Corners¹ (p. o.) are hamlets. The first settlement was commenced in 1787, upon the site of the Indian village of Kanadesaga, by immigrants from New England.² This village was situated at the foot of Seneca Lake, where Geneva now is; and for several years after Geneva had become a place of considerable importance it was called "Kanadesaga." An ancient fortification, known as Fort Hill, is located on lot 58. It was covered with large forest trees upon the first settlement of the town. Another beautiful ground, called the "Old Castle," is about 1½ mi. n. w. of Geneva. It is covered by an Indian orchard, and the ground has never been plowed, because of a stipulation to that effect made with the Indians in the treaty of purchase.³ It contains an Indian burial ground; and in one corner may be traced a trench of an ancient stockaded fortification. Here was the largest Indian settlement in Western New York, and it is still a place of much interest to the few remaining descendants of the once powerful Five Nations. Many relics—as stone hatchets, arrow heads, pipes, &c.—are found in the vicinity of "Old Castle." As early as 1765, the Rev. Samuel Kirkland came on a mission to the Indians at Kanadesaga.⁴ The first church (Presb.) was organized in 1798; and the first settled minister was Rev. Jedediah Chapman.⁵

SOUTH BRISTOL—was formed from Bristol, March 8, 1838. It lies upon the w. shore of Canandaigua Lake, s. w. of the center of the co. The surface consists of an elevated upland, divided into 4 ranges by the valleys of Grindstone and Mud Creeks and Egypt Brooks. The summits of the ridges are about 1000 feet above the lake, and the declivities are very steep. The bluffs upon the lake shore are 300 to 400 feet high. The soil is a mixture of clay and disintegrated slate. Although the soil is rich and productive, the hilly character of the town has tended to retard its settlement. Cold Spring (South Bristol p. o.) is a hamlet about a mi. from Canandaigua Lake. Frost Hill is a hamlet in the w. part. Gamaliel Wilder, from Mass., purchased this township from Phelps and Gorham, and settled at Wilburs Point, on Canandaigua Lake, in 1789.⁶ An Indian orchard on the lake shore at this point induced him to settle here. Rev. Mr. Rolph was the first settled minister. There is now but 1 church (Presb.) in town.

VICTOR—was formed from Bloomfield, May 26, 1812. It is the n. w. corner town of the co. The n. part is occupied by the drift ridges, which rise 50 to 150 feet above the general surface. A ridge of 100 to 280 feet in height extends across the s. part in a general e. and w. direction. The principal streams are Irondequoit, Mud, Hog Hollow, and Fish Creeks, and Trout Brook. The soil in the center and n. is a light, sandy and gravelly loam, but in the s. e. it is principally clay. It is particularly adapted to the cultivation of potatoes and root crops. Victor,⁷ (p. v.) near the center, contains about 75 dwellings. The Indian village of Cannagaro, which was destroyed by the Marquis de Nonville, was situated near this place.⁸ Fishers (p. o.) is a station on the N. Y. C. R. R., in the w. part; and East Victor is a hamlet, on Mud Creek. The first settlement was commenced in 1789, by immigrants from Stockbridge, Mass. Among the first were Enos and Jared Boughton, and Jacob Lobdell.⁹ Rev. Reuben Parmelee, from Goshen, the first settled minister, came to the town in 1798.¹⁰

WEST BLOOMFIELD—was formed from Bloomfield, Feb. 11, 1833. It lies upon the w. border of the co., n. of the center. A ridge 200 to 300 feet high, forming the declivity of a southern terrace, extends across the n. part. The surface is gently undulating. The soil is a deep, rich, gravelly loam mixed with clay. In the s. part there is a spring of inflammable or carburetted hydrogen gas. Tile and earthenware are manufactured to some extent in town. West Bloomfield (p. v.) is a village of 350 inhabitants,¹¹ situated 1½ mi. s. of the W. Bloomfield Station, on

⁵ There are 12 churches in town; 2 Prot. E., 3 Presb., 2 Asso. Ref. Presb., 2 M. E., Bap., Ref. Prot. D., Univ., and I. C.

⁶ Among the other early settlers who came in soon after Mr. Wilder, between 1789 and 1796, were Theophilus and Matthew Allen, Joseph Gilbert, Jared Tuttle, Peter Ganiard, Levi Austin, Nathaniel Hatch, and their families. Mr. Wilder built the first sawmill, the first gristmill, and distillery, at Wilburs Point, in 1795. He also erected the first public house, in 1808, which he conducted for 9 years. Dr. Hewitt and George Wilder opened the first store, in 1828. The first school was taught by Joanna Forbes. Eli Allen was the first child born, in 1793.

⁹ Levi Boughton and Rufus Dryer settled at Boughton Hill, in 1790. The first birth was that of Frederick Boughton, in June, 1791; and the first marriage, that of Zebulon Norton and Miss Boughton. The first tavern was opened at Boughton Hill, by Hezekiah Boughton, in 1792; and the first sawmill was built the same year, by Enos and Jared Boughton.

² John P. Sears, Peregrine Gardner, Clark Peck, Jasper Marvin, Samuel Miller, John Algur, and S. Thayer settled in the town in 1789-90. Benjamin Gardner, with his sons John and Peregrine, are supposed to have been the first settlers. The first birth was that of Lucinda Gardner, in Sept. 1791. Jasper Pease kept the first inn, and Royal Henderson the first store. The first sawmill was built by Ebenezer Curtis; and the first gristmill, by Reuben Thayer.

³ There are now 3 churches in town; Cong., M. E., and Chris.

PORTAGE BRIDGE.

W. H. GIBBS, C. S. M. 1851. P. 100.

WYOMING COUNTY.

THIS county was formed from Genesee, May 14, 1841. Eagle, Pike, and a part of Portage were annexed from Allegany co. in 1846. It is an interior county, in the s. w. part of the State, separated from Lake Erie by Erie co., and from the Penn. line by Cattaraugus and Allegany. It is centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains — sq. mi. Its surface is a broad, rolling upland, divided into ridges and broken by ravines worn by the streams. It has a slight inclination toward the n. The summits of the highest ridges are 1200 to 1500 ft. above Lake Erie and 1700 to 2000 ft. above tide. Several of the ravines in the n. are 1000 ft. below the summits of the adjacent ridges. In the interior the ridges are broken, and the country begins to assume the hilly character which is more fully developed further s. Genesee River, which forms a portion of the e. boundary, is bordered by steep bluffs 200 to 400 ft. high. Near Portageville the river descends from the plateau, in a series of three falls, to a depth of more than 300 ft. within a distance of 2½ mi. The water has worn a deep and irregular ravine in the shelving rocks, and the nearly perpendicular banks at the foot of the lower falls are 380 ft. high. The deep gorge, with the rapids and falls, form one of the wildest and most picturesque scenes in Western New York.¹

The other principal streams are Cayuga, Tonawanda, Little Tonawanda, Oatka, East Coy, West Coy, Cattaraugus, and Buffalo Creeks. The valley of Oatka Creek, from near the s. border of Warsaw to the n. line of the co., is bordered by steep hills 400 to 1000 ft. high. Silver Lake, in Castile, (the principal body of water,) is 3 mi. long and about ½ mi. wide. The rocks of this co. consist principally of the shales and sandstones of the Portage group. The summits of the southern hills are covered with the rocks belonging to the Chemung group. Thin layers of compact Portage sandstone are found in many parts of the co. and are extensively quarried for flagging. Upon the ridges little rounded eminences are frequently seen, appearing like drift hills; but upon examination they are found to be shale rock covered with a thin soil. Marl and muck are found in considerable quantities in the swamps. The waters of Silver Lake and of several of the streams are constantly depositing lime in the form of marl. The drift deposits in the co. are not very extensive, and the soil is principally derived from disintegration. Upon the hills it is mostly a clay loam underlaid by hardpan, and in the valleys it is a fertile, gravelly loam and alluvium. The people are principally engaged in stock and wool growing and in dairying, for which the soil upon the hills is admirably adapted. Wheat, barley, corn, and fruits are largely cultivated in the valleys. Very little attention is paid to manufactures except such as are strictly necessary to an agricultural community.

The county seat is located at Warsaw.² The courthouse is a commodious brick edifice, situated in the n. part of the village. The co. clerk's office is a fireproof building, adjacent to the courthouse. The jail is a wood building, arranged so as to enable the keeper to classify the prisoners rocks. An isolated mass of rocks, 15 ft. in diameter and 100 ft. high, known as "Sugar Loaf," rises from the river bed at the bend of the stream and receives nearly the whole force of the rushing water. It is bordered on one side by the present bed of the stream, and on the other by a deep chasm which separates it from the e. bank of the river. Within the memory of people now living, the river flowed over the precipice on the level of the rock which now forms its w. bank, and Sugar Loaf was an island. These falls are accessible only from the w. The perpendicular bank on the w. side of the river at one point is 380 ft. high.

² The commissioners named in the act to select the location were Peter R. Reed, of Onondaga, Davis Hurd, of Niagara and John Thompson, of Steuben. The building commissioners were John A. McElwaine, Paul Richards, and Jonathan Perry. Trumble Cary, Esq., of Batavia, gave to the co. an ample public square upon which to erect the public buildings. The first courts were held at a public house at East Orangeville, in June, 1841, and the first meeting of the Board of Supervisors was at the same place. The first co. officers were Paul Richards, First Judge; James Sprague, Peter Patterson, Jos. Johnson, Associate Judges; W. Riley Smith, District Attorney; N. Wolcott, Co. Clerk; W. R. Groger, Sheriff; and Harvey Putnam, Surrogate.

according to law.¹ The poorhouse is situated on a farm of 97 acres near the w. border of Orangeville, 9 mi. w. of Warsaw. The average number of inmates is 73, supported at a cost of 75 cts. per week each. The farm yields a revenue of about $300.²

The Buffalo & New York City R. R. extends s. e. through Attica, Middlebury, Warsaw, Gainesville, Castile, and Genesee Falls, crossing the Portage Falls and connecting with the N. Y. & E. R. R. at Hornellsville. A r. r. route has been surveyed, and a road-bed graded, from Attica s. w. to the Allegany River.³

There are 4 weekly newspapers published in the co.⁴

The eastern tier of towns in this co., with the exception of a portion of Castile, belonged to the Ogden, Silver Lake, and Cottinger tracts of the Morris Reservation, and the remaining parts of the co. to the Holland Land Purchase. The Gardeau Tract, containing 17,927 acres on both sides of the Genesee, was reserved for Mary Jemison (the "old white woman") by the Seneca Nation in their treaty with Robert Morris in 1797.⁵ About one-half of this tract lies in the present town of Castile. Upon this tract Mary Jemison and her descendants continued to reside until 1816, when she sold all but 2 sq. mi. on the w. side of the river to Micah Brooks and Jellis Clute. The remaining 2 mi. she sold in 1831 to Henry B. Gibson and Jellis Clute, and removed to the Cattaraugus Reservation. The first white man that lived within the limits of the co. was a tory, named Ebenezer Allen, who in consequence of his crimes fled from Penn. and joined the Indians about 1780. He located upon the Genesee, and for a time lived upon the lands of Mary Jemison. He afterward built a saw and grist mill on the present site of Rochester, removed thence to Oatka Creek,⁶ and thence to Canada.⁷ The first permanent white settler was Elizur Webster, who located at Warsaw in 1803. The settlements increased rapidly, and in a few years most of the best lands of the co. were taken up. Most of the early settlers were from New England; but the later immigrants have principally been Germans.

¹ The courthouse, jail, and clerk's office were erected in 1842, at a cost of $12,000.

² The poorhouse contains 22 rooms, and the inmates are provided with good, substantial food; but the house does not admit of proper accommodations for the paupers, or for classification of the insane, of which there are always a number.

⁴ The Genesee Register, the first newspaper in the co., was established at Warsaw in 1828 by L. & W. Walker, and was continued 6 months.

The Warsaw Sentinel was commenced by Andrew W. Young in May, 1830, and continued until Dec. 1831, when it was merged in the Republican Advocate at Batavia.

The Attica Republican was commenced by David Scott in 1833-34. It was soon after changed to

The Attica Republican and Genesee Advertiser. E. A. Coffey became its publisher, and changed it to

The Attica Balance, and subsequently to

The Attica Democrat, and continued it until 1846.

The Genesee Recorder was commenced at Perry by Geo. M. Shipper in 1834, and continued about 2 years.

The American Citizen was commenced at Warsaw in 1836 by J. A. Hadley. After 1 year, it was removed to Perry and published by Mitchell & Warren. Mr. Mitchell continued the publication until Jan. 1841, when it was removed to Rochester.

The Pike H'ing was commenced by Thos. Carrier in 1838. Soon after, its name was changed to

The Pike Gazette, and it was continued for about a year.

The Watchtower, a Bap. paper, was issued in 1839 from the office of The American Citizen. It was published 1 year by Ansel Warren.

The Register, a campaign paper, was published at Perry in 1840 by Isaac N. Stoddard and John H. Bailey.

The Perry Democrat was commenced in 1841 by Pet. Lawrence. In 1848 it passed to C. C. Britt, who continued it until 1853.

The Western New Yorker was commenced at Perry in Jan. 1841, by John H. Bailey. In the summer of the same year it passed into the hands of Barlow & Woodward, who removed it to Warsaw. It was successively published by Barlow & Blanchard, Mr. Blanchard, and H. A. Dudley until April 1, 1858, when it passed into the hands of Elijah W. Andrews, by whom it is still published.

The Countryman was commenced at Perry by N. S. Woodward in 1843. It soon passed to Dan'l S. Curtis, who changed its name to

The Impartial Countryman, and continued it until Aug. 1846, when it passed to Ansel Warren, who changed its name to

The Free Citizen, and continued until Aug. 1847.

The Wyoming Republican was commenced at Warsaw by E. L. Fuller in 1844; it was published until March, 1847.

The Attica Telegraph was commenced by Abraham Dinsmore in Oct. 1846, and was published about 2 years.

The Old Eighth Whig was commenced at Attica, April 1, 1848, by B. W. Bible and W. H. Civer. After about 6 mos. Mr. Bible retired, and Mr. Civer continued the paper, under the name of

The Spirit of the Old Eighth, until 1850.

The Attica Atlas was commenced Jan. 1, 1851, by Silas Folsom, by whom it is still published.

The Christian Investigator was published at the office of the Free Citizen for 1 year. Edited by Wm. Goodell.

The Wyoming Co. Advertiser was commenced Dec. 22, 1853, and was published 1 year by Horace Wilcox.

The Wyoming Times was commenced at Warsaw by T. S. Gillet in May, 1855. It was destroyed by fire in 1856, and resuscitated soon after. It is still published by Mr. Gillet.

The Wyoming Co. Mirror was commenced at Warsaw in 1848 by Babbett & Lewis, and is still published.

⁵ The parents of Mary Jemison emigrated from Ireland in 1743, and Mary was born during the voyage across the ocean. The family settled upon the western frontiers of Penn., where they remained in peace until the breaking out of the French War in 1764. In 1755 a party of Indians visited the settlement and took the family prisoners, and on their retreat murdered all but Mary, then a girl of 12 or 13 years. She was carried captive to an Indian settlement on the Ohio, and adopted by two women who had lost a brother in the war. She grew to womanhood among the Indians, adopted their habits and customs, was twice married, and had 8 children,—3 sons and 5 daughters. After the Revolution she had an opportunity to return to her white friends; but she preferred to remain with her husband and children. She was greatly beloved by the Indians, and highly respected by the whites who became acquainted with her. She retained her knowledge of the English language, and to the last remembered the early instructions of her mother, and the last counsel which that mother gave when they were taken captive and the designs of the Indians to murder the father and mother became manifest. She died at the Cattaraugus Reservation, Sept. 19, 1833, aged 90 or 91 years.

in the alders at the foot of this lake while Gen. Sullivan was laying waste the Indian villages upon the Genesee. In the summer of 1855 it was reported that an immense serpent, 100 ft. long, had been seen in this lake. So well was the story apparently authenticated that thousands of visitors came from all parts of the country to obtain a sight of his snakeship. A burlesque account of the capture of the serpent, which appeared in the Buffalo Republic, raised the excitement to the highest pitch; and immediately afterward the whole humbug collapsed.

WETHERSFIELD—was formed from Orangeville, April 12, 1823. It is an interior town, lying s. w. of the center of the co. Its surface is a rolling upland. Tonawanda, East Coy, and West Coy Creeks all take their rise in this town. Wethersfield Springs, (p. v.), in the n. e. corner, contains 3 churches and 25 dwellings. Hermitage, (p. v.), on the e. border of the town, contains 2 churches and 20 dwellings. Smiths Corners (Wethersfield p. o.) is a hamlet. The first settlement was made on Lot 11, in 1810, by Lewis Hancock, Guy Morgan, and Calvin Clifford, from Jefferson co.⁵ Rev. Mr. Boomer (Bap.) was the first preacher.⁶

Webster kept the first inn, in 1809; and Absalom Green and Dan^l Shaw, the first store, in the same year. Solomon Morris built the first gristmill, in 1808.

⁶ The census reports 6 churches; 2 Bap., and 1 each Cong., Prot. E., M. E., and Christian.

YATES COUNTY.

THIS county was formed from Ontario, Feb. 5, 1823, and named from Joseph C. Yates, then governor. Barrington and Starkey were added from Steuben, April 6, 1824. It is centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains an area of — sq. mi. Its surface consists of a series of ridges extending from Stenben co. in a northerly direction, and gradually declining from a height of about 1700 ft. above tide, upon the s. border, to a level of the undulating region near the foot of Seneca Lake. The first or most eastern of these ridges lies between Seneca and Crooked Lakes, and occupies the towns of Barrington, Starkey, Milo, Torrey, and a part of Benton. The highest summit is about 900 ft. above Crooked Lake and 1200 above Seneca. The slopes are generally gradual and the inclination uniform. The second ridge occupies the high peninsula between the two branches of Crooked Lake, and extends n. through Jerusalem, finally losing itself in the rolling upland of Benton. The s. part of this ridge is known as "Bluff Point," from its abrupt termination. It is about 400 ft. above the lake. The third range lies between the w. branch of Crooked Lake and Flint Creek, and occupies the w. part of Jerusalem, the e. part of Italy, and the s. e. part of Potter. The highest summits in the s. are about 700 ft. above the lake. A fourth ridge lies between the valleys of Flint Creek and West River, and extends n. through the w. part of Potter. A fifth range occupies that portion of Middlesex lying between West River Hollow and Canandaigua Lake. The declivities of the last two ranges are mostly very steep; and their summits are 800 to 1000 ft. above the valleys. The uplands, except in the extreme w. part, are smooth and arable to their summits. The valleys between them are wide and exceedingly fertile, and the n. part of the co. is a fine rolling region.

The lowest rocks in the co. are the upper series of the Hamilton shales, cropping out on the lower course of the Crooked Lake Outlet. Next above these, upon the same stream, appear the Tully limestone, Genesee slate, and Portage groups. The first of the three, furnishing lime, is the most valuable mineral in the co. The Portage group near Penn Yan furnishes a good quality of flagging stone, and is extensively quarried for that purpose. The shales and sandstone of the Chemung group occupy the summits in the s. part of the co.; calcareous tufa is found upon Crooked Lake Outlet, and marl in the swamps near the foot of the lake. Iron pyrites have been found in considerable quantities at Bluff Point. The soil for the most part consists of a fine quality of gravelly loam, intermixed with clay and the disintegrated shales of the Portage group. It is well adapted to either tillage or pasturage.

The principal streams in the co. are Crooked Lake Outlet, Keshong Creek, Big Stream, Rock Stream, Flint Creek, and West River. Seneca Lake, forming the e. boundary of the co., is 447 ft. above tide, and Canandaigua Lake, forming a part of the w. boundary, 668 ft. Crooked Lake,¹ near the center, two-thirds of it lying within the co., is 718 ft. above tide and is 18 mi. in length. Its n. part is divided by Bluff Point into two branches, each of which is from one to two mi. wide. Owing to the depredations of the midge winter wheat is less grown than formerly, while spring grains, root crops, stock, wool, and fruit are much more extensively and profitably produced. The outlet of Crooked Lake affords large water power for manufacturing purposes,—as yet but slightly improved.

The county seat is located at the village of Penn Yan,² on the line of Milo and Benton.³ The first courthouse⁴ and jail combined was erected in 1824; and in 1834 it was burned. In 1835 a new brick courthouse was built, on a public square, at a cost of $12,000. A jail, detached, was erected the same season. The latter was destroyed by fire in Feb. 1857, and was rebuilt the same year, at a cost of $9,000. A clerk's office was erected some years previous, upon the public square

H. Bennett, Co. Clerk; Miles Benham, Sheriff; and Abraham P. Vosburgh, Surrogate.

⁴ John Sutton, of Tompkins, Geo. H. Feeter, of Herkimer, and Joseph B. Walton, of Otsego cos., were appointed commissioners to locate the co. buildings, and Wm. Shattuck, of Benton, Geo. Sherman and Samuel Stewart, of Milo, to erect them. The courts were to be held at the house of Asa Cole until the courthouse was finished.

with the other public buildings, near the center of the village. The co. poorhouse is located on a farm of 123 acres in the town of Jerusalem, about 5 mi. s. w. of Penn Yan.¹ The average number of inmates is 86, and they are supported at a weekly cost of $1 40 each. A school is taught in the house during a portion of the year, and religious services are held occasionally. The Crooked Lake Canal extends along the outlet of Crooked Lake, and enters Seneca Lake at Dresden. It opens a direct water communication with Yates co. and the n. portion of Steuben, and affords an easy and cheap means of transporting grain and other agricultural products. The Canandaigua & Elmira R. R. extends through the co., e. of the center, connecting with the N. Y. C. R. R. at the n. terminus and with the N. Y. & E. R. R. at the s. These two works of internal improvement furnish market facilities equal to those generally enjoyed by the interior cos. of the State.

Three newspapers are published in the co.²

The early history of this co. is intimately associated with the history of the "Friends," a religious sect founded by Jemima Wilkinson.³ This singular woman took the name of the "Universal Friend," and was regarded as a prophet by her followers, among whom were persons of respectability, wealth, and influence. At a general meeting of the sect, in Conn., in 1786, it was resolved to emigrate to some unsettled region and found a colony where they might live in peace and in the undisturbed enjoyment of their religious opinions. Three of their number were delegated to seek out a proper location.⁴ They proceeded to Penn., went up the Susquehanna River, and followed the route of Gen. Sullivan to Seneca Lake, where they finally determined to locate. In June, 1787, 25 "Friends" set out for the land of promise by the way of the Mohawk Valley. They settled about 1 mi. s. of the present village of Dresden, the location being fixed upon from its close proximity to the fine waterfalls upon Crooked Lake Outlet.⁵ During the fall they prepared the land, and in the following season sowed it with winter wheat, which they harvested in 1789; and this was the first wheat crop raised in Western N. Y. In 1789, Wm. Potter and Thos. Hathaway, two of their number, purchased of the State 14,000 acres of land lying between Seneca Lake and the Pre-emption Line, and subsequently Thos. Hathaway and Benedict Robinson purchased the town Jerusalem of Phelps and Gorham.⁶ In 1789, Jemima and a large number of her followers

¹ This building was erected 25 years ago. It is 100 ft. by 50, and 3 stories high including the basement. The farm yields a revenue of $1000.

² The Penn Yan Herald was established at Penn Yan in May, 1818, by Abraham H. Bennett. In 1820 it appeared as The Penn Yan Democrat. In 1855 Alfred Reed became associated with Mr. Bennett, and in 1847 Mr. Reed became sole proprietor. In 1850 Darius A. Ogden became proprietor, in 1853 Reuben Spicer, and in 1857 Geo. D. A. Bridgman, its present publisher.

The Yates County Republican was started Dec. 16, 1824, by E. J. Fowle, and continued 10 years. He then sold it to John Remick, who published it as

The Penn Yan Enquirer about 2 years, when it was discontinued. The Yates County Whig was commenced in 1836 by Rodney L. Adams, by whom it was continued until 1852, when it was sold to Stafford S. Cleveland. In 1856 its name was changed to

The Yates County Chronicle, and it is still published by S. S. Cleveland.

The Western Star was published at Penn Yan in 1833 by H. Gilbert, and

The Miscellany, the same year, at the same place, by Thos. H. Russett.

The Democratic Organ was published a few months in 1844 at Penn Yan by Harvey L. Winauts.

The Penn Yan Telegraph, &c., was issued from the office of The Whig, for 6 mos. in 1841.

³ Jemima Wilkinson was the daughter of Jeremiah Wilkinson, a R. I. farmer. She was one of a family of 12 children and had little or no advantage of education. In her 20th year she had a severe attack of fever; and for some time her life was despaired of. Upon her recovery she claimed that she had been raised from the dead,—that her carnal existence was ended and henceforth her life was to be spiritual and divine,—and that she was endowed with the power of prophecy. She soon commenced traveling and exhorting, and succeeded in converting many persons, among whom were several substantial New England farmers. The following description of her person is copied from "The New Haven Gazette and Connecticut Magazine," dated March, 1787. "She is about the middle size of woman, not gented in her person, rather awkward in her carriage; her complexion good, her eyes remarkably black and brilliant, her hair black and waving with beautiful ringlets upon her neck and shoulders. Her features are regular, and the whole of her face is thought by many to be perfectly beautiful. As she is not to be supposed of either sex, so no cap, letting her hair hang down as has been described. She wears her neckcloth like a man; her chemise is buttoned around the neck and wrists. Her outside garment is a robe, under which it is said she wears an expensive dress, the fashion of which is made to correspond neither with that of man nor woman. Her understanding is not deficient, except touching her religious fanaticism. She is very illiterate, yet her memory is very great; artful in discovering many circumstances which fall out among her disciples. On all occasions she requires the most extraordinary attentions that can be bestowed upon her: one or more of her disciples usually attend upon her and perform the most menial services. Her pronunciation is after the peculiar dialect of the most illiterate of the countrypeople of New England. "Her preaching has very little connection, and is very lengthy,—at times cold and languid, but occasionally lively, zealous, and animated." When she first arose from her bed of sickness, she assumed that there was once such a person as Jemima Wilkinson, but that she died and went to heaven, after which the Divine Spirit reanimated that same body and it arose from the dead; now, this divine inhabitant is Christ Jesus our Lord, the Friend to all mankind, and gives his name to the body to which he is united, and therefore body and spirit conjointly is the "Universal Friend." She assumed to have two "Witnesses," corresponding in all respects to those prophesied in Rev. chap. xi. from 3d to 13th verses. These were James Parker and Sarah Richards. During her whole life she never yielded the pretensions which she at first made; and her whole career had the merit of consistency. Among the principal peculiar tenets of the sect was the strict enforcement of the Shaker doctrine of celibacy as indispensable to a pure life. The meetings were conducted after the manner of the Quakers, the whole congregation often sitting in perfect silence for an hour or more.—See Turner's Hist. of The Phelps and Gorham Purchase.

This extraordinary woman exerted a strong influence over her followers, who gratuitously planted and hoed her corn, sowed and reaped by wheat, and put and gathered her hay, always having care to be of no trouble or expense to the Friend upon these occasions. On one occasion she addressed, through an interpreter, a band of Oneidas who had encamped near her settlement on their way to a treaty, endeavoring to convince them that she was Christ. They listened with apparent attention, and, when she had finished, one of the chiefs arose and delivered a short address to his countrymen. She requested to have it interpreted to her,—when the savage contemptuously replied, in broken English, that if she were the character she assumed to be, she would have understood the poor Indian as well as any one. She died July 1, 1819, and her sect has long since been broken up.—Hudson's Life of Jemima Wilkinson.

⁶ It was a sale of that early period with Moses Phelps &

came in. The first framed house in the co. was erected for her, on a farm of 1000 acres set apart for her especial use. For a time the colony flourished; but soon neighbors began to arrive, and jealousies were engendered, and a series of persecutions commenced, which seriously retarded the progress of the colony and embittered the last days of the "Friend."¹

BARRINGTON—was formed from Wayne, (Steuben co.,) April 6, 1822. It lies upon the e. bank of Crooked Lake, in the s. part of the co. Its surface consists principally of a high ridge, sloping gradually upward from Crooked Lake to a height of 600 to 800 ft. Big Stream flows through the s. e. corner, in a deep ravine bordered by steep declivities. From Crooked Lake the ascent is nearly uniform for 2 miles; and the summit of the ridge is rolling. The soil is a slaty gravel mixed with clay, and is generally productive. Barrington,² (p. v.,) near the center, contains 1 church and 25 houses. The first settlement was made in 1800, by Jacob Tuplis.³ The Rev. Jas. Osgood (Bap.) was the first preacher. There are two churches in town; Bap. and M. E.

BENTON⁴—was formed from Jerusalem, Feb. 12, 1803, as "Vernon." Its name was changed to "Snell" April 6, 1808, and to Benton April 2, 1810. Milo was taken off in 1818, and a part of Torrey in 1851. It is the n. e. corner town of the co. Its surface is rolling and gradually descending toward the n. and e. From Seneca Lake the land slopes upward for a mile, and to a height of about 300 ft., where it spreads out in a beautiful undulating region. The valley of Crooked Lake, 200 ft. below the summits of the table land, extends about 1 mi. into the s. part of the town. Keshong Creek passes through the n. e. corner. The soil is clay along the lake, but upon the hills it is a deep, rich, clayey and gravelly loam, well adapted to almost every branch of agriculture. Bellona, (Benton p. o.,) situated on Keshong Creek, in the n. e. part, contains 2 churches, (pop. 205;) and Benton Center (p. v.) 2 churches and 28 dwellings. Fergusons Corners (p. o.) is a hamlet. The village of Penn Yan lies partly within this town. The first settlement was made in the spring of 1789, by Levi Benton, from Catskill, Greene co.⁵ The first religious meetings were held in the barn of Levi Benton, in 1792, and were conducted by Ezra Cole. There are now 4 churches in town.⁶

ITALY—was formed from Naples, Feb. 15, 1815. It is the s. w. corner town of the co. Its surface consists of three distinct ridges, each attaining an elevation of about 1000 ft. above Canandaigua Lake. These ridges are divided by the valley of Flint Creek—known as Italy Hollow—and West River Hollow. The valleys are generally narrow and bordered by steep and often precipitous sides. The summits of the ridges are broken uplands. The soil is a slaty and gravelly loam and is best adapted to pasturage. Italy Hill (p. o.) is situated in the s. e. corner; and Italy Hollow (p. o.) on Flint Creek, s. of the Center. The first settlement in the town was made by John Mower, at West Hollow, in 1793.⁷ There are 4 churches in town.⁸

JERUSALEM—was organized Jan. 1789, and Benton was taken off in 1803. A small part of Steuben co., in the forks of the lake, was annexed Feb. 25, 1814: It lies on the w. bank of Crooked Lake and is the central town in the co. Its surface is divided into two distinct ridges by the w. branch of the lake and its inlet. The e. ridge terminates on the s. in Bluff Point, a promontory, 8 mi. in extent, lying between the two branches of Crooked Lake; and it extends on the n. into the town of Benton. It is about 400 ft. high and $1\frac{1}{2}$ to 2 mi. wide, and is bordered by steep declivities. The continuity of this ridge is broken by a remarkable depression extending Gorham, in selling a picked township, to require the purchaser to draw for another township at the same price. Robinson and Hathaway, after purchasing Jerusalem, drew what is now the town of Geneseo, Livingston co. The Friend objected to her people trading and buying property at a distance,¹ and, fearing her displeasure, they prevailed upon Mr. Phelps to release them from the bargain, which he was quite willing to do, as he had ascertained the value of the township.—Turner's Hist.

³ The next settlers were Thomas Bronson, from Conn.; Wm. Coallough, from N. J.; Jonathan Davis, William Owenshire, Oliver Parker, Matthew Knapp, Joseph Fenton, John Kris, and Henry Spry. The first school was taught by — West, in 1810. Jacob Tuplis kept the first tavern, in 1804, on the Bath Road; and Elijah Townsend, the first store. John Carr erected the first gristmill, and Wm. Cummins the first sawmill.

1791; and Ezra Cole, Eliphalet Hall, and Samuel Buell, with their families, in 1792. The first birth was that of Matilda Buell, in Sept. 1792; the first marriage, that of Thomas Barden and Olive Benton, in 1791; and the first deaths, those of Ephraim and Samuel Wheeler, who both died in the fall of 1792. The first sawmill was built by Dr. Caleb Benton, in 1790, at Bellona. The first store was kept by Luther Benton and James Stoddard, in 1793, and the first inn by Ezra Cole, in 1800. John Coates taught the first school, at Benton Center, in the winter of 1794. The first town meeting was held at the house of Daniel Brown.

from the head of the w. branch of Crooked Lake e. to the e. branch. The highest point in this valley is about 70 ft. above the lake. The ridge on the w. rises gradually for 3 or 4 mi. and attains a height of about 700 ft. above the lake, where the surface spreads out into a rolling upland. The soil is a gravelly and slaty loam, and is well adapted to both pasturage and tillage. Branchport, (p. v.), situated at the head of the w. branch of Crooked Lake, contains 3 churches and about 55 houses. Kinneys Corners (Bluff Point p. o.) is situated in the e. part of the town, and Shermans Hollow (p. o.) in the n. part. The first settlement was made by Jemima Wilkinson, in 1789.¹ In that year crops of wheat were harvested in the town, and a mill was erected that made flour the same season. The first, and for a long time the only, religious services in town were conducted by Jemima, at her own house. There are 4 churches in town.²

MIDDLESEX—was formed, in Jan. 1789, as "Augusta." Its name was changed April 6, 1808, and a part was annexed to Potter in 1856. It is the n. w. corner town of the co., lying upon the e. bank of Canandaigua Lake. Its surface consists chiefly of high ridges with steep declivities separated by narrow valleys. The summits are 500 to 600 ft. above the lake. The valley of West River divides the ridges, and the valley of a small stream known as Boat Brook divides the w. ridge into two peaks, the n. of which is known as "Bare Hill." The soil is clayey on the summits of the hills, and gradually changes to a deep gravelly loam in the valleys. Near Federal Hollow, a mile from Rushville, is an inflammable spring.³ Middlesex Center (Middlesex p. o.) contains 3 churches and 20 dwellings. Overackers Corners is a hamlet. The first settlement was made in 1789. Judge Potter, one of the surveyors of Phelps and Gorham's purchase, was the original purchaser of the town, and took an active part in its first settlement.⁴ Many of the first settlers were adherents of Jemima Wilkinson; and for a considerable time there was no other religious association in the town. There are now 4 churches.⁵

MILO—was formed from Benton, March 6, 1818. A part of Torrey was taken off in 1851. It lies on the e. border of the co., between Seneca and Crooked Lakes. Its surface rises from Seneca Lake in a gentle and gradual slope for 2 mi., where it attains an elevation of about 400 to 500 ft. From this summit the land spreads out into an undulating region, gradually declining on the w. to the valley of Crooked Lake. The soil is principally a gravelly loam, with some clay in the vicinity of Penn Yan and on the shore of Seneca Lake. Penn Yan,⁶ (p. v.) the county seat, was incorp. April 27, 1833. It is situated at the foot of Crooked Lake, and is an important station on the Canandaigua & Elmira R. R. A daily steamer connects it with Hammondsport, at the head of Crooked Lake. It contains 6 churches, a high school,⁷ 2 newspaper establishments, and a bank. Pop. 2,277,—2,114 in Milo, 163 in Benton. Milo Center (p. v.) contains 150 inhabitants; and Himrods Corners (Milo p. v.) 78. The first settlement was commenced in the n. part, by the followers of Jemima Wilkinson, from R. I., in 1788.⁶ The first religious services were conducted by Jemima Wilkinson. There are now 10 churches in town.⁹

POTTER¹⁰—was formed from Starkey, April 26, 1832, and a part of Middlesex was annexed Dec. 18, 1856. It lies near the center of the n. border of the co. Its surface is hilly in the s. w., and rolling in the center and n. Flint Creek, the principal stream, flows northerly through near the center of the town. A swamp of 1 to 1½ mi. wide extends along its course for 8 mi. n. of Potter Center. The soil is a slaty loam in the s. w., and a gravelly and sandy loam, with an intermixture of clay, in the remaining parts. Rushville (p. v.) is partly in Gorham, Ontario co., but principally in the n. w. part of this town. Pop. 583,—408 in Potter, 175 in Gorham. Potter Center (Potter p. o.) contains 20 houses. Voak is a p. o. on the line of Benton. Settlement was begun in 1788, by the followers of Jemima Wilkinson. The most prominent among them were William

² Bap., M. E., Presb., Univ. ³ Berk's Mineralogy N. Y., p. 166. ⁴ Among the first settlers were Michael Pierce, John Wolford, all Jabez French, John Blair, James Lewis, and John McNear, all from R. I. William Bassett taught the first school, in 1796; Jesse Gilbert kept the first tavern, near Rushville, and Nelson Wiley the first store. John Wolford jr. built the first sawmill. The

Potter and his sons William, Arnold, Simeon, and Edward, who had purchased the whole township.¹ Rev. Mr. Haskill was the first settled preacher, in 1796. There are 11 churches in town.²

STARKEY³—was formed from Reading, (Schuyler co.,) April 6, 1824. Potter was taken off in 1832. It is the s. e. corner town of the co. Its surface is a gradual slope from the bluffs which border upon Seneca Lake to the w. border of the town, where it attains an elevation of about 700 ft. The bluffs upon the lake in the s. half of the town are 100 to 200 ft. high and nearly perpendicular. In the s. part, a ridge breaks the uniformity of the slope near the center. Big Stream and Rock Stream flow through deep ravines into Seneca Lake, falling several hundred ft. in their course. The soil is clay along the lake, a sandy loam in the s. part, and a gravelly loam in the n. Dundee, (p. v.,) incorp. June 26, 1848, is situated on Big Stream, in the w. part; contains 4 churches, the Dundee Academy, a bank, and a newspaper office. Pop. 732. Eddytown (p. v.) contains a church and a seminary.⁴ Pop. 123. Rock Stream (p. v.) contains 25 houses, and Starkey (p. v.) 20. Big Stream Point (p. o.) and Shermans Corners are hamlets. Settlement begun in 1800.⁵ Rev. Mr. Clarke conducted the first religious services, in 1808. There are 7 churches in town.⁶

TORREY⁷—was formed from Benton and Milo, Nov. 14, 1851. It lies upon the e. border of the co., on the shore of Seneca Lake. Its surface consists of a slope rising from the lake to the w. borders, to an elevation of 400 to 500 ft. Crooked Lake Outlet flows through a deep, narrow, and rocky valley. Its whole fall from Crooked to Seneca Lake is 271 ft. The soil on the lake shore is clayey, and in the center and w. a sandy and gravelly loam. West Dresden⁸ (p. v.) is located on Seneca Lake, at the terminus of Crooked Lake Canal. It is a landing for the Seneca Lake steamers. Pop. 365. The town was settled by the followers of Jemima Wilkinson, mostly from New England, in 1788.⁹ Jemima was the first preacher. There are now 2 churches in town; Presb. and M. E.

¹ Ronse Perry, and Benj., Jesse and Joshua Brown came with the Potters and settled in the e. part of the town. They were followed by Elias Gilbert, Jabez French, Abram, Isaac, and Jacob Lane, Francis and Peleg Briggs, jr., Edward Craft, Amaziah Keyes, M. Sheffield, David Southerland, Nathao and Calvio Loomis, Abial Thomas, and George Green. The first birth was that of Josiah Briggs; the first marriage, that of Amaziah Keyes and a daughter of Major C. Craft, in 1795; and the first death, that of James Lewis, in 1796. Aroold Potter built the first saw and grist mill, in 1792. The first public house was opened in 1792, by Elias Gilbert, and the first store in 1801, by John Griffin.

ST. LAWRENCE COUNTY.

This county was formed from Clinton and parts of Montgomery and Herkimer, March 3, 1802.¹ It contains an area of — sq. mi., and is the largest co. in the State. It is centrally distant — mi. from Albany. The surface is broken by a series of parallel ridges extending in a n. e. and s. w. direction, and gradually declining in height from the summits, about 1000 ft. above tide, on the s. border, to the level of the banks of St. Lawrence. The highest summits, in the s. e., are about 2000 ft. above tide. The declivities of the ridges are usually gradual slopes, giving to the surface a rolling character, changing from gentle undulations along the river to a hilly and almost mountainous character in the s. e.

The principal streams are the Indian, Oswegatchie, Grass, Racket, St. Regis, and Deer Rivers.² These streams all have their rise upon the highlands, which occupy the center of the great northern wilderness, flow for a considerable distance in a n. w. direction, and most of them gradually bend toward the n. e. and finally traverse the greater part of the co. nearly parallel to the St. Lawrence. They all are frequently interrupted by rapids and cascades in their upper and middle course, but as they approach the St. Lawrence they become sluggish; and most of them are navigable for short distances from their mouths.³ The southern and central parts of the co. are thus abundantly supplied with water-power. In the s. part are numerous small lakes, the principal of which is Cranberry Lake. Long Lake, the largest body of water in the co., lies along the course of Indian River, near its junction with the Oswegatchie.

The geological formation of the co. is very simple. The whole central and southern portions are underlaid by the primitive formation, consisting of gneiss and white limestone.⁴ The northern extremity of this formation may be readily traced, by a line commencing upon the border of Jefferson co., about 2 mi. w. of the Ox Bow, thence extending northerly to near the center of the s. shore of Black Lake, thence bending toward the e., and extending to the e. border of the co. on the n. line of Hopkinton. A belt of country 5 to 10 mi. wide, n. of the primitive region and parallel to it, is underlaid by Potsdam sandstone; and the remainder of the co., comprising a belt 3 to 20 mi. wide bordering upon the St. Lawrence, is underlaid by the calciferous sandrock. The primitive portion of the co. is generally elevated and considerably broken. Its soil is light and sandy; and in some parts are extensive sand plains, entirely unfit for agricultural purposes. A considerable portion of the co. is covered with drift deposits, which go far to neutralize the effect of the underlying rock upon the character of the soil. In this region the intervalles along the streams are usually fertile; but the whole is best adapted to grazing. Magnetic iron ores abound in the s. part; but they have never been examined or worked to any considerable extent, owing to their remoteness from settlements.⁵ In Rossie rich veins of lead have been found and extensively worked,⁶ and the rich specular iron ore found along the w. border of the co. and in the adjacent portions of Jefferson, lies between the gneiss and sandstone.⁷ The sandstone region is level or gently undulating, broken in some places by disrupted masses of the underlying rock. In this region are numerous quarries, from which are obtained sheets of sandstone of 2 inches to a foot in thickness and of almost any desirable size. This stone acquires hardness by exposure and is indestructible by atmospheric agencies. The soil in this region is usually thin, but fertile, and is derived principally from drift. The calciferous sandstone region commences as a narrow strip on the St. Lawrence, in the n. part of Hammond, and continually widens to the e. border of the co. The soil, consisting of drift and marine clay, is usually very productive.

¹ This co. included the "Ten Towns," and Great Tracts Nos. II and III of Macomb's Purchase were provisionally annexed, and now form part of the co.

are liable to a sudden reversal of their currents near their mouths, from the damming up of that stream by ice: the streams in consequence overflow the lowlands, making the maintenance of fences and bridges impossible.

⁵ The Clifton Mine in Pierrepont has furnished 1,500 tons of iron.

⁷ In the town of Pierrepont a substance used for red paint has been found in the same relative geological position.

Dairying and stock raising are the branches of agriculture most extensively pursued.¹ Grain is also cultivated to some extent.² Fruits are not extensively cultivated. Manufactures, consisting of iron,³ castings, lead,⁴ lumber,⁵ and articles of wood,⁶ are carried on. Commerce to some extent is carried on by means of the St. Lawrence and the various railways.

The chief works of internal improvement in the co. are the Northern R. R., extending from Ogdensburgh to Rouses Point, on Lake Champlain;⁷ the Potsdam & Watertown R. R.,⁸ forming a connection with the N. R. R. on the n. and with the W. & R. R. R. and N. Y. Central on the s. Improvements have been made by the State in the navigation of several of the rivers, for the purpose of floating down logs from the s. forests.⁹ Daily lines of steamboats connect Ogdensburgh and other points on the river with Montreal and with the various ports on Lake Ontario.

The county seat is located at the village of Canton,¹⁰ on the P. & W. R. R., 18 mi. s. e. of Ogdensburgh. The courthouse, jail,¹¹ and clerk's office are in separate buildings, situated adjacent to each other. The co. poorhouse is situated on a farm of 130 acres 1 mi. w. of Canton Village.¹²

Six newspapers are now published in the co.; 3 at Ogdensburgh, 2 at Potsdam, and 1 at Canton.¹³

⁸ Opened through the co. Aug. 23, 1855.

⁹ These improvements have been made on the Indian, Oswegatchie, Racket, and Grass Rivers.

The St. Lawrence Gazette was begun in 1815 by D. R. Strachan and P. B. Fairchild. In 1830 it was bought by Preston King, and united with

The St. Lawrence Republican, removed to this place from Canton, and continued by him till 1833. It was afterward published by Hitchcock, Tillotson & Stillwell, and is now published by James & Hopkins.

The Northern Light was begun July 7, 1831, by W. B. Rogers, as an anti-masonic organ. In 1834 A. B. James became its publisher, and changed it to

The Times; and at the end of the 4th volume it was enlarged, and called

The Ogdensburgh Times. In 1837 Dr. A. Tyler became associated with James, and the title was changed to

The Times and Advertiser. In March, 1844, it was transferred to H. G. Foote and S. B. Seelye, and changed to

The Frontier Sentinel. In June, 1847, Mr. Foote changed it to The Ogdensburgh Sentinel, under which name it was published by Stillman Foote until 1858, when it merged in the St. Lawrence Republican.

The Meteorological Register was commenced, and a few numbers issued, in 1839; edited by Jas. H. Coffin, now Vice-Pres. of Lafayette Coll., Easton, Peoa.

The Ogdensburgh Forum was begun April 24, 1848, by A. Tylor, and discontinued in 1851.

The Daily Sentinel was started April 14, 1848, by S. Foote, and published for 5 months.

The St. Lawrence Budget, a small semi-mo. advertising sheet, was issued from The Sentinel office in 1850.

The Daily Morning News was begun in March, 1852, by Wm. N. Oswell, publisher, and Fayette Robinson, editor.

The Weekly News was issued from the same office in Sept. 1852.

Both were discontinued in the Dec. following.

The St. Lawrence American was begun March 1, 1855, by Wm. Yeaton and E. M. Holbrook, and continued 3 years.

The Boy's Daily Journal was begun May 1, 1855, by H. R. James, J. W. Hopkins, and C. Foster. As lads belonged to the Ogdensburgh Academy, they had previously issued the Morning Glory and Young America. In 1857 Foster withdrew, and the name was changed to

The Daily Journal; the paper is still issued.

The Weekly Journal is made up from the daily. Neither of the publishers is of age (1858.)

The St. Lawrence Democrat was commenced at Canton in the fall of 1855 by H. C. Simpson; and was afterward continued at that place by John F. Ames. It is published by Abbott & O'Brien.

At Potsdam the following have been issued:—

The Potsdam Gazette was begun Jan. 13, 1816, by F. C. Powell, and continued till April, 1823.

The Potsdam American was commenced by F. C. Powell in Jan. 1824, from the old Gazette press, and was continued by Powell & Reddington till April, 1829. In May of the same year it was revived as

The Herald, and published as an anti-masonic organ till Aug.

The St. Lawrence Republican was begun in 1826 by W. H. Wyma, and removed to Canton in 1827.

The Day Star was published 6 months in 1827 by Jonathan Wallace.

The Patriot was commenced in April, 183-, by Wm. Hughes, and published one year.

The Northern Cabinet was removed from Canton in 1845; and from the same office was issued

The Repository in 1846, semi-mo., made up of the literary matter of The Cabinet. This latter was sold to Wm. L. Knowles, and changed to

The St. Lawrence Mercury in 1848. W. H. Wallace became proprietor in 1850; and H. C. Fay in 1851, who changed it to

The St. Lawrence Journal. It was continued till July, 1852, when it was united with The Courier.

The Potsdam Courier was begun in 1851 by V. Harrington, and continued till July, 1852, when it was united with The Journal, and issued as

The Potsdam Courier and Journal was removed to Canton in 1859, and is now published by H. C. Fay & Brother.

The Philomathean was begun in 1852, and a few numbers were issued by students of the St. Lawrence Academy.

The Elementary Republican, was begun in 1852, and a few numbers issued from The Journal office.

The Northern Freeman, removed from Gouverneur in 1856, is still published by Duty & Baker.

The Evangelical Herald, mo., was begun in 1856 by Jos. A. Livingston. Printed part of the time at Northfield, Vt. Now published at Boston and Potsdam.

At Canton the following have been published:—

The Canton Advertiser and St. Lawrence Republican, removed from Potsdam in 1827, was published here by Preston King till 1830, when it was removed to Ogdensburgh.

The Northern Telegraph was begun in 1832 by C. C. Bill. It was soon sold to Orlando Squires, and changed to

The Canton Democrat, and continued a short time.

The Luminary of the North, begun in July, 1834, was published a short time.

The St. Lawrence Democrat was begun in Sept. 1840, by E. A. Barber, and continued 2 years.

The Northern Cabinet and Literary Repository, semi-mo., was begun Jan. 2, 1843, by Chas. Boynton, and in 1845 removed to Potsdam.

The first white settlement in this co. was made by Francis Picquet, a French Sulpitian, who established an Indian mission at the mouth of the Oswegatchie in 1749 and styled it "La Presentation."¹ In 1759 the first island below Ogdensburgh, 3 mi. down the St. Lawrence, was taken possession of by the French and strongly fortified.² It was named Fort Levi; and here the last French resistance was made against the English, in 1760. During the Revolution it was the rendezvous of scalping parties of Tories and Indians, who harassed the frontier settlements on the Mohawk and Hudson. Two expeditions were fitted out against this place during the Revolution; but the English held possession of the fort at Oswegatchie until 1796, when it was surrendered under the provisions of Jay's Treaty.³ The Oswegatchies collected by Picquet were removed, in 1793, from the vicinity of Johnstown, U. C., to a point opposite, on the s. shore, known as Indian Point. In 1807 they removed to St. Regis and elsewhere.⁴

The co. includes the tract known as the "Ten Towns,"⁵ Tract No. II,⁶ of Macomb's Purchase, containing 821,879 acres, Tract No. III,⁷ of the same purchase, containing 640,000 acres,⁸ a small portion located by Revolutionary land warrants,⁹ and the islands in the St. Lawrence.¹⁰ The first settlement under State authority was made at Ogdensburgh, in 1796, by Nathan Ford, agent of Samuel Ogden. Before 1800, small beginnings had been made at Lisbon, Madrid, and Massena. The "Ten Towns" were opened for settlement, under the original purchasers, within the next 5 years, and the adjacent parts of the Macomb Purchase soon after. At the commencement of the War of 1812 there were about 8,000 inhabitants in the co., thinly scattered over nearly the whole territory now settled. Great alarm was felt along the whole frontier, and many families left the river towns. It soon became the theater of stirring military events, and various expeditions were planned and attacks made on both sides of the border.¹¹

At the close of the war the co. rapidly filled up with an immigration chiefly from Vt. and the other New England States. The completion of the Erie Canal checked the growth of the co. by opening to emigration the more fertile lands of the West. The price of wild lands greatly fell, and many visions of immense wealth were blighted. For the last twenty years a steady and healthy improvement has been going on, which has been greatly increased by the lines of railroad completed through it.¹² In 1837-40 the whole frontier was greatly excited by the "Patriot

The Inquirer and Tariff Advocate, a campaign paper, was issued from The Cabinet press in 1844 by Chas. Boynton.

The Canton Weekly Citizen was begun Jan. 1, 1852, by J. S. Saragant, and continued 4 weeks.

The Canton Independent was removed from Madrid in 1853, and published by O. L. Ray. It was soon discontinued.

The St. Lawrence Plain Dealer was begun in 1855 by Goodrich & Remington; it is now published by S. P. Remington.

Young America is now published by C. W. Ames.

The other papers in the co. have been—

The Northern New Yorker, begun April 2, 1849, at Gouverneur, by Wm. Goodrich and M. F. Wilson; and issued a little more than one year.

The St. Lawrence Advertiser was begun in 1850, at Gouverneur, and a few numbers issued.

The Laborer was commenced in July, 1852, at Gouverneur, by M. Mitchell. It was succeeded by

The St. Lawrence Free Press, begun in 1853 by J. J. Emmes, and afterward published by G. K. Lyman. It was removed to Ogdensburgh in the fall of 1854 and united with The Sentinel.

The Progressive Age was begun in June, 1855, at Gouverneur, by G. D. Greenfield. It was removed to Potsdam in 1856, and changed to The Northern Freeman.

The True Democrat was begun in May, 1850, at Madrid, by M. F. Wilson and O. L. Ray. In its 2d year it became

The Columbian Independent, was continued 1 yr., when it was removed to Canton and changed to the Canton Independent.

² This island was called by the Indians "O-ra-co-nen-ton," and by the French "Ile Royal." It is now called Chimney Island, from the ruins still visible.

³ Upon the approach of Lord Amherst in 1760, the fort at the mouth of the Oswegatchie was abandoned. The island was invested on the 18th of Aug. Upon Gallop Island the English found a number of scalps, which so exasperated them that they burned the chapel and houses, the ruins of which are still visible. The batteries opened on the 23d, and on the 25th the place, under Pouchot, surrendered. The English named the fortress, Fort Frederick Augustus. On their voyage down the river from this place to Montreal, the English lost in the rapids 46 bateaux, 17 whaleboats, and 84 men. The island was occupied but a short time, and the works soon fell into ruins.—Knox's

⁴ These Indians claimed large tracts of land and leased them to parties from Canada, who cut off the most valuable timber and committed other wasteful depredations.

⁷ The original townships of this tract were named as follows:—1. Hammond; 2. Somerville; 3. De Witt; 4. Fitz William; 5. Ballybeen; 6. Clara; 7. Killarney; 8. Edwards; 9. Saralshurgh; 10. Clifton; 11. Porttarry; 12. Scriba; 13. Chaumont; 14. Bloomfield; 15. Emilyville.

⁸ These tracts were conveyed to Dan'l McCormack by patent in 1795-98.

¹⁰ The islands were sold in 1823.

¹¹ A regiment of militia was stationed at Ogdensburgh during the summer of 1812. In July, 1812, a fleet of 6 schooners—caught at Ogdensburgh by the war—attempted to reach the lake, but were intercepted: 2 were burned, and the rest hastened back. On the last day of July a bloodless engagement took place between the American schooner, Julia, and the British vessels, Earl of Moira and Duke of Gloucester. In Sept. an attack was made upon a number of bateaux at Toussaint Island, opposite Lisbon, in which the Americans lost one and the British several men. On the 2d of Oct. the British made a show of attacking Ogdensburgh, and on the 4th made a real attack, but were repulsed, with the loss of a gunboat and 2 men killed. In Jan. the Americans surprised and captured Brockville, liberated several prisoners, paroled 50 of the citizens, and took a quantity of stores. On the 22d of Feb. the British, in retaliation, captured Ogdensburgh, carried away the cannon and stores, and paroled a large number of citizens, who were afterward exchanged for those of Brockville. Late in 1813 Gen. Wilkinson's expedition passed down the St. Lawrence, and suffered a disastrous defeat at Chryslers Field, opposite Louville. The British followed the retreating Americans and landed at Hamilton, (Waddington).—Lough's Hist. St. Lau. & Frank. Cos.

¹² The lands in the co. have doubled in value by the completion of the railroads.

War." The battle of Windmill Point, the most memorable event of that ill-concerted movement, was fought within sight of Ogdensburgh, in Nov. 1838.¹ The U. S. Collection Dist. of Oswegatchie was established March 2, 1811, and embraces the whole co. Its chief office is at Ogdensburgh, with subordinate offices at each of the river towns.

BRASHER²—was formed from Massena, April 21, 1825. A part of Lawrence was taken off in 1828. It lies on the s. border of the co., n. of the center. Its surface is generally level, with gentle undulations in the w. part. The principal streams are St. Regis and Deer Rivers and Trout Brook. The soil in the w. part is stony and in parts sandy; in the s. e. it is light and sandy; and in the n. it is a clay loam and very productive. Bog iron ore is obtained abundantly in the e. part, in the range where the sand rests upon the clay deposits. Brasher Falls³ (p. v.) is a manufacturing village upon the St. Regis, in the s. w. corner of the town, 1 mi. below the r. r. station. Pop. 257. Helena⁴ (p. v.) is situated at the mouth of Deer River, and has a limited amount of water-power. Pop. 100. Brasher Iron Works, (p. o.), 2½ mi. above Helena, on Deer River, is the seat of an important furnace. Brasher Center is a hamlet on the St. Regis River. The first improvement in town (at Helena) was under the agency of Russell Atwater, in 1817. Stillman Fuller built the furnace at Brasher Iron Works in 1825.⁵ The first settlement at Brasher Falls was made in 1826. In 1839 C. T. Hulburt purchased 600 acres, including the village site of Brasher Falls, and in 1841 made the first considerable improvement. On the 26th of May, 1857, a fire in the woods ravaged this town, and destroyed the furnace and nearly the whole village at the "Iron Works."⁶ The census reports 6 churches in town.⁷

CANTON⁸—was formed from Lisbon, March 28, 1805. It occupies a nearly central position in the co. Its surface is level or gently undulating. Grass River, flowing through the center, and the Oswegatchie, flowing through the n. w. corner, are the principal streams.⁹ It is underlaid by white limestone and gneiss in the s., and by Potsdam sandstone in the central and n. parts. The soil is a deep, fertile, gravelly loam. Iron pyrites, from which copperas (sulphate of iron) has been manufactured, is found in abundance near High Falls, on Grass River.¹⁰ Canton,¹¹ (p. v.) the county seat, is pleasantly situated on Grass River, a little e. of the center of the town. It is an important station on the P. & W. R. R. It has a number of manufactures,¹² and is the seat of the Canton Academy, founded in 1831, and of the St. Lawrence University,¹³ an institution founded under the auspices of the Universalist denomination in 1856. Pop. 1,029. Morley¹⁴ (p. v.) is situated on Grass River, near the n. border of the town. Pop. 350. Rensselaer Falls¹⁵ (p. v.) is a small village on the Oswegatchie, in the n. w. corner of the town. It was formerly the seat of an iron forge. Crarys Mills (p. o.) is a hamlet on the line of Potsdam. The first settlement was made in 1800, by Dan'l Harrington, on the site of the Agricultural Fair Grounds in Canton Village. The first permanent settler was Stillman Foote, who bought a mile square where the village now stands, and removed thither in 1801, accompanied by several men. In 1802 he built a mill, and the town began to be rapidly settled.¹⁶ Religious meetings were held as early as 1804. The first church (Presb.) was formed under the Rev. Amos Pettingill, in 1807.¹⁷

³ Mills, a fork and hoe factory, and an agricultural implement factory, are located here.

⁴ Named from Helen, daughter of Joseph Pitcairn, of New York, former owner of a large part of the town.

⁸ It embraces No. 6 of the "Ten Towns," and is 10 mi. sq.

This canal was formerly 3 to 20 rods wide, and was navigable for small boats in high water. It flowed toward the w., and overflowed an alluvial flat of 4500 acres. To reclaim this, both ends of the canal have been closed, and a drain dug along the Oswegatchie to below Rensselaer Falls.

¹² Consisting of lumber, shingles, sash, wagons, flour, and leather.

¹⁴ Formerly "Long Rapids." Named Morley from a relative of the Harrison family. It contains several sawmills, a sash factory, and tannery.

¹⁶ Daniel W. Church, the pioneer millwright of the co., erected the first mill here, for S. Foote, in 1801. The summer of that year was very eckly; and in May the father of S. Foote died of the smallpox and was buried in a bark coffin. Wm. Berker taught the first school, in 1804. The first birth was a daughter of L. Johnson.

The late Gov. Silas Wright settled in Canton Village as a lawyer in 1819, and continued to reside here until his death, Aug. 27, 1847.

COLTON¹—was formed from Parishville, April 12, 1843. A small part was annexed from Parishville in 1851. It is a long, narrow town, lying s. e. of the center of the co. and extending to Hamilton co. on the s. Its surface is broken and hilly; and it is nearly all covered with forest. It is crossed by the Racket, Grass, and Oswegatchie Rivers. In the central and s. parts are numerous small lakes, the principal of which is Cranberry Lake. The extreme n. part only is inhabited. The principal business is lumbering. Colton (p. v.) is an important lumber station upon Racket River, near the n. w. corner of the town. Several extensive gang sawmills were erected here in 1850-52; but the business has been partially suspended. An extensive tannery for the manufacture of sole-leather was built here in 1857.² Pop. 379. South Colton is a p. o. at Three Falls. The first settlement was begun in 1824, at Colton Village.³ There are a M. E. and a Univ. church in town, both built in 1852.

DE KALB⁴—was formed from Oswegatchie, Feb. 21, 1806. A part of De Peyster was taken off in 1825, and a part of Hermon in 1830. It lies on the Oswegatchie, w. of the center of the co. Its surface consists of broken ridges of white limestone and gneiss with narrow valleys between them. The soil is excellent and is generally under a good state of cultivation. De Kalb⁵ (p. v.) is situated on the Oswegatchie, near the center of the town. Pop. 120. Richville⁶ (p. v.) is situated on the Oswegatchie, in the s. w. corner of the town. Pop. 250. East De Kalb is a p. o. and station on the P. & W. R. R. The first settlement was made in 1803, under Judge William Cooper, of Cooperstown, as agent. The first settlers were principally from Otsego co. There are 5 churches in town.⁷

DE PEYSTER⁸—was formed from Oswegatchie and De Kalb, March 24, 1825. It lies on the s. shore of Black Lake, n. w. of the center of the co. Its surface is broken in the s. by the parallel primitive ridges, and is level in the n. The principal streams are the Oswegatchie, on the n. border, and Beaver Creek, on the s. Moon Lake lies in the s. part. The soil along the lake is very fertile, in the center of average fertility, and in the s. it is light and sandy. The "Old State Road," the first traveled route through this part of the co., extended through this town. De Peyster Corners (De Peyster p. o.) is a small village. Edenton is a p. o. The first settlement was made in the fall of 1802, by Sam'l Bristol and others.⁹ The census reports 2 churches; a M. E. and a Cong.

EDWARDS¹⁰—was formed from Fowler, April 7, 1827. A part of Hermon was taken off in 1830, and a part was annexed from Hermon in 1850. It lies on the Oswegatchie, s. w. of the center of the co. Its surface consists of ridges of the primitive formation and the narrow valleys between them. The soil is generally a light, sandy loam, and in the valleys is very productive; but the town is best adapted to grazing. A large number of minerals are found among the primitive rocks.¹¹ Edwards (p. v.) is situated on the Oswegatchie. Pop. 350. South Edwards¹² (p. v.) contains a grist and saw mill and several mechanic shops. The first settlement commenced along the St. Lawrence Turnpike, in 1812.¹³ Several Scotch families came into town in 1817. There are 5 churches in town.¹⁴

FINE¹⁵—was formed from Russell and Pierrepont, March 27, 1844. It lies in the extreme s.

² This establishment employs about 25 men.

³ Among the first settlers were Asahel Lyman, Abel Brown, Wm. Bullard, Horace Garfield, and Sam'l Partridge. Miss Young taught the first school, in 1826. The first death was that of a child of Jas. Brown, in 1829.

⁴ Named in honor of Baron De Kalb. It originally embraced No. 7 of the "Ten Towns."

⁵ Originally named "Williamstown."

⁶ About 30 families came in the first year. Salmon Rich, Jona. Haskins, and Sol. Pratt were among the first settlers of Richville, in 1804. The first child born was Jehiel Dimick; the first marriage, that of Elieha Cook and Lotta Willey; and the first death, that of George Cowdrey. Bela Willis taught the first school at De Kalb, and Jos. Kneeland at Richville. Wm. Cooper built the first hotel, in 1808, and the first mill, at Coopers Falls, in 1804.

proprietor. Mr. De P. gave the town $300 to assist in building a union church and townhouse; and he also caused a bell to be cast, with an appropriate inscription for its use.

¹⁰ Among these are iron ore, mica, Keneselaerite, serpentine, and tourmaline.

¹¹ Locally known as "Shawville," from Elijah Shaw, who opened the first store in 1825. Freemansbush, in the e. part, was the seat of a large furnace destroyed by fire.

part of the co. Its surface is elevated and broken, and its soil is a moderately fertile, gravelly loam. It is drained by the Oswegatchie and its branches. It is principally a wilderness, the settlements being confined to the n. part. Iron ore is found in town. Fine is a p. o. in the n. There is no village in town. The first clearing was made in 1823, by Elias Teall.¹

FOWLER²—was formed from Rossie and Russell, April 15, 1816. The townships of Edwards and Fitz William (now a part of Hermon) were annexed from Russell in 1818. Edwards was taken off in 1827, a part of Hermon in 1830, and Pitcairn in 1836. It lies upon the Oswegatchie, in the southwesterly part of the co. Its surface is much broken by ridges of gneiss. It is drained by the Oswegatchie and its branches. Silver Lake lies s. of the center of the town. The soil along the streams is a fertile loam, in the n. w. a clayey loam, and in the e. a light sand. Several valuable minerals are found in town.³ Halesborough, on the Oswegatchie, and Little York (Fowler p. o.) are small villages. Fullerville (Fullerville Iron Works p. o.) is the seat of an extensive manufacture of iron.⁴ West Fowler (is in Rossie) and Shingle Creek are p. offices. The first settlements were made by Brig. Gen. Halle, at Halesborough, in 1807,⁵ and by Sam'l B. Sprague, at Little York, in 1811. The town did not begin to be settled rapidly until after 1820. The census reports 4 churches in town.⁶

GOVERNEUR⁷—was formed from Oswegatchie, April 5, 1810. A part of Macomb was taken off in 1841. It lies in the w. part of the co. Its surface is generally level, but somewhat broken in the n. by low ridges of white limestone. It is drained by the Oswegatchie, which twice flows across the town. The town abounds in interesting minerals.⁸ The soil is sandy in a few places, but is chiefly clay and loam, and is highly productive. The Kearney Iron Mine, in the s. corner, has furnished an immense quantity of ore. Gouverneur (p. v.) was incorp. Dec. 7, 1847. Pop. 785. It is the seat of a flourishing academy,⁹ and has a considerable local trade and the only p. o. in town. Riverside Cemetery is beautifully located on the opposite bank of the Oswegatchie, e. of the village. It was consecrated June 23, 1858. It is a station upon the P. & W. R. R. The first settlement was made in the summer of 1805, by Dr. Richard Townsend, agent of Gouverneur Morris, the proprietor.¹⁰ The first church (Bap.) was formed in 1810.¹¹

HAMMOND¹²—was formed from Rossie and Morristown, March 30, 1827. A part was annexed to Macomb in 1842, and a part to Rossie in 1844. It lies upon the St. Lawrence, in the extreme w. part of the co., and includes a portion of The Thousand Islands. The surface is generally level, but broken upon its n. and s. borders by low primary ridges. A level terrace of sandstone, with its edge a continuous and regular mural wall, extends from the n. shore of Black Lake through the center of the town into Jefferson co. Black Brook flows through a stagnant swamp, which borders upon this sandstone terrace. Its soil is generally a deep, fertile loam. Hammond, (p. v.), on the Rossie Plank Road; South Hammond, on the "Old Military Road;" and Oak Point,¹³ (p. v.), a landing on the St. Lawrence, are small villages. Slight improvements began here in 1812; but settlements did not increase until 1818-21, when a number of Scotch families located just w. of the present site of Hammond Village.¹⁴ There are 4 churches in town.¹⁵ prietor. It embraces "Scriba," "Bloomfield," "Emilyville," and the south half of "Saratburgh," or Nos. 12, 14, 15, and 9 of Great Tract No. III, Macomb's Purchase.

¹ Jas. C. Halle built a rude mill in 1828. The settlement was soon after abandoned, but renewed in Feb. 1834, by Amasa J. Browe.

² Named from Theodocius Fowler, of New York, former proprietor. It embraces "Killbenny," or No. 7 of Great Tract No. III, Macomb's Purchase.

³ Iron ore, white marble, sulphates of lead, copper, and zinc, asbestos, Rensselaerite, mica, and chalcodyne.

⁴ This village contains a furnace, 2 forges, and several mills.

⁶ Univ. Bap., F. W. Bap., and M. E.

⁷ Named from Gouverneur Morris, the proprietor of most of the town. It originally embraced the township of "Cumbray," or No. 8 of the "Ten Towns."

it was received under the patronage of the M. E. Black River Conference. The building was burned in 1839, and a new stone edifice erected the next year. The name was changed to the Gouverneur Wesleyan Seminary April 25, 1840. It is a flourishing institution.

¹⁰ The first party of settlers came through the wilderness from the head of Lake George, guided by a compass. They were seven days on the journey. Among the settlers in 1806 were Pardon Babcock, Willard Smith, Eleazer Nichols, and Isaac Austin, who all occupied a small shanty in common. In 1810 there were 50 families in town. A blockhouse was built in 1812, near where the store of Harvey D. Smith now stands. Miss E. S. Sackett taught the first school, in the first shanty; Israel Porter kept the first inn, and John Brown the first store, in 1808. The first religious services were held in 1806, by missionaries. The first child born was Allen Smith; the first marriage, that of Meded Cole and Miss Patterson; and the first death, that of Emily Porter.

¹³ Cross-over-Island Lighthouse was built just above this place in 1847.

HERMON¹—was formed from Edwards and De Kalb, April 17, 1830, and named "Depau." The name was changed Feb. 28, 1834, and a part was annexed to Edwards in 1850. It lies in the primitive region, s. w. of the center of the co. The surface is generally rolling, but broken and hilly in the s. part. Elm and Cedar Creeks are the principal streams. Trout and Clear Lakes lie near the s. border, and Gardners Pond near the center of the town. The soil is generally a sandy loam interspersed with tracts of sand, and is best adapted to grazing. Hermon (p. v.) is situated on Elm Creek, in the n. e. corner of the town. Pop. 346. Marshville is a hamlet, 1 mi. s. of Hermon. The first settlement was made by Jas. Taylor, and a few others who came soon after him, previous to 1812.² The town did not begin to be settled rapidly until 1822-25. Rev. Mr. Wright was the first preacher.³

HOPKINTON⁴—was formed from Massena, March 2, 1805. Russell was taken off in 1807, Parishville in 1818, and a part of Lawrence in 1828. It lies along the e. border of the co., and is the second largest town in the State. Its surface is level in the n., but broken and hilly in the s. It is crossed by the St. Regis and Racket Rivers; and in the central and s. parts are several extensive lakes, the principal of which is Tupper's Lake, on the line of Franklin co. The whole town is a wilderness, except the extreme n. part and a small tract upon Tupper's Lake. The soil is a fertile loam in the n. part. Hopkinton (p. v.) contains about 20 houses. Nicholville is a small village on the line of Lawrence and mostly in the latter town. Fort Jackson, in the n. part, on St. Regis, is a hamlet of a dozen houses. The first settlement in town was made by Roswell Hopkins, in 1802.⁵ In 1814 a party of British, consisting of 30 men, under Maj. P. W. De Haven, visited this town and captured a large amount of flour belonging to the U. S., which was here stored in a barn.⁶ In the spring of 1858 a company consisting of 13 families located in the vicinity of Tupper's Lake, with the design of forming an agricultural settlement.⁷ The township of Mortlake, or No. 3 of Tract II, has been called "Atherton," but it has yet no legal organization. There are 4 religious societies in town.⁸

LAWRENCE⁹—was formed from Hopkinton and Brasher, April 21, 1828. It lies on the e. border of the co., n. of the center. The surface is very level, and the soil is a fertile, sandy loam underlaid by Potsdam sandstone. It is drained by St. Regis and Deer Rivers. Lawrenceville (p. v.) and North Lawrence (p. v.) are villages upon Deer River, each with a pop. of about 220. The latter is a station on the Northern R. R. Nicholville,¹⁰ (p. v.), on the line of Hopkinton, contains about 200 inhabitants. The first settlement began in 1806.¹¹ Since the completion of the r. r. this town has rapidly increased in population. The Quakers held the first meeting in 1808. There are 7 churches in town.¹²

LISBON—was formed March 6, 1801.¹³ Madrid and Oswegatchie were taken off in 1802, and Canton in 1805. It lies upon the St. Lawrence, n. w. of the center of the co. Its surface is level or gently undulating. It is drained by Great and Little Sucker Creeks, and several smaller streams. Its soil is a light but fertile loam underlaid by calciferous sandstone. The town includes Gallop¹⁴ Island in the river. Lisbon Center (p. o.) is a station on the Northern R. R., and contains about a dozen houses. Flackville¹⁵ (p. o.) is a hamlet, on the Ogdensburgh & Canton Road. Red Mills¹⁶ (Lisbon p. o.) is a hamlet, on the river, opposite Gallop Island. This town was the first one organized in the co. The first settlement was made by Wm. O'Neal, in 1799. Alex. J. Turner came in as agent in Feb. 1800.¹⁷ He was from Salem, N. Y., and induced many families

¹ Named from Scripture. It embraces "Fitz William," or No. 9 of Great Tract No. III, Macomb's Purchase, and parts of other townships.

² Among the early settlers were Geo. Davis, Philemon Stuart, Jas. Farr, Ariel Inman, and Rufus Hopkins. William D. Moore taught the first school, in 1817. The first death was that of Thos. Farr.

³ There are 3 churches in town: M. E., Bap., and Christian.

⁷ This township was purchased Oct. 28, 1858, by a company con-born, of Nashua, N. H., Elbridge G. Read and Wm. D. Beason, of Chelsea, Mass., and Moses A. Herrick, of Boston, for its lumber. This settlement was made under the auspices of this Company.

⁸ Cong. Bap., M. E., and F. W. Bap.

⁹ Named from Wm. Lawrence, of New York, proprietor. It embraces "Chesterfield," or No. 16 of Great Tract No. II, Macomb's Purchase.

¹⁰ Named from E. S. Nichols, an agent of the proprietors.

¹¹ Mr. Brewer, a sub-agent, came in as early as 1801; J. and S. Tyler, A. Saunders, A. Chandler, J. Allen, and J. and J. Pierce came in 1807. Ephraim Martin built the first sawmill, in 1809; Miss S. Tyler taught the first school, in 1810.

¹² 2 Cong., 2 M. E., 2 Bap., and F. W. Bap.

¹³ It originally contained the whole territory of the "Ten Towns." It now includes No. 5 of the "Ten Towns."

¹⁵ Named from John P. Flack, first p. m.

¹⁶ Named from the color of the mills erected by Daniel W. Church for the proprietor, Stephen Van Rensselaer, in 1804.

¹⁷ Among the first settlers were Peter Sharp, Peter Hinnon, John Thibault, Rauber Turner, Wm. Shaw, Lemuel Washburn, Wm.

to remove from Washington co. A fatal epidemic prevailed in town in 1813. In the fall of 1813 a small party of dragoons stopping at the village were surprised by the Canadians; one was shot, another wounded, and two or three were taken prisoners to Canada. There are 6 churches in town.¹

LOUISVILLE²—was formed from Massena, April 5, 1810. A part of Norfolk was taken off in 1823, and a part of the same town was annexed in 1844. It lies upon the St. Lawrence, in the n. e. part of the co. The surface is level. Grass River, the principal stream, flowing centrally through the town, affords a water-power at the village. The soil is a fertile, sandy loam, underlaid by calciferous sandstone. Louisville,³ (p. o.), on Grass River, and Louisville Landing, (p. o.) on the St. Lawrence, are hamlets. The water-power at the former place has been somewhat improved; and the latter place is a landing for the American line of steamers. The first settlement was made by Nahum Wilson and Aaron Allen, in 1800.⁴ The growth of the town was checked by the war; but it soon revived. There are 2 churches in town; M. E. and Union.

MACOMB⁵—was formed from Gouverneur and Morrystown, April 3, 1841. A small tract was annexed from Hammond in 1842. It lies upon the s. shore of Black Lake, in the w. part of the co. Its surface is broken by ridges of gneiss and white limestone parallel to the lake. Fish and Birch Creeks are the principal streams. Pleasant and Yellow or Hickeys Lakes are fine sheets of water, with rocky shores, in the central part of the town. The soil is a light, sandy loam. The ridges are often without vegetation, but the valleys are fertile. Several valuable minerals are found in town.⁶ Macomb, (p. o.), on the "Old State Road," and Popes Mills, (p. o.), on Fish Creek, are hamlets. The first settlements were made upon the "Old State Road," about 1805-06.⁷ Timothy Pope made the first improvement at Popes Mills, in 1816. There is 1 church (M. E.) in town.

MADRID⁸—was formed from Lisbon, March 3, 1802, and Potsdam was taken off in 1806. It lies upon the St. Lawrence, e. of the center of the co. The surface is level or gently undulating. It is watered by Grass River, and by Great and Little Sucker, Brandy, and Trout Brooks. Upon both the St. Lawrence and Grass Rivers are rapids, from which are derived an immense amount of water-power. The soil is a light, sandy loam, generally fertile. Waddington⁹ (p. v.) is situated upon the St. Lawrence, opposite Ogdens Island and the "Rapide Plat." The rapids at this place impede the river navigation, but furnish an abundance of water-power.¹⁰ The entire fall is 11 ft. Pop. 705. Columbia Village (Madrid p. o.) is situated at the falls of Grass River, 1 mi. from the r. r. station. It is a place of considerable business. Pop. 300. Chases Mills (p. o.) is a new settlement, upon Grass River, near the e. border of the town. The first settlement was made along the St. Lawrence, in 1798, under Joseph Edsall, agent of the proprietors.¹¹ In Jan., 1814, a party of Canadian militia, under Capt. Sherwood, crossed the St. Lawrence at Point Iroquois and marched to Columbia Village, pressed teams, and carried off a quantity of merchandise which had been captured upon bateaux on the preceding Oct. There are 9 churches in town.¹²

MASSENA¹³—was formed March 3, 1802. Hopkinton was taken off in 1805, Stockholm in 1806, Louisville in 1810, and Brasher in 1825. It lies upon the St. Lawrence, in the n. e. corner of the co. The surface is generally level or gently undulating. The principal streams are the Grass¹⁴ and Racket Rivers, which flow through the town in parallel channels 1 to 2 mi. apart. Its soil is a productive, gravelly and sandy loam. Massena (p. v.) is situated upon Grass River, at the lower falls. It has a limited amount of manufactures. Pop. 310. Massena Springs¹⁵

Briggs, and Hez. Pierce. The first birth was in the family of J. Tibbets, in 1800. Rev. Alex. Proudfit held the first meetings. Dr. Jos. W. Smith, the first physician in the co., settled here in 1803 and remained two years.

² It comprises the greater part of No. 1 of the "Ten Towns."

³ Locally known as "Millersville," from Rev. Levi Miller, of Turin, who came here as agent of McVickar, the proprietor, in 1823.

⁴ Among the early settlers were John Wilson, Lyman Bostwick, Elisha W. Barber, and Griffin Place. The first child born was a son of Nahum Wilson; and the first death, that of Philo Barber. Elisha Barber taught the first school, and N. Wilson kept the first inn.

⁵ Named from Alex. Macomb, the great land speculator.

⁶ Among these are lead, mica, copper pyrites, and blende. Stock companies have been engaged quite extensively in lead mining at Mineral Point, on Black Lake, and elsewhere.

⁸ It embraces No. 4 of the "Ten Towns," and is about 10 mi. sq.

⁹ Named from Joshua Waddington, proprietor. Formerly called "Hamilton." Inconn. April 26, 1839. A furnace, smelted in 1840. A tract of 1,135 acres on the shore opposite the island, together with the island and water-power, were conveyed in 1811 to Joshua Waddington and Thos. L. and David A. Ogden.

¹⁰ In 1808-11-15, acts were passed to improve the navigation at this place, and a lock was built for the passage of small boats.

¹³ Named from Marshal Massena, of the French army.

¹⁵ These springs are saline and sulphurous. Capt. John Polly built the first public house here, in 1822. A spacious brick hotel was erected in 1848, for the accommodation of those lies upon the Racket, about one mi. distant from Massena. Pop. 120. It is a favorite summer resort. Massena Center (p. v.) contains about 25 houses, and Racket River (p. v.) about 20. By the treaty of 1796, a mile square at the mouth of Grass River was reserved by the St. Regis Indians; and most of the other lands in the town were located on Revolutionary land warrants before the sale of the rest of the co. Before the treaty the Indians issued unauthorized leases to different parties; and hence arose much annoyance from conflicting claims.¹ The first improvements were made on Grass River, on land leased of the Indians, in 1792. The first settlements on Revolutionary grants were made in 1798, by Amos Lay and others.² In 1812 the U. S. Government erected barracks here, which were occupied 3 months by militia. In Sept. 1813, a party of Canadians burned the barracks and carried away several prisoners. There are 5 churches in town.³

MORRISTOWN⁴—was formed from Oswegatchie, March 27, 1821. A part of Hammond was taken off in 1827, and a part of Macomb in 1841. It lies between the lower end of Black Lake and the St. Lawrence. Its surface is gently undulating, rising from either side toward the center. Chipewewa Creek, flowing through the center, is the principal stream. The soil is a gravelly loam and generally fertile. Morristown (p. v.) is situated upon the St. Lawrence. Pop. 254. Edwardsville⁵ (p. o.) is a small village on Black Lake, at which point a ferry has been established. Brier Hill (p. o.) is a hamlet. David Ford—as agent of Gouverneur Morris, the proprietor—made the first settlement on the site of the village, in 1799.⁶ John K. Thurbur and Henry Ellenwood made the first improvement in the vicinity of Edwardsville, in 1810. In 1817–18 several English families located at a place still known as the “English Settlement.” There are 7 churches in town.⁷

NORFOLK—was formed from Louisville and Stockholm, April 9, 1823. A part was annexed to Louisville in 1844. Its surface is moderately uneven. Racket River, the principal stream, flows diagonally through near the center of the town, and affords a large amount of water-power, partially improved.⁸ The soil is generally fertile, resting upon drift deposits of gravel and marine clay, and all underlaid by calciferous sandstone. The e. part is sandy; and a swamp lies between the Racket and Grass Rivers. Norfolk (p. v.) is situated upon Racket River. Pop. about 200. It has manufactories of lumber, shingles, and articles of wood. Raymondville⁹ (p. o.) is a small village on the Racket, below Norfolk. The first settlement was made by Erastus Hall, in 1809, at Raymondville.¹⁰ The Racket was formerly navigated, to some extent, as far as this place. There are 4 churches in town.¹¹

OSWEGATCHIE¹²—was formed from Lisbon, March 3, 1802. De Kalb was taken off in 1806, Gouverneur in 1810, Morristown in 1821, and a part of De Peyster in 1825. The surface is level or gently undulating. Oswegatchie River, the principal stream, affords water-power at Heuvelton and at Ogdensburgh, which is available most of the year. The soil is a fine quality of gravelly loam, and is under a good state of cultivation. Ogdensburgh,¹³ (p. v.) situated upon the St. Lawrence, is one of the largest and most important villages in Northern New York. It is the w. terminus of the Northern R. R., and stands at the foot of sloop navigation upon the great lakes and St. Lawrence River, giving to it important commercial advantages. A limited amount of manufacturing is also carried on, chiefly on the w. side of the Oswegatchie. It contains the extensive depôts and buildings of the Northern R. R.,—among the finest in the co.,—an academy,¹⁴ a townhall,¹⁵ U. S. customhouse,¹⁶ and an armory.¹⁷ Pop. Jan. 1858, 7,308. Heuvel-

¹ Most of the valuable timber was stolen before settlement.

² Among the first settlers were Manri Victory, Calvin Plumley, Bliss Hoisington, Elijah Bailey, David Lyttle, Seth Read, and Leonard Herick. Gilbert Read taught the first school, in 1803. Amabel Foucher was a lessee of the first mill, under the Indians.

³ Named from Gouverneur Morris, principal proprietor. It originally embraced the township of “Elague,” or No. 9 of the “Ten Towns.”

⁴ Locally known as the “Narrows.” Named from Jonathan S. Edwards, the first postmaster. On early maps it was marked “Marysburgh.”

⁶ 2 M. E., Presh., Cong., Prot. E., Evang. Luth., and Union.

⁷ There is a dam 1 mi. from the R. R. station, near the s. w. corner of the town, another at Norfolk, and another at Raymondville.

⁸ Named from Benj. Raymond, the first agent for this town and Potsdam. First named “Racketon.”

⁹ Among the early settlers, who came in about 1810, were Ehen Judson, Martin Barney, J. W. Osborn, C. G. Stowe, and Milo

A furnace was built at the village in 1825, and supplied with bog ore. It was burned in 1844.

¹¹ M. E., Prot. E., and Presb., at Norfolk, and Presb. at Raymondville.

¹² Pronounced Os-weg-at-chee; named from the river. It embraces most of No. 8 of the “Ten Towns.”

¹⁵ By special act of 1858 a town hall was erected, at an expense of $10,000, on the corner of Washington and Franklin Sts.

ton¹ (p. v.) lies upon the Oswegatchie, 7 mi. above Ogdensburgh. It has a limited amount of manufactures. Pop. 300. Black Lake is a p. o., in the s. w. part of the town. The early history of the town has already been noticed.² The first improvement, after Ogdensburgh was abandoned by the British, was made in 1796, by Nathan Ford,³ and it soon became a place of commercial importance. The war checked the prosperity of the place, and after the return of peace business revived slowly. The opening of the Welland Canal and the completion of the Northern R. R. greatly increased the trade and added to the population of Ogdensburgh.⁴ The completion of the Grand Trunk Railway through Canada has in some measure checked its growth, by diverting business into other channels. The first religious meetings were held while it was a French, and afterward a British, post. The census reports 11 churches.⁵

PARISHVILLE⁶—was formed from Hopkinton, April 15, 1818. Colton was taken off in 1843, and another part of Parishville annexed to it in 1851. It lies upon St. Regis River, s. e. of the center of the co. Its surface is level in the n. and considerably broken in the s. The soil is a deep loam in the n., but in the s. is light and sandy. A large portion of the town is yet a wilderness. Parishville (p. v.) is situated upon the w. branch of St. Regis River. Pop. 236. It has a limited amount of manufactures.⁷ The first settlement was begun in 1810, by Daniel Hoard, as agent for the proprietors.⁸ During the war the settlement was greatly increased by immigrants from the frontier towns. The census reports 4 churches.⁹

PIERREPONT¹⁰—was formed from Russell, April 15, 1818. A part of Fine was taken off in 1844. It occupies a long, narrow strip s. of the center of the co. The surface is quite broken. The three branches of Grass River, e. branch of the Oswegatchie, and Racket River are the principal streams. The soil in the n. is well adapted to grazing, and that in the s. is light and sandy. Settlements are confined to the n. part. Magnetic iron ore and other valuable minerals are found in large quantities. Pierrepont (p. o.) is a small village upon the hills, near the center of No. 3. East Pierrepont¹¹ (p. v.) is situated on Racket River. Pop. about 100. Flavius Curtis settled upon the line of Canton in 1806-07. The principal settlement commenced upon the completion of the St. Lawrence Turnpike, in 1811-12.¹² There are 2 churches; M. E. and F. W. Bap.

PITCAIRN¹³—was formed from Fowler, March 29, 1836. It lies on the s. border of the co., w. of the center. Its surface is much broken by ridges, separated by swamps, lakes, and fertile intervals. The soil is light and sandy, with a few alluvial flats along the streams. Iron ore, marble, and lead are found in town. The Jay Iron Ore Bed has been worked; and unprofitable attempts have been made to work some lead mines. The town is thinly settled. Pitcairn and East Pitcairn are p. offices. Settlement was begun in 1824 by immigrants from Potsdam.¹⁴ There is no church in town.

POTSDAM¹⁵—was formed from Madrid, Feb. 21, 1806. It lies on Racket River, n. e. of the center of the co. Its surface is rolling; and its soil is a deep, rich loam. The streams are Racket River, affording a large amount of water-power, and Grass River, with a limited amount. Lumber and articles of wood are largely manufactured. There are extensive quarries of sandstone about the village.¹⁶ This is the leading agricultural town in the co., and every part is under improvement. Potsdam¹⁷ (p. v.) is located upon Racket River, near the center of the town. The river is here divided by islands and broken by rapids, and furnishes an extensive water-power. Pop. in 1st and 4th election districts, 2,123. It has a considerable amount of manufactures, and

⁴ A marine railway, constructed here in 1853, has been of great service to the interests of navigation.

⁵ 3 M. E., 2 Presb., Univ., Unitarian, Bap., Cong., Prot. E., and R. C.

⁶ Named from David and Geo. Parish, proprietors of No. 13. It embraces the most of "Catharineville" and "Wick," or Nos. 13 and 11 of Great Tract No. 11 of Macomb's Purchase.

⁷ The river here descends 125 ft. within a mi., furnishing an abundance of water-power.

⁸ Among the early settlers were Luks Brown, Isaac Tower, H. Shattuck, and Levi Sawyer, who came in about 1811. During this and the succeeding year the proprietors caused a road to be opened to Carthage, and mills, a distillery, hotel, and forge to be built. The first birth was in the family of Luke Brown, in 1812.

⁹ Cong., M. E., Wes. Meth., and Bap.

¹⁰ Named from Hezekiah B. Pierrepont, of Brooklyn, proprietor. It embraces the townships of "Chaumont," "Clifton," "Clare," and a part of "De Witt," or Nos. 13, 10, 6, and 3 of Great Tract No. 111, of Macomb's Purchase.

¹¹ Sometimes called "Coxes Mills," from Gardner Cox, who settled here and built mills in 1817-22. It has a large gang sawmill and a starch factory.

¹² Among the early settlers were David Deanton, Pet. R. Leonard, Jos. Mathews, and Ebenezer Tupper.

¹³ Named from Joseph Pitcairn, proprietor. It embraces the township of "Portferry," or No. 11 of Great Tract No. 111, Macomb's Purchase.

¹⁵ It embraces No. 3 of the "Ten Towns."

is the seat of an academy.¹ It also contains a bank and 2 printing offices. Racketville (North Potsdam p. o.) lies on Racket River, in the n. corner of the town. Pop. about 150. It has an extensive water-power, and is a station upon the Northern R. R. Bucks Bridge² is a hamlet upon Grass River, in the w. part of the town. It has a water-power. West Potsdam (p. o.) is a small village in the midst of an agricultural region. The first settlement commenced in 1803, under Benj. Raymond, agent for the proprietor, and the town rapidly filled up by immigrants from Vt.³ In Nov. 1804, Wm. Bullard took up 2,427 acres of land, and formed an association, styled "The Union," holding the land in common. The association broke up in 2 or 3 years.⁴ There are 10 churches in town.⁵

ROSSIE⁶—was formed from Russell, Jan. 27, 1813. A part of Fowler was taken off in 1816, and a part of Hammond in 1827. A part of Hammond was annexed in 1844. It lies on the s. w. border of the co. Its surface is level in the e., and broken by ledges of gneiss, limestone, and sandstone in the remaining parts. It is drained by Oswegatchie and Indian Rivers. Its soil is like that of the adjoining towns. Between the gneiss and limestone, near Indian River, are extensive and valuable mines of lead and iron,⁷ and a great variety of valuable minerals.⁸ Rossie (p. v.) is situated on Indian River, at the head of the Black Lake navigation. Pop. 214. It owes its importance to its iron manufacture, commenced here in 1813. Churchs Mills,⁹ (Wegatchie p. o.), situated on the Oswegatchie, is the seat of a furnace. Pop. about 170. Somerville (p. o.) contains 20 houses. Spring Creek is a p. o., in the s. e. corner. The first settlement was made in 1807.¹⁰ A number of Scotch families came in about 1810. A blockhouse was built near Somerville in 1812. There are 2 churches in town; Univ. and M. E.

RUSSELL¹¹—was formed from Hopkinton, March 27, 1807. Rossie was taken off in 1813, a part of Fowler in 1816, Pierrepont in 1818, and a part of Fine in 1844. It lies upon Grass River, s. of the center of the co. Its surface is much broken, and its s. part is still a wilderness. Its soil is light and sandy, but fertile in the valleys. Russell (p. o.) is a small village, upon Grass River, in the northerly part of the town; North Russell is a p. o. The first settlement was made in 1804, under the agency of R. Atwater.¹² A State arsenal was built in the village in 1809;¹³ and the St. Lawrence Turnpike was opened the same year. The principal growth of the village was received in 1811 and 1812. A forge was built in 1846, and supplied with bog and magnetic ores. There are 2 churches in town; Bap. and M. E.: the Presb. and Prot. E. each have societies formed.

STOCKHOLM¹⁴—was formed from Massena, Feb. 21, 1806. A part of Norfolk was taken off in 1823. It lies in the northeasterly part of the co. Its surface is rolling. Its soil is a light, sandy loam, generally productive. It is watered by the two branches of St. Regis River. It is strictly an agricultural town, and one of the most wealthy in the co. Stockholm Depot (p. o.) is a small village upon the r. r., in the e. part of the town. East Stockholm (Stockholm p. o.) and Sanfordville are hamlets of a dozen houses each. West Stockholm (p. o.) is a small manufacturing village upon St. Regis River. Knapps Station (North Stockholm p. o.) is a r. r. station on the n. w. border of the town; and Southville is a p. o. Skinnerville is a hamlet on the w. branch of the St. Regis. The first settlement was begun in 1802, by Ebenezer Hulburd and Dr. Luman Pettibone, agents.¹⁵ The census reports 5 churches.¹⁶

² Named from Isaac Buck, who settled here in 1807.

³ Among the early settlers were Wm. and Gurdon Smith, Benj. Stewart, John Delancey, David French, Chester Dewey, Joseph Bailey, Bester Pierce, Roswell Parkhurst, Wm. Bullard, Reuben Field, and Ahner Royce. The first birth was a daughter of Wm. Smith; and the first death, that of Jas. Chadwick. Mills were built by Raymond.

⁴ The members were not professedly united in religious or political views. Spafford, in his Gazetteer, erroneously calls them "Morsvians."—Hough's Hist. St. L. and Frank. Cos., p. 435.

⁵ 3 M. E., Presb., Univ., Prot. E., (Trinity), Bap., Ref. Presb., R. C., and Catholic Apostolic.

⁶ Pronounced Ros-see. Named from a sister of David Parish, the proprietor. It embraces "Somerville," or No. 1 of Great Tract No. III, Macomb's Purchase in this town were unskillfully performed and attended with ruinous results, which led to their abandonment. After 20 years' suspension, the mines were re-opened by an English company, (The Rossie & Canada Lead Company,) formed under special act, and working upon a lease of 20 years from June 1, 1856; and they are said to have been successful.

¹⁰ Among the first settlers were Jos. Teall, Reuben Streeter, A. Simmons, O. Maltner, A. Keeuey, jr., S. Bonfy, S. Waters, and J. Stearns. The first child born was Wm. Rossie Williams. Reuben Streeter built the first mill.

¹¹ Named from Russell Atwater, first settler.

¹² Among the early settlers were Nathan, Loren, and David Knox, Heman Morgan, Elias Hayden, Reuben Aehman, Jesse Bunnell, Elihu Morgan, and Joel Clarke, who came in 1805. The first child born was a son of Reuben Ashman, in 1806; the first marriage, that of Calvin Hill and Harriet Knox; and the first death, that of — Curtis. Rollin Smith taught the first school, and Atwater built the first mills.

¹³ Sold for a school building, in 1850.

¹⁴ It originally comprised No. 2 of the "Ten Towns," and is nearly 10 mi. sq.

¹⁵ Among the early settlers were Benj. Wright, Isaac Kelsey, Abram Sheldon, and John and Robt. Bisbee. S. Reynolds built the first mill, in 1804. Mrs. Sheldon was the first woman who SARATOGA COUNTY.

This county¹ was formed from Albany, Feb. 7, 1791. It lies in the n. angle formed by the junction of the Hudson and Mohawk Rivers, centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains — sq. mi. Its surface is hilly or undulating in the s. and mountainous in the n. Two ranges of mountains traverse the co. from n.e. to s.w. The Palmertown or Luzerne Mts., the most eastern of these ranges, extend from Warren co., through the w. part of Moreau and Milton and the e. part of Corinth, into Greenfield, where they terminate in a series of low, irregular hills. Hudson River breaks through this range on the n. border of the co. in a deep ravine 3 mi. in extent. The mountains rise abruptly from the water's edge to a height of 800 feet. Their declivities are generally rocky and precipitous, and their summits spread out into a broad, rocky upland covered with forests. The Kayaderosseras Range extend through the n. part of the co. and occupy the greater part of Corinth, Edinburgh, Day, and Hadley. The declivities of these mountains are generally precipitous, and their summits spread out into broad, rocky uplands broken by ledges and craggy peaks. A group of isolated hills, 450 feet high, with rounded summits and terraced declivities, extend through the w. part of Stillwater and Saratoga. A broad intervalle extends along the Hudson, bordered by a range of clay bluffs 40 to 200 feet in height. From the summits of these bluffs an extensive sand plain extends westward to the foot of the mountains, covering the greater part of Moreau, Wilton, Northumberland, Saratoga Springs, Malta, and Clifton Park. The s. w. portion of the co. is rolling or moderately hilly.

Hudson River flows nearly 70 mi. along the e. border of the co. It is interrupted by falls and is crossed by several dams and bridges.² The Mohawk forms a portion of the s. boundary. The Sacondaga, forming the outlet of the principal lakes in the s. part of Hamilton co., flows in a tortuous channel through Edinburgh, Day, and Hadley. It is navigable for boats and steamboats of light draught from Fish House, on the border of Fulton co., to Conklingville Falls, in Hadley, a distance of 20 mi. Below the falls it flows between high, rocky hills in a series of rapids to the Hudson. Kayaderosseras River drains the central part of the co. and flows into Saratoga Lake. The outlet of the lake takes the name of Fish Creek. The other principal streams are Snook Kil, Anthony's Kil, and Feegowesee Creek. Saratoga Lake is a beautiful sheet of water, 6½ mi. long and 2 broad, situated about 3 mi. s. of Saratoga Springs. Ballston, Round, and Owl Lakes are small sheets of water in the s. part of the co. Among the mountains and forests in the n. are numerous other small lakes but little known.

The Kayaderosseras and Luzerne Mts. are both principally composed of primary rocks. A stratum of crystalline limestone extends along the foot of the mountains; and this is succeeded by Potsdam sandstone. In these formations iron ore has been obtained; but the beds have been imperfectly explored.³ The rocks in the s. half of the co. belong to the shales and slates of the Hudson River group. A large part of the co. is covered with drift deposits, consisting of sand and clay. The soil among the mountains is a light, sandy or gravelly loam, and is best adapted to grazing; upon the intervalles along the rivers it is a deep, fertile, clayey loam and alluvium; and in the s. w. part it is a heavy, clayey loam. A strip of light sand occupies the greater part of the two eastern tiers of towns. The people are chiefly engaged in grain and stock raising. Lumbering and tanning are extensively carried on in the n. part of the co. Considerable attention is also paid to the manufacture of cotton and woolen goods and paper.⁴

The county seat is located at the village of Ballston Spa, in the town of Milton.⁵ The courthouse, a

¹ The origin of the word Saratoga is uncertain. The termination "oga," or "aga," is said to signify "place." The first part of the word has been thought to imply "hilleide" by some, and "place of salt springs" by others,—"sorgh" in some Indian dialects being the name for salt.

² See descriptions of Warren and Washington cos.

³ Among the other minerals are agate, chalcedony, chrysoberyl, garnet, tourmalin, phosphate of lime, graphite, iron pyrites, and tufa. A full catalogue of minerals is given by Dr.

plain brick building, contains the usual rooms and offices and the jail. The co. clerk's office is a small building situated on Main Street. The co. poorhouse is situated on a farm of 112 acres $\frac{1}{2}$ mi. n. w. of Ballston Spa. The average number of inmates is about 100; and the institution yields an annual revenue of \$900.¹

The Champlain Canal extends along the Hudson from Waterford to the s. border of Northumberland, at which point it crosses the river into Washington co.² The Saratoga & Schenectady R. R. extends from Saratoga Springs through Milton, Ballston, and Clifton Park to Schenectady.³ The Saratoga & Whitehall R. R. extends from Saratoga Springs n. through Wilton and Northumberland to Moreau, where it crosses the Hudson to Fort Edward. The Rensselaer & Saratoga R. R. crosses the Mohawk at Waterford, and passes through that town, Half Moon, Clifton Park, Malta, and Ballston to Ballston Spa. The Albany, Vermont & Canada R. R., crossing the Mohawk at Cohoes, intersects the R. & S. R. R. at Albany Junction, and crosses the Hudson at Deepkill into Rensselaer co. The Lake Ontario & Hudson River R. R.⁴ has been laid out and partly worked from Saratoga Springs through Greenfield, Corinth, and Hadley.

Eight weekly and 4 daily papers are published in the co.⁵

The greater part of this co. is embraced within the "Half Moon," "Clifton Park" or "Shanondhoi," "Saratoga," "Appel," and "Kayaderosseras" or "Queensborough" Patents.⁶ The last named patent includes the greater part of the co. The purchase of the tract was confirmed by the Mohawks, July 26, 1683. The bounds were so loosely defined that disputes arose between the buildings. By an act passed March 14, 1817, Jas. Merrill, Eliza Powell, Isaac Gere, John Gibson, and Gilbert Warring were appointed commissioners to superintend the erection of new buildings in the place of the old ones, which had been burned.

The house is reported as old, ill constructed, and badly out of repair, but generally well kept.—Report of Senate Com., 1857.

² The towing path of the canal is constructed across the river on the Fort Miller Bridge.

³ This was the second r. r. built in the U. S. It is leased and used by the Rensselaer & Saratogs R. R.

⁴ Formerly the Saratoga & Sackets Harhor R. R.

⁶ The "Half Moon" Patent, including Waterford and part of Half Moon, was granted to Anthony Van Schaick. The "Saratoga Patent," including the present towns of Easton, Saratoga, and Stillwater, was granted, Nov. 4, 1684, to Cornelius Van Dyck, Jan. Jans Bleecker, Peter Phillips Schuyler, Johannes Wendell, Dirk Wessels, David Schuyler, and Robt. Livingston. The "Clifton Park Patent," embracing the E. part of the present town of Clifton Park and the w. part of Half Moon, was granted Sept. 23, 1708. The "Appel Patent," in the w. part of the present town of Clifton Park, was about $\frac{1}{2}$ mi. wide on the Mohawk and extended back nearly $\frac{1}{2}$ mi. The "Kayaderosseras Patent" was granted Nov. 2, 1708, to Manning Hermaun, Johannes Beckman, Rip Van Dam, Ann Bridges, Maj. Beckley, Peter Faunconneer, Adrian Hogelsand, Johannes Fisher, John Fuder, Jovis Hugelant, John Stevens, John Totham, and Samson Broughton. This patent contained 400,000 acres, and embraced nearly all of Saratoga co. N. of the small patents already described, and portions of Montgomery, Fulton, and Warren cos. The portion of the co. n. of this patent was embraced in the "Palmer" and proprietors and the owners of the Schenectady, Clifton Park, and Half Moon Patents, which were not settled until after the Revolution.

The first settlements in the co. were made by the Dutch, within a few years after their first colonization of the country about Albany. These settlements commenced near Waterford, on the Mohawk, and gradually extended up the valley of the Hudson. Lying in the great thoroughfare between the English settlements at Albany and the French posts on Lake Champlain, the continual passing of military parties checked the progress of settlement and exposed the few hardy pioneers to all the dangers and anxieties of border warfare. Immediately after the conquest of Canada, in 1760, settlements rapidly extended along the river valleys and to some distance into the interior. During the Revolution, some of the most important events of the war transpired within the limits of this co. Upon the approach of Burgoyne in 1777, Gen. Schuyler retreated from Fort Edward and made a stand first at Saratoga, then at Stillwater, and finally at the mouths of the Mohawk.¹ This last stand he considered the best position for checking the advance of the enemy, which he was expecting both from the n. and w. The inhabitants of the co. above fled in consternation to Albany, leaving their homes and fields of grain to be destroyed by the advancing foe. The islands at the mouth of the Mohawk were fortified about the 1st of August, and Burgoyne took possession of Fort Edward at nearly the same time. While the armies lay in this position, two events took place which served greatly to embarrass Burgoyne and to render sure his final defeat. The first of these was the defeat of Baum at Bennington, and the second the retreat of St. Ledger from the siege of Fort Schuyler.²

The American army in the mean time, under Gen. Gates, who had superseded Gen. Schuyler, advanced toward the enemy, and about the 1st of September took possession of and fortified the high bluffs known as Bemis Heights, upon the river, in the n. part of Stillwater.³ Greatly perplexed and embarrassed, Burgoyne finally concluded to continue his march toward Albany. On the 14th of September he crossed the Hudson, above the mouth of the Batten Kil, into the n. part of Saratoga, and continued his march southward. On the 19th the first battle of Stillwater was fought, in front of the American intrenchments at Bemis Heights. The American loss was 315 and the British 500, the former returning to their camp and the latter retaining possession of the battle field. On the 7th of October another severe battle was fought, in which the British lost 700 and the Americans 150. During the succeeding night the British abandoned their camp and retreated northward, and finally took position upon the heights of Saratoga, just w. of the present village of Schuylerville. Here Burgoyne found himself completely hemmed in. A victorious and hourly increasing army was in front; a strong detachment was posted on the e. bank of the river to prevent his crossing that stream; Fort Edward, in his rear, had been taken by the Americans; his bravest officers had fallen in battle; Lord Howe had failed to afford the promised support from New York;⁴ and his army was reduced to the last extremity for want of provisions. Under these circumstances, the British commander reluctantly yielded to an imperative necessity, and on the 16th of October signed articles of capitulation. On the 17th the whole British army laid down their arms and were marched eastward to Mass.⁵ The close of this campaign left the co. stripped of nearly every evidence of civilized occupation. The fear of continued Indian hostilities prevented the immediate re-occupation of the abandoned lands; but after the close of the war settlements rapidly spread. Since this period few incidents of general interest have occurred, and the history is but the record of the everyday events connected with the conversion of a wilderness into fruitful fields and happy homes.

BALLSTON⁶—was formed from Saratoga as a district, April 1, 1775, and was organized as a town, March 7, 1788. Charlton, Galway, and Milton were taken off in 1792, and the line of Charlthe direction of Kosciusko, then holding the office of engineer in the army. They were so constructed as to completely command the passage down the river. The position afterward chosen by the British was about 1 mi. distant, and separated from the American works by a deep ravine.

ton was changed March 5, 1795. It lies upon the border of the co., s. w. of the center. The surface is gently rolling. Mourning Kil and the Outlet Creek are the principal streams. Ballston Lake, in the s. e. part, is a long, narrow, and deep body of water, the outlet of which is the principal inlet of Round Lake. The soil s. e. of the lake is generally a light sand, and n. w. it is a clayey and gravelly loam. Ballston (p. v.) is situated on the line of Milton. A small portion only of the village is within the limits of this town. Burnt Hills,¹ (p. v.), in the s. part, contains 34 dwellings. Ballston Center (p. o.) and Academy Hill, near the center, are hamlets. East Line, (p. o.,) on the border of Malta, contains 15 houses. It is a station on the R. & S. R. R. South Ballston is a p. o. The first settlement was made in 1763, by two brothers named Michael and Nicholas McDonald,² who located near the w. bank of Ballston Lake. In 1770, Rev. Eliphalet Ball, with his three sons John, Stephen, and Flamen, and several members of his congregation, removed from Bedford, N. Y., and settled in the vicinity of Academy Hill.³ Soon after their arrival a large number of settlers came in from New England, N. J., Scotland, and the north of Ireland.⁴ The settlements in this town were twice invaded during the Revolution, and several of the inhabitants were carried away prisoners to Canada.⁵ The first church (Presb.) was organized Oct. 6, 1792.⁶

CHARLTON—was formed from Ballston, March 17, 1792. It is the s. w. corner town of the co. Its surface is undulating, with a gentle inclination toward the s. Its streams are the Ael Place⁷ and a branch of the Mourning Kil. The soil is an excellent quality of sandy, gravelly, and clayey loam. Ledges of limestone in the w. part, affording an excellent quality of building stone, are extensively quarried. Charlton, (p. v.,) in the s. e. part, contains 3 churches and 38 houses; West Charlton (p. v.) contains about 20 houses. The commissioners appointed to divide the Kayaderosseras Patent appropriated 5,000 acres in the s. part of this town to defray the expenses of the division. The first settlement was commenced in 1774, by Thos. Sweetman, who located in the e. part of the town.⁸ The first church (Presb.) was incorp. Dec. 11, 1792; Rev. Wm. Schenck was the first pastor.⁹

CLIFTON PARK—was formed from Half Moon, March 3, 1828, as "Clifton." Its name was changed March 31, 1829. The surface is level or undulating, except in the n. e., where it is broken by sand hills and ravines. A line of rugged clay bluffs borders upon the Mohawk Valley. Stony Creek, Swarte and Dwaas Kils are the principal streams. A belt of heavy clay and gravelly loam extends along the river above the bluffs. The soil is alluvial upon the Mohawk flats and a sandy loam in the central and n. parts. Clifton Park, (p. v.,) on the border of Half Moon, contains 2 churches and 22 houses; Amity, (Visschers Ferry p. o.,) a canal village in the s. part, contains 1 church and 45 houses; Jonesville, (p. v.,) in the n. part, 1 church, the Jonesville Academy,¹⁰ and 30 houses; and Rexfords Flats,¹¹ (p. v.,) a canal village in the s. w. corner of the town, 25 houses. Grooms Corners, (p. o.,) in the s. w., and Fort's Ferry, on the Mohawk, are hamlets. The greater part of this town was included in the "Clifton Park" or "Shannonhoi" Patent, granted Sept. 23, 1708.¹² The first settlements were made upon the

¹ Named from a tract which had been burned over by the Indians for a deer pasture before white settlements began.

² The McDonalds were natives of Ireland. They had been enticed on board a vessel in the Shannon, brought to Philadelphia, and sold for a term of years to pay for their passage.

⁴ Among these early settlers were Judge Beriah Palmer, (afterward M. C.), Judge Epenetus White, Edward A. Watrous, Capt. Stephen White, Paul Pierson, Capt. Tyrannus Collins, Hez. Middlebrook, Elisha Benedict, John Highy, Edmund Jennings, Saml. Nash, and Joseph Bettsy and his son "Joe," (who was afterward hung as a tory spy,) all from New England; Capt. Kenneth Gordon, and — McCrea, from N. J.; families named Shearer, McDermide, and Frazers, from Scotland; and Gen. Jas. Gordon, George Scott, Francis Hunter, and 3 brothers Kennedy, from the north of Ireland. The Scotch families settled in "Scotch Bush" and "Paisley Street." Gen. Gordon was a colonel in the army during the Revolution, and afterward a prominent citizen in the town and co. The first death recorded by tombstone in town was that of Gen. Gordon's mother, who died in 1775.

and took 24 prisoners. After crossing the Kayaderosseras, Maj. Munro addressed his men, stating his expectation that they would be pursued, and directing that in case of an attack every prisoner should at once be killed. For this brutal order he was cashiered on his arrival at Montreal. Three sped or infirm prisoners were allowed to return, and the rest reached Bulwaggy Bay on the eighth day, whence they passed into Canada. The notorious Joe Bettsy, with about 30 refugees, in May, 1781, captured 5 prisoners; and at the same time Judge White and 4 others were taken on the e. side of Long Lake, by another gang, and marched off to Canada, excepting one, who escaped. Col. Gordon and several others afterward escaped from the Isle of Orleans, and with great hardship made their way through the wilderness to the St. Johns, and thence to the settlements in Maine. They there learned of the peace, and returned home by way of Halifax and Boston.

⁶ There are in town 4 churches: 2 Presb., Prot. E., Bap.

⁷ Pronounced All-Place, and signifies "eel-place."

⁸ Among the other early settlers were David Maxwell, Joseph La Rue, John McKnight, John Taylor, and Jesse Conde, who came in 1775. Davis & Bostwick kept the first store; — Harmon's the first inn, John Rogers built the first sawmill, and John Holmes the first gristmill.

Mohawk Valley, previous to 1700. The names of the first settlers and the precise date of their settlement are unknown. The first church (Bap.) was organized Sept. 3, 1794; Rev. Abijah Peck was the founder and first pastor.¹

CORINTH—was formed from Hadley, April 20, 1818. A part of Moreau was annexed Jan. 28, 1848. It lies upon the Hudson, in the n. e. part of the co. The Kayaderosseras Mt. Range occupies the central and n. parts, and the Palmetown Mts. the s. e. corner. The declivities of these mountains are steep, rough, and broken, and their summits are rocky and mostly covered with forests. A valley 4 mi. wide separates the two ranges. The principal streams are the Hudson, forming the n. e. border, and Cole Brook, flowing along the s. foot of the mountains. The Great Falls, in the Hudson, are on the border of this town.² Among the mountains in the n. part are several fine lakes, the principal of which are Efnor, Hunt, Jenny, and Black Lakes. The soil is a sandy and clayey loam. Lumbering is extensively carried on, the Hudson River and small streams from the hills furnishing an abundance of water-power. Jessups Landing, (Corinth p. o.) on the Hudson, contains 3 churches and 88 dwellings; and South Corinth (p. v.) 1 church and 30 dwellings. The first settlement was made near S. Corinth, in 1790, by Fred. Parkman, Washington Chapman, Jeremiah Eddy, Jephtha Clark, and Jonathan Dewel.³ The first church (Bap.) was organized June 1, 1822.⁴

DAY—was formed from Edinburgh and Hadley, as "Concord," April 17, 1819. Its name was changed Dec. 3, 1827. It is the n. w. corner town of the co. Its surface is principally occupied by several spurs of the Kayaderosseras Mts. Oak and Bald Mts., the principal peaks, near the center of the town, are 900 feet above the river. The whole mountain region is wild, rugged, and rocky, and scarcely susceptible of cultivation. The Sacondaga River flows in a narrow valley through the s. part. Its course is tortuous, and it is navigable through the town. Paul, Glass House, and Allens Creeks are the other principal streams. Livingston, Sand, and Mud Lakes are small bodies of water in the n. part. The soil is a moderately fertile, sandy and clayey loam. Lumbering is extensively carried on. Huntsville (West Day p. o.) is a hamlet in the s. w. part. Day is a p. o. The first permanent settlers were Phineas Austin, James Thomas, and Dyer Perry, and families named Clay and Bond. The first religious meetings were held in the barn of Peter Van Vleck, in 1801-02. The first church (Bap.) was formed in 1809. The census reports 2 churches; Christian and Ref. Prot. D.

EDINBURGH—was formed from Providence, March 13, 1801, as "Northfield," and its name was changed April 6, 1808. A part of Day was taken off in 1819. It lies upon the w. border of the co., n. of the center. Its surface is principally occupied by two high mountain ridges separated by the valley of the Sacondaga River. The mountain regions are rocky and broken, with a thin, sandy or gravelly soil, and are covered with forests. Beechers Creek is a small mill stream w. of the river. The soil on the river flats is a good quality of clayey and gravelly loam. Lumbering is the chief occupation of the people. Batchelerville, (p. v.) on the e. bank of the Sacondaga, contains 30 houses; and Beechers Hollow, (Edinburgh p. o.) on the w. side of the river, 12. The first settlers came in about 1790 and located in the valley below "Fish House."⁵ The first church (Bap.) was organized in 1798, by Rev. Mr. Munroe, from Galway.⁶ Traces of an ancient Indian burial place are visible on the s. bank of the Sacondaga, near the border of Day.⁷

GALWAY⁸—was formed from Ballston, March 7, 1792. Providence was taken off in 1796. It lies on the w. border of the co., s. of the center. Its n. half is occupied by a group of rounded hills forming the southern continuation of the Kayaderosseras Mts. The surface of the s. half is gently undulating. The principal streams are head branches of Feegowesee and Calderwood Creeks and the Mourning Kil. The soil is generally a heavy clay, intermixed in places with sand and gravel. Galway, (p. v.) near the center of the town, was incorp. April 18, 1838. It contains 3 churches, a female seminary,⁹ and about 45 houses; West Galway, (p. v.) on the border of Fulton co., contains 1 church and 20 houses. Yorks Corners, (E. Galway p. o.) in the n. e.

⁵ In 1791 the following persons were living in the valley, viz.:

Obadiah Perry, and Saml. Rogers. Daniel Abbott, from Conn., taught the first school, in 1794; — Chatfield kept the first store, in 1796; Isaac Deming built the first gristmill, in 1793; and Palmer Munroe, the first woolen factory, in 1808.

⁶ The census reports 3 churches; 2 M. E., Presb.

part, Mosherville, (p. o.), near the n. border, Whiteside Corners, (p. o.), in the n. w., South Galway (p. o.) and North Galway (p. o.) are hamlets. The first settlers, from Galway, Scotland, located in town in 1774.¹ Rev. Simeon Smith, from Canterhook, came in town in 1778, and located near Yorks Corners.² He formed the first religious society (Bap.) during the following year.³

GREENFIELD—was formed from Saratoga and Milton, March 12, 1793. A part of Hadley was taken off in 1801. It occupies a position a little n. w. of the center of the co. The Palmerstown Mountain Range extends along the e. border, and the Kayaderosseras Range occupies the w. part of the town. A valley 6 mi. wide separates these rangcs. The principal streams are the Kayaderosseras and its branches. The soil is generally a gravelly loam intermixed with clay. Sections of the surface are very stony. Iron ore has been found in the e. part. Greenfield Center (p. v.) contains 2 churches. Pop. 85. Jamesville, (Middle Grove p. o.), on the s. border, contains 1 church, 2 paper mills, and 31 houses; Mount Pleasant, (p. v.), in the n. w. corner, a glass factory and 140 inhabitants; and Porters Corners, (p. v.) near the center of the town, 2 churches and 20 houses. West Greenfield, (p. o.), North Greenfield, (p. o.), and Pages Corners are hamlets. The first settlers were two men named Haggerty and Root, who located near Haggerty Hill in 1784.⁴ The census reports 9 churches in town.⁵

HADLEY—was formed from Greenfield and Northumberland, Feb. 27, 1801. Its boundaries were amended Feb. 28, 1808. Corinth was taken off in 1818, and a part of Day in 1819. It lies upon the Hudson, in the n. e. corner of the co. A large share of its surface is occupied by the peaks and ridges of the Kayaderosseras Mts. Mt. Anthony is an isolated peak in the s. e. part.⁶ Sacondaga River flows through the s. part. Its valley is narrow; and below Conklingville its current is rapid and frequently interrupted by falls. The soil generally is a coarse, yellowish, unproductive sand and gravel. Lumbering and tanning are extensively carried on. Conklingville, (West Hadley p. o.), on the Sacondaga, in the w. part of the town, contains 1 church, a large tannery,⁷ and 39 houses. Hadley (p. o.) is a hamlet at the junction of Sacondaga and Hudson Rivers. Richard Hilton commenced the first settlement, just after the close of the Revolution, on the Hudson.⁸ The census reports 2 churches in town; a F. W. Bap. and a Wes. Meth.

HALF MOON⁹—was formed as a district, March 24, 1772, and as a town, March 7, 1788. Its name was changed to "Orange" April 17, 1816, and the original name was restored Jan. 16, 1820. Waterford was taken off in 1816, and Clifton Park in 1828. Its surface is undulating and broken by the narrow ravines of small streams. Hudson River forms the e. boundary, and the Mohawk a portion of the s. The river intervalles are about $\frac{1}{2}$ mi. wide, and are bordered by a line of steep, clay bluffs 60 to 100 feet high. The other streams are Anthonys, Dwaas, and Steena Kils. The soil is a clayey and gravelly loam upland, and a fine quality of alluvium in the intervalles. Crescent¹⁰ (p. v.) is a canal village near the center of the s. border of the town. Pop. 593. Middletown, (Half Moon p. o.), $1\frac{1}{2}$ mi. e. of Crescent, has a pop. of 230; Mechanicsville, (p. v.), at the mouth of Anthonys Kil, lies mostly in Stillwater. Pop. in Half Moon, 495. Clifton Park, (p. v.), on the e. border, is about one half in this town. Newtown and Smithtown are hamlets. The first settlements are supposed to have been made between 1680 and '90, by Germans, on the Mohawk flats.¹¹ The first church (Ref. Prot. D.) was organized in 1800.¹²

¹ Among the early settlers were John and James Major, John McClelland, Wm., Robt., and Alex. Kealey, and John McHarg, who all came over in the same ship, in 1774. The first death was that of James Major, killed by the fall of a tree, Sept. 11, 1776; John McClelland or — Prendergast kept the first store, in 1780; Daniel Campbell built the first gristmill.

² Mr. Smith was accompanied by his parents and 3 brothers-in-law, Simeon Babcock, Reuben Mattison, and Joseph Bawn. ³ The census reports 6 churches in town; 2 Bap., Christian, Friends, M. E., and Presb.

⁵ 3 Bap., 2 M. E., 2 Friends, Cong., and Univ.

⁶ Iron ore was formerly obtained on the w. side of this mountain, to supply the furnace at Luzerue.

⁷ This tannery consumes 5,000 cords of bark and manufactures 50,000 sides of leather per annum.

Walker, at Hadley, in 1790. — Wilson taught the first school, in 1791-92. Delans & Hazard built the first sawmill, in 1791; and Alex. Stewart, the first gristmill, in 1803. Jonathan Flanders kept the first inn, and Jeremy Rockwell the first store, in 1807. Col. Gordon Conkling built the tannery at Conklingville and placed the first steam tug on the river.

¹¹ In 1689 it was resolved by the authorities of Albany to remove the fort about the house and barn of Harne Lievee, at Half Moon, to a more convenient place,—from which it is inferred that a considerable settlement existed at that time. In 1714 the precinct of Half Moon contained 101 inhabitants. Among the early settlers were Oldest Onderkirk, on the flats, — Fort, on the Judge Leland farm, and — Taylor, at Mechanicsville, before 1763. The ancient stone house on the Danebach place, in the s. w. corner of the town, was built in 1718, by Killian Van Den Bergh. There was a sawmill on Steens Kil, near Crescent, in 1762. Wm. Bradshaw built a gristmill on Dwaas Kil at the close of the Revolution. A bridge was erected across the Mohawk in 1794, at a cost of $12,000.

MALTA—was formed from Stillwater, March 3, 1802, and a part of Saratoga was annexed March 28, 1805. It lies upon the w. bank of Saratoga Lake, s. e. of the center of the co. Its surface is chiefly an undulating upland, 60 to 80 feet above Saratoga Lake, and broken by the deep gulleys of small streams. The streams are Kayaderosseras Creek, forming the n. boundary, Ballston Outlet Creek, an inlet, and Anthonys Kil, the outlet of Round Lake, and Drummonds Brook, flowing into Saratoga Lake. Round Lake, in the s. e., is nearly circular, and $1\frac{1}{2}$ mi. in diameter. A swampy region covering an area of several hundred acres lies in the n. e. part of the town, at the mouth of the Kayaderosseras. The soil is principally a light, sandy loam, with clay and muck in the lowlands. Deming Street, (Malta p. o.,) near the center of the town, contains 1 church and 17 houses. Maltville, (p. o.,) in the s. part, Malta Ridge, in the n., and Halls Corners, are hamlets. The first settlers were two men named Drummond and McKelpin, who came before the Revolution and located w. of the lake.¹ The census reports 5 churches in town.²

MILTON—was formed from Ballston, March 7, 1792, and a part of Greenfield was taken off in 1793. It lies a little s. of the center of the co. Its surface is moderately hilly in the n., and undulating in the s., with a slight inclination toward Kayaderosseras Creek, which flows s. e. through the center of the town. This stream has a rapid fall and furnishes a valuable water-power. Feegowesee Creek, from the w., is its principal tributary. In the n. part are limestone ridges, extensively quarried for building stone and lime. The Saratoga mineral spring region extends through the s. e. part. The soil is generally a sandy loam. Ballston Spa, (Ballston p. o.,) the co. seat, was incorp. March 21, 1807. It is situated on Kayaderosseras Creek, in the s. e. corner of the town. It contains the co. buildings, 2 seminaries,³ 5 churches, 2 printing offices, and several manufacturing establishments.⁴ Pop. 2,285, of which 1,941 are in this town. This village has long been celebrated for its mineral springs.⁵ Rock City Mills (p. v.) contains 3 paper mills and 34 houses; West Milton (p. v.) a church, a paper mill, a shingle mill, a hoe factory, and 40 houses; Bloodville a scythe, edge tool, and knitting factories, and 40 houses; and Factory Village 2 paper mills and 22 houses. Milton Center and Cranes Village are hamlets. The first settlement in town was made by David Wood and his sons Stephen, Benj., Elijah, David, Nathan, and Enoch, who bought 600 acres and moved into town before the Revolution.⁶ The first church (Bap.) was organized Jan. 22, 1793.⁷

MOREAU⁸—was taken from Northumberland, March 28, 1805. A part was annexed to Corinth in 1848. It lies in the great bend of the Hudson, in the n. e. corner of the co. The w. part of the town is occupied by the rocky and precipitous peaks of the Palmertown Mt. Range. The central and e. portions are undulating and broken by the narrow ravines of small streams. The Hudson River forms the n., the e., and a part of the w. boundary of the town. Upon its course are numerous rapids and waterfalls.⁹ The Snook Kil and its tributaries drain the s. part of the town. The soil is generally a light, yellow, sandy loam, but in the s. and w. are tracts of clay and gravel. South Glens Falls, (p. v.,) on the Hudson, opposite Glens Falls, contains several manufacturing establishments;¹⁰ pop. 513. Fortsville, (p. v.,) in the central part, contains 25 houses. Clarks Corners, Reynolds Corners, and State Dam are hamlets. Moreau Station is a p. o., situated on the R. & W. R. R. Settlements are said to have been made before the Revolution; but their history is only a vague tradition.¹¹ The first church (Bap.) was built in 1795.¹²

³ The Ballston Spa Institute, for boys, was established in 1846. The Ballston Spa Academy was opened in 1855.

⁴ In the village are a cotton, wool, edge tool, 2 seamless bag, and 2 knitting factories, a tannery, and 2 gristmills. A fig. co. was incorp. here March 10, 1810.

⁵ These springs were first discovered in the survey of the Kayaderosseras Patent in 1769. They are situated on the margin of a small stream that flows into Kayaderosseras Creek. The Old Spring, formerly much used, was greatly impaired by the opening of La Fayette Spring, within 30 feet, in 1825. Washington Spring was obtained in 1827, by boring 237 feet in the slate. The Saline, or United States Spring, is considerably impregnated with salt. Besides these are the Fulton and Franklin Springs and the Low Well. In 1817, 4 springs were discovered within 20 feet of each other in the bed of the stream. Their properties were unlike, and after a little time they became fresh. These springs are generally clear, cool, and sparkling. Their average temperature is about 50°. The mineral water is similar to that of the Saratoga Springs, only less strong. Gas is copiously discharged with these waters.

⁶ Bennajah Douglass, grandfather of Hon. Stephen A. Douglass, built a log house near the spring, for the accommodation of visitors, in 1792. Silas Adams and Elijah Walbridge located in the n. part of the town in 1784-85. In 1792 Nicholas Low built a tavern close by the spring; and in 1804 he erected the "Sans Souci Hotel."

⁸ Named from Marshal Moreau, who visited the U. S. in 1804-05.

NORTHUMBERLAND—was formed from Saratoga, March 16, 1798. A part of Hadley was taken off in 1801, Moreau in 1805, and Wilton in 1818. It lies upon the Hudson, n. of the center of the co. Its surface is level or undulating and broken by deep ravines. A line of clay and slate bluffs, 30 to 100 feet high, extends along the river. Snook Kil and its tributary, Beaver Dam Creek, are the principal streams. The soil is generally a light, sandy loam. This town shares with Fort Edward the Fort Miller Falls.¹ Gansevoort,² (p. v.,) on Snook Kil, in the n. part of the town, contains 2 churches and a pop. of 162. It is a station on the S. & W. R. R. Bacon Hill³ (p. o.) and Northumberland, (p. o.,) in the s. e. part of the town, are hamlets. Fort Miller was built in this town in 1755, under the direction of Col. Miller. It was located upon the flat, above the rapids, and was enclosed on three sides by the river. A blockhouse was built on the heights that commanded the position on the w. The first settlers probably came in before the Revolution. Among them was a man named Munroe,⁴ who built the first sawmill, at Gansevoort.⁵ There are 5 churches in town.⁶

PROVIDENCE—was formed from Galway, Feb. 5, 1796, and Edinburgh was taken off in 1801. It lies near the center of the w. border of the co. Its surface is mountainous in the n. e. and broken and hilly in the s. w. The high regions along the n. and e. borders are mostly covered with forests. Hagadorns, Hans, Cadmans, and Frenchmans Creeks, small mill streams rising in the mountains and flowing s. w. into Fulton co., are the principal watercourses. The soil is chiefly a coarse, yellow sand or gravel of poor quality. Large tracts are stony and rocky. Wooden ware, leather, and lumber are extensively manufactured. Barkersville (p. o.) and Hagadorns Mills are hamlets. Providence and West Providence are p. offices. The first settlement was made previous to the Revolution, but the settlers were driven off during the war. Among the first settlers after the war were Nathaniel Wells and Seth Kellogg.⁷ There are 3 churches in town; Bap., Christian, and M. E.

SARATOGA⁸—was formed as a district, March 24, 1772, and as a town, March 7, 1788. Easton (Washington co.) was taken off in 1789, a part of Greenfield in 1793, Northumberland in 1798, a part of Malta in 1802, and Saratoga Springs in 1819. It lies upon the Hudson, near the center of the e. border of the co. A range of high, rounded, and sometimes terraced hills extends n. and s. through the central and w. parts. These hills rise 450 feet above the Hudson and slope in every direction. Narrow alluvial flats bordered by high clay bluffs extend along the Hudson. Saratoga Lake forms a portion of the w. boundary. Fish Creek, the outlet of the lake, flowing through the n. part of the town, is the principal stream; and upon it are several fine mill sites. The other streams are small brooks. The soil n. of Fish Creek is light and sandy, and in the remaining parts of the town it is a gravelly and clayey loam. Three mineral springs, known as "Quaker Springs," issue from the Hudson River slate, in a ravine a little s. e. of the center of the town.⁹ Schuylerville,¹⁰ (p. v.,) incorp. April 16, 1831, is situated on the river, at the mouth of Fish Creek. It contains 4 churches, the Schuylerville Academy, a newspaper office, a bank, cotton factory, and foundry; pop. 1,184. Victory Mills, (p. v.,) situated on Fish Creek, contains 1 church, & machine shop, and an extensive cotton factory;¹¹ pop. 729. Quaker Springs, (p. v.,) near the center of the town, contains 1 church and 22 houses. Grangerville, (p. o.,) on Fish Creek, is a hamlet. Deans Corners and Coveville are p. offices. The first settlement was made in the early part of the last century, upon the Hudson River.¹² The first church (Ref. Prot. D.) was formed previous to the Revolutionary War.¹³ The census reports 7 churches in town.¹⁴

⁴ Munroe was a tory, and fled to Canada, and his property was confiscated.

⁶ 3 Ref. Prot. D., 2 M. E.
⁷ — Corey built the first sawmill, in 1786, and the first gristmill, soon afterward. The first inn was kept by — Shankland.

⁸ Written "Saratoga" until about 1793. Upon the old map

The name was first applied to a settlement on the Hudson, in the vicinity of the present village of Schuylerville. It is said to signify "swift water," and was applied to the rapids in the river, in contradistinction to still water, just below.

⁹ The water of these springs contains lime, magnesia, and iron, held in solution by carbonic acid, and a large proportion of common salt and soda.

¹⁰ Named in honor of Gen. Philip Schuyler, who resided here previous to the Revolution. During the war his buildings and mills were burned by order of Burgoyne.

¹¹ There are 455 looms in this factory. In 1857, 3,665,411 yds. of print cloths and silesias were manufactured.

¹² At the attack upon Old Fort Saratoga, upon the opposite side of the Hudson, in the fall of 1745, several sawmills and other buildings, upon Fish Creek and the river, were burned, and about 30 families were killed or taken prisoners.

¹³ The British troops made a riding school of this church during the war.

central position in the co. Its surface is rolling or moderately hilly. Kayaderosseras Creek and Saratoga Lake, forming the s. boundary, are skirted by a line of low bluffs. The streams are Ellis and Owl Pond Creeks. An extensive tract lying n. of Saratoga Lake and along the course of Owl Pond Creek is low and swampy. The soil is an inferior quality of yellowish, sandy loam. The far famed mineral springs, which give to the town its name, are situated about 3 mi. n. w. of Saratoga Lake. They are near the center of the mineral spring region, which has a radius of nearly 10 mi.¹ Saratoga Springs (p. v.) was incorp. April 17, 1826. It contains a female seminary,² 7 churches, 2 banks, 5 printing offices, 2 public halls, and 22 hotels.³ Pop. 5,129. The business of the village is principally connected with the entertainment of strangers during the fashionable watering season. The springs are on that part of the Kayaderosseras Patent that fell to the share of Rip Van Dam. Sir Wm. Johnson is said to have been the first white person who ever used the Saratoga waters for medicinal purposes. In 1767 he was brought to the place on a litter, and, after remaining several days, he was able to return on foot. His example was followed, and the visits of invalids soon became of frequent occurrence. In 1773, Derick Scowton made the first clearing and erected a hut. He was followed soon after by George Arnold and Saml. Norton.⁴ In 1783, Gen. Schuyler cut a road through from Fish Creek, and spent several weeks here, living in a tent. The next year he erected a framed house, (the first in town,) and annually afterward until his death he spent a part of the summer here with his family.⁵ Several prominent men have resided in the village.⁶ The census reports 7 churches in town.⁷

¹ High Rock Spring, the first discovered of these, was so named from a pyramidal mound of calcareous tufa $\frac{3}{4}$ feet high and 24 $\frac{1}{2}$ feet in diameter at the base which has been formed around it. An aperture 1 foot in diameter opens from the top of the rock downward, in which the water generally rises 14 feet above the surface of the ground. It is said that the water once overflowed the top; but at an early day the rock was cracked by the fall of a tree, and the water sunk to its present level. Congress Spring was discovered in 1792, by a hunting party, and named in compliment to John Taylor, one of the number, who had been a member of the Continental Congress. The present spring was obtained by sinking a well in the bed of the stream near the original fountain. The Columbia Spring, a few rods s. w. of the latter, is chalybeate, and constantly boiling from the escape of gas. It was opened in 1806, by G. Putnam. The Hamilton Spring, 50 rods n. e. of Congress, was discovered by G. Putnam, and brought into use by Dr. Clarke. The Pavilion Fountain, opened in 1839, has a smart, pungent taste. The Iodine Spring, situated a few rods w. of High Rock, was opened in 1839. The water contains a large proportion of iodine and very little iron. This spring has sometimes been called the Walton Spring, from Henry Walton, a large proprietor of lands in the vicinity. The Empire Spring, the most northerly in the village, was opened in 1846. It discharges 75 gallons per hour. The Washington Spring, 50 rods s. w. of Congress Spring, was opened in 1806. Putnam Spring is in the immediate vicinity. Flat Rock Spring, 100 rods n. e. from Hamilton, is chalybeate. President Spring is 30 rods n. e. of High Rock; Red Spring, 60 rods n. e. of President; and Monroe Spring, 18 rods n. of Flat Rock. Ten Springs were discovered in 1814, 1 mi. n. e. of the village. Ellis Spring is situated in a ravine 2 mi. s. w. of Congress. There are several other springs in the immediate vicinity. Baths are connected with most of these springs, and an immense trade has sprung up in the bottling and sale of the water. The temperature of the fountains ranges from 48° to 51°, and it is not sensibly affected by the seasons. The following table gives an analysis of several of these springs. The figures show the number of grains in a gallon of water.

the first sawmill, the first large hotels, and opened several of the springs. Dr. Clement Blakely, the first physician, came with Putnam, and remained 3 years. John and Ziba Taylor opened the first store, in 1794; Robt. Ellis and Geo. Peck built the first gristmill, in 1814; and Ward & Rogers, the first clothing works, in 1815. Henry Walton resided here for several years. He was proprietor of the whole village n. of Congress St. Several of the noted springs were on his estate.

taken off in 1789, and Malta in 1802. It lies upon the Hudson, s. e. of the center of the co. It is uneven in the s. and moderately hilly in the n. The highest point is about 250 feet above the Hudson. A range of clay bluffs 60 to 100 feet high borders upon intervalles of the Hudson and Anthonys Kil. The streams are generally small brooks flowing in deep gulleys worn in the drift deposits.¹ The n. w. corner borders upon Saratoga Lake. The river intervalles are alluvial. West of the river bluffs is a wide belt of heavy clay; and in the s. w. part is a sandy tract interspersed with swamps. Upon the lake shore is a sulphur spring.² Stillwater, (p. v.,) incorp. April 17, 1816, is situated on the Hudson. It contains 4 churches, and manufactories of lumber, paper, woollens, and castings. Pop. 552. Mechanicsville, (p. v.,) situated on the Hudson, at the mouth of Anthonys Kil, partly in this town and partly in Half Moon, is a station on the Troy & Saratoga R. R. It contains 5 churches, a printing office, and an extensive linen thread manufactory.³ Pop. 1,111,—616 in Stillwater, 495 in Half Moon. Bemis Heights,⁴ (p. o.,) on the Champlain Canal, near the Hudson, and Ketchums Corners (p. o.) are hamlets. This town was included in the Saratoga Patent of 1684; and settlement was commenced about 1750.⁵ The first church (Cong.) was established in 1763.⁶ There are 8 churches in town.⁷

WATERFORD⁸—was formed from Half Moon, April 17, 1816. It lies at the junction of the Hudson and Mohawk Rivers, in the s. e. corner of the co. Its area is about 7 sq. mi. Its surface is mostly an upland, 50 to 100 feet above the river. The Mohawk is bordered by an almost perpendicular range of slate bluffs, and the Hudson Valley by a range of clay bluffs. The soil is a sandy, clayey, and alluvial loam of great fertility. The falls in the Mohawk furnish a valuable water-power. Waterford,⁹ (p. v.,) incorp. April 6, 1801,¹⁰ situated on the Champlain Canal, near the confluence of the Hudson¹¹ and Mohawk Rivers, is an important station on the Troy & Saratoga R. R. and the Albany & Northern R. R. It contains 6 churches, a newspaper office, a bank, and several manufacturing establishments.¹² Pop. 3,083. Settlement was commenced by the Dutch at a very early day. The census reports 7 churches in town.¹³

WILTON—was formed from Northumberland, April 20, 1818. It lies a little n. e. of the center of the co. The Palmertown Mts., with their steep, rocky slopes and broken, forest-covered summits, extend across the n. w. corner. The center and s. w. are gently undulating, or broken by low ridges. The principal streams are Snook Kil and Bog Meadow and Cold Brooks. The soil in the e. and s. e. is a yellow, sandy loam resting on clay, and in some places swampy. At the foot of the Palmertown Mts. is a belt of productive gravel and clay loam. A heavy growth of white and yellow pine originally covered the plains, but little woodland now remains. Near Emersons Corners is a spring of acidulous and carbonated water, and in the s. part of the town is a sulphur spring. Wilton (p. o.) and Emersons Corners, both in the n. part of the town, are hamlets. The first settlement was made in 1774 or '75, by Rowland Perry and his sons Samuel, John, Benj., Absalom, Roswell, Artemas, Rowland, and Joseph, from Dutchess co.¹⁴ Near the mill pond on Snook Kil are traces of Indian occupation: pestles, broken pottery, and fint arrow heads have been found in abundance. The census reports 4 churches in town.¹⁵

³ The American Linen Thread Manufacturing Co. was organized in 1852. The number of men employed is 100.

⁵ Among the first settlers were John Thompson, Geo. Palmer, — Benjamin, Direk Swart, — Ensign, — Burlinghame, and — Abeel. The first gristmill was built by Geo. Palmer, before the Revolution.

⁶ This church was organized at Litchfield, Conn., in 1752, and in 1763 was removed to Stillwater. Rev. Robt. Campbell was the first pastor.

⁸ The Indians called the country around the mouth of the Mohawk "Nack-to-nack." This town was formerly known as Half Moon Point; and the semi-circular tract between the Hudson and the Mohawk was called Half Moon. Its present name originated from the fact that at the village of Waterford a ford crossed to Haver Island.

⁹ In 1784 the site of the village was purchased by Col. Jacobus Van Schoon, — Middlebrook, Ezra Haddock, Judge White, and several others, most of whom were from Conn.; and Florus

Bancker was employed to lay it out into village lots. July 11, 1841, a destructive fire occurred, which destroyed 130 buildings.

¹⁰ On the 25th of March, 1794, Hezekiah Ketchum, Jacobus Van Schoonhoven, Matthew Gregory, Isaac Keeler, John Pettett, Duncan Oliphant, and Thos. Smith were constituted trustees of Half Moon Point.

¹¹ A bridge across the Hudson at this place was built in 1804, at a cost of $50,000. The present structure, known as the "Union Bridge," was built in 1812, '13, and '14, at a cost of $20,000.

¹² A hydraulic canal $\frac{1}{2}$ mi. in length was constructed in 1828-29, by J. F. King. Upon this canal are 2 stock and die factories, a machine shop, ax factory, twine factory, ink and lampblack factory, flouring mill, and a pearling mill. On the Champlain Canal are 3 flouring mills, a foundry and machine shop, an auger factory, and a distillery. The fire engine works at this place were started in 1831. About \$60,000 worth of work is turned out per annum, and 40 men are employed.

¹⁴ John Stiles, Ebenezer King, John Laing, Peter Johnson, and Jas. and Wm. McGregor settled in town in 1775; and John Boyce, Robt. Milligan, John Kendrick, and Enoch M. Place in 1784. John Laing built the first sawmill, in 1784-85, and Wm. McGregor the first gristmill, soon after the war. Stephen King kept the first inn, and — Ostrom the first store.

WASHINGTON COUNTY.

This county¹ was formed from Albany as "Charlotte County,"² March 12, 1772. Its name was changed April 2, 1784; Clinton co. was taken off in 1788; the e. portion was ceded to Vermont in 1790;³ a strip along its s. border was annexed from Albany Feb. 7, 1791; and Warren co. was taken off in 1813. It lies on the e. border of the State, is centrally distant from Albany — mi., and contains an area of 834 sq. mi. The surface consists principally of a series of ridges extending n. e. and s. w., and the valleys between them. The remarkable depression which extends southerly from the s. extremity of Lake Champlain divides these ridges into two distinct groups,—the n. belonging to the Palmertown Mt. Range, and the s. constituting one of the connecting links between the highlands of Southern New York and those of Western Vermont. The s. group is subdivided into three principal ranges, which are all related and of the same general character. The most southerly of these ranges is a northerly continuation of the Taghkanick Range of Rensselaer co., occupying the greater part of White Creek and the e. part of Jackson. The declivities are usually steep, and the summits broad, broken, and rocky. The second—sometimes described as a continuation of the Petersburg Mts. of Rensselaer—constitutes the highlands of Cambridge, Jackson, Salem, and the e. part of Hebron and Granville. In Salem it spreads out like a fan between the streams. The third comprises the highlands of Easton, Greenwich, Argyle, Hartford, Granville, Hampton, and the e. part of Whitehall. It might with propriety be called Cossayuna Range, from the principal lake which it encloses. The declivities of these ranges are usually steep, and, except where broken by ledges, are arable to their summits. They gradually rise toward the e., reaching their culminating point near the e. border of the co. The highest summits are 1000 to 1200 feet above tide. These three ranges belong to one general group and are of the same geological formation. They are composed of slate rock, ledges of which crop out along their whole extent. Many of these ledges in Granville and Hebron are quarried, and furnish stone much valued for roofing, building, and ornamental purposes. Among the slate quarries are found numerous veins of injected quartz, intersecting the slate strata in every direction, varying from the thickness of paper to several inches. They often present cavities and surfaces beautifully studded with transparent crystals of quartz. The edges of the slate are sometimes bent and distorted by the quartz dikes, showing the extreme heat and great force of the injected veins. The soil in this system of highlands consists chiefly of disintegrated slate, and is very fertile.

The second group of highlands, belonging to the Palmertown Mt. Range, occupy the towns of Fort Ann, Dresden, Putnam, and the e. part of Whitehall. They belong to the primary formation, their rocks consisting principally of gneiss, granite, sandstone, and impure limestone. Their sides are very precipitous and broken, and their summits are wild irregular masses of naked, barren rocks. The valleys between them are narrow and rocky, often bordered by precipices many hundred feet in height. The soil is cold and unproductive, like that of all regions of a similar geological formation. A narrow valley extending s. w. from the s. extremity of South Bay divides the group into two ranges. Saddle Mt., overlooking South Bay and 1000 ft. above tide, is the highest peak in the s. range; and Black Mt., 2878 ft. above tide, is the highest peak in the n. range. Diameter Rock, on the n. shore of South Bay, is 1300 ft. above tide.⁴

tioners were Smith Thompson, Simeon De Witt, and Geo. Tibbits. See Notes to N. Y. Session Laws, April 15, 1814.

VIEW ON LAKE GEORGE.

The Hudson River forms the s. half of the w. border of the co. A rich intervale, from half a mi. to a mi. in width, bordered by a series of clay bluffs 20 to 60 ft. high, extends along its course. Most of the other streams of the co. are tributaries of the Hudson, and among them are the Hoosick, Batten Kil, Moses and Fort Edward Creeks, and many smaller streams. Wood Creek¹ is a deep, sluggish stream, flowing into Lake Champlain and draining the valley, which here extends from the lake to the Hudson. The soil along the valley is mostly a hard, stiff clay. The Mettowee, or Pawlet, and the Poultney Rivers, from Vt., are tributaries of Wood Creek. In the co. are several other streams important as mill streams.² Lake Champlain s. of Ticonderoga is scarcely more than a ship canal through a reedy marsh bordered by rocky cliffs. Lake George lies along the n. w. border of the co. Among the hills in the interior are several small lakes, the principal of which is Cossayuna Lake, in Argyle.³

The various branches of agriculture form the leading pursuits of the people. The principal grains raised are rye, spring wheat, oats, buckwheat, and corn. Peas, beans, flax, and potatoes are also extensively cultivated. Stock raising, dairying, and wool growing are also extensively pursued. The manufactures of the co. are principally along the Hudson and Batten Kil.

The county offices are divided among several towns. The courts are held alternately at Salem and Sandy Hill, and the clerk's office and co. poorhouse are located at Argyle.⁴ The jail is connected with the courthouse at Salem, and all prisoners sentenced for more than two months are sent to the penitentiary at Albany.

The principal public works in the co. are the Champlain Canal,⁵ extending in and along Wood Creek and the Hudson to Greenwich; the Saratoga & Whitehall R. R., extending through Fort Edward, Kingsbury, Fort Ann, and Whitehall, with a branch to Lake Station and another to the State line; the Troy & Rutland R. R., extending from Eagle Bridge, through White Creek, Jackson, and Salem, to the State line; and the Rutland and Washington R. R., extending n. upon the Vt. line and entering Granville. The first newspaper in this co. was established at Salem in 1788.⁶

Upon the advent of the whites, few Indians were found within the limits of this co.; but Indian ² At Sandy Hill a dam 8 to 10 ft. high and 1200 ft. long crosses the Hudson, the water setting back to the foot of the rapids below Glens Falls. At Fort Edward a dam 27 ft. high and 900 feet long was built by the State in 1821, as a feeder to the canal, but, the Glens Falls feeder superseding it, it was sold to a company in 1840 and cut down to 16 ft. The Saratoga Dam (where the Champlain Canal crosses the Hudson into Saratoga co.) is 1390 feet long. Batten Kil is crossed by 9 dams. White Creek furnishes a large number of mill sites, once improved, but now mostly abandoned. Black Creek has several valuable and improved mill sites. Mettowee or Pawlet River has also several valuable mill sites.

The Granville Telegraph.
The Public Ledger was started at Fort Edward in 1854 by H. F. Blanchard, and is still continued.

trails and implements of Indian art frequently found show that it had been inhabited at a former period. The n. portion of the co., lying in the natural channel of communication between Hudson River and Lake Champlain,¹ became the great highway of hostile parties passing between the Five Nations and the Canada Indians, and at a later day by the more formidable armies of disciplined troops in the struggles which ended in the conquest of Canada. The French made incursions upon the English and Five Nations in 1665, 1688, and 1693; and these were returned by attacks upon the French and Indians in Canada in 1691 and 1692. For several years after, the passage of small hostile parties was of frequent occurrence. In 1709, Forts Ann and Nicholson were erected by the English and garrisoned for the protection of the northern frontier; but upon the return of peace they were abandoned.² Frequent incursions of small parties were made in the War of 1748, and many persons were murdered,—though no regular engagement took place. Again, during the French War of 1755, forts were built at Ft. Ann, Ft. Edward, and the whole region around the head of Lakes George and Champlain became the theater of stirring military events. The armies that attacked Ticonderoga, and those that finally effected the conquest of all the French posts upon the lakes, marched through this region; and it formed a portion of the great battle-ground between the armies of two nations contending for the sovereignty of a continent. In the summer and fall of 1777, upon the advance of Burgoyne, war again, for a brief space, spread terror and desolation over the whole region "Skeneborough" was burned and abandoned on the 7th of July, Fort Ann was taken on the 8th, Fort Edward on the 28th, and the country was overrun by the enemy soon after. On the 13th and 14th of Sept. the British army crossed the Hudson into Saratoga co.; and about the 10th of Oct. Fort Edward was re-taken by the Americans, thus effectually cutting off the retreat of the army, already disheartened by their defeat at Bemis Heights. The surrender of Burgoyne put an end to the war in this section; and the subsequent history of the co. is but the record of the continued and progressive triumphs of peaceful industry.

ARGYLE³—was granted by patent, May 21, 1764,⁴ and formed as a town, March 23, 1786. Greenwich was taken off in 1803, and Fort Edward in 1818. It lies near the center of the co. Its surface is rolling in the n. and w. and broken and hilly in the s. and e. The highlands are divided into broad ridges with abrupt declivities. In the n. part Tamerack Swamp covers several hundred acres. The principal stream is the Moses Kil,⁵ which flows in a s. w. direction through near the center of the town. The other streams are small brooks, which flow into the Hudson, Batten Kil, and Wood Creek. Cossayuna Lake⁶ is a beautiful sheet of water, 3 mi. long, situated in a narrow valley in the s. e. part of the town. It is everywhere surrounded by steep hill slopes, and contains several beautiful green islands. To the n. e. of this lake, high up among the hills, is Argyle Lake,⁷ a small sheet of water, half a mile in circumference. The soil of the town is generally a productive, slaty or gravelly loam. A mineral spring, 1 mi. n. w. from South Argyle, is said to resemble those at Saratoga. Argyle (p. v.) was incorp. March 27, 1838. It is the seat of the Argyle Academy. Pop. 375. North Argyle and South Argyle (p. offices) each contains about 20 houses, and The Hook 10. Argyle was conveyed to 83 families, and in 1765 the first settlement commenced.⁸ The family of John Allen, a tory living on Lot 25, was murdered by Indians belonging to Burgoyne's army, July 26, 1777.⁹ The first church (Asso. Ref. Presb.) was formed in 1793;¹⁰ Rev. Geo. Mairs was the first preacher.

³ Named in honor of the Scottish Duke of Argyle.

⁴ This patent was granted to Scotch immigrants (who came over under Laughlin Campbell in 1738-40) and to their descendants. It embraced 47,450 acres, and granted township privileges. Duncan Read, Neal Shaw, Alexander McNachten, (McNaughton), and Neal Gillespie were appointed trustees. A stately avenue, called "The Street," 7 mi. in length and 24 rods in width, was laid out (on paper) and surveyed e. and w. through the center of the township, and lots were laid out on each side. In the rear farm lots were laid out, thus affording accommodations for proprietors and tenants. In the summer of 1764 this tract was surveyed and divided into 141 lots, in accordance with this plan, by Arch. Campbell, of N. J., and Chris. Yates, of Schoenectady. The natural impediments in the way, however, precluded the possibility of building the street or in any way realizing the plan.

⁵ Called at different times "Long," "Legbrants," "McEachrons," "Cowans," and "Big Lake." The name given on the map and in the text, after having gone out of use, was restored by Dr. Fitch in his survey. Cossayuna is said by the St. Françoise Indians to signify "The Lake at our pines," and is highly expressive of its original scenery.

⁷ Summit Lake is a picturesque sheet of water in the co., upon the very summit of the central range of hills. Two sawmills are supplied by its outlet.

CAMBRIDGE—was incorp. by patent,¹ July 21, 1761. It was formed as a town² in Albany co. March 7, 1788, and annexed to Washington co. Feb. 7, 1791. White Creek and Jackson were taken off in 1815. The surface of the town is hilly in the n. and rolling in the s. The summits of the hills are 200 to 300 ft. above the valleys. The e. part embraces a portion of the valley of Owl Kil, which is celebrated for the beauty of its scenery. Upon the w. of this valley are high undulating hills, the broad sweeps of which show alternate patches of green woodland and cultivated farms; and upon the e. rise the Taghkaniek Mts., rough and broken, while the valley itself is very smooth and level. The other streams are Wampecaek Creek, Whiteside Brook, and several other small brooks. The soil is generally a gravelly and sandy loam. Flax is extensively cultivated. Cambridge (p. v.) contains 100 houses and the Cambridge Washington Academy; Center Cambridge (p. v.) 13 houses; North Cambridge (p. v.) 10; and Buskirks Bridge³ (p. v.) 15. The first settlers consisted of 30 families, who located in 1761, '62, and '63 and who each received 100 acres of land as a gift from the proprietors.⁴ Phineas Whiteside,⁵ from Penn., settled 8 mi. w. of the Colerain Colony, in 1766. The expedition against Bennington, under Baum, passed through the town Aug. 13, 1777; and the remnant of the fugitives returned on the night of the 16th. The first church (Asso. Presb.) was organized in 1789; Rev. Thos. Beverly was the first pastor.⁶

DRESDEN—was formed from Putnam, as "South Bay," March 15, 1822; its present name was adopted April 17, 1822. It lies between Lake George and the s. extremity of Lake Champlain. Nearly its entire surface is covered by steep mountain ridges, several peaks of which are 1500 ft. above the lake. The declivities of the mountains are steep, sometimes forming perpendicular precipices several hundred feet high. Upon the side of Lake George the mountains rise abruptly from the very edge of the water; but upon the borders of Lake Champlain is a narrow strip of arable land. The principal mountain peaks are Black' and Sugar Loaf Mts. and Diameter Precipice. Pike Brook and the head branches of Mill Brook take their rise in these mountains. All of the surface in the interior is covered with forests or naked rocky peaks. The soil is hard and sterile, and is unfit for agricultural purposes. The town was principally conveyed to non-commissioned officers and privates of the Colonial British army; and settlement was begun about 1784, by Jos. Phippeny, at the foot of South Bay. Ebenezer Chapman, — Boggs, and Daniel Ruff came soon after, and settled along the bay and lake. Lumbering has formed a prominent pursuit. In several localities iron and other ores have been noticed, but none worked to any extent. The town is without a p. o. A bridge was built, at the expense of the State, across South Bay, near its outlet, in 1856.

EASTON—was formed from Stillwater and Saratoga, March 3, 1789, while a part of Albany co., and so named from being the e. town in the Saratoga Patent. It was annexed to Washington co. Feb. 7, 1791. It lies upon the e. bank of the Hudson. A broad intervalle extends along the course of the river, which is succeeded by a plateau region, embracing the central and s. portions of the town. The e. part is broken by several lofty hills. The principal highlands are Willards Mt.⁸ and Harrington Hill. The streams are Hudson River and Batten Kil,⁹ forming the w. and n. boundaries of the town, Kidney and Vly Creeks, and a few minor streams. Upon the e. borders of the town is an extensive swamp known as "The Vly."¹⁰ The Di-on-on-dah-o-wa Falls,¹¹ upon ¹ This patent embraced 31,500 acres, and was nominally conveyed to 60 persons, most of whom resided in Hebron, Conn. The real owners were but 6 in number, and of these 3 only were mentioned in the charter, viz.: Isaac Sawyer and Edward Welle, of Conn., and Jacob Lansing, founder of Lansingburgh. The other three owners—Alex. Colden, Wm. Smith, and Geo. Banyar—were connected with the Colonial Government.

³ Named from Martin Van Buskirk, who built the first bridge.
⁴ The patent was conditional to the settlement of 30 families within 3 years; and to meet this requirement the most inviting portion was surveyed, and 100 acres offered as a gift to each family that would remove thither. These lots lay in a double row, on both sides of Owl Kil, from below the "Checkedred House" into the present town of Jackson. They embrace the several village precincts from Davis Corners to near Stephenson's Corners. Among the settlers were Jas. and Robt., sons of Ephraim Cowan, Jas. and John Cowden, John McClung, Samuel Bell, Col. Blair, Geo. Gilmore, Geo. Duncan, David Harrow, Wm. Clark, John Scott, and Thos. Morrieau. A son of the last was the first child born of civilized parents in town. Hugh Kelson, a son of Col. Blair, was the first person who died in town. It is recorded that of these 30 families (who were for a time the most thrifty in town) all but two lost their property and died in poverty, mainly from intemperance. They were mostly from Thomas, William, and James) upon large farms near him. These estates are all owned by his descendants at the present day. The remaining lands were mostly leased by the six proprietors at an annual rent of one shilling per acre; but they being generally willing to sell at a sum equal to the present worth of the perpetual rent, most of the settlers have gradually acquired the fee simple of their farms. The first inn was of logs, on the site of the "Checkedred House," and kept by Jas. Cowden. Philip Van Ness built the first sawmill and gristmill on Gordons Brook, near Buskirks Bridge. This neighborhood was called by the Indians "Ty-o-shoke," and by them a field of 12 acres had been cleared there for corn. Other early settlers on the Hoosick Patent were Col. Lewis Van Wort and John Quackenbush.

⁸ Willards Mt. is said to have derived its name from a Mr. Willard, who from its summit, with a spyglass, reconnoitered the position of Burgoyne's army at Saratoga.

Batten Kil, below Galesville, are 60 ft. high, and well worthy of note. The soil is an excellent quality of sandy and gravelly loam. Limestone of an excellent quality abounds in this town. Machinery, agricultural implements, and woolen goods are manufactured at Galesville. Easton Corners (North Easton p. o.) contains 30 houses; Easton (p. v.) 17; South Easton (p. v.) 15; and Crandalls Corners 8. Parts of Union Village and Galesville¹ are in this town. The date of the first settlement is unknown, but it was probably several years after the Saratoga Patent² was issued. In 1709 a fort³ was built on the hill top, 1 mi. s. of Galesville, and a few families settled under its shelter; but the dread of Indian hostilities prevented the settlement from spreading. On the 30th of Nov. 1745, the enemy made a descent upon the place, killed 30 persons, and took 60 prisoners, including a portion of the garrison, who were decoyed from the fort by the Indians feigning to be wounded. The remaining part of the garrison burned the fort and unfinished blockhouses and withdrew, leaving the frontier unprotected. Settlers did not return until 1760.⁴ At Schuylerville is a bridge across the Hudson 800 ft. long. The first religious meeting (Quaker) was held in 1778. A Ref. Prot. D. church was formed in 1805; Rev. Philip Duryea was the first preacher.⁵

FORT ANN—was formed, as "Westfield," March 23, 1786. Hartford was taken off in 1793, and Putnam in 1806. It received its present name, April 6, 1808, from the old fort erected here in 1709. It lies s. of the southern extremity of Lake Champlain, and s. e. of Lake George. Its central and w. parts are occupied by the high and rocky peaks of the Palmertown⁶ Mts., here divided into three distinct ranges,—French Mt., in the w. part, Mt. Putnam, in the center, and Fort Ann Mts., in the e. The extreme e. edge of the town is occupied by uplands belonging to the Cossayuna Range. Diameter Rock and Black Mt., on the line of Dresden, are the highest peaks, and are 1300 to 2500 ft. above tide. The valleys separating the ranges of the Palmertown Mts. are known as "Furnace" and "Welchs Hollow." The principal streams are Wood Creek, Halfway Creek, Furnace Hollow Creek, and Podunk Brook. The principal bodies of water are Orebed, Sly, Copeland, Hadlock, and Trout Ponds. The soil in the mountain region is hard and sterile, scarcely strong enough to support the natural growth of forest trees; but in the valleys it is a gravelly loam alternating with a stiff clay.⁷ Iron⁸ and woolen goods are manufactured to some extent. Fort Ann⁹ (p. v.) has 608 inhabitants; Griswolds Mills (p. v.) about 14 houses. West Fort Ann, (p. o.), South Bay, Canes Falls, and Comstocks Landing (p. o.) are small villages. Fort Ann was one of a chain of military works erected in 1709, to facilitate the extensive operations then in progress against Canada.¹⁰ It stood upon the w. side of Wood Creek, about half a mile from the present village of Fort Ann, the Champlain Canal passing partly across the spot which it enclosed. It was built at the joint expense of England and the Colonies. Artillery Patent, covering the e. part of this town, was granted Oct. 24, 1764, to Jos. Walton and 23 other Provincial officers, in equal shares, irrespective of grade. Settlement was not generally begun until after the Revolution. An engagement occurred here, July 8, 1777, between the rear guard of the retreating American army, under Col. Long, and the advanced guard of the British, under Col. Hill.¹¹ In Oct. 1780, a blockhouse in this town was burned by the enemy. The first church (Bap.) was formed in 1789;¹² Rev. Sherman Babcock was the first pastor.

FORT EDWARD—was formed from Argyle, April 10, 1818. It lies upon the e. bank of the Hudson, near the center of the w. border of the co. A wide interval extends along the

² This patent was granted Nov. 4, 1684, and renewed Oct. 9, 1708. The part e. of the Hudson was 12 mi. long and 6 mi. broad.

³ This fort was built of thick posts driven into the ground close to each other, in the manner of palisades, forming a square, "the length of whose sides was within the reach of a musket shot." At each corner were houses for officers; and within the palisades were barracks of timbers.—Kalm's Travels.

⁴ Among the first settlers of about this period were Pet. Becker, Elijah Freeman, Thos. and Michael Beadle, William Thompson, Nathan Potter, John Swain, and William Coffin. A school was kept near Union Village as early as 1787. Gerrit Laneing kept the first store, in 1794; and John Gale built the first mill, at Galesville, in 1810. The first woolen factory was built in the summer of 1846, by Gale, Rodgers & Reynolds.

⁵ There are 5 churches in town; 2 M. E., 2 Ref. Prot. D., and 1 Friends.

5 tons of pig iron daily. A forge was built at West Fort Ann in 1828, for making anchors and chain cables.

⁹ Incorp. March 7, 1820.

¹⁰ While this fort was in process of erection, a force of 1500 French and Indians were sent to destroy it; but, learning that Col. Nicholson was posted here with a superior force, they returned. While the English were awaiting at this place the opening of a road and the construction of bateaux on Lake Champlain, a fatal sickness broke out in the camp, and great numbers died as if poisoned. In October Col. Nicholson returned with his crippled forces to Albany. Charlevoix states that this sickness was produced by the treachery of the Indians, who threw the skins of their game into the swamp above the camp. It is more probable that it was a malignant dysentery caused by the malarial of the swamps and the extreme heat.

river, but toward the E. the surface rises to a height of 200 to 300 ft. and spreads out into a beautifully undulating upland. The Hudson, Moses Kil and Dead Creek are the principal streams. The soil upon the river is a mixture of heavy clay and alluvium, but farther E. it is a sandy or gravelly loam. In town are several extensive manufacturing establishments.¹ Fort Edward² (p. v.) is finely situated on the Hudson. Pop. in 1858, 1,565. The Washington Co. Seminary and Female Collegiate Institute,³ one of the largest academic institutions in the State, is located at this village. Fort Miller (p. v.) is situated on the Hudson, about 7 mi. below Fort Edward. Pop. 225. Fort Edwards Center is a p. o., and Durkeetown is a hamlet. The first family that located in the town or co. was that of Col. Lydius, son of Rev. John Lydius, who, having acquired the title to Delliur's discarded patent,⁴ built a house, and engaged in trade with the Indians at what is now Fort Edward Village.⁵ His daughter, Catherine, was born here, and was the first white child born in the co. Fort Nicholson was built in 1709, but was soon after abandoned. As a part of the plan of military operations against Canada, about 600 men, under Gen. Lyman, were sent forward, in June, 1755, to build a fort where Fort Nicholson had formerly stood, at the great carrying place to Lake Champlain.⁶ Fort Edward was a very important depôt for arms and rendezvous for armies in the great expeditions against Canada; and it served as a vast hospital for the sick and wounded until 1760, when it was allowed to go to decay. During the Revolution it was again occupied by both British and Americans. Fort Miller is named from the fort built, about 1755, in the bend of the river opposite the village.⁷ After the peace this town settled rapidly. Wm. Duer,⁸ son-in-law to Lord Sterling, was the pioneer of Ft. Miller, where he built a large house and sawmill. There are 6 churches in town.⁹

GRANVILLE—was formed March 23, 1786. It is situated upon the E. border of the co., N. of the center. Its surface is undulating and hilly. The ridges generally slope gradually to their summits, which are elevated 300 to 500 ft. above the valleys. Quarries of excellent roofing slate have been opened in different parts of the town.¹⁰ Wide intervals of excellent land extend along the course of Mettowee, or Pawlet,¹¹ and Indian Rivers. The soil is a slaty and gravelly loam, and is particularly adapted to potatoes, large quantities of which are exported. A limited amount of manufactures¹² is carried on in town. Granville¹³ (p. v.) contains an academy and 450 inhabitants; North Granville (p. v.) a female seminary and 220 inhabitants; Middle Granville (p. v.) 439 inhabitants; and South Granville (p. v.) 111. The land in this town is embraced in several grants made to about 30 captains and lieutenants who had served in the French War.¹⁴ Barnaby Byrnes Patent, of 2000 acres, in the s. e. corner, was sold to Kenneth McKennith, a merchant of New York, who again sold it to Donald Fisher, a tailor of that city. Fisher induced several relatives of his to remove from Scotland and settle upon his tract. In the Revolution he withdrew to Canada, and his lands were confiscated and sold; but, owing to some informality, the

⁶ It was named Fort Lyman; but a few years after the name was changed to Ft. Edward, in honor of Edward, Duke of York, grandson of Geo. II., and brother of Geo. III. It stood on the bank of the river, N. of the creek, and within the present village limits. It was 4 sided, with bastions on 3 angles, the fourth being protected by the river. Its ramparts of earth and timber, 16 ft. high and 22 thick, were mounted with 6 cannon and enclosed several large buildings. Storehouses and barracks were built on Monroe's Island, opposite. A band of savages attempted to surprise it in Aug. 1759, but were repulsed by Maj. Israel Putnam and his rangers. In the winter following, Putnam saved the fort from destruction by a characteristic exercise of cool intrepidity and daring. The fort accidentally took fire, and the flames spread with great rapidity in the immediate vicinity of the powder magazine. Putnam placed himself in the path of the flames, and fought desperately until the fire was subdued; and when he retired from his post his arms, face, and hands were entirely skinned, and the frail covering of the magazine was completely charred.

The murder of Jane McCrea took place July 27, 1777, near a spring, and beside a venerable pine tree a little E. of the village. This tragedy was at once reported throughout the country, and aided greatly to weaken the influence of the British, while it aroused the patriots to more desperate efforts in resisting the in-down and made into canes and boxes as mementos of the event. The remains of Miss McC. are interred in the Union Cemetery.

GREENWICH—was formed from Argyle, March 4, 1803. It lies on the e. border of the co., in the n. angle formed by the junction of the Hudson and Batten Kil. Ranges of hills, 200 to 300 ft. above the valleys, extend through the central and eastern parts of the town. Bald Mt., near Batten Kil, is the principal peak. The declivities of the hills are so gradual that the surface appears to be rolling rather than hilly. Upon Batten Kil are two considerable falls, one of which is 75 ft. in height. The other principal streams are the Cossayuna, Rogers, and Stony Creeks and Livingston Brook. Cossayuna Lake extends into the n. e. corner of the town. The soil is a slaty and gravelly loam interspersed with patches of clay. The town is more extensively engaged in manufactures than any other in the co.⁴ Union Village,⁵ (Greenwich p. o.), lying partly in this town and partly in Easton, contains an academy and 1,173 inhabitants, 888 of whom are in Greenwich; Bald Mountain⁶ (p. v.) 225 inhabitants; East Greenwich (p. v.) and Center Falls each about 100 houses; and North Greenwich (p. v.) 70. Galesville (p. v.) is a manufacturing village of about 40 houses, on the line of Easton. Lakeville (Lake p. o.) is a hamlet. It is supposed the first settlement was made by the Dutch, previous to the French War, a few families of them remaining at the time of the Revolution.⁷ About 1733 a large number of Scotch emigrants had come over under the promise of grants of land from Government,—which promise was not fulfilled. Jan. 5, 1763, three of these emigrants—Duncan, George, and Jas. Campbell, sons of Laughlin Campbell—petitioned for 100,000 acres; and on the 11th of Nov. following a patent of 10,000 acres was issued to the 3 brothers, their 3 sisters, (Rose Graham, Margaret Eustace, and Lily Murray,) and 4 other persons. This grant embraced about one-third of the town of Greenwich. The first church (Bap.) was organized in 1774; Rev. Leonard Bowers was the first preacher.⁸

HAMPTON—was formed March 3, 1786. It lies upon the e. border of the co., n. of the center. A range of hills, about 500 ft. above the valleys and for the most part covered with forests, extends through the central and eastern parts of the town. Poultney River, separating the town from Vt., is the principal stream. Along its course is a wide interval of fine land. The soil is a gravelly loam interspersed with clay. The interval is alike fertilized and desolated by the frequent overflows of the stream. Hampton Corners (Hampton p. o.) contains 20 houses, and Low Hampton⁹ (p. o.) 5. The greater part of this town was included in patents granted to Provincial officers. The n. part embraces about 2000 acres of Skenes Little Patent.¹⁰ The first settlement was made some little time before the Revolution,¹¹ by Capt. Brooks, Col. Gideon Warner, and — Webster. The first church (Prot. E.) was built at a very early date,¹² Rev. Stephen Jeweth, from N. J., was the first preacher.

HARTFORD—was formed from "Westfield," (now Fort Ann,) March 12, 1793. It lies near the center of the co. The s. e. section is broken and hilly, and the center and n. w. level or gently undulating. The summits of the highest hills are 500 to 700 ft. above the level of the Champlain Canal. The principal streams are East Creek and its branches. Slate and limestone of an excellent quality are found among the hills.¹³ The soil in the s. e. is a rich, slaty loam, and that in the n. w. a heavy clay. There are several chalybeate springs, the principal of which is Hodges, Ebenezer Walker, and Dan'l Dano, settled before or about the time of the Revolution. — Baker kept an inn at North Granville, about 1700, and — Jenks kept a store as early as 1795. Nath'l Spring erected a gristmill at Granville, about 1787. A school was taught by Jas. Richards, in 1783, at South Granville.

The Dion-on-dah-o-wa Falls are not improved. There are a woolen factory, a grist, saw, and plaster mill, at East Greenwich, a grist, saw, and plaster mill, at Battenville, a woolen factory, grist, saw, and plaster mill, at Center Falls, and mills near the mouth of the stream.

⁵ The first settlement in this village was made in 1781, by John Whipple, and it was first called "Whipple City." It was incorp. March 29, 1809. The first cotton factory in the State was erected here in 1804, by Wm. Mowry, who had received his instruction at the pioneer establishment of Sam'l Slater at Pawtucket, R. I. In this village are several mills and machine shops and a large carriage depot.

⁶ This village is entirely dependent upon the manufacture of lime widely known as the Bald Mt. lime. At the kilns of H. W. Lowher 60,000 bushels are annually manufactured.

⁷ Among the first settlers at Lakeville were Alexander Roll, John McEachron, and Robt. HEBRON⁴—was formed March 23, 1786, and named from Hebron, Conn. It lies near the center of the e. border of the co. A broad mountain range extends through the center, occupying nearly one-half of its entire surface, and a series of high hills extends through the e. and w. sections. The summits of the highlands are 300 to 500 ft. above the valleys and are mostly crowned with forests. The ranges of hills are separated by the valleys of Black Creek and its principal w. branch. The soil is a sandy and slaty loam, of a light, porous nature, easy of cultivation, and well adapted to resist the extremes of wet and drouth. In the hilly regions is considerable rocky waste land. In the n. and e. are extensive and valuable quarries of slate. North Hebron⁵ (p. v.) contains the North Hebron Institute and 12 houses; East Hebron (Hebron p. o.) 12 houses; West Hebron (p. v.) the West Hebron Classical School and 25 houses; Belcher⁶ (p. v.) 20 houses; and Slateville (p. o.) 8. This town was embraced in patents granted to officers and privates who had served in the French War,—mostly to Scotch Highlanders belonging to the 77th Regt. of Foot. These grants were made so long after the war that those who were entitled to them never appeared to claim them. The first settlements appear to have been made before the Revolution. There are two academic institutions in town. The first church (Asso. Ref. Presb.) was organized in 1780;⁷ Rev. Dr. Gray was the first pastor.

JACKSON—was formed from Cambridge, April 17, 1815. It lies on the e. border of the co., s. of the center. The n. branch of the Taghkanick Range occupies the e. portion of the town, and several parallel ranges extend through the central and w. portions, rendering the entire surface very hilly. The summits of the hills are 300 to 800 ft. above the valleys and are generally crowned with forests. The declivities are often steep and rocky. The principal streams are Batten Kil and Owl Creek and their branches. In the valley between the hills that border immediately upon Batten Kil and those further w. are several small lakes, known as Long, Big, Dead, and Little Ponds. These lakes are beautiful sheets of water, surrounded by hills, forests, and fine cultivated farms. The soil is a slaty loam and very productive. Jackson Center (Jackson p. o.) contains 16 houses; Coila, (p. v.) on the line of Cambridge, about 30 houses; and Anaquassacook 12. Portions of this town and White Creek were embraced in the Anaquassacook Patent of 10,000 acres, granted May 11, 1762.⁸ The first settlers were James Irvine, Peter Magill, and John Miller, all of whom located in the s. part of the town.⁹ The only church (Ref. Prot. D.) in town was organized Dec. 31, 1833; Rev. Jas. W. Stewart was the first pastor. Geo. Law, one of the projectors and proprietors of the California line of steamships, was a native of this town.

KINGSBURY—was incorp. by patent May 11, 1762, and recognized as a town by the State Government March 23, 1786. It lies on the w. border of the co., s. of the center. Nearly all of its surface is level or gently undulating. A range of hills, rising about 150 ft. above the valleys, occupies the extreme e. edge of the town. The principal streams are the Hudson, in the s. w. corner; Wood Creek, upon the e. border; Halfway Brook, in the n. w. corner, and Moss Brook. At Bakers Falls,¹⁰ upon the Hudson, the river shoots down a steep descent of ledges, in all 76 ft. in 60 rods, forming a scene of great beauty, and affording an extensive water-power. The soil along the valley of Wood Creek is a hard, stiff clay; in the other parts of the town, a sandy or gravelly loam. There are extensive quarries of limestone in town, furnishing an excellent building material; from these quarries was obtained the stone for the locks on the Champlain & Hudson

² Col. John Buck, Manning Bull, Stephen and Ass Bump, John and Edward Ingalls, and Nathan and Sam'l Taylor were among the first settlers. Aaron and Eber Ingoldsbee, from Boylston, Mass., came in 1782, and Timothy Stocking, Ebenezer Smith, and John Paine in 1784. A school was taught in 1790, at North Hartford, by Thos. Paine, from Conn. A gristmill was built of logs at an early date.

³ The census reports 4 churches in town; M. E. Bap., Cong., and Union. Rev. Wm. Miller, originator of the belief that the second advent of Christ would take place in 1843, resided in this town.

⁴ During the Revolution, and for some time after, the place was

⁵ Locally known as "Munros Meadows."

⁶ Locally known as "Bellins."

⁷ The census reports 7 churches; 2 M. E., 2 Sec. Advent, Bap., Asso. Presb., and Asso. Ref. Presb.

⁸ This patent was granted to Ryer, Jacob, Freeman, and W. M. Schenckherm, Johannes, Nicholas, and Peter Quackenbush, Thos. and John Smith, and Joseph Jansen, all of Schenectady.

⁹ Among the settlers on the Anaquassacook were Hugh Thompson and Ebenezer Billings, and near the ponds John McLean and Jonathan Conger. A schoolhouse was built in 1780, a little w. of Peter Hill's residence. An inn was kept by Isaac Murray about 1790. John McGill built a store of logs, in 1781, on the site of the present residence of Peter Hill.

Canal. Manufacturing is carried on to a considerable extent.¹ Sandy Hill² (p. v.) has a population of 1,260. Moss Street contains 25 houses; Kingsbury (p. o.) 25; Pattens Mills (p. o.) 20; Dunhams Basin 10; Vaughns Corners 12; Adamsville (p. o.) 12; Langdons Corners 5; and Smiths Basin (p. o.) 8. Kingsbury Patent, containing 26,000 acres, was granted to Jas. Bradshaw and 22 others, from Conn., May 11, 1762. The first settlers were James Bradshaw, Albert Baker, and his sons Albert and Charles, from New York City.³ A sawmill was built at Bakers Falls before the Revolution, and a gristmill in 1807. The town was the scene of many an adventure during the French War,⁴ and the settlement was entirely broken up during the Revolution. Traces of a road cut by Burgoyne's army are still visible near Moss Street. The first minister was Francis Baylor, a Moravian, about 1776. Meetings were held by the Prot. E. and the Bap. in 1795.⁵ Several noted men have been residents of this town.⁶

PUTNAM⁷—was formed from "Westfield," (now Fort Ann,) Feb. 28, 1806. Dresden was set off in 1822. This town lies in the extreme n. end of the co., upon the mountainous peninsula between Lakes George and Champlain. The mountains are divided into two separate ranges by the valleys of Mill and Charter Brooks. The w. range of mountains rises abruptly from the surface of Lake George, and in the s. part of the town attains an elevation of 900 to 1,000 ft. above the surface of the lake. The greater part of the surface is rocky, broken, and unfit for cultivation; but sections of arable land extend along the valleys of the small streams and the borders of Lake Champlain. The soil is generally a hard, gravelly loam. Graphite of a fine quality is found in abundance. A small pond lies among the mountains, on the w. side of the town, 300 feet above Lake George. Putnam Corners, (Putnam p. o.,) containing about 10 houses, is the only village. The tillable lands were mostly granted to privates of the N. Y. Provincial regiments, and feeble settlements had probably commenced before the Revolution.⁸ The first church (Asso. Presb.) was built in 1801,⁹ Rev. James Miller, from Scotland, was the first pastor. A private academy at Putnam Corners was established in 1854.

SALEM—was formed by patent Aug. 7, 1764, and was recognized by statute March 23, 1786. It lies on the e. border of the co., s. of the center. Its surface consists of moderately elevated ridges, separated by narrow valleys, all extending in a n. e. and s. w. direction. The hills are usually bordered by gradual slopes and their summits are crowned with forests. There is very little waste land in town. Batten Kil, forming the s. boundary, and Black, White, and Trout Creeks, are the principal streams. Lyttles Pond, in the n. part of the town, is a beautiful sheet of water lying in a basin among the hills and surrounded by forests. The soil is a rich, slaty or gravelly loam. Salem, (p. v.,) incorp. April 4, 1803, has 832 inhabitants; Shushan (p. v.) about 25 houses; and Eagleville, (East Salem p. o.,) Clapps Mills, and Fitches Point have each 40 to 50 inhabitants. James Turner and Joshua Conkey, from Pelham, Mass., were the first settlers, in 1761. They were joined, the next year, by Hamilton McCollister. In 1764 a patent of 25,000 acres was obtained,—one-half owned by a company of New England settlers and the other by Oliver De Lancey and Peter Du Bois, two Government officials.¹⁰ These last sold their share to Rev. Thos. Clark and his company of Irish and Scotch immigrants at a perpetual rent of one shilling per acre.¹¹ The Camden Tract, on the e. part of the town, was granted to captains

¹ The dam at Sandy Hill, across the Hudson, 1,200 ft. long and 10 ft. high, furnishes water-power for several mills and a woolen factory. At Bakers Falls there are a paper mill and 2 gristmills. The lumber business of the town is very extensive and important, the sawmills being supplied with logs floated down from the Upper Hudson. There are also in town establishments for the manufacture of pianos, steam engines, portable saw-mills, &c.

² This village has been a half-shire town since 1807. It was incorp. March 9, 1810.

³ Among the other first settlers were Michael Hoffnagle, Solomon King, Oliver Colvin, and Nehemiah Seely.

⁴ At one time 17 soldiers were taken prisoners by the Indians and carried to the present site of Sandy Hill Village. They were seated on a log, in a row, when their captors deliberately began to tomahawk them, taking them in order from one end of the log. When all were killed but one, (John Quackenbush, of Albany,) a squaw claimed him, and his life was spared. He returned after a few years of captivity, and resided near Hoosick, in Cambridge. In Aug. 1758, Majs. Putnam and Rogers encountered a party of French and Indians in this town, during which engagement Putnam was made prisoner. The enemy were finally compelled to withdraw, with a loss of 90 men.

⁶ Gov. Wright received his legal education at the office of Henry C. Martindale, of Sandy Hill. Lieut. Gov. Pitcher, for some time Acting Governor, was a citizen of this town. Hon. Wm. P. Lee, late Chief Justice and Chancellor of the Sandwich Islands, was a native of Sandy Hill.

⁷ Named in honor of Gen. Israel Putnam, who in this vicinity, as major in the colonial service, performed some of his most daring exploits.

⁹ There are 2 churches; Asso. Presb., and F. W. Bap.

¹⁰ This patent was surveyed into 308 lots, and a large pine lot was reserved for the common benefit, and cut up into small lots for division; 3 lots near the center of the town were set apart to support the minister and schoolmaster.

and lieutenants in the Provincial army. Rev. Thomas Clark was the first minister.¹ The Salem Washington Academy was incorp. Feb. 15, 1791.²

WHITE CREEK³—was formed from Cambridge, April 17, 1815. It is the s. e. corner town of the co. The surface of the s. portion is gently rolling, and the central and n. portions are occupied by the Taghkanick Mts. The summits of these mountains are rocky and broken and covered with forests, and their sides are bounded by abrupt declivities and perpendicular ledges. The principal streams are Hoosick River, Owl Kil, Pumpkin Hook,⁴ Center, White, and Little White Creeks. The upper course of Owl Kil is through a deep and narrow valley abounding with picturesque views. A small vein of lead has been discovered three-fourths of a mi. e. of Posts Corners. The soil is a fine quality of gravelly loam. More sheep are raised in this town than in any other in the co. Garden seeds and flax are largely cultivated. North White Creek (p. v.) adjoins Cambridge. White Creek, (p. o.), Posts Corners, (Center White Creek p. o.), Ash Grove, and Davis Corners are each small villages. The Walloomsack Patent, lying partly in this town, on the s., was settled by the Dutch. Among the other grants were the Bain, Embury, Grant and Campbell, and Lake and Van Cuyler, Patents. A colony of Irish Methodists settled near Ash Grove about 1770; and here was organized the second M. E. church in America,⁵ by Thos. Ashton (for whom the locality was named) and Rev. Philip Embury, who served here until his death, in 1775. James and Thos. Morrison made the first settlement, near White Creek.⁶

WHITEHALL⁷—was incorp. by patent Nov. 12, 1763, as "Skenesborough."⁸ Its name was changed March 23, 1786. It lies at the s. extremity of Lake Champlain. Its surface is mountainous in the w. and level and undulating in the center and e. Saddle Mt., upon the w. border, is nearly 900 ft. above the surface of the lake. The principal streams are Wood Creek, Mettowee (or Pawlet) and Poultney Rivers. Upon Wood Creek, near its mouth, is a fall which furnishes a valuable water-power. The soil of the greater part of the town is a hard, stiff clay and is best adapted to grazing. Considerable manufacturing is carried on in town.⁹ Whitehall (p. v.) is situated near the mouth of Wood Creek, on Lake Champlain. The r. r., canal, and lake trade give this place commercial importance. The Whitehall Academy is in the e. part of the village. Pop. 3,225. This town was the scene of stirring military events during the French War.¹⁰ The first settler was Maj. Skene, who located here, with 30 families, in 1761. Nominally associating 24 others with himself, he obtained a patent of 25,000 acres, March 13, 1765; and a patent of 9,000 acres in the town of Hampton and Whitehall, July 6, 1771, known as Skene's Little Patent. About 1770 he built a massive stone house and barn, a forge, and one or two sawmills. He also built a sloop upon the lake, and a road, known as "Skenes Road," 30 mi. through the wilderness toward Salem. He appears to have been a man of great energy of character, and he endeavored to secure solid and permanent advantages to the infant settlement.¹¹ Upon the approach of the Revolution, Maj. Skene espoused the royalist cause, and his house was taken by the Americans in May, 1775.¹² In 1776 an American garrison was stationed here, and a small fleet was fitted

¹ Rev. Thos. Clark (Assoc. Presb.) was the first minister; and his church, formed in Ireland, was transplanted without reorganization. In 1769 a Presb. society was formed, Rev. John Harford first pastor. Their church, then unfinished, was fortified by Capt. Jos. McCracken in 1777, and soon after was burned by the enemy. There are now 7 churches in town; 2 M. E., Assoc. Presb., Assoc. Ref. Presb., F. W. Bap., Presb., and Morsv.

² For a great number of years this school was one of the most noted in Eastern New York. Among the distinguished persons who have received a portion of their education here were Hon. Samuel Nelson, of the U. S. Supreme Court, Hon. John Savage, formerly Chief Justice of N. Y., and Rev. Dr. Bethune, of Brooklyn.

³ The creek from which the town was named received its name from the white quartz pebbles that form its bed.

⁴ Said to be a corruption of the Indian Pom-pa-nuck, the name of a tribe of Indians who removed here from Conn.

⁶ Among the other early settlers were Buel Beebe, Maj. John Porter, Ephraim, James, and Robt. Cowan, David Slsrow, Sam'l Clark, John McClung, Geo. Duncan, Robt. and George Gilmore, Wm. Eager, Wm. Selfrage, Sam'l Ball, and John Scott. The early settlers in the e. part of the town were Thomas Ashton, Edmund Wells, John and Ebenezer Allen, David Sprague, Seth Chase, John Harroon, Thos. McCool, John Woods, Simeon Fowler, John Young, Josiah Dewey, and John Corey. John Rhodes built the first clothing works, at Pumpkin Hook.

⁸ Named from Maj. Philip Skene, a British half-pay officer, its

⁹ The manufactures consist of lumber, machinery, vessels, boats, carpets, and sash and blinds. An extensive lumber trade is carried on with Canada and with ports on the Hudson, through Lake Champlain and the Champlain Canal.

¹¹ Maj. Skene became acquainted with this place while accompanying the expedition under Gen. Amherst, in 1755. Soon after he planted his first settlement, of 30 families, he was obliged to go to the West Indies; and upon his return in 1763 he found but 15 families remaining. He brought a number of slaves from the West Indies, and employed them and a large number of discharged soldiers upon his works. His house was 130 ft. long, on the ground, and 24 stories high; and his barn was 30 by 40 ft., with massive stone walls pierced with portholes. The other buildings in his settlement were a few frail houses belonging to his tenants.

¹² He was very popular with the settlers, and hence he was an object of both fear and dislike to the patriots. His place was out in the harbor and put under the command of Benedict Arnold. Upon the approach of Burgoyne's army, in 1777, the fort was blown up and the houses, mills, &c. were all burned.¹ During the War of 1812 this place became an important depôt of military stores. The first steamboat on the lake was launched here, in 1809. The Champlain Canal was constructed to this point from Fort Edward in 1819, and finished to Troy in 1824.² In 1806 Gen. Williams made arrangements for building a church, but died before he could carry them into effect. His son (Col. John Williams) and his widow carried out the design, and presented the building to the Asso. Presb. Soc. It was rebuilt in 1826.³

Maj. Skene the younger, 50 tenants, and 12 negroes were taken prisoners. The sloop was sent down the lake to Col. Ethan Allen at Shoreham, Vt. In the cellar of the house was found the body of the wife of the elder Skene, which had been preserved many years to secure to the husband an annuity devised to her "while she remained above ground." The Americans buried the body in the rear of the house.

¹ When Ticonderoga was abandoned to Burgoyne, the public stores were embarked in 200 bateaux and sent up to this point under the convoy of 5 galleys. They were pursued and overtaken, 3 of the galleys were burned, and nearly all of the stores were destroyed. All the works at "Skenesborough" were blown up or burned, and the Americans retreated in disorder to Fort Ann. Burgoyne stayed in this place 3 weeks, while opening a road to Fort Ann. The remains of a battery and blockhouse built about this period, overlooking the lake, are still visible.

² A company, under the name of the "Northern Inland Navigation Company," had previously been formed for the purpose of uniting the waters of Lake Champlain with those of the Hudson. After expending large sums of money, the project was abandoned.

CAYUGA COUNTY.

This county was formed from Onondaga, March 8, 1799. Seneca was taken off in 1804, and a part of Tompkins in 1817. It is a long, narrow co., lying w. of the center of the State, and extending from Lake Ontario s. to near the head of Cayuga Lake. It has a general northerly inclination, and is divided geographically into two nearly equal parts by a line extending eastward from the foot of Cayuga Lake. The n. half is level, or gently undulating, and contains numerous marshes. Some portions of its surface are covered with small, isolated drift-hills 50 to 75 ft. high. The surface of the s. half is rolling, and gradually rises until it attains an elevation of 500 to 800 ft. above the level lands of the n. These highlands are divided into two general ridges, the first lying between Skaneateles and Owasco Lakes, and the second between Owasco and Cayuga Lakes. The summits of both ridges are rolling, and have an elevation of 1000 to 1200 ft. above tide. Their e. declivities are often precipitous, forming high, bold bluffs upon the shores of the lakes, but their w. declivities are more gradual, generally sloping gently down to the very edge of the waters. The s. part of the w. ridge is divided near its center by the valley of Salmon Creek, which is bordered by steep banks 50 to 200 ft. high. Among the most peculiar of the natural features of the co. are the three long, narrow lakes which extend from the level regions of the n. between the parallel ridges far into the highlands of the s. Skaneateles Lake, upon the e. line, is 840 ft. above tide, and is bordered by bluff shores within the limits of the co. Owasco Lake, near the center, is 770 ft. above tide, and its shores are generally bold, and in some places precipitous. Cayuga Lake, on the western border, is 387 ft. above tide, and along nearly its whole extent in the co. the land slopes beautifully and evenly upward from its surface to the summits of the ridges. The water of these lakes is clear and transparent, and may be taken as the very type of purity. This lake region, with its beautifully rolling surface and rich and productive soil, with its green lawns apparently stretching upward from the very bosom of the water, and with its highly cultivated farms, presents one of the finest landscapes in the country. Seneca River flows eastward through near the center of the lowlands which form the n. half of the co. It receives Cayuga and Owasco Outlets from the s. and numerous smaller streams from both the n. and s. A swampy region, known as the Montezuma Marshes, extends along the whole course of the river.¹ The streams that drain the central ridges are small creeks and brooks. Upon the level land in the n. part of the co. are a series of small, shallow lakes and ponds, the principal of which is Cross Lake.

The rocks in this co. generally lie in nearly horizontal layers, but in some places they are disrupted and broken. Their edges appear one above the other, forming the declivities of the hills that rise toward the s. The lowest formation is the Medina sandstone, which outcrops upon the shore of Lake Ontario and covers the n. half of Sterling. Above this successively appear the Oneida, conglomerate, and Clinton groups in the s. part of Sterling; the Lockport group in Victory; the red shale of the Onondaga salt group in Cato, Brutus, Conquest, and Mentz; the gypsum of the same group in Auburn, Aurelius, and Springport, and for a distance of 10 miles along Cayuga Lake; the waterlime and Oriskany sandstone in Owasco, Auburn, Fleming, and Springport; and, successively above the Onondaga and corniferous limestone, the Marcellus and Hamilton shales, Tully limestone, Genesee slate, and the Portage and Ithaca groups, the last occupying the summits of the southern hills. Weak springs of brine are found in the Medina sandstone upon the borders of Lake Ontario, and also in the red shale of the salt group along the course of Seneca River. In the central part of the co., and along the shores of Cayuga Lake, are numerous quarries, which furnish a good quality of waterlime, quicklime, and gypsum. The red sandstone and the Onondaga and corniferous limestone are quarried extensively for building stone. Thin layers of corniferous limestone and of sandstone are extensively quarried along Cayuga Lake, and make an excellent quality of flagging.

The soil in the n. half of the co. is generally a fine quality of sandy or gravelly loam, intermixed with clay, muck, and alluvium; and in the s. it is a gravelly and clay loam and very productive. The whole co. is well adapted to either grain raising or pasturage. Until within a few years wheat has been the staple production; but it has been nearly superseded by rye, oats, barley, and corn. Wool growing and dairying are also extensively pursued. The cultivation of fruit, for which the climate and soil are admirably adapted, is beginning to receive considerable attention. The manufactures of the co., mostly confined to Auburn, are extensive, though comparatively less than in 1810.¹

The county seat is located at the city of Auburn.² An elegant and substantial courthouse was built in 1807-09.³ It is located upon a commanding site in the s. w. part of the city, and contains rooms for the usual co. offices. A fireproof clerk's office is situated adjacent to the courthouse. A substantial stone jail was erected in 1833, in the rear of the courthouse.⁴ The county poorhouse is located upon a farm of 90 acres in Sennett, 3 mi. n. e. of Auburn. It is a poor, old, dilapidated building, containing about 30 rooms. The average number of inmates is about 100, supported at a weekly cost of 70 cts. each. A school is kept during a portion of the year.⁵ The Cayuga Orphan Asylum, located in the city of Auburn, was incorp. in April, 1852. It receives orphans and destitute children and has an average attendance of 30. The institution is well managed, and the children receive good care and instruction. The Erie Canal extends through Brutus and Mentz. Cayuga Lake and Outlet are navigable, and form a connection with the canal at Montezuma. The direct branch of the N. Y. Central R. R. from Syracuse to Rochester extends through Brutus and Mentz, and the Auburn branch through Sennett, Auburn, and Aurelius.⁶

² When organized in 1799, Cayuga included Seneca co., the territory lying between the Cayuga and Seneca Lakes; and, as central to the thin population, the first courthouse was located at Anoras, on the e. shore of Cayuga Lake. It was built of poles and covered with brush. In 1803 a circuit court and court of Oyer and Terminer was held at this place by Daniel D. Tompkins, at which an Indian by the name of John was tried and convicted of the murder of Ezekiel Crane, jr., and sentenced to be hung. He urgently requested that he might be shot,—a privilege, of course, not granted by our laws. A log building at Cayuga Village was authorized to be used as a jail March 25, 1800. In 1804 an act was passed, authorizing John Tillotson, Augustus Chidsey, and John Grover, jr., commissioners to build a courthouse on the s. e. corner of Lot 46 of Scipio, (now Auburn.) This act was afterward repealed. On the 6th of March, 1805, Edward Savage, of Washington co., Jas. Burt, of Orange, and Jas. Hildreth, of Montgomery, were appointed commissioners to locate the site of a courthouse. The commissioners neglected to fix the site; and, April 6, 1808, John Glover, Stephen Close, and Noah Olmstead were appointed to superintend the finishing of the courthouse at Auburn.

³ The first co. officers were Seth Phelps, First Judge; William Stuart, District Attorney; Benjamin Ledyard, County Clerk; Joseph Annin, Sheriff; Glen Cuyler, Surrogate.

⁴ This building is 45 by 65 feet, 2 stories high, with 2 double and 26 single cells, arranged in the center of the building, with a hall on three sides, open to the prisoners in daytime.

⁶ The Ontario, Auburn & N. Y. R.R., extending from Little Sodus Bay s. to Ithaca, has been surveyed through the co. and partially graded; but work upon it has been suspended.

The Western Luminary was published at Watkins' Settlement, in Scipio, in 1799.

The Aurora Gazette was established in 1799 by H. & J. Pace, and continued until 1805, when it was removed to Auburn and changed to

The Western Federalist. It was published as The Auburn Gazette by Skinner and Crosby in 1816.

The Cayuga Tocsin was commenced at Union Springs in 1812

Auburn, and continued by different persons until 1847, when it was united with the Cayuga Patriot.

The Cayuga Patriot was started at Auburn by Samuel R. Brown in 1814. Isaac S. Allen, Ulysses E. Doubleday, and others, were afterward interested in its publication. In June, 1847, it was united with the Tocsin, the joint papers taking the name of

The Cayuga New Era. It was successively published by Merrill, Stone & Co., Stone, Hawes & Co., Finn & Hallett, and William L. Finn, and was discontinued in 1857.

The Advocate of the People was commenced at Auburn in Sept. 1816, by Henry C. Southwick.

The Cayuga Republican was commenced in 1819 by A. Buckingham, and was afterward published by Thomas M. Skinner. In 1833 it was united with the Free Press and issued as

The Auburn Journal and Advertiser by Oliphant & Skinner. Skinner subsequently withdrew, and the paper was continued by Oliphant. In 1846 it was issued as

The Auburn Journal; and the same year

The Auburn Daily Advertiser, the first daily paper published in the co., was established in connection with it. In the fall of the same year, Oliphant sold out to Henry Montgomery, by whom the papers were continued until 1850, when Knapp & Peck, the present publishers, became proprietors.

The Auburn Free Press was commenced by Richard Oliphant in 1824 and published by him until 1829. It was then sold to Henry Oliphant, and in 1833 it was united with the Cayuga Republican.

The Gospel Messenger (Prot. E.) was established at Auburn by Rev. Dr. Rudd in 1827. It was removed to Utica a few years after.

The Diamond was published in 1830.

The Gospel Advocate was published in 1830.

The Cayuga Democrat was published by Fred. Prince in 1833.

The People's Friend was published in 1836 by Oliphant & Skinner.

The Western Banner was published in 1836 by Francis S. Wiggins.

The Peoples Library, mo., was published in 1836 by F. S. Wiggins.

The Primitive Christian was published in 1836 by Silas E. Shepard.

The Conference Record was published in 1837 by Rev. J. S. Chamberlain.

The Northern Christian Advocate (M.E.) was commenced in April, 1841, by Rev. John E. Rnble. It was edited by Rev. F. G. Hibbard and Rev. Wm. Hosmer until May, 1844, when it was purchased by the Meth. Genl. Conference and changed to

The Northern Advocate. It was edited successively by Rev. Nelson Rounds and Wm. Hosmer, and is now under the editorial charge of Rev. P. G. Hibbard.

The Star of Temperance was published in 1845 by L. H. Davey. Auburn's Favorite was published in 1849 by Newton Calkins.

The Cayuga Chief was commenced at Auburn in January, 1849, by Thurlow W. Brown, and continued until 1857.

The Auburn Daily Bulletin was published in 1849 by Stone, Hawes & Co.

This co. formed a portion of the Military Tract, and included the original townships of Cato, Brutus, Aurelius, Scipio, Sempronius, and parts of Milton and Locke. Sterling was included in the lands granted as a compensation for portions of the original grants, which upon survey were found to belong to the Boston Ten Towns. Before the advent of the whites it formed the chief hunting grounds of the Cayuga Nation. The people of this nation were more migratory in their habits than those of the Onondaga and Seneca nations, and they had fewer towns and villages. The principal town or place of council of the tribe was upon the shore of Cayuga Lake, near the present village of Aurora. The first white settlers were soldiers, who had served during the Revolution and who drew lots upon the Military Tract, or those who had purchased soldiers' warrants. The first immigration was by the way of Oneida Lake and River, and from the s. by way of Cayuga Lake; but in 1796 a State road, extending from Whitestown to Geneva by way of Auburn, was cut through; and in 1800 the celebrated Cayuga Bridge¹ was built, the new route speedily becoming the great highway of Western emigration. The population steadily and rapidly increased from 1790, a great impulse being given to it by the completion of the Erie Canal in 1825. The first inhabitants were principally from New England and the eastern cos. of New York.

AUBURN CITY—was formed as a town from Aurelius, March 28, 1823. It was incorp. as a village April 18, 1815, and as a city March 21, 1848. It lies upon Owasco Outlet, near the center of the co. Its surface is rolling, with an inclination toward the n. Owasco Outlet, flowing n. w. through near the center, descends 120 ft., and furnishes an abundance of water-power, which is mostly improved. Along its course are valuable quarries of waterlime, Oriskany sandstone, and Onondaga and corniferous limestone. The city is finely laid out upon both sides of the creek, most of the streets having a gentle inclination. It is situated in the midst of a rich farming country, and it has a large share of internal trade. Its manufactures are extensive and important, consisting principally of woolen goods,² paper, agricultural implements, books, flour, and machinery. Besides the co. buildings, it contains 12 churches,³ 3 banks, and many other fine public and private buildings. Seven weekly, 2 daily, and 2 monthly papers are published in the city. Pop. 9,476.

The Public Schools are under a Board of Education, consisting of 4 members, elected annually. The schools, 5 in number, employ 23 teachers,—5 males and 18 females. In 1858 the number of children between the ages of 4 and 21 was 3001, of whom 2187, or 72 per cent., attended school during some portion of the year. The total expenses of the schools for 1858 were $13,231.19. The number of volumes in the district libraries is 3986.

The Christian Ambassador (Univ.) was commenced in Jan. 1861, and is now edited by John M. Austin.

The Spiritual and Moral Instructor was published in 1851 by Peleg S. Colwell & Co.

The Auburn American, d. and w., was established in Feb. 1855, by Wm. J. Moses, by whom it is still published.

The Journal of Specific Homeopathy, m., was started in March, 1856, and is published by F. Humphreys.

The Spiritual Clarion, commenced Nov. 15, 1856, is published weekly by Uriah Clark.

The Northern Independent was established in Aug. 1856, by a publishing com. of the M. E. Ch.; Rev. Wm. Hoemer, Ed.

The Orphans' Friend, m., was commenced in Feb. 1857, and is published by the managers of the Cayuga Orphan Asylum.

The Cayuga Farmer and Mechanic was commenced in Sept. 1856, by P. J. Becker. In Dec. 1857 its name was changed to

The Teachers' Educational Journal; it is still issued by its original proprietor.

The Auburn Democrat was established in Aug. 1857, by Stone and Hawes, by whom it is still published.

The Weedsport Advertiser was published in 1827.

The Northern Phoenix was published at Weedsport in 1830 by Frederick Prince.

The Genoa Spy was published in 1840 by Geltin Hine.

The Port Byron Herald was first published at Port Byron in Oct. 1844, by Frederick Prince.

The Port Byron Gazette was started in 1851 by Oliver T. Baird,

The Cayuga Telegraph was published at Union Springs in 1850.

The Meridian Sun was started in 1854 by Arthur White. It was afterward published as

The Meridian Advertiser by W. H. Thomas.

The Family Scrap Book, m., was published at Victory Center in 1855-56.

¹ The Cayuga Bridge was finished Sept. 4, 1800, by the Manhattan Company. It was 1 mi. and 8 rods long, 22 ft. wide and 22 ft. between trusses. It was built in 18 months, and cost $150,000. The Cayuga Bridge Company, consisting of John Harris, Thos. Morris, Wilhelmus Mynderse, Charles Williamson, and Jos. Annis, was incorp. in 1797. The bridge was destroyed in 1808, but afterward rebuilt. For a great number of years the Cayuga bridge was considered one of the greatest public improvements in the State, and it was taken as the dividing line between the e. and w. The bridge was abandoned in 1857; and the lake is now crossed by a ferry.

² The Auburn Woolen Mills give employment to 175 hands and manufactures 250,000 yds. of cloth per annum. The Auburn Paper Mills employ 50 hands and manufacture $80,000 worth of paper annually. The founderies and machine shops give employment to a large number of men, and turn out work to the amount of $100,000 annually. The N. Y. C. R. R. Repair Shops employ 52 hands exclusively in repairing passenger cars. For a number of years books were very extensively manufactured; but of late much of this branch of business has been removed to other cities. Besides these, there are in the city a card factory, belting factory, carpet factory, distillery, rolling mill, and 2 grist mills.

The Auburn Academy is a fine stone edifice on Academy St. It was first erected in 1811, but was burned in 1816, and the present building was soon after erected.

The Auburn Female Seminary, a private institution, is in the building erected for a city hall, at the junction of Market, Franklin, and North Sts.

The Auburn Theological Seminary, a Presb. institution, was established by the Synod of Genesee in 1819. It was incorp. in 1820 and opened in 1821. The building is located upon a commanding site, fronting Seminary St., in the n. e. part of the city.

The Cayuga Orphan Asylum, an institution for the care of orphan and destitute children, is supported by State and co. appropriations and private contributions.

The Auburn State Prison is situated on the n. bank of Owasco Outlet, n. of the center of the city. The site, containing 10 acres, is surrounded by high walls, and within this enclosure are the prison proper¹ and the various workshops in which the convicts are employed. The main building, fronting upon State Street, is 3 stories high and 276 feet long, and is flanked by two wings 42 feet wide and 242 feet deep.

The Asylum for Lunatic Convicts, situated upon a lot of 10 acres, formerly the prison garden, in the rear of the prison, is a fine brick building, faced with cut stone. It contains 64 cells, and rooms for physicians, attendants, &c.²

Fort Hill is a beautiful rural cemetery, located upon the site of an ancient fortification and Indian village. It contains a monument to the memory of Logan, the celebrated Cayuga chief.³

The first settlement at Auburn was made in 1793, by Col. John Hardenburgh, from Ulster co.⁴ Hon. Wm. H. Seward resides in this city.

AURELIUS—was formed Jan. 27, 1789. Brutus, Cato, Owasco, and "Jefferson" (now Mentz) were taken off March 30, 1802, Auburn and Fleming in 1823, a part of Springport in 1833, and a part of Throop in 1859. It lies upon Cayuga Lake, near the center of the w. border of the co. Its surface is undulating, with a slight inclination toward the n. and w. Owasco Outlet flows through the n. e. corner; and upon its course are several fine mill privileges. Cayuga Brook, Crane Creek, and several other small streams take their rise in the town. The soil is mostly a heavy clay and gravelly loam. Cayuga, (p. v.,) upon Cayuga Lake, 2 mi. s. of the outlet, was incorp. in 1858. It is an important station upon the Central R. R., and is connected with Ithaca by a daily line of steamers. It contains 2 churches and 400 inhabitants. Fosterville, (p. v.,) in the n. part, contains a church and 12 dwellings; and Aurelius, (p. v.,) in the s. e. part, a church and 12 dwellings. Clarksville, on the e. line, is a manufacturing village, and forms a suburb of Auburn. It contains a paper mill,⁵ gristmill, hoe factory, woolen factory, and 300 inhabitants. The first settlement was made at Cayuga in 1788, by John Harris, from Harrisburgh, Penn.⁶ The first church was formed in 1804, by Rev. David Higgins.⁷

BRUTUS—was formed from Aurelius, March 30, 1802. Sennett was taken off in 1827. It lies on the e. border of the co., n. of the center. In the n. and w. its surface is level, with an

¹ The cells of the prison are built in a block 5 stories high, separated from the exterior walls by an open space and surrounded by galleries. Each cell is 7 feet long by 3½ wide and 7½ high, closed by an iron grate. Breakfast and dinner are eaten at narrow tables, so arranged that the convicts cannot exchange looks or signs. Supper is eaten in the cells. The workshops form a range of near 1000 feet, built against the outer wall and lighted from the roof and inner sides. Water-power is afforded by the Owasco. These prison buildings were commenced in 1816 and completed in 1819, by the State, at a cost of $300,000, exclusive of the labor of convicts upon them. The general control is vested in a Board of Inspectors; 54 officials, including a guard of 20 men, a chaplain, a physician, and 2 teachers, are employed in the management and government of the establishment. The average number of convicts is about 700. Their earnings in 1857 were $70,000, and the current expenses of the establishment about $72,000.

² This building was erected by the State in 1858, at a cost of $60,000.

³ This ancient fortification was evidently the work of a people who occupied the country prior to the advent of the Indians. The monuments left by this people, the remains of the language still existing, and the traditions of the Indians, all show that they belonged to the same general stock as the aborigines of Mexico. They are known as the "Mound Builders," and in history are generally called the "Alleghans." The fort at this place was probably built prior to the discovery of America by Columbus, and was occupied by them for several hundred years; but they were finally driven out by the Cayugas. It was named by them Oscó or Was Kough, and became the principal village of the nation until the advent of the whites. The celebrated the last century. He afterward emigrated to Penn., and finally to Ohio. He was always known as a peacemaker and friend to the whites until his wife and children were murdered by Col. Cressap, after which he took up the hatchet and became one of the most noted of the Indian warriors. His address to the Peace Commissioners at the close of the war has scarcely its parallel in history for true eloquence and pathos. This ancient work is particularly described in the Smithsonian Contributions, Vol. II, Art. VI, p. 35.

⁴ Among the other early settlers were Col. Brinkerhoff, Dr. Hackliat Burt, Wm. Bostwick, Barnabas Caswell, and Lyman Paibe, who came about 1795. John Hardenburgh built the first gristmill, in 1794; and Wm. Bostwick kept the first inn, in 1796. The place was called "Hardenburgh Corners" until 1805, when its name was changed to Auburn.

average elevation of not more than 10 feet above Seneca River, which forms its n. boundary. The portions immediately bordering upon the river are generally swampy. In the s.e. the surface is rolling and broken by isolated drift hills 50 to 75 feet above the general level. The principal streams are Bread Creek and Cold Spring Brook, both flowing into Seneca River. The former is a canal feeder, and along its banks are outcrops of limestone and plaster, which are quarried to some extent. The soil is a fine quality of sandy and gravelly loam intermixed with clay and alluvium.

Weedsport¹ (p. v.) was incorp. April 26, 1831. It is situated upon the Erie Canal, and is a station on the N. Y. Central R. R. It contains a bank, insurance office, union school, 4 churches, a foundery, a large distillery, and several mills. Pop. 1,226. The first settlement was begun in 1800, by Wm. Stevens, from Mass, on Lot 76.² The first church (M. E.) was formed in 1816.³

CATO—was formed from Aurelius, March 30, 1802. Sterling was taken off in 1812, and Conquest, Ira, and Victory in 1821. A part of Ira was annexed in 1834. It lies upon the e. border of the co., n. of the center. Its surface is level in the s. and gently rolling in the n. The ridges extend n. and s., and their summits are about 50 feet above the valleys and 150 to 200 feet above Lake Ontario. Seneca River forms the s. boundary. Cross Lake, upon the e. border, is a shallow body of water about 5 mi. long, through which flows Seneca River. Otter Lake and Parkers Pond, in the n. part, discharge their waters through Otter Creek into Seneca River. The soil is a sandy and gravelly loam mixed with clay and disintegrated red shale. Meridian,⁴ (p. v.) in the n. part of the town, was incorp. Oct. 17, 1854. Pop. 360. Cato, (p. v.) on the line of Ira, in the n. w. corner, contains 3 churches and 53 dwellings. Seneca River is a p. o. The first settlement was begun in 1800, by Samson Lawrence, on Lot 32.⁵ The first church (Bap.) was formed Oct. 26, 1810; Rev. Daniel Palmer was the first pastor.⁶

CONQUEST⁷—was formed from Cato, March 16, 1821. It lies on the w. border of the co., n. of the center. The surface is gently rolling, the ridges extending n. and s. The s. part along the course of Seneca River is marshy, and a swamp about one-fourth of a mi. wide extends n. and s. through the town along the course of the small stream which flows through Mud Pond. Duck Pond, in the n. w., is about 1 mi. in diameter. Howlands Island, in Seneca River, contains 2,700 acres, one-third of which is swampy, and overflowed during high water. The soil is a sandy loam interspersed with clay and underlaid by red shale. Conquest Center (Conquest p. o.) contains 2 churches and 26 houses; Pineville, in the w. part, contains 15 houses. The first settlers were George Snyder, from Schoharie co., who located on Lot 37, and Israel Wolverton, from Tompkins co., on Lot 4, in 1800.⁸ The first church (Prot. Meth.) was formed at Conquest Center, in 1803; Rev. Joshua Beebe was the first settled preacher.⁹

FLEMING¹⁰—was formed from Aurelius, March 28, 1823. It lies w. of the foot of Owasco Lake, a little s. of the center of the co. Its surface is rolling, with an inclination toward the n. and e. The banks of the lake slope upward for about three-fourths of a mi. The highest portions are 150 to 250 feet above the lake, and 800 to 1000 feet above tide. Wheeler and Crane Creeks are the principal streams. The soil is principally a gravelly loam, with an occasional intermixture of clay and sand. Fleming, (p. v.) near the center, contains 2 churches and 25 dwellings.

² Among the other early settlers were Caleb, Nathan, and Jonah Rood, and — Powers, from Saratoga co., who located at and near Weedsport; John Hamilton, from Washington co., on Lot 64, in March, 1802; Edward Horton, Peter Douglass, and Samuel Moore, from N. J., on Lot 86; Adam Helmer, from Herkimer co., on Lot 87, in 1805. The first child born was Burnet Stevens, from N. J., on Lot 76, in 1805. The first marriage, that of Peter Douglass and Polly Hamilton, Jan. 12, 1804; and the first death, that of an infant child of Sunderland Sweet, in 1800. Harriet Phelps taught the first school, in 1806; Walter and Elisha Weed kept the first store; and Lewis Putnam built the first sawmill and gristmill, on Bread Creek.

⁴ Formerly "Cato Four Corners."

⁵ Among the other early settlers were Solomon Knapp, on Lot 100, L. Sheldon, on Lot 84, Jacob Labertaux, from Penn., on Lot 57, in May, 1803; Jesse Elwell and Abner Hollister, at Meridian, in 1805. The first child born was Alvira Stockwell, May 4, 1805; the first marriage, that of Andrew Stockwell and Sybil Root, June 4, 1804; and the first death, that of Stephen Olcott, in 1805. Solomon Knapp kept the first inn at Cato, in 1803; and Jesse Elwell, the first at Meridian, in 1805. Daniel M. Bristol kept the first store, in 1806; and Samuel Woodford erected the first gristmill, on the outlet of Otter Lake, in 1811.

⁷ Name given to commemorate the conquest achieved by those who favored the division of the old town of Cato over those who opposed it.

Owasco Lake is a p. o. The first settlements were made in 1790-91.¹ The first religious services were held by Elder Daniel Irish (Bap.) about 1794.²

GENOA—was formed as "Milton," Jan. 27, 1789; and its name was changed April 6, 1808. Locke was taken off in 1802. It is the s. w. corner town of the co., lying upon the w. bank of Cayuga Lake. The surface is a rolling region, gradually rising from the lake to a height of about 600 ft. and divided into ridges by the valleys of Big and Little Salmon Creek, which extend through near the center.³ The declivities that border upon the streams in some places are steep and 50 to 150 ft. high. The soil consists of a strip of clay along the banks of the lake, and a deep, rich, gravelly loam in the other parts of the town. Genoa, (p. v.) on Big Salmon Creek, contains 2 churches, 2 flouring mills, a tannery, and a furnace and machine shop. Pop. 300. Northville (Kings Ferry p. o.) is situated in the n. w. part of the town. Pop. 200. Five Corners (p. v.) contains 35 dwellings. East Genoa (p. o.) is a hamlet. The first settlements were made anterior to the organization of the co. Jabez Bradley was the first settler, at Northville. The census reports 6 churches in town.⁴

IRA—was formed from Cato, March 16, 1821, and a part was annexed to Cato in 1824. It lies upon the e. border of the co., n. of the center. Its surface is rolling, the summits of the ridges being 50 to 75 ft. above the valleys and 225 to 275 feet above Lake Ontario. The streams are small brooks and creeks. The soil is a sandy loam underlaid by red sandstone, and is very productive. Ira Center, (p. v.) the only village, contains 2 churches and 145 inhabitants. The first settlements were made by David, Eleazar, and Andrew Stockwell, 3 brothers from Whitehall, on Lot 58, Wm. Patterson, on Lot 32, and Henry Conrad, (a German,) on the same lot, all in 1800.⁵ The first church (Cong.) was formed at Ira Corners, July 7, 1807, by Rev. Francis Pomerooy; Rev. Silas Barnes was the first preacher.⁶

LEDYARD—was formed from Scipio, Jan. 30, 1823. It lies upon the e. bank of Cayuga Lake, s. w. of the center of the co. Its surface inclines toward the w., its extreme e. border being elevated 500 to 600 ft. above the surface of the lake. The slopes of the hills are generally gradual, but are steep in a few places. Its streams are small, rapid brooks, the principal of which is Paines Creek, flowing through a narrow ravine in the s. part. The soil is a sandy and clayey loam, very fertile. Aurora, (p. v.) incorp. May 5, 1837, is beautifully located on the e. bank of Cayuga Lake. Its fine situation and the comparative mildness of its climate have made it a place of considerable resort; and it contains some of the finest residences to be found in the interior of the State. It is the seat of the Cayuga Academy.⁷ Pop. 459. Talcotts Corners, (Ledyard p. o.), near the s. e. corner, contains 2 churches and 12 dwellings. Levana (p. v.) is a steamboat landing, 2 mi. n. of Aurora. Pop. 106. Roswell Franklin, from Wyoming, settled at Aurora in 1789, and was the first settler in Cayuga co. Benj. Avery was the first settler at Talcotts Corners.⁸ Rev. Seth Williston (Presb.) conducted the first religious services; and Rev. H. Woodruff was the first settled minister.⁹

LOCKE—was formed from "Milton," (now Genoa,) Feb. 20, 1802. Summer Hill was taken off in 1831. It lies upon the high ridges which border upon Owasco Inlet, in the s. part of the co. The inlet flows through near the center in a deep, narrow valley bordered by steep hills rising 200 to 400 ft. above it. The summits of the hills spread out into a beautifully undulating

¹ Among the early settlers were Benj. Irish, Joseph Grover, Edward Wheeler, Ichabod and Abel Wilkinson, and James Irriington. The first child born was Aureus Wheeler, in 1791; and the first death, that of Mrs. West, in 1792. John Herring taught the first school, in 1794; Abel Wilkinson kept the first inn, in 1792; and Joseph Grover the first store, in 1797.

³ The s. part of the town was settled by emigrants mostly from Penn. and N. J., and the n. part by emigrants from New England. In 1800 the town had a pop. of 3,553; in 1810 it rose to 5,425; in 1820, after its territory was reduced to its present limits, the pop. was 2,585; and in 1855, 2,352.

⁴ Two Presb. 2 M. E., Cong., and Univ.

⁵ Among the other early settlers were Daniel Parker, on Lot 69, John C. Barnes and Rev. Silas Barnes, on Lot 70, and Zadock Barnes, on Lot 83, all from Marcellus, and Edward Wood, from Sennett, on Lot 89, in 1802; Archibald and Chas. Green, on Lot 70, in 1803; Eli Mattison and Abraham Willey, from Conn., on Lot 34, Henry Ferris and his son, Augustus, from Saratoga co., on Lot 71, in 1804; and Thos. Baroes, from Washington co., at Ira Corners, in 1805. Dr. Quire, the first physician, taught the first school, in 1805; David Stockwell kept the first inn, in 1800; Sam'l and Israel Phelps, the first store, at Ira Corners, in 1813; and John Hooker erected the first gristmill, in 1818. The first child born was Polly, daughter of David Stockwell, in April garet Noble, March 7, 1802; and the first death, that of the wife of Rev. Silas Barnes, in 1802.

⁶ The census reports 5 churches; 2 M. E., and 1 each Bap., Presb., and Disciples.

⁷ Named from Benjamin Ledyard, agent and clerk for the disposal of the lands belonging to the Military Tract. The trace of an ancient fortification is found within this town. It stood upon a hill between two ravines, and enclosed about 20 acres.—Smithsonian Contributions, Vol. II, Part VI, p. 63.

region with a mean elevation of about 1000 ft. above tide. The soil is a gravelly loam interspersed with clay. Milan, (Locke p. o.), situated on the s. branch of Owasco Lake Inlet, contains 2 churches, 2 woolen factories, 2 gristmills, and several mechanics' shops. Pop. 180. Centerville contains 18 houses. The first settlement was made by Ezra Carpenter, Jas. Cook, Jas. Durell, and Solomon Love, in 1790.¹ The first church (M. E.) was formed in 1819.²

MENTZ—was formed from Aurelius, as "Jefferson," March 30, 1802. Its name was changed April 6, 1808. Montezuma and a portion of Throop were taken off in 1859. It lies upon Seneca River, N. E. of the center of the co. Its surface is generally flat, with a few low sand ridges near the s. border. A swampy region extends along Seneca River. Owasco Outlet, flowing through the center, is the principal stream. Limestone, gypsum, and red shale are the underlying rocks. The soil is a clayey, sandy, and gravelly loam. Port Byron, (p. v.), incorp. March 2, 1837, is situated upon the Owasco Outlet and Erie Canal, in the E. part of the town. The N. Y. C. R. R. station is 1 mi. N. of the village. It contains 3 churches, a woolen factory, cabinet ware manufactory, and a flouring mill with 10 run of stones. Pop. 1,669. Centerport, a canal village on the E. line, contains 22 houses. The first settlement was made in 1797.³ There are 3 churches in town; Bap., M. E., and Presb.

MONTEZUMA—was formed from Mentz, April 8, 1859. It lies in the s. e. angle formed by the great easterly bend in Seneca River, on the w. border of the co. Its surface is mostly low and flat. An extensive swamp, known as the Montezuma Marshes, extends along the river. The only considerable stream is Cayuga Brook. The soil is generally a clayey loam. Brine springs are found along Seneca River. Montezuma (p. v.) is located upon Seneca River, in the w. part of the town. The Seneca and Cayuga Canals here unite with the Erie Canal. Salt and some other articles are manufactured.⁴ Pop. 650. The first settlement was made in 1798.⁵ The first church (Bap.) was formed in 1803, by Rev. John Jeffries. There are 3 churches in town; 2 M. E. and Bap.

MORAVIA—was formed from Sempronius, March 20, 1833. It lies upon Owasco Lake and Inlet, in the E. part of the co. The greater part of its surface is a rolling upland, broken by the deep and narrow valleys of Owasco Inlet and its branches.⁶ These valleys are 300 to 400 ft. below the summits of the hills, and are bordered by steep and in many places nearly perpendicular sides. Upon the streams in their course through the ravines are several beautiful cascades, furnishing an abundance of water-power. Mill Brook, just below its junction with Trout Brook, flows over a precipice of 80 ft. Upon the E. tributary of the outlet, near the s. border, is a cascade known as Dry Falls, from the fact that in summer the stream ceases to flow. A little below this cascade is a circular recess in the face of the perpendicular precipice, 42 ft. deep, and surmounted by a limestone arch 55 ft. high and 125 ft. long. Upon this arch rises a lofty hill covered with primitive forest trees. A large spring of carburetted hydrogen gas, highly inflammable, is situated upon the lowlands near the lake. The soil among the hills is a gravelly loam mixed with clay, and in the valleys it consists of a deep, rich loam formed of gravel and disintegrated limestone and slate. Moravia (p. v.) is situated on Mill Brook, in the valley 3 mi. s. e. of the head of Owasco Lake. The rapids and cascades in the stream at this point furnish an abundance of water-power. The village contains 130 dwellings, the Moravia Institute, and several mills and other manufacturing establishments. Montville,⁷ a small village 1 mi. E. of Moravia, contains 15 houses. The first settlement was made at Moravia Village, by John Stoyell, in 1791.⁸ The first church (Cong.) was formed March 12, 1806.⁹

² The census reports 3 churches; 2 M. E. and Bap.

³ Among the early settlers were Philip King, Seth Higy, from Saratoga co., on Lot 72, Josiah Partridge, from Mass., on Lot 73, in 1797; Charles Annes, Aboliah and Elijah Buck, from Chemung co., on Lot 73, (now Port Byron,) in 1798; Dan'l Loveland, from Vt., on Lot 49, in 1799; Peter Ransier and Moses Lent, from Owego, on Lot 62, in 1800; James Dixon and Joseph Hamilton, from Washington co., Caleb Hopkins, from N. J., and Ira Hopkins, from Washington co., on Lot 85, from 1800 to 1804.

⁴ Salt was first manufactured in Montezuma about 1798; but the business was abandoned about 1840, in consequence of the lately been discovered, and the manufacture of salt has been successfully resumed. These salt springs, like those of Onondaga, belong to the State.

⁵ Among the early settlers were Peter Clark, from New York City, Comfort Tyler, and Abram Morgan, at Montezuma, in 1798, who located there to manufacture salt.

⁶ The Owasco Flats were in part cultivated by the Indians anterior to the settlement by the whites, and still bear traces of the ancient occupation.

⁷ Ex-President Fillmore read law at this place with Judge Wood.

NILES—was formed from Sempronius, March 20, 1833. It lies between Owasco and Skaneateles Lakes, s. e. of the center of the co. Its surface is principally a rolling and hilly upland. The highest summits are 700 ft. above Owasco Lake. The declivities are gradual toward Owasco but more abrupt toward Skaneateles Lake. Dutch Hollow Brook, flowing n. through near the center, is bordered by high, steep banks.¹ The soil is a gravelly and clayey loam. Kelloggsville, (p. v.,) in the extreme s. part, contains 2 churches and 30 dwellings; New Hope, in the s. e. part, contains a church, gristmill, sawmill, and 12 dwellings; Niles, (p. o.,) in the n. part, West Niles, Twelve Corners, and Nine Corners, are hamlets. The first settlements were made in 1793.² There are 4 churches in town; 2 M. E., Bap., and Univ.

OWASCO—was formed from Aurelius, March 30, 1802. It lies e. of the foot of Owasco Lake, s. e. of the center of the co. Its surface is rolling and inclined to the n. w. From the lake it slopes gradually upward, and the highest summits attain an elevation of 500 ft. Owasco Creek, flowing w. across the s. part, and Millers Brook, in the n. part, are the only streams. The soil is a clayey loam. Owasco, (p. v.,) in the s. e. corner, contains 3 churches and 45 dwellings. The first settlements were made in 1792.³ The first church was formed in 1798, by Rev. Abram Brokaw.⁴ Ex-Gov. Throop is a resident of this town.

SCIPIO—was formed March 5, 1794. Sempronius was taken off in 1799, and Ledyard, Venice, and a part of Springport were taken off in 1823. It lies on the w. shore of Owasco Lake, s. of the center of the co. Its surface is rolling, the highest summits being 500 feet above the lake. A steep bluff, 20 to 50 ft. high, extends along the lake, and from the summit the surface slopes gradually upward for about one mi. The streams are mere brooks, generally dry in summer. The soil is a clayey loam. Scipio Center (Scipio p. o.) contains 2 churches and 80 inhabitants; Scipioville, (p. v.,) near the w. line, 80 inhabitants; Sherwood, (p. v.,) near the s. w. corner, 80 inhabitants. The Square is a p. o. in the n. w. part. The first settlements were made in 1790.⁵ The first religious services were held by Elder David Irish, in 1794; and the first church (Bap.) was formed the same year.⁶

SEMPRONIUS—was formed March 9, 1799. A part was annexed to Marcellus (Onondaga co.) March 24, 1804, and Moravia and Niles March 20, 1833. It lies upon Skaneateles Lake, in the s. e. part of the co. From the valley of the lake and inlet the hills rise abruptly to a height of 300 to 500 feet, and from their summits the surface spreads out into a rolling and hilly upland. The highest points are about 1000 ft. above tide. Mill Brook, flowing w., Bear Swamp Brook, n., and Fall Brook, s., all have excavated deep valleys in the drift deposits and shales. The soil is a good quality of clayey, sandy and gravelly loam, mixed with disintegrated slate and limestone. Dresserville, (p. v.,) located on Mill Brook, in the s. part of the town, contains 30 dwellings; Vansville, (Sempronius p. o.,) 15; Glen Haven (p. o.) is a noted water cure establishment near the head of Skaneateles Lake. Its situation is extremely beautiful, and it is supplied with pure, soft spring water. The first settlement was made in 1794, by Ezekiel Sales,⁷ Jotham Bassett, and Seth Burgess. The first church (Bap.) was formed Feb. 29, 1798; Rev. John Lasure was the first preacher. The census reports 1 church (Bap.) in town.

SENNETT—was formed from Brutus, March 19, 1827; it was named from Judge Daniel Sennett, a pioneer settler. A portion of Throop was taken off in 1859. It lies upon the e. border of the co., n. of the center. Its surface is level or gently undulating, the ridges rising in long, gradual slopes 50 to 100 ft. above the valleys. The streams are all small brooks. The soil is a deep, fertile, clayey and sandy loam, and is under a high state of cultivation. Sennett, (p. v.,) a station on the Auburn branch of the N. Y. Central R. R., contains 2 churches and 30 dwellings. The first settlement was made in 1794, by Ebenezer Healy, Jos. Atwell, Thos. Morley, and Thos.

² Among the early settlers were Garret Conover and his sons John and Aaron, Isaac Selover, James Brinkerhoff, and William Bowen. The first child born was Sally Amerman, in 1798.

⁴ There are 3 churches in town; M. E., Ref. Prot. D., and True D. Reformed.

kins, Gilbert and Alanson Tracy, Sam'l Branch, Ebenezer Witter, and Gideon Allen. The first child born was Betsey Durkee, Dec. 5, 1790; and the first marriage, that of Wm. Allen and Betsey Watkins, June 25, 1793. Wm. Daniels taught the first school, in 1798, and Dr. Strong kept the first store, in 1808.

Morley, jr., from Conn., on Lot 21.¹ The first church (Bap.) was organized Sept. 12, 1799, by Rev. Manasseh French, who was the first preacher. There are now 2 churches in town; Presb. and Bap.

SPRINGPORT—was formed from Scipio and Aurelius, Jan. 30, 1823. It lies upon the e. shore of Cayuga Lake, s. w. of the center of the co. Its surface rises in gradual slopes from the water to the e. border, where it attains an elevation of 400 to 500 ft. Waterlime, plaster, and limestone used for flagging, are quarried along the shore of the lake and in the adjoining ravines. Two immense springs flow from the ground near the village, furnishing a valuable water-power.² The soil is a superior quality of sandy and gravelly loam, in some places mixed with clay. The lake is so deep that it rarely freezes, and the warmth of the water essentially moderates the intensity of the frosts of winter.³ Union Springs (p. v.) is beautifully situated upon Cayuga Lake, near the center of the w. border of the town. It contains several manufactories, a private academy, and many fine residences. Pop. 1,118. The first settlement was made in 1800, by Frederick Gearheart, Thos. Thompson, and Jas. Carr.⁴ The first church (Cong.) was formed by Rev. Joshua Lane, the first preacher.⁵

STERLING—named from William Alexander, Lord Sterling, of the Revolution—was formed from Cato, June 19, 1812. It lies upon Lake Ontario, in the extreme n. part of the co. Its surface is rolling and has a slight inclination toward the n. The summits of the ridges in the s. are 200 to 300 ft. above the lake; and Big Bluff, upon the lake shore, has about the same elevation. The streams are Little Sodus Creek and its branches, flowing into Little Sodus Bay, and Cortright Brook, flowing into Blind Sodus Bay.⁶ Little Sodus Bay is about 2 mi. long by 1 mi. wide, and is one of the best harbors upon the s. shore of the lake. An extensive swamp, covering several hundred acres, extends along the lake shore, e. of the bay, and another lies on the s. border of the town. The soil is a sandy and gravelly loam; some portions of the surface are very stony and hard of cultivation. Outcrops of Medina sandstone⁷ and Oneida conglomerate are quarried in this town for building stone. Sterling Center (Sterling p. o.) contains 40 dwellings; Fairhaven, (p. v.), on Little Sodus Bay, 40; Martville, (p. o.) near the s. e. corner, 25; and Sterling Valley 20. North Sterling (p. o.) is a hamlet. The first settler was Peter Dumas, who located upon Lot 19 in 1805.⁸ The first church (Asso. Ref. Presb.) was formed in 1818.⁹

SUMMER HILL—was formed from Locke, as "Plato," April 26, 1831; its name was changed March 16, 1832. It is the s. e. corner town of the co. Its surface is a rolling upland, 1000 to 1100 ft. above tide. Fall Brook, the principal stream, flows s. through the e. part. Its valley is 300 to 400 ft. below the summits of the hills, and forms the only considerable break in the general level of the surface. Summer Hill Lake is a small pond in the n. e. part, discharging its waters into Fall Brook. The soil is a clayey and gravelly loam, the clay predominating. Summer Hill, (p. v.), in the s. w. part of the town, contains 115 inhabitants. The first settle-

¹ In 1795 Judge Dan'l Senneith, Amos Bennett, and Jacob, Rufus, and Dan'l Sheldon, from Conn., settled on Lot 99. In 1707 Jacob Hicks, a Revolutionary soldier, who drew Lot 99, settled on it; Benj. Miller, also a Revolutionary soldier, on Lot 17; and Jabez Remington and Hezekiah Freeman, from Vt., on Lots 21 and 10. The first child born was Sally Smith, in 1795; the first marriage, that of Nehemiah Smith and Mindeville Morley, in 1794; and the first death, that of Thos. Morley, in 1795. Betsey Morley taught the first school, in 1795; Joseph Atwell kept the first inn, the same year; and Sheldon & Lathrop the first store.

⁵ The census reports 9 churches; 2 Friends, 2 M. E., and 1 each Cong., Presb., Bap., Christian, and R. C. an effort has been made to change the name of this bay to Ontario Bay.

⁷ This stone is much used for the underpinnings of houses and farm buildings. It has been observed that hogs are very fond of licking the stone whenever they have access to it; and in consequence they foam at the mouth, and can only be fatted with great difficulty.

⁸ Mr. Dumas was a Frenchman, who came to this country with La Fayette and served during the Revolution. For his services he received a lot in the Military Tract, and drew Lot 19, in Sterling. Capt. Andrew Bassmussen settled the same year on Lot No. 1. He was killed on board of an American vessel, on Lake Ontario, during the War of 1812. Francis Decamp located near Martville, in 1806; Wm. Divine, Nathan Wilmot, and Jehiel Peck, on Lot 31, in 1807; Jacob Wilsey, from Saratoga co., on Lot 14, in 1808; John Cooper, on Lot 12, John Duzenbury, on Lot 44, Curtis Stoddard, on Lot 19, John McFarland and son, from Washington co., on Lot 27, John and Matthew Harsha, from Washington co., at Martville, in 1810; Wm. Cooper, Jos. Bunnell, and John Turner, from Long Island, in 1811; and Geo. Cooper, from Saratoga co., in 1812. The first child born was Isaac Hoppins, March 16, 1807; the first marriage, that of Matthew Harsha and Charity Turner; and the first death, that of Ezra, son of Peter Dumas, July 21, 1806. The first school was taught by Benj. Clark, in 1812; Wm. Cooper kept the first inn, in 1810; John Cooper erected the first sawmill, in 1810, and the first gristmill, in 1815.

⁹ The census reports 6 churches; 2 M. E., and 1 each Asso.

ment was made in 1797, by Hezekiah Mix, from Genoa, on Lot 37, near the village.¹ The first church (Bap.) was formed in 1807; Elder Whipple was the first pastor.²

THROOP³—was formed from Aurelius, Mentz, and Sennett, April 8, 1809. It is an interior town, lying a little n. w. of the center of the co. Its surface is generally level, broken in a few places by sand and gravel ridges 100 to 150 ft. high. Its principal streams are Owasco Outlet and Cayuga Brook. The soil is a sandy and gravelly loam. Throopville, (p. v.,) on Owasco Inlet, in the s. e. corner, contains 3 churches, a grist and saw mill, and woolen factory. Pop. 160. The first settlement was made on Lot 2, in 1790, by Ezekiel Crane and his son Shadrach, from N. J.⁴ There are 3 churches in town; Bap., M. E., and Disciple.

VENICE—was formed from Scipio, Jan. 30, 1823. It is an interior town, lying s. w. of the center of the co. Its surface is a rolling upland, the highest summits being 300 to 400 ft. above Owasco Lake. Salmon and Little Salmon Creeks flow s. in deep valleys dividing the surface into distinct ridges. Owasco Lake borders upon the n. e. corner. The declivities bordering upon the lake and upon the w. bank of Salmon Creek are steep, but generally the hillsides are long, gradual slopes. The soil is a fine quality of clayey and gravelly loam. Venice, (p. v.,) in the n. e. part of the town, contains 1 church and 20 dwellings; and Poplar Ridge, upon the highest summit in the n. w., contains a foundery and machine shop and 20 dwellings. East Venice (p. o.) and Venice Center are hamlets. The first settlement in town was made in 1800.⁵ The first church (Bap.) was formed at Stuarts Corners, in 1800, by Elder Irish, the first preacher.⁶ Upon the ridge e. of Salmon Creek, near the s. border of the town, are the remains of an ancient fortification. Upon the creek, near the center of the town, were extensive cleared and cultivated fields at the first advent of the whites. Near these fields was an Indian burial ground.

VICTORY—was formed from Cato, March 16, 1821. It lies upon the w. border of the co., n. of the center. Its surface is gently undulating, the highest points being scarcely 50 ft. above the general level. Little Sodus and Red Creeks are the principal streams. The underlying rocks are red shale and blue limestone, covered deep with drift. The soil is a gravelly and sandy loam. A swamp in the s. w. part covers several hundred acres. Victory, (p. v.,) near the center of the town, contains 25 houses; and Westbury, (p. v.,) on the line of Wayne co., 50. The settlement of the town was commenced in 1800, by John McNeal, from Montgomery co., and John and Samuel Martin, from Ireland, on Lot 65.⁷ The first church (M. E.) was formed in 1813, by Rev. Zenas Jones, the first preacher.⁸

¹ Among the early settlers were Nath'l Fillmore, (father of Millard Fillmore, Ex-Pres. U. S., who was born in this town,) Martin Barber, Wm. Webster, Jos. Cone, Wm. Honeywell, Jas. Savage, Harvey Hough, and Josiah Walker. The first school was taught by Nath'l Fillmore, in 1804. The first child born was Millard Fillmore or Anson Cone; the first marriage, that of Ebenezer Crowl and Rosanna Mix, in 1803; and the first death, that of Amos Mix, killed by the falling of a tree in 1798. Joa. Cone kept the first inn, in 1803; Chas. Crane, the first store; and Ebenezer Bennett erected the first mill, in 1816.

³ Named from Hon. Enos T. Throop, Ex-Gov. of the State.

⁴ Among the other early settlers were Isaac Barnum, Othniel Palmer, and his son, from Conn.; Israel Clapp, from Mass., on Lot 16; Jas. Leonard and Wm. Durell, from N. J., on Lots 2 and 4; Manonah Clark, from Oneida co., on Lot 4; Jonas Ward and his son Caleb, from N. J., on Lot 92, in 1796; Christopher and Rev. John Jeffries, from Saratoga Springs, on Lot 16, Ephraim Wetby, from Dutchess co., on Lot 4, in 1799; Amos and David Odner, on Lot 14, in 1801. The first marriage was that of Shadrach Crane and Hannah Palmer; and the first birth, that of Ezekiel Crane. Edward Carpenter taught the first school, in 1800; Israel Clapp kept the first inn, in 1800; Luther Harden

the first store, in 1804; and Prentice Palmer erected the first saw and grist mill, in 1798.

⁵ Among the early settlers were Henry Hewitt, Ezekiel Landon, Samuel Robinson, and Zadock Bateman, at Stuarts Corners, Samuel Childsey, and Amos Rathbun, at Poplar Ridge, Luke Taylor, and Thomas Carman, all of whom came in between 1790 and 1800. The first child born was Lemon Cole; and the first death, that of — Herrick, one of the pioneer settlers: he was killed by the fall of a tree. The first inn was kept by Samuel Robinson. The first mill was erected at Venice Village, in 1836.

⁶ The census reports 3 churches; 2 Friends and 1 Bap.

⁷ Patrick Murphy, from Ireland, settled on Lot 54, in Feb. 1806; Matthias Vanderhuyden, from Albany co., on Lot 62, and Asahel Carter, from Vt., on Lot 66, in 1810; John Ramsey, and Wm. and Dan'l Griswold, from Herkimer co., on Lot 25, in 1811; Jacob W. and Martin De Forrest, from Washington co., Conrad Phrozone, from Newburgh, on Lot 43; Manasseh French, from Scipio, Judas C. Smith, from Saratoga co., on Lot 40, Philander Phinney, from Saratoga co., Silas Kellogg, from Brutus, on Lot 39, and Ebenezer Bird, from Onondaga co., on Lot 29, all in 1812. Mrs. Jane Wood was the first child born in town, in 1804; and the first death, that of John McNeal, in 1800.

⁸ The census reports 6 churches; 2 M. E., Presb., Bap., and Christian.

WARREN COUNTY.

THIS county was formed from Washington, March 12, 1813, and was named in honor of Gen. Joseph Warren, of the Revolution. It lies s. and w. of Lake George, near the e. border of the State. It is centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains — sq. mi. The surface is very broken and mountainous, less than one-half being susceptible of cultivation. The mountain ranges are continuations of the great mountain masses which culminate in Essex co. The characteristic features of Essex are somewhat softened and subdued in this co. The mountains are broader, less pointed, and generally less precipitous; the valleys are wider and more connected; and there are larger expanses of comparatively level land. With all these modifications, however, a great part of the surface is wild and rugged. High, serrated ridges traverse the entire extent of the co., often rising thousands of feet above the valleys. These mountains, being principally composed of primary rocks, which strongly resist the action of the elements, have a steepness of declivity and sharpness of outline in marked contrast with the gradual slopes and beautifully rounded summits of the highlands of the slate and limestone regions. The soil formed by the exceedingly slow process of disintegration is either washed directly into the valleys, or in the course of ages it collects in thin layers upon the hillsides, giving nutrition to a scanty vegetation. Three of the five mountain ranges n. of the Mohawk Valley extend through this co. The Palmertown Range enters the extreme e. part of Queensbury from Washington co. French Mt., a spur of this range, at the s. e. extremity of Lake George, rises almost precipitously from the lake and attains an elevation of 2,500 to 3,000 ft. above tide. Another spur of this range forms the Luzerne Mts., which extend through the s. part of Luzerne and the e. part of Caldwell,—a n. branch extending n. and forming the whole series of high bluffs which border the w. shore of Lake George. The second or Kayaderosseras Range extends n. e. through Stony Creek, Thurman, Chester, and Horicon, sending spurs both n. and s. Crane Mt., in the s. e. corner of Johnsburgh, the highest peak of this range, has an elevation of 3,000 ft. above the surrounding valleys. The third or Schroon Range occupies the central and northerly part of Johnsburgh and the n. w. angle of Chester. It consists of a great number of rocky peaks rising to a height of 2,500 to 3,000 ft. above tide; most of these have never yet been named. The rocks that compose these great mountain masses are principally gneiss. Granite, white crystalline, limestone, and serpentine are found in considerable quantities in the form of injected veins. A belt of this limestone extends along the course of the Kayaderosseras Mts., and from it a good quality of lime is manufactured. In the valleys and in the s. part of the co. are found layers of Potsdam sandstone, black marble of the Black River limestone strata, Trenton limestone, and Utica slate. Many of these rocks are useful for building materials; and the limestone furnishes an abundance of excellent lime. At the foot of a granite ledge upon Crane Mt. is found a bed of very pure porcelain clay, supposed to have been formed by the slow disintegration of the feldspathic rock. Graphite and magnetic iron ore have also been discovered, but not in sufficient quantities to be profitably worked.

The drainage of the co. is mostly through the Hudson River. This stream enters the co. from Essex, in two branches about 10 mi. apart, and these, after flowing through nearly parallel valleys for about 30 mi., unite in one stream. The e. branch is the outlet of Schroon Lake, and the w. forms the drainage of the Adirondack Mts.¹ This river has a very rapid course; and upon it are several rapids and falls, two of which are worthy of especial note.² Lake George³ is river flows over a shelving rock with a total descent of 50 ft. The fall is broken into three channels by natural piers of black limestone standing upon the brow of the precipice over which the water flows.

² The High Falls are situated just below the great easterly bend of the river in the s. w. corner of Luzerne. The water flows in a series of rapids for three-fourths of a mi. over a declining rocky bottom, and is then compressed into a narrow gorge for 80 rods, at the bottom of which it shoots down a nearly perpendicular descent of 60 ft. The gneiss ledge over which it falls is convex in form, and the water is broken into perfect sheets of snow-white foam. A few rods above the last leap of the water, and where it is rushing with the greatest velocity, the river is

³ Called by the Indians Can-ja-ôe'ri-oi't, the tail of the lake. The name "Horicon" has been applied by some modern writers to Lake George, and it is said to be an Indian word meaning "The Lake of Silver Water." However poetic and appropriate this designation may appear, or however euphonious it may sound, it may be questioned whether a term suggested by fancy alone, and never used by the aborigines, will ever find place situated upon the e. border, and receives the drainage of the e. part of the co. It is 36 mi. long and 1 to 4 mi. wide.¹

The soil of this co. is mostly a thin, sandy loam. The level lands n. of Glens Falls are very sandy, and are known as "pine plains." The declivities of the mountains have a very thin soil, and usually a scanty vegetation. In the valleys is some clay mixed with the sand and disintegrated primitive rocks, forming a deep and excellent soil. Farming and the manufacture of lumber and leather form the leading pursuits of the people. Farming is mostly confined to stock raising and dairying. Immense quantities of logs are floated down the Hudson and manufactured into lumber, shingles, hoops, staves, and heading, at Glens Falls and other places. Black marble is quarried at Glens Falls, and feldspar and kaolin for the manufacture of porcelain; graphite and serpentine are also found in different places. Peat exists in abundance; but it has never been extensively used.

Caldwell, at the head of Lake George, is the county seat.² The courthouse was built in 1816-17, with the jail in the basement. The poorhouse is located on a farm of 200 acres in Warrensburgh.³

The works of internal improvement are the Glens Falls Navigable Feeder, 7 mi. in length, feeding the summit level of the Champlain Canal, and the improvement in the log navigation of the Hudson. There is no r. r. in the co.⁴ Three newspapers are now published in the co.⁵

This co. was the scene of some of the sanguinary battles between the French and English long anterior to its settlement. In 1755, a provincial army of 5,000 men, under Sir. Wm. Johnson, designed to act against the French posts on Lake Champlain, assembled at Albany early in June, and were there joined by a large number of Mohawks under King Hendrick. Forts Lyman (afterward Fort Edward) and Miller were built, and a road was opened to Lake George. The news of Braddock's defeat was received before this army left Albany. The expedition set out on the 8th of Aug., by way of Lake George, for Ticonderoga, with the design of erecting a fort there. Learning that the French had anticipated them and had already fortified Ticonderoga, they encamped near the head of Lake George. About the 1st of Sept., Baron Dieskau, the French commander, with a force of 200 grenadiers, 800 Canadian militia, and 300 Indians, passed up South Bay and across the rocky peninsula, with a view of falling upon the rear of the English and of cutting off their supplies from Fort Lyman. On the 8th, a force of 1000 troops under Col. Ephraim Williams, and of 200 Indians under King Hendrick, were sent out to meet them; but, falling into an ambuscade, the greater part of the troops and the two commanders were killed. The survivors fled, and were immediately followed by the French. The firing alarmed the camp, and a breastwork of logs was immediately thrown up, and 300 men, under Col. Cole, were detached to cover the retreat of the flying fugitives of the first party. Flushed with victory, the French assailed the English camp with great fury, and a sanguinary conflict ensued, which lasted

¹ This lake has long been celebrated for its wild and picturesque beauty. It is almost completely surrounded by precipitous and rocky mountains, and is studded with little, green islands. Its winding course is marked by a panorama of beautiful and distinct views. At some points high rocky bluffs rise precipitously from the very edge of the water, and at others a little basin seems scooped out among the hills. Most of the mountain declivities are covered with verdure; but a few of them are masses of naked rocks. This whole region is full of historic interest. Each mountain, precipice, and cove has its own tale and reminiscences of the olden time. Some of the fiercest conflicts of the last long wars between the French and English colonists took place upon its shores, and the pure and peaceful waters of this beautiful lake were often ensanguined with the blood of fierce combatants. Again during the Revolution war held high carnival here: but since that period its visitors have been principally the lovers of the wild and beautiful in nature. Sabbath-Day Point and Lord Howes Point are two low beaches upon the w. shore, near the foot of the lake; and Rogers Slide is a precipice upon the w. shore, 200 feet high, rising at an angle of about 25 degrees. Tongue Mt., forming a promontory upon the w. shore, Anthony Nose, upon the e. shore, and French Mt., near the head of the lake, have each an elevation of more than 2,000 feet.

³ The poorhouse is a two story wooden building. It is 50 years old and is a very dilapidated condition. The annual revenue is 54, who are supported at a weekly expense of 90 cts. each.

A newspaper was begun at Caldwell in 1817 or '18 by Timothy Haskins, which in four or five years was changed to The Guardian. It was a few years after sold to — Broadwell, its name again changed, and in two years after it was removed to Glens Falls.

The Glens Falls Observer was started in 1828 by E. G. Sidney. In about two years it passed into the hands of Abial Smith, who changed its name to

The Glens Falls Republican, and afterward to The Warren Co. Messenger. In 1835 it was again changed to

The Warren Co. Messenger and Glens Falls Advertiser, by which name it was continued until 1840, when it appeared as

The Glens Falls Gazette, and in two years after as

The Glens Falls Clarion. In 1850 it passed into the hands of Zabina Ellis, its present publisher, by whom its name was changed to

The Glens Falls Free Press.

The Glens Falls Spectator was published in 1840 by D. Ellis.

The Warren Co. Whig was started by James A. Kellogg, and continued one year.

The Glens Falls Messenger was established by A. D. Mine, and is still continued.

The Glens Falls Republican was established in 1842 by M. & T. J. Strong, who conducted it until 1851.

It has passed through several hands, and is now published by H. M. Harris.

The Reckless and Temperance Bugle, semi-mo., was commenced in 1845 by M. & T. J. Strong, and continued several months.

from 12 M. to 4 P.M. and resulted in the total defeat of the French.¹ Col. Blanchard, who commanded at Fort Lyman, learning the result of the first engagement in the morning, sent a party of about 300 N. H. and N. Y. militia to the scene of the conflict. This party surprised the French camp, and, after dispersing the troops left to guard it, they hastened on to the English camp and arrived in season to assist materially in gaining the victory. This engagement was the only one fought during the campaign of 1755 that reflected the slightest credit upon the British army.

The remainder of the season was spent in erecting Fort Wm. Henry,² on the site of the English camp. A projected attack upon Ticonderoga during the winter was prevented by the uncommon severity of the season. In the summer of 1756 a provincial force of 6,000 men assembled here, but too late to effect their purpose.³ On the 17th of March, (St. Patrick's day), 1757, the French, under Longee, a famous partisan officer, attempted to surprise the fort, but were successful only in burning a few buildings and several vessels on the lake.⁴ Soon after, a party of 400 English, under Col. Parker, marched to attack Ticonderoga; but, falling into an ambuscade, only 72 escaped. Early in the summer of 1757, Montcalm, the French commander, made extensive preparations to capture Fort Wm. Henry. On the last day of July, Maj. Putnam discovered a large body of the enemy encamped on an island about 18 mi. down the lake. Gen. Webb, who had immediate command, upon being apprized of the matter, enjoined Putnam to keep the intelligence secret and to prepare to escort him (Webb) back to Fort Edward, leaving Col. Munro in command at Fort Wm. Henry. The enemy soon landed in force and proceeded to invest the fort. The garrison consisted of 2,500 men, and the attacking force amounted to nearly 9,000. Gen. Webb had a force of 4,000 regulars at Fort Edward, only 9 mi. distant, and the militia were rapidly collecting to afford further aid. Col. Munro sent pressing and repeated messages for relief; but Gen. Webb paid no attention to the request, and appeared totally indifferent to every thing but his own personal safety. At length, upon the ninth day of the siege, he allowed Gen. Johnson to march with a body of volunteers to the relief of the garrison; but before the party had proceeded 3 mi. they were recalled, and Gen. Webb sent a letter to Col. Munro advising him to surrender on the best terms he could obtain. This letter was intercepted and given to Col. Munro by Montcalm in person. Thus cut off from hope, and assured by Montcalm that the garrison should march out with the honors of war, with their arms, and one of the four cannon of the fort, with their baggage and baggage wagons, and an escort of 500 men to Fort Edward, he surrendered. The Indians soon began to pillage the baggage, and, not being checked, fell upon the sick and wounded, whom they killed and scalped. Excited by carnage, they next surrounded and attacked the disarmed and defenseless troops; and, although Montcalm was implored to furnish a guard, as promised, the massacre was allowed to proceed until a large number were killed or hurried away prisoners for more deliberate torture.⁵

In the summer of 1758 an army of 7,000 regulars and 10,000 provincials, under Gen. Aber-

² Named in honor of the Duke of Cumberland, brother of the heir apparent, afterward George III.

³ Several incidents worthy of note occurred during this expedition. At Halfway Brook a party of teamsters were surprised and captured by 600 of the enemy, who immediately retreated down South Bay. A hundred men, under Capts. Isaac Putnam and Robert Rogers, set out from Fort Wm. Henry, crossed over to Lake Champlain, and from an ambuscade poured a destructive fire upon the enemy as they passed. A number were killed, and the English immediately retreated across to Lake George. The next morning they embarked on the lake, and at Sabbath-Day Point they were met by a force of French and Indians three times their own number. The English dashed forward to the attack; and, by reserving their fire until they came into close quarters, they threw the enemy into confusion, and succeeded in escaping, with the loss of one killed and two wounded. In the winter of 1756-57, Maj. Rogers, with 74 men, went down Lake George, and crossed over to Lake Champlain, where he captured a small party of French. On his return he was met on the summit of the hill by a party of 200 French; and a desperate conflict ensued. Maj. Rogers was wounded, and the command devolved upon Capt. Stark, (afterward Gen. Stark of the Revolution.) The conflict continued until midnight, when the French retreated, leaving half of their number dead upon the field. Of the rangers, 48 remained un wounded; and the company pushed forward through deep snow, and reached the lake in the morning. They were now quite exhausted, and Stark, with two others pushed on to Fort Wm. Henry, arriving in the evening. He procured sleds and returned to his suffering comrades, whom he reached the next morning. The party finally reached the fort, after extreme suffering.—Rogers's Jour., p. 36.

crombie, proceeded against Ticonderoga by way of Lake George. On the 5th of July the army embarked on board of 900 bateaux and 135 boats, and passed down the lake with all the pomp and pageantry of war; and four days after they returned, shattered and broken, with a loss of nearly 2,000 in killed and wounded. Such of the latter as admitted of removal were sent to Fort Edward; and the main army lay inactive in camp at the head of the lake during the remainder of the season. In June, 1759, Maj. Gen. Amherst, with an army of 12,000 men, advanced to Lake George, and, while waiting to complete his arrangements, he commenced building Fort George, about half a mile e. from Fort Wm. Henry.¹ As Gen. Amherst advanced to Ticonderoga, the French withdrew to Crown Point, and soon after to the Isle Aux-Noix. Quebec fell soon after, and the conquest of Canada was completed the following year, rendering the vast military works at Fort George, Ticonderoga, and Crown Point of no further utility, and allowing the hardy pioneers of civilization to advance and occupy the fertile valleys which as provincial soldiers they had previously traversed.

BOLTON—was formed from Thurman, March 25, 1799. Hague was taken off in 1807, a part of Caldwell in 1810, and a part of Horicon in 1838. It lies e. of the center of the co., between Schroon River and Lake George. The e. shore of the lake constitutes the e. line, so that more than one-half of the lake is within the limits of this town. The surface is principally occupied by the high mountainous ridges which lie between the lake and Hudson River. There are 3 principal peaks belonging to this range within the limits of the town,—Tongue Mt.,² on the peninsula between the lake and North West Bay, 2,000 ft. above tide; Pole Hill, in the n. part, 2,500 ft. high; and Cat Head, in the center, 1,500 to 1,800 ft. above tide. The mountains generally rise precipitously from the lake; but toward the w. the surface assumes the character of a high, rolling upland. High up among the hills are numerous little crystal lakes, the principal of which are Trout Lake, Marsh Pond, and Edgecomb Pond. Trout Lake is 1,000 ft. above Lake George. Not more than one-half of the town is susceptible of cultivation. The soil is a thin, sandy loam.³ Bolton, (p. o.) situated on Lake George, opposite Green Island,⁴ is a small village. The settlement of the town was commenced in 1792, principally by New England people.⁵ The improvements are confined mostly to the vicinity of Lake George. The first church (Presb.) was formed in 1804; the Rev. — Armstrong was the first settled minister. There are 2 churches in town; Bap. and M. E.

CALDWELL⁶—(Col'-well) was formed from Queensbury, Bolton, and Thurman, March 2, 1810. It lies around the s. extremity of Lake George. A range of mountains occupies the extreme w. part. The central portion is a high, hilly region, descending abruptly to the lake. Prospect Hill, w. of the s. extremity of the lake, has an elevation of 2,000 ft. above tide. South of this hill a low valley extends s. w., through Caldwell and Luzerne, to the valley of the Hudson near the mouth of Sacondaga River. This depression seems to be a continuation of the valley in which Lake George is situated, and shows that a change of a few feet in the elevation would cause the waters of the lake to flow into the Hudson. In this valley is a chain of small lakes. A narrow strip of low land lies immediately upon the border of the lake. The soil is a sandy loam among the hills, and a dark, rich, sandy and clayey loam on the lowlands. Caldwell, (p. v.) the county seat, is situated near the head of Lake George. It contains 2 churches, several hotels, and about 50 dwellings. This place is the annual resort of great numbers of tourists and pleasure seekers, who are attracted hither by the beautiful scenery of the lake and the surrounding region. During the summer the steamer Minnehaha plies daily between Caldwell and the foot of the lake. Fort William Henry and Fort George were situated near Caldwell, at the head of Lake George and Bloody Pond, in the s. part. Settlement commenced at the head of Lake George, soon after the conquest of Canada; but its progress was arrested by the Revolution. Soon after the close of the war, settlement was recommenced.⁷ There are 2 churches in town; Presb. and Union.

⁴ During the Revolution this island was fortified, and Gen. Burgoyne, when he advanced to the Hudson, left upon it a large amount of public property, guarded by two companies of the 47th regiment, commanded by Capt. Aubrey. After the partial success which attended the attempt upon Ticonderoga in 1777, Col. Warren and Brown, on the 24th of Sept., made an attack upon this place with the gunboats they had captured. They were repulsed with loss, and retreated to the e. shore. The enemy being in pursuit, they burned their boats, crossed the mountains to Lake Champlain, and returned to Gen. Lincoln's camp at Pavlet, Vt.

⁵ Among the first settlers were James Ware, Joseph Tuttle, Rufus Randall, Benj. Pierce, David and Reuben Smith, Eleazer Goodman, Daniel Nims, Frederick Miller, —Boyd, — Wright, and Thomas McGee. The first birth was that of Lydia Ware; and the first death, that of Mrs. John Pierce. Sally Boyd taught the first school.

⁶ Named from Gen. James Caldwell, a merchant of Albany, who became a patentee of 1,595 acres, in 4 parcels by grant dated Sept. 18-29, 1787.

⁷ Among the early settlers were Daniel Shaw, Benoni Burch,

CHESTER—was formed from Thurman, March 25, 1799. It lies upon the n. border of the co., s. w. of Schroon Lake. The surface is broken and hilly. The Kayaderosseras Mts. extend through the s. part, and the Schroon Range occupies the n. w. portion. A continuation of the valley of Schroon Lake, extending in a s. w. direction to the w. branch of the Hudson and separating the mountain ranges, contains a chain of small lakes. Loon Lake is the principal one in this valley; and s. of it, among the hills, is another sheet of water, called Friends Lake. Schroon Lake is about 1,000 feet above tide, and the hills that surround it are 500 to 800 feet above its surface. The soil is generally light and sandy. A cave in Moxons Mt. is quite a curiosity, and has some local notoriety. Near the n. border of the town, upon Stone Bridge Creek, is a natural bridge.¹ Feldspar has been quarried to a considerable extent and exported for the manufacture of porcelain. Chestertown (p. v.) contains the Chester Academy and 246 inhabitants; and Pottersville (p. v.) 126. The settlement of this town commenced toward the close of the last century.² The first church (Bap.) was organized in 1796; and the Rev. Jehial Fox was the first pastor. There are now 6 churches in town.³

HAGUE—was formed from Bolton, Feb. 28, 1807, as "Rochester." Its name was changed April 6, 1808, and a part of Horicon was taken off in 1838. It lies upon the shore of Lake George, in the n. e. corner of the co. The surface is very mountainous, not above one-fourth being susceptible of cultivation. The mountains along the lake generally descend abruptly to the very edge of the water. The narrow valleys of Trout and North West Bay Brooks form the line of separation between the two mountain ranges. Ash Grove Hill, upon the w. border, is 2,000 to 2,500 feet above tide; and upon the shore of the lake, in the n. e. corner, is another mountain peak of nearly the same elevation. Rogers Rock is on the lake shore, in the n. e. corner. It rises from the water's edge at an angle of about 45° and attains an elevation of 300 feet.⁴ Sabbath-Day Point is a headland projecting into the lake near the s. border.⁵ The soil is a light, sandy loam. Iron ore has been found near Seventh Pond; and mines have been worked to some extent, but they are now abandoned. The beauty of the lake and the solitary grandeur of the mountain scenery of this town render it a favorite resort for hunting and fishing parties and the lovers of the beautiful in nature.⁶ Hague, (p. o.), on McDonalds Bay, and Wardboro (p. o.) are hamlets. The principal improvements are along the lake. The first settlement was made about 1796.⁷ There is a union church in the town.

HORICON—was formed from Bolton and Hague, March 29, 1838. It lies upon the n. border of the co., e. of Schroon Lake. The greater part of its surface is occupied by the two branches of the Kayaderosseras Mts., which are here divided by the valley of Brant Lake. In the n. and e. these ranges rise, in numerous sharp, rocky peaks, 1,600 to 2,000 feet above tide; but in the s. and w. they sink into a hilly plateau region. About one-half of the surface is arable. Among the hills are great numbers of small lakes, laving with their crystal waters the base of the huge, rocky masses which tower above them. Brant Lake, the principal of them, is 10 mi. long and is everywhere surrounded by precipitous hills. The soil is a sandy loam. Horicon, (p. v.), situated on Schroon River, in the s. w. part of the town, contains about 20 houses; and Mill Brook, (p. v.), on Schroon Lake, 15 houses. Aaron Harris, Joseph Gregory, Bishop Carpenter, and Timothy Bennett were some of the earliest settlers.⁸ The first church (Wes. Meth.) was formed in 1820; Nathaniel Streeter was the first minister. There are 4 churches in town; 2 Bap., M. E., and Wes. Meth.

JOHNSBURGH⁹—was formed from Thurman, April 6, 1805. It lies upon the bank of the — Tierce, Andrew Edmonds, Reed Wilbur, Obadiah Hunt, Thaddeus Bradley, Elias Prosser, Nathan Burdick, Geo. Van Deusen. — Butler, and Christopher Potter. The first inn and gristmill were erected by Gen. Caldwell.

² The first settlers were Titus, Jabez, Levi, Gideon, Enos, Jonathan, Daniel, and Caleb Mead. — Bensen, Isaac Bennett, John Haskins, Obadiah and Benj. Knapp, Noel Wightman, James Storbuck, — Steward, and D. and J. Punderson. The first birth was that of a son of Caleb Mead, and the first death, that of Martin Wightman.

⁸ Howard Waters, Nathan, Benj., and James Hayes, Benj. Hayes 2d, John Robbins, James Frazier, and Benj. Wright were also early settlers. Hannah Reynolds taught the first school.

Hudson, and is the n. w. corner town of the co. Its surface is very broken and mountainous. The Schroon Range occupies the n. and central parts; and a spur of the Kayaderoseras Range extends into the s. Cranes Mt.,¹ the highest peak of the latter, is about 3,500 feet above tide. The greater part of the town is too rough and broken for cultivation. The arable land is confined to the narrow valleys. The soil is a sandy and gravelly loam. Kaolin, serpentine iron ore, and other minerals are found. There are 3 large tanneries in town. Johnsburgh, (p. v.), on Mill Creek, contains 20 houses; Nobles Corners, on the same stream, 25; North Creek, (p. v.), on the Hudson, at the mouth of North Creek, 15; and The Glen, (p. o.), on the Hudson, in the s. e. corner of the town, 7. The first settlement was made soon after the close of the Revolutionary War, by John Thurman, the proprietor of extensive tracts in this part of the State.² The first church (Bap.) was organized in 1793. There are 4 churches in town.³

LUZERNE—was formed from Queensbury, April 10, 1792, as "Fairfield." Its name was changed April 6, 1808. A strip of territory 1 mi. wide was set off to Queensbury, March 30, 1802. It lies upon the e. bank of Hudson River, in the s. extremity of the co. Two branches of the Luzerne Mts. extend through the town, respectively occupying the n. and s. portions. They are separated by the valley which extends s. w. from the s. end of Lake George. A chain of small lakes lies along its course; and in them two streams take rise, one of which flows to Lake George and the other to the Hudson.⁴ About one-half of the surface bordering upon the river is a high, hilly region, but arable. Kettle Bottom, in the s. part, and several peaks of the ridge which extends along the e. border, are 2,000 to 2,500 feet above tide. The soil is a light, sandy loam. Luzerne (p. v.) is situated on the Hudson, above its confluence with Sacondaga River. Pop. 280. The first settlements were made about 1770, along the Hudson. Most of the early settlers occupied lands leased from Ebenezer Jessup, the patentee. There are 3 churches in town.⁵

QUEENSBURY—was incorporated by patent⁶ as a township, May 20, 1762, and recognized as a town, March 13, 1786. Luzerne was taken off in 1792, and a part of Caldwell in 1810. A strip of territory 1 mi. wide was taken from Luzerne and added to this town in 1802. It lies between Lake George and the Hudson, and is the s. e. corner town of the co. The w. part is occupied by the Luzerne Mts., and the extreme n. part by French Mt., a high, rocky bluff which rises precipitously from the surface of Lake George to a height of 2,500 to 3,000 feet above tide. The central and s. parts are rolling, gradually declining toward the s. The soil is a light, sandy loam in the interior, and a deep, tough clay upon the river. The fall in the Hudson at Glens Falls is about 50 feet high, and affords valuable mill privileges. Below the fall is a small island, through which is a cave extending from one channel to the other. The manufacture of lumber is largely carried on.⁷ Glens Falls,⁸ (p. v.) incorp. April 12, 1839, is situated on the Hudson, in the s. part. It contains 9 churches, the Glens Falls Academy, 3 newspaper offices, 2 banks, and several manufactories.⁹ Pop. 3,420. West Glens Falls, on the Hudson, contains 25 houses; and Queensbury, (p. v.), near the center, 20. French Mountain (p. o.) is a hamlet. The summit level of the Champlain Canal is fed through the Glens Falls navigable feeder with water taken from the Hudson above the falls. The settlement was commenced in 1766; but its progress was very slow until after the close of the Revolution.¹⁰ The first house of worship was erected by the Society of Friends, in 1786. There are now 11 churches in town.¹¹

STONY CREEK—was formed from "Athol,"¹² Nov. 3, 1852. It lies upon the w. bank of Hudson River, and is the s. w. corner town of the co. Nearly the whole town is still a wilderness. Through the center of the town extend mountain ranges, several peaks of which attain an elevation of more than 2,000 feet. The valleys of e. and w. Stony Creeks are narrow ravines, forming a natural pass between the valleys of the Hudson and Sacondaga. The soil is a light, sandy loam.

² Among the early settlers were Robt. Woddell, Geo. Hodgson, John Wilkinson, Reuben and Calvin Washburn, and Samuel Somerville. The first birth was that of Polly Woddell; the first marriage, that of Calvin Washburn and Betsey Woddell; and the first death, that of Knos Grover. The first mills were erected in 1789 or '90, by Mr. Thurman. He opened a store and built a distillery; and in 1795 he erected a woolen factory. This was soon after changed to a cotton factory; and as early as 1797 he erected calico printing works, the first, it is believed, in America.

⁶ This patent embraced 2,300 acres.

⁷ An immense number of logs is annually floated down from the pine forests of the Upper Hudson to Glens Falls and Fort Edward. At one mill upon the State dam at the former place are 12 gates and 250 saws.

⁸ The Indian name of this place is said to have been Kay-ando-ro-sa. It was called "Glenville" for some time.

⁹ This place contains 4 sawmills, a flouring mill, and an establishment for sowing marble.

¹⁰ Among the first settlers were Abraham Wing, Reed Ferris, Asaph and Benajah Putnam, Jeffrey Cooper, Ichabod Merritt, and Caleb Dowell. Immediately after the war. Benj. Wing, Nehemiah Seelice, Phineas Babcock, Wm. Roland, David Bennett, James Houghson, Silas Brown, and Jeremiah Briggs settled in town.

Creek Center (p. o.) and Stony Creek, (p. o.,) both upon Stony Creek, are hamlets. The first settlement was made about 1795.¹ The first preacher was Jonathan Paul, a Christian Indian. The first church (Presb.) was formed about 1800.²

THURMAN³—was formed April 10, 1792. Bolton and Chester were taken off in 1799, Johnsburgh in 1805, and a part of Caldwell in 1810. The town was divided into "Athol" and Warrensburgh Feb. 12, 1813; and "Athol" was divided into Thurman and Stony Creek, Nov. 13, 1852. It lies upon the w. bank of the Hudson, s. w. of the center of the co. The w. part is a high, broken upland, almost unknown except to hunters. The e. portion, along the Hudson, is a hilly plateau, with several peaks rising 1,000 feet above the valley. Among the hills are numerous small lakes. The soil is a light, sandy loam. Athol (p. o.) and Thurman, (p. o.,) both in the e. part, are hamlets. Settlement was commenced in the latter part of the last century.⁴ A Bap. church was first formed; Elder Jehiel Fox was the first preacher. There are now 4 churches in town.⁵

WARRENSBURGH—was formed from Thurman, Feb. 12, 1813. It lies between the two branches of the Hudson, near the center of the co., and upon the ridges s. of the junction. The peninsular portion is a rolling plateau 600 to 1,000 feet above the river. The s. w. part is occupied by an immense mountain mass with several summits 2,400 to 3,000 feet above tide. Nearly two-thirds of the land in town is arable. The soil is a light, sandy loam among the hills, and upon the river it is nearly the same, mixed with some clay. Warrensburgh (p. v.) is situated on Schroon River, near its junction with the Hudson. Pop. 700. Across the Hudson, below the mouth of Schroon River, is a long bridge connecting this town with Thurman. The first settlement was made a few years after the close of the Revolution.⁶ A M. E. church, the first in town, was organized in 1796; and the Rev. Henry Ryan was the first minister. There are 4 churches in town.⁷

STEBEN COUNTY.

This county was formed from Ontario, March 18, 1796, and named in honor of Baron Steuben. The 7th Range of Townships was annexed to Allegany co. March 11, 1808, the part in the fork of Crooked Lake to Ontario co. Feb. 25, 1814, a part of Dansville to Livingston co. Feb. 15, 1822, and a part to Schuyler co. April 7, 1854. It lies upon the s. border of the State, considerably w. of the center, is centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains — sq. mi. Its surface mostly consists of ridges and high, rolling uplands, forming the northern continuation of the Alleghany Mts. The watershed between Lake Ontario and Susquehanna River extends from Allegany co. eastward across the n. part of the co. The deep valley of Crooked Lake breaks the continuity of the highlands and extends 17 mi. s. w. from the head of the lake, connecting with the Conhocton Valley at Bath, and forming one of the numerous natural passes between the southern valleys and the basin of Lake Ontario. The highlands occupying the s. w. corner of the co. also form a portion of the watershed, being drained by branches of Canisteo River on the e. and of Genesee River on the w. The highest summits in the co. are about 2,500 feet above tide.¹

The upland region has nearly a uniform elevation, with a slight inclination toward the n. It is intersected by numerous deep valleys, which have evidently been excavated by the action of water.² The formation of the steep hillsides which border upon these valleys is such as to prove conclusively that they were once united, and that a wide, rolling plateau spread over the region now so irregular and broken. The principal of these valleys are those of Canisteo and Conhocton Rivers, extending nearly n. w. and s. e. through the co. From these valleys numerous others diverge at nearly right angles and branch off into countless deep, crooked ravines, intersecting the plateau in every direction. The hills that border upon these valleys are usually steep and 300 to 600 feet high.

Conhocton River flows s. e. through near the center of the co. In high water it was once navigable for arks 14 mi. above Bath. It receives from the s. w. Neils, Bennetts, Campbells, Stockton, Michigan, and Stephens Creeks, and from the n. e. Twelve Mile, Ten Mile, Five Mile, (or Kanona,) Mud,³ and Meads Creeks. Canisteo River flows through a valley s. e. of the Conhocton and nearly parallel to it. In freshets it rises 6 to 8 feet, and is then navigable for boats and arks about 40 mi. Its chief tributaries are Canacadea River, and Crosby, Purdy, Bennetts, Col. Bills, and Tuscarora Creeks, all from the s. w. Tioga River rises in Penn., flows n. through a deep, wild mountain valley, and unites with the Canisteo at Erwin, and with the Conhocton at Painted Post, from the latter place the combined stream taking the name of Chemung River.⁴ Canaseraga Creek, flowing n., drains the n. w. corner of the co.; and several small streams rising in the s. w. corner form branches of Genesee River. Crooked Lake lies along the n. e. border, in a deep valley nearly surrounded by steep hills 500 to 800 feet high. Little Lake lies in a shallow valley along the e. border of the town of Wayne. It discharges its waters s. into Mud Lake, and through Mud Creek into Conhocton River. Loon Lake, in Wayland, lies in a valley which is the southern continuation of the valley of Hemlock Lake in Ontario co. Still further s., in the same valley, is Mud Lake, a small sheet of water, the outlet of which flows s. and empties into the Conhocton.

The shales and sandstones of the Portage group outcrop in all the deep ravines in the n. part of the co. and in the w. bank of Crooked Lake. Elsewhere, the Chemung group composes most of the surface rocks. Near the State Line the highest hills are capped with a coarse, silicious conglomerate, which forms the floor of the coal measures.⁵ A feeble brine spring is found at La Grange,

² These valleys must have been excavated by more powerful currents of water than now flow through them; and their formation belongs to the drift period of geology.

³ Mud Creek is the outlet of Mud Lake, in Schuyler co. At the first settlement of the co. this stream was navigable, and arks were floated from Mud Lake down the creek and the Conhocton to the Susquehanna, and thence to the Baltimore market. Since the clearing of the forests, this stream has entirely failed for purpose of navigation, and now, in summer, it is almost dry.

⁴ These streams were all much larger before the destruction of the forests. In time of high water the early settlers describe them as being "full from hill to hill."

and sulphur springs in Campbell, Jasper, and Urbana. The soil in general is composed of detritus of the adjacent rocks, and is better adapted to grazing than tillage. Upon the intervalles along the larger streams the soil is a fertile alluvium. The extensive flats upon the Chemung are among the finest agricultural lands in the State. Agriculture forms the chief occupation of the people. Grain is largely produced on the alluvial lands, and stock is extensively raised on the uplands. Stock and wool growing and dairying are the principal branches of agriculture pursued. Lumbering is still extensively carried on,—though it is gradually decreasing. The manufactures are principally confined to lumber, articles of wood, and the heavier and coarser products necessary to an agricultural region.

The co. is divided into the northern and southern Jury Districts, the co. buildings being respectively situated at Bath and Corning.¹ The courthouse at Bath is a commodious brick building, erected in 1828.² The jail is built of wood and closely surrounded by other buildings. The cells for prisoners are in the basement, and are not provided with any means of ventilation. Its arrangements show a culpable neglect and an entire disregard of the general sentiments of the co. and of the age. The co. clerk's office is permanently located at Bath. The courthouse at Corning is a fine brick edifice, erected in 1853-54 at a cost of $14,000. The jail at Corning was erected at the same time. The courts are held alternately at Bath and Corning. The co. poorhouse is located upon a farm of 214 acres about 2 mi. N. E. of Bath Village.³ The average number of inmates is 75; and they are supported at an average weekly cost of $1.00 each. The farm yields a revenue of about $2,000. No instruction is afforded; but the children of proper age are bound out.

The New York & Erie R. R. enters the co. from Chemung and extends along the valleys of the Chemung, Tioga, and Canistota Rivers to Hornellsville, and the Canacadea to the w. border of the co. It passes through Erwin, Addison, Rathbone, Cameron, Canistota, and Hornellsville.⁴ The Buffalo, N. Y. & E. R. R. extends n. w. from Corning up the Conhocton Valley, through Erwin, Campbell, Bath, Avoca, Cohocton, and Wayland, to the n. border of the co. This road intersects the Genesee Valley R. R. at Avon, the N. Y. Central at Batavia, the Buffalo & New York City at Attica, and the N. Y. & Erie at Corning. The Buffalo & New York City R. R. extends n. w. up the valley of the Canistota from Hornellsville, passing through that town and the s. w. corner of Dansville. The Blossburg & Corning R. R. extends from Corning, through Erwin and Lindley, s. along the Tioga Valley to the Blossburg coal region. Crooked Lake is navigated by steam and canal boats, and forms a link in the chain of the internal water communication of the State. It is united with the Erie Canal at Montezuma by Crooked Lake Canal, Seneca Lake, and the Cayuga and Seneca Canals. The Chemung Canal navigable feeder extends from Corning e. to Horseheads, in Chemung co. Considerable lumber is floated down the rivers and finds a market at Philadelphia and Baltimore. These various works of internal improvement afford ample facilities for the transportation of goods and passengers, and bring the farm products of the co. into close proximity to the eastern markets.

⁴ This road was opened to Corning, Jan. 1, 1850, and to Hornellsville, Sept. 3 of the same year.

The Steuben and Allegany Patriot was started at Bath in 1815 by Benj. Smeal, and was continued until 1822. It was then changed to

The Farmers' Advocate and Steuben Advertiser. In 1849 it passed into the hands of William C. Rhoades, and in 1857 into those of P. S. Donabe, by whom it is now published as

The Steuben Farmers' Advocate.

The Farmers' Gazette was commenced at Bath in 1816 by David Rumsey.

The Steuben Messenger was started at Bath, April 17, 1828, by David Rumsey, and was published by him, Saml. M. Eddie, Wm. P. Aguel, and Chas. Adams successively until 1834, when its name was changed to

The Constitutionalist, and its publication was continued successively by R. L. Underhill, Whitmore & Van Valkenburg, and Dowe & Richards, and by the last named firm as

The Steuben Democrat, until 1844. The paper was then suspended. In 1845 it was renewed by L. J. Beach, and in 1849 it was transferred to Geo. H. Bidwell, by whom the publication was continued until 1852.

The Steuben Whig was published at Bath during the political campaign of 1828, by William M. Swain.

The Steuben Courier was established at Bath in 1843 by Hull & Whittemore. It is now published by H. H. Hull.

The Temperance Gem was published at Bath in 1854, by Jenny and Caroline Rumsey.

The Addison Record was published in Addison by Isaac D. Booth from 1840 to 1842, and in 1849 by Dryden & Peck.

The Addison Advocate was published by H. D. Dyer in 1848-49. The Voice of the Nation was commenced at Addison by R. Denton in 1852. In 1855 the paper passed to Anthony L. Underhill, by whom it was published until 1856, when it was removed to Bath and its name changed to

The Steuben American, and its publication continued until May, 1857.

Steuben co. was all included in the Phelps and Gorham Purchase. It was sold by Phelps and Gorham to Robert Morris, who conveyed it to Sir Wm. Pulteney and others, in London. The territory was surveyed into townships and lots by Wm. Bull, for the Pulteney estate, in 1792-93. Sales were made by townships, at 18 and 20 cts. per acre. The first settlements were made in 1787-90, by immigrants from Wyoming, Penn., who located upon Chemung River, in the s. e. part of the co. These early settlers were originally from Conn. About 1790, settlements commenced in the w. part, adjoining Yates co. In 1792-93, Capt. Chas. Williamson,¹ agent of the Pulteney estate, commenced a settlement at Bath. He was accompanied by a large number of Scotch and German immigrants; and under his energetic and liberal policy the settlement progressed with great rapidity. The greater part of the early settlers came from Penn. by way of Susquehanna and Chemung Rivers. Subsequently large numbers came from Eastern New York, New England, and New Jersey.² The co. was divided by the Court of General Sessions, in 1796, into 6 towns, viz.: Bath, Canisteo, Dansville, Frederickton, Middletown, and Painted Post, comprising the territory now forming 31 towns of this co. and parts of Allegany, Yates, Livingston, and Schuyler cos. In 1790 the population was 168; in 1800 it was 1,788; and in 1855, 62,965. In extent of territory and in agricultural wealth it now ranks among the first cos. in the State.³

ADDISON⁴—was formed, as “Middletown,” in March, 1796. Its name was changed April 6, 1808. A part of Troupsburgh was taken off in 1808, Cameron in 1822, a part of Woodhull in 1828, and a part of Rathbone in 1856. It lies upon the s. border of the co., just e. of the center. The surface is mostly a hilly upland, broken by the valley of the Canisteo and its branches. The principal valley is about 1½ mi. wide and is bordered by steep hillsides 300 to 400 feet high. The principal streams are Canisteo River, and the Tuscarora, Elks Lick, and Goodhue Creeks. Goodhue Lake, covering an area of about 500 acres, lies in the n. w. corner of the town. The soil is principally a clay loam, with strips of gravel and alluvium upon the streams. Addison, (p. v.), situated on Canisteo River, contains 3 churches, a bank, several mills and manufacturing establishments. Pop. about 1,300. South Addison (p. v.) contains 18 dwellings. Addison Hill is a p. o.

The Addison Journal was started in 1851 by R. Denton, and was removed to Allegany co. in 1852.

The Addison Democrat was commenced by Chas. L. Phelps in 1853, and was merged in The Voice of the Nation in 1854.

The Addison Advertiser, established in 1858 by E. M. Johnson & Henry Baldwin, is still published.

The Corning and Blossburg Advocate was commenced at Corning in 1840 by Chas. Adams. In 1841 it passed into the hands of Henry H. Hull, by whom it was merged, in 1843, in the Steuben Courier, at Bath.

The Corning Journal was commenced by Thomas Messenger in May, 1847. In 1851 it passed to A. W. McDowell and G. W. Pratt, and in 1852 to Dr. Pratt, its present publisher.

The Corning Sun was started in 1853 by M. M. Pomeroy and P. C. Van Gelder. In 1854 Rev. Ira Brown became the publisher, and changed its name to

The Elmira Southern Tier Farmer and Corning Sun, and continued it until 1856.

The United States Farmer was published at Corning in the spring of 1856.

The Corning Democrat was established in 1857 by Chas. T. Huston. It is now published by Frank B. Brown.

The Painted Post Gazette was started by — Fairchild in 1846, and continued 1 year.

The Painted Post Herald was published by Hawley & Bennett from 1848 to 1850.

The Hornellsville Tribune was commenced in Nov. 1851, by Edw. Hough. It is now published by E. Hough & Son.

The National American was established at Hornellsville in 1856 by C. M. Harmon. In Nov. 1858, it was sold to Chas. A. Kinney, and its name changed to the Canisteo Valley Journal.

A paper was published for a time at Hammondsport, on Crooked Lake.

¹ Capt. Williamson was a Scotchman, and an officer in the British 24th regiment of infantry during the period of the Revolution; but he did not serve in the war, in consequence of having been made a prisoner by the French while crossing the Atlantic.

² “A large proportion of the first settlers upon the Canisteo were from Penn., and had within them a goodly infusion of that boisterous spirit and love of rough play for which the free and manly sons of the backwoods are everywhere famous. On the Susquehanna frontier, before the Revolution, had arisen an athletic, scuffling, wrestling race, lovers of hard blows, sharp shooters, and runners, who delighted in nothing more than in those ancient sports by which the backs and limbs of all stout hearted youths have been tested since the days of Hercules. The eating of bears, the drinking of grog, the devouring of hominy, venison, and all the invigorating diet of the frontiers, the hewing down of forests, the paddling of canoes, the fighting of savages, all combined to form a generation of yeomen and foresters daring, rude, and free. Canisteo was a sprout from this stout stock, and on the generous river flats flourished with amazing vigor. Every thing that could eat, drink, and wrestle was welcome.—Turk or Tuscarora, Anak or Authroplogus, Blue Beard or Blunderbox. A ‘back hold’ with a Ghoul would not have been declined, nor a drinking match with a Berserker. Since the Centaurs never has there been better specimens of a ‘half horse’ tribe. To many of the settlers in other parts of the country, who emigrated from the decorous civilization of the East and South, these boisterous foreigners were objects of astonishment. When ‘Canisteo’ went abroad, the public soon found it out. On the Confection they were known to some as the Six Nations, and, to the amusement and wonder of young Europeans, would sometimes visit at Bath, being of a social disposition, and sit all day, ‘singing, telling stories, and drinking grog, and never get drunk, nay!’ To the staid and devout they were Arabs,—cannibals. Intercourse between the scattered settlements of the colony was, of course, limited mainly to visits of necessity; but rumor took the fair fame of Canisteo in hand, and gave the settlement a notoriety through all the land which few ‘rising villages,’ even of the present day, enjoy. It was pretty well understood over all the country that beyond the mountains of Steuben, in the midst of the most rugged district of the wilderness, lay a corn growing valley, which had been taken possession of by some vociferous tribe, whether of Mamelukes or Tartars no one could precisely say, whose whooping and obstreperous laughter was heard far and wide, surprising the solitudes.”—McMasters’s Hist. Steuben co., pp. 66-7-8.

³ This co., sympathized to some extent in the hostile feeling that prevailed throughout the Holland Land Company’s Purchase toward its European proprietors a few years since; but in no instance were the processes of the courts seriously impeded or effectually resisted, and juries have never refused to render for the proprietors as the facts warranted. There was doubtless little regret felt by the foreign owners in this estate beyond the “of realizing the greatest sum possible from their lands; and the heavy burden of debts, interest, assignments, and back payments, perhaps not always borne with patience, have been gradually discharged, until but a comparatively small amount remains.

The first settlement was made by Samuel Rice, in 1791.¹ The first church (M. E.) was organized in 1827, at East Hill.²

AVOCA³—was formed from Bath, Cohocton, Howard, and Wheeler, April 12, 1843. It is an interior town, lying n. w. of the center of the co. The surface is mostly a broken upland, divided into two ridges by the valley of the Conhocton. The declivities of the hills are steep, and their summits are about 400 feet above the river. The streams are Conhocton River and its tributaries Twelve Mile, Ten Mile, and Five Mile Creeks from the n., and Bennetts and Neils Creeks from the s. The valley of the river is about 1½ mi. wide. The soil is a clayey and gravelly loam. Avoca, (p. v.), situated in the valley of the Conhocton, is a station on the B., N. Y. & E. R. R. It contains 2 churches, an iron foundry, and a flouring mill. Pop. 301. Wallace (p. o.) is a station on the B., N. Y. & E. R. R. The first settlement was made in 1800, by Michael Buchanan,⁴ There are 2 churches in town; Bap. and M. E.

BATH⁵—was formed March 18, 1796. Pulteney was taken off in 1808, a part of Howard and Cohocton in 1812, a part of Wheeler in 1820, Urbana in 1822, a part of Avoca in 1843, and a part of Cohocton in 1852. A part of Urbana was annexed April 26, 1839. It lies a little n. e. of the center of the co. Its surface is broken and hilly. The Conhocton Valley, extending s. e. through the center, divides the town into two nearly equal parts. The s. half is a hilly upland, and the n. half consists of a series of wide valleys broken by several steep and isolated hills. The streams are Conhocton River and its tributaries Five Mile and Mud Creeks from the n., and Campbells and Stocktons Creeks from the s. The Crooked Lake Valley extends n. w., and opens into the Conhocton Valley at the village of Bath, 340 feet above the lake. The soil is chiefly a gravelly and clayey loam, with a deep alluvium in the valleys. Bath, (p. v.) incorp. April 12, 1816, is situated upon the n. bank of the Conhocton. It is a half-shire of the co. It commands the trade of a rich agricultural district and has a manufacturing business of considerable importance. It contains the co. buildings, 6 churches, 2 banks, and 2 newspaper offices. Pop. 2,012. Kanona,⁶ (p. v.) n. w. of Bath, a station on the B., N. Y. & E. R. R., contains 2 churches and 40 houses; and Savona,⁷ (p. v.) s. e. of Bath, a station on the same r. r., contains 2 churches and 232 inhabitants; Sonora (p. v.) contains 1 church and 20 houses. The first settlement was made at Bath Village, in 1793, by Charles Williamson, land agent for the Pulteney estate, with 15 families, mostly Scotch and Germans.⁸ The first settled minister was Rev. John Niles, who moved to the town in 1807.⁹

BRADFORD¹⁰—was formed from "Jersey," (now Orange, Schuyler co.,) April 20, 1836. A part was annexed to Orange, April 17, 1854. It lies near the center of the e. border of the co. Its surface is a hilly upland, broken by the valley of Mud Creek and Mud Lake. Mud Lake, near the e. border, is 1,100 feet above tide, and the summits of the hills are about 600 feet above the lake. The soil is generally a gravelly and clayey loam and best adapted to pasturage. Bradford, (p. v.), on the outlet of Mud Lake, in the n. e. part of the town, contains 1 church and a gristmill and has a pop. of 260. South Bradford (p. v.) contains 1 church and 20 houses.

¹ Among the first settlers were Elisha Gilbert, Saml. and Reuben Sears, John and Isaac Martin, Wm. Wombough, Wm. B. Jones, Israel Chauncey, Jesse Rowley, Amos Carr, and Amos Towley. The first birth was that of Stephen Rice; the first marriage, that of Brown Gillespie and Miss Gilbert; and the first death, that of James Martin. Wm. Wombough built the first sawmill, in 1805, and the first gristmill, in 1806. The first store was kept by Samuel Smith, and the first inn by Reuben Sears.

⁴ The early settlers called the place "Buchanan," or the "Eight Mile Tree."

⁵ James Moore, Joel Collier, Asa Phillips, James McWhorter, Finley McClure, Daniel McKenzie, Abraham Towner, Jonathan Tilton, James Babcock, John Donabe, Richard and John Van Burskirk, Eleazar Tucker, — Moody, Henry and Allen Smith, James Davis, and Samuel W. Burnham were among the first settlers. Michael Buchanan 2d was born in 1809; Michael Buchanan died in 1811; and James McWhorter and widow Buchanan were married in 1812. Eleazar Tucker built the first sawmill, and Jonathan Tilton the first gristmill, in 1825. Joel Collier kept the first inn, in 1808, and Alonzo Simmons the first store, in 1830.

⁶ Named from Lady Bath, only child and heiress of Sir Wm. Pulteney, of London. She was succeeded July 15, 1808, by Sir John L. Johnstone, of Scotland, who appointed Robert Troup agent. Its Indian name was Tanighnaguanda.—McCasters's Hist. Steuben, pp. 111, 142.

⁸ Dngald and Charles Cameron, Thos. Metcalf, Hector McKenzie, Andrew Smith, Geo. McClure, James McDonald, Henry McElwee, James Beese, Robert Campbell, and William Dunn settled in the town in 1793; and Wm. Kersey, John Wilson, Geo. D. Cooper, Daniel McKenzie, and Gustavus and Brown Gillespie soon after. Charles Williamson Dunn, born in 1795, was the first male child born in town. The first saw and grist mills were built in 1793, by Charles Williamson; and the first inn was kept the same year, by John Metcalf.

The proprietors of the Pulteney estate indulged in visions of boundless wealth to result from the settlement of their lands. They supposed that the natural avenue to market from the rich "Genesee country" was down the Susquehanna, and that a city might be founded upon some of the headwaters of that stream which would command the entire trade of the West. After a survey of the region, the present site of Bath was selected as the location of the future city. Every inducement was held out to lure settlers; and for several years the markets of Bath proved a mine of wealth to the few who raised more grain than enough for their own use. Williamson erected a theater within a few years after the first settlement, in anticipation of the future metropolitan character of the place. A race course was also established, which for many years attracted sportsmen from all parts of the country. The golden visions of civic grandeur were never realized.

¹⁰ Named from Gen. Bradford.

The first settlement was made in 1793, by Frederick Bartles and John Hervey, from New Jersey.¹ Rev. E. Sanford was the first preacher in town; and Rev. Mr. Lazelle, (Bap.), who settled in town in 1816, was the first settled minister. There are 2 churches in town; Bap. and M. E.

CAMERON²—was formed from Addison, April 16, 1822. Thurston was taken off in 1844, and a part of Rathbone in 1856. It lies a little s. of the center of the co. Its surface is a high, rolling upland, broken by the deep valley of Canisteo River, which flows s. e. through near the center of the town. The soil is a clayey and gravelly loam. Cameron, (p. v.), on the Canisteo, is a station on the Erie R. R. and contains 2 churches and 35 houses; West Cameron (p. v.) contains 1 church and 15 houses. North Cameron is a p. o. ³ Named from Hon. Erastus Corning, of Albany.

⁴ In the summer of 1779, a party of Tories and Indians, under the command of a loyalist named McDonald, returned from an incursion into the Susquehanna settlements, bringing with them many of their number wounded. At the confluence of Tioga and Cohocton Rivers, Captain Montour, son of the famous Queen Catharine, a chief of great promise, died of his wounds. His comrades buried him by the riverside, and planted above his grave a post on which were painted various symbols and rude devices. This monument was known throughout the Genesee Forests as 'The Painted Post.' It was a landmark well known to all the Six Nations, and was often visited by their braves and chieftains.² This account of the origin of the Painted Post was given to Benj. Patterson, the hunter, by a man named Taggart, who was carried to Fort Niagara a prisoner by McDonald's party, and was a witness of the burial of Capt. Montour, or at least was in the encampment at the mouth of the Tioga at the time of his death. Col. Harper, of Harpersfield, the well known officer of the frontier militia of New York in the Revolution, informed Judge Knox, of Knoxville, in this co., that the Painted Post was erected over the grave of a chief who was wounded at the battle of the "Hog-Back" and brought in a canoe to the head of the Chemung, where he died. It was well understood by the early settlers that this monument was erected in memory of some distinguished warrior who had been wounded in one of the border battles of the Revolution and afterward died at this place. The post stood for many years after the settlement of the co.; and the story goes that it rotted down at the butt, and was preserved in the bar-room of a tavern till about the year 1810 and then mysteriously disappeared. It is also said to have been swept away in a freshet. — McMasters's Hist. of Steuben. Simm's Hist. Schoharie, p. 333.

⁶ Named from Judge John Knox, of this town.

⁷ Benj. and Peleg Gorton, Jr., Ephraim Patterson and his sons Ichabod and Stephen, Bradford Eggleston, Justus Wolcott, Elias, William, and Henry McCormick, Hezekiah Thurber, Jonathan Cook, Samuel Colgrove, and Eli and Eldad Need settled in the town in 1790-91-92; Jonathan and Warren Rowley in 1794; James Turner and Caleb Wolcott in 1795; George McCullock and Benj. Bennett, Ephraim Rumsey, Wm. Allen, Daniel N. Bennett, Jonas and Seth Rice, and Nathao Cory in 1810-11; and Simeon Bacon, Wm. Goff, Israel Baldwin, and Rufus Halsey in 1812. Arothusa Bullard was born in 1809, and Mrs. Rowley died the same year.—the first birth and death in town. Henry Kennedy built the first sawmill, in 1809; James Vaughn, the first gristmill, in 1810; and Benj. Bennett kept the first inn, in 1816.

¹³ Named in honor of Col. Eliazur Lindley.

ings. Erwin Center is a hamlet upon the river, near the n. border of the town. The first settlement was made in 1790, by Col. Eleazur Lindley, from N. J., the original proprietor of the town, who located upon the Tioga Flats.¹

PRATTSBURGH²—was formed from Pulteney, April 12, 1813, and a part of Wheeler was taken off in 1820. It is centrally situated upon the n. border of the co. Its surface is a hilly upland, broken by the valleys of several small streams flowing in a general s. w. direction. The principal streams are Five Mile, Ten Mile, and Twelve Mile Creeks. The valley at Prattsburgh Village is 1,400 feet above tide, and the hills are 300 to 400 feet higher. The soil is a gravelly and clay loam. Prattsburgh (p. v.) was incorp. Dec. 7, 1848. It contains the Franklin Academy,³ 2 churches, and several manufacturing establishments.⁴ Pop. about 600. Rikers Hollow (p. o.) is a hamlet. The first settler was Jared Pratt, who came in 1801 and for 2½ years was the only inhabitant.⁵ The first religious services were held at the house of Jared Pratt, by Rev. John Niles, in the fall of 1803.⁶

PULTENEY⁷—was formed from Bath, Feb. 12, 1808. Prattsburgh was taken off in 1813, and a part of Urbana in 1848. It lies upon the w. shore of Crooked Lake, and is the n. e. corner town of the co. The surface is a rolling upland, 700 to 900 feet above the level of the lake. The declivities along the lake shore are broken by numerous narrow ravines formed by small streams. The soil is chiefly a shaly and gravelly loam, and in some parts near the lake it is clayey. Harmonyville (Pulteney p. o.) contains 2 churches and 20 houses; and Bluffport (South Pulteney p. o.) 20 houses. Peltonville (p. o.) is a hamlet. Gulicksville, a landing on the lake, has a storehouse and 8 houses. Settlement commenced in 1802.⁸ Rev. Ephraim Eggleston, the first settled preacher, removed to the town in 1805. The census reports 6 churches.⁹

RATHBONE¹⁰—was formed from Addison, Cameron, and Woodhull, March 28, 1856. It is an interior town, lying s. of the center of the co. Its surface consists of a high, rolling upland, broken by the valleys of Canisteo River and a branch of Tuscarora Creek. The upland is 300 to 400 feet above the valleys. Naked and precipitous ledges of rock crop out on the hillsides along the valleys. The soil is a clayey and shaly loam, and in the valleys alluvium. Rathboneville, (p. v.,) on Canisteo River, is a station on the Erie R. R. and contains 1 church, a flouring mill, and 33 houses. West Addison (p. o.) and Cameron Mills (p. o.) are hamlets. The first settlements were made in 1793–95.¹¹ There are 2 M. E. churches in town.

THURSTON¹²—was formed from Cameron, Feb. 28, 1844. It is an interior town, lying just s. e. of the center of the co. Its surface is mostly a high, broken upland, forming a portion of the dividing ridge between Conhocton and Canisteo Rivers. The summits of the hills are 500 to 600 feet above the river valleys. The streams are Stocktons Creek, in the n. w., and several smaller creeks flowing in deep, narrow ravines bordered by steep hillsides. The soil is a shaly and gravelly loam. Merchantville, in the e., Bonny Hill, (p. o.,) in the n. e., and Risingville, (p. o.,) in the w., are hamlets. Thurston and South Thurston are p. offices. The first settlers were William Smith, Luke Bonny, and Anderson Carpenter, at Bonny Hill, in ¹ Col. Lindley served with the Jersey Blues during the Revolutionary War. In his migration to his new home he was accompanied by his two sons Saml. and Eleazur, his son-in-law Ezekiel Mulford and John Seeley, and a man named David Cook. The first child born was Eliza Mulford, Aug. 10, 1792; the first marriage, that of David Cook, jr. and Elizabeth Cady; and the first death, that of Col. Eleazur Lindley, in June, 1794. Joseph Miller taught the first school, near the Penn. line, in 1793; the widow of Col. Lindley kept the first inn, on the w. bank of the river; and John P. Ryers, the first store. The first sawmill was erected by Col. Lindley. There is no church, no hotel, nor place where liquor is sold in the town.

⁴ A foundery, a tannery and a flouring mill.

⁵ Rev. John Niles, David Bnell, Saml. Tuthill, and Capt. Joel Pratt came into town in 1803; William P. Curtis, Pomeroy Hall, and Salisbury Barton in 1804; Nosh Niles, Cyril Ward, Aaron Bull, Enoch Niles, Harmon Fowler, Rufus Blodgett, and Stephen Hall, in 1805. They were all originally from New England. The first child born was Mariette Pratt, in 1802; the first death, a daughter of Wm. P. Curtis, drowned, in 1804; and the first marriage, that of Isaac Pardee and Patty Waldo, in 1806. The first school was taught in a church by Horace Bull, in 1806-07; the first inn was kept by Aaron Bull, the same year; the first mill was erected on Five Mile Creek, by Robert Porter. Capt. Joel Pratt was a large proprietor of the town; and the first settlement was conducted wholly under his encouragement, advice, and direction.

⁶ The census reports 6 churches; 2 Bsp., 2 M. E., Cong., and Christian.

⁷ Named from Sir Wm. Pulteney, former owner of the Pulteney Tract.

¹¹ James Hadley and Wm. Benham were the first settlers. Among the early settlers were Isaac and Jonathan Tracy, Martin Young, Wm. Morey, Moses Powers, Zephachiah Townsend, Thos. Maybury, and Saml. Colgrove. Isaac Tracy built the first sawmill, in 1806; Lemuel Benham kept the first inn, in 1804, and Gen. Rathbone the first store, in 1842.

TROUBSBURGH³—was formed from "Middletown" (now Addison) and Canisteo, Feb. 12, 1808. Parts of Greenwood and Jasper were taken off in 1827, and a part of Woodhull in 1828. A part of Canisteo was annexed April 4, 1818. It lies on the s. border of the co., w. of the center. Its surface is principally a hilly upland, broken by the deep valleys of small streams. The highest summits are 2,500 feet above tide and are the highest points in the co. Troups Creek, flowing s., is the principal stream. The soil is a slaty and clayey loam. Troupsburgh Center, (Troupsburgh p. o.) on Troups Creek, near the center of the town, contains an academy⁴ and 20 dwellings; South Troupsburgh (p. v.) contains 16 dwellings. East Troupsburgh, (p. o.), West Troupsburgh, (p. o.), and Young Hickory (p. o.) are hamlets. The pioneer settler was Samuel B. Rice, from Conn., who located e. of the center of the town in 1805.⁵ The first religious association (M. E.) was formed at the house of Samuel Cady, by Rev. Parker Buell, first preacher. The census reports 5 churches.⁶

URBANA—was formed from Bath, April 17, 1822. A part was annexed to Bath in 1839; a part of Wheeler was annexed May 3, 1839, and a part of Pulteney April 12, 1848. It lies at the head of Crooked Lake, n. e. of the center of the co. Its surface is divided by Pleasant Valley (a continuation of Crooked Lake Valley) into two series of highlands, rising 800 to 1,000 feet above the lake. Cold Spring Creek takes its rise in this valley and flows n. e. to the lake. The soil in the valleys is alluvial, and on the hilltops a heavy, gravelly loam. From their sheltered situation, the slopes of the hills descending to the s. and e. are finely adapted to the culture of the grape.⁷ The town is noted for the production of a superior quality of fine wool. Hammontport, (Urbana p. o.), at the head of Crooked Lake, was incorp. June 16, 1856. It contains 2 churches and several manufacturing establishments. A daily line of steamboats plies between this place and Penn Yan. Pop. 560. North Urbana, (p. v.), in the n. e. part of the town, contains 2 churches and 20 houses. Cold Spring is a hamlet; and Mount Washington, in the s. e., is a p. o. William Aulls and his son Ephraim, from Penn., settled at Pleasant Valley in 1793.⁸ Elder Ephraim Sanford (Bap.) preached the first sermon, at the house of Mr. Baker, in 1795.⁹

WAYLAND¹⁰—was formed from Cohocton and Dansville, April 12, 1848. A part of Fremont was taken off in 1854. It is the most western town upon the n. border of the co. Its surface is an upland, rolling in the n. and moderately hilly in the s. It forms a portion of the watershed between Susquehanna River and Lake Ontario; and its highest summits are 1,600 to 1,800 feet above tide. The streams are small creeks and brooks. Loon and Mud Lakes are situated in a valley in the s. part of the town, and their waters flow in opposite directions. The outlet of the former is subterranean for half a mi.; and where it comes to the surface it is in sufficient volume to form a valuable mill stream. The soil in the n. is gravel and muck, and in the s. a shaly loam. Wayland, (Wayland Depot p. o.), in the n. e. part of the town, contains 40 dwellings. It is a station on the B., N. Y. & E. R. R. Perkinsville, 2 mi. s. w. of Wayland, contains 2 churches and 30 dwellings. Patchins Mills is a hamlet. Loon Lake is a p. o. The first settlement was made in 1806-07, by Thos. Bowles and John H. Miller.¹¹ The census reports 3 churches.¹²

¹ Amos Dickinson settled in 1814; and Joseph Fluent at Bonny Hill in 1817. The first settlers at Aldrich settlement were William Jack, Samuel Fisk, and Thomas Aldrich, in 1823. The first child born was Irena Smith, in 1813; the first marriage, that of Joseph Fluent and Fanny Dickinson, in 1818; and the first death, that of Aderson Carpenter, killed by the falling of a tree, in 1817. The first school was taught at Bonny Hill, by Caroline Vinca, in 1818; the first store was kept by Harlow Sears, at Merchantville. No tavern was ever kept in the town, and no license was ever granted to sell liquor.

² The census reports 4 churches; 2 M. E., Bap., and Christian.

⁴ This institution has an average attendance of about 60 pupils.

⁶ In 1857, 20 acres were devoted to vineyards; and the success of the experiment was so great that the number of acres was doubled in 1858. There are about 2,000 acres in town with the e. and w. inclination adapted to this purpose.

⁷ In 1857, 20 acres were devoted to vineyards; and the success of the experiment was so great that the number of acres was doubled in 1858. There are about 2,000 acres in town with the e. and w. inclination adapted to this purpose.

⁸ In 1793, 20 acres were devoted to vineyards; and the success of the experiment was so great that the number of acres was doubled in 1858. There are about 2,000 acres in town with the e. and w. inclination adapted to this purpose.

¹² Among the early settlers were Adam Zimmerman, David Brown, — Kaizer, Stephen Hicke, Thos. Begola, Solomon, James, and Elsha Brownson, Isaac Willie, Walter and Dr. Warren Patchin, Dennis Hees, Benj. Perkins, and Samuel Draper. The first sawmill was built by Benj. Perkins; and the first gristmill, by Dugald Cameron and Abijah Fowler, in 1818. Saml. Taggart kept the first inn, in 1827; and James L. Monier, the first store, in 1830. The first school was taught by Thos. Wilbur, in 1811.

WAYNE¹—named in honor of Gen. Anthony Wayne—was formed, as “Frederickstown,” March 18, 1796. Its name was changed April 6, 1808. Reading (Schuyler co.) was taken off in 1806, Orange (Schuyler co.) in 1813, and Barrington (Yates co.) and Tyrone (Schuyler co.) in 1822. A part was annexed to Tyrone April 17, 1854. It is situated upon Crooked Lake, on the e. border of the co. Its surface is a rolling upland, 400 to 600 feet high, descending abruptly to the lake. Little Lake is a beautiful sheet of water lying along the e. border. The soil is a gravelly and slaty loam underlaid by hardpan. Wayne,² (p. v.) on the line of Tyrone, (Schuyler co.,) contains 3 churches and 40 houses. Wayne Four Corners is a p. o. The first settlement was made in 1791, by Zephaniah Hoff, Henry Mapes, Widow Jennings, and Solomon Wixson.³ Rev. Ephraim Sanford (Bap.) was one of the first settlers, and for many years the only clergyman in town. There are 2 churches in town; M. E. and Union.

WEST UNION—was formed from Greenwood, April 25, 1845. It is the s. w. corner town of the co. Its surface is a broken and hilly upland, the highest summits being 2,000 to 2,400 feet above tide. A large part of the town is yet covered with forests. Bennetts Creek is the principal stream. The soil is a heavy, slaty loam. Lumbering is extensively pursued. Rexville (p. o.) and Wileysville (p. o.) are hamlets. West Union is a p. o. The first settler was Abraham V. Olmsted, who located at Rexville in 1822.⁴ The first church (M. E.) was formed at Rexville in 1831. There are 2 churches in town; Bap. and M. E.

WHEELER⁵—was formed from Bath and Prattsburgh, Feb. 25, 1820. A part of Avoca was taken off in 1843, and a part of Urbana in 1839. It is an interior town, lying n. e. of the center of the co. Its surface is a high, rolling upland, broken by the valleys of Five Mile and Ten Mile Creeks and of several small lateral streams. The soil is a shaly and clayey loam, well adapted to both grazing and tillage. Mitchellville (p. v.) contains 20 houses; and Wheeler Center (Wheeler p. o.) 1 church and 15 houses. The first settlement was made in 1799, by Capt. Silas Wheeler, from Albany co.⁶ Rev. Ephraim Eggleston (Bap.) conducted the first religious services, in 1802. There are 2 churches in town; Presb. and M. E.

WOODHULL⁷—was formed from Troupsburgh and Addison, Feb. 18, 1828. A part of Rathbone was taken off in 1856. It is the central town upon the s. border of the co. Its surface is a hilly upland, a considerable portion of which is yet covered with forests. Tuscarora Creek, flowing e. through the northerly part of the town, is the principal stream. The soil is a clayey and gravelly loam. Lumbering is carried on to some extent. Newville, (Woodhull p. o.,) on Tuscarora Creek, contains 3 churches and several manufacturing establishments. Pop. 215. Hedgesville contains 10 houses. The first settlement was made in 1805, by Stephen Dolson, Daniel Johnson, Patrick Breakhill, Bethuel Tubbs, and Samuel B. Rice.⁸ The first church (Presb.) was organized in 1830; and the Rev. Mr. Pomeroy was the first pastor. There are 4 churches in town.⁹

³ Enos, Joseph, and James Silsbee, Abraham Hendricks, Joshua Smith, John Holdridge, Elijah Reynolds, and Ephraim Tyler were among the early settlers. The first birth was that of Elizabeth Wixson, Nov. 6, 1793; and the first marriage, that of Ephraim Sanford, Jr. and Julia Hoff. Jas. Silsbee kept the first store, and Enos Silsbee the first inn. The first school was taught by Nathaniel Frisbee, in 1797.

⁶ Nathan Ross, Wm. Holmes, and Turner Gardner settled in town in 1799; Col. Jonathan Barney and Phos. Anils in 1800; Philip Murtle in 1802; and Otto F. Marshall, and others, named Bear, Fernal, and Rife, in 1808. William, son of Jonathan Barney, was born Nov. 1, 1801, and died Dec. 1, 1802,—the first birth and death in town. Hon. Grattan H. Wheeler was a party to the first marriage. Capt. Wheeler built the first sawmill, in 1802; and Geo. W. Taylor the first gristmill, in 1803-04. John Beale kept the first inn, in 1820; and Cornelius Younglove, the first store, in 1835. The first school was taught by Uriel Chspin.

⁷ Capt. Wheeler's first trip to mill is worthy of record. There were, at the time when he had occasion to ‘go to mill,’ three institutions in the neighborhood where grinding was done,—at the Friends' settlement, at Bath, and at Naples. The millstones of Bath had suspended operations,—there being nothing there to grind, as was reported. Capt. Wheeler made a cart, of which the wheels were sawn from the end of a log of curly maple; the box was of corresponding architecture. He started for Naples with two oxen attached to this vehicle. Two young men went before the oxen with axes and chopped a road, and the clumsy chariot came floundering through the bushes behind, bouncing over the logs and snubbing the stumps, like a ship working through an ice field. The first day they reached a point a little beyond the present village of Prattsburgh, a distance of six miles from their starting point, and the second moored triumphantly at the mill at Naples.—McMasters's Hist. Steuben Co., pp. 195-196.

⁸ Named in honor of Gen. Nathaniel Woodhull, of the Revolution.

⁹ Caleb Smith settled in the town in 1808. The first birth was that of Polly Smith; the first marriage, that of Levi Rice and Cynthia Tubbs; and the first death, that of Benj. Tubbs. Caleb Smith built the first gristmill, in 1806; Ichabod S. Leach kept the first inn, and Josiah Tubbs the first store. The first school was taught by Abner Thomas.

* Formed since 1855.

SUFFOLK COUNTY.

THIS county¹ was organized Nov. 1, 1683. It occupies the e. part of Long Island, embracing about two-thirds of its area, and includes several smaller islands off the e. and n. coasts. It is centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains — sq. mi. The e. extremity of the island is divided by Great and Little Peconic and Gardners Bays into two narrow, unequal branches, between which are Gardners, Shelter, and Robins Islands. A chain of islands extends from the n. branch nearly to the Conn. shore.² A beach composed of alluvial sand and shingle, broken only by occasional inlets, skirts the s. shore of the island, enclosing several large, irregular bays, the principal of which are Great South, East, Shinnecock, and Mecox Bays. "This great beach is a line of spits and islands. One of the islands is about 25 mi. long, with a breadth of a few hundred yards. They are all narrow and long; and when above the reach of the surf they are covered by a labyrinth of hillocks of drifted sand, imitating almost all the variety of form which snow drifts present after a storm."

The action of the waves and winds is gradually extending this beach. Off the s. coast the sea is very shallow; 50 mi. from the shore its depth nowhere exceeds 40 fathoms; and sandbars at a considerable distance from the beach approach so near the surface as to break the waves into a surf. The traveler along the beach is seldom out of sight of a wreck.³ Irregular branches project inland from Long Island Sound, in the w. part of the co., and from the bays upon the s. and e. The peninsulas and points thus formed are locally known as "necks." Upon the s. side of the island these necks generally take the name of the stream e. of them. An irregular range of hills extends e. and w. through the co., a little n. of the center. A second range, commencing in Brookhaven, extends into the s. branch of the island, terminating at Canoe Place and reappearing farther e. as the Shinnecock Hills. Along the n. border of the co. the surface is somewhat broken; but in the s. it is very level. In the e. part are several fresh water lakes, and a few in the central and w. parts, the principal of which is Lake Ronkonkoma, on the w. border of Brookhaven. The principal streams are Peconic River, in the e., and the Connecticut, in the central part. The soil is generally a light, sandy loam, moderately fertile along the coasts; but in some parts the surface consists of almost sterile plains or barren sandhills. The interior of the island, from near the foot of the hills to within one or two mi. of South Bay, is occupied by the "brush plains," which are sparsely inhabited and hardly susceptible of cultivation. Thousands of acres of these plains were burned over in 1844 and '45; and a thin growth of scrub oak, 3 to 4 feet high, has since sprung up on the burned tract.⁴ Along the coast are extensive salt marshes. No native rock is found within this co.; and the whole island, except a few rocks near Hellgate, appears to belong to the drift formation or to have been formed as a strand of the sea. The waters of the sea are slowly encroaching upon the land of the e. and n. parts.

The various branches of agriculture form the leading industrial pursuits.⁵ Successful husbandry in this co. involves a large expenditure for fertilizers,⁶ which to considerable extent are obtained from the neighboring seas. Immense quantities of bony fish⁷ are caught for this pur-

² These islands appear to have been separated from the mainland and from each other by tidal currents, which flow between them with great force.—"N. Y. Geological Survey," Mather.

³ From Nov. 1, 1854, to June 28, 1857, 8 ships, 9 barks, 16 brigs, 25 schooners, and 9 sloops were wrecked, or in distress, off this coast. The Government has established 26 lifeboat stations upon the s. shore, (of which 19 are within this co.), 1 on Fishers Island, 1 at Orient Point, and 2 upon the sound. Each station is furnished with boats, life-cars, mortars and rockets for throwing lines, and at each a keeper is in constant attendance. Under the provisions of the act of Feb. 16, 1787, "wreck-masters" are appointed by the Governor and Senate in and for the several counties bordering upon the seashore. Of these there are 15 in Suffolk co. It is their duty to render every possible aid to distressed vessels. A project has recently been formed of constructing a telegraph line from Montauk Point to Brooklyn, with stations along the beach, so that intelligence may be transmitted in season to admit of aid being sent to vessels in distress.

⁴ Some of these tracts are 8 to 10 mi. long and 2 to 4 wide. The fires destroyed not only the forest trees, but every vestige of vegetation, and thousands of cords of wood; hundreds of deer and other animals, perished in them. These lands are valuable only for the timber upon them; and when that is destroyed they become nearly worthless.

⁷ These fish are the Alosa menhaden, or "moss bunkers," and are usually called "bunkers" or "skippangs." They are caught from May to Nov., in seines, in immense quantities; at a single haul, a few years since, 1,400,000 were taken. They are sold at an average price of $1 per M. They are usually strown upon the surface as a top dressing or plowed under, but are sometimes rotted with earth, seaweed, and other articles in compost heaps. The stench of these decaying fish is extremely unpleasant and almost overpowering to strangers.

pose, and are used either alone or in connection with seaweed, stable manure, compost, guano, ashes, and other fertilizers. Oysters and clams abound in the bays and seas around the island; and the taking of these, and fishing, form the principal occupations of the inhabitants along the shore. From the first settlement of the co. considerable attention has been given to whaling. This business was originally carried on in open boats from the shore;¹ but large vessels are now sent upon long voyages to the Polar Seas.² The preparation of "fish guano," and oil from bunkers,³ shipbuilding, and brickmaking are the principal manufacturing interests of the co.⁴ At Fire Island, Greenport, and Orient, and at most of the villages along the s. county road, are extensive hotels, especially fitted for the accommodation of families from New York City, great numbers of whom spend the summer months at these public houses or in private families.

The county seat is located at Riverhead.⁵ The courthouse is a fine two story brick building, situated near the dépôt, and contains the usual county offices, and accommodations for the sheriff's family.⁶ The jail, situated in rear of the courthouse, is a two story stone octagonal building. The county clerk's office is a fireproof brick building. The co. has no poorhouse.⁷

The first regulation concerning public roads was adopted under authority of an act of General Assembly passed in 1724, and was kept alive by repeated enactments. Commissioners appointed by this authority about 1733 laid out 3 principal roads from w. to e. These were called the North, Middle, and South County Roads, and upon them the principal villages and settlements are located. The project of opening a navigable communication between the bays upon the s. shore of the island was recommended by Gov. Clinton in 1825, and was subsequently authorized by law, but was never carried into effect.⁸ The Long Island R. R. affords the principal avenue of business through the island.⁹ Short stage routes connect the several villages along the n. and s. shores with the r. r.

Six newspapers are published in the co.; 2 at Greenport, 2 at Huntington, 1 at Sag Harbor, and 1 at Patchogue.¹⁰

When Long Island first became known, it was inhabited by 13 tribes of Indians, of which all but two resided wholly or in part in this co.¹¹ Of these the Montauks were the most numerous

⁶ This building was erected in 1854 and '55, at a cost of $17,800. The committee appointed to superintend its erection were Sam'l B. Nicoll, Wm. R. Post, and Sylvester Miller. By an act passed April 9, 1813, the clerk of this co. was authorized to establish his office in two places, and to appoint a deputy to have charge of one. The records migrated between Islip and Southold, and were kept many years at Smithtown. The records of wills in this co. extend back to 1669. The records of the court of General Sessions and Common Pleas have been separately recorded since 1723.

⁷ Most of the towns have poorhouses, at which co. paupers are provided for at the co. expense.

The Suffolk Co. Recorder was established at Sag Harbor Oct. 19, 1810, by Sam'l A. Seabury. The following year it was changed to

The American Eagle, and two years afterward it was discontinued.

The Corrector was started at Sag Harbor Aug. 3, 1822, by H. W. Hunt, and is now published by Alex. Hunt.

The Republican Watchman was commenced at Sag Harbor in Sept. 1828, by Sam'l Phillips. In Sept. 1844, it was removed to Greenport, where it is now published by S. Phillips & Son.

The Suffolk Times was started at Greenport in Aug. 1857, by John J. Riddell, its present publisher.

The American Eagle was established at Huntington in 1821 by Sam'l A. Seabury. In May, 1825, it was changed to

The Long Island Journal of Philosophy and Cabinet of Variety, (mo.), published by Samuel Fleet. In 1827 it was changed to

The Portico, and was discontinued in 1820.

The Long Islander was started at Huntington in July, 1838, by Walter Whitman, and is now published by Geo. H. Shepard.

The Suffolk Democrat was started Feb. 17, 1847, at Huntington, and is now published by Edward Straban.

The Suffolk Gazette was commenced at Riverhead in Aug. 1849. After 18 months it was removed to Sag Harbor. In Dec. 1854, it was brought back to Riverhead, and was soon after discontinued.

The Suffolk Herald was established at Patchogue Aug. 14, 1858, by Van Zant & Co., its present publishers.

¹¹ These tribes were the "Amereques," occupying Kings co. and a part of Jamaica; the "Rockaways," the country about Rockaway and parts of Jamaica and Newtown; the "Mattinecockes," the w. side of the island, from Flushing to the e. line of Huntington; the "Nessequens," the country from the e. line of Huntington to Stony Brook; the "Settauclucks," that from Stony Brook to Wading River; the "Corohogues," all the n. branch of the Island e. of Wading River; the "Merecokes" and "Murecqueques," the country upon the s. side of the islands w. of Suffolk co.; the "Leatogues," the country from the w. line of the co. to the e. part of Islip; the "Patchogues," from the e. line of Islip to the w. part of Southampton; the "Shinnecokes," the country around Canoe Place, and thence e. to Easthampton; the "Montauks," that are now included in the town of Easthampton; and the "Manhassetes," occupying Shelter Island. Of all these tribes there now remain and powerful; and the consent of Wyandance,¹ their grand sachem, was necessary to the validity of all Indian grants of that date upon the island. The earliest settlement within the co. was made in 1639, on Gardners Island, under title derived from James Farnham, agent of the Earl of Sterling, to whom a grant of the whole of Long Island had been made by the Plymouth Company.² Southold and Southampton were settled in 1640, Easthampton, in 1651, Shelter Island in 1652, Huntington in 1653, Brookhaven in 1655, and Smithtown in 1668, by Dutch immigrants from New England. These settlers were strongly imbued with Puritan opinions and zealously devoted to their strict observance.³ They naturally sought alliance with the adjacent New England colonies, to whom they were warmly attached, and with whom they were closely united until they were brought under the government of New York. Among the first measures taken by the colonists was the establishment of religious worship and schools, which in most of the towns date from the first or second year of settlement. These were commonly supported by tax, often levied in kind, and sometimes coupled with privileges and grants that are still recognized.

The patents granted by the New York governors created corporations, with municipal powers and privileges which were liberal for that period. These have never been changed, and are still valid. The rights were of two classes,—one belonging to all who might gain a residence and citizenship within the town, and the other pertaining only to the persons named in the patents and their heirs at law. During the Revolution most of the inhabitants of the co. warmly espoused the cause of the colonists; but after the battle of Long Island the British ascendancy was complete, and few opportunities occurred for assisting in the popular movement. Several bold and successful incursions were made by partisan corps; but the armed occupation of the island was at no time interrupted.⁴ During the latter part of the War of 1812 an English fleet was stationed off the eastern coast; but no depredations were committed. The history of the co. from that day to the present is only the record of the industrial pursuits of a thriving people.

BROOKHAVEN—was incorp. by patent, under Gov. Nicoll, March 13, 1666, with the usual privileges of a township;⁵ and Dec. 27, 1686, the patent was confirmed by Gov. Dongan, and extended privileges were granted.⁶ It was recognized as a town March 7, 1788. It occupies the entire width of Long Island, near the center of the co. e. and w. It has 20 mi. of coast on Long Island Sound, 21 on South Bay, and above 30 on Fire Island, which skirts the whole s. coast. Patchogue and Bellport Bays, upon the s. coast, are branches of the Great South Bay; and Old Mans Harbor and Port Jefferson, Setauket and Flax Pond Bays, are indentations upon the n. coast from Long Island Sound. The principal capes upon the n. coast are Cranes Neck, Old Field Point,⁷ Little Neck,⁸ Dyers Neck,⁹ Mount Misery, and Rocky Point. A range of low hills extends across the n. part of the town; but elsewhere the surface is level. The principal streams are Peconic River, in the e. part, and the Connecticut, in the central. There are several fresh water ponds of great depth and purity in the town, many of which have no outlet. The soil along the coast, both upon Long Island Sound and South Bay, is a moderately fertile, light, sandy loam, and in the interior it is generally unproductive. Along the streams near their mouths are numerous salt meadows. Port Jefferson¹⁰ (p. v.) is situated at the head of Port Jefferson Bay, on the n. coast. It has a good harbor, and shipbuilding is largely carried on.¹¹ Pop. 1,247. Setauket, (p. v.) on the bay of the same name, contains 2 churches and 4 shipyards and has a pop. of 1,136. Stony Brook,¹² (p. v.), near the line of Smithtown, contains 1 church and has a pop. (in this town) of 542. Mt. Sinai,¹³ (p. v.) on Old Mans Harbor, has a pop. of 276. Millers Place,¹⁴ (p. o.), Rocky Point, and Sweazys but a few individuals in Islip and Brookhaven, about 200 at Shinneck, and 5 families on Montauk Point. They have lost all knowledge of their language, using only the English, and are intelligent and civilized. They have intermarried to a considerable extent with negroes, and are probably of more than half African blood.

⁶ This instrument provided that 7 trustees should be annually elected, in whom the legal ownership of the property of the town should be vested. John Palmer, Richard Woodhull, Samuel Ebarne, Andrew Gibb, Wm. Satterly, Thos. Jenner, and Thos. Helme were named as the first trustees.

⁷ The Indian name of this point was "Co-met-i-co."

⁸ Called by the Indians "Mi-nas-se-roke."

⁹ Its Indian name was "Fy-quitt."

¹⁰ Formerly known as "Drowned Meadow," and called "So-was-sett" by the Indians.

¹¹ There are 5 shipyards upon the e. side of the harbor, and 3 upon the w.

¹³ Called by the Indians "Non-a-wau-tuck."

Landing are hamlets on the coast of Long Island Sound. Patchogue¹ (p. v.) is situated on Patchogue Bay, in the s. w. part of the town. It contains 4 churches, an academy, and manufacturing of twine, paper, cotton, ropes, and flour. Pop. 1,562. Bellport, (p. v.,) on the w. side of Bellport Bay, contains 1 church and an academy. Shipbuilding is carried on to a considerable extent. Pop. 383. Blue Point,² (p. o.,) in the s. e. part, is a hamlet. Fire Place, (p. v.,) on Bellport Bay, contains 1 church and about 35 houses; Moriches,³ (p. v.,) 4 churches and 50 houses; East Moriches, (p. v.,) 40 houses; and West Moriches and Seatuck, hamlets, are situated near the coast of East Bay. Yaphanck,⁴ (p. v.,) a station on the Long Island R. R., containing 3 churches and 35 houses, and South Haven, (p. v.,) containing 1 church and 20 houses, are situated on Connecticut River. Mastic⁵ is a hamlet on Mastic River. Middle Island, (p. o.,) contains 2 churches, Selden, (p. o.,) 1 church, New Village, (p. o.,) 1 church, and Coram,⁶ (Cor-um,) (p. o.,) are hamlets in the central part of the town; and Wampmissic,⁷ contains 1 church, and Manorville,⁸ (p. o.,) are hamlets in the e. part. Center Moriches is a p. o. The town poorhouse is located near Coram, upon a small farm purchased in 1817 at a cost of $900. The lighthouse on Old Fields Point was built in 1823; and another on Fire Island, near Fire Island Inlet, was built in 1858.⁹ The first settlement was made at Setauket,¹⁰ in 1655, by a colony of immigrants from near Boston, Mass.¹¹ The land was bought from the Setauket Indians, and the sale confirmed by a release from Wyandance, Sachem of Montauk. This settlement was received under the Government of Conn. in 1661, and Richard Woodhull and Thos. Pierce were appointed magistrates by the General Court. The tract of land between Islip and Bellport, extending to the center of the island, was purchased of the natives by John Winthrop in 1666, and the title confirmed March 29, 1680.¹² Col. Wm. Smith purchased Little Neck, Oct. 22, 1686, and an extensive tract e. of Connecticut River, extending northward to the center of the co., in May, 1691.¹³ Fort St. George, a strongly fortified British post on South Bay, was surprised and taken by a party of 80 men, under Maj. Tallmadge, Nov. 21, 1780. They crossed Long Island Sound from Conn., landing at Old Mans Harbor, marched to Coram, where they destroyed a large amount of forage, and then to Fort St. George, which they captured without the loss of a man. Over 50 men were made prisoners and a large amount of property was destroyed.¹⁴ Gen. Woodhull,¹⁵ Pres. of the Second and Third Provincial Congresses, Gen. Wm. Floyd, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, Col. Richard Floyd,¹⁶ and Maj. Wm. H. Smith, were residents, and Maj. Benj. Tallmadge was a native, of this town. In the infancy of the settlement a building was erected at Setauket, which served the double purpose of a townhall and church.¹⁷ There are now 26 churches in town.¹⁸

EAST HAMPTON—was incorp. by patent, under Gov. Nicoll, March 13, 1666,¹⁹ and confirmed by Gov. Dongan, Dec. 9, 1686. It was recognized as a town March 7, 1788. It lies at the e. extremity of Long Island, s. of Gardners Bay and Long Island Sound, and includes Gardners Island, lying n. of the mainland. The e. part consists of a narrow peninsula, to which the name, Montauk, is applied. Upon the n. coast are several large bays, some of them nearly landlocked. The principal of these are Northwest, Three Mile, Acabonac, and Napeague Harbors, and Fort Pond Bay. In the central and w. parts the surface is mostly level or gently undulating; but along the coast

⁴ Yaphanck is the Indian name of a small tributary of the Connecticut. The place was originally called "Millville," and afterward "Brookfield."

⁶ Named from an Indian chief.

⁷ This name was given by the Indians to a swamp in the vicinity.

⁸ Formerly called "St. Georges Manor."

⁹ This lighthouse is 150 ft. high and 166 ft. above the sea, and is furnished with a French flashing lens apparatus of superior quality.

¹⁰ Then called "Cromwell Bay."

¹¹ The family names of these settlers were Woodhull, Hawkins, Whitehair, Jenner, Perring, Gibb, Saterly, Biggs, Tooker, Rogers, Fancy, Longbottom, Lane, Floyd, Muncy, Seward, Wade, Saylor, Smith, Avery, Dayton, Davis, Frost, Thomas, Baylis, Thomson, Ward, Roe, Budd, Brooks, Williams,

Woolley, Akerly, Combs, Waring, Mapes, Thorp, Ebbins, Brewster, Fools, Sharpe, Burnet, Helms, Gerlick, Meger, Pierce, and Ware. Many of these names are still common on the island. By a vote of the inhabitants, taken July 13, 1687, the trustees of the town were directed to establish a school, and Francis Williamson was employed as a teacher, at a salary of £30 per annum. The first mill was erected at Stony Brook, in 1690.—Thompson's Hist. Long Island, 2d Ed., 4, 408.

upon the s. is a belt of low, shifting sand ridges; and the e. part is broken by low, irregular hills, some of which attain an elevation of 100 ft. above the sea. Near the coast in the s. part of the town and upon the peninsula are several fresh water ponds. The principal of these are Great,¹ Fort,² Oyster, Hook, and Georgia Ponds; and their outlets have been closed by sandbars or a beach. Upon the main portion of the peninsula of Montauk the soil is fertile, but its neck is a barren, sandy waste. In the w. part the soil is a light, sandy loam and is kept highly fertile by the use of manures. Stock raising forms the leading occupation; and to that pursuit Gardners Island³ and Montauk Point are exclusively devoted. A tract of about 9000 acres, embracing the entire e. portion of the town, is devoted wholly to pasturage. It is owned by a company, incorp. as tenants in common, whose affairs are managed by a board of 7 trustees elected annually.⁴ Twelve trustees are chosen annually, to whom are committed the management of the town commons, the meadow beaches, and the waters within the bays, the privileges of which are enjoyed by all citizens. A town poor-house is located on a small farm about 2 mi. w. of East Hampton Village. Lighthouses are located upon Cedar Island, at the entrance of Sag Harbor,⁵ at the n. extremity of Gardners Island, and upon Montauk Point.⁶ East Hampton, (p. v.) about 1 mi. from the beach, in the s. w. part of the town, contains 1 church,⁷ an academy,⁸ 2 windmills, and about 70 houses. Amaganset, (p. v.) a scattered village about 3 mi. e. of East Hampton, contains 1 church. Pop. 270. Springs, (p. o.) near Acabonac Harbor, and Wainscott, in the s. w. corner of the town, are hamlets. Sag Harbor⁹ (p. v.) is partly in this town. The first settlement in this town, and the first English settlement in the State, was made on Gardners Island in 1639, by Lyon Gardner.¹⁰ Settlement in the w. part of the town was commenced in 1648, upon lands purchased of the Montauk Indians, by a company of English families from Lynn, Mass.¹¹ The government of the colony was purely democratic. The people met in "General Court," and enacted laws, appointed civil and ministerial officers, and acted upon appeals from the decisions of their magistrates. Three magistrates,¹² a recorder, a secretary, and a constable were annually elected. Lands were allotted to individuals, and could not be alienated without the approval of the General Court. In Dec. 1653, they adopted the laws of Conn.; and from 1657 to 1667 they were united with that colony.¹³ The inhabitants sided with the colonists in the disputes which led to the Revolution. In June, 1775, an "Association" favoring the measures of the Continental Congress was formed, and its articles were signed by every male inhabitant capable of bearing arms.¹⁴ Rev. Thomas James, the first pastor in the town, settled in 1651.¹⁵ There are now 4 churches in town.¹⁶

HUNTINGTON—was incorp. by patent, under Gov. Nicoll, Nov. 30, 1666.¹⁷ The patent was renewed Aug. 2, 1688, and again Oct. 5, 1694. It was recognized as a town March 7, 1788, at which time Eatons Neck and Crab Meadow were annexed. The w. line was established Feb. 17,

² The Indian name of this pond is "Komb-hong-a-nok." It lies s. of Furt Pond Bay, and nearly divides the isthmus.

³ Called by the Indians "Mon-cho-nock," or "Ma-shong-o-muc," and mentioned in early records as the "Isle of Wight." It contains 3,300 acres.

⁴ This tract originally belonged to the Montauk Indians, and was conveyed by them to the colonists of East Hampton, Feb. 11, 1661, the natives reserving to themselves the right of living upon and using so much of it as they might need. Its ownership was vested in the colonists in person. The lands were represented at first by 40 shares, valued at £40 each, and were intrusted to the management of the trustees of the town. The shares are now divided into "eighths," of which 36 have been purchased by the corporation and extinguished. These eighths are now worth $350 to $400 each. The tract is divided into large enclosures, of which "the field" is reserved for fattening stock. Every share entitles its possessor to the privilege of pasturing for "the season" 48 cattle, 14 of them to be admitted to "the field." A horse is rated as 2 "beasts," (cattle,) and 7 sheep as one. "The season" is fixed by the trustees, and generally lasts from June 1 to Oct. 20. About 1400 cattle and 1100 sheep are annually kept within these enclosures. Five Indian families reside upon the tract, who own 50 shares and are entitled to the keeping of 50 cattle. These privileges are usually hired of them for $200 per annum.

⁶ Montauk Lighthouse, on Turtle Hill, is 85 ft. high, and 160 feet above the level of the sea. It was built in 1785, at a cost of $22,500.

⁸ Clinton Academy was founded in 1784, and incorp. by the regents Nov. 17, 1787. A petition of the trustees of this institution suggested to the legislature the propriety of a general system of supervision, and led to the enactment of the law orga-izing the Board of Regents of the University. This academy and Erasmus Hall, in Flatbush, were incorp. the same day, and are the oldest legally organized academic institutions in the State.

¹⁰ This island was purchased from Jas. Ferrett, agent of the Earl of Sterling, March 10, 1639. Elizabeth Gardner—born upon the island, Sept. 14, 1641—was the first child of English parents born within the present limits of this State. The pirate, Kidd, visited the island in 1699 and buried a quantity of gold, silver, and jewels, which were afterward recovered by commissioners sent from Boston for that purpose. A piece of cloth of gold presented by Capt. Kidd to Mrs. Gardner is still preserved.

¹³ The first school was taught by Chas. Barnes, who received a salary of £30 per annum. He was succeeded in 1663 by Peter Benson.

1787, and Lloyds Neck was set off to Oyster Bay in 1788. This is the w. town of the co. It extends across the island and was 10 mi. of coast on Long Island Sound and 6 on Great South Bay. It also includes about half of Oak Island Beach, and Cedar and several smaller islands in Great South Bay. The n. shore is deeply indented by Huntington Bay, from which Lloyds Harbor extends to the w., Huntington Harbor to the s., and Northport Bay to the e. Centerport and Northport Harbors branch off upon the s. of the latter bay, and two smaller arms upon the n. w. Great, Little, and Eatons' Necks are peninsulas formed by these bays and harbors. Groups of low hills extend through the center, and the surface 2 to 3 mi. from the sound is broken; but elsewhere it is comparatively level. The soil in the n. and s. is fertile; but in the interior it is unproductive. The industrial pursuits are various; whaling, fishing, and taking oysters and clams are some of the leading occupations. Shipbuilding and manufactures receive considerable attention. At the annual election 7 trustees are chosen, to whose care the management of the town property is committed.² The town poorhouse is located near Huntington Village. A lighthouse was built upon the point of Eatons Neck in 1798.³ Huntington, (p. v.), near the head of Huntington Harbor, contains 5 churches, a flourishing union school,⁴ 2 printing offices, and a limited number of manufacturing establishments.⁵ Pop. 1,328. Cold Spring,⁶ (Cold Spring Harbor p. o.), on the e. side of Cold Spring Harbor, contains 3 churches, 2 shipyards, a woolen factory, and other manufactures. Considerable whaling business is carried on from this port.⁷ Pop. 602. Northport⁸ (p. v.) is on the e. side of Northport Harbor. Shipbuilding is here largely carried on. Pop. 430. Centerport⁹ (p. v.) contains 1 church and 142 inhabitants; and Vernon Valley¹⁰ (p. v.) 1 church and 100 inhabitants. Babylon, (p. v.), near Great South Bay, contains 2 churches and has a pop. of 470. This is a favorite resort for hunting and fishing parties. Amityville,¹¹ (p. v.), in the s. w. part, contains 1 church and has a pop. of 304; Deer Park, (p. v.), a station on the Long Island R. R., contains 12 houses; Melville,¹² in the w. part, 1 church and 108 inhabitants; and Comac, (Comack p. o.), in the e. part, 2 churches and 121 inhabitants. West Hills, (p. o.), contains 1 church, and Dix Hills, (p. o.), in the central part, are hamlets. Settlement begun near the n. coast, in 1653, by a company from Sandwich, Mass.¹³ In 1660 the settlement was received under the government of Conn.; and in 1663 deputies were elected to the General Court at Hartford. Upon the English conquest, in 1664, the town came reluctantly under the government of New York. During the Revolution, companies of tories were stationed here, and many outrages were committed upon those friendly to the independence of the colonies. There are 22 churches in town.¹⁴

ISLIP¹⁵—was first recognized as a town by the Colonial Government, Nov. 25, 1710, and by the State Legislature March 7, 1788.¹⁶ It lies w. of the center of the co., and extends from the s. coast to the middle of the island. Has a coast of about 18 mi. on Great South Bay, and includes Cap Tree, Oak, and several other islands off the s. coast. Numerous narrow inlets from Great South Bay divide the coast into distinct "necks," of which there are 35 within the limits of the town. The Connetquot River, and Com-po-wans or Thompsons Brook, are the principal streams. The surface is level, except in the n. part, where it is hilly. The brush plains occupy all the central portion; and near the coast are extensive salt meadows. Upon a tract extending along the bay, and varying in width from one to three miles, the soil is fertile. This part of the town is thickly settled; but the remainder is almost uninhabited. The keeping of the town poor is let to the lowest bidders. Penataquit,¹⁷ (p. v.), near the coast, contains 1 church and has a pop. of 292; Islip, (p. v.), 2 mi. e. of Penataquit, contains 3 churches and about 70 houses. Midroadville, containing 40 houses, and Sayville, (p. v.), containing 2 churches and 822 inhabitants, are in the s. e. part. Lake-

³ This lighthouse is 56 ft. high and 138 ft. above tide. It was built at a cost of $9,500.

⁴ This school has an endowment of $7,400, bequeathed by Nathaniel Potter.

⁷ Belonging to this port are 5 whaling vessels, with an aggregate of 121 tons.

A large tract of territory, w. of the Connetquot, was purchased by Wm. Nicoll, Nov. 29, 1683, and that part e. of the same stream by Olof, Philip, and Stephen Van Courtlandt, June 1, 1703.³ During the Revolution the inhabitants were in a constant state of alarm by the frequent passing of British troops to and from New York City. There are 10 churches in town.⁴

RIVERHEAD—was formed from Southold, March 13, 1792. It lies upon the n. side of the island, between Brookhaven and Southold, and has 16½ mi. of coast upon Long Island Sound. Peconic River and Great Peconic Bay form the s. boundary, and Wading River⁵ a part of the w. The surface in the s. part is level, but in the n. it is hilly. The shore is lined with high and precipitous bluffs of clay and hardpan. The soil is light and sandy, and in most parts but moderately fertile. The poorhouse is located on a farm of 45 acres. Riverhead, (p. v.,) an important station on the L. I. R. R., is situated on Peconic River at the head of boat navigation. It is the county seat, and contains the co. buildings, 3 churches, a seminary,⁶ and several manufactories.⁷ Pop. 813,—723 in Riverhead and 90 in Southampton. From Riverhead e. to the line of Southold, a distance of about 6 mi. upon the "South Road," is a continuous settlement, which has received at different places the names Upper Aquebogue, (p. o.,) Old Aquebogue, (Jamesport p. o.,) and Franklinville, (West Suffolk p. o.) Old Aquebogue and Franklinville are stations on the L. I. R. R. Jamesport⁸ is situated about one-half mi. s. of Old Aquebogue, on Great Peconic Bay, and contains 1 church; pop. 148. Northville, (Success p. o.,) in the n. e. part, contains 1 church and 35 houses; Bating Hollow, (p. o.,) in the n. part, in a scattered settlement, has 2 churches; and Wading River, (p. v.,) on stream of same name, 1 church and 25 houses. Settlement begun at Riverhead, in 1690, by John Griffing and others. There are 10 churches in town.⁹

SHELTER ISLAND¹⁰—was incorp. by patent, under Gov. Nicoll, May 31, 1666;¹¹ but its government was united with that of Southold until 1730. It was recognized as a town March 7, 1788. It lies between the two peninsulas which form the e. extremity of Long Island, and embraces an area of over 8,000 acres. The island is very irregular; upon all sides jutting headlands extend out into the surrounding waters, and branching bays penetrate into the interior. The principal of these inlets are Coecelis, West Neck, and Deerings Harbors. The surface is hilly, and the soil fertile. Grain raising and sheep husbandry form the principal agricultural pursuits. Guano and oil are manufactured in considerable quantities from bony fish caught in the neighboring waters. There is a wind gristmill near the center of the island. Shelter Island is a p. o., centrally located. This island was the ancient residence of the Manhasset Indians. It was purchased of the Earl of Sterling by Jas. Farrett, and was afterward sold to Stephen Goodyear, of New Haven. In 1651 it was purchased by Nathaniel and Constant Sylvester, Thos. Middleton, and Thos. Rowe.¹² The first settlement was made in 1652. The first church edifice was built in 1743.¹³

SMITHTOWN¹⁴—was organized by patent, March 25, 1677, and recognized as a town March 7, 1788. It lies upon the n. side of the island, between Huntington and Brookhaven. Stony Brook and Nissaquage Harbors, extending far inland, are separated by the Nissaquage Neck. Nissaquage River, emptying into the harbor of the same name, divides the town into two nearly equal parts. The surface is considerably broken and hilly. The soil is a light, sandy loam in the s. part, and a clayey loam along the sound. The Branch, (Smithtown Branch p. o.,) on Branch Brook, near the center of the town, contains 2 churches and 35 houses; Smithtown,¹⁵ (p. v.,) on Nissaquage River, 20 houses; and St. Jamesville, (St. James p. o.,) at the head of Stony Brook Harbor, 1 church and 25 houses. Fresh Pond is a p. o., in the n. w. part. Hoppoge,¹⁶ on the line of Islip, and Nissaquage, on Nissaquage Neck, are hamlets. A tract of land, including the principal part of this town, was, in July, 1659, conveyed to Lyon Gardiner as a free gift, by Wyandance, Sachem of the Montauks;¹ and in 1662 the grant was confirmed by the Nessesquake tribe, by whom the lands were occupied. In 1663 the tract was sold to Richard Smith, and in 1665 the remaining part of the town was purchased of the Indians by him. Fort Slongo, in the n. w. part of the town, was erected by the British during the Revolution. It was captured by a body of Americans, under Col. Tallmadge, Oct. 3, 1781.² There are 6 churches in town.³

² This "village" was laid out and built by Stephen Pearl Andrews and others, who held to the doctrine of "the Sovereignty of the Individual," and some of whom were practical believers in the "Free Love" doctrine.

³ Nicoll's Purchase was confirmed to him by a patent issued by Gov. Dongoe Dec. 5, 1684; and the Van Courtlandt Purchase was confirmed to John Mowbray, by whom it had been subsequently bought, by a patent issued in 1708.

SOUTHAMPTON⁴—was incorp. by patent, under Gov. Andros, Nov. 1, 1676,⁵ confirmed by Gov. Dongan, Dec. 6, 1686, and recognized as a town March 7, 1788. It occupies the greater part of the s. branch of Eastern Long Island, and has 30 mi. of seacoast. The entire s. shore is skirted by a beach which is united in a few places with the mainland, separating the enclosed waters into distinct bays, the principal of which are East, Quantuc, Shinnecock, and Mecox Bays; minor bays, branching from these, divide the surrounding shores into numerous irregular "necks." The beach which separates the waters of these bays from the Atlantic is unbroken except by a single inlet into Shinnecock Bay. The outline of the n. coast is extremely tortuous; rugged and often nearly landlocked bays project inland, and irregular points of land jut out into the surrounding waters. A range of low hills extends along the n. border of the town, and the Shinnecock Hills occupy the central part; elsewhere the surface is level. The soil in the e. and s. parts consists of a light, sandy loam, and is moderately fertile; but in other parts it is of an inferior quality. A large tract s. of Peconic River is covered with extensive pine forests. Stock raising and the other branches of agriculture form the principal industrial pursuits. The lands are enriched by the application of immense quantities of bunkers. Large tracts of meadow and pasturage lands in different parts of the town are owned by 3 companies, who, in common, elect annually a board of 12 trustees, to whose management the lands are committed.⁶ Taking clams and oysters, and whaling, form an important part of the business. The town has a small poorhouse, a short distance e. of Bridgehampton. A lighthouse has been recently erected on Ponquogue Beach.⁷ Sag Harbor, (p. v.,) in the n. e. part, was incorp. as a fire district in 1803, and as a village March 12, 1819. It contains 7 churches, the Sag Harbor Institute, a newspaper office, a bank, a cotton flannel factory,⁸ 2 clock factories, and several manufactories of oil casks. This port has long been noted for the extent of its whaling business.⁹ It was made a port of entry in 1784, and by itself now constitutes a district of customs. Pop. 2,776,—2,041 in Southampton, and 735 in Easthampton. Southampton, (p. v.,) midway between Shinnecock and Mecox Bays, contains 2 churches, an academy,¹⁰ and 65 houses. Bridgehampton,¹¹ (p. v.,) in the e. part, contains 2 churches and about 40 houses; Shinnecock, on the e. side of Shinnecock Bay, is an Indian settlement of about 20 houses.¹² Sag-Scuttle Hole and Watermill are hamlets, in the e. part. Flanders, (p. v.,) in the n. part, contains 2 churches and about 20 houses; Speonk, (p. v.,) near East Bay, contains 2 churches and about 40 houses. Ketchabonec and Quogue, (p. o.,) near Quantuc Bay, and Goodground (p. o.) and Canoe Place, near Shinnecock Bay, are hamlets. Riverhead (p. v.) is partly in this town. ⁶ These lands are portions of 3 tracts, severally known as the "Town Purchase," the "Quogue Purchase," and the "Topping Purchase," which are still held by the proprietors in common. The "Town Purchase" occupies the e. part of the town. It is divided into 154 shares, called "fifties," worth about $10 each. These fifties are subdivided into sixteenths, and the shares are owned in every conceivable quantity, from 1-40th of a fifty to 10 fifties. The Quogue and Topping Purchases occupy the w. part of the town.

⁷ This lighthouse is 150 ft. high, and 160 ft. above the level of the sea. It is furnished with an excellent lens apparatus, and its light can be seen 20 nautical miles distant.

⁸ The "Suffolk Mills" were built at an expense of $130,000. About 150 hands are employed, and 10,000 to 12,000 yds. of hannel are made per week.

⁹ The shipping of this port in 1858 consisted of 5 ships, 11

barks, 2 brigs, and 2 schooners, with an aggregate of 5,927 tons, registered; 15 sloops, 5 schooners, and 1 steamer, in all, 1400 tons, enrolled; and a few small vessels, amounting to about 100 tons, licensed. The total number of vessels belonging to this port at different periods has been as follows: in 1697, 4; in 1832, 20; in 1841, 44; in 1843, 52; in 1845, 61; and in 1847, 63.

from Lynn, Mass. A grant of the land was obtained from James Farrett, agent of Lord Sterling, in April, and a conveyance from the Indians on the 13th of Dec., 1640. During the first 12 months 47 settlers arrived.¹ In 1644 Southampton was received under the government of Conn., and until 1664² was represented in General Court at Hartford. Upon the Dutch invasion in 1673 the town again sought a union with Conn. It was received, and, together with Easthampton and Southold, was erected into a co. Upon the re-establishment of English power, in 1674, the town came under the government of New York. The first settlement at Sag Harbor was made in 1730, by a few fishermen. On the morning of the 24th of May, 1777, Col. Meigs, with 130 men, surprised the British force stationed at Sag Harbor, destroyed 12 brigs and a sloop, besides a large amount of forage, provisions, and merchandise, and returned across the sound without the loss of a man.³ A body of American troops was stationed at Sag Harbor in 1813, in consequence of the presence of a British fleet in Gardners Bay.⁴ The first church was erected at Southampton, in 1641;⁵ and the first church in Bridgehampton was built in 1670.⁶ There are now 17 churches in town.⁷

SOUTHOLD⁸—was incorp. by patent, under Gov. Andros, Oct. 30, 1676,⁹ and recognized as a town March 7, 1788. Riverhead was taken off in 1792. It comprises the principal part of the northern peninsula of Eastern Long Island, and includes Robins Island in Great Peconic Bay, and Plum, Fishers, and several smaller islands in Long Island Sound. Orient¹⁰ is a peninsula upon the e.; and Great and Little Hog Necks are smaller peninsulas in the s. The s. shore is indented by several small, irregular bays; while the outline of the n. coast is unbroken except by 2 or 3 narrow inlets. The surface is elevated and level. The soil is a light, sandy loam, kept highly fertile by the use of manures. Plum Island,¹¹ separated from the mainland by Plum Gut, contains about 800 acres. Fishers Island, about 8 mi. eastward, is 7 mi. long by 1½ wide and contains about 4000 acres.¹² Great and Little Gull Islands are between Plum and Fishers Islands. Agriculture forms the leading industrial pursuit; potatoes, corn, and wheat are the principal crops.¹³ Considerable attention is also given to shipbuilding, whaling, and commerce. A limited amount of manufacturing is carried on.¹⁴ Scattered tracts of lands and beaches, owned by an incorp. company, are intrusted to the management of 3 trustees, elected annually. These lands are represented by 110 shares, valued at $15 each. The town has a poorfarm of 300 acres near Southold Village. Lighthouses are located on Hortons Point, Little Gull Island,¹⁵ and "The Dumplings,"—a group of rocks in Fishers Island Sound.¹⁶ Greenport,¹⁷ (p. v.,) on Greenport Harbor, was incorp. April 18, 1838. It is a port of considerable whaling and commercial business,¹⁸ and is the e. terminus of the L. I. R. R. It contains 5 churches and 2 printing offices. Pop. 1,665. Southold, (p. v.,) near the ¹¹ Formerly known as the "Isle of Putnos." It was bought of the natives, in 1659, by Sam'l Wylie.

¹⁶ The lighthouse upon North Dumpling was built in 1845, and is 25 ft. high and 70 ft. above the sea. A red light is used.

It contains 3 churches, the Southold Academy, a savings' bank, and about 80 houses. Hermitage, a small settlement, Cutchoque, (p. v.), containing 3 churches and nearly 100 houses, and Mattituck, (p. v.), containing 2 churches and 40 houses, are stations on the L. R. New Suffolk, on Great Peconic Bay, contains 1 church and about 20 houses. Franklinville is on the line of Riverhead. West Southold is a p. v. East Marion,¹ (p. v.), near the w. side of Orient Harbor, contains a windmill, a tidemill, and 1 church; pop. 300. Orient,² (p. v.), on the e. side of the same harbor, contains 2 churches and 60 houses. The first settlement was made about 1640, by Rev. John Youngs and others, from New Haven.³ The government of this colony, like that of several of the earlier New England settlements, was vested in the church members. None others were allowed to vote or to hold office; and the Mosaic code was adopted as their law. This exclusiveness was of short duration. All citizens were soon admitted to the right of suffrage; and in 1657 the Mosaic code was superseded by one better adapted to the circumstances of the people. Upon the union of New Haven with Conn., in 1662, Southold was united with the latter colony and was represented in General Court. In 1664 the town passed under the jurisdiction of New York. The first church was erected in 1641, in the village of Southold.⁴ There are now 17 churches in town.⁵

ORLEANS COUNTY.

This county was formed from Genesee, Nov. 11, 1824; Shelby was annexed from Genesee April 5, 1825. It lies on Lake Ontario, between Monroe and Niagara cos., centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains — sq. mi. Its surface is level or undulating, and, except in the extreme s. part, it has a gradual inclination toward the lake. It is divided into three distinct plateaus by the lake and mountain ridges,¹ which extend e. and w. through the co. nearly parallel to the lake shore. The lower plateau slopes slightly and uniformly upward from the lake shore to the lake ridge, a distance of 6 to 8 mi., where it attains an elevation of about 165 feet. This ridge is composed of sand and gravel, and its seaward side is covered with coarse gravel and water-worn pebbles, resembling the present lake beach.² It is elevated 20 to 30 feet above the lower plateau, to which it descends with a gentle inclination uniform in its whole extent. There is generally a similar slope upon its inland side; but in many places the level of the country is nearly and sometimes quite as high as that of the ridge. The ridge is 100 to 300 feet wide at the top, and nearly level. From the earliest settlement of the co. its summit has been used for a road. The second plateau is gently undulating, and 4 to 6 mi. wide, attaining an altitude of about 300 feet at the base of the mountain ridge. This ridge, entering from Niagara co., runs nearly e. through the towns of Shelby and Barre, and s. and e. through Clarendon. It preserves the character of a steep declivity in Clarendon and Shelby, but in Barre its ascent is gradual. The upper plateau is undulating, and from the mountain ridge southerly it gently rises for about 2 mi. to the culminating ridge, which is the highest land in the co. and nearly 450 feet above the lake. For about 2 mi. further the surface is quite level; and thence it gradually descends to the Tonawanda Swamp, on the s. border of the co. The principal streams are Oak Orchard,³ Johnsons,⁴ and Sandy Creeks, which take their rise in or near the Tonawanda Swamp and flow n. and e. to the lake. Their channels are deeply excavated; and upon them are numerous waterfalls and rapids.

The underlying rock of the n. part is the Medina sandstone; while the upper plateau rests upon a base of Niagara limestone. Along the ridge in Clarendon and on the banks of Oak Orchard Creek in Shelby are outcrops of this limestone. Hydraulic limestone has been obtained from both these localities, and quicklime is burned at various places along the ridge. The upper layers of the Medina sandstone afford an excellent material for building and flagging purposes, and several quarries have been opened at Medina and other places on the line of the canal. Elsewhere in the co. this rock is friable, and readily disintegrates upon exposure to the atmosphere. It separates at first into small, angular fragments, and then decomposes into a dark red, loamy clay. Numerous salt springs originate in this formation, from which salt was manufactured until, by the completion of the Erie Canal, they were brought into competition with the salines of Onondaga.⁵ The soil in the n. part of the co. is generally sandy; but it is everywhere modified by the underlying formation; and near the lake are several tracts in which clay predominates. In the s. it is a mixture of clay, sand, and lime, and the whole is well adapted to grain raising. The various branches of agriculture form the leading pursuits. Barley, oats, corn, beans, and potatoes are the principal crops,⁶ and considerable quantities of apples and other fruits are raised. A limited amount of manufactures is carried on within the co.

The county seat is located at Albion,⁷ on the Erie Canal, in the central part of the co. The

² The primitive character of this slope has become somewhat obliterated by cultivation.

³ So named from a fine grove of oaks formerly at its mouth.

⁴ Named after Sir Wm. Johnson, who, with his forces, encamped at its mouth one night when on his way to Fort Niagara in 1759.

⁵ Salt works were erected at a spring near Oak Orchard Creek, about 14 mi. n. of Medina, at Holly, and at Oak Orchard; and salt was made by the early settlers in nearly every town n. of the canal. A boring of 140 feet at Oak Orchard resulted in water; and at other places, by blasting and boring, the springs were destroyed.

⁶ Wheat was formerly the principal crop of this co.; but of late the ravages of the midge have been so extensive that its cultivation has been nearly abandoned.

courthouse is a fine building, situated in the midst of a park, near the center of the village. It is built of brick, and is surmounted by a dome 110 feet above the ground. It contains the court, jury, supervisors', and surrogate's rooms.¹ The jail, situated just e. of the courthouse, is a commodious edifice, built of Medina sandstone. The county clerk's office is a small, one story brick building, adjoining the courthouse. The poorhouse is located upon a farm of 107 acres in the town of Barre, 3 mi. s. of Albion. Its average number of inmates is 56, supported at a weekly cost of 80 cts. each. The farm yields a revenue of about $700.

The works of internal improvement in the co. are the Erie Canal, extending through near the center; the Tonawanda Swamp Feeder, conducting the waters of the swamp into Oak Orchard Creek and the canal; and the Rochester & Niagara Falls R. R., a branch of the N. Y. Central.²

Three weekly newspapers are now published in the co.³

Long before the advent of the whites this co. was the hunting ground and probable residence of the Iroquois; and there are traces of an occupation long anterior to them and by an entirely distinct race.⁴ The 3 eastern towns of the co. belonged to the Conn. Tract and the Pulteney Estate, and the remaining part of the co. to the Holland Purchase. There is a tradition that a Canadian, with his family, settled at the mouth of Oak Orchard Creek as early as 1792-93; but his stay was of short duration, and by some he is now regarded as a myth. The first permanent settlers were James and Wm. Walsworth, two brothers, who came from Canada by the way of the lake, and who located respectively at the mouths of Oak Orchard and Johnsons Creeks, in the present town of Carlton. A few settlers came in each year until 1809, when the great natural thoroughfare, the ridge road, was opened, inducing a much more rapid influx of settlers. Immigrants continued to pour in rapidly and settle near the ridge road, until settlement was checked by the War of 1812. Upon the capture of Fort Niagara by the British, in 1813, many of the people fled from their homes, but soon returned.⁵ After the return of peace, the tide of immigration again set in toward this region, and continued to flow steadily and uninterruptedly for several years. The settlers generally chose locations in the immediate vicinity of the ridge road, and continued to do so until the completion of the Erie Canal, when the regions further s. began rapidly to fill up. Since that time steady progress has been made in every element of material prosperity, until the co. has taken front rank among the best agricultural regions of the State.

BARRE⁶—was formed from Gaines, March 6, 1818. It is the most southerly of the middle tier of towns, and is the largest town in the co. Its surface is undulating, and its soil a rich loam underlaid by the Niagara limestone. The Tonawanda Swamp occupies the s. part. Albion,⁷ appointed to superintend its erection. The first officers of the co. were Elijah Foot, First Judge; S. M. Moody, Cyrus Harwood, Eldridge Farwell, and William Penniman, Judges; William Lewis, Sheriff; and Orson Nicholson, Co. Clerk.

² The Medina & Darien R. R. Co. was organized in 1835, and the road was opened as far as Akron. Stages drawn by horses were put upon the road; but the whole was abandoned in 2 or 3 years.

³ The Gazette, the first paper published in the co., was started at Gaines in 1822 by Seymour Tracy, and was continued 4 years.

The Newport Patriot was started at "Newport," now Albion, Feb. 9, 1824, by Franklin Cowdrey. In Feb. 1825, Timothy C. Strong became proprietor, and changed it to

The Orleans Advocate. In Feb. 1828, in the midst of the excitement following the abduction of Morgan, Mr. Strong changed it to

The Orleans Advocate and Anti Masonic Telegraph; and in Feb. 1829, it took the name of

The Orleans Anti Masonic Telegraph. In June of the same year it was changed to

The Orleans Telegraph; and soon after to The American Standard. It was issued 2 years by J. Kempshall, when it passed back into the hands of Mr. Strong, who changed it to

The Orleans American. In April, 1844, it passed into the hands of J. & J. H. Denio, and was continued by them until 1853, when it was bought by S. A. Andrews, by whom it is now published.

The Orleans Republican was commenced at Albion in Oct. 1829, by C. S. McConnell. It was published by him until 1841; by H. W. Dupuy a few months; by an association until 1845; by H. E. Purdy until 1846; and by C. S. McConnell until 1848, when it was sold to Wilson & Beach, its present publishers.

The Albion Times was established Oct. 23, 1853, by J. O. Nickerson. Jan. 11, 1855, it was changed to

The Spirit of Seventy-Six, and continued until May 27, 1858.

The Orleans Whig was commenced at Gaines in July, 1827, by John Fisk, and continued several years.

The Medina Herald was issued in 1832 by Daniel P. Adams, and continued 2 or 3 years.

The Medina Sentinel was started in Aug. 1837, by J. & J. H. Denio. The following year it was changed to

The Orleans Sentinel, and continued until May, 1842.

The Bucktail was commenced in 1840 by S. M. Burroughs. It was subsequently changed to

The Medina Democrat, and continued 2 or 3 years.

The Medina Citizen was started in 1850 by H. A. Smith. In 1852 it was changed to

The Medina Tribune, and is still issued by Mr. Smith. The People's Journal was published at Medina a short time in 1858 by J. W. Swan.

⁴ About 1½ mi. w. of Shelly Center are the remains of an ancient fortification, nearly circular in form, enclosing an area of about 3 acres. A broad ditch encircled the whole. Flint arrow heads, stone axes, several piles of small stones, and pieces of earthenware have been found within the enclosure. Trees of 400 years' growth stand upon the embankment. Large numbers of human skeletons, many of them of giant size, have been exhumed near the fort. Many of these seem to have been thrown promiscuously into one common grave; and it is generally supposed that this has been the scene of a great battle.

⁷ Originally called "Newport," but changed at the time of its incorporation.

(p. v.,) the county seat, was incorp. April 21, 1828. It is situated on the Erie Canal, in the n. part of the town, and is the principal station upon the N. Y. C. R. R. between Rochester and Lockport. It contains 5 churches, the Phipps Union Female Seminary,¹ the Albion Academy, a bank, 2 newspaper offices, and several manufactories.² Pop. 3,776. Barre Center, (p. o.) 4 mi. s. of Albion, contains 30 dwellings. Eagle Harbor lies partly in this town. South Barre, (p. o.,) West Barre, (p. o.,) and Jacksons Corners are hamlets. The first settlement was made by Wm. McAllister, in 1811.³ The first church (Cong.) was organized Nov. 5, 1816, by Revs. Eleazar Fairbanks and Comfort Williams.⁴

CARLTON—was formed from Gaines and Ridgeway, April 13, 1822, as "Oak Orchard." Its name was changed in 1825. It lies on the lake shore, between Kendall and Yates, and is crossed in a n. e. direction by Oak Orchard and Johnsons Creeks. The surface is level, and the soil generally sandy. Salt water has been discovered near West Carlton.⁵ Carlton,⁶ (p. o.,) East Carlton, (p. o.,) West Carlton, (p. o.,) Waterport, (p. o.,) Kenyonville, and Manilla are hamlets. This was the first settled town in the co. Two brothers, James and Wm. Walsworth, located in 1803,—the former at the mouth of Oak Orchard Creek, and the latter on Johnsons Creek. Matthew Dunham and his three sons Matthew, James, and Charles, from N. Y. City, settled near Johnsons Creek in the fall of the same year.⁷ The first church (M. E.) was organized at West Carlton about 1816.⁸

CLARENDON—was formed from Sweden, Monroe co., Feb. 23, 1821. It is the s. e. corner town of the co. Sandy Creek rises in the Tonawanda Swamp and flows n. through the town. Upon this stream are two waterfalls,—one at the village of Clarendon and the other in the n. part of the town. Along the line of the mountain ridge the surface is broken, and elsewhere it is gently rolling or level. The soil is a sandy loam; in the n. stony. Limestone for building purposes and hydraulic limestone have been obtained at Clarendon. Clarendon⁹ (p. v.) contains 2 churches, a limited number of manufactories,¹⁰ and about 30 dwellings. The first settlement was made in 1811, at the village of Clarendon, by Eldridge Farwell.¹¹ There are now 3 churches in town.¹²

GAINES¹³—was formed from Ridgeway, Feb. 14, 1816. Barre was taken off in 1818, and a part of Carlton in 1822. It is the central town in the co. It is crossed by Otter and Marsh Creeks, branches of the Oak Orchard, and by the w. branch of Sandy Creek. The lake ridge extends e. and w. through the center. The surface is level and the soil sandy. Eagle Harbor, (p. v.,) on the Erie Canal, contains 2 churches, 2 flouring mills, and a large stove factory and cooperage. Pop. 639,—509 in Gaines and 130 in Barre. Gaines¹⁴ (p. v.) contains 2 churches and 342 inhabitants. East Gaines and West Gaines are p. offices; and Fairhaven and Gaines Basin, on the canal, are hamlets. The first settlement was made prior to 1809, by — Gilbert. Noah Burgess, Samuel Crippen, — Elliott, and Elijah Downer came in 1809.¹⁵ The first church (Bap.) was organized in 1816.¹⁶

² Flouring mills, furnaces, a woolen factory, a tannery, a cabinet ware manufactory, and a plating mill.

⁴ There are 7 churches in town; Presb., Bap., Prot. E., M. E., and R. C. at Albion, Cong. at Barre Center, and M. E. at Jacksons Corners.

⁶ Locally known as "Two Bridges."

⁷ In 1804, Elijah Hunt, Henry Lovell, Moses Root, Elijah Brown, and Job Shipman settled in this town. The first death in town, unless it was that of a member of the Canadian family mentioned on page —, was that of a deserter from Fort Niagara, who was drowned in attempting to cross Johnsons Creek, about 1800. The first death of an actual settler was that of Elijah Brown, May 7, 1805. The first births were those of a pair of twins, children of James Walsworth, in 1806; and the first marriage, that of Wm. Carter and Amy Hunt, in 1807. The first gristmill was built on Johnsons Creek, by Matthew Dunham, in 1809; and the first store was opened in 1816, at West Carlton, by Geo. Kuck. The first school was taught by Peleg Helms, in the winter of 1810-11.

¹⁰ 2 sawmills, a gristmill, and a furnace.

¹¹ Benj. Thomas, Benajah Worden, Elisha Huntly, John Cone, John Stephens, David Church, and Chauncey Robinson were among the earliest settlers. Eldridge Farwell built the first sawmill, on Sandy Creek, in 1811, and the first gristmill, in 1813. The first store was kept by Hiram Frisbee, in 1821; and the first school was taught by Mrs. A. A. Daniels.

¹² M. E. and Univ. at Clarendon, and a Christian church about 1½ mi. w. of Clarendon.

¹⁴ Incorp. by the Legislatur in 1832, but never organized under the act.

¹⁶ There are 6 churches in town; M. E. and Wea. Meth. at KENDALL¹—was taken from Murray, April 7, 1837. It lies on the lake shore,² in the e. part of the co., and is crossed by Bald Eagle Creek near the center, and Sandy Creek in the s. part. Its surface is level; and the soil, with the exception of a belt of clay across the s. part, is a sandy loam. There are several small salt springs in the town. Kendall (p. v.) contains 4 churches and about 25 dwellings. West Kendall (p. o.) and Kendall Mills (p. o.) are hamlets. The first settlement was made in 1812, by Samuel Bates, from Chittenden co., Vt.³ The first religious service, conducted by Elder Stephen Randall, was held in the spring of 1816.⁴

MURRAY—was formed from "Northampton," (now Gates, Monroe co.), April 8, 1808. Sweden was taken off in 1813, Clarkson in 1819, and Kendall in 1837. It lies on the e. border of the co., between Clarendon and Kendall, and is crossed by Sandy Creek, the two branches of which unite at Murray, in the n. part of the town. This stream has worn a deep channel; at Holley it is about 75 feet below the level of the land. The embankment over which the N. Y. C. R. R. crosses the gulf is one of the largest on the line of that road. The surface is generally level, except in the s. w. part, where it is rolling. The soil is mostly a sandy loam; in some parts, however, it is clayey. Near Holley are two sulphur and several salt springs, at the latter of which salt was manufactured previous to the opening of the canal. The Medina sandstone approaches near the surface; and quarries have been opened in the neighborhood of Hulberton.⁵ Holley,⁶ (p. v.) incorp. Sept. 3, 1850, a station on the N. Y. C. R. R., is situated in the s. part of the town, on the Erie Canal. It contains 2 churches, the Holley Academy, and several manufacturing establishments.⁷ Pop. 614. Hulberton (p. v.) contains 278 inhabitants; and Hindsburgh (p. v.) 167. Murray⁸ (p. o.) and Brockville are hamlets. Murray Depot is a r. r. station. The first settlement was made by Eppaphrus Mattison, prior to 1809.⁹ The first church (Cong.) was formed Jan. 5, 1819, by Rev. John F. Bliss.¹⁰

RIDGEWAY¹¹—was formed from Batavia, (Genesee co.), June 8, 1812. Gaines was taken off in 1816, Shelby in 1818, and Yates and a part of Carlton in 1822. It lies on the w. border of the co., between Shelby and Yates, and is crossed by Johnsons and Oak Orchard Creeks. Upon the latter, at Medina, is a waterfall about 30 feet high; and at Jeddo and Oak Orchard, where the streams cross the lake ridge, are low waterfalls. The surface is generally level, and the soil a sandy loam. Some of the most important of the salt springs of this co. are in this town.¹² Within and near the village of Medina are extensive quarries; and large quantities of building, flagging, and paving stone are sent to Rochester, Buffalo, and other places on the canal.¹³ Medina, (p. v.) incorp. March 30, 1832, lies on the Erie Canal, mostly within this town. It is an important station on the N. Y. C. R. R., and is connected with Ridgeway on the n. and Shelby Center on the s. by the Medina & Alabama Plank Road. It contains 5 churches, an academy,¹⁴ a newspaper office, and several manufactories.¹⁵ Pop. in 1855, 2,104,—in Ridgeway 1,915, in Shelby 189. Knowlesville,¹⁶ (p. v.) a station on the N. Y. C. R. R., situated in the e. part of the town, on the Erie Canal, contains 3 churches and several manufactories.¹⁷ Pop. 490. Oak Orchard¹⁸ (p. v.) has a pop. of 136; Jeddo (p. v.) of 124; and Ridgeway (p. v.) of 64. North Ridgeway is a p. o. The first settlement was made by Ezra D. Barnes, from De Ruyter, Eagle Harbor, Cong. and Presb. at Gaines, Univ. at Fairhaven, and Free Will Bap. at East Gaines.

² Near the mouth of Bald Eagle Creek the lake makes rapid encroachments upon the land, and whole fields have been swept away.

⁴ There are 5 churches in town; Univ., Bap., Presb., and M. E. at Kendall, and M. E. at West Kendall.

⁷ A gristmill, a tannery, a furnace and plow factory, and a cabinet ware manufactory.

⁸ Locally known as "Sandy Creek."

1815; and the first gristmill was built by Perry & Luce, in 1816. Fanny Furguson taught the first school, in the summer of 1814.

¹¹ So named from the ridge way or road formed by the lake ridge running e. and w. through the town.

¹⁶ Named after Des. — Knowles, one of the earliest settlers.

¹⁷ A steam sawmill, steam gristmill, tannery, and plaster mill.

Madison co., N. Y., in 1809.¹ The first church (Presb.) was formed at Oak Orchard in 1817, by Rev. Jedediah Fairbanks.²

SHELBY³—was formed from Ridgeway, March 6, 1818. It is the s. w. corner town of the co. Johnsons Creek and a branch of the Oak Orchard take their rise in this town, and the Oak Orchard crosses it through the center. Upon the latter stream, at Shelby Center, is a fall, affording a valuable water-power. The surface is undulating; and the soil a mixture of sand, clay, and lime. The Tonawanda Swamp occupies the s. part. Shelby⁴ (p. v.) contains 1 church and several manufactories;⁵ Millville (p. v.) contains 3 churches, the Millville Academy, and about 45 dwellings. East Shelby (p. o.) and Shelby Basin (p. o.) are hamlets, and West Shelby is a p. office. Medina is partly in this town. The remains of Indian fortifications have been discovered in this town. The first settlement was made by Alex. Coon, from Rensselaer co., in 1810.⁶ The first church (Bap.) was formed July 25, 1818.⁷

YATES⁸—was formed from Ridgeway, April 17, 1822, as "Northton;" its name was changed the following year. It is the most westerly town upon the lake shore. It is crossed by Johnsons Creek and two smaller streams. Marsh Creek and Four Mile Creek have their whole course in the town. The surface is level, except along Johnsons Creek, where it is undulating; the soil in the s. is a sandy loam, and along the lake clayey. Lyndonville (p. v.) contains 3 churches and several manufactories. Pop. 242. Yates Center (Yates p. o.) contains 1 church and the Yates Academy. Pop. 191. County Line (p. o.) is on the w. line of the town. George Houseman, from Adams, Jefferson co., settled in this town in 1809, and John Eaton, from Penn., in 1810.⁹ There are now 6 churches in town.¹⁰

¹ Eli More, Israel Douglas, Dyer Sprague, Otis Turner, Dr. Wm. White, David Hooker, and S. B. Murdock were among the first settlers. The first sawmill was built by the Holland Land Co., as early as 1805, to encourage settlement. The first gristmill was built by Otis Turner and Dr. White, in 1812; and the first tavern was opened in 1810, by Eli More. Lucy Judson taught the first school.

² There are now 9 churches in town; Prot. E., Bap., M. E., Presb., and R. C. at Medina, Presb., M. E., and Bap. at Knowlesville, and Unit. at Ridgeway. ³ Named in honor of Geo. Shelby.

⁵ 2 flouring and grist mills, 1 paper mill, 1 tannery, 1 carding mill, and 2 sawmills.

⁶ Eleazar Frary, Henry and Robert Garter, David Demara, Joseph Ellicott, and Wm. Bennett were among the earliest settlers. The first birth was that of Asa Coon, Feb. 14, 1811; and the first death, that of Wm. Bennett, Oct. 4, 1812. The first sawmill was built by Joseph Ellicott, on Oak Orchard Creek, in 1812, and the first gristmill, in 1813. The first inn was kept by David Timmerman, in 1816; and the first store, by Christian Groff, in 1818. Coraelius Ashton taught the first school, in the winter of 1815-16.

⁷ There are 9 churches in town; 4 M. E., 1 Presb., 1 Quaker, 1 Christian, 1 Bap., and 1 F. W. Bap.

⁸ Named in honor of Gov. Yates.

⁹ The first marriage in town was that of Geo. Houseman, jr. and Sally Covert, in 1817; and the first death, that of Mrs. Geo. Houseman, sr., in Dec. 1813. The first inn was kept by Samuel Tappen, at Yates Center, in 1825; and the first store, by Moore & Hough, in 1824. The first school was taught by Josiah Perry, in 1819.

ERIE COUNTY.

THIS county was formed from Niagara, April 2, 1821. It lies upon Lake Erie and Niagara River, on the w. line of the State, is centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains — sq. mi. Its surface is level in the n., rolling in the center, and hilly in the s. A region perfectly flat, and much of it marshy, lies along Tonawanda Creek, and occupies the greater part of the n. tier of towns. This low region is bounded on the s. by a limestone terrace, 20 to 60 ft. high, extending from Black Rock e. through the s. part of Amherst, Clarence, and Newstead. A nearly level region, extending s. from the summit of this ridge, embraces the city of Buffalo and the towns of Chicktowaga, Lancaster, and Alden, and terminates in the rolling region which occupies the entire central part of the co.

The ridges in the center and s. have a general n. and s. direction, and rise gradually toward the s., their highest summits attaining an elevation of 200 to 300 ft. above the valleys, 900 to 1000 ft. above Lake Erie, and 1400 to 1600 ft. above tide.¹ The highlands are divided into several distinct ridges by the valleys of Cazenove and Eighteen Mile Creeks. The slopes of the hills are generally long and gradual; but in some places the banks immediately bordering upon the streams are very steep. The land along the lake in the n. is low and level, but in the s. it rises in steep banks to a height of 20 to 50 ft. Niagara River, the outlet of Lake Erie, forms a portion of the w. boundary of the co. Its current flows at the rate of 2½ miles per hour. Grand Island, commencing about 5 miles below Buffalo, divides the river into two nearly equal branches. Squaw, Strawberry, Rattlesnake, Tonawanda, Beaver, and Buckhorn Islands, also in Niagara River, are within the limits of this co. The river is navigable to the head of the rapids, about 2 mi. above Niagara Falls.

Tonawanda Creek² forms the n. boundary of the co. It flows in a tortuous course through a low, marshy region. A dam, 4½ ft. high at its mouth, furnishes slack water navigation for the Erie Canal for about 10 miles. Its principal branches are Murder and Ellicott—or Eleven Mile—Creeks. Buffalo Creek³ enters the lake at Buffalo City, its estuary forming the harbor. Its principal tributaries are Cayuga Creek, from the n., and Cazenove Creek,⁴ from the s. The other principal streams are Little Buffalo, Eighteen Mile,⁵ Big Sister, and Cattaraugus Creeks, all flowing into the lake, and the last forming the s. boundary of the co.

The lowest rocks are those of the Onondaga salt group; and these are succeeded by the hydraulic, Onondaga, and corniferous limestones. The central part of the co. is occupied by the Marcellus and Hamilton shales, and the summits of the southern hills are covered by the rocks of the Portage group. The rocks of the salt group occupy nearly all the low land below the limestone terrace. They are covered so deep with drift and alluvium, however, that they have but little influence upon the surface, and can never be profitably quarried for commercial purposes. Hydraulic limestone of an excellent quality crops out along the n. base of the limestone terrace, and is extensively quarried. The terrace is composed of Onondaga and corniferous limestone; and along its whole extent are numerous quarries, furnishing an abundance of lime and building stone of excellent quality. Numerous sulphur springs are found near the n. base of the terrace. The shales of the central and southern parts of the co. are generally covered with a thick deposit of drift, and are only visible along the margin of the streams. These rocks furnish an inferior kind of building stone, but are not otherwise valuable.

The soil in the n. is generally a stiff, clay loam interspersed with beds of marl and muck; further s. it is a clay and gravelly loam resting upon limestone. The southern hills are covered with

³ On a map made in 1804 by Joseph Ellicott, agent of the Holland Land Company, this stream is laid down as “Tos-e-o- way” Creek. In an ancient Indian treaty it is called “Te-to-ss-ro-ron.”

⁴ Named from Theophilus Cazenove, agent for the Holland Land Company.

drift, consisting of clay and gravel. The soil of the valleys is generally a gravelly loam and alluvium.

The principal pursuits in the n. are grain raising, and in the s. stock and wool growing and dairying. The hilly regions are much better adapted to pasturage than tillage. The people of Buffalo and Tonawanda are mostly engaged in commerce and manufactures.¹

Buffalo is the county seat.² The courthouse, situated on the corner of Clinton and Ellicott Sts., is a substantial brick building, containing the court and jury rooms, the office of the co. clerk, and most of the other co. offices.³ The jail is a small stone building on the same lot. The Erie Co. Penitentiary is located on Fifth St., in Buffalo. The buildings are 5 in number,—the male and female prisons, the workhouse, the warehouse, and the superintendent's dwelling. Prisoners are received from Allegany, Chautauque, Cattaraugus, Wyoming, Genesee, Orleans, and Niagara cos. The average number in confinement is 130.⁴ The Erie Co. Poorhouse is located on a farm of 153 acres in the n. e. part of Buffalo. There are 2 buildings,—one designed for use as the poorhouse proper, and the other for the accommodation of the insane. The average number of inmates is 300, supported at a weekly cost of $1.00 each.⁵

The principal works of internal improvement are the Erie Canal, the Rochester & Buffalo, and the Lockport, Niagara Falls & Buffalo branches of the New York Central R. R., the Buffalo, New York & Erie, and the Buffalo & State Line Rail Roads,⁶ all terminating in the city of Buffalo, and the Canandaigua & Niagara Falls branch of the N. Y. C. R. R., extending through Newstead, Clarence, Amherst, and Tonawanda. A railroad from Buffalo to Pittsburgh is now in process of construction. A pier, lighthouse, and breakwater have been built at the mouth of Buffalo Creek.⁷

With the exception of the Indian Reservation and the Mile Strip, along Niagara River, this co. was all included within the Holland Purchase.⁸ The Indian lands, containing 130 sq. mi. and lying upon both sides of Buffalo Creek, at its mouth, were purchased in parcels, at different times; and the whole territory is now thickly settled. The first settlements were made at Buffalo, about 1794-95, and in other places within a few years after. The generous outlays made by the Holland Company in the construction of roads, bridges, mills, &c. led to a rapid occupation of all the best lands in the co.⁹ On the morning of the 30th of Dec., 1813, a British force of about 1,000 men crossed over from Canada and captured Black Rock and Buffalo. The American forces then stationed at these places were superior to the British in point of numbers; but the officers were not qualified for command, and a large share of the militia fled upon the commencement of the action. The village of Buffalo was burned in retaliation of the wanton destruction of Newark, in Canada, by the Americans under Gen. George McClure, (then of Steuben co.,) a short time before.¹⁰ The finishing of the Erie Canal and of the N. Y. Central R. R. tended greatly to develop the resources of the co., and to convert Buffalo, its chief city, into the greatest commercial place on the upper lakes.

² By the act of March 11, 1808, erecting the co. of Niagara, Buffalo was named the co. seat, on condition that the Holland Land Company deed to the county not less than half an acre of land for a site for the public buildings, and erect thereon a courthouse and jail. The company complied with these conditions, and erected, in 1810, a wooden courthouse and a stone jail. In the mean time the courts were held at the house of Joseph Landon. The courthouse was burned by the British in 1813. Soon after the close of the war, a new one was erected on Washington St., fronting La Fayette Park. The first officers of Erie co. were Sam'l Wilkeon, First Judge; John G. Camp, Sheriff; James L. Barton, Co. Clerk; and Roswell Chapin, Surrogate.

⁹ A large share of the later settlers of the co. have been Germans; and this class of people now constitute about one-fifth of the entire population of the co. The population of several of the towns in the immediate vicinity of Buffalo is almost exclusively German.

¹¹ The Buffalo Gazette, the first paper in the county, was commenced Oct. 3, 1811, by S. H. & H. A. Salisbury. It was removed to Harrie Hill in 1813, and back to Buffalo in the spring of 1814. In April, 1819, H. A. Salisbury became sole proprietor, and changed the name to The Niagara Patriot. On the erection of Erie co. in 1820 it was changed to

The Buffalo Patriot. It was successively under the editorial charge of Wm. A. Carpenter, Harvey Newcomb, and Guy H. Salisbury.

The Daily Commercial Advertiser was issued from the same office, Jan. 1, 1835. Soon after, Dr. T. M. Foute and B. A. Manchester became associated in the management of the two papers; and in Aug. 1838, the Aurora Standard was merged in them, and A. M. Clapp, its publisher, became one of the proprietors of the joint con-

Y. C. R. R. The first settlement was made in the spring of 1810, by Moses Fenno.¹ The first religious services were conducted by Rev. John Spencer, in 1811. The first church (Presb.) was organized in 1813-14. There are now 6 churches in town.²

AMHERST³—was formed from Buffalo, April 10, 1818; and Chicktowaaga was taken off in 1839. It lies upon the n. border of the co., between Clarence and Tonawanda. Its surface is level. Eleven Mile and Ransoms Creeks flow across the town in a n. e. direction; and Tonawanda Creek forms its n. boundary. The soil is a sandy and clayey loam. Upon the land of John Foglesonger, in the s. part of the town, is a very copious sulphur spring. A gristmill with 3 run of stone has been built on the stream formed by it. A ledge of limestone extends across the s. part of the town, from which limestone is quarried in various places. Beneath this ledge is a layer of hydraulic limestone, which is extensively quarried at Williamsville and burned for waterlime. Williamsville,⁴ (p. v.) incorp. in 1850, is situated on Eleven Mile Creek, in the s. part of the town. It contains 4 churches, an academy,⁵ and several manufactories.⁶ Pop.

In 1854 Rann & Cowan became proprietors, and the same year it was united with The Democracy.
The Western Evangelist (Univ.) was started in June, 1846, by Rev. L. S. Everett, and continued 1 year.

The Niagara Frontier, under which name it is still published.
The Mental Elevator was published a short time in the Seneca language.
¹ Among the first settlers were Joseph Freeman, John Eastabrook, Wm. Snow, and Arunah Hibbard, who came in 1810; Saml. Slade, James Crocker, Saml. Huntington, and Jonas Stickney, who came in 1811; and Wm. Dayton, who came in 1812. The first birth was that of a daughter of Arunah Hibbard; and the first death, that of Polly Cransaky, in 1812. John Rogers built the first sawmill, in 1813 or '14, and the first gristmill, in 1817. Amos Bliss kept the first inn, and Seth Eastabrook the first store, both in 1816. The first school was taught by Mehetabel Eastabrook, in 1815.
² Esp., Presb., Evang. Luth., M. E., and 2 R. C.
³ Named in honor of Lord Amherst, commander of the English forces in America in 1759-60.
⁴ Named from Jonas Williams, one of the early settlers.
⁵ The Williamsville Classical Institute. The whole number of students for the year 1857 was 222.
⁶ A gristmill, a sawmill, a tannery, a furnace, a broom factory, a chair factory, and a waterlime mill, the last producing 3,000 to 4,000 bbls. of hydraulic cement per year.

1,166. Egbertsville, Getzville, East Amherst, and Westwood are p. offices. The first settlement was made in 1804, by Timothy S. Hopkins and Elias Ransom, from Great Barrington, Mass.¹ There are 9 churches in town.²

AURORA—was formed from Batavia, as "Willink," April 11, 1804. Its name was changed April 15, 1818. Clarence was taken off in 1808, Buffalo in 1810, Concord, Hamburg, and Eden in 1812, Holland and Wales in 1818, and a part of Elma in 1857. It occupies nearly a central position in the co. Its surface is rolling in the n. and hilly in the s. The declivities of the hills are generally gradual slopes, and their summits are 150 to 300 feet above the valleys. The principal streams are Cazenove Creek and its branches. The soil is gravelly loam in the valleys and clayey among the hills. Willink, (p. v.), incorp. Dec. 29, 1849, is situated on the e. branch of Cazenove Creek, in the n. part of the town. It contains 2 churches and a woolen factory and has a pop. of 365. East Aurora, (p. v.), about 1 mi. e. of Willink, contains 2 churches, an academy,³ and several manufacturing establishments. Pop. 360. West Falls, (p. v.) on the w. bank of Cazenove Creek, in the s. part of the town, contains 1 church, 2 sawmills, a gristmill, and about 30 houses; and Griffins Mills, (p. v.) on the same stream, near the center of the town, contains 1 church, a sawmill, a gristmill, and 25 houses. The first settlement was made in the fall of 1803, by Jabez Warren, Henry Godfrey, and Nath'l Emerson.⁴ The evidences of ancient Indian occupation were plainly visible upon the advent of the whites.⁵ The first church (Bap.) was organized with 16 members, in 1810, by Elder Irish. There are 7 churches in town.⁶ Ex-Pres. Millard Fillmore and Hon. N. K. Hall, Judge of Supreme Court and Ex-P. M. Gen., were for some years residents of East Aurora.

BOSTON—was formed from Eden, April 5, 1817. It is an interior town, lying s. of the center of the co. Its surface is a hilly upland, broken by the valley of the n. branch of Eighteen Mile Creek, which flows n. w. through near the center of the town. The valley of this stream is about three-fourths of a mile wide. In this valley the soil is a fine, fertile loam, and upon the hills it is a gravelly and clayey loam. Boston, (p. v.) on the n. branch of Eighteen Mile Creek, contains 3 churches, 2 gristmills, 2 sawmills, a tannery, a cow-bell factory, and 40 houses; Boston Center, (Patchin p. o.) on the same stream, contains 2 churches, a sawmill, and 20 houses; and North Boston, (p. v.) 1 church, a gristmill, a sawmill, and 20 houses. The first settlement was made by Didemus Kinney, in 1803.⁷ The first religious services were conducted by Rev. John Spencer, in 1810. There are 7 churches in town.⁸

BRANDT⁹—was formed from Collins and Evans, March 25, 1839. It lies upon the shore of Lake Erie, in the s. w. corner of the co. The surface is generally level, with a gentle inclination toward the lake. Cattaraugus Creek forms a part of the s. boundary. The other principal streams are Big Sister, Delaware, and Muddy Creeks. The soil is generally a gravelly loam intermixed with clay. Brandt (p. v.) contains 20 houses, and Mill Branch (Farnham p. o.) 30. The first settlement was made in 1817, by Moses Tucker.¹⁰ The first religious services were conducted by Benj. Olmsted, in 1820. A union church is the only one in town.

¹ Among the early settlers were Wm. Maltbury, Jonas Williams, James Harmon, Horatio Kelsey, Seth Canfield, Enos A. Armstrong, and Jas. Harris. The first sawmill was built in 1801, by — Thomson; and the first gristmill, by Wm. Maltbury, in 1808. Elias Ransom kept the first inn, in 1805, and Juba Storrs & Co. the first store, in 1812.

² Bap., Disciples, M. E., and Germ. Cath. at Williamsville, and 2 Evang. Luth., Free, Mennonite, and R. C. in other parts of the town.

³ The Aurora Manual Labor Seminary was chartered Oct. 18, 1833; and in 1838 its name was changed to the Aurora Academy. The manual labor department was long since abandoned.

in Aurora; the finders, not knowing its value as a specimen of antiquity, converted it into a dipper and skimmer.—Turner's Hol. Pur., p. 668.

⁶ 2 Presb., Bap., Cong., M. E., Univ., and R. C.

⁷ Oliver and Charles Johnson settled in the town in 1805, and Richard Cary and Sam'l Eaton in 1807. The first birth was that of Phiney Johnson, in 1806; the first marriage, that of David Stannard and Esther Yaw, in 1810; and the first death, that of Joel Beebe, in 1809. Ethan Howard built the first mill, in 1810; Job Palmer kept the first inn, in 1811; and Aaron J. Tupper the first store, the same year. The first school was taught by Joel Eddy, in 1810.

⁸ Bap., Free Will Bap., Evang. Luth., Friends, M. E., Meth. Prot., and Univ.

⁹ Named from Col. Joseph Brant, the Mohawk chief. His Indian name was "Tha-yan-da-ne-gah," said to signify "wood partly burned" or "a brand;" and as the Indians are unable to distinguish d from t in their pronunciation, it became Brant.—Asher Wright, Missionary at the Cattaraugus Reservation.

Amherst was taken off in 1818, and Tonawanda in 1836. The village of Buffalo was incorp. April 2, 1813, re-organized in 1815, and again in 1822, and incorp. as a city April 20, 1832, with its limits enlarged by the addition of that part of the Mile Strip Reservation² s. of York and North Sts. By the provisions of a new charter, granted April 13, 1853, the then town of "Black Rock" was included within the city limits. The city lies at the e. extremity of Lake Erie, extending nearly 10 mi. along the lake shore and the upper part of Niagara River, and occupies an area of about 40 sq. mi. The principal streams are Big Buffalo and Scajaquady³ Creeks,—the former emptying into Lake Erie and the latter into Niagara River. The principal business part of the city is on the lake shore around the harbor. The land in this locality is low, and was once considered "an irreclaimable morass; but it is now densely covered with substantial warehouses and large stores, intermingled with factories, foundries, mechanics' shops, and dwellings."⁴

The site rises gradually, and attains in one or two places an elevation of about 100 ft.; but the greater portion of the area occupies an extended plain of an average height of 50 ft. above the lake. On the "Buffalo Plains," and along the river at North Buffalo, are extensive quarries of limestone, furnishing an excellent building material.⁵ The city is regularly laid out, and the streets are broad and straight. The flagging and paving are done in the most substantial manner, and are kept in excellent repair.⁶ The main part of the city is supplied with wholesome water from Niagara River by the Buffalo Water Works Company. The reservoir, situated on Niagara between Connecticut and Vermont Sts., is 88 ft. higher than the river, and has a capacity of 13,500,000 gallons. The water is elevated by two force pumps, each of a capacity of 235 gallons, and is distributed through 31 mi. of pipe.⁷ Lower Black Rock is supplied by the Jubilee Water Works with water obtained from the Jubilee Springs. It is conducted through wooden pipes, of which there are more than two miles laid.⁸ There are 5 post-offices in the city,—Buffalo, North Buffalo, Buffalo Plains, Red Jacket, and Black Rock.

The harbor of Buffalo is formed by Big Buffalo Creek, along which for more than a mile is a continuous line of wharves. A pier extends from the s. side of the harbor 1500 ft. into the lake, forming an effectual barrier against the encroaching sands, which everywhere on the lake have a tendency to accumulate on the w. side of piers. At its extremity is a lighthouse.⁹ The Erie Canal enters the city along Niagara River, from which it is separated by a seawall, and extends southward to near the mouth of Buffalo Creek, and thence eastward to Hamburg St. The Erie Basin, just n. of the mouth of Buffalo Creek, protected lakeward by a breakwater, and the Ohio Basin, about one and one-fourth mi. from the mouth of the creek, containing an area of 10 acres, are both connected with the harbor and canal and are sufficiently deep to float the largest lake vessels.¹⁰ A ship canal more than a mi. in length extends along the w. side of Big Buffalo Creek parallel to the shore of the lake. This canal, the basins, the Erie Canal, and the harbor are all connected by numerous slips. Six railroads terminate in the city; and another—the Buffalo & Pittsburgh—is in process of construction.¹¹

⁵ The pier, the breakwater, the arsenal, St. Joseph's Cathedral, and many of the most substantial buildings in the city, are in part or wholly built of this stone.

⁷ The Buffalo Water Works Company was incorp. March 15, 1840. The original cost of the works was $400,000; and $65,000 of the earnings have been expended in extending the works. Connected with them are 32½ street hydrants, and 20 underground reservoirs, having an aggregate capacity of 407,850 gal.

of wooden pipe laid, fully supplying Black Rock and a part of Buffalo; but, while the increase of population created a greater demand for water, the supply from the springs diminished, and in 1845 the citizens of Lower Black Rock purchased the works and confined the supply to their own village.

Buffalo is the second commercial city of the State, and the largest and most important upon the great lakes.¹ Its situation at the foot of navigation upon Lake Erie and at the western terminus of the Erie Canal makes it the principal port for the transshipment of the products of the great grain region of the Upper Mississippi Valley, and gives to it the command of the greater part of the commerce of the lakes.² The number of entries at this port during the year 1857 was 4,017, with an aggregate of 1,618,672 tons; and the number of clearances was 3,564, with an aggregate of 1,603,134 tons.³ The exportation and importation by canal is also immense,⁴ and it is estimated

² The amount of grain received in 1857 was 15,443,778 bush., and of flour 925,411 bbls., of which 15,343,930 bush. of grain and 845,953 bbls. of flour were received by lake. The same year there were received by lake 29,799 head of cattle, 75,174 hogs, and 44,972 sheep. The following table shows the imports, by lake, of flour and grain for a series of years:—

The annual average receipts of flour during the first five years was about 860,000 bbls.; during the next five it was 820,000; during the next five, 1,474,000; and during the next five, 909,000. The whole amount of grain received in 1847 was 9,668,187 bush., and in 1855 20,788,475 bush.—the greatest amount in any one year. This was a greater amount than was received the year in any other port in the world. The following table shows the receipts of leading articles during three seasons:—

The total value of the importations of these three years were, in 1855, $48,767,315; in 1856, $40,429,871; and in 1857, $34,846,592. ³ Following is an exhibit of the number of entrances and clearances, their tonnage and crews, for six successive years:—

that the value of merchandise and property transported by r. r. is greater than the entire amount of the lake commerce of this port.¹ About one-fourth of the shipping of the lake is owned by the citizens of Buffalo.² Shipbuilding is extensively carried on.³ The manufactures of the city are extensive and various.⁴

The principal public buildings are the Custom House, Fort Porter, the State Arsenal, and the city markets. The Custom House, on the corner of Seneca and Washington Sts., is a handsome and well built structure, containing, beside the custom house office, accommodations for the post-office and the U. S. courts. It was constructed, at a cost of $140,000, from designs furnished by the U. S. Treasury Department.⁵ Fort Porter, built in 1842-48, is a fortification on the bank of Niagara River at the point where it emerges from Lake Erie. The State Arsenal, erected in 1858, is a massive stone building fronting on Batavia St.⁶ There are four large markets, conveniently located in different parts of the city.⁷

The Public Schools of the city have long enjoyed a deservedly high reputation. They are carefully nurtured through the operations of an enlightened public sentiment, and are so excellent in all their departments that scarcely any other elementary schools are supported or needed. They are thoroughly graded, consisting of three general departments. The third department is an advanced school for the whole city; and in it a complete academic course, excepting the classics, is taught. There were, in 1857, 32 school districts, employing 189 teachers,—24 males and 165 females. The number of children, between 4 and 21 years of age, was 28,000, of whom 15,593, or a small fraction more than 55½ per cent., were in attendance some portion of the year.⁸

² The amount of shipping owned in Buffalo, as shown by the custom house books, is as follows:—

Vessels.	No.	Tonnage.
Steamers.....	10	9,067
Propellers.....	50	30,186
Tugs.....	20	2,629

In connection with one of the shipyards of the city is a dry dock of sufficient capacity to admit a steamer of over 2,500 tons; and also a marine railway; and near by is a large derrick for hoisting boilers and heavy machinery.

The value of the articles manufactured in 1857 was about $10,000,000, of which the leading products are estimated as follows:—ships and boats, $1,800,000; leather, $1,500,000; flour, $1,000,000; stoves and other castings, $600,000; machines, $600,000; distilled stuffs, $400,000; piano fortes, $350,000; boots and shoes, $100,000.

For most of the statistics of the commerce and manufactures of Buffalo we are indebted to the Annual Statement of the Trade and Commerce of Buffalo for 1857, issued from the office of the Commercial Advertiser.

The Buffalo Medical College, on the corner of Main and Virginia Sts., was organized in Aug. 1846, under the charter of the University of Buffalo. A course of lectures is given each winter; and the students are admitted to the hospital of the Sisters of Charity, on stated days, during the visits of the medical and surgical officers.

The Buffalo Mercantile College, on the corner of Main and Seneca Sts., was established Oct. 10, 1854. Its object is to impart a theoretical and practical knowledge of business transactions.

The Buffalo Commercial College, on Main St., is an institution similar in character to the Mercantile College.

The Buffalo Law Library Association, incorp. April 2, 1833,—capital $10,000, in shares of $100 each,—was formed for the purpose of securing the benefits of a professional library beyond the reach of private means.

The Young Men's Association was established in the winter of 1835–36, and incorp. in March, 1843. It has a library of about 10,000 volumes, and a reading room, which is well supplied with papers from most of the principal cities of the Union. During the winter months lectures are maintained by the association.

The German Young Men's Association was organized in 1841 and chartered in 1846. The library contains about 2000 volumes, mostly German works.

The Young Men's Christian Union was established in May, 1852, and incorp. March, 1853. It has for its object the moral and intellectual improvement of young men. Its library and reading rooms are in Kremlin Hall, at the junction of Niagara and Erie Sts.

The Young Men's Catholic Association and the Buffalo Catholic Institute are societies similar to the preceding.

The Buffalo Medical Association was formed in 1845 and incorp. in 1856. Its objects are purely scientific and professional, and its membership is confined to the medical profession of the county.

The Mendelssohn Association, organized Jan. 1858, has for its object the improvement and cultivation of vocal and instrumental music.

The Deutsche Leidertafel and the Deutscher Saengerbund are German societies of a similar character.

The Buffalo Orphan Asylum, located on Virginia St., was organized in 1835 and incorp. April 24, 1837. The site was donated by Louis S. Le Couteux, and the present building was erected in 1850. The average number of inmates is about 80.

The Buffalo Female Orphan Asylum, on the corner of Batavia and Ellicott Sts., was established in 1848, under the care of the Sisters of Charity of St. Joseph. The present number of children is 98.

The Buffalo Hospital of the Sisters of Charity, on Virginia St., was incorp. July 5, 1848. The building contains 20 wards, and the average number of patients is 130.

The Buffalo General Hospital was incorp. Nov. 21, 1855, and went into operation in 1858. It was founded by individual donations, amounting to $20,000, and a State appropriation of $10,000.¹

The Lying-In Hospital, on Edward St., is under the charge of the Sisters of Charity.

The Buffalo City Dispensary, a society of physicians, was organized to afford gratuitous medical services to the destitute.

The Association for the Relief of the Poor disburses among the needy each winter sums ranging from $1,500 to $8,000.

The Firemen's Benevolent Association was incorp. March 23, 1837, and has for its object the accumulation of a fund for the relief of indigent and disabled firemen and their families.

The Buffalo Physicians' Charitable Fund Association was organized in 1858, to provide means for the assistance and relief of the widows and orphans of medical men.

A M. E. church was founded in Buffalo, in 1809, by the Rev. Jas. Mitchell; but it had no permanent organization. The oldest church now in the city (1st Presb.) was organized Feb. 2, 1812, by the Rev. Thaddeus Osgood. The next established were a Prot. E., Bap., a M. E., and a Univ. There are now 57 churches in the city.² Most of the church edifices are large and commodious; and many of them are of a high order of architectural beauty. St. Joseph's Cathedral (R. C.) is in this city, has been prominently before the public from the refusal of its trustees to convey their church property to the bishop, and the extraordinary but ineffectual efforts made by the Roman pontiff to induce obedience to this order. In 1853 Cardinal Bedini visited America, having this as a prominent object of his mission; but the trustees were inflexible, and still continue the owners of their property.

² 14 R. C., 8 Presb., 7 Prot. E., 7 M. E., 6 Bap., 4 Ger. Evang., 3 Luth., 2 Ref. Prot. D., and 1 each Asso. Presb., French Prot., Unit., Univ., Mission, and Bethel. The R. C. Church of St. Louis,

the largest and most costly in the city.¹ *St. Paul's*² and St. John's, (Prot. E.), and the North and Central (Presb.) churches, are elegant and substantial structures.

The earliest notice of the site of the city of Buffalo is found in the travels of Baron La Hontan, who visited this locality in 1687.³ No white settlers located here until after the American Revolution. A village of the Seneca Indians lay on Buffalo Creek, about 3 mi. from its mouth. In March, 1791, Col. Thos. Proctor, U. S. Commissioner, visited "Buffalo Creek,"—as this village was then called,—on an embassy to the Indians. The locality around the mouth of the creek was then called "Lake Erie," and Cornelius Winney, an Indian trader, resided there.⁴ The place was visited in 1795 by La Rochefoucault Liancourt, a French nobleman, who says that "at the post on Lake Erie there was a small collection of four or five houses."⁵ Buffalo was laid out by the agent of the Holland Land Company in 1801, and was called by them "New Amsterdam."⁶ Settlement was commenced at Black Rock in 1807.⁷ In 1808 "New Amsterdam" was made the county seat of Niagara co.; and its name was then changed to Buffalo. In 1812 it became a military post. In Dec. 1813, a party of British and Indians crossed over from Canada, defeated the American forces, and fired the villages of Black Rock and Buffalo. Only two dwelling houses were left standing.⁸ The rebuilding of the village was not commenced until 1815. Buffalo had from the first a formidable rival in Black Rock. While the mouth of Buffalo Creek was obstructed by a bar, Black Rock possessed an excellent harbor and monopolized the infant commerce of the lake. The "Walk-in-the-Water," the first steamboat on Lake Erie, was built at Black Rock in 1818. The construction of Buffalo harbor was commenced in 1820, by the citizens;⁹ and in 1827 the General Government assumed its completion and built the present pier and lighthouse. The Erie Canal was finished in 1825; and from that time to the present Buffalo has increased in wealth and population with the characteristic rapidity of the cities of the West.¹⁰

CHICKTOWAGA¹¹—was formed from Amherst, March 22, 1839; and a part of West Seneca was taken off in 1851. It is an interior town, lying n. of the center of the co. The surface is level. The principal streams are Eleven Mile, Cayuga, and Slate Bottom Creeks. The soil is a heavy, tough clay. Chicktowaga and Four Mile Creek are p. offices. The first settlement was made by Apollos Hitchcock, in 1808.¹² There is but 1 church (R. C.) in town.

CLARENCE—was formed from "Willink," (now Aurora,) March 11, 1808. Alden was taken off in 1823, and Lancaster in 1833. It lies upon the n. border of the co., between Newstead and Amherst. Its surface is level. A limestone terrace about 50 feet high, with a wall-like front facing the n., extends e. and w. through the center of the town. The streams are Tonawanda Creek, on the n. border, and Ransoms Creek, flowing n. w. through near the center of the town. The soil in the n. part is clayey, and in the s. a sandy and gravelly loam underlain by

¹ The cathedral is 236 ft. long, 86 ft. wide in the body, and 120 at the transept. The ceiling is 75 ft. high, the roof outside 90 feet, and the spire, when finished, will be 220 ft. high. The windows are all of beautiful stained glass, the larger ones in figures representing sacred scenes and characters. The tripartite window above the altar represents the birth, crucifixion, and ascension of Christ. This window was executed in Munich, at a cost of $5,000.

² This church was erected at a cost of about $100,000. It has a chime of 10 bells, which cost $15,000.

³ La Hontan recommended to the French Government the erection of a fort at this place.

⁶ The principal streets were named from members of the Holland Land Company. Main St. was called "Willinks Avenue," Niagara St. "Schimmelpennick's Avenue," Genesee St. "Busti Avenue," Erie St. "Vallenhovens Avenue," and Church St. "Stadnitzki Avenue." In 1826 these names were changed by the trustees of the village. The business of the Holland Land Company was transacted here for a short time previous to the opening of their office at "Ransoms Grove," now Clarence Hollow, in 1801.

streets are laid where it will either be impracticable or useless to open them soon. It may, notwithstanding, be useful now to contemplate, in the plans of towns, what will be necessary arrangements a century hence. Such plans on record, while for the present they can be productive of no harm, may prevent those aberrations from order that might hereafter be a cause of much inconvenience; and without being governed by extravagant calculations, no doubt can be entertained that the future importance of this place will justify extensive views in the projection of its arrangements." The village, like Lewiston, Oswego, Salina, and Fort Covington, was patented in small parcels.

⁹ The sum of $1,861.25 was raised by subscription, and a loan of $12,000 was obtained from the State. A pier, extending 80 rods into the lake, was built, and a lighthouse erected upon the land. The Superior—the second steamboat launched upon Lake Erie—was built at Buffalo in 1822.

¹⁰ The population at different periods has been as follows:—

1810.....	1,508	1830.....	8,668	1845.....	29,773
1814.....	1,060	1835.....	19,715	1850.....	42,201
1820.....	2,095	1840.....	18,213	1855.....	74,214
1825.....	5,141

The population of Black Rock (now about 12,000) is included in the return of 1855 only.

¹¹ This name was given at the suggestion of Alex. Hitchcock. It is a corruption of the Seneca word "Jik-do-wah-geh," signifying "the place of the crab-apple tree," the Indian name of this locality.

limestone. Clarence Hollow, (Clarence p. o.,) near the s. e. corner of the town, contains 3 churches, the Clarence Academy,¹ and a pop. of 400; Clarence Center (p. v.) contains 2 churches and about 40 houses. Harris Hill (p. o.) and North Clarence (p. o.) are hamlets. The first settlement was made at Clarence Hollow in 1799, by Asa Ransom.² The census reports 7 churches in town.³

COLDEN⁴—was formed from Holland, April 2, 1827. It is an interior town, lying s. of the center of the co. The surface is an elevated upland, rolling in the e. and hilly in the w. The w. branch of Cazenove Creek flows through the w. part of the town and is bordered by steep declivities 150 to 200 ft. high. The soil is a gravelly loam intermixed with clay. Colden, (p. v.,) on Cazenove Creek, contains a sawmill, a gristmill, and 34 houses; Glenwood, (p. v.,) on the same stream, contains 1 church, 3 sawmills, 2 lath mills, a tannery, and 30 houses. During the War of 1812 a party of British sailors and mariners landed near Sturgeon Point, in the night, and commenced plundering the inhabitants. Judge Aaron Salisbury, then a young man, seized his musket and started off alone to get a shot at them. When he arrived they were retreating to their boats, and an exchange of shots produced no damage on either side. They started for the month of Eighteen Mile Creek, and he on foot endeavored to get there before them; but they had landed when he arrived. He immediately commenced firing; and they, not knowing how large a force was opposing them, retreated to their boats and speedily left. Here one man frightened away 100 and saved the inhabitants from plunder.

1818, by commissioners appointed respectively by the United States and British Governments. While the matter was still undecided, a large number of lawless persons—mostly refugees from justice from both sides of the river—squatted upon the island, locating principally along the shores. Remaining for some time unmolested, they began to commit extensive depredations upon the timber; and finally they set up an independent government and elected a full quota of municipal officers. In April, 1819, the legislature passed an act authorizing the removal of these intruders. During the succeeding summer the governor issued a proclamation commanding them to desist from depredations upon the property of the State, and at once to remove. A few obeyed the command; but, seeing no active demonstrations on the part of Government, they returned. In the fall of 1819, Gov. Clinton directed Col. Jas. Cronk, the sheriff of Niagara co., to call out a sufficient military force for the purpose and forcibly expel them. On the 9th of Dec. 1819, the sheriff, accompanied by Lieuts. Benj. Hodge and ——— Osborne, 2 serjeants, 4 corporals, and 24 privates, went to the island in boats, manned by 20 boatmen, to carry into execution the orders of the governor. Every facility was given the people to remove with their effects; and the boatmen took them to either shore, as they might elect. The military were divided into 3 parties: a vanguard, to read the governor's orders and assist in clearing the houses; a second party, to forcibly remove all property left in the buildings; and a rear guard, to burn the buildings and complete the removal and destruction. Seventy houses were burned, and 150 people, consisting of men, women, and children, were turned out shelterless upon the U. S. and Canada shores. Two buildings, filled with grain, alone were saved. The removal and destruction occupied 5 days and cost the State $568.90. A few families returned immediately, but did not remain.

¹ In a memorial to the legislature in 1820 for the purchase of the island Maj. Noah explained his object; recounted the persecution which his co-religionists in the Old World had suffered through many centuries; pointed out the benefits that had resulted to Spain, Portugal, France, and Germany from the commercial enterprise and the capital of the Jews when allowed the exercise of their rights; and painted in brilliant colors the benefits that would accrue to the U. S. if his people could exchange "the whips and scorns of Europe, Asia, and Africa for the light of liberty and civilization" which this country afforded. He estimated that there were 7,000,000 of Jews in the world, and predicted that, if the existence of an asylum of freedom were made known, large numbers would be induced to emigrate. The sanction of law was asked to give confidence to those who might not otherwise be induced to remove. His attempt to gather the Jews, like those before it, ended in day dreams. The European rabbi refused to sanction the effort; and Maj. Noah soon gave up the attempt, leaving no trace of his "city" upon the island but a monument of brick and wood. It bore, on a marble tablet, the following inscriptions from Deuteronomy vi. 4:—

יְהוָה יְהוָה
רַחֵםנוּ

ARARAT,

A CITY OF REFUGE FOR THE JEWS,

Founded by MORDECAI M. NOAH, in the month of TZRI 5586, (September, 1825,) and in the 50th year of American Independence.

The monument has since tumbled down; and the schemes of Mordecai the Jew have scarcely a place in memory or a trace in history.

A Boston company was formerly extensively engaged in the manufacture of ship timber upon the island.

WALES—was formed from Aurora, April 15, 1818; and a part of Marilla was taken off in 1853. It is situated near the center of the e. border of the co. Its surface is broken and hilly and inclined toward the n. The principal stream is Big Buffalo Creek. The soil in the n. is a gravelly loam, and in the s. clay overlaid by hardpan. Wales Center, (p. v.) on Big Buffalo Creek, in the n. part of the town, contains 2 churches, a gristmill, a sawmill, and 40 dwellings; Wales, (p. v.), on the same stream, contains 1 church, a gristmill, a sawmill, and 30 dwellings; and South Wales (p. v.) contains a gristmill, a sawmill, and 25 dwellings. The first settlement was made in 1805, by Oliver Pettengill.⁷ There are 3 churches in town; 2 M. E. and a Free Will Bap.

WEST SENECA—was formed, as "Seneca," from Chicktowaga, Hamburg and East Hamburg, and Lancaster, Oct. 16, 1851; its name was changed March 25, 1852. It is situated on the shore of Lake Erie, near the center of the w. border of the co. Its surface is gently undulating in the e. and level in the w. The streams are Big Buffalo, Cazenove, and Smokes⁸ Creeks. The soil is generally a sandy loam. The town is mainly settled by a society of German religionists, generally known as Ebenezers, but who style themselves the "Community of True Inspiration."⁹ Middle Ebenezer, on Buffalo Creek, contains a church, calico printing factory, woolen factory, sawmill, oil mill, and 67 houses; Lower Ebenezer, on Cazenove Creek, contains a church, sawmill, gristmill, tannery, and 50 houses; and New Ebenezer contains a large manufactory of cotton and woolen goods, an extensive dyeing works, and 9 dwellings. Reserve and West Seneca are p. offices. The first settlement was made by Reuben Sackett, in 1826.¹⁰ There are 4 churches in town.¹¹

1811; and the first death, that of a son of Henry Godfrey, in 1814. Summer Warren built the first mill, in 1811; Geo. Richmond kept the first inn, in 1811; and Clark & Co. the first store, in 1816. The first school was taught by Melinda Abhey, in 1814.

¹ Large quantities of lumber are received at this port from Canada and the Western States. The quantity re-shipped by canal in 1857 was of timber, 841,011 cubic feet; of sawed stuff, 4,315,441 ft.; and of wood, 16,007 cords.

² This elevator has a storage capacity of 250,000 bush., and facilities for elevating 2000 bush. per hour.

⁴ This is the pop. of that part of the village in Erie co. A part of the village is across the creek, in Niagara co.; and the pop. of this is not known.

⁶ Disciplee, Evang. Luth., M. E., R. C., and Wes. Meth. at Tonawanda Village, and Evsug. Luth., M. E., and R. C. in other parts of the town.

⁷ Ethan and Wm. Allen and Jacob Turner settled in the town in 1806, and Chas. and Alex. McKay, Ebenezer Holmes, and Wm. Hoyt in 1807. The first birth was that of Wm. Pettengill, in June, 1806. Isaac and Eli Hall built the first mill, in 1811; Isaac Hall kept the first inn, in 1816; and Orsamus Warren the first store, in 1824. The first school was taught by Jas. Wood, in 1811. In 1813 an Indian hatchet was found imbedded in a tree at Wales Center, and in 1825 John Allen related the following circumstance concerning it. About the time of the first settlement of Buffalo an Indian came to that place and exhibited the skin of a white child, and boasted that he had murdered and skinned the child for the purpose of making a tobacco pouch. Truman Allen, (brother of the narrator,) hearing the boast, became so enraged that he followed the Indian to Wales and shot him. He buried the body and rifle in the sand, and stuck the tomahawk into a tree, where it was afterward found as above stated.

¹⁰ Among the other early settlers were Artemus W. Baker, John G. Wells, Isaac Earle, and Geo. Hopper, who located in 1828. The first child born was a daughter of Joel Decker, in Aug. 1828; and the first death, that of Peter Beal, in 1834. Geo. E. Elderkin taught the first school, in 1839; Reuben Sackett kept the first inn, in 1828; the Ebenezer Society, the first store, in 1845; and Ballou & Tubell built the first mill, in 1837.

OSWEGO COUNTY.

THIS county was formed from Oneida and Onondaga, March 1, 1816.¹ It is situated upon the s.e. extremity of Lake Ontario, centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains an area of — sq. mi. Its surface is generally level or gently undulating. A series of bluffs 20 to 40 feet high border immediately upon the lake; and from their tops the land stretches out in long and gradual slopes, occasionally broken by the valleys of the river courses. The general inclination is northerly, as indicated by the drainage, though the summits of the ridges within half a mi. of the lake have about the same altitude as those upon the s. border of the co. A low ridge extending in an easterly and westerly direction, from 3 to 5 mi. n. of Oneida Lake, forms the watershed between Lakes

Ontario and Oneida. In the e. part of the co. this ridge turns northward and unites with the system of highlands which separates Lake Ontario and the valley of Black River. The highest point of this range, in the town of Redfield, is 1,200 to 1,500 feet above tide.

The rocks of this co. consist of the Lorraine shales, in the extreme n. part, on the lake; the gray sandstone,² extending from the n.e. corner to near the center, its southern limits being marked by a line drawn due e. from Oswego River about 1 mi. from its mouth; the Medina or red sandstone, bordering on the east, and comprising more than one-third of the area of the co.; and the Clinton group of shales, slate, and sandstone, occupying the extreme s. border. These rocks are exposed only in the n. e. part and along the river courses, being generally covered with a thick mass of drift and alluvial deposits, consisting of sand, gravel, and clay. The gray sandstone is hard and compact, and is little affected by the action of the elements; hence the disintegration is slight, and the soil upon it is thin and poor. The Lorraine shales are easily disintegrated, and form the basis of the strongest and richest soils in the co. The red sandstone crops out on the banks of all the streams which flow through the region which it occupies. It is extensively quarried for building stone, though it is more easily acted upon by the elements than the gray sandstone. Weak brine springs are found associated with this red sandstone throughout the co. The Clinton group, occupying the entire s. border, consists of parallel layers or beds of shale and red and gray sandstone. This is the same geological formation in which is found the principal iron ore beds of Penn. and Oneida co.; and throughout the formation in this co. iron ore is found.

The drainage of the w. and s. parts of the co. is principally through Oswego River, and of the n. and e. portions through Salmon River and a great number of smaller streams that flow directly into the lake. Oswego River is formed by the junction of Seneca and Oneida Rivers at Three River Point. It is 23 mi. in length, and falls 128 feet in its course, in several distinct falls, each of which furnishes an excellent water-power. Oneida River, forming the outlet of Oneida Lake, is 18 mi. in length, and falls about 12½ feet in its course. Salmon River and other streams flowing into the e. extremity of the lake all have successions of rapids and cascades, which furnish to that portion of the co. an abundance of water-power. The principal bodies of water are Lakes Ontario and Oneida. The former, constituting the n. w. boundary, presents an almost unbroken coast line for a distance of 40 mi. within the limits of the co. Great Sandy Bay, in the town of Sandy Creek, is the only considerable indentation. The mouth of Oswego River furnishes a valuable harbor, the only one of importance in the co. Oneida Lake, constituting a portion of the s. boundary, is 141½ feet above Lake Ontario.³ It is one link in the chain of the internal water communication of the State. A considerable portion of the land in its immediate vicinity is marshy. Iron ore beds and a fine quartz sand, used in the manufacture of glass, are found upon its n. shores. The soil found in the shale and sandstone region has already been noticed. The drift and alluvial deposits which cover the greater portion of the co. furnish a great variety of soil. The sandy portions are light and weak, while the clayey portions are hard, tough, and unyielding in many places. Where these are mixed, a rich, deep soil is the result. Along the e. border of the co. are great quantities of limestone boulders, which essen-

² This gray sandstone has been used for grindstones.

OSWEGO HARBOR.

tially modify the soil of that region. The marshes are generally composed of beds of black muck and other vegetable matter, and form the richest kind of natural meadow when drained and cultivated.

Agriculture, manufactures, and commerce about equally engage the attention of the people. Stock raising and dairying are the principal branches of agriculture; spring grains and wool are also extensively produced.¹ The commerce is mostly concentrated at Oswego City, and is carried on by means of the lake, the Oswego Canal, and the r. r. The manufactures consist of flour, lumber, barrels,² starch, and a variety of other articles. The amount of flour annually manufactured is greater than in any other co. in the State. The principal mills are at Oswego City, Fulton, and vicinity.

The Oswego Canal, connecting Lake Ontario with the Erie Canal at Syracuse, is 38 mi. long, and for most of the distance is formed by the slackwater navigation of Oswego River. Oneida Lake and River also form a part of the internal navigable waters of the State, connecting with the Oswego Canal at Three River Point and with the Erie Canal at Higginsville. The Syracuse & Oswego R. R. forms the means of a rapid communication with the N. Y. C. R. R. at Syracuse, and so to all parts of the country. Several long lines of plank road have been built; but most of them have been abandoned.

This co. is divided into two jury districts,³ the courts being held respectively at Pulaski Village and Oswego City.⁴ At the former place a brick building, including a courthouse and jail, was erected in 1820, and at the latter a wood courthouse about the same time.⁵ A stone jail was erected in the city in 1850, and a fireproof co. clerk's office in 1851.⁶ The co. poorhouse is located upon a farm of 60 acres in the town of Mexico. It is an old building, and is poorly adapted to its purpose. The average number of inmates is about 50. An asylum for insane paupers is in process of erection adjacent to the poorhouse. The Oswego Orphan Asylum, located at Oswego City, is in part a co. institution. All the children of the inmates of the poorhouse between the ages of 4 and 6 years are supported at the Orphan Asylum at the co. expense.⁷

Two daily and 6 weekly papers are published in the co.⁸

¹ The first settlers of the co. were principally engaged in the manufacture of lumber and potash. Wheat was once a staple production; but since the commencement of the ravages of the midge it has given place to the coarser grains.

² Barrels to the amount of 1,500,000 are annually manufactured for the Oswego flour mills and the Syracuse salt works.

⁵ The city soon outgrew the first courthouse, and the courts for many years were held in the city hall. They are now held in Mead's Hall, on E. Bridge St. The old courthouse for several years was used as a schoolhouse; but recently it has been removed, and converted into a Sunday school chapel for the Church of the Evangelists, where 500 children receive religious instruction. At their last annual meeting the Board of Supervisors authorized the raising and appropriated $30,000 for the erection of a new courthouse in the city, on the E. public square; and the building is now being constructed of Onondaga limestone.

⁸ The American Farmer, the first newspaper of the co., was issued at Oswego some time before 1807.

The Oswego Gazette was started at Oswego in 1817 by A. Bucklinham, and continued 2 years.

The Oswego Palladium was commenced by John H. Lord and Dorephus Abbey in 1819. It subsequently passed into the hands of Mr. Lord, and was continued by him until 1850. John Carpenter then became the proprietor, and changed its name to

The Oswego Palladium and Republican Chronicle, and continued it until 1845, when it was sold to B. Brockway, who again changed it to

The Oswego Palladium. In 1851 he transferred it to a company, by whom it was sold in 1853 to Dudley Farling, the present editor, who sold his interest, in July, 1854, to T. P. Ottoway, the present publisher.

The Oswego Daily Palladium has been issued in connection with the weekly since 1850.

The Oswego Republican was established March 22, 1825, by Wm. W. Abbey. In 1827 it passed into the hands of Samuel Osgood, and was issued a short time as

The Oswego Gazette and Advertiser. In 1828 it was sold to Wm. C. Shope, who published it as

The Oswego Advertiser until 1829. It then passed into the hands of the late Dr. Burdell, of Cunningham notoriety, who changed its name to

The Freeman's Herald, and continued it 1 year. It was then suspended for 2 years, and revived in 1832 by John Q. Adams, by whom it was published as

The National Republican 1 year, and was then discontinued.

The Oswego Democratic Gazette was published a short time in 1830 by James Cochran.

The Oswego Free Press was published by Richard Oliphant from 1830 until 1834, and by Geo. G. Foster as

The Oswego Democrat until 1835, when it was discontinued.

The Oswego Observer was started in Feb. 1835, by Bailey & Hawks, and continued until the latter part of 1836.

The Commercial Herald was published at Oswego by Hill & Henry from 1837 to 1843.

The Oswego Patriot was published at Oswego during the Patriot War of 1838-39 by John Bunner and John Cochran, member of the 35th and 36th Congress from the 6th district. (City of New York.)

The Oswego County Whig was founded in 1838 by Richard Oliphant, and sold to Daniel Ayer in 1844. In 1847 C. D. Brigham became proprietor, and changed its name to

The Oswego Commercial Times. In Nov. 1848, James N. Brown became the publisher; and in Feb. 1854, he was succeeded by Winchester & Ferguson, by whom the Oswego Journal was purchased and united with it, and the combined paper was issued as

The Weekly Times and Journal. In 1857 it was changed to

The Oswego Times, under which name it is still published by J. Tarbell.

The Oswego Daily Advertiser, the first daily in the co., was issued in 1845 in connection with The Whig, and was continued until 1847, when its name was changed to

The Oswego Daily Commercial Times. It was published in connection with The Commercial Times until 1854, when it was changed to

The Oswego Times and Journal. In 1857 it was changed again to

The Oswego Daily Times, and is still issued by J. Tarbell.

The People's Journal was started at Oswego in March, 1849, by O'Leary & Deen, and the next year it was sold to L. A. Winchester. In 1851 it passed into the hands of Sumner & Poncher, who started

The Oswego Daily News in connection with it. The following year L. A. Winchester again became proprietor, and changed the name of the daily to

The Oswego Daily Journal. In 1854 the two papers were united with the Daily and Weekly Times.

The Palasko Banner was commenced in April, 1830, at Pulaski, and published by Nathan Randall until 1832; by A. M. Mathewson and G. F. Foster until 1833; and by James Gedd until 1834, when it was suspended. In 1836 again appeared, as

The portion of the co. of Oswego lying near the mouth of the river was discovered in 1654 by French Jesuits, who established missions here for the conversion of the Iroquois.¹ The French had previously explored the St. Lawrence; and in 1615 Champlain, in an expedition against the Onondagas, passed through the e. part of the co. In 1700 the English explored the country occupied by the Five Nations as far w. as Oswego; and in 1722 a trading house was built here under the direction of the N. Y. colonial government. From that period considerable trade was carried on by the English between Oswego and Albany through Oswego River, Oneida River and Lake, Wood Creek, and the Mohawk.² In 1727 the English built a fort on the w. bank of the river, near its mouth.³ The French, claiming this whole territory, re monstrated against the action of the English, and several times planned expeditions to destroy the fortifications, but did not carry them into effect. Upon the commencement of the "Old French War" of 1753, Fort Ontario was erected on the e. bank of the river; and another fort was built upon the summit of the w. ridge in 1755.⁴ In the summer of 1756, 5,000 French under Montcalm, with a heavy train of artillery, consisting of 30 guns of large caliber, crossed the lake from Fort Frontenac (now Kingston) and appeared before this place. The forts were invested Aug. 11, and, after 3 days' hard fighting, they were surrendered on the 14th.⁵ The victors demolished the forts, burned the English vessels, and retired. In 1758, Col. Bradstreet, with 3,350 men, crossed the lake from this place and reduced Fort Frontenac. After destroying the fortifications and securing the military stores and vessels, he returned to Oswego and rebuilt the forts there. Fort Ontario was greatly enlarged, and built in the most substantial manner. In the summer of 1760, the powerful army of Lord Amherst embarked here on an expedition down the St. Lawrence. From this time Oswego became the most important military station upon the western frontier. During the Revolution it was strongly garrisoned, and formed the headquarters of many of the marauding parties that desolated the frontier settlements. It continued in possession of the British until 1796, when it was surrendered under the provisions of Jay's treaty.

In 1790, George Scriba, a merchant of N. Y. City, and a German by birth, purchased 500,000 acres of land lying between Lakes Oneida and Ontario, for the sum of $80,000.⁶ This purchase, known as "Scriba's Patent," was bounded on the e. by Fish Creek and on the w. by Oswego River, and embraced 14 towns in Oswego co. and 4 in Oneida. In 1794, Mr. Scriba caused a settlement to be made and a sawmill built on the shore of Oneida Lake, to which he gave the name of "Rotterdam,"—now Constantia. In 1795 he built a gristmill—the first in the co.—and several other buildings at the same place. During the same year his patent was surveyed and divided into townships and subdivided into lots.⁷ About the same time he commenced a settlement at the mouth of Little Salmon Creek, on the shore of Lake Ontario, 12 mi. N. E. of Oswego, which he called

The Pulaski Advocate, and was published by Daniel Ayer until 1838. It was then sold to — Dickinson and united with the Port Ontario Aurora, the united papers taking the name of

The Advocate and Aurora. The name, Aurora, was dropped in 1840, when the Advocate again passed into the hands of Daniel Ayer, and was discontinued in 1842.

The Pulaski Courier was started in 1843 by W. Winans. In 1847 it passed into the hands of A. A. Mathewson, and was changed to

The Richard Courier. In 1850 it was sold to Joseph Hatch, who changed its title to

The Pulaski Democrat. In 1856 it passed into the hands of — Miller, its present publisher.

The Fulton Chronicle was started in Nov. 1837, by Thomas Johnson. In 1840 it was sold to Isaac S. Clark and Edwin Thompson, who gave it the name of the

Ben Franklin. It was discontinued the following year, and succeeded by

The Weekly Dispatch, published by E. C. Hatten about 1 year. The Fulton Sun was started in 1841 by N. B. Northrop. In 1842 it was united with the Mirror.

The Fulton Mirror was established Aug. 20, 1842, by Daniel Ayer. It was soon after united with the Sun and issued as

The Fulton Sun and Mirror. In Sept. 1844, it was sold to Spencer Munroe, and soon after discontinued. It was succeeded by

The Fulton Patriot. M. C. Hough, John A. Placo, and T. S. Brigham were successively interested in its publication. The latter was succeeded by R. K. Sandford, its present publisher.

The Oswego County Gazette, commenced at Fulton in 1853 by Geo. E. Williams, was merged in The Fulton Patriot in 1858.

The Port Ontario Aurora was published by — Van Cleve and subsequently by — Dickinson from 1837 to 1839, when it was united with The Pulaski Advocate.

The Oswego County Democrat was started at Mexico in 1838 by Thomas Messenger. It was afterward styled

The Messenger, and was discontinued in 1839.

The Phoenix Gazette, started at Phoenix in 1851, was published by Jerome Duke, and afterward by Geo. E. Williams until 1853, when it was removed to Fulton.

The Phoenix Democrat was established in 1852 by an association. In 1854 it was sold to James H. Field, and the next year he gave it the name of

The Phoenix Banner. In 1855 it was published a short time as The American Banner and Oswego County Times. It was suspended in 1855, and in 1856 it was revived by Mary Frances Tucker, and called

The American Banner and Literary Gem. Eight months afterward it was sold to Levi Murrill, by whom it was published as

The American Banner until 1857. After being suspended two months, it was revived, under the title of

The Phoenix Reporter, by Joshua Williams, by whom it is still published.

¹ There is a tradition that the French established a military post here at a very early period; but research among the papers of that period does not corroborate the statement.

² There were several portages on this route,—around the falls in the streams, and across from Wood Creek to the Mohawk.

³ Not a single trace of this fortification now remains.

⁵ The French landed 50 mi. E. of Oswego, and marched along the lake shore under cover of their naval force. The English garrison numbered 2,000 strong. Col. Mercer, the English commander, was killed by a cannon shot on the 2d day of the siege.

"Vera Cruz,"¹ (now Texas.) He here built a saw and grist mill, store, and other buildings, and commenced an active trade on the lake; and for some years the place bid fair to become a formidable rival of Oswego, and the most important commercial station upon the lake. A few other settlements were made at other points in the co., principally under the auspices of Mr. Scriba, previous to 1800; but immigration did not begin to flow in rapidly until a few years later. The lands of Mr. Scriba were divided and sold to a great number of different parties; and while his exertions and expenditures were of great service to the first settlers, they proved extremely unprofitable to himself.² In common with all the frontier settlements, the growth of this region was seriously retarded by the War of 1812. Oswego Village became the theater of stirring military events; and on the 5th of May, 1814, it was taken by the British.³ At the return of peace, immigration again flowed in, and the subsequent history has been one of steady and continuous progress. The opening of the Erie and Oswego Canals, in this State, and of the Welland Canal, in Canada, greatly increased the commercial importance of the city and stimulated the manufacturing interests throughout the co.

ALBION—was taken from Richland, March 24, 1825. It is an interior town, lying e. of the center of the co. Its surface is level or gently undulating. The summits of the ridges are 50 to 100 feet above the valleys, and the highest point in town is 392 feet above Lake Ontario. The lowlands are wet and in some places marshy. Salmon River flows through the n. part.⁴ In the n. e. part are 2 or 3 small ponds. The soil consists of deposits of sand and gravel, and is of medium quality. Drift deposits cover the whole surface, except along the river courses, where the underlying rocks crop out. Much of the s. part of the town is yet unsettled. Considerable manufacturing is carried on.⁵ Sand Bank, (p. v.), on Salmon River, is a station on the Watertown & Rome R. R., midway between the two places. It contains 1 church, a hotel, 4 stores, 2 tanneries, 5 sawmills, and a flouring mill. Pop. 313. Pineville, (Salmon River p. o.), a station on the W. & R. R. R., situated on Salmon River, contains 1 church, an inn, a store, a sawmill, and a large tannery. Pop. 144. New Centerville, (p. o.), a station on the W. & R. R. R., and Dug Way (South Albion p. o.) are hamlets. The town was first settled early in 1812, by Cary Burdic, of Williamstown, on Lot 29, and Peter Henderson, at Sand Bank.⁶ There are 4 churches in town.⁷

AMBOY—was formed from Williamstown, March 25, 1830. It lies upon the e. border of the co., s. of the center. The surface is rolling and has a general southerly inclination. Its highest point is about 450 feet above Lake Ontario. It is drained principally by Fish Creek and other small tributaries of Oneida Lake. In the s. and w. parts are numerous small lakes and ponds, the principal of which are Painter Lake, North and South Ponds. The n. half of the town is in the region of the gray sandstone, and the s. half in that of the red or Medina sandstone. The soil is principally a sandy or gravelly loam. Amboy Center (p. v.) contains 13 houses; West ships of Scriba's Patent, like those of Macomb's Purchase, received names from the proprietors that are known only in deeds; viz.:

Richland appears to be uncertain, or this name has been applied to two surveys.

¹ Vera Cruz was laid out into city lots by Mr. Wright, who was an agent of Scriba, and considerable improvements were made. A 4 rod highway was cut from Rotterdam to Vera Cruz, a distance of 20 mi., from lake to lake. In 1796 a schooner was built there by Mr. Scriba's agent, which was engaged in the trade between Vera Cruz and the Canadian port of Kingston. It is said that in 1804 more merchandise was sold there than at Oswego or Utica; and in the imagination of many persons Vera Cruz was destined to command the trade of Canada and the West. But, by a series of disasters on the lake, a large portion of the male residents were lost to the infant settlement; and the restrictive policy of Mr. Jefferson's administration, followed by the War of 1812, extinguished the flattering prospects of Vera Cruz. The events and the action of half a century have nearly obliterated all traces of the once promising city.

⁴ Before the dam was built upon this river, great numbers of salmon were annually taken.

Amboy (p. v.) 20; and Carterville (p. v.) 12. Joseph Perkins, from Conn., was the first settler, in 1805.¹ There are 2 churches in town; M. E. and Bap., both located at Amboy Center.

BOYLSTON²—was formed from Orwell, Feb. 7, 1828. It lies upon the n. border of the co., e. of the center. Its surface is rolling in the center and e., and moderately hilly in the w. It has a westerly inclination, and its highest points are 700 to 800 feet above tide. The soil in the n. and w. parts is a productive, gravelly loam, the underlying rock being the Lorraine shale. The s. e. corner of the town extends into the gray limestone region, and the soil is light and thin. Boylston (p. o.) is in the n. w. part. The first settlement was made in 1810, on Lots 2 and 3, by John Wort and Michael Sweetman, both from Canajoharie.³ Meetings for religious worship are held in the town by the Episcopal Methodists and the Wesleyan Methodists.

CONSTANTIA⁴—was formed from Mexico, April 8, 1808. Hastings was taken off in 1825, and West Monroe in 1839. It lies upon the n. shore of Oneida Lake, in the s. e. corner of the co. The surface is nearly level, and is slightly inclined toward the s. The principal streams are Scriba and Black Creeks, flowing into Oneida Lake. Iron ore is found in the Clinton group of rocks, which extend through the s. part. The soil consists of clay, gravel, sand, and vegetable mold, and in general is fertile. Most of the interior is yet unsettled. Frenchmans Island, in Oneida Lake, about 3 mi. from Constantia, belongs to this town; it contains about 28 acres.⁵ Lumber, leather, glass, and iron are extensively manufactured.⁶ Cleveland,⁷ (p. v.) incorp. April 15, 1857, is located on Oneida Lake, in the e. part of the town. It contains 2 churches, 2 glass factories, and several other manufactories. Pop. 1,005. Constantia, (p. v.) in the w. part, on Oneida Lake, contains 2 churches and has a pop. of 600. Bernhard Bay, (p. v.) on the lake, contains 2 churches, a glass factory, and 360 inhabitants. Constantia Center is a p. o. Soon after the purchase of Scriba's Patent, in 1790, Mr. Scriba commenced the first settlement of his lands at Constantia, and established agents and laborers there in 1793.⁸ There are 7 churches in town.⁹

GRANBY—was formed from Hannibal, April 20, 1818. A part of Oswego was taken off in 1836. It lies on the w. bank of Oswego River, in the s. w. part of the co. The surface is gently rolling, with a slight inclination to the n. e. Oswego River flows through a valley from 30 to 60 feet below the general level of the town; within this town it has a fall of 40 feet. Lake Nea-tah-wan-ta, near the center of the e. part, is about 1 mi. in diameter. It lies about 25 feet above the river at the head of the falls. The streams are Ox Creek, Six Mile Creek, and the outlet of Nea-tah-wan-ta Lake. The soil is generally a sandy or gravelly loam. Bradstreets¹⁰ or Battle Island is in Oswego River, about 4 mi. below the Oswego Falls. Starch, leather, lumber, and the products of wood are extensively manufactured.¹¹ Oswego Falls, (p. v.) incorp. Oct. 12, 1853, a station on the S. & O. R. R., is situated on Oswego River, opposite the village of Fulton. Pop. 703. Granby Center and South Granby are p. offices. The first settlement was made at the falls in 1792, by Laurence Van Valkin, from Rensselaer co., N. Y.¹² There are now 2 churches in town.¹³

⁵ During the French Revolution of 1793, when the French nobility were compelled to seek safety in flight, and the trains of exiles to this country were crowded with dukes and princes of the blood, the Count St. Hilary, a young Frenchman, and his beautiful and accomplished wife, a daughter of the noble house of Clermont, landed upon our shores. Following the trail of emigration westward, they reached Oneida Lake, then on the great thoroughfare of travel; and, attracted by the beautiful island and its primitive forests, they landed upon it, and concluded to make it their future home. Here, in the deep solitude of nature, they enjoyed for many months perfect peace and quietude. Their place of residence was at length discovered by Chancellor Livingston, who had formerly enjoyed the elegant hospitalities of the lady's family at Paris. He visited them in their rural home, and, after spending some time with them, he prevailed upon them to return with him to his mansion upon the Hudson. There they continued to reside until Bonaparte had put an end to the reign of terror and restored much of the confiscated property to the exiles of the Revolution, when they returned to France. Several years after, as Livingston stood upon the bank of the Seine, amidst a crowd of distinguished Parisians, to witness the first experiment of Robert Fulton in steam navigation, he was recognized by the Count, who at once took him to his residence, and treated him during his stay at Paris as a generous benefactor and an honored guest. Livingston's mansion upon the Hudson and the first steamboat of Fulton and Livingston were both named, in honor of the lady's family, "Clermont."

⁸ Solomon Waring, Joshua Lynch, and Dr. Vandercamp settled in town in 1793; and John Bernhard in 1795. The first birth was that of George Waring, April 11, 1796. The first store was opened in 1793, by Mr. Scriba, and the first inn the same year, by Major Solomon Waring. In 1794-95, Mr. Scriba erected in this town the first sawmill and gristmill built in the co. This first school was opened in 1797, at Constantia.

HANNIBAL—was formed from Lysander, as a part of Onondaga co., Feb. 28, 1806, and embraced all that part of Oswego co. lying w. of the river. Oswego and Granby were taken off in 1818. It is the n. w. corner town of the co. Its surface is gently undulating, the ridges being 30 to 50 feet above the valleys. In the e. part are several swamps, one of which covers 500 acres. The soil is a rich, sandy and gravelly loam. A salt spring, from which salt has been manufactured, is found in the n. w. corner. Springs of brine, characteristic of the Medina sandstone strata, have been discovered in several other localities, but none of sufficient strength to render their working profitable. The principal manufacturing establishments are those of leather, lumber, and the products of wood.¹ Hannibal, (p. v.,) on Nine Mile Creek, a little w. of the center of the town, contains 3 churches and about 60 houses; Hannibal Center (p. v.) contains 20 houses; and Hulls Corners (South Hannibal p. o.) 18. Wheeler's Corners is a hamlet in the n. part, and Kinney Corners is a p. o. The first settlement was made in 1802, by Thomas Sprague and his sons, from Milton, Saratoga co.² The first church (Bap.) was organized in 1815.³

HASTINGS—was formed from Constantia, April 20, 1825. It lies upon the n. shore of Oneida River, in the s. part of the co. Its surface is level or gently undulating, its northern boundary being about 75 feet above Oneida Lake. The soil is clay, sand, and gravelly loam. In some parts of the town it is difficult to find fresh water by digging. Brine springs are found in several parts in the red Medina sandstone formation. In the n. e. part is a tamarack swamp, of about 5 acres, in the center of which is an immense spring 10 feet in diameter. This spring is on a level with the surrounding summit; and it is surrounded by a deep, loose muck which extends downward to an unknown depth. There are 18 sawmills, several gristmills, and 2 tanneries in town. Central Square (p. v.) contains about 50 houses; Hastings, (p. v.,) in the n. part, 30; Caughdenoy, (Coo-e-noy,) (p. v.,) on Oneida River, in the s. w. part, 30; and Hastings Center (p. o.) 15. Smiths Mills and Fort Brewerton are villages of about 20 houses each. The latter is situated at the foot of Oneida Lake, on the site of old Fort Brewerton.⁴ The first settlement was made at Fort Brewerton, by Oliver Stevens, in 1789.⁵ There are 4 churches in town.

MEXICO—was formed from Whitestown, April 10, 1792, as part of Herkimer co. Parts of Richland and New Haven were annexed May 9, 1836. It included the northerly towns of Oneida co., nearly all of Lewis and Jefferson cos. w. of Black River, and all of Oswego co. e. of Oswego River. Camden was taken off in 1799, Champion, Redfield, Turin, Watertown, and Lowville in 1800, Adams in 1802, Lorraine and Williamstown in 1804, Volney in 1806, Constantia in 1808, New Haven in 1813, and Parish in 1828. Its surface is gently rolling. It is well watered by numerous small streams, the principal of which are Little Salmon and Sage Creeks. There is scarcely a foot of waste or broken land in the town. The underlying rock is gray sandstone, covered deep with alluvial deposits. The soil consists of clay, sand, and gravelly loam, and is very productive. Considerable attention is given to stock raising and dairying; the manufacture of lumber, barrels, and leather is carried on to some extent.⁶ Mexico, (p. v.,) near the center, was incorp. Jan. 15, 1851, and contains 3 churches, an academy,⁷ 12 stores, 2 banks, 3 hotels, 3 flouring and grist mills, a sawmill, a furnace and machine shop, 3 coach factories, 4 carriage shops, and 3 cabinet shops. Pop. 948. Colosse, (p. v.,) in the s. e. part, contains 1 church, 2 inns, a store, 2 sawmills, and 2 gristmills. Pop. 119. Texas,⁸ (p. v.,) located near the mouth of Little Salmon Creek, contains 30 houses; Union Square, in the e. part, is a p. office. The names of the earliest settlers within the present limits of this town are lost. There were about 25 who had already located in 1798; Jonathan Parkhurst and Nathaniel Rood, from Oneida co., came that year.⁹ By the upsetting of a boat upon the lake, in 1799, Capt. Geerman and 6 others were lost, and in 1804, by a similar disaster, 9 others,

² Watson Earl, Samuel Baron, Joseph Weed, Sterling Moore, David Wilson, and Israel Meekins settled at Hannibal Center in 1805. The first birth was that of Carr Sprague, in 1805; the first marriage, that of Daniel Thomas and Prudence Sprague, in 1803; and the first death, that of a daughter of Thomas Sprague, in 1806. The first gristmill was built by Earl & Colton, in 1805; and the first sawmill, by Silas Crandell, in 1811. The first inn was kept by Henry Jennings, in 1808; the first store, by Benj. Phelps, in 1815; and the first school was taught in 1810.

⁵ Among the early settlers were Timothy Vickery, Chester Loomis, Solomon Allen, and Jacob Rice. The first birth was that of John L. Stevens, in 1802; the first marriage, that of Silas

Bellows and Betsey Vickery, in 1808; and the first death, that of Horatio Stevens, in 1792. Chester Loomis kept the first inn, in 1815; and Hastings Curtis, the first store, in 1820. The first school was taught by Patrick Vickery, at Caughdenoy.

⁶ There are 19 sawmills, 5 gristmills, a fulling and cloth dressing mill, a woolen factory, and 3 tanneries.

⁷ The Mexico Academy was organized in 1826, as the "Fennelcer Oswego Academy." Its name was changed May 19, 1845.

⁸ Formerly called "Vera Cruz." See p. —.

⁹ Phineas Davis and Calvin Tiffany, from Conn., settled in 1799; John Morton and Asa Davis in 1801; Peleg Brown, Daniel Eames, and Leonard Amos in 1804; and Solomon Peck in 1805. The first birth was that of Truman Rood, Aug. 10, 1799; and the first marriage, that of Richard Gafford and Mrs. Rood, widow of N. Rood. The first grist and saw mill were built by Mr. Scriba's agent; and the first store was kept by Benj. Wright. The first school was taught by Sanford Douglass, at Colosse, in 1806.

NEW HAVEN—was formed from Mexico, April 2, 1813. A part was annexed to Mexico May 9, 1836. It lies upon the shore of Lake Ontario, w. of the center of the co. The surface is rolling and generally smooth. It is watered by Spring Brook, Catfish and Butterfly Creeks, 3 small streams flowing into Lake Ontario. There is quite an extensive marsh near the mouth of Butterfly Creek, in the n.e. part of the town, and another in the s.w. part. The underlying rock is gray sandstone, and the soil is principally a sandy and gravelly loam. Stock raising receives more attention in this than in the other towns of the co., and a limited amount of manufacturing is done.³ New Haven, (p. v.), situated near the center of the town, on Catfish Creek, contains 2 churches, 2 inns, a store, a sawmill, a gristmill, and about 50 houses. Butterfly is a p. o. near the e. line of the town. The first settlement was made by — Rood and — Doolittle, at New Haven, in 1798.⁴ The first church (Cong.) was organized at New Haven Village, in 1817; and Rev. William Williams was the first minister. There are now 2 churches in town; Cong. and M. E.

ORWELL—was formed from Richland, Feb. 28, 1817, and Boylston was taken off in 1828. A part of Richland was annexed March 27, 1844. It is an interior town, lying n.e. of the center of the co. The surface has a s.w. inclination, its e. border being elevated 300 to 500 feet above its w. and 700 to 1,000 feet above Lake Ontario. It is moderately hilly, and is considerably broken in places by the deep ravines of the streams. Upon Salmon River is a fall worthy of note. The stream flows over a rocky bed in a series of rapids for 2 mi. and then falls over a precipice 110 feet perpendicular. The banks of the stream below the fall are 200 feet high. The soil is generally a gravelly loam. The e. half of the town is yet uncultivated. Lumber and other products of wood form the leading articles manufactured; and considerable attention is given to stock raising and dairying.⁵ Orwell Corners, (Orwell p. o.) in the w. part, contains 1 church, 3 stores, an inn, a sawmill, a gristmill, a tannery, a steam cabinet factory, and about 40 houses. Maline is a hamlet in the s. part. The first settlers were Nathaniel Bennett and his son Nathaniel, from Rensselaer co., N. Y., on Lots 82 and 83, and Capt. Noyes, on Lot 29, in 1806.⁶ There are 3 religious societies in town.⁷

OSWEGO CITY—formed from Oswego and Scriba, was incorp. as a village March 14, 1828, and was enlarged and organized as a city March 24, 1848.⁸ It is situated on Lake Ontario, at the mouth of Oswego River,⁹ that stream dividing the city into two nearly equal parts. The river is bordered upon each side by a ridge, which rises in gradual slopes to a height of about 100 feet, and ends in bluffs on the lake shore 40 to 60 feet high. The summits of these ridges are about 1 mi. apart, and descend from the river in the same gradual slopes as toward it. One mi. w. is a valley opening through the ridge into the river above the falls, through which the Oswego must have once flowed into the lake. The s. border of the city is skirted by a bluff or escarpment about 160 feet above the lake, indicating an ancient lake or sea beach. Here commences the deep ravine excavated by the river through strata of red sandstone of the Medina group and underlying shale. From this the geological induction is made that, at the last great physical change which elevated the country from the bed of an ancient ocean and brought the river into existence, it fell directly into Lake Ontario, at the escarpment, by a fall of moderate

³ There are 9 sawmills, 2 gristmills, and other manufacturing establishments in town.

⁴ Mr. Wright settled in the town in 1798; Solomon Smith in 1800; C. Drake and Capt. Gardner in 1804; David Enos, Joseph Bailey, and James Jerret in 1805; and Warner Drake in 1808. The first birth was that of Joho D. Smith, in Feb. 1805. The first sawmill was erected by Ira Foot, in 1805, and the first gristmill by Waldo Brayton, in 1809. Harriet Essoe taught the first school, in the summer of 1806.

⁵ There are 16 sawmills, 16 shingle mills, a gristmill, and a tannery in town.

⁶ Among the early settlers were Benj. Reynolds, Joshua Hollis, Alden, Gilbert, and Timothy Balch. The first marriage was that of Robert Wooley and a daughter of Nathaniel Bennett, sen., in 1807; and the first death, that of the mother of Timothy Balch, in 1810. The first school was taught by Jesse Aiken, in 1810. Joseph Watson built the first sawmill, in 1810, and Jonah Tompson the first gristmill, in 1816.

⁷ M. E., Presb., and Bap. A Union church at Orwell Corners is occupied by the Presb. and Bap. societies.

⁹ By the river and canal it is 38 mi., by R. R. 35 mi., n. n. w. of Syracuse; by the Oswego and Erie Canals 208 mi., by the Oswego and Central line of r. r. 183 mi., and by the surveyed route of the Oswego & Troy R. R. 170 mi., w. n. w. of Albany.

height, the upward movement being gradual and intermittent. The pauses by which it was interrupted are marked by ancient beach lines, ridges, and terraces found at different heights above the lakes. The Oswego Falls are now 11 feet high; and, as they have receded s. 12 mi., to the village of Fulton, with an ascending average grade of about 9 feet per mi. in the excavated bed of the river, they must have diminished in height and grandeur from age to age during the whole period of recession. This hypothesis is sustained by geographical and geological analogy with the Falls of the Genesee and the Niagara. The aggregate fall of the river within the 12 mi. is 110 feet, of which 34 feet are within the limits of the city; and the whole fall is so distributed by 6 successive dams, built by the State for canal and slackwater navigation, that the water of the river may be used by raceways nearly the whole distance, affording one of the finest water-powers in the world. The river forms the outlet to the 11 lakes which cluster in the basin of Central New York, and drains a wide extent of territory. These lakes form natural reservoirs which prevent floods or undue exhaustion, the extreme elevation and depression of the river not exceeding 3 feet, so that destructive freshets, so common to great water-power rivers, never occur. The mouth of the river admits vessels of the largest class navigating the lakes; and the erection of piers and a lighthouse by the U. S. Government renders it one of the safest and most accessible harbors on the lakes, susceptible of indefinite enlargement, and combining canal and r. r. transportation with the advantages of position as the nearest lake port to tidewater. A hydraulic canal extending along both sides of the river is studded with mills, elevating warehouses, and other manufacturing establishments.

The city is handsomely laid out, with streets 100 feet wide, intersecting each other at right angles. The e. and w. banks of the river are connected by two bridges, built by the city,—the lower one, an iron bridge with a draw for the passage of vessels, on Bridge St., the upper on Utica St., at the terminus of the Oswego & Syracuse R. R. The principal public buildings are an edifice recently erected by the U. S. Government, containing a custom house, post-office, and U. S. courtroom,¹ a city hall,² jail, orphan asylum, city hospital, city library, and 12 churches.³

The Orphan Asylum is situated upon the elevated ground in the southern part of the city, commanding a fine view of the city, harbor, and lake. It was founded in 1853, mainly through the influence of the ladies of Oswego, and continues to be principally supported by them. Orphans and children of destitute parents, from earliest infancy to 8 years of age, are admitted and cared for and afterward placed out in respectable families. A primary and Sabbath school are connected with the institution. The number of inmates ranges from 50 to 100.

The City Library was founded by a donation of $25,000 from Hon. Gerrett Smith. The edifice is finely located upon the e. side of the river; and the library at present contains 9,000 volumes.⁴

The Public Schools are graded and free; they are under the care of a Board of Education and Superintendent. The system embraces the primary, junior, senior, and high school departments; and pupils can receive instruction from the primary branches to an extended academic course. In 1857 there were in the city 23 school districts, in which were employed 47 teachers,—8 males and 39 females. The number of children between 4 and 21 was 5,516, of which 4,175, or 75 per cent., attended school during some portion of the year. The total receipts and expenses during the year was $26,341 14; the number of volumes in the district libraries, about 3,000.

The commerce of Oswego is very extensive, and is increasing much more rapidly than the population.⁵ Being situated near the foot of lake navigation, and nearer to N. Y. than any other lake port, it has commercial facilities superior to those of most of the Western cities. A considerable share of the produce of the West flows through this port on its way to the seaboard markets; and it is the principal entrepôt of the agricultural products of Canada West. The salt of Onondaga is mostly distributed through the Great West from this place; and vast quantities of the manufactured goods of the East are sent through the same channel. The official report of the value of the lake and canal trade, derived from the Custom House and Canal Collector's Office, for 1845, was $7,951,409, and for 1856 was $50,612,603, showing an annual average increase of nearly 20 per cent. The amount of registered tonnage in 1846 was 15,513 tons, and in 1856 it was 46,467 tons.⁶

The manufacturing interests of the city have attained to considerable magnitude, although the vast water-power of Oswego River is occupied but to a limited extent. Flour made from the wheat with 2 stories above, having an aggregate height of wall of 30 feet above the basement.

⁵ Pop. in 1855, 15,816. Estimated in 1858, 18,000.

of Canada and the Western States forms the leading article manufactured. The Oswego mills, 18 in number, with an aggregate of 100 run of stone, are capable of grinding and packing 10,000 barrels of flour per day,—a greater amount than is manufactured at any other place on the continent.¹

Shipyards and 2 marine railways rank among the important manufacturing establishments of the city, and give large employment to labor. The Oswego Starch Factory, erected in 1848, upon the hydraulic canal, on the w. bank of the river, is one of the most prosperous and extensive establishments of the kind in the world.² Lumber is extensively dressed in the city for the Western markets, from Canadian sawed lumber entered free under the Reciprocity Treaty. The Oswego Cotton Mills is a well managed and productive establishment, operating 83 looms, 2,664 spindles, and giving employment to 65 operators. A little above, on the same canal, is an extensive tannery. The Ontario Foundry, Steam Engine and Machine Works, is one of the most extensive and prosperous establishments of the kind in the State. Many other branches of manufactures are carried on in the city.

The early history of Oswego has already been noticed in the general history of the co.³ Its distinctive and modern history dates from its surrender by the British in 1796. The withdrawal of the British garrison took away from the place all that had ever been established of civilized society, and left it as new as though man had never resided there. During the year following the evacuation, Neil McMullin, a merchant of Kingston, moved thither, bringing with him a house framed at Kingston.⁴ In 1802 but 2 or 3 vessels were owned on the American side of the lake, trade being principally carried on by vessels belonging to the Northwest Fur Company. During this year Benajah Boyington built a warehouse on the w. side of the river, and Arch. Fairfield became a forwarding merchant. Salt from the Onondaga Springs was at that time the most important item in the commerce of Oswego. In 1803, Matthew McNair engaged in the forwarding business and purchased a schooner. In 1804 he built another, and, in connection with other gentlemen, purchased a number of Canadian vessels.⁵ From this period shipbuilding was carried on briskly, and it formed a leading interest until the breaking out of the War of 1812.

The war put an end to commercial transactions; but the place became the scene of stirring military events. The fort was garrisoned and commanded by Col. Mitchell. On the 5th of May, 1814, the British fleet under Sir James Yeo appeared off the harbor and opened a heavy fire upon the place. The fire was returned by the 4 small guns which constituted the only armament of Fort Ontario, and by a small battery on the w. side of the river. The next morning the British took position still nearer the shore, and under the cover of a heavy fire 2 columns of the enemy effected a landing. After a gallant but vain defense, Col. Mitchell retreated, leaving the fort and town in possession of the enemy.⁶ The principal object of the attack was to secure the naval stores destined for the new vessels building at Sackets Harbor; but a large share of these were at Oswego Falls, 12 mi. above, and were not taken. Several cannon and other heavy articles lying upon the wharf were sunk in the river, at the command of Col. Mitchell; these were afterward recovered. On the morning of the 7th the British retired, and the fleet proceeded n. to blockade Sackets Harbor. Lieut. Woolsey, who had charge of the stores, immediately dropped down the river, and, with 19 boats laden with stores, set out on the lake under cover of night, and supported by a body of riflemen and Indians, under Maj. Appling, on shore. The boats were pursued, and took refuge in Sandy Creek, where an action took place, resulting in the capture of the entire attacking party.⁷

Oswego recovered slowly from the effects of the war, and its commercial transactions were comparatively unimportant until the opening of the Oswego and Welland Canals.⁸ In the mean time

² This factory was founded by a stock company, with a capital of $50,000; and, under the supervision of Thos. Kingsford & Sons, its capital has been increased to $450,000, and its main block of buildings have grown to the enormous dimensions of 510 feet front by 250 feet deep, with numerous detached buildings and no extensive box factory. The said establishment works up 500,000 bushels of grain (mostly corn) and makes 12,000,000 pounds of starch per annum. Large quantities of the article are sold and used in London, Liverpool, and the principal cities on the continent of Europe. It gives employment to 200 men.

Matthew McNair and Bradner Burt and his father came in 1802; Henry Eagle in 1808; Alvin Bronson in 1810; and Wm. Delloway in 1811. In 1810 the population numbered 300. Rankin McMullin, son of Neil McMullin, born in 1800, was the first child born within the present limits of the city.

⁵ In 1804 all commercial transactions were carried on with unrestricted freedom. No ship papers, licenses, reports, or oaths were required, the keen-scented custom house officers not having yet smelt out the commerce of the lakes.

⁶ The British loss in the action was about 200, and the American 60. The British carried off several of the prominent citizens, and kept them prisoners until they were duly discharged. Among the prisoners were Alvin Bronson, Abraham Huguinin, and Eli Stevens.

⁸ In 1818, 10 years before the Oswego Canal was completed, 36,000 barrels of Onondaga salt were received at Oswego, of which 26,000 barrels went to Western States by the portages round Niagara Falls. At that period the price of salt at Oswego was $2.50 per barrel, and the cost of transportation from Salina, by Oswego, to Black Rock $1.41 per barrel. In 1856 there were received at Oswego 700,000 barrels, of which over 500,000 went to upper lake ports through the Welland Canal, at a cost of shipbuilding became a leading pursuit of the people. In 1816, steam navigation was first introduced on Lake Ontario, and its great progress since has been of immense importance to Oswego. In 1829-30, Alvin Bronson and T. S. Morgan erected the first flouring mill. In 1828 the Oswego Canal was finished, and in 1830 the Welland Canal was opened, giving a new impulse to trade and opening to the place an almost boundless commerce in the future. With the advantages of natural position and the stimulus of the lines of internal improvement, both the commerce and manufactures of Oswego have increased in an almost unprecedented manner; and there is every reason to believe that this increase is to continue for many years to come.

OSWEGO-TOWN—was formed from Hannibal, April 20, 1818. A part of Granby was annexed May 20, 1836. It lies upon the shore of Lake Ontario, on the w. side of the river. Its surface is generally rolling, ending in a bluff shore upon the lake. The streams are the Eight Mile, Rice, Snake, and Minetto Creeks. A fall in Oswego River within the limits of this town affords an abundance of water-power. The underlying rock is principally red sandstone, and the soil a gravelly loam. Boulders and water-worn pebbles are scattered over the surface, making it very stony in places. Minetto,¹ (p. v.), situated on Oswego River, 4 mi. from the city, contains 150 inhabitants. South West Oswego is a p. o. The first settlement was made in 1797, by Asa Rice, from Conn. Reuben Pixley came in 1800, and Daniel Burt in 1802.² There are now in the town 2 churches; M. E. and Bap.

PALERMO—was formed from Volney, April 4, 1832. It is an interior town, lying just s. w. of the center of the co. Its surface is undulating. The large swamp in the e. part of the town is 57 feet above Oneida Lake, and the ridges are about 25 feet above the swamp. The streams are Scotts and Catfish Creeks. The soil is generally a sandy loam. Lumber and the products of wood are the principal manufactured products of the town.³ Palermo, (p. o.), situated near the center of the town, and Vermillion (p. o.) each contains 1 church and about 15 dwellings. The first settlement was made in 1806, by David Jennings, Simeon Crandall, and Sylvanus Hopkins.⁴ The first settled preacher was Rev. Asaph Graves. There are now 4 churches in town.⁵

PARISH⁶—was formed from Mexico, March 20, 1828. It is an interior town, a little s. e. of the center of the co. Its surface is undulating, but considerably broken by ravines, and in some parts rough and stony. The streams are Salmon Creek and its branches. The valley in the w. part is 2-46 feet above Lake Ontario, and the e. summits are 25 to 50 feet higher. The soil consists of clay, sand, and gravel, and is moderately fertile. Less than half of the town is under cultivation. There are 12 sawmills, 4 shingle factories, and other manufacturing establishments in town. Parishville, (Parish p. o.), on Salmon Creek, in the w. part, contains 1 church and 34 houses. The first settlement was made in 1804, by Thomas Nutting, Eliada Orton, Jonathan Bedell, Amos Williams, and Rev. Gamaliel Barnes.⁷ There are 2 churches in town; M. E. and Bap.

REDFIELD—was taken from Mexico, as part of Oneida co., March 14, 1800.⁸ It is the n. e. corner town of the co. Its surface is hilly in the s., but in the n. it spreads out into a high, rolling plateau 800 to 1,000 feet above tide. A wide intervalle extends along the course of Salmon River, which stream drains nearly the whole town. The underlying rock is gray limestone, and the soil upon it is generally a thin and moderately fertile gravelly loam. The soil of the intervalle is a deep, sandy loam of good quality. The greater part of the town is still unsettled, and the uplands are frosty and forbidding regions. Center Square, (Redfield p. o.), situated on Salmon River, in the s. part of the town, contains 2 churches and about 30 houses. Greenborough is a p. o. in the n. e. part. The settlement of the town was commenced in 1798, by immigrants mostly from Conn.⁹ The first church (Cong.) was organized with 19 members in 1802, by Rev. Joshua Johnson. There are now 2 churches in the town; Cong. and M. E.

transportation ranging from 10 to 20 cents per barrel from Salina to Chicago. This price for freight is much less than it is from St. Clair River to Chicago, less than half the distance, illustrating the fact that the demand for up freights is at the great receiving point of down freights.

² Among the early settlers were Nathan Nelson and Beckwith, in 1804; Eleazar Perry, in 1805; Jonathan Buel and Jacob Thorpe, in 1806; and Daniel Robinson, in 1809. The first birth was that of Thomas Jefferson Rice, in 1801; the first marriage, that of Augustus Ford and Miss Rice, in 1800; and the first death, that of an infant child of Asa Rice, in 1798.

³ There are in the town 8 sawmills, 3 shingle and stave factories, 2 gristmills, and 2 tanneries.

⁷ Named from David Parish, who purchased the town before its settlement.

RICHLAND—was formed from Williamstown, as part of Oneida co., Feb. 20, 1807. Orwell was taken off in 1817, Sandy Creek and Albion in 1825, a part of Mexico in 1836, and a part of Orwell in 1844. It lies upon the shore of Lake Ontario, n. of the center of the co. The surface is generally level or gently rolling, broken by the deep ravines of the streams. The e. part is 250 feet above Lake Ontario, and Pulaski Village is 131 feet above,—giving to the town a decided westerly inclination. The principal streams are Salmon River,¹ Deer and Sandstone Creeks; and upon each of them are falls, furnishing a large amount of water-power.² Spring Brook is a small stream flowing from several large springs in the e. part of the town, and in the course of 3 mi. falls 150 feet. The springs are perpetual, and rather increase than diminish in summer; so that the power furnished is abundant and constant. The mouth of Salmon River furnishes a good harbor. The underlying rock is the Lorraine shales; the soil is a sandy loam, with some clay in the s. w. part, and is generally fertile. Pulaski, (p. v.) on Salmon River, about 3 mi. from its mouth, is the half shire of the co. and was incorp. April 26, 1832. It contains 4 churches, a courthouse, an academy,³ a newspaper office, a bank, and several manufacturing establishments.⁴ Pop. 1,168. Port Ontario, (p. v.) on Salmon River, near its mouth, contains about 50 houses; and Holmesville (South Richland p. o.) 1 church and 20 houses; Selkirk, at the mouth of Salmon River, contains a church, a U. S. lighthouse, and 30 dwellings. Richland Station, on the W. & R. R. R., is in the e. part of the town. The first settlement was made near the mouth of Salmon River, in 1801, by Nathan Tuttle, of Canada, and Nathan Wilcox and Albert Bohannon, from Rome.⁵ The first church (Cong.) was organized Jan. 22, 1811; and the Rev. Oliver Leavitt was the first-settled pastor. There are 7 churches in town.⁶

SANDY CREEK—was formed from Richland, March 24, 1825. It lies on the shore of Lake Ontario, upon the n. border of the co. Its surface is rolling and has a westerly inclination, its e. border being elevated about 500 feet above the surface of the lake. It is drained by Little Sandy Creek and many smaller streams, all of which have rapid currents and are frequently interrupted by falls, which furnish a good supply of water-power. Great Sandy Bay, a portion of Lake Ontario, nearly landlocked, lies principally within the limits of this town. The soil consists of gravelly loam and disintegrated shale, and is generally productive. Lumber is the principal manufactured product.⁷ Washingtonville, (Sandy Creek p. o.), situated on Little Sandy Creek, 4 mi. from its mouth, is a station on the W. & R. R. R. Pop. 423. The first settlement was made in 1804, by Joseph Hurd and Elias Howe, from Oneida co.⁸ The first church (Presb.) was organized in 1817, by Rev. Mr. Dunlap. There are now 3 churches in town.⁹

SCHROEPEL¹⁰—was taken from Volney, April 4, 1832. It lies in the s. part of the co., in the n. e. angle formed by the junction of Oneida and Oswego Rivers. The surface is level or gently rolling. It is watered by Scott and Fish Creeks and many smaller streams. A swamp extends northward from the mouth of Fish Creek to the n. border of the town, and is a half mile to a mile in width. The soil is a rich sandy loam and clay. The underlying rocks, which belong to the Clinton group, nowhere crop out in the town. There are 10 sawmills, 4 shingle mills, and other manufactures in town. Phenix,¹¹ (p. v.), on Oswego River, 2 mi. below Three River Point, was incorp. in 1848. It contains 3 churches and a newspaper office. Pop. 1,164. Gilbertsville, (Gilberts Mills p. o.), in the n. part, contains 2 churches. Pop. 442. Hinmansville, (p. v.), in the extreme w. part, on Oswego River, contains 25 houses; and Pennelville,

Drake, Eli Strong, Benj. Austin, Samuel Brooks, Eliakim Simonds, Nathan Cook, Ebenezer Chamberlain, David Harmon, and Elisha Ingraham. The first birth was that of Ezra L. H. Chamberlain; and the first death, that of an infant son of Dr. Alden, in 1801. The first saw and grist mills were built in 1801; and the first inn was opened the same year, by David Butler. The first school was taught in 1802, by Rev. Joshua Johnson.

⁴ 2 paper mills, 4 flouring and grist mills, 3 sawmills, and 3 tanneries.

Benj. Winch, in 1806; and the first store, by John Meacham, in 1810. The first sawmill was built by John Hoar, in 1806; and the first gristmill, by Jeremiah Matthewson, in 1808. Milly Ellis taught the first school, in the summer of 1808.

⁷ There are 11 sawmills, 2 shingle mills, 2 gristmills, and 2 tanneries in town.

⁸ In 1805 Asel Hurd and 5 families from Vt., by the name of Meacham, settled in town. The first sawmill was built by Wm. Skinner and Joseph Hurd, in 1804; and the first gristmill, by James Hinman, in 1806. Simeon Meacham kept the first store and tavern, in 1806; and the first school was taught at the house of George Harding, by his daughter, in 1807-08. The first birth was that of Laura Hurd; the first marriage, that of Henry Patterson and Lucy Meacham, in 1806; and the first death, that of Mrs. Elias Howe, in 1807.

⁹ Presb., M. E., and Bap.—all at Washingtonville.

¹¹ Named in honor of Alex. Phenix.

(p. v.,) near the center, 15. Settlement was commenced by Abram Paddock, in 1800.¹ The first church (M. E.) was organized in 1826. There are now 5 churches in town.²

SCRIBA³—was taken from "Fredericksburgh" (now Volney) as part of Oneida co., April 5, 1811. It lies upon the shore of Lake Ontario and the e. bank of Oswego River. Its surface is rolling, the ridges extending n. and s., and elevated 100 to 180 feet above the lake. It is drained by Black Creek, flowing s., and Nine Mile, Four Mile, and Wine Creeks, flowing n. Upon several of these streams are valuable mill privileges. The soil is a gravelly and sandy loam, stony in places, and only moderately fertile. Scriba Corners, (Scriba p. o.,) near the center of the town, contains 1 church and about 40 houses. North Scriba is a p. o. The first settlement was made by Henry Everts, in 1798.⁴ There are 3 churches in town.⁵

VOLNEY⁶—was formed—by the name of "Fredericksburgh"—from Mexico as part of Oneida co., March 21, 1806. Its name was changed April 5, 1811. Scriba was taken off in 1811, and Schroepfel and Palermo in 1832. It lies upon the e. bank of Oswego River, s. w. of the center of the co. Its surface is undulating, with high, steep banks bordering upon the river. The ridges are 50 to 100 feet above the valleys and 100 to 200 feet above Oswego River. The red sandstone crops out on the bank of the river and is extensively quarried for building stone. The falls upon the river furnish an immense water-power.⁷ The soil is a sandy and gravelly loam. Fulton,⁸ (p. v.,) on Oswego River, at the Oswego Falls,⁹ was incorp. April 29, 1835. It contains 6 churches, the Falley Seminary,¹⁰ 2 newspaper offices, and a large number of manufacturing establishments. Pop. 3,192. Seneca Hill, (p. v.,) on Oswego River, in the n. w. corner of the town, contains 50 dwellings and the largest flouring establishment in the State.¹¹ Volney Corners, (Volney p. o.,) near the center, contains 18 houses. The present village of Fulton became the seat of a floating population in the early part of the eighteenth century; but permanent settlement was not commenced until 1793.¹² The first church (Presb.) was organized in 1814; and the Rev. Mr. Leavitt was the first settled minister. There are 9 churches in town.¹³

WEST MONROE—was formed from Coastantia, March 21, 1839. It lies upon the n. shore of Oneida Lake, s. e. of the center of the co. The surface is level and marshy in the s., and rolling, broken, and stony in the n. A marsh on the bank of the lake covers an area of more than 1,000 acres, and a considerable portion of it produces cranberries. In the valleys between the ridges, in the n. part of the town, are several smaller marshes. Red sandstone, the underlying rock, crops out in this town and furnishes a plentiful supply of valuable building stone. Bog iron ore is found in the n. part; and it is said that traces of lead and silver have also been found. The soil is a medium quality of clay, sandy and gravelly loam. West Monroe and Union Settlement are p. offices. The first settlement was made in 1806, by Martin Owens, Abel and Joseph B. Ames, Ebenezer Loomis, and Sylvanus Allen.¹⁴ The first church (Presb.) was organized in 1843.¹⁵

WILLIAMSTOWN—was formed from Mexico, as part of Oneida co., March 24, 1804. Richland was taken off in 1807, and Amboy in 1830. It lies near the center of the e. border of the co. The surface is undulating in the s., but broken and stony in the w., and moderately hilly in the e. It is drained by Fish Creek, flowing into Oneida Lake, and the head branches of Salmon

¹ Thomas Vickery and — La Hommedieu settled in 1807; and Wm. Miles in 1808. The first birth was that of Joseph Vickery, Sept. 11, 1807; and the first marriage, that of John Lemnier and Sally Winter. The first sawmill was erected by H. W. Schroepfel, in 1819; and the first gristmill, by A. & H. Gilbert, the same year. The first store was kept by Andrus Gilbert, in 1821; and the first inn, by Alex. Phoenix, in 1828. Horatio Sweet taught the first school, at Three River Point, in 1813.

² M. E., Cong., Bap., and F. W. Bap.

³ Named in honor of George Scriba, the original proprietor of this and several of the adjoining towns.

⁴ Asabel Bush and Samuel Tiffany settled in town in 1801; Wm. Burt and Hiel Stone in 1805; and Dr. Deodatus Clark in 1807. The first birth was that of Henry Everts, jr.: the first marriage, that of John Masters and Eliza Baldwin, in 1806; and the first death, that of a child of Hiram Warner. The first inn was kept by Hiel Stone, in 1806; and the first store, by Orrin Stone and Aaron Parkhurst, in 1819. Benj. Robinson, from Manlius, taught the first school, in 1804.

⁶ Named in honor of Volney, the French author, who visited the town in 1808, while on a tour through the U. S.

⁸ Named in honor of Robert Fulton. It was originally called "Oswego Falls."

⁹ The portage at this place was the only interruption in the internal water communication between Schenectady and the ports upon Lake Ontario and the St. Lawrence River, after the construction of the canal connecting Wood Creek with the Mohawk River, by the Western Navigation Co., in 1796.

¹⁰ The Fulton Female Seminary was incorp. in 1836, and in 1842 it was changed to the Fulton Academy. In 1849 it received a donation of $3,000 from Mrs. M. E. Falley and assumed the name of the Falley Seminary. At the same time it came under the charge of the Black River Conference of the M. E. Church.

¹¹ It is now a private institution.

¹⁴ M. E., Presb., Prot. E., Cong., Bap., Prot. Meth., Wes. Meth., and Union.

¹⁶ The census reports 2 churches; Presb. and F. W. Bap.

River. The surface of Fish Creek at Williamstown Mills, in the s. e. part, is 354 feet above Lake Ontario, and the hills in the n. e. are 200 to 300 feet higher. The greater part of the town is yet unsettled. The soil is a moderately fertile sandy or gravelly loam. Lumber and leather are the principal manufactured products. Williamstown, (p. v.) on Fish Creek, in the s. part, is a station on the W. & R. R. R. Pop. 240. Kasoag, (p. v.), a little w. of the center, is a station on the W. & R. R. R. and contains about 25 houses. The first settlement was made in 1801, by Gilbert Taylor, Solomon Goodwin, Ichabod Comstock, Dennis Orton, Henry Williams, and Henry Filkins.¹ The first church (Cong.) was founded in 1805, by Rev. Wm. Stone.²

¹ The first marriage was that of Joel Rathburn and Miss P. Alden in Sept. 1802; and the first death, that of Mrs. Sarah Orton in the spring of 1804. Isaac Alden opened the first inn, in 1803, built the first sawmill, the same year, and the first gristmill, in 1804. The first store was opened in 1806, by Danl. Furman. The first school was taught by Philander Alden, in 1805.

CHAUTAUQUE COUNTY.

THIS county was formed from Genesee, March 11, 1808. It lies upon the shore of Lake Erie, and is the s. w. corner co. of the State. It is centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains — sq. mi. The surface is mostly a hilly and rolling upland. A bluff, with a mean elevation of 20 ft., extends along the lake; and from its summit the land spreads out into an undulating region, gradually rising for a distance of 3 or 4 mi. This comparatively level tract is bordered by the declivities of a hilly upland, which occupies the center and s. part of the co. The highest summits are 1,000 to 1,200 feet above Lake Erie and 1,800 to 2,000 ft. above tide. The uplands are broken by several deep valleys, the principal of which are those of Chautauque Lake and Connewango Creek. The summits of the hills, 4 to 6 mi. s. of the lake shore, form the watershed which divides the waters of Lake Erie from those of Alleghany River. The declivities bordering upon the valleys are in many places too steep for profitable cultivation.

Connewango Creek, flowing along the e. border and receiving Cassadaga Creek and Chautauque Outlet, is the largest stream in the co. The other principal streams are Cattaraugus, Silver, Walnut, Canadaway, Little Cattaraugus, and Twenty Mile Creeks, flowing into Lake Erie; French and Little Brocken Straw Creeks, tributaries of Alleghany River; and Prendergast Creek, flowing into Chautauque Lake. Besides these and their tributaries are numerous smaller streams flowing directly into Lake Erie. Chautauque Lake is a beautiful sheet of water, 18 mi. long and 1 to 3 mi. wide, occupying a deep valley in the highland region about 10 mi. s. e. of Lake Erie.¹ It is 726 feet above Lake Erie and 1,291 ft. above tide. The hills that surround it are 600 to 800 ft. above its surface. Its outlet forms a branch of Connewango Creek, which latter stream is a tributary of Alleghany River. Several other small lakes are located among the highlands, the principal of which are Bear, Cassadaga, Mud, and Finleys Lakes, all 700 to 900 ft. above Lake Erie.

The rocks of this co. belong to the Portage and Chemung groups,—the former occupying the n. half of the co. and the latter the s. half. The summits of the highest hills in the s. are crowned with conglomerate, belonging to the Catskill group and affording the only good building stone in the s. part of the co. The sandstones of the Portage group are quarried to some extent in the n. part. Lime is obtained in limited quantities from limestone boulders and marl beds. One of the most peculiar geological features of the co. is the numerous springs of carburetted hydrogen gas found in various localities and especially along the shore of Lake Erie. It comes from the shales of the Portage group, and at various places is turned to profitable account.

The soil upon the uplands is principally clay mixed with disintegrated shale, generally known as flat gravel; and in the valleys it is a fine quality of sandy and gravelly loam mixed with alluvium. Along the lake shore is a strip of productive clay loam. The uplands are arable to their summits, but are generally much better adapted to pasturage than tillage. The various branches of agriculture form the leading pursuits of the people. Stock and wool growing, and dairying, are largely and successfully carried on. Spring grains and fruits are also largely produced.

Manufactures are few and unimportant and are chiefly confined to the local wants of the people. Commerce—an important item in the business and wealth of the co.—is chiefly concentrated at Dunkirk, which is at once an excellent harbor upon the lake and the w. terminus of the Erie R. R.

The county seat is located at Mayville, in the town of Chautauque, at the head of Chautauque Lake.² The courthouse is a fine brick edifice, erected in 1834, at a cost of $11,000. The jail is a brick building, with stone cells, on the opposite side of the street from the courthouse. The clerk's office is a fireproof brick building contiguous to the courthouse.³

² This co. was united with Niagara from the date of its organization in 1808 until 1811. The first court was held June 25, 1811. The commissioners to locate the co. buildings were Jonas

³ In 1858 the supervisors authorized the erection of a new clerk's office at a cost of $2,500.

The average number of inmates is 130, supported at a weekly cost of 44 cts. each. A school is taught 6 to 8 months in the year. The buildings are poor and dilapidated and are destitute of proper accommodations and means of ventilation.

The N. Y. & Erie R. R. extends through Hanover and Sheridan and terminates at Dunkirk. This road opens a direct communication with New York, and, taken in connection with the connecting railroads and vessels upon the lake, is one of the most important of the great thoroughfares between the Atlantic seaboard and the Valley of the Mississippi. The amount of freight carried over the road is immense; and the business connected with it gives employment to thousands of men. The Lake Shore R. R. extends along the lake through Hanover, Sheridan, Pomfret, Portland, Westfield, and Ripley. This forms another link in the great chain of Western travel, and connects with the Erie R. R. at Dunkirk and with the N. Y. Central at Buffalo. The proposed Erie and New York City R. R. extends through the s. part of the co., connecting Erie, Penn., with the N. Y. & Erie R. R. at Great Valley.¹

Nine weekly newspapers are now published in the co.²

In 1782 a party of British and Indians, with a train of artillery and other munitions of war, spent the months of June and July around Chautauque Lake in constructing canoes and making other preparations to navigate Alleghany River in a contemplated attack upon "Fort Pitt," near

¹ The surveys of this r. r. have been made, and considerable work has been done in grading.

² The Chautauque Gazette, the first paper published in the co., was started at Fredonia in Jan. 1817, by Jas. Percival. It was afterward issued by Carpenter & Hull, and by Jas. Hull, until 1822, when it was suspended. In 1823 it was revived by Jas. Hull, and continued until 1826, when it was united with the People's Gazette and its name was changed to

The Fredonia Gazette. It was issued a short time by Hull & Snow, when it was removed to Dunkirk by Mr. Hull and changed to

The Dunkirk Gazette. In a few months it was removed to Westfield and united with the Chautauque Phoenix. The People's Gazette was started at Forestville in 1824 by Wm. S. Snow. In 1826 it was removed to Fredonia and united with the Chautauque Gazette.

The Western Democrat and Literary Inquirer was started at Fredonia in 1835 by Wm. Verrinder. It was successively issued by Randall, Crosby & Co. and Arba K. Maynard, and by the latter it was removed to Van Buren Harbor in 1837 and issued as

The Van Buren Times. It soon after passed into the hands of W. H. Cutler, and was continued about 2 years.

The Western Farmer was started at Westfield in 1835 by Bliss & Knight, and was continued about 2 years.

The Settler was issued a short time in 1840 from the Fredonia Censor office by E. Winchester.

The Westfield Advocate was commenced in May, 1841, and was discontinued in a few months.

The Westfield Messenger was started in Aug. 1841, by C. J. J. & T. Ingersoll. In 1851 it passed into the hands of Edgar W. Dennison and was changed to

The Westfield Transcript. In 1856 Buck & Wilson became its proprietors, and continued it about 1 year.

The Panama Herald was started at Panama in Aug. 1846, by Dean & Hurlbut. Stewart & Pray afterward became proprietors, and continued it until 1848.

The Frontier Express was started in June, 1846, by Cutler, Cottle & Perham. In 1849 it was changed to

The Fredonia Express, and was published by J. P. Cobb & Co., and afterward by T. A. Osborn & Co. In 1850 it was changed to

The Chautauque Union, and was published a short time by E. F. Foster.

The Liberty Star was started at Jamestown in 1847 by Harvey A. Smith. In 1849 it passed into the hands of Adolphus Fletcher and was changed to

The Northern Citizen. In 1853 John W. Fletcher became proprietor; and in 1855 it was changed to

The Chautauque Democrat, under which name it is now issued by Adolphus Fletcher and Jas. Parker.

The Silver Creek Mail was started at Silver Creek in 1848 by John C. Van Duzen. In 1852 it was changed to

The Home Register, and was published by Jas. Long. In 1854 Samuel Wilson became proprietor, and changed it to

The Dunkirk Press and Argus, and is now issued by Howard & Young.

Pittsburgh. Their plan was to build a dam across the outlet of the lake and descend the river upon the flood so created. The party finally returned without attempting the project.

The first settlement in the co. was made at the mouth of Cattaraugus Creek in 1797, by Amos Sottle.¹ Soon after making the first improvements, Sottle left, and returned in 1801, with Mr. Sidney and Capt. Rosecrantz. At the time of the first exploration of the co. the only Indian settlement was on Connewango Creek, within the limits of the present town of Carroll. In 1802, Gen. Paine, agent for the State of Connecticut, opened a wagon road from Buffalo to Chautauque Creek, to enable emigrants to reach the Conn. Reserve lands in Ohio. This road was soon after finished to the Penn. line. In 1804 the town of Chautauque was formed, and embraced the entire territory now included within the limits of the co. In April of the succeeding year the first town meeting was held, at which John McMahan was elected supervisor, and John McMahan, David Eason, and Perry G. Ellsworth were appointed the first justices of the peace.² In 1806 the first mail route was established between Buffalo and Erie, Penn.³ The lands in the co. were included in the Holland Purchase. A tract of 60,000 acres in the s. e. part was sold to Levi Beardsley, James O. Morse, and Alvan Stewart. In 1835 the Holland Land Company sold their outstanding contracts and unsold lands to Trumbull Cary & Co., of Batavia; and the new proprietors imposed such conditions upon the extension of contracts that the settlers rose en masse and demolished the land office at Mayville and burned the records in the public highway.⁴ In 1838 the interests of the co. were transferred to Duer, Morrison, & Seward, and the troubles were satisfactorily settled.

ARKWRIGHT—was formed from Pomfret and Villenova, April 30, 1829. It is an interior town, lying n. e. of the center of the co. Its surface is an elevated upland, broken and hilly in the s. w., and rolling or moderately hilly in the n. e. The highest summit—near the center, said to be the highest land in the co.—is 1,000 to 1,200 ft. above Lake Erie. The principal streams are Canadaway, Connewango, and Walnut Creeks. Mud Lake, on the e. border, covers an area of about 10 acres. The soil is a clay and gravelly loam. Upon Canadaway Creek, in the s. w. part, is a fine cascade with 22 ft. perpendicular fall. Arkwright Summit is a p. o. in the e. part of the town. The first settlement was made in the n. w. corner, by Byron T. Orton, Benj. Perry, and Augustus Burnham, from the eastern part of the State, in 1807.⁵ The first religious meeting was held at the house of Aaron Wilcox, in 1810, by Rev. John Spencer. The first church (Bap.) was organized by Elder Thos. Grennel, in 1820.⁶

BUSTI⁷—was formed from Ellicott and Harmony, April 16, 1823. It lies upon the s. border of the co., e. of the center. Its surface is hilly and broken. It is drained by several small streams flowing into Chautauque Lake, which lies along the n. border, and by others flowing e. into Connewango Creek. The soil is a clay and gravelly loam. Busti Corners (Busti p. o.) contains a church, gristmill, and sawmill. Pop. 201. The first settlement was made on Lot 61, in 1810, by John L. Frank, from Herkimer co.⁸ The first church (Cong.) was formed Aug. 30, 1819; Rev. Lemuel Smith was the first minister.⁹

The first child born was John McHenry, in 1802; the first marriage, that of James Montgomery and Sarah Taylor, June 30, 1805; and the first death, that of Edward McHenry, drowned by the upsetting of a small boat on Lake Erie, in 1803. John McMahan erected the first sawmill and gristmill, in 1804, on and near the mouth of Chautauque Creek. Edward McHenry kept the first inn, in 1802, and Jas. Atkins the first store, in 1808, at Westfield Village. The first school was taught by Wm. Murray, in 1803.

⁸ The census reports 7 churches; 2 M. E., Presb., Prot. E., Wes. Meth., Bap., and Univ.

HAMILTON COUNTY.

This county was formed from Montgomery, Feb. 12, 1816; but its independent organization has never been fully completed.¹ It occupies the central portions of the great wilderness region in the n. e. part of the State; is centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains — sq. mi. Its surface is a rocky, mountainous, and hilly upland and is still mostly covered with the original forests. The highlands are divided into several ranges, generally distinct, but in many places sending out spurs that interlock with each other, and all extending n. e. and s. w. The Schroon Range—called in Fulton co. the Mayfield Mts.—crosses the s. e. corner of Hope. This range ends upon Lake Champlain at Crown Point, the highest point being Mt. Crane, in Warren co. The Baquet Range, parallel to the first, extends through the co. between Wells and Lake Pleasant. This range terminates upon Lake Champlain at Split Rock, the highest peak being Dix Peak, in Essex co. The Adirondack Range, next n., extends from the Mohawk, at Little Falls, n. e. through Morehouse, Arietta, Long Lake, Gilman, and Wells, ending at Trembleau Point, on Lake Champlain, Mt. Marcy being the highest peak, and the highest point in the State. Its course is in a wave or undulating line occupying a space of 4 to 6 mi. in width. Next n. is the Au Sable Range, extending n. of the Fulton chain of lakes and Long and Racket Lakes. The highest points are Mt. Emmons, in this co., and Mt. Seward, in Franklin co. Spurs from this range occupy the entire n. part of the co. and extend into St. Lawrence and Herkimer cos.²

Within the valleys between these mountain ranges are several remarkable chains of lakes, many of them connected by considerable streams and all affording a large amount of boat navigation. These lakes are generally long and narrow, are bordered by steep banks and high mountain peaks. Their waters are clear and cold, and they form the most interesting features of the landscape. Although flowing in different directions, separated by high mountains, and extending over an area of more than 60 mi., they have a nearly uniform elevation.³ The first chain on the s., commencing in Stratford, Fulton co., includes several small ponds in the s. e. corner of Hope, several ponds in Johnsburgh, Warren co., and Schroon and Paradox Lakes in Essex co. The second chain embraces Jerseyfield Lake and several others in Herkimer co., flowing s., Piscoco, Round, Spy, and Ox Bow Lakes, Lake Pleasant, and a great number of smaller ones, all flowing into Sacondaga River. The third chain, lying between the two highest ranges of mountains, is composed of lakes less in extent than either of the other chains. It comprises Woodhull Reservoir and about 20 small lakes, principally in Herkimer co., flowing into Black River; a large number of small ponds in the immediate vicinity, flowing into West Canada Creek; Indian, Square, Beaver, Wilmurt, and a dozen smaller ones, in Hamilton co., flowing into Black and Indian Rivers; and the Indian Lakes, flowing into the Hudson. In Essex co. this chain embraces Lakes Rich, Sanford, and Henderson, and numerous others, lying near the foot of Mt. Marcy. The fourth or n. chain is the most extensive of all. It comprises Brantingham and other Lakes in Lewis co., flowing into Moose and Black Rivers; the Fulton chain and about 20 other lakes in the n. part of Herkimer, respectively flowing into Beaver and Moose Rivers; Cranberry Lake and many others in the s. part of St. Lawrence, flowing into Oswegatchie and Grasse Rivers; Tupper's, Racket, Forked, and Long Lakes, and 50 others, in Hamilton co., and a large number in Franklin, flowing into Racket River; St. Regis Lake, Osgoods Pond, and numerous others, into St. Regis River; Ragged Lake, Round and Ingraham Ponds, into Salmon River; Lake Placid, into the Au Sable; the Chateaugay Lakes, into Chateaugay River; and the Chazy Lakes, into Chazy River. All these last named lakes are in Hamilton, Franklin, ¹ Named in honor of Alexander Hamilton. The territory was included in Herkimer co. Feb. 16, 1791, but was re-annexed to Montgomery March 31, 1797. It can complete its organization when it has a sufficient population to entitle it to a member of Assembly. It remained appended to Montgomery until 1838, when it was annexed to Fulton on the erection of the latter co. Courts were established in 1837.

² This region was called by the natives Conghsarage, "the dismal wilderness." The following entry on a map published about the period of the Revolution, or soon after, gives the prevailing opinion of that day concerning these lands:—"Through this tract of land runs a chain of mountains, which, from Lake Champlain on one side and the river St. Lawrence on the other side, show their tops always white with snow; but altho' this one unfavorable circumstance has hitherto secured it from the claws of the herry land jobbers, yet no doubt it is as fertile as the land on the east side of the lake, and will in future furnish a comfortable retreat for many industrious families."

Essex, and Clinton cos., in close proximity to each other. The streams, forming the outlets of the lakes, are mostly small. The whole region being a mountainous plateau higher than the surrounding country, the streams that rise here flow in all directions and form tributaries of the St. Lawrence, Lake Champlain, the Hudson, Mohawk, and Black Rivers. Several of the rivers have the same name as the lakes which respectively form their headwaters; as the Racket, Chazy, and Chateaugay.¹

This whole region is primitive, the rock being principally gneiss. Calciferous sandstone and Trenton limestone are found upon Sacondaga River. White limestone is also found in several localities. Peat is found in great abundance in the vales, or natural meadows, which extend along the valleys. Iron ore and graphite are both found,—though no surveys have been made to ascertain their extent. A large amount of labor has been expended in mining for silver; with what success is unknown. The soil is a light, sandy loam, and, except in the valleys, is not susceptible of profitable cultivation. The mountain sides are covered with a thin growth of forest trees, and when cleared seem incapable of supporting vegetation. The valleys at first are productive, but, being deficient in lime, as soon as the vegetable mold is exhausted they become barren.

The county seat is located at Sageville, in the town of Lake Pleasant.² The co. buildings, consisting of a courthouse, jail, and clerk's office, were erected in 1840. Each town supports its own poor, and the co. poor are provided for by the Superintendent at the most convenient place. There has never been a paper printed within the co.³ The public works are entirely prospective.⁴ Most of the territory of the co. is included in the Totten and Crossfield Purchase of 1773.⁵ Grants within the limits of the co. were made in colonial times to Sir Jeffrey Amherst, Henry Balfour, and Thomas Palmer. Arthursboro, in Morehouse, was granted to Arthur Noble. The first settlement was made about 1790.

ARIETTA⁶—was formed from Lake Pleasant, May 13, 1836. A part of Long Lake was taken off in 1837. It extends from the s. w. border northward nearly across the co., a little w. of the center. Its surface is much broken, and it contains a great number of wild, picturesque lakes. Of these, Racket and Forked Lakes, in the n. part, and Piseco,⁷ in the s., are the most important. The principal streams are the w. and s. branches of Sacondaga River. A considerable amount of lumbering is carried on.⁸ Piseco, formerly a p. o., and once a busy village of some 250 inhabitants, is now nearly deserted, and contains but 4 families.⁹ There is no p. o. in town. The first settler was Shadrack Dunning, at the e. end of Piseco Lake, in 1827, and David Woolworth, in the s. part, about the same time. Rensselaer Van Rensselaer, of Albany, settled in 1834.¹⁰

GILMAN¹¹—was formed from Wells, April 23, 1839. A part was annexed to Wells in 1858. It is an interior town, extending in a long, narrow strip near the e. border of the co. Its surface is much broken by mountains and diversified by small lakes. Several of the highest peaks in the co. are in this town; but their elevations have never been ascertained. It is the least populous town in the State. Gilman (p. o.) is in the s. border. Most of the settlers are in the s. part, a few only living on the extreme n. border, quite isolated from their fellow townsmen. Philip Rhineland, a wealthy merchant of New York, began the first settlement.¹²

² The first co. officers were Richard Peck, First Judge; Saml. Call, County Clerk; James Harris, Sheriff; G. R. Parburt, District Attorney; and Thos. H. Kline, Surrogate.

³ The Hamilton County Sentinel, printed at Johnstown and edited at Sageville, was started in 1845 by Clark & Thuyer. It was subsequently in the hands of Clark & Holmes, and is now issued by Clark & Fish.

Hall, in July, 1773. It was estimated to contain 800,000 acres.—Council Minutes, XXXI, p. 31.

⁶ It was surveyed by Ebenezer Jenson and associates.

⁷ Named by Rensselaer Van Rensselaer, in honor of his mother.

⁸ Named by Joshua Brown, a surveyor, from an Indian chief of his acquaintance. It is about 5 mi. long and 1 to 1½ wide. It is one of the most picturesque sheets of water in the co. The mountains around it are over 500 feet above its surface.

¹¹ Eli Road, of Saratoga, settled on the beech flats s. e. of Piseco Lake; R. Dibble and Seth Whitman near the foot of the lake; and Zadeck Ross, from Clifton Park, s. of the lake. The first birth was that of Miss M. M. Dunning, Aug. 28, 1829; the first marriage, that of Amos Dunning and Ann Eliza Plummer; and the first death, that of Seth Whitman. A school was taught by Ann E. Plummer, in 1833.

HOPE¹—was formed from Wells, April 15, 1818. A part of Lake Pleasant was annexed May 10, 1847. It lies upon Sacondaga River, in the s.e. corner of the co. Its surface is broken and mountainous. It is the most populous town in the co., and the settlements are chiefly in the e. part. The w. portion is still a wilderness, known only to hunters. The mountains are very irregular; but in general they extend upon both sides of the river, and, as usual in this region, have their longest slope to the s.w. The principal tributary of the Sacondaga is East Stony Creek; and the main range of mountains lies between this stream and the river.² Lumbering and tanning are extensively carried on. Hope Center (p.o.) is a hamlet. Hope Falls is a p.o. Settlement was begun in 1790, in the s. border of the town.³

INDIAN LAKE—was formed from Gilman, Long Lake, and Wells, Nov. 15, 1858. It lies upon the e. border of the co., n. of the center.⁴

LAKE PLEASANT—was formed from Johnstown, Fulton co., May 26, 1812. Parts of Stafford, Johnstown, and Salisbury were annexed at the time of the formation of Hamilton co. Morehouse was taken off in 1835, Arietta in 1836, and a part of Long Lake in 1837. A part was annexed to Hope in 1847, and a part to Wells in 1858. It is the central town of the co., and includes a long tract extending from n. to s. to within a few mi. of each extremity of the co. Its surface is broken and mountainous, and most of it is still a wilderness. Lake Pleasant, from which it derives its name, is about 4 mi. long by 1 wide. Round Lake, $\frac{1}{2}$ mi. from this, is very irregular in form, and about $1\frac{1}{2}$ mi. across in the widest part.⁵ The Eckford chain of lakes, in the n. part, are in the midst of wild mountain solitudes. The upper of these is named Janet Lake.⁶ The principal streams in the s. are the n. and w. branches of the Sacondaga, and in the n. the Racket and its tributaries. A mine of graphite has been opened 4 mi. n. of Sageville. Limestoæ mixed with silice and mica, from which quicklime is obtained, is found s. of Lake Pleasant. Lumbering and shingle making are carried on to a considerable extent. Lake Pleasant, (p.o.), at the foot of the lake, contains a hotel and 2 dwellings. Sageville⁷ (p.v.) is situated on a beautiful elevation 50 feet above Lake Pleasant⁸ and Round Lake, about one-fourth of a mi. distant from each. It contains the co. buildings, a large hotel, a church, and several dwellings. Settlement was commenced about 1795, by Joseph Spier, of Columbia co.⁹ Meetings were first held by Rev. Elisha Yale; and the first settled minister was Rev. Ryan Bristol.

LONG LAKE—was formed from Arietta, Lake Pleasant, Morehouse, and Wells, May 4, 1837. It extends across the n. end of the co., and is named from the principal lake within its borders. Its surface is very broken, and numerous small lakes are scattered through its forests. Settlement was begun in Township 21, a few years before the date of its organization.¹⁰ There is no p.o. in town.

MOREHOUSE¹¹—was formed from Lake Pleasant, April 13, 1835. A part of Long Lake was taken off in 1837. It extends along the w. border of the co., from the s. extremity to Long Lake.

a costly mansion on Elm Lake, in Township 9, several mi. distant from neighbors. He remained here until the death of his wife, in 1818 or '19, and soon after, being struck with paralysis, was obliged to return to New York. The property, after repeated sales, is now owned by Dr. Elliott, an oculist of New York City. Gilman and his sons were the next settlers. John Carter, Andrew Morrison, Samuel Johnson, jr., Wm. B. Peck, Wm. Orcutt, and others were early settlers. Mrs. Rhinelander was the first person that died. Susan Gilman taught the first school, in 1823. No inn has ever been licensed in town.

² These mountains are entirely primitive, and incline to the hypssthene and feldspathic varieties.

⁴ This town has been formed since the statistics were collected; and its description and history are included in those of the towns from which it was formed.

⁶ Named from Mrs. James E. De Kay, by Dr. Emmons, while making the geological survey of the 2d district. She was the daughter of Henry Eckford, the celebrated shipbuilder, from whom the chain of lakes was named.

⁸ A few years since, Abraham R. Lawrence, of New York City, built a large hotel for summer resort at the head of Lake Pleasant. As a speculation it proved a failure.

⁹ Benj. Macomber, John Barnes, Joseph Davis, Joshua and Jonathan Rich, Jesse Callop, Caleb Nichols, Geo. Wright, Ephraim Page, Daniel Fish, Henry Burtou, Lemuel Holmes, and B. Saterlee settled in town before 1806. The first birth was that of Olivia Spier, in 1806; and the second, that of Eleanor Macomber, who died a missionary in Burmah. Geo. Wright kept the first inn. In 1806, and Wm. B. Peck the first store, in 1817. A sawmill was built by — Foster, in 1796; and a gristmill, by Joseph Spier, in 1797.

Its surface is hilly and mountainous. In the several valleys which extend across the town are numerous lakes. Jerseyfield Lake, upon the w. border, is the principal lake in the s. part. The 5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th lakes of the Fulton chain, in the n. part, discharge their waters into Moose River. Jones, Deer, Goose, and several other lakes flow into West Canada Creek. Morehouseville, in the s. part, is a p.o. The Arthurboro Patent was mostly within the limits of this town. The tract of 50,000 acres purchased by Jonathan Lawrence was also partly in this town.¹ The first settlement was commenced, under the agency of Andrew K. Morehouse, in 1833.²

WELLS³—was formed from Mayfield and Northampton, Fulton co., May 28, 1805. Hope was taken off in 1818, a part of Long Lake in 1837, and Gilman in 1839. A part of Mayfield was annexed June 19, 1812; parts of Mayfield and Northampton in 1816; and parts of Gilman and Lake Pleasant in 1858. It lies along the e. border of the co., extending nearly to the n. and s. borders. Its s. part only is inhabited, except by a few families on Indian Lake. It is intersected by mountain ranges separated by deep, narrow valleys. The highest peaks are 2,000 to 2,500 feet high and are covered by masses of naked rock. The three branches of the Sacondaga unite in the s. part, forming a large stream. Jessup and Cedar Rivers, in the n., are large streams. Indian Lake is a sheet of water about 6 mi. long; and further n. is a cluster of small lakes flowing into the Hudson. There are numerous other small lakes in other parts, known only to hunters. The soil is light and sandy. Calciferous sandstone appears in situ above Wells Village. Wells (p.v.) contains a large tannery, gristmill, sawmill, and 15 dwellings; Pickleville, one-half mi. above, contains 2 churches and 15 dwellings. Settlement began in 1798.⁴

² Mr. Morehouse bought a tract of land, built a sawmill, store, and dwelling, and came in with his family early in Aug. 1834. He began a small village 1 mi. w. of Morehouseville, called "Bethanville," but the project failed. Dennis and Henry Tucker, Theodore Marche, Ezra Combs, Jonathan Tit, Christian Weaver, Elias Rickard, J. B. Bely, and J. Bennett were early settlers. The first birth was that of a son of Wm. Baker; the first marriage, that of David Bushnell and Miss Squires; and the first death, that of a son of Christian Weaver, by a falling tree. A gristmill was first built in 1843, by John Cummings; and the first tannery, in 1854, by Henry and Theodore Larken.

³ Named from Joshua Wells, the first settler.

⁴ Joshua Wells, a native of Long Island, who came on as agent for the proprietors of Palmer's Purchase, in 1798, built the first mills. Isaac and Joshua Brown came with Wells, and kept "bachelors' hall" several summers before any families came in. Amasa Gage, Giles Vanderhoof, Nicholas Bradt, John Francisco, Elmathan Lucy, Michael Overacken, Isaliah Whitman, — Rose, and others, were early settlers. — Van Zandt kept the first store; and Platt Whitman built the first tannery, in 1826.

SCHUYLER COUNTY.

THIS county¹ was formed from Steuben, Chemung, and Tompkins, April 17, 1854. It lies upon both sides of the s. extremity of Seneca Lake; is centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains — sq. mi. Its surface is mostly an undulating and hilly upland, divided into two distinct ridges by the deep valley of Seneca Lake and its inlet. The highest summits are 600 to 1,000 ft. above Seneca Lake and 1,200 to 1,600 ft. above tide. A bluff 100 to 300 ft. high extends along the shores of the lake, too steep for profitable cultivation; but farther inland the hills are bordered by long and gradual slopes and are generally arable to their very summits. The extreme s. part of the co. assumes a more hilly and broken character. Catharines Creek, flowing into the head of Seneca Lake, is the principal stream. Its course is through a deep, narrow, and winding valley bordered by steep hillsides 400 to 600 ft. high. Upon it are numerous falls, affording abundance of water-power; and near its mouth is a marshy region of considerable extent. Meads Creek, a tributary of Chemung River, drains the s. w. corner, and Cayuta Creek the s. e. corner. The other streams are small creeks and brooks, mostly discharging their waters into Seneca Lake. A few streams take their rise along the n. e. border and flow into Cayuga Lake. Little and Mud Lakes, two smaller sheets of water along the w. border, discharge their waters through Mud Creek into Conhocton River. Cayuta Lake is a fine sheet of water, near the s. e. corner. Hector Falls, upon a small stream flowing into Seneca Lake from the e., is one of the finest cascades in the State. The rocks of this co. mostly belong to the Portage and Chemung groups,—the former occupying the n. and the latter the s. part of the co. In the deep valley along the shore of Seneca Lake, in the extreme n. part of the co., are found outcrops of Genesee slate. The only good building stone in the co. is the thin-bedded sandstone separating the thick beds of shale. In many places these rocks are covered deeply with drift deposits. The soil upon the highlands is clayey and gravelly, principally derived from the disintegration of the shales; and in many places this is underlaid by hardpan. In the valleys the soil is a gravelly loam intermixed with alluvium.

Agriculture forms the leading and almost the sole occupation of the people. Spring grains are extensively grown, and stock and wool growing and dairying are largely carried on. The climate and soil are both better adapted to pasturage than to tillage. Fruit is becoming an important article of culture, and all kinds adapted to the climate succeed well. A limited amount of manufacturing is carried on at Watkins and Havana.

In 1854, commissioners appointed to locate the co. buildings fixed upon Havana as the county seat.² The action of the commissioners was resisted by the Board of Supervisors, and by them the county seat was located at Watkins, at the head of Seneca Lake. A courthouse was erected at each village; but subsequently the courts decided in favor of the action of the commissioners, and, April 13, 1857, an act was passed by the legislature confirming the location of the county seat at Havana. This act was confirmed by the Supreme Court, April, 1859. The Board of Supervisors soon after changed the location to Watkins, and at this place the co. offices are at present located. The buildings erected at each place for a courthouse, and for a clerk's office and jail at Havana, are fine buildings, embodying nearly all modern improvements. The buildings at Havana were erected at a cost of $30,000. No poorhouse has yet been established.

The public works in the co. are the Chemung Canal, extending from the head of Seneca Lake s. through the valley of Catharines Creek, uniting with Chemung River at Elmira; the Canandaigua & Elmira R. R., extending along the w. shore of Seneca Lake to Watkins; and the Chemung R. R., extending s. from Watkins along Catharines Creek to Elmira. These roads are both leased to the N. Y. & E. R. Co.

In 1779, Sullivan's army marched through the defiles along Catharines Creek, closely pursuing the Indians, who were flying from the fatal battle of "Newtown," (now Elmira.) So great was the terror of the Indians that they neglected to defend the passes, and the American army marched unmolested through the only place where successful resistance was practicable. Upon the conclusion of peace, many of the soldiers belonging to the army returned to this region and located upon land which had been first brought to their notice during their march against the Indians. The first settlements in the co. were made on Catharines Creek, near the present site of Havana, in 1788, and on the shores of Seneca Lake, in 1790. The town of Hector belonged to the Military Tract; the towns of Catharines, Dix, and Reading, to the Watkins and Flint Purchase; and Tyrone and Orange, to the Phelps and Gorham Purchase.

CATHARINES²—was formed from "Newtown," (now Elmira, Chemung co.,) March 15, 1798. Catlin and Veteran (Chemung co.) were taken off in 1823. A part of Newfield (Tompkins co.) was annexed June 4, 1833, and a part of Cayuta was taken off, April 17, 1854. It lies upon the s. border of the co., e. of the center. Its surface is a hilly upland, broken by the deep valleys of the streams. Catharines Creek, along the w. border, flows in a deep ravine 300 to 700 feet below the summits of the hills. Cayuta Lake lies in the n. e. corner; and its outlet, Cayuta Creek, flows s. into the Susquehanna. The soil is principally a gravelly loam mixed with clay. Havana, (p. v.,) upon Catharines Creek, on the line of Dix, 3 mi. from Seneca Lake, was incorp. May 13, 1836. It contains a courthouse, jail, clerk's office, the People's College,³ 3 churches, a newspaper office, 3 flouring mills, and several manufacturing establishments.⁴ It is a canal village and a station upon the Chemung R. R. Pop. 1,290. Odessa, (p. v.,) near the center of the town, contains 2 churches, a gristmill, several sawmills, and 40 dwellings; and Catharines, (p. v.,) in the s. part, 2 churches and 25 dwellings. Alpine, (p. v.,) on the s. e. border, is partly in this town. The first settlement in town was made at Havana, in 1788, by Silas Wolcott and — Wilson.⁵ The first religious meeting was held at the house of Mr. P. Bowers, by a Presbyterian minister, in 1794.⁶

CAYUTA—was formed from Spencer, (Tioga co.,) March 20, 1824. Parts of Catharine and Erin (Chemung co.) were annexed in 1844. The town was transferred from Tioga to Tompkins co. March 22, 1832. It is the s. e. corner town in the co. Its surface is a hilly upland. Cayuta Creek flows s. e. through the town, in a narrow valley bordered by steep hillsides 300 to 600 ft. high. The soil is a clayey and gravelly loam. Cayuta (West Cayuta p. o.) contains 15 dwellings; Alpine, (p. v.,) on the n. line of the town, a flouring mill, sawmill, chair factory, and 25 dwellings. The first settlement was made in the valley of the Cayuta, near West Cayuta, in 1801, by Capt. Gabriel Ogden, Rev. David Janes, and Jos. Thomas,—the first two from Tioga co., and the last from Athens, Penn.⁷ The first religious services were held by Rev. Mr. Janes, (Bap.,) at his own house, in 1802. No churches are reported.

The Havana Republican was commenced in 1835 by Nelson Colgrove. It was issued successively by G. Barlow Nye, T. I. Taylor, and W. H. Ongly until 1849, when it was changed to Life in the Country and Havana Republican. It was discontinued in 1850.

The Chemung Democrat was removed from Horseheads to Havana in 1840, and to "Jefferson" (now Watkins) in 1842. Its name was soon after changed to

The Democratic Citizen, and it was issued by J. I. Hendrix until 1850.

The Independent Freeman was started at Watkins, June 15, 1850, by W. B. Slawson & Co.; in 1851 it was changed to

The Jefferson Eagle, and was continued a few months. The Corona Borealis, a literary paper, was published at "Jefferson" about the same time.

The Havana Journal was commenced April 16, 1853, by John B. Look, and its publication is still continued.

The Watkins Republican was established in June, 1854, by S. M. Taylor. It passed into the hands of J. K. Averill, and afterward into those of M. Ellis, by whom it is still published.

The Schuyler County Democrat was commenced at Havana, April 25, 1855, by Averill & Baxter, and was soon after discontinued.

² Named from Catharine Montour, a French woman who married an Indian, was adopted into the Seneca tribe, and exerted a controlling influence among the Indians. She received a small salary from the English Colonial Government, for many years, on account of her influence among the Indians. She resided on the present site of Havana and was known as Queen Catharine.

⁶ The census reports 7 churches; 2 Prot. E., 2 Presb., 2 M. E., and Bap.

DIX¹—was formed from Catlin, (Chemung co.,) April 17, 1835. It lies upon the w. side of Catharines Creek, and extends from the head of Seneca Lake to the s. bounds of the co. The surface is mostly a rolling and hilly upland, the summits being 400 to 700 ft. above the lake. It is drained by Catharines Creek and several smaller streams. The soil is principally a fine quality of gravelly loam. A little s. w. from the head of the lake is a deep glen in the hills, bordered by perpendicular rocks 200 ft. high. A small stream runs through it, forming a series of beautiful cascades. Watkins,² (p. v.,) upon the line of Reading, at the head of Seneca Lake, was incorp., as "Jefferson," April 11, 1842, and its name was changed April 8, 1852. It contains a courthouse, 5 churches, a newspaper office, and several manufacturing establishments. It is a lake, canal, and r. r. station; a daily steamboat plies upon Seneca Lake between this place and Geneva. Pop. 1,084. Beaver Dams, (p. v.,) in the s. w. corner, contains 2 churches, several manufactories, and 28 dwellings; Townsend, (p. v.,) near the w. line, contains 1 church, several mills, and 36 dwellings; Crawford Settlement, (Moreland p. o.,) near the s. line, contains 2 churches and 26 dwellings. The first settlements were made near the head of the lake and along the valley of Catharines Creek, about the commencement of the present century.³ The first church edifice (Bap.) was erected in 1833, at Townsend.⁴

HECTOR—was formed from Ovid, (Seneca co.,) March 30, 1802. It is the s. w. corner township of the Military Tract and the n. e. corner town of the co. Its surface is a rolling upland, its highest summits being 500 to 700 ft. above Seneca Lake. The bluffs bordering upon the lake are 100 to 300 ft. high, and nearly perpendicular. It is drained by a large number of small creeks flowing into Seneca and Cayuga Lakes. Hector Falls, upon a small creek in the s. w. part of the town, is a cascade made by the stream flowing down the bluff which borders upon the lake. The soil is a clay, sandy, and gravelly loam, in some places underlaid by hardpan. Perry City, (p. v.,) upon the e. line of the town, contains a Friends' meeting house and 120 inhabitants; Mecklenburgh, (p. v.,) situated 2 mi. s. of Perry City, contains 3 churches, 2 sawmills, a flouring mill, and 338 inhabitants; Reynoldsville, (p. v.,) near the center of the town, contains a church and 117 inhabitants; Bennetsburgh, (p. v.,) in the s. part, contains a church, 4 saw and shingle mills, 1 gristmill, tannery, and 25 dwellings; Burdett, (p. v.,) in the s. w. part, contains 3 churches, a woolen factory, agricultural implement factory, iron foundry, gristmill, sawmill, tannery, and 360 inhabitants; Peach Orchard, (Hector p. o.,) in the n. w. part, contains 3 churches and 34 dwellings; Polkville, (p. o.,) in the n. w. part, contains a church and 16 dwellings; Searsburgh (p. o.) contains 2 churches and 10 dwellings. North Hector is a p. o., and Steamburgh is a hamlet. The first settlement was made in 1791, in the n. w. part of the town, on the bank of the lake, by John Livingston and Wm. Wickham.⁵ The first church (Presb.) was formed by Rev. Mr. Stewart, at Peach Orchard, in 1809.⁶

ORANGE—was formed from Wayne, (Steuben co.,) Feb. 12, 1813, as "Jersey." Its name was changed Feb. 20, 1836. A part of Hornby (Steuben co.) was annexed April 11, 1842, and a part of Bradford, (Steuben co.,) April 17, 1854. It is the s. w. corner town in the co., and is bounded on the e. by the pre-emption line. Its surface is a rolling and hilly upland, broken by the deep and irregular valleys of the streams. Meads Creek, flowing s. w., forms the principal drainage. The soil is chiefly a gravelly loam. Monterey (Orange p. o.) contains 3 churches, a gristmill, and 301 inhabitants. Sugar Hill is a p. o. in the n. e. part. The first settlements were made in 1799, by Abraham Rozenback and Samuel Scomp, n. e. of Monterey.⁷ The first church (M. E.) was formed by Rev. Peregrine Hallett, the first preacher.⁸

⁴ The census reports 10 churches; 3 Bap., 3 M. E., 2 Presb., Prot. E., and Univ.

Betsy Livingston; and the first death, that of Wm. Wickham. The first school was taught at Peach Orchard, by John Livingston.

Wm. Wickham kept the first inn, near Peach Orchard, and John B. Sealey the first store, at Hector Falls. The first gristmill and carding machine were put in operation at the same place, by Sam'l B. Sealey.

⁶ The census reports 20 churches in town; 7 M. E., 3 Presb., 3 Bap., 2 Wes. Meth., 2 Friends, O. S. Bap., Prot. E., and Chris. Cong.

⁷ Henry Switzer, from N. J., settled on Switzer Hill, in 1802, and D. Hewitt, from Reusseler co., N. Y., was the first settler at Monterey, in 1811. Abner and Thos. Hurd, and Brigham Young, the Mormon leader, were early settlers in the n. e. part of the town. — Chapman, Wm. Wilkins, Wm. De Witt, Andrew Foot, Danl. Curtis, and Jediah Miller settled on Meads Creek in 1811. Eleise Switzer was the first child born. The first school was taught by Dan'l McDougall, in 1819, near Monterey. Thos. Hurd kept the first inn, in 1816, at Monterey, and Walter Hurd the first store, s. w. of the same place.

⁸ The census reports 4 churches in town; 2 Bap., Presb., and M. E.

READING—was formed from "Frederickstown," (now Wayne, Steuben co.,) Feb. 17, 1806. It lies upon the w. bank of Seneca Lake, and is the central town upon the n. border of the co. Its surface is a rolling upland 400 to 500 ft. above the lake. The bluffs upon the shore are very steep and in many places precipitous. Its streams are small brooks and creeks. The soil is mostly a clay loam. Reading Center (p. v.) contains 2 churches and 24 dwellings; Irelandville (Reading p. o.) contains 11 dwellings. North Reading is a p. o. The Canandaigua & Elmira R. R. traverses the town upon the w. shore of the lake. A settlement was made at Reading Center, by Judge John Dow, from Conn., in 1790.¹ The first church (Bap.) was formed by Elder John Goff, in 1810, at Reading Center.²

TYRONE—was formed from Wayne, (Steuben co.,) April 16, 1822. It is the n. w. corner town in the co. Its surface is an elevated upland divided into several ridges by the valleys of streams. Its principal stream is Mud Creek, flowing s. w. Little Lake, upon the w. border, is 3 mi. long and about 1 wide; and Mud Lake, in the s. w. corner, is 2 mi. long and about one-half mi. wide. These lakes lie in deep valleys, and are bordered by nearly precipitous hills which rise 300 to 400 ft. above them. The soil is a clay loam. Tyrone, (p. v.), a little e. of Mud Lake, contains 2 churches, 1 gristmill, 2 sawmills, 2 tanneries, several manufactories, and 160 inhabitants; Weston, (p. v.), 2 mi. n. w. of Tyrone, contains 2 churches and 177 inhabitants; Altay, (p. v.), a little e. of the Center, contains a church, tannery, 2 sawmills, a steam flouring mill, and 144 inhabitants; Pine Grove (p. o.) contains a church and 6 houses. The first settlement was made in 1800, by Gen. Wm. Kernan, on a tract of 4,000 acres, purchased by Thos. O'Conner.³ The first church edifice (Union) was erected by the Presb. and Bap.; Rev. Joseph Crawford (Presb.) and Rev. Van Rensselaer Wall (Bap.) were the first preachers.⁴

² The census reports 3 churches; Bap., M. E., and R. C.
³ Mr. O'Conner was among the early settlers, and resided for a time in a log house on the shore of Little Lake. He was accompanied by a son and daughter,—the former of whom is Hon.

Charles O'Conner, the eminent New York lawyer. Abraham Fleet, sr., from N. J., and Capt. John Seabring, were among the first settlers near Tyrone Village, in 1800; Thaddeus, Gersham, and Abraham Bennett settled about 1801. Simon Fleet was the first child born in town. The first school was taught at Tyrone Village, by Hugh Jameson; the first inn was kept by Capt. Williams, and the first store by Thos. O'Conner, near the n. w. corner of the town. The first mill and factory were erected at Tyrone Village by Ralph Opdyke.
⁴ The census reports 7 churches; 3 Bap., 2 Presb., and 2 M. E.

CATTARAUGUS COUNTY.

This county was formed from Genesee, March 11, 1808. It lies upon the Penn. line, near the s. w. corner of the State. It is — mi. from Albany, and contains — sq. mi. The surface is a hilly upland, forming the n. spurs of the Alleghany Mts. The upland is separated by deep valleys into distinct ridges, having a general n. and s. direction. The valleys deepen toward the s., and the hills rise abruptly to a height of 800 to 1,300 feet above them and 2,500 to 3,000 feet above tide. Nearly the whole co. is very broken; and many of the hills, though arable to their summits, are too steep for profitable cultivation. Toward the n. border the extreme mountainous character is somewhat modified, and the summits of the hills spread out into high, rolling uplands. Allegany River enters the s. e. corner of the co. from Penn., flows in a n. w. direction to near the center, thence s. w. to the s. border. It receives Four Mile, Trout, Tunegawant, Red House, Tunesassa, and Split Rock Creeks from the s., and Osaway, Douglas, Haskins, Ischua, Five Mile, Mill, Wrights, Little Valley, Cold Spring, and Bone Run Creeks from the n. Cattaraugus Creek, forming the n. boundary, receives Buttermilk and South Middle Branch Creeks. Connewango Creek, draining the w. border, flows into Chautauque co. Upon all these streams are numerous falls, furnishing an abundance of water-power.

The rocks of this co. mostly belong to the shales and sandstones of the Portage and Chemung groups. The former are exposed along Cattaraugus Creek, and the latter in the valleys in the central and s. parts of the co. The summits of the southern hills are covered with Catskill conglomerate. These rocks afford a good building stone in a few localities, but generally they are too easily acted upon by the elements to be very valuable. Drift deposits are found to some extent, scattered over the co.; and beds of clay, alluvium, and muck are found in limited quantities in the valleys.¹ The only lime in the co. is derived from small, isolated beds of marl and tufa. Springs of sulphur, weak brine, petroleum, and carburetted hydrogen are found in different localities. The "Oil Spring" of Freedom, yielding petroleum, is a place of considerable note. A very small amount of bog iron ore has been discovered in the swamps, but not in sufficient quantities to be profitably worked. The soil in the valleys is a yellowish loam, composed chiefly of disintegrated sandstone and shale; upon the uplands it is clay alternating with sand and gravel and underlaid by hardpan. The whole region is best adapted to grazing. For many years lumbering has been extensively carried on, and it still is a leading branch of business in the s. part of the co. The pine lands now remaining are exceedingly valuable; and the revenue derived from them forms no inconsiderable portion of the wealth of the co. Stock and wool growing and dairying form the leading pursuits in the other parts of the co.

The county seat is located at Ellicottville.² The courthouse is a brick edifice, situated near the center of the village, upon ample grounds donated by the Holland Land Company. The clerk's office is a fireproof brick building, adjacent to the courthouse. The jail is a stone building, amply provided for the accommodation and classification of prisoners. The poorhouse is located upon a farm of 200 acres in Machias, 16 mi. n. e. of Ellicottville. The average number of inmates is 35, supported at a weekly cost of $1.40 each. The farm yields a revenue of about $1,000.³

The N. Y. & Erie R. R. enters the co. from the e., and extends along Oil Spring and Ischua Creeks to Olean, thence along Allegany River to the mouth of Little Valley Creek, thence up the valley of that creek about 9 mi., and thence in a n. w. direction to the w. border of the co. It passes through the towns of Hinsdale, Olean, Allegany, Carrolton, Great Valley, Bucktooth, Little Valley, Mansfield, New Albion, Persia, Dayton, and Perrysburgh.⁴ The Genesee Valley Canal

Asbel Freeman, and Francis Green, County Judges; Sands Boughton, County Clerk; Israel Curtiss, Sheriff; and Jeremy Wooster, Surrogate. The first courthouse and jail was erected at Ellicottville, in 1817-18. It was burned in 1829, and the present buildings were soon after erected.

⁴ Several railroads have been surveyed through the co., and upon extends through Hinsdale and Olean, uniting with Allegany River at the latter place. An extension of this canal 7 mi. up the Allegany to the Penn. line is in process of construction.

Five weekly newspapers are now published in the co.¹

This co. was included in the territory ceded by the Six Nations to the Holland Land Co. in 1797. Three reservations made within the limits of the co. are held by the Indians at the present day. The Oil Spring Reservation, containing 1 sq. mi., is partly in Ischua, Cattaraugus co., and partly in Cuba, Allegany co. The Allegany Reservation, containing 42 sq. mi., extends from the Penn. line 25 mi. n. e. along Allegany River. The tract is, on an average, about 2 mi. wide, and embraces nearly all of the river intervales,—the finest agricultural region in the co. It embraces portions of Allegany, Carrolton, Great Valley, Bucktooth, Cold Spring, and South Valley. A small portion of the Cattaraugus Reservation lies in the n. part of Perrysburgh.² The Philadelphia Quakers established a mission on the Allegany Reservation, in what is now South Valley, as early as 1798. The first permanent settlement was made at Olean, by Maj. Adam Hoops and his brother Robert, from Albany, in 1804. For many years a large share of Western emigration was by way of the Allegany River and Pittsburgh; and, being at the head of boat navigation upon the river, Olean speedily became a place of importance. Upon the completion of the Erie Canal travel was diverted from this route and improvements advanced very slowly. The completion of the N. Y. & Erie R. R. gave a new impulse to enterprise and industry; and the co. is now rapidly progressing in all the elements of wealth and civilization.

ALLEGANY—was formed from Great Valley, as "Burton," April 18, 1831. Its name was changed March 28, 1851. Humphrey was taken off in 1836. It lies upon the s. border of the co., e. of the center. The surface is a hilly upland, broken by the deep valley of Allegany River, which extends e. and w. through the center. The declivities of the hills are steep, and their highest summits are 700 to 900 feet above the valleys. The streams are Four Mile, Five Mile, and Mill Creeks, tributaries of the Allegany. About nine-tenths of the town is still covered with forests. The soil is a shaly and sandy loam on the hills, and a clayey and gravelly loam in the valleys.

soms of them considerable labor has been expended. The Erie & N. Y. City & B. extends w. from the N. Y. & Erie R. R. at Bucktooth to Erie, Penn. A large portion of this road is graded. The Buffalo & Pittsburgh and the Attica & Allegany Railroads, both to terminate at Olean, have been surveyed; but work upon them has been indefinitely postponed.

¹ The Allegany Mercury, the first paper in the co., was started at "Hamilton," now Olean, in 1818, by Benj. F. Smead. In 1819 Franklin Cowdery became interested in its publication, and the name was changed to

The Hamilton Recorder. It was continued but a few years. The Western Courier was started at Ellicottville in 1826 by Richard Hill. In 1827 it was changed to

The Cattaraugus Gazette, and was continued about 2 years. The Lodi Pioneer was started at "Lodi," now Gowanda, in 1827 by Lewis B. Edwards. At the end of 3 years it was changed to

The Lodi Freeman and Messenger, and issued by G. N. Starr. In 1833 it passed into the hands of Eliakim Hough, and was changed to

The Cattaraugus Freeman, under which name it was continued until 1844, when it was changed to

The People's Advocate and Lodi Banner. In Oct. 1850, it passed into the hands of Henry M. Morgan, and its name was changed to

The Cattaraugus Chronicle. It was soon after changed to The Independent Chronicle, under which name it was published 4 years. In 1854 John M. Henry became interested in its publication, and it was changed to

The Gowanda Chronicle, and was continued until the office was burned, April 30, 1856.

The Ellicottville Republican was commenced in May, 1833, by Delos E. Sill. In 1834 it passed into the hands of R. H. Shankland, and was changed to

The Cattaraugus Republican. In 1855 it became the property of Fred. A. Stanton, by whom it is still published.

The Allegany Mercury was started at Olean in 1835 by G. W. Cutler. In 1836 it was changed to

The Olean Advocate, and was issued by Rufus W. Griswold for about 1 year. In 1837 Carlos Woodcock had charge of it; and in 1838 it passed into the hands of Dudley Bryan and was changed to

The Olean Times. It was afterward published by A. M. Badger until 1841.

The Hinsdale Democrat was started at the village of Hinsdale in 1836 by Joseph T. Lyman. It soon passed into the hands of Edward Hughs & Co., and was continued 2 years.

The People's Gazette was started at Hoesdale in 1840 by Geo. C.

Smith. In 1842 it was removed to Geneseo, Livingston co.

The Cattaraugus Whig was started at Ellicottville in July, 1840, by Delos E. Sill. It was continued by him until 1854, when its name was changed to

The Cattaraugus Freeman, under which title it is still issued by Sill & Beecher.

The Randolph Herald was started at Randolph in March, 1842.

It was successively issued by Wm. Mason, Lorenzo and Julius Marsh, and Fletcher & Russell until 1845, when it passed into the hands of J. J. Strong, who continued it 2 years. Strong then joined the Mormons, and removed the establishment to Nauvoo, Ill.

The Freeman and Messenger was started at Hinsdale in 1843 by L. E. Smith. Its name was soon changed to

The Expositor, and it was issued by Edwin and Allen C. Fuller until 1846.

The Gowanda Whig was started at Gowanda in Nov. 1850, by James T. Henry. In the following Feb. it was removed to Ellicottville, and its name changed to

The Whig and Union; soon after it appeared as

The Union, under which title it is now published by R. H. Shankland.

The Gowanda Phoenix rose from the ashes of the great fire of April, 1856, and was issued 1 year by Louis S. Morgan, when it was removed to Bradford, Penn.

The Cattaraugus Sachem was started at Randolph in June, 1851, and was continued about 1 year, when the press was removed to Olean.

The Randolph Whig was started at Randolph in July, 1852, by C. K. Judson and Benj. F. Morris. In 1857 its name was changed to

The Randolph Reporter, and it was issued by Morris until July 5, 1858, when it was removed to Gowanda and changed to The Gowanda Reporter. It is now published by N. W. Henry and Frank Stebbins.

The Olean Journal was started at Olean in 1853 by Chas. Aldrich. In June, 1856, it passed into the hands of James T. Henry, who changed its name to

The Olean Advertiser, under which title he still issues it.

The Neosophic Gem, mo., was started at Randolph in 1848 by A. M. Shattuck, and was continued 4 years.

² The Indian titles to these lands have been questioned; but both the State and U. S. courts have decided them to be original, absolute, and exclusive. By an act of Feb. 19, 1857, the Legislature formally renounced all right upon the part of the State to tax these lands. The Indians are mostly engaged in agricultural pursuits, in which they have made considerable progress.

Lumbering is extensively pursued. Allegany, (p. v.,) upon Allegany River, e. of the center, contains a tannery, door and blind factory, 3 churches, and 70 houses. It is a station on the N. Y. & E. R. R. The Franciscan College is located near the village.¹ Five Mile Run is a p. o. The first settler was Ebenezer Reed, from Conn., who located near the mouth of Nine Mile Creek in 1820.² The first religious services (Bap.) were held at the house of James Strong, by Elder Benj. Cole, in 1823. The first church (M. E.) was formed in 1829.³

ASHFORD—was formed from Ellicottville, Feb. 16, 1824. It is centrally located on the n. border of the co. The surface is hilly, with ridges extending generally in a n. and s. direction. The highest points in the s. part are 300 feet above the valleys. Cattaraugus Creek, forming the n. boundary, and Buttermilk Creek, are the principal streams. The soil is a slaty loam intermixed with gravel and clay. Maple sugar is largely manufactured. Ashford, (p. v.,) in the s. w. part of the town, contains a grist and saw mill, 2 churches, and 36 dwellings; East Ashford (p. o.) contains 2 churches and 11 dwellings. The first settlers were Henry Frank and his two sons Andrew and Jacob H., from Herkimer co., who located on Lot 56, in 1816.⁴ The first church (F. W. Bap.) was organized in 1821, by Elder Richard M. Cary. There are now 6 churches in town.⁵

BUCKTOOTH—was formed from Little Valley, Nov. 19, 1854. It lies upon the s. border of the co., w. of the center. Its surface is mostly a broken and mountainous upland, the highest summits being 800 to 1,000 feet above the valleys. Allegany River flows w. and s. w. through the n. part. The other principal streams are Red House, Little Valley, and Bucktooth Creeks, and Sawmill Run. The soil is a clay and sandy loam. A large share of the town is yet covered with forests; and lumbering forms the leading pursuit.⁶ Bucktooth is a p. o. in the n. part. A few settlements were made previous to 1812; but they were abandoned during the war. The first permanent settler was James Rosenberg, who located in town in 1816.⁷ The only church (M. E.) was formed about 1830.

CARROLTON⁸—was formed from Great Valley, March 9, 1842. It is the central town upon the s. border of the co. The surface is a broken and hilly upland. Ball Hill, in the s. e. part, is 800 feet above the valley. The Allegany flows n. w. through the n. part, receiving as tributaries Tunegawant and Windfall Creeks. The soil is a clay and shaly loam upon the uplands, and a gravelly loam in the valleys. Lumbering is the leading pursuit. Limestone,⁹ (p. o.,) in the s. part, and Tuna, (p. o.,) in the n., are hamlets. The first settlers were Charles Foster, Horace Howe, and Marcus Leonard, who located upon Lots 28 and 29 in 1824.¹⁰ The first religious meeting (Bap.) was held by Rev. Aaron Kellogg, at his own house, in 1831; and the first church (M. E.) was organized in 1843. The census reports 2 churches; M. E. and R. C.

COLD SPRING—was formed from Napoli, March 20, 1837. A part of South Valley was taken off in 1847. It is an interior town, near the s. w. corner of the co. The surface is a hilly and broken upland, the highest summits being 400 to 500 feet above the valleys. The Allegany flows s. w. through the n. e. corner, and receives from the n. Cold Spring Creek, which flows through the center. The soil is a clay and slaty loam upon the uplands, and a sandy and gravelly loam in the valleys. A sulphur spring is found in the n. e. part. There is no village, p. o., or church edifice in town. Lumbering is extensively carried on. The first settlements were made by Chas. Crook, with his 3 sons Chas., jr., Ira, and Nathan, from Vt., on Lot 32, and Joshua Basson, ¹ This institution is under the control of the Franciscan (R. C.) Association. The buildings are now in process of erection. Nicholas Devereux donated to the association, for the institute, 200 acres of land and $5,000.

⁶ This town contains an area of 47,620 acres, of which less than 1,000 acres were under cultivation in 1855.

⁹ Upon the flats near Limestone are the remains of an ancient fortification. It is in the shape of a figure 8, the remains of the ditch and earthworks being plainly visible.

¹⁰ John and Wm. Moore, Elias Stone, Peter Zelnoff, Hecock, Isaac Parr, Aaron Kellogg, and Wm. Smith settled on Tuna Creek in 1828. The first birth was that of Merit Zelnoff, in June, 1829; the first marriage, that of ——— Brown and Emelive Fuller, in 1828; and the first death, that of Enoch Fuller, in 1828. The first school was taught by Milton Northrop, at Limestone, in the winter of 1830-31. Elias Stone kept the first inn, near the mouth of Tuna Creek, in 1828, and Chas. ² Rock City is situated upon the nearly level summit of a hill 400 feet above the valley and 2,000 feet above tide, and covers an area of about 100 acres. The rock, consisting of Catskill conglomerate, is arranged in regular blocks, with sharp angles and perpendicular sides, presenting the appearance of courtyards or squares in the midst of numerous streets and alleys. In a more minute description of the place, Prof. Hall, in his "Geology of New York," says, "The large trees which stand upon the top of the immense blocks have often sent their roots down the sides, where they are sustained by the deep soil, supporting the huge growth above upon an almost barren rock. The rectangular blocks, composed of pure white pebbles conglutinated, are from 30 to 35 feet in thickness, and, standing regularly arranged along the line of outcrop, present an imposing appearance."

⁸ Joseph Kinney settled in 1815; Obadiah Vaughn in 1818; E. T. Ashcraft, Chas. Botton, Chas. H. Briggs, and Wiggen M. Farrer soon after. The first marriage was that of Brigham Brown and Polly Mason, in April, 1823; and the first death, that of Ender Ashcraft, in Dec. 1819. Nathl. Bowen taught the first school, in 1819, on Lot 25. Andrew McBuzzell erected the first sawmill, in 1822, and Doal Potter the first gristmill, in 1823,—both on the outlet of Lime Lake. The first store was kept at the same place, by Howard Peck and Alva Jefferson; and the first inn, on Ischua Creek, by Widow Freeman, in 1820.

⁹ The census reports 2 churches; M. E. and Christian.

n. w. of the center of the co. The surface is hilly, the highest elevations, in the s. e., being about 300 feet above the N. Y. & E. R. R. where it crosses the s. w. corner of the town. The s. branch of Cattaraugus Creek flows w. through the n. part, and several small streams s. into the Allegany. The soil is a hard, clay loam on the uplands, and a gravelly loam in the valleys. Eddyville, (p. o.), in the n. part, contains 2 churches, a sawmill, and 11 dwellings. The first settler was Amos Morgan, who located in the s. part in 1817.¹ The first church, (Bap.,) formed in 1828, has since broken up.²

NAPOLI—was formed from Little Valley, Jan. 20, 1823, as "Cold Spring." Its name was changed April 15, 1828; and the present town of Cold Spring was taken off in 1837. Its surface is a hilly upland, the highest summits being 600 feet above the valley. The principal stream is Cold Spring Creek. The soil is a clay and gravelly loam. Napoli, (p. v.,) s. of the center, contains a church and about a dozen houses. The first settlement was made on Lot 27, by Major Timothy Butler, in 1818.³ The first religious meeting was held by Rev. John Spencer, in 1820. The first church (Cong.) was organized in 1820.⁴

NEW ALBION—was formed from Little Valley, Feb. 23, 1830. It is an interior town, n. w. of the center of the co. The surface is a hilly upland. It is drained by streams flowing into Cattaraugus Creek on the n. and into the Allegany in the s. The soil is a clay loam on the hills, and a gravelly loam in the valleys. New Albion, (p. v.,) a little s. of the center, contains 20 dwellings; Cattaraugus,⁵ (p. v.,) in the n. part, contains a steam flouring mill and 50 dwellings. It is an important station upon the N. Y. & E. R. R., and has grown up since this road was completed. The first settlement was made on the s. w. corner of Lot 57, by Matthew Dimmick, in 1818.⁶ The first religious association (M. E.) was organized in 1830. There are 3 churches in town, but no church edifice.⁷

OLEAN—was formed March 11, 1808, and at first included the whole territory of Cattaraugus co. "Ischua," now Franklinville, was taken off in 1812, a part of Perrysburgh in 1814, Great Valley in 1818, Hinsdale in 1820, and Portville in 1837. It lies upon the s. line of the co., near the s. e. corner. The surface is a hilly upland, separated into two distinct parts by the valley of the Allegany. The highest points are 500 to 600 feet above the valley. Lumbering is the leading occupation. Olean, (p. v.,) on the Allegany, at the mouth of Ischua Creek, was incorp. in 1854. It contains 6 churches, the Olean Academy,⁸ a newspaper office, a flouring mill, foundery, tannery, and 3 sawmills. Pop. 994. It is a station upon the N. Y. & E. R. R., and an important commercial point upon the river; and it was for some years the southern terminus of the Genesee Valley Canal.⁹ The first settlement was made prior to 1805. In that year Robert Hoops, agent of Adam Hoops, and David Heusten were residents near the river on small improvements, and must have settled as early as 1804.¹⁰ The first church (M. E.) was formed in 1820.¹¹

OTTO¹²—was formed from Perrysburgh, Jan. 29, 1823. East Otto was taken off in 1854. It

² The census reports 3 churches: M. E., F. W. Bap., and Univ. In 1819, Geo. Hill located on Lot 29, Harvey Parmalee and Harlow Butler on Lot 51, Sargent Morrill on Lot 50, and Timothy Boardman on Lot 43. The first child born was Joseph Foy, in June, 1820; the first marriage, that of Dr. Noble and Statira Canfield, in 1821; and the first death, that of a child of Timothy Butler, in 1820. The first school was taught by Fanny Boardman, in the summer of 1819. Moses Cook kept the first store, in 1826, and Eastman Prescott the first inn, in 1831. James Wait erected the first sawmill, in 1829, on a branch of Cold Spring Creek.

⁶ David Hammond, jr. located on Lot 33, and Jonathan Kinnecutt on Lot 10, in 1818; A. Smith Waterman on Lot 25, and James Godard on Lot 9 about the same time; Benj. Chamberlin on Lot 1, and David Hill and John A. Kinnecutt on Lot 18, in Dec. 1820; Robert and Timothy P. Gay subsequently located on Lot 33. The first birth was in the family of Matthew Dimmick, in Dec. 1818. Capt. Rosecrantz, an Indian trader, froze to death in this town in the winter of 1810, while on his way from the mouth of Cattaraugus Creek to Olean. The first inn was kept by Jas. Godard, on Lot 9, in 1819, and the first store by Erasmus Hootch, in 1823, at the center. Matthew Nealy built the first sawmill, on a branch of Cattaraugus Creek, and Charles Sibley the first gristmill, on Lot 49, in 1836.

⁸ The academic buildings were burned April 1, 1856. The new buildings are nearly ready for the reception of students.

⁹ An act was passed in 1856 authorizing the extension of this canal 7 mi. to the Penn. line. The work is now in progress; and, when completed, it will, in connection with slackwater navigation upon the river, open a direct communication with the coal mines of Penn.

lies on the n. line of the co., w. of the center. The surface is a hilly and broken upland. It is drained w. by Cattaraugus Creek, which forms its n. boundary, and several tributaries, the principal of which is the South Branch, forming the w. boundary. The soil is chiefly a hard, clay loam, with occasional spots of gravelly loam. Waverly, (Otto p. o.) in the s. part, contains a church, woolen factory, and gristmill. Pop. 277. The first settlement was made on Cattaraugus Creek, in 1816, by Joseph Adams and his son Bina, and Joseph Bartlet.¹ The first church (Christian) was formed about 1826.²

PERRYSBURGH³—was formed from Olean and "Ischua," now Franklinville, April 13, 1814, as "Perry." Its name was changed April 10, 1818. Little Valley was taken off in 1818, Otto in 1823, and Dayton and Persia in 1835. It is the n. w. corner town in the co. Its surface is a hilly and broken upland. Cattaraugus Creek, forming the n. boundary, is bordered by abrupt hillsides. The streams are small branches of Cattaraugus and Silver Creeks. The soil is a clay and gravelly loam. Perrysburgh, (p. v.), s. of the center, contains a church and 23 dwellings. It is a station on the N. Y. & E. R. R. Versailles, (p. v.), on Cattaraugus Creek, in the n. e. part, contains a church, 2 flouring mills, and a tannery. Pop. 274. The rapid descent in the creek at this point affords an extensive water-power. The first settlement was made in 1815, by John Clark.⁴ Religious meetings (M. E.) were held in 1820; but the first church (Bap.) which drew the lands granted by the Holland Land Co. was formed in 1821.⁵

PERSIA—was formed from Perrysburgh, Feb. 7, 1835. It lies on the n. line of the co., w. of the center. The surface is a hilly upland, with a general inclination toward the n. The highest points are about 650 feet above Lake Erie. The principal streams are Cattaraugus Creek, forming the n. boundary, and South Branch. The soil is a clay and gravelly loam. Gowanda,⁶ (p. v.) on Cattaraugus Creek, in the n. w. corner, was incorp. Dec. 7, 1847. It contains 2 churches, a newspaper office, a large flouring mill, 2 sawmills, and various other manufacturing establishments. Pop. 908, of which 520 are in Persia and 388 are in Collins, (Erie co.) The first settlement was made a little above Gowanda Village, in 1811, by John Russell, from Vt. Upon the breaking out of the War of 1812, he left with his family and never returned. In 1814, Ahaz Allen, from Vt., settled permanently on the lot left by Russell.⁷ The first religious meetings were held by Elder Elnathan Finch, (F. W. Bap.), in 1815-16. The first church (Presb.) was formed in 1826, at Gowanda.

PORTVILLE—was formed from Olean, April 27, 1837. It is the s. e. corner town of the co. The surface is mostly a hilly upland, the highest summits being 500 to 600 feet above the valleys. The Allegany River enters the town upon the s. border, flows n. to near the center, and thence n. w. to the w. border. It receives as tributaries Osaway, Dodges, and Haskell Creeks. The soil is a sandy loam; and the flats were originally covered with a magnificent growth of white pine. Lumbering is the leading pursuit. Portville, (p. v.), on the Allegany, contains 2 churches, 2 sawmills, and a gristmill. Pop. 287. Mill Grove, s. of Portville, on the Allegany, contains 2 sawmills, a gristmill, and 18 dwellings. The first settlement was made in 1805, by James Green, on Haskell Creek, in the n. part of the town.⁸ The first church (M. E.) was formed in 1824. The census reports 2 churches; M. E., and Presb.

RANDOLPH—was formed from Connewango, Feb. 1, 1826, and named from Randolph, Vt. A part of South Valley was taken off in 1847. It lies upon the w. border of the co., s. of the center. Its surface is an undulating and hilly upland, the highest summits being about 400 feet above the valleys. Little Connewango Creek is the principal stream. The soil is mostly a clay

³ Named from Commodore O. H. Perry.

⁴ Among the other early settlers were Edward Russell, Phineas Spencer, Hugh Campbell, Ralph Griswold, Wm. Cooper, John Sprague, and Simon Waterman, who came in about 1816; and Elisha Ward, Stephen Crocker, and Freeman Edwards, who located near Perrysburgh Village in 1817. The first school was taught by Olive Barto, in the summer of 1819. Benj. Waterman kept the first inn, in 1816, and Cobb, Cook & Pelton the first store, at the village, in 1827. The first sawmill was erected on the branch of Silver Creek, by Isaac Balcomb; and the first gristmill, at Versailles, about 1820.

⁵ The census reports 4 churches; 3 M. E., and Bap.

⁶ Formerly called "Lodi."

⁷ Thomas Farnsworth located in 1814, and Merrill Aldrich and Daniel Wheeler in 1815. The first child born was Anice Farnsworth, in the summer of 1815. The first school was taught by Polly Redfield, in 1817. Ahaz Allen erected the first sawmill, in 1814; the first clothing work, in 1821; and first gristmill, in 1823, on Cattaraugus Creek. Phineas Spencer kept the first store, about 1825, at Gowanda. "Point Peter" is the name given to a locality 1½ mi. above Gowanda that marks the site of an ancient fortification.

⁸ There are 2 churches in town; Presb. and M. E.

and gravelly loam. A sulphur spring is found $\frac{1}{2}$ mi. n. of East Randolph. Randolph, (p. v.,) on Little Connewango Creek, in the n. part, contains a sawmill, 3 churches, and about 600 inhabitants; East Randolph, (p. v.,) $1\frac{1}{2}$ mi. above Randolph, contains 2 churches, a grist and saw mill, a furnace, machine shop, tannery, and about 700 inhabitants. Randolph Academy is situated upon an eminence about midway between the villages. The first settlement in town was made at Randolph Village, by Edmund Fuller, from Oneida co., in 1820.¹ The first church (M. E.) was organized in 1823.²

SOUTH VALLEY—was formed from Randolph and Cold Spring, April 2, 1847. It is the s. w. corner town of the co. The surface is mountainous and broken. Allegany River flows s. w. through the town and receives as tributaries Split Rock, Hotchkiss, Tunesassa, Pierce, Sawmill, and Bone Run Creeks. The soil is a clay loam on the hills, and a rich, gravelly loam in the valleys. Lumbering is the principal occupation of the people.³ Onoville is a p. o. The first settlement was made, under the auspices of the Friends' Mission, upon the Allegany Indian Reservation. The Mission was established in 1798, by the Yearly Meeting of Philadelphia Friends; and Joel Swayne, Holliday Jackson, and Chester Simmons, from Chester co., Penn., settled upon the Reservation, in the n. part of the town.⁴ It does not appear that any other religious association has ever been formed in the town. The Presb. missions on the Reservation, however, have an extensive range in the valley of the Allegany.

YORKSHIRE—was formed from Franklinville, April 13, 1820. Machias was taken off in 1827. It lies upon the n. border of the co., e. of the center. Its surface is a rolling and hilly upland. Cattaraugus Creek forms the n. boundary. South Branch flows through near the center and receives several tributaries. The soil is a clay and gravelly loam. A large amount of maple sugar is annually produced. Yorkshire Corners, (Yorkshire p. o.,) on Cattaraugus Creek, contains 38 dwellings. Yorkshire Center, (p. v.,) a little e. of the center, contains 2 churches, 2 sawmills, a gristmill, and 42 dwellings. West Yorkshire, (p. v.,) on the n. line, at the junction of the South Branch with Cattaraugus Creek, contains a gristmill, sawmill, carding machine, and 14 dwellings. The first settlement was made in 1810, on Lot 1, in the n. e. corner, by Abner Bomp, from Vt.⁵ The first church (M. E.) was formed about 1814.⁶

¹ The first child born was James Fuller, in June, 1822; and the first death was that of Zalmoo C. Smith, June 17, 1824, while at work on mills of Chauncey C. Helms. The double marriage of David Salisbury and Clement Russell with daughters of Thos. Harvey, at the same time, were the first in town. The first school was taught by Sally Morton, at Randolph Village, in the summer of 1822. Benj. Clark kept the first inn, in 1823, and Robert Helms the first store, in 1837. Thos. Harvey erected the first sawmill, in 1823; Chauncey C. Helms, the first gristmill, in 1826; and Jonathan Wood, the first carding and cloth dressing mill, in 1827.

delphia purchased 300 acres of land of the Holland Land Company and built a saw and grist mill. The mills did work for white settlers on the usual terms, and furnished lumber and ground corn for the Indians free. The Indians were also instructed in agriculture and the arts of civilized life. The mills were built by Jacob Taylor and Jonathan Thomas. Robert Clendenon, from Chester co., Penn., occupied the Mission Station in 1812. It is said that descendants of Sir Wm. Johnson are now residing on the Allegany Reservation.

⁵ Benj. and Wm. Felch, Edward Bomp, Thos. Dow, and Luther Thompson were among the first settlers. Saml. G. Sutton and Robert Steel, from N. H., settled in 1818, and are now the oldest residents in town. The first store was kept by Henry L. Baker, in 1823, and the first inn by Prescott Williams, in 1826,—both at Yorkshire Corners. Isaac Williams erected the first grist and saw mill, in 1814, on Cattaraugus Creek.

ALLEGANY COUNTY.

This county was formed from Genesee, April 7, 1806. A portion of Steuben co. was annexed — — —, and a portion was set off to Wyoming and Livingston in 1846. It lies upon the s. line of the State, w. of the center; is centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains — sq. mi. The surface is mostly an upland, separated into ridges and broken by the deep valleys of the streams. A large portion of the co. is rough and mountainous. The highest summits, in the s. part, are 500 to 800 feet above the valleys and 2,000 to 2,500 feet above tide. The declivities are usually too steep for profitable cultivation. Toward the n. the co. gradually loses its mountainous character and spreads out into a hilly region. The Genesee River flows in a n. w. direction through near the center of the co., forming a deep valley bordered by abrupt hillsides. The main ridges —parallel to the river and about 10 mi. distant from it—form watersheds, dividing the waters flowing n. from those flowing s. The streams e. of the e. ridge are tributaries of the Susquehanna, and those w. of the w. ridge of the Allegany. Narrow valleys break the continuity of these ridges, and in numerous instances streams flowing in opposite directions take their rise within a few rods of each other. The principal tributaries of the Genesee are Wigwam, Angelica, Philips, Vandemark, Dike, Chenunda, and Cryders Creeks on the e., and Fords, Knight, Van Campens, White, Black, Caneadea, and Six Town Creeks on the w. The streams flowing e. from the e. border of the co. are Canaseraga and Sugar Creeks, Canisteo River, Karr Valley, McHenry Valley, and Whitney Valley Creeks; and the streams flowing w. from the w. border are Oil, Wolf, Dodges, Deer, and Little Genesee Creeks.

The rocks of the co. belong to the shales and sandstones of the Portage and Chemung groups,—the former appearing in the deep valleys in the n. part, and the latter covering the tops of the s. hills. At various localities the sandstone furnishes an excellent building material; and in Rushford it is quarried for grindstones. The shales in the s. w. part are highly charged with bituminous matter; and many of the springs have a strong bituminous taste and smell. From a spring in Cuba petroleum, or rock oil, issues in considerable quantities. Iron pyrites are found to some extent associated with the shale. Drift deposits are found in some portions of the co., though not in large quantities. The soil upon the uplands is generally a heavy clay, derived from the disintegration of the shales, and in most sections largely mixed with undecomposed fragments of the rocks. In the valleys the soil is mostly a gravelly loam and alluvium. From the nature of its surface and geological formation, the co. is best adapted to grazing; and, although wheat and the spring grains are successfully produced, stock and wool growing and dairying form the principal branches of agricultural pursuit. The manufacture of lumber has formed the leading interest for a long series of years, and facilitated the occupation and cultivation of the lands; but as the primitive pine forests have disappeared the pursuits of the people have become more and more exclusively agricultural. A considerable portion of the s. part of the co. is yet covered with forests, and lumbering is still pursued to some extent.

The county seat is located at the village of Angelica.¹ The courthouse is an old, dilapidated brick building, built in 1819, and now entirely inadequate to the comfortable accommodations of the courts. The jail is a wood structure, erected in 1849. It has no facilities for the proper classification of prisoners, and no means of ventilation.² The clerk's office is in a separate building, contiguous to the courthouse. The poorhouse is located upon a farm of 180 acres in Angelica, 2 mi. e. of the courthouse. It is a stone building, affording ample accommodations for structure. An act was passed, April 2, 1858, providing for the immediate removal of the county seat s. to the line of the N. Y. & Erie R. R.; but the execution of the law has been arrested and restrained by legal proceedings now pending in the State courts. The first co. officers were Philip Church, First Judge; Jacob S. Holt, County Clerk; John Gibson, Sheriff; and Luke Godspal, Surrigate.

² The jail has an average number of 6 inmates, supported at a weekly cost of $2.75 each.

the inmates, but is destitute of means of ventilation. The average number of inmates is 57, supported at a weekly cost of $1.03 each. The farm yields a revenue of $1,000.¹

The Genesee Valley Canal extends s. from the n. boundary of the co. along Genesee River to Belfast, thence up the valley of Black Creek to New Hudson, and thence across to the valley of Oil Creek, and down the valley of that stream to the w. bounds of the co. The N. Y. & Erie R. R. extends from Steuben co. up Whitney Valley Creek; thence across to Dyke Creek, and down the valley of that stream to Genesee River; thence down the Genesee to Belvidere, thence up Van Campens Creek to Friendship Village; thence across to the valley of Oil Creek, and down that stream to the w. bounds of the co. It passes through Almond, Alfred, Andover, Wellsville, Scio, Amity, Friendship, and Cuba. The Buffalo & N. Y. City R. R. extends through Burns and Grove, in the n. e. corner of the co.

Four weekly newspapers are now published in the co.²

The two western tiers of towns in this co. were included in the Holland Land Purchase, and the remaining part belonged to the Morris Reserve. John B. Church became the owner of 100,000 acres of this tract. His son, Judge Philip Church, subsequently became the proprietor of one-half, or 50,000 acres, and the pioneer settler of the tract at Angelica, in 1804. A few settlers had previously located at different points in the valley of the Genesee; and the settlement of the co. may be said to have commenced with the century. The roughness of the surface, and the superior richness of the lands further n., had a tendency to retard the development of this co.; and for many years comparatively little progress was made. The construction of the Genesee Valley Canal and of the Erie R. R. gave an impulse to improvement and afforded an opportunity to convey the rich products of the extensive pine forests to a profitable market. Agricultural improvements have slowly followed the retreat of the forests; and now nearly one-half of the co. is under improvement to some extent.

ALFRED—was formed from Angelica, March 11, 1808. Almond and Independence were taken off in 1821, a part of West Almond in 1833, and a part of Ward in 1856. It lies upon the e. border of the co., a little s. of the center. The surface consists of deep, irregular hills separated by narrow valleys. The highest summits are 500 to 800 ft. above the streams. Whitney Valley Creek flows to the n. e. and Dyke and Vandemark Creek to the s. w. The soil upon the hills is a clayey or shaly loam, and in the valleys a gravelly loam. Alfred Center (p. v.) contains a church, the Alfred Academy and University,³ and 177 inhabitants; Bakers Bridge, (Alfred p. o.), in the n. e. corner, contains a church, flouring mill, and 134 inhabitants. It is a station upon the Erie R. R. The first settlement was made near Alfred Center, in May,

¹ In the report of the Senate committee of 1857, this institution is reported as poorly kept. Lunatics were confined for weeks together without attendance and without having their cells cleaned; and it was a custom of the keeper to flog the inmates with a raw hide.

² The Angelica Republican was started in Oct. 1820, by Franklin Cowdery, and was continued 2 years. In 1827 it was revived as

The Allegany Republican, published by Samuel P. Hull. In 1832 it was changed to

The Angelica Republican and Farmers and Mechanics' Press, issued by B. F. Smead. During the same year it was again changed to

The Allegany Republican and Internal Improvement Advocate, and published by Peter Cherry. In 1836 it was issued as

The Angelica Republican and Allegany Whig. It soon after passed into the hands of Wm. Pitt Angell, who changed it to The Angelica Reporter and Allegany Republican. It soon passed into the hands of Samuel C. Wilson, and was issued for several years as

The Angelica Reporter. In 1841 it was published by Horace E. Purdy and Chas. Horton; and in 1844 Mr. Horton became sole proprietor. In 1856 he purchased The Advocate and Whig, and published the combined paper as

The Angelica Reporter and Angelica Advocate and Whig, under which name it is still issued.

The Republican Aegis and Allegany Democrat was published at Angelica in 1830.

The Allegany Gazette was issued at Angelica in 1840.

The Allegany Co. Advocate was started at Angelica in Jan. 1842, by Erasmus S. Palmer. It was successively issued by Ellroy & Churchill, Peter S. Norris, and Wm. H. & C. M. Beecher. In 1852 it was united with The Cuba Whig and issued as

The Advocate and Whig. In 1856 the Beechers sold to Charles Horton, who united the paper with The Reporter.

The Republican Era was started at Angelica in 1844 and issued a short time.

The Republican Era was started at the village of Oramel in 1846 by Horace E. Purdy. Its publication was continued by different persons until 1857.

The Cuba Advocate was commenced at Cuba, Oct. 29, 1838, by Isaac C. Sheldon, and was continued several years.

The Political Investigator (mo.) was published at Angelica a short time in 1848.

The American Banner was commenced at Cuba in Feb. 1855, by Hatch & Pratt. In July, 1857, the name of the paper was changed to

The Southern Tier, and its publication continued by C. Pratt, M. B. Champlin, editor.

The Almond Herald was commenced at Almond in 1853 by R. Denton, who published it 1 year, when it was suspended. In about 6 months it was resuscitated by Melvin Hyde and Isaac Busby, and appeared under the name of

The Allegany Sentinel. Subsequently it passed into the hands of Frazer & Spencer, by whom the paper was published until 1856.

The Genesee Valley Free Press was commenced at Belfast in Jan. 1853, by A. N. Cole. In March following, the paper was removed to Wellsville, where the publication is continued by Mr. Cole.

The Rural Budget was commenced at Wellsville in Oct. 1856, by Richard O. Shant, by whom the publication is continued.

³ The academic part of this institution was incorp. in 1842, and the university in 1857. The erection of the university building has been commenced. It is under the charge of the Seventh Day Bap. denomination.

1807, by Clark Crandall, from Rensselaer co.¹ The first church (Seventh Day Bap.) was formed in 1816. There are now 2 churches in town; both Seventh Day Bap.

ALLEN—was formed from Angelica, Jan. 31, 1823. A part of Birdsall was taken off in 1829. It is an interior town, lying a little w. of the center of the co. Its surface is a hilly upland, divided into ridges by the valleys of the streams. The highest summits are 500 to 700 feet above the valleys. The principal streams are Wigwam, Plum, and Baker Creeks. The soil upon the uplands is clay underlaid by hardpan, and in the valleys a gravelly loam and alluvium. Allen, (p. o.) in the e. part, and Allen Center (p. o.) are hamlets. There are no stores, taverns, doctors, or lawyers in the town. A few small settlements were made about the commencement of the century, but the principal settlements were made subsequent to 1820.² The first religious services were conducted by Rev. Robert Hunter, (Presb.) in 1821; and the first church (Presb.) was formed in 1830.³

ALMA—was formed from Willing, Nov. 23, 1854. It is the central town on the s. border of the co. The surface is broken and mountainous. Honeyoe Creek and its branches, flowing in deep, narrow ravines, form the drainage. The greater part of the surface is yet covered with forests. The soil upon the uplands is a clayey and sandy loam, and in the valleys a gravelly loam and alluvium. Lumbering is the principal pursuit; and large quantities of pine lumber are annually manufactured. Alma, (p. v.) in the w. part of the town, contains a steam sawmill and 15 houses. The first settlement was made in 1833, by Warren Huff, from Quebec, Canada.⁴ The first religious services were performed by Rev. Reuben Kent, in 1838; and the first and only religious association (M. E.) in town was formed in 1850. There is no church edifice in town.

ALMOND—was formed from Alfred, March 16, 1821. A part of Birdsall was taken off in 1829, and a part of West Almond in 1833. It lies upon the e. border of the co., a little n. of the center. Its surface is mostly an upland, separated into several distinct ridges by the deep valleys of Canisteo River and the Karr Valley, McHenry Valley, and Whitney Valley Creeks. The highest summits are 500 to 800 ft. above the valleys. The soil is a gravelly and clay loam. Quarries of good building stone, and sulphur springs, are found in various localities. Almond, (p. v.) near the e. line, contains 2 churches, 2 flouring mills, several manufactories, and about 1,000 inhabitants. Center Almond, in Karr Valley, and North Almond are p. offices. The first settlement was made at Karr Valley, by Rev. Andrew Gray, Wm. Gray, Jos. Rathbun, and ——— Vandemark, all from Penn., in the spring of 1796.⁵ The first religious meeting was held at Karr Valley, by Rev. Andrew Gray, (Presb.) in his own house, May 1, 1797; and the first church was formed, the same year, by Mr. Gray.⁶

AMITY—was formed from Angelica and Scio, Feb. 22, 1830. A part of Ward was taken off in 1856. It is an interior town, lying a little s. e. of the center of the co. The surface is hilly and broken, the summits rising 500 to 800 feet above the valleys. Genesee River flows n. w. through the w. part and receives as tributaries Van Campens and Philips Creeks. The valleys of these streams are narrow and are bordered by steep hillsides. The soil is principally a clayey and sandy loam. Philipsville, (p. v.) on the Genesee, was incorp. Feb. 21, 1853. It contains 3 churches, 2 sawmills, a flouring mill, and about 1,000 inhabitants. It is a station upon the R. R. Belvidere, (p. v.) on the Genesee, at the mouth of Van Campens Creek, contains 3 sawmills and 181 inhabitants. It is also a n. s. station. Scio (p. o.) lies partly in this town. The first settlement was made in 1804, near Belvidere, by John T. Hyde.⁷ The first religious ¹ Nathan Green, from Madison co., settled at Bakers Bridge in 1807. The first child born was Rebecca Stillman, in 1808; the first marriage, that of Luke Maxson and Susan Green; and the first death, that of Chas. H. Clark, who accidentally shot himself. Nancy Teater taught the first school, in 1815; John Teater kept the first inn, in 1818; and E. S. Davis built the first sawmill, in 1821, and the first gristmill, in 1824.

² The first school was taught near the s. line, in 1820. The first inn was kept by Mrs. Armstrong, near the s. line, in 1827. The first sawmill was erected by Asher Miner, on Wigwam Creek, in 1825.

³ The census reports 3 churches: Cong., Bap., and M. E.

⁵ Maj. Moses Van Campen, Capt. Henry McHenry, Walter, Jos., and Sam'l Karr, Silas Ferry, Stephen Major, Benj. Van Campen, Matthew McHenry, Jos. Coleman, and Geo. Lockhart, all from Luzerne co., Penn., settled in the town in 1797. The first child born was Wm. McHenry, in 1799; the first marriage, that of Peter Putnam and Polly Waters, in 1804; and the first death, that of Matthew McHenry, in 1801. The first school was taught at Karr Valley, by Jos. A. Rathbun, in Dec. 1802. Benj. Van Campen kept the first inn. at Karr Valley, in 1805; and Phineas Stevens built the first sawmill, in 1806, at Almond Village, and Asa Clark the first gristmill, in 1818.

⁶ The census reports 3 churches: Presb., Bap., and Wes. Meth.

meeting was held at the house of Samuel Van Campen, by Rev. Robert Hubbard, (Presb.,) in 1814; and the first church (Bap.) was formed by Rev. Jonathan Post, in 1816.¹

ANDOVER—was formed from Independence, Jan. 28, 1824. A part of Wellsville was taken off in 1855. It lies upon the e. border of the co., s. of the center. The surface is very hilly and still retains some of the original pine forests. Dyke Creek flows s. w. through the town, receiving several small tributaries. The soil is chiefly a heavy loam resting on hardpan. The primitive forests had a large proportion of pine; and the manufacture of pine lumber—for many years a leading pursuit—is still carried on to some extent. Andover, (p. v.,) near the center of the town, contains 4 churches, a grist and saw mill, and 374 inhabitants. It is a r. r. station. Shoemakers Corners (Elm Valley p. o.) is a hamlet in the w. part of the town. The first settlement was made in the spring of 1795, by Nathaniel Dyke, from Tioga Point, Penn.,—originally from Conn.² The first religious meeting was held at the house of Mr. Dyke, by Rev. Silas Hubbard, in 1808; and the first church (Cong.) was formed by Rev. Robert Hubbard, July 4, 1824.³

ANGELICA⁴—was formed from Leicester, (Livingston co.,) Feb. 25, 1805. Alfred and Caneadea were taken off in 1808, Allen and Seio in 1823, a part of Amity in 1830, and a part of West Almond in 1833. It is an interior town, lying a little n. of the center of the co. Its surface is a hilly upland, broken by the deep ravines of the streams. Genesee River flows across the s. w. corner, and its tributary, Knights Creek, through the center. The soil is a clayey loam upon the uplands, and a gravelly loam in the valleys. Angelica, (p. v.,) on Knights Creek, a little n. of the center of the town, was incorp. May 2, 1835. Besides the co. buildings, it contains the Angelica Academy, 5 churches, 1 bank, 2 newspaper offices, and several mills and manufactories. Pop. 846. The first settlement was made on the site of the village, in 1802, by Philip Church.⁵ The first church (Presb.) was formed by Rev. Robt. Hubbard, in 1811.⁶

BELFAST—was formed from Caneadea, March 24, 1824, as "Orrinsburgh." Its name was changed April 21, 1825. It is an interior town, lying a little n. w. of the center of the co. Its surface is a hilly and broken upland, separated into distinct ridges. Genesee River flows across the n. e. corner. Black and White Creeks, the other principal streams, flow through narrow, irregular valleys bordered by abrupt hillsides. The highest summits are 600 to 800 feet above the streams. The soil is a clayey loam upon the hills, and a gravelly loam in the valleys. Belfast, (p. v.,) on the Genesee, near the mouth of Black Creek, contains 3 churches, the Genesee Valley Seminary,⁷ and several mills. Pop. 801. At this place considerable commerce is carried on by means of the Genesee Valley Canal. Rockville,⁸ (p. o.,) in the w. part, and Transit Bridge, (p. o.,) in the s., are hamlets. The first settlement was made on Genesee River, in 1803, by Benjamin, Elisha, Calvin, and David Chamberlin, brothers, from Penn.⁹ Rev. The surface is a hilly upland, the highest summits being 500 to 800 feet above the valleys. The streams are Philips and Vandemarks Creeks. The soil is a clayey loam upon the hills, and a gravelly loam in the valleys. Philips Creek, (p. v.,) in the n. part, contains 2 churches and 16 dwellings. The first settlement was made in 1817, by Abraham Waldruff, from Ontario co.⁹ The first church (M. E.) was organized at an early period. There are now 2 churches; M. E. and Univ.

WELLSVILLE—was formed from Scio, Andover, and Willing, Nov. 22, 1855. It is an

¹ In the spring of the same year John Teater, from Dutchess co., David Wilson and Stephen Boyce, from Mass., settled in or near Whitesville. The first child born was Dugald C. White, Oct. 23, 1819; the first marriage, that of Daniel Remington and Eliza Eaton, Jan. 1, 1824; and the first death, that of Sam'l W. Goodridge, Jan. 27, 1822. The first school was taught at Whitesville, by Deborah Covel, in the summer of 1822. Sam'l S. White kept the first inn, in 1827, at Whitesville, and Josiah W. Green the first store, at Greens Corners, in 1822. Nath'l Covel erected a sawmill on Clyders Creek, in 1822; and Jas. Maxwell the first gristmill, at Spring Mills, in 1820.

² The census reports 5 churches; Bap., Seventh Day Bap., Presb., M. E., and Univ.

³ James Eastwood, John C. McKeen, and Jas. Davidson, from N. H., settled in the s. part in 1821. The first birth was that of Mary McKeen, in June, 1821; the first marriage, that of Earl Gould and Catharine Eastwood, in June, 1822. The first school was taught by Mrs. Graham McKeen, in the summer of 1821. Wm. Andrews kept the first inn, near Black Creek Corners, in 1826, and Nelson McCall the first store, near the same place, in 1830. The first sawmill was erected by James Davidson, on Black Creek, in 1829.

⁵ Chas. Sniff, Abel Belknap, Amos Rose, and Joshua Wilson,

from New England, were settlers in the town in 1809-10; Levi Benjamin, from Windsor, Vt., settled on Lot 30, near Rushford Village, in 1813. Bethiah Belknap, born in the spring of 1810, and Sam'l Gordee, June 12, 1810, were the first births in town; Wm. Rawson and Lawrence Swift were the first married, in 1811. Plina Bannister taught the first school, near the center, in the winter of 1813-14. Levi Benjamin kept the first inn, a little n. of Rushford Village, in 1813, and Jas. McCall the first store, at the same place, in 1814. The first sawmill was built by Matthew P. Cady, on Caneadea Creek, in 1815; and the first gristmill, by Jas. McCall, on the same stream, in 1818.

⁶ The census reports 4 churches; Bap., Cong., M. E., and Univ.

⁷ Silas Bellamy and Silas Palmer settled in 1809,—the former at Scio Village and the latter in the n. part of the town. Polly, daughter of Silas Knight, was the first child born, in 1806, and the first one that died, in 1808; the first marriage was that of Silas Bellamy and Betsy Knight, in 1809. The first school was taught by Lucy Moore, near the village, in 1816. Alfred Johnson kept the first inn, in 1821. The first sawmill was erected in 1822, and the first gristmill in 1823, by Benj. Palmer.

⁸ 2 R. C. Cong., Bap., and M. E.

⁹ Daniel Hart and Hezekiah Ward settled in the n. part, in 1817-18. Geo. Waldruff kept the first inn, at Philips Creek Village, and Waldruff & Cartwright the first store.

interior town, lying s. e. of the center of the co. Its surface is very broken and mountainous, the highest summits being 800 to 1,200 feet above the valleys. The declivities are too steep for profitable cultivation. The streams are Genesee River and Dyke and Chenunda Creeks, all flowing in narrow and deep valleys winding among the almost precipitous mountains. The soil is mostly a sandy loam. Considerable pine lumber is still manufactured in town. Wellsville, (p. v.,) on Genesee River, was incorp. Oct. 12, 1857; it contains 4 churches, 2 weekly newspaper offices, 2 flouring and 3 saw mills. Pop. 1,286. The first settlements were made in the valley of the Genesee, about the commencement of the century.¹ There are 4 churches in town.²

WEST ALMOND—was formed from Angelica, Almond, and Alfred, April 15, 1833. It is an interior town, lying a little n. e. of the center of the co. Its surface is a broken and elevated upland. The streams are Angelica, Black, Philips, and Karr Valley Creeks,—all flowing in narrow ravines bordered by steep hillsides. The soil is principally a clay loam underlaid by hardpan. West Almond (p. v.) contains a church and 15 houses. The first settlement was made at the center, in 1816, by Daniel Atherton.³ The first religious meeting was held by Rev. Robert Hubbard, (Presb.,) at the house of Daniel Dean, in 1823; and the first and only church (Bap.) was formed in 1824.

WILLING—was formed from Independence and Scio, Nov. 19, 1851. Alma was taken off in 1854, and a part of Wellsville in 1855. It lies upon the s. border of the co., e. of the center. Its surface is a broken and mountainous region, the highest summits being 800 to 1,200 ft. above the valleys. The streams are Genesee River, Cryder, Chenunda, and Fords Creeks, all flowing in narrow valleys bordered by steep mountain declivities. The soil is a clay and sandy loam. A considerable part of the surface is still covered with forests, and lumbering is extensively carried on. Beanville, (Shongo p. o.,) on Genesee River, in the s. part of the town, contains a church and 61 inhabitants; and Halls Port, (p. v.,) in the n. e. corner, a sawmill and 64 inhabitants. Elijah Robinson, from Brookfield, Madison co., settled on the Genesee, adjoining the State line, in 1825. He built a sawmill, made other improvements for four or five years, when he became deranged, and left the town.⁴ The first religious meeting (Prot. Meth.) was held at the house of Daniel Baker, by Rev. Seneca Fish, in 1834.⁵

WIRT—was formed from Bolivar and Friendship, April 12, 1838. It is an interior town, lying s. w. of the center of the co. Its surface is a wild, mountainous upland, divided into three general ridges extending n. and s. The streams are headwaters of Van Campens, Little Genesee, and Dodges Creeks. Richburgh, (p. v.,) in the s. w. part of the town, contains 2 churches, the Richburgh Academy,⁶ 2 steam gristmills, 2 sawmills, and 50 dwellings. Wirt is a p. o., near the center of the town. The first settlement was made in the n. part of the town, in 1812, by Benj. Crabtree and Levi Abbott, from Amsterdam, Montgomery co.⁷ The first religious meeting (Bap.) was held at the house of Benj. Crabtree, in 1816, by Rev. Jonathan Post. The first church (Bap.) was organized in 1826.⁸

² Cong., M. E., Bap., and R. C.

³ Jason Bixby, Isaac Pray, and Daniel Hooker settled on the road leading from Almond to Angelica, and John Alfred, from N. J., near the n. line, all previous to 1818. The first child born was Jerusha, daughter of Daniel Atherton, in the fall of 1817; and the first death, that of Jason Bixby, in the spring of 1818. The first school was taught, in the e. part, by Jasper White, in 1818. Daniel Atherton kept the first inn, in 1817, at the center, and Samuel M. Eddy the first store, at the same place, in 1832. The first sawmill was erected by Enoch Hawke, on Angelica Creek, in 1833.

⁴ The first death was that of a child of Austin Butler, in 1837. The first school was taught near Beanville, in 1836, by Beteey

⁵ There are 2 churches in town; M. E. and Univ.

⁶ This institution has lately been incorp. with the common school system.

⁷ Azel Buckley, from Unadilla, Otsego co., settled in 1814, and Daniel Willard, from Mass., in 1815. Mr. W. is the oldest settler now living in town. The first child born was Benj. Crabtree, jr., in 1813; and the first marriage, that of Hyra Axdell and Lucy Crabtree, in 1814. The first school was taught, in the n. part of the town, by Sophia Hitchcock, in 1820. Alvan Richardson erected the first sawmill, in 1824, and the first gristmill, in 1825, on Genesee Creek, near Richburgh. Mr. Richardson also kept the first inn, in 1824, and Francis L. Leroy the first store, in the same year.

Formed since 1815.

QUEENS COUNTY.

THIS county was organized Nov. 1, 1683,¹ having previously been included in the North and West Ridings of Yorkshire.² Its original bounds have not been changed. It lies upon Long Island, near the w. extremity, is centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains — sq. mi. It extends across the island, bordering both upon Long Island Sound and the ocean. Its coasts are deeply indented by irregular inlets, bays, and harbors. The principal of these upon the sound are Oyster Bay, Cold Spring and Oyster Harbors, Mill Neck Creek, Hempstead Harbor, Manhasset Bay, Little Neck Bay, Little Bay, Powells Cove, Flushing Bay, and Bowery Bay. Upon the East River are Halletts Cove and the narrow passage of Hell Gate, and upon the s. shore, Jamaica, Hempstead, and South Oyster

Bays. Along these bays and the creeks that flow into them are wide salt meadows, the most extensive being upon the s. shore. Outside of the bays on the ocean side is a series of beaches and shifting sand-ridges, affording a complete protection from the storms of the ocean. These beaches are divided into distinct parts by several inlets opening into the bays.³

Inclosed in the bays within the beaches is a great number of low, marshy islands separated by narrow tidal streams and covered with sedges.⁴ A wide strip bordering immediately upon the bays is of the same marshy character. Along the deep bays upon the n. coast are small patches of salt meadow; but the greater part of the land upon the capes, necks, and promontories is of a most excellent character.⁵ A range of hills 100 to 200 feet high extends in a general e. and w. direction through the co., a little n. of the center, and irregular spurs extend northward to the sound. From the base of the ridge a wide, unbroken plain extends to the s. to the salt marshes which surround the bays.⁶

The streams of the co. are mostly small, and afford but a limited amount of water-power. At the mouth of several of the creeks on both the n. and s. shores the ebbing tide is used for hydraulic purposes. At the head of several of the streams are little, fresh water ponds,⁷ the principal of which is Success Pond,⁸ near the top of the high ridge in the s. e. corner of Flushing. The soil upon the n. side is a productive, sandy loam, in some places mixed with clay. The plains have a coarse, sandy soil, which is rendered productive only at considerable cost. Along the borders of the salt meadows is a strip of light, sandy soil, easily cultivated and of moderate fertility.⁹

The people are principally engaged in agriculture and market gardening. Fishing and the taking of oysters afford occupation to a large number of people. An extensive coasting trade is carried on, and the co. each year furnishes a large quota of sailors. Manufactures are extensive and various, and are confined principally to the n. shore.

⁵ A considerable portion of this coast is high, affording beautiful sites for country residences.

⁶ The n. r. at Jamaica is 45 feet above sea level. The ascent from Jamaica to Hempstead Junction is 59 feet, and from thence to the Syosset Branch 50 feet, making the latter 154 feet, which is the highest point on the road. The descent of these plains southward is so gradual as scarcely to be apparent.

The Hempstead Branch of the n. r. descends 40 feet in 2½ mi., and the Syosset Branch rises 66 feet in less than 4 mi. The highest point on the island is Harbor Hill, at the head of Hempstead Harbor, 319 feet above tide.

⁷ Several of these ponds have recently been purchased to supply the Brooklyn Waterworks.

⁸ Called by the Indians "Stout," from which the present name is supposed to be derived. The water is clear and cold, with an average depth of 40 feet. The pond is about 500 rods in circumference, is surrounded by a high bank, and has an outlet, but does not usually overflow. It is said to be 100 to 150 feet above tide.—Prime's Hist. L. I., p. 27; Thompson's L. I., II, p. 60.

¹⁰ The court of sessions of the "North Riding of Yorkshire" was located at Jamaica in 1683; and a building called the "County

The jail occupies a portion of the courthouse building.¹ The county records are kept in a spacious brick building in the village of Jamaica; and in the same building are offices for the Surrogate and Board of Supervisors.² The co. has no poorhouse; but each town provides for the accommodation of its own paupers.

The Brooklyn and Jamaica R. R., extending w. from Jamaica to the co. line, is leased by the Long Island R. R., which extends e. from Jamaica through Hempstead, North Hempstead, and Oyster Bay. The Flushing R. R. extends w. from Flushing Village through Newtown to the mouth of Newtown Creek. The Syosset Branch R. R. connects Hicksville, upon the L. I. R. R., with the village of Syosset, 3½ mi. n.

There are 7 newspapers published in the co.; 2 at Jamaica, 2 at Hempstead, 2 at Flushing, and 1 at Glen Cove.³

The co. was mostly settled by English immigrants, under the authority of the Dutch Government during the last 20 years of its existence. The e. extremity of Long Island was claimed by the English colonies of New England; and the boundary line was the subject of a long and angry dispute, which was never entirely settled until the final subjugation of New York by the British in 1664.⁴ The whole of this co. was under the Dutch, except Oyster Bay, which was a disputed territory. The first planters came on in considerable numbers, and were associated in the purchase of the lands from the Indians. They were mostly united by a common religious faith; and they were invested with certain civil rights, which were afterward confirmed by the English Government of New York, and some of which continue to the present time. The people chose a duplicate set of magistrates and municipal officers, from which the Dutch Governor selected such as he pleased.

The people employed their own minister, and enjoyed comparative religious freedom. The Dutch, however, did not faithfully carry out the agreement which they had entered into with the settlers, and, in 1653, delegates were sent to the city to remonstrate against certain abuses. This was not heeded, and when the people again met for a like purpose they were ordered to disperse. The inhabitants rejoiced when the Dutch rule was finally broken and they came under the protection of the English. Gov. Nicoll, the first English Governor, convened deputies from the several towns upon Long Island, who met at Hempstead in the spring of 1665. A code of laws and ordinances was adopted, a shire was erected, the names of towns were changed, boundaries were settled, and affairs were regulated to meet the views of the new government. From this time no land could be taken without purchase from the Indians and patent from the Governor.

During the Revolution considerable numbers of the people joined the loyalists, and the co. was mostly in quiet possession of the enemy. Robberies were common, especially along the n. shore. Presbyterian churches were everywhere used for military purposes. A petty warfare was carried on in whaleboats, and daring exploits were performed by partisans of both sides.

Hall" was erected in 1684. From 1700 to 1708 the courts were held in the Fresh church, when a new co. hall was built, which continued in use until the Revolution, when it was burned. By an act of March 1, 1795, the sum of £2,000 was raised to erect new buildings on the present location under the direction of the co. judge. The building is a half mi. n. of the R. R., and trains stop opposite when courts are in session. Efforts have been made to remove the site to Jamaica, but thus far without success, although most persons will admit that the present site is inconvenient to a majority of the inhabitants.

¹ In the absence of sufficient accommodations in the vicinity, this building is also used as a hotel during the session of the court. The sheriff, who lives upon the premises, usually makes provision for dining a large number, and for furnishing lodgings to a limited extent.

The Union Hall Gazette, semi-mo., was published at Jamaica in 1832 by L. Booth.

The Long Island Democrat was established at Jamaica May 1, 1835, by Jas. G. Brenton, present publisher.

The Journal and Messenger was published about 1843, by S. V. Berrv.

The Long Island Telegraph and General Advertiser was started at Hempstead in May, 1830, by Wm. Hutchinson and C. F. Le Fevre. In Nov. 1831 it was changed to

The Hempstead Inquirer. It is now published by Morris Suedaker.

The Queens County Sentinel was established at Hempstead in May, 1858, by John H. Hantz, its present publisher.

The Church Record was started at Flushing in 1840, and continued 3½ years. It was edited by Rev. Dr. F. L. Hawks, and published by C. R. Lincoln.

The Flushing Journal was commenced March 19, 1842, by Chas. R. Lincoln, its present publisher.

The Flushing Pomologist was published in 1848, by William R. Prince.

The Public Voice was started at Flushing in 1852; and in 1855 it was changed to

The Long Island Times. It is now published by W. R. Burling.

The North Hempstead Gazette was started in Dec. 1846, at Manhasset Valley. In 1850 it was removed to Roslyn and changed to

The Plain Dealer. It was subsequently removed to Glen Cove, and was continued until 1855; Jas. L. Crowley was its last publisher.

The Glen Cove Sentinel was published a short time in 1854 by Bright & Perry.

The Glen Cove Gazette was started in May, 1857, by E. M. Lincoln, its present publisher.

The Woodhaven Advertiser was published a short time in 1853, The Astoria Gazette was started in 1853 by Wm. L. S. Harrison, and continued about 18 months.

The Journal of the Institute was published at Flushing for about 3 years.

⁴ Commissioners were appointed to settle these claims in 1650. They were Simon Bradstreet and Thos. Prince on the part of the New England colonies, and Thos. Willett and Geo. Baxton on the part of the Dutch. The boundary was fixed along the w. line of Oyster Bay; but the States General did not ratify the agreement, and the Dutch Governor neglected to carry it into effect. The Dutch subsequently planted a colony at Brookville, (Wolver Hollow,) e. of the line, to assert their claims.

FLUSHING¹—was first granted by letters patent—issued by the Dutch Governor Keift, Oct. 10, 1645—to a company of English immigrants.² This grant was confirmed by Gov. Nicoll, Feb. 1666, and by Gov. Dongan, March 23, 1685.³ Under the provisions of these charters a considerable amount of land was held in common, to be under the charge of 5 trustees, elected annually.⁴ It was recognized as a town under the State Government, March 7, 1788.⁵ It lies upon the n. border of the co., w. of the center. Its surface is moderately uneven and has a gentle inclination to the n. A low range of hills extends along its s. border and separates it from Jamaica. Flushing Creek, the principal stream, forms a portion of the w. boundary. The principal indentations upon the coast are Flushing Bay, Powells Cove, Little Bay, and Little Neck Bay. An extensive salt marsh extends along Flushing Creek and the head of Flushing Bay.⁶ The soil is a fine quality of productive sandy loam. Gardening, fruit growing,⁷ and the nursery business⁸ constitute the leading pursuits of the people. The town supports its own poor, and has a house and farm for their accommodation. Flushing, (p. v.,) at the head of Flushing Bay, was incorp. April 9, 1813. It contains 8 churches, 2 newspaper offices, several private seminaries,⁹ and has a limited amount of manufactures.¹⁰ It is connected with New York by the Flushing R. R. and by a steam ferry from Hunters Point. From its proximity to New York, it has become the residence of many wealthy persons doing business in the city. Pop. 3,488. College Point,¹¹ (p. v.,) on the sound, e. of Flushing Bay, is a modern village, settled mostly by Germans. It contains 2 churches, and an immense manufactory of whalebone, India rubber, and ratan, giving employment to 500 to 700 hands. Pop. 1,150. Whitestone¹² (p. v.) is located on the sound, in the extreme n. part of the town. It contains 2 churches, and an extensive tin and sheet ironware manufactory.¹³ Pop. 630. Marathon, at the head of Little Neck Bay, is a small, straggling village with one church. Several of the neighborhoods in this town are known by distinct local names.¹⁴ Wilkins Point has recently been purchased by the U. S. Government for the site of a fort.¹⁵ There are now 13 churches in town.¹⁶ The first settlements were made by English, who probably had first settled in Holland. They arrived at "New Amsterdam" in 1645. They were Non-conformists in religion, and settled on the Dutch dominions under the promise of entire religious freedom.¹⁷ But the Dutch soon commenced a series of persecutions that continued until the time of the British conquest in 1664. Several French Protestant families found their way into this town after the revocation of the Edict of Nantes; but few of their descendants are now found. The fruits introduced by these people are said to have given the first direction to the nursery business for which this town is so celebrated. During the Revolution a British force was stationed here.

HEMPSTEAD—was granted by Gov. Keift to several English families, Nov. 14, 1644. This patent was confirmed by Gov. Nicoll, March 6, 1666, and by Gov. Dongan, April 17, 1685.¹⁸

³ The patentees named in the patent of Gov. Nicoll were John Lawrence (alderman of New York City), Richard Cornell, Chas. Bridges, Wm. Lawrence, Robert Ferry, Wm. Noble, John Forbush, John Doughty, Robt. Field, Philip Udall, Thos. Stiles, Benj. Field, Wm. Hidgeon, John Adams, John Hutchinson, Nicholas Panch, Tobias Peaks, and John Bowne; and those in the patent of Gov. Dongan were Elias Doughty, Thos. Willert, John Bowne, Matthias Harvey, Thos. Hicks, Richard Cornell, John Hutchinson, Jonathan Wright, and Sam'l Hoyt.—Patents, I, 61, V, 222, 245. See Office.

⁴ These lands have since been mostly taken up by individuals, though the trustees are still elected to take charge of the remainder. The town records were burned, Oct. 31, 1797, by a servant girl, who was afterward hung for the deed.

⁷ The principal fruit grown are cherries, of which large quantities are annually sent to the New York market.

⁸ Flushing has a wide reputation for its nurseries, of which there are six, occupying 246 acres and valued at $124,000. The very nursery was commenced about 1750. They now furnish every species of fruit trees, ornamental shrub, and exotic plant cultivated in the country.

⁹ The principal of these schools are the Flushing Institute, the Flushing Female College, and the Lionean Hill Seminary.

¹⁰ The principal manufactories are the Excelsior Emery and Sand Paper Manufactory, a steam plating and saw mill, and a tide gristmill.

¹² Named from a large boulder near the landing. The place was first called "Cookie Hill" and afterward "Clintonville."

¹³ This establishment gives employment to 430 hands.

¹⁴ Bay Side—the seat of A. G. Mickle, Ex-Mayor of New York; and Springville are near Little Neck Bay. Fresh Meadows, Ireland, and Spring Hill are localities s. e. of Flushing Village. Rocky Hill and Union Place are farming neighborhoods. Spring Hill was the residence of Cadwallader Colden, who died here Sept. 20, 1775. His son espoused the cause of the Royalists, and his estate was confiscated.

¹⁶ Of these there are at Flushing, 2 Friends, Prot. E., M. E., Ref. Prot. D., R. C., Cong., and Bap.; at College Point, R. C. and Luth.; at Whitestone, Prot. E. and M. E.; and at Marathon, a Prot. E.

¹⁸ The grantees named in the first patent were Robert Ford

Upon the erection of North Hempstead, in 1784, its name was changed to South Hempstead; and its present name was re-adopted Feb. 5, 1796. It was recognized as a town March 7, 1788. It lies upon the s. side of the island, extending 20 mi. along the ocean, and embracing about 100 sq. mi. The shore is bordered by a line of beaches and sand hills; and within them are Hempstead and South Oyster Bays, inclosing a large number of low, sedgy islands. West of the bay a long, narrow sandbar, known as Rockaway Beach,¹ extends to the s. w., forming the e. boundary of Jamaica Bay. Wide salt meadows border upon the bays, and from them the land spreads out into an almost perfectly level plain.² The soil along the borders of the marshes is moderately fertile, and upon the plain it consists of sand and fine gravel, which is naturally barren, although it may be made productive by the proper application of manures. A considerable portion of the marshes and plain belongs to the town and is used as common property.³ The people are largely engaged in market gardening. There is no poorhouse; but the paupers are annually put up at auction and struck off to the lowest bidder. Hempstead, (p. v.) near the center of the town, was incorp. June 20, 1853. It contains 3 churches, the Hempstead Seminary,⁴ and 1,486 inhabitants. Along the s. shore are several villages, generally scattered and extended over a large territory. They are mostly surrounded by gardens and orchards. South Jerusalem, (p. v.) in the s. e. corner, contains a gristmill and Friends' meetinghouse; next w. are respectively Bridge Haven, containing a gristmill and church, Merrick,⁵ (p. o.) and Greenwich Point, two farming neighborhoods; Freeport,⁶ (p. v.), a fishing village, containing 2 churches; Milburn, Baldwinville, and Christian Hook, hamlets; Rockville Center, (p. v.), containing 1 church; Near Rockaway, a hamlet, and Far Rockaway, (Rockaway p. o.), a noted seabathing place.⁷ Valley Stream and Fosters Meadows are two scattered settlements along the e. border. New Bridge, (formerly "Little Neck,") Washington Square, and Brookfield are farming neighborhoods. The first settlements were made in 1643, by a colony of English, who had previously settled at Weathersfield and Stamford, in Conn. They founded the first English settlement within the co.⁸ The town early acquired a prominent rank, and its records (preserved at North Hempstead) contain a large amount of valuable historical information. Horse races were established here by the Governor in 1690. The first church (Presb.) was started in 1648. There are 18 churches in town.⁹

JAMAICA¹⁰—was first granted for settlement by Gov. Stuveysant, March 21, 1656; and a more ample patent was granted in 1660. The rights of the town were confirmed by Gov. Nicoll, Feb. 15, 1666, and by Gov. Dongan, March 17, 1686.¹¹ It was recognized as a town March 7, ham, John Strickland, John Ogden, John Karman, John Lawrence, and Jonas Wood; those in the second patent were John Hicks, J. P., Capt. John Seaman, Richard Gildersleeve, Robert Jackson, John Karman, John Smith, sr. and jr.; and those in the third were Capt. John Sesman, Simon Searing, John Jackson, James Pine, sr., Richard Gildersleeve, sr., and Nath'l Pearsall.—Thompson's Hist. L. I., II, 14; Patents, IV. 55, V. 182; Sec. Office.

³ About 16,000 acres of the plain and the salt meadows are common property. The time for cutting the hay is fixed at the annual town meetings, and the first one on the ground has the choice of location. This leads the farmers to the meadows at an early hour on the appointed day, and sometimes during the night previous, where they stand scythe in hand, ready at the first glance of sunrise to strike into the grass before them and mow ground as large a piece as they may be able. Several hundred men are often thus employed. Each inhabitant may hire as many laborers as he chooses, and may cut for sale. North Hempstead formerly enjoyed the right of cutting grass upon these meadows, but has been practically deprived of it for many years. See page —

and Robert Fordham. In 1647 the first eight, with Robt. Ashman, Jeremy, Edmond, and Terry Wood, Benj. and John Coe, Sam'l Strickland, John Topping, John Fordham, Wm. and John Lawrence, Henry Hudson, Thomas Ireland, Richard Valentine, Wm. Thickstone, Nicholas Tanner, Wm. John, sr. and jr., Jas., and Alvin Smith, Richard, jr., Sam'l, Dan'l, and Nath'l Denton, Thos. Armitage, Simon Searing, Thomas Willet, Henry Pierson, Jos. and Wm. Scott, Henry Whiston, Richard and John Lewis, Thos. Stevenson, John Storge, John and Robert Williams, Wm. Rogers, Richard Ogden, John Foucks, Wm. Washburne, Thos. Sherman, Francis Yates, John Allison, Wm. Shadding, Thomas and Chas. Foster, Roger Lines, Sam'l Clark, John Hudd, Thos. Pope, Daniel Whitehead, Edward Raynor, John Smith, Samuel Bacon, and John Strickland were freeholders, and shared in the division of the lands. A part of the above locations are now included in North Hempstead. The first child born of white parents in town was Caleb Karman, son of John Karman, Jan. 3, 1645. An order was made at their General Court, Sept. 16, 1650, requiring all persons to "repair to the publique Meetings and Assemblies on the Lords days, and on publique dayes of fastings and thankgivings, appointed by pul'lique auctority, bothe on the forenoons and afternoons," under a penalty of 5 guilders for the first, 10 for the second, and 20 for the third offense. The Rev. Richard Denton, a prominent founder was their first pastor. He returned to England in 1659, and wrote a historical account of New York, which was published in London in 1670.

⁹ 10 M. E., 3 Prot. E., 2 Presb., 2 R. C., and one Friends. Near the M. E. Church in South Hempstead is a monument erected to the memory of 139 English and Irish immigrants who perished on the ships Bristol and Mexico, wrecked Nov. 21, 1836, and Jan. 2, 1837.

¹¹ The first patent of confirmation contained the names of Daniel Denton, J. P., Robt. Coe, Capt. Bryan Newton, Wm. Hallet, Andrew Messenger, and Nathaniel Denton; and the second named 24 persons.—Patents, I, 66, 91, V, 432; Sec. Office.

1788. It is the s. w. corner town of the co. A range of low sand hills forms its n. boundary; but the remainder of the town consists of an extensive sand plain, and a series of wide salt marshes along the shore. Jamaica Bay, forming its s. boundary, incloses a large number of low, marshy islands. Several small streams take their rise in springs and small ponds among the hills and flow s. to the bay.¹ The soil is light and sandy. A considerable tract immediately bordering upon the marshes is kept in a high state of fertility by artificial means, and is devoted to market gardening. This town has long been celebrated for its race courses.² The town poor are annually sold to the lowest bidder.³ Jamaica, (p. v.,) near the n. border of the town, was incorp. April 14, 1814. It contains 6 churches, the Union Hall Academy,⁴ several private seminaries, a union school, 2 newspaper offices, and several manufactories.⁵ Pop. 2,817. Woodhaven was organized in 1850 by a number of capitalists for the manufacture of shoes. Cypress Avenue is a r. r. station near the line of Kings co. The country in the immediate vicinity is laid out in a village plat, and named Unionville, from the Union Race Course; Clarenceville is a village plat on the r. r., e. of Jamaica; Centerville, a plat adjacent to the trotting course; Hopedale and Jamaica Heights, two prospective villages in the n. part; Willow Tree, a r. r. station, e. of Jamaica; Queens,⁶ (p. o.,) a r. r. station near the e. line, and Springfield, a vicinage 3 mi. long, in the e. part, extending to the bay. The first settlement was made about 1656, by people from Hempstead, who in that year obtained leave of the Dutch Government to purchase lands and erect a town, "according unto their place limited, named Canarise, about midway from Hempstead." In 1702 the civil officers of government removed to this place, on account of prevailing sickness. An attempt was made soon after to appropriate the church to the use of the Episcopalians,—which was resisted, and a controversy commenced, which was not settled until 1728. In 1753 the General Assembly again convened at this place. During the Revolution the town was occupied by the British, and, especially in winter, large bodies of troops were stationed here. The Dutch Church was used as a storehouse. The first church (Presb.) was formed in 1663. The Ref. Prot. D. Church was formed in 1702; and the first Prot. E. services were held during the same year. The Chapel of the Sisters—a neat edifice, built of hewn granite—was erected in the Presb. Cemetery, by Nicholas Ludlum, of New York.⁷

NEWTOWN⁸—was first conveyed by patent, by Gov. Stuyvesant, in 1652. The grant was confirmed by Gov. Nicoll, March 6, 1666, and by Gov. Dongan, Nov. 25, 1683.⁹ It was recognized as a town March 7, 1788. It lies upon the East River and Long Island Sound, in the n. w. corner of the co., and includes North and South Brother, Rikers, and Berriens Islands.¹⁰ A range of hills extends along the s. border; but the remaining part of its surface is level or moderately uneven. Flushing Creek forms a portion of the e. boundary, and Newtown Creek a portion of the w. boundary. Extensive salt meadows border upon these creeks and the bays. Hell Gate is a narrow, tortuous passage between Wards Island and Hallets Point, near the n. extremity of the town.¹¹ The soil is a fine quality of sandy loam. Market gardening and the cultivation of flowers are the most important business. The town poor are let out by contract. Astoria,¹² (p. v.,) upon East River, near Hell Gate, was incorp. April 12, 1836. It contains 5 churches, a female seminary, union school, and several extensive manufactories.¹³ It is particularly distinguished for its floral gardens

² A course was laid out, in colonial times, around the border of Beaver Pond,—a sheet of water adjacent to the village, since drained. Union Course was laid out soon after the passage of the act of 1821, and continued under that of 1834. It is now owned by the "Union Association," formed under general act, Aug. 2, 1858, with a capital of $100,000. It is a few feet over a mile in circuit. There is a trotting course s. e. of the former.

⁶ Formerly called "Brushville." The name was changed at a public meeting, Jan. 1, 1857.

⁷ There are now 7 churches in town; 2 M. E., Af. Meth., Ref. Prot. D. Presb., Prot. E., and R. C.

⁸ Named after "Hildelberg," under the Dutch.

⁹ The first deed of confirmation contained the names of Capt.

Richard Betts, J. P., Capt. Thos. Lawrence, Capt. John Coe, John Burroughs, Ralph Hunt, Dan'l Whitehead, and J. Burger Yost; and the second the names of 108 freeholders. The annual quit-rent was 3¢ ds.—Patents, II, 78; Sec. Office: Thompson's Hist. L. I., II, 142.

¹² This place was formerly known as "Hallets Cove," and was settled by Stephen A. and John C. Halsey. At the time of its incorporation it was proposed to call it "Sunswick," from the Indian name of a stream near by; but the name Astoria was adopted, in hope of securing a gratuity from John Jacob Astor. In this, however, the people were disappointed, as he gave only $100 to the seminary.

¹³ The principal manufactories are the chemical works for

and greenhouses.¹ It is connected with New York by ferries, and is inhabited by many persons doing business in the city. Pop. about 3,200. Ravenswood, (p. v.,) upon the East River, is a suburban village, and the houses consist mostly of costly residences. The poorhouse farms of New York City were located at this place previous to the purchase of the islands in the river for that purpose.² A rifle cartridge factory exploded here about 1850, occasioning a great destruction of life. Hunters Point³ is a newly surveyed and thinly settled village, immediately n. of the mouth of Newtown Creek. It has several manufactories,⁴ and is rapidly increasing in business and population. Newtown, (p. v.,) near the center, and Perry Bridge are stations upon the Flushing R. R.; and Winfield and West Flushing are village plats upon the same roads. Maspeth⁵ (p. o.) lies near the head of Newtown Creek; and Melvina, Columbusville, and Winantsville are village plats in the same vicinity. Lawrenceville, n. w. of Winfield, and Middletown, s. e. of Astoria, are village plats. Locust Grove, Linden Hills, New Astoria, Middle Village, and South Williamsburgh are localities and prospective villages. Dutch Kills is a gardening neighborhood. St. Ronans Well, a wooded island near the head of Flushing Bay, contains 7 acres, and is a favorite resort for picnic parties. Calvary Cemetery, on the Laurel Hills, n. of Newtown Creek, contains 75 acres, and is owned by the R. C. denomination. The Cemetery of the Evergreens, in the s. w. corner, is partly in Brooklyn and partly in New Lots, Kings co. It is beautifully situated upon the Cypress Hills, and contains 115 acres, with the privilege of extending its area to 500 acres. Cypress Hills Cemetery, e. of the latter, is also situated upon the highlands, and contains 400 acres.⁶ Mount Olivet Cemetery lies near Maspeth, and the Lutheran Cemetery near Middle Village. The National Race Course, incorp. May 31, 1854, is located near the Flushing R. R.⁷ The first settlements were made in 1651, by English immigrants, who had first located in New England. The first grant of privileges obtained from the Dutch in 1652 was followed by another more liberal in its character in 1665. The early records of the town were lost during the British occupation in the Revolution. A blockhouse was built at Hell Gate during the Revolution, and a water-battery, named Fort Stevens,⁸ during the War of 1812. The first church edifice (Presb.) of which there is any record was erected, in 1670, at Newtown Village; and the first preacher was Rev. John Moorehead, who was employed from the first settlement until his death, in 1661. The census reports 15 churches in town.⁹

NORTH HEMPSTEAD¹⁰—was formed from Hempstead, April 6, 1784. It lies upon Long Island Sound, between Hempstead Harbor and Little York Bay, and on the s. extends to near the center of Hempstead Plains. A range of hills extends e. and w. through near the center; and from them spurs extend to the Sound, giving to the n. part a moderately hilly character. Hempstead Harbor and Manhasset Bay are irregular bays extending far inland and dividing the coast into several "necks" and points,—the principal of which are Cow Neck, Motts, Prospect, Sands, making dry alkalies, the U. S. Vulcanized Gutta Percha Belting and Packing Works, and an extensive carpet factory.

¹ Grant Thorburn, the celebrated seedman and florist, had a nursery here from 1832 to 1851. There are now a moral establishments for supplying the city market, besides many gentlemen's greenhouses, graperies, &c.

² About 1834-35, the corporation of New York City erected extensive buildings, about 1½ m. s. from Astoria, for a pauper establishment, which were sold at public auction, April 15, 1847, upon the removal of these institutions to the islands in the river. Three large buildings—called the "Boys' Nursery," "School House," and "Infant Nursery," the property of Wm. W. Miles—were leased (May 25) to the Commissioners of Emigration for a ship fever hospital, and other purposes. A public meeting was held immediately after at Astoria, to express indignation at the application of the property to these uses and to remonstrate against it. The people failing to obtain their object, the premises were assailed and destroyed on the night of May 26-27, 1847, by a large mob in disguise. An attempt was made to repeat the expense of these losses upon the town; and, after frustrated efforts, the owner recovered $3,000 from the State by act of March 17, 1855.—Assem. Doc. 1848, Nos. 19, 161, 164, 186; Senate Doc. 1849, No. 31, and 1850, Nos. 62 and 82.

⁴ The principal manufactories are a flint glass factory, chemical works, paint and varnish factory, foundry for the manufacture of iron pipes, and an oil and locomotive grease factory. Considerable ship-building is also done here.

⁵ Sometimes written "Maspeth," "Mispeth," &c. It was settled by English, and often designated "English Kills," to distinguish

it from Dutch Kills. De Witt Clinton formerly resided here. A foundry for casting metallic burial cases was established here several years since.

⁶ The general act forbids cemeteries to hold more than 250 acres in one co.; and hence this was located in two. A special act allows this cemetery to hold 100 acres more in Queens co. The highest point is 219 ft. above tide.

⁷ The company that owns this course is incorp., with a capital of $250,000.

Barker, and Hewletts Points, and Plum Beach.¹ The soil upon the plains is light and sandy, and in the n. part a sandy and clayey loam, very productive. The town poor are supported by the Jones Fund,² at an institution situated at Brookville, in the town of Oyster Bay; and 2 trustees are annually elected to the board having this fund in charge. Manhasset,³ (p. v.) near the center, a straggling village, contains 4 churches. The neck of land extending eastward of Manhasset Bay is called Manhasset.⁴ Roslyn, (p. v.) at the head of Hempstead Harbor and 2 mi. above the steamboat landing, contains 2 churches and several manufactories.⁵ Pop. 592. North Hempstead (p. o.) is at the co. courthouse; Mineola (p. v.) is a scattered village at the junction of the L. I. & Hempstead Branch R. Roads; Flower Hill is a farming neighborhood near the center of Manhasset Neck; Montrose, a village plat near the country seat of Wm. C. Bryant. Westbury⁶ is a farming neighborhood, extending from near the courthouse to the e. line of the town. Carl Place, near Westbury, and Clowesville, near Mineola, are village plats. Hyde Park,⁷ near the r. r., Lakeville,⁸ near the line of Flushing, and Farmers Village, on the edge of the plains, are farming localities. Port Washington is a small fishing village on the w. side of Manhasset Bay. The first settlement was made in the spring of 1640, by a small company of English immigrants from Lynn, Mass., under the lead of Capt. Daniel Howe, who took possession of the head of Cow Bay, under the authority of Fawett, agent of the Earl of Stirling. The Dutch sent a party of soldiers, who captured several of the intruders; but they were released upon promising to quit the place. These persons afterward made the first settlement at Southampton. The necks of land of this town were first used for pasturage in commons. During the Revolution marauding parties committed various deprivations upon the people of this town, rendering both property and life insecure. The census reports 9 churches in town.⁹

OYSTER BAY¹⁰—was patented by Gov. Nicoll, Nov. 29, 1667, and confirmed by Gov. Andross, Sept. 29, 1677.¹¹ It was recognized as a town March 7, 1788. It occupies the e. extremity of the co., and extends across the island from the sound to the ocean. The n. shore is deeply indented by irregular bays, the principal of which are Oyster Bay, Cold Spring, and Oyster Bay Harbors, Mill Neck Creek, and Mosquito Cove. Cove Neck, Center Island,¹² and Mosquito Neck are long peninsulas formed by these bays;¹³ Lloyds Neck is a peninsula extending e. of Cold Spring Harbor. The great indentation of South Oyster Bay, separated from the ocean by Jones Beach, forms the s. boundary. This bay is bordered by salt meadows, and incloses several marshy islands belonging to the town. A range of hills extends through the n. part; and the remainder of the surface is level. The soil is a sandy and clayey loam, and with proper care is very productive. The town poor are supported by the Jones Fund.¹⁴ Oyster Bay, (p. v.) on Oyster Bay Harbor, contains 6 churches and 900 inhabitants;¹⁵ Glen Cove,¹⁶ (p. v.), near Hempstead Harbor, in the n. w. part, contains 3 churches, a printing office, fire insurance office, and a corn starch factory.¹⁷ South Oyster Bay (p. o.) is a scattered village on the s. shore. Farmingdale (p. o.) is a hamlet and r. r. station near the e. line; Hicksville¹⁸ (p. o.) is a r. r. station near the w. line. Syosset¹⁹ (p. o.) is the present terminus of a r. r. extending n. e. from

⁴ Formerly called "Cow Neck," and by the Indians "Sint Sink." It was originally inclosed from Hempstead Harbor to the creek by a fence separating it from Great Neck; and every person was entitled to put as many cattle upon it as he built standing gates or panels of fence. When afterward distributed, in 1774, these rights were called gate-rights. The number of contributors in 1658 was 60, and the number of panels of fence 526.

⁷ Upon the open grounds s. of this place, anciently called "Salisbury Plains," a race course was established by Gov. Nicoll in 1665. It was called "New Market," and continued devoted to the sports of the turf more than one hundred years.

¹¹ Henry Townsend, sr., Nicholas and Gideon Wright, Richard Harrison, Joseph Carpenter, and Josiah Lathing were named in both patents.—Patents, 1, 104, 162; See, Office.

¹³ The principal caps or points upon the n. shore are Olivers, Sopers, Mosses, Plum, Center Island, Old Neck, Fox Island, Peacock, Matinicock, and Red Spring Points.

¹⁴ In 1838, Sam'l Jones gave $30,000—known as the 'Jones Fund'—for the support of the poor of this town and North Hempstead; and if the income of this fund was more than sufficient for this purpose, the surplus was to belong to Flushing. A farm was purchased at Brookville, upon which suitable buildings have been erected for the support of the poor. Walter R. Jones, the distinguished financier, also a citizen of this town, gave $5,000 more for the same purpose. The fund is managed by 3 trustees, chosen by this town, and 2 by North Hempstead. The institution is known as the "Jones Institute"; and it supports 60 to 70 indigent persons annually.

¹⁵ P. O. changed to "Syosset" Jan. 20, 1846, and old name restored one week after. Jas. Colwell, appointed P. M. by Jefferson, held the office till his death, in 1854, when his granddaughter was appointed.

¹⁷ This factory employs 40 hands, and manufactures 15 tons of starch per day.

¹⁸ Named from Elias Hicks, the Quaker reformer.

¹⁹ Formerly known as "East Woods."

Hicksville, projected to Cold Spring. Norwich (East Norwich p. o.) is a farming settlement 3 mi. s. e. of Oyster Bay.¹ Cedar Swamp, (p. o.), s. e. of Glen Cove, and Locust Valley,² n. e. of the same place, are farming settlements. Jericho (p. o.) is a settlement, n. of Hicksville;³ Woodbury (p. o.) is a small village, near the e. border; Lloyds Neck is a farming vicinage, in the extreme n. e. part;⁴ Bethpage is a farming locality, and Brookville is a hamlet⁵ Fort Neck was named from two ancient Indian forts.⁶ Dosoris,⁷ Lattingtown, and Matinicoek⁸ are localities n. e. of Glen Cove. An attempt was made by a party of English to make a settlement in this town in 1640; but the settlers were driven off by the Dutch. In 1642 other English parties, who had purchased lands of the Indians, were also driven off. The question of jurisdiction was a matter of debate until 1650, when commissioners were appointed on both sides to settle it. The w. boundary of Oyster Bay was fixed upon as the line of separation of the two colonies; and in 1653 the first permanent English settlement was made, upon land previously purchased of the Indians.⁹ In 1662 the town formed a close alliance with Conn. De Lancey's corps of royalists built a small fort on the hill, in the village of Oyster Bay, in 1776; and it was occupied by Simcoe's Queen's Rangers in 1773 and '78. The census reports 16 churches in town.¹⁰

1 The town records are usually kept at this place.
 2 The p. o. at this place was called "Buckram" until recently.
 3 Elias Hicks formerly resided here. The first settlement was made by Robert Williams, in 1650; called by the Indians "Laxum."
 4 The neck, containing 2,849 acres, is separated from the remainder of the town by Cold Spring Harbor. It is connected with Huntington, Suffolk co., by a narrow isthmus. It is principally devoted to the raising of stock. The Indians called it "Caum-ett," and it is called "Horse-Neck" on old documents. It was patented, in 1685, to Jas. Lloyd, of Boston, and erected into a manor. The British maintained a post here during the Revolution; and one of the officers stationed there was the Duke of Clarence, afterward William IV. Daily steamers touch at Lloyd's Dock, on the w. side of the neck.
 5 This place was settled by the Dutch, to assert their claim to lands claimed by the English. The Jones Institute is located here.

 6 In 1775, Daniel Jones, of this place, gave £300 sterling for a charity school at Oyster Bay.
 7 Sometimes written Desoris. It is an abbreviation of dos uzoris, or "dowry of a wife,"—the property having come to the first settler, Coles, by his wife.
 8 A Friends' meetinghouse was erected here in 1682.
 9 Peter Wright, Wm. Leveridge, Samuel Mayo, Wm. and John Washburne, Thos. Armitage, Anthony Wright, Robt. Williams, and Richard Holdbrook were joint purchasers. Henry Townsend obtained a grant for a mill Sept. 1661, and erected the first mill, in 1663. There were 53 freeholders in town.

KINGS COUNTY.

This county was organized with its present limits, Nov. 1, 1683.¹ It lies upon the w. end of Long Island, adjacent to New York Harbor, and embraces several small islands adjacent to the coast. It is centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains — sq. mi. The surface is generally level or gently undulating. A broad range of drift hills, 50 to 100 feet above tide, extends from the shore of the bay in the s. w. corner in a n. e. direction through the co. From their summits the surface gradually declines both to the n. and s., and terminates upon the shores in extensive salt meadows. The portion lying n. of the hills is moderately uneven, being occasionally broken by low, isolated drift hills. The shores are deeply indented by bays, which for the most part are shallow, and very irregular in outline. The principal of these are Hallets Cove, Newtown Creek,² Wallabout, Gowanus, and Gravesend Bays on the w., and Sheeps Head Bay on the s. Jamaica Bay, a large, shallow, landlocked bay upon the s. shore, is partially in this co. It incloses a large number of low, marshy islands separated by narrow and irregular tidal currents. Wide salt marshes extend along the shores of the bays, and far inland along the courses of the small creeks.³ The soil is mostly a light, sandy loam. A strip immediately surrounding the marshes and embracing a large share of the w. extremity is fertile, and capable of producing almost any crop adapted to the climate. Its close proximity to New York, the great commercial center of the country, renders it favorably situated for the development of manufactures and commerce; and both of these pursuits are largely carried on at the centers of population. The agriculture of the co. is mostly confined to gardening for the N. Y. market. All of the business of the co.—manufacturing, commercial, and agricultural—are so intimately connected with the interests of New York that the co. may be considered as a suburb of the great city.⁴

The county seat is located at the city of Brooklyn.⁵ The courts are accommodated at the City Hall, which belongs exclusively to the city. The jail, located upon Raymond St., is closely surrounded by other buildings, and its ventilation is very imperfect. The average number of inmates is 80, supported at a weekly cost of $2.10 each.⁶ The Kings Co. Penitentiary is located upon a farm of 38 acres near the s. line of Brooklyn. The buildings, now nearly completed, are of stone, and sufficiently spacious for the accommodation and care of all the prisoners of the co. The main building is 490 feet long by 86 feet broad, with two wings of 50 feet each. The total cost up to January 1, 1857 was $190,414.35. The institution is designed to be self supporting. The county clerk's office is kept at the City Hall.⁷ The Kings County Almshouse is located upon a farm of 70 acres in Flatbush, about three miles s. of the City Hall of Brooklyn. This institution consists of four large brick buildings,—the almshouse proper, hospital, nursery, and lunatic asylum. These buildings are spacious and well arranged, but poorly ventilated. A school is maintained through the year, and religious instruction is given upon the Sabbath.

⁴ For more minute description of the business of the co., see town descriptions.

⁵ The courts were originally held at Gravesend; but, by an act of the General Assembly, passed Nov. 7, 1685, they were removed to Flatbush, and a courthouse was built there the succeeding year. This building was used until 1758, when a new combined courthouse and jail was erected. By an act passed April 6, 1784, a tax of £200 was authorized to be raised to repair the injuries which had been done to the courthouse and jail by the British. The repairs were expended under the direction of Philip Wagel and Jeremias Vanderbit. By an act of March

10, 1791, the courthouse and jail were directed to be rebuilt under the direction of Johannes E. Lott, John Vanderbit, and Chas. Doughty, and £1,200 was appropriated for that purpose. During the next year £300 additional was raised to finish the buildings. These buildings were burned Nov. 3, 1852; and by act of Feb. 27, 1834, the co. seat was removed to Brooklyn. The first co. officers after the Revolution were Nicholas Cowchoven, First Judge; Jacob Sharp, Jr., Clerk; Wm. Boerum, Sheriff; and Johannes E. Lott, Surrogate.

⁶ Up to June 1, 1858, 39,910 prisoners had been confined in this jail.

Children are bound out at the age of 12 years. The average number of inmates is 1,800, supported at a weekly cost of about $2.00 each. The farm yields a revenue of $3,500.

The Brooklyn & Jamaica R. R. extends from the s. ferry of Brooklyn eastward through near the center of the co. The Flushing R. R. extends from Green Point, in the n. part of Brooklyn, to the village of Flushing, a distance of 7½ mi. In the city of Brooklyn are several local railroad; and from the city lines of stages extend to every village in the co.

The Long Island Intelligencer, the first newspaper in the co., was published some time before 1807.

Four newspapers—three daily and one weekly—are now published in the co.¹

The first settlements of this co. were made mostly by the Dutch, about 1625. In 1640, a colony of Mass. Quakers, in quest of religious freedom, settled at Gravesend under the protection of the Dutch Government. Long previous to the English conquest of 1664, settlements had been made, mills erected, and churches and schools established in every town in the co. The settlers were so exclusively Dutch that the Dutch language and customs prevailed until within a comparatively recent period. Bushwick, Brooklyn, Flatbush, Flatlands, and New Utrecht were known under the English Government as the "Five Dutch Towns;" and they were associated, for certain purposes, until 1690.² The Five Towns also formed an ecclesiastical society, and joined in the support of their minister until the final separation of the American church from the Classis of Holland, in 1772.

Few events of interest occurred within the limits of this co. during the colonial period. Its Revolutionary annals belong to the general history of the country. During its occupation by the British, from 1776 to 1782, the people were subjected to a series of disgraceful and oppressive acts.³ Many of the inhabitants left the co. from fear of hostile visits during the War of 1812-15; and at times much alarm was felt,—although no hostile visit actually took place. It has shared in the growth of New York City, and is closely identified with it in business. This co. is included in the "Metropolitan Police District" created by act of April 15, 1857, and in the Board of Police Commissioners it is represented by the Mayor of Brooklyn and one other member. Vast schemes of speculation have from time to time arisen, most of which have resulted in loss, and several of them, devised upon a magnificent scale, have seriously retarded the progress of needful improvement.

From 1850 to 1853 about 40 building associations were organized in this co., ostensibly to enable those of humble means to acquire a home, but practically to form contributions to a fund which was loaned to those members who would allow the highest premium. The rates submitted to were often extremely ruinous, and the speculation had but a brief existence.

¹ The Long Island Star was started in June, 1809, by Thos. Kirk. In 1811 it was bought by Alden Spooner, and has been continued by him and his sons until the present time.

The Brooklyn Daily Evening Star was begun by Alden Spooner & Sons, Jan. 4, 1841. It is still issued, by Edwin B. Spooner. A semi-weekly edition was issued from The Star office in 1824.

The Long Island Patriot was started at Brooklyn in 1830 by Geo. L. Birch. In 1833 it was changed to

The Brooklyn Advocate, and was issued by James A. Bannett. In 1835-36 it was changed to

The Brooklyn Advocate and Nassau Gazette.

³ By an act of March 6, 1784, Kings co. was taxed $13,000 to repay Revolutionary expenses.

BROOKLYN¹—was incorp. by patent, with the usual privileges of townships, under Gov. Lovelace, Oct. 18, 1667, and its rights were confirmed by Gov. Dongan, May 13, 1686. It was recognized as a town under the State Government March 7, 1788. The village of Brooklyn was incorp. as a fire district April 2, 1801, and as a village April 12, 1816, and both town and village were incorp. as a city April 8, 1834. The city of Williamsburgh and town of Bushwick were annexed April 17, 1854.² The city extends along New York Bay and East River to Newtown Creek, occupying the n. part of the co. Its exterior line is 22 mi., and it contains an area of 16,000 acres. The s. and e. borders are occupied by a broad range of low hills, which extend e. into Queens co. Along the shore opposite the lower point of New York is an irregular bluff known as "Brooklyn Heights." A considerable portion of the s. part of the city is low and level. Newtown Creek, forming the n. boundary, is an irregular arm of the sea, receiving several small fresh water streams. Wallabout Bay is a deep indentation lying between the old cities of Williamsburgh and Brooklyn. Gowanus Bay extends into the s. part of the city.³ The land that borders upon these bays is flat and marshy.

Within the limits of Brooklyn are several districts known by the names which they bore when they were distinct localities, before the city was incorporated. These will eventually all be lost in the growth and consolidation of the business of the city. Brooklyn (p.o.) includes the old settled parts of the city s. of Wallabout Bay. Upon East River, in this district, are several large manufactories. The water front is entirely occupied by wharves and warehouses. Williamsburgh (p.o.) includes the thickly settled portions n. of Wallabout Bay. It contains a large number of manufacturing establishments, and its entire water front is devoted to commercial purposes. Green Point, (p.o.), comprising the 17th ward, lies between Bushwick and Newtown Creeks, and occupies the extreme n. w. part of the city. It contains extensive shipyards, and manufactories of porcelain, coal oil, lifeboats, and many other articles. Wallabout (sometimes called East Brooklyn) lies e. of Wallabout Bay. Bedford and New Brooklyn are localities on the r. r., in the e. part of the city. Bushwick Cross Roads and Bushwick Green are villages e. of Williamsburgh. Gowanus is a village near the head of Gowanus Bay. South Brooklyn comprises the portion of the city lying s. of Atlantic St. It has an extensive water front; and along the shore immense works have been constructed to facilitate commerce.⁴ It contains extensive wood, coal, stone, and lumber yards, and numerous planing mills, distilleries, breweries, plaster mills, founderies, and machine shops. The city is connected with New York by 11 steam ferries, all supplied with excellent boats, which perform regular and frequent trips.⁵ From the Atlantic St. Ferry the Brooklyn & Jamaica R. R. extends e. to the e. bounds of the co.⁶

From the principal ferries lines of city railroads extend through the principal avenues and radiate to nearly every part of the city, affording easy, rapid, and cheap means of communication.⁷ The commerce of Brooklyn is extensive, though it scarce has an independent existence, from its intimate relations with that of New York. The docks and piers at South Brooklyn are among the most extensive and commodious in the country. Ship and boat building and repairing are extensively carried on at Williamsburgh and Green Point. The whole water front of the city is occupied by ferries, piers, slips, and boat and ship yards; and the aggregate amount of business

² Bushwick—signifying wood-town—was invested with certain powers of government March 14, 1661. Another patent was granted Oct. 25, 1667; but it remained associated with other towns until Aug. 12, 1708. Williamsburgh Village, in this town, was incorp. April 14, 1827, and the town of Williamsburgh was formed March 16, 1840. The village and town were united and incorp. as the City of Williamsburgh April 7, 1851, and the city and town of Bushwick were annexed to Brooklyn April 17, 1854. Bushwick now constitutes the 17th and 18th wards, and Williamsburgh the 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, and a part of the 19th wards.

³ Acts have been passed authorizing a canal, with basins, wharves, and slips, to be constructed along the creek that flows into this bay. The mouth of the creek has been improved for a short distance.

⁴ The Atlantic Dock contains an area of 40 acres, and has sufficient depth of water for any vessel. An outside pier is 3,000 feet long. The warehouses upon the piers are of granite. The Erie Basin and other extensive docks along the bay have been projected, and work upon them has commenced. These docks afford perfect security to vessels while loading and unloading, and security to goods against theft. It is estimated that $1,000,000 worth of goods are annually stolen from the wharves and ships at New York and Brooklyn.

⁵ These several ferries are all chartered by the Corporation of N. Y. City. The boats average 400 tons, and are noted for the regularity with which they perform their trips. See page —.

⁶ This road is leased to the Long Island R. R. during the term of its charter. A tunnel 2,750 feet long, extending under a portion of Atlantic St., commences near the ferry. It was finished in Dec. 1844, at a cost of $96,000.

⁷ In 1855 the city authorized the granting of charters for these transacted there forms an important item in the commerce of the State. In the extent and variety of its manufactures Brooklyn ranks among the first cities in the country. Located near the great commercial center, it has become the seat of an immense manufacturing interest.¹

The U. S. Navy Yard is located upon Wallabout Bay.² The premises connected with it occupy an area of 45 acres, and are inclosed on the land side by a high wall. Within the inclosure are various mechanic shops necessary in building and repairing vessels, a large and costly dry dock,³ two large buildings to cover ships of war while in process of building, extensive lumber warehouses, several marine railways, and a large amount of balls, cannon, and other munitions of war. The Naval Lyceum is filled with curiosities sent home by naval officers. Upon a gentle rise, a little e. of the Navy Yard, is a U. S. Marine Hospital⁴ for the care of sick and infirm seamen belonging to the navy. Near it is an extensive laboratory for the manufacture of medicines for the navy.⁵ The grounds belonging to these establishments occupy an area of 35 acres. A little s. of the Navy Yard, upon Park Avenue, are extensive Marine Barracks.

The city is well supplied with pure, soft water, derived from Hempstead Hook, Valley, and Spring-

city railroads to the parties who should offer to carry passengers at the lowest price. The Brooklyn City R. Co., formed Dec. 17, 1853, received the grants; and the fare upon the several lines, without regard to distance, is 5 cents. The following is a list of these several railroads:—

² The land occupied by the Navy Yard was ceded to the General Government by the State in 1807.

³ The site for the dry dock was fixed by Col. Baldwin, in 1826; but efficient work was not commenced until 1841. It was subsequently prosecuted under the charge of several engineers, as follows:—

- Prof. Edward H. Courtenay: Aug. 1, 1841, to Aug. 1, 1842, $35,284.25
- Gen. William Gibbs McNeil: Oct. 10, 1844, to April 1, 1845, 114,671.83
- W. P. S. Sanger: April 1, 1845, to June 23, 1846, 115,951.81
- Wm. J. McAlpine: June 23, 1846, to Oct. 1, 1849, 1,114,311.09
- Gen. Chas. B. Stuart: Oct. 1, 1849, to Aug. 30, 1851, 732,974.63

Total cost..... $2,113,173.61

The work was suspended from Aug. 1842, till Oct. 1844. The main chamber is 286 feet long by 35 feet wide at the bottom, and 307 feet long by 95 feet wide at the top. Depth, 36 feet. The masonry foundations are 400 by 120 feet, upon piles driven 40 feet into the earth. It is emptied by steam pumps in 4½ hours.—Stuart's Naval Dry Docks of the U. S.

⁴ This building is faced with white marble and presents a fine architectural appearance. The average number of inmates is about 60.

field Creeks. It is brought $7\frac{3}{4}$ mi. in an open canal and $4\frac{1}{2}$ mi. in a brick conduit, thence pumped into a reservoir on Cypress Hill, 170 ft. above tide, and thence distributed in iron pipes throughout the city. The conduit has a capacity of 40,000,000 gallons per day, and the pumps can raise 10,000,000 gal. per day. The reservoir is 20 feet deep, and has a capacity of 167,000,000 gals. The whole cost of the work is estimated at \$4,200,000.¹ The Fire Departments of the Eastern and Western Districts are separately organized under special acts.² The city is supplied with gas by 3 companies.

The City Park, between Park and Flushing Avenues and Navy and Park Sts., contains 7 acres; Washington Park, between Myrtle and De Kalb Avenues and Cumberland and Canton Sts., contains 33 acres. It occupies the site of Fort Green of the Revolution. In the newly surveyed sections several sites for parks have been reserved by the city.

The City Armory, at the corner of Henry and Cranberry Sts., was erected in 1858, at a cost of $14,000. A State Arsenal, on Clinton St., was built in 1856, at a cost of $40,000.

The City Hall, situated at the junction of Fulton and Court Sts., is a fine building, faced with white marble.³ Besides these, there are in the city 9 banks of discount, 5 savings' banks, and 10 stock fire insurance companies.

The Public Schools are under the charge of a board of education, consisting of 45 members. The city contains 32 school districts; and in 1857 there were employed 320 teachers,—27 males and 293 females. The whole number of children between 4 and 21 years of age is 46,000, of whom 35,817, or 78 per cent., attended school during some portion of the year. The total expenses of the schools for 1857 was $231,474.61. A normal school for the professional instruction of teachers has been established.

The Packer Collegiate Institute, for girls, occupies an elegant building upon Jorolimon St., w. of the City Hall. It was incorp. May 8, 1845, as the "Brooklyn Female Academy." Its name was changed March 19, 1853, in honor of Mrs. Wm. S. Packer, who endowed the institution with $65,000. An astronomical observatory is connected with it.

The Brooklyn Collegiate and Polytechnic Institute, for boys, on Livingston St., was incorp. April 7, 1854. It was established by a stock company, with a capital of $75,000, and has accommodations for 150 pupils. Besides these, there are in the city 100 private schools and seminaries, several of which are large institutions, with corps of professors and with permanent investments. The aggregate number of pupils in attendance at the schools is 2,600.

The Brooklyn Institute was incorp. Nov. 20, 1824. It occupies a commodious building on Washington St., the gift of Augustus Graham. It has a free library, provides free lectures and lessons in drawing and painting for apprentices, and its rooms are depositories for books, maps, models, and drawing apparatus.

The Brooklyn Athenæum and Reading Room, on the corner of Atlantic and Clinton Sts., was incorp. Jan. 28, 1852. It occupies a large three story edifice, erected at a cost of $60,000. The first story is used for mercantile purposes, the second for a library and reading room, and the third for public lectures.

The Law Library in Brooklyn, incorp. Jan. 8, 1850, is located at 341 Fulton St.

The Naval Lyceum, within the Navy Yard, was established in 1833 by officers of the navy. It has a fine library and museum.

The Kings County Lodge Library Association, at Williamsburgh, was incorp. Feb. 7, 1847.

Among the societies for intellectual improvement are the Hamilton Library Association, founded in 1830; the Franklin Debating Association, in 1852; the Young Men's Association, in 1853; the St. Charles Institute, in 1854; the Ecceleston Literary Association, in 1854; and the Columbia Literary Association, in 1855. The Great Northwestern Zephyr Association, designed to encourage native talent in music, painting, and sculpture, was organized in 1838. The Philharmonic Society

¹ This great work is just completed. Until a very recent date the city has depended upon wells and cisterns for its supply of water. There were 122 public cisterns in the city; but all the supplies were entirely inadequate to the demand for water. The first agitation for a better supply of water commenced in 1835; but nothing was accomplished until 1847, when a report was made recommending the building of reservoirs to be supplied from wells. In 1849, W. J. McAlpine submitted a plan for obtaining a supply from the streams flowing into Jamaica Bay. The question of prosecuting this work at public expense was repeatedly voted down. Several private companies caused surveys to be made, and one of them acquired titles to the streams in question; and June 4, 1856, the Common Council subscribed $1,300,000 to the stock of the Nassau Water Company. The work was commenced July 31, 1856, under the charge of James

P. Kirkwood, Chief Engineer. Feb. 11, 1857, the rights of the Nassau Company were vested in the city. The works were completed in May, 1859. It is contemplated erecting another reservoir upon Prospect Hill.

² The Fire Department of the Western District, under the care of 5 commissioners, has 7 fire districts, 22 engines, 4 hook and ladder companies, 7 hose companies, and 10 alarm bells. The Fire Department of the Eastern District has 6 fire districts, 13 engines, 3 hook and ladder companies, 4 hose companies, and 2 alarm bells.

of Brooklyn, for the encouragement of music, was incorp. May 6, 1857. The Brooklyn Horticultural Society was incorp. April 9, 1854, and holds annual fairs. The Hunt Horticultural and Botanical Garden was incorporated April 9, 1855, with a capital of $150,000. It has a garden of 16 acres.

The Brooklyn City Hospital, on Raymond St. near De Kalb Avenue, was incorp. May 8, 1845. Its present buildings were opened April 28, 1852. It is supported by voluntary contributions and legislative appropriations. The Brooklyn City Dispensary, located at 109 Pineapple St., was incorp. March 5, 1850. It is supported in the same manner as the hospital. The Brooklyn Dispensary, (Homeopathic,) 83 Court St., was incorp. Dec. 3, 1852. It is supported by private subscriptions. The Williamsburg Dispensary, on the corner of 5th and South Sts., was incorp. March 4, 1851; 2,221 persons received medical treatment at the institution in 1857. It is supported by private contributions. The Brooklyn Central Dispensary, 473 Fulton St., was incorp. Dec. 11, 1855. The Brooklyn German General Dispensary is located at 145 Court St. The Brooklyn Eye and Ear Infirmary, 109 Pineapple St., was incorp. March 27, 1851.

The Orphan Asylum Society was incorp. May 6, 1834. The institution is situated upon a fine site on Cumberland St. near Myrtle Avenue.

The Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum of Brooklyn was incorp. May 6, 1834. The asylum for boys is located at the corner of Clinton and Congress Sts., and the asylum for girls upon Congress St. near Clinton. The former has 120 inmates, and the latter 250. The girls are under the charge of the Sisters of Charity. The support of these institutions is principally derived from the income of a large property bequeathed by Cornelius Heeney and under the charge of the Brooklyn Benevolent Society.¹

The Brooklyn Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor was formed March 26, 1844. It numbers about 180 visitors, whose duty it is to investigate the condition of the poor in every part of the city, afford such temporary relief in the way of food and clothing as the cases may warrant, and to refer the needy to the appropriate sources for permanent relief. This association distributes $6,000 to $7,000 per year. The Brooklyn Benevolent Society, founded upon a bequest of Cornelius Heeney, was incorp. in May, 1845. It is managed by 11 trustees, of whom the Archbishop of N. Y. and the Mayor of Brooklyn are ex officio members. Its funds are principally devoted to the support of various Catholic charities. The Brooklyn Society for the Relief of Respectable and Indigent Females, incorp. in 1851, was founded by John B. Graham, who erected a fine edifice, corner of Washington and De Kalb Sts., as a home for the unfortunates named in the title. It derives its support from private subscriptions. The Children's Aid Society was organized in Feb. 1854, as an industrial school. The Brooklyn Industrial School Association, under the management of ladies of the several churches, was incorp. April 4, 1854. It has established schools in different parts of the city for girls who do not attend the public schools, and who are entirely deprived of moral training. The Brooklyn Female Employment Society, an association of ladies to furnish employment to respectable females who may be reduced to want, was incorp. April 19, 1854. Its office and salesroom is at 65 Court St. The Church Charity Association for the relief of the aged, sick, and indigent was incorp. in March, 1851. It is under the patronage of the Prot. E. Church.

The churches of Brooklyn are justly celebrated for their general elegance and beauty of architectural design. Large numbers of people doing business in New York reside in Brooklyn; and this has led to the erection of so great a number of churches that the city has been denominated the "city of churches." In 1858 there were 139 churches in the city.² Connected with these churches are various religious and charitable societies.³ The Freemasons, Odd Fellows, and Sons of Tem-

¹ The other benevolent Catholic societies in the city are as follows:—St. James's School, Jay St., with 500 pupils under the Brothers of Christian Schools, and 450 pupils under the Sisters of Mercy; St. Paul's Female School, with 400 pupils, under the Sisters of Charity; St. Peter's and Paul's School, with 300 girls, under the Sisters of St. Joseph; St. Mary Star of the Sea, with 300 girls, under the Sisters of Charity; Convent and Female School attached to the Church of the Holy Trinity; Convent and Boarding Academy of the Sisters of St. Joseph; Convent and Academy of the Visitation; St. Francis of Assis's Convent Academy of Sisters of Mercy and Nuns of the Order of St. Dominic. The R. C. Benevolent Society of St. Peter's and St. Paul's Church was incorp. June 15, 1855, to sustain a Sunday school and library, and support the sick and bury the dead. Free schools are connected with all the churches except that of St. Charles.

Greenwood Cemetery, upon the s. line, is mostly within the limits of the city. It is owned by a joint stock company, incorp. April 18, 1838. It comprises an area of 400 acres, beautifully located upon the elevated and broken ground e. of Gowanus Bay. The grounds were purchased, and opened for burial in 1842; and up to Aug. 1858, 64,000 burials had been made. It is one of the oldest and most beautiful of the rural cemeteries connected with the great cities in this country. The grounds are laid out with taste; and many of the sculptured monuments are costly and beautiful specimens of art.

The Cemetery of the Evergreens, upon the e. line, is partly in Queens co. It is beautifully located upon a bluff, affording fine views of New York, the bay, the ocean, and the surrounding country. It was opened for interment in 1849.

The Friends' Cemetery lies near the city line, n. of Greenwood. It has a fine location; but, in accordance with the principles of the sect, no ornamental monuments are allowed to be erected in it.

The Citizens' Union Cemetery, incorp. in 1851, contains an area of 29 acres. The trustees allow the burial of persons of color and of the poor for no charge except that of opening and closing the ground.

The first settlements were made under the Dutch Government, in 1625, by several families of French Protestants from near the river Waal, in Netherlands, who located near Wallabout Bay. They named their settlement "Walloons," and the bay "Walloons Boght," from which is derived its present name Wallabout.² Little progress was made in settlement for many years; and no governmental organization was effected under the Dutch. Up to the commencement of the present century the population was principally confined to several little hamlets scattered over the territory now embraced in the city. Since 1840 the increase of population and the growth of the city have been very rapid, scarcely paralleled by the magical growth of the cities of the West.³ Although possessing a separate municipal government, in all its business and interests it forms an integral part of the city of New York. In the summer of 1776, New York and vicinity became the theater of stirring military events. After the British had evacuated Boston, Washington marched immediately to New York, believing that the enemy would make this the next point of attack. Every effort was made to construct and strengthen the military defenses of the place. Strong works were erected in Brooklyn and other points upon Long Island, and large bodies of troops were posted there to defend them. The British arrived, and landed their troops upon Staten Island July 8; and on the 22d of Aug. they passed over to Long Island, to the number of 10,000 strong. They landed in New Utrecht, whence three roads led over the hills to where the Americans were encamped. One of these roads passed near the Narrows, the next led from Flatbush, and the third far to the right by the route of Flatlands. It was the design of Gen. Putnam, who commanded the American forces, to arrest the enemy upon the heights; and the appearance of columns of troops early on the morning of the 27th on the middle road led to the belief that the main attack was to be made at that point. While intent upon this movement, it was found that the main army of the enemy were approaching from the direction of Bedford, and that there was imminent danger of being surrounded by them. Attacked in front and rear, the Americans fought with bravery; but a part only succeeded in gaining their entrenchments. The loss of the Americans was more than 3,000 in killed, wounded, and prisoners; and of the enemy, less than 400. Gens. Sullivan, Sterling, and Woodhull were taken prisoners,—the last named of whom died from wounds inflicted after his surrender. The Americans withdrew to New York early on the 30th, under the personal direction of Gen. Washington.⁴ The American prisoners taken at this battle, and those taken afterward during the war, were confined in the hulks of old ships anchored in Wallabout Bay,

² Among these settlers were families named D. Rapalje, Le Ecuuyer, Duryee, Le Sillier Cerehon, Concellier, and Muraerol.—Benson's Memoir, p. 18. Sarah Rapalje—born here on the 9th of June, 1625—was the first white child born on the island. She received 20 morgens of land from Peter Minuet, the Dutch Governor. A tide mill was built at the head of Wallabout Bay at an early period.

⁴ A heavy fog—very unusual for the time of year—completely enshrouded the island, and under its protection the Americans silently passed over to the N. Y. side. The British did not discover the movement until the rearguard of the Americans were beyond the reach of pursuit.

where they perished by hundreds and thousands from violence, cold, foul air, and stinted food.¹ During the War of 1812 a considerable amount of voluntary labor was expended in erecting a line of fortifications around the city, and bodies of troops were stationed there to protect the people.

FLATBUSH²—was chartered by Gov. Stuyvesant in 1652, and its rights were confirmed by Gov. Nicoll, Oct. 11, 1667, and by Gov. Dongan, Nov. 20, 1685.³ It was recognized by the State Government March 7, 1788. New Lots was taken off in 1852. It is the central town in the co., lying immediately s. of Brooklyn. A low, broad range of hills extends along the n. border, occupying nearly one-fourth of its surface. The remainder of the town is level. The soil is light and sandy, but productive. Flatbush (p. v.) is a long, scattered village, extending through the center of the town. It contains 4 churches,⁴ the Erasmus Hall Academy,⁵ and many elegant dwellings. Greenfield is a thinly settled village plat in the s. w. corner of the town. A part of Greenwood Cemetery lies in the n. w. corner. Galilee Cemetery lies e. of the village. The first settlement was made by the Dutch at an early period.

FLATLANDS⁶—was incorp. by patent under Gov. Nicoll, Oct. 4, 1667, confirmed by Gov. Dongan, March 11, 1685,⁷ and recognized by the State Government March 7, 1788. It is the s. e. town in the co. The surface is very flat, as indicated by the name; and a considerable portion consists of salt marshes bordering upon Jamaica Bay.⁸ Several small, marshy islands belong to the town.⁹ Flatlands (p. o.) is a farming settlement. Canarsie¹⁰ (p. o.) is a hamlet, upon the road leading to the bay. The first settlement was made by the Dutch, in 1636. Ex-Gov. Wouter Van Twiller had a tobacco farm in this town while it was under Dutch rule. There are 3 churches in town; 2 M. E. and Ref. Prot. D.

GRAVESEND¹¹—was granted to English settlers, by patent under Gov. Keift, Dec. 19, 1645, and confirmed by Gov. Nicoll, Aug. 13, 1667, and by Gov. Dongan, Sept. 10, 1686.¹² It was recognized as a town March 7, 1788. It is the most southerly town in the co. The surface is generally very level. A beach and ridge of sand hills extend along the coast, and in the rear of these are extensive salt meadows. Coney Island is separated from the mainland by a narrow tidal current flowing through the marshes.¹³ Gravesend, (p. v.), near the center, is compactly built, and was formerly fortified with palisades. It was the county seat prior to 1686.¹⁴ Unionville is a small settlement on the bay, near the w. line. The Cove is a settlement on Sheeps Head Bay. This town was settled before 1640, by English Quakers, from Mass. Lady Deborah Moody—a woman of rank, education, and wealth—was a prominent person in this enterprise. The liberal terms of their first grant were not fully regarded by the Dutch; but the prudence and firmness of Lady Moody eventually secured a good degree of respect and a more indulgent policy toward them. In 1655 the settlement was saved from destruction by North River Indians by a guard from the city. In 1656 the people petitioned for and obtained 3 big guns for their protection. In 1659 the town agreed to give Henry Brazier 500 gilders for building a mill, and

¹ The first prison ship was the Whitty; but this and another were burned, and, in April, 1773, the Jersey became the receiving ship for prisoners. The Hope and the Falmouth, anchored near by, were the hospital ships; and upon these most of the deaths occurred. It is reported that 11,500 prisoners died upon these ships during the war. The persistent barbarity and cold-hearted inhumanity practiced by the British toward these prisoners finds no parallel in the history of civilized nations; and the horrible sufferings of the prisoners in their foul dungeons, reeking with filth, disease, and the air of the charcoal house carried through months and years, completely cast into the shade the lesser horrors of the Middle Passage, or of the Black Hole of Calcutta. The graves of these martyrs of freedom were uncovered while grading for the Navy Yard, in 1808. Twenty hogheads of bones were collected, deposited in 13 coffins,—representing the 13 original States,—and, May 26, 1808, they were buried upon Hudson Avenue, near the Navy Yard, under the auspices of the Tammany Society. The land upon which they were interred was given for that purpose by John Jackson. Several years since, Benj. Romaine inclosed the remains in a vault; and, April 11, 1851, an association was incorp. for collecting funds to build a monument.

³ In the first patent, Jan Snedacor, Arent Van Hatten, Johannes Megassoleensis, and others, were named as grantees; and in the second, Rev. J. Megassoleensis, Cornelius Van Royren, J. P. Adrien Hegeman, Jan Snedacor, Jan Stryker, Frans Barents, (pastor), Jacob Stryker, and Cornelius Janse Bougart were patentees.—Patents, IV, 43, 51.

⁵ This institution, incorp. Nov. 17, 1787, was the first one chartered by the regents.

⁶ Called "New Amersfort" by the Dutch, from a place in Holland.

⁷ The patentees named in the first instrument were Elbert Elberts, Govert Lockermans, Roeliffe Martens, Pieter Claes, Wm. Garrits, Thos. Hillebrants, Stephen Coertsen, and Coert Stevens; and those in the second were E. Elberts, R. Martens, Pieter Claesen, Wm. Garretsen, Coert Stevens, Lucas Stevenson, and John T-eunissen. The annual quitrent was 14 bushels of wheat.

⁸ These marshes and flat lands produce large quantities of hay.

⁹ The principal of these are Bergen Island, on the bay, and Barren Island, upon the coast. Upon the latter island is a large bone boiling establishment, to which place are removed all the dead animals from New York. The business is very extensive, and large quantities of hides, fat, bones, hair, and manure are annually produced.

¹¹ Named from the English town of this name, or from the deep sounds on the shore.—Thompson's Hist., II, 169.

¹⁴ The village plat embraced 10 acres, subdivided into 39 lots for houses and gardens. A street surrounded this plat. The land around was laid out in lots diverging from the central nucleus.

every man a day's work, with a team, or 2 days without, in building a dam. The first church (Ref. Prot. D.) was formed in 1655. Besides this, there are in town 2 M. E. churches.

NEW LOTS—was formed from Flatbush, Feb. 12, 1852. It lies in the extreme e. part of the co. Its surface is generally level, the s. half being occupied by extensive salt meadows. East New York (p. v.) is a prospective city of "magnificent distances" near the n. line.² It contains a newspaper office, 4 churches, a manufacture of dyestuffs and colors, several shoe manufactories, and 1,000 inhabitants. Cypress Hills is a newly surveyed village near the n. e. corner. The Cypress Hills Cemetery, Cemetery of the Evergreens, and Cemetery of the Congregation of Emanuel (Jewish) are partly in this town. The first settlement was made by about 20 families from Holland and a few Palatinates, in 1654. In 1660 the portions of lands previously held in common were divided into lots and assigned to individuals. During the same year a horse-mill was erected. For many years the deacons of the church were chosen overseers of the poor, and from 1799 to 1812 the schools were under the direction of church officers. A detachment of 1,200 militia was stationed here in the War of 1812, in anticipation of an attack from the British. There are 5 churches in town.³

NEW UTRECHT—was incorp. by Gov. Stuyvesant in 1662, by Gov. Nicoll, Aug. 15, 1668, and by Gov. Dongan, May 13, 1686.⁴ It was recognized as a town March 7, 1788. It lies upon the Narrows, in the w. part of the co. A range of low hills extends across the n. border, and the remaining part of the surface is level. The soil is a light, sandy loam, but for the most part is highly cultivated. New Utrecht, (p. v.,) in the s. part, is a small, compact village. In ancient times it was inclosed by a palisade as a defense against Indians and pirates. Fort Hamilton, (p. v.,) near the U. S. grounds, is a fine village, chiefly inhabited by persons doing business in New York. Bath is a place of summer resort on Gravesend Bay. Bay Ridge is a suburban village adjoining Brooklyn. Fort Hamilton is a U. S. fortification upon the bluff commanding the passage of the Narrows.⁵ Fort La Fayette is a strong water battery built upon Hendricks Reef, 200 yards from the shore.⁶ There are 6 churches in town.⁷

STATE AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE:

(PUBLISHED BY THE COLLEGE)

SENECA COUNTY.

This county was formed from Cayuga, March 29, 1804. A part of Tompkins was taken off in 1817, and a part of Wayne in 1823. It lies w. of the center of the State, centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains — sq. mi. It occupies the greater part of the land which lies between Seneca and Cayuga Lakes, and extends several mi. n. of Seneca Lake Outlet. A high ridge enters the co. from Tompkins and occupies nearly one-fourth of its surface. The summit of the extreme s. portion of this ridge in this co. is 700 to 800 feet above Seneca Lake and 1,100 to 1,250 feet above tide. Toward the n. it gradually declines to the level of Seneca Lake. The ridge is bordered in some places by steep declivities and in others by gradual slopes, and in the s. part of the co. generally terminates in high bluffs on the shores of the lakes. At the foot of Seneca Lake the bluffs, on an average, are about 20 feet high; but toward the s. they gradually rise to an elevation of 100 to 150 feet. At the foot of Cayuga Lake the shore is low and shelving; but in Romulus a bluff shore commences, which gradually increases in height until on the s. border of the co. it attains an elevation of 150 to 200 feet. From the summits of the bluffs to the central summit of the ridge the land generally rises in beautiful, smooth, gradual slopes, broken in a few places by sharp declivities of a terrace-like formation. From Ovid toward the n. the land abruptly descends about 200 feet, and then by gradual slopes to the level of Seneca River. The region immediately n. of Seneca Lake Outlet and w. of the Cayuga Lake Outlet is level, and some of it is marshy. In the n. w. corner of the co. is a great number of alluvial ridges, composed principally of gravel. These ridges extend in a n. and s. direction and are 30 to 50 feet high. Their declivities are generally very abrupt toward the n., e., and w., but more gradual toward the s.

The geological formation of the co. is very simple. The rocks overlie each other in parallel layers slightly dipping toward the s. The lowest rocks that crop out in the co. are those of the Onondaga salt group, including both the red shales and gypsum. They are found along Seneca River, where the gypsum is extensively quarried. Next above these are heavy, compact masses of the corniferous limestone, occupying a belt of country 2 to 3 mi. wide s. of Seneca River. The intermediate waterlime and Onondaga limestone strata are developed in this co. only in very thin and scarcely noticeable layers. The corniferous limestone furnishes a building stone of great excellence and is extensively quarried. Next in order come the Marcellus and Hamilton shales, occupying a broad belt through the co. and extending nearly to the summits of the ridges; the Tully limestone, a layer of only a few feet in thickness, but valuable from the quantity and quality of lime manufactured from it; and the Genesee slate, a dark, shaly rock which crowns the summits of the southern hills. These rocks throughout the co. are covered with a deep deposit of drift, consisting of clay, sand, gravel, and hardpan, and crop out only along the shores of the lakes, the narrow ravines of the streams, and the steep declivities of the ridges. In the n. w. corner of the co. this drift is arranged in ridges with narrow valleys scooped out between them.¹

The principal stream is Seneca River, forming the outlet of Seneca Lake. It has a course of about 14 mi. between the two lakes, and in that distance falls 60 feet. The falls are principally at Waterloo and Seneca Falls, furnishing an excellent water-power at each place, but much the greater at the latter. From Cayuga Lake, Seneca River flows n. e. through a marshy region and forms a portion of the e. boundary of the co. Clyde River, a tributary of the Seneca, flows through a portion of the marshy region in the n. e. corner. The other streams are all small brooks and creeks, and for the most part are rapid torrents flowing in deep gulfs worn in the shaly rocks. They are frequently interrupted by waterfalls, are nearly dry in summer, and are subject to severe freshets.

Seneca Lake, the w. border of which forms the greater part of the w. boundary of the co., is 35 mi. long and 2 to 4 mi. broad. It is 216 feet above Lake Ontario and 447 feet above tide. It occupies a deep valley between the hills, and it varies in depth from 300 to 630 feet. Its shores are generally bold; and from their summits the land slopes gently and gracefully upward to a height of 200 to 700 feet above its surface, furnishing some of the most quiet and beautiful scenery in the State. This lake is never entirely frozen over. Cayuga Lake occupies a parallel valley on the e. border of the co., and is 38 mi. long and 1 to 3½ mi. wide. It is 60 feet below Seneca, and its greatest depth is 346 feet. Near the foot the lake is very shallow, and a large extent of shores, immediately adjoining and lying along the course of its outlet, is swampy.¹ Further s. the shores are bluff and the country is of the same general character as that bordering upon Seneca Lake.

The soil is generally of a very excellent quality. The sandy and gravelly loam of the drift deposits are well adapted to either grain raising or grazing. The lower portions of the ridges are enriched by the disintegration of the rocks above, making the soil very productive. The lowlands bordering upon Seneca River are clayey and in many places mixed with disintegrated gypsum and limestone. North of the river have been found extensive marl deposits of great agricultural value. North of the foot of Seneca Lake is a sandy region once considered worthless; but upon trial the soil has been found susceptible of being made productive at little expense. The marshy regions w. of Cayuga Outlet are covered with thick deposits of marl and muck. Measures have been instituted to drain these marshes; if successful a new and exceedingly fertile region will be added to the productive lands of the State.

The co. is a half-shire, the co. seats being located respectively at Ovid and Waterloo.² The courthouse and clerk's office at Ovid are brick buildings, situated in the e. part of the village. The combined courthouse and jail at Waterloo is a brick building, situated near the r. r., fronting the public square, in the w. part of the village. The co. poorhouse is located upon a farm of 126 acres, upon the line between Seneca Falls and Fayette, 4 mi. s. e. of Waterloo.³

Four weekly newspapers are now published in the co.⁴

The public works of the co. are the N. Y. Central R. R., extending through Seneca Falls and Waterloo, and the Seneca Canal, extending along Seneca River through the same towns.⁵ Above the falls at Waterloo the canal is formed by slackwater navigation upon the river.

The lands in this co. were first brought to the notice of the whites by the expedition of Sullivan, which passed along the banks of Seneca Lake in 1779. Portions of the land at that time had been cleared and were under cultivation. The Indians had a tradition that this whole region had once been occupied by a race that pursued agriculture, but which had long ago disappeared. Many of Sullivan's soldiers, attracted by the beauty and fertility of the lands, after the war settled in various parts of the co. The first settler, Job Smith, who located at Seneca Falls in 1787, and the second, Andrew Dunlap, who located at Ovid in 1789, came in by way of Chemung River. The third settler, Lawrence Van Clief, who settled at Seneca Falls in 1789, came in by way of Oneida Lake and Seneca River.⁶ After 1790 settlement progressed rapidly, and the most fertile lands

² The county seat was located at Ovid upon the erection of the co. in 1804. The courthouse was built in 1806. While a part of Onondaga co., in 1790, courts were held at the barn of Andrew Dunlap. In 1817, upon the erection of Tompkins co., the co. seat was removed to Waterloo; but in 1822 the co. was divided into two jury districts, and the courts have since then been held alternately at Ovid and Waterloo. The first co. officers were Cornelius Humphrey, First Judge; Silas Halsey, Clerk; William Smith, Sheriff; and Jared Sandford, Sergeant.

³ The average number of inmates is 60, supported at a weekly cost of $100 each. A school is taught 4 months in the year. The establishment seems to be pretty well arranged and managed.

⁴ The Seneca Patriot, the first paper published in the co., was started at Ovid in 1815 by Geo. Lewis. In 1816 it was changed to

The Ovid Gazette. Upon the change of the co. seat in 1817, it was removed to Waterloo and changed to

The Waterloo Gazette, and was continued several years by the original proprietor.

The Seneca Farmer was started at Waterloo in 1822 by Wm. Child. In 1832 it was removed to Seneca Falls and united with the Seneca Falls Journal.

The Waterloo Republican was issued a short time in 1822. The Waterloo Observer was started in 1824 by Charles Sentell. It was soon after issued a short time as

The Observer and Union, and was subsequently changed to The Seneca Observer, under which title it is still issued by the original proprietor.

The Wreath and Ladies' Literary Repository was issued from the Observer office in 1831.

The Seneca Republican was established at Ovid in 1827 by Michael Hayes. In 1830 it was changed to

The Ovid Gazette and Seneca County Register, and was issued a short time by John Duffy.

The Seneca Falls Journal was commenced in 1829 by O. B. Clark. In 1831 it passed into the hands of Wm. N. Brown, and in 1832 it was united with the Seneca Farmer and changed to

The Seneca Farmer and Seneca Falls Advertiser, and was issued by Wm. Child until 1835.

The Ovid Emporium was published in 1832 by Bishop Orenshier.

The Seneca County Courier was commenced at Seneca Falls in 1837 by Isaac Fuller & Co. It was successively published by Fuller & Bloomer, Mills & Bloomer, Mills & Davis, John J. Davis, N. J. Milliken, Milliken & Fuller, Milliken & Mumford, Foster & Judd, Fuller & Judd, until 1850, when it passed into the hands of Isaac Fuller, its present publisher.

The Ovid Bee was started in 1838 by David Fairchild & Son. At the end of one year it passed into the hands of the son, Corydon Fairchild, its present publisher.

The Seneca Falls Democrat was commenced in 1839 by Josiah T. Miller, and was continued 10 years.

The Seneca Democrat, semi-w., was issued a short time from the same office.

The Seneca Falls Register was commenced in 1835 by J. K. Brown, and was continued 2 years.

The Memorial was commenced at Seneca Falls in 1840 by Ansel Bascom, and was continued until 1846.

The Water Bucket was published at Seneca Falls by an association of Washingtonians in 1841.

The Free-Soil Union was commenced at Seneca Falls in Aug. 1848, by N. J. Milliken, and continued short 1 year.

The Lily was commenced at Seneca Falls in 1849 by Mrs. Amelia Bloomer, and was continued until 1854, when it was removed to Ohio.

The American Revellie was commenced at Seneca Falls in Jan. 1855, by Wilcoxon, Sherman & Baker. In 1856 it was purchased by G. Wilcoxon, and was continued by him until Jan. 1859, when it passed into the hands of Holly & Stowell, the present publishers.

⁵ The first locks on this river were made by the Seneca River Navigation Company, in 1815.

⁶ Mr. Van Clief was one of the 100 men dispatched by Sullivan under Col. Gansevoort, directly e. from the head of Seneca Lake, were speedily occupied. In 1791 the State Road, known as the "Geneva Road," was built from Whitestown to Geneva; and this soon became the great highway for immigration. This co. formed the extreme w. portion of the Military Tract; and many of the early settlers were old soldiers who had drawn their portion of public land here.

COVERT—was formed from Ovid, April 7, 1817. Lodi was taken off in 1826. It lies upon the w. shore of Cayuga Lake, in the s. e. corner of the co. Its surface is an upland descending from its w. border and terminating in a steep and almost precipitous bluff upon the shore of the lake. This bluff rises 100 to 200 feet above the water, and the summit of the slope is about 400 feet higher. The town is watered by Trumansburg Creek and many smaller streams, flowing into Cayuga Lake. These streams have worn ravines in the slate and shales to the depth of 20 to 40 feet, the sides being nearly precipitous. In summer they are nearly dry, but during heavy rains they become fierce mountain torrents, bounding and seething in their confined channels and leaping from high precipices to mingle with the calm and peaceful waters of the lake. The soil is a gravelly and clayey loam. The whole surface is arable, except the steep declivities of the lake bluffs. Farmersville, (Farmer p. o.,) in the n. part, contains 3 churches, a steam sawmill, foundry, and machine shop. Pop. 350. Covert, (p. o.,) in the s. e. part, Halls Corners, near the center, and Kellys Corners, in the n. w., are hamlets. Port Deposit (Trumansburg Landing p. o.) is a steamboat landing near the s. e. corner. The first settler was Philip Tremaine, who located at Goodwins Point before 1793.¹ The first religious services were held at the house of Mr. King, by Elder Thomas; the first church (Bap.) was organized in 1805.²

FAYETTE—was formed from Romulus, as "Washington," March 14, 1800. Its name was changed April 6, 1808. Junius was taken off in 1803. It lies on the s. bank of Seneca River and extends from Seneca to Cayuga Lake. Its surface is rolling and inclined toward the n. From Seneca Lake the land beautifully slopes upward, forming some of the most delightful situations for residences in the co. Upon Cayuga Lake the shores are lower and in some places are marshy. The highest point in town is about 200 feet above Seneca Lake. The streams are mostly small brooks flowing with rapid currents, and at a few places furnishing limited water-power. In some parts the corniferous limestone is extensively quarried, both for lime and for building purposes. The soil is a deep, rich loam, composed of clay, gravel, and sand. Near Canoga Village is an immense spring in a basin 14 feet in diameter, and from it flows sufficient water to form a large and valuable water-power. The spring also emits nitrogen gas. Canoga,³ (p. v.,) in the n. e. part, on Cayuga Lake, contains 2 churches, a gristmill, 2 sawmills, and 197 inhabitants. South Waterloo, a suburb of Waterloo, on the s. bank of Seneca River, contains 1 church and 597 inhabitants. Bearytown, (Fayette p. o.,) on the line of Varick, is partly in this town. West Fayette, in the s. w. corner, and Rose Hill, in the w. part, are p. offices. The first settlement was made by James Bennett, from Penn., who located upon the shore of Cayuga Lake in 1789.⁴ Red Jacket, the Seneca chief and orator, was born near Canoga Spring. There are 8 churches in town.⁵

JUNIUS—was formed from "Washington," (now Fayette,) Feb. 12, 1803; Wolcott (Wayne co.) was taken off in 1807, Galen (Wayne co.) in 1812, and Seneca Falls, Tyre, and Waterloo in 1829. It is the n. w. corner town of the co. In this town are numerous small, isolated gravel and clay ridges 30 to 75 ft. high, all extending in a general n. and s. direction. The numerous small streams that drain the town flow n. into Clydè River. Among the narrow valleys in the e. part is a limited amount of swamp land. The soil is a good quality of gravelly loam. Dublin, (Junius p. o.,) n. w. of the center, contains 1 church and 25 dwellings. West Junius is a p. o. near the s. w. corner. Thorntons Corners is a hamlet. The first settlements were made by Thos. Bedell and Jesse, Sam'l, and David Southwick, about 1795.⁶ The first church (Cong.) was formed in 1811; three years after it was changed to a Presb. There are also 2 M. E. churches in town.

LODI—was formed from Covert, Jan. 27, 1826. It borders upon Seneca Lake, and is the s. w.

to lay waste the lands of the Cayugas, Onondags, and Oneidas that had previously escaped destruction.

² This was the first church formed in the co. The census reports 4 churches; 2 Bap., Univ., and Ref. Prot. D.

⁵ 2 Presb., 2 M. E., 2 Lutheran, 2 Ref. Prot. D.

⁶ Among the other early settlers were families named Sherman, Chapman, Brownwell, Fisk, Moore, French, Maynard, Thorn, and Hart,—mostly from New England. The first death was that of Mrs. Submit Southwick, wife of Samuel Southwick, in 1802. Joseph Moody kept the first store, at Dublin. He was an Irishman; and hence the name of the village.

corner town in the co. Its surface is mostly inclined toward the w. and n., a small portion only lying e. of the summit. The bluff bordering upon Seneca Lake is 150 to 250 ft. above the surface of the water; and the highest part of the central ridge is 500 ft. higher and about 1,200 ft. above tide. The principal streams are Lodi Creek, flowing n. w. through near the center, and Sheldrake Creek, in the n. w. corner. Lodi Creek separates the highlands into two distinct ridges, the declivities being very abrupt. Upon this stream are several fine cascades. Lodi Falls, where the creek leaps down the precipitous bluff which borders upon the lake, are 125 ft. high. The water has worn a deep and irregular channel in the shale rocks one mi. back from the face of the bluff. The soil is principally a gravelly loam mixed with the disintegrated rocks. Lodi, (p. v.), in the n. part, contains 2 churches, a gristmill, and 380 inhabitants; Townsendville, (p. v.), in the s. e. part, a church and 20 dwellings. Lodi Center (p. o.) is a hamlet. Lodi Landing is on Seneca Lake, at the mouth of Mill Creek. The first settlement was made by Geo. Faussett, from Peun., who settled in the s. w. part in 1789.¹ There are 5 churches in town.²

OVID—was formed March 5, 1794. Hecor (Schuyler co.) was taken off in 1802, and Covert in 1817. It lies s. of the center of the co., and extends from Seneca to Cayuga Lake. Its surface consists of an immense ridge, 600 ft. above Seneca Lake and about 1,100 ft. above tide, descending from the center of the town toward the lakes. The bluffs upon the lakes are 20 to 50 ft. high and nearly perpendicular. A great number of small streams flow into both Cayuga and Seneca Lakes, the principal of which are Sheldrake, Osborn, Groves, and Barnum Creeks on the e., and Sixteen Falls Creek on the w. These streams have all worn deep, ragged ravines in the yielding shales. They are frequently interrupted by cascades, and in summer are nearly dry. The soil consists principally of clay and gravel intermixed with sand and the disintegrated rocks. Ovid, (p. v.,) near the n. line, contains a courthouse, co. clerk's office, 3 churches, the Ovid Academy,³ a steam mill, and ax factory, and about 650 inhabitants. Ovid Landing is just over the town line in Romulus. Sheldrake Point, (Sheldrake p. o.,) a steamboat landing upon Cayuga Lake, contains a church, steam sawmill, boat yard, and 168 inhabitants. Ovid Center contains 20 houses. Kidders Ferry, (p. o.,) near the s. e. corner, and Scotts Corners, near the center, are hamlets. The first settlement was made in May, 1789, by Andrew Dunlap, from Penn., who located on Lot 8, in the n. w. part of the town.⁴ The first religious services were held at the house of Abraham Covert, in 1794. The first settled preacher (Ref. Prot. D.) was John Lindley, in 1800.⁵ The New York State Agricultural College and farm are located on the n. line of this town, w. of the village.⁶ In the s. part of the town are the remains of an ancient fortification.⁷

ROMULUS—was formed March 5, 1794. Fayette was taken off in 1800, and Varick in 1830. It lies s. of the center of the co., and extends from Seneca to Cayuga Lake. Its surface is rolling or moderately hilly and has a general northerly inclination. The high bluff from Ovid extends into the s. border of the town, where it drops down abruptly about 200 ft. The land slopes from the center downward to the e. and w. The streams are small and generally flow in deep channels. The surface is smooth, except along the courses of the streams, and is nearly all arable. The soil is a fertile, gravelly and clayey loam. Romulus, (p. v.,) on the line of Varick, contains a church, steam sawmill, female seminary, and 36 dwellings. Hyatts Corners, in the s. e., contains 20 dwellings. Romulus Center is a p. o. Whitneys Landing is a station upon Cayuga Lake; and Cooleys and Freleighs Points and Ovid Landing are stations upon Seneca Lake. The first settlement was made by David Wisner, in 1789. There is but one church (Bap.) in town.

¹ Mr. Faussett brought in his family in 1790. Jas. Jackson, from Penn., settled in the n. w. part in 1789; Silas Halsey, from L. I., near Lodi, in 1792. The next year his sons and sons-in-law and their families, numbering 18 persons, came in. The first child born was a daughter of Geo. Faussett. Peter Smith kept the first inn, and Silas Halsey built the first gristmill, in 1794.

² 3 M. E. Bap., and Ref. Prot. D.

³ In 1855 the name of this institution was changed to the Seneca Collegiate Institute.

⁴ The first settlers, mostly from Penn. and N. J., followed the trail of Sullivan's army and located in the w. part of the town. Among them were Wm. Dunlap and Joseph Wilson, from Penn., Peter Smith, from N. J., and Henry Wharton, in 1789; Abraham Covert and his son Abraham A., from N. J., in 1790; Elijah Kinne, from Dutchess co., and John Seely, from Saratoga co., in 1792; Nicholas and Richard Huff, Peter Hughes, Abraham De Mott and his son James, in 1793; and William and Robert Dunlap and Tennis Covert, in 1794. In the summer of 1795, Jonas C. Baldwin settled on Lot 11, where he remained until 1801, when he sold out and removed to Lyander, Oneida co., and laid the foundation of Baldwinville. The first child here was David, son of Andrew Dunlap, Feb. 2, 1793; and the first death was that of George Dunlap, brother of Andrew, Sept. 24, 1791. A triple marriage in 1793 was the first in town. The parties were Joseph Wilson and Anna Wyckoff; Abraham A. Covert and Catherine Covert; and Enoch Stewart and Jane Covert. They were obliged to cross Seneca Lake to find a justice authorized to perform the ceremony. Benj. Manger taught the first school, in 1795; John McMath kept the first store, in 1797, and the first inn, in 1800; and B. Boardman erected the first mill, in 1793, on Lot 2.

⁷ On Lot 29, within $\frac{1}{2}$ mi. of the s. line of the town, and exactly on the dividing ridge between the two lakes, once existed a mound or fortification of an irregular, elliptical form, inclosing about 3 acres, and surrounded by an embankment of earth, which in 1801 was about 3 feet in height, with a base 5 to 8 feet in width. The present proprietor, George B. Due, with his father, removed here in 1802, and built a house within the inclosed space, where he has since resided until within a few

SENECA FALLS—was formed from Junius, March 26, 1829. It lies upon the w. bank of Cayuga Lake, n. of the center of the co. The surface is nearly flat, and it is elevated 30 to 50 ft. above Cayuga Lake. The shores of the lake are low and shelving, and the n. portion is swampy. Seneca River flows e. and n. through the center of the town, its valley dividing the town into two distinct parts. The river flows over a series of ledges into a deep chasm apparently worn by its waters. Just e. and s. w. of the village are extensive gypsum quarries. The soil is a stiff, hard clay in the s. and e., a sandy loam in the n. w., and a heavy vegetable muck in the n. e. Seneca Falls, (p. v.),¹ upon Seneca River, near the center of the town, was incorp. April 22, 1831. It is a station upon the N. Y. C. R. R. and the Seneca Canal. The total fall is 51 feet, and furnishes an abundance of water-power, which is largely improved. It contains 7 churches, the Seneca Falls Academy, a union school, 2 newspaper offices, extensive manufactories of fire engines, pumps, machinery, iron, and woolen goods, and a great variety of other articles.² Pop. about 4,000. The first settlement was made by Job Smith, from Ulster co., upon the present site of the village in 1787; he left in 1793. The first permanent settler was Lawrence Van Clief, in 1789.³ The first religious services were held by M. E. missionaries, about 1797; and the first regular minister was Rev. Matthew Stewart, (Presb.), in 1804.⁴

TYRE—was formed from Junius, March 26, 1829. It is the n. e. corner town of the co. The e. half is a swamp, being the s. termination of the Montezuma Marshes. The w. half is occupied by peculiar drift ridges similar to those already described in Junius. These ridges are 30 to 50 feet high, and generally have very steep declivities upon all sides except the s. One of the longest of these, in the w. part of the town, extends nearly two-thirds of the distance from the s. line to the n. Its summit is nearly level; and the road which is located upon it appears as though built upon an artificial embankment. The soil is clay and muck in the e. and a gravelly loam in the w. Tyre City, (Tyre p. o.) near the center, contains 2 churches and 20 dwellings. Cruso is a p. o. on the n. line. The first settlement was made by Ezekiel Crane, from N. J., who came in 1794.⁵ The first church (Bap.) was formed in 1805. Elder Don Ralph was the first preacher.⁶

years. The work was evidently of great antiquity,—the timber on the inside being of the same size and apparent age of that in the surrounding forest. Upon the bank and in the ditch large oak trees—the growth of centuries—were standing. In the embankment were several openings a few feet in width, which were once probably used for gates or entrances. In making an excavation for a cellar, on the e. side, 6 skeletons were found at the depth of about 2 feet. This was in 1857. Several had been found previously; and, though all the softer parts of the bones had long since disappeared, the teeth and a few of the larger bones still remained. Inside of the embankment may still be found pieces of a coarse kind of pottery, ornamental pipes, &c. De Witt Clinton visited this place in 1810; and his theory is that this was one of a number of similar works of defense found occupying the most commanding positions in Western New York, and in the valleys of the Ohio and Mississippi, erected by a race more civilized than the Indians, and that they preceded the latter in the occupation of this country: their origin and end are alike a mystery; their annals defy the ken of human research, and their history will remain a sealed book forever. The Indians were never able to give any account of this fortification, as it was older than their traditions.

² Downs & Co.'s manufacturing establishment, commenced in 1840, has a capital, including real estate and machinery, of about $200,000. They are largely engaged in the manufacture of pumps and a great variety of other articles, use annually 3,800 tons of iron, 1,500 tons of coal, and employ 230 hands. Their yearly sales amount to about $400,000. They also manufacture Goffe's Patent Knitting Machine, and are largely engaged in the manufacture of hose, turning out 800 pairs per day; 70 persons are employed in this department. The Island Works of Sibley, Mynderse & Co., commenced in 1848, is engaged in the manufacture of steam fire engines, portable steam engines, and a variety of other machinery. It employs 150 persons, and turns out work to the amount of $200,000 per year. Cowing & Co.'s works commenced about 1840. They are engaged in the manufacture of fire engines, pumps, and various other articles.—employ 95 men, and turn out work yearly to the amount of $75,000 to $80,000. The Phoenix Woolen Mills gives employment to 90 persons, and manufactures goods to the amount of $150,000 per annum. Besides these, there are in the place several flouring mills, having in the aggregate 32 runs of stone, 2 distilleries, a brewery, 2 planing mills, 5 foundries and machine shops, a scythe and fork factory, a woolen factory, and several minor manufactories. About 50 tons of iron are used daily in the several manufactories.—American Reveille, Seneca Falls, 1859.

³ Mr. Smith was the first white settler upon the Military Tract. Mr. Van Clief was a Revolutionary soldier, having been in the battles of White Plains, with Washington at Valley Forge and with Sullivan in his campaign against the Indians. He settled on the river, and engaged in piloting boats over the rapids until the locks were built in 1815. Among the other early settlers were James Bennett, Col. John Harris, and — Parker. The first child born was a daughter of Lawrence Van Clief, Nov. 29, 1790; the first marriage, that of — Ely and Pamela Parkhurst, in 1796; and the first death, that of Mrs. Job Smith, in 1792. The first school was taught by — Leonard, in 1797. Lawrence Van Clief kept the first inn, in 1794; and Col. Wilhelmus Mynderse kept the first store, in 1795, and built the first saw and grist mill, about the same time. In 1794, Robert Trout, Nicholas Gouverneur, Stephen N. Bayard, and Elikanah Watson, under the title of the Bayard Company, bought of the State 100 acres of land on the n. side of the river, embracing the greater part of the water-power upon that side. In 1798 they purchased 250 acres on the s. side, and in 1803, 650 acres more on the same side, the two purchases embracing all the water-power upon that side of the river. In 1816 they bought 450 acres more on the s. side, completing the purchase of the water-power. In 1795 the company sold a one-fifth interest in their purchase to Col. Mynderse, and constituted him their agent. In 1795 the "Upper Red Mills" were erected under his direction; and in 1807 the "Lower Red Mills" were erected. The Co. refused to sell their land, neglected to improve the immense water-power that they owned, and in 1825 broke down, and the property was sold for about one-fifth of its cost. In 1829-30 the manufacturing interests of the place began to increase. About that time a paper mill was erected by Channey Marshall, G. V. Sackett, and Asael Bascom; a cotton factory, by Judge Sackett; a machine shop, by McClary & Halliday; and a clock factory, by Marshall & Adams. Until the locks were built, in 1815, the most important business of the place was that of transporting goods and boats around the rapids. The "dress reform" movement was commenced in this town by Mrs. Amelia Bloomer, who adopted the dress known as the Bloomer Dress in 1849.

⁴ The census reports 7 churches in town; Bap., M. E., Wes. Meth., Prot. E., Presb., Ref. Prot. D., and R. C.

so gradual that nearly every part is arable. The streams are all small. Near the center of the town is a cranberry swamp, occupying about 800 acres. The soil is a gravelly loam intermixed with clay. Bearytown, (Fayette p. o.) upon the line of Fayette, in the n. e. part, contains 3 churches, a steam sawmill, stave factory, and 128 inhabitants, of whom 51 are in this town. Romulus (p. v.) lies on the s. border. East Varick (p. o.) is a landing upon Cayuga Lake. McDuffee Town is a hamlet in the s. e. corner. Varick is a p. o. The first settlement was made by James McKnight, in 1789.¹ There are 3 churches in town; Bap., Presb., and M. E.

WATERLOO—was formed from Junius, March 26, 1829. It lies on the n. bank of Seneca River, n. w. of the center of the co. The surface is almost one unbroken flat. A marsh extends e. and w. through the town s. of the center, and another occupies the n. e. corner.² The bed of Seneca River, on the s. boundary, is almost level with the general surface. The soil is muck and clay in the n. and e., gravel along the n. border, and a sandy loam in the center and w. Waterloo, (p. v.), on Seneca River, near the e. border of the town, was incorp. April 9, 1824. It is a station upon the N. Y. C. R. R. and upon the Seneca Canal. A fall of 24½ feet in Seneca River furnishes an excellent water-power, which is mostly improved. It is a half-shire of the co., and contains the courthouse, 6 churches, the Waterloo Union School, a bank, a large shawl factory,³ 3 distilleries, 2 malt houses, 3 flouring mills, 5 sawmills, 2 founderies and machine shops, 2 oil mills, and numerous other manufactories.⁴ Seneca River above the falls, being seldom frozen, is navigable throughout the year. This village is an important depôt of lumber from the s. w. cos., and of coal from the Susquehanna and Blossburg Mines. Pop. 3,050. South Waterloo, formerly called "Schoyes," is on the opposite side of Seneca River, in Fayette. Settlement was commenced by John Greene, from R. I., in 1789.⁵ The first religious services were held about 1816.⁶

⁸ Among these establishments is a plaster mill, boatyard, and drydock, 4 copper, tin and sheet iron factories, a fining mill, and washboard factory, and 2 cabinet and furniture shops.

⁷ Among the other early settlers were Jahaz Gorham, from Ballston, (Saratoga co.), who located upon the present site of the village. Salmon Disbrow, from Saratoga co., came in about the same time. The first child born was John Smith, in 1805; in 1799; and the first deaths, those of John Gregory and James Hull, two Revolutionary soldiers, who drew lots in this town, settled upon them, and both died about 1808. Isaac Gorham taught the first school, in 1810; Jahaz Gorham kept the first inn, about 1795; Charles Swift, the first store, in 1815; and James Bear built the first mill, in 1794.

⁶ The census reports 6 churches in town; Presb., Prot. E., Ref. Prot. D., M. E., Disciples, and Friends.

CHENANGO COUNTY.

THIS county was formed from Herkimer and Tioga, March 15, 1798. Madison was taken off in 1806. It is an interior co., lying s. e. of the center of the State; is centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains — sq. mi. Its surface is a hilly upland, broken by the deep ravines of the streams. The highlands consist of two principal ridges, extending n. and s.,—the first lying between Unadilla and Chenango Rivers, and the second between the Chenango and Otselic. These ridges are subdivided by numerous parallel and lateral valleys, and their declivities are often too steep for profitable cultivation. The summits are broad and rolling, and of nearly uniform elevation throughout the co.; and the highest points are 600 to 800 feet above the principal valleys.

Susquehanna River flows s. w. through the s. e. corner, receiving from the n. the Unadilla, which forms the greater part of the e. boundary of the co. The principal branches of the Unadilla and Susquehanna are Beaver Creek, Shawler, Great, Kent, and Kelsey Brooks. Chenango River flows in a generally southerly direction from the n. border of the co. to near the center, and thence s. w. to the s. w. corner. It receives from the e. Handsome Eddy, Padgets, and Pages Brooks, and from the w. Canasawacta, Fly-Meadow, Ludlow, and Genegantslet Creeks, and Pleasant, Fly, Cold, and Mill Brooks. Otselio River flows s. w. through the n. w. corner, receiving from the e. Middletown Brook and Brackel Creek, and from the w. Manns, Buck, and Ashbel Brooks and Mud Creek. In basins among the hills, far above the valleys, are numerous small ponds. The valleys of the Susquehanna and Chenango are among the finest in the State. They consist generally of a fertile and highly cultivated interval of an average width of about 1 mi., usually bordered by steep and finely wooded hillsides. All the valleys of the co. seem to have been formed by the action of great currents of water, which have plowed deep furrows in the gently rolling region which probably once formed the general face of the country.

The lowest rocks in the co., appearing upon the n. border, belong to the Hamilton group. Successively above these toward the s. appear the Tully limestone, Genesee slate, the Portage, Chemung, and Catskill groups. The sandstone of the Portage group furnishes a good material for building and flagging. Several quarries have been opened along the Chenango Valley between Greene and Oxford. A quarry of the same stone a little below Oxford furnishes grindstones and whetstones. The rock which crowns the summits of the s. hills is the red sandstone of the Chemung group. The soils are almost entirely derived from the disintegration of the rocks. In a few localities is found a very limited amount of drift. Upon the hills the soil is principally a shaly loam, and in the valleys a fine quality of productive alluvium.

The co. is almost exclusively agricultural. Dairying is the leading pursuit, and is gradually gaining upon all the other branches of agriculture. Stock and wool growing are carried on to some extent. Grain is produced, though not in sufficient quantities for the wants of the people. Hops are cultivated to some extent along the river valleys.

The co. seat is located at Norwich.¹ The courthouse is a fine stone building, situated near the center of the village, fronting the public park.² It is built in the Grecian style of architecture, with a colonnade in front, supported by Corinthian columns. The jail is a stone building, contiguous to the courthouse. The clerk's office is a fireproof brick building, upon the courthouse lot. The poorhouse is situated upon a farm of 170 acres in Preston, 6 mi. w. of the courthouse. The average number of inmates is 90, supported at a weekly cost of 56 cts. each. The farm yields a revenue of $800. The house is poor and dilapidated, and the accommodations for the inmates are extremely poor. A school is taught 6 months in the year.

¹ The co. at first had half-shires, the courts being held alternately at Hamilton (now in Madison county) and Oxford. From the organization of Madison co., in 1806, until 1809, the courts were held alternately at Oxford and North Norwich. By act of March 6, 1807, the co. seat was located at Norwich. The new courthouse was built and first occupied in 1809. The first courthouse was a wooden building, erected at a cost of $6,500. The present courthouse was built in 1837, at a cost of $16,000, under the direction of Wm. Randall, Wm. Knowlton, and Erasmus Lathrop, commissioner. The present jail was erected in 1830, at a cost of $2,000. It is a two story building, containing 10 cells and a house for the jailer.

The Chenango Canal extends along Chenango River through the co. It crosses the river below Earlville, below Sherburne, and below Greene, upon wood aqueducts, supported by stone piers. The Albany & Susquehanna R. R., now in process of construction, extends along the Susquehanna through Bainbridge.

This co. included 11 of the "Twenty Towns" or "Governor's Purchase," the "Gore" lying between them and the Military Tract, the Harper Patent of 16,000 acres, Vermont Sufferers' Tract of 40,960 acres,² Livingston Tract of 16,000 acres, the French Tract of nearly the same extent, a portion of the Chenango Triangle Tract, and several smaller tracts. The territory included within the Twenty Townships was ceded to the State by the Indians, in a treaty held with Gov. George Clinton, at Fort Schuyler, Sept. 22, 1788.³ This tract is sometimes called "Clinton's Purchase," and sometimes "The Governor's Purchase."

The early settlers were principally from Vt., Conn., and the eastern part of the State. The settlers in the n. part of the co. came in by way of Rome, and those in the central and s. parts by way of Chenango and Susquehanna Rivers. Many of the early settlers almost perished from want of food, at times, during the first few years. A colony of French settled at Greene in 1792, but,

¹ The Western Oracle, the first paper published in the co., was commenced by A. Romeyn, previous to 1804, at Sherburne Four Corners. It was discontinued in 1808 or '09.

The Olive Branch was started at Sherburne in May, 1806, by Phinney & Fairchild. In 1808 John F. Fairchild became sole proprietor. — Miller, Lot Clark, and John B. Johnson were successively interested in its publication. In 1812 or '13 Johnson changed its name to

The Volunteer. In 1816 the press was purchased by John F. Hubbard, who commenced

The Norwich Journal. In 1844 it passed into the hands of La Fayette Leal and J. H. Sinclair, who merged it with The Oxford Republican in 1847 and changed the name to

The Chenango Union. Harvey Hubbard purchased Leal's interest Oct. 20, 1847, and the paper is now published by Hubbard & Sinclair.

The Chenango Patriot was commenced at Oxford in 1807 by John B. Johnson, and its publication continued for 3 or 4 yrs.

The President was published at Oxford in 1808 by Theophilus Eaton.

The Republican Messenger was commenced at Sherburne in 1810 by Petit & Percival.

The Oxford Gazette was started in 1814 by Chauncey Morgan, who published it some years, when it was sold to Geo. Hunt, and afterward to Hunt & Noyes. Mr. Morgan again became proprietor in 1826, and after a few years the paper was discontinued.

The Republican Agriculturist was commenced Dec. 10, 1818, by Thurlow Weed. It soon passed into the hands of — Curtis, who continued it for a short time, when it was discontinued.

The People's Advocate was commenced at Norwich in 1824 by H. P. W. Brainard. It passed into the hands of Wm. G. Hyer, and was discontinued in a short time.

The Chenango Republican was commenced at Oxford in 1826 by Benj. Cory. In 1828 it was purchased by Mack & Chapman. — March 3, 1831, Wm. E. Chapman and T. T. Flagler commenced a new series, and soon after changed its name to

The Oxford Republican. In 1838 Mr. Chapman became sole proprietor. It was successively published by J. Taylor Bradt, Benj. Welch, jr., R. A. Leal, C. E. Chamberlin, and La Fayette Leal. In 1847 it was merged with The Oxford Journal and published as The Chenango Union.

The Anti Masonic Telegraph was commenced at Norwich in Nov. 1829, by E. P. Pellet. In 1831 B. T. Cook became associated in its publication. Its name was subsequently changed to

The Chenango Telegraph. In 1840, on the death of E. P. Pellet, it passed into the hands of his brother, Nelson Pellet; and upon his death, in 1851, it was conducted for the estate by E. Max Leal and F. P. Fisher. In Sept. 1855, it was purchased by Rice & Martin, by whom it is now published.

The Chenango Patriot was commenced at Greene in 1830 by Nathan Randall. It afterward passed into the hands of Joseph M. Farr, who changed its name to

The Chenango Democrat, and in a short time it was discontinued. The New Berlin Herald was commenced in 1831 by Samuel L. Hatch. In 1834 it was published by Randal & Hatch. It soon after passed into the hands of Isaac C. Sheldon; and afterward into the hands of Hiram Ostrander, who changed its name to

The New Berlin Sentinel. It was discontinued about 1840.

The Chenango Whig was published at Oxford a short time in 1835.

The Miniature, a small mo., was issued from the same office.

The Sherburne — was commenced in 1836 by J. Warden Marble. In 1839 it was removed to Binghamton.

The Oxford Times was commenced in 1836 by a joint stock company. It was for some time conducted by H. H. Cook. In 1841 it passed into the hands of E. H. Purdy and C. D. Brigham. In 1844 it was published by Waldo M. Potter; in 1845, by Potter & Galpin; and in 1848 J. B. Galpin became sole proprietor, and still continues its publication.

The Bainbridge Eagle was commenced in 1843 by J. Hunt, jr. In 1846 its name was changed to

The Bainbridge Freeman; and in 1849 it was merged in

The Chenango Free Democrat, commenced at Norwich Jan. 1, 1849, by Alfred G. Lawyer; and J. D. Lawyer soon after became associated in its publication. It was then early removed to Cobleskill, Schoharie co.

The New Berlin Gazette was commenced in 1849 by Jos. K. Fox and M. E. Dunham, and was published about 1 year.

The Chenango News was commenced in 1850 by A. T. Boynton. J. M. Haight soon after became associated in its publication, and subsequently became sole proprietor. He removed the press to Norwich, and, in connection with A. P. Nixon, commenced the publication of

The Temperance Advocate in 1855, and published it 1 year, when it was discontinued.

The Saturday Visitor was commenced in 1852 by Joseph K. Fox. Its name was soon after changed to

The Social Visitor, after which it was published about 5 years.

The Spirit of the Age was commenced at Berlin in 1852 by J. K. Fox, J. D. Lawyer, editor. It was continued but a short time.

The Oxford Transcript was commenced in 1853 by G. N. Carhart, and was published about 6 months.

The Sherburne Transcript was commenced in 1855 by James M. Scarritt, and was published about 2 years.

The Chenango American was commenced at Greens, Sept. 20, 1855, by Denison & Fisher, its present publishers.

The Daily Reporter was commenced at Norwich in 1857 by J. H. Smith. In 1858 it was purchased by Rice & Martin, and was soon after discontinued.

The Literary Independent was commenced at Norwich in the fall of 1853 by a company of young gentlemen connected with the academy. It was published about 4 months.

The New Berlin Pioneer was commenced Feb. 19, 1859, by Squires & Fox, its present publishers.

from defect in title, most of them left. The greater part of the later immigration was also from New England. In consequence of the gradual change which has been going on for the last 20 years in the business of the co., and the substitution of dairying for all other branches of farming, the population of the co. has gradually decreased, and is now no greater than it was 40 years ago.

AFTON—was formed from Bainbridge, ———, 1857. It is the s. e. corner town of the co. Its surface consists principally of a rolling upland, separated into two nearly equal parts by the broad valley of the Susquehanna. The summits of the hills are 300 to 500 feet above the valleys, and their declivities are generally gradual slopes. The Susquehanna flows s. w. through near the center, in a broad and beautiful valley. It receives from the n. Kelseys and Harpers Brooks. Round Pond, one mi. n. e. of the village, covers an area of about 40 acres. It is 25 feet above the surface of the river, and without any visible outlet. The soil upon the hills is a shaly loam, and in the valleys a clayey loam and alluvium. Afton, (p. v.,) upon the Susquehanna, near the center of the town, contains 4 churches and 270 inhabitants. Ayreshire, (p. o.,) upon Kelsey Brook, in the n. part, is a hamlet. The first settlement was made upon the Susquehanna, below Afton, in 1786, by immigrants from Conn. and Vt.¹ There are 5 churches in town.²

BAINBRIDGE—was formed as part of Tioga co., by the name of "Jericho," Feb. 16, 1791. Its name was changed April 15, 1814. Parts of Norwich and Oxford were taken off in 1793, a part of Greene in 1798, and Afton in 1857. It lies upon the e. border of the co., s. of the center. Its surface is a rolling upland, divided into two parts by the Susquehanna, which flows s. w. through the e. part. The valley of the river is about one mi. wide, and is bordered by moderately steep hillsides. The highest summits are 400 to 600 feet above the valleys. The soil upon the hills is a gravelly and shaly loam, and in the valleys a clay loam and alluvium. Bainbridge, (p. v.,) upon the Susquehanna, was incorp. April 21, 1829. It contains 3 churches and 350 inhabitants. Bennettsville, (p. v.,) upon Bennetts Creek, in the s. e. part, contains 2 churches, a gristmill, sawmill, and about 20 houses. West Bainbridge is a p. o. in the n. w. corner. The lands in this town were first claimed by Robert Harper under a grant from the Indians; but the title was subsequently repudiated by the State, and a portion of the lands was granted to settlers from Vt. who had suffered from failure of title to lands in that State granted to them by New York. The first settlements were made in 1785, by immigrants from Vt. and Conn.³ The first church (Presb.) was formed about 1790, by Rev. Wm. Stone.⁴

COLUMBUS—was formed from Brookfield, (Madison co.,) Feb. 11, 1805. It is the n. e. corner town in the co. Its surface is a rolling and hilly upland, occupying a portion of the high ridge between Unadilla and Chenango Rivers. The highest summits are 400 to 600 feet above the valleys. Unadilla River forms its e. boundary, receiving as tributaries Beaver Creek, Shawlex Brook, and several other small streams. The soil is a gravelly and shaly loam, best adapted to pasturage.⁵ Columbus Center, (Columbus p. o.,) upon Shawler Brook, contains 3 churches, a tannery, and 25 houses. The first settlement was made upon Lot 44, in 1791, by Col. Converse.⁶ The first religious meeting was the funeral of Mrs. Dorcas Howard, conducted by Elder Campbell, (Bap.,) in 1797.⁷

COVENTRY—was formed from Greene, Feb. 7, 1806. It is situated centrally on the s. line of the co. Its surface consists of the high rolling hills midway between the Susquehanna and Chenango Rivers, the highest elevations being about 800 feet above the valleys. The hills are arable to their summits, and their slopes are generally long and gradual. Harpers and Kelseys Creeks, flowing into the Susquehanna, are the principal streams. The soil is a gravelly and sandy

¹ Among the early settlers were Seth Stone, Nath'l Benton, Isaac Miner, and Japhet Bush and sons, from Conn., and Hezekiah Stowell and sons, Orlando Bridgman and sons, and Ebenezer Church and sons, from Vt. The three last named families were "Vermont Suffrers." The first child born was Wm. Bush, in 1786; and the first death was that of ——— Polly. Nath'l Church taught the first school, in 1790; Asa Stowell kept the first inn, in 1788, Peter Betts the first store, in 1805; and David Cooper and Isaac Miner built the first sawmill, on Kelseys Brook.

² Two M. E., Cong., Bap., and Univ.

³ Among the early settlers were Wm. Gutherie, Abraham Fuller, Reuben Kirby, and Gould Bacon, from Conn.; Stephen and John Stiles, Healy Kelsey, Chas. Bush, Eben and Jos. Landers, and Jas. Graham. Sam'l Bixby settled on Lot 75, in 1788, and Maj. Henry Evans on Lot 80, in 1789. The first birth was that of K. Landers, daughter of Jos. Landers, in March, 1791; the first marriage, that of Charles Bush and Joan Harrington, in 1794; and the first death, that of Mrs. Reuben Kirby, in 1792. William Gutherie kept the first inn, in 1793, on Lot 85. Phineas and Reuben Bennett erected a gristmill on Bennetts Creek, in 1789.

⁴ There are 7 churches in town; 2 M. E., 2 Bap., F. W. Bap., Presb., and Prot. E.

⁷ The census reports 5 churches in town; Bap., F. W. Bap., Cong., M. E. and Union.

loam, with occasional spots of a red, slaty loam, better adapted to grazing than tillage. Coventry, (p. v.), a little n. w. of the center, contains 2 churches and 40 dwellings; and Coventryville, (p. v.), 2 mi. e. of Coventry, a church, mill, and 25 dwellings. Church Hollow is a p. o. on the s. line of the town. The first settlement was made near the center, by Simon Jones, in 1785.¹ The first church (Cong.) was formed Nov. 19, 1807. Rev. David Harmon was the first preacher.²

GERMAN³—was formed from De Ruyter, (Madison co.,) March 21, 1806. Otselic was taken off in 1817, Lincklaen in 1823, and a part of Pitcher in 1827. It is located centrally upon the w. line of the co. The surface is hilly, and watered by several brooks, forming what is called Five Streams, which flow through the town in a s. direction. The soil is a sandy and gravelly loam, well adapted to grazing. Livermores Corners, (German p. o.,) near the w. line, is a hamlet; and East German is a p. o. The first settlement was made in 1795, by Benjamin Cleveland, from Oneida co.⁴ The first church (Presb.) was formed at an early period, and a M. E. association was formed in 1815, at the house of Walter Oyshlenbank.⁵

GREENE⁶—was formed from Union (Broome co.) and "Jericho," (now Bainbridge,) March 15, 1798. Coventry was taken off in 1806, and Smithville in 1808. It is the s. w. corner town of the co. Its surface is a rolling and hilly upland, divided into two distinct parts by the valley of the Chenango. The hills rise 500 to 700 feet above the river, and are broken by the ravines of the streams. Chenango River flows s. w. through the center, in a broad valley about 1 mi. in width. The Chenango Canal passes through the valley. Genegantslet Creek flows s. through the w. part in a wide valley, and joins the Chenango a few miles below the village of Greene. Pages Brook flows through the s. e. corner; and several small streams are tributary to the Chenango. The soil is a gravelly and shaly loam on the hills, and alluvium in the valleys. Greene, (p. v.,) near the center, was incorp. April 12, 1842. It contains 4 churches, a flouring mill, furnace, and 814 inhabitants. East Greene (p. v.) contains a church and 158 inhabitants. Genegantslet (p. v.) contains 1 church and 12 houses. The first permanent settlement was made by Stephen Ketchum, in 1792.⁷ The first church (Bap.) was organized in 1795,⁸ by Elder Nathaniel Kellogg,

¹ — Goodell and — Clark settled near Mr. Jones in 1786, and Benj. Jones at the same place in 1788. Ozias Yale and Wm. Starks located a little n. of Coventry in 1792. Elijah Warren on Lot 2, in 1804, and Moses Allis, Roger Egerton, and S. Hutchinson soon after. The first birth was that of Wm., son of Moses Allis, in 1794; the first marriage, that of Simeon Parker and Polly Sprague; and the first death, that of a son of Roger Egerton, in 1796. Sherman Page taught the first school; Benj. Jones kept the first inn, in 1788, and Jotham Parker the first store, in 1799. The first gristmill was erected by Capt. Parker, in 1795, and the first carding and cloth dressing mill by A. and Wm. H. Rogers, about the same time.

⁴ Abraham Livermore settled at Livermores Corners, in 1796, with his wife and children, Abraham, jr., Becka, Daniel, Polly, Abel, Cyrus, Hepsy, Sully, and Martin Livermore. From their isolated position in the wilderness—remote from any settlement—the Cleveland and Livermore families suffered great privations and hardships during the first years of their settlement. In June, 1776, Mr. Cleveland set out for "Fort Stanwix" for provisions, his family being entirely destitute. He intended to return in 3 or 4 days, but was detained for some time. On the fourth day of his absence, his wife and children, who had eaten nothing for 3 days except a few roots found in the woods, set out for their nearest neighbors, in Cincinnati, on Otselic River, 4½ mi. distant. When about a mile from home, they encountered a bear, and were frightened back. The next morning the mother was too weak to walk, and the two older children again set out for Mr. Raymond's, on the Otselic. Upon learning the suffering condition of the family, Mrs. Raymond made them a pudding of bran,—the only food she had in the house. This and a bottle of milk kept the family from starvation until relief came. At another time, when the family were reduced to the last extremity, two unmilked cows came to their house one night, and went away in the morning, furnishing them with milk for several days. It was never known where the cows came from or where they went to. Other families in the vicinity suffered in a similar manner. The first birth was that of Polly Cleveland, in 1796; the first marriage, that of Jonathan Head and Hepsy Livermore; and the first death, that of — Hartshorn. Abraham Livermore kept the first inn; Jonathan Chandler kept the first store, and erected the first mill and factory, on the e. branch of Otselic River.

carora Indians in 1785. These lands were subsequently sold by the State to individual patentees.

⁷ Mr. Ketchum located within the bounds of the present village of Greene. In the fall of 1792 a settlement was made by a company of French refugees. One of their number, Chas. Felix De Bulogne, had preceded the main body, and made a purchase of 15,000 acres lying on the e. side of Chenango River. The first party that came consisted of M. Bulogne, M. Shamont, M. La Fevre, M. Bravo, M. Du Vernet, and M. Übrs. A portion of them had families; and several young ladies were among the party. In Otsego co. Simon Barnet joined the party, and subsequently M. Dutremont, with his family, settled with them. Before the dispersion of the colony they were joined by Jos. Juliard, who was the only French emigrant that became a permanent resident. M. Bulogne, on his way to Philadelphia in the spring of 1795, was drowned while fording a creek much swollen by the floods. The untimely death of the leader of this adventurous band proved fatal to the future success of the settlement. The failure of the company to pay the balance of the purchase money due on the tract caused the title to revert to the original patentees. After all the hardships and privations they had endured, the failure to secure a title to their land proved a signal for dispersion. The majority of them left in the year 1796. In 1794, Talleyrand, the celebrated French diplomatist, visited his fellow-countrymen in Greene. Among the early permanent settlers were Nath'l Kellogg, Zopher Betts, Benaiah Loomis, Cornelius Hill, and David Tremaine, who located at East Greene in 1793. The first road that was cut through the town was called "The Chenango Road." It runs from the present village of Bainbridge to the mouth of Page Creek, on the Chenango,—a distance of about 25 mi. The first settlers upon this road within the then limits of the town, commencing at the w., were Nathan Bennett, Joshua Root, Eleazar Skinner, Thomas Elliott, Joab Elliott, Roswell Fitch, Aden Elliott, Philo Cloommons, Capt. Mandeville, Simeon and Benj. Jones, Hardin Bennett, Record Wilber, and Deacon Richards, who came in from 1792 to '95. The settlers who located in the s. part, w. of the river, were Jas. and Herman Terwilliger, Elisha and Noah Gilbert, Stephen Palmer, and Jos. and Cornish Mesenger, as early as 1790. The first birth was that of Johnston Rundall, son of Jos. Rundall,—for which honor the mother subsequently received a deed of 50 acres of land from the Hon'ble Estate. — Cartwright taught the first school, in 1794; Conrad Sharp kept the first inn, in 1794; Elisha Smith the first store, in 1801. Conrad Sharp built the first sawmill, in 1795, and Abraham Storm and Henry Vorse the first gristmill, in 1794.

Gardon, and Dudley Hewitt, in 1799. Among the other early settlers were Sam'l and Clark Lewis. Rev. Hazard Burdick, David Eccleston, Jos. Marsh, — Champlain, Wm. Parker, Abraham Avery, and Wm. Woolworth. The first child born was Fanny Billings, July 16, 1796; the first marriage, that of Capt. Lyon and Widow Crandall, in 1798; and the first death, that of an infant child of Geo. Crary. The first school was taught by Wm. McAlpine, who surveyed the Livingston Patent in 1798 and subsequently the Morris Tract. Jonas Marsh kept the first inn, in 1800; Jas. Glover kept the first store and erected the first mill. ² The census reports 5 churches; Bap., F. W. Bap., Seventh Day Bap., Presb., and Univ.

⁴ During the first week after their arrival they erected a log meetinghouse, and on the succeeding Sabbath met in it, after the example of the Pilgrim Fathers, to make public and united acknowledgments for the protection and guidance of an over-ruling Power while on a perilous and tedious journey through the wilderness to their new home. The census reports 9 churches; 2 Bap., 2 M. E., F. W. Bap., Cong., Prot. E., Univ., and Union.

⁵ Jno. Agard and Eppaphes Sheldon, from Litchfield, Conn., bought out the log house and improvement of Mr. Lytle in Feb. 1798, moved in their families, and became the sole residents of the town. They were joined in 1798-99 by Edward Loomis, who settled on Ludlow Creek, Simeon Neal, Robt. Williams, Aea Straight, Dan'l Phillips, Capt. Samuel A. Speel, John Young, and John Palmer. The first child born was Jane Loomis, May 2, 1800; the first marriage, that of Jason Smith and Hannah Rorapough, in 1807; and the first death, that of a son of George Shaddock, in 1799. Capt. John Palmer kept the first inn and store and erected the first distillery. Timothy Seoville built the first sawmill, in 1805, and Nicholas Powell the first gristmill, in 1809.

⁶ The census reports 4 churches; 2 M. E., Bap., and Univ.

⁸ The census reports 5 churches in town; Bap., F. W. Bap., Cong., M. E., and Friends.

1 Formed since 1855.

LIVINGSTON COUNTY.

THIS county was formed from Genesee and Ontario, Feb. 23, 1821. A portion of Allegany was annexed in 1846, and another portion in 1856. It occupies a nearly central position in the w. half of the State. It is centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains — sq. mi. Its surface is an upland, rolling in the n. and hilly in the s. The hills upon the s. border are 1,000 to 1,200 ft. above the valleys and 2,000 to 2,200 ft. above tide. From their summits the surface declines toward the n., the extreme n. border being 500 to 800 ft. above tide. The slopes are usually smooth and gradual, except along the banks of the streams; and nearly every acre of land in the co. is arable.

The streams generally flow in deep ravines. They are usually bordered by steep, and sometimes precipitous, hillsides. The principal stream is Genesee River, flowing n. e. through the w. part of the co. In the s. its course is between steep and often precipitous banks, but further n. it is bordered by broad and beautiful intervals.¹ Its tributaries are Conesus Creek, Fall Brook, and Canaseraga Creek, from the e., and Beards, White, and several other small creeks, from the w. Coshagua Creek is a tributary of the Canaseraga. Hemlock and Honeoye Outlets flow along the e. border, and a few tributaries of the Susquehanna take their rise in the s. part. Conesus Lake, near the center, and Hemlock Lake, along the e. border, occupying long, narrow valleys, are the only considerable bodies of water.

The underlying rocks, commencing upon the n. border, are the waterlime of the Onondaga salt group, the Onondaga and corniferous limestones, Marcellus and Hamilton shales, Genesee slate, and Portage shales and sandstones. The limestones of the n. are extensively quarried for lime and building stone; and the sandstones of the Portage group furnish excellent building stone and flagging. The soil, derived from the disintegration of these rocks, in all the elements of fertility has no superior in the State. Until the commencement of the ravages of the midge, wheat was the staple production; but it has been principally superseded by the spring grains. Broomcorn is largely cultivated along the Genesee Flats; and considerable attention is paid to cattle and sheep growing and dairying in the s. part.

The county seat is located at the village of Geneseo. The courthouse is beautifully situated upon a fine lot in the n. part of the village.² The jail, in the rear of the courthouse, is an old building, without means of ventilation, and it is impossible properly to classify the prisoners. The clerk's office is a small fireproof building upon the courthouse lot. The co. poorhouse is located upon a farm of 118 acres about 1 mi. e. of Geneseo. Its average number of inmates is 107, supported at a weekly expense of 75 cts. each. The farm yields a revenue of $2,000. A school is taught 9 or 10 months in the year. The house is well constructed and is very well kept.

The Genesee Valley Canal extends along the valley of the Genesee from the n. bounds of the co. to Mt. Morris; thence it turns s. e. to Coshagua Creek and up the valley of that stream to Nunda, and thence s. w. to the Genesee at Portage, where it crosses the river upon a wood aqueduct supported by stone piers. The Dansville Branch Canal extends from Mt. Morris s. e. to Dansville.³ The Canandaigua & Niagara Falls Branch of the N. Y. Central R. R. extends through Caledonia. The Buffalo & N. Y. City R. R. extends s. e. through Portage and Nunda. The Buffalo, New York & Erie R. R. extends s. e. through Caledonia, Avon, Livonia, Conesus, and Springwater. The Genesee Valley R. R. extends s. through Avon, Geneseo, and Groveland to Mt. Morris.

Five newspapers—one daily, three weekly, and one monthly—are now published in the co.⁴

³ The highest level of the Genesee Valley Canal within this co. is 622 feet above the Erie Canal at Rochester and 1,132 feet above tide.

⁴ The Moscow Advertiser and Genesee Farmer, the first paper published in the co. was commenced at Moscow in 1817 by Hezekiah Ripley. About 1821 it passed into the hands of James Percival, who removed it to Geneseo and changed the name to The Livingston Register. In 1829 Anson M. Weed and Allen Warner became proprietors; and it was successively published by Warner, Percival, Elias Clark, Wm. H. Kelsey, and Richard M. Miel. In 1835 Miel became sole proprietor. He was soon after succeeded by D. S. Curtis. In 1837 its publication was suspended. It was soon after revived, and published for a short time by Hugh Harding. He was succeeded by John Kempshall, who published it until 1840, when it was discontinued.

The Livingston Journal was commenced at Geneseo in 1822 by Chasuncey Morse. Asabel Harvey was subsequently

Before the advent of the whites, this co. was the seat of several of the principal villages of the Seneca Nation. Considerable advances had been made in the arts of civilization, and a large quantity of land had been cleared and was cultivated. Corn, apples, and peaches were extensively produced. The orchards were destroyed, and the whole region was laid waste, by Gen. Sullivan, in 1779. The co. was included in the Phelps and Gorham Purchase, and in the Morris Reserve.¹ The latter tract was subdivided into several tracts, generally distinguished as separate patents.

In Sept. 1797, a treaty was held with the Indians at Geneseo, at which they ceded all their lands in this co. to the whites, except several small reservations.² The first settlements were made about 1790, previous to the extinguishment of the Indian title. The most prominent of the early settlers were James and Wm. Wadsworth, from Durham, Conn., who located at Geneseo, June 10, 1790. They were large landowners, and by a wise and liberal policy they greatly facilitated the settlement of the surrounding region. The greater part of the early settlers were immigrants from New England. York and Caledonia were settled principally by a colony of Scotch.

AVON—was formed, as "Hartford," in Jan. 1789. Its name was changed in 1808. It is the center town upon the n. border of the co. Its surface is a rolling and moderately hilly upland, terminating in flats on Genesee River, which forms its w. boundary. Deming Hill, on Lot 192, is the highest point in town. The principal stream is Conesus Creek, or Outlet, a tributary of Genesee River. The soil upon the uplands is a sandy and gravelly loam intermixed with clay, and on the flats, a deep, rich alluvium. Avon, (p. v.) in the w. part, a station on the G. V., and B., N. Y. & E. R. R.'s., celebrated for its medicinal springs,³ was incorp. June 13, 1853. It contains 3 churches, 5 large hotels, and 879 inhabitants. East Avon, (p. v.) near the center, contains 2 churches and about 35 houses. South Avon, (p. o.) in the s. part, contains 9 houses. Littleville, 1½ mi. s. of Avon, contains a church, gristmill, furnace, and 23 houses. The first associated with him. In 1820 Levi Hovey became proprietor; and it was successively published by Benj. Dennison, H. F. Evans, Evans & Woodroff, and Wm. J. Ticknor. Its publication was suspended in 1834 or '35. In the fall of 1835 the establishment was purchased by David Mitchell and W. H. Kelsey, who revived the paper under the name of

The Livingston Democrat. It was continued until 1837, when its publication was suspended. In the fall of that year S. P. Allen became proprietor of the press, and revived the paper under the name of

The Livingston Republican. In Sept. 1846, it passed into the hands of Jehu M. Campbell; and was successively published by Joseph Kershner and Chas. E. Bronson. In 1849 James T. Norton became proprietor, and is its present publisher.

The Dansville Chronicle was commenced in 1830 by David Mitchell and Benj. Dennison. Dennison soon retired, and its name was changed to

The Village Record; it was soon after discontinued.

The Western New Yorker was published at Dansville a short time in 18— by A. Stevens & Son. It was succeeded by

The Dansville Whig, published by Geo. W. Stevens. Chas. W. Dibble was the publisher about 1 year, when it again passed into the hands of Stevens, who in 1848 changed the name to

The Dansville Courier. In 1849 or '50 it passed into the hands of H. D. Smead, who changed it to

The Dansville Democrat. It subsequently passed into the hands of Geo. A. Saunders, who removed it to Geneseo and changed the name to

The Geneseo Democrat. In Oct. 1857, it was returned to Dansville and published as

The Livingston Sentinel by H. C. Page, the present publisher.

The Livingston Courier was commenced at Geneseo in 1831 by C. Dennison. In 1832 it passed into the hands of Henry F. Evans, and was discontinued in 1833 or '34.

The Livingston Courier was published at Geneseo in 1832 by A. Bennett.

The Mount Morris Spectator was commenced in 1834 by Hugh Harding. In 1848 he united it with The Livingston County Whig and changed its name to

The Livingston Union, under which title it is still published by Hugh Harding.

The Dansville Times was published in 1835 by D. C. Mitchell.

The Nunda Gazette was started in 1841 by Ira G. Wisner. It was continued about 1 year, when it was removed to Mount Morris and its name changed to

The Geneseo Valley Recorder. It was discontinued about 1843.

The Dansville Republican was published in 1842 by David Fairchild.

The Livingston County Whig was started at Mount Morris in 1843 by Geo. B. Phelps. It subsequently passed into the hands of James T. Norton, and in 1848 was sold to Hugh Harding, who united it with The Mount Morris Spectator.

The Geneseo Democrat was started at Geneseo in 1843 by Gilbert

F. Shankland. It was removed to Nunda in 1847, and in 1848 to Elllicottville, Cattaraugus co.

The Livingston Express, semi-mo., was published at Mount Morris in 1843 by J. G. Wisner.

The Mount Morris Daily Whig was issued from the office of The Livingston County Whig in June, 1846, and discontinued in August following.

The Cuylerville Telegraph was started at Cuylerville in 1847 by Franklin Cowdery. In 1848 it passed into the hands of Peter Lawrence, who soon after removed it.

The Dansville Chronicle was started in June, 1848, by Richardson & Co., and was discontinued in 1851.

The Nunda Democrat was started at Nunda in 1848 by Milo D. Chamberlain. It was soon discontinued.

The Fountain, mo., was started at Dansville in 1849 by J. R. Tremble, and continued about 2 years.

The Dansville Herald was published in 1849 by H. L. & L. H. Raun. In 1857 it was merged in The Livingston Sentinel.

The Nunda Telegraph was started in 1850 by Chas. Atwood. It was continued about 1 year.

The Nunda Times was started in Jan. 1852, by N. T. Hackstaff. In July following the office was burned and the paper discontinued.

The Lima Weekly Visitor was started at Lima in 1853 by A. H. Tilton and M. C. Miller. It was subsequently published by Raymond & Graham and by S. M. Raymond, who changed its name to

The Geneseo Valley Gazette. It was discontinued about 1856.

The New Era was commenced at Honts Hollow in 1854 by David B. and Merritt Galley, boys, respectively 15 and 17 years of age. In 1855 it was removed to Nunda and its name changed to

The Young America. It was discontinued in about 1 year.

The Letter Box, mo., started at Glen Haven, Cayuga co., in 1857, by J. M. Jackson and Miss H. N. Austin, was removed to Dansville in 1858, and is now published by M. W. Simons.

The Dansville Daily Times was commenced in May, 1859, by W. J. Larue, publisher. In June of the same year its title was changed to

The Dansville Daily Register; and it is still published by Larue; H. C. Page, editor.

² The Indian Reservations within the limits of the co. were: Canawagus, containing 2 sq. mi. on the w. bank of Genesee River, w. of Avon; Little Beards Town and Fig Tree, containing 4 sq. mi. on the w. bank of the Genesee, opposite Geneseo; Squakie Hill, containing 2 sq. mi. on the w. bank of the Genesee, n. of Mt. Morris; and the Gardean Reservation, of 28 sq. mi., lying one-half in this co. & one of Mt. Morris. See p. —. The Indian titles to these lands have all since been extinguished.

settlement was made in 1785.¹ The first church (Presb.) was organized in 1795; Rev. Daniel Thatcher was the first preacher. There are 6 churches in town.²

CALEDONIA—was formed, as “Southampton,” March 30, 1802. Its name was changed April 4, 1806. A part of York was taken off in 1819. It is the n. w. corner town of the co. The surface is level or gently undulating, and a considerable portion of it is stony. Genesee River forms the e. boundary. Caledonia Spring, in the n. part, covers an area of about 2 acres; and the outlet forms a good water-power, a few rods n. of the spring. The soil is a clay loam, underlain by limestone.³ In the s. part is a valuable quarry of limestone, yielding excellent lime and a fine quality of building stone. Caledonia, (p. v.,) in the n. part, a station on the B., N. Y. & E. R. R. and C. & N. F. Branch of the N. Y. C. R. R., contains 3 churches, a grist and saw mill, a brewery, and 623 inhabitants. The first settlement was made about 1797, by — Peterson, a Dane, and — Brooks, an Englishman.⁴ The first church (Presb.) was organized in 1805; and the first settled preacher, Rev. Alexander Denoon, was installed Aug. 17, 1808.⁵

CONESUS—was formed from Livonia and Groveland, as “Freeport,” April 12, 1819. Its name was changed to “Browsersville,” March 26, 1825, and to Conesus, April 15, 1825. It is the central town upon the e. border of the co. Hemlock Lake forms the e. and Conesus Lake a part of the w. boundary. Its surface is hilly. The Marrowback Hills in the e. part, w. of Hemlock Lake, rise to about 1,200 feet above it. A deep valley extends s. e. from near the center into Springwater, through which the B., N. Y., & E. R. R. passes. The principal stream is Mill Creek. The soil is generally a clay loam. Conesus Center, (p. v.,) a R. R. station, contains 2 churches, a grist and saw mill, and about 40 houses. Foots Corners, (Conesus p. o.,) in the n. part, is a hamlet. The first settlement was made at the head of Conesus Lake, in 1794 or '95, by James Henderson, from Penn.⁶ The first church (Meth.) was organized in 1814.⁷

GENESEO—was formed in Jan. 1789. It is an interior town, lying n. of the center of the co. Its surface is undulating, with an abrupt declivity of 200 to 300 feet toward the river, on the w. Genesee River, forming its w. boundary, is bordered by fertile flats of an average width of about half a mi. The other principal streams are Fall Creek, and several small brooks that flow w. into the river and e. into Conesus Lake. On Fall Creek, s. of the village, is a perpendicular fall of 70 feet. The soil is clay and clay loam. Geneseo,⁸ (p. v.,) a station on the G. V. R. R., was incorp. April 21, 1832; it contains the co. buildings, 5 churches, the Geneseo Academy,⁹ 2 banks, a library, gristmill, furnace, and machine shop, and about 2,000 inhabitants. CLINTON COUNTY.

THIS county was formed from Washington, March 7, 1788.¹ Essex was taken off in 1799. St. Lawrence was provisionally annexed in 1801, and taken off in 1802; and Franklin was taken off in 1808. It lies upon Lake Champlain, and is the n. e. corner co. in the State. It is centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains — sq. mi. The surface is generally hilly and broken, and in some parts mountainous. The Au Sable Range enters the s. w. corner from Essex co. and extends in spurs and broken ranges through more than one-half of the w. part of the co. The highest peaks along the w. border are 3,000 to 4,000 feet above tide. These mountains have the same general characteristics as those further s. They are wild and broken, and their declivities and summits are so covered with ragged ledges of rocks that they can produce but a scanty crop of timber and are almost inaccessible. The uplands decline toward the n.; and along the n. line of the co. is a wide tract nearly level. Along the lake shore the surface is level or moderately uneven; and from this tract it rises gradually but unevenly to the summits of the ridges in the interior. A large share of the central and w. portions of the co. is covered by the original forests, and is too rough to ever admit of profitable cultivation. The mountainous region in the s. w., comprising about one-third of the co., is underlaid by gneiss, granite, and other primary rocks. A belt of Potsdam sandstone extends in a great curve around the primary region and occupies more than one-half of the remaining part of the co. On the n. it extends nearly to Canada, but toward the s. it gradually diminishes, and on the s. lies it but a few miles wide. Surrounding this, and lying next above it, is a narrow belt of calciferous sand rock, outcropping on the surface, along the lake shore, between Au Sable and Salmon Rivers. The limestones next appear, occupying the n. e. corner of the co. and outcropping along the lake from Salmon River to Rouses Point. Tertiary clay is found in a few places along the lake; and drift deposits are abundant in the n. and e. parts. Peat bogs are numerous in the n. e. part. The primitive region is exceedingly rich in minerals. Magnetic iron ore is found in inexhaustible quantities, and of a quality equal to the best in the world.²

Au Sable River forms most of the s. boundary. North of this are Little Sable, Salmon, Saranac, Little Chazy, and Great Chazy or Champlain Rivers, all flowing into Lake Champlain. English River flows n. into Canada. Upon all these streams are numerous falls, furnishing an immense amount of water-power. In the western wilderness are numerous small lakes, the principal of which are Chateaugay and Chazy Lakes, and Sampson, Taylor, and Slush Ponds. The soil along the lake is clayey, and in the interior and w. a sandy loam, best adapted to pasturage.

The people are principally engaged in stock raising, dairying, lumbering,³ mining, and in the manufacture of iron⁴ and starch. A large business is carried on in peltries, the wilderness still furnishing numerous valuable fur-bearing animals.⁵ Fish are abundant in the mountain streams and lakes, although the salmon, once so abundant, have now nearly disappeared.⁶ The Northern (Ogdensburgh) R. R. extends w. from Rouses Point, on Lake Champlain, through Champlain, Mooers, Chazy, Ellenburgh, and Clinton. The Plattsburgh & Montreal R. R. extends n. through Plattsburgh, Beekmantown, Chazy, and Mooers.

The co. seat is located at the village of Plattsburgh, on Lake Champlain.⁷ The courthouse is a

³ Au Sable and Saranac Rivers flow through valuable lumber districts, and upon them are numerous sawmills. Immense quantities of logs are annually floated down these streams and worked up at the mills below. Several important plank roads have been constructed in the wilderness for the special accommodation of the lumber and iron business.

⁷ The first court was taken as a d-vivo for the first co. seal. The first court was held Oct. 28, 1788. A blockhouse erected at the time of the alarm occasioned by the defeat of St. Clair by the Indians was used for the first jail. A courthouse, and jail of wood was erected in 1802-03, and burned in 1814 by the invading British army. A new one erected soon after was burned in 1836, and the present one was erected on its site. The first substantial brick building, with a stone basement, fronting the public square and river. The jail, a stone building in rear of the courthouse, affords no accommodations for the classification of prisoners, and is destitute of means of ventilation. The clerk's office is a fireproof brick building on an adjacent lot. The poorhouse is located in Beekmantown, 4 mi. n. of Plattsburgh. It has an average of 65 inmates, supported at a weekly cost of $1.00 each. The farm—90 acres—yields a revenue of $800.¹

Four weekly newspapers are published in the co.²

The first white man that ever visited this co. was Samuel Champlain, in 1609, under the auspices of the French. From that time until the final surrender of Canada in 1760, the French claimed and held this region of country, and the lands were mostly occupied by parties holding title under French grants.³

At the close of the war in 1760, settlement rapidly spread down the lake shore. By the terms of the treaty between England and France, the French settlers were to be secured in their rights; but the Government of New York made conflicting grants, which gave rise to controversies and quarrels and seriously retarded the progress of settlement. A few families were scattered along the shore previous to the Revolution; but the expedition of Burgoyne in 1777 broke up every settlement in the co. An important naval engagement took place Sept. 11, 1776, in the strait between Valcour Island and the w. shore, between the British and American forces, without any decisive results. The conflict was renewed on the 13th, and the American vessels were nearly all run ashore on the Vt. side and burned.⁴

Settlements were made at all the principal places bordering upon the lake within 10 years after the close of the Revolution. Point Au Fer was occupied by the British until 1796, when, in common with several other posts along the n. frontier, it was surrendered to the Americans.⁵ During the same year the St. Regis Indians ceded their claims to the State. The embargo of 1808 was openly violated, and many severe encounters took place between the revenue officers and organized bands of smugglers.⁶ Several attempts were made by lawless bands to seize the collectors and revenue officers, but without success. During the last war with Great Britain this co. was the seat of important military transactions, and along its frontiers and upon the adjacent waters of the lake many skirmishes and engagements took place.⁷

co. officers were Chas. Platt, First Judge; Josiah Throop and Chas. Hay, Judges; Robt. Cochran, Peter Sully, Wm. McAuley, and Phiny Moore, Assistant Justices; Theodorus Platt, Serrogate; Benj. Mooers, Sheriff; and Melancthon Lloyd Woolsey, Clerk.

² The American Monitor was established at Plattsburgh in 1807 by W. Nichols and Sam'l Lowell, and continued a short time.

The Plattsburgh Republican was begun in July, 1811, by — Reynolds. In 1813 Azariah C. Flagg became publisher, and continued it until 1826. It was subsequently under the charge of H. C. Miller and Wm. Land. In Aug. 1833, it passed into the hands of Roly G. Stone, by whom it is still continued.

The Northern Herald was begun April 10, 1813, by Fred. C. Powell. In 1815 it was changed to

The Plattsburgh Herald, and soon after it was discontinued.

The Northern Intelligencer was begun at Plattsburgh in May, 1821, by Fred. R. Allen. In 1832 it was united with

The Aurora Borealis, which was established in 1828, the combined papers taking the name of the Plattsburgh Aurora. It was continued but a short time.

The Democratic Press was published at Plattsburgh in 1834 by J. K. Averill.

The Whig was started at Plattsburgh in 1835 by G. W. Platt.

In 1838 it was changed to the Clinton County Whig. After several changes of ownership, in Oct. 1855, it was changed to

The Plattsburgh Express, published by Albert G. Carver, and is still continued by him.

The Boreen Guide was published a short time at Beekmantown in 1837 by Rev. Mr. Bailey.

The Free Democrat was published in 1848 by Oliver Hart.

The Northern Lander, mo., was begun in 1849 by Dr. Horace

Nelson. It was soon changed to

The Lander, and was continued till 1855.

The Champlain Beacon was commenced in 1850 by Ketchum

& Averill. In 1852 it was sold to D. Turner, of Keweenaw, who changed it to

The Boreas Point Advertiser, under which name it is still published.

The Cottage Gazette was published in 1851 by Arthur C. Nelson.

The American Sentinel was started Jan. 10, 1855, by Warren

Dow. It was soon changed to

The Plattsburgh Sentinel, and is still published.

³ The Governor General and Intendant, on the 10th, 11th, and 12th days of April, 1733, granted 3 seigniories within the present limits of Champlain and Chazy, each 3 leagues in depth and fronting upon Lake Champlain. The first, granted to Hugues Jacques Pean, Sieur de Livindière, captain in the marines, extended from Chazy River 2½ leagues northward; the second was granted to Sieur Migeon de la Gouchière, also a captain in the marines, and the third to Sieur de St. Vincent, jr., an ensign in the marines; each grant being 2 leagues in front. These grants were assigned forever, in fee and seigniorly, with the right of superior, mean, and inferior jurisdiction, (haute, moyenne, et basse justice), with the right of hunting, fishing, and Indian trade, subject to the performance of fealty and homage at the Castle of St. Louis, in Quebec, agreeable to the custom of Paris followed in Canada. They were conditioned to the preservation by tenants of the oak-timber fit for the royal navy, the reservation of mines and highways to the crown, and the use of the beaches to fishermen unless actually occupied by the seignior. The patentees might grant concessions to tenants, subject to the customary cens et rentes and dues, for each arpent of land in front by 40 arpents in depth. If used for military purposes, materials for the erection of fortifications and firewood for the use of garrisons were to be given without charge, and the grant was to be submitted for the royal approbation within one year. The grantees having failed to make improvements on the 10th of May, 1741, all these grants were declared to have reverted to his majesty's domain. On the 1st of Nov., 1752, a seigniorly of 2½ leagues in front by 3 in depth, and including Chazy River, was granted to the Sieur Bedou, councillor in the Superior Council of Quebec, under conditions like those of Pean. — Pattens and Docs. relating to the Seigniorial Tenure.

⁴ This engagement was one of the most gallant fought during the war, and, although resulting disastrously, it reflected no dishonor on the American arms. The American forces, commanded by Benedict Arnold, consisted of 1 sloop, 2 schooners, 4 galleys, and 8 gondolas, with 84 guns and 144 swivels; and the British force, commanded by Capt. Thos. Pringle, of 1 ship, 2 schooners, 1 raze, 1 gondola, 20 gunboats, and 28 long boats, with 89 guns and 697 men. The American loss was 50 to 90, and the British about the same. The Americans saved themselves by running their vessels aground and swimming ashore.

⁶ In 1808 two government officers were killed in attempting to seize a smuggling vessel called the Black Snake.

⁷ The following is a brief chronological list of the most important events of the war connected with this co.

In the summer of 1814, Sir Geo. Provost, Gov. of Canada, made extensive preparations for an invasion of the country along Lake Champlain. Toward the last of Aug. a land force of 14,000 men assembled on the frontier and commenced their march, supported by a formidable fleet under Commodore Downie. Gen. Maccomb, who commanded the Americans, had a force of less than 3,000; but, as the invading army drew nigh, he was continually re-inforced by volunteers and militia.¹ The American fleet, under the command of Commodore MacDonough, took position in Cumberland Bay, awaiting the attack of the British. On Sunday morning, Sept. 11, a simultaneous attack was made by the British land and naval forces, and a bloody and desperate battle ensued. At the end of 2 hours Commodore Downie's flag struck, and nearly the whole British fleet fell into the hands of the Americans.² The cannonade was continued upon the shore until night, when the British slowly and sullenly retreated and in a few days returned to Canada.³ These engagements were justly considered among the most brilliant that occurred during the war,

- 1812, Sept. 1.—Gen. Bloomfield, with 8,000 troops, prepared to attack Canada.
- “ Sept. 16.—Troops consisting of 3,000 regulars and 2,000 militia, under Gen. Dearborn, encamped within a half mile of the Canada line.
- “ Sept. 20.—Guardhouse at La Cole surprised; but, as plans of attack were frustrated, the troops retired to Plattsburgh for winter quarters.
- 1813, Feb.—Two brigades marched to Sackets Harbor, leaving the w. side of the lake entirely unprotected till Sept.
- “ June 2.—Naval engagement near Ash Island, Canada, between an American force, under Lieut. Sidney Smith, and several British gunboats, resulting in the loss of the American sloop Growler and Eagle and 112 men. The vessels were subsequently re-captured.
- “ July 31.—A British force of 1,400 men, under Col. Murray, made a descent upon Plattsburgh and destroyed a large amount of public and private property.
- “ Sept. 19.—A body of 3,000 American troops, under Gen. Hampton, concentrated at Cumberland Head and started on an expedition against Canada.
- “ Sept. 21.—After remaining one day in Canada, the Gen. changed his plan, and, ostensibly on his way to Montreal, he marched to Chateaugay, and there remained idle 26 days.
- “ Oct. 1.—A small party of American militia surprised a picket guard at Odeltown, Canada.
- “ Oct. 11.—Col. Isaac Clark, with 110 men, crossed the lake from Champlain, attacked a party of British at Missisco Bay, killed 9, wounded 14, and took 101 prisoners.
- “ Nov.—A party of Vt. militia crossed the lake and placed themselves under General Hampton. The Gov. of Vt. ordered them to return; but they refused to obey.
- “ Dec. 1.—A British naval force, consisting of 6 armed galleys, under Capt. Pring, entered the lake and burned an empty storehouse near Rouses Point. In the report of Sir George Provost, this building was converted into a large magazine of stores at Plattsburgh.
- 1814, Jan. 18.—A detachment of infantry from Plattsburgh arrived upon the frontier, soon followed by another body of troops, under Gen. Wilkinson.
- “ March 30.—Under the direction of Gen. Wilkinson, Maj. Foreyth attacked a gristmill at La Cole, but was repulsed with a loss of 104 in killed and wounded. The British loss was 66.
- “ May 9.—A British naval force, consisting of 5 sloops and 13 row-galleys, under Capt. Pring, were repulsed in an attack upon Otter Creek, in Vt. On their retreat they entered Baquet River, but were attacked by a body of militia, and nearly all the men in the rear galley were killed or wounded.
- “ June 24.—Lieut. Col. Foreyth, with 70 riflemen, entered Canada, and was attacked by a British force of 200 men. He effected his retreat with little loss, but a few days after was killed in another skirmish.
- “ Aug. 29.—Gen. Izard, with the greater part of the American force, left Champlain, leaving the immense amount of military stores at Plattsburgh in charge of Gen. Maccomb, at the head of 3,400 men, 1,400 of whom were sick.
- “ Aug. 30.—Gen. Brisbane, with the advance guard of the British army, took possession of the head of the British army, Gov. of Canada, at the head of 14,000 men, advanced 8 mi. from Champlain, arriving within 8 mi. of Plattsburgh on the evening of the 5th.
- “ Sept. 3.—Sir Geo. Provost, Gov. of Canada, at the head of 14,000 men, advanced 8 mi. from Champlain, arriving within 8 mi. of Plattsburgh on the evening of the 5th.
- “ Sept. 6.—Skirmish at Culvers Hill, and the first attack on Plattsburgh, in which the British lost 200 men and the Americans 45.

- 1814, Sept. 11.—Naval engagement in Cumberland Bay, resulting in the complete victory of the Americans; and an attack upon the American landworks, which was repulsed. The British army retreated during the following night.
- “ Sept. 24.—Last division of the British army retired to Canada.

² The comparative strength and loss of the two parties on the lake were as follows:—

The action lasted 2½ hours. The British galleys lowered their colors; but, not being pursued, they escaped, as did also a storeship which lay near the point of Cumberland Head during the engagement. The loss upon the enemy's galleys was not ascertained, but was large; and the total British loss was one-fifth of their whole number. In their retreat the British left behind them a vast quantity of provisions, tents, camp equipage, and ammunition, together with their sick and wounded. The British and American officers were buried separately near the center of the village cemetery; and the sailors and marines of both fleets side by side in one common grave, on Crab Island. Some time after, the sister-in-law of Com. Geo. Downie placed a tablet over his grave; and on the anniversary of the battle, in 1843, the citizens of Plattsburgh and the Clinton Co. Military Association erected plain marble monuments at the unmarked graves of Lieut. G. W. Runk, Lieut. Peter Gamble, Lieut. John Stinebury, Sailing Master Rogers Carter, Midshipman J. M. Beldwin, and Pilot Joseph Barrow of the American navy; and Col. Wellington, Ensign J. Chapman, Lieut. R. Kingsbury, Boatswain Chas. Jackson, Capt. Purchase, Capt. Alex. Anderson, (marines), Acting Capt. Wm. Paul, and Midshipman V. M. Gunn, of the British army and navy.

³ Sir Geo. Provost, in his official report, says, “This unlooked for event deprived me of the co-operation of the fleet, without which the further prosecution of the service was become impracticable. I did not hesitate to arrest the course of the troops advancing to the attack, because the most complete success would have been unavailing, and the possession of the enemy's works offered no advantage to compensate for the loss we must have sustained in acquiring possession of them.”

and they served to partially obliterate the disgrace that attached to most of the movements that were planned and executed along the n. frontier. The immense sums of money expended within the co. during the war greatly stimulated its industry; and although Plattsburgh was twice in the hands of the enemy and partly burned, still business prospered. At the close of the war the excitement subsided, and a commercial re-action followed that entirely prostrated business. Upon the completion of the Champlain Canal in 1823, business again revived; and a new impulse has again been given to it by the railroads and plank roads since constructed. In 1838-40 the co. shared the intense excitement attending the "Patriot Wars," and several encounters between the insurgents and the military authorities took place in the neighboring parts of Canada.

The lands in this co. were mostly granted in comparatively small patents. The w. portion embraces 4 townships of the Old Military Tract. A tract of 231,540 acres in the n. e. and central parts of the co. was included in the lands granted by the Legislature of New York to the refugees from Canada and Nova Scotia at the close of the Revolution.¹ These lands were divided into 80 and 420 acre lots, except 5,000 acres, which was divided into 15 equal parts, which were granted to the officers and privates among these refugees. Considerable land lying along the lake was granted in small tracts to English officers who served during the French War. Among the principal remaining patents were Platt's, Livingston's, Beekman's, Duerville, Dean's, and Graves.

ALTONA—was formed from Chazy, Dec. 2, 1857. It is an interior town, lying n. w. of the center of the co. Its surface is a rolling upland, with a slight inclination toward the n. e. The w. half is underlaid by Potsdam sandstone, and hundreds of acres are covered with the naked rock. Champlain River is the principal stream. The soil is light and sandy, and a large share of it is unfit for cultivation. A few settlements are scattered through the town, and the people are mostly engaged in lumbering. There is no village or p. o. in town. Aaronsburgh, in the n. part, is a station on the N. R. R. Ellenburgh Depot lies on the w. line. The first settler was Simeon Wood, who located in town in 1800.² The town embraces parts of the Refugee Tract and Duerville Patent. The first church (French Bap.) was formed Jan. 1, 1856.

AU SABLE³—was formed from Peru, March 29, 1839. It is the s. e. corner town in the co. Its surface is nearly level in the e., rolling in the center, and hilly in the w. The highest summits are 500 to 600 ft. above the lake. Au Sable River forms the s. boundary, and the Little Au Sable flows n. e. through the w. part. The soil is generally a light, sandy loam, moderately fertile in the e. and center and nearly unfit for cultivation in the w. Upon the Au Sable where it breaks through the Potsdam sandstone is a beautiful cascade known as Birmingham Falls.⁴ Iron ore of an excellent quality is found in abundance.⁵ Keeseville,⁶ (p. v.) upon the Au Sable, 5 mi. from the lake, contains 7 churches, the Keeseville Academy, 2 extensive rolling mills, 3 nail factories, a machine shop, an ax and edge tool factory, a cupola furnace, an axletree factory, a horseshoe factory, a planing mill, 2 gristmills, and a nail keg factory.⁷ Pop. 2,569,—of whom 1,999 are in Au Sable and 570 are in Essex co. Clintonville, (p. v.) upon the Au Sable, in the w. part of the town, was incorp. April 11, 1825. It contains 2 churches and an extensive iron manufactory.⁸ Pop. 855. New Sweden, (p. v.) upon the Au Sable, in the s. w. corner of the town, contains 2 forges and 150 inhabitants. Birmingham Falls, at the head of the rapids upon the Au

³ Pronounced Au Saw'ble, a French name signifying river by sand. The name is said to have been derived from a sandy bar at the mouth of the river.

Sable, contains 20 houses. The Union is a hamlet containing 2 Quaker meetinghouses. The first settler was Edward Everett, who located upon the site of The Union in 1786.¹ The first religious society (Friends) was organized in 1799.²

BEEKMANTOWN³—was formed from Plattsburgh, Feb. 25, 1820. Dannemora was taken off in 1854. It lies upon Lake Champlain, near the center of the e. border of the co. The surface is level in the e. and moderately hilly in the w. Its streams are small creeks and brooks. St. Armands Bay extends into the s. e. corner. Point au Roche and Rams Head are capes upon the lake. The soil is a clay loam in the center and e., and a light sand in the w. A spring emitting sulphuretted hydrogen and carbonic acid gases is found in town. Beekmantown (p. o.) and East Beekmantown (p. o.) are hamlets. The first settlers were Maj. Benj. Mooers and 7 associates, who located at Point au Roche Aug. 10, 1783.⁴ The British passed through the town in 1814, and on the 6th of Sept. a slight skirmish took place, in which several were killed.⁵ The census reports 4 churches; 3 M. E. and 1 Presb.

BLACK BROOK⁶—was formed from Peru, March 29, 1839. It is the s. w. corner town in the co. Its surface is a rocky and mountainous upland, the highest summits being 1,500 to 2,500 ft. above the lake. Among the mountains are several nearly level table lands 200 to 300 ft. above the general level. Ledges, crags, and boulders cover a large share of the surface. The forest trees are thinly scattered, and nearly the whole town is too rough and poor for cultivation. Saranac River flows across the n. w. corner, and the Au Sable forms a portion of the s. boundary. Great Black Brook and Little Black Brook, tributaries of the Au Sable, drain the central parts of the town. In the mountainous region are several small lakes or ponds, the principal of which are Mud, Sampson, Taylors, Slush, and Military Ponds. The soil is cold, wet, and unproductive. Extensive beds of iron ore are scattered through the town.⁷ The people are principally engaged in the manufacture of iron⁸ and charcoal, and in lumbering.⁹ Au Sable Forks, (p. v.), on the Au Sable, in the s. e. part of the town, is mostly on the s. bank of the river, in Essex co. Black Brook, (p. v.) near the s. border, contains extensive iron works, several sawmills, and about 85 houses. Clayburgh, on the Saranac, in the n. part, lies partly in the town of Saranac. It contains iron works and 30 houses.¹⁰ Union Falls (p. o.) and Garlick Falls, (p. o.), both on the Saranac, in the n. w. part, are hamlets and lumber stations. The first settler was Zephaniah Palmer, who located at Au Sable Forks about 1825.¹¹ The census reports one church (R. C.)

CHAMPLAIN—was formed March 7, 1788. Chateaugay (Franklin co.) was taken off in 1799, and Mooers and Chazy in 1804. It lies upon Lake Champlain, in the n. e. corner of the co. Its surface is generally level, with a gentle slope toward the lake. The crest of a swell of land between Champlain Village and Rouses Point is about 200 feet above the lake. Great Chazy or Champlain River flows in a tortuous course through the town and discharges its waters into

³ Named from Wm. Beekman, to whom, with 29 others, the town was granted March 27, 1769. It embraced 22,475 acres.

⁶ Named from its principal stream. The town comprises portions of the Old Military Tract and of Livingston's Patent. The military lands were finally conveyed to Benj. Birdsall and his associates by act of Feb. 4, 1792, to satisfy claims growing out of the suppression of the lease of all of the Indian lands in the State for 999 years.—Folio Laws, XVI, Sess. p. 24. Clark's Hist. Onon., vol. 1, p. 368.

⁷ The Palmer Mine, 2 mi. n. of Au Sable Forks, was discovered by Z. Palmer in 1825. It is situated on a hill 400 to 500 feet above the river. The ore is raised by steam, and the yield is 16,000 to 20,000 tons per year. The Myers Mine, at Clayburgh, has been worked since 1846. It yields annually 1,500 tons of ore, principally used in the manufacture of wire, tacks, and small nails. The Trombis Mine was discovered in 1845, and about 10,000 tons of ore have been raised. The iron made from it is soft and tough, and is principally used in the manufacture of boiler plates, horse nails, and car axles.

¹¹ Several plank roads have been built in this town to facilitate the iron and lumber business. ——— Curtis kept the first inn, near the center, in 1828. Halsey Rogers and John McIntyre located in town in 1830. The Sable Iron Co. erected the first forge the same year.

Kings Bay. It is navigable to near Champlain Village. Corbeau Creek, its tributary, is the other principal stream. Point au Fer¹ and Stony Point are two capes projecting into the lake. The soil is a clay or clayey loam. Peat is found in numerous localities. Champlain, (p. v.,) upon the Chazy, near the n. line of the town, contains the Champlain Academy, 3 churches, 2 founderies, a linen factory, planing mill, and carriage factory.² Pop. 1,473. Perrys Mills³ (p. o.) is a lumber station upon the Chazy, in the n. w. corner of the town. Rouses Point,⁴ (p. v.,) upon the lake, in the n. e. corner of the town, contains 3 churches, a brewery, newspaper office, and extensive depôts and repair shops belonging to the Northern R. R. Co. It is divided into the Upper and Lower Villages, the latter being about twice as large as the former. Pop. 1,769. Coopersville,⁵ or Corbeau, is a village upon Chazy River, opposite the mouth of Corbeau Creek. It contains 1 church and 40 houses. The first settlers were Canadian and Nova Scotia refugees, who located in town soon after the Revolution. The first English settler was Pliny Moore, who came in to reside in 1789.⁶ The census reports 4 churches in town.⁷

CHAZY⁸—was formed from Champlain, March 20, 1804. Altona was taken off in 1857. It lies upon Lake Champlain, n. of the center of the co. Its surface is rolling and has a gentle inclination toward the e. The principal stream is the Little Chazy, flowing n. e. through near the center. Corbeau Creek flows through the n. border. Potsdam sandstone underlies the w. part, and Chazy and Trenton limestone the e. Tertiary clay extends along the lake shore. The soil is clayey and productive in the central and e. parts, but sandy in the w. Chazy, (p. v.,) upon Little Chazy River, contains 2 churches and a saw and grist mill. Pop. 326. West Chazy, (p. v.,) upon Little Chazy River, in the s. w. part of the town, contains 2 churches, a saw and grist mill, and starch factory. Pop. 280. It is a station on the P. & M. R. R. Sciota (p. v.) is a station on the P. & M. R. R., in the n. w. corner of the town. Chazy Landing is a hamlet on the lake shore. Ingraham is a p. o. in the s. e. corner. The first settler was John La Trombois,⁹ who came in town in 1763. After the Revolution the first settlers were refugees from Canada and Nova Scotia. Of these, Lieutenant Murdock McPherson was the first one that could speak English.¹⁰ The census reports 5 churches in town.¹¹

CLINTON—was formed from Ellenburgh, May 14, 1845. It is the n. w. corner town in the co. Its surface is generally level, with a gentle inclination toward the n. w. The highest points along its s. border are about 1,050 feet above Lake Champlain. A portion of the surface is undulating. It is nearly all underlaid by Potsdam sandstone, which here is remarkably white. The streams are small brooks. More than three-fourths of the town is yet a wilderness. The soil is a light, sandy loam, capable of supporting but a thin growth of forest trees. A large part of the land is owned by capitalists and speculators. Cherubusco, (p. o.,) the summit station upon the O. R. R., The Frontiers, (Frontier p. o.,) and Wrightsville, upon the w. border, are hamlets. This town lies within No. 6 of the Old Military Tract. The first settlers located upon the Old Military Road and near The Frontiers.¹² A M. E. church has lately been organized.

DANNEMORA¹³—was formed from Beekmantown, Dec. 14, 1854. It is the central town upon the w. border of the co. Its surface is mostly a wild, mountainous upland, covered with a sandy soil and light growth of forest trees. Upper Chazy Lake, near the center, 3½ mi. long by 1½

³ Named from Geo. Perry, former proprietor.

⁴ Named from Jacques Rouse, a Canadian, who settled here in 1783. This village has grown to importance since the completion of the n. r. The passenger and freight depôts are both among the largest n. r. structures in the State. A bridge a mi. long here crosses the lake. A floating draw of 300 feet, opened and shut by steam, admits the passage of vessels. About one mi. n. of the village, upon the banks of the lake, Fort Montgomery is situated. This fort commands the entrance to the lake. It was begun soon after the War of 1812; but in 1818 it was found to be within the limits of Canada, and the work was abandoned. It became known as "Fort Bunker;" but by the Webster Treaty of 1842 it was ceded again to the U. S. Work upon it has been resumed; and it is estimated that the completed works will cost $800,000, of which sum $275,000 has already been expended.

⁵ Named from Ebenezer Cooper, who erected mills there.

⁶ Moore came in to survey the tract granted to Smith, Graves, and others, in 1785. He erected the first saw and grist mills, in 1789. Among the other early settlers were El Nathan Rogers, Wm. Remontum, Chas. L. Sully, Samuel Ashman, Joseph Corbin, Silas Hubbell, Elias Dewey, Charles Bedlow, David Savage, and Benj. Tyler.

⁷ M. E., Prot. E., Presb., and R. C. Since 1855, 3 churches have been organized at Rouses Point; R. C., M. E., and Prot. E.

⁸ Pronounced Sház-zee. It included the patent granted to Elkannah Dean and 29 others, July 11, 1769.

⁹ He was accompanied by two men, named Gonds and Swarte. He was driven off in 1776, but returned after the war, and died there in 1810.—Palmer's Hist. Lake Champlain, p. 80.

¹¹ 2 M. E., Bap., Cong., and Wes. Meth.

¹² Among these early settlers were Junio Howard, Calvin Johnson, C. A. Smith, Ebenezer Gates, George Peters, and Stephen Martin, mostly from Vt. The first child born was Rhoda S. Howard, Feb. 7, 1819; the first marriage, that of Cornelius Ansteth and Fanny Hall, in 1822; and the first death, that of a child of William Hunter, in 1820. Mary Emmons taught the first school, in 1821; Benjamin Roberts kept the first inn; Charles D. Bachus the first store, in 1835; and John McCoy erected the first sawmill.

¹³ Named by Gen. Skinner, from a celebrated iron locality in Sweden.

wide, discharges its waters e. into Chazy River. Chateaugay Lake, on the w. border, 5 mi. long by $1\frac{1}{2}$ broad, discharges its waters w. into Chateaugay River. Very few settlements have been made, and these are confined to the s. e. corner. Dannemora (p. v.) is a small village grown up around the Clinton Prison. This prison was located here in 1845, for the purpose of employing convicts in the mining and manufacture of iron, so that their labor would not come so directly in competition with the other mechanical trades.¹ The first permanent settler was Thomas Hooker, who came to reside in 1838. The census reports 1 religious society (Presb.) in town.

ELLENBURGH²—was formed from Mooers, April 17, 1830. Clinton was taken off in 1845. It lies upon the w. border of the co., n. of the center. Its surface is an upland, mountainous in the s. and rolling in the n., with an inclination toward the n. e. Chazy River flows e. across the n. border. The soil is generally sandy; but in many places the sand is covered with a rich vegetable mold. The settlements are principally confined to the valley. Potatoes are raised in large quantities. Lumbering is extensively carried on. Ellenburgh (p. v.) contains 3 churches, a sawmill, tannery, and 125 inhabitants. Ellenburgh Center (p. v.) contains a church, saw and grist mill, 2 starch factories, a machine shop, and 15 dwellings. Ellenburgh Depot is a hamlet on the line of Altona. James Hanchett came to this town in 1796, but left soon after. The first permanent settler was Abner Pomeroy, from Vt., about 1800.³ There are 4 churches in town.⁴

MOOERS⁵—was formed from Champlain, March 20, 1804. Ellenburgh was taken off in 1830. Its surface is generally level, with a gentle inclination to the n. e. The principal streams are Great Chazy and English Rivers. The surface is entirely underlaid by Potsdam sandstone, and is covered with a light, sandy soil. Along the n. border are several small swamps. Upon the Canada line, in the n. w. corner, is a remarkable chasm in the rocks, called The Gulf.⁶ Centerville, (Mooers Forks p. o.,) upon the Chazy, contains 2 churches, a sawmill, stove factory, and 30 houses. It is a station on the N. R. R. Mooers, (p. v.,) upon the Chazy, in the e. part, contains 2 churches and 40 houses. It is near the junction of the O. and P. & M. R. R's. Angellville, upon Corbeau Creek, in the s. e. corner, is a hamlet. The first settler was Joshua C. Bosworth, who located in town in 1796.⁷ The first preacher was Rev. Andrew Blackman, in 1800; and the first settled minister was Rev. Martin Powell, in 1807.⁸

PERU⁹—was formed from Plattsburgh and Willshorough, (Essex co.,) Dec. 28, 1792. A part was annexed to Willshorough in 1799, and Au Sable and Black Brook were taken off in 1839. It lies upon the lake, s. of the center of the co. The surface in the center and e. is rolling and slightly inclined toward the lake, and in the w. broken and mountainous. The Au Sable flows across the s. e. corner, and along its course are extensive swamps. Little Sable drains the greater part of the remaining portions of the town. The principal body of water is Military Pond, on the w. line. A strip of land 2 mi. wide, extending along the lake, has a soil composed of clay and clay loam. West of this is a plain 4 mi. wide, covered with sand and interspersed with swamps. In the w. the soil is a light, sandy loam. Peru, (p. v.,) on the Little Sable, near the center of the town, contains 2 churches, a gristmill, starch factory, and tannery. Pop. 504. Laphams Mills, 2 mi. below Peru, contains a large flouring mill, a plaster mill, forge, and 15 dwellings; Peasterville, on Salmon River, in the n. w. corner, a forge and 25 dwellings. Port Jackson, (Valcour p. o.,) on the lake, opposite Valcour Island, is a hamlet containing a church. Peru.

¹ The prison was erected under the superintendence of Ransom Cook, under an act passed May 1, 1844. The prison grounds, comprising 25 acres, are located upon the slope of a hill, and are surrounded by pickets 20 feet high. The main buildings, constructed of dressed stone, are in the form of a T, and are respectively 364 by 56 feet, and 160 by 46 feet. The cells are constructed in a block 3 stories high in the center of the building, a wide corridor extending completely around between them and the outer walls. The main buildings have slate roofs and are completely fireproof. Within the grounds are a steam forge, with 10 fires, a rolling mill, foundery, steam separator capable of washing 600 tons of ore per month, 7 coal kilns, a steam sawmill, machine shop, and the ruins of a blast furnace, burned June 26, 1856. A large share of the labor of constructing these works has been done by convicts. The prison works were first supplied with ore from the Skinner Mine, owned by the State; but more recently from the Averill Mine. A new mine has lately been discovered upon the State grounds. Besides the manufacture of iron, stove making, coopering, and shoemaking are carried on. The total earnings in 4 years, ending in 1857, were $120,537.56; and the total expenses, $212,901.22.

³ Among the early settlers were Aaron Broadwell and Lewis

Ransom, in 1822; and Benjamin Hine, W. Jennings, Jr., Joseph Serey, Pardon Daily, Joseph Lawrence, and Samuel Hazleton, soon after. The first child born was Lloyd Rogers Hines. He was named after Lloyd Rogers, and received a farm of 50 acres for the name. The first marriage was that of Smith Delamater and Phebe Eastabrook. John R. Murray built the first saw and grist mill.

⁴ M. E., Prot. E., Presb., and Union. The Union Church was built by J. R. Murray.

⁵ Named from Maj. Gen. Benj. Mooers, an early settler and prominent citizen of the co.

⁷ Among the early settlers were Ichabod Bosworth, Geo. and Daniel Perry, Andrew Blackman and sons, Daniel Southwick, John, Joseph, and Samuel Churchill, John Sheldon, and Robert Tripp. The first child born was Wm. Hallenbeck, in 1801; the first marriage, that of David Anderson and Rhoda Perry, Dec. 5, 1805; and the first death of an adult, that of Mrs. J. C. Bosworth Sept. 26, 1802.

⁸ The census reports 4 churches in town; Cong., M. E., Prot. E., and Presb.

⁹ Name applied from its mountainous character.

Landing is a hamlet, n. of the mouth of the Little Sable. The first settler was Wm. Hay, a Scotchman, who located upon Stewart's Patent in 1772.¹ The census reports 4 churches in town.²

PLATTSBURGH—was first recognized as a town April 4, 1785. A part of Peru was taken off in 1792, Beekmantown in 1820, Saranac in 1824, and Schuyler Falls in 1848. It lies upon Lake Champlain, a little s. of the e. border of the co., and includes Valcour³ and Crab⁴ Islands in the lake. The surface is level in the e. and broken and hilly in the w. It is slightly inclined toward the e., its w. border being elevated about 500 feet above the lake. It is principally drained by Saranac River and its branches. In the e. part the soil is a clayey loam, underlaid by Trenton limestone; in the center, a sandy loam, underlaid by calciferous sandstone; and in the w. a light sand, underlaid by Potsdam sandstone. Cumberland Head is a peninsula extending into the lake and forming Cumberland Bay.⁵ Plattsburgh, (p. v.), upon Cumberland Bay, at the mouth of Saranac River, was incorp. March 3, 1815. It has a safe and commodious harbor, and an excellent water-power, giving it facilities for a large amount of both commerce and manufactures. Besides the co. buildings, it contains a town hall,⁶ customhouse,⁷ the Plattsburgh Academy, 6 churches, a foundery, planing mill, sawmill, gristmill, and 2 tanneries. Pop. 2,926. Upon a sandy plain, 1 mi. s. of the village and 90 feet above the lake, are situated extensive barracks belonging to the U. S. Government.⁸ Cadyville, (p. v.), upon the Saranac, 10 mi. above Plattsburgh, contains a church, sawmill, and 25 houses. Elsinore, 1 mi. above Cadyville, contains a forge and a half dozen houses. Salmon River, (South Plattsburgh p. o.,) in the s. part, contains a church, sawmill, and 25 houses. West Plattsburgh is a p. o. The first settlement was made before the Revolution, by Chas. de Fredenburgh and several associates, under royal grants. During the war the settlers were driven off and the improvements were destroyed. In 1785 a tract 7 mi. square was granted to Zephaniah Platt and 32 associates, who had bought up military land warrants to that amount.⁹ The first 3 families who settled under this grant were those of Charles Platt, Chas. McCreedy, and Kinser Newcomb. Nathaniel Platt was the first surveyor and agent for the proprietors. A farm of 80 acres was offered to each of the first 10 settlers in town.¹⁰ Rev. Benj. Vaughan preached the first sermon, in 1787; and Rev. Frederick Halsey was the first settled minister, in 1795.¹¹ There are 9 churches in town.¹²

SARANAC—was formed from Plattsburgh, March 29, 1824. It lies upon the w. border of the co., s. of the center. Its surface is a broken and mountainous upland. The highest summits, along the w. border, are 4,000 feet above tide. Saranac River, flowing through the s. e. part, is the principal stream. Upon its course are several falls, affording an immense amount of water-power.¹³ The e. part, sloping toward the river, is covered with a light, sandy soil, and the river intervales with a sandy loam and alluvium. The soil among the mountains is sandy; but the whole

⁴ The sailors and marines killed in the naval battle of Sept. 11, 1814, were buried upon this island.

⁶ Built in 1856, at a cost of $5,000. It is a fireproof brick building, and contains a town hall, armory, and fire engine room.

⁷ This is a fine fireproof brick building, built at a cost of $30,000, and contains rooms for the customhouse, postoffice, and U. S. Court.

⁹ This grant was made in accordance with the provisions of an act passed in 1781, which provided that when 61 rights, or 30,600 acres, should be jointly located, a tract 7 mi. square should be granted, including 860 acres for gospel and schools.

w. region is too rough for cultivation. Saranac, (p. v.), upon Saranac River, contains a church, sawmill, forge, and 50 houses. Redford, (p. v.), on the Saranac, near the s. border, contains 3 churches, several sawmills, and 60 houses.¹ Russia, 2 mi. above Saranac, contains 2 forges and 20 houses. The first settlement was begun in 1802, by Russell Case and Ezekiel Pearce.² The first preacher was Rev. Lambert Hopper, in 1805.³

SCHUYLER FALLS⁴—was formed from Plattsburgh, April 4, 1848. It is an interior town, lying a little s. e. of the center of the co. Its surface is rolling in the e. and hilly in the w., with an inclination toward the e. The Saranac forms its n. boundary, and Salmon River flows along its s. border. The soil is a light, sandy loam. Schuyler Falls, (p. v.), on Salmon River, near the s. line of the town, contains a church, gristmill, starch factory, and 50 dwellings. Morrisonville, (p. v.), on the Saranac, lies partly in Plattsburgh. It contains 3 churches, a gristmill, sawmill, starch factory, foundery, machine shop, and 35 houses. Norrisville, upon Salmon River, 3 mi. w. of Schuyler Falls, contains a starch factory, 2 forges, and 15 dwellings. The first settler was Ezra Turner, who located upon Salmon River in 1797.⁵ The census reports 2 M. E. churches in town.⁶

^a Formed since 1855.

² Among the early settlers were Sylvania Smith, Wright Spaulding, Lyman Mauls, Nath'l Lyon, John Gregory and son Czar, Lewis Ferris and sons, Isaiah and John Lambert, John M. Hopper and John Chamberlain. Samuel Stone, first agent for Township No. 4 of the old Military Tract, with another man a tempting to go to Malone, was caught in a snow storm and his companion frozen to death, Oct. 8, 1802. He was himself

so injured that he died in 3 weeks. John D. Fiske, the second agent, was killed by a falling tree, June 21, 1805. The first birth was that of Isaac Smith, May 9, 1804; is the first marriage, that of Conilus Hopper and Sophia Case, in 1810; and the first death of a settler, that of John D. Fiske, June 8, 1805. Royal Spaulding taught the first school, in 1805; and Isaiah Ferris built the first saw and grist mill, in 1806.

³ There are 4 churches in town; 2 M. E., Presb., and R. C.

⁴ Named from the proprietor of the present village site.

⁵ Among the early settlers were Daniel and Roswell Jones, John P. Roberts, David Hare, Daniel Hillison, Henry Purdy, Jonathan Wickham, and Jas. Braud, all of whom located upon Saranac River.

⁶ 2 churches (Bep. and Unia) at Morrisonville are located N. of the river, in Plattsburgh.

HERKIMER COUNTY.

This county was formed from Montgomery, Feb. 16, 1791.¹ Onondaga was taken off in 1794, Oneida and a part of Chenango in 1798; the present territory of Hamilton co. was taken off and annexed to Montgomery in 1797; parts of Montgomery co. were annexed April 7, 1817; and parts of Richfield and Plainfield, Otsego co., were annexed in forming Winfield in 1816. It is centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains — sq. mi. Its surface is a hilly upland, with a series of ridges extending in a general n. and s. direction. Mohawk River flows e. through the co. in a deep valley which cuts the ridges at right angles and separates the highland into two distinct parts. A broad ridge extends from the s. border to the Mohawk, and thence n. of that river along the w.

bank of East Canada Creek to the n. line of the co. The Hasenclever Mts., another broad ridge, lie along the w. border of the co., n. of the Mohawk. From the Mohawk the highlands rise toward the s. in a series of hills, the declivities of which are steep and their summits 500 to 1,000 ft. high. North of the river the surface gradually rises to a height of 1,000 to 1,500 ft., where it spreads out into a rocky and broken plateau region, the highest summits being 2,500 to 3,000 ft. above tide.

Mohawk River breaks through a mountain ridge at Little Falls, the valley forming a natural channel of communication between Lake Ontario and Hudson River. At this place the mountains on each side of the river are masses of naked rock rising nearly perpendicular to a height of 500 to 600 ft. An intervalle, with an average width of 2 mi., extends along the river w. of the pass, and from it the land rises on each side in gradual slopes. East of this point the Mohawk flows for some distance through a valley bordered by steep and nearly perpendicular hills. The river receives from the n., Sterling, West Canada, Cathatachua, and East Canada Creeks; and from the s. Furnace, Browns, Hollow, and Nowadaga Creeks. East Canada Creek² forms a portion of the e. boundary of the co., and receives as tributaries Trammel, Spruce, and several other small creeks. West Canada Creek flows s. w. through Wilmurt, Ohio, and Russia, thence s. e. along the w. border of Russia, thence s. through Newport, Fairport, and Herkimer, to the Mohawk. It receives from the e. Black, White, and North Creeks, and from the w. several small brooks. Several small streams take their rise in the s. part of the co. and form branches of the Unadilla. The n. part of the co. is yet an unbroken wilderness. It is a wild, mountainous region, with very little land susceptible of cultivation. The streams, usually flowing in deep, rocky ravines, form headwaters of Black, Moose, Beaver, and Oswegatchie Rivers.

The portion of the co. lying n. of a line extending w. of Brocketts Bridge, on East Canada Creek, is covered with primary rocks.³ This same formation also outcrops at Little Falls on the Mohawk. Rising successively above the primary are the Trenton limestone, appearing in Norway and Russia; the Utica slate, appearing upon the summits of all the hills immediately n. of the Mohawk; the Frankfort slate, appearing immediately s. of the river; the Oneida conglomerate and Clinton group, extending in a belt through near the center of the s. half of the co.; the Onondaga salt group, waterlime, Onondaga and corniferous limestones, appearing in thin layers next s.; and the Marcellus shales and limestones of the Helderbergh Range, covering the summits of the s. hills. These rocks yield an abundance of lime, waterlime, and building material in nearly every part of the co.; and for these purposes they are extensively quarried. Drift is found in deep deposits in many parts of the co. The useful minerals are few in number.⁴

Agriculture forms the leading pursuit. The hilly character of the surface particularly adapts this co. to pasturage; and dairying has long been the leading branch of industry.⁵ Hops are

² West Canada Creek was called by the Indians Tough-tagherow, and the East Creek Ci-o-ha-na.

³ The rocks peculiar to this region are granite, gneiss, felspar and hornblende. Calciferous sandrock is found associated with gneiss at Little Falls.

⁴ Gypsum is found in small quantities; and this co. is said to be the most easterly point in the State where it can be obtained. The discovery of small particles of anthracite, found associated with sandstone near Little Falls, has led to the erroneous supposition that coal might be obtained in the vicinity. Among the other minerals found are crystals of quartz, adapted to optical instruments, iron sand, iron and copper pyrites, lead ore, heavy spar, graphite, alum, and alum elate.

⁵ The amount of cheese produced in this co. is three times as great as in any other co. in the State.

The first settlements were made upon the river intervalles above Little Falls, about 1722, by a colony of Palatinates. Accessions were made to their number from time to time, and up to the close of the Revolution they constituted almost the sole inhabitants of the co. During the French War of 1756, this colony was twice invaded, and numbers of the people were killed or carried away prisoners.¹ During the Revolution also it was repeatedly invaded: the buildings and crops were destroyed; and at last the inhabitants were obliged to abandon their homes and seek protection in the lower part of the valley. The German Flats were invaded by a body of 300 Tories and 152 Indians, under Brant, in Sept. 1778. This party burned 63 dwellings, 57 barns, 3 gristmills, 2 sawmills, and killed or took off 235 horses, 229 horned cattle, 269 sheep, and 93 oxen. Only 2 persons lost their lives; and the forts were not attacked. A party of militia pursued them on their retreat, but without effecting any thing. Andrustown, in Warren, was burned in July of the same year. A stockade fort was built at the German Flats, and another at Danube, a short time previous to the commencement of the French War. In 1776 another fort was built at Herkimer, n. of the Mohawk; and strong blockhouses were erected in several other parts of the co.²

This co. shared in the loss of men at the battle of Oriskany. Gen. Arnold came as far as German Flats in the summer of 1777, on his way to relieve Fort Schuyler; and from this place was sent the tory Han Yost Schuyler, to spread alarm among the savages in St. Regis camp and hasten the abandonment of the siege.

After the war the settlements rapidly spread, and within 15 years over 10,000 persons from New England and the eastern cos. of the State located in the central and s. portions of the co. From that time its progress has been gradual and continually prosperous.

COLUMBIA³—was formed from Warren, June 8, 1812. It lies on the s. border of the co., w. of the center. Its surface is rolling and moderately hilly, with an average elevation of 500 to 600 ft. above the Mohawk. The streams are small brooks, a portion of them flowing n. to the Mohawk and the remainder flowing s. to the Unadilla. The soil is a clayey loam and generally fertile. Columbia Center (Columbia p.o.) contains 98 inhabitants; Cedarville, (p.v.) on the line of Litchfield, 2 churches, a tannery, and 145 inhabitants. South Columbia, in the s.e. part, is a p.o. The first settlement was commenced before the Revolution, by families from the Mohawk;⁴ but their improvements were abandoned during the war. The first religious services (Ref. Prot. D.) were held at an early period. Abram Rosegrantz was the first preacher.⁵

DANUBE⁶—was formed from Minden, (Montgomery co.,) April 7, 1817. Stark was taken

³ This town embraces Staley's Second Tract,—except 1½ tiers of lots on the w.—a small triangular piece from the n.w. corner of Henderson's Patent, and all of the patent to Coenradt Frank and others, except 7 lots on the e.

⁴ Among the early settlers were Conrad Orendorf, Conrad Frank, Conrad Fulmer, Frederick Christian, Timothy Frank, Nicholas Lightball, Joseph Moyer, and Henry Frank. The settlement was named "Coonrodston" at an early day.—Benton's Herkimer, p. 390.

Philip Ausman taught the first school, (German,) in 1795, and Joel Phelps an English school, in 1796. The first store was kept by David W. Golden and Benj. Mix, in 1796. The first gristmill was built in 1791-92, by Andrew Miller and Geo. Bell, at Millers Mills.

⁵ There are 2 churches in town; Ref. Prot. D. and F. W. Bap.

⁶ Named from the river Danube.

off in 1828. It lies on the E. border of the co., s. of the center. Its surface is hilly in the center, rising 400 to 800 ft. above the Mohawk; and it is broken by ravines on each side of the valley of the creek. Fine flats extend along the Mohawk on the N. border. The principal stream is Nowadaga¹ Creek, which flows N. E. through the town near the center. The soil is gravelly in the N. and a sandy loam in the S. In the N. part are two sulphur springs. Newville (p. v.) contains 1 church and 20 houses, and Indian Castle² (a hamlet) 1 church. Danube is a p. o. Settlements are supposed to have commenced as early as 1730; but no records have been preserved. During the Revolution the settlements were broken up, and did not commence again until about 1780.³ The first patents are dated 1730-31.⁴ A mission church was established here by Sir William Johnson in 1768. This church had a bell, which the Indians attempted to carry off in the war, and for that purpose secreted it. Search was made in vain. After sufficient time had elapsed the thieves, on returning by night to bear away the coveted treasure, had their presence and business betrayed by the unruly member which they neglected to muffle. As it was borne along on a pole, its ringing brought the Germans to its rescue with such weapons as they in their haste could snatch, and the bell was recovered. The present church occupying the site of the old Mission Church is known as the "Indian Castle Church." There are 2 union churches in town. This town was the residence of King Hendrick⁵ and Joseph Brant,⁶ the celebrated Mohawk chiefs, and of Gen. Nicholas Herkimer.⁷ King Hendrick sustained a high character for sagacity and integrity, was warmly attached to the English, and especially to Sir Wm. Johnson, whom he accompanied to Lake George in the summer of 1755, where he was killed. He was recognized as a chief as early as 1697.

FAIRFIELD⁸—was formed from Norway, Feb. 19, 1796. A part of Newport was taken off in 1806, and a part of Little Falls in 1829. It lies in the interior of the co., near the center. Its surface is a hilly upland, the center rising into a ridge 800 to 1,000 ft. above West Canada Creek.⁹ The streams are small. West Canada Creek flows S. on the W. border. The soil on the uplands is mostly clay, and in the valleys it is gravelly, with local drift deposits of sand. Several fine quarries of limestone are found in different parts.¹⁰ Fairfield, (p. v.,) near the center, contains 3 churches, an academy,¹¹ a cheese box factory, and 60 houses; Middleville, (p. v.,) on the line of Newport, 1 church, a woolen factory, tannery,¹² chair factory, grist and saw mill. Pop. 295. Settlements were first made in 1770, by 3 German families named Maltanner, Goodbrodt, and Shaffer, who located upon the Royal Grant.¹³ The first preacher was Rev. — Fields, (Presb.,) in 1791.¹⁴

² Named from the upper Indian castle, or fort, built in 1710 on the flat just below the mouth of Nowadaga Creek. It was built as one of the chain of defenses that guarded the approach to Canada, and was armed with small cannon. The Indians lived in clusters of huts around it.

³ An inn was kept by Cornelius C. Van Alstyne, in 1795, and a store by Peter Smith, at the same time. Andrew Nellis built the first gristmill, near the mouth of Nowadaga, in 1800.

⁴ Small portions of Fall Hill, Vangban's, and L'Hommedien's Patents, the whole of Lindsey's, and parts of J. Vrooman's, C. Colden's, Van Horne's, and Lansing's Patents are in this town.

⁷ General Herkimer's house is still standing, 3 mi. below Little Falls, S. of the canal. It is of imported brick, and was built in 1763, at a cost of $7,500 to $8,000. Some of the rooms were finished in panel work and were plastered on the brick walls; and in its day the house was surpassed by none in this section. It is now owned by Daniel Conner. Efforts were made to burn it in the Revolution by throwing combustibles upon the roof; but further attempts of this kind were prevented by covering it with a layer of clay. Gen. Herkimer's grave is 25 rods S. E. from the house, on a knoll, and is marked by a plain white tombstone inscribed as follows:—

NICHOLAS HERKIMER.
Died
Aug. 17, 1777,

Ten days after the battle of Oriskany, in which engagement he received wounds which caused his death."

Attempts have been repeatedly made to obtain the means to erect a suitable monument; but, notwithstanding the resolution of Congress on the 4th of October, 1777, "that the Governor and Council of New York be desired to erect a monument, at Continental expense, of the value of $500, to the memory of the late Brigadier Herkimer, who commanded the militia of Tryon co., in the State of N. Y., and who was killed fighting gallantly in defense of the liberty of these States," this order has been neglected, and the citizen chief lies forgotten by the country for whose cause he gave his life. He was chairman of the Tryon co. committee of safety. At the time of his death he was about 50 years of age.

⁸ This town included nearly all of the Glen Purchase and the first allotment of the Royal Grant.

¹⁰ Near Middleville are found beautiful crystals of quartz. Most of them are perfectly transparent; and sometimes they inclose a few drops of water or small pieces of anthracite coal.

¹² This establishment manufactures $40,000 worth of calkskins and upper leather annually.

¹³ These settlers, though Royalists, were attacked by the Indians in 1779. Two members of the families were killed, and the others were carried into captivity. Families named Keller, Windecker, and Pickert settled near the Manheim line, and others settled on the Glen Purchase, before the war. Cornelius Chatfield settled in March, and Abijah Munn in May, 1785. Josiah, David, and Lester Johnson, John Bucklin, Benj. Bowen, John Eaton, Nath'l and Wm. Brown, Sam'l Low, David Benseley, Elisha Wyman, Comfort Eaton, Jeremiah Ballard, Wm. Bucklin, — Arnold, Daniel Venner, Nathan Smith, Nahum Daniels, Amos and Jas. Haile, — Neely, and Peter and Bela Ward, all from New England, settled soon after. The first store was kept by Smith & Daniels, in 1792-93. The first gristmill was built by — Empie, and the first sawmill by Samuel & Paul Green. A school was taught in 1795, by Wm. D. Gray; but others had been previously taught in the N. part of the town.

¹⁴ There are now 6 churches in town; 2 M. E., Bap., Prot. E., Presb., and Cong.

FRANKFORT¹—was formed from German Flats, Feb. 5, 1796. It was divided in the formation of Oneida co. in 1798, and a part annexed to Deerfield. It lies on the w. border of the co., s. of the Mohawk. Its surface is a broad intervalle, rising into hills of moderate elevation on the s. w. border, the highest points being about 500 ft. above the river. The Mohawk flows s. e. on the n. border. The streams are small brooks and creeks. The soil on the uplands is a clayey and slaty loam, and on the flats an alluvial loam. Limestone ledges are found in the s. w. The most important of these is called Horsebone Ledge. The stone is whitish and makes excellent lime. Slate and calciferous sandstone are also found in some places. Frankfort, (p. v.) in the n. e., near the Mohawk, contains 4 churches, 1 bank, a grist and saw mill, woolen factory, and distillery. Pop. 1,150. New Graefenberg (p. o.) is the seat of a water cure, 4½ mi. from Utica. Frankfort Hill is a p. o. Jacob Folts made the first settlement, on Lot 3, Burnetsfield Patent, before the Revolution.² The census reports 7 churches in town.³

GERMAN FLATS⁴—was formed, as a district of "Tryon co.," March 24, 1772. Its name was exchanged with the Kingsland District, March 8, 1773. It was recognized as a town March 7, 1788. Frankfort, Litchfield, and Warren were taken off in 1796, and a part of Little Falls in 1829. It lies upon the s. bank of the Mohawk, s. of the center of the co. A fine intervalle extends along the river, and from it the surface gradually rises to a height of 300 to 400 ft. and spreads out into an undulating upland. The valley of Fulmer Creek divides this upland into two nearly equal parts. The other streams are small brooks. The soil is a clay and slaty loam upon the hills, and a gravelly loam and alluvium in the valleys. Mohawk, (p. v.) a caual village, in the n. w. part of the town, was incorp. April 16, 1844. It contains 3 churches, a bank, and newspaper office. Pop. 1,355. Ilion (p. v.) is a canal village, 1½ mi. w. of Mohawk. It contains 2 churches, a bank, and Remington's rifle factory. Pop. 813. Fort Herkimer, upon the Mohawk, in the e. part, contains 2 churches and 20 houses. Dennison Corners (Dennison p. o.) and Bains Hollow are hamlets. The first settlements were made in 1722, by a colony of Palatinates who had previously located upon the Hudson.⁵ The population rapidly increased until 1756, when the whole settlement was laid waste by a party of Canadians, French, and Indians.⁶ A council was held with the Indians at this place, June 28, 1775, at which the Oneidas and Tuscaroras agreed to remain neutral.⁷ During the Revolution the Indians committed many murders in town; and in July, 1782, they destroyed nearly the whole settlement.⁸ The German inhabitants early espoused the Patriot cause; and the first liberty-pole in the Mohawk Valley, erected here, was cut down by Sheriff White and a body of militia, who came up from Johnstown for the purpose, in the spring of 1775. At the close of the war the settlements progressed with great rapidity. A treaty was held with the Indians at Fort Herkimer, June 28, 1785, at which time the Oneidas and Tuscaroras ceded to the State the territory lying between Unadilla and Chenango Rivers. The first church was built of logs, in 1725; it was superseded by one built of stone, in 1767. The building is still standing, and is the most ancient structure in the co. It was commenced under a permit granted in 1746, but from apprehension of Indian troubles it was delayed, and a new permit was granted Oct. 6, 1751. It was not fully completed for use until 1767. On the 24th of Sept. 1730, Nicholas Wolever deeded Lot 30 of Burnetsfield Patent for church and school purposes. A society was formed soon after, and the conveyance was perfected April 26, 1733. Lots 45, 46, and 47 in German Flats were conveyed Sept. 18, 1755, by Hans Dedrick Stally, and others, to Peter Remsen, for the support of the Ref. Prot. D. church at this place. The first preacher was Rev. A. Rosegrant.⁹

² Among the other early settlers were Conrad Folts, Andrew Piper, David Dederick, Aaron James, — Morgan, Evan Evans, Joseph Harris, John Morris, John Myers, and Adam Weber. Several Welsh families settled about 1800. The first inn was kept by John Myers, in 1795; the first sawmill was built by John Hollister, in 1794; and the first gristmill by Adam J. Campbell, in 1808.

³ 4 M. E., Bap., Ref. Prot. D., and Univ.

⁴ Named from the German settlers who located on the Mohawk Flats at this place.

⁵ Among the early settlers were families named Erzhemar, Herkimer, Fox, Editch, Bellinger, Starring, Wolever, and Herten, — names still common in the co.

⁶ This attack was made Nov. 11, 1776. The settlers were totally unprepared, and the greater part were murdered or captured without resistance. The French account states that a mill, 60 houses, and a large number of barns, were destroyed, 40 persons were killed, and 150 taken prisoners. These numbers were doubtless much exaggerated. A small stockaded fort, called Fort Konari, was garrisoned at this time, and afforded shelter for a portion of the inhabitants. On the 30th of April, 1758, the French and Indians made another attack upon the settlers, and killed 30, losing 15 of their own number.

HERKIMER¹—was formed from Kingsland District, March 7, 1788. A part of Palatino (Montgomery co.) was annexed in 1791. Norway and Schuyler were taken off in 1792, a part of Newport in 1806, and a part of Little Falls in 1829. A part was annexed to Schuyler in 1808, and restored in 1811. It lies on the n. bank of the Mohawk, near the center of the settled portions of the co. A wide intervalle extends along the river, and from it the surface gradually rises to the n. line of the town. West Canada Creek flows s. through near the center, dividing the uplands into two distinct ridges. The Hasenclever Mts., w. of the creek, are 600 to 800 ft. above the Mohawk. The soil upon the hills is a gravelly loam, and in the valleys a deep, fertile alluvium. Herkimer,² (p. v.), upon the Mohawk, w. of the mouth of West Canada Creek, was incorp. April 6, 1807. It contains the co. buildings, 3 churches, a bank, newspaper office, paper mill,³ and gristmill. Pop. 1,371. It is a station upon the N. Y. C. R. R. Eatonville (p. o.) is a hamlet, in the n. e. corner, on the line of Fairfield and Little Falls. The early history of the town is blended with that of German Flats, of which it formed a part until its organization as a town. The first settlements were made by Palatinates, under the patronage of Gov. Hunter, in 1722.⁴ It had its share of suffering during the Revolution; and all the patriot families that remained during the war were those sheltered by Fort Dayton. This fortress stood upon a point of the stone ridge about 30 rods above the present site of the courthouse. After the destruction of Fort Schuyler by flood and fire, in May, 1781, Forts Dayton and Herkimer became the frontier defenses of the Mohawk Valley.⁵ After the war, many of the Indians and Tories who had been actively engaged in hostilities returned to the settlements; but they were received by the settlers in a way little calculated to inspire sentiments of friendship, and the greater part emigrated to more congenial places.⁶ The first church (Ref. Prot. D.) was formed at an early period, by Rev. A. Rosegrantz; but the precise date has been lost.⁷

LITCHFIELD⁸—was formed from German Flats, Feb. 5, 1796. A part of Winfield was taken off in 1816. It lies on the w. border of the co., s. of the Mohawk. Its surface is elevated and moderately hilly, its mean elevation being about 500 feet above the river. A series of ridges in the w. and s. are known as the "Dry Lots,"⁹ no water being found upon them. The streams are small; and some flow s. into the Unadilla and others n. into the Mohawk. In the e. part is a sulphur spring.¹⁰ Litchfield (p. v.) contains 1 church and about 15 houses; Cedar Lake (p. o.) 1 church and 9 houses; Jerusalem, a hamlet near the center, 2 churches and 7 houses. The first settlement was commenced about 1789, by Jabez Snow, on Snow Hill.¹¹ The first religious services were held in 1794; Rev. — Spaulding was the first preacher.¹²

LITTLE FALLS—was formed from Fairfield, Herkimer, and German Flats, Feb. 16, 1829. It lies in the interior of the co., s. of the center. Its surface is a broken upland, divided by the

² Originally called "Stone Ridge."
³ This paper mill was established in 1849; it gives employment to 120 hands.

⁵ Lieut. Solomon Woodworth was stationed at Fort Dayton with a small force of Continental troops. He rendered great service to the settlers in this part of the valley. In the summer of 1781, with 40 men, he went out to reconnoiter; but about 3 mi. n. of Herkimer the party fell into an Indian ambuscade, and only 15 escaped. The commander and 20 men were killed. A Mrs. Smith, scalped by the Indians during the war, recovered and lived to a good old age. On the 6th of August, 1781, a party of Tories and Indians, under Donald McDoonald, a Scotch refugee from Johnston, made an attack upon the settlement at Shells Bush. The inhabitants mostly fled to Fort Dayton; but John Christian Shell and his family, consisting of his wife and 6 sons, took refuge in their own house, which was a strong blockhouse. His two little sons, twins, 8 years of age, were taken prisoners; but the remainder of the family escaped within and secured the entrance. In trying to force the door, McDoonald was wounded, and made prisoner. The attack continued until dark, when the Tories fled, with a loss of 11 killed and 6 wounded. McDoonald died of his wounds the next day. The two little boys were returned after the war.—Benton's Herkimer.

⁶ John Adam Hartman, an active and successful ranger, was engaged in perilous service through the war. Soon after the peace, an Indian came into an inn, in the w. part of this town, where Hartman was present, and, getting intoxicated, began to boast of his exploits, and showed a tobacco pouch made from the skin of a white child's arm and hand, with the nails still on. When the Indian left, Hartman found business on the same road. They both passed into a swamp; and the Indian never came out. In reply to questions put to him, Hartman said that he had just saw the Indian, some distance ahead, standing on a log; and that he fell as if hurt. Hartman was tried for murder, but was acquitted. He lived in town till his death, in the spring of 1836.—Benton's Herkimer, p. 469.

⁷ There are 3 churches in town: 2 M. E., Ref. Prot. D.

⁸ Named from Litchfield, Conn., whence many of the early settlers came.

⁹ These hills have limestone ledges belonging to the Helderberg series. These lots, 2 in number, contain about 1,600 acres each. Water is obtained by wells at great expense.

¹⁰ The Columbian Springs, in Browns Hollow, have been brought to public notice, but have yet gained only a local reputation.

¹¹ Among the other early settlers were John Everett, Nathaniel Ball, and Ebenezer Drury, from N. H.; and Ezekiel Goodell and S. Sherry, from Conn. Selah Holcomb settled 2 mi. e. of Jerusalem. Wm. and Thos. Jones, Oliver Rider, Joseph Crosby, and others, were also early settlers. The first birth was that of Luke Andrews, in 1790; the first marriage, that of Joseph Day and ———, in the same year. Jeremiah Everett taught the first school; Joseph Shepard kept the first inn; David Davis kept the first store; ——— Talcott built the first sawmill, and John Littlejohn the first gristmill, in 1806-07.

deep, narrow gorge of the Mohawk. A range of hills extend n. and s. from the village. They are rocky and precipitous near the river, but less rugged on the n. and s. borders.¹ The Mohawk flows n. e. through near the center of the town in a series of cascades and rapids. Its banks are rocky and in places precipitous. The soil is a sandy, gravelly loam. Little Falls, (p. v.) in the e. part, on the line of Manheim and Danube, was incorp. March 30, 1811. Its name was changed to "Rockton," April 16, 1850, and again changed to Little Falls, April 16, 1852. It is an important station on the N. Y. C. R. R. It contains 9 churches, a bank, 2 printing offices, the Little Falls Academy, a union school, and a large number of manufactories.² Pop. 3,984. Jacksonburgh, in the w., on the canal, has 206 inhabitants; and Bethel, in the s., 1 church and 15 houses. Paines Hollow is a p. o. Lots 12 and 13 of Burnetsfield Patent, embracing all the water-power n. of the river, were owned before the Revolution by — Petrie. This town also embraces portions of several other patents issued at an early period.³ The first settlements were made by a colony of Palatinates, in 1722.⁴ The settlers suffered much during the war, and most of them were driven off.⁵ The first settler at the village after the war was John Proteus, in 1790.⁶ A great impulse was given to the business and population of the place by the construction of the locks of the Western Navigation Co. in 1796.⁷ The first church was built about 1815. It was octagonal, with a steep roof, and surmounted by a cupola. The census reports 10 churches in town.⁸

MANHEIM⁹—was formed from Palatine, (Montgomery co.,) April 7, 1817. It lies on the n. bank of the Mohawk, upon the e. border of the co. Its surface gradually rises from the intervals along the Mohawk to the n. border, where it attains an elevation of 500 ft. above the river. East Canada Creek forms its e. boundary.¹⁰ Cathatachua Creek flows s. through near the center, and Bennett Brook flows s. e. through the n. e. corner. Upon East Canada Creek, 1 mi. above its mouth, is a series of cascades, where the water descends 180 ft. in three-fourths of a mi. The soil is a gravelly loam upon the upland, and a fine, fertile alluvium in the valleys. Brocketts Bridge, (p. v.) upon East Canada Creek, in the n. part, contains 2 churches, a large tannery,¹¹ gristmill, and 50 houses; and Inghams Mills, upon East Canada Creek, 3 mi. below Brocketts Bridge, a church and 25 houses. East Creek (p. v.) is a hamlet and station upon the N. Y. C. R. R., near the mouth of East Canada Creek. Manheim Center is a p. o. The first settlements were made by Germans, probably in about the year 1736.¹² During the Revolution they were frequently attacked by the Indians and were mostly destroyed. On the 30th of April, 1780, a party of 60 Tories and Indians fell upon the settlements at Rheimen Snyder's Bush, burned a gristmill, and carried 19 persons away into captivity.¹³ The first church, built in 1774 or '75, was burned during the war, and was rebuilt soon after. The census reports 5 churches; 2 M. E., 2 Union, and Ref. Prot. D.

⁴ Among these early settlers were John Jost Temouth, Mary Beerman, Nicholas Kesler, Johannes Ponnradt, and Christian Fox. John Petrie kept the first inn, before the Revolution. A gristmill built on Casler Creek, in the n. part of the town, was stockaded during the war.

⁶ Among the first settlers after the war were Wm. Alexander, Richard Phillips, Thos. Smith, Joel Lankton, Richard Winsor, Wm. Carr, Wm. Morales, Washington Britton, Alphens Parkhurst, John Drummond, Eben Britton, and Josiah Skinner,—all of whom came in town between 1790 and 1800.

⁷ These locks were planned by Roswell Weston, an English engineer, and built under the direction of Philip Schuyler. The first locks, built of wood, were replaced by stone in 1804.

¹⁰ This stream was called by the Indians Ci-o-ha-na and Sag-o-ha-ra.

¹³ A blockhouse stood at this place, and many of the inhabitants took refuge in it. Twelve of the prisoners were taken at one house by half the number of Indians, without resistance. The captives all returned after the war, except one who died in Canada, and one that escaped. John G. Snell, while searching for cattle in the woods, was surprised by the Indians and shot through the body. He recovered, however, and lived to an advanced age. The town was deserted after this by all but Tories.

NEWPORT¹—was formed from Herkimer, Fairfield, Norway, and Schuyler, April 7, 1806. It lies on the w. border of the co., near the center. Its surface is broken by ridges of highlands, which rise 400 to 500 ft. each side of the narrow intervals of West Canada Creek. This stream flows s. e. through the town, near the center. White Creek flows s. through the e. part. The soil is a clayey loam, with some gravel on the hills. It is chiefly underlaid by limestone, which is quarried in some localities. Newport, (p. v.,) near the center, incorp. March 20, 1857, contains 3 churches, 1 bank, a gristmill, cotton factory,² and 671 inhabitants. Settlement was commenced in 1791, by Christopher Hawkins, from R. I.,³ Rev. David Haskell (Bap.) held the first meetings, in 1796.⁴

NORWAY⁵—was formed from Herkimer, April 10, 1792. Fairfield was taken off in 1790, Russia, as "Union," and a part of Newport, in 1806, and Ohio in 1823. It lies in the interior of the co., n. of the Mohawk. Its surface is elevated and rolling. It is drained by several small streams, tributaries of West Canada Creek. The soil is sandy in the n. w., and loam and gravelly in the e. and s. Limestone is quarried in several places; and fossils have been found near White Creek. There is a sulphur spring 1 mi. n. of the village. Norway, (p. v.,) near the center, contains 3 churches, a cheese box factory, tannery, and 30 houses; Graysville,⁶ (p. v.,) on the line of Ohio, contains an extensive tannery and 30 houses.⁷ The first settlement was made by — Whipple and Christopher Hawkins, from R. I., in 1786; but it was soon abandoned.⁸ The first religious meetings were held by Rev. — Robertson, in 1792.⁹

OHIO¹⁰—was formed from Norway, as "West Brunswick," April 11, 1823. Its name was changed May 3, 1836. A part of Wilmurt was taken off in 1836. It lies in the interior, on the n. border of the settlements. Its surface is moderately hilly, with an elevation of 700 to 900 ft. above the Mohawk. A range of high, steep hills extends through the n. part. It is drained by West Canada and Black Creeks and their tributaries. The soil is a sandy loam, with some clay. A large portion of the town is still a wilderness. Graysville, (p. v.,) on the line of Norway, contains 1 church, a tannery, and 30 houses. Ohio City, (Ohio p. o.,) in the w. part, contains 10 houses. A few scattering settlements were begun before the Revolution, but were broken up during the war.¹¹ Religious services were first held at Ohio City, in 1808.¹²

RUSSIA¹³—was formed from Norway, as "Union," April 7, 1806. Its name was changed April 6, 1808. A part of Wilmurt was taken off in 1836. It lies on the w. border of the co., n. of the Mohawk, its n. part extending into the border of the great northern wilderness. Its surface is rolling and moderately hilly, and on the w. descends abruptly to the valley of West Canada Creek. The hills are 800 to 1,000 ft. above the Mohawk. West Canada and Black Creeks flow w. through the n. w. part, the former forming a part of the w. boundary. On it are some extensive lumber works.¹⁴ Trenton Falls, upon West Canada Creek, is on the w. border. The soil is sandy

³ Among the other early settlers were Benj. Bowen, John C. Green, Israel Wakely, and Geo. Fencer, all from R. I.; Dr. Westel Willoughby, and Sherman Wooster, from Conn. Joseph Benseley, A. M. Daniels, Geo. Cook, and Wm. Whipple were also early settlers. The first death was that of Silas Hawkins, in 1793. Abby Justice taught the first school, in 1795. Wm. Wakely kept the first inn, in 1793, and Geo. Cook the first store, the same year. Benj. Bowen built the first sawmill, in 1793, and the first gristmill, in 1794. The first settlers derived title from parties who had purchased from the courts of forfeiture.

⁴ The census reports 7 churches in town; Bap., M. E., Calv. Meth., Presb., Union, Univ., and R. C.

⁵ Named from Norway, in Europe. This town is included in the second and third allotments of the Royal Grant.

⁶ Named from Lathan Gray, a resident of the place.

⁷ La Dew's tannery, established in 1853, with a capital of $50,000, employs 75 men, and produces $150,000 worth of sole leather annually. The works are driven by a steam engine of 30 horse power.

The first birth was that of a child of Gideon Brayton; and the first death, that of the wife of E. Hinman. The first school was taught by Jeanette Henderson, in 1793. Amos Coe kept the first inn; Thaddeus Scribner & Bro., the first store, in 1793; Capt. Hinman built the first sawmill, in 1793; and Carpenter Cole the first gristmill, the same year. Vale & Eddy built a fulling mill, in 1793.—Benton's Herkimer, p. 450.

⁹ The census reports 5 churches; Bap., F. W. Bap., M. E., Presb., and Prot. E.

¹⁰ Named from the State of Ohio. This town includes the Jerseyfield and a small part of the Remsenburgh Patents.

¹² The census reports 3 churches in town; Evan. Luth., German Meth., and R. C.

loam and clay. Russia, (p. v.), in the s. part, contains 2 churches and 140 inhabitants; Gravesville, (p. v.), in the s. w., a church and 20 houses; Poland, (p. v.), near the s. line, a church and 179 inhabitants; Cold Brook, (p. v.), in the s. e., a saw set factory, cheese box factory, gristmill, and 218 inhabitants; Booth, (p. o.) on Black Creek, a church, grist and saw mill, tannery, and 10 houses. Prospect is a hamlet, and contains — sawmills. The first settlement was commenced in 1792, by Stodard Squires, from Conn.¹ The first religious meetings (F. W. Bap.) were held by Rev. Benajah Corp.²

SALISBURY³—was formed from Palatine, (Montgomery co.,) March 3, 1797, and annexed from Montgomery co., April 7, 1817. It lies on the e. border of the co., and extends n. into the great wilderness. Only about one-fourth of its surface is cultivated. It is a broken and mountainous upland in the n. and hilly in the s. The principal streams are East Canada Creek, which forms a part of the e. boundary, and Spruce Creek, which flows through the s. w. and s. parts. The soil is a sandy and clayey loam. A bed of iron ore has been worked to some extent on Lot 105, fourth allotment of the Royal Grant. Salisbury Center, (p. v.), in the s. part, contains 2 churches, a tannery, and 319 inhabitants; Salisbury Corners, (Salisbury p. o.) in the s. w., 2 churches and 30 houses; Diamond Hill, 25 houses; Devereaux, 15 houses. Whitesburgh, (p. o.), on the line of Fulton co., is a hamlet. Settlement was begun before the Revolution, by tenants of Sir Wm. Johnson, who followed his lead during the war, and shared his fate at the hands of the Commissioners of Forfeiture.⁴ The census reports 4 churches in town.⁵

SCHUYLER⁶—was formed from Herkimer, April 10, 1792. Trenton was taken off in 1797, Deerfield (Oneida co.) in 1798, and a part of Newport in 1806. A part was annexed from Herkimer in 1808, and re-annexed to Herkimer in 1811. It lies on the w. border of the co., n. of the Mohawk. Its surface is hilly. The Hasenclever Mts. extend through the center, attaining in this town an elevation of 1,000 to 1,200 ft. above tide. A wide interval extends along the Mohawk, which forms the s. boundary. Its streams are tributaries of the Mohawk and generally flow through narrow ravines. The flats bordering the river are annually overflowed. The soil upon the hills is slaty and gravelly. East Schuyler, (p. v.), in the s. e., contains 25 houses; and West Schuyler, (p. v.), in the s. w., a church and 25 houses. Settlement was commenced previous to 1775, by several German families.⁷ There was a good carriage road in 1757, on the bank of the river, from the crossing, where Utica now stands,⁸ to the Palatine village, German Flats. There are 2 churches in town; M. E. and Meth. Prot.

STARK⁹—was formed from Danube, March 18, 1828. It is the s. e. corner town of the co. Its surface is hilly and broken, with a mean elevation of 500 feet above the Mohawk. The principal streams are Otsquago and Nowadaga Creeks. Otsquago Creek flows through a narrow valley, bordered by steep banks 150 to 200 ft. high. The soil is generally a sandy loam in the valleys, and sandy and gravelly on the hills. Starkville, (p. v.), in the s. e. part, contains 2 churches, a gristmill, and 190 inhabitants; Van Hornesville, (p. v.), in the s. part, 1 church, a cotton factory, (not in operation,) a grist and saw mill, and 228 inhabitants. Smiths Corners is a ¹ Jonathan Millington, from Vt., — Smith, Farley Fuller, Geo. Taylor, Roscum Slocum. — Austin & Son, Wm. Buck, Jeremiah Smith, Jotham Carpenter. — Coon, and others, settled soon after; and, in 1794, many others came in. The first marriage was that of Farley Fuller and Minerva Smith, in 1794; that the first death, that of a son of — Allen, and the second, that of Waite Robinson. The first school was taught by — Morehouse, at Graves Hollow, and another, about the same time, by — Steuded. The first inn was kept by Jotham Carpenter, the first store by — Swintburn, at Graves Hollow, in 1797. The first sawmill was built in 1797, and the first gristmill by Benj. Hinman, the same year. A cotton factory was built at Poland some years since.

² The census reports 4 churches in town; M. E., Presb., Union, and Univ.

³ Named from Salisbury, Conn., whence many of the early settlers came. This town includes part of the Jerseyfield Patent, and parts of the first, second, and fourth allotments of the Royal Grant. Several of the Indian children of Sir Wm. Johnson had tracts of land assigned to them in this part of the Royal Grant, — viz.: William, 1,000 acres; Braut, 1,000; Anne, 3,000; Susan, 3,000; Mary, 2,000; George, 3,000; Margaret, 2,000; Magdalen, —, and Elizabeth, —. Of these children, the last three were convicted of adhering to the enemy; but, no record of conviction existing against the others, acts were passed by the Legislature, Feb. 26, 1796, and March 30, 1798, authorizing John Robinson, George Pearson, and James Cochran, purchasers under the Commissioners of Forfeiture, to receive from the treasury the part of the purchase money which they had paid and convey back the lands.

⁴ John Faville and Cornelius Lamberson settled about 1778, near Burrills Corners; Asa Sheldon and Abijah Ford about 1793. Abial Pratt, Stephen Todd, Jabez Ayers, Jonathan Cole, — Bidwell, Ira Bartholomew, Atwater Cook, Amos Ives, Moses De Witt, — Low, Jonathan Hallet, and others, were early settlers. John Ford was the first child born; Elizabeth Rice taught the first school; Aaron Hackley kept the first inn and store, at Burrill's Corners.

⁵ 2 M. E., Bap., and Union.

⁶ This town contains the whole of Kast's Patent and parts of Cosby's Manor and Hasenclever's and Walton's Patents.

⁷ Among the early settlers were families named Kasts, Starrings, Widwig, Rymour, Lintz, and Bridenbecker. Judge Henri Starring (who is said to have granted the celebrated Yankee pass) formerly resided in this town. A store was kept on Cosby's Manor in 1766.

⁸ In 1757, M. De Belletre, with a body of French and Indiana, traversed this road, and burned every house upon it within the town. — Benton's Herkimer, p. 401.

hamlet. Small settlements were commenced before 1775, but were broken up during the Revolution.¹ The census reports 4 churches in town.²

WARREN³—was formed from German Flats, Feb. 5, 1796. Columbia was taken off in 1812. It lies centrally on the s. border of the co. Its surface is hilly, the highest points being 500 to 800 feet above the Mohawk. The principal stream is Fish Creek, which flows s., and is bordered by steep banks 100 to 200 ft. high. Mud Lake, in the e., and Weavers and Youngs Lakes, in the s., are small bodies of water. The soil is a sandy and clay loam. There are 2 small sulphur springs in town. Jordanville (p. v.) contains 2 churches and 125 inhabitants; Pages Corners (p. v.) a gristmill, sawmill, and 82 inhabitants; Little Lakes,⁴ (Warren p. o.) in the s. part, 1 church and 117 inhabitants. Crains Corners is a hamlet. Some settlements were commenced before the Revolution, by Germans from the Upper Valley.⁵ Elder Phineas Holcomb was the first settled minister in town, about 1793.⁶

WILMURT⁷—was formed from Russia and "West Brunswick," (now Ohio,) May 3, 1836. This is the largest town in the State, and is one of the least populous. It includes the whole n. part of the co., extending nearly 50 mi. in length, by about 16 mi. in breadth, entirely within the wild primeval forests of Northern New York. Its surface is rocky and mountainous, and the greater part is unfit for cultivation. In the deep valleys among the mountains are numerous beautiful, picturesque lakes, forming one of the finest features of the landscape.⁸ The soil is a sandy loam. The hills are usually covered with a thin growth of forest trees; but in the valleys only is found soil fit for profitable pasturage. The settlements are confined to the s. part. There is no p. o., village, store, church, or gristmill in town. The lumber cut in this region is mostly floated down West Canada Creek, and manufactured at Prospect in the town of Russia. An attempt was made to settle the town in 1790, by Arthur Noble, the patentee, and a sawmill was built at that time; but the project failed. It was again tried in 1793, with no better success. Toward the close of the last century, John Brown, a wealthy capitalist of Providence, R. I., who owned a large tract in this town, made an attempt at settlement; but his project failed. In 1812 his son-in-law, Chas. T. Harrisoff, made another attempt to settle upon this tract. He built a forge and sawmill, and cleared 2,000 acres; but, the outlay bringing no return, and his supply of money from the e. being cut off, the project was abandoned, and the colonists returned to their respective homes.⁹

WINFIELD¹⁰—was formed from Litchfield, Richfield, (Otsego co.,) and Plainfield, (Otsego co.,) April 17, 1816. The bounds of the co. were enlarged upon the formation of this town. It is the s. w. corner town of the co. Its surface is moderately hilly, and forms the dividing upland between the Mohawk and Unadilla Valleys, the general elevation being about 500 feet above the Mohawk. A range of hills in the s. e. rises about 200 ft. higher. The e. branch of the Unadilla flows s. through a deep valley in the w. part. Steels Creek, a tributary of the Mohawk, rises on the n. border. There is a sulphur spring near E. Winfield; and several limestone quarries are found in different parts of the town. East Winfield (Winfield p. o.) contains 30 houses; West Winfield (p. v.) 2 churches, the West Winfield Academy, a bank, 2 gristmills, 2 saw-

¹ One of these settlements was on Otegoquo Creek, and consisted of the families of John Small, John Bronner, — Tetherly, and others. Another settlement was commenced at The Kyle, so called.—Benton's Herkimer, p. 463. The families of Walwrst, Adam Young, and others, were early settlers. Abraham Van Horne, from N. J., settled in town in 1791, at what is now Van Hornesville. The first German school was taught by — Garner, and the first English school by — Haight. Abraham Van Horne built the first mills, soon after his settlement, and his sons kept the first store.

² Bap., Bap. and Luth., M. E., and Union.

³ Named from Gen. Joseph Warren, of the Revolution. This town embraces the principal part of Henderson and Theobald Young's Patents.

⁴ Called by the Indians Wa-i-on-tha.

⁵ Andrewstown, in the n. part,—then containing 7 families,—was plundered and burned by Brant in July, 1778. A part of the inhabitants were killed, and the remainder carried away captive. Young's settlement at the Lakes was spared by the Indians on account of the tory principles of the proprietor; but the Americans soon after plundered and burned this place in retaliation. In March, 1792, Samuel Cleland, from Mass., and his sons Norman, Salmon, Jonas, Martin, and Moses, settled in town. Danforth Abbott, Hugh Pannell, Amos Allen, Elder Phineas Holoomb, Richard Schooley Hull, Thomas, James, and Garret Abel, and — Thayer were early settlers. Stephen Luddington kept the first inn, Outbath & Vrooman the first store, and Isaac Freeman built the first gristmill, in 1795.

⁶ The census reports 6 churches; 4 M. E., Bap., and Ref. Prot. D.

mills, a clover mill, and tannery. Pop. 381. North Winfield is a p. o. The first settlement was commenced in 1792.¹ The census reports 3 churches.²

store, in 1796. Joseph Walker built the first saw and grist mill, soon after his settlement; Benj. Harrington built the first clothing works, at West Winfield, about 1800.

OTSEGO COUNTY.

THIS county was erected from Montgomery, Feb. 16, 1791, and embraced the 2 original towns of Otsego and Cherry Valley. A part of Schoharie was taken off in 1795, and a part of Delaware in 1797. It lies upon the highlands at the head of Susquehanna River, s. e. of the center of the State. It is centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains — sq. mi. Its surface is a hilly upland, divided into several ridges separated by deep, broad valleys. The declivities are generally gradual; and the highest summits are 400 to 700 ft. above the valleys and 1,700 to 2,000 ft. above tide. The ridges have a general n. e. and s. w. direction. A high and rocky upland extends into the s. e. corner from Delaware, terminating upon Schenevas Creek in an abrupt and wall-like declivity 300 to 500 ft. high. The other ridges of the co. have a nearly uniform elevation, and generally terminate in steep declivities upon the valleys of the streams. The principal streams are Unadilla River, forming the w. boundary, Wharton and Butternut Creeks, Otego Creek, Susquehanna River, Cherry Valley and Schenevas Creeks. Charlotte River forms a small portion of the s. boundary. Besides these, there are a large number of smaller creeks and brooks, tributaries to the above. A few small streams rise in the n. e. corner and flow into the Mohawk. Otsego Lake, in the n. e. part, is a fine sheet of water 9 mi. long and from 1 to 3 mi. broad. It is 1,193 ft. above tide, and is surrounded by hills 400 to 500 ft. high. Its outlet forms the principal head branch of the Susquehanna. Schuyler Lake, n. w. of Otsego, is a similar sheet of water, 5 mi. long. The other bodies of water in the co. are small ponds. The rocks in the n. e. corner consist of the limestones of the Helderbergh division. The hills in the s. part are composed of the shales of the Hamilton group and the shales and sandstones of the Portage and Chemung groups. The summits in the extreme s. part and s. e. corner are crowned by the red sandstone and shales of the Catskill group. Almost all the valuable quarries of the co. are found in the limestone region of the n. e. The soil in the n. e. is a good quality of gravelly and calcareous loam; but further south it is a clay and shaly loam upon the hills, and a gravelly loam and alluvium in the valleys. The uplands are best adapted to grazing; and the river intervals are well adapted to the cultivation of grain. The people are principally engaged in stock raising and dairying. More hops are raised in this co. than in any other in the State. The manufacturing interests are limited, though the available water-power is very great.

The county seat is located at Cooperstown, in the town of Otsego, at the foot of Otsego Lake.¹ The courthouse is a brick edifice in the w. part of the village.² The jail, near by, is built of stone, but has few of the modern improvements or conveniences. The average number of inmates is 8, supported at a weekly cost of $3.00 each. The clerk's office is a fireproof brick building, contiguous to the courthouse. The co. poorhouse is situated upon a farm of 153 acres in Middlefield, 4 mi. s. of Cooperstown. Its average number of inmates is 90. The children attend the district school. The farm yields a revenue of $1,400. The general arrangement and management of this institution are far better than the average. The only work of internal improvement in the co. is the Albany & Susquehanna R. R., now in process of construction. It extends along Susquehanna River and Schenevas Creek, through Unadilla Otego, Oneonta, Milford, Maryland, and Worcester.

Three weekly newspapers are published in the co.³

² The first county officers were Wm. Cooper, First Judge; Jacob Morris, County Clerk; Richard B. Smith, Sheriff; and James Cannon, Surrogate.

³ The Otsego Herald and Western Advertiser, the first paper published in the co., and the second in the State w. of Albany, was commenced at Cooperstown, April 3, 1795, by Elihu Phinney, a native of Conn. Mr. Phinney continued its publication until 1803, when he died. It was then published by his sons, E. & H. Phinney, until 1821, when it was discontinued.

The Impartial Observer was established at Cooperstown in 1808 by William Andrews. It soon after passed to John II. Prentiss, who changed its name to

The Cooperstown Federalist, under which title it was published until 1828, when the name was again changed to

The Freeman's Journal. In 1850 it passed into the hands of Samuel M. Shaw, by whom it is now published.

The Otsego Republican was published at Cherry Valley in 1812 by Clark & Crandal.

The Watchtower was established at Cherry Valley in 1813. In 1814 it was removed to Cooperstown, where it was published by Israel W. Clark until May, 1817, when Edward B. Crandal became proprietor, and continued the publication until 1831.

The first settlement in this co. was made at Cherry Valley, in 1740, by John Lindsay, who, with 3 others, held a patent for a tract of 8,000 acres lying in that town.¹ Mr. Lindsay was a Scotch gentleman of some fortune and distinction, and, by his influence, induced a settlement on his lands of several families, comprising about 30 persons, originally from Scotland and Ireland. A few years later, small settlements were made in the present towns of Springfield, Middlefield, Laurens, Otego, and at other points in the valley of the Susquehanna. These settlements then formed the extreme outposts in the advance of civilization west. They increased very slowly, in consequence of the fear of Indian hostilities. In 1765, 25 years after the first settlement, but 40 families had located at Cherry Valley. At the commencement of the Revolution it was still a frontier settlement. On the 11th of Oct. 1778, it was attacked by the Tories and Indians, under the lead of Butler and Brant, and a horrible massacre ensued. The family of Robert Wells, father of the late John Wells of New York, consisting of 12 persons, were brutally murdered; and one of the Tories boasted that he killed Mr. Wells while at prayer. John Wells, the only member of the family who escaped, was at school in Schenectady at the time. The wife and daughter of Mr. Dunlop were murdered in cold blood, as were also the wife and 4 children of Mr. Mitchell. Thirty-two of the inhabitants, mostly women and children, and 16 Continental officers and soldiers, were killed; the residue of the inhabitants were taken prisoners and carried off, and all the buildings in the place were burned. All the frontier settlements were ravaged, and nearly every building, except those belonging to Tories, was burned. These horrible outrages aroused the whole country, and in 1779 Gen. Sullivan, at the head of a large body of troops, was sent against the Western tribes. In Feb. Gen. Clinton, with a force of 1,200 men, marched up the Mohawk, and thence opened a road to Otsego Lake, a distance of 20 mi. At the foot of the lake he halted and built a dam across the outlet, and prepared boats to descend the stream. When the lake was sufficiently high, the boats were launched, the dam was broken down, and the army descended the river on the flood thus produced. The Indians upon the banks, witnessing the extraordinary rise of the river at midsummer without any apparent cause, were struck with superstitious dread, and in the very outset were disheartened at the apparent interposition of the Great Spirit in favor of their foes. Gen. Clinton's forces joined Sullivan on the Chemung. At the close of the war, settlements progressed with great rapidity; and much of the best land in the co. was taken up before the fertile lands in the western part of the State were opened to immigration. In late years the progress of the co. has not been so rapid as that of other sections of the State, from the fact that no great work of public improvement has yet been constructed within its limits, and hence it is comparatively isolated and difficult of access.

BURLINGTON—was formed from Otsego, April 10, 1792. Pittsfield was taken off in 1797, and Edmeston in 1808. It is an interior town, lying n. w. of the center of the co. Its surface is a hilly upland, divided into 3 general ridges extending n. and s. These ridges are about 400 ft. above the valleys, and are arable to their summits. The streams are Butternut Creek, flowing s. through the center, and Wharton Creek, flowing s. w. through the w. part. The soil upon the hills is a slaty loam, in many places underlaid by hardpan, and in the valleys a gravelly loam.

The Tocsin was established at Cooperstown in June, 1829, by Dutton & Hews, and was published by them until 1831, when it took the name of

The Otsego Republican. It was issued by Dutton & Hopkins for about 1 year; by Hopkins alone, 1 year; Hopkins & Clark, a year; by A. W. Clark, about 1 year; and by Andrew W. Barber, 4 or 5 years. In 1845 it was issued by J. K. Williams & Co. Soon after it again came into the possession of A. W. Barber, and was continued by him until his death, in Aug. 1855. In Oct. 1855, the paper was united with The Otsego Democrat, and issued as

The Republican and Democrat, under which title it is now published by James J. Hendrix.

The Otsego Democrat was commenced at Cooperstown in 1846 by James J. Hendrix, and was published by him until it was merged with the Republican in 1855.

The Otsego Examiner was commenced at Cooperstown in 1854 by Robert Shankland, who soon after withdrew, and the publication was continued by B. W. Burditt until 1857.

The Cherry Valley Gazette was started in Oct. 1818, by Wm. McLean, who continued its publication until 1832. It then passed into the hands of Charles McLean, who continued it until Jan. 1, 1847, when A. S. Bottsford became proprietor and continued it until 1851. It then reverted to Charles McLean; and in 1853 it was sold to John B. King, who published it 1 year under the name of

The American Banner, when he sold it to A. S. Bottsford, who changed the name back to

The Cherry Valley Gazette, under which title it is still published.

The Otsego Farmer was published at Cherry Valley in 1841.

The Otsego County Courier was commenced at the village of Louisville, in the town of Morris, by Wm. H. S. Wynans, in 1845. This paper was succeeded by

The Village Advertiser, commenced at the same place in 1851. It was a quarterly publication, conducted, in 1855, by H. S. Avery.

The Oneonta Herald was commenced Feb. 9, 1853, at Oneonta Village, and was published by L. P. Carpenter in 1855.

The Unadilla Advertiser was published at the village of Unadilla for a series of years; but its history is wanting.

¹ During the first winter the snow fell to so great a depth that it was impossible for Mr. Lindsay to go to the nearest settlement, which was 15 mi. distant. His provisions gave out, and his family were in danger of perishing by starvation. In this extremity they were visited by an Indian, who came on snow shoes, and who, on learning their situation, undertook to supply them with food. He went to the Mohawk, and returned with a load of provisions, and continued his visits of mercy until the close of the winter. Mr. Lindsay afterward left the settlement, joined the army, and served for several years.

Burlington Green, (Burlington p. o.) on Butternut Creek, near the center, contains 3 churches and 118 inhabitants; Burlington Flats, (p. v.), on Wharton Creek, n. w. of the center, 2 churches, a cotton factory, gristmill, sawmill, and about 30 dwellings; and West Burlington, (p. v.) on Wharton Creek, 2 churches and 143 inhabitants. The first settlement was commenced near West Burlington, in 1790, by Robert Garrat, and Eber and Benj. Harrington.¹ The first church (Bap.) was formed at Burlington Green, in 1793; Rev. James Southworth was the first minister.²

BUTTERNUTS—was formed from Unadilla, Feb. 5, 1796. Morris was taken off in 1849. It lies upon the w. border of the co., s. w. of the center. Its surface is a hilly upland, divided into several ridges extending n. and s. Unadilla River, forming its w. boundary, is bordered by a narrow interval, from which the highlands rise in a series of steep bluffs to a height of 500 to 600 ft. Butternut Creek flows s. w. in a deep valley through near the center of the town. A large number of smaller streams, tributaries to these, flow in deep valleys among the hills, dividing the ridges and giving to the region a peculiar broken character. The hills are arable to their summits, and the soil is a good quality of red shale and gravelly loam. Gilbertsville, (Butternuts p. o.) near the center, contains 4 churches, the Gilbertsville Academy and Collegiate Institute, an oil mill, tannery, and various other manufacturing establishments. Pop. 442. Settlements were commenced about 1790, at Gilbertsville, by Gordon and Wyatt Chamberlin and Abijah Gilbert.³ The first church (Cong.) was formed in 1795-96; Rev. John Stone was the first preacher.⁴

CHERRY VALLEY—was formed from Canajoharie, (Montgomery co.) Feb. 16, 1791. Middlefield, Springfield, and Worcester were taken off in 1797, and Roseboom in 1854. It is the n. e. corner town in the co. Its surface is a hilly and mountainous upland; and much of it is too rough and rocky for cultivation. Mount Independence, s. e. of the center, is a rocky eminence 1,000 ft. above the valleys and 2,000 ft. above tide. It is the highest summit in the co. A range of highlands extends along the n. w. boundary. The central and s. parts of the town are drained by the head branches of the Susquehanna, and the n. part by tributaries of the Mohawk. The soil upon the uplands is a slaty and gravelly loam, and in the valleys a fine quality of calcareous loam. Upon a small creek in the n. part is the Te-ka-ha-ra-nea Falls, 160 feet in height. In the vicinity are several sulphur springs and quarries of limestone. In the n. e. corner are several springs of weak brine, from which salt was formerly manufactured. Cherry Valley,⁵ (p. v.), at the head of the valley of Cherry Valley Creek, was incorp. June 8, 1812. It contains 3 churches, the Cherry Valley Academy,⁶ a bank, newspaper office, and gristmill. Pop. 933. Salt Springsville⁷ (p. o.) is a hamlet in the n. e. corner. The first settlement was made on the present site of the village in 1739, by John Lindsay, an emigrant from the Londonderry Colony of Scotch-Irish in N. H.⁸ The first religious services were held in 1743, by Rev. Samuel Dunlap, a native of Ireland.⁹

DECATUR¹⁰—was formed from Worcester, March 25, 1808. It lies upon the e. line of the co., s. of the center. The surface is hilly, and broken by the narrow valleys of several small

² The census reports 8 churches; 3 Bap., Presb., Cong., Prot. E., Friends, and F. W. Bap.

⁴ The census reports 5 churches; Cong., Presb., Prot. E., Bap., and M. E.

⁷ Named from the brine springs in the vicinity.

⁸ Mr. Lindsay was one of the original proprietors of Cherry Valley, under a patent granted in 1738, by George Clarke, then Lieut. Governor of New York, to John Lindsay, Jacob Roseboom, and others. David Ramsey and James Campbell, from Londonderry, N. H., and Wm. Galt and Wm. Dickson, from Ireland, settled on the patent, in 1742, at and near the village. John Wells, from Ireland, settled at the village, in 1744. From the fear of Indian hostilities, the settlement of Cherry Valley proceeded slowly, there being in 1752, 12 years after the first settlement, but 8 families in the town; and at the breaking out of the Revolution, in 1775, the number of families did not exceed 60. James Ritchie kept the first store and inn, anterior to the war; and James Campbell erected the first gristmill, in 1743-44. John Wells erected the second gristmill. Rev. Samuel Dunlap taught a classical school at his own house, in 1743-44,—the first probably, of the kind w. of the Hudson. The whole settlement was destroyed by the Indians, and the greater part of the inhabitants were murdered and taken prisoners, on the evening of Nov. 11, 1778. See page —.

⁹ The census rep. is 4 churches; 2 M. E., Presb., and Prot. E.

¹⁰ Named in honor of Commodore Stephen Decatur.

streams. The hills generally have gradual slopes and rounded summits, and are elevated 250 to 300 ft. above the valleys. The town is drained s. by Elk Creek and other small streams flowing into the Susquehanna. The soil is a sandy and gravelly loam. Decatur, (p. v.,) near the s. w. corner, contains a church and 120 inhabitants. The first settlements were commenced in or about 1790, by Jacob Kinney, originally from New Milford, Conn., at or near the village of Decatur.¹ The first religious association (M. E.) was formed at an early period.²

EDMESTON—was formed from Burlington, April 1, 1808. It lies upon the w. border of the co., n. of the center. The surface is an elevated upland, broken by numerous irregular valleys. The highest elevations are 400 to 500 ft. above Unadilla River, which forms the w. boundary. Wharton Creek flows across the s. e. corner. Mill Creek and several other small streams take their rise in the town. Smiths Pond is a small sheet of water in the n. e. corner. The soil is a sandy and clayey loam. Edmeston Center (Edmeston p. o.) contains 3 churches, a grist and saw mill, and tannery. Pop. 275. West Edmeston, (p. v.,) on Unadilla River, and partly in Brookfield, (Madison co.,) contains a church and 35 houses. South Edmeston (p. v.,) contains a church and 30 houses. East Edmeston is a p. o. Of the first settlement in town, authentic data of the precise date are wanting. It was made, however, on Unadilla River, during the interval between the close of the French War, in 1763, and the commencement of that of the Revolution, in 1775, by Col. Edmeston, an officer of the French War, and Percifer Carr, a faithful soldier who had served under him.³ The first church (Bap.) was formed at Taylor Hill, March 8, 1794; Rev. Stephen Taylor was the first preacher.⁴

EXETER—was formed from Richfield, March 25, 1799. It is an interior town, lying n. w. of the center of the co. The surface is hilly and broken, consisting mainly of elevated uplands. Angel Cliff and Town Cliff Hills, in the e. part of the town, are 400 to 500 ft. above the valleys. The town is drained e. by several small streams flowing into Schuyler Lake, and s. by Butternut and Wharton Creeks, both of which rise in this town. The soil is a clay and gravelly loam, well adapted to grazing. Exeter Center (Exeter p. o.) contains a church and 106 inhabitants. Schuylers Lake, (p. v.,) at the outlet of Schuyler Lake, on the e. border of the town, contains 2 churches and 280 inhabitants. West Exeter (p. v.) contains 1 church and 100 inhabitants. The first settlements were made by John Tunnickiff, near Schuyler Lake, and William Angel, on Angel Hill, in 1789.⁵ The first religious association (Presb.) was formed at Exeter Center, in 1800; Rev. T. W. Duncan was the first regular preacher.⁶

HARTWICK—was formed from Otsego, March 30, 1802. It is the central town in the co. It is a hilly upland, the highest summits being 200 to 350 ft. above the valleys. It is drained by the Susquehanna, forming the e. border, and Otego Creek, flowing through the w. part. The soil is chiefly a sandy and gravelly loam, with an occasional mixture of clay. Hartwick, (p. v.,) on Otego Creek, in the w. part, contains 4 churches, 2 iron founderies, several mills, and other manufacturing establishments. Pop. about 400. Hartwick Seminary, (p. v.,) in the valley of the Susquehanna, contains the "Hartwick Theological and Classical Seminary,"⁷ a church, and 20 dwellings. South Hartwick (p. v.) contains a church and 17 houses. Toddsville, (p. v.,) upon the line of Otsego, in the n. e. corner of the town, contains the Union Cotton Factory⁸ and about a dozen dwellings. Clintonville, a hamlet in the s. e. corner, is the seat of the Clinton Cotton Factory.¹⁰ The Hartwick Patent, including the greater part of the area of this town, was granted April 22, 1761; and settlements were made in the town before the

² The census reports 2 churches; M. E. and Bap.

³ At the close of the war, Col. Edmeston, for his military services, received the grant of a tract of land covering a large portion of the town on which he made the first settlement. At his death the lands fell to heirs and minor children residing in England, from whom no safe title could be obtained for many years,—which greatly retarded the settlement of the town. During the Revolution, the hired men of Mr. Carr were killed while at work, his barn was burned, his property destroyed, and himself and family were taken prisoners by the British and Indians and detained to the close of the war. Abel De Forest and Gideon De Forest were among the early settlers on the Unadilla; Aden Deming and James Kenada, at Edmeston; and Stephen Taylor, on Taylor Hill, where the first school was taught. Rufus Graves kept the first inn; and James Kenada erected the first gristmill, both at Edmeston Center.

⁴ The census reports 6 churches; 2 Bap., 7th da. Bap., M. E., and Univ.

⁵ About the same time, or soon after, Asa Williams settled in the s. part of the town; Joshua and Caleb Angel, on Angel Hill; Seth Tubbs and Bethel Martin, at West Exeter; and M. Cushman, on the Rockingna. Eliphalet Brockway kept the first inn, at Schuyler Lake; and C. Jones the first store, in 1810. John Hartshorne erected the first gristmill, on Herkimer Creek.

⁶ The census reports 6 churches; 2 M. E., Cong., Bap., Prot. E., and Univ.

⁷ Named from Christopher Hartwick, the patentee of the Hartwick Patent.

⁸ This institution, established in 1815, was originally endowed by John Christopher Hartwick with a fund of $80,000.

⁹ The Union Cotton Factory was erected in 1809, and burned down and rebuilt in 1848. It gives employment to about 40 hands.

¹⁰ The Clinton Factory, erected in 1847, gives employment to 35 hands, and turns out 624,000 yards of printed cottons per annum.

Revolution.¹ The first church (Bap.) was formed Aug. 19, 1795; Rev. John Bostwick was the first settled preacher.²

LAURENS—was formed from Otsego, April 2, 1810. It is an interior town, lying s. w. of the center of the co. With the exception of the broad valley of Otego Creek, the surface is high and hilly. It is drained s. by Otego Creek and several tributaries, among which are Harrisons and Camps Creeks. The soil is a sandy and gravelly loam, in some parts slaty, and generally productive. One and a half mi. w. of Laurens is a sulphur spring. Laurens, (p. v.,) on Otego Creek, in the e. part, was incorp. April 22, 1834. It contains 3 churches, 2 flouring mills, the Otsego Cotton Mills,³ an iron foundry, and a tannery. Pop. 726. Jacksonville, (Mount Vision p. o.,) in the n. e. corner, contains 2 churches, a grist and saw mill, and about 30 houses. West Laurens (p. v.) contains about 15 houses. Settlements were made in this town prior to the Revolution, by Joseph Marshall and Richard Smith, a little n. of Laurens Village; by John Sleeper, at the village; and by Wm. Ferguson, a little s. of it.⁴ The first religious association was formed by the Friends, who erected a meetinghouse in 1800.⁵

MARYLAND—was formed from Worcester, March 25, 1808. It lies on the s. line of the co., e. of the center. Its surface is a hilly upland, broken by the deep ravines of the streams. Schenevas Creek flows s. w. through near the center and receives several tributaries from the n. South Hill, a steep, unbroken ridge 350 to 500 ft. above the valleys, extends along the s. bank of the creek through the town; and from its summit the surface spreads out into a rocky and broken upland, extending into the s. border. The soil is principally a sandy loam, and is best adapted to grazing. Maryland, (p. v.,) near the center of the town, contains a church and 20 houses; Schenevus, (p. v.,) near the e. border, a church, tannery, and 383 inhabitants. Chaseville is a p. o. The first settlement was made by Thomas Thompson and his son John, from Columbia co., in 1793.⁶ The first religious association (Presb.) was formed at an early period; Rev. Mr. Ralph was the first preacher.⁷

MIDDLEFIELD—was formed from Cherry Valley, March 3, 1797. It is an interior town, lying n. e. of the center of the co. The surface is a hilly upland, abruptly descending to Otsego Lake and Outlet, which form its w. boundary. The summits of the hills are 400 to 600 ft. above the valleys. The e. branch of the Susquehanna flows s. w. through the e. part. The soil is a gravelly and sandy loam. Middlefield Center, (p. v.,) in the n. part of the town, contains 15 dwellings. Clarksville,⁸ (Middlefield p. o.,) on Cherry Valley Creek, contains 2 churches, a tannery, and 260 inhabitants. The first settlement was made about 1755, by emigrants originally from Ireland and Scotland.⁹ The first religious association (Presb.) was formed by Rev. Andrew Oliver, in 1805; the first church edifice was erected in 1808.¹⁰

MILFORD—was formed from Unadilla, Feb. 5, 1796, as "Suffrage." Its name was changed April 8, 1800. It is an interior town, s. of the center of the co. Its surface is a hilly upland, divided into two distinct ridges by the Susquehanna, which flows s. w. through the town. The valley is deep and bordered by steep hillsides. Crumhorn Mt., on the e. border, is 500 to 600 ft. above the valleys; and the w. hills are 300 to 400 ft. high. Crumhorn Lake, a body of water 3 mi. in circumference, lies upon the summit of Crumhorn Mt. The soil is a sandy and gravelly loam. Milford Center (Milford p. o.) contains 1 church and 15 houses; Collerville and

³ This factory was erected in 1846, by an investment of $40,000. It employs 40 persons, and makes sheetings exclusively, to the value of $50,000 per annum.

⁵ The census reports 8 churches; 2 M. E., Friends, Bap., Christian, and Presb.

⁶ In 1794, Josiah Chase, Col. J. Houghton, Ezekiel Rice, and Caleb Byington, from Vt., and Daniel Houghton and Wilder Rice, settled near Schenevus, Daniel Slaver, from Mass., settled at Schenevus, and Joseph Howe on Elk Creek. The first gristmill was built by Israel Spencer, and the first sawmill by Jotham Houghton. In 1795, on Schenevas Creek. Josiah Chase kept the first inn, near Roseville; and Stephen G. Virgil the first fulling and cloth dressing mill. The first death was that of John Rice, killed by the fall of a tree.

⁷ The census reports 4 churches; 3 M. E., and Bap.

⁹ Among those who settled prior to the Revolutionary War were Wm. Cook, Daniel, Benjamin, and Reuben McCollum Samuel and Andrew Wilson, Andrew Cochran, Andrew Cameron, and — Hall, all in the n. part of the town. They came from the n. of Ireland, but were mostly of Scotch descent. Among those who settled near the close of and after the war were Benjamin Gilbert, in the n. part, in 1780; Reuben Beals, in the s. part, in 1786; Wm. Compton, Bernard Temple. — Rice, Stephen and Thomas Pratt, Whitney Juvill, and Moses Rich, all from Mass., and Wm. Cook, from England, in 1787; — Dunham, Wm. Temple, and Daniel Moore, from New England, in the s. part of the town, soon after. Hannah Hubbell taught the first school, about 1790. Alexander McCollum and Andrew Cameron kept the first inn, and Benjamin Johnson the first store, in 1790. Mr. McCollum also built the first sawmill, before the war; and Moses Rich the first gristmill, in 1795.

¹⁰ The census reports 4 churches in town; 2 Bap., Presb., and M. E.

Portlandville are p. offices. The first settlement was made on the Susquehanna, about 1770, by a squatter named Carr. As the settlements made at that period were broken up by the border wars which followed, little or no progress was made until the close of the Revolution.¹ The first religious services (Cong.) were held near Milford Village, in 1793, by Rev. — Reed, the first preacher. The census reports 6 churches.²

MORRIS—was formed from Butternuts, April 6, 1849. It lies upon the w. border of the co., s. of the center. Its surface is a hilly upland, divided into two principal ridges by Butternut Creek, which flows s. w. through near the center. The w. ridge terminates in a series of steep bluffs bordering upon Unadilla River, which forms the w. boundary of the town. The soil upon the uplands is composed of clay, gravel, and disintegrated slate, and in the valleys of gravelly loam. Louisville, (Morris p. o.) on Butternut Creek, contains 4 churches, 2 cotton factories, 3 tanneries, a gristmill, and several other manufacturing establishments.³ Pop. about 400. Maple Grove is a p. o. The first settlement was made about 1770, by Andre Renouard, at Elm Grove, and Louis and Paschal Franchot, at Louisville, emigrants originally from France.⁴ The first church (Bap.) was organized Aug. 28, 1793; Rev. John Lawton was the first preacher.⁵

NEW LISBON—was formed from Pittsfield, April 7, 1806, as "Lisbon." Its name was changed April 6, 1808. It is an interior town, lying w. of the center of the co. Its surface is a hilly upland, divided into several ridges by the deep ravines of the streams. The highest summits are 300 to 500 ft. above the valleys. The principal streams are Butternut Creek, flowing s. through the w. part, and Otego Creek, in the e. Gilberts Lake is a small sheet of water on the s. border. The soil upon the uplands is a clay and slaty loam, and in the valleys a gravelly loam. Garrattsville, (p. v.) on Butternut Creek, contains a church, gristmill, sawmill, distillery, and fork factory. Pop. 192. Noblesville (New Lisbon p. o.) contains a church, gristmill, and 25 dwellings. New Lisbon Center and Stitsonville are hamlets. The first settlement was made in 1775, by William Lull and Increase Thurston.⁶ The first church (Bap.) was formed at New Lisbon Center, in 1804, by Elder S. Gregory. A Cong. church was formed the same year by Rev. Wm. Stone.⁷

ONEONTA—was formed from Unadilla, Feb. 5, 1796, as "Otego." Its name was changed April 17, 1830. It is the central town upon the s. border of the co. Its surface is a hilly upland, broken by the deep valley of the Susquehanna, which extends n. e. and s. w. through the s. part. A range of hills 500 ft. high extends along the s. e. bank of the Susquehanna and occupies the s. border of the town. The center and n. part are hilly, and broken by narrow and irregular valleys. The summits are 150 to 300 ft. above the valleys. The soil is composed of gravel, slate, and clay on the uplands, and gravelly loam and alluvium upon the river bottoms. Oneonta, (p. v.) on the Susquehanna, in the s. part of the town, was incorp. Oct. 14, 1848. It contains 3 churches, a woolen factory, an iron foundery, tannery, gristmill, sawmill, and distillery. Pop. 678. West Oneonta (p. v.) contains 15 dwellings. Settlements were made on the Susquehanna, at and near the village of Oneonta, before the breaking out of the Revolution, by Henry Scramlin and — Youngs.⁸ The first religious association (Presb.) was formed at Oneonta Village in 1786; Rev. Alexander Conkey was the first settled preacher, when the church was built in 1816.⁹

¹ Matthew Cully, from Cherry Valley, and George Mumford settled near Milford Center in 1783. Abraham and Jacob Beals, and a family named Ford, all from Mass., settled at and near Milford Village in 1784. Henry Scott, from Ireland, settled a little n. of the village in 1786. The first child born was David Beals, in Sept. 1786; the first marriage, that of James Brown and Rhoda Marvia, in 1788; and the first death, that of Mrs. Beals, about the same time. Increase Niles taught the first school in 1790. Matthew Cully and Isaac Collier kept the first inn below Milford Village, and Isaac Edson the first store, at the village, in 1794. The first gristmill was erected by David Cully, in 1788 and the first sawmill by Matthew Cully, in 1792-93.

OTEGO—was formed from Franklin, (Delaware co.,) and Unadilla, April 12, 1822, as "Huntsville." Its name was changed April 17, 1830. It lies on the s. border of the co., w. of the center. Its surface is a hilly upland, divided into two unequal parts by the Susquehanna, which flows s. w. through the s. part. The n. part is separated into ridges 200 to 400 ft. high, all extending n. and s. The principal streams are Mill Creek, East and West Brooks, Otsdawa, and Flax Creeks, and Center Brook. The soil is a clay and sandy loam. Otego, (p. v.,) on the Susquehanna, contains 4 churches and 331 inhabitants; Otsdawa, (p. v.,) on Otsdawa Creek, contains a church, tannery, mill, and 20 dwellings. Center Brook is a p. o. on the stream of the same name. Settlements were made in this town, along the Susquehanna, soon after the close of the Revolution; but the precise date of the first settlement is not known.¹ The first church (Presb.) was organized at Otego Village, Sept. 17, 1805; Rev. Abner Benedict was the first preacher.²

OTSEGO—was formed as a part of Montgomery co., March 7, 1788, and originally included the greater part of Otsego co. Burlington, Richfield, and Unadilla were taken off in 1792, Hartwick in 1802, and Laurens in 1810. It is an interior town, lying upon the w. bank of Otsego Lake, n. of the center of the co. Its surface is a hilly upland, lying between Otsego and Schuyler Lakes and descending abruptly towards each. The summits are 300 to 500 ft. above the water, the uplands being divided into two ridges by the valley of Fly Creek, which flows s. through the center. The two lakes form the sources of the Susquehanna. The soil is clay, gravel, and sandy loam. Cooperstown, (p. v.,) at the foot of Otsego Lake, was incorp. April 3, 1807, by the name of "Otsego." Its name was changed to Cooperstown June 12, 1812. Besides the co. buildings, it contains 5 churches, a bank, 3 newspaper offices, an academy,³ the buildings of the Cooperstown Seminary and Female Collegiate Institute,⁴ a flouring mill, and various manufacturing establishments.⁵ The location of the village is pleasant and attractive from its many elegant private residences and historic associations. Pop. about 1,500.⁶ Fly Creek, (p. v.,) upon the stream of the same name, contains 3 churches, several manufactories,⁷ and 30 houses. Oaksville, (p. v.,) s. of the center, contains a church, factory, and 15 houses. Otsego Lake and Toddsville are p. offices. The first settlements were made at Cooperstown and Fly Creek, in 1784-85, by Judge Wm. Cooper, Wm. Jarvis, William Ellison, Israel Guild, John Howard, and Elisha Finney.⁸ The first religious association (Presb. and Cong.) was formed Dec. 29, 1798; Rev. Isaac Lewis was the first preacher.⁹

PITTSFIELD—was formed from Burlington, March 24, 1797. New Lisbon was taken off in 1806. It is centrally situated upon the w. line of the co. Its surface is a hilly upland, terminating in abrupt declivities upon Unadilla River, which forms its w. boundary. Wharton Creek flows across the n. w. corner, and several small tributaries of Butternut Creek flow through the s. part. The soil is generally a slaty and gravelly loam. Pittsfield, (p. o.,) on the Unadilla, contains 10 houses. The first settlements were made in the valley of the Unadilla, about 1793, by Jacob Lull, Aaron Nobles, Hubbard Goodrich, and Matthew Bennett.¹⁰ The first church (Bap.) was formed at an early period, in the s. e. part of the town. The only church (Union) now in town was organized in the e. part in 1849.

¹ Ransom Hunt, Abraham Blakesley, John Birdsall, Benjamin Cummings, Jacob Yates, Joseph Pierce, and Bernard Overlyer, were among the first settlers at Otego Village and along the river. Phineas Cook settled on the e. branch of the Otsdawa in 1800, and built there the first cloth dressing mill, in 1801. Ransom Hunt kept the first inn, and erected the first gristmill in town. Thaddeus R. Austin opened the first store.

² The census reports 6 churches; Presb., Prot. E., Bap. F. W. Bap., Christian, and M. E.

³ The first academy was formed in 1795, and the building burned down March 31, 1809, and was subsequently rebuilt. It has been sustained, and has prospered for most of the time, for half a century.

⁴ This institution was established and opened in 1854, and extensive and commodious buildings were erected at a cost of $50,000. It started with J. L. G. McKown as Principal, and with indications of permanent prosperity, but its suspended operations in 1857.

⁵ The Hope Cotton Factory, erected in 1813, with an aggregate capital of about $100,000, has through a long series of years given employment to 80 persons. After undergoing various changes in construction, machinery, and proprietorship, the establishment is still continued, with reduced operations.

⁶ J. Fenimore Cooper, the novelist, resided here; and his mansion and grounds were among the finest in Central N. Y.

⁷ At this place is a fork factory, with a capital of $75,000, employing 30 men, a pail factory; a manufactory of agricultural implements and machinery, employing a capital of $25,000; and a foundry and machine shop, employing 25 men.

⁸ John Miller, Widow Johnson, Wm. Abbott, and — Avsrell settled in 1786. The first child born was Wm. Jarvis, at Fly Creek, in 1787. The first deaths in town were those of two deserting soldiers, who were shot by order of Gen. Clinton, in 1779, before the settlements were commenced. The first school was taught at Cooperstown, by Joshua Dewey, in 1788. Wm. Ellison opened the first inn, in 1786; and Judge Wm. Cooper the first store, in 1789-90. The first mill was erected by Samuel Tubbs, at Toddsville, in 1790. In 1779, General Clinton, on his way to John Sullivan's expedition, built a dam across the outlet of the lake to raise the waters sufficiently to float down the Susquehanna the boat, containing his men and military stores. The remains of this dam are still visible. In 1784, Gen. Washington, on a journey of observation, visited the foot of Otsego Lake. In 1786, John Miller felled a large tree across the outlet to serve as a bridge. Judge Cooper removed his family from N. J. in 1790.

⁹ The census reports 10 churches; 3 M. E., 2 Presb., 2 Univ., Prot. E., Bap., and R. C.

¹⁰ Seth Harrington and Benj. Eddy settled in the e. part of the town, soon after the settlements on the Unadilla. The first school was taught by Benjamin Pendleton, at Pittsfield P. O. Matthew Bennett kept the first inn, in 1797, and Henry Randall the first store, in 1810, at the P. O. Benj. Atwell built the first mill, and the Arkwright Manufacturing Company the first cotton factory, both on the Unadilla.

PLAINFIELD—was formed from Richfield, March 25, 1799. It is the n. w. corner town of the co. Its surface is a broken and hilly upland. Unadilla River, forming the w. boundary, is bordered by steep bluffs rising to the height of 400 to 600 ft. The soil is a clay and sandy loam. Unadilla Forks, (p. v.) at the junction of the e. and w. branches of Unadilla River, contains 2 churches, a hoe factory, flouring mill, sawmill, and machine shop. Pop. 253. Plainfield Center contains a church and 15 houses; Spooners Corners is a p. o.; Leonardsville, (p. v.), on the Unadilla, in the s. part, is mostly in Madison co. The first settlement was made at and near Plainfield Center, in 1793, by Ruggles Spooner, Elias Wright, and John Kilbourne.¹ The first church (Bap.) was formed and the church erected in 1800; Rev. John Wait the first preacher.²

RICHFIELD—was formed from Otsego, April 10, 1792. Exeter and Plainfield were taken off in 1799. It is the extreme northern town of the co. Its surface is rolling and moderately hilly, with a mean elevation of 150 to 200 ft. above Schuyler Lake,—Pray and Nine Hills, on either side of the head of the lake, rising about 200 ft. higher. Schuyler Lake, in the s. e. corner, occupies a deep valley; and into it flow several small streams from the n. and w. The soil is of a diversified character, consisting of gravel, slate, clay, and sandy loam, well cultivated and productive. About 500,000 pounds of cheese are made in the town annually,—being more than double that made in any other town in the co. Richfield Springs, (p. v.) near the head of Schuyler Lake, in the n. e. corner of the town, contains 3 churches, a flouring mill, and 368 inhabitants.³ Monticello, (Richfield p. o.), near the center, contains a church and 139 inhabitants. Mayflower is a p. o.; Brighton contains about 15 houses. Settlements were made prior to the Revolution; but they were broken up during the war. The first settlers after the war were John Kimball, Richard and Wm. Pray, John Beardsley, Joseph Coats, and Seth Allen, in 1787.⁴ The first church (Prot. E.) was formed at Monticello, May 20, 1799; Rev. Daniel Nash was the first pastor.⁵

ROSEBOOM⁶—was formed from Cherry Valley, Nov. 23, 1854. It lies on the e. border of the co., n. of the center. The surface is a hilly upland, broken by the valleys of several streams. The hills are generally rounded, and their summits elevated 300 to 350 ft. above Schoharie Kil. The soil is a gravelly loam. Roseboom, (p. v.) in the n. w. part, on the line of Middlefield, contains a church and 111 inhabitants; and South Valley, (p. v.) in the s. e. part, 2 churches and 175 inhabitants. Pleasant Brook (p. o.) is a hamlet.⁷ The settlements in this town were commenced about 1800. There are 5 churches in town.⁸

SPRINGFIELD—was formed from Cherry Valley, March 3, 1797. It lies upon the n. line of the co., e. of the center. The surface is a rolling and moderately hilly upland, the hills generally rising about 200 ft. above the valleys. Mt. Wellington, e. of the head of Otsego Lake, in the s. part of the town, is 300 to 400 ft. high. Summit Lake, in the n. part, in high water discharges its waters both n. and s. The streams are small brooks. In the n. part is a deep sink, called "The Chyle," into which a considerable stream of water runs and flows through a subterranean passage to Braman's Factory, where it again appears on the surface. The sink is tunnel-shaped, 240 feet in circumference and 15 ft. deep. After heavy rains it is sometimes filled with water, which, while discharging through the orifice below, often moves round in rapid gyrations. The soil is a black and yellow loam, resting upon limestone and slate. More hops are grown in this town than in any other town in the co. Springfield Center (p. v.) contains 2 churches, a tannery, and 15

² The census reports 4 churches; 2 F. W. Bap., Presb., Bap.

³ Richfield Springs—from whi h the village derives its name—are celebrated for their medicinal properties in the cure of catarrhus diardera, and large numbers of invalids are annually attracted here. Sulphuretted hydrogen gas, 26.9 inches.

⁵ The census reports 7 churches; 3 M. E., 2 Prot. E., Presb., and Univ.

⁶ Named from Abram Roseboom, one among the earliest settlers.

⁷ Abram Roseboom erected the first sawmill and carding and fulling mill, in 1806, at Lodi; Dan'l Antisdale kept the first inn and the first store, at the same place, in 1832. The first gristmill was erected at Lodi, by Cornelius Law, in 1818.

⁸ The census reports 5 churches; 2 M. E., Evan. Luth., Christian, and Bap.

houses; and East Springfield (p. v.) a church and 20 houses. Springfield is a p. o. near the center. The first settlements were made in 1762, by John Kelly, Richard Ferguson, and James Young, from Ireland, at East Springfield; and Gustavus Klumph and Jacob Tygart, at the head of Otsego Lake. Most of these settlers were driven off during the war.¹ The first church (Bap.) was formed at an early period; Rev. — Fairman was the first preacher.²

UNADILLA—was formed from Otsego, April 10, 1792. Butternuts "Suffrage," now Milford, and "Otego," now Oneonta, were taken off in 1796, and a part of "Huntsville," now Otego, in 1822. It lies at the junction of Unadilla and Susquehanna Rivers, in the s. w. corner of the co. The surface is a rolling and hilly upland, the highest summits being 400 to 500 ft. above the valleys. Besides the two rivers, forming respectively the w. and s. boundaries, the principal stream is Sand Hill Creek, in the e. part. The soil on the river bottoms is an alluvial loam and on the uplands a slaty and gravelly loam. Unadilla, (p. v.,) on the Susquehanna, was incorp. April 2, 1827. It contains 3 churches, the Unadilla Academy, a bank, newspaper office, cotton factory, furnace, 2 tanneries, a flouring mill, sawmill, paper mill, and various other manufactories. Pop. 795. Unadilla Center (p. v.) contains a church and 15 houses. Settlements were made at Unadilla, along the valley of the Susquehanna, prior to the Revolution; of the precise date, and by whom, no records or tradition inform us.³ A conference took place between Gen. Herkimer and Brant, the Indian warrior, at Unadilla, in July, 1777. The first church (Prot. E.) was formed Nov. 1, 1809; Rev. Russell Wheeler was the first pastor.⁴

WESTFORD—was formed from Worcester, March 25, 1808. It is an interior town, lying s. e. of the center of the co. Its surface is hilly, the highest summits being 400 to 500 ft. above the valleys. The declivities are generally gradual, and mostly arable. It is drained s. by Cherry Valley and Elk Creeks. The soil is a sandy loam of good quality. Westford, (p. v.,) a little e. of the center of the town, contains 2 churches and 12 houses. Westville, (p. v.,) in the e. part, contains 3 churches and 15 houses. The first settlements were made about 1790, in the s. e. part, by Thomas Sawyer, Benjamin Chase, Oliver Salisbury, Alpheus Earl and father, Artemas, Moses, and David Howe, and Ephraim Smith,—all from Vt.⁵ The first religious association (M. E.) was formed in 1791.⁶

WORCESTER—was formed from Cherry Valley, March 3, 1797. Decatur, Maryland, and Westford were taken off in 1808. It is the s. e. corner town in the co. The surface is a hilly and broken upland. The highlands which occupy the s. part of the town descend toward the n. by an abrupt declivity 350 to 400 ft. high. This declivity forms a continuous ridge extending n. e. and s. w. through near the center of the town. The principal streams are Charlotte River and its tributaries. The soil is a sandy loam. Worcester, (p. v.,) in the n. w. part, contains 2 churches, 2 gristmills, a tannery, and 40 dwellings; East Worcester (p. v.) 2 churches, a gristmill and sawmill, and 25 dwellings; and South Worcester, (p. v.,) on Charlotte River, a church, a bank, and 20 dwellings. The first settlements were made on Schenevas Creek, from 1788 to '90. The first church (Presb.) was formed at an early period;⁷ Rev. — Bushnell was the first preacher.⁸

³ Among the early settlers were Dan'l Bissel, Abijah Beach, and Solomon Martin, at Unadilla, — Bates, — Morefield, and Peter Rogers, at Unadilla Center, Abel De Forest and Wm. Buckley, in the e. part of the town. Solomon Martin kept the first store, in 1800, and Sampson Conger the first gristmill.

⁴ The census reports 7 churches; 3 M. E., 2 Bap., Prot. E., and Presb.

⁵ Among the other early settlers were Luther Seaver and Samuel Babcock, from Mass.; the latter in March, 1793. Wm.

Chase was the first child born in town. Nathaniel Griggs kept the first inn, at Westford Village, in 1795; and David Smith, the first store, about the same time. Capt. Artemas Howe built the first gristmill, in 1794, and also erected the first sawmill.

⁶ The census reports 5 churches; 2 M. E., Cong., Prot. E., and Prot. Meth.

⁷ Among the early settlers were Silas Crippen and Henry Stever, from Columbia co., Solomon Hartwell, Uriah Bigelow, and Nathaniel Todd, from Mass., and Charles Wilder and Joseph Tainter, from Vt. Philip Crippen, son of Silas Crippen, was the first child born in town. The first school was taught by Joseph Tainter, in 1798. Isaac Puffer kept the first inn, in 1793; and Aaron Kinney, the first store, in 1798. Silas Crippen built the first gristmill, in 1790, and the first sawmill, about the same time. The first clothing and carding works were erected by Rufus Draper.

⁸ The census reports 4 churches; 2 Bap., M. E., and Evan. Luth.

WAYNE COUNTY.

THIS county¹ was formed from Ontario and Seneca, April 11, 1823. It lies upon Lake Ontario, w. of the center of the State; is centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains — sq. mi. A series of bluffs 25 to 75 ft. high extends along the lake shore; and from their summits the surface rises in gradual slopes to the lake ridge, a distance of 4 to 5 mi. This ridge is 50 to 200 ft. wide on the top, and about 200 ft. above the lake. It declines toward the e., and upon the e. border of the co. it can scarcely be traced. The declivity of the ridge upon the s. is 8 to 20 ft.; and from its foot the surface gradually slopes upward to the surface of the limestone ridge, which extends e. and w. through the co. a little n. of the center and forms the watershed between Lake Ontario and Clyde River. The summit of this ridge is 140 feet above the lake ridge, 340 feet above the lake, and is about 3 mi. wide. It is highest upon the w. border of the co., and gradually declines toward the e.² From its southern edge the surface gradually declines to Clyde River and slopes upward from the river to the s. line of the co. South of the limestone ridge are numerous drift ridges extending n. and s. and from one-fourth to one and a half miles in length. The declivities are usually very steep, and the summits 40 to 100 ft. above the surrounding surface. They usually end in an abrupt declivity toward the n., but gradually decline toward the s. They are composed of clay, sand, and gravel, and seem to be deposits from great currents of water. Considerable marshy land extends along Clyde and Seneca Rivers, and also through the co. n. of the lake ridge.

Ganargwa, or Mud Creek, enters the s. w. corner of the co. from Ontario, flows in an irregular but generally easterly course to Lyons, where it unites with the Canandaigua Outlet and forms Clyde River,³ which continues eastward to the e. bounds of the co., where it discharges its waters into Seneca River. These streams receive from the n. West Red Creek, East Red Creek, and Black Creek, and from the s. numerous small brooks. The streams flowing into Lake Ontario are Bear, Deer, Davis, and Salmon Creeks; First, Second, and Third Creeks, flowing into Sodus Bay, Thomas, Wolcott, and Big and Little Red Creeks. The indentations upon Lake Ontario are Great Sodus, East, Port, and Blind Sodus Bays. Great Sodus Bay forms an excellent harbor. Crusoe Lake, in the s. e. corner, is the only considerable body of water. The streams, in their course through the drift deposits and lake ridge, have usually worn deep ravines.

The lowest rock in the co. is the Medina sandstone,⁴ appearing upon the lake and in the ravines near it. It occupies a strip with an average width of 2 mi., widest at the w. Next above this is the Clinton group of limestone and shales, extending to the foot of the limestone ridge. Next above is the Niagara limestone, forming the summit ridge and occupying a strip about 3 mi. in width. South of this is the Onondaga salt group of red and green shales and gypsum, extending to the s. border and occupying nearly one-half of the co. The rocks are mostly covered by thick deposits of drift, and are only exposed in the ravines of the streams. Shells, marl, and muck are found in large quantities in the marshy regions. Weak brine and sulphur springs are found in various localities in the Medina sandstone and the red shales of the Onondaga salt group.

The soil derived from the drift deposits is generally a sandy or gravelly loam, with an occasional intermixture of clay. The soil along the lake shore, principally derived from the disintegration of Medina sandstone, is a reddish, sandy loam. At the foot of the mountain ridge, both n. and s., is a strip of very productive clay loam. In the valley of Clyde River the soil is principally a gravelly loam and alluvium. The marsh lands, when drained, are covered deep with a rich vegetable mold, which develops into the most fertile soil in the co.

Agriculture forms the leading pursuit. The branches, in the order of importance, are grain raising, stock growing, dairying, and wool growing. Fruit is extensively cultivated, and is rapidly

² This peculiar formation is accounted for by the theory that the low regions through the n. and central parts of the co. were once covered by the waters of the lake, and that the limestone ridge was a long bar or point extending into the lake from the w.

³ Named by Wm. McNab, a Scotchman. At an early day it was navigable as far as Lyons, and was a link in the great chain of Western travel.

⁴ This stone is extensively quarried for building stone. It is soft when first taken from the quarry, but hardens upon exposure to the atmosphere.

becoming one of the most important agricultural products. Few counties in the State surpass this in the quality or quantity of apples and peaches annually produced. A strip of land bordering upon Lake Ontario, and extending from Niagara River to the Oswego, seems peculiarly adapted to the cultivation of apples and peaches, and is rapidly becoming one of the most important fruit-growing regions in the State. In Wayne co. $25,000 worth of dried fruit is annually prepared. Peppermint and tobacco are raised along the valley of Mud Creek.

The county seat is located at the village of Lyons, near the center of the co. The courthouse is a fine cut stone building, fronting Church St. It has an Ionic portico, and is surmounted by a large dome.¹ The jail is a commodious stone building, in the w. part of the village. It contains rooms for the jailer's residence, and is one of the best arranged and conducted establishments of the kind in the State. The county clerk's office is a fireproof building, fronting Pearl St., a little s. of the courthouse. The poorhouse is situated upon a farm of 130 acres $1\frac{1}{2}$ mi. w. of the courthouse. The average number of inmates is 67, supported at a weekly cost of \$1.55 each. A school is taught throughout the year. The farm yields a revenue of \$1,400. The buildings are insufficient for the accommodation of the inmates; but the institution seems to be well arranged and well kept.

Six weekly newspapers are now published in the co.²

The Erie Canal extends through the s. tier of towns; and along its course are the most populous and thriving villages of the co.³ The direct branch of the N. Y. Central R. R. between Syracuse and Rochester extends, along the course of the canal, through Savannah, Galen, Lyons, ¹ The first courthouse was a brick edifice, erected soon after the organization of the co. It was superseded, in 1854-55, by the present structure, built of Lockport limestone. The building committee of the present courthouse were John Adams, Stephen Marshall, and F. B. Corwell. The first officers of the co. were John S. Talmadge, First Judge; Hugh Jameson, Sheriff; Wm. H. Adams, District Attorney; Isaiah J. Richardson, Co. Clerk; and John S. Talmadge, Surrogate.

² The Palmyra Register, the first paper published in the co., was commenced Nov. 26, 1817, by Timothy C. Strong. It was continued under various titles until 1823, when it was published as

The Western Farmer and Canal Advocate, and passed into the hands of Pomeroy Thacher, who changed its name to The Wayne Sentinel, under which title it is now published by Wm. N. Cole.

The Lyons Republican was commenced Aug. 3, 1821, by Geo. Lewis. It was discontinued in Feb. 1822.

The Lyons Advertiser was commenced May 31, 1822, by Hiram T. Day. It underwent various changes in name and publishers. It was published as

The Wayne County Gazette, by Ephraim J. Whitney; as

The Lyons Argus, by E. J. & W. W. Whitney;

The Lyons Gazette, by Barker & Chapman;

The Wayne Co. Patriot, and as

The Western Argus, by Chapman & Chapin and Ashley & Co.; and as

The Western Argus, by Charles Poncher. In 1841 it was changed to

The Lyons Gazette, and was published by — Russell from 1849 to 1853, when it was sold to Wm. Van Camp, and in 1855 or '56 it was merged in The Wayne Democratic Press.

The Palmyra Freeman was commenced March 11, 1828, by D. D. Stephenson. It soon after passed into the hands of J. A. Hadley, who removed the press to Lyons and changed the name to

The Countryman. Myron Holley became connected with it as associate editor. In 1831 it was suspended for a time, and afterward resumed as

The Lyons American, by Myron Holley. In 1835 it was published by Wm. H. Childs. In 1836 it was removed to Clyde and published as

The Clyde Gazette, by Deania Cord, until 1838.

The Reflector, mo., was commenced at Palmyra in 1828 by O. Dogberry, jr. It was discontinued in 1830.

The Newark Republican was commenced at Newark in Nov. 1829, by Jeremiah O. Balch. It was discontinued in 1831.

The Clyde Standard was published about 6 mo. in 1830 by E. P. Moon.

The Western Spectator and Wayne Advertiser was commenced at Palmyra Jan. 9, 1830, by Luther Howard and Erastus Shepard. In 1831 its name was changed to

The Spectator and Anti-Masonic Star. It was removed to Rochester the same year and merged in The Anti-Masonic Enquirer.

The Palmyra Whig was commenced in Feb. 1838, by Wm. N. and Saml. Cole. It was removed to Lyons by Wm. N. Cole, and its name changed to

The Wayne County Whig. In the fall of 1850 it passed into the hands of Willis & Gavitt. In the spring of 1852 they sold it to Silas A. Andrews, who continued it a few months and sold it to Wm. Van Marter; and in

Nov. of the same year it passed into the hands of Rodney L. Adams. In Sept. 1856, its name was changed to The Lyons Republican; and April 30, 1859, Mr. Adams sold it to W. T. Tinsley & Co., its present publishers.

The Wayne Standard was commenced at Newark in June, 1838, by David M. Keeler. In Aug. 1839, it was sold to Gen. Barney T. Partridge, J. P. Bartle, and S. Culver, who changed its name to

The New Aegis, Stephen Culver, editor. In Jan. 1840, it was sold to — Norton, and discontinued in May following. In July following it was revived as

The Wayne Standard, by D. M. Keeler, and published until 1843, when it passed into the hands of H. L. Winants, and in about 1 year was discontinued. It was revived soon after, as

The Newark Courier, by David Fairfield. It was successively published by Wm. K. Creague and B. F. Jones as

The Newark Journal; and in 1854 by G. D. A. Bridgman, who changed its name to

The Newark Whig. In Sept. 1856, it passed into the hands of C. F. White, who changed its name to

The Newark Weekly Courier, and still continues its publication.

The Palmyra Courier was commenced May 28, 1843, by Frederic Morley. It passed into the hands of J. C. Bennett, who changed its name to

The Palmyra Democrat. It was published again as

The Palmyra Courier, by — Benedict, from about 1851 to '54. Mr. Benedict sold it to — Beebe, and, in a short time afterward it passed into the hands of A. E. Averill, who changed its name to

The Palmyra American, and subsequently again to The Palmyra Courier, under which name Mr. Averill still continues its publication.

The Clyde Eagle was commenced in 1844 by B. Frazee. It was successively published by — Dryer, Stephen Saliuburg, and in 1847 by Rev. Chas. G. Acly and William Tompkins, who changed its name to

The Clyde Telegraph. It afterward passed into the hands of Rev. W. W. Storiker, and soon after to Wm. R. Fowle, and in a short time it was discontinued.

The Clyde Industrial Times was commenced in Feb. 1850, by Payn & Smith. It soon passed into the hands of Jos. A. Payn. Its name was changed in 1851 to

The Clyde Weekly Times, under which title it is now published, by Joseph A. Payn.

The Northern Methodist Protestant was published by an association at Clyde in 1849; Rev. W. W. Storiker, editor.

The Wayne Banner was published at Wolcott in 1850 by John McIntyre, and was removed to Clyde, and merged in The Industrial Times on the first issue of the latter paper.

The Farming Mirror was commenced at Lyons in July, 1853, by R. L. Adams & Co., and was published 1 year.

The Wayne Democratic Press was commenced at Palmyra in 1855. It was removed to Lyons the same year, and is now published by Wm. Van Camp.

Arcadia, Palmyra, and Macedon. A ship canal¹ route and a R. R. route² have been surveyed, connecting the Erie Canal and Central R. R. with Lake Ontario.

The western 9 towns in this co. belonged to the Pulteney Estate; the e. part, including Savannah, Galen, and portions of Wolcott and Butler, constituted a portion of the Military Tract. The intermediate portion, except the s. 3 tiers of lots in Rose, were compensation lands granted to the Pulteney Estate for the gore between the old and new pre-emption lines. The earliest white inhabitants were hunters and trappers. The first permanent settlements were made in 1789, at Palmyra, under the auspices of General John Swift, agent of a company of settlers from Conn.; and at Lyons, under Charles Williamson, agent for the Pulteney Estate.³ From 1790 to 1794, colonies came in from R. I., Long Island, and Maryland.⁴ The settlements did not progress with great rapidity for several years, owing to the diseases which prevailed. The fear of Indian hostilities and of British invasion during the War of 1812 greatly retarded settlement. On the return of peace, settlers began to arrive in considerable numbers, principally from New England and Eastern N. Y. The completion of the Erie Canal gave a new impulse to immigration; and in a few years the flourishing villages of Lyons, Clyde, Palmyra, and Newark were built up along its course. The N. Y. Central R. R., built through the co. in 1852-53, greatly benefitted the co. and enhanced the value of the lands.

The most notable of the later incidents in the co. have been the rise of Mormonism in Palmyra,⁵ and the commencement of spiritual rappings in Arcadia.⁶

ARCADIA—was formed from Lyons, Feb. 15, 1825. It lies on the s. border of the co., a little w. of the center. Its surface is a rolling region, broken by drift ridges. Mud Creek flows e. through the town, n. of the center, and receives several small streams as tributaries. The soil is a sandy, gravelly loam, mixed with clay on the hills. Gypsum is found in the s. w., and marl in the center. Newark, (p. v.), including Arcadia, (p. v.), in the s. part, on the canal, was incorp. July 21, 1853, as Newark. It contains 7 churches, a bank, flouring mill, tannery, 3 furnaces, and several manufactories. It is a flourishing canal village and a station upon the N. Y. C. R. R. Pop. 2,042. Fairville, (p. v.), about 5 mi. n., contains 1 church, a tannery, a limited amount of manufactures, and 159 inhabitants. Marbletown, near the s. e. corner, contains a church and 10 houses. Jessups Corners and Hydeville are hamlets. Settlement was commenced in 1791, by Joseph Winters and B. Franklin.⁷ The first church (M. E.) was organized in 1805. J. Wesley Benton was the first settled minister, in 1806.⁸ A family named Fox, residing at Hydesville, in Arcadia, first heard the mysterious sounds known as the "rappings" on the night of March 31, 1849. Investigations were made in regard to the origin of the raps, but nothing definite was settled upon. The family soon after removed to Rochester, the "raps" accompanying them; and hence the name "Rochester Rappings." A series of investigations was instituted, and the matter became public, some claiming for it a spiritual origin, but the great majority pronouncing it a humbug or delusion. From this source modern spiritualism originated.

BUTLER—was formed from Wolcott, Feb. 26, 1826. It is the center town on the e. border of the co. Its surface is diversified, level in the s. e. and rising into ridges in the n. w. The highest point is Armstrong Hill. The principal stream is Wolcott Creek, which rises in the n. e. and, flowing in a circuitous course, leaves the town near the n. w. corner. The soil in the valleys is a gravelly loam, and on the hills it is generally clay, with a tenacious subsoil. Lime is manufactured in the n. part to a limited extent. South Butler, (p. v.), on the s. line, contains 5 churches, a classical school, several manufactories, and about 400 inhabitants. West Butler (p. o.) contains 10 houses; Westbury, (p. v.), in the n. e. corner, partly in the town of Victory,

² The Sodus Point & Southern R. R. was incorp. in April, 1852. The road was to extend from Sodus Bay to Newark. The route has been surveyed, but no work has been done. A survey has also been made for a R. R. from Clyde to Sodus Bay.

⁶ See p. —.

⁷ Gilbert Howell and Paul Reese came in in 1795; Samuel Soverhill in 1798; Humphrey Sherman, Reuben Starke, and John Miller, from Long Island, in 1800; and Ebenezer Smith soon after. The Lueke came in from Columbia co. in 1806. Jacob, Philip, and Isaac Lusk purchased 1 sq. mi., which is now occupied by the village of Newark. Caleb Tibbetts, Stephen Aldridge, Henry Crotge, and Cooper Culver settled in 1807; and Dr. A. Hyde, in 1810. The first death was that of a child of B. Franklin, in 1792; the first marriage, that of — Hess and Amy Tibbetts, in 1798. Stephen Aldridge kept the first inn, and J. P. Bartlett the first store.

⁸ There are 10 churches in town; 2 Meth. Prot., M. E., Presb., Prot. E., Union, Ref. Prot. D., Bap., R. C., and Christian.

(Cayuga co.,) 1 church and 20 houses. Butler Center is a hamlet. The first settlement was commenced in 1802.¹ The first settled minister was — Mills.² Rev. Antoinette L. Brown, the first woman ever regularly ordained in the State, was settled for several years over the Cong. Church at South Butler.

GALEN³—was formed from Junius, (Seneca co.,) Feb. 14, 1812. Savannah was taken off in 1824. It lies on the s. border of the co., e. of the center. Its surface is hilly in the e., but more level in the w. In the s. w. is a large tract of swamp land. Clyde River⁴ flows through the town from w. to e. in a circuitous course. The soil is a rich, sandy and gravelly loam. Clyde,⁵ (p. v.,) near the center, on Clyde River, was incorp. May 2, 1835. The canal passes through the village; it is also a station on the N. Y. C. R. R. It contains 6 churches, a high school,⁶ 2 banks, a newspaper office, a glass factory, and several other manufactories.⁷ Pop. 1,856. Marengo, (p. v.,) in the s. part, contains a church and 20 houses; Lock Berlin, (p. v.,) in the w. part, on the canal, a church and 30 houses. Angells Corners, in the s. e., and Meadville, in the e., are hamlets. The first settlement was commenced by Laomi Bedell, in 1800.⁸ The first church (Presb.) was organized July 8, 1814.⁹ Borings for salt water in the vicinity of Clyde have been made, but without success. One of the wells emitted inflammable gas: the well was soon filled up.

HURON—was formed from Wolcott, as "Port Bay," Feb. 25, 1826. Its name was changed March 17, 1834. It lies on Lake Ontario, e. of the center of the co. A part of Great Sodus Bay lies in the n. w. corner. East Bay, in the n., and a part of Port Bay, in the n. e., extend into the town. Its surface is rolling, with a general northern inclination. In the w. and n. w., near Great Sodus Bay, are several tracts of swamp lands. The lake shore rises in a series of bluffs, the highest of which—Chimney Bluff—is 175 ft. above the lake, and Bay Bluff 120 ft. Several small streams flow n. through the town, the principal of which is Mudge Creek, which empties into East Bay. The soil is a sandy and gravelly loam, intermixed with clay in the s. North Huron (p. v.) contains 2 churches, a saw and grist mill, and 40 houses; South Huron (Huron p. o.) 1 church, a townhouse, and 20 houses. Port Glasgow (p. o.) is a hamlet, at the head of sloop navigation on Great Sodus Bay. The first settlement was commenced by Peregrine Fitzhugh and Wm. Helmus, and some other families from Md., in 1796.¹⁰ The first church (Presb.) was organized in 1813.¹¹

LYONS—was formed from Sodus, March 1, 1811. Arcadia was taken off in 1825. It lies on the s. border of the co., a little e. of the center. Its surface is a moderately rolling region, broken by sand ridges. The Canandaigua Outlet from the s., and Mud Creek from the w., join in the s. part and form Clyde River. The soil is a sandy and gravelly loam, with marl upon the creek bottom lands. Lyons, (p. v.,) on the canal, at the junction of Canandaigua Outlet and Mud Creek, was incorp. April 18, 1854. It contains the co. buildings, 7 churches, 2 banks, 2 newspaper offices, a union school,¹² and several manufactories,¹³ and it is an important r. r. station. Pop. 3,221. Alloway, (p. v.,) in the s. part, on Canandaigua Outlet, contains a church, a grist-mill, and 30 houses. The first settlement was commenced in 1789, by Nicholas and Wm. Stansell and John Featherly.¹⁴ They settled, with their families, (12 persons in all,) a half mile s. of the

² There are 7 churches in town; 2 M. E., 2 Christian, Bap., Cong., and 2d Adv.

³ This was Township No. 27 of the Military Tract, and received its name from having been appropriated to the Medical Department.

⁴ Named by Wm. McNab, agent of the Hornby Estate, Geneva.

⁵ This location was originally called "Block House," from a blockhouse built here by Indian traders at an early day. It was used during the Revolution by Tories as a "station" in smuggling goods from Canada via Sodus Bay. It was burned previous to 1800. The village was first called "Lauraville," from Henrietta Laura, Countess of Bath, daughter and heiress of Sir Wm. Pulteney. Its name was changed to Clyde in 1818.

⁶ It is a union school, formed from Districts 14 and 17. Incorp. April 24, 1834, with special privileges. This was one of the earliest union schools in Western New York. The school employs 6 teachers.

⁷ 2 large distilleries, 2 steam flouring mills, 2 steam sawmills, 2 furnaces and shops for manufacturing agricultural implements, a large cooperage, 1 brewery, 2 malt houses, and a tannery.

⁸ Among the other early settlers were Nicholas King, David Godfrey, and Isaac Mills, with their families, from Orange co., N. Y., on Lot 70, in the s. w. part of the town, in 1801; — Creagher, from Md., Elias Austin, — Payne, and Capt. John Sherman, in 1804. The first birth was that of Isaac Godfrey, in Feb. 1802; the first death, that of David Godfrey, accidentally killed, Oct. 13, 1801. The first marriage was that of Jabez Reynolds and Polly Mills, in 1805. James B. West kept the first store; Maj. Fred. A. De Zenz built the first saw and grist mill, in 1818.

Its surface is broken by drift ridges in the n., and is low and marshy in the s.; about one-third of the s. part is a woodland marsh, known as Crusoe Island. Seneca River forms the s. part of the e. boundary. Crusoe Lake is a small, shallow body of water near the center; its outlet, Crusoe Creek, flows into Seneca River. The soil in the n. is a sandy and gravelly loam, and in the s. it is principally composed of muck and shell marl.⁹ A tract of about 1,900 acres in the s. e. part is an open marsh, producing coarse grass. Savannah Depot, (Savannah p. o.) near the center, a station upon the N. Y. C. R. R., contains 20 houses. The first settlement was made by Elias Converse and Joseph Mozier, in 1812.¹⁰ The first preacher was Rev. — Wiers, (Bap.) There is no church in town.

SODUS¹¹—was formed in Jan. 1789. Williamson was taken off in 1802, and Lyons in 1811. It is the central town on the n. border of the co., and is bounded n. by Lake Ontario. A part of Great Sodus Bay lies in the n. e. corner. Its surface in the n. part is mostly level, with a gentle inclination toward the lake. A ridge 140 to 190 ft. higher than the surface of the lake passes through near the center; and s. of this the surface is broken by several ridges extending n. and s. The lake shore varies in height from a low swamp to bluffs 70 ft. high. Second and Salmon Creeks are the principal streams. The soil in the n. part is a clay and sandy loam, and in the s. gravelly loam. The manufacture of lime is extensively carried on in the s. part; and red sandstone is quarried in the s. w. Red oxid of iron (argillaceous ore) is found 2 mi. w. of Sodus Point. Salt was manufactured in 1831

² The settlers that followed in 1790-91-92, as near as can be ascertained, were Lemuel Spear, David Jackways, James Galloway, Jonathan Willet, the Mattisoes, Gideon Durfee sr., and his sons, —Gideon, Edward, Job, Pardon, Stephen, and Lemuel, —Isaac Springer, Wm. James, and Thos. Rogers, John Russell, Nathan Harris, David Wilcox, Joel Foster, Abraham Foster, Elias Reeves, and Luther Sanford. In 1791 "The Long Island Co." through Elias Reeves, A. Foster, Wm. Hopkins, and Luther Sanford, purchased 5,500 acres near East Palmyra, at 25cts. per acre; and the first wheat harvested sold for 25cts. per bushel. The first birth was that of a child of Webb Harwood, in 1790; the first marriage, that of Wm. Wilcox and Ruth Durfee; and the first death, that of David White. Ira Selby taught the first school, in 1793. Dr. Azel Ensworth kept the first inn, and Samuel Colt the first store, at an early day. Jonah Howell built the first mill, 1 mi. e. of the village.

³ The census reports 10 churches in town; 2 Presb., 2 M. E., Prot. E., Bap., Christian, Cong., Friends, and R. C.

⁵ There is a fall at this place, on Thomas Creek, of 22 ft.

⁶ Among the other early settlers were Milton Salisbury, — Crafts, John Sherman, Joel Bishop, sr., Lott Stuart, Aaron Shepard, Chas. Thomas, — Pomeroy, and — Bannister. The first birth was that of a child of Mr. Salisbury, in 1812; the first marriage, that of Hosea Gillet and Hannah Burnham, in Jan. 1813; and the first death, a child of Harvey Gillet, in 1812. Sally Bishop taught the first school, in 1813; and Oliver Wetmore built the first sawmill, in 1812.

⁷ There are 3 churches in town; Presb., M. E., and Bap.

and '32. Sodus (p. v.) contains 3 churches, the Sodus Academy, and about 300 inhabitants. Sodus Point, (p. v.), on the lake, w. of the entrance to the bay, is a U. S. port of entry in the Genesee District. It has a lighthouse, a church, a steam sawmill, and about 200 inhabitants. Sodus Center (p. v.) contains a church, foundery, carding mill, grist and saw mill, and 40 houses; Alton (p. v.) a church and 30 houses; South Sodus (p. v.) a church and 30 houses; and Joy (p. v.) a church, shingle factory, and 30 houses. The first settlement was made in 1794, under the auspices of Charles Williamson, agent of the Pulteney Estate.¹ Mr. Williamson caused a road to be cut through from Palmyra to Sodus Point in the spring of 1794. During the summer the town was surveyed, an extensive city plan laid out between Salmon Creek and the Point, and within two years mills were erected on Salmon Creek. A tavern was built at an expense of $5,000, a pleasure yacht was placed upon the bay; and in roads, surveys, buildings, &c., over $20,000 was expended. Thos. Little and — Moffat were the local agents of Mr. Williamson. Of all those connected with these premature improvements, but few remained after they were completed. Elijah Brown was an early settler, 4 mi. w. of the Point, and Amos Richards, 7 mi. w. Ammi Ellsworth came from Conn. in 1801, and settled near the Point. Dr. Wm. Nixon Loomis settled at the Point. He built mills and a forge. A daughter of his is Mrs. Elizabeth Ellet, author of the "Women of the Revolution," and "Domestic History of the Revolution." Col. Peregrine Fitzhugh came from Md. in 1803, with his family and slaves,—over 40 persons in all. Dr. Thos. G. Lawson, an Englishman, settled 1 mi. from the Point, in 1803. After expending considerable money in attempting to form a settlement, he abandoned the enterprise in 1805. In 1799, besides those already mentioned, there were 25 families in town on roads leading to Palmyra and Lyons. The first church (Bap.) was organized in 1805; Elder Seba Norton was the first settled minister.²

WALWORTH³—was formed from Ontario, April 20, 1829. It is the central town on the w. border of the co. Its surface is a high, rolling upland, the ridges being the most elevated land in the co. The Niagara limestone crops out in the n. part, marking its course by a hard, stony surface some rods in width. It is drained n. by several small streams, and s. e. by tributaries of Red Creek. The soil is a rich, sandy loam. Walworth, (p. v.), near the s. e. corner, contains 3 churches, the Walworth Academy, and 230 inhabitants. In the immediate vicinity is an extensive nursery.⁴ West Walworth, (p. v.), in the s. w. part, contains a church and 115 inhabitants. The first settlement was begun about 1800.⁵ The first church (M. E.) was organized previous to 1809.⁶

WILLIAMSON⁷—was formed from Sodus, Feb. 20, 1802. Ontario was taken off in 1807, and Marion in 1825. It lies on the n. border of the co., w. of the center, Lake Ontario forming its n. boundary. Its surface is level in the n., with a gentle inclination toward the lake. In the s. it rises into low ridges. It is drained by Salmon Creek and a few small streams that flow n. into the lake. The soil is a sandy, gravelly loam, mixed with clay near the lake shore. Pultneyville,⁸ (p. v.) on the lake shore, a U. S. port of entry in the Genesee District, contains a church, gristmills, a steam sawmill, and about 450 inhabitants; Williamson, (p. v.), s. of the center, contains 2 churches, a steam flouring mill, and about 300 inhabitants; East Williamson contains 2 churches and 20 houses. The first settlement was made in 1803, by Wm. Waters.⁹ The census reports 8 churches in town.¹⁰

WOLCOTT¹¹—was formed from Junius, (Seneca co.,) March 24, 1807. Butler, Huron, and Rose were taken off in 1826. It is the n. e. corner town of the co., Lake Ontario forming its n.

² The census reports 11 churches in town; 4 M. E., 2 Prot. E., 2 Presb., Bap., Christian, Cong.

³ Named from Chancellor Walworth.

⁴ This nursery—established in 1840—occupies 75 acres, and produces annually 300,000 trees, mostly sent to New England, N. J., Md., and Va.

⁵ Among the other early settlers were George Millet, in 1802, Daniel Dougless and George Randolph, at West Walworth, Dr. Hurlbut Crittenden, in 1804, Deacon Gideon Hasset, James and Jonathan Hill, Capt. Gilbert, — Hinckley, and John and Marshall Chamberlain. The first death was that of — Green, killed by the fall of a tree, in 1806. The first store was kept by Thomas E. Kempsholl.

⁶ There are 5 churches in town; 2 Bap., M. E., Cong., and F. W. Bap.

⁷ Named from Charles Williamson, the first agent of the Pulteney Estate.

⁸ Named from Sir Wm. Pulteney. On the morning of June 13, 1813, Com. Sir James Yeo, with a British force, made a descent upon this place. Gen. J. Swift, who commanded the Americans, surrendered, with the stipulation that private property and persons should be respected. Most of the U. S. stores had been previously removed to a place of safety. The British had 2 killed and 3 wounded.

⁹ Capt. Sam'l Throop, Jeremiah Selby, John Holmes, and Alpheus Curtis, came in 1806, Maj. Wm. Rogers in 1807, and Dan'l Poppins, Timothy Smith, — Denning, Andrew Connell, Sam'l Ledyard, and Jacob W. Hallett, soon after. The first child born was H. N. Throop, in Nov. 1807. Major Rogers kept the first inn, in 1807; Jos. Colt, the first store. Capt. Sam'l Throop and Jeremiah Selby built the first saw and grist mill.

boundary. Its surface is undulating, with a general inclination toward the lake. In several localities are tracts of low marsh land. The streams are Wolcott and Big and Little Red Creeks, and several smaller streams, which flow N. into Lake Ontario. A part of Port Bay, in the N. W., Blind Sodus Bay,¹ in the N. E., and two smaller bays, extend inland from the lake. The soil is a sandy and gravelly loam. Iron ore is found in the N. E. part. Wolcott, (p. v.), near the S. W. corner, was incorp. Feb. 24, 1852. It contains 4 churches, an academy,² 2 flouring mills, 2 sawmills, a furnace and agricultural machine shop, carding machine, and carpet and coverlet factory. Pop. 600. Red Creek, (p. v.), in the S. E. part, contains 3 churches, the Red Creek Union Academy, 2 gristmills, 3 sawmills, a woolen factory, furnace, and tannery. Pop. in 1859, 597. Furnace Village,³ in the W. part, contains a furnace, sawmill, and 12 houses. The first settlement was made by Jonathan Melvin, sen., on Lot 50, in 1805.⁴ The first settled minister was Daniel S. Buttrick.⁵

FULTON COUNTY.

This county was formed from Montgomery, April 18, 1838.¹ It lies N. of the Mohawk, E. of the center of the State. It is centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains — sq. mi. Its surface is a rolling and hilly upland, rising into a mountainous region on the N. border. The highland region is divided into three general ridges, extending N. E. and S. W. The most eastern of these ridges, occupying the S. E. corner, consists of rounded drift hills of moderate elevation, bounded by gradual slopes, the highest summits being about 400 ft. above the Mohawk. The second ridge extends through near the center of the co. and occupies a wide space along the N. border. The declivities in the N. are usually steep and rocky; and the highest summits are 800 to 1,000 ft. above the Mohawk. The third ridge, similar in character to the second, extends through the W. part of the co. Its highest summits are 1,200 ft. above the Mohawk.

Sacondaga² River flows S. E. through the N. E. corner of the co. It receives from the W. Mayfield Creek, which has for its tributaries Fondasbush and Frenchmans Creeks. The Chuctenunda flows through the S. E. corner. The Cayadutta flows S. W. through near the center, its valley separating the central from the eastern ranges of hills. Garoga Creek flows S., a little W. of the center, its valley separating the western and central ranges of hills. Stony Creek, a tributary of the Sacondaga, flows N. E. in the northerly continuation of the Garoga Valley, and breaks through the central ranges of hills. East Canada Creek forms the greater part of the W. boundary of the co., receiving as tributaries North, Fish, and Crum Creeks. The other streams are branches of the foregoing or of the Mohawk. They are mostly rapid streams, frequently interrupted by falls, and affording an ample supply of water-power.

Among the hills in the N. part of the co. are many of the small lakes forming a characteristic feature of the wilderness region of Northern N. Y. Along the Sacondaga, near the mouth of Mayfield Creek, and occupying portions of Northampton, Broadalbin, and Mayfield, is an extensive swamp or vlaie, said to contain an area of 13,000 acres.³

The greater part of the surface of the co. is covered with drift deposits. The southern part of the central and W. ridges are principally composed of calciferous sand rock; and farther N. Potsdam sandstone and gneiss appear and cover a considerable portion of the surface. Black River limestone, Trenton limestone, and Utica slate are also found in different localities. Quarries of gneiss and of birdseye limestone have been opened in Johnstown and Mayfield. An excellent building stone is found in all the N. part of the co.

The soil in the S. part and along the valleys is mostly a gravelly and clayey loam, derived from the drift deposits. It is well adapted to pasturage, and in the most favorable localities produces good crops of grain. A large portion of the N. part is too rough and broken for profitable cultivation.⁴ The manufactures consist principally of leather, lumber, and buckskin gloves and mittens.⁵

The co. seat is located at Johnstown.⁶ The courthouse is a brick building in the N. part of the village, erected in 1772, by Sir Wm. Johnson, for the courthouse of "Tryon" co.⁷ The jail, a stone building, situated in the S. E. part of the village, contains the usual jail accommodations, and the residence of the jailer. The clerk's office is a fireproof brick building, in the vicinity of the courthouse. The poorhouse is situated upon a farm of 9 $\frac{1}{4}$ acres at West Bush, 6 mi. N. of the

² This name is said to signify "Drowned Lands," from the great marsh which lies along its course.

⁴ The mountainous portion in the N. part of this co. forms the S. extremity of the Great Northern wilderness of N. Y. The settlements are very sparse, and are confined to the narrow valleys of the streams. The hills are covered with a light growth of forest trees; and when once cleared, the soil is too light and thin to produce any thing else.

⁵ More buckskin gloves and mittens are manufactured in this

co. than in all other parts of the U. S. The center of the manufacture is at Groversville, though it is largely carried on at Johnstown and other villages. Work is given out to families through a large section of country, forming the most productive branch of labor in the co.

⁶ The first officers of "Tryon co." were Gny Johnson, First Judge; John Butler and Peter Congue, Judges; and Sir John Johnson, Kt., Daniel Claus, John Wells, and Jellis Fonda, Assistant Judges. The first co. court was organized Sept. 8, 1772. Upon the organization of Fulton co., the first co. officers were Donald McIntyre, First Judge; John W. Cady, Dist. Attorney; T. A. Stoutenburg, Clerk; David J. McMartin, Sheriff; and Archibald McFarland, Sheriff-at-Large.

⁷ The Johnson family retained a lien upon the building until annulled by the forfeiture of their estates.

courthouse. The average number of inmates is 50, supported at an average cost of $1.25 per week each. The children attend the public school. The farm yields a revenue of $200.

Four weekly newspapers are now published in the co.¹

The history of this co. is intimately connected with that of Sir William Johnson and his family. At the age of 21, Johnson came to America as agent of his uncle, Sir Peter Warren, and located in the Mohawk Valley. He soon became identified with the interests of that section of the colony, and a zealous promoter of its prosperity. He was appointed Indian Agent, learned the language of the natives, adopted with facility their habits when it suited his interests, and gradually acquired an ascendancy over these people which his official relations served to strengthen. His successful management in the expedition to Lake George in 1755 gave him a high position in the esteem of the home Government, and secured him, as an especial favor, the grant of a large tract of land N. of the Mohawk, as a direct gift from the king. He was also honored with knighthood. His first residence was fixed at what is still known as Fort Johnson, on the Mohawk, in the town of Amsterdam; but about 1761 he removed to a new mansion, near the village of Johnstown, still standing, and known as Johnson Hall. At this time he possessed an estate that had few rivals in extent and value in the country; his tenants were numerous and attached to his interests, and the prospects of future greatness to his family were most flattering. On the approach of the Revolution he is supposed to have been liberally inclined; but his duty to the Government, whose offices he held, forbade him from favoring the cause of the colonies, while his attachment to his neighbors and the inhabitants of the colony rendered the thought of any measures tending to their ruin extremely painful to his feelings. It was apparent that a struggle between the mother country and the colonies must ensue; but, with the presence that freshadowed the significant purpose of his mind, he intimated to his friends that he should never live to see it, and he besought the British Government to appoint his son to his office,—that of Indian Agent. He died suddenly at Johnson Hall, on the afternoon of June 24, 1774, at the age of nearly sixty years.²

- ¹ The Johnstown Gazette was published in 1796.
The Montgomery Advertiser was published at Johnstown in 1796 by Jacob Dostader. It soon passed into the hands of Jas. Smith, and subsequently into the hands of Alvin Romeyn and Clark. It was afterward continued several years by David Holden.
The Montgomery Republican was commenced at Johnstown in Aug. 1806, by Wm. Child. His brother, Asa Child, soon after became editor. In 1823 Wm. Hollard became owner, and published it 2 years. Peter Mix continued it until 1834, when the office was burned. The paper was revived by him; and in Nov. 1836, the office was again burned, and the publication of the paper was discontinued.
The Montgomery Intelligencer was commenced in 1806, and discontinued in 1807.
The Montgomery Monitor was commenced at Johnstown in 1808 by Robbins & Andrews. It soon passed into the hands of Russell Prentice, who sold it in 1824 to Ducoac and Daniel McDonald. In 1825 they removed it to Fonda, thence to Canajoharie, and finally to Schoharie.
The Johnstown Herald was removed from Amsterdam in 1824 by Philip Reynolds. It had been published there as the "Mohawk Herald." In 1837 it was removed to Fonda and published as the "Fonda Herald."
The Montgomery Freeman was published at Johnstown by Yates & Co.
The Northern Banner was commenced at Union Mills, Broadalbin, by John Clark. It was removed in a few months to Johnstown and published as
The Northern Banner and Montgomery Democrat. In 1837 its name was changed to The Montgomery Republican. It was soon afterward sold to Wm. S. Hawley, who changed its name in 1838 to The Fulton County Democrat. In 18— it passed into the hands of A. T. Norton; and in 1842 it was purchased by Walter N. Clark, its present publisher.
The Christian Palladium, semi-mo., was published in 1836 by Joseph Badger. It was removed to Albany in 1846 or '47.
The Fulton County Republican was commenced at Johnstown in 1838 by Darius Wells. In 1840 Alexander U. Wells became proprietor; and in 1842 he sold it to George Henry, its present publisher.
The Garland, semi-mo., was published at Union Mills by Wm. Clark. It was afterward issued a short time at Johnstown.
The Literary Journal was published at Kingsboro' in 1843 by S. R. Sweet.
The Johnstown American was commenced in Jan. 1856, by N. J. Johnson. In Feb. 1857, it was sold to J. D. Houghtaling. In April, 1858, its name was changed to The Johnstown Independent, under which title it is now published.

The Gloversville Standard was commenced in Sept. 1856, by W. H. Case, and is still published.

² It has been the general belief that Sir William ended his own life; and there is not much doubt but that he hung himself in his garden. His gardener, who found him and took him down, intimated, to his old age, facts which confirm this belief; and his will—dated Jan. 27, 1774—indicates that the near approach of death was a familiar thought, as his burial was an avowal for which he gave the most minute directions. In this instrument—after commending his soul to God, who gave it—he directs his body to be hurried to the place he had selected by the side of his wife, Catharine. He directs mourning for his housekeeper, Mary Brant, and her children, and for young Brant and William, half-breed Mohawks, and for his servants and slaves. The sachens of both Mohawk villages are to be invited to his funeral, and to receive each a black stroud blanket, crape, and gloves, which they were to receive and wear as mourners next after his family. The bearers are to have white scarf, crape, and gloves; and the whole cost of the funeral is not to exceed £300. The funeral debt is to be first paid by Sir John, out of his 3 per cent. consolidated annuities, within 6 months. He bequeathed to Peter £300, and to the other children of Mary Brant (7 in number) £100 each,—the interest to be expended on their education. To young Brant, alias Koghneghago, and William, alias Togawirunda, two Mohawk lads, £100 York currency each; to Sir John, his son, one-half of the rest of his money; and to Daniel Claus and Guy Johnson, his sons-in-law, each one-half of the remainder. He then gives his library and notes, slaves, stock, and personal estate, (certain portions excepted) to Sir John; and his landed estate is divided between his children and friends, specifically naming to each the lots they are to receive, and especially enjoining upon his children never to sell or alienate any portion of the Royal Grant, as he had received it as a free gift from the king. The legacies of his lands were Sir John and Col. Guy Johnson, Daniel Claus, each of the children of Mary Brant, and her brothers, Joseph and William, Mary McGrath, John and Warren Johnson, his brothers, and Dease, Sterling, Plunket, and Fitzimons, brothers-in-law, and John Dease, his nephew. To Robert Adame, Joseph Chew, and Wm. Byrne, old friends, and Patrick Daly, a servant, he gave the free use for life of certain lands. And he provided for the further division of his estate in case Sir John died without issue. He appointed as his executors, his son, two sons-in-law, two brothers, and Dan'l Campbell, of Schoenectady, John Butler, Jellis Fonda, Capt. Jas. Stevenson, of Albany, Dr. John Dease, Henry Frey, and Jos. Chew. The guardians of the children of Mary Brant were John Butler, Jellis Fonda, John Dease, James Stevenson, Henry Frey, and Joseph Chew. Each executor and guardian was to receive a ring, as a memento from their once sincere friend. Sir William was buried in a vault under the Episcopal church in Johnstown. About 1793 the vault was filled up; and Nov. 26, 1836, the church, with its bell and organ, (the presents of Sir William,) were burned. The spot of his burial is just outside of the present church edifice.

The active interest in the royal cause taken by Sir John Johnson and all whom he could influence, is well known. He fortified Johnson Hall late in 1775, armed the Scotch Highlanders on the Kingsborough Patent, and spread discontent among the Indian tribes under his control. His conduct could not be tolerated; and in Jan. 1776, Gen. Schuyler was sent with an army of 700 militia to disarm the tenants and to secure a strict neutrality on the part of Sir John and his friends. After several days' negotiation, a feigned acquiescence was received, and on the 19th the Scotch surrendered their arms, and Sir John gave his word of honor to abstain from further hostile measures. His intrigues continued notwithstanding; and in May, 1776, a patriot force, under Col. Dayton, was sent to apprehend him. Upon their approach, he left his family papers, money, and plate to be buried by a faithful slave, and, attended by large numbers of his dependents, he fled through the woods northward to Canada.¹ In May, 1780, Sir John made his appearance with 500 troops from the Northern wilderness, to recover his buried treasure and take vengeance upon his old neighbors. The settlements were surprised, and the Mohawk Valley, from Tribes Hill upward to The Noses, was ravaged. Many houses were burned, 11 persons were slain, and several others were left as dead but finally recovered. An ineffectual rally was made for pursuit; but the invaders returned without molestation. In the fall of the same year, Sir John, with 800 men, invaded the Schoharie and Mohawk Valleys with fire and sword, while an army advanced by way of Lake Champlain to create a diversion on the northern frontier. In returning, he was pursued by a body of troops under Gen. Robert Van Rensselaer, and would have been overtaken and captured had not the cowardice or treachery of that officer prevented.² The battle of Stone Arabia was fought upon this occasion. In Aug. 1781, Major Ross and Walter N. Butler, with a band of Tories and savages, appeared by way of Sacondaga with 607 men,³ and encamped a little N. of Johnson Hall. Col. Willett moved from Fort Plain on the 22d, with 300 men, to attack the enemy, and, upon approaching, detached 100 men, under Col. Harper, to make a circuit and attack the rear of the camp. A short distance above the Hall, Willett's forces met those of Ross, and the former retreated; but at the village they rallied, and were joined by 200 militia. The enemy were finally driven from the ground, with a loss of 17, while the Americans lost 13. Ross retreated all night, and was followed. At West Canada Creek the infamous Butler was killed.⁴

The estates of the Johnsons were forfeited, and a race of New Englanders succeeded the Scotch Highlanders in this co. No further event of especial interest has since disturbed the even current of events.

BLEECKER⁵—was formed from Johnstown, April 4, 1831. A part was re-annexed to that town in 1841, and a part of Caroga was taken off in 1842. It is the central town upon the N. border of the co. Its surface is a hilly and mountainous upland, the highest summits upon the N. border being 2,000 ft. above tide. The streams are head branches of West Stony⁶ and Garoga Creeks. In the valleys are several small lakes, the principal of which are Chases Lake, in the N., and Woodworth Lake, on the S. border. The soil is thin and light, and the surface is very stony. Lumbering and tanning⁷ are the leading pursuits. Bleecker, (p. v.) near the S. border, contains a church, a sawmill, a large tannery, and 20 dwellings. The first settlements were commenced about 1800.⁸ The census reports 3 churches; M. E., Germ. Meth., and R. C.

BROADALBIN⁹—was formed from "Caughnawaga," (now Broadalbin, Johnstown, and Mayfield,) March 12, 1793. Northampton was taken off in 1799, and a part of Perth in 1842. It is the central town on the E. border of the co. Its surface is rolling and mostly susceptible of cultivation. Chuctenunda Creek flows through the S. E. corner. Fondashush Creek flows W. through near the center; Frenchmans Creek through the N. part; and Mayfield Creek through the N. W. corner. The soil is mostly of the drift formation, inclining to sand. The N. part extends into the great Sacondaga Vlaie, which is annually overflowed, and in which the soil is alluvial. Fondas Bush, (Broadalbin p. o.,) on Fondas Creek, near the W. line, was incorp. April 17, 1815, as

⁶ Named Dea-kon-ta on Southier's map, pub. in 1779.

⁷ There are 3 large tanneries in town.

⁹ Named from a place in Scotland, by James McIntyre, one of the early settlers. This town comprises parts of Sacondaga, Kayaderoseras, and Stone's Patents.

"Rawsonville." It contains 3 churches, 3 buckskin dressing mills, a saw and grist mill, and 3 mitten factories. Pop. 651. Mills Corners, (p. o.), in the e. part, is a hamlet. Union Mills (p. o.) contains a sawmill, paper mill, a peg factory, and 10 houses. North Broadalbin, (p. o.), in the n. e. part, contains a church, saw and grist mill, and 10 houses. The first settlement was commenced before the Revolution.¹ The census reports 5 churches in town.²

CAROGA³—was formed from Stratford, Bleecker, and Johnstown, April 11, 1842. It lies on the n. border of the co., w. of the center. Its surface is rolling in the s. and broken in the n. by small, sharp mountains. A large hill lies w. of Garoga Creek; and a swell of land rises about 300 ft. between the principal branches. Numerous clusters of lakes lie in the center and n. part of the town, the principal of which are E. and W. Fish Lakes, Garoga Lake, the Stink Lakes, Bellows, Prairie, Green, and Pine Lakes. Garoga Creek flows s. from Garoga Lake. A small portion of the area only is susceptible of cultivation. Lumbering is the principal business. Newkirks Mills (p. v.) contains a church, (Ref. Prot. D.,) a large tannery, and 30 houses. The first settlement commenced about 1790.⁴

EPHRATAH—was formed from Palatine, (Montgomery co.,) March 27, 1827. A part was re-annexed to that town on the division of the co. in 1838. It lies on the s. border of the co., w. of the center. Its surface is mostly a hilly upland, 400 to 1,500 ft. above the Mohawk. Garoga Creek flows s. w. through the town, in a deep valley, the hills on either side rising about 800 feet above the creek. The soil is sandy, and in the s. e. a clayey loam. Ephratah, (p. v.,) in the s. part, contains a church, gristmill, a large tannery, and 359 inhabitants. Garoga, (p. v.,) in the n. part, contains a saw and grist mill and 12 houses. Rockwood, (p. v.,) in the n. e. corner, contains 2 churches, 2 sawmills, a gristmill, 2 tanneries, a buckskin dressing mill, and 196 inhabitants. Lassellville, (p. v.,) in the w. part, contains 2 churches and 20 houses. The first settlement commenced under the auspices of Sir Wm. Johnson, in 1765.⁵ The census reports 6 churches in town.⁶

JOHNSTOWN⁷—was formed from "Caughnawaga," (now Broadalbin, Johnstown, and Mayfield,) March 12, 1793. Lake Pleasant was taken off in 1812, Bleecker in 1831, Mohawk in 1837, and a part of Caroga in 1842. A part of Bleecker was re-annexed in 1841. It lies on the s. border of the co., near the center. A series of hills occupy the n. part. A high ridge extends through the w.; and the remaining parts of the town are rolling. Cayadutta Creek flows s. w. through the e. part; Garoga Creek flows through the n. w. corner; and Cayuta Creek through the w. part. The soil is a clayey and sandy loam. The manufacture of buckskin gloves and mittens forms an important item in the business of the town. Johnstown (p. v.) was incorp. April 1, 1808. It is situated on the Cayadutta, s. e. of the center; and it contains the co. buildings, 7 churches, the Johnstown Academy,⁸ 3 printing offices, a bank, 2 gristmills, a sawmill, planing mill, and gas works. Pop. 1,661. Gloversville, (p. v.,) on the Cayadutta, 4 mi. n. of Johnstown, is noted for its manufacture of gloves and mittens.⁹ It was incorp. in April, 1853, and contains 3 churches, the Gloversville Union Seminary, a printing office, a bank, a paper box factory, machine shop, and gristmill. Pop. 1,965. Kingsborough, (p. v.,) in the n. e. part, contains a church, an academy, 10 mitten factories, and 300 inhabitants. Sammonsville, (p. v.,) in the s. w., contains a paper mill, gristmill, and 15 houses. West Bush, (p. o.,) in the n. part, Kecks Center, (p. o.,) in the w. part, and McEwens Corners are hamlets. ⁷ Named from Sir William Johnson. The town embraces the Kingsborough Patent, granted June 23, 1753, a part of Stone Arabia, Butler's, and the Sacandaga Patents.

⁹ There are in this town over 100 establishments for the manufacture of gloves and mittens, and 10 mills for dressing the skins. This business was first commenced by Ezekiel Case, in 1803, and has grown from a small beginning, until now it is said that over $500,000 capital is invested in it.

settlement was commenced under the auspices of Sir Wm. Johnson, in 1760. He removed to "Johnson Hall," about $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mi. N. W. of Johnson Village, in 1761 or '62. There were then about a dozen houses in the village, and 100 tenants on farms adjacent. The lands were leased by him with the evident intention of establishing a baronial estate for his family.¹ The census reports 11 churches in town.²

MAYFIELD³—was formed from "Caughnawaga," (now Broadalbin, Johnstown, and Mayfield,) March 12, 1793. Wells was taken off in 1805, and another portion of Mayfield was annexed to that town in 1812. A part was annexed to Perth in 1842. It lies on the N. border of the co., E. of the center, and extends nearly to the S. line. Its surface in the N. part is broken by mountains rising 1,500 to 2,000 ft. above tide. These elevations are of primary formation, with rounded summits, the higher peaks having steep declivities. The central and S. parts are rolling and generally susceptible of cultivation. Stony Creek flows through the N. W. corner; Mayfield Creek through near the center; Fondas Creek⁴ through the S. E. part; and Cranberry Creek in the E. part. The soil is sandy and gravelly, in some places strewn with boulders. The valleys are alluvial, with some clayey loam. Mayfield (p. v.) contains 2 churches, a saw and grist mill, and 600 inhabitants. Vails Mills, (p. v.), in the S. E. part, contains a sawmill, a gristmill, a tannery, and 20 houses. Jackson Summit is a p. o. The first settlement was commenced about 1760 or '61, under Sir Wm. Johnson, on the old road from Tribes Hill to the Sacondaga, and was then called "Philadelphia Bush."⁵ There are 2 churches in town; M. E. and Presb.

NORTHAMPTON⁶—was formed from Broadalbin, Feb. 1, 1799. It is the N. E. corner town of the co. Its surface is hilly in the N., the hills rising about 1,000 ft. above the valley. In the S. part the Sacondaga⁷ Vlaie occupies several thousand acres, which cannot easily be drained. Sacondaga River flows S. E. through the center of the town, in a valley $\frac{1}{2}$ to 1 $\frac{1}{4}$ mi. wide. Mayfield Creek flows E. near the S. border. The soil in the valley is a rich alluvium, and on the upland a sandy loam. In places it is stony and rocky. Shell marl abounds in the bed of the Vlaie. Northville, (p. v.), in the N. part, contains 3 churches, 4 mitten factories, and 450 inhabitants. Northampton,⁸ (p. v.), in the S. E. corner, contains 2 churches, a large tannery, and 210 inhabitants; and Osborns Bridge (p. o.) a church and 10 houses. Cranberry Creek is a p. o. The first settlement commenced under Sir Wm. Johnson, about 1770.⁹ The census reports 5 churches in town.¹⁰

OPPENHEIM—was formed from Palatine, (Montgomery co.,) March 18, 1808. St. Johnsville (Montgomery co.) was taken off in 1838. It is the S. W. corner town of the co. Its surface is a hilly upland, inclining gradually to the S. W. In the N. E. part the hills rise 1,200 to 1,500 ft. above the Mohawk. East Canada Creek flows S. along the W. border. Fish Creek flows through the N. W. corner. Little Sprite, Crum, and Fox Creeks are small streams. The soil in the S. W. is clay, in the S. E. a clayey loam, and in the center and N. a light, sandy and gravelly loam. Boulders are scattered over the surface in profusion; and primary rock appears in the N. Limestone has been extensively quarried in the S. W. part, for the Erie Canal and for private use. Oppenheim, (p. v.), near the center, contains a church, a sawmill, and 59 inhabitants. Brockets Bridge, (p. o.), in the W. part, on the line of Herkimer co., Lottville, (p. o.), in the ¹ Among the tenants were Dr. Wm. Adams; Gilbert Tice, innkeeper; Peter Yong, miller; William Phillips, wagon maker; Jan Davy hatter; Peter Yost, tanner; Adrian Van Sicke, Maj. John Little, and Zephaniah Bachelor. The first school was taught by — Ralworth, and the second by G. B. Throop. The tenants were imbued with the political sentiments of the Johnson family, and shared its fortunes. The estates were confiscated during the Revolution; and many from New England settled there after the war.

² The first clergyman, according to the records, was Rev. — Moseley, in 1770. The churches are 2 M. E., 2 Presb., Bap., Cong., Evan. Luth., Aso. Presh., Prot. E., Ref. Prot. D., and R. C.

⁴ Called by the Indians Ken-ne-at-too.

⁵ Nathaniel Conners, Michael Croman, two families of Walters, Peter Whitman, — Schutt, — Circaman, Michael Haynes, George Cough, Simon Christie, and John Anderson, settled before the Revolution. William and Robert Jackson, David Knapp, Alvin McDougal, Peter and John McKinley, Duocan Anderson, Isaac Bonas, Captain and Major Van Buren, Douw and Jellis Fonda, Samuel Loefferts, William Vail,

David and Luke Woodworth, and Jonah Bartlett were also early settlers. The first birth was that of Mary Cough, in 1766. Christian Furtenback fought a German school in 1771. Mills were built for Sir Wm. Johnson in 1773.

⁶ Named from the patent granted to Jacob Mase, John R. Bleeker, and others, Oct. 17, 1741.

¹ Rudolph Yonker was the first settler; John Shaver, Jacob Youron, Moses Johnson, Daniel Dickman, Wm. Alterburgh, Henry Burkdorf, Frederick Bell-ager, and Simeon Schuyler settled in the s. part; Benjamin Berry, Peter Clive, Jacob Ladue, James Johnson, Wm. Bean, Richard Hewitt, and Daniel Gulie, from New England, settled in the central part in 1797. William Alterburgh kept the first inn: Andrew Zabrickie the first store; and John Beardsley built the first mill. Mr. B. was the pioneer millwright in Central New York, and took an active part in the first improvements of this class.

² There are 4 churches in town: 2 Univ., M. E. and Ref. Prot. D.

³ Named from Perth, in Scotland, by Archibald McFarlane.

⁴ This town contains parts of the Kayaderosseras and Sacondaga Patentes.

⁵ Charles Merence, Richard Bowen, Marcus Reese, — Davis, Michael Swobe, and Francis Frey settled before 1770.

Lawrence E. Van Allen, Henry Van Valkenburgh, Ira Benedict, Conrad and Francis Winne, Derby Newman, James and Wm. Robb, and Peter Vosburg, settled soon after the Revolution.

⁷ John Wells, Amos Kinney, Eli Winchell, Nathan Garney, Eleazer Levi, and Samuel Blise, Abial Kibbe, and Daniel Shottetkirk settled on the Johnstown road, and Stephen and John Wilcox, Amasa Chappell, and Abiathar Mosher in other parts of the town. The first birth was that of Lansing Wells, in 1800; the first marriage, that of Samuel Ellis and Polly Gurney; and the first death, that of Jesse Wilson, killed by the fall of a tree, Dec. 25, 1802 or '03. S. Bennett kept the first inn; Sanders Lansing, son of one of the patentees, built the first gristmill, on Fish Creek, in 1810; and Daniel Cross built the first tannery, in 1812.

MONROE COUNTY

THIS county was formed from Ontario and Genesee, Feb. 23, 1821. It lies on Lake Ontario, n. w. of the center of the State. It is centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains — sq. mi. The surface is generally level or slightly undulating, with a moderate inclination toward the lake. The shore of the lake rises in bluffs 10 to 30 ft. in height; and from its summit the surface gradually slopes upward to the lake ridge, a distance of 5 to 8 mi. from the lake. The summit of this ridge is 160 ft. above the lake; and from it the surface declines a few feet to the s., and then rises to the summit of the Mountain Ridge, a distance of 1 to 3 mi., and 310 ft. above the lake. South of this point the surface is gently rolling, the ridges extending n. and s. The summits of the ridges along the s. border are about 400 ft. above the lake and 600 to 650 ft. above tide. The principal stream is Genesee River, which flows a little e. of n. through the center of the co. Its valley is $\frac{1}{2}$ mi. to 2 mi. wide, bordered by ridges 30 to 60 ft. high. At Rochester the river flows over the solid limestone which forms the Mountain Ridge a distance of 96 ft., forming the Upper Genesee Falls, and $2\frac{1}{2}$ mi. below it again descends 105 ft., to near the level of the lake, forming the Lower Genesee Falls.

The principal tributaries of the Genesee are Oatka and Black Creeks from the w., and Honeoye Creek from the e. The other principal streams of the co. are Sandy, Little Salmon, Salmon, But-tonwood, and Long Pond Creeks, w. of the Genesee, and Irondequoit and Four Mile Creeks, e. of that river, all flowing into Lake Ontario or some of its bays. In their passage from the central part of the co. to the lake, these streams nearly all flow over the limestone ridge in a succession of falls, forming an abundance of water-power. The principal bodies of water are Lake Ontario, which forms its n. boundary, Irondequoit and Braddocks Bays, and Buck, Long, and Cranberry Ponds, all indentations from Lake Ontario and connected with it by narrow and shallow straits.¹

The lowest rock in the co. is the Medina sandstone, extending in a broad belt along the lake shore. Next above this is a thin stratum of the Clinton group, almost disappearing upon the w. border of the co.; and next above is the Niagara group, forming the abrupt terrace of the Mountain Ridge. This rock forms an excellent building material, and is extensively quarried. It also yields weak brine springs in several localities. The underlying rocks in the s. part of the co. belong to the Onondaga salt group. Lime is extensively manufactured from the Niagara limestone; and the rocks in the s. part yield gypsum and waterlime. A large part of the co. is covered with drift deposits, which mostly assume the character of ridges and rounded hills, many of them rising 50 to 100 ft. above the general surface. Tufa and marl are found in several localities, forming elements of fertility to the soil almost invaluable. A small quantity of iron is found associated with the Clinton group.

The soil is generally very fertile. Along the lake shore it consists of a red, argillaceous loam, principally derived from the disintegration of the Medina sandstone. This is succeeded by a clay derived from the disintegration of the Clinton and Niagara shales. The soil in the s. part is impregnated with lime and gypsum,—two of the most important elements of wheat lands. Agriculture forms the leading pursuit. Until within a few years past, wheat has been the great staple; but since the commencement of the ravages of the wheat midge, barley, corn, and oats have become the staple productions. Most parts of the co. are well adapted to the culture of fruit, and apples and peaches are largely produced. Wool growing is extensively carried on, and stock growing and dairying are beginning to receive considerable attention. The manufactures are extensive, though mostly confined to Rochester and vicinity. They consist chiefly of flour, machinery, edge tools, cars, and almost every variety of articles of iron. Rochester is the business center of the co.; and from it a large trade is carried on with the surrounding rich agricultural regions. The canals and railroads centering at this place give it facilities for an extensive inland trade and commerce. A limited amount of commerce is carried on upon Lake Ontario.

¹ The Irondequoit Bay is a narrow, deep body of water, extending inland about 6 mi. from the lake shore. From its s. extremity a deep valley extends several mi. further s., forming the deepest ravine along the n. border of the State. Some geologists have supposed that Genesee River formerly flowed through this valley.

The co. seat is located at the city of Rochester.¹ The courthouse, situated upon Buffalo St., near the center of the city, is a commodious brick edifice, with an Ionic portico supported by four massive pillars. The building is surmounted by a dome, the summit of which is 150 ft. high. It contains the usual offices and rooms for the court and co. officers, the co. clerk's office, and rooms for the city officers.² The jail is an old stone building, situated upon the bank of the Genesee, in the s. part of the city. The poorhouse establishment is located upon a farm of 134 acres in Brighton, just s. of the city line of Rochester. It consists of three large buildings, one of which is used for an insane asylum. The average number of inmates is 360, supported at a weekly cost of 68 cts. each. A school is taught throughout the year. The farm yields a revenue of $3,500.

Four daily, 2 tri-weekly, 8 weekly, 1 semi-monthly, and 3 monthly papers are published in the co.³

² The first courthouse was built in 1821, soon after the organization of the co. It was removed to give place to the present structure in 1852. The present courthouse was built at a cost of $50,000, at the joint expense of the city and co.

³ The Rochester Gazette, the first paper published in Monroe co. was commenced in 1816 by Augustine G. Danby. John Sheldon and Oran Follett were subsequently associated with him; and in 1821 the paper passed into the hands of Levi W. Sibley, publisher, with Derick Sibley as editor, and its name was changed to

The Monroe Republican. In 1825 Whittlesley & Mumford became proprietors. In July, 1827, it was purchased by Luther Tucker & Co. who changed its name to

The Rochester Republican, and continued its publication in connection with the Rochester Daily Advertiser until 1839, when the establishment passed into the hands of Thomas H. Hyatt. After passing through various hands, it is now published by Curtis, Butts & Co.; Isaac Butts, editor.

The Rochester Telegraph was commenced July 7, 1818, by Eversard, Peck & Co. In 1821 Thurlow Weed became its editor, and in 1825 he and Robert Martin purchased the establishment. In 1827 they commenced

The Semi-Weekly Telegraph, which in a short time was changed to

The Rochester Daily Telegraph. In 1828 Weed retired, and the papers, daily and weekly, were continued by Martin. On the 1st of Jan. 1829 the daily was united with the Rochester Daily Advertiser, and in 1830 the weekly was merged in the Rochester Republican.

The True Genesee Farmer, mo., was published a short time about 1824 by Wm. A. Welles; N. Goodsell, editor.

The Rochester Album was commenced in Oct. 1825, by Marshall, Spaulding & Hunt. In 1827 it was united with the Telegraph.

The Rochester Daily Advertiser, the first daily paper w. of Albany, was commenced Oct. 25, 1826, by Luther Tucker and Henry C. Sleight, under the firm of Luther Tucker & Co. In 1828 the partnership was dissolved, and the publication was continued by Tucker. On the 1st of Jan. 1829, the paper was united with the Rochester Daily Telegraph and issued as

The Rochester Daily Advertiser and Telegraph, by Tucker & Martin. In 1829 Martin retired, and in 1830 Tucker dropped the sub-title of Telegraph. Henry O'Kelly, H. L. Steves, Thomas W. Flagg, and Hiram Humphrey were successively interested with Tucker in its publication as associate editors, until May 1839, when the establishment was transferred to Thomas H. Hyatt, who became editor and proprietor. After passing through several hands, the paper was united with the Rochester Daily Union, Sept. 1, 1856, and is now published as

The Rochester Daily Union and Advertiser. Isaac Butts, editor; Curtis, Butts & Co., proprietors.

The Rochester Mercury was commenced in Jan. 1827, by Luther Tucker & Co. It was issued weekly in connection with the Daily Advertiser, and was merged in the Rochester Republican when that paper passed into the hands of the Daily Advertiser.

The Rochester Observer was commenced in 1827. Luther Tucker & Co., printers; Rev. G. G. Sill, editor; Josiah Bisoll, jr., proprietor. After several successive changes of editors and publishers, it was united with the New York Evangelist in 1832.

The Rochester Balance was commenced in Jan. 1828, by D. D. Stephenson. It soon passed into the hands of Thurlow Weed and Samuel Honou, who changed its name to

The Anti-Masonic Inquirer. D. N. Sprague succeeded Heron, and Weed retired in 1830. In 1831 Erastus Shepard united the Western Spectator of Palmyra with it. In 1832, Alva Strong became connected with Shepard in the publication, and in 1834 the paper was merged in the National Republican.

The Craftsman (Masonic) was commenced at Rochester in 1828 by E. J. Roberts. It was published about a year and a half and then removed to Albany.

The Western Wanderer was commenced at Rochester in 1828 by Peter Cherry. It soon passed into the hands of Edwin Scranton, who changed its name to

The Rochester Gem. It subsequently passed into the hands of Strong & Dawson, and was discontinued in 1843.

The Spirit of the Age, semi-mo., was published in Rochester in 1830 by Ames & Barnum.

The Rochester Morning Courier was published in 1830 by E. J. Roberts.

The Genesee Farmer was commenced in Rochester in Jan. 1831, by Tucker & Stevens, with N. Goodsell as nominal editor. It was continued by Tucker until the close of 1839, when it was united with the Cultivator, at Albany.

The National Republican was commenced at Rochester in the spring of 1831 by Sidney Smith. In 1833 a daily edition, entitled

The Morning Advertiser, was issued from the same office. It was soon after changed to

The Evening Advertiser, and in 1834 Smith sold the establishment to Shepard & Strong, who united the Republican with the Inquirer and changed the name to

The Monroe Democrat, and the name of the daily to

The Rochester Daily Democrat. In 1836, George Dawson became interested in the establishment, and acted as editor until 1839. In 1846, Alva Strong, Samuel P. Allen, and Henry Cook were editors and proprietors. In Dec. 1857, the papers were united with the Daily and Weekly American, and the daily is now issued as

The Daily Democrat and American, and the weekly as

The Monroe Democrat, by Strong, Allen & Huntington, proprietors, and S. P. Allen, editor.

The Tri-Weekly Democrat is issued from the same office.

The Rochester Mirror was published in 1832 by Scranton & Holstein.

The Age was published at Rochester in 1833.

The American Revivalist and Rochester Observer was published in 1833 by N. C. Saxton.

Goodsell's Genesee Farmer was commenced at Rochester in 1833 by Nahum Goodsell, and continued a short time.

The Rights of Man was published at Rochester in 1834 by the Anti-Slavery Society.

The Family Journal and Christian Philanthropist was published at Rochester in 1834 by W. B. Van Brunt.

The Monthly Genesee Farmer was commenced in 1836 by Luther Tucker. It was made up from the Weekly Genesee Farmer, and, with that paper, was united with the Cultivator in 1839.

The Watchman was published at Rochester in 1838 by Delazon Smith.

McKenzie's Gazette was published at Rochester in 1838 and '39 by Alexander McKenzie.

The New Genesee Farmer, mo., was commenced in 1840. M. B. Bateman, editor. Its name was afterward changed to

The Genesee Farmer. It was successively edited by Henry Coleman, Daniel Lee, D. D. T. Moore, and James Vick, and is now edited and published by Joseph Harris.

The Working Man's Advocate, daily, was commenced in Rochester, Oct. 19, 1839, by the Typographical Association. It was issued weekly by Henry C. Frink, editor. They also issued a weekly edition. In April, 1840, it was purchased by James Vick and George P. Frost, who changed its name to

The Evening Advocate. In 1841 it passed into the hands of John J. Reilly & Co., who changed its name to

The Evening Post, and published it in connection with a weekly paper called

The Western New Yorker. On the 1st of April, 1843, Erastus Shepard became proprietor, and in November following the two papers were discontinued.

The Rochester Daily Whig, a campaign paper, was published in 1840 by Wm. A. Welles.

The Erie Canal extends e. and w. through the co. It crosses the Irondequoit Valley upon the highest embankment upon the whole canal line. At Rochester it crosses Genesee River upon an aqueduct built of solid blocks of Onondaga limestone. The Genesee Valley Canal intersects the Erie Canal at Rochester, affording water communication s. to near the Penn. line, and opening into Allegany River at Olean. The New York Central R. R. extends through the co., several of its branches radiating from Rochester. The direct branch e. extends along the line of the Erie Canal, through Brighton, Pittsford, and Perinton, to Syracuse. The Auburn Branch extends s. e. through Brighton and Pittsford to Auburn and Syracuse. The Buffalo Branch extends s. w. through Gates, Chili, and Riga; and the Niagara Falls Branch extends w. through Gates, Greece, Ogden, and Sweden. The Genesee Valley R. R. extends s. from Rochester through Brighton, Henrietta, and Rush; the Canandaigua & Niagara Falls Branch of the N. Y. C. R. R. extends through Rush and Mendon; and the Rochester & Charlotte Branch of the N. Y. C. R. R. extends from Rochester n. to the lake shore.

The territory now forming Monroe co. formerly constituted a portion of the hunting grounds of the Seneca Nation, although it contained none of their principal villages. The region was frequently visited by the French; but no permanent settlement was made till after the Revolution.

The first settler was Ebenezer Allen, a tory, who located upon the Genesee, near the present site of Rochester, in 1788. He soon after removed to Canada. The first permanent settlements were made in 1789, in Wheatland and near the head of Irondequoit Bay. During the next five years settlements sprung up in various parts of the co., though the general growth was greatly retarded by the difficulty of access, the dense forests, and the unhealthiness of the climate when the lands were first cleared. The unsettled condition of Indian affairs also had the effect to retard settlement; and the War of 1812 almost put an end to improvement. At the close of the war, settlers came in more rapidly, and a great business began to develop itself at Rochester. The construction of the Erie Canal gave an impetus to business, and speedily pushed settlements into every portion of the co. From that time the progress of the co. has been rapid and continuous. The co. was contained in the Phelps and Gorham Purchase. The three western towns belonged to the Triangle Tract, and the remainder of the co. w. of the Genesee constitutes a portion of the celebrated "Mill Yard Tract."¹

BRIGHTON²—was formed from "Smallwood,"³ March 25, 1814. A part of Rochester was taken off in 1834, and Irondequoit in 1839. It is an interior town, lying upon the e. bank of the Genesee, a little s. e. of the center of the co. Its surface is gently rolling, with a slight inclination toward the n. The deep valley of Irondequoit Bay is on the e. border. Its streams are small brooks, tributaries of the Genesee and Irondequoit. The soil is a sandy loam in the e. and a clay loam upon the river. Near the center are gypsum beds, formerly extensively worked. The people are largely engaged in raising vegetables for the Rochester market. There are several extensive nurseries in town. Brighton, (p. v.,) in the n. e. part, contains a church and about 30 dwellings. It is a canal village and a station upon the N. Y. C. R. R., where the two branches from the e. unite. A large brick and tile manufactory is located about 2 mi. s. of the village; and the Genesee Model School⁴ is situated upon a beautiful site 2 mi. s. e. West Brighton, (p. v.,) upon the Genesee, near the line of Rochester, contains about 15 dwellings. In its immediate vicinity are the co. workhouse, poorhouse, and insane hospital, the Mount Hope Rural Cemetery, the Monroe co. almshouses, an extensive glue factory, and several other manufactories. The first settlement was made in 1790, by John Lusk and Oran Stone, who located about 4 mi. e. of the river.⁵ Rev. Solomon Allen, from Northampton, Mass., preached the first sermon and was the first settled minister. There is but one church (Cong.) in town.

CHILI—was formed from Riga, Feb. 22, 1822. It is an interior town, lying s. w. of the center of the co. Its surface is level or gently rolling, with a slight inclination to the e. Genesee River forms the e. boundary; and Black Creek, a sluggish stream, flows e. through near the center. The soil is a clay loam, mixed with sand. South of Black Creek are several peculiar gravelly knolls, the principal of which is Dumping Hill, near the river. Chili, (p. v.,) in the n. part, contains a church and 15 houses; North Chili, (p. v.,) a r. r. station in the n. w. corner, contains a church and 25 houses; Clifton, (p. v.,) in the s. w. part, contains 1 church, a saw and grist mill, plaster mill, furnace, and 201 inhabitants; South Chili is a hamlet. The first settlement was made in the e. part, by Joseph Morgan, in 1792.⁶ There are 5 churches in town.⁷

CLARKSON⁸—was formed from Murray, (Orleans co.,) April 2, 1819. Union was taken off in 1852. It lies on the w. border of the co., n. of the center. Its surface is level, with slight un-

² This town embraces Township 3 of Range 7 of the Phelps and Gorham Purchase. It was originally purchased by Gen. Hyde, Prosper Polly, Enos Stone, Col. Gilbert, and Joseph Chaplin, from Lenox, Mass.

³ The original town, "Boyle," was organized April 6, 1806, and embraced the six n. towns e. of the river. Penfield was taken off in 1810, and Perinton in 1812. Some time in 1812 or '13 the name was changed to "Smallwood," and March 25, 1814, it was divided into two parts, one taking the name of Brighton and the other of Pittsford.

⁴ This institution was widely known as the "Clover Street Seminary," under the care of Mrs. Brewster, the author of Bloss's Ancient History.

⁵ John Lusk owned 1,500 acres at the head of Irondequoit Bay. Among the other early settlers were Joel Scudder, Chauncey and Calvin Hyde, Samuel Shaffer, Enos Blossom, Timothy Allyn, and Oliver Culver,—the last named from Orwell, Vt. In 1800, most of the business upon the lake was done at Irondequoit Landing. In 1798, Judge John Tryon laid out a village 3 mi. above the head of the bay, and built a large warehouse. The place was called "Tryon's Town." Asa Dayton kept an inn at this place, in 1801. A tannery and distillery were afterward built, and the place became quite a lively little village; but it is now entirely deserted. — Turner taught the first school; Ira West kept the first store; and Solomon Hatch and Oliver Culver built the first mill on Allens Creek, in 1806.

dulations in the s. It is drained to the n. e. by the head branches of Salmon and Little Salmon Creeks. The soil is a sandy loam, mixed with clay. Clarkson, (p. v.,) in the s. part, contains 2 churches, a brewery, and 325 inhabitants. It is the residence of Ex-Lieut. Gov. Henry R. Selden. Salt was manufactured to a limited extent by the early settlers. East Clarkson, (p. v.,) in the s. e. corner, contains a church and 20 houses; West Clarkson, in the w. part, 30 houses. The first settlement commenced in 1809, by James Sayres, Moody Truman, and Elijah Blodgett¹. There are 3 churches in town; 2 M. E. and Cong.

GATES²—was formed March 30, 1802, as "Northampton." Its name was changed June 10, 1812. Parma and Riga were taken off in 1808, and Greece in 1822. It is near the geographical center of the co. Its surface is undulating, with a gentle inclination toward the n. Genesee River forms a small portion of the e. boundary on the s. e. corner. It is drained by small streams. The soil is a fine quality of calcareous loam, intermixed with clay. The people are largely engaged in raising vegetables for the Rochester market. Gates Center (Gates p. o.) contains a church and 12 houses. West Gates is a hamlet; and Coldwater is a station upon the Buffalo Branch of the N. Y. C. R. R. The first settlement was made in 1809, by Isaac Dean, from Vt.³ The census reports 2 churches in town; M. E. and Presb.

GREECE—was formed from Gates, March 22, 1822. It lies near the center, on the n. border of the co. Genesee River and Lake Ontario form its e. and n. boundaries. Its surface is rolling, with a general inclination toward the lake. It is drained by several streams that flow into the small bays that indent the lake shore. These bays, six in number, beginning at the w., are respectively Braddocks Bay and Cranberry, Long, Buck, Round, and Little Ponds. The shifting sand bars at their mouths destroy their commercial utility. The soil is a clay loam, with large tracts of drift sand along the lake shore. Charlotte,⁴ (p. v.,) in the n. e. corner, near the mouth of Genesee River, is a U. S. port of entry in the Genesee District, and the lake port for Rochester, 7 mi. above. It contains 2 churches, a lighthouse, 3 shipyards, a steam grain elevator, planing mill, and lumber yard. Pop. 800. Six schooners are owned in the place; and the lake steamers touch here daily during the season of navigation. West Greece, (p. v.,) on the line of Parma, contains 2 churches and 30 houses; North Greece (p. v.) a church and 20 houses; South Greece, (p. v.,) in the s. w. corner, 25 houses; and Greece (p. v.) a church and 20 houses. Hanford's Landing, (p. v.,) in the s. e. corner, at the head of navigation on Genesee River from the lake, contains 20 houses. Greece Center and Reads Corners are hamlets. The first settlement was made at the mouth of the Genesee, in 1792,⁵ by Wm. Hencher and family. The census reports 7 churches in town.⁶

HENRIETTA⁷—was formed from Pittsford, March 27, 1818. It is an interior town, lying s. of the center of the co. Its surface is rolling, Genesee River forming its w. boundary. The streams are small, and usually dry in summer. The soil is a fertile, argillaceous loam. East Henrietta, (Henrietta p. o.,) e. of the center, contains 2 churches, the Monroe Academy, and 181 inhabitants. West Henrietta, (p. v.,) s. w. of the center, contains a church, a steam mill, furnace, extensive carriage shops, and 40 houses. The first settlement was commenced by Jesse Pangburn, in 1806.⁸ The first church (Bap.) was organized in 1811.⁹

¹ The first settlement was made at Clarkson; and among the early settlers at that point were David Forsyth and Dea. Joel Palmer, from Conn. Eldridge, John, and Isaac Farwell came in 1810, and looted w. of Clarkson Village. Dr. Abiel Baldwin, from Saratoga, came in 1811. The first male child born was a son of Mrs. Clark; the first female birth was that of Betsy Palmer, in 1812. Charlotte Cummings taught the first school, in 1812. Henry McCall kept the first store, about 1810.

² Named in honor of Gen. Horatio Gates.

³ Among the early settlers who arrived in 1809 were John Sicles and Augustus B. Shaw. In 1817, Ezra Mason, — Hartford, and Richard, Paul, Philip, Lisle, and Lowell Thomas, located in town. William Williams came in 1819. The first child born was a daughter of Ezra Mason, in 1818. Ira West kept the first store, and Isaac Dean built the first mill.

⁴ In June, 1813, the British fleet, under Sir James Yeo, landed at Charlotte and seized a quantity of provisions and whiskey. In Sept. of the same year the fleet again made its appearance at the mouth of the Genesee, and commenced a heavy fire upon the place; but the American fleet made its appearance, relieved the place, and the British escaped with considerable difficulty. In May, 1814, the British came once more, and, under cover of a fog of truce, a demand was made to deliver up the public stores at Rochester. The few militiamen who were present passed into and out of the woods in sight of the British, giving the appearance of a great number; and the enemy, suspecting an ambuscade, retired, after having furiously bombarded the woods for an hour.

⁶ 2 M. E., Presb., Bap., Cong., Union, and R. C.

⁷ Named from Henrietta Laura, Countess of Bath, daughter of Sir Wm. Pulteney.

⁸ Maj. Isaac Scott received for military services 900 acres in the s. w. part of the town, and attempted a settlement in 1790, but abandoned it in 1792. In 1806, Charles Rice, Wm. Thompson, Thomas Sparka, Moses Goodall, Geo. Dickinson, Selah Reed, and Gideon Griswold settled in the w. part. In 1807, Ira Hatch, Jonathan Russell, Benjamin Hale, and the Baldwin family settled on what was called the Wadsworth Road. In 1809, the Spring family settled near the center. Sarah Leggett taught the first school, in 1809; James Smith kept the first store; and Jonathan Smith built the first sawmill.

⁹ The census reports 5 churches; 2 M. E., 2 Bap., and Cong.

IRONDEQUOIT¹—was formed from Brighton, March 27, 1839. It lies on the n. border of the co., e. of the center. Lake Ontario forms the n., Irondequoit Bay the e., and Genesee River the w. boundary. Its surface is rolling, with an inclination in the n. part toward the lake and the deep valley of Irondequoit Bay on the e. The streams are small and flow n. and e. into the lake and bay. The soil in the n. part is sandy, and in the s. clay loam. Irondequoit, (p. v.,) near the center, contains 15 houses. A suburb of Rochester, in the s. w. corner, contains 50 houses. The first settlement was made by Wm. Walker, in 1791.² There is no church in town.

MENDON—was formed from Bloomfield, (Ontario co.,) May 26, 1812. It lies on the s. border of the co., e. of the center. Its surface in the n. and e. is rolling, and in the s. w. moderately hilly. Honeoye Creek flows through the s. w. corner, and the headwaters of Irondequoit Creek through near the center. There are three small ponds in the n. w. part. The soil is a clayey, calcareous loam. Honeoye Falls,³ (p. v.,) near the s. w. corner, incorp. April 12, 1833, contains 4 churches, 3 flouring mills, 1 gristmill, a sawmill, 2 woolen factories, a plaster mill, a manufactory of agricultural implements, and a stone quarry. It is a station on the Canandaigua & Niagara Falls Branch of the N. Y. C. R. R. Pop. about 1,100. Mendon, (p. v.,) in the e. part, contains 2 churches, a steam flouring mill, a steam sawmill, a foundery, and 20 houses; and Mendon Center (p. v.) a grist and saw mill and 15 houses. Sibleyville, in the s. w., is a hamlet. The first settlement was made at Honeoye Falls, by Zebulon Norton, from Vt., in 1790.⁴ The first church (Bap.) was organized in 1809;⁵ Rev. Jesse Brayman was the first settled minister.

OGDEN⁶—was formed from Parma, Jan. 27, 1817. It is an interior town, lying w. of the center of the co. The surface is level or gently undulating, with a slight inclination toward the n. The streams are small brooks forming head branches of Sandy, Salmon, and Little Black Creeks. The soil is a fine quality of calcareous and clayey loam. It is one of the best wheat growing towns in the co. Spencerport,⁷ (p. v.,) a canal village and r. r. station, in the n. e. part of the town, contains 4 churches, a furnace, tannery, gristmill, and sawmill. Pop. 578. Adams Basin, (p. v.,) is a canal village and r. r. station of 30 houses, in the n. w. part of the town. Ogden Center (Ogden p. o.) contains a church and 35 houses. PENFIELD¹—was formed from "Boyle," March 30, 1810. Webster was taken off in 1840. It lies on the e. border of the co., n. of the center. Its surface is rolling, and in the w. it is much broken. Irondequoit Bay enters the n. w. corner. Irondequoit Creek flows through the s. w. corner and forms a part of the w. boundary. It falls about 90 ft. in the village of Penfield. The other streams are small brooks. The soil is drift sand over argillaceous loam. Penfield, (p. v.,) in the s. w. part, on Irondequoit Creek, contains 3 churches, 2 gristmills, 2 sawmills, a woolen factory, a foundery, and a manufactory of agricultural implements. Pop. 560. Lovetts Corners (East Penfield p. o.) contains 20 houses; Penfield Center contains 15 houses. The first permanent settlement was made by Lebbeus Ross and Calvin Clark, in 1801.² There are 4 churches in town.³

PERINTON⁴—was formed from "Boyle," May 26, 1812. It is the s. town on the e. line of the co. Its surface is uneven, a ridge from the s. e. terminating near the center. Turk Hill, in the s. part, is the highest point in the co. The town is drained by the headwaters of Irondequoit Creek and its branches. The soil is a sandy loam. Fairport, (p. v.,) n. w. of the center, a canal and r. r. station, contains 5 churches, 3 flouring mills, 2 sawmills, a plaster mill, 2 planing mills, a saw-lathe factory, machine shops, and carriage shops. Pop. 685. Bushnells Basin, (p. v.,) in the w. part, on the canal, contains a church and 252 inhabitants; and Egypt, (p. v.,) s. e. of the center, a church and 30 houses. Fullams Basin is a hamlet, on the canal. The first settlement commenced in 1790, but was mostly abandoned soon after. Glover Perrin was the first permanent settler, in 1793.⁵ Rev. — Crane preached the first sermon. There are 8 churches in town.⁶

PITTSFORD—was formed from "Smallwood," March 25, 1814. Henrietta was taken off in 1818. It is an interior town, lying e. of the center of the co. Its surface is undulating, with a gentle inclination toward the n. Irondequoit Creek flows through the n. e. part, and Allys Creek through the w. part. The soil is sandy in the n., and clayey and gravelly in the s. Pittsford, (p. v.,) near the center, a canal and r. r. station, was incorp. April 7, 1827. It contains 4 churches, a union school, and a flouring mill. Pop. 702. Cartersville, in the e. part, on the canal, contains a distillery and 12 houses. The first settlement was commenced in 1789, by Israel and Simon Stone.⁷ The first church (Cong.) was organized in 1809.⁸

RIGA—was formed from "Northampton," now Gates, April 8, 1808. Chili was taken off in 1822. It lies on the w. border of the co., near the s. w. corner. Its surface is level or gently undulating. Black Creek, a dull, sluggish stream, flows e. in a tortuous course through near the center. The soil is a clayey loam. Churchville,⁹ (p. v.,) n. w. of the center, on Black Creek, is a r. r. station, and contains 4 churches, a saw and flouring mill, foundery, and machine shop. Pop. 450. Riga Center, (Riga p. o.,) near the center, contains a church, the Riga Academy, and 25 houses. The first settlement was commenced in 1805, under the auspices of James Wadsworth.¹⁰ The first church (Cong.) was formed in the fall of 1806;¹¹ Rev. Allen Hollister was the first pastor.

² Asa Carpenter had previously settled, but did not remain. Gen. Jonathan Fassett, of Vt., Caleb Hopkins, — Maybee, and four others, made a settlement, but soon after abandoned it on account of sickness. Hopkins and Maybee remained. As early as 1804, Josiah J. Kellogg, Dan'l Stilwell, Benj. Minor, Jonathan and David Baker, Isaac Beatty, and Henry Paddock, moved in. Daniel Penfield came in 1810. The first birth was that of a child of Mrs. Fiske; and the first death was that of Benj. Stilwell, in 1804. Jos. Hatch taught the first school; Daniel Stilwell kept the first inn, in 1806; and Wm. McKinster the first store. The first mills were built by Daniel Penfield.

³ Bap., F. W. Bap., M. E., and Presb.

⁴ Named from Glover Perrin, the first permanent settler.

⁵ Among the early settlers were Jesse Perrin, in 1794, Abner Wright, in 1795, Caleb Walker, in 1799, and Asa and Edward Perrin, Levi Treadwell, Maj. Norton, John Scott, John Peters, and Gideon Ramsdell, soon after. The first birth was that of Asa Wright, in 1797. Glover Perrin kept the first inn; Gregory & Dean the first store; and Richard Lincoln built the first grist-mill.

⁶ 2 Wes. Meth., M. E., Cong., Bap., F. W. Bap., Univ., and Union.

⁷ Silas Nye, Joseph Farr, Alex. Dunn, and David Davie, from Washington co., settled near the center about the same time;

Thos. Clelland, Ezra Patterson, and Josiah Girmanson soon after. In 1790 and '91, the Stone family, of 7 persons, Caleb Hopkins, Wm. Acker, Israel Canfield, and Benj. Miller, came in. The first marriage was that of N. Armstrong and Mies E. Cole. The first school was taught in 1794. Joho Mann built the first mill, in 1805, on Irondequoit Creek, in the e. part of the town.

⁸ There are 4 churches in town; Presb., Prot. E., M. E., and Bap.

⁹ Named from Samuel Church, the pioneer settler at the village in 1808.

¹⁰ The first settlers were mostly from Mass. Elihu Church settled near the center, in March, 1806. Soon after, Samuel Shepard settled in the s. w. part; Henry Brewster, Sam'l Baldwin, William Purker, Ezekiel Barnes, Nehemiah Frost, Samuel Church, Jas. Knowles, Thos. Bingham, Joe. Tueker, Enoe Morse, and Geo. Richmond, in 1807; and Jos. Emerson and Eber and Chester Orcutt, in 1808. The first birth was that of a daughter of Sam'l Church; the first male child born was Hiram Shepard, in 1807; the first death was that of Richard Church, in 1807. Joe. Thompson kept the first inn; Thompson & Tuttle the first store, in 1808. Samuel Church built the first sawmill, in 1808, and the first gristmill, in 1811, both at Churchville.

¹¹ The census reports 6 churches in town; 2 Cong., M. E., Presb., Bap., and Univ.

ROCHESTER¹—was taken from Brighton and Gates, and incorp. as a village, by the name of "Rochesterville," March 21, 1817. Its name was changed April 12, 1822, and it was enlarged and incorporated as a city April 28, 1834.² It is located n. of the center of the co., upon Genesee River, 7 mi. from its mouth; and it contains an area of about 8 sq. mi. The surface is level or gently undulating. The N. Y. C. R. R. track is 280 ft. above Lake Ontario; and Mt. Hope Ridge, the highest point upon the s. border, is 160 ft. higher. The city has a solid foundation of Niagara limestone, cropping out along the course of the river, but in other parts of the city usually covered with drift deposits. The Genesee flows n., dividing the city into two nearly equal parts. Its course through the city is mostly a succession of rapids and falls, affording an extensive and valuable water-power, which is fully improved for manufacturing purposes.³

The city is quite regularly laid out, most of the streets crossing each other at right angles. The n. and s. streets are parallel to the river, and upon the principal e. and w. streets bridges are built across the river.⁴ The streets are usually well paved and bordered by commodious sidewalks. The city is divided into 12 wards.

The immense water-power furnished by Genesee River gives to the city great advantages for manufacturing.⁵ Mills were erected at an early period; and gradually other machinery was added, until the present great amount and variety have been attained. The staple manufacture of the city is flour. There are now in operation 24 mills and an aggregate of 125 runs of stone. The mills have a capacity for grinding 800,000 bbls. of flour per annum; and the aggregate capital invested is $700,000. Since the failure of the wheat crop in Western New York, a considerable portion of the water-power has been directed to other manufacturing purposes.⁶

The culture of fruit and ornamental trees has for many years formed an important business of the city; and now the nurseries are among the most extensive in the country.⁷

The commerce of the city is large, though of much less importance than the manufactures. It

² At the first village meeting, held May 13, 1822, under charter, Francis Brown was elected President, and Wm. Cobb, Everard Peck, Dan. Mack, and Jehiel Barnard, Trustees. The village corporation embraced 750 acres. The first city officers—elected in June, 1834—were Jonathan Child, Mayor; Louis Brooks, Thos. Kempshall, Elijah F. Smith, Fred'k F. Backus, and A. W. Ripley, Aldermen; John C. Nash, Clerk; and E. F. Marshall, Treasurer.

⁵ The situation of this water-power is very favorable for the growth of manufactures. Veselsa from Lake Ontario can come up the river to the foot of the Lower Falls, 2 mi. below the center of the city; and above the rapids the river is navigable to Mount Morris, a distance of 53 mi. The first mill was built by Ebenezer Allen, in 1788-89. He soon after sold out to Col. Fish and removed to Canada. This mill and one other were the only ones at this place until 1814, when Elisha and Henry Ely and Josiah Bissell built another at the Upper Falls. During this year a few hundred bbls. of flour were sent to the Niagara frontier.—the first flour ever exported from Rochester. The Phoenix Mills were built in 1815; since that time the number has largely increased, until now Rochester is one of the largest flour manufacturing places in the country. It is called the "Flour City."

Axes and Edge Tools are manufactured by 3 firms, with an aggregate capital of $180,000, and employing to 200 men.

Machine Shops, 9 in number, have an aggregate capital of $300,000, turn out goods to the amount of $600,000 per annum, and employ 750 men.

Furnaces, 8 in number, employ 150 men, and have a capital of $320,000.

The Duryea and Forsyth Safe and Scale Manufacturing Co. was incorp. in Dec. 1854, with a capital of $100,000. It gives employment to 250 men, and produces goods to the amount of $250,000 per annum.

Cotton Factories, 2 in number, give employment to 26 men, and produce $230,000 worth of goods annually.

Breweries, 17 in number, have an aggregate capital of $130,000, and produce $250,000 worth of ale and lager beer annually.

Boat Yards, 15 in number, have a capital of $70,000, and manufacture $375,000 worth of boats annually.

Coch and Carriage factories, 8 in number, turn out $150,000 worth of carriages annually.

Boot and Shoe factories, 5 in number, give employment to 900 hands, and turn out goods annually to the amount of $500,000.

Cabinet Shops, 8 in number, employ 625 men, and turn out work to the amount of $500,000 annually.

Chair Factories, 2 in number, employ 300 men, and turn out chairs to the amount of $200,000 per annum.

Among the other articles annually manufactured are woollen cloths to the amount of $50,000, soap and candles to the amount of $60,000, carpets, paper, hosed oil, alcohol, paint, fire engines, rifles, &c. A carpet manufactory was started in 1832; and in 1838 there were 2 in successful operation,—one at the Lower and one at the Middle Falls. The first paper mill was built at the Upper Falls, in 1819. A large paper mill below the Lower Falls now produces paper to the amount of $150,000 annually. It is chiefly engaged in the manufacture of printing paper. There are several sawmills, planing mills, and tanneries in the city. Besides these, there are many minor manufactories, in the aggregate giving employment to a large number of men and making use of a great amount of capital. The city ranks among the first manufacturing towns in the State.

is carried on by means of the canals, railroads, and Lake Ontario.¹ The exports consist of the products of the Genesee Valley and of the manufactured goods of the city. Pop. 43,877.

Besides the co. buildings, the city contains several fine public edifices.

The City Hall, combined with the co. courthouse, has already been described.

Corinthian Hall contains the reading room and library of the Atheneum and Mechanics' Association, and is one of the finest public halls in the country.

The Arcade, fronting Buffalo St., is a commodious building, containing the p. o., telegraph offices, and a variety of other offices, stores, &c. It has a broad promenade extending through the center, from which the various rooms open on either side. The roof is built mostly of glass, and the public walk is open to the roof. The rooms of the upper stories open upon galleries, which extend the entire length of the building on either side above the main walk or promenade.

The Central R. R. Depot is one of the finest buildings of the kind in the State. It contains ample accommodations for the various r. r. offices, passenger rooms, and for the cars which arrive on the various roads that center there. Its roof is supported by iron; and the whole structure presents a fine and imposing appearance. Several of the mercantile blocks, the banks, and private residences, are beautiful structures and worthy of becoming architectural models.

The Public Schools of the city are under the control of a Board of Education, consisting of 2 members from each ward and a Superintendent. The schools are graded, and the course of instruction embraces all studies, from the primary through the higher branches taught in academies. The school buildings are 16 in number. The number of teachers employed is 104; 13 are males and 91 females. The number of children between the ages of 4 and 21 is 16,108, of whom 6,320, or 38 per cent., attend school during some portion of the year. The total expenses for 1857 were $58,945.55. Number of volumes in school libraries, ———.

The University of the City of Rochester was incorp. in Jan. 1850, and is under the patronage of the Baptist denomination. This school has an optional classical and scientific course. The present number of pupils is 140.²

The Baptist Theological Seminary,³ connected with the University, was established Nov. 4, 1850. Its present number of students is 31.

The Rochester Collegiate Institute, on East Avenue, was started as a preparatory school for the University. It is at present a flourishing private seminary.

The Rochester Female Academy, on Fitzhugh St., was incorp. in 1837.

The Allen Female Seminary and The Tracy Female Institute are flourishing private seminaries.

There are 8 parish schools connected with the R. C. churches of the city.

The Rochester Atheneum and Mechanics' Association was founded in 1849. It has an extensive reading room and a library of 8,000 volumes. It sustains an annual course of lectures.

The Female Charitable Society was organized in 1826, to furnish clothing and other articles of necessity to the destitute.

The Home for the Friendless was organized April 11, 1849, to provide work for the needy who cannot obtain employment.

The House for Idle and Vagrant Children was opened June 2, 1854. It is connected with the school department of the city; and to it are sent all vagrant children that are wandering about the streets.

The Rochester Orphan Asylum was established in 1836 and incorp. in 1838. It is a fine brick edifice, situated in the s. w. part of the city, upon a lot donated by the Hon. John Greig. Its average number of inmates is 84, supported by State and county appropriations and private subscription.

The Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum was opened in July, 1842. It is under the charge of the Sisters of Charity. It is situated in the rear of St. Patrick's Church.

The Cartmen's Mutual Benevolent Society was incorp. in July, 1849.

The St. Andrew's Benevolent Society for extending aid to indigent Scotchmen was formed in 1850.

The St. George's Society was formed in March, 1849, by the English residents of the city.

The other societies in the city are the Monroe Co. Bible Society, organized in 1821; The Rochester

² This institution at present occupies temporary buildings upon Buffalo St., in the midst of the city. It owns a site of 12 acres just e. of the city limits, upon which suitable buildings are in process of erection. Connected with the institution is a valuable library and a fine mineralogical cabinet.

³ This institution has an endowment of $75,000. It has a German Theological Department. Its library contains 5,500 vols., 4,600 of which belonged to Dr. Augustus Neander, the German ecclesiastical historian.

City Tract Society; the Industrial School Association; the Christian Doctrine Society; Society of St. Alphonsus, (German); St. Joseph's Convent of Redemption; the Academies of St. Patrick, The Sacred Heart, and Our Lady of Mercy. The St. Mary's Hospital has an average of about 70 patients.

The Western House of Refuge for Juvenile Delinquents, a State institution, established in 1844. is located upon a farm of 42 acres $1\frac{1}{2}$ mi. n. of the courthouse. The buildings consist of a large and imposing main edifice, with wings containing offices, cells, a chapel, &c. and a variety of workshops. They occupy a site of $4\frac{1}{2}$ acres, surrounded by a high wall. The average number of inmates is nearly 400.¹

The first religious services held in the co. were connected with the French missions in the 17th century. The first church at Rochester (Presb.) was formed in 1815, and the church edifice was erected in 1817; Rev. Comfort Williams was the first settled minister, in 1816. Several of the city churches are among the finest church edifices in the State. There are now 46 churches in the city.²

Mount Hope Cemetery is located in Brighton, near the s. line of the city. It embraces a lot of 70 acres located upon Mount Hope, the highest point of land in the vicinity, and one completely overlooking the city. It is laid out in excellent taste, and is one of the finest rural cemeteries in the country.

St. Patrick's Cemetery contains 15 acres, and St. Joseph's Cemetery (German) 9 acres.

The territory about the mouth of the Genesee first became known to the whites in the early exploring expeditions of the French. A map of the region, prepared by Baron La Hontan, was published at London in 1703. Views of the Upper and Lower Genesee Falls had been published as early as 1768.³ Many other adventurers visited the place and gave descriptions of it long previous to the Revolution. The country remained in the peaceable possession of the Indians until after the war, when immigration began to set in toward Western N. Y. The first settler who located at the falls was Ebenezer Allen, the notorious tory.⁴ He built a mill in 1788 or '90, but soon after sold out his improvements to the Pulteney Estate. The mill went to decay; and there were no other white settlers for several years.⁵ Among the earliest settlers were Jeremiah Olmstead, who located a short distance s. of the present site of the House of Refuge, in 1798-99; Wm. Cole, who established a ferry, in 1805; and Enos Stone, who built a mill, in 1808. In 1802, Nath'l Rochester, Wm. Fitzhugh, and Charles H. Carroll, from Md., purchased a tract of 300 acres at the Upper Falls; and in 1812 they caused their land to be laid out for settlement. In the same year Francis and Matthew Brown, from Mass., and Thomas Mumford, laid out a tract of 200 acres adjoining the former, and commenced the erection of mills, &c.⁶

The war with Great Britain broke out at the time when the first efforts were made to build up Rochester, and seriously retarded the progress of settlement. The fear of Indian hostilities and of hostile invasion from Canada caused many of the pioneer settlers to abandon their new homes and emigrate to the more populous sections of the country. At the close of the war, settlements commenced throughout Western N. Y. with increased rapidity; and Rochester immediately felt the new impulse. A large number of settlers came in, mills were built, and the place immediately became the commercial and manufacturing center of the fertile Genesee country. The finishing of the Erie Canal gave a new impetus to the business of the place and served to greatly extend its manufacturing interests. Since that time the city has steadily and rapidly increased both in population⁷ and business, until it has arrived at a front rank among the inland cities of the State.

RUSH—was formed from Avon, (Livingston co.,) March 13, 1818. It lies near the center of the s. border of the co. Its surface is rolling, with a w. inclination. Genesee River forms its w. boundary; and Honeoye Creek flows w. through the town and enters the river near the center of the w. border. In the w. part, along the river, are extensive flats. The soil is a sandy, calcareous

¹ The central building is 86 by 60 ft., and 3 stories high. The wings are each 148 by 32 ft.,—making the entire length of the building 382 feet. Juvenile delinquents are sentenced to this institution from the central, northern, and western parts of the State—those from the eastern part being sent to a similar institution on Wards Island, New York City. The inmates spend a portion of each day in study and a portion in laboring at some useful employment. The principal business carried on is the manufacture of shoes and brushes. A library of 9,000 volumes is connected with the institution. The yearly cost is about $31,000, and the earnings of the inmates $12,000. See p. —.

⁴ Aaron Burr visited the place in 1795 and made a minute and critical survey of the Falls. In 1797 Louis Philippe and his two brothers, then in exile, accompanied by Robert Morris, visited the place.

⁵ See p. —.

⁶ Charles Harford built a small mill in 1807,—the first one after that of Ebenezer Allen. The Browns built a race in 1812, and started a store. The same year Samuel J. Andrews and Moses Atwater laid out a tract of land for settlement. Among the settlers who came in about this time were Rev. Abelard Reynolds, Dr. Jonah Brown, (the first physician,) Abraham Starks, John Matlock, (the first lawyer,) Henry Skinner, Israel Scranton, Lascum Knapp, Hezekiah Noble, Joseph Hughes, Ebenezer Kelly, Ira West, Elisha and Henry Ely, Porter P. Peck, Josiah Bissell, jr., Michael Conly, Harvey Montgomery, Charles D. Farman, and Geo. G. Still. The first child born was a son of Enos Stone, May 4, 1810. Hamlet Scranton built the first framed dwelling, in 1812, on the present site of the Eagle Tavern.

F. Branch of the N. Y. C. R. R., contains a saw and grist mill and 30 houses; North Rush, (p. v.) in the n. w. part, about 1 mi. e. of Scottsville station, contains a church and 16 houses. Genesee River R. R. Junction is 1 mi. w. of West Rush. The first settlement was commenced in 1799, by Maj. Wm. Markham and Ransom Smith, from N. H.¹ The first settled minister was Elder Goff, (Bap.)²

SWEDEN—was formed from Murray, (Orleans co.,) April 2, 1813. It lies on the w. border of the co., near the center. Its surface is level and gently rolling. A high ridge passes e. and w. through the town, n. of the center. Salmon Creek rises in the s. w. part and flows in an e. and n. e. course through the town. The soil is clay and clay loam. Brockport,³ (p. v.) in the n. part, a canal village and r. r. station, was incorp. April 26, 1829, contains 6 churches, the Brockport Collegiate Institute,⁴ a bank, 2 newspaper offices, 4 founderies, a planing mill, a manufactory of mowers and reapers, an extensive carriage manufactory, and a rotary pump manufactory. Pop. 2,143. Sweden Center, (Sweden p. o.) near the center, contains 2 churches and 20 houses; and West Sweden, near the s. w. corner, 2 churches and 15 houses. The first settlement was commenced in 1807,⁵ by Nathaniel Poole and Walter Palmer. There are 10 churches in town.⁶

UNION—was formed from Clarkson, Oct. 11, 1852. It is the n. w. corner town of the co. Lake Ontario forms its n. boundary. Its surface is slightly rolling and inclines toward the lake. It is drained by several small streams, the principal of which is Little Sandy Creek. The soil is a sandy, clayey, and gravelly loam. Salt was manufactured to a limited extent by the early settlers. Clarkson Center, (p. v.) in the s. part, contains 35 houses; North Clarkson, (p. o.) in the e. part, 8 houses; Kendalls Mills, near the s. w. corner, partly in Kendall, (Orleans co.,) is a hamlet. The first settlement was commenced in 1810, by Aretus Haskell.⁷ There are 5 churches in town.⁸ A Fourierite community was organized and located at the mouth of Sandy Creek, in 1843, under Dr. Thellar, of Canadian Patriot War notoriety. The bubble soon burst.

WEBSTER—was formed from Penfield, Feb. 6, 1840. It lies on Lake Ontario, in the n. e. corner of the co. Irondequoit Bay forms the w. boundary. Its surface from the ridge in the s. part has a gentle inclination to the lake. The shore rises in places 50 ft., and in the w., on Irondequoit Bay, 80 to 100 ft. The streams are small and flow n. into the lake. The soil is a sandy loam n. of the ridge, and clay and clay loam in the s. Salt was manufactured to some extent by the early settlers. Webster, (p. v.) in the s. part, on the ridge, contains 4 churches, the Webster Academy, and 310 inhabitants; West Webster, (p. v.) in the s. w. part, contains 40 houses. The first settlement was commenced in 1805, under the agency of Caleb Lyon.⁹ The first church (M. E.) was formed in 1812, by Rev. Solomon Pierce.¹⁰

WHEATLAND—was formed from Caledonia, (Livingston co.,) as "Inverness," Feb. 23, 1821. Its name was changed April 3, 1821. It lies upon the s. border, in the s. w. part of the co. Genesee River flows s. on the e. border. Its surface is rolling. Oatka (or Allens) Creek flows e. through near the center of the town. It is joined at Mumford by the Outlet of Caledonia Springs, forming an excellent water-power. The soil is loam, mixed with clay in the interior, and with sand and gravel in some localities, the whole underlain by limestone. Gypsum is found in large quantities. Scottsville,¹¹ (p. v.) in the e. part, contains 4 churches, a union school, extensive flouring mills, ¹ Among the early settlers were Joseph Morgan, from the w. side of the river, and — Spraker, from the Mohawk. Philip Brice, Chrystal Thomas, Jacob Stall, and John Bell, came in 1801, from Md.; Joseph Sibley and Elisha Sibley, from Rensselaer co., in 1804; Elnathan Perry and Thomas Daily, in 1806. The first birth was that of Joseph Morgan, in 1789. The first deaths were Mr. and Mrs. Markham, in 1791. John Webster kept the first inn; Benj. Campbell the first store; and John Webster built the first gristmill.

² The census reports 5 churches in town; 2 M. E., Evan. Luth., Bap., and Christian.

⁴ This institution is under the supervision of the Baptist denomination, and is in a flourishing condition.

⁵ Samuel Bishop, — Hopkins, Isaiah White, and Stephen Johnson came in 1807; John Reed, Timothy Tylor, and Edward Parks, in 1808. Reuben Moon, with his sons James, Amos, and Isaac, settled in 1809 and '10, in the e. part. James Scott (colored) was the first settler in the s. part, in 1809. John Phelps, Rufus Hammond, and — Knight were the original purchasers of the site of Brockport. James Seymour, George Allen, Thomas R. Roby, Ralph W. Gould, Luke Webster, and Charles Richardson were early settlers. Samuel Bishop kept the first inn, in 1809; Charles Richardson the first store; and Brockway & Blodgett built the first mill.

⁶ 3 M. E., 2 Bap., F. W. Bap., Cong., Presb., Prot. E., and B. C.

⁷ Josiah and Samuel Raddall, from Maine, settled in 1810; Stephen Baxter and John Nowlan, in 1811; — Strunk settled at the mouth of Sandy Creek, in 1811; — Billings and Alanson Thomas, soon after. But few settlers came in until after 1817. The first death was that of — Strunk, in 1812. A. D. Raymond kept the first inn; Daniel Pease the first store; and Alanson Thomas built the first mill, for Le Roy & Bayard.

⁸ M. E., Meth. Prot. Bap., F. W. Bap., and Union.

⁹ John Shoecraft from Ulster Co., Isaac Straight, Daniel Harvey, Abram Foster, Paul Hammond, William Mann, William Harris, John Letts, Samuel Pierce, Samuel Goodenough, and Benjamin Burnett, mostly from N. H. and Vt., settled about 1806. The first birth was in the family of Caleb Lyon; and the first death, that of a child of N. Caines. Wm. Harris taught the first school, in 1810. John Letts kept the first inn; F. B. Corning the first store, in 1812; and Caleb Lyon built the first saw and grist mill, in 1806.

1 Mr. Shaeffer and his sons Peter and Jacob came in Dec. 1789. They found a settlement commenced by Ebenezer Allen and his brother-in-law, Christopher Dugan, near the mouth of Allens Creek, a short distance below Scottsville. Allen had a comfortable log house and about 60 acres of improvement. The Shaeffers became the purchasers of his farm, paying $2.50 per acre. After the sale, Allen left with his family for Mount Morris. The valley of the river below Shaeffer's was slow in settling; Joseph Morgan came in 1792, Andrew Wurtman in 1794 or '95. Peter Conkle, Frederick and Nicholas Hetz-Caleb Aspinwall, Peter Conkle, Frederick and Nicholas Hetz-Caleb were early settlers in the Shaeffer neighborhood. Reuben Heath came from Vt. in 1799. The s. w. part was early settled, under the auspices of Charles Williamson, born Mumford when were John McNaughton and family, near Mumford. Isaac Scott settled at Scottsville about 1790, and Donald McVe soon after. Zachariah Garbutt and family settled at what is now Garbuttville, in 1803; and Powell Carpenter, near Scottsville, in 1804. The first marriage was that of Peter Shaeffer, jr., and a daughter of Jacob Schocover, in 1790. (Ebenezer Allen had previously added another inmate to his haven by a pretended marriage with Lucy Chapman. See p. —.) The first death was that of Peter Shaeffer, sen. Jacob Scott kept the first inn, Philip Garbutt and Abram Hanford the first store; and Peter Shaeffer, jr., built the first sawmill, in 1810, and the first gristmill, in 1811. John and Robert McKay built the first gristmill, at Mumford, in 1808; and Donald McKenzie erected the first cloth dyeing works w. of Greece River.

largely produced. At Little Falls, and a few other localities, considerable manufacturing is carried on.

The county seat is located at the village of Herkimer.¹ The courthouse is a fine brick building fronting Main St., near the center of the village. The jail is a stone building, on the opposite side of the st. from the courthouse. The clerk's office is a fireproof brick building, upon the courthouse lot, fronting Court St. The poorhouse is located upon a farm of 65 acres $6\frac{1}{2}$ mi. n. of the courthouse. The average number of inmates is 130, supported at a weekly cost of \$1.30 each. The farm yields a revenue of about \$700. A school is taught about 6 months in the year. The institution is in good condition and seems to be well managed.² The works of internal improvement within the co. are the Erie Canal and the N. Y. Central R. R., both extending along the valley of the Mohawk.

Four weekly newspapers are now published in the co.³

The lands of this co. adjacent to the river were granted mostly in the first half of the last century, and the greater portion now settled was conveyed before the Revolution. The n. portion and small tracts in other sections remained in possession of the State Government until conveyed to Macomb and others.⁴

¹ The first courthouse of the co. was located at Whitesboro, now Oneida co. The first courthouse and jail at Herkimer was burned Jan. 25, 1834. The first co. officers were Henry Staring, First Judge; Michael Myers, Hugh White, and Abraham Hardenburgh, Judges; Jonas Platt, Clerk; Wm. Colbreath, Sheriff; and Moses de Witt, Surrogate.

² The two main buildings of this institution are of stone, and are each 30 by 46 feet.

³ The Telescope was commenced at Herkimer about 1802 by Benj. Corey. It was purchased by David Holt and J. B. Robbins, and discontinued in Jan. 1805.

The Farmers' Monitor was commenced in the same office in 1805 by Holt & Robbins. It was discontinued in 1807.

The Herkimer Pelican was commenced in 1807 or '08 by Benj. Corey, and was discontinued about 1810.

The Herkimer American was commenced in 1810 by J. H. & H. Prentiss. Wm. L. Stone afterward became the publisher. In 1813 or '14 he sold it to Edward P. Seymour, who continued its publication until 1831, when it was discontinued.

Bunker Hill was commenced at Herkimer in 1810 by G. G. Phinney. Its name was changed in 1812 to

The Honest American, under which title it was published a few years.

The People's Friend was commenced at Little Falls in Sept. 1821, by Edward M. Griffin. It was successively published by Joseph A. Noonan, Horatio N. Johnson, and E. G. Palmer & H. N. Johnson. In 1830 it was published as

The People's Friend and Little Falls Gazette. In July, 1834, it passed into the hands of N. S. Benton & Co., who changed its name to

The Mohawk Courier, under which title it is now published by A. W. Eaton.

The Herkimer Herald was commenced in 1828 by John Carpenter. It was removed in a few years to Oswego.

The Republican Farmers' Free Press was commenced at Herkimer in 1830 by — Holt; B. B. Hotchkiss, editor. In 1834 it was removed to Little Falls and its name changed to

The Herkimer County Whig, under which title it was published about 2 years by Larned W. Smith.

The Inquirer was published a short time at Little Falls by Larned W. Smith.

The Herkimer County Journal was commenced in

Dec. 1837, by a company; J. C. Underwood, editor, E. P. Seymour, printer. In 1838 it passed into the hands of O. A. Bove, and in 1840 to Orlando Squires, who removed it to Little Falls. It was succeeded by Daniel Ayer, by whom the paper is now published.

Key of David, [Small papers. A few numbers were issued in 1865 or '54 by G. Squires. The latter paper was designed as a daily, but was issued only tri-weekly.]

The Watchman was issued by Squires about 6 months in 18—.

The Democratic Vindicator was issued by Squires about 2 weeks in 18—.

The Enterprise was issued at Little Falls in 1839 by E. M. Griffin. In 1841 it was succeeded by

The Mohawk Mirror, semi-mo. This paper was discontinued in 1844.

The Truth and Spirit of '96 was published at Little Falls a short time in 18— by H. N. Johnson.

The Herkimer Freeman was commenced at Little Falls in July, 1844, by G. A. Bove. In 1850 he removed it to Mohawk and changed the name to

The Mohawk Times. It was soon after discontinued.

The Franklin Democrat was commenced in 1842 by J. M. Lyon & W. B. Holmes. In 1844 it was removed to Herkimer and its name changed to

The Herkimer County Democrat. In 1849 Mr. Lyon was succeeded by Robert Earl. In 1850 C. C. Witherstone became interested in its publication, and in March, 1854, he became sole proprietor. In Sept. 1854, J. L. Hayse was associated with Mr. Witherstone, and in Dec. 1855, the name of the paper was changed to

The Herkimer American. In May, 1856, Mr. Hayse withdrew; and in July following the paper passed into the hands of R. W. Crain & J. T. Stevens, who changed its name to

The Herkimer County Democrat. — Witherstone soon after became proprietor; and in June, 1859, the paper passed into the hands of H. G. Crouch, its present publisher.

The Lion Independent was commenced in Jan. 1855; G. W. Buzgay, editor, Wm. L. Fish & H. W. Lyman, publishers. In Jan. 1858, it was removed to Utica.

The Mohawk Valley Sentinel was commenced at Mohawk in Jan. 1855, by L. W. Peters & G. W. Gould. In May following Mr. Peters became sole proprietor, and is its present publisher.

ULSTER COUNTY.

This county was formed Nov. 1, 1683,¹ and included the country between the Hudson and the Delaware, bounded n. and s. by due e. and w. lines passing through the mouths of Sawyers and Murderers Creeks. A part of Delaware was taken off in 1797, a part of Greene in 1800, and Sullivan in 1809. A portion was annexed to Orange in 1798, and the town of Catskill was annexed from Albany co. the same year. It lies on the w. bank of the Hudson, centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains — sq. mi. Its surface is mostly a hilly and mountainous upland. The Catskill Mts. occupy the n. w. part; and the Shawangunk Mts. extend n. e. from the s. w. corner nearly through the co. The mountain region consists of irregular ridges and isolated peaks with rocky sides and summits too steep and rough for cultivation. The summits are 1,500 to 2,000 ft. above the Hudson. The remaining parts of the co. are generally broken and hilly. Esopus Creek flows in a tortuous course through the n. part and discharges its waters into the Hudson. It receives Platte Kil from the n. Rondout Creek enters the s. w. corner of the co. and flows n. e. along the w. declivity of the Shawangunk Mts. and enters the Hudson at Rondout. It receives as tributaries Sandburgh Creek in the s. w. part of the co., and Wall Kil near its mouth. The latter stream flows along the e. foot of the Shawangunk Mts. The remaining streams are small brooks and creeks.

The rocks of the co. are composed of the Portage and Chemung shales, in the e. part, and the Shawangunk grit or Oneida conglomerate, in the w. part. Drift deposits are found in nearly every part. Lead ore is found to some extent among the Shawangunk Mts.²

At an early period the Esopus grit was largely quarried and manufactured into millstones.³ Water-limestone of an excellent quality is found and largely quarried.⁴ The Ulster co. Cement has an excellent reputation throughout the United States, and is used in immense quantities on fortifications and other Government works requiring solidity. It was used on Croton, Brooklyn, Cochituate, Albany, Washington, and other water-works. It finds a ready market in every port on the seaboard from New Brunswick to Texas. It has been exported to California and South America, and is largely used in and around New York, Boston, and Philadelphia, upon public and private buildings. The cement rocks are quarried usually on the hillsides, and these openings often extend in galleries under the overlying rock. The rock outcrops in a belt running n. e. and s. w., first appearing on the Hudson a few miles n. of Kingston Point, and extending 20 to 25 mi. to the town of Rochester, but is lost from view at the surface in several places between these points. In the section occupied by the Portage group of rocks are found extensive outcrops of thin bedded sandstone, yielding a fine quality of flagging, which is largely quarried and exported.⁵ The soil is generally a good quality of sandy and gravelly loam, in some places intermixed with clay. Most of the valleys are covered with a deep, rich alluvium.

Most of the land is best adapted to grazing. Dairying is extensively pursued, and spring grain

² A mine was opened near Ellenville more than 40 years ago. It was never worked to profit, and is now abandoned. The Ulster Mine, near Sullivan co. line was opened in 1837. It is 600 or 700 feet above the valley. The galena in these mines is associated with blende, iron and copper pyrites, calcite, and quartz. There are indications and vague traditions that these mines were worked at a much earlier period and yielded profits beyond computation.

³ In Smith's History, written in 1732, this co. is said to be noted for fine flour, beer, and a good breed of draft horses. The millstones—then quarried about 10 mi. from the river—had acquired celebrity, and were said to far exceed those from Colen, in Europe, formerly imported at £80 the pair, while Esopus stones did not cost a fourth part of that sum. Small millstones for family use are still made for the Southern market; but the business has lost much of its former importance. A finer quality of these grits, when calcined and crushed, furnishes the silox used in the glass manufacture at Ellenville.

⁴ Water-limestone was accidentally discovered on the line of the Erie Canal, by Canvass White, an engineer, in 1818. In 1820 he obtained a patent, and subsequently obtained judgment against one or more of the contractors for using it. The first waterlime or cement made in Ulster co. was about the time the Delaware & Hudson Canal was commenced. Its manufacture has now become a leading and profitable pursuit, employing about $1,000,000 of capital and 1,000 men. In March, 1859, there were 15 establishments in the co., owned by individuals and companies.

is raised to some extent. Fruit growing is becoming an important branch of business. Manufactures of sole leather and lumber, are located in the western towns,¹ and water-lime in the eastern. The commerce, carried on by means of the river and canal, is large, and is constantly increasing.

The co. seat is located at Kingston.² The courthouse is a fine stone edifice, situated upon Wall St.³ The jail is a stone building in rear of the courthouse. It is well arranged and furnished and is kept in good order.⁴ The clerk's office is in a fireproof one story building on the corner of Fair and Main Sts.⁵ The poorhouse is located upon a farm of 140 acres, on the s. line of New Paltz, 16 mi. s. w. of Kingston. It is poorly constructed, not ventilated at all, and is entirely unfit for the purposes for which it is used. The average number of inmates is 175, supported at a weekly cost of $1.25 each. A school is taught 6 months in the year.⁶ The farm yields a revenue of $500. The Delaware & Hudson Canal is the only important work of internal improvement in the co. It extends from Rondout, on the Hudson, up Rondout and Sandburgh Creeks, through Kingston, Rosendale, Marbletown, Rochester, and Wawarsing. It opens a direct communication between the coal mines of Penn. and the Hudson. The Delaware & Hudson Canal Co. was incorp. April 23, 1823, and the canal was finished in 1828.⁷

One daily and 7 weekly newspapers are now published in the co.⁸

The Dutch established a trading post upon the present site of Rondout in 1614, and probably a few Dutch families settled in the immediate vicinity soon after. This early settlement was broken up by Indian hostilities, and a new one was commenced between 1630 and '40. This was again attacked by the Indians, and in 1655 was abandoned. Before 1660, settlers had again located at Kingston and vicinity. In 1660 a treaty had been concluded with the Indians; and the people were so unsuspecting of danger that they left open the gates to their fort both day and night. In June, 1663, the Indians came into the fort at Wiltwyck in great numbers, apparently to trade, while the greater part of the people were engaged in their usual avocations out of doors. At a given signal the Indians commenced the work of destruction. Recovering from their first panic, the whites rallied, under the leadership of Thomas Chambers, and finally drove the Indians out of the fort; 18 whites were killed, and 42 were carried away prisoners. The out settlements were all destroyed. A destructive war ensued, in which the Ulster Indians were nearly exterminated. During this war the valley of the Wall Kil was discovered, and soon after the peace of 1663 it was occupied by a colony of French Huguenots.⁹ The settlements gradually extended along the valleys of Esopus,

³ The first county officers under State government were Levi Pauling, First Judge; Egbert Dumond, Sheriff; and Joseph Gasherie, Surrogate.

⁶ The Senate Committee of 1857 report that they found 12 cells for lunatics in an old, dilapidated building so open that it was scarcely possible to keep the inmates from perishing.

⁸ The New York Journal and Advertiser—published by John Holt, and which was removed from New York to Poughkeepsie in 1776 in consequence of British occupation—was published at Kingston from July to Oct. 1777.

The Farmers Register was commenced at Kingston in 1792 by Nicholas Power and Wm. Copp.

The Rising Sun was commenced at Kingston in 1793 by Wm. Copp and Sam'l S. Freer.

The Ulster Gazette was commenced at Kingston in 1798 by Sam'l S. and A. Freer.

The Plebeian was commenced at Kingston in Nov. 1805, by Jesse Buell, who continued as editor until 1813. In 1827 its name was changed to

The Plebeian and Ulster Co. Advertiser.

The Ulster Sentinel was published at Kingston about 1826-28 by Charles G. De Witt.

The Ulster Republican was commenced at Kingston in 1828 by S. Curtiss, jr. It is now published by Hommel & Lounbery.

The Ulster Palladium was commenced at Saugerties in 1828 by P. J. Fish and C. Frary. Its name was subsequently changed to The Ulster Palladium and Manufacturers' Journal.

The National Pioneer was published at Milton in 1830 by Dan'l S. Tutbill.

The Ulster Star was commenced at Saugerties in Jan. 1833, by Wm. Cully.

The Ulster County Whig was commenced at Kingston in 1835 by Wallace & Brown.

The Kingston Democratic Journal was commenced in 1837 by Wm. H. Romeyn, its present publisher.

The Political Reformer was commenced at Kingston in 1840 by H. M. Romeyn.

The Ulster Huguenot was commenced at Kingston in 1843 by J. Cully and T. F. Baldwin.

The Hickory Democrat was issued at Kingston, as a campaign paper, in 1844.

The Ulster Democrat was commenced at Kingston in 1846 by A. A. Bensall. It is now published by S. R. Harlow.

The Kingston Daily Chronicle is issued from the same office.

The Ulster Telegraph was commenced at Saugerties in 1846 by Solomon S. Hommel. Its name was subsequently changed to

The Saugerties Telegraph, and it is now published by R. B. Taylor.

The Rondout Freeman was published in 1845.

The Rondout Courier was commenced in 1847. It is now published by J. P. Hageman.

The Ellenville Journal was commenced in 1847. It is now published by S. Maxwell Taylor.

The People's Press is published at Kingston by Daniel Bradbury.

⁹ After the peace of 1660 the Director General of New Netherlands shipped 11 Indian prisoners to Curacao to be sold as slaves. The outrage led to the attack made in 1663, and this bloody war that followed. Nine days after the retreat of the Indians from the attack upon Wiltwyck, in June, 1663, a rein-

Rondout, and Wall Kil Creeks and their tributaries. Besides the manorial grant of Fox Hall,¹ the English made township grants of Kingston, New Paltz, Marbletown, Rochester, Hurley, Shawangunk, and Marlborough. During the Revolution the frontier settlements were exposed to Indian hostilities, and before the close of the war were all destroyed or abandoned. The river towns were taken by the British in 1777, and most of them were pillaged and burned. The Provincial Congress and State Legislature held several sessions at Kingston during the war and soon after. The people were nearly all ardent patriots; and there were probably fewer tories in this co. than in any other section of the State. Since the Revolution the co. has steadily progressed in wealth and population. The completion of the Delaware & Hudson Canal was a marked era in the history of the industry of the co.; and the commencement of the cement manufacture and stone quarrying have greatly added to its permanent prosperity.

DENNING²—was formed from Shandaken, March 6, 1849. A part of Hardenburgh was taken off in 1859. It lies in the n. w. part of the co., upon the border of Sullivan. Its surface is a broken and mountainous upland. A spur of the Catskill Mts. extends through the town, with a mean elevation of 1,500 to 2,000 ft. Its streams are head branches of Rondout Creek and Never-sink River. The valleys are narrow ravines bordered by steep and rocky hillsides. The soil upon the uplands is a gravelly loam, and in the valleys a sandy loam. The settlements are chiefly confined to the valleys. Denning is a p. o. near the center. Dewittsville is a hamlet near the s. line. This town, though large, has the least population of any town in the co. Its chief wealth consists in its heavy growth of hemlock and hard wood. Settlements were made at a comparatively recent period.³

ESOPUS—was formed from "Kingston," April 5, 1811. A part was set off to Kingston, and a part of Hurley was annexed, in 1818, and a part of New Paltz was annexed April 12, 1842. It lies upon the Hudson, and is the central town upon the e. border of the co. Its surface is rolling in the e. and moderately hilly in the w. A range of hills extends n. and s. through near the center of the town, the highest peak being 1,632 ft. above tide. Hussey Hill, s. of Rondout, is 1,000 ft. high. Wall Kil forms the w. and n. boundaries, and Swarte Kil and Black Creek flow through the s. part.⁴ The soil is a light, clay loam. Fruit growing is becoming an important branch of business. Cement is largely manufactured, and an extensive commerce is carried on by means of the river and Delaware & Hudson Canal.⁵ Port Ewen, (p. v.) upon the Hudson, s. of the mouth of Rondout Creek, is a village built up by the Penn. Coal Co. A large part of the coal brought forward by the canal is here shipped upon barges for the Northern market. Pop. 1,300.⁶ Arnoldton, (p. v.) upon Rondout Creek, in the s. part of the town, contains a church, woolen factory, cotton factory, and 150 inhabitants. South Rondout, upon Rondout Creek, in the n. part, contains an extensive cement and lime factory, a lager beer brewery, a brickyard, several boatyards, and 568 inhabitants. Dashville, upon Rondout Creek, in the s. part, contains a cement factory and 20 houses. Sleightsburg, upon the Hudson, at the mouth of Rondout Creek, contains an extensive shipyard and 40 houses. Esopus, (p. v.) upon the Hudson, contains a church and 40 houses. Amesville (p. o.) and Atkarton are hamlets. Freerville, in the n. part, contains a gristmill and 20 houses. The first settlements were probably made by the Dutch, soon after their first occupation of the co.⁷ The first church (Ref. Prot. D.) of which there is any record was formed in 1751; Rev. G. W. Mancius was the first preacher.⁸

GARDINER⁹—was formed from Rochester, New Paltz, and Shawangunk, April 2, 1853. It is an interior town, lying s. of the center of the co. The surface is rolling in the e. and hilly in the forement of 40 men, under Ensign Myssen, arrived, and relieved the fort. Capt. Krygier, with a cannon and a force of 210 men, pursued the Indians to their forts and destroyed their grain. In Sept. another expedition surprised an Indian fort, 36 mi. s. w. of Wiltwyck, killed the chief and 20 others, and restored 22 captives. The Indians were effectually broken and scattered, and late in the fall they sued for peace and restored all the remaining prisoners except 3.

¹ Thomas Chambers, the original proprietor of this patent, endeavored by will to entail it in his family; but it passed to strangers before the Revolution.

² Named in honor of Wm. H. Denning, former proprietor of a large part of the town.

³ The first sawmill was built in 1827, and the first tannery in 1850, at Dewittsville, by De Witt & Reynolds.

⁴ "Esopus," as known by the Dutch, included both Kingston and the country s. of the Rondout. Their descendants still designate Kingston as "Sopus," and the corporate town above named as "Klein Sopus," or Little Sopus. The word is of Indian origin. The Esopus Indians—who lived in this region when first known to the whites—were of the Algonquin stock, and were allied to the Mohegan and the other river tribes.

⁵ Along the bluffs that overlook the Hudson are several fine country residences. Two lighthouses are built in the river opposite this town.

⁶ Named from John Ewen, President of the Penn. Coal Company. The village was laid out in 1851; nearly all of the inhabitants are more or less interested in the coal trade.

⁸ There are 6 churches in town; 3 Ref. Prot. D., M. E., Prot. E., and Friends.

center and w. The Shawangunk Mts. extend along the w. border.¹ The Wall Kil flows n. e. through near the center and receives Shawangunk Kil from the s. w. The soil is principally a gravelly loam, with clay and alluvium along the streams. Lumber and leather are manufactured to some extent. Tuthilltown, (Tuthill p. o.,) upon Shawangunk Kil, near its mouth, contains 20 dwellings.² Libertyville, (p. o.,) on the n. line, and Jenkinstown are hamlets. The first settlement was made at an early period, by a colony of French Huguenots. The first church was formed in 1833; Rev. Wm. Brush was the first preacher.

HARDENBURGH³—was formed from Denning and Shandaken, April —, 1859. It lies in the extreme w. corner of the co. Its surface is a broken and mountainous upland, the highest summits being 2,000 ft. above tide. It occupies a portion of the watershed between the Hudson and Delaware. Beaver Kil, Mill Brook, and Dry Brook take their rise in the town. West Shandaken is a p. o.; and Dry Brook is a hamlet.

HURLEY⁴—was granted by patent Oct. 19, 1708.⁵ A part of the Hardenburgh Patent was released by Margaret Livingston, and was annexed March 3, 1789; and a part of New Paltz was taken off in 1809, a part of Esopus in 1818, a part of Olive in 1823, a part of Rosendale in 1844, and a part of Woodstock in 1853. It is an interior town, lying n. e. of the center of the co. The surface is a rolling and moderately hilly upland, the highest summits being about 700 ft. above tide. Esopus Creek flows n. e. through the s. part. Along its course are extensive fertile flats. The soil is a sandy loam, a considerable portion lying n. of the creek being unfit for cultivation. Stone quarrying is extensively carried on.⁶ Hurley, (p. v.,) on Esopus Creek, contains a church and 160 inhabitants;⁷ and West Hurley, (p. v.,) in the n. part, 2 churches and 25 dwellings. The first settlements were made by the Dutch, about 1680.⁸ This town became the refuge of the inhabitants of Kingston when the latter place was taken by the British in 1777. The first church (Ref. Prot. D.) was formed in 1800; Rev. Thos. G. Smith was the first pastor.⁹

KINGSTON—was incorp. by patent May 19, 1667, and was recognized as a town May 1, 1702.¹⁰ Fox Hall Patent was annexed March 12, 1787.¹¹ Esopus and Saugerties were taken off in 1811; a part of Esopus was annexed in 1818, and a part was annexed to Saugerties in 1832. It lies upon the Hudson, n. of the center of the co. Its surface is broken and hilly, the highest summit being Kuykuyt or Lookout Mt., about 600 ft. above tide. Esopus Creek flows n. e. through near the center, receiving Saw Kil from the w. as tributary. Rondout Creek forms the s. boundary. The soil is principally a clayey loam. A large business in coal, ice, and stone is carried on by the canal and river. Kingston, (p. v.,) upon Rondout Creek, 2 mi. w. of the Hudson, was incorp. April 6, 1805. Besides the co. buildings, it contains 8 churches, the Kingston Academy, several private seminaries,¹² 3 banks, 1 savings bank, 4 newspaper offices, and several small manufactories.¹³ It is the center of an extensive trade upon the river and canal.¹⁴ Pop. 3,971. Rondout,¹⁵ (p. v.,) upon the Hudson, at the mouth of Rondout Creek, was incorp. April 4, 1849.

² A woolen factory was built at this place at an early period.

⁴ Named from Geo. Lovelace's family, who were Barons Hurley in Ireland.—Benson's Memoir, p. 49. In early times it was called "Hurley Common."

⁶ The stone obtained from these quarries is used for building and flagging. The business gives employment to several hundred men.

⁸ Among the early settlers were families named Crispell, Du Bois, Cole, Newkirk, Schepmeys, Ten Eyck, Wynkoop, Elmendorf, Roosa, Constable, Louw, Delamater, and others,—mostly from Holland and Belgium. In 1719 the following persons held the office of trustees of the corporation:—Cornelius Kool, Adrien Garretsie, Jacob Du Bois, Barnabas Swartwout, Jacob Rutse, Nicolaes Roosa, and Charles Wyle. The first inn of which there is definite knowledge was kept about 1760, by Charles De Witt, at Hurley Village. Two gristmills were erected soon after the first settlement.

⁹ There are 3 churches in town; 2 Ref. Prot. D., and M. E.

¹² The Golden Hill Seminary and the Brookside Female Seminary, two private boarding schools, are located at this place.

¹⁴ The principal trade is that of stone, obtained from the neighboring quarries.

¹⁵ Formerly named "The Strand" and "Kingston Landing," when the canal was located, it was named "Bolton," from the then president of the canal company; but its present name was adopted soon after. It is the Dutch name for redout. It was,

It contains 8 churches, a bank, and newspaper office. The people are principally engaged in the coal trade; and a large number of steamers, barges, and sailing vessels are constantly engaged in freighting coal, stone, and cement from this place.¹ The Newark Cement Co. manufacture _____ barrels of cement annually,—being a larger amount than is produced at any similar establishment in the country. Pop. 5,978. Eddyville, upon Rondout Creek, 2½ mi. from its mouth, contains a cement factory² and about 50 dwellings. It is the n. terminus of the D. & H. Canal. Wilbur, (p. v.), on the Rondout, below Eddyville, contains about 100 houses. It is the center of an immense trade in flaggingstones.³ Fly Mountain is a p. o. Dutch Settlement is a hamlet in the n. part. Flatbush contains a cement factory.⁴ The Dutch built a trading and military post here as early as 1614; but every thing was swept away in the wars of 1644-45. Another settlement was commenced in 1652, and abandoned in 1655. The first permanent settlers came in soon after, but suffered much from Indian hostilities for several years.⁵ Feb. 19, 1777, the first State Convention adjourned from Fishkill to Kingston. On the 9th of September following, the State Legislature convened here, but dispersed upon the approach of a British force under Sir Henry Clinton on the 7th of Oct. At that time the public records were hastily removed to the back settlements, and the place was burned.⁶ The first church (Ref. Prot. D.) was formed May 30, 1658. There are 18 churches in town.⁷

LLOYD—was formed from New Paltz, April 15, 1845. It lies upon the Hudson, s. of the center of the co. Its surface is mostly a rolling and hilly upland, terminating in a bluff upon the river; and the average height of the surface above tide is about 200 ft. Swarte Kil flows n. along its w. boundary and Black Brook n. through the center. The soil is generally a clay and gravelly loam. The bluffs along the river are principally occupied by fine country seats. New Paltz Landing, (p. v.), upon the river, contains 2 churches and 50 houses;⁸ Centerville (Lloyd p. o.) a church and 17 houses. Lewisburgh is a hamlet on the river, s. of New Paltz Landing. Riverside is a p. o. in the n. e. part. The date of first settlement in this town is quite ancient; but most of the details of the first years are lost. It was originally named "Paltz." The first church (M. E.) was formed in 1787. There are 3 churches in town; 2 M. E. and Presb.

MARBLETOWN—was formed by patent June 25, 1703.⁹ It was first recognized as a town March 7, 1788. A part of Olive was taken off in 1823, and a part of Rosendale in 1844. It is near the geographical center of the co. The surface is a hilly upland, broken by the valleys of the streams. Stone Ridge, near the center, the highest summit, is about 400 ft. above tide. Esopus Creek flows through the n. part, and Rondout Creek through the s. e. corner. The soil is chiefly a clay and sandy loam. A quarry of Shawangunk grit has been opened, and a sulphur spring has been found near the line of Rosendale. Stone Ridge, (p. v.), s. e. of the center, contains 2 churches and 80 houses; Kripplebush, (p. v.), in the s. part, a church and 12 houses. High Falls¹⁰ is a hamlet upon the canal. Marbletown is a p. o. Bruceville (High Falls p. o.) is a small canal village on the line of Rosendale, in the s. e. corner. The first church (Ref. Prot. D.) was formed in 1738.¹¹ at an early period of its growth, a maze of crooked lanes, bordered by rude shanties and inhabited by a floating population of Irish laborers. The village still contains a large proportion of Irish, and has a large and increasing number of German inhabitants. Its appearance has much improved within a few years.

MARLBOROUGH—was formed as a precinct, from Newburgh Precinct, March 12, 1772,

¹ About 20 steamers are engaged in the freighting business of this place. Lines of steamers also run regularly to Albany, New York, and intermediate places. A steam ferry connects the place with Rhinebeck, on the p. bank of the Hudson.

² The Lawrence Cement Co. manufacture 90,000 barrels of cement annually.

³ The aggregate amount of this trade is more than $250,000 per annum.

⁴ The Kingston and Rosendale Cement Co. manufacture 70,000 barrels of cement annually.

⁵ The site of the first Dutch fort is said to be upon a plateau in the w. bounds of Rondout. The locality is still called by its Indian name, Ionkhookie, said to signify "Canoe Harbor." On the 7th of June, 1663, as most of the people were at work in the fields, the Indians made a sudden attack upon the fort, (which was carelessly left open), killed 18, and carried away 42 as prisoners. Capt. Chambers rallied the men, drove out the Indians, and commenced a war in which the captives were mostly reclaimed and the Indians nearly exterminated. The first marriage on the church record was that of Jan Janes Timmermans and Catharine Mattyson, Oct. 3, 1660.

⁶ The British force under Gen. Vaughan, consisting of 3,000 men, was sent up the river to co-operate with Burgoyne. For 10 days after passing the barriers at the Highlands they amused themselves by burning and plundering the places along the river. They took possession of Kingston Oct. 17, and, after plundering it several hours, they burned every house but one. The houses were mostly of stone, and the woodwork was easily replaced after the retreat of the British. Several of the early meetings of the Legislature were held at this place; and the first State Constitution was formed here.

⁷ 2 Ref. Prot. D., 2 M. E., Bap., Prot. E., Presb., and Jewish, at Kingston; 2 M. E., Presb., Germ. Evang. Luth., R. C. Bap., Prot. E., Ref. Prot. D., and Jewish, at Rondout; and M. E. at Eddyville.

⁸ A ferry connects this place with Poughkeepsie.

⁹ This patent was granted to Col. Henry Beekman, Capt. Thos. Gaston, and Capt. Chas. Brodhead, in trust for the inhabitants. Trustees continued to be annually elected until 1808. The records of 1703 contain the names of the following petitioners for grants of land.—Moeya Du Puy, Thomas Vandemarke, Loundart Kool, Richard Wilson, Jeremy Kettell, jr., Gysbert Roosa, Wm. Nottingham, John Cook, sen., and Capt. Richard Brodhead.

¹⁰ The cement works of Delafield & Baxter, at High Falls, employ about 50 men, and produce about 40,000 barrels annually. The falls on the Rondout are here about 50 feet high, affording a great amount of water-power.

¹¹ The census reports 5 churches in town; 3 Ref. Prot. D. and 2 M. E. Rev. Derick Romeyn and Rev. J. R. Hardenburgh (afterward Pres. of Rutgers College) were both pastors of the Ref. Prot. D. church at Stone Ridge.

and as a town, March 7, 1788. Plattekill was taken off in 1800. It lies upon the Hudson, in the s. e. corner of the co. Its surface is broken and hilly. Marlborough Mt., a rocky ridge along the w. border, is about 1,000 ft. above the river. The streams are principally small brooks flowing directly into the Hudson. The soil is a slaty loam. Milton, (p. v.,) upon the Hudson, in the n. part, contains 3 churches and about 75 dwellings. Marlborough,¹ (p. v.,) in the s. part, contains 2 churches, several manufactories,² and about 50 dwellings. Lattingtown is a hamlet. The date and statistics of the early settlement have not been ascertained. The first church (Presb.) was formed Jan. 1, 1764.³

NEW PALTZ⁴—was granted by patent by Gov. Andros, Sept. 29, 1677.⁵ Its bounds were enlarged April 1, 1775, and a part of Hurley was annexed Feb. 2, 1809. A part of Esopus was taken off in 1842, a part of Rosendale in 1844, Lloyd in 1845, and a part of Gardiner in 1853. It is an interior town, lying s. e. of the center of the co. Its surface is mostly a hilly upland. The Shawangunk Mts. extend along the w. border. Paltz Point, the highest summit, is 700 ft. above tide. Wall Kil flows n. e. through near the center; it is bordered by wide, fertile flats. The soil is generally a fine quality of sandy loam. Hay is one of the principal products and exports. New Paltz, (p. v.,) upon Wall Kil, near the center, contains the New Paltz Academy, 2 churches, and 45 dwellings. Butterville, Ohioville, and Springtown are hamlets. The first settlements were made by a colony of French Huguenots, a few years before the date of the patent.⁶ The oldest church record is in French, and bears date of 1683. There are 3 churches in town; Ref. Prot. D., M. E., and Friends.

OLIVE—was formed from Shandaken, Marbletown, and Hurley, April 15, 1823. A part was annexed to Woodstock, and a part of Woodstock was annexed, in 1853. It is an interior town, lying a little n. w. of the center of the co. The surface is mountainous in the n. and w. and hilly in the s. and e.⁷ A considerable portion of the mountainous region is too rough for profitable cultivation. Esopus Creek flows e. through the town, a little n. of the center. The soil is a sandy, gravelly, and clayey loam. Lumbering and tanning⁸ are largely carried on. Shokan,⁹ (p. v.,) upon the creek, n. of the center, contains 2 churches and 20 houses; Samsonville,¹⁰ (p. v.,) on the s. line, a church, tannery, and 30 houses; Olive, (p. v.,) in the n. e. corner, a church and 25 houses; and Olive City, (Olive Bridge p. o.,) on the creek, near the center, a tannery and 20 houses. The first settlements were made in the Esopus Valley, in 1740.¹¹ The first church (Ref. Prot. D.) was formed at Shokan, in 1800.¹²

PLATTEKILL¹³—was formed from Marlborough, March 21, 1800. A part of Shawangunk was annexed April 3, 1846, but was restored March 28, 1848. It lies upon the s. border of the co., near the s. e. corner. Its surface is broken by a series of ridges of an average elevation of 300 ft. above the valleys. Its streams are small brooks and creeks. The soil is a fine quality of sandy and gravelly loam. Plattekill, (p. v.,) near the s. line, contains a church and 25 dwellings; Clintondale, (p. v.,) in the n. part, on the line of Lloyd, a church and 20 dwellings; Flint, (New Hurley p. o.,) in the s. w. corner, on the line of Shawangunk, a church and 15 dwellings; and Modena, (p. v.,) near the n. w. corner, 16 dwellings. The first settlements were made about

² About 15,000 wheelbarrows and $40,000 worth of agricultural implements are manufactured annually.

³ The census reports 9 churches in town; 2 Presb., 2 M. E., 2 Friends, Prot. E., Bap., and Christian.

⁴ Pronounced New Pawtitz, and named from Pfalz, the German name of the Palatinate.

⁵ The patentees of this tract were Lewis Du Bois, Christian Deyo, Abraham Hasbrouck, Aodries Le Fevre, Jean Brocq, Pierre Deyo, Lavrens Beverie, Anthony Crespell, Abraham Du Bois, Hugo Frere, Isaac Du Bois, and Simon Le Fevre.

⁶ The valley of Wall Kil was discovered by one of the parties engaged in pursuing the destroyers of Wiltwyck, in the summer of 1663. The persecuted exile from France, who first sought refuge in Germany, and thence emigrated to America, decided upon settling here. They bought the land of the Indians May 26, 1677, and soon after they settled in their new homes. In 1723, the owners of the patent intrusted its care to 12 trustees, known as "The Twelve Men." These trustees were elected annually, until the organization of the town under the State Government. The Twelve Men in 1785 were Simon Du Bois, Jacobus Hasbrouck, Johannes Freer, Jacob Hasbrouck, jr., Abraham Donaldson, Abraham Eltinge, Petris Hasbrouck, Samuel Bevier, Benjamin Deyoe, Isaac Le Fevre, Matthew Le Fevre, and Abraham Ein. By act of March 31, 1785, the allotments made by the Twelve Men were confirmed. Their "Common Book" was to be retained by the Surveyor General until a convenient time, and then it was to be deposited with the co. clerk of Ulster co., to be forever preserved. Its records are deemed authentic evidence in court.

⁷ The towns of Olive, Rochester, and Denning, corner on a hill which is about 2,700 feet above tide. Shokan Point is about 3,100 feet high; and the average elevation of the lowlands is 800 feet above tide.

⁸ There are 4 extensive tanneries in town, one of which, owned by Pratt & Samson, is the largest oak tannery in the co. It produces 70,000 sides of sole leather annually.

⁹ Pronounced Sho-kan'.

¹⁰ Named from Gen. Henry A. Samson.

¹¹ Geo. Middagsh settled in 1740; Samuel Cox, in 1742; William Nottingham, in 1745,—all near Olive Bridge; John Crispell, in 1747, a little e. of Shokan; Hendrick Crispell, at Shokan, in 17—; Joho Coops, in 17—; and Thos. Bush, in 1756, a. of Olive City. The first inn was kept at Olive Bridge, by Conrad Du Bois; and the first store, sawmill, and gristmill, by Lemuel Winchell, at Winchells Falls. Two sons of Frederick Bush were carried off by the Indians in 1781. The early history of this town is blended with that of Marbletown.

¹² The census reports 4 churches in town; 2 Ref. Prot. D., Bap., and M. E.

¹³ Pronounced Plaw-ta-kill, and signifies "Flat Brook."

the commencement of the last century. The first church (Ref. Prot. D.) was formed in 1770; Rev. Stephen Goetschius was the first pastor.¹

ROCHESTER²—was incorp. by patent June 25, 1703,³ and organized as a town March 7, 1788. A part of Middletown (Delaware co.) was taken off in 1789, Neversink (Sullivan co.) in 1798, Wawarsing in 1806, and a part of Gardiner in 1853. A part of Wawarsing was annexed March 21, 1823. It is an interior town, lying a little s. w. of the center of the co. Ranges of mountains extend along the e. and w. borders, and a rolling upland occupies the central portions. Rondout Creek flows n. e. through the s. part, and receives as tributaries Sander Kil, Peters Kil, and several other streams. Vernooey Creek flows s. through the w. part. The soil upon the uplands is a gravelly loam, and in the valleys a sandy loam mixed with clay. The Delaware & Hudson Canal extends along the valley of Rondout Creek. Esopus millstones are largely quarried in this town. An extensive cave near Kyserike has been explored about half a mile. Alligerville and Port Jackson are small villages upon the canal. Accord and Kyserike are p. offices. The first settlements were made about 1700, by the Dutch.⁴ The first church (Ref. Prot. D.) was formed soon after the first settlement. There are now 2 churches in town; Ref. Prot. D. and M. E.

ROSENDALE—was formed from Marbletown, New Paltz, and Hurley, April 26, 1844. It is an interior town, lying e. of the center of the co. Its surface is a rolling and broken upland, the highest summits being 200 to 500 ft. above the valleys. Rondout Creek flows n. e. through near the center, and receives Koxing Kil from the s. and Kottle Kil from the n. The Delaware & Hudson Canal extends along the valley of the Rondout. The soil is principally a sandy loam. The manufacture of cement has become one of the most important branches of business.⁵ There is an extensive paper mill in town. Rosendale, (p. v.) upon the creek and canal, contains 2 churches and 450 inhabitants; Lawrenceville, 1 mi. w., 40 houses; Bruceville, (High Falls p. o.,) upon the line of Marbletown, about 30 houses. Green Locks, a canal village, on the e. border, and Whiteport, in the n. part, each contain about 20 houses. The first settlements were made by the Dutch, about 1700.⁶ The first church (Ref. Prot. D.) was formed in 1797; Rev. Thos. G. Smith was the first preacher.⁷

SAUGERTIES⁸—was formed from Kingston, April 5, 1811. An error in the boundary was corrected June 8, 1812, and a part of Kingston was annexed April 2, 1832. It lies upon the Hudson, in the n. e. corner of the co. The surface is rolling in the e. and hilly in the center and w. The hills upon the river and extending 2 mi. back are underlaid by limestone, from which quicklime and cement are manufactured. Farther w. are quarries of fine flagging stone. Platte Kil flows through the town in a tortuous course and forms the principal drainage. Kauters Kil flows along the n. border. The soil along the river is a clayey loam, and upon the uplands a sandy and gravelly loam. Quarrying is extensively carried on.⁹ Saugerties, (p. v.,) upon the Hudson, at the mouth of Esopus Kil, was incorp. April 26, 1831, as "Ulster." Its name was changed April 10, 1855. It contains the Saugerties Academy, 7 churches, a newspaper office, and several extensive manufactories. Pop. 3,334. Malden, (p. v.,) upon the Hudson, 2 mi. n. of Saugerties, is the seat of an extensive stone trade. Pop. 350. Glasco, (p. v.,) upon the Hudson, 3 mi. s. of Saugerties, is the seat of an extensive brick manufactory and stone trade. Pop.

¹ There are 7 churches in town; 3 M. E., Wes. Meth., Ref. Prot. D., Presb., and Friends.

² Named in honor of the Earl of Rochester. The Indian name is said to be Mom-bac-cus.

³ The first trustees under the patent were Col. Henry Beekman, Joachim Schoonmaker, and Moeya Du Puy.

⁴ In 1703 the following persons resided in town:—Van Gerritse Decker, Lodewyck Hornbeck, Loondart Kool, sr., Anthony Hornbeck, Wm. De La Montaigne, Teunis Oosterhout, Jan Cartwright, Gysbert Van Garde, Andries Davies, and David Du Bois. Teunis Oosterhout had a "corne mill" on Mombaccus Kil, in 1743.

⁵ More than one-half of the cement made in the co. is manufactured in this town. The water-limestone quarries may be said to constitute the wealth of the town. The cement manufactories are as follows:—

	Barrels.
Newark and Rosendale Lime and Cement Co., at Whiteport, manufactures annually.....	125,000
Rosendale Cement Co., Rosendale, msufact's annually	40,000
Clearwater & Martin, " " " "	40,000
David S. Ogden, " " " "	28,000
Luther Hoffman, " " " "	8,000

⁶ An inn was kept at the old "Rosendale Farm" in 1711.

⁷ There are 5 churches in town; 2 Ref. Prot. D., Bap., Friends, and R. C.

⁸ This name is said to be derived from the Dutch "Zagger," a Sawyer, from a sawmill built by Robert Livingston on Saw Kil. Ebenezer Wooster first used the name in 1749, when surveying the bounds of the Hardenburgh Patent.

In 1826, Henry Barclay, of N. Y., purchased the present site of the village, and the water-power. He built a dam and constructed a race which made a fall of 47 feet. He soon after built a rolling mill, paper mill, and cotton factory. The last named has since been changed to a white lead factory. The Ulster Iron Works employs 300 hands night and day, and manufactures 6,000 tons of bar and hoop iron annually. The paper mill employs 125 hands, and turns out 600 tons of paper annually. The White Lead Works employs 40 men, and manufactures 1,500 tons of paint annually. A steam mill for dressing stone turns out 1½ tons daily. The village is also largely engaged in commerce. About 30 sail-vessels are employed in exporting stone and brick. A steam ferry plies between this place and Tivoli station on the Hudson River R. R., and a daily steamer runs to New York.

⁹ It is estimated that 2,000 persons are employed in quarrying, dressing, drawing, and shipping stone from this town. The varieties are chiefly flagging and curb stone; but cut stone for many uses is also sold. About a half million of dollars' worth of stone is shipped annually from Saugerties, Malden, and Glasco.

about 300. West Camp, (p. v.), upon the Hudson, in the n. part, contains a church and 15 houses. Quarryville, (p. v.), in the n. part, and Unionville, near the center, each contain about 300 inhabitants, who are mostly engaged in getting out stone from the neighboring quarries. Glencarie, upon the s. line, Van Aikens Mills, near the center, and Ashbury, are small villages. The first settlements were made by the Dutch, at an early period; but the largest immigration was that of the German Palatinates,¹ a colony of whom located at West Camp in 1710. The first church (Luth.) was organized at West Camp, in 1711. There are now 15 churches in town.²

SHANDAKEN³—was formed from Woodstock, April 9, 1804. A part was annexed from Neversink (Sullivan co.) in 1809. A part of Olive was taken off in 1823, Denning in 1849, and a part of Hardenburgh in 1859. It is the n. w. corner town of the co. Its surface is mostly a mountainous upland, broken by deep ravines. The declivities are steep and rocky, and a large share of the surface is too rough for profitable cultivation. The town is not inhabited except along the valleys, the mountain region being left to wild beasts and hunters. The soil in the valleys is a clay and sandy loam. The principal branches of business pursued are lumbering, shingle making, and tanning. Shandaken,⁴ (p. v.), in the n. part, contains a church, a large tannery, a sawmill, gristmill, and 20 houses; Pine Hill, (p. v.), in the n. w. part, a sawmill, gristmill, tannery, and 15 houses. The Corner, (p. o.), in the extreme e. angle of the town; Phœnicia, (p. o.), in the n. e. corner; and Woodland, (p. o.), s. e. of the center, are hamlets. At each of these places, and at several other points in town, are extensive tanneries.⁵ The first settlements were made before the Revolution.⁶ There are 2 churches in town; Ref. Prot. D. and M. E.

SHAWANGUNK⁷—was formed as a precinct Dec. 17, 1743, and as a town March 7, 1788. A part of Gardiner was taken off in 1853, a part was annexed to Plattekill in 1846 and restored in 1848. It is the central town upon the s. border of the co. The surface is a hilly and broken upland. The Shawangunk Mts., extending along the w. border, are about 2,000 ft. above tide. The Shawangunk River forms about $\frac{1}{2}$ of the s. boundary, and flows n. e. through near the center, receiving Muddy Kil from the w. Wall Kil flows n. e. through the e. part, receiving Muddy Kil from the e. and Dwaars Kil from the w. The soil is generally a gravelly loam. Shawangunk, (p. v.), in the s. e. part, contains a gristmill, sawmill, spoke factory, and 20 houses; Ulsterville, (p. o.), in the s. w. part, 10 houses; and Galesville Mills, (p. o.) on Wall Kil, a church, sawmill, gristmill, and 10 houses. Dwaars Kil, near the center, is a p. o. Bruynswick, (p. o.) on the n. line, contains a church and 10 houses; Jamesburgh, (p. v.), near the extreme w. angle, a church and 12 houses. New Hurley (p. o.) is a hamlet, on the line of Plattekill. The first settlements were made along the valley of Shawangunk River, by the Dutch, between 1680 and 1700.⁹ New Fort is a locality where two Indian battles were fought in 1663. The first church (Ref. Prot. D.) was formed Oct. 10, 1753; Rev. V. Vrooman was the first pastor.¹⁰

WAWARSING¹¹—was formed from Rochester, March 14, 1806. A part was re-annexed to Rochester in 1823. It is the s. w. corner town in the co. Its surface is mostly a mountainous upland, broken by several deep valleys. The Shawangunk Mts. extend along the e. border; and spurs of the Catskills occupy the central and w. parts. The highest peaks are 2,000 to 3,000 ft. above tide. The mountainous portions in the e. and n. w. corners are rocky and precipitous and

³ Said to signify "Rapid Water."

⁵ 200,000 sides of leather are annually manufactured in this town.

⁶ John Longyear, Cornelius Furlough, Jacob Brink, Coonradt Wisner, and Frederick Markle, all settled before the war. — Witherspoon taught school at The Corner at an early period.

⁸ The Dutch applied the term Dwaar to streams that flowed sometimes in one direction and sometimes in another. This phenomenon is true of waters at the mouth only of the stream.

⁹ Among the early settlers were Jacobus Bruyn, Cornelius Scloonmaker, Abram Schutt, Zachariah Hoffman, Benjamin Smedes, Jacob Decker, John Terwilliger, and Johannes Decker. Along Wall Kil, Robert Kain, Robert Graham, David Davis, Daniel Winfield, Hendrick Van Wegen, and James Penneck settled from 1710 to '30. A school was taught near Bruynswick p. o., between 1730 and '40. The first mill was probably at the junction of Wall and Dwaars Kils, 1 m. below Shawangunk Village.

¹⁰ There are 4 churches in town; 2 Ref. Prot. D. and 2 M. E.

¹¹ Usually abbreviated to "War-sink." It is an Indian word, and said to signify "black bird's nest."

too rough for cultivation. The s. w. portion is a hilly upland. Rondout Creek flows in a deep valley from the w. border s. e. to near the center; thence it turns at nearly right angles and flows n. e. to the e. border. It receives from the s. Sandburgh Creek, a stream which drains the w. declivities of the Shawangunk Mts., Beer Creek, and the outlet of Cape Pond, which flows through near the center and empties into Sandburgh Creek. The Delaware & Hudson Canal extends along the valleys of Rondout and Sandburgh Creeks, at the w. foot of the Shawangunk Mts. The soil in the valleys is principally a sandy loam. Lumber,¹ leather, glass, earthenware, iron, and axes are extensively manufactured in different parts of the town. Ellenville, (p. v.) upon Sandburgh Creek, at the mouth of Beer Kil, was incorp. in Sept. 1858. It is an important canal village, and contains several churches, a high school,² newspaper office, and an extensive glass factory.³ Pop. 1,700. Napanock, (p. v.) upon the Rondout, above its junction with the Sandburgh, contains several churches and manufactories,⁴ and a population of about 700. Homo-wack, (p. v.) a canal village, upon the line of Sullivan co., contains a church, glass factory, woolen factory, and 20 houses. Kerhonkson, (p. v.) a canal village, on the line of Rochester, contains a church and 30 houses. Lackawack, (p. v.) upon the Rondout, in the w. part, contains a church, an extensive tannery, and about 20 houses. Greenfield, (p. v.) in the s. w. part, contains 2 churches, a gristmill, sawmill, tannery, and about 25 houses. Wawarsing, (p. v.) in the n. e., contains a gristmill, sawmill, taunery, and about 25 houses. Port Benjamin, a canal village, s. of the Wawarsing, contains about 25 houses. Port Nixon, a village upon Rondout Creek and the canal, in the n. e. part, contains a church and about 25 houses. The first settlements were made about the commencement of the last century, principally by the Dutch.⁵ During the Revolution the inhabitants were killed, captured, or driven off by the Tories and Indians.⁶ The first church (Ref. Prot. D.) was formed in 1745; Rev. J. Fryenmoet was the first preacher.⁷

WOODSTOCK—was formed April 11, 1787, from the settlements of Great and Little Shandaken, which had been attached to Hurley. A part of Middletown (Delaware co.) was taken off in 1789, Windham (Greene co.) in 1798, and Shandaken in 1804. A part of Olive was taken off, and parts of Olive and Hurley were annexed, Nov. 25, 1853. It lies upon the n. border of the co., e. of the center. Its surface is mostly a mountainous upland, too rough for profitable cultivation. Several fine valleys extend through the town, separating the upland into several distinct ridges and peaks. Overlook Mt., in the n. e. corner, is 3,500 ft. above tide. Near its summit is Shues Lake, a beautiful sheet of clear water. The scenery in this vicinity is among the finest in Eastern N. Y. Saw Kil and Beaver Kil are the principal streams. The soil is a clay and slaty loam upon the uplands and a gravelly loam in the valleys. Woodstock, (p. v.) in the s. e. part, contains 2 churches, a tannery, and 20 houses; Bearsville, (p. o.) 2 mi. w. of Woodstock, is a hamlet; Lake Hill is a p. o., near the center. The first settlements were made just before the commencement of the Revolution.⁸ The first church (Luth.) was formed in 1806.⁹

² The Ellenville High School, established in 1853. It is a boarding and day school.

³ The Ellenville Glass Co., incorp. in 1836, turns out more than $100,000 worth of demijohns, bottles, &c. annually. It employs 200 hands.

⁴ The Napanock Ax Factory employs about 100 men, and manufactures 150,000 axes annually. The Napanock Iron Works employs 50 or 60 men, and manufactures pig and wrought iron and r. e. car axles.

⁵ The first settlers were Abram Bevier, John Bevier, from New Paltz, in 1708, Egbert De Witt, Wm. Nuttingham, and Andries De Witt. An inn was kept by Johannes Bevier before the Revolution. The first store at Wawarsing was kept by Abram Vernooy; the first gristmill was built by Cornelius Vernooy.

⁶ On the 12th of Aug. 1781, a large party of Tories and Indians, under one Caldwell, appeared in this town. They had formed the design of falling upon Napanock, but, being informed that that place was defended by a cannon, they came to Wawarsing before the inhabitants were up in the morning. At this place was a stone fort on the site of B. C. Hornbeck's house. Two men and a young woman discovered the enemy before they reached the fort, and the young women succeeded in closing the door just in time to prevent it from being burst open by the savages. The latter, finding further attack dangerous, dispersed for burning and plundering the nut settlements. Some 5 or 6 dwellings, 7 bars, and a gristmill were burned, and on the next day the enemy withdrew, laden with spoils. Several lives were lost on both sides, and much property was destroyed.—The Indians; or Narratives of Massacres and Depredations on the Frontiers of Wawarsing and Vicinity, p. 21.

⁷ The census reports 11 churches in town; 4 M. E., 3 Ref. Prot. D., 2 R. C. Bap., and Friends.

⁸ Philip Bonestel, first innkeeper, settled in 1770; Edward Short, in 1776; Peter Short, in 1784; Jacobus Du Bois, Ephraim Van Keuren, Philip Shultis, and Henry Shultis, sen., in 1788; Jno. Hutcbens, in 1790; Wm. Elling, in 1786; Mathew Keip, in 1787; and Jacob Montrose at an early day. Robert Livingston built the first sawmill, and J. Montrose the first gristmill. These settlements were much harassed by the Indians during the war.

⁹ There are 6 churches in town; 3 M. E., Luth., Bap., and Friends.

TOMPKINS COUNTY:

This county was formed from Cayuga and Seneca, April 17, 1817. Three towns were annexed from Tioga, March 22, 1822, and a part of Schuyler co. was taken off in 1854. It lies around the head of Cayuga Lake, s. w. of the center of the State, is centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains — sq. mi. Its surface consists principally of an upland, broken by a series of ridges extending n. and s. The watershed between Cayuga Lake and Tioughnioga River occupies the e. border of the co., and that between the same lake and Susquehanna River the s. border. The deep valley of Cayuga Lake, 700 ft. below the summits of the ridges, separates the n. portions of the co. into two distinct parts. The e. portion, declining toward the n., gradually loses its hilly character and spreads out into the beautifully rolling lands so common in Central N. Y. West of the lake the land does not lessen in height within the limits of the co.; but the rough, broken hills change into smooth ridges, with long, gradual slopes.

The deep valley of Cayuga Lake affords a fine opportunity to examine the geological structure of this region. Upon the shore in the extreme n. part are found the Hamilton shales, the lowest rock in the co. Next above them on the shore appear the Tully limestone, Genesee slate, and Portage or Ithaca shales and sandstones.¹ The summits of all the hills are formed of the rocks belonging to the Chemung group, usually covered deep with drift deposits. The streams, in their course from the table lands to the lake, have worn deep channels into the rocks, and waterfalls which once were, probably, at the face of the bluffs, have receded one to two miles, forming below deep, rocky chasms bordered by perpendicular walls. As the rocks are composed of strata of different degrees of hardness, the water has worn them irregularly,—the soft and yielding shales generally forming a declining surface, while the hard and compact limestone retains its perpendicular forms.²

The streams are Salmon, Fall, Cascadilla, Six Mile, and Taughanick Creeks and Cayuga Inlet and their branches, flowing into the lake, and several branches of Owego Creek and other small streams, flowing s. The cascades upon these streams form one of the most peculiar and interesting features of the landscape.

The soil in the n. part is generally a gravelly or clayey loam, formed by the drift deposits; and that in the s. is a gravelly or slaty loam, derived from disintegration. It is all best adapted to grazing. In the n. part the people are generally engaged in grain raising, wheat forming the staple production. In the s. towns the principal branches of agriculture pursued are stock raising and dairying. Considerable manufacturing is carried on at Ithaca and other places.

The co. seat is located at the village of Ithaca. The courthouse is a brick edifice, built upon a fine lot near the center of the village.³ The jail, contiguous to the courthouse, is a well built stone edifice, with ample accommodations for the health of the prisoners. The cells are clean and well ventilated. The co. clerk's office is a fireproof building, fronting upon Tioga St. The poor-house is situated upon a farm of 100 acres in Ulysses, 6 mi. n. w. of Ithaca. The average number of inmates is 53, and the revenue derived from the farm is about $1,500. No school is provided for the children, and they are not admitted to the public schools. The house is in bad repair, destitute of ventilation, and entirely unfit for the residence of so many human beings.

The Cayuga & Susquehanna R. R. extends from Ithaca to Owego, connecting with the Erie R. R. at the latter place. Cayuga Lake is navigable and connects with the Erie Canal at Monte-

¹ The Tully limestone furnishes an abundance of lime; huge fragments of this rock are found scattered over the land several hundred feet above the regular veins of the rock, showing that some great force had been in operation here at some former period. The Genesee slate is about 100 ft. thick, and the Portage group 300 ft.

² The Taughanick Falls, below Trumansburgh, have receded something more than a mile from the lake. "In its passage, the stream first produced a series of falls and rapids, but finally receded so as to form but a single fall. This is caused by the higher strata being so much harder than those below that a higher table is formed of these, while those below are undermined." About 1 mi. n. of these falls is a cascade, where, from the absence of a resisting stratum at the surface, the rock has been worn down in a continuous slope.—Geol. IV. Dist., p. 378, 379.

zuma. A daily line of steamers plies between Ithaca and Cayuga Bridge, on the N. Y. C. R. R., touching at all the landings on the lake. The railroad and canal and lake constitute the principal route for supplying the West with the anthracite coal of E. Penn.

Four weekly newspapers are now published in the co.¹

The three s. towns of this co. were included in the Watkins and Flint's Purchase, and the remainder in the Military Tract. A public road was built from Oxford, on Chenango River, directly through to Ithaca, by Joseph Chaplin, in 1791-92-93, and this became the great highway for immigration in the s. part of the State for many years. As a consequence, the co. immediately bordering upon the road was rapidly settled. The first immigrants were mostly from New England. At the place where Ithaca now stands were found cleared fields which had previously been cultivated by the Indians; and these lands were among the first occupied in the co. The next settlements were made in Ulysses, on the w. bank of the lake, and along Chaplin's road in Dryden. The opening of the rich lands of the Genesee country to settlers diverted immigration from this region, and the co. for many years did not increase in population with the same rapidity as the regions further w. The growth of the co., however, has been gradual and continuous; and now in every element of real prosperity it is fully on an average with the other cos. in the State.

CAROLINE—was formed from Spencer, (Tioga co.,) Feb. 22, 1811, and was transferred to this co. March 22, 1822. A part was annexed to Danby in 1839. It is the s. e. corner town of the co. Its surface is an upland, broken by a series of ridges extending n. w. and s. e. 500 to 700 ft. above the valleys and 1,500 to 1,700 ft. above tide. The summits of the hills are usually rounded and rolling and their declivities steep. The streams are Owego Creek, forming the e. boundary, and Six Mile Creek and their branches. These streams flow in deep, narrow valleys bordered by steep hillsides. The soil is generally a gravelly loam, and is well adapted to grazing. Caroline Center (p. v.) contains 2 churches and 14 houses; Motts Corners, (p. v.), on Six Mile Creek, in the n. w. corner of the town, 1 church, several manufacturing establishments,² and 40 houses; Speedsville, (p. v.), upon Boyer Creek, in the s. e. corner, contains 3 churches and 30 houses; and Slaterville, (p. v.,) near the n. border, 1 church and 30 houses. Pugsleys Depot (p. o.) is a station on the C. & S. R. R. Caroline (p. o.) is a hamlet in the n. e. corner of the town. Rawson Hollow, on the e. line, is a p. o. The first settlement was begun by Capt.

¹ The Seneca Republican, the first paper published in the co., was started at Ithaca, July 4, 1815, by Jonathan Ingersoll. In 1816 it was changed to

The Ithaca Journal, and in 1817 Mack & Shepherd became proprietors. It was successively issued by Mack & Searing, Ebenezer Mack, and Mack & Morgan, until 1824, when Wm. Andrus became partner, and the paper was issued by Mack & Andrus. In 1827 the name was changed to

Ithaca Journal, Literary Gazette, and General Advertiser, and about a year afterward a portion of the title was dropped, and it was issued as

The Ithaca Journal and Advertiser. In Dec. 1833, Mack & Andrus sold to Nathan Randall; in 1837 Randall sold to Mattison & Barnaby; and in 1839 A. E. Barnaby became sole proprietor. In 1841 Barnaby sold to Alfred Wells, and soon after Wells sold to J. H. Sellreg, the present publisher.

The Republican Chronicle was started at Ithaca in June, 1820, by Spencer & Stockton. In 1823 David D. Spencer became sole proprietor. In 1826 S. S. Chatterton bought an interest, and in 1828 he became sole proprietor, and soon after changed the name to

The Ithaca Republican. In 1831 or '32 he again changed the name to

The Tompkins American, and in 1834 the paper was discontinued.

The Western Messenger was started at Ithaca in 1826 by A. P. Searing, and was continued about 2 years.

The Philanthropist, a Universalist paper, was started at Ithaca in 1831 by O. A. Brownson, and was continued about 1 year.

The Ithaca Chronicle was started by D. D. & A. Spencer in Feb. 1828, and was continued by them until 1853, when Anson Spencer became sole proprietor. In 1855 it was changed to

The American Citizen, published by A. E. Barnaby & Co. It is now published by Anson Spencer, who has been one of the proprietors from the commencement of the paper in 1823.

The Lake Light was started at Trumansburgh in 1827 by Wm. W. Phelps, and was continued about 2 years.

The Trumansburgh Advertiser was published a short time in 1833 by D. Fairchild.

The Jeffersonian and Tompkins Times was started in 1836 by C. Robbins. He soon after sold to G. G. Freer, who changed the name to

The Ithaca Herald. In 1837 Nathan Randall became proprietor, and merged the paper in the Ithaca Journal and Advertiser.

The Christian Doctrinal Advocate and Spiritual Monitor was started at Motts Corners in 1837, under the auspices of the 7th Day Baptist denomination, and was continued several years.

The Tompkins Volunteer was started at Ithaca by H. C. Goodwin in 1840. He soon after sold to J. Hunt, jr. In 1843 the title was changed to

The Tompkins Democrat, and after a short time the paper was removed to Greene, Chenango co.

The Trumansburgh Gazette was published a short time in 1843 by J. H. Hawes.

The Flag of the Union was started at Ithaca in 1848 by J. B. Gosman. In 1850 it was merged in the Ithaca Journal and Advertiser.

The Templar and Watchman was started at Ithaca in 1853 by Orlando Lund. It afterward passed into the hands of Myron S. Barnes, and was continued a short time.

Rumsey's Companion was started at Dryden in 1856 by H. D. Rumsey. It was soon after changed to

The Fireside Companion, and again in a few months to The Dryden News. In 1857 it was sold to G. Z. House and changed to

The New York Confederacy, and was soon after discontinued. In 1858 it was resuscitated, as

The Dryden News, by Asahel Clapp, by whom it is still published.

The Tompkins County Democrat was started at Ithaca in Oct. 1856, by Timothy Malony, by whom it is still published.

² Two flouring mills, two sawmills, a tannery, and woolen factory. One mile below the village is the extensive gun barrel manufactory of J. & B. Losey, and, with one exception, the only one in the State. This establishment was started 50 years ago, by Abiel Losey, father of the present proprietors, at Otsego; thence it was removed to Fall Creek, near Ithaca; thence to Owego; and thence to its present location.

David Rich, who came from Vt. in 1795 and located near Willow Bridge; Widow Earsley, with four sons and four daughters, from N. J., came in the next year; and for several years these were the only families in town.¹ The first church (Ref. Prot. D.) was formed at an early period; the first pastor was Rev. Garritt Mandeville. The census reports 10 churches in town.²

DANBY—was formed from Spencer, (Tioga co.,) Feb. 22, 1811, and was transferred to this co. March 22, 1822. Part of Caroline was annexed April 29, 1839, and a part was annexed to Dryden in 1856. It lies near the center of the s. border of the co. Its surface is broken by ranges of hills extending n. and s. 300 to 400 ft. above the valleys. Their summits are rounded and their declivities generally steep. The valleys are mere ravines. The principal streams are Six Mile Creek, flowing across the n. e. corner, Cayuga Inlet, and numerous small streams tributaries to these and to Owego Creek. The soil is a mixed gravelly and shaly loam, with occasional patches of clay, and is well adapted to grazing. Danby, (p. v.,) in the n. part, contains 3 churches and 50 houses; Beers Settlement, (South Danby p. c.,) near the center, about a dozen houses. West Danby is a p. o., near the w. border. The first settlers were Jacob Yaple, Dr. Lewis Beers, Jabez Beers, and Joseph Judson, who located at Beers Settlement in 1797.³ The first church (Cong.) was formed in 1807; Rev. Daniel Loring was the first pastor. There are 8 churches in town.⁴

DRYDEN⁵—was formed from Ulysses, Feb. 22, 1803. A part of Danby was annexed in 1856. It is a large town, occupying the central portion of the e. border of the co. The surface of the n. half is rolling or moderately hilly, and that of the s. half hilly and broken. The e. border forms the watershed between Tioughnioga River and Cayuga Lake. The highest ridge, in the s. e. part, is 1,700 to 1,800 ft. above tide. The principal stream is Fall Creek, flowing s. w. through near the center of the town, on its course affording several millsites. Several small streams, tributaries to Owego Creek, take their rise in the s. part. Dryden Lake is a small sheet of water 1 mi. long and about $\frac{1}{2}$ mi. wide, lying in an elevated valley near the e. border and 1,500 ft. above tide. A mineral spring, strongly impregnated with sulphur, magnesia, and iron, is situated one mi. w. of Dryden Village, and has a local notoriety for medicinal virtues. In the s. e. part are two swamps, each covering an area of several hundred acres. Dryden, (p. v.,) on the s. branch of Fall Creek, in the e. part of the town, is a flourishing inland village. It contains 2 churches, a large gristmill, and several manufacturing establishments. Pop. 522. Etna, (p. v.,) on Fall Creek, near the center, contains 2 churches, a grist and saw mill, an iron foundery, and machine shop. Pop. 230. West Dryden, (p. v.,) in the n. w. part, contains 93 inhabitants; Varna, (p. v.,) on Fall Creek, near the w. border, 170 inhabitants; Malloryville, Freeville, and California are hamlets. The first settlement was commenced in 1797, by Amos Sweet, on the present site of Dryden Village.⁶ Joseph Chaplin built a road from Oxford, Chenango co., to Ithaca, passing through this town, in 1792-93-94. There are 9 churches in town.⁷

ENFIELD⁸—was formed from Ulysses, March 16, 1821. It lies upon the center of the w. border of the co. Its surface is rolling, and it has a mean elevation of 500 to 700 ft. above Cayuga Lake. The principal streams are Ten Mile Creek and the s. branch of Taughanick Creek. Upon the former, in the s. e. tract of the town, is one of the finest of the beautiful cascades so common in this co. It is in a deep gorge, and has a total fall of 230 ft. The soil is principally a gravelly loam. Enfield Center (p. v.) contains 2 churches and about 40 dwellings; Enfield (p. v.) 25 dwellings. Enfield Falls is a hamlet. Among the first settlers were — Geltner, John Whitlock, Jas. Rumsey, Lewis Owen, and Isaac and John Beech.⁹ There are 5 churches in town.¹⁰

¹ Among the other early settlers were Thos. Tracy and Sam'l Yates, from Mass.; Joseph Chambers, Richard Bush, and Hartmore Earnest, from Ulster co., in 1798; Levi Slater, (formerly of Slaterville,) Charles and John Mulks, John Cantine, (first settler at Motte Corners,) and Joseph Bishop, all from Ulster, and John Ronnevill, from Mass., in 1801. The first child born was Harriet Ronnevill. The first school was taught by John Robinson. Richard Bush kept the first inn, Isaac Miller the first store, and Geo. Cantine built the first gristmill, in 1800.

² 4 M. E., Prot. E., Cong., Bap., Ref. Prot. D., F. W. Bap., and Univ.

³ The first settlers of West Danby were Wm. Hogg and Moses Barker. The first death was an infant son of Lewis Beardsley. Joseph Judson taught the first school, Dr. Beers kept the first inn and store, and Peter Yaple built the first gristmill.

⁴ 3 M. E., 2 Bap., Cong., Prot. E., and Swedenborgian.

⁵ Named in honor of John Dryden, the English poet.

⁶ The next settlers were Ezekiel Sandford, David Fort, and Ebenezer Chanson, who located at Willow Grove in 1798. A single yoke of oxen, at one load, brought these three families, consisting of 14 persons, and all their household goods, from the Chenango River. Capt. Geo. Robertson (sometimes called the "father of the town") came in the same year, and settled on Lot 53. Among the other early settlers were Lyman Hard, from Vt., Dr. Sheldon, Dr. Wolf, Irena Peat, Wm. Daley, Joel Hall, and Jas. Wood. The first child born was Robert Robertson; and the first death was that of the mother of Amos Sweet. Daniel Lasey taught the first school, in 1804. Amos Lewis kept the first inn, Joel Hall the first store, and Col. Hopkins, from Homer, built the first mill, in 1800.

⁷ 5 M. E., 2 Presb., 2 Bap., and E. C.

⁸ Named from Enfield, Ct.

⁹ John Applegate kept the first inn, Samuel Ingersoll the first store, and Wm. Ferris built the first mill.

¹⁰ 2 M. E., Christiana, Bap., and Presb.

GROTON¹—was formed from Locke, (Cayuga co.,) as "Division," April 7, 1817, and its name was changed March 13, 1818. It is the n. e. corner town in the co. Its surface is rolling or moderately hilly. From the valleys the land rises by long and gradual slopes to a height of 100 to 300 ft. The highest point in town is about 1,500 ft. above tide. The principal streams are Owasco Inlet and Fall Creek. Bear Swamp, in the e. part, contains an area of several hundred acres. The soil is a fine quality of gravelly loam, underlaid by slate. Groton, (p. v.,) on Owasco Inlet, near the center of the town, contains 3 churches, the Groton Academy, and several manufacturing establishments.² Pop. 587. McLean, (p. v.,) on Fall Creek, in the s. e., contains 5 churches, several factories,³ and 40 houses. Peruville, (p. v.,) near the s. border, contains 2 churches, a saw and grist mill, pail factory, and 30 houses. Groton City, (p. v.,) in the n. e. corner, and West Groton, (p. v.,) in the n. w., contain about 11 houses each. Bensons Corners is a hamlet, in the s. w. corner. Among the first settlers were Saml. Hogg, at West Groton; Ichabod Bowen, John Guthrie, and — Perrin, at Groton; and J. Williams, J. Houghtaling, and W. S. Clark, at East Groton. The census reports 11 churches.⁴

ITHACA⁵—was formed from Ulysses, March 16, 1821. It is the central town in the co., lying at the head of Cayuga Lake. A tract of land 2 mi. long and 1½ broad, low and nearly level, extends s. from the lake shore; and from this the valley of Cayuga Inlet opens to the s. w. and that of Six Mile Creek to the s. e. Ridges 400 to 700 ft. high, with steep declivities, separate these valleys and surround the low land and the head of the lake. From the summits the surface spreads out into a rolling upland. A marsh ½ mi. wide borders immediately on the lake. The streams are Fall, Cascadilla, Six Mile, Buttermilk, and Ten Mile Creeks, and Cayuga Inlet. In their course from the uplands each of these streams plunges down the wall-like precipices which surround the lake, forming series of cascades which for beauty and variety are scarcely equaled elsewhere.⁶ The soil is a fertile, gravelly loam upon the uplands, and a deep, rich alluvium in the valleys. Ithaca, (p. v.,) 1½ mi. s. of the head of Cayuga Lake, is the co. seat, and the commercial center of the co. It is beautifully situated upon a fine alluvial plain, bordered on 3 sides by lofty hills, and on the fourth by the lake, with which it is connected by a navigable inlet. It contains the Ithaca Academy,⁷ 9 churches,⁸ 2 banks, 4 printing offices, and a large number of manufacturing establishments.⁹ The commercial interests of the place are extensive and important. A daily line of steamboats on the lake running between this place and Cayuga Bridge, in connection with the C. & S. R. R., serves to connect the Erie R. R. on the s. with the N. Y. Central on the n.¹⁰ The lake is also a link in the great chain of the internal water navigation of the State, and upon it a large amount of canal commerce, centering at Ithaca, is carried on. The trans-shipment of Scranton and Lackawanna coal brought by the C. & S. R. R. forms an important and constantly increasing item of business. A large proportion of the anthracite coal for the Northern and Western markets is supplied through this avenue.¹¹ The public schools of the village are graded, and are in a flourishing condition. The annual attendance is about 1,200.¹² The village was incorp. April 2, 1821. Pop. 4,908. The first settlement of the town was made by Jacob Yaple, Isaac

⁶ Upon Fall Creek, within the space of 1 mi., are 5 falls, varying in height from 44 to 125 ft. The deep gorge through which the stream flows is bordered by perpendicular cliffs. A tunnel 200 ft. long, 10 to 12 ft. wide, and 13 ft. high was excavated through the rock for hydraulic purposes in 1831–32, by J. S. Beebe. Upon Cascadilla, Six Mile, and Buttermilk Creeks are also successions of fine cascades, within the limits of the town. At Buttermilk Falls the water rushes down at an angle of about 45 degrees, in a sheet of perfectly white foam, the appearance of the water furnishing a name to both the cascades and the stream.

¹⁰ The Ithaca & Owego R. R.—the second R. R. chartered in the State—was incorp. in 1828, and opened in the spring of 1834. It was 29 mi. long, and had 2 inclined planes ascending from Ithaca. The first was 1733½ ft. long, with 405 ft. rise, and the second 2,225 ft. long, with a rise of 1 ft. in 21. The total elevation is 8 mi. was 602 ft.—which was 602 ft. above its s. terminus at Ithaca. A stationary steam engine was used on the first plane, and horses on the other parts of the road. In the first 6 mos. it transported 12,000 tons of freight and 3,300 passengers. The State having a lien upon the road, the Comptroller sold it at auction on the 20th of May, 1842, for $4,500, to Archibald McIntyre and others. For $13,500 it was put in operation, under the name of the Cayuga & Susquehanna R. R. The inclined plane was subsequently changed to a circuitous grade road, and horses were superseded by locomotives. This road is now leased to the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western R. R., and it is extensively used for the transportation of coal.

¹¹ During the past few years the coal trade has averaged 90,000 tons per annum. This trade will probably largely increase with the increased facilities for moving the coal forward.

¹² A Lancasterian school was early established here, and was continued to within a few years, when it was superseded by the present system of public schools.

Dumond, and Peter Hinepaw, who located on the present site of Ithaca Village in 1789. The land that they occupied had previously been partially cultivated by the Indians.¹ The first church (Presb.) was organized in 1804-05, with seven members.

LANSING—was formed from Genoa, (Cayuga co.,) April 7, 1817. It lies upon the e. bank of Cayuga Lake, in the n. part of the co. The surface is principally a rolling upland, 500 ft. above the lake, bordered by steep declivities. Salmon Creek, the principal stream, flows s. through near the center of the town. Its valley is narrow and bordered by steep hillsides. Swartz, Townly, and Hedden Creeks are its principal tributaries. The soil is generally a fertile, gravelly loam. Ludlowville, (p. v.,) on Salmon Creek, about 1 mi. from its mouth, contains 3 churches, several factories,² and about 50 dwellings. Lansingville, (p. v.,) on the ridge w. of Salmon Creek, in the n. part of the town, contains 1 church and 25 dwellings. North Lansing, (p. o.,) in the n. e. corner, Lake Ridge, (p. o.,) on the bluff above the lake, in the n. w. corner, and Libertyville (South Lansing p. o.) are hamlets of about a dozen houses each. East Lansing and Forest City are p. offices. Forest City Water Cure is finely situated on the bluff overlooking the lake, in the s. part of the town. The first settlement was begun in 1792, by emigrants from N. J.³ The census reports 7 churches in town.⁴

NEWFIELD—was formed from Spencer, (Tioga co.,) as "Cayuta," Feb. 22, 1811. Its name was changed March 29, 1822, and a part was annexed to Catharines (Schuyler co.) in 1853. It is the s. w. corner town in the co. The surface is high and hilly, the ridges being 400 to 600 ft. above the valleys and 1,500 to 1,700 ft. above tide. The streams are Cayuga Inlet and Ten Mile Creek and their branches. The valleys of these streams are usually narrow and bordered by steep hillsides. A portion of the w. part of the town is yet uncultivated. The soil is a shaly and clayey loam, best adapted to grazing. Newfield, (p. v.,) in the n. e. part of the town, contains 3 churches, 2 flouring mills, 2 carriage shops, a woolen factory, an oilcloth factory, and about 80 dwellings. Trumbulls Corners, (p. v.,) on the n. border, contains 1 church and 20 dwellings. Poney Hollow (p. o.) is a hamlet in the s. w. part. The first settler was — Thomas, who located at Poney Hollow.⁵ The census reports 3 churches in town.⁶

ULYSSES—was formed March 5, 1799. Dryden was taken off in 1803, and Ithaca and Enfield in 1821. It lies upon the w. bank of Cayuga Lake, on the n. border of the co. A range of bluffs 600 ft. high, with steep declivities, borders upon the lake; and from their summits the surface spreads out in an undulating upland. The only considerable stream is Taughanick (Ti-kaw-nik) Creek, which crosses the town from the w. In its descent from the plateau to the lake this stream forms a series of cascades, the principal of which is known as Taughanick Falls. These falls have receded about 1 mi. from the shore of the lake, and have worn a deep gorge in the yielding shales, with banks 380 ft. high. The stream now falls, in an unbroken sheet, over a limestone terrace 210 ft. in height. About 1 mi. farther up the gorge is another fall, of 80 ft. The soil is a fine quality of gravelly loam. Trumansburgh,⁷ (p. v.,) near the n. border of the town, is the second village in the co. in amount of business and population. It contains 4 churches, the Trumansburgh Academy, and several manufacturing establishments.⁸ Pop. 1,052. Jack-sonville, (p. v.,) near the center of the town, contains 1 church and 50 houses. Water-burgh, near the w. border, contains 1 church, mills, and 40 dwellings. Halseyville⁹ is a hamlet. The first settlements were commenced by Samuel Weyburn, at the mouth of Taughanick Creek, and by Abner and Philip Tremaine, on the site of Trumansburgh, in 1792.¹⁰ The first church (Presb.) was formed by Jedediah Chapman, in 1803. There are now 6 churches in town.¹¹

² Grist and saw mills and an ax helve factory.
³ Among the early settlers were Wm. Goodwin, Silas Ludlow, Abram Bloom, and families named Beardsley, Depuy, Minier, Allen, Atwater, and Bowker, who came in 1791; Sam'l Gibbs and — Holmes, in 1792; and Abram Van Wagner, in 1797. The first marriage was that of Henry Bloom and Miss Goodwin; and the first death, that of the wife of Henry Bloom, in 1798. Wm. Boyce kept the first inn, at Libertyville. The first night of his stay in the house a rattlesnake crept into the bed and slept with his children. — Tooker kept the first store; Silas Ludlow, of Ludlowville, built the first mill, in 1798.

⁴ 4 M. P., 2 Bap., and Presb.
⁵ Among the early settlers were S. Chambers, Elijah Moore, — Carter, and Dan'l B. Swartwood. Jeremiah Hall kept the first inn, George Dudley the first store; and John Greene built the first mill.

ONEIDA COUNTY.

This county was formed from Herkimer, March 15, 1798. Lewis and Jefferson were taken off in 1805, and a part of Oswego in 1816. Portions were annexed to Clinton in 1801 and to Madison in 1836. A portion of Chenango was annexed in 1804.¹ It lies near the center of the State, — mi. from Albany, and contains — sq. mi. A broad valley, nearly level, extends e. and w. through the center of the co., and from it, both n. and s., the surface rises into a broken and hilly region. The highlands which occupy the s. part are arranged in ridges extending n. and s., the highest summits, on the s. border, being 600 to 1,000 ft. above the valley of the Mohawk. North of the central valley the surface rises abruptly to a height of 800 to 1,200 ft., and spreads out into a nearly level plateau, broken by the ravines of the streams. The e. part of the central valley is drained by the Mohawk, flowing e., and the w. part by Wood Creek, flowing w. This valley affords a natural road from the Hudson to the great lakes, and is the lowest pass through the Appalachian Mt. system. The Mohawk rises upon the n. border of the co., and flows in a southerly direction to Rome, and thence s. e. to the e. border of the co. Its principal tributaries from the n. are Nine Mile Creek and Lansing Kil, and from the s. Sauquoit and Oriskany Creeks. Black River flows across the n. e. corner of the co. East Canada Creek forms a portion of the e. boundary; the head branches of the Unadilla and Chenango drain the s. border, and Oneida, Wood, and Fish Creeks drain the w. part. Oneida Lake, extending several mi. along the w. border, is the only large body of water in the co. In the extreme n. e. corner are several small lakes and ponds.

The rocks of this co. include nearly the whole series lying between the gneiss, which covers the n. e. part, and the Hamilton group, which outcrops on the s. hills. The Trenton limestone, Utica slate, Oneida conglomerate, and Clinton group have received their names from being so distinctly developed in this co. Of useful minerals the co. has the lenticular clay iron ore of the Clinton group, bog ore in the swamps near Oneida Lake, and, probably, magnetic ore in the n. e. part. Marl and peat have been found in some places. Waterlime and gypsum quarries have been wrought to some extent. Building stone in great variety and of superior quality has been extensively quarried. Mineral springs are found in several places. The soil in the n. e., derived from the disintegration of the primitive rocks, is light and sandy, and is capable of producing only a scanty vegetation. This region is sparsely settled, and is not capable of supporting many inhabitants. The central valley is one of the most fertile portions of the State. The soil is a fine quality of sandy and gravelly loam and alluvium, finely tempered with lime and gypsum. The highland region s. of the river has a soil composed of clay and sandy and gravelly loam, and is best adapted to pasturage. The richness and diversity of the soil make this co. one of the best agricultural regions of the State. The people are chiefly engaged in agriculture, the principal branches of which are grain raising in the valleys and dairying and stock raising upon the hills. Hops are largely cultivated in the s. towns. The manufactures of the co. are extensive, though principally confined to Utica and the villages along Oriskany and Sauquoit Creeks.

The county is a half-shire, the co. buildings being respectively located at Utica and Rome.² The courthouses and jails at both places are well built and conveniently arranged. The clerk's ¹ Montgomery, Herkimer, and Oneida counties originally extended in long, narrow strips to the St. Lawrence. In 1801, Lisbon—then an Indian town upon the n. border—was annexed to Clinton co. It is not certain whether Tracts 1, 2, and 3 of Macomb's Purchase were intended by this arrangement to belong to Clinton; but in 1802 they were annexed to St. Lawrence co. Oneida co. was named from the Oneida Indians, who inhabited and owned this and some adjoining counties. The word Oneida signifies "the people of the stone." The Indians had a strange tradition concerning a certain stone, which followed them in their wanderings and finally rested on the summit of one of the highest hills in the co., from which their beacon fires could be seen to a great distance, and upon which they assembled to hold council or prepare for war. A boulder of gneiss, which tradition identified as this palladium of the Oneidas, a few years since was taken from the farm of James H. Gregg, in the town of Stockbridge, and placed in a prominent position near the entrance of the Utica Cemetery, on the Bridgewater Plank Road, about a mi. s. of Utica.—Jones's Oneida, p. 840; Rules and Regulations of the Utica Cemetery Assn. 1849, p. 33; Senate Doc. 1846, No. 24, p. 46; Schoolcraft's Hist. Condition and Prospects of Indian Tribes, I, p. 176.

² The co. seat of Herkimer co. was originally located at Whitestown; and upon the division of the co. the records were retained by Oneida. The act erecting Oneida co. directed the first courts to be held at the schoolhouse near Fort Schuyler, (Rome,) and required the courthouse to be built within 1 mi. of the fort. By an act of April 6, 1801, Thomas Jenkins and Hez. L. Hosmer, of Hudson, John Thompson, of Stillwater, and Dirck Lane, of Troy, were appointed to locate the courthouse and jail of Oneida co. These buildings were completed several years afterward, and the courts were held here and at Whitesboro' during many years. The courthouse and jail at Rome were burned about 1848, and rebuilt within 3 years after. The clerk's office was removed to Utica in 1816, and the academy at office is a fireproof building, located at Utica. The poorhouse is situated upon a farm of 195 acres about 2 mi. s. w. of Rome. It has an average of 222 inmates, supported at a cost of $1.00 per week each. Separate buildings have been provided for lunatics and for a pesthouse.¹

The Erie Canal extends through Utica, Whitestown, Rome, and Verona. The Chenango Canal extends s. from Utica, up the valley of Oriskany Creek, through New Hartford, Kirkland, Marshall, and a corner of Augusta, connecting with the Susquehanna River at Binghamton. The Black River Canal extends n. from Rome along the valleys of the Mohawk and Lansing Kil through Western and Boonville, connecting with Black River above Lyons Falls, in Lewis co. The Oneida Lake Canal extends w. from Rome to Wood Creek and along that stream to its mouth. The N. Y. Central R. R. extends through Utica, Whitestown, Rome, and Verona. The Black River & Utica R. R. extends from Utica n. through Marcy, Trenton, Remsen, and Steuben to Boonville.² The Watertown & Rome R. R. extends from Rome n. w. through Annsville and Camden. A large number of plank roads have been built in the co.; but they are mostly abandoned.

Four daily, 9 weekly, 1 semi-monthly, 1 quarterly, and 4 monthly newspapers are now published in the co.³

At an early period of the English occupation of New York the colonists became acquainted with that place was used for holding courts for many years. A new courthouse was built at Utica in 1851-53. The first co. officers were Jedediah Sauger, First Judge; Geo. Huntington and David Ostom, Judges; Jonas Platt, Clerk; Wm. Colbrath, Sheriff; and Arthur Bross, Surrogate.

¹ An act was passed in 1859 for the sale of the poorhouse premises and the purchase of a new site.

² This road has been partially built along Black River through Lewis co.; but work upon it is now suspended. It was the original design to extend the road to Clayton and Ogdensburg.

The Whitestown Gazette was commenced in June, 1796, by Wm. McLean. In 1798 it was removed to Utica and continued as

The Whitestown Gazette and Cato's Patrol. In 1803 it was purchased by John H. Lathrop, and was soon after merged in

The Utica Patriot, commenced by Asahel Seward and Ira Merrill, Mr. Lathrop continuing as editor. In 1811 it passed into the hands of Wm. H. Maynard; and in 1816 it was united with

The Patrol, commenced in Jan. 1815, by Seward & Williams, and the combined paper was published as

The Patriot and Patrol, W. H. Maynard, editor, and Seward & Williams, publishers. In 1821 its name was changed to

The Utica Sentinel. In 1825 it was united with the Columbian Gazette and published as

The Sentinel and Gazette. In 1828 S. D. Dakin became proprietor, and in 1829 he sold to Rufus Northway and D. S. Porter. In 1831 Mr. Porter withdrew. In 1834 Mr. Northway united the Elucidator with it and changed its name to

The Oneida Whig. In 1848 it was merged in the Oneida Weekly Herald. In 1842 Mr. Northway commenced

The Utica Daily Gazette, Wm. Allen and R. U. Sherman, editors. Erastus Clark, Wm. H. Underhill, Ezekiel Barron, Alex. Seward, H. C. Potter, J. M. Lyon, John Arthur, N. D. Jewell, and Ellis & Roberts were successively interested in its publication. In Jan. 1857, it was united with

The Utica Morning Herald, and assumed the name of the Utica Morning Herald and Gazette, and is still published.

The Columbian Patriotic Gazette was commenced at Rome by Thos. Walker and Ebenezer Eaton in Ang. 1799. In 1800 Mr. Eaton retired, and in 1803 it was removed to Utica and published as

The Columbian Gazette; and in 1825 it was united with the Utica Sentinel by Wm. J. Bacon and S. D. Dakin.

The Elucidator was commenced in 1829 by B. B. Hotchkiss, editor, and W. Williams, publisher. It was united with the Oneida Whig in 1834.

The Oneida Morning Herald was commenced by R. W. Roberts, R. U. Sherman, and Geo. R. Colston, in Nov. 1847. A weekly edition was also published, called

The Oneida Weekly Herald. In 1848 Mr. Colston withdrew, and in 1857 the papers were united with the Utica Daily Gazette.

The Utica Christian Magazine was commenced by the Oneida Association and Presbytery in 1813, and was published about 3 years.

The Club was published at Utica by Henry Goodfellow & Co. about 3 months in 1814.

The Civil and Religious Intelligencer was started in 1815 at Sangerfield by Jos. Tenney. In 1825 it was changed to the Sangerfield Intelligencer, and in 1835 it was removed to "Franklin Village," now Fabius, Onondaga Co.

The Utica Observer was commenced by E. Darchester in 1816.

In 1818 it was removed to Rome and its name changed to

The Oneida Observer. In 1819 it was returned to Utica and its original name was resumed. A. G. Danby, E. A. Maynard, Eli Maynard, C. C. Griffith, John F. Bush, John E. Kittle, and A. M. Beardsley were successively interested in the publication. In 1848 a daily edition was issued, called

The Utica Daily Observer. In 1853 the papers united with the Utica Democrat, and are now published by D. C. Grove, the weekly edition as the Observer and Democrat.

The Utica Democrat was commenced by John G. Floyd in 1836. It was successively published by Edward Morris, Jarvis M. Hatch, and Benjamin Welch. In 1853 D. C. Grove became owner, and united it with the Observer.

The Utica Christian Repository, mo., was commenced by Merrill & Hastings in 1822, Wm. Williams, publisher. About 1825 its name was changed to

The Western Recorder, a weekly religious paper, G. Tracy, publisher. It was continued several years.

The Baptist Register was commenced by Elders, Golusba & Wiley. In 1825 it was published under the auspices of the Baptist denomination, Alex. Beebe, editor, and Cephas Bennett, publisher. In 1830 it was leased to Bennett & Bright for 5 years; and in 1835 the lease was renewed for 7 years. In 1840 Mr. Bright withdrew. It was successively published by Bennett, Backus & Hawley, Dolphus Bennett, A. M. Beebe, and D. Bennett, and in 1854 it was sold and united with the New York Recorder, of the city of New York.

The Baptist Sunday-School Journal, mo., was commenced in 1828 by C. Bennett.

The Universalist, mo., was commenced at Utica by Rev. J. S. Thompson, L. R. Smith, & G. B. Lislier in 1825. It was removed to Philadelphia in about 1 year.

The Western Sunday School Visitant and Christian Miscellany was commenced at Utica by G. S. Wilson in 1826.

The Utica Intelligencer was commenced by E. S. Ely in 1826. In 1830 Joseph H. Buckingham became editor and Joseph Colwell publisher, and in 1831 the paper was united with

The Mechanics' Press, commenced by J. M. Ladd & W. Schram in 1829. The united papers were published a short time as

The Utica Intelligencer and Mechanics' Press, by Joseph Colwell, proprietor.

The Utica Magazine was commenced in 1827. It soon passed into the hands of Rev. Dolphus Skinner, who issued it semi-monthly as

The Evangelical Magazine. In 1830 he united it with the Gospel Advocate of Auburn, and published it weekly as the Evangelical Magazine and Gospel Advocate. In 1851 it was merged in the Christian Ambassador, since published simultaneously in New York and Auburn.

The Gospel Messenger was commenced at Auburn by Rev. John C. Rudd in 1827, and was removed to Utica about 1855 and published as

The Gospel Messenger and Church Record. After the death of Mr. Rudd, Rev. Wm. A. Nutson became editor. The paper is still published as

The Gospel Messenger.

The American Citizen was published at Utica by Geo. S. Wilson — Bennett & Bright, printers—in 1830.

The Christian Journal was published at Utica in 1830 by E. S. Barrows.

The Co-Operator, semi-mo., was published at Utica in 1832 by Quarts Graves, M. R. Bartlett, editor.

The Lever was published at Utica by Wm. S. Spear in 1832. The Oneida Democrat was commenced at Utica in 1833, and continued about 2 years.

the wonderful natural channel of navigation that extended through this co., and which, with a short and easy portage, connected the Mohawk with the great lakes and the fertile regions of the West. About the commencement of the last century, plans were proposed for improving this route and for fortifying the most important points upon it. The portage at Rome, from the Mohawk to Wood Creek, became a point of the first importance, and it was occupied as early as 1725; and a fortification known as Fort Bull was built upon Wood Creek soon after. On the 27th of March, 1756, this fort was surprised by a party of French and Indians, under M. De Lery, who had penetrated through an interior route from La Presentation, on the St. Lawrence, by an exhausting march of 15 days. The garrison were unprepared; yet they made a spirited but ineffectual resistance, and nearly every person perished. Alarm was carried to Fort Williams, on the Mohawk, 4 mi. distant, and a force was hastily sent to relieve Fort Bull, but arrived to late to render assistance. The enemy, after wasting the stores and provisions, retired with their prisoners and plunder

The Oneida Standard was commenced at Waterville in 1833.

It was subsequently removed to Utica, and after the discontinuance of the Democrat it assumed the name of The Standard and Democrat, Quarrus Graves, publisher. In 1835 it became obnoxious to its enemies from its abolitionism, and on the evening of Oct. 21 the office was entered by a mob and a part of the type and furniture were thrown into the street.

The Friend of Man was commenced at Utica by the N. Y. State Anti-Slavery Society in 1836, Wm. Goodell, editor. In 1841 Stanley P. Hough became editor, and in 1842 Wesley Bailey became proprietor, and united with the Abolitionist, of Cazenovia, and changed the name to The Liberty Press. It was discontinued in 1849.

toward Black River. Oswego was besieged by the French during the summer, and was surrendered on the 14th of Aug. Alarmed at the success of the French, and greatly in fear for his personal safety, Col. Webb, then commanding on the Mohawk, destroyed Forts Williams and Craven, and hastily retreated down the valley to Albany, leaving the frontiers to the mercy of the savages; and the sequel is written in blood in the annals of the Upper Mohawk Valley.

Fort Stanwix was erected in the summer of 1758, on the site of the present village of Rome. It was heavily armed; but the war ended without furnishing occasion for its use, and upon the peace it was allowed to fall into ruin. In June, 1776, Col. Dayton was sent by the Continental authorities to rebuild this fort, which was from this time named Fort Schuyler. Col. Peter Gansevoort was ordered hither in April, 1777, with the 3d Regiment, and while still unfinished the fort was besieged by the Tories and Indians under St. Leger. This movement formed part of a plan of operations against the colonies which contemplated the reduction of this fort and the ultimate meeting at Albany of the three British armies from Lake Champlain, the Mohawk, and New York. To relieve this post, Gen. Herkimer was sent with a detachment of troops chiefly raised in "Tryon" co. This army fell into an ambuscade at Oriskany, where the memorable battle, elsewhere noticed, was fought on the 5th of Aug. 1777. While most of the savages were absent from their camp, a well conducted sortie from Fort Schuyler, by a party under Colonel Willett, attacked the camp of the enemy and took a large quantity of baggage and stores, 5 British standards, and the papers of most of the officers. The discontent which this incident occasioned among the Indians was increased to insubordination by the mysterious reports brought in by the emissaries of the Americans; and on the 22d of Aug. the siege was raised, and the enemy retreated by the way of Oswego to Montreal. Portions of these troops subsequently joined Gen. Burgoyne and shared the fortunes of that officer. The fort was destroyed by fire and flood in May, 1781. Through the influence of Rev. S. Kirkland and others, the Oneidas were induced to remain neutral or join the American cause, and were rewarded by liberal concessions at subsequent treaties.¹

Settlement had extended into the borders of the co. before the Revolution; but every vestige of improvement was swept away during the war. Civilization re-appeared with peace; and before the beginning of the present century the hardy pioneers of New England had pressed into nearly every town. The completion of the Western Inland Navigation Co.'s improvement in 1796, and of the Seneca turnpike and other early thoroughfares for emigration, and the construction of the Erie Canal and the 3 lateral canals which here join it, and of the railroads which cross it, have formed marked eras in the improvement and prosperity of the co. In wealth, population, and enterprise it now ranks among the first cos. in the State.

ANNSVILLE²—was formed from Lee, Florence, Camden, and Vienna, April 12, 1823. It lies on the n. border of the co., w. of the center. Its surface is broken with ridges or swells, running e. and w., gradually increasing in height toward the n. There appear to have been at some period three small lakes in the town, two of which have broken through their barriers and left fine, fertile valleys. The e. branch of Fish Creek³ forms a part of the e. boundary, and flows through the s. e. part; and the w. branch of the same stream forms a part of the s. boundary. Several small streams are tributaries of the e. branch, the principal of which are Furnace and Fall Creeks. On the latter, near its mouth, are three falls, of 14, 20, and 60 ft. respectively. The soil is clayey in the s., and sandy, gravelly, and stony in the other parts. Glennore, (p. v.,) near the center, contains 2 sawmills, 1 gristmill, and 15 houses. Taberg,⁴ (p. v.,) in the s. part, contains 2 churches, 3 sawmills, 1 gristmill, a furnace, tannery, several small manufactories, and 40 houses. Blossvale is a p. o. in the s. part. The first settlement was commenced in 1793,¹ by John W. Bloomfield, from N. J. The census reports 4 churches in town.²

AUGUSTA³—was formed from Whitestown, March 15, 1798. A part of Vernon was taken off in 1802, and a part of Stockbridge (Madison co.) in 1836. It lies on the w. border of the co., s. of the center. Its surface is a rolling upland. Two ranges of hills extend n. and s. through the town on opposite sides of Skanandoa Creek, affording limestone of excellent quality for lime and building purposes. Oriskany Creek flows through the extreme s. e. corner, and Skanandoa Creek flows n. through near the center. The soil is a fertile, clayey and sandy loam. Augusta, (p. v.,) near the center, contains 2 churches and 100 inhabitants. Knox Corners, (p. v.,) n. w. of the center, contains a church and 200 inhabitants. Oriskany Falls, (p. v.,) in the s. e. corner, contains a church, a saw and grist mill, machine shop, distillery, and 711 inhabitants. The first settlement was made by — Gunn, in 1793.⁴ The first religious services were held at the house of — Fairbanks, in 1794.⁵

AVA⁶—was formed from Boonville, May 12, 1846. It is the central town on the n. border of the co. Its surface is a moderately uneven upland, 700 to 1,000 ft. above the Rome level. It is drained by Fish Creek, the e. and w. branches of the Mohawk, Point Rock, and Blue Brooks. Several small sulphur springs have been found in town. The soil is a gravelly loam. Ava Corners, (Ava p. o.,) w. of the center, contains 20 houses. The first settlement was commenced by Ebenezer Harper, in 1798.⁷ A Friends meeting house is the only place of worship in town.

BOONVILLE⁸—was formed from Leyden, (Lewis co.,) March 28, 1805. Ava was taken off in 1846. It lies on the n. border of the co., e. of the center. Its surface is a hilly, broken upland, 800 to 1,000 ft. above the canal at Rome. Black River flows through the n. e. part, and Lausing Kil rises near the center and flows s. to the Mohawk. Its soil is clayey loam, in many places thickly covered with boulders and often inclining to sand. Near the village are immense deposits of drift. Its e. border extends into the great forest, and presents the meager, sandy soil and naked rocks peculiar to that region. There is a gas spring 1½ mi. w. of the village, and a sulphur spring 1½ mi. s. The latter has acquired some local celebrity. Boonville, (p. v.,) in the n. w. part, was incorp. in 1855. It contains 3 churches, a printing office, several manufactories, and 1,000 inhabitants. It is the present n. terminus of the Black River & Utica R. R. It is on the summit level of the Black River Canal, and has a large trade with the country n., w., and e. Alder Creek, (p. v.,) in the s. e. part, contains a church and 20 houses. Forest Port, (p. v.,) near the s. e. corner, on the line of Remsen, contains 20 houses. Hawkinsville, (p. v.,) n. w. of the center, contains a saw and grist mill, chair factory, carding mill, and 339 inhabitants. Hurlbutville is a p. o. The first settlement commenced in 1795.⁹ The first church was formed in 1805.¹⁰

BRIDGEWATER¹¹—was formed from Sangerfield, March 24, 1797. It is the s. e. corner town of the co. Its surface is uneven. The valley of the w. branch of the Unadilla and its tributaries, locally known as "Bridgewater Flats," in the n., is about a mi. wide, but decreases to about Glase and Iron Manufacturing Co. began operations here in 1808. In 1811 a blast furnace was erected. Formerly hollow ware was extensively made; but at present pig iron is the chief product.

¹ The first settlement was made at Taberg. Among the early settlers were Elias Brewster, Adam P. Campbell, Nicholas Armstrong, and Squire Feirservic.

² Presb., M. E., Bap., and R. C.

³ This town is included in the s. part of the tract leased from the Oneidas in 1794 to Peter Smith. The lease is said to have been for 999 years. The tract was divided into 4 allotments, the first of which lies wholly within this town. The lease was assumed by the State in 1795-97, and patents were granted to settlers, Smith retaining 6 lots in the town as part payment for his lease. The first settlers took their lands as tenants under Smith. Part of the Oneida Reservation, purchased in 1795 and sold at auction in 1797, is included in the n. part of the town.

⁴ Among the early settlers were Benjamin Warren, David Mortoo, John Alden, Ichabod Stafford, Joseph and Abraham Forbes, Isaac and Benjamin Allen, Amos Parker, Thos. Cassaty, Ozias and Lemuel Hart, James Reynolds, Abel Prior, Thomas Spafford, Ezeu Saxton, Abiel Lotsey, and Francis O'Tool. The first birth was that of Peter Smith Gann; and the first marriage, that of Daniel Hart and Catharine Putnam; and the first death, that of Eleazer Putnam, in 1705. T. Cassaty built the first sawmill, in 1795, at Oriskany Falls. A gristmill was built the next year.

⁵ The census reports 5 churches in town; 2 Cong., M. E., Bap., and Union.

⁶ Named from a city in Burnum.

⁸ Named from Gerrit Boon, agent of the Holland Land Co., who made the first settlement. In early times it was called "Boon's Upper Settlement."

¹⁰ Rev. Daniel Smith was the first minister. There are now 5 churches in town; Presb., M. E., Bap., Union, and R. C.

half that width in the s.¹ The hills rise, on the e. and w. borders, 300 to 500 ft. above the valley, their declivities being often steep. The w. branch of the Unadilla² flows s. through the town. The soil in the e. is a gravelly loam, and in the w. clay. Stone is quarried in the n. e. part. Bridgewater, (p. v.), in the s. part, contains 3 churches, the Bridgewater Academy, and 306 inhabitants. North Bridgewater (p. v.) contains 15 houses. Babcock Hill (p. o.) is a hamlet. The first settlement was commenced in 1788,³ by Joseph Farwell. There are 3 churches in town; Cong., Bap., and Univ.

CAMDEN—was formed from Mexico, (Oswego co.,) March 15, 1799. Florence was taken off in 1805, Vienna in 1807, and a part of Annsville in 1823. It lies upon the w. border of the co., near the n. w. corner. Its surface is rolling, gradually rising toward the n., where it is broken by hills whose summits are several hundred feet above Oneida Lake. The w. branch of Fish Creek flows diagonally through the town toward the s. e. Mad River from the n. unites with it near Camden Village; and Little River, a tributary, forms part of the s. boundary. The soil is a sandy loam, in some places gravelly and stony, but generally well adapted to grazing. Camden, (p. v.), in the e. part, was incorp. in 1834. It contains 3 churches, saw and grist mills, a sash and blind manufactory, pump factory, 2 tanneries, a cloth manufactory, and 862 inhabitants. West Camden, (p. v.), near the n. w. corner, contains 20 houses. Hillsborough, (p. o.), in the s. part, is a hamlet. The first settlement commenced near the close of the last century.⁴ The first religious society was formed Feb. 19, 1798, by Rev. Eliphalet Steele.⁵ The church received from the heirs of John Murray an endowment in lands yielding a revenue of $112.

DEERFIELD—was formed from Schuyler, (Herkimer co.,) March 15, 1798. Marcy was taken off in 1832. It lies near the center of the e. border of the co. Its surface is mostly a high plateau, 600 to 1,000 ft. above the Mohawk, forming the n. continuation of the Hassenclaver Mts. of Herkimer co. A broad intervale, partly overflowed in high water, extends along the Mohawk opposite Utica; and on the n. e. the surface descends abruptly to the creek. The Mohawk flows along the s. w. border of the town, and West Canada Creek along the n. e. border. The soil on the flats is a deep, rich, alluvial loam, and on the hills a slaty and gravelly loam. Deerfield Corners, (Deerfield p. o.,) in the s. part, contains 2 churches, 3 carriage shops, and 50 houses. A thickly settled suburb of Utica extends toward the village. North Gage, (p. o.,) in the n. part, is a hamlet. The first settlement was commenced in 1773.⁶ The first religious services were held in 1798, by Rev. — Eddy. There are 4 churches in town.⁷

FLORENCE⁸—was formed from Camden, Feb. 16, 1805. A part of Annsville was taken off in 1823. It is the n. w. corner town of the co. Its surface is rolling, and 250 to 300 ft. above the Rome level. Mad River flows s. e. through the town. The soil is stony and light, and is underlaid by the Hudson River shales. A portion of the town is still covered by forests, which extend n. to near Jefferson co. Florence, (p. v.,) n. of the center, contains 3 churches, 3 sawmills, a grist-mill, tannery, and 40 houses. Empeyville, in the e. part, contains a church and 20 houses. East Florence (p. o.) and Florence Hill are hamlets. The first settlement commenced in 1801,⁹ by Amos Woodworth. The first religious society (Cong.) was formed Dec. 16, 1816;¹⁰ Rev. Samuel Sweezey was the first settled minister.

FLOYD¹¹—was formed from Steuben, March 4, 1796. It lies in the interior, e. of the center of the co. Its surface is rolling, gradually rising to the n. border, where it attains an elevation of 200 to 300 ft. above the valley of the Mohawk. Nine Mile Creek¹² flows through a small portion

² Called also the Ti-a-na-da-ra.—Jones's Annals, p. 122.

³ Among the early settlers were Ezra Parker, Ephraim and Nathan Waldo, — Lyman, and Jesse, Joel, and Abner Ives. Ezra Parker kept the first inn; Major Farwell built the first sawmill; and — Thomas the first gristmill. This is the smallest and least populous town in the co.

⁴ Henry Williams was the first permanent settler, in 1796-97. Jesse Curtis had previously built a sawmill; but he did not settle in town until some time after. Levi Matthews, Daniel Parker, Seth and Joel Dunbar, Aaron Matthews, Samuel Wood, Phos. Comstock, Elihu Curtis, Samuel Royce, Noah and Andrew Tuttle, Benjamin Barnes, sr. and jr., Philip Barco, Israel Stoddard, and — Carrier were early settlers. The first birth was that of Noah P. Tuttle; the first marriage, that of Elihu Curtis and Anna Northrop; and the first deaths were those of Mrs. Bacon and a child, who were drowned in crossing Mad River in a canoe. Elihu Curtis kept the first inn, in 1799; and Timothy W. Wood the first store, about the same time.

⁵ There are now 5 churches in town; M. E., Wes. Meth., Prot. E., Cong., and R. C.

⁷ Bap., Calv. Meth., Union, and R. C.

⁸ Named from the city of Florence, in Italy.

⁹ The first settlement commenced under the auspices of Wm. Henderson, owner of Township 4 of Scriba's Patent. He gave Amos Woodworth, John Spinning, and — Turner 50 acres each, to commence a settlement. Azariah Orton, — Crawford and his son Clark, Norman Waugh, Beason and Ebenezer Barlow, Ambrose Curtis, Ephraim Wright, Joseph Olcott, and Benj. Young came soon after. Several of the latter settled at Florence Hill. Nathan Thompson kept the first inn.

¹⁰ There are 5 churches in town; 2 M. E., 2 Union, and Bap.

KIRKLAND³—was formed from Paris, April 13, 1827. Marshall was taken off in 1829, a part was annexed to New Hartford in 1834, and a part of Paris was annexed in 1839. It lies in the interior, s. of the center of the co. Its surface is a hilly upland, divided into two general ridges by the valley of Oriskany Creek. The hills are 200 to 500 ft. high, and the declivities are generally steep. Oriskany Creek flows n. e. through near the center. The soil is a rich, calcareous loam. Near Clinton Village are quarries of good building stone. Iron ore is found; and several thousand tons are annually shipped by the Chenango Canal, to Constantia, Taberg, and Penn. Great attention is paid to fruit growing, and this town excels every other town in the co. in the amount of fruit raised. The town derives its greatest interest from its extensive educational institutions, which entitle it to the appellation of the Literary Emporium of Oneida co. Clinton (p. v.) was incorp. April 12, 1843. Hamilton College⁴ is located upon a hill overlooking the Oriskany Valley. Its buildings consist of Dexter Hall, or North College; Kirkland Hall, or Middle College; Hamilton Hall, or South College; a chapel, laboratory, and an observatory. The course of study embraces a collegiate and a law department. A grammar school, under a separate board of trustees, is connected as a preparatory department. The college libraries contain about 10,000 volumes, and the cabinet of natural history contains about as many specimens. The village also contains 5 churches, 2 newspaper offices, a bank, the Clinton Liberal Institute,⁵ a grammar school, high school, and a limited amount of manufactures. Pop. 1,174. Manchester, a manufacturing village,⁶ in the n. part, contains 30 houses. Franklin, near the center, contains the Franklin Iron Works⁷ and 35 houses. Clarks Mills,⁸ in the n. corner, is a manufacturing village, and contains a cotton factory, grist and saw mill, and 40 houses. Kirkland is a p. o. The first settlement commenced in 1787, by 8 families.⁹ Religious services were first held in the cabin of Capt. Foot.¹⁰

¹ Among the early settlers were Stephen Moulton, Wm. and Nathaniel Allen, James Chase, Elisha Lake, — Howard, Hope Smith, David Bryan, Samuel Denison, James Bartlett, — Patteny, Jarvis Pike, Capt. Nathan Townsend, and Thomas Bacon—mostly from Conn. The first death was that of — Foster; the second, that of Nathan Thompson, who was killed by a falling tree.

² The plan of ownership of the union church is peculiar. The seats are owned and transferred by purchase, and the owners meet on the first Monday in each year and vote what denomination shall occupy the house on the ensuing year.

⁴ Hamilton Oneida Academy was incorp. by the Regents, Jan. 31, 1793, mainly through the exertions of the Rev. Samuel Kirkland. In 1794 a commodious building was erected, the corner stone of which was laid with much ceremony by Baron Steuben. The school was opened the same year under the Rev. John Niles, whose successors were Rev. Robert Porter, Seth Norton, and Rev. James Robbins. The success of this academy was highly gratifying to its friends; and the rapid development of Central New York suggested the necessity of more ample facilities for instruction and an extension of its course of study. Clinton and Fairfield became active competitors for the honors of a college, and charters of similar character and conditions were granted to each, under the names of Hamilton and Franklin Colleges respectively. By a compromise between the friends of the rival locations, the latter institution was never organized. Clinton went on with its literary college, and employed the most active person in the Fairfield enterprise as its agent; while Fairfield organized a medical college. Hamilton College was chartered May 26, 1812, and went into operation soon after, under the presidency of the Rev. Azel Backus. His successors have been Henry Davis, in 1817; Sereno E. Dwight, in 1823; Joseph Penny, in 1835; Simeon North, in 1839; and Samuel Ware Fisher, in 1859. The college is chiefly under the influence of the New School Presbyterian and Congregational Churches. From 1819 to 1832, dissensions between the Trustees and President seriously retarded the prosperity of the institution; and during the same period insubordination among the students was of frequent occurrence. From 1838 to 1848 the college received $3,000 annually from the State; but the present Constitution cut it off from the receipt of a balance previously appropriated, and the grant has not been since continued. The Trustees many years since adopted the custom of admitting students unable to pay tuition fees; and, from incantations extension, this usage became an abuse that allowed itself upon the treasurer's books. The receipts from tuition became only a quarter as great as previously, while the catalogue indicated by its numbers an increasing prosperity. It was found more difficult to abandon this practice than it had been to adopt it; and it is still continued to as great an extent as the means of the institution will justify.

These causes have embarrassed the finances of the college; but efforts are about being made to relieve it from debt. The sum of $50,000 was granted by the State, June 19, 1812, to aid in founding the college. Wm. H. Maynard, of Utica, in 1832 gave $20,000 to endow a professorship of law; and S. Newton Dexter, of Whitesboro, in 1836 gave his personal obligations for $15,000 to endow a professorship of the Greek and Latin languages. The observatory was built in 1854, at a cost of $5,000 besides the instruments, which have cost more than twice that sum.

⁵ The Clinton Liberal Institute was founded in 1832; it is under the patronage of the Universalist denomination, and has a male and a female department. The building for the former is of stone, 96 by 52 feet, 4 stories above the basement, and has accommodations for 100 students. The female department is an elegant structure, 144 by 60 ft., 2 stories high above the basement, and has an average attendance of 50 pupils. A small monthly paper, named the "Leaf Bnd.," "Summer Leaves," "Autumn Leaves," or "Wintergreen," according to the season, is published at this institution. Home Cottage Seminary is a private institution, established in 1854 as a ladies' seminary, by Miss L. M. Barker. The edifice is 60 by 112 ft., and cost—including 8 acres of land—\$20,000. It has been united with another ladies' school under Miss A. Chipman, and is very prosperous. An issue styled the "Home Cottage Quarterly" is published by the pupils. This Seminary forms the female department of the grammar school. The Clinton High School, for males only, was established May, 1859, by Rev. B. W. Dwight and D. A. Holbrook. It is located $\frac{1}{2}$ mi. from the village, cost \$18,000, and has accommodations for 80 students.

⁸ Clark's Mills manufacture brown sheeting, and are furnished with 125 looms. The proprietors also have a manufactory of cotton cord, rope, and batting, and a gristmill and sawmill.

¹⁰ There are 5 churches in town; 2 Cong., Bap., R. C., and Union.

LEE¹—was formed from Western, April 3, 1811. A part of Annsville was taken off in 1823. It lies in the interior, n. of the center of the co. Its surface is rolling or moderately hilly, gradually rising from the lowlands in the s. to an elevation of 500 to 800 ft. above the canal at Rome. The w. branch of the Mohawk flows through the n. e. corner, and Fish Creek forms a part of the w. boundary. The soil is a clayey, sandy, and gravelly loam, and in some localities very stony. Lee Center (p. v.) contains a church, saw and grist mill, tannery, and 40 houses. Lee, (p. v.) in the s. w. corner, contains a church and 20 houses. Delta, (p. v.) in the s. e. corner, on the line of Western, contains a foundry, tannery, and 228 inhabitants. West Branch, (p. v.) in the n. e. corner, contains a saw and grist mill and 20 houses. Stokes² (p. o.) is a hamlet. The first settlement commenced in 1790, at Delta, by Stephen and Reuben Sheldon.³ The first religious society (Cong.) was formed in 1797, under Rev. James Southworth.⁴

MARCY⁵—was formed from Deerfield, March 30, 1832. It lies on the n. bank of the Mohawk, e. of the center of the co. Its surface is rolling; a wide interval borders upon the river, from which rises an irregular table-land 300 to 500 ft. above the valley. Nine Mile Creek flows through the w. corner. The soil on the upland is a rich, sandy and gravelly loam, and on the flats an alluvial deposit, which is annually increased by the spring floods. Stittsville, (p. v.) on the line of Trenton, contains a church, saw and grist mill, cotton factory, and 40 houses. Marcy is a p. o. The first settlement commenced in 1793,⁶ by John Wilson. The census reports 6 churches in town.⁷

MARSHALL—was formed from Kirkland, Feb. 21, 1829. It lies in the s. part of the co., the s. w. corner bordering on Madison co. The surface is a hilly upland, the hills rising 200 to 300 ft. above the valleys. Oriskany Creek flows n. e. through the w. part. The soil is a fertile, sandy loam. Deansville,⁸ (p. v.) on the n. border, contains 2 churches, an academy, and 185 inhabitants. Hanover, (Marshall p. o.) near the center, contains a church and 15 houses. Forge Hollow contains a church, a forge, and 35 houses. The first white settlement was commenced in 1793,⁹ by David Barton. The first church (Cong.) was formed in 1797.¹⁰

NEW HARTFORD—was formed from Whitestown, April 12, 1827. A part of Kirkland was annexed in 1834. It lies upon the e. border of the co., s. of the center. Its surface is level or gently undulating, except in the extreme e. part, where is a low range of hills. Sauquoit Creek flows n. through near the center. The soil is a rich, calcareous loam. New Hartford (p. v.) contains 4 churches, 2 cotton factories, a batting factory,¹¹ a flouring mill, tannery, and 892 inhabitants. Washington Mills (p. v.) contains the Washington Steam Mills, Oneida Woolen Mills, and 50 houses. New York Upper Mills, (New York Mills p. o.), on the n. border, contains a church, a cotton factory, dye house, steam mills, and 40 houses. Willow Vale, in the s. part, contains a factory for making cotton machinery,¹² a foundry, and 40 houses. The first settlement was commenced by Jedediah Sanger, in 1788.¹³ The first church (Presb.) was formed in 1791, by Rev. Jonathan Edwards; and the first settled minister was Rev. Danl. Bradley. The census reports 6 churches in town.¹⁴

PARIS¹⁵—was formed from Whitestown, April 10, 1792. Brookfield, Hamilton, and a part of

² Sometimes called "Nibets Corners."

³ Among the early settlers were David Smith, John and Benj. Spinning, Stephen and Nicholas Salebury, Nathan Berlow, Wm. Taft, Dan. and Seth Miller, Frederic Sprague, — Hell, Jas. Young, Chas. Gifford, Elisha Parke, and — Potter. The first birth was that of Fenner Sheldon, in 1791; the first marriage, that of Dan. Miller and Amy Taft; the first death, that of Job Kaird, in 1798. David Smith built the first sawmill, at Delta, and Gen. Floyd the first gristmill, in 1796.

⁴ There are 4 churches in town; 2 M. E., Friends, and Union.

⁵ Named from William L. Marcy, since Governor of the State.

⁶ James, Thos., Isaac, and Jacob Wilson and — Tull were early settlers. The first death was that of John Wilson, in the fall of 1793. — Camp kept the first inn, about 1810; and John F. Allen built the first inn, about 1825.

⁷ 2 Cong., 2 Bap., M. E., and Calv. Meth.

⁸ Named from Thos. Dean, long an agent of the Brothertown Indians.

⁹ The Brothertown Indians were settled previous to the Revolution on a reservation in this town and Kirkland given them by the Oneidas. They were remnants of New England, Hudson River, and Long Island Indians, who were collected through the close of the Colonial period, and numbered, when first removed hither, about 400 souls. Coming from many different stocks, they adopted the English language and some of the arts of civilized life. They were mostly scattered during the war, but afterward returned, and many of them became thrifty farmers; but the greater part acquired the vices of the whites, and a part of them sold out and went to Green Bay. In 1850 the last of the tribe bade adieu to their homes and moved West. Among the early white settlers were Warren Williams, Hezekiah Eastman, Capt. Simeon Hubbard, and Levi Baker. The first birth was that of Col. Lester Baker.

¹⁰ It was called the Hanover Society; and their edifice, after standing 40 years, was rebuilt in 1841. There are now 4 churches in town; 2 Cong., M. E., and Univ.

¹¹ The "Utica Cotton Mills" have a capital of $100,000, run 8,000 spindles and 150 looms and employ 190 hands, and turn out 1,800,000 yds. of cloth annually. They have a dry house, machine shop, and gas works.

¹² This establishment has a capital invested of $40,000, and employs 80 hands.

¹⁴ Presb., M. E., Prot. E., Bap., Union, and Friends.

¹⁵ Named by the inhabitants in acknowledgment of the kindness of Isaac Paris, a merchant of Fort Plain, who, in the year

Cazenovia, (Madison co.,) Sherburne, (Chenango co.,) and Sangerfield, were taken off in 1795, and Kirkland in 1827. A part of Kirkland was annexed in 1839. It lies on the e. border, near the s. e. corner of the co. Its surface is a hilly upland, broken by the valley of Sauquoit Creek. The hills bordering the valley are 200 to 400 ft. high, and their declivities are generally steep. Sauquoit Creek flows n. through the town, e. of the center. The soil is a sandy, calcareous loam.

East Sauquoit and West Sauquoit, (Sauquoit p. o.,) contiguous villages on opposite sides of Sauquoit Creek, contain 2 churches, extensive cotton factories,¹ 2 paper mills in the immediate vicinity,² 2 sawmills, a gristmill, a tannery, and 690 inhabitants. Clayville, (p. v.,) near the center, contains a church, 2 furnaces, an agricultural implement manufactory,³ extensive woolen mills,⁴ and 817 inhabitants. Cassville, (p. v.,) near the s. border, contains a church, gristmill, tub factory, and 40 houses; Paris Hill, (Paris p. o.,) in the w. part, a church and 30 houses; Holman City, in the e. part, a furnace, a whiffletree iron manufactory, and 12 houses. The first settlement commenced in 1789.⁵ The first church (Cong.) was formed in 1791, by Rev. Jonathan Edwards; Rev. Eliphalet Stee was the first pastor. There are now 8 churches in town.⁶

REMSEN⁷—was formed from Norway, (Herkimer co.,) March 15, 1798. A part of Steuben was annexed in 1809. It is the n. e. corner town of the co. Its surface is an elevated upland, broken by hills and ridges and with a mean elevation of 1,200 to 2,000 ft. above tide. Black River and its tributaries drain the central and n. parts; and West Canada Creek forms a small part of the s. e. boundary. Otter, Long, and White Lakes are in the n. part. The soil is generally a light, sandy loam. A large part of the town is still covered by the primitive forests forming a portion of the great Northern Wilderness. Remsen, (p. v.,) a station on the B. R. & U. R. R., in the s. w. corner, contains a church, furnace, steam mill, and 510 inhabitants. Forest Port, (p. v.,) on the line of Boonville, contains 20 houses. Port Woodhull is a hamlet. The first settlement commenced in 1792, by Barnabas Mitchell.⁸ There are 12 churches in town.⁹

ROME—was formed from Steuben, March 4, 1796. It lies upon the Mohawk, a little w. of the center of the co. Its surface is level, and some portion of the w. part is low and marshy. The Mohawk flows s. e. through the e. part, and Wood Creek flows w. through the n. w. part.¹⁰ Fish Creek forms the n. w. boundary. The soil is generally a highly productive, gravelly loam. Rome, (p. v.,) upon the Mohawk, s. e. of the center of the town, was incorp. March 26, 1819. It is a half-shire of the co., and it contains the co. buildings, 12 churches, 4 banks, 2 newspaper offices, the Rome Academy, and several manufactories.¹¹ It is the s. terminus of the W. R. & C. V. R. R. and of the Black River Canal, and is an important station upon the Central R. R. and the Erie Canal. Pop. 7,083. West Rome is a thickly settled suburb just w. of the limits of Rome. Stanwix, (p. v.,) a canal village, contains about 15 houses. Greens Corners is a station on the Central R. R., near the s. w. corner. Ridge Mills, near the center, contains 15 dwellings; and North Rome is a hamlet. The first settlement was made at the "Carrying Place," before the ¹²French of scarcity, 1789, supplied them with Virginia corn on a liberal credit, and finally accepted payment in such produce as they were enabled to supply.

¹ The "Quaker Woolen Factory," established in 1812. In 1827 it commenced the manufacture of cotton, and now employs 100 hands, runs 110 looms, and can make 3,000 yards per day. The same Co. have another mill, that employs 50 hands and runs 60 looms.

² These mills employ 30 hands, and make about 1½ tons of printing paper daily.

⁴ The woolen mills were started in 1843. They manufacture broadcloths and blankets, and employ 80 hands.

⁶ 2 M. E., 2 Prot. E., 2 Cong., Bap., and Presb.

⁷ Named from Henry Remsen, Patentee of Remsenburgh. The town embraces most of Remsenburgh Patent, and portions of Easton's Woodhull's, Service's, and other tracts.

⁸ Among the early settlers were John Bomer, Nath'l Rockwood, Bettis Le Clerc, Perez Farr, and Jonah Dayton, in 1793. In 1808, David Mound, John Gas, Griffith I. Jones, John Owens, and Hugh Hughes, Welsh immigrants, settled, and were soon followed by a large immigration of their countrymen. This town contains more natives of Wales than any other town in the State; and, including their children of American birth, the Welsh number more than half the population. The first birth was that of Polly Mitchell; and the first death, that of Capt. Peck. Bronghon White kept the first store, in 1803.

⁹ 9 Calv. Meth., 3 Cong., 2 M. E., and 2 Bap.

¹⁰ Between the Mohawk and Wood Creek was a portage of about 1 mi. in length over level ground. Early in the 19th century propositions were made to build a road across this point; and in 1796 the Western Inland Navigation Co. constructed a canal between the two streams, and the route speedily became the great thoroughfare of travel. This canal was most of the way on the line of the present Erie Canal, through the village. The Indians called the place Deo-wain-sta, "a carrying place for canoes." Wood Creek was called Ka-ne-go-dick. The old canal was constructed under the superintendance of Peter Colt.

¹¹ The principal manufactories are a plow factory, foundry, planing mill, several sawmills, and the repair shops of the W. R. & C. V. R. R.

¹² The first settlers came in at an early period, but their names are unknown. John Roof and Brodock were engaged in the carrying trade at this place in 1760. The former was first store and inn keeper. Jedediah Phelps, John Barnard, George and Henry Huntington, Joshua Hathaway, Dr. Stephen White, Roswell Fellows, Matthew Brown, sen. and jun., Seth Ranney, David Brown, Ebenezer, Daniel W., and Thomas Wright, Thomas Selden, Solomon and John Williams, Peter Colt, Wm. Colbrath, Ahijah and Clark Putnam, Caleb Reynolds, Rufus Easton, Thos. Gilbert, Moses Fish, Stephen Lampman, Jeremiah Steves, and John Niles were the first settlers.—Jones's Annals, p. 372. The first birth was in the family of John Roof Aug. 28, 1769. The first sawmill was erected in 1758, and the first gristmill in 1795. A State Arsenal was erected here in 1808, on the present site of St. Peter's Church. The U. S. erected an arsenal and workshop a

War of 1755. The subsequent history of the place is full of incidents of general interest.¹ The first church (Cong.) was formed Sept. 5, 1800.²

SANGERFIELD³—was formed from Paris, March 5, 1795. Bridgewater was taken off in 1797. It was transferred from Chenango to Oneida co. April 4, 1804. It is the w. town on the s. line of the co. Its surface is a moderately hilly upland, 700 to 800 ft. above the Mohawk at Utica. The streams are small, and flow n. to the Mohawk and s. to Chenango River. The soil in the valleys is a rich alluvium, and on the hills a gravelly loam. Waterville,⁴ (p. v.) near the n. border, contains 4 churches, a bank, an academy, a newspaper office, a saw and grist mill, distillery, and 1,109 inhabitants. Sangerfield Center (Sangerfield p. o.) contains a church and 30 houses; and Stockwell Settlement, in the s. part, about 20 houses. The first settlement was commenced by Zerah Phelps, from Mass., in 1791.⁵ There are now 7 churches in town.⁶

STEBEN⁷ was formed from Whitestown, April 10, 1792. A part of Mexico (Oswego co.) was annexed, and Floyd and Rome were taken off, in 1796; and Leyden (Lewis co.) and Western in 1797. Parts of Steuben's Tract in Western and Remsen were annexed in 1803; and a part was annexed to Remsen in 1809. It lies in the interior, n. e. of the center of the co. Its surface is a hilly, broken upland, rising 800 to 1,200 feet above the Mohawk.⁸ The streams are small. Cincinnati Creek rises in the interior, and forms part of the e. boundary. The soil is a gravelly loam; and boulders are numerous. Quarries are worked, from which a good quality of building stone is obtained. Steuben Corners (Steuben p. o.) is a hamlet, in the s. part. Steuben Station, on the B. R. & U. R. R., is on the line of Boonville. The first settlement was commenced in 1789,⁹ under Baron Steuben. The census reports 7 churches in town.¹⁰

TRENTON—was formed from Schuyler, (Herkimer co.,) March 24, 1797. It lies upon the w. bank of West Canada Creek, near the center of the e. border of the co. The surface rises from the creek to the height of 400 to 600 feet; and from the summits it spreads out into an upland broken by ridges of drift. Cincinnati Creek flows through the n. part, and Nine Mile Creek through the s. part. The soil is a sandy and clayey loam, best adapted to grazing. The celebrated Trenton Falls, upon West Canada Creek, are within the limits of this town.¹¹ Trenton,¹² (p. v.) upon Cincinnati Creek, at the mouth of Steuben Creek, contains 3 churches and 50 houses. Trenton Falls, (p. v.) a short distance below the Falls, contains a church, gristmill, sawmill, and 20 houses. South Trenton, (p. v.) upon the old Utica turnpike, contains 2 churches and 30 houses. Holland Patent,¹³ (p. v.) in the w. part of the town, is a station upon the B. R. & little w. of the village, in 1813, under the direction of Major James Döllins. It is still owned by the General Government, but is not in use. In 1784, Gen. Washington came thus far on a tour of business and pleasure. He, in company with Gen. Clinton, owned a tract of land in this co. of about 2,000 acres, comprising a part of Coxsborough and Carolina Townships in the town of Westmoreland.

¹ Fort Williams, on the Mohawk, and Fort Bull, on Wood Creek, were built on the line between Albany and Oswego about 1725. Fort Bull was surprised by M. De Lery and a party of French and Indians, numbering 362 men, March 27, 1756. The English lost the fort and all the stores which it contained, and 90 men. Forts Williams and Craven, located on the Mohawk, just below Rome, were destroyed by Gen. Webb in 1756, after the reduction of Oswego by the French. Fort Stanwix was begun July 23, 1755, by Brigadier Gen. John Stanwix, of the royal army. It was a square work, with bastions at the corners, and stood a few rods a. of the present park in the village. It was of earth and timber, surrounded by a ditch and mounted with heavy cannon. In June, 1776, Col. Dayton took possession of it and named it Fort Schuyler. It was besieged in 1777 by St. Leger. Within the last few years the ground upon which the fort stood has been leveled; and not a vestige of it now remains. Fort Newport was a small square fort on Wood Creek, built in the French War. An octagonal blockhouse was built about 1795, during the alarm from Western Indian wars.

² The census reports 17 churches; 5 Calv. Meth., 2 Bap., 2 M. E., 2 Presb., 2 R. C., Ev. Luth., Germ. Meth., Prot. E., and Univ.

⁴ Called by the Indians Sko-na-wig, "Large Swamp."

⁵ Hale and wife, and Nathan Orney, came in to in 1792; and Benj. White, Phineas Owen, Sylvanus Dyer, Asabel Bellows, Nathaniel Ford, Henry Knowlton, Jonathan Stratton. — Clark, Col. David Norton, and about 30 others, in 1794. The first birth was that of a daughter of Z. Phelps, in 1792; the first marriage, that of Sylvanus Dyer and Hannah Norton; and the first death, that of Sybil Knowlton. Polly Dyer taught the first school; and Justus and Ebenezer Hale kept the first inn and store. The first store in Waterville was kept by Sylvanus Dyer, in 1799.

⁶ 2 Cong., M. E., Prot. E., Presb., Bap., and R. C.

⁷ Named from Baron Steuben. In May, 1786, the Legislature granted him 16,000 acres in this town. He settled soon after, built a log house, and collected a colony of tenants, but did not live to see his contemplated improvements carried out. He was struck by paralysis Nov. 25, 1799, and died 3 days after. He was wrapped in his cloak and laid in the earth with his star of knighthood upon his breast. Shortly before La Fayette's visit in 1826, his remains were taken up and re-interred under a tablet upon raised masonry. His property was mostly bequeathed to Wm. North and Benj. Walker, his aids. His library was given to a young man named Mulligan. Col. Walker gave a Welsh Bap. Society a lease of 50 acres of land, 5 of which was woodland, around the grave, with no other rent than the obligation to keep this woodland fenced and the range of animals prevented therein. This condition is carefully observed.

⁸ Starrs Hill is the highest point in the co. On a clear day, Lake Ontario, parts of 7 counties, and the buildings of Hamilton College can be seen from its summit.

¹¹ This favorite place of resort was first brought to public notice by John Sherman, proprietor of the first public hotel for visitors, erected in 1822. The falls are less interesting from the volume of water and height of fall than for the peculiar wildness of the surrounding scenery. The ravine through which the stream flows is worn through the Trenton limestone to the depth of 70 to 200 ft. The sides are nearly perpendicular; and the water descends by 5 distinct cascades a total depth of 200 ft. in the space of half a mile. The Indian names Ka-na-ta, "dark brown water," and Kuy-a-ho-ra, "slanting water," have been applied to this place. Trenton Village was called One-ti-a-dah-que, "in the bone."

¹² Incorp. April 19, 1813, as "Oldenbarnetts," and changed April 26, 1835, to its present name. Its first name was given by Boon, in memory of a Dutch patriot and statesman who perished on the scaffold in 1619, aged 82. — Jones's Oneida, p. 449.

¹³ Named from Henry, Lord Holland, a patentee of 20,000 acres, principally in this town. He sold to Seth and Horace Johnson and Andrew Cragie.

U. R. R. It contains 6 churches, the Holland Patent Academy, and 353 inhabitants. Prospect, (p. v.), on West Canada Creek, above the Falls, contains 2 churches, Prospect Academy, an extensive sawmill, a tannery, and 60 houses. Stittsville, (p. v.), on the line of Marcy, in the s. w. corner of the town, contains a church, cotton factory, sawmill, tannery, and about 40 houses. It is a station upon the B. R. & U. R. R. Settlement was commenced in 1793, by Gerrit Boon, from Holland.¹ The first church (Presb.) was formed soon after; Rev. — Fish was the first pastor.²

UTICA³—was incorp. as a village April 3, 1798. It was formed as a town, from Whitestown, April 7, 1817, and was incorp. as a city Feb. 13, 1832. It lies upon the s. bank of the Mohawk, on the e. border of the co. A wide interval extends along the river; and from it the surface rises in gradual slopes toward the s. w. It lies upon the Erie Canal, and is the n. terminus of the Chenango Canal. It is an important station upon the N. Y. C. R. R., and the s. terminus of the B. R. & U. R. R. It is the center of one of the best agricultural sections of the State; and its trade is extensive. It is largely engaged in manufactures, among which are cotton and woolen goods, millstones, screws, musical instruments, telegraphic apparatus, and a great variety of other articles.⁴

The City Hall is a fine, large, brick building on Genesee St., s. of the canal. It contains a large public hall, common council room, and rooms for the several city officers.

The Public Schools are under the charge of a Superintendent and Board of Education. They are graded, and include all departments from the primary to a thorough academic course. They employ 45 teachers,—6 males and 39 females. The whole number of children between the ages of 4 and 21 is 8,000, of which 3,226, or 40 per cent., attend school during some portion of the year. The total expenses of the schools for 1858 were $15,546.82. The number of volumes in the district libraries is 3,018.

The Utica Academy, long an independent school, now constitutes the High School of the public school system of the city.

The Utica Female Academy is a flourishing institution, situated between Washington St. and Broadway, near Genesee St. It was founded in 1837, and its property is valued at $25,000.

The Academy of the Assumption is under the care of the Brothers of the Christian Schools.

The State Lunatic Asylum is located upon a large lot on an eminence near the w. line of the city. It receives insane persons subject to co. charge, where there is a reasonable prospect of relief, and such others as its accommodations will admit. Until recently it has received insane convicts; but this class will hereafter be sent to the asylum built for that purpose at Auburn. The average number of inmates during the last 16 years has been 381 annually.⁵

¹ Boon was an enterprising pioneer and agent of the Holland Land Company, the same that purchased in Western New York. Alone, or with Le Roy, Bayard, McEvers, and Busti, he purchased in trust for that company 46,057 acres of Outhoudv's Patent, 6,026 of Steuben's Patent, 1,200 of Machin's Patent, and 23,609 of Servis's Patent. The last named, lying mostly in this town, was granted in 1768 to Peter Servis and 24 others for the benefit of Sir Wm. Johnson. This tract was conveyed by the trustees above named to the Holland Company in 1801. Among the other early settlers were Col. Adam G. Mapps, Dr. Fr. A. Vanderkemp, Judge John Storrs, Col. Robert Hicks, Peter Schuyler, John P. Little, Cheney and John Garrett, Wm. Rollo, Col. Thos. Hicks, Edward Hughes, and Hugh Thomas. Boon returned to Holland, where he died many years after. The first child born was Adam Parker, in 1796; the first marriage, that of Jacob Joyce and Widow Peck; and the first death, that of — Nelson, in 1795.

² The census reports 15 churches; 4 M. E., 3 Bap., 2 Presb., (O. S.) Bap., Cong., Calv. Meth., Prot. E., Union, and Unitas.

⁴ The Eagle Mills give employment to 120 hands, and produce 1,500,000 yards of cotton cloth annually.

The Utica Steam Cotton Mills employ 330 hands, and produce 1,100 yds. of cotton cloth daily.

The Utica Woolen Mills employ 180 hands, and use 350,000 lbs. of wool in the manufacture of casimeres annually.

The Utica Steam Woolen Co. gives employment to 250 hands, and uses 1,800 lbs. of wool per day.

The Utica Screw Manufacturing Co. employs 50 hands, and turns out goods to the amount of $60,000 annually.

The Utica Millstone Manufactory and Plaster Mills give employment to 50 men, and turn out $60,000 worth of products annually.

The city also contains extensive manufactories of starch, flour, clothing, organs, pianos, castings, machinery, stone ware, fire brick, carpets, oilcloths, leather, lumber, beer, and cigars.

⁵ An asylum of this kind was recommended by the Governor in 1820, and was annually urged by its friends, until an act was passed, March 10, 1836, appointing 3 commissioners to purchase a site not exceeding $10,000 in value, and to contract for building. N. Dayton, C. McVean, and R. Withers were appointed; and in 1837 a farm of 120 acres was bought at the joint expense of the State and the citizens of Utica, ($6,300 of $16,300), and in that year Wm. Clarke, Francis B. Spinner, and Elain Lynds were appointed commissioners to erect buildings. The first plan (prepared by Clarke) embraced 4 buildings, each 550 feet long, facing outward, connected by open verandas, and inclosing a court of about 13 acres. The main building was erected and the foundations were laid, when the plan was reduced and attention given to finishing the main building. By act of April 7, 1842, the asylum was put in charge of 9 managers, appointed for a term of 3 years each by the Gov. and Senate, a majority of whom must reside within 5 mi. of the asylum. Dr. Amariah Brigham was chosen Superintendent, and upon his death (Sept. 8, 1849) Dr. Nathan D. Benedict succeeded. The present Superintendent is Dr. John P. Gray, who was appointed in 1853.

The building was partially destroyed by a fire set by one of the inmates July 14, 1857. The walls remained standing, and the premises have been refitted without interruption of operations, and with improvements far exceeding in safety and convenience those that were destroyed. The sum of $68,742 was granted in 1858 to rebuild the premises; and the labor is now

Besides the foregoing institutions, there are in the city 10 private schools, 5 banks, and 24 churches.¹

The site of the city is included in the colonial grant of 1734, styled Cosby's Manor. Settlement began soon after the Revolution; and in 1787 there were 3 log huts at this place.² The construction of the Seneca Turnpike and of a bridge gave the first impulse to its growth; and the Erie Canal in a few years doubled its business and population. Although the city has experienced disasters, its general growth in wealth and numbers has been steadily forward, and its geographical position, lines of communication, and natural advantages are guarantees of its future increase.³

VERNON—was formed from Westmoreland and Augusta, Feb. 17, 1802. A part of Stockbridge (Madison co.) was taken off in 1836. It lies on the w. border of the co., s. of the center.⁴ Its surface is rolling, the mean elevation being about 200 ft. above the Mohawk. The principal streams are Oneida Creek, forming the w. boundary, and Skanandoa Creek,⁵ flowing through the e. part. The soil is a fine quality of gravelly and clay loam, underlaid by limestone, waterlime, and gypsum. Very few towns in the State surpass this in all the elements of fertility. A mineral spring is found a mi. n. w. of Vernon Center. Vernon, (p. v.,) upon Skanandoa Creek, n. of the center, was incorp. April 6, 1827. It contains 2 churches, the Vernon Academy, a private seminary, bank, newspaper office, and tannery. Pop. 330. Vernon Center (p. v.) contains 2 churches and 30 dwellings. Oneida Castle, (p. v.,) on the w. line, contains a church, academy, and 337 inhabitants, of whom 275 are in this town. Turkey Street is a nearly completed. The buildings are well supplied with water and gas, and have ample fixtures for the extinguishment of fires in future, including steam force pumps, ample reservoirs of water, and pipes for filling the attic and upper rooms with steam. The asylum has shops and gardens for the employment of such as prefer it, and various amusements,—fairs, festivals, musical and theatrical entertainments, books, pictures, innocent games, and such other modes of occupation as are found to exert a salutary influence upon the "mind diseased." The Opal, a monthly magazine, is edited and printed at the asylum by its inmates; and the American Journal of Insanity, a quarterly journal, is conducted by its officers. The aggregate statistics of the asylum from Jan. 16, 1843, to Dec. 1, 1856, have been as follows:—

ployments; 8 were in trade, and 4 had no occupation. 210 were natives of New York; 44 of Ireland; 19 of Eng.; 16 of Germany; 6 of Conn.; 4 each of Canada, Scotland, France, Penn., Vt., and Mass.; 3 each of N. H. and Wsles; 2 each of Maine and Switzerland; and 1 each of R. I., Ohio, Ill., and Sweden. The principal causes were, so far as ascertained, ill health, 48; hereditary, 28; predisposed, 22; intemperance and vice, 20; religious excitement, 19; excessive labor and anxiety, 17; vicious indulgences and domestic trouble, each 15; business perplexities, 12; menstrual irregularities, 11; and pernerpal fever, and excessive labor and exposure, each 10.

² Fort Schuyler at this place was built in 1758, and named from Col. Peter, an uncle of Gen. Philip Schuyler. It was a stockaded work, and stood between Main and Mohawk Streets below Second Street. A blockhouse was built before the close of the Revolution on the site of the present depot. Among the early settlers were Uriah Alverson, Philip Morcy, Francis Foster, Stephen Potter, Joseph Ballou, Jason Parker, John Cunningham, Jacob Christman, and Matthew Hubbell. The first store and inn were kept by John Post, in 1790, on the n. corner of Genesee and Whitesboro' Streets. Post had been a dealer among the Indians, and purchased large quantities of ginseng. Some years after, he ran 3 "stage boats" for passengers to Schenectady. In 1804, Parker & Stephens received a grant of the sole right of running a stage to Canandaigua twice every week between May and October. Mails were extended from Canajoharie to this place in 1793, the inhabitants along the route paying the expense. Bryan Johnson, in 1797, commenced purchasing produce for cash, and began a business that had been mostly monopolized by the Kanes of Canajoharie. The latter soon removed to Utica; and the spirited rivalry of these men, and others who soon joined in it, gave a wide impetus to the place as a market town. John C. Deversux, Watts Shearman, John Bisell, and Daniel Thomas were also early merchants. Nathan Williams, Erasmus Clark, Francis A. Bloodgood, and Joseph Kirkland were early lawyers.

³ The population of the town and city of Utica has been as follows:—

1813.....	1,700	1840.....	12,782
1820.....	2,972	1845.....	12,190
1825.....	5,040	1850.....	17,565

⁵ Named from the celebrated Oneida chief, and signifying Hemlock, or stream of hemlocks. Alluding to this interpretation of his name, this chief once made this striking remark:—"I am an aged hemlock. An hundred winters have whistled through my branches. I am dead at the top!"

Of the 5,516 patients which were up to Dec. 1, 1856, 4,896 were discharged, of whom 2,228 recovered, 801 were improved, and 1,194 were unimproved; 636 had died, and 39 were not insane. Great success attends the treatment in most cases when received at so early a stage; but when the disease has continued a year or more the chances of recovery rapidly diminish, and in a few years cease altogether. The asylum is not designed as a hospital for incurables; and when the prospects of recovery or improvement cease, it is its general customs to return patients to their friends or to local institutions of support.

Of those admitted in the year ending Nov. 30, 1852, 172 were males and 161 females; 23 were between 10 and 20; 91 between 20 and 30; 108 between 30 and 40; 62 between 40 and 50; 36 between 50 and 60; and 11 between 60 and 70. 98 males and 87 females were married; 76 males and 64 females were single; 6 were widowers and 10 widows; 17 had received academic and 3 a common school education; 43 could only read and write; 12 could read but not write; and 11 were entirely without education. 296 had laborious, and 25 professional and literary, em-

VERONA—was formed from Westmoreland, Feb. 17, 1802. It lies on the w. border of the co., near the center. Its surface is generally level, slightly rolling in the e., and marshy in the w. Oneida Lake and Creek form the w. boundary, and Wood Creek³ the n. boundary. Several small streams in the town are tributaries to these. The soil is a deep, rich, alluvial loam. There is a mineral spring in the e. part of the town.⁴ Verona (p. v.) contains 2 churches, a tannery, and 30 houses. Durhamville, (p. v.,) on the w. border, partly in Madison co., contains 2 churches, a glass factory, foundery, tannery, and 1,034 inhabitants. Verona Depot, (p. o.,) a station on the N. Y. C. R. R., contains 10 houses. State Bridge (p. v.) contains 20 houses; Higginsville (p. v.) 25 houses; New London, (p. v.,) in the n. part, 30 houses; Scoundo, (p. v.,) in the s. part, on the line of Vernon, 20 houses; Verona Mills (p. v.) 20 houses; Dunbarton a glass factory and 20 houses; and Staceys Basin 10 houses. Settlement was commenced in 1792, by Geo. A. Smith;⁵ Rev. Joseph Avery preached the first sermon. There are now 10 churches in town.⁶

VIENNA⁷—was formed from Camden, April 3, 1807, as "Orange." Its name was changed to "Bengal," April 6, 1808, and to Vienna, April 12, 1816. A part of Annsville was taken off in 1823. It lies on the w. border of the co., n. of the center. Its surface, rising from Oneida Lake on the s. border to an elevation of about 100 ft., spreads out into a rolling plateau. The n. w. part is hilly. Wood Creek and Oneida Lake form the s. boundary. Fish Creek forms most of the e. boundary, and unites with Wood Creek before it enters Oneida Lake. The w. branch of Fish Creek forms a part of the n. boundary. The soil is a light, sandy loam, underlaid by clay; in the s. w., along Fish Creek, it is alluvium. Good building stone is quarried in the e. part, and large quantities of bog ore have been raised from the marshes near the lake. Vienna, (p. v.,) in the e. part, contains a church and 110 inhabitants. North Bay, (p. v.,) in the s. part, near the lake, contains 2 churches, 3 sawmills, a shingle mill, and 25 houses. McConnellsville, (p. v.,) in the n. part, on the line of Annsville, contains 20 houses; Elpis, a church and 8 houses. Fish Creek Landing contains 20 houses; West Vienna, (p. v.,) on the lake, 20 houses. Pine is a hamlet, in the e. part. The first settlement was commenced near the close of the last century.⁸ There are now 6 churches in town⁹.

WESTERN—was formed from Steuben, March 10, 1797. Lee was taken off in 1811. It lies in the interior, n. of the center of the co. Its surface is a hilly upland, broken by numerous gulches worn in the slate by the streams. The e. and w. branches of the Mohawk meet near the center and flow s. and s. w. into Rome. The soil in the valleys is alluvium. Stone quarries are worked which have furnished large quantities of stone for the Black River Canal. Westernville (p. v.) contains a church, a tannery, and 287 inhabitants. North Western (p. v.) con-

¹ The first settler was Josiah Bushnell, in 1794. Upon the relinquishment of the Indian title in 1797, a large number of families from Mass. and Conn. came in; and within 2 years every farm in town was taken up. Among the early settlers were families named Hills, Bronson, Westmore, Holmes, Stone, Gridley, Smith, Bissell, Foot, Goodwin, Frisbie, De Votie, Austin, Stannard, Griswold, Alvord, Thrall, Wilcox, Church, Spencer, Carter, Marshall, Tuttle, Bush, McEwen, Wilcoxson, and Weber, on Bas Chard's location, around Vernon Center; Rev. John Sargeant, and families named Codner, Marvin, and McEwen, on Sargeant's Patent; Skinner, Lawrence, Shedd, Gratton, Deland, Spaulding, Grant, Kellogg, Tryon, Carter, Moore, Simons, Doane, May, Mahan, Page, Ingraham, Crocker, Graves, Soper, Norton, Dix, Vaughan, Wright, Cody, Kelsey, Raymond, Ailing, Haseltin, Carpenter, Hungerford, Burley, and Darling, on the "Reservation;" Griffin, Webster, Stone, Hotchkiss, Warren, Youngs, Willard, Langdon, and Neller, in the s. w. part; Brockway, Upham, Cole, Davis, Blount, Brookins, Day, Frink, Noyes, Campbell, Huntington, and Cook, in the n.; and Van Eps Patent, The Warner, Pierson, Patten, and Root on the Van Eps Patent. The first death was that of a daughter of Josiah Bushnell, in 1795. — Sessions taught the first school, in 1798; A. Van Eps kept the first store, in 1798; and Asahel Gridley built the first gristmill.

² There are now 8 churches in town; 3 Presb., 2 M. E., Bap., Cong., and Unit.

³ A royal blockhouse was built at the mouth of this creek about 1722. It was about 8 rods square, on a slight elevation, and surrounded by a ditch.

⁴ A hotel and water-cure has been erected for the accommodation of visitors and patients. The water is nearly saturated with sulphuretted hydrogen gas, and yielded to Prof. Noyes's analysis the following ingredients to the gallon:—

Muriate of soda.....	720 gr.
Lime, with a little magnesia.....	68 "
Sulphate of lime.....	60 "

The water resembles in many respects that of the Harrowgate Springs in England.

⁷ Gen. A. Hamilton, John Lawrsce, and John B. Church, under proceedings in chancery, became owners of this town.

⁸ Timothy Halsted, — Fisher, — Jarvis, Peter Gibbons, Isaac Babcock, Alex. and Jonathan Graves, Eliakim Stoddard, Allen Nichols, and David Stone were early settlers. The first birth was that of Polly Blakesley, in 1803; and the first death, that of Alex. Graves, by an accident in a sawmill, in 1801. Lyman Mathers taught the first school; Wm. Smith kept the first inn, in 1801. Ambrose Jones built the first sawmill, in 1801; and Wm. Smith the first gristmill, about 1804.

tains a church and 15 houses. Hillside (p. o.) contains 8 houses. Big Brook (p. o.) is a hamlet, near the e. line. Delta (p. v.) is in the s. w. corner, mostly in the town of Lee. The first settlement commenced in 1789, by Asa Beckwith and his sons Asa, Reuben, Wolcott, and Lemuel, and Henry Wager.¹ The first church (Bap.) was formed in 1798; Rev. Stephen Parsons preached occasionally. There are now 6 churches in town.²

WESTMORELAND—was formed from Whitestown, April 10, 1792. A part of Whitestown was annexed March 15, 1798. Verona and part of Vernon were taken off in 1802. It is an interior town, lying s. of the center of the co. Its surface is a rolling upland, with a mean elevation of 150 to 250 ft. above the Mohawk. The streams are mostly small brooks. Iron ore has been obtained in large quantities for the Westmoreland, Lenox, Onondaga, and Paris furnaces. Several quarries of fine building stone have been wrought; and from some of these grindstones were formerly manufactured. The soil is principally a gravelly and clayey loam, adapted to grain raising and pasturage. Hampton, (Westmoreland p. o.), in the e. part of the town, contains 3 churches, several manufactories,³ and 400 inhabitants. Lowell, (p. v.), in the s. w. part, contains a church and 25 houses. Hecla Works, (p. v.), s. w. of the center, contains a large furnace⁴ and 16 houses. Lairdville,⁵ (p. v.), in the s. part, contains a church and 15 houses. Spencer Settlement, on the n. line, and Eureka, 2 mi. s., each contains about 15 houses. The first settlement was made by James Dean, upon a patent granted to him under an act of May 5, 1786.⁶ The first church (Cong.) was formed Sept. 20, 1792.⁷

WHITESTOWN⁸—was formed March 7, 1788, and originally included an indefinite amount of territory extending westward, at the present time forming several counties. Steuben, Mexico, Paris, and Westmoreland were taken off in 1792; Augusta in 1798; Utica in 1817; and New Hartford in 1827. It lies upon the s. bank of the Mohawk, a little s. e. of the center of the co. A broad, flat intervalle extends along the Mohawk; and from it the surface rises in gentle slopes about 100 ft. and from the summits spreads out into a rolling upland. Oriskany Creek⁹ flows n. e. through near the center, and Sauquoit Creek through the e. part. The soil is mostly a fine quality of gravelly loam and alluvium, well adapted to grain raising. Whitesboro,¹⁰ (Whitestown p. o.), in the Mohawk Valley, in the s. e. part of the town, was incorp. March 26, 1813. It contains 4 churches, the Whitestown Seminary, a bank, and several small manufactories. It is a canal and r. r. station. Pop. 953. Oriskany, (p. v.), near the mouth of Oriskany Creek, is a canal village and r. r. station. It contains 5 churches and several extensive manufactories.¹¹ Pop. 711. Yorkville and New York Mills, in the s. part, are manufacturing villages, upon Sauquoit Creek, the former containing about 50 houses and the latter 3 churches and 60 houses.¹² Walesville, (p. o.) Colemans Mills, and Pleasant Valley are hamlets or thickly settled farming neighborhoods. The first settlement was made by Judge Hugh White and his 5 sons, Daniel C., Joseph, Hugh, jr., Ansel, and Philo, in May, 1784.¹³ This was the first settlement in the co., and became the nucleus of civilization for Central N. Y. The first church (Presb.) was formed Aug. 20, 1794; the first settled pastor was Rev. Bethuel Dodd.¹⁴

⁵ Named from Samuel Laird, an early settler.

⁶ This patent names Dean's Creek as Kanagitarageara, and a small branch of Oriskany Creek, Kan-yon-sot-ta. Among the other early settlers were Jonathan Dean, Silas Phelps, Ephraim Blackmer, Nehemiah Jones, Joseph Jones, Joseph Blackmer, jr., and Samuel Laird,—all of whom located on Dean's Patent. In 1789, settlements spread rapidly, and John and Nathaniel Townsend, Benjamin Blackmer, John Vaughan, Josiah Stillman, Nathan Loomis, Joshua Green, Joseph Blackmer, senr., Amos Smith, John More, Daniel Seely, Elijah Smith, Samuel Starr, Alexander Parkman, and Stephen Brigham located in town. Mr. Deac was an Indian trader, acquired the language of the natives, and exercised much influence over them. He received this grant through a stipulation made by the Indians as a reward for services rendered to their nation. Although greatly attached to him, these savages upon one occasion came near taking his life to atone for the death of one of their number who was accidentally killed by a Dutchman on the Mohawk. He died Sept. 10, 1823, aged 76 years.—Jones's Oneida, p. 749. A MSS. account of Indian mythology, written by him, is in the State Library.

⁷ The census reports 6 churches in town; 3 M. E., Bap., O. S. Bap., and Friends.

⁸ Named from Hugh White, the pioneer settler.

⁹ Signifying "river of nettles."

¹⁰ The first courthouse of Herkimer co. was erected here in 1793. A clerk's office of the Supreme Court of the State was established at this place April 4, 1807.

¹² The New York Mills, an extensive manufactory of cotton, has branches at Yorkville, New York Mills, and Upper New York Mills,—the last named in New Hartford. It has a capital of $200,000.

¹³ Among the other early settlers were Amos Wetmore, Jonas Platt, Geo. Doolittle, Thomas R. Gold, Reuben Wilcox, Arthur Bresse, Enoch Story, Elizur Moseley, Caleb Douglass, Wm. G. Tracy, Gerrit Y. Lansing, and Henry R. Storrs. The first child born was Esther White; and the first death, that of Mrs. Blackley, soon after the first settlement. The first gristmill in the town and co. was built in 1788, by Judge White, Amos Wetmore, and John Beardsey.

¹⁴ There are now 13 churches in town; 3 Presb., 3 M. E., 2 Bap., 2 Prot. E., Cong., Calv. Meth., and Union.

ORANGE COUNTY.

THIS county was formed Nov. 1, 1683. Rockland was taken off in 1798, and a portion was annexed from Ulster the same year. It lies upon the w. bank of the Hudson, s. e. of the center of the State. It is centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains — sq. mi. The surface is mountainous upon the s. e. and n. w. borders, and a rolling upland through the center. The Matteawan or South Mts. extend in several parallel ranges from the N. J. line n. e. to the Hudson, ending in the rocky and precipitous bluffs known as "The Highlands." The highest summits attain an elevation of 1,000 to 1,500 ft. above tide. The ranges and peaks of these mountains are known by several distinct names.¹ The whole region included between these ranges consists of steep and precipitous rocky peaks and narrow winding ravines, a small portion only being susceptible of cultivation. The Shawangunk Mt. Range extends from Delaware River n. e. through the n. w. corner of the co. It is a high, unbroken range, precipitous upon the w., but with more gradual slopes upon the e. The highest summits are 1,500 to 1,900 ft. above tide. The extreme n. w. corner of the co. is occupied by the series of highlands extending from the Delaware into Sullivan co. The central portion of the co., lying between the two mountain systems, is a rolling upland, broken in many places by abrupt and isolated hills and the deep valleys of streams. This whole region, comprising more than one-half of the entire surface of the co., is susceptible of cultivation, and forms a fine agricultural district.

Along the s. w. border, extending through several towns and into N. J., is a low, flat region, lying upon the streams, and known as the "Drowned Lands." This tract, consisting of about 17,000 acres, was originally covered with water and a dense growth of cedars; but a large portion of it has been drained and reclaimed; and it now forms one of the finest agricultural portions of the co.

Neversink River flows s. along the w. foot of the Shawangunk Mts. and forms a tributary of the Delaware. Shawangunk River flows n. along the e. foot of the same mountains and forms a tributary of the Hudson. Wall Kil flows n. through near the center of the co. and unites with the Shawangunk in Ulster co. Murderers Kil,² and its principal tributary, Otter Creek, flow e. through near the center of the co. and discharge their waters into the Hudson. Wawayanda Creek flows s. into N. J. and forms a tributary of Passaic River. Ramapo River takes its rise in the s. part of the co. and flows s. into Rockland. Among the mountains in the s. are several small lakes, the principal of which are Greenwood Lake and Thompsons and Mambasha Ponds. The rocks of the southern highlands are principally granite, gneiss, and sienite, with occasional injected veins of trap. The rocks which compose the Shawangunk Mts. are the shales and sandstones of the Chemung group. The central portions of the co. are occupied by parallel strata of the Hamilton shales, Helderbergh limestones and grit, Medina sandstone, and the gray sandstones, all extending n. e. and s. w., respectively, from the e. foot of the Shawangunk Mts. An abundance of iron, consisting of magnetic ores and red and brown hematite, is found among the southern mountains; and several veins have been extensively worked.³ The soil is as various as the surface. Among the primitive mountains it is light, sandy, and unproductive. In the n. w. part it is a tough clay, generally underlaid by hardpan. Through the center it is a clay, sandy, and gravelly loam upon the hills, and a fine quality of gravelly loam and alluvium in the valleys, —all very productive. The Drowned Lands are covered with alluvium and vegetable mold, and are among the most fertile lands in the State. The various branches of agriculture form the leading pursuit of the people. The most important interest is the sending of milk to the N. Y. market. Butter, spring grains, and fruits are also largely produced. Market gardening is a large and increasing source of public wealth. The manufacturing interests of the co. are considerable, though they are mostly confined to a few places. The manufacture of iron has formed an extensive business from an early period until within a few years; but at the present time only two furnaces are in operation in the co. The proximity to New York renders the lands of the co. exceedingly valuable; and, with proper care, almost any crop adapted to the climate can be successfully and profitably cultivated. Considerable commerce is carried on by means of the Hudson, the principal export being lumber brought from the West upon the r. r. and trans-shipped at Newburgh.

² Named from the murder of a family of whites who lived upon its banks, by the Indians, in early times.

The county is a half-shire, the courts being held respectively at Goshen and Newburgh.¹ The courthouse at Goshen is a brick building, situated upon a fine lot in the e. part of the village. The jail is a stone building, in rear of the courthouse. The co. clerk's office is a fireproof brick building, upon the street opposite the courthouse. The courthouse at Newburgh is located upon the high land in the w. part of the village. It is a fine brick building, fronting s. upon Second St. The jail at Newburgh is connected with the police establishment of the village. The poorhouse is located upon a farm of 267 acres in Warwick, 3½ miles s. w. of Goshen. The average number of inmates is 200, supported at a weekly cost of $1.04 each. The building is of stone, and has accommodations for 300. A school is taught during the entire year. The accommodations are reported by the Senate Committee of 1857 as good, and the general management of the institution as much above the average. The income from the farm is about $2,000. The N. Y. & Erie R. R. extends through Monroe, Blooming Grove, Chester, Goshen, Wawayanda, Walkill, Mount Hope, and Deerpark. The Newburgh branch of this road extends s. w. from Newburgh, through New Windsor and Blooming Grove, to Chester.² The Delaware & Hudson Canal extends from the Delaware River n. along the valley of the Neversink, through Deerpark.³ In the central part of the co. a wide ditch has been dug, for the purpose of draining the Drowned Lands, which has been of immense value to the county.

Thirteen newspapers—1 daily, 9 weekly, 2 semi-monthly, and 1 monthly—are published in this co.⁴

² The immense quantities of lumber brought from the pine forests of Allegany, Cattaraugus, and Steuben, over the N. Y. & E. R. R., are principally carried to Newburgh and trans shipped. Milk trains run daily upon this road for the purpose of carrying the immense quantities of milk produced here to the N. Y. market. The milk business is the most important of all the local business of the r. r.

³ This canal extends through the valley lying at the w. foot of the Shawangunk Mts. to Port Jarvis, and thence up the valley of the Delaware to the w. bounds of the co.

⁴ The Goshen Repository, the first paper published in Orange co., was commenced at Goshen in 1788 by David Mandeville. A few years after, it was issued by Mandeville & Westcott; and in 1800 it was sold to G. Hurton and Gabriel Denton, who changed the name to

The Orange County Patriot. In 1801 or '02 it passed into the hands of Wm. A. Carpenter, who changed it to

The Friend of Truth. In 1804 Ward M. Gazeley became proprietor, and changed its name to

The Orange Eagle; and soon after the office was burned and the paper discontinued.

The Newburgh Packet was started at Newburgh in 1795 by Lucius Carey, and was continued a few years.

The Mirror was commenced at Newburgh Sept 22, 1796, by Philip Van H. rne. In 1803 it was merged in

The Recorder of the Times, published by Dennis Coles. In 1806 Ward M. Gazeley became proprietor, and the name was changed to

The Political Index. In 1823 Charles M. Cushman became publisher, and the name was changed to

The Orange Telegraph. Within a few years it was changed again to

The Newburgh Telegraph, and has since been issued respectively by H. H. Van Dyck, Elias Pitts, and E. M. Knuttenber, until 1837, when it passed into the hands of Joseph Lawson, by whom it is now published.

The New Windsor Gazette was commenced at New Windsor in 1797 by Jacob Schultz. In 1799 it was removed to Newburgh, and its name was changed to

The Orange County Gazette. John W. Barber and David Deniston afterward became interested in its publication. About 1803 it was changed to

The Citizen, and soon after it was merged in

The Rights of Man, which was commenced at Newburgh in 1799 by Elias Winfield, and was continued until 1809 or '10.

The Orange County Gazette was commenced at Goshen in 1805 by John G. Hurton and Gabriel Denton. It was successively issued by Gabriel Denton, Elliott Hopkios, F. T. & A. O. Houghton, until 1813, when Luther Pratt became the proprietor, and changed it to the Independent Republican, and removed it to Montgomery, where it was published some years. It afterward passed into the hands of James A. Cheever, who removed it back to Goshen. In 1831 H. Van Dyck became proprietor. It was subsequently issued by V. M. Drake, Moses Swezey, Clark and Montanye, James McNally, and Montanye & Green. It is now published by J. V. Montanye & Co.

The Orange County Patriot was published at Wards Bridge in 1808.

The Orange County Patriot and Spirit of '76 was commenced at Goshen in 1808 by Gabriel Denton. In 1818 it was changed to

The Orange County Patriot, and was issued by Timothy B. Crowell. R. C. S. Hendries afterward became proprietor, and continued it until 1832, when it came into the hands of F. T. Parsons, who changed it to

The Goshen Democrat. It was soon after published by Mead & Webb; and in 1845 it was united with the True Whig, as

The Goshen Democrat and Whig. In a few years the name Whig, was dropped, and the paper again appeared as

The Goshen Democrat, under which title it is now published by Charles Mead.

The Newburgh Gazette was commenced in 1822 by J. D. Spaulding. It was successively issued by Spaulding & Parmenter, Spaulding & Risovels, Risovels & Leslie, Wallace & Street, S. T. Callahan, and Wm. L. Allison, until 1856, when it passed into the hands of E. W. Gray, its present publisher.

The Evangelical Witness, mo., was published a short time at Newburgh in 1824 by Rev. Jas. B. Wilson.

The Orange County Farmer was commenced in 1826 at Goshen by Samuel Williams. It afterward passed into the hands of Luther Pratt, who removed it to Montgomery, where it was continued but a short time.

The Beacon was published a short time at Newburgh in 1828 by —Beute.

Journal of the American Association, mo., was published at West Point in 1830. It was the organ of an association of cadets for the promotion of sciences, literature, and the arts.

The Orange Herald was published at Slate Hill, in Wawayanda, by John G. Wallace in 1831.

The Republican Banner was commenced at Walden, in Montgomery, in June, 1831, and was continued several years.

The first settlements in the co. are supposed to have been made by the Dutch, soon after the first occupation of Manhattan Island. Traces of an early occupation were found upon the first advent of the progenitors of the present race, among which was a road known as the "Old Mine Road," extending from the s. line of the co. along the valley of the Shawangunk to Esopus, on the Hudson. These settlements were broken up; and no record is left of them. The next race of settlers came in about the commencement of the 18th century and located in various parts of the co. They were Dutch, French Huguenots, and English, nearly all seeking liberty in the wilderness. The first patent issued was the Minisink Patent, in 1697, embracing the greater part of the co. lying upon the Shawangunk Mts., and a considerable portion of Sullivan co. The remaining portions of the co. were embraced in Chesecock's Patent,¹ issued in 1702, embracing the s. e. part; the Wawayanda Patent,² issued in 1703, embracing the w. and n. parts; and the John Evans Patent,³ the precise date of which is not known. The boundaries of these various patents were so vague that it was found impossible to locate them without conflicting with others; and serious difficulties arose between the different claimants.⁴

The policy of granting large patents was soon abandoned, and the remaining parts of the co. were patented in small tracts to actual settlers, from about 1718 to 1750. The settlements progressed but slowly, in consequence of the fear of Indian hostilities. During the French War of 1755 the frontier settlements were often attacked by small parties of hostile Indians and the defenseless inhabitants were murdered and carried into captivity. The principal weight of these attacks fell upon the settlements in the Neversink Valley. During the Revolution the frontiers were again constantly in a state of alarm. In July, 1779, Brant, at the head of a large Indian force, laid waste the whole Minisink settlement; and on his retreat the disastrous battle of Minisink was fought, in which nearly the whole force of the Americans was destroyed.⁵

The eastern part of the co. was also the scene of stirring military events. The importance of the passes through the Highlands was early appreciated by Washington, and strong fortifications were thrown up at various points to protect them. Fort Montgomery was erected on the river, at the s. line of the co., and Fort Clinton on the opposite side of a small creek in Rockland co. Several

The Signs of the Times, semi-mo., was commenced at New Vernon, in Mount Hope, in 1832, by Gilbert Beebe. In 1847 it was removed to Middletown, where it is now published by G. J. Beebe.

The Literary Scrap Book, mo., was published at Newburgh in 1855 by K. Denton.

The Hardware Man's Newspaper, mo., was commenced Aug. 1855, at Middletown, by John Williams, by whom it is still published. It is issued from the office of the Whig Press.

The Newburgh American was commenced at Newburgh in 1855 by R. P. L. Shafer & Co., and was continued a short time.

The Newburgh Times was commenced at Newburgh in 1856 by R. B. Hancock. It soon passed into the hands of R. H. Bloomer, its present publisher.

The Daily News was commenced at Newburgh in 1856 by E. W. Gray. It was subsequently discontinued, and its publication resumed in 1857 by E. M. Ruttenber & E. W. Gray. It is now published by E. W. Gray & Joseph Lawson.

The Catholic Literary Magazine was published at Newburgh in 1856.

The Sybil, semi-mo., was commenced at Middletown in July, 1856, by Mrs. Dr. Lydia Sayer Hasbrouck. It is issued from the office of the Whig Press.

¹ Chesecocks.—March 25, 1797, to Anna Bridges and 6 others, a tract of upland and meadow called Chesecocks, bounded n. by Capt. J. Evans and Dr. Bridges & Co., w. by Bridges & Co. and w. side of Highlands, s. by patent Daniel Honan and Michael Handon, and e. by the Christian patented lands of Haverstraw and Hudson R. (Act March 17, 1783.)

² Wawayanda.—Queen Anne, on 28th of April, 1703, granted to Dr. John Bridges and 11 others certain tracts known as Wawayanda and other tracts, bounded e. by the High Hills of the Highlands and patent of Capt. John Evans, n. by line of O. and U. Cos., and w. by Minisink Hills, and s. by N. J. (Act March 17, 1783.)

³ This patent was afterward set aside, as it was described in so vague and unsatisfactory a manner that it was impossible to locate it. The others were but little better.

other forts were built both above and below these, and chains were stretched across the river and various impediments were sunk in the channel, to prevent the passage of vessels. Gen. Putnam was left in command of these positions in 1777, when Gen. Howe marched to attack Philadelphia, but with an entirely inadequate force. About the 1st of October, Sir Henry Clinton, in command at New York, sent a force up the river to aid Gen. Burgoyne, who was then hard pressed by the American army. This force first landed at Verplancks Point on the 5th, but in the night following re-embarked, landed on the opposite shore, and on the 6th surprised and captured both Forts Montgomery and Clinton.

The official reports make the loss of the British and Americans about equal; but, as the former were fully exposed to a galling fire while approaching the works, and the latter mostly escaped, it is supposed that the British loss was much greater. The other American works were abandoned, and Gen. Putnam retreated to Fishkill. The British spent some time in removing the various obstructions from the river, and advanced slowly northward, plundering and destroying on their way. They reached Esopus on the 15th, and at the same time Gen. Putnam, whose force had been augmented to 6,000 men by Conn., N. Y. and N. J. militia, sent a detachment of 2,000 to take possession of Peekskill. The British, afraid to go farther n. with such a force in their rear, remained at Esopus until they received news of the surrender of Burgoyne; and then they returned to New York.

The result of this expedition demonstrated the necessity of stronger fortifications among the Highlands, and during the following winter the site of West Point was fixed upon, as the strongest and most eligible on the river. Earthworks were thrown up early in the spring, and from time to time more formidable works were added, until, at the close of the war, it was the most strongly fortified of any place in the country.¹

It was afterward the center of the American operations in the North. In the spring of 1780, Gen. Arnold, who had not entirely recovered from the effects of a wound received at Saratoga, solicited and received the command of this post. The instruction which gave him this command was dated Aug. 3, 1780. Arnold had been in correspondence with the British for more than a year; and he soon negotiated with Sir Henry Clinton to deliver up West Point, for the sum of £10,000 in gold and a commission of Maj. Gen. in the British army. The final consummation of the compact on the part of the British was intrusted to Maj. Andre, who crossed the American lines in disguise and held an interview with Arnold on the 22d of Sept. Upon his attempting to return to New York, he was arrested as a spy, and the whole scheme was discovered. Arnold escaped to New York, and Andre was subsequently executed.²

The headquarters of the American army of the North was for a long time at Newburgh; and it was at this place that Washington finally took leave of his army,³ Aug. 18, 1783.

BLOOMING GROVE—was formed from Cornwall, March 23, 1799. A part of Hamptonburgh was taken off in 1830, and a part of Chester in 1845. It lies a little e. of the center of the co. Its surface is mountainous in the s. and e., and rolling and moderately hilly in the n. and w. Schunemunk Mts., upon the line of Monroe, are 1,300 to 1,500 ft. above tide. The other principal elevations are Lazy Hill, on the line of Chester, Toms Rocks, Peddlers, Rainer, Round, Musquito, and Woodcock Hills, and Red Ridge. These hills are generally too steep and rocky to be ever susceptible of cultivation. The hills in the n. have more gradual slopes, and are arable to their summits. Otter Kil flows n. w. through the w. part, and receives as tributaries Cromlin,⁴ Slatterleys, and several smaller creeks. The extensive bog meadows along Cromlin Creek, in the s. part, have been drained, and are now the most valuable agricultural lands in the town. The soil is a sandy and clayey loam. Washingtonville, (Bloomington p. o.), upon Otter Kil, in the n. part, contains 3 churches and 369 inhabitants; Salisbury Mills, (p. v.), upon the line of Monroe, a church, paper mill, gristmill, and 241 inhabitants; and Craigville, (p. v.) in the w. part, a church, cotton factory, and 20 dwellings.⁵ These places are all stations upon the Newburgh Branch of the N. Y. & E. R. R. Bloomington Grove, near the center, contains 1

¹ The erection of these works was intrusted to Kosciusko, the Polish patriot, then serving as a volunteer in the American army in the capacity of a military engineer. The works consisted of a formidable battery upon the bluff immediately upon the shore, named Fort Clinton, a strong fort upon Mt. Independence, in the rear, named Fort Putnam, and several redoubts and outposts.

² Andre was executed at Tappantown, Rockland co., Oct. 2, 1780.

³ In the spring of 1782, while the army was stationed at Newburgh, a feeling of discontent arose among the officers and men, in consequence of the arrearages in their pay and the hardships they were called upon to endure. This was promptly checked by Washington, and a formidable conspiracy was broken up.

⁴ This creek is called Gray Court Creek in Chester.

⁵ During the Revolution a forge and powder mill were in operation at Craigville. In 1790 James Craig erected a paper mill,—the first in the co.

church and 18 dwellings; Oxford Depot (p. o.) is a hamlet and station upon the Erie R. R. The first settlements are supposed to have been made about 1735.¹ The first church was erected at Blooming Grove, in 1759; Rev. Enos Ayres was the first pastor.²

CHESTER—was formed from Goshen, Warwick, Blooming Grove, and Monroe, March 22, 1845. It is an interior town, lying a little s. w. of the center of the co. The surface is rolling in the n. w., hilly in the center, and mountainous in the s. w. The principal elevations are Goose Pond Mt., Lazy Hill, Snake Hill, and Sugar Loaf Mt.,—all steep, rocky peaks, unfit for cultivation. The highest summits are 500 to 600 ft. above the valleys. The principal streams are Gray Court, Black Meadow, and Ditch Creeks. Along Gray Court Creek, near the n. boundary, are extensive peat meadows, thoroughly drained, and forming the most productive tract in town. The soil is a light, yellow loam, underlaid by clay. Limestone and slate are both found in town. East Chester, (Chester p. o.,) Chester, and West Chester are three villages, situated at the three angles of an equilateral triangle, 1 mi. apart. They contain the Chester Academy, a bank, 2 churches, and about 1,500 inhabitants. Sugar Loaf, (p. v.,) in the s. w. part, contains a church and 36 dwellings. The first settlement was made in 1716, at Gray Court, in the n. e. corner of the town, by Daniel Cromline, from Long Island.³ There are 3 churches in town; 2 M. E. and Presb.

CORNWALL—was formed March 7, 1788, as "New Cornwall." Its name was changed March 3, 1797. "Chesecocks," now Monroe, was taken off in 1799. It lies upon the Hudson, in the e. part of the co. The surface is principally occupied by rocky peaks and ridges of "The Highlands." Their declivities are usually very steep, and their summits are masses of rocks, in some cases covered with a scanty growth of dwarfed forest trees. The highest peaks are Butter Hill, Crows Nest, and Bear Mountain,—respectively 1,529, 1,418, and 1,350 ft. above the river.⁴ The valleys among the mountains are deep, narrow, and rocky. A small portion of the n. w. part of the town is rolling or moderately hilly. The principal streams are Murderers Creek and its principal tributary, Otter Kil, flowing through broad, beautiful valleys in the n. part, and Bog Meadow Creek, emptying into the Hudson below West Point. Upon the latter, near its mouth, is a series of cascades, known as Buttermilk Falls. Cranberry, Long, Sutherlands, and Bog Meadow Ponds are small bodies of water among the mountains. The soil in the valleys is a sandy, clayey, and gravelly loam. The hills are too steep and rocky for cultivation. Canterbury, (Cornwall p. o.,) in the n. e. part of the town, contains 4 churches, a woolen yarn factory, and tannery. Pop. 428. Cornwall Landing, on the Hudson, in the n. e. part, is the center of extensive brick manufactories. Pop. 615. West Point, (p. o.,) on the Hudson, is the seat of the U. S. Military Academy. It contains extensive barracks for the cadets and soldiers, 20 officers' quarters, a philosophical building, containing the library, apparatus, and observatory, a laboratory for ordnance and ammunition, a chapel, hospital, riding hall, stable, equipment shed, Catholic church, and 150 dwellings for employees.⁵ Buttermilk Falls, (p. v.,) 2 mi. below West Point, contains 3 churches and 307 inhabitants. Fort Montgomery, (p. v.,) in the s. e. part, contains 1 church and 16 dwellings; Bethlehem, in the n. w., a church and 12 dwellings. Ketchamtown, in the w., and Townsville, in the n., are hamlets. The first settlements are supposed to have been made about 1720.⁶ The first church (Presb.) was formed in 1730, at Bethlehem; Rev. Mr. Chalker was the first pastor, and Rev. Enos Ayres the second.⁷ Fort Putnam, of the Revolution, was situated immediately in the rear of West Point, and Fort Montgomery on the s. e. border of the town.⁸ Idlewild, the residence of N. P. Willis, is near the Hudson, in the n. e. part of the town.

² There are 8 churches in town; 4 M. E., 2 Cong., Presb., and Friends.

⁴ The other principal elevations are Black Rock and Deer Hills, near the center; Ant Hill, Lawyers Hill, and Mount Rasal, in the s. w.; and Peat, Pine, Cold, and Round Hills, in the n. part.

⁵ In the yard at West Point is a large number of cannon taken during the several wars of the U. S.; and among them are 89 brass pieces captured in the several battles of the Mexican War, each marked when, where, and by whom captured.

⁶ The first settlement was made at and near the village of Canterbury. The tradition is that the first settlement was made there by Germans, who made some clearings and planted an orchard, but, becoming dissatisfied, sold out and left. The next settlers were English, some of whom had first settled in Conn. and Mass. Among the early settlers were the Sutherlands, Sacketts, Sherods, Brewsters, Woods, Clarke, Smiths, Towosends, Van Duzens, Mandevilles, Bartons, Sands, and Thoras. The first town meeting upon record in the precinct of Cornwall was held in April, 1765.

⁷ There are 11 churches in town; 2 Presb., 2 Prot. E., 2 Friends, 2 M. E., Bap., R. C., and Free.

CRAWFORD—was formed from Montgomery, March 4, 1823. It lies in the extreme n. angle of the co. Its surface is a hilly upland, broken by several high ridges extending n. e. and s. w. Collaberg and Comfort Hills, along the e. border, are 300 to 400 ft. above the valleys. The principal streams are Shawangunk River, forming the n. boundary, Dwaars Kil, Paughcaughnaugh-sink and Little Paughcaughnaugh-sink Creeks. These streams all flow in a general n. e. direction. Upon the Shawangunk is a large amount of water-power. The soil is a slaty and clayey loam upon the hills and a sandy and gravelly loam in the valleys. Pine Bush,¹ (p. v.), on the Shawangunk, in the n. part, contains a sawmill, gristmill, and 120 inhabitants; Searsville, (p. v.), on Dwaars Kil, near the center, a gristmill, 2 sawmills, and 16 dwellings; and Bullville, (p. v.), in the s. part, 12 dwellings. Hopewell is a hamlet, in the n. w. Collaburgh is a p. o., 2 mi. e. of Bullville. The first church (Presb.) was formed at Hopewell, in 1779. The census reports 2 churches; Presb. and Asso. Ref. Presb.²

DEERPARK³—was formed from Mamakating, (Sullivan co.), March 16, 1798. A part of Mount Hope was taken off in 1825. It lies in the extreme w. angle of the co. Its surface is a mountainous highland, broken by the valley of Neversink River and numerous deep, rocky ravines of small streams. The Shawangunk Mts. extend along the e. border, and form a high, rocky ridge 1,800 ft. above the valleys, with steep declivities on the w. The Neversink⁴ River flows in a deep valley at the w. foot of the mountains. The central and w. parts are covered with a rocky and mountainous upland, ending in abrupt declivities on Delaware River in the s. The other principal streams are Mongaup River, forming the w. boundary, Bashes⁵ Kil, Old Dam Fall Creek,⁶ Shingle, and Grassy Swamp⁷ Brooks. Big and Little Ponds are two small lakes in the interior. Port Jervis,⁸ (p. v.), upon the Delaware, near the mouth of the Neversink, was incorp. May 11, 1853. It is an important station upon the Erie R. R. and Delaware & Hudson Canal. It contains 5 churches, a saw factory, foundery, machine shop, planing mill, newspaper office, and bank. Pop. 3,023. Honesville, (Sparrow Bush p. o.), upon the Delaware, 2 mi. w. of Port Jervis, contains a large tannery and 26 dwellings; Huguenot, (p. v.), upon the canal, 4 mi. n. e. of Port Jervis, 25 dwellings; and Cuddebackville, (p. v.), upon the canal, in the n. e. part, 1 church and 12 dwellings. Carpenters Point is a hamlet, at the mouth of the Neversink. The first settlements were made about 1690.⁹ There are 7 churches in town.¹⁰ De Witt Clinton was born at Fort De Witt, in this town, March 2, 1769, while his parents were on a visit at the residence of his mother's brother. Lead ore has recently been found in this town.

GOSHEN—was formed March 7, 1788. A part of Hamptonburgh was taken off in 1830, and a part of Chester in 1845. It is an interior town, lying a little s. e. of the center of the co. Its surface is rolling or moderately hilly. The hills are bordered by long and gradual slopes, and are arable to their summits. The s. w. corner is occupied by a portion of the "Drowned Lands," most of which have been reclaimed.¹¹ The principal streams are Wall Kil, forming the w. boundary, and Otter Kil, flowing n. through the e. part. The soil is a sandy loam, underlaid by clay, slate, and limestone. Goshen, (p. v.), near the center, was incorp. March 28, 1809. Besides the co. buildings, it contains 4 churches, a female seminary,¹² several classical schools, 2 newspaper offices, 2 banks, and about 1,800 inhabitants. It is the w. terminus of the Newburgh Branch of the N. Y. & E. R. R., and is an important freight and milk station upon the Erie R. R. The first settlements were made from 1703 to 1714. The first deeds of village lots in Goshen bear the date of 1714. The original Wawayanda Patent,¹³ covering the greater part of this town, was granted by Queen

² Nothing definite could be obtained in regard to the early history of this town.

³ A man named McDonald, in early time, inclosed a large tract by a brush fence, and the inclosure became known as McDonald's "Deer Park." This name was afterward given to the town.

⁴ Called by the Indians Ma-hack-e-mock.

⁵ Named from Bashes, an Indian woman who lived upon its banks.

⁶ This stream falls 600 ft. in 1 mi., and hence its name.

⁷ Named from a series of low natural meadows through which the stream flows.

⁸ Named from ——— Jorvis, the engineer who built the Delaware & Hudson Canal.

¹² The Goshen Female Seminary is a flourishing institution. Several small family classical schools are located in the village.

¹³ Christopher Denu, one of the proprietors of the Wawayanda Patent, located n. e. of Goshen Village in 1712. After visiting the place and deciding upon a location, he returned to his residence on Staten Island, and sent a company of carpenters, his household goods, and his adopted daughter, Mary Wells, then 16 years of age, to his new home, under the guidance of 3 friendly Indians. The carpenters erected a cabin, and Denu and his wife came on the next day after the cabin was built. Mr. Bull, a young Englishman just arrived in an emigrant ship, came in soon after. Among the other early settlers who came previous to 1721 were John Everat, John Carpenter, John Gale, William Ludlum, James Jackson, Isaac Finch, Michael Dunning, Solomon Carpenter, William Jackson, Samuel Seely, Samuel Webb, John Yelverton, Samuel Clowes, John Bradoer, and John

Anne, March 5, 1703. The first church (Presb.) was formed in 1721; Rev. John Bradner was the first pastor.¹

GREENVILLE—was formed from Minisink, Dec. 2, 1853. It lies on the s. w. border of the co., w. of the center. Its surface is a hilly and broken upland. The Shawangunk Mts., extending along the w. border, are 400 to 600 ft. above the valleys and 1,400 to 1,600 ft. above tide. The e. slopes of the mountains are generally gradual, and the hills are arable to their summits. The principal stream is Shawangunk River, which takes its rise in the s. w. angle and flows n. e. through the town. Benin Water Pond is a small body of water in the n. part. The soil is a sandy, gravelly, and clayey loam. Greenville, (Minisink p. o.), in the w. part, contains 2 churches and 12 houses; and Smiths Corners, n. of Greenville, contains 15 houses. Center Point, 2 mi. s. e. of Greenville, is a p. o. The first settlements were probably made from 1720 to 1730.² There are 2 churches in town; Bap. and M. E.

HAMPTONBURGH³—was formed from Goshen, Blooming Grove, Montgomery, New Windsor, and Walkill, April 5, 1830. It is an interior town, lying a little n. of the center of the co. Its surface is rolling and moderately hilly. The principal streams are Wall Kil, forming the n. w. boundary, and Otter Kil, flowing n. e. through near the center. The soil is a gravelly and slaty loam. Otterville, (p. o.), on Otter Kil, near the e. boundary, is a hamlet. Otterkill, s. of Otterville, contains 12 dwellings. Campbell Hall, near the center, and Hamptonburgh, 1 mi. s., are hamlets. The first settlement was made by Wm. Bull, in 1719 or '20. In 1727 he erected a stone house, which is still standing. There are 2 churches in town; Presb. and Asso. Reformed.

MINISINK⁴—was formed March 7, 1788. A part of "Calhoun" (now Mount Hope) was taken off in 1825, Wawayanda in 1849, and Greenville in 1853. It lies upon the N. J. line, s. w. of the center of the co. Its surface is rolling and hilly. The slopes are generally gradual, and the hills are arable to their summits. The principal streams are Wall Kil, Rutgers Creek, and Wawayanda Kil,—each of the three forming some portion of the e. boundary. The Drowned Lands occupy a small portion of the e. angle. The soil is principally a gravelly loam. Unionville, (p. v.), in the s. part, contains 2 churches and 25 dwellings; and West Town, (p. v.), 3 mi. n. of Unionville, 2 churches and 15 dwellings. Waterloo Mills (p. o.) is a hamlet, containing 1 church and 6 dwellings. No records of the early settlement have been preserved. There are 5 churches in town.⁵

MONROE⁶—was formed from Cornwall, March 23, 1799, as "Chesecoaks." Its name was changed to "Southfield," April 3, 1801, and to Monroe, April 6, 1808. A part of Chester was taken off in 1845. It is the s. e. corner town in the co. It lies mostly among the Highlands; and its surface is a hilly and mountainous upland. The principal ranges are Schunemunk Mts., in the n., Black and Bear Mts., in the e., and the Southfield Mts., near the center,—all extending n. e. and s. w.⁷ Their declivities are steep and in many places precipitous, and their summits are rough, rocky, and broken. A large share of the whole town is unfit for cultivation. In the n. w. part are several valleys containing arable land. The principal streams are Ramapo River, flowing s., and Murderers Creek, flowing n. The Forest-of-Dean Creek drains the e. part and discharges its waters into the Hudson. Among the mountains are a great number of fine, small lakes and ponds.⁸ The soil in the valleys is a sandy and gravelly loam. The mountains are too rough for cultivation. Monroe, (p. v.), in the n. w. part of the town, contains 2 churches and 266 inhabitants. It is a station upon the Erie R. R. Turners,⁹ (p. v.), a station upon the r. r., near the center, contains 18 dwellings. Greenwood Works (p. v.) is a station upon the r. r., 3 mi. s. of Turners

Denton, many of whose descendants still reside in the town. The first marriage was that of Wm. Bull and Sarah Wells, in 1718. The first inn was kept by Birdsye Yarrington. Noah Webster, author of Webster's Dictionaries, taught the first academic school, in the village of Goshen, in 1782. De Witt Clinton was a pupil at the academy at one time. William H. Seward studied law at the office of Judge Duer, in this village.

² Facts relating to the early history of this town could not be accurately ascertained.

³ Named from Wolverhampton, the birthplaces of Wm. Bull, the first settler.

⁴ Tradition says that long ago, before the Delaware River broke through the mountain at the Water Gap, the lands for 30 or 40 mi. bordering upon it were covered by a lake, but became drained by the breaking down of that part of the dam which confined it, and that a part of a tribe of Indians from New Jersey settled upon these lands from which the waters had retired. The lands were called "Minisies," signifying "lands from which the waters had gone," and the name was afterward applied to the Indians living upon it. From this name the term "Minisink" is derived.—Eager's Hist. Orange Co., p. 408.

⁵ 3 Fresh, Bap., and Christian.

⁶ Named in honor of James Monroe, afterward President of the U. S.

⁷ Among the principal mountain peaks are Black Top, Black Cap, and Long Hills, in the n.; Tara Mt. and Cape Hill, in the e.; Tom Jones Mt. and Hemlock Hill, in the s. e.; Pines and Prickly Ash Hills, in the s.; and Hogback, Hall, Tiger, Cedar, Burned, Rocky, and Macaron Hills, in the center.

⁸ Among the principal ponds are Hazard Pond, in the n.; Slaughter's, Two Pond, Bull, Poplorens, and Cedar Ponds, in the e.; Little, Long, and Duck Cedar Ponds, in the s.; and Little Long, Round, and Msmbasha Ponds, in the w.

⁹ Formerly called "Centerville."

Station. A blast furnace is situated near the R. R., and another about 1 mi. E. There are about 15 houses in the vicinity. Monroe Works, (p. o.), 3 mi. S. of Greenwood Works, was the seat of extensive iron works, which have been abandoned. Highland Mills, (p. v.), in the N. part, contains 2 churches and 15 dwellings. Lower Smith Clove, 1 mi. S. of Highland Mills, is a hamlet; and Woodbury Clove, near the N. line, contains 1 church and 12 houses. The first settlements were probably made about 1742.¹ The Chesecocks Patent, granted in 1702, embraced a portion of the Ramapo Valley in this town. There are 5 churches in town.²

MONTGOMERY³—was formed March 7, 1788. Crawford was taken off in 1823, and a part of Hamptonburgh in 1830. It lies upon the N. border of the co., E. of the center. Its surface is generally a hilly upland. The Comfort Hills,⁴ 600 to 800 ft. above tide, extend along the W. border. Wall Kil flows N. E. through near the center; and its principal tributary, Tin Brook,⁵ flows through the E. part. Upon Wall Kil, in the N. part, is a fall of 40 ft., affording an excellent water-power. Along the same stream, in the S. part, is considerable swamp land. The soil is a fine quality of gravelly loam. Montgomery, (p. v.) upon Wall Kil, S. of the center, was incorp. Feb. 17, 1810. It contains 2 churches, the Montgomery Academy, 3 gristmills, and a sawmill. Pop. 760. Walden, (p. v.) on Wall Kil, 4 mi. N. of Montgomery, was incorp. April 9, 1855. It contains 3 churches, a shawl factory, satinet factory, and a manufactory of cutlery. Pop. 641. St. Andrews, (p. o.), in the N. E. part, contains 10 dwellings. Coldenham,⁶ near the E. line, is a hamlet. The earliest patent comprising land in this town was granted in 1709, to Henry Hileman. It was located at the mouth of Tin Brook, below Walden. It was settled by the proprietor and divided into lots in 1712. Lieut. Gov. Cadwallader Colden, the owner of a patent in this town, located at Coldenham in 1728.⁷ The first church (Ref. Prot. D.) was formed at Montgomery Village in 1732.⁸

MOUNT HOPE—was formed from Walkill, Minisink, and Deepark, as "Calkoun," Feb. 15, 1825. Its name was changed March 14, 1833. It lies upon the N. border of the co., N. W. of the center. Its surface is a hilly and broken upland. The Shawangunk Mts. extend through the W. part; the highest summits are 1,400 to 1,800 ft. above tide. Shawangunk River flows N. E. through the center, and the Little Shawangunk along the E. border. The soil is a sandy and gravelly loam. Otisville, (p. v.), near the W. border, contains 2 churches and 309 inhabitants. It is a station upon the Erie R. R. Mount Hope, (p. v.), 2 mi. S. of Otisville, contains 2 churches and 120 inhabitants; New Vernon, in the N. part, a church and 20 dwellings. Finchville is a hamlet, in the S. E. part. The precise date of the settlement of this town is unknown. James Finch settled some time previous to the Revolution.⁹ There are 6 churches in town.¹⁰

NEWBURGH¹¹—was formed March 7, 1788. It lies upon the Hudson, and is the N. E. corner town in the co. Its surface is a hilly and broken upland, the highest summits being 600 to 900 ft.

¹ A family of Smiths settled very early in the town, and from them the town was called "Smiths Clove." Among the early settlers were families of Millers, Galloways, Carpenters, Bullis, Dobbins, Wyzants, Warda, Coltons, Nobles, Cunninghams, Slanghters, and Lamoreaux,—mostly English families from the Eastern States. The first iron works was that of Ward & Colton, erected in 1751 for the manufacture of anchors. It was situated in Warwick, just over the line from Monroe. In 1752 Abel Noble, from Penn., erected a forge in this town, near the Ward & Colton furnace. Here the first anchor was made, in 1753. Steel was made in 1775; and during the Revolution one of the chains thrown across the Hudson was manufactured here. It weighed 180 tons. During the Revolution, Claudius Smith, a noted Tory, resided in this town. He was hung at Goshen, Jan. 22, 1779.

² M. E., Presb., and Friends.

³ Named in honor of Gen. Richard Montgomery. In 1767 the town was called the "Walkill Precinct," and in 1772 it was known as the "Hanover Precinct." In 1782 its name was changed to the Montgomery Precinct.

⁴ Named from a family of Comforts who were early settlers in that region.

⁵ Name derived from Tinn and Broc, meaning small river.

⁶ Named from the family of Cadwallader Colden, who was an early proprietor.

⁷ Johannes Miller settled on Wall Kil, 2 mi. S. of Montgomery, in 1727. Among the other early settlers were John Neely, Charles Booth, Wm. Eager, Fred. Sinsabangh, and Johannes Youngblood,—all of whom settled between 1730 and 1741. The E. part of the town was originally settled by Irish, and the valley of Wall Kil by Hollanders. The first store was kept by Alexander Colden, in 1742; and the first gristmill was built at Walden, by James Kidd. In the fall of 1775 the people of Boston, by reason of the great scarcity of supplies and provisions, applied to this State for aid; and accordingly a public meeting was called, which convened in the town of "Hanover," (now Montgomery.) In the mean time the friends of the mother country, always on the alert, had procured the services of a talented orator for the purpose of defeating the objects of the meeting. As no one could be found among the adherents of the cause of liberty who was able to speak in public, recourse was had to the Rev. Mr. Annan, of Neshotown, who at first declined, but at length consented. A multitude were assembled on the occasion to hear a discussion upon a subject which was then the absorbing topic of the day. The discussion was continued for some time with fairness and ability on either side, until at length, to check a strife of angry words and to test the disposition of the assembly, Mr. Annan suddenly said, "As many as are in favor of assisting the people of Boston and the cause of Liberty, follow me." The effect was electric. Immediately upon his leaving the house he beheld, to his utter astonishment, the whole multitude at his heels.—Eager's Hist. Orange Co., p. 636.

⁸ There are 7 churches in town; 2 Ref. Prot. D., 2 M. E., Prot. E., Presb., and Covenanter. The Ref. Prot. D. church, near Montgomery, has connected with it a farm of 75 acres, valued at $7,000, and a parsonage.

⁹ Mr. Finch was a soldier in the French War, and a minute-man during the Revolution.

¹¹ Until 1763, the present towns of Newburgh and New Windsor were included in the "Precinct of the Highlands." During that year this precinct was divided into the precincts of Newburgh and New Windsor, and continued as such until they were organized as towns in 1768.

above the river. A series of bluffs 100 to 300 ft. in height extends along the river. The greater part of the hilly region is arable. The principal stream is Quassaic Creek,¹ forming a part of the boundary of New Windsor. It receives from the n. Fostertown and Gidneys Creeks and Orange Lake Outlet. Orange Lake,² in the w. part, covers an area of about 400 acres. Along its inlet is considerable marshy land. The soil is principally a clay and sandy loam. Newburgh, (p. v.) on the Hudson, near the s. e. corner of the town, was incorp. March 25, 1800. It lies upon a steep slope which rises from the river to the height of about 150 ft. and thence spreads out into a rolling region. Besides the co. buildings, it contains 14 churches,³ 5 banks, and several private schools and academies.⁴ It is largely engaged in the manufacture of printed cotton cloths, castings, beer, and a variety of other articles.⁵ The commercial interests of the place are also large and important.⁶ The village is supplied with water brought from Little Pond, 3 mi. s. w., by the Newburgh Waterworks Co. These works were erected in 1853, at a cost of $96,000. In the lower part of the village the water has a head of 230 ft. A steam ferry connects this place with Fishkill Landing. Pop. 9,256. Overlooking the Hudson, in the s. part of the village, stands an old stone mansion known as "Washington's Head Quarters." It is surrounded by a fine lawn of several acres; and the whole premises are owned and kept in order by the State.⁷ Savil is a p. o., about 5 mi. n. w. of Newburgh. Middle Hope, (p. v.) in the n. e. part of the town, contains 1 church and 12 houses; Fostertown, 4 mi. n. w. of Newburgh, a church and 10 houses; and Gardnertown, e. of Orange Lake, a church and 14 houses. Coldenham is a p. o., in the w. part. Balmville, 2 mi. n. of Newburgh, is a hamlet. The first settlement was made on the present site of the village of Newburgh, by Palatinates, in 1708.⁸ The first church (St. George's Prot. E.) was formed about 1728; and the first minister was Rev. Mr. Charlton, sent out by the "London Society for the Propagation of the Gospel."⁹ An almshouse, for the support of the town poor, is situated upon a farm of 75 acres on the s. w. line of the village corporation of Newburgh. The buildings are of brick; and the cost of the whole establishment was about $30,000.¹⁰

NEW WINDSOR¹¹—was formed March 7, 1788. A part of Hamptonburgh was taken off in 1830. It lies upon the Hudson, n. of the center of the co. Its surface is a rolling and hilly upland. The slopes and the summits of the hills are usually smooth and arable. Snake Hill is a rough, rocky eminence in the n. e. part, 500 to 600 ft. above tide. The principal stream is Murderers Creek, flowing through the s. e. corner. Tin Brook flows n. along the w. border. Little Pond, in the n. e. part, supplies the Newburgh Waterworks. It is 230 ft. above tide. The soil is a gravelly and slaty loam. New Windsor, upon the Hudson, 2 mi. s. of Newburgh, contains 2 churches and about 75 dwellings. It is a steamboat landing, and the center of a large brick

² Formerly called "Moses Pond," from an early settler. It was afterward called "Machens Pond," from Capt. Machen, who erected upon its outlet a manufactory of copper coin.

⁴ The Highland Academy, a private boarding school, was commenced Sept. 1, 1858. The Newburgh Collegiate Institute was commenced May 1, 1857. There are several other select schools in the village.

⁷ The main body of this house was erected by Jonathan Hasbrouck in 1750, and from this circumstance it was formerly known as "The Old Hasbrouck House." The kitchen on the s. was added in 1760, making it a long, narrow building. In 1770 an addition was made upon the whole length of the w. side, and a new roof was thrown over the whole. There are 8 rooms on the first floor, and from the principal room 8 doors open leading to every part of the house, including the chambers and cellar. This building was used by Washington for his headquarters while the American army occupied this position upon the Hudson. It was purchased by the State in —, and is kept as nearly as possible in its original condition. The rooms and the grounds are filled with relics of the Revolution and mentones of the War of 1812 and the Mexican War. The walls of the bedroom occupied by Washington are covered by original letters of Washington, La Fayette, and other distinguished men of the Revolution, framed and glazed. Among the curiosities are the tables used by Washington and La Fayette, links from the chain which was stretched across the Hudson, and a great variety of warlike implements. Near the n. e. corner of the house is the grave of Uzal Knapp, the last of Washington's Life Guards; he died in Jan. 1856.

⁸ The "Newburgh Patent" was granted to George Lackstead, Michael Wiegand, Heman Shoreman, Christian Henrich, — Cockertal, Burgher Myndus, Jacob Webber, Johannes Fiesher, and Andreas Valch,—all from Palatine, on the Rhine. They made a settlement, designated a site for a village, and called it Newburgh. How long they remained is not known; but previous to 1752 they sold out their grant, as at that date the patent was renewed by Gov. Clinton to Alexander Colden, Richard Albertson, Edmund Conklin, jr., William Ward, Thomas Ward, Nathan Truman, Jacob Wandell, Johannes Wandell, Daniel Thurston, James Denton, Cahiese Leveridge, Michael Demott, Wm. Smith, Henry Smith, Duncan Alexander, and William Mitchell. It is supposed that those last named were from England. Some of the early settlers were of Dutch descent; and a few were Huguenots originally from France. Of this last class were the Hasbroucks, Demotts, Slatts, Devines, Devolls, Degroves, Duhoises, Hasbrouchs, Snyders, Terwilligers, and Benscottens. The Hasbroucks came as early as 1750. The old Glebe School House was erected in 1752. Jonathan Hasbrouck erected the first mill, in 1753. A tract of 500 acres, called the "Glebe," near the n. line of Newburgh Village, was originally granted for the support of the gospel and schools.

⁹ Outside of Newburgh Village there are 3 churches in town; all M. E.

manufacture. Moodna¹ (p. o.) contains a cotton factory, paper mill, and 10 dwellings. Mortonville, (p. o.,) near the center, contains 1 church, a gristmill, and 6 dwellings. Little Britain, near the center, is a p. o. The first settlements were made in 1731, by several emigrants from Ireland, prominent among whom was Col. Charles Clinton, grandfather of De Witt Clinton.² The first church (Asso. Ref.) was formed at Little Britain, in 1760; Rev. Robert Annan was the first pastor.³

WALKILL—was formed March 7, 1788. A part of "Cathoun," now Mount Hope, was taken off in 1825, and a part of Hamptonburgh in 1830. It lies upon the n. w. border of the co., n. e. of the center. Its surface is a hilly and broken upland. The principal streams are Shawangunk River, forming the n. w. boundary, and Wall Kil, forming a part of the s. e. boundary. Monhagan Creek and several other streams are tributaries of these two. The soil is a clayey and gravelly loam. Middletown, (p. v.,) in the s. part, was incorp. Feb. 10, 1848. Next to Newburgh, it is the largest village in the co. It contains 7 churches, the Walkill Academy, several private seminaries, 2 banks, 2 newspaper offices, and several manufacturing establishments.⁴ It is an important freight and milk station upon the Erie R. R.⁵ Pop. 1,873. Circleville, (p. v.,) 5 mi. n. of Middletown, contains 2 churches and 16 dwellings. Scotch Town, (p. v.,) 4 mi. n. e. of Middletown, contains 1 church and 20 dwellings. Howells Depot, (p. v.,) a station upon the e. r., 4 mi. n. w. of Middletown, contains a church and 15 dwellings. Mechanic Town, 2 mi. e. of Middletown, contains a woolen factory and 20 dwellings. Philipsburgh and Rockville are hamlets. The first settlement was made by Wm. and Thomas Bull, sons of Wm. Bull, of Goshen, who located upon Wall Kil in 1767.⁶ There are 12 churches in town.⁷

WARWICK—was formed March 7, 1788. A part of Chester was taken off in 1845. It lies upon the line of N. J., in the extreme s. angle of the co. Its surface is mountainous in the s. and e. and broken and hilly in the n. and w. The principal mountain ranges are the Sterling, Rough, and Warwick Mts. in the s. e., and the Bellvale Mts. in the e.⁸ They are high, steep, and rocky, and have all the characteristics peculiar to a wild, mountain region. In the extreme w. part is a nearly level region, occupied by the Drowned Lands.⁹ Several eminences in the midst of these lands are denominated islands.¹⁰ The principal streams are Wall Kil, forming the w. boundary, Quaker Creek, forming the n. w. boundary, and the Wawayanda, or Warwick, and Pochuck Creeks. Greenwood Lake, upon the s. line, extends about 4 mi. into this town. The other principal bodies of water are Sterling, Wickhams, and Thompsons Ponds, near the e. border. The soil is light and unproductive upon the hills, and a gravelly and sandy loam in the valleys. Warwick, (p. v.,) on Wawayanda Creek, near the center of the town, contains 3 churches, the Warwick Institute, and 358 inhabitants. Florida, (p. v.,) in the n. part, contains 3 churches, the S. S. Seward Seminary,¹¹ and 45 dwellings; Amity, (p. v.,) in the w. part, 1 church and 30 dwellings; Edenville, (p. v.,) 2 mi. n. e. of Amity, a church and 24 dwellings; New Milford, (p. v.,) in the s. part, a church and 26 dwellings; Bellvale, (p. v.,) in the e., a church and 192 inhabitants; and Dutch Hollow, 2 mi. s. e. of Bellvale, a church and 15 dwellings. Sterling Works, in the extreme s. part, is a hamlet.¹² The precise date of the first settlement is unknown. Daniel Burt, from Conn., came into town in 1746.¹³ The first church (Presb.) was formed in 1764, and the second (Bap.) in 1766.¹⁴ Hon. Wm. H. Seward was born at the village of Florida.

² In 1732 or '33, families named Alsop, Ellison, Chambers, and Lawrence settled upon the present site of New Windsor Village. The headquarters of the American army were at this place at one time during the Revolution.

³ There are 6 churches in town; 3 M. E., Presb., Prot. E., and Asso. Ref.

⁴ The principal establishments are a carpet bag factory, file factory, grain cradle factory, hat factory, 2 sash and blind factories, and a foundry and machine shop. In the aggregate these factories employ about 300 hands, and manufacture goods to the amount of $450,000 annually.

⁵ 2,500 gall. of milk are sent daily to N. Y. from the e. r. stations in this town.

⁷ 4 Presb., 3 Bap., 2 Cong., 2 M. E., and R. C.

⁸ The principal elevations in town are Hogback, Decker, One Pine, and Hills Hills, in the e.; Bill and Coxcomb Hills, in the center; Long, Cedar, Pood, and Bill Whites Hills, in the s. e.;

Round, Rocky, and Chucks Hills, in the s.; Ponchuck Mt. and Green and Adneys Hills, in the w.; and Mts. Adam and Eye, and Round Hill, in the n. w.

⁹ These lands have mostly been drained and converted into the most valuable meadows.

¹⁰ Among these eminences are Pine, Merritt, Gardners, Black Walnut, Cranberry, and Fox Islands.

¹¹ This seminary was founded about 1845, by Judge S. S. Seward, father of Wm. H. Seward, who endowed it with a fund of $20,000.

¹³ Among the other early settlers were Thos. Willing, Daniel Whitney, Benj. Burt, John Vance, and David McCauley. The first mill was built by David Vance, at Bellvale, in 1760. Many of the early settlers were Dutch, and others English, from Mass. and Conn.

¹⁴ There are 11 churches in town; 6 M. E., 3 Presb., Bap., and Ref. Prot. D

WAWAYANDA¹—was formed from Minisink, Nov. 15, 1849. It is an interior town, lying s. w. of the center of the co. Its surface is rolling and hilly. The highest summit is Joe Gee Hill,² in the n. w. part. The Drowned Lands occupy a portion of the s. e. corner. The principal streams are Wall Kil, forming the s. e. boundary, Rutgers Creek, forming the s. w. boundary, Wawayanda Creek, in the w. part, and Monhagan Creek, in the n. e. corner. The soil is chiefly a clay and sandy loam, and is best adapted to pasturage.³ New Hampton, (p. v.), on Wall Kil, in the n. e. corner, contains a gristmill, sawmill, and 25 dwellings; Denton, 1 mi. s. w. of New Hampton, 1 church and 25 dwellings; Ridgebury, (p. v.) near the center, 2 churches and 30 dwellings; Slate Hill, (p. v.) 1 mi. e. of Ridgebury, 1 church and 25 dwellings; Centerville, in the w. part, 1 church and 15 dwellings; Millsburgh, (Wells Corner p. o.) 1 mi. s. of Centerville, on the line of Minisink, a grist and saw mill and 15 dwellings; and Gardnersville, in the s. part, on the line of Minisink, a gristmill, sawmill, and 15 dwellings. The first settlements are supposed to have been made previous to 1700.⁴ There are 5 churches in town; 3 Presb., M. E., and Bap.

¹ The name is said by some to be an Indian corruption of the English phrase "away over yonder."—Eager's Hist. Orange Co., pp. 432, 433.
² Named from the last Indian who had his cabin on the hill.

³ 1,600 gallons of milk are sent daily from this town to the N. Y. market.
⁴ Among the early settlers were John Denton, Richard Carpenter, Isaac Dolean, and Daniel and David Cooley. Isaac Dolean built a blockhouse as a protection against the Indians, in 1750

SCHOHARIE COUNTY.

This county was formed from Albany and Otsego, April 6, 1795.¹ A small part of Greene was annexed in 1836. It is an interior co., lying s. e. of the center of the State, is centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains — sq. mi. Its surface is an upland, broken by mountains in the s. and by hills in the center and n. A northerly branch of the Catskill Mts. lies along the s. border, the highest summits of which are 3,000 ft. above tide. From them irregular spurs extend northward, occupying the greater part of the co. Many of the summits along the e. and w. borders are 800 to 1,000 ft. above the valleys and about 2,000 ft. above tide. In the n. the hills are generally rounded and are arable to their summits; but in the center and s. the declivities are steep and in many places precipitous. The high ridge along the e. border, and extending into Albany co., is known as the Hellebark Mts.

The hills derive their general features from the rocks that underlie them. The extreme n. part of the co. is terraced like the limestone region farther w. Toward the s. the hills become more steep; and in the shaly region they are broken by deep, irregular ravines. In many places the hills bordering upon the streams are 1,000 ft. high and very precipitous. Schoharie Creek flows n. e. through the co. a little e. of the center. It receives as tributaries Foxes Creek, Stony Brook, Little Schoharie, Keyzers Kil, Platter Kil, and Manor Kil from the e., and Cripplebush Kil, Cobles Kil, Line Kil, Panther Kil, West Kil, and Mine Kil from the w. West Kil and Punch Kil are tributaries of Cobles Kil. Charlotte River, a branch of the Susquehanna, takes its rise in the w. part. Several small tributaries of the Delaware rise among the Catskill Mts. on the s. Catskill Creek and Nomans Kil also rise in the s. e. part. Utsyantha² and Summit Lakes, two small ponds, are the only bodies of water in the co. The former is 1,900 ft. and the latter 2,150 ft. above tide.

The rocks in the co., commencing upon the n. border and appearing successively toward the s., are those belonging to the Hudson River group, Clinton group, Onondaga salt group, Helderbergh series, Hamilton group, Portage and Chemung group, and the Catskill group. The limestones are cavernous; and the minerals which they afford are particularly interesting to mineralogists.³ Drift is scattered over the co. to a limited extent. Waterlime is found, but is not now manufactured.

The soils are principally derived from the disintegration of the underlying rocks. In the n. the soil is a productive, clay loam, and in the center and s. it is a clay and sandy loam, the latter predominating upon the s. hills. The alluvial flats along Schoharie Creek are unusually fertile.

The co. is eminently an agricultural region. Spring grains are largely produced. Hops are cultivated in the w. part, and broomcorn upon the Schoharie Flats. Dairying is the principal business in the s. part. Very little manufacturing is done, except such as is customary in an agricultural region.

The county seat is located at the village of Schoharie.⁴ The courthouse is a fine edifice built of blue limestone, located near the center of the village. The jail is a stone building, situated in rear of the courthouse. The clerk's office is a small, fireproof building, upon the courthouse lot, nearly in front. The poorhouse is located upon a farm of 160 acres in Middleburgh, 5 mi. s. w. of the courthouse. The average number of inmates is 60, supported at a weekly cost of 75 cents each. This institution seems to be well managed and much above the average of similar institutions in the State.

The Albany & Susquehanna R. R. is located along the valleys of Schoharie Creek and Cobles

The original Indian name was To-wos-scho'her; and it has been written Shoary, Skobary, Schughhorre, &c.

² Utsyantha was the n. e. corner of the Hardenbergh Patent, and a distinguished landmark in early records.

³ Among the more interesting are stalactites of pure white, translucent and solid, sulphate of barytes, calcite, satin spar, tufa, agaric mineral, bog ore, black oxid of manganese, sulphate and carbonate of strontia, fluor spar, calcetronbarytes, carbonata and carbonate of iron, and arragonite. The co. affords an unusual variety of fossils peculiar to the respective geological formations.

Kil, through Esperance, Schoharie, Cobleskill, and Richmondville.¹ Several turnpikes and lines of plank road extend across the co.²

About thirty years previous to the advent of the whites, a number of Indians belonging to the Mohawks, Mohicans, Delawares, Tuscaroras, and Oneidas united together, formed the Schoharie tribe, and took up their abode along Schoharie Creek.³ Their principal chief was Ka-righ-on-don-tee, who had been a prisoner of the French in Canada and had married a Mohawk woman. This tribe was subordinate to the Six Nations. They could bring into the field about 600 warriors, and in the wars that ensued they steadily espoused the cause of the British. At an early period, with the aid of the Colonial Government, they erected several strongholds to protect themselves from the attacks of the Canada Indians. A band of 200 Indians remained in the valley, at peace with the settlers, until the commencement of the Revolution. Efforts were made to induce them to remain neutral during the war; but the offers of the British were so tempting that at last they took up arms against their neighbors. Previous to this a pestilence had swept off the greater part of the tribe, though the whites were not in the least affected by it.

The first white settlement was made by a colony of German Palatinates, in 1711. These people had previously settled at East and West Camp, on the Hudson. Their number is estimated at 600 to 700. They settled in 7 clusters, or villages, each under a leader or head man, from whom the dorf, or village, was usually named.⁴ The Dutch soon after began a settlement at "Vroomansland," on the w. side of the creek, 2 or 3 mi. above the German settlement.⁵ The Palatinates at first did not secure a patent for the lands they occupied, and a short time after their settlement Nicholas Bayard appeared as agent of the British Government, and offered to give the settlers deeds for their lands; but he was assailed by a mob and was obliged to flee for his life. Upon reaching Schenectady he sent back word that for an ear of corn each he would give a clear title to the lands occupied by each; but this offer was rejected. He returned to Albany and sold the tract to 5 persons at that place.⁶ A sheriff, named Adams, was sent to arrest some of the trespassers; but no sooner was his business known than he was assailed by a mob and ridden upon a rail. For a considerable time after this outrage none of the German settlers dared visit Albany; but after a time they ventured to do so, and were at once arrested and thrown into jail. They were at length released on making a written acknowledgment of the outrage they had perpetrated.⁷ The settlers at length sent an embassy, consisting of Conrad Weiser, — Casselman, and another, to England to petition the king for redress. The ship that took them out carried also a statement of the outrages, and the ambassadors were at once imprisoned; but after a time they were set at liberty and permitted to return. Weiser was so chagrined at the result of the controversy that soon after, with about 60 families, he emigrated to Tulpehocton, Berks co., Penn. Other families removed to German Flats and others to Stone Arabia.⁸ Peter Vrooman, with several Dutch families,⁹ perma-

² The principal turnpikes in the co. in early times were the Great Western, extending to Cherry Valley, built in 1802; and the Charlotte River Turnpike, built in 1803. The latter formed the great thoroughfare to the settlements in Delaware co. and adjacent regions. The plank road project was pretty thoroughly tried, and has been abandoned after a sacrifice of nearly all the capital invested.

³ The Mohicans principally settled near the mouth of the Little Schoharie; and the largest settlement of the others was at "Vroomansland," in the present town of Fulton.

⁵ Adam Vrooman, from Schenectady, obtained a patent for 1,100 acres, Aug. 26, 1714. His tract was afterward found to contain 1,400 acres. It embraced the flats along the creek in the present town of Fulton, except Wilder Hook, at which place was an Indian castle and settlement. His son Peter, for whom it was bought, built a house, planted corn, and the first winter left the premises in charge of a man named Truax, and a negro man and his wife. Truax was murdered, and the negro and his wife were arrested, tried at Albany, and burned alive; but years after, one Moore, a resident of "Weisers Dorf," confessed that he and the negro man committed the deed, and that the woman was innocent. — Simms's Schoharie, p. 56.

⁶ The purchasers were Myndert Schuyler, Peter Van Brugh, Robert Livingston, jr., John Schnyler, and Henry Wielman. They received a patent, Nov. 3, 1714, for 10,000 acres, which was designed to include the flats from "Vroomansland" to Montgomery co. line; but on being surveyed by Lewis Morris, jr., and Andrus Coeyman, it was found that the flats on Fox Creek and at the mouth of Cohles Kil were not included, and these lands were secured by the surveyors. In a short time Morris and Coeyman joined interest with the five proprietors, and the company became known as the "Seven Partners." Final snits for partition and settlement were adjusted in 1819, '25, '26, '28, and '29.

⁷ After this time a large number of settlers took leases of the proprietors, thus abandoning their claims to the lands.

⁸ Among those who removed to the Mohawk was Elias Garlock, the first and long the only magistrate in Schoharie.

nently located upon his patent in 1727. The German and Dutch races long remained distinct. The Dutch were generally wealthier than the more hardy and laborious Germans, and preferred to contract marriages with those of their own class in the older Dutch settlements. They often kept slaves, while the Germans seldom had further assistance than such as their own households, of both sexes, might afford. The Germans, by intermarriage, became a "family of cousins;" and they were united by many ties of common interest. Industry and frugality gradually brought them to a level, and long acquaintance has almost entirely obliterated these hereditary distinctions of society. Upon the approach of the Revolution, a part of the people espoused the cause of the British; but the majority were ardent patriots. In many cases members of the same family were engaged on opposite sides, and the struggle assumed all the horrors of a civil war, aggravated by Indian barbarities. A Council of Safety was organized in 1774, of which Johannes Ball was chairman. During the war several conflicts took place within the limits of the co., and the people were continually exposed to the attacks of small scalping parties of the Indians.¹

At the close of the war a large number of families removed to Canada, and their property was confiscated.² Several Tories and Indians who had been active during the war returned at its close and were waylaid and shot. Others, warned by these examples, fled the country.³ Since that period little of especial interest has occurred in the history of the co. In 1845 and '46, in common with the surrounding regions, this co. partook largely in the anti-rent excitement,—though no actual violence took place within its limits.⁴ Within the last ten years, a mania for building large seminaries, far beyond the wants of the people, has spread through the co. The speculation has proved a ruinous one, and the entire amount of capital invested in the enterprises has been sunk.⁵

Three weekly newspapers are now published in the co.⁶

- ¹ The principal events of the Revolution in Schoharie co. were as follows:—
- 1774. Council of Safety formed.
 - 1776. Col. James Huston enlisted Tories at Loonenbergh.
 - 1777. Schoharie militia called into service under Captain Hager. Col. Huston and 20 others were arrested, and Huston was hung.
 - " Aug. 10.—Engagement between an American force under Col. John Harper and the Tories under Capt. McDonald at Brakabeen. The Tories were defeated and fled. Capt. Geo. Mann, one of their number, remained secreted in the vicinity until the succeeding spring, when he delivered himself up to the authorities. He never afterward joined the enemy, and his property was not confiscated.
 - " In the autumn of this year the middle fort was built, and the upper and lower forts were begun. The lower fort is the old stone church, lately changed to an arsenal.
 - 1778, May 8.—Battle of Cobles Kill, in which Captain Patrick and 22 men were killed.
 - " July.—Lieut. Col. Wm. Butler, with 3 companies of Morgan's Riflemen, was stationed at Schoharie. Several Tories recruiting for the British were shot.
 - 1779, Aug.—Col. Butler joined Sullivan's expedition against the Western Indians.
 - 1780, Aug. 9.—A party of 73 Indians and 3 Tories made an attack upon the settlement at Vroomansland, killed 5, and took 30 prisoners.
 - " Oct. 16.—Sir John Johnson, with 500 troops and a large body of Tories and Indians, invaded the Schoharie settlements from the S. The upper fort was garrisoned by 100 men, under Capt. Jacob Hager and Joseph Harper; the middle fort by 350 men, under Maj. Woolsey; and the lower fort by 150 men, under Maj. Becker. The middle fort was attacked, and the commander, Major Woolsey, being an arrant coward, wished to surrender it; but a soldier, named Murphy, fired upon the flag which was sent with a summons to surrender; and, after an ineffectual attack, Sir John abandoned the attempt. The dwellings, barns, stacks, and all the property of the inhabitants were destroyed, though but few persons lost their lives.
 - 1781. Early in the year blockhouses were built at "Kneiskerns Dorf," "Hartmans Dorf," and Cobleskill.
 - 1781, July 9.—An engagement took place in Sharon, 2 mi. E. of the springs, between a party of Tories and Indians under Doxtader, and an American force under Col. Willett, in which the former were defeated, with a loss of 40 killed.

- 1781, July.—Several persons at Middleburgh were surprised and taken prisoners while harvesting. One escaped, and the others were carried prisoners to Canada.
 - " Oct.—Three men at Christian Mynder's house, in Sharon, were taken prisoners by a small party of Indians, and carried to Canada.
 - " Oct. 24.—A party of 60 or 70 Indians, under Brant, entered Vroomansland and commenced their work of plunder. Isaac Vrooman was murdered. A party of Americans, under Capt. Hager, rallied to their assistance, and the Indians retreated. A sharp skirmish took place at Uteyantha Lake; but a part of the American force, under Capt. Hale fled at the commencement, and the remainder were obliged to retreat. Hale was arrested in his retreat by the threat of being shot; but the enemy had escaped.
 - 1782, July 26.—Several Tories and 22 Indians made an incursion into Foxes Creek Valley for the purpose of capturing Maj. Becker; but the Maj. and family defended the house with such vigor that the Indians retreated. Several persons were ordered by the Indians, and several of the latter were shot.
 - 1784, Dec. 16.—Many persons who had been taken to Canada were released on Lake Champlain, and returned to their homes.
- ² In Canada, opposite St. Lawrence co., are many families who claim relationship to inhabitants of this co. They were refugees to whom grants of land were made by the British Government.
- ³ Among these was one Beacraft, who boasted of his feats of villainy. Soon after his return he was surprised by about a dozen whigs, near Blenheim Bridge, led into a grove, stripped, bound, and punished with fifty lashes with hickory gads, the executioners at every twilling him for what particular offence they were applied. He was then unbound and allowed a very short time to disappear.
- ⁴ In this co. George Clark had then considerable tracts, leased for 3 lives at a rent of 6 pence sterling per acre. Scott's Patent of 56,000 acres was then chiefly owned by the heirs of John Livingston, and leased for 2 lives at a rent of $14 per 100 acres. The Blenheim Patent was also in part leased.
- ⁵ Of 9 academies built in this co., 3 have been burned, 3 are "to let," and 3 are still open.
- ⁶ The American Herald, the first paper published in the co., was commenced at Schoharie in June, 1809, by Derick Van Veghten. In 1812 its name was changed to The Schoharie Herald, and the paper was soon after discontinued.
- The True American* was commenced at Schoharie in Dec. 1809, by T. M. Tillman. It was discontinued in 1812 or 1813.
- The Schoharie Budget* was commenced in June, 1817, by Derick Van Veghten. In 1820 its name was changed to BLLENHEIM¹—was formed from Schoharie, March 17, 1797. Jefferson was taken off in 1803, and a part of Gilboa in 1848. It is an interior town, lying s. w. of the center of the co. Its surface is a hilly upland, broken by the deep ravines of the streams. Schoharie Creek flows n. through the e. part, receiving West Kil and several smaller streams from the w. A wide alluvial flat extends along its course. The streams generally are bordered by steep hills rising to a height of 300 to 500 ft. The soil is principally a clayey loam. Patchin Hollow,² (North Blenheim p. o.) upon Schoharie Creek, contains 2 churches, a tannery, and 44 houses. The first settlements were made by Dutch and Palatinates, before 1761; but the settlers were driven out during the Revolution. The present race of settlers came mostly from New England, soon after the close of the war. Rev. Stephen Fenn was the first preacher.³

BROOME⁴—was formed March 17, 1797, as "Bristol." Its name was changed April 6, 1808. A part of Conesville was taken off in 1836, a part of Gilboa in 1848, and parts of Middleburgh were annexed Feb. 9 and Oct. 5, 1849. It lies upon the e. border of the co., s. of the center. Its surface is a hilly upland, broken by the deep ravines of the streams. The highest summits are 350 to 500 ft. above the valleys. Catskill Creek takes its rise in the n. part, and several branches of Schoharie Creek drain the n. and w. portions.⁵ The soil is a gravelly and clayey loam. Livingstonville, (p. v.), in the e. part, s. of the center, contains 2 churches, a sawmill, gristmill, and sash factory. Pop. 150.⁶ Franklinton, (p. v.), in the n. part, contains a church and 100 inhabitants. Smithton is a hamlet, near the s. line. The first settlements were made before the Revolution.⁷ There are 6 churches in town.⁸

CARLISLE—was formed from Cobleskill and Sharon, March 31, 1807.⁹ It is the central town upon the n. border of the co. Its surface consists principally of an immense ridge lying between the valleys of the Mohawk and Cobles Kil, the summit of which is 800 to 1,000 ft. above the former stream.¹⁰ This ridge descends to the n. by a series of terraces formed by the different geological strata, and on the s. by gradual slopes following the general dip of the rocks. The streams are small brooks. The soil is principally a clay loam. Hops are extensively cultivated.

The Schoharie Republican. It soon after passed into the hands of Peter Keyser. Lemuel Cuthbert, A. A. Keyser, Wm. H. Underwood, Wm. H. Gallup, P. D. Lawyer, and ——— Rositer have since been interested in its publication. It is now published by J. B. Hall.

The Observer was commenced at Schoharie in Oct. 1818. In 1819 it passed into the hands of Solomon Baker, in 1820 to Baker & Fish, and in 1822 it was again in the hands of Mr. Baker, and was soon after discontinued.

The Evangelical Luminary was commenced at Schoharie Jan. 1, 1824, by Rev. Geo. A. Lintner and L. Cuthbert. It was continued about 1 year.

The Lutheran Magazine, mo., was commenced in Feb. 1827, by the Western Conference of Lutheran Ministers, L. Cuthbert, printer, and was published for some years.

The Schoharie Free Press was commenced June 9, 1830, by Duncan McDonald. In 1832 it was removed to Esperance and its name changed to

The Esperance Sentinel and Schoharie and Montgomery Reporter. It was discontinued in 1835 or '36.

The Gem was published a short time in 1837.

The Schoharie Patriot was commenced Feb. 13, 1838, by Peter Mix. It is now published by him and his son, S. H. Mix.

The Star was commenced in April, 1838, by S. H. Mix, then a schoolboy.

The Sun was commenced as an opposition paper in May, 1838, by D. L. Underwood, another lad of about the same age. These papers were about 3 by 4 inches. Early in 1839 they were enlarged. On the issue of No. 5 of the Sun it went down never to rise again; and the Star ceased to twinkle after the 12th number.

The Huge Paw, a campaign paper, was published from Aug. 12 1840, to Nov. 11 following, by Wm. H. Gallup.

The Helderbergh Advocate was commenced in 1841 by Wm. H. Gallup. Its name was changed in 1843 to

The Guardian of the Soil, and it was discontinued 1 year.

The American Christian was commenced at Leesville Jan. 7, 1841, by J. D. Lawyer. It was soon after discontinued.

The Schoharie County Sentinel was commenced at Cobleskill Jan. 22, 1852, by Hiram C. Pate. It was published a short time by Chas. Cleveland, and by Wadhams & Knistern, and was soon after purchased by J. B. Hall, who merged it with the Schoharie Republican.

The Charlotteville Journal was commenced at Charlotteville in 1854 by Furman & Brown. In 1855 John Brown became sole proprietor, and removed it to Cobleskill and changed the name to

The Cobleskill Journal. It has since been discontinued.

The Oasis, semi-mo., was commenced at Schoharie by the students of the academy in 1855. It was soon discontinued.

The Schoharie County Jeffersonian was commenced at Cobleskill in 1859 by Matthew Freeman, and is still published.

¹ Named from the Blenheim Patent, a portion of which lies in the n. part of this town.

² Hendrick Mattice, the pioneer, built a mill on West Kil, at Patchin Hollow. He became a loyalist and went to Canada. Henry Effner, Lambert Sternberg, Wm. Freeck, Isaac Smith, Banks Morehouse, George Martin, and Henry Hager were early settlers. Freegift Patchin settled in 1798, built the second mill, and gave name to the village. Gen. Patchin had been taken prisoner by the Indians, and suffered extremely at their hands. The first inn was kept by H. Koffer; the first store, by Tobias Cuyler, in 1803; and the first tannery was built in 1825, by Jones & Lathrop. Jacob Sutherland, afterward Judge of the U. S. Supreme Court, resided several years at North Blenheim.

³ There are 4 churches in town; 3 M. E., and Ref. Prot. D.

⁴ Named from John Broome, Lieut. Gov. of the State at the time of the formation of the town. Scott's Patent of 37,840 acres, granted Jan. 2, 1770, and a part of Isaac La Roy's Patent, are within the limits of this town.

⁹ This town embraces portions of New Dorlach, Becker, Livingston's, Van Rensselaer's, Machin's, and the Stone Heap Patents.

¹⁰ A conical elevation near the s. line, early known as O-waare-souera, is one of the highest points in the co., and may be seen from Hamilton co., 50 mi. n.

Several caves are found in the limestone regions in various parts of the town.¹ Argusville,² (p. v.) in the n. w. corner, upon the line of Sharon, contains 3 churches, a sawmill, gristmill, tannery, and 35 houses. Carlisle, (p. v.) upon the Western Turnpike, in the n. part, contains a church, boarding school,³ and foundery. Pop. 107. Grosvenors Corners, (p. o.), in the s. e. corner, contains a church and 10 houses. The first settlement was made in the s. w. part, about 1760.⁴ The first church was formed by Dr. Simon Hosack, of Johnstown, in 1803 or '04.⁵

COBLESKILL⁶—was formed from Schoharie, March 17, 1797. The line of Sharon was changed March 15, 1799. A part of Carlisle was taken off in 1807, a part of Summit in 1819, and Richmondville in 1845. It is an interior town, lying n. of the center of the co. Its surface is principally a hilly upland, broken by the deep valley of Cobles Kil, which extends e. and w. through the center. The highest points, on the n. and s. borders, are 600 to 900 ft. above the valley. The soil upon the hills is a sandy loam, and in the valley an alluvium. Cobleskill, (p. v.), in the w. part, contains 3 churches, a sawmill, gristmill, planing mill, and tannery. Pop. 364. Cobleskill Center (p. v.) contains a church, sawmill, and 20 dwellings. Lawyersville,⁷ (p. v.) in the n. w. corner, contains 3 churches, 2 sawmills, and 25 dwellings. East Cobleskill,⁸ (p. v.), in the s. e. corner, contains 2 churches and 21 dwellings. Barnerville, (p. v.) near the center, contains a church, gristmill, clothing works, and 16 dwellings. The first settlement was made about 1750.⁹ The first land grants were made about 1730. During the Revolution the people mostly espoused the cause of the colonists, and in consequence were subjected to constant incursions from the Indians. A regular engagement took place between a company of militia and a large Indian force under Brant, May 31, 1778. The Americans were defeated, and about one-half of their number were killed.¹⁰ Howe's Cave, near the e. line, is a place of considerable interest.¹¹ The census reports 7 churches in town.¹²

CONESVILLE¹³—was formed from Broome and Durham, (Greene co.,) March 3, 1836. It is the s. e. corner town of the co. Its surface is generally a hilly upland, mountainous along the e. border. The highest summits are 1,600 to 2,000 ft. above the valleys. Schoharie Creek forms a small portion of the w. boundary; and Manor Kil flows w. through near the center. Upon the latter stream, near its mouth, is a cascade of 60 ft. The valleys of these streams are bordered by high and often nearly precipitous hills. Strykersville, (West Conesville p. o.), upon Manor Kil near its mouth, contains a church, tannery, and 20 houses; and Stone Bridge, (Conesville p. o.), near the center, a church and 10 houses. Manorkill (p. o.) is a hamlet. The first settlement was made by Ury Richtmeyer, in 1764.¹⁴ There are 3 churches in town; 2 M. E. and Ref. Prot. D.

ESPERANCE¹⁵—was formed from Schoharie, April 4, 1846. A small portion was re-annexed to Schoharie in 1850. It is the e. town on the n. border of the co. Its surface consists of two ridges, extending e. and w. across the town, separated by the valley of Schoharie Creek. The

² Named from the Albany Argus, at the time the principal paper taken in town. Formerly known as "Mohick's Mills."

⁴ Andrew Loucks, Conradt Engle, Philip Hooker, and Peter Young were among the first that located in town. The late Judge Brown, author of a small local history, settled at an early period. John C. McNeill, Wm. Caldwell, John Sweetman, Aaron Howard, Tennis Van Camp, Mathias Cass, and Lodowyck Primer were also early settlers.

⁵ There are now 5 churches in town; Bap., Evan. Luth., Presb., Univ., and Union.

⁶ Named from — Cohel, who built a mill near Central Bridge at an early period. Cobles Kil was called by the Indians Ots-ga-ra-ges.

⁷ Named from Lawrence Lawyer, said to have been the first settler in town. ⁸ Locally known as "Punchkill."

ing in the flames. The delay occasioned by the resistance made at this house gave the remainder of the fugitives and the inhabitants time to escape. The whole number of Americans killed was 22; and it is supposed that the Indians lost about an equal number. Fort Du Bois, a strong blockhouse, stood in this town during the war.

¹¹ This cave was discovered in May, 1842, by Lester Howe, the owner. Its entrance is about 50 ft. above Cobles Kil. After passing several spacious rooms, one of which is named "The Chapel," the visitor comes to a crawling place 200 ft. long, beyond which is a limpid sheet of water 30 ft. long, 20 wide, and 10 deep. Beyond this the cavern extends a great distance, much of the way along a brook, and the total length of the passages measures several mi. Many highly interesting stalactical concretions—some of great size—have been found in this locality. It has been named the Otsgerage Cavern.

¹² 4 M. E., 2 Ref. Prot. D., and Evan. Luth.

¹⁴ Mr. R. was joint owner of several patents with John Dies and others; and the name is still common in town. During the Revolution the settlers fled for safety to the upper fort. Peter Richtmeyer was twice taken prisoner by the Indians under the tory Jones. After the war, Philip Krimple, Conrad Patrie, John Shew, Barent Stryker, Stephen Scovill, James Allerton, and Hubbard and Judah Luring, the last two from Conn., came into town. The first death was that of Ury Richtmeyer, Aug. 14, 1769. Thomas Genfield taught a school in 1794. Peter Richtmeyer kept the first inn, in 1784. Barent Stryker built the first mill, above the falls of Manor Kil.

highest parts are 600 to 800 ft. above the valley. The soil is principally a clayey loam. Esperance, (p. v.), upon the e. line, was incorp. April 21, 1832. It contains 2 churches, a paper mill, gristmill, sawmill, and foundery. Pop. 322. Sloansville,¹ (p. v.,) near the center, contains 2 churches, 3 sawmills, and 2 gristmills. Pop. 252. The first settlements were made by Palatinates, about 1711.² There are 4 churches in town; 2 Bap., Presb., and M. E.

FULTON³—was formed from Middleburgh, April 15, 1828. It is the central town in the co. Its surface is a hilly upland, broken by the ravines of the streams. Schoharie Creek⁴ flows n. through the e. part, receiving Panther Creek from the w. The highest summits are 1,000 ft. above the valleys. The hills next to the creek are conical and often precipitous; but farther w. they assume a rounded form and are bounded by more gradual slopes. The soil is a gravelly and clayey loam. Brakabeen,⁵ (p. v.,) upon Schoharie Creek, in the s. part, contains a church, gristmill, foundery, 2 sawmills, and 200 inhabitants. Fultonham, (p. v.,) near the e. line contains a church, gristmill, 2 sawmills, and 25 dwellings; and West Fulton (p. v.) a church, sawmill, gristmill, and 16 dwellings. Watsonville is a small village, in the e. part; and Petersburgh a hamlet, in the n. part. The first settlements were made by Dutch and Palatinates, about 1711. The upper fort of the Schoharie during the Revolution was situated upon the present site of Fultonham. The census reports 5 churches in town.⁶ Gov. Wm. C. Bouck was born in this town Jan. 7, 1786, and died here in April, 1859.

GILBOA—was formed from Blenheim and Broome, March 16, 1848. It is the central town upon the s. border of the co. Its surface is a mountainous upland, broken by deep ravines. 'Schoharie Creek' flows n. through the center, receiving Platter Kil from the e. and Mine Kil from the w. The streams are bordered by steep hillsides rising to a height of 2,000 to 3,000 ft. above tide. The soil is a gravelly and clayey loam. Gilboa, (p. v.,) upon Schoharie Creek, contains 2 churches, a private seminary, cotton factory,⁸ gristmill, tannery, and 566 inhabitants. South Gilboa, (p. v.,) in the w. part, contains a church and 20 dwellings. West Gilboa, (p. o.,) in the n. w. part, is a hamlet. Mackies Corners, (Broome Center p. o.,) in the e. part, contains a church and 15 dwellings. Mine Kil Falls is a p. o. Settlement was commenced in 1764, by Matthew and Jacob Dise.⁹ The first preacher was Rev. Joel Peebles, settled in 1808.¹⁰

JEFFERSON—was formed from Blenheim, Feb. 12, 1803. A part of Summit was taken off in 1819. It is on the s. line of the co., near the s. w. corner. Its surface is a hilly upland, the principal summits being about 1,000 ft. above the valleys and 2,000 ft. above tide. Mine Hill, in the extreme s. part, is estimated to be 3,200 ft. above tide. A high ridge extending n. e. and s. w. through near the center forms the watershed between Delaware and Mohawk Rivers. Utsyantha Lake is a small sheet of water on the s. line.¹¹ The soil is a gravelly and clayey loam. Jefferson, (p. v.,) near the center, contains 2 churches and 25 houses. Morseville, in the ¹ Named from John R. Sloan, an early settler. Many years since, near this place, by the side of a path leading to Fort Hunter, was a stone heap thrown up by the Indians, who, from a superstition among them, never failed to add a stone to the pile whenever they passed it. The Rev. Gideon Hawley, who passed it in 1753, relates (1 Mass. Coll. IV) that this heap had been accumulating for ages, and that his native guide could give no other reason for the observance than that his father practiced it and enjoined it upon him. He did not like to talk about it; and the missionary believed that the custom was a religious offering to the unknown God. Others state that a tradition fixes this as the spot where a murder was committed. The heap gave name to the "Stone Heap Patent," granted to John Bower and others Sept. 15, 1770. The heap was 4 rods long, 1 or 2 wide, and 10 to 15 ft. high, and consisted of small, flat stones. The covetous owner many years since built the material into a stone wall; and no trace of this curious monument of Indian superstition now remains. Similar stone heaps have been noticed in other sections of the State. The path that led by this pile was that taken by Sir John Johnson and his army from Schoharie to the Mohawk in Oct. 1780.—Sims's Schoharie, p. 632.

13, 1770; Hendrick Hager's, 900 acres, Dec. 1, 1768; part of John Butler's, of 100 acres, and of Isaac Levy's tract of 4,333 acres, surveyed in July, 1770. Vrooman's Land Indian deeds are still extant, one of which is dated Aug. 22, 1711. Among the early settlers were Peter, son of Adam Vrooman, the patentee; Cornelius and Bartholomew Vrooman, Nicholas Feeck, Adam Browne, Teunis Vrooman, Michael Brown, — Kriesler, Frere Becker, and Stephen Young, on the w.; and William Bonck, the patentee, with his sons Johannes F., Christian, and William, Nicholas York, and Henry Hager, on the e.

⁴ This stream is called by the Indians Ken-ha-na-ga-ra. Upon its course, in a ravine 200 feet deep worn in the Hamilton shales, is a fine cascade, known as "Bonck's Falls."

⁵ A German name for the rushes which grew upon the banks of the creek at this place.

⁶ 3 Union, Evan. Luth., and Ref. Prot. D.

⁷ A fall in the creek at the village was called by the Indians De-was-go.

⁸ The Gilboa Cotton Mills Co. has a capital of $50,000, and runs 100 looms.

¹⁰ The census reports 8 churches; 4 Bap., 2 M. E., Ref. Prot. D., and Christian.

N. part, is a p. o. The first settlements were made, in different parts of the town, in 1794.¹ The first preacher was Rev. Stephen Fenn.²

MIDDLEBURGH—was formed from Schoharie, March 17, 1797, as "Middletown." Its name was changed in 1801. A part was re-annexed to Schoharie March 26, 1798. Fulton was taken off in 1828, and parts were annexed to Broome in 1849. It is the central town upon the e. border of the co. Its surface is a hilly upland, divided into two ridges by the valley of Schoharie Creek, which extends n. and s. through the town. The highest summits are 600 to 800 ft. above the valley.³ Schoharie Creek receives Little Schoharie Creek from the e. and Line Kil from the w. The hills bordering upon the streams are usually steep and in many places precipitous. The soil is a clayey loam upon the hills, and a sandy loam in the valleys. Hops and broomcorn are extensively cultivated. Middleburgh, (p. v.), upon Schoharie Creek, contains 4 churches, a private seminary, 2 steam paper mills, a steam gristmill, a foundry, and 110 dwellings. Hunters Land, (p. v.), near the s. e. corner, contains 2 churches, a sawmill, gristmill, foundry, and 101 inhabitants. Mill Valley, on the line of Fulton, contains 2 large tanneries, a gristmill, and 25 dwellings. The first settlements were made by Palatinates, in 1711.⁴ The middle fort of Schoharie stood a little below the present site of Middleburgh Village during the Revolution. The census reports 5 churches in town.⁵

RICHMONDVILLE—was formed from Cobleskill, April 11, 1845. It lies upon the w. border of the co., a little s. of the center. The surface is a hilly upland, separated into two distinct parts by the valley of Cobles Kil, which extends e. and w. through the center. The highest summits are 500 to 700 ft. above the valley. The soil is generally a clayey loam. Hops are extensively cultivated. Richmondville,⁶ (p. v.) near the center, contains 3 churches, a foundry, sawmill, gristmill, and 370 inhabitants. Warnerville,⁷ (p. v.) upon Cobles Kil, at the mouth of West Kil, contains 2 churches, a boarding seminary,⁸ 2 tanneries, and 44 dwellings. West Richmondville is a p. o. The first settlement was made before the Revolution, by George Warner and his sons Nicholas, George, and Daniel, from Schoharie.⁹ The census reports 5 churches in town.¹⁰

SCHOHARIE—was formed as a district March 24, 1772, and as a town March 7, 1788. Sharon, Cobleskill, Middleburgh, and Blenheim were taken off in 1797, and Esperance and Wright in 1846. A part of Middleburgh was re-annexed in 1798, and a part of Esperance in 1850. It lies in the n. e. part of the co., its n. e. corner bordering on Schenectady co. Its surface is a hilly upland, broken by the deep valleys of the streams. The declivities of the hills are generally gradual slopes, and their summits are 400 to 500 ft. above the valleys.¹¹ Schoharie Creek flows n. through near the center, receiving Foxes Creek from the e. and Cobles Kil from the w. In the limestone region in this town are numerous caverns.¹² The soil upon the hills is a clayey loam, and in the valleys a gravelly loam and alluvium. Hops and broom corn are largely cultivated. Schoharie, (p. v.), the county seat, is situated upon Schoharie Creek, s. of the center of the town. Besides the co. buildings, it contains 3 churches, the Schoharie Academy, 2 newspaper offices, an arsenal, and a bank. Pop. 806. Central Bridge, (p. v.), at the mouth of Cobles Kil, contains a church, sawmill, gristmill, machine shop, and 12 dwellings. Barton Hill is a p. o., near the n. e. corner. The first settlement was made in 1711, by a colony of German Palati-

¹ Amos and Caleb Northrop settled in the e. part; Samuel and Noah Judson, near Utsyantha Lake; Henry Shelmerdine and James McKeazie, on West Kil; Stephen Marvin, Erastus Judd, and Aaron Jones, near the village. These were mostly from New England. The first marriage was that of Marvix Judd and Lois Gibbs, Aug. 1800; and the first death, that of Elsie Judd, in June, 1799. Heman Hickok taught the first school, in 1799. Canfield Coe kept the first inn, in 1794; and Rodman Lewis the first store, in 1800. Stephen Judd built the first sawmill, in 1796; and Heman Hickok the first gristmill, to 1799. Eli Jones built the first tannery, in 1810.

² The census reports 6 churches; 4 M. E. and 2 Bap.

⁶ Richmondville Union Seminary and Female College Institute was built by a joint stock company in 1852, at a cost of $24,000, including grounds, buildings, and furniture. It was burned Dec. 13, 1853, and was immediately rebuilt at a cost of $34,000, but was again burned June 30, 1854.

⁷ Named from Capt. Geo. Warner, the first settler.

⁸ Warnerville Seminary was built in 1851, at a cost of about $25,000, grounds and furniture being $3,000 additional. It has accommodations for 200 boarding students. A school was in operation about 3 years, when it was closed and has not since been opened.

⁹ Geo. Maon, John and Henry Shafer, Andrew Michael, Elijah Hadsell, John Lick, and John Dingman settled soon after the Revolution. The first school (German) was taught by — Skinsky. The first inn was kept by — Bohall; the first store by Geo. Skillmans; the first sawmill was built by a company of settlers; and the first gristmill by David Lawyer, on Cobles Kil. The town is comprised in the Skinner and portions of the Franklin, John F. Bonck, and B. Glazier Patents. Bonck's Patent, of 63,600 acres, was granted March 19, 1754, and Glazier's, of 3,000 acres, July 28, 1772.

¹¹ The grade of the Albany & Susquehanna R. R., upon the n. line of this town, is 550 ft. above tide.

¹² Ball's Cave, otherwise called Gebhard's Cave, 4 mi. e. of the courthouse, was first explored in Sept. 1831. It descends about 100 ft. below the surface. A stream of water, with small cascades, flows through it, and a boat is kept for the use of visitors. About 1853, it was purchased by W. H. Knoepfel, of N. Y., with the design of making it a popular place of resort. When first explored, it abounded in magnificent stalactites, of the purest white, translucent and fibrous. Nehtaway's Cave, 2 mi. s. e. of the courthouse, was explored in 1836, by John Gehlard, jr., and John Bonny. A few fine specimens of colored rhombohedral spar were found in it.

nates, who had previously located upon the Hudson.¹ The first church (German) was established soon after the first settlement;² Rev. Peter Nicholas Sommer was the first clergyman.

SEWARD³—was formed from Sharon, Feb. 11, 1840. It lies on the w. border of the co., n. of the center. Its surface is a hilly and broken upland, the highest summits being 300 to 500 ft. above the valleys.⁴ West Kil, the principal stream, flows s. e. through the center. The soil is a clayey loam. Hops are largely cultivated. Hyndsville, (p. v.) upon West Kil, in the s. part, contains a sawmill, gristmill, tannery, and 143 inhabitants. Seward Valley,⁵ (Seward p. o.) in the n. w. part, contains a gristmill, sawmill, and 16 houses. Gardnerville (p. v.) contains a church and 84 inhabitants. Clove is a hamlet. The first settlements were made in the n. part of the town, by a colony of Germans, in 1754.⁶ Their settlement was known as "New Dorlach." The census reports 8 churches in town.⁷

SHARON⁸—was formed from Schoharie, March 17, 1797, as "Dorlach." Its name was changed March 17, 1797. Seward was taken off in 1840. It is the n. w. corner town of the co. Its surface is a rolling and hilly upland. The highest summits, in the s. w. corner, are about 500 ft. above the valleys. West Kil, flowing s. through the w. part, is the principal stream. The soil is a gravelly loam. In the underlying limestone are numerous caves. Hops are largely produced. Sharon Springs, (p. v.) a little n. w. of the center, is celebrated for its sulphur and chalybeate springs.⁹ It contains 5 large hotels for the accommodation of the visitors to the springs, and 2 churches. Pop. 230. Rockville, upon the turnpike, about a quarter of a mi. above the springs, contains 3 churches and 20 dwellings. Sharon Center (p. v.) contains 20 dwellings. Sharon Hill, (Sharon p. o.), in the s. e. part, contains a gristmill, sawmill, foundry, and 20 dwellings; Leesville, (p. v.), in the n. w. part, 2 churches and 20 dwellings. Engellville, (p. o.), near the w. line, and Beekmans Corners, near the s. line, are hamlets. Col. Calvin Pike, from New England, is said to have been the first settler.¹⁰ July 9, 1781, the tory Doxtader, with a party of 300 Indians, made a descent upon Currytown, Montgomery co.; and on his return, with his plunder and prisoners, he was overtaken by an American force, under Col. Willett. An engagement ensued, in which about 40 Indians were killed, and the remainder fled. The battle ground is about 2 mi. e. of Sharon Springs. The census reports 5 churches in town.¹¹

SUMMIT—was formed from Jefferson and Cobleskill, April 13, 1819. It is the s. w. corner town of the co., lying principally on the w. border. Its surface is a broken and hilly upland. The central ridge forms a portion of the watershed between Susquehanna and Mohawk Rivers, the highest summits being 2,000 to 2,300 ft. above tide. Charlotte River, the principal stream, flows s. w. through the w. part. The soil is a gravelly and clayey loam. Summit, (p. v.) upon the s. w. near the center, contains 2 churches and 28 dwellings. It is 2,200 ft. above tide. Charlotteville, (p. v.) upon Charlotte River, in the s. w. part, contains a church, the N. Y. Conference Seminary and Collegiate Institute,¹² 2 sawmills, a gristmill and clothing works, and about 40

⁴ Upon the s. e. border of the town is a hill, called by the Indians Gogny-ta-nee; and n. of Seward Valley is another, called One-en-ta-dashe. ⁵ Locally known as "Neeleys Hollow."

⁶ The first settlers were Sebastian France, Michael Merckley, Henry Hynds, and Ernest Fretz. Among the other early settlers were Caleb Crosport, Wm. Ernest Spornhyer, and Conrad Brown, who located near the Luth. church; and Wm. Ripsomah, Henry France, Henry Hanes, Geronimus Chrysler, and John, Peter, and Martin, sons of Rev. Peter Nicholas Sommer, the first Schoharie pastor. The first German school was taught by — Phaughwer; the first inn was kept by Thos. Almy; the first store by Wm. E. Spornhyer. Wm. Hynds built the first sawmill, and Henry Hanes the first gristmill. The first birth was that of a son of — France. ⁷ 3 Evan. Luth., 3 M. E., Ref. Prot. D., and Bap.

⁸ Named from Sharon, Conn. ⁹ These springs have a high reputation for the cure of cutaneous disorders, and are a place of resort during the summer. As analyzed by Dr. Chilton, a pint of the water is found to contain—

Sulphate of magnesia.....	2.65 grains.
Sulphate of lime.....	6.98 "
Chloride of sodium.....	0.14 "
Chloride of magnesium.....	0.15 "
Hydrosulphuret of sodium	} " "
Hydrosulphuret of calcium
Extractive matter	10.06
Sulphuretted hydrogen gas,—1 cubic inch.

The waters flowing over vegetable substances incrust them with white and flocculent sulphur. The gas from the sulphur spring quickly tarnishes silver, even in the pocket. In the neighborhood is a chalybeate spring. The vicinity derives interest from caves containing stalactites and beautiful crystals of sulphate of lime. A quarter of a mile below the spring is a fine cascade. A copious spring of common water gushes from the rocks a short distance above, in volume sufficient to turn a mill.—Geol. Nat. Dist., p. 89; Beck's Mineralogy of N. Y., p. 143; Simms's Schoharie, p. 643.

¹⁰ Col. R. was afterward at Sackets Harbor as a Col. of drafted militia in Gen. Richard Dodge's brigade. Calvin Pike, William Vanderwerker, Conrad Fritche, Abraham and John Mereness, John Malick, and Peter Courtnet were early settlers, and were obliged to flee to Schoharie or Fort Hunter for safety during the war. Wm. Beekman kept the first store; John Hunt built the first sawmill, Omeo Lagrange the first gristmill, John Hunt the first clothing works, and Frederick & Crouck the first tannery. The town comprises a part of Frederick Young's Patent of 20,000 acres, granted Sept. 25, 1761; a tract granted to Bradt & Livingston, of 8,000 acres; a part of Johan D. Grose's Tract; a tract granted to Johannes Lawyer, jr., Jacob Boist, and others, of 7,000 acres, Aug. 14, 1761; and a small part of the New Dorlach Patent. The first owners of New Dorlach Patent were Michael, Johannes, Johannes Jost, and Jacob B. Boist, Johan Braun, Wm. Bauch, Michael Heltzinger, Henrik Haes, Johannes Shaffer, Johannes and Jacob Lawyer, Christian Zeb, Matthias Baumann, Lambert Sternberg, Baron Keyser, and Peter Nicholas Sommer. The patent provided that any differences that might arise were to be settled by arbitration.

dwellings. Lutheranville, (p. o.) in the n. w. part, contains a church and 10 dwellings; and Eminence, (p. v.) on the line of Blenheim, 2 churches and 15 dwellings. The first settlement was made in 1794, by Frederick Prosper, from Dutchess co.¹ Rev. M. Sherman was the first preacher. The census reports 7 churches in town.²

WRIGHT³—was formed from Schoharie, April 4, 1846. It is the n. town on the e. border of the co. Its surface is a hilly upland. The highest summits, along the s. line, are 600 to 800 ft. above the valleys. The principal stream is Foxes Creek, flowing n. w. through the center. The soil is a clay and gravelly loam. Gallupville, (p. v.) near the center, contains 3 churches, a sawmill, tannery, carding machine, and 40 houses. Shutters Corners, (p. o.) in the w. part, contains a sawmill, gristmill, and 10 houses. Waldenville is a p. o., near the e. line. The town comprises the whole of several patents and parts of several others, principally granted from 1760 to 1770. The first settlement was made by Jacob Zimmer, near Gallupville, several years prior to the Revolution.⁴ A stone house built by Johannes Becker, an early settler, was used as a fort during the war.⁵ There are 5 churches in town.⁶

WESTCHESTER COUNTY.

THIS county, constituting one of the original divisions of the State under the English rule, soon after the first conquest, was organized Nov. 1, 1683, with its present limits. It lies upon the e. bank of the Hudson, in the s. e. part of the State, and is bounded on the e. by Conn. and on the s. by Long Island Sound. It is centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains — sq. mi. The surface consists of several ridges of hills parallel to the river and separated by wide valleys. The hills are in two general ranges, the first extending along the river and the second along the Conn. line. They are subdivided into a great number of minor ridges and hills, all extending n. and s. The highest summits are 600 to 1,000 ft. above tide. The valleys, extending n. and s., are continuous, affording ample opportunity for the construction of roads and railroads; and they are generally bordered by gradually sloping hillsides.¹ In some localities the hills are abrupt and rocky. The principal streams are Peekskill Creek, Furnace Brook, Croton, Pocantico, and Neperhan Rivers, and Tibbetts Brook, tributaries of the Hudson; Bronx River, Westchester and Hutchinsons Creeks, Mamaroneck and Byram Rivers, flowing into Long Island Sound; Maharness and Stamford Mill Rivers, flowing e. into Conn.; and Muscotee Creek, Plum Brook, and Titicus, Cross, and Kisko Rivers, tributaries of the Croton. The lakes are small bodies of water scattered through the hilly portions. The s. e. portion of the co., along the Sound, is deeply indented with bays and estuaries, which in some places are bordered by extensive marshes. Most of the streams which flow into the Sound afford, by the reflux of the tide, an intermitting hydraulic power, which is employed in several places.

The rocks of the co. consist principally of granite and gneiss, of many dissimilar varieties, and of white crystalline limestone. These rocks crop out upon the declivities and summits of most of the hills, affording an abundance of the best kind of building stone. The marble quarries at Sing Sing and other places are extensively wrought, their products affording one of the most valuable exports of the co. Traces of various kinds of ore have been discovered; but all search for profitable metallic veins has proved unsuccessful. Several mineral springs are found in different sections, the principal of which is the Chappesqua Spring, 3 mi. e. of Sing Sing. It emits sulphuretted hydrogen and is said to possess useful medicinal properties. The soil, derived principally from the disintegration of the primitive rocks, is light, sandy, and, naturally, only moderately productive; but, by a continued process of scientific culture, it has been rendered very fertile. Upon the Hudson and the Sound and in various other localities are drift deposits and alluvium, furnishing a much more productive soil. The people are principally engaged in gardening and fruit raising, fattening cattle, and supplying milk for the New York market. Bricks in immense quantities are manufactured along the Hudson for exportation. Other manufactures are largely carried on in the villages adjacent to New York.

This co. is distinguished for beautiful and picturesque scenery, noticeable in nearly every part. The highlands that border upon the Hudson afford an extended view of that river, the Palisades, and of the hilly country of Rockland and Orange. Along the s. e. border fine views are obtained of the Sound, the numerous green islands along the coast, and the adjacent shores of Long-Island. In the interior the landscape is agreeably diversified by hills, dales, and clear, running streams. Many wealthy inhabitants of New York have erected beautiful villas and country residences upon the finest sites; and the hills of the co. are now studded with these splendid specimens of architectural art.

In the vicinity of New York are numerous small villages inhabited by mechanics and working men doing business in the city. These people go back and forth daily on the lines of railroad, or by steamboat, living in the country for the sake of economy. A considerable amount of manufactures is carried on at these suburban villages. A large transient population, mostly from New York, make this co. their residence during the summer months.

¹ The roads that cross the co. e. and w. are a constant succession of ascents and descents, while those extending n. and s. through the valleys are nearly level.

The co. is a half-shire, the co. buildings being located respectively at Bedford and White Plains. The courthouse at Bedford is a wooden structure; and attached to it is a jail for the temporary confinement of prisoners. The co. buildings at White Plains are of granite, and are the most commodious and costly buildings of the kind in the State.²

The poorhouse is located upon a farm of 173 acres in Mount Pleasant, 5 mi. n. of White Plains. The average number of inmates is 225, supported at a weekly cost of 68½ cts. each. The farm yields a revenue of $2,500. A school is kept throughout the year. The buildings are of stone; and the whole establishment seems to be well arranged.

The Hudson River R. R. extends along the river banks through Yonkers, Greenburgh, Mount Pleasant, Ossining, and Cortlandt. The Harlem R. R. extends n. through the central part of the co., extending through Morrisania, West Farms, Yonkers, East Chester, Scarsdale, Greenburgh, White Plains, Mount Pleasant, New Castle, Bedford, Lewisboro, and North Salem. The New York & New Haven R. R. extends from the Harlem R. R. at East Chester e. through Pelham, New Rochelle, Mamaroneck, Harrison, and Rye. A branch road extends from the Harlem R. R. at Morrisania s. e. about 2 mi. to Port Morris. The other principal public work in the co. is the Croton dam and the great aqueduct which supplies the city of New York with water. Lines of steamers ply between New York and the various ports along the Hudson and East Rivers, affording cheap and easy means of communication with the great city.

Five newspapers are now published in the co.³

When first known to the whites, this co. was occupied by the Mohegans, who were divided into several bands or clans with distinctive names.⁴ They paid tribute to the Five Nations, and were known in early documents as "River Indians."

¹ At the organization of the co. in 1683, the courts were established at Westchester, and were continued there until 1759. A court of sessions was held at East Chester for some time. By act of Dec. 16, 1758, the justices and supervisors were directed to select a new site for a courthouse, which was located at White Plains; and in that year, 1760, and 1762, £2,000 were voted to erect and finish it. It was used until 1776, when it was burned. By an act of May 1, 1786, £1,900 were appropriated for the erection of a courthouse at White Plains and another at Bedford, under the superintendence of Stephen Ward, Ebenezer Lockwood, Jonathan G. Tompkins, Ebenezer Purdy, Thos. Thomas, Richard Hatfield, and Richard Sacket, jr. Prisoners had previously been confined in the New York jail; and courts had for a time been held in the Presbyterian church of Bedford. Both buildings thus erected are still standing, and owned by the co. A clerk's office was built at White Plains, in 1830, adjacent to the courthouse; in the old part of the village. The Provincial Convention held its sessions a few days in July, 1776, at the courthouse in White Plains; and in front of it the Declaration of Independence was publicly read upon its receipt by that body. The building, and what remained of the village, were wantonly burned by a New England major on the night of Nov. 5, 1776.

² An act passed March 30, 1855, authorized the county treasurer to loan $35,000 for the erection of a new courthouse, jail, clerk's office, and surrogate's office, upon a site in White Plains, to be selected by the supervisors, and under a committee to be appointed by them. The present buildings were erected in 1856-57, under the superintendence of Abraham Hatfield, States Barton, Wm. Marshall, jr., David Hunt, and Geo. C. Finch, at a cost of $120,000. They are built of granite quarried near the village, and form 3 buildings connected by corridors. The front part is devoted to the records of the clerk and surrogate, is fire-proof throughout, and its spacious rooms are furnished with iron cases for books and papers. The records have been recently bound, and put in complete order for preservation. The middle portion is devoted to court and jury rooms, sheriff's office and residence; and the rear building is the jail, connected with the court room only by a verandah. Prisoners may be brought into court without liability to rescue by a crowd. The cells, 36 in number, are built in 2 tiers in a central block.

By an act of April 16, 1858, the office of Register of Deeds was created, to be filled by election triennially. The act took effect Jan. 1, 1859.

³ The Somers Museum was published by Milton F. Cushing in 1810.

The Westchester Gazette was published at Peekskill by Robert Crombie about 1810. It was afterward changed to

The Westchester and Putnam Gazette. Several changes of proprietors and perhaps of name, occurred when in 1832 it became

The Westchester and Putnam Sentinel, and was published a short time by Dr. Brewer. It was afterward published about 2 years by Samuel Heustis, as

The Sentinel. It then passed into the hands of Samuel Marks, who continued it as

The Westchester and Putnam Republican. In 1844 it was sold to Wm. Richards, who changed its name to

The Peekskill Republican. In 1852 Joseph J. Chambers became proprietor, and in 1857 the paper was removed to Sing Sing, where it is now published as

The Republican, by J. H. Platt; J. J. Chambers, editor. The Westchester Patriot was published at West Farms a short time in 1812 by — Lopez.

The Westchester Herald and Putnam Gazette was published at Sing Sing in 1817. It was subsequently published as

The Westchester Herald, by Caleb Roscoe. The office was burned in 1856, and the publication has not been resumed.

The Westchester Spy was commenced at White Plains in 1832 by — Harpending. It was continued by William B. Lamphear; S. G. Arnold, John W. Bell, and others, until 1848, when it was discontinued.

The Hudson River Chronicle was commenced at Sing Sing in 1837 by Wm. C. Howe, its present publisher.

The Protector, a campaign paper, was published in 1844.

The Port Chester Banner was published by Wm. A. McMillan in 1845.

The Eastern State Journal was commenced at White Plains in 1845 by Edmund G. Southerland, its present publisher.

The Westchester and Putnam Democrat was commenced at Peekskill in 18— by Bailey & Marks. It was continued by Samuel Marks, and was for a time discontinued. It was revived by G. K. Lyman; and soon after it passed into the hands of J. Arnold, who continued it a short time; when Ezra Hurton became proprietor, and changed its name to

The Hudson Eagle. In 1855, J. W. Spaight became the publisher, and in May of the same year the paper passed into the hands of Dr. Fenelon Hasbrouck, who changed its name to

The Highland Democrat, and still continues its publication.

The Westchester Gazette was commenced at Morrisania in 1840. Stephen Angell was for some time editor. It was discontinued about 1856.

The Westchester County Journal was published at Morrisania in 1856 by James Stillman.

The Plain Dealer was removed from Roslyn, and afterward to Glen Cove.

The Westchester Gazette was published at Mott Haven from 1850 to 1852 by John T. Cogswell.

The Yonkers Herald was published in 1852 by Thos. Smith.

The Westchester News was commenced at New Rochelle in 1853 by Thos. Towndrow. It was removed to Yonkers in 1854, and published until Jan. 1856, when it was purchased by M. E. Rowe; and in Feb. following a new paper was issued in its place, called

The Yonkers Examiner, which is still published by M. E. Rowe.

The Mount Vernon Gazette was commenced in 1854 by Egbert A. S. Manning. It was discontinued in 1857.

⁴ The Sivanoyis occupied the shores of the sound from Norwalk to near Hellgate; the Manhattans held the island of New York, and as far n. as opposite Tappan; the Wequaeschecks held the shore from the Sitk Sinok to the Armonck and its vicinity; the Kilchanunkes claimed the territory on the Croton, and n. to Anthony's Nose; and the Puchami and Wappingers the Highlands. The Tankekenes resided in the rear of Sing Sing.— Bolton's W. Chester, l. p. 10.

Settlement began under the Dutch authority, in the southern part, and before the Revolution nearly every part of the co. had been occupied. A large part was embraced by the Cortlandt, Philipsburgh, Pelham, Scarsdale, and Fordham Manors.¹ Of these the first sent a representative to the General Assembly, and the second was forfeited by the attainder of its proprietor in the Revolution. The borough of Westchester, including the present towns of Westchester, West Farms, and Morrisania, was also represented by a member, and had a mayor's court. This co. was the scene of many events of great importance in the Revolution, and, from its occupying the middle ground between the opposing armies, was alternately overrun and pillaged by the refugees of both.² The southern part was taxed £2,000, May 6, 1784, to repay Revolutionary expenses.

BEDFORD³—was first formed under Connecticut, in May, 1697. Its rights were confirmed by New York in April, 1704; and it was fully organized as a town March 7, 1788. It is an interior town, lying n. e. of the center of the co. Its surface is elevated and broken by small hills and valleys, and is almost entirely available for agricultural purposes. Croton River forms part of the n. boundary; Maharness River flows through a small portion of the s. part; and Cross River flows through the n. e. corner. Byram Lake lies on the s. border. The soil is generally a good quality of sandy and gravelly loam, but stony on the hills. Bedford, (p. v.,) s. e. of the center, is surrounded by hills, one of which on the n. retains its Indian name of "Aspetong." The village is a half-shire, and contains a courthouse,⁴ 2 churches, the Bedford Academy, a Female Institute, and 30 houses. Bedford Station, (p. o.,) on the Harlem R. R., contains 10 houses. Katonah, (p. v.,) on Cross River, near its junction with the Croton, contains 30 houses. Mount Kiska, (p. v.,) a station on the Harlem R. R., on the w. border of the town, contains 200 inhabitants. Whitlockville is a station on the Harlem R. R. near the n. border. The town was mostly included in a purchase made July 1, 1640, by Nathan Turner, for New Haven, and sold the same year by the latter to Andrew Ward, Robert Coe, and 20 others, for £33. Other Indian purchases were made, the last of which was July 24, 1703.⁵ There are 8 churches in town.⁶

CORTLANDT⁷—was formed March 7, 1788. It lies upon the Hudson, in the n. w. corner of the co. Its surface is broken and hilly. The ranges of hills generally extend n. and s. and are separated by narrow valleys. The declivities are often steep and nearly precipitous. Anthony's Nose,⁸ on the n. line, 1,228 ft. above the river, is the highest land in the co. Although very broken, the surface generally is susceptible of cultivation. The principal streams are Croton River, flowing across the s. part, Furnace Brook, Peekskill Hollow Creek, and Gregor's Brook. The soil is generally a sandy and gravelly loam, with a strip of clay along the river. Among the mountains are found a variety of interesting minerals.⁹ Brick is extensively manufactured.¹⁰

Cortlandt Patent was granted June 17, 1697, to Stephanus Van Cortlandt, with an annual quitrent of 40 shillings. It included the present towns of Cortlandt, Yorktown, Somers, and North Salem.

Philipsburgh Patent was granted June 12, 1703, to Frederick Phillips, at an annual quitrent of £4 12s. It included the present towns of Greenburgh, Mount Pleasant, and Ossining.

Pelham Patent was granted Oct. 25, 1687, to John Pell, and included the present town of Pelham and a part of New Rochelle.

Fordham Patent was granted in 1671 to John Archer, and included 1,253 acres in the present town of West Farms.

Scarsdale Patent was granted March 21, 1701, to Caleb Heathcote, subject to an annual quitrent of £5. It included the present towns of Scarsdale, New Castle, North Castle, and a part of White Plains.

² Two classes of brigands, equally destitute of principle, but professing attachment to opposite interests, infested the co., committing atrocious crimes without punishment, and often preying upon their nominal friends with as little mercy as upon their avowed enemies. Of these, the "Cowboys" professed Tory sentiments, while the "Skinners" were ostensibly attached to the American cause. The two parties often operated in concert, the Cowboys bringing contraband goods from New York to exchange for the property plundered by the Skinners; and, when a pretext was necessary, a skirmish would occur, and the goods from the enemy would be openly borne away, as if lawfully captured.—Bolton's Westchester, I, p. 211.

³ Named from Bedfordshire, England, whence many of the early settlers came. It formed part of the territory known as Rippowams. Privilege of plantation was granted under the present name by a court of election held at Hartford, Conn. May 11, 1682. In 1697 a patent was granted by Conn. to the town. In 1700 the royal approval was obtained to the survey of 1683 and '84, by which Bedford and Rye were included in New York; and in April, 1704, a patent with town privileges was granted by that colony. In 1690 there were 31 proprietors residing in town.

⁴ County courts are held alternately here and at White Plains. The village was burned in the Revolution by a party of British light horse, on their route to Fairfield, Conn. By an act passed April 11, 1785, courts were ordered to be held in the Presb. church until the courthouse should be rebuilt, or till the further order of the Legislature.

⁵ The title to 5,115 acres of land in this town became invested in Jacobus Van Cortlandt at an early period. This estate was divided in 1743, Frederick Van Cortlandt receiving 1,424, Abram De Peyster 1,110, John Chambers 1,282, and Peter Jay 1,299 acres. Gov. John Jay, a son of Peter Jay, became invested with a large portion of the last mentioned allotment. The estate is still owned by his descendants. On a tract known as "the Hop Grounds" are still living many families of the same name as the first purchasers. Among these are families named Green, Miller, Holme, Roberts, Auhler, Clark, Ayers, Westcott, Simpkin, Mead, Webb, Clason, and Higgins. Tradition locates in this town the scene of a bloody engagement fought in Feb. 1644, between the Dutch and Indians, in which 500 of the latter perished.

⁹ Among these minerals are epidote, sphe, and sulphate of barytes. In opening the a. n. tunnel through Anthony's Nose, beautiful flat hexagonal crystals of calcite were found.

¹⁰ There were in Aug. 1855, 34 establishments worked as separate yards, 11 of which used steam power and 9 made pressed brick. This business began here about 1812-15, and was most thriving from 1847 to 1854. Large quantities of these brick were used on the Croton Aqueduct. The business gives employ-

Peekskill,¹ (p. v.), upon Peekskill Bay, in the n. w. part of the town, was incorp. April 17, 1816. It is situated in an elevated valley surrounded by heights which afford extensive views of the river. It contains 10 churches, the Peekskill Academy, 3 boarding schools, a bank, newspaper office, and several manufactories.² It is connected by a steam ferry with Caldwell's Landing, and by a daily steamer and line of sloops with New York. It is a station upon the H. R. R. R. Pop. 3,538. Verplancks Point, (Verplanck p. o.), upon the Hudson, near the center of the w. border of the town, was laid out in 1836. It contains a church, steamboat landing, several important brick manufactories, and 1,456 inhabitants.³ Croton⁴ (Croton Landing p. o.) is a r. r. station, in the s. part of the town. It contains 4 churches, a rolling mill, wire mill, several brick-yards, and 400 inhabitants. Crugers⁵ (p. o.) is a landing and r. r. station, 4 mi. s. of Peekskill. Annsville, a small village on Peekskill Creek, contains a church and wire mill.⁶ Oregon, on the line of Putnam co., contains a rolling mill and a wire mill. Mount Airy, e. of Croton, is a hamlet. Croton Point⁷ is a peninsula in the s. part of the town, devoted chiefly to vine-yards. Montroses Point is a peninsula s. of Verplancks and separated from it by Meanagh Creek. The first settlement was made at Peekskill, in 1764, by Daniel Birdsall, Nathaniel Brown, Joseph Travis, and Capt. Isaac Conklin.⁸ There are 18 churches in town.⁹

EAST CHESTER¹⁰—was recognized as a town March 7, 1788. It is an interior town, lying in the s. part of the co. Its surface is broken by ridges extending n. and s. and separated by narrow valleys. Bronx River,¹¹ forming the n. boundary, and Hutchinsons or East Chester Creek,¹² forming a portion of the e. boundary, are the principal streams. The soil is a sandy and gravelly loam, with some alluvium along the river intervals. Marble is extensively quarried along the w. border.¹³ The Harlem R. R. extends along the valley of the Bronx, and the N. Y. & N. H. R. R. crosses the s. part of the town at nearly right angles to the hills, requiring heavy cuttings and embankments. A portion of the territory of the town is public land, under the management of 3 trustees. East Chester, (p. v.) at the head of sloop navigation on Hutchinson Creek, contains 2 churches and 551 inhabitants. Mount Vernon, (p. v.), a station at the junction of the Harlem and N. H. R. R.s, was incorp. Dec. 13, 1853. It contains 4 churches, several private schools, and 1,161 inhabitants. West Mount Vernon contains 630 inhabitants; East Mount Vernon 275 inhabitants; and Waverly and Washingtonville are suburban villages, inhabited principally by mechanics and men doing business in New York. Bronxville, (p. v.), on the line of Yonkers, is a r. r. station, and contains a manufactory of carriage axles. Tuckahoe (p. v.) is a r. r. station, near the marble quarries. Burpos Corners is a small settlement on the n. border. Fleetward and Jacksonville are places projected ment to 1,350 men, and turns out 80,000,000 to 90,000,000 of bricks annually. The pressed brick made here are known in market as "Croton fronts," and sell at from $8 to $9 per M. There is a small firebrick manufactory at Peekskill, using clay from N. J.

² Among the manufactories are 5 iron foundries, chiefly engaged in the manufacture of stoves and plows, and giving employment to 300 men; 2 machine shops, 2 tobacco factories, a pistol and gun factory, tannery, and gin distillery.

³ Named from the family of Verplancks, former owners. This point lies opposite Stony Point; and upon it Fort La Fayette was erected during the Revolution. King's Ferry, a part of an important military route, was between the two points. The fort was captured by the enemy, under Sir Henry Clinton in person, June 1, 1779, but was abandoned Oct. 21 of that year. Col. Livingston held command of this place in 1780, at the time of Arnold's treason; and the headquarters of Gen. Washington were located here for some time. This locality was called by the Indians "Meanagh," and was sold to Stephans Van Cortlandt in 1683, with the land e. called "Appamaghogh." A small creek n. was called "Tammoois." The purchase was confirmed by patent, with a quitrent of 2 bushels of wheat. About 1734 it was held by John Lent, at an annual rent of one pepper-corn.—Bolton's Hist., I, 94. The population mentioned in the text is much less in winter.

⁷ By the Indians called Senasqua Neck, and long known as "Tellers Point," from Wm. Teller and Sarah his wife, first owners. The ship Vulture anchored opposite this point Sept. 21, 1789, with André's mission.

⁸ The first store was built by Daniel Birdsall, in the vicinity of the Middle Dock. Capt. Swin is said to have sailed the first sloop from Pemart's Dock, in 1773.—Bolton's Westchester, I, 62. Many stirring events of the Revolution occurred in this vicinity, and the country suffered much from the enemy's incursions. In March, 1777, Col. Bird landed with 500 men, and the few Americans stationed there fired the storehouses and retired. In Sept. 1777, the whole village was sacked and burned. Edmund Palmer, a tory spy, was hanged on Gallow's Hill, 2 mi. n. of the village; and Daniel Strang, another spy from the enemy, was executed on a pear tree near the present academy. John Paulding, one of the captors of André, was a native of this village, and received from the State a farm in this town. His remains repose in the Episcopal graveyard, 2 mi. n. of the village, where a neat monument was erected, at the expense of the corporation of New York, in 1827; and the work was completed with imposing ceremonies Nov. 22 of that year. Gen. Pierre Van Cortlandt formerly resided 2 mi. n. of Peekskill; and at this place Gen. McDougal posted his advanced guard when the enemy took possession of Peekskill in March, 1777. East of the Van Cortlandt mansion stands St. Peter's Church, an old, dilapidated building, erected in 1737. The united parishes of St. Peter's and St. Philip's were endowed by Col. Beverly Robinson, and the title was confirmed Mar. 27, 1794. The property has been sold by order of the court of Chancery, and the avails equally divided between the two churches.

¹⁰ Anciently called "Hutchinsons," and afterward "The Ten Farms." Its present name was used as early as 1666.—Bolton's Westchester, I, 120.

¹¹ Named by the Indians "Aquehung."

¹² Named by the Indians "Aqueanouck."

¹³ The marble is of the variety called dolomite. The N. Y. Custom House and the City Hall at Brooklyn were built of this material. The Custom House at New Orleans is being constructed of stone from these quarries.

by building associations. This town appears to have been a favorite residence of the natives; and when first settled by the whites it contained traces of former occupation. The Indian title was acquired in 1654 and confirmed in 1654, 1666, and 1700. Thos. Pell, the purchaser, granted it to James Eustis and Philip Pinkney, of Fairfield, Conn., and their associates. In 1665, 26 persons signed a covenant for the security of their mutual rights.¹ The settlers were incorp. by patent, March 9, 1666,² and for many years were engaged in a controversy with Westchester concerning the bounds of their grant. A house was fortified in Oct. 1675, as a place of refuge from Indians. The first schoolhouse was agreed upon in 1683; and the site has ever since been occupied for this purpose. A townhouse was voted in 1685. East Chester was celebrated for the interest it took in behalf of Leisler.³ The Cong. church of this town was formed in 1665; and a place of worship was built about 1700.⁴ The town suffered greatly in the Revolution, from its being the middle ground between the opposing armies. A farm of 252½ acres was granted in this town to David Williams, one of the captors of André, June 16, 1783. He afterward removed to Schoharie co., where he died.

GREENBURGH⁵—was formed March 7, 1788. It lies on the w. border of the co., s. of the center. Its surface is much broken by hills parallel to the Hudson, and separated by narrow valleys, through which flow several streams, the principal of which is Neperhan or Sawmill Creek. Hudson River forms the w. boundary, and Bronx River the e. The soil is clay and sandy loam. Several marble quarries are worked near the Hudson. Hastings, (Hastings upon Hudson p. o.) near the s. w. corner, a station on the H. R. R. R. and a steamboat landing, contains 2 churches, steam marble works, limekilns, and a limited number of manufactories. Pop. 1,135. Dobbs Ferry,⁶ (p. v.) a station on the H. R. R. R. and a landing on the river, contains 3 churches and 1,040 inhabitants. Irvington,⁷ (p. v.) a station on the H. R. R. R. and a landing on the river, contains 2 churches and 599 inhabitants. Tarrytown,⁸ (p. v.) on the n. border, a steamboat landing and a station on the H. R. R. R., contains a church, the Irving Institute, the Tarrytown Institute, and about 500 inhabitants. Harts Corners, (Moringville p. o.) a station on the Harlem R. R., is a hamlet; Middletown is a settlement below Tarrytown; Halls Corners,⁹ a neighborhood in the n. part; Ashford, a settlement 3 mi. below; Abbotsville, a locality near Dobbs Ferry; and Greenville, a neighborhood in the s. part. The first Indian purchase was made in 1649. In 1662 Connecticut bought all the Indian lands w. to the North River, and in 1681–82–84 Frederick Philipse bought the lands now included in this and other towns which, by Patent of 1693, were formed into the Philipsburgh Manor. In 1779 they were forfeited by the attainder of Col. F. Philipse and sold for small sums to the former tenants,¹⁰ under a pre-emption clause in the general act of May 12, 1784, for the sale of confiscated estates. The census reports 6 churches in town.¹¹

HARRISON¹²—was formed March 7, 1788. It is an interior town, near the e. border, s. of the center of the co., its n. e. corner touching the line of Conn. Its surface is generally level. Blind

² Philip Pinkney, James Eustis, and Wm. Haiden were named in this patent; and these persons resigned their trust to the inhabitants soon after.

⁴ The census reports 8 churches in town; 3 M. E., 2 Ref. Prot. D., Bap., R. C., and Unit.

⁷ Named from Washington Irving, whose quaint Dutch homestead, "Sunny Side," is a short distance above. The village was formerly called "Dearmans," or "Dearmans Landing."

⁹ Near the Presb. church is the monument to Isaac Van Wart, one of the capturers of Major André,—erected by the citizens of the co., June, 1829.

¹⁰ Among these were families named Van Tassel, Van Wart, Odell, Lawrence, Post, Archer, Hart, Acker, Dyckman, and Requa.

Brook¹ forms a part of the e. boundary, and Mamaroneck Creek a part of the w. Rye Pond² lies on the n. border, and St. Mary's Pond on the w. The soil is a fertile, gravelly loam. Purchase, (Harrison p. o.,) in the n. part, is a hamlet, containing 2 Friends' meeting houses. The first settlement commenced at an early period. The census reports 2 Friends' meeting houses³ in town.

LEWISBORO⁴—was formed March 7, 1788, as "Salem." Its name was changed to "South Salem" April 6, 1806, and to its present name Feb. 13, 1840. A part of North Salem was annexed April 26, 1844. It lies on the e. border, near the n. e. corner, and forms the eastern angle of the co. Its surface is much broken and in places mountainous. Croton River forms its w. boundary. Cross River flows through a small portion of the central southern part. Waccaback Lake⁵ and North and South Ponds are in the n. part, and Cross Pond is on the line of Poundridge. The soil is a clayey and sandy loam. South Salem, (p. v.,) in the e. part, is a scattered village, containing a church and 15 houses. Cross River, (p. v.,) in the s. corner, contains 2 churches, several manufactories, and 20 houses. Goldens Bridge (p. o.) is a station on the Harlem R. R. Vista, (p. o.,) in the s. e. corner, is a small settlement. Lewisboro (p. o.) is in the s. part. Settlement was commenced under the authority of Connecticut, at an early period. This region was the scene of several Revolutionary incidents.⁶ There are 7 churches in town.⁷

MAMARONECK⁸—was recognized as a town March 7, 1788. It lies upon L. I. Sound, in the s. e. part of the co. Its surface is broken by low ridges of gneiss, generally extending n. and s. Mamaroneck Creek, forming the e. boundary, and its tributary, Sheldrake Creek, are the principal streams. The coast is deeply indented by several bays, which divide it into numerous peninsulas and headlands. Mamaroneck, (p. v.,) near the head of Mamaroneck Bay, is partly in Rye. It contains 2 churches, (Prot. E. and M. E.,) and several manufactories not at present in operation. Oriente,⁹ Washingtonville, Chatsworth,¹⁰ and Hickory Grove are village plats and prospective villages. Kelloggsville, on the line of New Rochelle, has an extensive tide mill. The Indian title was obtained in 1640 and in 1662. John Richbell received a ground brief from the Dutch, and letters patent from Gov. Lovelace, Oct. 16, 1668, to three necks of land, at a quitrent of 8 bushels of winter wheat. In 1700 Caleb Heathcote acquired title to most of the eastern neck, with other lands, which was confirmed March 21, 1701. A portion descended in marriage to James De Lancey, afterward Governor of the colony, and ancestor of the present Episcopal Bishop of the Diocese of Western New York. Settlement began about 1660; and the village of Mamaroneck is one of the most ancient in the co. The town records date back to 1697; they were suspended from April, 1776, to April, 1785. During this period numerous events of historical interest occurred in this town. The day before the battle of White Plains, Col. Smallwood surprised and cut off a large body of the enemy under Major Rogers, stationed upon Nelson Hill. Col. White, of the Continental army, was overtaken near this place by Lieut. Hickford, and some thirty stragglers, who had taken refuge upon the ice, were killed.

MORRISANIA¹¹—was formed from West Farms, Dec. 7, 1855. It is the s. w. corner town of the co., lying upon Harlem River, contiguous to New York. Its surface is broken by several low ridges which extend n. and s. Most of its surface is occupied by village plats laid out since the extension of railways, and is inhabited by persons doing business in New York. Morrisania, (p. v.,) a R. R. station, in the n. e. corner, contains the St. Joseph's Ursuline Convent, an academy and free school, and 2,587 inhabitants. Mott Haven, (p. v.,)¹² opposite Harlem, contains 2

² This pond covers 210 acres and abounds in pickerel. It discharges into Bronx River; and it was at one time proposed to take this water to supply New York City.

³ One of these was built before the Revolution, and was used by the Americans during the war as a hospital.

⁴ Named from John Lewis, a prominent citizen. Its northern part formed a portion of Cortlandt Manor; and on its division in 1734 the part in this town fell to the share of Stephen Van Cortlandt, Gertrude Boeckman, Margaret Boyd, and — Skinner. Its eastern part is included in the Oltong. See p. —.

⁵ This lake covers 212 acres, and with the adjacent ponds, is fed by springs and rivulets from Great Long Pond Mountain. Beavers inhabited its shores as late as 1837.

⁸ Pronounced both Mam-a-rō-neck and Mam-ā-rō-neck. The latter is more generally used, and is often contracted to "or-neck" or "Mar-neck," in common speech. It has been variously written Momoroack, Mamarinck, Merioack, and Momoronck. It has been by some supposed to signify "the place of rolling stones."—Bolton's Westchester, I, 282. There was an Indian chief of this name, who resided upon the Croton.

⁹ Formerly called "Mamaroneck Point," "Great Neck," and "De Lanceys Neck." The eastern part of this neck is called Seamaus Point, from Giles Seamaus, former owner. The natives called it Wammaiuck. The modern name "Edgewater" has been applied to this place. The western part is called "Long Beach Point."

¹⁰ Near this place is a rocking stone, estimated to weigh 150 tons, which may be moved by the hand.

¹² Named from Jordan L. Mott, principal founder of the works. Steel works have been erected near the rail road bridge. By act of March 31, 1790, Lewis Morris was allowed to build a toll bridge at this place across Harlem River. He assigned his right to John B. Coles, who was allowed, March 24, 1795, to build a dam in Harlem River, with locks, and liability for damages.

churches, an extensive iron foundery, and 843 inhabitants. Port Morris,¹ upon the Sound, has a harbor of 60 ft. depth; and it is proposed to land vessels here that draw too much water to enter New York Harbor. A branch of the Harlem R. R. 2½ mi. long connects this place with Melrose. Wilton, Old Morrisania, East Morrisania, West Morrisania, South Melrose, East Melrose, Eltona, Woodstock, Claremont, and High Bridgeville, are suburban village plats. A tract known as Broncks Land,² granted by Gov. Nicoll to Jonas Broncks, was sold to Richard Morris about 1670; and May 8, 1697, Lewis Morris obtained a patent for the township or Manor of Morrisania, with a quitrent of 6 shillings. Prior to the Revolution it formed one of the precincts of Westchester parish. Early in the war a division of the American army was stationed here; but after the disasters of Long Island it retired northward, and British troops were posted there, but not without annoyance from partisan corps. The dwellings at Morrisania were burned the same day as was the courthouse at White Plains.

MOUNT PLEASANT—was formed March 7, 1788. Ossining was taken off in 1845. It lies upon the Hudson, near the center of the w. border of the co. Its surface is broken by high ridges, the principal of which are Buttermilk and Chappaqua Hills. Bronx River forms the e. boundary; and Neperhan and Pocantico Rivers flow obliquely across the town. The soil is a clayey and sandy loam, well adapted to cultivation. There are several marble quarries in town. Pleasantville,³ (p. v.,) near the n. line, contains 2 churches and 358 inhabitants. Unionville, (Neperhan p. o.,) a station upon the Harlem R. R., contains 97 inhabitants. Tarrytown, (p. v.,) upon the Hudson, in the s. w. corner, is mostly in Greenburgh. Beekmantown, on Pocantico River, is a suburb of Tarrytown. Sleepy Hollow,⁴ Upper Cross Roads, and Lower Cross Roads are hamlets. This town was included in the Manor of Philipsburgh, granted to Frederick Philipse; and by his will, dated Dec. 9, 1702, he granted to his son Adolph the portion of the manor n. of Dobbs Ferry, including this town. The title descended to his son Frederick, and was forfeited by the attainder of a son of the latter of the same name in 1779. One of the principal grantees under the State was Gerard G. Beekman. Many Revolutionary associations are connected with this town; and several encounters took place within its limits. The census reports 6 churches in town.⁵

NEW CASTLE⁶—was formed from North Castle, March 18, 1791. A part of Somers was annexed May 12, 1846. It is an interior town, lying n. of the center of the co. Its surface is much broken by hills having a general course a little e. of n., the principal of which are Mount Prospect and the Chappaqua Hills, terminating in Mount Kisko. The Neperhan, Bronx, and Pocantico Rivers rise in this town. Upon the borders are Chappaqua, Wampas,⁷ and Kirby Ponds, and Croton Lake. Chappaqua Sulphur Springs, 4 mi. n. e. from Sing Sing, have acquired a local notoriety. The soil is a gravelly clay and sandy loam. Mount Kisko (p. o.) is a small village upon the n. r. station, on the line of Bedford. New Castle (p. o.) is a small scattered village, upon Kirby Pond, near the line of Bedford. Chappaqua⁸ (p. o.) is a r. r. station, near the s. line. Sariesville is a hamlet, near the center of the town; and here the town business is generally transacted. This town was included within Richbell's purchase of 1660, and, with other lands, was sold to Caleb Heathcote, and was patented to him and 10 associates⁹ Feb. 14, 1701. It was afterward known as the "West Patent of Northcastle," or simply "West Patent." Settlement began about 1720, or a little earlier. At the time of the Revolution it formed one of the precincts of Rye parish. It was greatly annoyed by sudden incursions of plundering parties; and St. George's church was for a long time occupied as a guardhouse and hospital by the Continental troops. The census reports 5 churches in town.¹⁰

NEW ROCHELLE—was recognized as a town March 7, 1788. It lies upon the Sound, in the s. part of the co., and extends northward in a long, narrow strip. The surface is moderately

The bridge at Harlem leading to Mott Haven is now free, the charter of its former owners having expired in 1858. The bridge formerly known as Macomb's Bridge is removed, and is about being rebuilt.

³ Formerly called "Clarke's Corners."

⁴ Sleepy Hollow is noted for being the scene of one of Irving's celebrated legends. The Dutch church at this place was formed in 1697, and the edifice erected in 1699. The communion table and service plate, originally given by the first lord of the manor, are still preserved.

⁶ Called by the Indians Shappaqua, said to signify "a vegetable root."—Bolton's Westchester, i, 361.

⁷ Named from the sachem, chief proprietor of these lands in 1696, whose residence is said to have been near.

⁸ Pronounced Sháp-pa-quau. It is sometimes written Chappaqua.

⁹ These patentees were Robt. Walters, Leigh Atwood, Cornelius Deyester, Caleb Heathcote, Matthew Clarkeon, John Caldwell, Richard Slater, Lancaster Simee, Robt. Lunting, and Barue Coeens. It was settled by families named Ward, Concklin, Hyatt, Underbill, Haight, Carpenter, Green, Kirby, Davenport, Van Tassel, Griffen, Tompkins, Kipp, Secor, Brady, Reynolds, Quinly, and Merritt.

uneven and in some parts stony. Davenports Neck,¹ a peninsula containing 200 acres, and several fine islands in the Sound, belong to this town.² Crystal Lake, e. of the village, is chiefly celebrated for its ice, large quantities of which are annually "harvested." The soil is fertile and peculiarly adapted to fruit raising.³ New Rochelle, (p. v.), upon an estuary from the Sound, in the e. part of the town, was incorp. Oct. 5, 1857. It contains 6 churches, several private schools, and about 2,000 inhabitants. A portion of the village and the lands surrounding it are occupied by elegant villas and country residences of persons doing business in New York. The steamboat landing is a half mile s. w. of the village, on a small island connected with the main land by a stone causeway. The village is a station on the N. Y. & N. H. R. R. Beechwood Cemetery, incorp. Jan. 30, 1854, lies a mile w. of the village. West New Rochelle, Petersville,⁴ and Upper New Rochelle are scattered villages, mostly inhabited by Germans. This town was embraced in the Manor of Pelham, and was sold by John Pell, Sept. 20, 1689, to Jacob Leisler, for the settlement of a company of French Huguenots. These people are said to have been brought over in one of the king's ships, and to have landed on the n. e. part of Davenports Neck, then called "Bauffets" or "Bounfoys Point."⁵ They mostly purchased under Leisler in 1690. There were 23 freeholders in town in 1708. The town records commence Nov. 1, 1699, and until 1735 were kept partly in French. They were suspended from April 2, 1776, to June 24, 1783. A French church was organized in 1689, and in 1709 most of the members conformed to the Episcopal faith; and this denomination are now owners of property given by Pell. The Presbyterians also claim succession from the first French church, a part of the members of which did not conform.⁶

NORTH CASTLE⁷—was formed March 7, 1788. New Castle was taken off in 1791. It occupies a long, narrow strip on the e. border of the co., adjoining Stamford and Greenwich, Conn. Its surface is much broken by hills,⁸ particularly in the w. part. It is drained by Maharness, Byram, and Bronx Rivers and their branches. Rye Pond lies on the s. border; Byram Pond on the line of Bedford; and Wampus Pond on the line of New Castle. Cobamong Pond, a mile e. of Byram Pond, has no inlet and is very deep. The soil is clay and sandy loam. North Castle (p. v.) contains a church and a few houses. Armonk,⁹ (p. v.) near the center, contains 3 churches, a woolen factory, and 20 houses. Kinsico,¹⁰ (p. v.) in the s. part, contains several manufactories and 103 inhabitants. Quarter Station is on the H. R. R., in the extreme s. part. The first settlements commenced at a very early period.¹¹ The census reports 7 churches in town.¹²

NORTH SALEM¹³—was formed March 7, 1788. A part was annexed to Lewisboro in 1844. It is the n. e. corner town of the co. Its surface is hilly, the summits rising 100 to 300 ft. above the valleys. Croton River forms the w. boundary. Titicus¹⁴ River, a principal branch of the Croton, flows w. from Conn. through near the center. The valley of this stream varies in width from $\frac{1}{2}$ mi. to $1\frac{1}{2}$ mi., and is bordered by steep hills. Peach Pond, on the n. border, covers 400 acres.

³ From 12 to 20 acres are devoted to raising blackberries, chiefly the variety known as the "New Rochelle or Lawton blackberry," originally a seedling from the fields, which has proved of much value. There are also extensive nurseries in town.

⁴ Formerly called "New Jerusalem."

⁶ There are now 8 churches in town; 3 M. E., Prot. E., Presb., Bap., Af. Meth., and R. C.

⁹ Formerly "Mill Square," and still often called by that name.

¹⁰ Formerly "Robbins Mills."

¹¹ The Indian title to this town was obtained by Caleb Heathcote and others between 1660 and 1705, and confirmed by several patents. Of these the "Middle Patent," embracing 1,500 acres, was granted Feb. 17, 1701-02, and the w. portion was confirmed to Anne Bridges and her associates Sept. 25, 1708. A partition of the Middle and West Patents took place June 23, 1766. The allotments were balloted for and sold to numerous persons, of whom many named Brundings, Griffin, Lockland, Sillick, Scofield, Clapp, and others are descendants.—Bolton's Westchester, I, p. 455.

Major André immediately after his arrest was sent to Col. Jameson, stationed in this town; and from here he was allowed, through the inadvertence of that officer, to notify Arnold of his arrest.

¹⁴ Otherwise called Mutigticosa. The name in the text perhaps has been changed from this, and is said to have been derived from an Indian chief.

Beaver Pond is a small sheet of water near the n. line. The soil is better adapted to grazing than to grain raising. Turkey Hill lies in the s. w. part. North Salem,¹ (p. v.) in the e. part, contains 2 churches, a paper mill, and 30 houses. Salem Center,² (p. o.), a hamlet, is the seat of the North Salem Academy.³ Purdys Station, (p. o.) on the Harlem R. R., on the w. border, contains 2 churches and a small woolen factory. Croton Falls, (p. o.) in the n. w. corner, is a station on the Harlem R. R. The first settlement commenced at a very early period, mostly by immigrants from Conn. The census reports 7 churches in town.⁴

OSSINING⁵—was formed from Mount Pleasant, May 2, 1845. It lies upon the Hudson, n. of the center of the co. Its surface is mostly a hilly upland, the ridges extending parallel to the river. Prospect Hill is a commanding eminence on the s. line of the town. Pocantico River forms its e. boundary. Marble is extensively quarried, and traces of several metals have been found.⁶ The soil is a productive, gravelly and clayey loam. Sing Sing, (p. v.) upon the Hudson, near the center of the w. border of the town, was incorp. April 2, 1813. It is beautifully situated upon ground gradually rising from the river to the height of 180 ft., and at most points affording fine views of Tappan Bay and the opposite shore of the Hudson. It contains 4 churches, the Mount Pleasant Academy, a female seminary, and several other popular female schools. Pop. 1,440. This village is chiefly noted for being the seat of one of the N. Y. State prisons. The prison was erected at this place in 1825, with a view of employing the convict labor upon the marble quarries. It receives convicts from certain southern and eastern counties, as specified by statute.⁷ Prospect Hill⁸ is a scattered settlement along the s. border. Spring Valley, e. of Sing Sing, and Sparta, s. of Sing Sing, are hamlets. This town was included in the Manor of Philipsburgh, and was settled by the Dutch previous to the commencement of the last century. The lands were forfeited by the attainder of Frederick Philipse during the Revolution.⁹ The first church was organized at a very early period, but the exact date is lost.¹⁰ The Dale Cemetery, containing 47 acres, $\frac{1}{2}$ mi. n. of Sing Sing, was incorp. Jan. 14, 1851.

PELHAM¹¹—was formed March 7, 1788. It lies on Long Island Sound, in the s. part of the co., on the e. border, and it embraces several islands in Long Island Sound.¹² Pelham Neck¹³ is a peninsula extending into the Sound; upon it are several elegant country seats. Its surface is undulating, the valleys ranging n. and s. Hutchinsons Creek¹⁴ forms the w. boundary. The soil is mostly of an excellent quality of sandy and gravelly loam. Pelhamville, near the n. angle

² About a half mile w. of the village is a natural bridge.

⁶ Small specimens of galena, with several ores of copper, have been obtained. Sulphuret of zinc and oxyd of manganese are occasionally found in the lime rock.

⁷ This prison was erected by the convicts themselves, 100 of whom were sent from Auburn Prison for that purpose under the charge of Capt. Elam Lynds, who had chiefly directed the building of the Auburn Prison. The novel spectacle was exhibited on the 14th of May, 1825, of the arrival of this band on the open ground which was to be the theater of operations, without a place to receive or even a wall to inclose them. * * * The first day sufficed to erect a temporary barrack for shelter at night; and ever after they continued in unopposing labor, watched by a small number of guards, but held under perpetual government of their accustomed discipline and submission to the power whose vigilant eye and unrelaxing hand they felt to be perpetually upon them and around them.—Introduction to Nat. Hist. N. Y., p. 186.

The Hudson River R. R. crosses the prison grounds under two broad arches with an intervening walled space. The male prison is 484 by 44 ft. and 5 stories high, and has 1,000 cells. The w. yard is inclosed by 2 buildings 40 ft. wide, 2 stories high, extending from the main prison to the river, and occupied by kitchens, hospital, chapel, and shops. The yard thus formed is 492 by 412 ft., and has a range of shops 40 ft. wide, parallel to the main prison. There are also workshops on the E. The female prison, upon the same premises, but under separate management, is built of rough marble taken from the State quarries. It stands on an elevated site, E. of the R. R., with a colonnade of the Ionic order across the end fronting the river. It was built in 1835-40, and receives female convicts sentenced to State prison from every co. in the State; it contains 80 cells. By an act of April 18, 1859, the Inspectors of State Prisons were directed to sell such of the premises at this place as are not required for prison purposes, at a price not less than $250 per acre, and to appropriate the moneys thus received to building and repairing such works at the prison as they may deem proper.

⁸ Formerly known as "Long Hill."

⁹ Families named Ward, Orser, Crank, Bazello, Acker, Purdy, Merritt, McCord, Bishop, Balyeas, Storm, Jones, Millet, and Ryder, purchased under the Commissioners of Forfeiture.

¹⁰ There are 6 churches in town; 3 Prot. E., Bap., M. E., and Presb.

Harts Island, or "Spectacle Island," has an area of 85 acres. Hunters Island, belonging to the estate of E. Desbrosses Hunter, has an area of 255 acres, and was formerly connected with the mainland by a stone causeway and bridge. High Island lies near the s. point of Pelham Neck.

of the town, is a newly surveyed village and station on the N. Y. & N. H. R. R. Pelham is a p. o. on the e. border. Prospect Hill is a locality near the center. Pelham Priory¹ is the seat of a young ladies' seminary, established by the late Rev. Robert Bolton and conducted by his daughters. A settlement was made in this town in 1642,² by Mrs. Anne Hutchinson, who was driven from Massachusetts on account of her religious belief. There is 1 church (Prot. E.) in town.

POUNDRIDGE³—was formed March 7, 1788. It lies in the e. part of the co., its s. line bordering on Stamford and New Canaan, Conn. Its surface is hilly and much broken. The Stony Hills occupy the n. part and extend 3 or 4 mi. in a n. e. direction, with steep, craggy sides and rocky summits. Cross River flows through the extreme n. corner, Stamford Mill River flows s. through the e. part, and Maharness River forms a part of the s. w. boundary. Cross Pond is on the e. line. The soil is a gravelly loam. Poundridge, (p. o.,) near the center, is a small settlement with 2 churches. Boretontown is a hamlet, in the n. corner. The first settlement commenced near the center of the town, in 1744, by Capt. Joseph Lockwood and associates, from Stamford, Conn. There are 3 churches in town; M. E., Prot. Meth., and Presb.

RYE⁴—was formed March 7, 1788. It lies on the e. border of the s. part of the co. It is a narrow, irregular strip, bordering on the Sound and Greenwich, Conn. Its surface is broken and rocky. Byram River⁵ forms a small part of the e. boundary, and Blind Brook a part of the w. The soil is chiefly clay. There are quarries of hard, blue granite in town. Along the coast are several small islands.⁶ The mirage is frequently seen upon the coast, bringing to view the shore of Long Island with great distinctness. Rye, (p. v.,) a station on the N. Y. & N. H. R. R., contains 3 churches, a private seminary, and 300 inhabitants. Milton, in the s. part, is a hamlet, with 1 church. Ryepoint is a steamboat landing, with a daily line in summer to New York. Ryebeach is a place of resort during the hot season. Port Chester, (p. v.,) a station on the N. Y. & N. H. R. R., contains 5 churches, several private seminaries, extensive manufactories,⁷ and 1,695 inhabitants. It is connected with the Conn. shore by a toll bridge. Kingstreet is a fine agricultural district, extending nearly 7 miles n. of Port Chester. Glenville is a hamlet, on Byram River. The first settlement was commenced on Manursing Island.⁸ The census reports 9 churches in town.⁹

SCARSDALE¹⁰—was formed March 7, 1788. It lies in the interior of the s. part of the co. Its surface is broken by ridges and hills. Bronx River forms the w. boundary, and the e. angle borders on the Mamaroneck. Hutchinson and Sheldrake Creeks rise in this town. The soil is a clayey and sandy loam. It has no villages, and is the least populous town in the co. Scarsdale, (p. o.,) in the w. part, contains a church and a few houses. Scarsdale Station, on the Harlem R. R., is on the w. border of the town. In the s. corner of the town is a Friends meeting house, on a site used for that purpose long before the Revolution. Gov. Tompkins was a native of this town; and Chief Justice Morris and Maj. Wm. Popham—for many years clerk of the Court of Exchequer—resided here. The census reports 2 churches in town; Prot. E. and Friends.

SOMERS¹¹—was formed March 7, 1788, as "Stephentown." Its name was changed April 6,

² This settlement was soon after broken up by the Indians, who killed 13 persons, including the founder.

³ Named from the ancient Indian pound, or deer trap, which formerly stood at the foot of a high ridge s. of the present village.—Bolton's Westchester, II, p. 1. This town was embraced in Turner's Purchase of 1640, and once formed part of Stamford, Conn. The Patent of Stamford, granted May 26, 1685, included a portion of this town. In the settlement of boundaries in 1731, four miles were taken from Conn. A grant was made March 2, 1701, to Robert Walters, John Cholwell, Leigh Atwood, Cornelius De Peyster, Richard Slater, Barne Cosens, Lancaster Symes, Matthew Clarkson, Robert Lutting, Peter Matthews, and Caleb Heathcote. This grant was subsequently known as the "East Patent." It was sold Aug. 7, 1766, under "an act for the more effectual collecting of his Majesty's quitrents." Families named Lockwood, Ambler, Forsher, Bishop, Ferris, Hoyt, Holley, Brown, Sillcock, and Scofield were purchasers under this sale. Until 1775 the town formed one of the precincts of Rye. In 1821, 900 acres were sold to satisfy the State claim to quitrents in the East Patent.

⁵ Called by the Indians "Armonck." The meadows bordering it were called "Haseco" and "Miosehasaky."

⁶ Manursing, called by the Indians "Minnewies," or Pine, Henhawk, Great, Middle, and Little Captains Islands.

⁷ These consist of a foundry, shovel factory, tide gristmill, and a last and shoe factory.

¹⁰ Named from Scarsdale, in England, whence the Heathcote family came. In colonial times this town formed part of the manor of Scarsdale.

¹¹ Named from Capt. Richard Somers, the intrepid and gallant hero of the Tripolitan War. "Stephentown" was named from Stephen Van Cortlandt. Prior to 1788, it formed part of the township of Hanover, within Cortlandt Manor; and under the natives it formed part of the territory of Amapogh, or Ammahalk.—Bolton's Westchester, II, p. 131.

1808. A part was annexed to New Castle in 1846. It lies on the n. border of the co., near the center. Its surface is broken by ridges in the s.; in other parts it spreads out into level plains. Croton River forms the s. e. boundary. Muscoot River¹ and Plum Brook flow s. through the town into Croton River. Croton Lake, the fountain head of the Croton Water Works, lies in the n. w. corner, extending into Yorktown. The soil is a sandy and gravelly loam. Somers, (p. v.,) in the n. e. part, contains 2 churches, a bank, and 20 houses.² Croton Falls, (p. v.,) in the n. e. corner, on the line of North Salem, is a small village and station on the Harlem R. R. It has a good water-power. West Somers (p. c.) is a hamlet. This town, in the allotment of the manor in 1734, fell to the share of Mrs. Margaret Bayard, Philip and Stephen Van Cortlandt, Andrew Johnston, — Miller, Stephen De Lancey, and Mrs. Susannah Warren. The census reports 5 churches in town.³

WESTCHESTER⁴—was organized as a town, Nov. 7, 1788. West Farms was taken off in 1846. It lies on the Sound, in the extreme s. part of the co. It is bounded on the w. by Bronx River, and on the s. and e. by the Sound. Its surface is generally low and flat along the coast and rolling further inland. Several bays and estuaries extend far inland and divide the land into several peninsulas and necks. The principal of the latter are Classons Point,⁵ between Bronx and Westchester Rivers; Zerogors Point, next e.; and Throggs Neck,⁶ a long and narrow promontory extending s. e. into the Sound. About 2,500 acres along Westchester River is a salt meadow, a portion of which is held as public property and managed by 3 trustees. The soil is a good quality of sandy and gravelly loam. The people are principally engaged in gardening and fruit growing. Westchester, (p. v.,) at the head of navigation on Westchester Creek, is a scattered village of about 1,000 inhabitants. Bronxdale, on the line of West Farms, has an extensive tape factory, a dye and bleach works, and about 400 inhabitants. Schuylerville, upon Throggs Neck, is a scattered village of 300 inhabitants. Connersville, Wakefield, Centerville, and Unionport are modern village plats. Fort Schuyler, upon the extremity of Throggs Neck, was begun in 1833; and in 1851 $848,013 had been expended upon it. The estimated cost of the construction and repairs was then $873,013.⁷ The first settlement on Throggs Neck was made in 1642, by John Throckmorton and 35 associates, from New England, with the consent of the Dutch. The Indian title to the land was extinguished in 1643, by the Dutch, and a land brief was granted in that year, and another in 1652. The English began a settlement at Westchester⁸ in 1642; but the Dutch, considering them intruders, arrested several of them, and in 1656 they surrendered themselves to the Dutch Government. The settlement was claimed by Conn. in 1663; but the next year it came under the government of the Duke of York. A patent was granted by Gov. Nicoll, Feb. 13, 1667, and by Gov. Dongan, Jan. 6, 1686. A market was established at Westchester, May 11, 1693, to be held weekly; and the same year an annual fair was established, to meet alternately at this place and Rye. It was made a borough town April 16, 1696, with mayor, aldermen, and common council, "according to the form of the best governed towns and corporations of the realm of England," and the right of holding a mayor's court, and a representation by one delegate in General Assembly. The De Lancey family, prominent officials under the Colonial Government, and loyalists of the Revolution, resided in this town. The first church (Cong.) was formed soon after the arrival of the first settlers.⁹

WEST FARMS—was formed from Westchester, May 13, 1846. Morrisania was taken off in 1855. It lies upon the Sound and along Harlem River, in the s. part of the co. The surface is rolling, the ridges extending n. and s. Bronx River forms its e. boundary, and Sawmill Brook flows through the center. Its soil is a gravelly and sandy loam, rendered very productive by scientific farming. West Farms, (p. v.,) a large village at the head of navigation on Bronx River,

¹ This river is said to discharge 3,628,800 gallons of water per day.

⁴ The Dutch called this region "Vreedlandt," or the land of peace, and the village "Oorst Dorp," or East Village.

⁵ Formerly "Cornhills Neck," and granted to Thos. Cornhill, or Cornell, in 1640.

⁷ It was built to accommodate 1,250 men and to mount 318 cannon. With the projected work upon Wilkins Point, in Flushing, Queens co., these fortresses would effectually protect New York against the approach of a hostile fleet from the Sound. The fort is built of granite from Greenwich, Conn.

⁸ The settlers at "Vreedlandt" at this time were Lieut. Thos. Wheeler, Thos. U. Newman, Robert Bassett, John Closs, Sherwood Davies, Wm. H. Feuffall, Richard C. Meares, Samuel Havelt, Isaac Holbert, Robert Roes, Jas. Bill, John S. Genner, Richard Osbert, and Wm. Ward. The Dutch released Capt. R. Popton, Wm. Elst Black, John Gray, and Roger Wheeler, who had been arrested for taking up arms at "Vreedlandt."—Bellon's Westchester, II, p. 160. In 1662 they were allowed to determine their own magistracies and hold their own courts; "but in dark and dubious matters—especially in witchcraft—the party aggrieved might appeal to the Governor and Council."

⁹ There are 7 churches in town; 2 Friends, Cong., Prot. E., M. E., Presb., and Af. Meth.

3 mi. from the Sound, contains 4 churches, a carpet factory, molding mill, and gristmill. Fordham, (p. v.) on the R. R., in the N. part of the town, contains 4 churches and is the seat of St. John's College.¹ Tremont,² Central Morrisania,³ and Williams Bridge (p. o.) are modern village plats. The last named is a station upon the Harlem R. R. Claremont is a village plat on the line of Morrisania. The eastern part of the present town, originally known as "The West Farms," was patented April 25, 1666, to Edward Jessup and John Richardson, Indian purchasers.⁴ Fordham was bought by the Dutch in 1639, and in 1646 it was owned by Adrien Van der Donck. In 1671 John Archer, owner of 1,253 acres, obtained a patent under the title of the "Manor of Fordham." It passed to Cornelius Steenwyck, and was conveyed by his widow in 1694 to the Dutch church in New York, in whose possession it remained 60 years.⁵ The High Bridge of the Croton Aqueduct connects the S. W. corner of this town with N. Y. City and Macomb's Bridge, in the N. W. corner. Fort No. 8 was built upon the eminence N. W. of the Archer homestead in the Revolution; and its guns assisted in the capture of Fort Washington in 1776. It was demolished by the enemy Oct. 20, 1782. Fort Independence, on Tetards Hill, was dismantled in 1833. Prince Charles Redoubt and the Negro Fort of the Revolution were on the S. side of Valentines Hill. There are 8 churches in town.⁶

WHITE PLAINS—was formed March 7, 1788. It is an interior town, lying S. of the center of the co. The surface is rolling and hilly. Mamaroneck River forms its E. boundary, and Bronx River its W. St. Marys Lake lies along its E. border. The soil is a clayey and gravelly loam. White Plains⁷ (p. v.) is situated near the W. line of the town. It contains the old and new co. buildings, 3 churches, and several private seminaries. It is a station upon the Harlem R. R., and contains about 1,000 inhabitants. This town was purchased Nov. 22, 1683, by the inhabitants of Rye, and was settled soon after. In 1720 it was divided among 41 proprietors;⁸ and a charter was granted March 13, 1721, with a quitrent of 2 shillings 6 pence to every 100 acres. It embraced 4,435 acres. Many important historical events occurred in this town during the Revolution. The village was wantonly burned Nov. 5, 1776, by a New England major. The battle of White Plains was fought on Chatterton Hill, in Greenburgh, opposite, and within view of the village. There are 6 churches in town.⁹

YONKERS¹⁰—was formed as a town March 7, 1788. It is the most southerly town in the co., upon the Hudson. The surface is rugged and broken by several ridges extending N. and S. Valentines Hill,¹¹ the highest point, is 400 ft. above tide. Tuckahoe Hill, in the E. part, and Huits Deer Ridge, extending into Greenburgh, are prominent points. The principal streams are Bronx River, forming the E. boundary, Spuyten Duyvil Creek, forming the S. boundary, Neperhan River, flowing through the center, and Sprain River and Tibbetts Brook.¹² The soil is a clayey and gravelly loam. The people are largely engaged in manufactures.¹³ The heights along the river are studded with elegant country residences. Many of the inhabitants are engaged in busi-

¹ This college, situated on Rose Hill, immediately E. of the Harlem R. R., is under the control of the R. C. denomination. It was incorp. April 10, 1846, having been opened for students June 24, 1841. It is under the direct charge of Jesuits, who, being associated for religious motives, receive no salary beyond personal support. Six other persons are employed as special instructors upon pay. In 1858 it reported to the Regents 59 undergraduates, besides which it has about 100 other pupils. Upon the premises is a large and handsome gothic church, and St. Joseph's Theological Seminary. The main building, of stone, 2 stories high, with an attic, contains the parlor, chapel, and professors' apartments, and is adorned with valuable paintings. Two front wings, of brick, one story each, 90 by 25 feet, contain the refectory, kitchen, study hall for the first division, and general assembly room. A large brick building contains the study hall for the second division, sleeping, play, and wash rooms. At each end of the front wings are 3 story brick buildings, for reading hall, music, drawing, and class rooms, and dormitories. A 3 story brick building, 100 by 20 feet, contains the library, museum, wardrobe, and walking hall, for the senior division. The farm and property are valued at $147,000. Its libraries number 12,090 volumes, and it has a valuable cabinet of minerals.

² Formerly "Upper Morrisania," "South Fordham," "Adamsville," and "Mount Hope,"—all of which are now embraced in one village under the general name of Tremont.

⁴ This patent was bounded E. by Bronx River, and W. by a little brook called by the natives Sachwahung,—including a neck of land called Quinabuhg. The S. part of the town, or "Planting Neck," was called by the Indians Quinabuhg. The W. side of this neck was called the "Debatable Ground," because it was in dispute between the patentees of West Farms and Morrisania from 1666 to 1740.

⁷ This village is divided into two parts,—the old village, lying about three-fourths of a mile from the R. R., and the new village, lying between the old village and the R. R. station.

⁹ 3 M. E., Prot. E., Presb., and R. C.

¹⁰ Pronounced Yunk'ers. It is a Dutch word, signifying "gentleman," or country nobleman,—a title of respect applied first in this place to Adriaen Van der Donck, the patentee and first proprietor. This town and Mile Square formed a township in the great Manor of Philipsburgh, until the Revolution. The Indians called the place Ke-ke-shick.

¹¹ Named from the family who owned the adjoining property for about 130 years.

¹² Sprain River was called by the natives Ar-men-peeral; and Tibbetts Brook, Mos-ho-hu.

ness in New York. Yonkers, (p. v.,) on the Hudson, near the center of the w. border of the town, was incorp. April 12, 1855. It contains 9 churches, several private seminaries,¹ a bank, and newspaper office. Pop. about 8,000. It is a steamboat landing,² and a station on the Hudson River R. R. It has several manufactories and a great number of beautiful suburban villas.³ Spuyten Duyvil, (p. v.,) on the creek separating the town from New York, is the seat of several large foundries, and is principally inhabited by operatives. Tuckahoe, (p. o.,) an old settlement in the e. part, is a station upon the Harlem R. R.. Near this place are several marble quarries. Kingsbridge (p. o.) lies upon Harlem River, and is connected with New York City by a bridge. Riversdale, below Yonkers, is a group of villas and a r. r. station. South Yonkers is a p. o. The Croton Aqueduct passes through this town from n. to s. A castellated stone mansion, built by Edwin Forrest, the tragedian, on the banks of the Hudson, a mile below Yonkers, has lately been purchased for an educational institution by the Roman Catholics.⁴ The country now included in Yonkers, West Farms, and Morrisania, and containing about 24,000 acres, was granted to Adrien Van der Donck in 1646, with the right and title of Patroon. He gave to his estate the title of "Colen Donck," perfected its title by purchase from the Indians, and took measures for its improvement.⁵ There are 11 churches in town.⁶

YORKTOWN⁷—was formed March 7, 1788. It lies upon the n. border of the co., w. of the center. Its surface is broken and hilly. The Highlands lie along the n. border; and several points are elevated 600 to 1,000 ft. above tide. The principal stream is Croton River, flowing across the s. part. Keakatis Lake,⁸ near the center, Mohegan Lake, in the n. part, and Magriganes Lake, in the n. e. corner, are small bodies of water. Crompond, (Yorktown p. o.,) near the center, Pines Bridge, (p. o.,) near the e. line, Jefferson Valley, (p. o.,) in the n. e. corner, and Shrub Oak, (p. o.,) near the n. line, are hamlets. A rolling mill, wire factory, gristmill, and sawmill have been erected 2 mi. w. of Croton dam. This town formed a part of Cortlandt Manor, and in the division of 1734 fell to the shares of Andrew Miller, Gertrude Beeckman, Cornelia and John Schuyler, Gertrude Verplanck, Elizabeth Skinner, John Watts, Philip Verplanck, and Susannah Warren. A Presb. church built at Crompond⁹ about 1738 was burned July, 1779, and a committee in Congress in 1839 reported in favor of paying $3,500 for the loss, as the premises had been used as a storehouse by the Continental troops. Col. Green was surprised in this town May 13, 1781, by a party of refugees, in which affair Maj. Flag, 2 subalterns, and 27 men were killed, and many wounded. The census reports 7 churches in town.¹⁰

² The steamer Henry Clay was burned not far from this place, on her down trip, July 28, 1852. Of 500 persons on board, nearly 100 perished, among whom was A. J. Downing, the editor and author.

³ The Manor Hall, a short distance above the village, built about 1745, was one of the seats of the Phillips family.

⁴ An edifice of fine architectural proportions and great size was erected, in 1858, in the rear of the mansion. The premises form a branch of the institution located on the Central Park in New York, and are under the charge of Sisters of Charity.

⁵ Van der Donck subsequently took an active part in representing in Holland the interests of the colonists against the alleged tyranny of the West India Company and its servants, and finally succeeded in his efforts, notwithstanding the enmity of Gov. Stuyvesant and the influence he was able to bring to oppose him. He died in 1655, and his estate was afterward sold in detached portions by his widow. His settlement was laid waste by the Indians, Sept. 15, 1655, and probably remained unoccupied until after the English conquest. In 1672 Frederick Flypsen or Phillips, with Thos. Delaval and Thos. Lewis, bought 8,000 acres of Colen Donck, nearly all in the present town of Yonkers; and subsequently the former became sole owner of Kings Bridge. For one of these thirds he paid £530. These possessions were extended, by further purchase, to Croton and Bronx Rivers; and in June, 1693, the Lordship or Manor of Philipsburgh was erected, with all the rights, honors, or privileges enjoyed by the most favored, excepting that of representation in the General Assembly. He established a drawbridge at Spuyten Duyvil Creek, built a church, still standing, in Sleepy Hollow, and made other improvements. His descendants occupied a prominent position in the colonial government; but, siding with the royal cause, he lost every thing in the Revolution. Col. F. Phillips, the last proprietor of this estate, was paid £62,075 by the British Government, as an equivalent for this loss; and his estates were sold by the State to his tenants at very moderate rates.

⁸ The Croton dam, at the head of the Croton Aqueduct, is in this town. At the top it is 166 ft. above tide and 55 ft. above the bed of the river; 61 feet wide at low water level, with openings of 90 and 180 feet for the passage of the surplus waters. Between these is a partition, forming the foundation of the gatehouse and sluiceway for relieving the structure from the pressure of the lake, and for the discharge of water during repairs. The water flows over an ogge-curved apron of cut stone laid upon hewn timber, and is received in a pond, formed by a second dam, 300 ft. below. The aqueduct is taken from the lake through a tunnel, on the s. side, 180 ft. long in the solid rock; and the flow of water is regulated by a double set of metal gates. The dam was destroyed while building, in Jan. 1841; but the present structure promises to stand without injury, and almost without repair, to an indefinitely remote period. The surface over which the waste water flows is now much more ample than was intended before the accident in 1841. The pond has a capacity of 500,000,000 gallons.

Croton River was named Kitchawan, signifying a large and swift current. The bend west of Pines Bridge was named Kewegtegnack. The commissioners were obliged to purchase about 900 acres of land overflowed by the dam, at an average cost of $500 per acre.

⁹ Often called "Crom Pond," the Dutch term for Crooked Pond. It consists of 2 parts united. Near this pond is French Hill, where the French forces under Rochambeau were encamped in 1781-82. Turkey Mountain is an extensive woodland tract to the s. e.

* Formed since 1855.

NEW YORK COUNTY.

The city of New York¹ was incorp. by Gov. Stuyvesant in 1652, and its municipal powers were confirmed and enlarged by Gov. Dongan, April 22, 1686, and by Gov. Montgomerie, April 19, 1708. An act was passed Oct. 14, 1732, confirming its rights; and subsequent enactments were embodied in one act in the revised laws of 1813 and in the revised statutes of 18—. Numerous changes in the details of the municipal government have been made from time to time.²

The co., from the beginning, has embraced Manhattan, Governors, Bedloes, Ellis's, Blackwells, Wards, and Randalls Islands, and the lands under water to low water mark on the shores opposite, in West Chester, Queens, and Kings cos., and in New Jersey.³ Manhattan Island is 13½ mi. long, by 2½ mi. wide at the broadest part. It is centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains an area of 22,000 acres.⁴ It is separated from Westchester co. by a strait known as Spuyten Duyvil Creek,⁵ and Harlem River. The surface of the island was originally quite broken by ridges of gneiss and hornblende slate, especially in the n. parts; and immense masses of rock and earth have been removed in grading.⁶ A deep valley extended across the island on the line of Canal St.;⁷ another near Carmausville;⁸ a third at Manhattanville; and a fourth at Tubby Hook, near the n. extremity. The s. part of the island was covered with drift and boulders, presenting conical hills, some of which were 80 ft. above the present grade of the streets. Fresh water was readily obtained by wells sunk to the surface of the rock; and the porous nature of the soil has greatly favored the construction of deep foundations and vaults without annoyance from water.⁹

Along the e. shore, from 94th St. northward, and around Harlem, the surface is very level, and to some extent covered with salt marshes. On the w. side, toward the n., the valleys are often deep and the hills precipitous. The highest point, at Fort Washington, is 238 ft. above tide.

Both sides of the island afford ample facilities for commerce; and the noble harbor embraced within the shores of New Jersey, Staten Island, Long Island, and the city has scarcely an equal for the extent, safety, and facility of access, and for the amount of its commercial transactions.¹⁰

The preservation of this harbor from injurious encroachments has been a subject of solicitude; and investigations which these have occasioned, have developed many interesting facts connected with its interests.¹¹

² Important acts were passed in 1830, 1849, 1851, 1853, and 1857, the last mentioned embracing all the essential features of the city government.

⁴ The widest part of the island is at 88th St., where it is 12,500 feet across.

⁵ The creek flows from Hudson to Harlem River, at Kingsbridge.

⁶ White limestone of coarse quality appeared at the surface on the e. side, between 13th and 16th Sts., and on the w. from 29th to 31st Sts. The strata of gneiss are nearly vertical, frequently bent and contorted, and in places contained interesting minerals.

⁸ Known as the Clendenning Valley. The Croton aqueduct crosses this on a magnificent series of arches and piers of solid masonry.

⁹ Until 1842 the city was entirely dependent upon wells for its supply of fresh water. See p. —.

¹⁰ The strait known as Harlem River and Spuyten Duyvil Creek is too shallow and crooked to be available for commerce. Various plans have been proposed to improve it; but none have been carried into effect. Harlem River is about 800 to 1,000 ft. wide, and mostly bordered by narrow, marshy flats, behind which the banks rise into hills. At Kings Bridge the bank is 180 ft. high and nearly perpendicular. The Hudson River, R. R. and the Harlem R. R. cross these waters, and also the High Bridge, (used only for the Croton aqueduct and foot passengers,) and the Harlem Bridge, at the head of 3d Avenue. The latter was a toll bridge until the expiration of the charter in the spring of 1858. Macomb's Bridge, at the head of 7th Avenue, was formerly much used; but it is now down. A dam was constructed at this place for using tide water; but it was found to impede navigation, and was removed. In 1827 a co. was formed to build a canal across the upper end of the island, and in 1836 a similar plan was proposed, and a canal was partly built, traces of which may be seen on the e. side of the island, at 106th St. One of the objects of this canal was to gain access to a marble quarry; but the stone was found to be of inferior quality, and the project was abandoned. The capacity of the harbor of New York is limited only by the depth of water on the bars at its entrance near Sandy Hook. Vessels of about 23 ft. draft can pass at high tide. The approaches by way of Long Island Sound have no practical limitation of this kind, and vessels of 60 ft. draft could approach the upper part of the island and land on the Westchester shores adjacent without difficulty.

¹¹ The Colony and State have at sundry times granted to the city lands under water adjacent to its shores, the riparian owners being usually secured in the right of pre-emption. The principal of these grants have been as follows:—

1686.—All vacant lands on Manhattan Island to low water mark, with rivulets, coves, and ponds, were secured by the charter granted by Gov. Dongan.

Although the city forms but a single organization, it has localities known by distinct names as villages or neighborhoods; but the number of these is gradually becoming obliterated as population increases; and most of them will soon be known only to the student of history.¹

Of the several islands, other than Manhattan, comprised in New York City and co., those in the harbor are owned by the General Government and occupied as military posts; and those in the East River are chiefly owned by the city and devoted to charitable or penal institutions.²

1708.—All vacant lands on Long Island shore, between high and low water mark, between the Navy Yard and Red Hook, were granted.

1730.—Land under water, 400 ft. wide, between junction of Charlton and Washington Sts. and Marketfield St. on the Hudson, and from Whitehall to Houston St. on the East River, were secured. These grants, with the previous ones, comprise 200½ acres.

1807.—Land under water, 400 ft. wide, extending northward from previous grant 4 mi. on the Hudson and 2 mi. on the East River, were granted.

1826.—The same was extended to Spuyten Duyvil Creek on the w. and Harlem R. on the e.

1821.—Land 600 ft. wide in front of the Battery was added.

1837.—Lands under water on West to 13th Avenue line was secured.

1852.—Lands under Harlem R. from such exterior line as the corporation might fix, to the shore, was granted. Other extensions were authorized in 1828, 1830, 1835, 1846. Assem. Doc. 8, 1856.

In 1811 the exterior line was fixed by the commissioners for laying out the city into streets; but changes of their plan and the extension of streets led to encroachments upon the channel requiring remedial measures. An act was accordingly passed, March 30, 1855, appointing 5 commissioners in pursuance of advice of a Senate committee of the year previous, and these persons, associating with themselves several officers of the General Government, proceeded to examine the subject. The harbor and shores were surveyed and sounded, the effects of tides and currents examined, maps constructed, and lines for the limitation of piers and bulkheads recommended, and mostly confirmed by law, April 7, 1857. These surveys were performed by 10 parties of about 200 persons from the U. S. Coast Survey, at a cost of $85,000. The reports of the commission embrace a large amount of statistical and historical information.—Assem. Doc. 8, 1856; Sen. Doc. 40, 126, 1857.

The first dock was built from Broad to Dock St., on the East River. There are now 66 piers on the w. and 78 on the e. side of the city. A part of these are built and owned by the corporation, others by individuals or companies, and others jointly by the city and individuals. Of the last class the city pays one-third the cost of building and receives one-half of the revenues. The city owns 39 piers and 7 half-piers on the Hudson, and 31 piers and 20 half-piers on the East River,—the former valued at $1,428,500, and the latter at $1,829,000. They are under the care of the Street Department.

The wants of commerce led to the erection of a lighthouse on Sandy Hook, at the expense of the colony of New York, in 1762, which was supported by special duties upon commerce until ceded to the U. S. Feb. 3, 1790. The commissioners for its erection were John Cruger, Philip Livingston, Leonard Lispenard, and Wm. Bayard. It was burned in 1776. Within the Hook are lights at Princess Bay, Fort Tompkins, Robins Reef, and Whitehall Landing, and numerous buoys to mark the channels.

The tide enters at Sandy Hook at 7h. 29m. past the moon's sonthing, and rises at Governors Island from 2.2 to 6.1 ft., the mean rise being 4.3 ft. The harbor was frozen over in 1780, and again in 1820. On the former occasion persons passed on the ice to Staten Island. It occasionally happens that the Hudson and East Rivers will be closed for a few hours in intensely cold seasons, and people have on these occasions rashly attempted to cross; but the occurrence is not common, and the time of closure always brief.

¹ The following is a list of the principal of these localities:—Bloomington, on Broadway, between 100th and 110th Sts., 7 mi. from the City Hall, presents a very neat appearance, and consists mostly of suburban dwellings. It is the seat of an orphan and a lunatic asylum,—the latter forming a branch of the N. Y. Hospital. It was called by the Dutch "Bloemend Dal."—Flourery Valley.

Carmansville, on 10th Av. above 155th St., named from families named Carman, former owners of the adjoining lands, is chiefly made up of country seats.

Corlaer Hook, at the angle in the East River near Grand St., named from Arent Van Corlaer, was called by the Indians "Nechtank."²

Dominies Hook lies on the Hudson River, between Duane and Canal Sts., embracing 62 acres. It was acquired by ground brief from Stuyvesant July 4, 1654, and was afterward granted to the English Church.

Fort Washington, (Washington Heights p. o.), a short distance above Carmansville, is an elevated site, once fortified, and now occupied by fine dwellings. The Deaf and Dumb Asylum is located near this place.

Greenwich, now merged in the city, was 3 mi. above the City Hall, on the Hudson. It was named by Capt., afterward

Sir Peter, Warren, who owned it. The Indian name was "Sapokanigan." The N. Y. State Prison was formerly located here.

Harlem (p. o.) lies between 8th Avenue and East River, about 106th St. The principal business is on 3d Avenue. It has several churches, important manufactories of India rubber, chemicals, candles, ale, beer, carriages, and row boats, and several private schools.

Kings Garden, west of Broadway, between Fulton and Reade Sts., is now partly held by Trinity Church and leased.

Lispenards Meadows was an irregular tract on both sides of West Broadway from Reade to near Spring St., and along Canal St. from the Hudson to Orange St.

Manhattanville, (p. o.) on the Hudson, between 125th and 132d Sts., w. of 9th Avenue, contains a convent, Catholic college, and manufactories of iron, paint, and refined sugar.

Strykers Bay, on the Hudson, at 96th St., is a R. R. station.

Tubby Hook lies on the Hudson, one half mi. s. of Spuyten Duyvil Creek.

Turtle Bay is on the East River, 2 mi. n. of Corlaer Hook. Its name is a corruption of the Dutch "Dontel Bay," or Wedge Bay.

Yorkville, on the east side of Central Park, extending to the East River, from 79th to 90th Sts.

² Governors Island was formerly called "Nutten Island," and by the Indians "Paggauck." It lies 1,066 yards s. e. from the Battery, and contains 72 acres. It is separated from Long Island by Buttermilk Channel, formerly shallow, but now of sufficient depth for the largest ships. This island was bought by Gov. Van Twiller, and has always been reserved for public defense. Quarantine was located here from 1794 to 1797. In the settlement of accounts with the U. S., New York undertook to erect fortifications here as payment for her proportion of the expenses of the Revolution. Jurisdiction was ceded to the U. S. Feb. 15, 1800, with Fort Jay, then partially erected. By the authority of an act passed March 26, 1794, $20,000 were expended by the State in fortifications, under the supervision of Geo. Clinton, Matthew Clarkson, James Watson, Richard Varick, Nicholas Fish, Ebenezer Stevens, and Abijah Hammond. A further sum of $20,000 was granted April 6, 1795, to complete the works on this and "Oyster" (now Ellis) Islands. Castle Williams (named from Gen. Williams of the N. Y. Militia) is a round tower on the w. shore of the island, 600 feet in circumference and 60 feet high, mounting 80 casemate and 40 barbette guns. The land side is open, and a covered way leads to the works in the center of the island. Fort Columbus is a star shaped work of 5 points on the summit of the island, mounting 105 guns; and South Battery, fronting Buttermilk Channel, has 13 guns. These works from 1830 to 1858 cost $285,897; and they are adapted to a garrison of 800 men. The island is used as a receiving station for newly enlisted troops, and a school for instructing boys in music. About 60 lads of 14 years and upward are usually under instruction upon the drum, bugle, and other instruments.

Bedloes Island, 2,950 yards from the Battery, was named from Isaac Bedloe, the patentee under Gov. Nicoll. It was known for some years as "Kennedys Island." It was ceded to the U. S. in 1800, having been previously used for quarantine purposes. It is now occupied by Fort Wood, erected in 1841 at a cost of $213,000, on the site of a fort built about the beginning of the century. It mounts 77 guns, and accommodates a garrison of 350 men. During several months in 1849 it was used by the Commissioners of Emigration as a hospital.

Ellis Island, formerly known as "Oyster," "Bucking," and "Gibbet" Island, lies 2,050 yards s. w. of the Battery, and is occupied by Fort Gibson, a work built in 1841-44, at a cost of $5,096, mounting 15 guns and requiring a garrison of 80 men. The pirate Goings and 3 associates were hung here April 22, 1821.

Blackwells Island is a long, narrow island in the East River, extending from 51st to 88th Sts., and containing 120 acres. It was named from the Blackwell family, who owned it for a hundred years or more. It is now owned by the city corporation, and is the seat of various penal and charitable institutions. This island was formerly called "Manning Island," from Capt. John Manning; and by the Indians it was named "Minnahonock." It was patented to Gov. Van Twiller, and continued private property until 1828, when it was sold by James Blackwell to the city for $50,000. In 1843 the city paid $20,000 more to perfect the title.

Wards Island, named from Jasper and Bartholomew Ward, former proprietors, extends along the East River, opposite New York, from 101 St. to 115th St., and contains 200 acres. It was formerly called "Great Bourt" or "Great Barn" Island, and by the Indians was named "Ten-ken-as." It was

The city is divided into 22 Wards, which are again subdivided into 149 Election Districts, and such other civil divisions as the election of State, city and co. officers, the administration of justice, and regulation of municipal ordinances require.¹

The Board of Supervisors in New York co. is composed of 12 persons, who are so classified that 2 are elected or appointed annually. A ballot can have but one name; and it is the duty of the canvassers to declare that the two persons having the highest number of votes are elected.² Their general powers and duties—which chiefly concern taxes and assessment—are the same as those of Supervisors in other cos.

The Legislative power of the city government is vested in the Common Council, consisting of 2 co-ordinate branches,—a board of 17 Aldermen and a board of 24 Councilmen.³ The former are elected by single districts for 2 years, and the latter are elected annually, 6 to each Senatorial district.⁴ Ordinances must be passed by both bodies the same year, and receive the assent of the Mayor to become valid.

The regular sessions of the Board of Councilmen commence at 5 o'clock, p. m., on the first Monday in each month, and continue on each Monday and Tuesday until the business of the month is concluded. Each house elects a presiding officer, clerk, and other officers; and the journals of each are published.

The executive power is vested in a Mayor,⁵ elected for 2 years, and in 7 Executive Departments, viz., those of Police, Finance, Streets, Croton Aqueduct, Almshouse, Law, and City Inspector,—most of which are subdivided into bureaux, each having specific duties to perform. The Mayor is charged with the general administration of the city, nominates for the approval of the Aldermen certain officers, and may suspend or remove officers within limits fixed by statute. He communicates annually and from time to time to the Common Council such messages as he deems proper.

The Police Department has general charge of police regulation in New York City and vicinity. By act of April 15, 1857, it was placed under the Commissioners of the Metropolitan Police District,⁶ of whom the Mayors of New York and Brooklyn are ex officio members.

The Department of Finance is under a Comptroller, elected by separate ticket for a term of 4 years. This officer has charge of the fiscal concerns of the city, and reports the condition of its bought by Van Twiller in 1637, confiscated in 1664, and granted to Thos. Delavel. The Wards bought it in 1806; and in Dec. 1847, a part was leased by the Commissioners of Emigration for an Emigrant Refuge and Hospital. The Commissioners have since purchased 106 acres; and a portion of the remainder is used as a Potter's Field. The cost of buildings and improvements up to 1858 was $260,000. The structures erected before 1850 were slight barracks and shanties; but those built since are chiefly of brick. The island is supplied with Croton water; and a ferry connects it with 106th St.

Randall's Island, named from Jonathan Randall, who purchased it in 1784 and resided here nearly 50 years, lies N. of Wards Island, near the Westchester shore. It was formerly known as "Little Bora" Island. It was patented under the Dutch Government, but was confiscated in 1664 and granted to Thos. Delavel. It was subsequently named "Bellevue," "Tulbots Island," and "Montrossors Island." The city purchased it in 1835 for $50,000. It is now occupied by nursery schools and by the establishment of the Society for the Reformation of Juvenile Delinquents. A ferry connects it with 122d St.

Sunken Meadow Island lies adjacent to Randall's Island.

¹The city was divided Dec. 8, 1683, into 6 wards, known as South, East, North, West, Dock, and Old Wards. They were designated by numbers and a new ward was created by act of Feb. 23, 1791, to take effect Sept. 28, 1792. Those subsequently erected have been as follows:—

8th, 1803.	16th, 1836, from 12th.
9th, 1803.	17th, 1837. " 11th.
10th, 1808, from 7th.	18th, 1846. " 16th.
11th, 1825.	19th, 1850. " 12th.

²This arrangement is made so as to place the Board of Supervisors above the reach of party politics.

³The Aldermanic Districts, identical with the Assembly Districts, are as follows:—

1. South of Chambers, Duane, Frankfort, Pearl, and Dover Sts.
2. S. by 1st, within Broadway, from Chambers, through Frankfort, Baxter, Bayard, Bowery Center, and Catharine Sts. to East River.
3. S. by 2d, within Broadway, from Chambers, through Spring St. to Hudson River.
4. S. by 2d, within Broadway, from Franklin, through Grand and Clinton Sts. to East River.
5. S. by 3d, within Broadway, from Spring, through 4th and Christopher Sts. to Hudson River.

6. Within Broadway, Honston, Clinton, and Grand Sts.

7. S. by 5th, within Broadway, from 4th, through 14th Sts. to Hudson River.

8. S. and E. by East River: w. and s. by Clinton and Honston Sts. to East River.

9. S. by 7th, within 6th Avenue, from 14th St., through 26th St. to Hudson River.

10. Within Broadway and 14th St., Avenue A. and Honston St.

11. S. by 9th, within 6th Avenue, from 26th St., through 40th to Hudson River.

12. Within Honston St., Avenue A, 14th St. and East River, 22d Ward.

13. 22d Ward.

14. Within 14th St., from East River, 6th Avenue, 26th St. and East River.

15. S. by 14th, within 6th Avenue, from 26th St., through 40th St. to East River.

16. 12th Ward.

17. 12th Ward.

⁴The election of city officers takes place annually on the first Tuesday of Dec., and that of co. officers on the day of the general State election, which is on the Tuesday after the first Monday of Nov. The officers of the co. are the Recorder, City Judge, and other Judges of the co. courts, District Attorney and his assistants, Sheriff, and his Deputies, Constables, Coroners, County Clerk, Register, Treasurer, Assessors, Tax Commissioners, Receiver of Taxes, Commissioner of Juries, Commissioners of Deeds, and Supervisors.

The Recorder is presiding judge of the criminal courts and a magistrate. Several of the co. officers are ex officio charged with duties more properly belonging to the city government; and the line of distinction between the two sets of officers is not well defined.

⁵The Mayor was originally appointed by the Governor and Council, and from 1777 to 1822 by the Council of Appointment. Since 1822 the Mayor has been elected.

⁶This District includes New York, Kings, Richmond, and Westchester cos. The Governor and Senate appoint 3 commissioners from the city of N. Y., 1 from Kings, and 1 from Westchester or Richmond cos. The city is divided into 11 Surgical Districts, each with 1 Surgeon; and into 25 Police Precincts, under a General and Deputy Superintendent. According to the Council Manual for 1858, the number of employes in the police were 1,004, of whom 11 were surgeons, 7 were attached to the office of the Commissioners, 5 were employed in the office of the General Department, 24 in that of the Deputy Superintendent, 21 as Detectives, 79 in attendance at public offices and courts, 26 as harbor police, and 841 on police stations. The number is at times largely increased, and is annually becoming permanently greater.

The city contains 20 public and several private parks, most of which are enclosed with iron railing, and handsomely laid out.¹

The Fire Department in some form has existed since 1853, when the city enjoyed the privilege of collecting a bearer for each house and a guildler yearly for each chimney to support a fire apparatus. The Fire Department in its present form was incorp. April 16, 1831, and its powers have been modified by acts of March 25, 1851, and April 3, 1855.²

¹ The Central Park, for the purpose of construction, is in charge of a special Board of Commissioners, consisting of 10 members, who serve without pay, and report annually to the Common Council. The history of this park is briefly as follows:—

On the 6th of April, 1851, Mayor Kingsland, in a special message to the Common Council, called attention to the importance of a public park sufficiently ample to meet the growing wants of the city population. The message was referred to a select committee, who reported in favor of purchasing the tract of 150 acres between 66th and 75th Sts. and 3d Avenue and the East River, known as Jones' Wood. An act was passed July 11, 1851, allowing this to be taken; but, from some errors in the act, the Supreme Court refused to appoint Commissioners, and the law was repealed April 11, 1854. On the 5th of August, 1851, a committee was appointed to examine whether another more suitable site for a park could not be found; and the result of the inquiry was the selection of the site now known as the "Central Park," between 5th and 8th Avenues, originally extending from 49th to 106th Sts., and in 1859 extended to 110th St. The act for creating this park passed July 23, 1853, and an act for its regulation and government April 17, 1857. The grounds are 2½ miles long by ½ mile wide, embracing 840 acres, of which 136 are occupied by Croton reservoirs. It will be crossed by 4 thoroughfares, sunk below the general surface and passing under the carriage ways and other avenues of the park, so as not to obstruct the movement of visitors. Access to the grounds cannot be had from these transverse roads. This park is now under construction, and will embrace a parade ground 50 acres in extent, for the maneuver of large bodies of infantry, cavalry, and artillery; a botanical garden, cricket grounds, playgrounds, ponds for skating in winter, and every variety of scenery which a surface naturally rugged and broken can be made to present. The plan embraces carriage drives and bridle paths, winding ways for pedestrians, and broad, noble avenues for promenade; fountains, lawns, terraces, and every variety of woodland scenery. Ground is reserved for a public hall intended for concerts; for a large conservatory, and exotic terraces; for a geometrical flower garden, with wall fountains; for an architectural terrace, with a large jet and tazza fountain; for public houses of refreshment; for residences of the superintendent and head gardener; for a police station, a zoological garden, and for an astronomical observatory, chartered in 1859. The grounds now include the building erected and still used for a State Arsenal, but sold to the corporation, and the Mount St. Vincent Academy of the Sisters of Charity. There will be over 25 miles of walks, 5 miles of bridle paths, and 8 miles of carriage road. The main entrance will be at the corner of 5th Avenue and 59th St.; but other entrances will be provided at convenient points on 7th Avenue on both ends, and along 5th and 8th Avenues.

The Battery comprises a tract of about 20 acres at the s. point of the island, planted with trees and fronting upon the harbor. It was formerly a place of fashionable resort; but, in the extension of commerce, it has lost most of its prestige. It is still attractive on account of its cool breezes and refreshing shade. The point, formerly called Schreyers Hook, showed a number of rocks above water, upon which a platform was built in 1693 for a battery. This shallow spot was afterward filled in; and in 1853-56 it was further extended so as to embrace its present limits. It is valued at $3,000,000.

The Bowling Green is a triangular park between Broadway and Whitehall St. and Battery Place. It is supplied with a fountain, but is not open to the public. This Park or Green formerly fronted the fort upon the Battery. Prior to the Revolution, a leaden equestrian statue of Geo. III. was placed in it; and at the commencement of the war it was thrown down and melted into bullets. The Green is valued at $135,000.

The Park is a triangular space of 10½ acres between Broadway, Chatham, and Chamber Sts., near the present center of commercial business in the city. The City Hall, Hall of Records, Rotunda, and New City Hall, used for courts and public offices, are located upon it. It has a large fountain, which is seldom used. This tract, formerly called "The Fields," or "The Common," from the beginning has been owned by the city and used for public purposes. While distant from the settled portion, it was used as a place of execution; and the victims of the negro plot proscription were here burned. In the early part of the Revolution the Sons of Liberty here rallied to assert their rights; and at a later period it became the scene of cruelty as the prison and execution ground of American patriots. The s. gateway was formerly of marble, beautifully finished, and surmounted by two marble balls, gifts from the Turkish Government to Commodore Perry, and by him presented to the city. They had been made for cannon balls. The foundation of this gateway was laid with great pomp, the Mayor presiding and depositing in it various coins, papers, and memorials. The Park is now partly surrounded by an iron fence, and its sides are open for some distance to allow the easy passage of pedestrians. Its central location renders the Park a favorite place for popular gatherings, and, from the throng that are constantly passing, an audience can be swelled to thousands in a brief space of time. This Park is valued at $3,000,000.

Washington Square, containing 9½ acres, formerly the "Potter's Field," lies between Waverly Place, McDougal, Fourth, and Wooster Sts. It is handsomely laid out, and is surrounded with residences of a superior class. It has a fountain, and is a favorite resort for promenading. It is estimated that 100,000 persons were buried here before the ground was taken for a park. It is valued at $816,000.

Union Park is an oval area, with a fine fountain, on Broadway, bounded by University Place, 4th Avenue, 14th and 17th Sts. It is much frequented in summer by nurses and children. It is valued at $604,000. Adjoining the park, but not within its paling, is the equestrian statue of Washington, in bronze, by H. K. Brown, erected in 1856 at a cost of over $30,000. It is 14 feet high, and stands on a granite pedestal of about the same height.

Tompkins Square, formerly a parade ground, is bounded by Avenues A and B and by 6th and 10th Sts. It is still new; but it is well laid out and will become an ornament to the eastern side of the city. A fountain is under construction, and other improvements are in progress.

Madison Square, comprising 10 acres, between 5th and Madison Avenues and 23d and 26th Sts., is beautifully laid out and planted with trees. The adjoining streets are built up with first class dwellings, and it is one of the most fashionable places of promenade in the city. It is valued at $520,000. Adjoining this square on the west is a monument to the memory of General Worth.

Stuyvesant Square lies between 15th and 17th Sts. and 1st and 3d Avenues, the 2d Avenue passing through it. It has a fountain on each side of 2d Avenue, and is tastefully laid out and planted with trees and shrubs. It was presented to the corporation by the late Peter G. Stuyvesant, and is valued at $196,000.

Reservoir Square, adjoining the distributing reservoir, between 40th and 42d Sts., on 6th Avenue, from 1851 to 1858 was occupied by the Crystal Palace. It is valued at $150,000, and is at present unimproved as a park.

Manhattan Square, between 5th and 9th Avenues and 7th and 81st Sts., is a rough, unimproved piece of land, valued at $85,000.

Hamilton Square, at Yorkville, between 3d and 5th Avenues and 68th and 69th St., has a rolling surface, mostly above the level of adjoining streets, and is unimproved and unimproved. The corner stone of a monument to Washington was laid with pompous ceremonies on this park Oct. 4, 1847; but the patriotism that instigated the enterprise was expended in the effort, and the work was abandoned without further action. The park is valued at $97,000.

Mount Morris Square, between 120th and 124th Sts., on both sides of 5th Avenue, not yet laid out, is valued at $40,000.

A square of 17 acres was reserved for a park at Bloomingdale, between 8th and 9th Avenues and 53d and 57th Sts.; but the location of the Central Park has led to its abandonment. In various parts of the city are several small triangular plots at the intersection of streets, valued at $10,000 to $15,000 each. The city also contains several not belonging to the city, which are laid out with great care and are truly ornamental.

St. John's Park, or Hudson Square, fronting St. John's Church and bounded by Hudson, Varick, Beach, and Light Sts., belongs to Trinity Church, and is valued at $400,000. It is kept for the exclusive use of the inhabitants living near it, who purchase keys of the keeper at $10 per annum. It contains a beautiful fountain.

Gramercy Park, between 20th and 21st Sts. and 3d and 4th Avenues, is owned by those living around it, having been ceded to them by Samuel B. Ruggles. It is inclosed with an iron railing and a thick hedge of sweet prime, and is planted with ornamental trees and shrubs. It has a fountain in the center.

² This department has a Board of Fire Wardens, consisting of 14 members, a Chief Engineer and 13 assistants, and 3,700 men, of whom 1,922 are members of engine companies, 1,262 of hose companies, and 502 of hook and ladder companies. This body of men constitutes a distinct and powerful combination, whose services, although gratuitous, are prompt and in every respect praiseworthy, and whose interests the city authorities find it their policy to protect. The city is divided into 8 fire districts, furnished with 11 district fire alarm bells, all connected by telegraphic signals. There are 47 engine companies, 57 hose companies, 15 hook and ladder companies, and 4 hydrant companies. The first class engines have companies of

The Bureau of Lamps and Gas has in charge the lighting of the streets.¹

The Croton Aqueduct Department is under a board styled the Croton Aqueduct Board, consisting of a President Commissioner, Chief Engineer, and Assistant, appointed by the Mayor and Alderman for five years. It has charge of all structures and property connected with the supply of Croton water and the collection of water rents; of the underground drainage of the city, of public sewers, of permits for street vaults, of paving and repairing streets, and of digging and constructing wells. It has a Bureau of Water Rents, and one of Pipes, Sewers and Pavements. The department was organized in July, 1849, under an act passed April 11 of that year. Previous to this the Water Commissioners were appointed by the Governor and Senate.²

70 men, the second of 60, and the third of 50. The hook and ladder companies have each 50 men, and the hose companies each 30. The number of fires in one year, ending Feb. 17, 1859, was 261, and of alarms, 160. The loss by fire on buildings was $593,947, and on stock $514,990,—of which the Crystal Palace, burned in Oct. 1857, formed a large item. During the last year two large steam fire engines have been obtained; but, except in extraordinary cases, they are not used. The city owns about 80,000 feet of hose. The Department elects one Fire Commissioner annually for a term of 5 years from among exempt firemen. These commissioners form a Board to decide upon the formation of new volunteer companies, to investigate applications for admission to companies, to examine into charges against members, and for cause to suspend or remove them. The Fire Department possesses a fund derived from special trusts, donations, festivals, concerts, fines for violation of fire laws, and other sources, the income of which is applied in aid of the families of deceased and disabled firemen. The report of 1857 showed an expenditure of $30,567.91 by the trustees of this fund. Among the items of this expense were 1,978 pairs of shoes and 500 tons of coal. The invested fund amounts to $95,250. Two scholarships for educating the sons of firemen in the University of New York have been endowed by Myndert Van Schaick.

² The city gas lights are furnished by three general companies, as follows:—

The New York Gas Light Company was incorp. March 26, 1823, with a capital of $1,000,000. It has works on 21st and 22d Sts., from 1st Avenue to East River, and has 6 large gas holders at that station and 7 others at different parts of the city. It supplies the lamps s. of Grand St., and has about 130 miles of mains under the streets.

Manhattan Gas Light Company was incorp. Feb. 26, 1830, with a capital of $4,000,000. It has 2 manufactories of gas,—one on the Hudson, at the foot of 18th St., capable of making daily 2,000,000 ft., and one on East River, at foot of 14th St., making 400,000 ft., and when completed will be capable of making 3,000,000 ft. daily. It supplies the city n. of Grand St., and has about 200 miles of street mains. It lights 8,000 street lamps and supplies 22,000 stores and dwellings. In 1857 it made 600,000,000 feet of gas.

Harlem Gas Light Company was incorp. Feb. 8, 1855, with a capital of $250,000. Its works are situated upon Harlem River, at the n. extremity of 1st Avenue. Beside these, there are several minor gas works for furnishing light to hotels and private establishments.

³ The Croton Aqueduct is the most extensive and costly work in America for supplying a city with water; and its magnitude justifies a somewhat minute account of its origin and subsequent history.

In 1741 the General Assembly passed a law (which was continued by repeated enactments) for mending and keeping in repair the public wells and pumps of the city. In 1774 Christopher Colles contracted to erect a reservoir on Broadway, between Pearl and White Sts.; and the plan was partially carried into effect before the Revolution. In 1785 schemes were again agitated, which led to surveys and examinations; and in 1779 the Manhattan Company was formed, ostensibly to supply the city with water, but really as a banking institution, with a perpetual charter and large privileges. Its principal well was at the corner of Duane and Cross Sts., whence the water was raised by steam and distributed in pipes; but the supply was limited in amount and was of very impure quality. During the next thirty years various schemes were proposed for constructing common and artesian wells, and open canals from the Bronx and other streams in Westchester co. and Conn., and several companies were formed; but no practical steps were taken to secure the result. An act was passed May 2, 1834, which authorized the city to supply itself with "pure and wholesome water" and to issue its stock to defray the cost. The Governor and Senate appointed Stephen Allen, R. M. Brown, Charles Dusenberry, Saul Alley, and Wm. W. Fox as Commissioners, under whom accurate surveys were made and various plans and estimates considered, and resulted in recommending that the water of the Croton be taken near its mouth and brought in an aqueduct to a reservoir on Murray Hill, 114 ft. above tide. This plan was approved, March 11, by the mayor, and in April, 1835, by the people, by a vote of 11,367 to 5,963. David B. Douglass was appointed Chief Engineer; but in Oct. 1836, he was succeeded by John B. Jervis. Work was begun in the spring of 1837, and so far completed as to allow the admission of water into the distributing reservoir, July 4, 1842. Its completion was commemorated by a grand civic celebration Oct. 14 of the same year.

This aqueduct is a covered canal, of solid stone and brick masonry, arched above and below, 8 ft. 3½ in. high, 7 ft. 5 in. wide at the widest part, and 40½ m. in length from the dam to the distributing reservoir. It has a descent of 47.9 ft., or 13 in. to a mi., and a capacity of supplying 60,000,000 gallons of water per day. At intervals of 1 mi. are openings through small towers for ventilation. The flow of water is generally 2 to 3 ft. in depth, or 27,000,000 gallons a day. It is covered below the reach of frosts; and the surface works are carefully guarded by fences from injury by cattle. It passes through 16 tunnels in rock, varying from 160 to 1,263 ft., with a total of 6,841 ft. In Westchester co. it crosses 25 streams 12 to 70 ft. below the line of grade, besides numerous small brooks furnished with culverts. Harlem River is crossed upon High Bridge in two 48 inch mains, 12 ft. below the level of the grade of the aqueduct, and furnished with gate chambers at each end. This bridge is of granite, 1,450 ft. long, 21 ft. wide between the parapets, 100 ft. above the surface of high tide to the crown of the arch, and 114 ft. to the top of the parapets. It rests upon 15 arches, 8 of which are of 80 ft. span and 7 of 50 ft. Upon one of the piers is inscribed the following record of the construction of the bridge:—

AQUEDUCT BRIDGE.		JOHN B. JERVIS, Chief

The aqueduct of masonry is continued from the bridge 2 mi. to the Manhattan Valley, a depression which is 4171 ft. wide and 102 ft. deep. This is crossed by an inverted siphon of iron pipes 4,180 ft. in length, with a gate chamber at each end. The masonry is then resumed, and the aqueduct is carried 2,178 ft. to the receiving reservoir in the Central Park, crossing in this distance the Clendening Valley, 1,900 ft. across and 50 ft. deep, on an aqueduct, with archways for three streets, each of which has 30 ft. span for carriage way and 10 ft. spca on each side for foot passengers.

The receiving reservoir in the Central Park is 1,826 ft. long, 836 ft. wide, covers an area of 3,505 acres, and has a capacity of 150,000,000 gallons. The banks are of earth, 18 ft. wide at top, and rise 9 ft. above the level of the water. The pipes pass through brick vaults. A new reservoir is now under construction adjacent to the former ones, and also upon Central Park. It will cover an area of 106 acres, and will be surrounded by an earth bank of irregular outline, which will constitute a broad promenade. The distributing reservoir at Murray Hill, between 40th and 42d Sts. and 5th and 6th Avenues, is a stone structure in 2 divisions, designed to contain 36 ft. or 20,000,000 gallons. Its surface is 115 ft. above mean tide.

A survey of the Croton Valley was begun in 1857, with the view of ascertaining its topography minutely, the better to decide upon future reservoirs or other structures as they may be found necessary. The ridge line or watershed inclosing the valleys above the dam is 101 mi. in length. The stream is 39 mi. in length, and its tributaries 136 mi. The total area of the valley is 552 square mi.; and within it are 31 natural lakes and ponds, many of which are available as reservoirs, and 36 of which have been minutely surveyed and estimated. The cost of the work was $5,575,000, including water rights and land, besides $1,800,000 for distributing pipes. The expense came within 5 per cent. of the estimate of Mr. Jervis, the Engineer. The annual interest, amounting to $665,000, is paid by direct water taxes and by some indirect taxes; and a sinking fund is provided for the final liquidation of the debt. The construction of this work has lowered the annual rates of fire insurance about 40 cts. on every $100 insured. Sing Sing Prison is supplied from the aqueduct as it passes near that place.

The amount of pipe laid in different years has been as follows, up to 1859:—

The Almshouse Department is under the charge of a Board of Ten Governors of the Almshouse, generally known as the "Ten Governors." The department was organized under an act of April 6, 1849, and was modified the succeeding year. This board has charge of the Almshouse, of the Relief and Support of the Poor, of the County Lunatic Asylum, of the Nurseries for Poor and Destitute Children, the Penitentiary, and all the city prisons and houses of detention, except the sheriff's jail in Elbridge Street and the House of Refuge. All ordinary appropriations for this department must be submitted to a board consisting of the President, of the Boards of Aldermen and Councilmen, the Mayor and Comptroller.² If this board approves, it reports to the

The revenues from water rents from Oct. 5, 1842, to Dec. 31, 1858, have amounted to $3,725,947.98; and the amount has increased from year to year except,—in 1851 and 1856, when it fell off.

The public sewers connected with this department since Feb. 6, 1846, have incurred an expenditure of $1,352,713; and the amount of $248,572.00 has been collected from permits to connect premises with the public sewers. The length of sewers constructed by this department since its organization in 1849 has been 92 mi. 1,340 ft.

The Governors of the Almshouse are elected by single ballot, one being voted for and two elected. This places the board above the control of party politics.

Public measures for the relief of the poor are among the first necessities of a civilized government; and one of the earliest statutes of the General Assembly in 1683 was for this object. In 1693 a law was passed for the relief of the poor at their homes; and about 1714 the first almshouse was built, on the present site of the City Hall. In 1795 a lottery of £10,000 was granted for a new almshouse, and the large brick building on the Park near Chambers St. (burned in 1854) was erected. In 1811 a tract on the East River, at the foot of 26th St. was bought; and the first stone was laid Aug. 1, 1811. The present main edifice at Bellevue Hospital was opened April 22, 1816, as a hospital, penitentiary, and almshouse, at a cost of $121,103. The management was for many years intrusted to five commissioners appointed by the Common Council. In 1822 the average number of paupers was 1,547 and the cost of the establishment for several years was as follows:—

In 1817.....	$90,886	In 1820.....	$84,420
" 1818.....	107,600	" 1821.....	85,000
" 1819.....	105,509	" 1822.....	82,200

The law then required paupers to be returned to the town where they had gained residence; but this was often difficult and vessels then, as since, often landed paupers in or near the city from distant places. In 1822 two vessels put about 100 paupers on shore a few miles from the city, and brought on their baggage. Efforts were made to remedy these abuses; but it was found difficult in a large population to distinguish those coming into the city liable to public charge, until they applied for relief in the early winter months.—Sen. Doc. No. 86, 1824.

Meanwhile the affairs of the institutions at Bellevue became very corrupt and mercenary; but a malignant fever which broke out in 1825 and committed frightful ravages in the filthy wards and loathsome cells forced the question of reform upon the public. In 1845 the Almshouse was placed under the care of a single commissioner, and in 1849 the present system of supervision went into operation.

Blackwells Island was bought in 1828, and Randalls Island in 1836. In 1843 the Almshouse was completed on the former and the whole of both islands are now devoted to objects of charity and reform, Randalls Island being in part under the care of the Governors of the Almshouse and in part under the Trustees of the House of Refuge.

Upon Blackwells Island, commencing at the south end, are located respectively the Small Pox Hospital, the Penitentiary, Island Hospital, female and male Almshouses, Workhouse, and Lunatic Asylum. Upon Ward's Island is the Potter's Field, under the charge of the Ten Governors; and upon Randalls Island are the extensive nurseries and hospitals for poor children. Bellevue Hospital, the largest in the city, remains under the charge of the Governors as a fever, surgical, and general hospital. The Colored Orphan Asylum, Colored Home, four city prisons, and the out-door poor, are also under the care of this department. A short sketch of these several charges is essential to a full knowledge of the city.

Bellevue Hospital is 350 ft. long, the center portion 5 stories high and the wings 4 stories. Upon each story are verandas and outside stairways of iron. Its arrangements throughout are ample and judicious, and it can accommodate 1,350 patients. It has a clinical theater fitted up for the accommodation of large classes of students. In 1858 the number of prescriptions was 145,603; and the number of births is about 850 annually.

The results of its operation during 10 years have been as follows:—

The Small Pox Hospital, Blackwells Island, was commenced April 1, 1854, and was finished in the same year. It is built, in the English gothic style, of stone quarried upon the island. It is 104 ft. by 44, 3 stories high, and cost $38,000. It is not designed for the treatment of paupers only, but is fitted up with express reference to receiving persons able and willing to pay for their treatment, and where, excluded from friends to whom they might impart their disease, they may receive every attention that science and the most attentive nursing can bestow. It is the only hospital of the kind in or near the city, and takes the place of some old wooden buildings previously erected on the island.

Its statistics have been as follows:—

The Penitentiary, opposite 55th St., is built of heavy stone and rubble masonry. It consists of a middle building, 65 by 70 ft., and two wings, each 50 by 200 ft., making the whole length of the building 465 ft. A new wing was finished in 1859; and another is needed for the accommodation of the inmates. The total number of cells is 1,736. The convicts are employed as occasion requires in quarrying and dressing stone for buildings upon the island, and as blacksmiths, shoemakers, carpenters, weavers, coopers, painters, wheelwrights, &c. This establishment was finished in 1848,—since which time there have been admitted and discharged the following number:—

Much the largest number of convicts are received from the police courts; over a third are females, and a very large proportion are foreigners. Over half are committed for petit larceny; and the next largest number for assault and battery. The term of sentence is usually 1, 2, 3, 4, or 6 months; and but very few are sentenced to 1 year and upward. The longest term of years reported in 1858 was 10, and this in only a single instance.

The Island Hospital, Blackwells Island, was first erected in 1843, under the name of the "Penitentiary Hospital." Its name was changed Dec. 15, 1857. The building was found to be constructed in a most reckless and careless manner, and as a public building was a reproach to any city. It continued in use, however, until destroyed by fire, Feb. 12, 1858. At the time of the fire it contained 600 inmates; but they were all removed without loss of life. In Feb. 1858, a most humane regulation was adopted, by which the suffering poor are relieved without being committed as vagrants. The building now in the process of erection to supply the place of the former is 3½ stories high, includes 14 wards and accommodations for 744 patients. As on other buildings on the island, convict and workhouse labor is largely employed in the erection. The statistics of the hospital have been as follows:—

Almshouses.—Of these there are two separate and similar structures, 650 ft. apart, entirely distinct in their arrangements, and each devoted to one sex only. They are each composed of a central building 50 ft. square, 57 ft. high to the roof, and 87 ft. to the top of the cupola, and two wings, each 60 by 90 ft. and 40 ft. to the roof. They are devoted to the care of the aged and infirm, and present the following result of operations:—

YEARS.	Admitted.	Discharged.	Remain- ing.	Died.
1849	1,672	1,115	1,197	95
1850	2,355	1,995	1,304	169

Less than one-fourth of the whole number thus thrown upon the charities of the city are of native birth; and more than one-half are females. The present almshouses have been in use since 1848.

Workhouse.—This establishment was authorized by act of April 11, 1849, and grew out of a recommendation of the Prison Association of New York, in which the Society for Improving the Condition of the Poor concurred. A plan for buildings was adopted the succeeding season, and work was begun Oct. 3, 1849. The N. wing, 3 stories high, has 150 rooms, opening upon galleries around a common central hall, and capable of lodging 600 persons. At the S. end is a cross arm 4 stories high, containing workshops. A central building contains the residence of the Superintendent, the kitchen, storerooms, offices, chapels; and a S. wing, for females, is constructed upon the plan and of the size of the N. wing. This establishment was designed for those able to work and who, not finding means of support, were willing to be committed, as well as such paupers, vagrants, and others as might be deemed fit subjects for employment. The males are usually kept employed as circumstances permit, in quarrying and grading, and as carpenters, coopers, wheelwrights, painters, boat builders, blacksmiths, tinsmiths, shoemakers, and tailors. The females are employed in knitting, sewing, and other light occupations. This institution has scarcely resulted in the benefits anticipated, and of all the charities under the care of the Governors is perhaps the only one that might possibly be dispensed with. It is found impracticable to keep all hands profitably employed; and the name of "workhouse" loses its terrors when coupled with the idea of leisure hours, comfortable quarters, and sufficient food.

Its statistics have been as follows:—

YEARS.	Admitted.	Discharged.	Remain- ing.	Died.	YEARS.	Admitted.	Discharged.	Remain- ing.	Died.
1850	757	504	328	28	1855	4,447	4,482	956	41

The number discharged does not include those escaped or sent to other institutions.

The Lunatic Asylum, near the N. end of Blackwells Island, consists of an octagonal building 80 ft. in diameter and 50 ft. high with a cupola and two wings at right angles to each other, each 245 ft. long. One wing is devoted to each sex; and the arrangement of the wards admits of classification. Apart from this, on the E. side of the island, is a building of stone, 59 by 90 ft. and 43 ft. high with a veranda on each side, which is exclusively devoted to the noisy and violent class, where they cannot disturb the more quiet. This structure is named "The Lodge," and, for obvious reasons is not usually open to visitors. The Lunatic Asylum proper was begun in the spring of 1835, and after some months of suspension, the work was resumed in 1837, and the W. wing was finished June 10, 1839. The S. wing was built in 1847; and this, with "The Lodge," was finished in 1848. The statistics during 10 years have been as follows:—

YEARS.	Admitted.	Discharged.	Remain- ing.	Died.	YEARS.	Admitted.	Discharged.	Remain- ing.	Died.

This institution is admirably managed; but the proportion of recoveries is necessarily less than in those asylums in which only recent cases are admitted and the patients discharged when there is no longer a hope of recovery. This is, in one sense, an asylum of the incurable.

The Potters' Field, on Randalls Island, was placed under the charge of the Governors of the Almshouse June 19, 1850; but its location and quality of soil were made a subject of complaint, and it was repeatedly presented by grand juries. A tract of 69 acres was purchased on Wards Island, and brought into use in June, 1852, since which time the former field has not been used. About 2,500 interments are made annually at the public charge.

The Nurseries and Nursery Hospitals on Randalls Island consist of about a dozen detached buildings, not arranged on any systematic plan. The grounds are inclosed and of ample extent; and a farm is connected with the institution, which goes far toward furnishing it with culinary vegetables. The institution is provided with ample schools and playgrounds. The numbers remaining here at the beginning of 1859 were 88 men, 96 women, 833 boys, and 303 girls. The children are indentured, given for adoption, or returned to friends, as circumstances warrant.

The Colored Orphan Asylum was begun in the fall of 1836, and was incorporated April 16, 1838. It is situated on 5th Avenue, between 43d and 44th Sts. and is under the immediate charge of lady managers, who report to and receive funds from the Governors of the Almshouse Department. The numbers remaining at the close of the several years since, under this arrangement, have been as follows:—

1849	150	1854	237
1850	176	1855	233
1851	201	1856	234
1852	207	1857	225
1853	219	1858	219

In 22 years it has received in the aggregate 970 colored orphans. This institution is partially supported by benevolent contributions and partially by occasional appropriations from the State.

The Colored Home, on First Avenue, between 64th and 65th Sts., has 44 lots of ground, on which substantial buildings are erected. It was originally intended as a House of Industry. In Oct. 1858, the foundations of a new building were laid, 90 ft. by 40, with a corridor from 6 to 12 ft. wide on the S. side, extending from each wing of the present building nearly 120 ft., so that access may be had from all parts of the house without exposure to the weather. It contains departments for males and female hospitals, home for the aged and infirm, schools, and lying-in and nursery accommodations. This is also under the immediate care of lady managers, and is sustained by contributions, legacies, and grants from the State. In point of order and neatness it equals any hospital in the city. The male hospital usually has about 30 inmates, the female hospital 75, the lying-in department 40, and the home of the aged 150. The average number of births is about 90 annually.

The City Prisons—four in number, under charge of the Governors—are situated as follows:—

The Halls of Justice, or "Tombs," is situated on Center St. between Leonard and Franklin. A portion is occupied by courts and prisons for persons awaiting sentences. The house

The Commissioners of Emigration were incorp. by an act of May 7, 1847, and consist of 6 commissioners appointed by the Governor of the State, the Mayors of New York and Brooklyn, and the Presidents of the German Society and the Irish Emigrant Society. They have charge of the Marine Hospital at Quarantine, the Emigrant Depot at Castle Garden, and numerous buildings on Wards Island for the accommodation of the sick.¹

The Law Department is under a chief officer called the "Counsel to the Corporation," elected for three years. He has charge of all the law business in which the city is interested, when so ordered by the corporation, and institutes all legal proceedings necessary for opening and widening of streets. He draws all leases, deeds, and other papers connected with the finances of the city. This department has a Bureau of Corporation Attorney, and another of Public Administrator.

The City Inspector's Department is under a chief officer styled the City Inspector, who has cognizance of all matters affecting the public health, pursuant to the ordinances of the Common Council and the lawful requirements of the Commissioners of Health and of the Board of Health. It has a Bureau of Sanitary Inspection and Street Cleaning, of Records and Statistics, and of Superintendent of Markets. Coroners report to this department all inquests made by them. The Inspector is required to report all births, marriages, and deaths, taken place within the city. He also appoints 2 Inspectors and Sealers of Weights and Measures, who hold office upon the same terms as Chiefs of Bureaus. One Street Inspector is appointed to each of the 22 wards, 1 clerk to each of the 11 markets,² and a keeper and assistant to each of the corporation yards.

of detention adjacent is an isolated building, containing 148 cells.

The Jefferson Market Prison, at the corner of Greenwich St. and 6th Avenue. This was enlarged in 1856, and 36 new cells built.

The Essex Market Prison, at the corner of Grand and Ludlow Sts., was completed in 1857.

The Prison at Yorkville was abolished in March, 1856; but it has since been revived.

The commitments during the year 1858 were as follows:—

The Outdoor Poor receive aid upon application at the office of the Governors, in the Rotunda, on the Park. These poor are under the care of a superintendent and visitors; and some of the principal items for a series of years have been as follows:—

leased in 1856 to the Commissioners of Emigration as a landing place for emigrants.

The Emigrant Refuge and Hospital, upon Ward's Island, consists of several large buildings for hospitals, nurseries, and other purposes, located upon a farm of 106 acres. The total number of emigrants who have arrived in the port of New York since 1846 have been 2,486,463, distributed as follows:—

1847.....	129,061	1851.....	289,515	1855.....	136,233
1848.....	189,176	1852.....	300,992	1856.....	142,342

1850.....	212,796	1854.....	318,458	1858.....	78,689

The greater number of these proceed to their destination without exp-nc to the Commissioners.

The Marine Hospital is noticed under Richmond County. See page —.

² The Markets of New York are owned by the city, and leased in small portions to occupants. They are as follows:—

- Catherine*—Catherine St., East River.
- Center*—Grand and Center Sts.
- Clinton*—Washington and Canal Sts.
- Essex*—Grand and Ludlow Sts.
- Franklin*—Old Slip, East River.
- Fulton*—Fulton St., East River.
- Gouverneur*—Water, corner of Gouverneur St.
- Jefferson*—Sixth Avenue, corner of Greenwich Avenue.
- Tompkins*—Third Avenue and Sixth St. (now building of iron.)
- Union*—Second and Houston Sts.
- Washington*—Fulton St., Hudson River.

The principal market for wholesale is the Washington Market, and thither most of the teams from the surrounding country resort for the sale of their produce. The principal fish market is adjacent to Fulton Market, where facilities are provided for unloading fishing vessels. The immense supply of animal food required by the population of New York has led to enormous investments of capital for the production, and corresponding arrangements for the bringing forward, of this class of provisions. Cattle are now seldom driven to market on foot. Illinois is the greatest beef producing State in the Union, and its market cattle are brought by R.R., stopping on the way only 3 or 4 times to rest and feed. About $12,000,000 are annually expended by New York and its suburbs for beef alone. The measures taken for supplying the city with fish, oysters, and game are correspondingly great, and have each in their several departments led to organized systems for furnishing their proportion with great regularity and in quantities proportioned to the demand.

The markets for live stock in New York are provided entirely by individual enterprise; and the principal ones are now on 44th St. and 5th Avenue. The great market days are Tuesdays and Wednesdays; and, since supplies can reach the city at all seasons with equal facility, the amount is distributed throughout the year in a proportion nearly uniform. This market occupies 14 acres, and is 150 yards, and, with its stalls, can accommodate 5,000 bullocks, and an equal number of sheep and calves. The largest hog markets are at the w. end of 40th St., and on the Hudson, at the foot of 37th St. There are 2 other market places,—one on 6th St. E. of 3d Avenue and one in Robinson St., where nearly 450,000 sheep have been sold, besides cows and calves. There are also extensive markets at Bergen Hill.

The Judiciary Department comprises the First Judicial District of the Supreme Court of the State, with 5 justices, the Superior Court, with a chief justice and 5 justices, the Court of Common Pleas, with 3 justices, the Marine Court, with 3 justices, and the Surrogate's Court. The criminal courts consist of a Court of Oyer and Terminer, held by a justice of the Supreme Court, a Court of General Sessions, held by the Recorder or city judge, Courts of Special Sessions held by the police justices, 4 Police Court, and 6 Justices' or District Courts.

The burials from the city are regulated by law and none can take place without the certificate from the Inspectors' Department, and a record of the time, cause, and circumstances of the death, as far as can be ascertained.¹

The Board of Health consists of the Mayor and Common Council. The Mayor is President. The Mayor, Presidents of the two branches of the Common Council, and the Health Officer, the Resident Physician, the Health Commissioner, and the City Inspectors, are constituted a Board of Commissioners, who render advice to the Board of Health. The Health Officer is appointed by the Governor and Senate. The Mayor, with the advice of the Board of Aldermen, appoints an Inspector of Vessels. It is the duty of the Board of Health to watch over the health of the city and port, and conduct and attend to the business of the Quarantine establishment.²

Ferries are established from New York to Brooklyn, Jersey City, the islands, and to numerous points around the harbor. Up to 1810 the ferry boats were propelled by horse and man power; but during that year steam was introduced, and now it is exclusively used on all important routes. A few of the islands are approached only by row boats.³

The number of animals sold during 5 years at the New York live stock markets has been as follows:—

YEARS.	Horses on sale market days.	Total No. of horses sold in the city.	No. of cows.	No. of veals.	No. of sheep.	No. of swine.	Total No. of slaughtered animals.
1854	115 846	169,864	13 131	68 584	555,474	252,323	1,058 690
1855	97,654	185,574	12,110	47,969	588,741	318,107	1,147,509
1856	125,505	187,067	12,857	43,081	402,739	315 011	1,001 655
1857	116 516	162,243	12,840	34 218	444,036	288 9 4	940 819
1858	144,749	191,374	10,128	37,675	447 445	551 479	1,238,101

The number of bullocks from the several States sending to this market, in 1858, was as follows:—

	No.	Weekly Average.	No.	Weekly Average.
New York	30,980	595	Virginia	895 17
Pennsylvania	1,664	45	Connecticut	590 11
Ohio	4,389	84	Texas	1,214 23
Indiana	11,130	214	New Jersey	603 11
Illinois	52 818	1,015	Iowa	2,724 52
Kentucky	9,409	181	Michigan	1,682 32

The mode of reaching market was as follows:—

Bullocks, by Harlem R. R.	10,558
" Hudson River R. R.	50,916
" New York & Erie R. R.	93,821
" on foot	2 863
Swine, by New York & Erie R. R.	301,671

The above statistics do not include barreled beef and porks and animals slaughtered elsewhere and sent thither for sale. In some seasons over 3,000 sheep are slaughtered per week, at Albany, for the New York market, and the amount from other places is very large.

¹ The Burial Places of New York were originally around the churches; and in 1822 there were 22 places of interment s. of the City Hall. The practice was found to be offensive to the senses and prejudicial to the public health, and was accordingly prohibited in the older parts of the city. The plan of marble cemeteries within the city was proposed, and two were constructed between 2d and 3d Sts. and the Bowery and 2d Av. These contained 234 and 156 vaults respectively, were built entirely of stone, and intended to receive each a large number of bodies. The plan was found unsuccessful, and soon after was superseded by that of rural cemeteries. This appropriate custom, introduced at Greenwood in 1842, has led to the laying out of many similar grounds, each rivaling the other in beauty of location and in plans for the adornment of the resting places of the dead. The principal of these are Greenwood, Cypress Hills, Evergreens, Mount Olivet, Calvary, Citizens' Union, Friends, Shearith Israel, and Washington, on Long Island; Trinity, on New York Island; Beechwood, at New Rochelle; Dale, at Sing Sing; Oak Hill, at Nyack; and Maipetah, in Westchester co.; and New York Bay and others, in New Jersey. The Pottery Field belonging to the city is on Waris Island. By an ordinance of Feb. 3, 1851, no burials are allowed s. of 86th St.; and Trinity Church Cemetery, embracing 23 1/2 a. between the Hudson and 10th Av. and 153d and 155th Sts., is the principal one now in use on the island. It was purchased to 1842.

² Pestilence has on several occasions committed frightful ravages among the population of the city. Among these visitations the following are worthy of record:—

- 1702.—A pestilence, probably yellow fever, was brought from St. Thomas, of which 500 died up to Sept., and 70 more during the first week of that month, out of a population of 6,000 to 7,000.
- 1732.—In autumn an infectious fever prevailed, of which 70 died in a few weeks.
- 1743.—A "bilious plague" broke out, of which 217 died in one season. It was confined to swampy ground. This is the first official report on mortality to the Mayor.
- 1745.—Malignant yellow fever prevailed.
- 1747.—The bilious plague re-appeared.
- 1791.—The yellow fever prevailed, of which 200 died.
- 1794.—Yellow fever again appeared, occasioning much alarm,—though only 20 to 30 died.
- 1795.—The yellow fever prevailed, carrying off 730, of whom 500 were foreigners recently arrived.
- 1796.—A malignant fever prevailed, from filling in of docks, 23 of which 70 died.
- 1797.—The yellow fever occasioned 45 deaths.
- 1798.—Memorable for its pestilence—probably yellow fever,—which appeared in New York in the first week in August, and proved fatal to 2,086 persons, of whom 1,110 were men 589 women, and 885 children.
- 1799.—Yellow fever again prevailed, but much less aggravated.
- 1801.—About 160 died of yellow fever.
- 1803.—From 600 to 700 died in New York of yellow fever.

Since this year regular statistics of mortality for the city are preserved for each year, from which it appears that yellow fever in 1815 destroyed 270, and in 1822, 166; and that cholera destroyed 3 513 in 1832; and in 1834; 5,371 in 1849; and 374 in 1852. The mortality tabes show during the 50 years ending with 1853 a total of 364,638 deaths.

³ The ferries running to and from New York are under the exclusive jurisdiction of the corporation, and derive their authority by lease usually for a term of years. The following is a summary of those now running:—

- Staten Island Ferry*, from Whitehall St. to Quarantine, Clifton, and Stapleton. Also extends to New Brighton, Factory Village, and Port Richmond. It is leased to Staten Island & New York Ferry Co. until 1865, at an annual rent of $5,100.
- Hamilton Avenue Ferry*, from Whitehall St. to Hamilton Av., Brooklyn, 1,765 yards in length, is leased to the Union Ferry Co. until 1861.
- South Ferry* from Whitehall St. to Atlantic St., Brooklyn, and Long Island Rail Road, Brooklyn, 1,476 yards in length, is leased to the Union Ferry Co.
- Wall Street Ferry*, from Wall St. to Montague Place, Brooklyn, 1,150 yards in length, belongs to the Union Ferry Co., and is leased until 1862, at an annual rent of $5,000.
- Fulton Street Ferry*, from Fulton St. to Fulton St., Brooklyn, 730 yards, belongs to the Fulton & Union Ferry Co., and, including the South and Hamilton Avenue Ferries, rents for $35,000. It is leased until 1861.
- Peck Slip Ferry*, from Peck Slip, foot of Ferry Street, to South 8th Street Williamsburgh, 2,800 yds., is leased to J. V. Meresrole & Co. until 1869, at an annual rent of $21,000.

The facilities for passing from one point to another in the city are numerous, cheap, and convenient, and the establishment of all of them is so recent as to be within the memory of every adult citizen. They consist of 5 city rail roads and 29 lines of omnibuses.¹

Since the introduction of rail roads and the multiplication of steam ferries and steamboat routes, a large number of persons transacting business in the city have been enabled to provide residences in the country adjacent, where they can enjoy the comforts and luxuries of a rural home without a sacrifice of business interests. A large proportion of the inhabitants of Brooklyn, and great numbers residing within 30 mi. of the city, on Long Island and Staten Island and in the adjacent parts of Westchester county and New Jersey, are in this manner closely identified with the business of the city, and might in one sense be included in its population. The interests of New York and of its immediate suburbs are thus so blended that they virtually constitute one great metropolis, and would probably at this time number, within a radius of 10 mi. from the City Hall, about a million and a quarter of inhabitants.²

The institutions of New York designed to meet the intellectual and social wants of the people in extent and variety have no equals in America; and many of them surpass all similar institutions in the world. These institutions, noticed under special heads, are devoted to education, both general and special, to benevolent objects in various forms, to religion and morality, to intellectual culture, and to the promotion of the useful and fine arts. These institutions do not strictly all belong to the city, nor do they adequately represent the wants of the city population. Many of the schools and other institutions in the city, from their peculiarities and excellence, attract great numbers from abroad; and, on the other hand, a great number of educational institutions in the adjoining counties depend for support almost entirely upon city patronage. A reciprocity of interests between city and country is thus kept up in intellectual as well as in business affairs.

The Public School System of New York now constitute one of the most important interests of the city, both in regard to their effect upon the social position of the people and in the amount of their annual expenditures. There were reported, at the close of 1858, a free academy³ for the complete collegiate educations of boys, 4 normal schools for the instruction of teachers, 57 ward schools, including 51 grammar schools for boys, 48 grammar schools for girls, and 55 primary

The Union Ferry Co. owned on the 1st of Nov. 1858, eighteen boats, valued at $139,800.

Some of the principal facts concerning the city rail roads are as follows:—

Cars run at frequent intervals and use horse power. Fare, uniformly 5 cts.

Second Avenue extends from Peck Slip, through Pearl, Chatham, Bowery, Grand and Chrystie Streets and 2d Avenue to 23d Street; thence to 42d Street. Returns through 2d Avenue, 23d Street, 1st Avenue, Allen and Grand Streets, Bowery, Chatham, Oliver, and South Streets.

Third Avenue extends through Park Row, Chatham, Bowery, and 3d Avenue, to 61st Street, Yorkville.

New York & Harlem R. R. extends through Park Row, Centre, Broome, and Bowery Streets to 4th Avenue, and up to 42d Street, where locomotive trains stop.

Sixth Avenue extends through Vesey, Church, Chambers, W. Broadway, Canal, Varick, and Carmine Streets, and 6th Avenue, to 14th Street.

Eighth Avenue extends through Vesey, Church, Chambers, W. Broadway, Canal, and Hudson Streets and 8th Avenue to W. 5th Street.

Ninth Avenue, track laid but not used.

The Hudson River R. R. and New Haven R. R. run no city cars.

The omnibuses all have the names of their routes pointed upon the outside. The rates of fare are 4, 5, or 6 cts., which is paid with regard to distance traveled upon or within them. Licenses are granted annually; and in 1858 439 stage licenses were taken at $2, and 5 out-of-town lines, at $5 per stage, amounting in the aggregate to $1035. All other conveyances for public hire are also licensed, the number in 1858 being, hacks, 442 and special hacks, 321.

Most of the suburban districts of New York within this State are particularly noticed in this work in the counties and towns in which they are located. Jersey City, which has grown up within a few years, had, in 1855, 21,715 inhabitants. It is the terminus of the New Jersey R. R., connecting with Hudson and the Union R. R., connecting with the New York & Erie and the Northern New Jersey R. R. It is the landing place of the Canal steamer, the seat of important manufactures, and the residence of multitudes doing business in New York City. Hoboken City is also a place of considerable importance from its proximity to the city. It had, in 1855, 6,727 inhabitants. Hudson City, in the rear of these, had 3,322 inhabitants; and numerous other places along the Hudson in N. J. are receiving attention as desirable places for homes.

³ The Free Academy was established by an act of May 7, 1857, subject to a popular vote which gave 19,414 for and 3,490 against the measure. An edifice in the Gothic style of the townhall of the Netherlands, 48 by 100 ft., was erected on Lexington Avenue, corner of 23d Street, in 1848, with accommodations for departments for both sexes; 35 primary schools, 42 evening schools, of which 23 are for males and 19 for females, and 11 corporate schools.¹ In the same year there were employed 1,729 teachers, —of whom 440 were males and 1,289 were females.

The Public Schools are managed by a Board of Education, consisting of two commissioners from each ward. The local affairs of each ward are managed by local Boards of Trustees. The present system was organized under an act of 1812; but it has been modified by various acts since. In 1853 the Public School Society was dissolved and the schools under its control were merged in the ward schools of the city. The Board of Education distributes its duties among committees, and appoints a City Superintendent to exercise a general supervision over the schools.²

Academies and Colleges. There are in the city 3 academic institutions, 2 colleges, 4 medical colleges, 2 theological schools, and a great number of schools for perfecting students in special branches of education.³

1,000 pupils. The cost of the grounds, buildings, furniture, apparatus, and library was $100,801.48; and the cost of maintenance to Jan. 1, 1859, was $38,238.17. The students and the graduates in each year have been as follows:—

	1849.	1850.	1851.	1852.	1853.
Students.....	201	285	383	498	536
Graduates.....	17

Graduates.....	20	32	20	21	25

Applicants for admission to this school must reside in the city, be 14 years of age, and must have been students in the common schools 12 months, and must sustain an examination in the ordinary English studies. The school has a 5 years' course of study, and its graduates receive the degree of A.B. Several medals and money prizes have been endowed, and societies of students and alumni have been formed.

¹ The number of pupils in 1858 was as follows:—

Evening schools, about.	20,000

² The "Free School Society," afterward the "Public School Society," was founded in June, 1805, and its first school was opened May 17 1806. During its long career this honored society disbursed millions of dollars of public money, afforded education to 600,000 children, and fitted 1200 teachers at its normal schools. It twice tendered its property to the city authorities to satisfy a popular objection that so much property should not be managed by a corporation; but in both instances the tender was declined. After the society was dissolved, its books and papers were deposited with the New York Historical Society. Its real estate used for school purposes consisted of 15 public schoolhouses, a trustees' hall on Grand Street, and a workshop on Crosby Street.—Dissolution of Pub. School Soc. and Rep. of Com., p. 7.

The 11 corporate schools share in the public money, but are in no sense under the care of the Board. The expenses of the public schools in 1858 were as follows:—

Salaries of teachers and janitors.....	$ 556,415.93
New schoolhouses, repairs, purchase of new sites..	228,810.13
Fuel.....	25,217.08
Books, stationery, and apparatus.....	105,328.31
Salaries of superintendents, clerks, and officers of the board.....	23,398.51

Columbia College was chartered as "King's College" Oct. 31, 1754, and under the Colonial Government was aided by a lottery, grants of lands, and liberal private donations from England. A plot of ground between Murray, Barclay, Church, and Chapel Streets was given by Trinity Church for the college site, and the corner stone was laid July 23, 1756. The building was finished in 1759, and during the Revolution it was used for a hospital. In 1792 the trustees established a medical school, and sustained it until 1813. The college remained in its first location until the premises were greatly enhanced in value by the growth of the city and the spread of commercial establishments around and beyond it. An act was passed March 19, 1857, authorizing the purchase of another site for college purpose, in accordance with which the grounds at the foot of Park Place were sold for $596,650, the college still retaining many lots on Barclay Street, Park Place, Murray Street, and College Place, which are rented for long periods, and whose prospective value it is impossible to estimate. The premises lately owned by the Trustees of the Deaf and Dumb Asylum on 49th Street, near 4th Avenue, were purchased, with 4 other lots, for $75,366.10, and fitted up at a total cost of $114,336.01. This change is understood to be only a temporary one, the ultimate intention being to locate on the premises of the Botanical Garden, between 47th and 51st Streets, on 5th Avenue. This Garden, originally embracing about 20 acres, was laid out by Dr. David Hosack, early in the present century, for the introduction of exotic plants, experiments in agriculture and horticulture, and the promotion of science. The Governor, in his message of 1806, commended the object as worthy of public attention. In 1810 a memorial from the corporation of New York, the County and State Medical Society, and the Governors of the New York Hospital was addressed to the Legislature, in pursuance of which the Garden was purchased for $73,000, upon the appraisal of 3 commissioners, and the Governor in charge of the Regents of the University. The latter placed it in the hands of the Trustees of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, April 1, 1811. In 1814 it was granted by the Legislature to Columbia College, upon the condition that within 12 years the College should be removed thither; but in 1819 this condition was rescinded, and $10,000 was given to the College to aid in extending the premises upon the original location. These grounds have also increased greatly in value, and the College is at this moment perhaps the wealthiest in the Union, with this important feature: that its wealth is not coupled with irksome conditions and provisions, but left free to the discretion of its trustees. A grammar school has been many years connected with the College.

The University of the City of New York, located on the E. side of Washington Square, occupies a fine marble building of the English collegiate style of architecture. It is 100 by 200 ft. on the ground; and besides the portion occupied by the College, it contains rooms leased to societies, artists, and professional persons. This College grew out of a discussion with regard to a University on a more extended plan than any in the Union. A convention of literary and scientific gentlemen was held in the fall of 1833, and in that year a subscription was opened to raise $300,000 for the establishment of a University. An unhappy controversy arising directly upon the appointment of a chancellor, the institution did not attain the pre-eminence to which it aimed. Its course of study is essentially the same as that of other American colleges.

The College of Physicians and Surgeons is located on 23d St. and 4th Avenue. The site and grounds are leased with privilege of purchase, and funds derived from the proceeds of the sale of the building on Crosby St., formerly owned by it, have been raised to effect the purchase. The edifice now used is 75 by 100 ft., and is valued at $30,000. The first story is leased for stores. The College was incorp. by the Regents in 1807, by virtue of an act passed March 21, 1791. Lectures were first held in 1807-08. The Medical Department of Columbia College was merged in this Nov. 1, 1813. The College has 2 courses of lectures annually, and a library of 1200 volumes.

The University Medical College, formed under an act of Feb. 11, 1837, as a branch of the University of New York, is located on 14th St. between Irving Place and 3d Avenue. The building is 80 by 103 ft., 4 stories in front and 5 in rear, and is valued at $50,000. Its charter provides that 5 students of the Free Academy shall be admitted free of charge except the matriculation fee. Its library contains 5,000 volumes, and its museum is valued at $25,000. Two courses of lectures are delivered annually.

The New York Medical College, located on E. 13th St., was incorp. in 1850. The college building is 60 by 120 ft., and is valued at $70,000. It has a 5 months' course of lectures annually. Ten students are admitted upon payment of $20 and matriculation fee.

The Metropolitan Medical College, located at 68 E. Broadway,

In addition to the schools sharing in the distribution of the school fund, there are a great number of mission, charity, parish, denominational, and private schools, of which no reports are made collectively to the public. Many of these have special courses of study, or are limited to objects not embraced in a general plan of education. Several of these are numerously attended; and in some the extent of the course of study is equal to that in our colleges.¹

About 250 periodicals, embracing daily, tri-weekly, semi-weekly, weekly, semi-monthly, monthly, and quarterly, are issued in the city of New York, counting under one title the several editions issued from the same press, unless bearing different names.²

was incorp. March 28, 1857. It has 2 courses of lectures annually.

The New York Preparatory School of Medicine, incorp. April 13, 1859, has not been fully organized. Its charter allows it to confer the degree of Bachelor of Medicine upon persons of not less than 19 years of age after sustaining an examination in the studies embraced in its course, and places it under the visitation of the Regents.

The College of Pharmacy, chartered April 25, 1831, has rooms in the New York Medical College, at which lectures are delivered 4 months annually, on Chemistry, Materia Medica, and Botany, and diplomas are given. By an act of March 11, 1839, a diploma from this college is necessary for a person not otherwise duly qualified to act as an apothecary in the city.

The New York County Medical Society was formed July 12, 1806, and now numbers 450 members.

The Pathological Society for improvement in medical practice meets semi-monthly.

The Academy of Medicine was formed in 1847 and incorp. in 1851. It meets monthly at the University, and sends 5 representatives to the State Medical Society. There are several other medical and surgical societies in various parts of the city.

The General Theological Seminary of the Prot. E. Church of the U. S. was established at New Haven in 1819 and removed to this city in 1822. It was incorp. April 5, 1822, and is well endowed. Its library numbers over 12,000 volumes. It occupies 2 handsome stone buildings, each 50 by 110 ft. on 20th St., between 9th and 10th Avenues. Its trustees consist of the Bishops of the U. S. and others appointed in proportion to moneys granted to the seminary.

The Union Theological Seminary (Presb.) was founded in 1836, and incorp. March 27, 1839. It is located in Waverly Place, on 8th St., and near Washington Square. It has a library of 16,000 volumes. Its Board of Directors are clergymen and laymen, an equal number of each, elected for 4 years.

Commercial colleges, writing schools, and studios for instruction in the fine arts, are numerous in the city. The School of Design at the Cooper Union is eminent among these for the extent of its facilities and the numbers that avail themselves of them. Music, drawing, and painting are carefully taught in many of the city schools; and the facilities at the Free Academy for these studies are superior to those in most other institutions.

¹ The Protestant Episcopal Public School was founded in 1710, and has continued until the present time. At some future time it will be largely aided by a bequest made Sept. 20, 1796, by Dr. John Baker, who, having no heirs, devised his country seat near 80 St., on the East River, embracing 46 acres, for a charity school. With a prudent forecast, the testator preserved the property from sale until after the death of 9 persons then living; and the dense part of the city has already approached the premises. An act passed April 16, 1859, authorized the sale of portions, but no benefit has hitherto been received. In April, 1863, 3 of the 9 lives were existing.

The following are the principal of the Roman Catholic schools:—

The College of St. Francis Xavier, 39 W. 15th St., is an institution under the care of 10 Jesuit priests.

Convent of the Most Holy Redeemer, in 3d St., is under the care of 7 priests of the Order of Redemptorists.

St. Vincent's Academy, 44 2d St., is under the care of the Brothers of the Christian School, in Manhattanville, and the Academy of the Holy Infancy, in Manhattanville, and the Convent and Academy of the Sacred Heart, in Manhattanville, are under the charge of the Ladies of the Sacred Heart; the latter has 190 pupils. An institution of the same name at 49 W. 17th St., under similar direction, has 86 pupils.

Mother House and Academy of Mount St. Vincent, on 105th St., upon the premises of the Central Park, has 180 pupils.

St. Mary's School, at 229 East Broadway, is under the charge of Sisters of Charity, and has 108 pupils.

St. Peter's School, at 16 Barkley St., is under the charge of Sisters of Charity, and has 80 pupils.

St. Joseph's School, on 6th Avenue, is under the charge of Sisters of Charity.

St. Lawrence School, Yorkville, is under the charge of Sisters of Charity, and has 40 pupils.

St. Stephen's School.

St. Vincent's School has 80 boys and 50 girls; and 65 girls in the preparatory department.

Free Catholic Schools.—There are 25 schools of this class reported in the city; at which 4,920 boys and 5,530 girls are taught. Most of the schools have male and female departments; and of these 7 are taught by Brothers of the Christian Schools, 9 by

Sisters of Charity, 2 by Ladies of the Sacred Heart, 2 by Sisters of Notre Dame, 1 by Sisters of Mercy, and 1 by lay teachers. Of several of the teachers are not specified. These schools are named St. Patrick's, St. Mary's, St. Joseph's, St. James's, St. Francis Xavier's, Manhattanville, St. Bridget's, Transfiguration, Mount St. Vincent, St. Lawrence, Sacred Heart Free School, St. Catharine's, Most Holy Redeemer's, St. Alphonso's, St. Vincent de Paul's Nativity, St. Columba, Holy Cross, St. Stephen's, St. John the Evangelist's, St. Paul's, Immaculate Conception, St. Nicholas, St. Francis's, and St. Johns's.

² New York Gazette, the first paper published in the Colony of New York, was commenced in 1725 by William Bradford. It was the fifth then in existence in the American Colonies. Bradford continued its publisher about 17 years. In 1742 its name was changed to the New York Gazette and Weekly Post Boy, and it was published by James Parker and a succession of owners until 1778, when it was discontinued.

New York Weekly Journal, the second paper in the Colony, was commenced in New York in 1733 by John Peter Zenger. He died in 1748, and the paper was conducted by his widow, and afterward by his son, until 1752, when it was discontinued. This paper opposed the administration of Governor Cosby and supported the interest of Rip Van Dam, who had previously conducted the administration. The ballads, serious charges, and, above all, the home truths in his democratic journal irritated Cosby and his council to madness. Zenger was confined several months by order of the Governor and Council for printing and publishing seditious libels, treated with unwarrantable severity, deprived of pen, ink, and paper, and denied the visits of his friends. The popular feeling, however, was strongly against these proceedings. The Assembly, notwithstanding the application of the Governor, refused to concur with him and his Council. The Mayor and the magistrates also refused to obey the mandate of the Governor and Council, to attend the burning of the libelous papers "by the common hangman and whipper, near the pillory." The grand jury manifested equal intrepidity, and ignored the presentment against Zenger. The attorney general was then directed to file an information. The judges refused to hear and allow the exception taken by Zenger's counsel, and excluded them from the bar; but he was ably defended by other counsel, and especially by Andrew Hamilton, then an barrister of Philadelphia. Zenger pleaded not guilty. His counsel admitted the printing and publishing of the papers, and offered to give their truth in evidence. The counsel for the prosecution then said, "The jury must find a verdict for the king;" and gave the usual definition of a libel, asserting that "whether the person defamed was a private man or a magistrate, whether living or dead, whether the libel was true or false, or whether the party against whom it was made was of good or evil fame, it was nevertheless a libel." He then quoted from the Acts of the Apostles and from one of the Epistles of Peter, to show that it was a very great offense to speak evil of dignities, and insisted upon the criminality by the laws of God and man of reviling those in authority, and consequently that Mr. Zenger had offended in a most notorious and gross manner in scandalizing his Excellency our Governor, "who," said the counsel, is the king's immediate representative, and supreme magistrate of this province." Mr. Hamilton remarked in his reply, that we are charged with printing a certain false, malicious, seditious, and scandalous libel. The word false must have some meaning; or else how came it there? and he put the case, whether if the information had been for printing a certain true libel, would that be the same thing. "And to show the court that I am in good earnest," said he, "I will agree that if he can prove the facts charged upon us to be false, I will own them to be scandalous, seditious, and a libel." He then further offered that, to save the prosecution the trouble of proving the papers to be false, the defendant would prove them to be true. To this Chief Justice De Lancey objected, "You cannot be admitted to give the truth of a libel in evidence: the law is clear that you cannot justify a libel." Mr. Hamilton maintained that leaving the court to determine whether the words were libelous or not rendered juries useless, or worse. "It was true," he said, "in times past it was a crime to speak truth, and in that terrible court of Star Chamber many worthy and brave men suffered for so doing; and yet even in that court and in those bad times a great and good man durst say, what I hope will not be taken amiss in me to say in this place, to wit:—The practice of information for libel is a sword in the hands of a wicked king and an arrant coward to cut down and destroy the innocent. The one cannot, because of his high station, and the other dare not, because of his want of courage, defend himself in another manner." The jury, after a short consultation returned a verdict of not guilty, to the great mortification of the court and of Zeigler's persecutors. But with great satisfaction to the people. Such was the struggle which the press had to maintain only one hundred years ago, and only forty years before the Revolution gave to its freedom the sanction of Government and the impress of authority.—Introduction to the Nat. History of the State by Wm. H. Seward.

The Benevolent Institutions of New York are numerous, and comprehend measures for the relief of nearly every variety of human suffering or misfortune. Those under the direct charge of the city have already been noticed. The greater part of other institutions of like character are under the management of companies incorporated for limited and special objects. Prominent among these are the hospitals and dispensaries, affording relief to every class of the sick and distressed. Up to 1857, at these various institutions, 179,377 persons had been vaccinated; 1,666,559 patients had been treated; and $297,761.60 had been expended. The Legislature usually appropriates money to several of these institutions.¹

Several of the more important of the benevolent institutions of the city are supported wholly, or in part, by the State, among which are the Deaf and Dumb Asylum,² the Institution for the Blind, and the Society for the Reformation of Juvenile Delinquents.

The New York Evening Post was commenced in 1746, but was soon discontinued.

The New York Mercury was commenced by Hugh Gainne, and continued by him 31 years. It was discontinued at the close of the Revolutionary War.

The New York Gazette was commenced in 1759 by Wm. Wyman. It continued irregularly until 1767, when it was discontinued.

The American Chronicle was commenced by S. Farley in 1761, and was discontinued the next year.

The New York Packet was commenced in 1763. It had only a brief existence.

The New York Journal and General Advertiser was commenced in 1766 by John H. H.

The New York Chronicle was commenced in 1768 by Alexander and James Robinson, and continued until 1772.

Rivington's New York Gazetteer; or, The Connecticut, New Jersey, Hudson's River, and Quebec Weekly Advertiser, was commenced in 1773 by James Rivington. This paper appeared during the Revolution as

The Royal Gazette, semi w., published by "James Rivington, printer to the king's most excellent majesty."

New York Packet and American Advertiser was commenced in 1776 by Samuel Loudon. No other papers appeared in New York until the close of the war.

¹ The New York Hospital, founded in 1770, was incorp. June 13, 1771, and is under the care of 26 governors. It has two very extensive establishments,—the hospital proper, upon Broadway, between Worth and Duane Sts., and the Bloomingdale Lunatic Asylum, on 117th St. near 10th Avenue. The first hospital, built in 1773-75, was burned. A new one was soon after begun, and while still unfinished was occupied by British and Hessian troops for barracks, and it was not finally opened for patients until Jan. 3, 1791. On the 14th of March, 1806, the Legislature enacted that $12,500 should be given to the hospital annually for 50 years, on condition that apartments for various forms and degrees of insanity should be prepared, and that an annual report be made to the Legislature. The sum thus appropriated was to be chargeable upon duties on ancient sales. In 1801 a lying-in ward was opened, and continued 20 years. In 1806 the lunatic department was organized, and one of the buildings of the present hospital was erected; but in 1816 a change of site was authorized. A library was founded in 1796, and a pathological cabinet in 1840; but a suitable building was not provided for the latter until 1856. In 1853 a new and spacious building, s. of the main hospital was erected, upon a plan the most perfect that experience could devise. It was finished in 1855, at a cost of $140,103.92. Clinical instruction, both medical and surgical, has long been given, and two operating theatres have been provided for this purpose. The hospital on Broadway is now limited to the receiving of cases of sudden injuries from accident, and non-contagious diseases in which there is prospect of improvement; and it is not intended as for the support of the incurable, or to supply in any sense the place of a poorhouse. Those received are either supported gratuitously, or pay at a rate barely sufficient to defray cost of support. The former constitute about 40 per cent. of the entire number treated. Seamen are received and their expenses are paid wholly or in part from the hospital money paid by the U. S. Government. From Feb. 1, 1792, to 1856, 106,111 patients had been received, of whom 77,390 had been cured and 4,768 relieved. Of the 10,532 who died, many were brought in from the street in a dying condition. Nearly 4,000 now receive the benefits of the hospital yearly.

The Lunatic Asylum, in 1818, was located at Bloomingdale. A building was commenced May 7, 1818, and was opened to patients in June 1821. The plan comprehends a center building, 211 by 60 feet, with 2 detached wings. A wing for the violent insane male patients was built in 1830, and another for the like class of females in 1837, making the whole cost, up to 1839, $20,000. In 1854 two spacious 2 story brick buildings were erected, at a cost of $52,000. From May, 1821, to Jan. 1856, 4,182 patients were received here, of whom 1,911 were cured, 851 improved, and 471 died. The grounds have an extent of about 40 acres, and are finely adapted to outdoor exercise in fine weather. The annual expense of both institutions is about $146,000.

St. Vincent's Hospital, at 102 and 104 E. 13th St., was established by, and is under the care of, Sisters of Charity.

St. Luke's Hospital is located at the corner of 5th Avenue and 54th St. The building was erected in 1854, and is designed to accommodate 230 patients.

Jews' Hospital is on W. 28th St., between 7th and 8th Avenues. The society was formed and a building erected in 1854. The hospital has received a bequest of $20,000 from the late Mr. Touro, of New Orleans.

Widows' Hospital, on Madison Avenue, was established in Feb. 1853, by Dr. J. Marion Sims, and incorp. April 13, 1857, under 27 governors.

New York Eye and Ear Infirmary, at the corner of 2d Avenue and 13th St., was incorp. March 24, 1822. The present building was completed in 1850, at a cost of $41,252.39, including the lot. It has since received appropriations from the city and State. Previous to 1856, 51,580 persons had received treatment in the institution.

New York Ophthalmic Hospital, on Stuyvesant St., was incorp. April 21, 1852, and opened May 25 following. A course of lectures upon diseases of the eye is delivered annually.

The Children's Hospital, on E. 51st St., near Lexington Avenue, was established for the cure of poor children otherwise destitute of aid. It is under the care of an association of ladies.

New Asylum for Lying-in Women, at 85 Marion St., is under the care of lady managers.

The New York Dispensary, on White, corner of Center St., was established in 1790, and incorp. April 8, 1795. It supplies the district s. of a line passing through Spring, Broadway, 14th, 1st Avenue, Allen, and Pike Sts.

The Eastern Dispensary, at 74 Ludlow St., was incorp. April 23, 1832. It supplies the district e. of the latter and s. of 14th St.

The Northern Dispensary, on Christopher, corner of 6th Sts., was incorp. Nov. 23, 1828, and opened in 1829. Its district lies w. of Broadway, between Spring and 23d Sts.

The Demilt Dispensary, on the corner of 23d St. and 2d Avenue, was incorp. May 7, 1851. It was f.unded upon the bequest of Miss Demilt, and cost about $30,000. Its district is e. of 5th Avenue, between 14th and 40th Sts.

North Western Dispensary, at 511 8th Avenue, was incorp. May 29, 1852. Its district is w. of 5th Avenue, between 23d and 60th Sts.

The German Dispensary, at 132 New Canal St., was organized in Jan. 1857. Professors of the College of Physicians serve gratuitously, and have distributed the labor into divisions.

The Homoeopathic Dispensary, at 59 Bond St., was established in 1855 by Dr. Otto Fulgraß, and is supported entirely by private subscription.

² The New York Institution for the Deaf and Dumb was incorp. April 15, 1817, and opened May 12, 1818. It was located in the "New City Hall" until 1839, when it was removed to E. 50th St., corner of 4th Avenue,—the premises now occupied by Columbia College. It there remained until the wants of the institution required more ample accommodations and the growth of the city suggested a retreat from the approaching pressure of business. A fine tract of nearly 4½ acres at Farwood, on the Hudson, on 164th St., was accordingly purchased, and the erection of buildings was commenced in 1853. They are in the aggregate 650 feet in length, and cover 2 acres. The institution has accommodations for 450 pupils. The work was sufficiently advanced to justify removal toward the close of 1856.

The city of New York has a large number of charitable corporations chiefly dependent upon private subscriptions for support; and their management is highly creditable to those who have bestowed their time and money for the relief of the suffering and friendless. Several of these have received aid from the State and the city in their organization and support.¹

The cost greatly exceeded the estimate; and under an act of April, 1837, the institution was assumed by the State, with all the property connected therewith. Pupils are received from every co. of the State, and to a limited extent from New Jersey. It is strictly an educational institution, and is designed to impart a useful amount of literary instruction, and the knowledge of some mechanical operation by which to gain support. Dr. Harvey P. Peet has been for many years President of the Institution.

The New York Institution for the Blind, incorp. April 21, 1831, was opened March 15, 1832, principally through the influence of Dr. Samuel Akerly, Samuel Wood, and Dr. John D. Russ. A school with 6 pupils was opened May 19, 1832, at 47 Mercer St., under Dr. Russ. By the aid of favors and donations from individuals and the city, a piece of ground and buildings on 8th Avenue were obtained of James Boorman at a nominal rent, with a covenant to sell. An instructor in the mechanic arts was procured, and in Dec. 2, 1833, the first public exhibition was held at the City Hall. The success in teaching from raised letters and characters, the proficiency of the 16 pupils in reading, geography, arithmetic, and especially in music, and the skill of their workmanship in coats, mattresses, and baskets, excited great interest. The present site, between 8th and 9th Avenues and 33d and 34th Sts., was purchased of Mr. Boorman at a reduction of more than $10,000 below what it could have been sold for; and on the 30th of April, 1836, $12,000 was given by the State, conditioned to the raising of $8,000 more by the managers. In 1839 $15,000 was given to erect buildings. Annual reports are made to the State Legislature. State pupils have been received since 1834; and for many years the institution has received pupils from New Jersey. The site, originally beyond the improved portion of the city, is now in the midst of a densely settled quarter, and the square which it occupies is valued at $400,000. The managers are endeavoring to obtain leave to sell and erect new buildings on the upper part of the island. The proceeds of the sale would, it is believed, procure new and superior premises without other aid. The institution now has 200 pupils, and employs 11 blind instructors and assistants. The manual trades taught are broom, mat, handbox, and mattress making and needle work. Musical instruction is received with great facility by the blind; and with those that evince decided talent it often becomes a means of support. Those of proper age are instructed in the common and higher branches of English education; and the number of books with raised characters now prepared for the blind is quite extensive, including the entire Bible, and volumes upon almost every branch of useful learning.

The New York Juvenile Asylum is intended to secure the maintenance and promote the welfare of children under 14 years of age who may be in destitute circumstances. It is auxiliary to the city government. This asylum was incorp. June 30, 1851. Its office is located at 23 W. 13th St. and its temporary asylum is at the foot of E. 50th St. A permanent asylum, erected on 17th St., near High Bridge, was opened April 2, 1856. This society takes children between 7 and 14 intrusted to them by parents, guardians, or other competent authority, and affords them the means of a moral and industrial education. A fund originally of $50,000, and afterward of $20,000 in addition, was raised by subscription, and to this $40,000 was added by the city. The total number sent to the house of reception up to Jan. 1859, was 4,893. Several companies of children are sent annually to the Western States, to be indentured to farmers and others, under the direction of a judicious person. Children are also bonded out in the city and vicinity as occasion offers. An act of March 25, 1856, directed a sum not exceeding $75 per annum to be levied by tax and paid to this asylum for each child committed by the city and supported by the society, and gave $20,000 toward the erection of a new house of reception on 18th St. The edifice is now nearly completed.

The Society for the Prevention of Puerperism, formed Dec. 16, 1817, after promoting the establishment of the first Savings Bank and other institutions of public utility, resolved itself into The Society for the Reformation of Juvenile Delinquents, Dec. 19, 1823, and measures were taken to carry the purpose implied by the name into effect. An act of incorporation was obtained March 29, 1824; and, having in that year raised $17,000 and obtained possession of the U. S. Arsenal near Madison Square, the establishment was opened Jan. 1, 1825, with 9 inmates. This place was burned in 1839, and the location changed to a building on the East River at the foot of 23d St., erected for a fever hospital. In 1851 the society exchanged a parcel of land it possessed on Wards Island for about 36 acres on the s. end of Randall's Island, where the corner stone of a new building was laid Nov. 24, 1852, by the Mayor. The buildings were opened Nov. 24, 1854. The male department will consist of a central building and 4 wings, of which 2 are parallel to the front of the center building, and form together with it a front of 590 ft. upon the river. The other two wings are to radiate from the center of the rear at angles of 60°; they have not yet been erected. The arrangement admits of the necessary classification and embraces every modern improvement. A workshop 3 stories high and 30 by 100 ft. is erected in the rear of each of the front wings. The female department, when completed, will be on a plan similar to the other, of 250 ft. front, and otherwise proportionally smaller. With the refuse stone obtained in excavation and grading, a sea wall was built out to low water mark; and some seven acres were thus added to the grounds. The entire cost, including the fitting up, to Nov. 1854, was $310,441.16, of which $14,199.39 had been for the Female Department. The whole number of inmates from its first opening to 1850 was 7,650; and at the beginning of that year it contained 463 boys and 77 girls. A female department is now in course of building, and when complete will afford to the whole a capacity for 1,000 inmates. Juvenile offenders from the several counties have been as follow:—

Of the cos. not enumerated, Westchester has sent 15, Ulster 11, Queens 10, Dutchess 9, Orange and Columbia each 8, Suffolk 7, Greene 6, Schoharie, Saratoga, and Oneida each 4, Monroe and Sullivan each 3, Otsego, Putnam, and Rockland each 2, and Erie and Richmond each 1. Of 2,641 received in 8 years, 2,039 were white boys, 439 white girls, 138 black boys, and 25 black girls; of native country, 1,545 were Irish, 445 American, 218 German, 150 English, 53 Scotch, 30 French, 10 Italian, 4 Swedes, and 1 each of Spanish, Polish, Russian, Prussian, Dane, Dutch, Welsh, and Belgian.

The Prison Association of New York, incorp. in 1846, for the relief and encouragement of discharged convicts, is elsewhere more fully noticed. It has a female department, organized in 1844, to provide employment to discharged female prisoners.

The Orphan Asylum Society of New York was incorp. April 7, 1807. It was located on the banks of the Hudson, near 40th St., in 1840. It has 9 acres of grounds and a building 120 by 60 ft., pleasantly situated. About 200 orphans are supported in the institution.

The Society for the Relief of Half-Orphans and Destitute Children was established Dec. 16, 1835, and incorp. April 18, 1837. It is located at No. 7 10th St., and is usually known as the “Protestant Half-Orphan Asylum.” It has received donations of $20,000 from John Hoshburg and of $5,000 each from James Boorman, John Jacob Astor, Peter G. Stuyvesant, and the daughters of John Mason. The whole number of inmates received up to 1850 was 1884, and the number then remaining was 126 boys and 101 girls.—Common Council Manual, 1859, p. 580.

The Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum, on Prince St., was incorp. April 23, 1836. It is under the charge of Sisters of Charity, and has 300 inmates,—all females.

St. Patrick's Orphan Asylum has a male and female department. The male department is on 51st St., and has 400 inmates; and the female department, Prince St., corner of Mott St., 300. They are both under the same trustees, and are managed by Sisters of Charity.

The Orphans' Home of the Protestant Episcopal Church, at 74 Hammond St., was incorp. April 16, 1838.

Leake and Watts Orphan Home is located at Manhattanville, between 9th and 10th Avenues and 11th and 12th Sts. This noble charity was founded by the bequest of J. A. Leake, and enhanced by the liberality of Mr. Watts, who waived a claim he had upon the legacy. It is incorp. under the general law.

St. Luke's Home for Indigent Christian Females is at 453 Hudson St.

House and School of Industry, at 100 W. 16th St., is for the gratuitous instruction of poor females in needle work.

Association for the Relief of Respectable Aged and Indigent Females is located at 20th St., between 24 and 3d Avenues.

Nursery for the Children of Poor Women, at 223 6th Avenue, is under lady managers.

Margdalen Female Benevolent Asylum, between 88th and 89th Sts. and 4th and 5th Avenues, is under the care of lady managers, has 40 inmates, and is designed to encourage reform in abandoned females.

American Female Guardian Society and Home for the Friendless, on E. 30th St., between 4th and Madison Avenues, was formed in 1834. It received by donations in 1857 and '58 $49,719.79. The home school had 108 girls and 112 boys, industrial school No. 1 340 girls, and No. 2 165 girls. It is managed and chiefly supported by ladies.

Numerous institutions of beneficence are established upon the principle of mutual support, all of which derive their means from fixed contributions of members. The number of these is very great, including many which are limited to particular nationalities and to certain mechanical or other occupations.¹

The city has a large number of religious associations and societies for the promotion of morality,—some national or cosmopolitan in their field of operation, and others local in their range. While some of these oppose vice and wrong in their widest sense, others restrict their efforts to narrower limits of labor and concentrate upon a single object the united efforts of their members. There are at present about 290 churches in the city of New York.²

The Literary and Library Societies of the city exert an important influence upon the intellectual condition of the people. Many of the libraries are extensive and are provided with

St. Catharine's Convent and House of Protection, on Houston St., corner of Murray St., is under the charge of Sisters of Charity.

New York Ladies' Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, on the site of the "Old Brewery," 61 Park St., was incorp. March 20, 1856.

St. Joseph's Asylum was incorp. April 15, 1859. It is designed to support and educate in some useful employment poor orphan, half-orphan, homeless, and neglected children, especially of German origin. It has 16 managers.

Five Points House of Industry is located on North St., Nos. 155, 157, 159.

Children's Aid Society, office No. 11 Clinton Hall, Astor Place, was formed in 1853. It has for its objects to provide homes and employment for destitute children, and, to a limited extent, to adults of both sexes. Up to 1858 it had provided homes for 3,576. In 1857 it sent 468 boys, 200 girls, 28 men, and 37 women to other States. It had opened 6 industrial schools, with a total of 968 pupils, maintained a lodginghouse for newboys and peddlars, at a low charge, and another one for girls, and had under its direction several boys' meetings and libraries. Its annual expenses are about $15,000, not including a large amount of gratuitous services.

New York Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor was formed in 1843, and incorp. Dec. 6, 1848. Its object is to afford temporary relief to such as do not come within the sphere of other existing charities, and to elevate the physical and moral condition of the indigent. To discourage indiscriminate almsgiving and street begging, it inquires through its visitors into the merits of applications, and for this end has a supervisory council of 5 to each ward, and as many visitors as may be needed. It is supported by annual donations and collections, and in the year ending Oct. 14, 1857, expended $41,480.88.

The American Bible Society, formed May, 1816, as a national institution, claims notice in this place from the spacious and elegant edifice which it has erected. This structure occupies three-fourths of an acre, and is nearly triangular, extending 198 ft. on 4th Avenue, 202 ft. on 8th St., 96 ft. on 3d Avenue, and 232 ft. on 9th St., with a court within. It cost nearly $300,000, and contains the offices of numerous religious and denominational societies. Its manufactory of Bibles and Testaments, when in full operation, employs 600 persons. A City Bible Society was formed several years before the one above noticed; and numerous kindred associations have been formed at different periods.

¹ Of this class are Masonic, Odd Fellows, and other secret societies who possess funds for the relief of the sick, the support of widows and orphans, and the burial of the dead. Others, limited to particular occupations, have been chiefly as follows,—some of these have been discontinued:—

The Marine Society of New York was created by patent April 12, 1770. It has for its principal object to collect moneys, by admission fees and yearly dues of members, for the relief of the widows and orphans of seamen. Up to 1826 it had distributed $88,100 for these objects. Its meetings are held at the United States Hotel, corner of Pearl and Fulton Sts.; and its chief importance now arises from the circumstance that its president is one of the trustees of the Sailors' Snug Harbor, on Staten Island. The importance of that noble trust will serve to perpetuate this society.

The New York Nautical Society was established in 1820 for charitable purposes and the promotion of useful improvements. Its members were those who had been shipmasters or commanders of vessels.

The New York Waterman's Society was formed in 1825, for benevolent purposes and the promotion of useful improvements in navigation. It is supposed to have been discontinued.

The Pilot's Charitable Society was formed in 1817, for benevolent and charitable purposes.

The Humane Society was formed in 1788.

The Association for the Relief of Disabled Firemen is a charity devoted to the objects expressed in its title.

General Society of Mechanics and Tradesmen was incorp. March 14, 1792.

The Mutual Benefit Society and the Mutual Aid Society of the City of New York are now extinct.

The House Carpenters' Society; the

New York Society of Journeymen Shipwrights; the Provident Society; and the Benevolent Society are charitable societies, from which we have no returns.

Manhattan Provident Society of the City of New York was formed Nov. 17, 1708.

Friendly Society of the Town of Harlem was formed Feb. 10, 1809.

New York Masons' Society was formed Feb. 20, 1807.

Saint David's Benevolent Society (Welsh) was formed in 1800. It was soon discontinued.

Albion Benevolent Society was formed about 1800. It was soon discontinued.

Ancient Briton's Benefit Society was formed about 1805, from the two latter, and incorp. Feb. 27, 1807. It continued until 1835, when the Saint David's Benefit & Benevolent Society was formed. It divided 3 years after; and in Jan. 1841,

Saint David's Benefit Society and

The Welsh Society were formed. These were merged in the Saint David's Benefit Society, which is still continued.

Saint Patrick's Society and the Hibernian Provident Society of the City of New York were formed in April, 1807.

Saint Andrew's Society (Scotch) was formed in 1756. Its anniversary is Nov. 30.

Caledonia Society of the City of New York was formed April 6, 1807.

Saint George's Society is a society of English.

Saint Nicholas Society (Dutch) is chiefly composed of the descendants of the old Dutch colonists.

New England Society holds its anniversary Dec. 22.

Besides, there are and have been a great number of societies and unions, particularly among the German, Irish, Italian, and other foreign classes, and among the Jews and other denominations, concerning which it is difficult to procure full statistics, or even the names. The "George Clinton Society," "Washington Benevolent Society," "Tammany Society," or "Columbian Order," (the latter founded in 1805, and still existing) are among those memorable for their political influence; the "Society of Cincinnati," for its revolutionary associations, and the "Wilberforce Philanthropic Society," "Manumission Society" of 1785, "Society for the Relief of Imprisoned Debtors," and a great variety of others, for their labors in the field of charities, but which have disappeared with the abuses they combated, and their elements re-organized under other names, for new labors which the misfortunes, vices, and crimes of mankind are constantly providing.

² The first church edifice was erected near the Fort, in 1663; and in 1642 was superseded by one built of stone within the Fort. The Reformed Dutch Church retained the ascendancy until 1664, when the chapel in the Fort was devoted to the English service. Trinity, formed in 1697, received grants of property from the Government, which, by the subsequent growth of the city have become enhanced in value beyond parallel in America, if not in the world. Its revenues are usually considered as adequate not only for the support of its several chapels and other edifices of worship, but for aiding liberally the poorer churches of this denomination throughout the country. Its income, already very large, will in a few years be greatly increased as leases at a low rate for long periods expire, and the property is again offered for lease. The property of the Collegiate Dutch Church is also of great value, and embraced only by that of Trinity Church. During the Revolution the Presbyterian and Dutch Churches were used by the British as riding schools, prisons, and for other military purposes. Within a few years next of the church buildings in the lower part of the city have been sold, their sites occupied for commercial purposes, and costly edifices of great architectural beauty have been erected "up town."

The following table shows some of the principal statistics of the churches in the city. The dates of first churches in the several denominations are given upon the authority of Greenleaf's History of the Churches of New York. The lists given by that author include several societies not owning church edifices, on which account the numbers are larger than those of the census:—

^b Several of these became Presbyterians.

^c Father Joques, a Jesuit, was the first Roman Catholic priest in New York. He suffered martyrdom at Caughnawaga, Sept. 27, 1642, at the hands of Iroquois. The first religious services of this Church were held by Father Farmer, of Philadelphia, about 1781-82. The first church was built in 1786, and named St. Peter. Its chief benefactor was Charles III., King of Spain, who gave $10,000.

¹ The New York Library Society was first started in 1700, when Rev. John Sharp, chaplain of Lord Bellemont, gave a collection of books to be styled the "Public Library of New York." The society was incorp. in 1752, and was organized under its present name in 1754. The library was mostly scattered during the Revolution; but its charter was revived Feb. 18, 1789, and the books as far as possible were recollected. It was at first kept in the City Hall. In 1793 it was removed to a building in Nassau St., afterward to Chambers St., and in 1840 to a new building corner of Broadway and Leonard St. It was afterward moved to the Bible House, and in 1857 to its present quarters, University Place, between 12th and 13th Sts. The library building is a fine edifice, and the library now contains 40,000 vols.

The New York Historical Society was organized Dec. 10, 1804, and incorp. Feb. 10, 1809. After occupying rooms many years in the New York University Buildings, it was removed in 1857 to a new, fireproof building on 2d Avenue, corner of 11th St., which was dedicated Nov. 17 of that year. This society possesses a library of 30,000 volumes, particularly rich in historical works and manuscripts, a choice gallery of paintings and collection of antiquities, coins, medals, and charts. Among its collections are a series of large tablets of Assyrian sculpture, the gift of James Lenox, Esq. Under a special act of April 12, 1856, the premises were made exempt from sale on execution, and the law is so framed that the society's property cannot be encumbered by mortgage. Regular meetings of the society are held on the first Tuesday of each month.

The Mercantile Library Association, at Clinton Hall, Astor Place, was organized in 1820, and has a library, reading room, lecture room, and cabinet. It was originally intended for the use of merchants' clerks, but is now accessible to all. Its library, especially full in periodicals, numbers 55,000 volumes; and the association has about 4,500 members. It formerly occupied the premises of Old Clinton Hall, on Beekman St., near the Park.

New York Law Institute, founded through the exertions of the late Chancellor Kent, was formed in 1828 and incorp. Feb. 22, 1830. It contains about 6,500 volumes, forming one of the most valuable and perfect collections of the kind in the United States. It is located at 45 Chambers St., to which place it was removed in 1855. Membership is confined to counsellors, solicitors, and attorneys. Judges of the Federal and State Courts, and strangers generally, are allowed to visit and use the library.

The Mechanics' Institute, located at No. 20 4th Avenue, was incorp. April 24, 1833. Its objects are to diffuse knowledge among the mechanical classes, to found lectures on natural, mechanical, and chemical philosophy, and scientific subjects, to open schools, and hold annual fairs. It has established classes in modelling, machinery, architecture, and ornamental drawing, a winter course of lectures, a reading room, and library of 6,000 volumes, all of which are free to mechanics, workmen, and apprentices of the city.

The Astor Library was founded upon a bequest of $40,000 made by John Jacob Astor in his will, Aug. 22, 1839. Its trustees organized in May, 1848, and employed Dr. Joseph G. Cogswell to visit Europe for the purchase of books. On the 10th of Dec. 1849, they adopted a plan for an edifice, 120 by 65 ft., which was opened to the public Feb. 1, 1854. On the 31st of Oct. 1855, Wm. B. Astor presented to the trustees a lot, 80 by 100 ft., adjoining the library, upon which has been erected a building similar to the first, the two forming the most spacious library rooms in America. The buildings will contain 200,000 volumes, and half that number are already in the library. This noble institution is situated on La Fayette Place, in a quiet quarter of the city, and is open to all without charge. Books are not allowed to be taken from the rooms. The trustees are required to report annually to the Legislature.

The Printers' Free Library, located at No. 3 Chambers St., was founded in 1823 by the New York Typographical Society, for the benefit of those employed in printing and binding books. It has 3,500 volumes.

The Apprentices' Library, at Mechanics' Hall, 472 Broadway near Grand St., is free to apprentices, and open to journeyman upon payment of $1 annually. It numbers 16,000 volumes.

The Library of the City Corporation, of Columbia College, of the Free Academy, of the several hospitals, of the medical colleges, of the theological seminaries, of the Bible Societies, and of several other institutions are extensive, and some of them are very valuable in their several departments.

The Cooper Institute, a fine edifice of brownstone, covers an entire block between 3d and 4th Avenues and 7th and 8th Streets. It was erected by Peter Cooper, Esq., at a cost of $300,000, to promote the advancement of science and a knowledge of the useful arts. The first and second stories are to be erected and the avails devoted to the expenses of the establishment. In the basement is a lecture room, 125 ft. by 82 ft., and 21 ft. high. The three upper stories are arranged for purposes of instruction, and contain a very large hall, with a gallery designed ultimately as a free public school. A school of design is in operation in these rooms, and is attended by some 50 young ladies under instruction in engraving, lithographic drawing, and painting. The design of this institution is eminently creditable to the enlightened views of its munificent projector, and will associate his name with those who have done much for the useful arts and deserved well of mankind. The building is known as "The Union," and is in accordance with an act of February 17, 1857. It has been placed in charge of trustees.

The American Institute was incorp. May 29, 1829, for the purpose of encouraging and promoting domestic industry in this State and the United States, in agriculture, commerce, manufactures, and the arts. It aims to promote these objects by an annual exhibition of machines and manufactures, the awarding of premiums, and the formation of a repository of models and a library of books relating to the useful arts; and for this purpose it may hold property producing an income of $30,000 per annum. It has been connected with its organization a farmers' club, which holds monthly meetings, and occasional cattle shows, plowing and spading matches, as its officers may direct. The annual fairs of the Institute were formerly held at Castle Garden, but in 1857 were transferred to the Crystal Palace, where its 30th fair was prematurely ended by the burning of the Palace Oct. 5, 1858. The amount awarded for premiums from 1835 to 1857, both inclusive, has been $52,829.31, distributed as follows:—

1835,	$ 779.00	1841,	$1,183.03	1847,	$2,592.78	1852,	$4,017.43

This society has successively occupied premises on Liberty St. near Broadway, at 41 Cortland St., 187 Broadway, the City Hall, corner of Anthony St., and 351 Broadway. The last named premises it now owns. In 1859 it removed to the Cooper Institute building. In 1835 it commenced the publication of a monthly journal that contained several volumes. The annual present century.¹ The completion of the Erie Canal gave an impetus to its growth and greatly increased its business transactions. The commerce of the city, without a parallel on the Western continent, has already been noticed in the general article upon the commerce of the State. The financial institutions are of a number and magnitude commensurate with its wants as the great center of commercial wealth in the nation.²

The manufactures of the city form one of the most important branches of the industry of the inhabitants. They embrace nearly every variety of article produced in the civilized world, and the aggregate capital employed is almost incalculable. The last State census reported 2,424 manufacturing establishments; and at the present time the number cannot be estimated at less than 3,500. In single instances the capital invested exceeds a million of dollars, and the number of persons dependent upon these large establishments for employment extends to several hundred. The above estimate does not profess to include the minor trades, in which little is invested beyond an industrial education and a small stock of implements and materials, but which in the aggregate amount to considerable sums. A large number of manufacturing establishments legitimately belonging to the city are located in the several suburban places for economy of rent and for room; and if these were added to those located in the city the aggregate would probably be nearly equal to that of the most noted manufacturing cities of Europe. The occupations of the people are various, and include nearly every kind of labor or handicraft anywhere pursued in the world.

The Public Buildings of New York are many of them elegant and substantial structures, combining strength and durability with architectural beauty. Among the most noted of these is the U. S. Custom House, the Merchants Exchange, and the City Hall.³

reports of the Institute to the Legislature since 1841 are voluminous and valuable.

The Lyceum of Natural History, located on 14th St., was incorp. in 1813. It has a large library relating to the natural sciences, and a cabinet. It was first opened in the rear of the City Hall; from thence it was removed to Stuyvesant Institute, and finally to its present locality.

The American Geographical and Statistical Society was incorp. under the general law April 30, 1852, and, after several years' sojourn in the University building, has recently been removed to Clinton Hall, Astor Place. It holds monthly meetings at the rooms of the Historical Society, and is forming an extensive and valuable statistical library. The objects of the society are expressed in its name. It publishes a monthly journal chiefly of original papers.

The New York Academy of Music, corner of Irving Place and 14th St., was incorp. April 10, 1852. The building is 121 ft. by 114 ft., and will seat 4,000 persons. It is richly decorated, and is constructed with express reference to fine acoustic effect. The cost is estimated at $350,000.

The city has about 15 theaters and a great number of minor places of amusement, generally of a special character and devoted to exhibitions of art, curiosities, and other objects of attraction. The first theater in New York was opened in Nassau St. Sept. 17, 1753, and the first play acted was "The Conscious Lovers."

There are 16 savings banks in the city, with an aggregate amount of $36,044,419 on deposit, and with $38,757,860 in resources.—Report of Sup't. Bank Department 1859: Assem. Doc., No. 87.

The first movement toward a savings bank was made Nov. 20, 1816, when at a public meeting the plan was discussed and approved. The first deposits were made July 3, 1819, and within six months $155,378.31 had been deposited by 1,527 persons, and of this sum $6,600 had been drawn. Up to 1857, $47,530,067.61 had been deposited in these institutions. They owe their origin to the Society for the Prevention of Pauperism.—Common Council Manual, 1858, p. 624.

The Clearing House Association was formed Oct. 1, 1853, for the purpose of facilitating the settlements of banks with each other. Its office is on Wall, corner of William St. The arrangements are so perfected that the entire daily settlements of all the banks in their immense transactions with each other are made in six minutes. The whole amount of bank funds which passed through this institution up to Aug. 31, 1858, was $30,875,935,556.56; and during that period, so perfect has been the system of balances, that the error of one cent has never been made.

Fire Insurance Companies, to the number of 75, with an aggregate capital of $17,554,000, are located in the city. Besides these, a large number of agencies for companies in other States and in foreign countries are established in the city. The amount of capital invested in marine, life, and other insurance companies is not known, as no general reports are published. A list of these companies is elsewhere given. There are also several trust companies, with large capital, and a very great number of companies, associations, and individuals engaged in the business of banking and exchange, of which no statistics are attainable.

The Chamber of Commerce was instituted in 1768, and incorp. by patent March 13, 1770. It probably owes its origin to the necessity felt toward the close of the colonial period, of concerted action to protect the interests of trade against the neuropations of the British Government. Its rights were confirmed April 13, 1784, and it has since continued in operation without material interruption. Its objects are to adjust disputes and establish equitable rules concerning trade, and to operate upon public sentiment in the procuring of such acts and regulations as the commercial interests require. Within a short time it has commenced the formation of a library of statistical and commercial works, and opened rooms sufficiently ample and convenient for the wants of the association. Its first report was published in 1850.

The Custom House, located on Wall St., on the site of the old Federal Hall, is a marble structure, in the Greek order of architecture, with a Doric portico at each end. It has a marble roof, and is fireproof throughout. It was commenced in May, 1834, and finished in May, 1841, at a cost of $950,000.

The Merchants' Exchange, on Wall St., built of Quincy granite, is 171 by 144 ft., and 77 feet high. A portico in front is supported by 18 Ionic columns, 38 feet high, each formed of a single stone weighing 45 tons. The rotunda is 80 ft. in diameter and 80 ft. high. The building is owned by an incorporated company, and cost over $1,000,000.

The City Hall, on the Park, is 216 by 105 ft., with two stories and a high basement. It is built in the Italian style, and is faced with marble except on the north side. It was begun Sept.

The Commercial Buildings and Private Residences of New York are many of them on a scale of great magnificence. The first of these are built of marble or a beautiful kind of brownstone; and in the upper part of the city are numerous streets which for miles present unbroken lines of palatial residences. Within the past few years a great improvement has taken place in the character of the commercial buildings erected, and many of them now in size and elegance have no superiors in the world.¹

The Bay of New York was first discovered by Henry Hudson, then in the employ of the Dutch East India Co., Sept. 12, 1609. A settlement was made upon Manhattan Island by a company of Dutch traders, under the auspices of the West India Co., in 1612; but no permanent agricultural occupation began until 1623. During this year 30 families of Walloons from the Flemish frontiers, and a number of domestic animals, were sent over to form the nucleus for the permanent occupation of the country. Sarah Rapelje, a child of one of these families, born soon after their arrival, was the first white child born in New York. In 1626, Peter Minuet, the first Dutch Governor of the colony, purchased Manhattan Island of the natives for $24, and during the same year he caused a fort surrounded by cedar palisades to be erected. A new fort was begun in 1633 and was finished 2 years after.²

The Colony of New Netherlands increased slowly; but in 1652 a feud arose between the company and settlers, which continued during the entire period of the Dutch occupation. The interest of the company was solely to make money by their operations; and they pursued their object by the ex-

26, 1803, and finished in 1812, at a cost of over half a million of dollars. The upper story and cupola were burned Aug. 17, 1858, and have not been rebuilt. It is occupied by the Common Council, County Clerk, and various city and county offices. The first City Hall, built in 1698, stood on the present site of the Custom House, at the head of Broad St.

The Hall of Records, on the Park, is chiefly interesting from its historical associations. It was formerly the debtors' prison, and in the Revolution it was the prison into which American prisoners were crowded, and from which great numbers were taken to execution. In 1832 it was a cholera hospital. The pillars upon the ends are of modern origin.

The Rotunda, on the Park, was built by John Vanderlyn in 1818, for the exhibition of panoramic views, and is now an office of the Almshouse. It reverted to the city at the expiration of a ten years' lease.

The Halls of Justice, or "The Tombs," on Center St., is a structure built of Maine granite, in the Egyptian style of architecture. It is a hollow square, 252 by 200 ft., with a large central building. It was erected in 1838. Executions take place in the open courts within its walls.

The New Armory, or Down-Town Arsenal, corner of White and Elm Sts., is 131 by 84 ft. and 2 stories high. It is built of blue stone, and is supplied with narrow windows for easy defense against mobs. It is used as a receptacle for a part of the artillery of the 1st Division N. Y. State Militia, and as a drill room.

An arsenal was built by the State a few years since, on ground now within the Central Park, and which has recently been sold to the Commissioners of the Park for 275,000. It was constructed very poorly, and was hardly finished before it began to tumble down. From a part of the proceeds of this property a new arsenal was built, in 1858, corner of 7th Avenue and 35th St.; but, before it was finished, the roof, constructed on a novel plan, fell in by its own weight on the morning of Nov. 19, 1858.

The Post Office occupies the old stone edifice of the Middle Dutch Church, on Nassau, Pine, and Liberty Sts. It is small and inconvenient, and poorly adapted for the purposes of a post office. In the Revolution the pews of the church were broken up for fuel, and the building was used as a prison, and at one time as a riding school. The project of a building for a post office on or near the Park has been agitated; but there is at present no arrangement tending to that result.

The Assay Office occupies an unassuming marble building adjacent to the Custom House, formerly one of the branches of the United States Bank. Its operations are elsewhere noticed. See p. —.

² The first fort was built in the rear of Trinity Church, near the river, and portions were found in 1751 by some workmen in digging through a bank. The next fort stood on what is now the Bowling Green, then a high mound of earth overlooking the bay and adjacent country. A threatened invasion by the forces of Cromwell, in 1663, led to the construction of an embankment and ditch across the then N. line of the city. This fortification extended along the present line of Wall St.; and from it that street derives its name. In 1692 a war with France occasioned a further attention to the defenses of the city, and led to the erection of a battery on the rocky point at the S. end of the island. A stone fort, with 4 bastions, afterward built at the same place, included most of the Government offices, and bore the name of the reigning sovereign for the time being. It remained until finally taken down in 1788. In the summer of 1776, while an attack was expected from the British army, the city was strongly fortified. On the S. point was the Graud Battery, of 23 guns, with Fort George Battery, of 2 guns, just above it and near the Bowling Green. McDougall's Battery, of 4 guns was built on a little hill near the North River, a little W. of Trinity Church. The Grenadiers or Circular Battery, of 5 guns, was above, and the Jersey Battery, of 5 guns, on the left of the latter. On the E. of the town were Counties Battery, of 5 guns on Ten Eyck's wharf; Waterbury's Battery, of 7 guns, at the shipyard; Badian's Battery, of 8 guns, on Rutgers Hill, near the Jews' burial ground; Thompson's Battery, of 9 guns, at Hoorners Hook, and the Independence Battery, on Bayards Mount, corner of Graud and Center Streets. Breastworks were erected in several places in the city, and fortifications were erected on Governors Island, Paulus Hook, (Jersey City,) Brooklyn Heights, and Red Hook. During the War of 1812-15 great apprehension prevailed at several times, and during the first year bodies of militia were stationed in New Utrecht and on Staten Island to repel any attempt on the part of the enemy to land. Subsequently, fortifications were begun at Harlem, and in Brooklyn volunteer companies were formed, and the citizens generally became familiar with the discipline of the camp and the duties of the soldier. In Aug. 1814, for the purpose of constructing a line of fortifications to prevent the expected approach of the enemy, it was arranged that 3 military companies of Brooklyn should turn out to work on Monday, 3 military companies and 1 fire company on Tuesday, the people of Bushwick on Wednesday, of Flatbush on Thursday, of Flatlands on Friday, of Gravesend on Saturday, of New Utrecht on Monday, and the Mechanics' Society of Brooklyn, the military exempts, and 2 fire companies, on Tuesday. The patriotic diggers crossed the ferries every morning with banners and music, and large parties worked in the night by moonlight. The citizens of New York were not behind their neighbors in patriotism, and numerous volunteer associations pressed their services upon the Committee of Defense, without regard to party or station in life, and the rich and the poor wrought together with the most patriotic emulation. Many gave money freely to the work, and these zealous labors continued so long as there appeared reason to anticipate danger. During the same month the General Government made a requisition for 20,000 militia from New York and New Jersey to repel an attack which was reported to be in preparation. The funds to meet the expenses were raised by the city, but were repaid by the General Government the next year. Four hundred heavy cannon were mounted on the various forts, and large quantities of ammunition were collected. The fleet in charge of Commodore Decatur was also prepared for the emergency; and it is probable that these prompt preparations saved the city from an attack. Toward winter the hostile fleet bore off to the south, and the enemy closed their operations before New Orleans. On "Evacuation Day" in 1814 the Governor reviewed 25,000 troops in New York,—a larger number than ever before or since mustered in one body in America.

ercise of an arbitrary power and without any regard to the prosperity of the settlers. This controversy tended greatly to develop democratic sentiments in the hearts of the people, and prepared them for the events which subsequently happened. In 1664 the colony fell into the hands of the English, and a new immigration took place, which materially changed the character of the population. A city charter, granted in 1652 and confirmed in 1686, secured many of the privileges since uninterruptedly enjoyed by the people, and formed the basis of all subsequent enactments. From the English conquest to the Revolution the history of the city is merged in that of the State and has no features of special interest.

Trade and commerce have been from the first the leading elements of the industry and wealth of the city, and in colonial times every measure of Government tending to embarrass trade occasioned great uneasiness. This city was among the first to feel the effects of the arbitrary measures of Great Britain, and was among the earliest to resist their tendencies.¹

The aristocratic element was probably stronger in this city than in any other part of America; and this was arrayed in favor of the British measures and against the "Sons of Liberty." Many prominent citizens, who had warmly sympathized with the popular movement in the hope of gaining redress of grievances by petition, at length yielded their opposition when there appeared no alternative but war, and continued active or quiet friends of the Royal Government while it lasted. Several members of the first provincial and continental Congress afterward became friends of the king. The British forces took possession of the city immediately after the battle upon Long Island, Aug. 26, 1776, and remained until Nov. 25, 1783. The anniversary of this last event, known as "Evacuation Day," is still held in grateful remembrance, and is usually celebrated by military parade or other ceremonies.

In 1785 the first Congress of the United States after the war met in this city and held its sessions in the City Hall, corner of Wall and Nassau Streets. In the gallery of this building, facing Broad St., Gen. Washington was inaugurated first President, April 30, 1789. The New York Legislature returned to this city in 1784 and continued its sessions with intervals until finally removed to Albany with the State officers in 1797. The Port of New York was made a port of entry soon after the peace. Its revenues were collected under the State Government till 1789, but have since formed a most important source of income to the Federal Government. The receipts from customs at this port considerably exceed those of all the other commercial cities of the Union together, and defray nearly one-half the expenses of the General Government. In the midst of its general prosperity the city has had seasons of adversity.¹ At different times destructive fires have

1765, "Sons of Liberty" were organized to oppose the Stamp Act.

1765, Oct. 31.—A committee of correspondence with other colonies was appointed.

1765, Nov. 1.—The Stamp Act took effect, and popular excitement became extreme. The Lieut. Governor was burned in effigy before the fort.

1765, Dec. 26.—The ship Minerva was boarded by the Sons of Liberty in search of stamp paper. The paper was traced to a brig soon after, and ten packages were seized and burned.

1766, June 29.—The Assembly petitioned for a bronze statue of Pitt to be erected.

1766, Oct. 18-22.—The liberty pole on the Common (Park) was repeatedly destroyed, and there was imminent danger of a collision between the populace and the troops.

1770, Jan. 13.—New attempts were made to destroy the liberty pole, and the soldiers became riotous.

" Jan. 17.—At a meeting of 3,000 citizens, resolutions were passed not to submit to the acts of oppression.

" Jan. 18.—A collision took place between the soldiers and citizens at Golden Hill.

" Jan. 30.—The Corporation forbade the erection of a new liberty pole, and the people soon after planted one on their own land, inscribed "Liberty and Property."

" March 29.—Another attack was made upon the pole, which excited great indignation, and led to its being nightly guarded, until " May 3.—A committee of 100 was formed to resist the importation of goods under the obnoxious laws; but they receded from their purpose July 9, and agreed to import every thing but tea.

" Aug. 21.—A leaden equestrian statue of George III. was erected in Bowling Green. This statue was thrown down by the populace on the receipt of the Declaration of Independence, July 10, 1776. It was subsequently melted up into bullets in the family of Gov. Wolcott, of Connecticut. It is said that 42,000 bullets were made from the metal, and held did service against 400 British soldiers afterward sent into Conn. by Gov. Tryon.

1770, Sept. 7.—A marble statue of Pitt was placed in Wall Street, in gratitude for his services in the repeal of the Stamp Act. In consequence of the course of Pitt after he became Lord Chatham, this statue was mutilated by a mob May 21, 1772, and, having become an unsightly, headless trunk, it was removed under an act of March 7, 1788. It is now preserved in the Fifth Ward Hotel, West Broadway.

1773, Nov. 5.—The Committee of Vigilance denounced the importation of tea and agreed to resist its landing.

1774, April 21.—A vessel laden with tea arrived at Sandy Hook, but was not permitted to land; and in a few days it was sent back to London. About the same time, 18 chests of tea privately brought into port were destroyed.

" May 19.—A great meeting was held in the "Fields," at which stormy revolutionary resolutions were passed. A committee of 51 were appointed; but the next day a majority of them receded from their position, and the Whigs requested their names to be struck off.

1775, April 3.—The Colonial General Assembly finally adjourned.

" July 25.—Delegates were elected to the Continental Congress.

" Aug. 23.—Capt. Lamb was ordered by Provincial Congress to remove the cannon from the battery in the city for the forts in the Highlands. Resistance was offered from the Asia man-of-war, stationed off the battery; but 20 pieces—all that were mounted—were safely carried away.

² Two dreadful fires occurred while the city was in possession of the enemy. On the 21st of Sept. 1776, a fire spread from Whitehall Slip w. of Broadway, s. of Barclay Street, burning 492 houses, or one-eighth of the entire city. Another broke out on Cruger's Wharf, Aug. 7, 1778, which burned 300 houses in Great and Little Dock and the adjacent streets. Commissioners occurred, which have for a time seriously retarded business. Full statistics of the commerce of the city are given in the article, Commerce, page —.

List of Papers discontinued since the Revolution.

Since the Revolution, the following papers have appeared and been discontinued. The list is very imperfect; as, among the constant changes that are going on, it is impossible to ascertain precise data. It is possible that a few in this list may be still issued, and very probable that others may continue to exist under a different name:

NEW YORK STATE CAPITOL.
1837.

ELMIRA FEMALE COLLEGE.

in the spring of 1819, at Whitesville.¹ The first religious meeting was held at the house of Sam'l S. White, by Rev. Daniel Babcock, (Seventh Day Bap.,) Jan. 1, 1820.²

NEW HUDSON—was formed from Rushford, April 10, 1825, as "Haight." Its name was changed April 4, 1837. It lies upon the w. border of the co., a little n. of the center. The surface is a hilly upland, broken by valleys extending n. e. and s. w. The principal streams are Black, Oil, and Bush Creeks. The soil is a gravelly or clayey loam. McGrawville, (New Hudson p. o.,) on the n. line, contains a church, 2 sawmills, and 20 dwellings; Black Creek, (p. v.,) in the s. part, contains 2 churches and 30 dwellings. North Valley is a hamlet near McGrawville. The first settlement was made on Lot 49, in the s. part, by Spencer Lyon, from Waterbury, Vt., in 1820.³ The first religious meeting was held by Rev. James Eastwood, (M. E.,) at his own house, in 1821. The first church (Presb.) was formed with 6 members, by Rev. Robert Hubbard, June 4, 1822.⁴

RUSHFORD—was formed from Caneadea, March 8, 1816. New Hudson was taken off in 1825. It lies upon the w. border of the co., n. of the center. Its surface is a hilly upland, divided into two distinct districts by Caneadea Creek, which flows e. through near the center. The valleys of several smaller streams, tributaries of the Caneadea, divide the highlands into narrow ridges. The soil is a shaly loam underlaid by hardpan. Quarries of building stone, several sulphur springs, and a brown mineral paint resembling ochre are found in town. A woolen factory upon Caneadea Creek manufactures about 12,000 yds. of cloth annually; and a pineapple cheese factory turns out 70,000 lbs. of cheese annually. Rushford, (p. v.,) at the center of the town, contains 4 churches, the Rushford Academy, and several manufacturing establishments. Pop. 654. East Rushford (p. v.) contains several mills and 40 dwellings. The first settlement was made on Lot 30, in 1808, by Enos Gary, from Vt.⁵ The first religious meeting was held by Rev. Mr. Sanford, (Bap.,) in 1813; and the first church (Bap.) was formed in 1815, by Rev. Nathan Peck, a missionary from Boston.⁶

SCIO—was formed from Angelica, Jan. 31, 1823. A part of Amity was taken off in 1830, a part of Willing in 1851, and a part of Wellsville in 1855. It is an interior town, lying s. e. of the center of the co. Its surface is a mountainous upland, the highest summits being 700 to 1,000 ft. above the valleys. The streams are Genesee River and Knights and Vandemarks Creeks. The soil is principally a sandy loam. Scio, (p. v.,) on Genesee River, on the line of Amity, contains a church, several mills, and 496 inhabitants, 419 of whom are in this town. The first settlement was made at the mouth of Knights Creek, in 1805, by Joseph Knight and his son Silas, from Oneida co.⁷ The census reports 5 churches.⁸

WARD—was formed from Alfred and Amity, Nov. 21, 1856. It is an interior town, lying s. e. of the center of the co. The surface is a hilly upland, the highest summits being 500 to 800 feet above the valleys. The streams are Philips and Vandemarks Creeks. The soil is a clayey loam upon the hills, and a gravelly loam in the valleys. Philips Creek, (p. v.,) in the n. part, contains 2 churches and 16 dwellings. The first settlement was made in 1817, by Abraham Waldruff, from Ontario co.⁹ The first church (M. E.) was organized at an early period. There are now 2 churches; M. E. and Univ.

WELLSVILLE—was formed from Scio, Andover, and Willing, Nov. 22, 1855. It is an

¹ In the spring of the same year John Teater, from Dutchess co., David Wilson and Stephen Boyce, from Mass., settled in or near Whitesville. The first child born was Dugald C. White, Oct. 23, 1819; the first marriage, that of Daniel Remington and Eliza Eaton, Jan. 1, 1824; and the first death, that of Sam'l W. Goodrich, Jan. 27, 1822. The first school was taught at Whitesville, by Deherah Covel, in the summer of 1822. Sam'l S. White kept the first inn, in 1827, at Whitesville, and Josiah W. Green the first store, at Greens Corners, in 1822. Nath'l Covel erected a sawmill on Cyders Creek, in 1822; and Jas. Maxwell the first gristmill, at Spring Mills, in 1820.

² The census reports 5 churches; Bap., Seventh Day Bap., Presb., M. E., and Univ.

³ James Eastwood, John C. McKeen, and Jas. Davidson, from N. H., settled in the s. part in 1821. The first birth was that of Mary McKeen, in June, 1821; the first marriage, that of Earl Gould and Catharine Eastwood, in June, 1822. The first school was taught by Mrs. Graham McKeen, in the summer of 1821. Wm. Andrews kept the first inn, near Black Creek Corners, in 1826, and Nelson McCall the first store, near the same place, in 1830. The first sawmill was erected by James Davidson, on Black Creek, in 1829.

⁴ The census reports 4 churches; 2 Cong. and 2 M. E.

⁵ Chas. Swift, Abel Belknap, Amos Rose, and Joshua Wilson,

from New England, were settlers in the town in 1809-10; Levi Benjamin, from Windsor, Vt., settled on Lot 30, near Rushford Village, in 1813. Bethiah Belknap, born in the spring of 1810, and Sam'l Gordon, June 12, 1810, were the first births in town; Wm. Rawson and Lawrence Swift were the first married, in 1811. Plina Bannister taught the first school, near the center, in the winter of 1813-14. Levi Benjamin kept the first inn, a little n. of Rushford Village, in 1813, and Jas. McCall the first store, at the same place, in 1814. The first sawmill was built by Matthew P. Cady, on Caneadea Creek, in 1815; and the first gristmill, by Jas. McCall, on the same stream, in 1818.

⁶ The census reports 4 churches; Bap., Cong., M. E., and Univ.

⁷ Silas Bellamy and Silas Palmer settled in 1809,—the former at Scio Village and the latter in the n. part of the town. Polly, daughter of Silas Knight, was the first child born, in 1806, and the first one that died, in 1808; the first marriage was that of Silas Bellamy and Betsey Knight, in 1809. The first school was taught by Lucy Moore, near the village, in 1816. Alfred Johnson kept the first inn, in 1821. The first sawmill was erected in 1822, and the first gristmill in 1823, by Benj. Palmer.

⁸ 2 R. C. Cong, Bap., and M. E.

⁹ Daniel Hart and Hezekiah Ward settled in the n. part, in 1817-18. Geo. Waldruff kept the first inn, at Philips Creek Village, and Waldruff & Cartwright the first store.

interior town, lying s. e. of the center of the co. Its surface is very broken and mountainous, the highest summits being 800 to 1,200 feet above the valleys. The declivities are too steep for profitable cultivation. The streams are Genesee River and Dyke and Chenunda Creeks, all flowing in narrow and deep valleys winding among the almost precipitous mountains. The soil is mostly a sandy loam. Considerable pine lumber is still manufactured in town. Wellsville, (p. v.) on Genesee River, was incorp. Oct. 12, 1857; it contains 4 churches, 2 weekly newspaper offices, 2 flouring and 3 saw mills. Pop. 1,286. The first settlements were made in the valley of the Genesee, about the commencement of the century.¹ There are 4 churches in town.²

WEST ALMOND—was formed from Angelica, Almond, and Alfred, April 15, 1833. It is an interior town, lying a little n. e. of the center of the co. Its surface is a broken and elevated upland. The streams are Angelica, Black, Philips, and Karr Valley Creeks,—all flowing in narrow ravines bordered by steep hillsides. The soil is principally a clay loam underlaid by hardpan. West Almond (p. v.) contains a church and 15 houses. The first settlement was made at the center, in 1816, by Daniel Atherton.³ The first religious meeting was held by Rev. Robert Hubbard, (Presb.,) at the house of Daniel Dean, in 1823; and the first and only church (Bap.) was formed in 1824.

WILLING—was formed from Independence and Scio, Nov. 19, 1851. Alma was taken off in 1854, and a part of Wellsville in 1855. It lies upon the s. border of the co., e. of the center. Its surface is a broken and mountainous region, the highest summits being 800 to 1,200 ft. above the valleys. The streams are Genesee River, Cryder, Chenunda, and Fords Creeks, all flowing in narrow valleys bordered by steep mountain declivities. The soil is a clay and sandy loam. A considerable part of the surface is still covered with forests, and lumbering is extensively carried on. Beanville, (Shongo p. v.), on Genesee River, in the s. part of the town, contains a church and 61 inhabitants; and Halls Port, (p. v.), in the n. e. corner, a sawmill and 64 inhabitants. Elijah Robinson, from Brookfield, Madison co., settled on the Genesee, adjoining the State line, in 1825. He built a sawmill, made other improvements for four or five years, when he became deranged, and left the town.⁴ The first religious meeting (Prot. Meth.) was held at the house of Daniel Baker, by Rev. Seneca Fish, in 1834.⁵

WIRT—was formed from Bolivar and Friendship, April 12, 1838. It is an interior town, lying s. w. of the center of the co. Its surface is a wild, mountainous upland, divided into three general ridges extending n. and s. The streams are headwaters of Van Campens, Little Genesee, and Dodges Creeks. Richburgh, (p. v.), in the s. w. part of the town, contains 2 churches, the Richburgh Academy,⁶ 2 steam gristmills, 2 sawmills, and 50 dwellings. Wirt is a p. o., near the center of the town. The first settlement was made in the n. part of the town, in 1812, by Benj. Crabtree and Levi Abbott, from Amsterdam, Montgomery co.⁷ The first religious meeting (Bap.) was held at the house of Benj. Crabtree, in 1816, by Rev. Jonathan Post. The first church (Bap.) was organized in 1826.⁸

¹ The first child born was Rachel Dyke, in 1805; and the first death, that of Thos. Brink, in 1807. The first school was taught, near the e. line, by Ithamer Brookings, in 1814. Nath'l Dyke built the first grist and saw mill, in 1803, on Dyke Creek, near the e. line.

² Cong., M. E., Bap., and R. C.

³ Jason Bixby, Isaac Pray, and Daniel Hooker settled on the road leading from Almond to Angelica, and John Alfred, from N. J., near the n. line, all previous to 1818. The first child born was Jerusha, daughter of Daniel Atherton, in the fall of 1817; and the first death, that of Jason Bixby, in the spring of 1818. The first school was taught, in the e. part, by Jasper White, in 1818. Daniel Atherton kept the first inn, in 1817, at the center, and Samuel M. Eddy the first store, at the same place, in 1822. The first sawmill was erected by Enoch Hawks, on Angelica Creek, in 1833.

⁴ The first death was that of a child of Austin Butler, in 1837. The first school was taught near Beanville, in 1836, by Betsey

Lovell. Allen Gifford kept the first inn, in 1838, at Beanville, and Jas. R. Wood the first store, at the same place, in 1839. Elijah Robinson erected the first sawmill, near the Penn. line, on the Genesee.

⁵ There are 2 churches in town; M. E. and Univ.

⁶ This institution has lately been incorp. with the common school system.

⁷ Azel Buckley, from Unadilla, Otsego co., settled in 1814, and Daniel Willard, from Mass., in 1815. Mr. W. is the oldest settler now living in town. The first child born was Benj. Crabtree, jr., in 1813; and the first marriage, that of Hyra Axdell and Lucy Crabtree, in 1814. The first school was taught, in the n. part of the town, by Sophia Hitchcock, in 1820. Alvan Richardson erected the first sawmill, in 1824, and the first gristmill, in 1825, on Genesee Creek, near Richburgh. Mr. Richardson also kept the first inn, in 1824, and Francis L. Leroy the first store, in the same year.

⁸ There are 4 churches in town; Bap., F. W. Bap., Seventh Day Bap., and M. E.

QUEENS COUNTY.

THIS county was organized Nov. 1, 1683,¹ having previously been included in the North and West Ridings of Yorkshire.² Its original bounds have not been changed. It lies upon Long Island, near the w. extremity, is centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains — sq. mi. It extends across the island, bordering both upon Long Island Sound and the ocean. Its coasts are deeply indented by irregular inlets, bays, and harbors. The principal of these upon the sound are Oyster Bay, Cold Spring and Oyster Harbors, Mill Neck Creek, Hempstead Harbor, Manhasset Bay, Little Neck Bay, Little Bay, Powells Cove, Flushing Bay, and Bowers Bay. Upon the East River are Halletts Cove and the narrow passage of Hell Gate, and upon the s. shore, Jamaica, Hempstead, and South Oyster

Bays. Along these bays and the creeks that flow into them are wide salt meadows, the most extensive being upon the s. shore. Outside of the bays on the ocean side is a series of beaches and shifting sand-ridges, affording a complete protection from the storms of the ocean. These beaches are divided into distinct parts by several inlets opening into the bays.³

Inclosed in the bays within the beaches is a great number of low, marshy islands separated by narrow tidal streams and covered with sedges.⁴ A wide strip bordering immediately upon the bays is of the same marshy character. Along the deep bays upon the n. coast are small patches of salt meadow; but the greater part of the land upon the capes, necks, and promontories is of a most excellent character.⁵ A range of hills 100 to 200 feet high extends in a general e. and w. direction through the co., a little n. of the center, and irregular spurs extend northward to the sound. From the base of the ridge a wide, unbroken plain extends to the s. to the salt marshes which surround the bays.⁶

The streams of the co. are mostly small, and afford but a limited amount of water-power. At the mouth of several of the creeks on both the n. and s. shores the ebbing tide is used for hydraulic purposes. At the head of several of the streams are little, fresh water ponds,⁷ the principal of which is Success Pond,⁸ near the top of the high ridge in the s. e. corner of Flushing. The soil upon the n. side is a productive, sandy loam, in some places mixed with clay. The plains have a coarse, sandy soil, which is rendered productive only at considerable cost. Along the borders of the salt meadows is a strip of light, sandy soil, easily cultivated and of moderate fertility.⁹

The people are principally engaged in agriculture and market gardening. Fishing and the taking of oysters afford occupation to a large number of people. An extensive coasting trade is carried on, and the co. each year furnishes a large quota of sailors. Manufactures are extensive and various, and are confined principally to the n. shore.

The co. courthouse is situated upon the plains of North Hempstead, a little n. e. of Mineola station and p. o., and near the geographical center of the co.¹⁰

² By a convention held at Hempstead in 1685, Long Island, Staten Island, and a part of Westchester co. were erected into a shire called "Yorkshire," for the purpose of holding courts and administering justice. This was subdivided into "Ridings," known as "East Riding," (Suffolk co.) "West Riding," (Kings co., Staten Island, and Newtown); and "North Riding," (Queens co. except Newtown).—Thompson's Hist. L. I., P. 137.

³ The principal of the inlets are Hay Island, New and Gilgo Inlets, and the entrance into Jamaica Bay; and the principal beaches are Jones, Long, and Rockaway Beaches. The last named is a favorite resort for summer residences and sea-bathing.

⁵ A considerable portion of this coast is high, affording beautiful sites for country residences.

⁶ The e. n. at Jamaica is 45 feet above sea level. The ascent from Jamaica to Hempstead Junction is 59 feet, and from thence to the Syosset Branch 50 feet, making the latter 154 feet, which is the highest point on the road. The descent of these plains southward is so gradual as scarcely to be apparent.

The Hempstead Branch of the n. n. descends 40 feet in 2½ mi., and the Syosset Branch rises 66 feet in less than 4 mi. The highest point on the island is Harbor Hill, at the head of Hempstead Harbor, 319 feet above tide.

⁷ Several of these ponds have recently been purchased to supply the Brooklyn Waterworks.

⁸ Called by the Indians "Swout," from which the present name is supposed to be derived. The water is clear and cold, with an average depth of 40 feet. The pond is about 500 rods in circumference, is surrounded by a high bank, and has an outlet, but does not usually overflow. It is said to be 100 to 150 feet above tide.—Prime's Hist. L. I., P. 27; Thompson's L. I., II, P. 60.

¹⁰ The court of sessions of the "North Riding of Yorkshire" was located at Jamaica in 1683; and a building called the "County

The jail occupies a portion of the courthouse building.¹ The county records are kept in a spacious brick building in the village of Jamaica; and in the same building are offices for the Surrogate and Board of Supervisors.² The co. has no poorhouse; but each town provides for the accommodation of its own paupers.

The Brooklyn and Jamaica R. R., extending w. from Jamaica to the co. line, is leased by the Long Island R. R., which extends e. from Jamaica through Hempstead, North Hempstead, and Oyster Bay. The Flushing R. R. extends w. from Flushing Village through Newtown to the mouth of Newtown Creek. The Syosset Branch R. R. connects Hicksville, upon the L. I. R. R., with the village of Syosset, 3½ mi. n.

There are 7 newspapers published in the co.; 2 at Jamaica, 2 at Hempstead, 2 at Flushing, and 1 at Glen Cove.³

The co. was mostly settled by English immigrants, under the authority of the Dutch Government during the last 20 years of its existence. The e. extremity of Long Island was claimed by the English colonies of New England; and the boundary line was the subject of a long and angry dispute, which was never entirely settled until the final subjugation of New York by the British in 1664.⁴ The whole of this co. was under the Dutch, except Oyster Bay, which was a disputed territory. The first planters came on in considerable numbers, and were associated in the purchase of the lands from the Indians. They were mostly united by a common religious faith; and they were invested with certain civil rights, which were afterward confirmed by the English Government of New York, and some of which continue to the present time. The people chose a duplicate set of magistrates and municipal officers, from which the Dutch Governor selected such as he pleased.

The people employed their own minister, and enjoyed comparative religious freedom. The Dutch, however, did not faithfully carry out the agreement which they had entered into with the settlers, and, in 1653, delegates were sent to the city to remonstrate against certain abuses. This was not heeded, and when the people again met for a like purpose they were ordered to disperse. The inhabitants rejoiced when the Dutch rule was finally broken and they came under the protection of the English. Gov. Nicoll, the first English Governor, convened deputies from the several towns upon Long Island, who met at Hempstead in the spring of 1665. A code of laws and ordinances was adopted, a shire was erected, the names of towns were changed, boundaries were settled, and affairs were regulated to meet the views of the new government. From this time no land could be taken without purchase from the Indians and patent from the Governor.

During the Revolution considerable numbers of the people joined the loyalists, and the co. was mostly in quiet possession of the enemy. Robberies were common, especially along the n. shore. Presbyterian churches were everywhere used for military purposes. A petty warfare was carried on in whaleboats, and daring exploits were performed by partisans of both sides.

Hall" was erected in 1684. From 1700 to 1708 the courts were held in the Presb. church, when a new co. hall was built, which continued in use until the Revolution, when it was burned. By an act of March 1, 1785, the sum of £2,000 was raised to erect new buildings on the present location under the direction of the co. judge. The building is a half mi. n. of the r. r., and trains stop opposite when courts are in session. Efforts have been made to remove the site to Jamaica, but thus far without success, although most persons will admit that the present site is inconvenient to a majority of the inhabitants.

¹ In the absence of sufficient accommodations in the vicinity, this building is also used as a hotel during the session of the court. The sheriff, who lives upon the premises, usually makes provision for dining a large number, and for furnishing lodgings to a limited extent.

² The surrogate's and clerk's offices were kept at the houses of the incumbents until 1833, when they were located at Jamaica. The present clerk's office was erected in 1857.

³ The Long Island Farmer was commenced at Jamaica in 1819 by Henry C. Sleight. It is now published by Charles Willing.

The Union Hall Gazette, semi-mo., was published at Jamaica in 1832 by L. Booth.

The Long Island Democrat was established at Jamaica May 1, 1835, by Jas. G. Brenton, present publisher. The Journal and Messenger was published about 1843, by S. V. Berv.

The Long Island Telegraph and General Advertiser was started at Hempstead in May, 1830, by Wm. Hutchinson and C. F. Le Fevre. In Nov. 1831 it was changed to

The Hempstead Inquirer. It is now published by Morris Suedaker.

The Queens County Sentinel was established at Hempstead in May, 1858, by John H. Hentz, its present publisher.

The Church Record was started at Flushing in 1840, and continued 3½ years. It was edited by Rev. Dr. F. L. Hawks, and published by C. R. Lincoln.

The Flushing Journal was commenced March 19, 1842, by Chas. R. Lincoln, its present publisher.

The Flushing Pomologist was published in 1848, by William R. Prince.

The Public Voice was started at Flushing in 1852; and in 1855 it was changed to

The Long Island Times. It is now published by W. R. Hurling.

The North Hempstead Gazette was started in Dec. 1846, at Manhasset Valley. In 1850 it was removed to Roslyn and changed to

The Plain Dealer. It was subsequently removed to Glen Cove, and was continued until 1855; Jas. L. Crowley was its last publisher.

The Glen Cove Sentinel was published a short time in 1854 by Bright & Perry.

The Glen Cove Gazette was started in May, 1857, by E. M. Lincoln, its present publisher.

The Woodhaven Advertiser was published a short time in 1853.

The Astoria Gazette was started in 1853 by Wm. L. S. Harrison, and continued about 18 months.

The Journal of the Institute was published at Flushing for about 3 years.

⁴ Commissioners were appointed to settle these claims in 1650. They were Simon Bradstreet and Thos. Prince on the part of the New England colonies, and Thos. Willett and Geo. Baxter on the part of the Dutch. The boundary was fixed along the w. line of Oyster Bay; but the States General did not ratify the agreement, and the Dutch Governor neglected to carry it into effect. The Dutch subsequently platted a colony at Brookville, (Wolver Hollow,) e. of the Hoe, to assert their claims.

FLUSHING¹—was first granted by letters patent—issued by the Dutch Governor Keift, Oct. 10, 1645—to a company of English immigrants.² This grant was confirmed by Gov. Nicoll, Feb. 1666, and by Gov. Dongan, March 23, 1685.³ Under the provisions of these charters a considerable amount of land was held in common, to be under the charge of 5 trustees, elected annually.⁴ It was recognized as a town under the State Government, March 7, 1788.⁵ It lies upon the n. border of the co., w. of the center. Its surface is moderately uneven and has a gentle inclination to the n. A low range of hills extends along its s. border and separates it from Jamaica. Flushing Creek, the principal stream, forms a portion of the w. boundary. The principal indentations upon the coast are Flushing Bay, Powells Cove, Little Bay, and Little Neck Bay. An extensive salt marsh extends along Flushing Creek and the head of Flushing Bay.⁶ The soil is a fine quality of productive sandy loam. Gardening, fruit growing,⁷ and the nursery business⁸ constitute the leading pursuits of the people. The town supports its own poor, and has a house and farm for their accommodation. Flushing, (p. v.) at the head of Flushing Bay, was incorp. April 9, 1813. It contains 8 churches, 2 newspaper offices, several private seminaries,⁹ and has a limited amount of manufactures.¹⁰ It is connected with New York by the Flushing R. R. and by a steam ferry from Hunters Point. From its proximity to New York, it has become the residence of many wealthy persons doing business in the city. Pop. 3,488. College Point,¹¹ (p. v.) on the sound, e. of Flushing Bay, is a modern village, settled mostly by Germans. It contains 2 churches, and an immense manufactory of whalebone, India rubber, and ratan, giving employment to 500 to 700 hands. Pop. 1,150. Whitestone¹² (p. v.) is located on the sound, in the extreme n. part of the town. It contains 2 churches, and an extensive tin and sheet ironware manufactory.¹³ Pop. 630. Marathon, at the head of Little Neck Bay, is a small, straggling village with one church. Several of the neighborhoods in this town are known by distinct local names.¹⁴ Wilkins Point has recently been purchased by the U. S. Government for the site of a fort.¹⁵ There are now 13 churches in town.¹⁶ The first settlements were made by English, who probably had first settled in Holland. They arrived at "New Amsterdam" in 1645. They were Non-conformists in religion, and settled on the Dutch dominions under the promise of entire religious freedom.¹⁷ But the Dutch soon commenced a series of persecutions that continued until the time of the British conquest in 1664. Several French Protestant families found their way into this town after the revocation of the Edict of Nantes; but few of their descendants are now found. The fruits introduced by these people are said to have given the first direction to the nursery business for which this town is so celebrated. During the Revolution a British force was stationed here.

HEMPSTEAD—was granted by Gov. Keift to several English families, Nov. 14, 1644. This patent was confirmed by Gov. Nicoll, March 6, 1666, and by Gov. Dongan, April 17, 1685.¹⁸

³ The patentees named in the patent of Gov. Nicoll were John Lawrence, (alderman of New York City,) Richard Cornell, Chas. Bridges, Wm. Lawrence, Robert Terry, Wm. Noble, John Forbush, Elias Doughty, Jobt. Field, Philip Udall, Thos. Stiles, Benj. Field, Wm. Pidgeon, John Adams, John Hinchman, Nicholas Panell, Tobias Peaks, and John Bowne; and those in the patent of Gov. Dongan were Elias Doughty, Thos. Willert, John Bowne, Matthias Harvey, Thos. Hicks, Richard Cornell, John Hinchman, Jonathan Wright, and Sam'l Hoyt.—Patents, I, 64, V, 222, 325, S. c. Office.

⁴ These lands have since been mostly taken up by individuals, though the trustees are still elected to take charge of the remainder. The town records were burned, Oct. 31, 1797, by a servant girl, who was afterward hung for the deed.

⁷ The principal fruit grown are cherries, of which large quantities are annually sent to the New York market.

⁸ Flushing has a wide reputation for its nurseries, of which there are six, occupying 246 acres and valued at $124,000. The first nursery was commenced about 1750. They now furnish every species of fruit tree, ornamental shrub, and exotic plant cultivated in the country.

⁹ The principal of these schools are the Flushing Institute, the Flushing Female College, and the Linnean Hill seminary.

¹⁰ The principal manufactures are the Excelsior Emery and Sand Paper Manufactory, a steam planing and saw mill, and a tide gristmill.

¹² Named from a large holder near the landing. The place was first called "Cooley Hill" and afterward "Chinonville."

¹³ This establishment gives employment to 430 hands.

¹⁴ Bay Side—the seat of A. G. Mickle, Ex-Mayor of New York;—and Springville are near Little Neck Bay. Fresh Meadows, Ireland, and Spring Hill are localities s. e. of Flushing Village. Rocky Hill and Union Place are farming neighborhoods. Spring Hill was the residence of Cadwallader Colden, who died here Sept. 20, 1776. His son espoused the cause of the Royalists, and his estate was confiscated.

¹⁵ When fortified, this point will completely command the channel on the n., and render the approach of ships of war toward New York impossible from that direction.

¹⁶ Of these there are at Flushing, 2 Friends, Prot. E., M. E., Ref. Prot. D., R. C., Cong., and Bap.; at College Point, R. C. and Luth.; at Whitestone, Prot. E. and M. E.; and at Marathon, a Prot. E.

¹⁷ The religious faith of these people was much the same as that afterward professed by the Quakers, who had not become at that period a distinct sect in England. Their first religious teacher was Francis Doughty, from Taunton, Mass., a Baptist, who became a Quaker in 1657, as did many of the inhabitants. The celebrated Geo. Fox visited America in 1672 and preached in this town. He was entertained at the house of John Bowne, who had particularly suffered from the persecutions of the Dutch; but, his dwelling not being sufficiently large to accommodate the audience, his hearers assembled under the shade of the venerable oaks, one of which is still standing. The Bowne House stands in Parsons & Co.'s Commercial Garden and Nursery, and is in a fine state of preservation.

¹⁸ The grantees named in the first patent were Robert Ford-

Upon the erection of North Hempstead, in 1784, its name was changed to South Hempstead; and its present name was re-adopted Feb. 5, 1796. It was recognized as a town March 7, 1788. It lies upon the s. side of the island, extending 20 mi. along the ocean, and embracing about 100 sq. mi. The shore is bordered by a line of beaches and sand hills; and within them are Hempstead and South Oyster Bays, inclosing a large number of low, sedgy islands. West of the bay a long, narrow sandbar, known as Rockaway Beach,¹ extends to the s. w., forming the e. boundary of Jamaica Bay. Wide salt meadows border upon the bays, and from them the land spreads out into an almost perfectly level plain.² The soil along the borders of the marshes is moderately fertile, and upon the plain it consists of sand and fine gravel, which is naturally barren, although it may be made productive by the proper application of manures. A considerable portion of the marshes and plain belongs to the town and is used as common property.³ The people are largely engaged in market gardening. There is no poorhouse; but the paupers are annually put up at auction and struck off to the lowest bidder. Hempstead, (p. v.) near the center of the town, was incorp. June 20, 1853. It contains 3 churches, the Hempstead Seminary,⁴ and 1,486 inhabitants. Along the s. shore are several villages, generally scattered and extended over a large territory. They are mostly surrounded by gardens and orchards. South Jerusalem, (p. v.) in the s. e. corner, contains a gristmill and Friends' meetinghouse; next w. are respectively Bridge Haven, containing a gristmill and church, Merrick,⁵ (p. o.) and Greenwich Point, two farming neighborhoods; Freeport,⁶ (p. v.), a fishing village, containing 2 churches; Milburn, Baldwinville, and Christian Hook, hamlets; Rockville Center, (p. v.) containing 1 church; Near Rockaway, a hamlet, and Far Rockaway, (Rockaway p. o.), a noted seabeathing place.⁷ Valley Stream and Fosters Meadows are two scattered settlements along the e. border. New Bridge, (formerly "Little Neck,") Washington Square, and Brookfield are farming neighborhoods. The first settlements were made in 1643, by a colony of English, who had previously settled at Weathersfield and Stamford, in Conn. They founded the first English settlement within the co.⁸ The town early acquired a prominent rank, and its records (preserved at North Hempstead) contain a large amount of valuable historical information. Horse races were established here by the Governor in 1690. The first church (Presb.) was started in 1648. There are 18 churches in town.⁹

JAMAICA¹⁰—was first granted for settlement by Gov. Stuveysant, March 21, 1656; and a more ample patent was granted in 1660. The rights of the town were confirmed by Gov. Nicoll, Feb. 15, 1666, and by Gov. Dongan, March 17, 1686.¹¹ It was recognized as a town March 7, ham, John Strickland, John Ogden, John Karman, John Lawrence, and Jonas Wood; those in the second patent were John Hicks, J. P., Capt. John Seaman, Richard Gildersleeve, Robert Jackson, John Karman, John Smith, sr. and jr.; and those in the third were Capt. John Seaman, Simon Searing, John Jackson, James Pine, sr., Richard Gildersleeve, sr., and Nath'l Pearsall.—Thompson's Hist. L. I., II, 14, Patents, V, 55, V, 182; Sec. Office.

² This plain is 15 mi. long and 4 broad. When first known to the Europeans, it was destitute of timber and covered with grass. The annual burning of this grass was prohibited by statute in 1726. It is mostly uninclosed, and used as pasture.

³ About 16,000 acres of the plain and the salt meadows are common property. The time for cutting the hay is fixed at the annual town meetings, and the first one on the ground has the choice of location. This leads the farmers to the meadows at an early hour on the appointed day, and sometimes during the night previous, where they stand aye in the hand, ready at the first glance of sunrise to strike into the grass before them and mow around as large a piece as they may be able. Several hundred men are often thus employed. Each inhabitant may hire as many laborers as he chooses, and may cut for sale. North Hempstead formerly enjoyed the right of cutting grass upon these meadows, but has been practically deprived of it for many years. See page —.

⁵ On old documents variously spelled "Merie," "Meroke," and "Merilohoe." The name was derived from a tribe of Indians that lived in the vicinity.

⁶ First settled by Edward Raynor, and formerly known as "Raynortown."

⁷ This place contains the Pavilion,—an immense hotel,—and several large summer boarding houses.

and Robert Fordham. In 1647 the first eight, with Robt. Ashman, Jeremy Edmund, and Terry Wood, Benj. and John Coe, Sam'l Strickland, John Topping, John Fordham, Wm. and John Lawrence, Henry Hudson, Thomas Ireland, Richard Valentine, Wm. Thicketson, Nicholas Tanner, Wm. John, sr. and jr., Jas., and Alvin Smith, Richard, jr., Sam'l Dan'l, and Nath'l Denton, Thos. Armitage, Simon Searing, Thomas Willet, Henry Pierson, Jos. and Wm. Scott, Henry Whiston, Richard and John Lewis, Thos. Stevenson, John Storge, John and Robert Williams, Wm. Rogers, Richard Ogden, John Fockus, Wm. Washburne, Thos. Sherman, Francis Yates, John Ellison, Wm. Shadding, Thomas and Chas. Foster, Roger Lines, Sam'l Clark, John Hudd, Thos. Pope, Daniel Whitehead, Edward Raynor, John Smith, Samuel Bacca, and John Strickland were freeholders, and shared in the division of the lands. A part of the above locations are now included in North Hempstead. The first child born of white parents in town was Caleb Karman, son of John Karman, Jan. 9, 1645. An order was made at their General Court, Sept. 16, 1650, requiring all persons to "repaire to the publique Meetings and Assemblies on the Lords dayes, and on publique dayes of fasting and thankgivings, appointed by publique authority, bothe on the forenoons and afternoons," under a penalty of 5 guilders for the first, 10 for the second, and 20 for the third offense. The Rev. Richard Denton, a prominent founder, was their first pastor. He returned to England in 1659, and wrote a historical account of New York, which was published in London in 1670.

⁹ 10 M. E., 3 Prot. E., 2 Presb., 2 R. C., and one Friends. Near the M. E. Church in South Hempstead is a monument, erected to the memory of 139 English and Irish immigrants who perished on the ships Bristol and Mexico, wrecked Nov. 21, 1836, and Jan. 2, 1837.

¹¹ The first patent of confirmation contained the names of Daniel Denton, J. P., Robt. Coe, Capt. Bryan Newton, Wm. Hallet, Andrew Messenger, and Nathaniel Denton; and the second named 24 persons.—Patents, I, 66, 91, V, 432; Sec. Office.

1788. It is the s. w. corner town of the co. A range of low sand hills forms its n. boundary, but the remainder of the town consists of an extensive sand plain, and a series of wide salt marshes along the shore. Jamaica Bay, forming its s. boundary, incloses a large number of low, marshy islands. Several small streams take their rise in springs and small ponds among the hills and flow s. to the bay.¹ The soil is light and sandy. A considerable tract immediately bordering upon the marshes is kept in a high state of fertility by artificial means, and is devoted to market gardening. This town has long been celebrated for its race courses.² The town poor are annually sold to the lowest bidder.³ Jamaica, (p. v.), near the n. border of the town, was incorp. April 14, 1814. It contains 6 churches, the Union Hall Academy,⁴ several private seminaries, a union school, 2 newspaper offices, and several manufactories.⁵ Pop. 2,817. Woodhaven was organized in 1850 by a number of capitalists for the manufacture of shoes. Cypress Avenue is a r. r. station near the line of Kings co. The country in the immediate vicinity is laid out in a village plat, and named Unionville, from the Union Race Course; Clarenceville is a village plat on the r. r., e. of Jamaica; Centerville, a plat adjacent to the trotting course; Hopedale and Jamaica Heights, two prospective villages in the n. part; Willow Tree, a r. r. station, e. of Jamaica; Queens,⁶ (p. o.) a r. r. station near the e. line, and Springfield, a vicinage 3 mi. long, in the e. part, extending to the bay. The first settlement was made about 1656, by people from Hempstead, who in that year obtained leave of the Dutch Government to purchase lands and erect a town, "according unto their place limited, named Canarise, about midway from Hempstead." In 1702 the civil officers of government removed to this place, on account of prevailing sickness. An attempt was made soon after to appropriate the church to the use of the Episcopalians,—which was resisted, and a controversy commenced, which was not settled until 1728. In 1753 the General Assembly again convened at this place. During the Revolution the town was occupied by the British, and, especially in winter, large bodies of troops were stationed here. The Dutch Church was used as a storehouse. The first church (Presb.) was formed in 1663. The Ref. Prot. D. Church was formed in 1702; and the first Prot. E. services were held during the same year. The Chapel of the Sisters—a neat edifice, built of hewn granite—was erected in the Presb. Cemetery, by Nicholas Ludlum, of New York.⁷

NEWTOWN⁸—was first conveyed by patent, by Gov. Stuyvesant, in 1652. The grant was confirmed by Gov. Nicoll, March 6, 1666, and by Gov. Dongan, Nov. 25, 1683.⁹ It was recognized as a town March 7, 1788. It lies upon the East River and Long Island Sound, in the n. w. corner of the co., and includes North and South Brother, Rikers, and Berriens Islands.¹⁰ A range of hills extends along the s. border; but the remaining part of its surface is level or moderately uneven. Flushing Creek forms a portion of the e. boundary, and Newtown Creek a portion of the w. boundary. Extensive salt meadows border upon these creeks and the bays. Hell Gate is a narrow, tortuous passage between Wards Island and Hallets Point, near the n. extremity of the town.¹¹ The soil is a fine quality of sandy loam. Market gardening and the cultivation of flowers are the most important business. The town poor are let out by contract. Astoria,¹² (p. v.) upon East River, near Hell Gate, was incorp. April 12, 1836. It contains 5 churches, a female seminary, union school, and several extensive manufactories.¹³ It is particularly distinguished for its floral gardens

¹ Several of these ponds have been purchased by the Brooklyn Water Works Company. The remains of a mastodon were found in excavating at Baisieys Pond in this town, March 27, 1858. They consisted of six molar teeth and some small fragments of bones, blackened, but not mineralized.

² A course was laid out in colonial times, around the border of Beaver Pond,—a sheet of water adjacent to the village, since drained. Union Course was laid out soon after the passage of the act of 1821, and continued under that of 1834. It is now owned by the "Union Association," formed under general act, Aug. 2, 1858, with a capital of $100,000. It is a few feet over a mile in circuit. There is a trotting course s. e. of the former.

³ The town elects trustees annually to manage its property. It has a fund—given by Henry Townsend nearly two centuries since—"for the relief of poor widows and children, persons blind, lame, or aged, and such as should be unable to get a living, or any that should suffer by fire and whose necessities might call for relief."

⁴ This institution was incorp. Feb. 29, 1792.

⁵ A carriage factory and the repair shops of the L. I. R. R.

⁶ Formerly called "Brushville." The name was changed at a public meeting, Jan. 1, 1857.

⁷ There are now 7 churches in town; 2 M. E., Af. Meth., Ref. Prot. D. Presb., Prot. E., and R. C.

⁸ Named "Middletown," under the Dutch.

⁹ The first deed of confirmation contained the names of Capt.

Richard Betts, J. P., Capt. Thos. Lawrence, Capt. John Coe, John Burroughs, Ralph Hoot, Dan' Whitehead, and J. Burger Yost; and the second the names of 108 freeholders. The annual quit-rent was 3£ 4s.—Patents, II, 78; Sec. Office: Thompson's Hist. L. I., II, 142.

¹² This place was formerly known as "Hallets Cove," and was settled by Stephen A. and John C. Halsey. At the time of its incorporation it was proposed to call it "Sunswick," from the Indian name of a stream near by; but the name Astoria was adopted, in hope of securing a gratuity from John Jacob Astor. In this, however, the people were disappointed, as he gave only $100 to the seminary.

¹³ The principal manufactories are the chemical works for

and greenhouses.¹ It is connected with New York by ferries, and is inhabited by many persons doing business in the city. Pop. about 3,200. Ravenswood, (p. v.) upon the East River, is a suburban village, and the houses consist mostly of costly residences. The poorhouse farms of New York City were located at this place previous to the purchase of the islands in the river for that purpose.² A rifle cartridge factory exploded here about 1850, occasioning a great destruction of life. Hunters Point³ is a newly surveyed and thinly settled village, immediately n. of the mouth of Newtown Creek. It has several manufactories,⁴ and is rapidly increasing in business and population. Newtown, (p. v.) near the center, and Perry Bridge are stations upon the Flushing R. R.; and Winfield and West Flushing are village plats upon the same roads. Maspeth⁵ (p. o.) lies near the head of Newtown Creek; and Melvina, Columbusville, and Winantsville are village plats in the same vicinity. Lawrenceville, n. w. of Winfield, and Midletown, s. e. of Astoria, are village plats. Locust Grove, Linden Hills, New Astoria, Middle Village, and South Williamsburgh are localities and prospective villages. Dutch Kills is a gardening neighborhood. St. Ronans Well, a wooded island near the head of Flushing Bay, contains 7 acres, and is a favorite resort for picnic parties. Calvary Cemetery, on the Laurel Hills, n. of Newtown Creek, contains 75 acres, and is owned by the R. C. denomination. The Cemetery of the Evergreens, in the s. w. corner, is partly in Brooklyn and partly in New Lots, Kings co. It is beautifully situated upon the Cypress Hills, and contains 115 acres, with the privilege of extending its area to 500 acres. Cypress Hills Cemetery, e. of the latter, is also situated upon the highlands, and contains 400 acres.⁶ Mount Olivet Cemetery lies near Maspeth, and the Lutheran Cemetery near Middle Village. The National Race Course, incorp. May 31, 1854, is located near the Flushing R. R.⁷ The first settlements were made in 1651, by English immigrants, who had first located in New England. The first grant of privileges obtained from the Dutch in 1652 was followed by another more liberal in its character in 1665. The early records of the town were lost during the British occupation in the Revolution. A blockhouse was built at Hell Gate during the Revolution, and a water-battery, named Fort Stevens,⁸ during the War of 1812. The first church edifice (Presb.) of which there is any record was erected, in 1670, at Newtown Village; and the first preacher was Rev. John Moorehead, who was employed from the first settlement until his death, in 1661. The census reports 15 churches in town.⁹

NORTH HEMPSTEAD¹⁰—was formed from Hempstead, April 6, 1784. It lies upon Long Island Sound, between Hempstead Harbor and Little York Bay, and on the s. extends to near the center of Hempstead Plains. A range of hills extends e. and w. through near the center; and from them spurs extend to the Sound, giving to the n. part a moderately hilly character. Hempstead Harbor and Manhasset Bay are irregular bays extending far inland and dividing the coast into several "necks" and points,—the principal of which are Cow Neck, Motts, Prospect, Sands, making dry alkalies, the U. S. Vulcanized Gutta Percha Belting and Packing Works, and an extensive carpet factory.

¹ Graot Thornburn, the celebrated seedsman and florist, had a nursery here from 1832 to 1851. There are now 6 floral establishments for supplying the city market, besides many gentlemen's greenhouses, graperies, &c.

² About 1834-35, the corporation of New York City erected extensive buildings, about $\frac{1}{2}$ mi. s. from Astoria, for a pauper establishment, which were sold at public auction, April 15, 1847, upon the removal of these institutions to the islands in the river. Three large buildings—called the "Boys' Nursery," "School House," and "Infant Nursery," the property of Wm. W. Miles—were leased (May 25) to the Commissioners of Emigration for a ship fever hospital, and other purposes. A public meeting was held immediately after at Astoria, to express indignation at the application of the property to these uses and to remonstrate against it. The people failing to obtain their object, the premises were assailed and destroyed on the night of May 26-27, 1847, by a large mob in disguise. An attempt was made to fasten the expense of these losses upon the town; and, after repeated efforts, the owner recovered \$3,000 from the State by act of March 17, 1855.—Assen. Doc. 1848, Nos. 19, 161, 164, 186; Senate Doc. 1849, No. 31, and 1850, Nos. 62 and 82.

³ Originally called "Dominies Hook." The place was afterward owned by Geo. Hunter, who died before 1825. It is designated in deeds as "Long Island City." Much of the property given to Union College by Rev. Dr. Nott as an endowment is located here, and consists of graded lots.

⁴ The principal manufactories are a flint glass factory, chemical works, paint and varnish factory, foundry for the manufacture of iron pipes, and an oil and locomotive grease factory. Considerable ship-building is also done here.

⁵ Sometimes written "Mespeth," "Mispeth," &c. It was settled by English, and often designated "English Kills," to distinguish it from Dutch Kills. De Witt Clinton formerly resided here. A foundry for casting metallic burial cases was established here several years since.

⁶ The general act forbids cemeteries to hold more than 250 acres in one co.; and hence this was located in two. A special act allows this cemetery to hold 100 acres more in Queens co. The highest point is 219 ft. above tide.

⁷ The company that owns this course is incorp., with a capital of $250,000.

⁸ Named from Maj. Gen. Ebenezer Stevens, who in his youth was a member of the "Boston Tea Party" and subsequently an officer in the Revolution and the War of 1812.

¹⁰ Under the act of organization each town was to enjoy the right of oystering, clamming, and fishing in the other; and both continued to cut grass upon the South Meadows until 1815. They each assumed the sole care of the common lands that fell within their several bounds. At the town meeting in Hempstead, April, 1797, a resolution was passed, giving to the people of that town 10 days' precedence of right in cutting grass. A suit was instituted, and was appealed to the Court of Errors, which decided, in Dec. 1828, that North Hempstead had no power to interfere in the regulations of Hempstead.—Opinion of Chancellor Kent, Johnson's, II, 324-338; of Chancellor Sanford, Hopkins, I, 289-300; Decision of Court of Errors, Wendell, II, 109-137. The public lauds of the town were sold under an act passed March 25, 1830. Obadiah Townsend, Singleton Mitchell, Benj. Allworthson, and Jos. Dodge were appointed commissioners for this purpose.

Barker, and Hewletts Points, and Plum Beach.¹ The soil upon the plains is light and sandy, and in the n. part a sandy and clayey loam, very productive. The town poor are supported by the Jones Fund,² at an institution situated at Brookville, in the town of Oyster Bay; and 2 trustees are annually elected to the board having this fund in charge. Manhasset,³ (p. v.,) near the center, a straggling village, contains 4 churches. The neck of land extending eastward of Manhasset Bay is called Manhasset.⁴ Roslyn, (p. v.,) at the head of Hempstead Harbor and 2 mi. above the steamboat landing, contains 2 churches and several manufactories.⁵ Pop. 592. North Hempstead (p. o.) is at the co. courthouse; Mineola (p. v.) is a scattered village at the junction of the L. I. & Hempstead Branch R. Roads; Flower Hill is a farming neighborhood near the center of Manhasset Neck; Montrose, a village plat near the country seat of Wm. C. Bryant. Westbury⁶ is a farming neighborhood, extending from near the courthouse to the e. line of the town. Carl Place, near Westbury, and Clowesville, near Mineola, are village plats. Hyde Park,⁷ near the r. r., Lakeville,⁸ near the line of Flushing, and Farmers Village, on the edge of the plains, are farming localities. Port Washington is a small fishing village on the w. side of Manhasset Bay. The first settlement was made in the spring of 1640, by a small company of English immigrants from Lynn, Mass., under the lead of Capt. Daniel Howe, who took possession of the head of Cow Bay, under the authority of Fawett, agent of the Earl of Stirling. The Dutch sent a party of soldiers, who captured several of the intruders; but they were released upon promising to quit the place. These persons afterward made the first settlement at Southampton. The necks of land of this town were first used for pasturage in commons. During the Revolution marauding parties committed various deprivations upon the people of this town, rendering both property and life insecure. The census reports 9 churches in town.⁹

OYSTER BAY¹⁰—was patented by Gov. Nicoll, Nov. 29, 1667, and confirmed by Gov. Andross, Sept. 29, 1677.¹¹ It was recognized as a town March 7, 1788. It occupies the e. extremity of the co., and extends across the island from the sound to the ocean. The n. shore is deeply indented by irregular bays, the principal of which are Oyster Bay, Cold Spring, and Oyster Bay Harbors, Mill Neck Creek, and Mosquito Cove. Cove Neck, Center Island,¹² and Mosquito Neck are long peninsulas formed by these bays;¹³ Lloyds Neck is a peninsula extending e. of Cold Spring Harbor. The great indentation of South Oyster Bay, separated from the ocean by Jones Beach, forms the s. boundary. This bay is bordered by salt meadows, and incloses several marshy islands belonging to the town. A range of hills extends through the n. part; and the remainder of the surface is level. The soil is a sandy and clayey loam, and with proper care is very productive. The town poor are supported by the Jones Fund.¹⁴ Oyster Bay, (p. v.,) on Oyster Bay Harbor, contains 6 churches and 900 inhabitants;¹⁵ Glen Cove,¹⁶ (p. v.,) near Hempstead Harbor, in the n. w. part, contains 3 churches, a printing office, fire insurance office, and a corn starch factory.¹⁷ South Oyster Bay (p. o.) is a scattered village on the s. shore. Farmingdale (p. o.) is a hamlet and r. r. station near the e. line; Hicksville¹⁸ (p. o.) is a r. r. station near the w. line. Syosset¹⁹ (p. o.) is the present terminus of a r. r. extending n. e. from

⁴ Formerly called "Cow Neck," and by the Indians "Sint Sink." It was originally inclosed from Hempstead Harbor to the creek by a fence separating it from Great Neck; and every person was entitled to put as many cattle upon it as he built standing gates or panels of fence. When afterward distributed, in 1674, these rights were called gate-rights. The number of contributors in 1658 was 60, and the number of panels of fence 526.

⁶ The people in this vicinity are chiefly employed in furnishing milk for the New York market.

⁷ Upon the open grounds e. of this place, anciently called "Satisbury Plains," a race course was established by Gov. Nicoll in 1665. It was called "New Market," and continued devoted to the sports of the turf more than one hundred years.

¹¹ Henry Townsend, sr., Nicholas and Gideon Wright, Richard Harrison, Joseph Carpenter, and Josiah Lathing were named in both patents.—Patents, I. 104, 162; Sec. Office.

¹³ The principal capes or points upon the n. shore are Olivers, Sopers, Moses, Plum, Center Island, Old Neck, Fox Island, Peacock, Matiucock, and Red Spring Points.

¹⁴ In 1836, Sam'l Jones gave $30,000—known as the "Jones Fund"—for the support of the poor of this town and North Hempstead; and if the income of this fund was more than sufficient for this purpose, the overplus was to belong to Flushing. A farm was purchased at Brookville, upon which suitable buildings have been erected for the support of the poor. Walter R. Jones, the distinguished financier, also a citizen of this town, gave $5,000 more for the same purpose. The fund is managed by 3 trustees, chosen by this town, and 2 by North Hempstead. The institution is known as the "Jones Institute;" and it supports 60 to 70 indigent persons annually.

¹⁵ P. O. changed to "Syosset" Jan. 20, 1846, and old name restored one week after. Jas. Colwell, appointed P. M. by Jefferson, held the office till his death, in 1856, when his granddaughter was appointed.

¹⁶ Formerly called "Mosquito Cove."

¹⁷ This factory employs 40 hands, and manufactures 15 tons of starch per day.

¹⁸ Named from Elias Hicks, the Quaker reformer.

¹⁹ Formerly known as "East Woods."

Hicksville, projected to Cold Spring. Norwich (East Norwich p. o.) is a farming settlement 3 mi. s. e. of Oyster Bay.¹ Cedar Swamp, (p. o.), s. e. of Glen Cove, and Locust Valley,² n. e. of the same place, are farming settlements. Jericho (p. o.) is a settlement, n. of Hicksville;³ Woodbury (p. o.) is a small village, near the e. border; Lloyds Neck is a farming vicinage, in the extreme n. e. part;⁴ Bethphage is a farming locality, and Brookville is a hamlet⁵ Fort Neck was named from two ancient Indian forts.⁶ Dosoris,⁷ Lattingtown, and Matincock⁸ are localities n. e. of Glen Cove. An attempt was made by a party of English to make a settlement in this town in 1640; but the settlers were driven off by the Dutch. In 1642 other English parties, who had purchased lands of the Indians, were also driven off. The question of jurisdiction was a matter of debate until 1650, when commissioners were appointed on both sides to settle it. The w. boundary of Oyster Bay was fixed upon as the line of separation of the two colonies; and in 1653 the first permanent English settlement was made, upon land previously purchased of the Indians.⁹ In 1662 the town formed a close alliance with Conn. De Lancy's corps of royalists built a small fort on the hill, in the village of Oyster Bay, in 1776; and it was occupied by Simcoe's Queen's Rangers in 1773 and '78. The census reports 16 churches in town.¹⁰

¹ The town records are sensally kept at this place.
² The p. o. at this place was called "Buckram" until recently.
³ Elias Hicks formerly resided here. The first settlement was made by Robert Williams, in 1650; called by the Indians "Lusum."
⁵ This place was settled by the Dutch, to assert their claim to lands claimed by the English. The Jones Institute is located here.
⁶ In 1775, Daniel Jones, of this place, gave £300 sterling for a charity school at Oyster Bay.
⁷ Sometimes written Desoris. It is an abbreviation of dos uxoris, or "dowry of a wife,"—the property having come to the first settler, Cole, by his wife.
⁸ A Friends' meetinghouse was erected here in 1682.
⁹ Peter Wright, Wm. Leveridge, Samuel Mayo, Wm. and John Washburne, Thos. Armitage, Anthony Wright, Robt. Williams, and Richard Holdbrook were joint purchasers. Henry Townsend obtained a grant for a mill Sept. 1661, and erected the first mill, in 1663. There were 53 freeholders in town.

KINGS COUNTY.

THIS county was organized with its present limits, Nov. 1, 1683.¹ It lies upon the w. end of Long Island, adjacent to New York Harbor, and embraces several small islands adjacent to the coast. It is centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains — sq. mi. The surface is generally level or gently undulating. A broad range of drift hills, 50 to 100 feet above tide, extends from the shore of the bay in the s. w. corner in a n. e. direction through the co. From their summits the surface gradually declines both to the n. and s., and terminates upon the shores in extensive salt meadows. The portion lying n. of the hills is moderately uneven, being occasionally broken by low, isolated drift hills. The shores are deeply indented by bays, which for the most part are shallow, and very irregular in outline. The principal of these are Hallets Cove, Newtown Creek,² Wallabout, Gowanus, and Gravesend Bays on the w., and Sheeps Head Bay on the s. Jamaica Bay, a large, shallow, landlocked bay upon the s. shore, is partially in this co. It incloses a large number of low, marshy islands separated by narrow and irregular tidal currents. Wide salt marshes extend along the shores of the bays, and far inland along the courses of the small creeks.³ The soil is mostly a light, sandy loam. A strip immediately surrounding the marshes and embracing a large share of the w. extremity is fertile, and capable of producing almost any crop adapted to the climate. Its close proximity to New York, the great commercial center of the country, renders it favorably situated for the development of manufactures and commerce; and both of these pursuits are largely carried on at the centers of population. The agriculture of the co. is mostly confined to gardening for the N. Y. market. All of the business of the co.—manufacturing, commercial, and agricultural—are so intimately connected with the interests of New York that the co. may be considered as a suburb of the great city.⁴

The county seat is located at the city of Brooklyn.⁵ The courts are accommodated at the City Hall, which belongs exclusively to the city. The jail, located upon Raymond St., is closely surrounded by other buildings, and its ventilation is very imperfect. The average number of inmates is 80, supported at a weekly cost of $2.10 each.⁶ The Kings Co. Penitentiary is located upon a farm of 38 acres near the s. line of Brooklyn. The buildings, now nearly completed, are of stone, and sufficiently spacious for the accommodation and care of all the prisoners of the co. The main building is 490 feet long by 86 feet broad, with two wings of 50 feet each. The total cost up to January 1, 1857 was $190,414.35. The institution is designed to be self supporting. The county clerk's office is kept at the City Hall.⁷ The Kings County Almshouse is located upon a farm of 70 acres in Flatbush, about three miles s. of the City Hall of Brooklyn. This institution consists of four large brick buildings,—the almshouse proper, hospital, nursery, and lunatic asylum. These buildings are spacious and well arranged, but poorly ventilated. A school is maintained through the year, and religious instruction is given upon the Sabbath.

³ Upon the beach the General Government has established 2 lifeboat stations. In Jan. 1821, the bay and the Narrows between the w. extremity of Long Island and Staten Island was frozen so that persons crossed on the ice.

⁴ For more minute description of the business of the co., see town descriptions.

⁵ The courts were originally held at Gravesend; but, by an act of the General Assembly, passed Nov. 7, 1685, they were removed to Flatbush, and a courthouse was built there the succeeding year. This building was used until 1758, when a new combined courthouse and jail was erected. By an act passed April 6, 1784, a tax of £200 was authorized to be raised to repair the injuries which had been done to the courthouse and jail by the British. The repairs were expended under the direction of Philip Wagel and Jeremias Vanderbilt. By an act of March

10, 1791, the courthouse and jail were directed to be rebuilt under the direction of Johannes E. Lott, John Vanderbilt, and Chas. Doughty, and £1,200 was appropriated for that purpose. During the next year £300 additional was raised to finish the buildings. These buildings were burned Nov. 3, 1832; and by act of Feb. 27, 1834, the co. seat was removed to Brooklyn. This first co. officers after the Revolution were Nicholas Cowenhoven, First Judge; Jacob Sharp, jr., Clerk; Wm. Boernm, Sheriff; and Johannes E. Lott, Surogato.

⁶ Up to June 1, 1868, 39,910 prisoners had been confined in this jail.

⁷ By an act of May 1, 1828, a fireproof co. clerk's office was directed to be built in Brooklyn. A more spacious one was built in 1837, which was used until the office was removed to its present location in the City Hall. By an act passed in 1852, an office of Register was created; and by a later act, discretionary powers have been granted to a Board of Commissioners for the better preservation of the public records.

Children are bound out at the age of 12 years. The average number of inmates is 1,800, supported at a weekly cost of about $2.00 each. The farm yields a revenue of $3,500.

The Brooklyn & Jamaica R. R. extends from the s. ferry of Brooklyn eastward through near the center of the co. The Flushing R. R. extends from Green Point, in the n. part of Brooklyn, to the village of Flushing, a distance of $7\frac{1}{2}$ mi. In the city of Brooklyn are several local railroad; and from the city lines of stages extend to every village in the co.

The Long Island Intelligencer, the first newspaper in the co., was published some time before 1807.

Four newspapers—three daily and one weekly—are now published in the co.¹

The first settlements of this co. were made mostly by the Dutch, about 1625. In 1640, a colony of Mass. Quakers, in quest of religious freedom, settled at Gravesend under the protection of the Dutch Government. Long previous to the English conquest of 1664, settlements had been made, mills erected, and churches and schools established in every town in the co. The settlers were so exclusively Dutch that the Dutch language and customs prevailed until within a comparatively recent period. Bushwick, Brooklyn, Flatbush, Flatlands, and New Utrecht were known under the English Government as the "Five Dutch Towns;" and they were associated, for certain purposes, until 1690.² The Five Towns also formed an ecclesiastical society, and joined in the support of their minister until the final separation of the American church from the Classis of Holland, in 1772.

Few events of interest occurred within the limits of this co. during the colonial period. Its Revolutionary annals belong to the general history of the country. During its occupation by the British, from 1776 to 1782, the people were subjected to a series of disgraceful and oppressive acts.³ Many of the inhabitants left the co. from fear of hostile visits during the War of 1812-15; and at times much alarm was felt,—although no hostile visit actually took place. It has shared in the growth of New York City, and is closely identified with it in business. This co. is included in the "Metropolitan Police District" created by act of April 15, 1857, and in the Board of Police Commissioners it is represented by the Mayor of Brooklyn and one other member. Vast schemes of speculation have from time to time arisen, most of which have resulted in loss, and several of them, devised upon a magnificent scale, have seriously retarded the progress of needful improvement.

From 1850 to 1853 about 40 building associations were organized in this co., ostensibly to enable those of humble means to acquire a home, but practically to form contributions to a fund which was loaned to those members who would allow the highest premium. The rates submitted to were often extremely ruinous, and the speculation had but a brief existence.

¹ The Long Island Star was started in June, 1809, by Thos. Kirk. In 1811 it was bought by Alden Spooner, and has been continued by him and his sons until the present time.

The Brooklyn Daily Evening Star was begun by Alden Spooner & Sons, Jan. 4, 1841. It is still issued, by Edwin B. Spooner. A semi-weekly edition was issued from The Star office in 1824.

The Long Island Patriot was started at Brooklyn in 1830 by Geo. L. Birch. In 1833 it was changed to

The Brooklyn Advocate, and was issued by James A. Bennett. In 1835-36 it was changed to

The Brooklyn Advocate and Nassau Gazette.

The Williamsburgh Gazette was started in 1835 by Francis G. Fish. It was afterward changed to

The Williamsburgh Daily Gazette, and was issued a short time.

The American Native Citizen and Brooklyn Evening Advertiser, da., was published in 1836 by F. G. Fish.

The Mechanics' Advocate was issued a short time in 1840 at East New York.

The Real Estate Gazette, also started at East New York, had an ephemeral existence.

The Williamsburgh Democrat was commenced June 3, 1840, by Thomas A. Devyr.

The Brooklyn Daily Eagle was commenced in 1841 by Isaac Van Anden, and is still published. From the same office was issued

The Brooklyn Weekly Eagle, which was changed in 1855 to

The Saturday Evening Miscellany.

The Brooklyn Daily News was started in 1841 by Worthall & Watts, and was continued until Nov. 1843.

The Brooklyn News and Times was issued in 1843 by J. S. Noble.

The Age was started at Williamsburgh in Dec. 1844, and was continued a short time.

The Democratic Advocate was published at Williamsburgh in 1844 by J. G. Wallace.

The Brooklyn Daily Advertiser was started in 1844 by H. A. Lees and W. Foulkes, and was continued about 8 years.

The American Champion was published at Brooklyn a short time in 1844.

The Daily Long Islander was started at Williamsburgh in 1845 by Bishop & Kelley.

The Williamsburgh Morning Post was published in 1847 by Devyr & Taylor.

The Saturday Evening Bee was issued a short time in 1848 at Brooklyn.

The Orbit was issued at South Brooklyn in 1848.

The Kings County Patriot was started at Williamsburgh in 1848 by Geo. Thompson and S. R. Hasbrook.

The Williamsburgh Times was started in 1848 by Bennet Smith & Co. Soon after the consolidation of Williamsburgh and Brooklyn its name was changed to

The Brooklyn Daily Times, under which title it is now published.

The Excelsior was commenced in 1848 at South Brooklyn, and was issued a short time.

The Brooklyn Daily Freeman was published in 1849.

The Daily Independent Press was commenced July 16, 1850, at Williamsburgh, by W. G. Bishop and J. A. F. Kelley, and was continued until 1855.

The Brooklyn Morning Journal was established in 1851 by Hogan & Highway.

The Union Ark, a temperance mo., was published at Brooklyn in 18— by J. Schueby.

The Long Island Anzeiger (German) was started at Brooklyn, Sept. 2, 1854, by Edward Rohr.

The Triangle (German semi-mo.) was started at Brooklyn, April 7, 1855, by Edward Rohr.

The Kings Co. Advertiser and Village Guardian (semi-mo.) was started at East New York in May, 1857, by C. Warren Hamilton.

The Green Point Advertiser was published a short time in 1847 by L. Masquerier.

² A Secretary or register was especially commissioned by the Governor to take the proof of wills, of marriage settlements, the acknowledgment of "transcripts" or other conveyance, and such important contracts and agreements as required to be recorded.

³ By an act of March 6, 1784, Kings co. was taxed $13,000 to repay Revolutionary expenses.

BROOKLYN¹—was incorp. by patent, with the usual privileges of townships, under Gov. Lovelace, Oct. 18, 1667, and its rights were confirmed by Gov. Dongan, May 13, 1686. It was recognized as a town under the State Government March 7, 1788. The village of Brooklyn was incorp. as a fire district April 2, 1801, and as a village April 12, 1816, and both town and village were incorp. as a city April 8, 1834. The city of Williamsburgh and town of Bushwick were annexed April 17, 1854.² The city extends along New York Bay and East River to Newtown Creek, occupying the n. part of the co. Its exterior line is 22 mi., and it contains an area of 16,000 acres. The s. and e. borders are occupied by a broad range of low hills, which extend e. into Queens co. Along the shore opposite the lower point of New York is an irregular bluff known as "Brooklyn Heights." A considerable portion of the s. part of the city is low and level. Newtown Creek, forming the n. boundary, is an irregular arm of the sea, receiving several small fresh water streams. Wallabout Bay is a deep indentation lying between the old cities of Williamsburgh and Brooklyn. Gowanus Bay extends into the s. part of the city.³ The land that borders upon these bays is flat and marshy.

Within the limits of Brooklyn are several districts known by the names which they bore when they were distinct localities, before the city was incorporated. These will eventually all be lost in the growth and consolidation of the business of the city. Brooklyn (p. o.) includes the old settled parts of the city s. of Wallabout Bay. Upon East River, in this district, are several large manufactories. The water front is entirely occupied by wharves and warehouses. Williamsburgh (p. o.) includes the thickly settled portions n. of Wallabout Bay. It contains a large number of manufacturing establishments, and its entire water front is devoted to commercial purposes. Green Point, (p. o.), comprising the 17th ward, lies between Bushwick and Newtown Creeks, and occupies the extreme n. w. part of the city. It contains extensive shipyards, and manufactories of porcelain, coal oil, lifeboats, and many other articles. Wallabout (sometimes called East Brooklyn) lies e. of Wallabout Bay. Bedford and New Brooklyn are localities on the r. r., in the e. part of the city. Bushwick Cross Roads and Bushwick Green are villages e. of Williamsburgh. Gowanus is a village near the head of Gowanus Bay. South Brooklyn comprises the portion of the city lying s. of Atlantic St. It has an extensive water front; and along the shore immense works have been constructed to facilitate commerce.⁴ It contains extensive wood, coal, stone, and lumber yards, and numerous planing mills, distilleries, breweries, plaster mills, foundries, and machine shops. The city is connected with New York by 11 steam ferries, all supplied with excellent boats, which perform regular and frequent trips.⁵ From the Atlantic St. Ferry the Brooklyn & Jamaica R. R. extends e. to the e. bounds of the co.⁶

From the principal ferries lines of city railroads extend through the principal avenues and radiate to nearly every part of the city, affording easy, rapid, and cheap means of communication.⁷ The commerce of Brooklyn is extensive, though it scarce has an independent existence, from its intimate relations with that of New York. The docks and piers at South Brooklyn are among the most extensive and commodious in the country. Ship and boat building and repairing are extensively carried on at Williamsburgh and Green Point. The whole water front of the city is occupied by ferries, piers, slips, and boat and ship yards; and the aggregate amount of business

² Bushwick—signifying wood-town—was invested with certain powers of government March 14, 1661. Another patent was granted Oct. 25, 1667; but it remained associated with other towns until Aug. 12, 1708. Williamsburgh Village, in this town, was incorp. April 14, 1827, and the town of Williamsburgh was formed March 16, 1840. The village and town were united and incorp. as the City of Williamsburgh April 7, 1851, and the city and town of Bushwick were annexed to Brooklyn April 17, 1854. Bushwick now constitutes the 17th and 18th wards, and Williamsburgh the 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, and a part of the 19th wards.

³ Acts have been passed authorizing a canal, with basins, wharves, and slips, to be constructed along the creek that flows into this bay. The mouth of the creek has been improved for a short distance.

⁴ The Atlantic Dock contains an area of 40 acres, and has sufficient depth of water for any vessel. An outside pier is 3,000 feet long. The warehouses upon the piers are of granite. The Erie Basin and other extensive docks along the bay have been projected, and work upon them has commenced. These docks afford perfect security to vessels while loading and unloading, and security to goods against theft. It is estimated that $1,000,000 worth of goods are annually stolen from the wharves and ships at New York and Brooklyn.

⁵ These several ferries are all chartered by the Corporation of N. Y. City. The boats average 400 tons, and are noted for the regularity with which they perform their trips. See page —.

⁶ This road is leased to the Long Island R. R. during the term of its charter. A tunnel 2,750 feet long, extending under a portion of Atlantic St., commences near the ferry. It was finished in Dec. 1844, at a cost of $96,000.

⁷ In 1855 the city authorized the granting of charters for these transacted there forms an important item in the commerce of the State. In the extent and variety of its manufactures Brooklyn ranks among the first cities in the country. Located near the great commercial center, it has become the seat of an immense manufacturing interest.¹

The U. S. Navy Yard is located upon Wallabout Bay.² The premises connected with it occupy an area of 45 acres, and are inclosed on the land side by a high wall. Within the inclosure are various mechanic shops necessary in building and repairing vessels, a large and costly dry dock,³ two large buildings to cover ships of war while in process of building, extensive lumber warehouses, several marine railways, and a large amount of balls, cannon, and other munitions of war. The Naval Lyceum is filled with curiosities sent home by naval officers. Upon a gentle rise, a little s. of the Navy Yard, is a U. S. Marine Hospital⁴ for the care of sick and infirm seamen belonging to the navy. Near it is an extensive laboratory for the manufacture of medicines for the navy.⁵ The grounds belonging to these establishments occupy an area of 35 acres. A little s. of the Navy Yard, upon Park Avenue, are extensive Marine Barracks.

The city is well supplied with pure, soft water, derived from Hempstead Hook, Valley, and Spring-

city railroads to the parties who should offer to carry passengers at the lowest price. The Brooklyn City R. R. Co., formed Dec. 17, 1853, received the grants; and the fare upon the several lines, without regard to distance, is 6 cents. The following is a list of these several railroads:—

² The land occupied by the Navy Yard was ceded to the General Government by the State in 1807.

³ The site for the dry dock was fixed by Col. Baldwin, in 1826; but efficient work was not commenced until 1841. It was subsequently prosecuted under the charge of several engineers, as follows:—

Prof. Edward H. Courtenay; Aug. 1, 1841, to Aug. 1, 1842.....	$35,264.25
Gen. William Gibbs McNeil; Oct. 10, 1844, to April 1, 1845.....	114,671.83
W. P. S. Sanger; April 1, 1845, to June 23, 1846.....	115,951.81
Wm. J. McAlpine; June 23, 1846, to Oct. 1, 1849.....	1,114,311.09
Gen. Chas. B. Stuart; Oct. 1, 1849, to Aug. 30, 1851.....	782,974.63
Total cost.....	$2,113,173.61

The work was suspended from Aug. 1842, till Oct. 1844. The main chamber is 286 feet long by 35 feet wide at the bottom, and 307 feet long by 98 feet wide at the top. Depth, 36 feet. The masonry foundations are 400 by 120 feet, upon piles driven 40 feet into the earth. It is emptied by steam pumps in 4½ hours.—Stuart's Naval Dry Docks of the U. S.

⁴ This building is faced with white marble, and presents a fine architectural appearance. The average number of inmates is about 50.

field Creeks. It is brought $7\frac{3}{4}$ mi. in an open canal and $4\frac{3}{4}$ mi. in a brick conduit, thence pumped into a reservoir on Cypress Hill, 170 ft. above tide, and thence distributed in iron pipes throughout the city. The conduit has a capacity of 40,000,000 gallons per day, and the pumps can raise 10,000,000 gal. per day. The reservoir is 20 feet deep, and has a capacity of 167,000,000 gals. The whole cost of the work is estimated at \$4,200,000.¹ The Fire Departments of the Eastern and Western Districts are separately organized under special acts.² The city is supplied with gas by 3 companies.

The City Park, between Park and Flushing Avenues and Navy and Park Sts., contains 7 acres; Washington Park, between Myrtle and De Kalb Avenues and Cumberland and Canton Sts., contains 33 acres. It occupies the site of Fort Green of the Revolution. In the newly surveyed sections several sites for parks have been reserved by the city.

The City Armory, at the corner of Henry and Cranberry Sts., was erected in 1858, at a cost of $14,000. A State Arsenal, on Clinton St., was built in 1856, at a cost of $40,000.

The City Hall, situated at the junction of Fulton and Court Sts., is a fine building, faced with white marble.³ Besides these, there are in the city 9 banks of discount, 5 savings' banks, and 10 stock fire insurance companies.

The Public Schools are under the charge of a board of education, consisting of 45 members. The city contains 32 school districts; and in 1857 there were employed 320 teachers,—27 males and 293 females. The whole number of children between 4 and 21 years of age is 46,000, of whom 35,817, or 78 per cent., attended school during some portion of the year. The total expenses of the schools for 1857 was $231,474.61. A normal school for the professional instruction of teachers has been established.

The Packer Collegiate Institute, for girls, occupies an elegant building upon Jorolimon St., w. of the City Hall. It was incorp. May 8, 1845, as the "Brooklyn Female Academy." Its name was changed March 19, 1853, in honor of Mrs. Wm. S. Packer, who endowed the institution with $65,000. An astronomical observatory is connected with it.

The Brooklyn Collegiate and Polytechnic Institute, for boys, on Livingston St., was incorp. April 7, 1854. It was established by a stock company, with a capital of $75,000, and has accommodations for 450 pupils. Besides these, there are in the city 100 private schools and seminaries, several of which are large institutions, with corps of professors and with permanent investments. The aggregate number of pupils in attendance at the schools is 2,600.

The Brooklyn Institute was incorp. Nov. 20, 1824. It occupies a commodious building on Washington St., the gift of Augustus Graham. It has a free library, provides free lectures and lessons in drawing and painting for apprentices, and its rooms are depositories for books, maps, models, and drawing apparatus.

The Brooklyn Athenæum and Reading Room, on the corner of Atlantic and Clinton Sts., was incorp. Jan. 28, 1852. It occupies a large three story edifice, erected at a cost of $60,000. The first story is used for mercantile purposes, the second for a library and reading room, and the third for public lectures.

The Law Library in Brooklyn, incorp. Jan. 8, 1850, is located at 341 Fulton St.

The Naval Lyceum, within the Navy Yard, was established in 1833 by officers of the navy. It has a fine library and museum.

The Kings County Lodge Library Association, at Williamsburgh, was incorp. Feb. 7, 1847.

Among the societies for intellectual improvement are the Hamilton Library Association, founded in 1830; the Franklin Debating Association, in 1852; the Young Men's Association, in 1853; the St. Charles Institute, in 1854; the Eccleston Literary Association, in 1854; and the Columbia Literary Association, in 1855. The Great Northwestern Zephyr Association, designed to encourage native talent in music, painting, and sculpture, was organized in 1838. The Philharmonic Society

¹ This great work is just completed. Until a very recent date the city has depended upon wells and cisterns for its supply of water. There were 122 public cisterns in the city; but all the supplies were entirely inadequate to the demand for water. The first agitation for a better supply of water commenced in 1835; but nothing was accomplished until 1847, when a report was made recommending the building of reservoirs to be supplied from wells. In 1849, W. J. McAlpine submitted a plan for obtaining a supply from the streams flowing into Jamaica Bay. The question of prosecuting this work at public expense was repeatedly voted down. Several private companies caused surveys to be made, and one of them acquired titles to the streams in question; and June 4, 1856, the Common Council subscribed $1,300,000 to the stock of the Nassau Water Company. The work was commenced July 31, 1856, under the charge of James

P. Kirkwood, Chief Engineer. Feb. 11, 1857, the rights of the Nassau Company were vested in the city. The works were completed in May, 1859. It is contemplated erecting another reservoir upon Prospect Hill.

² The Fire Department of the Western District, under the care of 5 commissioners, has 7 fire districts, 22 engines, 4 hook and ladder companies, 7 hose companies, and 10 alarm bells. The Fire Department of the Eastern District has 6 fire districts, 13 engines, 3 hook and ladder companies, 4 hose companies, and 2 alarm bells.

³ This building contains the city and most of the co. offices. It was commenced in 1836; but work was suspended in 1837 and was not resumed until 1846. It was completed in 1848, in a style much less costly than that of the original design.

Mohawk Valley, previous to 1700. The names of the first settlers and the precise date of their settlement are unknown. The first church (Bap.) was organized Sept. 3, 1794; Rev. Abijah Peck was the founder and first pastor.¹

CORINTH—was formed from Hadley, April 20, 1818. A part of Moreau was annexed Jan. 28, 1848. It lies upon the Hudson, in the n. e. part of the co. The Kayaderosseras Mt. Range occupies the central and n. parts, and the Palmertown Mts. the s. e. corner. The declivities of these mountains are steep, rough, and broken, and their summits are rocky and mostly covered with forests. A valley 4 mi. wide separates the two ranges. The principal streams are the Hudson, forming the n. e. border, and Cole Brook, flowing along the s. foot of the mountains. The Great Falls, in the Hudson, are on the border of this town.² Among the mountains in the n. part are several fine lakes, the principal of which are Efnor, Hunt, Jenny, and Black Lakes. The soil is a sandy and clayey loam. Lumbering is extensively carried on, the Hudson River and small streams from the hills furnishing an abundance of water-power. Jessups Landing, (Corinth p. o.), on the Hudson, contains 3 churches and 88 dwellings; and South Corinth (p. v.) 1 church and 30 dwellings. The first settlement was made near S. Corinth, in 1790, by Fred. Parkman, Washington Chapman, Jeremiah Eddy, Jephtha Clark, and Jonathan Dewel.³ The first church (Bap.) was organized June 1, 1822.⁴

DAY—was formed from Edinburgh and Hadley, as "Concord," April 17, 1819. Its name was changed Dec. 3, 1827. It is the n. w. corner town of the co. Its surface is principally occupied by several spurs of the Kayaderosseras Mts. Oak and Bald Mts., the principal peaks, near the center of the town, are 900 feet above the river. The whole mountain region is wild, rugged, and rocky, and scarcely susceptible of cultivation. The Sacondaga River flows in a narrow valley through the s. part. Its course is tortuous, and it is navigable through the town. Paul, Glass House, and Allens Creeks are the other principal streams. Livingston, Sand, and Mud Lakes are small bodies of water in the n. part. The soil is a moderately fertile, sandy and clayey loam. Lumbering is extensively carried on. Huntsville (West Day p. o.) is a hamlet in the s. w. part. Day is a p. o. The first permanent settlers were Phineas Austin, James Thomas, and Dyer Perry, and families named Clay and Bond. The first religious meetings were held in the barn of Peter Van Vleck, in 1801-02. The first church (Bap.) was formed in 1809. The census reports 2 churches; Christian and Ref. Prot. D.

EDINBURGH—was formed from Providence, March 13, 1801, as "Northfield," and its name was changed April 6, 1808. A part of Day was taken off in 1819. It lies upon the w. border of the co., n. of the center. Its surface is principally occupied by two high mountain ridges separated by the valley of the Sacondaga River. The mountain regions are rocky and broken, with a thin, sandy or gravelly soil, and are covered with forests. Beechers Creek is a small mill stream w. of the river. The soil on the river flats is a good quality of clayey and gravelly loam. Lumbering is the chief occupation of the people. Batchelerville, (p. v.) on the e. bank of the Sacondaga, contains 30 houses; and Beechers Hollow, (Edinburgh p. o.), on the w. side of the river, 12. The first settlers came in about 1790 and located in the valley below "Fish House."⁵ The first church (Bap.) was organized in 1798, by Rev. Mr. Munroe, from Galway.⁶ Traces of an ancient Indian burial place are visible on the s. bank of the Sacondaga, near the border of Day.⁷

GALWAY⁸—was formed from Ballston, March 7, 1792. Providence was taken off in 1796. It lies on the w. border of the co., s. of the center. Its n. half is occupied by a group of rounded hills forming the southern continuation of the Kayaderosseras Mts. The surface of the s. half is gently undulating. The principal streams are head branches of Feegowesee and Calderwood Creeks and the Mourning Kil. The soil is generally a heavy clay, intermixed in places with sand and gravel. Galway, (p. v.) near the center of the town, was incorp. April 18, 1838. It contains 3 churches, a female seminary,⁹ and about 45 houses; West Galway, (p. v.), on the border of Fulton co., contains 1 church and 20 houses. Yorks Corners, (E. Galway p. o.), in the n. e.

³ Among the early settlers were Daniel Boardman and Stephen and Wm. Brayton, at Jessups Landing; Eliel Lindsay, at Great Falls; and Ambrose Clothier, in the s. e. part of the town, in 1796. Stephen Ashley kept the first inn, about 1800; and Daniel Boardman kept the first store and built the first grist-mill, about 1793.

⁴ There are 3 churches in town; Bap., Presb., M. E.

⁵ In 1791 the following persons were living in the valley, viz.:

Obadiah Perry, and Saml. Rogers. Daniel Abbott, from Conn., taught the first school, in 1794; — Chatfield kept the first store, in 1796; Isaac Deming built the first gristmill, in 1793; and Palmer Munroe, the first woolen factory, in 1808.

⁶ The census reports 3 churches; 2 M. E., Presb.

⁷ Tradition says that a band of Canadian Indians in canoes, on an expedition against the Mohawks, at this place fell into an ambush and were all slain. Bullets are frequently cut out of the trees in this vicinity.

⁸ Named from the native place of the first Scotch settlers.

part, Mosherville, (p. o.) near the n. border, Whiteside Corners, (p. o.) in the n. w., South Galway (p. o.) and North Galway (p. o.) are hamlets. The first settlers, from Galway, Scotland, located in town in 1774.¹ Rev. Simeon Smith, from Canterhook, came in town in 1778, and located near Yorks Corners.² He formed the first religious society (Bap.) during the following year.³

GREENFIELD—was formed from Saratoga and Milton, March 12, 1793. A part of Hadley was taken off in 1801. It occupies a position a little n. w. of the center of the co. The Palmerstown Mountain Range extends along the e. border, and the Kayaderosseras Range occupies the w. part of the town. A valley 6 mi. wide separates these ranges. The principal streams are the Kayaderosseras and its branches. The soil is generally a gravelly loam intermixed with clay. Sections of the surface are very stony. Iron ore has been found in the e. part. Greenfield Center (p. v.) contains 2 churches. Pop. 85. Jamesville, (Middle Grove p. o.) on the s. border, contains 1 church, 2 paper mills, and 31 houses; Mount Pleasant, (p. v.), in the n. w. corner, a glass factory and 140 inhabitants; and Porters Corners, (p. v.), near the center of the town, 2 churches and 20 houses. West Greenfield, (p. o.) North Greenfield, (p. o.) and Pages Corners are hamlets. The first settlers were two men named Haggerty and Root, who located near Haggerty Hill in 1784.⁴ The census reports 9 churches in town.⁵

HADLEY—was formed from Greenfield and Northumberland, Feb. 27, 1801. Its boundaries were amended Feb. 28, 1808. Corinth was taken off in 1818, and a part of Day in 1819. It lies upon the Hudson, in the n. e. corner of the co. A large share of its surface is occupied by the peaks and ridges of the Kayaderosseras Mts. Mt. Anthony is an isolated peak in the s. e. part.⁶ Sacondaga River flows through the s. part. Its valley is narrow; and below Conklingville its current is rapid and frequently interrupted by falls. The soil generally is a coarse, yellowish, unproductive sand and gravel. Lumbering and tanning are extensively carried on. Conklingville, (West Hadley p. o.) on the Sacondaga, in the w. part of the town, contains 1 church, a large tannery,⁷ and 39 houses. Hadley (p. o.) is a hamlet at the junction of Sacondaga and Hudson Rivers. Richard Hilton commenced the first settlement, just after the close of the Revolution, on the Hudson.⁸ The census reports 2 churches in town; a F. W. Bap. and a Wes. Meth.

HALF MOON⁹—was formed as a district, March 24, 1772, and as a town, March 7, 1788. Its name was changed to "Orange" April 17, 1816, and the original name was restored Jan. 16, 1820. Waterford was taken off in 1816, and Clifton Park in 1828. Its surface is undulating and broken by the narrow ravines of small streams. Hudson River forms the e. boundary, and the Mohawk a portion of the s. The river intervals are about $\frac{1}{2}$ mi. wide, and are bordered by a line of steep, clay bluffs 60 to 100 feet high. The other streams are Anthonys, Dwaas, and Steena Kils. The soil is a clayey and gravelly loam upland, and a fine quality of alluvium in the intervals. Crescent¹⁰ (p. v.) is a canal village near the center of the s. border of the town. Pop. 593. Middletown, (Half Moon p. o.) $1\frac{1}{2}$ mi. e. of Crescent, has a pop. of 230; Mechanicsville, (p. v.), at the mouth of Anthonys Kil, lies mostly in Stillwater. Pop. in Half Moon, 495. Clifton Park, (p. v.) on the e. border, is about one half in this town. Newtown and Smithtown are hamlets. The first settlements are supposed to have been made between 1680 and '90, by Germans, on the Mohawk flats.¹¹ The first church (Ref. Prot. D.) was organized in 1800.¹²

¹ Among the early settlers were John and James Major, John McClelland, Wm., Robt., and Alex. Kelsey, and John McHarg, who all came over in the same ship, in 1774. The first death was that of James Major, killed by the fall of a tree. Sept. 31, 1776; John McClelland or — Prendergast kept the first store, in 1780; Daniel Campbell built the first gristmill.

² Mr. Smith was accompanied by his parents and 3 brothers-in-law, Simon Bahcock, Reuben Mattison, and Joseph Bawn. ³ The census reports 6 churches in town; 2 Bap., Christian, Friends, M. E., and Presb.

⁴ Among the other early settlers were — Brewster, Wm. Scott, a soldier of the Revolution, who came in 1785; Isaac Denison, John Benedict, Nathl. Seymour, and Benj. Ingham, in 1787; Jas. Vail and Chas. Mirick, in 1789; Isaac and Darius Stephens, — Reynolds and his sons, in 1790; Eesck Turlot, in 1793; and — Miner, soon after. Joel Reynolds kept the first inn, in 1789; Gershom Morehouse built the first saw and grist mill, at Middle Grove, the same year. Benj. Clinch kept the first store at Porters Corners, in 1787.

⁵ 3 Bap., 2 M. E., 2 Friends, Cong., and Univ.

⁶ Iron ore was formerly obtained on the w. side of this mountain, to supply the furnace at Luzerua.

⁷ This tannery consumes 5,000 cords of bark and manufactures 50,000 sides of leather per annum.

⁸ Alex. Stewart settled on the Hudson in 1788. Eliah Kils

Walker, at Hadley, in 1790. — Wilson taught the first school, in 1791–92. Delane & Hazard built the first sawmill, in 1791; and Alex. Stewart, the first gristmill, in 1803. Jonathan Flanders kept the first inn, and Jeremy Rockwell the first store, in 1807. Col. Gordon Conkling built the tannery at Conklingville and placed the first stone tng on the river.

⁹ Named from the crescent shape of the land between the Hudson and the Mohawk.

¹⁰ The canal crosses the Mohawk at this place on a stone aqueduct 1,150 feet long and supported by 26 stone piers.

¹¹ In 1689 it was resolved by the authorities of Albany to remove the fort about the house and barn of Harme Liveese, at Half Moon, to a more convenient place,—from which it is inferred that a considerable settlement existed at that time. In 1714 the precinct of Half Moon contained 101 inhabitants. Among the early settlers were Olbert Onderkirk, on the flats, — Fort, on the Judge Leland farm, and — Taylor, at Mechanicsville, before 1763. The ancient stone house on the Dansbach place, in the s. w. corner of the town, was built in 1718, by Killian Van Den Bergh. There was a sawmill on Steena Kil, near Crescent, in 1762. Wm. Bradshaw built a gristmill on Dwaas Kil at the close of the Revolution. A bridge was erected across the Mohawk in 1794, at a cost of $12,000.

¹² The census reports 7 churches in town; 3 M. E., Bap., Wes. Meth., Presb., and Friends.

MALTA—was formed from Stillwater, March 3, 1802, and a part of Saratoga was annexed March 28, 1805. It lies upon the w. bank of Saratoga Lake, s. e. of the center of the co. Its surface is chiefly an undulating upland, 60 to 80 feet above Saratoga Lake, and broken by the deep gulleys of small streams. The streams are Kayaderosseras Creek, forming the n. boundary, Ballston Outlet Creek, an inlet, and Anthony's Kil, the outlet of Round Lake, and Drummonds Brook, flowing into Saratoga Lake. Round Lake, in the s. e., is nearly circular, and 1½ mi. in diameter. A swampy region covering an area of several hundred acres lies in the n. e. part of the town, at the mouth of the Kayaderosseras. The soil is principally a light, sandy loam, with clay and muck in the lowlands. Deming Street, (Malta p. o.,) near the center of the town, contains 1 church and 17 houses. Maltaville, (p. o.,) in the s. part, Malta Ridge, in the n., and Halls Corners, are hamlets. The first settlers were two men named Drummond and McKelpin, who came before the Revolution and located w. of the lake.¹ The census reports 5 churches in town.²

MILTON—was formed from Ballston, March 7, 1792, and a part of Greenfield was taken off in 1793. It lies a little s. of the center of the co. Its surface is moderately hilly in the n., and undulating in the s., with a slight inclination toward Kayaderosseras Creek, which flows s. e. through the center of the town. This stream has a rapid fall and furnishes a valuable water-power. Feegowesee Creek, from the w., is its principal tributary. In the n. part are limestone ridges, extensively quarried for building stone and lime. The Saratoga mineral spring region extends through the s. e. part. The soil is generally a sandy loam. Ballston Spa, (Ballston p. o.,) the co. seat, was incorp. March 21, 1807. It is situated on Kayaderosseras Creek, in the s. e. corner of the town. It contains the co. buildings, 2 seminaries,³ 5 churches, 2 printing offices, and several manufacturing establishments.⁴ Pop. 2,285, of which 1,941 are in this town. This village has long been celebrated for its mineral springs.⁵ Rock City Mills (p. v.) contains 3 paper mills and 34 houses; West Milton (p. v.) a church, a paper mill, a shingle mill, a hoe factory, and 40 houses; Bloodville a scythe, edge tool, and knitting factories, and 40 houses; and Factory Village 2 paper mills and 22 houses. Milton Center and Cranes Village are hamlets. The first settlement in town was made by David Wood and his sons Stephen, Benj., Elijah, David, Nathan, and Enoch, who bought 600 acres and moved into town before the Revolution.⁶ The first church (Bap.) was organized Jan. 22, 1793.⁷

MOREAU⁸—was taken from Northumberland, March 28, 1805. A part was annexed to Corinth in 1848. It lies in the great bend of the Hudson, in the n. e. corner of the co. The w. part of the town is occupied by the rocky and precipitous peaks of the Palmertown Mt. Range. The central and e. portions are undulating and broken by the narrow ravines of small streams. The Hudson River forms the n., the e., and a part of the w. boundary of the town. Upon its course are numerous rapids and waterfalls.⁹ The Snook Kil and its tributaries drain the s. part of the town. The soil is generally a light, yellow, sandy loam, but in the s. and w. are tracts of clay and gravel. South Glens Falls, (p. v.,) on the Hudson, opposite Glens Falls, contains several manufacturing establishments;¹⁰ pop. 513. Fortsville, (p. v.,) in the central part, contains 25 houses. Clarks Corners, Reynolds Corners, and State Dam are hamlets. Moreau Station is a p. o., situated on the R. & W. R. R. Settlements are said to have been made before the Revolution; but their history is only a vague tradition.¹¹ The first church (Bap.) was built in 1795.¹²

³ The Ballston Spa Institute, for boys, was established in 1846. The Ballston Spa Academy was opened in 1855.

⁴ In the village are a cotton, oilcloth, edge tool, 2 seamless bag, and 2 knitting factories, a tannery, and 2 gristmills. A fig. co. was incorp. here March 10, 1810.

⁵ These springs were first discovered in the survey of the Kayaderosseras Patent in 1769. They are situated on the margin of a small stream that flows into Kayaderosseras Creek. The Old Spring, formerly much used, was greatly impaired by the opening of La Fayette Spring, within 30 feet, in 1826. Washington Spring was located in 1827, by boring 231 feet in the slate. The Saline, or United States Spring, is considerably impregnated with salt. Besides these are the Fulton and Franklin Springs and the Low Well. In 1817, 4 springs were discovered within 20 feet of each other in the bed of the stream. Their properties were unlike, and after a little time they became fresh. These springs are generally clear, cool, and sparkling. Their average temperature is about 50°. The mineral water is similar to that of the Saratoga Springs, only less strong. Gas is copiously discharged with these waters.

⁶ Bennajah Douglass, grandfather of Hon. Stephen A. Douglass, built a log house near the spring, for the accommodation of visitors, in 1792. Silas Adams and Elijah Walbridge located in the n. part of the town in 1784-85. In 1792 Nicholas Low built a tavern close by the spring; and in 1804 he erected the "Sans Souci Hotel."

⁷ The census reports 8 churches in town; 2 Bap., 2 M. E., 2 Presb., Prot. E., and R. C.

⁸ Named from Marshal Moreau, who visited the U. S. in 1804-05.

¹¹ A man named Marvin was the first settler at Fortsville, about 1795; Edward and Elijah Durban and Ilolly St. John were the first settlers at Clarks Corners; — Hamilton built the first gristmill, about 1800. Abel Crandall kept the first inn, in 1798.

NORTHUMBERLAND—was formed from Saratoga, March 16, 1798. A part of Hadley was taken off in 1801, Moreau in 1805, and Wilton in 1818. It lies upon the Hudson, n. of the center of the co. Its surface is level or undulating and broken by deep ravines. A line of clay and slate bluffs, 30 to 100 feet high, extends along the river. Snook Kil and its tributary, Beaver Dam Creek, are the principal streams. The soil is generally a light, sandy loam. This town shares with Fort Edward the Fort Miller Falls.¹ Gansevoort,² (p. v.) on Snook Kil, in the n. part of the town, contains 2 churches and a pop. of 162. It is a station on the S. & W. R. R. Bacon Hill³ (p. o.) and Northumberland, (p. o.), in the s. e. part of the town, are hamlets. Fort Miller was built in this town in 1755, under the direction of Col. Miller. It was located upon the flat, above the rapids, and was enclosed on three sides by the river. A blockhouse was built on the heights that commanded the position on the w. The first settlers probably came in before the Revolution. Among them was a man named Munroe,⁴ who built the first sawmill, at Gansevoort,⁵ There are 5 churches in town.⁶

PROVIDENCE—was formed from Galway, Feb. 5, 1796, and Edinburgh was taken off in 1801. It lies near the center of the w. border of the co. Its surface is mountainous in the n. e. and broken and hilly in the s. w. The high regions along the n. and e. borders are mostly covered with forests. Hagadorns, Hans, Cadmans, and Frenchmans Creeks, small mill streams rising in the mountains and flowing s. w. into Fulton co., are the principal watercourses. The soil is chiefly a coarse, yellow sand or gravel of poor quality. Large tracts are stony and rocky. Wooden ware, leather, and lumber are extensively manufactured. Barkerville (p. o.) and Hagadorns Mills are hamlets. Providence and West Providence are p. offices. The first settlement was made previous to the Revolution, but the settlers were driven off during the war. Among the first settlers after the war were Nathaniel Wells and Seth Kellogg.⁷ There are 3 churches in town; Bap., Christian, and M. E.

SARATOGA⁸—was formed as a district, March 24, 1772, and as a town, March 7, 1788. Easton (Washington co.) was taken off in 1789, a part of Greenfield in 1793, Northumberland in 1798, a part of Malta in 1802, and Saratoga Springs in 1819. It lies upon the Hudson, near the center of the e. border of the co. A range of high, rounded, and sometimes terraced hills extends n. and s. through the central and w. parts. These hills rise 450 feet above the Hudson and slope in every direction. Narrow alluvial flats bordered by high clay bluffs extend along the Hudson. Saratoga Lake forms a portion of the w. boundary. Fish Creek, the outlet of the lake, flowing through the n. part of the town, is the principal stream; and upon it are several fine mill sites. The other streams are small brooks. The soil n. of Fish Creek is light and sandy, and in the remaining parts of the town it is a gravelly and clayey loam. Three mineral springs, known as "Quaker Springs," issue from the Hudson River slate, in a ravine a little s. e. of the center of the town.⁹ Schuylerville,¹⁰ (p. v.) incorp. April 16, 1831, is situated on the river, at the mouth of Fish Creek. It contains 4 churches, the Schuylerville Academy, a newspaper office, a bank, cotton factory, and foundery; pop. 1,184. Victory Mills, (p. v.), situated on Fish Creek, contains 1 church, a machine shop, and an extensive cotton factory;¹¹ pop. 729. Quaker Springs, (p. v.) near the center of the town, contains 1 church and 22 houses. Grangerville, (p. o.), on Fish Creek, is a hamlet. Deans Corners and Coveville are p. offices. The first settlement was made in the early part of the last century, upon the Hudson River.¹² The first church (Ref. Prot. D.) was formed previous to the Revolutionary War.¹³ The census reports 7 churches in town.¹⁴

SARATOGA SPRINGS—was formed from Saratoga, April 9, 1819. It occupies a nearly

² Named from Col. Peter Gansevoort, who located here soon after the war.

³ Named from Ebenezer Bacon, who came from Conn. in 1794, and opened the first framed tavern the same year. The place has been called "Fiddletown" and "Popes Corners" at different times.

⁴ Munroe was a tery, and fled to Canada, and his property was confiscated.

⁵ Gansevoort discovered the Irons of Munroe's mill and erected a new sawmill. He soon after built a gristmill. Fort Miller bridge was first erected by a company incorp. March 16, 1803. The present bridge was erected in 1845. It has a double road track and a canal towing path. ⁶ 3 Ref. Prot. D., 2 M. E.

⁷ — Corey built the first sawmill, in 1786, and the first gristmill, soon afterward. The first inn was kept by — Shankland.

⁸ Written "Saratoga" until about 1793. Upon the old map

The name was first applied to a settlement on the Hudson, in the vicinity of the present village of Schuylerville. It is said to signify "swift water," and was applied to the rapids in the river, in contradistinction to still water, just below.

⁹ The water of these springs contains lime, magnesia, and iron, held in solution by carbonic acid, and a large proportion of common salt and soda.

¹⁰ Named in honor of Gen. Philip Schuyler, who resided here previous to the Revolution. During the war his buildings and mills were burned by order of Burgoyne.

¹¹ There are 455 looms in this factory. In 1857, 3,565,411 yds. of print cloths and silesias were manufactured.

¹² At the attack upon Old Fort Saratoga, upon the opposite side of the Hudson, in the fall of 1755, several sawmills and other buildings, upon Fish Creek and the river, were burned, and about 30 families were killed or taken prisoners.

¹³ The British troops made a riding school of this church during the war.

central position in the co. Its surface is rolling or moderately hilly. Kayaderosseras Creek and Saratoga Lake, forming the s. boundary, are skirted by a line of low bluffs. The streams are Ellis and Owl Pond Creeks. An extensive tract lying n. of Saratoga Lake and along the course of Owl Pond Creek is low and swampy. The soil is an inferior quality of yellowish, sandy loam. The far famed mineral springs, which give to the town its name, are situated about 3 mi. n. w. of Saratoga Lake. They are near the center of the mineral spring region, which has a radius of nearly 10 mi.¹ Saratoga Springs (p. v.) was incorp. April 17, 1826. It contains a female seminary,² 7 churches, 2 banks, 5 printing offices, 2 public halls, and 22 hotels.³ Pop. 5,129. The business of the village is principally connected with the entertainment of strangers during the fashionable watering season. The springs are on that part of the Kayaderosseras Patent that fell to the share of Rip Van Dam. Sir Wm. Johnson is said to have been the first white person who ever used the Saratoga waters for medicinal purposes. In 1767 he was brought to the place on a litter, and, after remaining several days, he was able to return on foot. His example was followed, and the visits of invalids soon became of frequent occurrence. In 1773, Derick Scowton made the first clearing and erected a hut. He was followed soon after by George Arnold and Saml. Norton.⁴ In 1783, Gen. Schuyler cut a road through from Fish Creek, and spent several weeks here, living in a tent. The next year he erected a framed house, (the first in town,) and annually afterward until his death he spent a part of the summer here with his family.⁵ Several prominent men have resided in the village.⁶ The census reports 7 churches in town.⁷

¹ High Rock Spring, the first discovered of these, was so named from a pyramidal mound of calcareous tuff 3½ feet high and 24½ feet in diameter at the base which has been formed around it. An aperture 1 foot in diameter opens from the top of the rock downward, in which the water generally rises 1½ feet above the surface of the ground. It is said that the water once overflowed the top; but at an early day the rock was cracked by the fall of a tree, and the water sunk to its present level. Congress Spring was discovered in 1792, by a hunting party, and named in compliment to John Taylor, one of the number, who had been a member of the Continental Congress. The present spring was obtained by sinking a well in the bed of the stream near the original fountain. The Columbia Spring, a few rods s. w. of the latter, is chalybeate, and constantly boiling from the escape of gas. It was opened in 1806, by G. Putnam. The Hamilton Spring, 60 rods n. E. of Congress, was discovered by G. Putnam, and brought into use by Dr. Clarke. The Pavilion Fountain, opened in 1839, has a smart, pungent taste. The Iodine Spring, situated a few rods w. of High Rock, was opened in 1839. The water contains a large proportion of iodine and very little iron. This spring has sometimes been called the Walton Spring, from Henry Walton, a large proprietor of lands in the vicinity. The Empire Spring, the most northerly in the village, was opened in 1846. It discharges 75 gallons per hour. The Washington Spring, 50 rods s. w. of Congress Spring, was opened in 1806. Putnam Spring is in the immediate vicinity. Flat Rock Spring, 100 rods n. E. from Hamilton, is chalybeate. President Spring is 30 rods n. E. of High Rock; Red Spring, 60 rods n. E. of President; and Monroe Spring, 15 rods n. of Flat Rock. Ten Springs were discovered in 1814, 1 mi. n. E. of the village. Ellis Spring is situated in a ravine 2 mi. s. w. of Congress. There are several other springs in the immediate vicinity. Baths are connected with most of these springs, and an immense trade has sprung up in the bottling and sale of the water. The temperature of the fountains ranges from 48° to 51°, and it is not sensibly affected by the seasons. The following table gives an analysis of several of these springs. The figures show the number of grains in a gallon of water.

² Temple Grove Female Seminary, a boarding school, was established in 1853. It has 11 teachers, and the number of students is limited to 100.

³ Several of these hotels are among the most extensive in the country. Union Hall was built in 1802, by G. Putnam; The Columbian, in 1808, by Jonathan Holmes; Congress Hall, in 1812, by G. Putnam; The Pavilion, in 1819, by Nathan Lewis; and The United States, in 1824, by John Ford. All of these have been enlarged since their erection.

⁴ Norton joined the British, and his property was confiscated.

⁵ Alexander Bryan and Henry Livingston were the first settle the first sawmill, the first large hotels, and opened several of the springs. Dr. Clemeot Blakely, the first physician, came with Putnam, and remained 3 years. John and Ziba Taylor opened the first stores, in 1794; Robt. Ellis and Geo. Peck built the first gristmill, in 1814; and Ward & Rogers, the first clothing works, in 1815. Henry Walton resided here for several years. He was proprietor of the whole village n. of Congress St. Several of the noted springs were on his estate.

taken off in 1789, and Malta in 1802. It lies upon the Hudson, s. e. of the center of the co. It is uneven in the s. and moderately hilly in the n. The highest point is about 250 feet above the Hudson. A range of clay bluffs 60 to 100 feet high borders upon intervalles of the Hudson and Anthonys Kil. The streams are generally small brooks flowing in deep gulleys worn in the drift deposits.¹ The n. w. corner borders upon Saratoga Lake. The river intervalles are alluvial. West of the river bluffs is a wide belt of heavy clay; and in the s. w. part is a sandy tract interspersed with swamps. Upon the lake shore is a sulphur spring.² Stillwater, (p. v.,) incorp. April 17, 1816, is situated on the Hudson. It contains 4 churches, and manufactories of lumber, paper, woollens, and castings. Pop. 552. Mechanicsville, (p. v.,) situated on the Hudson, at the mouth of Anthonys Kil, partly in this town and partly in Half Moon, is a station on the Troy & Saratoga R. R. It contains 5 churches, a printing office, and an extensive linen thread manufactory.³ Pop. 1,111,—616 in Stillwater, 495 in Half Moon. Bemis Heights,⁴ (p. o.,) on the Champlain Canal, near the Hudson, and Ketchums Corners (p. o.) are hamlets. This town was included in the Saratoga Patent of 1684; and settlement was commenced about 1750.⁵ The first church (Cong.) was established in 1763.⁶ There are 8 churches in town.⁷

WATERFORD⁸—was formed from Half Moon, April 17, 1816. It lies at the junction of the Hudson and Mohawk Rivers, in the s. e. corner of the co. Its area is about 7 sq. mi. Its surface is mostly an upland, 50 to 100 feet above the river. The Mohawk is bordered by an almost perpendicular range of slate bluffs, and the Hudson Valley by a range of clay bluffs. The soil is a sandy, clayey, and alluvial loam of great fertility. The falls in the Mohawk furnish a valuable water-power. Waterford,⁹ (p. v.,) incorp. April 6, 1801,¹⁰ situated on the Champlain Canal, near the confluence of the Hudson¹¹ and Mohawk Rivers, is an important station on the Troy & Saratoga R. R. and the Albany & Northern R. R. It contains 6 churches, a newspaper office, a bank, and several manufacturing establishments.¹² Pop. 3,083. Settlement was commenced by the Dutch at a very early day. The census reports 7 churches in town.¹³

WILTON—was formed from Northumberland, April 20, 1818. It lies a little n. e. of the center of the co. The Palmertown Mts., with their steep, rocky slopes and broken, forest-covered summits, extend across the n. w. corner. The center and s. w. are gently undulating, or broken by low ridges. The principal streams are Snook Kil and Bog Meadow and Cold Brooks. The soil in the e. and s. e. is a yellow, sandy loam resting on clay, and in some places swampy. At the foot of the Palmertown Mts. is a belt of productive gravel and clay loam. A heavy growth of white and yellow pine originally covered the plains, but little woodland now remains. Near Emersons Corners is a spring of acidulous and carbonated water, and in the s. part of the town is a sulphur spring. Wilton (p. o.) and Emersons Corners, both in the n. part of the town, are hamlets. The first settlement was made in 1774 or '75, by Rowland Perry and his sons Samuel, John, Benj., Absalom, Roswell, Artemas, Rowland, and Joseph, from Dutchess co.¹⁴ Near the mill pond on Snook Kil are traces of Indian occupation: pestles, broken pottery, and flint arrow heads have been found in abundance. The census reports 4 churches in town.¹⁵

² This spring is called the White Sulphur Spring. A few years since, a hotel and bathing house were erected here, and a small steamer was put upon the lake. The building was burned 2 or 3 years after, and the enterprise was abandoned.

³ The American Lincen Thread Manufacturing Co. was organized in 1852. The number of men employed is 100.

⁴ Named from Jonathan Bemis, who during the Revolution kept the only inn worthy of note on the Albany & Fort Edward Road.

⁵ Among the first settlers were John Thompson, Geo. Palmer, Benjamin, Dirck Swert, Euseign, Burlinghame, and Abel. The first gristmill was built by Geo. Palmer, before the Revolution.

⁶ This church was organized at Litchfield, Conn., in 1752, and in 1763 was removed to Stillwater. Rev. Robt. Campbell was the first pastor.

⁸ The Indians called the country around the mouth of the Mohawk "Nach-te-neck." This town was formerly known as Half Moon Point; and the semi-circular tract between the Hudson and the Mohawk was called Half Moon. Its present name originated from the fact that at the village of Waterford a ford crossed to Haver Island.

⁹ In 1784 the site of the village was purchased by Col. Jacobus Van Schoon, — Middlebrook, Ezra Hicock, Judge White, and several others, most of whom were from Conn.; and Florus

Bancker was employed to lay it out into village lots. July 11, 1841, a destructive fire occurred, which destroyed 130 buildings.

¹⁰ On the 25th of March, 1794, Ezekiel Ketchum, Jacobs Van Schoonhoven, Matthew Gregory, Isaac Keeler, John Pettett, Duncan Olyphant, and Thos. Smith were constituted trustees of Half Moon Point.

¹¹ A bridge across the Hudson at this place was built in 1804, at a cost of $50,000. The present structure, known as the "Union Bridge," was built in 1812, '13, and '14, at a cost of $20,000.

¹³ Bep., Cong., M. E., Presb., Prot. E., Ref. Prot. D., and R. C.

¹⁴ John Stiles, Ebenezer King, John Laing, Peter Johnson, and Jas. and Wm. McGregor settled in town in 1775; and John Boyce, Robt. Milligan, John Kendrick, and Enoch M. Place in 1784. John Laing built the first sawmill, in 1784-85, and Wm. McGregor the first gristmill, soon after the war. Stephen King kept the first inn, and — Ostrom the first store.

WASHINGTON COUNTY.

THIS county¹ was formed from Albany as "Charlotte County," March 12, 1772. Its name was changed April 2, 1784; Clinton co. was taken off in 1788; the e. portion was ceded to Vermont in 1790;² a strip along its s. border was annexed from Albany Feb. 7, 1791; and Warren co. was taken off in 1813. It lies on the e. border of the State, is centrally distant from Albany — mi., and contains an area of 834 sq. mi. The surface consists principally of a series of ridges extending n. e. and s. w., and the valleys between them. The remarkable depression which extends southerly from the s. extremity of Lake Champlain divides these ridges into two distinct groups,—the n. belonging to the Palmertown Mt. Range, and the s. constituting one of the connecting links between the highlands of Southern New York and those of Western Vermont. The s. group is subdivided into three principal ranges, which are all related and of the same general character. The most southerly of these ranges is a northerly continuation of the Taghkanick Range of Rensselaer co., occupying the greater part of White Creek and the e. part of Jackson. The declivities are usually steep, and the summits broad, broken, and rocky. The second—sometimes described as a continuation of the Petersburg Mts. of Rensselaer—constitutes the highlands of Cambridge, Jackson, Salem, and the e. part of Hebron and Granville. In Salem it spreads out like a fan between the streams. The third comprises the highlands of Easton, Greenwich, Argyle, Hartford, Granville, Hampton, and the e. part of Whitehall. It might with propriety be called Cossayuna Range, from the principal lake which it encloses. The declivities of these ranges are usually steep, and, except where broken by ledges, are arable to their summits. They gradually rise toward the e., reaching their culminating point near the e. border of the co. The highest summits are 1000 to 1200 feet above tide. These three ranges belong to one general group and are of the same geological formation. They are composed of slate rock, ledges of which crop out along their whole extent. Many of these ledges in Granville and Hebron are quarried, and furnish stone much valued for roofing, building, and ornamental purposes. Among the slate quarries are found numerous veins of injected quartz, intersecting the slate strata in every direction, varying from the thickness of paper to several inches. They often present cavities and surfaces beautifully studded with transparent crystals of quartz. The edges of the slate are sometimes bent and distorted by the quartz dikes, showing the extreme heat and great force of the injected veins. The soil in this system of highlands consists chiefly of disintegrated slate, and is very fertile.

The second group of highlands, belonging to the Palmertown Mt. Range, occupy the towns of Fort Ann, Dresden, Putnam, and the e. part of Whitehall. They belong to the primary formation, their rocks consisting principally of gneiss, granite, sandstone, and impure limestone. Their sides are very precipitous and broken, and their summits are wild irregular masses of naked, barren rocks. The valleys between them are narrow and rocky, often bordered by precipices many hundred feet in height. The soil is cold and unproductive, like that of all regions of a similar geological formation. A narrow valley extending s. w. from the s. extremity of South Bay divides the group into two ranges. Saddle Mt., overlooking South Bay and 1000 ft. above tide, is the highest peak in the s. range; and Black Mt., 2878 ft. above tide, is the highest peak in the n. range. Diameter Rock, on the n. shore of South Bay, is 1300 ft. above tide.⁴

¹ The original bounds of this co. were as follows:—All that part of the State n. of the present co. of Saratoga, and of a line extending from the mouth of Stony Creek 510 chains e.; thence s. to the Batten Kil, and along that stream to the s. line of Princetown, and thence to "Cumberland" co. Its w. line was the present w. line of Saratoga co., continued to Canada, and its e. line the w. line of "Cumberland" and "Gloucester" cos. These limits embraced the w. half of Vermont, n. of the Batten Kil, and the present co. of Warren, Essex, Clinton, and a part of Franklin.

² Named from Princess Charlotte, eldest daughter of Geo. III. ³ The act of cession, by commissioners appointed for the purpose, was dated Oct. 7, 1790, and the line was finally settled by commissioners from both States in 1812. The N. Y. commissioners were Smith Thompson, Simeon De Witt, and Geo. Tibbitts. See Notes to N. Y. Session Laws, April 15, 1814.

The Hudson River forms the s. half of the w. border of the co. A rich intervalle, from half a mi. to a mi. in width, bordered by a series of clay bluffs 20 to 60 ft. high, extends along its course. Most of the other streams of the co. are tributaries of the Hudson, and among them are the Hoosick, Batten Kil, Moses and Fort Edward Creeks, and many smaller streams. Wood Creek¹ is a deep, sluggish stream, flowing into Lake Champlain and draining the valley, which here extends from the lake to the Hudson. The soil along the valley is mostly a hard, stiff clay. The Mettowiee, or Pawlet, and the Poultney Rivers, from Vt., are tributaries of Wood Creek. In the co. are several other streams important as mill streams.² Lake Champlain s. of Ticonderoga is scarcely more than a ship canal through a reedy marsh bordered by rocky cliffs. Lake George lies along the n. w. border of the co. Among the hills in the interior are several small lakes, the principal of which is Cossayuna Lake, in Argyle.³

The various branches of agriculture form the leading pursuits of the people. The principal grains raised are rye, spring wheat, oats, buckwheat, and corn. Peas, beans, flax, and potatoes are also extensively cultivated. Stock raising, dairying, and wool growing are also extensively pursued. The manufactures of the co. are principally along the Hudson and Batten Kil.

The county offices are divided among several towns. The courts are held alternately at Salem and Sandy Hill, and the clerk's office and co. poorhouse are located at Argyle.⁴ The jail is connected with the courthouse at Salem, and all prisoners sentenced for more than two months are sent to the penitentiary at Albany.

The principal public works in the co. are the Champlain Canal,⁵ extending in and along Wood Creek and the Hudson to Greenwich; the Saratoga & Whitehall R. R., extending through Fort Edward, Kingsbury, Fort Ann, and Whitehall, with a branch to Lake Station and another to the State line; the Troy & Rutland R. R., extending from Eagle Bridge, through White Creek, Jackson, and Salem, to the State line; and the Rutland and Washington R. R., extending n. upon the Vt. line and entering Granville. The first newspaper in this co. was established at Salem in 1788.⁶

Upon the advent of the whites, few Indians were found within the limits of this co.; but Indian trails and implements of Indian art frequently found show that it had been inhabited at a former period. The n. portion of the co., lying in the natural channel of communication between Hudson River and Lake Champlain,¹ became the great highway of hostile parties passing between the Five Nations and the Canada Indians, and at a later day by the more formidable armies of disciplined troops in the struggles which ended in the conquest of Canada. The French made incursions upon the English and Five Nations in 1665, 1688, and 1693; and these were returned by attacks upon the French and Indians in Canada in 1691 and 1692. For several years after, the passage of small hostile parties was of frequent occurrence. In 1709, Forts Ann and Nicholson were erected by the English and garrisoned for the protection of the northern frontier; but upon the return of peace they were abandoned.² Frequent incursions of small parties were made in the War of 1748, and many persons were murdered,—though no regular engagement took place. Again, during the French War of 1755, forts were built at Ft. Ann, Ft. Edward, and the whole region around the head of Lakes George and Champlain became the theater of stirring military events. The armies that attacked Ticonderoga, and those that finally effected the conquest of all the French posts upon the lakes, marched through this region; and it formed a portion of the great battle-ground between the armies of two nations contending for the sovereignty of a continent. In the summer and fall of 1777, upon the advance of Burgoyne, war again, for a brief space, spread terror and desolation over the whole region "Skenesborough" was burned and abandoned on the 7th of July, Fort Ann was taken on the 8th, Fort Edward on the 28th, and the country was overrun by the enemy soon after. On the 13th and 14th of Sept. the British army crossed the Hudson into Saratoga co.; and about the 10th of Oct. Fort Edward was re-taken by the Americans, thus effectually cutting off the retreat of the army, already disheartened by their defeat at Bemis Heights. The surrender of Burgoyne put an end to the war in this section; and the subsequent history of the co. is but the record of the continued and progressive triumphs of peaceful industry.

At Fort Edward a dam 27 ft. high and 900 feet long was built by the State in 1821, as a feeder to the canal, but, the Glens Falls feeder superseding it, it was sold to a company in 1840 and cut down to 16 ft. The Saratoga Dam (where the Champlain Canal crosses the Hudson into Saratoga co.) is 1290 feet long. Batten Kil is crossed by 9 dams. White Creek furnishes a large number of mill sites, once improved, but now mostly abandoned. Black Creek has several valuable and improved mill sites. Mettowiee or Pawlet River has also several valuable mill sites.

ARGYLE³—was granted by patent, May 21, 1764,⁴ and formed as a town, March 23, 1786. Greenwich was taken off in 1803, and Fort Edward in 1818. It lies near the center of the co. Its surface is rolling in the n. and w. and broken and hilly in the s. and e. The highlands are divided into broad ridges with abrupt declivities. In the n. part Tamerack Swamp covers several hundred acres. The principal stream is the Moses Kil,⁵ which flows in a s. w. direction through near the center of the town. The other streams are small brooks, which flow into the Hudson, Batten Kil, and Wood Creek. Cossayuna Lake⁶ is a beautiful sheet of water, 3 mi. long, situated in a narrow valley in the s. e. part of the town. It is everywhere surrounded by steep hill slopes, and contains several beautiful green islands. To the n. e. of this lake, high up among the hills, is Argyle Lake,⁷ a small sheet of water, half a mile in circumference. The soil of the town is generally a productive, slaty or gravelly loam. A mineral spring, 1 mi. n. w. from South Argyle, is said to resemble those at Saratoga. Argyle (p. v.) was incorp. March 27, 1838. It is the seat of the Argyle Academy. Pop. 375. North Argyle and South Argyle (p. offices) each contains about 20 houses, and The Hook 10. Argyle was conveyed to 83 families, and in 1765 the first settlement commenced.⁸ The family of John Allen, a tory living on Lot 25, was murdered by Indians belonging to Burgoyne's army, July 26, 1777.⁹ The first church (Asso. Ref. Presb.) was formed in 1793;¹⁰ Rev. Geo. Mairs was the first preacher.

³ Named in honor of the Scottish Duke of Argyle.

⁴ This patent was granted to Scotch immigrants (who came over under Laughlin Campbell in 1733-40) and to their descendants. It embraced 47,450 acres, and granted township privileges. Duncan Read, Neal Shaw, Alexander McNachten, (McNaughton), and Neal Gillespie were appointed trustees. A stately avenue, called "The Street," 7 mi. in length and 24 rods in width, was laid out (on paper) and surveyed e. and w. through the center of the township, and lots were laid out on each side. In the rear farm lots were laid out, thus affording accommodations for proprietors and tenants. In the summer of 1764 this tract was surveyed and divided into 141 lots, in accordance with this plan, by Arch. Campbell, of N. J., and Chris. Yates, of Schenectady. The natural impediments in the way, however, precluded the possibility of building the street or in any way realizing the plan.

⁶ Called at different times "Long," "Legbrants," "McEachrons," "Cowans," and "Big Lake." The name given on the map and in the text, after having gone out of use, was restored by Dr. Fitch in his survey. Cossayuna is said by the St. François Indians to signify "The Lake at our pines," and is highly expressive of its original scenery.

⁷ Summit Lake is a picturesque sheet of water in the co., upon the very summit of the central range of hills. Two sawmills are applied by its outlet.

⁹ This family had been assured of protection by Burgoyne. Their murder, together with that of Jane McCrea, had the tendency to convert many persons who had hitherto been Tories into active partisans in the American cause.

¹⁰ The census reports 5 churches; 2 Asso. Presb., M. E., Ref. Presb. or Cong., and Prot. E.

Batten Kil, below Galesville, are 60 ft. high, and well worthy of note. The soil is an excellent quality of sandy and gravelly loam. Limestone of an excellent quality abounds in this town. Machinery, agricultural implements, and woolen goods are manufactured at Galesville. Easton Corners (North Easton p. o.) contains 30 houses; Easton (p. v.) 17; South Easton (p. v.) 15; and Crandalls Corners 8. Parts of Union Village and Galesville¹ are in this town. The date of the first settlement is unknown, but it was probably several years after the Saratoga Patent² was issued. In 1709 a fort³ was built on the hill top, 1 mi. s. of Galesville, and a few families settled under its shelter; but the dread of Indian hostilities prevented the settlement from spreading. On the 30th of Nov. 1745, the enemy made a descent upon the place, killed 30 persons, and took 60 prisoners, including a portion of the garrison, who were decoyed from the fort by the Indians feigning to be wounded. The remaining part of the garrison burned the fort and unfinished blockhouses and withdrew, leaving the frontier unprotected. Settlers did not return until 1760.⁴ At Schuylerville is a bridge across the Hudson 800 ft. long. The first religious meeting (Quaker) was held in 1778. A Ref. Prot. D. church was formed in 1805; Rev. Philip Duryea was the first preacher.⁵

FORT ANN—was formed, as "Westfield," March 23, 1786. Hartford was taken off in 1793, and Putnam in 1806. It received its present name, April 6, 1808, from the old fort erected here in 1709. It lies s. of the southern extremity of Lake Champlain, and s. e. of Lake George. Its central and w. parts are occupied by the high and rocky peaks of the Palmertown⁶ Mts., here divided into three distinct ranges,—French Mt., in the w. part, Mt. Putnam, in the center, and Fort Ann Mts., in the e. The extreme e. edge of the town is occupied by uplands belonging to the Cossayuna Range. Diameter Rock and Black Mt., on the line of Dresden, are the highest peaks, and are 1300 to 2500 ft. above tide. The valleys separating the ranges of the Palmertown Mts. are known as "Furnace" and "Welchs Hollow." The principal streams are Wood Creek, Halfway Creek, Furnace Hollow Creek, and Podunk Brook. The principal bodies of water are Orebed, Sly, Copeland, Hadlock, and Trout Ponds. The soil in the mountain region is hard and sterile, scarcely strong enough to support the natural growth of forest trees; but in the valleys it is a gravelly loam alternating with a stiff clay.⁷ Iron⁸ and woolen goods are manufactured to some extent. Fort Ann⁹ (p. v.) has 608 inhabitants; Griswolds Mills (p. v.) about 14 houses. West Fort Ann, (p. o.), South Bay, Canes Falls, and Comstocks Landing (p. o.) are small villages. Fort Ann was one of a chain of military works erected in 1709, to facilitate the extensive operations then in progress against Canada.¹⁰ It stood upon the w. side of Wood Creek, about half a mile from the present village of Fort Ann, the Champlain Canal passing partly across the spot which it enclosed. It was built at the joint expense of England and the Colonies. Artillery Patent, covering the e. part of this town, was granted Oct. 24, 1764, to Jos. Walton and 23 other Provincial officers, in equal shares, irrespective of grade. Settlement was not generally begun until after the Revolution. An engagement occurred here, July 8, 1777, between the rear guard of the retreating American army, under Col. Long, and the advanced guard of the British, under Col. Hill.¹¹ In Oct. 1780, a blockhouse in this town was burned by the enemy. The first church (Bap.) was formed in 1789;¹² Rev. Sherman Babcock was the first pastor.

FORT EDWARD—was formed from Argyle, April 10, 1818. It lies upon the e. bank of the Hudson, near the center of the w. border of the co. A wide intervalle extends along the

² This patent was granted Nov. 4, 1684, and received Oct. 6, 1708. The part e. of the Hudson was 12 mi. long and 6 mi. broad.

³ This fort was built of thick posts driven into the ground close to each other, in the manner of palisades, forming a square, "the length of whose sides was within the reach of a musket-shot." At each corner were houses for officers; and within the palisades were barracks of timbers.—Kalm's Travels.

⁴ Among the first settlers of about this period were Det. Becker, Elijah Freeman, Thos. and Michael Beadle, William Thompson, Nathao Potter, John Swain, and William Coffin. A school was taught near Union Village as early as 1787. Gerrit Linsaingh kept the first store, in 1794; and John Gale built the first mill, at Galesville, in 1810. The first woolen factory was built in the summer of 1846, by Gale, Rodgers & Reynolds.

⁵ There are 5 churches in town; 2 M. E., 2 Ref. Prot. D., and 1 Friends.

⁶ Said to be named from a small remnant of Indians, who were driven from Conn. and settled here.

⁸ A blast furnace was built at Mt. Hope in 1826, which makes

5 tons of pig iron daily. A forge was built at West Fort Ann in 1828, for making anchors and chain cables.

⁹ Incorp. March 7, 1820.

¹⁰ While this fort was in process of erection, a force of 1500 French and Indians were sent to destroy it; but, learning that Col. Nicholson was posted here with a superior force, they returned. While the English were awaiting at this place the opening of a road and the construction of bateaux on Lake Champlain, a fatal sickness broke out in this camp, and great numbers died as if poisoned. In October Col. Nicholson returned with his crippled forces to Albany. Charlevoix states that this sickness was produced by the treachery of the Indians, who threw the skins of their game into the swamp above the camp. It is more probable that it was a malignant dysentery caused by the malaria of the swamps and the extreme heat.

river, but toward the e. the surface rises to a height of 200 to 300 ft. and spreads out into a beautifully undulating upland. The Hudson, Moses Kil and Dead Creek are the principal streams. The soil upon the river is a mixture of heavy clay and alluvium, but farther e. it is a sandy or gravelly loam. In town are several extensive manufacturing establishments.¹ Fort Edward² (p. v.) is finely situated on the Hudson. Pop. in 1858, 1,565. The Washington Co. Seminary and Female Collegiate Institute,³ one of the largest academic institutions in the State, is located at this village. Fort Miller (p. v.) is situated on the Hudson, about 7 mi. below Fort Edward. Pop. 225. Fort Edwards Center is a p. o., and Durkeetown is a hamlet. The first family that located in the town or co. was that of Col. Lydius, son of Rev. John Lydius, who, having acquired the title to Delliu's discarded patent,⁴ built a house, and engaged in trade with the Indians at what is now Fort Edward Village.⁵ His daughter, Catherine, was born here, and was the first white child born in the co. Fort Nicholson was built in 1709, but was soon after abandoned. As a part of the plan of military operations against Canada, about 600 men, under Gen. Lyman, were sent forward, in June, 1755, to build a fort where Fort Nicholson had formerly stood, at the great carrying place to Lake Champlain.⁶ Fort Edward was a very important depôt for arms and rendezvous for armies in the great expeditions against Canada; and it served as a vast hospital for the sick and wounded until 1760, when it was allowed to go to decay. During the Revolution it was again occupied by both British and Americans. Fort Miller is named from the fort built, about 1755, in the bend of the river opposite the village.⁷ After the peace this town settled rapidly. Wm. Duer,⁸ son-in-law to Lord Sterling, was the pioneer of Ft. Miller, where he built a large house and sawmill. There are 6 churches in town.⁹

GRANVILLE—was formed March 23, 1786. It is situated upon the e. border of the co., n. of the center. Its surface is undulating and hilly. The ridges generally slope gradually to their summits, which are elevated 300 to 500 ft. above the valleys. Quarries of excellent roofing slate have been opened in different parts of the town.¹⁰ Wide intervals of excellent land extend along the course of Mettowee, or Pawlet,¹¹ and Indian Rivers. The soil is a slaty and gravelly loam, and is particularly adapted to potatoes, large quantities of which are exported. A limited amount of manufactures¹² is carried on in town. Granville¹³ (p. v.) contains an academy and 450 inhabitants; North Granville (p. v.) a female seminary and 220 inhabitants; Middle Granville (p. v.) 439 inhabitants; and South Granville (p. v.) 111. The land in this town is embraced in several grants made to about 30 captains and lieutenants who had served in the French War.¹⁴ Barnaby Byrnes Patent, of 2000 acres, in the s. e. corner, was sold to Kenneth McKenneth, a merchant of New York, who again sold it to Donald Fisher, a tailor of that city. Fisher induced several relatives of his to remove from Scotland and settle upon his tract. In the Revolution he withdrew to Canada, and his lands were confiscated and sold; but, owing to some informality, the ² Under the M. E. denomination. The seminary building is 300 ft. long by 40 broad, and 3 stories high, besides an extensive wing. It has accommodations for 500 pupils. ⁴ See page —.

⁵ His house was burned by the Indians in 1749, and his son taken prisoner.

⁶ It was named Fort Lyman; but a few years after the name was changed to Ft. Edward, in honor of Edward, Duke of York, grandson of Gen. II., and brother of Gen. III. It stood on the bank of the river, n. of the creek, and within the present village limits. It was 4 sided, with bastions on 3 angles, the fourth being protected by the river. Its ramparts of earth and timber, 16 ft. high and 22 thick, were mounted with 6 cannon and enclosed several large buildings. Storehouses and barracks were built on Monroe's Island, opposite. A band of savages attempted to surprise it in Aug. 1759, but were repulsed by Maj. Israel Putnam and his rangers. In the winter following, Putnam saved the fort from destruction by a characteristic exercise of cool intrepidity and daring. The fort accidentally took fire, and the flames spread with great rapidity in the immediate vicinity of the powder magazine. Putnam placed himself in the path of the flames, and fought desperately until the fire was subdued; and when he retired from his post his arms, face, and hands were entirely skinned, and the frail covering of the magazine was completely charred.

The murder of Jane McCrea took place July 27, 1777, near a spring, and beside a venerable pine tree a little e. of the village. This tragedy was at once reported throughout the country, and it aided greatly to weaken the influence of the British, while it aroused the patriots to more desperate efforts in resisting the invaders. The old pine tree died in 1849; and in 1853 it was cut down and made into canes and boxes as mementos of the event. The remains of Miss McC. are interred in the Union Cemetery.

⁸ He was the first State Senator from this co. Among the first settlers were Noah Payne, from Warren co., Conn., in 1766, Timothy Buel, and the Crocker families. Nath'l Gage was living at Ft. Miller when these families arrived. The Durkee, Saunders, and Bell families settled in the upper part of the town. The first one of these consisted of a father and 5 sons, from R. I. These settlers first took out titles under Lydius, but, finding them invalid, they bought of the Schuyler proprietors. There is no tradition of loss to the settlers from this cause,—whence it is inferred that Col. Lydius refunded whatever he may have received. Hugh Monroe, (owner of Monroe's Island,) Patrick Smith, and Dr. Jas. Smith settled at Fort Edward about 1764. The house of Patrick Smith—still standing, $\frac{1}{2}$ mi. s. of Canal Aqueeduct—was the headquarters of Burgoyne and Gen. Schuyler at different times during the Revolution; and it was the co. courthouse.

State afterward bought off his claim, for $12,000.¹ The first carding machine used in the State was erected at Middle Granville, in 1808.² The first church (Presb.) was formed April 2, 1782; the first pastor, Rev. Oliver Hitchcock, was settled in 1786; and the church was erected in 1795.³

GREENWICH—was formed from Argyle, March 4, 1803. It lies on the e. border of the co., in the n. angle formed by the junction of the Hudson and Batten Kil. Ranges of hills, 200 to 300 ft. above the valleys, extend through the central and eastern parts of the town. Bald Mt., near Batten Kil, is the principal peak. The declivities of the hills are so gradual that the surface appears to be rolling rather than hilly. Upon Batten Kil are two considerable falls, one of which is 75 ft. in height. The other principal streams are the Cossayuna, Rogers, and Stony Creeks and Livingston Brook. Cossayuna Lake extends into the n. e. corner of the town. The soil is a slaty and gravelly loam interspersed with patches of clay. The town is more extensively engaged in manufactures than any other in the co.⁴ Union Village,⁵ (Greenwich p. o.), lying partly in this town and partly in Easton, contains an academy and 1,173 inhabitants, 888 of whom are in Greenwich; Bald Mountain⁶ (p. v.) 225 inhabitants; East Greenwich (p. v.) and Center Falls each about 100 houses; and North Greenwich (p. v.) 70. Galesville (p. v.) is a manufacturing village of about 40 houses, on the line of Easton. Lakeville (Lake p. o.) is a hamlet. It is supposed the first settlement was made by the Dutch, previous to the French War, a few families of them remaining at the time of the Revolution.⁷ About 1733 a large number of Scotch emigrants had come over under the promise of grants of land from Government,—which promise was not fulfilled. Jan. 5, 1763, three of these emigrants—Duncan, George, and Jas. Campbell, sons of Laughlin Campbell—petitioned for 100,000 acres; and on the 11th of Nov. following a patent of 10,000 acres was issued to the 3 brothers, their 3 sisters, (Rose Graham, Margaret Eustace, and Lily Murray,) and 4 other persons. This grant embraced about one-third of the town of Greenwich. The first church (Bap.) was organized in 1774; Rev. Leonard Bowers was the first preacher.⁸

HAMPTON—was formed March 3, 1786. It lies upon the e. border of the co., n. of the center. A range of hills, about 500 ft. above the valleys and for the most part covered with forests, extends through the central and eastern parts of the town. Poultney River, separating the town from Vt., is the principal stream. Along its course is a wide interval of fine land. The soil is a gravelly loam interspersed with clay. The interval is alike fertilized and desolated by the frequent overflows of the stream. Hampton Corners (Hampton p. o.) contains 20 houses, and Low Hampton⁹ (p. o.) 5. The greater part of this town was included in patents granted to Provincial officers. The n. part embraces about 2000 acres of Skenes Little Patent.¹⁰ The first settlement was made some little time before the Revolution,¹¹ by Capt. Brooks, Col. Gideon Warner, and — Webster. The first church (Prot. E.) was built at a very early date;¹² Rev. Stephen Jeweth, from N. J., was the first preacher.

HARTFORD—was formed from "Westfield," (now Fort Ann,) March 12, 1793. It lies near the center of the co. The s. e. section is broken and hilly, and the center and n. w. level or gently undulating. The summits of the highest hills are 500 to 700 ft. above the level of the Champlain Canal. The principal streams are East Creek and its branches. Slate and limestone of an excellent quality are found among the hills.¹³ The soil in the s. e. is a rich, slaty loam, and that in the n. w. a heavy clay. There are several chalybeate springs, the principal of which is ¹ Capt. Dan'l Curtis, from New Lebanon, N. Y., came into town about 1780; Capt. Ebenezer Gould, from Killingly, Conn. Nath'l Spring, Asaph Cook, Tim. Allen, F. S. Hodges, Ebenezer Walker, and Dan'l Donak, settled before or about the time of the Revolution. — Baker kept an inn at North Granville, about 1790, and — Jenks kept a store as early as 1795. Nath'l Spring erected a gristmill at Granville, about 1787. A school was taught by Jas. Richards, in 1783, at South Granville.

² It is said that this carding machine was obtained secretly from England and for some time was worked in private.

⁴ Batten Kil is improved by a dam of 8 ft. fall at East Greenwich, one of 9 ft. at Battenville, a dam and falls of 25 ft. at Center Falls, a dam of 8 ft. at Union Village, a fall of 40 ft. at Galesville, and a dam near the mouth of the stream. The Di-on-oh-dah-o-wa Falls are not improved. There are a woolen factory, a grist, saw, and plaster mill, at East Greenwich, a manufacturing of seamless bags at Battenville, a woolen factory, grist, saw, and plaster mill, at Center Falls, and mills near the mouth of the stream.

⁵ The first settlement in this village was made in 1781, by John Whipple, and it was first called "Whipple City." It was incorp. March 29, 1809. The first cotton factory in the State was erected here in 1804, by Wm. Mowry, who had received his instruction at the pioneer establishment of Sam'l Slater at Pawtucket, R. I. In this village are several mills and machine shops and a large carriage factory.

⁷ Among the first settlers at Lakeville were Alexander Reid, John McEachron, and Robt. McNaughton; at East Greenwich, Archibald Livingston; at Carters Pond, Asa Carter; near Galesville, Abraham Lansingh, — Gage, — White, — Tetter; and at Center Falls, Thos. McLean, Jas. Conoly, Nathan Rogers, and Smith Barber.

HEBRON⁴—was formed March 23, 1786, and named from Hebron, Conn. It lies near the center of the e. border of the co. A broad mountain range extends through the center, occupying nearly one-half of its entire surface, and a series of high hills extends through the e. and w. sections. The summits of the highlands are 300 to 500 ft. above the valleys and are mostly crowned with forests. The ranges of hills are separated by the valleys of Black Creek and its principal w. branch. The soil is a sandy and slaty loam, of a light, porous nature, easy of cultivation, and well adapted to resist the extremes of wet and drouth. In the hilly regions is considerable rocky waste land. In the n. and e. are extensive and valuable quarries of slate. North Hebron⁵ (p. v.) contains the North Hebron Institute and 12 houses; East Hebron (Hebron p. o.) 12 houses; West Hebron (p. v.) the West Hebron Classical School and 25 houses; Belcher⁶ (p. v.) 20 houses; and Slateville (p. o.) 8. This town was embraced in patents granted to officers and privates who had served in the French War,—mostly to Scotch Highlanders belonging to the 77th Regt. of Foot. These grants were made so long after the war that those who were entitled to them never appeared to claim them. The first settlements appear to have been made before the Revolution. There are two academic institutions in town. The first church (Asso. Ref. Presb.) was organized in 1780;⁷ Rev. Dr. Gray was the first pastor.

JACKSON—was formed from Cambridge, April 17, 1815. It lies on the e. border of the co., s. of the center. The n. branch of the Taghkanick Range occupies the e. portion of the town, and several parallel ranges extend through the central and w. portions, rendering the entire surface very hilly. The summits of the hills are 300 to 800 ft. above the valleys and are generally crowned with forests. The declivities are often steep and rocky. The principal streams are Batten Kil and Owl Creek and their branches. In the valley between the hills that border immediately upon Batten Kil and those further w. are several small lakes, known as Long, Big, Dead, and Little Ponds. These lakes are beautiful sheets of water, surrounded by hills, forests, and fine cultivated farms. The soil is a slaty loam and very productive. Jackson Center (Jackson p. o.) contains 16 houses; Coila, (p. v.) on the line of Cambridge, about 30 houses; and Anaquassacook 12. Portions of this town and White Creek were embraced in the Anaquassacook Patent of 10,000 acres, granted May 11, 1762.⁸ The first settlers were James Irvine, Peter Magill, and John Miller, all of whom located in the s. part of the town.⁹ The only church (Ref. Prot. D.) in town was organized Dec. 31, 1833; Rev. Jas. W. Stewart was the first pastor. Geo. Law, one of the projectors and proprietors of the California line of steamships, was a native of this town.

KINGSBURY—was incorp. by patent May 11, 1762, and recognized as a town by the State Government March 23, 1786. It lies on the w. border of the co., n. of the center. Nearly all of its surface is level or gently undulating. A range of hills, rising about 150 ft. above the valleys, occupies the extreme e. edge of the town. The principal streams are the Hudson, in the s. w. corner; Wood Creek, upon the e. border; Halfway Brook, in the n. w. corner, and Moss Brook. At Bakers Falls,¹⁰ upon the Hudson, the river shoots down a steep descent of ledges, in all 76 ft. in 60 rods, forming a scene of great beauty, and affording an extensive water-power. The soil along the valley of Wood Creek is a hard, stiff clay; in the other parts of the town, a sandy or gravelly loam. There are extensive quarries of limestone in town, furnishing an excellent building material; from these quarries was obtained the stone for the locks on the Champlain & Hudson

² Col. John Buck, Manning Bull, Stephen and Asa Bump, John and Edward Ingalls, and Nathan and Sam'l Taylor were among the first settlers. Aaron and Eber Ingaldshes, from Boylston, Mass., came in 1782, and Timothy Stooking, Ebenezer Smith, and John Paine in 1784. A school was taught in 1790, at North Hartford, by Thos. Paine, from Conn. A gristmill was built of logs at an early date.

³ The census reports 4 churches in town; M. E., Bap., Cong., and Union. Rev. Wm. Miller, originator of the belief that the second advent of Christ would take place in 1843, resided in this town.

⁴ During the Revolution, and for some time after, the place was known as "Black Creek."

⁵ Locally known as "Munros Meadows."

⁶ Locally known as "Bedlam."

⁷ The census reports 7 churches; 2 M. E., 2 Sec. Advent, Bap., Asso. Presb., and Asso. Ref. Presb.

⁸ This patent was granted to Ryer, Jacob, Freeman, and W. M. Schermerhorn, Johannes, Nicholas, and Peter Quackenbush, Thos. and John Smith, and Joseph Jansen, all of Schenectady.

Kingsbury Patent, containing 26,000 acres, was granted to Jas. Bradshaw and 22 others, from Conn., May 11, 1762. The first settlers were James Bradshaw, Albert Baker, and his sons Albort and Charles, from New York City.³ A sawmill was built at Bakers Falls before the Revolution, and a gristmill in 1807. The town was the scene of many an adventure during the French War,⁴ and the settlement was entirely broken up during the Revolution. Traces of a road cut by Burgoyne's army are still visible near Moss Street. The first minister was Francis Baylor, a Moravian, about 1776. Meetings were held by the Prot. E. and the Bap. in 1795.⁵ Several noted men have been residents of this town.⁶

PUTNAM⁷—was formed from "Westfield," (now Fort Ann,) Feb. 28, 1806. Dresden was set off in 1822. This town lies in the extreme n. end of the co., upon the mountainous peninsula between Lakes George and Champlain. The mountains are divided into two separate ranges by the valleys of Mill and Charter Brooks. The w. range of mountains rises abruptly from the surface of Lake George, and in the s. part of the town attains an elevation of 900 to 1,000 ft. above the surface of the lake. The greater part of the surface is rocky, broken, and unfit for cultivation; but sections of arable land extend along the valleys of the small streams and the borders of Lake Champlain. The soil is generally a hard, gravelly loam. Graphite of a fine quality is found in abundance. A small pond lies among the mountains, on the w. side of the town, 300 feet above Lake George. Putnam Corners, (Putnam p. o.,) containing about 10 houses, is the only village. The tillable lands were mostly granted to privates of the N. Y. Provincial regiments, and feeble settlements had probably commenced before the Revolution.⁸ The first church (Asso. Presb.) was built in 1801,⁹ Rev. James Miller, from Scotland, was the first pastor. A private academy at Putnam Corners was established in 1854.

SALEM—was formed by patent Aug. 7, 1764, and was recognized by statute March 23, 1786. It lies on the e. border of the co., s. of the center. Its surface consists of moderately elevated ridges, separated by narrow valleys, all extending in a n. e. and s. w. direction. The hills are usually bordered by gradual slopes and their summits are crowned with forests. There is very little waste land in town. Batten Kil, forming the s. boundary, and Black, White, and Trout Creeks, are the principal streams. Lyttles Pond, in the n. part of the town, is a beautiful sheet of water lying in a basin among the hills and surrounded by forests. The soil is a rich, slaty or gravelly loam. Salem, (p. v.,) incorp. April 4, 1803, has 832 inhabitants; Shushan (p. v.) about 25 houses; and Eagleville, (East Salem p. o.,) Clapps Mills, and Fitches Point have each 40 to 50 inhabitants. James Turner and Joshua Conkey, from Pelham, Mass., were the first settlers, in 1761. They were joined, the next year, by Hamilton McCollister. In 1764 a patent of 25,000 acres was obtained,—one-half owned by a company of New England settlers and the other by Oliver De Lancey and Peter Du Bois, two Government officials.¹⁰ These last sold their share to Rev. Thos. Clark and his company of Irish and Scotch immigrants at a perpetual rent of one shilling per acre.¹¹ The Camden Tract, on the e. part of the town, was granted to captains

¹ The dam at Sandy Hill, across the Hudson, 1,260 ft. long and 16 ft. high, furnishes water-power for several mills and a woolen factory. At Bakers Falls there are a paper mill and 2 gristmills. The lumber business of the town is very extensive and important, the sawmills being supplied with logs floated down from the Upper Hudson. There are also in town establishments for the manufacture of pianos, steam engines, portable saw-mills, &c.

² This village has been a half-shire town since 1807. It was incorp. March 9, 1810.

³ Among the other first settlers were Michael Hoffnagle, Solomon King, Oliver Colvin, and Nehemiah Seely.

⁴ At one time 17 soldiers were taken prisoners by the Indians and carried to the present site of Sandy Hill Village. They were seated on a log, in a row, when their captors deliberately began to tomahawk them, taking them in order from one end of the log. When all were killed but one, (John Quackenbosc, of Albany,) a squaw claimed him, and his life was spared. He returned after a few years of captivity, and resided near Hoo-sick, in Cambridge. In Aug. 1758, Majs. Putnam and Rogers encountered a party of French and Indians in this town, during which engagement Putnam was made prisoner. The enemy were finally compelled to withdraw, with a loss of 90 men.

⁸ The first sawmill was erected by Robt. Cummings, in 1802, on Mill Creek, 1 mi. from Lake Champlain. The first child born was James Jennings, in 1803; the first death was that of Anne Thompson, in 1804. Robt. Patterson kept the first school, in 1804. Many of the first settlers were Scotch, and among them were Obadiah Blake, Robt. Cummings, John Blair, Wm. Hutton, George Easton, Pelahiah Bugbee, John Butterfield, and Josiah Clark.

¹⁰ This patent was surveyed into 368 lots, and a large pine lot was reserved for the common benefit, and cut up into small lots for division; 3 lots near the center of the town were set apart to support the minister and schoolmaster.

¹¹ The New England and Scotch settlers were mixed together in their settlements, and often on alternate farms; and, in consequence of the rivalry between the two parties of proprietors, the town was speedily settled. The New Englanders wished to call the town "White Creek," and the Scotch "New Perth," and each name was strongly insisted on.

drift, consisting of clay and gravel. The soil of the valleys is generally a gravelly loam and alluvium.

The principal pursuits in the n. are grain raising, and in the s. stock and wool growing and dairying. The hilly regions are much better adapted to pasturage than tillage. The people of Buffalo and Tonawanda are mostly engaged in commerce and manufactures.¹

Buffalo is the county seat.² The courthouse, situated on the corner of Clinton and Ellicott Sts., is a substantial brick building, containing the court and jury rooms, the office of the co. clerk, and most of the other co. offices.³ The jail is a small stone building on the same lot. The Erie Co. Penitentiary is located on Fifth St., in Buffalo. The buildings are 5 in number,—the male and female prisons, the workhouse, the warehouse, and the superintendent's dwelling. Prisoners are received from Allegany, Chautauque, Cattaraugus, Wyoming, Genesee, Orleans, and Niagara cos. The average number in confinement is 130.⁴ The Erie Co. Poorhouse is located on a farm of 153 acres in the n. e. part of Buffalo. There are 2 buildings,—one designed for use as the poorhouse proper, and the other for the accommodation of the insane. The average number of inmates is 300, supported at a weekly cost of $1.00 each.⁵

The principal works of internal improvement are the Erie Canal, the Rochester & Buffalo, and the Lockport, Niagara Falls & Buffalo branches of the New York Central R. R., the Buffalo, New York & Erie, and the Buffalo & State Line Rail Roads,⁶ all terminating in the city of Buffalo, and the Canandaigua & Niagara Falls branch of the N. Y. C. R. R., extending through Newstead, Clarence, Amherst, and Tonawanda. A railroad from Buffalo to Pittsburgh is now in process of construction. A pier, lighthouse, and breakwater have been built at the mouth of Buffalo Creek.⁷

With the exception of the Indian Reservation and the Mile Strip, along Niagara River, this co. was all included within the Holland Purchase.⁸ The Indian lands, containing 130 sq. mi. and lying upon both sides of Buffalo Creek, at its mouth, were purchased in parcels, at different times; and the whole territory is now thickly settled. The first settlements were made at Buffalo, about 1794-95, and in other places within a few years after. The generous outlays made by the Holland Company in the construction of roads, bridges, mills, &c. led to a rapid occupation of all the best lands in the co.⁹ On the morning of the 30th of Dec., 1813, a British force of about 1,000 men crossed over from Canada and captured Black Rock and Buffalo. The American forces then stationed at these places were superior to the British in point of numbers; but the officers were not qualified for command, and a large share of the militia fled upon the commencement of the action. The village of Buffalo was burned in retaliation of the wanton destruction of Newark, in Canada, by the Americans under Gen. George McClure, (then of Steuben co.,) a short time before.¹⁰ The finishing of the Erie Canal and of the N. Y. Central R. R. tended greatly to develop the resources of the co., and to convert Buffalo, its chief city, into the greatest commercial place on the upper lakes.

The first newspaper in the co. was established in 1811.¹¹

² By the act of March 11, 1808, erecting the co. of Niagara, Buffalo was named the co. seat, on condition that the Holland Land Company deed to the county not less than half an acre of land for a site for the public buildings, and erect thereon a courthouse and jail. The company complied with these conditions, and erected, in 1810, a wooden courthouse and a stone jail. In the mean time the courts were held at the house of Joseph Landon. The courthouse was burned by the British in 1813. Soon after the close of the war, a new one was erected on Washington St., fronting La Fayette Park. The first officers of Erie co. were Sam'l Wilkeon, First Judge; John G. Camp, Sheriff; James L. Barton, Co. Clerk; and Roswell Chapin, Surrogate.

³ The present courthouse was built in 1850, at a cost of $18,000. The commissioners under whose supervision it was erected were Albert H. Tracy, Ralph Plumb, and Timothy A. Hopkins.

⁹ A large share of the later settlers of the co. have been Germans; and this class of people now constitute about one-fifth of the entire population of the co. The population of several of the towns in the immediate vicinity of Buffalo is almost exclusively German.

¹¹ The Buffalo Gazette, the first paper in the county, was commenced Oct. 3, 1811, by S. H. & H. A. Salisbury. It was removed to Harris Hill in 1813, and back to Buffalo in the spring of 1814. In April, 1819, H. A. Salisbury became sole proprietor, and changed the name to The Niagara Patriot. On the erection of Erie co. in 1820 it was changed to

The Buffalo Patriot. It was successively under the editorial charge of Wm. A. Carpenter, Harvey Newcomb, and Guy H. Salisbury.

The Daily Commercial Advertiser was issued from the same office, Jan. 1, 1835. Soon after, Dr. T. M. Foote and B. A. Manchester became associated in the management of the two papers; and in Aug. 1838, the Aurora Standard was merged in them, and A. M. Clapp, its publisher, became one of the proprietors of the joint con-

Pop. 360. West Falls, (p. v.) on the w. bank of Cazenove Creek, in the s. part of the town, contains 1 church, 2 sawmills, a gristmill, and about 30 houses; and Griffins Mills, (p. v.) on the same stream, near the center of the town, contains 1 church, a sawmill, a gristmill, and 25 houses. The first settlement was made in the fall of 1803, by Jabez Warren, Henry Godfrey, and Nath'l Emerson.⁴ The evidences of ancient Indian occupation were plainly visible upon the advent of the whites.⁵ The first church (Bap.) was organized with 16 members, in 1810, by Elder Irish. There are 7 churches in town.⁶ Ex-Pres. Millard Fillmore and Hon N. K. Hall, Judge of Supreme Court and Ex-P. M. Gen., were for some years residents of East Aurora.

BOSTON—was formed from Eden, April 5, 1817. It is an interior town, lying s. of the center of the co. Its surface is a hilly upland, broken by the valley of the n. branch of Eighteen Mile Creek, which flows n. w. through near the center of the town. The valley of this stream is about three-fourths of a mile wide. In this valley the soil is a fine, fertile loam, and upon the hills it is a gravelly and clayey loam. Boston, (p. v.), on the n. branch of Eighteen Mile Creek, contains 3 churches, 2 gristmills, 2 sawmills, a tannery, a cow-bell factory, and 40 houses; Boston Center, (Patchin p. o.) on the same stream, contains 2 churches, a sawmill, and 20 houses; and North Boston, (p. v.) 1 church, a gristmill, a sawmill, and 20 houses. The first settlement was made by Didemus Kinney, in 1803.⁷ The first religious services were conducted by Rev. John Spencer, in 1810. There are 7 churches in town.⁸

BRANDT⁹—was formed from Collins and Evans, March 25, 1839. It lies upon the shore of Lake Erie, in the s. w. corner of the co. The surface is generally level, with a gentle inclination toward the lake. Cattaraugus Creek forms a part of the s. boundary. The other principal streams are Big Sister, Delaware, and Muddy Creeks. The soil is generally a gravelly loam intermixed with clay. Brandt (p. v.) contains 20 houses, and Mill Branch (Farpham p. o.) 30. The first settlement was made in 1817, by Moses Tucker.¹⁰ The first religious services were conducted by Benj. Olmsted, in 1820. A union church is the only one in town.

¹ Among the early settlers were Wm. Maltbury, Jonas Williams, James Harmon, Horatio Keelsey, Seth Canfield, Eos A. Armstrong, and Jas. Harris. The first sawmill was built in 1801, by — Thomson; and the first gristmill, by Wm. Maltbury, in 1808. Elias Ransom kept the first inn, in 1803, and Juba Storrs & Co. the first store, in 1812.

² Bap., Disciples, M. E., and Germ. Cath. at Williamsville, and 2 Evang. Luth., Free, Mennonite, and R. C. in other parts of the town.

³ The Aurora Manual Labor Seminary was chartered Oct. 18, 1835; and in 1838 its name was changed to the Aurora Academy. The manual labor department was long since abandoned.

⁴ These were followed by Joel and John Adams, Tabor Earle, and Humphrey Smith, in 1804, and Wm. Warren, Thos. Tracy, Christopher Stoes, and Luther Hibbard, in 1805. The first birth was that of Orra Warren, in Dec. 1805; and the first death, that of a daughter of Humphrey Smith, in 1806. Phineas Stevens built the first sawmill, in 1806, and the first gristmill, in 1807. Gen. Wm. Warren kept the first inn, in 1806, and Adams & Hascall the first store, in 1808. The first school was taught by Mary Eddy, in 1806.

⁵ Two hills, in the n. part of the town, were fortified by circular breastworks, in many places 6 to 8 ft. high. Human bones, of almost giant size, have been dug up near the fortifications; and pieces of pottery and iron axes have been found in the vicinity.—Letter of Rev. Asher Wright. In 1809 an ancient copper plate, 12 by 16 inches, covered with letters or hieroglyphics, was plowed up upon the land of Ephraim Woodruff, in Aurora: the finders, not knowing its value as a specimen of antiquity, converted it into a dipper and skinmer.—Turner's Hist. Fur. p. 668.

⁶ 2 Presch. Bap., Cong., M. E., Univ., and R. C.

⁷ Oliver and Charles Johnson settled in the town in 1805, and Richard Cary and Sam'l Eaton in 1807. The first birth was that of Phiney Johnson, in 1806; the first marriage, that of David Stannard and Esther Yaw, in 1810; and the first death, that of Joel Beebe, in 1809. Ethan Howard built the first mill, in 1810; Job Palmer kept the first inn, in 1811; and Aaron J. Tupper the first store, the same year. The first school was taught, by Joel Eddy, in 1810.

⁸ Bap., Free Will Bap., Evang. Luth., Friends, M. E., Meth. Pres., and Univ.

⁹ Named from Col. Joseph Brant, the Mohawk chief. His Indian name was "Tha-gan-da-mec-gah," said to signify "wood partly burned," or "a brand;" and as the Indians are unable to distinguish d from t in their pronunciation, it became Brant.—Asher Wright, Missionary at the Cattaraugus Reservation.

¹⁰ John, Robert, and Major Campbell, and Job West, settled in the town in 1808, and Ansel Smith, Robt. and Wm. Granis, and Benj. Olmsted, in 1819. The first birth was that of a son of Job West, in 1818; the first marriage, that of Levi Granis and Leah Hallide, in 1819; and the first death, that of Matthew West, in 1822. The first mill was built by Sam'l Butte, in 1822; the first inn was kept by Josephus Hubbard, in 1825; and the first store, by Milton Moore, in 1835. Julia Bradley taught the first school, in 1823.

BUFFALO CITY—was formed as a town, Feb. 8, 1810.¹ Amherst was taken off in 1818, and Tonawanda in 1836. The village of Buffalo was incorp. April 2, 1813, re-organized in 1815, and again in 1822, and incorp. as a city April 20, 1832, with its limits enlarged by the addition of that part of the Mile Strip Reservation² s. of York and North Sts. By the provisions of a new charter, granted April 13, 1853, the then town of "Black Rock" was included within the city limits. The city lies at the e. extremity of Lake Erie, extending nearly 10 mi. along the lake shore and the upper part of Niagara River, and occupies an area of about 40 sq. mi. The principal streams are Big Buffalo and Scajaquady³ Creeks,—the former emptying into Lake Erie and the latter into Niagara River. The principal business part of the city is on the lake shore around the harbor. The land in this locality is low, and was once considered "an irreclaimable morass; but it is now densely covered with substantial warehouses and large stores, intermingled with factories, foundries, mechanics' shops, and dwellings."⁴

The site rises gradually, and attains in one or two places an elevation of about 100 ft.; but the greater portion of the area occupies an extended plain of an average height of 50 ft. above the lake. On the "Buffalo Plains," and along the river at North Buffalo, are extensive quarries of limestone, furnishing an excellent building material.⁵ The city is regularly laid out, and the streets are broad and straight. The flagging and paving are done in the most substantial manner, and are kept in excellent repair.⁶ The main part of the city is supplied with wholesome water from Niagara River by the Buffalo Water Works Company. The reservoir, situated on Niagara between Connecticut and Vermont Sts., is 88 ft. higher than the river, and has a capacity of 13,500,000 gallons. The water is elevated by two force pumps, each of a capacity of 235 gallons, and is distributed through 31 mi. of pipe.⁷ Lower Black Rock is supplied by the Jubilee Water Works with water obtained from the Jubilee Springs. It is conducted through wooden pipes, of which there are more than two miles laid.⁸ There are 5 post-offices in the city,—Buffalo, North Buffalo, Buffalo Plains, Red Jacket, and Black Rock.

The harbor of Buffalo is formed by Big Buffalo Creek, along which for more than a mile is a continuous line of wharves. A pier extends from the s. side of the harbor 1500 ft. into the lake, forming an effectual barrier against the encroaching sands, which everywhere on the lake have a tendency to accumulate on the w. side of piers. At its extremity is a lighthouse.⁹ The Erie Canal enters the city along Niagara River, from which it is separated by a seawall, and extends southward to near the mouth of Buffalo Creek, and thence eastward to Hamburg St. The Erie Basin, just n. of the mouth of Buffalo Creek, protected lakeward by a breakwater, and the Ohio Basin, about one and one-fourth mi. from the mouth of the creek, containing an area of 10 acres, are both connected with the harbor and canal and are sufficiently deep to float the largest lake vessels.¹⁰ A ship canal more than a mi. in length extends along the w. side of Big Buffalo Creek parallel to the shore of the lake. This canal, the basins, the Erie Canal, and the harbor are all connected by numerous slips. Six railroads terminate in the city; and another—the Buffalo & Pittsburgh—is in process of construction.¹¹

³ Named from an Indian of that name, and pronounced Skajocquad-da.

⁵ The pier, the breakwater, the arsenal, St. Joseph's Cathedral, and many of the most substantial buildings in the city, are in part or wholly built of this stone.

⁶ There are 251 mi. of located streets within the city limits, 37½ mi. of paved streets, 205,000 line or feet of stone sidewalks, and 108 mi. of plank walks. There are 1,960 street lamps in the city, lighted by gas furnished by the Buffalo Gas Light Company. The present cost of the street improvements is estimated at $2,000,000; and the aggregate of taxes for local improvements in 1857 was $36,913.

⁷ The Buffalo Water Works Company was incorp. March 15, 1849. The original cost of the works was $400,000; and $65,000 of the earnings have been expended in extending the works. Connected with them are 329 street hydrants, and 20 underground reservoirs, having an aggregate capacity of 407,850 gal.

⁸ The Jubilee Water Works Company was organized in 1827, with a capital of $20,000. At one time the company had 16 mi.

of wooden pipe laid, fully supplying Black Rock and a part of Buffalo; but, while the increase of population created a greater demand for water, the supply from the springs diminished, and in 1845 the citizens of Lower Black Rock purchased the works and confined the supply to their own village.

⁹ The lighthouse is built entirely of stone and iron. It is 44 ft. high, 26 ft. in diameter at its base, and 12 ft. at the top. The molehead upon which it stands is 160 ft. in diameter and has a depth of 15 ft. below the surface of the water. The pier and lighthouse were completed in 1833. It is furnished with a first class dioptric Fresnel apparatus.

¹⁰ These basins were constructed by the State as parts of the great system of internal navigation; but their site were furnished by the city. The Erie Basin cost $300,000, and the Ohio Basin $60,000. They were commenced in 1848 and finished in 1858. Vessels driven by storms and falling to gain an entrance to the harbor find a capacious and sheltered retreat in the harbor of Black Rock,—formed by a mole from Bird Island to Squaw Island, a distance of 2915 yards. This, with the islands, forms a harbor 4,565 yards long and from 88 to 220 yards wide, with an area of 136 acres. Besides affording an exceedingly convenient harbor, with an average depth of 15 feet, this work secures a water-power of about 44 ft. A ship lock is constructed at its foot; and it is on the line of the Erie Canal.

¹¹ Besides these, 5 plank roads, a macadamized road, and a turnpike terminate in the city.

Buffalo is the second commercial city of the State, and the largest and most important upon the great lakes.¹ Its situation at the foot of navigation upon Lake Erie and at the western terminus of the Erie Canal makes it the principal port for the transshipment of the products of the great grain region of the Upper Mississippi Valley, and gives to it the command of the greater part of the commerce of the lakes.² The number of entries at this port during the year 1857 was 4,017, with an aggregate of 1,618,672 tons; and the number of clearances was 3,564, with an aggregate of 1,603,134 tons.³ The exportation and importation by canal is also immense;⁴ and it is estimated

² The amount of grain received in 1857 was 15,443,778 bush., and of flour 925,411 bbls., of which 15,348,930 bush. of grain and 845,953 bbls. of flour were received by lake. The same year there were received by lake 29,799 head of cattle, 75,174 bogs, and 44,972 sheep. The following table shows the imports, by lake, of flour and grain for a series of years:—

The annual average receipts of flour during the first five years was about 360,000 bbls.; during the next five it was 820,000; during the next five, 1,474,000; and during the next five, 909,000. The whole amount of grain received in 1847 was 9,668,187 bush., and in 1855 20,788,475 bush.,—the greatest amount in any one year. This was a greater amount than was received that year in any other port in the world. The following table shows the receipts of leading articles during three seasons:—

that the value of merchandise and property transported by r. r. is greater than the entire amount of the lake commerce of this port.¹ About one-fourth of the shipping of the lake is owned by the citizens of Buffalo.² Shipbuilding is extensively carried on.³ The manufactures of the city are extensive and various.⁴

The principal public buildings are the Custom House, Fort Porter, the State Arsenal, and the city markets. The Custom House, on the corner of Seneca and Washington Sts., is a handsome and well built structure, containing, beside the custom house office, accommodations for the post-office and the U. S. courts. It was constructed, at a cost of $140,000, from designs furnished by the U. S. Treasury Department.⁵ Fort Porter, built in 1842-48, is a fortification on the bank of Niagara River at the point where it emerges from Lake Erie. The State Arsenal, erected in 1858, is a massive stone building fronting on Batavia St.⁶ There are four large markets, conveniently located in different parts of the city.⁷

The Public Schools of the city have long enjoyed a deservedly high reputation. They are carefully nurtured through the operations of an enlightened public sentiment, and are so excellent in all their departments that scarcely any other elementary schools are supported or needed. They are thoroughly graded, consisting of three general departments. The third department is an advanced school for the whole city; and in it a complete academic course, excepting the classics, is taught. There were, in 1857, 32 school districts, employing 189 teachers,—24 males and 165 females. The number of children, between 4 and 21 years of age, was 28,000, of whom 15,593, or a small fraction more than 55½ per cent., were in attendance some portion of the year.⁸

¹ The amount of live stock received by r. r. in 1857 was 78,404 head of cattle, 232,375 hogs, and 72,496 sheep.

The value of the articles manufactured in 1857 was about $10,000,000, of which the leading products are estimated as follows:—ships and boats, $1,800,000; leather, $1,500,000; flour, $1,000,000; stoves and other castings, $600,000; machines, $600,000; distilled stuffs, $400,000; piano fortes, $350,000; boots and shoes, $100,000.

For most of the statistics of the commerce and manufactures of Buffalo we are indebted to the Annual Statement of the Trade and Commerce of Buffalo for 1857, issued from the office of the Commercial Advertiser.

⁹ The total expenses of the schools for 1857 were $160,019.86, and the total receipts the same; number of volumes in district libraries 8,216.

³ The following table shows the shipping launched in 1857:—

In connection with one of the shipyards of the city is a dry dock of sufficient capacity to admit a steamer of over 2,500 tons; also a marine railway; and near by is a large derrick for hoisting boilers and heavy machinery.

The Buffalo Medical College, on the corner of Main and Virginia Sts., was organized in Aug. 1846, under the charter of the University of Buffalo. A course of lectures is given each winter; and the students are admitted to the hospital of the Sisters of Charity, on stated days, during the visits of the medical and surgical officers.

The Buffalo Mercantile College, on the corner of Main and Seneca Sts., was established Oct. 10, 1854. Its object is to impart a theoretical and practical knowledge of business transactions.

The Buffalo Commercial College, on Main St., is an institution similar in character to the Mercantile College.

The Buffalo Law Library Association, incorp. April 2, 1833,—capital $10,000, in shares of $100 each,—was formed for the purpose of securing the benefits of a professional library beyond the reach of private means.

The Young Men's Association was established in the winter of 1835-36, and incorp. in March, 1843. It has a library of about 10,000 volumes, and a reading room, which is well supplied with papers from most of the principal cities of the Union. During the winter months lectures are maintained by the association.

The German Young Men's Association was organized in 1841 and chartered in 1846. The library contains about 2000 volumes, mostly German works.

The Young Men's Christian Union was established in May, 1852, and incorp. March, 1853. It has for its object the moral and intellectual improvement of young men. Its library and reading rooms are in Kremlin Hall, at the junction of Niagara and Erie Sts.

The Young Men's Catholic Association and the Buffalo Catholic Institute are societies similar to the preceding.

The Buffalo Medical Association was formed in 1845 and incorp. in 1856. Its objects are purely scientific and professional, and its membership is confined to the medical profession of the county.

The Mendelssohn Association, organized Jan. 1858, has for its object the improvement and cultivation of vocal and instrumental music.

The Deutsche Leidertafel and the Deutscher Saengerbund are German societies of a similar character.

The Buffalo Orphan Asylum, located on Virginia St., was organized in 1835 and incorp. April 24, 1837. The site was donated by Louis S. Le Couteux, and the present building was erected in 1850. The average number of inmates is about 80.

The Buffalo Female Orphan Asylum, on the corner of Batavia and Ellicott Sts., was established in 1848, under the care of the Sisters of Charity of St. Joseph. The present number of children is 98.

The Buffalo Hospital of the Sisters of Charity, on Virginia St., was incorp. July 5, 1848. The building contains 20 wards, and the average number of patients is 130.

The Buffalo General Hospital was incorp. Nov. 21, 1855, and went into operation in 1858. It was founded by individual donations, amounting to $20,000, and a State appropriation of $10,000.¹

The Lying-In Hospital, on Edward St., is under the charge of the Sisters of Charity.

The Buffalo City Dispensary, a society of physicians, was organized to afford gratuitous medical services to the destitute.

The Association for the Relief of the Poor disburses among the needy each winter sums ranging from $1,500 to $8,000.

The Firemen's Benevolent Association was incorp. March 23, 1837, and has for its object the accumulation of a fund for the relief of indigent and disabled firemen and their families.

The Buffalo Physicians' Charitable Fund Association was organized in 1858, to provide means for the assistance and relief of the widows and orphans of medical men.

A M. E. church was founded in Buffalo, in 1809, by the Rev. Jas. Mitchell; but it had no permanent organization. The oldest church now in the city (1st Presb.) was organized Feb. 2, 1812, by the Rev. Thaddeus Osgood. The next established were a Prot. E., Bap., a M. E., and a Univ. There are now 57 churches in the city.² Most of the church edifices are large and commodious; and many of them are of a high order of architectural beauty. St. Joseph's Cathedral (R. C.) is in this city, has been prominently before the public from the refusal of its trustees to convey their church property to the bishop, and the extraordinary but ineffectual efforts made by the Roman pontiff to induce obedience to this order. In 1853 Cardinal Bedini visited America, having this as a prominent object of his mission; but the trustees were inflexible, and still continue the owners of their property.

¹ This hospital is located on High St., and is a two story brick structure, 160 ft. long by 75 ft. wide. The wing only of the general plan is finished; but that is complete in itself, and has 4 wards, capable of accommodating 100 patients.

² 14 R. C., 8 Presb., 7 Prot. E., 7 M. E., 6 Bap., 4 Ger. Evang., 3 Luth., 2 Ref. Prot. D., and 1 each Asso. Presb., French Prot., Unit., Univ., Mission, and Bethel. The R. C. Church of St. Louis,

the largest and most costly in the city.¹ *St. Paul's*² and St. John's, (Prot. E.,) and the North and Central (Presb.) churches, are elegant and substantial structures.

The earliest notice of the site of the city of Buffalo is found in the travels of Baron La Hontan, who visited this locality in 1687.³ No white settlers located here until after the American Revolution. A village of the Seneca Indians lay on Buffalo Creek, about 3 mi. from its mouth. In March, 1791, Col. Thos. Proctor, U. S. Commissioner, visited "Buffalo Creek,"—as this village was then called,—on an embassy to the Indians. The locality around the mouth of the creek was then called "Lake Erie," and Cornelius Winney, an Indian trader, resided there.⁴ The place was visited in 1795 by La Rochefoucault Liancourt, a French nobleman, who says that "at the post on Lake Erie there was a small collection of four or five houses."⁵ Buffalo was laid out by the agent of the Holland Land Company in 1801, and was called by them "New Amsterdam."⁶ Settlement was commenced at Black Rock in 1807.⁷ In 1808 "New Amsterdam" was made the county seat of Niagara co.; and its name was then changed to Buffalo. In 1812 it became a military post. In Dec. 1813, a party of British and Indians crossed over from Canada, defeated the American forces, and fired the villages of Black Rock and Buffalo. Only two dwelling houses were left standing.⁸ The rebuilding of the village was not commenced until 1815. Buffalo had from the first a formidable rival in Black Rock. While the mouth of Buffalo Creek was obstructed by a bar, Black Rock possessed an excellent harbor and monopolized the infant commerce of the lake. The "Walk-in-the-Water," the first steamboat on Lake Erie, was built at Black Rock in 1818. The construction of Buffalo harbor was commenced in 1820, by the citizens;⁹ and in 1827 the General Government assumed its completion and built the present pier and lighthouse. The Erie Canal was finished in 1825; and from that time to the present Buffalo has increased in wealth and population with the characteristic rapidity of the cities of the West.¹⁰

CHICKTOWAGA¹¹—was formed from Amherst, March 22, 1839; and a part of West Seneca was taken off in 1851. It is an interior town, lying n. of the center of the co. The surface is level. The principal streams are Eleven Mile, Cayuga, and Slate Bottom Creeks. The soil is a heavy, tough clay. Chicktowaga and Four Mile Creek are p. offices. The first settlement was made by Apollos Hitchcock, in 1808.¹² There is but 1 church (R. C.) in town.

CLARENCE—was formed from "Willink," (now Aurora,) March 11, 1808. Alden was taken off in 1823, and Lancaster in 1833. It lies upon the n. border of the co., between Newstead and Amherst. Its surface is level. A limestone terrace about 50 feet high, with a walk-like front facing the n., extends e. and w. through the center of the town. The streams are Tonawanda Creek, on the n. border, and Ransoms Creek, flowing n. w. through near the center of the town. The soil in the n. part is clayey, and in the s. a sandy and gravelly loam underlaid by

¹ The cathedral is 236 ft. long, 86 ft. wide in the body, and 120 at the transept. The ceiling is 75 ft. high, the roof outside 90 feet, and the spire, when finished, will be 220 ft. high. The windows are all of beautiful stained glass, the larger ones in figures representing sacred scenes and characters. The tripartite window above the altar represents the birth, crucifixion, and ascension of Christ. This window was executed in Munich, at a cost of $5,000.

² This church was erected at a cost of about $100,000. It has a chime of 10 bells, which cost $15,000.

³ La Hontan recommended to the French Government the erection of a fort at this place.

⁴ Winney's house—undoubtedly the first erected in Buffalo—stood near where the Washington St. Canal Bridge now is.

⁶ The principal streets were named from members of the Holland Land Company. Main St. was called "Willinks Avenue," Niagara St. "Schimmelpennicks Avenue," Genesee St. "East Avenue," Erie St. "Vollenhovens Avenue," and Church St. "Stad Avenue." In 1826 these names were changed by the trustees of the village. The business of the Holland Land Company was transacted here for a short time previous to the opening of their office at "Ransoms Grove," now Clarence Hollow, in 1801.

⁷ The surveyor general was directed (April 11, 1804) to lay out the land about Black Rock—forming a part of the Main Strip—into lots and report to the legislature. This was accordingly done; and in his report the surveyor general stated his belief that this was the best, if not the only, place at this end of the lake where a harbor of proper size could be constructed. From the earliest period the U. S. had designated this vicinity as the site of a fortification. The report closed with the following words:—"It will be observed that streets are laid where it will either be impracticable or useless to open them soon. It may, notwithstanding, be useful now to contemplate, in the place of towns, what will be necessary arrangements a century hence. Such plans on record, while for the present they can be productive of no harm, may prevent those aberrations from order that might hereafter be a cause of much inconvenience; and, without being governed by extravagant calculations, no doubt can be entertained that the future importance of this place will justify extensive views in the projection of its arrangements." The village, like Lewiston, Oswego, Salina, and Fort Covington, was patented in small parcels.

⁸ See p. —. In 1825, Congress made an appropriation of $80,000 to compensate the inhabitants for the losses incurred by this disaster.

⁹ The sum of $1,861.25 was raised by subscription, and a loan of $12,000 was obtained from the State. A pier, extending 80 rods into the lake, was built, and a lighthouse erected upon the land. The Superior—the second steamboat launched upon Lake Erie—was built at Buffalo in 1822.

¹⁰ The population at different periods has been as follows:—

1810.....	1,508	1830.....	8,668	1845.....	29,773
1814.....	1,060	1835.....	19,715	1850.....	42,201
1820.....	2,095	1840.....	18,213	1855.....	74,214
1825.....	5,141

The population of Black Rock (now about 12,000) is included in the returns of 1855 only.

¹¹ This name was given at the suggestion of Alex. Hitchcock. It is a corruption of the Seneca word "Jiik-do-waah-geh," signifying "the place of the crab-apple tree," the Indian name of this locality.

limestone. Clarence Hollow, (Clarence p. o.,) near the s. e. corner of the town, contains 3 churches, the Clarence Academy,¹ and a pop. of 400; Clarence Center (p. v.) contains 2 churches and about 40 houses. Harris Hill (p. o.) and North Clarence (p. o.) are hamlets. The first settlement was made at Clarence Hollow in 1799, by Asa Ransom.² The census reports 7 churches in town.³

COLDEN—was formed from Holland, April 2, 1827. It is an interior town, lying s. of the center of the co. The surface is an elevated upland, rolling in the e. and hilly in the w. The w. branch of Cazenove Creek flows through the w. part of the town and is bordered by steep declivities 150 to 200 ft. high. The soil is a gravelly loam intermixed with clay. Colden, (p. v.,) on Cazenove Creek, contains a sawmill, a gristmill, and 34 houses; Glenwood, (p. v.,) on the same stream, contains 1 church, 3 sawmills, 2 lath mills, a tannery, and 30 houses. The first settlement was made in 1810, by Richard Buffum.⁵ The Presbyterian, at Glenwood, is the only church in town.

COLLINS—was formed from Concord, March 16, 1821. A part of Brandt was taken off in 1839, and North Collins in 1852. It lies on the s. border of the co., w. of the center. The surface is a rolling upland, sloping gradually to the w. and descending abruptly to Cattaraugus Creek upon the s. The summits of the ridges are 150 to 300 ft. above the valleys. Cattaraugus Creek forms the s. boundary of the town; and the other streams are Clear Creek and its tributaries. The channels of these streams are narrow and deep. The soil is a clayey loam on the uplands and a gravelly loam along the streams. Collins Center (p. v.) contains 1 church and 36 houses. Angola is a p. o. near the n. w. corner of the town. Gowanda lies partly in this town.⁶ The first settlement was made in 1806, by Jacob Taylor.⁷ There are 5 churches in town.⁸

CONCORD—was formed from "Willink," (now Aurora,) March 20, 1812; and Collins and Sardinia were taken off in 1821. It lies upon the s. border of the co., between Sardinia and Collins. The surface is a rolling or hilly upland, with steep declivities bordering upon Cattaraugus Creek. Townsend Hill, the highest point, is nearly 1500 ft. above tide. The principal streams are Cattaraugus Creek, upon the s. boundary of the town, and its tributaries. Several small brooks, forming the head waters of Eighteen Mile and Cazenove Creeks, take their rise in this town. The soil in the s. part is a gravelly loam, and in the n. a clayey loam underlaid by hardpan. Springville, (p. v.,) incorp. April 11, 1834, is situated in the s. part of the town, and contains 5 churches, the Springville Academy, a newspaper office, and several manufacturing establishments.⁹ Pop. 953. Mortons Corners, (p. v.,) in the s. w. part, contains 1 church, 2 sawmills, a gristmill, and 20 houses. Woodwards Hollow (p. o.) is a hamlet. The first settlement was made in 1808, by Christopher Stone.¹⁰ The first church was organized Nov. 2, 1816, by Rev. John Spencer. There are 7 churches in town.¹¹

EAST HAMBURGH—was formed from Hamburg, as "Ellicott," Oct. 15, 1850. A part of West Seneca, as "Seneca," was taken off in 1851. Its name was changed Feb. 20, 1852. It is an interior town, lying near the center of the co. The surface is a broken upland. Chestnut Ridge, the highest land in the town, has an elevation of about 500 ft. above Lake Erie. The declivities of the hills are generally gradual slopes, broken by narrow ravines formed by the streams. Smokes Creek and its branches are the most considerable streams. The soil is a loam, gravelly in the n. and clayey in the s. East Hamburg, (p. v.,) n. of the center of the town,

² Asa Ransom was a man of considerable influence with the Indians. They gave him the name of "O-onis-to-no-at-squo-nitch," signifying "maker of silver," or "maker of silver money." Gen. Timothy Hopkins settled in the town in 1797; Asa Chapman, Timothy James, Wm. Updegraff, Christopher Saddler, Levi Felton, Abraham Shope, John Haines, and John Gardner, in 1801; Andrew Durnet, Geo. Shurman, Bera Ensign, and Jacob Shope, in 1803; and Daniel Bailey in 1804. The first birth was that of Harry B. Ransom, in 1801; and the first death, that of — Keyes, in 1804. Asa Ransom opened the first public house, in 1801, built the first sawmill, in 1805, and the first gristmill, in 1806; Otis R. Hopkins kept the first store, in 1811. The first school was taught by Rebecca Hamlin, in 1805.

³ 3 Mennonites, Bap., Seventh Day Bap., Presb., and Union.

⁴ Named from Cadwallader D. Colden, then in the State Senate.

⁵ Thos. Pope, Josiah Brown, and L. Gwen settled in the town in 1810, and Jesse Southwick, Richard Sweet, Nath'l Bowen, and Silas Lewis in 1811. The first birth was that of a child of Thos. Pope, in 1811; the first marriage, that of Jas. Sweet and Charlotte Buffum, in 1810; and the first death, that of Nathaniel Bowen, in 1812. Richard Buffum built the first mill, in 1810.

The first school was taught by Mary Eddy, in the winter of 1814.

⁶ See page —.

⁷ Joshua Palmerton, Stephen Peters, Turner, Aldrich, and Stephen Lapham settled in the town in 1810, and Stephen Wilbur and Sylvanus Bates in 1811. The first birth was that of a son of Aaron Lindsley, in 1810; the first marriage, that of Stephen Peterson and Sarah Palmerton, in 1811; and the first death, that of — Straight, in 1812. Jacob Taylor built the first mill, in 1812; John Hanford kept the first store, in 1813, and Nathan King the first inn, in 1816. The first school was taught by John King, in 1815.

⁸ Christians, Friends, F. W. Bap., Presb., and Union.

⁹ A woolen factory, 2 planing mills, a turning shop, a saw mill, 2 gristmills, a tannery, a stone sawing mill, and a furnace and machine shop.

contains 2 churches, 2 sawmills, and 40 houses. Ellicott (p. o.) is a hamlet. The first settlement was made in 1803, by David Eddy, from Rutland, Vt.¹ There are 3 churches in town; Friends, M. E., and Union.

EDEN—was formed from "Willink," (now Aurora,) March 20, 1812. Boston was taken off in 1817, and Evans in 1821. It is an interior town, lying s. w. of the center of the co. Its surface is hilly and broken in the e. and level in the w. A ridge about 500 ft. above the lake extends along the e. border. The principal streams are Eighteen Mile Creek and its branches. The soil is a gravelly loam intermixed with clay. Eden, (p. v.,) situated near the center of the town, contains 3 churches, a sawmill, a stove and shingle mill, a tannery, and 63 houses; Eden Valley, (p. v.,) on Eighteen Mile Creek, contains a gristmill, a sawmill, and 20 houses. Clarksbury and East Eden are p. offices. The first settlement was made in 1808, by Benj., Joseph, and Samuel Tubbs.² The first religious services were conducted by Rev. Wm. Hill, in 1812. There are 8 churches in town.³

ELMA—was formed from Lancaster and Aurora, Dec. 4, 1857. It is an interior town, lying n. e. of the center of the co. Its surface is gently rolling, the summits of the ridges being 50 to 100 ft. above the valleys. Big Buffalo and Cazenove Creeks flow through the town. The soil is a clayey loam in the n. and a gravelly loam in the s. Spring Brook, (p. v.,) on Cazenove Creek, contains 2 churches and several manufactories.⁴ Pop. 300. Elma⁵ (p. v.) has several manufacturing establishments⁶ and 34 houses; and Upper Ebenezer 27 houses. The first settlement was made in 1827, by Taber Earle.⁷ There are 2 churches in town; Presb. and R. C.

EVANS⁸—was formed from Eden, March 23, 1821. A part of Brandt was taken off in 1839. It lies upon the lake shore, in the s. part of the co. Its surface is level. The land rises from the lake in a bluff 20 to 40 ft. high; and the highest part of the town, near the e. border, has an elevation of 160 ft. above the lake. The streams are Big and Little Sister Creeks. The soil is a sandy and gravelly loam intermixed with clay. Evans, (p. v.,) situated on Big Sister Creek, contains 3 churches, a gristmill, a sawmill, a tannery, and about 45 houses; Angola, (p. v.,) on the same stream, is a station on the Erie R. R., and contains a gristmill, a sawmill, and about 45 houses; North Evans, (p. v.,) on Eighteen Mile Creek, in the n. e. part of the town, contains 3 churches, a gristmill, a sawmill, a tannery, and about 40 houses; East Evans, (p. v.,) in the n. part of the town, and Pontiac, (p. v.,) on Big Sister Creek, in the s. e. part, contain about 20 houses each. The first settlement was made in 1804, by Joel Harvey.⁹ There are 7 churches in town.¹⁰

GRAND ISLAND—was formed from Tonawanda as a town, Oct. 19, 1852. It is the n. w. corner town in the co., and comprises Grand, Buckhorn, and Beaver Islands, in Niagara River. Its surface is nearly level, and a considerable portion of it is still covered with forests. The soil of the upper part is clayey, and of the lower part sandy. The people are principally engaged in grain raising and lumbering. Grand Island is a p. o. on the e. shore. There is no village on the island, although it is thickly settled along the shores. The first settlers were squatters, who located soon after the War of 1812 and before it was decided to which Government the island belonged.¹¹ In 1820, Mordecai M. Noah, of New York, conceived the project of forming a

² Among the first settlers were John Marsh, Silas Este, and Calvin Thompson, who came in 1809, and Daniel and Edward Webster, in 1810. The first birth was that of Hannah Tubbs, in 1809; the first marriage, that of David Doan and Anna Hill, in 1815; and the first death, that of Jas. Welch, in 1812. Eliha Welch built the first sawmill, in 1811, and the first gristmill, in 1812. Wm. Hill kept the first inn, in 1814, and Fillmore & Johnson the first store, in 1820. The first school was taught by Rovena Plack, in 1812.

⁶ 1 gristmill, 2 planing mills, and a chair factory.

⁷ Timothy Treat, Isaac Williams, Willard and Jas. Fairbanks, and Amasa Adame settled in the town in 1830, and Zima A. Hemstreet, Abraham Taber, and Jacob Pettengill in 1831. The first birth was that of H. Scott Fairbanks, in 1831; the first marriage, that of Gould Hinman and Louisa Adams, in 1835; and the first death, that of the wife of Isaac Williams, in 1830. The first mill was built by — Eastbrook, in 1824; and the first inn was kept by Taber Earle, in 1829. Emily Paioe taught the first school, in 1831.

⁸ Named from David E. Evans, agent of the Holland Land Company.

⁹ — Fisk and — Worder settled in the town in 1808, Aaron Salisbury and Aaron Cash in 1809, and Andrew Tyler and Elijah Cash in 1810. The first birth was that of a daughter of David Cash, in Jan. 1811; the first marriage, that of Whiting Cash and Persis Taylor, June 28, 1815; and the first death, that of Jonathan Cash, in 1811. Henry Tuttle built the first mill, in 1817; Joel Harvey kept the first inn, in 1806; and John Harris the first store, in 1815. The first school was taught by — Hubbard, in 1811.

During the War of 1812 a party of British sailors and mariners landed near Sturgeon Point, in the night, and commenced plundering the inhabitants. Judge Aaron Salisbury, then a young man, seized his musket and started off alone to get a shot at them. When he arrived they were retreating to their boats, and an exchange of shots produced no damage on either side. They started for the month of Eighteen Mile Creek, and he on foot endeavored to get there before them; but they had landed when he arrived. He immediately commenced firing; and they, not knowing how large a force was opposing them, retreated to their boats and speedily left. Here one man frightened away 100 and saved the inhabitants from plunder.

colony of Jews upon Grand Island, as an Ararat, or resting place, for that scattered and broken people.¹

HAMBURGH²—was formed from "Willink," (now Aurora,) March 20, 1812; and East Hamburg was taken off in 1850, and a part of West Seneca, as "Seneca," in 1851. It lies on the shore of Lake Erie, near the center of the w. border of the co. Its surface in the e. is rolling; but in the w. it is nearly level, with a gentle inclination toward the lake. A bluff averaging 50 to 100 feet high borders the lake. The principal stream is Eighteen Mile Creek. The soil is mostly a clayey loam; in the s. e. corner it is gravelly. Whites Corners, (p. v.,) on the n. branch of Eighteen Mile Creek, in the s. e. part of the town, contains 5 churches, a gristmill, a sawmill, a tannery, and has a pop. of 609; Water Valley, (p. o.,) on the same stream, w. of Whites Corners, contains a woolen factory, a furnace, and 20 houses; Abbotts Corners, (Hamburg p. o.,) in the e. part of the town, contains 2 churches, a sawmill, a shingle mill, and 145 inhabitants. Big Tree Corners and Hamburg-on-the-Lake are p. offices. The first settlement was made in 1804, by Nathaniel Titus and Dr. Rufus Belden.³ There are 7 churches in town.⁴

HOLLAND—was formed from "Willink," (now Aurora,) April 15, 1818; and Colden was taken off in 1827. It lies upon the e. border of the co., s. e. of the center. The surface is a high, broken upland, divided by the valley of Cazenove Creek. The summit of the highland is about 900 ft. above Lake Erie. The soil is a gravelly loam, intermixed in some places with slate and clay. The valley of Cazenove Creek is very fertile. Holland, (p. v.,) on Cazenove Creek, contains 1 church, several manufacturing establishments,⁵ and 28 houses. The first settlement was made in 1807, by Jared Scott, Abner Currier, and Arthur Humphrey, from Vt.⁶ There is but 1 church (Bap.) in town.

LANCASTER—was formed from Clarence, March 20, 1833; a part of Elma was taken off in 1857, and a part of West Seneca in 1851. It is an interior town, n. e. of the center of the co. The surface is level. Cayuga and Eleven Mile Creeks are the principal streams; upon them are several mill sites. The soil is a clayey and gravelly loam. Lancaster, (p. v.,) incorp. March 13, 1849, is a station on the N. Y. C. R. R., in the w. part of the town. It contains 6 churches, a bank, and several manufactories.⁷ Pop. 1,259. Bowmansville, (p. v.,) in the n. w. corner of the town, 1818, by commissioners appointed respectively by the United States and British Governments. While the matter was still undecided, a large number of lawless persons—mostly refugees from justice from both sides of the river—squatted upon the island, locating principally along the shores. Remaining for some time unmolested, they began to commit extensive depredations upon the timber; and finally they set up an independent government and elected a full quota of municipal officers. In April, 1819, the legislature passed an act authorizing the removal of these intruders. During the succeeding summer the governor issued a proclamation commanding them to desist from depredations upon the property of the State, and at once to remove. A few obeyed the command; but, seeing no active demonstrations on the part of Government, they returned. In the fall of 1819, Gov. Clinton directed Col. Jas. Crook, the sheriff of Niagara co., to call out a sufficient military force for the purpose and forcibly expel them. On the 9th of Dec. 1819, the sheriff, accompanied by Lieuts. Benj. Hodge and — Osborne, 2 sergeants, 4 corporals, and 24 privates, went to the island in boats, manned by 20 boatmen, to carry into execution the orders of the governor. Every facility was given the people to remove with their effects; and the boatmen took them to either shore, as they might elect. The military were divided into 3 parties: a vanguard, to read the governor's orders and assist in clearing the houses; a second party, to forcibly remove all property left in the buildings; and a rear guard, to burn the buildings and complete the removal and destruction. Seventy houses were burned, and 150 people, consisting of men, women, and children, were turned out shelterless upon the U. S. and Canada shores. Two buildings, filled with grain, alone were saved. The removal and destruction occupied 5 days and cost the State $568.09. A few families returned immediately, but did not remain.

¹ In a memorial to the legislature in 1820 for the purchase of the island, Maj. Noah explained his object; recounted the persecution which his co-religionists in the Old World had suffered through many centuries; pointed out the benefits that had resulted to Spain, Portugal, France, and Germany from the commercial enterprise and the capital of the Jews when allowed the exercise of their rights; and painted in brilliant colors the benefits that would accrue to the U. S. if his people could exchange "the whips and scorns of Europe, Asia, and Africa for the light of liberty and civilization" which this country afforded. He estimated that there were 7,000,000 of Jews in the world, and predicted that, if the existence of an asylum of freedom were made known, large numbers would be induced to emigrate. The sanction of law was asked to give confidence to those who might not otherwise be induced to remove. His attempt to gather the Jews, like those before it, ended in day dreams. The European rabbi refused to sanction the effort; and Maj. Noah soon gave up the attempt, leaving no trace of his "city" upon the island but a monument of brick and wood. It bore, on a marble tablet, the following inscriptions from Deuteronomy vi. 4:—

יהוה יהוה

ARARAT,

A CITY OF REFUGE FOR THE JEWS,

Founded by MORDECAI M. NOAH, in the month of TIZRI 5,586, (September, 1825,) and in the 50th year of American Independence.

The monument has since tumbled down; and the schemes of Mordecai the Jew have scarcely a place in memory or a trace in history.

A Boston company was formerly extensively engaged in the manufacture of ship timber upon the island.

MARILLA³—was formed from Alden and Wales, Dec. 2, 1853. It is situated near the center of the E. border of the co. The surface is rolling. Big Buffalo Creek crosses the s. w. corner; but the principal part of the town is drained by the head waters of Little Buffalo Creek. The soil in the N. E. and s. w. is a sandy and gravelly loam; but elsewhere it consists of clay and muck. Marilla, (p. v.,) situated near the center of the town, contains 3 churches, 2 sawmills, a shingle mill, and 235 inhabitants. The first settlement was made by Jerry and Joseph Carpenter, in 1829.⁴ There are 3 churches in town; Disciples, M. E., and R. C.

NEWSTEAD—was formed from Batavia, (Genesee co.,) as "Erie," April 11, 1804; its name was changed April 18, 1831. It is the N. E. corner town of the co. A limestone terrace extends through near the center of the town. North of this the surface is level, in many places marshy; and the soil is a clayey loam intermixed with marl and sand. To the s. the surface is level, or gently undulating, and the soil a sandy and clayey loam underlaid by limestone. The town is watered by several small streams, the principal of which is Murder Creek.⁵ A layer of hydraulic limestone crops out along the terrace, and waterlime is extensively manufactured from it. Akron,⁶ (p. v.,) incorp. Oct. 1850, is a station on the Canandaigua & N. F. branch of the N. Y. C. R. R., near the center of the town. It contains 4 churches and several manufacturing establishments.⁷ Pop. 462. Falkirk, 1 mi. E. of Akron, is a hamlet. The first settlement was made in the early part of the present century.⁸ The first religious society (M. E.) was organized in 1807, with 12 members, at the house of Charles Knight, by Rev. Peter Van Nest and Amos Jenks. There are 4 churches in town.⁹

NORTH COLLINS—was formed from Collins, Nov. 24, 1852, as "Shirley;" its name was changed June 24, 1853. It is an interior town, lying in the s. w. part of the co. Its surface is rolling, the summits of the ridges being 200 to 300 ft. above the valleys. The town is watered by the head branches of Eighteen Mile, Clear, and Big Sister Creeks. The streams generally flow through deep ravines bordered by steep declivities. The soil is a gravelly loam. North Collins, (Collins p. o.,) in the N. W. part of the town, contains 2 churches and 34 houses. Shirley (p. v.) and Langford, (p. o.,) near the center, New Oregon, (p. o.,) in the E. part, and Marshfield, (p. o.,) in the S., are hamlets. The first settlers were Stephen Sisson, Abram Tucker, and Enos Southwick, from Warren co., who moved into the town in 1810.¹⁰ There are 8 churches in town.¹¹

SARDINIA—was formed from Concord, March 16, 1821. It is the s. E. corner town of the co. The surface in the E. part of the town is gently rolling, and in the W. it is hilly. Shepherd Hill, s. w. of the center, is 1040 ft. above Lake Erie. Cattaraugus Creek forms the s. boundary. In the E. part the soil is a gravelly loam, and in the W. it is clay underlaid by hardpan. Sardinia, (p. v.,) in the s. E. part of the town, contains 2 churches, a woolen factory, a gristmill, a tannery, and 40 houses. Protection is a p. o. The first settlement was made by George Richmond, from Vt.¹² The first religious services were conducted by the Rev. John Spencer, in Feb. 1815. There are 2 churches in town; Bap. and M. E.

⁶ Disciples, Evang. Luth., M. E., R. C., and Wes. Meth. at Tonawanda Village, and Evang. Luth., M. E., and R. C. in other parts of the town.

⁷ Ethan and Wm. Allen and Jacob Turner settled in the town in 1806, and Chas. and Alex. McKay, Ebenezer Holmes, and Wm. Hoyt in 1807. The first birth was that of Wm. Pettengill, in June, 1806. Isaac and Eli Hall built the first mill, in 1811; Isaac Hall kept the first inn, in 1816; and Orsamus Warren the first store, in 1824. The first school was taught by Jas. Wood, in 1811. In 1813 an Indian hatchet was found imbedded in a tree at Wales Center, and in 1825 John Allen related the following circumstance concerning it. About the time of the first settlement of Buffalo an Indian came to that place and exhibited the skin of a white child, and boasted that he had murdered and skinned the child for the purpose of making a tobacco pouch. Truman Allen, (brother of the narrator,) hearing the boast, became so enraged that he followed the Indian to Wales and shot him. He buried the body and rifle in the sand, and stuck the tomahawk into a tree, where it was afterward found as above stated.

⁸ Named from an Indian who resided near its mouth and who was an inveterate smoker.

⁹ This community purchased 7,622 acres belonging to the Buffalo Indian Reservation in 1844, and commenced their settlements the same year. They are largely engaged in agriculture and manufactures; and their wares have obtained so excellent a reputation that they find a ready market at Buffalo and elsewhere. They have a community of property, reside in villages, and several families usually occupy the same house. They are governed by a board of trustees; and their business is done through an agent, who appears to have almost unlimited control of matters. They are honest, industrious, and frugal; and in the contented and peaceful tenor of their lives they present a model which might well be copied by some of the restless and ambitious Yankee race.

¹⁰ Among the other early settlers were Artemus W. Baker, John G. Wells, Isaac Earle, and Geo. Hopper, who located in 1828. The first child born was a daughter of Joel Decker, in Aug. 1828; and the first death, that of Peter Beal, in 1834. Geo. E. Elderkin taught the first school, in 1839; Reuben Sackett kept the first inn, in 1826; the Ebenezer Society, the first store, in 1845; and Ballou & Tubell built the first mill, in 1837.

OSWEGO COUNTY.

THIS county was formed from Oneida and Onondaga, March 1, 1816.¹ It is situated upon the s.e. extremity of Lake Ontario, centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains an area of — sq. mi. Its surface is generally level or gently undulating. A series of bluffs 20 to 40 feet high border immediately upon the lake; and from their tops the land stretches out in long and gradual slopes, occasionally broken by the valleys of the river courses. The general inclination is northerly, as indicated by the drainage, though the summits of the ridges within half a mi. of the lake have about the same altitude as those upon the s. border of the co. A low ridge extending in an easterly and westerly direction, from 3 to 5 mi. n. of Oneida Lake, forms the watershed between Lakes

Ontario and Oneida. In the e. part of the co. this ridge turns northward and unites with the system of highlands which separates Lake Ontario and the valley of Black River. The highest point of this range, in the town of Redfield, is 1,200 to 1,500 feet above tide.

The rocks of this co. consist of the Lorraine shales, in the extreme n. part, on the lake; the gray sandstone,² extending from the n.e. corner to near the center, its southern limits being marked by a line drawn due e. from Oswego River about 1 mi. from its mouth; the Medina or red sandstone, bordering on the last, and comprising more than one-third of the area of the co.; and the Clinton group of shales, slate, and sandstone, occupying the extreme s. border. These rocks are exposed only in the n. e. part and along the river courses, being generally covered with a thick mass of drift and alluvial deposits, consisting of sand, gravel, and clay. The gray sandstone is hard and compact, and is little affected by the action of the elements; hence the disintegration is slight, and the soil upon it is thin and poor. The Lorraine shales are easily disintegrated, and form the basis of the strongest and richest soils in the co. The red sandstone crops out on the banks of all the streams which flow through the region which it occupies. It is extensively quarried for building stone, though it is more easily acted upon by the elements than the gray sandstone. Weak brine springs are found associated with this red sandstone throughout the co. The Clinton group, occupying the entire s. border, consists of parallel layers or beds of shale and red and gray sandstone. This is the same geological formation in which is found the principal iron ore beds of Penn. and Oneida co.; and throughout the formation in this co. iron ore is found.

The drainage of the w. and s. parts of the co. is principally through Oswego River, and of the n. and e. portions through Salmon River and a great number of smaller streams that flow directly into the lake. Oswego River is formed by the junction of Seneca and Oneida Rivers at Three River Point. It is 23 mi. in length, and falls 128 feet in its course, in several distinct falls, each of which furnishes an excellent water-power. Oneida River, forming the outlet of Oneida Lake, is 18 mi. in length, and falls about 12½ feet in its course. Salmon River and other streams flowing into the e. extremity of the lake all have successions of rapids and cascades, which furnish to that portion of the co. an abundance of water-power. The principal bodies of water are Lakes Ontario and Oneida. The former, constituting the n. w. boundary, presents an almost unbroken coast line for a distance of 40 mi. within the limits of the co. Great Sandy Bay, in the town of Sandy Creek, is the only considerable indentation. The mouth of Oswego River furnishes a valuable harbor, the only one of importance in the co. Oneida Lake, constituting a portion of the s. boundary, is 141½ feet above Lake Ontario.³ It is one link in the chain of the internal water communication of the State. A considerable portion of the land in its immediate vicinity is marshy. Iron ore beds and a fine quartz sand, used in the manufacture of glass, are found upon its n. shores. The soil found in the shale and sandstone region has already been noticed. The drift and alluvial deposits which cover the greater portion of the co. furnish a great variety of soil. The sandy portions are light and weak, while the clayey portions are hard, tough, and unyielding in many places. Where these are mixed, a rich, deep soil is the result. Along the e. border of the co. are great quantities of limestone boulders, which essen-drift, consisting of clay and gravel. The soil of the valleys is generally a gravelly loam and alluvium.

The principal pursuits in the n. are grain raising, and in the s. stock and wool growing and dairying. The hilly regions are much better adapted to pasturage than tillage. The people of Buffalo and Tonawanda are mostly engaged in commerce and manufactures.¹

Buffalo is the county seat.² The courthouse, situated on the corner of Clinton and Ellicott Sts., is a substantial brick building, containing the court and jury rooms, the office of the co. clerk, and most of the other co. offices.³ The jail is a small stone building on the same lot. The Erie Co. Penitentiary is located on Fifth St., in Buffalo. The buildings are 5 in number,—the male and female prisons, the workhouse, the warehouse, and the superintendent's dwelling. Prisoners are received from Allegany, Chautauque, Cattaraugus, Wyoming, Genesee, Orleans, and Niagara cos. The average number in confinement is 130.⁴ The Erie Co. Poorhouse is located on a farm of 153 acres in the n. e. part of Buffalo. There are 2 buildings,—one designed for use as the poorhouse proper, and the other for the accommodation of the insane. The average number of inmates is 300, supported at a weekly cost of $1.00 each.⁵

The principal works of internal improvement are the Erie Canal, the Rochester & Buffalo, and the Lockport, Niagara Falls & Buffalo branches of the New York Central R. R., the Buffalo, New York & Erie, and the Buffalo & State Line Rail Roads,⁶ all terminating in the city of Buffalo, and the Canandaigua & Niagara Falls branch of the N. Y. C. R. R., extending through Newstead, Clarence, Amherst, and Tonawanda. A railroad from Buffalo to Pittsburgh is now in process of construction. A pier, lighthouse, and breakwater have been built at the mouth of Buffalo Creek.⁷

With the exception of the Indian Reservation and the Mile Strip, along Niagara River, this co. was all included within the Holland Purchase.⁸ The Indian lands, containing 130 sq. mi. and lying upon both sides of Buffalo Creek, at its mouth, were purchased in parcels, at different times; and the whole territory is now thickly settled. The first settlements were made at Buffalo, about 1794-95, and in other places within a few years after. The generous outlays made by the Holland Company in the construction of roads, bridges, mills, &c. led to a rapid occupation of all the best lands in the co.⁹ On the morning of the 30th of Dec., 1813, a British force of about 1,000 men crossed over from Canada and captured Black Rock and Buffalo. The American forces then stationed at these places were superior to the British in point of numbers; but the officers were not qualified for command, and a large share of the militia fled upon the commencement of the action. The village of Buffalo was burned in retaliation of the wanton destruction of Newark, in Canada, by the Americans under Gen. George McClure, (then of Steuben co.,) a short time before.¹⁰ The finishing of the Erie Canal and of the N. Y. Central R. R. tended greatly to develop the resources of the co., and to convert Buffalo, its chief city, into the greatest commercial place on the upper lakes.

The first newspaper in the co. was established in 1811.¹¹

² By the act of March 11, 1808, erecting the co. of Niagara, Buffalo was named the co. seat, on condition that the Holland Land Company deed to the county not less than half an acre of land for a site for the public buildings, and erect thereon a courthouse and jail. The company complied with these conditions, and erected, in 1810, a wooden courthouse and a stone jail. In the mean time the courts were held at the house of Joseph Laudon. The courthouse was burned by the British in 1813. Soon after the close of the war, a new one was erected on Washington St., fronting La Fayette Park. The first officers of Erie co. were Sam'l Wilkeon, First Judge; John G. Camp, Sheriff; James L. Barton, Co. Clerk; and Roswell Chapin, Surrogate.
³ The present courthouse was built in 1850, at a cost of $18,000. The commissioners under whose supervision it was erected were Albert H. Tracy, Ralph Plumb, and Timothy A. Hopkins.
⁴ The penitentiary lot contains 5 acres, and is enclosed by a stone wall 14 ft. in height. The male prison is built of stone, and the other buildings of brick. Four-fifths of all the convicts are of foreign birth. They are maintained at an average weekly expense of 65 cts., and are employed principally in the manufacture of harness findings, upon contract,—the males at 20 cents per day, and the females at 15.
⁵ The poorhouse was built in 1852, under the supervision of Silas Kingsley, at a cost of $30,000. It consists of an octagonal structure, 75 ft. in diameter, with 2 wings, each 80 ft. long by 40 ft. wide; the whole 3 stories high and built of stone. Of the inmates in 1857, 71 were lunatics and 11 idiots.
⁶ The main lines of the N. Y. Central and the Buffalo, N. Y. & Erie R. Roads extend through Alden, Lancaster, and Chicktowaga; the Lockport & N. E. branch of the N. Y. Central, through Tonawanda; and the B. & State Line R. R., through

¹¹ The Buffalo Gazette, the first paper in the county, was commenced Oct. 3, 1811, by S. H. & H. A. Salisbury. It was removed to Harris Hill in 1813, and back to Buffalo in the spring of 1814. In April, 1819, H. A. Salisbury became sole proprietor, and changed the name to The Niagara Patriot. On the erection of Erie co. in 1820 it was changed to The Buffalo Patriot. It was successively under the editorial charge of Wm. A. Carpenter, Harvey Newcomb, and Guy H. Salisbury.
The Daily Commercial Advertiser was issued from the same office, Jan. 1, 1835. Soon after, Dr. T. M. Foote and E. A. Mauchester became associated in the management of the two papers; and in Aug. 1835, the Aurora Standard was merged in them, and A. M. Clapp, its publisher, became one of the proprietors of the joint con-

Jewett & Co. The following year the daily appeared as The Buffalo Commercial Advertiser, and under these titles the papers are still published, under the editorial charge of Dr. S. B. Hunt. Since 1856 a semi-weekly Commercial Advertiser has been issued.
- The Niagara Journal was established in July, 1815, by David M. Day; and in 1820 its name was changed to The Buffalo Journal. In 1834 it passed into the hands of E. J. Roberts, and in 1835 it was suspended.
- The Buffalo Whig was established in 1834 by D. M. Day; and in 1835 it was united with the Buffalo Journal, and appeared as The Buffalo Whig and Journal. Jan. 1, 1836, M. Cadwallader and Dr. H. R. Stagg were associated with Day, and in Feb. they issued.
- The Buffalo Daily Journal. In 1838 the establishment passed into the hands of E. R. Jewett, by whom the papers were united the following year with the Buffalo Patriot and the Commercial Advertiser.
- The Gospel Advocate (Univ.) was begun in 1822 by Rev. Thomas Gross. In 1823 Simeon Banton, and in 1826 Revs. L. S. Everett, Theophilus Fiek, and M. Tuttle, became proprietors. In 1828 it was removed to Auburn.
- The Black Rock Beacon was published by L. G. Hoffman from 1822 to 1824.
- The Buffalo Emporium was issued in 1824 by J. A. Lazelle and Simeon Francis, and continued about 5 years.
- The Black Rock Gazette was begun in 1824 by Bartenius Ferguson, who disposed of it to S. H. Salisbury in 1825. In 1827 it was removed to Buffalo, and its name changed to The Buffalo and Black Rock Gazette. It was discontinued in 1828.
- The Black Rock Advocate was begun in Feb. 1826, and was published 1 year by Dan'l P. Adams.
- The Western Advertiser, after an existence of 3 months, was merged in the Buffalo Patriot in the spring of 1826.
- The Buffalo Republican was commenced in April, 1828, by W. P. M. Wood. It was successively under the charge of S. H. Salisbury & W. S. Snow, S. H. Salisbury, H. L. Ball, Chas. Faxon & Jas. Stryker, and Chas. Faxon. In 1835 the Buffalo Bulletin was merged in the Republican, and the Daily Star was bought by Faxon and continued under its old name. Horatio Gates and W. L. Crandall were successively editors. In Dec. 1838 the office was burned and the papers were suspended; but the weekly was resumed by Quartus Graves in 1839. Jan. 1, 1842, Henry Burwell, then proprietor, changed its name to The Democratic Economist; and in Oct. following Joseph Stringman succeeded, and changed it to The Mercantile Courier and Democratic Economist. In Feb. 1843, it appeared as The Buffalo Courier and Economist; and in March as The Buffalo Courier. July 1, 1846, it was united with The Pilot, and
- The Courier and Pilot, d., tri-w., and w., was published by Stringman, Manchester & Brayman. In Dec. it was changed to
- The Buffalo Courier, its present title. It has passed successively through the hands of Robt. D. Foy & Co., Seaver & Foy, Wm. A. Seaver, Seaver & Sandford, and to J. L. Sandford, its present publisher.
- The Buffalo Bulletin was issued in 1830, and was published by Horace Steel 4 years, by James Faxon 1 year, and was united with The Republican in 1835.
- The Daily Star was commenced in 1834 by Jas. Faxon, and in 1835 it was united with The Republican.

AMHERST³—was formed from Buffalo, April 10, 1818; and Chicktowaga was taken off in 1839. It lies upon the n. border of the co., between Clarence and Tonawanda. Its surface is level. Eleven Mile and Ransoms Creeks flow across the town in a n. e. direction; and Tonawanda Creek forms its n. boundary. The soil is a sandy and clayey loam. Upon the land of John Foglesonger, in the s. part of the town, is a very copious sulphur spring. A gristmill with 3 run of stone has been built on the stream formed by it. A ledge of limestone extends across the s. part of the town, from which limestone is quarried in various places. Beneath this ledge is a layer of hydraulic limestone, which is extensively quarried at Williamsville and burned for waterlime. Williamsville,⁴ (p.v.) incorp. in 1850, is situated on Eleven Mile Creek, in the s. part of the town. It contains 4 churches, an academy,⁵ and several manufactories.⁶ Pop.

¹ Among the first settlers were Joseph Freeman, John Eastabrook, Wm. Snow, and Arunah Hibbard, who came in 1810; Saml. Slade, James Crocker, Saml. Huntington, and Jonas Stickney, who came in 1811; and Wm. Dayton, who came in 1812. The first birth was that of a daughter of Arunah Hibbard; and the first death, that of Polly Cransky, in 1812. John Rogers built the first sawmill, in 1813 or '14, and the first gristmill, in 1817. Amos Bliss kept the first inn, and Seth Eastabrook the first store, both in 1816. The first school was taught by Mehetabel Eastabrook, in 1815.
² Bap., Presb., Evang. Luth., M. E., and 2 R. C.
³ Named in honor of Lord Amherst, commander of the English forces in America in 1759-60.
⁴ Named from Jonas Williams, one of the early settlers.
⁵ The Williamsville Classical Institute. The whole number of students for the year 1857 was 222.
⁶ A gristmill, a sawmill, a tannery, a furnace, a broom factory, a chair factory, and a waterlhrs mill, the last producing 3,000 to 6,000 hbls. of hydraulic cement per year.

1,166. Egbertsville, Getzville, East Amherst, and Westwood are p. offices. The first settlement was made in 1804, by Timothy S. Hopkins and Elias Ransom, from Great Barrington, Mass.¹ There are 9 churches in town.²

AURORA—was formed from Batavia, as "Willink," April 11, 1804. Its name was changed April 15, 1818. Clarence was taken off in 1808, Buffalo in 1810, Concord, Hamburg, and Eden in 1812, Holland and Wales in 1818, and a part of Elma in 1857. It occupies nearly a central position in the co. Its surface is rolling in the n. and hilly in the s. The declivities of the hills are generally gradual slopes, and their summits are 150 to 300 feet above the valleys. The principal streams are Cazenove Creek and its branches. The soil is gravelly loam in the valleys and clayey among the hills. Willink, (p. v.), incorp. Dec. 29, 1849, is situated on the e. branch of Cazenove Creek, in the n. part of the town. It contains 2 churches and a woolen factory and has a pop. of 365. East Aurora, (p. v.), about 1 mi. e. of Willink, contains 2 churches, an academy,³ and several manufacturing establishments. Pop. 360. West Falls, (p. v.) on the w. bank of Cazenove Creek, in the s. part of the town, contains 1 church, 2 sawmills, a gristmill, and about 30 houses; and Griffins Mills, (p. v.) on the same stream, near the center of the town, contains 1 church, a sawmill, a gristmill, and 25 houses. The first settlement was made in the fall of 1803, by Jabez Warren, Henry Godfrey, and Nath'l Emerson.⁴ The evidences of ancient Indian occupation were plainly visible upon the advent of the whites.⁵ The first church (Bap.) was organized with 16 members, in 1810, by Elder Irish. There are 7 churches in town.⁶ Ex-Pres. Millard Fillmore and Hon N. K. Hall, Judge of Supreme Court and Ex-P. M. Gen., were for some years residents of East Aurora.

BOSTON—was formed from Eden, April 5, 1817. It is an interior town, lying s. of the center of the co. Its surface is a hilly upland, broken by the valley of the n. branch of Eighteen Mile Creek, which flows n. w. through near the center of the town. The valley of this stream is about three-fourths of a mile wide. In this valley the soil is a fine, fertile loam, and upon the hills it is a gravelly and clayey loam. Boston, (p. v.), on the n. branch of Eighteen Mile Creek, contains 3 churches, 2 gristmills, 2 sawmills, a tannery, a cow-bell factory, and 40 houses; Boston Center, (Patchin p. o.) on the same stream, contains 2 churches, a sawmill, and 20 houses; and North Boston, (p. v.), 1 church, a gristmill, a sawmill, and 20 houses. The first settlement was made by Didemus Kinney, in 1803.⁷ The first religious services were conducted by Rev. John Spencer, in 1810. There are 7 churches in town.⁸

BRANDT⁹—was formed from Collins and Evans, March 25, 1839. It lies upon the shore of Lake Erie, in the s. w. corner of the co. The surface is generally level, with a gentle inclination toward the lake. Cattaraugus Creek forms a part of the s. boundary. The other principal streams are Big Sister, Delaware, and Muddy Creeks. The soil is generally a gravelly loam intermixed with clay. Brandt (p. v.) contains 20 houses, and Mill Branch (Farnham p. o.) 30. The first settlement was made in 1817, by Moses Tucker.¹⁰ The first religious services were conducted by Benj. Olmsted, in 1820. A union church is the only one in town.

¹ Among the early settlers were Wm. Maltbury, Jonas Williams, James Hermon, Horatio Kelsey, Seth Canfield, Enos A. Armstrong, and Jas. Harris. The first sawmill was built in 1801, by — Thomson; and the first gristmill, by Wm. Maltbury, in 1808. Elias Ransom kept the first inn, in 1805, and Juba Stors & Co. the first store, in 1812.

² Bap., Disciples, M. E., and Germ. Cath. at Williamsville, and 2 Evang. Luth., Free, Mennonite, and N. C. in other parts of the town.

³ The Aurora Manual Labor Seminary was chartered Oct. 18, 1833; and in 1838 its name was changed to the Aurora Academy. The manual labor department was long since abandoned.

⁴ These were followed by Joel and John Adams, Tabor Earle, and Humphrey Smith, in 1804, and Wm. Warren, Thos. Tracy, Christopher Stone, and Luther Hibbard, in 1805. The first birth was that of Orra Warren, in Dec. 1805; and the first death, that of a daughter of Humphrey Smith, in 1805. Phineas Stevens built the first sawmill, in 1806, and the first gristmill, in 1807. Gen. Wm. Warren kept the first inn, in 1806, and Adams & Hascall the first store, in 1808. The first school was taught by Mary Eddy, in 1806.

in Aurora: the finders, not knowing its value as a specimen of antiquity, converted it into a dipper and skimmer.—Turner's Hol. Pur., p. 168.

⁸ 2 Presb., Bap., Cong., M. E., Univ., and R. C.

⁷ Oliver and Charles Johnson settled in the town in 1805, and Richard Cary and Sam'l Eaton in 1807. The first birth was that of Phinney Johnson, in 1806; the first marriage, that of David Starnard and Esther Yaw, in 1810; and the first death, that of Joel Beebe, in 1809. Ethan Howard built the first mill, in 1810; Job Palmer kept the first inn, in 1811; and Aaron J. Tupper the first store, the same year. The first school was taught by Joel Eddy, in 1810.

⁹ Bap., Free Will Bap., Evang. Luth., Friends, M. E., Meth. Prot., and Univ.

¹⁰ Named from Col. Joseph Brant, the Mohawk chief. His Indian name was "Tha-yon-da-ne-gah," said to signify "wood partly burned," or "a brand;" and as the Indians are unable to distinguish d from t in their pronunciation, it became Brant.—Asher Wright, Missionary at the Cattaraugus Reservation.

¹¹ John, Robert, and Major Campbell, and John West, settled in the town in 1808, and Ansel Smith, Robt. and Wm. Granuis, and Benj. Olmsted, in 1819. The first birth was that of a son of John West, in 1818; the first marriage, that of Levi Granuis and Leah Hallida, in 1819; and the first death, that of Matthew West, in 1822. The first mill was built by Sam'l Butte, in 1822; the first inn was kept by Josephus Hulbard, in 1825; and the first store, by Milton Morse, in 1835. Julia Bradley taught the first school, in 1823.

Amherst was taken off in 1818, and Tonawanda in 1836. The village of Buffalo was incorp. April 2, 1813, re-organized in 1815, and again in 1822, and incorp. as a city April 20, 1832, with its limits enlarged by the addition of that part of the Mile Strip Reservation² s. of York and North Sts. By the provisions of a new charter, granted April 13, 1853, the then town of "Black Rock" was included within the city limits. The city lies at the e. extremity of Lake Erie, extending nearly 10 mi. along the lake shore and the upper part of Niagara River, and occupies an area of about 40 sq. mi. The principal streams are Big Buffalo and Scajaquady³ Creeks,—the former emptying into Lake Erie and the latter into Niagara River. The principal business part of the city is on the lake shore around the harbor. The land in this locality is low, and was once considered "an irreclaimable morass; but it is now densely covered with substantial warehouses and large stores, intermingled with factories, foundries, mechanics' shops, and dwellings."⁴

The site rises gradually, and attains in one or two places an elevation of about 100 ft.; but the greater portion of the area occupies an extended plain of an average height of 50 ft. above the lake. On the "Buffalo Plains," and along the river at North Buffalo, are extensive quarries of limestone, furnishing an excellent building material.⁵ The city is regularly laid out, and the streets are broad and straight. The flagging and paving are done in the most substantial manner, and are kept in excellent repair.⁶ The main part of the city is supplied with wholesome water from Niagara River by the Buffalo Water Works Company. The reservoir, situated on Niagara between Connecticut and Vermont Sts., is 88 ft. higher than the river, and has a capacity of 13,500,000 gallons. The water is elevated by two force pumps, each of a capacity of 235 gallons, and is distributed through 31 mi. of pipe.⁷ Lower Black Rock is supplied by the Jubilee Water Works with water obtained from the Jubilee Springs. It is conducted through wooden pipes, of which there are more than two miles laid.⁸ There are 5 post-offices in the city,—Buffalo, North Buffalo, Buffalo Plains, Red Jacket, and Black Rock.

The harbor of Buffalo is formed by Big Buffalo Creek, along which for more than a mile is a continuous line of wharves. A pier extends from the s. side of the harbor 1500 ft. into the lake, forming an effectual barrier against the encroaching sands, which everywhere on the lake have a tendency to accumulate on the w. side of piers. At its extremity is a lighthouse.⁹ The Erie Canal enters the city along Niagara River, from which it is separated by a seawall, and extends southward to near the mouth of Buffalo Creek, and thence eastward to Hamburg St. The Erie Basin, just n. of the mouth of Buffalo Creek, protected lakeward by a breakwater, and the Ohio Basin, about one and one-fourth mi. from the mouth of the creek, containing an area of 10 acres, are both connected with the harbor and canal and are sufficiently deep to float the largest lake vessels.¹⁰ A ship canal more than a mi. in length extends along the w. side of Big Buffalo Creek parallel to the shore of the lake. This canal, the basins, the Erie Canal, and the harbor are all connected by numerous slips. Six railroads terminate in the city; and another—the Buffalo & Pittsburgh—is in process of construction.¹¹

³ Named from an Indian of that name, and pronounced Skajocquad-da.

⁵ The pier, the break water, the arsenal, St. Joseph's Cathedral, and many of the most substantial buildings in the city, are in part or wholly built of this stone.

⁶ There are 251 mi. of located streets within the city limits, 37½ mi. of paved streets, 205,000 line or feet of stone sidewalks, and 108 mi. of plank walks. There are 1,960 street lamps in the city, lighted by gas furnished by the Buffalo Gas Light Company. The present cost of the street improvements is estimated at $2,000,000; and the aggregate of taxes for local improvements in 1857 was $356,913.

⁷ The Buffalo Water Works Company was incorp. March 15, 1849. The original cost of the works was $400,000, and $365,000 of the earnings have been expended in extending the works. Connected with them are 320 street hydrants, and 20 underground reservoirs, having an aggregate capacity of 407,850 gal.

⁸ The Jubilee Water Works Company was organized in 1827, with a capital of $20,000. At one time the company had 16 mi.

of wooden pipe laid, fully supplying Black Rock and a part of Buffalo; but, while the increase of population created a greater demand for water, the supply from the springs diminished, and in 1845 the citizens of Lower Black Rock purchased the works and confined the supply to their own village.

⁹ The lighthouse is built entirely of stone and iron. It is 44 ft. high, 26 ft. in diameter at its base, and 12 ft. at the top. The mainmast upon which it stands is 160 ft. in diameter and has a depth of 15 ft. below the surface of the water. The pier and lighthouse were completed in 1833. It is furnished with a first class dioptric Fresnel apparatus.

¹⁰ These basins were constructed by the State as parts of the great system of internal navigation; but their sites were furnished by the city. The Erie Basin cost $300,000, and the Ohio Basin $60,000. They were commenced in 1848 and finished in 1858. Vessels driven by storms and falling to gain an entrance to the harbor find a capacious and sheltered retreat in the harbor of Black Rock,—formed by a mole from Bird Island to Squaw Island, a distance of 2015 yards. This, with the islands, forms a harbor 4,565 yards long and from 88 to 220 yards wide, with an area of 136 acres. Besides affording an exceedingly convenient harbor, with an average depth of 15 feet, this work secures a water-power of about 44 ft. A ship lock is constructed at its foot; and it is on the line of the Erie Canal.

¹¹ Besides these, 5 plank roads, a macadamized road, and a turnpike terminate in the city.

Buffalo is the second commercial city of the State, and the largest and most important upon the great lakes.¹ Its situation at the foot of navigation upon Lake Erie and at the western terminus of the Erie Canal makes it the principal port for the transshipment of the products of the great grain region of the Upper Mississippi Valley, and gives to it the command of the greater part of the commerce of the lakes.² The number of entries at this port during the year 1857 was 4,017, with an aggregate of 1,618,672 tons; and the number of clearances was 3,564, with an aggregate of 1,603,134 tons.³ The exportation and importation by canal is also immense;⁴ and it is estimated

² The amount of grain received in 1857 was 15,443,778 bush., and of flour 925,411 bbls., of which 15,348,930 bush. of grain and 845,953 bbls. of flour were received by lake. The same year there were received by lake 29,799 head of cattle, 75,174 hogs, and 44,872 sheep. The following table shows the imports, by lake, of flour and grain for a series of years:—

The annual average receipt of flour during the first five years was about 860,000 bbls.; during the next five it was 820,000; during the next five, 1,474,000; and during the next five, 909,000. The whole amount of grain received in 1847 was 9,668,187 bush., and in 1855 20,788,475 bush.,—the greatest amount in any one year. This was a greater amount than was received that year in any other port in the world. The following table shows the receipts of leading articles during three seasons:—

The total value of the importations of these three years were, in 1855, $48,767,315; in 1856, $40,429,571; and in 1857, $34,846,592.

that the value of merchandise and property transported by R. R. is greater than the entire amount of the lake commerce of this port.¹ About one-fourth of the shipping of the lake is owned by the citizens of Buffalo.² Shipbuilding is extensively carried on.³ The manufactures of the city are extensive and various.⁴

The principal public buildings are the Custom House, Fort Porter, the State Arsenal, and the city markets. The Custom House, on the corner of Seneca and Washington Sts., is a handsome and well built structure, containing, beside the custom house office, accommodations for the post-office and the U. S. courts. It was constructed, at a cost of $140,000, from designs furnished by the U. S. Treasury Department.⁵ Fort Porter, built in 1842-48, is a fortification on the bank of Niagara River at the point where it emerges from Lake Erie. The State Arsenal, erected in 1858, is a massive stone building fronting on Batavia St.⁶ There are four large markets, conveniently located in different parts of the city.⁷

The Public Schools of the city have long enjoyed a deservedly high reputation. They are carefully nurtured through the operations of an enlightened public sentiment, and are so excellent in all their departments that scarcely any other elementary schools are supported or needed. They are thoroughly graded, consisting of three general departments. The third department is an advanced school for the whole city; and in it a complete academic course, excepting the classics, is taught. There were, in 1857, 32 school districts, employing 189 teachers,—24 males and 165 females. The number of children, between 4 and 21 years of age, was 28,000, of whom 15,593, or a small fraction more than 55½ per cent., were in attendance some portion of the year.⁸

² The amount of shipping owned in Buffalo, as shown by the custom house books, is as follows:—

Vessels.	No.	Tonnage.
Steamers.....	10	9,067
Propellers.....	50	30,186
Tugs.....	20	2,629

In connection with one of the shipyards of the city is a dry dock of sufficient capacity to admit a steamer of over 2500 tons; also a marine railway; and near by is a large derrick for hoisting boilers and heavy machinery.

The value of the articles manufactured in 1857 was about $10,000,000, of which the leading products are estimated as follows:—ships and boats, $1,800,000; leather, $1,500,000; flour, $1,000,000; stoves and other castings, $600,000; machines, $600,000; distilled stuffs, $400,000; piano fortes, $350,000; boots and shoes, $100,000.

For most of the statistics of the commerce and manufactures of Buffalo we are indebted to the Annual Statement of the Trade and Commerce of Buffalo for 1857, issued from the office of the Commercial Advertiser.

The Buffalo Medical College, on the corner of Main and Virginia Sts., was organized in Aug. 1846, under the charter of the University of Buffalo. A course of lectures is given each winter; and the students are admitted to the hospital of the Sisters of Charity, on stated days, during the visits of the medical and surgical officers.

The Buffalo Mercantile College, on the corner of Main and Seneca Sts., was established Oct. 10, 1854. Its object is to impart a theoretical and practical knowledge of business transactions.

The Buffalo Commercial College, on Main St., is an institution similar in character to the Mercantile College.

The Buffalo Law Library Association, incorp. April 2, 1833,—capital $10,000, in shares of $100 each,—was formed for the purpose of securing the benefits of a professional library beyond the reach of private means.

The Young Men's Association was established in the winter of 1835–36, and incorp. in March, 1843. It has a library of about 10,000 volumes, and a reading room, which is well supplied with papers from most of the principal cities of the Union. During the winter months lectures are maintained by the association.

The German Young Men's Association was organized in 1841 and chartered in 1846. The library contains about 2000 volumes, mostly German works.

The Young Men's Christian Union was established in May, 1852, and incorp. March, 1853. It has for its object the moral and intellectual improvement of young men. Its library and reading rooms are in Kremlin Hall, at the junction of Niagara and Erie Sts.

The Young Men's Catholic Association and the Buffalo Catholic Institute are societies similar to the preceding.

The Buffalo Medical Association was formed in 1845 and incorp. in 1856. Its objects are purely scientific and professional, and its membership is confined to the medical profession of the county.

The Mendelssohn Association, organized Jan. 1858, has for its object the improvement and cultivation of vocal and instrumental music.

The Deutsche Leidertafel and the Deutscher Saengerbund are German societies of a similar character.

The Buffalo Orphan Asylum, located on Virginia St., was organized in 1835 and incorp. April 24, 1837. The site was donated by Louis S. Le Couteux, and the present building was erected in 1850. The average number of inmates is about 80.

The Buffalo Female Orphan Asylum, on the corner of Batavia and Ellicott Sts., was established in 1848, under the care of the Sisters of Charity of St. Joseph. The present number of children is 98.

The Buffalo Hospital of the Sisters of Charity, on Virginia St., was incorp. July 5, 1848. The building contains 20 wards, and the average number of patients is 130.

The Buffalo General Hospital was incorp. Nov. 21, 1855, and went into operation in 1858. It was founded by individual donations, amounting to $20,000, and a State appropriation of $10,000.¹

The Lying-In Hospital, on Edward St., is under the charge of the Sisters of Charity.

The Buffalo City Dispensary, a society of physicians, was organized to afford gratuitous medical services to the destitute.

The Association for the Relief of the Poor disburses among the needy each winter sums ranging from $1,500 to $8,000.

The Firemen's Benevolent Association was incorp. March 23, 1837, and has for its object the accumulation of a fund for the relief of indigent and disabled firemen and their families.

The Buffalo Physicians' Charitable Fund Association was organized in 1858, to provide means for the assistance and relief of the widows and orphans of medical men.

A M. E. church was founded in Buffalo, in 1809, by the Rev. Jas. Mitchell; but it had no permanent organization. The oldest church now in the city (1st Presb.) was organized Feb. 2, 1812, by the Rev. Thaddeus Osgood. The next established were a Prot. E., Bap., a M. E., and a Univ. There are now 57 churches in the city.² Most of the church edifices are large and commodious; and many of them are of a high order of architectural beauty. St. Joseph's Cathedral (R. C.) is in this city, has been prominently before the public from the refusal of its trustees to convey their church property to the bishop, and the extraordinary but ineffectual efforts made by the Roman pontiff to induce obedience to this order. In 1853 Cardinal Bedini visited America, having this as a prominent object of his mission; but the trustees were inflexible, and still continue the owners of their property.

the largest and most costly in the city.¹ *St. Paul's*² and St. John's, (Prot. E.), and the North and Central (Presb.) churches, are elegant and substantial structures.

The earliest notice of the site of the city of Buffalo is found in the travels of Baron La Hontan, who visited this locality in 1687.³ No white settlers located here until after the American Revolution. A village of the Seneca Indians lay on Buffalo Creek, about 3 mi. from its mouth. In March, 1791, Col. Thos. Proctor, U. S. Commissioner, visited "Buffalo Creek,"—as this village was then called,—on an embassy to the Indians. The locality around the mouth of the creek was then called "Lake Erie," and Cornelius Winney, an Indian trader, resided there.⁴ The place was visited in 1795 by La Rochefoucault Liancourt, a French nobleman, who says that "at the post on Lake Erie there was a small collection of four or five houses."⁵ Buffalo was laid out by the agent of the Holland Land Company in 1801, and was called by them "New Amsterdam."⁶ Settlement was commenced at Black Rock in 1807.⁷ In 1808 "New Amsterdam" was made the county seat of Niagara co.; and its name was then changed to Buffalo. In 1812 it became a military post. In Dec. 1813, a party of British and Indians crossed over from Canada, defeated the American forces, and fired the villages of Black Rock and Buffalo. Only two dwelling houses were left standing.⁸ The rebuilding of the village was not commenced until 1815. Buffalo had from the first a formidable rival in Black Rock. While the mouth of Buffalo Creek was obstructed by a bar, Black Rock possessed an excellent harbor and monopolized the infant commerce of the lake. The "Walk-in-the-Water," the first steamboat on Lake Erie, was built at Black Rock in 1818. The construction of Buffalo harbor was commenced in 1820, by the citizens;⁹ and in 1827 the General Government assumed its completion and built the present pier and lighthouse. The Erie Canal was finished in 1825; and from that time to the present Buffalo has increased in wealth and population with the characteristic rapidity of the cities of the West.¹⁰

CHICKTOWAGA¹¹—was formed from Amherst, March 22, 1839; and a part of West Seneca was taken off in 1851. It is an interior town, lying n. of the center of the co. The surface is level. The principal streams are Eleven Mile, Cayuga, and Slate Bottom Creeks. The soil is a heavy, tough clay. Chicktowaga and Four Mile Creek are p. offices. The first settlement was made by Apollos Hitchcock, in 1808.¹² There is but 1 church (R. C.) in town.

CLARENCE—was formed from "Willink," (now Aurora,) March 11, 1808. Alden was taken off in 1823, and Lancaster in 1833. It lies upon the n. border of the co., between Newcastle and Amherst. Its surface is level. A limestone terrace about 50 feet high, with a wall-like front facing the n., extends e. and w. through the center of the town. The streams are Tonawanda Creek, on the n. border, and Ransoms Creek, flowing n. w. through near the center of the town. The soil in the n. part is clayey, and in the s. a sandy and gravelly loam underlaid by

¹ The cathedral is 236 ft. long, 86 ft. wide in the body, and 120 at the transept. The ceiling is 75 ft. high, the roof outside 90 feet, and the spire, when finished, will be 220 ft. high. The windows are all of beautiful stained glass, the larger ones in figures representing sacred scenes and characters. The tripartite window above the altar represents the birth, crucifixion, and ascension of Christ. This window was executed in Munich, at a cost of $5,000.

² This church was erected at a cost of about $100,000. It has a chime of 10 bells, which cost $15,000.

³ La Hontan recommended to the French Government the erection of a fort at this place.

⁴ Winney's house—undoubtedly the first erected in Buffalo—stood near where the Washington St. Canal Bridge now is.

⁶ The principal streets were named from members of the Holland Land Company. Main St. was called "Willinks Avenue," Niagara St. "Schimmelpenick's Avenue," Genesee St. "Busti Avenue," Erie St. "Vollenhovens Avenue," and Church St. "Stadnitzki Avenue." In 1826 these names were changed by the trustees of the village. The business of the Holland Land Company was transacted here for a short time previous to the opening of their office at "Ransoms Grove," now Clarence Hollow, in 1801.

⁷ The surveyor general was directed (April 11, 1804) to lay out the land about Black Rock—forming a part of the Mile Strip—into lots and report to the legislature. This was accordingly done; and in his report the surveyor general stated his belief that this was the best, if not the only, place at this end of the lake where a harbor of proper size could be constructed. From the earliest period the U. S. had designated this vicinity as the site of a fortification. The report closed with the following words:—"It will be observed that streets are laid where it will either be impracticable or useless to open them soon. It may, notwithstanding, be useful now to contemplate, in the plans of towns, what will be necessary arrangements a century hence. Such plans on record, while for the present they can be productive of no harm, may prevent those aberrations from order that might hereafter be a cause of much inconvenience; and, without being governed by extravagant calculations, no doubt can be entertained that the future importance of this place will justify extensive views in the projection of its arrangements." The village, like Lewiston, Oswego, Salina, and Fort Covington, was patented in small parcels.

⁸ See p. —. In 1825, Congress made an appropriation of $80,000 to compensate the inhabitants for the losses incurred by this disaster.

⁹ The sum of $1,861.25 was raised by subscription, and a loan of $12,000 was obtained from the State. A pier, extending 80 rods into the lake, was built, and a lighthouse erected upon the land. The Superior—the second steamboat launched upon Lake Erie—was built at Buffalo in 1822.

¹⁰ The population at different periods has been as follows—

1810.....	1,508	1830.....	8,668	1845.....	28,773
1814.....	1,000	1835.....	19,715	1850.....	42,261
1820.....	2,095	1840.....	18,213	1855.....	74,244
1825.....	5,141

The population of Black Rock (now about 12,000) is included in the returns of 1855 only.

¹¹ This name was given at the suggestion of Alex. Hitchcock. It is a corruption of the Seneca word "Jih-do-waah-geh," signifying "the place of the crab-apple tree," the Indian name of this locality.

COLDEN⁴—was formed from Holland, April 2, 1827. It is an interior town, lying s. of the center of the co. The surface is an elevated upland, rolling in the e. and hilly in the w. The w. branch of Cazenove Creek flows through the w. part of the town and is bordered by steep declivities 150 to 200 ft. high. The soil is a gravelly loam intermixed with clay. Colden, (p. v.,) on Cazenove Creek, contains a sawmill, a gristmill, and 34 houses; Glenwood, (p. v.,) on the same stream, contains 1 church, 3 sawmills, 2 lath mills, a tannery, and 30 houses. The first settlement was made in 1810, by Richard Buffum.⁵ The Presbyterian, at Glenwood, is the only church in town.

COLLINS—was formed from Concord, March 16, 1821. A part of Brandt was taken off in 1839, and North Collins in 1852. It lies on the s. border of the co., w. of the center. The surface is a rolling upland, sloping gradually to the w. and descending abruptly to Cattaraugus Creek upon the s. The summits of the ridges are 150 to 300 ft. above the valleys. Cattaraugus Creek forms the s. boundary of the town; and the other streams are Clear Creek and its tributaries. The channels of these streams are narrow and deep. The soil is a clayey loam on the uplands and a gravelly loam along the streams. Collins Center (p. v.) contains 1 church and 36 houses. Angola is a p. o. near the n. w. corner of the town. Gowanda lies partly in this town.⁶ The first settlement was made in 1806, by Jacob Taylor.⁷ There are 5 churches in town.⁸

CONCORD—was formed from "Willink," (now Aurora,) March 20, 1812; and Collins and Sardinia were taken off in 1821. It lies upon the s. border of the co., between Sardinia and Collins. The surface is a rolling or hilly upland, with steep declivities bordering upon Cattaraugus Creek. Townsend Hill, the highest point, is nearly 1500 ft. above tide. The principal streams are Cattaraugus Creek, upon the s. boundary of the town, and its tributaries. Several small brooks, forming the head waters of Eighteen Mile and Cazenove Creeks, take their rise in this town. The soil in the s. part is a gravelly loam, and in the n. a clayey loam underlaid by hardpan. Springville, (p. v.,) incorp. April 11, 1834, is situated in the s. part of the town, and contains 5 churches, the Springville Academy, a newspaper office, and several manufacturing establishments.⁹ Pop. 953. Mortons Corners, (p. v.,) in the s. w. part, contains 1 church, 2 sawmills, a gristmill, and 20 houses. Woodwards Hollow (p. o.) is a hamlet. The first settlement was made in 1808, by Christopher Stone.¹⁰ The first church was organized Nov. 2, 1816, by Rev. John Spencer. There are 7 churches in town.¹¹

EAST HAMBURGH—was formed from Hamburg, as "Ellicott," Oct. 15, 1850. A part of West Seneca, as "Seneca," was taken off in 1851. Its name was changed Feb. 20, 1852. It is an interior town, lying near the center of the co. The surface is a broken upland. Chestnut Ridge, the highest land in the town, has an elevation of about 500 ft. above Lake Erie. The declivities of the hills are generally gradual slopes, broken by narrow ravines formed by the streams. Smokes Creek and its branches are the most considerable streams. The soil is a loam, gravelly in the n. and clayey in the s. East Hamburg, (p. v.,) n. of the center of the town,

During the War of 1812 a party of British sailors and mariners landed near Sturgeon Point, in the night, and commenced plundering the inhabitants. Judge Aaron Salisbury, then a young man, seized his musket and started off alone to get a shot at them. When he arrived they were retreating to their boats, and an exchange of shots produced no damage on either side. They started for the mouth of Eighteen Mile Creek, and he on foot endeavored to get there before them; but they had landed when he arrived. He immediately commenced firing; and they, not knowing how large a force was opposing them, retreated to their boats and speedily left. Here one man frightened away 100 and saved the inhabitants from plunder.

HAMBURGH²—was formed from "Willink," (now Aurora,) March 20, 1812; and East Hamburg was taken off in 1850, and a part of West Seneca, as "Seneca," in 1851. It lies on the shore of Lake Erie, near the center of the w. border of the co. Its surface in the e. is rolling; but in the w. it is nearly level, with a gentle inclination toward the lake. A bluff averaging 50 to 100 feet high borders the lake. The principal stream is Eighteen Mile Creek. The soil is mostly a clayey loam; in the s. e. corner it is gravelly. Whites Corners, (p. v.,) on the n. branch of Eighteen Mile Creek, in the s. e. part of the town, contains 5 churches, a gristmill, a sawmill, a tannery, and has a pop. of 609; Water Valley, (p. o.,) on the same stream, w. of Whites Corners, contains a woolen factory, a furnace, and 20 houses; Abbotts Corners, (Hamburg p. o.,) in the e. part of the town, contains 2 churches, a sawmill, a shingle mill, and 145 inhabitants. Big Tree Corners and Hamburg-on-the-Lake are p. offices. The first settlement was made in 1804, by Nathaniel Titus and Dr. Rufus Belden.³ There are 7 churches in town.⁴

HOLLAND—was formed from "Willink," (now Aurora,) April 15, 1818; and Colden was taken off in 1827. It lies upon the e. border of the co., s. e. of the center. The surface is a high, broken upland, divided by the valley of Cazenove Creek. The summit of the highland is about 900 ft. above Lake Erie. The soil is a gravelly loam, intermixed in some places with slate and clay. The valley of Cazenove Creek is very fertile. Holland, (p. v.,) on Cazenove Creek, contains 1 church, several manufacturing establishments,⁵ and 28 houses. The first settlement was made in 1807, by Jared Scott, Abner Currier, and Arthur Humphrey, from Vt.⁶ There is but 1 church (Bap.) in town.

LANCASTER—was formed from Clarence, March 20, 1833; a part of Elma was taken off in 1857, and a part of West Seneca in 1851. It is an interior town, n. e. of the center of the co. The surface is level. Cayuga and Eleven Mile Creeks are the principal streams; upon them are several mill sites. The soil is a clayey and gravelly loam. Lancaster, (p. v.,) incorp. March 13, 1849, is a station on the N. Y. C. R. R., in the w. part of the town. It contains 6 churches, a bank, and several manufactories.⁷ Pop. 1,259. Bowmansville, (p. v.,) in the n. w. corner of the town, 1818, by commissioners appointed respectively by the United States and British Governments. While the matter was still undecided, a large number of lawless persons—mostly refugees from justice from both sides of the river—squatted upon the island, locating principally along the shores. Remaining for some time unmolested, they began to commit extensive depredations upon the timber; and finally they set up an independent government and elected a full quota of municipal officers. In April, 1819, the legislature passed an act authorizing the removal of these intruders. During the succeeding summer the governor issued a proclamation commanding them to desist from depredations upon the property of the State, and at once to remove. A few obeyed the command; but, seeing no active demonstrations on the part of Government, they returned. In the fall of 1819, Gov. Clinton directed Col. Jas. Cronk, the sheriff of Niagara co., to call out a sufficient military force for the purpose and forcibly expel them. On the 9th of Dec. 1819, the sheriff, accompanied by Lieuts. Benj. Hodge and ——— Osburne, 2 sergeants, 4 corporals, and 24 privates, went to the island in boats, manned by 20 boatmen, to carry into execution the orders of the governor. Every facility was given the people to remove with their effects; and the boatmen took them to either shore, as they might elect. The military were divided into 3 parties: a vanguard, to read the governor's orders and assist in clearing the houses; a second party, to forcibly remove all property left in the buildings; and a rear guard, to burn the buildings and complete the removal and destruction. Seventy houses were burned, and 150 people, consisting of men, women, and children, were turned out shelterless upon the U. S. and Canada shores. Two buildings, filled with grain, alone were saved. The removal and destruction occupied 5 days and cost the State $568.99. A few families returned immediately, but did not remain.

¹ In a memorial to the legislature in 1820 for the purchase of the island, Maj. Noah explained his object; recounted the persecution which his co-religionists in the Old World had suffered through many centuries; pointed out the benefits that had resulted to Spain, Portugal, France, and Germany from the commercial enterprise and the capital of the Jews when allowed the exercise of their rights; and painted in brilliant colors the benefits that would accrue to the U. S. if his people could exchange "the whips and scorns of Europe, Asia, and Africa for the light of liberty and civilization" which this country afforded. He estimated that there were 7,000,000 of Jews in the world, and predicted that, if the existence of an asylum of freedom were made known, large numbers would be induced to emigrate. The sanction of law was asked to give confidence to those who might not otherwise be induced to remove. His attempt to gather the Jews, like those before it, ended in day dreams. The European rabbi refused to sanction the effort; and Maj. Noah soon gave up the attempt, leaving no trace of his "city" upon the island but a monument of brick and wood. It bore, on a marble tablet, the following inscriptions from Deuteronomy vi. 4:—

דדאהרר

ARARAT,

A CITY OF REFUGE FOR THE JEWS,

Founded by MORDECAI M. NOAH, in the month of TIZRI 5,586, (September, 1825,) and in the 50th year of American Independence.

The monument has since tumbled down; and the schemes of Mordecai the Jew have scarcely a place in memory or a trace in history.

A Boston company was formerly extensively engaged in the manufacture of ship timber upon the island.

NEWSTEAD—was formed from Batavia, (Genesee co.,) as "Erie," April 11, 1804; its name was changed April 18, 1831. It is the N. E. corner town of the co. A limestone terrace extends through near the center of the town. North of this the surface is level, in many places marshy; and the soil is a clayey loam intermixed with marl and sand. To the s. the surface is level, or gently undulating, and the soil a sandy and clayey loam underlaid by limestone. The town is watered by several small streams, the principal of which is Murder Creek.⁵ A layer of hydraulic limestone crops out along the terrace, and waterlime is extensively manufactured from it. Akron,⁶ (p. v.,) incorp. Oct. 1850, is a station on the Canandaigua & N. F. branch of the N. Y. C. R. R., near the center of the town. It contains 4 churches and several manufacturing establishments.⁷ Pop. 462. Falkirk, 1 mi. E. of Akron, is a hamlet. The first settlement was made in the early part of the present century.⁸ The first religious society (M. E.) was organized in 1807, with 12 members, at the house of Charles Knight, by Rev. Peter Van Nest and Amos Jenks. There are 4 churches in town.⁹

NORTH COLLINS—was formed from Collins, Nov. 24, 1852, as "Shirley;" its name was changed June 24, 1853. It is an interior town, lying in the s. w. part of the co. Its surface is rolling, the summits of the ridges being 200 to 300 ft. above the valleys. The town is watered by the head branches of Eighteen Mile, Clear, and Big Sister Creeks. The streams generally flow through deep ravines bordered by steep declivities. The soil is a gravelly loam. North Collins, (Collins p. o.,) in the N. w. part of the town, contains 2 churches and 34 houses. Shirley (p. v.) and Langford, (p. o.,) near the center, New Oregon, (p. o.,) in the E. part, and Marshfield, (p. o.,) in the s., are hamlets. The first settlers were Stephen Sisson, Abram Tucker, and Enos Southwick, from Warren co., who moved into the town in 1810.¹⁰ There are 8 churches in town.¹¹

SARDINIA—was formed from Concord, March 16, 1821. It is the s. e. corner town of the co. The surface in the E. part of the town is gently rolling, and in the w. it is hilly. Shepherd Hill, s. w. of the center, is 1040 ft. above Lake Erie. Cattaraugus Creek forms the s. boundary. In the E. part the soil is a gravelly loam, and in the w. it is clay underlaid by hardpan. Sardinia, (p. v.,) in the s. E. part of the town, contains 2 churches, a woolen factory, a gristmill, a tannery, and 40 houses. Protection is a p. o. The first settlement was made by George Richmond, from Vt.¹² The first religious services were conducted by the Rev. John Spencer, in Feb. 1815. There are 2 churches in town; Bap. and M. E.

¹ Among the early settlers were Alanson Eggleston and David Hamlin, who came in 1804, Joel Parmelee, in 1805, Warren Hamlin, in 1806, Wm. Blackman, Peter Pratt, — Kerney, and Elisha Cox, in 1807, and Elias Bissell, Pardon Packham, and Benj. Clark, in 1808. The first birth was that of a pair of twins, children of Zophar Beach, and the first death, that of a child of Wm. Blackman, both in 1808. — Robinson built the first sawmill, in 1808; Ahaz Luce opened the first store, in 1810, and Jos. Carpenter the first inn, in 1812. The first school was taught by Freelove Johnson, in 1810.

² 2 Evang. Luth., 2 M. E., Disciples, Ger. Meth., Presb., and R. C.

³ Named from Mrs. Marilla Rutgers, of Alden.

⁴ Rice Wilder, Cyra Finney, and Rodman Day settled in the town in 1831. The first birth was that of Sarah Finney, in Oct. 1831. Jesse Barton built the first sawmill, in 1828, and the first gristmill, in 1832. Miles Carpenter kept the first store, in 1848, and the first inn, in 1850. The first school was taught by Sophia Day, in 1833.

⁵ Called by the Indians "See-un-gut," noise or roar of distant water. The creek was named from the fact that about the time of the first settlement a white man was murdered upon it, within the present village limits of Akron, by an Indian who was conducting him to Canada.

⁶ Named from Akron, Ohio, and the latter from a Greek word signifying "summit."

⁷ 2 gristmills, 2 sawmills, 1 waterlime mill, 1 furnace and machine shop, 1 planing mill, 1 stove and shingle mill, and a tannery.

⁸ Among the early settlers were Otis Ingalls, David Cully, Peter Van de Venter, Sam'l Miles, John Felton, Charles Barney, Aaron Beard, Robt. Durham, Tobias Cole, and Sam'l, Silas, John, and Thomas Hill. Peter Van de Venter kept the first inn, in 1802, and Archibald Clark the first store, in 1809. The first school was taught by — Keith, in 1807.

⁹ Bap., Presb., M. E., and R. C.

¹⁰ The first birth was that of Geo. Tucker, in Aug. 1810; the first marriage, that of Levi Woodward and Hannah Southwick, in 1812; and the first deaths, those of two girls, twin daughters of Stephen Sisson. Stephen Stancliff built the first mill, in 1818; Stephen Tucker kept the first inn, and Chester Rose the first store, both in 1813. The first school was taught by Phebe Southwick, in the summer of 1813.

¹¹ 2 Friends, 2 M. E., 2 R. C., Bap., and Cong.

¹² Among the early settlers were Ezra Nott, Henry Godfrey, and Josiah Sumner. Elisha Rice and Giles Briggs settled in the town in 1810. The first birth was that of Ray Briggs, in

TONAWANDA—was formed from Buffalo, April 16, 1836; and Grand Island was taken off in 1852. It lies in the n. w. part of the co., at the angle formed by the junction of Tonawanda Creek and Niagara River. Its surface is generally level. Eleven Mile Creek crosses the n. part of the town. The soil along Niagara River is clayey; in the interior it is sandy. Tonawanda, (p. v.), incorp. Dec. 3, 1853, is situated on the Erie Canal, at the confluence of Niagara River and Tonawanda Creek. It has a good harbor,¹ and is an important station on the B. & N. F. R. R. It is the western terminus of the C. & N. F. branch of the N. Y. C. R. R. It contains 5 churches, a newspaper office, a bank, an elevator,² and several manufacturing establishments.³ Pop. 1,257.⁴ The first settlement was made in 1805.⁵ There are 8 churches in town.⁶

WALES—was formed from Aurora, April 15, 1818; and a part of Marilla was taken off in 1853. It is situated near the center of the e. border of the co. Its surface is broken and hilly and inclined toward the n. The principal stream is Big Buffalo Creek. The soil in the n. is a gravelly loam, and in the s. clay underlaid by hardpan. Wales Center, (p. v.), on Big Buffalo Creek, in the n. part of the town, contains 2 churches, a gristmill, a sawmill, and 40 dwellings; Wales, (p. v.), on the same stream, contains 1 church, a gristmill, a sawmill, and 30 dwellings; and South Wales (p. v.) contains a gristmill, a sawmill, and 25 dwellings. The first settlement was made in 1805, by Oliver Pettengill.⁷ There are 3 churches in town; 2 M. E. and a Free Will Bap.

WEST SENECA—was formed, as "Seneca," from Chiektowaga, Hamburg and East Hamburg, and Lancaster, Oct. 16, 1851; its name was changed March 25, 1852. It is situated on the shore of Lake Erie, near the center of the w. border of the co. Its surface is gently undulating in the e. and level in the w. The streams are Big Buffalo, Cazenove, and Smokes⁸ Creeks. The soil is generally a sandy loam. The town is mainly settled by a society of German religionists, generally known as Ebenezers, but who style themselves the "Community of True Inspiration."⁹ Middle Ebenezer, on Buffalo Creek, contains a church, calico printing factory, woolen factory, sawmill, oil mill, and 67 houses; Lower Ebenezer, on Cazenove Creek, contains a church, sawmill, gristmill, tannery, and 50 houses; and New Ebenezer contains a large manufactory of cotton and woolen goods, an extensive dyeing works, and 9 dwellings. Reserve and West Seneca are p. offices. The first settlement was made by Reuben Sackett, in 1826.¹⁰ There are 4 churches in town.¹¹

1811; and the first death, that of a son of Henry Godfrey, in 1814. Sumner Warren built the first mill, in 1811; Geo. Richmond kept the first inn, in 1811; and Clark & Co. the first store, in 1816. The first school was taught by Melinda Abbey, in 1814.

¹ Large quantities of lumber are received at this port from Canada and the Western States. The quantity re-shipped by canal in 1857 was, of timber, 841,011 cubic feet; of sawed stuff, 4,815,441 ft.; and of wood, 16,007 cords.

² This elevator has a storage capacity of 250,000 bush., and facilities for elevating 2000 bush. per hour.

³ 3 sawmills, 3 shingle mills, a planing mill, and a furnace and machine shop.

⁴ This is the pop. of that part of the village in Erie co. A part of the village is across the creek, in Niagara co.; and the pop. of this is not known.

⁶ Disciples, Evang. Luth., M. E., R. C., and Wes. Meth. at Tonawanda Village, and Evang. Luth., M. E., and R. C. in other parts of the town.

⁷ Ethan and Wm. Allen and Jacob Turner settled in the town in 1806, and Chas. and Alex. McKay, Ebenezer Holmes, and Wm. Hoyt in 1807. The first birth was that of Wm. Pettangill, in June, 1806. Isaac and Eli Hall built the first mill, in 1811; Isaac Hall kept the first inn, in 1816; and Orsamus Warren the first store, in 1824. The first school was taught by Jas. Wood, in 1811. In 1813 an Indian hatchet was found imbedded in a tree at Wales Center, and in 1825 John Allen related the following circumstance concerning it. About the time of the first settlement of Buffalo an Indian came to that place and exhibited the skin of a white child, and boasted that he had murdered and skinned the child for the purpose of making a tobacco pouch. Truman Allen, (brother of the narrator,) hearing the boast, became so enraged that he followed the Indian to Wales and shot him. He buried the body and rifle in the sand, and stuck the tomahawk into a tree, where it was afterward found as above stated.

⁸ Named from an Indian who resided near its mouth and who was an inveterate smoker.

¹⁰ Among the other early settlers were Artemus W. Baker, John G. Wells, Isaac Barlle, and Geo. Hopper, who located in 1828. The first child born was a daughter of Joel Decker, in Aug. 1828; and the first death, that of Peter Beal, in 1834. Geo. E. Elderkin taught the first school, in 1839; Reuben Sackett kept the first inn, in 1826; the Ebenezer Society, the first store, in 1845; and Ballou & Tubell built the first mill, in 1837.

OSWEGO COUNTY.

THIS county was formed from Oneida and Onondaga, March 1, 1816.¹ It is situated upon the s.e. extremity of Lake Ontario, centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains an area of — sq. mi. Its surface is generally level or gently undulating. A series of bluffs 20 to 40 feet high border immediately upon the lake; and from their tops the land stretches out in long and gradual slopes, occasionally broken by the valleys of the river courses. The general inclination is northerly, as indicated by the drainage, though the summits of the ridges within half a mi. of the lake have about the same altitude as those upon the s. border of the co. A low ridge extending in an easterly and westerly direction, from 3 to 5 mi. n. of Oneida Lake, forms the watershed between Lakes

Ontario and Oneida. In the e. part of the co. this ridge turns northward and unites with the system of highlands which separates Lake Ontario and the valley of Black River. The highest point of this range, in the town of Redfield, is 1,200 to 1,500 feet above tide.

The rocks of this co. consist of the Lorraine shales, in the extreme n. part, on the lake; the gray sandstone,² extending from the n.e. corner to near the center, its southern limits being marked by a line drawn due e. from Oswego River about 1 mi. from its mouth; the Medina or red sandstone, bordering on the last, and comprising more than one-third of the area of the co.; and the Clinton group of shales, slate, and sandstone, occupying the extreme s. border. These rocks are exposed only in the n.e. part and along the river courses, being generally covered with a thick mass of drift and alluvial deposits, consisting of sand, gravel, and clay. The gray sandstone is hard and compact, and is little affected by the action of the elements; hence the disintegration is slight, and the soil upon it is thin and poor. The Lorraine shales are easily disintegrated, and form the basis of the strongest and richest soils in the co. The red sandstone crops out on the banks of all the streams which flow through the region which it occupies. It is extensively quarried for building stone, though it is more easily acted upon by the elements than the gray sandstone. Weak brine springs are found associated with this red sandstone throughout the co. The Clinton group, occupying the entire s. border, consists of parallel layers or beds of shale and red and gray sandstone. This is the same geological formation in which is found the principal iron ore beds of Penn. and Oneida co.; and throughout the formation in this co. iron ore is found.

The drainage of the w. and s. parts of the co. is principally through Oswego River, and of the n. and e. portions through Salmon River and a great number of smaller streams that flow directly into the lake. Oswego River is formed by the junction of Seneca and Oneida Rivers at Three River Point. It is 23 mi. in length, and falls 128 feet in its course, in several distinct falls, each of which furnishes an excellent water-power. Oneida River, forming the outlet of Oneida Lake, is 18 mi. in length, and falls about 12½ feet in its course. Salmon River and other streams flowing into the e. extremity of the lake all have successions of rapids and cascades, which furnish to that portion of the co. an abundance of water-power. The principal bodies of water are Lakes Ontario and Oneida. The former, constituting the n.w. boundary, presents an almost unbroken coast line for a distance of 40 mi. within the limits of the co. Great Sandy Bay, in the town of Sandy Creek, is the only considerable indentation. The mouth of Oswego River furnishes a valuable harbor, the only one of importance in the co. Oneida Lake, constituting a portion of the s. boundary, is 141½ feet above Lake Ontario.³ It is one link in the chain of the internal water communication of the State. A considerable portion of the land in its immediate vicinity is marshy. Iron ore beds and a fine quartz sand, used in the manufacture of glass, are found upon its n. shores. The soil found in the shale and sandstone region has already been noticed. The drift and alluvial deposits which cover the greater portion of the co. furnish a great variety of soil. The sandy portions are light and weak, while the clayey portions are hard, tough, and unyielding in many places. Where these are mixed, a rich, deep soil is the result. Along the e. border of the co. are great quantities of limestone boulders, which essentially modify the soil of that region. The marshes are generally composed of beds of black muck and other vegetable matter, and form the richest kind of natural meadow when drained and cultivated.

¹ Its name was derived from the Indian On-ti-ah-an-taque. The early French explorers called it "Chonaguen." The portion lying e. of Oswego River was taken from Oneida, and that lying w. from Onondaga. The Onondaga portion embraced the township of Hannibal and 33 lots of Lysander, belonging to the Military Tract.

² This gray sandstone has been used for grindstones.

³ This height is that given by the State Geologists. Joseph E. Bloomfield, Civil Engineer of Oswego co., who has made several surveys through this region, makes the height of Oneida Lake 124 feet above Lake Ontario.

Agriculture, manufactures, and commerce about equally engage the attention of the people. Stock raising and dairying are the principal branches of agriculture; spring grains and wool are also extensively produced.¹ The commerce is mostly concentrated at Oswego City, and is carried on by means of the lake, the Oswego Canal, and the r. r. The manufactures consist of flour, lumber, barrels,² starch, and a variety of other articles. The amount of flour annually manufactured is greater than in any other co. in the State. The principal mills are at Oswego City, Fulton, and vicinity.

The Oswego Canal, connecting Lake Ontario with the Erie Canal at Syracuse, is 38 mi. long, and for most of the distance is formed by the slackwater navigation of Oswego River. Oneida Lake and River also form a part of the internal navigable waters of the State, connecting with the Oswego Canal at Three River Point and with the Erie Canal at Higginsville. The Syracuse & Oswego R. R. forms the means of a rapid communication with the N. Y. C. R. R. at Syracuse, and so to all parts of the country. Several long lines of plank road have been built; but most of them have been abandoned.

This co. is divided into two jury districts,³ the courts being held respectively at Pulaski Village and Oswego City.⁴ At the former place a brick building, including a courthouse and jail, was erected in 1820, and at the latter a wood courthouse about the same time.⁵ A stone jail was erected in the city in 1850, and a fireproof co. clerk's office in 1851.⁶ The co. poorhouse is located upon a farm of 60 acres in the town of Mexico. It is an old building, and is poorly adapted to its purpose. The average number of inmates is about 50. An asylum for insane paupers is in process of erection adjacent to the poorhouse. The Oswego Orphan Asylum, located at Oswego City, is in part a co. institution. All the children of the inmates of the poorhouse between the ages of 4 and 6 years are supported at the Orphan Asylum at the co. expense.⁷

¹ The first settlers of the co. were principally engaged in the manufacture of lumber and potash. Wheat was once a staple production; but since the commencement of the ravages of the midge it has given place to the coarser grains.

² Barrels to the amount of 1,500,000 are annually manufactured for the Oswego flour mills and the Syracuse salt works.

⁵ The city soon outgrew the first courthouse, and the courts for many years were held in the city hall. They are now held in Mead's Hall, on E. Bridge St. The old courthouses for several years was used as a schoolhouse; but recently it has been removed, and converted into a Sunday school chapel for the Church of the Evangelists, where 500 children receive religious instruction. At their last annual meeting the Board of Supervisors authorized the raising and appropriated $30,000 for the erection of a new courthouse in the city, on the E. public square; and the building is now being constructed of Onondaga limestone.

⁸ The American Farmer, the first newspaper of the co., was issued at Oswego some time before 1807.

The Oswego Gazette was started at Oswego in 1817 by A. Buckingham, and continued 2 years.

The Oswego Palladium was commenced by John H. Lord and Dorephus Abbey in 1819. It subsequently passed into the hands of Mr. Lord, and was continued by him until 1830. John Carpenter then became the proprietor, and changed its name to

The Oswego Palladium and Republican Chronicle, and continued it until 1845, when it was sold to B. Brockway, who again changed its name to

The Oswego Palladium. In 1851 he transferred it to a company, by whom it was sold in 1853 to Dndley Farlow, the present editor, who sold his interest, in July, 1854, to T. P. Ottoway, the present publisher.

The Oswego Daily Palladium has been issued in connection with the weekly since 1850.

The Oswego Republican was established March 22, 1825, by Wm. W. Abbey. In 1827 it passed into the hands of Samuel Osgood, and was issued a short time as

The Oswego Gazette and Advertiser. In 1828 it was sold to Wm. C. Shope, who published it as

The Oswego Advertiser until 1829. It then passed into the hands of the late Dr. Burdell, of Cunningham notoriety, who changed its name to

The Freeman's Herald, and continued it 1 year. It was then suspended for 2 years, and revived in 1832 by John Q. Adams, by whom it was published as

The National Republican 1 year, and was then discontinued.

The Oswego Democratic Gazette was published a short time in 1830 by James Cochran.

The Oswego Free Press was published by Richard Oliphant from 1830 until 1834, and by Geo. G. Foster as

The Oswego Democrat until 1835, when it was discontinued. The Oswego Observer was started in Feb. 1835, by Bailey & Hawks, and continued until the latter part of 1836.

The Commercial Herald was published at Oswego by Hull & Henry from 1837 to 1843.

The Oswego Patriot was published at Oswego during the Patriot War of 1838-39 by John Bunner and John Cochran, member of the 35th and 36th Congress from the 6th district. (City of New York.)

The Oswego County Whig was founded in 1838 by Richard Oliphant, and sold to Daniel Ayer in 1844. In 1847 C. D. Brigham became proprietor, and changed its name to

The Oswego Commercial Times. In Nov. 1848, James N. Brown became the publisher; and in Feb. 1854, he was succeeded by Winchester & Ferguson, by whom the Oswego Journal was purchased and united with it, and the combined paper was issued as

The Weekly Times and Journal. In 1857 it was changed to The Oswego Times, under which name it is still published by J. Tarbell.

The Oswego Daily Advertiser, the first daily in the co., was issued in 1845 in connection with The Whig, and was continued until 1847, when its name was changed to

The Oswego Daily Commercial Times. It was published in connection with The Commercial Times until 1854, when it was changed to

The Oswego Times and Journal. In 1857 it was changed again to

The Oswego Daily Times, and is still issued by J. Tarbell.

The People's Journal was started at Oswego in March, 1849, by O'Leary & Dean, and the next year it was sold to L. A. Winchester. In 1851 it passed into the hands of Sumner & Poucher, who started

The Oswego Daily News in connection with it. The following year L. A. Winchester again became proprietor, and changed the name of the daily to

The Oswego Daily Journal. In 1854 the two papers were united with the Daily and Weekly Times.

The Palaski Banner was commenced in April, 1830, at Pulaski, and published by Nathan Randall until 1852; by A. A. Mathewson and G. G. Foster until 1853; and by James Gedd until 1834, when it was superseded. In 1836 again appeared, as

The portion of the co. of Oswego lying near the mouth of the river was discovered in 1654 by French Jesuits, who established missions here for the conversion of the Iroquois.¹ The French had previously explored the St. Lawrence; and in 1615 Champlain, in an expedition against the Onondagas, passed through the e. part of the co. In 1700 the English explored the country occupied by the Five Nations as far w. as Oswego; and in 1722 a trading house was built here under the direction of the N. Y. colonial government. From that period considerable trade was carried on by the English between Oswego and Albany through Oswego River, Oneida River and Lake, Wood Creek, and the Mohawk.² In 1727 the English built a fort on the w. bank of the river, near its mouth.³ The French, claiming this whole territory, remonstrated against the action of the English, and several times planned expeditions to destroy the fortifications, but did not carry them into effect. Upon the commencement of the "Old French War" of 1753, Fort Ontario was erected on the e. bank of the river; and another fort was built upon the summit of the w. ridge in 1755.⁴ In the summer of 1756, 5,000 French under Montcalm, with a heavy train of artillery, consisting of 30 guns of large caliber, crossed the lake from Fort Frontenac (now Kingston) and appeared before this place. The forts were invested Aug. 11, and, after 3 days' hard fighting, they were surrendered on the 14th.⁵ The victors demolished the forts, burned the English vessels, and retired. In 1758, Col. Bradstreet, with 3,350 men, crossed the lake from this place and reduced Fort Frontenac. After destroying the fortifications and securing the military stores and vessels, he returned to Oswego and rebuilt the forts there. Fort Ontario was greatly enlarged, and built in the most substantial manner. In the summer of 1760, the powerful army of Lord Amherst embarked here on an expedition down the St. Lawrence. From this time Oswego became the most important military station upon the western frontier. During the Revolution it was strongly garrisoned, and formed the headquarters of many of the marauding parties that desolated the frontier settlements. It continued in possession of the British until 1796, when it was surrendered under the provisions of Jay's treaty.

In 1790, George Scriba, a merchant of N. Y. City, and a German by birth, purchased 500,000 acres of land lying between Lakes Oneida and Ontario, for the sum of $80,000.⁶ This purchase, known as "Scriba's Patent," was bounded on the e. by Fish Creek and on the w. by Oswego River, and embraced 14 towns in Oswego co. and 4 in Oneida. In 1794, Mr. Scriba caused a settlement to be made and a sawmill built on the shore of Oneida Lake, to which he gave the name of "Rotterdam,"—now Constantia. In 1795 he built a gristmill—the first in the co.—and several other buildings at the same place. During the same year his patent was surveyed and divided into townships and subdivided into lots.⁷ About the same time he commenced a settlement at the mouth of Little Salmon Creek, on the shore of Lake Ontario, 12 mi. n. e. of Oswego, which he called

The Pulaski Advocate, and was published by Daniel Ayer until 1838. It was then sold to — Dickinson and united with the Port Ontario Aurora, the united papers taking the name of

The Advocate and Aurora. The name, Aurora, was dropped in 1840, when the Advocate again passed into the hands of Daniel Ayer, and was discontinued in 1842.

The Pulaski Courier was started in 1843 by W. Winans. In 1847 it passed into the hands of A. A. Mathewson, and was changed to

The Richland Courier. In 1850 it was sold to Joseph Hatch, who changed its title to

The Pulaski Democrat. In 1856 it passed into the hands of — Miller, its present publisher.

The Fulton Chronicle was started in Nov. 1837, by Thomas Johnson. In 1840 it was sold to Isaac S. Clark and Edwin Thompson, who gave it the name of the

Ben Franklin. It was discontinued the following year, and succeeded by

The Weekly Despatch, published by E. C. Hatten about 1 year.

The Fulton Sun was started in 1841 by N. B. Northrop. In 1842 it was united with the Mirror.

The Fulton Mirror was established Aug. 20, 1842, by Daniel Ayer. It was soon after united with the Sun and issued as

The Fulton Sun and Mirror. In Sept. 1844, it was sold to Spencer Munroe, and soon after discontinued. It was succeeded by

The Fulton Patriot. M. C. Hough, John A. Place, and T. S. Brigham were successively interested in its publication. The latter was succeeded by E. K. Sandford, its present publisher.

The Oswego County Gazette, commenced at Fulton in 1853 by Geo. E. Williams, was merged in The Fulton Patriot in 1858.

The Port Ontario Aurora was published by — Van Cleve and subsequently by — Dickinson from 1837 to 1839, when it was united with The Pulaski Advocate.

The Oswego County Democrat was started at Mexico in 1838 by Thomas Messenger. It was afterward styled

The Messenger, and was discontinued in 1839.

The Phoenix Gazette, started at Phoenix in 1851, was published by Jerome Duke, and afterward by Geo. E. Williams until 1853, when it was removed to Fulton.

The Phoenix Democrat was established in 1852 by an association. In 1854 it was sold to James H. Field, and the next year he gave it the name of

The Phoenix Banner. In 1855 it was published a short time as The American Banner and Oswego County Times. It was suspended in 1855, and in 1856 it was revived by Mary Frances Tucker, and called

The American Banner and Literary Gem. Eight months afterward it was sold to Levi Murrill, by whom it was published as

The American Banner until 1857. After being suspended two months, it was revived, under the title of The Phoenix Reporter, by Joshua Williams, by whom it is still published.

¹ There is a tradition that the French established a military post here at a very early period; but research among the papers of that period does not corroborate the statement.

² There were several portages on this route,—around the falls in the streams, and across from Wood Creek to the Mohawk.

³ Not a single trace of this fortification now remains.

⁴ This fort stood at the junction of West 6th and Van Buren Sts.

⁵ The French landed 50 mi. e. of Oswego, and marched along the lake shore under cover of their naval force. The English garrison numbered 2,000 strong. Col. Mercer, the English commander, was killed by a cannon shot on the 2d day of the siege.

⁶ In this grant the State made reservations of the territory at the mouth of the river, within the limits of the city of Oswego, and also at the falls in the village of Fulton. Most of these reservations were disposed of at public sale in 1827. At an earlier date, considerable tracts in Scriba's Patent, on Oswego River, were jointly purchased by Gen. Alexander Hamilton, John Laurence, and John B. Church. Several other grants were also made along the river. Other tracts of considerable magnitude were purchased by Schroepfel, Rosevelt, and others.

⁷ This survey and subdivision was made by Benjamin Wright, who in 1793-94 ran the base line from Rome to Fort Ontario, on which the towns of Scriba's Patent were laid out. The town-

"Vera Cruz," (now Texas.) He here built a saw and grist mill, store, and other buildings, and commenced an active trade on the lake; and for some years the place bid fair to become a formidable rival of Oswego, and the most important commercial station upon the lake. A few other settlements were made at other points in the co., principally under the auspices of Mr. Scriba, previous to 1800; but immigration did not begin to flow in rapidly until a few years later. The lands of Mr. Scriba were divided and sold to a great number of different parties; and while his exertions and expenditures were of great service to the first settlers, they proved extremely unprofitable to himself.² In common with all the frontier settlements, the growth of this region was seriously retarded by the War of 1812. Oswego Village became the theater of stirring military events; and on the 5th of May, 1814, it was taken by the British.³ At the return of peace, immigration again flowed in, and the subsequent history has been one of steady and continuous progress. The opening of the Erie and Oswego Canals, in this State, and of the Welland Canal, in Canada, greatly increased the commercial importance of the city and stimulated the manufacturing interests throughout the co.

ALBION—was taken from Richland, March 24, 1825. It is an interior town, lying e. of the center of the co. Its surface is level or gently undulating. The summits of the ridges are 50 to 100 feet above the valleys, and the highest point in town is 392 feet above Lake Ontario. The lowlands are wet and in some places marshy. Salmon River flows through the n. part.⁴ In the n. e. part are 2 or 3 small ponds. The soil consists of deposits of sand and gravel, and is of medium quality. Drift deposits cover the whole surface, except along the river courses, where the underlying rocks crop out. Much of the s. part of the town is yet unsettled. Considerable manufacturing is carried on.⁵ Sand Bank, (p. v.) on Salmon River, is a station on the Watertown & Rome R. R., midway between the two places. It contains 1 church, a hotel, 4 stores, 2 tanneries, 5 sawmills, and a flouring mill. Pop. 313. Pineville, (Salmon River p. o.) a station on the W. & R. R. R., situated on Salmon River, contains 1 church, an inn, a store, a sawmill, and a large tannery. Pop. 144. New Centerville, (p. o.) a station on the W. & R. R. R., and Dug Way (South Albion p. o.) are hamlets. The town was first settled early in 1812, by Cary Burdie, of Williamstown, on Lot 29, and Peter Henderson, at Sand Bank.⁶ There are 4 churches in town.⁷

AMBOY—was formed from Williamstown, March 25, 1830. It lies upon the e. border of the co., s. of the center. The surface is rolling and has a general southerly inclination. Its highest point is about 450 feet above Lake Ontario. It is drained principally by Fish Creek and other small tributaries of Oneida Lake. In the s. and w. parts are numerous small lakes and ponds, the principal of which are Painter Lake, North and South Ponds. The n. half of the town is in the region of the gray sandstone, and the s. half in that of the red or Medina sandstone. The soil is principally a sandy or gravelly loam. Amboy Center (p. v.) contains 13 houses; West

Richland appears to be uncertain, or this name has been applied to two surveys.

¹ Vera Cruz was laid out into city lots by Mr. Wright, who was an agent of Scriba, and considerable improvements were made. A 4 rod highway was cut from Rotterdam to Vera Cruz, a distance of 20 mi., from lake to lake. In 1798 a schooner was built there by Mr. Scriba's agent, which was engaged in the trade between Vera Cruz and the Canadian port of Kingston. It is said that in 1804 more merchandise was sold there than at Oswego or Utica; and in the imagination of many persons Vera Cruz was destined to command the trade of Canada and the West. But, by a series of disasters on the lake, a large portion of the male residents were lost to the infant settlement; and the restrictive policy of Mr. Jefferson's administration, followed by the War of 1812, extinguished the flattering prospects of Vera Cruz. The events and the action of half a century have nearly obliterated all traces of the once promising city.

⁴ Before the dams were built upon this river, great numbers of salmon were annually taken.

⁵ Large quantities of lumber, leather, and barrels are manufactured, the latter for the Onondaga salt and Oswego flour markets. There are 38 sawmills, 3 tanneries, and 2 gristmills in town.

⁶ In 1813 David, Luther, and Benj. Lilly and Allen McClarn settled in the town. The first birth was that of a son of Luther Lilly, in 1813; the first marriage, that of Henry Baker and Lucy Burdie, in 1819; and the first death, that of a son of Luther Lilly, in 1813. The first inn was kept by Dr. Brace, at Sand Bank, in 1814; and the first store, by Animi Hinkley, in 1828. The Lilly brothers built the first sawmill, in 1813, and Ezekiel Smith the first gristmill, in 1818. The first school was taught by Sylvia Breed, in the summer of 1817. ⁷ 2 Union, Bap., M. E.

Amboy (p. v.) 20; and Carterville (p. v.) 12. Joseph Perkins, from Conn., was the first settler, in 1805.¹ There are 2 churches in town; M. E. and Bap., both located at Amboy Center.

BOYLSTON²—was formed from Orwell, Feb. 7, 1828. It lies upon the n. border of the co., e. of the center. Its surface is rolling in the center and e., and moderately hilly in the w. It has a westerly inclination, and its highest points are 700 to 800 feet above tide. The soil in the n. and w. parts is a productive, gravelly loam, the underlying rock being the Lorraine shale. The s. e. corner of the town extends into the gray limestone region, and the soil is light and thin. Boylston (p. o.) is in the n. w. part. The first settlement was made in 1810, on Lots 2 and 3, by John Wort and Michael Sweetman, both from Canajoharie.³ Meetings for religious worship are held in the town by the Episcopal Methodists and the Wesleyan Methodists.

CONSTANTIA⁴—was formed from Mexico, April 8, 1808. Hastings was taken off in 1825, and West Monroe in 1839. It lies upon the n. shore of Oneida Lake, in the s. e. corner of the co. The surface is nearly level, and is slightly inclined toward the s. The principal streams are Scriba and Black Creeks, flowing into Oneida Lake. Iron ore is found in the Clinton group of rocks, which extend through the s. part. The soil consists of clay, gravel, sand, and vegetable mold, and in general is fertile. Most of the interior is yet unsettled. Frenchmans Island, in Oneida Lake, about 3 mi. from Constantia, belongs to this town; it contains about 28 acres.⁵ Lumber, leather, glass, and iron are extensively manufactured.⁶ Cleveland,⁷ (p. v.) incorp. April 15, 1857, is located on Oneida Lake, in the e. part of the town. It contains 2 churches, 2 glass factories, and several other manufactories. Pop. 1,005. Constantia, (p. v.) in the w. part, on Oneida Lake, contains 2 churches and has a pop. of 600. Bernhard Bay, (p. v.) on the lake, contains 2 churches, a glass factory, and 360 inhabitants. Constantia Center is a p. o. Soon after the purchase of Scriba's Patent, in 1790, Mr. Scriba commenced the first settlement of his lands at Constantia, and established agents and laborers there in 1793.⁸ There are 7 churches in town.⁹

GRANBY—was formed from Hannibal, April 20, 1818. A part of Oswego was taken off in 1836. It lies on the w. bank of Oswego River, in the s. w. part of the co. The surface is gently rolling, with a slight inclination to the n. e. Oswego River flows through a valley from 30 to 60 feet below the general level of the town; within this town it has a fall of 40 feet. Lake Nea-tah-wan-ta, near the center of the e. part, is about 1 mi. in diameter. It lies about 25 feet above the river at the head of the falls. The streams are Ox Creek, Six Mile Creek, and the outlet of Nea-tah-wan-ta Lake. The soil is generally a sandy or gravelly loam. Bradstreets¹⁰ or Battle Island is in Oswego River, about 4 mi. below the Oswego Falls. Starch, leather, lumber, and the products of wood are extensively manufactured.¹¹ Oswego Falls, (p. v.) incorp. Oct. 12, 1853, a station on the S. & O. R. R., is situated on Oswego River, opposite the village of Fulton. Pop. 703. Granby Center and South Granby are p. offices. The first settlement was made at the falls in 1792, by Laurence Van Valkin, from Rensselaer co., N. Y.¹² There are now 2 churches in town.¹³

¹ Among the early settlers were David Smith, in 1815; Wm. and Isaac Claxton and John Drought, in 1818; and Sage Park, in 1821. The first inn was kept by Joseph Perkins, in 1805; the first sawmill was built by Joseph Murphy, in 1822, and the first gristmill by Sage Park, in 1828. The first school was taught by Cynthia Stoddard, in the summer of 1823.

² Named from Thos. Boylston, who held, for a few hours, the title of a tract since known as the Boylston Purchase. He never owned the tract; the conveyance was simply a trust, and quickly passed into other hands.

⁴ During the French Revolution of 1793, when the French nobility were compelled to seek safety in flight, and the trains of exiles to this country were crowded with dukes and princes of the blood, the Count St. Hilary, a young Frenchman, and his beautiful and accomplished wife, a daughter of the noble house of Clermont, landed upon our shores. Following the trail of emigration westward, they reached Oneida Lake, then on the great thoroughfare of travel; and, attracted by the beautiful island and its primitive forests, they landed upon it, and concluded to make it their future home. Here, in the deep solitude of nature, they enjoyed for many months the perfect peace and quietude. Their place of residence was at length discovered by Chancellor Livingston, who had formerly enjoyed the elegant hospitalities of the lady's family at Paris. He visited them in their rural home, and, after spending some time with them, he prevailed upon them to return with him to his mansion upon the Hudson. There they continued to reside until Bonaparte had put an end to the reign of terror and restored much of the confiscated property to the exiles of the Revolution, when they returned to France. Several years after, as Livingston stood upon the bank of the Seine, amidst a crowd of distinguished Parisians, to witness the first experiment of Robert Fulton in steam navigation, he was recognized by the Count, who at once took him to his residence, and treated him during his stay at Paris as a generous benefactor and an honored guest. Livingston's mansion upon the Hudson and the first steamboat of Fulton and Livingston were both named, in honor of the lady's family, "Clermont."¹⁴

⁵ There are 34 sawmills, 2 flouring mills, 3 glass factories, 2 tanneries, an iron foundry, and other manufacturing establishments in town.

⁸ Solomon Waring, Joshua Lynch, and Dr. Vandercamp settled in town in 1793; and John Bernhard in 1795. The first birth was that of George Waring, April 11, 1796. The first store was opened in 1795, by Mr. Scriba, and the first inn the same year, by Major Solomon Waring. In 1794-95, Mr. Scriba erected in this town the first sawmill and gristmill built in the co. The first school was opened in 1797, at Constantia.

¹² Henry Bush settled in town in 1793; — Penoyer in 1794; Peter Hugunin in 1803; Barnet Morrey in 1804; and John Hutchinson in 1808. The first store was opened in 1792, by an Indian trader by the name of Fowler; and the first inn was kept by John J. Walrad, in 1807. The first sawmill was built by Schenck & Wilson, in 1814, and the first gristmill in 1822. Benj. Robinson taught the first school, in 1812. ¹³ Prot. Episc. and M. E.

HANNIBAL—was formed from Lysander, as a part of Onondaga co., Feb. 28, 1806, and embraced all that part of Oswego co. lying w. of the river. Oswego and Granby were taken off in 1818. It is the n. w. corner town of the co. Its surface is gently undulating, the ridges being 30 to 50 feet above the valleys. In the e. part are several swamps, one of which covers 500 acres. The soil is a rich, sandy and gravelly loam. A salt spring, from which salt has been manufactured, is found in the n. w. corner. Springs of brine, characteristic of the Medina sandstone strata, have been discovered in several other localities, but none of sufficient strength to render their working profitable. The principal manufacturing establishments are those of leather, lumber, and the products of wood.¹ Hannibal, (p. v.) on Nine Mile Creek, a little w. of the center of the town, contains 3 churches and about 60 houses; Hannibal Center (p. v.) contains 20 houses; and Hulls Corners (South Hannibal p. o.) 18. Whealers Corners is a hamlet in the n. part, and Kinney Corners is a p. o. The first settlement was made in 1802, by Thomas Sprague and his sons, from Milton, Saratoga co.² The first church (Bap.) was organized in 1815.³

HASTINGS—was formed from Constantia, April 20, 1825. It lies upon the n. shore of Oneida River, in the s. part of the co. Its surface is level or gently undulating, its northern boundary being about 75 feet above Oneida Lake. The soil is clay, sand, and gravelly loam. In some parts of the town it is difficult to find fresh water by digging. Brine springs are found in several parts in the red Medina sandstone formation. In the n. e. part is a tamarack swamp, of about 5 acres, in the center of which is an immense spring 10 feet in diameter. This spring is on a level with the surrounding summit; and it is surrounded by a deep, loose muck which extends downward to an unknown depth. There are 18 sawmills, several gristmills, and 2 tanneries in town. Central Square (p. v.) contains about 50 houses; Hastings, (p. v.), in the n. part, 30; Caughdenoy, (Coc-e-noy,) (p. v.) on Oneida River, in the s. w. part, 30; and Hastings Center (p. o.) 15. Smiths Mills and Fort Brewerton are villages of about 20 houses each. The latter is situated at the foot of Oneida Lake, on the site of old Fort Brewerton.⁴ The first settlement was made at Fort Brewerton, by Oliver Stevens, in 1789.⁵ There are 4 churches in town.

MEXICO—was formed from Whitestown, April 10, 1792, as part of Herkimer co. Parts of Richland and New Haven were annexed May 9, 1836. It included the northerly towns of Oneida co., nearly all of Lewis and Jefferson cos. w. of Black River, and all of Oswego co. e. of Oswego River. Camden was taken off in 1799, Champion, Redfield, Turin, Watertown, and Lowville in 1800, Adams in 1802, Lorraine and Williamstown in 1804, Volney in 1806, Constantia in 1808, New Haven in 1813, and Parish in 1828. Its surface is gently rolling. It is well watered by numerous small streams, the principal of which are Little Salmon and Sage Creeks. There is scarcely a foot of waste or broken land in the town. The underlying rock is gray sandstone, covered deep with alluvial deposits. The soil consists of clay, sand, and gravelly loam, and is very productive. Considerable attention is given to stock raising and dairying; the manufacture of lumber, barrels, and leather is carried on to some extent.⁶ Mexico, (p. v.), near the center, was incorp. Jan. 15, 1851, and contains 3 churches, an academy,⁷ 12 stores, 2 banks, 3 hotels, 3 flouring and grist mills, a sawmill, a furnace and machine shop, 3 coach factories, 4 carriage shops, and 3 cabinet shops. Pop. 948. Colosse, (p. v.), in the s. e. part, contains 1 church, 2 inns, a store, 2 sawmills, and 2 gristmills. Pop. 119. Texas,⁸ (p. v.) located near the mouth of Little Salmon Creek, contains 30 houses; Union Square, in the e. part, is a p. office. The names of the earliest settlers within the present limits of this town are lost. There were about 25 who had already located in 1798; Jonathan Parkhurst and Nathaniel Rood, from Oneida co., came that year.⁹ By the upsetting of a boat upon the lake, in 1799, Capt. Geerman and 6 others were lost, and in 1804, by a similar disaster, 9 others,

² Watson Earl, Samuel Baron, Joseph Weed, Sterling Moore, David Wilson, and Israel Messenger settled at Hannibal Center in 1805. The first birth was that of Carr Sprague, in 1805; the first marriage, that of Daniel Thomas and Prudence Sprague, in 1803; and the first death, that of a daughter of Thomas Sprague, in 1806. The first gristmill was built by Earl & Colton, in 1805; and the first sawmill, by Silas Crandell, in 1811. The first inn was kept by Henry Jennings, in 1808; the first store, by Benj. Phelps, in 1815; and the first school was taught in 1810.

³ The census reports 4 churches; 2 Bap., Cong., and M. E.

⁵ Among the early settlers were Timothy Vickery, Chester Loomis, Solomon Allen, and Jacob Rice. The first birth was that of John L. Stevens, in 1802; the first marriage, that of Silas

Bellows and Betsey Vickery, in 1808; and the first death, that of Horatio Stevens, in 1792. Chester Loomis kept the first inn, in 1815; and Hastings Curtis, the first store, in 1820. The first school was taught by Patrick Vickery, at Caughdenoy.

⁶ There are 19 sawmills, 5 gristmills, a fulling and cloth dressing mill, a woolen factory, and 3 tanneries.

⁷ The Mexico Academy was organized in 1826, as the "Rensselaer Oswego Academy." Its name was changed May 19, 1845.

⁸ Formerly called "Terra Cruz." See p. —

⁹ Phineas Davis and Calvin Tiffany, from Conn., settled in 1799; John Morton and Asa Davis in 1801; Peleg Brown, Daniel Eames, and Leonard Ames in 1804; and Solomon Peck in 1805. The first birth was that of Truman Rood, Aug. 10, 1799; and the first marriage, that of Richard Gafford and Mrs. Rood, widow of N. Rood. The first grist and saw mill were built by Mr. Scriba's agent; and the first store was kept by Benj. Wright. The first school was taught by Sanford Douglass, at Colosse, in 1806.

leaving but 1 male adult inhabitant in the settlement.¹ There are 10 religious societies and 9 church edifices in town.²

NEW HAVEN—was formed from Mexico, April 2, 1813. A part was annexed to Mexico May 9, 1836. It lies upon the shore of Lake Ontario, w. of the center of the co. The surface is rolling and generally smooth. It is watered by Spring Brook, Catfish and Butterfly Creeks, 3 small streams flowing into Lake Ontario. There is quite an extensive marsh near the mouth of Butterfly Creek, in the n.e. part of the town, and another in the s.w. part. The underlying rock is gray sandstone, and the soil is principally a sandy and gravelly loam. Stock raising receives more attention in this than in the other towns of the co., and a limited amount of manufacturing is done.³ New Haven, (p. v.), situated near the center of the town, on Catfish Creek, contains 2 churches, 2 inns, a store, a sawmill, a gristmill, and about 50 houses. Butterfly is a p. o. near the e. line of the town. The first settlement was made by — Rood and — Doolittle, at New Haven, in 1798.⁴ The first church (Cong.) was organized at New Haven Village, in 1817; and Rev. William Williams was the first minister. There are now 2 churches in town; Cong. and M. E.

ORWELL—was formed from Richland, Feb. 28, 1817, and Boylston was taken off in 1828. A part of Richland was annexed March 27, 1844. It is an interior town, lying n.e. of the center of the co. The surface has a s. w. inclination, its e. border being elevated 300, to 500 feet above its w. and 700 to 1,000 feet above Lake Ontario. It is moderately hilly, and is considerably broken in places by the deep ravines of the streams. Upon Salmon River is a fall worthy of note. The stream flows over a rocky bed in a series of rapids for 2 mi. and then falls over a precipice 110 feet perpendicular. The banks of the stream below the fall are 200 feet high. The soil is generally a gravelly loam. The e. half of the town is yet uncultivated. Lumber and other products of wood form the leading articles manufactured; and considerable attention is given to stock raising and dairying.⁵ Orwell Corners, (Orwell p. o.), in the w. part, contains 1 church, 3 stores, an inn, a sawmill, a gristmill, a tannery, a steam cabinet factory, and about 40 houses. Maline is a hamlet in the s. part. The first settlers were Nathaniel Bennett and his son Nathaniel, from Rensselaer co., N. Y., on Lots 82 and 83, and Capt. Noyes, on Lot 29, in 1806.⁶ There are 3 religious societies in town.⁷

OSWEGO CITY—formed from Oswego and Scriba, was incorp. as a village March 14, 1828, and was enlarged and organized as a city March 24, 1848.⁸ It is situated on Lake Ontario, at the mouth of Oswego River,⁹ that stream dividing the city into two nearly equal parts. The river is bordered upon each side by a ridge, which rises in gradual slopes to a height of about 100 feet, and ends in bluffs on the lake shore 40 to 60 feet high. The summits of these ridges are about 1 mi. apart, and descend from the river in the same gradual slopes as toward it. One mi. w. is a valley opening through the ridge into the river above the falls, through which the Oswego must have once flowed into the lake. The s. border of the city is skirted by a bluff or escarpment about 160 feet above the lake, indicating an ancient lake or sea beach. Here commences the deep ravine excavated by the river through strata of red sandstone of the Medina group and underlying shale. From this the geological induction is made that, at the last great physical change which elevated the country from the bed of an ancient ocean and brought the river into existence, it fell directly into Lake Ontario, at the escarpment, by a fall of moderate

³ There are 9 sawmills, 2 gristmills, and other manufacturing establishments in town.

⁴ Mr. Wright settled in the town in 1798; Solomon Smith in 1800; C. Drake and Capt. Gardner in 1804; David Enos, Joseph Bailey, and James Jerret in 1805; and Warner Drake in 1808. The first birth was that of John D. Smith, in Feb. 1805. The first sawmill was erected by Ira Foot, in 1805, and the first gristmill by Waldo Brayton, in 1809. Harriet Eason taught the first school, in the summer of 1806.

⁵ There are 18 sawmills, 10 shingle mills, a gristmill, and a tannery in town.

⁶ Among the early settlers were Benj. Reynolds, Joshua Hollis, Alden, Gilbert, and Timothy Balch. The first marriage was that of Robert Wooley and a daughter of Nathaniel Bennett, sen. in 1807; and the first death, that of the mother of Timothy Balch, in 1810. The first school was taught by Jesse Aiken, in 1810. Joseph Watson built the first sawmill, in 1810, and Jonah Tompson the first gristmill, in 1816.

⁷ M. E., Presb., and Bap. A Union church at Orwell Corners is occupied by the Presb. and Bap. societies.

⁹ By the river and canal it is 38 mi., by R. R. 35 mi., N. N. w. of Syracuse; by the Oswego and Erie Canals 208 mi., by the Oswego and Central line of R. R. 183 mi., and by the surveyed route of the Oswego & Troy R. R. 170 mi., w. n. w. of Albany.

height, the upward movement being gradual and intermittent. The pauses by which it was interrupted are marked by ancient beach lines, ridges, and terraces found at different heights above the lakes. The Oswego Falls are now 11 feet high; and, as they have receded s. 12 mi., to the village of Fulton, with an ascending average grade of about 9 feet per mi. in the excavated bed of the river, they must have diminished in height and grandeur from age to age during the whole period of recession. This hypothesis is sustained by geographical and geological analogy with the Falls of the Genesee and the Niagara. The aggregate fall of the river within the 12 mi. is 110 feet, of which 34 feet are within the limits of the city; and the whole fall is so distributed by 6 successive dams, built by the State for canal and slackwater navigation, that the water of the river may be used by raceways nearly the whole distance, affording one of the finest water-powers in the world. The river forms the outlet to the 11 lakes which cluster in the basin of Central New York, and drains a wide extent of territory. These lakes form natural reservoirs which prevent floods or undue exhaustion, the extreme elevation and depression of the river not exceeding 3 feet, so that destructive freshets, so common to great water-power rivers, never occur. The mouth of the river admits vessels of the largest class navigating the lakes; and the erection of piers and a lighthouse by the U. S. Government renders it one of the safest and most accessible harbors on the lakes, susceptible of indefinite enlargement, and combining canal and r. r. transportation with the advantages of position as the nearest lake port to tidewater. A hydraulic canal extending along both sides of the river is studded with mills, elevating warehouses, and other manufacturing establishments.

The city is handsomely laid out, with streets 100 feet wide, intersecting each other at right angles. The e. and w. banks of the river are connected by two bridges, built by the city,—the lower one, an iron bridge with a draw for the passage of vessels, on Bridge St., the upper on Utica St., at the terminus of the Oswego & Syracuse R. R. The principal public buildings are an edifice recently erected by the U. S. Government, containing a custom house, post-office, and U. S. courtroom,¹ a city hall,² jail, orphan asylum, city hospital, city library, and 12 churches.³

The Orphan Asylum is situated upon the elevated ground in the southern part of the city, commanding a fine view of the city, harbor, and lake. It was founded in 1853, mainly through the influence of the ladies of Oswego, and continues to be principally supported by them. Orphans and children of destitute parents, from earliest infancy to 8 years of age, are admitted and cared for and afterward placed out in respectable families. A primary and Sabbath school are connected with the institution. The number of inmates ranges from 50 to 100.

The City Library was founded by a donation of $25,000 from Hon. Gerrett Smith. The edifice is finely located upon the e. side of the river; and the library at present contains 9,000 volumes.⁴

The Public Schools are graded and free; they are under the care of a Board of Education and Superintendent. The system embraces the primary, junior, senior, and high school departments; and pupils can receive instruction from the primary branches to an extended academic course. In 1857 there were in the city 23 school districts, in which were employed 47 teachers,—8 males and 39 females. The number of children between 4 and 21 was 5,516, of which 4,175, or 75 per cent., attended school during some portion of the year. The total receipts and expenses during the year was $26,341 14; the number of volumes in the district libraries, about 3,000.

The commerce of Oswego is very extensive, and is increasing much more rapidly than the population.⁵ Being situated near the foot of lake navigation, and nearer to N. Y. than any other lake port, it has commercial facilities superior to those of most of the Western cities. A considerable share of the produce of the West flows through this port on its way to the seaboard markets; and it is the principal entrepôt of the agricultural products of Canada West. The salt of Onondaga is mostly distributed through the Great West from this place; and vast quantities of the manufactured goods of the East are sent through the same channel. The official report of the value of the lake and canal trade, derived from the Custom House and Canal Collector's Office, for 1845, was $7,951,409, and for 1856 was $50,612,603, showing an annual average increase of nearly 20 per cent. The amount of registered tonnage in 1846 was 15,513 tons, and in 1856 it was 46,467 tons.⁶

The manufacturing interests of the city have attained to considerable magnitude, although the vast water-power of Oswego River is occupied but to a limited extent. Flour made from the wheat

⁵ Pop. in 1855, 15,816. Estimated in 1858, 18,000.

⁶ The operation of the late Reciprocity Treaty with England has proved, as was anticipated, most favorable to Oswego. The importation of grain at the port in 1856 was 13,504,074 bushels; and the peculiar manufacturing and commercial advantages of the place have made it the great flour and grain market of Central New York and Northern New England.

of Canada and the Western States forms the leading article manufactured. The Oswego mills, 18 in number, with an aggregate of 100 run of stone, are capable of grinding and packing 10,000 barrels of flour per day,—a greater amount than is manufactured at any other place on the continent.¹

Shipyards and 2 marine railways rank among the important manufacturing establishments of the city, and give large employment to labor. The Oswego Starch Factory, erected in 1848, upon the hydraulic canal, on the w. bank of the river, is one of the most prosperous and extensive establishments of the kind in the world.² Lumber is extensively dressed in the city for the Western markets, from Canadian sawed lumber entered free under the Reciprocity Treaty. The Oswego Cotton Mills is a well managed and productive establishment, operating 83 looms, 2,664 spindles, and giving employment to 65 operators. A little above, on the same canal, is an extensive tannery. The Ontario Foundry, Steam Engine and Machine Works, is one of the most extensive and prosperous establishments of the kind in the State. Many other branches of manufactures are carried on in the city.

The early history of Oswego has already been noticed in the general history of the co.³ Its distinctive and modern history dates from its surrender by the British in 1796. The withdrawal of the British garrison took away from the place all that had ever been established of civilized society, and left it as new as though man had never resided there. During the year following the evacuation, Neil McMullin, a merchant of Kingston, moved thither, bringing with him a house framed at Kingston.⁴ In 1802 but 2 or 3 vessels were owned on the American side of the lake, trade being principally carried on by vessels belonging to the Northwest Fur Company. During this year Benajah Boyington built a warehouse on the w. side of the river, and Arch. Fairfield became a forwarding merchant. Salt from the Onondaga Springs was at that time the most important item in the commerce of Oswego. In 1803, Matthew McNair engaged in the forwarding business and purchased a schooner. In 1804 he built another, and, in connection with other gentlemen, purchased a number of Canadian vessels.⁵ From this period shipbuilding was carried on briskly, and it formed a leading interest until the breaking out of the War of 1812.

The war put an end to commercial transactions; but the place became the scene of stirring military events. The fort was garrisoned and commanded by Col. Mitchell. On the 5th of May, 1814, the British fleet under Sir James Yeo appeared off the harbor and opened a heavy fire upon the place. The fire was returned by the 4 small guns which constituted the only armament of Fort Ontario, and by a small battery on the w. side of the river. The next morning the British took position still nearer the shore, and under the cover of a heavy fire 2 columns of the enemy effected a landing. After a gallant but vain defense, Col. Mitchell retreated, leaving the fort and town in possession of the enemy.⁶ The principal object of the attack was to secure the naval stores destined for the new vessels building at Sackets Harbor; but a large share of these were at Oswego Falls, 12 mi. above, and were not taken. Several cannon and other heavy articles lying upon the wharf were sunk in the river, at the command of Col. Mitchell; these were afterward recovered. On the morning of the 7th the British retired, and the fleet proceeded n. to blockade Sackets Harbor. Lieut. Woolsey, who had charge of the stores, immediately dropped down the river, and, with 19 boats laden with stores, set out on the lake under cover of night, and supported by a body of riflemen and Indians, under Maj. Appling, on shore. The boats were pursued, and took refuge in Sandy Creek, where an action took place, resulting in the capture of the entire attacking party.⁷

Oswego recovered slowly from the effects of the war, and its commercial transactions were comparatively unimportant until the opening of the Oswego and Welland Canals.⁸ In the mean time

¹ Five of these mills are located on the harbor, and elevate their grain from lake vessels and discharge flour and grain into canal boats. Six grain warehouses on the harbor elevate and discharge in the same way. The other mills, located above, elevate from and discharge into canal boats. The elevating capacity on the harbor is 37,500 bushels per hour, and the storage room over 2,000,000 bushels of grain,—rendering Oswego the best receiving port on the lakes.

² This factory was founded by a stock company, with a capital of $50,000; and, under the supervision of Thos. Kingsford & Sons, its capital has been increased to $450,000, and its main block of buildings have grown to the enormous dimensions of 510 feet front by 250 feet deep, with numerous detached buildings and an extensive box factory. The main establishment works up 500,000 bushels of grain (mostly corn) and makes 12,000,000 pounds of starch per annum. Large quantities of the article are sold and used in London, Liverpool, and the principal cities on the continent of Europe. It gives employment to 200 men.

⁴ When Mr. McMullin and his family landed at Oswego they found two American residents,—John Love and Ziba Phillips. They were traders, and left soon after. Capt. Edward O'Conner, of the Revolutionary Army, came in during the same year.

Matthew McNair and Bradner Burt and his father came in 1802; Henry Eagle in 1808; Alvin Bronson in 1810; and Wm. Dolloway in 1811. In 1810 the population numbered 300. Rankin McMullin, son of Neil McMullin, born in 1800, was the first child born within the present limits of the city.

⁵ In 1804 all commercial transactions were carried on with unrestricted freedom. No ship papers, licenses, reports, or oaths were required, the keen-scented custom house officers not having yet smelt out the commerce of the lakes.

⁶ The British loss in the action was about 200, and the American 60. The British carried off several of the prominent citizens, and kept them prisoners until they were duly discharged. Among the prisoners were Alvin Bronson, Abraham Hnguin, and Eli Stevens.

⁸ In 1818, 10 years before the Oswego Canal was completed, 36,000 barrels of Onondaga salt were received at Oswego, of which 26,000 barrels went to Western States by the portages round Niagara Falls. At that period the price of salt at Oswego was $2.50 per barrel, and the cost of transportation from Salina, by Oswego, to Black Rock $1.41 per barrel. In 1856 there were received at Oswego 700,000 barrels, of which over 500,000 went to upper lake ports through the Welland Canal, at a cost of shipbuilding became a leading pursuit of the people. In 1816, steam navigation was first introduced on Lake Ontario, and its great progress since has been of immense importance to Oswego. In 1829-30, Alvin Bronson and T. S. Morgan erected the first flouring mill. In 1828 the Oswego Canal was finished, and in 1830 the Welland Canal was opened, giving a new impulse to trade and opening to the place an almost boundless commerce in the future. With the advantages of natural position and the stimulus of the lines of internal improvement, both the commerce and manufactures of Oswego have increased in an almost unprecedented manner; and there is every reason to believe that this increase is to continue for many years to come.

OSWEGO-TOWN—was formed from Hannibal, April 20, 1818. A part of Granby was annexed May 20, 1836. It lies upon the shore of Lake Ontario, on the w. side of the river. Its surface is generally rolling, ending in a bluff shore upon the lake. The streams are the Eight Mile, Rice, Snake, and Minetto Creeks. A fall in Oswego River within the limits of this town affords an abundance of water-power. The underlying rock is principally red sandstone, and the soil a gravelly loam. Boulders and water-worn pebbles are scattered over the surface, making it very stony in places. Minetto,¹ (p. v.), situated on Oswego River, 4 mi. from the city, contains 150 inhabitants. South West Oswego is a p. o. The first settlement was made in 1797, by Asa Rice, from Conn. Reuben Pixley came in 1800, and Daniel Burt in 1802.² There are now in the town 2 churches; M. E. and Bap.

PALERMO—was formed from Volney, April 4, 1832. It is an interior town, lying just s. w. of the center of the co. Its surface is undulating. The large swamp in the e. part of the town is 57 feet above Oneida Lake, and the ridges are about 25 feet above the swamp. The streams are Scotts and Catfish Creeks. The soil is generally a sandy loam. Lumber and the products of wood are the principal manufactured products of the town.³ Palermo, (p. o.), situated near the center of the town, and Vermillion (p. o.) each contains 1 church and about 15 dwellings. The first settlement was made in 1806, by David Jennings, Simeon Crandall, and Sylvanus Hopkins.⁴ The first settled preacher was Rev. Asaph Graves. There are now 4 churches in town.⁵

PARISH⁶—was formed from Mexico, March 20, 1828. It is an interior town, a little s. e. of the center of the co. Its surface is undulating, but considerably broken by ravines, and in some parts rough and stony. The streams are Salmon Creek and its branches. The valley in the w. part is 246 feet above Lake Ontario, and the e. summits are 25 to 50 feet higher. The soil consists of clay, sand, and gravel, and is moderately fertile. Less than half of the town is under cultivation. There are 12 sawmills, 4 shingle factories, and other manufacturing establishments in town. Parishville, (Parish p. o.), on Salmon Creek, in the w. part, contains 1 church and 34 houses. The first settlement was made in 1804, by Thomas Nutting, Eliada Orton, Jonathan Bedell, Amos Williams, and Rev. Gamaliel Barnes.⁷ There are 2 churches in town; M. E. and Bap.

REDFIELD—was taken from Mexico, as part of Oneida co., March 14, 1800.⁸ It is the n. e. corner town of the co. Its surface is hilly in the s., but in the n. it spreads out into a high, rolling plateau 800 to 1,000 feet above tide. A wide intervale extends along the course of Salmon River, which stream drains nearly the whole town. The underlying rock is gray limestone, and the soil upon it is generally a thin and moderately fertile gravelly loam. The soil of the intervale is a deep, sandy loam of good quality. The greater part of the town is still unsettled, and the uplands are frosty and forbidding regions. Center Square, (Redfield p. o.), situated on Salmon River, in the s. part of the town, contains 2 churches and about 30 houses. Greenborough is a p. o. in the n. e. part. The settlement of the town was commenced in 1798, by immigrants mostly from Conn.⁹ The first church (Cong.) was organized with 19 members in 1802, by Rev. Joshua Johnson. There are now 2 churches in the town; Cong. and M. E.

transportation ranging from 10 to 20 cents per barrel from Salina to Chicago. This price for freight is much less than it is from St. Clair River to Chicago, less than half the distance, illustrating the fact that the demand for up freights is at the great receiving point of down freights.

² Among the early settlers were Nathan Nelson and — Beckwith, in 1804; Eleazar Perry, in 1805; Jonathan Buel and Jacob Thorpe, in 1806; and Daniel Robinson, in 1809. The first birth was that of Thomas Jefferson Rice, in 1801; the first marriage, that of Augustus Ford and Miss Rice, in 1800; and the first death, that of an infant child of Asa Rice, in 1798.

³ There are in the town 8 sawmills, 3 shingle and stave factories, 2 gristmills, and 2 tanneries.

The first inn was opened in 1816, by Stephen Blake; and the first sawmill was built by Phineas Chapin, in 1812. The first school was taught by Harriet Eason, in the summer of 1812.

⁵ 2 M. E. and 2 Bap.

⁶ Named from David Parish, who purchased the town before its settlement.

⁷ Paul Allen settled in town in 1805. The first birth was that of Ransom Orton, in 1805; the first death, that of Jonathan Bedell, killed by the fall of a tree; and the first marriage, that of Nathao Parkhurst and the widow Bedell. John Miller kept the first inn, in 1807; and Martin Way and Paul Allen built the first sawmill, in 1808. The first school was taught at Parishville, in the summer of 1807.

⁸ The town of "Arcadia," so called, was annexed Feb. 20, 1807. The town of "Greenboro" was erected Feb. 21, 1843, and re-annexed March 1, 1848, in consequence of fraudulent practices with regard to assessments upon the lands of non-residents.

⁹ Among those who settled in the town in 1798 were Amos Keat, Josiah Tryon, Nathan Sage, Jonathan Harmon, James

RICHLAND—was formed from Williamstown, as part of Oneida co., Feb. 20, 1807. Orwell was taken off in 1817, Sandy Creek and Albion in 1825, a part of Mexico in 1836, and a part of Orwell in 1844. It lies upon the shore of Lake Ontario, n. of the center of the co. The surface is generally level or gently rolling, broken by the deep ravines of the streams. The e. part is 250 feet above Lake Ontario, and Pulaski Village is 131 feet above,—giving to the town a decided westerly inclination. The principal streams are Salmon River,¹ Deer and Sandstone Creeks; and upon each of them are falls, furnishing a large amount of water-power.² Spring Brook is a small stream flowing from several large springs in the e. part of the town, and in the course of 3 mi. falls 150 feet. The springs are perpetual, and rather increase than diminish in summer; so that the power furnished is abundant and constant. The mouth of Salmon River furnishes a good harbor. The underlying rock is the Lorraine shales; the soil is a sandy loam, with some clay in the s. w. part, and is generally fertile. Pulaski, (p. v.,) on Salmon River, about 3 mi. from its mouth, is the half shire of the co. and was incorp. April 26, 1832. It contains 4 churches, a courthouse, an academy,³ a newspaper office, a bank, and several manufacturing establishments.⁴ Pop. 1,168. Port Ontario, (p. v.,) on Salmon River, near its mouth, contains about 50 houses; and Holmesville (South Richland p. o.) 1 church and 20 houses; Selkirk, at the mouth of Salmon River, contains a church, a U. S. lighthouse, and 30 dwellings. Richland Station, on the W. & R. R. R., is in the e. part of the town. The first settlement was made near the mouth of Salmon River, in 1801, by Nathan Tuttle, of Canada, and Nathan Wilcox and Albert Bohannon, from Rome.⁵ The first church (Cong.) was organized Jan. 22, 1811; and the Rev. Oliver Leavitt was the first settled pastor. There are 7 churches in town.⁶

SANDY CREEK—was formed from Richland, March 24, 1825. It lies on the shore of Lake Ontario, upon the n. border of the co. Its surface is rolling and has a westerly inclination, its e. border being elevated about 500 feet above the surface of the lake. It is drained by Little Sandy Creek and many smaller streams, all of which have rapid currents and are frequently interrupted by falls, which furnish a good supply of water-power. Great Sandy Bay, a portion of Lake Ontario, nearly landlocked, lies principally within the limits of this town. The soil consists of gravelly loam and disintegrated shale, and is generally productive. Lumber is the principal manufactured product.⁷ Washingtonville, (Sandy Creek p. o.,) situated on Little Sandy Creek, 4 mi. from its mouth, is a station on the W. & R. R. R. Pop. 423. The first settlement was made in 1804, by Joseph Hurd and Elias Howe, from Oneida co.⁸ The first church (Presb.) was organized in 1817, by Rev. Mr. Dunlap. There are now 3 churches in town.⁹

SCHROEPEL¹⁰—was taken from Volney, April 4, 1832. It lies in the s. part of the co., in the n. e. angle formed by the junction of Oneida and Oswego Rivers. The surface is level or gently rolling. It is watered by Scott and Fish Creeks and many smaller streams. A swamp extends northward from the mouth of Fish Creek to the n. border of the town, and is a half mile to a mile in width. The soil is a rich sandy loam and clay. The underlying rocks, which belong to the Clinton group, nowhere crop out in the town. There are 10 sawmills, 4 shingle mills, and other manufactures in town. Phoenix,¹¹ (p. v.,) on Oswego River, 2 mi. below Three River Point, was incorp. in 1848. It contains 3 churches and a newspaper office. Pop. 1,164. Gilbertsville, (Gilberts Mills p. o.,) in the n. part, contains 2 churches. Pop. 442. Himmansville, (p. v.,) in the extreme w. part, on Oswego River, contains 25 houses; and Pennelville,

Drake, Eli Strong, Benj. Austin, Samuel Brooks, Eliakim Simonds, Nathan Cook, Ebenezer Chamberlain, David Harrison, and Elisha Frazier. The first birth was that of Ezra L. H. Chamberlain; and the first death, that of an infant son of Dr. Alden, in 1801. The first saw and grist mills were built in 1801; and the first inn was opened the same year, by David Butler. The first school was taught in 1802, by Rev. Joshua Johnson.

² There are 19 sawmills, 8 shingle mills, 6 flouring and grist mills, 2 cotton factories, 2 paper mills, a tool factory, and several other manufacturing establishments in the town.

³ The Pulaski Academy was organized June 4, 1853.

⁴ 2 paper mills, 4 flouring and grist mills, 3 sawmills, and 3 tanneries.

⁵ Among the early settlers were Hugh Montgomery, in 1801; John Ingersoll, Benj. Bull, Israel Jones, John Farnham, and Johnson, in 1804; Jeremiah Matthewson, in 1807; and Ephraim and Justus Fox, in 1808. The first birth was that of Benj. Ingersoll, Aug. 28, 1804; the first marriage, that of Saml. Crispen and Ruth Tuttle, the same year; and the first death, that of a child of Nathan Tuttle. The first inn was kept by Benj. Winch, in 1806; and the first store, by John Meacham, in 1810. The first sawmill was built by John Hoad, in 1806; and the first gristmill, by Jeremiah Matthewson, in 1808. Milly Ellis taught the first school, in the summer of 1808.

⁶ 8 Bap., 2 M. E., Cong., and Prot. E.

⁷ There are 11 sawmills, 2 shingle mills, 2 gristmills, and 2 tanneries in town.

⁸ In 1805 Asel Hurd and 5 families from Vt., by the name of Meacham, settled to town. The first sawmill was built by Wm. Skinner and Joseph Hurd, in 1804; and the first gristmill, by James Hinman, in 1806. Simeon Meacham kept the first store and tavern, in 1806; and the first school was taught at the house of George Harding, by his daughter, in 1807-08. The first birth was that of Laura Hurd; the first marriage, that of Henry Patterson and Lucy Meacham, in 1806; and the first death, that of Mrs. Elias Howe, in 1807.

⁹ Presb., M. E., and Bap.,—all at Washingtonville.

¹⁰ Pronounced scruple; named from Henry W. Schroepel. His father, Geo. C. Schroepel, purchased the whole of Township 24 and a large part of 16, of George Scriba. Henry W. settled in the town in 1819, and is still a resident.

¹¹ Named in honor of Alex. Phoenix.

(p. v.,) near the center, 15. Settlement was commenced by Abram Paddock, in 1800.¹ The first church (M. E.) was organized in 1826. There are now 5 churches in town.²

SCRIBA³—was taken from "Fredericksburgh" (now Volney) as part of Oneida co., April 5, 1811. It lies upon the shore of Lake Ontario and the e. bank of Oswego River. Its surface is rolling, the ridges extending n. and s., and elevated 100 to 180 feet above the lake. It is drained by Black Creek, flowing s., and Nine Mile, Four Mile, and Wine Creeks, flowing n. Upon several of these streams are valuable mill privileges. The soil is a gravelly and sandy loam, stony in places, and only moderately fertile. Scriba Corners, (Scriba p. o.,) near the center of the town, contains 1 church and about 40 houses. North Scriba is a p. o. The first settlement was made by Henry Everts, in 1798.⁴ There are 3 churches in town.⁵

VOLNEY⁶—was formed—by the name of "Fredericksburgh"—from Mexico as part of Oneida co., March 21, 1806. Its name was changed April 5, 1811. Scriba was taken off in 1811, and Schroepel and Palermo in 1832. It lies upon the e. bank of Oswego River, s. w. of the center of the co. Its surface is undulating, with high, steep banks bordering upon the river. The ridges are 50 to 100 feet above the valleys and 100 to 200 feet above Oswego River. The red sandstone crops out on the bank of the river and is extensively quarried for building stone. The falls upon the river furnish an immense water-power.⁷ The soil is a sandy and gravelly loam. Fulton,⁸ (p. v.,) on Oswego River, at the Oswego Falls,⁹ was incorp. April 29, 1835. It contains 6 churches, the Falley Seminary,¹⁰ 2 newspaper offices, and a large number of manufacturing establishments. Pop. 3,192. Seneca Hill, (p. v.,) on Oswego River, in the n. w. corner of the town, contains 50 dwellings and the largest flouring establishment in the State.¹¹ Volney Corners, (Volney p. o.,) near the center, contains 18 houses. The present village of Fulton became the seat of a floating population in the early part of the eighteenth century; but permanent settlement was not commenced until 1793.¹² The first church (Presb.) was organized in 1814; and the Rev. Mr. Leavitt was the first settled minister. There are 9 churches in town.¹³

WEST MONROE—was formed from Constantia, March 21, 1839. It lies upon the n. shore of Oneida Lake, s. e. of the center of the co. The surface is level and marshy in the s., and rolling, broken, and stony in the n. A marsh on the bank of the lake covers an area of more than 1,000 acres, and a considerable portion of it produces cranberries. In the valleys between the ridges, in the n. part of the town, are several smaller marshes. Red sandstone, the underlying rock, crops out in this town and furnishes a plentiful supply of valuable building stone. Bog iron ore is found in the n. part; and it is said that traces of lead and silver have also been found. The soil is a medium quality of clay, sandy and gravelly loam. West Monroe and Union Settlement are p. offices. The first settlement was made in 1806, by Martin Owens, Abel and Joseph B. Ames, Ebenezer Loomis, and Sylvanus Allen.¹⁴ The first church (Presb.) was organized in 1843.¹⁵

WILLIAMSTOWN—was formed from Mexico, as part of Oneida co., March 24, 1804. Richland was taken off in 1807, and Amboy in 1830. It lies near the center of the e. border of the co. The surface is undulating in the s., but broken and stony in the w., and moderately hilly in the e. It is drained by Fish Creek, flowing into Oneida Lake, and the head branches of Salmon

¹ Thomas Vickery and — La Hommedieu settled in 1807; and Wm. Miles in 1808. The first birth was that of Joseph Vickery, Sept. 11, 1807; and the first marriage, that of John Lemajier and Sally Winter. The first sawmill was erected by H. W. Schroepel, in 1819; and the first gristmill, by A. & H. Gilbert, the same year. The first store was kept by Andrews Gilbert, in 1821; and the first inn, by Alex. Phoenix, in 1828. Horatio Sweet taught the first school, at Three River Point, in 1813.

² M. E., Cong., Bap., and F. W. Bap.

³ Named in honor of George Scriba, the original proprietor of this and several of the adjoining towns.

⁴ Aschel Bush and Samuel Tiffany settled in town in 1801; Wm. Burt and Hiel Stone in 1805; and Dr. Doodatus Clark in 1807. The first birth was that of Henry Everts, jr.; the first marriage, that of John Masters and Eliza Baldwin, in 1806; and the first death, that of a child of Hiram Warner. The first inn was kept by Hiel Stone, in 1806; and the first store, by Orrin Stone and Aaron Parkhurst, in 1819. Benj. Robineon, from Menlius, taught the first school, in 1804.

⁵ Bap., M. E., and a Bethel Free and Union.

⁶ Named in honor of Volney, the French author, who visited the town in 1808, while on a tour through the U. S.

⁷ There are 7 flouring mills in town, having an aggregate of 42 run of stone; also a large number of sawmills and other manufacturing establishments.

⁸ Named in honor of Robert Fulton. It was originally called "Oswego Falls."

⁹ The portage at this place was the only interruption in the internal water communication between Schenectady and the ports upon Lake Ontario and the St. Lawrence River, after the construction of the canal connecting Wood Creek with the Mohawk River, by the Western Navigation Co., in 1796.

¹⁰ The Fulton Female Seminary was incorp. in 1836, and in 1842 it was changed to the Fulton Academy. In 1849 it received a donation of $3,000 from Mrs. M. E. Falley and assumed the name of the Falley Seminary. At the same time it came under the charge of the Black River Conference of the M. E. Church. It is now a private institution.

¹¹ This flouring mill has 16 run of stone, with a separate wheel to each run, and a capacity of grinding and packing 1,200 barrels of flour per day.

¹² Daniel Masters settled at Oswego Falls in 1793; Laurence Van Valkenburgh, below the falls, in 1795; and John Van Buren in 1796. John Waterhouse settled in the town in 1797; and Ebenezer Wright in 1800. The first birth after the permanent settlement was in 1795; and the first death, that of John Waterhouse, in Aug. 1799. Daniel Masters kept the first inn, at the falls, in 1794; and he and — Goodell erected the first sawmill, in 1796. Miss A. Waterhouse taught the first school, in 1800.

¹³ M. E., Presb., Prot. E., Cong., Bap., Prot. Meth., Wes. Meth., and Union.

¹⁴ Deacon Smith, from Mass., settled in the town in 1808, and Hiram Nickerson in 1810. The first birth was that of Azariah Ames. The first inn was kept by Deacon Smith, in 1812; and the first school was taught by Caroline Barnes, in 1810.

¹⁵ The census reports 2 churches; Presb. and F. W. Bap.

River. The surface of Fish Creek at Williamstown Mills, in the s. e. part, is 354 feet above Lake Ontario, and the hills in the N. E. are 200 to 300 feet higher. The greater part of the town is yet unsettled. The soil is a moderately fertile sandy or gravelly loam. Lumber and leather are the principal manufactured products. Williamstown, (p. v.) on Fish Creek, in the s. part, is a station on the W. & R. R. R. Pop. 240. Kasoag, (p. v.) a little w. of the center, is a station on the W. & R. R. R. and contains about 25 houses. The first settlement was made in 1801, by Gilbert Taylor, Solomon Goodwin, Ichabod Comstock, Dennis Orton, Henry Williams, and Henry Filkins.¹ The first church (Cong.) was founded in 1805, by Rev. Wm. Stone.²

CHAUTAUQUE COUNTY.

THIS county was formed from Genesee, March 11, 1808. It lies upon the shore of Lake Erie, and is the s. w. corner co. of the State. It is centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains — sq. mi. The surface is mostly a hilly and rolling upland. A bluff, with a mean elevation of 20 ft., extends along the lake; and from its summit the land spreads out into an undulating region, gradually rising for a distance of 3 or 4 mi. This comparatively level tract is bordered by the declivities of a hilly upland, which occupies the center and s. part of the co. The highest summits are 1,000 to 1,200 feet above Lake Erie and 1,800 to 2,000 ft. above tide. The uplands are broken by several deep valleys, the principal of which are those of Chautauque Lake and Connewango Creek. The summits of the hills, 4 to 6 mi. s. of the lake shore, form the watershed which divides the waters of Lake Erie from those of Alleghany River. The declivities bordering upon the valleys are in many places too steep for profitable cultivation.

Connewango Creek, flowing along the e. border and receiving Cassadaga Creek and Chautauque Outlet, is the largest stream in the co. The other principal streams are Cattaraugus, Silver, Walnut, Canadaway, Little Cattaraugus, and Twenty Mile Creeks, flowing into Lake Erie; French and Little Brocken Straw Creeks, tributaries of Alleghany River; and Prendergast Creek, flowing into Chautauque Lake. Besides these and their tributaries are numerous smaller streams flowing directly into Lake Erie. Chautauque Lake is a beautiful sheet of water, 18 mi. long and 1 to 3 mi. wide, occupying a deep valley in the highland region about 10 mi. s. e. of Lake Erie.¹ It is 726 feet above Lake Erie and 1,291 ft. above tide. The hills that surround it are 600 to 800 ft. above its surface. Its outlet forms a branch of Connewango Creek, which latter stream is a tributary of Alleghany River. Several other small lakes are located among the highlands, the principal of which are Bear, Cassadaga, Mud, and Finleys Lakes, all 700 to 900 ft. above Lake Erie.

The rocks of this co. belong to the Portage and Chemung groups,—the former occupying the n. half of the co. and the latter the s. half. The summits of the highest hills in the s. are crowned with conglomerate, belonging to the Catskill group and affording the only good building stone in the s. part of the co. The sandstones of the Portage group are quarried to some extent in the n. part. Lime is obtained in limited quantities from limestone boulders and marl beds. One of the most peculiar geological features of the co. is the numerous springs of carburetted hydrogen gas found in various localities and especially along the shore of Lake Erie. It comes from the shales of the Portage group, and at various places is turned to profitable account.

The soil upon the uplands is principally clay mixed with disintegrated shale, generally known as flat gravel; and in the valleys it is a fine quality of sandy and gravelly loam mixed with alluvium. Along the lake shore is a strip of productive clay loam. The uplands are arable to their summits, but are generally much better adapted to pasturage than tillage. The various branches of agriculture form the leading pursuits of the people. Stock and wool growing, and dairying, are largely and successfully carried on. Spring grains and fruits are also largely produced.

Manufactures are few and unimportant and are chiefly confined to the local wants of the people. Commerce—an important item in the business and wealth of the co.—is chiefly concentrated at Dunkirk, which is at once an excellent harbor upon the lake and the w. terminus of the Erie R. R.

The county seat is located at Mayville, in the town of Chautauque, at the head of Chautauque Lake.² The courthouse is a fine brick edifice, erected in 1834, at a cost of $11,000. The jail is a brick building, with stone cells, on the opposite side of the street from the courthouse. The clerk's office is a fireproof brick building contiguous to the courthouse.³

The poorhouse is located upon a farm of 160 acres, near De Wittville, 3½ mi. s. e. from Mayville.

¹ Near the middle this lake is contracted to the width of a few rods, giving it the appearance of two lakes connected by a narrow strait.

² This co. was united with Niagara from the date of its organization in 1808 until 1811. The first court was held June 25, 1811. The commissioners to locate the co. buildings were Jonas

Williams, Isaac Sutherland, and Asa Ransom. The first co. officers were Zattu Cushin; First Judge; Matthew Prendergast, Philo Ortoa, Jonathan Thompson, and Wm. Alexander. Associate Judges; David Eason, Sheriff; and John E. Marshall, Co. Clerk.

³ In 1858 the supervisors authorized the erection of a new clerk's office at a cost of $2,500.

The average number of inmates is 130, supported at a weekly cost of 44 cts. each. A school is taught 6 to 8 months in the year. The buildings are poor and dilapidated and are destitute of proper accommodations and means of ventilation.

The N. Y. & Erie R. R. extends through Hanover and Sheridan and terminates at Dunkirk. This road opens a direct communication with New York, and, taken in connection with the connecting railroads and vessels upon the lake, is one of the most important of the great thoroughfares between the Atlantic seaboard and the Valley of the Mississippi. The amount of freight carried over the road is immense; and the business connected with it gives employment to thousands of men. The Lake Shore R. R. extends along the lake through Hanover, Sheridan, Pomfret, Portland, Westfield, and Ripley. This forms another link in the great chain of Western travel, and connects with the Erie R. R. at Dunkirk and with the N. Y. Central at Buffalo. The proposed Erie and New York City R. R. extends through the s. part of the co., connecting Erie, Penn., with the N. Y. & Erie R. R. at Great Valley.¹

Nine weekly newspapers are now published in the co.²

In 1782 a party of British and Indians, with a train of artillery and other munitions of war, spent the months of June and July around Chautauque Lake in constructing canoes and making other preparations to navigate Alleghany River in a contemplated attack upon "Fort Pitt," near

¹ The surveys of this R. R. have been made, and considerable work has been done in grading.

² The Chautauque Gazette, the first paper published in the co., was started at Fredonia in Jan. 1817, by Jas. Percival. It was afterward issued by Carpenter & Hull, and by Jas. Hull, until 1822, when it was suspended. In 1823 it was revived by Jas. Hull, and continued until 1826, when it was united with the People's Gazette and its name was changed to

The Fredonia Gazette. It was issued a short time by Hull & Snow, when it was removed to Dunkirk by Mr. Hull and changed to

The Dunkirk Gazette. In a few months it was removed to Westfield and united with The Chautauque Phoenix.

The People's Gazette was started at Forestville in 1824 by Wm. S. Snow. In 1826 it was removed to Fredonia and united with The Chautauque Gazette.

The Chautauque Eagle was commenced at Mayville in May, 1819, by Robt. J. Curtis, and was continued about 1 year.

The Fredonia Censor was commenced in 1821 by Henry C. Frisbee, who continued its publication for 17 years. In 1838 it passed into the hands of E. Winchester, and was published by him 2 years and by R. Cunningham 1 year. In 1841 it was bought by Wm. McKinstry, and it is now published by W. McKinstry & Co.

The Western Star was started at Westfield in June, 1826, by Harvey Newcomb, and was discontinued after 2 years. It was soon after revived, as

The Chautauque Phoenix, by Hull & Newcomb. In 1831 its name was changed to

The American Eagle, and it was issued by G. W. Newcomb. In 1838 it was changed to

The Westfield Courier, and was issued a short time by G. W. Blisa.

The Jamestown Journal was commenced in June, 1826, by Adolphus Fletcher, and was continued by him until 1846. It was then issued by John W. Fletcher, a son of the original proprietor, for 2 years, when it passed into the hands of F. W. Palmer, who continued at the head of the establishment until 1858, having had in the mean time associated with him as partners Francis P. Bailey, Ebenezer P. Upham, and C. D. Sackett. It is now issued by Sackett & Bishop.

The Chautauque Republican was started at Jamestown in 1828 by Morgan Bates. Richard K. Kellogg, Lewis C. Todd, Chas. McLean, Alfred Smith, and Wm. H. Cutler were successively interested in its publication until 1833, when it passed into the hands of S. S. C. Hamilton and its name was changed to

The Republican Banner. It was soon after removed to Mayville, and in a few months was discontinued.

The Genius of Liberty was started at Jamestown in 1829 by Lewis C. Todd, and was continued about 2 years.

The Western Intelligencer was published at Forestville a short time in 1833.

The Mayville Sentinel was started in 1834 by Timothy Kilby, and the next year it passed into the hands of Benam Brockway, who continued it 10 years. In 1845 it was sold to John F. Phelps, by whom it is still issued.

The Chautauque Whig was started at Dunkirk in Aug. 1834, by Thompson & Carpenter. About 1844 its name was changed to

The Dunkirk Beacon, and it was discontinued a short time afterward.

The Westfield Lyceum, started in 1835, was issued a short time by Sheldon & Palmer.

The Western Democrat and Literary Inquirer was started at Fredonia in 1835 by Wm. Verrinder. It was successively issued by Randall, Crosby & Co. and Arbs K. Maynard, and by the latter it was removed to Van Buren Harbor in 1837 and issued as

The Van Buren Times. It soon after passed into the hands of

W. H. Cutler, and was continued about 2 years.

The Western Farmer was started at Westfield in 1835 by Bliss & Knight, and was continued about 2 years.

The Settler was issued a short time in 1840 from the Fredonia Censor office by E. Winchester.

The Westfield Advocate was commenced in May, 1841, and was discontinued in a few months.

The Westfield Messenger was started in Aug. 1841, by C. J. J. & T. Ingersoll. In 1851 it passed into the hands of Edgar

W. Dennison and was changed to

The Westfield Transcript. In 1856 Buck & Wilson became its proprietors, and continued it about 1 year.

The Panama Herald was started at Panama in Aug. 1846, by Dean & Hurlbut. Stewart & Pray afterward became proprietors, and continued it until 1848.

The Frontier Express was started in June, 1846, by Cutler, Cottle & Perham. In 1849 it was changed to

The Fredonia Express, and was published by J. P. Cobb & Co., and afterward by T. A. Osborn & Co. In 1850 it was changed to

The Chautauque Union, and was published a short time by E. F. Foster.

The Liberty Star was started at Jamestown in 1847 by Harvey A. Smith. In 1849 it passed into the hands of Adolphus Fletcher and was changed to

The Northern Citizen. In 1858 John W. Fletcher became proprietor; and in 1855 it was changed to

The Chautauque Democrat, under which name it is now issued by Adolphus Fletcher and Jas. Parker.

The Silver Creek Mail was started at Silver Creek in 1848 by John C. Van Duzen. In 1852 it was changed to

The Home Register, and was published by Jas. Long. In 1854 Samuel Wilson became proprietor, and changed it to

The Silver Creek Gazette, and continued it until 1856, when it was discontinued. In Aug. of that year it was revived, as

The Lake Shore Mirror, by H. M. Morgso, by whom it is still published.

The Tocsin, a temperance paper, was published at Mayville by Lloyd Mills a short time about 1845.

The Chautauque Journal was started at Dunkirk in May, 1850, by W. L. Carpenter. In a short time its name was changed to

The Dunkirk Journal, and it is still issued by the original proprietor.

The Fredonia Advertiser was started July 4, 1851, by Tyler & Shepard. It is now published by Levi S. Pratt & J. C. Frisbee.

The Underrurrent was published at Jamestown a short time in 1851-52 by Harvey A. Smith.

The Jamestown Herald was started in Aug. 1852, by Dr. Asaph Rhodes. In 1853 Joseph B. Nessel became proprietor, removed it to Ellington Center, and changed its name to The Ellington Luminary. It was discontinued in 1856.

The Philomathian Erponent was issued at Ellington by the students of the academy in 1852.

The Westfield Republican was commenced April 25, 1855, by M. C. Rice & Co., by whom it is still continued.

The Botanic Medical Journal was published a short time at Fredonia.

The Pantheon was published at Fredonia a short time.

The Western Argus was started at Westfield in 1857 by John F. Young. In about 1 year it was removed to Dunkirk, and changed to

The Dunkirk Press and Argus, and is now issued by Howard & Young.

Pittsburgh. Their plan was to build a dam across the outlet of the lake and descend the river upon the flood so created. The party finally returned without attempting the project.

The first settlement in the co. was made at the mouth of Cattaraugus Creek in 1797, by Amos Sottle.¹ Soon after making the first improvements, Sottle left, and returned in 1801, with Mr. Sidney and Capt. Rosecrantz. At the time of the first exploration of the co. the only Indian settlement was on Connewango Creek, within the limits of the present town of Carroll. In 1802, Gen. Paine, agent for the State of Connecticut, opened a wagon road from Buffalo to Chautauque Creek, to enable emigrants to reach the Conn. Reserve lands in Ohio. This road was soon after finished to the Penn. line. In 1804 the town of Chautauque was formed, and embraced the entire territory now included within the limits of the co. In April of the succeeding year the first town meeting was held, at which John McMahan was elected supervisor, and John McMahan, David Eason, and Perry G. Ellsworth were appointed the first justices of the peace.² In 1806 the first mail route was established between Buffalo and Erie, Penn.³ The lands in the co. were included in the Holland Purchase. A tract of 60,000 acres in the s. e. part was sold to Levi Beardsley, James O. Morse, and Alvan Stewart. In 1835 the Holland Land Company sold their outstanding contracts and unsold lands to Trumbull Cary & Co., of Batavia; and the new proprietors imposed such conditions upon the extension of contracts that the settlers rose en masse and demolished the land office at Mayville and burned the records in the public highway.⁴ In 1838 the interests of the co. were transferred to Duer, Morrison, & Seward, and the troubles were satisfactorily settled.

ARKWRIGHT—was formed from Pomfret and Villenova, April 30, 1829. It is an interior town, lying n. e. of the center of the co. Its surface is an elevated upland, broken and hilly in the s. w., and rolling or moderately hilly in the n. e. The highest summit—near the center, said to be the highest land in the co.—is 1,000 to 1,200 ft. above Lake Erie. The principal streams are Canadaway, Connewango, and Walnut Creeks. Mud Lake, on the e. border, covers an area of about 10 acres. The soil is a clay and gravelly loam. Upon Canadaway Creek, in the s. w. part, is a fine cascade with 22 ft. perpendicular fall. Arkwright Summit is a p. o. in the e. part of the town. The first settlement was made in the n. w. corner, by Byron T. Orton, Benj. Perry, and Augustus Burnham, from the eastern part of the State, in 1807.⁵ The first religious meeting was held at the house of Aaron Wilcox, in 1810, by Rev. John Spencer. The first church (Bap.) was organized by Elder Thos. Grennel, in 1820.⁶

BUSTI⁷—was formed from Ellicott and Harmony, April 16, 1823. It lies upon the s. border of the co., e. of the center. Its surface is hilly and broken. It is drained by several small streams flowing into Chautauque Lake, which lies along the n. border, and by others flowing e. into Connewango Creek. The soil is a clay and gravelly loam. Busti Corners (Busti p. o.) contains a church, gristmill, and sawmill. Pop. 201. The first settlement was made on Lot 61, in 1810, by John L. Frank, from Herkimer co.⁸ The first church (Cong.) was formed Aug. 30, 1819; Rev. Lemuel Smith was the first minister.⁹

² Previous to 1804 the whole of the present co. formed a part of the town of Batavia, in Genesee co. The elections were held at Batavia, nearly 100 mi. distant, to which place the electors were compelled to go if they voted. In 1812 the Board of Supervisors consisted of 2 members, representing the towns of Chautauque and Pomfret. The county seat had been located at Mayville, much against the wishes of the people of Pomfret; and, in consequence, the supervisor of Pomfret voted against the appropriation of $1,500 to build the courthouse and jail. After repeated attempts to effect the object, the question was temporarily laid aside. When the accounts of the town officers of Pomfret were presented, the Chautauque member voted to the negative, and affairs came to a dead lock, but were finally settled by a compromise, which allowed both the appropriation and the account to go through.

⁵ Aaron Wilcox settled in 1809, Nathan Eaton in 1810, Uriah L. Johason, Jonathan and Benj. Sprague, from Otsego co., near the center, in 1811, and Simeon Clinton, from Otsego co., at the center, in 1813. The first child born was Horatio Nelson Johnson, May 11, 1811; the first marriage, that of Asabel Burnham and Lucania Eaton, May 11, 1815; and the first death, that of Augustus Burnham, in 1812. The first school was taught by Lucy Dewey, near the center, in the summer of 1813. Simeon Clinton kept the first inn, in 1817; and Benj. Orton built the first sawmill, in 1818, on the e. branch of Canadaway Creek.

⁶ The census reports 3 churches; 2 M. E. and Christian.

⁷ Named from Paul Busti, of the Holland Land Company.

⁸ Lawrence Frank settled on Lot 62 in 1810, Heman Bush and John Fraak, from Herkimer co., and Theron Plumb, from Mass., on Lot 60, in 1811. The first marriage was that of Zebrick Root and Polly Parmiter, in 1813; and the first death, that of Lawrence Frank, in 1811. Eve Frank, a young lady, was carried off by the Indians in 1811, and was gone 3 years, when she returned home and was married. Soon after, her husband was taken by the Indians and detained about the same length of time. These incidents are noted upon a tombstone in the graveyard at Busti. The first school was taught by Olive Marsh, on Lot 61, in 1813. Capt. Heman Bush kept the first inn and store, and erected the first mill, on Stillwater Creek, in 1815.

⁹ The census reports 6 churches; Cong., Bap., M. E., Univ., and Christian.

CARROLL¹—was formed from Ellicott, March 25, 1825. Kiantone was taken off in 1853. It is the s. e. corner town in the co. Its surface is broken and hilly in the n. e. and e., and rolling in the s. and s. w. The highest summits are 900 ft. above Lake Erie. The principal streams are Connewango and Stillwater Creeks. The soil is a clay loam in the n. and e., and a gravelly loam in the s. and w. Frewsburgh, (p. v.), in the n. w. part, contains 2 churches, a gristmill and sawmill. Pop. 400. Fentonville is a p. o. near the s. w. corner. Joseph Akins, from Rensselaer co., the first settler in town, located on Lot 29, in Jan. 1807.² There are 2 churches in town; Bap. and M. E.

CHARLOTTE—was formed from Gerry, April 18, 1829. It is an interior town, lying n. e. of the center of the co. The surface is moderately hilly and divided into several ridges by the valleys of the streams. North Hill and Lake Hill, the highest points, are about 1,000 feet above Lake Erie. It is drained by Mill Creek and several tributaries. The soil is chiefly a clay loam. Charlotte Center (p. v.) contains 2 churches, a good water-power with some manufactories, and 10 dwellings; Sinclearville,³ (Gerry p. o.), near the s. line, contains 4 churches, 2 gristmills, and 2 sawmills. Pop. 450. The first settlement was made near the center, in 1809, by Robt. W. Seaver and Wm. Divine, from Oneida co.⁴ The first religious meeting (Presb.) was held at Sinclearville, in 1811; and the first church (M. E.) was formed in 1816. There are now 6 churches in town.⁵

CHAUTAQUE—was formed from Batavia, (Genesee co.), April 11, 1804, and embraced all the territory now included within the limits of Chautauque co. Pomfret was taken off in 1808, Portland in 1813, Harmony in 1816, and Clymer, Ellery, and Stockton in 1821. It is an interior town, lying a little w. of the center of the co. The surface is elevated and moderately hilly, occupying the watershed between the waters of Chautauque Lake and those of Lake Erie. Chautauque Lake is on the e. border, and chiefly within the limits of the town. The soil is a clay loam of good quality. Mayville, (p. v.), pleasantly located near the head of Chautauque Lake, was incorp. April 30, 1830; it contains the co. buildings, 3 churches, the Mayville Academy, a newspaper office, and a flouring mill. Pop. 501. De Wittville, (p. v.), in the e. part, contains a church, the co. poorhouse, and 133 inhabitants; Hartfield, (p. v.), on the lake inlet, contains a church, gristmill, sawmill, and furnace. Pop. 123. Magnolia is a p. o. on the lake, near the s. line. The first settlement was made at Mayville, in 1804, by Dr. Alexander McIntyre.⁶ The first church (Bap.) was formed at Mayville, in 1820, by Elder Wilson.⁷

CHERRY CREEK—was formed from Ellington, May 4, 1829. It lies on the e. border of the co., a little n. of the center. The surface is hilly in the n. w., and rolling in the s. e. Along the s. border are several small swamps. It is drained by Connewango Creek and several tributaries, flowing s. The soil is clay and a gravelly loam. Cherry Creek, (p. v.), in the s. e. part, contains 3 churches, 2 sawmills, and a gristmill. Pop. 240. The first settlement was made on Lot 15, in 1812, by Joshua Bentley, from Rensselaer co.⁸ The first religious services were held at the house of Ward King, in 1817; the Rev. Mr. Hadley (Bap.) was the first preacher.⁹

CLYMER¹⁰—was formed from Chautauque, Feb. 9, 1821. Mina was taken off in 1824, and French Creek in 1829. It lies upon the s. border of the co., w. of the center. The surface is a hilly upland, broken by the valleys of Brocken Straw Creek and its tributaries. The soil is a gravelly loam. Considerable lumber is still manufactured. Clymer, (p. v.), near the center, contains

² Laban Case settled on Lot 31, Wm. Akins on Lot 21, in 1807; Jas. Akins on Lot 13, in 1818; James Hall on Lot 11, in 1810; and Wm. Sears on Lot 11, in 1811. The first child born was Hamilton Tyler, in 1810; the first marriage, that of Wm. Bowles and Jernsha Walton, in 1811; and the first death, that of Woodcock, killed by the fall of a tree in 1810. Stephen Rogers taught the first school, in 1818, on Lot 51. The first sawmill was built by John Fren and Thos. Russell, on Lot 61, in 1811, and the first gristmill by John Fren, on the same lot, in 1817. William Sears kept the first inn, on Lot 11, in 1814, and James Hall the first store, on the same lot, in 1824.

³ The village derives its name from its first settler, Maj. Sam'l Sinclear, who came in from Madison co. in 1810.

⁴ John Pickett, John Cleveland, Chas. Waterman, and Harvey O. Austin, from Eastern N. Y., settled in the w. part in 1809. The first school was taught at Sinclearville, in the winter of 1811-12, by Wm. Gilmore. Maj. Sinclear kept the first inn, in 1811, and Plumb, Edson & Winsor the first store, in 1817, at Sinclearville. Maj. Sinclear erected the first sawmill, in 1810, and the first gristmill, in 1811, on Mill Creek.

⁵ 2 M. E., 2 Univ., Cong., and Bap.

⁶ Jonathan Smith settled about the same time, near the w. shore of the lake, and Peter Baruhart, from Penn., on the e. shore; Martin Prendergast and Messrs. Griffith and Bemis, also on the e. shore, in 1806. Judge Peacock was also an early settler. John Scott kept the first inn, at Mayville, in 1808, and J. & M. Prendergast the first store, in 1811.

⁷ The census reports 7 churches; 2 Bap., 2 M. E., Cong., Prot. E., and F. W. Bap.

⁸ Jos. Kent settled on Lot 9, in 1815, and Willard Cheney on Lot 10, Wm. Weaver on Lot 16, Anson Hendrick on Lot 16, and Cogsdill Brown on Lot 15, in 1816. Reuben Cheney taught the first school, in 1818; Geo. H. Frost kept the first inn, in 1823, and Seth Grover the first store, in 1831, at the village. Wm. Kilbourn built the first sawmill, in 1824, on Cherry Creek, near the village. The first death was that of Lydia Pogo; she was buried in the woods near the village. Joshua Bentley lost a daughter, 2 years old, in 1817,—supposed to have been carried off by the Indians.

⁹ The census reports 3 churches; 2 Bap. and F. W. Bap.

The Brooklyn City Hospital, on Raymond St. near De Kalb Avenue, was incorp. May 8, 1845. Its present buildings were opened April 28, 1852. It is supported by voluntary contributions and legislative appropriations. The Brooklyn City Dispensary, located at 109 Pineapple St., was incorp. March 5, 1850. It is supported in the same manner as the hospital. The Brooklyn Dispensary, (Homeopathic,) 83 Court St., was incorp. Dec. 3, 1852. It is supported by private subscriptions. The Williamsburg Dispensary, on the corner of 5th and South Sts., was incorp. March 4, 1851; 2,221 persons received medical treatment at the institution in 1857. It is supported by private contributions. The Brooklyn Central Dispensary, 473 Fulton St., was incorp. Dec. 11, 1855. The Brooklyn German General Dispensary is located at 145 Court St. The Brooklyn Eye and Ear Infirmary, 109 Pineapple St., was incorp. March 27, 1851.

The Orphan Asylum Society was incorp. May 6, 1834. The institution is situated upon a fine site on Cumberland St. near Myrtle Avenue.

The Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum of Brooklyn was incorp. May 6, 1834. The asylum for boys is located at the corner of Clinton and Congress Sts., and the asylum for girls upon Congress St. near Clinton. The former has 120 inmates, and the latter 250. The girls are under the charge of the Sisters of Charity. The support of these institutions is principally derived from the income of a large property bequeathed by Cornelius Heeney and under the charge of the Brooklyn Benevolent Society.¹

The Brooklyn Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor was formed March 26, 1844. It numbers about 180 visitors, whose duty it is to investigate the condition of the poor in every part of the city, afford such temporary relief in the way of food and clothing as the cases may warrant, and to refer the needy to the appropriate sources for permanent relief. This association distributes $6,000 to $7,000 per year. The Brooklyn Benevolent Society, founded upon a bequest of Cornelius Heeney, was incorp. in May, 1845. It is managed by 11 trustees, of whom the Archbishop of N. Y. and the Mayor of Brooklyn are ex officio members. Its funds are principally devoted to the support of various Catholic charities. The Brooklyn Society for the Relief of Respectable and Indigent Females, incorp. in 1851, was founded by John B. Graham, who erected a fine edifice, corner of Washington and De Kalb Sts., as a home for the unfortunates named in the title. It derives its support from private subscriptions. The Children's Aid Society was organized in Feb. 1854, as an industrial school. The Brooklyn Industrial School Association, under the management of ladies of the several churches, was incorp. April 4, 1854. It has established schools in different parts of the city for girls who do not attend the public schools, and who are entirely deprived of moral training. The Brooklyn Female Employment Society, an association of ladies to furnish employment to respectable females who may be reduced to want, was incorp. April 19, 1854. Its office and salesroom is at 65 Court St. The Church Charity Association for the relief of the aged, sick, and indigent was incorp. in March, 1851. It is under the patronage of the Prot. E. Church.

The churches of Brooklyn are justly celebrated for their general elegance and beauty of architectural design. Large numbers of people doing business in New York reside in Brooklyn; and this has led to the erection of so great a number of churches that the city has been denominated the "city of churches." In 1858 there were 139 churches in the city.² Connected with these churches are various religious and charitable societies.³ The Freemasons, Odd Fellows, and Sons of Tem-

¹ The other benevolent Catholic societies in the city are as follows:—St. James's School, Jay St., with 500 pupils under the Brothers of Christian Schoole, and 450 pupils under the Sisters of Mercy; St. Paul's Female School, with 400 pupils, under the Sisters of Charity; St. Peter's and Paul's School, with 300 girls, under the Sisters of St. Joseph; St. Mary Star of the Sea, with 300 girls, under the Sisters of Charity; Convent and Female School attached to the Church of the Holy Trinity; Convent and Boarding Academy of the Sisters of St. Joseph; Convent and Academy of the Visitation; St. Francis of Assisi's Convent Academy of the Visitation; St. Francis of Assisi's Convent Academy of the Sisters of Mercy and Nuns of the Order of St. Dominic. The R. C. Beneficial Society of St. Peter's and St. Paul's Church was incorp. June 15, 1856, to sustain a Sunday school and library, and support the sick and bury the dead. Free schools are connected with all the churches except that of St. Charles. ² 25 Prot. E., 22 M. where they perished by hundreds and thousands from violence, cold, foul air, and stulted food.¹ During the War of 1812 a considerable amount of voluntary labor was expended in erecting a line of fortifications around the city, and bodies of troops were stationed there to protect the people.

FLATBUSH²—was chartered by Gov. Stuyvesant in 1652, and its rights were confirmed by Gov. Nicoll, Oct. 11, 1667, and by Gov. Dongan, Nov. 20, 1685.³ It was recognized by the State Government March 7, 1788. New Lots was taken off in 1852. It is the central town in the co., lying immediately s. of Brooklyn. A low, broad range of hills extends along the n. border, occupying nearly one-fourth of its surface. The remainder of the town is level. The soil is light and sandy, but productive. Flatbush (p. v.) is a long, scattered village, extending through the center of the town. It contains 4 churches,⁴ the Erasmus Hall Academy,⁵ and many elegant dwellings. Greenfield is a thinly settled village plat in the s. w. corner of the town. A part of Greenwood Cemetery lies in the n. w. corner. Galilee Cemetery lies e. of the village. The first settlement was made by the Dutch at an early period.

FLATLANDS⁶—was incorp. by patent under Gov. Nicoll, Oct. 4, 1667, confirmed by Gov. Dongan, March 11, 1685,⁷ and recognized by the State Government March 7, 1788. It is the s. e. town in the co. The surface is very flat, as indicated by the name; and a considerable portion consists of salt marshes bordering upon Jamaica Bay.⁸ Several small, marshy islands belong to the town.⁹ Flatlands (p. o.) is a farming settlement. Canarsie¹⁰ (p. o.) is a hamlet, upon the road leading to the bay. The first settlement was made by the Dutch, in 1636. Ex-Gov. Wouter Van Twiller had a tobacco farm in this town while it was under Dutch rule. There are 3 churches in town; 2 M. E. and Ref. Prot. D.

GRAVESEND¹¹—was granted to English settlers, by patent under Gov. Keift, Dec. 19, 1645, and confirmed by Gov. Nicoll, Aug. 13, 1667, and by Gov. Dongan, Sept. 10, 1686.¹² It was recognized as a town March 7, 1788. It is the most southerly town in the co. The surface is generally very level. A beach and ridge of sand hills extend along the coast, and in the rear of these are extensive salt meadows. Coney Island is separated from the mainland by a narrow tidal current flowing through the marshes.¹³ Gravesend, (p. v.), near the center, is compactly built, and was formerly fortified with palisades. It was the county seat prior to 1686.¹⁴ Unionville is a small settlement on the bay, near the w. line. The Cove is a settlement on Sheeps Head Bay. This town was settled before 1640, by English Quakers, from Mass. Lady Deborah Moody—a woman of rank, education, and wealth—was a prominent person in this enterprise. The liberal terms of their first grant were not fully regarded by the Dutch; but the prudence and firmness of Lady Moody eventually secured a good degree of respect and a more indulgent policy toward them. In 1655 the settlement was saved from destruction by North River Indians by a guard from the city. In 1656 the people petitioned for and obtained 3 big guns for their protection. In 1659 the town agreed to give Henry Brazier 500 guilders for a mill, and

¹ The first prison ship was the Whitby; but this and another were burned, and, in April, 1778, the Jersey became the receiving ship for prisoners. The Hope and the Falmouth, anchored near by, were the hospital ships; and upon these most of the deaths occurred. It is reported that 11,500 prisoners died upon these ships during the war. The persistent barbarity and cold-hearted inhumanity practiced by the British toward these prisoners finds no parallel in the history of civilized nations; and the horrible sufferings of the prisoners in their foul dungeons, reeking with filth, disease, and the air of the charnel house carried through months and years, completely cast into the shade the lesser horrors of the Middle Passage, or of the Black Hole of Calcutta. The graves of these martyrs of freedom were uncovered while grading for the Navy Yard, in 1808. Twenty hogheads of bones were collected, deposited in 13 coffins,—representing the 13 original States,—and, May 26, 1808, they were buried upon Hudson Avenue, near the Navy Yard, under the auspices of the Tammany Society. The land upon which they were interred was given for that purpose by John Jackson. Several years since, Benj. Romane inclosed the remains in a vault: and, April 11, 1851, an association was incorp. for collecting funds to build a monument.

² Named "Midwood" (Mid wood) by the Dutch.

³ In the first patent, Jan Suedacor, Arent Van Hatten, Johannes Megassolens, and others, were named as grantees; and in the second, Rev. J. Megassolens, Cornelius Van Ruyren, J. P. Adrien Heugman, Jan Suedacor, Jan Stryker, Frans Barents, (pastor), Jacob Stryker, and Cornelius Jaase Bougart were patentees.—Elements, IV, 43, 51.

⁵ This institution, incorp. Nov. 17, 1787, was the first one chartered by the regents.

⁶ Called "New Amersfort" by the Dutch, from a place in Holland.

⁷ The patentees named in the first instrument were Elbert Elberts, Govert Lockermans, Roeliffe Martens, Pieter Class, Wm. Garriss, Thos. Hillebrants, Stephen Coertsen, and Coert Stevens; and those in the second were E. Elberts, R. Martens, Pieter Classen, Wm. Garretsen, Coert Stevens, Lucas Stevenson, and John Teunissen. The annual quitrent was 14 bushels of wheat.

⁸ These marshes and flat lands produce large quantities of hay.

⁹ The principal of these are Bergen Island, on the bay, and Barren Island, upon the coast. Upon the latter island is a large bone boiling establishment, to which place are removed all the dead animals from New York. The business is very extensive, and large quantities of hides, fat, bones, hair, and manure are annually produced.

¹⁰ Named from a tribe of Indians that formerly occupied this region.

¹¹ Named from the English town of this name, or from the deep sounds on the shores.—Thompson's Hist., II, 169.

¹² The grantees named in the first patent were Lady Deborah Moody, Sir Henry Moody, Bart., Esquire Geo. Baxter, and Sergt. James Hubbard; those in the second were Thos. Dalavall, Jas. Hubbard, Wm. Bound, sr., Wm. Goulding, and John Tilton; and those in the third were James Hubbard, John Tilton, jr., Wm. Goulder, Nicholas Stillwell, and Jorham Gullock. The quitrent was 6 bushels of wheat.

¹³ "Comysis Island," from a family of that name. It is a favorite summer resort. A fine shell road and bridge connect it with the mainland. It embraces 60 acres of arable land, and about half a dozen families winter there.

¹⁴ The village plat embraced 10 acres, subdivided into 39 lots for houses and gardens. A street surrounded this plat. The land around was laid out in lots diverging from the central nucleus.

every man a day's work, with a team, or 2 days without, in building a dam. The first church (Ref. Prot. D.) was formed in 1655. Besides this, there are in town 2 M. E. churches.

NEW LOTS—was formed from Flatbush, Feb. 12, 1852. It lies in the extreme E. part of the co. Its surface is generally level, the s. half being occupied by extensive salt meadows. East New York (p. v.) is a prospective city of "magnificent distances" near the n. line.² It contains a newspaper office, 4 churches, a manufacture of dyestuffs and colors, several shoe manufactories, and 1,000 inhabitants. Cypress Hills is a newly surveyed village near the n. e. corner. The Cypress Hills Cemetery, Cemetery of the Evergreens, and Cemetery of the Congregation of Emanuel (Jewish) are partly in this town. The first settlement was made by about 20 families from Holland and a few Palatinates, in 1654. In 1660 the portions of lands previously held in common were divided into lots and assigned to individuals. During the same year a horse-mill was erected. For many years the deacons of the church were chosen overseers of the poor, and from 1799 to 1812 the schools were under the direction of church officers. A detachment of 1,200 militia was stationed here in the War of 1812, in anticipation of an attack from the British. There are 5 churches in town.³

NEW UTRECHT—was incorp. by Gov. Stuyvesant in 1662, by Gov. Nicoll, Aug. 15, 1668, and by Gov. Dongan, May 13, 1686.⁴ It was recognized as a town March 7, 1788. It lies upon the Narrows, in the w. part of the co. A range of low hills extends across the n. border, and the remaining part of the surface is level. The soil is a light, sandy loam, but for the most part is highly cultivated. New Utrecht, (p. v.), in the s. part, is a small, compact village. In ancient times it was inclosed by a palisade as a defense against Indians and pirates. Fort Hamilton, (p. v.), near the U. S. grounds, is a fine village, chiefly inhabited by persons doing business in New York. Bath is a place of summer resort on Gravesend Bay. Bay Ridge is a suburban village adjoining Brooklyn. Fort Hamilton is a U. S. fortification upon the bluff commanding the passage of the Narrows.⁵ Fort La Fayette is a strong water battery built upon Hendricks Reef, 200 yards from the shore.⁶ There are 6 churches in town.⁷

SENECA COUNTY.

This county was formed from Cayuga, March 29, 1804. A part of Tompkins was taken off in 1817, and a part of Wayne in 1823. It lies w. of the center of the State, centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains — sq. mi. It occupies the greater part of the land which lies between Seneca and Cayuga Lakes, and extends several mi. n. of Seneca Lake Outlet. A high ridge enters the co. from Tompkins and occupies nearly one-fourth of its surface. The summit of the extreme s. portion of this ridge in this co. is 700 to 800 feet above Seneca Lake and 1,100 to 1,250 feet above tide. Toward the n. it gradually declines to the level of Seneca Lake. The ridge is bordered in some places by steep declivities and in others by gradual slopes, and in the s. part of the co. generally terminates in high bluffs on the shores of the lakes. At the foot of Seneca Lake the bluffs, on an average, are about 20 feet high; but toward the s. they gradually rise to an elevation of 100 to 150 feet. At the foot of Cayuga Lake the shore is low and shelving; but in Romulus a bluff shore commences, which gradually increases in height until on the s. border of the co. it attains an elevation of 150 to 200 feet. From the summits of the bluffs to the central summit of the ridge the land generally rises in beautiful, smooth, gradual slopes, broken in a few places by sharp declivities of a terrace-like formation. From Ovid toward the n. the land abruptly descends about 200 feet, and then by gradual slopes to the level of Seneca River. The region immediately n. of Seneca Lake Outlet and w. of the Cayuga Lake Outlet is level, and some of it is marshy. In the n. w. corner of the co. is a great number of alluvial ridges, composed principally of gravel. These ridges extend in a n. and s. direction and are 30 to 50 feet high. Their declivities are generally very abrupt toward the n., e., and w., but more gradual toward the s.

The geological formation of the co. is very simple. The rocks overlie each other in parallel layers slightly dipping toward the s. The lowest rocks that crop out in the co. are those of the Onondaga salt group, including both the red shales and gypsum. They are found along Seneca River, where the gypsum is extensively quarried. Next above these are heavy, compact masses of the corniferous limestone, occupying a belt of country 2 to 3 mi. wide s. of Seneca River. The intermediate waterlime and Onondaga limestone strata are developed in this co. only in very thin and scarcely noticeable layers. The corniferous limestone furnishes a building stone of great excellence and is extensively quarried. Next in order come the Marcellus and Hamilton shales, occupying a broad belt through the co. and extending nearly to the summits of the ridges; the Tully limestone, a layer of only a few feet in thickness, but valuable from the quantity and quality of lime manufactured from it; and the Genesee slate, a dark, shaly rock which crowns the summits of the southern hills. These rocks throughout the co. are covered with a deep deposit of drift, consisting of clay, sand, gravel, and hardpan, and crop out only along the shores of the lakes, the narrow ravines of the streams, and the steep declivities of the ridges. In the n. w. corner of the co. this drift is arranged in ridges with narrow valleys scooped out between them.¹

The principal stream is Seneca River, forming the outlet of Seneca Lake. It has a course of about 14 mi. between the two lakes, and in that distance falls 60 feet. The falls are principally at Waterloo and Seneca Falls, furnishing an excellent water-power at each place, but much the greater at the latter. From Cayuga Lake, Seneca River flows n. e. through a marshy region and forms a portion of the e. boundary of the co. Clyde River, a tributary of the Seneca, flows through a portion of the marshy region in the n. e. corner. The other streams are all small brooks and creeks, and for the most part are rapid torrents flowing in deep gulfs worn in the shaly rocks. They are frequently interrupted by waterfalls, are nearly dry in summer, and are subject to severe freshets.

Seneca Lake, the w. border of which forms the greater part of the w. boundary of the co., is 35 mi. long and 2 to 4 mi. broad. It is 216 feet above Lake Ontario and 447 feet above tide. It occupies a deep valley between the hills, and it varies in depth from 300 to 630 feet. Its shores are generally bold; and from their summits the land slopes gently and gracefully upward to a height of 200 to 700 feet above its surface, furnishing some of the most quiet and beautiful scenery in the State. This lake is never entirely frozen over. Cayuga Lake occupies a parallel valley on the e. border of the co., and is 38 mi. long and 1 to 3½ mi. wide. It is 60 feet below Seneca, and its greatest depth is 346 feet. Near the foot the lake is very shallow, and a large extent of land, immediately adjoining and lying along the course of its outlet, is swampy.¹ Further s. the shores are bluff and the country is of the same general character as that bordering upon Seneca Lake.

The soil is generally of a very excellent quality. The sandy and gravelly loam of the drift deposits are well adapted to either grain raising or grazing. The lower portions of the ridges are enriched by the disintegration of the rocks above, making the soil very productive. The lowlands bordering upon Seneca River are clayey and in many places mixed with disintegrated gypsum and limestone. North of the river have been found extensive marl deposits of great agricultural value. North of the foot of Seneca Lake is a sandy region once considered worthless; but upon trial the soil has been found susceptible of being made productive at little expense. The marshy regions w. of Cayuga Outlet are covered with thick deposits of marl and muck. Measures have been instituted to drain these marshes; if successful a new and exceedingly fertile region will be added to the productive lands of the State.

The co. is a half-shire, the co. seats being located respectively at Ovid and Waterloo.² The courthouse and clerk's office at Ovid are brick buildings, situated in the e. part of the village. The combined courthouse and jail at Waterloo is a brick building, situated near the r. n., fronting the public square, in the w. part of the village. The co. poorhouse is located upon a farm of 126 acres, upon the line between Seneca Falls and Fayette, 4 mi. s. e. of Waterloo.³

The public works of the co. are the N. Y. Central R. R., extending through Seneca Falls and Waterloo, and the Seneca Canal, extending along Seneca River through the same towns.⁵ Above the falls at Waterloo the canal is formed by slackwater navigation upon the river.

The lands in this co. were first brought to the notice of the whites by the expedition of Sullivan, which passed along the banks of Seneca Lake in 1779. Portions of the land at that time had been cleared and were under cultivation. The Indians had a tradition that this whole region had once been occupied by a race that pursued agriculture, but which had long ago disappeared. Many of Sullivan's soldiers, attracted by the beauty and fertility of the lands, after the war settled in various parts of the co. The first settler, Job Smith, who located at Seneca Falls in 1787, and the second, Andrew Dunlap, who located at Ovid in 1789, came in by way of Chemung River. The third settler, Lawrence Van Clief, who settled at Seneca Falls in 1789, came in by way of Oneida Lake and Seneca River.⁶ After 1790 settlement progressed rapidly, and the most fertile lands

² The county seat was located at Ovid upon the erection of the co. in 1804. The courthouse was built in 1806. While a part of (Montaga co. in 1790, courts were held at the barn of Andrew Dunlap. In 1817, upon the erection of Tompkins co., the co. seat was removed to Waterloo; but in 1822 the co. was divided into two jury districts, and the courts have since then been held alternately at Ovid and Waterloo. The first co. officers were Cornelius Humphrey, First Judge; Silas Hayes, Clerk; William Smith, Sheriff; and Jared Sandford, Surrogate.

³ The average number of inmates is 60, supported at a weekly cost of $1.00 each. A school is taught 4 months in the year. The establishment seems to be pretty well arranged and managed.

⁴ The Seneca Patriot, the first paper published in the co., was started at Ovid in 1815 by Geo. Lewis. In 1816 it was changed to

The Ovid Gazette. Upon the change of the co. seat in 1817, it was removed to Waterloo and changed to

The Waterloo Gazette, and was continued several years by the original proprietor.

The Seneca Farmer was started at Waterloo in 1822 by Wm. Child. In 1832 it was removed to Seneca Falls and united with the Seneca Falls Journal.

The Waterloo Republican was issued a short time in 1822.

The Waterloo Observer was started in 1824 by Charles Soutell.

It was soon after issued a short time as

The Observer and Union, and was subsequently changed to

The Seneca Observer, under which title it is still issued by the original proprietor.

The Wrath and Ludlow's Literary Repository was issued from the Observer office in 1831.

The Seneca Republican was established at Ovid in 1827 by Michael Hayes. In 1830 it was changed to

The Ovid Gazette and Seneca County Register, and was issued a short time by John Duffy.

The Seneca Falls Journal was commenced in 1829 by O. B. Clark. In 1831 it passed into the hands of Wm. N. Brown, and in 1832 it was united with the Seneca

Farmer and changed to

The Seneca Farmer and Seneca Falls Advertiser, and was issued by Wm. Child until 1835.

The Western Times was published at Waterloo in 1830 by Ebenezer P. Mason.

The Ovid Emporium was published in 1832 by Bishop Orenshir.

The Seneca County Courier was commenced at Seneca Falls in 1837 by Isaac Fuller & Co. It was successively published by Fuller & Bloomer, Mills & Bloomer, Mills & Davis, John J. Davis, N. J. Milliken, Milliken & Fuller, Milliken & Mumford, Foster & Judd, Fuller & Judd, until 1850, when it passed into the hands of Isaac Fuller, its present publisher.

The Ovid Bee was started in 1838 by David Fairchild & Son. At the end of one year it passed into the hands of the son, Corydon Fairchild, its present publisher.

The Seneca Falls Democrat was commenced in 1839 by Josiah T. Miller, and was continued 10 years.

The Seneca Democrat, semi-w., was issued a short time from the same office.

The Seneca Falls Register was commenced in 1835 by J. K. Brown, and was continued 2 years.

The Memorial was commenced at Seneca Falls in 1840 by Ansel Bascom, and was continued until 1846.

The Water Bucket was published at Seneca Falls by an association of Washingtonians in 1841.

The Free-Soil Union was commenced at Seneca Falls in Aug. 1848, by N. J. Milliken, and continued about 1 year.

The Lily was commenced at Seneca Falls in 1849 by Mrs. Amelia Bloomer, and was continued until 1854, when it was removed to Ohio.

The American Revueille was commenced at Seneca Falls in Jan. 1855, by Wilcoxen, Sherman & Baker. In 1856 it was purchased by O. Wilcoxen, and was continued by him until Jan. 1859, when it passed into the hands of Holly & Stowell, the present publishers.

⁵ The first locks on this river were made by the Seneca River Navigation Company, in 1815.

⁶ Mr. Van Clief was one of the 100 men despatched by Sullivan under Col. Ousevoort, directly e. from the head of Seneca Lake were speedily occupied. In 1791 the State Road, known as the "Geneva Road," was built from Whitestown to Geneva; and this soon became the great highway for immigration. This co. formed the extreme w. portion of the Military Tract; and many of the early settlers were old soldiers who had drawn their portion of public land here.

COVERT—was formed from Ovid, April 7, 1817. Lodi was taken off in 1826. It lies upon the w. shore of Cayuga Lake, in the s. e. corner of the co. Its surface is an upland descending from its w. border and terminating in a steep and almost precipitous bluff upon the shore of the lake. This bluff rises 100 to 200 feet above the water, and the summit of the slope is about 400 feet higher. The town is watered by Trumansburg Creek and many smaller streams, flowing into Cayuga Lake. These streams have worn ravines in the slate and shales to the depth of 20 to 40 feet, the sides being nearly precipitous. In summer they are nearly dry, but during heavy rains they become fierce mountain torrents, bounding and seething in their confined channels and leaping from high precipices to mingle with the calm and peaceful waters of the lake. The soil is a gravelly and clayey loam. The whole surface is arable, except the steep declivities of the lake bluffs. Farmersville, (Farmer p. o.), in the n. part, contains 3 churches, a steam sawmill, foundery, and machine shop. Pop. 350. Covert, (p. o.), in the s. e. part, Halls Corners, near the center, and Kellys Corners, in the n. w., are hamlets. Port Deposit (Trumansburg Landing p. o.) is a steamboat landing near the s. e. corner. The first settler was Philip Tremaine, who located at Goodwins Point before 1793.¹ The first religious services were held at the house of Mr. King, by Elder Thomas; the first church (Bap.) was organized in 1805.²

FAYETTE—was formed from Romulus, as "Washington," March 14, 1800. Its name was changed April 6, 1808. Junius was taken off in 1803. It lies on the s. bank of Seneca River and extends from Seneca to Cayuga Lake. Its surface is rolling and inclined toward the n. From Seneca Lake the land beautifully slopes upward, forming some of the most delightful situations for residences in the co. Upon Cayuga Lake the shores are lower and in some places are marshy. The highest point in town is about 200 feet above Seneca Lake. The streams are mostly small brooks flowing with rapid currents, and at a few places furnishing limited water-power. In some parts the corniferous limestone is extensively quarried, both for lime and for building purposes. The soil is a deep, rich loam, composed of clay, gravel, and sand. Near Canoga Village is an immense spring in a basin 14 feet in diameter, and from it flows sufficient water to form a large and valuable water-power. The spring also emits nitrogen gas. Canoga,³ (p. v.), in the n. e. part, on Cayuga Lake, contains 2 churches, a gristmill, 2 sawmills, and 197 inhabitants. South Waterloo, a suburb of Waterloo, on the s. bank of Seneca River, contains 1 church and 597 inhabitants. Bearytown, (Fayette p. o.), on the line of Varick, is partly in this town. West Fayette, in the s. w. corner, and Rose Hill, in the w. part, are p. offices. The first settlement was made by James Bennett, from Penn., who located upon the shore of Cayuga Lake in 1789.⁴ Red Jacket, the Seneca chief and orator, was born near Canoga Spring. There are 8 churches in town.⁵

JUNIUS—was formed from "Washington," (now Fayette), Feb. 12, 1803; Wolcott (Wayne co.) was taken off in 1807, Galen (Wayne co.) in 1812, and Seneca Falls, Tyre, and Waterloo in 1829. It is the n. w. corner town of the co. In this town are numerous small, isolated gravel and clay ridges 30 to 75 ft. high, all extending in a general n. and s. direction. The numerous small streams that drain the town flow n. into Clyde River. Among the narrow valleys in the e. part is a limited amount of swamp land. The soil is a good quality of gravelly loam. Dublin, (Junius p. o.) n. w. of the center, contains 1 church and 25 dwellings. West Junius is a p. o. near the s. w. corner. Thorntons Corners is a hamlet. The first settlements were made by Thos. Bedell and Jesse, Sam'l, and David Southwick, about 1795.⁶ The first church (Cong.) was formed in 1811; three years after it was changed to a Presb. There are also 2 M. E. churches in town.

LODI—was formed from Covert, Jan. 27, 1826. It borders upon Seneca Lake, and is the s. w.

to lay waste the lands of the Cayugas, Onondagas, and Oneidas that had previously escaped destruction.

² This was the first church formed in the co. The census reports 4 churches; 2 Bap., Univ., and Ref. Prot. D.

³ The name of the village, derived from that of the spring, is an Indian word said to signify "sweet water."

⁵ 2 Presb., 2 M. E., 2 Lutheran, 2 Ref. Prot. D.

⁶ Among the other early settlers were families named Sherman, Chapman, Brownwell, Fisk, Moore, French, Maynard, Thorn, and Hart,—mostly from New England. The first death was that of Mrs. Submit Southwick, wife of Samuel Southwick, in 1802. Joseph Moody kept the first store, at Dublin. He was an Irishman; and hence the name of the village.

corner town in the co. Its surface is mostly inclined toward the w. and n., a small portion only lying e. of the summit. The bluff bordering upon Seneca Lake is 150 to 250 ft. above the surface of the water; and the highest part of the central ridge is 500 ft. higher and about 1,200 ft. above tide. The principal streams are Lodi Creek, flowing n. w. through near the center, and Sheldrake Creek, in the n. w. corner. Lodi Creek separates the highlands into two distinct ridges, the declivities being very abrupt. Upon this stream are several fine cascades. Lodi Falls, where the creek leaps down the precipitous bluff which borders upon the lake, are 125 ft. high. The water has worn a deep and irregular channel in the shale rocks one mi. back from the face of the bluff. The soil is principally a gravelly loam mixed with the disintegrated rocks. Lodi, (p. v.) in the n. part, contains 2 churches, a gristmill, and 380 inhabitants; Townsendville, (p. v.) in the s. e. part, a church and 20 dwellings. Lodi Center (p. o.) is a hamlet. Lodi Landing is on Seneca Lake, at the mouth of Mill Creek. The first settlement was made by Geo. Faussett, from Penn., who settled in the s. w. part in 1789.¹ There are 5 churches in town.²

OVID—was formed March 5, 1794. Hector (Schuyler co.) was taken off in 1802, and Covert in 1817. It lies s. of the center of the co., and extends from Seneca to Cayuga Lake. Its surface consists of an immense ridge, 600 ft. above Seneca Lake and about 1,100 ft. above tide, descending from the center of the town toward the lakes. The bluffs upon the lakes are 20 to 50 ft. high and nearly perpendicular. A great number of small streams flow into both Cayuga and Seneca Lakes, the principal of which are Sheldrake, Osborn, Groves, and Barnum Creeks on the e., and Sixteen Falls Creek on the w. These streams have all worn deep, ragged ravines in the yielding shales. They are frequently interrupted by cascades, and in summer are nearly dry. The soil consists principally of clay and gravel intermixed with sand and the disintegrated rocks. Ovid, (p. v.) near the n. line, contains a courthouse, co. clerk's office, 3 churches, the Ovid Academy,³ a steam mill, and ax factory, and about 650 inhabitants. Ovid Landing is just over the town line in Romulus. Sheldrake Point, (Sheldrake p. o.) a steamboat landing upon Cayuga Lake, contains a church, steam sawmill, boat yard, and 168 inhabitants. Ovid Center contains 20 houses. Kidders Ferry, (p. o.) near the s. e. corner, and Scotts Corners, near the center, are hamlets. The first settlement was made in May, 1789, by Andrew Dunlap, from Penn., who located on Lot 8, in the n. w. part of the town.⁴ The first religious services were held at the house of Abraham Covert, in 1794. The first settled preacher (Ref. Prot. D.) was John Lindley, in 1800.⁵ The New York State Agricultural College and farm are located on the n. line of this town, w. of the village.⁶ In the s. part of the town are the remains of an ancient fortification.⁷

ROMULUS—was formed March 5, 1794. Fayette was taken off in 1800, and Varick in 1830. It lies s. of the center of the co., and extends from Seneca to Cayuga Lake. Its surface is rolling or moderately hilly and has a general northerly inclination. The high bluff from Ovid extends into the s. border of the town, where it drops down abruptly about 200 ft. The land slopes from the center downward to the e. and w. The streams are small and generally flow in deep channels. The surface is smooth, except along the courses of the streams, and is nearly all arable. The soil is a fertile, gravelly and clayey loam. Romulus, (p. v.) on the line of Varick, contains a church, steam sawmill, female seminary, and 36 dwellings. Hyatts Corners, in the s. e., contains 20 dwellings. Romulus Center is a p. o. Whitneys Landing is a station upon Cayuga Lake; and Cooleys and Freleighs Points and Ovid Landing are stations upon Seneca Lake. The first settlement was made by David Wisner, in 1789. There is but one church (Bap.) in town.

¹ Mr. Faussett brought in his family in 1790. Jas. Jackson, from Penn., settled in the n. w. part in 1789; Silas Halsey, from L. I., near Lodi, in 1792. The next year his sons and sons-in-law and their families, numbering 18 persons, came in. The first child born was a daughter of Geo. Faussett. Peter Smith kept the first inn, and Silas Halsey built the first gristmill, in 1794.

² 3 M. E. Bap., and Ref. Prot. D.

³ In 1855 the name of this institution was changed to the Seneca Collegiate Institute.

⁴ The first settlers, mostly from Penn. and N. J., followed the trail of Sullivan's army and located in the w. part of the town. Among them were Wm. Dunlap and Joseph Wilson, from Penn., Peter Smith, from N. J., and Henry Wharton, in 1789; Abraham Covert and his son Abraham A., from N. J., in 1790; Elijah Kline, from Dutchess co., and John Seely, from Saratoga co., in 1792; Nicholas and Richard Huff, Peter Hughes, Abraham De Mott and his son James, in 1793; and William and Robert Dunlap and Tunis Covert, in 1794. In the summer of 1795, Jonas C. Baldwin settled on Lot 11, where he remained until 1801, when he sold out and removed to Lyander, Onondaga co., and laid the foundation of Baldwinville. The first child born was David, son of Andrew Dunlap, Feb. 2, 1793; and the first death was that of George Dunlap, brother of Andrew, Sept. 24, 1791. A triple marriage in 1793 was the first in town. The parties were Joseph Wilson and Anna Wyckoff; Abraham A. Covert and Catherine Covert; and Enoch Stewart and Jane Covert. They were obliged to cross Seneca Lake to find a justice authorized to perform the ceremony. Benj. Munger taught the first school, in 1795; John McMath kept the first store, in 1797, and the first inn, in 1800; and B. Boardman erected the first mill, in 1793, on Lot 2.

⁵ There are now in town 7 churches; 2 Presb., 2 M. E., Ref. Prot. D., Bap., and R. C.

⁷ On Lot 29, within $\frac{1}{2}$ mi. of the s. line of the town, and exactly on the dividing ridge between the two lakes, once existed a mound or fortification of an irregular, elliptical form, including about 3 acres, and surrounded by an embankment of earth, which in 1801 was about 3 feet in height, with a base 5 to 8 feet in width. The present proprietor, George Bo Dine, with his father, removed here in 1802, and built a house within the inclosed space, where he has since resided until within a few

SENECA FALLS—was formed from Junius, March 26, 1829. It lies upon the w. bank of Cayuga Lake, n. of the center of the co. The surface is nearly flat, and it is elevated 30 to 50 ft. above Cayuga Lake. The shores of the lake are low and shelving, and the n. portion is swampy. Seneca River flows e. and n. through the center of the town, its valley dividing the town into two distinct parts. The river flows over a series of ledges into a deep chasm apparently worn by its waters. Just e. and s. w. of the village are extensive gypsum quarries. The soil is a stiff, hard clay in the s. and e., a sandy loam in the n. w., and a heavy vegetable muck in the n. e. Seneca Falls, (p. v.,)¹ upon Seneca River, near the center of the town, was incorp. April 22, 1831. It is a station upon the N. Y. C. R. R. and the Seneca Canal. The total fall is 51 feet, and furnishes an abundance of water-power, which is largely improved. It contains 7 churches, the Seneca Falls Academy, a union school, 2 newspaper offices, extensive manufactories of fire engines, pumps, machinery, iron, and woolen goods, and a great variety of other articles.² Pop. about 4,000. The first settlement was made by Job Smith, from Ulster co., upon the present site of the village in 1787; he left in 1793. The first permanent settler was Lawrence Van Clief, in 1789.³ The first religious services were held by M. E. missionaries, about 1797; and the first regular minister was Rev. Matthew Stewart, (Presb.,) in 1804.⁴

TYRE—was formed from Junius, March 26, 1829. It is the n. e. corner town of the co. The e. half is a swamp, being the s. termination of the Montezuma Marshes. The w. half is occupied by peculiar drift ridges similar to those already described in Junius. These ridges are 30 to 50 feet high, and generally have very steep declivities upon all sides except the s. One of the longest of these, in the w. part of the town, extends nearly two-thirds of the distance from the s. line to the n. Its summit is nearly level; and the road which is located upon it appears as though built upon an artificial embankment. The soil is clay and muck in the e. and a gravelly loam in the w. Tyre City, (Tyre p. o.,) near the center, contains 2 churches and 20 dwellings. Cruso is a p. o. on the n. line. The first settlement was made by Ezekiel Craue, from N. J., who came in 1794.⁵ The first church (Bap.) was formed in 1805. Elder Don Ralph was the first preacher.⁶

VARICK—was formed from Romulus, Feb. 6, 1830. It extends from Seneca to Cayuga Lake, across the center of the co. Its surface is slightly inclined toward the n. The slopes of the ridges are years. The work was evidently of great antiquity,—the timber on the inside being of the same size and apparent age of that in the surrounding forest. Upon the bank and in the ditch large oak trees—the growth of centuries—were standing. In the embankment were several openings a few feet in width, which were once probably used for gates or entrances. In making an excavation for a cellar, on the e. side, 6 skeletons were found at the depth of about 2 feet. This was in 1857. Several had been found previously; and, though all the softer parts of the bones had long since disappeared, the teeth and a few of the larger bones still remained. Inside of the embankment may still be found pieces of a coarse kind of pottery, ornamental pipes, &c. De Witt Clinton visited this place in 1810; and his theory is that this was one of a number of similar works of defense found occupying the most commanding positions in Western New York, and in the valleys of the Ohio and Mississippi, erected by a race more civilized than the Indians, and that they preceded the latter in the occupation of this country: their origin and end are alike a mystery; their annals defy the ken of human research, and their history will remain a sealed book perhaps forever. The Indians were never able to give any account of this fortification, as it was older than their traditions.

² Downs & Co.'s manufacturing establishment, commenced in 1840, has a capital, including real estate and machinery, of about $200,000. They are largely engaged in the manufacture of pumps and a great variety of other articles, use annually 3,800 tons of iron, 1,500 tons of coal, and employ 230 hands. Their yearly sales amount to about $400,000. They also manufacture Goffe's Patent Knitting Machine, and are largely engaged in the manufacture of hose, turning out 800 pairs per day; 70 persons are employed in this department. The Island Works of Silaby, Mynderse & Co. commenced in 1848, is engaged in the manufacture of steam fire engines, portable steam engines, and a variety of other machinery. It employs 150 persons, and turns out work to the amount of $200,000 per year. Cowing & Co.'s works commenced about 1840. They are engaged in the manufacture of fire engines, pumps, and various other articles.—employ 95 men, and turn out work yearly to the amount of $75,000 to $80,000. The Phoenix Woolen Mills gives employment to 90 persons, and manufactures goods to the amount of $150,000 per annum. Besides these, there are in the place several flouring mills, having in the aggregate 32 runs of stone, 2 distilleries, a brewery, 2 planing mills, 5 foundries and machine shops, a scythe and fork factory, a woolen factory, and several minor manufactories. About 50 tons of iron are used daily in the several manufactories.—American Revueille, Seneca Falls, 1859.

³ Mr. Smith was the first white settler upon the Military Tract. Mr. Van Clief was a Revolutionary soldier, having been in the battles of White Plains, with Washington at Valley Forge and with Sullivan in his campaign against the Indians. He settled on the river, and engaged in piloting boats over the rapids until the locks were built in 1815. Among the other early settlers were James Bennett, Col. John Harris, and ——— Parker. The first child born was a daughter of Lawrence Van Clief, Nov. 29, 1790; the first marriage, that of ——— Ely and Pamela Parkhurst, in 1796; and the first death, that of Mrs. Job Smith, in 1792. The first school was taught by ——— Leonard, in 1797. Lawrence Van Clief kept the first inn, in 1794; and Col. Wilhelmus Mynderse kept the first store, in 1795, and built the first saw and grist mill, about the same time. In 1794, Robert Trout, Nicholas Gouverneur, Stephen N. Bayard, and Elkanah Watson, under the title of the Bayard Company, bought of the State 100 acres of land on the n. side of the river, embracing the greater part of the water-power upon that side. In 1798 they purchased 250 acres on the s. side, and in 1809, 650 acres more on the same side, the two purchases embracing all the water-power upon that side of the river. In 1816 they bought 450 acres more on the n. side, completing the purchase of the water-power. In 1795 the company sold a one-fifth interest in their purchase to Col. Mynderse, and constituted him their agent. In 1795 the "Upper Red Mills" were erected under his direction; and in 1807 the "Lower Red Mills" were erected. The Co. refused to sell their land, neglected to improve the immense water-power that they owned, and in 1825 broke down, and the property was sold for about one-fifth of its cost. In 1829-30 the manufacturing interests of the place began to increase. About that time a paper mill was erected by Chauncey Marshall, G. V. Sackett, and Ansel Bascom; a cotton factory, by Judge Sackett; a machine shop, by McClary & Halliday; and a clock factory, by Marshall & Adams. Until the locks were built, in 1815, the most important business of the place was that of transporting goods and boats around the rapids. The "dress reform" movement was commenced in this town by Mrs. Amelia Bloomer, who adopted the dress known as the Bloomer Dress in 1849.

⁴ The census reports 7 churches in town; Bap., M. E., Wes. Meth., Prot. E., Presb., Ref. Prot. D., and R. C.

⁵ Asher Halsey, from N. J., came in 1798. Among the other early settlers were Stephen Crane, Peter and Ezra Degarmo, Robert Gould, Thos. Sussan, Lewis Winans, and Thos. W. Roosevelt. The first child born was Paul Crane; the first marriage, that of James Cook and Betsey Woodworth; and the first death, that of Ezekiel Craue. Nancy Goman taught the first school, in 1804. Stephen Crane kept the first inn, in 1809; Nicholas Traver built the first sawmill, in 1807, and Noah Davis the first gristmill, in 1817.

⁶ There are 4 churches in town; Disciples, Bap., M. E., and Ref. Prot. D.

so gradual that nearly every part is arable. The streams are all small. Near the center of the town is a cranberry swamp; occupying about 800 acres. The soil is a gravelly loam intermixed with clay. Bearytown, (Fayette p. o.) upon the line of Fayette, in the n. e. part, contains 3 churches, a steam sawmill, stave factory, and 128 inhabitants, of whom 51 are in this town. Romulus (p. v.) lies on the s. border. East Varick (p. o.) is a landing upon Cayuga Lake. McDuffee Town is a hamlet in the s. e. corner. Varick is a p. o. The first settlement was made by James McKnight, in 1789.¹ There are 3 churches in town; Bap., Presb., and M. E.

WATERLOO—was formed from Junius, March 26, 1829. It lies on the n. bank of Seneca River, n. w. of the center of the co. The surface is almost one unbroken flat. A marsh extends e. and w. through the town s. of the center, and another occupies the n. e. corner.² The bed of Seneca River, on the s. boundary, is almost level with the general surface. The soil is muck and clay in the n. and e., gravel along the n. border, and a sandy loam in the center and w. Waterloo, (p. v.) on Seneca River, near the e. border of the town, was incorp. April 9, 1824. It is a station upon the N. Y. C. R. R. and upon the Seneca Canal. A fall of 24½ feet in Seneca River furnishes an excellent water-power, which is mostly improved. It is a half-shire of the co., and contains the courthouse, 6 churches, the Waterloo Union School, a bank, a large shawl factory,³ 3 distilleries, 2 malt houses, 3 flouring mills, 5 sawmills, 2 founderies and machine shops, 2 oil mills, and numerous other manufactories.⁴ Seneca River above the falls, being seldom frozen, is navigable throughout the year. This village is an important depôt of lumber from the s. w. cos., and of coal from the Susquehanna and Blossburg Mines. Pop. 3,050. South Waterloo, formerly called "Schoyes," is on the opposite side of Seneca River, in Fayette. Settlement was commenced by John Greene, from R. I., in 1789.⁵ The first religious services were held about 1816.⁶

² The waters of Black Brook which flow through the central swampy region are impregnated with earthy and vegetable matter, which gives to them the peculiar quality of clearing the inside of steam boilers of the incrustations of sulphate and carbonate of lime resulting from the use of hard water.
³ The Waterloo Woolen Manufacturing Co. was organized in 1836, with a capital of $150,000; 200 to 250 hands are employed; 300,000 lbs. of wool are used, and 40,000 long shawls are annually manufactured. This is, next to the Bay State Mills, the largest shawl factory in America.
⁴ Among these establishments is a plaster mill, boardyard, and drydock, 4 copper, tin, and sheet iron factories, a fanning mill, and washboard factory, and 2 cabinet and furniture shops.
⁶ The census reports 6 churches in town; Presb., Prot. E., Ref. Prot. D., M. E., Disciples, and Friends.

CHENANGO COUNTY.

THIS county was formed from Herkimer and Tioga, March 15, 1798. Madison was taken off in 1806. It is an interior co., lying s. e. of the center of the State; is centrally distant — mi. from Albany, and contains — sq. mi. Its surface is a hilly upland, broken by the deep ravines of the streams. The highlands consist of two principal ridges, extending n. and s.,—the first lying between Unadilla and Chenango Rivers, and the second between the Chenango and Otselic. These ridges are subdivided by numerous parallel and lateral valleys, and their declivities are often too steep for profitable cultivation. The summits are broad and rolling, and of nearly uniform elevation throughout the co.; and the highest points are 600 to 800 feet above the principal valleys.

Susquehanna River flows s. w. through the s. e. corner, receiving from the n. the Unadilla, which forms the greater part of the e. boundary of the co. The principal branches of the Unadilla and Susquehanna are Beaver Creek, Shawler, Great, Kent, and Kelsey Brooks. Chenango River flows in a generally southerly direction from the n. border of the co. to near the center, and thence s. w. to the s. w. corner. It receives from the e. Handsome Eddy, Padgets, and Pages Brooks, and from the w. Canasawacta, Fly-Meadow, Ludlow, and Genegantslet Creeks, and Pleasant, Fly, Cold, and Mill Brooks. Otselio River flows s. w. through the n. w. corner, receiving from the e. Middletown Brook and Brackel Creek, and from the w. Manns, Buck, and Ashbel Brooks and Mud Creek. In basins among the hills, far above the valleys, are numerous small ponds. The valleys of the Susquehanna and Chenango are among the finest in the State. They consist generally of a fertile and highly cultivated interval of an average width of about 1 mi., usually bordered by steep and finely wooded hillsides. All the valleys of the co. seem to have been formed by the action of great currents of water, which have plowed deep furrows in the gently rolling region which probably once formed the general face of the country.

The lowest rocks in the co., appearing upon the n. border, belong to the Hamilton group. Successively above these toward the s. appear the Tully limestone, Genesee slate, the Portage, Chemung, and Catskill groups. The sandstone of the Portage group furnishes a good material for building and flagging. Several quarries have been opened along the Chenango Valley between Greene and Oxford. A quarry of the same stone a little below Oxford furnishes grindstones and whetstones. The rock which crowns the summits of the s. hills is the red sandstone of the Chemung group. The soils are almost entirely derived from the disintegration of the rocks. In a few localities is found a very limited amount of drift. Upon the hills the soil is principally a shaly loam, and in the valleys a fine quality of productive alluvium.

The co. is almost exclusively agricultural. Dairying is the leading pursuit, and is gradually gaining upon all the other branches of agriculture. Stock and wool growing are carried on to some extent. Grain is produced, though not in sufficient quantities for the wants of the people. Hops are cultivated to some extent along the river valleys.

The co. seat is located at Norwich.¹ The courthouse is a fine stone building, situated near the center of the village, fronting the public park.² It is built in the Grecian style of architecture, with a colonnade in front, supported by Corinthian columns. The jail is a stone building, contiguous to the courthouse. The clerk's office is a fireproof brick building, upon the courthouse lot. The poorhouse is situated upon a farm of 170 acres in Preston, 6 mi. w. of the courthouse. The average number of inmates is 90, supported at a weekly cost of 56 cts. each. The farm yields a revenue of $800. The house is poor and dilapidated, and the accommodations for the inmates are extremely poor. A school is taught 6 months in the year.

¹ The co. at first had half-shires, the courts being held alternately at Hamilton (now in Madison county) and Oxford. From the organization of Madison co., in 1806, until 1809, the courts were held alternately at Oxford and North Norwich. By the act of March 6, 1807, the co. seat was located at Norwich. The first courthouse was built and first occupied in 1809. The first courthouse was a wooden building, erected at a cost of $6,500. The present courthouse was built in 1837, at a cost of $16,000, under the direction of Wm. Randall, Wm. Knowlton, and Erasmus Lathrop, commissioners. The present jail was erected in 1830, at a cost of $2,000. It is a two story building, containing 10 cells and a house for the jailer.

² The first co. officers were Isaac Foot, First Judge; Joah Enoe, and Joshua Leland, Judges; Oliver Norton and Plisha Payne, Assistant Justices; Uri Tracy, Sheriff; Sidney S. Breese, Clerk; and John L. Mercereau, Surrogate.

The Chenango Canal extends along Chenango River through the co. It crosses the river below Earlville, below Sherburne, and below Greene, upon wood aqueducts, supported by stone piers. The Albany & Susquehanna R. R., now in process of construction, extends along the Susquehanna through Bainbridge.

Five weekly newspapers are now published in the co.¹

This co. included 11 of the "Twenty Towns" or "Governor's Purchase," the "Gore" lying between them and the Military Tract, the Harper Patent of 16,000 acres, Vermont Sufferers' Tract of 40,960 acres,² Livingston Tract of 16,000 acres, the French Tract of nearly the same extent, a portion of the Chenango Triangle Tract, and several smaller tracts. The territory included within the Twenty Townships was ceded to the State by the Indians, in a treaty held with Gov. George Clinton, at Fort Schuyler, Sept. 22, 1788.³ This tract is sometimes called "Clinton's Purchase," and sometimes "The Governor's Purchase."

The early settlers were principally from Vt., Conn., and the eastern part of the State. The settlers in the n. part of the co. came in by way of Rome, and those in the central and s. parts by way of Chenango and Susquehanna Rivers. Many of the early settlers almost perished from want of food, at times, during the first few years. A colony of French settled at Greene in 1792, but,

¹ The Western Oracle, the first paper published in the co., was commenced by A. Romeyo, previous to 1804, at Sherburne Four Corners. It was discontinued in 1808 or '09.

The Olive Branch was started at Sherburne in May, 1806, by Phiney & Fairchild. In 1808 John F. Fairchild became sole proprietor. — Miller, Lot Clark, and John B. Johnson were successively interested in its publication. In 1812 or '13 Johnson changed its name to

The Volunteer. In 1816 the press was purchased by John F. Hubbard, who commenced

The Norwich Journal. In 1844 it passed into the hands of La Fayette Leal and J. H. Sinclair, who merged it with The Oxford Republican in 1847 and changed the name to

The Chenango Union. Harvey Hubbard purchased Leal & interest Oct. 20, 1847, and the paper is now published by Hubbard & Sinclair.

The Chenango Patriot was commenced at Oxford in 1807 by John B. Johnson, and its publication continued for 3 or 4 yrs. The President was published at Oxford in 1808 by Theophilus Eaton.

The Republican Messenger was commenced at Sherburne in 1810 by Pettit & Percival.

The Oxford Gazette was started in 1814 by Chauncey Morgan, who published it some years, when it was sold to Geo. Hunt, and afterward to Hunt & Noyes. Mr. Morgan again became proprietor in 1826, and after a few years the paper was discontinued.

The Republican Agriculturalist was commenced Dec. 10, 1818, by Thurlow Weed. It soon passed into the hands of — Curtiss, who continued it for a short time, when it was discontinued.

The People's Advocate was commenced at Norwich in 1824 by H. P. W. Brainard. It passed into the hands of Wm. G. Hyer, and was discontinued in a short time.

The Chenango Republican was commenced at Oxford in 1826 by Benj. Cory. In 1828 it was purchased by Mack & Chapman. March 3, 1831, Wm. E. Chapman and T. T. Flegler commenced a new series, and soon after changed its name to

The Oxford Republican. In 1838 Mr. Chapman became sole proprietor. It was successively published by J. Taylor Bradt, Benj. Welch, Jr., R. A. Leal, C. E. Chamberlin, and La Fayette Leal. In 1847 it was merged with The Oxford Journal and published as The Chenango Union.

The Anti Masonic Telegraph was commenced at Norwich in Nov. 1829, by E. P. Pellet. In 1831 B. T. Cook became associated in its publication. Its name was subsequently changed to

The Chenango Telegraph. In 1840, on the death of E. P. Pellet, it passed into the hands of his brother, Nelson Pellet; and upon his death, in 1851, it was conducted for the estate by E. Max Leal and F. P. Fisher. In Sept. 1855, it was purchased by Rice & Martin, by whom it is now published.

The Chenango Patriot was commenced at Greene in 1830 by Nathan Randall. It afterward passed into the hands of Joseph M. Farr, who changed its name to

The Chenango Democrat, and in a short time it was discontinued.

The New Berlin Herald was commenced in 1831 by Samuel L. Hatch. In 1834 it was published by Randall & Hatch. It soon after passed into the hands of Isaac C. Sheldon; and afterward into the hands of Hiram Ostrander, who changed its name to

The New Berlin Sentinel. It was discontinued about 1840.

The Chenango Whig was published at Oxford a short time in 1855.

The Miniature, a small mo., was issued from the same office.

The Sherburne ——— was commenced in 1836 by J. Worden Marble. In 1839 it was removed to Binghamton.

The Oxford Times was commenced in 1836 by a joint stock company. It was for some time conducted by H. C. Cook. In 1841 it passed into the hands of E. H. Purdy and C. D. Brigham. In 1844 it was published by Waldo M. Potter; in 1845, by Potter & Galpin; and in 1848 J. B. Galpin became sole proprietor, and still continues its publication.

The Bainbridge Eagle was commenced in 1843 by J. Hunt, jr. In 1846 its name was changed to

The Bainbridge Freeman; and in 1849 it was merged in

The Chenango Free Democrat, commenced at Norwich Jan. 1, 1849, by Alfred G. Lawyer; and J. D. Lawyer soon after became associated in its publication. It was then early removed to Colleskill, Schoharie co.

The New Berlin Gazette was commenced in 1849 by Jos. K. Fox and M. E. Duhanl, and was published about 1 year.

The Chenango News was commenced in 1850 by A. T. Boynton. J. M. Haight soon after became associated in its publication, and subsequently became sole proprietor. He removed the press to Norwich, and, in connection with A. P. Nixon, commenced the publication of

The Temperance Advocate in 1855, and published it 1 year, when it was discontinued.

The Saturday Visitor was commenced in 1852 by Joseph K. Fox. Its name was soon after changed to

The Social Visitor, after which it was published about 5 years.

The Spirit of the Age was commenced at Berlin in 1852 by J. K. Fox, J. D. Lawyer, editor. It was continued but a short time.

The Oxford Transcript was commenced in 1853 by G. N. Carhart, and was published about 6 months.

The Sherburne Transcript was commenced in 1855 by James M. Scarritt, and was published about 2 years.

The Chenango American was commenced at Greene, Sept. 20, 1855, by Denison & Fisher, its present publishers.

The Daily Reporter was commenced at Norwich in 1857 by J. H. Smith. In 1858 it was purchased by Rice & Martin, and was soon after discontinued.

The Literary Independent was commenced at Norwich in the fall of 1858 by a company of young gentlemen connected with the academy. It was published about 4 months.

The New Berlin Pioneer was commenced Feb. 19, 1859, by Squires & Fox, its present publishers.

² This tract was granted to relieve those persons who had purchased lands of the State of N. Y., within the present limits of Vt. These lands were claimed by both N. H. and N. Y., and, after an angry and protracted controversy, extending through several years, New York surrendered her claim to Vermont.

from defect in title, most of them left. The greater part of the later immigration was also from New England. In consequence of the gradual change which has been going on for the last 20 years in the business of the co., and the substitution of dairying for all other branches of farming, the population of the co. has gradually decreased, and is now no greater than it was 40 years ago.

AFTON—was formed from Bainbridge, ———, 1857. It is the s. e. corner town of the co. Its surface consists principally of a rolling upland, separated into two nearly equal parts by the broad valley of the Susquehanna. The summits of the hills are 300 to 500 feet above the valleys, and their declivities are generally gradual slopes. The Susquehanna flows s. w. through near the center, in a broad and beautiful valley. It receives from the n. Kelseys and Harpers Brooks. Round Pond, one mi. n. e. of the village, covers an area of about 40 acres. It is 25 feet above the surface of the river, and without any visible outlet. The soil upon the hills is a shaly loam, and in the valleys a clayey loam and alluvium. Afton, (p. v.) upon the Susquehanna, near the center of the town, contains 4 churches and 270 inhabitants. Ayreshire, (p. o.) upon Kelsey Brook, in the n. part, is a hamlet. The first settlement was made upon the Susquehanna, below Afton, in 1786, by immigrants from Conn. and Vt.¹ There are 5 churches in town.²

BAINBRIDGE—was formed as part of Tioga co., by the name of "Jericho," Feb. 16, 1791. Its name was changed April 15, 1814. Parts of Norwich and Oxford were taken off in 1793, a part of Greene in 1798, and Afton in 1857. It lies upon the e. border of the co., s. of the center. Its surface is a rolling upland, divided into two parts by the Susquehanna, which flows s. w. through the e. part. The valley of the river is about one mi. wide, and is bordered by moderately steep hillsides. The highest summits are 400 to 600 feet above the valleys. The soil upon the hills is a gravelly and shaly loam, and in the valleys a clay loam and alluvium. Bainbridge, (p. v.) upon the Susquehanna, was incorp. April 21, 1829. It contains 3 churches and 350 inhabitants. Bennettsville, (p. v.) upon Bennetts Creek, in the s. e. part, contains 2 churches, a gristmill, sawmill, and about 20 houses. West Bainbridge is a p. o. in the n. w. corner. The lands in this town were first claimed by Robert Harper under a grant from the Indians; but the title was subsequently repudiated by the State, and a portion of the lands was granted to settlers from Vt. who had suffered from failure of title to lands in that State granted to them by New York. The first settlements were made in 1785, by immigrants from Vt. and Conn.³ The first church (Presh.) was formed about 1790, by Rev. Wm. Stone.⁴

COLUMBUS—was formed from Brookfield, (Madison co.,) Feb. 11, 1805. It is the n. e. corner town in the co. Its surface is a rolling and hilly upland, occupying a portion of the high ridge between Unadilla and Chenango Rivers. The highest summits are 400 to 600 feet above the valleys. Unadilla River forms its e. boundary, receiving as tributaries Beaver Creek, Shawlex Brook, and several other small streams. The soil is a gravelly and shaly loam, best adapted to pasturage.⁵ Columbus Center, (Columbus p. o.,) upon Shawlex Brook, contains 3 churches, a tannery, and 25 houses. The first settlement was made upon Lot 44, in 1791, by Col. Converse.⁶ The first religious meeting was the funeral of Mrs. Dorcas Howard, conducted by Elder Campbell, (Bap.,) in 1797.⁷

COVENTRY—was formed from Greene, Feb. 7, 1806. It is situated centrally on the s. line of the co. Its surface consists of the high rolling hills midway between the Susquehanna and Chenango Rivers, the highest elevations being about 800 feet above the valleys. The hills are arable to their summits, and their slopes are generally long and gradual. Harpers and Kelseys Creeks, flowing into the Susquehanna, are the principal streams. The soil is a gravelly and sandy

¹ Among the early settlers were Seth Stone, Nath'l Benton, Isaac Miner, and Japhet Bush and sons, from Conn., and Hezekiah Stowell and sons, Orlando Bridgman and sons, and Ebenezer Church and sons, from Vt. The three last named families were "Vermont Sufferers." The first child born was Wm. Bush, in 1786; and the first death was that of ——— Polly. Nath'l Church taught the first school, in 1790; Aaa Stowell kept the first inn, in 1788; Peter Betts the first store, in 1805; and David Cooper and Isaac Miner built the first sawmill, on Kelaya Brook.

² Two M. E. Cong., Bap., and Univ.

³ Among the early settlers were Wm. Gutherie, Abraham Fuller, Renben Kirby, and Gould Bacon, from Conn.; Stephen and John Stiles, Heath Kelsey, Chas. Bush, Eban and Jos. Landers, and Jas. Graham. Sam'l Bixby settled on Lot 75, in 1788, and Maj. Henry Evans on Lot 80, in 1789. The first birth was that of K. Landers, daughter of Joa. Landers, in March, 1791; the first marriage, that of Charles Bush and Joau Harrington, in 1794; and the first death, that of Mrs. Reuben Kirby, in 1792. William Gutherie kept the first inn, in 1793, on Lot 85. Phineas and Reuben Beunett erected a gristmill on Bennetts Creek, in 1789.

⁴ There are 7 churches in town; 2 M. E., 2 Bap., F. W. Bap., Presh., and Prot. E.

⁵ The people are almost solely engaged in dairying. For 30 years the population has been continually decreasing and the dairies increasing.

⁶ Among the other early settlers were Henry, Daniel, and Jas. Williams, from R. I., who located upon Lot 90, in 1792; Thos. Howard, from R. I., on Lot 89, Israel Greenleaf, from N. H., on Lot 82, Gilbert Strong, on Lot 61, and Josiah Rathbone, on Lot 64, in 1794. The first child born was Sally Williams; the first marriage, that of Joseph Medbery and Hannah Brown, in 1794; and the first death, that of Mrs. Dorcas Howard, in 1797. Nicholas Page taught the first school; Col. Converse kept the first inn, in 1793; Amos C. Palmer, the first store, in 1797; and Job Vail built the first sawmill, in 1794, and the first gristmill, in 1795.

⁷ The census reports 5 churches in town; Bap., F. W. Bap., Cong., M. E., and Union.

loam, with occasional spots of a red, slaty loam, better adapted to grazing than tillage. Coventry, (p. v.) a little n. w. of the center, contains 2 churches and 40 dwellings; and Coventryville, (p. v.), 2 mi. e. of Coventry, a church, mill, and 25 dwellings. Church Hollow is a p. o. on the s. line of the town. The first settlement was made near the center, by Simon Jones, in 1785.¹ The first church (Cong.) was formed Nov. 19, 1807. Rev. David Harmon was the first preacher.²

GERMAN³—was formed from De Ruyter, (Madison co.,) March 21, 1806. Otselic was taken off in 1817, Lincklaen in 1823, and a part of Pitcher in 1827. It is located centrally upon the w. line of the co. The surface is hilly, and watered by several brooks, forming what is called Five Streams, which flow through the town in a s. direction. The soil is a sandy and gravelly loam, well adapted to grazing. Livermores Corners, (German p. o.,) near the w. line, is a hamlet; and East German is a p. o. The first settlement was made in 1795, by Benjamin Cleveland, from Oneida co.⁴ The first church (Presb.) was formed at an early period, and a M. E. association was formed in 1815, at the house of Walter Oyshlenbank.⁵

GREENE⁶—was formed from Union (Broome co.) and "Jericho," (now Bainbridge,) March 15, 1798. Coventry was taken off in 1806, and Smithville in 1808. It is the s. w. corner town of the co. Its surface is a rolling and hilly upland, divided into two distinct parts by the valley of the Chenango. The hills rise 500 to 700 feet above the river, and are broken by the ravines of the streams. Chenango River flows s. w. through the center, in a broad valley about 1 mi. in width. The Chenango Canal passes through the valley. Genegantslet Creek flows s. through the w. part in a wide valley, and joins the Chenango a few miles below the village of Greene. Pages Brook flows through the s. e. corner; and several small streams are tributary to the Chenango. The soil is a gravelly and shaly loam on the hills, and alluvium in the valleys. Greene, (p. v.,) near the center, was incorp. April 12, 1842. It contains 4 churches, a flouring mill, furnace, and 814 inhabitants. East Greene (p. v.) contains a church and 158 inhabitants. Genegantslet (p. v.) contains 1 church and 12 houses. The first permanent settlement was made by Stephen Ketchum, in 1792.⁷ The first church (Bap.) was organized in 1795,⁸ by Elder Nathaniel Kellogg,

¹ — Goodell and — Clark settled near Mr. Jones in 1786, and Benj. Jones at the same place in 1788. Ozias Yale and Wm. Starks located a little n. of Coventry in 1792, Elijah Warren on Lot 2, in 1804, and Moses Allis, Roger Egerton, and Z. Hutchinson soon after. The first birth was that of Wm., son of Moses Allis, in 1794; the first marriage, that of Simeon Parker and Roger Sprague; and the first death, that of a son of Roger Egerton, in 1790. Sherman Page taught the first school; Benj. Jones kept the first inn, in 1788, and Jotham Parker the first store, in 1799. The first gristmill was erected by Capt. Parker, in 1795, and the first carding and cloth dressing mill by A. and Wm. H. Rogers, about the same time.

² The census reports 5 churches; 2 Cong., 2 M. E., and Bap.

⁴ Abraham Livermore settled at Livermores Corners, in 1796, with his wife and children, Abraham, jr., Becka, Daniel, Polly, Abel, Cyrus, Hepsy, Sally, and Martin Livermores. From their isolated position in the wilderness—remote from any settlement—the Cleveland and Livermore families suffered great privations and hardships during the first years of their settlement. In June, 1776, Mr. Cleveland set out for "Fort Stanwicz" for provisions, his family being entirely destitute. He intended to return in 3 or 4 days, but was detained for some time. On the fourth day of his absence, his wife and children, who had eaten nothing for 3 days except a few roots found in the woods, set out for their nearest neighbors, in Cincinnatus, on Otselic River, 4½ mi. distant. When about a mile from home, they encountered a bear, and were frightened back. The next morning the mother was too weak to walk, and the two older children again set out for Mr. Raymond's, on the Otselic. Upon learning the suffering condition of the family, Mrs. Raymond made them a pudding of bran,—the only food she had in the house. This and a bottle of milk kept the family from starvation until relief came. At another time, when the family were reduced to the last extremity, two un milked cows came to their house one night, and went away in the morning, furnishing them with milk for several days. It was never known where the cows came from or where they went to. Other families in the vicinity suffered in a similar manner. The first birth was that of Polly Cleveland, in 1796; the first marriage, that of Jonathan Head and Hepsy Livermore; and the first death, that of — Hartshorn. Abraham Livermore kept the first inn; Jonathan Chandler kept the first store, and erected the first mill and factory, on the e. branch of Otselic River.

⁶ Named in honor of Gen. Nath'l Greene. That part of the original township of Greene lying e. of Chenango River was included in a purchase made by the State from the Oneida and Tuscarora Indians in 1785. These lands were subsequently sold by the State to individual patentees.

⁷ Mr. Ketchum located within the bounds of the present village of Greene. In the fall of 1792 a settlement was made by a company of French refugees. One of their number, Chas. Felix De Bologne, had preceded the main body, and made a purchase of 15,000 acres lying on the e. side of Chenango River. The first party that came consisted of M. Bologne, M. Shamont, M. Le Fevre, M. Bravo, M. Du Vernet, and M. Ohre. A portion of them had families; and several young ladies were among the party. In Otsego co. Simon Barnet joined the party, and subsequently M. Dntremont, with his family, settled with them. Before the dispersion of the colony they were joined by Jos. Juliard, who was the only French emigrant that became a permanent resident. M. Bologne, on his way to Philadelphia in the spring of 1795, was drowned while fording a creek much swollen by the floods. The untimely death of the leader of this adventurous band proved fatal to the future success of the settlement. The failure of the company to pay the balance of the purchase money due on the tract caused the title to revert to the original patentees. After all the hardships and privations they had endured, the failure to secure a title to their land proved a signal for dispersion. The majority of them left in the year 1796. In 1794, Talleyrand, the celebrated French diplomatist, visited his fellow-countrymen in Greene. Among the early permanent settlers were Nath'l Kellogg, Zopher Betts, Benajah Loomis, Cornelius Hill, and David Tremaine, who located at East Greene in 1793. The first road that was cut through the town was called "The Chenango Road." It runs from the present village of Bainbridge to the mouth of Page Creek, on the Chenango,—a distance of about 25 mi. The first settlers upon this road within the then limits of the town, commencing at the w., were Nathan Bennett, Joshua Root, Eleazar Skinner, Thomas Elliott, Joab Elliott, Roswell Fitch, Aden Elliott, Philo Clemmons, Capt. Mandeville, Simeon and Benj. Jones, Hardin Bennett, Record Wilher, and Deacon Richards, who came in from 1792 to '95. The settlers who located in the s. part, w. of the river, were Jas. and Herman Terwilliger, Elisha and Noah Gilhert, Stephen Palmer, and Joa. and Cornish Messenger, as early as 1796. The first birth was that of Johnston Rundall, son of Joa. Rundall,—for which honor the mother subsequently received a deed of 50 acres of land from the Homby Estate. — Cartwright taught the first school, in 1794; Conrad Sharp kept the first inn, in 1794; Elisha Smith the first store, in 1801. Conrad Sharp built the first sawmill, in 1795, and Abraham Storm and Henry Vorse the first gristmill, in 1794.
