Unsettled.
In the morning of his, our good ship named "May" never a thought where the port may be. We lose our boat from the flowery strand and sail away on a summer sea. The waverlike ripple a silvery sheen, Round-gum-like islands with shining beach; But beyond those beautiful mountains green Are fairer ones that we never reach. The valley is bright with blooming flowers, And sweet with the wild-wood secrets; But faint Would we climb the mountain that grandly towers. And long for heights that we cannot gain, Ah, how we yearn for the enchanted peaks, Whose shores are looking a golden haze! And ever a pathway our footstep seeks, 'Till our eyes grow dim in steadfast gaze. Why is it we never are satisfied? Whence comes this spirit of sad unrest, This haunting glow for ever by our side, This restlessness within the breast? Does the soil still pine for its native clime And the spirit-haunts that it knew of yore, Some land that always is summer time— Some beautiful dim-remembered shore? But it finds no rest for the weary feet, No where beneath the shining stars; And forever the wild wings beat and beat, Like a captive bird 'gainst prison bars; Waiting, waiting, we know not why, For something, Alas! it is ever thus; And never beneath the wind-swept sky, Do the things we wait for come to us.—Edw. Brewer, in Current.

THE DUELLISTS.
BY PETER DONOVAN.
One evening in the winter of 1789 the delic Parisian society scintillated at the bal masque given by the Marquis Desbarois at his palace in the Rue de Provence. The cream of the French aristocracy, the hereditary oppressors of the people, thronged the ball room in their dazzling costumes. And one to see such a kaleidoscopic array for beauty and chivalry, so volatile and gay, would not think that a terrible Nemesis in the form of an outraged popular was even then drawing near, and would ere long, with one Titanic blow, decapitate the hydra-headed monster that so long lived on their subsistence. When the mad revel was at its height, a lissome creature, with the step of a gazelle, attired as a Grecian shepherdess, and moved gracefully about, and with circumspect modesty, beneath the cynosure of all eyes. A dashing young officer wearing the uniform of a lieutenant, approached, and bowing deferentially, said: "Will the fair pastoral goddess favor me with a dance?" "Monsieur, may I permit me to refuse, as I am not prepared to do so at the moment," she answered, in a voice which bespoke unfeigned ingenuousness. "List, madam," he persisted, "I may at least have the pleasure of escorting you to a seat."

"If Monsieur insists I suppose I have nothing to do but comply," she answered, and he escorted her to a seat. "If Monsieur insists I suppose I have nothing to do but comply," she answered, and he escorted her to a seat.

SING SING.
A Pen View of the Celebrated Prisoner on the Hudson.
Warden Brush Obits About Important Prisoners in His Charge.

A reporter for the Mail and Express went up to Sing Sing last night with Warden Brush about some of his important charges. He says ex-elderman Jaehne is one of the best men he ever had for a prisoner. From the very beginning of his sentence he has obeyed every rule to the letter.

"In fact," said the warden, "the second anxious to learn exactly what he ought to do, and to-day he is exactly like clock-work. His health has improved with the regular living, and his appetite is something pleasant to behold. He punishes prison fare as if he had been accustomed to it all his life. That is the only way for a man to get along in prison. He must look at the situation from a standpoint of a philosopher and say to himself: 'I am here and might as well make the best of a bad bargain.' Jaehne seems to be that sort of a man. I understand that he was an inveterate smoker of good cigars before coming here. Still he enjoys a pipe which we allow him in the evening with as much gusto as if it were a Ritz. But Ferdinand Ward, he is the most persistent worker for trifling privileges which we cannot allow him that you ever heard of. If he wants a cigar he will try to get it, although it is against the rules, and he keeps showing favor in this respect would be dealt with summarily. Ward will resort to all little schemes in order to accomplish an object. He will not accept defeat. Of course he is treated the same as any other convict, but he is not willing to be treated as such. He is a great reader and is allowed to read books and magazines, and we have quite a large library here, but newspapers are not allowed. Some of the prisoners will get them, however. A wife will send her husband a book. Well, inside the cover, perhaps, she has concealed a newspaper, or portion of one, and when she hands it to him he reads it, and he reads every two months, he is really to understand the slightest sign from her, although a keeper stands right by in the room with him.

"You would be surprised at the memory of an intelligent prisoner. When not at work and reading, he is doing nothing to do but think, and they are on the alert for news from the outside world. If a convict were to pass through this hall now for instance, and hear you let drop a word, he would be able to guess at the whole conversation as well as his friends, and he would be on the alert for news from the outside world. If a convict were to pass through this hall now for instance, and hear you let drop a word, he would be able to guess at the whole conversation as well as his friends, and he would be on the alert for news from the outside world.

"If Monsieur insists I suppose I have nothing to do but comply," she answered, and he escorted her to a seat.

Honors for a Lion Slayer.
Among the notabilities on whom the red ribbon of the Legion of Honor has been conferred this year is a hero whose one ambition for more than a quarter of a century has been to win it by his valor and prowess. Ahmed-ben-Ahmar, the famous slayer of lions in the provinces of Constantine, in Algeria, has even surpassed the celebrated Zeyd Gerard in his achievements. So great is the number of the king of beasts whom he has caused to bite the dust that the local authorities, to save themselves from impending ruin, have had to cut down the reward offered for every lion's skin to one-half in his case. It will give your readers an idea of the services which this brave Arab has rendered to the colony when I say that it is estimated that his skill and pluck have from first to last saved it from losses in the shape of the cattle killed and devoured by the fierce animals with which he has waged an incessant war amounting to nearly £1,000,000 sterling. This calculation is based on the fact that the butcher's bill of each separate lion reaches the respectable sum of £400 per annum. It would be interesting to learn how many human lives which might otherwise have been sacrificed have also been prolonged through the timely intervention of Ahmed-ben-Ahmar. He has at length obtained the recompense which he coveted for more than a quarter of a century, and he has received the gold medal which he brought in to the station. —[Paris Letter.]

Towns on the Line.
In England the saloons or public houses, as they are called there, are allowed to open their doors during certain hours on Sunday. In Wales the law closes them from Saturday night to Monday morning. Now we remember visiting two little towns which lie on opposite banks of the river Dee, which there forms the boundary between England and Wales; and the two are joined by a bridge over the stream. On Sunday afternoon, we went to state, the unregenerate Welshmen cross in crowds from the 'dry' to the 'wet' side of the river. This calls to mind a town on the line between Iowa and Missouri, mentioned by the Chicago Herald.

It rejoices in the name of L'Angeville, and the State boundary runs through the middle of the main street. This fact causes a novel division, for on each side of the town is prohibition, while the other believes in license and liquor.

The Missouri side of the main thoroughfare presents an unbroken line of saloons, while sobriety and industry thrive on the Iowa.

When an Iowa man wishes to treat his neighbor, however, he says: "Come over into Missouri with me," and they cross the street. When he doesn't turn up for supper his wife says: "Johnny, run over into Missouri and tell pap to chop some wood, so I kin beat the petticoats." The man who boasted that town had a great head.—[Golden Argosy.]

A Land Swarming with Bears.
Montana is said to have more bears in proportion to territory than any other section of the United States. Hunters and herders on the Tongue river, in the Big Horn range, report seeing cinnamon bears in the month of January. It has been found high up among the mountains lately, with plenty of snow. The bears, forced by hunger, swarm down into the foothills and on the plains in search of berries and roots. Not finding sufficient of the latter, they don't hesitate to feast on veal or mutton, and so the hunters are not to be surprised when they track the monsters with cold steel in the shape of traps or old lead in the form of bullets. The cinnamon bear is perhaps the most annoying of the species. While the true grizzly stays in high altitudes, almost at the verge of the perpetual snow line, the bold cinnamon and black bears do not hesitate to descend into the valleys and river bottoms, searching for food of some kind. The grizzly and silver-tip bears are carnivorous, while, as a rule, the cinnamon (which is really the brown bear) and the black confies themselves to roots, herbs and berries, unless forced to partake of more substantial food in the way of a stray calf or lost sheep.

Few Understand Horses.
It is astonishing how few men there are who know anything about a horse. There is no other animal that the average man is so close and intimate relations with, or that he treats with such a gross ignorance of his peculiarities. The teamster, now, has probably done little else than drive a horse in the intervals of shoveling coal. He certainly knows how heavy his load is, and he knows how to load his horse gets stabled the only way he can think of to help the horse is to beat him. This is one of the things that ought to be taught in our public schools. I would have it made a regular branch of study, and I know the teacher who could furnish a text-book. The school of the United States is in the hands of the ignorant farmer in his day, but that was a long time ago, and the drivers of our coal carts are not Apollos.—[Boston Post.]

Didn't Want a Common Man.
"There isn't much chance for a woman down in New England," said a talkative woman on a West-bound train, "and so I just made up my mind to be a common man and see if I couldn't do better. You men are rather scarce in this district, but if I do say it I've had a dozen offers of marriage in the last two years. But they wasn't the right kind. The men folks down our way are too quiet an' commonplace, an' I thought I'd come out West here, where there's plenty of murderers, to find me a husband."—[Chicago Herald.]

Retrayed by His Hand.
Richard Howard was sentenced to two years in New York for snatching a pocket-book. Digging the trial Assistant District Attorney Eckford asked him to show his hand to the jury. He at first refused, but finally held up the right hand, displaying fingers at least six inches long, with nails over half an inch in length. The hand from the wrist to the finger tips was nearly a foot long. Ex-Judge Bedford remarked that nature had evidently equipped the man for a pick-pocket.

THE FARM AND GARDEN.
Sheep Eating Wool.
A Wisconsin correspondent asks us to cause of sheep losing their wool. He does not state anything as to the condition of the flock, but writes that last spring the wool dropped seriously in patches.

There are a number of reasons. A feverish condition of the animal will sometimes cause this, especially of the fine-wooled breeds. Thin sheep exposed to the weather during winter, if suddenly gorged with strong food towards spring, are apt to lose their wool. So sheep alternately poorly fed and then crowded with food, may lose their wool, and in addition the remaining fleeces will have weak places in the fleece, often seriously lowering the price. Scabby sheep drop their wool where the parasites causing scab are burrowing under the scarf skin. This is one of the first things that is looked after when the wool is found to be loose or falling off.

Notes for Care of Fruit.
1. Have everything clean about the place. Clean out the houses at least once every week. Anoint the roosts and cracks with Kerosene. Whitewash the interior twice a year—spring and fall.

2. Don't crowd the fowls. Success depends in a great measure upon this. In winter feed a hot mash in the morning. We mix corn meal with hot water, adding any soft leavings from the table. Feed some green stuff, table scraps, etc., at noon, and corn at night. Corn is the best night food in winter, as it will not digest as quickly as any other, and powerfully stimulates the action of the digestive organs.

3. Give fresh water daily. A few rusty nails in the drinking water acts as an excellent tonic.

4. Supply them with ground bone, oyster shells, mortar, lime, sand, etc., all of which are excellent articles for the formation of egg shells. Without the proper food, however, a hen lays regularly.—[Wisconsin Agriculturist.]

Pruning Grape-vines.
A proper balance of the vital forces, a due consideration of the vitality and capacity of the vines is of great importance. The development of fruit is where the strain comes and the impatience and haste to get fruit quickly, and plenty of it, are the prime causes of failure. Vines are allowed to overbear, especially young ones. The demands of the fruit exceed the ability of the vine to supply them. The new wood near the base of the vines is robbed by the excessive demands of its more vigorous neighbor beyond, and, failing to ripen, death is the inevitable consequence. In a few years, if not checked, the fruit-bearing wood at the top of the trellis or at the extremity of the vines. On account of the foregoing considerations, Mr. E. Williams of Montclair, N. J., Secretary of the New Jersey Horticultural Society, advises the novice to bear in mind a few facts and principles before attempting to prune a vine.

First—That, as a general rule, the fruit-bearing canes of this year are grown from buds on last year's canes; in other words, the wood of this year contains the buds which produce the fruitful canes of next year.

Second—That the fruit buds differ from wood buds only because of better development.

Third—That a cluster is a fruitful tendril, and that the ordinary capacity of a fruitful bud is to develop, on an average, two or three of these fruitful tendrils, or, as commonly expressed, clusters of fruit. There are, however, exceptions to this rule, notably, five or six clusters on a cane of the Elvira being quite common.

Fourth—That the tendency of the sap is to the extremity of the vine; that the straighter the cane the more rapid the growth, and the strongest growth from a pruned cane will generally be found near the end.

Fifth—That it is an easy matter to overtax a young vine by endeavoring to make it produce and ripen more fruit than it is capable of doing. A young vine cannot yield the crop that an older, mature vine can without injury, any more than a young boy or girl can do the work of an adult, and it is as unreasonable to expect it in the one case as in the other.—[New York World.]

Farm and Garden Notes.
Handle a hog properly and it will be the largest of your profitable animals on the farm.

A common hog, straightened out by a blacksmith, makes a cheap and excellent implement for chopping roots for stock.

Bees should not be allowed to find honey outside the hive, as it incites robbing, and causes them to attack people.

One barn large enough for all is better than several smaller ones. Have everything under one roof, and have it well insulated.

Secretary Goodman, of the Missouri Horticultural Society, says a good load is worth $10 in a garden as an insect destroyer.

Whether prices be up or down, prime muttons are always salable, and at good prices. The markets are never supplied with choice mutton.

Old bones, old boots, leather scraps and rags are excellent for placing in the holes intended for grape vines. It is a safe mode of getting them out of the way and also renders them serviceable. They may be of very little value at first, but sooner or later they will furnish plant food.

Song of the Sea Wind.
How it sings, sings, sings,
Blowing softly from the sea line,
With an edge of salt that stings;
How it laughs and splashes,
As it cuts the foam off grass;
How it sings and whistles,
How it sings, sings, sings—
How it stings!

How it cracks, cracks, cracks,
In the cracks of the sea line,
In the cracks of the sea line,
How it cracks, cracks, cracks,
Up the yellow foam in patches;
How it whistles it out and over,
How it cracks, cracks, cracks—
How it stings!

How it roars, roars, roars,
In the iron under caverns,
In the hollows of the shore;
How it roars and thunders,
As the strong billows and madders;
And the stout sea-monsters drive,
On the red low rent and riven—
How it roars!

How it wails, wails, wails,
In the tangle of the wreckage,
In the tangle of the wreckage,
How it wails, wails, wails,
And a tired child after chiding;
And across the ground well rolling,
You can hear the hull-bow tolling—
How it wails!

HUMOROUS.
A slip of the pen—A young porter. High and dry—A tall Kentuckian. Only a question of time—asking the hour. Some men take life easy. It is simply meet and drink with them. The woman that maketh a good pudding in silence is better than she who maketh a tart reply. Out in Manitoba they put the thermometer in the oven to keep it from going down out of sight. Judge to the plaintiff: "Who was present when the defendant knocked you down?" Plaintiff: "I was!" There is said to be a tree in New Guinea which, when touched, knocks a man down. It must be a species of boxwood.

A merchant said to a farmer: "A dollar will go further than it used to." "Yes," the farmer quickly replied, "and it makes the distance in quicker time."

"See in the paper that three tons of yarn are yearly used in the manufacture of baseballs," observed Fangle. "I suppose that is the reason so many clubs get worried," replied Spooner.

A little city boy who had just returned from his first visit to a farm, gave the description of butter-making: "You ought to just see how nasty makes butter with a barrel and a broomstick!"

A Horse Deal in Perin.
Having occasion to buy a horse when in Shiraz some few days ago I sent for Zeringe, the dealer, who informed me the description I gave him and which he swore by the beard of the prophet he had bought for £20. The animal was brought round, and, proving satisfactory, I offered him £10, at which he mounted and rode off in a high doggon. I turned in knowing that I should see the horse in an early hour my servant informed me the horse dealer wished to see me. I went out to him and with many protestations of respect and regard he confidentially murmured that the horse having been evidently been procured for me, Providence, he would prefer £3 for my sake, that I might have the horse for £25. This I told him was ridiculous, but as I thought on consideration my first offer was perhaps a little too low for such a good horse, I now offered him £13, which he refused, declaring that his father would return from his grave if he sold the horse at such a low price. For two days I saw no more of Zeringe, on the third day he came again, and saying he was thirdly pressed for cash, or nothing would persuade him to do such a thing, he would sell the horse at the very low possible price he would not be induced to take, viz., £25, but he would sell the horse at such a low price. At this I pretended to be very angry and fired him out, declaring that I would not buy the horse at any price. But privately telling my servant to buy him for £20, this had the desired effect, and on the 23rd morning the horse was mine for £20 and a present of five shillings.—[Detroit Free Press.]

The Coast of Norway.
Whether you sail along the coast or ride in carriages over the Norwegian roads, there is constantly something that is curious and interesting presenting itself. The sea seems alive with fish, particularly cod. You meet quantities of curious vessels sailing from the north to Bergen, the great fish depot, with their holds full of dry fish and the deck piled up from fifteen or twenty feet above the bulwarks with what looks at a distance like boards, but which on approaching you find to be the dry cod piled so high the steersman sits high up so to see over the dry fish. Herring are got in fabulous quantities.

A Fruitful Fruit.
A lady dyspeptic was bewailing his own misfortunes, and speaking with a friend on the latter's hearty appearance. "What do you do to make you so strong and healthy?" inquired the dyspeptic. "Live on fruit alone," answered his friend. "What kind of fruit?" "The fruit of industry," without the least ruffled with indignation.—[Health Journal.]

Sweets to the Sweet.
"Do you believe in witchcraft, Mr. Posenbury?" asked Laura. "I was an unbeliever, Miss Laura, until I met you," responded Posenbury.

SHIRAZ
THE WIND GOES BOBBING
Over the water
Far in the field and that door
White and still, beyond trees and hedges,
Lies the foolish lamb that strays from the White overhead, from its front branch,
With a tender pop, true and staunch,
Thus sings the robin:
The wind blows, heavy
To-day it is, but to-morrow,
I'll sing one tune or two
For the little lamb that never grew old,
Never tired of long winters to roam,
Chanting from empty laughs like me,
Laughs one to the other.

LADIES' DEPARTMENT.
Dressing the Hair.
In the collars there is generally no parting at all, it is turned up and slightly pulled out, as in the Marie Antoinette style. The hair is twisted and arranged into a loop which is fastened in the middle of the head, and the rest of the hair is fastened into a roll at the back, a little to the left. It is very simple, but requires great care in arranging the hair at the back of the neck. This should be done rather loosely, and when the collars are finished the hair should be well rolled up with the comb and left hand, and fastened here and there with hairpins. For this purpose the girl pins are generally used, and look much prettier than the black ones.

The French Maid's First Ball.
It was in the dressing-room when the grand ball was about to come to an end, and sleepy maids were wringing up beautiful girls in white opera cloaks and beauteous frocks, that Olympia rushed in. Her red lips smiled, her blue eyes shone like a quiver. She was the first to arrive, and she was the first to leave. She was the first to arrive, and she was the first to leave. She was the first to arrive, and she was the first to leave.

A SUCCESSFUL RUSE.
"I can't stand this any longer, Kitty; this suspense is wearing out my life. I mean to have a talk with your father, this very night and know what he thinks of it."
"You never would let him know that I'm in love with you," said Kitty, looking up at her father's clouded and resolute face.

Character in the Hair.
If the color is not to be taken as an index, the habitual appearance is a safe guide to at least a few points of character.
