Marion had not been married by the priest, of which fact they constantly reminded her. Then it is not always easy for a married daughter, who has previously broken all home ties, even if pleasantly, to return and announce—

"I wish you to again provide me with food and raiment."

Besides the effects of the war in her father's house had made the words "nip and tuck" commonplace by their constant repetition and practice. So Marion went to a downtown boarding-house, a good location and filled with fairly congenial people, near enough to the business section so that carfare was not a necessity.

Philip Desmond was a young lawyer who had won and kept the respect of the bar. For that reason Marion was able to obtain a clerical position in the Court House. This was infinitely more agreeable, as any men with whom she was thrown in contact were personal friends of her husband's.

Marion was well dressed, efficient, agreeable in manner, and absolutely quiet. Her salary was small but adequate. The little sum resulting from the sale of her home and their belongings she considered merely as a trust fund until such a time as Philip would return, a little capital with which Philip could make another start.

To become proficient was not easy. Her mind was untrained to systematic effort. It required every energy concentrated to that purpose. Social life, had she cared for it, was debarred. She was very naturally fatigued at night, and business required she must be well rested by the next day. So life was a monotone, unbroken save by Philip's letters to her and those she wrote to him.

The months passed by; and then—Philip Desmond was among the names of those who would never return.

Marion was prostrated. She refused to leave her room. She would not eat. Her many friends came again and again and ministered to her. Her family offered her their assistance. She turned away and cared for nothing at all. She was bereft—desolate!

However, life is busy and full. Presently these kind people must attend to their own strenuous, insistent duties. The head of her office very kindly wrote to her stating his sympathy, also that it was impossible to longer hold her position open; to please report for work the following Monday morning.

Now it so happens even when people are utterly crushed, and have no spirit and no heart, that they still have a body, which must be provided with food, raiment and shelter. These three articles must be purchased with money.

Marion's small hoard would be soon noticeably diminished were she to live on her capital. Marion reported for work on Monday morning. Philip always said, "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." Marion winced. She was Philip's house—she was not serving.

She heard this other call that had come, that she must answer. Spiritually she must respond efficiently. "Though He slay me, yet will I trust Him." Alone she lingered, faltering over each new phase. The growth was gradual, just the same world-old steps—"tribulation working patience, and patience experience, and experience hope."

So, Marion Desmond became of great value to all whom she met. In some subtle way she radiated a hope that comforted. Easter was not far off. The rector called.

"Mrs. Desmond," he said, "my Easter service is of great importance this year. Not only many of my own parishioners will be present, but numbers of outside people, persons who are not even accustomed to attending church at other times. I consider it a wonderful opportunity. I need all the help I can procure. It is in truth Easter Sunday, peculiarly so. It is a resurrection indeed. The lonely lives of many of my parish must rise in the birth of a new life and a new hope. By yourself you have reached this understanding. Will you please sing the offertory?"

"I simply could not!" Marion cried in alarm. "There are many competent professional singers."

"I know that, but I want you. This year there are many breaking hearts to comfort. I want the source of your spiritual support sung to my suffering people. Remember, 'Who comforteth us in all our tribulations, that we may be able to comfort them which are in trouble.'"

For many minutes Marion was silent. "Me and my house, we will serve"; no other thought so persistently forced itself on her remembrance.

"I will try," she replied.

On Sunday morning the chancel was a mass of Easter lilies, calla lilies and palms. The congregation taxed the capacity of the pews. The organ with its volume of music filled the church. Marion Desmond was standing. The sunlight that filtered through the stained glass window brightened with a soft radiance the spot where she stood. Her beauty was almost ethereal.

Her voice, clear and true, rose on the ascending notes and lingered but a space—"I know that my Redeemer liveth!" the voice vibrated through the church, the echo long to live in the memory of her hearers.

Marion's heart was filled with a great peace. As for their house, Philip's and hers—they had served.

Afraid of a Shadow

BY A SCOTCH MINISTER.

I was sitting in my study one Saturday evening when a message came to me that one of the godliest among the shepherds who tended their flocks upon the slopes of our highland hills was dying, and wanted to see the minister. Without loss of time I crossed the wide heath to his comfortable little home. When I entered the low room I found the old shepherd propped up with pillows, and breathing with such difficulty that it was apparent that he was near his end. "Jean," he said, "gie the minister a stool, and leave us for a bit; for I wad to see the minister alone."

As soon as the door had closed, he turned the most pathetic pair of gray eyes upon me I had ever looked into, and said in a voice shaken with emotion: "Minister, I'm dying, and—and—I'm afraid."

I began at once to repeat the strongest promises with which God's Word furnishes us: but in the midst of them he stopped me.

"I ken them a'," he said, mournfully. "I ken them a'; but somehow they dinna gie me comfort."

"Do you not believe them?"

"Wi a' my heart," he replied, earnestly. "Where, then, is there any room for fear with such a saving faith?"

"For a' that, minister, I'm afraid."

"You remember the twenty-third Psalm?" I began.

"Remember it," he said, vehemently. "I kened it before ye were born; ye need na' read it; I've conned it a thousand times on the hillside."

"But there is one verse you have not taken in."

He turned upon me with a half-reproachful and even stern look. "Did I na' tell ye I kened it every word afore ye were born?"

I slowly repeated the verse, "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for thou art with me."

"You have been a shepherd all your life, and you have watched the heavy shadows pass over the valleys and over the hills, hiding for a little while all the light of the sun. Did these shadows ever frighten you?"

"Frighten me?" he said, quickly. "Na, na! Dave Donaldson has Covenanter's bluid in his veins; neither shadow nor substance could weel frighten him."

"But did these shadows never make you believe you would not see the sun again—that it was gone forever?"

"Na, na; I cudna' be sic a simpleton as that."

"Nevertheless, that is just what you are doing now." He looked at me with incredulous eyes.

"Yes," I continued, "the shadow of death is over you, and it hides for a little the Sun of righteousness, who shines all the same behind; but it's only a shadow that will pass, and when it has passed, before you will be the everlasting hills in their unclouded glory."

The old shepherd covered his face with his trembling hands, and for a few moments maintained an unbroken silence; then letting them fall straight before him on the coverlet, he said, as if musing to himself, "Aweel, aweel. I have conned that verse a thousand times among the heather, and I never understood it afore—afraid of a shadow! Afraid of a shadow!" Then turning upon me a face now bright with almost supernatural brightness, he exclaimed, lifting his hands reverently to heaven, "Aye, aye, I see it a' now! Death is only a shadow—a shadow with Christ behind it—a shadow that will pass. Na, na, I'm afraid nae mair."—Ex.

"The Leading FIRE INSURANCE Co. of America"

Incorporated 1819

Charter Perpetual

Cash Capital,	$5,000,000.00
Assets,	$29,833,490.58
Total Liabilities,	16,627,291.73
Net Surplus,	8,206,198.85
Surplus for Policy-Holders,	13,206,198.85
NOTE—The Security Valuations on which this Statement is based are those fixed by the Insurance Commissioners.
Losses Paid in 99 Years,	$165,896,007.97

WM. B. CLARK, President

Vice-Presidents

HENRY E. REES A. N. WILLIAMS

E. J. SLOAN, Secretary

Assistant Secretaries

E. S. ALLEN GUY E. BEARDSLEY RALPH B. IVES

W. F. WHITTELSEY, Marine Vice-President

R. E. STRONACH, Marine Secretary

- WESTERN BRANCH, 175 W. Jackson Blvd., Chicago, Ills. { THOS. E. GALLAGHER, General Agent
L. O. KOHTZ, Ass't General Agent
L. O. KOHTZ, Marine General Agent
RALPH B. IVES, Assistant Secretary
- PACIFIC BRANCH, 301 California Street, San Francisco, Cal. { W. H. BREEDING, General Agent
GEO. E. TOWNSEND, Ass't Gen'l Agent (Fire)
E. S. LIVINGSTON, Ass't Gen'l Agent (Marine)
- MARINE DEPARTMENT, . { CHICAGO, ILLS., 175 W. Jackson Blvd.
NEW YORK, 63-65 Beaver Street
BOSTON, 70 Kilby Street
PHILADELPHIA, 226 Walnut Street
SAN FRANCISCO, 325 California Street

THE TREASURY

SPECIAL NOTICE

OWING to occasional losses of letters, containing money, we would request friends and donors of the American Tract Society to remit by check or Post Office Money Order, which latter can always be duplicated in case of loss.

Receipts of the American Tract Society During February, 1918

TOTAL DONATIONS (including $1,467.02 for Special Objects), $2,995.13.

- ALABAMA, $10. Mrs. Pratt, for Colportage, $10.
- ARIZONA, $1. Miss Hubert, $1.
- ARKANSAS, $5.50. Mr. Moore, for Patriot Library, $5; Mrs. Thomason, $0.50.
- CALIFORNIA, $266.42. Mrs. Fahder, $5; Miss Collier, $10; Mr. Vanderwater, $3; Mr. Barnett, for Patriot Library, $10; Mrs. Ruth, $5; Mr. Drake, $5; Miss Rupp, $5; Mrs. Robertson, for Patriot Library, $5; Miss Hills, for Patriot Library, $1; Miss Habermann and sister, $3; Mrs. Block, for Patriot Library, $50; Mrs. Hammond, for Patriot Library, $1.50; Santa Barbara, Church Collection, $5; Mr. Patrick, for Patriot Library, $1; Mr. King, for Patriot Library, $5; Los Angeles, Church Offering, $5; "A Friend," for Patriot Library, $100; Mrs. Walker, to constitute herself a life member, $30; Mrs. Ochs, $0.75; Los Angeles, Thanksgiving Collection, $13.57; Pasadena, Church Offering, $2.60.
- COLORADO, $1. Mr. Evers, $1.
- CONNECTICUT, $93.39. Hon. Mr. Baldwin, $20; Mr. Arnold, $1; Miss Elmore and Friend, for Patriot Library, $3; Mrs. Russ, for Patriot Library, $5; Miss Aycryg, $5; New Britain, Church Collection, $20; Norwichtown, Church Offering, $1.24; Westchester, Church Collection, $3.80; Mrs. Berrien, for Patriot Library, $30; Enfield, Church Offering, $4.35.
- DELAWARE, $43.50. Miss Janvier, $3; Mr. Warren, for Patriot Library, $0.50; Mrs. Nisbet, for Patriot Library, $25; Miss Spotswood, for Patriot Library, $15.
- DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, $61. Mr. Rothermel, (including $3 for Work among colored people), $5; Sister Pora, $1; Washington, Church Collection, $50; Mrs. Renwick, $5.
- FLORIDA, $10.65. Mr. Walton, $5; Mrs. Story, for Patriot Library, $5; Mrs. Stuessy, $0.65.
- GEORGIA, $2. Miss Glover, for Patriot Library, $2.
- ILLINOIS $72.95. "A Friend," $5; Mr. Springer, $1.25; "A Friend," $2; Mrs. Clark, for Patriot Library, $5; Mr. Britt, for Patriot Library, $10; Mrs. Reinebach, for Patriot Library, $5; Mrs. Jöhler, $0.15; Mr. and Mrs. Hamman, $1.05; Mr. Grosser, $1; Mr. Wallace, $2; Forrester, Church Offering, $10; Mr. Brinkmann, $10; Forrester, Church Collection, $20.50.
- INDIANA, $32.01. Dr. and Mrs. Howk, for Patriot Library, $10; Mr. Stahlschmidt, $1; Mr. Voss, $1; Mr. Miller, for Patriot Library, $1; Mr. Winice, for Work in Latin America, $1; Mr. Lichtig, $1; Mr. Atkins, $10; Mr. Rose, $2; Greensburg, Church Offering, $5.01.
- IOWA, $72.55. Kamrar, Sunday School Collection, $25; Mr. Rix, for Patriot Library, $10; Mr. Fotsch, $1; Mr. Ramsburg, $5; Mr. and Mrs. Ahrens, $2; Miss Hillis, $5; Mr. Rewerts, $3.25; Denison, Church Offering, $5; Hoppers, Church Collection, $5; Cleghorn, Church Offering, $5; Mr. Sents, $4.30; Mrs. Mathews, $1; "A Friend," for Patriot Library, $1.
- KANSAS, $44.75. Mr. Regier, $0.65; Mr. Butler, $2.50; Mrs. Johnson, $1; Mr. Entz, $15; Mr. Angell, for Patriot Library, $10; Mr. Harder, $5; Mr. Unruh, $1.60; Mr. Geis, $1; Rev. Mr. Deglow, $1; Mr. Weiss, $1; Mr. Engemann, $1; Mr. Entz, $4; Mrs. Bergman, $1.
- KENTUCKY, $13.50. Mr. Spurling, $1; Mr. Kelly, $2.50; Mrs. Graves, for Patriot Library, $10.
- LOUISIANA, $2. Dr. Smith, $2.
- MAINE, $7. Mr. Breneman, for Patriot Library, $5; Mr. Breneman, for Patriot Library, $2.
- MARYLAND, $17. "A Friend," for Patriot Library, $10; Miss Spect, $5; Mr. Hedges, for Patriot Library, $1; "A Friend," for Patriot Library, $1.
- MASSACHUSETTS, $219.60. Mrs. McKee, $5; Mr. Davis, for Patriot Library, $1; Mr. Chadwick, for Patriot Library, $2; Mrs. Doughty, $25; Mr. Codman, $50; Lawrence, Church and Sunday-School Collection, $15; Mr. Otis, for Patriot Library, $10; Miss Belcher, $1; Mr. Harrington, to constitute himself a Life Member, $30; Dorchester, Church Offering, $5; Mrs. Chandler, for Patriot Library, $2; Miss Green, for Patriot Library, $5; Mr. Bowen, $20; Mr. Richardson, for Patriot Library, $2; Mrs. Bisbee, for Patriot Library, $1; Mr. Wirt, for Patriot Library, $1; Miss Roynton, $0.10; Miss Bodman, for Patriot Library, $3; Mr. Mitchell, for Patriot Library, $5; Mrs. Bailey, $5; Miss Look, $2; Mrs. Drew, $1; Mrs. Bradford, for Patriot Library, $5; Mrs. Dunbar, for Patriot Library, $2.50; Mr. Clark, $10; Miss Fales, for Patriot Library, $1; Mr. Crosby, $10.

- MICHIGAN, $148. Mr. Blackman, to constitute himself a Life Director, $100; Mrs. Watson, for Patriot Library, $2; Mrs. Wilkinson, $1; Mr. Stulp, $3; Miss Belbeck, $1; In memory of Mr. Earl, $5; Rev. Mr. Fies, for Patriot Library, $5; Mr. Dosker, for Patriot Library, $5; Holland, Church Offering, for Patriot Library, $25; Mr. Hammond, $1.
- MINNESOTA, $14.65. Mr. Steinigeweg, $0.65; Mr. Clynick, for Patriot Library, $1; Mr. Wiards, $3; Gen. Reeve, for Patriot Library, $10.
- MISSOURI, $104.18. Drake, Church Collection, $8.85; "A Friend," $30; Owensville, Church Offering, $5; Mr. Sauer and Family, $10; Miss Gibson, for Patriot Library, $3; Mrs. Hinnah, $5; Mr. Engebrecht, for Patriot Library, $5; Mrs. Backer, $5; Mr. Saeger, $0.45; St. Louis, Church Collection, $3; "A Friend," $0.10; St. Louis, Church Offering, $25; St. Louis, Church Offering, $3.78.
- MONTANA, $1. Mr. Miles, for Patriot Library, $1.
- NEBRASKA, $7.15. Norfolk, Church Collection, $2.95; Mrs. Hunzeker, $0.65; Mr. Arnold, $0.65; Lincoln, Conference, $1; Mr. Steen, $1.90.
- NEW HAMPSHIRE, $10. Mr. Wetherbee, for Patriot Library, $10.
- NEW JERSEY, $324.47. Princeton, Church Offering, $15.02; Mr. Parmy, $5; Mr. Machlet, $50; Mr. Meadowcraft, for Patriot Library, $2; Mr. Voorbees, for Patriot Library, $1; Mr. Suydam, $5; Highstown, Church Collection, $5; Mr. Conover, for Patriot Library, $3; Rev. Mr. Smith, $2; Mr. Richie, $2; Mrs. Williams, for Patriot Library, $5; Mrs. Morrison, for Patriot Library, $3; Mr. Stutts, $1; Mr. Wyckoff, for Patriot Library, $5; Mrs. Lynde, $25; Mrs. Huff, $2; Mrs. Allen, for Patriot Library, $20; Mr. Reeve, $1; Mrs. Sutphen, for Patriot Library, $0.25; Princeton, Church Offering, $5.53; Mr. Boardman, for Patriot Library, $1; Mr. Fithian, for Patriot Library, $5; Miss Littell, $3; Rev. Mr. Cowan, $2; Miss Alden, $5; Mr. Parmy, for Patriot Library, $2; Burlington, Church Collection, $5; Miss Howell, for Patriot Library, $1; Bedminster Church Collection, $35; Miss Demarest, for Patriot Library, $2; Miss Silberhorn, $1; Mr. Cutler, for Patriot Library, $10; Mrs. De Mott, for Patriot Library, $15; Mrs. Hartig, $3.75; Miss Sheldon, for Patriot Library, $12; Mr. Moore, $2; Shrewsbury, Church Offering, $7; Miss Hull, $2; Mr. Atterbury, $5; Paterson, Church Collection, $6; Miss Furman, for Patriot Library, $2; Mr. Cook, for Patriot Library, $5; "A Friend," $10; Mrs. Barrett, for Patriot Library, $5; Mrs. Veghte, $2; Miss Drury, $2; New Providence, Church Offering, $5; Freehold, Church Collection, $5.42; Mrs. Rowen, $0.50.
- NEW YORK, $665.52. Mrs. Meder, $2; Mrs. Brine, for Patriot Library, $5; Ladies Miss. Socy. Collection, $10; Mrs. Bay, $0.25; Mrs. Gerhardt, $0.25; Miss Heusser, $0.25; Miss Yenne, $0.25; New York City, Church Collection, $3; King Testimonial Fund, $18; Mr. Haines, for Patriot Library, $12; Mr. Gebhard, $3; Mr. Benton, for Patriot Library, $5; New York City, Church Offering, $5.75; Mrs. Hyde, $50; Miss Merriam, for Patriot Library, $5; New York City, Church Collection, $2; Mr. King, $10; Mr. Auchincloss, $10; Mr. Hyde, $5; Mrs. Eaton, for Patriot Library, $5; Rev. Mr. Wiley, $6; Mrs. Willard, $1; Mr. Olmstead, for Patriot Library, $2; Staten Island, Church Offering, $20; Misselden, $10; Mrs. Winslow, for Patriot Library, $50; C. S. S., $100; Mr. Allen, for Patriot Library, $1; Rev. Mr. Alsop, for Patriot Library, $2; Mrs. Rutherford, $6; Mr. Sherry, $2; Mrs. Saltzman, Sr., $1; Mrs. Powell, for Patriot Library, $2; Miss Hedden, $1; Mr. Mosely, $5; Mr. Whittemore, for Patriot Library, $20; Mr. Chapman, for Patriot Library, $10; Mrs. Reed, for Patriot Library, $2; Mr. Pouch, $5; Miss Strong, $20; Mrs. Swartout, for Patriot Library, $1; Mrs. Rodger, $2; Mr. Burnett, for Patriot Library, $1; in memory of Mrs. Gaul, $5; Mrs. Veisley, $5; Mrs. Bagley, $1; Mr. and Mrs. Tarbox, $2; Miss Rose, $3; Miss McDowell, $5; Wappingers Falls, Church Collection, $4; Miss Smith, $0.25; Mrs. Hoyt, for Patriot Library, $1; Mrs. Kelly, $5; Mr. Francis, $8; Mrs. Lee, for Spanish Work, $1; Mr. Hallock, $10; Mrs. Walker, $5; Mr. Sprague, for Work in South America, $3; Mr. Windels, $25; Mr. Gramps, for Patriot Library, $2; Mr. Howes & Son, for Patriot Library, $2.50; Mr. and Mrs. Ham, for Patriot Library, $10; Mr. Blauvelt, $3; Mr. Frost, $5; Miss Hitchcock, for Patriot Library, $1; Mrs. Watson, for Colportage, $1; Rev. Mr. Gulick, for Patriot Library, $5; Long Island, Church Offering, for Patriot Library, $20; Mrs. Edwards, for Patriot Library, $1; Greenc, Ladies Missy Soc'y, $10; Miss Van Duzec, $2; Mrs. Harris, for Patriot Library, $1; Mr. Fairhead, for Patriot Library, $1; Oriskany, Church Offering, $5; Mrs. Turnbull, for Patriot Library, $10; Mrs. Cutter, $25; Troy, Church Offering, $10; East Bloomfield, Church Collection, $22.02; Mrs. Fuchs, $1; Mr. Anken, $4; Miss Parker, for Patriot Library, $2; Miss Hunn, $5; Mrs. Gowan, for Patriot Library, $5; Otego, Church Offering, $1.50; Binghamton, Sunday School Collection, $5; Miss Yale, $0.50.
- NORTH CAROLINA, $17.50. Miss Logan, $5; Mr. Stockton, for Patriot Library, $2.50; Mr. Carr, $10.
- NORTH DAKOTA, $0.65. Mrs. Buchholz, $0.65.
- OHIO, $92.40. Mrs. Hegemer, $1; Mr. Hopkins, $5; Mrs. Rosseter, $5; Miss Rosseter, $5; Mr. McClintock, for Patriot Library, $5; Mr. Cochran, $2; Mr. Lust, for Patriot Library, $5; Miss Parker, $1; Mr. Mohr, $4.65; Miss Peebles, $2.50; Dr. Fitzpatrick, $2; Mrs. Cross, $2; Mr. Helfenstein, for Patriot Library, $1; Cincinnati, Church Offering, $10; Mrs. Schuepbach, $0.65; Mr. Schroer, $1; Mrs. Perkins, $25; Mr. Rutledge, for Patriot Library, $3; Rev. Mr. Egger, $1.30; Mr. Brann, $2.30; Wyoming, Church Collection, $5; Mrs. Fried, $3.

- OKLAHOMA, $0.65. Mrs. Slaving, $0.65.
- OREGON, $4.85. Mr. Dombrome, $0.35; Mrs. Hobley, $2; Mr. Reichen, $2.50.
- PENNSYLVANIA, $461.50. Miss Hoerr, $1; Miss Stover, $3; The Misses Weigle, $2; Mr. Walter, for Patriot Library, $5; Mr. Rennie, $3; Mr. Carter, for Patriot Library, $10; Mr. Smith, $1; Mrs. Becker, $5; Miss Beadle, for Patriot Library, $10; Mr. Young, $5; Miss Thomas, $10; Mrs. Allison, for Patriot Library, $5; Mr. McClure, $2; Mr. Martin, for Patriot Library, $1; Miss Bergstreser, for Patriot Library, $1; Mr. Craig, $5; Reading, Church Offering, $5; Miss Boies, $5; Rev. Mr. De Schweinitz, for Patriot Library, $2.50; Erie, Church Collection, $20; Mr. Harbison, for Patriot Library, $100; Mr. Ayars, $1; Mr. Brubaker, for Patriot Library, $5; Mrs. Burn, $2; Mrs. Dull, for Patriot Library, $15; Mr. Bixby, for Patriot Library, $2; Mr. Lauber, $2; Mr. Gensemer, $50; Mr. Kreitler, $10; Scranton, Church Offering, $10; Mr. Gibbons, for Patriot Library, $10; Mr. Bougher, for Patriot Library, $5; Miss Westgate, Mother, Sister and Friend, $2; Mr. Gearhart, for Patriot Library, $1; Mrs. Dodds, for Patriot Library, $2; Miss Converse, $10; Miss Demuth, for Patriot Library, $1; Mr. and Mrs. Aldred, for Patriot Library, $2; Miss Coleman, for Patriot Library, $10; Mr. Delp, $2; Mrs. Clawson, $2; Jeanette, Church Collection, $10; Mr. Sharpe, $5; Mr. Campbell, for Patriot Library, $10; Mercer, Church Collection, $2; Bridgeville, Church Offering, $10; Mr. Donnan, $25; Bakerstown, Church Collection, $5; Mr. Menzies, for Patriot Library, $6; Mrs. Ludington, for Patriot Library, $5; Mrs. Brooks, for Patriot Library, $2; Scranton, Church Offering, $10; South Bethlehem, Schwestern Verein, $1; Mr. Glover, for Patriot Library, $1; Mr. Wertz, for Patriot Library, $5; Miss Dupree, $2; Miss Pollock, $5; Miss Graydon, for Patriot Library, $2; Mr. Rau, $10.
- SOUTH CAROLINA, $6. Mr. Wood, 3rd, for Patriot Library, $5; Miss Hay, for Patriot Library, $1.
- SOUTH DAKOTA, $27.94. Mr. Hinders, $1.30; Mr. Finch, for Patriot Library, $20; Mr. Jurgens, $0.65; Mr. Poppens, $1.15; Academy, Church Collection, $3.84; Mr. Hinders, $1.
- TENNESSEE, $10. Mr. Phillips, $10.
- TEXAS, $8.15. Mr. Zimmerman, $0.65; Mr. Johnston, $2.50; Mr. Hunt, for Patriot Library, $5.
- VERMONT, $8.65. Mr. Sykes (incl. $3.65 for Patriot Library), $8.65.
- VIRGINIA, $50.50. Rev. Mr. Brown, $5; Mr. Fletcher, Jr., $5; Mrs. Gregory, $2; the following for Patriot Library: Mrs. Richardson, $5; Mrs. Armstrong, $5; Mr. Morton, $10; Mr. White, $5; Rev. Mr. Tompkins, $2.50; Mrs. Ivery, $10; Miss Anderson, $1.
- WASHINGTON, $7.10. Mr. Graedel, $3.95; Mr. Aeschliman, $1.15; Mrs. Merritt, for Patriot Library, $2.
- WEST VIRGINIA, $12. Mr. McCoy, $5; Miss Atkinson, for Patriot Library, $2; Mr. Aglionby, $5.
- WISCONSIN, $29.95. Mrs. Guntly, $1.65; Rev. Mr. Stucki, $0.65; Mr. Gibson, $10; Mrs. Smith, $5; Rev. Mr. Kempf, $5; Mrs. Leich, $0.65; Mrs. Jenny, for Colportage, $4; Mr. Krauss, $3.
- FOREIGN, $6.50. Canada, Mr. Machados, $3; Mrs. McCrae, for Patriot Library, $1; Miss Findlay, for Patriot Library, $2.50.
- LEGACIES, $27.50. Washington, D. C., Estate of Mary I. Brooks, on account, $27.50.
- Income from Trust Funds, $721.75.
- Income for Missionary Work, $721.75.

Donations

DONATIONS for the missionary work of the American Tract Society may be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

FIELD SECRETARIES AND COLPORTAGE SUPERINTENDENTS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.

- Rev. Isaac Pierson, Field Secretary for New England, 50 Bromfield Street, Boston, Mass.
- Rev. A. W. Reinhard, Field Secretary and Superintendent of Colportage for the Western and Northwestern States, 4029A De Tonty Ave., St. Louis, Mo.
- Rev. George Whitefort, Superintendent of Colportage, Southern Agency, Chricton, R. F. D., Mobile Co., Ala.

Form of Bequest

I GIVE and bequeath to the "AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY," instituted in the City of New York, May, 1825, the sum of.....dollars to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said Society.

Three witnesses should state that the testator declares this to be his last will and testament, and that they signed at his request, and in his presence and the presence of each other.

Life Members and Directors

THE donation of $30 at one time constitutes a Life Member of the American Tract Society; the addition of $70, or the donation of $100 at one time, constitutes a Life Director. Life members may receive annually copies of the Society's own publications to the value of $1; Life Directors to the value of $2; if applied for within the Society's year, from April 1st to April 1st, in person or by written order.

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

TERMS: Subscription price, 50 cts. a year, payable in advance. In clubs of five or more, 30 cts. each. Club subscriptions mailed to separate addresses, if desired. Charge for foreign subscriptions, 24 cents additional. Canadian subscriptions, 12 cents additional. Single copies, 5 cents each.

On account of the additional charge which is made by the New York Post Office for mailing to subscribers in New York and Bronx Counties (Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx), no club rates, cash commissions or premiums will be given for subscriptions that must be sent to persons residing in those Counties. Each subscription in New York or Bronx County must be at the rate of 50 cents net.

Remit by Express Money Order, Draft, Post Office Order or Registered Letter. For very small amounts, postage stamps may be sent at the risk of the sender.

CHANGES: When sending change of address, be sure to send the old address as well as the new one.

OUR ADVERTISERS: We believe that all the advertisements in this paper are from responsible advertisers, and it is our intention to admit only such to our columns. Should, however, any of our subscribers find that any advertiser does not live up to his agreements, we would consider it a favor, if they will inform us, and we will at any time give prompt attention to any complaint.

We do not, of course, guarantee that all persons will take the same point of view with the advertisers, and it must be borne in mind that the claims and statements made by advertisers are their assertions, and not ours.

Our readers will confer a favor upon advertisers and also upon us if they will mention the AMERICAN MESSENGER when answering advertisements.

American Tract Society

THIS Society was organized in 1825. Its work is interdenominational and international in scope, and is commended by all evangelical denominations.

It has published the Gospel messages in 178 languages, dialects and characters. It has been the pioneer for work among the foreign-speaking people in our country, and its missionary colporters are distributing Christian literature in many languages among our foreign-speaking population and making a home-to-home visitation among the spiritually destitute, both in the cities and rural districts, leaving all kinds of Christian literature, also the Bible or portions of the Scriptures.

Its publication of leaflets, volumes and periodicals from the Home Office total 797,704,700 copies. It has made foreign cash appropriations to the amount of $802,966.39, and grants of electrotypes to the value of $61,177.96, by means of which millions of copies of books and tracts have been published at mission stations abroad.

The gratuitous distribution of the past year is to the value of $18,461.65. The grand total of its gratuitous distribution has been to the value of $2,652,967.54, which is the equivalent of 5,305,935,080 tract pages.

The total number of family visits that have been made by the Society's colporters during the last year is 199,963; the total number of volumes distributed by sale or grant is 55,712, making the total number of volumes that have been circulated by colporters in the last seventy-six years 17,438,166, and the total number of family visits that they have made during the same period 18,812,806.

A large distribution of Christian literature is being made among the soldiers and sailors, and the Society aims to furnish the Patriot Library to every Cantonment in the Army and to every battleship and cruiser in the Navy.

The Society is making very special effort in behalf of Latin America, having entered upon the publication of a One-volume Bible commentary in Spanish, a long-needed and earnestly prayed-for publication, and several other important volumes in both Spanish and Portuguese. Its total publications for Latin America now reach 16,012,088 copies. Its work, ever widening, is dependent upon donations and legacies, and greatly needs increased offerings.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, PRESIDENT.
JUDSON SWIFT, D. D., General Secretary.
Remittances should be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

An Appreciated Grant.

In acknowledgment of a grant of tracts sent by the American Tract Society, Mr. N. S. Sweet, of Whitehall, Wis., writes:

"I thank you for the grant of tracts for five months. I have already given out some of these tracts this afternoon, and hope and pray that they may do much good. I can't tell yet whether they will be enough to reach every house in town, but I do thank you very much. Often I give out tracts to country people on the street."

NOTABLE BOOKS

ANNA COOPE AND HER PUPIL, LONNIE POWERS.

This Indian Boy

attended Anna Coope's School on the San Blas Islands, off the coast of Central America.

Little children and tottering old men, one of them a hundred years old, were his classmates, along with wrinkled grandmothers and mothers with babies straddled on their hips.

Utterly alone, Miss Coope has brought the sweetness of home-life and civilization to this isolated tribe. Can you imagine 800 untutored Indians—and ten liquor huts? Under their thatched roofs rum worked its havoc until her patient, ceaseless labors bore fruit.

An Indian canoe, sailing for days across a stormy ocean, was her means of communication with the mainland of Central America.

When you read of her ocean trip in a little launch, of the persecutions and hardships which this woman underwent to complete her mission, you will know that she must indeed have been upheld by "a faith that believes in God every moment."

Anna Coope herself tells this absorbing story of the Island of Rio Diablo and the San Blas Indians. Her book has many photos of the natives, their huts, their odd costumes and customs.

Send for this new book: ANNA COOPE: Sky Pilot of the San Blas Indians. It will give you hours of delight and a rich fund of information. It is a rare addition to your library. 180 pages, and beautiful photographs of native life. Cloth. Size 5 x 7½. Manila jacket. Send $1.30, and it will be mailed to you, securely wrapped.

Have you read the remarkable book

The Prophets and The War?

By

CHARLES CARROLL ALBERTSON, D.D.

"There are those who see, on the battlefields of three continents, only a welter of blood, murder set to martial music, an abysmal tragedy, a riot of destruction. There are others who see all this and more. They lift their eyes, and through brief breaks in the storm-cloud that hovers over the sky of Christendom, see the stars. The Hebrew prophets in their time caught such glimpses of light in the heavens. Civilization, as they knew it, seemed again and again upon the brink of hopeless ruin."

Yet they did not lose hope. The men of to-day can save themselves from fear and wreck of faith by shaping their course of thought and action with reference to the truths and principles embodied in the writings of the religious leaders of Judah and Israel.

This new book has truly appeared at the right time.

The four chapters are as follows: The Voice in the Wilderness; The Vision of God; Suffering and Redemption; The Man Among the Myrtles.

If, in these serious days, you wish for serious and enlightening reading, send for THE PROPHETS AND THE WAR.

Cloth, 80 pages, size 7½x5¼ inches.

By mail, $1.00.

The High Road

By EMMA S. ALLEN

is a remarkable story of the California vineyards and the wine industry—at once a charming romance and a mighty argument for Prohibition.

No book of recent years has brought out vineyard conditions more clearly. The precarious risks, the temptations and the misery of vineyard cultivation, are made strikingly apparent.

A sparkling, brilliant romance is the vehicle used by the writer to bring her studies to the reader.

Read of Justin Lamont, wine merchant, and his charming daughter Victoria; of Glentworth, athlete and Prohibitionist, Victoria's schoolmate at the University of California. Glentworth finally battles for Prohibition; the girl follows her father.

Read of the Vintage Festival; of the King, the Queen, and the seven grapes—and of Victoria's turning.

The whole book is a succession of quick-moving chapters: The Bootlegger; Distinction Meets Difference; Giants in the Land; A Modern Jephtha; The Vintage Festival; The Revolt; Mother and Daughter; High Road and Low Road; Cold Shoulders; By Fire; On the Heights.

THE HIGH ROAD is a story too delightfully absorbing and informative for you to miss.

Cloth, 5½x7¾ inches. 326 pages. Illustrated. By mail, $1.35. "I HOPE YOU WILL LOSE—LOSE ALL—AT THE COMING ELECTION!"

Send for
Our Catalog

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY
PARK AVENUE AND 40TH STREET, NEW YORK

Send for
Our Catalog

How the Churches Can Help

Win the War against Autocracy

Make the World Safe for Democracy and Democracy Safe for the World

Secure for the Nations—Great and Small—Safety,
Justice and Equal Economic Opportunities

Establish a League of Nations

THE NATIONAL COMMITTEE ON THE CHURCHES AND THE MORAL AIMS OF THE WAR

Is conducting a nation-wide campaign of education through the churches and religious organizations to concentrate attention upon these supreme issues of the war as interpreted by President Wilson in his messages to Congress. Meetings are being organized at important centers, to which clergymen and leading laymen representing all denominations in the surrounding territory will be invited. These meetings will be addressed by men of national and international reputation. Speakers already enlisted include:

William Howard Taft
Abram I. Elkus
Alton B. Parker
Hamilton Holt
Theodore Marburg
Fred B. Smith
Edward A. Filene
Talcott Williams
Glenn Frank
Edward O. Brown

A. Lawrence Lowell
Henry C. King
John Bates Clark
George W. Nasmyth
Shailer Matthews
The Very Rev. George Adam Smith
The Rt. Rev. Edwin H. Hughes
The Rt. Rev. William F. McDowell
The Rt. Rev. Theodore S. Henderson
The Rev. Charles A. Macfarland

The Rev. William P. Merrill
The Rev. Frederick Lynch
The Rev. Nehemiah Boynton
The Rev. Charles R. Brown
The Rev. Frank Oliver Hall
The Rev. Arthur J. Brown
The Rev. Ezra S. Tipple
The Rev. James I. Vance
The Rev. Charles E. Jefferson
The Rev. Hubert C. Herring

This campaign is under the auspices of the following organizations:

CHURCH PEACE UNION

LEAGUE TO ENFORCE PEACE

FEDERAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES OF CHRIST IN AMERICA

WORLD ALLIANCE FOR INTERNATIONAL FRIENDSHIP
THROUGH THE CHURCHES

For literature, information as to meetings, speakers, available dates, etc., address

The National Committee on the Churches and the Moral Aims of the War

70 Fifth Avenue - - New York

Rev. Henry A. Atkinson, Executive Secretary

Vol. 76

No. 5

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

MAY, 1918

From a Photograph of the Centenary Missionary Committee M. E. Church.

A TEA-PICKER IN ASSAM, INDIA

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY, NEW YORK

HENRY E. FRITZ.

SEVENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY SPECIAL OFFER

Founded in 1843 by the American Tract Society, it has since been the favorite religious paper of hundreds of thousands of American Christian families.

We have been very much gratified by the many favorable responses received to our Special Short Term subscription offers made during the past two months.

The special offer made this month is a very attractive one, and should be taken advantage of by our many friends.

This special 75th Anniversary Offer is for an Eight Months' subscription from May 1, 1918, to December 31, 1918, to the AMERICAN MESSENGER, together with a copy of our very popular Devotional Book "Daily Food for Christians," for only 30 Cents. The AMERICAN MESSENGER and "Daily Food" should be in every Christian Home in America. The paper may be sent to one address and the book to another, if so desired.

There are homes right in your immediate neighborhood, especially where there are children, where a religious paper is not taken. Here is an excellent opportunity to place a good religious paper in such a home, at a very low cost, where it will be a bearer of good tidings. Scores and hundreds write and tell us that they find the monthly visits of the AMERICAN MESSENGER a blessing in the household, and that they cannot afford to be without it.

Why not use the four coupons attached to this notice, enclosing $1.20 and have the paper and book "Daily Food" sent to four homes?

We would suggest that Good Literature Committees of Christian Endeavor Societies, Home Departments, and similar organizations consider this proposition.

"Daily Food for Christians"

It contains a Bible reading for every day in the year, the Lord's Prayer, the Ten Commandments, the Beatitudes, the Apostles' Creed, and carefully selected verses from choice hymns. Bound in cloth, 200 pages, and is a convenient size for carrying in the pocket or handbag.

Special Anniversary Coupons

An 8 Months' Special Subscription Offer to the American Messenger with "Daily Food," for Only 30 Cents

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER
Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York City

SPECIAL ANNIVERSARY COUPON.

This coupon and 30 Cents good for an 8 months subscription to the American Messenger, with "Daily Food."

Name

Address

For New Subscribers Only.

If at present a subscriber, please hand this coupon to a friend.

SPECIAL ANNIVERSARY COUPON.

This coupon and 30 Cents good for an 8 months subscription to the American Messenger, with "Daily Food."

Name

Address

For New Subscribers Only.

If at present a subscriber, please hand this coupon to a friend.

SPECIAL ANNIVERSARY COUPON.

This coupon and 30 Cents good for an 8 months subscription to the American Messenger, with "Daily Food."

Name

Address

For New Subscribers Only.

If at present a subscriber, please hand this coupon to a friend.

SPECIAL ANNIVERSARY COUPON.

This coupon and 30 Cents good for an 8 months subscription to the American Messenger, with "Daily Food."

Name

Address

For New Subscribers Only.

If at present a subscriber, please hand this coupon to a friend.

AMERICAN MESSENGER, Park Avenue and 40th St., New York

The American Messenger

"Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Luke 2:10

Vol. 76. No. 5

MAY, 1918

Copyright, 1918, by American Tract Society.

Terms: 50 cents per annum
Single copy, 5 cents

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

PUBLISHED MONTHLY

BY THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

OFFICERS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President.

JOHN HENRY JOWETT, M.A., D.D., Vice-President.

JUDSON SWIFT, D.D., General Secretary.

LOUIS TAG, Treasurer.

REV. HENRY LEWIS, Ph.D., Recording Secretary.

All of the above-named officers should be addressed at Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Rev. David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.

Rev. Charles Carroll Albertson, D.D.

Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.

Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D.

Rev. George Ernest Merriam.

Entered at the Post Office in New York as second-class matter.

A Call to Prayer for Mothers' Day

What a different meaning Mothers' Day will have this year in our country! Motherhood has always meant sacrifice and love, but this year for the mothers of America it has meant for a million mothers the supreme sacrifice of giving to God and their country the boys whom they have reared to young manhood. The year has seen many of these boys give up their lives, and in the months to come who can doubt that the number will be great? That we must leave in God's hand.

It has been a year filled with farewells, first to the boys as they went to the homeland camp for training and then as the time came for going overseas. Here the wells of love and tenderness have overflowed. Association Men tells of a boy from Portland, Oregon, who got word in his New Jersey camp that he would leave the next morning for the transport. "At three o'clock in the afternoon he put in a telephone call for his mother. From three till ten o'clock at night he nervously paced back and forth in front of that booth waiting for the call, and then when it came slowly dropped one hundred 25-cent pieces in the slot and came out dripping wet with the anxiety of the effort, but he had spoken the good-by in the ear of his mother and was ready for France and the trenches." This is only a typical instance; they are occurring every day.

There is a beautiful side to the sacrifice. Mothers are being lifted, even though on a cross, to heights of love and of vision that they have never reached before. "I am trying so hard to be brave," one mother says. "I would not have my son back. I am proud to think that he is in this war. My boy writes that he is going to keep clean. I would rather have that message than any other he could send." Another mother says: "My boy wrote, 'I have given my heart to Christ.' It was for this that I prayed for so many years, and, though it was hard for me to see my boy go to France, I rejoice that he went so far from home to find his mother's God."

These are only glimpses into a few lives. The air is vibrant with such emotions. And it is for this reason that Sunday, May 12, has a special significance this year. For this reason the call sent out by the National Woman's Prayer Battalion will touch every mother's heart and lift it to even nobler vision and purpose.

The Battalion is an organization formed for the purpose of calling the nation to prayer. It came into being as a result of a visit which the founder, the Reverend Eva Ryerson Ludgate, paid to England. The English women who had suffered unspeakably told her that prayer had been an unending source of comfort to them, and she determined to band together, for prayer and comfort, the women of her own country who had men in war service. Thousands of women have already signed the Covenant card pledging themselves to daily prayer and a weekly half-hour prayer-meeting of all the women in a neighborhood, especially those who have sons or relatives in the service. This will lead to new consecration.

"The mother of yesterday," says the call, "was a woman who loved her Bible and knew how to pray; a man with a praying mother carries ever with him an invisible shield which will protect him in the hour of temptation and stand as a wall between him and cowardice. The mother of to-day should leave her children the same heritage. These are the days when the thrilling Old Testament stories should be told to little children, so that they may realize that the hand of God is over men in the hour of battle. There is no holier altar in the world than a mother's knee. Prayers learned at that altar will never fade from the mind or soul. On this Mothers' Day may we not hope that the mothers of America will determine to make prayer a vital part of their lives and the lives of their children?"

It has been a beautiful sentiment for sons and daughters to especially remember and honor their mothers one Sunday of the year, and that thought will be present everywhere this year, but it will be in keeping with the spirit of the times if mothers everywhere will make the day one of prayer and consecration for themselves.

A Devotional Book for "Our Boys"

Some one has said that it is a frequent thing to see a little book of devotion or a Testament peeping out over the pocket of the men in khaki, and there surely is nothing that they need more as they go out fully equipped for battle. The General Secretary of the American Tract Society, Dr. Judson Swift, feeling this, has brought out a little book, "A Manual of Devotion for Soldiers and Sailors," which might well go into every kit for the boys in blue and in khaki. For each day of the month there is a text, a prayer, a meditation, and a bit of poetry, all along the line of purity, strength, courage and devotion to God and the great cause for which they are enlisted. Following these is a litany for daily use and nine prayers for special occasions—for our country and President, before going into battle, after victory, for aviators, for sailors and marines, for the wounded, for a dying soldier, on being taken prisoner, and for loved ones at home. It seems as though every event and need in a soldier's or sailor's experience had been provided for.

The Ninety-Third Annual Meeting of the American Tract will be held on Wednesday, May 8, at four o'clock in the afternoon, in the Marble Collegiate Church at the corner of Fifth Avenue and Twenty-ninth Street in New York City.

At this afternoon meeting a resumé of the year's work along all lines will be given, the Board of Managers will be elected, and all regular business will be transacted.

The evening session will begin at eight o'clock and two addresses full of present-day interest will be delivered. The Reverend J. Franklin Shindell, who has been under the Y. M. C. A. overseas, will tell of the work "With the American Forces in France," and the Reverend R. H. Evans, of the West Africa Mission, will speak on "The Growth of the Kingdom in West Africa."

All our readers who live in or near the city or are here at that time are cordially invited to attend these sessions which mark ninety-three years of work by the American Tract Society.

Patriot Libraries

are meeting with favor everywhere. On ships, at naval stations, in cantonments, they turn a friendly face to the soldier and sailor lads, who cannot fail to get a glimpse of something higher as they read the books. We have sent out up to date 259 of these libraries, and receive such letters as this one from R. C. Pifer, Camp General Secretary, Y. M. C. A., at Camp Doniphan, Fort Sell, Oklahoma:

"We acknowledge the receipt of three sets of the 'Patriot Library.' We are pleased indeed with these libraries, and if it is still your purpose to supply the other three buildings here, we will be glad indeed to place the libraries where the soldiers can take advantage of them."

Liberty Bonds

As this paper reaches our readers the Third Liberty Bond campaign will be at its height. Every effort is being made to rouse interest in every city and town in our land and bring to each individual the appeal to sacrifice at home for the men who are giving their all at the front. Surely we must not let them fail because we are "slackers." Howard S. Mott, Vice-President of the Irving National Bank of New York, puts the matter forcibly when he says:

"Why shouldn't we all consume less and buy bonds? It means not only backing the boys at the front, but it means keeping down inflation, keeping down our own cost of living, as well as that of our neighbors. And it means getting paid 4¼ per cent. on the money employed to help us to live more cheaply. How many people realize that the larger the sum saved from their daily consumption and invested in Liberty bonds the lower will be the cost of things they have to buy? . . . Over in England they have the idea. Once a week, out of everybody's wages, something is set aside for investment in British Government bonds. And the total runs about $150,000,000 a week. In France, nobody thinks of buying anything but Government bonds. No citizen of France believes his country's obligation is not good. . . .

"Over and above all, the controlling, the dominating, the absolute reason for an investment in Third Liberty Loan bonds lies in the fact that Germany has challenged the world with the insolent, the insufferable slogan that force, not right, must rule. And we have accepted the challenge as only freemen can who intend to prove that right, not force, shall rule. We must have a maximum effort whereby every man subscribes to bonds to, say 25 per cent. of his income for the year. He must do it because it is his own self-interest to do it as well as because we must win the war."

A Day of Prayer for the Nation

We are at war. Our Allies have been fighting their cause and ours for more than three years and a half, and the time is at hand when America must take a large share of the fighting at the front. Are we going into this titanic struggle in our own strength?

As individuals men and women everywhere are coming to their knees in supplication that the All-mighty Father will give to our leaders wisdom and to our men the strength and skill that they need to win out. A friend who is watching, as we all are, the course of the German drive on the West Front said in speaking of it, "We ought to be on our knees all the time."

But ought we not as a nation as well as individually to be in prayer? Should we not put aside a day for united prayer for national wisdom and loyalty and success? Back in 1863 things looked very dark for the armies of the North. Horace Greeley said that ten days before the battle of Gettysburg were the darkest hours of American history. On March 2, 1863, Senator James Harlan, of Iowa, introduced into the Senate a resolution which passed both Senate and House without a dissenting vote. It was as follows:

"Resolved, That, devoutly recognizing the supreme authority and just government of Almighty God in the affairs of men and of nations, and sincerely believing that no people, however great in numbers and resources, or however strong in the justice of their cause, can prosper without His favor, and at the same time deploring the national offences which provoked His righteous judgment, yet encouraged, in this day of trouble, by the assurance of His Word, to seek Him for succor according to His appointed way, through Jesus Christ, the Senate of the United States do hereby request the President of the United States, by his proclamation, to designate and set apart a day for prayer and humiliation, requesting all the people of the land to suspend their secular pursuits, and unite in keeping the day in solemn communion with the Lord of Hosts, supplicating Him to enlighten the counsels and direct the policy of the rulers of the nation, and to support the soldiers, sailors and marines, and the whole people in the firm discharge of their duty, until the existing rebellion shall be overthrown and the blessing of peace restored to our bleeding country."

In President Lincoln's proclamation, in response to this request, he said:

"We have been the recipients of the choicest bounties of heaven; we have been preserved through many years in peace and prosperity; we have grown in numbers, wealth and power as no other nation has ever grown. But we have forgotten God. We have forgotten the gracious hand which preserved us in peace and multiplied and enriched and strengthened us, and we have vainly imagined, in the deceitfulness of our hearts, that all these blessings were produced by some superior wisdom and virtue of our own. Intoxicated with unbroken success, we have become too self-sufficient to feel the necessity of redeeming and preserving grace, too proud to pray to the God who made us."

After setting the 30th of April as a day of "National humiliation, fasting and prayer," he added:

"All this being done in sincerity and truth, let us then rest humbly in the hope authorized by the divine teachings, that the united cry of the nation will be heard on high and answered with blessings no less than a pardon of our national sins, and the restoration of our now divided and suffering country to its former happy condition of unity and peace."

Shortly after this the tide turned and the North went on to victory after victory. Would it not be well if we should appoint through President Wilson a similar day of prayer? Would not Memorial Day be a suitable time for such an observance? Will not churches and all forms of business and civic organizations, and also individuals, petition the President, asking that Thursday, May 30, be set aside for that purpose?

"Fear Thou Not, For I Am With Thee"

BY ANNE GUILBERT MAHON

"So often I dream of a heavy, dark, threatening cloud overcasting the sky," said a friend, "and it fills me with such a feeling of dread and fear. The cloud is so heavy, so black, so dense. It will be the worst storm I have ever experienced, I think, and I am in an agony of apprehension; yet somehow, always just as the cloud approaches and I think the storm is about to break in all its fury, the cloud suddenly vanishes into sunshine and I laugh at my foolish fears."

"It is only a dream, but it is very realistic, very vivid, and it occurs often. At first the feeling of fear possesses me to such an extent that I am fairly trembling, then the ensuing relief when the cloud disappears and the sun shines again makes a deep impression on me. I often think it is just so in our lives. The blackest clouds that we fear in the future are so often dissipated into sunshine before they reach us, or at best have a bright, shining lining which we can only see when the cloud draws nearer."

Did you ever count the clouds which you feared would overshadow your life and see how many broke into clear sunshine before they reached you; or if the cloud did overshadow you, find that it was not half so black, half so dreadful, as you had imagined, and that you had a wonderful strength given you to weather through it?

"They feared as they entered into the cloud," Luke tells us about the three disciples who were on the mountain-top with their Lord; yet what blessing, what a wonderful experience, came to them from that cloud! They heard God's voice. They were "alone with Jesus." To the end of their lives do you think that Peter and James and John ever forgot the wonder of that experience or ceased to give thanks for it?

"Fear ye not; stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord," Moses told the children of Israel when they were in a perfect panic of terror because the Egyptians were pressing them so closely at the Red Sea. "Go forward," was the Lord's command, and the cloud—the wonderful cloud which led them by day and turned into a pillar of fire by night—went to the rear of their hosts, forming a pillar of safety between them and the pursuing Egyptians. To the Israelites it was a banner of light, to the Egyptians a dark barrier. Look back at the "clouds" which have overshadowed you at various times. Can you not always see a blessing arising from them? You will if you earnestly seek for it.

"Fear not, therefore," but, following the command of the Lord to the Israelites on that perilous journey, "go forward" trusting in the mighty God, your Heavenly Father, to protect you, to care for you, to deliver you. The cloud may be very threatening, but "fear not," only trust, and "go forward." When you reach the point that you so fear the cloud may have vanished, or, if you are called upon to go through it, your Heavenly Father will give you strength and courage and peculiar help at the time, which you cannot foresee now.

"Fear thou not, for I am with thee." Even a dark cloud with Jesus is more blessed than unclouded sunshine away from his presence.

"Fear thou not," he says to us. As he said to the disciples in their terror on the stormy sea, "It is I, be not afraid."

Fear is a mental image only. How many times have you feared far more beforehand than when the actual calamity you anticipated has really befallen you? We rise to emergencies. When we are going through an experience—even a hard experience—it is not half so bad as the anticipation, the dread of it. How foolish we are, then, to make ourselves miserable, to spoil the joy of the days before, to handicap ourselves by sapping our energies with fear and worry.

Let us "go forward," not allowing our minds to dwell on the fear or the possibility of danger in the future but doing our best in the present, praying, trusting, "rejoicing in hope." The cloud will bring us only blessing, even if it comes, and He who said, "Fear thou not, for I am with thee," will bear us safely through.

CHARLES CARROLL ALBERTSON, D. D.

IF I HAD NOT COME—

BY

REV. CHARLES CARROLL ALBERTSON, D. D.

Pastor of the Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, New York

IN the last discourse of Jesus, spoken in the upper room—the historic upper room in which the memorial supper was instituted, in which, later, Jesus appeared to His disciples after the Resurrection, and in which still later each apostle's brow was mitred with the Pentecostal flame—He said a most suggestive thing: "If I had not come—" I had read these words a thousand times and they had never particularly impressed me until during the recent Lenten season, when, for some unexplained reason, the sentence thrust itself upon me and kept repeating itself with insistent force.

Without a doubt this is the greatest IF of history. More things have been wrought by His coming than by any other single act within the chronicles of time. The absence from history of the single fact of His coming would make a vaster difference in all subsequent time than would the absence of any other fact of which we have knowledge. Let us see if it is not so.

"Then said I, Lo, I come: in the volume of the book it is written of me, I delight to do thy will, O my God." What if He had not said it? What if the Eternal Son had not expressed the will of the Father? What if the Incarnation had not been accomplished? Then were we without the supreme revelation of God. Doubtless God reveals Himself in nature, in history, in the moral law, and in the Scriptures, but the highest revelation to life is life itself. Many are blind to God's self-revelation in nature; they misinterpret the significance of natural forces, sometimes confusing the creature thing with its creator, and worshipping God's handiwork instead of worshipping Him. Many are blind to the moral meaning of history. Inherited proclivities to evil have defaced the handwriting of God on the tablets of men's hearts. The written revelation of God is subject to misconstruction. The Word must be made flesh ere men can read it. The Word was made flesh, "and we beheld His glory, the glory as of the only-begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." It is Christ who tells us God is love—tells us God's temper towards the weak, tells us that "the heart of the Eternal is most wonderfully kind." So, if He had not come, we were in ignorance on this point, and this is the most important bit of knowledge in the world—in the universe.

If He had not come, then we were also without a vision of humanity's coming glory. Christ is not only the revelation of the Father, He is the revelation of ourselves at our best. No one of us knows what humanity is capable of until he sees that most beautiful, most heroic, most unselfish, most highly devoted life that gave charm to Palestine nineteen hundred years ago. When we look at humanity as it is, our emotions are stirred to pity, sometimes to contempt, not seldom to despair. But when we look at humanity's prophetic type in the life of Jesus; when we see upon what heights that life was lived; when we perceive the breadth of its sympathies and the depth of its sincerity, we are cured of our despair and our contempt is turned to hope; for the Incarnation is not only the condescension of divinity—it symbolizes the possible elevation of humanity, the coming glory of a race redeemed to goodness, lifted to holiness, rising to immortality and fellowship with God.

Granted that Christ did come, let us inquire, What if He had not successfully resisted temptation? What if He had not stood erect when, in the wilderness, on the mountain-top, and on the temple's pinnacle He measured strength with evil in some mysteriously appealing form? Does it seem over-bold on our part even to suggest that Jesus might have fallen—that He might have consented to the seductive proposals of the adversary? The thought is not more startling than the words of Jesus Himself, "If I had not come—" It is no more unthinkable than that He might have failed to say, "Lo, I come to do Thy will."

If Jesus had not conquered temptation, He had been, in that case, merely on a level with the gods of the pagan world. The Olympians were not always moral. The Greek youth excused himself for many a fatal fault, for many a lapse from correct behavior, by saying, "The gods do this: why should not I?" The moral distance between Jesus of Nazareth and Jupiter is immeasurable. No heathen deity, by the wildest stretch of fancy, can be imagined as feeling himself under the ethical necessity of self-denial. Moreover, if Jesus had not resisted temptation, we who profess and call ourselves Christians were without the inspiring example of spiritual struggle that issues in spiritual strength and ultimate victory.

Sir George Adam Smith, in his commentary on Isaiah, referring to that prophecy, "A man shall be as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land," says, "Sin is simply the longest, heaviest drift in human history. . . . Only Christ resisted, and His resistance saves the world. Alone among human lives presented to our view, that of Christ is sinless. . . . The great tradition was broken; the drift was arrested. Sin could never be the same again after the sinless manhood of Christ."

The victory of Christ over temptation is the high-water mark in the history of the struggle for character. Henceforth let no man say, "Victory is impossible." What one man did we all may do by alliance with the Eternal Power that sustained Him in the conflict and comforted Him when the conflict was over.

There came a time in the life of Jesus when He must make choice of the Cross or turn from it, and in turning from it obtain release from the logical end of a career of active goodness and of resistance to evil. We know the choice He made: "He set His face steadfastly toward Jerusalem." There was courage at its best—"the love of the morally beautiful more than life." If He had escaped the Cross, if He had refused to pursue the straight path which led inevitably to Calvary, then humanity were without an atoning Saviour, and we who are "heirs of salvation" were without a perfect Captain. There is a law of atonement running through life. What are our men doing on the battle-front who throw their lives away with reckless abandon and sublime courage? Each life thus given is a personal contribution to an international atonement, an atonement which shall blossom and fruit in decades and centuries yet to come, and present to God a reconciled international brotherhood. It is the testimony of competent observers, far-seeing and deep-seeing men, that the most thoughtful soldiers already see, dimly or clearly, that the cause they are fighting for is one which qualifies its witnesses and martyrs for fellowship with the Sufferer of Gethsemane and Calvary. There is a stanza in the poem touching by its very homeliness, written by one of the men at the front, entitled "Christ in Flanders" which rightly puts it:

(Continued on page 71.)

The Methodist Centenary World Program

BY HELEN A. BALLARD

This is pre-eminently the time for the Church to take account of its missionary stock: what are its present accomplishments, its resources, its problems, and its purposes for the establishment of the democratic ideal which has already taken root.—Tyler Dennett.

WHILE the battlefields of Europe are strewn with dead, it is significant that seven million Methodists in this country have taken account of their missionary stock and are mobilizing their forces for a forward march to world brotherhood under the banner of Christ.

THIS TEACHER RECENTLY SPENT SEVERAL WEEKS IN A HOSPITAL BECAUSE OF A BEATING BY THE CASTE PEOPLE OF THE VILLAGE, WHO OBJECTED TO HIS INSTRUCTION OF THESE OUTCASTS.

What is the Methodist Centenary World Program?

It is a celebration of the accomplishments of one century by a thorough preparation for the next. It is a five-year program of constructive educational and evangelical work, which will be carried on in the opening years of the new century. Says Bishop James W. Bashford, of China, of this great offensive for home, for country, for humanity:

"The only constructive program before the world to-day is the missionary program of the Methodist Episcopal Church. A large part of the peoples of the world are unready for democracy. Nothing can meet the problem of making them ready but Christian missions, and in that solution our Church with its World Program is taking the lead."

How It Came About

The Centenary had its origin when the Committee on foreign missions of the General Conference, which met at Saratoga Springs in May, 1916, brought the attention of the members to the fact that the first hundred years of Methodist missionary effort was nearing its close and suggested that it be fittingly celebrated. The suggestion was approved and authorized by the Conference, which set apart the years of 1918 and 1919 as the preparation period for the great offensive, and requested that it take the form of greater and more far-reaching activities instead of the old type pat-yourself-on-the-back celebration. With this thought in view, it directed the Boards of Foreign Missions and Home Missions and Church Extension to draw up a World Program.

As a result, a Commission of the Foreign Board was soon making the most careful survey of mission needs in all foreign lands. Not a church, school or hospital was overlooked, nor an existing opportunity for these institutions where the work had not yet penetrated. Later, under a Commission of the Home Board, similar surveys were made for every mission opportunity in the United States and its colonial possessions. Plans for raising to its highest efficiency every branch of present mission activities and promoting new work wherever the need existed, as well as careful estimates of the amount of money needed to provide the necessary workers and equipment to meet the needs, were based upon these surveys.

These two great Boards of the Church then appointed a World Program Committee of one hundred men—pastors and laymen, including some of the leading business men in the country—to go over this material and use it in the mapping out of a constructive plan of celebration. This Committee met at Niagara Falls, and reported their findings, September 17-19, 1917. From these findings the Centenary World Program was evolved. Two months later it was ratified by the Board of Foreign Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church and by the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension.

The Spread of the Movement

In rapid succession other Boards adopted the plan: the Board of Sunday Schools, the Board of Epworth Leagues, the Board of Bishops. Thus was the Church unified under a common purpose. This propensity of the movement to seethe and overflow into other channels is not confined to the internal organizations of the Church. It has jumped the bounds of strict denominationalism and has swept the Methodist Episcopal Church South into co-operation and has persuaded the Canadian Methodist Church to adopt a similar program, and it has invited the sixteen remaining branches of American Methodism, the Liberian and the Japan Methodist Churches to join, including the Methodist Protestant Branch and several of the Colored bodies. Union thus becomes the strongest plank underlying the Centenary World Program. There is unity of effort, one purpose and one result.

The Whole Platform

The whole structure is being reared on a firm foundation, the corner-stones of which are prayer, stewardship, education, finance.

Prayer, the first corner-stone to be laid in the foundation, is the means by which every individual dedicates himself and his resources to the cause. Its tremendous power has already left its impress on the movement. Through it the entire Church is being revived. But the program will not have attained its purpose until it has penetrated to the last Methodist in every little country town, reached to the remote African kraal, and the whole world comes to feel the presence and power of a new Christian nationalism, which it develops.

Stewardship, the second corner-stone, is the one on which rests everything that the individual possesses: time, property, talents—life itself. Consecration, faith and heroism are exacted of every American by the President at this time. The call to stewardship also demands these qualities of every Methodist for this onward movement toward the goal of Christian democracy.

Education, the third corner-stone, supports an international movement for world-citizenship. It seeks to graduate world-citizens who can look on humanity impartially, who endeavor to preserve the best in our civilization to-day, and who gird themselves for an advance in religious, social, civic and political ideals.

Finance, the fourth corner-stone, is the prop without which the whole structure would tumble. But finance, in this world-platform, lifts giving above the material and places it on the spiritual plane, making it an act of worship.

The whole platform calls for an expenditure of $80,000,000 for the Methodist Episcopal Church alone; $40,000,000 for the mission work of the Foreign Board and $40,000,000 for the mission work of the Home Board.

The Methodist Episcopal Church South has fixed $35,000,000 as its minimum goal for mission work at home and abroad, with no limit on the amount which may be raised.

THIS BUDDHIST PRIEST MAY BE CLASSED AS ONE OF THE SPIRITUAL LEADERS OF PRESENT-DAY CHINA.

Promoting the Centenary

Organizing the resources for carrying the Centenary to a successful completion was no small task. The movement called for the highest trained executives in the religious and business world, with a central body in a central location for its directing. From the two missionary boards, the Home and the Foreign, a Joint Centenary Committee was appointed as the directing body, with D. D. Forsyth, who is Corresponding Secretary of the Home Board, as Chairman, and S. Earl Taylor, who is Corresponding Secretary of the Foreign Board, as Executive Secretary.

The officers of the Joint Centenary Committee are located at 111 Fifth Avenue. There the activities of the different departments of the Centenary are in full swing, and every member of the directing or working force feels a loyal personal responsibility for the ultimate success of the movement. There clergymen from the different districts gather for conferences on how best to meet their responsibility for the great offensive in their own churches.

W. E. Doughty, Chairman of the Department for the Development of Spiritual Resources, calls the Centenary "A vision of opportunity, a test of strength, a call to new triumphs." Believing this, he has organized a prayer league, known as "The Fellowship of Intercession," to mobilize the spiritual forces of the Church through an army of intercessors. Reviving and releasing these forces will bring new power to the Church, will put vigor into the attack against social and industrial problems, will help make democracy safe for China, India, Africa and the entire world.

Ralph S. Cushman, who heads the Stewardship Committee, is promoting an organized campaign to secure a million tithers for Methodism. He places the emphasis on the fact that stewardship means paying of the tithe in one's life, in service and in all one's mental, spiritual and physical resources, as well as in one's material possessions.

Realizing that the real basis of world citizenship is education, a Publicity Department of the Joint Centenary Committee was organized for the dissemination of specific and general information. In this department a force of trained writers, directed by Tyler Dennett, Executive, publish a weekly newspaper for workers called "The Centenary Bulletin," furnish a news service for papers all over the country, write for the religious and secular press and prepare every variety of interesting and convincing literature from the first-hand material gathered from interviews with returned missionary leaders and through direct correspondence with the remotest corners of the home and foreign fields.

IF I HAD NOT COME—

(Continued from page 69.)

*"We think about You Kneeling in the Garden—
Ah! God! the agony of that dread Garden—
We know You prayed for us upon the Cross.
If anything could make us glad to bear it,
'Twould be the knowledge that You willed to bear it—
Pain—death—the uttermost of human loss."*

Our meditation would be incomplete were we not to inquire, What if Christ had not risen from the dead? Then were we without final proof of His deity, and without satisfying demonstration of our immortality. The empty

A CHINESE GIRL STUDYING HER EXAMINATION PAPER.

A training school for speakers brings laymen, missionaries and pastors together for instruction in the most effective ways of presenting the Centenary World Program. From this active headquarters trained speakers go out on transcontinental tours and on local itineraries, bearing the message into every church the country over. The lantern slide department of the Foreign Board lays at the disposal of these speakers an assortment of thirty thousand pictures, from which the best are culled that these men may graphically present mission needs and the program mapped out to meet them.

Dr. W. B. Hollingshead is the man chosen to juggle the figures and work out a scheme of allotment by which every church and every individual is given an opportunity to share in the biggest program ever undertaken by any Church. He calls not for large amounts from a few members but for the small sum of ten cents a week from every member. As in the Liberty Loan, he lays stress on the number participating rather than on the amount secured; but on this basis of ten cents a week—the price of an ice cream soda or a Fifth Avenue bus ride—this stupendous amount of $80,000,000 can easily be raised. Being an expert statistician, Dr. Hollingshead realizes that thinking in large figures is not a difficult task if you keep your eyes off the total and ask every individual to do his bit.

Spending the Millions

The Home Board, including its responsibilities in Porto Rico and the Hawaiian Islands, will spend the $40,000,000 to be raised in grappling with its problem among the foreign-speaking peoples at home; in endeavoring to adapt more efficiently the work of the local church to the immediate community it serves, tomb in Joseph's garden is proof that He Who issued from it is creation's Lord and man's ultimate Deliverer. Jesus is "the firstfruits of them that slept." "The lamp of His life is our guide through the tomb."

Ah, if He had not come! What a world of difference it would make. Is it blasphemy to think He might not have come—might have refused to empty Himself of heavenly honor, might have surrendered to the tempter, might have rejected the Cross, might have remained imprisoned in the rocky tomb? Then is it not blasphemy for us to refuse to incarnate His spirit? Is it not a monstrous thing for us to compromise with evil? Have we any better whether in metropolitan city, small town, agricultural community, Southern mountains, far-stretching frontier or our island possessions. It will seek to work out the larger program of full community service through every church in every field—a program suggested by need and opportunity, covering a religious, social, educational and civic ministry limited only by the resources that the Board can command. It will try to do all this with some vision of the greater democracy which is sure to follow the war, and with the aim to help keep America in the van of the nations.

The Foreign Board will spend two or more of its $40,000,000 for reconstruction work in Europe, some of which will go for the building of schools with a curriculum adapted to the peculiar educational needs of to-day and the reconstruction period to come. The balance of the money will be distributed over the entire foreign field. Some of it will go for schools in China, where the watchword is more and better education. In poverty-stricken India special emphasis will be placed on industrial training and particularly on the value of intensive farming, where practical demonstrations will be given. The work for Africa is planned to meet the spiritual, educational and economic needs of that country; and in South America the effort will be to create better opportunities for self-support through industrial education, and by raising the ideals of life and living to create that much needed factor in South American life—a middle class.

Looking Forward

This present year is set apart as a period of education. The financial drive, though the time is not yet definitely fixed, will take place some time between January, 1919, and the actual centennial celebration, which will be held in June, 1919, if the war permits of carrying out the whole program. At that time one week will be set apart for a gathering of all the representatives of Methodism for a general survey of the past hundred years of mission work and of the Centenary activities of 1918; for listening to inspirational talks by world leaders; for reviewing mission work through a great pageant staged on a colossal scale; and for the promotion of a closer friendship between workers on the field and supporters at home.

The last half of 1919 will be given up to sectional meetings in the North, South, East and West, for conserving the inspiration and enthusiasm aroused through the educational period and the Columbus celebration, for crystallizing plans, and a girding for the first five years of the new century during which the Centenary World Program will be promoted as a start on the great task of the next hundred years.

right to refuse to bear the cross? Each of us is appointed to be in our human sphere as real an incarnation of Christ as Christ was appointed, in His divine sphere, to be an incarnation of God. Each of us is a possible victor over the forces that tend to degrade life to the level of the ape, the swine, the tiger. For each of us there is a Gethsemane and a Calvary. There is an easy way around, but we are no more at liberty to choose it than was Jesus. "It is a faithful saying that if we die with Jesus, we shall also live with Him." These words mean that we who follow Christ on earth shall share with Him the Resurrection. Already we feel within us the power of the world to come.

PRINTED PREACHERS

Literature in the Orient

"The printed page has already become a most important educational factor, not only in Japan, but throughout the Orient," says Tyler Dennett in his little book, "Foreign Missions and World-Wide Democracy." He says that the foreign missionary introduced the modern printing-press to the Orient, teaching the natives how to set type and do their own printing, and now this knowledge is being used by non-Christians to spread their ideas. "The native non-Christian press," he says, "is now supplying a deluge of secular literature, much of it obscene. After investigation and inquiry, I believe it is safe to say that there is now hardly a village in Japan, China or India to which some kind of printed matter does not eventually penetrate." Mr. Murdoch Mackenzie, of China, in making the same statement in regard to that country, adds: "With the dawn of a new day in China there is a new demand for such a literature as is fitted to meet the changing and more complex situation. Christianity will adapt itself to the ever-increasing demands made upon it to show that it has a work for God to do which cannot be done by any other system, and will prove itself to be as mighty an intellectual and spiritual force in modern China as it was at first in ancient Judea, in cultured Greece, and in mighty Rome."

Tract Work in China

The students of the Bible School in Honan go out two days a week—from Saturday noon to Monday noon—for evangelistic work, carrying with them small packages of tracts. On their return they report their work in full, and one day they were asked, "If the war should cause all tract-printing and distribution to cease, to what extent would you miss the tracts?" The answers were unanimous as to their value, one student saying:

"If I could not leave a tract in the hands of interested men who can read, I would feel that I had accomplished only half of what I should have done on the trip."

Another added:

"When I return to where a tract was left I always find something to start from and build on, while if I had only preached to them I seldom find that much is remembered."

The Secretary of this Tract Society says:

"The thanks of all who are interested in this Society are due this year, as in so many continuous years past, to the three great Tract Societies in the West, the Religious Tract Society of London, the American Tract Society of New York and the Upper Canada Tract Society of Toronto. In times of stress such as these it has meant much to us to feel that behind us was the active sympathy and co-operation of the Committees of these three organizations. Each has contributed once and again to our financial needs, but of more value to us far has been the advice, the comfort and the cheer which have been so freely given."

In Korea

The Korean Religious Tract Society, in order to show the scope of its work, has added the word "book" to its name, so that it is now the Korean Book and Tract Society. Its object is to prepare and distribute Christian literature of every kind and not tracts alone, and there is a wide field in Korea. A little more than a year ago it began the publication of a union Christian newspaper, The Christian Messenger. The first year it had 2,118 paid-up subscriptions, and though some of these were not renewed at the expiration of the year, other new names were secured, so that now it has 2,970 subscribers, and 30 copies are sent out free, making a printing of 3,000 copies. "This is very good," the report says, "but when we consider that this is the only Christian newspaper issued by the missions affiliated with the Federal Council, and these missions report a membership of about 125,000, the circulation is not what it should be. The editor, Rev. Kim Pil Soo, visited several centers where Bible classes were being held and was successful in securing many new subscribers and increasing the interest in the paper."

Courtesy of the Centenary Committee, M. E. Church,
A JAPANESE BOOK STORE

The treasurer gratefully acknowledges help received from the home lands, saying:

"The two home societies have continued to render generous help. In addition to a grant of £50 from the Religious Tract Society of London a sum of £34 12 shillings has been received for the purpose of publishing two editions, one in Eunmoon and one in Mixed Script, of Bishop Moule's 'Thought on Christian Sanctity.' We have also received a grant of $100 gold from the American Tract Society of New York. These grants have been a great help to our work, and we extend our hearty thanks to the above societies."

A Chinese Calendar

The North and Central Tract Society has for several years put out a calendar which, while conveying the information which the Chinese purchaser will naturally expect to find, shall also convey a gospel message.

"When it is remembered that these Calendars are pasted up in conspicuous places in shop, in home and in inn, it will be seen that the message may easily reach a large number of those who are looking for the dates or who have leisure. The 1918 Calendar was prepared by Mr. Upward, who selected as his theme 'The Bread of Life,' and in text, tract, pictures and border worked it out. The Society felt that despite the high cost of paper the old price must be charged, for otherwise the sales by the colporters would be seriously interfered with. The demand has already been large and it is probable that the Calendar for 1918 will enjoy a circulation in excess of the large circulation of previous issues."

What One Colporter Visit Accomplished

Fifteen years of work for the American Tract Society is the record of Mr. John Martineo, who has travelled in Pennsylvania over four thousand miles by train and trolley, "but mostly by my own human train, my feet," has visited 3,904 families and spoken in 104 meetings. His work is among the Slavs, "and never before," he says, "have the Slavonic people been so closely united as they are at the present time, and almost all of them are loyal to the American cause."

"That you may understand what colporter work among these people does, let me tell you one instance: Some years ago a colporter came into a dirty coke manufacturing village and found a group of ignorant, gay young men. He sold several good books—Bibles, 'Pilgrim's Progress' and others—little thinking what the result would be. From that very group of young men have come two colporters, a medical doctor, and a minister of the gospel and through them we have several young men and girls in different educational institutions preparing themselves for mission work among their country folk. So after all it pays to support this kind of work, though the results are not always seen at once."

Tracts in a Home for the Aged

On February 14, 1918, the representative of the American Tract Society visited the Memorial Home at St. Louis, Mo., and held a religious service with the inmates, one hundred and twenty-five in number.

"The meeting was held in the evening in the spacious dining room. An illustrated stereopticon lecture on the American Tract Society's work in the United States and foreign lands, with an addition of some beautiful California views, was given. The Scripture passage and the hymns were read from the screen. The pictures were briefly elucidated and on each plate was laid a tract. The Spirit of God was in our midst and the meeting was very much appreciated, many of these aged servants of the Lord coming forward and thanking us for the service."

Notes From the Field

Colporter Rev. James Dunlap, of Los Angeles, Calif., writes as follows:

"One difficulty in doing colportage work now is the war, with its many calls.

"The Spanish people are showing an increased desire to learn the truth and to worship God according to the dictates of their conscience, but are more or less apprehensive of the priests, and their funds are meagre.

"We trust this year will see the end of this terrible slaughter of human beings and that men may again be clothed in their right minds."

Mr. E. C. Tozier, of Greenleaf, Idaho, writes: "The people greatly appreciate the American Tract Society books. One woman remarked to me: 'No one can read these books without being better for it.'"

The Tract Society never sends out a book or tract unless it has a message for Christ in its pages, and these messages find their way to many hearts.

HIS VINEYARD AND OURS

ARMENIAN REFUGEES WASHING WOOL IN THE FAMOUS ARAS RIVER, FED BY THE SNOWS OF MT. ARARAT.

Armenia's Tragedy

BY SAMUEL T. DUTTON.

Since 1914 the world has witnessed its surfeit of tragedies. There has been the wanton, heart-breaking tragedy of Belgium, shorn of its splendors and robbed of its industries; the war-torn tragedy of Poland, with conquering armies sweeping one after another over its beautiful fields and through its stately old towns; the tragedy of Serbia, invaded from the north by the Barbarians and ravaged from end to end. But of all the tragedies of the war, that of Armenia is the most harrowing. Here the cup of bitterness flows over. As if the history of this afflicted people were not gloomy and unhappy enough, this latest page has surpassed everything before it, in horror and despair.

The Armenian race scattered all over Asia Minor, Syria, Palestine, the Russian Caucasus and Persia has for centuries been subject to suffering. The terrible plight of these people to-day beggars description. They have not only suffered from invading armies, and been driven from their homes by the conquerors, but they have been set upon by their own neighbors; they have had to bear again the fearful persecution of the Turk, sustained and strengthened by the thorough-going co-operation of his German superiors; they have been massacred and deported and tortured.

In the orient, where initiative and efficiency are often lacking, the Armenian has shown a remarkable industry. He has loved learning and has set up, with the small fund at his disposal, schools for his children throughout the Ottoman Empire, when the Government has flagrantly neglected to provide for the education of its own people. The Armenian has kept tenaciously to his religion, which has symbolized to him his national unity. He has developed industries and has shown unusual ability at finance and commerce. He is pre-eminently law-abiding. For all these things he has been hated and persecuted and last of all this greatest of afflictions has fallen upon him. The Syrian, too, equally a victim of this same wholesale deportation, has suffered untold persecution. It is said that in the region of the Lebanon death and destruction were more rampant than anywhere else.

It is difficult to grasp the purpose of a government in this twentieth century which has attempted to annihilate a whole people. For many years previous to the war, hatred and distrust existed between the Turks and the Armenians. Add to this the new idea of turkification of the Empire which has taken possession of the Young Turk leaders, and perhaps it is possible to understand in some degree how the idea of the elimination of the Armenians, as unfit for complete turkification, was conceived. The idea has been carried out with primitive barbarity. Deportation, massacres and disorganization, with the natural results of starvation and disease, have been the methods. What makes it all the more appalling is the fact that it was organized by a so-called government and put through by government officials. It is generally agreed that Germany will be held ultimately guilty in this crime.

The Armenian and Syrian Relief Committee in America, six thousand miles away from this pitiful scene of devastation and pain, is trying to stem the increasing tide of human suffering by every means in its power. The history of the growth of this committee, with the self-sacrifice of its workers at home as well as in the field, and with the co-operation of generous Americans, makes our interest in Armenia has only begun. It is to increase with the years and be of a wide and permanent nature. Already we can see that time coming. And let us hope that out of the depths, the broken people of the Bible Lands, which have given to the West the precious heritage of its religion, these people may be raised again to a life of peace, to a sense of security, to an assurance that their terrible trials and afflictions and sufferings are over for all time.

The True Light

She was an old, old woman living in Chalchuapa, Central America. When her years were counted, they numbered 112. The strange, sweet tale of Jesus and his love came to her one day. With wonderful vigor she rode for miles in an ox-cart to be baptized in a lake. All her life she had been haunted by the awful fear of devils and evil spirits, and it was her custom to burn candles all night long to ward off the evil influence. The at-

"Lead Us to Heaven."

One of the missionaries of the Presbyterian Church at Matsuyama, Japan, recently received a postal from a young man, not a Christian, in which he asks her to "lead us to heaven." The card reads:

"Imagining that it will be very good for us that we consist of the party whose are anxious to study in the Bible, I wish you that, would you not teach us the Bible and lead us to the heaven, if you please or not."

We may smile at the English, but a good many people are not prepared to write perfect Japanese. The remarkable thing is that the spirit of docility and regardfulness should be so strikingly manifested by one who has not yet become a Christian. The missionary thinks that the earnestness shown by a group of young men in his community in the study of the Bible is an evidence of the work of the Holy Spirit in their hearts. Let Christian people pray that this young man and many others in Japan may yield their hearts to Jesus Christ and find him leading them to heaven.

Would You Give Your House?

J. D. Van Buskirk, of Seoul, Korea, says in Missionary News:

"I preached in Taichun the other night, and after urging the people to consecrate all to the Lord, we discussed how to get a new church there. They now have a tiny one-room hut they use, and they pack too many folks into it. The local leader urged sacrifice in giving and they nobly responded. A little congregation of less than forty poor Koreans gave pledges for over $90, which would represent more than ten times that amount in America. There was one young man, who makes a meager living as a barber, and his Sabbath observance costs. He is so faithful that he has been made an Exhorter. He arose and said, 'You all know me and that I have no money; that it is all I can do to make a bare living at my trade. I have but one thing I possess, that is my little two-room house. But for the sake of the Lord's work here I will sell my house and give the price to the church. And the Lord will take care of my wife and me.' His house is for sale and he also pledged that out of his earnings he would give them $10 in money. If I did not know that the Lord will not let such sacrifice and faith go unrewarded, I should protest against his giving so. He gave his all. I never saw a happier congregation than that little congregation that night and this man was happiest of all."

A Hopeful Forward Look

President Harada, of the Doshisha University, Japan, expresses the belief that "the Japanese people, after the war is over, will be the more rather than the less ready to receive Christianity, since their minds will have become more open through the expansion of their interests in the general good of the whole world, as well as of their own country." He thinks we should be prepared for a "revival of religious interest in the Far East, as the East comes into more complete consciousness of the nobler motives that find expression even in the war itself."

Mexico Looking to Christ

A better day is dawning for Mexico. Reports from the various agencies at work there report there is a hunger for the Word of God. This is only one instance. A Baptist missionary writes: "Crowds are literally clamoring to hear the Gospel message. There never has been a time when the people wanted to hear and know and follow the teachings of Christ as now. It begins to look almost like a mass movement such as they have had in other foreign countries. These are truly great days, and we must not let these open doors close to us, for lack of men and means."

MAKING THE REFUGEES SELF-SUPPORTING. DOING UP THE SUITS INTO BALES READY TO BE DISTRIBUTED TO WOMEN FOR SEWING.

fascinating reading. To-day, centers of relief have been organized in scores of cities throughout these desolate lands. Constantinople, Tiflis, Jerusalem, Teheran, Bagdad, Cairo, Tabriz and Beirut each is a nucleus of a whole region of relief numbering scores of small towns and villages in a radius of many miles. With the occupation of parts of Palestine by the British, opportunity for relief is growing. Armenians and Syrians are daily escaping to the haven of the Russian Caucasus of the British conquered territory, begging for bread and clothing. Missionaries and consuls work in out-of-the-way places, risking, indeed some of them giving, their lives for this splendid work of the good Samaritan. They constantly write for more funds; each week brings cables asking for continued support and continued generosity.

We must not only take heed for the present but must look for the future. America has taken up in some measure the burden of Armenia. The freest of the nations holds out its hands to the most downtrodden. In the future there will be more and greater work to do, the constructive work of rehabilitation, so that properly speaking we might say that tendants came to light her candles as usual and she said, "Nay, not so. I have found Jesus. I have found the true Light and I am no longer afraid."

The Mass Movement in India

The Central Christian Advocate says: "Of the 300,000,000 people of India, nine-tenths live in villages. These villages are so numerous that if Jesus Christ had continued to live on the earth until now and had visited one village daily, even now, after nearly 2,000 years, he would be far from having completed the circuit! There is a head man in every Indian village whose business in the evening is to rehearse in the ears of his villagers, none of whom can read, the traditions of their forefathers. Recently many of these village leaders have been converted to Christ and for traditions have substituted 'The Gospel of the Blessed God,' which they are preaching to those under them. The result is 'The Mass Movement,' in which hundreds of thousands of the masses are pressing forward to be baptized, most of whom must be put off for lack of instructors who shall teach them 'the first principles of the Gospel of Christ.'"

Notes upon the Topics Used
in Christian Endeavor
and Other Young People's Societies.

THE PRAYER MEETING

By
Rev. Henry Lewis
Ph.D.

MAY 5.

Conduct in the Home and School

Ephesians 6:1-9; Mark 5:19.

CONSECRATION MEETING.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M., Apr. 29. Co-operation. 1 Cor. 12:12-26.
T., Apr. 30. Good manners. Col. 3:18-25.
W., May 1. Helpfulness. Ruth 2:1-3.
T., May 2. Cheerfulness. Prov. 15:13.
F., May 3. Patience. 1 Thess. 2:1-8.
S., May 4. Burden-bearing. Rom. 15:1-3.

As measured by time, conduct for a young person in the home and school is of more importance than conduct in the church. Little time, relatively, is spent in church, but much time is spent in home and school. This does not mean that standards of conduct vary. It does imply that in the ordinary relations of life the question of conduct is of the utmost importance.

As the two passages of Scripture are compared, it is noticed that in one certain rules of conduct are stated. In the single verse in Mark, a given thing is demanded. But in both passages, Christian experience is assumed. Let us consider the verse in Mark.

Change

The change in the man was radical. Perhaps in no other experience recorded in Scripture is the change wrought by Christ so impressively stated. A man in the grip of an unclean spirit is given his mental and moral freedom. As the rags are torn from the body of an out-cast and a new suit of clothes given to him, so this poor man is clothed in his right mind.

Weakness

But change, if it be radical, produces weakness. One long sick with fever finds himself very weak when the fever leaves him. This was the condition of this man. The world was a strange thing for him. He knew that Christ entering the boat had strength. He wanted to go with Him, because he feared to be alone with himself.

Exercise

The man, however, did not need the rest of a sail across the lake in the boat. His need was exercise. When the convalescent period comes the patient may find himself weak. But his only hope of regaining strength is in using his body. So with this man. The Physician prescribes the one thing that he needs—a visit to his home, there to tell his family about the change.

Permanent Cure

Christ knew that a permanent cure depended upon the man. Christ can do for us what no one else can do. But each of us must do what even Christ cannot do. As the Apostle says: "We are God's fellow-workers." And Christ has him do the thing he is able to do, a thing simple in itself, yet important. Namely a return to his home, there to tell what had happened. For a moment, as the boat left the shore, he felt disappointed. But soon he discovered that the Divine Friend was with him in spirit as he lived his life amid human friends.

Suggestions

All of us learn by doing. The child learns to write by filling the page of a copy book. The boy uses his hand in manual training because thought is related to action. The student experiments in the laboratory that he may learn chemistry. The guiding thought of modern education is—learn by doing. Make your Christian experiments in the home and school.

Religion and life are one. Because the home and school form the larger part of life for a young person, there the testing is found. Make good in the ordinary relations of life, and the special occasions will take care of themselves. It may be more difficult to be a Christian at seven o'clock in the morning on a week day, than a Christian at seven o'clock Sunday evening when the Young People's meeting is held.

MAY 12.

Christian Endeavor Fellowship

1 John 1:1-7.

DAILY READINGS.

M., May 6. Bond of fellowship. Eph. 4:1-6.
T., May 7. Fellowship with Christ Luke 24:15, 32.
W., May 8. Fellowship with God. Gen. 5:24.
T., May 9. Fellowship with one another. Mal. 3:13-18.
F., May 10. Fellowship in service. Phil. 1:1-7.
S., May 11. Fellowship in joy. Acts 4:23-31.

This question of fellowship is a big one just now. Curiously it is coming to the front with fresh emphasis because of the war. The reason for this is apparent. Most of the effort to alleviate the suffering or safeguard the morals of our men in army and navy is not taking an ecclesiastical or denominational form. At least the men receiving this assistance accept it as simply Christian. And the young men find themselves for the time being lifted out of their church relations. They are parts of a great force under a common flag. Let us consider the question from this angle.

International

This is a word to conjure with in these days. Much is made of the fact that certain nations are standing together in a common cause. The flags of these nations are grouped. But the word is an old one for the Christian Endeavor. For years its organization has been international. Without much flag-waving it has quietly attempted to make real the kingdom of righteousness among men.

Something Deeper

The brotherhood of the Allied Nations is something impressive. But there is only one thing that can make that brotherhood lasting. And that is the Spirit of Jesus Christ. The spirit of fear because of the enemy or the spirit of hatred towards the enemy cannot do it. If there is nothing more than fear and hate, mingled with courage, the old rivalries will assert themselves when the war ends. Something deeper in the hearts of men must exist, and that something is Christian experience.

Mission

And this the Christian Endeavor movement stands for. This thought should be kept to the front in the meetings. From these societies thousands of young men have gone to serve their country. The work at home will suffer because of their absence. But the deeper work of Christ will prosper because of their presence in army and navy. During their absence those who remain at home should strike the note of fellowship as based upon Christian experience.

Evidence

It should not be forgotten that the evidence for Christianity is a Christian. And the evidence of real fellowship is Christian experience as expressed in 1 John 1:7: "If we walk in the light, as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another." What a glorious work this is! Much is said about a "League to Enforce Peace." But the way to enforce peace is to possess peace and increase the number. Every young person with a Christian experience is a factor in creating the "international mind," which is the kingdom of God on earth.

Courage

The task is a noble one. It is not hopeless, even though the world be torn with strife. The worldly man may not be impressed by the program. For "peace is not as the world giveth," and "it passeth all understanding." But it is the final solution.

Suggestions

First, remember an ounce of practice is worth a pound of theory. Spend little time on schemes to promote fellowship. Just practice it. Think of your society as an international force to make real the will of God among men.

Second, resist the hate mania of these war times. Keep your heart pure and strong. Do not permit your Christian spirit to be smothered in the froth of a mere atrocity bitterness. The men battling in France have no time for this.

MAY 19.

Education: the Doorway to Service

2 Timothy 2:15; Luke 6:40.

DAILY READINGS.

M., May 13. Moses' education. Acts 7:20-34.
T., May 14. Paul's opportunities. Acts 22:1-5.
W., May 15. Timothy's preparation. 2 Tim. 1:7.
T., May 16. Training utilized. Exod. 35:30-35.
F., May 17. Trained in the temple. 1 Sam. 3:1-4.
S., May 18. Daniel at school. Dan. 1:1-4, 17.

The wording of the subject is suggestive, or rather the bringing together of the words "education" and "service." As a frame is over against yet a part of the picture, so education is distinct from yet connected with service. It is possible to have education without service even as it is possible to have a frame without the picture. But as the frame adds to the picture, so education makes effective service. They are related.

Text-Book

This, of course, is the Word of God. In this Word the revelation of God in Jesus Christ is found. There can be no doubt about the text-book for the Christian. He may study other books and with profit. But to neglect the Book of Books is to miss education in the Christian sense.

Length of Course

It is only a book and carried in the hand as any other book. It is printed on paper and bound as other books are printed and bound. But, somehow, the old Book is never outgrown. In the schools new text-books are constantly introduced. Sir Isaac Newton, perhaps the greatest mathematical genius of history, after a lifetime of study, said he only began to know the Bible.

A Graded Course

You can begin at any age the study of this Book. The waters are shallow enough for lambs to wade in and deep enough for elephants to swim in. The moment you open the Book you find something. You begin the Christian life by being called a disciple, that is, a learner. This you never cease to be.

A Human Course

If the Bible consisted of treatises on Art, History or Science, it might be outgrown. These subjects have their limitations. As regards history, there are certain periods about which all may be known by the examination of a few documents. But the Bible deals with life. You read a few verses, then go forth to the day's work, only to find that the verses go with you. In life as lived you find expressed the Bible as studied.

A Related Course

More than this the Bible greets you in the lives of others. Many a thought of the Scripture seems indefinite until met with in some other life. For no one exhausts in his own experience the meaning of the Bible. This explains the value of Christian fellowship and the injunction, "Forsake not the assembling of yourselves."

Result

The Danes define education "as that which remains after what you have learned is forgotten." The definition is true of Christian education for service. An educated Christian is something more than a "biblical shark." The old distinction between the large and small college has truth in it: "In one you go through more; in the other more goes through you." So with God's Word. The question is not, How much do you know of it? but, How much of it have you worked over into character?

MAY 26.

Doing His Will

John 15:8-14.

DAILY READINGS.

M., May 20. Christ and God's will. John 9:4.
T., May 21. The motive—love. John 14:23, 24.
W., May 22. The command to shine. Matt. 5:14-16.
T., May 23. The command to go. Matt. 28:16-20.
F., May 24. The command to trust. John 14:1-3.
S., May 25. The command to serve. John 13:14-17.

How few are the words in this subject. Only three of them—Doing His Will. Probably there are no three words in language which brought together can express so much as these three words. They contain about all there is of the Christian religion. Their meaning cannot be exhausted. Let us meditate on their meaning.

A Question

They imply that our wills are to be yielded to another. This a person may hesitate to do. He may willingly respond to the request of another. But to yield his will to another for life is something more serious. And so he may well ask: "What kind of a being is God who makes this demand upon my personality?"

The Answer

It is found in the Scriptures. The demand being a serious one, a thoughtful person will examine his Bible with care. There he will find the record of one who says, "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." So the question arises, Does Christ as revealed suggest God? This only leads to another question: Is God as revealed in Christ one to whom I should submit my will? The answers to these questions are unmistakable. With Thomas the Christian says, "My Lord and my God!" And He becomes such because He wins our moral allegiance. That is, our will is submitted to His will.

The Teaching

As the teaching of Christ regarding the Will of God is examined, one fact is clear, namely, moral freedom is the result. Two statements of Christ will show this. One is, "I am come that ye might have life." The other is, "He that willeth to do the will of the Father shall know." That is, life and truth are the result of doing God's will. This is a thought that needs emphasis. To do God's will does not mean the blind subservience to a power greater than our own. Rather it is the free, conscious, and deliberate yielding of ourselves to God, who plans for us better than we can plan for ourselves. A Christian is more of a man than a man who is not a Christian. For in doing God's will he gains his liberty.

"Doing"

Two things are mentioned by John in the lesson for to-day. One is, the Christian does God's will when he bears fruit. "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit." The other is, those doing God's will are bound together by a deep love. "This is my commandment, that ye love one another." The doctrine of the Will of God may be a philosophy of the universe. And it is this. It satisfies the reason as no other doctrine. But more than this, it is a rule of life.

The Motive

This seems to have been the thought uppermost in the mind of Christ when He spoke these words. He realized that life is determined by its motive. And so he brings to bear upon their lives the motive of His divine love—"Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." The doctrine of the Will of God leads us to the Cross of Christ.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS

"God Bless All Our Boys!"

The big flag that had been flying from the Oswalds' front porch had caught on a nail and quite a tear was made in it; so father when he brought it in one night said, "Grandma, here's a task for your skillful needle. We can't have Old Glory showing a ragged front, can we? And Memorial Day ought to find our flag curling out to the breeze in perfect order."

So Grandma Oswald sat down to her task bright and early the next morning, and Paul brought his picture-book and sat watching her before it was time to start for his kindergarten.

Grandma's shining needle wove in and out through the broad white stripe so deftly that Paul was sure that by the time she had finished you could hardly tell that it had been darned. But by-and-by as Paul looked he saw something else shining. He saw one and then two and three teardrops fall from grandma's eyes down on the flag.

Paul's little heart was full of love and sympathy. He didn't know what was the matter, but he got up and stood by grandma's side and put one chubby arm around her neck.

Grandma looked up into the kind little face with a brave smile like sunshine through the rain, for two more bright drops fell as she did so.

"Never mind, Paul dear," she said. "I was thinking—thinking of the long ago when Grandpa Oswald went to the war in 1862, and never came back, and I was left to bring up my two little folks—your papa and your Aunt Agnes—as best I could.

"And then I was thinking, too, about the dreadful war we are having now, and how many of our dear, splendid American boys have gone 'over there' to fight for our liberty and the liberty of the world, and how so many of them will never come back."

"Will my big brother John come back?" asked Paul.

"We don't know, dearie. We just had to put him in God's loving care when he sailed away to France, and we'll keep him surrounded with a circle of prayer. God knows how we love him and how all the mothers and fathers love their boys, and we must trust them with Him. It's a brave, brave fight they're making, God bless them!"

As Paul started for school he stood for a minute by the little Service Flag with its star in the window, and said softly, "Dear God, bless my brother—and all our boys!"

Tommy's Eyes

BY EARL REED SILVERS

After little Tom had been put to bed, and the house was quiet with a kind of oppressive stillness, Mrs. Armstrong announced to Jack the verdict of Dr. Tompkins, the famous physician at the hospital.

"He says that there is something growing over Tommy's eye," she announced, "and that unless he is operated on within the next two weeks he will go blind."

Jack gazed at his mother with startled eyes.

"Not blind for always?" he questioned. "Yes, for the rest of his life; only an operation can save him."

"And is the doctor going to operate?" "No." Mrs. Armstrong spoke softly, but in her voice was the sadness of ages of mother love and suffering.

Jack's eyes opened in amazement. "Why not?" he demanded shrilly. "Mother, we mustn't have Tommy blind!"

"Maybe we won't be able to help it, Jack. The operation will cost two hundred dollars."

Two hundred dollars! It might as well have been two thousand. Jack's heart missed a beat as the portent of his mother's words came to him. Living as they did from hand to mouth, with only his own slim wages to supplement his mother's earnings as a dressmaker, the sum which would mean more than life to his younger brother was as far beyond his reach as was the evening star.

"Mother!" he gasped, "does it mean that Tommy must go blind?"

The woman's eyes filled suddenly with tears; her head dropped miserably into her furrowed hands.

"I guess it does, Jack," she said.

For a moment the boy did not answer. The ticking of the old square clock on the mantelpiece filled the room with sounds which seemed suddenly ominous. Boyishly helpless, Jack sat staring at his mother's bent head. Tommy must go blind! Over and over again he repeated the phrase, scarcely realizing its portent, yet understanding his own helplessness in the face of the impending disaster. Tommy must go blind! His little brother, who laughed at the sunshine and loved all things beautiful, must spend the rest of his life in darkness! Tommy must go blind!

Jack's own eyes suddenly became misty with tears. Half angrily he wiped them away and looked across at his mother, became unbearably oppressive; it seemed as if something was pushing him down, squeezing the last remnant of youth and hope from his heart. He wanted to cry out, to stretch forth his arms and rail against the hand of fate which had brought this latest burden upon him. He felt as if he could not stay in the house a moment longer.

"Maw," he said huskily, "I'm going to take a walk. I'll be back as soon as I can."

It was midsummer, and night had not yet fallen. People sat in the cool of the porches bordering each side of the narrow street; on one curbstone three little girls, with the instinct of potential motherhood, were preparing their dolls for bed. Jack smiled at them mechanically, and passed on.

He had no object in view, no purpose except to get away from the house in which his little brother lay sleeping. He walked on and on, turning from one street to another without knowing where he went.

Suddenly a shrill cry pierced his consciousness, arousing him from his semi-creature, feeling instinctive confidence in his new friend, nestled in his arms. Jack patted the tiny head encouragingly. "You poor little pup," he whispered, "I guess that you have your troubles, too."

The pain in his own heart seemed to have miraculously disappeared, and with the dog in his arms he made his way homeward. His mother was still sitting in the chair as he had left her.

"I found this dog in the street," he announced, anxious to say something which would divert the thoughts he knew were in her mind. "Some kids were pestering him, so I brought him home."

His mother nodded. "Maybe to-morrow you can find his owner," she answered. "We'll fix a box for him for to-night."

After the dog was comfortably settled, Jack went up to his own room and tried to sleep. But he tossed and rolled restlessly until his mother called him at five o'clock, and all during his paper route he thought hopelessly of Tommy and the darkness which awaited him.

There was one paper left over when he returned home, and while he ate his breakfast of oatmeal and rolls his mother glanced over the sheet.

"Oh, Jack," she announced suddenly, "here is an advertisement about the dog you found, I think. Read it."

She indicated the place on the page, and Jack read eagerly.

"Lost: yesterday afternoon in the vicinity of Jackson street, a small black and tan dog. Reward if returned to 169 Maple Terrace."

Jack glanced at the clock. "I guess it is the little fellow I found," he said. "I have plenty of time to go over before school. I'll take him to the house now and see."

It was almost an hour before he returned, and as he slammed into the kitchen, he greeted his mother with shining eyes. But there was something mysterious about his answer when Mrs. Armstrong inquired concerning the result of his errand.

"I'll start from the beginning and tell you all about it," he said. "The house on Maple Terrace was a great big one, with a garage in back. I was almost afraid to ring the bell, but finally I did and a servant came to the door. When she saw the dog, she asked me to come right in, and I went into one of the swellest rooms I ever saw.

"After a minute a fat man came in the room and asked me how I happened to find Fido. That's the dog's name, I guess. I told him, and when I had finished, he asked me to sit down and tell him what in the world I wanted the most. I told him that I didn't want anything, but he said that all boys wanted lots of things and that I looked like a real boy to him. He was awfully nice about it, and before I knew what I was doing, I had told him about Tommy and what the doctor had said about his eyes."

He paused, and Mrs. Armstrong nodded.

"Yes?" she encouraged. "And then," Jack continued excitedly, "he said that Tommy's eyes were mighty important things and that we mustn't let them get blind. And I told him that I guessed we couldn't help it, but he said that he guessed he could help it because his name was Tompkins and he was the big doctor over at the hospital. And he told me that you was to come to the hospital this afternoon at three o'clock, and that he would give Tommy back his eyes again."

Jack paused suddenly, watching his mother to see what effect his words would have upon her. He expected her to smile, but instead, she sank suddenly into the kitchen chair and cried as if her heart would break. For a moment Jack watched her, and then his eyes too filled with tears. But they were tears of the greatest happiness he had ever known.

"GRANDMA'S SHINING NEEDLE WOVE IN AND OUT."

whose shoulders were still shaking convulsively.

"Maw!" he said suddenly, "there must be some way for us to get the money."

It was as if he had not spoken. His mother's head remained bent; rending sobs shook her slender body. Jack rose and walked over to her side, placing a hand awkwardly on her arm.

"Maw," he said, "don't cry."

There was a world of appeal in his voice, and his mother, suddenly brave again, raised her head and smiled pathetically.

"We'll have to do the best we can, Jack," she said, "and trust in God's goodness to find a way out."

"Ain't there any way we can get the money?" Jack demanded. "Won't some one lend it to us?"

"I guess not, son. Men don't lend money to people like us."

The unfairness of it all swept over Jack with startling suddenness. His mother's brave fight for a livelihood for herself and her two sons, the three long years since his father's death, his own attempts to bear his share of the burden—all these passed through his mind in silent review. It had been hard enough before! And now, Tommy was going blind! It wasn't fair! They didn't deserve it!

A realization of his helplessness, of the helplessness of his mother, who had fought the good fight with undimmed courage, overwhelmed him. The room stunor, bringing him with jerking suddenness to a realization of the present. Startled, he looked around. He was in a strange part of town, the houses were unfamiliar. Directly across the street from where he had stopped, three boys, smaller than himself, unkempt and uncombed, had captured a tiny black and tan dog, and with unconscious cruelty were preparing to subject him to torture. While one held him in a vise-like grip, the others, none too gently, were wrapping a ball of twine around his hind legs. The dog, sensitive, unaccustomed to rough treatment, shivered piteously. Something in his cringing attitude, in his fear-filled eyes, touched a responsive chord in Jack's heart.

He hurried across the street. "What are you kids doing?" he demanded.

The boys looked up resentfully. "We're going to turn him into a kangaroo," one of them answered.

"Where did you get the dog?"

"Found him."

"Don't you know where he lives?"

"No; he ain't got no home, I guess."

"Well, give him here. I'll take care of him."

The leader of the trio glanced up sullenly, half inclined to disobey the command, but there was something about the gleam in Jack's eyes which warned him against possible consequences. Without a word he released the dog, and handed him to Jack. The little

Our Fireside

A Vision Realized

A Story for Mother's Day

By Felicia Buttz Clark

A large white ship was cutting through the waves of the Pacific Ocean on her way to San Francisco. The foam dashed against the sides of the vessel, bursting into myriad jeweled drops as the semi-tropical sun kissed it. On the deck, stretched out in an attitude of languor or weakness, lay a sun-browned young man in a khaki suit much the worse for wear. His eyes were closed and the expression on his face was one of utter weariness.

"Are you feeling any better this morning?" The question aroused him from a condition which was half fatigue, half exhaustion.

"I think that I am a little better, doctor. Won't you sit down?"

The doctor in his white suit and blue cap with gold band sat down on a camp-chair and looked keenly at the invalid.

"To tell the truth, Adams, all that you need is to get home and have your mother nurse you up. This low fever you caught in the Philippines must run its course and it's a long one; but you're over the worst, and a good rest will bring you around all right. When we get to Frisco, go home as soon as you can."

The doctor had been speaking carelessly, watching a school of tiny silvery flying-fish leaping through the foam. Dainty little creatures of the sea they were. Now he turned again to the patient, whose face had become very white. There was that in his eyes which made the doctor stammer an excuse, with the hurried words, "Have I said something to hurt you, Adams?"

"Don't go, doctor. I'd like to—I feel like talking, if you don't mind."

"Go on. I'm free for an hour. Tell me anything you like. I'm an unfathomable well when it comes to confidences. What you tell me goes down into the depths and stays there."

He arranged the pillows more comfortably, examining with fresh interest the fine features, firm mouth and chin, and long, slender hands of the soldier from the Philippines stricken down there with low fever and shipped off for the United States to regain his health. Many soldiers returned in this condition. It was not the first time that the doctor had cared for these invalid members of our army; but it was the first time that he had met just this style. Adams resembled an officer more than a common soldier. He came from a good family, that was plain to be seen, and was an educated man. "Some young rascal who has 'slipped a cog' and is suffering the consequences," thought the ship's surgeon, drawing up a comfortable rattan chair and leaning his head back on it.

"Tell on, my lad," he said. Adams did not speak for a few minutes. He seemed to be gathering strength. He scowled a little. Evidently his thoughts were not pleasant ones.

"I haven't got any home to go to," he blurted out at last.

"Well, I'm sorry for that. It's about the best place on earth for a fellow to go to—sometimes the best place for a fellow to stay in," added the quick-witted doctor.

"You mean that it's my own fault if I haven't a home. How did you guess that? It's true anyway. I had a home, a beautiful one. My father was president and part owner of a railroad. We lived in a big place on the Hudson. I was the only son, heir to everything. Don't look much like it now, do I?" He laughed scornfully, glancing at his well-worn khaki suit. As the doctor said nothing, the soldier continued: "My mother died the first year that I was in Harvard. My mother and I were—well, we were chums." He stopped a minute. "She died; no more letters from her; no more of those hours we used to spend together; no more—mother."

There was a long pause. The doctor moved suddenly.

"I say—Adams—perhaps you'd better not—"

"Yes, I want to talk. God knows that I've wanted to tell somebody this for the last three years. I never was a fellow to talk, but mother understood me. When she went I was alone. My father was a busy man. He loved me and I was very proud of him. Dear old dad! But he was a man, and I wanted my mother. Well, I went back to college after an awful summer and passed my Sophomore year and had just begun my Junior work, when one day I got a letter from Dad. He told me that he had married again. He had not said anything about it before because he was sure that I would make a fuss, and he knew that I would love my new mother when I saw her. 'Love my new mother!'"

"Was that all that he said?" inquired the doctor.

"Oh, no. There was a lot of palaver about me, and how my mother had wanted to have a home again, partly—mostly—on my account. Think of it! So he had been married quietly and they wanted me to come home very soon. He enclosed a big check."

"What did you do?"

"Do? I did something mighty quick. I put that check in an envelope and sent it to dad. He meant it all right. And I told him that I hoped he'd be happy with the woman whom he had put in my mother's place, but that now I was homeless. I was going away where he could not find me, for I never, never could love another mother in this world."

"And then?"

"Oh, the rest is a short story. They wanted men for the Philippines. I enlisted and spent three years out there among the natives and ruined my health without helping my country very much. That's all."

Adams lay back exhausted. The doctor pulled a light blanket over him. The sun had set and the air was chilly.

"So your name is not Adams?" he asked casually. His heart ached for the lad. He was no criminal, only just a man whose soul yearned for his home and his mother. The merits of the case the doctor did not discuss. That was not his business. It was not the first time that he had prescribed for bruised hearts as well as weak bodies.

"No. It's Gilmore, Richard Gilmore," came from the depths of the blanket.

The doctor smiled. There was an element in the voice which it had not contained before, a tone of relief. For three long years in the wilds of the Philippines the young man had nursed this grievance, had shut it up in his soul. Now he had told some one. He felt better already.

"Go to sleep," counseled the physician to the body; then the physician to the soul added, "If I were in your place, I'd hunt up my father when I got to the States."

The words haunted Richard Gilmore when he landed at Frisco, that great, bustling city, the Gateway of the West. He was ashamed to tell the doctor how little money he had—not enough to get him across the continent. He decided to leave the city and strike southward, where he could get work in some orange grove. It did not matter much what the work was; a soldier in the Philippines is used to hardship.

He took a train and went to the south, stopping at a venture at a small town which looked promising. It was the wrong time of year, or else his appearance was against him. At any rate he could not find work. Steadily his little store of money decreased, in spite of close economy. Worst of all, the fever came on again. Day by day he walked along the roads between the orange-groves where golden fruit nestled among glossy leaves, and felt so ill that he could not find courage to ask for work.

All along the way, at intervals, were beautiful homes, white villas nestling among tall trees, surrounded by green lawns and flowering shrubs. Not far distant the blue waves dashed up on the sand. There were fast-whirling motor-cars, women and girls in white dresses and with sweet faces. Richard Gilmore looked at them wonderingly. They were creatures from another world to the poor soldier from the Philippines, without another dollar in his pocket, his body burning up with fever, his brain turned with delirium.

It was on this day that he wandered into a forest of Eucalyptus trees and lay down on the grass, looking up at the blue sky between the long and green leaves. He closed his eyes and saw a vision. He was at home and his mother was bending over him. Her face was just as it used to be, full of love, very gentle and very sweet.

He was at home again.

Then the voice resolved itself into words which he only partially understood.

"Here, Simpson, help him to rise. Poor fellow! A soldier evidently very ill. Lift him carefully into the car and drive home, very slowly, not to jar him."

Richard heard the rustle of draperies and the faint odor of violets enveloped him. It was all a part of the beautiful vision. He was at home.

The soft air touched his forehead. The breath of thousands of blossoms was in his nostrils. And then he seemed to sleep.

The house to which Richard Gilmore was brought in the luxurious motor car was very spacious. It was built of white stucco, with broad verandas and marble steps. Roses clambered over the pillars, fountains murmured soft melody, trees shed their shade, and tall palms were grouped on the lawn. Into a cool room the soldier was carried. There for a whole month he was cared for by a trained nurse and by the lady of the house herself, a graceful woman with snow-white hair but a young face, with luminous eyes through which looked forth a singularly pure and gentle soul.

Life and Service Hymns

A new collection of 370 hymns that are melodious, singable, reverent and permanent in value—rich in hymns that appeal for dedication of life to Christian service. Compiled from suggestions asked from 900 pastors, evangelists and Christian workers, and includes the cream of the church classics and the best product of modern hymn writers.

A choice list of absolutely new hymns by prominent authors appears for the first time in this book.

Contains 40 hymns for the Beginners, Primary and Junior Departments.

Mr. Bentley D. Ackley (for eight years secretary and accompanist of "Billy" Sunday) a song writer of nation-wide reputation, is our musical editor. His latest and best hymns appear in this book. Music edition only.

Returnable sample sent on request. Full Cloth Board 30c, or $25.00 per 100. Limp Cloth 20c, or $17.50 per 100. Delivery charges extra.

ONWARD PRESS
DEPT. R
RICHMOND, VA. TEXARKANA, ARK.-TEX.

DON'T HALLOWED HYMNS

NEW AND OLD

Edited by IRA ALLAN SANKEY
Son of the famous Singing-Evangelist
Ira D. Sankey

OVER 550,000
COPIES ALREADY SOLD

Responsive Scripture Readings

No Trashy Words No Jingly Music

Price $25.00 per 100 not prepaid
35 cents per copy by mail

Examine a copy and prove its value in your work. (Returnable if desired.)

The Biglow & Main Co., New York
Chicago

This FREE Shoe Book
is crowded with photographs and descriptions of EZ-WEAR Shoes for Men, Women and Children. EZ-WEAR Shoes are sent post-paid, guaranteed to combine comfort, style and quality, to fit perfectly or money back. Amazingly low prices. Send for copy to-day.
The F.N. Simon Shoe Co. 1589 BROADWAY, BROOKLYN, N.Y.

A Most Attractive Paper

For Children in the Home and Sunday School

APPLES OF GOLD

This is a really ideal weekly paper for use in Primary Departments and Infant Classes in all Sunday Schools. It is finely illustrated, uses large, clear type, and is printed in beautiful colored ink. Each week there is a splendid full-page picture, short stories, choice poems and a helpful illustrated treatment of the International Sunday School Lesson. It is issued monthly but is arranged for weekly distribution in four-page parts. Price, single copies, 30 cents; five copies to one address, 25 cents each; ten or more copies, 20 cents each, per year. Postage on Canadian and foreign subscriptions, 6 cents per copy additional. Subscriptions accepted in clubs for 3 months, 6 months or a year.
Sample Copies Sent Free.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

Park Ave., and Fortieth St., New York.

HALF-FONTE ON THE BEACH
ATLANTIC CITY
ALWAYS OPEN
THE LEEDS COMPANY

Often in his delirium he would call for his mother, and then the white-haired woman would come and hold his hands, speaking softly to him. The delirium ceased, and he slept, while she sat by him all the hours of the night. To the fever-tortured man she was actually his mother.

One night he told her his whole story in short, quick sentences—how he had dreamed that she was dead; that another woman had come in her place.

"You know that I could not love her, mother dear," he said, earnestly looking into her face with great eyes, brilliant with the light of delirium. "And then I thought I went to the Philippines as a soldier. It was so awful there, the heat, the suffering, the language I heard—in my dream, you know, mother. I was very ill. And all the time I dreamed that you were gone and I was alone. I could not love that other mother, could I?" he appealed, coming to partial consciousness.

"Oh, no, of course not," the sweet-faced woman with the prematurely white hair replied, but there were tears in her eyes and her lips trembled.

When the dawn brightened the east the sick man's iron grasp upon her fingers relaxed and he slept. She stooped to kiss his forehead, and the heavy eyelids slowly lifted. "Mother!" he said, instantly falling asleep again.

"Mother!" The word lingered in her ear as, weary almost to the point of fainting, the woman who lived alone in the grandeur of this house went to her own room, passed out upon the veranda and sank into a bamboo "chaiselongue."

She closed her eyes. Still the beautiful word lingered with her. Long years had gone since a childish voice had whispered, "Mother." Why should not this lad be to her a son, sent by God? He was refined and cultured. In his delirium no coarse word, no brutal expression, had come from his lips. The nurse had found in his pocket a copy of Thomas á Kempis' "Imitation of Christ," marked and worn. On the fly-page was written: "From your Mother." Underneath in another handwriting these words: "She left me for a brighter world on May 6, 1908."

He had no mother. Could he love her and take the place of the son she had lost?

The haze purpling the ocean changed to a silvery veil. The cloudlets turned from the dull hues of night to rosy tints. White sails of fishermen's boats glistened in the first rays of the sun and birds burst into joyous melody, hymns of welcome to the day.

In the cool, darkened chamber a sick man slept his way back to health and life. On the veranda a woman with prematurely white hair dreamed of happiness to come into a lonely life.

One day Richard Gilmore, clothed in civilian's dress through the generosity of his hostess, looking handsomer than ever, although his face had lost the bronzed appearance incidental to the life he had left, took courage and went out into the hall.

"Be careful, Mr. Adams," called the nurse. "You are not so strong as you think. Better rest a while in the library. I will bring you a glass of milk."

"Oh, I'm all right," replied the soldier, smiling whimsically, as he found himself staggering, very glad to enter the shaded room where the walls were lined with books and big leather chairs invited him to repose. The fever had run its course, he was ready to face the world with new courage and one determination: he would earn enough money to go East. He would find his father and say to him: "Father, I have erred. Forgive me." That very day, or maybe to-morrow—"according to the condition of my legs," he murmured with a low laugh, dropping down into the first chair, he would thank the lady who had so generously cared for him and would go away. He was sorry to go; it was pleasant in this lovely home, with the blue waves making music on the beach and the birds singing in the garden. He must be a man and go out to work in the world.

He was so exhausted that he did not notice at first the oak-beams of the ceiling, the broad diamond-paned windows through which one could catch glimpses of white sails and dancing wavelets.

Suddenly he looked up, as if some one had called him.

God! It was his mother's face that he saw! Was he dreaming? Had the delirium returned? Over the console hung a portrait familiar to him, a portrait of his mother in a white satin gown. Pearls were on her neck, diamonds on her breast, but in her eyes was the unquenchable light of love. Many times he had stood before this portrait as it hung in the home on the Hudson River. How had it come to be here, in California?

He went nearer and read the inscription on the frame: "Alice Hustid Gilmore." Yonder was the tall Chinese vase and the painting by Corot that his father was so fond of! On the desk was the quaint inkstand that his father had used and beside it a miniature of his father. Dear, kind face!

Where was his father? Why was he not here? Who was the woman who lived here? Who had nursed him back to life?

"Are you feeling ill?" asked his hostess. "Please sit down, Mr. Adams."

"No, no," he cried hoarsely, turning toward her. "Tell me, where is my father?"

"Your father? I do not know." "He is surely delirious again," she thought. "You must know! This is my father's picture. That is my mother's portrait. Where is he?"

The woman's face grew very white. She trembled and clutched the edge of the desk to keep from falling.

"Are you Richard?" she asked breathlessly. "Has God answered our prayers and brought you home?"

"Where is my father?" he repeated. "I must see him at once! I must tell him—how sorry—I am—that I—left him—as I did. Where is my father?"

Very gently the mistress of the house led him to a couch, soothing him as she would have quieted her own son had he lived to manhood, breaking to him the news that nevermore would he behold the face of his father in this world.

He was so weak that he scarcely understood what she said.

"If my father is dead, I must go away," he cried, trying to rise.

"Will you not stay with me, Richard?" she asked.

"Who are you?"

He was still bewildered. He looked sharply into the sweet face beneath the snow-white hair. Her soft gown clung to her slender figure, the tea-roses on her bosom rose and fell as she breathed irregularly and her heart pulsed violently.

"Oh, God, make him love me!" her heart cried. She said aloud: "Richard, I am the woman whom your father married."

"The woman who took my mother's place."

There was dead silence in the room for a moment.

"Once, Richard, I had a son, the light and glory of my womanhood. He went away. After a few years my husband died and I was left entirely alone. Then your father came and told me that he had a motherless son. He asked me to come and make a home for that boy. I did so for your sake, never to take your mother's place, never! I wanted to love you. I wanted to make you love me. We searched everywhere for you, Richard. It was in vain. Your father's health failed and we came here, to a milder climate. It was all useless. God has brought you back to your home, Richard. In your delirium you called me mother. Richard—"

She laid her hand on his arm. He glanced first at her, then at the portrait, and back at her.

The light passing through the diamond-paned windows glorified the face of the mother, who seemed to be smiling at her son.

The bitterness which he had so long cherished in his heart disappeared. He stood silent, looking at the beautiful face in the portrait. Then, with a whispered, "Yes, mother," Richard turned to the woman, lonely in the midst of her beautiful home. Drawing her hand through his arm, he led her out upon the rose-hung veranda, into the brightness of a new life—the Vision Realized.

From a Veteran Christian Worker

A recent grant sent to Rev. N. S. Sweet by the American Tract Society called forth the following response:

"Your parcel of tracts came, and I am arranging them for distribution this week. Thank you very much. I pray that they may do much good.

"I remember the time when I left home with horse and buggy as a colporter with a stock of books from the American Tract Society. I kept at this colportage work for six years, and then I took up pastoral work. I did not stay less than five years at any church, and at one church I remained nearly eight years. Then I took up colportage for the Baptists. I am eighty-four years old.

A Grant Acknowledged

A consignment of literature sent by the American Tract Society as a grant to a Christian worker for distribution among the soldiers in Ft. Worth, Texas, called forth this acknowledgment:

"The package came all in good order. Many thanks. The Cromwell's Bibles, tracts, etc. are excellent, and it will take me quite a little time to distribute them. I will try to hand them out myself, with a word of help, as far as I can. The boys all seem grateful for good reading matter and appreciate any word of good cheer and exhortation.

"I consider it an honor and privilege to co-operate with you in distributing the excellent material you have sent."

CRYSTAL WATER SET

With Your Own Initial in

GENUINE STERLING SILVER

Every woman of good taste will appreciate this beautiful Crystal Water Set with decorations and her own initial in sterling silver everlastingly burned into the glass itself. If there is anything a woman likes it is distinctiveness in her dining room appointments. Here is a handsome water set which she will always use and which will be prominently displayed, between meals, on sideboard or china closet

SUBSTANTIAL
ARTISTIC
FIRE POLISHED

An Unusual
BARGAIN OFFER

DISTINCTIVENESS
ELEGANCE
INDIVIDUALITY

Take Advantage of it TODAY

Ornamental - Substantial - Useful

The Pride & Joy of the Housewife

This water set, composed of six tumblers and pitcher, will delight the heart of every housewife. The pitcher is substantially made in a pleasing design, with firm, strong base. The tumblers are of dainty, extra thin blown glass. Each piece is edged in pure sterling silver, with wreath and initial of the owner. The tumblers are half pint capacity—the pitcher holds three pints. This is the set for everyday use and for special occasions. It will give the user everlasting satisfaction and pleasure.

In these times of high prices it is exceedingly fortunate that we are able to offer this handsome and distinctive Crystal Water Set on terms within easy reach of every household. The family initial in silver is permanently burned into each piece, giving the set that individuality which is the pride of every woman with good taste. The set is as beautiful and pleasing as much of the costly imported glassware.

SPECIAL OFFER TO OUR READERS

We will give this splendid CRYSTAL WATER SET free and postpaid for only 10 yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at 50 cents each, or we will give the set with a year's subscription to the AMERICAN MESSENGER for only $3.25. These offers are for subscriptions in the United States only.

The Initial you desire on the set, please write clearly

AMERICAN MESSENGER

PARK AVE. AND 40th ST.

NEW YORK CITY

THE TREASURY

SPECIAL NOTICE

OWING to occasional losses of letters, containing money, we would request friends and donors of the American Tract Society to remit by check or Post Office Money Order, which latter can always be duplicated in case of loss.

Receipts of the American Tract Society During March, 1918

TOTAL DONATIONS (including $2,012.21 for Special Objects), $7,474.45.

ARKANSAS, $1.
Mrs. Rowland, for Patriot Library, $1.

CALIFORNIA, $78.25.
Merced, Church Collection, $5; Mrs. Reeves, for Patriot Library, $1; Mr. Gorton, for Patriot Library, $5; Mr. Gorton, for Patriot Library, $10; Mrs. Hersman, for Patriot Library, $5; Mrs. Smith, $5; Oakland, Church Offering, $4.25; Los Angeles, Church Collection, $10; German Pastors' Association, $11.50; Pasadena, Church Offering, $1.50; Berkeley, Church Collection, $20.

COLORADO, $16.50.
Boulder, Church Offering, $7.50; Miss Koehler, $2; Wray, Church Collection, $2; Canon City, Church Offering, $5.

CONNECTICUT, $108.50.
A Friend, $1; Mr. Hallock, $5; Mrs. Chapin, $0.50; Sound Beach, Missionary Society Collection, $5; Miss Morgan, $2; Stamford, Church Offering, $10; Mrs. Davison, $10; Mr. Carrington, $1; Mrs. Troland, $1; Mrs. Baker, $2; Mrs. Lindsay, $5; Mr. Wells, $5; Mrs. Coit, $5; Miss Mix, $5; Mr. Catlin, $5; Mr. Clark, $10. The following for Patriot Library: Mr. Champan, $10; Miss Gay, $5; Mr. Beecher, $5; Miss Belden, $3; Miss Belden, $1; Mr. and Mrs. Greene, $1; Mr. Cooke, $1; Miss Jennings, $10.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, $11.80.
Washington, Church Collection, $2; Washington, Church Offering, $4.80; Washington, Church Collection, $5.

FLORIDA, $1.
Mrs. Hill, for Patriot Library, $1.

IDAHO, $15.65.
Mr. Fast, $0.65; Mr. Hege, $10; Twinn Falls, Church Collection, $5.

ILLINOIS, $73.95.
A Friend, $5; Miss Metzger, $0.30; Miss Borden, for Patriot Library, $25; A Friend, $10; Mrs. Luedke, $0.65; Oneida, Church Offering, $5; Du Quoin, Church Collection, $3; Galena, Church Offering, $10; Mr. Ollendorf, for Patriot Library, $2; Scales Mound, Church Collection, $2; Mr. Triller, $1; Evanston, Church Offering, $10.

INDIANA, $19.90.
Crown Point, Church Offering, $5; Connersville, Church Collection, $4; Monticello, Church Offering, $2; Frankfort, Church Collection, $5; Mrs. Kilian, for Patriot Library, $1; Greensburg, Church Offering, $2.90.

IOWA, $63.05.
Sibley, Church Offering, $5; Aplington, Church Collection, $10; Rev. Mr. Hammond, for Patriot Library, $3; Mr. Riekens, $0.40; Mr. Jones, for Patriot Library, $1; Mrs. Christie, for Patriot Library, $6; Miss Weed, for Patriot Library, $6; Greene, Church Offering, $1; Mrs. Harberts, $5; Mrs. Decker, $2; Nevada, Church Offering, $5; Mr. Wettley, $0.65; Mrs. Lovenberg, $1; Mr. Abbot, for Patriot Library, $1; Kamrar, Church Collection, $12; Audubon, Church Offering, $3; Miss Warner, $1.

KANSAS, $51.50.
Mrs. Heim, $2; Mr. Graber, $4.65; Mr. Friesen, $0.65; Mr. Harder, $4.05; Miss Springer, $1; Mrs. Heim, $0.65; Junction City, Church Collection, $5; Mrs. Van Master, for Patriot Library, $2; Halsestead, Church Offering, $7; Mr. Seaman, $3.50; Rev. Mr. Sherman, $1; Wichita, Church Offering, $10; Riley, Church Collection, $10.

KENTUCKY, $20.
Mrs. Covington, for Korea, $10; Maysville, Church Offering, $10.

MARYLAND, $52.
Germantown, Church Collection, $5; Baltimore, Church Offering, $15; Arlington, Church Collection, $20; Elkton, Church Offering, $2; Baltimore, Church Collection, $10.

MASSACHUSETTS, $639.30
Mr. Buelow, $1.65; Mr. Hofmeyer, $0.65; Mr. Wolfer, $10; Mr. Bailey, $5; Mr. Edes, $1; Miss Edwards, $1; Mr. Fischer, $2; Miss Daniels, $5; Mrs. Guy, $1; Rev. Mr. Towne, $2; Drew Allis Co., $6; Mr. Gay, $2; Mr. Griswold, $1; Mrs. Chapin, $2; Rev. Mr. Hincks, $5; Mr. Vialles, $10; Miss Houghton, $2; Miss Hunt, $2; Miss Pond, $1; Mr. Tufts, $2; Miss Rust, $5; Mr. Robinson, $1; Mr. Kelly, $5; Mr. Jones, $50; Miss Nason, $2; Mr. Bailey, $5; Mr. Sharp, for Foreign Work, $5; Mr. Clark, for Foreign Work, $50; The following for Patriot Library: A Friend, $0.50; Mr. Penn, $30; Mrs. Brooks, $5; Miss Brayton, $15; Mr. Couant, $2; Mr. French, $10; Mr. Bowers, $10; Mr. Goodman, $3; Mrs. Gregory, $5; Mr. Fuller, $5; Mr. Cole, $2; Mr. Field, $10; Mrs. Travis, $1; Mr. Miller, $100; Mr. Hale, $15; Mr. Tufts, $2; Miss King, $15; Miss Holmes, $2; Miss Jennings, $10; Miss King, $3.50; Miss Cook, $5; Mrs. Robertson, $1; Mr. Keith, $10; Mr. Ripley, $5; Miss Young, $2; Miss Prescott, $1; Miss Dawes, $30; Miss Richards, $2; Miss Talbot, $2; Mr. Bull, $2; Mr. Rich, $30; Mrs. Lovett, $5; Mrs. Mears, $15; Boston, Church Offering, $20; Mrs. Sould, $30; Mr. Rice, $15; Mr. Thomas, $15; Miss Small, $10.

MICHIGAN, $46.65.
Mr. Koppan, $0.65; Detroit, Church Collection, $20; Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Schmidt, $2; Mrs. Goffield, for Patriot Library, $1; Detroit, Church Offering, $20; Battle Creek, Church Offering, $3.

MINNESOTA, $45.12.
Mr. Houliston, for Patriot Library, $2; Mr. Dougherty, $4.50; Mankato, Church Collection, $10; Mr. Bender, $2.30; Minneapolis, Church Offering, $26.32.

MISSOURI, $164.60.
Mr. Dyer, $2; Webster Groves, Church Offering, $2; Miss Lehman, $10; Parkville, Church Collection, $6.11; Centerview, Church Offering, $2; St. Louis, Church Collection, $8.15; Church Offering, $2.50; Church Collection, $5.27; Church Offering, $8.82; Church Collection, $15.51; Church Offering, $7.25; Church Collection, $22.50; Church Offering, $0.94; Church Offering, $3; Church Collection, $22.86; Church Offering, $8.35 Church Collection, $10; Church Offering, $7.34; Butler, Church Collection, $5; Brookfield, Church Offering, $5; Kansas City Church Collection, $10.

NEBRASKA, $14.85.
Broken Bow, Church Offering, $2.85; Miss Hawley, $3; Omaha, Church Collection, $5; Kimball, Church Offering, $4.

NEW JERSEY, $407.43.
Miss Stahlin, $5; Mrs. Jaeger, $2; Mr. Machlet, $9.40; Freehold, Church Collection, $2.90; Westfield, Church Offering, $5; Elizabeth, Church Collection, $10; Mr. Maul, $0.60; Chatham, Church Offering, $2.91; Mr. Ingersoll, for Patriot Library, $1; Mrs. Epple, for Patriot Library, $1; Mrs. Bate, for Patriot Library, $1; Dayton, Church Collection, $5; Flemington, Church Offering, $5; Arlington, Church Collection, $5; Mrs. Woodruff, to constitute Martha L. Fitz-Gerald, a Life Member, $30; Trenton, Church Offering, $5; Newark, Church Collection, $5; New Brunswick, Church Offering, $8; Mrs. Hagen, $1; Mrs. Dobbeg, $1; Mrs. Pfleger, for Patriot Library, $3; Jersey City, Church Collection, $5; Jersey City, Church Offering, $1; North Branch, Church Collection, $4; New Brunswick, Church Offering, $15; Red Bank, Church Collection, $5; Morristown, Church Offering, $41.36; Mrs. Simms, for Patriot Library, $1; Pennington, Church Collection, $5; Basking Ridge, Church Offering, $15; Newark, Church Collection, $5; Ringoes, Church Offering, $5; Wenonah, Sunday School Collection, $5; Bridgeton, Church Offering, $5; Camden, Church Collection, $5; Wenonah, Church Offering, $10; Clinton, Church Collection, $9.56; Newark, Church Offering, $32.60; Beverly, Church Collection, $10; Princeton, Church Collection, $5.37; Boonton, Sunday School Collection, $1.89; Church Offering, $3.11; Williamstown, Church Collection, $5; Perth Amboy, Church Offering, $5.80; Phillipsburg, Church Collection, $2; Franklin, Church Offering, $5; Westfield, Bible School Collection, $5; South Orange, Church Offering, $55.51; Blackwood, Church Collection, $2; Paterson, Church Offering, $28.42.

NEW YORK, $3,500.18.
Mr. Handshaw, to constitute himself a Life Member, $30; Miss Duryee, $5; New York City, Church Collection, $943.83; Mr. Jarvie, for Patriot Library, $1,000; New York City, Church Offering, $25; Mr. Brinker, $1.53; Mr. Post, $100; New York City, Church Collection, $5; Mr. Nagel, $1; New York City, Church Offering, $13; Mr. Underwood, $1,000; Mr. Empie, for Colportage Work, $1.50; for Patriot Library, $1.50; Mrs. Barnard, $5; Miss Galpin, $1; Mr. Bowers, $25 Mrs. Norton, $4; Troy, Church Collection, $5; Miss Mills, $10; Mr. Bushnell, $5; Waterloo, Church Offering, $5; Miss McEwens, $5; Dr. Swift, $10; Mr. Blank, $5; Miss Ames, $2.50; Brooklyn, Church Collection, $5; Brooklyn, Sunday School Offering, $2; Brooklyn, Sunday School Collection, $5; Astoria, Sunday School Offering, $3; Williamsburg, Church Collection, $5; Mr. Strach, $5; Wyoming, Church Offering, $2; Watertown, Church Collection, $15; Utica, Church Offering, $10; Clinton, Church Collection, $5; Corfu, Church Offering, $2; Gardiner, Church Collection, $13; Monticello, Church Offering, $6.10; Haverstraw, Church Collection, $5; Wolcott, Church Collection, $3; Pelham Manor, Church Offering, $10; Otego, Church Collection, $4; Gates, Church Offering, $1; Mrs. Goldsmith, $2; Astoria, Church Collection, $20; Dobbs Ferry, Church Offering, $10.60; Middletown, Church Collection, $40; Arkport, Church Offering, $2; Brooklyn, Church Collection, $20; Auburn, Church Offering, $5; Mrs. Mann, $0.30; Brooklyn, Church Collection, $5; Brooklyn, Church Collection, $10.32; Corning, Church Offering, $10; Seneca Falls, Church Collection, $5; Mr. Marsh, $1; the following for Patriot Library: Mr. Burrell, $25; Miss Curtiss, $2; Dundee, Church Offering, $4; Miss Brown, $3; Mrs. Bissell, $2; Miss Kyte, $2; Mr. Smith, $15; Mr. Clark, $5.

NORTH CAROLINA, $2.
Rev. Mr. Bell, $2.

OHIO, $148.55.
Mr. Brush, for Patriot Library, $10; Miss Brainard, $0.15; Mrs. Wagner, $0.50; Miss Mathison, $2; Cleveland, Church Offering, $10; Cincinnati, Church Collection, $2.50; Toledo, Church Offering, $10; Portsmouth, Sunday School Collection, $5; Mr. Wollenberg, $0.65; Mr. Zimmerman, for Patriot Library, $0.50; Mrs. Schumacher, $0.65; Rev. Mr. Hills, $25; Miss Thompson, for Patriot Library, $1; Newark, Church Offering, $20; Chillicothe, Church Collection, $10; Madisonville, Church Offering, $5; Cincinnati, Church Collection, $10; Mr. Risk, $3; Troy, Church Offering, $5; Norwood, Church Collection, $5.60; Hartwell, Church Offering, $5; Cincinnati, Church Collection, $5; Nef, Church Offering, $2; Bridgeport, Church Collection, $10.

OKLAHOMA, $1.
Mr. Hill, $1.

OREGON, $10.50.
Mrs. Sneed, $0.50; Mr. Hatch, for Patriot Library, $10.

PENNSYLVANIA, $354.27.
Port Carbon, Church Offering, $1; Mrs. Grant, $0.65; Brockwayville, Church Collection, $9; Mr. Smith, for Patriot Library, $3; New Park, Church Offering, $7.64; Erie, Church Collection, $10; Philadelphia, Sunday School Collection, $10; Vancort, Church Offering, $2; Mr. and Mrs. Dennis, for Patriot

Library, $10; Mrs. Preston, for Patriot Library, $5; Philadelphia, Church Collection, $10; Germantown, Church Offering, $2; Miss Walker, for Patriot Library, $3; Chester, Church Collection, $5; Franklin, Church Offering, $3; Philadelphia, Church Collection, $15; Mr. Springer, for Patriot Library, $5; Wilkinsburg, Church Offering, $12.43; Johnsonburg, Church Collection, $2; Wilcox, Church Offering, $2; Weatherby, Church Collection, $1; Mrs. Semple, $5; Pittsburgh, Church Offering, $10; Mr. Emerson, for Patriot Library, $10; Allegheny, Church Offering, $5; Narberth, Church Collection, $9.82; Miss Cline, for Patriot Library, $5; Easton, Church Offering, $5; Mooresburg, Church Collection, $1; Shamokin, Church Offering, $10; Newtown, Church Collection, $8; Sayre, Church Offering, $5; Carlisle, Church Collection, $20; Eagleville, Church Offering, $5; Coraopolis, Church Collection, $6.68; Sunday School Offering, $0.82; New Alexandria, Church Collection, $5; Ansonville, Sunday School Offering, $2; Philadelphia, Church Collection, $25; Easton, Church Offering, $2; Mahoningtown, Sunday School Collection, $5; Beaver Falls, Church Offering, $5; Jamestown, Church Collection, $5; Falls Creek, Church Offering, $10; Vandergrift, Church Collection, $5; Volant, Church Offering, $2; Mifflinburg, Church Collection, $10; State College, Church Offering, $10.26; New Brighton, Church Collection, $10; Erie, Church Offering, $5; McKees Rocks, Church Collection, $1; Ivyland, Church Offering, $1; Jvyland, Church Collection, $1; Philadelphia, Church Offering, $4; Philadelphia, Church Collection, $10; Franklin, Church Collection, $10.97.

RHODE ISLAND, $55.
Mrs. Mathewson, for Mission Work, $5; Mr. Wells, $10; Mr. Hunt, for Patriot Library, $5; Mr. Johnston, for Patriot Library, $15; Mrs. Goff, $15; Miss Beckwith, for Patriot Library, $3; Miss Bushee, $2.

SOUTH CAROLINA, $1.
In Memory of Mrs. McCarley, for Patriot Library, $1.

SOUTH DAKOTA, $28.50.
Kimball, Church Offering, $4.50; Willow Lake, Church Collection, $14; Mr. Horn, $5; Mr. Wioldreyer, for Patriot Library, $5.

TENNESSEE, $1.
Knoxville, Church Offering, $1.

TEXAS, $8.
Mr. Horne, $5; Mr. Goode, for Patriot Library, $3.

UTAH, $2.
Rev. Mr. Pratt, for Patriot Library, $2.

VIRGINIA, $6.
Mr. Blackstone, for Patriot Library, $1; Mr. Taylor, for Patriot Library, $5.

WEST VIRGINIA, $1.502.
Mr. Hervey, $1.500; Fairmount, Church Collection, $2.

WISCONSIN, $11.25.
Mrs. Lehnerr, $1; Miss Roesler, $0.25; Miss Houghton, for Patriot Library, $10.

FOREIGN, $12.15.
Canada, Miss Shepherd, for Patriot Library, $1.50; Rev. Mr. Wiens, $1.60; P. L., $1; M. T. O. T., $8.05.

LEGACIES, $1,000.
Eric, Pa., Estate of Mrs. Susan M. Sanford, $1,000.

INCOME FROM TRUST FUNDS... $1,357.08
Income for Missionary Work... 1,357.08

Donations

DONATIONS for the missionary work of the American Tract Society may be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

FIELD SECRETARIES AND COLPORTAGE SUPERINTENDENTS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.

Rev. Isaac Pierson, Field Secretary for New England, 50 Bromfield Street, Boston, Mass.

Rev. A. W. Reinhard, Field Secretary and Superintendent of Colportage for the Western and Northwestern States, 4029A De Tonty Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Rev. George Whitefort, Superintendent of Colportage, Southern Agency, Chrieton, R. F. D., Mobile Co., Ala.

Form of Bequest

I GIVE and bequeath to the "AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY," instituted in the City of New York, May, 1825, the sum of.....dollars to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said Society.

Three witnesses should state that the testator declares this to be his last will and testament, and that they signed at his request, and in his presence and the presence of each other.

Life Members and Directors

THE donation of $30 at one time constitutes a Life Member of the American Tract Society; the addition of $70, or the donation of $100 at one time, constitutes a Life Director. Life members may receive annually copies of the Society's own publications to the value of $1; Life Directors to the value of $2; if applied for within the Society's year, from April 1st to April 1st, in person or by written order.

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

TERMS: Subscription price, 50 cts. a year, payable in advance. In clubs of five or more, 30 cts. each. Club subscriptions mailed to separate addresses, if desired. Charge for foreign subscriptions, 24 cents additional. Canadian subscriptions, 12 cents additional. Single copies, 5 cents each.

On account of the additional charge which is made by the New York Post Office for mailing to subscribers in New York and Bronx Counties (Boroughs of Manhattan and Bronx), no club rates, cash commissions or premiums will be given for subscriptions that must be sent to persons residing in those Counties. Each subscription in New York or Bronx County must be at the rate of 50 cents net.

Remit by Express Money Order, Draft, Post Office Order or Registered Letter. For very small amounts, postage stamps may be sent at the risk of the sender.

CHANGES: When sending change of address, be sure to send the old address as well as the new one.

OUR ADVERTISERS: We believe that all the advertisements in this paper are from responsible advertisers, and it is our intention to admit only such to our columns. Should, however, any of our subscribers find that any advertiser does not live up to his agreements, we would consider it a favor, if they will inform us, and we will at any time give prompt attention to any complaint.

We do not, of course, guarantee that all persons will take the same point of view with the advertisers, and it must be borne in mind that the claims and statements made by advertisers are their assertions, and not ours.

Our readers will confer a favor upon advertisers and also upon us if they will mention the AMERICAN MESSENGER when answering advertisements.

American Tract Society

THIS SOCIETY was organized, in 1825. Its work is interdenominational and international in scope, and is commended by all evangelical denominations.

It has published the Gospel messages in 178 languages, dialects and characters. It has been the pioneer for work among the foreign-speaking people in our country, and its missionary colporters are distributing Christian literature in many languages among our foreign-speaking population and making a home-to-home visitation among the spiritually destitute, both in the cities and rural districts, leaving all kinds of Christian literature, also the Bible or portions of the Scriptures.

Its publication of leaflets, volumes and periodicals from the Home Office total 797,704,700 copies. It has made foreign cash appropriations to the amount of $802,966.39, and grants of electrotypes to the value of $61,177.96, by means of which millions of copies of books and tracts have been published at mission stations abroad.

The gratuitous distribution of the past year is to the value of $18,461.65. The grand total of its gratuitous distribution has been to the value of $2,652,967.54, which is the equivalent of 5,305,935,080 tract pages.

The total number of family visits that have been made by the Society's colporters during the last year is 199,963; the total number of volumes distributed by sale or grant is 55,712, making the total number of volumes that have been circulated by colporters in the last seventy-six years 17,438,166, and the total number of family visits that they have made during the same period 18,812,806.

A large distribution of Christian literature is being made among the soldiers and sailors, and the Society aims to furnish the Patriot Library to every Cantonment in the Army and to every battleship and cruiser in the Navy.

The Society is making very special effort in behalf of Latin America, having entered upon the publication of a One-volume Bible commentary in Spanish, a long-needed and earnestly prayed-for publication, and several other important volumes in both Spanish and Portuguese. Its total publications for Latin America now reach 16,012,088 copies. Its work, ever widening, is dependent upon donations and legacies, and greatly needs increased offerings.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, PRESIDENT.
JUDSON SWIFT, D. D., General Secretary.
Remittances should be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

Lend Him A Hand

BUY LIBERTY BONDS

The Master's Touch

"He touched her hand and the fever left her; and she arose and ministered unto Him."—(Matt. 8:15.)

"He touched her hand, and the fever left her."

He touched her hand as He only can, With the wondrous skill of the great Physician,

With the tender touch of the Son of Man.

And the fever-pain in the throbbing temples

Died out with the flush on brow and cheek,

And the lips that had been so parched and burning

Trembled with thanks that she could not speak.

And the eyes where the fever-light had faded

Looked up, by her grateful tears made dim,

And she rose and ministered in her household,

She rose and ministered unto Him.

"He touched her hand, and the fever left her."

Oh, we need his touch on our fevered hands!

The cool, still touch of the Man of Sorrows,

Who knows us, and loves us, and understands.

So many a life is one long fever!

A fever of anxious suspense and care,

A fever of getting, a fever of fretting,

A fever of hurrying here and there.

Ah, what if in winning the praise of others

We miss at the last the King's "Well done"?

If our self-sought tasks in the Master's vineyard

Yield "nothing but leaves" at the set of sun?

"He touched her hand, and the fever left her."

Oh, blessed touch of the Man Divine!

So beautiful then to arise and serve Him,

When the fever is gone from your life and mine:

It may be the fever of restless serving.

With heart all thirsty for love and praise,

And eyes all aching and strained with yearning

Toward self-set goals in the future days.

Or it may be the fever of spirit anguish,

Some tempest of sorrow that dies not down,

Till the cross at last is in meekness lifted,

And the head stoops low for the thorny crown.

Or it may be a fever of pain and anger,

When the wounded spirit is hard to bear,

And only the Lord can draw forth the arrows

Left carelessly, cruelly rankling there.

Whatever the fever, His touch can heal it;

Whatever the tempest, His voice can still;

There is only joy as we seek His pleasure;

There is only rest as we choose His will.

And some day, after life's fitful fever,

I think we shall say, in the home on high,

"If the hands that He touched but did His bidding,

How little it matters what else went by!"

Ah Lord! Thou knowest us altogether,

Each heart's sore sickness, whatever it be;

Touch thou our hands! Let the fever leave us,

And so we shall minister unto Thee.

—Edith Gilling Cherry.

What One Tract Did in Argentina

BY J. L. HART.

"Buenos tardes, que calor hace." ("Good afternoon, how hot it is.") The speaker was Fidel Rojas, a national census taker, and the words were spoken to Pablo Broda, one of the first Italian farmers to accept the gospel. Distances from farm to farm in Argentina are great, and as these census takers are paid by the job and not by the day, they are careful to lose as little time as possible on their rounds. Rojas, as soon as he had listed the names, ages, etc., of the family, bade them "Good by," and drove rapidly to the next farm. This would have been only an unimportant interruption in the humdrum life of the farmer folk and not worthy of mention had it not been for one little incident which occurred just as Rojas was leaving. One of the sons of Broda handed the man a tract and said simply, "Here is something you might like to read when you have the time." He took it without giving it a thought, and put it in his pocket. Days and weeks passed and Rojas kept busy at his work and soon found himself far from where he had received the tract and had even forgotten that he had it.

One rainy day, being unable to continue his work, and longing for some way to pass away his time, he hit on the forgotten tract, and for lack of something better to do, set himself to read it. It was a simple gospel tract, but it was indeed good news to him, and as he read and thought, he longed to know more and determined to visit the home again where he had received the tract and see if they had the Book (the Bible) of which the tract spoke.

He could not rid himself of the impression made on him, and he soon made an excuse to visit the Brodas. On the occasion of this visit, the writer was there and had the joy of preaching to about eighty farmers and peons in the large dining-room of this farm-house. Rojas listened with intense interest and at the conclusion of the sermon stood up and said, "This is all new to me and really I do not know what you are talking about, but I do know there has come into my heart something new, something I have never experienced before."

We talked to him, prayed with him, read God's Word to him, and had the joy of seeing him happily converted.

We remained here three or four days, preaching almost four days continually, or explaining difficult passages to the new converts or teaching them gospel songs. Rojas remained through the whole time, and drank in eagerly all that was said, sleeping in the barn on the hay, as was the lot of many, and receiving the hospitality of this noble servant of God, who willingly gave of his substance that these poor hungry souls might be fed with the bread of life.

After securing a Bible, he went home rejoicing. As might be expected, he could not keep his secret long. The gospel, as taught in the Word of God, was an unknown thing in the town where he lived; but before many months had elapsed he had gathered a little group around him, and by telling them his own precious experience and reading God's Word to them, they soon became as deeply interested as he, and wished that they, too, might hear the Word as preached by the servant of God, as he had so often described it to them. So the longing of their hearts took form in a letter which I received from him, containing my traveling expenses and begging me to come to them at my earliest convenience. I went and spent a week visiting the people in their homes, reading and praying with them and teaching them gospel hymns. Several manifested great interest. Especially I remember one little woman who seemed to take in our message, and the joy on her face was sufficient reward for all our efforts.

I was unable to visit Rojas again for a year, but as soon as I got there one of my first questions to Pablo Broda was, "Where is the little woman who manifested so much interest when I was here before?"

He answered, "Did you not know that she is dead?"

"No," said I, "and I am very sorry to hear it."

"Oh," he said, "don't say that. Her death has been a great blessing to this town." Then he told me this story: When she was dying, they sent for a priest, and as he entered her bedroom, she looked at him with pitying eyes and asked, "Sir, what do you come here for?"

"I have come to prepare you for death," replied the priest.

"I do not need your services," she replied. "I am already prepared."

Then it seemed God gave her strength to raise herself on her pillow and in a feeble voice to say to all those sorrowing friends around her, "If that man who told us about the love of Jesus ever comes back here, you all go to hear him. That is what prepared me to go." And with that she passed away.

As we went about among the people that day, I heard on every side the question, "Are you the man of whom Dona Dolores spoke when dying?"

As I answered in the affirmative, they all said, "Well, we are going to hear you." And they did. The whole town came out. We could not find a hall big enough in the town to seat the people. I preached, that night, to from two hundred and fifty to three hundred people, some crowding around the doors and at the back standing as close as they could.

Today we have in that town a flourishing gospel work, and it all began with a tract.—Western Recorder.

A Liberty Loan Appeal

BY DR. COSMO GORDON LANG,

The Archbishop of York and Primate of England.

Come to England and France quickly with money, ships and food. There is a terrible strain upon my countrymen in the trenches. We are not whining and asking for sympathy, but you will be cheering us to new hope, if we know that all the power and resources of your country will be given to the future of civilization.

You cannot send as many men as you wish, but you can send other things. Send money. Where men cannot go, money can. The ocean cannot stop it. Your dollars are the only bullets that will never miss their mark. You are going to have a great Liberty Loan soon. Put all the vigor into it that you can. Don't delay. We are asking you as brothers and partners to come and help us. Every man, woman and child can help in this fight, to free the world from the menace of German domination.

We have to settle whether the spirit of irresponsible autocracy or the spirit of freedom is to prevail among the nations of the world. So vast and fundamental an issue naturally draws all the free nations of the world together. It must be settled now and forever, cost what it may.

The world must decide whether it will submit to the domination of a spirit which, if it were to prevail, would plunge the nations of the world into a long restless career of military rivalry. On such an issue there can be no such thing as compromise. We must be worthy of our task. We must recover for the world the atmosphere of freedom.

Liberty Anthem

BY CHARLES W. GORDON

*Heaven-sent Liberty, our Nation's pride,
Our fathers fought for thee, fought,
bled and died.
Then was our Flag unfurled, Emblem sublime,
A light unto the world through endless time.*

*Our watch-word still shall be "In God we trust," Striving that all may see our cause is just.
We fight for Liberty, and shall not cease,
Till Freedom's victory brings lasting Peace.*

*Now in our Allies' land, breasting war's tide,
Our sons march hand in hand, God is their guide.
Once more we hear the call, "Keep the world free!"
Rise! Rise! And give your all, for Liberty.*

How can I best study the Bible?

The answer to this question isn't hard to find. If you really want to know more about the Bible and want to know it well just get a copy of "The Self-Explaining Bible." The title itself accurately describes the book. It is self-explaining in every sense of the word. It is a fully equipped Bible and carries no disappointments.

Bound as shown above $5.00 by mail. The same book Keratol binding $3.00 by mail.

AN INTRODUCTION before each book is a serviceable synopsis, summarizing in brief the source, history and purpose of the book. THE INTRODUCTIONS were carefully prepared by experts in their respective fields and contain easily accessible information nowhere else found.

THE NOTES AND EXPLANATIONS of the text are placed at the bottom of every page. Nothing in the way of notes and explanations has been so thoroughly yet so concisely done. They are clear, complete and accurate and place at immediate disposal a vast amount of scholarship.

THE INSTRUCTIONS coming separately after the notes convey information as to practical application of the text. These bring the Bible directly and forcibly home, and produce an additional feature of usefulness.

THE REFERENCES are also placed at the bottom so as to obtain the utmost clarity of text.

THE OUTLINE OF THE GOSPELS is based on the standard American revision as the most accurate and modern and includes an Outline Life of Christ which gives in small compass the story of our Saviour's earthly life and ministry.

Contains CHRONOLOGICAL ARRANGEMENT of the prophets, events and places, and tabulations of Bible weights, measures and money, times and festivals, etc.

Compact and complete with its many helps, it is impossible to find in one volume so much information concerning the Bible and its contents as here given.

Plain enough for the beginner, adequate for the intermediate student, helpful to the professional.

Fifteen hundred fine large pages of clear text on white paper.

All of the difficult passages are explained right on the pages where they occur. It is a volume of rare merit. Place it within the reach of every boy and girl. Send for it.

Sometimes we get tired of doing the same things and seeing the same old surroundings day after day. How it brightens one up to read a book that fairly takes one away to new scenes and lives that are spent differently.

ALMETTA of GABRIEL'S RUN

is a tale of the Cumberlands of Kentucky

Louise S. Murdoch has really lived among these scenes and the people of whom she writes. She knows them as few writers have ever known them.

Take this book to some secluded nook where you can read it in solid comfort. For hours you'll live with the mountain-folk, and with Almetta; with Pepper's Mary, Uncle Gabe and Granny Pop, the high peaks, the ravines, and the lonely, rustling forests of the little-known Cumberlands around you.

The book teems with wit and quaint observation.

You'll be picked up and carried into the heart of the Hill Country.

Often you'll chuckle. You'll laugh outright at some of the shrewd sallies. Yet the crudeness, the rawness of life in the mountain country, is brought out with striking vividness. But you'll like it.

Cloth, 5¼x7¾ inches. 244 pages. Illustrated. By mail $1.30.

She greeted him with a bright smile and a "Howdy, Uncle Gabriel."

Do you know a SOLDIER or a SAILOR?

When the soldier or sailor boy that you know is waiting for the word for the battle to begin, let him have this little book in his pocket. Let him open it to page 94—to the "Prayer Before Going Into Battle." It will comfort him. The book will have earned its place in his kit at that moment. The book is called

A Manual of Devotion for Soldiers and Sailors

By JUDSON SWIFT, D.D.

Besides Prayers for Special Occasions it contains a verse of Scripture, a prayer and a meditation for 31 mornings and evenings.

Send for a copy—or as many as you have use for. It is beautifully bound in Keratol. 104 pages, size 3¾x5¼ inches. By mail 35 cents.

The bravest man may need strength and encouragement at some critical hour. This book will meet his need.

Send for
Our Catalog

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY
PARK AVENUE AND 40TH STREET, NEW YORK

Send for
Our Catalog

Vol. 76

No. 6

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

JUNE, 1918

Painted by Sidney H. Riesenberg

Courtesy of the Red Cross

For Valor!

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY, NEW YORK

HENRY E. FRITZ.

WE DECLARE UNTO YOU GLAD TIDINGS

PREACH THE
GOSPEL TO EVERY CREATURE

Religious Problems

Dear Sir:

Will you please answer the following questions?

Can man impart holiness to anything? By divine direction he made things that became holy. The Bible says, "God blessed and sanctified the seventh day." Gen. 2:3. Does it say that of any other weekly day? If it does not, why is Sunday observed as a Sabbath or holy day? God called the Sabbath "My holy day." Isa. 58:13. Jesus kept it and instructed its observance at the destruction of Jerusalem, probably about seventy years after his crucifixion. Matt. 24:20.

P. F. R.

The question implies that the Christian Sabbath lacks in divine sanction, that it rests upon human choice and planning, and therefore that it is not as holy a day as was the Old Testament Sabbath. Is not the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead on the first day of the week to be regarded as an adequate divine sanction? The early Christians evidently felt that it was, and therefore they began soon to speak of the first day as "the Lord's day," and to observe it as the Christian Sabbath. There is no sign of discussion or argument on the subject in the New Testament. The change seems to have come about naturally and easily. Henceforth the first day was the outstanding day in the calendar of the Christian week, because on this day the Lord broke for men the bondage of death. Is not this sanction enough? And can there be any lack of holiness in a day which was thus so wonderfully blessed and sanctified by the resurrection of Christ? Matthew 24:20, so far as we can see, has no bearing on the question of the seventh or first day.

E. W. W.

Dear Sir:

I see by a copy of your paper that you have an able staff of editorial contributors. Would you through them tell me what part of the man constitutes the soul, in the second chapter of Genesis, seventh verse, when God created man and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life and he became a living soul.

G. C.

The passage reads as follows: "And Jehovah God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." Gen. 2:7.

It would be a very foolish person who would undertake to say what the soul is in its entirety. The passage, however, makes some things very clear, and our knowledge of ourselves confirms them. One thing is that the soul is wholly different from the body; its constitution is spiritual and divine, not physical and earthy. Another thing is that the soul, not the body, is the real center of life. Man was not really a living person until God breathed life into him. That is, the body alone does not bring life with it. We know full well from our experience with the phenomena of death that what remains to our sight after death has taken place is not the living person. The living person has gone. The soul then is the part of the man that really lives, and that survives death when death comes. It is that in us that knows and feels and wills and loves and believes and prays. It is the "living soul" that looks out through the eyes upon the world, and that looks up to God the Father. Sometimes the Scripture speaks of this living person as being composed of mind, soul and spirit. Again it comprehends all that truly lives in the person under the one word soul or the other word spirit. It is the soul, not the body, that is concerned in what we call destiny.

E. W. W.

Down in Mississippi

Our colporter in McComb, Mississippi, S. C. Shaw, who is rejoiced to receive his commission for another three months' work, says that there is a great field in South McComb, where the mill people are paying little attention to churches or schools for themselves or their children. Mr. Shaw says:

"I have been prevented by severe illness in my family from doing all that I wanted to, but I have preached several times and held Sunday School and distributed hundreds of tracts. I need more tracts and Sunday School literature. There are over a hundred children in the suburbs without any Sunday School, and I want to start one."

A Year's Work in Buffalo

Our colporter for the city of Buffalo, N. Y., Mr. Samuel Goddard, writes that during the month of April he called on 3,000 people.

"I visited the Buffalo Orphan Asylum, and the grants made to the little ones were gratefully received.

"During the year I have traveled over 1000 miles and called upon 48,560 people. I have sold or given away 1200 books, 550 mottoes, 2580 tracts, 1350 papers and 675 cards, and my reception has been most cordial."

In the Mormon Country

In Utah and Idaho the colporter meets people of all beliefs and none. Some are satisfied to remain as they are; others welcome light. Colporter Henry W. Pratt tells his experiences:

"The Domestic Science Home in Salt Lake City, or in other words a Rescue Home for young girls, who are thus kept out of the Reform School, has four times ordered 'Daily Food'; the superintendent bought two dozen copies for distribution.

"The first town I visited was American Fork, Utah, a solid Mormon town; a small Presbyterian work goes on here. This is a license town to peddlers and agents. The town marshal stopped me on the street and asked me what I was selling. I told him I was not a peddler but a missionary. He asked to look at my books, saying, 'Merchants in town sell some books, and we do not want any objectionable literature circulated.' Letting him see what I had and explaining my literature, I further handed out to him to read a copy of the letter of President Wilson to the American Tract Society commending the work it is doing for the soldiers and sailors. This letter settled the matter, and he said, 'You are all right, I believe.'

"At one place where I called the woman was in trouble because her son had gone to the war. I handed her the tract, 'Looking Through Your Troubles,' saying that the more we look at troubles the larger they grow, but when we look through them to Christ they diminish.

"One woman bought books of me several years ago. 'Your books were good,' she said, and she gave me a small order for children.

"I had a conversation with a man who overtook me on the street. He is a Mormon, but was brought up a Methodist in Virginia. He was honest enough to say that he did not like the way Mormons live—so much lying, swearing, dancing, etc., but declared that he was satisfied with his religion.

"I visited in Dubois, Idaho. This town has taken quite a new start since I was there two years ago—nice business blocks, bank, two newspapers, etc. I did quite well in circulation. One lady where I called was not inclined to ask me in, but she did, although she said at the door, 'I don't believe I would be interested.' She bought two good books, 'Father John' and 'White Fire.' At another home the lady was dressed all ready to go out, but she asked me in and was very cordial. She bought 'White Fire' and books for children.

"Dubois has a Baptist church, just erected, and the Mormons are to build, also the Catholics. The Bishop's family bought some books: the wife wanted a book to read to her Sunday School class."

Saloons Closed

Colporter Dunlop, writing from Los Angeles, says:

"The people on this coast are devoting a great deal of their time and energy to Red Cross and other war work, but they have found time to take up the liquor problem, and the open saloon is done away with in Los Angeles proper. The question now is what to substitute for the saloons to interest and keep the men busy after their day's work is done. I suggested to one minister that reading rooms with well stocked tables be opened, and he carried the suggestion on.

"The Spanish people buy what they can, but they are poor and many of them cannot read; but soon their children will, and we must be working for them."

On Our Honor Roll

Mrs. J. Thomas Webster, 1613 Linden Avenue, Baltimore, Md., writes:

"I believe I have been taking the AMERICAN MESSENGER for sixty years and more—at first, when a girl, in a club addressed to Miss Susan Barnes. She is still living in California at the age of eighty-four. Later I think you will find me subscribing under my own name, Susanna Mitchell, Churchville, Md., and for the past fifty years as Mrs. J. Thomas Webster, so I feel sure you will give me a place on your Honor Roll. I would not know what to do without the MESSENGER, and send you my best wishes for its continued success."

Mrs. G. G. Sheets, Raymondsville, N. Y., claims a place on our Honor Roll.

"For many years I have been a reader of your excellent paper, as my father was a subscriber to it in its smallest size, and I have copies of it at the present time and can note the wonderful change made since it was started. It is a welcome visitor in my home every month. I am now seventy-five, and a warm friend to the AMERICAN MESSENGER."

Appreciates It At Eighty-two

Enclosed you will find fifty cents for the renewal of Mrs. Williams' subscription. She is past eighty-two and is the last survivor of the twelve children of the late Rev. David Nelson, D. D. Her mind is active and she enjoys the AMERICAN MESSENGER, which her father subscribed for when she was a child.

L. E. C., Santa Rosa, Cal.

People remember things they are interested in, and forget those in which they have little or no interest. The hunter does not forget his gun, the boy does not forget his top, the fisherman does not forget his hooks, the boatman does not forget his oars. Many a boy has forgotten to fill the wood box, but did one ever forget his ball or skates when he wanted to use them? A man may forget his employer's business, but he is not likely to forget his own pleasure. "I forgot" is simply another way of saying, "I did not care enough about the matter to remember."

An Easy Way to Secure an Excellent Fountain Pen

A Fountain Pen is always a necessity and here is an opportunity of securing a good one with only a little effort (see offer below).

The publishers of the AMERICAN MESSENGER are very desirous of increasing the circulation of this admirable publication, and it is for that purpose that we are offering this splendid Fountain Pen. The Pen is known as the Commercial Fountain Pen.

The pen is six and one half inches long, and suitable for either lady or gentleman, and fully guaranteed. In the construction of this pen only the best of materials are used. The rubber parts are hand-turned Para rubber. The gold nib is 14 karat solid gold tipped with the best grade of hard iridium.

OFFER No. 1 We will send one of these fountain pens absolutely free to any one who sends us three new yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at the regular price, 50 cents each.

OFFER No. 2 We will give one fountain pen and a year's subscription to the AMERICAN MESSENGER for only $1.20.

Any of our present subscribers may take advantage of offer No. 2 by extending their subscription one year, and remitting $1.20 in payment for the same.

Our young friends will find this a very good method of securing a Fountain Pen for themselves. Try it and see how easy it is to secure only 3 new yearly subscriptions at 50 cents each.

American Messenger, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York

The American Messenger

"Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Luke 2:10

Vol. 76. No. 6

JUNE, 1918

Copyright, 1918, by American Tract Society.

Terms: 50 cents per annum
Single copy, 5 cents

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

PUBLISHED MONTHLY

BY THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

OFFICERS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President.

JOHN HENRY JOWETT, M.A., D.D., Vice-President.

JUDSON SWIFT, D.D., General Secretary.

LOUIS TAG, Treasurer.

REV. HENRY LEWIS, Ph.D., Recording Secretary.

All of the above-named officers should be addressed at Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Rev. David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.

Rev. Charles Carroll Albertson, D.D.

Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.

Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D.

Rev. George Ernest Merriam.

Entered at the Post Office in New York as second-class matter.

For the Red Cross

We give on another page Dr. Fismer's interesting account of the origin and work of the Red Cross. All have been thinking of the achievements and needs of this wonderful organization during this "drive" week especially and hoping that the hundred million dollar fund will be raised. As the Red Cross War Council says:

"The rapid increase in the number of our soldiers in France means that the Red Cross facilities abroad for the immediate relief and care of our fighters must be increased. The refugees driven from their homes by the Germans have added thousands to the number of homeless old men, women and children in France and Italy who must be fed, clothed, nursed back to health and re-established. The death of every allied soldier makes more important every civilian and especially every child. The fight to overcome tuberculosis in France must be maintained and increased. The campaign to save babies and children—the immediate hope of a future citizenship—must be extended."

Emergencies have constantly to be met, and supplies of every kind must be on hand. The hurry call is the constant one in this work. Here is one instance. On April 20, shortly after noon, Premier Clemenceau's secretary had called the American Red Cross commission in Paris on the telephone, saying that fifty thousand refugees were gathered at St. Omer and that a revitailment train was being made up from one of the Paris stations. He stated that milk, cheese, beef and flour were needed. Could the American Red Cross send these supplies immediately?

"The American Red Cross could, and did. When the train left Paris at seven o'clock that same night it had aboard five tons of condensed milk, two and one-half tons of cheese, and the same amount of tinned beef and flour. The fifty thousand refugees at St. Omer were fed. Next day another train left Paris with more Red Cross food aboard."

Another day, soon after, came an appeal by telephone from the French Ministry of War: "We are establishing two hundred children in a convent in the south of France, and need seventy-five beds; can you get them for us?" The American Red Cross, drawing on its ever-ready warehouse supplies, promptly complied with the request. These are only two incidents among many happening every day.

Arrangements are now being made to care for the Americans who will be carried to Germany as prisoners during the months just ahead of us, and who that has a son or other loved one on the battle front is not cheered by that knowledge?

So the outreaching work of healing and heartening goes on under one central organization, with no friction, no cross-purposes, no lack of time; and we who cannot be active workers must surely be active supporters.

The American Tract Society's Ninety-Third Annual Meeting

On Wednesday afternoon and evening, May 6, the annual meeting of the American Tract Society was held in the chapel of the Marble Collegiate Church, Fifth Avenue and Twentieth Street, New York. Mr. William Phillips Hall, the President, was obliged to be absent from the afternoon session, and the Rev. Dr. James H. Hoadley occupied the chair and conducted the devotional exercises.

The minutes of the last annual meeting were read and approved. A review of the work of the year was given by the Treasurer, Mr. Louis Tag, and the General Secretary, Rev. Judson Swift, D.D.

The following resolution was then adopted:

Resolved, That the Annual Report, an abstract of which has been presented in the reports of its officers, be approved and published under the direction of the Executive Committee.

On behalf of the committee appointed to present nominations for officers of the Society, Rev. Harlan G. Mendenhall, D.D., its chairman, presented the following recommendation:

Recommended, That the Board of Managers for the coming year be the same as last year, as shown in the printed copy of the Ninety-second Annual Report of the Society; and to fill vacancies now existing on the Board the following be elected: Mr. James De Graff, Mr. William K. Gilchrist and Rev. Irving Berg.

Motion was made, seconded and carried that the report of the Nominating Committee be received, and that one ballot be cast for the election of the Board of Managers in accordance with the above recommendation.

Thereupon Dr. Mendenhall, in the absence of the Recording Secretary, cast the ballot, and the presiding officer declared the Board of Managers elected, in accordance with the above recommendation.

The following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That the Ninety-third Anniversary of the American Tract Society be further celebrated by a sermon, to be preached by the Rev. Dr. C. Rexford Raymond, in the South Congregational Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., on Sunday morning, May 12.

At this point a recess was taken while the Board of Managers met in an adjoining room.

Upon the return of the presiding officer to the chair announcement was made that the Board of Managers had elected the following officers of the Society to serve for the ensuing year:

PRESIDENT: Mr. William Phillips Hall.

VICE-PRESIDENT: Rev. John Henry Jowett, M.A., D.D.

HONORARY VICE-PRESIDENTS: The same as last year, as shown in the printed copy of the Ninety-second Annual Report of the Society, except that in place of Rev. Dr. C. A. Miller, deceased, and Mr. George M. Miller, deceased, the following be elected: Dr. John R. Mott and Rev. Robert Johnston, D.D.

It was also reported that the Board of Managers had elected the following members of the Executive Committee:

On the Publishing Committee, for three years, from May, 1918, to May, 1921, Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D., and Rev. Frederick H. Knubel, D.D.

On the Distributing Committee, for three years, from May, 1918, to May, 1921, Dr. Silas F. Hallock and Rev. Robert Scott Inglis, D.D.

On the Finance Committee, for three years, from May, 1918, to May, 1921, Mr. William Phillips Hall and Mr. C. H. Zehnder; for two years, from May, 1918, to May, 1920, Mr. S. V. V. Huntington; for one year, from May, 1918, to May, 1919, the Hon. John C. Knox.

The following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That the General Secretary, Dr. Swift, convey to Dr. Henry Lewis the deep sympathy of all the officers and members of the Society for him in his illness, and that our prayers are offered for his speedy restoration to health.

The following resolution was also adopted:

Resolved, That the President appoint a Nominating Committee of three to present nominations for officers of the Society at the next Annual Meeting.

A recess was then taken until the evening session.

At the evening session devotional exercises were conducted by Mr. William Phillips Hall, President of the Society.

The Rev. R. H. Evans, of Baltimore, Md., gave a most interesting address on mission work in West Africa, and the Rev. J. Franklin Shindell, of Bayonne, N. J., Y. M. C. A. Secretary, carried his audience to the battlefield in a vivid talk, "With the American Forces in France."

A closing prayer was offered by Dr. Swift, and the meeting adjourned.

Black Walnut Trees for the Government

AS THE AMERICAN MESSENGER goes to all parts of the United States, and is read by so many people in villages and on farms, we mention the appeal of President Wilson for black walnut timber, hoping that many of our readers will have one or more trees of this kind which they will give or sell to the Government. This wood is used in manufacturing airplane propellers and gunstocks, and there is pressing need for it. As it is no longer found in abundance anywhere in our country, the supply will have to come, often as single trees, from the forests or from dooryards, and it is to find these scattered trees that the President has issued a letter to the Boy Scouts of America asking for their help.

If you have one or more such trees that you are willing to part with, send word to the nearest Scout organization, and a commission will be sent to measure the trees and estimate the amount of timber they will supply. Reports of all such trees will be forwarded by Scout Masters to the Forest Service of the Government, and the gift accepted or the price agreed upon later. If you are not in touch with any Scout organization, send word directly to the Forest Service, U. S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C. Your trees may hasten our victory in France!

Our Day of Prayer

We urged in our last issue that Memorial Day be appointed by the President as a day of prayer for our country and for the great cause for which we are fighting. On April 2 Congress had passed a resolution presenting this matter to the President, and he responded on May 11 appointing the day for this purpose.

"I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, do hereby proclaim Thursday, the thirtieth of May, a day already freighted with sacred and stimulating memories, a day of public humiliation, prayer, and fasting, and do exhort my fellow-citizens of all faiths and creeds to assemble on that day in their several places of worship and there, as well as in their homes, to pray Almighty God that He may forgive our sins and shortcomings as a people and purify our hearts to see and love the truth, to accept and defend all things that are just and right, and to purpose only those righteous acts and judgments which are in conformity with His will; beseeching Him that He will give victory to our armies as they fight for freedom, wisdom to those who take counsel on our behalf in these days of dark struggle and perplexity, and steadfastness to our people to make sacrifice to the utmost in support of what is just and true, bringing us at last the peace in which men's hearts can be at rest because it is founded upon mercy, justice, and good-will."

This is doubtless the crucial period of our great war, and if ever we needed to pray we need to now. The next few months will no doubt practically decide the question of victory, but between now and the day of peace there will be a struggle such as the world has never known before.

We, as a nation, are in this war in the cause of humanity. We solemnly believe that we have the approval of God in the step that we took in declaring war; and now if we continue to have his favor and guidance, it must be because of our earnest prayer and our ceaseless effort.

God expects us to come to him in prayer. When we meet him in devotion and petition he answers almost before our petitions are framed. Cornelius was "keeping the ninth hour of prayer," when, as he says, "A man stood before me in bright apparel and saith, Cornelius, thy prayer is heard." The next day Peter "went up upon the housetop to pray" when the counterpart to Cornelius' vision was given to him, and his course of action was made perfectly plain.

Saul of Tarsus, blinded and asking for guidance in "the house of Judas" in Damascus, was paving the way for the coming of the messenger who was to bring light; for the word of God to the messenger regarding Saul was, "Behold, he prayeth."

As we gather in public meetings and in our homes for prayer on Memorial Day we have every right to expect God's answer if we ourselves are sincere and "in the Spirit." Let us make this a memorable day in our history!

An Hour a Day With Jesus

By HOWARD W. POPE

Never was the Master's rebuke to the disciples, "What, could ye not watch with me one hour?" more pertinent than to-day. We are living at a rapid rate. Every one seems to be in a mad rush to get there, and multitudes of business men are consciously violating the speed laws of health and safety.

It is becoming harder all the while to secure time for private or family worship, while meditation on the Word is, we fear, almost a lost art. Men and women too are using up seven days' strength in six days' time, so that Sunday usually finds them completely exhausted.

At the risk of seeming to preach, let me suggest as a remedy an hour a day with Jesus, emphasizing not so much the amount of time as the fact of a generous period set apart each day for fellowship with the living and written Word.

THE NEED.

Our own souls need it. How much they need it we shall never know until we adopt the habit. We need it both for our information and inspiration. We need to know God better that we may love Him more. We need to know ourselves better that we may take and keep our proper attitude toward Him. And when we know His will we need the constant and constraining influence of the Holy Spirit to incite us to do it.

A slumbering church needs it, for if it is ever awakened and set on fire for God it must be through the instrumentality of those who are already on fire, and whose earnest intercession gives God no rest until He establishes and makes Jerusalem a praise in the earth.

A perishing world needs it, for never will it realize that it is dead until it comes in contact with those who are alive in Christ Jesus. Formal preaching and feeble testimony will never disturb the sleep of the dead, but "the people that do know their God shall be strong, and shall do exploits." When people hear about the victorious life and see it in their midst they will realize their own need.

And Jesus craves it. We are not simply the servants of Jesus who go to Him for orders, but he says, "I have called you friends," and "all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you." A business man may employ hundreds of women, and daily assign them their work and pay them their wages, but there is one woman whose relation to him is entirely different. He is not her employer but her husband. He did not select her for the work that she could do, but to be his wife and companion.

Even so we are the bride of Christ, and far more than the service that we can render He prizes our fellowship and love. What a comfort to realize that though we may not be able to render distinguished service, we can at least love Him with all our heart.

THE RESULTS.

Deep, abounding joy. "Did not our hearts burn within as He talked with us by the way, and while He opened to us the Scriptures?" Luke 24:32. "Lord, it is good for us to be here. If Thou wilt let us make here three tents," and stay here forever.

More effective testimony. "That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you," 1 John 1:3.

Some years ago I came in close touch with a group of young people. I soon saw that one of the number was far superior to all the rest in the weight of her testimony and in her knowledge of the Bible. Then I found the secret. She was giving an hour a day to the study of the Bible and prayer. Her life was beautiful and her influence unique, though her natural gifts were only ordinary. That hour a day with Jesus seemed to cast a halo over all that she said and did.

Greater power in prayer. To the disciples who inquired of the Lord why they could not do at all what He did so easily, He replied, "This kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting." In Acts 4:31 we read that when the apostles had prayed, the place was shaken where they were assembled together, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost. "And with great power gave they witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus; and great grace was upon them all."

And so we come back to our starting-point, and leave with you the question, "Could we not manage our households, and carry on our business, and accomplish more study, and raise more money, if we would spend an hour a day with Jesus and the Bible?"

"A little talk with Jesus, how it smooths the rugged road,
How it seems to help me onward, when I faint beneath my load;
When my heart is crushed with sorrow, and my eyes with tears are dim,
There is naught can yield me comfort like a little talk with Him.

"Then I will talk with Jesus; Come Lord, and talk with me,
For there's naught can yield me comfort like a little talk with Thee."

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTION

EDGAR W. WORK, D. D.

WHY I LOVE THE BIBLE

BY

REV. EDGAR WHITAKER WORK, D. D.

Pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian Church, New York City

T

HE pronoun of the first person in the title of this article is after all not personal. The writer has an idea that if he can state in personal terms some reasons for loving the Bible, he may be able to some extent to interpret the subject for others. For the Bible is the book of all hearts: it is not exclusive, but inclusive. What is true of one of us may be true of many others.

There are of course many great reasons why I love the Bible. It is God's book, inspired and directed of Him. It is the book of revelation. It is the book of Christ, and of grace and salvation. It is the book of the past, the present and the future—the book of the times and the eternities.

But there are many minor reasons why I love the Bible, which are in a sense more personal and more intimate. I love it first because—well, just because it is a lovable book. That was the meaning of the psalmist when he said: "How sweet are thy words unto my taste! Yea, sweeter than honey to my mouth!" Indeed, the psalmist is often in this mood of overflowing love, as witness the 119th Psalm, where almost every one of the 176 verses contains some tribute of affection to God's Word.

A famous person was once asked by his friend why he loved him. His answer was, "It is you, it is I." And this is the true way of friendship. It is our friend's way to make us love him. It is even so with the Bible. It has a certain winsomeness or loveliness. I should be content indeed to leave the matter there, just as it is sufficient to say that one loves the rose and not to give reasons for it. I have an idea that this is the root reason why I like to say "My Bible," and to say it with a caress of the voice.

I love the Bible too for its familiar pathways. This, you know, is one of the attractions of the woods, especially the woods where we have often roamed. One feels at home among those well-remembered ways of the forest where one's feet have often trod. This is the feeling too that one has about old home places. I was driving not long since in Pennsylvania with a gentleman who spent his boyhood there. We went over some old familiar roads, and I noted with interest his eager enthusiasm. "Why," he said, "it is forty years since I travelled these roads, but I remember every cross-road and every turn."

But how do we get this feeling for familiar places? Why, by going over them again and again until they become homelike and habitable to us. I suppose we all have this feeling for certain home places, and now and then the longing to go back to them takes hold of our hearts. Well, this is just my feeling about the Bible. It has so many familiar pathways. I remember that I plucked flowers here, or noted something beautiful there. This passage was a tonic to me, and in that pathway I found good for my soul. So through the years I have come to have a home instinct about the Bible.

Do you remember that moving scene in George Eliot's Romola? The blind poet Bardo was seated in his library with some guests. Suddenly he arose and, walking about in the library, touched the books on the shelves lovingly. One has that feeling about the Bible—it is good to touch, it is good to be on familiar terms with. An old teacher of mine used to say to his students, "Go into the library and read the titles of the books, and touch them with loving hands." The longer we know the Bible the more familiar it grows; it becomes the book of our hearts, the intimate counselor and helper of our daily life. There are some passages of the "Good Book" which you and I could find in the dark, and the very touch of them would thrill our souls.

But I love the Bible for the very opposite reason. I love it for its unfamiliar pathways. As one wanders in the woods what a delight it is, especially with a companion, to step out on some new pathway, or to discover some unknown treasure of the forest! The unfamiliar pathways of the woods allure us. Surely this is true of the Bible. It is a land of surprises, of undiscovered beauties, of unsuspected bounty. It is an old book but it is always new. Indeed, the Bible is the newest book I know. There was a humorous lecturer some years ago who used to say facetiously that he was accustomed to take his illustrations from the Bible, and the people thought them quite new! It is so often true that the old things mean more to us than the new. If I could do so I should like to read the old books most of the time—Scott and Dickens and Thackeray. I do not belittle the newer literature, but the old is still very wonderful; it is not yet exhausted.

There are unfamiliar pathways in books that one has often read. If you would take pains to go back and read them again you would find many surprises. Macaulay writes in his diary about reading Gil Blas for the seventh time. A really good book cannot be exhausted by frequent readings. Think of exhausting Shakespeare, or Milton, or Bunyan, or Lorna Doone, or Rab and His Friends, or Don Quixote, or John Halifax, Gentleman! If you want to get the real taste of a book go back to it again and again. Each time you will find something new.

And this is why I love the Bible. It is always a land of something new, a land of many surprises! I was walking one day in a botanical garden with a botanist. Suddenly he stooped down and touched a little flower that grew along the pathway. "I have been looking for this flower for twenty years!" he exclaimed. How unexpectedly he found it! Even though he was not looking for it, it came in his pathway. This is a wonderful thing about the Bible —that its beauty springs up in our pathway as we walk.

I love the Bible too because it is a wise book. I do not mean learned; it is too simple for that. One would never think of classifying the 23rd Psalm, or the 13th chapter of First Corinthians, or the 14th chapter of the Gospel of John among learned productions, yet they are classics of wisdom. I have often asked myself the question, "Wherein does the wisdom of the Bible consist?" Perhaps it is the same as the wisdom of a man. It is a certain kind of insight or understanding of life, a certain balance and sanity in relation to things and persons. This is the quality of the Bible that makes it a wise book. It is the gift of balance and spiritual intelligence. When I read it it seems to take me up to high places whence I can look out over life with a better understanding of its meaning.

There is a mountain on the edge of Lake George to which men are said to ascend before they take their examinations to serve as pilots on the lake boats. From that great height the whole lake lies spread out before them. They see the lay of the land, the bays, capes and points, and the deep water, too. It is even so with this Good Book. If you will climb up to its heights day by day you will know more about life. It is a wise book in this way—that it furnishes one with the wisdom of life. It helps one to see somewhat with God's eye the facts of life and eternity. I love it because it is a wise book!

And I love the Bible too because it is a book that produces self-respect. Some might be inclined to say the very contrary. It is certainly a very frank book: often it takes the pride out of us. I know all this. I know how it shows our blackness and our sin, but this is not all. It does not stop there. It is frank about our sins and shortcomings, it never flatters the soul, yet always it is seeking to put us on a basis of real self-respect through godly living. The very fact that the Bible lays such stress upon the worth of the soul tends to produce self-respect. Our souls are too valuable to die, too precious to be lost. They are too full of light to be living in the darkness of a sinful life.

Some one told old Dr. Johnson one day that an enemy of his had made light of him because he lived in an alley. "Tell him," said the old man, "that his soul lives in an alley!" The Bible is constantly telling us that the soul is too valuable to live in an alley. Coleridge once said that "religion is in its essence the most gentlemanly thing in the world." There are some books that pull us down, but the Bible lifts us up. There are some writers whose teachings vitiate our lives—demoralize us. The Bible makes life infinitely worth while. It engenders the right kind of self-respect. It promotes spiritual dignity, real gentlemanliness and womanliness.

Oh, I love the Bible for many reasons that I cannot take time to mention! I love it because it is a comforting book. I love it because it is a good book for hungry hearts. I love it because it is such a still book. You remember that Tenyson said that he loved "the great still books." I love it because it is not a dull book. I love it because it deals with common facts and common people. I love it because it is a book of memories, of challenges, of chivalries. I love it because it is a helpful book and I love it because it is a working book. It "sets one in a working mood."

There is one other reason among many. I love the Bible because it breeds a high sense of companionship. Have you not often had this feeling as you have read your Bible? It has made you feel that you were not alone—that you were in the presence and the enjoyment of a great Companionship. Do you remember that English atheist who bemoaned his state of unfaith by saying, "The Great Companion is dead"? To one who reads and loves his Bible the Great Companion is ever close at hand. We all need companionship, for the soul suffers great solitude at times. It was said of Thomas Carlyle that there seemed to be upon him a sort of "homesickness of the soul." We have allseen spirits of this kind, who seemed to have about them a great longing for home and companionship. We all know too what a great companionship can do for us.

"I have conversed with David Hume and William Pitt," said the Duchess of Gordon, "and therefore I am not afraid to converse with any man!" But one who reads his Bible can say even more than this. He can say, "I have conversed with Abraham and Moses and Isaiah and Amos and John and Peter and Paul." Even more—he can say, "I have conversed with Christ Himself, and therefore I am not afraid to converse with any man."

How wonderful it is that though Christ lived and walked so many years ago in Judæa and Galilee, we can nevertheless enjoy His companionship in the Gospels! Here we see Him in the days of His flesh in the fourfold picture of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John. More and more as I walk up and down in the sacred precincts of these four little books I feel the presence of the Master with me.

There is a story told of some travelers who were on the way to a city, but when they reached the city in the late evening they found the gates already closed. So they made their camp outside the gate and built their fire close against the walls. Presently a Stranger drew near and sat with them. They had much pleasant converse together, and friendship grew apace among them. When the Stranger had withdrawn the travelers looked in surprise upon the wall—and there in the smoke on the wall was a picture of the Stranger! And when the shoemaker looked upon the picture he said it was the picture of a shoemaker. The farmer said it was the picture of a farmer, and the Sanhedrist lawyer said it was the picture of a lawyer. The Stranger had so entered into companionship with them that each one of them claimed him. It is even so as one walks and talks with Christ in the Gospels.

This is only the beginning of the reasons why I love the Bible. I may not have given you reason at all, dear friend, for there are many ways of approach to the good Word of God. Much depends upon our experience and our capacity. As the poet has said, "Our reach must exceed our grasp." One thing is certain, and that is that we ought to touch the Good Book always with a caress of affection.

I was standing one day in St. Peter's in Rome before Canova's lions, at the door of one of the papal tombs, when two men approached. One of them was evidently blind, for the other took his hand and drew it over the figure of one of the lions—along the back, and over the mane, and even into the mouth of the statue. The blind man's face lighted up and he cried, "I see!" He had touched it lovingly and he saw! He who will touch the Bible lovingly shall see. Even if it be through our tears, yet we shall see!

"I love the Bible," said Phillips Brooks, "with all my heart. It has helped me; it has helped my fathers. When its promises speak to me I am calm. When its cry summons me I am brave. I will obey it, and I will not question. I love it with all my heart and soul and strength!" Can we not say the psalmist's words over again, and with deeper meaning than before? "How sweet are thy words unto my taste! Yea, sweeter than honey to my mouth!"

The Story of the Red Cross

BY ARNOLD W. FISMER, PH. D., Bloomfield Theological Seminary

THE story of this war, written with human blood, is so unspeakably tragical, so replete with nerve-racking and heart-breaking incidents, that it is indeed a wholesome relief to be able to turn to one of its heart-cheering, ennobling features that God in his providence has brought to the fore to manifest his glory. One of the best things that have come out of the war is the revival of the RED CROSS. In response to the nation's call in her time of need the membership of the Red Cross has increased in six months from 400,000 to 5,000,000, and with the Christmas Membership Drive, the enrollment sprang in one mighty bound to 20,000,000 loyal supporters of this perfect embodiment of the Nation's purpose in this war. To-day the American Red Cross is the largest organization of any kind in the world and the greatest force for good. In the black welter of warring nations it is the one bright spot of Hope—Humanity's Light. Its emblem is the sign of the Cross; its spirit is the Spirit of Christ, the "Man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief." Its mission is as broad as humanity, as high as heaven—the very mission of the great Redeemer, "who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed."

Especially has it opened to woman the door of opportunity for a signal service peculiar to her nature. Through it she can best serve the great cause of humanity to which we have all pledged ourselves. The Red Cross brings to her opportunities of service to her immediate community and to other communities all over the world, and it guides her activities with high and religious ideals. It teaches her how to save at home in order that suffering men, women and children abroad may have a chance to live. It teaches her how to prepare supplies which wounded soldiers and homeless families lack. And best of all, through the work of the Red Cross the American woman will learn to be the future good citizen of this great country which we all love, and in the larger development of which woman is to have a more prominent part. Is not this perhaps the great chance for which woman has been looking to give her time and talent and efforts in some measure to meet our national needs?

How the Red Cross Began

Did you ever think what war would be like if there were no nurses to take care of the wounded men? There was a time—and it wasn't so long ago—when there were no women to go into the military hospitals to see that the soldiers brought in from the battlefield were properly cared for. The name of Florence Nightingale is dear to every soldier and sailor, for it was she who founded nursing as a profession for women.

Florence Nightingale, an English girl of wealthy parentage, gave up her society life to devote herself wholly to the service of suffering humanity. Shortly after her return from the Continent, where for twelve years she had visited and studied in hospitals, the Crimean War broke out. There was terrible mismanagement in the military hospitals. Two thousand men at Scutari were lying for weeks in filth and starving, sick and dying, packed together in hordes on the bare floor of shacks alive with rats and vermin. Into this scene of misery and squalor came Florence Nightingale with a group of women. The dirt was cleaned away; the men were bathed and given fresh clothing and proper food; letters home were written for them and hundreds of dying men were nursed back to life. It is no wonder that the soldiers of the Crimea have idolized her, called her "Angel of Mercy," and raised a large sum of money in her name to show their gratitude. This money Florence Nightingale accepted on the condition that it be used to found the first hospital training school for girls. The school, bearing her name, is in London to-day.

Courtesy of the Christian Herald.

PRESIDENT WOODROW WILSON
President of the Red Cross Society

But Florence Nightingale's work did not end with the Crimean War. A young Swiss, Henri Dunant, as a result and under the inspiration of the work of Florence Nightingale, conceived the idea of an international organization to carry on what she had done alone. In 1864 Henri Dunant called together a council of fourteen nations at Geneva, Switzerland. This meeting resulted in the organization of the Red Cross. Under the terms of this Convention each nation pledged itself to work with other nations in caring for the sick and wounded of all countries alike, and never to fire on a doctor, nurse, or ambulance that bore the sign of the Red Cross. The Convention adopted the emblem of the Swiss banner with the colors reversed, as a tribute to the nation which called them together. Thus, the Swiss national banner is a white cross on a red field, and the banner of our organization, the Red Cross, is a red cross on a white field. The two words "Humanity" and "Neutrality" were used as watchwords of the Red Cross.

In the Civil War

All this was over in Europe. Here, in America, few knew of the Red Cross. In the year 1860 the great Civil War broke out in our country. Care of the sick and wounded was under the charge of what was known as "The Sanitary Commission." But aside from this organized group of men and women there were many individual women who devoted their lives to the same cause. Among these were Clara Barton, Dorothea Dix and Mother Bickerdyke.

These women, touched with the "enthusiasm of humanity," with heroic devotion to their service of mercy in the midst of dirt and disease stayed, during the four years of the war, behind the lines, nursing Northerners and Southerners alike.

Mother Bickerdyke, known for her fearlessness, one day summarily discharged a drunken surgeon. When the surgeon appealed to General Sherman he sternly replied, "If it was that woman who discharged you, I can do nothing for you. She outranks me."

When War Secretary Stanton asked Dorothea Dix what the nation could do to thank her for her work she answered, "I would like a flag!"

A BATTLEFIELD TRAMWAY

It takes miles and miles of tracks to keep the trenches supplied with adequate supplies and munitions, as well as to move the wounded behind the battle lines

The two beautiful flags given her by her country she later presented to Harvard College, and they now hang, in her memory, over the doors of its Memorial Hall.

When the Civil War was over Clara Barton went abroad, and there for the first time she heard of the Red Cross Society. In the war between France and Germany, in 1870, she saw for the first time the medical staffs of two opposing armies working together in the care of the wounded soldiers. Wherever there was a battle, there she saw a squad of doctors and nurses in white, each with a cross of red on his or her sleeve, working back of the firing line to repair the damage done by the bullets. They accomplished so much in a short time that Clara Barton was inspired with the idea of introducing this same Red Cross in America, for she found that the ideals that had led the great women of the Civil War to work among both Northerners and Southerners were the same as those of the Red Cross—"Humanity" and "Neutrality."

Largely through her efforts, which extended over five years, the Geneva treaty was signed by the United States in 1882 and the American Red Cross was established. This act was the achievement of her life. She was its first President.

To relate the story of her life-work, her humanitarian activities in the Spanish War, in the great Michigan forest fire, the Mississippi flood in 1882, the Johnstown flood, the San Francisco earthquake, would more than fill all the columns of this paper.

Its Work To-Day

Once more the Red Cross is on the war basis as it had not been since the Spanish War. But with what a difference this time! Those years between the wars had been spent in organizing—in building up a Nursing Service whereby thousands of the best professional nurses were ready to answer the call of their country. Immediately after America's entering the war a campaign of one week was planned to raise $100,000,000. Telephone and telegraph wires began to hum with requests in every part of the United States. Men left important positions to offer their services. Cities vied with each other in novel ways. Buffalo sent its contribution to Washington in an aeroplane. In Ohio one woman sold a hen and a setting of eggs at auction for $2,002. A descendant of Betsy Ross made a flag that sold for $500. Thousands of working men gave a day's pay. And so it went on all over the country, and the result was that the flood-tide of contributions went "over the top" with several millions more than actually requested.

How was this first one hundred million used? It would require volumes to tell you all that has been accomplished—the lives saved, the suffering assuaged, the starving fed, the homeless sheltered, the heart-broken comforted. The millions given have but started the work of restoring the ravages of war.

Many millions more will be required to meet the increasing needs. The week of May 20 to 27 has been set aside as "Red Cross Week." The American people are asked for a second hundred million dollars in order that the great work may not falter. And we count on the same splendid, cheerful, ready response in this second campaign.

Not only must money be raised but workers everywhere must be enlisted. Already twenty

A DISPENSARY BEHIND THE LINES

Where the Red Cross administers medical treatment to the children of the war zones who have been injured by bursting shells or in some other manner million people are in this mighty working army. Think what that means: twenty million people, all of them working for one purpose—to relieve the myriadfold suffering of humanity.

These cuts by courtesy of the Red Cross Magazine.

How can I help, you ask? Did you ever wonder where the money comes from that does all this work? It comes largely from the dollar membership fee that each person pays as he joins the Red Cross. Surely you can do that! Moreover, the Red Cross needs your work! Have you ever given it a thought where all the knitted articles, surgical bandages and hospital garments and other things needful for the bodily comfort of our boys and the boys of our allies come from? They are largely supplied by the Red Cross. When you are working for the Red Cross you are working for and with the soldiers at the front, and so you are helping to win the war. Surely you must do that! Every true American must want to stand by the Government in this needful time of trouble.

The Red Cross stands as the first aid to our Government; our President is also President of the Red Cross; our army works with the Red Cross; our Congress has recognized the Red Cross as the only relief organization that receives its special protection and can render it special aid. To be a member of and a worker for the Red Cross, is to be a part of the big movement with big ideals, the ideals of Florence Nightingale of Henri Dunant, Clara Barton, Dorothea Dix, as well as the ideals for which our country is fighting to-day.

“OVER THE TOP AND BEYOND”

By Judson Swift, D. D.

HE past year has been one of the most extraordinary and momentous in the life of the human race. The World War has continued in steadily increasing tensity and violence, both shattering and destroying the most valuable and precious possessions, not only of whole nations, but also of countless individuals, and under the direst cruelties and sufferings known to mankind.

Moreover this ninety-third year of the American Tract Society's life and work has witnessed the entry of our own beloved country into the world conflict, and with the strongest possible affirmation that all of her forces to the utmost limit are consecrated to the establishing of righteousness, justice and human liberty among and in behalf of all nations and peoples. In every great crisis history records without exception that the final victory is with the nation or nations that fight under the banners of the one living and true God, who is revealed in the life and face of His Son, Jesus.

The Tract Society for nearly a century has stood solidly and firmly for the truth of the Gospel, for Christian unity and world evangelism. While books in ever-increasing numbers have been issued, indeed, rushed through the press, only a very small percentage of them have taught or even suggested the all-essentialness of Christian truth. Continuing along the lines of its entire history, the Society has made some additions to its already large totals of positive Christian literature.

It has ever been the policy of the Tract Society to increase its publications in the languages of the various foreign-speaking peoples living in our midst and coming to our shores. This kind of service has little if any money return, and the Society can only enlarge its work as sufficient gifts are received. To-day nothing more truly Christian or patriotic could occur than the receiving of sufficient donations to enable the Society to immediately greatly increase its books and tracts in the languages and dialects spoken by those daily seen in our streets, and equally so for all races that are sitting in the darkness of ignorance and superstition.

Publications

There have been added during the last year twelve new publications: one in Spanish, namely, La Juventud y los Tiempos Modernos (“The Times and Young Men”), translated into Spanish by A. G. Baker and J. M. Rodriguez; and eleven in English, nine of these being volumes and two of them tracts and leaflets. A new edition from new plates of the “Soldier's Text Book” and “Cromwell's Soldier's Pocket Bible” were issued for use among the soldiers and sailors. Altogether, 202,775 volumes were issued during the year, while the number of leaflets and tracts reaches 892,500. The Society has published during the year four periodicals, The American Messenger and Apples of Gold in English, Amerikanisher Botschafter in German and Mansanas de Oro in Spanish. The total of these periodicals for the year is 1,912,000. There have also been distributed 20,000 “Go to Church Stamps,” which, added to the 210,000 issued and distributed during the two preceding years, totals 230,000. This Stamp was originated by the American Tract Society, and is the only one of its kind in existence.

For Our Boys

The American Tract Society is not a novice in providing Christian literature for our soldiers and sailors in the time of war. During the civil strife, 1861-1865, many hundreds of thousands of copies of the Society's publications were issued and distributed in the camps and at the battlefield and on the battleships, and many scores of thousands during the Spanish-American War.

A NATIVE CHRISTIAN DISTRIBUTING TRACTS IN KOREA.

Those visiting the battlefronts in Europe and those returning from the cantonments in our country without exception report that the greatest need of all is the keeping of the morale of the men up to the highest possible standard, which means that “Our Boys” must have faith in God, faith in the cause for which they are fighting, and faith in themselves and that through the strength of the Almighty they can and will go over the top and beyond and win a complete and final victory over their foes.

Since the beginning of the War, the Tract Society has distributed a total of nearly one and one-half million volumes, booklets and tracts to our soldiers and sailors in training and at the battlefront. Most positive and emphatic commendations and testimonials have been received as to the value of this literature. Scores of letters like the following have been received:

“Dear Dr. Swift:

“We thank you for sending us three additional sets of the Patriot Library consisting of twenty volumes. These will be placed in our newer buildings or tents for use of the soldiers.

“The other Libraries you sent us have already been placed among our books, and it is surprising the number of them which have been taken out by the soldiers. We feel also that when these books are used the soldiers derive more benefit than from the use of a dozen works of fiction.

“Thanking you for the interest you have taken in the soldiers at Camp Hancock, I remain,

“Very sincerely yours,

“(Signed) G. B. LANDIS.”

Is there any more important work than that of furnishing “Our Boys” with morally and spiritually uplifting religious reading?

Union Missionary Colportage

Missionary Colportage is personal labor with individuals who do not attend any Church or Mission. There are at the present time more than 60,000,000 of our population not reached through the regular ministrations of the Church. As the colporteur passes from house to house he speaks of Christ as the Saviour of sinners, kneels with the family, offers prayer and leaves by sale or grant volumes, periodicals and tracts, all of which carry the Message of Salvation to those who are perishing. It is Union Missionary Colportage because the men are employed without reference to denominational relations. While some of the colporters are ordained ministers, in reality they are all lay preachers, and they seek to penetrate and visit all districts and sections where the people are not in attendance upon the stated means of grace.

It has been recently reported that there were located within a certain district thirty-eight Churches with a total membership of nine thousand, the average attendance Sabbath morning being five thousand and the seating capacity of the thirty-eight Churches fifteen thousand, leaving two-thirds of the sittings unoccupied. Under such conditions missionary colportage renders effective service.

During the year the Society's colporters have made 146,056 family visits, distributed 49,584 volumes of Christian literature, and conducted 3,393 religious meetings, while the colportage distribution at Ellis Island has amounted to 56,158 copies of books and tracts.

Gratuitous Distribution

To every one that thirsteth the answer is. “Come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money, come, buy and eat, but without money and without price, and whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely.”

Gratuitous distribution is made possible by the gifts of consecrated Christian people, and every page of Christian literature thus distributed is the fruit of love to God and man, and is extended according to the gifts received. Scores of thousands who had never received the Gospel Message not only have accepted it, but also have become earnest Christians through the free distribution of the Glad Tidings of Salvation.

The presentation of Bibles at West Point has been unprecedented, because two classes were graduated, one on April 15 last and the other on August 26. The first class contained one hundred and thirty-nine members and the second class one hundred and fifty-two members, the latter class being graduated several months in advance in view of an urgent call of the War Department for officers to serve in the training camps.

During the year libraries have been granted to Sunday Schools and Mission Churches not able to purchase them and Patriot Libraries sent to camps and battleships. The total value of free distribution for the year is $23,191.98, making the grand total of free distribution $2,676,159.52, the equivalent of 5,352,319,040 pages of tracts.

Latin America

The peoples of Latin America are becoming increasingly approachable, and the hour has arrived when every possible effort must be put forth to make them truly Christian. Without doubt they are beginning to understand the attitude and spirit of North America toward them better than at any time in the past, and without doubt the opportunity is presented for the United States to recover much that they have lost through neglect of our Southern neighbor and to be of service in establishing and building religious life and character in all the Republics. Nothing is more needed than standard Christian literature for the educated classes who are not accepting the teachings of Christianity, for the less educated non-Christians, for the building up of evangelical church members, and for the training of ministers and Christian workers.

The American Tract Society is anxiously waiting to co-operate to the fullest possible extent in providing the literature needed, and it is earnestly hoped that all Christian givers realize the extraordinary need and will make generous gifts to meet it.

The World Field

Is it proper or correct to longer talk of Foreign Missions? In these days of swift-flying airships, wireless and ocean telegraphy and world touch, have we not all become neighbors and laborers together with God? "The field is the world." The tides of the World War have without doubt touched and made more or less impression upon all nations and peoples. It is, however, amazing to record that missionary energy and accomplishment have not to any perceptible extent abated.

In Japan the three-year National Evangelistic Campaign closed in July last, and one of the important and far-reaching results realized was the greatly increased interest in the necessity and use of Christian literature. In Korea the reports of the various Missions show that the Churches are advancing in self-support.

In China Christianity has become a living force in the national life, as is clearly shown by the work of the Society for Religious Liberty. This Society has also awakened in the Church a new consciousness of its place in the national life, and is leading thoughtful men outside of the Church to consider the claims of religion. There are 618 centres with resident missionaries and 7,078 places where Christian worship is held; 5,517 missionaries and 20,460 Chinese Christian workers. There are furthermore 151,490 pupils in Mission Schools and 330 Mission Hospitals.

India perhaps more than any other country has felt the impress of the Universal Conflict. Nevertheless, there has been some progress.

The growing national consciousness has manifested itself in the Indian Church, and is creating most interesting problems, which will in due time doubtless be solved and favorable to the progress of Christianity. Evangelistic work has been actively carried on and is both adding to the membership of the Church and developing powers of service and leadership.

Africa has become an increasingly interesting field for missionary service. In the various sections throughout the continent there has been general progress, and in some districts a very marked progress in missionary work. In some sections patriotism has been very outstanding, and a large number of natives, many of them Christians, have volunteered from various parts for service in France; several African ministers and also missionaries went with them as chaplains and doctors. In other fields there has been progress, and in some instances very encouraging considering the presence from time to time of unusual conditions.

The Tract Society's foreign cash appropriations for the year amount to $2,500, while $224.65 have been sent to the foreign field for other purposes, the objects being designated by the donors, making the total sent to the foreign field $2,724.65.

Total of Work Performed

The American Tract Society has published the Gospel Message in one hundred and seventy-eight languages and dialects, and the grand total of all its publications issued from the Home Office has reached 800,711,975 copies, of which 35,566,965 are volumes, 301,479,168 periodicals and 463,665,842 tracts.

The missionary colporters of the Tract Society have made a total of 18,958,862 family visits, have distributed 17,487,750 volumes and held 602,803 religious meetings.

In the Spanish and Portuguese languages, chiefly for Latin America, there have been issued a total of 17,175,163 copies of volumes, tracts and periodicals, including 260,341 Spanish hymnals, amounting in value to $689,582.80.

In foreign lands 5,736 titles of distinct publications, whose circulation aggregates many millions of copies, have been issued by the aid of the Society's foreign cash appropriations, now amounting to $805,466, and its grants of electrotypes valued at $61,177.96, thus making the grand total expended for Christian literature in foreign lands $866,643.96.

Victory

The battle line extends across the world. The moral and spiritual forces of the universe are contending for the mastery. "God's in his Heaven" and there can be no doubt as to the final decision. The omnipotent Creator and preserver of all life has never been and never can be defeated or overthrown. "His right hand and His holy arm hath gotten Him the victory." It is emblazoned on the sky and flashes to the farthest star. The human race is facing the greatest and most intense realities of all history. In the crucible of great suffering the eternal verities glow as never before. The certainty and reality of truth and righteousness are being made most clear. The unconquerable morale wrought in the heart and will through faith in Christ must be everywhere established among men. This is the one great essential. The religion of Christ is in its very nature world conquering. The armies of the Lord are rallying to the conquest under the banner of King Immanuel. There must be a great increase of personal devotion to Christ with its necessary accompaniment of a manifold greater personal sacrifice.

The years are passing, and the Good News of God's infinite love and pardon remains unproclaimed to hundreds of millions of the unsaved. Is there any agency more efficient or even as efficient as the printed page in carrying the Gospel Message to these millions? Its power is unmeasured and its influence as wide as human intelligence.

Tens of thousands have testified and are testifying that they found the way of salvation by means of the printed page, while countless numbers have been cheered and comforted.

In conclusion, it may be said that the battle for the establishment of truth, justice, righteousness and human liberty in the world is fully on, and all those who believe in the one eternal and omnipotent God, and that He is also our kind Heavenly Father, have in their deepest consciousness the assurance that the powers of darkness will be overthrown, and the whole world filled with the brightness and glory of the presence of Jesus Christ.

Nearly, if not quite, a billion dollars have been given during the past ten years to colleges, universities and other educational institutions through gifts and legacies, and relatively small sums to evangelical missionary work, especially as related to proclaiming the Gospel Message by means of the printed page, with the result that the moral and spiritual forces of our nation have neither been increased nor intensified. The power to resist and conquer evil is always in proportion to the faith of the individual and of the nation in God and their following him in righteousness. The time has positively and fully arrived when, if sufficient funds were placed at the disposal of the American Tract Society for the publication and distribution of Christian literature, there would very soon be witnessed the spectacle of the moral and spiritual forces of a great nation going over the top and beyond, taking the trenches and fortifications of sin and establishing the Kingdom of Christ among the people.

TALKING UP THE CHIMNEY

BY REV. C. A. S. DWIGHT, PH.D.

A Russian student in an American college tells how, when he was a little lad in his native land, he liked to stand before the open fire-place, and "talk up the chimney," his imagination meanwhile playing freely with the weird shapes or ghastly fancies with which he peopled the flues. And now that student says that to him prayer seems but like a "talking up the chimney"—as empty, as valueless, and as resultless a practice, though possibly serving at times as a diversion, or an experiment with the Unknown.

It is probable that many people experience, when they come to pray, a similar sense of the unreality of the spiritual exercise. It is as though they talked into the air, or watched their petitions fade away like blue smoke curling from the chimney of a peasant's hut. Perhaps some part of this uncertainty or mental haze, in dealing with the philosophy of prayer, is unavoidable. The theory of prayer is no easier than is its practice. By sincere and faith-filled prayer we are setting in motion forces whose action sweeps out far beyond our vision, or even our imagination, nor do we know how these forces act, or what their precise results may be. Yet while this is so, we are not talking up a chimney, when at our devotions—for we are conversing with a real Person, who is mightily interested in us and in our eternal fortunes.

The Master Teacher said, "When ye pray say, 'Our Father'."

There is a God-man behind the mystery, and with Him we hold converse in prayer. This consciousness of a listening Jesus may vary in intensity with our own mood, or with circumstances, but all the while we should remember that we are called to have faith not in our own prayers but in Him.

When we pray aright the message gets through, and drives straight home to the ear and heart of God. Then pray on! The world is organized on the side of moral freedom and prayer and worship and religious duty. We are not the sport of circumstance, the victims of dream and deceit, the subjects of a subtle delusion, but the sons of God; therefore let us never fail to pray to "Our Father."

Notes upon the Topics Used
in Christian Endeavor
and Other Young People's Societies.

THE PRAYER MEETING

By
Rev. Henry Lewis
Ph.D.

JUNE 2.

Service in Church and Community

Mark 12:28-34.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M., May 27. Edifying. 1 Cor. 8:1-13.
T., May 28. Supporting. 1 Cor. 16:1-3.
W., May 29. Attending. Heb. 10:19-25.
T., May 30. Hospitality. Heb. 13:1-3.
F., May 31. Moral cleansing. Isa. 1:10-20.
S., June 1. Moral uplift. Hosea 14:1-9.

There are three words in this subject that may serve as pivots on which to swing our thought. The first is the word "service"; the second the word "church"; and the third the word "community." Let us dwell upon these words.

The Church

The wording should not be "the church and community" but, "the church in the community." For the church cannot be separated from the community. A boat may be in the water or taken out of the water. A church cannot be handled in this way. It is recruited from the community, and as an organization is a given part of the community. As a vital institution it exists because the community exists.

The Community

Quantity and quality are factors to be considered. In quantity the community is larger than the church. In quality the church is superior to the community. This fact must not be missed. Not, of course, in any spirit of pride. For, if the church is not superior, it has no reason for an existence. Being a fact, it has a basis for its appeal to the community. It asserts that it has something that is needed and invites all to share in this something. Unless a church can do this, it had better close its doors.

The Service

How can this be rendered? The Scripture for to-day suggests three answers. One is, in worship: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart." Make the church a center of spiritual uplift, a place to which the people come that their souls may be fed. This is service. Another answer is in personal development; "And thy neighbor as thyself." Love of self is sound Scripture doctrine. The existence of a church composed of those seeking by the grace of God noble character is in itself a service rendered to the community. Still a third answer is the definite thing done for the community. This service may take many forms, for every church should be a center of varied activity.

✻ ✻

JUNE 9.

Progressive Christians

2 Peter 1:1-11.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M., June 3. Progress in grace. 2 Pet. 3:14-18.
T., June 4. In knowledge. 1 Cor. 2:6-16.
W., June 5. In faith. Jas. 2:14-26.
T., June 6. In humility. 1 Pet. 5:1-11.
F., June 7. In patience. Jas. 1:1-12.
S., June 8. In love. 1 John 4:7-21.

Notice the different expressions in this Scripture. In the first verse the words "have obtained." In the second verse, "multiplied." In the fourth verse, "may become." In the fifth verse, "adding." In the eighth verse, "abound." Let us consider these words.

"Have Obtained"

Progress means a starting point. A journey must have a place of departure. A person climbing a hill rests his foot on something. People never move out of nowhere into somewhere. So in the Christian life. To progress it is necessary to "have obtained." The first step must be taken before the second step. And this first step is faith in Christ. Peter writes about a "like precious faith" which they "have obtained."

"Multiplied"

What is it that is multiplied? Certainly not his faith, for this the Christian has obtained. Faith may be as strong at the beginning as at the end of the Christian life. Here there need be no progress. But faith is one aspect—the starting-point of the Christian life. Moving out, there comes an increasing "knowledge of God and of Jesus our Lord." The mind of the Christian expands as the truth of God's revelation of himself unfolds. Progress in this direction knows no limits.

"May Become"

These words in the fourth verse seem to contradict the words in the first verse—"have obtained." Yet, of course, this is not so. Here is a paradox which may be stated something like this: It is our duty to become what we are. Being Christians, it is our task to become Christians. In nature nothing is ever fixed but all is in flux. So in the Christian life. Progress is possible because we are always becoming what we are.

"Adding"

Here the progress becomes definite. The Christian life is acquisition as well as development. Areas of the moral life are captured. Victories in conduct are achieved. The Bible is studied. Habits of prayer are formed. Restraint in speech is practiced. A kindly spirit is cultivated. Forms of service before neglected are undertaken. In this sense progress comes through "adding."

"Abound"

This word indicates as no other the impression that a progressive Christian life makes upon others. There is nothing stationary or stagnant about such a life. It is all there and very much all there. A crisp and bracing northwest wind is suggested rather than a slow, wet wind from out the east. There is plenty of ozone.

"More Diligence"

Such a life is not moving on the dead level but among hills. Because of this there is a constant climb. Easy enough to go down hill. Possible to relax and simply roll down. But the muscles must be strained and the wind tested in going up hill. Progress for the Christian is neither inevitable nor automatic. Diligence is required to make our calling and election sure. And the end sought is worth the effort.

✻ ✻

JUNE 16.

Co-operation with the Sunday School

1 Corinthians 3:4-9.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M., June 10. Teaching children. Ps. 78:1-7.
T., June 11. The children's Lord. Matt. 19:13-15.
W., June 12. Praying for children. 1 Chron. 29:19.
T., June 13. Promises to children. Prov. 8:17, 32-36.
F., June 14. Training of children. Prov. 22:6.
S., June 15. An old Sunday School. Neh. 8:1-6.

A discussion of the Sunday School usually leads to the question of methods in organization or teaching. If not, then statistics are quoted. Methods and statistics are important, but not the most important. There are aspects of the Sunday School deeper than these things. And these are suggested by the Scripture chosen for study to-day.

Paul and Apollos

A mistake is sometimes made of assuming that the school is simply a helpful organization related to the church. To assume this is to take an attitude that sometimes leads to serious consequences. For the school when properly understood is not something related to the church, but it is the church. It is the church at study, even as the Sunday morning service is the church at worship. This conception is fundamental. There should never be the remotest suggestion of Paul or Apollos.

Human Agents

These men are "ministers through whom ye believed." How beautiful this thought is! And what dignity it clothes the teacher with! The preacher has his place; so also the teacher. The teacher through faithful service has jewels in her crown. This gives the reason for co-operation in this work. Much of the work of a church is of secondary importance, but this work is supremely important. If you want to count for the most have a part in this work. A church that is weak at this point is in a bad condition.

Divine Assistance

But the results are so far-reaching, there is more than human effort in the work. It is not always the teacher with the finest mental equipment who secures the best results. Often the person with no marked aptitude for teaching is most successful. The reason is that God is working through such a life. "Paul may plant and Apollos water, but God giveth the increase." The all-important fact is the personal consecration of the teacher. Given this, and there are no limits to the possibilities of the Sunday School.

✻ ✻

JUNE 23.

How to Have a Good Time

1 Thessalonians 5:16-24.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M., June 17. Be an optimist. Prov. 17:22.
T., June 18. Live without fear. Ps. 91:1-16.
W., June 19. Good times with God. Ps. 92:1-5.
T., June 20. Good times in service. Ps. 40:1-8.
F., June 21. Good times with friends. Prov. 18:24.
S., June 22. Good times in benefactions. Matt. 6:1-4.

This subject interests us. All of us want to have a good time. And all of us in one way or another are trying to have a good time. It is as natural to want this as it is to breathe. In thinking about the subject let us dwell on the two words of the Scripture—"Rejoice always." With its variations, this is a favorite expression of Paul. Read the Epistle to the Philippians and notice the number of times the thought of joy is mentioned.

Something Inside

To "rejoice always," is to have a good time. Paul did this. He tells us that he had learned the secret of contentment. And to be content is to have a good time. A good time, however, meant for Paul something inside. He possessed life so abundantly that he could rejoice. The charm of living is in the quality of life not the quantity of things.

Doing Without

A good time is not conditioned upon things. Paul lacked good health. This was his thorn in the flesh. He had little money and so it was necessary for him to work at his trade as a tent-maker. From a human standpoint his life ended in failure, for he was treated as a criminal. Yet he had a good time. People with the most things sometimes have the least life.

What He Had

For one thing, he had the memory of a great surrender. "Wherefore, O King Agrippa, I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision." A good time depends upon this. Get right with God. For another thing, he had the satisfaction of service rendered. He seems to bubble over with joyousness as he thinks of the investments he has made in service. He tells some of the Christians that they are his crown. Further, he had a radiant hope. He could not see around the corner. But he knew the future was secure and so was without either fear or anxiety.

True Wealth

Let a young person possess these things, and a good time follows as day follows night. And all of us may have these things. Good health may be denied us. Money may not be ours in abundance. Some or all of our plans may fail. But the decision in the past, the service in the present, and the hope for the future can be ours.

A Hero

Captain Ball of the British Flying Squadron entered his tent a few hours before he was killed and remarked, "We haven't long to live, but we will live well while we do live." So with us all. Not long for any of us to live. But let us live well. Let us live so well that those who are not Christians will want to live as we are living.

✻ ✻

JUNE 30.

The Power of the Cross in Africa

Acts 8:26-39.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M., June 24. Places of cruelty. Ps. 74:20.
T., June 25. Dark superstition. 1 Kings 20:23.
W., June 26. Christ conquers ignorance. Luke 2:25-32.
T., June 27. New men for old. Eph. 2:1-15.
F., June 28. From flesh to Spirit. Gal. 5:16-26.
S., June 29. The true melting-pot. Gal. 3:26-29.

The Washington monument, massive and towering, is often, in miniature, worn as a watch-charm. The missionary enterprise, in extent as great as the habitable earth, in miniature is bound in this scene recorded in Scripture. Let us examine it.

The Angel

The missionary enterprise needs the angel. For the enterprise is heavenly and the impulse to carry it on is from above. Men on their own initiative sell oil in Asia, buy spices in the islands of the Pacific, dig gold in remote regions. But men do not go to these places as missionaries unless the "Angel of the Lord" speaks to them.

The Evangelist

If the impulse is divine, the response is human. It is a human life not an angel of the Lord that carries on the work. And this life, by name Philip, was equipped for the work. Being equipped, he believed he had a mission, and this made his work missionary. His work consisted in making known the truth to a life that knew not the truth. "And Philip opened his mouth and beginning from the Scripture preached unto him Jesus." This gives us the reason for missions—to make known Jesus as revealed in the Bible.

The Ethiopian

The man was black of skin and from Africa. This did not trouble Philip, for he was sent by the Spirit to this man. And the man was a good prospect. He had been to Jerusalem to worship. When Philip approached him he was reading the Bible. He was in a receptive mood and ready to be instructed. Surely here was a missionary opportunity. And this opportunity has presented itself many times in the history of Africa. It is there to-day.

Gaza

The African of this story was in Asia not Africa. Gaza was south of Jerusalem. Let us not miss the significance of this. Certainly send the Gospel to far-away Africa. And Philip did send the Gospel to Africa by preaching it to the Ethiopian. The command is to bear witness to the uttermost parts. In the economy of God the last man must not be counted out. But Africa is in America. The Ethiopian is in our midst. And like Philip, our duty demands that we be Christians to the black men on the road going down to Gaza.

Democracy

This is the word to conjure with in these days. But the United States is part of the world. And the world will never be made safe for democracy until it is practiced in a Christian spirit in this land. Perhaps the supreme test of democracy will come when the angel of the Lord sends us forth and like Philip we are called upon to sit in the chariot and tell the black men more about Christ.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS

Our Flag

Only some stripes of red and white
And some stars on a ground of blue;
Only a little cotton flag,
Is it anything more to you?

Oh, yes, indeed! For beneath its folds
You are safe on land or sea;
It stands for America, brave and strong,
No matter where it may be.

It stands for a land where God is King,
Where his peace and his truth are free,
Let us love it well and keep it pure,
As our banner of liberty.

—Louise M. Oglevee.

Honor the Flag.

June 14 is Flag Day. What a great day it is this year especially! When we think of our army in khaki—more than 500,000 strong—over in France, and our thousands of bluejackets cruising European waters, all under the Red, White and Blue, fighting for liberty and safety for the world, it makes our hearts beat fast!

But there are so many of us who love our country who have to stay at home because we are too young to go or to old or for many other reasons. What can we do to honor our flag? What can boys and girls do? Here are just a few things we can try to do:

1. Show respect to our flag wherever we see it.

"Hats off!

The flag is passing by!"

2. Learn about our country's beginning and its history, so that we can know what the flag stands for.

3. Work and give, even though we have only a little, for the Red Cross and every patriotic cause.

4. Make the most of ourselves, and of what we have, wherever we are.

5. Love God. Fear to do wrong. Admire all that is good. Hate every evil thing and help to put it out of our land.

When we do all these things we are helping a little to honor our country's flag. Secretary Lane says that we people of this land make our flag what it is. Don't let us bring disgrace to it.

Uncle Sam's Young Army.

We are Uncle Sam's young army,
And we're twenty million strong—
All together we are marching,
Marching, marching, right along!
Not one coward is among us,
Every heart is stanch and true;
And although we are but children,
Yet there's something we can do—
We can guard our country's colors,
Raise them high, with cheer and song!
For we're Uncle Sam's young army,
And we're twenty million strong.

Well we know the splendid stories
Of the brave deeds of the past,
And our country we have promised
That such bravery shall last.
Loyal we will be and love her,
True in every word and deed,

That we may be worthy of her
When it comes our turn to lead.
Now we can but guard her colors,
Proud that to us they belong—
For we're Uncle Sam's young army,
And we're twenty million strong.

—Children's Magazine.

Investing in Extras

BY MARY E. CHASE.

"ELIZABETH!" called Grandfather sharply from his corner of the porch. "Who's that boy who just left?"

Elizabeth from her corner looked at Grandfather, too surprised to answer him at once. For four summers now Grandfather had sat in the sunshine on the porch, reading or only thinking in his big chair with his crutches conveniently hooked on the back. For at

"I beg your pardon, Grandfather," she stammered. "I never thought before you were at all interested in my friends. That's why I was so surprised. I'm glad to tell you who he is. He's John Randall, Mrs. Winslow's nephew, and he's here this summer studying with the minister to make up some work he has to have for college. He was ill last year, and didn't finish all of his school work. He's nice, of course, but why did you notice him more than any of the others?"

Elizabeth, seized with curiosity, drew her chair near Grandfather's and scanned his kind old face with unusual interest.

"There were two reasons for my noticing him especially," he replied. "One I've explained already. It was because he gave me a chance. Most of your friends, my dear, are too absorbed when they come to notice me. Some of them

"He's invested in extras!" Grandfather continued. "I knew that the minute he spoke to me. By extras I mean courtesies which most young men think a needless waste of time. And I'm going to tell you"—here Grandfather slapped his knees vigorously—"I'm going to tell you that he's going to get a hundred per cent. on all the time and thought he's spent on his investment. He's going to get well paid in gratitude and respect and admiration and friendship, and those are worth more than money. The boy who was here yesterday, that Wood fellow, may make a great financial success, like his father, but he won't win the respect which this boy will win. You see, he can't afford the time!"

Elizabeth's cheeks grew redder and redder. She remembered now that Harry Wood never took the trouble to speak to Grandfather other than a commonplace nod. She had not thought until now that Grandfather noticed or cared. And suddenly as Grandfather talked, she recalled with a guilty pang the remark Harry had made but yesterday about becoming old and useless and a burden some day. Could it have been that Grandfather had heard?

"John Randall," Grandfather explained further, "had time to ask me about my rheumatism and what I thought of the war with Germany. He seemed to feel that the opinions of an old man like me amounted to something. I guess he must have known that I fought in the Civil War, because he asked me some mighty intelligent questions about affairs then.

"I tell you, my dear," concluded Grandfather, for his granddaughter seemed strangely silent, "most young fellows don't think it pays in these days of hustle and bustle to invest in extras like those. Only it does pay. You watch this lad, and see if he doesn't go ahead of all the rest, not in money-making maybe, but in the things really worth while. I hope he'll come here often. I told him so this morning."

"I hope so, too, Grandfather," said Elizabeth. "I really do! You see, I hadn't noticed before about his being so, so different from the others. But I see now that he is. I believe I'll suggest to Harry Wood and some of the rest that they invest in extras, too. It may be," she concluded softly, for it was hard to admit, "it may be it's been partly my fault that they haven't done it before!"

Trapped!

It was Africa. The night was dark and stormy. The hunt was over; grim and powerful black warriors swarmed from jungle paths; armed and silent they gathered in their village stockade. The fires blazed brightly. The scene struck terror to the heart of the American explorer.

He found himself a prisoner surrounded with naked savages. Barbarous men continued to gather from the bush, each savage clasp a wicked looking spear or a long, heavy knife.

At this dramatic moment the chief appeared with twelve stalwart warriors. He ordered his braves to sit. They obeyed. The chief then slowly approached the explorer with a small bag in his hand, the kind in which the Africans kept their deadly poisons for arrow-heads and spear-points. The explorer now expected to be poisoned, but he was alert and ready for the struggle. He raised his gun.

In death-like stillness the chief stopped, put his hand into the poison bag and slowly drew out—a New Testament! Could the explorer believe his eyes? Yes, the colporter had been there before him. The automatic was lowered. The explorer was in the house of his friends. Slowly the chief told how he had secured the Book from a white man who had taught him the Story of stories, and how he was trying, as best he knew, to pray. The watch fires burned out in the night, but the explorer slept without fear.—The World Outlook.

HIS COUNTRY'S COLORS OVER ALL.

least three summers, ever since Elizabeth had risen to the dignity of High School, divers and sundry boys, on foot or on bicycles or in automobiles, had come to the porch to study or to chat or to invite Elizabeth to go driving or picnicing or boating; and never, at least to Elizabeth's knowledge, had Grandfather paid the least attention to them, beyond the courtesy of an occasional greeting, or shown the slightest interest. She continued to stare at him, still too amazed to reply.

"Well," said Grandfather, "can't you answer me, my dear? I noticed that young lad especially. In fact, you see, he gave me a chance to notice him, and I'm interested to know who he is."

Grandfather's unwonted speech had given his granddaughter a chance to recover from her surprise.

speak, but more of them don't. But this young fellow had time to take off his hat and shake hands with your grandfather. And that gave me a chance to discover the other reason why he's different from the most of the young men nowadays."

Elizabeth was listening with her face bent over her sewing. Her cheeks had grown red. Into Grandfather's quiet words there had somehow crept a reproof. She remembered that she had grown very careless about introducing her friends to Grandfather. Even this morning it had been at John Randall's own suggestion that he had crossed the porch to speak to the old man while she was busy indoors. But, she tried to excuse herself, it was only because Grandfather in his porch chair had become such a matter of course. She had not meant to neglect him.

Our Fireside

The No-Excuse Lady

By Mary E. Chase

RUTH CRITTENDEN paused in her dusting to inspect the parlor furniture. She did not note any improvement since the last inspection. The hair-cloth was unmistakably shabby, and the old mahogany most woefully battered, as it had every right to be, having ministered already to five generations of Crittendens. Then her gaze wandered to the old-fashioned flowered wall-paper, which she and Aunt Jane had so hoped to change that spring, and to the spotless white muslin curtains, which had somehow lost the look of pertness possessed in their younger days. She did not examine the carpet. There was no need since she knew every worn spot on its faded surface. Instead, she raised her troubled eyes to the face of a little old lady, who, surrounded by a gilt frame, smiled down upon her anxious face from the beflowered wall.

"Don't worry, Grandmother," she whispered, half to herself and half to the face on the wall. "I'll not make excuses for a thing, no matter how much I do wish they were different. I promise you I won't."

Grandmother Crittenden seemed to smile more kindly than ever at the promise. Perhaps she had been worrying for fear her granddaughter would be tempted to forsake the Crittenden tradition, which was never under any circumstances to apologize for unavoidable conditions. Carpets might be shabby and white curtains frayed and old, but, since new ones were impossible, no true Crittenden would seek to make excuses.

Ruth was a true Crittenden. Had she been otherwise, she would have followed the lawyer's advice upon the death of her mother four years before, sold the old home, given Benny to a wealthy uncle who was very anxious to adopt him, allowed Aunt Mary to educate Dorothy as she wished, and simply looked out for herself and for her own interests. None of which, in point of fact, she did at all. Instead, in true Crittenden fashion, she announced her intention of keeping the old home so that she and Benny and Dorothy might be together, and of asking Aunt Jane, who had no home of her own, to come and live with them so that during the school year she herself might go to college. Aunt Jane, being a Crittenden also, and admiring her niece's pluck, came, and Ruth's dream of college had been fulfilled.

To be sure, it had not been easy to educate one's self and to run a home on the little money left them, always remembering that enough must be left untouched for Benny and Dorothy. But she had done it, and had graduated with honors. A position as teacher was the next dream, thus far unfulfilled—a position near enough home so that she could come back frequently to see them all.

Yesterday she had been radiant with hope, for the early mail had brought a letter from a certain Miss Snelling, principal of a girls' school in the neighboring town. Miss Snelling and her school, its fine standing and the desirability of being connected with it, were well-known to Ruth, and even the vague possibility of a position there caused her and Aunt Jane to rejoice, Dorothy to clap her hands, and Benny to turn a somersault. By return mail she had written Miss Snelling—who had announced her intention of coming to Hillcrest within a few days—inviting her to come the day after to-morrow for lunch, when they might talk matters over undisturbed. This was Tuesday morning, and Wednesday was the fateful day.

In spite of Grandmother Crittenden's smile, Ruth's hopes of yesterday grew less bright as she made a final survey of the freshly dusted room. It was shabby, and it looked even more so when the shades were high. She almost hoped to-morrow would be rainy. The sun revealed so many worn spots. If it were only dark and cloudy she would pull the shades lower, and light the newly-laid fire. That would help. And in the morning she would change the daisies on the table for some roses, which she would have Benny get from the green-house. Surely that extravagance was excusable under the circumstances, and with so much at stake.

At all events, she would try to make everything so homelike that Miss Snelling would not notice the shabbiness; and Aunt Jane would help—Aunt Jane with her sense of humor and her dear, quaint ways. She would be dearer and quainter than ever, after her semi-annual trip to town which she was taking that day, Ruth told herself, for she always saw so many new things and picked up so many new ideas from places which were barren to the average passerby. As for Benny and Dorothy, they had been coached since last evening on all the attributes of best behavior, and they were sure to do her honor.

A ring from the telephone brought her survey to an end. How she managed to answer coherently the startling information which came over the wire, she never knew. Miss Snelling was speaking, the voice said. In spite of her consternation, Ruth noted that it was a careful, cultured voice. She had just arrived in Hillcrest, a trifle early for lunch, she knew. She would complete a few errands and arrive in half an hour.

Ruth heard her own voice answer, "Very well, Miss Snelling," in a kind of horrified dream; and the next thing she realized was that she was frenziedly laying a clean cloth, and getting out the best silver. There was no time to question matters. Miss Snelling had obviously mistaken the day. Instead of the "day after to-morrow," as the invitation read, she had understood "to-morrow." It was too late to explain. Moreover, Ruth told herself as she worked, explanations would be embarrassing to her guest. She would explain nothing, excuse nothing—she would just face the facts and do the best she could.

She took a hasty survey of the larder. There was salad from Sunday's chicken, a chocolate pudding she had made that morning especially for Benny, and there was yet time to make biscuits. The dainty luncheon planned for to-morrow was impossible of preparation in a scant half hour. The roses could not be gotten—daisies must do both for centerpiece and for parlor table. There was no time for her to dress, and if there were, the new gown she had planned to wear was not completed. She was glad that she had put on a fresh white dress for the children. That, with daisies at her belt, must do.

She called Dorothy and Benny from their play, and briefly explained the situation, relying upon their "Crittenden pride" to do the rest. Their white clothes were not laundered—blue gingham must do. They dressed—wide-eyed and sympathetic—and promised every five minutes to be models of behavior.

"It's just like Senator Crittenden and the 'No-Excuse Lady,'" Benny told her, as he fumbled with his buttons, while she mixed the biscuits. "You know how often Grandmother used to tell us about her."

Ruth remembered, though it had taken Benny's agile mind to compare the situations. The story was one which Grandmother Crittenden loved to tell, and from which had arisen the Crittenden tradition of never making excuses. While stumping the state of Kentucky in the interests of Henry Clay, old Senator John J. Crittenden had once been invited to dinner in a backwoods log cabin. Absent-mindedly, as was his wont, the Senator mistook the day appointed by the simple people, and appeared for the dinner the day before. But his hostess won his everlasting admiration, as well as the name "the No-Excuse Lady," by making no allusion to his mistake, which he did not discover until his return home that evening. Upon remembering the gracious hospitality which he had received, and the generous way in which he had been treated, Senator Crittenden was much impressed, and he never tired, so Grandmother Crittenden said, of telling the story of the "No-Excuse Lady" in the Kentucky log-cabin.

Ruth would be a "no-excuse lady," too, she resolved, as she kissed Benny, and wiped some flour from her glowing cheeks. Just then the door-bell rang, and she ran to open it, and to receive into the old parlor, to which somehow her charm and enthusiasm lent new freshness, Miss Mary Ann Snelling, who, secure in her infallible memory, was coming to lunch, she thought, on the very day for which she had been invited. Then entered Benny and Dorothy, clean in blue gingham and perfect in manners, and Ruth left them to do the honors while she began to take the biscuits from the oven, to garnish the salad, and to put the finishing touches to a simple but well-appointed table.

She blessed Benny and Dorothy that day. They were Crittendens to the core, she told herself, no matter how they might quarrel in the back yard. Benny said Aunt Jane's grace with unflinching precision, and Dorothy removed the plates and brought the dessert as well as the best-salaried maid in New York could have done.

Meanwhile, Miss Snelling, who had been so charmed by her two small acquaintances that she had never noticed shabby furniture or a worn carpet, grew more charmed than ever and quite changed her mind in regard to a certain decision which she had all but made in regard to a certain lady in a far-off city. After luncheon, while Benny and Dorothy cleared the table and washed the dishes, she and Ruth sat beside a tiny friendship fire in the grate and talked of college, of girls, and of ideals of teaching them. They became so absorbed that four o'clock came before they realized it, and the door opened to admit a most-surprised Aunt Jane.

But Aunt Jane was a Crittenden through and through, and not for a moment did she make Miss Snelling feel her surprise. She received Ruth's warning smile with a sage nod of her own, and sat down to tell them in her quaint way of her experiences in town. At five they all walked to the station for the suburban train, Benny leading with Miss Snelling's bag; and at six o'clock, when Miss Snelling had doubtless arrived at school and was at last remembering how shabby things were, Ruth broke down and cried on Aunt Jane's kindly shoulder.

But her worry, like most of that which burdens the world, was needless, as she would have known could she have seen Miss Snelling's face when she opened the engagement book upon

DON'T decide on the new hymn-book for your Church or Sunday School until you have seen

HALLOWED HYMNS
NEW AND OLD

Edited by IRA ALLAN SANKEY
Son of the famous Singing-Evangelist
Ira D. Sankey

OVER 550,000
COPIES ALREADY SOLD

Responsive Scripture Readings
No Trashy Words No Jingly Music

Price $25.00 per 100 not prepaid
35 cents per copy by mail

Examine a copy and prove its value in your work. (Returnable if desired.)

The Biglow & Main Co., New York
Chicago

This FREE Shoe Book

is crowded with photographs and descriptions of EZ-WEAR Shoes for Men, Women and Children. EZ-WEAR Shoes are sent post-paid, guaranteed to combine comfort, style and quality, to fit perfectly or money back. Amazingly low prices. Send for copy to-day

THE EN SIMON SHOE CO. 153 BROADWAY, BROOKLYN, N.Y.

FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT

The AMERICAN MESSENGER is found very acceptable by the Home Departments of many Sabbath Schools. What better publication could be secured for home reading at the price at which this paper is offered? When ordered in clubs of five or more, the price is only 30 cents a year. The papers may be mailed to individual names, or they may be sent in one package to be distributed by the Sabbath School Visitor—whichever way is preferred. We trust that the Good Literature Committees in all Churches, Sabbath Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies will consider the AMERICAN MESSENGER in ordering their supplies.

AMERICAN MESSENGER

Park Ave. and 40th St. New York

HALF-FONTE ON THE BEACH

ATLANTIC CITY

ALWAYS OPEN

THE LEEDS COMPANY

her desk, and all at once discovered that she had mistaken the day. She sat still for some long minutes in her beautifully furnished room, and saw again the quaint, old-fashioned parlor, the white daisies, the glowing fire, the sweet children, and, most of all, a girl's happy face and charming manners. Then she wrote two letters—one to a certain lady in a far-off city, telling her that after all she had decided upon some one else for her position, and the other to Ruth Crittenden, telling her that she was more sure than ever that she wanted her to teach in her school.

"Had I doubted in the least your ability, my dear," the letter read, "my doubts would have completely vanished upon remembering how you met a most embarrassing situation in order to save a most thoughtless guest greater humiliation than you can imagine. I shall be honored, I am sure, in having you in my school."

The letter, received the very morning which should have brought Miss Snelling for luncheon, was hailed with rejoicing by all members of the Crittenden family.

"It pays to be a 'no-excuse lady!'" cried Benny Crittenden.

And a very happy big sister agreed with him!

The Rain

Did God hear the suffering things

Silently complain?

Such a thirsty land it was,

Panting for the rain.

Green grass slowly scorched to straw,

Wide fields parched and dry,

People lifting eyes that ached

To the blinding sky,

And the fierce heat on the street

Never passing by!

But at last black hosts of clouds

Gathered in the West;

Passed in gloom across the heavens

As in solemn quest.

Then the lightning cleft its way

Over land and main,

And the thunder, swift and loud,

Rolled along the plain,

While for comfort and for love,

Fell the healing rain.

All the faces of the leaves,

All the drooping flowers,

All the grasses, and the corn,

Turned to greet the showers.

Drinking deep the waters cool

Earth had prayed for long,

All the fields laughed out for joy,

Everything grew strong;

And the happy world praised God

In a glad new song.

Ah! how soon a change is made

By abundant rain!

Lord of all life-forces, make

Our life strong again.

Many of Thy people live

In such weary ways,

Faith and courage, hope and love,

Languish in these days.

Lord, send rains of fuller life,

And fill our souls with praise.

—MARIANNE FARNINGHAM.

Expert or Amateur?

"Yes, it was provoking, but funny, too," said Benson, the young architect.

"They wanted me to build their house—but they drew the plans themselves.

"We want it all exactly like this," they said, 'down to the very inch. Then there will be no risk of your altering things and spoiling our plan.'

"I looked over their drawings, amateur, of course. Then I explained as simply as possible, why I could not follow their drawings 'to the inch.' They had made no allowance for thickness of walls. The chimneys and stairways were in impossible places. There were doors that would open against each other. Gradually I worked out usable plans from the ruins of theirs. To this day they are thanking me for it."

Some folks go about building their lives in much the same way. Instead of consulting the Divine Architect they plan for themselves, crudely and poorly. It is only when they allow Him to take their imperfect plans and work them over to His will and purpose that they can become useful and beautiful. Then they see how much better is His expertness than their own incompleteness, and learn to thank Him for what may have seemed at first harsh interference with their own plans.

Soldiers of Fort Orange

BY GRACE L. ROBINSON.

It is an army of ten thousand that is massed on the tender grass of Washington Park, on a May Sunday of the very latest year of Our Lord. It is a multitude of another ten thousand, banked around the oval of the review-ground and clustered densely in all the malls and drives of Albany's great rendezvous, that watches the marching and reviewing of these soldiers.

Down by the river-front, steeped in sunshine, where the ships come in and go out, where the crowds of tourists surge up and down, is all that is left of old Fort Orange, a slab cemented to the earth in thronging Steamboat Square, which tells the few who stop to read it that there stood the northeast bastion of the historic citadel. There it was that Indian and patroon, Tory and Revolutionist, fought out their battles and faced the problems of life in the New World. There it was that Hendrick Hudson, doughty explorer of strange waters, Peter Stuyvesant, maker of history in colonial days, De Witt Clinton and General Schuyler and George Washington, the forces of King George IV and his predecessors, with their opponents, began the life of the New World along the shores of the Hudson, and made its growth.

Across the river to-day, on the cool Greenbush bank, is Fort Cralo, where "Yankee Doodle" was born. But that venerable armored manor-house is silent, deserted, a ghost of the past.

And Fort Orange is a memory, a bit of stone in the busy old street.

It is up on the hill, in Washington Park, beneath the majesty of elms and oaks and maples, with the beauty of the slender lake and with the charm of violets and of lilies, of azaleas and syringas, that the true Fort Orange of the twentieth century makes its power real; for there the life of the city comes, for the comradeship of sunshine and of air, of fragrance and of music.

And here, on this particular Sunday, late in May, is the bravery of banners and of pennants, the throb of martial music, the soldierly onward rush of many feet; here is enthusiasm, here is high resolve, energy, the force of great impulses. For, in this gorgeous spring light, under these ancient trees, across this shining lawn, it is the army of a great King which marches in and gives its allegiance to the cause of purity and of truth in the old city and in the great world.

This is the review of the Sunday School forces of the city. Here they gather, from infants of the cradle-roll, carried by their parents or wheeled in carriages, up through the ranks of the primary and intermediate grades, a host of happy American boys and girls (some of them, to be sure, very new Americans, but just as true as any), with the classes of strong young men and women and the older members of the Bible Schools, even to those in the Home Department (at least, as many of these as can be mustered on the field). Here, with pastors and superintendents, and with deaconesses in the train, they march in great divisions, each denomination a friendly company, holding fellowship with all the others.

Stanchly they show their devices and ensigns, the seal of the State, the American flag, the colors, purple or orange, crimson or gold, blue or green, of all the schools and classes, while, as they march and counter-march and fill up the great oval of the old croquet ground, they are reviewed by the mayor and by various ecclesiastical officials. The band plays, and the crowd looks on, while the sun shines and the robins and the thrushes look down from the branches above.

Then, while they are all massed in the center, they and the deep ring of people surrounding them sing, with the musicians, "America" and "Christus Victor," as battle hymns; there is a brief prayer of benediction, and the latest and noblest army of old Fort Orange goes away, against the glory of the setting sun.

The day is over. The second annual parade of the Sunday Schools of Albany is history.

And the ten thousand soldiers and the ten thousand spectators have left the park to its night-time quiet, while, in all of their thoughts there marches on, boldly, steadily, the Christian idealism of the great procession, the altruism, with all its significance, for the city, the Church, society, of the latest soldiers of Fort Orange.

✻ ✻

Dr. Jowett's Farewell Message

On the eve of his departure for England, the Rev. John H. Jowett, D.D., sent the following farewell message to the ministers of America:

"I want to bear this testimony before the ministers of the United States before

I leave this pulpit (Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York City). I know no diction, no ethics; I know nothing that radiates moral energy like the preaching of the Cross of Christ. The Cross unveils the holiness of God, the sacrificial law of God and the dynamic energy of God.

"My heart is sad as I think of the condition of the world. I'm weary waiting for the reformation of mankind, but I confess before you that I know of no other place where we can find hope save in the dynamic, reforming energy of the Cross.

"Meditate at the Cross until it becomes meaningful to you; preach the Cross until it becomes meaningful to others."

CRYSTAL WATER SET

With Your Own Initial In

GENUINE STERLING SILVER

Every woman of good taste will appreciate this beautiful Crystal Water Set with decorations and her own initial in sterling silver everlastingly burned into the glass itself. If there is anything a woman likes it is distinctiveness in her dining room appointments. Here is a handsome water set which she will always use and which will be prominently displayed, between meals, on sideboard or china closet

SUBSTANTIAL
ARTISTIC FIRE POLISHED

An Unusual
BARGAIN OFFER

DISTINCTIVENESS
ELEGANCE
INDIVIDUALITY

Take Advantage of it TODAY

Ornamental - Substantial - Useful

The Pride & Joy of the Housewife

This water set, composed of six tumblers and pitcher, will delight the heart of every housewife. The pitcher is substantially made in a pleasing design, with firm, strong base. The tumblers are of dainty, extra thin blown glass. Each piece is edged in pure sterling silver, with wreath and initial of the owner. The tumblers are half pint capacity—the pitcher holds three pints. This is the set for everyday use and for special occasions. It will give the user everlasting satisfaction and pleasure.

In these times of high prices it is exceedingly fortunate that we are able to offer this handsome and distinctive Crystal Water Set on terms within easy reach of every household. The family initial in silver is permanently burned into each piece, giving the set that individuality which is the pride of every woman with good taste. The set is as beautiful and pleasing as much of the costly imported glassware.

SPECIAL OFFER TO OUR READERS

We will give this splendid CRYSTAL WATER SET free and postpaid for only 10 yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at 50 cents each, or we will give the set with a year's subscription to the AMERICAN MESSENGER for only $3.25. These offers are for subscriptions in the United States only.

The Initial you desire on the set, please write clearly

AMERICAN MESSENGER

PARK AVE. AND 40th ST.

NEW YORK CITY

THE TREASURY

SPECIAL NOTICE

OWING to occasional losses of letters, containing money, we would request friends and donors of the American Tract Society to remit by check or Post Office Money Order, which latter can always be duplicated in case of loss.

Receipts of the American Tract Society During April, 1918

Total Donations (including $416.85 for Special Objects), $2,376.53.

CALIFORNIA, $157.

Mr. Gibson and Wife, $10; Redlands, Church Collection, $10; Los Angeles, Church Offering, $11.50; Miss Scates, $2; Mr. Ainslie, $1.50; Mrs. Rupp, $5; Mr. Fuller, for Patriot Library, $10; Rev. Mr. Christie, $2; Miss Atherton, for Patriot Library, $100; Miss Higgins, for Patriot Library, $5.

COLORADO, $1.

Wray, Church Offering, $1.

CONNECTICUT, $148.

Rev. Mr. & Mrs. Woolworth, $5; Mrs. Mead, $15; Miss Potter, $2; Mrs. Chapman, $5; Mr. Norton, $30; Mrs. Williams, $5; Mr. Platt, $25; the following for Patriot Library: Mr. Learned, $3; Mr. Harrison, $18; Mrs. Green, $15; Miss Whittlesey, $10; Mr. Taylor, $2; Mr. Farnam, $10; Mr. Nettleton, $2; Mr. Williams, $1.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, $39.

Washington, Church Collection, $14; Mr. Scott, for Patriot Library, $25.

ILLINOIS, $65.86.

Monmouth, Church Offerings, $10; Eureka, Church Collection, $0.86; Rev. Mr. Fieslman, $30; Miss Bradford, $5; Oswego, Church Offering, $5; "A Friend," $10; Mr. Kent, for Patriot Library, $5.

INDIANA, $2.

Mitchell, Church Collection, $2.

IOWA, $31.

Battle Creek, Sunday School Collection, $2; Oelwein, Church Offering, $2; Genl. Mennonite Conf., $2; Mrs. Peters, $25.

KANSAS, $10.30.

Garden City, Church Collection, $5; Mr. Abrams, $1.30; Cawker City, Church Offering, $2.50; Mr. Funk, $1.50.

MAINE, $2.

Portland, Church Collection, $2.

MASSACHUSETTS, $181.12

Miss Bigelow, $1; Hatfield, Church Offering, $17.12; Mrs. Palmer, $2; Miss Strong, $1; Mr. Munroe, $10; Mr. York, $5; Mrs. Parker, $25; Mrs. Craig, $25; Mrs. Moore, $5; Miss Perkins, (including $15 for Patriot Library), $25; the following for Patriot Library: Mrs. Wilkinson, $5; Mrs. Bill, $1; Miss Sparrow, $4; Miss Glidden, $2; Mrs. Stevens, $15; Mr. Statmiller, $10; Miss Shedd, $1; Mrs. Sylvan, $2; Mr. Plunkett, $15; Miss Speare, $10.

MICHIGAN, $15.50.

Mrs. Hatch, $0.50; Mrs. Mills, for Patriot Library, $2; Mrs. Bovee, $3; Grand Rapids, Church Offering, $10.

MINNESOTA, $6.65.

Minneapolis, Church Collection, $5; Miss Sellhorn, $0.65; Mr. Clynick, for Patriot Library, $1.

MISSISSIPPI, $5.

Verona, Church Offering, $5.

MISSOURI, $33.29.

St. Joseph, Church Collection, $5; Parkville, Church Offering, $0.64; Mrs. Kaiser, $0.65; Mrs. Barry, $20; Webster Groves, Church Collection, $2; Miss Gihson, $5.

NEBRASKA, $7.50.

Mrs. Dein, $2.50; Miss Schnackenberg, $5.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, $3.

Mrs. Chase, $3.

NEW JERSEY, $217.85.

West Hoboken, Church Offering, $5; Newark, Church Collection, $10; Lakeview, Church Offering, $4; Hamilton Square, Church Collection, $5; Mrs. Doolittle, $25; Mr. Requa, Jr., $5; Plainfield, Church Offering, $5; Jersey City, Church Collection, $13.60; Newark, Church Offering, $5; Passaic Church Collection, $5.05; Passaic, Church Offering, $17.85; Bloomfield, Church Collection, $6.93; Jersey City, Church Offering, $3.26; Trenton, Church Collection, $5; Dr. Watson, $10; Mrs. Dey, for Patriot Library, $2; Miss Breuning, from three friends, $10; Paterson, Church Offering, $5; Miss Pudney, $2; Cape May, Church Collection, $8.01; Riverton, Church Offering, $5; Mr. Stryker, for Patriot Library, $5; Mr. Mohrfield, $1.65; Miss Day, $0.50; West Hoboken, Church Collection, $50; Mr. Pierson, for Patriot Library, $1; Miss Sheldon, $2.

NEW YORK, $366.88.

New York, Church Offering, $25; Mr. Nicol, $125; New York, Church Collection, $16; Mr. Colgate, $25; New York, Church Offering, $2; Rev. Mr. Chamberlain, $5; New York, Church Collection, $2.50; Pastor Nieze's Church, Mrs. Fortenbaker, $0.25; Mrs. Geuzis, $0.50; Miss Schwerfeger, $0.50; Mrs. Strong, $2; Ilion, Church Offering, $10; Middletown, Church Collection, $4.48; Auburn, Church Offering, $10; New York, Church Collection, $1.20; Rev. Mr. Bogue, $1; Hobart, Church Offering, $5; Sodus, Church Collection, $10; Fayetteville, Church Offering, $10; Brockport, Church Collection, $6.35; Kingston, Church Offering, $5; Brooklyn, Church Collection, $7.73; Watertown, Church Offering, $2; Brooklyn, Church Collection, $12; Miss Patten, $0.50; Penn Yan, Church Offering, $10; Yonkers, Church Collection, $7.50; Miss Doubleday (in memory of her father), $10; Troy, Church Offering, $4; Miss Powell, $2; Miss Doscher, $5; Mrs. Budelmann, $5; Spring Valley, Church Collection, $3.35; Mr. Hamlin, $5; Hagaman, Church Offering, $8.52; Mr. Tinning, $3; Mrs. Koehler, $1; Albany, Church Collection, $5; the following for Patriot Library: Mrs. Taylor, $1; Mrs. Mager, $5; "A Friend," $2.50.

NORTH CAROLINA, $1.

Mrs. Phillips, $1.

OHIO, $546.91.

East Liverpool, Church Collection, $0.28; Middleport, Church Offering, $5; Cadiz, Church Collection, $8; Springfield, Church Offering, $5.10; Cumberland, Church Collection, $2; Bellaire, Church Offering, $10; Mr. Wick, $500; E. Liverpool, Church Collection, $1.03; Cleveland, Church Offering, $5; Millersburg, Church Collection, $1; Youngstown, Church Offering, $2.50; Cleveland, Church Collection, $5; Mr. Hunt, $2.

OKLAHOMA, $5.

Muskogee, Church Offering, $5.

OREGON, $10.

Miss Prescott, $10.

PENNSYLVANIA, $494.27.

Warren, Church Offering, $10; Greencastle, Church Collection, $3.40; Quarryville, Church Offering, $5; Washington, Church Collection, $10; O. A. B. Class, Mrs. McCullough, $5; Monongahela, Church Collection, $10; Clearfield, Church Offering, $5; Lansdowne, Sunday School Collection, $10; Carrick, Church Collections, $31; Miss Bruen, $25; Shippensburg, Church Offering, $2.55; New Wilmington, Church Collection, $5; Wilkinsburg, Church Offering, $5.08; Washington, Church Collection, $25; Grove City, Church Offering, $25; Butler, Church Collection, $25; Westminster, Church Offering, $2 Edgewood Park, Church Collection, $12.71; Bellevue, Church Offering, $30; McKeesport, Church Collection, $10; Philadelphia, Church Collection, $16.29; Pittsburgh, Church Offering, $10; Pittsburgh, Church Collection, $25; Oil City, Church Offering, $10; Homestead, Church Collection, $15; Pittsburgh, Church Collection, $10.69; Mr. Earle, $5; Mrs. Roman, $5; "Friends," $2; Miss White, to constitute herself a Life Member, $30; Carbondale, Church Offering, $25; Miss Horner, $2; Miss Outerbridge, $5; Miss Merkle, $2; Mrs. Scharpf, $0.30; Mr. Hege, $0.65; In His Name, $5; the following for Patriot Library: Mrs. Strong, $5; Rev. Mr. Perry, $3; Mr. Marsh, $10.

RHODE ISLAND, $5.

Mr. Jenks, $5.

SOUTH DAKOTA, $11.90.

Mr. Rave, Sr., $4.65; Mr. Kampmeier, $0.30; Mr. Haak, $1.30; Mr. Janssen, $4.65; Mr. Mansager, for Patriot Library, $1.

TENNESSEE, $2.

Harriman, Church Collection, $2.

VIRGINIA, $1.

Mr. Blackstone, for Patriot Library, $1.

WASHINGTON, $3.

Black Diamond, Church Offering, $2; Clarkston, Church Collection, $1.

WISCONSIN, $3.50.

Mr. Strassburg, $0.50; Baraboo, Church Offering, $2; Green Bay, Church Collection, $1.

LEGACIES, $130.

Martinsburg, Ohio, Estate of Emeline Cook, $75; Washington, D. C., Estate of Mary I. Banks, on account, $55. Income from Trust Funds.....$393.75 Income for Missionary Work..... 393.75

Donations

DONATIONS for the missionary work of the American Tract Society may be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

FIELD SECRETARIES AND COLPORTAGE SUPERINTENDENTS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.

Rev. Isaac Pierson, Field Secretary for New England, 50 Bromfield Street, Boston, Mass.

Rev. A. W. Reinhard, Field Secretary and Superintendent of Colportage for the Western and Northwestern States, 4029A De Tonty Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Rev. George Whitford, Superintendent of Colportage, Southern Agency, Chricton, R. F. D., Mobile Co., Ala.

Form of Bequest

I GIVE and bequeath to the "AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY," instituted in the City of New York, May, 1825, the sum of.....dollars to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said Society.

Three witnesses should state that the testator declares this to be his last will and testament, and that they signed at his request, and in his presence and the presence of each other.

Life Members and Directors

THE donation of $30 at one time constitutes a Life Member of the American Tract Society; the addition of $70, or the donation of $100 at one time, constitutes a Life Director. Life members may receive annually copies of the Society's own publications to the value of $1; Life Directors to the value of $2; if applied for within the Society's year, from April 1st to April 1st, in person or by written order.

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

TERMS: Subscription price, 50 cts. a year, payable in advance. In clubs of five or more, 30 cts. each. Club subscriptions mailed to separate addresses, if desired. Charge for foreign subscriptions, 24 cents additional. Canadian subscriptions, 12 cents additional. Single copies, 5 cents each.

On account of the additional charge which is made by the New York Post Office for mailing to subscribers in New York and Bronx Counties (Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx), no club rates, cash commissions or premiums will be given for subscriptions that must be sent to persons residing in those Counties. Each subscription in New York or Bronx County must be at the rate of 50 cents net.

Remit by Express Money Order, Draft, Post Office Order or Registered Letter. For very small amounts, postage stamps may be sent at the risk of the sender.

CHANGES: When sending change of address, be sure to send the old address as well as the new one.

OUR ADVERTISERS: We believe that all the advertisements in this paper are from responsible advertisers, and it is our intention to admit only such to our columns. Should, however, any of our subscribers find that any advertiser does not live up to his agreements, we would consider it a favor, if they will inform us, and we will at any time give prompt attention to any complaint.

We do not, of course, guarantee that all persons will take the same point of view with the advertisers, and it must be borne in mind that the claims and statements made by advertisers are their assertions, and not ours.

Our readers will confer a favor upon advertisers and also upon us if they will mention the AMERICAN MESSENGER when answering advertisements.

American Tract Society

THIS SOCIETY was organized in 1825. Its work is interdenominational and international in scope, and is commended by all evangelical denominations.

It has published the Gospel messages in 178 languages, dialects and characters. It has been the pioneer for work among the foreign-speaking people in our country, and its missionary colporters are distributing Christian literature in many languages among our foreign-speaking population and making a home-to-home visitation among the spiritually destitute, both in the cities and rural districts, leaving all kinds of Christian literature, also the Bible or portions of the Scriptures.

Its publication of leaflets, volumes and periodicals from the Home Office total 800,711,975 copies. It has made foreign cash appropriations to the amount of $805,466, and grants of electrotypes to the value of $61,177.96, by means of which millions of copies of books and tracts have been published at mission stations abroad.

The gratuitous distribution of the past year is to the value of $23,191.98. The grand total of its gratuitous distribution has been to the value of $2,676,159.82, which is the equivalent of 5,352,319,040 tract pages.

The total number of family visits that have been made by the Society's colporters during the last year is 146,056; the total number of volumes distributed by sale or grant is 49,584, making the total number of volumes that have been circulated by colporters in the last seventy-seven years 17,489,750, and the total number of family visits that they have made during the same period 18,958,862.

A large distribution of Christian literature is being made among the soldiers and sailors, and the Society aims to furnish the Patriot Library to every Cantonment in the Army and to every battleship and cruiser in the Navy.

The Society is making very special effort in behalf of Latin America, having entered upon the publication of a One-volume Bible commentary in Spanish, a long-needed and earnestly prayed-for publication, and several other important volumes in both Spanish and Portuguese. Its total publications for Latin America now reach 17,175,163 copies. Its work, ever widening, is dependent upon donations and legacies, and greatly needs increased offerings.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, PRESIDENT. JUDSON SWIFT, D. D., General Secretary. Remittances should be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

A young Irishman once went to a kind-hearted old squire for a recommendation. An elaborate one was written and read to him. He took it with thanks, but did not move. "What's the matter with it?" roared the squire. "O, nothin', sor," said the lad quickly.

"Well, then, why don't you go?" "Sure, sor, I thought on the stringth of a ricommand like that you'd be wanting to hire me."

How They Love It

There are two things which help an Editor to do his best work. One is that subscribers are renewing their subscriptions, proving practically how much they think of the paper, and the other is the word of appreciation that comes from its readers. One who belongs on is Jane E. McCall, Leonard Bridge, Conn., who writes: "I have had the AMERICAN MESSENGER to read from early days. I am now eighty-seven and cannot do without it."

OUR HONOR ROLL

"I think I can remember the AMERICAN MESSENGER for sixty-five years," Mrs. Mattie M. Morgan, of Roxboro, Philadelphia, says: "From my earliest recollection my mother was a subscriber, and I have taken it for many years. From its beginning it has always been the most welcome visitor in our home."

A subscriber in Natchiloches, La., says, "I do appreciate the AMERICAN MESSENGER, which has done me much good for many years. There is no paper I enjoy more."

And from Charlotte C. H., Va., comes this helpful commendation:

"I have been a subscriber to your paper for twenty years, and I am sure no other subscriber has enjoyed it more. The very best things one can say for your paper are not enough. It is the cleanest, best, most religious paper that I have ever read."

The Maister an' the Bairns

[From Greatheart, the Boys and Girls' Missionary Magazine of the United Free Church of Scotland.]

The Maister sat in a wee cot hoose,
To the Jordan's waters near,
An' the fisher fowk crushed an crooded
roon',
The Maister's words to hear.

An' even the bairns frae the near-haun' streets
Were mixin' in wi' the thrang;
Laddies an' lassies wi' wee bare feet
Jinkin' the crood amang.

An' ane o' the Twal' at the Maister's side
Raise up and cried aloud—
"Come, come, bairns, this is nae place for you,
Rin awa' hame oot o' the crood."

But the Maister said, as they turned awa',
"Let the wee bairns come to Me!"
An' he gathered them roon Him whaur
He sat,
An' lifted ane up on His knee.

* * * * *
"Sen' na the weans awa' frae Me.
But rather this lesson learn—
That nane 'll win in at Heaven's yett
That isna as pure as a bairn!"
* * * * *

O Thou who watchest the ways o' men,
Keep our feet in the heavenly airt,
An' bring us at last to Thy hame abune
As pure as the bairns in he'rt.

—The late W. Benzie, Missionary,
Shetland.

"I Need Thee Every Hour"

Annie Sherwood Hawks, the authoress of the well-known hymn which begins:

"I need Thee every hour,
Most gracious Lord" has recently passed away. Writing of the origin of the hymn quoted, she said:

"I remember well the morning (in 1872) when, in the midst of the daily cares of my home, I was so filled with a sense of nearness to the Master that, wondering how one could live without Him, either in joy or pain, these words, 'I need Thee every hour,' were flashed into my mind. Seating myself by the open window in the balmy air of the bright June day, I caught my pencil, and the words were soon committed to paper, almost as they are being sung now."

The late Mr. Ira D. Sankey in his work, "My Life and Sacred Songs," said:

"The singing of this hymn at a meeting in Chicago, at the time of the World's Fair, led to the writing by Major D. W. Whittle of the now famous song: 'Moment by moment, I'm kept in His love, Moment by moment, I've life from above.'"

HIS VINEYARD AND OURS

Education Is India's Greatest Need

"Our greatest need in India at this time is the education of our Christian communities," says Bishop Warne.

"This need is imperative for the reason that we have to begin at the bottom and teach the children and bring them up. For example, we will baptize this year 40,000 people, and out of that say 38,000 of them will be utterly unable to read. A careful review of the Northwest India conference alone indicates that 90,000 people are on the waiting list for baptism. The membership of that conference is now 150,000. These 90,000 are ready for baptism, but we do not feel it is safe to baptize in such large numbers unless we can put enough teachers and preachers over them. To baptize so many with our present facilities would be disastrous. This creates our problem.

"Of course we have a regular system of schools. We have village schools, then the middle schools (which are usually boarding schools), then the high schools and finally the college. Just now we are fairly well supplied with the middle schools, but we are very defective in the high schools. When I was in India last year there was a scholarship amounting to $20,000 to enable pupils to go through college. The interest alone of that sum gave twenty-five Christian men a chance to get a college education.

"We have 30,000 in our schools, so we are not wholly without education. But when I first went to India, thirty years ago, there were less than 10,000 Christians; now there are 400,000. We have not had enough funds and workers to keep pace with the work.

"Because of this situation we adopted the position that we would not spend our money on educating non-Christians. We have a few schools in which there is an exception,—the college where we have all our Christians in boarding schools, but where non-Christians come as day pupils. Their fees enable us to support practically all the professors."

How a Chinaman Saw the Gospel

A missionary tells a story of a Chinaman who came one day to the mission rooms. "Have you ever heard the Gospel?" asked the missionary. "No," was the reply, "but I have seen it. I know a man who was like a wild beast; he would shout at you when angry, and would curse both day and night. But he learned the religion of Jesus, and now he is kind, gentle, and speaks only good words." The converted heathen had become a preacher of the religion of Jesus without knowing it. The missionary himself could not preach and teach better than this poor man was doing by his changed life. His former companions saw a great change in him. They said: "What has made this man so different?" And when they heard that it was the religion of Jesus, they said in their hearts, "If we believe it is a good religion let us send it to those who have it not."—Monthly Record.

Confession and Fellowship

The elders of a church under the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, in the Congo region of Africa had to take part in the election of a village chief; and the missionaries, though having nothing to do with the affair, feared that a number of the church members had forgotten their religion in the excitement of the time.

When elders and missionaries met at the weekly board meeting, Mark Njoi stood up and said: "I cannot partake of the Lord's Supper to-morrow unless I confess my sins. My anger and disputing this week were not such as befit an elder in the church, so I want Iso (who had been elected chief) and all my brethren to forgive me and allow me to make confession to-morrow at the Lord's table." There were tears in all eyes as he spoke. Iso, the new chief, stood up immediately and made the same sort of confession, and all tried to bury differences in the love of Christ as they prayed together.

SHOEING A BULLOCK IN INDIA.

Then next day, as they gathered about the Lord's Table, Mark arose and said to the whole church in substance what he said to the board. Iso followed, his voice breaking as he made the same confession. In conclusion, he asked them to pray for him and help him in his new position that, all working together, they might make Bolenge a really Christian village. Then all present partook of the memorial feast surely with a new meaning; for it must be a wonderful Christ that can bring to voluntary public confession such proud servants of his.

Rev. A. F. Hensey, the missionary who relates this, says: "No incident has affected me more in the days since my return, and I do not recall any just like it in the history of the church; and I think I shall never forget that moment when these brethren met each other in the middle of the church and shook hands in Christly forgiveness."

The Conversion of a Bhagat

A recent issue of The Evangelical Christian tells of the conversion of a Bhagat or ascetic in India who had spent all his time in fasting, praying, ablutions, and going on pilgrimages, and had become so holy in his own estimation that he almost thought it a sin to spend any time in eating or to take food in any shape.

He was led to one of the towns where a Christian Mission had opened new work, and where a Hindustani preacher was stationed. The preacher and the Bhagat met. The latter, with his disciples, heard the tidings of salvation—salvation without asceticism—and without the millions of transmigrations prescribed by the so-called holy books of the Hindus. The man listened and it was not long before he was convinced of the truths of the Bible, and he and a goodly number of his followers have accepted Christianity, and the man himself is now an evangelist under instruction and preaching the Gospel to his people and former disciples.

A Missionary Car In Siam

The North Siam News tells of the good gospel work of an automobile used by a missionary in Siam, in these words: "The native people are giving it a cordial welcome. More than twenty carpenters donated their labor to build a garage. In several districts the Christians have volunteered to repair the roads leading to their villages. Last Sunday the car carried two American missionaries and three native pastors to their waiting congregations. The man who stood guard over the car during the services improved the time by placing two hundred and one portions of scripture in the hands of non-Christian readers."

A Self-Supporting Station

Rev. G. W. Lewis of the American Baptist Mission in South China speaks of new stations being opened in addition to the 150 chapels with which he is in touch. These he says are self-supporting from the start. One such he describes: "The building has been furnished by one of the members. Its total cost is fully $1000. The leader in the new church who has made this complete self-support possible is a merchant and a village elder. His reputation is so good that his connection with the church makes it easy to preach in that region. He has been a Christian for more than twenty years. His father was very poor—so poor that he ate only two meals a day part of the time in order that his son might attend school for a year or two. After the son had grown to manhood, he entered business and the Lord has especially prospered him. But with his prosperity he has not forgotten the Lord's share in it and has been a liberal giver for many years."

"Not High for a Black Girl"

In talking with a committee of native Christians who were arranging what each member of the Church was to give to a special collection for home missions, they asked some of the girls to give their entire wages of three or four months. I protested, saying that was rather high. One said, "It might be for a white man, but not for a black girl who found Jesus within the last year."—C. J. Stauffacher, Medical Missionary, Inhambane, East Africa.

For Others Less Fortunate

In a leper asylum at Chiengmai, Siam, about 200 lepers have been gathered, and live in neat brick houses amid cleanly surroundings. They receive about forty cents a week each for subsistence. The entire colony has become Christian, and recently they gave out of savings from their allowance money a sum equal to $12 gold, "To be sent to lepers in some other land who are less fortunate than ourselves."

The Pocket Testament League

The Pocket Testament League is made up of people anywhere on the face of the globe who will sign a membership card promising to read a chapter a day in the Bible. George L. B. Davies and Philip E. Howard, Jr., who are touring the camps and cantonments of our army in the South and Southwest, are meeting with wonderful success in enlisting the men in Bible reading and in the Christian life. "The soldiers of the American army," says Mr. Davies, "do not want any gospel of Ethical Culture, or of New Thought, but hungrily they drink in the message of the old, old story of salvation through the Blood of Christ. The thousands of men we have addressed realize fully that in a few months they will be face to face with eternity, and that many of them never will return to these shores." Among many thrilling incidents he tells of one corporal who secured extra League cards and hurried away to his tent. He signed up six of the eight soldiers who shared the tent with him. "Presently, filled with enthusiasm, the corporal brought back the six signed cards, and told how he had already arranged with the men in his tent to lock the door at night and then read their chapter and have prayer together. He told how he meant to enlist the last man in the tent as soon as he came off guard. Would it not be marvelous if that same thing could be duplicated in thousands of tents and barracks throughout the country!"

Twelve Missionary Needs

BY BISHOP JOSEPH F. BERRY.

More missionary facts.
More missionary faith.
More missionary prayers.
More missionary sermons.
More missionary intelligence.
More missionary conviction.
More missionary consistency.
More missionary self-sacrifice.
More missionary consecration.
More missionary giving that will make the angels glad.
More missionary volunteers with Pauline faith and zeal.
More missionary rejoicing over the wonderful conquests of the cross.—The Christian Advocate.

COMFORTING BOOKS

A book that has brought peace and a comforting word of cheer and encouragement to many:

Prayer and Meditation

By Judson Swift, D.D.

With the thought from St. John, "Men ought always to pray," the author of this little book has wrought out an entirely original series of meditations and prayers which touch the deeper needs of the heart. There is a Scripture selection, a prayer, a prose and poetic meditation and a suggested Scripture reading for thirty-one mornings and evenings. Beautifully bound in brown Keratol and stamped in gold. Size $3\frac{3}{4} \times 5\frac{1}{4}$ inches. 90 pages. By mail, 50 cents per copy.

These Words of Mine

Soft, velvety, dark-brown leather. Title stamped in gold. A truly beautiful little book of texts, selected by Abbie McCammon Brown. 157 pages, with book-mark. In white box. By mail, 50 cents.

Daily Food

White cloth covers, gold stamped, gilt edges. Contains a Scriptural portion, a promise, and a verse of a hymn for every day in the year; also the Lord's Prayer, Ten Commandments, Beatitudes, and Morning and Evening Prayer. Size $2\frac{1}{4} \times 3\frac{3}{4}$ inches, 200 pages. In white box. 25 cents. Plain, colored cloth binding, 15 cents.

Charles Carroll Albertson, D.D.

Has the War struck home to you?

Have you sent some dear one to serve your country?

Does worry and doubt about to-day's world conditions ever grip you?

It will comfort you to read

The Prophets and the War

By Charles Carroll Albertson, D.D.

to read the prophetic words and the reassuring assurances of men of the Old Testament—Hosea, Micah, Habakkuk and Isaiah.

How marvellously well they understood the world and its miseries. How clearly they foresaw these things of to-day. And how they counsel us to hold fast and to be not afraid. Sorely troubled, they never lost faith, never for a moment—and we should not, and we need not. The same things beset them that are besetting us, and we may well heed their warnings and take to our hearts their comforting, prophetic vision of the final outcome of tribulation and of humanity.

THE PROPHETS AND THE WAR brings you the inspired utterances of these men. So clearly are meanings explained that the words of the prophets will be a beacon for your guidance and a deep, abiding comfort.

Order this book. Its possession and study will be a great comfort to you. 12mo. Dark red cloth. By mail $1.00.

Do You Know A Soldier or a Sailor?

When the soldier or sailor boy that you know is waiting for the word for the battle to begin, let him have this little book in his pocket. Let him open it to page 94—to the "Prayer Before Going Into Battle." It will comfort him. The book will have earned its place in his kit at that moment. The book is called

A Manual of Devotion for Soldiers and Sailors

By Judson Swift, D.D.

Besides Prayers for Special Occasions it contains a verse of Scripture, a prayer and a meditation for 31 mornings and evenings.

"We believe this will prove to be the most helpful and satisfactory book of its class yet published."—William Phillips Hall.

"It is such an effective spiritual weapon I am going to ask my Church to present it to all of our soldier boys."—W. T. Elsing.

Send for a copy—or as many as you have use for. It is beautifully bound in Keratol. 104 pages, size $3\frac{3}{4} \times 5\frac{1}{4}$ inches. By mail 35 cents.

The bravest man may need strength and encouragement at some critical hour. This book will meet his need.

How can I best study the Bible?

The answer to this question isn't hard to find. If you really want to know more about the Bible and want to know it well just get a copy of "The Self-Explaining Bible." The title itself accurately describes the book. It is self-explaining in every sense of the word. It is a fully equipped Bible and carries no disappointments.

Bound as shown above $5.00 by mail. The same book Keratol binding $3.00 by mail.

AN INTRODUCTION before each book is a serviceable synopsis, summarizing in brief the source, history and purpose of the book. THE INTRODUCTIONS were carefully prepared by experts in their respective fields and contain easily accessible information nowhere else found.

THE NOTES AND EXPLANATIONS of the text are placed at the bottom of every page. Nothing in the way of notes and explanations has been so thoroughly yet so concisely done. They are clear, complete and accurate and place at immediate disposal a vast amount of scholarship.

THE INSTRUCTIONS coming separately after the notes convey information as to practical application of the text. These bring the Bible directly and forcibly home, and produce an additional feature of usefulness.

tion of the text. These bring the Bible directly and forcibly home, and produce an additional feature of usefulness.

THE REFERENCES are also placed at the bottom so as to obtain the utmost clarity of text.

THE OUTLINE OF THE GOSPELS is based on the standard American revision as the most accurate and modern and includes an Outline Life of Christ which gives in small compass the story of our Saviour's earthly life and ministry.

Contains CHRONOLOGICAL ARRANGEMENT of the prophets, events and places, and tabulations of Bible weights, measures and money, times and festivals, etc.

Compact and complete with its many helps, it is impossible to find in one volume so much information concerning the Bible and its contents as here given.

Plain enough for the beginner, adequate for the intermediate student, helpful to the professional. Fifteen hundred fine large pages of clear text on white paper. All of the difficult passages are explained right on the pages where they occur. It is a volume of rare merit. Place it within the reach of every boy and girl. Send for it.

Send for
Our Catalog

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY
PARK AVENUE AND 40TH STREET, NEW YORK

Send for
Our Catalog

205
M.M

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN LIBRARY
JUL 17 1902

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

COPYRIGHT 1907 BY
WALTER DODD & COMPANY

THE HUDSON RIVER FROM THE U. S. MILITARY ACADEMY AT WEST POINT

"LIGHT ON PROPHECY"

A Co-ordinated, Constructive Teaching

Being the Addresses Delivered at the Philadelphia Prophetic Conference, May 28-30, 1918

THE Conference of eminent Bible Teachers and Authorities on Prophetic Interpretation in the United States and Canada, held at Philadelphia, May 28th to 30th, 1918, was the most notable and authoritative gathering of its kind ever held in this country. The finest consecrated scholarship of all the Christian denominations was represented, and the deliberations and addresses on "The Return of Our Lord and Related Events" possess a vital spiritual interest to Christian men and women throughout the world. In view of the extraordinary manifestations of interest in the Philadelphia Prophetic Conference, an arrangement was made for the publication by the Christian Herald of the proceedings and addresses of the conference in a volume entitled "Light on Prophecy."

"Light on Prophecy" is published under the special supervision of the Committee of the Conference, and is the only volume to receive official authorization. The book is of 300 pages, containing all the addresses, about twenty in number.

The addresses will be welcomed by Bible lovers everywhere, and especially by the constantly growing number of those who believe that we are living in a time of prophetic fulfillment.

Notable Speakers and Addresses

- Included in "Light on Prophecy"
 - "Hath God Spoken?" and "What Is to Become of the Church?" By Dr. Harris H. Gregg, Pastor of Winnipeg, Canada, an eminent Canadian Divine.
 - "What Is Prophecy?" and "Where Is Christ Now and What Is He Doing?" By Rev. John M. McInnes, of Syracuse, Secretary of the Montrose Bible Conference.
 - "The Doctrine of Our Lord's Return" By Dr. Mark A. Matthews, Former Moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church.
 - "The Answer to the Greatest Question Jesus Ever Asked" and "What Manner of Persons Ought We to Be?" By Dr. William B. Riley, of the First Baptist Church of Minneapolis, Minn., and President of the Northwest Bible School, Bible teacher and lecturer.
 - "Did the Cross of Christ Fulfill All the Promises?" and "The Coming Glory" By W. L. Pettingill, Dean of the Philadelphia School of the Bible.
 - "God's Purpose in This Dispensation" and "Regathering of Israel in Unbelief" By Dr. James M. Gray, of the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, Ill.
 - "The Capture of Jerusalem" By Rev. A. E. Thompson, A.B., Pastor of the American Church at Jerusalem.
 - "War on Gorman Theology" By Dr. Cortland Myers, Pastor of the Tremont Baptist Temple, Boston, Mass.
 - "Coming Events Cast Their Shadows" and "Will There Be Any Tears in Heaven and Why?" By Rev. P. W. Phillpott, Hamilton, Canada.
 - "Has God a Program?" By Rev. B. B. Sutcliffe.
 - "Does This Truth Paralyze or Energize?" By Rev. Herbert Mackenzie, Pastor of the Gospel Church, Cleveland, Ohio, and Secretary of the Erlsode Bible Conference.

SPECIAL OFFER

"Light on Prophecy," postpaid $2.25
Christian Herald, 1 year (52 issues, regular subscription price, $2.00) for both

Red Cross Nurses Needed

The campaign to enroll Red Cross nurses for assignment to the Army and Navy Nurse Corps and for public health service has been progressing satisfactorily throughout the nation. The Department of Nursing expects that the twenty thousand additional nurses needed by the Army and Navy by the end of the year will be obtained and without undue interference with the hospitals and other agencies rendering needed nursing service to our civilian population.

The phase of the campaign to encourage women to become student nurses, and, by caring for the civilian sick, prepare themselves for military service in the future, was stimulated greatly by the establishment of the Army School of Nursing. This school with headquarters in Washington will accept graduates from high schools and colleges, between twenty-one and thirty-five years of age, and in good physical condition. Applicants who in addition have completed the course in Elementary Hygiene and Home Care of the Sick conducted by the Red Cross will be given special consideration.

By helping to care for sick and wounded soldiers in the various military hospitals the student nurses will gain experience in surgical and medical nursing, in eye, ear, throat and nose work and in nervous and mental diseases. Experience in other phases of nursing will be provided through affiliations with civil hospitals. The Director of the Department of Nursing of the American Red Cross is ex-officio to be a member of the Advisory Council of the school.

Upon the establishment of this army school the campaign to interest women in taking up nursing was redirected immediately and special emphasis placed on the opportunities for direct military service offered by this institution. Steps are to be taken to bring this opportunity to the attention of all who have taken the Red Cross courses.

The First French War Cross

The first French war cross given to an American soldier for bravery in the field was won by a Christian Endeavor boy, Mr. Robert C. Patterson, of Huntington, Ind. Mr. Patterson was a lieutenant at the time the cross was awarded to him, but later was made a captain. Daniel A. Poling, associate president of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, who has returned from a three months' visit to England and France, brought this war cross with him. Mr. Poling states that the reports of drunkenness in the American army in France are utterly false. Prohibition is the rule and it is enforced. The morals of the men are safeguarded infinitely better than the morals of civilians at home. Mr. Poling was "gassed" during an attack and was under fire while trying to bring in a wounded man from No Man's Land.

The War and Religious Outlook

Recognizing that the war has placed on the nations and on the churches an obligation for the most searching self-examination, the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America has requested a group of representative men to constitute a Committee on the War and the Religious Outlook, the purpose of which is "to consider the state of religion as affected by the war with special reference to the duty and opportunity of the churches, and to prepare its findings for submission to the churches." The Committee was created by action of the Administrative Committee of the Federal Council in consultation and co-operation with the Executive Committee of the General War-Time Commission of the Churches.

President Henry Churchill King has been elected Chairman of the Committee and has been released by Oberlin College for this important service. He will shortly be located at the office which has been set up for the Committee in New York. Professor William Adams Brown is Vice-Chairman. It has further been requested that a certain proportion of the members of the Committee secure such release from their ordinary duties as may be necessary to carry out the work to be undertaken.

The American Tract Society

- 1.—It is a GREAT MISSIONARY PUBLICATION SOCIETY, having printed and distributed at home and abroad the Gospel Truth in 178 languages or dialects, thereby multiplying many times the power of the missionary.
- 2.—Its UNION MISSIONARY COLPORTAGE reaches the dense population of the city and the scattered population of the country.
- 3.—Its WORK AMONG THE IMMIGRANTS is most successful. Its colporters are native foreigners speaking Christian Truth in the tongues of those to whom they are sent.
- 4.—By its GRANTS of cash, publications and electrotypes to mission stations in the foreign field it has enabled them to print and circulate an undenominational Christian vernacular literature.

WHY IT SHOULD BE SUPPORTED

- 1.—Because the printed page finds tens of thousands who never learn of Christ in any other way.
- 2.—Because through its publications many souls are converted both on the home and foreign fields.
- 3.—Because its volumes and tracts and periodicals develop the spiritual life of Christians.
- 4.—Because its publications counteract the influence of impure and evil literature.

HOW I CAN HELP IT

- 1.—By making an Annual offering.
- 2.—By speaking of its work to my friends.
- 3.—By asking God's blessing upon its work and workers.
- 4.—By increasing the circulation of its publications.

The Committee has been given entire freedom to proceed according to its own judgment. It is empowered to add to its number and is at present constituted as follows: President Henry Churchill King, Bishop J. W. Bashford, Professor William Adams Brown, President W. H. P. Faunce, Professor Charles M. Jacobs, Bishop Walter R. Lambuth, Rev. Charles S. Macfarland, President William Douglas Mackenzie, Bishop F. J. McConnell, John R. Mott, President E. Y. Mullins, Rev. Frank Mason North, Very Rev. Wilford L. Robbins, Robert E. Speer, and Rev. James I. Vance.

Work of the Hebrew Christian Alliance

The Fourth Annual Conference of the Hebrew Christian Alliance of America held recently at The Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, brought together the most representative body of Hebrew Christian missionaries, laymen and women that has ever assembled on the American Continent. The subjects for consideration were Israel's future as related to the Messiah, and the early restoration of the Jews to the Holy Land; also the sending out of evangelists two by two throughout the land, and the shepherding of the young Hebrew Christian converts.

In conjunction with the Conference, open-air services were held in the crowded Jewish quarters of the city by the delegates, and the gospel message given to thousands of Jews by their Christian brethren.

The officers elected for the ensuing year are Pastor T. B. Rohold, of Toronto, President; Pastor A. Lichenstein, of St. Louis, Vice-President; and Pastor Joseph R. Lewek, of Chicago, Secretary-Treasurer.

Next year's conference will be held in Washington, D. C.—it is hoped at the very time that the Jewish Congress expects to meet in that city to select representatives to petition the Peace Conference at the conclusion of the war to guarantee our people a safely protected homeland in Palestine. A glorious opportunity will then be given to Hebrew Christians to declare their undying love for their people, their land and the Lion of the Tribe of Judah, "who was delivered for our offenses and raised for our justification."

Flashlights in a Year's Progress

Sunday School progress of worldwide scope was reported at the recently held Executive Committee meeting of the World's Sunday School Association, which met at the home of the chairman, Mr. H. J. Heinz, of Pittsburgh. From Rev. George P. Howard, South American secretary, comes such heartening items as an evangelistic campaign in Chile. Under his effective leadership

657 adults decided the all important question of personal relationship to God. In one school 90 of the adolescent age came up and made their choice for Christ and His Kingdom. In Buenos Aires Mr. Howard prepared for and presided over the first Father and Son banquet ever held in South America. There were more than 100 fathers and 100 sons present. Howard's report closed with this ringing message, "If we can capture the children of these lands for Christ, if we can train their boys in the virtues of the Christian gentleman, if we can teach the sweet voiced daughters the songs of the Christian home, these republics will feel the mighty influence of Christianity and you will behold the genius of a mighty race awakening from its sleep of centuries."

Bishop Hartzell, for the Moslem Lands, told of the administration of Relief Funds under the direction of Secretary Stephen Trowbridge, who has temporarily left his important work in Egypt for this special need in Palestine. More than $50,000 is being expended each month among those who live in the land of Jesus' birth. Money sent to Persia for Sunday-school work has been well used in conducting Refugee Sunday schools and in publishing a catechism in Turkish for the combined use of the East and West Persia Mission. Dr. S. M. Zwemer has just made a trip in the interest of Moslem work to Malaysia and China. He states that the Moslems in China are more open to Christian approach than in any of the Mohammedan fields. Suitable literature is being prepared in Arabic-Chinese for use in China.

In the Philippine Islands there is no indication that the growth of recent years is lessening. The increase is from 8,000 in 1911, to 60,000. Organized adult Bible classes are making good. Such a class among the university students in Manila had a membership of twenty. They decided to get real busy and increase that membership to 100, and called themselves "We Brothers of 99." At last accounts that class numbered 717.

China's growth is indicated in part by the number of lesson helps that are now printed regularly. In 1911 the Uniform lesson issue was 27,000, and in 1918, the edition amounted to 184,400. Then there are 10,000 graded helps in addition. The estimated number of Sunday school scholars in China is no less than 200,000 in 4,000 schools.

Japan Sunday schools as well as those in Egypt, and Brazil gave liberally for the Armenian and Syrian Relief Fund last Christmas. The summer training school at Karuiazawa, Japan, is an outstanding feature of their work in training a leadership. The session lasts for ten days. Scholarships amounting to $10.00 each are being sought in America for Japanese students who could not otherwise attend.

CHRISTIAN HERALD, 279 Bible House, New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen: For the enclosed $2.25, send me, postpaid, "Light on Prophecy" and the Christian Herald for 1 year.

Name

Address

The American Messenger

"Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Luke 2:10

Vol. 76. No. 7

JULY, 1918

Copyright, 1918, by American Tract Society.

Terms: 50 cents per annum
Single copy, 5 cents

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

PUBLISHED MONTHLY

By THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

OFFICERS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President.

JOHN HENRY JOWETT, M.A., D.D., Vice-President.

JUDSON SWIFT, D.D., General Secretary.

LOUIS TAG, Treasurer.

REV. HENRY LEWIS, Ph.D., Recording Secretary.

All of the above-named officers should be addressed at Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Rev. David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.

Rev. Charles Carroll Albertson, D.D.

Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.

Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D.

Rev. George Ernest Merriam.

Entered at the Post Office in New York as second-class matter.

Preparing Men for the Training Camps

It is now plainly evident that during the course of the next few months a large number of young men will be called from their ordinary walks in life to enter upon the training necessary to fit them to become soldiers of the Republic.

The question arises, how can the Christian Churches at home help to prepare these young men for their life and work in the training camps? To this question an admirable answer is contained in the suggestions that have been recently sent out by the Federal Council of Churches.

In the first place the churches are urged to develop that enthusiasm which is a large part of the morale so vital to the work of successful soldiers. Young men should be led to adopt high ideals of service for our country and for the world. The spirit of self-sacrifice should be made attractive, and every young man should be brought to see the high and unselfish purposes which have led America into the war.

In the second place, the Church should see to it that definite instruction is given to these young men as to the care of their bodies and the laws of hygiene and sanitation. They should be warned of the moral dangers which will confront them in camp life, and of the temptations that they will encounter. They should be advised that the life in camp is necessarily abnormal, and that they must adjust themselves to conditions which they have never faced before.

An effort should be made to give these young men the right mental equipment for their military life. They should become familiar with the history of our own country, and they should gain as much advance information as possible concerning the requirements of military service.

As to their spiritual life, these young men should be encouraged to cultivate the right kind of daily habits and to realize the reasonableness even in military camps of daily Bible reading and prayer. The carrying and using of the Bible ought to be made as normal as the wearing of a uniform and the carrying of a rifle, and no man should fear to kneel down and say his prayers in barracks each night.

Every young man has in him some measure of leadership, but in each community there are natural leaders who have not been adequately drawn out. Such cases will be given rare opportunities in camp. The Church should seek to inspire young men with unselfish ambition to lead before they go to camp. Any young man who has led a Bible class or been successful in social or athletic activity, and has elements of leadership ought to be quickened to use those natural gifts for a high, moral, patriotic and religious service to his fellows.

By way of a definite program, it has been suggested that the Churches might carry on the following lines of special work for young men who are likely to be called to the training camps:

1. Regular instruction in young men's Bible classes should be furnished.
2. Special addresses might be given by the pastors, Army officers, doctors, business men or specialists, at church services, especially evening services, and at men's dinners, men's clubs, etc.
3. A course of lessons held on week nights might be given embodying some of the points that have been mentioned above.
4. Special reading courses might be prepared and books circulated.
5. Right literature on the war should be gathered and distributed.
6. There might be organized in the church, or at least in the community, some form of club of drafted men for social fellowship and mutual help.

Save Time for the Government

Fancy if you can the volume of mail that pours into Washington to the various Government departments daily. Such a vast number of our people are personally interested in the war, through business connections, and because of members of their family in some form of the service, that the departments at the capital are being flooded with letters of inquiry on every conceivable subject concerning the war. The clerical force, which numbers an army in itself now, finds it physically impossible to give many of these letters proper attention and reply. But a great number of these letters of inquiry need never be written if the writers only understood that there is published at Washington a Government newspaper, the Official Bulletin, which prints every day all of the more important rulings, decisions, regulations, proclamations, orders, etc., as they are promulgated by the several departments and the many special committees and agencies now in operation at the National Capital.

This official journal is posted each day in every postoffice in the United States, more than 56,000 in number, and may also be found on file at all libraries, boards of trade, and chambers of commerce, the offices of mayors and governors and Federal officials. By consulting these files most questions will be found readily answered; there will be little necessity for letter writing; the unnecessary congestion of the mails will be appreciably relieved; the railroads will be called upon to move fewer correspondence sacks, and the mass of business that is piling up in the Government departments will be eased considerable. Hundreds of clerks now answering correspondence will be enabled to give their time to essentially important war work, and a fundamentally patriotic service will have been performed by the public.

Loyal Service

We believe the patriotism of our people compares favorably with that of any other day. General Washington, writing to James Warren, in 1779, said:

"Our conflict is not likely to cease so soon as every good man could wish. * * * Unless we can return a little more to first principles, and act a little more upon patriotic grounds, I do not know what may be the issue of the contest. Speculation, peculation, engrossing, forestalling, with all their concomitants, afford too many melancholy proofs of the decay of public virtue."

No doubt there is too much "profiteering" in our own day, but we would like to call attention to a statement in a recent sermon by Dr. MacLeod, of the Collegiate Church of St. Nicholas, New York City. He said:

"A prominent Government official said a little while before war was declared: 'I dread the hour when war comes. It will mean the descent on Washington from all over the United States of an army of crooks and grafters, who will try to rob and plunder the Government in the hour of her need.'

"Some time after war was declared this very same man said: 'It is a wonderful thing. All that I feared has failed to come to pass. Instead of an army of crooks and grafters coming to Washington, we have 4,000 of the brainiest men in the United States. They are giving their services to the Government. They are men of commanding ability and success. I don't believe there is a loyal man in America who has anything the nation wants who is not ready to give it over to the nation for nothing.'"

Child Welfare

It is a matter of sincere regret to all lovers of childhood that the Supreme Court of the United States has recently declared invalid, by a vote of five to four, the Federal Child Labor Law, under the provisions of which it was hoped that the evils of child labor might be eliminated throughout the whole nation.

It is hoped that a fresh law may be drawn under which the Federal Government may be able to deal with the subject of child labor without contravening any of the limitations upon Federal power contained in the United States Constitution. The close vote upon the constitutionality of the law which has just been declared invalid gives rise to the hope that it will not be an impossible task to frame Congressional legislation which will effectually check the child labor evil and still conform with all the requirements of our Constitution.

Meanwhile the advocates of child welfare may well devote their energies to a systematic effort to have the individual States enact the necessary laws for the protection of childhood and the elimination of the child labor evil. In some States the children are adequately protected by existing legislation, but in some other States there is a lamentable lack of such protection.

A campaign of education is needed in every State where there is laxity in this vital and important matter, and the National Child Labor Committee will be glad to aid every effort to better the existing conditions, and to help educate public sentiment to the point where the employment of child labor will be looked upon as an unmitigated and deplorable injustice.

An Insidious Evil

The Indian Rights Association has called attention to the evil which is menacing our Indian population through the use of peyote, the scientific name for which is anhalonium and the commercial designation "mescal buttons."

Peyote is derived from certain cacti in northern Mexico, and is frequently called "dry whiskey." The effect of peyote upon its users is declared to be most deleterious, and various Indian tribes are showing very clearly the evil results of their indulgence in this drug habit.

Bills have been introduced into both houses of Congress which aim to eradicate the peyote habit. All friends of the Indian are urged to give their hearty support to the effort to induce Congress to pass the necessary legislation to abate this serious and growing evil.

The Line of Necessity

By CLARENCE E. FLYNN

WHEN a given course of action is considered or a particular step of progress is proposed many people are in the habit of questioning whether the thing is necessary. They do not inquire whether it is desirable, whether it is helpful, or whether it is lovely. The only question raised is as to its necessity.

The propounding of this question is not without its effect. The people who ask it often rob a movement of its power, and occasionally cause it to fail completely. By its use a chill is often brought upon spirits which would otherwise throb with warmth. The world is deprived of the influence of many a cheerful song, helpful smile, gracious act, and kind word simply because the person who might have given them stopped to make this ever-recurring inquiry: "Is it necessary?"

The people who ask the question would themselves be the least willing to have their own lives and fortunes subjected to its merciless test. They know full well, that it would remove from their little worlds many of the things which now seem best and sweetest. Landscapes would lose the mystic charm which now serves to lift them above the commonplace. Daily experience would be robbed of the glamor which now makes life seem so sweet and beautiful. The glory would fade from about the brow of friendship, and even friendship itself perhaps would perish. Lovely as all these things are, they do not belong to the list of things that are absolutely necessary. They would pass away, if life were denuded of all that the world could manage to get along without.

As a matter of fact, many of the most blessed things we know lie on the farther side of the line of necessity. If we were never to pass beyond that line, then the world and all that it contains would be reduced to the impoverished outlines of the barest actuality. There would be no place left for hope, ambition, and dream. We should do no more work than is necessary, and our labor could no longer be a daily progress toward the summit of some mount of hope. We should have no more than is necessary, and each would become less than a peasant. We should love, help, and serve no more than is necessary, and all the joy of the unselfish and the sacrificial would be taken from life. We should have no more friends than is necessary, and one by one those who have been our greatest inspiration would depart from our ken. How poor a thing it would soon be to live!

Life would indeed be soon reduced to the level of mere existence. We should still be in the world, but the glow and the loveliness would have departed. Our tables would be bare, because we should eat only what is strictly necessary. Our clothing would be scant and poor, for we should wear only what one must. Our lives would be solitary, for association is a luxury and not a necessity. Kindness is unnecessary, therefore our souls would shrivel and perish. A once cheerful world would have grown dull and dead, and the once joyful privilege of living would have suddenly been transformed into a grievous necessity.

It is the unnecessary that changes bare existence into throbbing and purposeful life. A mere earth is changed into a lovely world by processes which might have been dispensed with. A house is transformed into a home by graces which are not the children of necessity.

Even Bethlehem and Calvary were not necessary. The glory of their meaning comes rather from the fact that they sprang from good will alone. The power of the Cross springs largely from the fact that it could have been avoided. We appreciate it because the Master faced it willingly.

No one cares for the friend who is a friend under the pressure of some necessity. We appreciate the friendship of those who are our friends because they simply want to be. We do not care for the gift offered by some one who felt the force of some compulsion. The impulse is to cast it from us in disdain. We love the gift made by the impulse of a kindly heart, not because it was a necessity but because it was a pleasure.

I once sat in a great gathering and heard a man with silver hair offer a bit of advice which sprang from a life of rich experience. "Let us," he said, "during the week that we are together, make it a point to be a little kinder to one another than is necessary."

Life had taught him that the finer graces and the sweeter instincts are not necessary things. They do not earn salary. They do not satisfy the hunger of the body. They are even sometimes discounted in the calculations of the shortsighted. They are, however, the beautiful things. They garland life and make it lovely. If the men in that gathering were to be kind to one another, it was desirable that they should be so for the sake of kindness, and not for that of compulsion.

This was one of the first principles to engage the attention of the Great Teacher. He said to a crowd of people one day that one gets no credit either on the books of heaven or in the courts of his own conscience until he has done a little better than was strictly necessary. It is a little thing to give the coat that is asked for, but it is a worthy thing to give the cloak which is not expected. It is insignificant to travel the mile that is requested, but it is worth while to go the second mile unasked. One deserves no thanks for having loved his friend, for that is easy, but he who learns to love his enemies has achieved something really worth while.

These points from the Sermon on the Mount simply state the old principle of the beauty and value of the unnecessary. It is the second mile traveled, the overflowing kindness offered, and the unnecessary act of goodness that sweeten and glorify the years. These things make of life more than a gloomy journey through a valley of trouble. They make it a glad procession across the hills of joy.

There is a higher law than that of necessity. Necessity may supply a skeleton for living, but we are not interested in skeletons until they are clothed with flesh and vitalized with life. It represents a framework for existence, but the framework of a building does not seem worth while until it has added to it the complement of walls and the beauty of decorations. It may represent the stage upon which the drama of life is to be enacted, but the stage is empty and bare until the actors come upon it and lend it the enchantment of thought and action. Beyond the line of necessity lie the countless things which weave the web of splendor and throw the magic of enchantment about things. Necessity supplies the substance. The unnecessary adds the glory.

The proper question to ask about a course of conduct to be followed or a thing to be obtained is not, then, that as to whether it is necessary. It is that as to whether it is lovely and worth while. We need to remember that if all the unnecessary acts were left undone and all the unnecessary words were left unsaid the world soon would cease to seem a fit place in which to live. We need to remember that it is the will un-compelled that tames the wilderness, that it is the hand unconstrained that reclaims the desert, and that it is the kindness born of spontaneous impulse which brings into life the uplifting and the helpful.

Of course we could get on without all these things. We do not have to have the flowers; we could dispense with the moonbeams; our three meals a day do not depend upon the singing of the birds; the world could no doubt continue on its way if the wind never again whispered a lullaby among the trees. But this is not the kind of world for which the heart longs. The deeper hunger is satisfied only with a world made beautiful with the things that were whispered only into the more sacred chambers of the heart of man—the beautiful and the unnecessary things.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTION

J. WILBUR CHAPMAN, D.D.

THE CHALLENGE TO THE CHURCH

BY

REV. J. WILBUR CHAPMAN, D. D.

Who live to-day, whether we appreciate it or not, are in the most significant period of the world's history. There has been nothing like it since the first day dawned upon this earth. It is greatest in its awfulness—with the whole world practically at war, with the battlefields covered with dead and dying, with a multitude almost innumerable moving towards eternity. What a day it is!

It is greatest in its responsibility. Some one is responsible for this war. We know that as a nation we are not. It was forced upon us, and now we must fight to a finish—no matter what the cost may be in men or money.

"For all we have and are,
For all our children's fate,
Stand up and meet the war;
The Hun is at the gate."

Even though we are not responsible for the war, we are responsible for seeing that it is fought well, and fought through, that its lessons are well learned, and that its warnings shall be well heeded.

It is a righteous war that we are waging, and with our love of justice and in view of the fact that our Christian President is leading and that our army is being trained in righteousness we are sure to win the final victory.

The Message of Song

This is a great day for singing—both from the popular airs such as "Over There," and "Keep the Home Fires Burning," and the great old hymns, such as "When I Survey the Wondrous Cross," which the chaplain sings with his soldiers as he celebrates the Lord's Supper the night before the battle. We sing and the soldiers sing and so our faith is strengthened.

The Message of the Preacher

This is the greatest day for preaching the world has ever known, and when men are laying down their lives for a great cause, it ought to be easy to tell of Him who died upon the cross for a world lying in wickedness.

If we cannot preach now, we cannot preach at all. With minds thoughtful, with hearts aching, with tears blinding and with homes in sorrow, the supreme hour for preaching has come.

A Day for Service

For direct service, from knitting socks to praying prayers, from giving gold to going out over No Man's Land to bring in the wounded and comfort the dying, we may serve. What a wonderful day it is!

In these days of warfare there have been repeated challenges to our patriotism and we have not been found wanting. I have traveled the country over and everywhere I have found the highest form of patriotism and as a country we stand ready to give our all, as the cause may demand it.

There have also been repeated challenges to our benevolence. We have not been slackers in this respect, and yet if we think we have given liberally, let us remember that France has given an average of $336.00 to her war loans for every person in the country.

To match that America must give in her war loans thirty-seven billion dollars and if we allow for the fact that the average American family income, is just twice that of the average household in France, America, to keep pace with France, must give seventy-four billions to her war loans.

Again there have been repeated challenges to our affections. Fathers and mothers have placed their best upon the altars of sacrifice and have counted it a joy to do so. There has been no holding back, hearts have ached and tears have flowed like rain, but there has been no complaint. The spirit has rather been that which is expressed in the words of Reuben Goldsmith:

Somewhere across the infested sea,
Serving the cause of Liberty,
Dear Lord, is my brave son.
I know not how he fares tonight,
But keep him ever in Thy sight,
For I have but the one.

Thou gavest two to bless my life,
But one fell early in the strife,
My first begotten son.
He with his comrades marched away
And then a message came one day,
Dear Lord, I have but one.

I know the cause is good and true,
I know that suffering must ensue
Before the fight is won.
Yet bear with me, O Lord, this night,
Be Thou my solace in my plight
And guard my only son.

Our faith, too, has met with a challenge in these days. When war was first declared, we were stunned, we knew not what to expect. We wondered if the things which were dear as life to us were to be taken away, but we stopped to think, we turned our eyes up, we listened to our ministers, we read our Bibles, we began to pray, we thought of God, and now we learn that He will lead us on and victory shall be ours.

"Then trust Him for to-day
As thine unfailing friend,
And let Him bear thee all the way
Who loveth to the end.
And let the morrow rest
In His beloved hand;
His good is better than our best,
As we shall understand;
If trusting Him who faileth never
We rest in Him today—forever."

Today in no unmistakable manner the challenge has come to the church, and her response has been great.

I look with alarm upon anything that would weaken the church. We must watch carefully the wave of un-Christian Socialism and the teachings of spiritualism which are today in evidence. We must resent the claim that in this day of world conflict the church has failed.

The church works much out of sight. She lays her foundations deep and strong and every institution which has permanently blessed humanity has either directly or indirectly drawn its strength and life from the church. Their success is the success of the church—and their life is the evidence of the church's life. What is the challenge to the church?

As to the War Situation!

As to the war itself, there can be but one position for the church. Pro-Satanism is treason against God. Pro-Germanism is treason against the Government. Do you imagine that He who blest little babies, loves little children and honored womanhood, would have us sit by in indifference while our enemies bayonet babies, outrage children and horribly mistreat women. We must support the Government and fight the battles through.

As to Evangelism

This is the day for sounding the evangelistic note and the church is not failing here. More men are preaching the Gospel today in the pulpits, in training camps and in the trenches than ever before since the church was established.

As to Foreign Missions

Jesus said that the field is the world: we cannot think of it as less than that, for the war is opening our eyes to the bigness of everything.

We used to think in dollars, then in hundreds, then in thousands, then in millions, now it is billions—and the end is not yet.

We used to think of our homes then, then of our cities, then of our own country, then of continents—but now it is the world and all the time the vision is enlarging—we can never again go back to small things.

The Reconstruction Period

Some day war will cease and battles end. Our boys will be coming home and we must be ready to absorb them into the life of the home, the church and the nation.

The church must not be found wanting and she will not be, if she but carries over to the reconstruction period the spirit which pervades her today. Some day we shall face our Master and I for one wish to do so with joy and not with sadness.

An English girl was dying. Hers had been a life of drudgery. Her mother dying when she was but a girl of twelve, had left her with a burden to bear in the care of younger brothers and sisters, far too heavy for her. At last the break came, and with the family about her she was dying. Her body was worn, her face bore the marks of her suffering and her little hands showed plainly the years of toil. Turning to the sister next to herself in years, she said:

"I don't know what I shall say to Jesus when I meet Him. I have been so busy with you all that I couldn't serve him so very well. I haven't been much in church and I don't know what to say to Him when I see Him."

All was still for a moment, and then her little sister said with sobs, "Sister, if I was you, I wouldn't say a thing to Him, but I'd just show Him my hands."

So when we stand in His presence may He see the evidences of our faith, the marks of our toil, the crown of our service as the answer to our challenge, and then I am sure He will say, "Well done! Well done!"

✻ ✻ ✻

At the Front

BY LOUISA A'HMUTY NASH.

IT has often been asserted that there is a great lack of religious feeling among the troops at the front, but this dictum is reversed by the personal glimpses gathered from the letters of chaplains, church-army men and Young Men's Christian Association workers.

"Will that book stop a bullet?" asked a soldier in one of the rest huts. He had evidently heard how a New Testament in a soldier's breast-pocket, had most wonderfully saved that man's life.

"We don't guarantee that, but we do guarantee that it stops the sin impediments on the way to God and to Heaven," was the answer of the Bible-worker, who had distributed 10,000 Scripture portions to the men as they were leaving for the front.

"I have carried this Testament for twelve months!" said one man. "Twenty!" said another. While a third stated that he had carried his for two years. "And they have been real comforts!" was what they each testified.

"It's just what we need, facing death, as we do," a man in a trench told the chaplain. "We find no comfort in the message that some are giving us, saying that if we die for our country God will accept that sacrifice and forgive our sins." He continued, "I would rather believe the Gospel and trust the Divine Sin-bearer."

This is the message written home by a member to his association.

"There was a lad, whom I used to know as the despair of his Sunday-school teacher. This is how he writes now, 'It is a great pleasure for me to write to you, for I can feel the difference in myself. I don't mind what people think about me for reading my Testament. I shall stick to it, and follow Christ's foot-steps!' And many a lad has gripped my hand with a hearty 'God bless you, Sir,' for all I've got out of my Testament!"

After the battle of Bois-en-hache, a lieutenant was sent back with eight men to place crosses on the graves of the Sussex men, who had been buried there. He found the body of a young man, and on its "identity disc," was the name "Pte. Garrod." Then he saw a khaki Testament, sticking out of his breast-pocket. Although it was soaked in water, he could see that the boy had filled in the decision-form at the end with his name.

One of the party told the lieutenant that when the lad had fallen, wounded, into a shell-hole, his comrades could not get him out on account of the heavy firing, but they saw him pull out his little Testament, read a few verses, and then replace it in his pocket. After that he soon passed away.

After the lad had been buried, the lieutenant thanked God, as they stood around his grave, that the lad had put his trust in the Lord, and was with Him now in Heaven!

The same helping hands will be stretched out to our brave men, with the same good results.

THE SPIRITUAL INTERPRETATION

By James Elmer Russell

THERE are two ways in which we may look upon nature. We may look upon her with the outward eye, or we may look upon her with the "inward eye" of which Wordsworth speaks in his poem on the daffodils. We may be satisfied with the glimpses of sky and mountain, of bird and flower that meet our gaze or with Tennyson we may say,

"The sun, the moon, the stars, the seas, the hills and the plains,
Are not these, O soul, the vision of Him that reigns?
Is not the vision He, tho' He be not that which He seems?"

The scientific law of gravitation is important, but Job who knew nothing of Sir Isaac Newton's later great discovery, gives the inner meaning of gravitation when he says, "He stretcheth out the north over empty space,
And hangeth the earth upon nothing."

One person looks at a flower, and like Peter Bell,

"A primrose by the river's brim
A yellow primrose is to him
And it is nothing more."

While still another looks at a wayside blossom and to him,

"The meanest flower that blows can give Thoughts that do often lie too deep for tears."

To the ordinary observer of the stars they are objects of interesting inquiry or of passing notice only, but when a great astronomer like Kepler sweeps the heavens with his telescope, he exclaims, "I think thy thoughts after Thee, O God."

Most of us have been watching the return of the birds with pleasure and wonder, but when an interpreter like William Cullen Bryant thinks of the long flight of the waterfowl he says to himself,

"He who, from zone to zone,
Guides through the boundless sky thy certain flight,
In the long way that I must tread alone
Will lead my steps aright."

To many people a thunderstorm is a source of great fear, but there is a spiritual interpretation of the thunderstorm which robs it of anything more than a reason for physical shrinking.

"If He thunder by law, the thunder is yet His voice."

Jesus found in nature the revelation of God. He said, "If God so clothe the grass of the field which today is and tomorrow is cast into the oven, how much more shall he clothe you, O ye of little faith."

Which view of nature will you emphasize, dear reader? One may be greatly interested in a study of the facts of nature and be largely blind to its spiritual meanings, but he who feels the deeper meanings of nature may also be glad in its more superficial aspects. Mrs. Browning says truly,

"Earth's crammed with heaven,
And every common bush afire with God;
But only he who sees takes off his shoes,
The rest sit round it, and pluck blackberries."

Surely the nature study which ought to be supremely emphasized in every Sunday School Class is the kind which leads the pupils to feel that earth's "crammed with heaven." The facts of nature can be learned anywhere, but the Sunday School has a great opportunity to interpret the spiritual meaning of nature's facts.

The mere scientist looks at nature and he says, "God is law."

The mere engineer looks at nature and he says, "God is power."

The mere philosopher looks at nature and he says, "God is thought."

The mere artist looks at nature and he says, "God is beauty."

The Christian looks at nature, if he is taught aright, and he says, "God is love."

✻ ✻ ✻

Along the Pathway of Tears

BY WILLIAM NORRIS BURR.

A little while ago a popular magazine contained an article in which an eager, virile, modern business man pictured Jesus as his "Silent Partner." He shows supreme regard for the Master. He seems to have thrown wide open his big, strong, splendid life to the "genial, kindly, friendly, efficient, strong Jesus of Nazareth—and of Millersville." He has had painted a picture of his "Silent Partner" that covers all one side of the reception-room at his factory. "It's a long way off from the conventional, sad-eyed, 'Man of Sorrows' picture," he writes. "It shows him big, and bronzed, and glad-eyed, and smiling, standing at His carpenter's bench . . . a good workman but never driven, never too busy to glance up with a smile; wanting happiness and money and success, but wanting everyone else to have them, too." This factory-man has certainly "given his heart" to the Jesus of his fancies—fancies colored by the light of his warm, hearty, optimistic view of "things as they are." One cannot read his article without feeling the inspiring thrill of a quickening spiritual vigor creeping in upon him. It is a tonic to the soul.

And yet, in his attempt to picture his divine-human "Silent Partner" as "a man whom red-blooded, two-fisted men would just have to love, whom boys would take to, naturally," this hearty, eager business man has certainly minimized some features that have prominence in any true conception of the Christ of the gospels. "I don't know how this 'Man of Sorrows' idea came to get so strong a hold," he writes. "Nobody ever lived on this earth who had a better time of it than He. . . . He compared himself to a bridegroom. Life was as happy a business as that for Him—one long, joyous wedding-feast."

Is that quite true to the record of the Scriptures? Robert Speer says: "The knowledge of the ravages of sin in the world caused Him constant sorrow. . . . He was the bridegroom of no single heart, but He wept at His rejection by the bride He came to win: 'Jerusalem, O Jerusalem!'"

Not a little of our Saviour's sowing was "in tears." "Jesus wept" is an outstanding passage in the record of His life here in the flesh. And as the passion of Christ gains possession of His followers they, too, shall come to many days when, as they drop the seed of the kingdom their eyes shall become mist-dimmed and their hearts weighted with sorrow; for they must needs enter into "the fellowship of His sufferings," if His passion for men controls them. Compassion for the multitudes "distressed and scattered, as sheep not having a shepherd" must, perforce, draw tears to their eyes at times, as often it dimmed His eyes.

But this Tear Path leads to the Palace of Joy. Of the Master it is written that "for the joy that was set before Him He endured the cross." Following closely after Him, even along the Pathway of Tears, the company of His disciples shall be "entering into the joy of their Lord." For "they that sow in tears"—such tears—"shall reap in joy."

Bible Presentation at West Point

SERVICE of unusual interest was held in the beautiful Cadet Chapel at West Point on Sunday morning, June 9th, when an eloquent Graduation Sermon was preached by Chaplain H. Percy Silver and Bibles were presented by the American Tract Society to the 136 members of the graduating class of the United States Military Academy, who are leaving their Alma Mater one year in advance, of the usual time, in order that they may at once enter upon the service of their country in this her time of greatest need.

The Cadet Choir, consisting of 105 voices under the skilful leadership of Mr. F. C. Mayer, organist and choirmaster, added greatly to the impressiveness of the service by their finely rendered musical selections which included the processional hymn, "America the Beautiful," the Te Deum by A. J. Holden, "Beautiful Isle of Somewhere," arranged by F. C. Mayer (Sr.) father of the organist, and two songs written especially for the West Point students, entitled "The Corps" and "Alma Mater."

The text of the graduation sermon was taken from James 1:17: "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above." In his sermon Chaplain Silver strongly emphasized the fact that we are called upon to consecrate every good and perfect gift that we receive from above to the service of God. He showed that the greatest service we can render is to consecrate ourselves to the work which God has appointed us to do, and he closed his address with a parting message to the members of the graduating class that was most sympathetic and inspiring.

The presentation of the Bibles was made to the graduates on behalf of the American Tract Society, by Rev. Henry Lewis, Ph.D., editor of the AMERICAN MESSENGER.

Among the graduates was a Chinese, Mr. Ken Wang, who has been receiving instruction under the provisions of a joint resolution of Congress. Mr. Wang is a Princeton man, a devout Christian and communicant of the church and a scholar of high rank, standing near the top of the large class of which he has been a member. Another graduate was Señor Cintron y Ramos, a native of Porto Rico.

Among those present at the service were Col. Samuel E. Tillman, who is Superintendent of the Academy and Commandant of the U. S. Army Post at West Point, Lieutenant Guy V. Henry, Commandant of Cadets, and several other officers and graduates of former years.

Gaining the Heights

BY THOMAS CURTIS CLARK.

*We cannot in a single day
Ascend to that fair height
Where truth is as the noontide sun
To wisdom's truer sight;
But we must struggle, year by year,
Through sacrifice and pain,
By stony steeps and winding paths,
If we the goal would gain.*

*The shining table-lands of truth
Are but for those who climb,
Who give their all ungrudgingly
To reach the heights sublime;
No man who heeds the call of self
Or serves the god of gold,
Can mount those stern but radiant hills
Whose charms are still untold.*

*The splendors of that realm of light
Are kept for those whose eyes
Look ever, through the earthland mists,
Beyond, to cloudless skies.
Year after year they toil and strive
Upon the path He trod
Who first, among the sons of men,
Attained the mount of God.*

THE CHAPEL OF THE UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY AT WEST POINT

The Untold Riches of the Word

BY G. W. TUTTLE.

The Scriptures are the only inexhaustible riches. The deeper the shaft, the richer the gold, true, those who expect nothing may find nothing; but the hungry, longing soul—the soul that says, "My expectation is from Him," will find food for his soul, sufficiency for his needs, and anchorage for his faith. He will find comfort for the present, and assurance for the future.

The seeking soul is never turned away empty from the Word of our God. Here is the witness and proof that God is in the Bible. Does He not walk in it and talk in it as surely as He walked in the Garden when He talked with Adam and Eve. Do we not hear His voice as we turn the sacred pages? Does He not rebuke us for our transgressions, comfort us with His mercy, quicken us for service, and warm us with His love? Here God beckons to our souls, and says: "Come! here is joy instead of sorrow, happiness instead of idle pleasure, usefulness instead of uselessness, hope in place of despair."

When the Psalmist said, "Thy Word have I hid in mine heart, that I might not sin against Thee," it was evident that he had learned two great lessons; one that prevention is better than cure, the other that the word of God becomes effectual only as we hide its precepts in our hearts. Rich are all those who not only read, but who lay up in the great storehouse of the heart the wonderful riches of the Word. The need comes suddenly, unexpectedly! Memory responds! Ah! here are the very words that are needed—of comfort, strength, assurance and blessing.

Pity those who say the Bible is dull and uninteresting. Let us ask such people: "Did you ever get acquainted? How well do you know your Bible? Has the Bible had a fair chance with your life?"

We need open eyes and open hearts when we read the Word of God. Wonderful truths, illumine its pages; wonderful biographies are there of men with like passions as ourselves; wonderful, fruitful lives of men who were as common as ourselves until God came into their lives and made them uncommon. And there is one lesson written large in the Word, the life that is hid with God is never common.

There is no other book like the Bible; there are no other words like the words of Scripture. Here is strength for every emergency, supply for every need, comfort for every sorrow; here is the most appealing poetry, the richest imagery, the most lofty sentiments of adoration and praise, that have ever been given to the world. It is as though Heaven breathed upon and pulsed through the language of men as the Word was written.

We may leave the Word that pulses with heavenly life neglected, untouched and dust-covered if we will. There is no compulsion with God. Over many a life might have been written this inscription: "He fed his body, but he starved his soul." God has no gold for men who insist upon dross.

Come, and look into God's Word. Will not even the angels hasten to open the windows that the vision may be clear, unfettered? Will not the Father Himself smile upon us, and reveal Himself to us in its pages? Will not life be brighter, and broader, and more useful? Shall we not say with the Psalmist: "Oh how love I thy law! it is my meditation all the day."

Building a World Brotherhood

BY CLARENCE E. FLYNN

Among the most valuable results of a thing are often those which are classed as bi-products. This is true of a certain inevitable social effect of Christianity. That effect is brotherhood.

The natural tendency of the Christian religion is to make men understand the fact that from the beginning they were created brothers. As far it fails to accomplish this task, it will have failed of its social purpose. As far it succeeds, it will have wrought the foundations of the better day.

Such is the tendency of the Christian faith, because Jesus recognized no artificial and arbitrary barriers. The lines across which nations and social classes scorned to step he threw out of his consideration, and crossed them regardlessly. In his estimation of things a man was a man. He could be no more and there was no disposition to ever rate him as less.

The world has arrived at this viewpoint slowly, but as surely as it does arrive at this viewpoint its strifes will cease. Wars and troubles come from clannish exclusiveness and class hatred and distrust.

When those who belong to such classes as capital and labor forget their social differences and emphasize their fraternal relations they will forget that they were ever pitted against one another. The only way the problem can ever be solved is by the elimination of the caste lines which separate the contending elements. The employer must remember that the workman is a capitalist in time and muscle, and the employe must remember that his employer is also a workingman.

PRINTED PREACHERS

For the Japanese

The Japan Book and Tract Society, whose headquarters are in Tokyo, is making constant use of printed preachers in the form of books, tracts and leaflets which it circulates in large numbers among the people of Japan both by sale and by grant.

The interesting picture that appears on this page shows us one of the missionary colporters of the Society distributing tracts in Yushima Park, which is one of the recreation centers of the city of Tokyo.

The Christian literature published by the Japan Book and Tract Society is of invaluable service to the missionaries and a few extracts from letters which they have written will show what an effective auxiliary they find in the printed page. Rev. E. H. Jones, of Mito, writes:

"A remarkable instance of the Spirit's work in saving a man occurred in my tract distribution last year. I was sitting in a train, looking out of the window when the whistle sounded and as the train was about to move, I saw a man running along the platform very much out of breath and looking earnestly for an open door. Though I well knew that it was contrary to the railway regulations I put out my hand and unfastened the door of the carriage in which I was. Thereupon the man seeing his opportunity rushed inside and sat down. When the guard came along and saw that the man was safely seated inside and moreover that a foreigner had helped him, he let him go. As soon as the man could get back his breath, he was very profuse in his thanks. I had already given tracts to the others in the car, but I saw that the Holy Spirit had brought this man into my way for special work, so I gave him some reading matter. On asking him if he had heard anything of the Gospel, I was glad to find that he lived at one of the places in the country where we have work. After giving him much instruction, therefore, I gave him the address of our worker and urged him to come to our meetings. He promised to do so, and the Lord so used the means which He Himself provided that the man was helped into the new life, and has recently been added to Christ's visible church. This incident will, I am sure, be encouraging to those who sow beside all waters."

Mrs. J. M. McCauley, of Tokyo, writes:

"I want to give you just a little glimpse of the many places in which your splendid tracts are helping to spread the glorious Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. Yesterday I had a school closing at which over a hundred parents were present, and each one of them received a tract. The preacher who gave the address said, 'I too want one; I get help to preach from every tract I read.' Only two days before, I had given out over eighty at another school closing, and a day or two before that, fifty-six at a Mothers' Meeting, and 120 at a Christian Endeavor Meeting."

"At New Year the workers in a Tobacco Factory near my home were given 3,000 tracts, this being the only possible way as yet of reaching them. The City Poor-House received 1,200 copies. This meant only a single tract to each inmate, but a great variety were given and they agreed to exchange so that each one might get to read all. I did up five parcels of splendid tracts by Mr. William George Smith to be given together with calendars to the highest officials, and received a letter of thanks from the head of the Institution. Two Leper Homes received 800 copies. I have also distributed many hundred copies either while waiting at stations or as I travelled on cars."

DISTRIBUTING CHRISTIAN TRACTS IN YUSHIMA PARK, TOKYO, JAPAN

Miss E. G. Tweedie of Kofu, writes:

"I very gladly add my testimony to the large number of those who greatly appreciate the books and tracts received from your society each year. I came here only a few months ago, but already have had definite results in the work through the distribution of your literature. At Christmas time I gave a copy of The Traveller's Guide to each of the three or four men in charge of a factory where we have regular meetings for the girls. Through the reading of this book, one of the men was converted and since then has been a regular attendant at the church services. Two months ago I loaned a copy of this book with several others to the women of Ichikawa where we have a meeting once a month. Since that time many requests have come to buy the book, and we have already sold about twenty copies to the women who wanted copies either for themselves or for their friends."

A paper-box maker in Tokyo writes:

"I bought a copy of The Traveller's Guide for myself, and six copies afterwards for giving to my friends. I do not know how others felt after reading it, but I do not see how it could interest anyone more than it did me, indeed to me it is the complete way of salvation. I knew before that whosoever believes—just accepts the fact—will be saved, but till today I never had such a clear experience and understanding of it."

Out in Oregon

Samuel Muller has been visiting lumber-camps, saw-mills and homes, and writes:

"From Portland, Ore., I traveled to Springdale, where I visited a soul who was seeking God and pointed her to the Lamb of God. Further on I stopped at a saw-mill in the foothills. I spoke with some men, left some books and tracts and went on to Bridal Veil. On this road I encountered a very hot timber fire, which made me run for my life. The God of Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego protected me. At the camps in different places in Columbia county I left tracts in the English, Greek and Italian languages, also some books."

"Away back in the woods I met a man who had wandered away from God. He regarded Jesus Christ as a Socialist. I told him my experience in finding Christ, and pointed out the serious condition of those who are on the way to spiritual destruction."

"At another home I found the father absent, but the children bought five books and the mother gave me a nice dinner. I then spoke to her concerning the one thing that is needful but she became very angry and declared that death ends all. 'And then comes the judgment,' I answered."

"At Houlton I distributed some Arabian tracts."

"On the way from Washougal to Cape Horn I met a gang of Greek railroad workers. The foreman permitted me to distribute tracts in the Greek language among them."

"Back of this road, up in the mountains, I called on a home where the father is a heavy drinker. I fell on my knees under the trees and asked the Saviour to help me lead this man into the way of salvation."

HIS VINEYARD AND OURS

In Hainan, China

The striking picture on this page was reproduced from a photograph sent to the American Tract Society by one of the missionaries in the Island of Hainan, off the coast of China. It gives a most interesting glimpse of the primitive conditions that prevail in Hainan, as in other parts of China. Strong forces are at work, however, in this great Empire, and some day, it may be in the near future, China will undoubtedly leap to the front and assume the ways of our twentieth century civilization.

While forces are in operation that will in the end transform the outward aspect of life in China, Christian influences are also at work which it is hoped will eventually transform the spiritual life of the people of that great empire.

Christian literature in the native dialect is one of the unseen forces that are at work for the uplift of China, and for many years it has been the privilege of the American Tract Society to aid in the production of that literature by means of its foreign cash appropriations, many of which have gone to various mission stations in China, including the American Presbyterian Mission in Hainan.

A recent letter from Rev. Frank P. Gilman voices the gratitude of the Hainan Mission for the appropriation that was sent about a year ago. Mr. Gilman writes:

"As Secretary of the American Presbyterian Mission in Hainan, China, I write again to thank you for the aid that you have given to this mission, through the grant of one hundred dollars gold from your society towards the publishing of tracts by our Mission.

"At our last annual meeting it was decided to use a part of this sum in payment of the printing of a tract in the Colloquial Character, entitled 'Tsin-dau-so-kai,' meaning 'An Introduction to True Teaching,' a tract that has been very useful in teaching inquirers.

"The following resolution was also passed at our annual meeting:

"Resolved, That we ask the American Tract Society for a further grant of $50.00 gold to defray the cost of printing a new edition of the Hainan Hymn Book."

"We hope that your society can grant this request, and pray that it may be richly blessed in all its work."

Among the Kurds

The Kurds, we are told, are forced converts from Christianity to Islam and inherit much from their ancestors which attracts them rather to Christians than to Moslems. They have, for example, a rite which is unquestionably a reminiscence of the Lord's Supper. In the past they have offered to declare themselves Christians if the missionaries could secure England's protection for them.

Mr. Riggs thinks a mass movement of the Kurds to Christianity is not at all unlikely when Turkish domination is broken down; and that in any case they will apply to mission leaders for Christian schools and mission centers. In fact he finds a similar softening towards Christianity among the Turks also. The negative cause of this has been the failure of the Holy War by which most of the Moslem world has repudiated the Sultan as Caliph, the defection of Medina and Mecca, the Moslem holy places, the fall of Jerusalem (as sacred to Moslem as to Christian). In their humiliation they have turned to the missionary for sympathy, who writes:

"I never felt so strong a bond of personal friendship with my Turkish neighbors as I did the day I left. Many of them realize that the extermination of the Armenians was a crime for which they must answer at the bar of God. Sense of guilt is a new thing in the Moslem soul and one to be reckoned with in future missionary work."

An Enduring Monument

The late Dr. Marks of Rangoon, Burmah, says the Record of Christian Work, was of Jewish parentage, having been born in a Jewish home in East London. His monument is St. John's College, Rangoon, one of the foremost educational institutions in Burmah, which owed its foundation and development to him.

In his long teaching career not less than 15,000 pupils passed through his hands, boys of almost every nationality of the East.

In the early days the King of Upper Burmah, having heard of the energetic and capable Christian schoolmaster, sent word to him to come to Mandalay to found a school there also with a capacity of one thousand boys. The request was complied with on condition that the school should be Christian and that permission should be given to build a Christian church and lay out a Christian cemetery.

Dr. Marks explained to the king that friends in England would assist in the construction of the church but was repulsed with the proud remark: "I am a King. I want no assistance in my works of merit."

PLOUGHING A GARDEN IN HAINAN, CHINA

An Encouraging Item From Mexico

Miss Kyser, of the Girls' School of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, at Pachuca, Mexico, tells of the exceptional interest in her school work. The second term began with more than four hundred and fifty scholars. Most of the rooms were over-crowded. She says: "One teacher has two grades. There are desks in her room for forty, and there are now sixty-five in the room. A lady came the other day with a child for that room, and I was ashamed to ask the teacher to crowd in another. I told the mother there was no room for the child, and she said she would send a chair; and then I had to tell her there was no room for the chair."

A True Soldier of Christ

Rev. J. E. Davis, of Leon, Mexico, tells of a true soldier of Jesus Christ in these words:

"Pedro Abarca, is his name. He is a poor Mexican shoemaker, yet he loves his Lord and sets an apostolic example before his brethren.

"I first met him about ten years ago. He moved to Leon, Mexico, where I was located, and began coming to our little mission church. If I mistake not, he had heard the gospel preached a few times before. He became a regular attendant, and despite the fact that he could barely read, he applied himself constantly to the reading and study of the Bible. While at his work he always had his Bible on a bench nearby, and would read and ponder passage after passage.

"He began to tell his fellow-laborers about Jesus and exhorted them to follow Him. He was persecuted but continued faithful in the service of his Lord. I baptized him, and when others became lukewarm, Pedro was faithful at the services and persistent in urging others to become Christians.

"The men with whom he worked, fanatical and intolerant, often made life of him for being a 'heretic,' but he knew how to 'endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ.' One day these fanatics were speaking spitefully of him and his religion, when the 'boss' came in. He reproved them for their unkind words, and invited Pedro to stand up and tell them all what he believed and why. This simple servant of the Lord was equal to the occasion, and breathing out a prayer to God for help, he took his Bible in his hand and 'preached unto them Jesus.' When he had finished the boss asked any present atmosphere which has poisoned her very life-blood! It is not surprising therefore that the present serious crisis should have developed. The chief cause that led up to it was doubtless Colonial Wars, which robbed Spain of her enthusiasm, if not of heart. Reactionary despotism not only tyrannized her will and conscience, but endeavored by all available means to deprive the nation of civil and religious liberty.

Today, the problem of lack of food, coal and other necessities, has presented itself, causing riots in various cities, and troops have been called out to suppress them. With prudence and enterprise Spain could not only supply her own needs, but also those of other countries. Who could have foreseen that a land once so rich, should, now be reduced to abject poverty! Who is to blame?

Señor Canalejas, that great patriot, whilst attempting to redeem the country with his Liberal Reforms, was assassinated, and he who dares to follow in his steps exposes himself to imprisonment, or fines. Unhappy Spain! Long and patiently has she suffered, and endured, but at last hunger has almost driven her to despair. The Gospel is her only Hope. To disseminate it far and wide over the land is the great object, the raison d'être of the Spanish Tract Society, which in spite of great difficulties and of very limited resources is endeavoring to circulate Christian literature of an evangelical type in every possible way.

The Bible Instead of the Ancestral Tablet

It is surely an item of real information to know that special plans are being followed in China to develop the Family Altar in the homes of native Chinese Christians.

Rev. E. G. Tewksbury, Field Secretary for China, representing the World's Sunday School Association, has been made Chairman of the Committee on Sunday School and Bible Study of the China Continuation Committee. A special survey was made and it was discovered that not more than half of the Christian homes observed family worship, which however is far in excess of the proportion in the homeland.

All church members in China are now being urged to establish the habit of daily study of the Word, at which time all the members of the family are to be present. Where this is done and when a pledge to continue has been given, a Family Altar Certificate is provided. This pictures the father explaining the selected passage from the Bible, while the mother and children are seated about the room. To make the picture very realistic even the family dog is present. Instead of engaging daily in worship of the ancestors represented by the ancestral tablet the Bible is studied and the living God is worshipped.

The new church day in America has also been adopted in China. In place of calling it "Mother's Day" it is called "Home Sunday," while the added suggestion is given that the week preceding be observed as "Home Welfare Week."

Foreign Mission Evangelism

Evangelistic work seems not to have been retarded by the war. The mass movement in India continues with unabated vigor. The united campaign in Japan, which closed a few months ago, was the most successful campaign ever carried on by a native church in all the history of the Foreign Missionary Board. At present a great evangelistic campaign is being waged in China, practically all the mission forces being united in this effort to take advantage of the open door and open heart in China to the message of the Gospel. The West Africa Mission reports the largest additions to church membership for the past year of all its long and wondrous history.

who desired to refute his argument, but none were willing to undertake it. Then he gave them to understand that they should treat Pedro with all due respect while he worked there.

"Work became scarce in Leon, on account of the revolution, and Pedro went back to his native village in another part of the state, where he continued to work at his trade. I lost track of him for a while, but after a year or two I received a letter from him, saying that he had organized a little Sunday-school and each Thursday evening he gathered his friends together in his own house and did his best to instruct them in the teachings of God's Word. He had won about a dozen souls by his persistent and patient labor for the Master.

"This sounds like an echo of apostolic times when the followers of the Lord went everywhere preaching the Word, gathering together those who believed and meeting in private homes for worship and instruction. How sadly do we need more of this apostolic spirit of sacrifice today!"

Troublous Times in Spain

Critical in the extreme is the present state of Spain. The nation is suffering from many evils partly owing to the lack of knowledge denied to her by centuries of traditional slavery. Corruption and falsehood have formed the tainted

Notes upon the Topics Used
in Christian Endeavor
and Other Young People's Societies.

THE PRAYER MEETING

By
Rev. Henry Lewis
Ph.D.

JULY 7.

All for Christ—I. Our Abilities

Matthew 25:14-30.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M., July 1. Our hearts for Christ. Matt. 22:34-40.
T., July 2. Our intellect. Heb. 8:10-13.
W., July 3. Our time. Ps. 90:1-17.
T., July 4. Our skill. Exod. 31:1-11.
F., July 5. Our strength. 2 Cor. 11:17-33.
S., July 6. Our bodies. 2 Tim. 4:6-8.

Under the topic, "All for Christ," we begin a series of studies which will be continued on the first Sunday of each month until the end of the present year. We are to consider now the subject of "Our Abilities," the Scripture selected for this timely theme being the familiar parable of the Talents as recorded in Matthew 25:14-30.

The Master's Requirement

Our divine Master requires of every disciple that he employ all his abilities in His service.

We may classify our abilities under three headings: Bodily, mental and spiritual. Every ability that we possess, whether it be physical, intellectual, or spiritual is given to us in trust, to be used for the service of our Master, just as in the ancient days Roman masters often gave to their slaves part of their fortune with which to trade, and all that the slave made belonged to his master.

Abilities of Varying Kinds

There is an almost endless diversity of talents among men and women, and no two people possess the same ability to the same degree. But whatever our talents or abilities, Christ demands of us that they be all consecrated to Him.

Some have artistic ability, and this is a talent which can be very effectively used in the service of God. Throughout the centuries architects and painters have frequently devoted their talents to religious work, and it is to their efforts that we owe the splendid cathedrals and churches which with their interior decorations constitute such a rich legacy from the past.

Some have musical ability, and there is no way in which such ability may be so nobly used as in the service of Him, who is the Author of true harmony. Whether our musical gifts be vocal or instrumental we can employ them in varied ways to the honor and glory of God and to the blessing of those with whom we come into contact.

We may use our musical ability for Christ not only in the church, but in the home. Through some sweet strain of music we may bring comfort to a sorrowing soul or uplift some discouraged spirit, and thus we may do work for the Master that will surely find acceptance in His sight.

For the Progress of the Kingdom

The work of the Christian Church depends on the finest abilities that can be found. There is a call for organizing, executive and administrative talents, and any man or woman who has abilities in this direction should seek for opportunities to use them for the upbuilding of the Church and the advance of the Kingdom.

The Church of today is developing activities along every line of human endeavor. Through its social service it is ministering to the social needs of humanity, and it needs workers who can develop what may be called a social talent.

Opportunity for All

The fate of the man who failed to use aright the one talent that was committed to his care, teaches us that no matter how slight our ability may seem, we are in duty bound to use it to the utmost. Whether our talent be literary, industrial, executive, or otherwise, we must not hide it away in the earth, but we must bring it to the light and use it to the best of our power.

JULY 14.

Lessons from Favorite Parables

Mark 4:1-8, 26-32.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M., July 8. A lesson in fruit-bearing. Luke 13:6-9.
T., July 9. In persistence. Luke 11:1-10.
W., July 10. In sacrifice. Matt. 13:44-46.
T., July 11. In democracy. Matt. 22:1-14.
F., July 12. In pride and humility. Luke 18:9-14.
S., July 13. God's Fatherhood. Luke 15:11-32.

The parable was a favorite form of teaching with our Lord. Indeed so frequent was His use of this form of instruction that Matthew says: "Without a parable spake He nothing unto them."

A parable is a short religious allegory. It is founded on some real event in nature or in human life, and it always carries with it some spiritual truth, although that truth may not always be easily discerned.

Some one has listed fifty parables uttered by our Lord. It is more than likely, however, that these are only a portion of the parables that fell from His lips in the course of His ministry, for we know that the Gospels do not record all that He said or did.

The Object of a Parable

The purpose of the parables which Christ used was to teach some noble truth. Unlike a fable which aims simply to enforce some prudential maxim or some common-sense principle, the parable deals with the loftiest aspect of man's being, and sets forth his relation to an ideal and spiritual world.

As we study the different parables uttered by Jesus, we see how they aimed to set forth the essential principles of His Kingdom and to describe under the terms of the natural world the process of spiritual growth and development, which He desired to initiate in all His disciples.

The Interpretation of a Parable

Some of the parables which Jesus spoke were instantly understood. Others required an explanation which He Himself gave. There were still other parables, the meaning of which has never been fully comprehended or concerning the import of which Christian scholars have differed among themselves.

"Our great guide," says one thoughtful writer, in discussing the interpretation of the parables of Christ, "must be a spiritual tact and discernment cultivated by close communion with Christ Himself, an intelligent perception of Christian principles, a rich experience of the practical power of the divine life as it works in ourselves, and a knowledge of the world and its working there. We must constantly bear in mind that the parables of Christ teach directly neither history, nor doctrine, nor morals, nor prophecy. They express directly only certain great principles of the Saviour's divine Kingdom, of the Kingdom of heaven, or of God, when that Kingdom comes in contact with the human heart. History, doctrine, morals, prophecy, may be deduced from them, because the truth of God and the human heart are essentially the same in all ages. But it is with principles alone that the parables deal; with principles which imply doctrines, which result in morals, which appear in the history of the past and will reappear in the future. To set forth these principles in a sphere, which is wider than that of either individuals or churches, in the sphere of divine truth in contact with the heart of man, is the object of the New Testament parables."

Parables for Present Problems

It is a significant and undeniable fact that in the parables of Jesus we may find lessons of the utmost value for the present day. Though the imagery of some of the parables is Oriental, the truths which they convey are equally applicable East or West, North or South.

JULY 21.

Lessons from Favorite Psalms

Psalms 103:1-13.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M., July 15. The cross. Psalms. Ps. 22:1-18.
T., July 16. The crook. Ps. 23:1-6.
W., July 17. The crown. Ps. 24:1-10.
T., July 18. When in doubt. Ps. 73:1-28.
F., July 19. Rejoice. Ps. 98:1-9.
S., July 20. A psalm of providence. Ps. 105.

The Book of Psalms was the Jewish hymnal. But it has now become more than a Jewish hymnal. It is the Christian's choicest book of devotion, for the writers of the Psalms were so inspired by the Spirit of God that they have produced that which serves as the expression of the highest religious feelings of the whole race of mankind.

In the introduction to his admirable Commentary on the Psalms, Dr. A. F. Kirkpatrick well says:

"The Psalter is a collection of religious lyrics. Lyric poetry is defined as 'that which directly expresses the individual emotions of the poet'; and religious lyric poetry is the expression of those emotions and feelings as they are stirred by the thought of God and directed God-wards. This is the common characteristic of the Psalms in all their manifold variety. Some are directly addressed to God, as petition or thanksgiving or praise, some are the communings of the soul with God, expressing its faith, its hope, its love, its fears, its aspirations, its joys, its triumphs; some celebrate the marvelous works of God in nature and in history; some reflect upon the perplexing problems of life and their relation to the divine government of the world; but God is as it were the sun around which all revolves, and His light and heat illuminate and animate the whole."

The Use of the Psalms

When we turn to the New Testament we find it contains a large number of quotations from the Psalms, showing how widespread was the knowledge of these inspired religious lyrics among the Christians of the Apostolic Age.

Our Lord Jesus Christ frequently quoted from the Psalms. He sang the "Hallel" (Psalms 113-118) with His disciples at the Last Supper. A Psalm was the subject of His thought as He hung upon the Cross, and with the words of a Psalm He yielded up His earthly life.

The first Christian hymns—the Magnificat, Benedictus, and Nunc Dimittis—are composed after the model of Psalms and contain numerous echoes of them. Undoubtedly the hymns which Paul and Silas sang in the prison at Philippi were Psalms. The Apostle James commends the singing of Psalms as the most fitting expression of joy, while Paul enjoins it as the natural outlet for spiritual enthusiasm.

Luther calls the Psalms a Bible in miniature, and throughout all the ages of the Christian era this wonderful book has filled a very large place in Christian life and worship.

The 103rd Psalm, which has been selected for use in connection with our topic will doubtless be the favorite of many. It is a Psalm of singular beauty, and its tenderness, trustfulness, and hopefulness anticipate the spirit of the New Testament. Its distinctive note is that of gratitude, and as has been well said, "it furnishes the language of thanksgiving for the greater blessings of a more marvelous redemption than that of Israel from Babylon."

The Shepherd Psalm (Psalm 23) will unquestionably be the first choice of a very large number of Christians. In its picture of an earthly shepherd this Psalm so beautifully portrays the characteristics of Him, whom we love to call the Good Shepherd that it brings to our souls a wonderful message of comfort, faith and hope.

From many of the Psalms we may learn how to pray, for as Dean Church has said, "They are the first great teachers and patterns of prayers."

JULY 28.

Lessons from Bible Proverbs

Proverbs 10:1-16.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M., July 22. Wisdom in hiding. Prov. 2:3, 4.
T., July 23. Ancestral wisdom. Prov. 4:1-13.
W., July 24. On idleness. Prov. 6:6-11.
T., July 25. Ill-gotten gain. Prov. 10:2.
F., July 26. Malice aforethought. Prov. 11:9.
S., July 27. Business honesty. Prov. 11:1.

Some one has well said that a proverb is a parable in epitome. Though there are proverbs to be found in many different portions of the Bible, the principal collection of these sayings is found in the Book of Proverbs, from which the Scripture selection for our topic is taken.

The root meaning of the Hebrew word for proverb is likeness or resemblance. This accounts for the fact that in the Book of Proverbs we find not only short, pithy sayings that correspond in form to our own use of the word proverb, but also more extended comparisons, which are in form more like a parable, but which may easily be reduced to the ordinary proverbial form.

The Meaning of Wisdom

The Book of Proverbs deals in general with the subject of Wisdom, and it is therefore, desirable to ascertain what is the Hebrew conception of this subject.

Wisdom, according to our usual understanding of the matter means philosophy. But the Jewish conception, as presented to us in the Book of Proverbs and elsewhere, differs widely and fundamentally from the ideas and methods of Western Philosophy. As Dr. Perowne says:

"The Hebrew wise man does not propose to himself the abstract question, What is truth? and then pursue his independent search for an answer through all accessible regions of human thought and knowledge. His starting point is not a question, but a creed, or an axiom. Given that there is a Supreme Being, Creator, Sustainer, Ruler, Judge of all; then Wisdom is to understand, so far as it is permitted to man's finite intelligence, the manifold adaptation and harmony, the beauty and utility of His works and ways, and to turn our knowledge of them to practical account. Wisdom is, in all the complex relations of human life and conduct, to know and do His Will."

The Author of the Book of Proverbs

The authorship of the Book of Proverbs has been widely discussed. There seems, however, to be no sufficient reason for discarding the prevalent opinion that Solomon was in the main the author of this book.

It should be remembered that the circumstances of Solomon's times, at all events in the earlier and happier years of his reign were peculiarly favorable to the study and cultivation of Wisdom or Philosophy, for the relations which he established and maintained for himself and his kingdom with other nations of the world, conducted largely to that interchange of thought and intellectual rivalry, which give the highest impetus to the pursuit of Wisdom.

Practical Suggestions

Let us remember that the Book of Proverbs is a collection of sayings, which deal with the most important subject that can engage our attention, namely, human conduct.

The appeal of the Book of Proverbs is an appeal to each human soul to follow the highest moral principles and to direct our line of action in accordance with the dictates of that Wisdom which is from above.

"A wise son maketh a glad father," and if we would please our Heavenly Father, we must follow the principles of noble living, which are set forth in the pages of the Book of Proverbs.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS

The Fourth of July

BY KATHLEEN HAY.

" 'Tis the Fourth of July,"
Sang a fair little girl,
As she danced through the day so long;
And the birds in the trees
And the sweet summer breeze,
Seemed to echo her soft little song.

" 'Tis the Fourth of July,"
Cried a brave, true lad,
As he waved the flag high in the breeze;
"May we love the day well,
And our liberty tell,
'Til it reaches far over the seas."

" 'Tis the Fourth of July,"
Said an old, old man,
"Hurrah! for those patriots old;
May the country they made
And its glory ne'er fade,
Upheld by its founders so bold."

Their Celebration

BY MARION LOUISE TENNEY.

"W" E'LL have fire-crackers and torpedoes, and I'll ask father to get us stacks of fire-works. Then we'll ask all the neighbors over, and have a grand Fourth of July celebration," said Phyllis excitedly.

"But Phyllis," said Marjory soberly, "do you think we'll feel like hearing all that noise this year? It seems as if it would remind us too much of the real battles that are going on. And somehow I think I'd feel all choky, with Joe and Charlie in France."

"Oh, I never thought," said Phyllis. "Of course we wouldn't want to. Yet we must do something to remember the day. Let's ask mother, she always thinks of something nice."

Hurrying up the garden path, school-books in hand, they found Mrs. Price seated on the veranda, her knitting needles deftly plying back and forth.

"You're just the smartest mother in the world," said Phyllis. "What other mother has made seventy pairs of socks? But it isn't about socks that we have come to talk to you just now; it's on another very important matter."

Mrs. Price quietly laid the socks in her lap, and lifted deeply interested eyes to her daughter's flushed face.

"What is it all about, Phil dear," she said sympathetically.

"Marjory, you tell," said Phyllis coaxingly. "I always go off like a fire-cracker, and jumble my words together, then nobody knows at the end what I mean."

Marjory thus admonished, explained that the subject was the Fourth of July. And the question as to what they should do on that day.

"I hardly think that the government will permit explosives this year," said Mrs. Price. "But even if it should, the price would probably be very high. And I hardly think you would feel like setting them off. Would you?"

"Why mother," said Phyllis eagerly, "that's just what Marjory said. But what could you suggest?"

"When you were very little girls, and I wanted to have a real treat for you, I had only to suggest tableaux, and you were delighted. I used to search the attic for old-time treasures to deck you out in. And if I dressed you in a gown with a train, your joy knew no bounds. I wonder if you have outgrown your childish pleasures. If you haven't, why not arrange for a patriotic evening with tableaux and war songs. And perhaps we could manage some war cookies, and I'll donate raspberry shrub, that your Aunt Martha sent last summer from the South. You could have the party here, and invite all the neighbors. I'm sure your father would be willing, as he always has a good time when the young folks are around."

"Oh mother, that's a lovely plan. We'll get all the girls and boys in the neighborhood to help," said Phyllis.

Mrs. Price saw by the look on Marjory's face, that something was working in her mind. At last she gave expression to it.

"Mother, could we charge ten cents admission, and give the money to the Red Cross? Then we would really be doing 'our bit' on the Fourth. And we would all feel so much happier, than spending money for fire-crackers and the rest."

Mrs. Price smiled her approbation.

a week, the mornings were filled with busy doings.

The eventful day dawned bright and clear. Its advent was marked by the ringing of bells, but no cannonading ushered in the day.

Marjory and Phyllis were up with the dawn, so full of excitement were they, that sleep seemed to have taken wings.

They hurriedly dressed, tiptoed downstairs and out into the garden, where they emerged some hours later, with arms and baskets full of flowers. What matter if their dresses and feet were wet with the morning dew. It was all in a good cause. And clothing could be easily dried.

Such a busy household as the Prices presented that memorable July day. The

In and out, in and out, all day, youthful feet were busy running errands and making those necessary preparations so necessary to a successful undertaking.

It was a small village in which the Prices lived, a sort of a neighborhood colony. So, not wishing anyone's feelings to be hurt, some of Marjory's and Phyllis's boy friends had printed tickets for the celebration, which any and all could purchase for the exceptionally low price of ten cents.

It was a happy moment to the entertainers, when the first guests were seen coming across the lawn on that Fourth of July evening. Soon others followed, until at the hour designated on the tickets, the lower floor of the Price home was filled with guests, and even the veranda presented a crowded appearance.

The program opened with the singing of, "My Country 'Tis Of Thee," in which all joined with such enthusiasm and volume, that as John Bevans afterward expressed it, "I thought the rafters would come down."

Groups of tableaux then followed. The Indians in their war paint were first shown. Next they appeared with John Smith and Pocahontas. Just here an Indian song was sung by Clara Wells. Then the early settlers appeared in tableau, followed by a view of them on their way to meeting. Later, came a scene from the French and Indian war.

But the climax was reached when Betsy Ross was seen working upon the first American flag, while George Washington stood near in deep attention, watching the result of his orders.

Just the sight of "Old Glory" brought forth a round of applause. The audience sent forth cheer after cheer, which the piano echoed in the soul-stirring refrain, "The Star-Spangled Banner." But the piano had to share its honors, for with one accord, the audience sprang to their feet, and sang with deep fervor. At the conclusion, George lifted the flag from Betsy's lap, and waved it vigorously—a proceeding not in keeping with tableaux, but none the less appropriate.

At the conclusion of the entertainment, the sum of twenty-five dollars was found to be the result of the young folks' labors.

How well repaid they felt, was heard from the lips of Marjory and Phyllis afterward, as they talked the evening over with their mother.

"It was the loveliest Fourth of July we ever spent," said Phyllis. And Marjory, echoing her sister's sentiment, added, "Think of turning twenty-five dollars over to the Red Cross, for just an evening of fun."

Later, the tableaux were photographed by one of the neighbors. And in the next edition of the village paper, George Washington and Betsy Ross, with "Old Glory" between them, held a conspicuous place on the front page.

THE MAKING OF "OLD GLORY."

The warm June days spent in the school-room, flew like magic to Marjory and Phyllis, for their minds were very busy conjuring up scenes from American history, that would take an audience by storm on the Fourth of July.

And not only Marjory and Phyllis, but many other girls and boys, members of Miss Ray's history class, took an unusual interest in American history that particular month, which surprised and astonished their teacher, who up to that time, had found many wandering glances, and imperfect lessons. She was later to learn the cause of this sudden, and absorbing interest.

Rehearsals proceeded without interruption, two or three afternoons each week, after school, until its close. Then for excitement and bustle reached even to the kitchen, where Miranda, with sleeves rolled to her elbow, was dropping fascinating little balls of oatmeal mixture, with fat raisins, into big pans, and singing the while in a shrill crescendo voice, "Over There, Over There."

By noon the veranda and steps were swarming with girls and boys, all excitedly assisting in some part of the preparations.

Among the attic treasures, Mrs. Price had found a number of Japanese lanterns. These the boys strung in gay festoons on the porch, and about the lawn, while the girls made the long parlor a veritable outdoor scene, with branches, shrubs, and flowers. As Charlie Evans expressed it, "You girls have made just the right setting for the tableaux."

'Tis Worth While.

Give the world your gladness.

'Tis worth while;

Sun the souls around you
With your smile.

Pass life's blessing onward,
Do not keep

The grain you garner, if
You would reap.

Strive to stamp Love's impress

As you may,

On the world's sad visage
Day by day.

Wreath life's tears and shadows
With a smile.

Live for God, and count it
All worth while.

He who betters living

Serves life's end,

He who smooths the footpath
Is a friend;

He whose heart is gentle
In its touch,

Where God's weary suffer,
Serveth much.

—I. MENCH CHAMBERS.

Our Fireside

The Country's Call

By Hope Daring

WHAT'S that, Mrs. Green? Your Paul didn't have to register? Well, I'd like to know why not! He's sure as old as my Tom, and Tom was twenty-one in January.

Amelia Green's thin, delicate face flushed. Her voice was almost apologetic as she said, "You are mistaken, Mrs. Howard, Paul's birthday is the Fourth of July; he will be twenty-one tomorrow."

"Now I call that good luck," Minnie Barr looked up from her sewing. "Yes, I know it is a righteous war, and that some one has to go, but I am glad every time I hear that one of our boys has escaped. Yes, I am," and the girl tossed her flaxen head defiantly.

"Some folks are always lucky. Just now the lucky ones seem to live on farms, where they can make big money," and Tom Howard's mother flashed an angry look around the circle of faces, as if challenging any one to deny the truth of her statement.

No one spoke. It was in an empty store building that the women of Amboy, a little country town, had gathered, to do Red Cross work. Because of her trembling hands Amelia Green dropped in her lap the sock she was helping Mrs. Lockwood to start.

"Never mind, Mrs. Green," the younger woman whispered. "You know Tom Howard comes in the first draft. I am glad your boy is safe."

"You see, he's our only child," Mrs. Green said, looking absently out of the window. "Of course he's no dearer to me than other mothers' sons are to them, but—well, Mrs. Lockwood, we expect him to carry on the farm, when he is older. Some say farming is as patriotic as fighting. I can't think of Paul as a soldier."

"Let us hope the cruel war will be over before he has to go," her companion said with a smile. "Now I believe I have solved the mystery of purling. Just let me try my hand at it."

As she relinquished the sock Mrs. Green again glanced out of the window. Her face brightened, and she half rose to her feet, "Evan's coming; I'll have to go. Oh, he's stopped to talk to Doctor Jackson," and she sighed impatiently, as if eager to be on the homeward way.

Evan Green had finished his errands in the town. He also was eager to start for home. For him the war talk had lost its savor; all topics led to the one concerning "the boys who must go." The farmer was about to pass his old friend with a nod, but Doctor Jackson stopped, to say:

"Earle Parks enlisted yesterday. I hear a lot of the Agricultural fellows have gone."

"That's true. You see the upper-class men have had two years' military drill, and that puts them in line for commissions. Paul is only a freshman, and he'll not be twenty-one until tomorrow. These other fellows would all have had to register."

"See here, Evan Green! I reckon you don't need to tell me how old Paul is; I ushered him into the world myself," and Doctor Jackson nodded emphatically. "He's a good boy, and I hope you'll not make a mollycoddle of him."

"What do you mean by that? Paul's only a boy. He's all right, if it does chance that he's not so bloodthirsty as some. And I'll need him on the farm. Later he may go, if it is necessary."

The weather-beaten face of the old physician grew grave. "God grant the war may be soon over! I know war is a word to strike terror to any father's heart, but if I had a son I would—"

He stopped. Evan Green turned upon him angrily, the healthy color fading from his face.

"But you haven't. It's easy for folks who never had children to send their neighbors' sons to death. Paul is ready to do his duty, of course he is, but—"

Evan Green's voice trembled and broke. For a moment the two men, who had been friends since their early manhood, glared at each other. Then, as the farmer was turning away, Doctor Jackson said:

"Never mind, Evan. Paul's all right; I'm sure he is. Good weather for haying."

"Yes, and for the Fourth, too. Well, I reckon Amelia will be ready to start for home," and he hurried down the street.

In the meantime Paul Green was at home, cultivating corn. The growth was too big for the riding cultivator, but, because that field was Paul's special pride, he was going through it with a small cultivator and a steady old horse.

Paul was strong and sturdy. That sunny afternoon his face was grave, and his dark brown eyes gleamed like smoldering coals. Instead of whistling, as was his custom, he tramped along silently between the rows of tall corn through which the breeze sang a low melody. Suddenly he frowned.

"Tomorrow is the celebration over in the grove. There's to be a speaker out from town, and there will be still more talk about a man's duty to his country. Duty is a queer word. I—well, as long as things are as they are, I wish we lived on a desert island."

By that time he had reached the end of the row, coming up to the fence that shut in the field. As he was turning his horse, a young man came down the road. The newcomer limped painfully, supporting himself on a single crutch.

"Hallo, Joe!" Paul called. "Isn't this a day for corn to grow?"

Joe Calkins advanced to lean on the fence close to where Paul stood. "But this field does sure grow! Suppose it's the new-fangled way of farming that you've learned at the agricultural college. I was on my way up to your house to tell you Martin wants you to come over to the grove for an hour in the morning, to help fix the seats."

"All right. Looks as if it would be a fair Fourth."

"It'll be such a celebration as no man in this neighborhood ever saw. I tell you, Paul, if a fellow has a drop of patriotic blood in his veins, it will boil tomorrow. And I've this," looking down at his crutch.

Paul's face softened. "I know, Joe, but all the work of the war is not to be done on the battle field. You see—"

"Now don't talk rot! Any man who does not long to respond to the call of his country is a coward. I'll— But, Paul, I didn't just mean that."

Both faces colored hotly. Paul's lips opened, but no sound escaped them. Again he tried to speak, but his voice broke on the first word.

"We may do our work elsewhere, as you say," Joe ventured. "What about Tim Odell at the college? Did he enlist?"

"The day after war was declared. It was a wonderful sight to see the boys hurry off to the recruiting station. If only—"

He stopped. Joe nodded. "Of course your father needs you. And farming is of prime importance these days. Why, if you were twenty-one, I imagine the government would say to you, 'Paul Green, you stay at home and raise bumper crops of corn and wheat.'"

Paul tried to laugh, but it was not easy. Five minutes later Joe was on his way home, swinging himself along on his crutch. Paul's face darkened as he looked after him.

"Joe tried to make it easy, but the others will not tomorrow. Sometimes I wish I had never been born. God help me!" and he looked appealingly up at the serene blue sky.

A constrained silence fell upon the Green family as they sat at supper that night. After a little Mrs. Green repeated some neighborhood news that she had heard in town, but neither her husband nor her son made any response. At last, as he pushed back from the table, Evan Green said:

"I suppose, Amelia, we are all going to the celebration tomorrow?"

"Why, of course! We've been going for years; Paul doesn't remember a Fourth of July anywhere else. I've the chickens cooked, ready to fry, and I'll get up early and make two big pans of gingerbread. I do hope every one won't talk about the war."

"Well, they will. You want to go, Paul?"

His son started. "Why, I've not thought of staying away. We always go, and it's my birthday."

"Yes, I reckon you know your mother and I are going to give you a deed of the north forty-acre lot tomorrow. You've been a good son, Paul, and we—"

"Don't, father!" Paul was on his feet, his face working convulsively. "I can't— Don't let us talk about it! You two— Why, I care for you more than for anything on earth."

He walked out of the house. His mother laid her head down on the table and cried.

Paul went to his room as soon as the evening chores were done. Mrs. Green also retired to her own room, where she lived over again the years that were gone. How happy she and Evan had been, planning for Paul's future! Was their happiness at an end? Why could not they talk the horrible fear over, as they had always talked over other things. As for the farmer he went out of doors and tramped over the fields until long after the time when he usually retired.

They were all up early the next morning. Because it was her son's birthday, Mrs. Green prepared the dishes she knew he liked: ham and eggs, cream biscuits, and warm gingerbread. At Paul's plate she placed several packages.

When the young man entered the room he went at once to his mother's side, tenderly kissing her. Mr. Green cried in what he tried hard to make a jovial voice:

"Just see, son, what your mother has provided for your breakfast. A few little things done up in paper."

There was a handsome ring, a book which Paul had expressed a desire to read, and a kodak. After the gifts had been praised, and thanks for them had been given, they sat down at the table. Mr. Green asked the usual blessing, and Mrs. Green poured the coffee.

As they ate they talked. It proved easier to keep the conversation on present-day events than it had the night before. Not until he had finished did Paul say:

"I have something to tell you. Father, mother, never were parents more fondly loved by a son than are you by me. I am a man today. I must—I must, for God has laid it upon me, fight for my country."

For a few seconds no sound broke the silence save the measured ticking of the old clock on the mantle. Then, from the hedge beneath the windows, there rang out the silvery call of a bluebird. Evan Green leaned across the table, to touch his son's arm with trembling fingers.

"What do you mean, Paul? Do you mean that you are going to enlist?"

"I must, father; the call of my country sounds in my ears day and night. I want to go. You'll not refuse your consent? Mother! mother! What can I say to you?"

"Tell me again that you are going to fight for your country, because God has called you to do it. O my precious boy, my only child! It will break my heart to see you march away, it may be to a terrible death, but I want you to do it, because it is your duty."

Even as she ceased speaking, Paul's father cried, "Thank God for your courage, my boy! I must beg your pardon. You see, Paul, your mother and I, while we did not speak of it, we feared you were afraid."

The boyish face flushed. "You thought that of me too? I knew the others did. The reason I waited, the reason I did not talk of it was because I thought you two would not be willing for me to go."

Mrs. Green rose to her feet. For a moment the trio stood with clasped hands. The farmer said slowly:

"Independence day and our lad's birthday. God grant that before the day comes again the war be over!"

The face of Paul Green's mother was strangely glorified as she murmured, "May God grant that! But we know that his Son, who sacrificed his life for the sins of the world, will surely strengthen us for whatever it is ours to endure."

DON'T decide on the new hymn-book for your Church or Sunday School until you have seen

HALLOWED HYMNS
NEW AND OLD

Edited by IRA ALLAN SANKEY
Son of the famous Singing-Evangelist
Ira D. Sankey
OVER 550,000
COPIES ALREADY SOLD

Responsive Scripture Readings
No Trashy Words No Jingly Music

Price $25.00 per 100 not prepaid
35 cents per copy by mail

Examine a copy and prove its value in your work. (Returnable if desired.)

The Biglow & Main Co., New York
Chicago

This FREE Shoe Book

is crowded with photographs and descriptions of EZ-WEAR Shoes for Men, Women and Children. EZ-WEAR Shoes are sent post-paid, guaranteed to combine comfort, style and quality, to fit perfectly or money back. Amazingly low prices. Send for copy to-day

The F.N. Simon Shoe 1589 BROADWAY
BROOKLYN, N.Y.

Don't Let a Penny Cost Spoil a Dollar Product

HAS it ever occurred to you how vitally this maxim applies to the purchase of ribbons and carbon paper?

The good appearance of your letters and the legibility of the copies absolutely require that your ribbons and carbon paper shall be the very best.

This is the great practical reason why every typewriter user should use our

Paragon Ribbons and
Red Seal Carbon Paper

These products are made in our own factory, by our own specially trained workmen, according to our own methods and formulas. These methods and formulas are the result of our unrivaled experience in ribbon and carbon paper making and these goods are the best that money can buy.

REMINGTON TYPEWRITER COMPANY, Incorporated

374 Broadway New York City

The Story of a Cradle Roll

BY GRACE BOTELER SANDERS.

THREE babies were born in the same town upon the same day, one in the big house on the avenue, one in the middle-sized house on a common street, and one in the hovel on the edge of a great forest.

Master Bob opened his eyes in a palace. There was a white-capped nurse in attendance. A little bed was ready, whose mattress was of softest down and whose quilts were of silk and blankets of finest wool. He and his mother had everything which money could buy, but money, alone, will not buy happiness.

All day the mother lay alone in the big bed in that upper room. She heard the tread of feet below the stair and occasionally the nurse's low sweet voice, but always, and ever she was listening to the rattling of the car a block away. She listened for the opening of a lower door, but the day passed and darkness came without a visitor, and finally a man hurried in and past her bed to the crib.

She heard him talking in low tones to the nurse. He was leaving without even speaking to her. When she called "David," he came and bent over the bed, but his breath reeked so of liquor that she turned her head away murmuring: "Oh David, you've been drinking again."

He straightened himself and blustered, "I've a right to celebrate the birth of my son and heir, and I'm going to do it again and I'll stay all night and I'll drink as much as I please."

He banged the door and was gone and then the poor little orphan society girl who had flippantly declared that she did not need the church so long as she had money, buried her face in the pillow and wept. She was all alone in the world—father gone, mother gone, brother, and sister. She thought of the sorrow and suffering through which she had passed. She remembered the sentence about the sins of the fathers being visited on the children, and she wondered if she had brought the beautiful boy into the world to be what his father was. And when she thought she could not stand it a minute longer, a soft hand touched her forehead and a cheery voice called, "How are you darling?"

A short little woman with a pug nose and shining hair and blue eyes stood before her in a tailored gown of blue. The little mother recognized her as Mrs. Thomas Booth, one of the most important women in the town. "I heard you had a lovely little boy, and I thought I'd run in and see you."

The little woman was so glad. And somehow it was not long before she had told Mrs. Booth all her joys and fears. Mrs. Booth nodded understandingly. "He's a lovely boy. I don't wonder that you wish to raise him right," she said. "May I come again, and shall I put his name on the Cradle Roll?"

"I'll be glad for you to come. My mother is dead and you may put his name on the Cradle Roll if you like. We're not church folks, but it won't do any harm."

Little Mrs. Booth smiled happily to herself when she went away. Her friends had laughed at the idea of going to these ungodly, wine-drinking people. Other church workers had applied in vain for admittance. She had gained entrance because of a little child. She bade the mother goodbye, and went to visit the middle-sized house, and the hovel on the edge of the forest.

A month later, she and the minister called at the house on the avenue. The young father felt so important that he promised to attend the men's club meeting at which a prominent Senator was to speak. He went and was amazed that such a pleasant evening could be spent in innocent amusement, and when he woke next morning without the headache which usually followed nights of dissipation, he avoided the sideboard which he patronized quite freely and patting his wife's cheek, he said, "I'll have to cut a little of that out if I'm going with church people."

He went to the church on Sunday morning, and was delighted with the men he met there. And thus passed the year.

When Cradle Roll Day drew near Mrs. Booth sent out her invitations, and about a week afterward she followed her visit with a call. She had just rung the bell at the big house on the avenue when the little mother came running to meet her.

"Oh, you blessed angel," she cried, "we're just the happiest folks and it's all because of you. When you came Fred was drinking, and I was almost wild, but he's been improving right along, and when the Cradle Roll invitation came, what do you think he said? He said, 'We'll go and we'll make the confession so as to be able to raise him right.' Oh, Mrs. Booth, I am so happy."

Mrs. Booth was happy, too. She followed the little mother into the room that she might see Baby Bob's clothes. The mother was saying, "I want him to be the prettiest baby there," but the Cradle Roll Superintendent was thinking, "What if I had not called."

She left after a while and walked down to the middle-sized house on a common street. A dumpy little brown-eyed woman saw her coming, and waved her flag of truce, a baby's white dress. "You blessed angel! I am the happiest woman on earth," she said when she was in Mrs. Booth's arms. "Bob has a better job, and he said he would join the church tomorrow. Oh, Mrs. Booth, I am so glad!"

Glad? Mrs. Booth could not speak, but after a while she took her basket and walked out of the city and out in the country road. Cows nipping at the white clover were lazily straggling homeward. She heard a robin twittering in an apple tree, and a child's sleepy cry. She reached the hovel and saw a woman in a brown calico gown. Her face was brown and spotted as an autumn leaf.

"Are you ready for Cradle Roll Day?" cried Mrs. Booth.

The woman did not turn. "I was just a-thinkin'," she began, in a queer-strained tone, "of how things was when you come. I'd been sick, and I got out of bed and crawled out into the kitchen. The cupboard was empty and I didn't know what to do, for we were hungry. The house was dirty, and the children's clothes were worn, and I was just a-wonderin' how I'd get enough to cover one more body, even if it was a little one. And I seed you a-comin' in your fine duds."

Mrs. Booth sat down outside the door and fixed her eyes upon the brilliant sunset.

"I knowed you had scads of money, and my heart was as hard as nails because you had so much and I had so little. I hated you. I never thought of you stoppin', but you did, and you asked to put Baby Bill's name on the Cradle Roll. It pleased me, but I made fun, and told you I'd rather have a bread roll than a Cradle Roll, and you opened that very basket you're carryin' and give me food enough for us all. When you come back and brought that certificate all framed up nice and shiny, I hung it on the wall and it looked so pretty that I got ashamed of my house, and after you was gone I went to work and scrubbed the floor as bad as I felt. And Bill come home, and he was so pleased that he fixed some chairs that I'd begged him to for more'n a year, to have mended. He got a job on a farm that week. He commenced going to church, and ever since he's bringin' his money home and actin' like a decent human bein'. He was tickled to death about that Cradle Roll invitation and he brought this," the woman held up a coarse white dress on which she had been working, "and he said we'd go to church tomorrow and make the confession every one of us. Oh, Miss Booth, I never can thank you for what you did for we'uns."

All these things were to be accomplished on the morrow because of her work. Little Mrs. Booth took from the basket the little white things which she had prepared for Baby Bill.

She hurried away after a while through the velvet dusk which was perfumed with roses and variegated by stars. She reached the top of the hill and looked out across the fields at the big house on the avenue which was ablaze with light, at the middle-sized house on a common street which was lighted by a kerosene blaze, and finally out at the hovel on the edge of the forest where the tapers glittered like fireflies through the night. And as the greatness of the work came upon her, as she thought of the thousands of little ones coming up without Christ in the home or the church, she trembled like a storm-tossed ship upon a troubled sea.

She fell upon her knees to pray, and as she waited there asking, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" a voice seemed to float up from the valley, saying:

"Hark, 'tis the Shepherd's voice I hear,
Out in the darkness cold and drear,
Calling the lambs lest they go astray
Far from the Shepherd's home away."

And with these words ringing in her ears, she rose from her knees, with a deeper determination than ever before to seek out the little ones and bring them safely into the heavenly fold.

An Imperative Call

In the course of nearly four years of the world war, the gaunt hand of starvation has scrawled the names of more individuals on its side of the death ledger than have perished by gunpowder, gas, and steel. Four million, seven hundred and fifty thousand persons have died from starvation while about 4,250,000 have been killed by fighting. Hunger gnawed at the vitals of Russia until her morale was so weakened that she collapsed. The same cause may justly be attributed to the crumpling of heroic little Roumania. Italy, underfed with food and overfed with insidious German propaganda, went through a crisis last fall that threatened to result disastrously for the allied program. And now the call has come from England, France, Italy, and Belgium that wheat must be forthcoming or they can not assure us that the allied armies or the morale of the sacrificing, suffering millions behind the lines in those countries will be maintained.

It is inconceivable that America should fail in this crisis. The various strata of our population can not bear equally this reduction in consumption of wheat bread. Those engaged in physical labor need a larger bread ration than those in sedentary occupations. Furthermore, the special requirements of children and invalids must be safeguarded. To meet the needs abroad and prevent serious suffering at home, it is imperative that those whose circumstances permit shall abstain from wheat and wheat products until the next harvest.

With full understanding that as a Nation we must save or sink, succor those overseas or perish with them, let us grasp this opportunity—a privilege, not a sacrifice—to abstain from wheat. Thus, may those who can not fight materially aid the cause, on the success of which rests the freedom of mankind.

The Joy That Sunday Brings

It is an immense fact that Christ himself was with his disciples on the first Lord's day. Think for a little what that day meant to him, and to them! It was a day of supreme joy to Jesus. He struck the key-note in his salutation to Mary Magdalene and "the other Mary," of "Joy!" (Matt. 28:9—Greek chairo). Atonement was complete! He was indeed "delivered for our offences," but he "was raised again for our justification" (Rom. 4:25). That ringing cry, "Joy!" must surely resound through all Lord's days. . . .

Joy is an accomplished redemption eternally effectual; joy in the fellowship of saints; joy in the grandest conceivable service. Are not these the broad lines of Lord's day observance? . . .

Many questions arise. May any part of the Lord's day be rightly used in recreation or occupations not incompatible with the spirit of the day? There is but one answer: "Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind" (Rom. 14:5). But whatever may be the subject concerning which questions arise that are not settled by explicit Scripture, prayer in a submissive and yielded spirit will surely bring light. It is one of the ways of God in grace to keep the believer thus dependent.—C. I. SCOFIELD, D. D., in the Sunday School Times.

Up with the Stars and Stripes
ORDER THIS FLAG TODAY AND UNFURL IT EVERY DAY

THE least thing you can do for your country is to show its flag. Let your neighbors know that yours is a patriotic home. Stand solidly behind the great principles of Freedom and Human Rights, and let the flag tell it. At this critical time in the history of your country you should pledge your allegiance by displaying the Stars and Stripes.

Here is the very flag you have wanted—a large-sized "Old Glory," six feet long by four feet wide. It will add much to your celebration of National Holidays and Local Celebrations when the American Flag is indispensable.

The illustration is an actual photographic reproduction of this splendid large flag. To insure durability the stripes are double-stitched. Excellent bright colors. Pole is not included.

OUR OFFER SEND NO MONEY NOW

WE make it easy for you to secure this splendid large flag. By placing an order for thousands of these flags we were able to purchase them at a considerable reduction. We will give you the benefit of this saving, and have made the terms so liberal that all may take advantage of this offer—half the price of a similar flag if purchased in a store, and at a time when it is most needed.

Send no money now. Merely mail the order blank below, and we will send the flag, all charges prepaid by us. If, after five days examination, you decide not to keep the flag, return it at our expense, and you will be under no obligation. You need not purchase it unless convinced of its value. But, if you decide to keep the flag, send $1.00 within five days after its receipt, and $1.00 a month for two months, a total of $3.00. This pays for the flag, and also for a year's subscription to the Christian Herald—52 issues—regular subscription price $2.00 a year. Over 300,000 families look forward every week to the Christian Herald as the source of the greatest inspiration and pleasure.

-----ORDER BLANK-----
CHRISTIAN HERALD, 179 Bible House, New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen: Send me, all charges prepaid, for examination, the large American flag. If I decide to keep it I will send you $1.00 within five days, and $1.00 per month thereafter for two months, a total of $3.00, for which you are also to send me the Christian Herald for one year beginning at once. If I do not keep the flag I will send it back within five days at your expense. I incur no obligation in mailing this order blank.

Name

Address

.....

THE TREASURY

SPECIAL NOTICE

Owing to occasional losses of letters, containing money, we would request friends and donors of the American Tract Society to remit by check or Post Office Money Order, which latter can always be duplicated in case of loss.

Receipts of the American Tract Society During May, 1918

Total Donations (including $334.05 for Special Objects), $1,396.65.

CALIFORNIA, $10.65.

Winters, Church Collection, $5; Mrs. Stewart, for Patriot Library, $5; Mr. Lichti, $0.65.

CONNECTICUT, $112.35.

Miss Keigwin, $0.35; Mr. Washburn, $1; Mrs. Wilcox, $5; Mr. Boardman, $5; Mr. Gilbert, $10; Mr. Scott, $10; Mr. Cooley, $25; Mr. Capron, $1; the following for Patriot Library: Mr. Miller, $30; Mr. Perry, $10; Mrs. Hooker, $15.

DELAWARE, $2.

Mr. Warren, for Patriot Library, $2.

ILLINOIS, $19.42.

Mr. Schaeffer, $2; Mrs. Heeren, $1.65; Mrs. Reimer, $0.50; Woodburn, Church Collection, $13.02; Fosterburg, Church Offering, $2.25.

INDIANA, $5.

Hammond, Church Offering, $5.

IOWA, $6.

"A Friend," for Patriot Library, $1; Miss Weed, $5.

KANSAS, $4.65.

Mr. Kaufman, $2.65; Mrs. Haurly, $2.

KENTUCKY, $1.

"A Friend," $1.

MAINE, $76.

Rev. Mr. Kelly, $1; Mr. Parkhurst, $2; Mr. Pope, $1; Miss Palmer, $5; the Misses Libby, $20; the following for Patriot Library: Mrs. Jewett, $10; Miss Gray, $5; Rev. Mr. Kelly, $1; Mr. Barrows, $1; Miss Sewall, $15; Miss Sewall, $15.

MARYLAND, $0.90.

Miss Ruckdaeschel, $0.90.

MASSACHUSETTS, $50.60.

Mr. Paine, for Patriot Library, $25; Beverly, Church Collection, $10; Mrs. Hodgkins, $5; Mr. Chase, $5; Mr. Tilton, $1; Holbrook, Church Offering, $0.60; Rev. Mr. Gates, $2; Mrs. Morrow, $2.

MICHIGAN, $50.

Grand Rapids, Church Offering, $40; Kalamazoo, Sunday School, Collection, $10.

MINNESOTA, $8.15.

Owatonna, Church Offering, for Patriot Library, $2.50; Mr. Steingeweg, $0.65; Rev. Mr. Smith, $5.

MISSOURI, $88.26.

Mr. Pauley, $5; St. Louis, Church Collection, $5.50; Church Offering, $11.01; Church Collection, $16.09; Church Offering, $5.43; Church Collection, $10.40; Church Offering, $14.07; Church Collection, $4.76; Church Offering, $10; Church Collection, $6.

MONTANA, $5.

Mr. Clark, $5.

NEBRASKA, $1.

Mr. Woods, for Patriot Library, $1.

NEVADA, $1.

Mr. Buterbaugh, for Patriot Library, $1.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, $3.

Miss Busiel, $1; Miss Cummings, $2.

NEW JERSEY, $159.56.

Miss Calkins, $75; Mrs. Carson, $2; Mrs. Ramm, $0.65; Mr. Walter, $10; Irvington, Church Collection, $5; Miss Davis (including $2 for Patriot Library), $7; Collingswood, Church Offering, $5; Harlingen, Church Collection, $21.91; "A Friend," $10; Lakewood, Church Offering, $5; the following for Patriot Library: Dr. Lemmerz, $3; Mr. Machen, $10; Mr. Hoffman, $2; Miss Woodruff, $1; Dr. Franklin, $2.

NEW YORK, $587.83.

King Testimonial Fund, $18; Mrs. Crockett, $1; "One of His Stewards," $10; New York, Church Collection, $7.86; Miss Laselle, $1; Church Offering, $394.38; Mrs. Pullmann, $0.53; Church Collection, $41.06; Miss Strong, $20; Mr. Johnston, $4.50; Mr. Cary, $2.50; C. S. S., $50; Aurora, Church Offering, $16; the following for Patriot Library: Mrs. Merrill, $5; Mr. Bayne, $5; Mr. Myrick, $2; Mrs. Banker, $2; Miss Stevenson, $1; Mrs. Peckham, $3; Mrs. Lawrence, $1; Miss Zabrisckie, $2.

NORTH DAKOTA, $0.65.

Mr. Maag, $0.65.

OHIO, $5.

Miss Fowler, $2; Mrs. Baker, $1; the following for Patriot Library: Miss Wilkins, $2.

OREGON, $5.

Mr. Voorhees, $5.

PENNSYLVANIA, $150.

Mr. Baird, $2; Mr. Trexler, $20; Mrs. Wagner, $3; Mr. Orr, $100; Edinboro, Church Collection, $5; the following for Patriot Library: Mr. Crutchfield, $10; Mr. Willbur, $10.

SOUTH CAROLINA, $5.

The Misses Dudley, $5.

VERMONT, $13.

Miss Higley, $1; the following for Patriot Library: Miss Lease, $2; Mrs. Crowell, $5; Mrs. Gay, $5.

WASHINGTON, $6.

Mr. Acker, $6.

WISCONSIN, $11.20.

Mr. Wintermantel, $10; Mr. Sieker, $1.20.

FOREIGN, $8.43.

Canada, Mrs. McCrae, $1; Ungenannt, $5.93; Botschafter Reader, $1.50.

LEGACIES, $50.

Washington, D. C., Estate of Mary I. Banks, on account, $50.

INCOME FROM TRUST FUNDS, $1,275.
Income for Missionary Work.....$1,225.00
Income for Annuitants..... 50.00

Donations

DONATIONS for the missionary work of the American Tract Society may be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

FIELD SECRETARIES AND COLPORTAGE SUPERINTENDENTS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.

Rev. Isaac Pierson, Field Secretary for New England, 50 Bromfield Street, Boston, Mass.

Rev. A. W. Reinhard, Field Secretary and Superintendent of Colportage for the Western and Northwestern States, 4029A De Tonty Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Rev. George Whitefort, Superintendent of Colportage, Southern Agency, Crichton, R. F. D., Mobile Co., Ala.

Form of Bequest

I GIVE and bequeath to the "AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY," instituted in the City of New York, May, 1825, the sum of.....dollars to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said Society.

Three witnesses should state that the testator declares this to be his last will and testament, and that they signed at his request, and in his presence and the presence of each other.

American Tract Society

THIS SOCIETY was organized in 1825. Its work is interdenominational and international in scope, and is commended by all evangelical denominations.

It has published the Gospel messages in 178 languages, dialects and characters. It has been the pioneer for work among the foreign-speaking people in our country, and its missionary colporters are distributing Christian literature in many languages among our foreign-speaking population and making a home-to-home visitation among the spiritually destitute, both in the cities and rural districts, leaving all kinds of Christian literature, also the Bible or portions of the Scriptures.

Its publication of leaflets, volumes and periodicals from the Home Office total 800,711,975 copies. It has made foreign cash appropriations to the amount of $805,466, and grants of electrotypes to the value of $61,177.96, by means of which millions of copies of books and tracts have been published at mission stations abroad.

The gratuitous distribution of the past year is to the value of $23,191.98. The grand total of its gratuitous distribution has been to the value of $2,676,159.82, which is the equivalent of 5,352,319,040 tract pages.

The total number of family visits that have been made by the Society's colporters during the last year is 146,056; the total number of volumes distributed by sale or grant is 49,584, making the total number of volumes that have been circulated by colporters in the last seventy-seven years 17,489,750, and the total number of family visits that they have made during the same period 18,958,862.

A large distribution of Christian literature is being made among the soldiers and sailors, and the Society aims to furnish the Patriot Library to every Cantonment in the Army and to every battleship and cruiser in the Navy.

The Society is making very special effort in behalf of Latin America, having entered upon the publication of a One-volume Bible commentary in Spanish, a long-needed and earnestly prayed-for publication, and several other important volumes in both Spanish and Portuguese. Its total publications for Latin America now reach 17,175,163 copies. Its work, ever widening, is dependent upon donations and legacies, and greatly needs increased offerings.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, PRESIDENT.

JUDSON SWIFT, D. D., General Secretary.

Remittances should be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

A Prayer

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

When on my day of life the night is falling
And by the winds from unsunned spaces blown,

I hear far voices out of darkness calling
My feet to paths unknown.

Thou who hast made my house of life so pleasant,

Leave not its tenant when its wall decay,
O Love Divine, O Helper ever present,
Be Thou my strength and stay.

Be near me when all else is from me drifting—

Earth, sky, home's pictures, days of shade and shine,
And kindly faces to my own uplifting
The love which answers mine.

I have but Thee, my Father! Let Thy Spirit
Be with me then to comfort and uphold.

No gate of pearl, no branch of palm I merit,
Nor street of shining gold.

Suffice it if, my good and ill unreckoned
And both forgiven through Thy abounding grace,

I find myself by hands familiar beckoned
Unto my fitting place:

Some humble door among Thy many mansions,
Some sheltering shade where sin and striving cease,

And flows forever through heaven's green expansions,
The river of Thy peace.

One Camp Testament

A soldier in a certain camp, once a burly expressman from Hoboken who said he had never got any religion at home because he had to work seven days in the week and could not go to church, was persuaded by a Y. M. C. A. secretary to take a Testament and read it. In less than a week he was back, saying that the religion he found in the Testament was just what his friend Mike needed down in the hospital, where he was desperately sick and lonesome. But the secretary had the wisdom not to give out another Testament. He told Pat to go back and read his own book to Mike in the hospital. The result was that two men were brought into a new religious experience as comrades and both are standing strong for Christian living in their camp.

They Who Fall Like Princes

The adequacy of God's Word to meet all sorts of conditions in the modern world is admirably illustrated by the following extract from a student aviator in Texas:

"I ran against a verse in the Psalms which is most applicable to the life, or perhaps to the death, of an aviator. Yesterday one of the 'ships' crashed to the ground, killing one of the two men aboard, and the verse came to my mind. It is 'But ye shall die like men; and fall like one of the princes.' Could anything be more applicable?"

An Unconscious Influence

Editor Frank Willis Barnett, of the Alabama Baptist, says: "Many years ago, at Northfield, when conducting a class at one of the student conferences, I rose early, that I might prepare my work fresh each morning. The man with whom I stayed was a missionary in India—quiet, unnoticed and without special leadership in the conference. Not a single morning did I rise without finding my roommate on his knees before an open Bible. All the experiences of that conference, the man of God who spoke, the earnest address he delivered—all have gone from my mind; but the living impression of that man of prayer has never gone. All unconsciously, he influenced my belief in prayer, and gave me its deeper meaning."

Notice to Authors

Authors who submit manuscripts for publication to the American Tract Society are reminded that the Society does not hold itself responsible for the return of any manuscript. If a remittance is sent to cover the full cost of postage and registry, the Society will transmit a manuscript by registered mail upon the request of the author.

The Selective Draft In Food

Everyone is familiar with the process by which men have been drafted for service in the war. The principle of universal liability to service for all who can be spared to go to the front has been accepted heartily, and before many weeks a million soldiers from America will be fighting the battles of democracy.

Now these soldiers must be fed, and food must be provided also for our Allies, to eke out their shortened supplies.

Food is short in France, because Germany is cultivating a portion of the territory of France, and because those taking the place of farmers who are fighting are unable to maintain production at the former standard. England is short for the latter reason, and also because her usual supplies of grain from the vast fields of Australia and Argentina are now cut largely off. Italy is short because her men are fighting Austria.

In short, Western Europe needs at least half a million bushels of wheat from this year's harvest. Where is it to come from?

There is only one place from which it can come—North America. It will not be easy to spare the grain, but we have no choice and we shall succeed. Go into the campaign of food conservation in the spirit in which the French General Petain carried through the heroic Verdun campaign. When the enemy was launching its first attack, the word came to the General from those who were directing the campaign, "They must not pass." The veteran General replied, "They shall not pass." The world knows something of the tremendous cost of keeping that pledge, but it has been kept; the enemy did not pass.

So the call comes to the loyal people of America to "Save the wheat." From all over the country the reply is coming, "The wheat shall be saved." The United States Food Administration is depending on each man, woman and child doing his or her part to make good its pledge.

Everybody is put on his honor as to the form and measure of the part he takes. But does anyone dare do less than he is asked to do in this vitally necessary work of co-operation with our enlisted men?

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

TERMS: Subscription price, 50 cts. a year, payable in advance. In clubs of five or more, 30 cts. each. Club subscriptions mailed to separate addresses, if desired. Charge for foreign subscriptions, 24 cents additional. Canadian subscriptions, 12 cents additional. Single copies, 5 cents each.

On account of the additional charge which is made by the New York Post Office for mailing to subscribers in New York and Bronx Counties (Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx), no club rates, cash commissions or premiums will be given for subscriptions that must be sent to persons residing in those Counties. Each subscription in New York or Bronx County must be at the rate of 50 cents net.

Remit by Express Money Order, Draft, Post Office Order or Registered Letter. For very small amounts, postage stamps may be sent at the risk of the sender.

RENEWALS: The date opposite your name shows to what time the subscription has been paid, and a change in the date is the receipt for renewal.

CHANGES: When sending change of address, be sure to send the old address as well as the new one.

OUR ADVERTISERS: We believe that all the advertisements in this paper are from responsible advertisers, and it is our intention to admit only such to our columns. Should, however, any of our subscribers find that any advertiser does not live up to his agreements, we would consider it a favor, if they will inform us, and we will at any time give prompt attention to any complaint.

We do not, of course, guarantee that all persons will take the same point of view with the advertisers, and it must be borne in mind that the claims and statements made by advertisers are their assertions, and not ours.

Our readers will confer a favor upon advertisers and also upon us if they will mention the AMERICAN MESSENGER when answering advertisements.

Life Members and Directors

The donation of $30 at one time constitutes a Life Member of the American Tract Society; the addition of $70, or the donation of $100 at one time, constitutes a Life Director. Life members may receive annually copies of the Society's own publications to the value of $1; Life Directors to the value of $2; if applied for within the Society's year, from April 1st to April 1st, in person or by written order.

Christian Endeavor Abroad

Victoria, Australia, State C. E. union officers, when attending conventions, wear badges of red, blue, and gold; red for sacrifice, blue for love, and gold for obedience.

An Australian Endeavorer some time ago organized a society in Egypt, the members of which distribute Gospels, testaments, books and writing-materials among the sick in military hospitals.

At a Christian Endeavor convention in Dacca, India, sixteen different languages were represented. Many of the delegates traveled two days to reach the convention city, and one at least traveled five days. The favorite hymn used in the meeting was

"Take my life and let it be Consecrated, Lord, to Thee."

The first soldiers' Christian Endeavor society in Great Britain was formed in the fall of 1916 in the military camp on Salisbury Plain. There were nine members. In spite of constant changes this society has never missed a meeting since that time. It is inter-denominational inter-regimental, and inter-imperial. It has a hospitality committee which has provided a rest-room for soldiers.

For Relief in Persia

The second contingent of the American Commission for Relief in Persia sailed from Seattle on June 8, 1918, under the auspices of the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief. The relief commission is to be headed by Dr. Henry Pratt Judson, President University of Chicago, who will not sail until later. Dr. J. W. Cook, M. D., Washington, D. C., who has had several years of medical experience in Persia, will be the acting head of the Commission until the arrival of Dr. Judson. Among the other members who sailed with the second contingent are Dr. E. W. McDowell, formerly a missionary under the Presbyterian Board in Persia, Dr. A. V. W. Jackson and Mrs. Jackson who accompanies her husband and will be the only woman in the expedition.

Five members of the party sailed a few weeks ago and will join the second contingent in Japan. The men in Japan are: Professor Leland Rex Robinson, of Columbia University; Reverend Livingston Bentley, of Auburn, New York; F. Treadwell Smith, of Union Seminary; H. R. Holmes, of Montour Falls, New York, who was born in Persia, and Professor Roland S. Vaile, an agricultural expert of Riverside, California.

These commissioners will aid and reinforce the Americans who are already stationed in that section of the world, distributing relief under the auspices of the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief, of which Cleveland H. Dodge is treasurer.

C. V. Vickrey, Executive Secretary of the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief, speaking of the Commission recently said: "Probably nowhere in the world is there such extensive suffering from hunger and starvation as in Persia. One of the foremost authorities on Persian questions estimates that in Northern Persia alone there are at this moment not less than one million people in advance stages of destitution. Both as humanitarian service to hundreds of thousands of helpless poverty-stricken people and as an expression of good will on the part of America toward the weaker nations and oppressed races it is of utmost importance that relief be sent with all possible haste."

Hymn-Stories Wanted

Carl F. Price has been requested to collect missionary hymn-stories for a book which is to be entitled, "Missionary Hymns and Hymn-Writers." Already a number of stories have been secured, but more are wanted.

Dr. G. J. Schilling writes from Argentina that in South America the humming or whistling of a hymn-tune is often the means of Protestant fellow-travelers discovering each other on the train or in the railroad stations, and tells of an interesting Christian friendship he formed on the train by overhearing the melody of "Onward, Christian Soldiers."

Bishop Scott tells Mr. Price that one of the most thrilling seasons of hymn-singing he ever heard was in the heart of Africa, when he was being escorted by a whole village of natives on his way to another village. Half way there they came to a river, where he bade them farewell. Crossing over he was greeted on the other side by a great throng who had come to escort him the rest of the way to their own village. Before waving their final farewells the two companies of African Christians sang hymns to each other across the waters and then disappeared in the forests.

E. T. Iglehart has made an interesting contribution to this study by calling attention to the startling figures of speech that some of our hymns acquire by translation. For instance, our hymn, "He's the Lily of the Valley," is rendered in Japanese, "He's the Cherry of the Mountain."

Any stories of facts regarding hymns on the foreign field or the use of missionary hymns in this country, would be greatly welcomed by Mr. Price at the Centenary office, 111 Fifth avenue, New York, to be used to enrich this interesting study.

Send a Message Up to Heaven

A farmer boy working alone in the fields, became convinced that with his health, strength, and robustness, his duty was with the soldiers at the front. He enlisted. He was at first a little awkward. They put him to digging, and he out-dug them all. They set him to swinging the axe, and again he led. The officers realized they had a willing, strong, and emergency-ready man. He was unmarried. He went across to France.

One day the listening squad reported to the commander that a certain point in their line of operation had been mined by the enemy. The commander called his men into line, announced the report, and called for a volunteer to go and explode the mine, and save the army, but he himself could never come back. There was a hesitation. It was a solemn moment. Every man was looking death in the eye. Then this farmer boy saluted the officer, saying, "Commander, I think it's next to me."

The commander spoke a few words in a husky voice, then extended his hand to the volunteer. The two men looked into each other's faces, with their eyes full of tears. The release was given, and the soldier went forth on his lone journey. The men watched him till he passed from view, then saw the heavens glare with flame and the farmer boy's soul went to meet his God.

General Haig said to his men, "Our backs are against the wall, and we will fight till the last man dies." These are specimens of what the soldiers are doing in France. What are we doing here? Sending them creature comforts? This is very kind, but they have no chance to use them. Buying bonds? This is good. But many of these noble fellows will be shot long before these bonds can be converted into a fighting force. Let us do something quickly. Let us send a message up to heaven instantly.

The real cause of all this terrible war is the dishonor of God, sin against his law, and departure from his way. We have taken our own way, and here is where we come out. God has said if we will return to him, confess our sins, and obey and pray, he will forgive our sins and heal our land. Elijah prayed that it might not rain, and there was no rain. He prayed that it might rain, and rain came. The same power that shook the earth, made the mountains tremble, quieted the winds, and cast out devils, is still ready for us. He breaketh the bow, cutteth the spear in sunder, burneth the chariot and can sink the U-boat and silence great guns. The wires are all free. Let us send the message. George Washington and the fathers of the Revolution sent such messages, and we were made free. Abraham Lincoln and the nation in 1863 sent such a message, and the shackles fell, and the war ceased, and the Union was saved. Let us all pray. Let us fill the prayer-meetings; let us send a message up to heaven now.—The Presbyterian.

Just For Fun

"What progress does this little girl make in her sewing?" asked the tall and stately patroness at the charity school as she stopped before the daughter of a longshoreman and noticed that the pupil had her thread hopelessly tangled. "About forty knots an hour," roguishly replied the girl as she looked up.

An eccentric old gentleman placed in a field on his estate a board with the following generous offer painted thereon: "I will give this field to any man who is contented." He soon had an applicant. "Well, my man, are you a contented fellow?" asked the old gentleman. "Yes, sir; very." "Then why do you want my field?" The applicant did not wait to reply.

A famous Brooklyn clergyman was once addressing a Sabbath school on the lesson of the day, which happened to be "Jacob's Ladder." He got along swimmingly until a little urchin in the back seat squeaked out: "Why did the angels have to have a ladder when they had wings?" After the inevitable laugh had subsided, the clergyman said: "Well, that is a fair question; who can answer it?" There was a pause, and then up went a pudgy fist. "Well, my little man," asked the clergyman, "Why was it?" "I guess mebbe they was a-moulting," was the astonishing reply.

A little boy who had been taught to report promptly his misdeeds sought his mother with an aspect of grief and repentance.

"I broke a brick in the fireplace," he announced, on the verge of tears.

"Well, that is not beyond remedy," smiled the mother. "But how on earth did you do it?"

"I was pounding it with father's watch."

"Frances," said that little girl's mamma, who was entertaining callers in the parlor, "you came down stairs so noisily that you could be heard all over the house. You know how to do better than that. Go back and come down stairs like a lady."

Frances retired, and after a lapse of a few minutes re-entered the parlor.

"Did you hear me come down stairs this time mamma?"

"No, dear. I am glad you came down quietly. Now don't let me ever have to tell you again not to come down noisily. Now tell these ladies how you managed to come down like a lady the second time, while the first time you made so much noise."

"The last time I slid down the banister," explained Frances.

A gentleman was doing his best to explain the national finance to his wife. "What we need," he said, "is an elastic currency."

"Then why doesn't the government print bank notes on thin sheets of India-rubber?" demanded the lady with the air of one who knew all about it; "that would make them elastic, surely."

Smith, the hotel manager, and Jones, a manufacturer's agent, were talking one day about their respective business interests.

"I say," remarked Jones, "how ever do you use such an enormous quantity of pears and peaches?"

"Well," replied Smith, "we eat what we can, and what we can't eat we can."

"Indeed!" said the other. "We do about the same in our business."

"How is that?"

"We sell an order when we can sell it, and when we can't we cancel it."

Eleanor: "Is that suitor of yours ever going to acquire courage enough to propose?" Edith: "I think not. He's like an hour-glass." Eleanor: "How's that?" Edith: "Why, the more time he gets the less sand he has."

An Easy Way to Secure an Excellent Fountain Pen

A Fountain Pen is always a necessity and here is an opportunity of securing a good one with only a little effort (see offer below).

The publishers of the AMERICAN MESSENGER are very desirous of increasing the circulation of this admirable publication, and it is for that purpose that we are offering this splendid Fountain Pen. The Pen is known as the Commercial Fountain Pen.

The pen is six and one half inches long, and suitable for either lady or gentleman, and fully guaranteed. In the construction of this pen only the best of materials are used. The rubber parts are hand-turned Para rubber. The gold nib is 14 karat solid gold tipped with the best grade of hard iridium.

OFFER No. 1 We will send one of these fountain pens absolutely free to any one who sends us four new yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at the regular price, 50 cents each.

OFFER No. 2 We will give one fountain pen and a year's subscription to the AMERICAN MESSENGER for only $1.40.

Any of our present subscribers may take advantage of offer No. 2 by extending their subscription one year, and remitting $1.40 in payment for the same.

Our young friends will find this a very good method of securing a Fountain Pen for themselves. Try it and see how easy it is to secure only 4 new yearly subscriptions at 50 cents each.

American Messenger, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York

The New Testament

With Notes, Instructions and References.

POCKET EDITION.

DR. CHAPMAN'S INDORSEMENT.

The New Testament with Notes cannot but be helpful to its readers.

The Introductions to the several Books have been prepared by an expert in Biblical scholarship. Taken together it would be impossible to find in the same compass Introductions that present in a better way the salient features of each Book while giving information at the same time concerning questions of authorship, date, purpose and destination.

The Notes upon the text are themselves marvels of scholarly condensation. They aim to present a concise explanation of the words of Scripture, selecting those passages which need such explanation. The writers of these Notes have used rare discrimination in their preparation, and possessors of this book will find in it a perfect mine of information at their command.

The Instructions are designed to make a practical application of the truth. This feature, which is unique, makes the volume one of rare value, and those who read these Instructions will not only have the truth brought directly and forcibly home to their own lives, but will also be furnished with material that will be of inestimable value to them in Christian service and work.

The Outline of the Harmony of the Gospels given is based upon the Standard American Revised Version, which is unquestionably the best modern Version and presents an outline of the Life of Christ that will commend itself to those who make use of it.

An excellent little volume which fits the Sunday-school Lessons.

John exalts Christ.

JOHN IV.

Salvation by faith.

30 He must increase, but I must decrease.

31 He that cometh from above is above all; he that is of the earth is earthly, and speaketh of the earth: he that cometh from heaven is above all.

32 And what he hath seen and heard, that he testifieth; and no man receiveth his testimony.

33 He that hath received his testimony, hath set to his seal that God is true.

34 For he whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God: for God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto him.

35 The Father loveth the Son, and he whom the Son loveth, and he should not let his ignorance of what God has revealed hinder him from receiving and treating as true what he has revealed.

11. As Jesus knew the truth of what he taught, all are bound to believe it, and to let it have its due influence over their hearts and lives.

20. The reason why men do not believe what Christ has taught is, that they love error, they do evil, and his truth on this account condemns them.

25. When sinners in great numbers come to the Saviour, some men, if it lessen the number who follow them, are greatly grieved. But good men, with right views, rejoice in every accession to the number of Christ's followers. They are delighted to see him increase, though it cause them to decrease.

30. It is a high spiritual attainment to be willing that others should excel us in usefulness and honor.

35. As all things pertaining to the souls of men are in the hands of Christ and at his disposal, the eternal life of those who believe in him, and the eternal death of those who continue to reject him, are certain.

7. As all men are naturally destitute of the love of God, no one should think it strange that he must experience that change which Christ called being born again.

9. It is not necessary, in order to believe a fact and receive the benefit of it, that a man should understand the manner in which it is accomplished.

Exact size of page and type.

and hath given all things A. D. 30 into his hand.

36 He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son, shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him.

CHAPTER IV.

1 Christ talketh with a woman of Samaria, and revealeth himself unto her. 27 His disciples marvel. 31 He declareth to them his zeal to God's glory. 39 Many Samaritans believe on him. 45 He departeth into Galilee, and healeth the ruler's son that lay sick at Capernaum.

WHEN therefore the Lord knew how the Pharisees complished; and he should not let his ignorance of what God has revealed hinder him from receiving and treating as true what he has revealed.

11. As Jesus knew the truth of what he taught, all are bound to believe it, and to let it have its due influence over their hearts and lives.

20. The reason why men do not believe what Christ has taught is, that they love error, they do evil, and his truth on this account condemns them.

25. When sinners in great numbers come to the Saviour, some men, if it lessen the number who follow them, are greatly grieved. But good men, with right views, rejoice in every accession to the number of Christ's followers. They are delighted to see him increase, though it cause them to decrease.

30. It is a high spiritual attainment to be willing that others should excel us in usefulness and honor.

35. As all things pertaining to the souls of men are in the hands of Christ and at his disposal, the eternal life of those who believe in him, and the eternal death of those who continue to reject him, are certain.

CHAPTER IV.

1. How the Pharisees had heard; he was aware that the knowledge of his growing popularity excited their envy and ill-will, which he wished for the present to avoid.

Frenchmen Under Fire

With shells bursting nearer and nearer, and death apparently a matter of minutes, a little company of French soldiers huddled close to the side of their trench.

Trapped, hopeless, cut off from relief, they waited for the shell that would catch the edge of their trench fairly.

As they crouched there, silent, one of them unbuttoned his coat, took out a worn copy of the New Testament, and handed a part of it to each man. There, in that situation, a Testament again did what it will always do for the man in battle. Strength and heart and courage returned. There was no further weakening. It was Christ's message.

Perhaps you have a son or a loved one who would give anything he possesses to have the comfort of a Testament at a time like this. Why not put a Testament With Notes into the kit of every "soldier lad" you know? Make it a part of his equipment. You would not want him to be without it if you could foresee what it may mean to him at some hour of trial. The Notes and Instructions, clear and lucid, will be a mighty aid to him.

Bound in silk cloth, it fits the pocket or kit. Mailed you for 85 cents. Send for it.

SMALL BOOKS FOR THE SOLDIER

A MANUAL OF DEVOTION FOR SOLDIERS AND SAILORS

By JUDSON SWIFT, D.D.

When the soldier or sailor boy that you know is waiting for the word for the battle to begin, let him have this little book in his pocket. Let him open it to page 94—to the "Prayer Before Going into Battle." It will comfort him. The book will have earned its place in his kit at that moment.

Besides Prayers for Special Occasions it contains a verse of Scripture, a prayer and a meditation for 31 mornings and evenings.

Send for a copy—or as many as you have use for. It is beautifully bound in Keratol. 104 pages, size 3 1/4 x 5 1/4 inches. By mail 35 cents.

The bravest men may need strength and encouragement at some 1 hour. This book will meet his need.

SOLDIER'S TEXT BOOK

Compiled by J. R. MACDUFF, D.D.

Art Paper Cover. Price, 5 cents a copy (by mail 7 cents). $5.00 per hundred postpaid.

A little pocket volume of 46 pages containing a reading and a verse of Scripture especially adapted for the soldier for thirty-one mornings and thirty-one evenings. Four pages of sanitary directions at the back gleaned from long campaign experience. This little volume is a splendid companion for every soldier.

DAILY FOOD

Cloth, 2 1/4 by 3 1/4 in. Price, 15 cents postpaid.

"THESE WORDS OF MINE"

Selected and Arranged by ABBIE McCAMMON BROWN. Bound in limp leather with book mark. Boxed. Price, by mail, 50 cents.

A little pocket book of 157 pages divided into months, with a selection of Scripture for every day in each month. A special page for special occasions. Beatitudes, Lord's Prayer, Commandments, etc., at the back.

CROMWELL'S POCKET BIBLE

Art paper cover, 3 by 4 1/4 in. Price, 5 cents a copy (by mail 7 cents). $5.00 per hundred, postpaid.

Cromwell's men carried it 275 years ago, yet its words are as new to-day as then.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY, Park Avenue and 40th Street, New York

MM

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

Vol. 76

AUGUST, 1918

No. 8

AARON AND HUR UPHOLDING MOSES' HANDS AT THE BATTLE OF REPHIDIM

(From the painting by Jean-Léon Gérôme.)

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY, NEW YORK.

War Camp Community Service

BY H. S. BRAUCHER.

The experiences of history prove that in all wars the ordinary perils of civilian life are greatly intensified for the enlisted men who are called upon to sever the normal relations of life and endure the sustained stress of the most extreme physical hardship and emotional tension.

In the present gigantic world war into which the United States has been called to defend the most precious treasures it possessed and to use its full power for the establishment of the foundation of a permanent peace in the world, our government has sounded a bugle call. Out from the cities and villages long lines of brown and blue are marching, marching towards the front to keep the stars of "Old Glory" there and to prove that right and mercy are greater than might and hate.

Wherever a man walks in the khaki or blue of Uncle Sam's uniform there is my brother or my son, my father or my husband. Whether he serves on the sea or on the land as fighter or helper, as bridge guard or gunner, about him glows a halo. His stout red blood and his keen nerves of steel, his sinuous muscles and white bones stand between me and the concentrated forces of scientific barbarism. There he stands with the blood of all nations pumping through his heart saying to the world that democracy shall be safe, that every man shall have his opportunity to live under liberty, that in the future little nations shall not tremble before the swash-buckling bully nation, that only one throne shall be established, the throne of God in the heart of man and only one dynasty shall prevail, the family of friends and neighbors.

Three great interests are left behind as the men fall in line for the training camp. The work interest, the interest in home and the interest in leisure. Of these in the ordinary duties of soldier and sailor but one is adequately replaced. Instead of the daily task of earning a living, is the service rendered as duty to the country. That this new work shall be high grade and helpful to the men as well as serviceable to the nation, we all have confidence in our government to provide.

What shall be done to link the man in the camp to his home folks and retain for him the expression of their love, especially in his lonely hours? How shall that leisure which he has so much enjoyed in fellowship with his friends at home, be filled with wholesome recreation when the tents and barracks grow tiresome and he seeks companionship in the city near by, hoping for a time to find relief and relaxation from the vigors of military duty?

Nothing less than full capacity service shall be satisfactory to the government that calls, the man who responds and the home town that sends. Capacity service cannot be rendered by the man who spends his time and strength out of camp in drink, vice or even in idleness. The government knows this, every thoughtful person knows it. The War Camp Community Service Program of the War and Navy Departments Commissions on Training Camp Activities has been built with the one purpose in mind of creating every opportunity for the American soldier and sailor to become the nearest perfect physically, the most alert mentally, the most sound morally of all soldiers and sailors the world has produced to date. The magnitude of this undertaking is better understood when it is recalled that there are camps scattered over the country, some of them with forty to fifty thousand men near cities of a few thousand people who have no adequate means of handling the leisure of the soldiers and what is more critical some of these camps near enough to large cities to present to the men most enticing temptations to evil which commercial exploiters can devise.

Without arguing for brotherhood it is intended to establish brotherhood by extending to the men in the camps the hospitality of the homes, the fraternal societies, the churches and other organizations in the camp communities. Without scheming for sentimentality the

SPECIAL NOTICE!

It is the desire of the publishers of the AMERICAN MESSENGER to add many new names to the subscription list of this helpful religious monthly periodical during the coming months, and thus increase its usefulness.

There are many other good religious papers published, but as most of them are issued weekly, the high cost of producing them makes it impossible for a great many families to subscribe for them. The low yearly subscription price of the AMERICAN MESSENGER, which is only 50 cents, puts it within the reach of all. We ask the friend who reads this notice, to send us the names of TEN people, in different families who would appreciate such a paper as the AMERICAN MESSENGER, if they knew it. To each of those whose names we receive we will later send a sample copy.

In return for your service in furnishing these TEN names, we will send you whichever one of the following pictures you may choose as long as the supply lasts.

LIST OF PICTURES FROM WHICH YOU MAY CHOOSE

The Birth of Christ. 20x27 inches The Child Jesus in the Temple. 18x22 inches
Good Shepherd, in colors. 14 1-2x20 inches Suffer Little Children. 18x22 inches
Christ and the Rich Young Man. 18x22 inches

These pictures have been made by a photographic process which admirably reproduces the exquisite beauty of expression in the original painting. They are all ready for framing. Such pictures as these should be in every home and Sunday School, for they serve as an ornament appealing to the best in every nature, educating to high ideals, and furnishing an inspiration and stimulus to right living.

AMERICAN MESSENGER, Park Ave. and 40th St., New York City

deepest and sweetest emotions in the hearts of the men are to be given wholesome expression, for example in community singing, which is without doubt the highest and best form of patriotic emotional outlet. Without capitalizing or shamming religion there will be established such contacts for the men that they shall find it natural to be religious, securing confirmation of their faith in God and themselves, facing death when it may come bravely, knowing their own souls and the soul of America cannot die.

It does not diminish the glory of the symbolism of the uniform or reduce the glow of halo that America is happily placing about her enlisted men, to look upon them as human beings with all the natural desires and longing of "regular folks." The War Camp Community Workers remember that the men for whom they are organizing the civic forces are genuine men who want places to go for wholesome amusement, who want the fellowship of young women in happy social ways, who want to see pictures, sing songs, go to lunch and dinner with kind friends, who want to swim and skate and play ball and tennis, who want the privileges of churches, club rooms, libraries, social centers, who want the best influences used for them and a chance to choose the better places and people instead of the worse. Everyone concedes the reasonableness of the work, but it requires ability and experience in the organization of the social and recreational forces of the city to get order out of chaos and with economy secure results.

Therefore, the commission has taken direction of the work in every camp community, placing one representative or more at each camp, who shall adopt the general plan of the commission to the locality and by utilizing present facilities and developing new ones, by getting the business interests, the educational interests, the church and home interests, the fraternal interests together, see to it that the off duty time of the men is conserved for their own and the country's advantage.

"No Home Complete Without It"

In renewing her subscription for the AMERICAN MESSENGER, Miss Balch of Bennington, Vt., writes:

"I find this paper a great help to me in Christian Endeavor work. It is also a spiritual help. No home is complete without it."

The Legend of the Empty Hands

BY E. L. VINCENT

Have you heard the legend of the young woman who came with the throng to worship in a great cathedral and to bring a gift for the altar service?

Some who came, brought the rarest gifts possible—choice laces, rich spices, filling the place with their perfume, beautiful pictures, and even treasures of silver and of gold.

And all, the moment they were placed on the altar, quickly disappeared, leaving the people who brought them pale with wonder and fear. Why had not their gifts been treasured, as had the costly things they had brought in other days?

But when the day was slanting on toward the west the young woman came timidly. Her garments were so poor and her face thin and pinched as if with want. Her hands seemed to be empty, and she walked slowly and hesitatingly down the aisle until she came to the altar. People in their rich clothes watched her curiously, thinking, it may be, that as she came with empty hands, no blessing would be in store for her, any more than for them.

Long she knelt at the altar, her hands reaching out to lie on its sacred top, while she bowed her head reverently. And there was sunshine and peace in her face when at last she rose to go away. Now the people who had been looking on turned their eyes toward the altar. There where the two empty hands had been two beautiful white lilies, pure and lovely in their whiteness, blossomed, their fragrance surpassing all other perfume that had been brought.

It is only an old, old story, but think of the truth it tells. It is the gift of the pure heart which is accepted of God. No other blooms into beauty.

Sometimes it seems to us we have absolutely nothing we can give to our Saviour. What can we do, what can we say that will in any way commend itself to Jesus? Our best gifts are so unworthy and so unlike what we wish they might be!

And yet it is not the things we bring in our hands that God cares for, it is the heart back of the gift. It may be only a word spoken to one of the little ones to point the way to the wayside spring where the weary traveler may quench his thirst; if it is only done with a whole heart out of a sincere purpose, it will bring a blessing.

KIND WORDS.

Christ in Flanders

The following poem, written by a British soldier in Flanders, has been an inspiration in the lives of thousands of men.

We had forgotten You—or very nearly—
You did not seem to touch us very dearly;
Of course we thought about You now and then,

Especially in any time of trouble
We knew that You were good in time of trouble,

But we are very ordinary men,
And all the while, in street or lane or by-way,

You walked among us, and we did not see;

Your feet were bleeding as You walked our pavements.

How did we miss Your footprints on our pavements?

Can there be other folks as blind as we?

Now we remember over here in Flanders
(It isn't strange to think of You in Flanders)—

This hideous warfare seems to make things clear;

We never thought about You much in England,

But now that we are far away from England,

We have no doubts—we know that You are here,

You helped us pass the jest along the trenches—

Where, in cold blood, we waited in the trenches

You touched its ribaldry and made it fine.

You stood beside us in our pain and weakness;

We're glad to think You understand our weakness—

Somehow it seems to help us not to whine.

We think about You kneeling in the garden—
Oh God! the agony of that dread garden.

We know you prayed for us upon the cross;

If anything could make us glad to bear it
'Twould be the knowledge that You willed to bear it,

Pain, death—the uttermost of human loss.

Though we forgot You—You will not forget us—

We feel so sure that You will not forget us—

But stay with us until this dream is past,
And so we ask for courage, strength and pardon—

Especially, I think, we ask for pardon—
And that You'll stand beside us to the last.

❖ ❖

Pertinent Paragraphs

War Savings Stamps are within the reach of everyone who conscientiously wants to save.

If the men in our Army and Navy can do without luxuries we at home certainly can.

Secretary Baker says over a million of our boys have gone to the front. Help bring them back quickly by saving to the utmost of your ability and buying War Savings Stamps.

Your patriotic duty is in proportion to the money you earn. The more you get the more you can, and should, invest in War Savings Stamps.

Many of our poorer citizens are undergoing real sacrifices that they may be able to show their patriotism by buying War Savings Stamps.

Remember that the soldier's chance of life depends upon the support given him by the folks back home. Help! Save and buy War Savings Stamps.

How much of your income do you fritter away and how much do you invest in W. S. S.? Remember that many of the men at the front give their lives.

Your part in the war is to produce as much as possible, consume as little as necessary, and loan your savings to the Government. Are you facing your task as cheerfully as our fighting men face theirs?

The American Messenger

"Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Luke 2:10

Vol. 76. No. 8

AUGUST, 1918

Copyright, 1918, by American Tract Society.

Terms: 50 cents per annum
Single copy, 5 cents

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

PUBLISHED MONTHLY

By THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

OFFICERS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President.

JOHN HENRY JOWETT, M.A., D.D., Vice-President.

JUDSON SWIFT, D.D., General Secretary.

LOUIS TAG, Treasurer.

REV. HENRY LEWIS, Ph.D., Recording Secretary.

All of the above-named officers should be addressed at Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Rev. David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.

Rev. Charles Carroll Albertson, D.D.

Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.

Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D.

Rev. George Ernest Merriam.

Entered as second-class matter June 20, 1879, at the Post Office at New York, New York, under the Act of March 3, 1879.

Acceptance for mailing at special rate of postage provided for in Section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized on July 3, 1918.

Upholding His Hands

We have selected the striking picture by Jean-Léon Gérôme as an appropriate illustration for our front cover page, not only because of its remarkable merit as a work of art, but because of the timely and practical suggestion which it carries for us all at this trying epoch in the world's history.

The Battle of Rephidim was a fierce struggle between the Amalekites on the one side and the hosts of Israel on the other. It is noteworthy that the Israelites under the leadership of Joshua entered into this battle in response to the direct command of Jehovah. Moses took up his station on one of the adjoining heights, and there he uplifted his hands in prayer to the God of battles that the children of Israel might be victorious over their cruel and relentless foe. So long as Moses remained in this attitude of prayer the Israelites prevailed, but when through weariness he relaxed, the enemy began to gain the advantage. In this emergency Aaron and Hur came to his relief and upheld his hands so that they were steady until the going down of the sun, and the Israelites won a glorious victory over the Amalekites.

The American people are now engaged with their Allies in a life-and-death struggle against an enemy as cruel and relentless as the Amalekites of old. Read the indictment of this ancient nation by Jehovah, as recorded in the Book of Deuteronomy, and see how closely it fits the case of the foe whom we are fighting today. Jehovah speaks through Moses to the Israelites, and says:

"Remember what Amalek did unto thee by the way as ye came forth out of Egypt; how he met thee by the way, and smote the hindmost of thee, when thou wast faint and weary; and he feared not God."

There are many who cannot fight on the battlefield in the present struggle. But there is opportunity for a service similar to that which Aaron and Hur performed. It is our duty and privilege, if we cannot fight ourselves, to uphold the hands of those who are actively engaged and to sustain those who are the chosen leaders of our nation in this battle for righteousness against an implacable and heartless foe.

✻ ✻ ✻

War Work of the Salvation Army

In the training camps of this country, we are told, the Salvation Army has erected eleven special buildings for the purpose of extending their work to reach the enlisted men as far as possible. In addition to these buildings the Salvation Army maintains four special dormitories for soldiers and sailors and a large number of rest rooms.

But the war work of the Salvation Army is not limited to our own land, for it has been duly recognized by the Government as an agent for carrying on special work for the American Expeditionary Force in France.

Because of the rapid increase in the scope of its operation the war work of the Salvation Army is taxing all its energy and resources to the limit.

The usefulness of the work which is thus being carried on is unquestioned. In order to meet the rapid development which is now taking place, the Salvation Army is asking for one thousand volunteers to enter its service. Such volunteers will receive a brief season of intensive training, and will then go over to France as special War Time Officers of the Salvation Army without in any way affecting their denominational affiliations.

The Salvation Army is surely doing a noble work, and we trust that its call for volunteers for this special service will not go unheeded.

✻ ✻ ✻

Public Health Nursing

The United States Army and Navy have asked for 37,500 registered trained nurses by July 1, 1919, for the care of wounded and sick soldiers and sailors. This will take one-half of the present skilled nursing forces of the United States, and its effect upon public health will be disastrous unless most strenuous efforts are made to supply the needs of the civil population with trained nurses.

In normal times there are approximately 6,000 public health nurses scattered over the United States, caring for the families of those who cannot afford the entire time of a trained nurse. They go into the homes, staying long enough with the sick mother and the ailing child to give expert care, setting things right for the day, and carrying out the instructions of the physician.

Many of the public health nurses have now volunteered for military service. The campaign for the protection of children and the extension of public health nursing to rural areas is demanding large numbers of these nurses. Child conservation and tuberculosis work in France is using them. All these facts emphasize the necessity of increasing the number of public health nurses in our land.

The War Program Committee of the National Organization for Public Health Nursing have sent out the following appeal, which we present for the earnest consideration of our readers:

"First, and most important, every well educated young woman who is interested in dealing with the many problems in this field, is urged to enter one of the training schools for nurses where she will get a firm foundation for future work while at the same time immediately entering as a student nurse on the serious nursing work of the country.

"Second, private duty nurses, who, on account of family ties or some other reason, cannot join the Red Cross Nursing Service for military duty, are urged to consider most seriously the needs of home service in the public health field. The call is imperative.

"Third, the private patient is urged to utilize the visiting nurse service. The visiting nurse is a highly skilled nurse who is especially trained to supplement the care of the family or the trained attendant, teaching them to care for the patient during the time she herself is not there. By using the visiting nurse, the patient releases the private nurse for duty where the value of her services can be multiplied. She can then enter the teaching field where she trains others to become nurses, or the public health field where instead of caring for one patient she cares for many.

"In addition, we must all put our shoulders to the wheel and help the schools for nurses already established and give scholarships to help those nurses who need financial assistance while taking graduate work. One thing is certain—we must keep trained women in the field for this great war service."

✻ ✻ ✻

For the Rehabilitation of Our Soldiers

It is encouraging to learn that our Government is not going to be content with merely re-educating and rehabilitating its soldiers who have been disabled by wounds and fitting them for useful and gainful occupations, but will exert an active continuing interest in their welfare.

This does not mean that these men are to be coddled or treated as weaklings, but it indicates that our Government will take an active interest in securing them work, and in other ways will endeavor to make up to them the opportunities and advantages they lost by reason of wounds received in fighting their country's battles.

Results of the Religious Census

The religious census figures just released by the Bureau of the Census show some interesting and significant facts.

During the ten-year period covered by the Census (1906-1916) church organizations increased from 212,230 to 228,067. The number of church members, including all sects and denominations increased from 35,068,058 to 42,044,374. Sunday school scholars increased from 14,685,997 to 19,951,675.

In the matter of membership the Roman Catholics, as usual, report the largest number. Next come the Baptist denominations, followed closely by the Methodists, the Presbyterians, the Disciples of Christ and the Protestant Episcopal Church.

The one disturbing feature of these membership statistics is that the total increase of not quite twenty per cent. only just about keeps pace with the increase in the total population of our country. The Protestant churches, taken by themselves, it is true, show an increase of 26 per cent. But apparently this is not sufficient to materially change the percentage of church members to the total population.

The lesson to be drawn from these figures, therefore, is the need of increased activity on the part of our Protestant forces, so that we may show a larger increase in the next decade.

We must not be content with simply holding our own, but we must advance with far more consecrated vigor, if our land is eventually to be won for Christ.

A Christian Citizenship Institute

The fourteenth annual Christian Citizenship Institute, under the auspices of the National Reform Association, will be held at Winona Lake, Indiana, August 4-15, 1918.

Those who will take part in this Institute include Rev. James S. Martin, General Superintendent of the National Reform Association; Frank J. Cannon, former United States Senator from Utah; Rev. Samuel Zane Batten, Secretary of the Social Service Commission of the Federal Council of Churches, and several other able and eloquent speakers.

This Institute will devote twelve days to the study of practical Christian patriotism. A world ablaze with war demands an intelligent, energetic, Christian consecration, and this gathering will afford a rare opportunity for the study of vital problems in national life and world reconstruction.

New National Forests

A Presidential proclamation has recently been issued establishing three new National Forests in the East—the White Mountain Forest in Maine and New Hampshire, the Shenandoah Forest in Virginia and West Virginia, and the Natural Bridge Forest in Virginia.

The acquisition and the opening of these forests will contribute materially to the public welfare, not only by the protection thus given to the streamflow and the production of timber, but also by the opportunity thus afforded for public recreation and healthful outdoor life.

Spiritual Needs of the Church

By Rev. JAMES MUDGE, D. D.

THAT the church has other needs besides those which are spiritual need not be gainsaid, but their subordination must be firmly maintained.

When other matters—social, financial or intellectual—usurp a place not theirs by right, then degeneration ensues and destruction is not far away. Even Christian fellowship, sweet and precious as it is, must be accounted only a means to the great end of Christian conquest; for the church was organized, it cannot be doubted to bring all men as swiftly as possible to the feet of its divine Master. Spiritual needs, then, should take precedence of all. And among these we may mention three as of peculiarly pressing importance.

First, there is need of a deeper hatred of sin. "The fear of the Lord is to hate evil." We look far too lightly upon that which slew our Saviour. We are too tolerant of what God abhors. We are too ready to make terms with that which ought to call forth undying hostility. A negative, non-committal attitude toward wrong is fearfully prevalent. Much, it is now found, can be said in favor of almost everything which it has been the custom of good people in the past to denounce. The laxity of the age tends to dull the keenness of our judgments and to steal the fire out of our words and the strength out of our strokes when we come to deal with unrighteousness. Unrighteousness is popular and powerful; it is strongly entrenched behind a bulwark of money-bags; it has the press on its side, and it can make things very unpleasant for those who set themselves conspicuously against it. So the arms are apt to weaken and the legs to tremble, and the church stands irresolute, tongue-tied, faltering and paltering.

There is need of a more sensitive conscience about little sins. With reference to a vast number of actions which displease the Saviour, grieve the Holy Spirit, and draw off spiritual strength, multitudes are prone to cry out, "Is it not a little fault? Why be so Puritanical and particular and straight-laced? What harm is there in going here or going there?"

Alas! The harm is plainly seen in the neglected closet, the comparatively empty prayer-meeting, the lack of relish for the Bible and the indifference to the salvation of friends and neighbors. Surely everything is harmful which dims the fine gold of devotion and brings a cloud over the sky of communion with the unseen. The piety which is not harmed by these things has already fallen so far below the standard of the New Testament as to be unworthy of the name.

A clearer apprehension of the proper relation between the church and the world is another of the spiritual needs of our times. Few, if any, now believe that Christ wishes His disciples to be hermits or recluses, with an austere and sombre type of religion. Nevertheless, He said, "Ye are not of the world even as I am not of the world." And His apostles commanded us, "Be not conformed to this world," and "Love not the world." All of which shows that there is a decided distinction between the world and the church—a distinction however, which seems in no little danger of being entirely wiped out. Is it not very clear that these texts still have pertinency and cannot be altogether whiffed aside as relics of a bygone age? It is abundantly evident, we think, that the church is suffering from conformity to the world.

A clarion call should be sounded for a separated life, a Spirit-filled life, a fully-surrendered and wholly-consecrated life, on the part of all who claim to be followers of Jesus. Then these chosen and chastened warriors can go forth, not after the hermit but the hero fashion; not into the deserts or mountains, but into the midst of the densest populations with a holy mission. Those parted from the world in the trend and aim and object of their lives are the very ones to influence it most powerfully for good as they mingle freely and safely in its scenes. It is only those who dare to lead a lonely life, so far as the prevailing influences around them are concerned, that can most effectively be a purifying principle among those who should be helped and rescued.

A warmer, keener loyalty to Christ is the greatest need of our age. Paul said, "I am ready to die for the name of the Lord Jesus," "To me to live is Christ," "I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ," "This one thing I do," "The love of Christ constraineth me." John Wesley showed the same intensity of zeal. Some of his mottoes were, "Live to-day," "Up and be doing," "There is another world," "I believe in eternity, I must arise and go," "Leisure and I have taken leave of one another," "The moments fly and must be accounted for." And when he came to die, his language was, "Christ is all. There is no way into the holiest but by the blood of Jesus."

This persistency and whole-hearted enthusiasm which cries out with David, "Whom have I in heaven but thee, and there is none upon earth that I desire beside thee," "My soul breaketh for the longing that it hath unto thy judgments at all times," "As the heart panteth after the water-brooks, so panteth my soul after thee," ought to be more frequently seen. We may not reach these great ideals, but we could get much nearer them than we do. We are content with a stunted and stunted salvation when marvellous things are provided for us. We are indolent, and we call it humility. We are not ambitious, as the great Apostle declared he was, "ambitious to be well pleasing unto the Lord." We fail to see the close connection between the sanctification of our lives and the salvation of our souls; or, being measurably sure, as we think, of the latter, we pay but little attention to the former.

A new view of Jesus Christ would do wonders for us, leading us to fresh views of allegiance and bring us into closer touch with His plans for the renovation of the earth. We must fall in love with Him over again; we must develop a love that is deeper, higher, broader and warmer than ever before—a love that is dearer than life, stronger than death and more enduring than time. It comes through meditation, consecration and exertion. It is found of those who seek it with all their hearts. And it contains a blessedness beyond words. That church which gains it will prosper in the truest sense, and will be victorious over the world, the flesh and the devil.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Dr. James Mudge was called to his heavenly rest on May 7, 1918. He was a frequent and welcome contributor to our columns, and we deeply regret his departure from this life. This article which proved to be his last contribution to AMERICAN MESSENGER was received but a short time before his decease and carries a very vital and important message.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTION

DR. DAVID J. BURRELL

HOW LONG WILL OUR COUNTRY LAST?

BY

REV. DAVID JAMES BURRELL, D.D., LL.D.

Pastor of the Marble Collegiate Church, New York City

THE historian Buckle lays down the proposition that nations, like individuals, have their birth, infancy, youth, maturity, old age, decrepitude and inevitable death: in which event, of course, death ends all.

The ruins of nations along the pathway of the centuries would seem to confirm this view. One after another the great powers have risen, flourished and tottered to their fall.

The nearest approach to national perpetuity was in the case of Israel, the peculiar people, who were "chosen" to keep alive the Messianic hope and pass it along the ages. It was only when that sacred trust was finally and irretrievably broken that "the house of Israel was left unto her desolate."

The wandering Jew has lost none of his ethnic characteristics, but he is a man without a country. The government fell from his shoulders on a memorable day in April, A. D. 30, when the long-looked-for Messiah was led out to Golgotha with the cry, "His blood be upon us and upon our children after us!"

God cannot deal with nations as he does with men, owing to the fact that while a man lives forever, a nation has no existence beyond the boundary of time. Therefore it must be dealt with according to the law of exact retribution here and now.

We are living in a Christian country. Its discoverer called it San Salvador, "the land of the Saviour." Its earliest settlers worshipped under the banner of the Cross. The revolutionary fathers on their knees dedicated it to the God who has revealed Himself in His only begotten Son. The framers of its Constitution wove and interwove the Gospel into that historic symbol of peace and freedom. Furthermore on every occasion when the question has been raised before its highest courts they have decided that America is a Christian land. It is for such reasons as these that we consistently join in the anthem:

"Our fathers' God to thee,
Author of liberty,
To thee we sing:
Long may our land be bright
With freedom's holy light;
Protect us by thy might,
Great God, our King!"

But how long will God "protect us by His might?" Just so long as we keep trust with Him. As a nation we do not await a reckoning in the remote future; our Judgment Day is every day.

"Therefore thus saith the Lord: As I have made the nations to perish before you, so shall ye perish if ye hearken not unto the voice of the Lord your God." (Deut. 8:20.)

If this means anything, it means that God will stand by us as a nation only so long as we keep covenant with Him in obeying His commandments. In the light of this indubitable fact and thus alone are we warranted in claiming for ourselves any tenure of life beyond that of the nations gone before us?

Not long ago we had a day set apart for "humiliation and prayer." Our prayers were fervent, but was there sufficient humiliation to show that we have any adequate apprehension of our national sins?

One of our most obvious sins is national pride. "There is a generation, O how lofty are their eyes and their eyelids lifted up." No doubt we are a great people; it must be so, since everybody is saying so; but "heavy battalions" did not save the braggart Napoleon, and they will not save us. "Pride goeth before a fall."

Another of our national sins is pleonexia. We are rich—"too beastly rich," as Lord Russell said of us—and growing richer every day. A competence does not satisfy us. Our poor men want to be rich and our rich men richer. This yellow jaundice is rotting the American soul. Even while the beacons of patriotism are flaming on the heights, profiteering goes right on. The daughters of the horse-leech lead the waltz. If an avaricious man is shut out of heaven, what hope has a gold-frenzied nation of passing through the needle's eye into the glory of an endless life?

Still another of our besetting sins as a nation is Sabbath desecration. When the children of Israel went out of Egypt they were a frightened horde of fugitive slaves; but God took them in hand and transformed them into the most formidable nation on earth. At Sinai He gave them their Constitution and made a covenant with them, saying, "Verily, ye shall keep my Sabbaths; for this is a sign between Me and you, that ye may know that the God doth sanctify you." (Exodus 31:13.)

A thousand years later they were led away into captivity. Why? Listen to Ezekiel: "Thus saith the Lord: I gave them my Sabbaths to be a sign between me and them: but they polluted my Sabbaths, wherefore I poured out my fury upon them."

On repenting they were restored to their own country: but after a brief Indian Summer of prosperity they drifted again into the same sin and as a nation were blotted out.

Is there no lesson here for us? Our disregard of the Fourth Commandment has become a byword against us. We invented the Sunday newspaper, the Ali Baba of all the Forty Thieves. We have social functions on Sunday in our national capital: there are Sunday saloons, Sunday theatres and Sunday dance halls in our great cities. Our soldiers in camp and on the front are provided with Sunday games and amusement, not infrequently under the sanction and patronage of the Red Cross and the Y. M. C. A. What pious trifling! What hypocritical camouflage! What reckless running on the bosses of the shield of God!

If the Sabbath is the sign of our national covenant with Jehovah it follows obviously that we cannot keep on breaking the Sabbath and praying for victory at the same time. It behooves us either to amend our ways or get off our knees. These things do not mix.

On the 16th of May, 1871, the Column Vendôme in Paris, the memorial of Austerlitz and Marengo, was pulled down by a thoughtless mob. A bystander said that when it toppled and fell he distinctly heard the moan of the frightened city. Woe betide the day when the Sabbath of our fathers should be thus fatuously overturned; for no nation that wilfully breaks its covenant with God has any just claim upon His continued favor.

But the most flagrant of our national sins is moral cowardice. All are agreed that a man who believes himself to be a Christian and is afraid to say so is a coward; but what shall be said of a nation that is Christian in its origin, history, principles and institutions, and so pronounced to be by the unvarying decisions of its highest courts, whose official representatives are nevertheless afraid or ashamed to intimate that such is the fact?

The Thanksgiving proclamations and other manifestos of our Chief Executive and of the governors of our several states are usually characterized by an apparently studious avoidance of the name of Jesus Christ. To read such documents one would suppose that America's God has no more to do with the New Testament than the Kaiser's "good old German god." How shall this be accounted for? Far be it from me to intimate that our public functionaries are afraid of the Jewish and other non-Christian vote. The fact is mentioned simply to emphasize the proposition that, if favors are to be asked of the Christian's God it is high time that He were officially recognized as the Lord our God. A little more American courage and much less of German philosophy in our theology and ethics would set well on our prayers for victory and our general confidence in Heaven in these trying days.

If we care for an assurance that our nation will not sometime join the long procession of other principalities and powers that have marched lockstep into oblivion it behooves us to get right and keep right with God.

This is not pessimism but Christian common sense. The saving factor in our American life is the salt of Christianity: and it is for individual Christians to maintain the savor of that salt. This is a matter, therefore, of individual responsibility. "If every one would look to his own reformation how easy it would be to reform the nation." In other words it is for you and me to keep our skirts clear of the sins that jeopardize our national life and welfare. Whatever others may do, it is for us as followers of Christ to refrain from boastful pride, money-madness, Sabbath desecration, moral paltroonery and other sins that, when popularized, are sure to alienate any nation from the favor of God.

Let us keep on praying for victory on the firing line; but the victory we want is one that will exalt the glory of God above "Old Glory" in our American life. Ours must be that larger patriotism which contemplates the Parliament of man. If we are to justify ourselves for participation in this world's war it must be because America, as a Christian nation, has a mission for the world. "Liberty Enlightening the World" is not enough. For the torch in her hand substitute a cross, and you have it. So ends the Battle Hymn of the Republic:

"In the beauty of the lilies Christ was born across the sea,
With a glory in His bosom that transfigures you and me;
As He died to make men holy, let us die to make men free;
For God is marching on."

It is with this purpose in view that we shall merit the divine favor, have reason to call for victory on the embattled field and enter upon a warrantable assurance of the perpetuity of our national life.

✻ ✻ ✻

Loyalty to the Lord of the Sabbath

BY WILLIAM NORRIS BURR.

What does the Christian Sabbath mean to me, a professed follower of the Author and Finisher of the Christian faith? Shall I look upon the day as one that should be made to stand out among the days of the week as one for distinctively spiritual thought and activity, or shall it be to me about as other days, to be given over, if I so choose, to many of the ordinary occupations, under the pressure of a conviction that all days may be "holy days," and that all worthy employment is "holy," and so fitted to any day? Or, if I yield—and, apparently, yield I must—to the tyranny of toil on six days of the week, is it not just to myself that I take the one day which general custom has decreed shall be a time of lessened activity along the restricted way of the common task, and take to the broad avenues of recreation? I am a slave six days in the week—may I not be a man of freedom on the one other day?

But, hold! Am I steering this query craft of mine by the stars or by some false light that may have come flickering before me as I sail the sea of life? This is the Christian Sabbath. The Lord Christ is lord of all that bears His name—there can be no other to dictate the laws of His realm. What would He have me to do on His Sabbath day? Where would He have me go? This message has just reached me from some unknown source:

"When we in our wickedness grow hard,
The wise gods seal our eyes;
In our own filth drop our clear judgments;
Make us adore our errors; laugh at us,
While we strut to our confusion."

Am I in danger of becoming a victim of these "wise gods," these usurpers, who have no right to any claim as lords of the Christian Sabbath? This is "the Lord's day." The day of what lord? I must not forget that this is the supreme query when I list my questions concerning the proper observance of the Sabbath.

"The most fatal symptoms of national depravity are the absence of a healthy public opinion, indifference to character in politics, neglect of moral education as a means of developing character, and the stifling of the spirit of brotherhood in a desperate struggle for existence. When God is thus forgotten and the gracious influences of His Spirit are no longer recognized in public and private life, a country may well be degraded into the ranks of the wicked nations."

Dare I face that and not breathe some such prayer as this?—

"Help me, O God, to take my stand as a patriot, a lover of my country, by spending this day in a manner that becometh one who is committed to the mind and spirit of thy Son, Jesus Christ, the Lord of the Christian Sabbath."

THE SAFE PLACE IN LIFE

By Rev. I. Mench Chambers, D.D.

THE personal longing of the human heart through the ages has been for a place of safety. In these troubled days thousands are wandering through a maze of experiment, while others are taking their burdens through earnest prayer up to God, in the hope of grasping a sense of security. Mankind lost his conviction of security in Eden. A racial wandering ensued. God in his mercy came to man in the person of Jesus Christ to help him find rest. What was lost in Eden was given back to the world on Calvary.

Trust in God is the only rock of the soul. Do we really know what it is to trust? To lean and wait and risk all in His hands? These times demand that we learn this lesson. To trust all—everything absolutely is a hard lesson. The abundance of life and its easy measure of outward blessing have pushed back from many the experience of trusting God for our "daily bread." It is a great thing to be satisfied in calmness of spirit to abide God's issue concerning us.

To trust God is the long hard lesson of life. Many have been trusting Him in isolated experiences, and are lost to repose in the deeper and more trying hours of life. You may think you trust Him, but have you ever sat down calmly and thought out whether you could trust Him anywhere, and under all the exigencies of life? Now comes into human experience an hour which reveals to our surprise the littleness of faith.

Trust is safety. In clouds or sunshine to know the full wealth of His sustaining grace and love is a great heritage. To feel when the shadows fall that even there His eternal all infinite care is yours—this is peace.

To the real Christian life's bitter experiences are the fires which burn out the dross. Here is wrought of God the deep refining of our spiritual natures. Here we learn faith and composure and receive peace, which is the dearest gift of God. The soul thus finds its exodus out of all distress into a deeper and more blessed fellowship with Jesus. In Him we learn to know our safety. Here we learn the spirit which is even deeper than the words of the hymn:

"Anywhere with Jesus
I can safely go,
Anywhere He leads me
In this world below."

I have been thinking a great deal of a scene described in the blessed book. It is the Garden of Gethsemane. We perhaps think we know something about that garden. We read of it. We have looked at our Lord as He suffered there. We have read with a sympathetic sorrow of His bitter cup and how He drank it. But we never entered nor expected to enter that garden ourselves.

Yet Gethsemane is a garden we must each enter sometime. Trust in God's help keeps us safe even there. The day will come when Jesus will appear and say to you, "Come with Me." He will take you through Gethsemane's gate. There will be loneliness, the cup and prayer. There will be His sustaining grace. There will be angel help, and out of it all submission and the gift of a deeper peace. Calvary will lie ahead of you as you take your exit from the garden, it will be the place where you will be crucified with Christ, where at last you shall have learned to lay all down for Christ."

Along this road each pilgrim of God must pass. How can we do it? Where can we find strength for the journey? Listen, God is near. He has said, "As thy day thy strength shall be," "My grace will be sufficient for thee." "I will never leave nor forsake thee." In thousands of lives this fact is recorded each day, and God will not forget you in the testing hour. Safety is the knowledge of His presence, in all the redeeming processes of the soul.

Thus we shall come up through the daily discipline of our souls into the clear and unchanging conviction of His infinite love which holds us fast. Along whatever road you must take these words of God may be read on each mile-post,—"Whoso putteth his trust in God is safe." Let us master and keep this trust. In this sense of safety let us abide, until Jesus shall again return and gather us into the raptures of His presence.

✻ ✻ ✻

Unseeing Eyes

BY G. W. TUTTLE

In beautiful thought and language a poet friend of mine tells of meeting a woman amid the most beautiful scenery and attractive surroundings of nature, who complained because "there was nothing at all to see."

Then he paints a word picture of nature's charms which were wooing him every foot of the way; the mountain peaks, and trees, and streams, which made an ever-changing vision of enchantment; the birds which he noted by the wayside, their habits, and plumage, and charming songs. The woodland attractions seemed to him to vie with each other as if they would say; "Just take a look at me first." Still this woman with unseeing eyes, said that there was "nothing at all to see."

How many unseeing eyes there are in the world. Many reasons combine to make people blind. With some men dollars are like the blinders on the bridle of a horse, they have been held so near the eyes that they have shut out from view both the wonderful beauties of nature and the goodness hid in the hearts of men. They look at a beautiful picture but see only a daub of paint. They fail to see or to understand God, because their vision fails to reach beyond the warped shingles on the barn.

The lure of pleasure blinds many eyes to the pain, and sorrow, and need about them. What an illusion and delusion is pleasure; how empty, vain, and unsatisfying the life that vainly and blindly pursues, but never quite overtakes, pleasure.

Then the cares and responsibilities of life multiply; we are so busy, so much is expected of us, the days are so short, and in our haste and in our own need we forget to look out and see the need of a neighbor. We look in, but not out; down, but not up—no wonder there is but little for 'us to see; no wonder that blinded mortals say despairingly: "There is nothing at all to see."

Alas for the blind eyes that cannot see the virtues in the lives about them. Life loses its zest and charm when we become blind and unresponsive to the lives about us; when the fragrance of a good life has no power to charm us; when a neighbor's joy awakens no responsive echo, and his sorrow touches no sympathetic chord, in our hearts.

We need to say; "O Lord, help us to go about with open eyes and responsive hearts, for then will life be rich and luminous and we shall tread the service paths with Thee."

C. REXFORD RAYMOND, D.D.

The Printed Page As A Messenger of the Gospel

A Sermon in Commemoration of the Ninety-third Anniversary of the American Tract Society

BY

REV. C. REXFORD RAYMOND, D.D.

Preached in the South Congregational Church, Brooklyn, N. Y.

TEXT

"How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace, that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation, that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth." Isaiah 52:7.

THE very charm of our text and the beauty of its words, may blind us to the thought. These words sound very religious; and they are. They have been applied to the preaching of the Gospel in Churches, and they may be. But they did not mean that at all to the mind of the prophetic writer.

He was speaking to the children of Israel when they were in exile and enduring hardship. He referred to the courier who carried the news of the battle. The Israelites could not send messages to Jerusalem by wire. They could not depend for their despatch bearers on the "wireless" with its swift wings of the lightning. They depended upon the swift courier who could come over the hills of Zion with his message.

What is meant by these words may be illustrated by my own experience in having messages come to me in the mountains of Kentucky. The people in that region even now get the story of the battles of Europe by having someone come over the mountains and tell them how the battle goes. "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace, that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation, that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth."

If a man should come into the South Church this very morning saying that the Central Powers have been defeated and the Lord God reigneth, how beautiful such a man would appear to us! His face would shine as the glory of the sun.

The prophet, referring to that well known experience of his people, applies it with prophetic insight to their condition in trouble and distress. What the prophet did, we must do. We must be heralds of God. The prophet looked into the future and said, "The Lord reigneth." It is the Christian's business to be witness that God reigns. We say that in so many words when we say that it is our business to preach the Gospel.

The Gospel is the Good News—the good tidings for a world where the forces of righteousness seem to be overwhelmed by the forces of evil. The good news is that God reigneth. So we are messengers. We are heralds of the evangel to carry the Gospel. We are witnesses. It is the business of the Church of Christ to know and witness the truth foreseen by the prophet that the Lord God omnipotent reigneth. In spite of the murder of Belgian babies, in spite of the ravages of Armenia, in spite of all this, it is the business of the Christian world to preach the good news that the Lord God omnipotent reigneth and that He will save us from overwhelming defeat.

And so my message at this morning service is good news for the times or tracts for the times. How shall we publish the Gospel?

There are many ways. There are some set apart by Divine order to preach. Some will preach in pulpits as pastors of churches. Some such men have never been ordained. Any man who has the gift of speech, who is the master of assemblies in such an hour as this, if not in a church, then upon a soap box, should preach God's righteousness.

Let us also realize the power of Christian conversation to be exerted by every Christian man and woman. As we go about our business we have the opportunity to radiate a confident faith in God. We must never admit in our conversation that we have a fear that righteousness may be defeated. There is poured out on every side pessimism and we are to be heralds of faith. "For every idle word that a man shall speak he shall give an account thereof in the day of judgment." Concerning the power of God to bring about the power of righteousness, you are either wielding a propaganda for righteousness or a propaganda for evil. A man who goes about on the street today with pessimistic utterances is a traitor to his country and his God. We are to be preachers of righteousness at the breakfast table, at the dinner table, in the office, on the street, declaring always that the Lord God omnipotent reigneth.

There is another thing that we can do. Some of us cannot talk, but we can all help to publish the Gospel. We can help publish the Gospel by the use of the printed page. What is the message that we should radiate from pulpit, forum and office, in our schools and in our letters? The letters that we send out contribute greatly to the morale of our times. One general quality which should be in evidence is our faith that a good God reigns. That means two things. It means, first, that we believe in the goodness of God. People are questioning the goodness of God. They say, "How can there be a good God when we think of the outrages upon the Belgians and the butchery of the Armenians?" The whole message of the cross of Christ can be expressed in the faith of Jesus in His filial consciousness concerning God. We are Christians because we believe in a good God. In the second place, it means that we believe in a good God who reigns. Note the growing spirit of faith in a man like Mr. H. G. Wells. Before the war his writings bore scarcely a reference to God. Now he has come to believe in a good God. One more step may lead him to believe in a God who reigns. Then he may indeed make his writings tracts for our times, to carry comfort and assurance of faith, and to fortify the morale of all English speaking races. We need to say that God is good. We need also to say that a good God reigns.

Furthermore, the tracts of the times must point in the new direction in which God is leading us. When we discover the way in which God is leading us we are led to make new ventures of faith, and can believe that God speaks to us. If he spoke to Moses and to Abraham, He can speak to us. We need tracts which shall direct the thought of the world to the way in which God is leading the race. It will be a new world when after the war the representatives of all nations sit around the green table and write the covenant of a new civilization. God then will not let us go back to the world of yesterday. With tears of repentance the world will wash away some of the horrors and abuses of an outworn world.

It is the duty of the prophet of the times to prepare for that coming council of the nations. In the shadow God is leading us into a new internationalism, and into a new industrialism. The men in khaki will not come back to any nation, Russia, Germany or America, without exerting a determining share in establishing a true democracy which shall establish not only a freedom of worship but a freedom of politics, of business and of the social order. The prophet who sends out the tracts which are timely must take note of the new obligations of brotherhood and assert the place of the Sermon on the Mount in the business world of today.

After our heroes in service have fought shoulder to shoulder, side by side, with all the races of men for the common ideals of mankind, they will come back to the plow, to the store and to business with a clearer sense of what it means to be brethren. We shall see more clearly than that we are the children of one Father. There is going to be a new attitude of the new world concerning social things which have sapped the morale and poisoned the nation at the center. The coming abolition of the liquor traffic is only a symbol and a sign concerning our new attitude toward decency, morality and virtue.

We must speak aloud in words that shall be followed by deeds to rid the race of the ancient evils under which the race has struggled. I have heard people say that there is no use in proceeding to abolish the liquor traffic, because people have always been drunkards. Others denounce laws against flagrant immorality, because people have always been vicious. But the men in khaki will come back from the battle to give us strength in the fight against these real enemies of the human race.

There is one more thing of which I wish to speak. Our men will come back with a new revelation of Christian unity. Christians henceforth must emphasize unity of effort. The Christian service of the war teaches us this.

The American Tract Society is fitted to help to send forth this glad news of the Gospel. It is world-wide in its activities. It is national in its scope. It is alert to see new opportunities in the hour when this new world begins to dawn upon our vision. One million copies of good literature have been sent to the boys in the trenches and on the seas. I thank God that there was an organization ready to send the timely news.

We are living in one of those great eras of history in the destiny of untold centuries. It is our opportunity to pull an oar in the boat. We must not fail to pull with all our power to maintain the morale of the nation. Do we believe in God, in a good God, in a God who reigns? Then let us send our faith to the uttermost parts of the world. Fortify every bit of propaganda which makes for faith, which makes for the strength of the nation. God, that God who looked upon a race of martyrs in Armenia, is a God who will use us as instruments to make a world in which these things shall henceforth be forever impossible. And so we are to join our voices and our songs with the chorus of the messengers who go from hill top to hill top publishing the good news of the Gospel, that the Lord God the Father omnipotent reigneth. Let us thank Him that we can put our hands into the hands of others and co-operate in the world-wide mission of the Gospel.

In the Waving Corn

BY L. D. STEARNS.

I've been trying to read the newspaper, but the twittering of the birds, the little love note sounding so clear and sweet that one can almost hear the words, "I love you! love you! love you!" and the flung back answer, quick and clear, from another tree, "Love! Love! yes, sweet, I love you!"—the soft, faint rustle of the leaves, the graceful swaying of the bough overhead, the busy insects hurrying to and fro, intent upon their work, or perhaps pleasure, all call me loudly—insistently—until I put my paper by and wander along with them in their world, listening to the message they bring to heart, and soul, and life.

My heart reaches out with a sudden love this morning to the wide, open sweep of the country—its green fields—its clear, broad stretches of earth and sky. I'm living again those hours when, as a child, I would hide between the tall, straight, waving rows of corn, that seemed to my childish fancy the entrance to a different world from mine, alive with its thousand different voices, as it rustled and swayed and whispered so mysteriously.

I'd pull the green leaves from the corn and lay the silken floss close to my hot cheeks as I sat and dreamed, there in the old corn-field, of other worlds and other lives than my own, and in a strange child-fashion I wondered if some day I would wake and find that school, and home, and church—all the daily, commonplace life I was living—was just a dream, the same as when I woke mornings from other dreams that, while they lasted, had seemed as real as any of my days there in the waving corn. Then I'd go a step further and wonder what, in that case, I would find the other life was like—that life which was no dream.

Ah, those days of mystic wonder—of half-frightened reaching out to the life ahead—of wholly passionate love for the life that was! eager, dreaming, questioning—those days in the waving corn!

But that is far away—childhood, and the country life of dreams, with the lure of the corn, the birds, the fresh, sweet, clinging touch of new turned earth. Now, I have grown to love the city, too—its never-ceasing hum of life and work; the clang, clang of the passing cars; the honk of the automobiles as they go whizzing past with their human freight; the tap, tap of ever-sounding feet, now slow and faltering, now springing and glad, now quick, decided, strong; the thud of the heavy work horses and the prance and toss of the sleek, long-limbed steed as he passes gaily along.

I love the busy life that fills my days with work. I love the mornings, clear and beautiful, seeming almost like a benediction straight from God, before the world begins its day of toil. I love the evening, with its well-earned time for study, reading, companionship.

Ah, friend, the story of life is, after all, simply Life! What is the difference whether it speak through the rustle of the corn, the hoeing of the garden, the quiet of field and stream, or the busy, ceaseless hum of activity and life? The difference, I am thinking, lies all in us. Whether we are here, or there, we will catch an echo of the glory and the greatness if we but pause and listen, until slowly—surely—the full, true comprehension dawns upon us at last and we awaken from our dream to a reality that is wonderful and vast and true—the reality of life as God sees it; for the tale, down at the very heart of things, is always the same—a tale of wonder, and beauty, and love.

Sense, Sand and Sanctity

BY JAMES ELMER RUSSELL.

"There will be thousands of positions open," writes some one of work in the Army Y. M. C. A., "for men of sense and sand and some sanctity."

Sense, sand, and sanctity! Are they not just the three characteristics which all young men need whatever their life work or their form of service may be? The time has gone by when mere piety could be thought sufficient, if such a time ever existed. The young man of the right sort to-day knows how to use his brains. He has sense, he has sand, and will see the thing through which he undertakes; and most fundamental of all, he has sanctity—that is his life is clean, he is a Sir Galahad, a disciple of Him who said, "Blessed are the pure in heart."

Sense does not mean book knowledge. It means the power to use the mind to reach right and practical conclusions. Sense is common sense heightened by all of life's experiences. He who knows how to use aright whatever he has learned either from books or without books has sense. Sense is really what the writer of the Book of Proverbs has in mind when he so often commends wisdom, and he truly says, "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." In other words he who ignores God or forgets Him is really lacking in sense.

Sand in character means staying quality. A man of sand is gritty and determined. Like the bull dog he never lets go when once he gets a grip. Sand is, however, not mainly a matter of muscle, although it may sometimes show itself in great physical strength and endurance; rather is sand a matter of the will. He who has an unshaken and an unshakeable purpose is the man of sand. Sense shows the way and sand keeps a man jogging along, though weariness has come and rest would be sweet.

He who has real sense will have sanctity. At the very lowest estimate an unclean life is an illustration of a lack of good sense which has become foolishness. There is nothing effeminate in real sanctity. Sanctity requires virility and sand. A weakling lives without God, and goes the way of the dissolute, while only he who is strong may climb to the heights where stand the comrades of the Christ.

Who then is a real Christian? He is a man of whom these three things are splendidly true. He is a man of sense, sand and sanctity.

How to Win Friends

BY EMMA YOUNGLOVE.

The Bible is a wonderful book of Friendship. In its story of David and Jonathan there is depicted a model friendship, than which no other is more famous. The same book has presented to us other winsome men, who were ideal friends. Nowhere, in the pages of history or literature, is a more winsome man than Joseph to be found. The way in which he went about doing kindly deeds and making friends all through life, is a charming study in one of the great arts of living. John, the beloved disciple, is another winsome man, filled with the spirit of love. And the Psalmist says of the Son of Man himself, "There is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother."

Besides these wonderful illustrations of friendship, the Bible contains two recipes for friendship, which are unsurpassed. The first is this:—The man who has friends must show himself friendly. It costs something to show one's self friendly. It means oftentimes preferring another's pleasure to our own. It involves the sacrifice of our plans and our comfort, for the sake of others. It means giving to others, sharing with others, and doing for others. If one would widely extend his friendships, then all these favors must be like bread cast upon the waters—bestowed freely and oftentimes with little prospect of return. The habit of mind and life must become generous and almost lavish, like the sunshine.

The other Biblical recipe for making friends is this:—Love thinketh no evil. One who would make friends must believe in others. He must impute to them worthy motives. He must give more consideration to their virtues than to their faults. Moreover, he must assume that their attitude towards himself is friendly.

"You have no right," said a minister long ago, "to presume that another's thoughts toward you are less kindly than your thoughts toward him. You have no right to think him less friendly than you are yourself." To at least one sensitive, shrinking hearer the suggestion came as a revelation of the human love which surrounded her on all sides. It brightened life for her and permanently enlarged her sense of wealth in friendships.

Anyone who goes among people showing a friendly spirit and anticipating kindness from others, will gather throughout life a great harvest of friendships.

Reaction to Duty

BY REV. C. A. S. DWIGHT, PH. D.

Action and reaction appear to represent the great law of the world, both physical and moral. By "reaction"—a familiar word at the present time—is meant a reverse or return action, a tendency toward a former state of things, after a diversion of mental interest, or perhaps an interruption due to violent external causes.

Much of the life we actually live is subject to these alternations between opposite poles of thought or feeling. It ought to be the case however that the main movement of our career will be in the distinct line of duty, which means unfolding in loyalty to the mind of Christ. Distractions may come, but the return should be instinctively (like the recoil of a spring that is bent and then let go), to the particular kind of work for which we are gifted, and to which we are called.

After Charles Wesley had suffered a rather serious accident he recorded his personal experience in this terse and significant way: "Gave up writing hymns—until next day." The quiet heroism implied in that simple remark is evident to all. That was Charles Wesley's reaction to duty—for he found his own chief mission in singing the Gosepl, while his brother John preached it. Many another preacher, or Christian worker, has exhibited a similar habitual devotion to his duty. No doubt there were many periods in the experience of David Livingstone when he could do nothing but burn with fever, or rest under the shade of a tree—until next day.

When night falls most of us are very weary with the labors of the waking hours; in such case no more can be expected of tense nerves, or strained back, or tired brain—until next day. Our work below must be done largely in these shifts or watches, now on and again off, but, if we have the true spiritual mettle we will never be found far away from our duty, will continue in love with our job, and, by action and reaction, will win our way finally to the highest and truest success.

HIS VINEYARD AND OURS

The Needs of India

The needs of India are manifold. The people of India need medical, industrial, educational and spiritual aid. The aim of the missionary force in India is to minister to all these various needs, and thereby nurture a full-orbed Christian civilization.

An illustration of what is being done along medical lines is afforded in the picture before us, which shows the splendid hospital for women and children established and maintained by the American Baptist Telugu Mission at Nellore, India. This hospital ministers to the needs of a large number of native Indian people, and the help which the sick women and children receive here prepares their hearts for the reception of the Gospel message.

This Mission at Nellore is one of the many foreign mission stations that have been aided in the past by cash appropriations from the American Tract Society which have been used in the production and circulation of Christian literature in the vernacular.

Another organization which has been similarly aided is the Madras Branch of the Christian Literature Society for India, whose Secretary, Rev. J. Passmore, has recently sent this communication to the American Tract Society:

"The present state of missionary work in this country, and the great need and opportunity for work in literature that face us, constrain me to put before you a statement of the situation in the hope that it may increase your interest in the matter, enlist your prayers on our behalf and bring to us something more in the way of money which is necessary if the need is to be met. Our urgent needs lie along the following three lines:

"1. Literature for aggressive evangelism, such as handbills and tracts in various vernaculars. Of these we issue some 70,000 to 80,000 a month in Madras in two languages; and there are at least another dozen languages in India in which almost an equal number is required. These are issued almost gratuitously. We charge only one Rupee per thousand for them, which is not much more than the cost of distribution whether by post or otherwise.

"2. A very pressing need is literature for helping in the teaching of Scripture in Day and Sunday-Schools. During the last year we issued a syllabus of graded Bible lessons. In this we have made an attempt to provide Scripture lessons for eleven years of school life. It has been very well received and will, I think, be extensively used in schools throughout India. But this is only in English and it is only the syllabus. For this syllabus teachers' and pupils' books have to be issued for at least eight school courses and then translated into about twelve or fifteen different Indian languages. Moreover, to make these lessons effective for the lower classes it is important that we should be able to issue pictures illustrating the lessons. We had thought of trying to issue three-colored pictures but have contented ourselves with a single color. We also need helps for Sunday-School teachers in the various vernaculars and notes on Sunday-School lessons which should be published annually.

"3. A large amount of literature is needed in the various languages for the training of men for the work of ministry and for work as evangelists. Among the books required are the following:

"A Bible Dictionary. This has been done in Tamil and now requires, or will require in the course of a few months, reprinting. It still remains to be done in many other languages more especially in Telugu, Kanarese, Malayalam, Hindi, Gujerati, Marathi, Bengali, Sinhalese and Urdu.

"Commentaries on the New Testament. As far as I am aware there is no single language in India in which commentaries on the whole of the books of the New Testament are obtainable. In Tamil we have less than half of the books of the New Testament; in Telugu less than in Tamil, and the same applies to Malayalam and Kanarese and mutatis mutandis to all the languages in India.

THE TELUGU MISSION HOSPITAL FOR WOMEN AND CHILDREN AT NELLORE, INDIA

"A Handbook of Introduction to the Old Testament.

"A Text-Book of Old Testament History.

"A Text-Book of New Testament History.

"This is the program I have before me for the next few years, the carrying out of which is absolutely essential to the efficiency of evangelistic and scripture teaching work all over the country.

"I am sure I shall be justified in stating that unless this literature is forthcoming the work of evangelism, the teaching of Scripture to the children in our Day and Sunday-Schools, and the training of workers for evangelists, teachers and preachers must be seriously handicapped. We have been struggling for years to try in some small measure to overtake the demand, but the growth of the Indian Church, into which thousands and tens of thousands are being gathered annually, is so rapid and the increase of missionary effort, and especially missionary effort that requires literature for its assistance and support, is so vast that it is impossible to overtake the demand in any degree whatsoever. So much for the need.

"What shall I say of the opportunity? There can be no question that it is growing daily. On the one hand there is a great increase in the number of those who are receiving education, especially in English, and who thereby are being prepared for the Gospel. The education that is being given them whether it be in missionary institutions or non-missionary institutions is acting as a solvent of their religious belief, and in this way a great and effectual door is being continually thrown more widely open for the Gospel. On the other hand great movements are taking place among the masses of India. From among the fifty and sixty millions of out-castes thousands and tens of thousands are actually coming into the Church year by year. In the Telugu country a great movement of this kind is taking place; and unless those who are thus brought in are given some measure of instruction, which it is impossible to give without the necessary literature, nothing can be hoped for but a weak and inefficient church in the future.

"I have known India for many years. For the last nine years I have constantly travelled all over it, from north to south and from east to west, and never in my judgment has there been such an opportunity for the spread of the Gospel and especially for the use of such literature as we desire to publish in the vernaculars as there is at present. The political situation gives great poignancy to this opportunity. For I believe that unless the possibilities which now present themselves to us are taken advantage of; there is a great danger lest political movements, political prejudices and influences related to them, should draw the population of India away from the approach it is making to the Gospel of the Risen Christ. We want a flood of literature which will present the Christ to the peoples of this country and which will maintain that presentation when the preacher has turned his back and his voice is silent. If, therefore, you can do anything whatsoever, great or small, towards helping us to meet the demand that is being made upon us we shall be profoundly grateful, and in doing this I am confident that you will be serving the kingdom of God very abundantly."

The First Sunday-School Secretarial Conference of the Orient

The World's Sunday-School Association has a group of field secretaries in the Philippines, China, Korea and Japan. Rev. J. L. McLaughlin has been the Sunday-School Secretary in the Philippines for the past five years. Half of his time has been devoted to the work of the American Bible Society. He has just been called home by the Bible Society and while en-route he was able to hold important conferences with the Sunday-School secretaries of China and Japan. Rev. E. G. Tewksbury, of Shanghai, is in charge of that work in China and directs the work of the China Sunday-School Union. Mr. H. E. Coleman is now the full-time educational secretary for Japan. Until recently he divided his time with the Foreign Mission Board of the Friends Mission. These men, together with Rev. Harutoshi Kawasumi, National Sunday-School Secretary for Japan; Rev. C. T. Collyer, Secretary for Korea, and Rev. N. Tamura, Sunday-School author and specialist, of Japan, held a ten days' conference in Shanghai for the study of national Sunday-School problems. Some of the vital topics considered were Organization, Promotion, Literature, Standards, Evangelism, Special Days, Teacher-training, Home Welfare, the Sabbath and Temperance.

Another major subject was that of the next Convention of the World's Sunday-School Association which will be held in Toyko, Japan, soon after the war is over. In addition to the general and inspirational meetings where all the delegates will be present there will be many sectional conferences for groups of Koreans, Chinese and Japanese, where specialists from abroad will have an opportunity to give definite instruction along the lines of modern methods. Some meetings will be held in the well-equipped Y. M. C. A. building. This will be the location for the stereopticon and moving-picture demonstrations as well as for many group meetings. For the general gathering of delegates it is proposed to erect a temporary building, possibly along the lines of some of the large evangelistic tabernacles that are now being used in America.

The Sunday-School secretaries in the Orient are not lessening their great work while waiting for the World's Convention, but are projecting numerous summer schools and institutes for the training of native leadership. While Messrs. Coleman, Kawasumi and Tamura of Japan were in China they held several meetings for the Japanese in Shanghai. Then Mr. Coleman went to Nanking and Tsingtau to hold similar meetings with the Japanese Christians in those cities. Thence he passed through Peking and joined Mr. Kawasumi and Mr. Tamura in Manchuria, after which they spent two weeks touring Korea in the interest of Sunday-School work among both Japanese and Koreans. Their Sunday-School tour has just closed with an Institute at Kyushu, Fukuoka, Japan.

Among the Copts

The Ibis, a houseboat used by the American Presbyterian Mission on the Nile for over half a century, is now cruising the Sea of Joseph, an ancient waterway which was once an affluent of the river of Egypt. The missionaries have been received everywhere with kindness both by Copts and Moslems and have been surprised to find so many Coptic churches and monasteries in the region. The priests have received the visitors courteously and have cooperated in the meetings. Thousands of tracts from the Nile Mission Press have been distributed. Among the places visited was the ancient city of Oxyrhynchus where "The Lost Sayings of Jesus" and other manuscripts were discovered a few years since.

The Coptic churches have long been in a condition of coma and it is therefore all the more gratifying to notice signs of awakening. Mr. Trowbridge who is doing relief work among Armenian refugees reports a contribution of $32.50 from the Orthodox Copts of the village of Ghanaïm, incited thereto by the generosity of Copts in another village nearby. The village of Aghama made a joint offering combining the gifts of the Orthodox and Evangelical churches,—a quite unprecedented thing. The letter accompanying the gift prays for the peace and presence of the Lord Jesus in the coming year for the Evangelical believers. This is remarkable in view of the fact that for a generation past the Orthodox Copts have felt an intense bitterness for Protestant believers.

Conserving Food in the Congo

The food supply in the Belgian Congo was the subject of a recent conference between Mr. E. de Cartier de Marchienne, the minister from Belgium, and Bishop Walter R. Lambuth, chairman of the war work commission of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Missionaries of this denomination in African mission fields have been asked to plant and to encourage planting of corn and other foodstuffs, so that the Congo may contribute its share to the world's supply of food. A plan was formulated at this conference whereby the efforts of all missionaries in the Congo will be coordinated.

Notes upon the Topics Used
in Christian Endeavor
and Other Young People's Societies.

THE PRAYER MEETING

By
Rev. Henry Lewis
Ph.D.

AUGUST 4.

All for Christ: II. Our Ambitions
Philippians 3:4-11.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M., July 29. Effort to rise. Luke 13:23-30.
T., July 30. To win the prize. 1 Cor. 9:24-27.
W., July 31. Wrong ambitions. Matt. 20:20-28.
T., Aug. 1. Ambitious to serve. Isa. 6:1-8.
F., Aug. 2. Ambitious to build. 2 Sam. 7:1-17.
S., Aug. 3. Ambitious to know God. Ps. 27:1-14.

This is the second in the series of topics under the general title, "All for Christ." A month ago we considered the subject of consecrating all our abilities to Christ. Now we are to think of centering all our ambitions in Christ.

When we consult the dictionary as to the meaning of the word ambition, we find that it is used in two widely different senses. For one thing it signifies an inordinate desire to gain power or distinction, as by obtaining office, military fame, literary eminence or wealth. On the other hand, it means an eager desire or steadfast purpose to achieve something commendable as, for example, the improvement of one's character or abilities.

Napoleon furnishes us with a shining illustration of the wrong kind of ambition and we see in the Kaiser of Germany another living example of this same kind of unworthy ambition.

In every true Christian, who is striving to grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour we may see an illustration of the right kind of ambition.

The Question of Motive

We may readily determine whether a given ambition is right or wrong by considering the question of motive. Napoleon's ambition was a curse to the world because he sought power simply for selfish ends. But one who seeks power and influence, in order that he may use that power and influence for the glory of God and the uplift of humanity is cherishing a worthy and commendable ambition.

It is important that the motive which governs our actions be pure and sincere. We must not deceive ourselves by thinking that we are seeking the good of others when a closer inspection of our innermost hearts would disclose the fact that we are really striving to better ourselves.

Paul's Ambition

In his Epistle to the Philippians Paul tells us what was his supreme ambition. He says, "What things were gain to me, these have I counted loss for Christ. Yea, verily, and I count all things to be loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord: for whom I suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but refuse that I may gain Christ, and be found in Him."

Paul's whole career as an apostle of Christ shows us how faithfully he strove to fulfill this purpose, and how his highest ambition was to be united with Christ in service for humanity.

The Christian's Ambition

Paul's ambition is a worthy one for every Christian to adopt. We should be so united with Christ that we may be said to live in Him. If we live in Christ, we shall follow in His steps. We shall do the things that are well-pleasing in His sight, and we shall give ourselves freely and lovingly in service for others as He gave Himself for the redemption of the world.

The true reward of the Christian's ambition is found in the commendation of the Master Himself, "Well done, good and faithful servant." It is found in the joy of service and in the benediction which comes from the consciousness that we have lived not for self, but for Christ, not for the exploitation of others but for their uplift.

AUGUST 11.

Lessons in Nature's School
Prov. 6:6-8; John 12:24, 25.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M., Aug. 5. The ploughman. Luke 9:57-62.
T., Aug. 6. The vineyard. Isa. 5:1-7.
W., Aug. 7. The stars. Ps. 19:1-14.
T., Aug. 8. Farmers' troubles. Matt. 13:24-30.
F., Aug. 9. The serpent's cunning. Matt. 10:16-20.
S., Aug. 10. The dead fly. Eccl. 10:1-3.

This topic has doubtless been selected for use at this time in view of the fact that August is the favorite month for vacation purposes. Many Endeavorers are spending this month in the mountains, by the seashore, or in some rural retreat. They are coming close to the heart of nature, and now is their opportunity to learn some delightful lessons in Nature's school.

The Daily Bible Readings suggest a few of the lessons which we may learn from the world of nature, and we may multiply these almost indefinitely from the pages of the Bible, for many of the writers of the Scriptures lived in closest contact with the heart of nature.

The sayings of Jesus Himself abound in references to the world of nature. He spoke of the lilies of the field, and from them he drew the ever-needed lesson of trust in God for the necessities of life. He pointed to the birds of the heaven and from them drew the lesson of God's provision for our daily food. He referred to the sparrows, and from them He drew the lesson of God's protecting care for all His children.

Many of the parables of Jesus are founded on facts in the world of nature. The parable of the barren fig tree taught the danger that lay in the unbelief of the Jewish Church. The parable of the Sower taught the various effects that result from the preaching of religious truth. The parable of the grain of mustard seed emphasized the small beginning and the future growth of Christ's Kingdom. The parable of the Vine and its Branches taught the lesson of Christ's care over the Church, and of the necessity for each Christian to abide in Him who is the true Vine.

These are but a few of the many illustrations that might be given of how Christ drew on the world of nature for facts with which to press home deep spiritual truths.

What Nature Teaches Us

There are some great truths which even a brief sojourn in the country may reveal to us, as we study the world of nature.

One thought that is impressed upon us is that of repose. If we go to the mountains, we look up day after day, and there they stand before us, unchanged in their grandeur and suggesting to our minds a perpetuity which is expressed in the familiar saying, "as eternal as the hills."

If we go to the seashore, we are impressed by the mighty power of the ocean. And then there comes to our minds the word of the prophet Isaiah, who reminds us that it is God alone "who hath measured the waters in the hollow of his hand, and meted out heaven with the span, and comprehended the dust of the earth in a measure, and weighed the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance."

One of the choicest lessons that we may learn from the world of nature is that of a love for the beautiful. The more closely we study God's handiwork the more we are impressed with its beauty. The flowers of the field, the plumage of the birds, the trees of the forest, all these are a revelation of beauty. And even when we use a microscope and look into the more minute creations of the world of nature we find there still most entrancing forms of beauty.

AUGUST 18.

Using Our Pens for Christ
Luke 1:1-4; III John 1-14.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M., Aug. 12. A prophet's pen. 1 Chron. 28:19-21.
T., Aug. 13. Paul's pleading pen. Philemon.
W., Aug. 14. A seer's pen. Rev. 1:1-3, 11, 19, 20.
T., Aug. 15. The pen of God. Exod. 34:1-9.
F., Aug. 16. A warning pen. Jude 1-10.
S., Aug. 17. A poet's pen. Deut. 31:22; 32:1-7.

This is an interesting, practical and timely topic. We cannot be too grateful to those whose pens were used of God for the production of the books of the Bible. Luke's introduction to his Gospel gives us an insight into the mind of the writer of that wonderful narrative. His truthfulness is evident, for as has been well observed, if he had been a forger, he would undoubtedly have claimed to be an eye-witness, whereas he simply claims to give the results of an accurate investigation.

Modern Writing Implements

In these days the typewriter has to a large extent displaced the pen, but in the consideration of this subject we will not limit our thought to any particular kind of writing implement, but will regard any device which serves for the transference of thought into tangible form as coming within the scope of our topic.

Writing Letters for Christ

One of the best ways of using our pens for Christ is to write letters that in some way convey a Christian message. Such letters may be sent to those who are absent from home. The boy who has left the country for the city should not be forgotten, but he should receive letters that will keep old memories alive and will stir his interest in home, mother and heaven.

Write to the Soldier Boys

One very effective way of using our pens for Christ at this period in our country's history is by writing to the boys who have enlisted in the army and navy. We are assured on the highest authority that the ministry of letters is one of the best aids in maintaining the morale of our forces. In writing to these soldier and sailor boys, let us see to it that our letters are cheerful. Let us minimize our own troubles and endeavor to write in such a way as to give inspiration and courage to these defenders of our land and champions of the cause of liberty and democracy. Let us also endeavor, in our letters, to say a word for Christ, which shall lead these boys to look to Jesus as their Great Commander and to surrender their hearts and lives to His service.

Write to the Sick

The ministry of letters in times of sickness is very helpful. The hours are apt to hang heavy for invalids, and letters of the right kind are like a tonic. It cheers those who are sick to realize that they are not forgotten, and to receive messages of comfort and good cheer from the outside world.

The League of the Golden Pen

Some years ago a busy pastor started what he called the "League of the Golden Pen." It was a simple organization with no constitution, by-laws or dues. The only obligation which those who joined this League assumed was to use their pens for Christ by writing letters from time to time which should carry a Christ-like message to the recipients.

We should all be members of the League of the Golden Pen. Every Christian Endeavorer should use his or her pen for doing service for Christ. Every follower of Christ should write letters which shall carry the evangel of the Gospel and shall thus help to advance the progress of the Kingdom to which we belong.

AUGUST 25.

The Power of the Gospel on the Frontier

Psalms 107:33-43.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M., Aug. 19. The redeeming cross. Tit. 2:11-15.
T., Aug. 20. Pride of citizenship. Acts 21:35-40.
W., Aug. 21. A pioneer. Gen. 12:1-8.
T., Aug. 22. Dangers of new countries. Isa. 5:8-16.
F., Aug. 23. Churches in homes. Rom. 16:1-5.
S., Aug. 24. Welcoming Christ. John 4:39-42.

This is a home missionary topic. The Scripture selected for our study depicts the power of Jehovah to transform a wilderness into a pleasant and fruitful land. So the results of home missionary efforts show the power of Christ to transform godless and wicked places into God-fearing and Christian communities.

God uses people as the means whereby desert lands are changed into fertile fields. He does not perform miracles by which to change a dry land into watersprings, but He allows human energy working under natural law to accomplish this result.

So in the spiritual life, God uses men and women as His instruments for changing the moral tone of a community, and often these instruments are home missionaries.

As we study the religious history of our country we find that the home missionaries of the various denominations have been the chief underlying cause for the spread of Christianity through the frontier regions. These devoted men and women have gone forth as pioneers of the Gospel into the sparsely settled portions of our land, and they have planted the seeds of that Christian civilization which characterizes our land as a whole.

Opportunities Still Available

The task of home missions is not yet completed. Though much seed has been sown, there are still many regions destitute of Christian influences in which the Gospel message should be introduced.

Mining towns in the far West present a needy field for home missionary effort. Logging and lumber camps present another field for the Christian missionary.

There is still work to be done among the Indians. An Indian chief wrote to the Secretary of a home missionary society: "God did not reject us. I hope His friends will not reject us. Our last and only hope is in the Church of Christ."

"The 'Alaska' number of World Outlook tells of the problems met by the 'sky pilot of the dog-sled.' The material in this issue will be very useful to the leader in preparing for the meeting, and it can be obtained for 20 cents by addressing World Outlook, 150 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

The existence of the world war has intensified the need for home missionary effort. Dr. Charles E. Burton, General Secretary of the Congregational Home Missionary Society says:

"Now above all times it is important to conserve and foster the moral character of men in America. Without our seeking it the moral leadership of the world has fallen upon us. The nations of the earth now announce this fact. Moreover, the moral leadership of America rests with the church. Many are the agencies which co-operate with the church, but the powerful sanctions of moral life which animate these institutions emanate from the church.

"The expanding life and the deepening vitality of the church very largely depend upon effective home missionary propaganda. It is not simply that the church grows larger by extending its organization, but that its life becomes more vital as it is energized through expression in out-reaching activity."

OUR YOUNG FOLKS

When Flora Promised

BY CORA S. DAY

ELSIE stopped in the door of the living room, and looked the surprise that she felt. She had expected to find no one there, for Mrs. Allen had gone out; but there, settled cozily in an easy chair with a book, was her sister Flora.

"Why, Flora!" Elsie began. "I thought you had gone over to Elizabeth's long ago! Didn't you say last night that you and Elizabeth were going this afternoon to see the new girl in your Sunday School class?"

Flora glanced up absently, her smile a bit vague. "Oh, I believe I did," she said indifferently. "We were talking about it, and—yes, I guess I did sort of promise I'd go." She yawned. "But I'm so interested in this story and the book's due at the library tomorrow. I'd rather finish it this afternoon than see a dozen new girls. Anyway, Elizabeth won't mind waiting until tomorrow to go, if I explain; and the girl doesn't know anything about it, so it will be all the same to her."

"She has lived here three weeks, and been in your class every Sunday since she came," Elsie said quietly. "I am afraid she will think you are not very sociable girls here in her new home town, if they are all as slow as you and Elizabeth."

But Flora had plunged eagerly into her story again and made no reply; so Elsie said nothing further. She knew Flora would resent or ignore any additional urging of her duty to keep her promise. It was not the first time Flora had broken a promise, when it pleased her whim or suited her convenience for the time being to do so. Elsie was sorry to see this one as lightly set aside as many others had been.

Estelle Bayard, the newcomer, had enrolled in their Sunday School, as she had just reminded Flora, promptly upon her arrival in the village as a resident; and had been assigned to the class nearest her age, in which Flora and Elizabeth were members. Elsie, who was older and teaching a class of small boys, was glad to see a new member added to the little village school. She had liked the new girl's appearance and manner, and had been pleased at the prospect of closer acquaintance with her for Flora.

"But I'm afraid she will please herself about getting acquainted or going to see Estelle, promise or no promise," Elsie thought regretfully, and went about her own affairs.

The afternoon passed. Flora finished her story just before twilight. She laid the book aside and sprang up with sudden animation.

"I'm going down to Elizabeth's, just for a minute," she announced, getting her hat and hailing Elsie from the hall on her way out. "I want to get a new piece of music that she said I might have to try over." Some prodding of memory—or was it conscience?—made her add: "We will not have time to go to see Estelle now. I'll ask Beth if she can go there tomorrow." Away she went, brisk and alert enough when she was intent upon her own plans and pleasure. Elsie looked after her with a knowing little smile.

"Flora is going to find out some day that she cannot always suit herself regardless of other folk's plans or wishes," she thought. "Elizabeth only makes her worse by giving in to her without a murmur whenever Flora pleases to upset any of their settled plans. I wish she would stand up for her rights and make Flora keep her promises after she makes them so freely. Only, I suspect they wouldn't stay chums long, then."

Flora hurried on her way without stopping, until she reached the last crossing between her home and that of her friend. There she had to halt and wait for a big motor truck to pass. It was heavily loaded and going at a rapid pace; the driver no doubt anxious to get home before dark. As it swung round the corner Flora caught her breath sharply—for the huge vehicle skidded as it struck a treacherous muddy spot.

The gasp ended in a scream at sight of what happened so quickly that she could scarcely believe her own eyes. A little runaway had turned the corner coming toward the truck. As the big truck slipped, the little car made a frantic effort to dodge it, failed and struck it with a crash that overturned the lighter car and brought startled hearers running in every direction. Of the two people rescued from the badly wrecked car, the man had been driving was but slightly cut and bruised; the young girl with him was taken from beneath the overturned car unconscious, and carried home in a serious condition. And Flora, standing as if rooted to the spot, looking on with horrified eyes, saw that the man was Mr. Bayard and the girl Estelle, his only daughter.

Flora never quite remembered going break a promise. I'm going to do better. I wish I had begun sooner."

The anxious days of uncertainty over Estelle's chances for recovery—days that lengthened into weeks—helped Flora to remember and grow strong in her good resolve. Then the injured girl began to come slowly back to health and strength; and when she became able to see visitors, she had no more cause to complain that her new girl neighbors were not friendly. Elizabeth and Flora became her close friends. "I've such a lot of broken promises to make up for, and poor Estelle was the chief victim of my worst fault; I feel as if I couldn't ever be half nice enough to her," Flora confided to Elizabeth once. "Do you really think I've improved any in the promise line?"

"You really have," Elizabeth said with a laugh, yet there was a note of real earnestness and satisfaction in the light reply. "Once upon a time, when Flora promised, I always wondered whether she meant it. When Flora makes a promise now, I know it is as good as done."

THE TUG-OF-WAR

on to Elizabeth's home, nor how she told the story. She never forgot how Elizabeth looked at her and said when it was told: "If we had gone to see her this afternoon as we had planned, that would not have happened. For mother called on Mrs. Bayard this afternoon and she was telling her that Mr. Bayard was coming home early to take Estelle out in the car because she was so lonely and nervous and unhappy. Mrs. Bayard explained that Estelle was quite ill just before they moved here, and hasn't yet got back her strength and spirits. She has been fretting, too, because none of us girls came to see her and get acquainted. And now— isn't it too dreadful, to think we—"

Flora stopped her with a tragic little gesture. "It is my fault, not yours," she said, facing the truth squarely at last. "If I had come as I promised, you would have gone with me, no matter what else had to wait. You always kept your part of our plans. I am the one who broke them for any little thing. I've been selfish and careless and untruthful in word and deed." The confession was almost tearful.

"But you didn't know—you didn't think"—Elizabeth began sympathetically. "I know now. I'll never forget again. I'll think of that dreadful scene—that poor girl—every time I am tempted to

A Birthday in a Windmill

BY FELICIA BUTTZ CLARK.

MARIA woke up early in the morning and heard the big wings of the windmill creaking dolefully. Her parents lived in the mill, by the side of the canals in Holland. Every time the great wings moved, grain was ground into flour. The peasants and farmers for many miles around in the flat green fields divided by tiny streams instead of fences, brought their wheat and rye here to be made into flour.

The storm beat about the wind-mill the machinery creaked and Maria was greatly disappointed. It was a shame that to-day, of all days in the year, the rain should come! To be sure, there were not many days when it did not either rain in Holland, or else there was a mist.

Maria went to the window at nine o'clock and looked out.

"It's my birthday," she said gloomily, "and now there's to be no picnic or anything!"

"I wouldn't cry about it," said her mother, clattering around the room in her big wooden shoes. She wore a brown dress, very much patched and a head-dress like a white night-cap. "I see the girls coming now."

Maria clapped her hands with delight, as she watched Bertha and Magda walking over the sand dunes. After all, they would have a party, even if the sun did not shine.

The two girls threw off their dripping oil-skin hoods and coats. They were twins and looked exactly alike, with flaxen hair in flat braids over their heads and gowns that fell to their feet, clad in wooden shoes, which they exchanged for slippers taken from a big lincn bag.

Bertha carried a package, and when Maria opened it she found a large cake, made of raisin bread. On the icing were the letters of her own name, Maria.

"But where shall we eat it?" asked the "birthday girl" in despair, for the rain beat worse than before on the window-panes.

The three forgot how stormy the weather was when they began to play with the dolls, which were much handsomer than any one would have thought to find in a windmill. It was only on festival days, like birthdays and Christmas that Maria was allowed to play with these two dolls which had belonged to her grandmother and had been bought in Amsterdam.

"Now, your birthday feast is ready," the mother said, leading the girls into a very large room that had five walls and five windows. It was just the shape of the windmill.

"Oh!" exclaimed Maria.

And "Oh!" exclaimed Bertha and Magda in just the same tone of voice, with blue eyes, round and big, and exactly alike.

On the walls were blue Delft plates and platters—all very old. The table was set with the best things and there were some cherry blossoms that father had gone out into the storm, to gather.

Best of all, in the very center of the table was the cake that Bertha had carried so carefully through the rain. Around it were eleven candles, all lighted.

"It looks most like a Christmas tree!" Magda said and that made every one laugh and feel comfortable.

How jolly it was to sit around the table and eat such good things! The mother could never tell Bertha and Magda apart and called each by the other's name, creating a perfect gale of merriment.

When the candles had burned down, Maria cut the cake, a big slice for each and just then, father came in for his share. They had some raspberry shrub in small glasses that were said to have been brought from Venice by some great grandfather who was a sea-captain. They were so precious that Maria was almost afraid to touch them for fear they would break. Only on very special occasions were those quaintly formed, rose-colored glasses used; never before on Maria's birthday.

When father stood up and said, "We wish to our dear Maria much health and happiness and God's blessing throughout her life," in the strange foreign way, the "birthday girl" turned red. Everybody stood up around her and touched their glasses full of raspberry shrub to hers and said all sorts of nice things. Maria was beginning to realize that she was no longer a really little girl, because she was now eleven years old, going on twelve.

Days are short in Holland even in the Spring so Bertha and Magda put on their oil-skins, and after curtseying to Maria's mother, went home.

Maria flung the door wide open, and let a ray of sunshine in that peeped between the clouds.

"It was nicer than a picnic," she cried, flinging her arms around her mother's neck. "I thank you so much, dear Mama. After all, I suppose people can be happy in storms as well as sunshine."

And then, the big wings on the windmill waved from side to side and creaked as if they were saying: "Very true, Maria, very true."

Our Fireside

The Lone Starfish

By Ada Lorraine Jex

SELMA flung open the living room door and, running eagerly to her mother's side, she cried, "Oh, darling, look at this letter. It's an answer to mine and every single thing is even better than I hoped. They have taken me into the class, so that part is settled. Next, my room is to be near the University, so near in fact, that the windows overlook the Campus. Isn't that wonderful? Just think, in less than two weeks your country daughter will be living in New York, drinking in information and inspiration. Hurrah! I'll be famous in less than no time," and, laughing at her own conceit, Selma waited joyously for a reply.

But no words came; instead the girl was surprised to see tears in her mother's eyes.

"Why, Lambie, you aren't going to miss me like that, are you?" she questioned anxiously.

"It isn't that, Little Daughter, though, of course, I'll miss you, every minute while you are away. How could it be otherwise? You are my right hand. But I wouldn't let any selfish need on my part stand in the way of your taking the Short-Story Course. Besides, I think the new life will do almost as much to develop your talent as the work itself."

"Then what is the trouble?" Selma asked.

"We won't talk about it now," Mrs. Pemberton answered. "Perhaps things will turn out better than I fear."

But Selma persisted. "Please, if you don't mind, I'd rather know the worst now. Is there any reason why I shouldn't go to New York for the Summer Session?"

"Oh, my dear," her mother answered, "I'm so sorry Aunt Lucy is sick again, too sick this time to come here. I'll have to go to Burlington to take care of her, and I don't know what to do with Margaret during my absence. Lucy is too nervous for me to take Little Sister there. Besides, the doctor said the child ought to go to the seashore for a month or two this summer. A complete change is what she needs to build her up."

"Aunt Lucy will have to hire a nurse or go to the hospital," Selma flared. "The room at Cape Cod is engaged for you and Margaret. It's too late for you to change your plans now."

"Someone's plans will have to be changed," Mrs. Pemberton answered, sadly.

"Minc won't!" the girl stormed. "So much depends on my going to the city!" She broke into tears and left the room hurriedly.

Selma mentally repeated her decision all afternoon and evening. She knew Aunt Lucy couldn't afford to go to the hospital. She knew, too, that Margaret had never been well since that attack of scarlet fever the winter before. These things worried her. But in spite of them she told herself fiercely she would not give up going to the city. It was no selfish desire, the girl reasoned. For in her mind Selma had planned many wonderful gifts to the family when once her stories were accepted.

When night came her pillow was wet with tears. Sleep brought no rest, however, for she dreamed that Little Sister was ill. The doctor pointed a thermometer at her and kept saying, over and over, "She should have gone to the seashore! She should have gone to the seashore!"

A bird singing in a branch of the tree outside the window wakened the sleeper. It was later than usual and the sun poured into the room, showing up the worn spots on the carpet. With a vague feeling of alarm Selma sprang out of bed. Then she remembered her dream. Shivering, the girl ran to the heaped-up little writing desk and carefully penned a note to New York. Tearing the margin from one of her stories she wrote on the slip of paper, "My address after Thursday of this week will be the same as Sister Margaret's, Big Rocks, Cape Cod, until such time as it is thought best for us to come home." If there was heartache in every word, no trace of it showed in her face as she laid the paper at her mother's place at table.

"What's this?" Mrs. Pemberton asked, as she entered with the coffee pot. Then, as she read, the tears brimmed to her eyes.

"How like my little daughter. Thank you," was all she said. But it was enough.

It was very quiet at Big Rocks. There were no other boarders at the little farm house where the girls stopped. They spent their time in hammocks under the trees or else on the beach. Usually they went in bathing in the early part of the afternoon and then Margaret took a nap on the steamer rug her sister spread for her. At first during such times Selma, having made her sacrifice, was content to alternately watch the waves and the faint pink color which was beginning to supplant the pallor in the little girl's cheeks. But after a few weeks the pleasing sense of responsibility began to wear off and the hours dragged wearily. Selma had lots of time in which to write, but, although ideas flitted through her mind, she put them from her with a feeling of bitterness. "What's the use?" she thought. "I'd make the same old mistakes. If I'd taken the Story Course everything would have been different."

Then one day Margaret woke with a cold. Their mother had warned Selma to take no chances, so she sent for the doctor.

"Keep her in bed for a few days, and see that she is amused," he said.

"I'm so tired," Margaret complained during the afternoon. "I wish I had something to do."

"I'll read to you," her sister suggested. But the little girl shook her head.

"I know all the books we brought with us by heart. Tell me a story, please."

A half-formed idea had been hovering in Selma's mind for several days, so she looked off at the sentinel pine tree which had suggested it.

"Once upon a time," she began, and Margaret listened, open mouthed, until she finally fell asleep.

Very tenderly the older girl tucked the covers closer. Then she pulled down the shade and tiptoed out of the room. By that time she herself was interested in the fanciful weaving of her little tale. So she thought it out to a finish, and wrote it, that evening after kissing her sister good-night.

Every day after that Selma thought and wrote stories, unmindful of whether she knew how or not, so anxious was she to please the child. Those that Margaret liked the best, Selma thought about the most and those that the little girl liked the least were either changed or destroyed.

One day in the middle of the story telling a lady dressed in white came down the beach.

"Good morning," she said. "Do you mind if I sit near you? The tide drove me away from my spot."

Looking around, she spread out a shawl and seated herself close to the girls, with her back against a rock.

"Keep on talking," she continued, "I have a book and nothing disturbs me when I'm reading!"

After that Miss Beacon came almost every day. She told the sisters that she had been ill and had come to Big Rocks to recuperate at a fisherman's house not far from their boarding place. She was very quiet and sweet, and it wasn't long before the girls watched eagerly for her coming. Sometimes they talked and at other times Miss Beacon read or embroidered, while Selma told Margaret stories. At first the narrator was embarrassed by having a grown-up listener but the feeling soon vanished and Selma's voice flowed on as unaffectedly as if the little girl constituted the sole audience.

"That's pretty," Miss Beacon exclaimed, as the story of the "Lone Starfish" came to an end. "It's very pretty and original, too. Where did you read it?"

"Why, sister doesn't read them! She makes them all up," Margaret cried proudly. "Some day she's going to be a great author."

"Are they really your own?" Miss Beacon queried.

Selma nodded. "They are full of mistakes, I know," she added humbly, patting Margaret's hand as she spoke.

"Yes," Miss Beacon agreed, "there are faults, of course, but they show plot and imagination, splendid characteristics. Now let's see if we can't 'doctor' the 'Lone Starfish.' Have you a manuscript copy?"

Selma opened her portfolio, disclosing a little sheaf of closely written sheets. Miss Beacon ran her pencil over the work, then stopped with an eager look of interest.

"This is the spot I wanted to find," she said. "The story really ends here, where the mermaid says good-bye to the starfish. All the rest is anticlimax," and she went on to give the reasons.

"Oh, yes, I see," the story teller cried. "Won't you please tell me some of the faults in my other things?"

"Gladly, since you really care," Miss Beacon answered.

After that she helped Selma almost every day. The girl wrote and wrote, and made every story as nearly perfect as she knew how. Then she read them aloud. Later, while Margaret took her nap, Miss Beacon criticised and gave informal little talks on story writing.

At first, with so many new things in mind in regard to technic, Selma found it hard to express herself. But by the time September came she knew that she had improved.

Margaret was well and happy and running gaily about the beach when at last a letter came telling them that Aunt Lucy was so much better that Mrs. Pemberton was coming to take the girls home.

Miss Beacon was with them when they read the note.

"My, but I'm glad!" Margaret exclaimed, jumping up and down in her joy.

"So am I," Selma said, "but, do you know, I'm sorry, too, in a way. I've had such a lovely, happy summer and learned so much! How can I ever thank you, Miss Beacon? I never knew anyone could know so much about story writing as you do. Even dear Miss Armstrong at school didn't begin to help the way you did!"

The lady in white smiled. "Well, I should have a little knowledge of the subject," she conceded. "However, the lessons in patience and sweetness you've learned have, I'm sure, been quite as beneficial as anything I've been able to teach you. Nevertheless, I'm glad of any help I've given."

Then her eyes twinkled merrily. "Now, be prepared for the biggest surprise of your life. You will have something to astonish your mother with when she comes." So saying, Miss Beacon took a magazine out of its wrapper. She looked through the index, turned to page twenty-four, and handed it over without a word.

The girl uttered a cry of amazement.

Her own name, Selma Pemberton, stared at her in big black type and above it the words, "The Lone Starfish."

"Oh, Miss Beacon, what does it mean?" she cried in wonder.

"Mean?" rejoined Miss Beacon. "It means you are an authoress."

"And you?" Selma gasped. "Who are you? A wizard?"

"No, just a strong and healthy woman, thanks to the sea air and something to rekindle the fires of my interest in life," Miss Beacon answered, with a laugh. Then her voice grew grave. "Before that I was a broken down professor of short-story writing in New York. Someone else had to take my place at the University this summer while I came to Cape Cod to recuperate."

What Is a Calorie?

Since food conservation has become a vital factor in carrying on our war against Germany, the layman has encountered in his reading the new word calorie. This word, which formerly appeared only in scientific journals now jumps at once from the daily papers, from the magazines, agricultural and trade press. In a way, the Food Administration is partly responsible for the increased use of the word, and, as a result, has received letters from all parts of the country asking "What is a calorie?" Some people have gone so far as to suggest that it is the name of a new breakfast food, while in one instance, inquirer stated he had heard that it was a new type of explosive discovered by the War Department, and wanted to know what the Food Administration had to do with it.

When fuel is thrown on a fire under a boiler, heat is produced. This heat is required in order that the engine may perform its work. To do work of any kind requires energy. Food used or burned in the human machine produces energy to maintain the normal heat of the body and to do its work. Work done by the body comprises not only that which requires muscular or mental exertion, but also involuntary exertion such as the beating of the heart, the expansion of the lungs, etc. The chemical process within the body which transforms our food into energy is similar in nature to the process which takes place when fuel is burned over fire—though, in the body, the burning takes place very slowly and in every tissue, instead of in one central place. The value of food is determined by the amount of energy it yields to the body; and it also has a building and regulating function.

It was necessary that a unit be established for measuring the amount of heat produced when food was completely burned. The unit chosen or universally adopted as the unit for measuring fuel value or energy value for any kind of food is called the calorie. It represents the same principle in measuring as the inch or foot, the unit of measuring length; the pint or gallon, the unit of volume; and the ounce or pound, that of weight.

The calorie is the amount of heat required to raise the temperature of 1 kilogram of water 1 deg. C., or 1 pound of water approximately 4 deg. F. Our requirements of food, so far as the amount is concerned, can therefore be expressed in the number of calories needed for each person per day. It must not be forgotten that the calories must be derived from the proper kinds of food.

Flowers for the Sick

Flowers for the sick! What beautiful messages they bear; what radiance they shed into corners of gloom; what a tender and triumphant ministry they perform!

Remember the sick in your prayers. Send them by tongue or pen messages of cheer and hope. See also that their sick-rooms are irradiated with floral sunshine.

"I was sick and ye visited me," said and will say He who is "the Rose of Sharon and the Lily of the Valley."

—SELECTED.

From West to East—From East to West

BY ELIZABETH L. GEBHARD.

STELLA LYMAN lived in what was called in her section of the country "a scattering neighborhood." The original settlers had counted on owning large farms and built their houses accordingly. Stella's own grandfather had walked over three States before he settled on his Michigan home. He had been satisfied that he had selected the best farming site procurable, and when he built his house in the furthest corner of his estate he had not reckoned on the young girl, his granddaughter, who should some day call it "deadly lonely."

There was a second matter in which he had considered posterity, but not the valuation it would place on his effort. On each return trip to New York State in the early years he had brought back with him some young trees from the old homestead, or from the woods he had roamed as a boy. These trees, as they grew and beautified the new home, were a great pleasure to him. It was similar to the joy a skilled workman feels in his handicraft. Stephen Lyman was creating his own surroundings from his head as well as with his hands. His wife and children had helped in this founding of a home in a new State, and their pride and pleasure equaled his own.

It was the third generation, personified in little Stella Lyman, who saw things differently. The trees that stood for accomplishment with her father and grandfather were simply reminders to her of the stories of the life and happenings of the thickly peopled East. The row of poplars stood for an old Colonial home, called "The Poplars," where Washington and other great men of the nation had been wont to gather. The beautifully shaped hemlock in the north lot was a Christmas tree in a great lighted room with many people. The maples shaded a hospital ward in the East.

Stella didn't know it, but she was following the trend of those before her, and longed to create something real and valuable herself. She thought she was simply restless, and one day when a magazine fell in her hands, giving full directions for becoming a trained nurse, she was surprised at the thump her heart gave, and the settling of all her restlessness into the one groove of decision. There were some obstacles to overcome; some preparations to make, and time needed for the family to become accustomed to the idea, but in three months Stella was on her way to New York.

Frederica Lyman, who was called Fred for short, knew it would be additionally lonely for her without Stella in their scattered neighborhood, but it was her presence in the home that made it possible for Stella to leave, and she tried to be brave about the loneliness. It would be fine for Stella to be a real trained nurse, and not every girl would be courageous enough to carry out such a plan just from reading a magazine article.

Stella's first five months were full of new and inspiring experiences. She was absorbing a hundred impressions besides her nursing, and that was enough of itself. Life was full for her. Then came the accident. There had been a moment when she was happily crossing the street, enjoying her time in the open air, then a skidding auto, and the next she knew she herself was in a hospital bed, not standing beside it as a nurse. There were complications, hope lifted high, then zero, and a fresh start.

At first she counted time by days, then weeks, and after that it ran into months. The doctors and nurses were most kind. Letters came often from home, but Stella had to learn to knit patience and courage out of the hours of her days. It was not easy, and she grew to hail with joy the coming of a cheery city missionary, who visited the hospital weekly, bringing with her interesting Christian literature, warm sympathy and courageous words.

The paper which fell to Stella's lot contained the Sunday School lesson. Other stories and sketches also interested her, but the Sunday School lesson brought work and an object. After a little she began to study it regularly, and look up the references. Miss Larkin, the missionary, discovered Stella's interest and planned that she should have the same paper continuously. Often during her calls they fell into discussions on the notes of the lesson.

One of the things Stella had missed in her old life had been a Sunday School. The countryside had divided, going in opposite directions and at some distance, to both day school and church. There had never been any one courageous enough to override the obstacles to the establishment of a Sunday school in their own scattering neighborhood.

A school house building in the center which they had all attended as children might have held them together for Sunday school and also furnished a central point where the social life of the neighborhood might have gathered and thrown out tendrils.

As Stella grew more and more interested in the Sunday School lessons she began to send the papers home to Fred. With them went comments from Stella. Sometimes these observations were wistful and sad. At other times the writer entered heartily into the life of the Bible characters, made comments that were original and thought producing, with quaint touches of humor.

More than all, something new was creeping into Stella's letters. The Christ life was taking possession of her heart, and often now the longing to recover was coupled with a wish to go on with her work with a new incentive. She wanted to do it "in His name," to carry the gospel message to sick souls as well as to sick bodies.

It was not long before the letters and papers had also fired Fred's heart. "There is no better meeting place in this neighborhood than there ever was," she said to her mother one day, "but we are as central as anybody. At least three neighbors can get here pretty easily. I'm going to ask them if they would not like to come over on Sunday afternoon and read the Sunday School lesson over together. We have the paper and Stella's letters, and they can each bring a Bible."

So the Sunday School started in the Lyman sitting room, with the sunshine flooding its cosy homeliness, and sweeping in streams over its bright rag rugs.

"What does Stella say about that?" came to be a familiar question as the weeks went by. Stella, from her hospital bed in New York was teaching a Sunday School in Michigan, for the Sunday School once started, continued and grew. To those who were near, others were more distant added themselves on pleasant Sunday afternoons. It was not long before the Sunday School became a feature in the neighborhood, which did not seem so scattered now that many of them met on Sunday afternoons.

"Guess we will have to open the parlor, mother," Stella's father said to his wife one Saturday afternoon. "The older people can go in there and the children keep the sitting room. We are getting pretty crowded. Stella's Sunday School is growing."

"Yes," returned his wife with shining eyes. "It seems strange that after all these years, Stella off there in New York, and sick at that, should have discovered that we could have a Sunday School in this neighborhood. It reminds me of your father bringing those little trees way out here from New York State, that every one said wouldn't grow, and now see them!"

"Yes," returned her husband meditatively, "Stella always did favor father Lyman some. They both liked to try hard things."

The doctors reported that the very best thing that could have happened to Stella was that Sunday School in Michigan. It gave her courage and inspiration and a fresh hold on life. Little by little she began to improve, and the improvement lasted. The old sickening relapses ceased to appear. The morning Fred's letter came saying Stella's Sunday School had grown to four times its original size, that they had a baby organ now and lesson quarterlies for each scholar, though they still read the lesson at the opening of school from Stella's paper with her comments, Stella walked to meet the postman. It was certain now that she could take up her work again, and her heart was singing with joy.

Before she put on her nurse's costume once more, she made a flying trip to Michigan, and attended her own Sunday School. "To think," she said happily, after the session was over, "I thought I had to go East to expand, and all the time a Sunday School was waiting to be planted right here, and so many other beautiful things are growing out of it. This will not be a scattering neighborhood any longer, but one bound together by Christian love. I almost envy you, Fred, but this is your work, and we will each do our best in our own field."

The Superlative In Writing

BY HELENA H. THOMAS.

"Yes, I am aware that the book is not in the library, and it never will be, either, so long as I have a voice in the matter!"

"But why, pray tell?" asked the querist who regards the librarian, who made the foregoing remark, as an oracle along such lines, "when everyone is clamoring for it."

"Simply because it is not worthy a place beside the other books of the author whom I greatly admired until I read his latest."

"How do you account for its lack of interest?" was the puzzled query. "For, if I have been rightly informed, the author is at an age when still greater things might naturally be expected of him."

"It is a very easy matter to account for it!" responded the librarian. "It is simply a case of resting on his laurels. His first was good, his second better, and his third should have been in the superlative—best; but, instead, it is mediocre, to say the least, and all that will sell the book is the name attached to it. Though, truly, I would not count it an honor to have written it."

"Speaking of building so much on a famous name," continued the librarian, "reminds me of my memorable visit to Yellowstone Park, several years ago, when I was one of a party belonging to a certain Press Club. And, for the sake of novelty, at the outset we dropped our names, for the time being, and substituted others."

"One author, who had a national reputation as a writer, chanced to be one of our party—through the invitation of one of our club members, and so we dubbed him 'Great Light,' because he so far eclipsed the rest in the literary firmament. Another we called 'Fearless,' because of his fearless criticisms right and left. Still another we called the 'Serious One,' because she saw the serious side of everything, and so on."

"And now for the case in point. One day the conveyance filled by our party broke down, and we were informed that it would be an hour or two before we could go on. We were delighted at the announcement, however, for we chanced to be in the midst of such entrancing scenery that I, for one, was glad of the accident, but as I looked at the marvelous panorama spread out before us as we ascended an elevation where we could get a more extended view I felt too full for words, though bursts of enthusiasm were heard on every side. But no sooner had we seated ourselves to enjoy the grandeur of the scenery than 'Great Light' drew from his pocket a tablet, saying, in a careless tone:

"I will toss off one of my sermons, while we wait."

"He wrote rapidly, and ere long looked up, with the exclamation:

"Well, I have earned fifty dollars while you have been wasting breath!"

"A chorus of 'Read it!' followed, and was so insistent that 'Great Light' read aloud what he had hurriedly written, but when he came to an end of what was disappointing to all, there was not one word of approval, but, instead, 'Fearless' voiced a consensus of opinion, I am confident, when he cried:

"Fifty dollars! Why, even I could do as well, and not half try!"

"No doubt of it," retorted 'Great Light,' laughing good-naturedly, 'but you couldn't sign my name to it!'

"I had noticed that the rapt, eager look which had overspread the face of 'Serious One' as 'Great Light' commenced to read had given place to one of disdain, as he proceeded, but she was a person of such few words, ordinarily, that the other members of our party were amazed, at the close of the foregoing remark, to hear her exclaim, in a scathing tone:

"Shame on you, Sir, to trifle with your God-given gift! Why, I have been feeling all day that I would give worlds if I possessed your gift at painting word-pictures! Oh, how could you—with so much to inspire you—do yourself such an injustice as to write that bit of froth!"

"Then, with a shake of the head, and a catch in her voice, 'Serious One' added, pleadingly:

"Oh, look about you, and think what you are defrauding the world of—and do your best!"

"The rustle of the leaves alone broke the stillness for a moment," said the librarian, in closing, "and then 'Great Light' with a purposeful face, and a nod of approval, tore his 'sermonette' to bits and gave it to the winds, but I am glad to say that, later on, our party felt proud of their honored guest, when his impressions of that wonderful scenery appeared, over his signature, written in the superlative."

Can We Refuse?

We expect, as a matter of course, that our soldiers and sailors will do as they are ordered. We oftentimes do not think it necessary to do what our Government asks us to do. Why should we not be just as prompt in our response? Our men are ordered to expose themselves to the guns of the Huns. We are asked only to save and to loan our savings to the Government. Can we refuse this request?

HAVE YOU THOUGHT OF SERVICE IN FRANCE?

The biggest field in the world for service, for Christ and Country, is before you with the Salvation Army.

If you are a woman above twenty-five or a man above the draft age, write to:

COMMANDER EVANGELINE BOOTH
122 West 14th Street
New York City

We need a thousand now!

DON'T decide on the new hymn-book for your Church or Sunday School until you have seen

HALLOWED HYMNS
NEW AND OLD

Edited by IRA ALLAN SANKEY

Son of the famous Singing-Evangelist

Ira D. Sankey

OVER 550,000

COPIES ALREADY SOLD

Responsive Scripture Readings

No Trashy Words No Jingly Music

Price $25.00 per 100 not prepaid

25 cents per copy by mail

Examine a copy and prove its value in your work. (Returnable if desired.)

The Biglow & Main Co., New York

Chicago

This FREE Shoe Book
is filled with photographs and descriptions of EZ-WEAR Shoes for Men, Women and Children. EZ-WEAR Shoes are sent post-paid, guaranteed to combine comfort, style and quality, to fit perfectly or money back. Amazingly low prices. Send for copy to-day.
The F.N. Simon Shoe Co. 1533 BROADWAY BROOKLYN, N.Y.

THE TREASURY

SPECIAL NOTICE

Owing to occasional losses of letters, containing money, we would request friends and donors of the American Tract Society to remit by check or Post Office Money Order, which latter can always be duplicated in case of loss.

Receipts of the American Tract Society During June, 1918

TOTAL DONATIONS (including $87.75 for Special Objects), $1,505.26.

- ALABAMA, $2.00. Mrs. Wright, $2.
- ARKANSAS, $5.25. Mrs. Thomason, $0.25; Mr. Moore, $5.
- CALIFORNIA, $28.00. Miss Hills, $1; Mr. Patrick, $1; Mrs. Smith, $25; Mrs. Miller, $1.
- COLORADO, $96.70. Mr. Faris, $96.70.
- CONNECTICUT, $46.32. Mr. Hawley, $2; Miss Acton, $5; Cong'l Church, $32.32; Mrs. Griswold, $5; Mrs. Lord, $2.

ILLINOIS, $200.85. The following is to constitute Rev. Mr. Figge a Life Member: Mr. Wubben, $5; Mr. Zundahl, $0.50; Mr. Tempel, $2; Mr. Wubben, $5; Mr. Greer, $2; Mr. Tempel, $1; Mr. Simons, $1; Mr. Sneek, $5; Mr. Tempel, $1; Mr. Moring, $2; Mr. Henze, $2; Mr. Moring, $2; Mr. Meiners, $1; Rev. Mr. Figge, $1; Mrs. Figge, $1; Mr. Myer, $1.50; Mr. Moring, $5; Mr. Martens, $2; Mr. Moring, $1; Mr. Groenfeld, $0.50; Mr. Wubben, $5; Mr. Miller, $3.50; Mr. Heiners, $2; Mr. Moring, $1.50; total $53.50. The following additional amount is to make Rev. Mr. Fieselman a Life Director: Mr. Denather, $1; Mrs. Dillon, $1; Mrs. Stutz, $1.50; Mrs. Koch, $5; Mrs. Koch, sr., $0.50; Mr. Schlenke, sr., $0.50; Mr. Bockstruck, $1; Mr. Maneke, $1; Miss Struppitz, $1; Mr. Ulrich, $1; Miss Koch, $1; Mr. Wolters, $1; Mrs. Wolters, $1; Mr. Von Bergen, $1; Mr. Koch, $1; Mr. Zahn, $1; Rev. Mr. Reinhardt, $2; Mr. Wenzel, $3; Mr. Maneke, $1; "A Friend", $5; Mr. Tilton, $1; Maneke Bros., $3; Mr. Lageman, $3; Mr. Brecht, $1; Maneke, $1; Mr. Staube, $1; Mr. Schlottner, $1; "A Friend", $7.43; Godfrey, Church Collection, $21.07; total $70.00.

INDIANA, $5. Miss Jacobs, $5.

IOWA, $43.60. Mr. Kitzle, $1.10; Mr. "U. L.", $0.25; Mrs. "F. R.", $0.10; Mr. "J. R.", $0.10; Mr. "R. W.", $0.10; Mr. Blaise, $1; Mr. Collesor, $10; Mr. Jones, $5; Mr. Hardin, $5; Mr. Wortman, $5; Miss Taylor, $1; Mrs. Mathews, $5; Mr. Frerichs, $4.30; Mr. Ramsburg, $5; Mr. Marti, $0.65.

KANSAS, $1.30. Mr. Quade, $0.30; Mrs. Carlson, $1.

KENTUCKY, $4.50. Mr. Kelly, $2.50; Mrs. Strobel, $2.

MAINE, $7.00. Miss Cushman, $5; Mrs. Reed, $2.

MARYLAND, $3.00. Rev. Mr. Hedges, for Patriot Library, $1; Mrs. Thompson, for Patriot Library, $2.

MASSACHUSETTS, $115. Mr. Brayton, $5; Mr. Hendry, $1; Mr. Cluett, $25; Rev. Mr. Fiske, $50; Miss Brooks, $5; Miss Davis, $5; Rev. Mr. Means, $5; Mr. Ripley, $3; Miss Borden, $5; Mr. Johnson, $10; Miss Merritt, $1.

MICHIGAN, $1.30. Mr. Schaster, $1.30.

MINNESOTA, $2. Mr. Roberts, $1; Mr. Clynick, $1.

MISSOURI, $4.10. St. Louis, Church Offering, $4.10.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, $13. Miss Burr, $1; Mrs. McDuffee, $2; Miss Cummings, $10.

NEW JERSEY, $176.04. Mr. Muller, $0.95; Mr. Robinson, $1; Mr. Conover, $1; "A Friend", $1; Mr. Richards, $25; Princeton Church, $7.68; Freehold, Church Collection, $2.69; No. Branch Depot, Church Offering, $5.42; "A Friend", $0.10; Mr. Hampton, $2; Cook & Son, $10; Mr. Hughes, $1; Rev. Mr. Read, for Patriot Library, $5; Miss McCorkle, $10; Miss Lynde, $20; Miss Voorhees, $4.50; Miss Wilson, $2.13; Dunellen First Presby. Church, $4.30; Miss Peppard, $1; Mr. Moore, $2; Pleasant Grove Presby. Church, $10; Mrs. Woodruff, $5; Mr. Lunn, $18.97; Mrs. Allen, $25; Mrs. Eberling, $0.30; Mrs. Veghte, $10.

NEW YORK, $472. Mr. Dominick, $30; New York, Church Collection, $23; Mrs. Biglow, $10; Rev. Mr. Gebhard, $3; New York, Church Offering, $34; Mr. Battle, $1; Rev. Mr. Schibredre, $1; Mr. Moser, $10; Mr. Arthur, $20; Mr. Lee, $2; Mr. Roberts, for Patriot Library, $5; Roslyn & Seatington, Church Collection, $1; Miss Van Duzee, $5; Miss Cole, $1; Miss Parrott, $1; Mr. Stafford, $5; Montgomery, Church Offering, $8; Mr. King, $10; Mrs. McCarter, $5; Mr. Clark, $5; Miss Wilson, $1; Mr. Fairhead, for Patriot Library, $1; Miss Van Duzee, for Patriot Library, $1; Mrs. J. P. Winlow, $25; Mr. Johnson, $25; Mrs. Parsons, for Patriot Library, $4; Mr. Billings, $1; Miss Veltman, $1; Miss Andrus, $1; Mr. Ludlow, $100; Miss McDowell, $5; Mr. Lansing, $25; Mr. Stuart, $25; Mrs. Woolverton, $5; Mrs. Brinc, $1; Mrs. Rogers, $2; Mrs.

Bennett, $1; Mrs. Ayres, $3; Mr. Spilling, $5; Mr. Duncan, $10; Miss Wakeman, $50. NORTH DAKOTA, $1. Dr. Fisher, $1.

OHIO, $59. Mrs. Gill, for Patriot Library, $2; Mrs. Richard, $2; Mr. Gamble, $50; Melmore, Church Collection, $5.

OREGON, $10. Mr. Zuercher, $10.

PENNSYLVANIA, $181. Mrs. Reynolds, $5; Mr. Hodge, $5; Miss Hobson, $2; Miss Thomas, $1; Mr. Ginter, $5; Mr. Follansbee, $25; Mr. McMannus, $1; Mr. Alberts, $20; Mr. Paist, $2; Mr. Breed, $5; Miss Buchanan, $10; Mr. Hollenback, $10; Mrs. McCormick, for Patriot Library, $10; Miss Weir, $5; Miss Cassidy, for Patriot Library, $15; Dr. Wiand, $5; Mrs. Wallace, $5; Mr. Trexler, $20; Miss Baird, $5; Miss Baird, $5; Miss Beadie, $10; Miss Watson, $5; Mr. Thomas, $5.

TEXAS, $5.30. Mr. Hunt, $5; Mrs. Norwood, $0.30.

UTAH, $2. Mr. Pratt, for Colportage Work, $2.

VERMONT, $3. Mr. Holmes, $2; Miss Goodhue, $1.

VIRGINIA, $6. Mrs. Rock, for Foreign Work, $5; Mr. Blackstone, $1.

WISCONSIN, $8. Mr. Bizzell, $2; Dr. Misskoff, $5; Mrs. Frank, $1.

FOREIGN, $3. Canada, Mr. Machado, $3.

LEGACIES, $7,625.20. Newark, N. J., Estate of Henrietta D. Crane, on account, $2,000; Washington, D. C., Estate of Mary I. Banks, on account $5,025.20; New York, N. Y., Estate of Mary A. Harriot, on account, $600.

INCOME FROM TRUST FUNDS, $1,225. Income for Missionary Work, $1,161.75. Income for Annuitants, $63.25.

Donations

DONATIONS for the missionary work of the American Tract Society may be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

FIELD SECRETARIES AND COLPORTAGE SUPERINTENDENTS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.

Rev. Isaac Pierson, Field Secretary for New England, 50 Bromfield Street, Boston, Mass.

Rev. A. W. Reinhard, Field Secretary and Superintendent of Colportage for the Western and Northwestern States, 5253 Waterman Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Rev. George Whitefort, Superintendent of Colportage, Southern Agency, Crichton, R. F. D., Mobile Co., Ala.

Form of Bequest

I GIVE and bequeath to the "AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY," instituted in the City of New York, May, 1825, the sum of.....dollars to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said Society.

Three witnesses should state that the testator declares this to be his last will and testament, and that they signed at his request, and in his presence and the presence of each other.

Notice to Authors

Authors who submit manuscripts for publication to the American Tract Society are reminded that the Society does not hold itself responsible for the return of any manuscript. If a remittance is sent to cover the full cost of postage and registry, the Society will transmit a manuscript by registered mail upon the request of the author.

Unheard Prayers

Some prayers never reach God. It depends upon us, not upon God, whether our prayers reach Him; for He has shown us how we may be sure of reaching Him. A man was giving a letter to his dictating machine. He had been talking away for a minute or two, when suddenly he noticed that a little lever that must be lifted to start the motor was in the wrong position; the motor was still, the sensitive wax cylinder was motionless, and so all that he had said was unrecorded. The cylinder had not received the vibrations that his voice had made on the sensitive diaphragm. The dictation had been correctly given; but the cylinder had not "heard" the man. It could not,—the connection was not made. So many a prayer, given very earnestly and sincerely, cannot reach God, for the "connection" has not been made. If we want the prayer to "go through," we must work by the laws of prayer that God has explained,—simple, but unchanging. We must pray according to God's will, and with faith, and in the name of Jesus, and we must abide in Jesus as we pray. Spiritual laws are as definite and exact as natural laws. Are we as careful to learn them and then to use them?—SUNDAY SCHOOL TIMES.

From an Old Subscriber

Mrs. S. T. Dinsmore of Vermont has sent this letter to the Editor of the AMERICAN MESSENGER:

"I believe that I am entitled to a place on your Honor Roll. Father took the paper when I was a child, and I am now past seventy-seven, the last survivor of a family of five children. My father took the AMERICAN MESSENGER as long as he lived. Then I took it in a club, and later I had it come in my own name and have taken it ever since. I could not do without it."

We are glad to welcome the writer of this letter to a place on Our Honor Roll, which contains the names of those into whose homes the AMERICAN MESSENGER has come for the past fifty years or more. We shall be glad to hear from others who have been receiving the paper for fifty years or longer.

Salvation Army Women For France

A group of workers belonging to the Salvation Army in America sailed recently for France, according to announcement made by the general war work committee of the Army. These women will reinforce the 900 trained Salvation Army war workers who have been engaged in relief service in the battle zone since the United States entered the war.

"Our workers are frequently very near the actual front, and often under shell fire," stated a member of the general war work committee. "The work done by these women has had such a telling effect upon the American forces that both the troops in the trenches and the military authorities of highest rank have voiced their unqualified appreciation and approval of the work accomplished."

The leader of the Salvation Army in America, Miss Evangeline Booth, will go to France to inspect the work and equipment of her workers abroad and to confer with her representatives who are making plans for extensions. Speaking of the work abroad Miss Booth said:

"Women are doing a valiant service along the front and when history is written they will be recognized as having performed an indispensable work right up where the shells are bursting, as well as in our communities at home. In the Boer war the Salvation Army gained its first experience in hutment work. To-day we are toiling with the fighters maintaining over 400 huts and hostels. We are operating 46 ambulances in our first-aid work, serving the base hospitals wherever possible. In out hutment service we aim to make the soldier realize the atmosphere of home.

"In our cooking, mending, and serving sandwiches and hot coffee in the dead of night; in our singing, entertaining, reading and writing with the men, we try to take the places of their mothers. It is not a new thing for us to endure hardship and to help the disconsolate and weary. Our women stick to the troops regardless of danger and they will continue thus to serve until the war ends."

French Colors

It is not generally known that the three stripes of color that make up the French national flag are not equal in width. When the tricolor was first authorized, in 1792, the positions and proportions of the three colors were not stated, and such variety of flags was seen, that two years later the national assembly declared that the national standard should be formed of the three national colors in equal bands placed vertically, the hoist being blue, the middle white, and the fly red. For years the flag was made in this way; but, although the bands were equal they never looked equal owing to an optical illusion, the blue appearing wider than the white and the white wider than the red. At last, after many experiments, it was officially decided that in every hundred parts the blue should be thirty, white thirty-three and red thirty-seven.—Ex.

American Tract Society

THIS SOCIETY was organized in 1825. Its work is interdenominational and international in scope, and is commended by all evangelical denominations.

It has published the Gospel messages in 178 languages, dialects and characters. It has been the pioneer for work among the foreign-speaking people in our country, and its missionary colporters are distributing Christian literature in many languages among our foreign-speaking population and making a home-to-home visitation among the spiritually destitute, both in the cities and rural districts, leaving all kinds of Christian literature, also the Bible or portions of the Scriptures.

Its publication of leaflets, volumes and periodicals from the Home Office total 800,711,975 copies. It has made foreign cash appropriations to the amount of $805,466, and grants of electrotypes to the value of $61,177.96, by means of which millions of copies of books and tracts have been published at mission stations abroad.

The gratuitous distribution of the past year is to the value of $23,191.98. The grand total of its gratuitous distribution has been to the value of $2,676,159.82, which is the equivalent of 5,352,319,040 tract pages.

The total number of family visits that have been made by the Society's colporters during the last year is 146,056; the total number of volumes distributed by sale or grant is 49,584, making the total number of volumes that have been circulated by colporters in the last seventy-seven years 17,489,750, and the total number of family visits that they have made during the same period 18,958,862.

A large distribution of Christian literature is being made among the soldiers and sailors, and the Society aims to furnish Christian literature to every Cantonment in the Army and to every battleship and cruiser in the Navy.

The Society is making very special effort in behalf of Latin America, having entered upon the publication of a One-volume Bible commentary in Spanish, a long-needed and earnestly prayed-for publication, and several other important volumes in both Spanish and Portuguese. Its total publications for Latin America now reach 17,175,163 copies. Its work, ever widening, is dependent upon donations and legacies, and greatly needs increased offerings.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, PRESIDENT.
JUDSON SWIFT, D. D., General Secretary.
Remittances should be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

Life Members and Directors

THE donation of $30 at one time constitutes a Life Member of the American Tract Society; the addition of $70, or the donation of $100 at one time, constitutes a Life Director. Life members may receive annually copies of the Society's own publications to the value of $1; Life Directors to the value of $2; if applied for within the Society's year, from April 1st to April 1st, in person or by written order.

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

TERMS: Subscription price, 50 cts. a year, payable in advance. In clubs of five or more, 30 cts. each. Club subscriptions mailed to separate addresses, if desired. Charge for foreign subscriptions, 24 cents additional. Canadian subscriptions, 12 cents additional. Single copies, 5 cents each.

On account of the additional charge which is made by the New York Post Office for mailing to subscribers in New York and Bronx Counties (Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx), no club rates, cash commissions or premiums will be given for subscriptions that must be sent to persons residing in those Counties. Each subscription in New York or Bronx County must be at the rate of 50 cents net.

Remit by Express Money Order, Draft, Post Office Order or Registered Letter. For very small amounts, postage stamps may be sent at the risk of the sender.

RENEWALS: The date opposite your name shows to what time the subscription has been paid, and a change in the date is the receipt for renewal.

CHANGES: When sending change of address, be sure to send the old address as well as the new one.

OUR ADVERTISERS: We believe that all the advertisements in this paper are from responsible advertisers, and it is our intention to admit only such to our columns. Should, however, any of our subscribers find that any advertiser does not live up to his agreements, we would consider it a favor, if they will inform us, and we will at any time give prompt attention to any complaint.

We do not, of course, guarantee that all persons will take the same point of view with the advertisers, and it must be borne in mind that the claims and statements made by advertisers are their assertions, and not ours.

Our readers will confer a favor upon advertisers and also upon us if they will mention the AMERICAN MESSENGER when answering advertisements.

The Comfort of the Woods

BY AMOS R. WELLS

I understand my comrades of the woods,
And they know me completely. Not an oak
But is my brother, strong, reserved, sincere.
Along the happy, peaceful forest ways
That wind so intimately through the trees
I hold a calm communion with my friends,
The pines and gentle birches. Day by day
Insensibly the bond is closer drawn
With beckonings of branches, waftures
Of subtle fragrance, melodies of birds,
Flickers of sunlight on the level leaves,
A thousand sweet enchantments pure and good.
This air dissolves my fretfulness and fears;
They fall into the green depths of the dell,
The cheery brooklet carries them away,
The bushes brush them off. I enter here
With furrowed brow and heavy-burdened heart;
But little unseen hands are softly pressed
Upon the frowns, and little unseen hands
Tug at the burdens till they all are gone.
Ah, what am I that these my woodland friends
Should minister to me so graciously?
Do they not know my follies and my sin?
Yet with a mother's blind, forgiving love
They cleanse the foulnesses they will not see.
Nor do they only wait for me to come,
Withdrawn, expectant; but amid the din
Of cities, and upon the crowded streets,
I feel the brick and mortar fade away,
And find the woods around me once again,
Tall, shadowy, protecting. Once again
I hear the woodland murmurs like a hymn,
And on my troubled spirit lies once more
The peaceful benediction of the trees.

—CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR WORLD.

Edible Fruits of Forest Trees

It is said that Daniel Boone and some of our other early pioneers could go into the wilderness with only a rifle and a sack of salt and live in comfort on the game and other wild food which the woods afforded. While few people want to try that sort of thing nowadays, persons who know the food value of the fruits of our native trees and shrubs are, according to foresters, able to use them to good advantage in supplementing other foods.

Aside from the numerous edible mushrooms, roots, fruits of shrubs and smaller plants, the trees of our forests afford a large variety of edibles which are highly prized by woods connoisseurs. First in importance, of course, are our native nuts—beachnuts, butternuts, walnuts, chestnuts and chinquapins, hazel nuts and several kinds of hickory nuts, including pecans. The kernels of all of these are not only toothsome but highly nutritious and are used by vegetarians to replace meat. The oil of the beechnut is said to be little inferior to olive oil, while that of butternuts and walnuts was used by some of the Indians for various purposes. The Indians, it is said, also formerly mixed chestnuts with cornmeal and made a bread which was baked in corn husks, like tomares. In parts of Europe bread is made from chestnuts alone. The chestnut crop in this country is being reduced each year by the chestnut-blight disease, which in some sections is gradually killing out the tree.

Acorns are commonly thought to be fit only for feeding hogs, but many kinds of them can be made edible and nourishing for people as well. The Indian custom was to pound or grind the acorns up and leach out the tannin, which makes most of them unfit for eating when raw, by treating the pulp with hot water. The resulting flour, which contained considerable starch, was made either into a porridge or baked in small cakes of bread. As a rule, the acorns of the various white oaks having less tannin are the ones best suited for food, but Indians also used those of the black oaks, even though they contain much tannin. The acorns of the basket or cow oak, the chinquapin oak, shin or Rocky Mountain oak, live oak, and of several other species, are sweet enough to be eaten raw.

Another nut which is not suited for eating raw, but from which a palatable food is said to have been prepared by the Indians, is the buckeye. The kernels of these nuts were dried, powdered, and freed of the poison which they contain when raw by filtration. The resulting paste was either eaten cold or baked.

Several Western pines have seeds which play an important part in the diet of the local Indians. Perhaps the best known of these is the fruit of the nut pine, or pinon, which forms the basis for a local industry of some size. Not only is it extensively eaten by local settlers and Indians, but large quantities are shipped to the cities, where the seed is roasted and sold on the street. The similar seed of the Parry pine and the large Digger pine seeds are eagerly sought by the Indians. The latter tree is said to have gained its name from its use as a food by the Digger Indians. The seeds of the longleaf pine are edible and are improved by roasting. Indeed, it may be said that most nuts are more digestible when roasted than if eaten raw.

One of the best known fruits, the foresters say, is the persimmon, which is edible only after it is thoroughly ripe. As this is usually not until late in the fall, it is commonly thought that the fruit must be frostbitten. If the persimmon is eaten before it is well ripened, the tannic acid which the fruit contains has a strongly astringent effect, which justifies the story of the soldier in the Civil War, who said he had eaten green persimmons so as to shrink his stomach up to fit his rations. The pawpaw, or custard apple, is also best when thoroughly ripe. The fruit of some species of haws is eaten or preserved in different parts of the country, while those of several different kinds of wild cherries have a food value and are used for various purposes. Wild plums are abundant in certain sections and occur in particularly plentiful quantities along the streams in the Eastern and Middle Western States.

Several varieties of wild crab apples make delicious jellies. Some of the largest, which attain the size of small apples, are more or less abundant throughout eastern North Carolina. Elderberries are frequently used for pies and for sauce. Those found in the West are sweeter and have a better flavor than the Eastern varieties.

The berries of the hackberry, or sugar berry, as it is called in the South, are dry but have an agreeable taste. Those of the mulberry are sweet and juicy when ripe. The mulberry is valued in some sections for feeding hogs and poultry and some species are occasionally cultivated.

Many people like the fruit of the shad bush, "sarvice" berry, or June berry, as it is variously called. In parts of the country this fruit is used to make jelly.

The French Canadians are said to use the acid flowers of the redbud, or Judas tree, in salads, while the buds and tender pods are pickled in vinegar. Honey locust pods, often locally called "honey-shucks," contain a sweetish, thick, cheeselike pulp, which is often eaten. Those of the mesquite furnish the Mexicans and Indians with a nutritious food. The Creoles of Louisiana, famous for their cookery, are reported to use the young buds of the sassafras as a substitute for okra in thickening soups.

With the Smile

Smiling can be done without the face being seen. "It is our constant aim," says the Bell Telephone Company, "to promote the 'voice with the smile.'" The public knows how effectively this great service corporation has trained its army of operators to use "the voice with the smile." Business letters can often be written "with the smile," and usually they ought to be; such letters create good will and sell goods. We who are Christians ought not to be behind the most capable business people in using "the voice with the smile," and in bringing a genuine radiance into all our work and relationships. The Christian can have supernatural power in this all the time, by simply yielding to and believing in Him who sheds abroad the love of God in our hearts. The smiling life is the winning life; and habitual winning is the Christian's first business.—SUNDAY SCHOOL TIMES.

A Pleasant Way to Obtain a Good Fountain Pen

A Fountain Pen is always a necessity and here is an opportunity of securing a good one with only a little effort (see offer below).

The publishers of the AMERICAN MESSENGER are very desirous of increasing the circulation of this admirable publication, and it is for that purpose that we are offering this splendid Fountain Pen. The Pen is known as the Commercial Fountain Pen.

The pen is six and one half inches long, and suitable for either lady or gentleman, and fully guaranteed. In the construction of this pen only the best of materials are used. The rubber parts are hand-turned Para rubber. The gold nib is 14 karat solid gold tipped with the best grade of hard iridium.

OFFER No. 1 We will send one of these fountain pens absolutely free to any one who sends us four new yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at the regular price, 50 cents each.

OFFER No. 2 We will give one fountain pen and a year's subscription to the AMERICAN MESSENGER for only $1.40.

Any of our present subscribers may take advantage of offer No. 2 by extending their subscription one year, and remitting $1.40 in payment for the same.

Our young friends will find this a very good method of securing a Fountain Pen for themselves. Try it and see how easy it is to secure only 4 new yearly subscriptions at 50 cents each.

American Messenger, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York

Just For Fun

"I am never afraid of losing my job so long as I keep straight," said a bright pin.

An Irish lady one morning took her servant to task for having boiled the breakfast eggs too long. "Why, Bid-dy," she said, "they are as hard as stones." "Sure, ma'am," replied Biddy, "it's not the boilin' that made them hard; it's the fault of them new hens—the Plymouth Rocks."

Mrs. Smilax: "Henry, I really believe Freddy is going to be a doctor when he grows up. I heard him tell Mary that she must be careful of her health, and that pie was considered hurtful." Mr. Smilax: "It looks to me as though he is more likely to become a lawyer. I noticed that he had two pieces of pie at supper."

"How do you like your teacher, dear?" little Mary was asked after her first day at school.

"I like her real well," said Mary; "but I don't think she knows much, for she just keeps asking questions all the time."

A gentleman riding with an Irishman came within sight of an old gallows; and, to display his wit, said,

"Pat, do you see that?"

"To be sure Oi do," replied Pat.

"And where would you be to-day if the gallows had its due?"

"Oi'd be riding alone," replied Pat.

"Good-night, you precious lamb!" said the mother with the liberty one sometimes takes even with one's son, at bedtime.

"Mother," said the small boy, beseechingly, "if you must call me something, wouldn't you just as soon call me a billy goat?"

Uncle Joe: "Yes, Tom, it is quite possible that there are people in the moon."

Tom: "Well, what becomes of them when there isn't any moon?"

"What are they moving the church for?"

"Well, stranger, I'm mayor of these diggin's, and I'm for law enforcement. We've got an ordinance which says no saloon shall be nearer than three hundred feet from a church. I gave them three days to move the church."

"Good-morning, parson."

"Good-morning, deacon. As I was coming along just now I saw a fight between a brindle bulldog and a mastiff; and, upon my word, deacon, more than fifty men were standing around. How can people take an interest in such things?"

"I dunno, parson; which dawg won?"

An Irish provincial paper printed the following notice:

"Whereas Patrick O'Connor lately left his lodgings, this is to give notice that if he does not return at once and pay for the same he will be advertised."

While a motorist was trying to repair a punctured tire on a country road a farmer came along in a trap. Said the former:

"Is your horse afraid of motor-cars?"

"No," answered the farmer; "he's hauled too many of 'em home for that."

The banquet had proved very unsatisfactory. The committee in charge, however, were hopeful as the guest of honor was introduced by the toastmaster.

"Gentlemen," said he in a stentorian voice, "we have with us tonight Professor Haxworth, who will tell us some of his biggest and best after-dinner stories."

Amid rousing applause Professor Haxworth arose.

"Mr. Toastmaster and gentlemen," said he, "to begin with my biggest story, let me tell you how thoroughly I have enjoyed your banquet."

THE CHRISTIAN WORKER'S LIBRARY

PROBABLY THE LAST TIME IT CAN EVER BE OFFERED AT $7.50

THE CHRISTIAN WORKER'S LIBRARY

12 Famous Volumes Containing Over 4,300 Pages

A library for the Bible student, pastor, teacher, and for the home.

Unbounded help toward a comprehension of the Bible.

Friends, if you knew how hard we have labored to keep the price of this famous library at $7.50, the price at which it has sold in the past, if you knew that each of these splendid books are worth, on the average, today, at retail, between $1.50 and $2.00 for every copy, you would feel that we are making a good fight against rising costs. You know this library, friends. It is a marvelous set of books for any person who aims to have an intelligent understanding of the Bible. This set of twelve volumes is today a comfort and a blessing in Christian homes. These homes have received a better comprehension of innumerable knotty biblical questions. They have a library of 12 volumes of which they are properly proud. The possession of a library containing such works as THE MASTER PREACHER, THE WONDROUS CROSS, STUDIES IN THE BOOK OF GENESIS and nine other equally meritorious titles instantly bears testimony to the religious life and the religious studiousness of that home.

No home should leave its Bible problem unsolved. There is no need for it. This carefully assembled set of one dozen books provides the answers to hundreds of points that cannot be clearly explained by the average person. What a knowledge of events and of the men of the Bible the CHRISTIAN WORKER'S LIBRARY gives!

Study of the Bible should not be mere plodding drudgery. It should not be dull and unattractive. And it will not be if you have these books in your home. Your study will be four-fold as enjoyable. Reader, these may seem strong statements, but you will not doubt them when you look over the titles below.

Still a word more as to the price. A long time ago we sincerely believed that the purchaser of the CHRISTIAN WORKER'S LIBRARY saved one-half of the actual value of the library when purchasing it for $7.50. The original selling price was, in fact, $15. Today, with costs double what they used to be in many lines, the CHRISTIAN WORKER'S LIBRARY at its old price of $7.50 hardly more than pays for the work of producing it and shipping it. It was a bargain before. Today it is a super-bargain.

Friends, it is unnecessary to say that we cannot hold this library at $7.50 for very much more time. Frankly, two of the books are low in stock and we therefore cannot offer it for very much longer without reprinting. If you want to secure your library today while it may still be had at the old price, fill out the coupon in the lower corner of this page and send it to us.

JUST READ THESE BRIEF DESCRIPTIONS OF THE BOOKS

AMONG THE HOLY PLACES

By James Kean, M.A., B.D.

The author takes the reader with him in his journey and enables him to see in the most vivid manner the scenes visited. One can from this book obtain all the advantages of a personal visit to the places described and probably with still greater profit, for the reason that the author has the ability to see all that is worth seeing. Fully illustrated, and with index.

THE ATONEMENT

By James Stalker, D.D.

The Atonement is a master subject and takes a master hand to treat it so that it is understood. Divided into three parts this book deals in a striking and scholarly manner with the New Testament situation, the Old Testament preparation and the modern justification. The book will work wonders in clearing up many of the questions on the subject.

THE LORD OF GLORY

By Benjamin B. Warfield, D.D., LL.D.

Here is presented the Godhead of Christ on evidence taken from the New Testament. It is an unanswerable plea based on the designations which the New Testament writers apply to Jesus when concurrently speaking of Him. When Dr. Warfield comes to the end no doubt remains that Jesus Christ was indeed the "Lord of Glory." The book has index of designations, passages of Scripture and authors cited. As an aid to the study and preaching of this subject it is without equal.

EVIDENCES OF CHRISTIANITY

By Charles P. McIlvaine, D.D.

This is one of the standard works on the Evidences. The material as set forth in this volume proves clearly, decisively and conclusively a sufficient basis for faith in the divine origin, nature, methods and results of Christianity. After reading this book a believer in God and His kingdom would become a stronger man with stronger beliefs. An unbeliever would turn from his unbelief to the earnest and continued following of Christ.

THE MASTER PREACHER

By Albert R. Bond, A.M., D.D.

Jesus was a teacher and a preacher with methods, a personality, themes and a success of His own. His methods and themes could he followed with success today if it were only known how. Dr. Bond knows how, has done it successfully, and presents in this book for your benefit practically every phase of Christ's method. Its careful study will well repay any minister.

THE EVOLUTION OF A CHRISTIAN

By David James Burrell, D.D.

A wonderfully enlightening book for the mature person, but peculiarly acceptable and attractive to those of more tender years. Dr. Burrell's book has shown many "Young Christians How to Keep on in the Good Way," and has held the seed of amplified understanding for men and women of fuller years.

COMPANION TO THE BIBLE

By E. P. Barrows, D.D.

This is a critical study of the books of the Bible in four parts. Part 1 treats of the evidences of revealed religion. Part 2 examines and classifies the books of the Old Testament. Part 3 examines and classifies the books of the New Testament. Part 4 takes up the principle of Biblical interpretation.

TRANSFIGURED

By Joseph Hamilton

What "Studies in the Book of Genesis" does to give light on a difficult subject in the Old Testament, "Transfigured" does to explain one of the most talked-of events in the New Testament. "Transfigured" is an unusual volume—a devout and common-sense study of this unparalleled theme. It treats of the unseen and eternal.

THE OLD-TIME RELIGION

By David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.

There is not a dull sentence in this whole hook, much less a dull page. Full of terseness and vigor, replete with sound thoughts, the hook goes to the root of the Christian religion and tells why this religion is so solid and satisfactory. Young and old may read it with profit. Young ministers may well take it to heart.

STUDIES IN THE BOOK OF GENESIS

By H. B. Pratt

This is without doubt one of the best commentaries on the book of Genesis. There are so many doubtful points, overlapping events and apparently conflicting circumstances in the first book of Moses which need satisfactory explanations that this volume meets a demand of students of the Old Testament. It is especially valuable because the subject is handled by a man who gave a lifetime to its study and research. The book makes an excellent companion volume to "Evidences of Christianity."

THE TWO ST. JOHNS OF THE NEW TESTAMENT

By James Stalker, D.D.

Did it ever occur to you to make a study of the two Johns in the New Testament? Dr. Stalker with his remarkably original method, clarity of style, comprehensiveness of view and suggestiveness of matter contrasts the lives and characters of John the Evangelist and John the Baptist. Full information on a vitally interesting subject.

THE WONDROUS CROSS

By David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.

We could not resist the temptation to have the twelfth and last volume of this library one of Dr. Burrell's. The Cross is such a vital factor in every life when properly understood that this book seemed more than appropriate to lend dignity to a library intended first of all for the Christian reader and student. It is most acceptable with its pointed truths full of significance.

American Tract Society
New York
Gentlemen: Enclosed find $7.50, for which please send THE CHRISTIAN WORKER'S LIBRARY to the address below:

Name

Street

City

State

T.M.M

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

Vol. 76

SEPTEMBER, 1918

No. 9

SCOTTISH SOLDIERS DRILLING IN THE ESPLANADE OF EDINBURGH CASTLE

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY, NEW YORK.

The Celebrated Edinburgh Castle

BY W. G. P.

THE famous Edinburgh Castle is one of the most interesting castles in Europe, and its history dates back over two thousand years, according to the best authorities. The Castle is built on a huge rock, which rises 443 feet above the level of the sea.

In the seventh century Edwin, King of Northumbria, built a fortress upon this rocky eminence. The name of Edwin's burgh was given to the little town below, and in time, both the Castle and the two became known as Edinburgh. There is plenty of land on the top of this immense rock, for it contains seven acres, affording ample space for all the buildings erected on it. In front is an esplanade 350 feet long, and 300 feet wide; and here the Scottish soldiers in their picturesque kilts may be seen going through their regular military drill. The Half Moon or Morton Battery was built in 1574. Its row of cannon appears very threatening, bristling down upon the old town.

Malcolm the Second made Edinburgh Castle his royal residence in the year 1004. The beautiful queen of Malcolm the Third died in the Castle in 1093, and her Chapel, called Queen Margaret's Chapel, is a monument to her piety. This Norman Chapel, built by her, is over 800 years old and is the oldest building in Edinburgh. It stands on the top of Castle Rock, commanding one of the most magnificent views in the British Isles. In 1124 Edinburgh became a royal city, the residence of the kings of Scotland, and Holyrood Palace was founded.

The portcullis of the Castle is fitted with four gates, and above stands the famous Argyll Tower. From the Half Moon battery the royal salutes are fired when the kings or queens of Great Britain visit Edinburgh.

On the highest plateau of rock at the Bomb battery is the famous Mons Meg, a big cannon which is historic. Some historians claim the big gun was forged at Mons in Flanders, about 1476, but others claim that it was made by a blacksmith of Galloway at the order of James the Second. This old cannon boomed at many sieges in past history, but it was burst by a too big charge of gunpowder in 1682, when it fired a salute in honor of the Duke of York, who made a visit to the city. Two years after this it was removed to the Tower of London. For many years it was mourned by the Scottish people, but it was restored to Edinburgh Castle in 1829 by George the Fourth, through the powerful intercession of Sir Walter Scott.

The Argyll Tower is historic. It rises over the portcullis, and is reached by a small door to the east of Queen Margaret's Chapel. This tower was the prison cell of many famous people of rank, among whom were the Marquis of Montrose and the two Marquises of Argyll. It acquired its name from the last named family. In this tower the great Argyll passed the last night before his execution. The tower was destroyed in the terrific onslaughts of the siege of 1573. But it was restored in 1892.

From the Half Moon battery there is an entrance to the Palace yard, which contains the Crown Room, in which is kept the priceless Scottish regalia. Here is the crown said to have been worn by the celebrated King Robert the Bruce, Queen Mary, James the Sixth, and Charles the First.

Here is also the sceptre of James the Fifth, the sword of state, presented to James the Fourth by Pope Julius II, and the Lord High Treasurer's silver rod of office.

The crown jewels have a strange history. They were captured by Cromwell and sent for safekeeping to the Castle of Dunnotat, and afterwards they were buried under the Mearns Church of Kinneff. At the time of the union of England and Scotland in 1707, they were again lost sight of and remained concealed in an old oak chest for over one hundred years. But finally a search was made, through the influence of Sir Walter Scott, and after a long hunt they were discovered. By the treaty of the union between the two countries, the crown jewels, or as they are called, "The Honours of Scotland," must always remain in Edinburgh Castle, and must never be used.

Queen Mary's room, where her son, James I of England, and James VI of Scotland, was born in 1566, is part of the palace built for Queen Mary in 1565. From the balconies outside her windows the Queen could enjoy magnificent views, as fine as any to be seen in all Europe, according to many writers. Underneath the Queen's room is a vaulted dungeon, and in the rooms above many of the Jacobite nobles were confined as prisoners.

In the celebrated banqueting hall or Old Parliament Hall, Charles the First gave his great coronation banquet in 1633, and in this same hall Oliver Cromwell entertained various friends and dignitaries in 1648. The boy, William, the sixth Earl of Douglas, sixteen years of age, and his younger brother, were enticed into this castle, and near the end of the banquet, the old symbol of death, a black bull's head, was brought into the hall and placed on the table. The two boys realized their peril and drew their swords upon the whole crowd of powerful warriors, but they were overpowered, given a mock trial, taken outside the hall and beheaded.

Edinburgh Castle has been a celebrated fortress in history, and is still capable of accommodating thousands of soldiers. When Edinburgh became the capital of Scotland, about the year 1436, the Castle was selected as the only safe place for the royal household and for the Parliament. It was enclosed by strong walls in the fifteenth century. The great hollow between the central ridge and the northern ridge was filled with water, and called the North Loch. It is very interesting to see this historic Castle towering over the splendid city of Edinburgh, and to imagine the days of the fifteenth century when the Scottish kings sought refuge from their turbulent and warring nobles in this strong Castle, which has been closely connected with Scottish history for hundreds of years.

The Bank Is Solvent

The United States Food Administration is the food bank of the Nation. In commercial affairs you put your money in the bank knowing that the multiplication of many small accounts gives stability and makes possible larger transactions in the world of business than could be handled with any small fund. No depositor expects to see his money all the time. It is sufficient to know that it is in good company, in other words, that the bank is solvent. What is in very much the same situation as money in the world today. Large transactions are necessary if the world war is to be fought to a successful conclusion for ourselves and the Allies, and yet these large transactions must be based upon the multiplied savings of millions of people. Each one can deposit in the general store only a small amount. What is very important is for every saver of wheat to know that the Food Administration is protecting his interests, that sufficient reserves will always be kept to guarantee the support of American citizens. This knowledge begets confidence, and confidence eliminates hoarding and "runs" on the bank. The Food Administration is your food bank, and it is solvent.

The Day of Prayer for Schools

In keeping with its annual custom, the National Reform Association again offers to all pastors this year who will discuss the subject of public education in their pulpits on the Second Lord's Day of September—the Day of Prayer for Schools—or a contiguous Sabbath, appropriate literature, free of charge. This literature is in advocacy of the training of our youth in Christian morality and includes a complete program for the proper observance of the day. Address, National Reform Association, 602-604 Publication Building, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Pray and Pay

In a few weeks we shall be asked to contribute to the Fourth Liberty Loan. Let us prepare now to meet the call.

These are days when we realize the power of prayer. We know that when all is dark and days are long drawn out hours of anxiety, with each casualty list feverishly scanned, we find solace only in communion with the One who knows. We cannot know or see our way, but we can trust, and in trusting we can find peace.

Let us not forget, as we pray for ourselves, to pray for America, that she may continue to be worthy of the great mission she has undertaken; that she may be exalted by righteousness.

And having prayed, let us pay.

Huge sums of money are needed to equip and protect our soldiers at the front. We have promised before the world to keep them there until the cause of righteousness is triumphant if it takes all that we own.

It is a great privilege to have individual part in this work, to know that we have helped some American soldier by what we have done at home. Therefore, if we pray fervently, making our petitions real, actually wrestling with God, we shall be ready to pay.

In the case of some of us, it will involve considerable sacrifice to do our full share in the campaign for the Fourth Liberty Loan. We must face this fact, and begin now to plan what shall be sacrificed. We cannot begin too soon. The more complete our preparations, the more satisfaction shall be had in making new records of devotion when the campaign is made.

Girls' Welfare Clubs

Girls' welfare clubs are being organized by the woman's convention auxiliary to the National Baptist Convention, according to a statement of Mrs. M. A. B. Fuller, corresponding secretary of the auxiliary.

With the assistance of city councils the convention is working to have lights placed in dark places in cities, to prohibit as far as possible loitering around army camps, parks and other public places, and to insure investigations of all questionable neighborhoods, boarding houses, hotels, cafes, parks, and soft-drink stands. There is also an effort being made to have special police in citizens' clothes patrol questionable neighborhoods and to secure public nurses for populous districts where living conditions must be safeguarded.

"We find that welfare clubs working with the city councils accomplish untold good. They keep the proper authorities informed of the conditions of health and morals of boys as well as girls," said Mrs. Fuller.

The Value of Letter Writing.

Some one has said, "Letter-writing keeps friends. Business parts us; we drift away to distant cities. The letter-writer keeps in touch, keeps alive, perhaps in the other, youth's ideals. This, too, is a ministry."

Let us beware of the poisoned pen which writes gossip and suggests harmful and wicked things. Let us rather use the Christian pen, which indites messages of comfort, good will, gentleness and love.

Special Offer of Tithing Literature

During the year 1918 the revised and enlarged pamphlet, "How to Tithe and Why," will be sent gratis, postpaid, to all ministers who ask for it, in sufficient quantities to supply one copy to every family in their churches and congregations.

Please mention the AMERICAN MESSENGER; also your denomination. Address The Layman Company, 143 North Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Are You Doing Your Bit?

He is a poor sort of a patriot who can not find some way to economize in order that he may buy War Savings Stamps, and in so doing give the Government more money, labor and materials with which to fight the war.

FOR OUR SOLDIER BOYS

WOULD you like to send a copy of a fine religious periodical to some soldier boy who is at one of the various cantonments, encampments or officers' training camps? Multitudes of young men will be in training for several months to come, and they will miss many of the comforts of home.

Why not send a copy of that favorite, long-established periodical, the AMERICAN MESSENGER to your soldier boy friend and thus provide him with some splendid reading which he will be sure to enjoy in his leisure moments in camp?

We believe that there are many of our readers who would like to send the AMERICAN MESSENGER to one or more of the soldier boys, and we therefore make a Special Short Term Subscription Offer, whereby, in return for the sum of Twenty Cents we will send this paper to the address of any soldier stationed in the United States for Four Months, that is, from September, 1918, to December, 1918, inclusive.

Such a subscription will ensure to your soldier boy friend a message at Thanksgiving and at Christmas time which will be brought to him through the columns of our special Thanksgiving and Christmas issues, and he will be sure to appreciate it.

A copy of the AMERICAN MESSENGER may prove a Godsend to some lonely soldier boy, who is far from home amid strange surroundings and unknown companions. Think over the list of the boys and young men of your acquaintance who have gone into training camps to fit themselves for heroic service for their country, and then send us a goodly list of names, accompanied by a remittance of 20 cents for each Special Short Term Subscription that you wish to send.

Perhaps some of our friends would like to supply several copies of the AMERICAN MESSENGER to a Y. M. C. A. Reading Room in some particular regiment or encampment. For five or more Special Short Term Subscriptions to be sent to one address we offer a Special rate of only 15 cents per copy for the four months' period, from September, 1918, to December, 1918. On this basis, five copies would cost 75 cents, 10 copies, $1.50 and so on.

Please address all Special Short Term Subscriptions to

AMERICAN MESSENGER,
Park Avenue and 40th Street
New York.

The American Messenger

"Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Luke 2:10

Vol. 76. No. 9

SEPTEMBER, 1918

Copyright, 1918, by American Tract Society.

Terms: 50 cents per annum
Single copy, 5 cents

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

PUBLISHED MONTHLY

BY THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

Park Ave. and Fortieth St., New York, N. Y.

OFFICERS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President.

JOHN HENRY JOWETT, M.A., D.D., Vice-President.

JUDSON SWIFT, D.D., General Secretary.

LOUIS TAG, Treasurer.

REV. HENRY LEWIS, Ph.D., Recording Secretary.

All of the above-named officers should be addressed at Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Rev. David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.

Rev. Charles Carroll Albertson, D.D.

Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.

Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D.

Rev. George Ernest Merriam.

Entered as second-class matter June 20, 1879, at the Post Office at New York, New York, under the Act of March 3, 1879.

Acceptance for mailing at special rate of postage provided for in Section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized on July 3, 1918.

Honoring Our Heroes

The Mayor of New York City has issued a proclamation designating the first day of September as Heroes Day in honor of those soldiers of New York who have died in France.

There is no doubt that this suggestion from the Mayor will meet with a most hearty response, for, as he says: "It is altogether fitting that we should honor those brave men who have died in arms for the cause of human liberty by setting aside a day on which to celebrate their valor, their achievements, and their supreme sacrifice."

While it is very appropriate that we should set apart this first Sunday of September as a Heroes Day, yet in a certain way we cannot escape the conviction that in these times every day should be a Heroes Day, not only in the matter of remembering those who have fallen bravely fighting under their country's flag but also in sustaining those who are now performing deeds of heroic service, both on the battlefield in France and in the homeland.

We do not wish to minimize in the slightest degree the heroic value of the deeds of those who have given the supreme sacrifice of their lives on the battlefield. Of all such it may be said that they have done what they could, and angels themselves could do no more. But what we desire to emphasize is the necessity for deeds of heroic service in every sphere of life, in order that as a united nation we may win the victory over our foes.

The complexity of modern life is just as existent in these days of warfare as in times of peace, and the longer this war continues the more evident does it become that the struggle is to be won, not simply by the efforts of those who wear the uniform of the Army or the Navy, but by the united endeavors of the whole nation.

Every day should be a day of heroic service, whether our appointed task is in the field or the office or the factory or the home. Whether we are engaged in business or a profession or in some form of special war work, we should consecrate our highest abilities to the service of our country, and dedicate both ourselves and all that we have to the performance of the task upon which our nation has entered, and which will not be completed until the ruthless enemy that we face has been entirely vanquished.

✻ ✻ ✻

Labor Sunday

Labor Sunday this year falls on the first of September, the same day which in New York City has been designated as Heroes Day. This is quite a happy coincidence, since true heroism may be displayed by workmen at their daily tasks as well as by soldiers who are fighting on the field of battle.

Mr. Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War, has sent through the Federal Council the following very pertinent message to the churches of America with regard to the present condition of the labor situation:

"The needs for production for the creation of war necessities are forcing an industrial expansion upon the country which must be accomplished in as many weeks sometimes as years would be required under ordinary circumstances.

"Under such circumstances there is a very great responsibility, both upon the Government and upon the people of the communities in which these war industries are developed, that there shall be no lowering of the standards which have been acquired so laboriously through years past, but that rather those ideals toward which we have been working shall be conformed to as promptly as possible. Our thinking for the safeguarding of industrial workers against unnecessary hazards ought to act under as great stimulation as does our thinking in regard to creating new and great industrial processes.

"There is no point at which such thought ought to be applied more carefully than in regard to the responsibilities which attach to the greatly increased number of industrial processes by women, who are thus rendering their war service.

"The Government is doing what it can in regard to all these matters, but no amount of supervisory work can take the place of a genuine community interest in such problems. The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America will be making a very real contribution if it can give its emphasis to the responsibilities which rest upon individuals and communities in regard to vital matters of this sort."

These are wise words from one who is in a position to know the vital part which labor must bear in winning the great conflict in which we are engaged. The interests of womanhood must be conserved under the new and trying conditions which now exist, and childhood, too, must be protected against the evils of premature and exhausting labor. On the other hand, it cannot be too strongly stated that our country has now come to a place where every citizen who is physically fit, should either fight, work or study in order that the rights of humanity may be preserved and that we as a nation may maintain our life as a free and independent people.

✻ ✻ ✻

Lafayette's Birthday Anniversary

Among the notable days that occur in the present month we should not overlook the anniversary of the birth of Lafayette, which occurs on September 6.

From the earliest days of our Republic the name of Lafayette has been honored and beloved, and at the present time the memory of this brave French patriot comes as an inspiration to the young men of our land, who are seeking to repay, at least in part, the debt of gratitude which our nation owes to this distinguished soldier for the aid which he rendered to the United States in achieving its independence.

The words of our honored General Pershing at Lafayette's grave will go down in history as epitomizing the attitude of American citizens toward the people of our sister republic. Freely translated General Pershing's utterance was, "Lafayette, here we are!" And the truth of those words the developments of each successive day is making increasingly clear.

✻ ✻ ✻

The Fourth Liberty Loan

Before the next issue of this paper reaches our subscribers the Fourth Liberty Loan Campaign will have been launched. The Government proposes to float this new loan during the last days of September, and according to present indications it will be the largest of its kind ever offered to the public.

The necessity for this Fourth Liberty Loan is self-apparent. We now have over a million men in France, and it is purposed to speedily increase this number until our forces have reached a strength sufficient to crush the military power of the autocratic nation whose aims threaten the life of every other nation that will not subserviently bend to its will. To maintain this ever-increasing army there must be a large increase in the financial resources of the Government, and for that reason every loyal citizen is asked to do his or her utmost in subscribing to this new Liberty Loan.

The Importance of Education

There has never been a time in our country's history when it was more necessary to maintain before the American people the highest standards of education and to impress upon all young people and especially upon the boys of our land, the fact that the better we are educated the more valuable the service that we can render to our country.

At this season of the year many will face the question whether to continue their education in school or college or to engage in some form of war work that is directly connected with the present conflict.

Young people need to be reminded that in many cases they can render the most valuable service to their country by continuing their education, so that later on they may render far more skilled service to their country than if they were to drop their attendance at school or college at the present moment.

President Wilson has wisely said in this connection:

"I am pleased to know that, despite the unusual burdens imposed upon our people by the war, they have maintained their schools and other agencies of education so nearly at their normal efficiency. That this should be continued throughout the war and that, in so far as the draft law will permit, there should be no falling off in attendance in elementary schools, high schools or colleges is a matter of the very greatest importance, affecting both our strength in war and our national welfare and efficiency when the war is over.

"So long as the war continues there will be constant need of very large numbers of men and women of the highest and most thorough training for war service in many lines. After the war there will be urgent need, not only for trained leadership in all lines of industrial, commercial, social, and civic life, but for a very high average of intelligence and preparation on the part of all the people."

A Suggestion for Rally Day

Though many will necessarily be absent from Rally Day services this year, still the churches and Sunday Schools will do well to observe this day, for the very absence of so many emphasizes the greater need of rallying those who remain to a vigorous campaign for the advancement of the Kingdom.

One large Sunday School of which we have heard, has used the following method in recruiting its members for Rally Day, and smaller organizations may easily adapt whatever modification of the plan is needed to utilize the idea. The whole Sunday School, containing about a thousand members constituted itself as a regiment. The superintendent was designated colonel of the regiment, and he appointed ten captains, who in turn appointed ten corporals, each of whom was responsible for a squad of ten. Each company had a different color for flags and other emblems. The entire regiment was called to the colors on Rally Day. The program was of a military character, and included a regimental roll call by companies. Special awards were given to the squads and companies having perfect attendance.

Give Them a Lift

Realizing that our soldier boys have a great deal of walking to do and that they would appreciate a "lift" now and then, some of the automobile owners and users in various parts of the country have entered into an agreement to carry men in uniform who may be going their way and some sign or token to this effect is pasted on the wind-shield of the machine. In the vicinity of Fort Lee, Virginia, the symbol thus used is a red heart. Whenever a tired soldier sees an automobile so marked going in his direction, he understands that he has a personal invitation to stop it and get in.

Another beneficent movement that has been started is called the "White Star Hospitality Service." The symbol of this service is a white star surrounded by a blue circle, and pasted on a wind-shield or lamp. This emblem tells the public that the owner of this automobile has taken a convalescent soldier, sailor or aviator for a ride or is willing to do so.

A Gift for a Whole Regiment

A friend, who is interested in the ministry of Christian Literature recently sent this letter of one of the Field Secretaries of the American Tract Society:

"Your letter received. After reading it I decided that I could not spend a hundred dollars of the Lord's money better than to use it in sending copies of the Soldier's Text Book to an entire infantry regiment, and I shall not fail to pray for these 3,755 men who receive them."

"Something for the Church"

By ELIZABETH L. GEBHARD

YOU want to do something for the church. Wouldn't you like to do this?" It was a young minister's wife, charming and lovable and full of a warm-hearted Christian enthusiasm, who brought this talismanic sentence with her as she went with her husband to a new parish. Perhaps it was not an original thought on her part, but an ingrained idea, born and trained in a family which had always been doing "something for the church."

To the congregation to which she brought her sunny call to duty, the thought was new. They had long been acquainted with the conscientious few who gave themselves generously to the church, the impulsive members who worked when some special effort appealed, the careless people who let others carry the burdens, and the overworked, tired members, who could of necessity do so little, that they regretfully passed everything by.

Before the eyes of the people who exhibited this mixture of Christianity and human nature, the golden sentence of the minister's wife lifted a veil that revealed the possibilities of both small and large service, and accumulated results that were both surprising and heartening. In these days she might have said: "Of course you all want to do your bit," but in the days when the minister's wife was young, the great war phrase was not yet born, and still the thought was in her heart. Little by little it cast a ray of light into strange and unaccustomed corners.

The young mother of a baby boy found she could be treasurer of the missionary society, recording the money handed to her, and stopping with the baby carriage on sunny afternoons for other dues. She felt she was doing "something for the church," and no longer worried about the things she could not do. With the thought of "something for the church," one after another of those who had felt they could never serve in such a capacity, became officers of the missionary society. A day school teacher, who could give very little week day service, became leader of the Junior Christian Endeavor on Sunday afternoon. Busy homemakers, who must be with their families at meal time, found they could so arrange their household affairs that they could give real practical help in the way of church sociables between meals, and perhaps bring the whole family with them when the sociable occurred.

With the lift in the spiritual atmosphere of the church, one good Sunday School teacher after another found that Bible teaching and the leadership of the boys and girls was what he or she could give to the church. The Pastor's Aid and the Willing Helpers, the Fresh Air work, all grew and flourished. Never had such missionary boxes gone to the Home Mission parsonages. Everybody could and did have a hand in filling them full of practical comforts, conveniences, pretty things, toys for the children and the latest books and magazines for the minister. There grew to be a very personal and loving bond between the home church and its mission stations at home and abroad.

Everyone did "something," and the accumulation of Christian effort made a live church, with an output of practical results which was surprising. Each individual member became a magnet that drew others. The members of the Junior Society found they could make scrap books and dress dolls which brought joy to little folks in hospital beds. The Seniors developed an earning capacity that conduced to a generous support of foreign mission schools and colleges.

There never had been so much sociability in the church, for there had ceased to be any dead wood. Everyone was doing "something for the church" and the common interest tied the members close together.

Nor did it end with the spiritual uplifting of those who were already church members. More and more, the children and young people, drawn into the service of the church, found themselves closer to the Fountain Head of all loving service. Christ and His life became more real to them. They were glad to enlist under his banner, proud to be the soldiers of the King. More young people became members of the church than ever before, and to each new member came the message that was like a call to highest duty, "You want to do something for the church."

What a difference it would make in all our churches if every incoming member voiced their allegiance to Christ and the church with this slogan! Suppose every member in a church did something for the church, what a live church it would be! If every member in each church of a town did something for his church, what a live town would result! If every member of every church in our land did something for Christ and the church, what a Christian nation we would have, and how that spiritual life would spread to the lands over the seas, where Christ and His love are unknown!

Never has the world known as it does today what an accumulation of service will do! Everyone doing his bit, everyone doing something for the church, would lift the whole world to a higher level of Christianity, and make this earth a veritable vestibule of Heaven.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTION

REV. G. ERNEST MERRIAM.

"A MAN UNDER AUTHORITY"

BY

REV. GEORGE ERNEST MERRIAM

Minister of Calvinistic Congregational Church, Fitchburg, Massachusetts

NOT many martial figures are enshrined in the pages of the New Testament. Two of the Gospel writers, however, have saved from oblivion one such personage, a most interesting personality indeed, though nameless. Tradition speaks of him as Marcellus and again as Quirinus; but the sacred authors leave him nameless, as though nomenclature were unimportant compared with character.

Nameless, then let us consider him. Enough to know him as the Roman Centurion, or simply as a man "under authority." How significant a phrase is this—"under authority." It is the man's own description of himself, an autobiography in brief, a thumb nail sketch, a self-painted miniature, a self-made cameo. Not an unnecessary word or line, not a wasted stroke of the brush; only an outline, but how clear-cut it stands, in bas-relief—this strong white soldier spirit, this man under authority.

And stepping out of the remote past, how he enriches the present and how in keeping with it he seems, this decade the most tumultuous and terrific time of all history and the most wonderful as well, a period potential and pregnant with promise. I feel sure that this military hero of old would have a keen interest in the world struggle, were he alive today. He would be playing his part therein, were he here. Nay, he is doing that, for he has a message for the man at the front, for the man in the cantonment and for the men and women who in the rear are doing their part in the rank and file of service.

According to Matthew and Luke he was a Roman Centurion—of a race hated by the Jews, in their eyes the representative of a tyrant. Yet Jewish elders are his messengers, seeking the cure of his sick servant. They speak of him as one who is "worthy," one who "loveth our nation," one who "hath built us our synagogue." Later he sent his more intimate friends, and finally he came himself, and in either case the note of humility is struck in "Lord, trouble not Thyself" and "I am not worthy that Thou shouldest enter under my roof, neither thought I myself worthy to come unto Thee. But say the word and my servant shall be healed."

Is it any wonder that Jesus marvelled, saying, "I have not found so great faith, no not in Israel." Whence came this faith, we ask. And the Centurion answers, that it is by virtue of the fact that he is under authority, saying to one soldier, "'Come,' and he cometh, and to another 'Go,' and he goeth, and to his servant 'Do this,' and he doeth it."

Nor is this all. The keyword of the account is "also"—"I also am a man under authority," that is—as well as you—as well as Jesus. It is a recognition of Christ's authority. Therein was his faith.

The most significant word is "under." You or I would have said "with"—with authority. The Centurion had authority, physical authority, at times of life and death; Jesus had authority, spiritual authority over body and soul. But the Roman was right—such power comes through humility; sovereignty is the result of submission; first under authority and therefore with authority is the law of life.

It is so in the Kingdom of men. The Centurion was a captain, the leader of one hundred men. Yet he was in command not because of his strength, not because of his skill, not because of his personality, save as these helped to prove him a man fitted for the honor. His authority came from Rome. It was conferred by the Emperor. Doubtless he had been promoted as we would say "from the ranks"—first obeying, then obeyed.

We honor the hero not because he knows how to command, but because he knows how to obey. Witness the "Charge of the Light Brigade"

"Theirs not to make reply,
Theirs not to reason why,
Theirs but to do and die."

It is the knowledge that one is under authority, and not that he possesses it over others, that gives him irresistible might in the onset. Cannon to right and left and in front of them cannot stay such in their course. They know that horse and hero must fall—but they obey—simply obey, having faith in those over them, those who like them are under authority.

And so we obey those who represent the law. Fire rages near where we live. The fireman comes to our door, knocks with authority, and orders us to vacate until danger is past, and we obey. The policeman speaks to the citizen, who loiters on the crowded corner, and he obeys. The teacher sets definite lessons for the pupil because under authority and, therefore, with authority from city and commonwealth, and the pupil listens and studies in the spirit of faith rather than of slavish fear. The physician or member of the health board comes into your home and removes to asylum or to hospital the dear one, young or old, who is a menace to home or community because of some dread disease. This is a free country, but we soon learn that we cannot in our amusements act without restraint, or by our speech threaten riot. Everywhere in our civil life we find the man under authority and we respect him and say of him as the famous pupil said of his old teacher, Arnold, "All that I am, from foundation to roof tree, I owe to that man."

It is the same in the realm of nature. The elemental forces are under authority and we learn not to fear, but (if we may verbalize a noble noun) to faith them. Water, in the narrow crevice, freezes; and its expansion shoves to either side the massive rock; or again as steam and water expands too suddenly and the boiler bursts, dealing destruction and death on every hand; or again gravitation takes it in hand and the water, now slower, now faster, speeds on its way to the sea, ever downward, ever onward, from spring to rivulet, from brook to stream, over the rocks and through the grasses, in shade and sunlight, turning wheels and irrigating the fields, but ever, ever journeying toward the sea. Electricity lifts its hand, the thunderbolt of Jove is cast and the monarch of the forest lies low in death. More quietly the principles of life work—the tree straightening toward the sun—the sap mounting from rootlets through roots and trunk and branches to endmost twigs with their leaves and blooms and fruit, the seeds germinating beneath the warm soil and sending forth first the tender stalk, then the leaf, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear.

Man takes advantage of all this. He reservoirs the water and pipes it to distant cities with their hydrants and faucets, and so through gravitation quenches fire or thirst as circumstances may demand. He sets the water wheel in the stream and builds over it his mill; later he converts the water to steam and, changing his motive machinery, he gains the same results through expansion instead of gravitation.

With gravitation as his agent he stands by the pile driver and lifts the weight to the very top, then releases it and as the weight falls, again and again, the mighty log trembles and sinks through mud and ooze and sand to the hardpan beneath. With expansion as his servant he sits in the pilot cab, opens the throttle, and the locomotive glides out upon the track which may span a continent, drawing behind it the long line of cars loaded with freight or with human beings. With atoms of electricity organized into obedient cohorts he lights the city, heats the home, transports the man near or far, or bears the message around the world.

Studying the laws of growth he gives the spur to nature and irrigating, fertilizing, ploughing, harrowing, weeding, he finally harvests thirty, sixty and a hundred-fold. Or in times of war he deals in explosives and with under-the-sea and high-in-the-air inventions, resists the foe and seeks peace through war, calm through confusion, construction through destruction, unity through enmity, weal through woe, life through death.

Then it is that we realize the weak, wavering, wayward humanity which is our legacy and also the glorious divinity which is our heritage. We climb with struggle and strife over cliffs and through sleet and snows to Alpine heights and like the great scholar, when we reach the summit and the vision is horizon wide and heaven high, we forget the earthly menace and woe beneath and spring to our feet with a cheer upon our lips. But, as with him so with us, some guide catches hold of our coat and restrains us as he exclaims, "On your knees, sir, on your knees! You are safe here only on your knees." We are playing with titanic forces, we are reaching undreamed-of heights, and tired and worn and almost doubting, we are blinded by sudden visions of God's plans and purposes. We need the "gift of the knees" or our position will be precarious and our fall will be, like that of Lucifer of old, from heaven to hell.

Not otherwise is it in the realm of the intellectual. Man obeys and commands his fellow. Man obeys and commands the forces of nature. But in all this it is the idea which is dominant: its sceptre is regnant. Man becomes an exile to write his book or to formulate his doctrine, that is under the spell of the ideal—the high, selected, selective idea. Man risks death rather than pay a tax on tea, thrilled by the rights of liberty. Man holds other men in his grip as a Garibaldi, saying, "I can offer you nothing save rags and wounds and death, but let him who loves his country follow me." Still we see the influence of authority and of those under authority. But conscience is king, and moral rather than civil law is in the ascendant.

Out of skies black as midnight comes the blinding, blasting bolt of lightning. It strikes. A home is ablaze and before man can act it is burned to ashes. But the owner rebuilds on the same or other foundations, and this time he erects the rod of Franklin above his roof and shakes his fist in the face of the storm and challenges the powers that be, saying, "Come again if you will, but next time travel my roadway to dungeons prepared for you beneath."

Again, man looks upon the burrowing mole and through the sightless sees a vision; he looks upon the spider and from its gossamer thread he spins cables of steel. Forthwith he tunnels beneath the river and erects his bridge above the river. He looks upon the bird with envy; he looks upon the fish and emulation stirs in his heart. He frames the aeroplane and designs the submarine. So he makes his conquest of land and water and air.

The idea with him is no idle dream, but an instrument of reality. He conquers not only the world of things, but the hearts of men. His genius speaks through music and art and literature. Through harmony and through color and through the printed page he makes men hear and see and feel, for is he not also a man under authority? Book follows book in sequence, in science, economics, ethics, religion. One builds upon another. It is the survival of the fittest—a battle of brains, a warfare of wits.

Sometimes we worry and wonder and speculate as to what we should think and say and do. Let us remember the artilleryman who, when asked in the midst of his description of the mighty conflict, "What did you see?" answered, "Nothing but confusion and dust and smoke," and when further questioned, "What did you do?" without hesitation replied, "I stood by my guns!" They also serve—and we might add, save—who only stand and wait.

There is one, and one only in supreme authority—God. It is with His universe that we have to do. It is in His universe that we live. Back of the nations are the cumulative ideas of men; back of the universe is the creative idea—the fiat of the Almighty. Yes, back of man himself is the Alpha and Omega—God. As the Persian poet wrote:

"Angels, elements and skies and men
Are parts of One whose law the whole enfolds."

It is under His authority that nature acts and reacts. Under His authority also man breathes, thinks, wills and performs.

Many and strangely unlike are His agents with varying authority, according as they have learned to know and obey His laws. But there is only one supreme agent, of Whom it has been said that He was "with God" even "in the beginning" and that "by Him were all things made and without Him was nothing made that was made." He was the Word—the expressed idea. He was the Light by which men might walk in safety and with known destiny. He it was who said to men without hesitation, "Follow Me," and of Whom men said with unanimity, "He spoke as one having authority." He it was who quieted the stormy sea with His "Peace be still." He made the cross the sceptre of the world. He impressed the Centurion as one "under authority." What if, perchance, this Centurion was one and the same with him who stood beneath the cross and there gave his testimony—the later verdict of all who came after—"Truly this was the Son of God."

And He it was, the Christ, who gave authority to His disciples just as long as they should abide in His word and "love one another." There is no authority like that of love, swaying and swayed by affection. Napoleon employed the power of armament and he failed; the power of Christ was that of love and love only, and millions would and will die for Him. The battle is on; not only in Europe but in the hearts of men, between right and wrong, between God and the devil. He who has gained our pardon demands our allegiance and our unquestioning obedience.

The Centurion was a man of responsibility, a man of power, and therefore a man of pride; but, paradox of attributes, he was also a man of humility. "I also." How that "also" speaks of a sense of peerage, a justifiable consciousness of position, of vested authority. Yet—note again the "under"—knowing his position, as we sometimes say. With authority? Yes, but because under authority. Sovereignty comes through submission.

Not otherwise is it in the Kingdom of God. Christ, we read, "humbled himself" and became "obedient unto death, yea, the death of the cross," and hence "in the name of Jesus every knee shall bow."

The great Livingstone, the first time he stood in a Christian pulpit, became so frightened that, after announcing his text, he actually fled from the church. Yet see him entering, crossing and recrossing the wilds of Africa, praying ever, "O God, help me to paint this dark continent white!" At his death faithful natives bore his body in its rough coffin thousands of miles through trackless forests, until they reached the inland sea and the ship that was to bear what was left of the missionary author and scientist to England and Westminster Abbey. Even Punch, the comic paper of London, while playing upon the name in commenting on his death, preaches a sermon in miniature upon his deathless character.

"Open the Abbey doors and bear him in
To sleep with king and statesman, chief and sage,
The missionary, come of weaver kin,
Made great by work that brooks no lower wage.
He needs no epitaph to guard his name,
Which men shall prize while worthy work is known;
He lived and died for good, be that his fame.
Let marble crumble; this is Living-stone."

Theseus of old at last was able to lift the stone and secure the sword and sandals, placed there before his birth by the expectant father. At once he started on the long journey to that capitol where he should be trained for the throne, clearing as he went the roadway of all robbers and tyrants who menaced the people. So God has placed in the Scriptures the sword of the Spirit and the sandals of Peace—that we may be armed and shod. When will we get our spiritual growth, push to one side the boulder of indifference, seize upon our divine trust and begin the life-long journey of service, seeking to reform and transform the world and they who dwell therein?

In this year of sacrifice, of Red Cross and Red Triangle giving, of utter loyalty and patriotism, are we acting not merely for the good of temporal kingdoms, but for the eternal kingdom of God and for the advancement of Christ's banner of love?

Beyond the Mystic Veil

BY KATHLEEN HAY.

Somewhere away from the noise and stir of the city, there stretches a vast plain, where the wind sighs softly through the trees and the little birds sing joyous songs to each other. And somewhere, afar, too, from the brilliant, artificial lights that brighten the heart of a great metropolis, the stars, God's own lights, shine down over quiet hills and valleys, and looking up to the far-off heavens, one is filled with awe at the majesty and splendor of His mighty work.

Thus, seeing the beauty of the trees and birds and flowers of this world, who can conceive of the grandeur that lies where that beauty "fadeth not away?" Somewhere, we feel quite sure, there awaits apart from the artificialities of the world, a land of perfect peace, "beyond this vale of tears," and there the flowers that faded here, will lift again their drooping heads and bloom with an unknown beauty. The songs that were begun and broken off on earth, will live on and on, and blend in a glad harmony in the heavenly realm throughout all eternity.

We cannot see between "the here and there," though there stretches but a thin veil between—we cannot hear the gladness of that broken song, to which we've listened with mortal ears. The discordant chords of what seemed the end on earth, are ringing still in our hearts, but, "just over there," "when the mists have rolled in splendor . . . from the beauty of the hills . . ." the silver tones reverberate in a far grander symphony of an endless song.

"We'll catch the broken threads again,
And finish what we here began;
Heaven will the mysteries explain,
And then, ah, then, we'll understand.
We'll know why clouds instead of sun
Were over many a cherished plan;
Why song has ceased when scarce begun;
'Tis there, sometime, we'll understand."

Let us live through the span of years below, with that faith which will admit of the mist curtain arising for us on the glory of that beautiful beyond—there where there'll be no fading away of the flowers, no close to the song of immortal life, and where we'll come no more to the end of a perfect day!

Vision is too feeble, imagination too cramped, and words too limited to describe the peace and glory of that coming day, and yet, we do know, that,

"Far out of sight, while sorrows still infold us,
Lies the fair country where our hearts abide,
And of its bliss is naught more wondrous told us
Than these few words—I shall be satisfied."

The Last Adventure

BY JAMES TERRY WHITE.

*All forms of life are endless; each frail vase
Is emptied o'er and o'er—but filled again;
And never tangled is the wondrous maze
Of Nature's melodies through endless days—
And yet forever new and sweet to men.*

*Gleams hint that life upon some future waits;
The worm cannot forecast the butterfly—
And yet the transformation but creates
A step in the same Nature which now mates
Our own—and may life's mystery untie.*

*Mayhap the butterfly this message brings:—
"The law, uncomprehended, I obey;
Although the lowliest of earth-bred things,
Even I have been reborn with urgent wings,
And heavenward fly—who crept but yesterday."*

*In life's fair mansion I am but a guest;
And life will bring fulfillment of the gleam.
I trust this last adventure is the best,
The crowning of this earthly life's behest,
The consummation of the poet's dream.*

PREACHERS IN PRINT

Among the Miners

Rev. Henry W. Pratt has for many years circulated Christian literature as a missionary colporter of the American Tract Society in Utah and the adjoining States. He meets with all classes and conditions of people, and often his travels take him among the miners.

The illustration on this page shows us a coal tippie at Castle Gate, Utah, which Mr. Pratt visited some time ago, and where he distributed good, Christian reading among the men there employed.

In a recent report Mr. Pratt gives the following account of his work for the month:

"The first town I visited this month was Stockton, Utah. Some mines are adjacent to it, and it may be properly called 'a mining town.' Some people there value good books, and in past visits I could count on circulating many publications there. In one home I sold 'White Fire' to a young lady. This missionary narrative is a splendid book to leave in homes. In another home I found that the mother liked poems for the children, and she took 'Home Songs' and 'Songs for the Little Ones at Home.' Most of the books I disposed of were for children.

"Since my last visit to this town a Union Sunday School has been started, but it makes slow progress. I called on a lady who was said to be the superintendent, but she told me she was not attending now, and evidently she had lost interest. I urged upon her the need of Christian work in such a town, especially in view of the fact that the Mormons keep up their work there.

"The next town I visited was Delta, whose population is mostly Mormon. There is, however, a Presbyterian Church, which has a good pastor. I called on him, as I have on previous visits, for he usually buys books for the Sunday School, and this time he took a copy of 'Naomi.'

"A new sugar factory has been built since I was last in Delta. The unusual thing about this is the fact that it is owned by Eastern people, whereas almost all the other sugar plants in Utah are owned by Mormons, and Utah has more such factories than any other State. This new factory in Delta has brought a number of good families to the town who will undoubtedly help to carry on the Christian work.

"The next town I visited was Oasis, well named, because it lies on the desert. It is an all-Mormon town. I visited every family in the place and was kindly received. In some cases the people purchased books.

"Another town I visited was Deseret, one of the oldest towns in Utah. It is all-Mormon, and located several miles from the railroad. The people were cordial to me. A young man who likes to read bought 'The Boy Next Door.' Another boy bought 'A Boy of Today,' which reminds of the fact that a lady in Salt Lake City, who bought that book for her boy, said, 'A friend told me that this is the best book of its kind for boys that I ever read.'

"I find in a good many homes very sad people, for so many have gone to the war. In such cases I often distribute the tract, 'Looking Through Your Troubles,' saying 'If instead of looking at our troubles, we look through our troubles to Christ, who is our Burden-bearer, the troubles will be easier to bear, and the trials will work out for our own good.'"

A COAL TIPPLE AT CASTLE GATE, UTAH, VISITED BY COLPORTER PRATT

In one of his letters Mr. Pratt calls attention to the perils of Mormonism, and issues a note of warning in these words:

"The Mormon Church has 5,000 missionaries now and at least three-quarters of them are at work in the United States at the present time.

"Mormonism is on the increase in our country. Utah is of course largely Mormon, but there is a constant increase through the growth of Mormon families. 'Increase and replenish the earth,' is the Mormon teaching. In addition to this natural growth there is a constant increase through the work of the Mormon missionaries in New York and other states.

"Missionary work of the right sort for the propagation of the true Christian faith is sorely needed in these dark days of warfare. I pray that I may be able to do good to the tried and sorrowing ones."

✻ ✻ ✻

Personal Work in Oregon

Rev. Samuel Mueller, who has been distributing the Gospel message for many years as a missionary colporter of the American Tract Society in the far Northwest tells of some of his recent efforts in these words:

"One day I met a poor, drunken soul in the car. When he got off I stepped out with him and on the sidewalk I told him how Jesus so loved him that He died for him on the Cross to save him from that terrible curse of strong drink.

"At Hillsdale it was my privilege and joy to receive an order from each of two Italian women for a Bible in their own mother tongue. Some time ago I had distributed tracts to these dear souls, and this was the welcome harvest, for which be thanks, glory and praise to God.

"Somebody, whom Jesus loves, has made it possible for me to distribute some hundreds of copies of the Soldier's Text Book to our boys in the streets of Portland before or after the service on Sundays. May this effort result in an abundant spiritual harvest!

"One evening I was sitting beside a soldier of the sea as we travelled together in the car. I spoke to him about the great love of the Saviour, and told him that only His precious blood can cleanse us from sin. God knows what the fruit of the harvest will be in this and in the many other cases in which I have spoken personally to various souls concerning their salvation."

✻ ✻ ✻

Among the Mountaineers

Rev. J. M. Carter, a missionary colporter of the American Tract Society, writes from Pembroke, Va.:

"I am doing what I can to spread the word of the Master in destitute homes. It seems to me that the only hope that can be held out to these people is to read the Word of God and to ask His protecting care. Our services and the Christian literature provided by the American Tract Society are fulfilling a mission of which the world stands in much need now. I would to God that all nations would feel the need of the divine Word as do these humble mountaineers. Then we would have a better earth for men to live in."

✻ ✻ ✻

A Message From Korea

In a recent communication, Mr. Gerald Bonwick, the efficient General Secretary of the Korean Religious Book and Tract Society, whose headquarters are at Seoul, writes:

"War conditions and war prices have caused us a great deal of anxiety and extra expense, and yet the work has increased in spite of all the drawbacks, and we are able to report a larger circulation for the past year than ever before. Indeed there seems to be no limit to the demand for good books, if only we could publish them."

THE WATCHER IN THE DOORWAY

By Edgar L. Vincent

HERE is one thing that God cannot do for His lost children. Think for a moment of the parable of the lost sheep. Out of his flock a shepherd missed just one. There were ninety-nine more, but this one was gone when the evening shadows came on and it was time to gather the flock inside the fold. It may be before now the shepherd had noticed that this was a wilful sheep. Often he had brought it back from its straying. Did some one say when he spoke of the missing creature, "Let it go now. It is only seeking one more last bite of choice grass before the day is over. It will come back in good time. Let us not be troubled now. It is so young, and when it has awakened from its pursuit of life's pleasant things, it will find its way to the fold." If so, then may we not fancy that the shepherd would answer, "But the shadows are falling. Soon darkness will settle over the hills. The straying lamb will linger too late, and then in its haste to be back with its mates it will run and tear its tender flesh on the cruel thorns and cry in terror. I will therefore go and seek my lost sheep!"

And the shepherd goes and he climbs the mountain paths, calling, calling, everywhere for the wandering sheep, "until he finds it." Then, laying it on his shoulder he bears it back home, rejoicing. Because the lamb was so weak and so foolish and so helpless, the shepherd thought for his sheep, he had pity upon it and sought it until he found it, perhaps lying torn and bleeding, suffering and tired unto death under some pitiless thorn-bush!

Of the ten pieces of silver, the woman missed one. She counted her little store over again and again, to be sure that she was not mistaken. It was true; somehow through her fingers the little coin had slipped and disappeared. With quick-beating heart, for this was a loss she could not afford, she hurried to light the candle and to sweep the house from top to bottom, seeking diligently "till she found the lost piece of silver." What a day it was when at last she held her treasure in her hand! No wonder she felt like calling her friends and neighbors together to rejoice with her! Why should they not be glad that their friend had recovered the precious piece she had lost! So, declared the Master, is there rejoicing in heaven over every sinner who repenteth. The coin never could have been recovered, had not the woman made diligent search for it! Silver is cold, senseless, inanimate! It cannot think; it cannot act for itself. Once lost, it must remain forever missing, unless it is gathered up from the dust and the litter of life and brought back to its owner.

Now pause for a moment to take in the deep meaning of the son who was lost. When the prodigal demanded of his father the portion of goods that fell to him and went away from home, he did it with deliberate purpose. He had the choice, and he took it, of remaining under the sheltering roof-tree, happy in the love of the dear ones, or of taking his way out into the world. Was it not just as the shades of evening were falling over moor and fen that the young man took his way down the pathway from his father's house, out upon the road to the world which looked so big to him? It is the dark which so charms the young away from home! So brightly shine the lights yonder! So alluring are the things which lie beyond the range of the eyes blinded by passion!

Did the old man stand in the doorway, wide open so that the warm light of the home lamp might stream out over the way the son was taking, if by any chance he might look back and after all come back to his father's house, where there was bread enough and to spare? Did the father watch until the form of the boy he loved so well had passed on and out of sight, and then go in and sit down by the side of the companion of his heart, his eyes running over with tears, his heart torn with sorrow? Did he grieve with the mother as they thought over together the days when he was pure and sweet and innocent? Did not the mother whisper to the strong man bowed there in grief, "He is a good boy, father! We will love him as we always have loved him, and love him to the end?" And did not the father draw her to him and bravely answer, "Surely, we will keep the light in the window for him! We will watch for his homecoming together!"

Now, those were hard days which came after that for the old folks waiting in the home. They knew more about the ways by which sin leads men than did the boy who had gone out into the far country. They tried the best they could to follow him in their thoughts as he went up and down, up and down the primrose path, looking everywhere for something sin never gave and never can give. They felt the sting of the awakening when at last the substance, wrought out in the fields so slowly and so carefully, had all been wasted and the boy with the once clear eye had been turned into the man with the bleared vision and the seared conscience, and something else must be done. Where now must he take his way! God only knew! Surely, it would be something that would shame and humiliate their boy, for that must be the common lot of every man who turns out his manhood and lets devils into his soul! But all they could do was to kneel together and ask God, the Father, to keep watch and ward over their boy!

All they could do? And why not do as did the shepherd when his wee lamb was gone astray? Why not seek him, as the housewife did her piece of silver that was gone, with lighted candle and swift-flying broom? Why? Because man's will is his own, and not even God Himself may touch it against his choosing! Man thinks for himself! Man says for himself, "I will or I will not!" Man sits on the throne of his own soul and arbitrates between life and death! What if the father had gone out to seek his boy? What if he had found him down there in the haunts of evil, or even out in the fields with the swine, and brought him back home. Could he have been sure that the son would have stayed? Might there not have come another day when he would demand still more from his father and have gone out to still deeper shame? Would he have been always happy and satisfied had the father gathered him out of his unrepentant disgrace and set his feet again in the quiet lanes of the home life?

No. What the father could do, and all he might do, was to wait and watch in the doorway for the homecoming of his son. He could pray for him. He could write him letters from home. He would in ways the son might never know or understand throw influences about the one he loved which might play upon his heart and lead him to a saner way of thinking? He might pray God to send the Holy Spirit to guide and to quicken and to convict the heart of his son, but the boy must come back of his own accord. It might wring the very blood out of the father's heart while the experience of the fields and the swine and the husks were tugging at the life of the erring son. He might feel all the shame, all the suffering, all the remorse over the years which had been wasted; but all he could do was to pray and to watch and to wait for the dear one to come to himself! It is best that that should be so, for there is only one master of the will, and he is the one to whom God gave it!

But after he came to himself, how the sunshine comes in to flood the young man's pathway! God has kept alive in his soul the sweet memories of the past! How often as he did that menial and distasteful service out there with the creatures he hated so, his thoughts went back to the brook where he had built his little dam or listened in fancy to the twitter of the birds in the trees by the side of the old home door! How good those days were! How happy he had been until the lure of sin caught him in its swirl! How good it would seem now to just lay his head down once more on the snowy pillow mother had made for him! Thanks be to God, these wooings never lost their power; and at last—at last—he said unto himself, "I will arise and go to my father!"

The little one in our home came to a time when it seemed to him no longer fitting that he should ask grandfather to excuse him from the table when his meal was done. When the father urged the duty of making this little plea, the will of the three-year-old grew stronger and he would not yield. Lifting him in his chair the father took his little one away into a room that was dark and there alone the two fought out the battle.

"Say, 'excuse me, grandpa,'" the father urged over and over again, patiently. Then a long silence, out of which the grandsire still waiting at the table heard a whispered, "Excuse me, grandpa!" "Say it louder; grandfather did not hear," went on the father; and at last a stronger voice came up to the old man's ear, "Excuse me, grandpa, if you please!" But the grandfather had caught the first faint pleadings of the little one; and just so God hears the slightest whisperings of the lips that are stirred by a will brought into subjection to His own!

For what do we read? Is it not this:

"When he was yet a great way off, his father saw him and had compassion, and ran, and fell on his neck and kissed him!"

A long way off! Blessed watching at the doorway! Gracious manifestation of the love that never faileth!

The Visitor

BY THOMAS CURTIS CLARK

*Pale Sorrow came to dwell with me,
And Joy went on her way.
I welcomed not my mournful guest,
And begged sweet Joy to stay;
But, laughing, Joy went from my door—
And all the sky was gray!*

*I hid my face within my hands,
And wept—how bitterly!
I grieved that Sorrow should have sent
My childhood friend from me;
For Joy had never left my side
Since life began to be.*

*Then Sorrow took my hand in hers,
And spoke in tones so sweet
That I could only heed her words
And fall before her feet;
She told of life and love and God—
And months and years were fleet!*

*Then Joy returned—no more a child,
But now a woman grown;
Her eyes were lustrous with the light
Of those whose hearts have known
The hurt of life, but who, made wise,
Have ceased to walk alone.*

*She spoke: "I too have learned of life,
And thus return to you
To dwell with you through all the years,
A comrade tender, true."
Then Sorrow, smiling, left my door—
And all the sky was blue!*

HIS VINEYARD AND OURS

Native Workers in the Congo

One of the most important and desirable features of missionary work is the enlistment of native workers. Indeed it may be truthfully stated that, other conditions being equal, the more effective the native workers are, the more effective will be the work of the mission as a whole.

The American Baptist Foreign Mission Society maintains a large and active mission in the Congo, and here the missionaries have learned to avail themselves of the services of many native teachers and evangelists.

The striking picture on this page shows us a group of native workers in the Congo Mission. These are teachers and evangelists, who were sent to various outposts to carry on their work for a period of three months. The photo from which this picture was reproduced was sent by Rev. Joseph Clark.

The Congo Mission was adopted by the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society in the year 1884. Its field is the Belgian Congo, comprising 900,000 square miles and containing a population estimated at 9,000,000 souls.

NATIVE TEACHERS AND EVANGELISTS IN THE CONGO

Fifty Years of Spanish Evangelization

The World's Evangelical Alliance calls attention to the fact that October, 1918, marks the fiftieth anniversary of the granting of permission to preach the Gospel in Spain.

Until the year 1868 it was a crime for Spaniards to possess a copy of the Bible in their own tongue; the practice of the Inquisition was continued after the nominal abolition of that institution, and Queen Isabella succeeded in uniting fanatical hatred of Evangelicalism with grave irregularity of private life. In 1868 she was driven from Spain, and the Evangelical Alliance, that consistently advocated religious liberty in Spain, rejoiced to know that the exiles for conscience were permitted to return to their native land. The late Bishop Cabrera was told by General Prim that he could go wherever he wished with "his Bible under his arm." Since that time the story of Evangelical work has been marked by years of persecution and times of tolerance. Hopes have been shattered by political changes, and have revived when governments saw and did their duty by the Bible readers. Today many branches of the Evangelical Church work in godly union and concord, under conditions of greater freedom than they ever enjoyed. The World's Evangelical Alliance is the center of inter-communion and the organization for joint action acknowledged by them all.

The Growing Disregard of Caste Lines

"When the first little outcaste boy in India crossed his brown legs on the floor of a mission school and began to puzzle out the strange marks made by the teacher, he unconsciously began a social revolution," says a writer in the Centenary Bulletin.

"The mission schools lived up to the ideals of Christianity by opening their doors to all castes alike. It took considerable courage to begin the education of the outcastes; there was a strong popular sentiment against it and threats to boycott the schools entirely followed the innovation.

"But the Hindu did not succeed in changing the schools; the schools changed the Hindu. Democracy will have its harvest time in India when the war is over, just as in other parts of the world. Caste lines are wavering and growing dim; in some cases they have been entirely obliterated."

In addressing the Madras Provincial Social Conference recently, S. Srinivasa Iyengar, president of the organization, called attention to the new social attitude which is developing in India.

"Caste is no longer what it was, except as regards inter-marriage and widow marriage," he said. "In almost all other matters and amongst considerable sections of the population, it is steadily losing strength and influence with both the educated and the uneducated; for the latter readily and intelligently cooperate with the former.

"Interdining has become common and open. Food prepared by hands and in ways not sanctioned by custom is freely partaken. Dining with those who have broken the rules of caste attracts little or no attention and entails no inconvenience in the caste. Sea-voyage is no longer visited with the customary pains and penalties. Excommunication is infrequent and has ceased to be effective. The old tyranny of the priest and pundit has been replaced on their part by a creditable spirit of tolerance and even of active help.

"Again, the castes come together now far more frequently and intimately than before. The tables of pollution and purification no longer regulate social intercourse in the larger towns and cities. And occasionally the Brahmin and non-Brahmin stay in each other's houses as guests for a day or two.

"Above all, with the rapid spread of education amongst Hindu women, association of Hindu ladies of all castes are formed for divers purposes of mutual benefit. These draw, as nothing else would, the castes closer together and prevent the great and in many cases decisive influence of woman from being available to uphold the law of caste."

A Large Gift by a Mission Convert

"If a Body Meet a Body" on a train in Japan, the one a young Japanese adventurer returning from an unsuccessful expedition, and the other the president of a Methodist mission school, who ventures to predict the result? About thirty years ago Ginjire Katsuta met President (now Bishop) Honda as described above, and as a result of the chance conversation entered Aoyama Gakuin, the Methodist Anglo-Japanese mission school in Gokyo. Katsuta was graduated from the academy in 1892. During his studies here he was converted and baptised. After graduation he entered business, and his shipping interests have made a multi-millionaire of him since the beginning of the war. He is very popular and is featured in many newspapers and magazines of his land.

In 1915 he heard that the roof of Goucher Hall at the mission needed repairs; he immediately contributed $5,000 for the purpose. In the summer of 1916 President Takagi laid before him the plans for expansion so urgently needed to accommodate the greatly increased number of students; he pledged at once a new college building to cost about $40,000, but desiring to see it the most complete of its kind he has since increased the sum to nearly $100,000, besides giving $5,000 for a residence for the president on the school campus. In the words of the annual report, "it is the largest gift of its kind ever made by a mission-school graduate in Japan."

A Modern Paul in San Salvador

In San Salvador a quiet man of God preached Christ and Him crucified. He told of the life hid with Christ in God. He pointed the way to purity and righteousness. And the woman, a Catholic who kept the cantina (saloon), found that he interfered with her trade.

"For a certain man named Demetrius, a silversmith, who made silver shrines for Diana, brought no little business unto the craftsmen; . . . and said, Sirs, ye know that by this business we have our wealth."

The quiet preacher was arrested and brought before the judge. His accusers were the priest and the woman who kept the cantina.

The judge said, "Tell me what you have been saying to the people on the streets."

"And Agrippa said unto Paul, Thou art permitted to speak for thyself. Then Paul stretched forth his hand, and made his defense."

Then the preacher took from his pocket his Bible and preached as his custom was: "Wherefore, O King Agrippa . . . I declared unto them that they should repent and turn to God."

The judge in San Salvador, looking kindly at the preacher, said: "I see nothing wrong in this. You may go on preaching."

"And the king rose up, and the governor, and Bernice, and they that sat with them: and when they had withdrawn they spake one to another, saying, This man doeth nothing worthy of death or of bonds."

Wayside Sunday Schools in Korea

Many Sunday-schools in Korea have been started by methods similar to the following, we are informed by a correspondent of the World's Sunday-School Association:

"A missionary well supplied with brightly colored pictures or text cards goes to some village and sits under some tree or by the side of the road. Very soon one child and another gathers in front of him to examine him and hear what he has to say. The missionary says a few words and perhaps sings a verse or two of 'Jesus Loves Me' and gives each of the children a card and tells them to come again next Sunday and bring others. Next Sunday he comes to the same place and the children are there to meet him. A few will perhaps spell out with him a verse or a text. Some Sundays later the children will learn to look for his coming and the class will take on regular proportions, and quite a number will join shyly in the singing. It may be that a child or friendly neighbor will offer his house, yard or room and from that time more or less regular work may be begun. Some 'Schools' have met Sunday after Sunday through a long bitter winter under a tree by the roadside, but the good done was not to be measured. Since these schools started only a few years ago thousands and thousands of children have been reached. Just the other day a Korean said, 'It is curious that when I used to go to such and such a village the children sang all sorts of heathen songs, but now I only hear, "Jesus Loves Me."'"

First the children, then the home and then the church. This is the story in thousands of cases in the Orient.

The Making of a Japanese Evangelist

In Men and Missions we find an interesting statement concerning the remarkable case of the Japanese evangelist, Mr. Kanamori, which is as follows:

"Mr. Kanamori is one of the oldest Christian pastors in Japan—a man of great ability and experience. He was the first one, some twenty-five years ago, to translate German theology into Japanese. By this not only did he open the flood gates for a vast amount of harm to the Japanese Church, but he lost his own faith as well and left the church. Now, however, in his old age—he is sixty-one—he has heard the call to come back into the work of the Kingdom. He has become a common soldier in the Salvation Army, but devotes his whole time to touring the country helping all churches in their evangelistic efforts. During his years of truancy, as he now calls them, the government employed his rhetorical powers and his pen as well in certain popular educational schemes, so that today there is not a town or village in the empire where he is not well known. This is a great asset in his work at this time."

Patriotic Lepers

Molokai, the leper colony in the Hawaiian Islands, set its own quota to be raised toward the Third Liberty Loan, and then cabled a subscription for $3,000 worth of Thrift Stamps. There are only a few hundred individuals there, all lepers, but they are loyal to our country none the less. The man who is now in charge of the colony is a New Englander—Ira Jones Dutton, or Brother Joseph Dutton, as he is called there. He has been for thirty-seven years in Molokai, going there as an assistant to Father Damien, to whose work he has succeeded.

Japanese Missionary Zeal

The Congregationalist Churches of Japan, we are told, have their own Japanese missionaries in Korea, who have enrolled 20,000 Koreans in their body. Now they are sending the well-known evangelist, Mr. Kimura, to the Marshall Islands to do evangelistic work among the Japanese soldiers and sailors at present garrisoning this former German colony.

Looking Ahead

The American Board of Foreign Missions is getting ready to send over a hundred missionaries into Turkey as soon as peace is established.

Notes upon the Topics Used
in Christian Endeavor
and Other Young People's Societies.

THE PRAYER MEETING

By
Rev. Henry Lewis
Ph.D.

SEPTEMBER 1.

All for Christ. III. Our Tongues

James 3:1-12.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M. Aug. 26. Testifying for Christ. Acts 1:1-8.
T. Aug. 27. The tongue in leash. Ps. 34:11-16.
W. Aug. 28. Praising God. Rev. 7:9-17.
T. Aug. 29. Warning men. Ezek. 2:1-10.
F. Aug. 30. Wise words. Isa. 50:4-9.
S. Aug. 31. Gracious words. Gen. 50:15-21.

If we have consecrated all our abilities and all our ambitions to Christ, then we shall not fail to dedicate the use of our tongues to His service also.

The Bible has much to say about the use of our tongues, and throughout both the Old and the New Testament we find frequent suggestions applicable to our topic, as is shown in the Daily Readings.

The passage in the Epistle of James which has been selected for our special study is a spiritual classic, and from it we may derive a great deal of instruction and of inspiration on the subject before us.

Tongues for Teaching

As it is with our tongues that we teach, the Apostle warns against assuming the office of teacher too hastily. He implies that the office of teacher is a noble one, and clearly indicates that unless we can bridle our tongues, we are not fitted to exercise the function of teaching. Of course there are many other characteristics that are requisite for those who would become teachers, but the requirement of controlling the tongue is fundamental and indispensable.

A Little Member and a Large Influence

No one has ever brought out more clearly than the Apostle James the great influence of that little member of our body which we call the tongue. He has emphasized the power for evil which is inherent in the tongue, but let us remember that the power for good is equally inherent, and it depends upon our own choice as to whether our tongues shall be an influence for weal or woe.

Witnessing for Christ

One of the best ways we can use our tongues is in witnessing for Christ. If we are to be true to our Master, we shall not be silent, when the opportunity is given to testify for our faith.

In a certain sense we testify as to our faith every time we speak. In his Epistle to the Ephesians Paul writes: "Let no corrupt speech proceed out of your mouth, but such as is good for edifying as the need may be, that it may give grace to them that hear." This means, as Findlay well remarks, that the apostle does not merely forbid injurious words; rather he puts an embargo on all that are not positively useful. It is not enough to say, "My chatter does nobody harm; if there is no good in it, there is no evil." Paul replies, "If you cannot speak to profit, be silent till you can."

SEPTEMBER 8.

Training Conscience and Trained by Conscience

Proverbs 20:17; Psalms 51:1-13.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M. Sept. 2. The voice in the heart. Rom. 2:12-16.
T. Sept. 3. The stings of conscience. Gen. 42:21-24.
W. Sept. 4. Conscience commends. Acts 24:10-16.
T. Sept. 5. The trainer of conscience. Heb. 4:12, 13.
F. Sept. 6. God's inner light. Prov. 20:27.
S. Sept. 7. The illuminating word. Tit. 3:1-8.

In the treatment of the topic before us we must be careful to get a clear conception of the meaning of the word "conscience." It may be defined as "the process of consciousness which surveys one's own past, present, or contemplated action, and judges that it comes up to or falls short of a moral standard," or it is "the power or faculty in man by which he distinguishes between right and wrong in conduct and character, and which imperatively commands and obligates him to do the right and to abstain from doing the wrong." More briefly, we may say it is man's moral nature, his moral faculty or his moral sense.

It is clear from these definitions that conscience in itself is not a sufficient moral guide. What is needed is a conscience illuminated by divine grace and irradiated with the divine wisdom. In other words, it is only as the Spirit of God controls and directs man's conscience that it becomes a safe and reliable guide.

How Conscience May Be Trained

The human conscience may be trained in a variety of ways. In the first place, the study of God's Word will be a most inestimable help in training our conscience to rightly perceive the moral issues of any question that arises in our lives. In our study of the Scriptures for this purpose let us make sure that we rightly discern the word of truth and that we do not draw wrong conclusions from a hasty or incomplete perusal of the Word of God. In the second place, we shall find that prayer is a most valuable aid in the training of conscience. It is by prayer that we are privileged to commune with God, and when we seek for light on the moral issues of life, we may rest assured that our prayer will not be unanswered. In the third place, human experience is often of great service to us in determining the moral quality of an action and thus training our conscience to a clear perception of what is right and wrong. In illustration of this last statement we may instance the matters of slavery and of dueling, which are now repellant to our conscience, but which required the illuminating experience of many centuries before they were seen to be morally wrong.

Obedying a Trained Conscience

Every Christian rests under the absolute obligation of obeying the dictates of his conscience when he has used every possible means of illuminating his moral judgment. To act in opposition to what conscience prescribes as the right course of action is to invite the divine condemnation. When David sinned, he acted in defiance of his own conscience, and that made his moral anguish the more poignant, as evidenced in the words of the Fifty-first Psalm.

"Conscience," some one has wisely said, "is like a compass. To be of any use, it must be kept in good repair. A false compass and a false conscience are worse than nothing."

SEPTEMBER 15.

The Saloon Power and How to Overthrow It

Habakkuk 2:1-17.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M. Sept. 9. Shun the evil. 1 Thess. 5:22.
T. Sept. 10. Resist the devil. Jas. 4:7-10.
W. Sept. 11. Bind the evil one. Rev. 20:1-3.
T. Sept. 12. Rescue the lost. Luke 7:36-50.
F. Sept. 13. Educate the people. Prov. 23:17-23.
S. Sept. 14. Warn the people. 1 Cor. 6:9, 10.

The passage from Habakkuk which has been chosen for our study is not primarily a dissertation on the evil of strong drink. Rather is it a strong protest against the cruelty and rapacity of the Chaldean conquerors of Israel. Yet the prophet gives clear intimations that strong drink was one of the potent causes of the moral degradation of the Chaldeans, and that it would also be one of the effective causes of their final overthrow.

A Timely Topic

Our own country, in common with some of our allies, stands face to face with the saloon power, and one of the most important questions of the day is how to overthrow this insidious evil, which has already impaired the efficiency of our nation, and which, if not overcome, might result in preventing our winning that final victory for which every patriotic soul is longing.

This is no time for temporizing with the saloon power, which has shown itself, in time of war as well as in time of peace as the most lawless and treacherous foe that we have within our borders.

The time has come when our country should take its stand boldly and unreservedly for the principles of total abstinence for the individual and complete prohibition for the nation.

In every State a drive should be made for prohibition, both by State enactment and by ratification of the Prohibition Amendment to the Federal Constitution. A goodly number of States have already adopted prohibition as a State policy and have ratified the amendment to the Federal Constitution. But in order to win the day for temperance a far more vigorous effort must be made in the States which have not as yet taken a definite stand in favor of this vital reform.

An Opportunity for Action

The fall elections are rapidly approaching, and during the month of September in many States the primary elections will be held to determine who shall be the candidates to be voted on in the November elections.

Here is an opportunity for action which should be seized by every friend of temperance. Let us see to it that the candidates who stand for prohibition are given a clear majority over those who either oppose or ignore this issue. Let us select as candidates men who are pledged to work for prohibition and who will demonstrate their patriotism by fighting to the death the saloon power which is the most dangerous foe with which our nation has to deal.

The saloon power is inextricably associated with the worst evils that curse humanity. To fight it effectively, we must abolish it, for it cannot be reformed.

SEPTEMBER 22.

Lessons from Bible Characters

Hebrews 11:32-40; 12:1, 2.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M. Sept. 16. Greatheart, Barnabas. Acts 9:26-29.
T. Sept. 17. Simon's ambition. Acts 8:5-12, 18-24.
W. Sept. 18. Joseph's magnanimity. Gen. 43:24-34.
T. Sept. 19. Moses' discouragement. Exod. 5:20-23.
F. Sept. 20. A child's faith. 2 Kings 5:1-10.
S. Sept. 21. Elisha's vision. 2 Kings 6:8-23.

This topic affords great scope for a most interesting meeting. The Bible is so full of characters from whose lives we may derive lessons of inspiration, emulation and warning, that it should be easy for every one to take part and to cite at least one character from whom a helpful lesson may be drawn.

The writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews has mentioned a long list of Bible characters from whom he draws the lesson of faith, and unquestionably the men and women that he names, despite various infirmities of mind and heart, all displayed to a marked degree the noble quality of faith, which is the foundation stone of a religious life.

It would be interesting to prepare other lists of Bible characters from whom we might draw lessons of forgiveness, heroism, love and other noble virtues. The Apostle Paul would doubtless head the list of Bible heroes, the Apostle John that of Bible characters of whom love was the most distinguished mark, Joseph would stand at the head of those who have shown the spirit of forgiveness, and so we might go on multiplying illustrations.

Lessons of Warning

The Bible is an absolutely truthful book, and so it tells of men's follies and frailties as well as their virtues, and depicts the lives of sinners as well as saints.

Many a needful lesson may be gained by considering the evil characters of the Bible, whose careers give us warning of the sins we should avoid. For example, the life of King Ahab warns us against the sin of covetousness. Samson warns us against yielding to the seductions of voluptuousness. Demas, who turned back from his Christian profession warns us against the folly of preferring the present delights of the world to the future joy of eternal life in Christ.

Pilate warns us against the misuse of a great opportunity. Had he been a righteous governor he would have freed Jesus from the false accusations made against Him, but he feared the people, and his name has come down to us in history as the type of a moral coward. Judas, the Apostle who is so often described as the one who betrayed the Master, gives us a most impressive warning against the sin of infidelity to Christ.

Incentives to Noble Living

The poet has said:

"Lives of great men all remind us
We may make our lives sublime."

So the study of the noble men and women of the Bible should serve as incentives to noble living. And while we think of the great characters of the Bible, let us not forget the noblest of them all—the Lord Jesus Christ, who has given us the most sublime lessons of truth, love and self-sacrifice that humanity has ever known.

SEPTEMBER 29.

Lessons from Favorite Hymns

Acts 16:22-25; 2 Chron. 5:11-14.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M. Sept. 23. Reverence in song. Ps. 33:1-12.
T. Sept. 24. Our faith in song. 1 Tim. 3:16.
W. Sept. 25. Comfort in song. Ps. 42:1-11.
T. Sept. 26. Memory stirred in song. Exod. 15:1-6.
F. Sept. 27. Worship in song. Ps. 100.
S. Sept. 28. Gratitude in song. Isa. 44:21-28.

Christianity is a singing religion. The Israelites of old sang their praises to God in inspired psalms of adoration, and the followers of Christ have ever found the use of psalms and hymns and spiritual songs a means of grace and edification.

Paul and Silas, in the Philippian jail, found joy and strength in praying and singing hymns unto God, and in all ages Christians have found comfort and inspiration in singing the songs of Zion.

Probably the most helpful book that can be found to aid us in the study of our topic is "The Story of the Hymns and Tunes," by Theron Brown and Hezekiah Butterworth, which is published by the American Tract Society, Park Avenue and 40th Street, New York. (Price, $1.50; by mail, $1.58).

This volume gives us the story of the origin and use of hundreds of the favorite hymns of Christendom, and in connection with the hymn is given the story of the tune to which it is usually sung.

Missionary hymns have ever been a power in the life of the Christian Church. The hymn, "Jesus Shall Reign Where'er the Sun," was written by Isaac Watts. This hymn, it is said, has been sung by the missionaries in every land, if not in every language. One of the native kings in the South Sea Islands, we are told, was converted through the ministry of English missionaries, and substituted a Christian for a pagan constitution in 1862. There were five thousand of his subjects gathered at the ceremonial, and they joined as with one voice in singing this splendid hymn.

In times like the present we must not overlook the value of patriotic hymns. During the Civil War the "Battle Hymn of the Republic," written by Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, and sung to the tune of "John Brown's Body," proved itself a power for good, and the same hymn is now proving an inspiration during the present world conflict. And this is only one of many hymns that might be mentioned from which we can learn lessons of devotion to our country and to the cause of liberty and humanity which it has espoused.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS

Away to Sleepy Land

BY LIZZIE DE ARMOND.

*Away, away to Sleepy Land,
Across the Slumber sea,
Come little comrades one and all,
Go sailing off with me.*

*The shining stars look kindly down,
They'll brighten up our way,
The boat is waiting now for us,
Step in, ere dawns the day.*

*Away, away to Sleepy Land,
Just close your tired eyes,
And listen while the night winds sing
Their soft, sweet lullabies.*

The Sunshine Class Party

BY ANNE PORTER JOHNSON.

"I'm sorry, Helen, but I feel as though I must go! I don't know how we would ever have pulled through when you had the fever last fall, if Aunt Lou hadn't helped us out. Now that she's down with the grippe, I can't feel right leaving her all by herself. It's too bad for you."

"Well, mother," replied Helen, "You'll have to go and see to Aunt Lou. That's sure! I'll never forget how her cool hand felt on my hot forehead. Don't worry. I'll get along all right. I'll finish the breakfast dishes, sweep the dining room and kitchen and do the upstairs work. Why, I'm big enough for that, mother! Then I'll eat a bite. You know Miss Bennett has invited our Sunshine Class to spend the afternoon at her house. I'm to stop for Marie. Miss Bennett wants every member of the class present, sure!"

"Oh, I had forgotten about the party!" said Mrs. Martin. "I'm afraid you—"

"Yes, I'll get along fine, mother. Don't worry a minute."

Mrs. Martin hurried off, and Helen started to work. It was a nice, bright day, and with so much to do on hand, Helen had no time to feel lonely. All the forenoon she sang merrily to the accompaniment of dishes, broom, duster, and pan. Everything went beautifully. A jolly tune helps a great deal. Dishes, brooms and dusters seem to enjoy a rollicking song—it puts them on their good behavior. Work, set to music, turns into play!

After an early dinner, she went upstairs to fix up for the party. Just as she was ready to start down, the door-bell rang.

"Oh dear! I do hope it's no one to stay long," she thought, as she went downstairs.

She opened the door, and a middle-aged woman stood smiling at her. "Ah, I know you!" said the woman. "You have the Martin eyes and hair. Besides, I have your picture, but I guess you've grown a good deal since it was taken. You're Helen, I'm sure! You don't know me—I can see that. Well, I'm your father's Aunt Mary—your great-aunt, dear."

"Oh!" gasped Helen, taking her hand. "You're Aunt Mary! I've often heard father and mother talk of you. Come in. I'm sorry, but father and mother are both away to-day."

"You and I will get along all right," replied Aunt Mary, as Helen took her hat and gloves. "You see I took a sudden notion to surprise your father—we haven't visited together since you were a baby. My, my, what a big girl you've grown to be! It's hard to believe."

Aunt Mary chattered on, but Helen heard only a word now and then. She was trying to decide what to do. Aunt Mary, according to her father and mother, was a wonderful woman. She had been abroad twice. Over and above this distinction, she was the favorite aunt of her father, so that nothing was too good for her.

"It wouldn't be sensible to ask anyone who had been abroad twice to spend the afternoon listening to the chatter of the Sunshine Class party of twelve-year-olds," Helen argued to herself, while she tried to keep the drift of Aunt Mary's talk. "It would not do," she went on to herself, "to go off and leave her alone—father's favorite aunt."

Well, what should she do? Marie would be waiting—she must let her know, some way. "There is no way but to telephone, and Aunt Mary will hear every word. How will I manage to get her out of hearing while I explain things to Marie?"

Aunt Mary broke into her thoughts. "Helen, I'd like to brush up a little. My dress is so dusty."

Helen took her upstairs to the spare room, and then ran down again. The telephone was in the sitting room, and if she talked real low, maybe Aunt Mary would not hear. She took down the receiver quickly, and was soon explaining to Marie all about Aunt Mary's sudden coming. "So I can't come to the Sun-

What Laddie Shared

BY KATHLEEN HAY.

LADDIE had been quite sick with fever, but he was convalescent now, and sat up among the pillows of the lounge. The windows were all open and the sweet afternoon air stole softly in through the white curtains.

Laddie's mother had let a small boy into the sitting room for a little visit. He often came on errands from "The Orphans' Home" that was on the block below them. Laddie and himself were busily engaged in an animated conversation as she came into the room a few minutes later with something in her hand.

"O, mother, must I keep on taking that same tea, now that the fever has all gone?" Laddie gave the cup that had been placed on the table nearby an impatient little push. There was a sudden crash as it tipped over and fell to the floor.

"O, I'm so sorry, mother—I didn't mean to push it so hard, and now it's all spilled after you've made yourself tired making it."

A LITTLE MOTHER AND HER FAMILY

shine Class party this afternoon. You needn't wait. Yes, I'm disappointed, but I want to be polite to Aunt Mary, and I can't leave her alone." This last was spoken in a half whisper.

When Aunt Mary came downstairs she said, "Helen, do you know a lady over in town by the name of Bennett—Miss Margaret Bennett?"

"Why, yes!" gasped Helen. "She's our Sunshine Class teacher."

"Oh!" exclaimed Aunt Mary. "Well, a friend of hers lives in Brookville, next door to me. She made me promise to look her up while I was here. Your folks won't be back until night, and so if you'll go with me, I'll make that visit this afternoon."

"Why, Aunt Mary, how funny it is! Our Sunshine Class has a party there at two o'clock. I thought I couldn't go—why, it's all turning out just fine!"

On the way Helen couldn't resist the temptation to tell Aunt Mary the whole story.

"Well, that's quite interesting!" laughed Aunt Mary. "Why, I wouldn't have kept you from the party for a farm. But I shall never forget how you were willing to stay home to entertain some one you had never seen before. You have the right spirit, Helen, and I'm sure you'll make friends wherever you go."

"Never mind, Laddie," she answered, smiling down upon him, "It isn't much trouble to make again, and so you need not worry about it at all."

She passed out of the room, the fragments of the broken cup in her hand. The small boy from "The Home" looked on wonderingly.

"Is she like that always?" he asked presently.

Laddie's answering smile was radiant. "Sure—my mother's—great."

"W-h-e-w—" The other gave a low whistle of astonishment.

"Down there," he nodded his head toward the street below—"down there if we had done that, we'd be punished in a hurry—'course though—we're lots there, and it's harder, I guess—and it ain't like you really belonged. Say," he continued, drawing a trifle nearer, "don't you obey your mother?"

"Of course," answered Laddie, "I always try to."

"Are you scared when you don't?" "Scared?" Laddie's eyes had grown larger and it was his time to look wonderingly at the small visitor.

"She's not that kind—I obey because I love my mother—because I hate to make her sorry when she trusts me—that's the worst thing I've ever struck, making her sorry."

The other little boy was looking out of the window thoughtfully.

"It's different with me—I—I—have to do things—" he paused, as if hunting for expressive words to finish his sentence. "Well, because they've got to be done—but there's no caring at the end about making any one glad or sorry either."

"Well, I wish you had a mother like mine!"

Laddie's small visitor leaned over, an inspiration suddenly illumining his face.

"Do you reckon," he began in an awe-struck tone, "that you might give me a little share in her?—if—if—she's willing? Then I could belong a little bit, too."

He paused abruptly as Laddie suddenly drew away from him, a dull crimson overspreading his face. The room was very silent, until at last he straightened up, and began to speak.

"If—She—says so, I'll be willing to share her with you—only—only—you are not to make her sorry—ever—if you do, you can't stay, and when I grow up I'll do most of the work for her."

He was swallowing hard between the words, and his mother's eyes were wet with shining tears, as she turned away from the door where she had stood unobserved.

"I'll let him belong, too," she whispered—"The poor little chap with his hungry heart."

A few minutes later Laddie drank his nourishment slowly, and Laddie's mother, with her arms around their small visitor, stood in the doorway seeing him off.

"I'll try to make it all right, little boy, for you to share our home," she said gently, looking down into his radiant face.

"Won't it be great—belonging to you," he cried, "and doing things to make you glad. Laddie says if I make you sorry ever, I can't stay—you'll teach me how to never make you sorry, won't you?"

Her arms tightened suddenly around him.

"I'll teach you," she replied very softly, "as I have taught my own Laddie."

Japanese Use Knots for Buttons

The Japanese have no use for buttons, buckles or hooks and eyes. Cord serves every purpose of fastening, and furnishes artistic possibilities seemingly without end.

The Japanese have hundreds of knots, made necessary by the ornamental use of cord. Some are as old as the time when history was recorded by a series of knots, just as it was in China and Peru before writing was invented. There are dozens of knots in common and ceremonial usage, and these every child can tie.

In one educational museum of Japan is a great frame of the most beautiful knots, tied in silken and golden thread. This had formed a part of Japan's exhibit at a certain world's fair. For six months this wonderful collection had hung upon the wall, and only two visitors had noticed and inquired about it. Even these thought the knots must be industrial samples intended for dress trimmings. No one offered to buy the unique exhibit, no museum begged for it, and the wonderful knots were taken home again.

There is an appeal to the imagination even in the knots intended for common use. There are plum blossom, cherry blossom, iris, chrysanthemum, and pine-tree knots. There are fujiyama knots, turtle and stork knots, and the "old man's," which is easy to tie, and the "old woman's," also.

There is one way of knotting a cord when sending a New Year's or birthday gift, and another for doing up a funeral offering. There is one way to tie the brocade bag of the tea-jar when it is full, and another when it is empty. A sword-bag, a flag or spear bag, a dispatch-bag, or the box containing some precious piece of porcelain or lacquer, must each be tied in a certain way.

Our Fireside

The Purse-Bearer

By the Author of "Preston Papers"

YOU will need to have lots of patience, and some 'gumption' in money matters, especially in these war times," said Mrs. Price, almost wistfully, looking over her glasses at the newest member of the "Home Interests Club" of the very prosperous village of Derby.

The club had been organized as a "village betterment" society, with home interests as the pivot on which all meetings would turn and around which all discussions would revolve.

Mrs. Herbert was but a recent comer to Derby, with her husband, and a bride of but a few months. This was her first meeting with the club since election as a member; and the discussion today, as shown by the white-and-gold-covered Year Book, was to be about "Money—The Family Purse—Who Shall Be the Bearer?"

Already the one "paper" which each meeting called for, and which was arbitrarily limited to five minutes, had been given, and the meeting was now open for the free discussion of any point on this most interesting topic.

The paper, prepared and read by Mrs. Samuel Johnson Richards—who always signed her name in full, and with seeming pride—had brought home the following truths to the interested listeners:

"The Family Purse furnishes many a serious problem to the inexperienced. In some families it proves a bone of contention more troublesome to dispose of than any political question, any religious controversy, or the traditional difficulty of neighborhood chickens.

"Some men are far sighted enough to see that if a woman is capable of managing a home, she must be capable of administering its financial affairs—even if this is not always true—and they turn over their entire incomes to their wives, reserving not even their own daily expenses from the general fund; thus, often, leaving themselves in the same pitiable condition of the woman of the last century—who, too often, had to almost beg for money needed for the children or household purposes.

"At the other extreme is the man who knows that his wife is 'long' on expenditures, and 'short' on planning and accounts, and who, therefore, relegates her to the financial background and never even consults her as to what is needed nor what is best.

"Between these two extremes lies the path of safety which each wife and mother should seek for herself and her home. How to find it is a personal problem—as conditions vary. So do men and women, and each case becomes a law unto itself."

"But why?" demanded Mrs. Herbert. "Henry and I had a long talk, early in our engagement, on just this question; and we decided, then and there, that, even with but one actual wage-earner, both would be equally interested in making the best possible use of what is earned. So we planned a division of money, for each pay-day, with a division of financial responsibility—which does not mean a division of interests, by any means, but a saving of effort for each."

"You are young yet, my dear; and you will find that men love power almost more than they love beauty; and most family men find their power lessening, receding, when their wives become economically independent," and Mrs. Price sighed audibly as she gave vent to her rather pessimistic opinions.

"I'm sure there's little need of anyone making that discovery, unless she happens to have married that sort of a man," said Mrs. Hubbard, the village dressmaker, cheerily. "I have been financially independent ever since my invention of the Mother Hubbard wrapper; yet my husband and I have no financial fracas. We each earn, as we can, and spend carefully, save regularly, and deposit in a savings bank, to a joint account, from which either may draw at any time. When we get ready to invest any surplus, we talk it over, and buy together. My husband is neither a tyrant in money matters, nor a boor in his home," and she smiled hopefully at Mrs. Herbert.

"You are better off than some of us, then," said Mrs. Jenkins sadly. "My husband doesn't even give me an allowance for household needs, because he believes in paying everything by check; so I never have money, although I have unlimited credit, for Mr. Jenkins is not only good pay, but he is, also, prompt pay—and I have authority to open as many 'charge' accounts as I please, as long as I tell him what and where they are, that he may be prepared to meet them."

"It must be hard never to have any ready money for any purpose," said Mrs. Hubbard; "and it is a great temptation to a woman to do wrong, as I happen to know through one of my customers, who is married to a man of that sort. She asked me to advance $25.00 to her, and then add it to my next bill. 'He will pay it,' she urged; 'and you can put part of it against material, part to findings, and the rest against work.' I didn't feel that I ought to do it; but she's one of my best customers, and I didn't want to lose her; so I compromised by loaning ten dollars and charging it as a separate item."

"Did he pay?" asked Mrs. Herbert, with interest.

"Yes; but she told me that there was a dreadful scene, and that he forbade her ever to do it again."

"I know a man," said the President, "who says that no woman ought ever to have to ask for money. His salary is small; but he divides it in halves on pay day, giving one to his wife, with which she pays for service in the house, food, and clothing for herself and the children. He pays the interest on their mortgage, from his half, whatever he can on the principal, and for fuel and light. Each agrees to put by ten per cent. from each sum for an emergency fund from which either may draw in case of need. Benevolences, church work, reading, travel, and amusements, are provided for by each, after all this is proportioned—or they do without; yet they are considered liberal givers to public purposes."

"That shows just how much can be accomplished by careful management," said Mrs. Herrick; "and I think it's every wife's duty to manage economically just as it is her husband's duty to provide liberally, within his means. I don't believe that that woman throws out moldy bread nor burnt or sour vegetables."

"Well, she doesn't," admitted the President; "but, on the other hand, some women waste time, nervous energy, or strength, who would cry out against material waste as extravagant, forgetful that sickness—with all that it means—may be the greatest sort of extravagance, entailing enforced idleness, extra help, doctor's bills, and medicine, to say nothing of discomfort and wasted strength, all of which is often preventable."

"I'm sure of that," said Mrs. Merriam, a wee woman with a large family. "I used to suffer from the most dreadful headaches, that lasted three or four days at a time, finally sending me to the doctor for a remedy, then to bed for a rest. The doctor only charged a dollar; the medicine half of that; and I had to have a woman come to help me out, at a dollar a day, for a day or two more; so that each time the expense actually incurred was not less than two or three dollars, often being more. Rest being essential to the cure, I decided that it could be more economically used as a preventive; so, when I find the old-time headache threatening, I simply go to bed, in a cool, quiet, dark room, for two hours—regardless of what I have on hand as duty, my first duty being to keep up to grade physically. I have been putting aside, as a special fund at four per cent. interest, all that I have saved in this way for three years—now nearly $90.00—and shall let my husband invest it for both in something that will be an incentive to the family."

"Didn't I tell you that you'd need to use some 'gumption' in money matters?" asked Mrs. Price, of Mrs. Herbert. "Now here's health sprung as a definite asset. If one woman saves by keeping well, why shouldn't the professional invalid pay her share of the money lost to her family through a protracted sickness that might have been prevented?"

"In China that theory in another form is quite prevalent," said Mrs. Harmon, the minister's wife. "There the doctors are paid by the year to keep their patients in good health; and as the cost of sickness reduces their pay, they are watchful of cause and effect."

"So far as mere money is concerned, I think that the ordinary man means to be absolutely just; but no one except the house-manager knows how much real money it takes to pay for the little things—brooms, brushes, lamp chimneys, kitchen towels, fixtures and equipment of all sorts; so I am not surprised if the man who gives to his wife irregularly is surprised at the frequency of her demands. I was a teacher, before I married, boarding with a friend whose husband refused to let me pay for my board until I planned to go elsewhere. Then he said: 'All right. Give it to Helen for pin money.' 'Pin money!' she exclaimed. 'I could never use five dollars a week for pin money.' Frank smiled, for he knew—better than Helen—how short a time five dollars would last, even for 'pin money' a liberal spender with rather luxurious tastes. And even a careful housewife is sometimes careless in the small expenses, who is careful in the main."

"That is true," said Mrs. Stewart, the druggist's wife; "and how I know is because I'm guilty. I have saved pennies and wasted dollars. But I'm reforming," and she smiled cheerfully.

"I take it as the sense of the meeting," said Miss Powers, the Secretary, "that it requires energy and ability to earn money; wisdom and discretion to spend it; care and self-denial to save it; and that each in the family has his own special duties to the family treasury, no matter who does the earning," and she looked about for corroboration before completing her minutes of the meeting, as she wanted to keep her minute-book clear of erasures and of interlineations, so far as these were preventable.

"If there are no objections, you may so record it," said the President, Mrs. Scott; "and I would like to add one or two further thoughts: All money, all ability, all power of happiness, is from God. Owing to Him for all these gifts, we might well devote at least one-tenth of our income, be it small or great, to His service, in the promotion of His work, among His children. Let us sing the Doxology, after which a motion to adjourn will be in order."

As they stood and sang "Praise God," each, whether professing Christian or not—for this club was not organized within the membership of any one of the several churches of Derby, drawing from each, some members having no connection with any of the denominations represented, as yet—each, singing the old familiar words and tune, felt that her home had gained something of inspiration, something practical for its future conduct, from the suggestions offered and the experiences recited.

True Wisdom

"Wisdomen lay up knowledge," and if we would acquire true Wisdom, we must cultivate the acquaintance of Him, whom to know aright is eternal life.

Will Prayer Stop Bullets?

This was the question sneeringly asked a British officer of a fellow soldier in a railway compartment as he overheard his companion in saying good-by to his friends ask them to pray for him.

It receives a pointed answer in the following double deliverance of one who knew how to pray at the battle's front. It is printed by Pastor Findley of Glasgow in his monthly Church "Evangel," as he received it directly from one of the boys on the field of battle. He wrote: "One man who was down at the time you were with us (a Canadian farmer before the war), and who received a great blessing then, was telling me some wonderful stories of God's working and answers to prayers. I cannot do better than pass one or two on to you and the praying friends. He and a number of others were clearing out wells; one of them over 160 feet deep was suspected of being poisonous, and the officers decided that one of the men should go down by rope and investigate. W— was chosen. He got down safely, did what was required, then knelt down and had a few moments' prayer. While kneeling God told him to ask for another rope to be lowered. He did so, and was scoffed and jeered at by officer and men alike. However, he quietly told them that God had told him not to attempt the ascent on the rope he descended on, and would not come up until they grudgingly sent down another. A few yards from the top the first rope snapped, and if he had not had the other to cling to he would have fallen and been killed. This made a great impression, and afterwards when they were sent out on special duty the other men always asked to be allowed to go with him. This happened so often that the officer who had jeered was interested, and asked W— if he really believed that God had nothing else to do than listen to him. The day following this conversation two parties had to go out on a very dangerous piece of work. They were told it meant death to some, if not all. W— and his company got together and before starting he asked them to bow in prayer. Every man did so, and he commended his men to God. The other company went out laughing and swearing. The work was done, and the men in charge had to report to the officer. Nearly all the men in the first company were killed. When W— reported 'all safe,' the officer would not believe it at first. Some time after he came to W— and another Christian corporal and asked them if they would come to his dug-out and pray for him and with him. On entering they found other officers there, but before them all they knelt, and the major gave his allegiance to God and accepted Jesus Christ as his Saviour (he is Major C— from Bristol). Thank God for a fearless testimony, and thank God for your message in our hut on 'Putting on the whole armor of God.' It not only helped me, but made others fearless in witnessing for Christ. Shortly after this incident he and others were having a meeting when a captain came along who had been a backslider; he joined them, and before the meeting ended had returned to the Lord."

DON'T decide on the new hymn-book for your Church or Sunday School until you have seen

HALLOWED HYMNS NEW AND OLD

Edited by IRA ALLAN SANKEY

Son of the famous Singing-Evangelist Ira D. Sankey

OVER 650,000

COPIES ALREADY SOLD

Responsive Scripture Readings

No Trashy Words No Jingly Music

Price $25.00 per 100 not prepaid

85 cents per copy by mail

Examine a copy and prove its value in your work. (Returnable if desired.)

The Biglow & Main Co., New York Chicago

This FREE Shoe Book
is crowded with photographs and descriptions of K-Z WEAR Shoes for Men, Women and Children. K-Z WEAR Shoes are sent post-paid, guaranteed to combine comfort, style and quality, to fit perfectly or money back. Amazingly low prices. Send for copy to-day.
THE FN SIMON SHOE CO. 1585 BROADWAY BROOKLYN, N.Y.

Something Gone

BY E. L. VINCENT.

A young man dropped the keen-edged tool with which he was working. It struck on a piece of iron and when he came to pick it up a great nick had been made in the edge.

He took it to an expert and he ground and ground until the broken place was all gone and the edge was good again.

But something was gone out of the beautiful tool. It was shorter than before. It seemed as if the temper of the steel was not quite as good as it used to be. It no longer endured work upon hard wood as it had in the past. It was indeed changed; changed and not for the better.

What was it the friend you loved said when he kept out of the bundle of bank bills he deposited in the bank a few notes? Ah, you remember the words well! They stung you to the heart when he spoke them!

"I need a little money this morning. I will put this money back before night. It is only borrowing it. I am sure the house would not object if they knew how much this means to me."

You plead with your friend not to do it. You try to show him that it is the first step on the downward path, but he does not heed. He withholds the few bills and goes on with the rest to the bank.

And he does pay back the so-called loan. He makes the amount good before the evening shadows fall. And yet—

There was the flaw in his character! The subsequent act did not, it could not make the fault good. Something was gone from the beautiful blade! The temper of the soul had been lowered. It would be easier next time to do the wrong thing!

Look out for the first nick in the steel! Watch out against the first tendency to depart from the straight road of right! You may get back where you started, but it will be through tears and loss. Something will surely have gone out of your heart that will keep you from ever being the man you might have been.

How shall this be done? There is just one way—no other is known under heaven among men. In the hour of your sore trial stop and think, "I am not alone. Right here by my side is my Friend, my Helper. He knows all about it. If I give myself wholly into his keeping he will not let me suffer for lack of any good thing. He would not do the unmanly, wicked thing of which I have been thinking. Neither will I. For I am his and he knows it."

Saved from the fall! No break in the blade of character! All is well! You have strengthened your soul for all the rest of life's sharp contest!—KIND WORDS.

Historic Lessons in Food Conservation

The Hotel Monthly recently carried the following:

"Four thousand years ago Food Commissioner Joseph, in the land of Egypt, commandeered one-fifth of the wheat crop of Egypt each year for seven years and stored it in the cities nearest the wheat fields. His drastic action at that time saved the world from starvation.

"Two thousand five hundred years ago Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon, instructed that certain men whom he wished to have attached to his court be fed on king's food and wine to give them a well-nourished look. One of these men, named Daniel, persuaded his caterer that himself and friends could be better nourished on pulse and water, and requested that he make a test covering a sufficient length of time; the others to be fed on king's food and wine. The test showed that those who lived on pulse (lentils) and water were better nourished than those fed on king's food (luxuries) and wine.

"Two thousand years ago Bible history records the miracle of feeding five thousand with a few barley loaves and fishes. The people were commanded to sit in rows of 50 to the row, and the servers passed before each and gave to everyone his portion, so that all were served. It was an instance where a little food went a long way, and the fragments that remained were gathered up so that no food was wasted."

Toughened in Life's Storm

Some one tells of a noted violin maker who always went into the forests himself and chose his violin woods from the north side of the tree. Is not this a precious suggestion to those living in the north rooms of the school of experience, working out the problems of faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness and charity?

Therefore, be of good cheer, beloved! The work of the world is being done by those toughened in the storms of life. God knows where his choice bits of timber grow.—RECORD OF CHRISTIAN WORK.

College Men in the White House

Of the twenty-seven Presidents of the United States it is said that all but eight of them were college men—a fact that greatly emphasizes the value of the collegiate training. It is further stated that sixteen of the nineteen college men who have occupied the White House were trained in Christian Colleges—a fact which speaks volumes for the colleges which have wrought under the religious impulse.

Across the Lighted Sea

We sailed away in the twilight
From the crowds on the sloping sand,
And the darker shades of the gloaming
Crept upward toward the land;
And many a dear companion
Waved us a gay farewell,
Though the rhythmic boom of the waters
Sounded a solemn knell.

We looked at the brooding darkness
Over the hills which crept;
And the sighing winds of the evening,
And the voices of those who wept,
Threw magical spells around us,
But One was calling away,
And the beckoning hand above us
We dare not to disobey.

So we sailed with Him o'er the waters,
Half dreading the deepening night;
But lo! as the hours moved onward,
The sea was a path of light;
And the ship rolled over the billows,
And the winds were cool and strong,
Till our hearts were filled with laughter
And our lips were filled with song.

Oh, what of the fading faces
And the joys we have left behind?
We have not had time for sorrow,
The Master has been so kind.
Hands clasping our own in silence,
Eyes looking across the sea,
Are telling of dreamed-of gladness
In the land where we soon shall be.

Dense and deep is the darkness
Hanging about the shore
From which we are swiftly sailing,
So we look back never more.
But forward our eyes are peering,
And as later grows the night,
The sea is becoming quiet,
And broader our path of light.

Oh, sweet is the waters' music
As they join in the praiseful psalm,
Our hearts that were filled with longing,
With the comfort of love grow calm;
And we say, if the night be glorious,
What will the morning be?
For we're sailing away to heaven,
Over the lighted sea.

—MARIANNE FARNINGHAM.

Paul's Campaigns

By David James Burrell, D.D.

In this book, reader, you journey with Paul. Wherever he goes, whether to Cyprus or to Rome, you feel yourself near him, listening, hearing his fiery, impassioned, fearless exhorting. When you read the gripping description of what Paul saw at Athens, it will be brought home to you that here indeed is a study of Paul's wanderings which really appreciates the motives and difficulties of that courageous fighter for Christianity. The four journeys are woven into a narrative of such interest that it affords an unusual means of studying Paul's journeys by land and sea. Four charts, one for each journey. The book measures 5x7 1/4, 110 pages, and is well bound in cloth. Price, 75c net.

This book is fresh from the press, just being published for the first time. The maps are so clear, so extremely plain, that you will never again have difficulty in remembering just how Paul journeyed. If you would obtain a copy of the first edition, sign the coupon below and mail it to-day if possible.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY,
Park Avenue and 40th Street,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Sirs:
Enclosed please find 75c, for which mail me one copy of "PAUL'S CAMPAIGNS," by David James Burrell, D.D.

Name

Street

Town

State

CRYSTAL WATER SET

With Your Own Initial in

GENUINE STERLING SILVER

Every woman of good taste will appreciate this beautiful Crystal Water Set with decorations and her own initial in sterling silver everlastingly burned into the glass itself. If there is anything a woman likes it is distinctiveness in her dining room appointments. Here is a handsome water set which she will always use and which will be prominently displayed, between meals, on sideboard or china closet

Substantial
Artistic
Fire Polished

An Unusual
BARGAIN OFFER

Distinctiveness
Elegance
Individuality

Take Advantage of it TODAY

Ornamental - Substantial - Useful

The Pride & Joy of the Housewife

This water set, composed of six tumblers and pitcher, will delight the heart of every housewife. The pitcher is substantially made in a pleasing design, with firm, strong base. The tumblers are of dainty, extra thin blown glass. Each piece is edged in pure sterling silver, with wreath and initial of the owner. The tumblers are half pint capacity—the pitcher holds three pints. This is the set for everyday use and for special occasions. It will give the user everlasting satisfaction and pleasure.

In these times of high prices it is exceedingly fortunate that we are able to offer this handsome and distinctive Crystal Water Set on terms within easy reach of every household. The family initial in silver is permanently burned into each piece, giving the set that individuality which is the pride of every woman with good taste. The set is as beautiful and pleasing as much of the costly imported glassware.

SPECIAL OFFER TO OUR READERS

We will give this splendid CRYSTAL WATER SET free and postpaid for only 10 yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at 50 cents each, or we will give the set with a year's subscription to the AMERICAN MESSENGER for only $3.25. These offers are for subscriptions in the United States only.

The Initial you desire on the set, please write clearly

AMERICAN MESSENGER

PARK AVE. AND 40th ST.

NEW YORK CITY

THE TREASURY

SPECIAL NOTICE

OWING to occasional losses of letters, containing money, we would request friends and donors of the American Tract Society to remit by check or Post Office Money Order, which latter can always be duplicated in case of loss.

Receipts of the American Tract Society During July, 1918

Total Donations (including $864.92 for Special Objects), $4,664.09.

ALABAMA, $10.
Mrs. Pratt, $10.

ARKANSAS, $0.75.
Mrs. Thomason, $0.75.

CALIFORNIA, $19.
Mr. Drake, $2; Mrs. Merritt, for Patriot Library, $15; Rev. Mr. Vandewater, $2.

COLORADO, $5.
Mr. Parker, $5.

CONNECTICUT, $23.02.
Litchfield, Church Collection, $11.02; Mrs. Griswold, $5; "A Friend," $5; Miss Smith, for S. T. bk., $2.

DELAWARE, $6.
Miss Janvier, $3; Mrs. Warren, $3.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, $9.30.
Washington, Church Offering, $6.80; Mr. Rothermel, $2.50.

ILLINOIS, $177.81.

The following is to constitute Rev. Mr. Theilken a Life Director: Mr. Raden, $2; Mr. Meyer, Jr., $5; Mr. Genannt, $2; Mr. Van Raden, $2; Mr. Meyer, Jr., $1; Mr. Thompson, $1; Mr. Buntjer, $1; Mrs. Ludewig, $2; Mr. Ludewig, $1; Mr. Krumm, $1; Mr. Krumm, $1; Mr. Wubben, $5; Miss Wubben, $1; Miss Meier, $1; Mr. Bokker, $5; Mr. Wubben, $5; Mr. Wubben, $5; Mr. Wubben, $5; Mr. Daniels, $1; Mr. Buss, $2; Mrs. Reimtsma, $2; Mrs. Veen, $5; Mrs. Reimtsma, $2; Mr. Arjes, $1; Mr. Frey, $1; Mr. Kuppen, $2; Mr. Reinders, $1; Mr. Heeren, $2; Mr. Renning, $1; Mr. Arjes, $1; Mr. Ludewig, $3; Mr. De Wall, $1; Mr. Frey, $5; Mr. De Wall, $1; Mr. De Wall, $2; Mr. Elders, $1.50; Mr. Van Raden, $2; Miss Van Raden, $1; Mr. Arjes, $1; Mr. Drake, $1.50; Mr. Snap, $1; Mr. Maas, $1; Mr. Elasser, $1.50; Mr. Folkerts, $1; Mr. Arjes, $2; Mr. Arjes, $1; Miss Kaney, $1; Mrs. Thompson, $2; Mr. Frey, $3; Mr. Drake, $2; Mr. Folkerts, $1. Total, $102.50.

The following is to constitute Rev. Mr. Swalve a Life Member: Elizabeth, Church Collection, $26; Mr. Dittmar, $1; Mr. Dittmar, $1; Mr. Schap, Jr., $1; Mr. Schap, Sr., $1; Rev. Mr. Swalve, $1; Mrs. Stadel, $1; Mr. Strauss, $1; Mr. Polchapp, $1; Miss Boettner, $5; Mr. Boettner, $1; Mr. Boettner, $1; Mr. Althlisch, $2; Mr. Bricker, $1; Mr. Boettner, $1; Mrs. Schrunck, $0.50. Total, $45.50.

Mr. Springer, $1; Mrs. Clark, $5; Eureka, Church Collection, $3c; Mr. Jacobs, $9.65; Mr. Bahr, $1; Elizabeth, Church Offering, $2.08; Hanover, Church Collection, $2; Adeline, Church Offering, $8.55.

INDIANA, $5.
Elkhart, Church Collection, $5.

IOWA, $192.04.
Mr. Rix, $1; Mrs. Christie, $3; Mr. Kemper, $100; Mr. Gundrum, $10; Waukon, Church Collection, $67.39; Mr. Foster, $10; Mrs. Bauman, $5c.

KANSAS, $3.50.
Miss Marter, $2.50; Miss Blackford, $1.

KENTUCKY, $2.
The Misses Shaw, for Patriot Library, $2.

LOUISIANA, $5.
Mr. Tiebout, $5.

MAINE, $5.
Miss Southworth, $5.

MASSACHUSETTS, $464.45.
Springfield, Church Offering, $5; Miss Hooker, $25; Mrs. Keyes, 70c; "Ungeannt," $5; Estate of Amasa Holmes, $7.25; Miss Brittain, to constitute herself a Life Member, $30; Mr. White, for Tract Work, $5; Miss Bessey, $1; Mrs. Fuller, for Patriot Library, $50; Miss Clapp, $2; Mr. Jones, for Patriot Library, $30; Mrs. Torrey, for Patriot Library for Soldiers, $115; Mr. Bruckmann, $5; Mr. Brooks, $30; Mr. Fuller, for Camp Devens, $3; Wellesley Hills, Church Collection, for Camp Devens, $5; Miss Howard, for Patriot Library for Soldiers, $30; Mr. Parkard, $4.50; Mr. Wales, $10; "A Friend," $1; Mr. Riley, for 3,755 Soldiers' Text Books for Inf. Regiment, $100.

MICHIGAN, $2.
Mr. Rowland, $2.

MINNESOTA, $10.
General McReeve, $10.

MISSISSIPPI, $1.
Mr. Bradford, $1.

MISSOURI, $112.37.
Mrs. Velter, Sr., $3; Mr. Peters, $100; St. Louis, Church Offering, $3.25; Webster Groves, Church Offering, $2; Parkville, Church Offering, $4.12.

MONTANA, $1.
Mr. Miles, $1.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, $63.
Mr. Wetherbee, to constitute himself a Life Member, $30; Mrs. Downes, for Patriot Library, $3; Miss Kaufmann, $30.

NEW JERSEY, $2,615.77.
Mrs. Geyer, $5; Miss Clark, $5; Miss Pudney, $1; Mrs. Peters, $5; Mrs. Voorhees, $2,528.41; Mrs. Clark, $2.10; Mr. Richie, $3; Bloomfield, Church Collection, $6; Miss Sutphen, 26c; Miss Carson, $2; Mr. Coursen, $10; Mr. Brahm, $1; Mr. Voorhees, $1; Mr. Teadocraft, $2; Mr. Harris, $2; Mrs. Ballentine, $25; Miss Butler, $1; Miss Brewster, $5; New Brunswick, Church Offering, $10; Miss Soper, $1.

NEW YORK, $372.64.
Dr. Dodge, $50; Mrs. Dwight, $10. The following three contributions for "Daily Readings for Soldiers and Sailors": Mrs. Kennedy, $50; Mrs. Schaffler, $25; Dr. Schaffler, $25; Miss Belloni, $1; Mr. Auchincloss, $10; Mr. Small, $1; "A Sister in Christ," $5; Mr. Aikman, $10; Mrs. Nowack, 65c; Mr. Havemeyer, $25; Mr. Van Brunt, $10; Elmira, Church Collection, $15; Mr. McClair, $5; Mr. Smith, $1; Mrs. Sonkey, $1; Mrs. Yeisley, $5; Mr. and Mrs. Ham, $10; Mr. Howes & Son, $2; Mrs. Goldsmith, $5; Miss Lockwood, $10; Mr. Wegner, $3; Brooklyn, Church Offering, $31.50; Miss Hitchcock, $2; Lyons Falls, Church Collection, $2.40; Mrs. Backus, $1; Mr. Wright, $2; the Misses Curtiss, $3; Warwick, Church Offering, $27.94; Mrs. Strong, for Colportage Work, $2; Mr. Brown, $5; Mr. Bosworth, $5; Mrs. Whittemore, $10; Miss Bookstaver, $1.15.

OHIO, $8.29.
Liverpool, Church Collection, 15c; Youngstown, Church Offering, $2.34; Mr. Freitchen, 30c; Norwood, Church Collection, $5.50.

OKLAHOMA, 65c.
Mr. Schmidt, 65c.

OREGON, $12.35.
Mr. and Mrs. Schlaefle, $2; "Two Friends," 35c; Miss Prescott, $10.

PENNSYLVANIA, $381.05.
Mr. Bare, $15; Mr. Rau, $10; Mr. Bougher, $5; Mr. Kirby, $25; Mr. Wilson, $5; Mrs. Shoy, $5; Mr. Kenzie, $5; Steelton, Church Offering, $3; Mr. Garman, $2; Shippensburg, Church Collection, $3; Mr. Huston, $100; Mr. Peorsall, $5; Mr. and Mrs. Walp, $1; Mr. Brown, $2; Miss Dosch, $1.50; Easton, Church Offering, $5; Mr. Spencer, $5; Mr. Kreitler, $10; Franklin, Church Collection, $15; Coraopolis, Church Offering, $6.39; Sunday School Collection, 83c; Mr. Wright, $5; York, Church Offering, $12; Miss Lewis, $5; State College, Church Collection, $7; Dr. Leaman, $10; Wilkingsburg, Church Collection, $32.68; Miss Vail, $5; Mrs. Huber, $5; Mr. Wagenseller, $5; Mr. Aumont, $5; Mrs. Duncan, $10; Mr. Hoover, $2; Mrs. Wilharm, $1.65; the Misses Lueders, $5; Mrs. Allison, $10; Rev. Mr. Gutbuh, to constitute himself a Life Member, $30; Mr. Minner, $1.

RHODE ISLAND, $35.
Mr. Vaughn, for Army Work, $10; Miss Hazard, $25.

SOUTH DAKOTA, $1.
Marion, Church Offering, $1.

TEXAS, $55.10.
Mr. Powell, $5; Mr. Bering, $50; Mr. Sorensen & Son, 10c.

VERMONT, $2.
Mr. Barnes, $2.

VIRGINIA, $23.
Mr. Simmons, $5; Mr. Morton, $10; Mr. Travers, $5; Mrs. Gregory, $3.

WISCONSIN, $30.
Estate of Elizabeth Hoffman, $30.

FOREIGN, $10.
Canada, Miss Mackleen, $10.

LEGACIES, $1,925.97.
Washington, D. C., Estate of Mary I. Banks, on account, $50; Philadelphia, Pa., Estate of Robt J. Wright, $875.97; Newton, Mass., Estate of Samuel M. Jackson, on account, $1,000.

INCOME FROM TRUST FUNDS, $538.07.
Income for Missionary Work, $494.40.
Income for Annuitants, $43.67.

Donations

DONATIONS for the missionary work of the American Tract Society may be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

FIELD SECRETARIES AND COLPORTAGE SUPERINTENDENTS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.

Rev. Isaac Pierson, Field Secretary for New England, 50 Bromfield Street, Boston, Mass.

Rev. A. W. Reinhard, Field Secretary and Superintendent of Colportage for the Western and Northwestern States, 19 Parkland Place, St. Louis, Mo.

Rev. George Whitefort, Superintendent of Colportage, Southern Agency, Crichton, R. F. D., Mobile Co., Ala.

Form of Bequest

I GIVE and bequeath to the "AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY," instituted in the City of New York, May, 1825, the sum of.....dollars to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said Society.

Three witnesses should state that the testator declares this to be his last will and testament, and that they signed at his request, and in his presence and the presence of each other.

Life Members and Directors

THE donation of $30 at one time constitutes a Life Member of the American Tract Society; the addition of $70, or the donation of $100 at one time, constitutes a Life Director. Life members may receive annually copies of the Society's own publications to the value of $1; Life Directors to the value of $2; if applied for within the Society's year, from April 1st to April 1st, in person or by written order.

Notice to Authors

Authors who submit manuscripts for publication to the American Tract Society are reminded that the Society does not hold itself responsible for the return of any manuscript. If a remittance is sent to cover the full cost of postage and registry, the Society will transmit a manuscript by registered mail upon the request of the author.

American Tract Society

THIS SOCIETY was organized in 1825. Its work is interdenominational and international in scope, and is commended by all evangelical denominations.

It has published the Gospel messages in 178 languages, dialects and characters. It has been the pioneer for work among the foreign-speaking people in our country, and its missionary colporters are distributing Christian literature in many languages among our foreign-speaking population and making a home-to-home visitation among the spiritually destitute, both in the cities and rural districts, leaving all kinds of Christian literature, also the Bible or portions of the Scriptures.

Its publication of leaflets, volumes and periodicals from the Home Office total 800,711,975 copies. It has made foreign cash appropriations to the amount of $802,966.39, and grants of electrotypes to the value of $61,177.96, by means of which millions of copies of books and tracts have been published at mission stations abroad.

The gratuitous distribution of the past year is to the value of $23,191.98. The grand total of its gratuitous distribution has been to the value of $2,676,159.52, which is the equivalent of 5,352,319,040 tract pages.

The total number of family visits that have been made by the Society's colporters during the last year is 146,056; the total number of volumes distributed by sale or grant is 49,584, making the total number of volumes that have been circulated by colporters in the last seventy-seven years 17,487,750, and the total number of family visits that they have made during the same period 18,958,862.

A large distribution of Christian literature is being made among the soldiers and sailors, and the Society aims to furnish Christian literature to every Cantonment in the Army and to every battleship and cruiser in the Navy.

The Society is making very special effort in behalf of Latin America, having entered upon the publication of a One-volume Bible commentary in Spanish, a long-needed and earnestly prayed-for publication, and several other important volumes in both Spanish and Portuguese. Its total publications for Latin America now reach 17,175,163 copies. Its work, ever widening, is dependent upon donations and legacies, and greatly needs increased offerings.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, PRESIDENT.
JUDSON SWIFT, D. D., General Secretary.
Remittances should be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

Work of the French Protestant Committee

How the Protestant churches in France work with the Army and Navy through a committee embracing all denominations is told in a recent letter.

"Our committee is working on very similar lines with your own," writes Andre Monod, corresponding secretary of the French Protestant committee, from Paris to Henry A. Atkinson, executive secretary of the national committee on the churches and moral aims of the war. "Democracy and international justice," says Mr. Monod, "are the French committee's basic principles."

Mr. Monod's letter, in part, follows: "Our own committee was formed as early as June, 1915. Its first aim was to vindicate what was to us the right and the truth before the Protestants of neutral countries. The appointment of this committee, which united the most prominent representatives from all our churches with men belonging to or having done fine service in the army, the navy, or in the business circles, had been fully approved by the 'Conseil de la Federation des Eglises Protestantes,' our Federal Council of Churches.

"The Protestant committee has been one of the most active of our organizations during the war. It has extended its scope of action in a great number of different countries by means of literature and the sending of delegates to Holland, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Switzerland, the United States, and Canada.

"We have been able by our close relations with the United States and by the mission of our delegates, to make our people more fully realize the moral significance and the value of American friendship and American support in the war."

Noon-Tide Prayers

The people of Washington, D. C., observe 12 o'clock each day as a special time to offer prayers for victory and peace. A committee, so formed as to be representative of all the people without regard to religious denominations, creed, sect or race, promoted this observance, according to John G. Capers, chairman of the committee.

The President has authorized the heads of all Government departments to sanction this observance through their chief clerks. The Secretary of War permitted a signal to be fired from the top of an office building for the ringing of the bells. The District Commissioners issued a statement giving their sanction to the observance. "This sanction carried authorized through the Public Utilities Commission for the observance of the movement by street cars and traffic, which stops on specified days, during the time of prayer," said Mr. Capers.

Posters similar to those of the Liberty loan drives and the Red Cross campaigns have been made and will be hung in all churches, Sunday schools, clubs, hotel lobbies, banks, and restaurants. "Give a moment to God" is the suggestive phrase of the posters. These posters call the attention of the public to the necessity of prayer for the success of our allies and an enduring peace.

What Faith Will Do for You

You will not be transformed into a perfect being all at once, because sudden changes are contrary to nature's law. With most of us faults are so imbedded into our characters that it will take a long, hard pull to get them out.

It is not easy to reform the habits of a lifetime, but have you ever found any worth-while thing that is easy? I have not.

Try taking five minutes a day for character-building. Take it at the same time each day, if possible, and be sure to go where you can be alone. Where does not matter at all—up in the attic or down behind the woodpile—anywhere, if you can only be quiet.

Try to leave behind, for this little time, all your cares and anxieties. Try to take with you your faith in Almighty God, and faith in yourself, the child of God. That means you, you just as much as the greatest man in the land.

This is your first lesson: Faith—"the substance of things hoped for." The more you cultivate faith, the more successful you will be in getting the thing you want, whether it is a perfectly rounded character or any other good thing.—FARM AND FIRESIDE.

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

TERMS: Subscription price, 50 cts. a year, payable in advance. In clubs of five or more, 30 cts. each. Club subscriptions mailed to separate addresses, if desired. Charge for foreign subscriptions, 24 cents additional. Canadian subscriptions, 12 cents additional. Single copies, 5 cents each.

On account of the additional charge which is made by the New York Post Office for mailing to subscribers in New York and Bronx Counties (Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx), no club rates, cash commissions or premiums will be given for subscriptions that must be sent to persons residing in those Counties. Each subscription in New York or Bronx County must be at the rate of 50 cents net.

Remit by Express Money Order, Draft, Post Office Order or Registered Letter. For very small amounts, postage stamps may be sent at the risk of the sender.

RENEWALS: The date opposite your name shows to what time the subscription has been paid, and a change in the date is the receipt for renewal.

CHANGES: When sending change of address, be sure to send the old address as well as the new one.

OUR ADVERTISERS: We believe that all the advertisements in this paper are from responsible advertisers, and it is our intention to admit only such to our columns. Should, however, any of our subscribers find that any advertiser does not live up to his agreements, we would consider it a favor, if they will inform us, and we will at any time give prompt attention to any complaint.

We do not, of course, guarantee that all persons will take the same point of view with the advertisers, and it must be borne in mind that the claims and statements made by advertisers are their assertions, and not ours.

Our readers will confer a favor upon advertisers and also upon us if they will mention THE AMERICAN MESSENGER when answering advertisements.

A Sermon

BY GRACE H. BOULETTE.

His back was bowed; it was a trembling voice In which he spoke, plain, simple, quiet words;

And yet it seemed as if the very birds Without drew near to listen and rejoice That such as he should wear a human guise; For every wrinkle marked brave, kindly deeds,

And glad and patient serving others' needs, And counsels lived as taught, strong, loving, wise.

Above his spotless robes his whiter hair Flowed soft and thin, all shining silverly, As if, of his soul-springing purity,

God's tender hand had set the signet there. Scarce was there need for speech; if he but stood

And smiled, his faded eyes still held a light Of deep thanksgiving, and a faith so bright That all hearts prayed, and life seemed wholly good.

He told great truths—but what he was, wrought more Than all; through him our eyes were raised to see Ungessed-at beights—his old hand turned a key That let heaven's sunshine flood earth's open door!

The Sunday-school and a Patriotic Opportunity

BY WILLIAM T. ELLIS.

To "keep the home-fires burning;" To prevent a slump in national idealism; to maintain patriotism on the highest levels; to save America to essential religion; to help Christians to be big and brave enough for any changes in conventional religious forms that the war may bring to pass; and to preserve the soul of the nation from becoming calloused or embittered or darkened or otherwise hurt by the war—this is the clear present task of the Christian Church and all her agencies. "New occasions teach new duties." This grave hour of history seriously summons all leaders in religious thought and activity to great and unusual efforts.

Some uncertain spirits may falter and ask whether the Gospel has any word for this unprecedented day. Such know neither the times nor the Gospel. The eternal contemporaneousness of the Message of Jesus was never more clearly manifest than now. The war itself has unleashed for all the nations, in newness and practicality, the principles and spirit of the Saviour. Our present need is for alert interpreters of the Gospel and of our times. The clamant query is not "What?" but "How?" Methods of pressing home to the hearts of all the people—especially of those outside the normal reach of the Church—the pertinency and power of the truth should engross us now.

Even more persuasive perhaps than the outreach of the pulpit is the influence of the Sunday School. It goes to every village and cross-roads of the nation. The Sunday School Lesson is possibly the most potent single educational or character-shaping influence in the whole world today. Its message is multiplied ways and times without number: what the teacher reads is carried to classes and homes and into conversation, growing like a snow-ball as it goes. I wonder if even the Sunday School workers have realized the full potency of the Lesson? For these Scripture portions are all related to life. They are selected for their character-forming qualities. They contain the truth which, if pressed home with regularity and with interest, will keep the nation itself steady.

There are surprising potentialities for patriotic and Christian propaganda in these Lessons. Every qualified commentator and teacher will interpret them in the light of the world war and its implications. They offer a rare opportunity for presenting the reality and workability of the teachings of Jesus. As one who has been treating the Uniform International Sunday School Lessons for daily newspaper readers, I can testify that I have found them aglow with messages of fortitude for our fighters, of comfort for their kindred, of illumination for patriotic service, of inspiration for new ministry to the world, and of vindication for the ideals

A SPECIAL REQUEST

It is the desire of the publishers of the AMERICAN MESSENGER to add many new names to the subscription list of this helpful religious monthly periodical during the coming months, and thus increase its usefulness.

There are many other good religious papers published, but as most of them are issued weekly, the high cost of producing them makes it impossible for a great many families to subscribe for them. The low yearly subscription price of the AMERICAN MESSENGER, which is only 50 cents, puts it within the reach of all. We ask the friend who reads this notice, to send us the names of TEN people, in different families who would appreciate such a paper as the AMERICAN MESSENGER, if they knew it. To each of those whose names we receive we will later send a sample copy.

In return for your service in furnishing these TEN names, we will send you whichever one of the following pictures you may choose as long as the supply lasts.

LIST OF PICTURES FROM WHICH YOU MAY CHOOSE

- The Birth of Christ. 20x27 inches
The Child Jesus in the Temple. 18x22 inches
Good Shepherd, in colors. 14 1-2x20 inches
Suffer Little Children. 18x22 inches
Christ and the Rich Young Man. 18x22 inches

These pictures have been made by a photographic process which admirably reproduces the exquisite beauty of expression in the original painting. They are all ready for framing. Such pictures as these should be in every home and Sunday School, for they serve as an ornament appealing to the best in every nature, educating to high ideals, and furnishing an inspiration and stimulus to right living.

AMERICAN MESSENGER, Park Ave. and 40th St., New York City

of America and the Allies, as expressed by our honored President Wilson. These Lessons bring the Eternal Word of God to bear on present perplexities which will never be satisfactorily solved in any other manner. When the Lessons are linked with life, the throbbing, thrilling, tremendous life of the present crisis, they are as absorbing as dispatches from the battlefield. By them, the purposes and principles of the people may be maintained at the lofty levels which the occasion requires.

Patriotism summons editors and writers and teachers to utilize the Sunday School Lessons as a vehicle for conveying the highest interpretation of our country's cause. In times of great feeling, like the present, the public is most sensitive to spiritual appeals. Therefore, if the sincerely religious aspect of this war for righteousness is clearly and consistently presented to the people, their spirits will be strengthened and their resolution will be established. Patriotism is unshakable when founded upon faith in God. Surely this is the hour wherein all the tides of national feeling may be purified and directed by religious conviction. Both State and Church may greatly be served now, if Christian leaders are alert to the occasion.

The present is an opportune time to press for the publication of a Sunday School Lesson in the secular newspapers. Hundreds of dailies run this as a weekly feature. It carries the truth to the eyes of the men and women who never see a church paper and never hear a sermon. Properly treated, the newspaper Sunday School Lesson may be the best of preventives for the religious vagaries which for a time made headway in Great Britain, during the first years of the war. For the only Lesson which a wise editor will print, as representative of the desires of his readers, is one that is sincerely evangelical, though entirely undenominational. It should also be popular and journalistic in style, and interesting to the average reader. In our new pursuit of a closer relationship between all of life and religion, Christians who feel their larger responsibilities should seek to secure the publication of a Sunday School Lesson, or kindred religious feature, in every daily newspaper.

What our Lord sought in His beneficiaries should also be found in those Christians with a public mind who seek to promote the general cause of truth—the grace of saying "Thank you." When a daily newspaper publishes a Lesson, or any other really helpful religious feature, the church folk should be at pains to express their appreciation. Incidentally, they will thus prove themselves an alert and present-day force. To help in any wise to publish the clear teachings of Christ upon the problems of the present time is to serve the State as well as the Gospel. For the principles of patriotism are established in the eternal verities of the Christian religion.

That is the note which should be dominant during these heart-hungry days, in Church press, Sunday School publications, and wherever else the truth may be told. Religion and patriotism should be inseparable. A reverent and teachable respect for the truths of religion can keep patriotism from deteriorating into mere blatant nationalism and militarism. So it becomes the task of all who write or speak in the name of the Gospel to pour into the day's spirit of patriotism the great impulses and inspirations and inhibitions of the Christian religion. Thus shall we not only help to win the war; but also we shall help the nation to win our own souls.

The Cedars of Lebanon

There are only about four hundred of the Cedars of Lebanon left. The Maronite peasants almost worship them and call them the "Cedars of the Lord," and a recent governor of the Lebanon has surrounded them by a great wall, so that the young shoots may not be injured by roving animals. Yet, century by century, their numbers grow less.

But the few remaining are of royal blood. They are not the largest of trees, though some of the trunks measure over forty feet around. Their beauty lies in the wide-spreading limbs, which often cover a circle two or three hundred feet in circumference. Some are tall and symmetrical, with beautiful horizontal branches; others are gnarled and knotted with inviting seats in the great forks, and charming beds on the thick foliage of the swinging boughs. The wood has a sweet odor, is very hard, and seldom decays. The vitality of the cedar is remarkable. A dead tree is never seen, except when lightning or the axe has been at work. Often a great bough of one tree has grown into a neighbor, and the two are so bound in together that it is impossible to say which is the parent trunk. Perhaps the unusual strength and vitality of the cedars are due to their slow growth.

When a little sprout, hardly waist-high, is said to be ten or fifteen or twenty years old, one cannot help asking, "What must be the age of the great patriarchs of the grove?" It is hard to tell exactly. There have been counted, with the aid of a microscope, more than seven hundred rings on a bough only thirty inches in diameter. Those who have studied the matter deeply think that some of these trees must be more than a thousand years old. Indeed, there is nothing wildly improbable in the thought that perhaps the tree called the Guardian of the grove, for instance, may have been a young tree when Hiram began cutting for the temple at Jerusalem.—EXCHANGE.

The Gospel of the Odd Sparrow

In Matthew, Jesus inquires: "Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing?" In Luke, He inquires: "Are not five sparrows sold for two farthings?" We have here what John MacNeill calls the Gospel of the Odd Sparrow. So eager, says he, were the vendors to see, so small a consideration is the single sparrow, that the man who buys two farthings' worth will have an extra bird thrown in. He continues: "It was to prove to us the Father's care that the Saviour gave us this picture of the market-place. Sparrows slain by the hundred, are brought in and sold for a mere nothing. Yet our Lord says that all goes on under the watchful eye of God. And more than that! Even the odd sparrow, so insignificant that it does not count in a bargain, so worthless that it is thrown in as an extra—even the odd sparrow does not fall to the ground without the Father's notice. Which things were written for our admonition upon whom the ends of the world are come!"—KIND WORDS.

The Minister's Handicap

By J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.

"When trials are many, when burdens are heavy, when tears are blinding, when the heart is almost broken, then, as a rule, ministers come to an experience where effective preaching is possible." THE MINISTER'S HANDICAP is filled with the interesting incidents and experiences in the life of the noted divine, J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D. If you would comprehend a minister's work, read this interesting, colorful book, filled with striking remarks made by noted men to the author, and the views expressed to him by famous preachers and business men at various times. The book is vibrant with sympathetic comprehension of the minister's work. It contains a world of friendly helpfulness for any reader. If you are a clergyman, do you ever preach "your own doubts?" Are you ever touched by "discouraged lassitude?" Do you ever "substitute an ethical address for a sermon?" Read what a great business man says about these points, pages 31 and 32. No clergyman will read THE MINISTER'S HANDICAP without acknowledging a benefit received.

The book is new and is now appearing on sale for the first time. It is hoped that this book will help to a clearer appreciation and understanding of the minister's work than has prevailed in many communities.

It measures 5x7 1/4 inches, 145 pages. Cloth-bound. Price, net, 75 cents. If you would be sure of obtaining your copy from this first edition, sign your name and address below and mail it to-day, if possible.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY, Park Avenue and 40th Street, New York, N. Y.

Dear Sirs: Enclosed please find 75c. for which mail me one copy of "THE MINISTER'S HANDICAP," by J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.

Name
Street
Town
State

THE CHRISTIAN WORKER'S LIBRARY

PROBABLY THE LAST TIME IT CAN EVER BE OFFERED AT $7.50

THE CHRISTIAN WORKER'S LIBRARY

12 Famous Volumes Containing Over 4,300 Pages

A library for the Bible student, pastor, teacher, and for the home.

Unbounded help toward a comprehension of the Bible.

Friends, if you knew how hard we have labored to keep the price of this famous library at $7.50, the price at which it has sold in the past, if you knew that each of these splendid books are worth, on the average, today, at retail, between $1.50 and $2.00 for every copy, you would feel that we are making a good fight against rising costs. You know this library, friends. It is a marvelous set of books for any person who aims to have an intelligent understanding of the Bible. This set of twelve volumes is today a comfort and a blessing in Christian homes. These homes have received a better comprehension of innumerable knotty biblical questions. They have a library of 12 volumes of which they are properly proud. The possession of a library containing such works as THE MASTER PREACHER, THE WONDROUS CROSS, STUDIES IN THE BOOK OF GENESIS and nine other equally meritorious titles instantly bears testimony to the religious life and the religious studiousness of that home.

No home should leave its Bible problem unsolved. There is no need for it. This carefully assembled set of one dozen books provides the answers to hundreds of points that cannot be clearly explained by the average person. What a knowledge of events and of the men of the Bible the CHRISTIAN WORKER'S LIBRARY gives!

Study of the Bible should not be mere plodding drudgery. It should not be dull and unattractive. And it will not be if you have these books in your home. Your study will be four-fold as enjoyable. Reader, these may seem strong statements, but you will not doubt them when you look over the titles below.

Still a word more as to the price. A long time ago we sincerely believed that the purchaser of the CHRISTIAN WORKER'S LIBRARY saved one-half of the actual value of the library when purchasing it for $7.50. The original selling price was, in fact, $15. Today, with costs double what they used to be in many lines, the CHRISTIAN WORKER'S LIBRARY at its old price of $7.50 hardly more than pays for the work of producing it and shipping it. It was a bargain before. Today it is a super-bargain.

Friends, it is unnecessary to say that we cannot hold this library at $7.50 for very much more time. Frankly, two of the books are low in stock and we therefore cannot offer it for very much longer without reprinting. If you want to secure your library today while it may still be had at the old price, fill out the coupon in the lower corner of this page and send it to us.

JUST READ THESE BRIEF DESCRIPTIONS OF THE BOOKS

AMONG THE HOLY PLACES
By James Kean, M.A., B.D.

The author takes the reader with him in his journey and enables him to see in the most vivid manner the scenes visited. One can from this book obtain all the advantages of a personal visit to the places described and probably with still greater profit, for the reason that the author has the ability to see all that is worth seeing. Fully illustrated, and with index.

THE ATONEMENT
By James Stalker, D.D.

The Atonement is a master subject and takes a master hand to treat it so that it is understood. Divided into three parts this book deals in a striking and scholarly manner with the New Testament situation, the Old Testament preparation and the modern justification. The book will work wonders in clearing up many of the questions on the subject.

THE LORD OF GLORY
By Benjamin B. Warfield, D.D., LL.D.

Here is presented the Godhead of Christ on evidence taken from the New Testament. It is an unanswerable plea based on the designations which the New Testament writers apply to Jesus when concurrently speaking of Him. When Dr. Warfield comes to the end no doubt remains that Jesus Christ was indeed the "Lord of Glory." The book has index of designations, passages of Scripture and authors cited. As an aid to the study and preaching of this subject it is without equal.

EVIDENCES OF CHRISTIANITY
By Charles P. McIlvalne, D.D.

This is one of the standard works on the Evidences. The material as set forth in this volume proves clearly, decisively and conclusively a sufficient basis for faith in the divine origin, nature, methods and results of Christianity. After reading this book a believer in God and His kingdom would become a stronger man with stronger beliefs. An unbeliever would turn from his unbelief to the earnest and continued following of Christ.

THE MASTER PREACHER
By Albert R. Bond, A.M., D.D.

Jesus was a teacher and a preacher with methods, a personality, themes and a success of His own. His methods and themes could be followed with success today if it were only known how. Dr. Bond knows how, has done it successfully, and presents in this book for your benefit practically every phase of Christ's method. Its careful study will well repay any minister.

THE EVOLUTION OF A CHRISTIAN
By David James Burrell, D.D.

A wonderfully enlightening book for the mature person, but peculiarly acceptable and attractive to those of more tender years. Dr. Burrell's book has shown many "Young Christians How to Keep on in the Good Way," and has held the seed of amplified understanding for men and women of fuller years.

COMPANION TO THE BIBLE
By E. P. Barrows, D.D.

This is a critical study of the books of the Bible in four parts. Part 1 treats of the evidences of revealed religion. Part 2 examines and classifies the books of the Old Testament. Part 3 examines and classifies the books of the New Testament. Part 4 takes up the principle of Biblical interpretation.

TRANSFIGURED
By Joseph Hamilton

What "Studies in the Book of Genesis" does to give light on a difficult subject in the Old Testament, "Transfigured" does to explain one of the most talked-of events in the New Testament. "Transfigured" is an unusual volume—a devout and common-sense study of this unparalleled theme. It treats of the unscen and eternal.

THE OLD-TIME RELIGION
By David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.

There is not a dull sentence in this whole book, much less a dull page. Full of terseness and vigor, replete with sound thoughts, the book goes to the root of the Christian religion and tells why this religion is so solid and satisfactory. Young and old may read it with profit. Young ministers may well take it to heart.

STUDIES IN THE BOOK OF GENESIS
By H. B. Pratt

This is without doubt one of the best commentaries on the book of Genesis. There are so many doubtful points, overlapping events and apparently conflicting circumstances in the first book of Moses which need satisfactory explanations that this volume meets a demand of students of the Old Testament. It is especially valuable because the subject is handled by a man who gave a lifetime to its study and research. The book makes an excellent companion volume to "Evidences of Christianity."

THE TWO ST. JOHNS OF THE NEW TESTAMENT
By James Stalker, D.D.

Did it ever occur to you to make a study of the two Johns in the New Testament? Dr. Stalker with his remarkably original method, clarity of style, comprehensiveness of view and suggestiveness of matter contrasts the lives and characters of John the Evangelist and John the Baptist. Full information on a vitally interesting subject.

THE WONDROUS CROSS
By David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.

We could not resist the temptation to have the twelfth and last volume of this library one of Dr. Burrell's. The Cross is such a vital factor in every life when properly understood that this book seemed more than appropriate to lend dignity to a library intended first of all for the Christian reader and student. It is most acceptable with its pointed truths full of significance.

American Tract Society
New York
Gentlemen: Enclosed find $7.50, for which please send THE CHRISTIAN WORKER'S LIBRARY to the address below:
Name
Street
City
State

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY, PARK AVENUE AND 40th ST., NEW YORK

M M

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

Vol. 76

OCTOBER, 1918

No. 10

PHARAOH'S DAUGHTER AND THE INFANT MOSES

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY, NEW YORK.

A Look Ahead and a Special Subscription Offer

DR. DAVID J. BURRELL

JULIA H. JOHNSTON

DR. J. WILBUR CHAPMAN

REV. HOWARD W. POPE

MRS. GRACE B. SANDERS

EDGAR W. WORK, D.D.

WILLIAM NORRIS BURR

MISS J. L. GLOVER

C. A. S. DWIGHT, PH.D.

GEORGE S. PAYSON, D.D.

ABLE CONTRIBUTORS

We are glad to announce that the Editorial Contributors who have served the American Messenger so acceptably during the past will continue to write for its columns during the coming year. These Editorial Contributors are Rev. David J. Burrell, D.D., LL.D., pastor of the Marble Collegiate Church, New York City, who is a great preacher, the author of many helpful books and a forceful writer for the religious press; Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, the late Moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly, known as a successful Evangelist, both in this country and abroad; Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D., pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian Church in New York City, the author of "The House of Chimham" and many other delightful volumes; Dr. Charles Carroll Albertson, pastor of the Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church of Brooklyn, New York, a man of large vision and a thoughtful and scholarly writer; Rev. George Ernest Merriam, pastor of the Calvinistic Congregational Church of Fitchburg, Mass.

FASCINATING ARTICLES

Among the attractive features of our Thanksgiving issue will be "The Harvest Joy" by Julia H. Johnston; "Her First Thanksgiving" by Miss J. L. Glover and a beautiful Thanksgiving poem by Rev. A. M. Quick. Our Christmas issue will include an article, "Followers of the Star" by Kathleen Hay, a capital story, "A Christmas Tree That Grew from the Seed of Love" by Margaret F. Harper, and other timely features.

Delightful stories which will appear in "Our Fireside" include "Marcia's Inheritance" by Pearl H. Campbell, "Mary's Smile" by Anne Porter Johnson, "Miss Ophelia's Class" by Mrs. Grace B. Sanders, and "The Height of Giving" by Miss L. D. Stearns.

Among other striking articles to be published are "The Laughing Man" by Clarence E. Flynn, "Norway—Before the War and Since" by Annette L. Noble, and "The Assurance of Immortality" by Rev. George S. Payson, D.D.

STRONG DEPARTMENTS

The Prayer Meeting page gives a suggestive treatment of the Topics used in Christian Endeavor and other Young People's Meetings. These notes are prepared by Rev. Henry Lewis, Ph.D., who has had large experience in Christian Endeavor work. Daily Bible Readings are printed in connection with the topics for each week.

Our Young Folks' page is a most interesting feature of the American Messenger. On this page there is always a beautiful illustration, reproduced from an original photograph and depicting varied phases of life at home and abroad which are sure to delight the young folks. In addition there are entertaining stories and charming poems.

"His Vineyard and Ours" is the title of a department dealing with the progress of the Kingdom throughout the world. The pictures on this page are reproduced from photographs that come from the ends of the earth and illustrate the unique conditions of life in India, China, Japan, the Philippines and other parts of the missionary field.

DESIRABLE FEATURES

The Editorial Notes in the American Messenger give a broad outlook on the whole field of Christian activity. Timely comments are made upon events of international importance. The great subjects of Social Service, Child Welfare, National Conservation, Church Progress, Evangelistic Effort and kindred themes receive sympathetic and illuminating treatment.

Christian Literature is a topic that receives special attention. For nearly a century the American Tract Society has been a pioneer in this field, and through the columns of this paper the Society seeks to set forth the most pertinent facts concerning Christian truth in the printed page.

Choice poems are a characteristic feature of this paper, and among the beautiful verses to be published later are "Suggestions" by Major A. W. Peach, "The Victory" by Thomas C. Clark, and "Honor the Brave" by Lizzie De Armond.

OUR SOLDIER BOYS

In this issue of our paper will be found an admirable illustrated article setting forth some of the activities that are being carried forward on behalf of our soldier boys by that splendid organization known as the Y. M. C. A.

Other items of interest concerning the work that is being done for the soldiers and sailors will appear from time to time, and it is hoped that these glimpses into the life of the men of our Army and Navy will prove to be of supreme value in "keeping the home fires burning."

Christian News from everywhere finds a place in the columns of the American Messenger. Its publication office being situated in New York City, it is in close touch with the War Work Council of the Y. M. C. A., the Federal Council of Churches, the World's Sunday School Association, and other great inter-denominational and international organizations, and it is thus enabled to receive advance information concerning the great religious movements of the time at the original sources of information.

CHOICE YEAR BOOK

We are offering to our subscribers this year an opportunity to secure a copy of the beautiful little book entitled "A Threefold Cord." This contains a carefully selected Precept, Promise and Prayer, taken from the Scriptures, for every day in the year. The book is neatly bound in cloth, and is of convenient size for carrying in the pocket or handbag, if so desired.

We will give a copy of "A Threefold Cord," postpaid, and one year's subscription, new or renewal, to the American Messenger for 60 cents. We will give the book as a premium to any subscriber who renews his or her own subscription for 1918, and sends one new subscription, remitting $1.00 in all. If the new subscriber in the last-mentioned case desires a copy of "A Threefold Cord," $1.10 must be remitted. For every Canadian or foreign subscription 12 cents additional must be remitted to cover the cost of postage on the paper.

REV. G. E. MERRIAM

MISS L. D. STEARNS

CLARENCE E. FLYNN

MAJOR A. W. PEACH

OUR SPECIAL SUBSCRIPTION OFFER: All those who subscribe now to the AMERICAN MESSENGER for one year at fifty cents will receive the paper until January 1, 1920. New subscribers will thus receive both the Thanksgiving and Christmas numbers for 1918, free of cost, if they subscribe at once. They will also be entitled to receive a copy of the book entitled "A Threefold Cord," upon the payment of only ten cents additional.

AMERICAN MESSENGER, Park Ave. & 40th St., New York

The American Messenger

"Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Luke 2:10

Vol. 76. No. 10

OCTOBER, 1918

Copyright, 1918, by American Tract Society.

Terms: 50 cents per annum
Single copy, 5 cents

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

PUBLISHED MONTHLY

BY THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

Park Ave. and Fortieth St., New York, N. Y.

OFFICERS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President.

JOHN HENRY JOWETT, M.A., D.D., Vice-President.

JUDSON SWIFT, D.D., General Secretary.

LOUIS TAG, Treasurer.

REV. HENRY LEWIS, Ph.D., Recording Secretary.

All of the above-named officers should be addressed at Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Rev. David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.

Rev. Charles Carroll Albertson, D.D.

Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.

Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D.

Rev. George Ernest Merriam.

Entered as second-class matter June 20, 1879, at the Post Office at New York, New York, under the Act of March 3, 1879.

Acceptance for mailing at special rate of postage provided for in Section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized on July 3, 1918.

A Look Ahead

On another page of this issue of our paper will be found an announcement of our plans for the future and a Special Subscription Offer to which we bespeak the careful attention of our readers. We are confident that our present subscribers will be more than pleased at the attractive features that will be provided in coming issues of the AMERICAN MESSENGER, and we trust that a large number of those who receive this number for the first time will avail themselves of the opportunity presented to become subscribers on very reasonable terms.

Limitations of space have prevented a fuller statement of the good things in store for our readers during the coming year. It must be remembered, also, that as the AMERICAN MESSENGER seeks to keep abreast of the times, it is impossible to forecast all the timely and attractive features that will appear in future issues. We have tried, however, to give some idea of the general character of this paper and our aim will be to furnish a religious monthly which no Christian family can afford to be without.

In this connection we desire to call the attention of our readers to the fact that owing to the increased cost of production it will be necessary to make a slight increase in the price of the AMERICAN MESSENGER beginning on January 1, 1919. On and after that date the price of a single subscription will be sixty cents a year instead of fifty cents. The club rate for subscriptions sent in clubs of five or more will remain at the present rate of thirty cents apiece until further notice.

We regret the necessity of making any increase in the subscription price of the AMERICAN MESSENGER, but the rise in the price of all the elements that enter into the making of this periodical make some increase inevitable, and we have made it as slight as possible in the confident expectation that our friends will be willing to share with us to this extent the increased cost of production. One of our subscribers has recently written, "I would be willing to pay $1.00 per year rather than lose the AMERICAN MESSENGER," and we believe that our subscribers will readily respond to the call to help by paying the small additional amount needed.

Remittances at the present rate of fifty cents a year will be accepted both for new and renewal subscriptions up to the end of the calendar year, that is, until December 31, 1918. We therefore urge all our readers to remit in payment for their own subscription at the earliest possible moment, and to co-operate with us in enlarging the usefulness of this paper by securing as many new subscribers as possible.

A subscription blank is enclosed in this issue of the AMERICAN MESSENGER for the convenience of our readers in forwarding their new or renewal subscriptions. If your own subscription is paid up for the coming year, we should be glad to have you use the blank for sending the subscription of some friend or neighbor whom you can induce to become a subscriber, or for making a gift subscription to some one who would appreciate the monthly visits of this paper for the coming year. Such a gift, we believe, would be highly appreciated, especially since the friend for whom you subscribe will receive the Thanksgiving and Christmas issues of this year free, as stated in our Special Subscription Offer.

Two Noteworthy New Publications

Two new books have just been issued by the American Tract Society which are deserving of special mention. One of these is "The Minister's Handicap," by Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, and the other is "Paul's Campaigns," by Rev. David James Burrell, D.D.

In "The Minister's Handicap" Dr. Chapman has embodied the secrets of his successful career as a beloved pastor and as an evangelist of world-wide renown. This volume will be of special interest and helpfulness to ministers and theological students, and yet it contains much that will be suggestive to Christian laymen who are desirous of promoting the progress of the Kingdom and of co-operating with their pastors in upbuilding the work of the Christian Church.

In "Paul's Campaigns" we have a fresh study of Paul's missionary journeyings which will prove of vital interest to all Bible students. Dr. Burrell has always been a close student of the Word, and in this volume he has given the fruitage of long years of Biblical investigation.

Four specially drawn charts accompany the book, which will be found of great value in tracing the footsteps of the great Apostle.

A full announcement concerning both these volumes will be found on the last page of this issue of our paper.

To Protect the Children

A bill has been introduced into Congress by Congressman Edward Keating, which is designed to eliminate the evil of child labor by invoking the war power of our national legislature. Under the provisions of the proposed law an interdict would be placed upon the labor of children under the age of fourteen years at any time, and children between the ages of fourteen and sixteen would not be allowed to work more than eight hours a day or at night, and no children under sixteen would be allowed to work in mines or quarries.

It is believed that this prohibition of child labor would be effective as a war measure, and after the war is over it is hoped that a way may be found to eliminate the evils of child labor by some Federal enactment that will meet all Constitutional standards.

The protection of childhood is a matter of the most vital importance to the nation, and it is to be hoped that Congress will speedily pass this or some similar measure so that child welfare may be properly safeguarded.

Moving Toward Church Unity

One of the most hopeful signs of the times is the trend toward church unity which is apparent in various ways. For example, it is announced that the General Council and the General Synod of the Lutheran Church and the United Synod of the Lutheran Church of the South have completed plans for a merger which is to take place in November, and will be marked by a special jubilee celebration to be held in New York City.

At its last General Assembly held at Columbus, Ohio, the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America devoted considerable thought to the question of church unity. Resolutions were passed expressing the conviction that the time had come for an organic church union of the Evangelical Churches of America, and a strong and representative committee was appointed to prepare a tentative plan and to carry forward the movement.

One of the marked effects of the war has been the union of all denominations in concerted efforts for the spiritual welfare of the men of our Army and Navy. Indeed, in the work as carried on at the various cantonments and camps both here and abroad, denominational lines have been obliterated to a very large extent, and a degree of religious unity has been secured, which under ordinary circumstances would have been deemed unattainable.

It is to be hoped that this movement for spiritual unity will grow stronger and stronger and that it will result in a far closer union of the various branches of the Christian Church than has ever been known before. It is an old saying that in union there is strength, and this truth applies with special force to the religious world. It is certainly the duty of every true Christian to promote in every possible way this growing spirit of unity until the prayer of our Lord is realized, "that they may be one."

For Prison Sunday

For many years the last Sunday of October has been observed as Prison Sunday, and though the war is occupying so much of our attention at the present time we should not overlook the recurrence of this day which is set apart for special prayer on behalf of prisoners. No more helpful message could be found for those in prison than is contained in the little book prepared by Judson Swift, D.D., entitled, "Looking Forward Day by Day," which has been published by the American Tract Society within the past year. This admirable booklet contains a Scripture verse, a prayer and a meditation for each day of the month. In addition there are prayers for special occasions, such as "On going to Trial," "Before Sentence," "After Sentence" and "On the Day of Release."

A single copy of this book may be procured for ten cents. In quantities it may be obtained on the half grant basis for only five cents a copy.

The Fourth Liberty Loan

This issue of our paper will reach our readers just as the campaign begins for the Fourth Liberty Loan. The importance of a successful flotation of this loan cannot be over-emphasized, for it will furnish to the world and especially to all enemy nations the most unmistakable evidence of our determination to see this war through to a triumphant conclusion.

The Central Powers have chosen to use force in their effort to bend the world to their will, and they have not scrupled to use the most brutal and savage means that were ever devised by human malignity in order to attain their selfish ends.

As the United States entered upon the war with Spain with the high and holy motive of freeing Cuba from despotic misrule, so now our country has joined its forces with those of the Allies in order to preserve the rights of humanity and to maintain democracy in the world. So let us give our most generous support to this new Liberty Loan, so that the world may know that our nation is a united whole in this battle for righteousness and that we are willing to give all that we have to win the victory.

Why Join the Church?

By Rev. HOWARD W. POPE

WHY does a soldier enlist in the army? Because there he can render the most effective service; there his influence will help, and not hinder; there he can have the sympathy and co-operation of other soldiers.

In every war, however, there are some soldiers who refuse to join the army. They prefer to fight independently. They are called guerillas. But guerilla warfare as a rule is ineffective, demoralizing, and disreputable. It damages the very cause it tries to help.

In like manner there are some people who claim to be Christians, but who refuse to join the church. Like guerillas, they unconsciously damage the very cause they ought to help. They cannot give a single good reason for their position, but there are many reasons why every Christian should join some church.

In the first place it is there that he can render the most effective service. He is one of many, who are all working under one commander and for the same end, and who, collectively, can accomplish what could not be done separately. If it is a good thing to have churches in a community, then Christians should support them. If all Christians were guerrillas, Jesus Christ would not have a church on the face of the earth, or even a single acknowledged follower.

Remove the churches from a town, and property would depreciate, business would decline and all good people would move away. Sunday would become a mere secular holiday, life and property would be unsafe, and the town would soon have such a bad reputation that no decent person would move into it. For this reason every Christian owes it to himself, his family, to society, and to his God, to join and support some church.

In the second place it is the only consistent position for a Christian. In the church his influence will help and not hinder; an outsider, who ought to be in the church, damages the cause of Christ just as much as an insider who ought to be out. A Christian who refuses to join the church practically says to the world that the commands of Jesus are not binding or important, which is not true. The Master distinctly commands His disciples, saying, "Believe and be baptized," and, "Do this in remembrance of me," referring to the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. What right have we to disobey these commands? Furthermore he says, "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you," and "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?"

These plain passages show that Jesus does not reckon as His friends those who disobey His commands, and does not wish to have them call Him Lord, unless they do the things which He says. Besides, the world refuses to count one as a Christian unless he joins the church. In the matter of loyalty to Christ there is no neutral ground. We are either for Him or against Him. We either count or discount.

A Christian who does not join the Church will soon lose his joy, and perhaps his hope. If, knowing his Master's wish, he refuses to comply with it, he cannot be a happy person. He may be a saved man, but he will lose the joy of his salvation. And if he loses his joy he will also lose his power, for "The joy of the Lord is your strength." His words will have no weight with others, because he has not come out from the world himself. Furthermore he is in danger of losing all interest in the matter of salvation, because the habit of disobeying those commands which are irksome to him, will soon lead him to disregard all Christ's commands, and drop back into Christless life entirely.

To be a member of Christ's Church is the highest honor this world affords. Its sacraments are the most sacred, its literature the most sublime, and its fellowship the most sweet and enduring. All lodges and other organizations are man-made affairs, but the church is a divine institution, founded by Jesus Christ, guided and guarded by the Holy Spirit, having for its mission the evangelization of the world, and for its destiny eternal fellowship with God in Heaven.

The purest and noblest people in all ages have belonged to the church, and it will ever gather to itself those who love righteousness and hate iniquity. Pass a magnet through a pile of dust and it will draw to itself every bit of iron and steel. Why does it not attract the dirt? Because it is dirt, and has no affinity for the magnet. Even so Jesus Christ is a magnet who in all ages has drawn to Himself the best people. Why does He not attract the others? For the same reason that the magnet does not attract the dirt. Would you rather remain in the world with worldly people, or be in the church with Jesus Christ?

If it be objected that there are some hypocrites in the church the answer is: "Yes, it may be true, but Jesus Christ is no hypocrite, and He is the life of every church." Even if half the members of the church were hypocrites, still we ought to join the church, because it is our Master's wish and prayer. "Father, I will that they also whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am that they may behold my glory."

Remember also that when the church goes through the pearly gates there will be a sifting, and the hypocrites will be left on the outside of the gate, and, unless you obey Christ, you will have to spend all eternity with them. Would it not be better to live with them a few years in the church, than to spend all eternity with them elsewhere? You must spend some time with those hypocrites somewhere. Where shall it be?

The Christian who refuses to join the church dishonors Jesus Christ. It is like proposing a secret marriage. He is willing that Christ should die for him, but he is not willing to live for Christ, or even to acknowledge his relation to Him. He desires to be saved, but is not willing to serve. He wants the benefits of Christianity without the sacrifices, whereas the sacrifices constitute nine-tenths of the benefits.

The meanness of this attitude is well illustrated by the following incident: Dr. Lorimer once asked a man why he did not join the church. The reply was that the dying thief did not join the church and he was saved. "Well," said the minister, "if you do not belong to a church, you help support missions of course?"

"No," said the man. "The dying thief did not help missions, and wasn't he saved?"

"Yes," said Dr. Lorimer, "I suppose he was, but you must remember that he was a dying thief, whereas you are a living one."

Do not deprive your Saviour of the honor which belongs to Him.

A woman once asked her husband how to obtain her church letter. He replied: "Write to your former pastor, and tell him that there is a vacancy in the church where you now worship, and you had thought of applying for the situation, and that you would like a letter of recommendation."

Quite likely there may be a vacancy in the church where you worship, my dear reader. Suppose you apply for the situation, and do your best to fill it!

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTION

CHARLES C. ALBERTSON, D.D.

PAYING THE FULL PRICE

BY

REV. CHARLES CARROLL ALBERTSON, D.D.

Pastor of the Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church Brooklyn, New York

THE story of David and Ornan as told in the First Book of Chronicles is simple and beautiful. David would build a place of worship—an altar and a temple. It was made plain where he was to build it. A man named Ornan owned the site, and used it for a threshing-floor. Upon that site ultimately the temple was built—Solomon's Temple, beautiful and magnificent. When we think of that stately structure, let us not forget the name of the man a part of whose farm was the spot on which it rose—the name of the man who was willing to give the site and with it his oxen for burnt offerings, his threshing instruments for fuel to feed the altar-fires, and his wheat for the meat-offering.

Ornan was a liberal soul. David wanted only the plot of ground; Ornan offered to give much more. People are of three classes—those who do their duty, those who fail to do their duty, and those who do their duty and more. This surplus of obedience, of liberality and of sacrifice is the beauty and blossom of life. It is the very essence of love. Love always does more than it is expected to do. What mother ever "struck" for an eight-hour day?

A Type of the Liberal Soul

Ornan is a type of the liberal soul. And he had his reward while he lived. As virtue is its own reward, so is liberality. The soul that "heapeth up more than is meet" shrivels and decays. The liberal soul preserves its sweetness in the face of age and death.

It is the old, old story of the selfish pool and the generous streamlet. You know what became of the pool that received but never gave: it grew dark and foul and pestilential "until God, in pity, smote it with a scorching August sun and dried it up." And what of the generous streamlet? It hurried with its crystal water to the sea. It gave its coolness and moisture to the earth. Birds bathed at its edges, and beasts slaked their thirst in its current. It reached the sea, and God sent His winds and clouds to replenish its sources, and from year to year it blessed the earth.

The secret of Ornan's willingness to surrender his threshing-floor was in his vision. He, too, saw the angel that spoke to David. And the secret of his vision was in his open-mindedness to the Eternal. This was the secret of Moses' vision. Only the open-minded see. It is one thing to look, another thing to see.

The Soul of Honesty

If Ornan is a type of the liberal soul, David represents the honest soul. He would not take what was another's property to give the Lord, nor would he offer the Lord "an offering without cost"—without full cost. No bargain-counter religion was his. He sought no discount, no special privilege for his faith. That was an honest religion. That was faith of the right kind. It looked facts in the face. Religion demands sacrifice. Sacrifice that costs nothing is not sacrifice. The sacrifice of another could not avail for him. He must pay the full cost. His soul's integrity demanded nothing else.

That is a high type of mind and character. Only the noblest among men attain it. When Samuel Johnson knew he was dying and was offered a narcotic he refused it, saying, "I prefer to yield my soul to God unclouded." He would pay the full price. Perhaps Browning had this in mind when, in his "Prospice" he said:

"I would hate if death bandaged my eyes and forbore—
Bade me creep past. No, let me taste the whole of it,
Fare like my peers, the heroes of old."

A Lesson for This Crucial Time

What lesson has an incident like this of Ornan and David for a world at strife, a crucial time like ours? It has a very patent one in every way. There is much talk about the cost of the war, but it is doubtful whether any man can estimate its full cost, or whether, if it could be estimated, any human intellect could comprehend it. Six millions of men have been slain in battle. The economic value of a man in modern industry is $3,000. So this great war has cost the world in the economic loss of manhood alone, $18,000,000,000. It is estimated that the nations at war had spent up to the end of the year 1917, $75,000,000,000. The daily cost is not less than $130,000,000. Two and a half days of such expenditure would build a Panama Canal!

Remedial and Redemptive Suffering

There are those who say this is not a price we are paying, but a penalty. And there is a sense in which the war may be regarded as the penalty the world is paying for its sins—for sins of pride and ambition and hatred and greed. But the sad thing about every penalty, however just, is that the innocent must suffer with the guilty. There is a law of vicarious retribution running through life. But the thing which lifts all suffering above the plane of the animal—indeed above the plane of the human—is that it may be remedial as well as retributive. It may partake of the nature of redemption. Redemption marks the point of the conversion of suffering into discipline, into moral strength and spiritual value.

If the suffering of the world during the last four years shall result in personal and social reform; if we already begin to see with clearer vision the truth of the saying that the nation that forgets God shall perish; if we have been purified by the very fires that consume our idols; if in the light of these fires we perceive as we had not before, the beauty of chivalry, the nobility of unselfishness, the divinity of self-abandon, then is our suffering remedial, our anguish restorative: then are we paying the full price which must be paid for the prize we seek—which is nothing less than the freedom of the world from the fury of the oppressor.

It is written, "Without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sins." It is written in the very nature of things that without the expenditure of blood there is no social progress. What civil or religious rights do we possess, what charter of industrial or political franchise, that was not blood-bought? "With a great price obtained I this freedom." We must remember this when we confront our daily losses in the war. The reflection that we are paying the price of blood for human uplift may not dry our tears when we see a familiar name on the casualty list, but it will dignify with noble pride the hearts that bleed and break. Unnumbered Gethsemanes lie before us, in which God wills we should learn to suffer and grow strong.

The Cost of Character

Do we not know how pain and progress, suffering and strength, go hand in hand? What is the full cost of education? "Days of labor and nights devoid of ease." What is the full cost of character? "Pride deposed and passion slain and the vanquished ills that we hourly meet." And how is holiness attained, save by the sacrifice of what we once held dear? "How else but through a broken heart may the Lord Christ enter in?"

The spirit of these patriotic days calls on us all again to confront the old, old—yet ever new—demand voiced by the saying, "They that would wear the prophet's mantle must choose the prophet's portion." And the portion of the prophet is ever anguish, ever, ever loss.

"Life evermore is fed by death,
In earth and sea and sky,
And that a rose may breathe its breath
Something must die."

He whom we call Master—Whose we are and Whom we serve—paid the full price of Saviourhood. He looked Death in the face and scorned to "creep past." It is our triumphant faith in Him that tells us "these rivers of pain shall not flow fruitless over the earth." And none that follows after Him will hesitate to pay the price—the full price for the honor of His discipleship.

Soul Purified

BY GEORGE LAWRENCE ANDREWS.

How many troubles hard to bear
Have wrung my soul from day to day;
How oft beneath a weight of care
I've struggled up the rough, hard way!

But oh, I see the earth arrayed
In magic beauty like a flame!
And though my soul by grief is stayed,
I can but praise His mighty name.

Just for the glory I have seen
I thank the Lord with joy divine,
And thank Him, too, in faith serene
For all life's portion that is mine.

What a "Y" Man in France Does By J. M. Moore

WITHIN A Y. M. C. A. BUILDING AT AN ARMY CANTONMENT

A FRIEND wrote me from America recently and said: "You have written me of your wanderings, about the wonderful qualities of the French, about the fine fellows you have seen, about the wonderful work, but what do you do? Do you help them physically, mentally, or morally?"

If one wants to know all things that a man in a Foyer du Soldat (as the American Y. M. C. A. serving the French is called) does, the answer can be found in the dictionary—by looking up all the verbs.

I am an adopted member of a French artillery battery now, and they even trust me to bring my iodine and absorbent cotton and scissors when they are hurt. They want to know if I have anything for the "grippe."

When the American colored troops came by and flooded the little French shops, the shopkeepers ran to me to straighten things out. One old lady thought she had lost 300 francs and I must straighten that out.

As refugees went away by my place, so discouraged and crying and some hardly able to travel and too discouraged to eat, I robbed the canteen a little and gave the children and some old women some chocolate to munch on the way.

One old lady was so grateful she wanted to give me some champagne. One family had two little pet birds that they wanted me to keep. The keys of houses and cellars were given me to guard their possessions for them and to use what I would.

I met one bunch of American negro soldiers who were most wonderfully glad when they found I could talk the same language they use back in Virginia.

I was the rescuer of the babes in the wood. Soon I could give them some chocolate and cakes and chewing gum and matches. I could ask what was the price of an egg. I could stop a gun or a fight. I could write a letter for them in French or in English. I could explain to them what they were doing with the French and with French equipment, how long the war would last and what street they lived on and how to spell it, and why they hadn't gotten an answer to a letter a couple of weeks ago, and what was their address.

I had an orderly to paste their money together again that had worn out or got torn. I could change their money and take what was so bad no one else would take it. I could give them boxing gloves and prizes for the winner. I could give them horse-shoes and footballs.

I found five, one time, in a war railroad junction point trying to go from the hospital back to their regiment. It was nearly night. They had nothing to eat since morning, could not speak a word to the people, had no place to sleep, not a cent of money, did not know where to get a train or when.

I found their train did not leave till morning; walked with them across where the town had been and showed them where to find their train and at what time; bought them their supper, found them a bed, bought them a couple of loaves for their breakfast, left some money at a canteen for coffee next morning and showed them where to get it, found a Foyer run by a Frenchman and took them there to rest and see moving pictures till bedtime and got about all the gratitude that there was in the world, and also my train.

If you want the world to pass by your door, go to a Y. M. C. A. hut in the French Army. I have been able to serve the Senegali and the American negro, the Anamite and the Arab, the Poilu, the Tommy and the white American. I have had to deal harshly with a very few and gently with a few more, and as an ally with the great bulk.

I have had every duty from playing policeman and putting an Arab out of a picture show to presiding over a Sunday negro service; have arranged concerts and quartettes, football games and croquet grounds; have seen that men had letter-paper, magazines, newspapers, picture shows, music, games, services, warm drinks and a place to loaf.

More than ever now, the poilu are looking to the Americans; the perfect trust they have in President Wilson and the Americans and America is touching. I have had some British ambulance men in the Foyer and they were almost as glad to see the Foyer as the Frenchmen. They found a place where they could sing, and whether it was for me or not they sang the same things that even I could sing. They sang "Marching Through Georgia" and "The Star Spangled Banner."

At the end of one concert, we had a chorus, the "Marseillaise." No one stood till I did, and then everyone stood. It was not that their patriotism is past, but they are at the time when all things are in dead earnest; there is no shame, but they like to have recalled the sacred nature of their national hymn.

But the Frenchman also smiles before the battle and perhaps with much less emotion covered up than many of us. The evening before we expected a big attack was one of the pleasantest dinners we have had at the popotte. And there was nothing forced about it. I believe that everyone had forgotten all about going up to stand by the guns afterwards. I asked a lieutenant, a good friend, to make a speech on a certain "fête de jour" to encourage the men and arouse their spirits. He said he would talk to them, but that they would fight all right without that.

It is true that they are good fighters. But they are also gentle and polite always, like children in their gratitude for kindness.

Paris, September 1918 (by mail).

MESS TIME FOR A GROUP OF AMERICAN Y. M. C. A. SECRETARIES IN FRANCE

Copyright by Committee on Public Information

BEAUTIFYING THE CHURCH GROUNDS

By E. I. Farrington

It is a curious fact that many church bodies will pay a liberal sum to an architect to design their edifices, but hesitate to give even a small commission to a landscape architect to plot and plant the grounds. Yet much of the beauty of any church structure depends upon its setting. Oftentimes a building which cost only a small amount as compared with some of its neighbors is more attractive because of the trees, shrubs and vines which have been used with good taste and discrimination over and around it. Practically every church can be improved by a little planting, but brick and stone churches in particular need the contrasting effects produced by the free use of green shrubs. Many times the harsh lines made necessary by some architectural problem can be subdued by the generous use of climbing vines.

Many churches because of their height need base planting to tie them to the ground as it were. On the other hand, it occasionally happens that a low, rambling church structure needs to be surrounded with upright growing trees and shrubs to increase its apparent height. Oftentimes the homelike appearance as well as the value of the church property can be enhanced by obtaining the advice of a competent local landscape man. Nevertheless, a few simple suggestions will help any committee to improve the appearance of its church building and grounds.

If the grounds are rather extensive, and especially if they are surrounded by a large collection of other buildings, it will help to plant a hedge around the boundary line. All too often a church committee puts in a Privet hedge, because Privet is the hedge plant with which they are most familiar. This, however, is likely to be a mistake, because Privet requires constant trimming to be kept compact and symmetrical, and this trimming is rather expensive. Moreover, California Privet, most commonly used, is very likely to be winter-killed in the Northern States. Iboya Privet is more hardy, and is to be recommended if Privet of any kind is to be used.

The best hedge plant, all things considered, is

GOOD PLANTING AROUND A SUBURBAN CHURCH

Japanese Barberry. It is very ornamental, grows compact, and requires but little attention. Moreover, it is almost as attractive in Winter as in Summer because of the wealth of red berries which it carries until Spring. Of course it is a rather low-growing hedge, but it is not expected that a church will present too exclusive an appearance. The native and the purple barberry are sometimes recommended, but are to be eschewed now, because they are under the ban of the agriculturist, who has found that they spread the spores of wheat rust. In many sections these plants are being destroyed.

In the Northwest one of the best hedge plants is the Buckthorn. It will stand the most severe Winter, but it, too, requires considerable attention to keep it trimmed to a formal shape. A new hedge plant for the North is Cotoneaster Acutifolia, which resembles Privet but is absolutely hardy.

Occasionally when the boundaries are not enclosed, a pretty effect is obtained by making a very low hedge along the walk from the street to the church door. This is especially likely to be the case when the walk is straight and not very long. In the South the best plant is dwarf Box, but in the North where Box is not hardy, it is better to use Euonymus Vegetus, which is really a vine but if cut back closely will make low, upright growth. It is perfectly evergreen, keeping its leaves in good condition all Winter.

If your church grounds are extensive, do not make the mistake of scattering trees and shrubs all over them. The effect is bewildering, and it makes the grounds look smaller than they actually are. Correct planting calls for an open lawn with shrubbery around the borders to serve as a frame. This rule applied to church grounds usually means that a group of shrubs should be placed in the corners, and wherever there is a wide curve in a walk or a drive. Of course there is no reason why one or two specimen trees or shrubs should not be planted on the lawn itself.

The most important planting is that to be done at the base of the church structure. It should break the severe base lines so that the eye will sweep naturally and quietly from the level lawn to the upright walls. Sometimes it is possible to plant all along the base of the building, but usually the planting must be confined to the front and especially to the corners about the entrance. If more extensive base planting is adopted, care should be taken that the light is not cut off from the lower windows, and it is always wise to leave an occasional glimpse of the foundation.

Do not plant your shrubs in a perfect circle or in a straight line. An uneven or undulating effect is much better for lawn borders or base planting of any kind, and where there is a group at the front of the church, it is well to have one or two particularly fine plants standing a little apart from the others.

If you are wise, you will plant shrubs which will carry color of some kind the year round. You can easily have a succession of bloom all Summer. For Winter color you must depend upon plants which have attractive berries or warm colored stems. There are great numbers of flowering shrubs from which you can make a choice. Take care to select those, however, which do not spread unduly by underground stolons or stems, and use those which are known to be hardy. Usually the upright growing forms are to be preferred. Of course you will plant the tall growing kinds in the back and the lower ones in front, but this must not be done too arbitrarily or in too stiff a manner.

TALL SHRUBS MAKE AN ATTRACTIVE SCREEN FOR THE FOUNDATION OF THIS CHURCH

Among the taller shrubs most suitable to use are Lilacs, Deutzia Pride of Rochester, Fragrant Honeysuckle, High Bush Cranberry (Viburnum Opulus), and the various Syringas. Plants to use at the front of the group include Flowering Currant, Flowering Almond, Spiraea Anthony Waterer, Snowberry, Spiraea Callosa, and Weigelia Eva Rathke.

this Ivy, and has come to be one of the landmarks of the city.

A much newer vine, and one which gives great promise is Euonymus Radicans Vegetus, often called the Evergreen Bittersweet, because the berries which it bears in the Fall and carries well into the Winter are very similar to those of common American Bittersweet. This vine does not grow very rapidly for the first few years, but will eventually reach a height of fifteen or twenty feet. It clings to any rough surface, keeps its leaves throughout the Winter and will grow in either shade or sun. When it is desired to cover only the foundation walls of the church, the common Euonymus Radicans, also evergreen, can be used advantageously. These are altogether the best vines for a building; but if there happens to be a fence around the church buildings, and especially if it is not an attractive fence, cover it with Dorothy Perkins roses, or with Hall's Honeysuckle.

It will be seen from all this that no great most commonplace material and ugly shape. Yet each holds its oil, and the oil may seem to be of no use, save to fill the lamp.

Suddenly a lighted match is applied. The flame streams up. In whatever position the lamp may be placed, its bright glow serves to dispel the gloom. The room is made cheerful, the student bends closer over his book, the household tasks go on, and the family gather, with smiling faces, around the table, for the evening meal.

All is well with the lamp; it is doing that for which it was made. What of the oil? It is being consumed. The Indian sage says, "It is freely sacrificed to feed the flame." Yes, sacrificed, for it is only by sacrifice that its work can be done.

Mental attainments and spiritual graces are of little value, either to the individual or to the world, unless they are used. Its using may waste away the treasure, but it has played its part, it has done that for which it came into being, and the influence of its sacrifice may go on through ages yet to be.

The law of sacrifice is the glad, free use of what one has to use, the generous giving of what one has to give. Self-preservation is called the first law of nature, and self-sacrifice may well be called the highest law of Christian grace.

This was the law governing the gift of the Christ. We, his disciples, can follow His example of giving in spirit even though our gifts be small. And to give freely means to give wholly, even if the giving consumes the gift.

The Essential Point

BY REV. C. A. S. DWIGHT, PH. D.

Education is a subject of many varying aspects and phases, but in brief it may be said to be a process of finding out just how much there is in a given pupil.

An English nobleman once sent his son to Rowland Hill in order that he might be "educated." Along with the boy the perhaps too admiring father sent a note, containing these words: "I am confident he has talents, but they are hidden in a napkin." After the boy had been under his charge a few weeks the eccentric clergyman sent him back to his parent with this terse but rather insulting comment: "I have shaken the napkin at all corners, and found nothing in it." This bright simile, descriptive of a cursory examination of the mental furnishings of a backward pupil, does not exhaust the whole meaning or duty of pedagogy.

The sifting process has its place—one of the first offices of an expert educator is to expose the ignorance of his students, as Socrates long ago tried to do in Athens. A great many people would know more if they could only be induced to know less. If there is trash in the napkin let it be thrown out as speedily as possible, or if there be (seemingly at least) nothing in it, let that fact be brought to the attention of the possessor, in order to induce in him a mood of humble docility, which is the first pre-condition of all real knowing. Keeping still to the Scriptural figure it may be practical to put something into the napkin, even if it at present contains no values—not indeed in order that the imported treasure be thereafter hid in the ground, but invested in good enterprises.

In many dull and inert natures there reside, did we but know it, many seeds of good, or possibilities of noble achievement, if only their presence can be perceived, and timely assistance be rendered by the sympathetic teacher in their "education," or "drawing forth." Of course, the seeds of the weeds are there, as well as of valuable growths of character, but a discerning pedagogy will eradicate the one while it encourages the others.

CLIMBING VINES ARE BEST FOR A CITY CHURCH

The best plants to grow for Winter berries are Japanese Barberries and Viburnum Americanum (sometimes called Viburnum Opulus in American form). Both plants have red berries which remain until the leaves come in the Spring. They are very bright and cheerful throughout the Winter months. Additional color can be obtained by including the red twigged dogwood (Cornus Sibirica Alba). By way of contrast, also, it is well to include Cornus Aurea, which is the golden stalked dogwood.

Of course vines are indispensable, if the church is built of brick or stone. In the southern and middle States there is nothing to compare with the English Ivy of classic fame, which is beautiful alike in Winter and Summer. In the North, though, this Ivy is not hardy and something else must be substituted. Perhaps the most satisfactory vine for extremely cold sections is Ampelopsis Engelmanni. This Engelmann's Ivy is a type of Virginia Creeper that has smaller and thicker foliage. It is the only Ivy that is perfectly hardy in Minnesota and that will cling to brick, stone or plaster. It grows very rapidly, and in the Fall its green foliage turns a deep crimson. Grown on stone, this is a very handsome Ivy. It is not so well adapted to brick. Christ Church, in St. Paul, Minnesota, is almost hidden under a tremendous growth of difficulties enter into the proper planting of the church grounds if one has some understanding of the shrubs and vines best calculated to obtain the desired effects. It will not cost much to enhance the appearance of the grounds by proper planting, and it is safe to say that every member of the church will approve the expenditure when the results are to be seen.

The Law of Sacrifice

BY HOPE DARING.

We cherish life with infinite care. It is not so much our own existence that we safeguard with every possible precaution, but the lives of those who are dear to us. Nor is life the only immaterial thing that we seek to guard from waste. There are our cherished mental acquisitions, our hard-won accomplishments, even the grace and strength that are ours.

Rabindranath Tagore, that noted Oriental who visited our country not long ago, likened these things to the oil in a lamp. The lamp, he said, was the individual life, and, he continued, "The lamp contains its oil, which it holds securely in its close grasp and guards against the least loss." He called attention to the fact that there is a wide diversity in lamps: some are of wondrous beauty, others of the

HIS VINEYARD AND OURS

REV. ODOARDO JALLA

The Italian Tract Society

Rev. Odoardo Jalla is the honored and efficient secretary and treasurer of the Italian Evangelical Publication Society, also known as the Italian Tract Society, whose headquarters are in Florence, Italy.

This society has been providing evangelical Christian literature for the Italian people for sixty-two years, and the record of last year is full of interest and encouragement.

"The past year, memorable for the prompt help brought to Italy by our faithful allies, both British and French," writes Rev. Mr. Jalla, "has also been remarkable for the increase of Christian fellowship inspired among hundreds of thousands of our Italian soldiers, and due to the reading of almost a million copies of Gospels distributed among them.

"Very encouraging and promising this work has been. Whoever has read our two last annual reports knows how welcome the 250,000 copies of Holy Scriptures, Bible Almanacs, books and tracts have been among the men at the front, in the barracks and in the hospitals. In the year just ended, the Lord has enabled us to send them through the post, to no less than 700 addresses of different soldiers, who had asked for them and were ready to spread them among their comrades. Besides, more than 20 colporters or friends have distributed 30,000 copies, either to soldiers in the trains, or at the exit of the barracks or on the highways.

"A year ago, we spoke of twelve Soldiers' Halls which had been provided with Christian Literature by us. This year the number of the halls which we have helped is now thirty-five and the number of copies thus placed is about 50,000 Bible cards, Gospels, books and tracts. The special Institutes for Blind Soldiers rarely permit copies of Holy Scripture or other evangelical books. We have, however, been able to introduce some copies of St. Mark in Braille type and some tracts copied by the Braille Literature Society in London, in no less than six such institutions, and we hope soon to be able to do more in that line.

"Thanks to Italian and Swiss friends, we are actually undertaking to send to our Prisoners of War in Austria, Germany, Bulgaria and Turkey, some thousands of copies of books, of a healthy and instructive kind, which may help them to pass agreeably the long days of their painful exile."

Here are some extracts from letters of soldiers received by the Italian Tract Society during the last few months:

From a convalescent soldier in Sicily:—"I was a man without faith, and useless, when the hand of God led me to a hospital. All the books sent me there, spoke of the Saviour, who gave His precious blood on the Cross to redeem my sins, and such reading brought me to the Light. I could not express to you all my joy in having known the way of salvation."

An artillery man at the front:—"With great pleasure I have received the New Testaments and the Traveller's Guides. I have distributed them among my comrades, so that they may know the Love of God."

An infantry corporal:—"I have received the Psalms and the book 'Teach Us How to Pray,' which have been a great comfort to me. I seem to be born again. Before reading them, I felt lost and miserable, although every day I prayed to God."

Another:—"The Lord has blessed me. During many evenings my comrades asked me to read and explain the Gospel. Send me a few more copies, please."

The Italian Tract Society works in close co-operation with the American Tract Society of New York. For many years the latter society has sent foreign cash appropriations to the Italian Tract Society. The grand total of the appropriations sent to Italy by the American Tract Society now amounts to $17,580.00.

The Christian literature published by the Italian Tract Society has been used extensively by the American Tract Society for distribution among the Italian immigrants who have come to the United States. Thus these two societies are working together in happy union for the evangelization of the Italian people both in their own native land and in the new home which so many have found in the United States of America.

Jews Are Calling For the Bible

Mr. Mell, of the Pacific Agency, of the American Bible Society, in an article in the Christian Advocate, calls attention to an unusual demand for the Bible by the Jews. "Many of them have been stirred by the military operations near Jerusalem and are interested to learn what the Old Testament prophets said about their native city."

In connection with the above we quote from a British source: "The advance of the British troops into the Holy Land has moved and impressed all lovers of the Bible to an extraordinary degree. The place names of Palestine sound like no others in our ears. Words like the Plain of Mamre, the Valley of Hinnom, the Cave of Machpelah, the Brook Kedron, are full of sacred and homely echoes. We rejoice, not without a strange awe and reverence, to hear that the British soldiers have advanced to Bethlehem and encamped on the Mount of Olives and entered the very streets of Jerusalem. It will be strange, indeed, when these regiments return and settle in their own village homes to find that thousands of young soldiers will know more about Palestine than the parson."

Work of the British and Foreign Bible Society

In the summary of the One Hundred and Fourteenth Report of the British and Foreign Bible Society, presented at the last annual meeting of this society, are stated these very interesting facts: Despite disturbed conditions due to the war, the issues for 1917-18 totaled 9,387,182 volumes, a decrease of only 152,053, as compared with the previous year. Of the year's issues about 1,000,000 volumes were distributed in India; but a still more remarkable fact is that nearly one-third of all the books issued were sold in China. Never before has the society put into Chinese hands in a single year 3,000,000 copies of the Scriptures.

During the last four tragic years of the war the society has sent out 40,000,000 volumes—an output that far exceeds anything ever done in the same space of time. Amid the raging of the nations there has been no pause in the work of translating the oracles of God. During these last twelve months the society has added Scriptures in seven fresh languages to its long list (504) of versions.

In connection with its war circulation the society has provided over 8,000,000 volumes, in seventy-five languages, since the war began. Its depots at Berlin, Vienna and Budapest have never closed their door. At Constantinople, Belgrade, Bucharest, and Rustchuk the colporteurs have not ceased their mission. At Monastir the depository lived for months in his cellar. The society's work in Jerusalem reads like a page of romance. An American resident, since 1915, took charge of the depot, lived in the building and slept behind the counter to protect the stock. When the British entered Jerusalem about 30,000 volumes, in fifty languages, were safe at the depot, and all the English editions were quickly purchased by the British soldiers.

Baptized 155 Hindus Within a Single Day

Baptizing folks until his back ached was the unusual experience of S. W. Clemes, a Methodist missionary at Meerut, India, who writes of a service in which he baptized 155 souls in one day. These people were from all ranks and stations in life, from the sweeper's caste to the leather worker's; mere infants and their mothers whose faces were covered but who were anxious to enter the Kingdom.

The missionary writes of an interesting incident which followed the service. "After giving them a short talk I started across the field. On the way we met a man coming back to the village. He had been one prepared for baptism, but had missed the service. So there we stopped on the canal bank, and stooping down I baptized him in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. I was reminded of Philip and the Ethiopian."

A Spanish Evangelical Church in New York City

Rev. A. B. Carrero, pastor of the Spanish Evangelical Church of New York City, states that in the membership of that church are sons of all the republics of South America, Spain, Cuba, Mexico, Porto Rico and many others from the ends of the earth who speak the Spanish tongue.

"You can imagine," he writes, "what a profound current of power and sympathy is established when all these believers pray for their own peoples. The Church is a great Christian family. We have prospered abundantly this year. Seventy new members were received into the bosom of the Church last year, and our enthusiasm increases. I have had occasion to observe the faith, the simplicity, and the fidelity of the Spanish Christians. They are in truth an inspiration to me. There are in our congregation Asturians, Andalusians, Valencians from Majorca and the Canary Islands."

The Gift of an Indian Prince

A wealthy native prince of Delhi, India, has executed a deed of trust, devoting his entire personal estate to founding an institution for the education of Indian women. The property is said to be valued at about $7,000,000. In view of the greater purchasing power of money in India, this gift will probably accomplish as much as a gift of several times its size in England or America. All liabilities of the estate are cared for and dependent members of the Maharajah's family have been provided for, so the gift is clear. The prince himself was one of the first native chiefs to fight in France, where he has spent two years on the battlefields. He was brought up under English tutors in India and has traveled widely. His wife is heartily in sympathy with the institution to be founded. Girls are to be received from five to eighteen years of age, and there is to be no bar of caste or creed. A site for the college has been given by a native lawyer.

A Glimpse of India

The picture on this page which shows us a native of India, equipped with an ingenious umbrella gives us a quaint glimpse of one side of life in that vast country. The photograph from which this unique picture was reproduced was sent to the American Tract Society by Rev. J. Passmore, secretary of the Madras Branch of the Christian Literature Society for India.

Another glimpse into the moral and spiritual conditions that prevail in the land of India is given by Rev. Alden H. Clark, a missionary of the American Board who has recently returned on furlough from his field of labor in the Marathi Mission. He states that there is every indication of a mass movement towards Christianity in the Marathi field, that only the men and money are needed to bring it to pass. He says that such a movement would be more significant than those in North India (where not less than 200,000 converts await baptism) from the fact that his work lies among the energetic and thrifty farming class rather than among the outcasts as in the north. These farmers are already convinced of the truth of Christianity and might speedily be brought over if they had the proper attention. One native pastor told Mr. Clark he could receive a thousand converts each year, if he had teachers for his villages.

Mr. Clark is impressed by the rapid strides Christianity is making throughout India. He estimated the Christian population at 5,000,000, a growth of 1,500,000 since he went out thirteen years ago. He finds a corresponding development of character and ability in the Indian Christians. In self-expression, in powers of leadership and in the willingness to support their own institutions they are gaining in a way to gratify the supporters at home. He prophesies that India, with her rich intellectual endowments and her mystical qualities, when properly disciplined by western education, will make a noteworthy contribution to the Church Universal.

AN INGENIOUS UMBRELLA

Notes upon the Topics Used
in Christian Endeavor
and Other Young People's Societies.

THE PRAYER MEETING

By
Rev. Henry Lewis
Ph.D.

OCTOBER 6.

All for Christ. IV. Our Money
I Timothy 6:6-10, 17-19.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M., Sept. 30. Gifts to Christ's poor. Prov. 28:17.
T., Oct. 1. The right spirit. 2 Cor. 9:6-11.
W., Oct. 2. Parents first. Mark 7:9-13.
T., Oct. 3. Abraham the tither. Heb. 7:1-8.
F., Oct. 4. Gifts at His feet. Matt. 2:1-12.
S., Oct. 5. Gifts for the gospel. Phil. 4:10-20.

Money is a medium of exchange. It furnishes a standard for material values. But money is more than this. As some one has wisely said: "Money is a symbol. It stands for our time, if we have earned it; and time is life. The price we pay for money is time, effort, life. And life comes from God."

In other words, money may represent our very selves. It is that into which is transmuted our toil, our ability and our genius. Money is the reward of our effort—not only reward, and often indeed not the chief reward. Nevertheless it is the visible result of our labor, and as such, it may be truly said to represent us. And it is for this reason especially that the call comes to us to consecrate our money, as a part of our all, to Christ.

The Power of Money

Many years ago a famous lecturer chose as the topic of one of his lectures "The Almighty Dollar," and in the opening part of that lecture he made the statement that money was the most powerful thing in the world. In proof of that assertion he instanced the wonderful things that could be done by the use of money. He spoke of the magnificent buildings that could be erected by the use of money, of the mighty bridges that could be swung across great rivers, of the marvelous tunnels that could be dug beneath lofty mountains, of the comforts and luxuries which money could procure and of a multitude of other illustrations of the power of money. Then the lecturer suddenly electrified his audience by the statement that money was the weakest thing in the world, and he called attention to the things which money could not do—how it could not buy genuine friendship, how it could not silence the voice of truth, nor purchase health, nor redeem character, nor secure salvation.

So we can look at this subject of money from two points of view. And yet, despite all its impotence, let us remember that the right use of our money is one of the sure tests of the genuineness of our Christian profession.

"Money and the Kingdom"

In his admirable book, "Our Country," the late Dr. Josiah Strong set forth the principles which he felt should guide a Christian, in a chapter which he entitled "Money and the Kingdom." He says:

"When the Scriptures and reason speak of God's ownership in us they use the word in no accommodated sense. It means all that it can mean in a court of law. It means that God has a right to the service of His own. It means that, since our possessions are His property, they should be used in His service—not a fraction of them, but the whole. When the Lord returned from the far country, to reckon with His servants to whom He had entrusted His goods, He demanded not simply a small portion of the increase, but held His servants accountable for both principal and interest—'mine own with usury.' Every dollar that belongs to God must serve Him. And it is not enough that we make a good use of our means. We are under exactly the same obligations to make the best use of our money that we are to make a good use of it; and to make any use of it other than the best is a maladministration of trust"

OCTOBER 13.

Weak Points in Our Society to Be Strengthened

I Chronicles 22:1-10.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M., Oct. 7. Weak in participation. I Cor. 12:1-11.
T., Oct. 8. Weak in prayer. Luke 22:39-46.
W., Oct. 9. Weak in democracy. Jas. 2:1-10.
T., Oct. 10. Weak through worldliness. I John 2:12-17.
F., Oct. 11. Weak through strife. Jas. 4:1-5.
S., Oct. 12. Weak in new work. Jer. 1:4-10.

A chain is no stronger than its weakest link. So in order to make our Young People's Societies thoroughly effective we must look for the weak points and endeavor to strengthen them at just those points.

The pledge is the distinctive feature of every Christian Endeavor Society, and the strength of any society may be determined by the measure of fidelity which is shown in the keeping of that pledge. If there is any weakness in this direction, a prayerful and earnest effort should be made to bring the members to a fresh realization of their obligations, for this is a matter of the most vital importance both to the welfare of the society and the spiritual life of every Endeavorer.

Lack of Attendance

At the present time there is good reason for the absence of many young men from the Endeavor meeting. They have responded to the call of their country, and it is physically impossible for them to be present at the weekly prayer meeting. But there are many young people who are careless in the matter of their attendance and who have no sufficient reason for absenting themselves. This is one of the points where the work in many societies needs strengthening.

Ineffective Participation

There are some young people who never graduate from the "verse readers' class." They never give an original testimony or present an original thought on the topic. Herein is a point of weakness in many societies. In order to have a good meeting there must be variety and originality in the method of participation, and the mere reading of a verse of Scripture is not effective participation, according to the highest Christian Endeavor standards of efficiency.

It takes study, thought and consecration to participate effectively in a Christian Endeavor meeting, but it is worth all the effort that it requires, and a rich blessing will most certainly follow every sincere effort to strengthen the society's work along this line.

Loyalty to the Church

The Christian Endeavor Pledge exalts loyalty to the church. Yet it is just at this point that some of our Young People's Societies fail most lamentably. Loyalty to the church is not manifested when the young people go out from their prayer meeting and ignore the church service that is just about to follow. They are not showing their loyalty to the church when they are absent in large numbers from the regular weekly church prayer meeting. Many societies need strengthening just at this point, and the leaders of these societies can do no better work than to endeavor to influence their fellow-members to show a larger loyalty to the church.

Better Organization

Some societies are weak because they are not properly organized. As has been well said, "A loose pile of stones does not constitute a house. The stones are good material out of which a house may be built or organized. Mere members do not make a strong society. We must organize, drill, encourage, build."

OCTOBER 20.

What Is Christian Citizenship?
Isaiah 62:1-7.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M., Oct. 14. Obedience to law. Rom. 13:1-8.
T., Oct. 15. Obedience to God's law. Isa. 10:1-4.
W., Oct. 16. Hatred of mob rule. Acts 19:23-41.
T., Oct. 17. Sympathy for people. Matt. 23:37-39.
F., Oct. 18. Cleaning up wrongs. Mark 11:15-19.
S., Oct. 19. A city of God. Isa. 2:1-5.

There never was a time in the history of the world when the question of Christian citizenship was as important as it is today. Indeed it may be truly said that the hope of the world today lies in the fact that we have Christian citizens who are determined to see wrongs righted and the principles of righteousness re-established as the law of nations.

Love of Country

Christian citizenship pre-supposes true patriotism. Every Christian citizen must be a lover of his country—if right, to keep her right, and if wrong, to set her right.

Isaiah exalted the idea of patriotism among his own people, and every true prophet of God has ever upheld devotion to one's country as a sacred obligation.

At the present time there is no room in our land for one who is indifferent to his civic obligations. A lukewarm patriot is an unthinkable proposition. Christian citizenship demands our utmost loyalty to our country, and asks us to lay our all upon the altar of our country's welfare even to the giving up of our own lives as the "last full measure of devotion."

Christian citizenship claims the country for God. It belongs to Him and should be ruled in conformity with the principles that He has revealed in His Written Word and in the teachings of His Divine Son.

The City of God

One of the famous treatises written by the great St. Augustine was entitled "The City of God." Though we cannot agree with all that is said in that treatise, the conception which Augustine presented to his readers embodied a high and noble ideal, for it meant the realization on earth of the divine principles set forth by Christ in His life and teaching.

Every Christian citizen should endeavor to make the city in which he dwells a city of God. There are many things that are found in most of our cities which are foreign to Christianity. There are abominable evils that need to be eradicated, and great reforms that need to be inaugurated. But we must not be discouraged by the vastness of the task but must press forward in the effort to cleanse our cities and make them fit to be habitations of the Most High.

Privileges and Duties

Christian citizenship carries with it splendid privileges. It is a precious right to be enrolled among the children of God and to know that we have a part in that City of God which is slowly but surely coming to be a reality. The liberty of the Gospel which we enjoy as Christian citizens is better than the freedom of any city that could be bestowed upon us.

There are also vital and binding duties that rest upon us as Christian citizens. We must preserve the purity of the ballot, the purity of the home and the purity of the individual. We must uphold the observance of the Sabbath, the integrity of the family and the sacredness of the marriage tie. We must fight the evils of divorce, intemperance, gambling and social impurity. We must work for the protection of womanhood, the welfare of childhood and the evangelization of our country.

OCTOBER 27.

The Power of the Cross in Latin America

Luke 15:1-10.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M., Oct. 21. Superstition. 1 Kings 18:25-29.
T., Oct. 22. Perverted ideas. Col. 2:16-23.
W., Oct. 23. Teaching the way. John 14:4-14.
T., Oct. 24. Error and truth. Amos 5:4-6, 21-27.
F., Oct. 25. Personal religion. Heb. 2:1-4.
S., Oct. 26. Returning to God. Hos. 13:1-14.

By Latin America is meant that portion of the American continent inhabited by people of the Latin races or their descendants. The principal languages spoken by these people are Spanish and Portuguese. Geographically, Latin America includes Mexico, Central America, South America and parts of the West Indies.

Several things have contributed to bringing the United States into closer relations with Latin America during recent years. The opening of the Panama Canal, the Pan-American Exposition, the growing commerce between our country and these Latin American States, and the substantial unity of thought and feeling in regard to the great World War have all helped to bring Latin America nearer to us than ever before.

As we have become better acquainted with Latin America we have become more painfully impressed with the spiritual destitution that prevails in that portion of the world. Porto Rico was once described by a Roman Catholic priest as a Catholic country without religion. The same description, unfortunately, would apply equally well to almost all other parts of Latin America.

The white population of Latin America is nominally Roman Catholic, but the essential elements of true religion are almost wholly lacking. The Indian population of Latin America is still living largely in heathenism.

Missionary Effort in Latin America

The Committee on Co-operation in Latin America has done splendid work in endeavoring to coordinate the various lines of missionary service that are being carried on in the South American Republics. This committee represents all the different evangelical agencies that are doing missionary work in Latin America, and it has already done much to unify and strengthen the missionary forces which are endeavoring to redeem Latin America from the darkness of superstition and ignorance.

The Ministry of Christian Literature

The power of the Cross has been exemplified to a remarkable degree by the ministry of the Christian literature that has been published in the Spanish and Portuguese languages.

As many of our readers know, the American Tract Society has been a pioneer in this line of effort, and its list of Spanish publications furnish the main supply for the missionaries who are in Latin America.

As Dr. Judson Swift has well said, "The peoples of Latin America are becoming increasingly approachable, and the hour has arrived when every possible effort must be put forth to make them truly Christian. Without doubt they are beginning to understand the attitude and spirit of North America toward them better than at any time in the past, and without doubt the opportunity is presented for the United States to recover much that they have lost through neglect of our Southern neighbor, and to be of service in establishing and building religious life and character in all the Republics. Nothing is more needed than standard Christian literature for the educated classes who are not accepting the teachings of Christian, for the less educated non-Christians, for the building up of evangelical church members, and for the training of ministers and Christian workers."

OUR YOUNG FOLKS

Glad Morning Light

BY MINNIE LEONA UPTON.

*Glad Morning Light
Is sweet and clear,
And fresh and bright,
And full of cheer;
All things are still
Through hours of night,
But greet the thrill
Of Morning Light.*

*Glad Morning Light,
With magic power,
Makes all things bright
As fairies' bower;
The dew-pearls shine
Like diamonds bright,
So fair, so fine,
'Neath Morning Light!*

*Glad Morning Light
Brings Happy Day,
So fair, so bright,
For work, or play;
And girls and boys
Forget the night,
And hail the joys
Of Morning Light!*

The Badge of Honor

BY MARION L. TENNEY.

NATALIE and Bobbins knew where it was. They had known for several long beautiful summers, and now after a winter of waiting they were on their way back to "Heartsease."

Father had given it that pretty name. He said it made his heart feel happy as soon as he came in sight of the farm. It looked so quiet and peaceful.

Jerry was driving the cows home, just as they turned into the lane, so the carriage containing the Maynard family waited.

"There's Brindle and Ladyfoot!" cried Natalie excitedly. "And there's faithful old Rover, keeping the herd together," said Mrs. Maynard.

"I see Mrs. Price and Sarah Ellen!" cried Bobbins, jumping down from the seat. "I guess they'll say I've grown since last summer." And he clapped his hands in happy anticipation.

The children were brimful of excitement. Hadn't the farm been the theme of many a whispered confab all winter? After being snugly tucked into bed, they would call back and forth from adjoining rooms: "It'll soon be time to go," "Do you remember Mrs. Price's cookies?" and such like remarks. Bobbins generally ended the conversation, as his voice was trailing off into slumberland, with "Won't it be 'licious!" But somehow it wasn't as "licious" that summer as usual, because father wasn't there. Nothing could be quite the same without him.

True, they had his letters from France. But that wasn't as nice as having him.

The day he went away he held them so tight in his arms that they felt like crying out. He told them to take care of mother. And then he had put his hand on Bobbins' head and had said: "Bob, you be father's soldier at home and I'll be yours in France."

Bobbins didn't just see how he could be a soldier at home. He guessed he'd better ask mother about it, which he did that very night at bed-time.

She said father meant for him to be brave like the soldiers; to do hard things, whether he wanted to or not, and to mind mother, just as the soldiers had to mind their captain.

The next morning Bobbins didn't care to play. So while Natalie was arranging her doll family for the day he hurried down to the orchard and lay on his back, under an apple tree.

"Well, I started in all right," he remarked to himself, "for I didn't cry when father went away. And I wanted to, awful bad. That was being brave, I guess. Now I've got to do more soldier work, somehow."

At last, a happy thought came into his mind. He would save his pennies and send them over to father, for the little boys and girls who had no homes. He heard Mrs. Price tell Sarah Ellen about them.

All summer Bobbins was true to his word. Mr. Stubbs, the grocer, had fine lollypops and lemon sticks—just the kind of candy Bobbins liked. But not a cent would he spend on them.

Mother gave him a quarter every week, and when Uncle Bob came he gave him a whole dollar to buy a drum with. Bobbins had wanted a drum more than anything else. So when mother went up to the city one day, she offered to buy it for him. But she was surprised when he remarked that he had changed his mind.

It was so unlike him to refuse candy and toys that Mrs. Maynard wondered if he could be well. He looked the pic-

"I can't be a soldier any more," Bobbins answered tearfully. "It's too hard work. I wanted the drum and the balloon awful bad, and I had to give 'em up and be a soldier."

Mrs. Maynard gathered her small son into her arms, and the story was soon poured into her waiting ears.

"How proud father will be of you, Bobbins," she said when it was finished after many tearful gulps. "You have proved yourself to be a real little soldier." Then she added, "I've just received a letter from father, and he has been given a little cross because of a brave deed that he did. I think his son ought to wear a badge because of his bravery, too. Suppose I pin a red, white and blue bow over your heart, Bobbins, and I'll write father that you are his soldier boy at home."

"And will you send the money for the children?" inquired Bobbins anxiously.

Mrs. Maynard gladly consented, and it was a very happy Bobbins who sat on his mother's lap that evening while she counted out four dollars and twenty-five cents, his summer's savings.

"Oh, Bobbins, let me take your pic-into the sunlight before any one dreamed they had started.

Harold spied them first.

"My radishes are up, up, up," he shouted happily. "They've beat papa's and everybody else's."

After that they grew by leaps and bounds. Soon their green stems changed to fat red bodies that showed above the ground. The small gardener watched them with anxious care, pulling the weeds and watering them with his sprinkler when the rain forgot to visit them.

Then one day all the factory whistles in town began to blow. The bells took it up and pealed out the joyous news, "The troops are passing through, through, through."

Harold's mother dropped her knitting, packed a basket of goodies and whirled the motor car out into the street.

"Want to go down to the station to see the soldiers, son?" she asked.

Did he? He had been waiting and hoping for this very thing.

"Wait a minute," he called back, "I am going to give the soldiers some of my radishes."

He gathered two great big handfuls of the crisp globes that were red as the stripes of the flag and as white at their tips as its gleaming stars, washed them well, wrote his name and address on a scrap of paper and fastened it to the general of all the radishes, then away he sped with mother.

The train shed was full of people who were talking to the soldiers and giving them fruit and magazines. Harold went up and down the long line of cars. At last he paused under an open window.

"Wouldn't you like some radishes, sir?" he asked the soldier who leaned out of the window. "They grew in my war garden."

"Indeed I would," the soldier answered. "We will have them for mess. Thank you, little Home Guard."

The radishes went in through the window, the car rolled away to a distant camp and Harold went back to his garden, very happy to think he had given a treat to his country's brave defenders.

Then one day there came a letter on camp stationery from Corporal Harry Brown.

"I am writing for the boys in the car who received your radishes," said the soldier. "They were a great treat and were the first we have had. We hope soon to go across, but we shall not forget the little Home Guard. The very best of success to you and your war garden."

It was wonderful how much easier that letter made the weeding and the hoeing seem, for it made Harold feel as though he and Uncle Sam were real partners in helping to feed the army.

The Blind Girl's Gift

A blind girl came to her pastor and gave him a dollar for missions. Astonished at the large sum, the minister said to her: "You are a poor blind girl. Is it possible that you can spare so much as this for missions?"

"True," she said, "I am blind, but not so poor as you think; and I can prove that I can spare this money better than those that see."

The minister wanted to hear it proved. "I am a basket maker," answered the girl, "and as I am blind, I can make my baskets just as easily in the dark as with the light. Other girls have, during last winter spent more than a dollar for light. I have no such expense, and so have brought this money for the poor heathen and the missionaries."

The Face a Reflector

The face is a reflector, reflecting quite perfectly what is in the heart. If there is love, kindness, and purity, the face will show these. In like manner hatred and impurity reveal themselves.

TAKING BOBBINS' PICTURE

ture of health, however; so, like a wise mother, she decided to bide her time.

One day, toward the close of the season, the story came out.

A traveling peddler stopped at the farm with gorgeous red and blue balloons. Natalie and Bobbins danced with delight. Suddenly Bobbins' face became sober.

"I don't want any," he said quickly.

"Why, you do, too, Bobbins," said Natalie; "you love balloons same as I do."

But no amount of persuasion could change Bobbins' mind.

Mrs. Maynard was in the city that day, so Sarah Ellen and the children were having a happy time together. Toward evening Bobbins could not be found. Sarah Ellen called and called, but no Bobbins answered.

Mrs. Maynard, just arriving, was told the news, and she started at once in search of him. Through the house she went, into the barn, over the meadow, across the brook, but no Bobbins was to be seen. Just as she was retracing her steps, she caught sight of a little sandal on the ground in the meadow. Glancing a little further she saw Bobbins lying fast asleep in the long grass. His face was covered with tear stains, which his grimy little hands had tried to brush away.

"What's the matter with my little soldier?" said mother tenderly.

ture with the bow on!" cried Natalie excitedly, the next morning.

"If you'll have yours taken with me," replied Bobbins generously.

"Oh, let me take you and my doll Mary Elizabeth instead!" said Natalie. "Father hasn't seen her."

So Bobbins' picture, with Mary Elizabeth in his arms, traveled across the water to delight the heart of a captain in an army camp in France, whose eyes became suspiciously moist when he read of the sacrifice made by his little son back in the homeland.

A True Story of a War Garden

BY PEARL H. CAMPBELL.

They were only plump little brown seeds when Harold first held them in his moist hand. Yet each hid within its heart a happy secret, and when the little boy planted them in long, straight rows in his war garden, they began at once to grow.

There were other things in that garden, sturdy beans, crinkly lettuce, fat, green peas, and over in a corner by itself where it could stretch and grow in lazy content, a squash vine. Yet none of these grew like the radishes.

Perhaps the sun shone warmer on their bed; perhaps the dew that fell upon them was sweeter and the raindrops clearer. At any rate, they burst their brown rinds and pushed their wee green leaves

Our Fireside

Differing Gifts

By Cora S. Day

MISS MARTHA and Miss Amy Colman lived together in the old homestead. Years ago the village had spread out until it quite surrounded the place; indeed, had encroached upon the farm of their grandfather's day, until there remained now only the ancient orchard and a bit of kitchen garden. These with the house had been the chosen "share" of the two when the estate was settled up. Now, both past middle age, they lived serenely content in the childhood home they had never left.

Miss Amy was a frail little thing, a semi-invalid all her life. Her small, thin hands shook a little always, as if in sympathy with the pathetic quaver in her sweet voice. Miss Martha, broad-shouldered and a head taller, was the younger by ten years; brisk and capable, yet with a curious gentleness about her, too—learned from life-long carefulness of "Amy's nerves." She was house-keeper for both, and mothered the older and weaker one with exquisite faithfulness and love.

Into this peaceful, orderly household there came one morning a bustling, well-meaning neighbor with a request that created almost as much consternation as a bomb would have done.

"Don't you want to take a couple of orphans for a week? I promised I'd ask you. I am to ask everybody on this street, as far as Main Street. Mrs. Titus has the other end to canvass. I've found places for six—eh, hadn't you heard about it? Then I'd better start at the beginning," nothing loth to tell the tale anew.

"The Penn Orphanage, in town, had a country place where they sent the children every summer for a few weeks, turn about. It was too small for them all to go at once, but a good bit better than no outing at all. But it burned down last winter; and this summer they are getting good reliable people to take the children, two at a time, for company for each other, on a week's visit. It's the country week idea, you know, only these are orphans instead of slum children. I'd a sight rather have these clean, orderly, healthy ones. I guess you would, too. They'll do you a world of good—liven you up, here where you're always so quiet and lonesome." She paused for breath and an answer.

Martha glanced at Amy, then at the well-meaning neighbor, and shook her head.

"We would like to help them, of course. But I'm afraid we can't have any here. Amy is used to having it quiet here. She couldn't stand the noise and excitement of having two children frolicking about. I'm sorry, but I guess we can't undertake it." Her tone was pleasant but held a note of finality that told the woman the matter was settled.

She as well as Martha had seen the startled look in Amy's eyes at her proposal. She saw now the unmistakable relief that took its place as Martha calmly decided the matter for them both. She rose somewhat stiffly, her assured tone instantly chilled.

"Well, I must be going, and finish this street. I'm sorry you don't feel able to help these deserving children. There's a blessing for those who are good to the widow and the fatherless, you know," she said tactlessly, and took her departure rather abruptly. Martha turned to her sister with a smile that ignored the hurt tears in Amy's eyes.

"Hannah Butler never did have as much sense as zeal," she said placidly. "If she thinks Doctor Harris would allow us to have two lively youngsters in this house for a week, upsetting your rest and nerves, she's very much mistaken. We wouldn't dare, if we wanted to ever so much—which we don't."

"It seems as if we ought to do something for them, if we could," Amy said in troubled tones. "Surely it is the Lord's work to care for and make happy these little ones."

"Not to your own harm," Martha contended firmly though still in her trained-to-be-serene tones. "Besides, Amy, no child would be real happy here with us. It—or they—would be like fish out of water. Our quiet, orderly ways would make them as miserable as their lively ways would make us." Then, out of her own sincere echoing of the desire to help—out of the regret in Amy's eyes, there came to her an idea. She laid her strong, capable hand upon Amy's thin one.

"I know something that we can do for the orphans," she said. She smiled until the still girlish dimple in her cheek showed plainer than ever. "Something possible for us, that will last longer than a week's visit. Something for the whole orphanage, instead of just a couple," she ended triumphantly.

Amy's eyes were as eager as a child's. It must be something wonderful to meet all those conditions. She could not imagine what it was. But if Martha was going to do it, it was nice. She was all attention as Martha unfolded her plan.

"You know our old orchard, and how the fruit is mostly so small and gnarly that it is unmarketable?" Martha began. Amy nodded. "The trees should be trimmed and sprayed. But is scarcely seems worth while, we have more than enough."

"Yes—and can't give the surplus away because most everybody has better fruit of their own," added Martha. "But, Amy, those little knotty apples are all delicious kinds—Astrachan and Transparent and Blush—loads of them all summer."

"Yes," agreed Amy. "But—"

"Wait," interrupted Martha. "There's a regular tangle of blackberry vines along the orchard fence. Our grape arbor is loaded. And down cellar are dozens of jars and jelly glasses that we no longer use or need. Mother filled them all years ago, every summer, when we were small. Children love sweets—and nowadays they've discovered that the craving is right and natural and ought to be gratified. So, as we can't turn our house into an orphanage, we'll do what we can for all those little sweet-tooth cravings for next winter when their country weeks are all over."

"You mean we can—" Amy began eagerly.

"Fill every extra jelly glass and fruit jar in the house with jelly and jam and marmalade, and send to the orphanage," Martha finished for her. "They'll never know there was a gnarly apple in the lot when they eat their sweet spreads. They make just as good jelly as big fair ones. Oh, we'll help make life sweeter for the orphans if we can't do it just in Hannah Butler's way," laughed Martha.

"It will be lovely to help," Amy agreed. "I can do a lot—pare and cut up apples, pick over grapes and berries, and label the jars and glasses," with eager readiness to give of her frail strength to the uttermost.

"Of course you can," wise Martha agreed heartily. "It won't hurt you a mite, for we'll do a little at a time, when the fruit is ready. We have all the rest of the summer."

"Yes," said Amy. "But the Astrachans are just at their best now. Let's do some today," and Martha promptly gathered up her sunbonnet and basket and started for the orchard.

So the good work started. Before the first orphan arrived in the village, a row of glasses filled with beautiful pink apple "jell," neatly labeled in Miss Amy's fine, shaky script, adorned a shelf in the Coleman pantry.

In the midst of the making of that first "batch," two neighbors dropped in, and were unceremoniously entertained in the kitchen. "This jell has just ten minutes more to boil before it's ready for the sugar," Martha explained. "When it's done, there's another half basket of apples to be cut up and put on to cook, so's they can drain overnight."

"That's all right—go ahead," said one of the callers. "And if Amy'll get us a couple of knives, we'll help her get those apples ready. But what on earth are you doing with so much jelly? You can't eat—"

Then Martha laughed and explained. When she ended, the callers turned to each other with one impulse.

"I've a lot more jars than I need—and a sight more tomatoes in my garden than I can use," began one.

"I've just been counting up the jars of cherries and strawberries that I put up this spring, to save them from wasting," said the other. "I can spare half of them, easily."

Martha beamed upon them and Amy. "Those orphans are going to get a lot of good out of our not taking any to visit us," she declared. "It strikes me that there are lots of folks in this place that couldn't take the children—but can do for them in other good ways. Now, if we've given you the notion of how you can help, suppose you pass it along. It needn't always be just eatables. Clothes or mittens and caps, or bed clothes—I wouldn't wonder if old Grandma Brown wouldn't love to piece them a quilt or two. Let's work it up for all it's worth, now we're started."

"Indeed we will," agreed the callers, and one added, "I'll be glad to. I just couldn't take any children, with my own and my poor old helpless father,—but I felt mean about it after Hannah Butler was there asking me."

"Never mind Hannah," smiled Martha. "She's doing her part and we'll do ours, even if it's a bit different. You know the Good Book says there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit. That blessed twelfth chapter of First Corinthians is certainly a comfort—after Hannah." Whereupon the callers went straight home, read the comforting chapter and set to work; convinced now beyond doubt that whether it be having the children to visit a week, or the work upon which they were entering, it would have the approval and blessing of Him who inspired the words: "But all these worketh that one and the selfsame spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will." Would not He look kindly upon the efforts of these faithful servants, as He had upon those of old upon whom had fallen varying gifts: "Gifts of healing, of prophecy, of miracles, of teaching and tongues," and all the rest? To these had been given the homely household gifts. They laid them now upon the altar of charity, confident of their acceptance.

Nor did they forget to enlist others. Many a busy housewife that summer cheerfully sacrificed a part of her small leisure to prepare something to send to the orphans. Nor did it stop with them, nor the surplus of things at hand. Jellies and jams and all such goodies take sugar and spices and such things to make them. So the young folks, even the children, took it up. They gave a generous part of the money that usually went for candy and ice cream and "movies." The good leaven spread until it leavened the whole lump of former indifference to those and other worthy charities. Martha and Amy saw it all with sincere joy.

"Martha," said Amy one day, her soft voice a bit more quavery than usual with the thrill of her thought, "it is wonderful, what the dear people of this village are doing for others—not only the orphans, but the church missions, the destitute abroad and at home, the needy far and near. It reminds me of the story of the loaves and fishes. A few people gave of their hospitality; we gave of our bit of fruit—just what was at hand; and the Master has blessed and increased it all and made it sufficient for many."

Martha nodded and smiled. "Hannah Butler is getting up a sub-

Lend
the way they Fight

Buy Bonds to your UTMOST

scription now to help rebuild the orphans' summer home on a larger scale, so they can all be there throughout the summer. She says she is sure everybody will be glad to give; because they all seem so interested ever since she brought some of the poor children out here," she laughed.

"I'm sure we will all do as much as we can," Amy smiled back, "in spite of our differing gifts."

BOOKS FOR
Sunday School Libraries
Catalogue sent on request.
AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY
Park Ave. and 40th St., New York

FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT

The AMERICAN MESSENGER is found very acceptable by the Home Departments of many Sabbath Schools. What better publication could be secured for home reading at the price at which this paper is offered? When ordered in clubs of five or more, the price is only 30 cents a year. The papers may be mailed to individual names, or they may be sent in one package to be distributed by the Sabbath School Visitor—whichever way is preferred. We trust that the Good Literature Committees in all Churches, Sabbath Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies will consider the AMERICAN MESSENGER in ordering their supplies.

AMERICAN MESSENGER
Park Ave. and 40th St. New York

DON'T decide on the new hymn-book for your Church or Sunday School until you have seen

HALLOWED HYMNS
NEW AND OLD

Edited by IRA ALLAN SANKEY
Son of the famous Singing-Evangelist
Ira D. Sankey
OVER 550,000
COPIES ALREADY SOLD

Responsive Scripture Readings
No Trashy Words No Jingly Music

Price $25.00 per 100 not prepaid
35 cents per copy by mail

Examine a copy and prove its value in your work. (Returnable if desired.)

The Biglow & Main Co., New York
Chicago

This FREE Shoe Book

is replete with photographs and descriptions of EZ-WEAR Shoes for Men, Women and Children. EZ-WEAR Shoes are sent post-paid, guaranteed to combine comfort, style and quality, to fit perfectly or money back. Amazingly low prices. Send for copy to-day.

The F.N. Simon Shoe Co., 1583 Broadway, Brooklyn, N.Y.

"Just Call Up Father"

BY HARRIET HUNTING PIERSON

It was the rush hour in the big city terminal. Scores of people thronged the general waiting-room; other scores were continually coming and going, each one absorbed in his own errands, intent on his own goal.

Seated for a long wait between trains, I watched this stream of humanity surging to and fro. Presently my attention was drawn to a man who had taken a seat directly opposite me, a middle-aged man with a plain, kindly face. His keen gray eyes were fixed intently upon something or somebody at my right, and involuntarily I turned to see what it was that attracted and held his attention.

Near me, alone at the end of the seat, a girl of perhaps twelve years sat weeping silently. Others cast glances at her, careless, curious or sympathetic, and while I sat wishing I might do something for her, the man opposite me rose, crossed over and quietly took a seat beside her. A moment later he turned and spoke to her gently.

"Has something gone wrong? Can't I help you?"

The girl looked up shyly through her tears. The benevolent face must have won her confidence, for after a moment she said in a choking voice:

"I don't—know what—to do."

"Perhaps if you tell me about it, I can help you," the man suggested again.

The steady voice seemed to calm the girl's distress, for she lifted her tear-stained face again to his and answered readily:

"I thought Mr. Waring was going to meet me here, but he hasn't come. He's father's secretary. Father promised to take me to the museum this afternoon. He has never let me come into the city alone before, but he said he'd send Mr. Waring to meet me and take me up to the office, and if he wasn't here, I was to sit right by the door till he came. I didn't think father would forget, but I've waited a whole hour, and nobody has come. And I've lost my return ticket, and I've only got ten cents, so I can't go back home, and I don't know what to do."

Tears had rushed again to her eyes, and she brushed them away furtively with a very wet handkerchief.

"Well, well; you are in trouble, that's a fact," the man said sympathetically, "but I think we can find a way out. Do you know your father's address, or his telephone number? If you do I could—"

"O yes!" she cried, and her face lighted as if the sun had suddenly flashed upon it. "Why, yes! If you'll only just call up father!" Every word seemed to be weighted with a feeling of deep relief. "I remember now he told me to do that if anything went wrong. The number is Kensington 4728. It's Avery and Company. Father is Mr. Avery."

The man went to a telephone booth and, after a brief space of time, returned with a message.

"Your father will be here in twenty minutes. He says he started Waring off over an hour ago, and he's been wondering why you didn't come. He's been sitting by the telephone, ready to answer on the instant if you should call."

"Oh, thank you!" the girl cried joyously, and her eyes were misty with happy tears. "I don't know what made me forget."

"I'll stay with you until some one comes," the man promised. And stay he did, although I suspected that he missed his train by so doing.

Scarcely twenty minutes had passed when a big man with a bluff, hearty manner came striding toward them. The girl sprang forward with a welcoming cry:

"Oh, father, I'm so glad you've come!"

"Well, little girl," he said as he stood looking down upon her, his arm about her shoulders, "you did have hard luck, didn't you? Too bad! I sent Waring down to meet you but they say there's a block in the subway, so I suppose that's why he hasn't got here. I took the elevated. Is this the gentleman that helped you out? Let me thank you, sir." He held out his hand to the stranger. "Sorry to have put you to so much trouble. If this daughter of mine had only kept her head and thought about telephoning to me in the first place she would have saved herself a good deal of anxiety. You'll remember next time, won't you, little girl?"

My train was called and I hurried away, but this little incident left its indelible impression on my mind, and the girl's words have never ceased to ring in my memory: "If you'll only just call up father!"

Trouble comes to us—our money is lost, our friends have failed us; we are alone in despair. We sit and weep, wondering if God has forgotten us. Ah, never! It is we who have forgotten. He has told us to call upon Him when we need help. He knows our danger, even better than we know it ourselves, and all the time He is thinking of us, waiting for our call, ready at the first word to come to our relief. There is no occasion for doubt, for fear, for worry. One moment will set everything right. In every time of trouble let us just call upon our Heavenly Father.

A Big Brother

BY MARY S. STOVER

The right sort of a big brother is a wonderful help to a boy. Fathers, mothers and other people may have the best of intentions, but it is natural to expect a fuller understanding and more practical advice from somebody who has been over the same way himself—and not too long ago. Because older brothers are such a help to growing boys, some folks have begun to draw sorry pictures of what things will be like at home when most of our best young men are in the training camps or across the sea as soldier boys and Red Cross workers and "Y" men.

Not everybody that is rejected or excused by the draft boards is a second-rater by any means, but there are too many of them who are pretty poor third and fourth raters. So it is true that having so many of the best older fellows away cannot but leave a bigger proportion of those that are not first class.

In other words, our home towns are something like a bin of apples in January. If you take out a big basketful of the choicest fruit it can't help leaving a bigger proportion of rotten ones than there was before; and everybody that knows anything about rotten apples understands what a danger they are to the sound fruit around them.

But people aren't exactly like apples. Every clean, healthy-minded Christian boy has within him a power that no apple has; he can both resist the influence of evil upon himself and he can help other boys to fight the good fight to a triumphant finish.

And those two things are among the foremost duties now of every Christian youth.

You know how much you have looked up to your own soldier brother or cousin; but did you ever think that he may have served as a model for several other boys whose own families do not offer them much that's worth patterning after?

Perhaps you know who these boys are and perhaps you don't. But be sure that there's somebody not far away who hasn't the thought of a manly big brother "somewhere in France" to help stiffen his backbone at the weak places.

Will you meet the challenge of these times by being a wise, steady sort of big brother to yourself and to all the neighbor boys? You can, if only you will not try to do it all by yourself.

General Foch would never have had the strength nor the faith to keep pegging away all these months if he had had nothing to depend upon but the men in his front line trenches. Nothing more than a brief skirmish can be fought without reserves. It is the army's reserve power that turns the tide of victory.

Don't forget that it is God who commands your reserves, and that there are plenty of them. Never hesitate to call up the reserves when needed.

Idols as Kindling Wood

One could hardly imagine a more revolutionary proceeding in the life of a home than to chop up the household gods and build fires with them. Yet this is what happened in many places in heathen lands to-day under the influence of Christian teaching. Some time ago a citizen of a town in Central China told his neighbors that it was absurd to worship the idols in the Buddhist temple. After a number of others were convinced that he was right, they took community action and transformed the temple into a workshop and the idols into stove wood. And an American missionary had part in the feast in which the food was cooked over a fire of burning idols.

Character and Cruelty

The real character of a man shines out even more clearly in the little things of life than in the great crises of his career. And it is manifest not alone in his relation to his fellowmen but also in his treatment of the dumb creation. Some one has said: "Doubt the Christianity of a man who kicks a dog, who lets a cat go unfed, who keeps chickens in the cold, neglects to blanket a horse or even tortures a rat in a poorly constructed trap." Even farther went another great writer in his assertion: "He who needlessly tramples upon a worm is no gentleman!" Long ago the wise man declared: "A righteous man regardeth the life of his beast, but the tender mercies of the wicked are cruel."

What 15c will bring You from the Nation's Capital

The little matter of 15c in stamps or coin will bring you the Pathfinder 13 weeks on trial. The Pathfinder is an illustrated weekly, published at the Nation's center, for the Nation; a paper that prints all the news of the world and tells the truth and only the truth; now in its 26th year. This paper fits the bill without emptying the purse; costs but $1 a year. If you want to keep posted on what is going on in the world, at the least expense of time or money, this is your means. If you want a paper in your home which is sincere, reliable, entertaining, wholesome, the Pathfinder is yours. If you would appreciate a paper which puts everything clearly, fairly, briefly—here it is. Send 15c to show that you might like such a paper, and we will send the Pathfinder on probation 13 weeks. The 15c does not repay us, but we are glad to invest in new friends. The Pathfinder, Box 81, Washington, D. C.

"The Leading FIRE INSURANCE Co. of America"

Incorporated 1819.

Charter Perpetual

Cash Capital,	$5,000,000.00
Cash Assets,	29,852,185.82
Total Liabilities,	16,290,218.13
Net Surplus,	8,561,967.69
Surplus for Policy-Holders	13,561,987.69
Losses Paid in 99 Years,	165,896,007.97

NOTE—The Security Valuations on which this Statement is based are those fixed by the Insurance Commissioners.

WM. B. CLARK, President

Vice-Presidents.

HENRY E. REES, A. N. WILLIAMS

E. J. SLOAN, Secretary.

Assistant Secretaries

E. S. ALLEN GUY E. BEARDSLEY RALPH B. IVES

W. F. WHITTELEY, Marine Vice-President

R. E. STRONACH, Marine Secretary

- WESTERN BRANCH { THOS. E. GALLAGHER, General Agent
L. O. KOHTZ, Ass't General Agent
175 W. Jackson Blvd., Chicago, Ills. { L. O. KOHTZ, Marine General Agent
RALPH B. IVES, Assistant Secretary
- PACIFIC BRANCH, { W. H. BREEDING, General Agent.
301 California Street, San Francisco, Cal. { GEO. E. TOWNSEND, Ass't Gen'l Agent (Fire)
H. DURBROW, Ass't Gen'l Agent (Marine)
- MARINE DEPARTMENT { CHICAGO, Ills. 175 W. Jackson Blvd.
BOSTON, 70 Kilby Street
PHILADELPHIA, 226 Walnut Street
SAN FRANCISCO, 325 California Street

THE TREASURY

SPECIAL NOTICE

OWING to occasional losses of letters, containing money, we would request friends and donors of the American Tract Society to remit by check or Post Office Money Order, which latter can always be duplicated in case of loss.

Receipts of the American Tract Society During August, 1918

Total Donations (including $638.78 for Special Objects), $2,014.62.

ARKANSAS, 25c.
Mrs. Thomason, 25c.

CALIFORNIA, $19.
Mr. Touzeau, $1; Mr. Johnson, $1; Santa Cruz, Church Collection, $10; Mr. Williams, $2; Mr. Gillis, $5.

COLORADO, $1.
Mr. Graham, for Lit. for S. and S., $1.

CONNECTICUT, $59.
Miss Ayrcrigg, $10; Mrs. Fowler, $2; Mr. Woods, $15; Mrs. Scudder, for Pat. Lib., $5; Mr. Hart, $25; Mr. Merriam, $1; "A Friend," $1.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, $2.
Mr. Browne, $2.

FLORIDA, $1.
Mrs. Weaver, $1.

GEORGIA, $3.
Mr. Floding, for Lit. for S. and S., $3.

ILLINOIS, $50.95.
Miss Barber, $1; Miss Deuel, $5; Mr. Berends, 30c.; "M. A. H.," $25; Rev. Mr. Hochstetler, $14.65; Mr. Shap, $5.

INDIANA, $37.
Miss Tower, to constitute herself a Life-Member, $30; Mrs. Atkins, $5; Mr. Bowser, $2.

IOWA, $252.43.
Mr. Laurence, $2; Mrs. Goshen, $2; Mrs. De Nise, $1; Miss Baird and others, $1.50; Mrs. Mathews, for Lit. for S. and S., $1; Mr. Meier, $5; Waukon, Church Offering, $36.45; Sunday School Collection, $2.62; Waukon, Church Collection, $40; Church Offering, $50; Germania, Church Collection, $20.86.

The following additional amounts is to constitute Rev. Mr. Weeldryer a Life Director: Mr. Hesse, $2; Mr. Sanderman, $3; Mr. Herman, $2; Mr. Nolting, $5; Mr. Ludeking, $1; Mr. Ludeking, $1; Mrs. Ludeking, $1; Mr. Saak, $2; Mr. Saak, $2; Mr. Meier, $5; Mr. Hager, $5; Mr. Osterholz, $2; Mr. Osterholz, $1; Mr. Kruger, $1; Mr. Brandt, $2; Mr. Brauerkamper, $2; Mr. Goke, $1; Mrs. Sanderman, $5; Mr. Ludeking, $1; Mr. Flage, $5; Mr. Winke, $2; Mr. Meier, $2; Mr. Brauerkamper, $5; Mr. Switker, $2.50; Mr. Steffen, $2.50; Mr. Kruger, $1; Mr. Helming, $1; Mr. Flage, $2; Mr. Herman, $1; Mr. Helming, $3; Mr. Switker, $5; Mr. Winke, $5; Mr. Hager, $2; Mr. Ludeking, $2; Mr. Stork, $1; Mr. Meier, $2; Mr. Schroeder, $2; total, $90.

KANSAS, $11.60.
Sister Van Der Smissen, $1.30; Mr. Dieck, $2.30; Mr. Dyck, $3; Mr. Angell, $5.

KENTUCKY, $24.95.
Miss Anderson, $1; Mr. Hunt, $1; The Misses Kobs, $2; Mrs. Graves, for Lit. for S. and S., $10; Miss Pfaff, $0.95; Mr. Hardy (incl. $5 for Lit. for S. and S.), $10.

MAINE, $44.
Mr. Bradeen, $1; Mr. Breneman, $5; Miss Perkins, for Lit. for S. and S., $2; Miss Nason, $5; Mr. Winslow, $5; Mr. Evans, $1; The Misses Lisby, for Pat. Lib., $25.

MARYLAND, $1.
Mrs. Ruckdoeschel, $1.

MASSACHUSETTS, $431.
Mr. Murray, to constitute his son, Archibald Murray, a Life-Member, $30; Miss Spring, for Lit. for S. and S., $100; Miss Clark, for Lit. for S. and S., $2; Dr. Hastings, $10; Mrs. Nichols, for Pat. Lib., $5; Mr. Austin, for Lit. for S. and S., $1; Mrs. Whittemore, for Pat. Lib., $5; Mr. Chadwick, $2; Miss Harrington, $1; Mr. Sawtell, $5; Mr. Diman, $2; Sampson & Murdock, $8; Mr. Farley, $5; Mrs. Gould, for Lit. for S. and S., $3; Greenough & Company, $13; Mr. Greenwood, for Pat. Lib., $15; Mr. Hall, $1; Rev. Mr. Carter, for Pat. Lib., $15; Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland, for Pat. Lib., $2; Miss Crane, $25; Mrs. Crane, $15; Miss Fales, $2; Miss Cummings, for Lit. for S. and S., $1; Mr. Leonard, for Lit. for S. and S., $1; Miss Fletcher, $5; Mr. Fletcher, $10; Miss Clapp, $1; Mr. Judd, for Lit. for S. and S., $10; Mrs. Hathaway, for Lit. for S. and S., $10; Mr. McCully, $5; Mr. Livermore, for Lit. for S. and S., $5; Mrs. Little, $2; Miss Rand, for Pat. Lib., $2; Mrs. Foucar, for Soldiers' Text Books, $30; Dr. Miles, $2; Miss Sedgwick, for Pat. Lib., $5; Miss Fitch, $1; Miss Marsh, $1; "A Friend," $2; Mrs. Pearson, for Pat. Lib., $1; Mr. Davis, for Pat. Lib., $15; Mrs. Deane, $1; Miss Sinclair, $2; Miss Hyde, $2; Miss Pierce, $1; Mrs. Rockwood, $5; Mrs. Shepleigh, for Pat. Lib., $15; Mrs. Look, $15; Mr. Perry, for Lit. for S. and S., $1; Mrs. Thurston, for Lit. for S. and S., $15.

MICHIGAN, $10.
Bethany, Church Collection, $10.

MINNESOTA, $2.
Rev. Mr. Dungan, for Lit. for S. and S., $2.

MISSOURI, $15.50.
Mr. Juffers, $10; Mr. Ely, $0.50. Miss Switzer, $5.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, $53.20.
Miss Cummings, for Lit. for S. and S., $5; Miss Marden, for Pat. Lib., $4; Mr. Morgan, $5; Mr. Buzzell, for Pat. Lib., $5; Mrs. Wilson, $30; "A Friend," $1; Miss Rowell, $1.20; Mrs. Bartlett, $2.

NEW JERSEY, $100.
Mr. Hieble, $10; Miss Demorest, $1; Mrs. Douglas, $10; Mrs. Mason, $5; Mrs. Simms, $3;

Caldwell, Church Collection, $10; Mr. Wyckoff, $5; Miss Handel, $3; Mrs. Morris, $3; Miss Walker, for Lit. for S. and S., $1; Roseville, Church Collection, $20; Miss Pennwell, $1; Mrs. Parry, $10; Salem, Church Offering, $15; Miss Edwards, $3.

NEW YORK, $152.69.
Dr. Shearer, King Testament Fund, $18; Miss Granbery, $1; Miss Granbery, $1; Miss Farr, $1; Mr. Brewogel, $1; Mr. Curtis, $3; Mrs. Meeker, $5; Mr. Bogue, $1; Mrs. Rettberg, $1.30; Miss Sabine, $5; Mrs. Sherman, $10; Mr. and Mrs. Jones, $10; Miss Stevenson, $0.25; Jamaica, Church Collection, $26.50; Mrs. Hoyt, $1; Mrs. Harris, $5; Mr. Blackman, $1; Mr. Denker, $5; Mrs. Meigs, $5; Miss Hitchcock, $1; Mr. Wood, $15; Mr. Coon, $5; Miss Strong, $20; Mr. Burnett, for Lit. for S. and S., $1; Mr. Bahret, $1; Mrs. Fowler, for Lit. for S. and S., $2; Walkill, Church Offering, $6.64.

OHIO, $86.50.
Mr. Amstutz, $1; Mr. Helfenstein, $1; Mr. Hale, $3; Mrs. Grover, for Lit. for S. and S., $5; Mrs. Grant, $1; Mr. Lust, $5; Mr. Fullerton, $5; Miss Fowler, $1; Miss Banks, $0.50; Mrs. Brine, $5; Mr. Albaugh, $1; Mrs. Hohl, $3; Mr. Corlett, $5; Cincinnati, Church Offering, $10; Mr. Risk, $3; Mr. Rogers, $5; Cincinnati, Church Collection $32.

OKLAHOMA, $1.50.
Mr. Hill, $1.50.

OREGON, $1.40.
Mr. Leuthold, $1; Mrs. Spatz, $0.40.

PENNSYLVANIA, $525.65.
Mr. Hall, $2; Mr. and Mrs. Aldred, $2; Mr. Archbald, $5; Rev. Mr. Prugh, $3; Mr. Walter, $2; Mr. Houston, $10; Miss Strong, $5; Rev. Mr. Clark, $3; Mr. Pattison, $10; Mr. Harbison, $250; Mr. Emerson, $10; Philadelphia Quartz Co., $25; Miss Hoerr, $2; Miss Soutter, $3; Chillisquoque, Church Collection, $1; Mooresburg, Church Offering, $1; Miss Smith, $1; Mr. Emerson, $10; Mr. Eckbert, $25; Mr. Godfrey, $5; Mr. Bickel, $10; Mr. Bright, $2; Miss Pearson, $10; Mrs. Culver, $10; Mr. Decker, $10; Mr. Denison, $5; Mr. Donnan, $10; Mrs. Houston, for Lit. for S. and S., $5; Mr. Reed, for Lit. for S. and S., $5; Mr. Smith, $3; Mr. Savage, $75; "In His Name," $5; Miss Knieps, $0.65.

RHODE ISLAND, $16.
Mr. Claffin, $10; Mr. Sullivan, $1; Mr. Wood, for Lit. for S. and S., $5.

SOUTH CAROLINA, $2.50.
Dr. Hay, for Lit. for S. and S., $2.50.

SOUTH DAKOTA, $4.50.
Kimball, Church Collection, $4.50.

VERMONT, $6.
Mrs. Worcester, for Pat. Lib., $3; Miss Worcester, for Pat. Lib., $2; Miss Atwood, $1.

VIRGINIA, $15.
Col. Dempsey, $5; Mr. Collins, $10.

WEST VIRGINIA, $20.
Mr. Adams, $20.

WISCONSIN, $7.
Mr. Palmer, $2; Rev. Mr. Hoffner, $5.

FOREIGN, $57.
Hawaii, Mr. and Mrs. Richards, $50; Canada, Familie Troegel, $7.

INCOME FROM TRUST FUNDS, $721.75.
Income for Missionary Work, $721.75.

Donations

DONATIONS for the missionary work of the American Tract Society may be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

FIELD SECRETARIES AND COLPORTAGE SUPERINTENDENTS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.

Rev. Isaac Pierson, Field Secretary for New England, 50 Bromfield Street, Boston, Mass.

Rev. A. W. Reinhard, Field Secretary and Superintendent of Colportage for the Western and Northwestern States, 19 Parkland Place, St. Louis, Mo.

Rev. George Whitefort, Superintendent of Colportage, Southern Agency, Crichton, R. F. D., Mobile Co., Ala.

Form of Bequest

I GIVE and bequeath to the "AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY," instituted in the City of New York, May, 1825, the sum of.....dollars to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said Society.

Three witnesses should state that the testator declares this to be his last will and testament, and that they signed at his request, and in his presence and the presence of each other.

Life Members and Directors

THE donation of $30 at one time constitutes a Life Member of the American Tract Society; the addition of $70, or the donation of $100 at one time, constitutes a Life Director. Life members may receive annually copies of the Society's own publications to the value of $1; Life Directors to the value of $2; if applied for within the Society's year, from April 1st to April 1st, in person or by written order.

Notice to Authors

Authors who submit manuscripts for publication to the American Tract Society are reminded that the Society does not hold itself responsible for the return of any manuscript. If a remittance is sent to cover the full cost of postage and registry, the Society will transmit a manuscript by registered mail upon the request of the author.

American Tract Society

THIS SOCIETY was organized in 1825. Its work is interdenominational and international in scope, and is commended by all evangelical denominations.

It has published the Gospel messages in 178 languages, dialects and characters. It has been the pioneer for work among the foreign-speaking people in our country, and its missionary colporters are distributing Christian literature in many languages among our foreign-speaking population and making a home-to-home visitation among the spiritually destitute, both in the cities and rural districts, leaving all kinds of Christian literature, also the Bible or portions of the Scriptures.

Its publication of leaflets, volumes and periodicals from the Home Office total 800,711,975 copies. It has made foreign cash appropriations to the amount of $802,966.39, and grants of electrotypes to the value of $61,177.96, by means of which millions of copies of books and tracts have been published at mission stations abroad.

The gratuitous distribution of the past year is to the value of $23,191.98. The grand total of its gratuitous distribution has been to the value of $2,676,159.52, which is the equivalent of 5,352,319,040 tract pages.

The total number of family visits that have been made by the Society's colporters during the last year is 146,056; the total number of volumes distributed by sale or grant is 49,584, making the total number of volumes that have been circulated by colporters in the last seventy-seven years 17,487,750, and the total number of family visits that they have made during the same period 18,958,862.

A large distribution of Christian literature is being made among the soldiers and sailors, and the Society aims to furnish Christian literature to every Cantonment in the Army and to every battleship and cruiser in the Navy.

The Society is making very special effort in behalf of Latin America, having entered upon the publication of a One-volume Bible commentary in Spanish, a long-needed and earnestly prayed-for publication, and several other important volumes in both Spanish and Portuguese. Its total publications for Latin America now reach 17,175,163 copies. Its work, ever widening, is dependent upon donations and legacies, and greatly needs increased offerings.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, PRESIDENT.
JUDSON SWIFT, D. D., General Secretary.
Remittances should be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

The Soldier's Text Book

Mr. P. V. Jennes, Religious Work Director of the Army Y. M. C. A. at Camp Custer, Battle Creek, Mich., has sent this communication to the General Secretary of the American Tract Society:

"Please accept our sincere thanks for 1,000 copies of The Soldier's Text Book. You will be glad to know that we are finding a constant demand for these little books. Our secretaries are using them in some of our meetings with the new men in camp."

Appreciated Books

The Captain of one of the United States warships has sent this acknowledgment of the gift of a Patriot Library to the General Secretary of the American Tract Society:

"I am in receipt of your letter and the Patriot Library forwarded this vessel by the American Tract Society.

"The books arrived in good order and will be placed in the crew's library at once, and I am sure that they will be deeply appreciated by the entire crew."

Cromwell's Soldier's Pocket Bible

Mr. Leroy Lacey, Social Activities Director of the Y. M. C. A. at Camp Grant, Rockford, Ill., has written to the General Secretary of the American Tract Society as follows:

"We received to-day five hundred copies of Cromwell's Soldier's Pocket Bible, and we thank you very heartily for these. They will certainly be put to good use. We are using them at present in our Barrack Bible classes to great advantage."

A Most Attractive Paper

For Children in the Home and Sunday School

APPLES OF GOLD

This is a really ideal weekly paper for use in Primary Departments and Infant Classes in all Sunday Schools. It is finely illustrated, uses large, clear type, and is printed in beautiful colored ink. Each week there is a splendid full-page picture, short stories, choice poems and a helpful illustrated treatment of the International Sunday School Lesson. It is issued monthly but is arranged for weekly distribution in four-page parts. Price, single copies, 30 cents; five copies to one address, 25 cents each; ten or more copies, 20 cents each, per year. Postage on Canadian and foreign subscriptions, 6 cents per copy additional. Subscriptions accepted in clubs for 3 months, 6 months or a year.

Sample Copies Sent Free.
AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY
Park Ave., and Fortieth St., New York.

A SPLENDID COMBINATION OFFER

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

Two of the Most Popular Religious Publications in America for only a year to any part of the United States or Its Possessions

$2.25

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY RELIGIOUS MONTHLY
Religious Subscription Price 50 Cents a Year

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED NEWS WEEKLY FOR THE HOME

Regular Subscription Price $2.00 a Year.

Please note that this Special Offer applies only to subscriptions in the United States and its possessions. On Foreign subscriptions $1.12 extra must be added for postage, making a total of $3.37.

If a copy of the beautiful little year book entitled "A Threefold Cord," is desired, ten cents additional must be added. Please send all combination subscriptions to the

AMERICAN MESSENGER
Park Ave. and 40th St., New York

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

TERMS: Subscription price, 50 cts. a year, payable in advance. In clubs of five or more, 30 cts. each. Club subscriptions mailed to separate addresses, if desired. Charge for foreign subscriptions, 24 cents additional. Canadian subscriptions, 12 cents additional. Single copies, 5 cents each.

On account of the additional charge which is made by the New York Post Office for mailing to subscribers in New York and Bronx Counties (Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx), no club rates, cash commissions or premiums will be given for subscriptions that must be sent to persons residing in those Counties. Each subscription in New York or Bronx County must be at the rate of 50 cents net.

Remit by Express Money Order, Draft, Post Office Order or Registered Letter. For very small amounts, postage stamps may be sent at the risk of the sender.

RENEWALS: The date opposite your name shows to what time the subscription has been paid, and a change in the date is the receipt for renewal.

CHANGES: When sending change of address, be sure to send the old address as well as the new one.

OUR ADVERTISERS: We believe that all the advertisements in this paper are from responsible advertisers, and it is our intention to admit only such to our columns. Should, however, any of our subscribers find that any advertiser does not live up to his agreements, we would consider it a favor, if they will inform us, and we will at any time give prompt attention to any complaint.

We do not, of course, guarantee that all persons will take the same point of view with the advertisers, and it must be borne in mind that the claims and statements made by advertisers are their assertions, and not ours. Our readers will confer a favor upon advertisers and also upon us if they will mention the AMERICAN MESSENGER when answering advertisements.

SPECIAL COMBINATION SUBSCRIPTION OFFERS

This is the time when many people make a selection of the periodicals which they wish to receive during the coming year. We accordingly present herewith some unusually attractive magazine combination subscription offers which afford an excellent opportunity to save money. We trust that many of our readers will avail themselves of these splendid combination propositions. The subscriptions may be either for yourself or for your friends; they may be either new or renewal. The AMERICAN MESSENGER may be sent to one address and the other periodical to another address.

Should you wish to subscribe for two or more periodicals on the list in connection with the AMERICAN MESSENGER, write us and we will tell you the cost of the combination which you desire, but please remember that in every case the AMERICAN MESSENGER must be included with the other periodicals for which you wish to subscribe.

When a copy of our beautiful little book, entitled "A Threefold Cord," is desired, 10 cents additional must be sent with each subscription.

These Special Offers apply only to subscriptions in the United States and its possessions:

	Regular Subscription Price	Our Price for Both
American Messenger	$0.50	$2.25
Christian Herald	$2.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$2.25
Christian Endeavor World	$2.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.65
Christian Worker's Magazine	$1.50
American Messenger	$0.50	$2.10
Youth's Companion	$2.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$4.20
Harper's Magazine	$4.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$0.80
American Poultry Advocate	$0.50
American Messenger (One year).....	$0.50	$1.20
Farm Journal (Five Years)	$1.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$2.10
Presbyterian Banner	$2.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$4.05
World's Work	$4.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$2.30
Popular Educator	$2.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$2.25
Mother's Magazine	$2.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.75
Boys' Life (Boy Scouts' Magazine).....	$1.50
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.10
To-Day's Housewife	$0.75
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.20
McCall's Magazine	$1.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.75
Modern Priscilla	$1.50
American Messenger	$0.50	$2.25
Woman's Home Companion	$2.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$2.30
Primary Education	$2.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$2.25
Physical Culture	$2.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.75
The Etude	$1.50
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.50
Table Talk, The National Food Magazine	$1.25
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.25
American Agriculturist	$1.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$3.05
Review of Reviews	$3.00

American Messenger, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York

A General Assembly for All China

The Organization of a General Assembly for all China was decided upon at the Fifth Meeting of the Federal Council of the Presbyterian Churches of China. The ten churches of Presbyterian order,—Northern and Southern Presbyterian, Dutch and German Reformed, English, Irish and the two Scottish Presbyterian, Canadian and New Zealand Presbyterian,—have gradually united themselves into six synods covering the country from Manchuria in the North to the Southern Province of Kwangtung. The organization of the Assembly will complete the work of unification. The united church will number 76,000 members. Proposals were made at the same meeting by representatives of English and American Congregationalism to enter the merger.

Polyglot Service

Fifteen years' service in Hawaii has just been completed by Bishop Restarick of the Episcopal Church. Among the interesting bits of information he has sent home is the fact that in his work he uses these different language prayer books, American, Japanese, Chinese and Hawaiian.

The Use of Hymns

Hymns have always been a great power in revival work. There is a wide difference between the style of the hymns that were used in the old-time camp-meetings and those that are employed by our modern evangelists, but in times, both past and present, the use of hymns and tuneful melodies has been found one of the most effective ways of bringing souls into the kingdom of God.

Our Veteran Subscribers

To the long list of those who have been receiving the AMERICAN MESSENGER for a period of fifty years or more, we are pleased to add the name of Mrs. Garrison, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., who writes:

"I enclose fifty cents for the renewal of my subscription to the AMERICAN MESSENGER. I am eighty-two years old, and have been a reader of it from the time when it was only a four-page publication. I could not have been much over ten years old."

We should be glad to hear from others who have been readers of this paper for the last fifty years or more, so that we may add their names to Our Honor Roll of Veteran Subscribers.

From a Soldier Boy

A soldier boy in one of the wards of a base hospital at one of our Army Camps has sent this letter to the American Tract Society:

"DEAR FRIENDS: I received a letter from my mother yesterday in which she enclosed one of your tracts entitled 'To a Son in the Army.'"

"I have been in the army over a year now, and have gotten away from doing the things that are right. But deep in my heart I wish to thank you for the contents of that tract, for I believe it has made a new man of me. I wish that every man in this army could get hold of one of them. From now on I will do the things that tract asks of me to the best of my ability."

Faith in America's Food Saving

The following from The Grocer, London, gives an insight into the implicit faith which the allies have in America's ability to solve the food problem:

"It is believed that as the primary solution of the food problem every effort will be made in North America to insure greater production. There will be an increased acreage shown in bread grains, and no care will be relaxed to insure a greater output of provisions. The situation is critical, and it is recognized that the successful prosecution of the war by the allies depends in a large measure upon the extent of food production and food conservation this year by our friends on the other side of the Atlantic."

This is a plain and strong statement of our obligations.

Outlasting Steel

BY E. L. VINCENT.

Outlasting steel? What can do that? It is the question which engineers have been asking for years—can anything prove more durable for the construction of bridges or buildings which are exposed to the weather? For it means the expenditure of vast sums of money to span the streams of a world like ours and to house its swarming masses of people.

More and more of the hard metal has been used every year as the demands of railroad traffic have increased, until now the resources of mines and rolling mills are taxed almost beyond their power to supply the needed material.

But now comes a startling disclosure. The tooth of rust is never satisfied. Even should this mysterious force for a single moment sleep, the still more wonderful agency of chemical action would take up the work and little by little the strength of the steel would be undermined.

So over and over again the question comes, "What can outlast steel?"

And now engineers are going back to look at the bridges made of wood in years gone by. Out in Oregon they have found a bridge over the Willamette River, two hundred and thirty feet long, which has stood for thirty-seven years, irresistible alike to the heavy traffic which has passed over it and to the action of the weather. Not far away are two other bridges of a similar length which have withstood every strain of storm and tooth of worm and stress of weather, the one for forty years, the other for only a few years less.

But what is this wood? Tell us the name of a tree which can furnish beams and plank and timbers that will outlast the finest steel.

Write it down to the credit of the fir tree that it has this power to endure. And why? Because its grain is so close and it is filled so full of its own fragrant oil that no worm will attack it, no decay weaken its strength.

Shutting out the things that hurt. Put the lesson into your own heart. If you would withstand the assaults of foes of every name and nature that come upon the heart, shut them all out. But how? Fill your whole soul with good. Drink it in out of God's Word. With every breath take it in from the books you read and the men with whom you associate.

Let God be the very strength of your life and nothing can dig the foundation stones of your life down.

—KIND WORDS.

Ever-Ready Standard Safety Razor

Easily Cleaned
Mechanically Perfect
Self-Adjusting Instantly Ready
Rust-Proof

The Ever-Ready frame is the most costly made frame in use. The Ever-Ready blade is the most expensively made blade known to safety razors.

The Ever-Ready frame is a marvel in mechanical construction, indestructible in years of ordinary use, simple as well as automatic in adjustment, and shorn of all delicate parts that would weaken in long service. The manufacturers guarantee the frame for no less than ten years, because of its mechanical advantages, heavy brass material and heavy triple nickel plating. The handle is solid and heavy enough to give proper grip and balance.

The six Ever-Ready Radio blades in each outfit establish the highest efficiency in blade making.

The six blades in each standard outfit are arranged in highly nickeled metal sheaths. The case is most compact and durable, velvet lined, with solid wood base, and covered with a waterproof texture as durable as leather and of leather-like surface.

This is the outfit that all the world is using. It is said to be the biggest selling razor, and the most advertised safety razor in the world. Because it is the most advertised it is the biggest seller, as well as the most popular.

We will sell the "Razor Outfit," which includes six blades, for $1.00, or it will be given free and postpaid for only eight yearly subscriptions to the "AMERICAN MESSENGER" at fifty cents each, or we will send the "AMERICAN MESSENGER" one full year, and the "Ever-Ready Razor Outfit" upon receipt of $1.38.

American Messenger, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York

NEW BOOKS

And Books of Freshened Interest

THE MINISTER'S HANDICAP

By J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.

J. WILBUR CHAPMAN

Thousands of ministers and theological students all over the world would like to have a personal interview with Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, to learn, if possible, some of the secrets of his success as a pastor and an evangelist of wonderful power. Better, however, than a personal interview, will be the possession of Dr. Chapman's new book, "The Minister's Handicap," into which he has put his personal experiences and a wealth of suggestions which will be of invaluable help to every minister of the Gospel. Comforting, inspiring, clergymen will treasure "The Minister's Handicap." It is rich in anecdote, incident, and striking remarks made by famous men to the author during his career as a preacher. Read what a great business man says (pages 31 and 32) about preaching "your own doubts"; about "discouraged lassitude"; about substituting an ethical address for a sermon. Sympathetic, vibrant with understanding of the ministry, this book will kindle the fires anew. 12mo, cloth. 145 pages. 75 cents by mail.

American Tract Society, Park Ave. and 40th St., New York:

Enclosed please find 75 cents for which mail me one copy of "THE MINISTER'S HANDICAP" by J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.

Name..... Street.....
Town..... State.....

PAUL'S CAMPAIGNS

By David James Burrell, D.D.

DR. DAVID J. BURRELL

In this book, reader, you journey with Paul. Wherever he goes, whether to Cyprus or to Rome, you feel yourself near him, listening, hearing his fiery, impassioned, fearless exhorting. When you read the gripping description of what Paul saw at Athens, it will be brought home to you that here indeed is a study of Paul's wanderings which really appreciates the motives and difficulties of that courageous fighter for Christianity. Do you know the precise four reasons for Paul's visit to Thessalonica? A reader will truly know Paul's footsteps better after reading this new study of the subject. The four journeys are woven into a colorful narrative of such interest that it affords a pleasant means of studying Paul's goings and comings by land and sea. Four wax-process charts, specially drawn, same size as page, no folding. 12mo, cloth. 110 pages. 75 cents by mail.

American Tract Society, Park Ave. and 40th St., New York:

Enclosed please find 75 cents for which send me one copy of "PAUL'S CAMPAIGNS" by David James Burrell, D.D.

Name..... Street.....
Town..... State.....

AT LAST, friends, we have managed to lower the price of the

MANUAL OF DEVOTION

for SOLDIERS AND SAILORS

By JUDSON SWIFT, D.D.

So many people were buying a package of them, to distribute to enlisted men. We have had to charge 35 cents a copy and it came very hard, indeed, friends, on those who wanted to give several departing Soldiers a good book. Thirty-five cents was more than we wanted to charge, but we simply couldn't sell it for less. The binding of the book was too expensive—entirely too expensive.

So we have done this: we have bound a quantity in heavy, stiff, strengthened paper covers. We have reduced the price to 20 cents—and, mind you, without changing the inside of the book at all.

When the Soldier or Sailor Boy that you know is waiting for the word for the battle to begin, let him have this little book in his pocket. Let him open it to page 94—to the "Prayer Before Going into Battle." It will comfort him. The book will have earned its place in his kit at that moment.

Then there is the Prayer for the Wounded; the sweet, beautiful Prayer for the Loved Ones at Home, etc., etc., and a reading for each of 31 days.

It is bound in waded blue for Sailors and waded brown for Soldiers, beautifully lettered in gold, durable and strong. It is easier to pay 20 cents than 35 cents for a book that will strengthen and hearten some Soldier or Sailor, to place in his kit or in his pocket this cheering, friendly, devotional book; but it is still easier to pay 10 cents—and we can and will sell it for that sum if you will take 5 or more copies. We can and will make a half grant, a gift of one-half the value, to any quantity distributor of 5 or more copies. If you would rather see a copy first, send 20 cents, friends. You will be convinced then, at any rate.

The books are just in—just fresh from the binder. Remember: brown for soldiers, blue for sailors. State which you require.

American Tract Society, Park Ave. and 40th St., New York:

Enclosed please find for which send me copies of "A MANUAL OF DEVOTION FOR SOLDIERS AND SAILORS," by Judson Swift, D.D., at 10 cents per copy as advertised in October American Messenger. Send me blue (for sailors) and brown (for soldiers).

Name..... Street.....
Town..... State.....

ANNA COOPE, the Sky Pilot of the San Blas Indians, has just come from the Pacific coast to New York. First, she boarded a small boat which took her from the San Blas Islands over 100 miles of open sea to the mainland of Central America. A short time ago she came up from Central America to the Pacific coast. Now she is in New York. In October she will return to her native charges on the San Blas Islands.

With this wonderful book, her history in New York, modestly telling us of the work of the General Tract Society, listeners can hardly realize to be possible, we determine to again announce her book detailing her work on the San Blas Islands.

ANNA COOPE : SKY PILOT of the SAN BLAS INDIANS

Anna Coope's school on the San Blas Islands, off the coast of Central America, is an unusual institution.

Little children and tottering old men, one of them a hundred years old, are class-mates—along with wrinkled grandmothers and mothers with babies straddled on their hips.

Utterly alone, Miss Coope has brought the sweetness of home-life and civilization to this isolated tribe. Can you imagine 800 untutored Indians—and ten liquor huts? Under their thatched roofs rum worked its havoc until her patient, ceaseless labors bore fruit.

An Indian canoe, sailing for days across a stormy ocean, was her means of communication with the mainland of Central America.

Send for this new book: ANNA COOPE: Sky Pilot of the San Blas Indians. It will give you hours of delight and a rich fund of information. It is a rare addition to your library. 180 pages and beautiful photographs of native life. Cloth, 5x7½. By mail $1.30.

American Tract Society, Park Ave. and 40th St., New York:

Enclosed please find $1.30 for which send me one copy of "ANNA COOPE: SKY PILOT OF THE SAN BLAS INDIANS," as advertised in the October American Messenger.

Name..... Street.....
Town..... State.....

M M

NOV 5 1918

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

Vol. 76

NOVEMBER, 1918

No. 11

INTERIOR VIEW OF THE EAGLE Y. M. C. A. HUT IN BRYANT PARK, NEW YORK CITY

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY, NEW YORK.

When Is a Child Well-Behaved?

BY MRS. MAX WEST.

When is a child well-behaved?

Children's Year has called attention to many needs of children which are problems for their mothers. Malnutrition and the bearing on the child's health of the relation between the inches of his height and the ounces of his weight are questions just beginning to be understood which Children's Year has brought before millions of mothers. But training her child to wear his good manners as if they belonged to him and were not borrowed for the occasion is a problem of no recent origin. Regard for the feelings and desires of others has always been the basis of good manners, but the expression of such regard and methods of inculcating it are very different today from what they were a generation ago. Then "manners" in children consisted in paying rigid deference to their elders and superiors.

Nowadays children are treated more humanly and given much wider latitude in their relations with grown people. Older standards of conduct have very largely changed. Pessimistic observers are prone to regard the change as not altogether favorable, and to attribute to this same loss of deference to the presence and opinion of parents, teachers and other adults a corresponding loss in manners and behavior, and even a real loss of moral fiber.

It must be remembered that the rule "other times, other manners" applies generally. Life is a very different thing for most children of today than it was for their parents, certainly for their grandparents. With the wholesome and desirable growth of comradeship and association between growing boys and girls and their elders, the old rules of proper behavior must necessarily have given way to something less formal. The change has probably been in the direction of the development of strength of character and independent judgment in children. But that they have also lost something is perhaps equally certain. To remedy this loss by teaching them the rules of true courtesy is the business of thoughtful parents. Such an achievement may well be one of the valuable by-products of the Children's Year campaign which the Children's Bureau of the U. S. Department of Labor and the Woman's Committee of the Council of National Defense are conducting.

Good manners in children as well as grown people are the expression of an innate consideration for the rights, privileges and opinions of other people. Years of experience have crystallized this feeling into certain conventional forms of expression, which every child should be taught. The little habits of courtesy, which should be a part of every day life, are really the "outward and visible sign of inward grace." Few acquisitions are more valuable to anyone than that charm of manner which wins the immediate regard of everyone with whom they come into contact. To teach children good manners must be the work of every day and hour. "Line upon line" they will learn the little courtesies. Children are so imitative that very much of this will be unconsciously acquired through imitation of the habits and manners of their elders. "Thank you," and "If you please," and "Excuse me, please," come easily to the tongue if they are frequently heard, and the boy who sees his father rise when a lady comes into the room will instinctively follow that example even with very little direct instruction. Good manners at table are so necessary to the comfort of everyone concerned that mothers will hardly neglect to watch and direct their children most carefully in this respect. It is very easy to teach children the right use of the knife and fork, to ask for what they want politely, and to chew their food quietly. To fail to do these things has condemned many a man as a boor and a nuisance. In other words, manners often make the man; certainly the lack of manners may unmake him.

Conservation and Christian Comity

BY REV. ROY B. GUILD, D.D.

In view of the successful co-operation of churches in order to conserve manpower and fuel, it is being suggested with increasing frequency that this be done in preparation for the coming winter, for the period of the war—or, in many cases, for all time to come.

One of the strong influences at work in bringing about this co-operation has been the demand that the war so imperatively brings to our attention for united action between the denominations. A visitor to communities where such co-operation is taking place is impressed with the response that has been given to the appeal for getting together, because the larger interests of the Kingdom of God required it. Often the sentiment against the proposed union was evidently strong, but clear explanation of exactly what was proposed, a patient answering of questions, the making of some comparatively unimportant concessions, and the strong appeal to the consciences of the people and to the loyalty to the Kingdom has prevailed to change this sentiment.

Vermont has a group of home missionary secretaries who have successfully grappled with this problem and who have effected eighteen unions or federations in which Congregational, Baptist and Methodist churches were concerned, during the past year.

One of the methods employed in seven of the cases was the exchange of fields. In one instance there has been permanent and complete withdrawal, the Congregational house of worship will be repaired with the proceeds of the sale of the Congregational parsonage and placed at the disposal of the United Church, and the Methodist house of worship will be changed over into a community house. Two other towns are illustrations of what union arrangements can bring about in the way of securing stronger men and increase of salary. In the first each church had been paying $800 to its minister and had received only passable service. Now the minister is paid $1,200 and he is reputed to be one of the stronger men in the Methodist conference. In the second the one minister was receiving $900 and the other about $600. Now the minister of the United Church is receiving $1,200 and is an unusually competent community minister. A marked increase in attendance at these united churches has been noted.

Federation, the other method employed, means that nothing is said about the withdrawal of either denomination, and in the agreement the suggestion is that there may be an alternation of ministers between the denominations. It is not unlikely that some of the eerations will lead to the withdrawal of one or the other denominations.

A most important agreement has been entered into by state denominational secretaries and superintendents, the notable thing being that the responsible executive officers of three denominations entered into this agreement and formed a permanent organization for the particular purpose of carrying it out. These executive officers themselves are taking the initiative.

The secretary of the Vermont council, Rev. C. C. Merrill of Burlington, Vermont, is able to report some very interesting results. Ministers and laymen who are seeking information along this line, if the facts here recorded are not sufficient, will do well to write to Mr. Merrill or to Rev. E. T. Root, 53 Mt. Vernon Street, Boston, Mass., who has had an active part in bringing about many combinations in Massachusetts. The Home Missionary secretaries in that state have been very aggressive in bringing about wise co-operation and combination.

What the Y. W. C. A. Does

The immediate protection and assistance of women and girls affected by the war is the task undertaken by the Young Women's Christian Association. All the resources of the society, its fifty years' experience with girls, and the co-operation of more than a thousand Associations from the Atlantic to the Pacific are directed toward this end.

The general lines followed in this emergency work are Hostess Houses in the camps, emergency housing for employed girls, foreign community work among women who cannot speak English, work in colored communities affected by the war, and extended recreational work among girls in the vicinity of the cantonments.

Five hundred and eighty-one association workers are employed on war work in the United States. They are social workers, both white and colored, club and recreation leaders, physical directors, dietitians, business women, household and employment experts, educationists, and physicians. Association members now number 361,320.

From the beginning the War Work Council planned to include not only American women affected by the war, but because of the pleas from France and Russia, the first budget contained an item for work in Europe. Administrative, industrial and recreational secretaries were sent to place their experience at the disposal of the Russian women. In France the activities have fallen into two general divisions—social work among American war relief workers and co-operation with French women in work for their own people. The object, in France as in Russia, is to co-operate with the women of these countries developing such phases of social service for women as will meet war conditions and at the same time become permanent foundations for future work.

Hotel Petrograd has been opened in Paris, for American women war relief workers, at 33 rue Caumartin. Another hostess house has been opened at Tours. A room in each recreation hut for nurses established at all the American base hospitals, is provided with a Y. W. C. A. social worker. Three hostess houses to lodge the American Signal Corps women have been organized at the request of Army officials.

The Foyers des Allies are recreation centers for French munition women workers, for women otherwise employed by the French government, and for French women, established by the American Y. W. C. A. at the request of the French Government.

The War Work Council, now numbering a hundred and thirty members, was called into existence in June, 1917. The members are chosen from the whole United States. Its officers are: Mrs. James Stewart Cushman, Chairman; Mrs. John R. Mott and Mrs. William Adams Brown, Vice-Chairmen; Mrs. Howard Morse, Secretary, and Mrs. Henry P. Davison, Treasurer. Among other members are: Mrs. Robert Lansing, Mrs. Josephus Daniels, Mrs. Leonard Wood and Mrs. John French.

Fleming H. Revell Company
New York: 158 Fifth Ave. Chicago: 17 N. Wabash Ave.

New Books of Distinct Appeal AT ALL BOOKSELLERS

CHARLES E. JEFFERSON, D.D.

Old Truth and New Facts

The author of "Things Fundamental," etc., shows where thought and opinion will need modification and readjustment in its attitude toward Christianity in the light of the "Great War." Net $1.25

WORTH M. TIPPY, D.D.

The Church and the Great War

An answer to the question: What are the Churches doing in the war? Outlines a plan of action; also discusses social reconstruction after the war. Net $1.00

GAIUS GLENN ATKINS, D.D.

Author of "Pilgrims of the Lonely Road," etc.

Jerusalem Past and Present

The story of the Holy City up to the present day, delightfully told in a thoughtful, inspirational way. The chief landmarks in her history are touched upon and their spiritual significance clearly shown. Illustrated. Net $1.00

JAMES I. VANCE, D.D.

Paul's Epistle to the Romans

The Life of Service

"A strong and sturdy evangelical expression, together with a vivifying spirituality, will be found for the profit of all who read them."—Herold and Presbyter. Net $1.25

EDGAR DeWITT JONES, D.D.

Ornamented Orthodoxy

Studies in Christian Constancy
"Intensely practical, the kind of sermons that come home to the man on the street, who sees life none too deeply, but feels it strongly."—Congregationist. Net $1.25

RT. REV. CHARLES FISKE, D.D.

The Experiment of Faith

A book that gives the answer of Christian faith to the old spiritual problems which the war is more sharply pressing. Shows how such faith is possible and logical. Helps the man who is groping toward it. Convinces the honest doubter, strengthens the firm believer. Second Edition in Press. Net $1.00

DAVID J. BURRELL, D.D.

Why I Believe the Bible

"A clear and concise presentation of the main reasons for faith in the Bible. Preachers, teachers and all earnest Christians will find this book valuable."—S. S. Times. Net $1.00

J. GIBSON L'CURIE, D.D.

The Joyful Hours of Jesus

Dr. Lowrie demonstrates how, in spite of the stupendous weight which pressed upon Him, Jesus possessed as the well-springs of His spiritual sustenance, a joy that was full, abiding and sufficient. Net $1.25

J. WILBUR CHAPMAN, D.D.

Ex-Moderator of General Assembly

When Home Is Heaven

"The large number of fine illustrations help to carry the message home. We wish the book could be placed in every home in our land. Eternity alone would reveal the good that would be accomplished."—Central Christian Advocate. Net $1.25

Ask ANY Bookseller for REVELL'S
BOOKS
158 Fifth Avenue, New York.
17 N. Wabash Avenue, Chicago

NELSON'S Bibles and Testaments for Soldiers and Sailors

American Standard and King James Versions

Made in Khaki colored bindings in a variety of sizes and styles, they will take up but little space in the soldier's pocket or kit. A selection of Scripture texts and the four great American hymns are printed on the fly-leaves, together with an identification page. Printed on white paper and Nelson's India paper.

Prices from 30c. up

THE AMERICAN STANDARD BIBLE

Authorized and Edited by the American Revision Committee
The latest and best translation of the Scriptures. It brings the sacred message home to the reader in the words and language of to-day instead of the language used in King James' time, over 300 years ago—many words of which are not understood by the modern reader.

"The most accurate translation of the Bible, which is the first essential to the student and also the simplest and clearest in its language, and so the most easily understood by the average person."

It is the standard text for all the leading Colleges, Universities, Theological Seminaries and Bible Training Classes, as well as for the International and Graded Sunday School Lessons.

For Sale by all booksellers, or send for interesting free booklet to

THOMAS NELSON & SONS
385Y Fourth Avenue New York

For Children in the Home and Sunday School APPLES OF GOLD

This is a really ideal weekly paper for use in Primary Departments and Infant Classes in all Sunday Schools. It is finely illustrated, uses large, clear type, and is printed in beautiful colored ink. Each week there is a splendid full-page picture, short stories, choice poems and a helpful illustrated treatment of the International Sunday School Lesson. It is issued monthly but is arranged for weekly distribution in four-page parts. Price, single copies, 30 cents; five copies to one address, 25 cents each; ten or more copies, 20 cents each, per year. Postage on Canadian and foreign subscriptions, 6 cents per copy additional. Subscriptions accepted in clubs for 3 months, 6 months or a year.

Sample Copies Sent Free.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY
Park Ave., and Fortieth St., New York.

The American Messenger

"Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Luke 2:10

Vol. 76. No. 11

NOVEMBER, 1918

Copyright, 1918, by American Tract Society.

Terms: 50 cents per annum
Single copy, 5 cents

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

PUBLISHED MONTHLY

BY THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

Park Ave. and Fortieth St., New York, N. Y.

OFFICERS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President.

JOHN HENRY JOWETT, M.A., D.D., Vice-President.

JUDSON SWIFT, D.D., General Secretary.

LOUIS TAG, Treasurer.

REV. HENRY LEWIS, Ph.D., Recording Secretary.

All of the above-named officers should be addressed at Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Rev. David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.

Rev. Charles Carroll Albertson, D.D.

Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.

Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D.

Rev. George Ernest Merriam.

Entered as second-class matter June 20, 1879, at the Post Office at New York, New York, under the Act of March 3, 1879.

Acceptance for mailing at special rate of postage provided for in Section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized on July 3, 1918.

A Matter of Vital Moment To All Our Subscribers

The War Industries Board at Washington, D. C., has requested all publishers of periodicals to eliminate the practice of continuing subscriptions after the date of expiration, unless subscriptions are renewed and paid for.

The object of this request is to conserve the use of paper by putting all subscriptions upon a paid-up basis and thereby saving the amount of paper which would otherwise be used in sending out periodicals, which in the end might not be paid for.

In common with other publishers we wish to honor the request of the War Industries Board, and we therefore ask all our subscribers to see to it that their subscriptions are paid up, both for the current year and for the year to come.

This is a matter of vital moment to all our subscribers and of very great importance to the publishers of the AMERICAN MESSENGER. There are not many on our list who have not paid up to the beginning of the current year, while there are a great many who have paid for the present year and a considerable number who have paid for the year to come.

There are, however, a certain number, who have not yet remitted their subscriptions for the year 1918, and who are therefore nearly a year in arrears. We wish to impress upon these friends the vital importance of sending us at once the amount due for this year, coupled with the amount due for next year, so that we shall not be compelled to drop their names from our list.

In this connection we wish to call attention to the fact, that up to December 31, 1918, we will accept renewal subscriptions for the coming year at the present rate of fifty cents, whereas after that date it will be necessary to remit at the new price of sixty cents per year, which will go into effect on January 1, 1919.

We have been much encouraged by the steady support of our subscribers in the past, and we look to them now with the confident assurance that they will respond to this appeal, and will at once adjust their subscription accounts in accordance with the request of the War Industries Board and keep them hereafter on a paid-up basis.

Loyalty to our Government and consideration of the best interests of the American Tract Society alike, call for prompt compliance with this urgent request that all our subscribers see to it that their subscriptions are renewed and paid for well in advance of the date of expiration.

✻ ✻ ✻

Food Conservation

The approach of Conservation Sunday, which it is hoped will be observed on December 1, 1918, calls attention to the vital importance of compliance with the program for food conservation which has been issued by the United States Food Administration under the direction of Mr. Herbert Hoover.

When the interallied food council was held last summer, the needs of the Allies were computed and the resources from which they could be met were reckoned. Having been corrected as the returns from the harvest were ascertained and the shipping possibilities were developed, these schedules show that America for this coming year must send to our armed forces and to the Allies, half as much again of food supplies as last year. Instead of 11,750,000 tons the shipments this year must be increased to 17,500,000 tons. As we are pledged to send abroad fifty per cent. more food and from substantially the same stocks as last year, there must be increased conservation to accomplish the result.

The interallied council was told that whatever the war-food program of the Allies requires the United States will endeavor to meet. This is an obligation measured in the terms of human life that rests on every American.

The program for the future is less specific, but no less definite than that of last year. Then the Food Administration was meeting one emergency after another as it rose. This coming year it will be a long, steady pull directed to the whole food situation and not so much to particular commodities.

As the result of a year's experience the Food Administration is on a new footing both here and abroad. New ways have been learned and better methods have been developed. The war conscience is active everywhere, and we may surely count upon the loyalty and patriotism of the American people to see to it that the new program of the Food Administration is carried out cheerfully to a triumphant conclusion.

✻ ✻ ✻

The Great Combined War Drive

By direction of President Wilson seven organizations doing work for our soldier and sailor boys will issue a combined appeal for funds during the week, November 11-18, 1918.

These seven agencies are the Young Men's Christian Association, the Young Women's Christian Association, the American Library Association, the War Camp Community Service, the National Catholic War Council, the Jewish Welfare Board and the Salvation Army. Of these organizations, that doing the largest work is the Y. M. C. A. and it will therefore receive the largest share of the fund to be raised, the total of which for all seven agencies has been put at $170,500,000. The amount to be allotted to the Y. M. C. A. out of this total is $100,000,000.

In last month's issue and also in this issue of the AMERICAN MESSENGER we have had presented to us through the courtesy of the Publicity Section of the War Work Council of the Y. M. C. A., a vivid picture of just the kind of service which the Y. M. C. A. is rendering to our boys both in the training camps at home and on the field of battle in France. Yet this is but a glimpse of the sum total of the work which the "Y," as the soldier boys love to call it, is doing for the men who have entered the service of the U. S. Army and Navy.

Though the appeals for aid are constant and pressing, the work done by the Y. M. C. A. deserves our generous and loyal support. In the person of its secretaries and various other workers it is exemplifying the spirit and the teachings of the Master Himself, for it is rendering a service of ministry to the physical and spiritual needs of our boys, the value of which cannot be over-estimated.

✻ ✻ ✻

The Lutheran Merger

One event scheduled to take place during the month of November, which is of vital interest to the Christian Church, is the merger of three separate bodies of Lutherans into one denomination to be known as the United Lutheran Church. The three bodies that unite to form this union are the General Council, the General Synod, and the United Synod South. By this union of forces the Lutherans will make one of the strongest denominational bodies in the country, and we may well anticipate for the United Lutheran Church a larger career of usefulness than ever before, for the old adage still holds good, that in union there is strength, and this applies in spiritual things as well as in other matters.

We trust that this happy union is the earnest of other mergers to come. It is a distinct weakness that the Protestant Church should be split up into scores of different denominational bodies, many of which differ from each other in no essential particular. Already there are several other movements under way, the aim of which is to promote union between the different branches of Protestant Christendom.

As followers of the Master, we ought to do all in our power to strengthen these movements for Church Unity, for we cannot doubt that our Lord Jesus Christ desires the union of all His disciples in one bond of Christian fellowship.

Reconstruction Work for Soldiers

The stream of wounded soldiers now beginning to arrive in our country emphasizes the importance of the work of reconstruction which our Government has planned for the rehabilitation of those who have been disabled in the great conflict now in progress.

What this work means is set forth in the pages of a little magazine called Carry On, which is issued from the office of the Surgeon General of the United States Army. A perusal of the articles that have appeared in this magazine brings to us a wonderful revelation of the possibilities of reconstruction for men, who to the ordinary observer would seem to have been hopelessly disabled.

While at the outset this work of reconstruction must be carried on by skilled doctors and nurses, there comes a time when the disabled man is considered sufficiently restored to be returned to civil life, and then it is that the general public must aid in this work by helping the reconstructed veteran to a place of self-support, and giving him the opportunity to prove his usefulness to the community.

These wounded men who are returning to our shores are deserving of our utmost consideration. They have fought a good fight, and we should spare no effort to make them feel that their sacrifice and devotion are fully appreciated by their fellow citizens, whose lives and honor they have defended at great personal cost to themselves.

Died In the Service

We regret to record the death of one of the members of the Board of Managers of the American Tract Society, Rev. William Du Bose Stevens, D.D. When the United States entered into the war, Dr. Stevens was rector of the First Reformed Episcopal Church at Madison Avenue and Fifty-fifth Street, New York City. On August 17th of this year he sailed as a Red Cross Chaplain attached to the Expeditionary Force under General Pershing. On September 29th he died and was buried from the Church of the Holy Trinity in Paris on October 1st.

Dr. Stevens was elected as a member of the Board of Managers in the year 1915. He had shown a warm interest in the welfare of the Society, and we shall miss his aid in the work to which he gave his loyal and sympathetic support.

Home Mission Week

The week November 17-24 has been designated as Home Mission Week, and the Home Missions Council have developed excellent plans for its fitting observance. The slogan of the week will be, "Christian America, the Lasting Liberty Bond." The theme of the various programs suggested is "Christian Americanization, Our National Ideal in Missions."

Already we are told, the Council has in hand a bulletin for pastors, a Sunday School program entitled, "They Come Bringing Gifts," a striking poster showing the immigrant and his American home, to be accompanied by programs and topics appropriate for young people's societies, and an attractive pamphlet for women's meetings which outlines a definite program for women's societies.

Why This Issue Has Been Delayed

We wish to explain to our readers that the delay which some of them have experienced in receiving this issue of the AMERICAN MESSENGER is due to a strike in the printing trade in New York City, which has made it impossible to mail the paper at the usual time. We ask all our friends to bear with the inconvenience they have thus suffered owing to causes which have been entirely beyond our control.

Christian Idealism

By Rev. FRED L. KINGSBURY

George Francis Train once wrote, "There is no credit in knowing how to spell, but positive disgrace in being ignorant on that point: so there can be no credit in doing right, while it is infamous to do wrong." St. Paul voices the same truth, but in a higher sphere, when he writes in four consecutive epistles his conception of Christian Idealism: "I therefore, the prisoner of the Lord, beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called." (Eph. 4:1.) "Only let your conversation be as it becometh the Gospel of Christ." (Phil. 1:27). "That ye might walk worthy of the Lord." (Col. 1:10). "That ye would walk worthy of God, who hath called you unto His kingdom and glory." (I Thess. 2:12.)

There is a character which harmonizes with the position in which everyone is placed, and it is our chiefest work to see that it is maintained. Redemption comes to us, its hands full to overflowing with blessings, of which character is the outgrowth.

No man need be called either saint or hero, nor need he think himself to be either the one or the other, in order to do, in the ordinary walks of life, the work that makes men both great and good in the sight of our dear Lord. Paul was keenly aware of the danger that environed the converts from heathenism; he knew how easy it would be to dishonor their profession by their life. They were not required to be worthy of redemption before receiving it. Their most appropriate language, as well as ours in these later times, was, "Father, I have sinned against heaven, and am no more worthy." He saves men freely. He throws open His treasures to those who have no merit. This He does through the infinite worthiness of His Son. But His word to us is, as of yore, "Sin no more." Not alone in our repose, in our devotion, in our hopes, in our time of spiritual elevation, but in the busy, thronged, and often rough and miry ways of daily life, we are to "walk worthy." While we are by no means to omit the records of the high days of the soul, in the closet, in religious circles and activity, we must ask what we are in the home, on the street, in our business, in all our varied contact with our fellow men. We have received more—much more than the world has; we owe more, we profess more, and necessarily Heaven asks, and Earth is always asking, sometimes in scorn, and may God help us honestly to ask ourselves this day: "What do ye more than others?"

No words can describe the honor to which we are raised by faith in Christ. We think of how He deigns to say, "I call you not servants but friends," and of how He surpasses that when He is "not ashamed to call us brethren." And we rise still higher when we read, "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God. . . . now are we the Sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when He shall appear, we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is." Neither in heaven nor on earth can we conceive of higher promotion. Our dear Lord stoops to us in our low estate, and weeps over our fall, gives Himself to the restoring of our souls, and almost as a suppliant pleads that we accept His favors, and then raises us to His very bosom, lavishing His love upon us, rejoicing in our joy, sorrowing in our sorrow, drawing us into most intimate communion, and forming, cherishing and working out the grandest designs for our future—does He not crown us with honor inconceivable?

He has not only raised us to such high honor, but in giving us Christ, He has freely given us all things. God's word is not to be interpreted in an intangible or unreal sense. The God of truth does not mislead us by what He says: the God of love would not use words of vast import of what is really little. Unto us are given "exceeding great and precious promises"—promises of answered prayer, of the supply of every need, of grace to sustain and deliver in every trial, promises that our sorrows shall end in praise and thanksgiving, promises of a salvation maintained on earth and perfected forever with God and the spirits of the just made perfect in heaven.

Not only have we these promises, we have the Divine Promiser. If we are children, then we are heirs of God. Ours are His love, His resources, His consolations: on our behalf are all His attributes and purposes. His desire for His children is that they be where He is: no child can be more free with a parent than can the child of God with His Heavenly Father.

What, then, shall we say to passing through life constantly despondent; dismayed when things seem wrong; wearing a harassed look as new needs arise; complaining and murmuring as though there were no Helper, no relief, no hope, no God. It is hard to think of anything more unchristian than a careworn face, and a manifestly burdened spirit, or of anything that impresses the world with the unreality of the Divine gifts. Our walk is surely unworthy of our calling, till, in our look, our step, our tone, our whole bearing, it is seen that "the peace of God which passeth all understanding keeps our heart and mind."

EDGAR W. WORK, D.D.

THE SPIRIT OF THANKFULNESS

BY

REV. EDGAR WHITAKER WORK, D.D.

Pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian Church, New York City

GOD is always looking for grateful men down here in the world. He must know that if men are grateful, if they have the spirit of thankfulness, they will be open-hearted toward good of every kind. When men have real gratitude in their souls they are preparing the way unconsciously for the coming of the Kingdom of God. Gratitude is the open sesame to the heart of God and to the whole kingdom of righteousness. It is ingratitude that bars the way to the greater coming of the Kingdom.

Gratitude, moreover, is one of the pivotal things in the Kingdom. One cannot conceive of a Christian without gratitude. Faith might exist without distinct gratitude, but it would be a rough and unbeautiful thing—like a marble statue carved with hatchets. It is quite clear that all the Christian faculties and virtues must be shot through and through with gratitude, else there is no touch of grace upon them and they are left hard and unfinished.

A distinguished critic was once asked to pass judgment upon the work of an artist. After scrutinizing the painting closely, he announced his decision: "It lacks that!" In like manner one who is without gratitude lacks an indefinable and beautiful Something. Something of vast importance is missing from a man's character, when gratitude is left out.

A Book of Thanksgiving

God is so interested in seeing a thankful spirit in us men here in the world, that He has given us a Book that overflows with expressions of praise. Whole sections, books even, of the Bible are given up to the gracious art of being grateful. Almost every page breathes gratitude; the vocabulary of this Book is rich with the language of thankfulness. The subject never grows old; there is always something new to be said about it. This is the value of the Psalms. They furnish a liberal education in praise. Speaking of our English Protestant Bible, Faber once said: "It lives on the ear like music." This is due in part to its lofty spirit of praise. From the Song of Miriam in the Old Testament to the Magnificat of Mary in the New Testament and on to the choric outburst of John's Apocalypse, the Bible runs over with song and thanksgiving.

Not only so, but God gave His people under the Old Covenant a special discipline in praise and thanksgiving. The thank-offering, the praise-offering, the heave-offering—what is the purpose of these provisions of the Mosaic ritual if it be not that God was here laying emphasis on gratitude? It was not that He delighted in animal sacrifice, but that He desired to train His people in the spirit of thankfulness. Those great choirs with the accompaniment of many instruments which the royal singer David organized—do we not see here how God was leading and training His people in the spirit of praise? It was as if He laid His finger upon the latent power of song in the hearts of His people and said: "Learn to sing unto Me; put praise in every note; wrap gratitude in every measure!"

Training in the Spirit of Gratitude

God's discipline in praise has not ceased even to the present day. One function of the church is to train men in the spirit of gratitude. Our forms and methods of worship must not be permitted to harden into routine. It is always a bit dangerous to follow forms of worship. History has proved this. Non-liturgical churches nowadays are quite as open to this danger as others. The chief danger in the habitual use of forms is that they may hamper the spirit of praise. Thankfulness cannot be made to order. One cannot make it run in grooves. Gratitude is something free and overflowing. There is a sense in which we must leave it unfettered and unhampered. If there is hallelujah in your heart, let it come forth! There must be a certain freedom and spontaneity about gratitude.

There ought to be meetings now and then in all our churches in which the stately restraints of worship are set aside, and the worshippers, unhampered by forms and rubrics of worship, open their hearts freely to God in thankfulness. There is not enough praise in our churches. We have limited and bound our worship so that it lacks somewhat in spirit, exhilaration, and exuberance. It does not blossom out as it ought. It does not flow and overflow. God is still looking for grateful men here in the world, men whose hearts are bursting with gratitude, men who sing because they must, whose spirit of thankfulness is too rich and full for the mere formulæ of praise.

"In Everything Give Thanks"

It is just this thought of the exuberance of gratitude that the apostle Paul has in mind when he says in one place: "In everything give thanks." He is thinking of hearts that are full and overflowing, souls that are eager and impulsive in their gratitude. This is the kind of gratitude that contains the joy of mountain-climbers, "the joy of leaping from rock to rock." "In everything give thanks!" It seems a large order, does it not? But our Gospel is not limited or cramped. The Apostle is telling us what the true spirit of thankfulness is. It is broad and inclusive, it takes in everything. You cannot set metes and bounds to gratitude. You must give it room. You must let it sweep through life like a flame. You must let it touch everything all around the circle and leave its mark everywhere. "In everything give thanks!" Oh, it is a great word, containing as it does the very breadth and comprehensiveness of God's own thought!

We have a tendency to make a half-measure of gratitude. We are apt to say, "Stay in that corner of my life, but come not hither into this corner." It is just because we are often quite selective in matters of gratitude, and often self-contained and gingerly in our thankfulness, that we need a text like this to sweep us off our feet. We are so apt to limit and define gratitude, to pick our steps, so to say, in being grateful. Then God comes by the pen of the apostle Paul and says: "In everything give thanks"—no half-measures in your thanks—no gingerly gratitude—no cautious hand upon your outpourings!

A Free Overflowing of Gratitude

It was just this spirit of exuberance in gratitude that our Lord commended in Mary who came with her costly alabaster box. It was the free overflowing of her gratitude, its unrestrained and unhampered plenty that touched Him. Our Lord was never wasteful. Once He called upon His disciples to gather up the fragments after a miracle. But when Judas complained of waste on this occasion, our Lord praised the wastefulness of one who loved with spontaneity and abandon. "The poor ye have always with you, but Me ye have not always," which is as if He said, "You will still go on doling out your gifts to the poor, but when you come unto Me you must come with a bursting heart," like this sister of the risen Lazarus, whose gratitude could only be expressed by the rich alabaster box broken at the feet of her Lord. It was the exuberance of her praise that touched Him.

But I hear someone say that to give thanks in everything is too broad and too inclusive. How can a man give thanks in everything? It is a real difficulty, no doubt. I hear one say: "How about my mistakes and trippings and fallings? Surely God does not expect me to give thanks for these!" I hear another say: "How about my sins, my moral lapses, my oft missings of God's true mark for men? Surely it is impossible to give thanks for these! The word is too broad—it says too much." And I hear another say: "How about my sorrows, the tearful chapters in life's book, the times of upheaval when the anchors seem to have fallen away? Surely God does not expect gratitude for these heart-breaking and soul-shattering troubles! How can a man thank God for the sorrow that has laid him low?"

Thankful in the Midst of Sorrow

The apostle does not say that we are to give thanks for everything, but in everything. Your sorrows, for example: you can be thankful in the midst of your sorrows—thankful that God is with you—that the touch of His hand is upon you—that His manifold presence is round about you. You can be thankful for the new and open way of access to God, for the new vistas of truth, for the very sense of dependence, for the sweetness of prayer and for the fruits of righteousness that follow after. The text omits nothing. "In everything give thanks."

Moreover when one yields himself fully to the spirit of thankfulness, something wonderful comes into his life. There comes to him a spirit of discovery. The man who has a thankful spirit begins to see new reasons for thankfulness. It is like going out in the springtime. You had not supposed that there were so many flowers! But if you have the spirit of discovery, your pathway is full of flowers. "He that hath a bountiful eye is blessed," says the Proverb. "A bountiful eye!" That is, a free and generous eye, one that does not see in stingy or niggardly fashion. It is tight eyes that make tight fists and tight hearts.

That rare poet whose life went out in the great war, Rupert Brooke, has said some fine things about this spirit of discovery in the world. "Half an hour's roaming about the street, or village, or railway station," he says, "shows so much beauty that it is impossible to be anything but wild with suppressed exhilaration. And it is not only the beauty of beautiful things; it is the flicker of sunlight on a fallen wall, or a reach of muddy pavement, or the smoke from a chimney at night. There is a sudden significance and importance and inspiration that makes the breath stop with a gulp of certainty and happiness."

When Paul says, "In everything give thanks," he means that we must look about us with the spirit of discovery, look into the nooks and crannies, into the by-paths of life, and find reasons for thankfulness. No day is so dark that we cannot find reasons for rejoicing. The number of our mercies always exceeds the number of our troubles. What most of us need is the habit of dwelling upon our blessings, and having bountiful eyes for the reasons for thankfulness.

Days of Good Tidings

How many days of good tidings there are! Days of recovery from sickness; of escape from great peril; days of completion of long journeys; of love's dawn in the heart; of restored friendship; of the return of loved ones; days of gracious invitation; of fruition of toil; of returning prosperity; of sunshine after rain; of open doors of opportunity; days of a friend's success; of discovery after long search; of wise decision; of unexpected results; of hope's reward! Time would fail to tell of the days of good tidings in life. "In everything give thanks." God forbid that our life should be stuffed with forgotten benefits!

The usefulness of most men can be measured by their spirit of thankfulness. God can do anything with a truly thankful person. The heart of such a one is open, receptive and ready. The finest asset any community can have is a company of souls that have learned the art of gratitude! There was an old man in a village long ago who lived in a shanty at the back of the town, surrounded by a small potato-patch. He was the poorest man in the town; yet he was the most distinguished citizen of the town. His sole art was the art of gratitude. He walked the village streets and men felt the fragrance of his presence everywhere he went. He taught men to open their hearts to God and their fellow-men. After many years I pay my tribute to that old man who walked among us with bowed shoulders, but with tender and open heart.

The Crown of All Our Blessings

The apostle adds something else to his word about thanks: "In everything give thanks, for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you." Every lesser reason for gratitude is carried up to this high level. It is the will of God in Christ Jesus! Here is the crown of all our blessings. In everything give thanks because Christ has touched everything. He has gone all round our life and left His mark of love and sacrifice upon everything. He has touched our sins, and mistakes, and short comings, our sorrows, our joys—and He has transformed them all! "This is the will of God in Christ Jesus."

The Harvest Joy

BY JULIA H. JOHNSTON.

What is the motive power that sends men into fields and gardens, and the incentive that keeps them faithful in the cultivation of the soil. It is the joy of the harvest time. An entire season lies between the planting and the ingathering, but the look forward sustains the toiler, till hope is fulfilled and he receives the recompense of reward which overpays his weariness. It is so in the natural world, and no less so in the spiritual. When the reward comes, the workers whom the Lord of the harvest has strengthened, "joy before Him according to the joy in harvest, and as men rejoice when they divide great spoil."

But who ever gathered sheaves without a seed-sowing? "Doth the plowman plow all day to sow? When he hath made plain the face thereof, doth he not cast in the wheat? For God doth instruct him to discretion, and doth teach him." There is an inexorable law of connection between sowing and reaping. The Lord has made plain the path to the harvest. It is along the furrow of the dropped seed. Whether it be seedcorn for the field, or the seed of the Word for the heart, God is the gracious Giver, but some human hand must prepare the ground and scatter the seed.

Then comes the Divinely-ordered mystery of the increase. The seed grows, but "the sower knoweth not how." It is not an instant development, as impatience may crave. It is "First the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear." Sun and shower minister to the growth, but how the husbandman must guard and aid, and preserve from injury, the blade and ear, and wait for the full corn. Is there always the assiduous care given the tender growth that it needs, especially when it is in the heart of youth? There is a waiting time as well as a working time. But "when the fruit is put forth, immediately he putteth in the sickle, because the harvest is ripe." Then woe to the harvester who leaves the grain ungathered, and the sheaves outside the garner. To what purpose is such waste?

Think of the increase which the Heavenly Husbandman bestows. "There shall be a handful of corn in the earth, the fruit thereof shall shake like Lebanon." And how small the seed, compared with the fruit. Whereunto is the Kingdom likened? "It is like a grain of mustard seed—less than all seeds, but when it is sown, it becometh greater than all herbs" and "fowls lodge in the branches."

Sometimes our Lord shortens the seasons and "the plowman shall overtake the reaper," that they may rejoice together, even before the four months that men say must elapse and "then cometh harvest." "Paul may plant, Apollos water but God giveth the increase." The promise standeth sure.

He who gives the joy of reaping
Unto us where others sowed,
Bids us scatter good seed broadcast,
That this joy may be bestowed
On the reapers coming after,
When we drop beside the road.
In the Harvest Home, hereafter,
We together will rejoice,
Plowmen, sowers, reapers, gleaners,
Lifting up exultant voice
Unto Him who gave His servants
Grace to make His work their choice.

Belief and Action

BY WILLIAM NORRIS BURR.

I remember reading quite a number of years ago an article by Mr. George W. Cable, the Southern novelist, headed "Professional Christianity." We often hear of "professed Christians" whose daily lives are thought not to tally with their "profession;" but Mr. Cable's purpose in that article was not to make the customary attack upon insincere Christians. It was rather a thoughtful man's appeal to all Christians to regard the Christian life as a business, a profession—to be entered upon as the doctor or lawyer takes up his chosen profession and "makes a business of it."

The appeal to begin the Christian life is an appeal to the heroic. To "believe on the Lord Jesus Christ" is more than a movement of the intellect favorable toward Him. It grips the whole man and starts him out along the road with the Mighty Master of Life who alone can be trusted to keep him in safety. And some considerable heroism is demanded of the man whose believing on the Lord Jesus Christ impels him to "deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow Him."

Our ears tingle in these days with war-notes. We go about our daily business stepping to martial music. Our hearts are aflame with patriotism. We are talking of "sacrifice" as a commonplace. That reminds me of a sentence of Coningsby Dawson's, whose letters from the trenches in the little book, "Carry On," I have just been reading. "Sacrifice" he writes, "was always too noble to be sensible." But the spirit depicted in his book, of sacrifice in the trenches and sacrifice too, in the homes of the world, reveals the fact that noble sacrifice is now coming to be regarded as "sensible"—it is no longer so extraordinary as to appear fanatical. But—is patriotism shall be regarded the supreme virtue; if sacrifice be confined to "winning the war," humanity will still be left to make its way along stony highways, instead of enjoying the green pastures and the waters of quietness to which God would be leading His people.

A formalistic believing on the Lord Jesus Christ is inadequate. It lacks life, vitality. Like mere ritualistic observances that end in routine there is no resultant healing or upbuilding of the soul. The man who makes a profession, a business, of his belief in Jesus Christ will so yield himself to the gracious power of his Lord as to be receiving day by day a supply of life in the inner man, that can be illustrated no more clearly than it was set forth by the Master Himself in His beautiful figure of the Vine and the branches.

Those who walk in closest comradeship with the Master may find encouragement in many evidences, that there is gradually emerging into the consciousness of men and of nations a finer sense of the fact that only the reality of the Christian religion can save. It is a quickened soul-life that places one among the "saved," not merely a formal "believing" on the Lord Jesus Christ.

Thanksgiving

BY REV. A. MESSLER QUICK

With penance and prayer, to our Lord we must go,
For blessings unbanded He has bestowed;
And hearts with thanksgiving responsive must be,
When His love so graciously answers our plea.
For since its sweet reign at the Throne first began,
Love evermore rules in Jehovah's wise plan,
And all through its range of age, place and mood,
With love and with gratitude the soul is imbued.

Thanksgiving we offer for God's loving care,
In castle or camp, of his people everywhere,
For the loves of the fireside, deep-rooted and pure,
Mid the joys and the sorrows, unfeigned, secure;
For intercourse sweet, in communion with kin,
For the peace that abounds from contentment within,
For the hearth and the home, and a generous board,
Thanksgiving we offer to our Sovereign Lord.

Thanksgivings arise from the altars of prayer,
When faith and devotion with the people are there;
When souls are enriched by the gospel of love,
And quickened by power transfused from above.
For benefits greater, in vain shall we search,
For souls are imbued divinely by the church,
Assured from the sphere by mortals intrud,
The voice of the church is the mandate of God.

For a prosperous realm, thanksgiving we owe,
Now battling for right, 'gainst a sinister foe,
For her genius and power, and the wealth of her stores,
As masterly weapons in the bloodiest of wars,
For the chivalrous pride, and the patriot zeal,
Investing her sons, in woe as in weal,
We rally, Our Father, at Thine altars today,
And offer thanksgiving, and fervently pray,
That victory be ours, and the battle flag furled,
With the herald of peace encircling the world.

RELIGIOUS WORK for OUR BOYS IN FRANCE

By Clifford E. Hayes

WHEN I came overseas I left an attractive pastorate in Philadelphia. After resigning this pastorate which had been gotten into good shape by two years of hard work I wondered continually on my way over here and after I had arrived if I were on a fool's errand and whether it were worth while to give my personal service in this particular field during these tragic and critical times.

I take my ordination to the ministry very seriously and feel that I have but one thing to do in life, that is to minister the gospel of Jesus the Christ to men so that they may learn to know Him and to share His life. I considered that this must be done in order that I might be of use to Him in building His kingdom on earth.

For this reason I came to my work in a very critical spirit, and for a while when my duties were mostly serving the canteen, cleaning the hut, cutting my own wood and doing errands for the boys in the town I scarcely felt that it was worth while. Then I began to ask the boys what the "Y" meant to them, and I found out for myself what it meant by going into one of their barracks and sleeping with them. There is very little light, the men are crowded of necessity: at that time there were over a hundred in a barrack sleeping in double tiers on bunks made of slats with clothing hanging all about and the ventilation coming all from the sides and ends and none from the roof. These barracks are the best that can be provided under the circumstances. They had small stoves but not enough to heat them as we are accustomed to have our houses and shops heated in America.

I can understand why the boys say that where there is no "Y" they surely would be "out of luck." I knew very soon after I began work that there was a reason for their coming to the hut in the evenings in such crowds. There they found an atmosphere free from army restrictions to a large degree, there they had a free and easy companionship, there they found heat, light and the daily papers, and how they grabbed them during the times that drives were on! We had hardly any time to eat evening mess because the boys were so eager to get the papers.

A Y. M. C. A. CANTEEN USED BY OUR BOYS IN FRANCE

In the "Y" they found magazines, games, writing materials and tables, a canteen supplied with candies, cakes, tobacco in form for smoking and chewing, soaps, towels, handkerchiefs, shoe strings, etc. In the winter they were offered cheese sandwiches and hot chocolate or cocoa. The place was crowded every evening and the men had to be driven out at closing time.

Sunday always brought a change in the program, for then we had the service conducted by the chaplain in the morning and a song service conducted by the secretary in the evening. Those were the times when the boys could choose what they wanted to have sung, and they kept us busy singing the old favorites and the new gospel songs that were brought into popularity in the past few years. At those times we were able to get close to the men's hearts and they began to ask us questions which we would do our best to answer for them. Whenever the announcement was made of an evening song service with some definite topic touching on life problems here a good crowd was assured.

One splendid feature I had in our hut was the evening word of Scripture and prayer. Five minutes before closing time we announced the little reading from the New Testament and prayer. We had good audiences and frequently the boys spoke their appreciation of those little quiet times of devotion.

One song service that I held was quite interesting. A new unit had come to our camp and the old boys were all gone. This bunch had been up front and were what might be called regular "hard boiled guys" and they wanted everyone to know it. I started the song service one Sunday night and a bunch of these boys rushed in on their way to the barrack, determined to break up the prayer meeting. They sang parodies of the hymns, but we kept right on till one of the new bunch asked for "Softly fades the twilight ray," and then a spell passed over the whole crowd. From that time on both the ones who had a "little too much on" and the others sang their heads off for an hour. And after that time we had good meetings.

At most of the camps where I have served there was no chaplain service as the units over here are frequently broken up and scattered over a wide territory in more than a half dozen camps, which prevents the chaplain from holding the services for the boys as he would. In such cases when he found the secretary to be an ordained man the chaplain would ask him to conduct the services. Our best service was the Communion Service. Officers and privates came in great numbers to pledge their loyalty to the Great Captain and to receive that communion of the broken body and shed blood, and greatly did they appreciate the privilege. We made quite a bit of Mother's Day, and that brought the men out in great numbers. Most of the camps would be without these ministries, were it not for the Y. M. C. A. secretaries. Business men, traveling salesmen, and other classes of men conduct these services in the huts, for the secretary is a man of many lines of activity. Whether he ever led a meeting before matters not, and out of the necessities of the hour the "Y" men are becoming able workers who will make their impress upon the churches back home where they were attendants before and will hereafter be able to take active part in the work from the training which was forced upon them here.

A Y. M. C. A. CANTEEN DUG-OUT ONLY 150 YARDS FROM THE GERMAN LINES

A GROUP OF Y. M. C. A. HUT WOMEN IN FRANCE

But my impression of the value of the "Y" is not derived so much from the services which the secretaries or other workers hold in the huts and tents as from the general living out of an interpretation of the life of Jesus as one of unselfish service for others.

The secretaries and the "Y" places are serving the men in every way possible, from supplying their need for chocolate to that of a friend who will listen to their tale of woe concerning the way the "best girl" back home does not write as she should, which may involve even the writing of a letter for him to her. It supplies the movies and the athletic games and other entertainments that occupy the dull hours and make life livable under these circumstances.

Here in the town of Nevers, the chef-lieu, or, as we would say, the capital or county seat of this department, are many interesting places, for this town was in existence from the beginning of the Christian era and has been the scene of many battles. Here resided the duke of this section and here is a cathedral dating from the time of Charlemagne and connected with him very intimately. Cæsar himself was here.

Twice on Sundays parties of the boys are conducted about the town on tours to the interesting places. Old chateaux five or eight hundred years old are toured with "Y" workers as guides. These things help the men to an extent that cannot be measured.

And then mention must be made of those blessed American women whom the "Y" is sending out here. Already several hundred of these women have come overseas. They act as hostesses in the huts, and also have charge of the canteen refreshment counters. They serve long hours and not infrequently do their work within range of the enemy's guns. In a multitude of cases these canteen workers are the last American women seen by our soldiers before they go into the tense activities of the front line trenches. No wonder the boys cheer themselves hoarse over these women. One fellow said he would give his month's pay to look at an American girl. Just the sight of one of these fine women such as we have loved and left behind us—that is a wonderful privilege. I certainly believe in the "Y" service to the men overseas.

Nevers, France. (By mail.)

Finding Your Work

BY CORA S. DAY

There is a card gotten out by the Woman's Committee of the Council of National Defense, which is to be filled out and filed for reference. It is a card of registration for service, and it covers that field of service most completely. More than a hundred lines of work are there enumerated, from peaceful dairying to perilous aviation; and you are expected to mark the things you can do best. There is meant to be no wasted time or effort by any one who would help in these help-needed times. Everybody is to serve along familiar lines by doing the things she knows and likes best.

It is a practical application of the truth:—"No profit grows where is no pleasure taken," and a carrying out of the advice that follows: "In brief . . . study what you most effect." For truly you can best serve in your own way along the lines of the talent that God has given you. The dairy maid would make but a poor aviatrix, yet in her own work she is valuable indeed, helping to feed the world.

So God does not ask us to go into unusual, unfamiliar, perplexing work in order to serve Him best. He wants us to do whatever has become, through choice and liking and practice our best medium of expression of skill; and He wants that work, our own familiar task, so consecrated, so filled with the desire of honoring and glorifying Him, that it will show forth our love and His grace, whether it be the humblest or the highest task.

The Colleges in War Time

BY PAUL V. D. HOYSRADT

Grim War has settled down on the colleges both in our own land and abroad. The atmosphere is tense with hope and expectancy, for the hearts of those who remain behind is with the hundreds of "old boys" now in the training camps or at the front "somewhere in France."

Among the many poets who have tried to express the feelings of those now lingering about the campus, few have succeeded quite as well as Miss Winifred M. Letts in her poem, "The Spires of Oxford," which appears in the volume, "Poems of the Great War." Being an Irish poetess to begin with, it was natural that Miss Letts should cling to Irish precedents in writing verse. The following stanzas certainly fall under that classification, for what they lack in color and high-sounding phrases, they make up in directness and depth of feeling:

"I saw the spires of Oxford
As I was passing by,
The gray spires of Oxford
Against a pearl-gray sky.
My heart was with the Oxford men
Who went abroad to die.

"The years go fast in Oxford,
The golden years and gay,
The hoary Colleges look down
On careless boys at play.
But when the bugles sounded war
They put their games away.

"They left the peaceful river,
The cricket-field, the quad,
The shaven lawns of Oxford,
To seek a bloody sod—
They gave their merry youth away
For country and for God.

"God rest you, happy gentlemen,
Who laid your good lives down,
Who took the khaki and the gun
Instead of cap and gown.
God bring you to a fairer place
Than even Oxford town."

Hardly any less haunting, however, is the poem, "The College, 1917," which appeared in Scribner's Magazine for November, 1917. The author of this poem is Hamilton Fish Armstrong, who is the son of Maitland Armstrong, the noted American artist. It seems a significant fact in view of the sentiment in these lines that the young poet became a member of the heavy artillery in one of the Southern camps. When Mr. Armstrong wrote this poem, he evidently had one particular college in mind, but the thought he draws forth might be applied quite as appropriately to the average American institution:

"The darkness is full of well remembered sounds
And smells of vanished spring,
Old North's calm clock is making his tuneful rounds,
The echoes leap and sing
In the old, old way from the star-topped tower to tower—
I pause in the shadow and strain
For the voices that now will arise to salute the hour:
But they come not here again.

"Cradled along the tops of the ancient trees
Swings autumn's newest moon—
The shadows shiver before the silent breeze
Heralding Night's high noon.
Scattered lights gleam out through the leaded glass,
Where the lowest leaves begin:
But many a window is dark, and I turn and pass
Where I used to enter in.

"On the edge of night when still is seen no morning,
Princeton, you stand and smile,
Glad to give when the call followed the warning,
Your sons for a little while.
And if they come not again, as before some came not,
Heart-free and young and whole,
They know their names, like their fathers' fathers', shame not
Your ghostly honor-roll."

The Good Shepherd

BY Z. IRENE DAVIS

Jesus came to seek and save the lost. There is no place where He is not searching. In the great city, in the byways of the country, under the starlight, and the gas light, in the darkness, at high noon, in the trenches, on the deep, and in prison, He is seeking out the lost.

Gipsy Smith tells this story of a dying soldier boy. "Here was a dear boy on a stretcher—I had led him to Christ. He was so broken I took the blanket and lifted it from his face, and then I got down and kissed him, and my lips and hands got covered with his blood. I kissed him for his mother, for I knew she would never kiss him. I thought he was unconscious, but he asked me:

"'Gipsy, Gipsy, does it mean Blighty?' (for Blighty means home and mother), 'or does it mean West—and West means death.

"So I said: 'It means West: you are too far gone for Blighty; you will never see mother again. Can I tell her anything?' and he said to me:

"'Tell her I am not afraid to die; I have found Christ.' And then he pointed to his head and said to me: 'Yes, it is battered and broken, but it will be all right when I get the crown.'"

HIS VINEYARD AND OURS

A Guitar Player of India

The interesting picture which appears on this page is reproduced from a photograph sent to the American Tract Society by Rev. E. M. Wherry, D.D., of the Punjab Mission of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A. It shows us a typical native of India, and reveals the fact that music is one of the recreations which the people of India enjoy.

The Punjab Mission, with which Dr. Wherry is connected, has done much for the cause of Christian literature in India, and it has been the privilege of the American Tract Society to send many cash appropriations for this branch of the work, which for several years has been under the direct superintendence of Dr. Wherry.

Through the printed page the music of the Gospel is making itself heard throughout the length and breadth of India, and there is every promise of wonderful developments in the immediate future, if only the missionary enterprise is supported with vigor and consecration not only by the workers in the field, but by those in the homeland to whom the missionaries look for generous gifts and constant and prayerful sympathy.

In South Africa

Rev. E. A. M. Harris of the Chisalala Station of the South Africa General Mission writes:

"It is with great joy that we record, after four months, we are still 'Bringing in the sheaves.' In fact we are in the thick of harvesting. God gave us the privilege of telling the story of the first breaking down of heathenism in Kaonde villages, a privilege that only the pioneer missionary can fully realize. Hitherto all our converts had been drawn from the school and from those who were working on the station. The years of breaking up that fallow ground and of seed-sowing were about to yield their increase, and since the 12th of November, 1917, it has been our joy to see village after village yielding up its fruit to the Master. It might well be recorded of our Teacher-Evangelists: 'And they went forth, and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the Word with signs following.' 'What were the signs?' you ask. Old men and women, young men and maidens, those of maturer years and little children coming out of heathen darkness to walk with the Lord in light. What more? Changed lives, the difference can already be seen, both by word and deed, the new life from the 'True Vine' welling up and causing the old dead leaves of heathenism (customs centuries old, and dear to the heathen heart) to drop off. At first the converts were to be numbered by tens, then twenties, and now by hundreds."

The Scripture Gift Mission

Among all the sad stories that come to us from the battlefield, surely the saddest is that of the wounded soldier who has had to lie helpless and suffering for hours, days even, unprotected from sun and rain by day; his pain-stricken face upturned by night to the silent stars of Heaven. Happily, so perfect is the Red Cross organization, so thorough the search of the ground after a fight, that such cases are rare, and then due chiefly to the swaying to and fro of the battle-line, and the isolation of some member of a unit. Who can tell what passes between God and the soul in the case of a wounded man lying thus alone, especially when his sole companion is a copy of the Word of God? A Scotch worker writing to the Secretary of the Scripture Gift Mission, tells a remarkable story:

"I heard the other day of a soldier who was wounded, and was lying out for seven days before he was brought into the hospital. He had a Gospel of St. Mark with him, and he said how he enjoyed reading it. He sent it here for his aunt to see it; it's all mud, but he told her to send it back, as he would not part with it as long as he lives."

A GUITAR PLAYER OF INDIA

God's children have for years been crying to Him for Revival; instead of the answer we expected, there came upon us War! But war has brought the greatest opportunity of all time for the distribution of the Word of God, and the total of copies of the New Testament and Gospels distributed among the fighting nations since the war began, by the Scripture Gift Mission alone totals some twenty millions. The same testimony comes from every land, that there was never such an eager desire to possess God's Word as now. What more sure way of preparation for revival can there be than a knowledge of the Word of God, which alone can make wise to salvation!

A Messenger of Democracy

In a recent issue of the "Asia" magazine, which is the official organ of the American Asiatic Association, Mr. Tyler Dennett writes of "The New Type of Missionary," and pictures the American missionary as a messenger of democracy in these words:

"It may be many decades, even centuries, before democracy appears in its noon-day splendor among the backward nations, but none the less the day of the common people is dawning. The most marked feature of the Orient today is the drift toward democracy. In the creation of this movement the missionary, particularly the American missionary, has had a very large part. He teaches the people to read and to think together. The Methodist Episcopal Mission in Hinghwa, China, for example, publishes the only newspaper for more than three million people. The American missionary is himself a democrat. He usually has been born on a farm; he worked his way through a small college in the Middle West. He fairly exudes democracy wherever he goes. He demands religious liberty, preaches the brotherhood of men high and low, gives himself to the care of the unfit and the weak which are so often trampled under foot by the backward races, and sets before people the Bible which ever has been the inspiration of democratic movements. The missionary becomes unconsciously the builder of a new civilization or at least of a new social ideal. Whatever he builds is democratic. It must be from the very nature of the instruction. The missionary not only reaches the influential people of the community; he creates them."

Conditions in Bombay, India

A vivid picture of the conditions that have resulted from the war is presented in a recent letter from Rev. James Smith, Secretary of the Bombay Tract and Book Society. He writes in part as follows:

"I am very sorry that we have not been able to send out a copy of our audited accounts for the year 1917. Every European of military age in India was called up a year ago for drill, while a very large number of the best young men have enlisted in the Indian Army. The result is that our Auditors are behind with their work, and many of the leading houses in Bombay are still waiting for their audit.

"We have, of course, made up our accounts. We do that every month, and send out to our General Committee a statement of sales. We were able to report a steady growth in business which amounted to 36 per cent. for the whole year. We have done still better in 1918, and at present prospects are very bright.

"We continue to sell large numbers of English religious books to educated natives of this country, and of course the presence of a large army in Mesopotamia has brought many demands for religious books of all kinds.

"A very considerable demand has also sprung up from East Africa, not only from British East Africa, but also from the late German East Africa. We expect therefore this year to be able to record a very large advance over last year's work, though last year's sales were the highest in the history of the Bombay Tract and Book Society."

Hindus Reached Through Applied Christianity

Mr. F. S. Brockman, associate general secretary of the International Y. M. C. A., tells in a recent issue of The Missionary Review of the World a story of the first Y. M. C. A. secretaries to accompany Indian troops:

"Among Orientals the lowest man on earth is a barber. In China the only man whose sons are not eligible for the public examinations is the barber. At first there was nothing for the secretaries to do; but finally the hair of the Indian soldiers began to grow and needed cutting; and although they themselves were of the lowest class, there was not one of them who was low enough to act as barber to another. And then came the time of these university men, who were called 'sahib' by the Indians. They said: 'This is the thing for us to do.' And they started around serving as barbers. It was not long before those soldiers began writing home, saying: 'When we left home there was no Mohammedan who cared for our souls; there was no Hindu priest on the boat; there were no Buddhists who looked after us; but these Christians, they have been brothers to us; they have acted as if they were servants to us. There is nothing they have not done for us. Put my daughter or my son into the missionary school. We want to know what the Christian religion is.'"

"That brings us back to the words of our Lord: 'I am the life.' And any man who lives the life, though he may for a moment keep his mouth shut, can bear the testimony that needs to be borne. There is no work that we have seen anywhere more successful in direct spiritual results and Christian propaganda than that we are doing among the Indian troops."

Christian Endeavor Abroad

In the union church at Pedro Miguel, in the Canal Zone, an Intermediate society was recently formed which has re-organized into a Young People's society. This society has given generously toward the salary of the preacher, has given to Belgian relief, and not only gives to mission work, but sends Bibles to children in a mission school.

Hindoo and Mohammedan friends paid part of the expenses of a Christian Endeavor convention held at Rauri, near Bombay, India. One man contributed a dinner to several hundred guests.

An Endeavorer in India made up his mind some years ago to attend the great Christian Endeavor convention at Agra, India. The missionary told him that the speaking would all be in English, but the man said that he had sold his buffalo and hired an interpreter to tell him what was being said. Who of us would sacrifice his best work animal to attend a convention?

Notes upon the Topics Used
in Christian Endeavor
and Other Young People's Societies.

THE PRAYER MEETING

By
Rev. Henry Lewis
Ph.D.

NOVEMBER 3.
All for Christ. V. Our Time.
Ecclesiastes 12:1-7.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M., Oct. 28. Life's little span. Ps. 39: 1-5.
T., Oct. 29. Wasted time. Acts 17: 21.
W., Oct. 30. New use of time. 1 Pet. 4: 1-9.
T., Oct. 31. At Christ's disposal. Phil. 1: 19-26.
F., Nov. 1. Full consecration. Luke 1: 67-80.
S., Nov. 2. Letting time slip. 2 Chron. 24: 1-5.

Time is a commodity in which every human being must deal. Whatever our talents, our abilities, our ambitions or our possessions we are all responsible for the use of the time which we have, and while we may have varying amounts of money, we all have exactly the same amount of time at our disposal.

In a certain sense time is the most valuable commodity that we possess, for time is the stuff of which life is made, and therein lies its priceless value.

The Use of Time

Because time is so valuable, we should use it as we would use a precious jewel. Every hour is a golden hour, if we but fully realize its significance, and the use to which we put the golden hours of each day will furnish the surest index to our characters.

Some one has said, "Every day is a clean leaf in the book of life, the hours being the ruled lines. What shall we write on these lines?" In answer to this query let us write lessons of truth, industry, patience, hopefulness and service on the lines of the passing hours. Let us so write that when the record of each day is ended, we shall not have a marred and blotted page to confront us, but a page that shall merit the "Well done" of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Waste of Time

To waste time is a crime. Never was there a period in the world's history when time was so valuable or fraught with such momentous issues as it is today. It goes without saying that to spend time in vicious or evil practices is a sin. But is it not also sinful merely to fritter away our time in idle pursuits when there is such a loud call to engage in occupations that will be for the benefit of humanity?

Time spent in needed resting or in healthful recreation is not time wasted. But time that is spent in idle frivolity or in questionable indulgences is time that is worse than thrown away.

Consecrated Time

Beyond the time that we spend in useful toil, in healthful recreation and in needful rest we should consecrate some definite time to Christian service. There are many lines of opportunity open, and every Christian should devote a part of his or her time to some definite form of endeavor for the support of the church, for the uplift of humanity and for the progress of the Kingdom.

Let us give a stated time to the study of God's Word and to our private devotions. Time spent in prayer and meditation is not time wasted, for every moment that we spend in communion with God will make us stronger to do His Will and to help the world to a higher and better plane of living.

Our Scripture portion reminds us of the fact that at last time itself will end. The duty therefore rests upon us of so using the present time that we may be fitted for the eternity that awaits us. A famous man in his dying moments murmured the words, "So much to do, so little done." Perhaps he had not laid up in heaven the treasure that he realized he should have done. He had accomplished great earthly achievements, but that counted for little as he faced eternity.

NOVEMBER 10.
Are You Afraid?
Luke 12:1-12.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M., Nov. 4. Are you afraid of offending God? Heb. 12: 25-29.
T., Nov. 5. Of wronging any one? Mal. 3: 1-6.
W., Nov. 6. Of death? Isa. 38: 1-8.
T., Nov. 7. Of judgment? Rom. 8: 28-39.
F., Nov. 8. Of lack? Matt. 6: 25-34.
S., Nov. 9. Of temptation? 1 Cor. 10: 11-13.

The word "fear" has widely variant meanings. The Scriptures teach us that the fear of God is the beginning of wisdom, yet Jesus said, "Fear not." So in the study of our topic we must use careful discrimination, and learn what is the fear that God requires and what the fear that Jesus would have us cast aside.

"Are you afraid?" is a question to which we should always be able to answer No. Sometimes mere physical weakness makes us afraid, but a well, strong man or woman who is striving to do what is right should never be afraid.

Fear Not the Light

If we will study the words of Jesus as recorded in our Scripture lesson we shall learn some of the things of which we should never be afraid.

We should never fear the light. Those who are evil-minded love darkness rather than the light, but those whose consciences are clear rejoice in the light. Let us remember the words of Jesus: "There is nothing covered up, that shall not be revealed; and hid, that shall not be known. Wherefore whatsoever ye have said in the darkness shall be heard in the light; and what ye have spoken in the ear in the inner chambers shall be proclaimed upon the housetops."

Fear Not Earthly Tyrants

"Be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do," said Jesus. In other words, fear not earthly tyrants. It was the following out of this injunction that inspired the early Christians not to fear Nero or any of the other Caesars. It is the same spirit today that has animated the heroic Belgians not to fear the Kaiser or his minions but to stand against almost overwhelming odds for the defence of their homeland and for the inviolability of that solemn treaty which the German Chancellor scornfully described as a mere "scrap of paper."

Our Master teaches us to fear Him, "who after he hath killed hath power to cast into hell." Some commentators have thought that this referred to the devil but that seems to be a wiser interpretation which makes it refer to God Himself. We are bidden to defy and resist the devil but never to fear him, and assuredly Satan has never been given the power to decide the destiny of a single human soul.

Blasphemy Not the Holy Spirit

Our Scripture lesson refers to the sin of blasphemy against the Holy Spirit, which is often spoken of as the unpardonable sin. It is not wise to speculate much on the character of this sin. As Dean Farrar has said, "On the exact nature of the unpardonable sin theologians have speculated in vain, and all we can say is that it must be the most flagrant degree of sin against the fullest light and knowledge."

Fear Not Persecution

Jesus clearly teaches us not to fear persecutors of any sort. We should not be afraid of earthly rulers, nor should we be in any anxiety as to what we should say when called in question for our faith. If we are thoroughly persuaded in our own minds of the truth of the Gospel which we profess and if we are filled with the Holy Spirit, we shall always be ready to give a reason for the faith that is in us to any inquisitor.

NOVEMBER 17.
Reforms That Need Our Aid
Amos 8:4-10.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M., Nov. 11. Temperance reform. Job 22: 22-30.
T., Nov. 12. Sabbath reform. Isa. 56: 1-2.
W., Nov. 13. Peace. Ps. 46: 1-11.
T., Nov. 14. Government reform. Isa. 33: 13-17.
F., Nov. 15. Evil language. Matt. 12: 31-37.
S., Nov. 16. Labor reform. Jas. 5: 1-6.

There are many evils existent in the world today, and every reform movement that aims at the elimination of those evils should have the earnest and enthusiastic support of every member of every Young People's Society in the land.

The Temperance Reform

There is great ground for encouragement in the splendid progress that has been made in recent months by the temperance movement. We must not rest satisfied, however, with the present gains, but we must push the battle against the liquor traffic until prohibition is established as the law of the land and total abstinence as the principle for every individual not only for the duration of the war but for all time.

The Labor Reform

Much has been done to ameliorate the conditions of labor during recent years. Yet there are still things that need to be done in order that the laboring man and woman may have what they are justly entitled to, namely, reasonable hours of employment, fair wages, sanitary conditions and such a system of representation that labor and capital may meet on equal terms in the discussion of matters that are of common interest.

Child labor is one of the evils that remain to be eliminated, and we should lend all possible help to those who are striving to banish this evil from our land.

Careful attention should be given to the conditions surrounding the employment of women. Proper treatment for negro laborers is also one of the reforms that need to be accomplished.

Sabbath Reform

Here is a great field for effort. The tendency of the present war conditions is greatly to disturb the observance of the Sabbath as a day of rest and worship. Yet the Sabbath is a priceless boon to humanity, from a physical, social, economic and religious point of view.

What we need to do is to strive to protect the sanctity of the Lord's Day in every possible way. In recent years the lure of the automobile has kept many from the services of divine worship. Yet at the request of the Government the use of automobiles for pleasure was wholly discontinued on several recent Sundays. Shall we not urge the American people to listen to a voice that is higher than that of any earthly ruler and to make any sacrifice of personal pleasure that is needful in order that we may conserve the Christian Sabbath.

International Reform

There are other important reforms that need to be prosecuted in our own country such as the movement for an absolutely honest ballot, and the effort to eliminate all dishonest weights and measures. But there is one reform of an international character which needs the support of Christian people all over the world. That is the movement for a League of Nations. As Bishop Gore has well pointed, this is a reform to which the Christian Church in all lands should commit herself unreservedly, for it furnishes the only feasible solution for the problems that face the nations today.

NOVEMBER 24.
"Count Your Mercies"
1 Chronicles 29:10-14.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M., Nov. 18. Grateful for salvation. Rom. 5: 1-11.
T., Nov. 19. For God's care. Ps. 115: 9-18.
W., Nov. 20. For homes. John 19: 25-27.
T., Nov. 21. For friendship. Eccl. 4: 9-12.
F., Nov. 22. For enlightenment. 1 John 2: 1-11.
S., Nov. 23. For rest. Matt. 11: 25-30.

As we think of the mercies for which we should render praise to our Heavenly Father at this Thanksgiving season we should recognize the personal blessings which He has sent into our lives. Whatever our lot in life, there are some things to be thankful for in our own personal experience. We should be grateful for the measure of health granted unto us, for the comforts that we have in our homes and for the multitudinous tokens of the Divine love that crown our daily lives.

We should thank God for the blessings which we enjoy in common with our fellowmen. In other words we should gratefully recognize the blessings which come to the community in which we dwell and the church of which we are members.

God has so ordained human life that there are many things which we have in common with others. These we call the common blessings of life and often we forget to thank our Father for these gifts. Thanksgiving comes to remind us that every good and perfect gift cometh from above and that we ought to thank God for everything that we have.

National Blessings

At this Thanksgiving season we think especially of our country, and we raise the query, for what should we be thankful as a nation?

Though we are involved in the awful conflict which has devastated so much of the world and that has brought sorrow to so many homes, including many in our own land, still there are developments in our national life for which we should be devoutly thankful.

We have had bounteous crops, which is in itself a cause for thankfulness. But a still greater cause for gratitude is the fact that we are learning to share with the needy ones of the world the gifts of nature which Providence has so bountifully bestowed upon us.

Another cause for gratitude is the unity of spirit which has pervaded our nation in support of the high aims which have been set before us by our honored President, who has become the spokesman of all the Allies in their struggle with the powers of autocracy and militarism. This national solidarity is a matter for deepest congratulation, for few, if any, ever dreamed that our nation could be welded into such oneness of thought and action within such a brief space of time.

Spiritual Blessings

Chief among the mercies that demand our grateful acknowledgment are the blessings of our spiritual life. The great truths of our Christian faith call for constant recognition, and for every revelation which God has made of Himself through His Holy Word and in the Person of our Lord and Saviour we should offer a song of praise.

The year that is now drawing to its close may have brought some great sorrow or bereavement into our lives. There may be more than one vacant place at the table as we sit down to our Thanksgiving meal. But if our hearts are fixed upon God, we shall learn the blessed truth that all things work together for good to them that fear Him, and in spite of all our tribulations we shall rejoice by faith in Him who doeth all things well.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS

Rosemary

BY MINNIE LEONA UPTON

*Dear little plant with the beautiful name,
Growing in Grandmother's garden,
I thought you were homely when first I came,*

But I humbly beg your pardon.

*Never a blossom that Summertime weaves
Has odor half so witching
As the fragrance that dwells in your cool green leaves,*

The drowsy air enriching.

*Rosemary meek, you have taught to me
This lesson sweet and holy:
That treasures rare and pue may be Within a dwelling lowly.*

When the Sun Went Away

BY L. D. STEARNS.

ELIZABETH was baking mud-pies in the sunniest corner of the yard. A little way back, underneath a great tree, Big Brother Jim had fastened a board to a couple of chunks of wood, making a very good table, indeed, and as Elizabeth carried her pies from the sun-oven and placed them upon her cool, shaded table she felt very proud and happy. Her curls were golden, and her eyes were blue, while her cheeks were as pink as the two great roses that swayed back and forth with every breeze on the bush at the opposite side of the yard.

Patting fresh pies into shape, she sang happily, stopping every now and then to dance a little. And then, quite suddenly, with a soft thump, Puss-Purr landed squarely on the table, straight in the midst of the pies. "Meow-ow!" said she.

The pink in Elizabeth's cheeks turned suddenly to red. "You horrid, horrid cat!" she cried emphatically, and catching Puss-Purr up boxed both her ears. "Scat!" she cried, spitting her hands.

"Cluck, cluck!" Turning sharply, Elizabeth saw the Little Red Hen and her four small chicks pecking busily away at the two remaining pies that were baking in the sun.

A moment she stood quite still—too angry to say a word. Then, with a stamp of her foot, she started forward and shooed the little hen quite around the other side of the yard. "I don't like you, even the tiniest little bit, you had hen!" she choked.

When she came back into the little square of sunshine she did not seem like the girl who had been singing so happily there only a few moments before. Every trace of brightness had left her face. Sitting down on a big stone she kicked one foot crossly against its side.

Next moment, whistling a merry tune, Big Brother Jim came into the yard. "Where's the sun?" asked he.

Elizabeth colored. That was what Brother Jim always said when she was cross. She tossed her curls. "Puss smashed all my pies but two, and the Little Hen spoiled those," she said, looking the other way.

"So," laughed Big Brother Jim, "you got cross and drove the sun away."

"I didn't drive it away," she declared dismally. "It just went."

"Let me tell you something, honey," Brother Jim sat down beside her. "It doesn't make one bit of difference whether you're big or little, when you've hurt anybody, or anything, you are going to feel just as bad and maybe a good deal worse than they do. And if you want to feel good again—awfully good, you know—you've got to do the best you can to make it—right!" Without another word he jumped up and went off toward the barn.

A little longer Elizabeth continued sitting on the stone; then all at once she sprang to her feet. "The Little Red Hen laid eggs for me all that long time I was sick," she said remorsefully, "and Puss-Purr came in and visited me every day." With a sober face she went toward the house.

"Mamma," begged she, "can I make a party for Puss and the Little Red Hen?"

"Why, yes; I guess so," smiled her mother. "There's a bit of milk in the little gilt pitcher, and you can get a big handful of grain for the Little Hen."

Pouring the milk into Puss' dish Elizabeth carried it out and placed it in the shade beneath the great tree. Then she piled the grain in exactly the same place where the two spoiled pies had sat baking in the sun. "Puss-Purr! Puss-Purr!" she cried softly. "Puss-Purr!"

A yellow head peeped from the barn, and stooping, Elizabeth held out her have her," remarked her mother, stitching busily.

"But—it's raining now and we may not be able to play outdoors," said Lela, still serious.

"Well, can't you have a fine time upstairs in your play room?" asked her mother, rather puzzled.

"Oh, mother!" Lela burst out, "don't you remember how things look after Marie has been here? Just as if a whirlwind had gone through the place. It takes me days to tidy up again!"

Mrs. Lynn stopped sewing and looked thoughtfully at her grave little daughter. "That's true," she admitted. "Marie's

So Marie left the doll family scattered here and there and pulled out half a dozen story books which she looked through with interest. After that she took all the cunning "Quaddies" from their box, and laughed over Sammy Jay and Uncle Billy Possum. Tiring of them, she looked about for something new.

She found a whole drawerful of bright beads in Lela's doll bureau, and suggested that they string them. So Lela got two needles with long threads and the girls enjoyed seeing the gay beads slide down to the end. Marie spilled most of her beads, however, and did not bother to pick them up, for just then it was time for the tea party.

Lela served lemonade in her pretty Japanese cups, and ginger cookies in her painted bonbon dish. After that Marie thought she had better go home. To her surprise Lela said, "But first we must set things to rights. We've had such a lovely time and we mustn't spoil it, must we, by leaving work to do later!"

Marie blinked, then with her good-natured laugh cried: "Of course. Give me a cloth and I'll dry the dishes." After that she picked up the beads, and chattering gaily the two girls soon had the play room in apple-pie order, and it was more like a game than real work.

The next week Lela took her favorite doll, Babette, and went to play with Marie. Marie's mother was away and there were toys scattered all over the house. Lela, interested in some large picture books, found one of them on the piano and several on the stairs. But of course the little girls had fun all afternoon, dressing up with long, swishy trains, and having a lunch in the kitchen, where the breakfast dishes still stood unwashed. After that Lela said, "Now I'll help you put all your things away, Marie. Mother says the rule that keeps our fun going is to set things in order when we're through playing."

Marie looked rather confused as she surveyed the untidy house.

"There's a big chest in the bedroom," she remembered. "Maybe it would surprise mother if I did put my things away altogether."

It meant real work this time, the girls soon found, especially as Lela insisted on washing the dishes too. But things looked so nice that they felt amply repaid afterward.

"Isn't it lovely to look around now?" sighed Marie as Lela started home. "Mother will be so glad I'm learning to help her."

Her tired mother was happy indeed when she saw what the girls had done for her, and after that she realized that her little daughter was quite old and big enough to observe the rule of order.

A Sunday School Kindergarten in South America

The children of South America are coming into their own. Rev. George P. Howard, Sunday School Secretary for South America, reports a remarkable Sunday School workers' conference held recently in Buenos Ayres. It was a stormy day, but that evening nearly 200 Sunday School teachers, superintendents and pastors gathered together. They had an address on the work of the superintendent and after that a demonstration of a model kindergarten class with the use of a sand-table. This demonstration was in charge of Miss Hardynia Norville, representative of the World's Christian Temperance Union in these countries. Miss Norville is an expert kindergartner and is taking great interest in developing and strengthening this phase of Sunday School work. She has established a model kindergarten in one of the Mission schools and has planned to admit as teacher students a number of young girls from the different churches who will get splendid training in watching and helping Miss Norville with her kindergarten.

THE YOUNG SHIPBUILDER

arms. "I do love you, Pussy," she whispered, and with a loud meow-ow, Pussy sprang straight into her arms.

The very next moment, with a questioning "cluck, cluck!" the Little Red Hen came around the corner of the barn.

Elizabeth's eyes were all a-shine once more. "I love you, too, Little Hen," she called.

"Cluck, cluck!" Ruffling all her feathers, the Little Red Hen marched straight for the pile of grain.

Down the path flew Elizabeth. "Brother Jim! Brother Jim! You were right, right, right!" she cried.

Their Play Room Rule

BY DAISY D. STEPHENSON.

"Mother, Marie says she is coming over to play tomorrow afternoon," and with these words Lela's blue eyes sought her mother's face anxiously.

"Well, I'm sure you will be glad to mother is so busy making a living, sewing from house to house, that she has little time to keep things in order. Perhaps we can help Marie to understand—and help her mother as you help me, dear." Then she told Lela a little plan that occurred to her just then.

The next afternoon Marie romped in, bringing her doll Winona in a very soiled frock.

"Oh, how pretty and clean your dolls look!" she exclaimed as she began lifting Lela's beloved children from doll carriage and bed.

"I wash their clothes every week," explained Lela. "I have a little tub and washboard and even my own clothes-line and iron."

Marie was all eyes and "ohs" as she inspected these treasures. "I think I'll wash Winona's things tomorrow," she decided. "Wrap her in a blanket while I work. Oh, what lots of picture books you have! May I see them?"

Our Fireside

Her First Thanksgiving

By J. L. Glover

"I DON'T see, myself, why people make all this fuss about Thanksgiving," said Miss Elizabeth. "Why can't they be thankful all the year round, if the Lord has prospered them? It seems ridiculous to me, to have just one day for it, and then show their thankfulness by eating a great deal more than is good for them. For my part, I'm just as thankful as I need to be, with all my troubles, and Peter and I can make out well enough with our everyday dinner."

Peter, the big grey cat lying before the fire, curled up his tail and gave a responsive mew at the sound of his name. Miss Elizabeth stroked him with her foot, and he subsided into satisfied silence.

"I don't think we eat the dinner to show our thankfulness, Elizabeth," ventured the visitor, gently.

"Why, then? For we don't seem able to be thankful without it!"

"Well, it's a feast day—a day of joy and gratitude; there is something symbolical about it, don't you think?" Mrs. Harold mildly persisted.

Miss Elizabeth only sniffed. "All the more reason, then, I shouldn't indulge in it. Little enough I've got to be grateful for!" she snapped.

"Oh, Elizabeth! You say that, with all the Lord has given you!" her friend remonstrated. "This beautiful home, and your farm in the country with such good tenants, and your nephew at college, doing so well, and such a credit to you. Suppose you had had to give him up to go into the army, like Mrs. Lee, across the street. Her boy will spend Thanksgiving day in France."

Miss Elizabeth turned pale. "Yes," she said, hastily, "I'm glad Tom is too young, yet, to go. But houses and farms cost a deal to keep up, and a boy at college means a big expense to keep him in cigarettes and class suppers, and the like. I guess it's as broad as it's long."

"Then there's the good health you've always been blessed with," persevered little Mrs. Harold, timidly, "and our quiet life here, compared with the dreadful experience some are living through, 'over there.' Doesn't that make you realize that we have cause for gratitude, Elizabeth?"

Miss Elizabeth only grunted. "I don't know that other people's troubles make me feel any better over my own. But I gave five dollars to the Red Cross, the other day, if that makes you feel any more comfortable."

Little Mrs. Harold sighed hopelessly. She had known Miss Elizabeth ever since their childhood's days. They had been playmates and schoolmates, and their lives had been spent side by side ever since. She knew all her friend's good qualities—her free-handed giving, her kindness to the poor, her generosity to the orphan nephew whom she had adopted and was educating. All this she knew; and she knew, also, that never in all these years had Elizabeth Chester ever expressed a word of gratitude to the Giver of all these gifts and opportunities of hers.

"Well, Elizabeth," she said, rising to go, "you always did live on 'Grumble Corner,' as long as I've known you. I'm sorry, for I think you'd be happier if you'd move; but if you won't be thankful, you won't, I suppose. Well, goodbye. I must go and feed my Thanksgiving turkey. I want him fat, for the children wouldn't think it was Thanksgiving, without turkey!" she laughed. "I'll be glad if you'll come and dine with us, Thanksgiving Day."

"Always did live on Grumble Corner! Now what did she mean by that, I wonder?" said Miss Elizabeth to herself, as her friend went out of the gate. "Mary Harold always was odd. I shan't worry with any nonsense about Thanksgiving, I'll warrant—unless Tom should come home for it. That boy does justice to a good dinner, I will say."

Her face softened as she thought of the boy whom she loved better than anything in the world.

The day before Thanksgiving brought Miss Elizabeth three letters.

She took up the topmost one, expecting to find her usual payment of rent from her tenant. Instead of the anticipated check, however, she opened a letter, painstakingly written.

"DEAR MISS CHESTER: I am very sorry to have to write this. I have never before failed to pay my rent on the appointed day, but this year I have made a poor crop, and had a run of bad luck, besides. I lost two mules and several cows, and got behindhand; and the long and short of it is, I can't pay it now. If you are willing to wait, I hope to make good next year, and pay all I owe, but just now I can't pay you a cent. I'm short of labor on the farm, too, for my boys have gone in the army, and while I don't grudge them to their country, I miss their help. I would send you a turkey for Thanksgiving, but I haven't one. Foxes caught them all. Hoping for better times next year,

"Respectfully yours,
"JOHN TAYLOR."

Miss Elizabeth caught her breath a little. She had counted on this rent money to send to her boy Tom, at college; for highly as she disapproved of his cigarettes and suppers, she did not stint him. But she was very just. John Taylor had never failed her before, and she had no thought of pressing him. Perhaps the long envelope from her lawyer might contain a check which could be sent to Tom.

She opened it hopefully. No check appeared. Instead was a letter, couched formally in legal language, telling of the failure of certain investments which had seemed perfectly safe, but had turned out worthless. "I trust that if these losses cause you any embarrassment, it will be only temporary," the letter ended, consolingly.

Miss Elizabeth read it over twice before she fully grasped its import, but gradually the truth forced itself upon her consciousness, that but for the house in which she lived, and the little farm which had just failed to pay its rental, she was penniless—she, who had felt herself so secure in her rightful share of this world's goods.

It seemed hard, when she had always been so careful, and had tried to make a good use of her means, that all should be taken from her. Yet so it was.

"We must make up our minds to it, Peter," she said, addressing her confidant on the hearthrug. "We shall have to sell this house and find a smaller one, so that Tom need not leave college. And we won't tell him about it, Peter!"

Suddenly Miss Elizabeth remembered that there was a letter from Tom himself lying in her lap. She had forgotten it.

"More bad news, I suppose," she muttered, as she tore it open. "Much cause for thanksgiving the mail has brought me, so far."

She braced herself for a third shock, as her eyes fell on the opening lines.

"Dear Auntie," the letter began, "I have some news for you—"

"I knew it!" groaned Miss Elizabeth. "Might as well hear what it is, at once."

"I don't know whether you will consider it good news or bad; but the fact is, I've been going it a bit too strong lately, and a bunch of us fellows have got into a peek of trouble. Nothing dishonorable, you understand—but just a frolic too many, and the Profs don't like it, and say we must go home and rest a while. Too much excitement is bad for our constitutions. So the plain truth is, Auntie, that I'm rusticated for a month, and you'll have the pleasure of my society for that time. I'll be at home for Thanksgiving, and, being a prodigal, I hope you'll have the fatted turkey all ready. Till then,

"Your penitent boy,"

"TOM."

"P. S.—I'm afraid it's your fault, anyway, for you have always been too generous, and kept me too flush of funds. But if you'll forgive me, I'll promise not to do so any more."

Miss Elizabeth laid the letter quietly down. Her face was very white. This was the hardest blow of all. She had been so proud of Tom; so liberal to him, thinking with pride that her boy should be able to hold up his head among his fellows, and never feel the pinch of poverty. And so she had spoiled him, and this was the result. Rustication—his college career ended under a cloud—for he could never go back and make good—his life blighted at the very outset by failure. And it was all her fault—he had said so himself, jestingly, but only too truly.

Miss Elizabeth's head bent low. She had never known until now how proud she had been of Tom—how she had loved him.

"My boy, my boy—my fault! Oh, I am punished for my pride and unthankfulness," she whispered, so low that not even Peter heard her.

The gate creaked, and she raised her head and saw him coming up the path—a handsome, stalwart young fellow, with the bright face and brown eyes she loved so well. She had forgotten that he had said he would be at home in time for Thanksgiving. He waved his cap, and running in, threw his arms around her.

"Here I am, Auntie, your prodigal boy! You had my letter? Have you a welcome for me?"

"A welcome—yes; but Tom, Tom, what have you been doing? I have just read your letter, and it has come near breaking my heart!"

He looked at her, and saw that she spoke the truth.

"It was only a foolish, boyish frolic, Auntie," he said, more soberly. "The truth was, it was the last straw. They had to make an example of somebody, and it happened to be us. I'm sorry, for your sake, but it will all blow over, and I'll redeem my laurels when I go back."

"No, Tom, no, my dear, those things don't blow over; they are remembered against you. It is the end, Tom, the end of everything. You cannot go back to college. I have no more money for you or myself. It has all been taken from me!"

She put the two letters into his hand. Tom read them, and then tossed them away to put his arm tenderly about her shoulders.

"It is not the end, Auntie," he said tenderly. "It is only another beginning. I wanted to volunteer before this, but was held back by the feeling that I ought not to disappoint you, when you were paying for my education, and I had decided to wait until after my graduation. Now, it is different. It's up to me to do my bit, and not be a slacker. You wouldn't hold me back, would you, Auntie?"

Miss Elizabeth burst into sudden tears.

"No, Tom, not if it's your duty. The Chesters were never 'slackers,' and you are a chip of the old block. You must go, if you feel it's right; but it's a judgment on me. Only last week, I said to

'THE MINISTER'S WIFE'S NEW BONNET'

A NEW MUSICAL ENTERTAINMENT FOR YOUNG PEOPLE'S SOCIETIES, SUNDAY SCHOOLS AND CHOIRS

A humorous story of the Minister's Wife not having a suitable bonnet to wear to the State Sunday School Convention, begs to be excused, when several ladies of the Sewing Circle volunteer to fix something suitable for her.

IT'S GREAT! BE THE FIRST TO GIVE IT IN YOUR TOWN. All the songs are easy and can be learned in a few rehearsals.

WHO TRIMMED THE MINISTER'S WIFE'S NEW BONNET? Send for copy for examination, and find out. It will be mailed to you for five cents to cover postal charges. It is to be returned postpaid, if not available. (Please mention this journal.)

ARTHUR RADCLIFFE PUBLISHING CO. 116 MULBERRY STREET MILLVILLE, NEW JERSEY

DON'T decide on the new hymn-book for your Church or Sunday School until you have seen

HALLOWED HYMNS NEW AND OLD

Edited by IRA ALLAN SANKEY Son of the famous Singing-Evangelist Ira D. Sankey OVER 550,000 COPIES ALREADY SOLD

Responsive Scripture Readings No Trashy Words No Jingly Music Price $25.00 per 100 not prepaid 35 cents per copy by mail Examine a copy and prove its value in your work. (Returnable if desired.)

The Biglow & Main Co., New York Chicago

Better Than Pills - For Liver Ills

The reason

NR Tonight - Tomorrow Alright

Our Choice Year Book and Special Subscription Offer

We are offering to our subscribers this year an opportunity to secure a copy of the beautiful little book entitled "A Threefold Cord." This contains a carefully selected Precept, Promise and Prayer, taken from the Scriptures, for every day in the year. The book is neatly bound in cloth, and is of convenient size for carrying in the pocket or handbag, if so desired.

We will give a copy of "A Threefold Cord," postpaid, and one year's subscription, new or renewal, to the American Messenger for 60 cents. We will give the book as a premium to any subscriber who renews his or her own subscription for 1919, and sends one new subscription, remitting $1.00 in all. If the new subscriber in the last-mentioned case desires a copy of "A Threefold Cord," $1.10 must be remitted. For every Canadian or foreign subscription 12 cents additional must be remitted to cover the cost of postage on the paper.

All those who subscribe now to the American Messenger for one year at fifty cents will receive the paper until December, 1918, inclusive. New subscribers will thus receive both the Thanksgiving and Christmas numbers for 1918 free of cost, if they subscribe at once. They will also be entitled to receive a copy of the book, entitled "A Threefold Cord," upon the payment of only ten cents additional.

The offer is not good beyond December 31, 1918, as the subscription price of the American Messenger will be advanced to 60 cents per year beginning with the issue for January, 1919.

AMERICAN MESSENGER Park Ave. and 40th St., New York

Mary Harold that I hadn't anything to be thankful for, when I had; and now the Lord has taken it all away, because I was a foolish, ungrateful old woman, and never thanked Him at all. All gone, and I'm a beggar, and must give up my boy besides! Mary Harold said I always lived on 'Grumble Corner,' and now I see exactly just what she meant."

"Lived on 'Grumble Corner,' did you? Then we'll just move to 'Thanksgiving Street,'" said Tom, decidedly. "And we'll have a good Thanksgiving, Auntie, in spite of everything. I haven't gone to France yet, and you can be thankful you've got me at home for a little while, even if I am a bad penny," laughing to cover his deeper feeling, as he always did.

Later in the day, little Mrs. Harold came hurrying in, full of sympathy for Miss Elizabeth's misfortunes, the news of which had traveled in the mysterious way that news always does travel in a small place.

"Oh, Elizabeth, oh, my poor dear, I am so sorry!" she said breathlessly; but Miss Elizabeth met her with a brave smile.

"You need not be sorry for me, Mary. I've learned my lesson. I've been a thankless old—old—" she paused, searching for a comparison, but finding none strong enough—"hippopotamus!" she finished. "And so the Lord punished me by taking it all away from me—all I had. But He has made it up to me by showing me what I've still got to be thankful for, and I'm going to make the most and best of that. I've got my boy, and that's the best of all, and we are going to have a real Thanksgiving together tomorrow—my very first real one, Mary Harold, though I've lived to be sixty years old, and had my fair share of comfort and prosperity. But I'm going to do differently now; and even if I am poor, Tom shall have one good Thanksgiving dinner before he goes—"

"Turkey and all," added Tom from the background.

"Praise the Lord!" said little Mrs. Harold fervently. "I always knew you hadn't but one fault, Elizabeth, and now you've been brought to see that, you'll be just perfect!"

"Oh, no!" deprecated Miss Elizabeth, modestly, while Tom clapped his hands softly, and cried "Hear, hear!"

And Peter, perhaps scenting tomorrow's turkey in his dreams, stirred and uttered a gentle "Me-ow" of benign approval.

Canning Sunshine

BY THE AUTHOR OF "PRESTON PAPERS."

"I'M just tired to death, Mumsey; but, oh, we had a just glorious meeting!" and twelve-year-old Dolly Hayes sank in a heap on the big comfortable couch in the cosy living room of her attractive home.

"Dolly, dear, I hope you're not so tired as you say, for that would really be serious! It doesn't hurt to get tired, even very tired, if one knows how to rest, and will rest; but to allow one's self to get tired to death is another matter," and Mrs. Hayes stroked Dolly's brown curls so lovingly that Dolly was almost in tears at the implied criticism of her English.

"What did you can today, dear?" she questioned, tactfully, sure that her correction of careless speech had taken root, and not wishing it to have a morbid effect, for Dolly was especially sensitive to her mother's rebukes.

"We did up corn, tomatoes, and beans; and they do look perfect! Miss Palmer said that she hadn't seen any 'Junior Red Cross' canning that could compare with it. There were twenty of us, and we each did a dozen cans—four of each kind!"

"Yes, and you canned so much else, daughter," said Mrs. Hayes tenderly.

"What, Mumsey?" and Dolly settled herself for one of her mother's "sermonettes," which were so delightful to Dolly and her chums.

Apparently ignoring the question, though Dolly well knew that she was really leading up to the answer, Mrs. Hayes asked:

"If the boy who gets a can of corn has been short-rationed for a day or so, he'll be doubly glad of the substantial food; if his appetite has been a bit fickle, he'll enjoy the tomatoes; and if he's been a little homesick for the home garden, the beans will make an appeal. So you have canned appetite, gratitude, and memory, for 'the boys over there,' while canning industry, self-denial, patriotism, faith, and benevolence, for yourself."

"How lovely!" exclaimed Dolly. "I verily believe that we should have canned sunshine, too, in spite of the pouring rain, if you had been with us, Mumsey, dear," and Dolly gave her mother the affectionate squeeze on her waist that always expressed her sheer delight.

"You made a wonderful start, without my help," replied Mrs. Hayes. "It only takes a little imagination to see the far-reaching effects of today's work, not only on the recipients but on the girls, whom I hope to see extending the work and canning sunshine every day, for themselves and others."

"Just a hint as to the how, Mumsey. The girls' hearts are especially tender, just now; so many have brothers over seas or in camp; and I know that whatever is said just now will be as the Wise Man says in the Book of Proverbs, like 'apples of gold in pictures of silver.'"

"Your quotation is a good example of one way. We cannot pack away too many Bible verses—or chapters—for sunshine to comfort us in days of storm and cloud. Read the 119th Psalm if you want to get a good impression of the value of God's Word."

"And?" interrogatively.

"Other good books, poems, essays, and some stories, furnish food for future happiness. So do deeds of kindness, not only the 'Junior' work, but the individual work in the home, school, club, church, city, state, and nation. The radiation of kindness in the home and the world is as beneficial as sunshine itself; and blessed is her old age who has shed kindness all along the path."

"And?" even more seriously.

"Every friendship is an additional power for future happiness, even though trouble lowers and threatens to blot out the very sky. Can your sunshine, while you may, along all these lines. It will not spoil, nor break the containers; but will give happiness to all within its influence, as surely and as benevolently as your canned fruits and vegetables of today will give comfort and aid to our boys 'over there'"—and Mrs. Hayes planted a kiss on Dolly's rosebud mouth, as a sign that the "Amen" period had been reached!

Can sunshine today, for tomorrow's need, you who still have youth, enthusiasm, time, and opportunity, for lo! it will all be needed in the world's mart, as a "first aid" to many in sorrow, and for your personal use when life's shadows begin to lengthen, and the sun of today sinks in the west.

This FREE Shoe Book
Is crowded with photographs and descriptions of Ez Wear Shoes for Men, Woman and Children. Ez Wear shoes are sent postpaid, guaranteed to combine comfort, style and quality, to fit perfectly or money back. Amazingly low prices. Send for your copy today.

The G. E. Simon Shoe 150 BROADWAY BROOKLYN, N.Y.

What 15c will bring You from the Nation's Capital

Washington, the home of the Pathfinder, is the nerve center of civilization; history is being made at this world capital. The Pathfinder's illustrated weekly review gives you a clear, impartial and correct diagnosis of public affairs during these strenuous, epoch-making days.

The little matter of 15c in stamps or coin will bring you the Pathfinder 13 weeks on trial. The Pathfinder is an illustrated weekly, published at the Nation's center, for the Nation; a paper that prints all the news of the world and tells the truth and only the truth; now in its 26th year. This paper fills the bill without emptying the purse; costs but $1 a year. If you want to keep posted on what is going on in the world, at the least expense of time or money, this is your means. If you want a paper in your home clearly, fairly, briefly—here it is. Send 15c to show that you might like such a paper, and we will send the Pathfinder on probation 13 weeks. The 15c does not repay us, but we are glad to invest in new friends. The Pathfinder, Box 91, Washington, D.C.

SPECIAL COMBINATION SUBSCRIPTION OFFERS

This is the time when many people make a selection of the periodicals which they wish to receive during the coming year. We accordingly present herewith some unusually attractive magazine combination subscription offers which afford an excellent opportunity to save money. We trust that many of our readers will avail themselves of these splendid combination propositions. The subscriptions may be either for yourself or for your friends; they may be either new or renewal. The AMERICAN MESSENGER may be sent to one address and the other periodical to another address.

Should you wish to subscribe for two or more periodicals on the list in connection with the AMERICAN MESSENGER, write us and we will tell you the cost of the combination which you desire, but please remember that in every case the AMERICAN MESSENGER must be included with the other periodicals for which you wish to subscribe.

When a copy of our beautiful little book, entitled "A Threefold Cord," is desired, 10 cents additional must be sent with each subscription.

These Special Offers apply only to subscriptions in the United States and its possessions:

	Regular Subscription Price	Our Price for Both
American Messenger	$0.50	$2.25
Christian Herald	$2.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$2.25
Christian Endeavor World	$2.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.65
Christian Worker's Magazine	$1.50
American Messenger	$0.50	$2.10
Youth's Companion	$2.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$4.20
Harper's Magazine	$4.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$0.80
American Poultry Advocate	$0.50
American Messenger (One year).....	$0.50	$1.20
Farm Journal (Five Years)	$1.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$2.10
Presbyterian Banner	$2.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$4.05
World's Work	$4.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$2.30
Popular Educator	$2.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$2.25
Mother's Magazine	$2.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.75
Boys' Life (Boy Scouts' Magazine).....	$1.50
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.10
To-Day's Housewife	$0.75
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.20
McCall's Magazine	$1.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.75
Modern Priscilla	$1.50
American Messenger	$0.50	$2.25
Woman's Home Companion	$2.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$2.30
Primary Education	$2.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$2.25
Physical Culture	$2.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.75
The Etude	$1.50
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.50
Table Talk, The National Food Magazine	$1.25
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.25
American Agriculturist	$1.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$3.05
Review of Reviews	$3.00

American Messenger, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York

"Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth."—Eccles., xii: 1 teach your children to love the Bible. The good thoughts you sow in their minds now will yield a rich harvest of noble acts when they grow older

MOTHERS

OXFORD Bibles for Children have black and colored illustrations that interest as well as instruct. Some have special helps for children. Large number of styles at various prices

At all Booksellers Catalogue upon request

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS AMERICAN BRANCH 25 West 32nd Street New York

THE TREASURY

SPECIAL NOTICE

OWING to occasional losses of letters, containing money, we would request friends and donors of the American Tract Society to remit by check or Post Office Money Order, which latter can always be duplicated in case of loss.

Receipts of the American Tract Society During September, 1918

Total Donations (including $527.65 for Special Objects), $1,859.67.

- ALABAMA, $5.00.
"A Friend," $5.
- ARKANSAS, $5.75.
Mrs. Stuck, $5; Mrs. Thomason, 75c.
- CALIFORNIA, $7.30.
Mrs. Hersman, $5; Mrs. Lothhammer, $2.30.
- COLORADO, $2.50.
Mr. Carson, $2.50.
- CONNECTICUT, $348.10.
Mr. Hawley, $4; Mrs. Russ, $5; South Windsor, Church Collection, $7.10; Southport, Church Offering, $10; Miss Green, for Pat. Liby, $120; "A Friend," $1; Mrs. Bullard, for Lit. for S. and S., $3; Miss Belden, $10; Mr. Avery, $15; Mr. Dalby, $1; Mrs. Osborne, for Pat. Liby, $15; Miss Hague, for Pat. Liby, $1; Mr. Barnes, $10; Mr. Sauter, for Lit. for S. and S., $15; "A Friend," $1; Mrs. Squire, $1; Mrs. Richards, for Lit. for S. and S., $10; Mrs. Hawley, $5; Mr. Nash, $5; Mr. Ernesty, $1; Miss Colton, for Lit. for S. and S., $2; Mrs. Carter, $5; Mr. Roser, $3; Mrs. Ulrich, for Pat. Liby, $15; Mrs. Van Tassel, $5; Mrs. Hill, $1; Dr. Smith, for Pat. Liby, $15; Mrs. Lane, $3; "A Friend," $3; Mrs. Curtis, $3; Miss Mead, $2; Mrs. Nettleton, $1; Miss Sterling, $5; Miss Wilcox, $3; Miss Sturtevant, $10; "A Friend," $2; Rev. Mr. Flinders, $2; Mrs. Willard, $1; Mr. Sauter, $10; Miss Howard, $10; Mr. Shipley, $2; Mr. Proctor, $5.
- DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, $25.00
The Misses Childs, $15; Mr. Gates, $10.
- ILLINOIS, $17.00.
"A Friend," $10; Mr. Springer, $1; Miss Boyles, $1; Mr. Brooks, $5.
- INDIANA, $15.00.
Miss Wason, $5; Mr. Starr, $10.
- IOWA, $318.25.
The following is to constitute Dr. Drake, a Life Director: Mr. Snitjer, $5; Mrs. Kruger, 25c; Mr. Stahl, $3; Mr. Kievitt, $5; Mr. Abels, $5; Mr. Kruger, $1; Mr. Harberts, $1; Mr. Dirks, $2.50; Mr. Smit, $5; Mr. Neesen, $5; Mr. Jaspers, $2; Mr. Meyer, $5 Mr. Knock, $2; Mr. Knock, $1; Mr. Dirks, Jr., $1; Mr. Penning, Sr., $1; Mr. Penning, Jr., $1; Mr. Dirks, $3; Mr. Meyer, $2; Mr. Smit, $2.50; Mr. Kruse, $2.50; Mrs. Van Deest, $11; Mr. Hook, $5; Mr. Franklin, $5; Mr. Abels, $3; Mrs. Andreeson, $2; Mr. Meyer, $1; Mr. Schmitt, $3; Mr. Abels, $5; Mrs. Heerts, $2; Mr. Meyer, $3; Mr. Smith, $1; Mr. Muller, $2; Mr. Stahl, $3; Mr. Stahl, $1; Mrs. Meyer, $2; Mr. Van Deest, $5; Mr. Van Deest, $5; Mr. Hook, $2; Mr. Dieken, $3; Mr. Kruger, $1; Mr. Dieken, $3; Mr. Meyer, $2; Mr. Franken, $3; Mrs. Kruger, $2; Mr. Meester, $2; Mr. Siefken, $5; Mr. Meyer, $2.50; Mr. Knock, $2; Mr. Meyer, $3; Mr. Petersen, $3; Mr. Knock, $2; Mrs. Buskol, $2. Total, $152.25. Grundy Center, Church Collection, $13; Pleasant Valley, Church Offering, $50; Mr. Bruns, $2; Mrs. McDesmist, $1; Mr. Manley, $100.
- KANSAS, $3.25.
Mr. Kriebiel, 95c; Mr. Guy, $1; Mrs. Johnson, $1; Rev. Mr. Klitzing, 30c.
- KENTUCKY, $21.00.
Miss Wynne, $1; Mr. Dortch, $5; Mr. Spratt, $10; Miss Tilden, $5.
- MAINE, $61.50.
Miss Curtis, $24.50; Deacon Gray, $2; Mr. Sewall, $35.
- MARYLAND, $2.00.
Mrs. Moran, $2.
- MASSACHUSETTS, $208.25.
Mrs. Brayton, $10; Lawrence, Church Collection, $15; Miss Pressy, $1; Mr. Spaulding, Jr., $10; Mrs. Loring (incl. $5 for Lit. for S. and S.), $15; Mrs. Keith, $3; Prof. Platner, for Lit. for S. and S., $5; "A Friend," $1; Mr. Wilbor, $2; Mr. Richardson, $5; Miss Gibbs, $1; Mr. Osborne, $2; Mrs. Leary, for Lit. for S. and S., $3; Mr. Russell, $15; Mr. Creed, $1; Mrs. Clay, $1; Mr. Davis, for Pat. Liby, $15; Mrs. Reed, $5; Mr. Pease, $5; Mrs. Hayward, $5; Miss Montgomery, $2; Mrs. Ripley, for Pat. Liby, $15; Miss Eicke, $1; Mr. Walworth, $10; Mr. Taylor, $10; Miss Wight, $3; "A Friend" (incl. $5 for Pat. Liby.) $10; Mr. Noyes, $2; Miss Gurney, $5; Miss Chandler, 25c; Mrs. Soule, for Lit. for S. and S., $10; "A Friend" $6; Miss Tuxbury, for Pat. Liby, $2; Miss O'Brien $5; Rev. Mr. Rowe, $2; Arlington, Sunday School Collection, $5.
- MICHIGAN, $2.00.
Mr. Stulp, $2.
- MISSISSIPPI, $104.65.
Mr. Kohn, $5; Mr. Perkins, $5; Mr. Mays, $1; D. Hall, $1; Mr. Robles, $10; Miss Davis, $2; Mr. Peters, $50; Mrs. Adams, $10; Mr. Brown, $15; Mr. Green, $1; Mr. Sall, $4.65.
- NEBRASKA, $6.00.
Hitting Church Offering, $3; Rev. Mr. A. ten, $1.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, $7.50.
Mr. Robertson, $1.50; Mr. Lovejoy, $1; Mr. Eaton, $5.

NEW JERSEY, $142.19.
Hightstown, Church Collection, $5; Miss Cortelyou, $2; Holmdel, Church Offering, $4.78; Millstone, Church Collection, $33.70; Freehold Church Offering, $2.09; Chatham, Church Collection (including $5 from Mr. Minton) $5.59; Clinton, Church Offering, $10.03; East Orange, Church Collection, $50; Miss Knox, $1; Newark, Church Offering, $28.

NEW YORK, $178.10.
Mr. Bingham, $1; Mr. Damon, $2; Mr. Chesebrough, to constitute himself a Life-Member, $30; Newburgh, Sunday School Collection, $1.10; Mr. Prouditt, $5; Mrs. Whitehouse, $10; Miss Phillips, $5; Rev. Mr. Watson, 50c; Mr. Laing, $5; Mrs. Cook, $1; Brooklyn, Church Offering, $63; Mr. Lazell, $5; Yonkers, Church Collection, $32.92; Miss Fellows, $1.06; Kinderhook, Church Offering, $12.52; Mrs. Bagley, $2; Mr. Parker, $1.

OHIO, $104.93.
Mr. Haskell, $10; Miss McKinnon, 58c; Mr. Kinley, $5; Mrs. Rosseter, $5; Miss Rosseter, $5; "A Friend," $5; Miss Peables, $5; Miss McClintock, $5; Mr. Rutledge, $5; Mr. McFadden, $5; Mr. Belmer, $15; Mr. Albough, $1; Miss Woodward, $2; Miss Shepherd, $1.05; Mr. Mains, Sr., $10; Mr. Settlege, $2; Mrs. Gregson, $2; Mr. Hendrichs, $1; Rev. Mr. Rusch, 30c; Mr. Ziener, $1; Miss Wilkins, $2; Mrs. Benson, $5; Mr. Hartzell, $10; Mr. Settlege, $2.

OREGON, 90c.
Mrs. Thomen, 15c; Mr. Folke, 50c; Mr. Tannler, 25c.

PENNSYLVANIA, $169.
Dillsburgh, Church Offering, $8; Mrs. Cassidy, $15; Mr. Suiter, for Lit. for S. and S., $1; Miss Rebman, $2; Mr. Westgate, $25; Mr. Morrison, $5; Mr. Taylor, $5; "A Friend," $1; Dr. Jones, $10; Mr. Munn, $10; Miss Beadle, $10; Mr. Marshall, $5; Sewickley, Church Collection, $10; Mr. Stelle, $5; Miss McCandless, $5; Mr. Donnan, $50; Mrs. Foster, $2.

RHODE ISLAND, $37.
Mrs. Danielson, for Lit. for S. and S., $20; Miss Babcock, $2; Mr. Wilmot, $2; "A Friend," $2; Mrs. Bubbier, $1; Mr. Reynolds, $10.

SOUTH DAKOTA, $9.
Harrison, Church Offering, $9.

TENNESSEE, $15.
Dr. Robb, $15.

TEXAS, $2.
Mr. Aldrich, $2.

UTAH, $2.
Rev. Mr. Pratt, $2.

VERMONT, $8.50.
Mr. Benedict, $5; Mrs. Giffillan, $2; Mr. Clapp, $1; Rev. Mr. Lawton, 50c.

WEST VIRGINIA, $10.
Miss Peterkin, $10.

WISCONSIN, $6.
Rev. Mr. Ruppert, $1; Mr. Bissell, $5.

FOREIGN, $15.
Hawaii, Miss Bond, $15.

INCOME FROM TRUST FUNDS, $1,044.17.
Income for Missionary Work, $1,044.17.

Donations

DONATIONS for the missionary work of the American Tract Society may be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

FIELD SECRETARIES AND COLPORTAGE SUPERINTENDENTS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.

Rev. E. N. Hardy, Ph. D., Field Secretary for New England, 50 Bromfield Street, Boston, Mass.

Rev. A. W. Reinhard, Field Secretary and Superintendent of Colportage for the Western and Northwestern States, 19 Parkland Place, St. Louis, Mo.

Rev. George Whitefort, Superintendent of Colportage, Southern Agency, Crichton, R. F. D., Mobile Co., Ala.

Form of Bequest

I GIVE and bequeath to the "AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY," instituted in the City of New York, May, 1825, the sum of.....dollars to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said Society.

Three witnesses should state that the testator declares this to be his last will and testament, and that they signed at his request, and in his presence and the presence of each other.

Life Members and Directors

THE donation of $30 at one time constitutes a Life Member of the American Tract Society; the addition of $70, or the donation of $100 at one time, constitutes a Life Director. Life members may receive annually copies of the Society's own publications to the value of $1; Life Directors to the value of $2; if applied for within the Society's year, from April 1st to April 1st, in person or by written order.

Notice to Authors

Authors who submit manuscripts for publication to the American Tract Society are reminded that the Society does not hold itself responsible for the return of any manuscript. If a remittance is sent to cover the full cost of postage and registry, the Society will transmit a manuscript by registered mail upon the request of the author.

A Song of Patience

BY MARTHA ARNOLD BOUGHTON.

Live on, O life of mine!
Though often thou dost yearn to be at rest,
He who hath lent thee life hath thought it best Thine to prolong till more through thee are blest;
Live on, and cease repine.

Work on, O hands of mine!
Ennobling thought that even thou canst share
A part with God in making earth more fair;
Then labor calmly on, and to complain forbear,
Fulfilling his design.

Trust on, O heart of mine!
Though dark the way and rough the angry sea,
Thy Pilot holds the helm, thy Father beckons thee;
One guides the course of every songster free
To Him thine all resign.

Sing on, O soul of mine!
Sing songs of faith and hope and joy and cheer,
Outsound the discord grating on thine ear,
And bring celestial music, sweet and clear,
To lonelier hearts than thine.

—THE RELIGIOUS TELESCOPE.

Teachers Training in Japan

Quite recently a Christian Japanese of Osaka gave $100.00 to the Sunday School Association of Japan, with which to purchase a teacher's circulating library of the best Sunday-school books in English, these books to be loaned by the association to English speaking Japanese workers. These books cover general and departmental work, conduct of the Sunday School, Bible study, religious education.

This gift indicates the deepening interest in the religious education of the youth of Japan.

Sunday School leaders have been well in advance of this movement, have been fostering it in fact, for years past. Already some twenty-five Sunday School books have been produced in Japanese, a number of these written by Japanese. The teacher training course has now twenty-two classes enrolled and provides for recognition of complete work by certificate.

For some years a most successful Sunday School training institute has been held with four weekly lectures, at Tokyo. The course has been thorough, the lecturers men of talent, and the interest strong. Recently a similar training school was organized in the great city of Osaka.

The summer training school at Karuizawa, is very successful. It is attended by missionaries and Japanese. Every province in Japan was represented last year. Eighty-four were then registered. A dormitory for students is in process of erection. Scholarships are sought to promote attendance of worthy delegates. The subjects of school organization, Sunday School pedagogy, etc., are presented by Sunday School experts, notes taken and recognition given. A Sunday School exhibit adds to the effectiveness of the training.

American Tract Society

THIS SOCIETY was organized in 1825. Its work is interdenominational and international in scope, and is commended by all evangelical denominations.

It has published the Gospel messages in 178 languages, dialects and characters. It has been the pioneer for work among the foreign-speaking people in our country, and its missionary colporters are distributing Christian literature in many languages among our foreign-speaking population and making a home-to-home visitation among the spiritually destitute, both in the cities and rural districts, leaving all kinds of Christian literature, also the Bible or portions of the Scriptures.

Its publication of leaflets, volumes and periodicals from the Home Office total 800,711,975 copies. It has made foreign cash appropriations to the amount of $802,966.39, and grants of electrotypes to the value of $61,177.96, by means of which millions of copies of books and tracts have been published at mission stations abroad.

The gratuitous distribution of the past year is to the value of $23,191.98. The grand total of its gratuitous distribution has been to the value of $2,676,159.52, which is the equivalent of 5,352,319,040 tract pages.

The total number of family visits that have been made by the Society's colporters during the last year is 146,056; the total number of volumes distributed by sale or grant is 49,584, making the total number of volumes that have been circulated by colporters in the last seventy-seven years 17,487,750, and the total number of family visits that they have made during the same period 18,958,862.

A large distribution of Christian literature is being made among the soldiers and sailors, and the Society aims to furnish Christian literature to every Cantonment in the Army and to every battleship and cruiser in the Navy.

The Society is making very special effort in behalf of Latin America, having entered upon the publication of a One-volume Bible commentary in Spanish, a long-needed and earnestly prayed-for publication, and several other important volumes in both Spanish and Portuguese. Its total publications for Latin America now reach 17,175,163 copies. Its work, ever widening, is dependent upon donations and legacies, and greatly needs increased offerings.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, PRESIDENT.
JUDSON SWIFT, D. D., General Secretary.
Remittances should be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

BOOKS FOR
Sunday School Libraries
Catalogue sent on request.
AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY
Park Ave. and 40th St., New York

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

TERMS: Subscription price, 50 cts. a year, payable in advance. In clubs of five or more, 30 cts. each. Club subscriptions mailed to separate addresses, if desired. Charge for foreign subscriptions, 24 cents additional. Canadian subscriptions, 12 cents additional. Single copies, 5 cents each.

On account of the additional charge which is made by the New York Post Office for mailing to subscribers in New York and Bronx Counties (Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx), no club rates, cash commissions or premiums will be given for subscriptions that must be sent to persons residing in those Counties. Each subscription in New York or Bronx County must be at the rate of 50 cents net.

Remit by Express Money Order, Draft, Post Office Order or Registered Letter. For very small amounts, postage stamps may be sent at the risk of the sender.

RENEWALS: The date opposite your name shows to what time the subscription has been paid, and a change in the date is the receipt for renewal.

CHANGES: When sending change of address, be sure to send the old address as well as the new one.

OUR ADVERTISERS: We believe that all the advertisements in this paper are from responsible advertisers, and it is our intention to admit only such to our columns. Should, however, any of our subscribers find that any advertiser does not live up to his agreements, we would consider it a favor, if they will inform us, and we will at any time give prompt attention to any complaint.

We do not, of course, guarantee that all persons will take the same point of view with the advertisers, and it must be borne in mind that the claims and statements made by advertisers are their assertions, and not ours.

Our readers will confer a favor upon advertisers and also upon us if they will mention the AMERICAN MESSENGER when answering advertisements.

FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT

The AMERICAN MESSENGER is found very acceptable by the Home Departments of many Sabbath Schools. What better publication could be secured for home reading at the price at which this paper is offered? When ordered in clubs of five or more, the price is only 30 cents a year. The papers may be mailed to individual names, or they may be sent in one package to be distributed by the Sabbath School Visitor—whichever way is preferred. We trust that the Good Literature Committees in all Churches, Sabbath Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies will consider the AMERICAN MESSENGER in ordering their supplies.

AMERICAN MESSENGER
Park Ave. and 40th St. New York

All Saints

So lately here, so dear they are,
That land is neither strange nor far
Where they have gone;
And can you fear they have forgot
In that new home, that happier lot,
Though we love on?

Dear saints of God, they are not gone,
But only passed from night to dawn
Forever blest;
They all are one, believe it still,
All, all who do the Master's will,
In toil or rest.

From that sweet peace of Paradise
Our loved ones look with longing eyes,
Waiting His will;
Praying for us, who need their prayer,
Caring for us, who need their care,
Rememb'ring still.

Oh, blessed peace, God's perfect rest,
To know His will was always best,
To doubt no more;
To view life's storm without its fear,
Through eyes with heavenly wisdom clear
Forevermore.

Not to forget—nay, that were death—
To read all truths that lie beneath
The chast'ning rod;
To find all journeys short that bring
His child, through weary wandering,
To Home and God.

—CORA WHITTLESEY GREGORY.

A Harvest Concert

BY J. L. HARBOUR.

For many years the Ruggles Street Baptist Church, in Boston, has made much of its harvest concert—so much, in fact, that the fame of these concerts has gone abroad in the land, and there is rarely a vacant seat in the church on the evening the concert occurs. This is always on the Sunday evening preceding Thanksgiving, and for this reason: This Church gives away at each Thanksgiving season from one hundred to one hundred and twenty-five turkeys to the poor, and the Sunday school is expected to "do the rest." The "rest" consists in the school providing all of the fruit and vegetables and a part of the groceries needed to go with the turkeys that the Thanksgiving feast may be complete. The church is in one of the congested tenement house districts of Boston, and there is always need of being helpful to the poor every day in the year. The harvest concert always takes the place of the Sunday evening church service. Each class in the very large Sunday school is expected to make as large a donation as possible. On the evening of the concert the superintendent of the school stands on the platform and calls out the name of each class, and one or two members carry forward the class offering. This is usually put in a basket trimmed with gay-tinted tissue paper. There are always a number of barrels of flour or vegetables to be brought forward, and the barrels are also elaborately decorated. The decorations on the baskets and boxes and barrels make a great riot of color when all of the gifts have been ranged along the front of the pulpit platform.

At one concert the gifts of the kindergarten department were wheeled forward in a baby carriage by several little tots dressed in white. One class created a good deal of merriment by contributing a barrel of flour and a yeast cake! The organized Bible class of men can always be depended upon to make a large and generous contribution. The cash offerings usually exceed one hundred dollars, and this money is used largely for the purpose of buying shoes for the children of the Sunday school. Following the bringing forward of the gifts there is a program suitable to the occasion. All of the various departments of the school assemble in the large auditorium for the harvest concert. It is one of the happiest occasions of the entire year, and who can doubt that it sows the good seed of Christian generosity in many a heart? The offerings are often an illustration of the kindness of the poor to the poor, for the members of this Sunday school are nearly all poor people, and many of them are very poor, but this does not keep them from being generous to others less fortunate than themselves at the Thanksgiving season.

The harvest concert, when it is all that it should be, serves the good purpose of giving the school and the members of the congregation a happy evening, in which the Christlike lesson of generosity to the poor is taught to the young in a helpful way.

"Did You Pray?"

Mr. Moody once related this incident concerning his own little son:
"My wife came down one evening and said she had had some trouble with one of the children. He was not willing to obey, and he had gone to bed without her forgiveness. I went up and sat down by the side of the little child, and said 'Did you pray to-night?'"
"I said my prayers."
"Did you pray?" "I said my prayers."
"Did you pray?" "Well, papa, I told you that I said my prayers." "Yes, I heard you; but did you pray?"
"The little fellow was struck; he knew he hadn't prayed. How was he going to pray when there was something wrong in his heart? He could not do it."

"Well, now," said I, "are you going to go off to sleep without praying?"
"After a struggle he said, 'I wish you would call mamma.' She came up and was glad to forgive him, and then he wanted to get out of bed and pray. He had 'said his prayers,' but now he wanted to 'pray.' Lots of people say their prayers, just as a salve to their conscience, and go out and do some mean, contemptible thing after they have said their prayers. But they hadn't prayed, and that's the difference."

It may seem a little simple to kneel down and talk thirty minutes or more with the Lord; but those who love to pray and are trying to live a life of prayer find out after awhile that it requires strength from the Holy Spirit to pray effectively. To pray Scripturally and in the Spirit, requires a divine touch upon our wills to give us patient perseverance, and another touch upon our attentiveness to concentrate our perceptions on God and spiritual things, and another touch upon our imagination to form spiritual images or ideals of heavenly things or of states of experience, and another touch upon our affections that we may pray with a proper feeling and intense desire after God's glory. Without divine strength to pray with, our prayers will wither just like flowers without water. So at the beginning of a season of prayer we should ask our Heavenly Father to impart to us by the Holy Spirit special strength all through our faculties, that we may pray acceptably and effectively.—SELECTED.

Paying As We Go Along

What a happy world this would be if only love and friendship would pay their debts as they go along! If the words of appreciation could come now while they are due, and the little gift brightens the way while it is hard, how much more they would be worth than when held back to become a part of the estate!

FORWARD.

The End of Earthly Ambition

Earthly ambitions often fail, and instead of receiving a crown of glory they end in such an experience as that of Napoleon in his lonely exile on St. Helena. Ruskin has well said: "So far as you desire to possess rather than to give, so far as you look for power to command instead of to bless, so far as your own prosperity seems to grow out of contest or rivalry of any kind with other men or nations, so long as the hope before you is for supremacy instead of love, you shall have death's crown, with the worm coiled in it, and death's wages, with the worm feeding on them."

Just For Fun

He was earnestly but prosily orating at the audience. "I want land reform," he wound up with; "I want housing reform, I want educational reform, I want —"
"You need chloroform," interrupted a bored voice in the audience.

A three-year old miss became interested in a peculiar noise, and asked what it was.
"A cricket, dear," replied her mother.
"Well," remarked the little lady, "he ought to get himself oiled."

The other day a young woman teacher took eight of her pupils through the Museum of Natural History.
"Well, my boy, where did you go with your teacher this afternoon?" asked the mother of one of them on his return.
With joyous promptness he answered: "She took us to a dead circus."

The pupils in an Alabama school were asked to construct a sentence containing the word "amphibious." As quick as a flash the son of a local preacher gave out the following: "Most fish stories am fibious."

A city official of Chicago has a son who was boasting one day of his father's official position.
"My father," he said to a companion, "is an alderman."
"Hugh!" snorted the other boy; "that's nothing! My father blows the whistle at the mill!"
That settled it.

"Tommy, do you want some nice plum jam?"
"Yes, mother."
"I was going to give you some to put on your bread, but I've lost the key to the pantry."
"You don't need the key, mother. I can reach down through the window and open the door from the inside."
"That's what I wanted to know. Now just wait till your father comes home!"

I believe there's a story told of Mark Twain that in youthful days, being sent out by his mother to weed a certain flower bed, and finding more weeds than flowers, he came back in and asked if he might not "flower the weed bed."
Our little Alfred probably has as great an aversion to work as had the youthful Clemens. Admonished to pull some rather large weeds in the back yard, after a faint-hearted lift on one of them, he shouted: "Mamma, how do you think I'm going to pull these weeds when the whole world is hitched onto them?"

"I kept my head when I fell into the water," observed the young man.
"How fortunate," replied the caustic maid; "it must have helped you so nicely to float."

John was home from college for the winter vacation, and before long was infatuated with the beauty of a neighbor. His father noticed his evident admiration.
"Did ye notice how ole Mason's daughter have shot up, Jack?" he asked his son one day. "Seems to me she's gettin' quite a handsome young critter."
"Father," said Jack, enthusiastically, "she is as beautiful as Hebe!"
"As he be?" ejaculated the old man. "Joe's got a face like a pig in a fit. It's her mother she gets her looks from. She's as beautiful as she be!"

Visitor (at private hospital): "Can I see Lieutenant Barker, please?"
Matron: "We do not allow ordinary visiting. May I ask if you're a relative?"
Visitor (boldly): "O, yes! I'm his sister."
Matron: "Dear me! I'm very glad to meet you. I'm his mother."

EXCELLENT FOUNTAIN PENS AS PREMIUMS

Fountain Pens are no longer a luxury, but a necessity. Those we are offering here are the Famous "Commercial Fountain Pens." They are 14-karat solid gold with best iridium points, Para hard rubber barrels, and the famous Waterman Feed, etc. The pens are of the best quality and workmanship that can be obtained in connection with our extremely low offers. They are made of the best materials throughout, and every part is guaranteed by the manufacturer. We will send medium points unless otherwise indicated. The pens are suitable for either ladies or gentlemen.

No. 1. Plain Pen. Size of Pen 6 3/4 inches. We will sell the Pen for 75 cents or it will be given for only 6 yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at 50 cents each. We will give the pen and one year's subscription for only $1.15.

No. 2. Gold Bands Fountain Pen. This Pen has two engraved one-quarter inch Gold Bands and is 6 3/4 inches long. We will sell this Pen for $4.25. It will be given for 10 yearly subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER at 50 cents each. We will give the Pen and one year's subscription for $1.65.

AMERICAN MESSENGER, Park Ave. and 40th St.,
NEW YORK CITY

NEW BOOKS

And Books of Freshened Interest

DR. J. WILBUR CHAPMAN

THE MINISTER'S HANDICAP

By J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.

Thousands of ministers and theological students all over the world would like to have a personal interview with Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, to learn, if possible, some of the secrets of his success as a pastor and an evangelist of wonderful power. Better, however, than a personal interview, will be the possession of Dr. Chapman's new book, "The Minister's Handicap," into which he has put his personal experiences and a wealth of suggestions which will be of invaluable help to every minister of the Gospel. Comforting, inspiring, clergymen will treasure "The Minister's Handicap." It is rich in anecdote, incident, and striking remarks made by famous men to the author during his career as a preacher. Read what a great business man says (pages 31 and 32) about preaching "your own doubts"; about "discouraged lassitude"; about substituting an ethical address for a sermon. Sympathetic, vibrant with understanding of the ministry, this book will kindle the fires anew. 12mo, cloth. 145 pages. 75 cents by mail.

American Tract Society, Park Ave. and 40th St., New York:

Enclosed please find 75 cents for which mail me one copy of "THE MINISTER'S HANDICAP" by J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.

Name..... Street.....

Town..... State.....

DR. DAVID J. BURRELL

PAUL'S CAMPAIGNS

By David James Burrell, D.D.

In this book, reader, you journey with Paul. Wherever he goes, whether to Cyprus or to Rome, you feel yourself near him, listening, hearing his fiery, impassioned, fearless exhorting. When you read the gripping description of what Paul saw at Athens, it will be brought home to you that here indeed is a study of Paul's wanderings which really appreciates the motives and difficulties of that courageous fighter for Christianity. Do you know the precise four reasons for Paul's visit to Thessalonica? A reader will truly know Paul's footsteps better after reading this new study of the subject. The four journeys are woven into a colorful narrative of such interest that it affords a pleasant means of studying Paul's goings and comings by land and sea. Four wax-process charts, specially drawn, same size as page, no folding. 12mo, cloth. 110 pages. 75 cents by mail.

American Tract Society, Park Ave. and 40th St., New York:

Enclosed please find 75 cents for which send me one copy of "PAUL'S CAMPAIGNS" by David James Burrell, D.D.

Name..... Street.....

Town..... State.....

AT LAST, friends, we have managed to lower the price of the

MANUAL OF DEVOTION

for SOLDIERS AND SAILORS

By JUDSON SWIFT, D.D.

So many people were buying a package of them, to distribute to enlisted men. We have had to charge 35 cents a copy and it came very hard, indeed, friends, on those who wanted to give several departing Soldiers a good book. Thirty-five cents was more than we wanted to charge, but we simply couldn't sell it for less. The binding of the book was too expensive—entirely too expensive.

So we have done this: we have bound a quantity in heavy, stiff, strengthened paper covers. We have reduced the price to 20 cents—and, mind you, without changing the inside of the book at all.

When the Soldier or Sailor Boy that you know is waiting for the word for the battle to begin, let him have this little book in his pocket. Let him open it to page 94—to the "Prayer Before Going into Battle." It will comfort him. The book will have earned its place in his kit at that moment.

Then there is the Prayer for the Wounded; the sweet, beautiful Prayer for the Loved Ones at Home, etc., etc., and a reading for each of 31 days.

It is bound in waved blue for Sailors and waved brown for Soldiers, beautifully lettered in gold, durable and strong. It is easier to pay 20 cents than 35 cents for a book that will strengthen and hearten some Soldier or Sailor, to place in his kit or in his pocket this cheering, friendly, devotional book; but it is still easier to pay 10 cents—and we can and will sell it for that sum if you will take 5 or more copies. We can and will make a half grant, a gift of one-half the value, to any quantity distributor of 5 or more copies. If you would rather see a copy first, send 20 cents, friends. You will be convinced then, at any rate.

The books are just in—just fresh from the binder. Remember: brown for soldiers, blue for sailors. State which you require.

American Tract Society, Park Ave. and 40th St., New York:

Enclosed please find for which send me copies of "A MANUAL OF DEVOTION FOR SOLDIERS AND SAILORS," by Judson Swift, D.D., at 10 cents per copy, as advertised in November American Messenger. Send me blue (for sailors) and brown (for soldiers).

Name..... Street.....

Town..... State.....

ANNA COOPE, the Sky Pilot of the San Blas Indians, recently came from the Pacific coast to New York. First, she boarded a small boat which took her from the San Blas Islands over 100 miles of open sea to the mainland of Central America. The next step was to come up from Central America to the Pacific coast. Then she came to New York. Soon, she will again be among her native charges on the San Blas Islands.

With this wonderful woman in New York, modestly telling us of the work that the listener can hardly realize to be possible, we determined to again announce her book detailing her work on the San Blas Islands.

ANNA COOPE : SKY PILOT

of the SAN BLAS INDIANS

Anna Coope's school on the San Blas Islands, off the coast of Central America, is an unusual institution.

Little children and tottering old men, one of them a hundred years old, are class-mates—along with wrinkled grandmothers and mothers with babies straddled on their hips.

Utterly alone, Miss Coope has brought the sweetness of home-life and civilization to this isolated tribe. Can you imagine 800 untutored Indians—and ten liquor-huts? Under their thatched roofs rum worked its havoc until her patient, ceaseless labors bore fruit.

An Indian canoe, sailing for days across a stormy ocean, was her means of communication with the mainland of Central America.

Send for this new book: ANNA COOPE: Sky Pilot of the San Blas Indians. It will give you hours of delight and a rich fund of information. It is a rare addition to your library. 180 pages and beautiful photographs of native life. Cloth, 5x7½. By mail $1.30.

American Tract Society, Park Ave. and 40th St., New York:

Enclosed please find $1.30 for which send me one copy of "ANNA COOPE: SKY PILOT OF THE SAN BLAS INDIANS," as advertised in the November American Messenger.

Name..... Street.....

Town..... State.....

Vol. 76

No. 12

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

DECEMBER, 1918

THE ADVENT OF THE PRINCE OF PEACE

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY, NEW YORK

HENRY E. FRITZ.

ILLINOIS LIB

1918

The Pocket Testament League Military Campaign

BY GEORGE T. B. DAVIS.

We have just completed a tour of the military camps in Texas and the adjoining states. Whether we have spoken to men from Kansas or Arkansas, from Missouri or Louisiana, from Michigan or Wisconsin, from Illinois or Oklahoma or Texas, there has been the same eagerness to possess and read and carry the beautiful Testaments presented by the Pocket Testament League; and the same heart-hunger for the old time Gospel. They do not want any gospel of Ethical Culture, or of New Thought, but how hungrily they drink in the message when the old, old story of salvation through the blood of the Lamb is proclaimed!

To say that we have had wonderful times is to put it mildly. As was to have been expected from the conditions under which the men were assembled, the audiences have been composed of men of all types, rich and poor, educated and ignorant, Roman and Eastern Catholics, Protestants, Jews, Christian Scientists, Mormons, atheists and others. One soldier who joined the League said he was born in Russia, and had three brothers fighting in the Russian army. When another man received his Testament, he told with joy how he had received Christ a few days before, and presently I learned that he was born in Tyre in Syria. Another, who gave splendid assistance in enrolling soldiers in the League during the meeting, told how he had been in England when the war broke out, and for a year later—as a missionary of the church of the Latter Day Saints!

At one camp we learned that there was a company composed almost entirely of Indian soldiers. Through the kindness of the Lieutenant and the Indian top-sergeant, arrangements were made for us to address the entire company in their mess hall. It was an inspiration to address that gathering of reverent, attentive, real American soldiers.

When the opportunity was given to enlist in the League, and better still, to receive Christ as a personal Saviour, the response was far greater than had been anticipated. Nearly all of the Indians present received the Testaments, while more than three score signified their decision for Christ. A number of the Indians declared their intention of forming little groups for Bible Study and prayer, and the next day when a picture was taken of ten of these group leaders, it was found that eight of them had decided for Christ when they had received the Testaments. One of them said he and others had been reading together, and he had reached the twelfth chapter of Matthew—in less than twenty-four hours!

Praise God, we are beginning to see signs of real revival. God's spirit is moving upon the hearts of the men. At the close of a meeting in one of the camps, a soldier came up, full of new found peace and joy, and said, "I don't know what it was that brought me to this building tonight. I was here throughout the meeting. When it closed I got up and went out. I got as far as the railroad track. Then I turned and came back and took a Membership Card of the League and signed it. I handed in the card and again went out. I fidgeted around outside the building, and at last came back, found my League card and marked on it my decision for Christ." Before the man left the building he also decided to try to gather a little group of soldiers who would meet together daily for Bible reading and prayer.

At one meeting the Y. M. C. A. camp building was packed to the doors. Not only was every available seat taken, but men were standing at the front and back and sides and even on the tables. God's spirit was present in power. When the Christian men were asked to give a silent testimony for Christ before their comrades by rising to their feet, nearly two hundred men responded. The sight was so thrilling that one of the Y. M. C. A. leaders applauded them. Then those who were making their decision for the first time were asked to stand with them. Singly and in twos and threes they stood, until probably three score or more of recruits had joined the ranks of the Christian Army. Still we waited and presently a tall, strong-faced soldier, perhaps the handsomest man in the audience, rose quietly to his feet, determination written on every line of his countenance. Then with all heads bowed, we were lifted to the portals of Heaven by the prayer of the Y. M. C. A. leader, praising God for those who had the courage to thus boldly confess Christ before their comrades.

Then for nearly half an hour the men who were joining the League filed by the platform while we had the privilege of grasping their hands, of giving them a hearty "God Bless You," and of speaking a word of cheer and encouragement to those who were accepting Christ.

At length after the procession had passed, the Y. M. C. A. leader exclaimed, "It was the biggest, finest and grandest meeting we have ever had!" We were grateful for his words and for the night of blessed victory, not because of anything we had said or done, but because, it was another evidence that God's people are praying, and that God is hearing and answering prayer.

Transformed Misfortunes

BY PEARL H. CAMPBELL

One of the most wonderful characteristics of the soul is its power to take a seeming misfortune and triumph over it. The Psalmist tells of those who passing through the valley of weeping make of it a place of springs.

Instantly there comes to mind the thought of that unshapely block of marble cast aside, so the story says, by a sculptor as worthless. But Michael Angelo, passing by, saw it and fashioned from it the figure of David, one of the most beautiful statues in the world.

Stories of this same spirit continually drift across the Atlantic from the war-tortured lands where the shackles of autocracy have been forged. Now we hear of some invention which will make the maimed soldier able to take his part in the world and become once more a useful, self-supporting citizen. And again we are told of some other difficulty overcome, or of an obstacle surmounted and made a stepping stone to higher things.

One of the most illuminating stories for the light it sheds on French character comes from Paris. Long ago when the air raids first threatened the city and the sound of the alert signal warned the sleeping citizens to take shelter under ground, the people were told that strips of paper pasted over the panes of dwellings and over the windows of shops would prevent much breakage and damage by averting too great a pressure of air on any one spot.

But so long as those enemy birds of the night, the Gothas, were the only visitors, Parisians refused to listen to the wise advice of dwellers in cities at the front who knew from bitter experience how uncomfortable are shattered windows.

But when the long-range guns were trained on the city and the shots fell at regular intervals the need for precaution was renewed. Strips of paper pasted in lattice fashion began to appear in the windows. The people accepted them good naturedly as a part of the price to be paid for defeating the tyrant of Berlin.

But because they were useful there was no reason for their being ugly. The mind of the Parisian, calm and confident, in spite of the unspeakable horrors of the past four years, set to work to transform what may have suggested prison bars into things of beauty.

A writer in a current periodical tells us that a haberdasher pasted large half-opened shears over his panes. The windows of a chocolate shop were decorated with scrolls and with the coat of arms of the Sevignes. A curiosity dealer imitated a large bird cage. There through bars of paper a paper cockatoo swung and peeped at the world with little regard for shrapnel or bursting bombs.

A music dealer in the quaint old street whose name is rue Ste. Placide scattered music keys over his window, decorating the upper part with all the different musical signs. The clever device pleased the popular fancy, and the little shop began to do a thriving business.

Then there are private homes where the artistic taste of the mistress or the master back on his brief furlough, thought out the charming designs. There were trellises of ivy in long, graceful loops, but perhaps the prettiest of all was one in which the strips of paper seemingly exist only for the purpose of displaying the roses of France which nod and smile at the beholder in the most friendly way, "symbolizing, perhaps unconsciously, but in a truly charming manner, the everlasting beauty of Paris, to which measures of protection serve only as a pretext for enhancing her beauty."

Turning from these window gardens of glass and paper one recalls how the urgent need for food has reclaimed and turned to good account in our cities many an unsightly vacant lot and back yard. The plots though small in themselves are rich in the aggregate. Their harvest has helped to keep at bay the gray wolf of hunger and to release for the men over there a considerable store of precious wheat.

NEW BOOKS

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS

Appreciation by Lt. Col. Requin of French High Commission to U. S. A.

FOCH Clara E. Laughlin,
THE MAN cooperating with the members of the French High Commission, has written the first brief, authoritative life of the great commander in English. It is an exceedingly interesting volume, replete with just the information needed today. Illustrated. Net $1.00

BATTLES Norman Duncan's
ROYAL Final DOWN NORTH Labrador Tales
represent him in both the moods in which he made his name as a writer. "Battles Royal Down North" is powerful, rugged, almost fearsome in its tragic intensity; the other, "Harbor Tales Down North," is tender, quaint, and marked by that supreme quality of the story-teller's art—unaffected simplicity. Both books contain an appreciation by Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell of the Labrador.

HARBOR TALES
DOWN NORTH
Honore Willsie, in the New York Times Magazine: "We lost the best short story writer in the country when Norman Duncan died." Two vols., each illustrated. Net $1.35

IT HAPPENED Burriss A.
"OVER THERE" Jenkins.
author of "The Hindenburg Line," is here with a thrilling "rapid-fire" romance of an American aviator and an English "lady of high degree." A book permeated with the atmosphere of these thrilling heart-searching days. Illustrated. Net $1.25

UNCLE JOE'S Edward A.
LINCOLN Steiner
author of "On the Trail of the Immigrant," etc., gives us a delightful story of the influence of the life of Abraham Lincoln upon the boys of a faraway land. Will move every patriotic American to greater zeal and greater service today. Illustrated. Net $1.00

THREE GREAT BOOKS FOR BOYS

GRIT-A-PLenty Dillon Wallace author of "Ungava Bob," etc., is to the front with a new Tale of the Labrador Wild. For adventure and realism of the most healthful sort boys will find it difficult indeed to beat this latest story from the surviving companion of Leonidas Hubbard, Jr., the Labrador explorer. Illustrated. Net $1.25

AT HIS Albert Lee
COUNTRY'S has written the first big Tale of the Great War for boys. Lieut. Gen. Sir R. Baden-Powell says: "It is a most exciting yarn for boys which should arouse their spirit of patriotic adoration." Illustrated. Net $1.25

CAMERON Edwin C. Burritt
ISLAND the author of "The Boy Scout Crusoes," presents a new sheaf of Adventures in the South Seas. The success of "Boy Scout Crusoes" has furnished the incentive for a fascinating story of adventures which will keep the reader spellbound until the last page is reached. Illustrated. Net $1.25

Fleming
H.
Revell
Company
NEW YORK
158 Fifth
Ave.
CHICAGO
17 N. Wabash
Ave.

SELECT NOTES

By REV. F. N. PELOUBET, D.D., and AMOS R. WELLS, Litt.D., LL.D.

Sunday-School Workers

the world around always welcome our announcement that a new volume of Peloubet's Select Notes is ready, because years of use have taught them that Select Notes are simply invaluable to every religious teacher and Christian worker.

We have striven hard to make the 1919 issue excel its forty-four annual predecessors in many essentials and we can, therefore, conscientiously recommend it to every person who desires to secure the largest possible results from the personal or class use of the Improved Uniform Lessons during the coming year.

Price in cloth, $1.25 net, $1.35 delivered

For Sale at All Booksellers

W. A. WILDE COMPANY

RAND-McNALLY BLDG., CHICAGO

120 BOYLSTON ST., BOSTON

Ask ANY Bookseller for REVELL'S
BOOKS
158 Fifth Avenue, New York
17 N. Wabash Avenue, Chicago

The American Messenger

"Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Luke 2:10

Vol. 76. No. 12

DECEMBER, 1918

Copyright, 1918, by American Tract Society.

Terms: 50 cents per annum
Single copy, 5 cents

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

PUBLISHED MONTHLY

BY THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

Park Ave. and Fortieth St., New York, N. Y.

OFFICERS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President.

JOHN HENRY JOWETT, M.A., D.D., Vice-President.

JUDSON SWIFT, D.D., General Secretary.

LOUIS TAG, Treasurer.

REV. HENRY LEWIS, Ph.D., Recording Secretary.

All of the above-named officers should be addressed at Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Rev. David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.

Rev. Charles Carroll Albertson, D.D.

Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.

Rev. Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D.

Rev. George Ernest Merriam.

Entered as second-class matter June 20, 1879, at the Post Office at New York, New York, under the Act of March 3, 1879.

Acceptance for mailing at special rate of postage provided for in Section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized on July 3, 1918.

To the Former Readers of the Amerikanischer Botschafter

A MESSAGE FROM REV. ARNOLD W. FISMER, PH.D.

The American Tract Society, having for sufficient reasons suspended the further publication of the German monthly periodical, the Amerikanischer Botschafter, edited for several years under my special supervision, I gladly avail myself of the opportunity, by courtesy of the AMERICAN MESSENGER, to address a word of good cheer and farewell to my former readers.

While I personally regret the discontinuance of a Christian paper which for nearly a century has been helpful in kindling the light of Christian faith and life in the hearts of many thousands of strangers within our gates, yet I rejoice in the fact that the good work of this periodical as such is by no means to be discontinued, nor even suspended, but is to be happily merged in, and vigorously carried forward by, the AMERICAN MESSENGER and, it is confidently hoped, will thus reach a larger number of readers.

The ultimate aim of the manifold evangelistic efforts put forth by the American Tract Society, especially in behalf of New Americans, is Christianization and Americanization.

The temporary use of a foreign language is but a means to that end. We believe that all our loyal patrons and friends of German descent can now be reached effectively by our publications in the English language. Moreover, the increasing need of a community of civic and religious interests made all the more imperative by the present perplexities of a changing order, and the great, new task of reconstruction that is now laid upon us as a Christian nation, demands, more than ever before, a community of language in order to secure a mutual sympathetic understanding and a united, harmonious co-operation.

In order to meet the Germans coming to our land a generation or two ago, the use of the German language was obviously necessary, but to-day it is quite as obvious that the spiritual needs of the great majority of this people can be fully met on American ground in the use of the American language. Furthermore, the national demands of the present age require the rising generation of foreign parentage to master more thoroughly than was deemed necessary in former generations, the language of the land which they are justly proud and thankful to own as their native land. We believe, therefore, that the former readers of our German publications, one and all, for themselves, as well as for the sake of the younger members of the family, will welcome our sending them the AMERICAN MESSENGER in order to complete their unexpired subscriptions to the Amerikanischer Botschafter. The AMERICAN MESSENGER is the English counterpart of the Amerikanischer Botschafter, and like it stands firmly for the truth of the Gospel, for the integrity of the Scriptures, for Christian unity and for world-evangelization.

It is confidently hoped that this arrangement will be perfectly acceptable, and that the AMERICAN MESSENGER may be welcomed, in due time, as an abiding household friend, so that the good work hitherto carried on by the Amerikanischer Botschafter may continue uninterrupted in working out the Master's mission to bring the good tidings of great joy, of peace and good will to all the people.

A Word of Welcome

The Editor of the AMERICAN MESSENGER extends to all the readers of the Amerikanischer Botschafter a very hearty welcome. He has had the pleasure of knowing Dr. Fismer for several years past, and has come to esteem him as a brother beloved in the Christian ministry and a valued co-worker in the American Tract Society. It is our earnest hope that the former readers of the Amerikanischer Botschafter may find in the AMERICAN MESSENGER a paper which will bring to them each month a message of inspiration and helpfulness and that they will continue their warm and generous interest in the work of the Society of which the AMERICAN MESSENGER is the official representative.

Our New Field Secretary for New England

After several years of faithful service, Rev. Isaac Pierson has retired, and in his place Rev. Edwin Noah Hardy, Ph.D., has been appointed as Field Secretary for the New England District.

Dr. Hardy was born in New Hampshire, was prepared for college at Cushing Academy, Ashburnham, Mass., and graduated from Amherst College, from which institution he received the degree of Master of Arts. He received his theological training at Hartford Theological Seminary, and when he received his diploma from the Seminary he was also awarded the Senior Prize in the department of Practical Theology. He won the degree of Doctor of Philosophy from Boston University in 1906.

Dr. Hardy began his ministry as Associate Pastor of Phillips Church, South Boston, Mass., and has since held two pastorates in large and influential churches, one of which was in Quincy, Mass., for sixteen years and the other at La Grange, Illinois, a suburb of Chicago, for five years. During his ministry Dr. Hardy has held several important administrative positions in school and church, and served recently for two years as President of the Illinois State Congregational Home Missionary Society.

Dr. Hardy is the author of three volumes, entitled, "The Churches and Educated Men," "The Story of the English Bible," and "A Century of Temperance Effort," and has done much writing for the secular and religious press.

Dr. Hardy is well fitted for service in the New England field, for he has a wide acquaintance throughout the whole district, he has lectured and written extensively on the home and church life of Colonial New England and is thoroughly conversant with present conditions. The officers of the American Tract Society rejoice in the accession of Dr. Hardy to its work, and bespeak for him a most cordial welcome from all friends and donors.

The Ending of the Great War

November 11, 1918, will always be a memorable day in the history of the world, for on that date the armistice was signed which put a stop to the great war which had involved almost all the nations of the earth.

Words can hardly express the joy and thankfulness which fills our hearts as we realize that the cruel war which has raged for over four years is now a thing of the past. And now as we look forward to the future, we do so with the fullest confidence that divine wisdom will be given to enable us to meet the responsibilities which coming days have in store.

One thing for which we should strive is that a sense of human brotherhood may be established among all the peoples of the earth, so that we may have an enduring peace, which shall be founded not on mere physical force but upon the eternal principles of righteousness, justice and mercy.

More Bibles for West Point Cadets

On the first of November the United States Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., graduated two classes, numbering 511 men. These were classes which in normal times would not have graduated until 1920 and 1921. During the past twelve months four classes have been graduated, thus making an unprecedented record.

The American Tract Society presented each one of the men who graduated on November first with a New Testament. Lieutenant R. B. Ogilby, Chaplain of the Academy, wrote:

"The occasion of the presentation proved to be most successful. Colonel Fieberger read to the classes selections from that excellent little book, 'The Student in Arms,' and then from the depth of his personal experience, added such words of wisdom as the Cadets will not soon forget. Many of them expressed their appreciation of getting Testaments rather than Bibles, as they would take up so much less room in the field kit when they go on active service. So please be assured that the Society has met the needs of the case of this sudden graduation in a most acceptable way."

✻ ✻ ✻

An Urgent Appeal

We desire to remind all our subscribers of the imperative necessity of keeping their subscriptions well paid up in advance, in view of the request of the War Industries Board that all publishers discontinue sending periodicals to those who have not renewed their subscriptions. A large number of subscriptions to the AMERICAN MESSENGER expire with this December issue, and we therefore urge all our friends to see to it that their subscriptions are promptly renewed.

Renewal subscriptions will be accepted up to December 31, 1918, at the present rate of fifty cents per year. After January 1, 1919, all subscriptions, whether new or renewal, will be at the new rate of sixty cents per year.

We would like to suggest to our friends that when sending their own renewal they would do well to send a new subscription as well, (making $1.00 in all), for this will entitle them to a copy of our beautiful little Year Book, entitled "A Threefold Cord," and we believe no more acceptable Christmas remembrance could be found than a year's subscription to the AMERICAN MESSENGER.

A Call to Prayer for a Nation-Wide Revival

By JOHN R. GUNN

THE end of the war is at hand. Peace will undoubtedly be declared at an early date. Millions of our young men now in the camps and overseas will be returning to their homes in a short time.

Thoughtful people everywhere realize that the return to peace will bring us face to face with conditions, needs, opportunities and responsibilities not less serious than those we have been facing during the war. In recent months there has been much talk about post-war problems—political, industrial, social and religious. The governments of the nations at war have for many months had specially appointed commissions considering ways and means for economic and industrial reconstruction following the war. With deep concern and high hopes the leaders in all the great religious denominations are making plans on a large scale for their after-war activities. There is a profound consciousness everywhere that the world will never be again what it was before the war, that we are passing through the gravest crisis ever experienced by the human race and that this is the most potential hour of all history.

In view of these things, the writer has for some time felt that in some way the Christian people of America should be led to turn their prayers and hopes unitedly towards a great nation-wide post-war revival of religion. As I have thought and prayed about the matter I have experienced a deepening conviction as to the need of such a revival. Let me set forth in brief outline some of the reasons and considerations that have led me to this conviction.

More than anything else such a revival would serve to clear up the atmosphere for the right kind of thinking about the new conditions and problems we are now facing, especially with reference to the proposed revision of the creeds and policies of the church. It would safeguard us against the danger of being turned away from "the Old Book and the Old Paths." It would bring about a certitude of faith, a balance of mind and conviction that would give us great fortitude and steadfastness in the presence of the chaos and confusion brought on by the present world upheaval.

Such a revival would renew and strengthen our devotion and attachment to the church. During the war the church has freely given of its strength and means to foster the war programs of outside agencies. Many have failed to recognize this, and consequently they have magnified these agencies and minimized the church. Besides, these agencies have necessarily been made most conspicuous before the minds of our young men in the army, and in such a way as possibly to lessen their former regard for church affiliations. Along with all this there has been much talk about merging all denominations into one or turning over their control to some federated body. These things, all taken together, have undoubtedly had a tendency to detach, if not to alienate, some people from the church. I have no fear that the church is going to be forsaken, or that it is going to be superseded by other agencies. But this confidence does not blind my eyes to the danger suggested by the above considerations. If the church maintains its place of primacy in the hearts and affections of the people, it must not stand aside in this hour of opportunity. If the church is to conserve its forces and continue its great missionary program, local and foreign, it must hold and strengthen the allegiance and devotion of its constituency. Nothing would enable the church to do this so fully and completely as a thorough-going revival of religion.

Such a revival would help in a great way to prepare the church for its post-war opportunities. These are coming upon us faster than we realize and in ways which we have not suspected. It would therefore be difficult at this time to catalog them. But of one we are sure, and that is the one with which the church is most directly and deeply concerned, namely, the immediate and speedy evangelization of the world. To carry forward this great program of world evangelization in a way commensurate with the need and opportunity is going to call for tremendous effort and unprecedented sacrifice. Our best preparation for this mighty task would be a revival of spiritual religion. Revivals always foster the evangelistic and missionary spirit and always create an atmosphere favorable for extraordinary effort and sacrifice.

A post-war revival would do more than anything else to restore us to our normal feelings and soberness of mind. We have all been more or less excited by the war. In this state of excitement many have become reckless in their thought and speech. It has caused them to "loose wild tongues that have not God in awe." Some glory in their hatred of the enemy. The war seems to have engendered in them a spirit of bitterness and vindictiveness. As a remedy for all this I can think of nothing that would be more effective than a revival of religion.

A post-war revival would furnish a balm of healing for the wounds and sorrows caused by the war. This is a day of multiplied sorrows throughout the whole world. The countries of Europe and Asia are overwhelmed with unspeakable sorrow. Devastation, tragedies, horrors, indescribable sufferings and death are on every hand. Thousands of our own boys have fallen on the battlefield, and this has brought grief and gloom to thousands of American homes. Along with all this has come the Influenza epidemic which has ravaged the whole country, spreading sorrow and desolation everywhere. Religion is the only thing that can heal all these wounds, and that being true, a revival of religion following the war would be most opportune.

Not least among the benefits of such a revival would be the creation of a warm spiritual atmosphere in which to receive our boys when they return from the war. Religious influences have been deeply impressed upon our boys in the army. Most of them have thought more seriously about religion than ever before. Their hearts have been made warm and tender towards religion. Religion has become real to them, and has been the one vital, sustaining force in their lives as they have faced the perils of war. Coming out from the warm, wide-awake and stirring atmosphere to which they have become accustomed in the camps and trenches, it would be a spiritual calamity to have them come back into a formal, dull and cold atmosphere in the home churches. Besides, upon their return home our boys will need as never before the right kind of religious influences during that period when they are becoming re-adjusted to their normal life and when at the same time they will be facing the new ideas, conditions and problems of the new era that will follow the war.

These are some of the reasons why I believe we should turn our thoughts and prayers toward a nation-wide revival following the war. I believe we should in some way plan for a series of revival services to be held simultaneously in the churches of all denominations throughout the whole country. Simultaneous meetings have been successfully carried on in local communities and I see no reason why the plan could not be broadened out to take in the whole nation. It would be a fine thing if every church would observe a week of prayer and thanksgiving as soon as peace is declared. A simultaneous series of evangelistic services might be held either immediately following the week of prayer or at some future time. It would probably be better to set the date for these services several months in the future. If the idea meets with general favor, I am sure some practical plan can be devised for bringing about such a united nation-wide effort.

In the meantime, whether a general organized effort is made in this direction or not, let me ask all who read this to join in earnest prayer to God that He may open the windows of heaven and pour out a revival blessing upon our beloved nation. I am confident there are many earnest Christians throughout the country already praying to this end. Let it be remembered that revivals come only through prayer.

DR. DAVID J. BURRELL

CHRISTMAS ALL THE YEAR

BY

REV. DAVID JAMES BURRELL, D.D., LL.D.

Pastor of the Marble Collegiate Church, New York City

It was a great day when Christ was born in Bethlehem of Judea. He was the Heir-apparent of the Kingdom; yet no bells rang, no trumpets blared, no heralds announced His advent. Only a few shepherds watching their flocks and a little group of Oriental star-gazers were prepared to welcome him.

It was a great day when Christ was hung up betwixt heaven and earth to die for us men and for our salvation. Then and there a fountain was opened for uncleanness, where "whosoever will" may evermore be purged of sin. Yet in that bitter hour of anguish his closest friends forsook Him and fled, and the people for whom He was dying hid as it were their faces from Him.

The Day Bringing Life and Immortality to Light

It was a great day when Christ rose from the dead, bringing life and immortality to light. He thereby set the seal of divine authority upon the franchise of our salvation, proving Himself to be the Son of God with power and therefore able to save unto the uttermost all who come unto Him. Yet, save for a little company of mourners in an upper room and certain women who had waited upon Him in His ministry, there was nobody who seemed to grasp the tremendous issues which were involved in this supreme triumph over death and hell.

It was a great day on Olivet when Christ, having finished His redemptive work, returned to His heavenly throne. The clouds opened to receive Him; angels and archangels thronged His chariot wheels and bore Him aloft shouting, "Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and be ye lift up ye everlasting doors, and let the King of Glory enter in!" But, with the exception of a few hundreds of people who stood on Olivet with upturned faces, the now salvable race was apparently indifferent to the fact that its Saviour was going back to the glory which He had with the Father before the world was formed.

The Day of His Second Coming

There is another great day coming when Christ will reappear "on clouds of glory seated" and all the holy angels with Him, to claim His inheritance in the dominion of this world. Then every knee will bow before Him; and ten thousand times ten thousand and thousands of thousands of angels and saints triumphant will join with saints on earth in singing "All hail the power of Jesus's name!"

But in the long meantime are there no great days? Aye, every day that marks the progress of Christian civilization is a great day: and every day that dawns is such a day because it plants a milestone in the onward march of the King. The hands on God's dial never turn back. "All things obey His first propulsion from the night: wake thou and watch; the world is gray with morning light!"

It is the greatest of mistakes to suppose that Christ is not present all the while, supervising and controlling among nations and the children of men. He came to stay! "Lo, I am with you always," literally "all the days," He said. That means today. His name yesterday, today and forever is "Immanuel, which being interpreted is God with us."

Christ with His People

Christ has promised to be with His people; even with the least of His little ones; and we have nobody to blame but ourselves if we do not have fellowship with Him. Hear Him saying "I will not leave you as orphans are left; I will never leave you nor forsake you."

He is with us in our happy days; and blessed is the Christian who shares all pleasures with Him. And He is with us when the sun goes down. There is a saying, "Laugh and the world laughs with you: weep and you weep alone"—but it is not so with this divine Friend of ours. We have an High Priest who can be touched with a feeling of our infirmities; who not only comes to our wedding feasts but enters when crape is on our doors. Wherefore if we are ever alone it is because our hearts are closed against Him.

"There's not a friend like the loving Jesus;
No, not one!
There's not an hour when He is not near us;
No night so dark but His love can cheer us,
No, not one! No, not one!"

Christ with His Church

Christ is present with His Church: just as really as the head with its intellectual powers is inseparably in control of the body.

This is true not only of the great churches where throngs of worshippers assemble to pay tribute to Him; but of the little lonely places by the crossroads and on the remote frontiers where services are maintained only by the self-sacrificing devotion of a faithful few. It is blessed to realize His presence in the great congregation, but thrice blessed and enheartening beyond measure is it when only "two or three are met together" to worship Him.

A vivid apprehension of this immediate Presence would give a tremendous impulse to the great enterprises of the Church. Suppose that when the next offering for Foreign Missions is announced in your congregation you should see Christ standing beside your minister and hear Him say, "Go! There are twelve hundred millions of people in the world who never have heard that I died for their salvation: go tell them!" What would you do? Of a certainty if you could not go personally, you would give generously to send somebody to represent you.

This is what the Church needs above everything else; to believe that Christ meant what He said when He uttered the words, "Lo, I am with you always." It is easy to remember when Christmas is in the air that He once came into this world of ours; it is easier to practically forget that He came to take up his abode with us.

Christ in History

Christ is perpetually present in History: making all events converge toward "one supreme divine event," namely, His return to reign from the river unto the ends of the earth.

The progress of Christian civilization is in evidence. At the time of Christ's advent all civilization was embraced in a strip of sunlight along the Eastern borders of the Mediterranean. Now take a map of the world and draw a circle around the civilized nations, and what have you? Christendom! Within that circle designated by the Saviour's name are substantially all the schools and hospitals, orderly communities and enlightened governments on earth. Beyond it lie "the regions of darkness and the shadow of death." What does that mean? It means that progress and Christianity are synonymous and interchangeable terms. It means that the world grows better where—and only where—the luminous shadow of the Cross falls over it. It means that Christ is in the forefront of current events.

The Meaning of the World War

This is the meaning of the World War. The Armageddon through which we have been passing is a demonstration of the fact that the Knight-errant who came to save the world nineteen hundred years ago has not been unmindful of things going on. He has been here all the while. There was a time when it seemed as if wrong and oppression were destined to drive everything before them. Then came the rally. The Knight-errant of Justice and Humanity has been leading the way; his white plume waving and beckoning his people to go forward like a Spartan phalanx against the principalities and powers of sin. And now we gratefully cry, like Cromwell at Marston Moor, "I do protest, we win! In the name of the Lord we win!"

Let us not forget it. We have been witnessing a controversy of the gods. It has been Christ against the gods of Valhalla and the Pantheon—and as at Carmel the multitudes cry "The Lord, He is the God!" But danger lies in the piping times of peace which are now drawing on. Never since the beginning of the Christian era has there been a Christmas like this one. As the roar of artillery dies away and we gather at our firesides to keep the happy holiday let us rejoice that when Jesus came into the world by way of Bethlehem He came to stay, and that He is with us all the days.

A Merry Christmas to All

A merry Christmas to all who read these words. A merry Christmas it will be, if we practice the Presence; for our hearts will burn within us as our best Friend talks with us along the way.

AS THE EBB-TIDE FLOWS OUT

By Kathleen Hay

THE sunlight sparkled and shone across the beach, as the tide slowly receded farther and farther back from shore, leaving bare many indentations upon the long, white beach. Some of these footprints reached out steady and straight, while perhaps near by, there lay impressed others not so strong, more rapid and daring, more careless, until reaching out too far, a large wave had hurled itself heavily forward, and the footprints had then ceased.

The brightness of a glaring sun shone down alike on the prints upon the sand—it also touched caressingly the dark waves, as inch by inch they receded, the small laughing wavelets mingling in with the large ones to help swell the volume and roar of the restless and boundless sea.

And the tide was ebb.

The sun sank slowly down, and evening came—evening with its starlight and calm. Far from shore great waves dashed against the stone walls of a lighthouse, breaking themselves into hundreds of pieces. And afar out on the deep, fathomless ocean, two boats tossed side by side in the storm. The billows washed against their sides and splashed high on the decks above—angrier and yet louder grew the roar of the sea—then from afar the welcome gleam from the lighthouse window, sent its shaft across the troubled waters, and out into the darkness of the night.

Slowly, but steadily and surely, one of the boats turned eagerly toward the beckoning gleam. She would fight on through the storm, following ever the guide light, to anchor safe at last!

But the other, seeing too the light that would lead them both home, turned away—the excitement and danger of the restless sea as it rose and fell held her all too firmly in its stormy grasp.

Turning away from the beautiful light that stretched out protectingly across the dark waters it flashed back and forth, lingering long in the storm, one moment struggling madly amidst the strength of great, strong waves, and then rising triumphant above the surging mass. And thus, night with its shadows wore on, until across the far horizon gleamed a fair dawn. The lamp from the lighthouse window burned steadily on, and down beneath it, safe from all storms, lay a boat, rising and fally gently on the breast of a quiet sea.

In the dim distance the other came slowly on—torn and storm-tossed and tired from the long, weary fight in the dark, but coming home to anchor at last.

And the night was gone.

And so time passes on, the ebb-tide of the years leaving bare the impression of our lives. The noonday glare of a scorching sun streams down—we sometimes seek to shade the light, but the prints burned deep into time, cannot be effaced. The impressions are left, and even the shadows of on-coming night will not blot them out forever.

Far away in distance, and sometimes in years it seems, gleam the lights from Heaven. There are some with eager faces that ever press steadily on, the greatness of satisfied souls shining in their eyes, even though blinded at times by a mist of tears. They are homeward bound, but pilgrims for a little while in scenes below, as calmly and patiently they struggle on through the deep waters, to anchor in glory, at last, "in the land of the Unsetting Sun!"

The beautiful light beckons on and on, to those other, storm-tossed, and soul-weary pilgrims, while they beat their lives against the rough waves, trying in vain to find amidst the rush and excitement of a glittering world, satisfaction for the cravings of tired hearts.

That glimpse of light that they catch sometimes, seems far away down the vista of years. And yet—who knows?

Why not with that band of faithful ones, press on and on, with faces turned ever toward the goal. For thus, through the years, as the ebb-tide flows out, we may leave impressions worth while, burned into the memory of other lives, perhaps to help along the way, some faltering, storm-tossed soul safely across the shadows and into eternal light.

Lead Thou me on, the way is dark
Across the sea.

The lighthouse gleams so far away,
God holds the key.

I would my soul could reach that shore
Of peace and love,

Far from earth's pain and ceaseless care
In heaven above.

Somewhere where stars will always shine
And not grow dim,

Where tired ones can raise their eyes
Beholding Him.

Oh, toiling souls though waves are rough
Hold on,

Soon shall thy weary eyes behold the light
Of glorious morn!

✻ ✻ ✻

The Lord's Mercies

BY WILLIAM NORRIS BURR.

"The Lord hath done great things for us," greater things, we may be sure, than have ever yet been revealed fully to any of us. There are spiritual souls, however—men of keen eye and clear brain, of devout and receptive heart—who have walked so closely with God that they have been able to sense the forces of the spiritual universe and to discern the divinity shaping our ends above the discernment of their fellows. God has always had His prophets, and "by the mouth of His holy prophets" He has spoken to men, and thus enabled hosts of them to be catching gleams of His accomplishment and of His further purposes that have strengthened their faith, and quickened their hope, and —————held them true

To the highest thought and the broadest view."

For all true prophets of the Lord are optimists. They run through the world carrying messages of cheer. Black storm-clouds may cover the sky; the rain may fall fiercely, as in a passion of anger; the winds may howl like hungry beasts of prey about the door; but above the wail of the storm may be heard the songs of God's interpreters: "Be of good cheer." "God's in His heaven—all's right with the world." "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad." "The Lord is merciful and gracious, slow to anger, and plenteous in mercy. He will not always chide, neither will He keep His anger forever. He hath not dealt with us after our sins, nor rewarded us according to our iniquities. For as the heaven is high above the earth, so great is His mercy toward them that fear Him."

"Day after day He showers us with blessings,
Night after night His bounty overflows,
Joy unto joy His boundless love is adding,
Gift unto gift His faithfulness bestows.

"Behind us all the past with good is studded,
Star-points of light in memory's darkening skies,
And, faring onward to the unknown future,
Before us still new constellations rise."

"The Lord hath done great things for us" by sending among us men and women of the finer vision who can impart to us, in terms that we can understand, some knowledge of the things which they have seen, to which we have been blinded by fear and distrust and too much brooding over "the shattering fury when the tempest breaks."

"The Lord hath done great things for us," too, which possibly we have not regarded with high appreciation until they have seemed to be slipping away from us. He has even given us Himself, and we have, perhaps, taken that supreme Gift as a matter of course, scarce heeding it at all, until on some day of unusual experience we suddenly waken to our need of Him. A little boy who was traveling a long way from home with his mother became pensive and serious the second day. After a long silence from which his mother tried in vain to rally him, he suddenly burst out saying, "I know what is the matter with me: I want my father!"

When this world, in some strange, unusual hour, begins to feel a sense of lack in its life, and realizes that it has been traveling away from the Great Heart of the universe that has been doing great things for it, which it has been receiving thoughtlessly; as the world gets lonesome, homesick for its Father, and turns about and runs to fling itself eagerly into the Everlasting Arms, it will be comforted, as never before. For, as Augustine said, "The soul of man was made for God, and is restless until it finds rest in Him."

✻ ✻ ✻

Why Are You Here?

BY REV. C. A. S. DWIGHT, PH.D.

Bernard of Clairvaux, the noted French monk kept hanging in his cell a coarse piece of parchment bearing the inscription, "Bernard, why are you here?" The musing monk could not enter his cell without facing that penetrating inquiry as to his fundamental purpose in life. It is a question which pursues every thinking man. He may try to let it alone, but it will not leave him alone.

Why am I here? What is the general purpose of my being in this rushing, covetous, distracted, sometimes we think half-crazy world? Perhaps no better answer can be given than that of the Catechism, "The chief end of man is to glorify God, and to enjoy Him forever." This is a kind of "blanket" explanation, which covers all of life's activities, so that any man can say: "I am here because God put me here, to fulfill His will, and to achieve my own best self-development." We are God's workmanship, as the apostle put it, "created in Christ Jesus unto all good works." But further than this, we should each of us also ask, what particular purpose am I meant to serve in this world? Why am I here in this special position, in this cosy nook, in this hard field, or in that crowded and clamorous arena?

"To every man his work" is the Scriptural principle of duty allotment. No one individual can occupy another's peculiar niche in history, but every one is expected to do his or her duty here or there. There is always some particular task which calls to us at any moment, or some sphere in which just then we are to live and move and have our being. What is needed in the world today is more reflection on the ends of all living, and as well on the nature of the little, chink-filling tasks and agenda, commissions and compulsions, which are to make out the program of any one consecrated life. Why are we here? That question will follow us all our life through, and upon its proper answer depends our destiny for eternity.

✻ ✻ ✻

CHRISTMAS, 1918

By Paul V. D. Hoysradt

Out of the night, a star,
Out of the dark, a light;
Out of the cloud, an angel-song,
Out of the shadow, a fadeless hope;
Out of the silence, an endless joy,
Out of the grave, life beyond life—
Out of earth's travail, the CHRIST.

NORWAY—BEFORE THE WAR AND SINCE

By Annette L. Noble

ON THE sixteenth of August, 1914, a fortnight after the beginning of the great war, a significant ceremony took place on the frontier between Norway and Sweden. It was the unveiling of a monument in commemoration of a century of unbroken peace in Scandinavia. But no one present was likely to forget the ominous future, while recalling pleasant memories of the past. Realizing, even then, the sad conditions existing in other countries, an agreement was entered into that in no case would any of the Scandinavian peoples take arms against another nation. They knew well that any policy but neutrality might easily involve them in war among themselves, for the three (Norway, Sweden and Denmark) differ socially and politically, according to their locality and previous history.

The situation in Norway seemed simpler than in any other neutral country, because it is a small nation, its population is the smallest of any in Europe, with the exception of Luxemburg and Montenegro, and it has been friendly with all other nations. Nevertheless in a social and economic sense, Norway is the most democratic country in Europe. When Germany attacked Belgium, Norway saw to what any other small state might be exposed, and Norwegian sentiment openly declared its horror of such a military policy. She could not enter the war; to have done so would have been to bring disaster on her own people and to be of no special help to the Allies. But it was far from easy for Norway to maintain her neutrality and she has suffered much.

Norwegians have always been sober, industrious and economical—a people to whom were given neither poverty nor riches, but the willingness to live by hard work. In the past they have been content. Now, only one who has spent considerable time in Norway and has studied the character and habits of her admirable people will be able to realize the existing changed conditions. The peaceful beauty and the calm sublimity of its glorious scenery are so remote from the hideous tumult of war that its wonderful fjords, its lofty mountains, its quaint cities and tiny hamlets seem to belong to a different world. A lover of Norway never tires of telling of her high green hills and higher ice peaks; of great cataracts thundering down from unseen glaciers or the beautiful lesser cascades tumbling over mossy rocks and breaking apart into silvery streams. Persons who know little of Norway imagine it cold and sunless, forgetting that in summer it is really a land of radiant beauty. Its lower hills and sunny valleys abound in wild flowers: forget-me-nots, blue-bells, yellow and white violets silky bog-cotton and purple heather. Of course, all this natural charm exists today as always, but great is the contrast between the present life of the people and their comfort and plenty before the war.

In no country is living now so expensive as it is there, because of the enormous prices asked for articles of necessary consumption, as well as the fact that few of these are to be had. Salaries and wages have risen, but money is of little use under the circumstances. In cities like Christiania where many people can earn so much more than ever before and yet can buy very few articles needed, some are wasting in gambling or senseless prodigality, without thought of saving for the future, as once they would have saved. But the most tragic disasters have been the losses in human lives, as well as in ships, brought about by Germany's the war, at all picturesque points might be hired small mustard colored horses hitched to queer little stolkyaerre or two-wheeled vehicles, for use up hill and down dale and through the fragrant pine forests. The large towns are interesting, but the rural hamlets are more charming. In pretty valleys, will be red-roofed cottages, clustered around a white wooden church, for church-going is universal and the pastor is a village oracle and the people's most valued friend. On the near hillside may be one or two more pretentious villas, painted bright squash color, each with a garden of gay flowers. Often the cottages may have birch bark stretched over their roofs and next soil, with a short growth of grass and springing out of this—buttercups, violets, daisies, even little spruce trees. Such a roof garden is said to make for warmth in winter and coolness in summer.

The interiors of these Norwegian homes are very neat. The walls and ceilings will be of oiled pine and on the floor bright rag-rugs. The table will have an elaborately crocheted cover, on which is sure to rest the family Bible and an album with photographs of the sons and grandchildren "in Wisconsin" or elsewhere. Often all the wooden furniture of the house has been made by the good-man of the family during the long winter evenings. The sideboard, cupboard doors, clock case and mirror-frame may then be green, with pink or red roses painted thereon. White curtains shade windows and blossoming geraniums stand in rows on the sill.

If you had entered such a home, prior to the war you might have found the house-mother running a little hand sewing machine. Busy, too, would have been her yellow-haired daughters, wearing the prettiest costume seen in Europe—a scarlet bodice, dark skirt, gay striped apron, and low shoes with white stockings. Had you been an invited guest what a nice dinner you would have enjoyed! It would have included fresh salmon or lobster, generous slices of a big, mysterious ball, saffron tinted on the outside, white like angel-cake inside, made of pounded fish, flour, eggs—who knows what?—but delicious. Then for dessert, pancakes thin as a gauze veil, dozens in a pile and cut in quarter-sections, and perhaps honey-colored "molte-berries," suggesting a dream-berry of Mr. Burbank's. But today in many such homes, want and sorrow must be the only guests, for husbands and sons, once strong fishermen and brave sailors, are under the sea.

Such an upright, kindly people we always found the Norwegians, and very intelligent, too. The men almost always spoke English. Many landlords owning the little summer inns had taken college courses in Christiania; one had studied nine years at Oxford. They welcomed strangers so cordially and were so upright in submarine warfare. Norwegian sailors have always been carriers of goods between all the ports of the world. But during the war exporters and importers, with all shipping interests, have been hindered by blockades. Ships have been long delayed in foreign ports and fishing industries have suffered immensely. Of course the sinking of valuable cargoes has meant great trouble to the little country. Even if the ship-owners were insured, so that they did not lose their capital, the shipbuilders in many cases have been unable to carry on their business.

SCENE ON THE SOGNE FJORD, NORWAY

In past years, Norwegians made money in their hotels and the little rural inns also in various ways from the tourists, especially from the English, who year after year used to visit the same little hamlets on the shores of the deep green fjords. Wherever visitors stayed they were sure to insist that no other spot, in all Norway, was quite as beautiful.

The best way for one to see the whole country was to start from Bergen by steamer for the North Cape, because the boat entered each fine fjord en route. Coming south again, one could drive through marvelous scenery for, before all their dealings! Indeed one finds them comically honest sometimes. Once, in paying a small bill for a dinner of several courses, the host said, "I noticed you did not take any—, I'll deduct for that, because folks should not pay for what they don't eat."

Then the country inns are so quaint! If you stayed for the night, you slept in a wooden box-bed, built against the wall. When the sheets met your chin they were half a yard from your toes; but that did not matter because summer nights were never meant for sleep in Norway. The people were sure to be out of doors, visiting, singing, the old ones resting, the younger ones might be haymaking on some hill where the grass grew horizontally. Men cut the hay, tie it in huge bundles and shoot it down long wires to the valley. Daylight conservation is no new thing in Norway. Trouble comes when the stranger, unused to the prolonged sunshine, gets confused and wonders if he is eating his breakfast, his afternoon tea or, like somebody in Alice in Wonderland, "dining on the following day."

Formerly, in the cities, there was little poverty, for no liquor is sold and the needy were cared for by friends or wise charities. Young people are well educated in excellent schools where Bible instruction is a marked feature. Bergen is a quaint, pretty city, once thronged with tourists all eager to visit its shops, full then of costly furs and curiously wrought silver, or to see the national curios like the old Hanseatic Museum. Molde also is a beautiful town. The gulf stream flows so near it that summer there is almost tropical while the brilliant foliage and flowers suggest Nice or Mentone. Trondhjem is the largest northern city in the world and was founded in A. D. 996 by Olaf, the first king of Norway. There the chief interest is a truly magnificent cathedral where every later Scandinavian king has been crowned.

Sogne Fjord, a view of which appears in the illustration that accompanies this article, is an inlet in the Province of North Bergenhus, in the eastern part of Norway. It pierces the land for a distance of nearly ninety miles, and in some places has a depth of nearly 4,000 feet. The region through which it extends is remarkable for its many glaciers and the wild grandeur of its scenery.

On all the Scandinavian nations the war has laid many burdens, under which they must suffer for years to come and they have all been troubled, more or less, by internal problems. But they realize that they have not suffered as those living in the invaded countries, and their sympathy and active help have not been refused to the Allies. Especially have the appeals in favor of Belgium met with a generous response.

The Seed of The Kingdom

BY Z. IRENE DAVIS.

The good that results from distributing Gospel tracts cannot be estimated in this world. The one who engages in this blessed work, and the one who reads the leaflet, are both helped. We can take courage and thank God that the Holy Spirit has not left the world. This way of scattering the truth is a means of bringing many people in China to Jesus.

A husband and wife, who were recently examined and accepted for baptism in a Chinese Mission, first learned of the Christian religion through two missionary colporters, who visited their village a few years ago.

At that time, they had a very sick child. In despair, they besought the colporters to pray for its recovery. In reply they told the anxious parents they would do this, if they would first take down their idols and put them away.

At first, the parents were afraid to move their gods, for fear more trouble would come upon them. The colporters started on their journey, but they had not gone far, before the mother and father followed them, saying that if they would come back and pray for their little one, they would surely remove their idols. And this they did.

After the colporters had offered prayer, the child began to grow better, and it was not long before it was entirely well.

The parents, glad that they had heard of a God who could answer prayer, began attending services at the Mission. Now they are eager to learn more, and are walking in the light, as best they can.

The Bible admonishes us not to despise the day of small things, and so let us not doubt the effectiveness of the little printed messengers of truth which are called tracts.

✻ ✻ ✻

Wings

BY CORA S. DAY.

Whom God would make great, He first makes wise. A glance through the Bible and a study of history and biography, will show this plainly. The truly great have been truly wise; and where great men have failed or fallen short of what they aimed for or should have attained, that failure has been because their wisdom fell short; because they did not know the best ideals, or lacked knowledge of the best ways of reaching them. For knowledge, says Shakespeare, is "The wing wherewith we fly to heaven."

To make that true, however, we must seek the right sort of knowledge. A certain bright young man, temporarily idle, in a spirit of fun spent his spare time in learning tating, just then the favored fancy work with his sister and their girl friends. He turned out a beautiful and intricate piece of work, triumphant proof of his cleverness of brain and hand. Another young fellow, under similar circumstances, took up a course of study, passed a government examination and was appointed to a post of responsibility and good salary.

What kind of wings of knowledge are you growing? Are they frail, inefficient, worldly wings that will keep you fluttering close to the earth all your days? Or are they the widespread, powerful wings of knowledge of things of the Kingdom; things that will make you wise in the wisdom of God and give you wings "wherewith to fly to heaven?"

✻ ✻ ✻

The Faithful Few

BY G. W. TUTTLE.

The faithful few do not stop to complain of the heat or cold; they start out for the sanctuary on Sunday just as regularly as they start out to their business on Monday morning. Yes, they make a business of serving the Lord, and they do not need to consult the thermometer, or a barometer, or a weather forecast, before they make a decision.

Many a pastor sticks to his parish and has great confidence in the final results of his labors, because of the faithful few in his church. The faithful few do more to encourage a minister than a multitude of lukewarm people. When he puts all that is in him into a sermon, he sees the eyes of the faithful sparkle, and he knows that they are saying, "Amen," in their hearts, and he knows that they will hasten to practice what he preaches.

What would become of the world of business if the bulk of church members ran their secular affairs as they perform their religious duties? Strange how keen, how resourceful and how tactful, a man may be from Monday morning until Saturday night; then, when the blessed Sabbath is at hand, how he lets his ability fall from him like a garment, and appears to be stupid and useless, without resource or tact. When asked to do anything, he says, "I can't!" And yet that same individual can do almost anything on a week day, when a dollar is at stake. Alas for a man who is one of the dollar workers, but one of God's drones!

Is this too strong? Am I unjust? Is the picture untrue? I have intense admiration for the man who is always in his place, who is always ready; the man who has elements within him that defy the elements without; the man who is sure that God will do His part of the work if he only does his.

The faithful few have confidence in God. They expect results. If there is no apparent fruitage just now, they believe it will surely come, for God is faithful and they never let go of God. They have learned to take God at His word, to trust Him for the increase and to be patient. They always have a forward look.

Faithfulness looms large when computed by the arithmetic of Heaven. The faithful few use that which they have; they never waste time in boasting of the great things they would do, had they the ability or talent of their neighbors. They pass on what God has given them; they divide their blessings and they are multiplied; their oil and meal never fail.

The faithful few never have just religion enough to make them miserable. Their measure overflows because the Master has come in in His fulness. Theirs is no selfish joy; they do good works, not in order to be saved, but because they are saved. What rejoicing there would be in Heaven if we were all numbered with the faithful few who are the burden-bearers, the light-givers, the winsome men and women of this old world.

✻ ✻ ✻

Seeing Things in Their True Proportion

BY EMMA YOUNGLOVE.

Spiritual things are of more value than physical. The honor of Christ is priceless, beyond all things earthly. Perhaps we are not slow to admit these truths in theory, but in practice they are often ignored. Even in many churches today the tendency is strong to put the emphasis upon social service rather than upon the worship of God, upon human betterment in a material sense rather than upon preaching the gospel of salvation from sin.

Probably the pendulum swung too far in the opposite direction in a previous generation and people needed to have their attention called back to the brotherhood of men. But now the material world is pressing hard upon attention. Easy communication has brought the ends of the earth to every man's door. The calls of humanity are heard daily from the far places. Opportunities for ready response to suffering at the antipodes are ever at hand. This is well; the need is real.

But all these things should contribute to the extension of the kingdom of our Lord and the honor of the Saviour of men, and they should by no means take the place of these supreme interests. It may even be needful at times to forget the poor who are always with us, in order that we may exalt with due honor the Lord Christ. The Dutch artist Rembrandt threw into deep shadow most of the details of his pictures that the more expressive parts, the human faces and hands, might stand forth strongly in contrasting light. And how wonderfully expressive the faces and hands are in his pictures!

So should the individual Christian place in the strong light in his life the divine Saviour, and the Church should exalt and glorify the crucified and risen Lord.

✻ ✻ ✻

The Deathless Life

BY THOMAS CURTIS CLARK

The man who lives for self

And selfish ends

Shall age and die, and none

Shall know his fate.

The earth shall him devour

As ill-spent clay,

And none his wasted years

Shall contemplate.

But he who gives his life,

To faith and love,

And serves his fellow men,

Nor counts the cost,

Though early he may fall

Into his grave,

The treasure of his life

Shall not be lost.

HIS VINEYARD AND OURS

In Golaghat, India

One of the stations maintained by the Assam Mission of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society is at Golaghat. At this point Rev. O. L. Swanson has done a splendid work, which is described by one of his fellow-workers in these words: "He has cared for the church, kept in motion extensive evangelistic organizations, won the straying Christians back to the fold; he rearranged the commissary and culinary departments of the Bible Conference, and attracted two hundred and fifteen workers to attendance at the same conference; besides this, he has baptized the living, buried the dead, and done a hundred and one other things, all resulting in the onward march of the churches and schools of his district, and above all inspiring others to live and work more nearly as Christ did."

Through the courtesy of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society we are enabled to present a characteristic scene, in which Mr. Swanson is seen conducting a baptismal service at Golaghat.

It may be of interest to note in passing that the American Tract Society has often aided various stations of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society by foreign cash appropriations, and that the total of such appropriations sent for the production and circulation of Christian literature in Assam amounts to $5,000.00.

The Bible in Japanese Prisons

The American Bible Society has placed Bibles for 25,000 prisoners in the twenty-seven prisons of Japan. These Bibles are of good size and large print. Mr. Aurell, the Society's agent, visited the prisons shortly after the grant had been made and discovered that the Buddhist chaplains connected with them had cunningly succeeded in preventing the proper distribution in the cells. Tactful interviews with the governors of the prisons, however, soon corrected this intrigue. Among the conversions of criminals resulting from Bible reading has been the following remarkable one which Mr. Aurell writes:

"Not long ago a lawyer friend of the writer was eating in a restaurant in the business part of Tokyo where a number of lawyers gather at noon for lunch. This friend was paying no attention to the conversation going on about him, being at a table by himself, when his attention was suddenly arrested by hearing a certain name. Four or five lawyers, were discussing a notorious criminal case which at that time was filling the newspapers. Sensation had followed sensation when almost at the moment when another man was to have been hanged for the crime, the real criminal appeared and confessed, giving as his reason for doing so that he had learned to know God. The lawyers in conversation were exclaiming about the extraordinary occurrence of a man untouched by evidence giving himself up to an undoubted death. None of the lawyers were Christians apparently. One of them, however, who happened to have charge of the case, closed the discussion by saying:

"Well, you may say what you will but there is some power in Christianity. The man is utterly changed. When one sees him in prison one feels that one is comforted by the sight of the radiant face he bears rather than that one goes to comfort him. He is not an educated man and has lived a whole life of crime. He is facing inevitable death. But what does that matter? He says, 'God has given me life,—His life, and nothing can take that away.' He has his Bible by him constantly. He reads other Christian books but reads them once and then lays them aside. The Bible is sufficient for him and Christ his Saviour is all in all. The other day a certain verse was read to him as someone visited him in prison and his face lit up with a radiance, the source of which belongs to another world than this. Here it is: "Whether we live, we live unto the Lord; and whether we die, we die unto the Lord: whether we live therefore, or die, we are the Lord's."

REV. O. L. SWANSON CONDUCTING A BAPTISMAL SERVICE AT GOLAGHAT, INDIA

An Example of Christian Unity

"China," says Tyler Dennet in the "Asia" magazine, "is pre-eminent in the extent to which the spirit of church union and inter-church co-operation has been carried. This is due—one may state it humbly—in large measure to the fact that in China the missionary leadership is most frequently in the hands of Americans. New methods of work are also easier in China because the work itself is often new. Some of the more recently established mission stations have been definitely planned with a view to fostering a spirit of church union and independence. Out in West China they have not only entered into comity agreements to prevent overlapping and duplication of effort but have even arranged to have a common designation for all chapel buildings in which the denominational label does not appear. In West China a church is simply a Christian Church, not a denominational church. I have sometimes been so amazed at the spirit of the missionaries, toward church union in contrast to the apathetic attitude of the denominations in the West, as to draw forth this statement: 'Out here we are moving toward church unity just as rapidly as our denominations at home will permit us to move.'

China's Need for Christian Literature

"Most Chinese ministers do not understand how to study the Scriptures or how to interpret them." That this appalling fact is the tragedy of the Chinese ministry, is the opinion of George W. Hollister, in his article "China Preachers and the Bible," recently published in the China Christian Advocate. Mr. Hollister states that this evil may be remedied by a more adequate distribution of Christian literature to the young theologians of China.

"Nothing will contribute more to the uplift of the Church than the creation of suitable literature for our preachers," says the author. He goes to show that the misinterpretation of the Bible made by Chinese ministers is a drawback to their people, when the training of these men is given for the enlightenment of their race.

Every Picture Means a Scholar

During these war days fewer Bible picture cards have been sent to the missionaries for use in their work. The effect is clearly noted in a photograph that recently came to the World's Sunday School Association from India. A Sunday-school was shown and 15 were present. In former days, when a larger number of picture cards had been received, that same school had an average attendance of seventy-five.

Missionaries from every field abroad state that "every picture means a scholar." A picture card is a large reward and is given often not merely for attendance but for committing verses and even chapters from the Bible to memory. In a certain city in China the missionary was able to obtain a real clean-up in one of the sections by giving a picture to each woman who would remove all rubbish from in front of her house.

Our home land is rich with pictures. Every Sunday-school class or individual member can help forward the Sunday-school work abroad by sending used post cards and left over Bible pictures to the missionaries. The pictures will win scholars and the teachers will seek to win souls. For all information write to the Surplus Material Department, World's Sunday School Association, 216 Metropolitan Tower, New York City. Be particular to indicate your denomination, distinguishing between "North" and "South" if necessary. You will receive a card of introduction to a missionary and a leaflet giving all details of the plan. More than 28,000 introductions have been placed in this manner.

Clannishness Hinders Full Acceptance of Christ

Thousands of people in one district in India on the verge of entrance to the Christian Church and yet not ready to take the last step leading to baptism, is the semi-tragic report which comes from R. I. Faucett, missionary on the Moradabad District of the North India Conference. The workers, however, are looking forward with great hope that they will soon be able to receive these multitudes in a body.

As a result of special evangelistic work throughout the district for a month, when more than fifteen hundred villages were visited, there has been a distinct movement toward Christianity. Six hundred people were baptized by the Methodist workers, but this does not begin to tell the story. Literally thousands of people have accepted the teaching of Christianity, have put away their idols and begun to live according to Christian practices.

That they have gone no further is but another instance of the power of social custom and tradition. For a man to accept baptism means to be cast out of the brotherhood of his village and to be altogether excluded from all the rights and privileges. The value of the Mass Movement is seen in its bringing whole communities into the Christian fellowship, so that the brotherhood as a whole is Christianized. The missionaries in Moradabad are hopeful that this is what will happen there, among the thousands in the different villages who are ready for baptism but who are waiting for others to join them in entering the Christian Church.

Liberian Missionary Knighted

"Knight Official of the Humane Order for the Redemption of Africa" is the title of knighthood which the President of the Republic of Monrovia has conferred on Walter B. Williams, Methodist Missionary at Nan Kru, Liberia. The honor was conferred while Mr. Williams was attending the annual conference at Monrovia.

While he felt the moment of so ponderous a veneration, the fact that he influenced the President to pass some welfare laws for his people, really counted much more. The Sasswood and Devil-Doctor laws, whereby severe punishment can be administered to all people mixing up with the Devil-Doctor's profession or administering sasswood, by which so many natives often unjustly lose their lives, are real steps toward civilization.

The mission where Mr. Williams is located is on the only road to Cape Palmas and is famous for its hospitality. In three months there were just 523 guests who stopped there. Some were hungry, some were sick, some were weary, and some came seeking God, and only two of the number were white people, but none were turned away, no matter their need or condition.

A Sunday-School Enthusiast

A recent visitor at the office of the World's Sunday School Association was Bishop Hiraiwa of the Methodist church of Japan. When the commissioner of the World's Sunday School Association went to Japan in 1906, to co-operate with Japanese Sunday-school leaders in organizing their work into an association, one of those who was most active in arranging the new organization was Bishop Hiraiwa. The church of which he is Bishop has put a very strong emphasis upon the Sunday-school work in Japan through an active Sunday-school committee and by the employment of a Sunday-school secretary, Rev. K. Mito who is a genius in Sunday-school methods.

Under the stimulation of this Sunday-school leadership, the Sunday-school membership of the Methodist church of Japan had grown last year to the large total of 38,000, while the church membership was 21,000. Bishop Hiraiwa says that the largest factor in the growth of the Methodist church is the Sunday-school, and this large Sunday-school membership is the best promise for the future strength of the Methodist church of Japan.

A Chinese Bible Concordance

From the Missionary Herald we learn that a Chinese concordance has been printed. It is in three volumes; was prepared and issued by Rev. H. G. C. Hallock, of Shanghai, and contains 400,000 direct or indirect Bible references, using 5,000,000 Chinese characters. It follows a plan similar to that of Cruden's Concordance, contains a Bible dictionary in Chinese and a text-book of Bible names.

Notes upon the Topics Used
in Christian Endeavor
and Other Young People's Societies.

THE PRAYER MEETING

By
Rev. Henry Lewis
Ph.D.

DECEMBER 1.

All for Christ. VI. Our Pleasures
1 Cor. 10:23, 24, 31-33; 11:1.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M., Nov. 25. Christ invited. John 2:1-11.
T., Nov. 26. Social life. Luke 5:27-32.
W., Nov. 27. Dancing to death. Exod.
32:1-6, 28.
T., Nov. 28. Idle pleasures. Amos 6:1-6.
F., Nov. 29. Rest-time. Mark 7:30-32.
S., Nov. 30. Joys of song. Rev. 5:7-14.

The Christian who consecrates his all to Christ must consecrate his pleasures. In order to have a well rounded life there must be some provision for relaxation, and a consecrated Christian will find in wisely-planned recreation the needed relaxation.

Let us glance briefly at some of the characteristics that should distinguish the pleasures of a Christian.

In the first place pleasures of the right sort are healthful. No Christian should indulge in pleasures that result in impaired digestion, sleepless nights or weakened physical powers. The pleasures of a Christian should be healthgiving. They should restore tired nerves, invigorate wearied bodies, and furnish a tonic that will help to recuperate rather than to exhaust our physical nature.

A Christian's pleasures should be recreative in their effect. They should be restful in character, for "rest is not quitting one's career; rest is fitting oneself for one's sphere."

The pleasures of a Christian should be harmless. They should not in any way impair the morals nor injure the spiritual nature of those who engage in them. They should be essentially unselfish, for pleasures that are selfish are almost sure to have in them an element of mischief that cannot fail to work some injury either to ourselves or to our fellow-man.

A Christian's pleasures should be of a kind to benefit the mind. Inane and foolish frivolity should have no place in the life of one who is consecrated to the service of the Master. The Christian's pleasures should strengthen the body, stimulate the mind and refresh the spirit.

Our pleasures should be free from the appearance of evil. It is wise for the Christian to avoid debatable or doubtful ground. Any pleasure that savors of gambling or that appeals to what is sensual in human nature should be sedulously avoided.

Let us test our pleasures by asking the question, "Is this what Christ would have me do?" In other words let us indulge only in those pleasures in which we feel that we would be willing to ask Jesus to join us.

What are some of the pleasures in which a Christian may indulge? The answer to this question is for each one to decide for himself in the light of Paul's teaching, as recorded in our Scripture selection.

Among those beneficial pleasures that may be suggested we may mention reading which is surely one of the choicest and most easily accessible pleasures of life.

Music furnishes to many a very satisfying and uplifting form of pleasure. Good pictures are a delight to many discriminating souls and constitute one of the most informing and attractive pleasures that can be named.

The contact gained with nature through travel is another of the choice pleasures of life, which serve to broaden as well as to delight the mind.

DECEMBER 8.

Begin Now
2 Cor. 6:1-10.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M., Dec. 2. Put Christ first. Matt. 8:18-22.
T., Dec. 3. Begin to serve. Eccl. 11:1-6.
W., Dec. 4. Begin to worship. Ps. 95:1-11.
T., Dec. 5. Begin to think. Eccl. 7:11-29.
F., Dec. 6. Join the church. Acts 16:1-5.
S., Dec. 7. Begin to give. 2 Cor. 8:1-15.

Now is the time to begin to confess Christ. We are called to pledge our allegiance to the Master not tomorrow or next week or next year, but this very moment.

There are no deferred calls in the Master's service. We are summoned to serve Christ to-day, and there are no valid claims for exemption from this service.

Now is the time for us to begin to imitate Christ. We should endeavor to follow in His steps immediately. Nothing is gained by delay and there may be incalculable loss if we procrastinate in this most vital matter.

Now is the time to begin to help humanity. Never was there a time in the world's history when the call for assistance was louder or the opportunity for lending a helping hand to our brother man was so inviting as now.

The ending of the world war opens up larger avenues of service for others than we have ever known before. We are now called upon to feed the starving peoples of the world, and if by self-sacrifice and liberality we provide sustenance for those who are ready to perish, we shall win the world by kindness and thus gain the greatest victory we have ever achieved.

Now is the time to begin to strengthen the Church of Christ. The church needs our help, and we need the help of the church. Whatever weakness in the church has been disclosed by the War it should be our endeavor to remedy. The church is a divine instrument for the blessing of humanity, and now is the time to make this instrument more effective than ever before.

Now is the time to begin to evangelize the world. The massing together of large bodies of men for war purposes has furnished an opportunity for evangelistic service which has not fully been realized. Now that the war is over and the soldiers will have so much more leisure time in the period that must elapse before demobilization, we should be alert to use to the utmost the opportunity for evangelistic work that is thus presented.

Now is the time to begin to do all that is in our power to establish the Kingdom of God here on the earth. We are entering upon a new era in the history of the world. May it be an era in which the Kingdom of God shall make larger progress than ever before. Christian Endeavorers and young people in all the churches may do a great deal to help to make this new era upon which we are entering an era of the expansion of the Kingdom of God.

DECEMBER 15.

The Power of the Cross in the Philippines

Psalms 72:1-19.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M., Dec. 9. Light to the people. Isa. 9:1-7.
T., Dec. 10. People to the light. Rev. 21:22-27.
W., Dec. 11. Natural kindness. Acts 23:1-10.
T., Dec. 12. Ready for light. Ps. 43:1-5.
F., Dec. 13. Loving the stranger. Deut.
10:12-22.
S., Dec. 14. Strangers brought near. Eph.
2:11-22.

Nine out of every ten Filipinos, apart from the Moros, are said to be nominal Christians. The Moros are mainly Mohammedan. These nominal Christian Filipinos are of course chiefly Roman Catholic, having received from Spanish Roman Catholicism a Christian tradition, which is usually very superstitious, but which has nevertheless made some impression, so that their lives are not the same as those of the non-Christian element. In too many cases, however, this Christian tradition is like a thin veneer, and there is need of a radical change of heart before we can say that these Filipinos are truly Christian.

It is encouraging to be able to state that the power of the Cross is being abundantly demonstrated in the Philippines. In the city of Manila, for example, we are told that one missionary has seen his church grow from two hundred to more than two thousand members, who are now worshipping in eleven chapels built by the converts themselves.

Dr. Arthur J. Brown says, "Such ripeness for evangelism has never been seen in any other Roman Catholic field. The people are restless, discontented, and ready to listen. Men and women walk every week fifteen miles in a hot sun, and spend two nights on a hard floor to attend a Protestant service. There is more than curiosity in their hearts."

Christian literature is one of the effective instrumentalities that are being used for the conversion of the Filipinos. The Evangelical Union, whose headquarters are at Manila, has already put out several volumes in the native languages of the Philippine Islands, and the American Tract Society by means of its foreign cash appropriations has had an important share in furthering this branch of work.

DECEMBER 22.

"Peace on Earth"

Luke 2:8-14.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M., Dec. 16. Peace in the heart. John 14:25-27.
T., Dec. 17. Peace of brotherhood. Gen.
45:24.
W., Dec. 18. Keep the peace. Mark 9:41-50.
T., Dec. 19. War that ends war. Rev.
19:11-21.
F., Dec. 20. Peace brings prosperity. 1 Kings
4:24-34.
S., Dec. 21. A true principle. Matt. 26:52.

When this topic was selected some months ago, the world was at war. Now as we come to our Christmas meeting, the world war has ended, and peace on earth is a blessed reality.

Now that peace has come, it is the duty of Christians everywhere to do all in their power to make it a permanent and abiding peace. It is for Christian statesmen to so readjust the relations between nations that another world war will be utterly impossible. The plan of a League of nations to assure and maintain peace is one of the best suggestions that has been brought forward, and Christian people should lend to this idea their heartiest support.

Science has been employed in the past to make war more and more terrible. Now let men of science bend their energies toward making peace more and more attractive.

Diplomats in the past have ever been quick to look for occasions for war. Now let a wiser diplomacy seek for reasons for peace.

In order to perpetuate peace on earth, let us emphasize the idea of human brotherhood. National ties are strong, and they should ever be so, but let international ties be made still stronger.

Let us remember that modern inventions have made the whole world practically one vast neighborhood, and let us be mindful of the injunction of Christ to love our neighbor as ourselves.

William E. Gladstone once said, "The ships that pass between one country and another are like the shuttle of the loom, weaving a web of concord among the nations." And in these modern days not only the ships that sail on the ocean but the ships that fly through the air should serve to link together the people who dwell in different lands.

Let us remember that Christ came to establish peace on earth not only between different countries but between people who live on the same street, it may be, and yet who are estranged from each other.

At Christmas time we should see to it that we are at peace in our own households, in our own communities and in our own churches. In order to bring peace it may be necessary to exercise the grace of forgiveness, but let us always remember that peace is a blessing for which it is worth while to make some sacrifice, provided that no essential principle is violated.

The Christian Endeavor Peace Union is one of the many organizations which are working for the establishment and maintenance of peace on the earth. Let us lend to all such organizations our heartiest support, for there is need of concerted action in order that we may enjoy the blessings of that peace which Christ came to establish among men.

DECEMBER 29.

"Happy New Year." Rules for It

Philippians 3:12-16.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS.

M., Dec. 23. Pray. Phil. 4:1-8.
T., Dec. 24. Trust. Jer. 17:5-8.
W., Dec. 25. Work. 2 Thess. 3:6-16.
T., Dec. 26. Help. Ps. 112:1-10.
F., Dec. 27. Be grateful. Deut. 8:1-9.
S., Dec. 28. Be content. Heb. 13:5-6.

We are soon to enter upon another year. This is a good time in which to think of some ways in which we may endeavor to make it a happy New Year both for ourselves and for others.

First, let us pray every day for help, and we shall find vouchsafed unto us daily strength for daily needs. In prayer we may find a power that will make us victorious over every foe. We shall find in it a source of consolation in every time of sorrow. By prayer we may talk with God, and in so doing we shall receive divine wisdom with which to meet every problem.

In the second place let us trust in God for His guidance. Dr. J. R. Miller has beautifully said, "God has a definite way for each one of us. Every mile of the journey He has chosen, and every place where I pitch my tent He has selected for me."

"Sand in the bearings of a machine destroys the machine's efficiency," says another writer. "So does worry in the soul. To be happy, live one day at a time. That is all God asks us to do."

In the third place, let us cultivate the spirit of thankfulness. If we are thankful for the blessings we receive we cannot fail to be happy, for a thankful soul cannot be discontented. Gratitude and joy go hand in hand.

Rev. R. P. Anderson, in the Endeavorer's Daily Companion gives these excellent suggestions for making a happy New Year:

"Rule 1. Begin the year with an act of consecration, offering all powers and possessions to God, without exception; then try to live in keeping with that rule.

"Rule 2. Avoid strife and quarrels. There is no happiness in criticism, in envy, in harsh words, in bitterness. Turn from them.

"Rule 3. Seek contentment. This does not mean that ambition must be killed; it means that ambition must not obsess us. Do the work of each day gladly, with praise, and trust for days to come.

"Rule 4. Attend to spiritual matters. Read the Bible; pray; give time to God and divine things. Support the church; do some practical Christian work."

May we enter upon this New Year with the high resolve that by God's help it shall be the best year we have ever had because we shall make it a year of communion with Christ and of service for others.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS

A Christmas for All

BY MARION L. TENNEY

MOTHER, do you suppose every one in Merryvale will have a Christmas present this year? Santa Claus will be dreadfully busy, with so many soldiers across the ocean. Maybe he won't have time for everybody."

Before Mrs. Marsh could answer, Dorothy continued:

"I was talking to Melinda about it yesterday, while she was hanging out the clothes, and she said that Santa Claus could leave her out, if only he'd remember her Tommy in France. And I told her I'd give up my new doll if Harold and Joe could have a present. But, mother, I do want that doll. Do you think Santa Claus could possibly squeeze it in, and send the other presents too?"

Dorothy's lips trembled, and two big tears rolled down her cheeks. Then Mrs. Marsh laid her mending aside, and gathered her small daughter into her arms.

"I wouldn't worry about that, little daughter," she said, "for I know Santa Claus will do his best to give a little girl what she wants, especially since she only asks for one present."

"But, mother, how about Harold and Joe, and all the people in Merryvale?" she asked anxiously.

"Suppose we start with your brothers," said mother reassuringly, "and then we'll talk of the other Merryvale people. Everybody is just as anxious as you are, that all the soldiers shall have a happy Christmas. Last year, so many presents were sent to France, that it took until May to distribute them all. How would you like your new doll to reach you in the spring, instead of on Christmas day?"

"Why mother, that wouldn't be any fun at all," replied Dorothy.

"Well, that's just what Santa Claus thinks, so this year he says that he will send just one box to every soldier. He hopes, since there won't be as many packages to handle, that they may all arrive by Christmas."

"But mother, what a lonely day it will be for Harold and Joe in France."

"When do you have the nicest time, Dorothy—when you make somebody happy, or when somebody makes you happy?"

Dorothy hesitated a moment and then she answered:

"I guess it lasts longer to make somebody else happy."

"I'm sure it does," said Mrs. Marsh, "and that's what our soldiers are going to try to do for the poor French people, who have been made so sad by the war. In all the towns and villages where our soldiers are there will be Christmas trees and candy for these poor people. Our soldiers will give out the presents, and beside this, they will entertain the people in some simple way. This will help them to forget their troubles, and our soldiers will be less lonely."

"Oh, mother, what a beautiful plan! Now I feel better about Harold and Joe. But how about Molly Perkins, and all those factory people, down on the river road? Do you think Santa Claus will remember them, mother?"

"I'm sure he will, because I know a little of his plans. He's going to let some of us grown people help him this year. You'll hear all about it very soon, so run away now, and let me finish my mending."

"Is it going to be surprises, mother? I just love them. They always give me such a smiley feeling inside. I'll go and tell Buttons all about it. She understands everything, even though she can only meow and blink her eyes," and off Dorothy ran.

Mrs. Marsh had been made president of the Parents' Association, in the school, that year, and it was through her efforts that a beautiful evergreen tree had been planted on the school lawn early in the fall. It has aroused much curiosity among the young folks who watched its arrival with much interest.

Early in December they learned why that particular kind of a tree had been planted, in such a conspicuous place, on the school lawn. It was to be lighted by electric lights on Christmas Eve for everyone in the village to enjoy. It was called a "Community Christmas Tree." Further than this the school children were asked to sing carols under it on that evening.

But loyal Katie didn't hear her little mistress after all, for a few days before Christmas Dorothy contracted a heavy cold.

"Oh, mother, won't I be able to sing at the Christmas tree?" she asked anxiously. "They all expect me."

Mrs. Marsh knew what a keen disappointment it would be to Dorothy, if she could not go, so she wisely awaited developments, and said nothing. The cold yielded somewhat, but the hoarseness continued. When Christmas Eve arrived poor Dorothy could not sing a note.

"It was wonderful!" cried Dorothy, excitedly, when the last carol had been sung and the people were fast making their way homeward. "I'm sure all Merryvale was there. I saw Molly Perkins and Melinda, and I know all the factory people must have been there, by the crowd. Mother, wasn't the tree beautiful with the lights? It looked as if the stars had dropped down on it. But best of all was the singing. Do you know, mother, I believe I enjoyed it more than if I'd been singing myself."

A Christmas Tree That Grew from the Seed of Love

BY MARGARET FRAMPTON HARPER

THE cold, bracing air of the December afternoon, and the beautifully tinted sunset sky, was not noticed by little Charlotte Ramsey as she sat in the swift, moving car wrapped in her furs.

It was just four days before Christmas, and though she had already purchased her usual presents, one for mamma and papa, and dear Aunt Alice so far away, there was still a feeling of something left undone, in her tender little heart.

Ever since Sunday, and now it was Friday afternoon, she had been thinking constantly of little Bobbie Wells, for she could not forget the wistful expression on his face when Miss Melton, their Sunday School teacher had asked him to come to their Christmas tree, and he had said that his mother was sick, and the weather so cold that he was quite sure he could not come—and yet the longing that was in his heart showed pitifully in his wan, little face.

Charlotte was sure that her eyes had grown a little moist when one of the class had carelessly asked Bobbie if he had ever seen a Christmas tree, and he had answered, "I know they are the beautifullest trees in the world, but I have never seen one, because when I asked mamma if they grew from seed, and if I could plant one she said, 'Yes, they grow from seed—the seed of love, but it is only the rich that have time to plant them,' and so I don't guess I will ever see one."

The idea of Christmas trees growing from the seed of love, and the thought that she had never grown one was what was troubling Charlotte this cold, wintry afternoon, but as Mrs. Ramsey asked the chauffeur to stop at Mrs. Wells' house so that she could get some sewing that Mrs. Wells had promised to have ready, Charlotte knew at once that she was going to grow a Christmas tree for Bobbie, in fact, there it was, the dearest little cedar tree, right in the middle of the yard encircling the house; all it needed was a few gifts and it would be beautiful indeed.

Those were busy days for Charlotte, for there were mittens and games and toys for Bobbie, and a warm shawl and overshoes for Mrs. Wells to be marked and wrapped in bright, attractive packages, and tinsel and candles to be bought, because Bobbie's tree must look like other Christmas trees that had grown from the seed of love.

The Christmas stars were shining bright when Mr. Ramsey and Charlotte silently turned in at Mrs. Wells' gate laden with many packages, then after they had worked busily, and all of the candles had been lighted, making the whole scene a veritable fairyland, Charlotte stole softly up to the door, and Mrs. Wells and Bobbie were startled by a knock and the sound of hurrying feet.

"Oh, mother, look, look!" cried Bobbie, as they opened the door and beheld their beautiful Christmas tree all aglow with tinsel and candles—and love, "it just grew up in the night for us."

DOROTHY AND BUTTONS WATCHING THE CHRISTMAS CELEBRATION

When Dorothy heard the news she ran home from school, her eyes shining like stars.

"Mother, I know the surprise," she cried, "and it's beautiful, and I'm to be in it! Now, Molly Perkins and all the factory people, and everybody, will have a fine Christmas!"

Dorothy practiced the carols faithfully. She started while dressing in the mornings, kept it up during her spare moments in the day, and even carried it into bed-time hours.

"Sure that child knows her singin'," said Katie, as Mrs. Marsh was passing through the kitchen one morning. "She'll lead 'em all, or I'll be beat. I wouldn't miss hearin' her for anything."

"Now, Christmas is all spoiled for me," cried Dorothy, "and I've been waiting, and waiting, for to-night."

"I wouldn't say it was spoiled," said her mother soothingly, "when you can sit by the window and see it all. I think you're a very fortunate little girl to live so near. And I'm very happy to think you can be around for Christmas."

"I guess that's so," said Dorothy, after a pause, "and I can tell just who is there, better than if I was singing, can't I, mother? Buttons and I'll watch from the window while you all go."

So Dorothy and Buttons watched the Community Christmas Tree celebration from the window, and had a good time all by themselves.

Our Fireside

Her Christmas Joy

By J. L. Glover

IT WON'T be a very merry Christmas to me, this year," said Miss Ellen FitzHugh to herself, a little sadly, but bravely too, as one quietly accepting the inevitable. "It's not to be expected," she went on, moving gently about her little parlor and setting it to rights.

It was quite neat already, but she put away a stray magazine, and dusted the table with her handkerchief, and then went to the mantel and re-arranged the group of photographs in neat little ten-cent-store frames, gazing lovingly at the young faces as she did so. They were the pictures of a handsome, sturdy lad, and two pretty, fluffy-haired girls. The bright faces smiled at her, and she returned the smiles, tenderly.

"Who would ever have thought they would turn out so well—my dear children!" she mused. "When my poor Mary died a widow, and left me her three little ones to bring up, it seemed at first, as if I could not do it—not at my age. But I couldn't bear to separate the little things and put them in orphanages—though some of them are nice places, I don't deny. But they'd have grown up strangers to each other, and it seemed lonely for them, and I thought I'd try to keep them together, if the Lord would help me. And He did. I never could have done it without His aid. It was wonderful how I managed to get work, one way and another, and to keep those children warm and well and fat. And it wasn't till they were all through school and old enough to work that my strength gave out, and I had to sell my own little home and take this room in the Old Ladies' Home, and I'm sure it's been a comfortable place to me, with the children all doing so well, and paying my board, and coming in every week to see me. I can't believe it's my Violet and Mabel that have those fine positions down town, and Rob studying law, and so clever. I know the Lord helped me. I never could have raised such clever children alone."

She had made the round of the room. It was perfectly tidy, in case one of the old ladies should "take a notion to drop in." She sat down before her tiny stove, and poured out her cup of tea, dreaming still in the warm twilight.

"I wish they could have seen their way to come to see me this Christmas—but there! I know they would have loved to come, but Violet said in her note that they were going to such a nice house party for Christmas and how could I be so selfish as to expect them to give up such a pleasure, just for me! I haven't room for them all here, anyway, at once. They'll come one at a time to see me, after Christmas. Bless them! they won't forget their old Auntie! But it's funny Rob hasn't sent me his usual check. He never forgets it. There I am again! Of course he needs all his money just now, and he'll send it later. It will do just as well, and he knew I would understand. There's the postman—maybe it's come!"

But the postman brought her only a greeting card from one of the old ladies in the Home. She swallowed her disappointment, and fell to musing again.

"I thought perhaps Mabel would send me a pair of worsted slippers—she always does! But of course she knows the last pair can't be worn out yet. I'm very easy on slippers, and she needed the money. They have so many friends, and they have to give some presents. No, I'm not complaining a bit; I'm only so glad I've got such loving children, and glad they are having a real good time at that house party. They deserve it; and they knew I'd understand."

She sat on, fancying how lovely Violet and Mabel would look in the beautiful dresses their own hard-earned money had bought, and how handsome her boy Rob would be in evening dress, bending over some pretty girl, at the party that night.

"They are young things, and gay, and they want to be happy," she excused them, tenderly, to herself. 'T'd be a selfish old woman to mind their not coming, or writing. They didn't mean anything unkind."

So, with unselfish, trusting thoughts of her "children," she went to bed on that Christmas eve, happily not hearing the indignant comments of some of the old ladies:

"It's a shame, I say! She is so patient, and those selfish children not caring a thing about her, after she slaved herself to death for them, all their lives! And now they are independent of her, not even to send a Christmas card, to show they remembered she was in the world!"

But Miss Ellen, sweetly asleep, was dreaming that she was telling the Christmas story to two rosy little girls and a curly-haired boy, whose bright eyes gazed entranced into hers; and she smiled in her dream.

Christmas morning came, bright and sparkling and crisp. Through streets "dumb with snow," people hurried with bright Christmas faces and hands filled with holly-decked parcels. A group of girls came to the Old Ladies' Home, bringing gifts for every one of the old ladies, and went merrily about the house, delivering them.

"Thank you, dearie," said Miss Ellen, smiling gratefully over her lapful of gifts—a soft grey shawl, a pair of pink worsted slippers, a box of mints, prettily tied up. "How kind it was of you to remember me," she said, putting down in the bottom of her heart, out of sight, the little sore feeling that her own girls were not among this party of joy-bringers—that they had not remembered her need of shawls and slippers and mints.

The postman would bring some token of remembrance from them; she felt sure he would; and she watched eagerly from the window as he came down the street presently, laden as a Christmas postman should be.

But none of his many packages was for her. She had expected something then, and her eyes dimmed in spite of her courage. The next instant she was upbraiding herself:

"Ellen FitzHugh, you are a self-seeking old woman! Expecting the children to have time to send things by mail, when you know they are visiting, and have so many things to take up their time! You just wait, and you'll find they haven't forgotten you. They'll just spread out the Christmas happiness, that's all!"

She wrapped her new shawl about her, put on the pink slippers, and with the box of candy in her lap, sat down by the window to watch the pleasant stir of Christmas in the streets. A big automobile slid up to the gate of the Old Ladies' Home, and stopped.

"It's old Mrs. Lynwood's grandchildren: they always come to see her," thought Miss Ellen, watching with interest from her window.

Two girlish figures, wrapped in furs—a broad-shouldered young fellow in a big overcoat, helping them out. It looked like—but no, it couldn't be—

But it was. Up the stairs light feet were springing; young voices whispered and laughed outside her door. A tap—then, before she could say "Come in!" they were all around her, the girls' arms about her neck, the boy hugging her from behind—all crying at once,

"Merry Christmas, Auntie! Oh, Merry Christmas, and lots of them! In our own home, Auntie! Hurry and get your things on. I can't wait!"

"My dear children!" Miss Ellen, bewildered with joy, tried to catch her breath, which had been squeezed out of her by their vehement hugs. "I don't understand. How could you get here? I thought you were at the party!"

"Tell her, Violet, while I get her cloak and things?" ordered Mabel; and Violet and Rob together tried to tell the story coherently.

"You see, Auntie, darling, we were talking it over one day, and we found we were tired of boarding and being scattered, and having you vegetating here by yourself. And so we just thought we'd try to get a home together once more—a home with you in the middle to make it a real one. And Rob managed to find the dearest little house, just big enough to hold the four of us, and a stove; and that's our Christmas gift to ourselves and to you, Auntie, and we are going to eat our Christmas dinner this very day in our own little home. There! what do you think of our Christmas surprise?"

"Think!" Miss Ellen gasped. "Oh, my darlings, to think I could ever have doubted you for one single instant, or fancy that it was possible you could forget me on Christmas!"

"Forget! oh, Auntie!" Mabel was on her knees beside her, the tears rolling down her face. "Violet! Rob! I told you we ought not to deceive her, even for a minute! That we let her think we forgot her!"

"Dearest!" pleaded Violet, "it was only for a Christmas surprise. You didn't really think so?"

THIS IS THE LAST TIME that we can make this Splendid Combination Offer

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Two of the Most Popular Religious Publications in America for only a year to any part of the United States or Its Possessions

$2.25

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

AN ILLUSTRATED FAMILY RELIGIOUS MONTHLY

Regular Subscription Price 50 Cents a Year

(After January 1, 1919, 60 Cents a Year)

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AN ILLUSTRATED NEWS WEEKLY FOR THE HOME

Regular Subscription Price $2.00 a Year.

(After January 1, 1919, $2.50 a Year)

Please note that this Special Offer applies only to subscriptions in the United States and its possessions. On Foreign subscriptions $1.12 extra must be added for postage, making a total of $3.37. Canadian postage is 12 cents extra, making a total of $2.37.

After December 31, 1918, the price of this Combination Offer will be raised to $2.75. In order to secure the special price of $2.25 quoted above, your remittance must be mailed so that it will be in our hands not later than December 31, 1918.

If a copy of the beautiful little year book, entitled "A Threefold Cord," is desired, ten cents additional must be added. Please send all combination subscriptions at once to the

AMERICAN MESSENGER Park Ave. and 40th St., New York

DON'T decide on the new hymn-book for your Church or Sunday School until you have seen

HALLOWED HYMNS NEW AND OLD

Edited by IRA ALLAN SANKEY

Son of the famous Singing-Evangelist Ira D. Sankey

OVER 550,000

COPIES ALREADY SOLD

Responsive Scripture Readings

No Trashy Words No Jingly Music

Price $25.00 per 100 not prepaid $5 cents per copy by mail

Examine a copy and prove its value in your work. (Returnable if desired.)

The Biglow & Main Co., New York Chicago

This FREE Shoe Book

Is crowded with photographs and descriptions of Ez Wear Shoes for Men, Woman and Children. Ez Wear shoes are sent postpaid, guaranteed to combine comfort, style and quality, to fit perfectly or money back. Amazingly low prices. Send for your copy today.

The G. E. Simon Shoe 1589 BROADWAY BROOKLYN, N.Y.

Better Than Pills For Liver Ills.

You can't feel so good but what NR will make you feel better.

Got a 25c. Box.

ACTS ON THE LIVER, STOMACH, KIDNEYS AND BOWELS

Nature's Remedy 25 TABLETS - NR

Prepared by A. H. LEWIS MEDICINE CO. ST. LOUIS, U.S.A.

The Best Gift—an Oxford Bible

Suitable at Any Time for Any One

OXFORD BIBLES are made in such a great variety of styles and prices that there is one to suit every occasion and every purse

Ask to see an Oxford India Paper Bible At All Booksellers. Catalogue Upon Request

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS American Branch 35 West Thirty-second Street, New York

(Continued on next page)

Her Christmas Joy

(Continued from page 188)

"No—no! I trusted you all through," sobbed Miss Ellen. "But about the house party? How could you get away so soon?"

"It was our own house party," laughed Mabel. "We spent yesterday fixing up the house, and today the party comes off—our very first in our own house, Auntie. Everything is ready. Here's your cloak and bonnet. Come on, we can't wait another minute!"

And presently the big automobile was gliding smoothly over the snow with its load of Christmas happiness, and Miss Ellen was saying joyously to herself.

"A home with the children again! It seems almost too good to be true, except that it's Christmas, and nothing is too good to be true, then. And they did not forget me, and that is the best of all, for

"With all the joys of Christmas blest
To be remembered is the best."

Saying "Thank You"

BY MARY S. STOVER.

When I was a very small child I remember noticing how our chickens lifted their heads in drinking. Mother told me then about a little boy who thought this was the chickens' way of saying grace. The pretty fancy stuck in my mind, and I have often recalled it while watching the chickens at feeding time or when I have sat near some little pool where wild birds come to drink. I also think of it when I see a meadow lark or a brown thrasher mount to some tree top or fence to pour out a flood of melody.

It does look as if the birds are saying "Thank you" to God, and I feel like giving thanks with them. It doubles my enjoyment of a glorious sunset or the view of snow topped mountains or some other great outdoor picture if I lift my head and whisper a hearty "Thank you."

I believe that God would be glad to have more children utter their thanks while enjoying the beauties of which Paul tells us that "God giveth us all things richly to enjoy." Why should not He like a word of appreciation just as you and I do? At least, it gives us a big, happy feeling inside to say it.

Begin now the habit of saying "Thank you" to God. It will make you a finer, better boy or girl; it will open your eyes to much that you would otherwise miss in life, so that the less you think that you have to give thanks for the more important it may be for you to try. You are never going to be able to thank God enough, but if you only try, it is sure to show you how really rich you are.

"A Friend to Man"

BY EVA J. DE MARSH

Doubtless you have all heard the story of the man who lived in a house by the side of the road and was "a friend to man," and as you heard it, you, too, have resolved you would be a friend to man, but are you?

"A friend to man!" Means a good deal, doesn't it? You and I have friends, perhaps scores of them; we serve on committees, give of our substance, perhaps do social settlement work. All very well, but when it really comes to getting close to "the great unwashed," do we do it? I once heard a missionary say that the reason most people fail in their efforts to help others is that they reach down to aid them, instead of getting down and helping. That man had been in the field a long time, and I rather think he knew what he was talking about. We are afraid of the conventions, afraid of what "they" will say, afraid of being "taken in." Of course it is neither wise nor sensible to follow any and every one up dark alleys, and it is sometimes best to help from a distance, but had Dickens and Henry been afraid of the downs-and-outs, the flotsam and jetsam of humanity, where, think you, would have been those marvelous tales of theirs?

But, you say, Dickens and Henry were geniuses and they would have given us something interesting anyway. Interesting, yes, but never those pages filled with the pathos and the pain, the beauty and the glory and the sweetness of life. To others, London slums by night and those Madison Square benches were subjects fit only for the Law and the Church; to Dickens and Henry, they were filled with Humanity, with all its hopes and all its fears.

"A friend of man!" With the words comes the remembrance of one whose sunny smile never failed. For her, all was right with the world, or soon would be. Freely she gave, freely she received and because she lived today the world is a brighter and a better place. God bless that sunny smile of hers. Methinks He has found a use for it up yonder.

Being friendly! Such a simple little thing, and yet it may mean all the difference between the making and the breaking of a life.

Big things appeal to us. They are so real and vital, we say. Yes, but it is "the little unremembered acts of kindness and of love that keep us in touch with the Infinite."

People used to be less self-centered, more hospitable, than they are today. Sometimes they made mistakes, but that didn't cause them to waste time in idle regrets, nor did it destroy their faith in human nature. One who has lived long has said there is so much bad in the best of us and so much good in the worst of us that it behooves none of us to say too much about the rest of us.

Was it ever your good fortune, I wonder, to pilot a bewildered old lady through the mazes of a crowd, and did you go home with her to hear her say,

"God bless you, my dear! Some day you will be old and God will send somebody to take care of you." And didn't you sleep the sweeter for it?

Or, possibly, you have met one so sad and lonely, so beset with life's harassments and hardships, that you could not resist the impulse of a friendly greeting, and for your pains you were simply "frozen stiff," and you said, "Never again!" But you will, for you and I know it is infinitely better to have hearts tender enough for the daws to pick at than organs so infinitesimally small and crusted over that no one can find them.

Sometimes we wrap a mantle of exclusiveness about us, because we really believe that is the thing to do. More often, however, it is only an evidence of selfishness. I like Margaret Sangster's "Friends-o'-mine." There is something so warmly human about the way she takes us to her heart. I wonder if you and I couldn't do just a little more of it?

Not so long since, I attended a pageant given in honor of our soldier boys who were soon to leave for camp. Beside me sat a woman, little and faded and brown. She wasn't especially attractive, but, oh, how her eyes lighted up when her boy came marching in! She didn't want to let him go, but she knew she couldn't keep him and have the world free and true and clean, so with a smile on her lips and a sob in her heart, she sent him forth. Only one of thousands, but I was proud and glad to be at her side that day.

"Give to the world the best you have,
And the best will come back to you," sings the poet. Yes, and

"Count that day lost
Whose low-descending sun
Views from thy hand
No worthy action done."

Life is one long give and take. It is "more blessed to give than to receive," and what finer way of giving is there than just by being kind?

The New Testament

With Notes, Instructions and References

The Prefatory Note is by J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.

Silk cloth bound. Thin paper, clear type. Red edges. Printed jacket with band of red, white and blue. This New Testament is in answer to the demand for a pocket-size book with all the advantages of notes and explanations embodied in our larger, complete Self-Explaining Bible. Concise explanations and instructions at the bottom of each page making daily application of the Word. Very helpful.

Just the book for Sunday-school Teachers and Scholars, Christian Endeavorers, Epworth Leaguers, and all Bible Students, both young and old.

This Testament is concise and has all the ready references needed by Bible students. It contains carefully selected notes, which are brief, pointed and full of thought and information. These are admirable helps to Bible Study, and serve as valuable aids in the exposition of the text. It also contains a harmony of the Gospels, history of each book in the New Testament, chronological tables, Bible weights, measures, etc.

We strongly urge every reader to make an effort to secure seven subscriptions to this paper and thus secure this beautiful Testament.

We will sell the New Testament with Notes, postpaid, for 85 cents, or we will give the book for seven yearly subscriptions to the American Messenger at 50 cents each, or we will give a year's subscription and the book for $1.20.

American Messenger
Park Ave. and 40th St. New York City

THE Christian Calendar 1919

A wonderfully artistic and beautiful SCRIPTURE TEXT Calendar.

SPECIAL FEATURES

Daily Readings—Twelve beautiful engravings; one for each month—Frontispiece (richly colored and bordered in gilt) is Harold Copping's masterpiece "The Hope of the World"

Ideal as a Christmas gift from Pastors or Sunday School teachers to their congregations or classes; to missionary friends in the Field or to friends at home. It is a daily inspiration, practical and helpful. The Art work is of the highest class.

Price 25 cents; 5 for $1.00

AGENTS WANTED

Our special rates to agents present a wonderful opportunity to Sunday Schools, Missionary Societies, Young People's Societies, Y. W. C. A. and Christian workers to do real Christian service and yet receive ample remuneration for their time. Send for agent's terms. Help us to place this Gospel Calendar in every home.

THE BIOLA BOOK ROOM

Bible Institute of Los Angeles

536-538 South Hope Street, Los Angeles, California

What 15¢ will bring You from the Nation's Capital

Washington, D.C.: home of the Pathfinder, is the nerve center of civilization; history is being made at this world capital. The Pathfinder's illustrated weekly review gives you a clear, impartial and correct diagnosis of public affairs during these strenuous, epoch-making days. The little matter of 15¢ in stamps or coin will bring you the Pathfinder 13 weeks on trial. The Pathfinder is an illustrated weekly, published at the Nation's center, for the Nation; a paper that prints all the news of the world and tells the truth and only the truth; now in its 26th year. This paper fills the bill without emptying the purse; it costs but $1 a year. If you want to keep posted on what is going on in the world, at the least expense of time or money, this is your means. If you want a paper in your home which is sincere, reliable, entertaining, wholesome, the Pathfinder is yours. If you would appreciate a paper which puts everything clearly, fairly, briefly—here it is. Send 15¢ to show that you might like such a paper, and we will send the Pathfinder on probation 13 weeks. The 15¢ does not repay us, but we are glad to invest in new friends. The Pathfinder, Box 81, Washington, D.C.

THE TREASURY

SPECIAL NOTICE

OWING to occasional losses of letters, containing money, we would request friends and donors of the American Tract Society to remit by check or Post Office Money Order, which latter can always be duplicated in case of loss.

Receipts of the American Tract Society During October, 1918

Total Donations (including $510.54 for Special Objects), $2,200.13.

ARKANSAS, $5. Mr. Caldwell, $5.

CALIFORNIA, $15. Mr. Harwood, $10; Mr. Gaylord, $5.

CONNECTICUT, $150. Mr. Guild, $3; Mr. and Mrs. Shedd, $5; Mr. Mix, $5; Miss Norton, $5; the Misses Norton, for Patriot Library, $15; Mr. Fitch, $1; Mrs. Congdon, $2; Miss Dudley, $1; Mrs. Harral, $15; Mr. Scudder, $5; Mrs. Britton, for Patriot Library, $15; Mrs. Rossiter, $1; Mr. Mansfield, $10; Miss Daggett, $2; Miss Manning, $25; Mr. Anschutz, for Soldiers' Text Books, $15; Miss Ely, for Soldiers' Text Books, $10; Mr. Hoyt, $2; Mr. Brown, $5; Mrs. Danforth, $5; Miss Andrews, for Patriot Library, $3.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, $60. Miss Shaw, for Patriot Library, $5; Washington, Church Collection, $5; Washington, Church Offering, $50.

GEORGIA, $10. Way Station, Church Offering, $10.

ILLINOIS, $20.67. Eureka, Church Collection, $0.67; Mrs. Quackenbush, $5; Mr. Blosser, $1; Mr. Navland, $2; Mr. Springer, $1; "A Friend," $5; Mrs. Campbell, $1; Mrs. Reineback, for War Work, $5.

INDIANA, $13. Mr. and Mrs. Onyett, $5; Elkhart, Church Offering, $5; Mr. Miller, $3.

IOWA, $427.54. Mr. Stahl, $1; Mr. Meyer, $5; Mr. Schulte, $1; Mr. Smit, $2; Mrs. Vierenga, $1; Mr. Groot, $2; Mr. Harberts, $2.50; Mrs. Meyer, $3; Mrs. Schmidt, $2; Mr. Enenga, $1; Mr. Dirks, $2; Mr. Schmidt, $3; Mr. Schmidt, $3; Mr. Venega, $1; Lincoln Center, Church Collection, $24.67; Wellsburg, Church Offering, $31; Stout, Church Collection, $32.46; Holland, Church Offering, $7; Staceyville, Church Collection, $6; Ackley, Church Offering, $8; Mr. Knock, $1; Mr. Paterni, $5; Mr. Ruter, $5; Mr. Jasper, $5; Mr. Hook, $5; Mr. Kruse, $3; Mr. Peters, $2.50; Mr. Tjaden, $2; Mr. Neessen, $2; Mr. Kockstra, $1; Mr. Strickler, $0.50; Mr. Loots, $3; Mr. Niederhoff, $5; Mr. Okones, $7; Mr. Okones, $5; Mr. Hook, $5; Mr. Rust, $2; Mr. Olthoff, $2; Mr. Olthoff, $1; Mr. Meyer, $2; Mr. Lutterman, $2.50; Mrs. De Neiss, $1; Mr. Kuper, $2; Mr. Thomas, $2; Mr. Peters, $2.50; Mrs. Bonger, $1; Mr. Terfele, $5; Mr. Meyer, $2; Mr. Reekena, $2; Mr. Schmidt, $1; Mr. Murra, $5; Mr. Lutterman, $1; Mr. Meyer, $3; Mr. Weichert, $1; Mr. Hodjer, $1; Mr. Neessen, $2; Mr. Weitkamp, $1; Mr. Kelly, $1; Mrs. Nielander, $10; Mrs. Mathews, $1; Miss Shaw, $5; Mr. Saathof, $5; Mr. Kruse, $5; Mr. Meyer, $1; Mr. Meester, $5; Alexander, Church Collection, $18.62; Buffalo, Church Offering, $52.39; Mr. Riekema, $1; Mr. Bunger, $1; Mr. Lutterman, $2; Mr. Neessen, $5; Mrs. Peters, $25; Mrs. Neessen, $1; Mrs. Snittjer, $1.50; Mr. Lindaman, $2; Mr. Jaspers, $1; Mr. Rust, $1.50; Mr. Schoolman, $3; Mrs. Tjaden, $2; Mr. Knock, $2; Mr. Myer, $5; Mr. Snittjer, $1; Mr. Flessner, $0.50; Mr. Riekema, $1; Mr. Beving, $5; Mr. Neessen, $2; Mr. Meyer, $1.50; Mr. Lindaman, $5; Mr. Frichs, $2; Mr. Lutterman, $1; Mr. Peters, $2; Austinville, Church Collection, $11.90.

KANSAS, $18.10. Mr. Stucky, $9.30; Mr. Codding, $5; Mr. Hirschler, $0.30; Butler & Sons Piano Co., $2.50; Rev. Mr. Sherman, $1.

KENTUCKY, $3.00. Miss McGinniss, $1; Miss Shaw, $2.

MAINE, $10.42. Mr. Southworth, $10.42.

MASSACHUSETTS, $74. Springfield, Church Collection, $5; Mr. Cutter, $5; Mrs. Pierce, $10; Miss Chamberlin, $2; Mr. Norris, $5; Mrs. Allen, $2; Miss Wilcox, $10; Mrs. Putnam, $2; Mrs. Bardwell, $2; Mr. Fowle, $10; Mrs. Miller, $2; Mr. White, $4; Mr. Bailey, $1; Miss Penfield, $5; Rev. Mr. Towne, $6; Mr. Bradley, $2; Mr. Fisher, $1.

MICHIGAN, $8. Mrs. Bovee, $3; Miss Bloodgood, $5.

MINNESOTA, $5. St. Paul, Church Offering, $5.

MISSOURI, $18.50. Mr. Hall, $1; Mr. Miller, $5; St. Louis, Church Collection, $3.50; Mrs. Fletcher, $2; Clayton & Sons Printing Co., $5; Webster Groves, Church Offering, $2.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, $10. Miss Cummings, $2; Mrs. Fifield, $5; Miss Wentworth, for Soldiers' Text Books, $3.

NEW JERSEY, $179.16. Mrs. Hennion, $1; Mr. Sutphen, $5; Mr. Cook, $10; Bloomfield, Church Collection, $6; Mr. Craig, $2; Atlantic City, Church Offering, $2; Mr. Douglas, $10; Princeton, Church Collection, $10.22; Jersey City, Church Offering, $12.31; Mr. and Mrs. Stryker, $7; Mrs. De Mott, $10; Pacific, Church Collection, $43.03; Hackensack, Church Offering, $7.60; New Brunswick, Church Collection, $15; "F. A.," $5; Mr. Day, for Gospel Mominions, $3. Miss

NEW YORK, $484.84. Mr. Sherman, $10; Mr. Westlake, $25; "A Friend," Bibles for West Point Cadets, $10; Mr. Stuart, $25; Mr. Crosby, $200; Mr. Francis, $10; Miss Knowles, $10; Pleasantville, Church Offering, $5; Mr. Murray, to constitute his son, George Alexander Murray, a Life Member, $30; Brooklyn, Church Collection, $25; Mr. Osborn, $5; Mrs. Motley, $20; Miss Van Duzee, $1; Mr. Wood, $10; Mr. Kouwenhoven, to constitute Jean Kouwenhoven a Life Member, $30; Miss Cole, $1; Mr. Van Keuren, $2; "A Friend," $1; Miss Rainey, $1; Middletown, Church Offering, $6.64; Mr. Shepard, Bibles for Cadets, $10; Southampton, Church Collection, $17.86; Mr. Whittemore, $10; Brooklyn, Church Offering, $18.34; Mr. Spaulding, $1.

OHIO, $351.41. Mr. Plumer, $2; Miss Smith, $10; Mr. Meacham, $10; Cleveland, Church Collection, $25; Norwood, Sunday-School Offering, $5; Miss Mathison, $3; Norwood, Church Collection, $5.60; Mr. Miller, $2; Dayton, Miss Brene-man's class, Bethel Chapel, $5; Miss Kyle, $5; Miss Butler, $3; Mr. Nehl, $5; Mr. Wanenmacher, $10; Mr. Bingham, 2nd, $250; Youngstown, Church Offering, $2.81; Miss Peebles, $2; Mr. McElroy, $1; Mrs. Brooks, $5.

OREGON, $8.40. Beaverton, S. S. Conv., 8th Dist., $8.40.

PENNSYLVANIA, $254.09. Mr. Potter, $2; Shippensburg, Church Collection, $3; Mrs. England, $5; Mr. Phillips, $10; Franklin, Church Offering, $14.85; Mr. Crutchfield, $10; Vandergrift, Church Collection, $25; State College, Church Offering, $6; Miss Brant, $0.09; Mr. Huston, $100; Gen'l Missy Society Baptist Churches, $2; Steelton, Church Collection, $3; "A Friend," $5; Mrs. Colton, $10; Mr. Miller, $20; Mr. Shepard, $1; York, Church Offering, $12; Miss Kell, $2; Mr. Hodge, $5; Mr. Eisenbach, $2.50; Mrs. Preston, $2; Lancaster, Sunday-School Collection, $4.15; Butler, Church Offering, $7.50; Lisbon, Church Collection, $2.

SOUTH CAROLINA, $5. The Misses Dudley, $5.

TENNESSEE, $15. Miss Muse, $15.

TEXAS, $5.50. Mrs. Horne, $2.50; Mr. McMillan, $1; Mr. Hunt, $2.

VERMONT, $15. Miss Billings, for Patriot Library, $15.

VIRGINIA, $13. Mrs. Armstrong, $5; Mr. Cogbill, $5; Mrs. McCutchan, $1; Miss Graves, $2.

WASHINGTON, $13.50. Mr. Annas, $2.50; Mr. Yeend, $10; Mrs. Van Meter, $1.

FOREIGN, $7. Miss Goess, $2; Mr. Baldwin, $5.

LEGACIES, $1,049.17. Washington, D. C., Estate of Mary I. Banks, on account, $55; Jamaica, N. Y., Estate of Susan B. M. Holder, $100; New York, N. Y., Estate of Annie M. Atwood, $894.17.

INCOME FROM TRUST FUNDS, $1,224.58. Income for Missionary Work, $1,174.58. Income for Annuitants, $50.00.

Donations

DONATIONS for the missionary work of the American Tract Society may be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

FIELD SECRETARIES AND COLPORTAGE SUPERINTENDENTS OF THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.

Rev. E. N. Hardy, Ph.D., Field Secretary for New England, 50 Bromfield Street, Boston, Mass.

Rev. A. W. Reinhard, Field Secretary and Superintendent of Colportage for the Western and Northwestern States, 19 Parkland Place, St. Louis, Mo.

Rev. George Whitefort, Superintendent of Colportage, Southern Agency, Crichton, R. F. D., Mobile Co., Ala.

Form of Bequest

I GIVE and bequeath to the "AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY," instituted in the City of New York, May, 1825, the sum of dollars to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said Society.

Three witnesses should state that the testator declares this to be his last will and testament, and that they signed at his request, and in his presence and the presence of each other.

Life Members and Directors

THE donation of $30 at one time constitutes a Life Member of the American Tract Society; the addition of $70, or the donation of $100 at one time, constitutes a Life Director. Life members may receive annually copies of the Society's own publications to the value of $1; Life Directors to the value of $2; if applied for within the Society's year, from April 1st to April 1st, in person or by written order.

Notice to Authors

Authors who submit manuscripts for publication to the American Tract Society are reminded that the Society does not hold itself responsible for the return of any manuscript. If a remittance is sent to cover the full cost of postage and registry, the Society will transmit a manuscript by registered mail upon the request of the author.

American Tract Society

THIS SOCIETY was organized in 1825. Its work is interdenominational and international in scope, and is commended by all evangelical denominations.

It has published the Gospel messages in 178 languages, dialects and characters. It has been the pioneer for work among the foreign-speaking people in our country, and its missionary colporters are distributing Christian literature in many languages among our foreign-speaking population and making a home-to-home visitation among the spiritually destitute, both in the cities and rural districts, leaving all kinds of Christian literature, also the Bible or portions of the Scriptures.

Its publication of leaflets, volumes and periodicals from the Home Office total 800,711,975 copies. It has made foreign cash appropriations to the amount of $802,966.39, and grants of electrotypes to the value of $61,177.96, by means of which millions of copies of books and tracts have been published at mission stations abroad.

The gratuitous distribution of the past year is to the value of $23,191.98. The grand total of its gratuitous distribution has been to the value of $2,676,159.52, which is the equivalent of 5,352,319,040 tract pages.

The total number of family visits that have been made by the Society's colporters during the last year is 146,056; the total number of volumes distributed by sale or grant is 49,584, making the total number of volumes that have been circulated by colporters in the last seventy-seven years 17,487,750, and the total number of family visits that they have made during the same period 18,958,862.

A large distribution of Christian literature is being made among the soldiers and sailors, and the Society aims to furnish Christian literature to every Cantonment in the Army and to every battleship and cruiser in the Navy.

The Society is making very special effort in behalf of Latin America, having entered upon the publication of a One-volume Bible commentary in Spanish, a long-needed and earnestly prayed-for publication, and several other important volumes in both Spanish and Portuguese. Its total publications for Latin America now reach 17,175,163 copies. Its work, ever widening, is dependent upon donations and legacies, and greatly needs increased offerings.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President. JUDSON SWIFT, D.D., General Secretary. Remittances should be sent to Louis Tag, Treasurer, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York, N. Y.

A Sermon From A Lamp

A Japanese missionary preaches the following sermon from a lamp, which was sent him as a gift:

"We have learned the following lessons from it: (1) We must be a light for others as that lamp. (2) To keep the light burning, we must be pure ourselves as the chimney of that lamp. (3) We must pour the words of the Lord from the Bible into our hearts, as we do the oil for the lamp from a can. (4) That lamp needs a fire so it can give light. So we must get the fire of the Holy Spirit to light ourselves for others. Unless we are burning with the Spirit's fire, we will be a useless vessel for our Lord, as a lamp without fire. Christ has said to us: 'Ye are the light of the world.' We have learned a new meaning from this verse since we received your gift. We hope we will be a true light for Christ. Pray for us."

God intends to have a people for His name. He cares not where they are gathered from; be it from the so-called "civilized nations," or from the dark mines of heathenism. God has promised that Jesus shall be satisfied with the results of the travail of His soul. The crown of the blessed Saviour's rejoicing must have its complement of jewels, and blessed be His holy name, there are some precious ones that are being gathered in these parts of the earth, who, "in the day of His coming" shall shine as the stars forever and ever.

Christian Endeavor in Japan

During the past year fifty-seven new Christian Endeavor societies were organized in Japan. The Methodists lead with 107 societies, the Congregationalists follow with 53, and the Presbyterians come third with 30 societies. Christian Endeavor societies are found in fourteen different denominations in Japan.

Our Choice Year Book and Special Subscription Offer

We are offering to our subscribers this year an opportunity to secure a copy of the beautiful little book entitled "A Threefold Cord." This contains a carefully selected Precept, Promise and Prayer, taken from the Scriptures, for every day in the year. The book is neatly bound in cloth, and is of convenient size for carrying in the pocket or handbag, if so desired.

We will give a copy of "A Threefold Cord," postpaid, and one year's subscription, new or renewal, to the American Messenger for 60 cents. We will give the book as a premium to any subscriber who renews his or her own subscription for 1919, and sends one new subscription, remitting $1.00 in all. If the new subscriber in the last-mentioned case desires a copy of "A Threefold Cord," $1.10 must be remitted. For every Canadian or foreign subscription 12 cents additional must be remitted to cover the cost of postage on the paper.

All those who subscribe now to the American Messenger for one year at fifty cents will receive the paper until December, 1919, inclusive. New subscribers will thus receive both the Thanksgiving and Christmas numbers for 1918 free of cost, if they subscribe at once. They will also be entitled to receive a copy of the book, entitled "A Threefold Cord," upon the payment of only ten cents additional.

The e offers are not good beyond December 31, 1918, as the subscription price of the American Messenger will be advanced to 60 cents per year beginning with the issue for January, 1919.

AMERICAN MESSENGER

Park Ave. and 40th St., New York

Agents and Club Raisers Wanted in every neighborhood to secure subscriptions to the

American Messenger

We will allow a very liberal cash commission or some of the very beautiful and useful articles we offer as premiums. Send for sample copies, instructions for canvassing, etc.

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

Par Ave.

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER

TERMS: Subscription price, 50 cts. a year, payable in advance. In clubs of five or more, 30 cts. each. Club subscriptions mailed to separate addresses, if desired. Charge for foreign and Canadian subscriptions, 12 cents additional. Single copies, 5 cents each.

On account of the additional charge which is made by the New York Post Office for mailing to subscribers in New York and Bronx Counties (Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx), no club rates, cash commissions or premiums will be given for subscriptions that must be sent to persons residing in those Counties. Each subscription in New York or Bronx County must be at the rate of 50 cents net.

Remit by Express Money Order, Draft, Post Office Order or Registered Letter. For very small amounts, postage stamps may be sent at the risk of the sender.

RENEWALS: The date opposite your name shows to what time the subscription has been paid, and a change in the date is the receipt for renewal.

CHANGES: When sending change of address, be sure to send the old address as well as the new one.

OUR ADVERTISERS: We believe that all the advertisements in this paper are from responsible advertisers, and it is our intention to admit only such to our columns. Should, however, any of our subscribers find that any advertiser does not live up to his agreements, we would consider it a favor if they will inform us, and we will at any time give prompt attention to any complaint.

We do not, of course, guarantee that all persons will take the same point of view with the advertisers, and it must be borne in mind that the claims and statements made by advertisers are their assertions, and not ours.

Our readers will confer a favor upon advertisers and also upon us if they will mention the AMERICAN MESSENGER when answering advertisements.

SPECIAL COMBINATION SUBSCRIPTION OFFERS

This is the time when many people make a selection of the periodicals which they wish to receive during the coming year. We accordingly present herewith some unusually attractive magazine combination subscription offers which afford an excellent opportunity to save money. The subscriptions may be either for yourself or for your friends; they may be either new or renewal. The AMERICAN MESSENGER may be sent to one address and the other periodical to another address.

Should you wish to subscribe for two or more periodicals on the list in connection with the AMERICAN MESSENGER, write us and we will tell you the cost of the combination which you desire, but please remember that in every case the AMERICAN MESSENGER must be included with the other periodicals for which you wish to subscribe.

When a copy of our beautiful little book, entitled "A Threefold Cord," is desired, 10 cents additional must be sent with each subscription.

These Special Offers apply only to subscriptions in the United States and its possessions:

On account of impending changes in subscription prices, these offers will not hold good after December 31, 1918.

	Regular Subscription Price	Our Price for Both
American Messenger	$0.50	$2.25
Christian Herald	$2.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$2.25
Christian Endeavor World	$2.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.65
Christian Worker's Magazine	$1.50
American Messenger	$0.50	$2.10
Youth's Companion	$2.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$4.20
Harper's Magazine	$4.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$0.80
American Poultry Advocate	$0.50
American Messenger (One year).....	$0.50	$1.20
Farm Journal (Five Years)	$1.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$2.10
Presbyterian Banner	$2.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$4.05
World's Work	$4.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$2.30
Popular Educator	$2.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$2.25
Mother's Magazine	$2.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.75
Boys' Life (Boy Scouts' Magazine).....	$1.50
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.10
To-Day's Housewife	$0.75
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.20
McCall's Magazine	$1.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.75
Modern Priscilla	$1.50
American Messenger	$0.50	$2.25
Woman's Home Companion	$2.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$2.30
Primary Education	$2.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$2.25
Physical Culture	$2.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.75
The Etude	$1.50
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.50
Table Talk, The National Food Magazine	$1.25
American Messenger	$0.50	$1.25
American Agriculturist	$1.00
American Messenger	$0.50	$3.05
Review of Reviews	$3.00

American Messenger, Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, New York

An Important Reminder

In this issue of the AMERICAN MESSENGER we are enclosing a bill to those subscribers who have not as yet paid their subscriptions for the current year, and who are therefore a year in arrears.

In accordance with the request of the War Industries Board, it will be necessary for us to withdraw the names of all those who are one year in arrears from our list of subscribers, unless payment is received prior to December 31, 1918.

We therefore urge all those who receive a bill in this issue to adjust their account for the current year and also to send us their renewal subscription for the year 1919. Such renewal subscriptions will be received at the rate of fifty cents until December 31, 1918. After that date the subscription price will be increased to sixty cents per year.

We presume that the matter of adjusting your subscription account for 1918 has been unintentionally overlooked, and we feel confident that this reminder will be gratefully received. Kindly give this matter your immediate attention, so that you will not miss a single number of this paper.

American Messenger
Park Avenue and Fortieth Street, NEW YORK

Just For Fun

A Canadian named Casey was appointed to a government place. Technically, it had to be held by a lawyer, which Casey was not. The Benchers of the Law Society, however, undertook to obviate the technicality. "Well, Casey," said the examiner, "what do you know about law, anyway?" "To tell the truth," replied the candidate, "I don't know a single thing." The examiner reported in his affidavit "that he had examined Mr. Casey as to his knowledge of the law, and, to the best of his information and belief, he had answered the questions that he had put to him correctly." The aspirant was thereupon admitted.

When the lady passenger asked the man at the wheel what the captain meant when he said he should have to beat to windward, "He meant," said Bill, studying to put his reply into a form the lady would comprehend, "He meant he would have to sail on a bias, mum."

The food faddist and the average man were discussing diets.

The former was telling how he had lived on a strictly vegetarian diet and had gained in weight and health.

"Yes," said the average man, "and I had a rather interesting experience, too, along that line."

"What did you do?"
"I lived on milk only for a whole year and gained every day in weight and strength."

"Remarkable! How did you manage to do that?"

"Oh, just about the same as other babies did!"

At the end of three weeks of married life a Southern darkey returned to the minister who had performed the ceremony and asked for a divorce. After explaining that he could not grant divorces the minister tried to dissuade his visitor from carrying out his intention of getting one, saying: "You must remember, Sam, that you promised to take Liza for better or for worse."

"Yassir, I knows dat, boss," rejoined the darkey, "but—but she's wuss dan I took her for."

An American Bible for The American People

THE AMERICAN STANDARD BIBLE

was translated and revised in 1901, and the words used are all easily understood because they are the words taught in our schools and used in the common speech of to-day.

"It's a Nelson Bible"

That tells the story—the latest and best translation of the Scriptures put up in the finest and strongest manner and fit for the use of every one.

Prices from 55c. up

Ask your dealer to show it to you or send for descriptive booklet, "The Wonderful Story" to

THOMAS NELSON & SONS
385 Y Fourth Avenue, New York, U. S. A.

The Battle Hymn of Democracy

The song of Human Freedom Triumphant. The song that stirs men's souls. Put one in your home. Sent 25c. for one piano copy, words and music, 50c. for 3 or $1 for 5.

ARMAGEDDON CO., Inc., 141 Broadway, New York

APPLES OF GOLD

This is a really ideal weekly paper for use in Primary Departments and Infant Classes in all Sunday Schools. It is finely illustrated, uses large, clear type and is printed in beautiful colored ink. Each week there is a splendid full-page picture, short stories, choice poems and a helpful illustrated treatment of the International Sunday School Lesson. It is issued monthly but is arranged for weekly distribution in four-page parts. Price, single copies, 30 cents; five copies to one address, 25 cents each; ten or more copies, 20 cents each, per year. Postage on Canadian and foreign subscriptions, 6 cents per copy additional. Subscriptions accepted in clubs for 3 months, 6 months or a year.

Sample Copies Sent Free.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY
Park Ave. and 40th St., New York.

A Burroughs for Your Work

The extent and variety of the Burroughs' line (more than a hundred models, with some six hundred variations) provides for a choice among good machines of one of the best type for specific functions—in any business.

For every kind and character of figuring or bookkeeping problems, there is a Burroughs Machine that will give maximum satisfaction in that particular kind of work. They are all alike in furnishing extra speed and easier accuracy; but the many Burroughs models are all different in the special adaptation of each to widely-different kinds of figuring, bookkeeping and accounting problems.

No business is too large, or too small, or too highly specialized, or too "different," to benefit by the use of Burroughs equipment. Consult your banker or telephone book for the address of the nearest of the 189 Burroughs offices in the United States and Canada.

Burroughs

When Christmas Comes

What gift equals a BOOK? A book lasts forever. It is inexpensive. It carries your name. At once a perfect gift and a life-long bond of remembrance.

Songs for the Little Ones at Home

This is the kind of book that the child remembers. The pages are bordered with different pictures of birds, children at play, and animals. If we could only call off the names of these beautiful songs to you, how you would want this book! If we could only give you the words of 10 of 20 of these songs!—Two Little Tempers, Eye-Peep Hour, Grandpa and Me, The Brook, and dozens upon dozens of other songs. Music is furnished for some. You will have to imagine these light green borders on every single page, depicting the things that children love.

Illustrations in black are plentifully sprinkled through the book. Size 7½x5¼ in., cloth, 256 pages. By mail, 68 cents.

When the Blind Saw

By David de Forest Burrell

A blind beggar lad and his friend, one of the shepherds, are the characters in this exquisite little sketch. With the coming of the new-born Babe, despite the blind eyes, there comes a new world for the beggar boy. Beautifully told is Christ's meeting with him when both the Master and he have grown to manhood. One can almost feel the thrill of Christ's presence. A choice Christmas book. Boards. 4x7¼ in., 56 pages. By mail, 58 cents.

The House of Chimham

By Edgar Whitaker Work, D.D.

King David gave Chimham the bit of land on which was built a caravansary famous for its kindly hospitality. It is finally crowned as the birthplace of the Infant Christ. Wonderfully does this author describe the city of David and the search of Mary and Joseph for shelter. 12mo, 55 pages, cloth, gilt top, boxed, by mail, 58 cents. Basket cloth, plain edges, by mail, 33 cents. In Envelope Booklet style, 22 cents.

As His Mother Saw Him

By Charlotte E. Gray

From the opening words, "Spring's sunshine, following winter rains, had turned Galilee into green beauty," a reader feels the freshness of this most unusual narrative of Christ's life as seen through the eyes of Mary. A Christmas book, truly! Boards, 254 pages. 4x6¾ in. By mail, $1.08.

Where Heaven Touched the Earth

By Cortland Myers, D.D.

The Christian Observer says: "Dr. Myers has selected certain places in Palestine where in the life of Christ Heaven seemed more nearly to 'touch the earth,' on which to base this treatise of our Lord's life. . . . Into the story of these places he weaves lessons not to be forgotten. . . . Altogether the work is not only delightful to read, but beautifully helpful."

There are many uncommonly beautiful, colored illustrations. 239 pages, size 5x7½ in. By mail, $1.08.

The Bible in Picture and Story

By Mrs. L. S. Houghton

This big picture-filled book measures 7x9¼ ins. It abounds in pictures printed on beautiful paper. It is so easy to make the Old Story graphic to the children. The story is as clear as the pictures. Simple words and well-arranged sentences bring this whole book well within the scope of the child's mind. Yet, in truth, it is so interesting and so lavishly illustrated that an adult finds it hard to lay it down. Cloth, 240 pages. 7x9¼ ins. By mail, 68 cents.

Journeying in the Land Where Jesus Lived

By G. B. F. Hallock, D.D.

The Auburn Seminary Review has rightly declared this book to be "A delight and an inspiration." The title describes it. Peculiarly fitting for Christmas-tide, this handsome book is bound in cloth and stamped in L. B. A. design, 35 illustrations, 302 pages, 5½x8 ins. By mail, 68 cents.

Beautiful Envelope Booklets. Twenty-two cents each. Your friends will appreciate one of these exquisitely beautiful 4x7 inch Envelope Booklets just as much as if the gift were more expensive. Remember that each has the daintiest, tinted, page borders. Covers and envelopes are decorated in the same colors. All of this series of Envelope Booklets are made of the finest antique paper in rich tints and shades of almost every color. All are bound in silk. We have never seen a more beautiful gift at 22 cents.

- Six titles for you to choose from:
 HOW THEY CAME TO BETHLEHEM.
 A CHRISTMAS VISION.
 THE HERMIT'S CHRISTMAS.
 BY THE ROADSIDE.
 MAN WHO NEVER HEARD OF CHRISTMAS.
 THE HOUSE OF CHIMHAM.

Five of these titles for $1.00.

To-Morrow's Continent

Through the Wildernesses of Brazil by Horse, Canoe and Float

By William Azel Cook

South America! Down its mighty rivers sailed William Azel Cook, distributing Christian literature. How it was needed! Cook found darkness, even degradation, clutching vast areas. This book contains the 58 best pictures that Cook took; pictures of strange native customs; of cruel rites; pictures of the tropics. His graphic pen almost takes you with his expedition down the rivers and through the forests. Brazil needed Cook.

The Christian Observer says: "The whole book is a mine of information concerning this vast country." Cloth, 487 pages, 58 full-page illustrations, 8vo. Price, $1.25.

A Manual of Devotion for Soldiers and Sailors

By Judson Swift, D.D.

As a choice but inexpensive Christmas remembrance for a man in uniform, get this book of wonderfully appropriate and helpful prayers for soldiers and sailors. Every man needs this book. Paper covered, blue for sailors, brown for soldiers, pocket size, 104 pages, 20 cents each; in lots of 5 copies, each 10 cents. Bound in Keratol, 35 cents.

A Book for Your Minister

The Minister's Handicap

By J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.

Ministers will so enjoy reading The Minister's Handicap. It is rich in anecdotes and striking remarks made by famous men to the author during his career as a preacher. Read what a great business man says (pages 31 and 32) about preaching "your own doubts"; about "discouraged lassitude"; about "substituting an ethical address for a sermon." Sympathetic, vibrant with understanding of the ministry, this book will kindle the fires anew. Cloth, 145 pages. By mail, 75 cents.

A New Study of Paul's Journeys

Paul's Campaigns

By David James Burrell, D.D.

In this book, reader, you journey with Paul. Wherever he goes, whether to Cyprus or to Rome, you feel yourself near him, listening, hearing his fiery, impassioned, fearless exhorting. When you read the gripping description of what Paul saw at Athens, it will be brought home to you that here indeed is a study of Paul's wanderings which really appreciates the motives and difficulties of that courageous fighter for Christianity. Know Paul's footsteps. It is so easy to forget. Four wax-process charts, specially drawn, same size as page, no folding. 12mo, cloth, 110 pages. By mail, 75 cents.

The Master Preacher

By Albert R. Bond, D.D.

A study of the Homiletics of Jesus. This book can be described in four words: It is simply "Jesus as a Preacher." Truly a rich subject for any author, but marvellously treated in this book. Cloth, 8vo, 320 pages. By mail, 83 cents.

Here is a time-saving coupon. Clip it, friends, and use it.

American Tract Society,
 Park Avenue and 40th Street,
 New York, N. Y.

Dear Sirs:
 Enclosed please find $.....
 for which please send me the following books:

Name.....

Street.....

Town and State.....

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS-URBANA

3 0112 10977448