ADVERTISEMENT.

THE present volume completes the Addenda to the Calendars already published of the Domestic State Papers of Edward VI., Mary, Elizabeth, and James I. The bulk of the volume precludes space for prefatory notices. Suffice it to say, that these Calendars, with their Addenda, include all the historic material of the period hitherto discovered in the Public Record Office, and the searches have been so exhaustive as to leave no probability of further discoveries of importance. The Domestic Calendars may, therefore, be considered as completed from 1547 to 1625.

DOMESTIC PAPERS—ADDENDA.

VOL. XXVII. 1580.

Jan. 1. Southampton. 1. John Croke to Lord Burghley. The master of my bark just arrived, leaving Alleretho in Biscay 16 Dec., spoke with an Irish captain of two Spanish barks at the Groyne, laden with calivers and pikes for Dingle, in Ireland. He said that there was at Lisbon an Irish bishop, in an argosy of 300 tons, bound for Ireland, set forth by the Pope; also that at the Groyne were 12,000 soldiers bound for Andalusia, where galleys were provided to go within the Straits. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page.]
- Jan. 10. Durham. 2. John Wentworth to Lord Burghley. Being informed by the bearer, George Seaman, that there is a commission directed out of the Court of Wards and Liveries to myself and three others, to examine witnesses in a cause depending there between Nicholas Hare, as committee of Thomas Rouse and himself, which is to be sat upon the 25th of this month, I am earnestly required by Seaman to advertise you that my occasion is such, by reason of my attendance at the term, that I cannot keep that day, and Downing, his other commissioner, is also not at liberty. The like commission was awarded last Trinity term, when both I and Downing were ready to do our duty, but it was then stayed. I therefore beg your letter to stay the other Commissioners for this time. [$\frac{1}{2}$ page.]
- Jan. 30. 3. Decree in a suit between Humph. Wickham, plaintiff, and Thos. Stemp, warden of New College, near Winchester, and Martin Culpepper, warden of New College, Oxford, defendants, by consent of the latter, and of Thos. Lark, subwarden of Winchester college; that on request of the plaintiff, his two younger sons, Thomas and Ferdinand, be admitted to Winchester college, thence preferred to New College, and there admitted as of the blood of the founder, but without any special prerogatives, or confessing that they are of the same blood. Also that every heir apparent of the plaintiff, or of one of his brothers, for four descents, be admitted into the colleges as ordinary scholars or fellows, but all others of his heirs or descendents renounce any benefits growing to them as of the blood of the founder. [$1\frac{1}{4}$ pages.]

VOL. XXVII.

Feb. 4. Ludham. 4. Edmund Bishop of Norwich to Lord Burghley. Robert de Graie, gent., was committed for matters of religion by you and the Council, in the progress at Norwich, and since removed by reason of the plague to a place in the country, where he still remains prisoner. There has of late been a privy seal served upon him to appear personally in the Court of Wards, so I send him up, having dispensed with the condition of his bond entered for his being true prisoner, so that he returns to his place of durance after his said appearance, unless otherwise disposed of by you. [$\frac{2}{3}$ page.]
- Feb. 13. 5. Bond in 100*l.* by Josias Brand of Ipswich, merchant, to Geo. Stoddard, grocer of London in 100*l.* The condition is that—Her Majesty having granted licence under the great seal to John Foxhall, merchant of London, and his assigns, to buy and export a quantity of grain,—Stoddard by virtue thereof, and in consideration of certain sums paid him by Brand, grants him licence, during the continuance of his own licence, to buy and export from Norfolk 200 quarters of wheat; and for further security to Brand, has committed to his custody a letter dated 8 Feb. inst., subscribed by five members of Council, and directed to the Commissioners for the restraint of grain in Norfolk. If Brand does not infringe upon his licence by shipping more than the said 200 quarters, and returns such letter to Stoddard within 28 days from the date of this bond, in good condition, the bond to be void.
- With note that Stoddard is contented for 300 quarters more, residue of 500 quarters, that Brand sell the licence for 200 quarters, at 5*s.* a quarter, and for 100 quarters at a noble a quarter. Signed by Stoddard. [1 sheet.] Annexing,
5. 1. Receipt by George Stoddard, citizen and grocer of London, from Josias Brand of Ipswich, for a letter signed by five of the Council, according to the tenor above named.
[$\frac{2}{3}$ page.] 3 March 1580.
- Feb. 21. 6. Account of expenses incurred for labour and materials in repairing the Lock at Waltham Holy Cross, between 18 May and 30 June 1579, with the names of the persons employed, and amount of wages paid to each; total, 56*l.* 6*s.* 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Also warrant from Lord Burghley to the auditor [of the Exchequer] to allow the amount to Mr. Glascock, feodary for Essex. [Book of 17 written and 19 blank pages.]
- Feb. 26. Guernsey. 7. Bailiff and Jurats of Guernsey to Council. We will observe your orders on the complaints of the inhabitants, and also in not debarring the inhabitants from appealing to you. We have proceeded uprightly without malice. You bid us liberate Nich. Carey, though John de Vic, the bearer of your letters, enticed by his father-in-law, Nich. Carey, tried to suppress them, to bring us into your displeasure. You ask the cause of his imprisonment. It arose from an action of debt, brought by James Guille, a jurat, against

VOL. XXVII.

Carey who, being angry, called him thief, and when required to prove his words, accused him of detaining a rent of wheat from the Queen; failing to prove this, he was fined 20 nobles to the Queen, and 20 to the party offended. He appealed to the Queen and you, and as no appeals had before been permitted in such cases, we imprisoned him for so doing.

Pray let us know whether all appeals are to be permitted; we think that the punishment of offenders, and matters of small moment should not admit of appeals. Carey has spoken very contemptuously of the Bailiff and Jurats. We crave your directions. [3 pages, 10 signatures.] Annexing,

7. I. Petition of Nich. Carey of Guernsey to Sec. Walsingham. You have taken in hand the injustice done me by the bailiff, jurats, and procurer of Guernsey, on account of my having said that James Guille had defrauded Her Majesty of her corn rents due for the fee of Allians, and as on my supplication to Council, a privy seal was ordered to be sent to Sir Thos. Leighton, summoning the bailiff and Jas. Guille to answer the said complaint, Hen. Beauvoir, jurat, and Louis de Vic being now here, I beg that before they leave the kingdom, they may answer for the wrongs done me. [$\frac{1}{2}$ page, French].
7. II. Petition of Hen. Beauvoir to Council, on behalf of William Beauvoir, bailiff, and James Guille, jurat of Guernsey. Nicholas Carey, a jurat, has on a complaint obtained a writ for their appearance, and an order to Sir Thos. Leighton to send them. Hearing this at Southampton, wishes to declare as an impediment that they are very old men, and by reason of sickness unable to travel; begs that he may be permitted to appear for them, and that their Lordships will have the matter debated before them, the Queen's procurer being also here, or else send a commission into the country thereon. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page.]
7. III. Petition of Nicholas Carey to Council. The supplication of Henry Beauvoir, jurat of Guernsey,—showing that his brother the bailiff and James Guille are not able through sickness to appear before you on the summons you granted me for them,—is untrue. Henry Beauvoir, with the rest of the justices, imprisoned your orator, discharged Guille of the rent he owes to the Queen, and condemned him to a fine for maintaining her right. Requests his detention till the bailiff and Guille can come. [$\frac{1}{2}$ page.]
7. IV. Petition of Nicholas Carey and James Le Fevre, jurats of Guernsey, to Council for release, having been absent from their homes and imprisoned in the Marshalsea seven months, and spent all their means. [$\frac{1}{3}$ page.]

8. Articles to be answered by the Bailiff and Jurats of the island of [Guernsey?], and their answers, viz :—

1. Against an evidence, under the seal of the island, concerning sale of rents or lands to a man and his heirs, no hereditary condition other than comprised in the evidence can be admitted by proof; but if the condition be not hereditary, it is not usually stated in the evidence, and witnesses that it is so agreed suffice.

2. No appeal against sentences of the Bailiff and Jurats is permitted but by consent of both parties.

3 and 4. Statement of cases in which men ought not to appeal from a less to a greater number of jurats. Whosoever does then so appeal should be admonished to desist, and if he will not, imprisoned until he do desist, according to the usage of the island, time out of mind. [1½ pages.]

9. Chris. Hodgson to L. Johnson. It was not as Mr. Johnson that I addressed you, but as my father who brought me out of Egypt and slavery. If a man is not plain with you, he does not love you; and if a man is not so with another, it is either because he is afraid to displease, which is not love but fear, or because he looks for some commodity from him, which is also not love but courtesy. Whosoever I said therefore came of love, and if I said you had forgotten me, it was because I thought so, and that I might get you to write. I am sorry I was so vehement. I doubt not you will interpret both what I have said and now say, and pray God to speed you. I mean to adventure the best joint I have with you one day. I do not desire you to help my parents, as they do not need it. I have sent you 1,000 grains, five gilded crosses, the pardon whereof the bearer will tell you, and three Agnus Deis. I have sent you all I could get, as I shall not have so good an occasion hereafter. [1 page.]

Guernsey.

10. Sir Thomas Leighton to Sec. Walsingham. There has been an attempt by those of Brouage to surprise the Isle of Rhé, but they were repulsed by M. de Soyion, who commands there. Then they tried to take a rich prize, but missed. M. de Rohan is gone to Rochelle; Monsieur is at Angiers, very sick.

Eight days after my arrival in my charge, the two worst jurats died, and men think they broke their hearts through shame and fear; others look as though they would hang themselves. [1 page.]

11. "The names of the Queen's Majesty's subjects being and having been very lately in these parts of France, besides those that be merchants and trade to and fro :—68 in Paris, and the servants of several; 47 in Rouen; 17 in Orleans; 8 in Nantes; 31 in Rheims; 2 in Cambray; 3 in Lyons; 6 in Douay; 52 in Rome; and 7 in Milan. Also "The names of such as are in the college at Rome, to whom the Pope gives 3,000 crowns yearly for their maintenance," 52; besides 30 Italians who have the governance. Names of six priests sent to England, 28 Oct.; and of 14 that came from Rome 25 Feb., proposing to go to England, all of whom have money given. [3½ pages, damaged.]

VOL. XXVII.

 May 5. The Groyne. 12. Thos. Saunders to his father, Rob. Saunders, clothier, Tavistock. I beg your daily blessing, more worth to me than any wordly treasure. A ship of Fowey was in great trouble at Cork Avyonne in Spain; the owners could not get discharge, but they came to me at the Groyne, and by aid of my friends, I freed them from trouble. I lent John Synde of Saltash 40s.; I send you his letter. All this war that is in Spain is for England. Come hither to me, and you shall see the suddenest plague fall upon England that ever fell upon any country. Come this summer or autumn, and I will load your ships back with oranges, and pay your freight. I am well beloved here.
 P.S.—Tell Robert that if he had made haste here, as I bade him, he would have gained 100*l.*; pilchards were worth 35 ryals. [1 page.]
- May 9. Hampton. 13. Denis Rouse to Laurence Tomson, secretary of Sir Fras. Walsingham, London. I desire your help touching the appeal for Jersey. I have sent there for a copy of such a commission as I demanded. Pray procure it, or the poor man who trusts in me will be deceived, and make the men I named commissioners. The bearer shall content you for the charges and your pains.
 P.S.—Please to deliver it and the evidence to the bearer, Miles Carey. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page.]
- May 19. York. 14. Henry Earl of Huntingdon to the Earl of Leicester. I perceive by your letters that what is expected by many here and much feared by others is not so far concluded as is reported. I wish you may never have cause to alter your opinion, and your letters make me hope well.
 I am going to-day towards Richmond, to see the muster of the people, as I have heard of a great and sudden declining of many in those parts, and I purpose to stay all Whitsunday, because most of the gentlemen there will attend me, of whom I mind to make trial as to how many will refuse my company at the church: for I hear that on Whitsunday, the parson there uses always to administer the communion, and God willing, I have a mind to be a partaker.
 You know that Richmondshire was a shrewd place at the late rebellion, for though the beginning was about Ripon, yet most of the people the Earls had with them were of Richmondshire. I hope the warning they then had will make them take heed how they enter again into any disobedient course. Duty binds me to do what in me lies, and this occasion may be some furtherance, or else having been 10 days past in physick, I should be loath to take the journey so soon.
 I will, as you desired me, impart anything I hear concerning you, but that matter which causes you thus to write is not worth speaking of, and yet I think you should know it; but I have a mind to learn all the truth first.
 P.S.—I was glad that Her Majesty stayed your journey to Wilton, as your stay in Court was never so needful for you as now. No

Commission by Sir Ralph Hayward and George Barnes, aldermen, governors of the company of English merchants for the discovery of new trades, to Arthur Pett and Chas. Jackman, for a voyage by them to be made for the discovery of Cathay. [Dom. Eliz., Vol. CXC., ff. 123–130. Copy. Printed in Hakluyt, Vol. I., pp. 487–490.]

The Court.

15. Sec. Walsingham to Dr. Dale and Thos. Sackford, masters of Requests. There is a controversy between Edw. Bowes, master of the Queen's game in Paris garden, and Diggs and Cape, about a lease of ground in the garden. It was equitably decided in Council, but renewed before the King's Bench, and Diggs and Cape, gaining the cause, disturb Bowes and the quiet of the game; but Bowes exhibiting a bill in your Court, it was enjoined, if the others went to law, they should do nothing to disturb Bowes till you had heard the case at large. They fear your impartiality, so wish to revert to common law; but I entreat you to have the cause before you, to prevent such quarrels as have happened, to the hurt and danger of life of many thereabouts. [1 page.]

May ?

The Queen to the Chapter of Winchester. We recommend you to elect John Watson, now dean in that church, to the bishopric, in place of Bishop Horne, deceased. [Warrant Book I., p. 86. Bishop Watson's election took place 29 June 1580.]

May ?

16. ——— to Sec. Walsingham, at Court. On my landing six days ago, I wrote to tell you I had found the man who brought the news of the arrival of Mr. Drake. I am at your service; having finished my business, I go to-morrow to Weymouth. I have bound Robert Giles of Dartmouth, before Mr. John Weston, in 200*l.* to appear before the Court of Admiralty, to answer touching a barrel of cochineal he had of Clinton Atkinson. His surety is Gilbert Peppet, marshal of the Admiralty here, who, instead of aiding us as an official to gain our own, has always supported Giles, or we should have had our cochineal before. I think he will come to defend him, for he has said I shall never have the cochineal, and that in this affair we have had more favour than any stranger ever had in this kingdom. Peppet merits punishment as much as Clinton. He has taken 20 days for appearance, hoping that meanwhile Clinton may be implicated, and he may be able to defend Giles, as only having bought the cochineal in Dartmouth. When Giles appears, pray let the Admiralty judge detain him till we come. [2 pages, imperfect, Italian.]

17. [W. Parry] to Lord Burghley. If Strong, the Irishman, had been lately taken in England (and he narrowly escaped, being thought a Spaniard by his complexion) something would have been found worth discovering. His example has made Welsh, a priest, more wary, and within these few days he has sought means to pass; but missing, returned to Paris, where he yet remains; he intends shortly to go by long sea to Waterford. He came lately from Rome, with charge to make haste into Ireland, but through England if it might be.

If good words or fair promises will persuade the Earl of Kildare to enter the service against Her Majesty, or at least to serve coldly, it will be attempted. Welsh has instructions to deal with Sir Patrick Welsh of Waterford, and some principal men, to like purpose. If Her Majesty would increase her forces in Ireland with some speedy and extraordinary charge, it is feared Desmond would come in, or soon be overthrown. The Earl of Ormond's forwardness is greatly disliked, and yet they commend his faith and constancy to the Crown.

The Bishop of St. Asaph and his company are come to Rheims. By letters from Rome of 16 May, I perceive the Catholics are greatly comforted in that Her Majesty would write to any man there, as she did lately to Cardinal Sforza and Cardinal Como, and promised Monsieur to write to the Pope in favour of Palavicino. The Cardinals have command to satisfy her for the manner and cause of Palavicino's imprisonment; but whatever good words are given, or upon what condition soever he is discharged, it is meant he shall be forthcoming upon sureties, until the Pope and his farmers for the alum are satisfied in their demands. [$1\frac{3}{4}$ pages.]

June 7.
Nonsuch.

[Sec. Walsingham] to the Earl of Huntingdon. I send you an Admiralty commission, authorising the officers of Newcastle to set forth a ship to apprehend pirates haunting those quarters. I wish it may take effect, as some Englishmen are committing spoils, and lurking about the coasts of Suffolk.

The Queen, hearing of the backwardness of her Lancashire subjects to embrace religion, has sent an ecclesiastical commission to the Bishop of Chester, Lord Derby, yourself, and others, to bring them to more dutiful minds, and take order for the strength of that county. You will have notice when the commissioners meet, and you will not fail to repair to assist them in execution of the said commission. [Dom., Eliz. Vol. XLV., p. 75.]

June 12.
Russell House.

18. Francis Earl of Bedford to Mr. Sackford and Mr. Dale, masters of Requests. Mr. Tregosse having, by means of Sir John Killigrew, been hardly handled at the hands of Laurence Rescadden, of whom he bought lands, the title whereof is to be tried before you this term, I beg you to favour him for my sake, as he is my very friend. [$\frac{2}{3}$ page.]

June 26.

19. List of [12 fellows in Christ's college, Cambridge], showing those who are with the master, Dr. Hawford, for Osborn, and those against him for [Edward] Negus, candidates for a vacant fellowship. With notes of four others, non-residents. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page, in Burghley's hand. See Dom. Eliz., Vol. CXXXIX., No. 27.]

20. John Amyas to his brother, Richard Amyas, leather seller, at the Angel, near St. Martin's gate, in the upper end of Cheapside, London. I sent you a letter from Paris not long after my departure, and others to be delivered in Lancashire, but I have not heard of their receipt, nor whether you have recovered your sickness. I shall not be at quietness until I hear how you are, therefore certify me by letter, and deliver it to Mr. Eden, attorney of the Guildhall, who will get it conveyed to me, for his son and I are bedfellows in Paris. I trust you have already answered my last, for I told you that if you delivered your letter to one Owenson Viserdine, Italian merchant in Mark Lane, and directed to Mr. Covert, of Mignon College, Paris, where I live, I should hear from you; but write upon the back for John Amyas, for so they have my name, otherwise it would not come to hand. Send me $2\frac{3}{4}$ yards of rat-coloured cloth, at 10s. a yard, to make me a cloak, and deliver it to Mr. Eden to send to me when he sends other things, and I will pay the carriage. Commend me to my sister Bess, her Mother's little Jo., with my friend Mr. Clement. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page. See Dom. Eliz., Vol. CXXXIX., Nos. 10, 11.]

June ?

21. Memoranda [by Burghley] of things to be considered. Three ships and troops to be sent to Ireland; with note of the charges for coat and conduct money, transport, victualling, &c.

That the deprived ecclesiastical Papists in England be collected and sent to castles, as Wisbeach and Banbury; that lay recusants on bond be sent for by the Commissioners, and bestowed under some guard in London; that their armour be seized. That all such as will not come to church be fined and imprisoned, by virtue of the ecclesiastical commission.

Proclamation against new buildings in London. Lord Hunsdon to go to his charge, and so to visit the King of Scots. Earl of Morton's party to be maintained. [$1\frac{3}{4}$ pages.]

June ?

22. Petition of Henry Beauvoir, of Guernsey, to Sec. Walsingham. Being in attendance on Council, about an untrue complaint of Nich. Carey against Wm. Beauvoir and James Guille, was assaulted in the street, near Charing Cross, by Nicholas Carey, who struck him, and threatened to cut off his ears, without any provocation given. Carey was not, as he says, imprisoned for showing Her Majesty's right, but for disorderly conduct in Court, when condemned in an action of debt; abusing his antagonist, and then failing to verify his accusation, for which he was fined 20 marks. Requests leave to answer more fully in behalf of Beauvoir and Guille, and to take advantage of the laws against Carey for assaulting him. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page.]

June ?

23. Petition of the inhabitants of the parishes of our Lady Castle, St. Saviour, St. Peter du Bois, and St. Sampson, Guernsey, to Council. On 12 Sept. last, Her Majesty granted a commission for inquiry into the administration of justice, and the commissioners called a jury, who examined the inhabitants, and found many grievances in the island, which they laid before the commissioners in articles; but no reformation has ensued, and matters grow worse. Were coming over to complain to the Queen and Council, when they were, by command of the Captain, placed in confinement in fetters. Beg reformation of their complaints, the inhabitants fearing that by breach of their ancient privileges, they shall be obliged to quit the island. Request that their cause and that of St. Peter's port parish may be committed to the same commissioners. [1 page.]

VOL. XXVII.

July 15.

24. Notes of a conversation that took place in the house of Hyllery, merchant of London, in presence of Hugh Perrin of Jersey, and Nicholas his son, and others of Guernsey. Louis De Vic said how happy and profitable it were for the people to live in due obedience and peace among themselves. Edm. Estur said it were wise for us to unite to defend our liberties, and good not only for ourselves but our children. Nich. Petvine said we ought to follow the example of the French. When the English were at Newhaven, and France in miserable state, the King warring against the Admiral and other noblemen, yet when the question was of their liberties and safety of their country, they fought against the strangers, and drove them out of Newhaven. De Vic said the similitude was not good, and Petvine bade him amend it. [1 page. Endorsed "Complaint against Estur and Petvine for words."]

July 20.
Paris.

25. Wm. Parry to Lord Burghley. The opinion I had of Mr. Copley's honourable descent, well warranted by the officers-at-arms in England, with testimony under seal of his right to a barony, made me the bolder to give him the honour of his French creation, which I will by your example forbear, until it shall please Her Majesty to make him happy.

I found him very glad of the continuance of your friendly mind towards him, and ready thankfully to acknowledge whatsoever good you meant him. But he takes very gricvously that Her Majesty, to whom he always protested loyalty, should conceive such mislike of him, and says that if all his demonstrations of loyalty had been truly delivered to her, she would have thought better of him; yet no cross shall make him undutiful to her in whose service he desires to employ his life, and whatever ability 47 years' experience has bred in him. If she command him to withdraw from foreign service, or confine himself to any Catholic state,—either for her public service, or to pass a retired life,—he is content to do so; I find him sufficient for the one as the other. He seems to mean good, and Her Majesty may with honour take this occasion to exercise her clemency towards him. He has erred, and is penitent. It would be a pity, by rejecting his suit, to drive him to despair of returning, and strange to see such a man lack, whose credit on this side for anything needs no repair. Writing to the Prince of Parma for 200 ducats, to perform his journey to Spain, as the unexpected charge of his eldest son's sickness and funeral had taken his provision, he had an order for double what he demanded. If these or

VOL. XXVII.

1580. any other considerations may move you to procure his happy return, Her Majesty will never repent her grace, nor you your pains and travail. [3 pages.]
- July 21. 26. Nicholas Martin, and five other jurats of Guernsey, to Council.
Guernsey. We with Sir Thos. Leighton have determined as you ordered us, the cause of Thomas Ourey, he accepting us as judges; and finding that his father, he, and his aunt had sold their right to their lands in this isle to the defendants, we have given sentence against him, on which he has appealed to the Queen and your Lordships. We therefore send you a copy of the proceedings. [1 page.]
- July 30. 27. W. Parry to Lord Burghley. I could not with modesty have Paris. looked for so ample an explanation of your long silence, and yet I could hardly spare one line. At my first coming over, it was strange to me, in so dangerous a time, to adventure by doubtful hands the carriage of my letters, but I have now learned to be more hardy, and to make a difference of my services. In answering such of mine as contain matter justifiable in reputation, pray write by ordinary means; but for such letters or instructions as by interception may turn to my danger, be careful of me. If my advices do not under my name pass beyond Her Majesty and your hands, I have my desire, for as I will not willingly offend any in Court, so shall it not cost me a quill to gain the favour of any third. I will use Her Majesty's warrant and your favour as shall become me. I have no means to send so often as I would, as you may see by the days noted in the margin.
- 15th. The hope conceived in Rome by the continuance, upon so honorable an occasion, of that which may prove well begun by Her Majesty is well worth the entertaining. Cardinal Sforza not many days since secretly discovered his great desire to please Her Majesty, and will, if he be well followed, do the same grateful service.
- 17th. There is a slanderous book secretly printed in this town, one of which has been promised me by Julio Busini, the Italian, not unlike the treatise of treasons, in requital of that which was written against Monsieur and his ministers in England, and the lives of the Earl of Leicester and Sir Chr. Hatton are added.
- 19th. The book published by the Bishop of Ross, De titulo et jure Mariæ Reginae Scotorum, and here by his order openly sold since his going to Rouen, has greatly offended the best advised of that faction, especially the Scotch Ambassador, who misliking the Bishop's unreasonable proceedings, wished his zeal had more discretion.
- 20th. Dr. Allen, mistrusting the good speed of the clergy, arrived in England, and finding some of the best begin to stagger, contrary to their promises to the Pope, sends his letters daily abroad, excusing himself to be no dealer in matters of State, but wholly occupied in the government of the seminary. The Scotch Ambassador received letters from him to that effect, and told me there could be no better fruits looked for from so weak a company, whose ill consents in Rome had shaken their credits, and made every man weary of them.

22nd. Being this day with the Scotch Ambassador, in company of the Earl of Crawford and Lord Hamilton, some speeches passed of the present state of England and Scotland, and of the likelihood of conjunction, if right might take place. Lord Hamilton told me of his troubles, his departure out of Scotland, his possibility to the Crown, and that the Queen of England, contrary to her promise of indifferency, dealt very partially between his name and their adversaries, bewailing his fortune not to find indifferent favour.

25th. This morning the Scotch Ambassador, with very great joy, told me that the French Ambassador in England had sent him of late the greatest hope of Her Majesty's favour towards the Queen, his mistress, that ever she received since her coming into England; that she went to Buxton, and that your Lordship, of whom he often makes very honourable mention, has commandment to write to the Earl of Shrewsbury for her reasonable liberty and honourable usage. He told me that some of Her Majesty's ambassadors had done him wrong, and that for his purgation of all dishonest dealing against her person or state, he could be content to put himself into her hands and mercy. He touched upon Sec. Walsingham's passionate disposition, and spoke of some letters of his that had been intercepted.

27th. This day Timothy Mocket departed hence for Spain, with hope to have his pension continued, and part of his losses repaired.

29th. I hear from Rome that Mr. Owen's son of Godstow, who was in the seminary there, is dead. If the Earl of Westmoreland's humble submission, with repentance of his error, be not offensive to Her Majesty, nor contrary to the policy of the times, I think (by the like examples abroad) it might fall into consideration. 28. William [Chaderton] Bishop of Chester to the Earl of Leicester. I advertise you of the state of this country, that you may partake the hope which the Earl of Huntingdon and I have of reducing Lancashire and Richmondshire to conformity, and to desire your advice in this action, wherein the Earl of Derby is become most zealous and painful, not only through my Lord President's provocation and presence, (a rare man of this age,) but by virtue of Her Majesty's letters lately sent to him, which have given him such encouragement that he will spare neither charge nor pains to further this service.

Lancashire is in some places well reclaimed, for even in the field, where 14 or 15 usually resorted to church, I have at my sermons had above 2,000 attentive hearers. Many gentlemen remain obstinate; although they have received Her Highness' process, they have not appeared, neither, being fined in 40*l.* for their contumacy, have they made submission. The commons in these parts depend much upon them; we therefore intend to proceed against them speedily, and hope in time to reclaim all or most part, especially if we might expel the vagrant priests, and place learned, zealous, and grave professors, at least in the chief towns, wherein we purpose to do our uttermost, and I am sure we shall have the Archbishop of York's furtherance. As for my Lord President, he is more zealous and takes more pains in this reformation than any two Bishops. Pray thank him for his goodness to me, but especially for the zealous pains he has taken in my diocese. He has kindled an earnest zeal in the Earl of Derby towards religion, and reduced a number to good conformity. Make no less account of him than of your own soul, for he loves you dearly. It was full time for Her Majesty to have regard to these countries, not only in respect of religion, but her own honour and safety.

My Lord President and I came together from York on 1 Aug., and sat at Richmond the day after. The country there has been and is far out of order, and the aldermen there told us that they were more afraid these late days than in the time of the former rebellion; and not without cause, for men were very open mouthed, and lived to their own lust. My Lord Derby and I meet at Preston on Wednesday next, to determine further proceedings; we must prosecute this action to the end, or we had better not have begun. This service is painful and very chargeable; if Her Majesty is not gracious for my fruits, I shall never be able to continue it; pray move her to stand my gracious lady. The fruits are very small, and my Lord Treasurer has given me good comfort in his last letters. [2 pages.]

Aug. 15. 29. Receipt by Thomas Reynolds, of Stratford-upon-Avon, for 20*l.* from Sir William Catesby, on account of 60*l.* due as rent for Shottrie meadow, Stratford-upon-Avon; with note that the remaining 40*l.* is to be paid, 20*l.* at Allhallowtide, and 20*l.* at Michaelmas. [$\frac{2}{3}$ page.]

Aug. ? 30. Note addressed to [Lord Burghley] of grievances sustained by the inhabitants of Guernsey. Many have to pay rents due to obits, &c., which rents they had bought of Her Majesty's commissioners, only their letters, though signed, were not sealed. They therefore desire to enjoy their rents. Also they are wronged by a sentence given against them, 6 Dec. 1576, touching campart, which is a twelfth part of the revenue of their lands. Sentence having been given against them, contrary to the law of the island, they request leave to appeal to Council.

Aug. 18. 31. Dr. John Hamond to Laurence Tomson. You ask what I know about letters of conveyance from Her Majesty to the inhabitants of Guernsey of certain rents sold to them. At our being at Guernsey, it was complained that divers persons had bought these rents from the Commissioners, and got letters of conveyance, which were left unsealed, and therefore void, because the Commissioners, falling out among themselves, departed. On our report, the case was examined by the Lord Chief Baron, Attorney and Solicitor General, and myself; we said the poor men should have assurances, and Sir Thos. Leighton assented, provided they contributed to the charge of those who should be sent thither; only he wished Nich. Carey, by whose fraud the rest were abused, not to have assurance. Our answer was written by Mr. Solicitor, on the margin of the report, and from these notes the orders were set down for Peter Carey and others. Since these men were here, they mention the same matter in their complaints, and also the campart, which Mr. Norton and I referred to the committees, and Sir Thos. Leighton thought it reasonable. I wonder they should omit that, as at other times it was specially remembered. [1 page.]

 Bishophthorpe. I need not advertise you of our doings here, for we have certified at large to the Council. We have served painfully, and I trust our labours will take good effect. The Lord President has done great good service, and has deserved thanks. If we may be well assisted, we shall be encouraged to go forward and finish this good work. We labour with all hands, and that will much further the building. [$\frac{1}{2}$ page.]

[Aug.] 33. [The Council] to Lord [Cobham], Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports. Her Majesty, finding the havens of this realm situated on the Narrow Seas utterly decayed, has thought it necessary to have one haven on those parts provided as a harbour for her own and her subjects' ships, and for defence of the realm, and to annoy the enemy. Finding, by a plan recommended by you and taken by men of skill, that no place is so fit as the port of Dover, which without a large contribution cannot be repaired, she has willed us to think upon means to levy a sufficient sum, without overburdening her subjects. As besides the general benefits to the whole realm, particular commodities are specially to ensue to that county of Kent, both for the surety and wealth of the inhabitants, we pray you, both by yourself and other gentlemen, to treat with the wealthy persons of that county; declare to them Her Majesty's gracious intention, the necessity that the realm has of this work, the great benefits generally to arise thereby, the particular good to that county, the travail that has been taken to consider of it, and the likelihood that it may be performed, &c. so as to move them to contribute liberally to this charge. If the contributions arise to some good portion, the work shall proceed, which else might be suspended, and it will be an encouragement to Her Majesty's more abundant liberality, and an inducement to the wealthy of more distant counties to give liberally; if the largeness of the contribution gives encouragement to go forward, the work may the sooner and more amply be attempted.

As delay and want of some present mass, to make present provision of stone, stone-making, &c., against next spring, may lose both this year and another, besides peril of great difficulties which, if they should be lost, the sea and weather might bring, to the overthrow of the work ; and that the other counties may the more speedily be dealt with upon your good example, we pray you not to omit the time of those assizes now at hand ; but when the best of the country shall be assembled, diligently to set forward the service. Pray advertise us speedily what you have done, with the names and sums of every person that shall give. [2 $\frac{3}{4}$ pages, copy.]

34. Notes for Dover harbour. The Commissioners, at their last meeting, agreed upon filling up with bavin the old case of timber built by Henry VIII., being eight roods in length, for the staying of the beach, which must be done before winter, or the plot of the harbour may be in danger. [Thought meet the same should proceed.]

That a commission be granted for taking up artificers, labourers, timber, wood carriages, both by land and sea, spades, shovels, &c., without which that which is presently to be done cannot be performed. [This may be done without commission, until one is signed by Her Majesty.]

That there may be one or two skilful persons for bavin work sent to Dover, before the coming of the Commissioners, or shortly after, as it will be a charge in vain to have them here before. [Order taken to have them presently sent down.]

That five dozen shovels, two dozen pickaxes, spades and scavels, and 50 felling axes and bills be sent out of Her Majesty's stores for present work. [Not thought fit to be moved, as the labourers themselves may provide them.]

That there may be felled, and provision made this winter, of so much wood for stakes and bavin as may serve for the next summer's work, as the country will be unwilling to have the wood felled in unreasonable times. [To be considered of by the Commissioners, after the commission is signed.]

That 200*l.* or 300*l.* be sent down to pay for the same, as also for making bavin and paying the carriage. [Care shall be taken to see that the same is furnished as the necessity of the provision shall require. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ pages. The passages in brackets are marginal notes in another hand.]

35. Petition of the merchants and citizens of Chester to [Council] for relief of their estate, decayed by the spoils of the French, by shipwreck, by decay of the haven, and payments of custom. Request restitution by the French of goods taken from them ; discharge for the present from customs ; for the free citizens', licence to transport calf-skins tanned in the adjoining shires ; that Chester may be made the only port for the trade of Manchester cottons ; a reversion of the Lord Chancellor's licence to import 200 packs of Irish wool yearly ; the sole trade in export of Keswick copper ; and the making of the haven at the Queen's charge. The Queen has not had one Chester ship to serve her affairs to Ireland, but only four of London and Bristol, which came for merchandise, and repented that they came there. [1 page.]

36. Petition of Denis le Roux, of Guernsey, to Council. I had a lease for life from Sir Thomas Leighton, captain of Guernsey, on payment of a fine, of certain lands and rents specified in that island, belonging to him in right of his office, rent 17*l.*; but two years ago, the ministers of the isle took my rent grain and tithes, pretending they belonged to the said lands, and sued me for arrears. The bailiff and jurats would not hear my answer, and I had to petition the captain, who refused to suffer me to enjoy the same. I appealed again to the bailiff and jurats, who would not receive my proofs, so that I am like to lose my right. As Sir T. Leighton is in London, pray call him before you to examine the premises. 37. Dr. John Hamond to Sec. Walsingham. I have considered the case of Denis Roux, and forward my report. When in Guernsey, we examined the complaints, and reported on the facts without giving an opinion, not being commissioned thereto; but we kept notes, and thought that though Roux was a troublesome person, he was hardly dealt with in this case; though they are unskilful in drawing leases, we think that, taking a lease with the same words by which similar leases had passed, he should enjoy as much as others had possessed. [1 page.] Annexing,

37. 1. Dr. Hamond's report of the case of Denis Roux of Guernsey. He was convented before the procurer of Guernsey, for withholding rents due to Her Majesty for the fee Riveaux; the question was whether they belonged to that fee or the fee Suart, but the bailiff and jurats, taking advantage of his submission, gave sentence against him. We who went over examined the ease, and referred it to the Lord Chief Justice and others, who decided that, as it rested on matter of fact and there might be further proof, the sentence should stand unless reversed by appeal. Roux, having in vain requested revocation of the sentence, now appeals. He cannot receive any remedy about this non-reversal, because they could not reverse a sentence whereby a right is grown to another, but Sir Thos. Leighton might have the first sentence re-heard before your delegates; the Queen would not be prejudiced, as Roux's estate is only for the life of Sir T. Leighton. [1 $\frac{1}{4}$ pages.]

38. Petition of Denis Roux, of Guernsey, to Council. Nine years since, was in partnership with Nicholas Saumarez, jurat of Guernsey, who having 700*l.* of petitioner's in his hands, would never account for it, because he is a justice and jurat in the island, as Sir Thos. Leighton can testify. Was obliged to get part of his money of debtors, but is kept from 400*l.* Was also wronged by Saumarez tearing a bill belonging to two strangers, which petitioner had paid for him in his absence, and could get no redress from the bailiff and justices. Was equally wronged by them in reference to the rents of certain lands, and they have broken open and searched his house. Requests that such as are in the city may be summoned before their honours, and ordered to give him speedy redress. [$\frac{2}{3}$ page.]

39. Petition of Denis Roux, of Guernsey, to Council. On 19 Feb. 1578, the bailiffs and jurats of the island passed an erroneous sentence against petitioner, and imprisoned him 31 days in the castle for appealing against it, refusing the bail of his sureties for 500*l.* each, and threatened him with imprisonment for life unless he desisted from his appeal. Lost 200*l.* in shipping, and other business, during his imprisonment, and fearing the worst, was forced to desist from his appeal and yield. Requests them to summon before them Nich. Carey and Hen. Beauvoir, two of the said justices now in London, to answer to the premises. [$\frac{1}{2}$ page.]

40. Answer of Nicholas Martin, Nicholas Carey, and Henry Beauvoir, in the name of the bailiffs and jurats of Guernsey, to the first bill of complaint exhibited to Council by Denis le Roux, late of Guernsey, and now of Southampton.

He complains that—having taken a farm from Sir Thos. Leighton during his life, of certain feaiges, and a mill,—the receiver, procurer, &c. have taken 9 qrs. of wheat as rent, besides tithes, and that he offered to prove before the bailiff and jurats that the rent wheat and tithes were part of the feaiges, but was not allowed. This is true, but the receiver and procurer answered that they ought not to stand to proofs, for Denis had signed a bill of submission to the captain, whereby the matter was remitted from that Court.

Answer to the second bill of complaint :—

He complains that the bailiff and jurats, 19 Feb. 1578, passed an erroneous sentence, and imprisoned him in the castle for appealing to Queen and Council. They reply that they cannot remember things so long since, but that all proceedings are registered in the Court roll, to which they refer. They remember that he impleaded a widow for a sum for house room, which she offered to prove she did not owe, but he brought a submission of a poor man, the widow's attorney, to pay the sum. The widow denied its being made with her consent, and thereupon was allowed to bring her proofs, on which Denis appealed to Queen and Council, and not desisting from his appeal, was sent to prison. They have pronounced no erroneous sentence against him, nor acted maliciously. Request that Council will maintain the state of justice in the island. [2 pages.]

43. Christopher Rokeby to Lord Burghley. Sir Geo. Bowes' death is much to be lamented; he was the surest pillar Her Majesty had in these parts, and I, his friend, and his neighbours think ourselves greatly weakened; but we who are left will stand fast in our duty to Her Majesty. The Lord President is our head under Her Majesty, and will be dutifully obeyed, yet some will have it he has an ill meaning; if he should attempt what many fear, I and my friends may be a block in his way, as he has been in mine, yet I cannot think he will take any enterprise in hand, so long as Her Majesty reigns over us; but I feel greatly afraid if he continue long in this office, he will grow stronger in this country, which he could never have done if Sir Geo. Bowes had lived amongst us. If my cousin, William Bowes, his son, and Mr. Treasurer of Berwick would join with me and our friends, as his father did, we should be a full party, but my Lord President gives Wm. Bowes such good countenance that I fear he will draw him from us; for Mr. Bowes the treasurer is much feathered of the President's wing, and so is many of the best calling in Yorkshire, whereby, if not prevented, he will grow too strong. Yet if we had such an one as the Earl of Northumberland planted in these parts, it would draw most part from him, and we should find him a sure pillar to lean to.

I intend waiting upon you in the term to make an end of my suit, wherein I crave your further help, or my labour can stand me in no stead, and then I shall not be able to keep countenance in my country. My suit is a benefit to Her Majesty, if I may thereby be delivered of my debts, and I trust, with the help of my friends, to stand her in as good stead as any subject she has in the North. meet the Lord Warden of the Middle Marches, and the other Commissioners, on 28 July last; but as we could not then do anything, I returned. I repaired again to Alnwick, 14 Aug., and thence to Berwick, and have continued thereabouts ever since, with assistance of the other Commissioners, in furtherance of the said commission, as by our certificate will appear. I have drawn a plan with articles, which, although not cunningly done, may further the better understanding of our certificate of things necessary to be done, if it be Her Majesty's pleasure to proceed.

P.S.—I must commend the great trouble and diligence of Mr. Delaval and Mr. Gray, my two fellows of the quorum. Having now made certificate touching the East and Middle Marches, we of the quorum shall travel upon the West Borders. In the rating and estimate of decays, some things are set down of very small value, but great care was had not to draw any more charge than needful; yet with what is set down, I dare adventure every decay may be repaired. Also suggestions on the necessity of erecting fortresses on the Borders, between Bewcastle and Woulstrie castle, and of enclosing certain waste lands. 47. Wm. Brereton to the Earl of Leicester. Thanks for your approval of the certificate of our musters. You say you have not shown it to the Lords, as it only has my hand to it. When we received our commission, I travailed myself in perfecting our musters, and brought it to that form of certificate which I sent you; others travailed the usual form of certificate. Thinking the form I sent you the best, and agreeable to your instructions, I would have willingly sent it, but the others would not be removed from their error, and certified in a form which it now appears by your letter you liked not, but have written to us to reform the same. I was unwilling that any travail should be suppressed. I presented you with my certificate that if the others fell out faulty, I might be held blameless for the error committed in it, as you allege; I have examined the copy, and find that the number of able men furnished in that title is just 1,000, as it is in the total of the particulars set down; therefore you must impute the fault to the unskilfulness of the arithmetician, who has set down his figure 1 like a 2.

According to letters from Council, we have assembled and made a book of our horsemen, which you are to receive from our sheriff, but a copy is enclosed. The numbers are 101. Several of our light horse have been lately discharged, but the number is supplied by others. You think our number small, yet if you would compare our doings with other shires, which in quantity and quality far surmount us, you will find us to exceed them. Our country is but little, and our gentlemen but of mean patrimonies, yet no subjects within this realm are more forward in obedience and willingness to further the Queen's service than those of Cheshire.

As for our mares for breed, we have certified the number the law requires at our hands; we find none are chargeable but such as have parks, chases, or inclosed grounds for deer, and many of these daily decay. If some law should be made that every gentleman charged with the keeping of a demi-lance or light horseman might also be charged with the keeping of as many mares for breeding, then our number of mares in Cheshire would be well increased, and consequently the like increase throughout all England, which would raise the breed of horses, now declined. so as to get at the truth; he does not mean to proceed in your Court with the matter, nor that they should answer his bill by their counsel and then be examined, as that would be a way to give them light how to answer the interrogatories, being only grounded upon the bill, and so defraud him and his wife of their right. As you have the two secretaries' hands to his first bill framed to the Council, to call them before you to answer to such matters as he and his wife object against them, let them first answer to the interrogatories in your presence, or there will be no good done with them. Oct. 24. 49. Advertisements from Brittany. An Italian delegate from the Pope arrived at Coutances, and held a synod secretly; it was agreed that the clergy of Lower Normandy should pay the cost of an expedition in the Pope's name against Jersey and Guernsey.

The Bishop of Coutances was the greatest doer, and protested he would never be satisfied until possessed of the isles of Jersey and Guernsey, for they had refused to pay his dues; he hopes the King will favour him underhand, and the clergy say that the Pope's army being in Ireland, now is the time to go forward. Oct. 24. 50. John Gilpin to Mr. Herle. The Earl of Westmoreland is here, and is daily playing tennis with some Spaniards with whom he lodges; his friends secretly give out that he will shortly sail for Spain. I wish John Borne or such another had ships ready. He does all things by the Bishop of Ross's directions, who is here too, and has compiled a pamphlet of his mistress's title to England, and therein set down a large pedigree of Henry VIII.'s line, which cannot but greatly offend our Sovereign. With some of these copies, Marshall, a notable Papist that has house and lands about Newark-upon-Trent, went hence yesterday towards England; it is thought he has letters worth discovering. I wot not where he will lie in London, but judge little Norris knows him well, and will easily find him out, through my Lord of London's help.

Yesterday I was at Gallyon to see a goodly house of the Cardinal of Bourbon, who was there himself, with the old Princess of Condé and her two younger sons; a gentleman of his chamber supped with me, and told me that the Queen Mother and Monsieur, her son, were gone towards Navarre, to treat of a marriage between him and the King's sister there, but I do not believe it.

Travelling between Calais and Abbeville, I met six Spanish merchants, and one of them taking me for an Englishman, asked whence I came; I told him I was a Scotchman from England; then he asked what news I had of my young Prince, I said the Prince was well. "As you passed through England," said he, "I am sure you heard of the Spaniards that are in Ireland." "There are no Spaniards," said I, "but a few Italians lately landed there," when he replied, "Ah, mon ami, sont tous Espaniolls, et entre peu de jours, vous voires beaucoup des autres là, pour chastier la bone

P.S.—I have lately heard that Monsieur is going into the Low Countries, and that the peace is concluded between the King here and the King of Navarre. Soldiers are levied in each country; there are now in villages about this town 23 or 24 companies, so that it is dangerous travelling. The bearer will give you information thereon; we will do our best in defence of our charge. Nov. 8. York. 54. Henry Earl of Huntingdon to the Earl of Leicester. I perceive the bearer is sent for, which gives me hope that at last Scotland will be more regarded than of late. I trust my brother Fr. diligently attends my suit; I hope you will do for me what you may. For want of money to pay, I am content to grant land, and I trust that Her Highness will accept thereof, for I mean to deliver such lands that, if I can hereafter, I would have it again at the same price. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page.]

Nov. 8. 55. Sir Amias Paulet to Council. The bearer, Peter Rocquier, will report his message to you; I am bound to mistrust all that threatens the isle under my charge; but you, knowing the state of our neighbours abroad, may better judge. The Normandy gentleman named is religious and honest. The enterprise against Jersey and Guernsey would require a better captain than the Bishop of Coutances and his clergy, and cannot be executed without the French King.

Our neighbours being armed, the Queen's frontier castles, and fortresses should be provided against all events. Pray entreat her to grant the sparing supplies requested in the bill enclosed, wherein I have regarded her late great charges. It is so long since my last supply from the Tower, that my store is exhausted. [1 page.]

Nov. 11. 56. Nich. Baudoin and five other ministers of Guernsey to Council. A year ago, articles were presented to you, one of which was a request of the people to be discharged of the tithes of their calves, pullets, and lambs, ordered by the governor, bailiff, and jurats, by reason of the small revenue of the benefices, and because the people were discharged from payments for marriages, baptisms, sick visitings, &c. and that they pay the revenue with difficulty, and part is lost through disloyalty. On their promise to supply us some other way, you released them from the said tithes, and referred them to the governor, bailiff, and justices, and assembly of the island; but they have not fulfilled their promise. We are thus reduced to mendicity and the ministry brought to contempt, and we shall be forced to go elsewhere. As the labourer is worthy of his hire, pray order a pension for each of us, according to the number of his children, and means to collect it, either from the people or the parish funds. [1 $\frac{2}{3}$ pages. French.]

57. I. Petition of Henry Beauvoir, in the name of the bailiff and jurats of Guernsey, to Council. The revenues of the benefices of the island chiefly depending on superstitious observances called the rites of the Church, for which each householder paid a good sum yearly, are greatly diminished now that we have godly preachers; so that three of them can scarcely maintain one minister, though he live very moderately. Request that every householder may contribute as before to the support of the pastor. Also that Sir Thos. Leighton and the bailiff and jurats may select six men in every parish, to assess the inhabitants according to the previous rates. Also for himself that being sent on matters relating to the island, his reasonable charges may be defrayed. [1 page.]

57. II. Petition to Council of Henry Beauvoir, appointed by the bailiff and jurats of Guernsey to attend and receive their directions on matters of appeal, &c., to the same effect as the preceding. [$\frac{2}{3}$ page.]

Nov. ? 58. Opinion of Sir Christopher Wray, Jas. Dyer, Roger Manwood, Thos. Gawdy, and Thos. Meade, judges, upon the following questions between the Earl of Rutland and Thomas Markham, touching the forestership of two walks in Sherwood, called Linnhurst and No-mans-wood, co. Notts:—

1. Whether the Earl and those who have been guardians of the same have not, time out of mind, appointed the trustees? Ans., The Earl has so affirmed the usage, and shown that ever since 1 Hen. VII. like patents to his own were made; how the usage was before is matter for a jury; but in law, if it has been as the Earl alleges, the appointment belongs to him.

2. Whether by Her Majesty's patent so granted to the Earl, he may not appoint the nine foresters during his life, and whether Her Majesty is not thereby excluded from so doing, though no usage had existed? Ans., Yes.

3. Whether the Earl may be a justice and guardian of the forest? Ans., He may, and both offices may be in one person.

On behalf of Markham:

1. Whether the forestership of the two walks belong to the keeping of Linnhurst wood and No-mans-wood? Ans., Not of common right; but if usage has so existed time out of mind, it must be tried by the county.

2. Whether by the grant of the forestership of the parks of Billaigh, Birkland, Romewood, and Owseland, and of the game there, the foresterships or the keeping of the game did not pass to Markham? Ans. No foresterships of the game of the forest can pass thereby, but only the keeping of the parks or woods; and though the offices of forestership were then in Her Majesty's disposition, yet Mr. Markham cannot claim them by his patent. [1 page, signed by all the said judges.]

59. Decree in a controversy between the Earl of Rutland and Thomas Markham, for four offices or walks, and the charge of game in Sherwood forest. Thos. Markham has enjoyed two of them for many years, as Her Majesty's free gift, and the other two by a grant of Edward VI. for service in the wars. Her Majesty, with consent of both parties, directed that their claims should be heard by the Lord Chancellor [Bromley], the Master of the Rolls, and the Attorney-General, and that his Lordship should report their opinion. This matter having been heard, it was agreed upon for law that the free disposition of such walks as touch the keeping of the game rested only in Her Majesty, and not in the Earl.

Since then Her Majesty has been pleased that certain of her judges should also give their opinion, and they having done so, and it being contrary to that of the others, Her Majesty assumed the judgment into her own hands,—as to whom in all right it appertaineth,—and absolutely commands that for such walks as were granted by her brother to her servant Thomas Markham, he shall receive such favourable construction as the meaning of his patent shall require, with such relief for holding them as Her Majesty's title can yield him, without injury to the Earl; and for the walks of Billaigh and Birkland, Romewood and Owseland, which are of her own grant, that her said old servant shall quietly enjoy them, as well for the keeping of the game as the woods, with all fees and arrearages thereof, according to her free gift and meaning, which she is best able to expound. [1 sheet, draft.]

60. E[dmund] C[ampion] to [Dr. Allen?]. Having been here five months, I write you what has happened since I last wrote from St. Omer. I sailed on the day of St. John Baptist, my peculiar patron, and my little man [Ralph Emerson?] and I reached Dover early next morning. We were all but taken, for we were brought before the mayor as favourers of the old faith, and dissembling our names; he thought I was Dr. Allen, and said he would send us before Council. I prayed to St. John, and by his help we escaped, an old man coming forth and telling us we were dismissed; but I believe I shall some day be apprehended.

I came to London to the house where father Robert was. Young gentlemen came on every hand and embraced me, giving me apparel and weapons, and conveyed me out of the city.

I ride daily in the country, meditating my sermon on horseback, hear confession, and after mass, preach, being greedily heard, and give the sacraments. The country priests are virtuous and learned; they have raised such an opinion of our society that all Catholics do us exceeding reverence; therefore those who are to be sent should be well trained for the pulpit.

I cannot long escape the heretics, they have so many scouts; I wear ridiculous clothes, often change my name, and so often read news' letters that Campion is taken, that I am without fear. Let those whom you send take into account the solaces that countervail these miseries, and by their sweetness make worldly pains seem nothing, viz., a pure conscience, courage, zeal, a worthy work amongst high and low, in great numbers, even the milder Protestants; it has become a proverb that he must be Catholic who faithfully pays what he owes; and if a Catholic do an injury, it is thought unworthy of his calling. There are no men more corrupt and impure than the ministers, and we may well be indignant that fellows so base and unlearned should overrule the noble wits of the realm.

Threatening edicts come forth against us daily, yet we have escaped thus far; men neglect their own safety to take care of mine. I had set down in writing the causes of my coming; that I was a priest, and wished to teach the gospel and minister the sacraments, asking audience of the Queen and nobility, and professing disputations. I kept one copy in case I fell into the officers' hands, and left the other with a friend, but he did not keep it close; it was greedily read, and my adversaries were mad, answering out of the pulpit that they would dispute, but the Queen would not allow matters already established to be called in question. They call us seditious hypocrites, and even heretics, which is much laughed at. The people are ours, and the spreading this writing has advanced the cause. With a safe conduct, we would go to Court. But they have filled the old prisons with Catholics, make new ones, and affirm that it were better to make a few traitors than that so many souls should be lost.

They brag no more of their martyrs, since now, for a few apostates and cobblers of theirs turned, we have bishops, lords, knights, the old nobility, flower of the youth, noble matrons, and innumerable of the inferior sort either martyred or dying by imprisonment. In the house where I am, there is no talk but of death, flight, prison, or spoil of friends; yet they proceed with courage.

Many new soldiers restored to the church give up their names, whilst the old offer up their blood.

We need much your prayers and sacrifices. There will never want men in England that will take care of their own and others' salvation, nor will this church fail, so long as priests and pastors are found for the sheep. The rumour of present peril causes me to make an end. [4 pages, copy.]

Dec. 5. 62. Sir Edm. Latimer to Sec. Walsingham. Thanks for the The Camp, Gasbeeke, near Brussels. honour you have done me by your favour to my cousin Greville, which you shall find me as ready to requite as I am now importunate in craving your assistance, in the raising up again of my poor afflicted house, which I doubt not shall in time, by my loyal service, win the reputation that Her Majesty and her ancestors have always had of it. I beseech her to protect us against such as seek to deprive us of our means, and her of a family of faithful servants, the antiquity whereof now appeals to her, as to our only refuge, to redress our wrongs, and maintain us in our first cause against such as would oppress us. I desire nothing more than to be relieved from following foreign princes, and to enter the service of my natural Prince and country. I have truly reported to you the means I have in these countries, which I must absolutely leave in returning to do her service, and trust it will please her to restore me to the honour of my house; I crave your furtherance in obtaining me those lands to which I pretend a title, either in fee-farm, or upon such other condition as may best suit her. among which were Mr. Astley, Mr. Randall, Master Henry Knowles, Mr. Cresswell, my nephew, Anthony Bacon, and my brother William Cook, who were gladdened by your good news. Thanks for your friendly mention of my nephew. Pray use him in all things as a common servant; he should be kept with a hard hand. Thanks for your letters by Dranfield, Mr. Secretary's man. The news of Edmondston is not thought to be true, as men guess he had not then departed from Scotland, where all is quiet. Mr. Secretary, who was here on Christmas Day, and meant to have remained the whole of the holidays, was sent for to Court very earnestly; some guess there is matter of importance in hand, the rather as my Lord Treasurer and the Earl of Leicester have been of late in great conference together at Court.

A carrier from our ambassador in France yesterday brought no news but of peace and banqueting there, which I do not like, nor do I the Portugal agent's request to have 4,000 Almains to serve his master. I fear all those princes that are of the league of Trent, whensoever they gather or arm upon any pretence, lest it should tend to the hurt of the Church. We cannot tell what to judge of the controversy between the Archduke Matthias and Don John, but think as of the Duke of Alençon, when he seemed to take part with the Protestants of France. It is hard for fire and water to agree, unless the Lord miraculously determines it shall be so, to make the whole world the more to admire his majesty. God defend the good Prince of Orange from their hollow hearts, upon whose life only you see what good and evil depends; if he were taken from us, we here in England might justly fear all those numbers gathered together, both by Don John and all others of his religion; I pray for his preservation as for our quiet peace at home. If you see Mons. Villiers, commend me to him, and also to Mr. Beale, at his coming thither. I was present and prayed when his image was dedicated to God by the congregation, Mr. Secretary being godfather, and Mrs. Barrett godmother, through my wife's great weakness, &c.

Touching your request as to a minister, my judgment is absolute that you make no choice of a stranger, and therefore of him that bears your name, although the man be worthy; for Mr. Clarke, I will confer with others as soon as I can, and send you word what I shall find, always allowing of your desire, and demanding the thing most fit and necessary to be executed. Remember me and my wife to Frank and my godson. [4 pages.]

66. Complaint by Geo. Whitton, comptroller and surveyor of the manor and park of Woodstock, against Sir Hen. Lee. Being angry with me for accusing him of deer-stealing 10 years ago, when Fras. Chamberlain was lieutenant of Woodstock, and later for reproving him for leaving workmen unpaid, &c., he declared he would make me weary of my office; Sir Henry has defrauded me of 20 marks a year, granted by Her Majesty's warrant, and for six or seven years, has retained from me the woodwardship of the manor of Spilsberry, given in recompense of service, by Edward VI., and worth 20 marks yearly, besides the fees appertaining to my office of comptroller and surveyor of Her Majesty's manor and park of Woodstock aforesaid. The cause arises from my having made known the concealing of four marks yearly, which ought to have been paid by the mayor and commonalty of Woodstock into the Exchequer, according to their patent; and from various quarrels with Sir Henry's servants, which I have been constrained to bear on account of Sir Henry's great countenance. Grant to Sir Anthony Ashley, during the lives of Francis Ashley and Tho. Ashley, of the office of clerk of the castle and county court of York. [Latin. Warrant Book I, p. 162.]

Grant to Edward Earl of Hertford of title to the lands appointed him by Act of Parliament, 5 Edward VI., the profits of which, from the death of the late Duke of Somerset, have been paid into the Court of Wards, till he came of age and since, in order to avoid any questions that may arise thereon. 68. Petition of Margaret Griffith to Sec. Walsingham, for a letter to the Lord Chancellor to enable her to sue in forma pauperis, and for a warrant to apprehend Reginald Hygate and Wm. Greves, and bind them over to obey any order that may be made; or else to have Hygate's letters and Greve's examination taken by Mr. Hall, to enable her to justify her cause in the Star Chamber. Hygate and Greves who was banished and expelled from the Middle Temple, for papistry, &c. with their confederates, have sued petitioner and her parents in the Queen's Bench, upon some surmised actions in the name of John Webb, and impoverished her estate the more vehemently because of Walsingham's letters for her relief. 70. Petition of Sir Thos. Leighton, governor of Guernsey, to Queen and Council. Accept my declaration of the state of the island. The disposition of the people has lately been disturbed by seditious persons, pretending the privilege of the isle, but really wishing the overthrow of Her Majesty's rights, and furthered by the bailiffs and jurats. These have got themselves appointed procurers by a small portion of the inhabitants, though in the name of the whole isle, and brought accusations against the Governor, prejudicial to Her Majesty's rights. They returned hence without punishment, and bells were rung for joy of their success,—contrary to ordinance except in case of alarm,—and they have spoken very insolently, and are grown intolerable. Having obtained from you leave to receive their charges from voluntary contributions, they are trying to levy a general tax, and the popular multitude, led by them, confederate against Her Majesty's government and revenues.

Pray order Petevin, a new procurer come from thence, to be examined of his reasons for entering this seditious action, and as to who are his maintainers. The bailiff, and Hen. Beauvoir, and Nich. Martin, jurats, maintain these disorders, and should not hold their places, but should be sent for to answer for their conduct. They have lately increased the dozen of Peter's port to 22, to strengthen their seditious intents. I request that they may be reduced to 12 by removing the most seditious. Those who have denied the Queen's right of custom should also appear, and the bailiffs and jurats be ordered not to call in question her rents, receipts, or prerogatives, but pay them to the officers. Also the general tax for the charges of the procurers should be stayed, and those who have not assented to these disorderly proceedings should not be forced to bear the burden of them. [$\frac{3}{4}$ sheet.] Annexing,

70. I. List of 13 seditious Guernsey men who are to be displaced as disturbers of St. Peter's port and the island, including Wm. Beauvoir, bailiff, and Nich. Martin and Hen. Beauvoir, jurats; all of whom are above the dozen, and some taken in of late, to maintain faction against the governor. [$\frac{2}{3}$ page.]

71. Note of sundry disorders within the island of Guernsey. Last June, three persons of St. Mary port, pretending to be procurers of the town, but really of only a small part of it, repaired to Council for reformation, on pretence of their privileges being broken, but really to get from the Queen her jurisdiction and revenues, and slander their Governor, as they have done, especially before Council; and though they could not prove the wrongs, they escaped punishment, and thus they and others are encouraged to disobedience and insolvency.

Procurers never used to be sent but by the generality of the people, and these are sent only by 40 persons—scarce one-eighth of the inhabitants of Mary port—and most of these drawn in by three or four, who urged them to sign their procuration.

VOL. XXVII.

On their return, they violated laws, called themselves protectors of the country, had the bells rung in triumph, held unlawful assemblies, committed robberies, &c., and the bailiffs and certain of the jurats, who should see such offences punished, are the chief provokers of them.

They contravene the Council's orders that Nich. Carey, farmer of the great weight of the island, should deliver the rents and customs due on strangers' wares to Her Majesty's use, with an account for the time he held them from Sir Thos. Leighton, and imprison him for delivering the same to the Queen's receiver instead of to him; on which he has appealed to Queen and Council.

The payment of custom by strangers has never before been questioned, but they depose, by perjuring themselves, that in Sir Leonard Chamberlain's time, strangers paid no custom, which can be disproved by records and witnesses; but the bailiff and jurats silenced the Queen's receiver and attorney, and the gentleman porter of the castle, who spoke for his rights, and asked for any record in proof of their statement.

Many refuse to pay the Queen's rents unless they can be proved due by witnesses of the country, and they perjure themselves to acquit one another.

Council letters should be sent to the bailiff and jurats, ordering no rents to be called in question before them, which appear by the book of extent or book of receipts to have been formerly paid.

The Guernsey procurers have embezzled a letter from Council to the Governor, and delivered falsified copies of it to the people. I desire that Nich. Petevin, one of them, come with a new procuration, may receive condign punishment.

By the practices of the bailiff and jurates, such disorders have arisen that, unless they be sharply punished, no Englishman can govern there, unless Her Majesty keep 300 soldiers to repress these mutinies. [2 $\frac{1}{4}$ pages.]

72. Dr. J. Hamond to [Laurence] Tomson. Mr. Dale, Mr. Norton, and I have examined the poor men of Guernsey, on the complaints made against them by the procurer, but I think them of no great moment.

They request that commissioners may be sent to reform abuses presented to us late commissioners. Our report is that Blondel and Quiteville were twice sent to prison for improper conduct to the bailiff and jurats. That the St. Mary port men made their complaint in the name of the town, whereas they were only procurers for a few. That they had collected monies to bear their charges. That when required to answer certain articles on oath about this contribution, they could not answer, being unprepared.

There is an attempt to persuade the lords that the people are seditious, and matters are revived which we commissioners thought had been buried, and we are blamed therein. If we caused the mutiny, why were there such heavy complaints before we came that the bailiff and jurats had to take to the castle for safety? They were not true, but jurats pretended fear to make the people odious. Our popularity was this. We found the jurats in a contempt which was furthered by the captain's men, and we maintained the credit of those in authority. If no complaints had been preferred against the country by the captain, we should have heard as much on the other side as we do now of popularity. I recommend the poor men to you. I am so narrowly watched that I cannot confer with them. [$1\frac{1}{2}$ pages.]

73. Request of the Minister of Guernsey to Council. As the Governor, in spite of my age and my 23 years' unblemished service, is resolved to cause me to depart the island, I beg, 1.—That my church, which is dearer to me than life, may not be dispersed or changed, being godly and in good order. 2, That my cause may be justly examined, as I desire to continue my ministry. I am accused by Louis de Vic of courses unworthy my calling. I take my church as witness to my behaviour. 3. For protection for a time from the malice of my enemies, that I may safely return, and take order for my household affairs. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page, French.]

75. Allegations of the Deputies of Guernsey, for the better proof of the articles which they have exhibited relative to the Island of Sark :—

1. That as they are to follow former customs, by the book of extent of 5 Edw. III., which on 9 Oct. 1580 they were ordered to observe, all holders in capite should answer pleas at Guernsey, and if Carteret pleads exemption, because such scope is not in his patent, they can prove that patents granted for lands in Guernsey, repugnant to law and custom, have been reversed by the Lords Chief Justice and Chief Baron and others, in 1579.

2. They prove by the book of extent that 66*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* should be given for custom on fish, whereas since Carteret has had Sark, it is not worth 10*l.*, as the fishermen have brought very little to Guernsey; therefore they desire a similar order in Sark as in Guernsey.

3. All customs on wares and all anchorage belong to the Queen, and are not in Carteret's patent.

4. They do not wish to impeach him in wrecks of sea, but to reserve the Queen's royalties, according to the laws of Normandy.

5. All tenants in capite should pay the 13th on the sale of lands, Carteret not exempted.

6. All inhabitants, unless excepted by the said book, owe fumage rent.

7. That he should follow the custom in the isles, for rent to be paid in wheat and poultry, at the average price of the preceding year, or a balance left unpaid in money.

90. Request by Philip Jones, that the imposition upon hops and alum in Flanders be taken away, before liberty for transporting pelts be granted. In the time of making the first intercourse in 1495, pelts were not made in this realm; 30 years ago it was no common trade, but only used by the inventors. The general licence to carry them over takes away the force of the statute of 5 Eliz., made in consideration of the great prices, which disabled glovers, saddlers, &c. from buying white leather, so that their trade was lessened, and they impoverished. The prerogative of the Princes is not taken away by making the said intercourse, but upon change of worldly things, restraints, or licences may be made by them for the benefit of their subjects; as in the Low Countries, where, since the time of the intercourse, spun yarn, wools, or cotton have been prohibited to be carried from hence; by the like reason might copper be carried over by them. [$\frac{1}{3}$ page. See Dom. Eliz., Vol., CXLVI., No. 116.]

91. Note of the matters in difference between Paul Gresham and William Campynet, of Stanford, concerning Tekencote manor, co. Rutland, late the inheritance of Margaret, widow of John Campynet, now wife of Gresham. By the Act 32 Hen. VIII., recoveries to be had by covin against a tenant for life, without the assent of those in remainder or reversion, were made void; since then, some have practised to defraud that statute, by bringing in the tenant for life by way of voucher, after a conveyance made of the land to a stranger by covin, and thereupon in a common recovery, to bar him in the reversion or remainder, which is equal mischief. A general bill has therefore been brought into the Lower House by Gresham, explaining all the facts, and praying that special provision may be made for the safeguard of his estate, which by like common recovery, he has procured to himself, to cut off the remainder of William Campynet, brother and heir of John Campynet, in the manor aforesaid, Gresham surmising that John Campynet procured to himself a remainder in fee-simple of the said manor, against the will and meaning of Margaret then his wife.

Wm. Campynet's case is that Margaret, being seized in tail general as well of the said manor as of other lands and rents, cos. Cambridge and Bedford, after her marriage with John Campynet, assured all her lands by fine and recovery to her said husband and herself and their heirs, with remainder to the heirs of John, in consideration that he had disbursed about her affairs and the redemption of incumbrances more money than all the lands were worth. As John died without issue, she was in effect but tenant for life, yet though John, by his will, gave again to her and her heirs one half the lands, viz., the land and rent in cos. Cambridge and Bedford, and left her 500*l.* in goods, and 20 marks in lands besides, and notwithstanding that William Campynet was the only procurer of the marriage between Gresham and Margaret, his brother's wife, yet Gresham, by such recovery, defeated William of his remainder of the said manor, and suffered a recovery of the advowson of Tekencote church, which was never the inheritance of Margaret, but was purchased by John Campynet himself; it appears by depositions in Chancery, that Margaret had often declared her meaning that John Campynet should have the fee-simple of those lands, according to the tenor of the said fine and recovery. 92. Confession of the faith of me, Gabriel Pultney, Esq. [of Knowle Hall, co. Warwick.] I confess my Lord God eternal and infinite, who, although he be of a pure substance, yet is distinct in three persons, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, and who of nothing has created all things, and man after his image, that in him he might be glorified, and by his providence still governs the same.

I confess Jesus Christ, my only Saviour and Messiah, to be coequal with God, and yet to have taken the shape of man, and in all things like unto him, except sin, to assure me of mercy and forgiveness, and to have taken upon him the punishment of my sins, that I might be delivered from the curse of the law; so that I hold it as a detestable presumption that men should attribute to themselves any merit, to trust therein, to obtain everlasting life.

I renounce and detest all heresies and heretics who affirm that Jesus Christ is not God and man in one person, as Marcion, Nestorius, and Eutyches were, and I detest that superstition which is imagined to direct men to saints, as patrons and advocates with God for them.

I confess the Holy Ghost God equal with the Father and the Son, who sanctifies me in all truth, and persuades me in my conscience that I am the child of God, by the application of Christ's merits to me.

I confess one Holy Church, which consents in faith, hope, and charity, not seen to human eye, but only known to God, who has ordained some as vessels of wrath to damnation, and has chosen others as vessels of mercy to be saved.

I confess that Christ Jesus has left us two sacraments as seals, viz., baptism and the Supper of the Lord (rejecting the five sacraments which the Papists have invented); baptism, whereby we are received into the church of God, and the Lord's Supper whereby we are confirmed in the same.

I also confess that the water in baptism testifies the true presence of the blood of Jesus Christ, washing sins from my soul, as water washes filthiness from my body; and I detest the error of the Anabaptists, who say that infants are not to be baptised. I believe that in the Lord's Supper, the bread and wine are certain pledges that I am spiritually nourished with the body and blood of Jesus Christ, and that I receive therein Christ's natural body, sic spiritualiter ut tamen vere, but not corporally, that is to say, grossly, like other meats, and so I join with the signs the possession and use of that which is there figured. I believe that the wicked are not partakers of the body of Christ, but receive the outward element only.

I also detest the mass as abominable sacrilege,—being a sacrifice, as the Papists term it, for the quick and the dead,—and all their errors, maintaining transubstantiation, and denying the cup to the lay people, contrary to the institution of Jesus Christ.

VOL. XXVI.

I confess that ecclesiastical discipline belongs to the church, which stands in admonition and correction of faults; as also a politic magistrate, who ministers justice to every man, defending the good and punishing the evil.

Finally, I believe that Christ shall come to judgment, and shall judge both quick and dead, the wicked to eternal pains, and the good to everlasting joy and bliss. [1 page.]

Massy of Andford, — Bromley of Hampton post, Lady Egerton of Ridley, Sir Piers Leigh, a justice; John Dutton of Dutton, Wm. Davenport of Broughall, — Massy of Sale, and Roland Dutton of Hatton. Also names of seven justices of peace not known to be of any religion, and therefore suspected to be Papists, viz., Thos. Leigh of Highleigh, Thos. Leigh of Adlington, Sir Rich. Buckley, Wm. Glaseour, — Vernon of Haslington, John Poole, sen., of Poole, Sir Rowland Stanley; also names of four other gentlemen suitable to be placed in their room, viz.; Thos. Smyth, Thos. Bunbury, Rich. Hurlston, and Thos. Venables. Also names of three parsonages fit for learned men, to which the now Bishop of Chester has admitted unworthy persons; and there are many more such parsonages. The curates in the diocese are mostly unlearned. The bishop frequents those infected with popery, on pretence of seeking their reformation, but never yet reformed any. [1 $\frac{1}{4}$ pages.]

96. Report of Nicholas Martin, H. Carey, and H. Beauvoir, jurats of Guernsey, to Drs. Dale and Aubry, touching the matter of Sir Thos. Leighton. In answer to your question whether goods taken upon the seas by pirates, and brought to Guernsey, and there seized by Her Majesty's officers are forfeit: We do not find any law, custom, or privilege by which they ought to be forfeit to Her Majesty, unless seized by her officer, appointed by order of the bailiff and jurats there; and then the matter being examined by the bailiff and jurats is by them certified to Her Majesty's Council, that they may take order, by commission or otherwise. 97. Answer of Nicholas Martin and Henry Beauvoir, in the name of the bailiff and jurats of Guernsey, to the complaint exhibited to Council by Peter Carey, Wm. Beauvoir, and others against them :—

1. All lands, rents, &c. whereof Nicholas Carey, the father of Peter Carey, died seized in his own right, are partable for the most part amongst his children, male and female, by the custom of the said isle, and so not properly gavelkind land.

2. Nicholas Carey was adjudged by the bailiff and jurats to yield to the complainants a true copy of the whole of the evidence touching the lands and tenements of their father, under forfeiture of 20*l.*, which he has since done.

3. Parquin and Friteaux close, five acres of ground in Crowte Pyteott, and four bushels of rent wheat were never parcel of the inheritance of Nich. Carey, but of Colette Martin, mother of the eldest brother, and wife to Nich. Carey the father, to whom Nicholas their brother is only son and sole heir, so that the same are not partable amongst the complainants, by the custom of the said isle.

4. The mill and parcel of ground were parcel of the Queen's possessions, which Nich. Carey deceased had taken in fee-farm of Her Majesty's commissioners, paying yearly rent. The elder brother alleging the mill and ground to appertain to him as heir general, by force of the grant of Her Majesty's commissioners, the bailiff and jurats suspended their judgment touching any partition thereof, on account of the ambiguity of the matter, the like case never having been before in question before them, until there was a full appearance of all the bailiffs and jurats to make a final judgment, which judgment the complainants refuse, and so the matter stands undiscussed, whether any partition ought to be made of the said mill and ground. The complainants have not therefore as yet received any wrong, and it is submitted whether they have any cause to complain. [$\frac{2}{3}$ sheet.]

1. Report of John Donne. On 27th June, I left Exmouth in the Jennet of Exmouth, and arrived at St. Sebastian's 10 July. Four days after, Richard, son of Thos. Burley, of Melcombe Regis, arrived in the Minion of Bridgewater, and on intelligence of my being there, went to the commissary, and accused me of being a heretic, and of coming over as a spy against the King of Spain and the Irish bishop; thereupon the commissary wrote to the General of Fontarabia to apprehend me, and embargo my goods. He sent the captain of St. Sebastian's to do so. The captain searched my lodgings, without finding anything for his purpose, and then I was carried prisoner to the General of Fontarabia, and delivered into the custody of General Allgoheils and four armed soldiers, who carried me on horseback and bound to Fontarabia, where I was put in a dark pit in prison, and kept 12 days. Demanding to know my accuser, the general sent to St. Sebastian's to know if there were any merchants that knew me; whereupon several wrote to him in my favour, and offered to become bound in 5,000 ducats that I was no such man as he had been informed; on this he discharged me, and wrote to the captain to redeliver my goods; as soon as my accuser heard I was discharged, he got away.

On 4 Aug. I left for St. Andera, where the Irish bishop made his fleet, and came into Aleretho, where I met Sir John Fergus, one of the bishop's chaplains, who knew me well at St. James's in Galicia; I made him say mass for me, and gave him largely, being one of the bishop's chaplains; thus he told me of the pretence of the bishop, and asked the cause of my coming to Aleretho; I told him to buy oranges, and that I had a bark coming there to lade with them, but they being so dear, I meant to lade elsewhere. He told me the Bishop's army consisted of seven ships, with victuals and munition for 16,000 men, and that they only waited an answer by a pinnace which was sent to Ireland 16 July, as a spy, with letters to the Earl of Desmond, when they would depart for Ireland, with the seven ships, and 1,000 Italian and Spanish soldiers. That there was an Englishman named Browne among them, who was in great favour with my Lord, and that there would be 20 more sail to follow, with 2,000 soldiers. I also met a man of the Groyne, who was a soldier with the Irish bishop for two months, and confirmed all this.

On 18 Aug. I arrived at Valladolid, and met a Galicia merchant coming from Court, who told me he met Richard Burley going to Court. Upon this news I gave over my journey, left for Galicia, and arrived at Vevera 4 Sept., where I remained four days; the archdeacon of the town, whose brother was Dean of Valencia, told me that his brother sent the Irish bishop, by command of the Pope, 80,000 ducats, which he had gathered in Castile; that great preparation had been made by the Pope for sending into Ireland, and that after the wars were ended in Portugal, the King of Spain would aid with great power.

I arrived in the Groyne 11 Sept., remained six days, and went to kiss the Regent's hands, who thanked me for what I had sent him. He asked for news of England, but being only a merchant, I knew of none but of merchandize. The next day I entertained the secretary and four of his friends at a banquet, and gave him six pair of fine Hollands, hoping to understand somewhat of him. He told me, with regard to the wars in Portugal, that the King of Spain had it quietly, and that the Regent had received letters from the King that the Pope had written him, to provide a power to join with him to send to Ireland, on pain of his curse.

I also conversed with Bonifacius, purveyor in Galicia for the navy, who said that an English captain, Henry Carey, with Don Pedro Baldez, general of the whole fleet, had drawn out a plat of all the ports of England, Ireland, and Scotland, and that he had delivered it to Don Pedro, with whom he was in great favour.

On 17 Sept. I departed for Bayonne, where I met Gomes Perious and Drather, who told me that when they had ended the wars in Portugal, they would go for Ireland, and so for England.

On the 23rd, I went to Viana in Portugal, thinking to embark for England in a ship of the West Country; but as it could not be got ready soon, I returned to Bayonne, and then to Viego, and agreed for a passage with the master of a bark there.

On 16 Nov., Don Pedro Baldez came into the river of Viego, from the Groyne with his fleet of 40 sail, laden with provisions for Lisbon; and he, understanding that there was an English bark bound for England, went on board, and took away the sails; demanding what passengers they had, and they answering a Fleming, he sent for him, and put him in irons aboard his admiral. He also sent for me, but I got out of the way, and hid myself in a broom close two days and three nights, without meat or drink.

On the 20th I went to Bayonne, where I kept close two days, then to Viana; I stayed 18 days for a passage, going in the meantime to Pontethelema, where I met Pedro Gorina Delamais of Corcaven, who came post from Lisbon to hasten Don Pedro to Lisbon with his fleet; he said that most part of the shipping at Lisbon should go for Ireland, as soon as Portugal was quiet, and that the King would go to Lisbon to set order in Portugal.

The state of Portugal at present seems as follows:—

The King of Spain is in full possession of Portugal, and has garrisoned all the forts and towns. He has 12,000 soldiers there, of which 5,000 are good and old soldiers of Lombardy, Naples, and Sicily. The island of Madeira has yielded to him; but those of Surres [Azores] stand against him, and it is thought they will rather yield to some other prince, if they might have aid. The King sends five ships to the Indies, and four to Brazil from Lisbon.

As for Don Antonio, there is no news in Portugal; but some say he has gone for France. The revenues that the King of Portugal has, by his customs and other royalties, amount to one million and a half of gold. He has Luestradigo of St. Iago in his hands, and the livings of Don Duarte, Infanta, and Donna Maria, all which may be worth 300,000 ducats. [4 pages.]

3. G. Byauvoer [Beauvoir?] jun., to Sir Thos. Leighton, governor of Guernsey, at London. Council letters have been sent to Mr. Wigmore, your lieutenant, and the bailiff and jurats, by procurers authorised by private persons, saying that the charge of the procurers was to be borne by those who had authorised them, or those who would voluntarily contribute. These letters have been read to the constables, and copies translated into French given them, to show to the inhabitants, and know their will about the voluntary contribution, of which I hope you will soon be informed. Then the Lieutenant, and Nich. Carey, John Delacourt, and myself, as assistants, wished the collection to be made, but the bailiff and the rest of the jurats would not permit it, unless the tax was general through the island. Nich. le Poitevin, in the name of the rest, asked the benefit of the Council's letters, that it might be raised as you had ordered, from those who contributed willingly, but could not be heard.

We know that certain procurers are coming with letters from the bailiff and jurats to Council, but know not the contents; therefore Carey, Delacourt, and I thought best to certify you beforehand the state of affairs, as you are the help of all who live in obedience to Her Majesty, and will not endure the calumnies passed on yourself, and the justice of the country. The said procurers, though private persons, advise the common people to agree with them, and set themselves up as protectors and reformers of our privileges. Thus they would soon render your government contemptible, and prevent the obedience due to Her Majesty, their superiors, and magistrates. [2½ pages, French.] their purpose, it was to have been done the last of April, and by the consent of some of your own realm.

He said that King Philip, having Portugal and many ships, is very strong; and that where heretofore he has not made stay of any ships which have entered his realm, lest they should go to Portugal, he will now first pretend to favour them, to get many into his power, and then seize them, as will also the King of France.

With these ships they intend sailing for Ireland and Milford, and there is another army for Cornwall and Scotland. The King of France will send provisions to Scotland and Ireland, and with what he and the King of Spain may make, with the help of the Scots, they mean to have Ireland, and make the Queen of Scots Queen of England. King Philip will marry his daughter to the King of Scots; the Pope with his power will come down upon Yarmandea (sic), and Flanders, and the whole 17 lands, and the King of Poland by land, and the King of Sweden by sea, against Denmark, and against the cities which are Martin Luther's, and so will bring all to one religion if they may; but God will defend us against them all, I hope.

King Philip and all of them have never a better time than now, for he and the King of France have league with the Turk and the King of Morocco; and the Turk is making a great armada to go against the Venetians, and there are many galleys and argosies coming out of the Levant towards Spain, as also a great fleet making ready at Lisbon, and other parts by the sea side to the Groyne, and many soldiers. The report is that all these are to strengthen Portugal, but that is only to colour their pretences. There are also many ships and soldiers got ready in France, and upwards of 200 ships, laden with provisions, have come from Scotland during the last year, besides many from other places, which provision it is thought is intended for the French and Spanish army.

I am bold to advertise thus much, for the zeal I have borne towards you for a long time. I am a Barnstaple man, and dwell at the Fleur-de-lis in Tower Street, and at my coming home from my voyage, you shall understand more of me.

Sept. ? 16. Certain notes to be considered by Council, touching the requests of the bailiff, jurats, and inhabitants of Guernsey.

As to confirmation of their privileges, they must be renewed at every change of Prince, the Pope's name and authority being annihilated. The grant should express how far is the extent of the privileges of the isle, by which in time of war they are not only allowed to traffic with merchant strangers, but no vessels are to be troubled when within view of any part of the isle, which was always taken to be 21 miles, but the men-of-war say it is only the length of shot from a piece of ordnance. This should be settled, and a penalty laid upon infringement, or controversies will arise.

If the Queen grants this privilegè, the inhabitants hope to obtain a like privilege from the French King, for English merchants coming thither to traffic.

As to church goods, it should be considered what the Queen shall give, and a survey made of goods, plate money, jewels, rents of land and wheat, friaries, free chapels, obits, lamps, lights, noting what is for repair of churches, &c., and this by commissioners Amias Paulet, and the bailiff of Jersey, with two others of Guernsey.

The inhabitants claimed church goods by a grant of Edward VI., sold part, and bought ordnance for defence of the isle, though not to the same amount. These should not be for the private use of the captain, bailiff, or jurats, but for fortifying the castle, &c. The licence for victuals, &c. is very necessary, but the inhabitants must be bound to the customers where they lade, to bring a certificate from the captain and bailiff that they are unladen and spent only in the island. [2 pages.]

Sept. ? 17. [Louis de Vic to Sir Thos. Leighton?] I gave your letter to the bailiff and jurats, who have written at large their laws about stolen goods seized first by Her Majesty's officers, which custom I have put in use since I came; for Peter John having stolen goods from Colas Jersey, Colas seized his own goods first, and being brought before us, I told the bailiff I saw no reason why, as the goods were Jersey's, they should be in Jersey's custody; but all the jurats answered that if the Queen's officers had seized them before, the party could never have them again, but they were absolutely forfeited to Her Majesty.

It may be seen what Capt. Paulet is; for Capt. Pelley, once prisoner here, is at sea, and this day week took the Mary of Alderney, coming from Nantes with wines, and utterly spoiled it, and misused the mariners, and said he had watched for them, and would spoil every bark of England or Guernsey, because Paulet, their captain, was prisoner in England; and if one hair of his head were hurt, they would spoil all the vessels they met.

The coast of Brittany and Normandy is full of soldiers, some say to attend Monsieur into England, some to go with M. De La Roche, who once begged these islands of the King, to the Indies. Some say they are to go and supplant my cousin Frobisher; our bruit is they will attempt this island, but with our hoped-for supply, we shall be well provided. You have 51 men in your house, such a train as never captain kept in his absence, and your charges are infinite.

The quarrel between M. De Rohan and M. Du Val is ended. M. De Carronge, the new governor of Normandy, defends the commons against the gentlemen, and says the last tax demanded was without the King's consent.

M. De Chateaufneuf, M. De Rohan, and all the nobility of this country put themselves in most magnificent order to attend the Duke into England, but I hope their suit will take as cold effect as the cold winter.

The Gascon soldiers attacked those of the King of Navarre, who thereupon surprised Langon, and keeps the town, and levies a talliage upon all wine coming down the Garonne. The Papists have taken divers towns about Montauban. The Duke of Guise is called protector of the Romish church. M. Le Duc being at Alençon, people wondered why he did not pass by Court, but neither Protestants nor Papists trust him. The King has armed 30 ships; it is not known why. Our alum man has deceived us; I will never give a protection again till they are in the road or bound to come; yet I sent for the protection and have it.

Your last letters and those of Council came by St. Malo's, and had been opened; so do not impute fault to me for not answering sooner. I willed Mr. Bailiff to send you two of the jurats and the procurer, but I do not think they will dare it; the wood is truly yours, by their law and by Her Majesty's grant. Mr. Bailiff is a good man, but governed by the rest. Let them know that you are the governor, for they presume too far. The procurer wishes to serve you, and shall come if the jurats come, for he will deal for you and not for them. I send you the bailiff and jurats' letters to Council.

Mr. Knowles is not come yet, but when he does come, he shall be used to your content; there is no gentleman I would more willingly pleasure. I shall have much ado with the ministers about your order for public prayers, but the people will honour you for it. Let me know your pleasure about my remaining; I would gladly return to my wife and children, but will do as you please. [4 pages.]

18. Sir Thomas Leighton to Sec. Walsingham. A bill of complaint was exhibited to Council, in the name of the ministers of Guernsey, concerning the tithes to them belonging, which the people of late refused to pay. Thereupon Council ordered the bailiff and jurats to assemble the people, and order either the ancient duties to be restored to the ministry, or such a tally in lieu of them as has been lately appointed by me and their justices. The people have been earnestly persuaded to satisfy their ministers by paying them the tenths of all things, or yielding the former rates, viz., 4*d.* for every calf or colt, 1½*d.* a lamb, &c., but they will yield neither; they offer the fifth part of a penny for a calf, the worst being worth 6*s.* 8*d.* or 8*s.*, which is too little; so the ministers will seek redress from the Lords, and beg your assistance. Without help, this dealing will drive them from us.

P.S.—Our ministers object in conscience to receive the former duties for christenings, communions, burials, &c., saying they will not sell the sacraments; so the people are relieved from these payments, and there is the more reason for their paying the other dues. [2 pages.]

As to the accusation against me, I beseech you to defer your judgment until my travel is over, when, if I do not return unspotted, I shall willingly yield to the usury of the punishment due to so long deferring; but I have no doubt the foreman of the Quest will pronounce me not guilty before these subtile devisers. Meantime pray recommend me to some one here who is as wise and honest, that I may follow him as a guide. If Her Majesty inquire of you concerning me, pray report that I am her subject among the most faithful, and her servant among the most bounden. [1 page.]

23. Henry Earl of Huntingdon to Sec. Walsingham. Last week late at night, after I had sent my men before, I suddenly rode 20 miles west from this town, having heard from one of my spies that Windsor was in Arthington House, but when I got there he had gone. It is such a house to hide persons in as I have not seen before ; I was assured that there are vaults underground, but where to find them I could not learn. Therefore, after I had examined the widow, who was or feigned to be sick in bed, and had sent her with the rest to prison, I had a mind to have plucked up the boards, but a priest, who was found after much searching, hid in a strange manner, having confessed that Windsor had been there, but was gone into Nithsdale, and named two places in one of which I should find him, I stayed my purpose till I had made trial of the priest's word, and immediately sent my men there, who did not lose their labour, although they did not get the man ; but there he was and there he is. I mean to go there to-morrow, and trust he will now not escape my hands, and Darcy Ingleby is there also. It is such a country as I did not expect to find so near York, and the chief inhabitants, of whom Wm. Ingleby is the head, have now shown themselves what they are in deed. I pray my labour may prove acceptable to Her Majesty, and then I shall think it well bestowed, and care less for other matters, which my dealings in this cause make me subject to, if some here may have what they desire. I perceive by yours of 10 Nov. that Mr. Arundel would have paid me 100*l.*, but was hindered; being doubtful whether you have received my letters of 5 Nov. or not, I renew the contents. The disappointment of the 100*l.* forced me to try my friends, and to free myself of danger. I borrowed 100*l.* of Mr. Crewe until 4 Dec., and thereupon wrote to you and Arundel, so that I might not be unfurnished. How I shall keep faith with him, not having heard from you, I know not. To take it up will be chargeable to Arundel, and troublesome to me. Pray send it here, and I will urge Mr. Crewe to forbear until I can hear from you again. The experiment of the Irish slatt I now make upon myself, by reason of extreme pain and weakness caused by a strain. I have taken it six times, and am better, and hope it will restore my strength. I drink half a dram in muscadell, warmed.

36. Petition of the inhabitants of Alderney to Council, to obtain for them the Queen's licence to import certain provisions into the island, and ordnance as specified, for its defence ; also, in consideration of their poverty, for letters to the captain for remission of a third of a fine imposed on them by their Honours. 39. Petition of Philip de Carteret, Seigneur de St. Ouen, jurat of Jersey, and Michael Lemprière, Queen's procurer there, to Council. By the ancient laws of Jersey, all the lands and revenues, except four houses, are equally divided between the children of the owners, and no man has power to advance one of his children ; thus the better houses decay, and the meaner are broken up, so as to leave incompetent livings, and breed infinite suits. Such is the disposition of the inhabitants, that those who have but half an acre will build a house on it, and live in extreme poverty, as lord of that little, rather than seek any other trade.

Education is neglected, so that God is not honoured ; there are not men to administer justice, and the isle is unfurnished of weapons. Request that there may be a commission to choose two other houses, with rents, &c., value 100 quarters of wheat, that may descend to the eldest son or other heir. Also six other houses, with rents value 60 quarters ; a house in every parish with rents value 20 ; four others, value 10 ; and as many, value 5, as the commissioners think meet ; 8s. per quarter of wheat to be paid as a fine by the suitors therefor.

The inhabitants are sometimes obliged to provide armour, powder, &c. to resist foreign invasion, and have to levy a tax on the country therefor. Request that a twentieth of all receipts on the sale of land may be made standing stock to purchase it, and also one half of the fines on the statute of usury, which they request may be put in execution in the island, being very needful ; the other half to go to Her Majesty. Also that a penalty may be inflicted on those who appeal out of the island, for causes determinable there. [2 sheets.]

42. Note of goods pertaining to Spaniards, laden at Newhaven on the Margaret, which was taken by the Ermine, alias the Francis, belonging to Harry Knowles; total value, 1,650*l.* Charges about finding out the same, above 200*l.* Another ship in company with this was also taken by Miles Morgan, the lading worth 2,700*l.*, part of which Mr. Knowles had, before Mr. Morgan, with the goods and ship, was cast away, and for which he ought to answer. [1 page.]

43. Note that the request of the merchants of Spain spoiled by Hen. Knowles' ship is, that he be caused to restore all such linen cloth as is in esse, and that reasonable order be taken for the rest. If they sell the goods, they will not make nearly so much of them as the proprietors would, if they sent them beyond seas, as first directed. [$\frac{1}{3}$ page.]

44. Note of spoils committed upon the King of Spain's subjects by English ships. The Greyhound, laden with figs, oils, &c., belonging to a Spaniard, was taken by Englishmen underneath one of the Queen's forts in the Isle of Wight, and as it was within Her Majesty's protection, there is no colouring but to restore it. Henry Knowles took and brought to the island another ship laden with sugar and spices, and daily spoils the goods, notwithstanding Council's orders for their delivery.

Roberts of Bristol has taken two Portugal barks coming from Brazil, laden with sugars, cotton, wool, &c. The ambassador requests that the goods may be put in safe custody till the matter be tried, and such open wrongs to the King's subjects prevented. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page.]

45. Statement of the means advised to provide against depredations and piracies daily committed, as well upon the subjects of the French King as of Her Majesty: viz., that deputies be chosen out of the Council of each Sovereign, to remain in Paris and London, and to have commission to hear and determine all wrongs brought before them. Orders to be given to all admirals and vice-admirals to see that justice is duly and readily administered to all who demand it; and if it is refused, the plaintiffs of either country may appeal to the said Council. The Council to have power to proceed against all inferior judges who have been negligent in administering justice. Some notable person to be deputed in either realm, to make searches for verifying and recovering losses, with power to make them throughout all ports and havens of either realm, and to have the assistance of a deputy, and protection. Commandment to be given to all governors of provinces, and to admirals, captains, &c. to see that the sentences of such Council are carried into effect, on pain of making themselves responsible to the plaintiffs. Noted as presented to Her Majesty on the King's behalf. [1 page.] me. We met by means of my cousin Vavasour, with whom he had secret talk, and then, after assurances of secrecy, he unfolded his treachery to me, offering me 1,000*l.* to practise against Lord Harry [Howard] and Fras. Southwell, and affirm that they were reconciled [to Rome] by Stevens, a priest. I dissuaded him, saying I never heard of such a thing. He said Stevens was taken and racked, and had confessed, and advised me to leave the realm. I said I was free from offence, but he said Southwell had betrayed all; he offered me to remain at a house of his in Norfolk or Suffolk, till I could get over the sea, when I should have 1,000*l.*, or bills for so much, from the ambassador of Spain, on his account, and further said he would send me money over, and sell land of 100*l.* a year, rather than I should want. I refused his counsel.

He then told me that he had confessed to the Queen that he was reconciled [to Rome], and had got his pardon, and would save me, if I would be ruled by him. He said no man could do him harm but myself. I judged that he wished my flight, that he "might be freed of his monstrous dealing," and others brought into suspicion. I asked time to think of it. I wrote him a letter, a copy of which I showed your Lordships.

As to Stevens, I set down in writing what I have before told you, that a few years since, the Earl being grieved in conscience, desired conference with some learned man, and I brought one to him. [1 $\frac{3}{4}$ pages.] Also,

55. Thos. Copley to his cousin, Lady Walsingham, at Court. I have received by Painter, the post, your loving commendations, and trust more will follow shortly. I would to God my thankful mind were not restrained with want of ability; then it should well appear how far I am from being ungrateful. Sufficiency the goodness of God affords me; but overplus I find none, to bestow at my will. When God shall see me corrected to amendment, He will haply render to me the surplusage, which He has taken from me because He liked not my bestowing thereof in costly building, chargeable music, horses, and such like vanities as my age delighted in, more tending to the pleasing my own phantasm than to His honour. I trust hereafter to better bestow that which He affords me, at whose hands soever He appoints me to receive it. But most glad would I be that I might see good Sir Francis, your worthy husband, the chosen instrument of God's mercy towards me, which I hope, since he has broken the ice by moving Her Majesty for me, and found her so graciously inclined to his suit.

That the good resolution came not by the next post I impute not to him, but to Monsieur's repair thither about that time, which bred both to Her Majesty and to all her Council such matter of weighty consideration as yet holds the world in suspense, till the expected resolution be clearly seen; therefore no marvel if opportunity has wanted to treat of private affairs. Yet it often happens that from the table whereon is served a royal feast, some crumbs fall, or some morsel is afforded to a waiter, wherewith he stays his stomach till he with his fellows may go to their repast. So may it fall to me, awaiting on a courteous gentleman, who, I trust, will not forget me.

I pour forth my conceits boldly to you, whom nature binds me to love. There lived not in their time a more kind-hearted couple than my good father and my dear aunt your grandmother; I have seen them both, old as they were, weep for joy when she has sometimes come to Gatton. So we, the offspring of so kind parents, must draw like sap from like root. My affection towards you, whom yet I was never so happy to see, assures me that you, being of so good a nature as the world reports, cannot show yourself estranged from me, your poor kinsman, needing your favour, since so many others have tasted thereof.

Now is your time, Madam, to play your part; you are upon the stage; you have many beholders; if you play it well, you may win great commendation; if otherwise, the contrary; but you have hitherto done so well that you cannot fail to do well still.

Let not a little difference in our opinions in the choice of our ways to heaven be any let to the fruits which the bond of nature binds us to yield to each other. Heaven is the place where we all tend; we believe in one Creator, in one Redeemer, in one Holy Ghost, three persons and one God, which is the principal foundation of the faith whereby we must be saved. What a pity it is then to see such dissension about points of less importance, among us that believe in one Christ!

St. Augustin saith, "If a man out of the Holy Scriptures draws that sense which may be profitable to the edifying of charity, although he says not the very words which he whom he readeth, as Matthew, Mark, &c., may seem in that place to have meant, yet he is not hurtfully deceived, or otherwise than as a man which strays somewhat out of his direct way, and yet by coasting in a fair plain champain, comes to the same place whereto that other way would have brought him. Therefore, as they which sailing on the sea have especial regard to the Pole and the load star called Cynosura, so they that travel in reading the Scriptures must direct the eyes of their mind to no other thing, but only to charity, whereunto if they bind their understanding, they can never swerve from the word of God, seeing all His words are but one, which is LOVE."

Let us therefore prefix to ourselves that load star of love ; let all our actions be guided by charity ; let us pray for and do good to each other, so shall we reap the fruit of our charitable works, how unworthy soever the parties on whom we bestow them.

There is none in that realm, of any religion, more loyal or dutiful to the Queen than I mean to be, if I may be reconciled to her favour, and by restitution of my living, so many years detained from me, taste the fruit of justice and protection from wrong, which the true subject expects at the hands of his sovereign.

Make me beholden to you, by so friending me to your husband, that the hopes he gave me in October may fall out in January. There be 12 hours in the day ; one of so many may haply be found favourable for me, though I have already tarried 12 whole years and more, in patient expecting that one good hour.

The loyal heart I bear to my Prince and country, with my innocence of any offence against either, gives me great hope that to the effectual solicitation of an able and willing friend, Her Majesty, being mild and merciful, will give a gracious answer in my suit, after so many years' patience, to be restored to my own living. If thus withdrawn from depending on foreign succour, I mean to bestow every penny in Her Majesty's service.

P.S.—I write not to Sir Francis by this bearer, as I wrote him a month since. Pray favour me with an early answer. [$1\frac{3}{4}$ pages.]

56. Charles Paget to Sec. Walsingham. I expected another letter from you, and trust your silence only arises from weighty affairs, God made me known to you in this town, and led me to offer you affection ; nothing can so comfort me as Her Majesty's and your favour. You have already brought me singular contentment in my suit, and it will procure me inestimable joy when it is effected.

I wrote you of divers uncharitable reports talked here touching you ; I cannot find the authors, but gather they principally come from Scotland. I meant to depart this town to some other hereabouts, and live privately, but am advised by my physician to take some physic this spring, and so tarry longer ; but to show you that I will conform by all possible means to your advice, I shall change my lodgings to-morrow, and live in such an obscure place as it shall be very hard for any Englishman to find me out ; besides I have given out that I will go, which they all believe. This I do, though against my comfort and health, because I will not accompany with Englishmen, and especially such as be here misliked persons, and over without licence. If this course be not liked by you, advertise me, and I will wholly follow your direction.

57. Wm. Tresham to the Earl of Sussex. Fearing lest my sudden departure from Court, without your privity, and contrary to my duty, has wrought me dislike in your judgment, to whom I have been so many ways bound, and to your wife,—especially when so fortunate a chance betided me at Newhall, that I might have written you,—I beseech you, whilst perusing these lines, to suffer your judgment to cease as a Councillor of the State, and to weigh my cause as a private man, otherwise I may be adjudged as evil a man as I seem. If I had seen any means left to preserve myself from the persecution of the Earl of Leicester, whose favour has been lost without defect of mine, and for recovery whereof I have used such humility as has never been used at Court, even to Princes,—as appears by my letters to Her Majesty, which I beseech you may be read in her hearing, wherein is manifested the just occasion that has forced me to this desperate act,—I should have used them. No dishonest act or lewd practices, either against Prince, country, or your Honour, have moved me hereto, but only the extreme fear of the cruelty of the Earl of Leicester, my friend in Court having failed me.

I acknowledge that nothing ought to have forced me to leave my office and duty, and depart without licence, but I hope, knowing the occasion, you will not give heavy and sharp censure, but rather lament to see the power of one over-mighty, whose fury cannot be withstood by an honest and innocent man, but only by flight or much inconvenience.

Oh God! whose state is equal to mine? chased by malice from the presence of Prince, Court, country, office, parent, and patrimony, only to seek to preserve from implacable wrath this poor carcase, so many years attending the person of Her Highness, and your pleasure, whom, by my office, I was bound to obey. Pardon me, and be a means to Her Majesty to mitigate her displeasure, which I have justly procured by my departure. If tears of sorrow, and perilous or faithful service in these parts may move remission for any error committed, it shall be seen that no earthly danger shall cause me to stay from what shall be commanded. 59. Charles Paget to Sec. Walsingham. Since I retired into this secret life, my Lord Percy being lodged not far from me, I have hunted his company, because he not being in a commendable course, either for studies or manners, my poor advice prevailed with him to reform. I have been careful not to touch on matters of religion, knowing that he would greatly dislike persuasion to alter that religion he has been bred up in, and that my Lord of Northumberland, his father, whose favour I am loath to lose, would have been offended, and especially that it would kindle Her Majesty's displeasure towards me. Yet my Lord Ambassador of England has advertised some of the Council in the worst sense he can of my resort to his Lordship, thinking thereby to procure my Lord Percy the displeasure of his friends, and me the increase of Her Majesty's displeasure, grounding his advertisement in concluding that I am a Papist, and therefore not a good subject, though I remain as faithful as any Her Majesty has, and will spend my life at her command, so long as she allows me her protection. The Lord Ambassador is inflamed against me, as he hears of your honourable favour towards me. Pray let there be no hard interpretation made of Lord Percy by his friends, nor of me by anybody else, and say whether I had better go into Italy, or retire into some other town in France, where I will live privately till the fall, and esteem you my chief patron, and will rest at your command. March 25. 61. Sir Thomas Leighton to Sec. Walsingham. Philip de Carteret, Guernsey. seigneur of St. Ouen in Jersey, is repairing to England, to do homage for lands held within the isles. Helier de Carteret, his late father, obtained a grant of the island of Sark, a member of Guernsey castle, paying relief and premier seisin to the governor, and for his son, if a minor, to be a ward, all which was granted to me, as governor. I request that he may be admitted to do homage, with proviso that it be without prejudice to the Queen's castle of Guernsey, or the governor, or his successors. The Queen's procurer, who is coming in May concerning our laws, will explain these matters. I wish the Seigneur of St. Ouen might be stayed till then, to decide certain pretensions of his to jurisdiction in Sark, which are injurious to the Queen's right and the laws of the Isle. [1 page.]

Paris. culars of my loss. It was first a chain of 10 French ells long, two great gold buckles (as may be known from the master of the sign of Venice at Blackfriars, whose servant furnished me with them); also a double ruby ring. The other rings have been returned me. Also a purse of crimson satin, with money in it, which I will give them. I cannot tell the weight of the chain, but you have a specimen of its thickness. The goldsmith who brought it me to Canterbury has one like it. [1 page, French.]

April 5. 64. Thos. Copley to Sec. Walsingham. I did not answer your Paris. letters sent by my friend Brown, because he told me I should shortly hear more from you by Painter, the post, who, after a fortnight's daily expectation, has just arrived, with only a letter from

Mr. Tomson, your secretary ; but that gave me some satisfaction, as it seemed written by your appointment. Thanks for the continuance of your favour towards me, whereby has been wrought that gracious intention of my Sovereign towards me, whereof he assures me. That you may perceive my confident hope that these comforts are given me bonâ fide, I have resolved not only to forbear taking a journey likely to breed me commodity and relief, but to turn me towards my own country as far as Rouen, whither I mean to remove with my wife and her household, to attend there the good hour of Her Majesty's putting in effect her gracious intention towards me.

Fearing from your weighty affairs that you might forget my small particulars I have required the bearer, my countryman and well-wisher, Thos. Heron, to remind you.

You may perceive, by this alteration of my course, that I am not animal feræ naturæ, but such one as hath animum revertendi, to use the phrase of our law Latin. Indeed I find that saying so true, dulcis odor patriæ, that the air I shall breathe on the hills near Rouen, looking towards England, will be sweeter than I can draw from any other part. You are, I trust, persuaded that if affection to Prince and country did not move me, I would not so long continue thus constant and earnest in seeking to be reconciled to Her Majesty's favour, this time when the world already is come to the show of more compassion of our case than has appeared these years past, wherein yet we have ridden out the storm without reproach. God be blessed, who seemeth now to touch the heart of our Sovereign and yours with charitable respect to our case, pitiful indeed, if our loyalty and constant faith to God, our Prince, and country be weighed in equal balance. Pray move Her Majesty that her dealing towards me may show that correspondence of pitiful affection which good princes use to show to their humble and loyal subjects. You know that parcere subjectis, nobilis natura leonis, and Her Majesty can never show favour in one case more honourably, or availably in part to stop men's mouths, than now, when the Christian world abroad sounds nothing with greater noise, or with more unpleasant bruit, in pulpits, books, and common talk, than the late vigorous persecution of the peaceable Catholics of our nation, which most Christian princes and estates, allowing and confessing the same faith, seem much to stomach, or at least to dislike, and sensibly to pity. [$1\frac{1}{2}$ pages.]

April 5. 65. — to Secretary Walsingham. Send the bearer back again soon ; if you send any other as Lieger, he will have no faith in me, except this man James Painter come with him. It is better that you should send some one that might abide here for a time. The Earl of Westmoreland and Dacre are returning out of Flanders hither, with many more. Send me your opinion of me, for the book of M. Hues is very seditious and hurtful, and this I now send describes your Queen as the She of Babylon. Send none but Jas. Painter, and so that neither the Ambassador nor any one else know anything of it, for God's sake. [1 page.]

66. Henry Lord Percy to Sec. Walsingham. Sir Hen. Cobham, ambassador here, has informed you that Paget seeks to dissuade me from my religion, and to deal with me in undutiful practices. When I heard of it, I grieved much, not knowing what disgrace his report might bring me into with Her Majesty and my father, till I remembered that this bare report, without reason or truth, would not be imparted to any by you to my hurt, until you heard what I could say in my defence.

Paget did resort to me, but I never heard other speeches than became a dutiful subject; had he dealt with me in other terms, I would not have allowed his company; but, nevertheless, when I heard such hard constructions, as I would be loath to do anything that might shake me in the favour of Her Majesty, I prayed Paget to forbear my company, which he willingly did, and as soon as he could provide a lodging farther from me, he removed.

His desire to have Her Majesty's favour, which appeared by his retired life, and also his saying how you were a means to Her Majesty for her favour towards him, and that he might haunt such as were over here with licence, made me accept his company. I trust therefore you will close up these reports, so as I may hold the favour of Her Majesty, and the good conceit of my friends, and that you will warn the Ambassador not to be so credulous. 67. Henry Lord Percy to his father, the Earl of Northumberland. I am sorry for your disquiet, through an advertisement of the Ambassador of England that Mr. Paget is about to alter me in religion, and practices with me in matters offensive to Her Majesty. Neither is true; Mr. Paget has always carried himself dutifully (his private opinion in religion I speak not of,) or I would not entertain his company. I am greatly beholden to him for tendering my well-doing, and advising me to preserve myself in the favour of Her Majesty, and in your good conceit.

I went, three weeks ago, to my Lord Ambassador, and to satisfy him, offered to conform to any course that he wished, but he refused me, with very passionate speeches, and was more ready to take hold of false accusations against me, than of my true allegations in my defence. He will think it much to his discredit to be known to have advertised untruths against me, and therefore he may fortify the course he has begun. But as he shall never herein have any sure ground to work upon, so I beseech you, with the help of your friends in Court, to meet his practices for hurting me. Whereof I nothing doubt, so long as I keep myself dutiful and loyal towards Her Majesty, and obedient to you. [1 page.]

68. Charles Paget to Sec. Walsingham. The Earl of Northumberland being advertised by the Lord Ambassador concerning his son, Lord Percy, and me, and being desirous to know the true grounds thereof, has sent his man hither, who, having examined Lord Percy and me before witnesses, will I trust bring such a report as shall breed contentment to the Earl, and our purgation.

VOL. XXVII.

I offered to attend the Ambassador to satisfy him, but could not obtain that favour, as it was a thing not agreeable with his place; he has no other foundation to work upon, for proving me a practitioner against the State, but the speeches you used to him when here, wishing him not to accept of my resort to him, and which I suppose passed from you by way of advice, not meaning it should be published; but he has declared to divers that you willed he should not allow of my presence, as it was well known how I am affected to the Queen of Scots.

I assure myself it had been very proper for his place to execute justice, search out truth, and have more charity; but since he is carried away with his own humour, I hope his course shall not prove disloyalty in me, but too much credulity in him. I see in this case I should be forced to yield to the malice of time and fortune, were you not an upright judge; I have no comfort but your wisdom and humanity, by means whereof I doubt not, in time, to conduce my suit to Her Majesty, for her gracious favour, and overthrow all impediments. I will cleave to your advices in all my actions, matters of conscience in religion excepted; therefore I not only beseech that the Ambassador's information against me may not remain in suspense with you or any other, to my hurt, but also that you will direct me your advice for wiping away anything that may stop Her Majesty's favour from me, and devise some course for preserving my credit, which he seeks to crack with those of our nation on this side, that I may have their company without their fear of me; otherwise I shall be in those hard terms that no Englishman in these parts has ever been before, in being banished from all his own countrymen. [1 page.]

April 21. 69. John de Critz to Sec. Walsingham. I hope you have Paris. received my last letter and the pictures by James Painter, and crave your pleasure in any further service. If I had known your pleasure concerning my voyage into Italy, I might now go safely either with the Ambassador of Venice or Ferrara, but I stay to know your pleasure herein. Pray signify it with speed, as the ambassadors are about to depart.

If you mislike of my going into Italy, I might go to Fontainebleau, from whence I might send you some rare piece of work. [$\frac{2}{3}$ page.]

April 21. 70. Charles Merbury to Sec. Walsingham. I delivered your Paris. letters to the Lord Ambassador. I used the liberty you vouchsafed, in taking my way by Rouen, for business of my own. I have also declared to the Ambassador the suit of the town of Chester, as well as that of my own; he has undertaken, on your recommendation, to do his endeavours, although he seems to have small hope of success. I will not fail to put him in mind of both. [$\frac{1}{2}$ page.]

76. Thos. Copley to Sec. Walsingham. I see, by letters from Mr. Heron, that he has found such inclination in you to favour me as gives him encouragement to prosecute my suit. I cannot express my joy received by his and Mr. Tomson's letters, not so much for the increase of my means to live, by restitution of my own, which I have lived so many years without, but that I shall return again to the service of my Sovereign, whose person I dearly love, and will adventure my life in her service, she dealing with me according to the hope I am put into. I never imputed to her the hard dealing used against me, but chiefly to one whom God would not suffer to live to enjoy such benefit of my livelihood as he hoped for. God forgive us all.

The wise man saith, Fili, accedens ad servitutem Dei, præpara animam tuam ad tentationem; so now the adversary, seeing my resolution to return to the service of my Sovereign, is likely enough to stir up some of his instruments to hinder both me and Her Majesty's service. But to all such I will oppose, first the help of God, who sees my sincere intention both towards Him and my Queen, and next the princely heart of Her Majesty, inclined to clemency, and your wisdom, which I trust will consider of the quality of such a Friar Rushe. I may say with the apostle, Nihil mihi conscius sum, sed in hoc non justifeor. Such is the malice of the world that I may even yet be thrust out of all grace with Her Majesty, and she be defrauded of a loyal servant, if more credit should be given to uncharitable surmises than to my protestations, with all loyalty to yield quæ sunt Cæsaris Cæsari, Her Majesty licensing me to remain where I may also with security, Reddere quæ sunt Dei Deo, according to my conscience. time he had nothing to write but that Parsons, the Jesuit, had lately commended an Englishman to the Pope, who gave him eight crowns a month, and within a few days after, upon suspicion, committed him to Count Savello, and another of the nation for keeping him company.

Banes has had the strapado, and is often tormented. Gryllon, a Jesuit, was lately sent into Scotland, and escaped very hardly. Mr. Dutton is better used, and has more liberty than he was wont by D. Lewys' means. Cardinal Mandruccio is gone to the Diet at Augusta. The Duke of Florence's son and heir is dead.

78. Statement that on April 12, 1582, Julian Basin, of Dinart in Bretagne, appeared before Sir Thos. Leighton, captain of Guernsey, Nicholas Carey, lieutenant, and Thos. Wigmore, bailiff, and eight jurats, stating that he had bought a ship, called the Swan, with its goods, from Corneille Jacob; that the justice had sequestered the goods, because Jacob had not authority to sell them, giving the owners power to reclaim them within three months, which if not done, they should belong to Basin, on his paying the money agreed on, and the expenses of the master in the island, and his returning to his country. No one having come to reclaim the ship, he begs leave to possess it on these terms; and the governor declares that he shall do so, with a reduction on the prize of 543 crowns of 243, for his expenses in seeking justice; 300 crowns to be paid at once, and the rest in 15 days.

Also that on 3 May 1582, Basin appeared before John de Vic, notary of the Court Royal of Guernsey, and declared that he had delivered, for 325 crowns, 15 millions of Brazil to John Carlet and John Durant, who were to carry the same at their cost to Rouen, sell them there, and deliver to Basin any surplus they might receive over 325 crowns, and he to pay them the difference if they sold it for less. 79. Sec. Walsingham to Charles Paget. I send by the bearer the token you sent me; if you think me mercenary, you mistake me. A plain course is the best, and I see it is very hard for men of contrary dispositions to be united in goodwill. You love the Pope, and I do not hate his person, but his calling; until this impediment be removed, we two shall neither agree in religion toward God, nor in true devotion towards our Sovereign. 80. Note, addressed to "Your Honour," of matters that passed between William Norris, deceased, Sir John Danvers, and James Cressy, concerning the sale and purchase of Eaton manor, co. Berks, towards payment of the debts of Thomas Weynman, deceased.

It was agreed that the manor should be conveyed to Sir John Danvers and his heirs for 7,700*l.*, which sum was to be applied towards payment of Weynman's debts. Such statutes and recognizances as were acknowledged by Weynman in his lifetime, for which William Norris stands bound to Sir John Danvers in 12,000*l.*, to be first paid thereout, so that the manor might be free. Such as were acknowledged to Mr. Huddleston or his wife, to Harman, a prebend of Windsor, and to Mr. Borne, were to have priority; Lord Norris and his wife, Mr. Huddleston and his wife, and James Cressy and his wife were to levy fines to Sir John Danvers, for discharging any titles they might claim therein.

All this Cressy at first agreed that he and his wife would perform, and was the person that procured Sir John Danvers to enter into such purchase, and always seemed willing thereto, as his wife's jointure was to be discharged by payment of Weynman's debts; but since he procured 500*l.* from Sir John, which he promised should be paid to Harman to discharge the statute to him, he not only detains this, but wants Harman to extend his statute on the manor of Eaton for payment of the whole 900*l.* due thereon, retaining the money that should discharge it, as also other sums paid by Sir John towards discharging those statutes in the hands of Huddleston.

By your order, he has the lease of the manors of Chastilions and Beckinsfield assigned to him, which are things of great value, and should have discharged Weynman's debts to Her Majesty in respect of Mr. Borne's statute, and to others; he also agreed to account to the Earl of Leicester and you for all sums he should receive thereby, but he has not done so. He also promised that he and his wife would levy the said fine, but has hitherto refrained from so doing, upon various pretexts, such as his wife being with child, and so forth; and latterly he has absolutely refused to do so.

In consideration that the said debts should be paid, Sir John Danvers paid the greater part of the purchase money, and tendered the residue, amounting to 2,000*l.*, at the time limited in the conveyance made by Weynman, but it was not received, as there was no executor or administrator after the death of William Norris, and so it remained in Sir John Danvers' hands. He paid it on a bond of Lord Norris, Mr. Huddleston, and you for repayment, yet delivered the bond to be cancelled, on Cressy's promise to levy the fine, which he now refuses to do. Sir John therefore requests that, as all the above matters were specially ordered by you, you will order the said statutes to be discharged, and so the said manor, which he has dearly paid for, disencumbered, and the fine levied by Cressy and his wife, according to conscience and good dealing. It is reported here that the enemy goes about to besiege Geneva, and the strangers who were lately there are all gone out of the town, so that I have altered my journey thither, and intend, by your favour, going to Rouen, and remaining there until my return to England, which will be towards Christmas, except you command me to tarry on other service. 84. Chas. Paget to Sec. Walsingham. I received back again the token I sent you, which I offered with as good a mind as ever I did anything to any friend I have, of which number I esteemed you to be, and assure you that the difference in religion should not have been any impediment on my part to the execution of all dutiful offices towards you, whose friendship I verily believed of more force than that you would have been carried, upon the report of my adversary, to condemn me, and withdraw your favour before you had heard what I had to say in my defence. You charge me with cunning dealing, and that I meant to make you a stalking horse. Let indifferency take place, and it shall appear to you and everybody that I have ever acted the part of a gentleman and a Christian, and I never meant to use you as a stalking horse, or to deal cunningly with you, but to love and honour you, and trusted that God had appointed me an honourable friend and patron in you, as you promised at our last being together in this town, when you were not ignorant of my religion, against which you now except.

My grief at this your undeserved alteration towards me is very great, and the more as such of my friends as I best account of, yielding me their favours no longer than I guided myself to your liking, when they shall understand hereof, will be alienated from me. I hoped at least you would have had commiseration of my present necessity, and given your opinion on my journey into Italy, which I mean to perform this next fall. I will not easily believe, without further matter, but that you will favour me in all my just causes. [1 page.]

leave to refresh your memory in my case, which is more hard than it need to be, if my singular confidence in your friendship, which I hear never fails where it is promised, did not make me foreslow all other means of helping myself. Would I had ability to expect so long as I could be content to do, rather than seem importunate; but the many mouths daily feeding on my poor purse, and my absence from the place wherein relief groweth, suffers me not to do as I would; well you know Durum telum necessitas, morasque extrema recusant. Deliver me from extremities, for God's sake, who sees with what loyalty I mean to serve my Sovereign, if received into her favour, which I never deserved to lose. But I therefore flee to mercy, urge not justice, and pray your aid, as you know what the wise man said, Vir misericors bene facit animæ suæ. [1 page.]

86. William Holt to Clavitus Maltherve, a Jesuit at Paris. I understand that you have had a special care for those sent to travel in this isle, according to the charge given to you, as well for the affection borne towards us, as for the order taken therein by the chief of our society. I would stir you up the more to help me, considering my necessity; having remained a year in the English college at Rome with Father Gaspar Heywood, I was sent from thence to England, and afterwards arrived here in Scotland. I need not write you touching the estate of this Church, you are so often advised thereof; pray consider my poor estate, and if any occasion offer remember me for some supply. Your letters would greatly comfort me, and if you hear anything of Sursary, remember me, seeing he knows not what has become of me.

Archdeacon Movet has safe means to send to me, but nothing can well be written without cypher; if you will furnish me, I will write largely and plainly. The bearer hereof returns with the Duke of Guise's servants, who having brought presents to the King, go not empty away. The chief is St. Paolo, an Italian, who has so carried himself that he has purchased great love and credit to his master from hence, but not without envy of those of this nation, especially the ministers, who railed vehemently against him, his master, and others of the chief nobility here; thereupon the King forbid one of them to preach, and expelled him out of Edinburgh. There is great danger of some tumult. Salute Mr. Claude Ag.; if he is removed, let me know who is in his place. [$1\frac{3}{4}$ pages.]

87. Sir Thomas Leighton to Sec. Walsingham. We were enjoined by Council to make an abstract of our laws and customs, and of the Queen's revenues within the Channel islands; this we have finished as well as the shortness of the time and our skill will serve, and have sent them over by a jurat, and also by Louis de Vic, procurer of this island. Pray credit him in other matters; he well understands the state of the country, and has been three voyages to Court, to defend Her Majesty's right, but has not had his charges allowed, as the jurats and popular procurers had, by a letter from Council to the country here. Pray consider him.

As to the revenues, there were some of Her Majesty's lands here that lay vacant, and others where the house was decayed and likely to be given up; yet I have let all to the inhabitants, who will increase the rents, on condition of her ratifying the grants to them and their heirs; but without this, none will build or plant them. No governor here can make a further estate than for life.

Phil. Carteret has sent to Council a supplication full of false allegations, to cause them to dismember Sark from the authority of Guernsey, under which it has always been.

Our free ministers are much offended with the placing of the Bishop's court in the island, though the Bishop's official does not interfere with them, but only judges civil causes. I bear the blame, though you did it without my knowledge, at instance of the late popular procurer. I am condemned as a backslider, because I will not oppose your orders. I am indifferent whether the ministers are equal, or a Bishop superintends; it is a thing which touches not salvation. [2½ pages.]

That no inquiry for trespass be granted unless they are present, in order that the Queen be not defrauded of her right. That all fines appear in the records of the Court. That no bargain or sale in fee-simple be of force unless under seal of the bailiff, or signed by two or three jurats. That the parties shall have relation of proceedings, if it is*

93. Articles against John Hamerton, of Hellifield Pele, co. York, for certain traitorous words against Her Majesty, viz., that they were all heretics that are of the religion now preached; that they were so proved by most learned clerks, viz., Feckenham, Bonner, Story, Cole, and such others as condemned them to be burnt, and that they all died desperate knaves; that he was Bonner's man, and helped to set fire to the faggots in Smithfield, and rejoices to think how they fried in the flame, and what service he had done God in furthering their death; that some day he might come to the burning of all the rest of this religion, and his friends would be glad to kneel down to him to save their lives; that Felton, Story, and those hanged for treason were wrongfully put to death; that the Queen could make no law to put men to death for their religion; that those died like apostles and martyrs, and that the Pope is head of the Church, next under God.

He is also suspected of traitorous speeches in Wm. Ardington's house, in Craven, as that Campion, and those that suffered with him, were wrongfully condemned; this can be proved by examination of the vicar of Gargrave, and Hen. Ardington, a most faithful Protestant. He maintained divers persons who fled from their houses for religion, and it is thought that books, beads, or papistical libels will be found in his house. Interrogatories whereon Drs. John Hamond and Mat. Carew, appointed by the Lord Chancellor, are to examine George Carleton and John Hastings, on behalf of William Lord Montjoy :

1. Were there not lands in Yorkshire mortgaged to John Browen for a debt of James Lord Montjoy, and did you not induce Lord Montjoy to discharge those lands, and to mortgage Canford in lieu thereof ?

2. Did you not sell the said lands in Yorkshire for 1,210*l.*, and therewith redeem Puddleton manor from Sir Mat. Arundel, and have it passed into your own name and upon trust ?

3. Did not Lord Montjoy get a bill to exchange Canford and Puddleton for 200*l.* of the Queen's lands, and did you not meanwhile get Canford and Puddleton passed to the Earl of Huntingdon, thus hindering the exchange, and procuring Lord Montjoy's creditors to do the same ?

Also 10 more questions relating to the share taken by the said persons, as commissioners in trust for Lord Montjoy, in the sale of the said lands to the Earl of Huntingdon, below their worth ; to their selling to the Earl, for a consideration, the profits of Ockman's mines at Canford, which were settled in trust for Lady Catherine Montjoy and her children, though knowing that the Earl pretended a little to the inheritance ; and to their suffering Lord Montjoy to sell Spettsbury and other lands, at a sixth of their value. 94. Sir Thomas Copley to Sec. Walsingham. The long time makes me feel that there is no proportion between the delays of the Court and the necessity which presses me, and that my long lingering without going to the place to which I have been called, my absenting myself out of the Low Countries in a time of so great service, my dutiful speeches of Her Majesty, and open show of hope by your means to find favour at home breed me many inconveniences, by cooling my credit with such as think that no love to Her Majesty or other natural affection should make me offer service to enemies to the Catholic faith, and vehement persecutors of all that possess it. It is high time for me to repair my credit abroad, lest between two stools I fall to the ground. It grieves me to see so little account made of the loyal heart I bear to Her Majesty, not only by the bond of allegiance, but by nature also, the Earl of Wiltshire, her grandfather, and my grandfather having been sons of two sisters, co-heirs to Lord Wells, by which side also your wife, being descended of my father's sister, may challenge the honour due to that benefit of nature.

My dutiful affection to her person was the cause that I endured imprisonment in Queen Mary's time, for speaking in Parliament in her favour, for which, at her coming to the Crown, she said to me (having been, as I think, the first that was sent to her with letters from this side of the seas), that she owed me a good turn; she might easily pay it without charge, by commanding my own revenues to be rendered to me, which have been detained so many years, and I should take it for as great a favour as if she had given me so much yearly of her coffers. Only this I crave of you, Quod facis fac citius, quia quod cito factum gratum erit; in-gratum gratia tarda facit. If you see, as my friends on this side think, that there is no favour meant me there, then remember your promise not to hold me long in suspense. You assured me eight months ago that, upon your motion of my suit, Her Majesty gave so gracious ear that you thought you should be able, by next post, to send me joyful news, and your answers have still continued me in that hope. Pray refresh her memory with that good counsel of the wise man, Ne dicas amico tuo, vade et revertere, et cras dabo tibi, cum statim possis dare. I cannot hold out attending in this place more delays, without seeking other means for relief; I should be too improvident to let go my hold of my old approved friends abroad, before some fruit grew to me of the hopes given me from home. Resolution therefore is all I desire. If it prove favourable, it will give me courage to do well; if otherwise, I trust to please God by patient suffering of evil. I am persuaded that the hope wherein I have been so long entertained from home shall not prove altogether frustrate.

I presume, in accomplishment of my promise, to send your wife a formal grant, sealed and signed by me, of an annuity of 100*l.* upon my manor of Gatton, in Surrey, while I shall, by your good means, be permitted to remain abroad; which I trust she and you will take in good part, considering I do not give it thereby to seek partial favour in variance with justice, but in a mere matter of grace, in which case such great recognitions of greater benefits received are so usual and so thankfully taken, even of great princes, as where they be omitted, the parties pleased are justly condemned of ingratitude. And further, lest any of my Lords or others of the Council might be a hindrance of my suit,—not for malice to my person, for there is not one of them that I ever particularly offended, but for disdain that I had not so much as once sued to them for their favours,—I write the letter enclosed to them, referring its delivery or retaining to your wisdom. 95. The Council to Mr. Windham and Mr. Popham. Chris. Thornton, plaintiff, has a matter to be tried before you next assizes against Robt. Clough, for a title of lands in right of Eliz. Clough, wife of Chris. Thornton. He, to vindicate his right, obtained exemplification, under the seal of the Court of the Marches of Wales, of the depositions of certain witnesses, and the defendant could not show cause against his petition. But on 17th February, Richard, son of Robert Clough, stole the records out of the office of the chief clerk of that court, so that the plaintiff will be damaged unless he may have copies of the records. We request you to further his cause. [1 pages.] Also, particular persons grieved with the present Government, consider whether at the commissioners' first sitting, the assembly should be asked whether they are aggrieved with the bailiff and jurats' government, as contrary to their privileges and charters. Thus inquiry may be made into their liberties in matters of appeal, and corrections used towards those who have troubled Queen and Council, and burdened the country with the charges of this commission.

If it be found that the whole community complain, the commissioners must examine how far their privileges extend, and as the greatest matter is for appeals, which in the time of assizes, were allowed to the justices of assize, the commissioners must enquire in what cases it was lawful to appeal. Then they must look into the judgments of the bailiffs and jurats complained of.

The allowance for the commissioners must be appointed by the assembly, as usual in such cases, and with as small charge to the people as may be. The charge should be laid upon all, if the commission was desired by all; if not, the greatest put upon those who have caused the charge; for it would be an innovation to allow the captain to tax them, especially in this case, where he makes himself a party against the bailiff and jurats. It should be appointed by the Lords according to the proportion paid to Her Majesty for determining controversies in the island.

But as it may seem strange to the commons to be burdened about the commission, pray consider whether it were not best, before the commission proceed, for the lords to write to the states of the isle, to know whether the bailiff and jurats have misgoverned themselves, as informations have been sent in of their acting contrary to the customs of the isle and liberties of Normandy, so that better order may be taken; also to know what their customs are touching depredations. 96. Sir Thomas Leighton to Council. You write me that Philip Carteret of Jersey has exhibited a petition to you, requiring a certain jurisdiction erected by his father in the island of Sark, and continued 18 years. You ask my opinion, as Sark is in my government. This jurisdiction is in contempt of that of Her Majesty; none should hold such courts and officers but kings and queens of England and dukes of Normandy, and Carteret should be reprov'd. The records of the court, which I have sent you by Louis de Vic, show that it has been erected not 18 years, but only two, I being then absent from my charge. It is not so much the simple inhabitants disliking to be governed by Guernsey laws, but the pride of their landlord, who would have none overlook his doings. No inconvenience can arise by suppressing this court, and making Sark, like Alderney, subject to Guernsey. It would be a wrong to Guernsey to transfer it to Jersey, as required, for since the Conquest, all causes, civil and criminal, in the islands are to be decided by the bailiff and jurats of Guernsey. should be awarded to the lieutenant and some of the jurats, to consider who in the island should enjoy this privilege, and the descent for these lands and houses be directed by the four principal houses of the isle, but the tenure remain as it is, and no houses be dismembered, but on certificate to have them reduced to certainty by patent.

The 2nd article, being at the suit of the inhabitants, should be assented to, and order taken who shall have the receipt thereof, to the use named in the petition.

The 3rd article should be assented to, and the isle helped by Her Majesty's order, as it used by the Norman laws, and by custom.

The party appealing, contrary to the order already set down by the Lords, should be imprisoned by the justices, without bail or mainprize. [1 page.] Also,

Like report for the matter of Sark. The inheritance of the island is in M. Carteret, who is to maintain there 40 families, which he has performed, and use a lcet.

Sir Thos. Leighton is, by patent, captain of that island, as well as of Guernsey and Alderney.

The inhabitants of Sark are from Jersey, and during the 17 years it has been inhabited, have used Jersey laws, but without warrant, as their laws should be prescribed by Queen and Council. Order should be taken by what laws they shall be governed. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page.]

According to your order, I have travailed to the uttermost in the cypher which you sent me, wherein I had success, as appears by what accompanies this; if not so good as was wished, yet I hope sufficient to satisfy Her Majesty, who shall thereby find the substance of the letter. To testify my pains, it shall be found, Mr. Sommer being judge, that those imperfect lines have been worn out of the hard rock. I have had to do, as you know, with many cyphers, but I never lit upon any wherewith I was more cumbered, nor wherein the observations which I serve myself of in these occasions did more fail me; therefore, you must take in good part the events you find herein, although it be a language wherewith I should be well acquainted, considering that either of ignorance or policy, the writer has made so many faults, as well in the Latin as the orthography, that I was fain to supply it almost everywhere by conjecture, to make sense; but I send a draft of the letter as it was written, wherein may be seen what itself did yield, and what and why it is by me left out or supplied. I trust such order shall be taken with the messenger as he shall tell more plainly what is meant, which I think is some such Romish legation of Jesuits into that realm as that of the last year, against whose practices the Lord defend us.

I understood by my father your remembrance of my patent, as also your promise of protection against Mr. P., for which I thank you. There is no cause why he should be favoured against my father, in a matter wherein he can prove himself free from all either intent or effect of wrong; I doubt not but you have that regard of him that one of his religion, faction, and course of life deserve, making the countenance of some great personages, and some good gifts of his own a colour of his insolences. 1. Whether Philip Carteret, holding it by tenure of the 20th part of a knight's fee, shall answer pleas holden in Guernsey, like other freeholders in capite? Whether the salt house belongs to the Queen or Carteret, and to which belong the customs on wares, ships, &c., wreck of sea? Whether Carteret be exempt from payment of the 13th on the sale of land, and the inhabitants from the rent called fumagium? Whether Carteret may levy for rent, corn, and poultry a greater price than rated at Guernsey? 2. That they have a seneschal and two vavascurs appointed by the governor of Guernsey, to decide simple quarrels not exceeding 40s. Appeals to be made before the bailiff and jurats of Guernsey. [Marginal amendment:] To have three jurats, as in Alderney, to give sentence on causes under 10*l*.

3. A clerk of the court to record all matters and causes.

4. To have a provost to plead the Queen's causes as a procurer, to adjourn and distrain as a serjeant, and to receive amerçiements, and yield account thereof to Guernsey.

5. To have a constable and vingtonier, as at Guernsey.

6. The inhabitants to observe the laws, customs, and ordinances of Guernsey.

July 24. 102. Sir Thomas Copley to Sec. Walsingham. As Painter, the post, Rouen. was ready to depart, I received a letter from Mr. Heron, wherein I perceive your intention to do me good, and that not for any consideration you will accept at my hand, which I am sorry for, but for friendship and good will, in regard of the alliance between our houses, wherein you show the true nobility of your heart.

When I consider how, in Queen Mary's time, the Earl of Bedford that now is, Sir Francis Knollys, Sir Anthony Cook, Sir Philip Hoby, Sir Thomas Wroth, Sir John Cheeke, Sir Nicholas Throckmorton, and divers others found favour from those of contrary religion, I cannot despair but time may also yield to us, whose turn it is now to be afflicted, some friends that for charity's sake will correspond with us, for there can be no true faith which is void of charity. This charity has moved such as have helped some on this side of the sea to enjoy their living, with liberty of conscience; nevertheless, they came over without special licence, as well as I; so I trust, I may find like friends and favour at the hands of Her Majesty and her Council. Since God has inclined you to take my matter in hand, who have the bruit to be faithful to your friends, and of will and ability to do me good, I cannot but hope a speedy and joyful resolution. If I be not fast and faithful to you, condemn me for the most ingrate man that lives. Resolution, whatsoever it be, is the thing I desire, for if I linger longer, I am undone. My long treaty with you has bred great buzzes in the heads of many that mislike my looking back towards my living at home. [1 page.]

103. Sir Henry Wodrington to Lord Hunsdon. Last Wednesday, there were books and pamphlets thrust into the church, which were found by the clerk in the morning, and the like put through the wicket of your gate, which I send you, as also a proclamation which I caused to be made the same day. I examined such as were strangers in the town, but could not find anything against them, save one, who left the town the morning that these things were disclosed; nevertheless I wrote to my Lord Warden to direct letters to Morpeth and Newcastle for his apprehension, according to marks on his horse and garments, and also to make search within his wardenry for him.

I have one Robt. Aer, soldier under Capt. Carvell, in prison on suspicion, as he accompanied the man; he says that his name was Coupland, born in Suffolk and dwelling in Yorkshire, and that a soldier in the town, named Cockrell, knew him better; I sent for Cockrell, who stated that he (Coupland) was in this town and drank in his house six months since, but that when he saw him lately, he would not know him. Aer will confess nothing, but he was with him the day before, playing at cards until 9 at night, and then they lodged together.

The next morning, Coupland seemed desirous of company southward again, and there were some who rode southward that morning, and expected he would have gone with them, but Aer stayed him till the other company was gone, and then conveyed him over the bridge. Coupland overtook the company he should have gone with in the morning, and rode with them, but never spoke a word, and at Alnwick left them. What is possible to be done by inquisition I shall slack no time in perfecting, to find out the utterers and authors. We have appointed our mawing day to be 13 August. [2 pages.]

I should have sent some Metridac treacle and salt earth, but I thought you had enough. The bearer of them has brought other excellent things from Constantinople for resisting poison, and especially unicorn's stone, which may be tried before buying it with good success, on animals to whom arsenic has been given.

He has also balm of Judæa, turpentine of Scio, and other rare drugs. He has also silver medals, idols of Isis, taken from mummies, &c. I expect soon some manna from Lebanon, which will be good for your complexion. Thanks for your good treatment of my brother. [1 page, French.]

They have forced his creditors three times to imprison him. 107. Henry Cheek to Henry Earl of Huntingdon. By our general letters you may perceive the store of priests and seeds of rebellion which are cherished in this country; besides those lately taken, there were two others in their company who escaped. Thomson was very near being taken by Mr. Wortley, who overtaking him carrying a long pike staff upon his shoulders, examined him and his companion as to where they lodged the night before, and finding a variety in their answers, began to suspect them, and found Thomson to be a priest. I was informed by Wortley that they left a cloak bag full of vestments at Thos. Waterton's house, whereupon I directed a commission for taking him and his wife; but before the pursuivant came, they fled, and, as is supposed, are now with her brother, Mr. Draycott of Painsley, in Staffordshire. If you procure a commission from Council for their apprehension there, I think they will easily be found, or at least taken here by a commission dormant.

The justices of assize required me, at their departure, to commend them to you, and to signify their want of your presence here; they were forward in proceeding against the traitors and recusants. Mr. Attorney took great pains in furthering the service.

The assembly at the arraignment of the priests was very great, especially of Papists, so that the Court was in great disorder, and the justices of assize forced to make room themselves like ushers. The attainder of these traitors has done some good, but their present execution would do more. Pray labour with Council for it as soon as may be, or at the least that of one of them.

I hope we shall shortly receive the commission and instructions for this Council, whereof we have often great want, not knowing how far we may proceed in divers cases by warrant. If the business here is not great, and I am not otherwise commanded, I mean, after the sitting, to take the country air for a fortnight or three weeks, with Sir Thos. 108. Thomas Arundel to his father, Sec. Walsingham. At my coming out of England, intending to pass the course of the Rhine, you favoured me with letters of recommendation to the Count Palatine; but seeing my journey frustrated, I restored you them at Paris. The same intention being renewed, I hope the same favour.

The Prince of Piedmont's soldiers lie scattered about Geneva, so that the entry is dangerous; so I have not yet delivered your letters to Master Beza, but will the first opportunity, and hope ere long the state of the town will be brought to such quietness that I may remain there sometime, rather as a scholar than a soldier. In my return thence, I will see the territories of the Count Palatine, and the Duke Casimir, and therefore desire to have letters to them.

I understand some false accusers,—to set forward either their own private cause or that of their friends,—have burdened me with matters I never thought of; but seeing the time of my return draws on, I will not commit my just excuse to these few lines. I hope in all my proceedings you will vouchsafe me such counsel as proceeds from a favourable father to a loving and obedient son. [$1\frac{1}{2}$ pages.]

Doubting however whether my letter came to your hands, I certify you thereof, that you may not impute my weakness to want of desire to serve you, but of means and ability to satisfy you.

111. Sir Thos. Leighton to Sec. Walsingham. As the information against Louis de Vic proceeds from all the ministers here, I have examined them and the ancients of St. Peter's port thereon. I send you their depositions. I have examined the neighbours of the man said to be slain by him. It is 16 years since De Vic, then constable, struck the man at the musters, and he has had four children since, to one of whom De Vic was godfather.

The charge of adultery could not be proved, being only brought by an ill woman. Some of the ministers protested a year since that either he would drive them out or they him, on account of his office of commissary under the bishop. Had he committed these offences, Nich. Baudouin would not have admitted him to the communion. I have always thought him honest, and the best servant I have. I fear these troubles will overthrow the Church here. 112. Petition of Louis de Vic to Sir Thomas Leighton, for favourable acceptance of his answer to the depositions of certain ministers of Guernsey, on interrogatories sent by Sir Francis Walsingham. Feeling himself unjustly accused, and his life and goods endangered, consented, though against law, to be inquested by his enemies, and sends his answer, to show their envy and untruth. The charges are, that he so beat a man as to cause his death. That he was guilty of adultery. Offered violence to an elder of the Church; and was a troubler of the ministry to the Church. Depositions and answers upon each point. Acknowledges troubling the ministers, because they preach against the authority of Queen and Council, bishops, and the government of England; they usurp the authority of the civil magistrates, disapprove law and justice, slander those that differ from them, and are always contentious, and inventing new opinions. Entreats that the orders for uniformity may be observed, and those who execute them supported, for if men are allowed to do and say as they list, dangerous effects will follow. 113. Articles by Louis de Vic against Baudoin and Wm. Beauvais. That the divine service, such as used in England, has been rejected by their means, the gates of the churches in the island closed and the pastors silenced. Ans., This is a calumny against the ministers, who have not introduced themselves into the churches, but being called by the government, and charged to keep the same order throughout, have been preaching and instructing the people, administering the sacraments, &c. Baudoin and Beauvais had no power to act as they were accused, nor would the people have endorsed it; the churches have always been open on Sundays, for preaching, prayer, and sacraments.

That Wm. Beauvais took the office of bailiff, on decease of Thos. Compton, and he and his associates took the authority of dean. Ans., This is a calumny, but at the governor's order, they did punish dissolute dames, drunkenness, &c., and this gave rise to it.

That Beauvais, magistrate, and Baudoin, minister, said it were better never to have prayers or reading in the church, than to use the English service. Ans., They would never presume to alter the form of service without permission of the governor, and consent of the elders of the Church, and this imputation is of malice. 114. Charles Paget to Sec. Walsingham. I have so governed myself, in all my actions, that my conscience does not accuse me either of undutifulness to Her Majesty,—my coming over without licence excepted,—or misbehaviour towards you, whatsoever my adversaries have informed you to the contrary. Let not their slanders destroy the good you meant me, but since both they and I depend upon your sentence, pronounce judgment answerable to your accustomed bounty, their malice, and my innocency.

Upon your promise to do what lay in your power to repair my unfortunate estate, I made a liberal present to you of my affection and service, and cannot, without grief, withdraw it. Pray give me cause to augment rather than diminish my love. In my answer to Her Majesty's command for my return to England, assist me that she may yield me her favour and liberty of conscience in religion, as I most humbly petitioned, and thereupon I will make speedy return. If this cannot be done, then solicit her for my enjoying my small living on this side the sea, whereby I may be kept from necessity, which otherwise will force me to seek relief of some foreign prince. If I receive any comfort, I will attribute it to you. [1 page.]

115. Summary of the mode ordered by Pope Gregory XIII. for correcting the year:—

The spring equinox, fixed for 21 March, being removed 10 days from its place, so that Easter does not take place at the proper time, the Pope commands that 10 days be taken away from October 1582; that is, that the feast of St. Francis having taken place on 4 Oct., the following day shall not be the 5th but the 15th, and the subsequent feasts of the year celebrated accordingly. That these changes may not be prejudicial to any contracts made by month or year, the judges are empowered to add 10 days to each. All persons, in Rome or elsewhere, are forbidden, on pain of excommunication, to use any other calendar than that printed by consent of Antonio Gilio (or Lilio). With complete calendar of Oct., Nov., and Dec. 1582, passing from 4 Oct. to 15 Oct., and table of moveable feasts, and lunar calendar accommodated for the three last months of 1582, and for 1583. 116. Robert Gascoigne to Sec. Walsingham. I have gone through the posts to Berwick, and in my journey have examined the books in general, and find default in every one of them. Since my coming, Sir Hen. Wodrington, marshal there, sent letters to the Lord Treasurer, Lord Hunsdon, and you, and delivered them to the posts there at 5 p.m. of Aug. 25, which were not received at Belford until 12 at night, and at Alnwick until 10 a.m. of the 26th, so that they were 17 hours between Berwick and Alnwick. The post of Belford alleges that his boy fell in the water. The defects of all will appear by their books, of which I have made a copy for August and September. In my return, I shall give every post certain articles, of which I enclose a copy, and if you shall be pleased to reform anything, inform me of it. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page.] Enclosing,

116. i. Orders by Queen and Council to be observed by all the posts between London and Berwick:—

Every postmaster receiving any packet of letters from Sir Fras. Walsingham, or any of the Council for Her Majesty's affairs, is to affix a label, subscribed with his name, of the day and hour that it came to his hands.

VOL. XXVII.

To keep a paper book, wherein he shall enter the day and hour of the receipt of such packets, agreeing with the label.

To keep two or three good horses in his stable, for speedy conveyance of such packets, the person carrying such to ride six miles an hour.

If any of them break these orders, it will be to their uttermost peril.

With marginal note that few or none of them have any horses in their stable, but all at grass, and very many ill horses. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page.] 30 Sept. 1582.

117. Sir Henry Cobham to Sec. Walsingham. I received the enclosed from Mr. Paget, one of which is directed to Her Majesty. I perceive by his speeches that they have given him to understand he was greatly in your favour, and so likely to recover Her Majesty's good grace, but now disgraced by my letters. I am wronged therein, having certified nothing to his prejudice, save his keeping company with Lord Percy, which I did only to discharge my duty, as the proceedings seemed to be noted to others. As the young Lord is a principal personage of the realm, I was moved to write to you and to my Lord Treasurer thereof, by whose letters my Lord Percy was recommended to my care.

If I had not esteemed it appertained to the office of Her Highness's minister, I should not have meddled therein, either for gain, vain-glory, malice, or ambition. Therefore pray let my loyal and honest manner be defended and not injured.

P.S.—I should be glad if Mr. Paget was informed that I have had no sinister dealing in his matter, and that I rather wish he were restored to the Queen's favour. When I had written thus much, Mr. Paget came to confer with me, but I sent him word that I begged to be excused; that I only spoke with him before by Her Majesty's direction, but that if he would write to her or you, or to Council, I would see his letters conveyed. [1 page.] Enclosing,

117. I. Charles Paget to Sir Hen. Cobham, ambassador in France. I sent you two letters by my man, who was told by your servant that you would send me an answer without fail, which I hoped you would have done, as I so earnestly required it, for that I reckon but a common courtesy between gentlemen.

On Wednesday I took a purgation; yesterday I had a fever; and to-day the physician has willed me not to stir abroad until I am assured what will come of my fever; so that my repair to you being uncertain, I have sent my servant with Her Majesty's letter unsealed, which, when you have perused, and my man has sealed, I beseech you to send; if you add thereto any favourable speeches, I will acknowledge it to my uttermost. I know in the place that you hold, your writing or speaking may do me good or hurt, and to hurt him that never gave you cause of offence would sound little to your commendation, but to do good to him that is in adversity is the office of charity. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page.] 28 Sept. 1582.

117. II. Charles Paget to the Queen. If your eyes could penetrate my heart, you would see my great grief at your displeasure towards me, and my great desire for your favour, which I have long made appear to you by divers of your Councel; but not receiving comfort, I presume, as the last remedy left me, to solicit to you my lamentable estate, and beseech the consideration thereof, agreeable with your wonted clemency, and my undefiled loyalty.

The declaration your ambassador has made to me of your pleasure for my return to England engenders in me no small trouble. To make an absolute refusal may seem disobedient, and augment your displeasure. To return, considering the disgrace I remain in with you, gives me fear that, either for matters of religion or for untrue informations, I shall receive such punishment as may shorten my life, or ruin my soul.

I know it is not meet for the subject to capitulate with his Sovereign, but by most humble petition I desire your gracious favour and liberty of conscience in religion, which will procure my speedy return, to spend my living and life at your command. Pray receive this my answer graciously, and retain me in the number of your faithful subjects; then no favour of foreign prince, or stipend far greater than my own small living, shall draw me to their service, but I will live and die your faithful subject and servant. 118. R. Lloyd to Sec. Walsingham. I received your letter, dated Oatlands, 12 Sept., with Mr. Stanley's licence, for which we thank you. Since it is your pleasure that I should send you such letters as Mr. Stanley sends to the Earl, his father, I will not disobey you, for it is a great favour done to him. According to your advice, we travelled towards Angers, where we now are, taking Orleans, Blois, Tours, Saumur, and other towns upon the Loire. We mean to remain the winter here, and yet I find it a place out of the way, and little frequented. The Papists and those of the religion accord very well, and none are compelled to come to church, and yet the place appointed for preaching is eight miles off. The plague still continues at Nantes, and the deaths do not cease. The people of this country are greatly addicted to the Spaniard, for fear, if Monsieur should come once to the Crown, that he would alter the religion. [1 page.]

fair houses about the country here, some of rare workmanship, but I trust to make amends for all. Meantime I send two pieces, the one of St. John, the other a poetical story taken out of Ovid, where Neptune took Cœnis by the seaside, and having ravished her, for some amends changed her into the form of a man. Take this little present in good part. I trust to send something better next time, as I have a mind to spend this winter in France, and then by your leave repair into Italy. [$\frac{2}{3}$ page.]

Oct. 21. 120. M. du Russeau to Sec. Walsingham. Thanks for your allowing me free access and return. I enclose a letter to M. Nau, my brother-in-law, telling him of my leaving London. Thanks for your having induced the Queen to satisfy the requests of the Queen of Scots, my mistress. I recommend her to you, as to one who has much credit in this kingdom. [1 page, French.]

Oct. 23. 121. Charles Paget to Sir Henry Cobham. Being advised by my physicians to go to Rouen, as it will agree better with me, and there I may drink English beer, I shall shortly follow their advice. I tell you hereof, that if you have any occasion to use me in Her Majesty's service, you may know where to have me. Pray report favourably of this and all my other actions.

P.S.—I beseech you see the letter which my man will deliver you for Mr. Secretary safely conveyed. [$\frac{1}{2}$ page.]

Oct. 31. 122. M. de Brumen to [Sec. Walsingham]. I did not send the letters before, hoping to have heard from Doctor Baillif, a learned and honourable person, who I hoped would greatly aid Mons. le Comte [of Sussex?], because besides his good advice, he listens patiently. I wish all who treated my lord were as easy to deal with. I had hoped to be able to retire with honour, after the decision of the physicians, but I am obliged to take the cure, which is very difficult and tedious; and but for the testimony you have given of me to the Queen and the Court, I would not have accepted it, seeing the crosses and oppositions I shall have from those who have formerly treated him. When I begin the eradivative cure, I will record my success.

I send you three little cushions of arsenic, to be hung round the neck, and rest about the heart, as preservatives against the plague, for you, Madame, and Mademoiselle. They have done great good in Italy, France, and Germany. I will send you other medicines, but not to be put in the mouth, as they are poison.

I am sorry to hear that M. Theligin is dead at Alost. M. du Pleins is Chancellor of the King of Navarre, an office he well deserves. Pray send my letter to Mr. Dale, about his debt to M. Pera, &c. If you get some ginger (?) I should like 3 or 4 lbs. for experiments.

The Earl of Sussex has a servant, Stanton, an honest man, who has lived at Mr. Wilson's with your servant Watson, who wants your favour about a grant made him by Her Majesty. Pray expedite his letters.

Mr. Young has been so far from exempting me from the loan, as you requested, that he has increased my tax one-half. He thinks because I visit you and other lords, I should be taxed high. I know there have been deaths and bankruptcies, which require an increase on this second collection, but it is a manifest abuse that they diminish it for some rich people, and increase it for me and those who have not solicited them. Pray speak a word to Mr. Young for me. [4 pages, French.]

123. Nich. Wilson to Sec. Walsingham. You will have thought it strange not to hear from me since my coming to France, but I wrote by a servant of my Lord Ambassador, who was robbed on the way. 124. Deposition of William Smith. While his Lordship was in France, he was visited by several persons who brought him news; viz., Woodward and Taylor, priests; Mr. Bridgewater, a priest and sometimes chaplain to the Earl of Leicester; Mr. Dallahide, an Irish priest; Messrs. Deacon, Flinton, and Shelton, merchants; Morgan, gentleman sometime of the chapel; Rogers, a broker; all of whom resided in Rouen, and resorted to him twice or thrice a week. He was also frequently visited by Mr. Throgmorton from Paris; Mr. Stourton, Lord Stourton's brother; Browne, Vause, and Talbot, of Rouen; Polydore Morgan, Pound, and Figg, priests; as also by Mr. Lee and Mr. Tichbourne, from Flanders. Thomas Brookes is his secretary, and has served him 22 years. He intends going shortly into the Low Countries, hoping to get some greater pension, but it is said he will not be so much welcomed there as he looks for, as he is thought to have dealt with England to get a living, by means whereof it is supposed he will rather lose that which he has than get more. The writer served Lord Copley in Rouen five and a half months; before that lived nine years in St. Paul's Churchyard, and is well known to Sir Thos. [sic] Walsingham. [1 page.]

fortnight, and then went to the little town of St. George, three leagues from Rouen. I was there when Mr. Gorge passed through Rouen, on his way to England with the packet. I went often into Rouen, as much to get news of you as on my own business; and three weeks ago, the danger being over, I returned there. I hope to stay till Christmas, and then go to Paris, take leave of the Ambassador, and return to London. I beg you to allow me a packet to bring me to England, that I may be with you more quickly.

Mr. Paget is come here from Paris, and says that the only way to insinuate one's-self with the Queen is through you. The Cardinal de Bourbon and his nephew (the brother of the Prince of Condé) are here to establish the said nephew Abbé de St. Antoine and Archbishop of Rouen, as he is already called. They have made some new rules for the Church, and amongst others, that all pedagogues and masters are to teach children their prayers in French, that they may understand what they have to say. Nov. 19. 127. Robert Suckling, mayor, and seven aldermen of Norwich, to Norwich. Thos. Sackford, Master of Requests. A writ of Privy Seal has been served upon John Suckling, alderman of Norwich, enjoining him, with Christian his wife, to appear before you at the suit of Thomas Cuddon of Norwich, and Elizabeth his wife. As Suckling is old and infirm, not able to travel in winter without peril of life, and his wife is also of great years, they have desired our testimony, and pray to be discharged of personal appearance, and for a commission to take their answer. Dec. 4. 130. Nicholas Wilson to Sec. Walsingham. I am much bound to you, and have no way of requital, yet I presume still to discharge my duty. It may be said to me, as a wise man answered an importunate suitor, non opportune uteris opportuno. I do not mean my often writing since I came into France, but my often moving you, after my father's departure, concerning Her Majesty's goodness towards my sisters, whose poor estates is not unknown to you; but your goodness always exceeds our deserts. I have presumed to take up my next year's allowance, and am going to Mr. Grimstone at Orleans, the plague being at Angers, and strangers there commanded to depart. Considering that a suit brought out of time cannot avail, according to your goodness towards fatherless children put under your protection, I humbly desire the continuance of your favour, and hope my industry here may redound, at my coming home, to my friends' comfort and my own content. [Dec. 16.] 131. Petition of the Vintners of Salisbury to the Council. We have been molested about the standard whereby wine is to be sold, and now, by your good means, the opinion of all the judges, with Her Majesty's counsel at law, is to be set down touching the true meaning of the law. We, having been at great charge in searching standards, as also what measure all Her Majesty's gaugers gauge and measure by, and have, by such counsel as we could retain, argued the case, which, being so rare a question, has not been greatly studied, and the statutes, being somewhat dark, are not soon understood. As this matter touches other cities generally, we pray that we may not be charged with any more arguing of the case, but rather some other cities, as London or Bristol, from whom we have received standards agreeable to their measures, as also to those of all other places by the sea coast, from London to Southampton and Poole, and so to Bristol, and gauged by Her Majesty's gaugers, in all haven towns; by which gauge and measure all wines are bought and customs paid, and which agree with the measures by which wine is sold, from London to Oxford, and to Bristol, and in all places 50 miles round, and this time out of mind. If it should be altered, Her Majesty will lose the custom of one tun in eight, and no wines can be brought into this realm but will all be forfeited, because they must contain 252 gallons the tun, which no cask ever contained by the ale gallon. We ask licence to return home, and continue our accustomed measures, until London or Bristol have tried the case. [1 page. See Dom. Eliz., Vol. CLVI., No. 18.]

132. P. Hushay to Jerome Farley alias Sec. Walsingham. Upon your faithful promise to use the matter with secrecy, I have been bold to embark dangerously in the Queen of Scots' causes, but I know into whose hands I commit my life, and therefore go on with all assurance; otherwise, unless you be fully determined not to communicate to any person living, without my consent, I must beg you to command me to strike sail betimes, before I am brought into danger.

By means too long to be detailed, I brought my kinsman Morgan to believe that I might be ranged under that ensign where they march, whom they have persuaded to be neuter, which is the first and general hold they take of such Englishmen as Truel, who, under pretence of providing for their safety, are won from liberty of speech in Parliament, roundness in execution either of public charges or their private duties, and especially heat in religion, as they term desire of reformation. Whereupon he offered me all the favour he might show, viz., with the Queen his mistress, from whom, if I would have aid, he would procure assurance thereof. So now I have insinuated myself so as that I am reputed by him and her, and those to whom he brought me, as one of her best friends in England, of my sort, and so am promised she shall acknowledge me; and by that means am got into the second band, which is of those who, knowing her innocency and right, the malice of some in detracting from either, &c., further all that in them lies her or the King of Scotland's title, without prejudice to Her Majesty.

I said that my poor good will, so far as I might lawfully do it, with a safe conscience and my allegiance, I would gladly offer her, but that in any other sort neither could I, nor I knew would the Queen of Scots demand it, which was accepted with such gladness as I perceive they hoped to make their profit of me. Should I at any time have intelligence among the third crew, I mean those that practice her liberty and ripening of her reign before the time, I can never persuade myself, being assured they will trust none therein but right (traitors?), which neither to be nor to dissemble to be I am resolute, and they find it by me. Wherefore in what kind they would presently use me, I cannot see, unless it be in conveying letters, because they speak so much of my own aid, and for that they say you deal hardly with her that way, which, when we proceed further in conference, shall appear. But it rests now that you should consider how you may serve yourself of this account of one who I find they take the Queen of Scots' and their special enemy, blaming you for your violence in all pursuits against the Queen of Scot's cause, life, and liberty, whereas others, viz., my Lord [of Leicester?] they say, can be cold enough, and content to let pass many things, whose example they think you should rather follow. Herein I stood somewhat with him, putting him in mind that whatsoever you advised, for the most part his will must be done; as I made appear, by sundry reasons and examples, that the Queen of Scots was wrapped in these miscries before you had dealings; and that you found them as my letters left them, that was such as he had made them, if they were evil; and such as it pleased the Queen they should continue, whom you would follow, wherewith he was satisfied. But I observe that they hold great opinion of my Lord's partiality that way, which if it be, under Benedicite be it spoken, I think it hard dealing thus cunningly to divert the hatred of these actions upon you, whereof he himself was the author, and as long as it pleaseth the Queen, will, I am sure, continue; but if you will advise how in this forwardness I may further serve you, in which I persuade myself I shall truly serve God and my country, you know I am bound to you, having chosen you for my lantern in this course of life, and am only yours.

I have been somewhat curious in the ciphers, as it has to pass so long a way through many dangers, and the bearer, finding favour at your hands, will be the more willing to stand me in stead from time to time. In 5 Eliz., many lands in Guernsey lying waste because no good estate could be granted therein, a commission was issued to Fras. Chamberlain, then governor, and others, to grant or demise the same. They made grants accordingly on great fines, and lands have been turned to good use. Petitioner had a grant of a mill in St. Andrew's parish, fine, 20*l.*, and has disbursed 100*l.* in rebuilding it, yet some persons have obtained a new grant thereof, overthrowing his, through some nice conceit in law. Articles have been exhibited to Council by Sir Thomas Leighton, and certain deputies from the bailiff and jurats of Guernsey, impugning the claims made by one Carteret, a gentleman of Jersey, on a patent which he has for the island of Sark, which they pretend are not in the patent. You are to examine the patents of both parties, and certify what right is due to either of them, and mediate an accord. Since the patent to Carteret's father, orders have been made for government of the isle, without consent of Sir T. Leighton and the bailiff, &c. of Guernsey, at which they are aggrieved. You must advise some form of government to content the parties. [1 page.]

2. Notes delivered by the Earl of Oxford that Lord Henry [Howard] ought to be asked how he came to the intelligence that ambassadors would come from France, Spain, and other places, to assist the King of Scots' ambassador in the demand of his mother; and that this was determined among them on the other side. Chas. Arundel and Henry [Howard] have been great searchers into Her Majesty's wealth, and have had intelligence of all her receipts from courts of law, customs, subsidies, privy seals, and fifteenths, since she came to the Crown; also the helps made by gatherings for building Paul's steeple, the lotteries, and from the clergy, and by forfeits, by attainders or otherwise; and also what pensions out of bishops' livings and gifts she has bestowed, and what charges she was at in her household; in reparations to her houses and castles; in the charges of the wars of Leith and Newhaven, and in petty journeys in Ireland and Scotland, and during the rebellion.

Charles should be asked why he sent Pike to La Motte, and who it was that went into Spain, and whether Pike went there, although he assuredly remained while the others carried letters from La Motte, and brought others back, with a recompense from the King, whereupon Pike returned with an answer to Charles Arundel, who helps

He lives to himself, and gives no more attendance, to colour his cause, as I guess, but carries on some notable practice, which he has put into other hands. He has since borne a zealous mind more than covertly to the mass.

They have often declared, the last four or five years, what increase of souls have been made to their Church, in every shire throughout the realn; who were theirs, and who not, which is all known by certain secret gatherings for the relief of those beyond seas, wherein there be notes of every household. 6. Ralph Eure to Sec. Walsingham. Your advice and direction in my first journey out of England, with your favourable letter and other courtesies, have bound me to your devotion. I therefore crave your direction in bestowing the rest of my time limited in Her Majesty's licence. Impute my earnest desire to know your will to the danger of this time, which is known to you. Neither in Italy nor any where else will I betake myself without your assent. If it please Her Majesty to employ me in service, I am ready to serve, with the loss of life and all I have. [1 page.]

8. Thomas Phelippes to Sec. Walsingham. Having arrived at Paris, my first thing is to pay my duty to you, which since my departure from Bourges, whence in August I went to Santerre, I have been forced to neglect, because of the plague which reigned in every corner of those parts, the extreme foul weather all this winter, &c. I kept myself close in places of small bruits, longer perhaps than the office of a dutiful servant required, but I think it needless to use many words in excuse; these lines are only to mention my return, that if either here or at home my poor service may stand you in stead, you may command me, as one that is the principal author of the countenance which I receive of well doing. 9. Charles Doyly to Sec. Walsingham. I received yours for Mr. Paget, who has returned an answer with a token. His only felicity in his solitary life is seeing your great goodwill towards him, without which he has no hope to attain his suit; he greatly desires licence of Her Majesty during pleasure, and hopes you will further him in it. At his request I have made so bold as to trouble you therein. I request your leave to go to Geneva this spring, where I will spend my time till my return, if meantime you have no other service for me. [1 page.]

10. Sir Thomas Copley to Sec. Walsingham. Although by a letter from Mr. Heron, 9 Feb., I deferred my journey, returned hither, and hourly expect Her Majesty's resolution touching me, yet the bearer, Painter the post, coming to know if I would write by him, I could not let him pass without some lines to you. I beseech you to get some end to that long suit of mine, for you know spes quæ differtur affligit animam. If Her Majesty knew how faithfully I mean to serve her, she, restoring my living, would not show such difficulty in using clemency towards me. Fourteen years is a long time for a man to be kept from his own, without any offence against Her Majesty. For the love of God, let that extremity by your good means have some end; let me not be driven to desperation. I trust, by your favourable handling the matter, I shall yet be so graciously reconciled to her favour, though the delays have been great, that I shall have cause as well to run through thick and thin for her service. If the thing be not already concluded, tell me by next post where the difficulty rests, and I will send such answer by my servant Brooke as I will give Her Majesty and you good satisfaction. 11. William Bishop of Chester to Dr. Dale and Thos. Seckford, Masters of Requests. I called the parties before me last assizes, but could not get them to agree; the one would not part with the land, nor the other accept of any consideration; and as neither Mr. Justice nor Mr. Thelwall could attend, by reason of their weighty business left at the last, and these assizes, the poor man is in a worse case than before. If you will take the matter into your own hands, or join with me some other commissioners resident in this county, I will do my best to quiet the parties, one way or the other. 12. Sir Thomas Copley to Sec. Walsingham. Upon perusing an account lately sent of my wife's poor portion, I find it much diminished by the charges of my long suit, and my friend tired with following it, and almost in despair of success; so I send over the bearer to beseech you to finish it. Not three days since, a schedule of 20 pistolets a month more of entertainment were sent to me, without any solicitation, whereby I perceive that others abroad are as loath to lose me as my own country is careless to keep me. Though I acknowledge this to come from the hand of God, qui neminem deserit nisi prius deseratur, yet I advertise you, that you may understand that these favours forcibly draw me against my natural bias, which inclines more to the service of my own natural Sovereign and country than of any foreign prince or state, if I might but enjoy my own. If my whole revenue be more than Her Majesty is willing to part with, obtain me a lease at a reasonable rent, so that I may let and set my land, which is going to decay, the old leases being long since expired, and the farmers, loosed from all covenants, neither looking to repairing the houses, inclosing the grounds, nor preserving the woods, and not daring to seek any new lease of the Queen, whose title is uncertain, nor of me, for fear of disturbance by the Queen. If by your favour, Her Majesty's resolution might be obtained before the Lady-day rents are collected to her use, I would bestow every penny upon some fair presents which I would make her and my friends there, to show my thankful mind; but now I have but from hand to mouth, and cannot do as I would. There are more causes why I desire to be reconciled to Her Majesty than I may yet utter, while, by want of means to live, I am bound truly to serve them by whom I live. [$1\frac{1}{2}$ pages.]

13. Sir Thomas Copley to Sec. Walsingham. By letters from Tournay, I perceive the good Prince of Parma granted my son William, seven days after his repair thither, 15 crowns a month maintenance, but the licence for me to remain here another year, which I sent him to sue for, he cannot obtain, so that I must return with speed. Thus you see how I am forced to obey such Princes as feed me and mine abroad, while my own is detained from me at home; yet better is it here to enjoy liberty, though with some lack of living, than at home to have living with want of liberty; nay of both, as the matter is now handled, by exacting the 20*l.* a month, if it be true.

I tremble to think what consequences such hard dealing is like to breed, but I will not presume to see further into the matter than you and other grave heads of Her Majesty's council. I pray God to direct all your counsels to His honour, Her Majesty's service, and the quiet of the realm; but I crave that I may not go back without some fruit of my quiet living in this country these three years, continually suing for grace at home, and drawn forth in daily expectation thereof.

My daughter of Eteves has come to a house of her husband's seven leagues on this side Mounts, and near the French frontiers, with hope to obtain her mother's company and help at her delivery of her fourth child, the middle of next month. It would grieve me, at my return into those parts, that my friends should reproach me with having lost all this time, contrary to the advice of most of them, who thought I deceived myself in hoping any good from thence, except I would go home, which I dare not do for fear of Norrice, the pursuivant, and such like mates, at whose mercy I would be loth to stand. It is better to sue for grace here than at home in a dungeon. Vestigia me terrent; I hear of many who go thither, and come no more back. Fear keeps me abroad, and not guilt of any crime, or will to commit any against my Sovereign or country. The bearer, my servant, is sent to give life to my suit. Let me have the comfort of a letter, to know my fate. I hope to receive satisfaction, not only from foreign parts, but from home, and to perceive that charity is not clean extinct there, and rigour resolved upon for the only stay of the State; which if it be, God help: for innumerable experiences have taught that to be the most brittle and unsure. Nullum violentum diuturnum. 21. Sir Thomas Copley to Sec. Walsingham. Thanks for your letter. I lament that your favour with Her Majesty, which has pleased so many, should not be able to do me any good, but heartily thank you for your goodwill. The hearts of princes are in God's hands; He permits them to be hardened, and makes them to relent, as His Providence sees will be most for His glory. The errors of my youth towards Him, not any offence against Her Highness, has deserved this. When these in His sight shall be sufficiently corrected, He will incline Her Majesty to extend also to me her natural clemency. Till then I must graze where I am tied, and return to the service of that good King who feeds me.

The reasons which Mr. Heron has delivered to persuade my stay here are weighty, but being but words, and accompanied with no deeds, as I expected, they are all answered in one word, which is, necessity. Venter non habet aures. No reason can persuade a man to starve himself, and I have word sent me that I should spend no more Spanish crowns in France, nor have one penny of relief more out of Flanders, except I return thither; so having no relief from home, nor in hope of any more from the Prince of Parma without returning to my place about his person, necessity forces me so to do. Nevertheless, I shall not be there any further from Her Majesty, either in person or in dutiful heart, than I am here; for St. Omer, where I now think to stay with my wife and my household, until Bourges or Antwerp be reduced to obedience, is as near to England as Rouen, and as soon may I receive joyful news from you there as here, if God sends any; I see so little hope of good from home, that in my principal suit for restitution of my living, with Her Majesty's licence to remain abroad, I mean not to trouble you any further, but trust so to pass my exile that you may favour me in things of less weight. 22. Suggestions by Christ. Dacre, for furnishing the West Borders with armour, archers, shot, &c., for their better defence:—

That Her Majesty, by some device of the Lord Chancellor and Privy Council, should be induced to issue a commission to Lord Scrope, Lord Warden of the West Marches, the Bishop of Carlisle, and the sheriff and justices of peace of Cumberland and Westmoreland, to take the examinations of any inhabitants against whom informations shall be exhibited upon the statute of 33 Hen. VIII. touching the maintenance of artillery, and dealing in unlawful games; also upon the statute of 4 & 5 Phil. & Mary, touching the maintenance of horse, armour, and weapons.

That the commissioners be authorised to compound with all offenders who submit, touching what by the said statutes is due to Her Majesty and the informers, having respect to the reforming of the defaults, and to the ability of the offenders, so that the service in other respects be not hindered.

That they be authorised to appoint persons to take up and disburse, for defence of the Borders, the sums by such composition due to Her Majesty, taking the collectors' bonds, and giving bonds to the Queen to account for them.

That according to a clause in the statute of 4 & 5 Phil. & Mary, the commissioners be authorised to appoint what arms and weapons shall be found and maintained by all such within the said counties as are not charged by the said statute.

That as such good purposes require some time, the said commission continue during pleasure. [1 $\frac{2}{3}$ pages.]

of service, and some so diminished by division that not one present of them was able to keep a man of service,—it was solicited that Her Majesty would address her commission to fit persons, to examine the causes of those decays, and wants and evil furniture of horse and foot, and redress them. As Her Majesty has directed such a commission to you, we signify to you that her pleasure is that, for the first time after you have taken the oath required by the statute, you shall only make inquiry by jury or otherwise of articles collected out of the said statute, and contained in a schedule enclosed; and before you proceed to the execution of the statute, send us your opinion concerning certain articles therein contained, that you may receive Her Majesty's resolution and proceed accordingly; wherein we pray you to use care and diligence.

In case there be any scruple made about the execution of the commission in the county palatine of Durham, seeing it is provided by statute that the like should be observed in this case as was appointed by another like statute of 3 Phil. & Mary,—when it was ordained that upon sight of the commission under the Great Seal, the Chancellor or such other as should have the custody of the seals of the said bishopric should make another commission under the seal of the county palatine, of the same tenor and to the same commissioners,—that no delay may happen, we require you, the bishop of Durham, if needful, to direct such a commission, and we have also ordered Mr. Chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster to send down the like commission, under the seal of the duchy, to be used if occasion shall require. 25. The Council to the Commissioners on the Borders. Her Majesty—having sent you her commission to inquire of the decays of the castles, fortresses, &c. upon the Borders, according to the statute made 2 & 3 Phil. & Mary, revived in the last session of Parliament,—wishes that before any reparations are made, you should send a certificate of your surveys, and receive directions for your further proceeding. You are first to survey and inquire by jury of the ruin and decays of the old castles in cos. Northumberland, Cumberland, Westmoreland, and the Bishopric of Durham, where you, the Lord Bishop, especially, if cause require, shall give out a commission, under the seal of your county palatine, to the commissioners mentioned in Her Majesty's commission, agreeable with the latter.

You shall be informed how and by whom they have been decayed, and how many of them are necessary for defence of the Borders, and estimate the charges, and certify by whom they are to be borne.

You may also survey and inquire what parts of the said counties and bishopric are most apt to be enclosed and converted to tillage, or how the same may be converted, for the better strength of the Borders, with the good liking of the inhabitants and owners, and send a perfect certificate of all particulars aforesaid, when we will consider and give directions therein. We enclose a writ of dedimus potestatem, whereby you may receive the oath required by statute, before you proceed to the execution of the said commission. [$1\frac{1}{2}$ pages, copy.]

What tenements and houses, since 27 Hen. VIII., are decayed, and not occupied by men able to serve as horse or footmen, and where they are situated?

What are the causes of those decays, and of the wants and evil furniture of horse and foot, and what number of the latter existed in former times?

VOL. XXVIII.

Where they find such defects or default of furniture, they are to treat with the landlords and others whom it concern, that order may be given thereon.

Where anything is to be done to the furtherance of this service on Her Majesty's own lands, they are to certify to the Lord Treasurer, Chancellor, and Barons of the Exchequer, the state of the decays, names of the tenants or farmers, and what rents are payable to Her Majesty, whereon order will be given for reformation.

They are also to summon the sheriffs, bailiffs, stewards, &c. before them, and to execute their command.

They shall also inquire what landlords and owners upon the Borders have, for more gain than they could have of natural subjects, let their lands or feedings to Scotchmen, and what increase of rent or service such Scotchmen yield, and how many of them are denizens.

25. II. Special points to be inquired of by the Commissioners, viz. :—

Whether the default of the ruin and decays has been only in the landlords and owners, or their principal officers, and the farmers of Her Majesty's manors; and whether they can rectify and repair, at their own charge, and restore the lands as they were occupied in 27 Henry VIII.?

What penalties they think should be set upon default?

How order may be taken between the Lords and the tenants, by mutual consent, for renewing the ancient services?

What help they think the Lords and others under them, and Her Majesty's farmers and their assigns, may be enjoined to give, upon default found?

How the tenant may be furnished and able for service, and how the duty can be continued and executed?

What bonds are fit to be taken for the performance hereof, and what fines assessed and pains set down, for defaults or want of furniture?

If the unableness have grown by the tenants' own default, within what time they may be enjoined to furnish themselves with horse, armour, and weapons, or with the two latter, according to their ancient usage, at their own charge?

What inconvenience may arise by expelling any such tenants, and placing others who will furnish for the service?

dens, what fine ought to be assessed upon the landlord, and what inconvenience may arise by placing such new tenants by the Commissioners and Wardens, if such can be found, and what fine ought to be assessed on the Lords and others, to find such if possible ?

Where the under-tenants have been the cause of such decay, how they may be compelled to contribute towards the re-edifying or repairing of the tenements, and help to the furniture of the party decayed ?

What landlords and others having estates under them, to be charged towards the said contributions, are absent, and if they should not appear upon summons, what lands and tenements they have within the jurisdiction of the said Commissioners, to satisfy what may be imposed upon them ? 26. Sir Valentine Browne to Sec. Walsingham. I wish your journey prosperous, and so write that you may understand the matters, and make a better report on your return. Therefore,—not dealing with the behaviour of the people who will resort to you after you have passed the Tyne, or before, nor their long speeches, tending to the praise of themselves and their great services to the realm, I mean of those parts on this side Scotland,—I crave, for the good of Her Majesty and our country, that in your passage or returning, you will visit Newcastle and Her Majesty's house there, with the river and the fort standing upon the mouth of the haven, which was called Tynemouth Abbey, and so along the sea coast ; where, besides the castles of Alnwick and Warkworth, belonging to the Earl of Northumberland, and other houses of gentlemen kept in good repair, you will see the great and ruinous castles of Dunstanborough and Bamborough, with the towns adjoining, that were of great receipts for Her Majesty's forces in my time, but now laid waste for sheep and husbandry, and the people clean driven away that should have been succours to such as might be placed there. I do not mention the towns and villages by the west from the sea, likewise laid waste for profit of cattle, where the armies have had victuals and lodging, but which is now as dear there as any from foreign parts.

These parts are little out of your highway to Berwick, where of courtesy they will show themselves to the uttermost, and in better order than, when time may be required, they be able, and yet the consideration of the place itself, and that which shall be in the best part brought to you, must induce you to a good understanding thereof.

West of Berwick, four miles, is Norham castle, with a proper town, which was until lately in the Bishop of Durham's hands, and was kept by a captain and crew, with a good family of strength, and the town well peopled, and always able to serve the Queen and Warden with 40 good horsemen, and as many more footmen; but all now left to husbandry of hinds, for the most part Scottish lowns. In like estate is Etal castle, with the manor and town, five miles from Norham, both which were houses and towns well peopled, and able to receive the Lord Warden and 1,000 persons, but now not able to lodge and victual 200 men. As these are, so are many other towns and villages on the Borders, far out of your way, being all in the keeping of those countrymen that would have cried out of the decay of the Borders, if themselves had not had the government of the same, in which number, if the Governor of Berwick had had not well weighed the sequel of the rule of those countrymen, Berwick itself might have been accounted. Nevertheless, those countrymen be both wise, able, and stout men, so long as they be governed by others that are not allied to their affections, I will make a plan of the device spoken of at Barnelms by the time of your return, and serve you in any other way you shall demand. this His providence already towards you is marvellous, and no less token of His goodness is it in showing again the multitude of good hearts that are most faithfully borne Your Majesty, for I hear already not only of the marvellous mislike of those that have offended you, with open cryings out against them, but such care and such praying for your preservation, I think, was never more heard of for any Prince. This is the goodness of God, my sweet lady, that hath thus saved you against so many devils. You may see what it is to cleave unto Him ; He rewardeth beyond all deserts, and so is it daily seen how He payeth those that be dissemblers with Him. Who ever, of any Prince, stood so nakedly assisted of worldly help as Your Majesty has done these many years ? Who has had more enemies in show, and yet who ever received less harm ? This it is when a just cause is simply and innocently defended. Your Majesty only has been the maintainer and setter forth of any prince Christian and His true religion against all policy and counsel of man. Yet you see how He has served and kept you thereby. God grant you ever to cleave fast thereto ; I will never doubt His defending you, and overthrowing all mischievous devices against you. I have too boldly troubled you thus far, but your wonted goodness, to your eyes* only joy and comfort, makes them keep the old manner. Pray receive the bearer into that blessed service which he only lives by the hope of, and you will have a faithful, honest, and diligent servant. 30. Report of Richard Musgrave, of Carlisle, gent. Two years next October, Capt. Ramsey, with Turner, Grame, John Austen, and other Scotchmen, brought a ship into the haven at Kirkcudbright, and there made open sale and mart of wool, &c., wherewith the ship was laden, to Wm. Stuart, brother to the Earl of Arran, and other Scotchmen, who re-sold the same to Richard Maxwell, cousin to the now Earl of Morton, and other Scots, who, in exchange, sold and delivered some of the said wares to certain Englishmen, as well in England as Scotland, they paying the usual customs and duties [$\frac{3}{4}$ page.]

31. Petition of Richard Musgrave, of Carlisle, gent., to Sec. Walsingham. It appears, by letters from the Council to Lord Scrope, that information has been given to them by Thomas Wilson, that petitioner and others withhold the goods of certain merchant strangers, taken from them by pirates, and landed in these north parts, whereupon order was given to Lord Scrope to cause good bonds to be taken of petitioner and others, for their appearance before Council 10 October. Is innocent of meddling with any such goods, or of receiving any gain thereby ; is like to be put to great charges and trouble by this information, unless Council orders stay of his appearance. That Council may be assured that neither pirates nor their ships and goods have been landed within the West War-

I should be sorry to see him too much overborne, and for his skill and judgment in that part of surgery which he professes, I dare affirm he is inferior but to a few, as both myself and others of greater knowledge in the profession have tried. The bearer hereof, son of Lord Eure, being about to return home with Sir Henry Cobham, my predecessor in this place, and having desired me to recommend him to you, I do so, though his own virtues, when you shall know them, will recommend him a great deal more than I can; yet it is my duty, serving you in this place, to be witness to all honest gentlemen of the good report I hear of their good behaviour and towardliness to serve you, and I have heard no better of any that have been on this side the sea; when you have seen and spoken with him, and felt what is in him, which you can better judge of than numbers that can better judge than I, I shall receive shame of nothing but of writing too little. 36. Ralph Eure to Sec. Walsingham. I have in part followed your directions, and in the rest not willingly offended; for being in a part of Germany but for a while, I was greatly distempered with the diet and air; and thus, discouraged to pass further, I ventured, contrary to your pleasure, to leave Strasburgh, passing by Pfalzburgh, Ixburgh, Augsburg, and thence entered Italy by Trent; thence to Venice, where I rested three weeks, and returned by Padua, Mantua, Cremona, Parma, Chionas, and Turin, and so to Lyons, and thence to Paris. Now I desire to return with Sir Hen. Cobham, present my service to Her Majesty,—if she should think me worthy,—reverence you, and serve my father, whose old years desire rest and ease of pain. Pardon my disobeying your pleasure, and my boldness in troubling you herewith, and vouchsafe your favour towards me as I may deserve. [1 page.]

44. Sir Edw. Stafford to Sec. Walsingham. After I had delivered my letters to Painter the post, my Lord Paget, with Charles Paget and Charles Arundel, suddenly entered my dining chamber, before any one was aware of it, and Lord Paget says they came away for their consciences, and for fear, having enemies; that it was given out by the traitorous Somerfield that there was to be a hard hand over all papists, and that they would have been hardly dealt with. They also told me, and of which I have written at large to Her Majesty, that for all things but their conscience, they would live as dutifully as any in the world; and that, as I wished, they would either remain with me, or at my appointment, or else refrain any company I should forbid. I answered that their coming away at this time might give cause to their enemies to suspect their consciences were not clear, but that notwithstanding, I would report their speeches to Her Majesty; and I desired them to forbear calling until I received her commands as to the course I was to pursue with them, and others in a like case, of whom I am afraid we shall have a good many. 47. William Parry to Sec. Walsingham. If my Lord Paget and Charles Arundel had not given Her Majesty's Ambassador a true account of the manner and cause of their departure without licence, I would have advertised you of my opinion by the last post; but since the same can be no other than comes from my Lord Ambassador, and is already vowed by Lord Paget under his hand, and now by Mr. Arundel under his, I can only say that I am sorry that this example, long discontinued, should be renewed by men of their sort. They do not complain of Her Majesty's government, but that, oppressed by their country, they must either leave it, or abide and suffer more disgrace than they were able to bear. This they say they swear and stand upon. They commend you for as real a gentleman as lives; what opinion you hold of them I cannot tell, till I hear how it goes with them in England. Meantime I assure you that they shun such company as might be offensive to Her Majesty.

Painter promised to take this letter with him, but did not come for it, and being required by Mr. Arundel to send it to you, and made privy of its contents, I hope you will not mislike that it comes from me. wicked pillar of papistry. If he were removed thither, he could discover all the papists and their dealings in this country.

I have caused a search to be made in all suspected places for the persons named in the Council's letters, but have not found any of them; also for writings that might touch the present state of religion. It appears by some writings of Richard Hutton's, of Gray's Inn, that he is a notorious papist; he should be apprehended. I hope to give you further intelligence of him, and his dealings in this country.

When you were at Newcastle, I told you of one Boast, a notable papist, who, by some letters also found in this search, and written by Andrew Hilton, is noted to have attended as a serving man upon Lord Montague.

P.S.—I have Boast in ward, in the Sheriff's custody, and Richard Kirkbride, of Ellerton, under good bond, so that they are both forthcoming. [1¼ pages.]

58. Henry Lord Scrope and John Bishop of Carlisle to Sec. Walsingham. In answer to the Council's letter to us, for the apprehension of Richard Cliburne, and Mouneford, a seminary Scots' priest, supposed of late to have returned from the South into these parts, we have caused diligent search to be made for them, by Humphrey Musgrave, Thos. Hamond, chancellor of the diocese of Carlisle, Richard Dudley, and Hen. Leigh, but as yet without effect. The letters which their Lordships have were written by Andrew Hilton to Wm. Robinson, his cousin, from Carlisle, last June and July, concerning the forwardness of the Catholic religion in Scotland; Hilton was before a prisoner in Carlisle, in the Sheriff's custody, for not conforming in matters of religion, and we have now committed him to close ward, and examined him touching his letters, but he denies writing to Robinson, or anyone else, and affirms that he had no cousin of that name, nor any intelligence from Scotland.

We send the three letters found with him, which, with his examination, will declare his own evil disposition, and the qualities of John Boast, a priest, who served Lord Montague, and of others from whom he received the said letters.

We have also apprehended Richard Kirkbride, of Ellerton, brother-in-law to Cliburne, and examined him as to the letter to Cliburne, but he said he had not written to him for a long time, nor seen him for three years. We can find nothing against him, and have bailed him, although he is brother to Percival Kirkbride, whom their Lordships noted as a writer of another letter to Cliburne from Newlaythes. Richard was one of the jury that indicted his brother, a notable papist, for not coming to church, and has lately been lurking in these parts, but in this search could not be found. In his chamber we found the writings enclosed; one containing news from Scotland, the other fantastical and foolish prophecies, and such like, but hereafter we shall have vigilant eyes, and do what we can to come by him.

We also apprehended Lancelot Boast, in his mother's house, and by letters found there, and by his examination, it appears that his brother, John Boast, had lately been there, as also by other letters from Rich. Hutton, of Gray's Inn, who also appears to be a notorious papist. There were also some exhortations to papists, whereof one bears the name of Wm. Hart, who was executed at York for high treason; and another letter from Andrew Hilton to his cousin. We send you all these, as also the examinations of Boast and Hilton. We think Hilton were fitter either to be called before their Lordships, or to be elsewhere than in this place, where he is known, and has done much hurt. Boast we have committed, and as we think he can discover the places where his brother resorts to in this country, he should be sent for as well as the other. [2 pages.] Enclosing,

58. 1. Examination of Lancelot Boast, gentleman, before Lord Serope and the Bishop of Carlisle. Thinks the exhortation to papistry by Wm. Hart, and the book entitled "The Discovery of the Translation," were left him by his brother, John Boast. Hart was executed lately at York for high treason; the other exhortation to papistry was written by his brother, and left with the others.

The letter from Richard Hutton, dated September, was written in 1582; the man named as non inventus was his brother; does not know who his companion, mentioned as to be hanged at Tyburn, was. Knows not the bearer of Hutton's letter of 27 Oct.

Sent the Rheims Testament asked for in Andrew Hilton's letter of 1 Nov., but does not remember by whom. [1 page.] Also,

Like examination of Andrew Hilton. Has no cousin named Wm. Robinson, and never wrote to him. A letter found was sent him from one Hopton, a priest, residing with Nich. Pullen, vicar of Buckland, in Berkshire, whom he knows. The good news referred to was the good agreement existing between exanimate and his uncle, Nich. Pullen. The letter signed J. H. he received from John Boast, a year ago, when he received the Rheims Testament from Boast's mother.

Acknowledges the letter of 18 Sept. 1582 to Thos. Hilton, his cousin, to be his, but it was written and signed in his name by Thos. Sewell, his servant, he being then in Norfolk, upon bond to return to his ward at Carlisle. Sewell is now in Norfolk, and lately served Mr. Yaxley, of Yaxley Hall, Suffolk.

While out on bond, met John Boast, between Maidenhead and Colbrook, with Jas. Wareop, clerk, and one beneficed within a mile and a half of Norwich; they returned with him to Colbrook, where they lodged for the night at the sign of the Coek. Boast rode with a cloak bag behind him, appparelled in a cloak of a rat's colour, white jerkin, laid with blue lace, and a pair of buff leather hose. The next day, examine rode to London, and Boast into Gloucestershire; six days after, going on foot from his own house, Busket Parsonage in Berkshire, to Leachlade, Gloucestershire, met Boast again, with Arthur Cappes, at John Lee's house; then Boast went with him to Busket, where they stayed three days. Boast then told examine, in presence of one Wilkinson, servant to Mr. Robinson, now Provost of Queen's College, Oxford, that he served Lord Montague as a serving man. Asked Boast for one who he thought also served his Lordship, and who was formerly servant to examine's cousin Yaxley; Boast said he knew him well, and that he was the said Lord's porter. Boast said he had been to Douay, and for avoiding danger, returned into England two months before the limitation by the proclamation. Also that they were about having mass in Jas. Warcop's house, examine's cousin, being benefited about Norwich, as aforesaid; but Warcop coming suddenly upon them, they were disappointed of their purpose. Thinks that Boast was the priest that should have said the mass; knows him to be a priest. The letter signed D. L., of 1 Oct., was sent him by Percival Kirkbride, who generally signed his letters thus. Never wrote to any person of the state of Scotland, &c., nor received any Scottish news. [2¼ pages.] Also,

58. II. Richard Hutton to his cousin Lancelot Boast. Thanks for your letter, which pleased me so well that it has bound me to requite it. I am sorry there has been such strangeness between us, since my coming, that I could never have a letter from you, and trust hereafter we shall have more familiarity by letters. Put in a good word for me where you think it needful. Commend me to my aunt, to your wife, and the rest. [½ page.] 27 Oct.
58. III. Andrew Hilton to Lancelot Boast. I have long marvelled that I never heard from you nor your friend, being so long in the country, and needing advice touching an offer which the Privy Council hath sent us poor prisoners, which I enclose, and desire you, if possible, to convey it to him for his opinion; we are in doubt, and loath to do anything hurtful, either to ourselves or any others. I also desire you, hearing by my cousin Geo. Rumney that you have the New Testament, to send it me by Anth. Atkinson's wife, as I can neither eat, drink, nor sleep until I see it. [⅔ page.]

Be wise, change thy condition.
Doubt not, but think it sure,

With heart contrite, confess thee,
And to Heavenward address thee.*

Latin lamentations over England, in rhymed verse, and prophecies of its downfall :

*If thou be wise, O Germany, Frenchmen, English flee,
And suffer not the Venice laud to join in league with thee.
Behold, for out of Philip's blood a worthy brood shall rise,
Who shall redeem the world's misdeeds with warlike enterprise ;
And the proud Turk he shall constrain the true faith to embrace,
And thee deprive of princely port, and put thee out of place,
When five three hundred years are gone, since Christ, our

And six times ten with three by course to us are worn.
All this the ruler of the skies, who sitteth in Heaven so high,
Bade me to tell unto the world, as stars had told to me.*

Copy of a letter from the Emperor Ferdinand to the Queen of England. We were right glad to understand that you accepted in good part our letter, in which we required you not to execute any rigour upon the bishops in prison, and the subjects of your realm who profess the Catholic religion, if they would not, or with a safe conscience could not, profess the religion which you and the estates of your realm had ordained by a new law. For we understood not only your good will to pleasure us, but your great modesty, clemency, &c., and could not but give you thanks.

As an Emperor and Catholic Prince we commend to you the estate and health of those who profess our religion, thinking it more for your honour to protect such as follow a contrary religion, than to prosecute or put them to death. Therefore we pray that you will rather win the hearts of your subjects by clemency, than turn them from you by persecution, and that you will grant them, in every city, one church at least, where they may serve God,

Also,

Copy of a letter from the Great Master of Rhodes, of the Order of Jerusalem, to all princees, lords, Christians, &c., advertising the birth of Antichrist. We have of late received letters of our ambassadors in Babylon, in which are contained how, on 28 May 1564, in the borders of Babylon, and in a province called Colossa, a child was born of a woman of very base degree, called Sanns, obscure and dark from any knowledge of the father; which child has a fearful face, teeth after the manner of a cat, and eyes glistening and terrible. His stature is greater than of all children, and at the end of eight days, he began to speak perfectly, and in such sort that he was understood of all, and admonished the people that he was the true son of God, and the very Messias, and that they ought to believe in and serve him. Our ambassadors say that they saw him, at the end of two months, go as well as children of 10 years, and that at his birth, the heavens showed great wonders; that is, the day being far up, the sun darkened, and for a time the heavens were very dark, and at night a great fire came down from heaven upon the house of the child, and was suddenly quenched, besides other innumerable tokens. The day after his birth, it rained manna and precious stones, and the day after that, were seen to fly in the air horrible serpents. The child being demanded the occasion of such signs, answered that the precious stones signified the everlasting joy that his children should have in the other life, and the serpents the torments and pains of those who did not believe and follow him.

The same night of his birth, there appeared and opened a very great monument amongst the mountains of Babylon, in which was found a pillar, half red and half white, and in which was written in the Hebrew tongue, "The hour of my birth is come." The ambassadors say they have seen the child, and heard say that he has raised the dead, healed the diseased, and given sight to the blind, by virtue of his word; and that in Babylon he has commanded to be worshipped as the son of God, and that the faithful, as well as infidels, do not refuse to believe in and worship him; but some do it for devotion, and others for fear.

He opens many passages of Scripture never heard of before, and, through his interpretations, makes them easy to be understood. A friar of Viterbo, a doctor in divinity, gave such credit to the child and his miracles that he affirmed the child was the son of God, so that a great number of people fully believe in him. They also add that at his birth, there was a voice heard like thunder for two hours, which gave great fear to all, saying, "Prepare yourselves to know my well-beloved son, and blessed be those that shall obey his word." They write that, as stated in the old and new Testaments, they find this is he that was to be born in the latter day, called Antichrist, the son of perdition. We sent two of our brethren into Babylon, who found all this to be true and more; therefore we exhort all Christians to stand firm against this wicked Antichrist. [3 pages.] Also,

58. VII. Richard Hutton to ———. Nothing was more welcome than your letter, because it was full of good will. There are so many false coins that it is very hard to hit off the right stamp, especially for him which never saw it; the tongues of some are so venomous that they cannot abide to stamp one good word, even of him whom they seem to love. Let me not lack your help in speaking to my father, not to give credit to those who either speak by conjecture or persuade upon malice. I make more account of my father than of any earthly joy, and trust he will not be angry if I prefer God before the world, seeing the mortality of man's estate to be such that he cannot prescribe a time to repent, or a time to die, or do good. You may put him in remembrance of his estate. I write thus because I have not a malicious reader. Pardon me for not writing before, as some men gather so much from my letters, that I now take good heed to whom I write; I am so troubled with answering every rumour that I forget my duty, but I will do so no more.

59. Henry Lord Scrope to Sec. Walsingham. Having by direction of Council dealt with Andrew Hilton, a great papist remaining here in ward, we found the enclosed letters with him, upon which he has been examined before the Bishop and myself. By one of these from Percival Kirkbride, another notorious papist, it appears that he takes upon himself to be the means that Francis Dacre and Thomas Denton, of Wernoll, a gentleman in this country, shall either write to the Sheriff for Hilton's liberty, or themselves shall travel to him for it; also that John Boast, another most notorious papist, a family acquaintance of Kirkbride, and a serving man with Lord Montague, has common access to, and is secretly lurking among those of their own faction in this country. I therefore fear that Dacre and Denton and their wives have of late been much drawn from religion; it would be well to examine them as to where they have resorted for communion the last half year, as also other gentlemen and their wives within this diocese.

Two gentlemen passed through this wardenry to Lady Fernihurst in Scotland, 22 Jan., of whom I send you a description. They were accompanied here by one Layton, son of Sir Cuthbert Layton, late knight of Rhodes; if they return this way, I will do my best to apprehend them. Layton is either in Richmondshire or Yorkshire. [2¼ pages.] Enclosing,

59. I. P. [alias Percival Kirkbride] to [And.] Hilton. *I am sorry to hear of your evil luck of late, by reason of evil company. David's saying is verified in you, cum sancto sanctus eris, et cum perverso, perverteris. Would to God that you had been quiet in your chamber, using some other godly kind of exercise; but for God's sake take heed henceforth, and bridle your affections, though it be difficult for one of a choleric disposition, which I perceive you to be. This makes your enemies rejoice, and your friends and well-wishers sorrowful. I am sore afraid it may be hurtful to your bedfellow, considering her case. I marvel that you will have dealings with Mr. Laburne, seeing he is distracted, has no government of himself, nor knows how to fast or how to pray. If this chance had not happened, you had received from me before this the whole manner of his disease, written to warn you to have no dealings with him, but rather to pray for him, as his punishments are due for sins. evil opinion of you, so that you may be restored again to your old lodgings. Mr. Francis Daere or Mr. Denton, of Wernoll, may please you in this, if you would send any friend in your behalf. Let me know your mind, and I will get their letters to the Sheriff for your liberty; but if that will not serve, I trust to make friends that will take the pains to go to the Sheriff, which I would have done with all speed, lest the Sheriff take a journey to London before these letters come to hand. 59. II. I. J., [alias Jo. Boast,] to Andrew Hilton. You and your bedfellow must submit with patience, as becometh Christian confessors, whom God hath chosen to bear witness of His name, to the comfort of them that love Him, and His spouse, the Catholic church, and to the condemnation of so many that wittingly join in the synagogue of Satan. I would, as I have often in vain done, attempt to see you, for all I can speak with are unwilling to be amongst you, but this good man I have entreated, and you may entreat, to deal with those parts, when you and your friend shall stand in need. I have not leisure to go into such places, to provide such books as I know are good for you. The Defence of the Tonsure, &c. with the Resolution and Testament I long since brought amongst you, but what you now have of them, save the Testament, I know not; yet as they come, I would get a good store, if I might find a safe and ready mart to make my exchange, but I refer all to the bearer. I commend you to Christ and the prayers of His Catholic church. Your messenger, a good simple soul, but not one that can see far into a millstone, can tell you of our cause at home and abroad. Inform me what you can learn of Scotland, for there is matter brewing upon both sides. [$\frac{1}{2}$ page.]

59. III. [— Hopton, priest,] to Andrew Hilton, captive in Carlisle. We should be glad to hear of your and your friend's liberty, and to see you here again, and pray for it; but calamity has come amongst us; your old friend, Mr. Fourd, of Lye, was executed the week before Pentecost with six more; extremity is in practice here, and they say much more is intended; but the best is they can but occidere corpus, and not harm the soul, so let us with patience offer ourselves to God's disposition, and say fiat voluntas sua. Your writings to your uncle smell of some stomach; debate not what he deserves, but what becomes you; remember the cause why you are restrained of liberty, and the patience and mildness requisite, for if cruelty should be requited with sharpness, we lose the reward of our corporal affliction.

I deal with you as my friend; take my advice in good part; commendations to your wife, whom God assist with a continuance of the good business she has begun; I rejoice to hear what a good soldier she is. You had better let little Jack stay where he learns somewhat, and not go to ch[urch], as in Oxford, where for his years and skill he is altogether unfit, yet he must go to church for construing logic, which should be understood by him. It grows to great charge, but your unele will give what you may require for your boy. He will however come to no reason with your man, and as he will not speak with me, I can secretly trust him. What is done between you hereafter, I would wish done upon good advice. As oft as you send thither, let me hear from you. [1 page.]

[Feb. 10.] 60. John Bailey's accusation of Andrew Harris, similar to that of 6 June 1583 [Dom. Addenda, Vol. XXVIII., No. 16.], adding that the statute merchant was not made to Bailey, because he was then mayor of Sarum, and it was better not to make it to him before whom it was acknowledged, and that it was to be for performance of all covenants in the deed of sale. That Bailey was evicted on behalf of Harris' sisters, from some of the lands. That the Guernsey magistrates, by deed, 21 Nov. 1581, promised, unless Harris satisfied them in three months, to grant execution on his lands, but failed, and therefore the Council is requested to write to the magistrates, to allow execution on the lands of Harris in Guernsey, without delay. Feb. 22. London. 61. William Pa[rry] to Thomas Morgan, Paris. Thanks for your letters. I am glad that by your and my dear friend Charles Paget's example, I may so safely send to you. I have not been careless of the debt undertaken, but being meanly satisfied before my departure from Paris, I laboured, by conference with a singular man on this side, to be fully informed what might be done with conscience in that case, for the common good. I was learnedly over-ruled, and assured that it ought not to fall into the thought of a good Christian. The difficulties are many, and in this vigilant time, full of despair. The service you know never passed your hand and mine, and may therefore, with more ease and less offence, be concealed and suppressed. I know that the divine with whom I had conference there, by your appointment, is secret and honest. If you will travail to satisfy the greatest, and to retain my better sort of friends in good opinion of me, I shall hold it for a singular pleasure; and if you can use me on this side for you or yours, be assured of me.

I have not been careless of my Lord Pa[get] and his brother, nor do I yet, notwithstanding the proclamation, see why they should be hasty in embracing foreign entertainment.

I find the Queen very calm, and hear that she termed some cormorants, for their greediness in seeking men's livings. Charles Arundel is condemned of having dealt unthankfully with the Queen, unkindly with his friends, and unadvisedly with himself. I write thus much that you may make them privy to it, for I know you honour and love them all. I marvel that you suffer so many trifling letters to come by so honourable a mean as yours and Mr. Pa[get's] came to me. The discovery of this passage may happen by the delivery of some such. I and the gentleman to whom the last packet was delivered burnt all the letters, save Mr. Arundel's to James Sharrock, which, after he had read it, was also burnt, and there is now not one of them in being. I have willed Jas. Sharrock to get ready for Mr. Arundel a true account of the state of his office, which I have promised to send him as soon as the Exchequer is satisfied.

62. Henry Lord Scrope to Sec. Walsingham. The two English gentlemen of whom I wrote, as having passed through this wardenry towards Scotland on 20 Jan. last, were not accompanied by Sir Cuthbert Layton's son, but by one of that name. They lodged with Edward Middleton, of Middleton Hall, Westmoreland, a man of great living, whose servant, Dixon, the next day took them to Alex. Featherstone, at Featherstonehaugh, Northumberland, supping at Thos. Garth's house in Armathwait, after which they and their horses were removed into Armathwait castle, or hall, of which Wm. Skelton is owner. Thence they were conducted by Layton and Dixon to Featherstone's house, and on the 24th, were delivered to Thos. Armstrong, of High Stedesh, alias Christie's Thom, who conveyed them to Geordie Simpson, a Scotchman in Liddesdale, and thence to Fernihurst. I have examined Lancelot Carleton, and Anthony his brother, but finding nothing, have bailed and bound them over to appear before Council, if called. Thos. Carleton's part in this action will be seen by the examinations of Middleton and his servant, Dixon, and of Mr. Featherstone. Middleton, Dixon, and Mr. Skelton dwell within my office of wardenry, and Featherstone within the Middle Marches, under Sir John Forster's rule. I have acquainted the Treasurer of Berwick with this matter. [1 $\frac{3}{4}$ pages.]

63. S. Sootchern to [Lord Burghley?] I hear, though how I dare not tell you in writing, that there is an enterprize in hand to burn the Queen's ships. I think it will be done in this way. At a time appointed, a quantity of boats of small burden, armed with 200 or 250 valiant men, with artificial fire and good muskets, will put forth out of the havens of Gravelines, Dunkirk, and Nieuport, under colour of being Mayston [Maidstone?] boats, hoping thus to pass the Meadow waters into the Terimgam river, so as to be at Rochester bridge in the night, and at full sea mark, and so that the tide may bring them back again. They will then place their boats in various positions, and as near the ships as may be, so that at a given sign, they may throw their fire into the ships, with such abundance that it may not be quenched, and scour the shore with their muskets at the same time, so that none shall dare to advance upon them.

If this be a hard enterprize for those that execute it, it is no less dangerous for us; putting the hazard of the soldiers with the profit of the master, 200 man would be well given to devour in our own havens that which should give them battle, and all their force, and in their own sea. I leave it to you as to what negligence there is on our side, to promise them hope in this attempt, or whether there be any in Kent that bear a finger to this band.

There are about the west quarters of Flanders some English traitors who were to lead this army. Not long since, an Irishman passed in post into Spain, under colour of being a Fleming. I saw him myself once at Rouen, and he had then been to Paris, with Bernardin de Mendoza. There is also an Englishman at Paris who haunts the company of Hans, a Dutchman, and who is the right hand of Bernardin de Mendoza, and knows all our countrymen. This fellow is stricken in years, and much like Sheldon. Be secret, as you would see that I shall live to discover affairs of greater consequence. Aubeterre is 17 leagues nearer Paris than Bourdeaux, towards the country of Perigord, by the frontiers of Limoges, and seven leagues from Chateauneuf, and six from Barbesieux, where the posts pass into Spain; if you write me, do so in French, and use an alphabet,* so that if my letters be opened, they may not be understood; and direct them to Mons. Copell, solicitor to the Lord of Aubeterre, at the sign God of Love, St. Jaques Street, Paris. [3½ pages.]

March 18. 64. Sir John Forster to the Council. I received your and Lord Near Alnwick. Scrope's letters, but I cannot get any direct answer from the Warden opposite, so that you might advise as the case should require. Touching the two English gentlemen conveyed through the West Marches to Fernihurst in Scotland, I received no information thereof from Lord Scrope, but by my servants, whom I sent to Featherstonehaugh, being the furthest part of my wardenry, to apprehend Alex. Featherstone, thinking to have examined him, but he had ridden away. I have however apprehended three of his servants, and enclose copy of their examinations, the originals having been sent to the Lord President; I have the parties in ward until your further pleasure is known. Their master has either gone to London or to my Lord President at York, who, being his lord and master, will take order for his safety. I hear the gentlemen were conveyed to Fernihurst, and thence to the King of Scotland, where they were well entertained, and thence sent over the water to the Earl of Huntly. I cannot learn their names, nor what became of the third gentleman, but will inquire further. [1 page.] Enclosing,

March 18. 65. Henry Lord Scrope to Sec. Walsingham. I have examined
Carlisle. Mr. Middleton, of Middleton Hall, Dixon, his servant, and the two Skeltons, concerning the passage of the two strangers into Scotland, and enclose their examinations. I have taken order that they remain in Carlisle until their Lordships' pleasure is known, and Dixon I have committed to close ward. I hear that the names of the gentlemen were Fulgyham [Foljambe?] and Dunstede; but they named themselves Brown and Smith. I send a description of them. I did not inform Sir John Forster, not having dealt in the matter myself; but have now sent him their Lordships' letter.

Did not send his servant, Dixon, with them as a guide, but believes he went on his own account. The two gentlemen were perfect strangers to him; had known Layton 20 years; he said they had come from Lancaster, and were going to Newcastle. Dixon has served him and his father 16 years. Layton again lodged at his house one night on his return 10 days after, and said he had been to Newcastle. He mostly lives in Lancashire. [2¾ page.]

65. III. Like examination of Robert Dixon, servant to Edw. Middleton. Was at his master's house when Layton and the two strangers lodged there, and having that night moved his mistress to get leave of his master to allow him to ride next day to Mr. Featherstonehaugh, at Featherstonehaugh, overtook Layton and the strangers, who had started before on the road; Layton asking for a tippling house, where they might get meat for themselves and their horses, he took them to Thos. Garthe's, at Armathwait, and then rode on to the eastle. Shortly after Layton came to the castle, and inquired if they might have stabling and hay for their horses; told the servants that Layton was cousin to his master, so they let them have stabling and lodging that night, whereupon they all returned to Garthe's house, where they supped with the vicar of Kendall and another minister, and returned to the eastle, where they slept. Next morning they went to Featherstonehaugh Hall, where they stayed all night, and dined with Mr. Featherstonehaugh. Left Layton and the two strangers there in bed, and came away with Mr. Featherstonehaugh, who said he was going to Mr. Lowther's of Lowther, and then to Mr. Salkeld of Rosgill [Rastall?]. Went to Mr. Lancaster of Sockbridge, and the next day rode home to Middleton Hall.

Went to Mr. Featherstonehaugh for advice in the marriage of a wench dwelling on his master's land. Knew Layton from his frequenting his master's house, but not his name, nor where he dwelt, and has not seen him there since. Knew nothing of the strangers, save that Layton said their names were Brown and Smith, and had little talk with them, but perceived that the tallest gentleman was the best man, as he took the foremost place. 66. Petition of Francis Dacre to the Queen. You ordered, in the contest between Philip Earl of Arundel and Lord William [Howard] his brother, and their wives, and me, Fras. Dacre, that all former orders in Council should be void, whereby I was to receive the atturment and rents of such tenants as voluntarily paid them, and we were ordered to keep the peace; but Lord William has been rioting, for on 14 April last, I came peaceably to Morpeth, to receive atturment of the tenants, who requested me to be at the next court; I came April 23rd; but towards evening, 120 persons, armed, came to town, by procurement of Edw. Grey, officer to the Earl and Lord William, and beset my house to murder me, and in presence of Sir John Forster, warden of the Middle Marches, who favoured them, prevented the corporation of Morpeth from keeping the court, had the mayor taken away, and swore in a jury of foreigners, though they could not make up 12 without taking one who lately lord of misrule. I made no resistance.

Sir J. Forster favours them, because he holds 100 marks of land from Lord William Howard, and is uncle to Edw. Grey, who has like lands, value 200*l.* a year, and whose brother, Sir Thos. Grey, married the daughter of the late Earl of Westmoreland, and is also nephew to the said Lord Warden.

In May last, armed servants of Lord William murderously assaulted the tenants who had atturmed to me, in their houses, with concurrence of the Lord Warden's officers. Every market day his company goes to Brampton, Cumberland, and threatens those who bear good will to me. I think they are set on by Lord William, for when on 10 April last he came to Newcastle, there went 16 of them to welcome him, all of whom are guilty of murder or felony.

On 4 May last, when I went to Greystock to keep court and receive atturment, my bridle was seized by officers of the Earl of Arundel, and the court twice disturbed by them. Pray summon the said Lord William, Edw. Grey, and the others to answer before Council. [$\frac{3}{4}$ sheet. See Domestic Eliz., Vol. CLXIX., No. 43.]

67. Henry Lord Scrope to Sec. Walsingham. I have taken bonds of the two Skeltons to appear before their Lordships, and one in 1,000*l.* of Mr. Middleton and others, that he and his servant, Robert Dixon, shall appear before them on Monday the 20th inst., to answer matters laid to their charge, and not to depart without licence. Middleton is a noted papist, and a great friend of Gerard Lowther, whose brother married his sister. It appears, by examinations sent their Lordships from Sir John Forster, that persons have been conveyed out of this realm into Scotland more than once, and they therefore will me to inquire into it; but I assure you that none have passed through my office, but the two I advertised, since last Michaelmas, neither have there been since, within the opposite march of Scotland against me, any Englishmen of that condition received or harboured, save one who was with the Laird of Cockpool, at his house called Cumlungan; but what he was, or which way he passed I know not. Of these two late passengers, the lesser man carried

It is better to thank you in a few badly expressed words for your goodness, than to fail in my duty. Amongst other favours to myself and my father, I have especially to thank you for procuring my licence to travel. The profit which I may receive I vow to devote to your service. 70. The Council to the Earl of Huntingdon. Her Majesty intends to have 10,000 able foot and 400 light horse levied and put in readiness, within the several ridings of co. York, and to commit the charge to yourself, the Earls of Rutland and Cumberland, and Lord Darcy, as persons of the best degree, and having houses of residence in that county. Lord Scrope and Lord Eure are also very meet, but Scrope is to attend his charge at Carlisle, and Eure to have charge of the forces of the Bishopric of Durham. Although we do not limit your charge, we impart our project that you, as Lord President, should have 3,000 men under your charge, to be chosen out of the places nearest to York, as well out of the limits of the ridings next adjoining as the whole power of the Ainsty; the Earl of Rutland to have charge of 300, to be levied in the North and East Ridings, nearest to his castle of Helmsley; the Earl of Cumberland the like number out of the West and North Ridings, nearest his castle of Skipton; Lord Darcy 1,000 out of the places nearest to him, and the whole to be committed to knights and gentlemen able to lead from 100 to 300 each.

We doubt not but that this number of 10,000, amongst the 42,000 able men certified upon the last musters, may with ease to the country be levied and furnished, for defence of the realm towards Scotland. Yet as the estate of that country is best known to you, Her Majesty wishes to be first informed thereof, when you will receive her further directions.

You are also to certify to us what state of living and number of tenants each of the said noblemen has, and what number of able men may be levied in each riding, and how they are furnished with weapons, as your last certificate does not express the kinds found. You are also to certify how the 400 light horse are to be had and furnished within the county, and what order you have taken for maintaining those already certified, and how the country is at present furnished with horses and men.

As Her Majesty intends to have some men levied and furnished within the Bishopric of Durham, under Lord Eure, by permission of the Bishop, you are also to send a certificate of the number of able men and the armour last viewed by the Bishop there, so that as many may be selected as are needed.

Use expedition in sending a certificate of the state of the forts, and of the decays and wants, and an estimate of the charge for their repair, and the necessary defence of those parts.

Advertise us how soon you can proceed to the execution of your commission of the statute for fortifying the frontiers; Her Majesty is so earnest for speed that she blames us that it has not been executed since the making of the statute; and it being a matter of importance, and the time so long past, we have promised her there shall be no more delay. May 24. 73. Note that a woman was charged by Wm. Beckwith, of Ripon, with witchcraft and high treason touching the supremacy, and indicted three days before Christmas. Beckwith informed Mr. Cheek and Mr. Meeres, two of the Council of York, who, in the absence of the rest, granted a commission to Sir Wm. Mallory and Mr. Wandsford, to examine witnesses on such interrogatories as Beckwith should put.

Thereupon the Archbishop complained to the rest of the Council that Cheek and Meeres had done him wrong in granting such a commission, as it was infringing on his franchise, and therefore prayed that it might be called in and annulled. After hearing the cause, the Council allowed the commission, and affirmed that for the Queen they might do the like in any liberty, upon like occasion. The Archbishop then threatened to complain to Her Majesty, as it was her pleasure that he should have no wrong, and excused the woman of the matters whereof she was indicted. Some of the Council wished him to beware how he entered into a defence of high treason. Sir Wm. Mallory and Mr. Wandsford proceeded according to their commission, and the woman was condemned at the Lent assizes at York. If Sir William or any of his men had dealt otherwise than their commission warranted, the Archbishop himself would have seen reformation, or acquainted the Council. Mr. Hurleston, one of the Council at York, can testify thus much, and Mr. Dawson, servant to the Lord Treasurer, and a near neighbour in Ripon, now in town, can testify to such matters. [1 page.]

75. Sir Henry Wodrington to Sec. Walsingham. On the 28th, two strangers arrived in the town, and took up their lodging for the night, without being presented to me by their host, as the manner is for all strangers that come, until three o'clock next day. As they had given out they were going into Scotland, I sent for and examined them. One says that he is Richard Glassop, woollen draper of Nottingham, and come here to seek entertainment, and accompany his friend into Scotland, where he has never been. That he came from Nottingham last Sunday, and met his friend at Buxton by appointment, where they remained five days, and saw two of the Earl of Shrewsbury's gentlemen, Rewksby, of Skyershill, and another, whose name he forgot, who dwelt at Thundercliffe Grange, with whom they came to Sheffield, and there parted. The other says his name is Nicholas Shepard, and first that he was a gentleman, and then a yeoman, also of Nottingham, and living as a fletcher; and that having married Katherine Frisell, formerly a servant to the Earl of Cumberland, and daughter of Frisell, a sadler of Edinburgh, was going to Scotland, to claim some property left her by her father. As neither of them have brought any letters or tokens, from councillor, magistrate, or other, I am suspicious of them, and have detained them until your pleasure is known. [2 pages.]

76. Nicholas Moore to Sec. Walsingham. At my being in England last winter, having a suit to Her Majesty for a licence to make glass within her realm, as also a controversy in the Merchant Adventurers' Court, through means of my brother, Owen Moore, I craved your furtherance in my suit, and your letters of credit to our Company in my behalf; one request you granted, and promised consideration of the other. As you will find that it will not be prejudicial to the realm, pray grant it, and I shall rest largely indebted to you,

It has pleased God to show his fearful judgments upon an Englishman who came to Hamburg last May. I believe you have heard of it from a gentleman named Saunders, who has brought you word; but as I find conveyance, I tell it, the rather that it touches you and Her Majesty. The party was accompanied with one of Julius, Duke of Brunswick's men, and an apothecary of this country, who fell into his company at Leipsic, seven days' journey hence. He told the latter that he was an English earl, and came from Venice, and passing by the Duke of Brunswick's castle, he was, at his own request, presented to the Duke, and passed himself off as

VOL. XXVIII.

E. Fras. Walsingham, your son ; he was honourably entertained by the Duke, the young dukes, and other noblemen and gentlemen in the Duke's court. He also borrowed of one of the Duke's gentlemen 50 rix dollars, 12*l.* sterling, and gave a bill in French, in the name aforesaid, payable at Hamburg. On taking his leave of the Duke, his Grace, to know whether he was the person he represented himself, commanded one of his men to travel with him into this town, and ascertain it, and bring the rix dollars, and gave the man letters of credit from gentlemen of his (the Duke's) court to their acquaintance here, for his honourable entertainment.

I, having intelligence of his coming, went to his lodgings, when he told me how he had taken upon himself your credit in the Duke's court, and that his name was Finch, of Faversham, Kent, kinsman to Anthony Finch ; and that knowing divers gentlemen in that shire, he had got Lord Cobham to be his friend, and had been in France with his honour's brother, ambassador there. Finding him troubled in mind, I departed, willing the hostess of the house and others to have regard to him. Early the next morning, I was sent for, as he had cut his throat, and given himself six or seven wounds in his body. Before my coming, an English merchant lodging in the same house, caused him to set down in writing why he destroyed himself ; which was that three or four men came to him and willed him to do it, as the merchants had concluded he would be burnt alive. He wrote his name Anthony Plesto, gentleman, by Sittingbourne, Kent, kinsman to Mr. Plesto, servant with my Lord Howard.

After my arrival he lived an hour, and had two surgeons and a preacher with him. He took the latter fast by the hand, and held it, which was some token of repentance. Before he died, the Duke of Brunswick's man came, when he seemed angry with him, and said, "Ego sum nobilis," which were all the words he said. He was 35 years old, of mean stature, and knew nine or ten languages. No letters nor anything of value was found upon him. [$3\frac{1}{4}$ pages.]

83. Petition of William Marquis of Winchester to the Queen. Edward VI., on 26 Jan. 1550, granted the manors of Edington, Steple Ashton, Imber, Godenham, West Moncton, Ashecott, Northstocke, Nuttingbarnes and Goddesfield, the tithing of Lee, the rectory and site of the monastery and manor of Edington and Romsey, and the grange of Bratton, to William, late Marquis of Winchester, petitioner's grandfather. Near the manor of Edington is Edington wood; in the parishes of Steple Ashton and Maiden Bradley are certain parcels of land called Littleton's wood, &c. The entire wood has long been reputed to belong to Edington manor, but a question has lately arisen in law, if it be parcel of the manor of Edington or of Steple Ashton.

In 1550, Edward VI. granted another similar patent to petitioner's grandfather, containing the lands before mentioned and others, with all appurtenances deemed to belong thereto; and although Steple Ashton manor was omitted, yet the meaning was to pass the said woods to petitioner's grandfather, with Edington manor, as he enjoyed it during his life, and before his time Sir Thos. Seymour, by virtue of a patent of Edington manor, has been in possession thereof; but now of late some have obtained leases from Her Majesty of the woods, as parcel of Steple Ashton and as concealed lands; being sued in the Exchequer, he, by advice of his counsel, stood upon the general words of the last patent, and demurred, but judgment was given against him. This judgment only grew upon misleading the last patent, and the right of petitioner's first patent was not raised or impeached thereby, and yet any attempt to get a reversal of such judgment will be tedious and troublesome.

For remedy thereof, prays,—seeing these are manors and lands contained in the first but not the second patent, whereof Her Majesty has taken the profits ever since the beginning of her reign, and thereby made a title thereto; but the right thereof, by the first letters patent, is nevertheless vested in petitioner, and on the other side, the possession of the lands contained in the second patent, and of the said woods has always continued first in Sir Thos. Seymour, and afterwards in petitioner's grandfather, father, and himself, with Edington manor, according to both patents,—that Her Majesty will issue a warrant to the Lord Chancellor, to accept a surrender from him of all his right in Steple Ashton, and all other manors and lands contained in the first letters patent, and in consideration thereof, that the first patent shall stand in force as to the woods only, whereof the possession has continued in his ancestors and himself. Also that she will confirm his estate in such woods, according to equity and the true meaning of such patent. [1 parchment sheet. See Dom. Eliz., Vol. CLIV., No. 26.]

She says she has been dispossessed by a grant lately made to Nich. Delamarche, and yet 12 years ago, Sir T. Leighton seized it and other parcels, by virtue of the Queen's letters. It was put in the Book of Extent, according to orders of 9 Oct. 1580 and 30 July 1581, and has since been granted to Delamarche, according to the order of justice in this isle, without opposition from the widow or others. 400 light horse in Yorkshire, and her desire to be informed by me of the present state of the country. Upon conference with the gentlemen best acquainted with it, I find that it is altogether unable to furnish so great a number of foot, especially as there is not armour in the country sufficient to furnish far less; consider what a burden it would be for them to provide the armour wanting with ready money, and the charge which the country not long since sustained in services both towards Ireland and Scotland.

Touching the 400 light horse intended to be levied here, having perused all the certificates lately made by the deputy commissioners upon views there taken, I do not find in the whole county above 300 light horse; nevertheless I hope, upon any needful service, the number now defective will be supplied by the good will and forwardness of the noblemen and gentlemen of this county, upon whom the whole burden is like to light. July 28. 92. Propositions of the Earl of Huntingdon, with apostyles of the Council's reply thereto,—

That 10,000 men cannot be furnished with armour, weapons, &c., without a further and greater charge than the county of York can sustain. Ans., That in respect of former charges, Her Majesty may be induced to require only 6,000 men, so as they be well furnished in some convenient sort.

Touching the 400 light horse, he thinks the proportion great, as the country is very meanly furnished of serviceable horses; in the last view they only amounted to 356. Ans., The leading of the 400 is to be committed to such gentlemen of quality as may be able to supply the number wanting with their own tenants and servants.

He desires to be better informed of the Council's project for limitation of the charge of the said 10,000 to himself and the other three lords. Ans., It is meant that the principal charge shall be committed in time of service to his Lordship, and the other three noblemen shall serve under him as principal leaders, and not as generals.

The Council desires the men to be committed to the leading of knights and gentlemen, from 100 to 300 to each, but he thinks that as the gentry are men of small skill in martial affairs, no captains, except selected men, ought to have above 100 men. Ans., This opinion is well allowed of.

He requests to be spared making an estimate of the living and number of tenants each nobleman named has within the county, as being difficult. Ans., It is only desired that an estimate of the able tenants belonging to the said three Lords within the county may be known, and not the value of the livings.

As to any commission for musters to be made by the Bishop of Durham, he says that since he has served in those parts, the musters have always been taken by virtue of Her Majesty's commission, and that the same course was taken in the time of the Earl of Sussex. Ans., The same course is to be continued.

For expedition in executing the commission for fortifying the Borders, he will order speedy proceedings, and thinks a competent number might proceed in his absence. Ans., The execution thereof, after the first assembly of the Commissioners, and after orders have been set down how to proceed, may be committed to a few well chosen persons, to act in his absence if necessary. In the former letters, his Lordship had no advertisement what power should be put in readiness within the county palatine of Durham. [2 pages.]

97. Thomas Lord Paget to Council. On my arrival here, I wrote to my Lord Treasurer and Mr. Secretary the causes which moved me to come into these parts, protesting my duty to Her Majesty, and beseeching them to be suitors to her to pardon my offence in departing the realm without her privity. I have not received any answer, but by the proceedings used against me, I perceive that my doings have been taken in the worst sense; whereupon I forbore more writing, finding my protestation would not prevail until the hard conceits imagined against me were better cleared.

As a long time has now passed, and I hope you know there is nothing to touch me in duty to Her Majesty, I beseech you to be a means that she may pardon and suffer me to enjoy my living here, which is not much, besides what is to go for payment of my debts. Before coming away I never gave her cause of offence, and since being here, I have so carried myself, and mind still so to do, that save for matters of conscience, which in truth was the principal cause of my going away, I cannot be touched; I therefore desire her commiseration of my poor estate, in which I hope you will be intercessors for me. Giles Germaine of Guernsey having appealed to you concerning a sentence given against him by the bailiff and justices, for 290*l.* adjudged to be forfeit to Her Majesty, you have referred the cause to us. We have heard the plaintiff's counsel, and Louis de Vic, procurer for the Queen. The plaintiff has no just account of the proceedings, as he should have, but says he could not get it; nor has he put in sureties to pay costs, if he have no just cause of appeal. The Procurer has showed an Act containing the said judgment; but without the whole records of the proceedings, and his putting in surety, we decline to examine the case. The plaintiff should have complained against those that offended him, and not tried to reverse the sentence by appeal. [1 page.]

101. Henry Earl of Huntingdon to Sec. Walsingham. You may expect a certificate from me of the forwardness of this country in the matter of the association, which was signed, sealed, and sworn to, on the 16th and 17th instant, by many gentlemen, besides Lords Darcy and Eure. The latter Lord performed the matter here on his way to London, and the other, as soon as he heard of it, warned all the gentlemen of the best calling and dwelling within four wapentakes to meet him at Doncaster on the 14th instant, and they all agreed to engross the instrument on parchment, and there and then signed, sealed, and by oath bound themselves to perform, and Lord Darcy gave the first example.

I purposed to have sent you this and others that are done both for a great part of this country and divers towns, as of this city, Hull, and Beverley, but in the engrossing, a fault was committed, which must be amended. Within 10 days I shall send you what will please Her Majesty, for though there are many backward, yet a very great number, even of conscience, make means to be admitted, and this to me is a singular comfort. If the great towns and parishes might be taught, the popish men would mend, or wax weary of their dwellings; for where there is a preaching pastor, the people, for the most part, are very well given.

While my Lord Archbishop is there, I wish you would speak to him to be more careful herein, and in some parts the discipline of our Church might be amended by Parliament.

102. Henry Earl of Huntingdon to Sec. Walsingham. Since I received the copy of the instrument of association for the preservation of Her Majesty's person, I made divers gentlemen of this country acquainted therewith, and it was so made known in all this shire that above 300 gentlemen have earnestly desired to be admitted into that honourable society, and have sealed, subscribed and sworn to perform its contents. The city of York and divers other corporations within this country have done the like, to the number of 2,000 persons, and divers gentlemen in the commission of the peace that did not come to me at York, having sealed, subscribed, and sworn thereto among themselves, engrossed it on parchment, and admitted such of the meaner sort of gentlemen, and of the principal freeholders and clothiers about them as sued to be accepted into that society; so that, especially about Halifax, Wakefield, and Bradford, 5,300 of that sort have sealed, subscribed, and sworn thereto, besides the said gentlemen and corporations, and others have and will in other places do the like.

I thought to have sent up the instruments I already have, but as it will be too cumbersome to do so by the post, there being 7,500 seals at the least, I retain them until I hear from you; meantime I will cause a roll to be made in parchment of all the names, as well those that I now have, as such as shall come hereafter.

P.S.—I have occasion to ride to Doncaster, but will be here again on Friday. [1 page.]

from Liverpool to Carlisle, where, and at Berwick, he remained with his Captain, Mr. Carvile, except when he visited his father, or went to Lord Hume in Scotland, or to the Laird of Lesterrick, about horses or hounds, where he remained from 2 to 20 days, upon licence from Sir John Selby, and leave of his lieutenant. Got Lesterrick to speak to Sir F. Walsingham, then ambassador, about a debt due to him from Avery Copley of Lincoln's Inn.

2. Going thence to Wetherby, met the Master of Gray, and went in his company, because the Laird of Lesterrick promised to bear his charges to London, but the Lord did not recommend him to the master.

3. Has answered before about being in Scotland.

4. Never carried letters into or from Scotland, except from Lesterrick to the master of Glamis, and was never privy to the conveying of letters to or from the Scottish Queen; only saw her once, long since at Wetherby. Went to London with the Ambassador, and lodged with him at Alderman Harvey's. Catered for them four days.

5. Went back into the North to purchase horses or geldings for the Laird of Lesterrick, but had neither letters nor messages from any person; the Ambassador and his company sent letters to Scotland by Patrick Gray.

6. Has nothing to live upon but his pay at Berwick, which he has not yet left, nor means to leave, if he may keep it.

7. Never received pay or anything else from the Laird of Lesterrick, save a nag which he gave him last summer. [$5\frac{1}{2}$ pages, copy.]

Sec. Walsingham to Sir Edw. Stafford, ambassador in France. Yesterday the Earl of Northumberland was committed prisoner to his own house, under charge of Sir T. Leighton, for conference with Chas. Paget; he confesses the conference, but denies that he knew of any cause of Paget's return to England, except to confer with his brother Lord Paget, on private affairs, but others say that the Earl knew more than this. The Earl of Arundel was also charged with the matter, but denies it. Chas. Paget is a most dangerous instrument, and I wish, for Northumberland's sake, he had never been born. 107. William Lewckner to Sec. Walsingham. Upon my arrival in Lyons, my usual place of traffic, I found Solomon Aldred from Rouen, who, for having been in England, had had his stipend of 10 ducats a month taken from him by the Pope. Letters were written him from Rouen, that having committed such a great offence by his voyage to England, if he ever returned to Rouen, he would be put to death. Thereupon, having no other means but his stipend to live upon, he strained his conscience for re-obtaining his stipend, and has now brought himself into more credit than ever, being one of the inquisitors. He expects a notable gentleman from Rouen, with whom he was to go again to England, and who conducted Don John Dostry's [of Austria's] affairs in Flanders. This gentleman speaks English; his brother was Don John's confessor, and conducted Don John's corpse into Spain, after which he retired to Rouen, and two months since was made archbishop, but died five days after. I am doubtful as to this party's voyage into England, and as to Aldred's profession to have received letters from you, and so I thought good to advertise you thereof.

Three months since, a letter was sent to this gentleman's deceased brother, by Edward or Harry Hampton, which was directed to an Italian in this town to be sent to Rouen, and not to miscarry for 10,000 crowns, but which, through the default of the Italian, remained unsent; thereupon Aldred told me that the Italian dealt very lewdly to retain the letter, and the party to whom it was intended being dead, he feared it would come to light, which he would not have for anything, as it concerned this gentleman. From my experience of Aldred for the last 10 years, I believe he is a most malicious fellow, and would conduct to England such as would be prejudicial to Her Majesty.

A Roman named Pekelhome [Piccolomini?] has passed this town to Paris; he lately held war against the Pope and his bastard son, but the quarrel being now appeased, the Pope has given him absolution. Through the great courtesies done by Pekelhome to Mons. Joyeux, on his last being at Rouen, the King of France sent for him, and, as the bruit goes, he is to serve the King in some enterprise.

The troubles continue in Dauphiny between Mons. Danville and the Bishop of Delodo. The bruit is that the King of Navarre has entered Barcelona, which betokens some troubles, and that the Duke of Guise and the Prince of Condé are in Germany. Six days since, Mons. Chyverier arrived, who is the governor of the citadel, and Mons. Lamante, the ex-governor, is to retire to Pyamont [Piedmont].

I thank you and my good lady for your letter in my behalf, for my goods seized in the customs; through Sir Walter Mildmay's absence I could not act upon it, but by the help of the late Sir Wm. Garret's son and other friends, I obtained friendship, for which I thank the Almighty.

P.S., dated 3 Jan. 1585.—Aldred did not depart until yesterday. He told me he stayed for company, but in the end, there was only the gentleman and himself. Calling upon him three days since, I found two Jesuits with him ; he went into another room with one of them ; I kept the other company, and hearing that the one with Aldred spoke English, I demanded of the other if that one were English ; he said he thought not, and did not know what countryman he was, and had but lately come thither himself. I think the latter is the gentleman that is to come with Aldred, as he favoured him much ; the manner of Aldred's departure makes me suspect it. The night before he left, he told me they would depart by six a.m. because this gentleman would not be seen in the town, so that I promised to come to take my leave ; but in the morning, he sent his boy to beg me not to come, as he was gone. Not giving credit to it, I went to the gate where he was to go forth, and finding no horses out, walked a space out of the town to attend their coming, which happened at 9 o'clock, but I so ordered my talk that he never suspected me. I viewed the gentleman, and he seemed to me to be the very Jesuit.

I have sent a letter to Mr. Didsbery at Rye, that Aldred, whom he knows well, was coming with a Jesuit, so that he may give intelligence to Mr. Gemer, who keeps the register of men's names to and fro, that Aldred and his companion may be conducted to you. I have not put my name to the letter, but as a letter from Paris from Her Majesty's servant, and have given my man instructions to advise Didsbery of his arrival at and departure from Rouen, so that I hope they will not escape. 108. Henry Earl of Huntingdon to Sec. Walsingham. Since my last, divers gentlemen and a great number of inferior quality have signed, sealed, and sworn to the instrument of association for preservation of Her Majesty's person. I wrote that from the number of seals it was too cumbersome to send by post, and now the number has so increased that it will fill a good big trunk. I have caused the names of all who have sworn to it to be engrossed in parchment rolls, which I send herewith, and the others are ready to be sent whenever I receive directions. I have lately received two instruments from Lord Scrope, whereunto the gentlemen of Cumberland and Westmoreland have put their names, and the like of the towns of Carlisle and Kendal. I have not sent their names, as I would not stay the enclosed until the others were written, and I am informed the like will shortly come from Newcastle and other parts of this shire. [1 page.]

Sir E. Stafford to Sec. Walsingham. I am sorry to hear of enterprisers against Queen and State [Northumberland and Arundel]; one I have honoured for himself, the other for nearness of nature ; yet if guilty, I wish him more punished than the other, because he can plead lack of wit as an excuse. God give all tempted more grace than to think they could better themselves, seeing Her Majesty's goodness, and the miseries suffered by other nations for lack of such a prince. Lord Paget keeps to himself, and is tonguetied, cold, and patient ; Arundel choleric and impatient, perhaps at his own folly, not being able to find such a living abroad as he left at home. They keep to themselves, performing their devotions at the Cordeliers. Lord Paget has had an interview with a Scottish physician, but he does not deal with any suspected persons, except Morgan. Chas. 109. Henry Lord Scrope to [Sec. Walsingham]. Upon my letter to the Council, touching the untowardness of the aldermen, corporation, and inhabitants of Kendall, concerning the contribution demanded of them towards defence of this Border, there was one directed to them, either to yield the same contribution as others had done, or appear before the Council to show cause.

As they have notwithstanding not yet shown themselves willing to give according to their abilities, and as many within my office have done and still do, and as their obstinacy is a great encouragement to others to do the like, and some discouragement to those who have willingly paid, I desire to understand whether they have made any appearance, and what excuse they have for themselves and the town, so that some end may be made of the matter.

P.S.—All they offer is 40s., while Carlisle, whose ability is far under, has granted 1,000 days' work and more. [1 page.]

We take this your dutiful offer in very thankful part, and having appointed our said servant to disburse so much for us there, we require you to deliver the sum of 20,000 crowns to him, and for your repayment we will, upon sight of our said servant's receipt, order payment of the said sum, for your and our said merchants' satisfaction. 1584?

111. Reasons why the Earl of Northumberland beseeches Her Majesty to pardon him for not delivering up the keys of Tynemouth castle to Sir Fras. Russell:—

1st. His estate is but small to maintain the countenance of an earl, being charged with 10 children, and the benefit of the office of Tynemouth being a good portion of his living, without it he would not be able to sustain the charge of housekeeping, and the education of his children.

2ndly. By holding this office, he maintains 20 of his old servants, who have served him from 10 to 30 years, and has no other means of so doing; if they should be displaced, they would be left to beg their bread, having been trained up to get their living by service.

3rdly. Disgrace will grow to him in his own country by removal from the office which he tenders as his life; begs Her 1584?

VOL. XXVIII.

Majesty, leaving aside the conceit of his present disgrace, to remember his former faithful services to her and Queen Mary, her sister, in this time of his hardest fortune.

Lastly. Reminds Her Majesty that at her instance, he resigned to Lord Hunsdon Norham castle, worth 400*l.* a year, which not long before had cost him a great sum of money, and that he did not seek the office of Tynemouth, then laid upon him by her, with the promise of better preferment in lieu of his willing resignation of Norham. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page.]

112. Note that Mercer bargained with Richard Percy and Rich. Bunting for 300 quarters of malt, to be delivered at Rye, and procured a warrant to transport it thither by sea, but under colour thereof, they transported it to Flanders.

Thereupon Mercer sued Percy and Bunting, for non-delivery, in an action upon the case at Rye, where he obtained a verdict for 44*l.*, and had judgment and execution against their sureties, who were suffered to escape out of prison by John Younge, the Queen's water-bailiff at Rye.

Percy, one of the defendants, filed a bill in Chancery before the Lord Warden, contending that the jury found for Mercer upon insufficient evidence, and that some of them departed and would not hear their evidence, and yet came again, and found for the plaintiff, and that the Mayor of Rye, having given time to move in arrest of judgment, gave judgment without hearing defendant's counsel.

Mercer appeared to this suit, maintained the cause of his action, traversed Percy's allegations, and produced witnesses, but Percy only produced his companion Bunting, the other defendant.

Thereupon a decree was made for Percy, 14 Feb. 1577, that the assumption was only made by Bunting; that Mercer should pay 17*s.* a quarter for the malt received of Percy, and for malt stayed upon the former suit and re-delivered, 7*s.* per quarter, and that the execution against Percy's sureties should be restored.

The objections against this decree are:—

That though by the articles between the Lord Warden and the Barons of the Cinque Ports, authority is given to the Lord Warden in his Chancery to examine causes of equity, either before or during the progress of the suit, yet after judgment and execution had upon trial, there is no such authority given.

Secondly, it is concluded in the said articles that, if the plaintiff does not prove the material points alleged in his bill within 15 days, the suit shall be dismissed. Percy, the plaintiff, neither within the 15 days, nor afterwards, proved any of the causes before alleged. Bunting's proving that he, and not Percy made the bill is frivolous and not to the point.

The decree is uncertain in ordering payment as before mentioned, when the quality of the malt is not known.

Other objections detailed:—The Mayor of Rye, being the Prince's officer, is not compelled to execute process issued from the Lord Warden's Chancery Court; yet Wm. Tol kyn, John Fagg, and Rob.

VOL. XXVIII.

Jackson, all mayors of Rye, have taken part against Mercer. The case was referred to the Court of Common Pleas, thence by Serjeant Fenner's opinion to the Court of Sheppey, before the Lord Warden. Mercer has been disfranchised, and by this injustice continuing seven years, lost his trade and 430*l.*, to his utter undoing. [2¼ pages.]

113. R. F. to his friend.

(f. 1) You ask me to write down the sum of our private talk in Gracious Street, about the Earl of Leicester. It is dangerous, so be cautious to whom you show it; for though he seems chained to a ragged staff and muzzled (for such the allusion is to his cognizance of a bear chained to a ragged staff), he has claws that pierce, and his bite is cureless. He has longer ears than Midas, and birds that bring him tidings from all quarters (f. 2), and he does not fight openly but by policy. (f. 3) I have wondered at the great sway of the Earl of Leicester at Court, and how so great a tree should suddenly sprout and overshadow all the trees in Court, being the younger son of an arch-traitor, who was cut shorter by the head in the Queen's sister's time, and he too was guilty of treason. I find he pleaded for life with the Duke of Norfolk, who is always ready to help the distressed, and who obtained the pardon of one who conspires for his subversion. Thirsting after authority, and knowing he could not obtain it during the Duke's life, by fantastical prophecies about the Howards (f. 4) he put it into his head to marry the Scottish Queen, for which he was condemned, yet the Queen would have pardoned him but for this wretch. One nobleman who opposed the execution was sent away on an embassy, on promise that no such thing should be attempted, but was hardly on the sea when the Queen's warrant was got for his execution, and another to the sheriffs and magistrates of London that none should stir forth next day before 10 a.m.; but contrarywise, there were 10,000 people present. Had the Duke but held up a finger as unwilling to have suffered, not twenty times the force present had sufficed to perform it; instead of which, with cheerful countenance, he begged they would make no disturbance at his leaving this world of sorrow for heavenly bliss, but declared that the rumour of his favouring papists was false. Then he desired the nobility present to intercede with the Queen on behalf of his children, took his leave of those nearest him, and after prayers received death, committing his soul to God, amidst great lamentations of all.

(f. 6.) He [Leicester] then allured into treason [the Earls of Northumberland and Westmoreland], one of whom suffered at York, and the other is an exile in a foreign land; (f. 7) and now, none being left to control him, he lifted up his head, insinuated himself into the Queen's favour, and got the highest offices; married a lady of noble birth, but plotted with Dame Lettice,* his mistress, to make away with both her husband and his wife. So as the lady was in the country, playing with her ladies at table, she left the room, fell down stairs, and broke her neck, being thrown down by order of her lord ; (f. 8) but he gave it out it was by chance, and no one durst say the contrary. He next procured the murder by poison of the Earl of Essex, who had uprightly filled the office of Lieutenant of Ireland, he pretending he was ill of an incurable disease, (f. 9) and all sorts of potions were sent to cure him, but without effect. The news of his death caused such regret that, had the truth been known, the Earl had been torn in pieces ; but he shed crocodile's tears. Dame Lettice put on black, to veil her content, and though there was much whispering, no man durst speak, he was so grown in Her Majesty's favour.

New bribes come tumbling in ; he begins to beard his betters, so that the nobility began to absent themselves from Court, not appearing unless sent for when some foreign Prince or ambassador came.

Then being a widower, he proposed to the Countess of Essex, giving presents, &c. to blind the world to what had passed between them, and they had a sumptuous wedding. She now demeaned herself like a princess (f. 11), vied in dress with the Queen, till Her Majesty, after sundry admonitions, told her as but one sun lightened the earth, she would have but one Queen in England, boxed her ears, and forbade her the Court. Yet still she is as proud as ever, rides through Cheapside drawn by four milk-white steeds, with four footmen in black velvet jackets, and silver bears on their backs and breasts, two knights and 30 gentlemen before her, and coaches of gentlewomen, pages, and servants behind, so that it might be supposed to be the Queen, or some foreign Prince or ambassador.

As to the Earl, the Queen relies on him as the chiefest pillar in the land, and nothing passes in Parliament or Council that he dislikes. He animates Protestants and Puritans against each other. Being greased in the hand by the Bishops, he calls the Puritans seditious ; all the Bishops put them in prison, and then he releases them, promising the Puritans reformation in the Church. He is of no religion but what brings him gain, like Machiavelli, his master ; his ministers will inform against papist recusants ; and being in danger of losing all they have, and put in prison, they gladly compound, and most of the money goes to support his filthy luxury. Instances of extravagant expenditure. (f. 13) Talking of noblemen's crests one day, he asked what was the Earl of Arundel's, and hearing it was a ramping horse, he laughed, and said he was now like a tamed horse that any man might ride, thus mocking the misery of the nobleman to whose predecessor he was so much beholden.

For his own pleasure he will not stick to spoil 500 poor people in Derbyshire. He pulled down whole towns and villages for his pleasure. (f. 14.) The people petitioned against him, but he took care that their petition never came to the Queen's sight or the Council's, but put more of them in prison, and sent the rest home with heavy hearts. The Lord punished him by the death of his son the Earl of Denbigh. (f. 15.) Not long ago he insulted the Earl of Sussex, who challenged him for it. He professed to accept, and made great preparation, kept the Earl dancing attendance a whole day at Blackheath, but never came, having privately informed Her Majesty, who forbade them meddling one with another; thus he slept with a whole skin, and they were made hollow friends.

Another nobleman who challenged him he hired men to murder, who revealed the matter, but he denied it with oaths, and they shook hands, the nobleman knowing he could not stand against him.

The Queen being in progress and about to descend from her chariot, he offered to take her forth, but he to whom the duty belonged boxed his ears. He was forced to pocket the affront, but threatened revenge.

Friends who have spent all they have in his service he treats as men do an old horse,—leave him to graze on a ditch bank, or take 40 pence of a dogmaster for him. Not long since a gentleman of Lancashire, worth 300*l.* a year, longed to get the white bear and ragged staff on his back, succeeded, and to grace his Lord's presence, wore satin and velvet, a gold chain (f. 18.), and was so prodigal that 3,000*l.* a year would not have sufficed him. In five years he owed 500*l.* more than he was worth, and Cheapside, Paul's, and the Exchange were no walking places for him, and he had to walk like owls, at night, and every nail that caught his sleeve he took for a serjeant to carry him to prison; then he told his Lord how he had consumed all he had in his service. He promised him fairly, and seeing his desperate state, called him to his secret chamber, promised to be his good lord and give him mountains if he would commit a murder. (f. 19.) This he effected, was apprehended, cast into gaol, and informed his Lordship, who promised to be mindful of him, and bade him fear nothing, that law must have its course, but his pardon was already sealed. It was no small grief to him to be arraigned (being a gentleman), but he was found guilty on confession, yet whilst the other condemned prisoners were praying forgiveness, he was drinking wine (f. 20.); but the pardon was never meant to be sent, and he was executed, exclaiming against his Lordship. He discourages the nobility; witness his marrying the Earl of Derby's son and heir to the daughter of a mean knight, and lord * * * to a mean gentlewoman, which had nearly cost him Her Majesty's favour. Unless the Lord bring his treacherous purposes to light, he will be the hand-saw that shall hew the main posts of the land asunder. [20 pages, much damaged; possibly the nucleus of the work afterwards much altered and expanded into Leicester's Commonwealth.]

If he has not satisfied Francis Morris the said 1,000*l*., as will appear by his depositions in the Court of Requests.

If he did not at his own cost entitle Her Majesty to such 1,000*l*. by confessing the action, whereas he might have saved himself therefrom if he had doubted of her relief.

5. John Laurens to his brother and sister William Allambrigge and Joan Laurens, at Cerne. It is now nine weeks since I sent William Clerk with letters and instructions to you, and hoped ere this to have seen him and your brother Allambrigge here with me, or at least to have heard from you. I trust he arrived safe, and well sped my business, as I nothing distrust him; let Mr. Cox, who brings this, be ascertained of all my affairs, and let Wm. Clerk repair to him. I need not use many words in commending the bearer, he being partly known to you both, and thoroughly to me; use and trust him in every matter of mine as you would myself; he can tell you my estate.

P.S.—I do not write to my brother Rocetor or Wm. Clerk, on account of the bearer's haste. [1 page.]

6. Arthur Throckmorton to Sec. Walsingham. As I have ever trusted upon your favour, so in this desire I do not fear but to be furthered by you. Understanding the charitable relief Her Majesty, with the wisdom of her country, is determined to give to the afflicted Low Countries, and being thoroughly tired with an idle course, I desire in this action to be set on work, and the rather because I would cleanse the stains that some of my name and blood have lately spotted my poor house with, by my own good and dutiful demeanor. I am not so ambitious as to catch at great matters, but shall be contented with what Her Majesty and you shall think me worthy of, making you my only means and furtherer. I would have moved this suit by word of mouth, but have been kept in with an ague six or seven days. [$\frac{1}{2}$ page.]

7. William Cecil to Sec. Walsingham. Your kindness makes me hold you in special memory. This rude letter is the only way I have to keep myself in your remembrance. Soon I hope to have some appointment which will enable me to do it. I am sorry I cannot write to you of my Lord Derby's reception, but indisposition detained me at Orleans. [$1\frac{1}{2}$ pages.]

Kenilworth
Castle. 8. Robert Earl of Leicester to the Queen. It is no small comfort to me to hear of your good health, which, next the desires of your long life, is the thing your best well-wishers most pray for. For which most happy tidings, chiefly sent by your own speedy messenger, I thank God that preserveth the cause, and acknowledge in all humility the special favour showed to your own creature and vassal, from whom no recompence can be offered, but only the heart bounden to remain more desirous than able to serve you ; but the small mite was acceptable with the Highest ; my hope is that the little talent shall be made more worthy in your sight than all he yields can justly crave ; only I will offer sacrifice of thanksgiving all my life, with prayer for your preservation many years to rule over us. Thus wanting meet matter to trouble you, being in the barren soil of all good things, I take my leave, trusting shortly to attend at Court. "From your old lodging in the castle of Kenilworth, where you are daily prayed for and most often wished to be." [1 page.]

Paris. 9. Rich. Hakluyt to Sec. Walsingham. Two days before my dispatch, the Queen, on sight of two books of mine, Aristotle's Politics in Latin and Mr. Raleigh's Voyage in English, promised me the next vacant prebend in Bristol, but I hear that Mr. Saunders is resigning his to another. If such resignations are permitted, it may be many years before I am placed. I leave it to Sir W. Raleigh to tell you how careful I have been to send him discourses, both MS. and print, about his voyage.

The Spanish ambassador, Pope's Nuncio, and Jesuits blaze about, by their swarms of spies, anything that happens in Christendom on their side, but spread false rumours, and conceal anything against them.

They concealed their overthrow among the Grisons, and deny their defeat at Antwerp ; but it will prevent the Prince of Parma's helping Guise, and thus cause him and his faction to cease troubling those of the religion, and to enter into composition with the King.

P.S.—The rumour of Raleigh's fleet, and especially the preparation of Sir Francis Drake, so vexes the Spaniard that I wish, if Drake's voyage be stayed, the rumour of it may be continued. They have sent some to inquire about it. They have given out that also divers lords in England were up in arms, and the Catholics with them, and had taken an island. [2½ pages.]

11. Francis Lord Russell to Sec. Walsingham. I have been to Mr. Anderson for my money for Tynemouth castle, but he said he had not heard anything of it of the Earl of Northumberland's men. Pray set down how I may be paid, as I have present need, and the time of the year serves for provision for housekeeping.

John Scott, a Scotchman who served the Earl of Northumberland seven years, but has been two or three years from him, and maintained in Northumberland and Scotland, coming to Tynemouth castle, as it seemed suspiciously, and viewing the house and walls, I caused him to be apprehended, and took his examination. He seems simple, and yet to be trusted about such business as he goes upon. I have taken a bond for his appearance, and if you think he ought to be further examined, it shall be done. More might be known, for I think he carries letters to or from Mr. Witcliffe. The Earl's secretary is now in this country, and pretends nothing good. Remember that the castle, which is without ordnance and powder, may be furnished. I have no news, not having been long in the country. [1 page.] Enclosing,

11. 1. Examination of John Scott. Came on the 6th from Mericrewkes, in Scotland, where he has resided two years, and lodged with Cuthbert Rochester at Morpeth two nights. The next night came to Morpeth to a wheelwright, to make a long wain and two spinning wheels for Thomas Carr, of Mericrewkes. The next day came to Tynemouth, Shields to see the horse boats, as directed by Rochester; then came to one Scurfeld to have a letter conveyed to the Earl of Northumberland, my Lady, or his steward. Has spent most of the last two years in Northumberland with Mr. Shafto of Bavington, Oswald Midford of Ryall, Wm. Fenwick of Bitchfield, Roger Fenwick of Cammawe, and Wm. Shafto of Gannerton, without wages from any of them. [½ page.]

12. Petition of the Mayor, aldermen, and inhabitants of Portsmouth to the Queen, to consider the great ruin and decay of the town, and to grant her liberality towards it, so that in a short time it may be peopled.

That a customer may be appointed to receive her customs, and account for the same in the Exchequer; and that all burgesses of the town may be free of half custom for 20 years, for merchandise arriving at or shipped from Portsmouth.

That two free fairs may be kept yearly for 20 days, and that during that time all men may be discharged of their merchandise, on paying half custom.

That the wool staple for five of the next adjoining shires may be kept at Portsmouth.

13. Lord Francis Russell to Sec. Walsingham. I thank you for writing to me with your own hand. I would do the like, but my hand is hard to read. Lord Maxfield [Maxwell] continues in arms still, and the King cannot get either the Earl of Arran or any other about him to take the matter in hand against him, and the Lord of Fernihurst, who is warden, is more than half lunatic. If order is not yet taken how I shall be paid, procure it as soon as you can, and send it by the bearer, and let me in future be paid by the Auditor at every audit, and not by any of the Earl of Northumberland's men, as they shift me off from day to day, and I now stand in great need. Also order that every ship or vessel coming in or going from this haven strike their sails, so that better search may be made, for I fear great evil is wrought in this harbour, and every ship cannot be searched, because if the wind serves, they come in and go up to Newcastle in one tide, and likewise go forth; also that the house here may be furnished with munition. 14. John White to John Reskinner, Cornwall. I received your letter of the 2nd, requesting me to bear with you for 5,000 of tin until Michaelmas, and you will pay me 4,000 at Midsummer. As I would be loath to deal hardly with any honest gentleman, for forbearing 1,000 of tin till Michaelmas, if you fail not to pay me the 4,000 at the time promised, you will keep yourself and your sureties out of trouble, for as I am so ill dealt with, my servant will remain in the country until my debts are paid. 15. Lord Francis Russell to Sec. Walsingham. I understand that Lady Northumberland would have paid the money due for my entertainment at Tynemouth, but that you made stay of receiving the same, for which I thank you. I enclose a schedule of the old rent due to Her Majesty, as also of how such commodities are now let, which is to the uttermost; also a copy of the Council's letter to the Lord President of the North, stating that I shall have full provision at a reasonable rate, from some of the Earl of Northumberland's men. His Lordship has written to such as deal for Lord Northumberland for the rates of provisions, but I have not delivered the letter, as Witcliffe, who is dealer for his Lordship, is not in the country. The effect of my Lord President's letter is that I shall pay treble the old rent of every commodity, which rate I think hard, considering the charge of housekeeping that I am at.

Lady Northumberland charges me to pay the whole year's rent now, which has heretofore only been paid at Lady Day and Michaelmas, so that if I pay as my Lady has informed you, it is but half of what she has set down, which is 35*l.* for last Lady Day; otherwise, according to my Lord President's order, I am to pay 21*l.* 15*s.* for half a year. I therefore refer all to you. My man, John Lothar, is in London, to attend you for the said money. As to Allan King, I have already certified you what I will do, and as you request and I promised, so will I do to him; but I am loath to let any have access in or out of the castle, save my own men. Pray remember munition for furnishing the castle. [1 page, with marginal notes by Walsingham.]

16. Anthony Cook to Sec. Walsingham. I attended the Earl of Derby, when on Her Majesty's service into these parts, and being in debt, was forced to remain abroad until I had saved sufficient to extricate myself. Not yet having done so, as my absence may be construed into a want of loyalty to Her Majesty, I beseech you to obtain me her licence for my lenger continuance abroad.

P.S.—The bearer, my servant, has heard from my Lord Ambassador here that you lay in wait to clap him in prison, for some lewd conversation alleged to have taken place between him and your nephew. Knowing his innocency, he prefers to run all risks, and wait upon you to clear himself of the matter, being held in some estimation by myself and others here. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page.]

17. Henry Lord Scrope to Sec. Walsingham. I received yours of 27 May, signifying Her Majesty's pleasure for apprehension of a person named, should he repair into these parts, and have caused special watch to be set, so that if he should travel into these parts, he will hardly escape; if he is taken, I will send him up as directed. I have taken John Wood, a student of the Temple, 30 years of age, who purposed travelling into Scotland. [1 page.] Enclosing,

Came from London a week since, with Matthew Thompson, and arrived in Carlisle last night; if he could have procured licence, intended going to Edinburgh, to visit the King and Court there. Was at Rouen 12 months since, for 14 days, and went thence to Paris, where he stayed three weeks, at which time passengers were very strictly looked into. 20. Lord Francis Russell to Sec. Walsingham. The bearer, my deputy, can inform you what lack there is here for munition. The time is dangerous, and Her Majesty's house here had need be provided. 21. Lord Francis Russell to Sec. Walsingham. The Lord of Northumberland's death will hardly be believed in this country to be as you have written, yet I am fully persuaded, and have persuaded others, that it was not otherwise. I wish you would be a means to Her Majesty that I might have such commodities belonging to Tynemouth castle as the Earl of Northumberland had. I am scant able to maintain housekeeping with what I have, and I have sent my man to you for my fee, so that my present wants may be supplied. [$\frac{2}{3}$ page.]

22. Simon Alix, Nicol le Duc, Nicol. Effard, and Thos. Milet, ministers of Guernsey, to Sec. Walsingham. As you have always listened to the complaints of poor ministers, we wished to send one of our number to complain that on 4th June, Thos. Wigmore, bailiff, lieutenant, and nephew of our governor, having sent to speak with us, ordered us to be taken prisoners to the castle, under a guard of soldiers with loaded arquebuses, endangering our lives, and the lives of those who in pity asked if we wished to send anything to our wives. He then sent Louis and John De Vic, Peter Carey, and others, haters of the ministry, to seize our houses and detain our families, and followed himself with soldiers to search our studies, cupboards, and presses, he sealing some, and taking away what he would. Next day he sent us back to our houses. But when we wished to send one of our number to declare to you our misery, the lieutenant forbad him to leave. We beg your aid against such oppression. 23. Request to Council by the Treasurer of War [in the Low Countries, Rich. Huddleston?]. Towards my better service, pray consider the following articles:—First, that I may have the advice of the Warden of the Mint, touching the best means of uttering those rose and double nobles which I am to receive, and that thereunto, and also for obtaining foreign coins of gold of worse standards, for other money, I may have one man from the Warden, skilful of mintage, to go over with me, by whose help I may provide much foreign gold, which may be sent to England to be reminted, with benefit to the coin and standard of this realm.

By these means I dare venture to give Her Majesty 30s. for the coinage of every pound weight of rose and double nobles I receive, which is 24s. more than she now receives for other gold, and by the help of such an assistant, to buy foreign coins of gold at more than their current value, so as to return them to the Mint in England, to be there reminted at Her Majesty's standard into rose and double nobles, whereby a continual profit will redound to her, and as much foreign coin be brought into this realm as shall be carried out, whereas now all that may be got in coin or bullion of gold is carried out, and very little brought in.

For better assurance that no loss may grow to Her Majesty, the said Warden and Comptroller may be commanded that no rose or double nobles be henceforth transported to me, made of any other gold than such as will be brought into this realm, and delivered into the Mint in foreign coin. Whatever sum I shall receive in rose and double nobles, I will give Her Majesty 30s. for the carriage of every pound weight, and pay the charges of the fining of the gold whereof they are made; and for such gold as shall be made into nobles which I shall receive, I will allow the charge of fining, and such price as was paid for the same, above the rate of the English standard, desiring that there may be a sufficient number ready coined beforehand, so that they may be sent to me as required.

By this offer, and Her Majesty's sending over 100,000*l.* a year in the aforesaid coin, she will gain 5,000*l.* For the better accomplishing thereof, the Warden of the Mint desires the restraining of secret transportation of gold and silver, in such sort as it is before passed to Ralph Lane. 27. Sir Edward Stafford to Lord Burghley. I write now to send you Beza's reply to my letter about your son. God knows what has become of him; I have done as much as if he were my own, to hear of him. An Italian in this town, who has correspondents at Lyons, has assured me that he is gone into Germany, had passed Bourges, and so was going by way of Lyons, but I fear this is not certain. What makes me muse the more is, that when he passed by Bourges, he wanted money, and yet he has neither sent to me, nor to any other that had charge to give him any; but God, in whose hands His servants be, I hope has kept him. I shall not fail to inquire for him, and to do him all the pleasure I can. I send you a letter received from Hilliard. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page, endorsed by Burghley "Wm. Cecil."] Enclosed,

27. I. E. Hilliard to Sir Edw. Stafford. I understand by Thierry, a Norman, of your care touching Mr. Cecil. It is not two months since he was with me at Bourges, and came, furnished with his servant and other necessaries, expressly for my company towards Italy, but I declined to do him any service until I had commandment from my Lord his grandfather, or you. I did not doubt but at his request it might be speedily obtained, for that being yet at Paris, I understood of both your good opinions of me for that business. I was loath he should undertake any such cause without your good liking, and more loath to accompany him uncommanded, lest my faithful service might breed me sorrow for my pains. Thereupon he told me that he would go to Paris with his servant, and that I should hear from him, but I now understand he has taken some other way.

I beg pardon if I have offended in not going with him; ascribe it to my nature, or my fear to undertake such a service without authority. I have not yet heard from him, nor know when I shall, as I have left Bourges and am at Lyons, on my way to Geneva, whence, after a month's stay, I intend travelling into Italy, and will do so sooner in regard of this business, if commanded. Wm. Lenquenir, an English merchant lodging with one Sir Morris, by Paul's Wharf, will convey your command to me. [1 page.] Lyons, 29 June 1585.

- Aug. 11. 38. Thomas Rogers to Sir Horatio Palavicino, London. I wrote on Rouen. the 3rd of my safe arrival at Rouen. It is said here that the Pope has sent away the French King's ambassador from Rome, as the King made stay to receive a nuncio from him, viz., the Bishop of Nazareth, who was come as far as Lyons. It is also said that the Sorbonne doctors and commissioners, who were sent to the King of Navarre to persuade him to like the late agreements in Parliament, and resolve him of such doubts as he had of religion, have returned to Paris without speaking with the King, so that now it is resolved to muster the whole camp on the 20th instant, near to where the King of Navarre is, and besiege some town; the Duke of Guise to attend the coming of Casimir, or any other that shall come in aid of the Protestants.

[The remainder is written in invisible ink.]

VOL. XXIX.

In my letter of the 3rd, I certified you that Durens and Hayns, the Jesuits who were sent into Scotland 10 days before, had directions from the Duke of Guise, and were sent for by the Earl of Huntley, by the King's consent. They took shipping at Treport, appavelled in purple like mariners, and the ship was bound to Newcastle for coals.

I also certified that, in the opinion of all the papists at Rouen, the King of Scotland's religion was papistical, and that the papists in Paris take him to be a papist, and whatever he says or does to the contrary to be only policy, the Duke of Guise having had letters to that effect; also that all priests sent out of England will be sent into Scotland, where means have been made for their entertainment by Earl Huntley, Lord Maxwell, and others, with the King's consent.

I also wrote that Charles Arundel was the man who was to have led the army into England, if it should be invaded, and that he has lately received 300 crowns from the Duke of Guise, [who allows him 30 crowns a month], which I find to be true, from conferences with papists at Paris, and with Charles Paget, in whose company I travelled from Paris to Rouen, where he is now, with Mr. Tresham and the Bishop of Ross, to see the profession of two Englishmen, and three women of the Order of Sion. I was invited, and intend to be there to hear their discourses.

From the conferences at Paris, I found that my tokens of commendation brought the effect I looked for. I also certified what friends the papists had in the Court, and that the Earls of Cumberland and Rutland are in working, by Fortescue and Doyland, priests; they have also friends in Lord Herbert and Sir Edw. Herbert; but their women friends I cannot as yet learn.

I certify this again, fearing that my ink may fail for lack of experience.

I have delivered the token of Tramsom, alias Barber, to Thos. Fitzherbert, who upon sight thereof, received me into his company most willingly, and has given me credit with all the papists at Paris, except Charles Paget, as they are divided in factions, viz. [Lord Paget his brother], the Bishop of Ross [Dr. Lewis], Charles Paget, Thomas Morgan, and Thomas Throgmorton, and some few priests; on the other part, Doctors Allen and Parsons, and all the Jesuits, with all the rest. Dr. Allen plays on both hands, and Thomas Throgmorton is rather with the Jesuits than against them, and the Jesuits, with their party, use him in the following practice; viz., that Charles Arundel, who is now with the Duke of Guise, shall conduct part of the army upon the west parts of England; the Earl of Westmoreland, who is also at Paris, is promised 10,000 men and 100,000 crowns from the Duke of Guise, to invade the north parts upon Westmoreland side, and is secretly determined to take the two young sons of the late Earl of Northumberland with him; Thomas Throgmorton to invade the south parts with Spanish forces. The Duke of Guise himself will invade England by way of Scotland and other Spanish forces are to enter Ireland. This is expected to be performed this winter, [and all the papists at Rouen expect to be in England before Christmas].

All this was told me by Thomas Fitzherbert, as a great secret, upon my showing him the three ciphers. I also understand by him that Thomas Throgmorton goes very shortly into Spain, to further the practices, and that Parsons is secretly in the camp of the Prince of Parma, to the like end, and shortly goes to Rome about it. Fitzherbert is likely to know of these matters, as he is secretary to all the persons before mentioned of our nation, and of the Jesuits' party. He has offered me a chamber in his house at Paris; but his commons are above my reach, and I must buy a bed, if I will be there; [also he will want to borrow, and I have nothing to lend, being six crowns in debt]. Yet it is a place most necessary, as he gives and receives intelligence, and his house is the place of common conference, and the lodging of Charles Arundel when at Paris; but if I lodge there, I must do so amongst a great number of the libels in French that were written against the Earl of Leicester. I mean, however, to stay out of his commons, until I hear your resolution. If I go there, I cannot so well sound Charles Paget, as they are jealous one of another; yet he has great means of knowing the proceedings of Paget and his company.

The Earl of Westmoreland is but seldom used by the Duke of Guise, matters being wholly referred to Charles Arundel, who seeks to discredit Paget and Morgan, and to keep this conspiracy from them, as they are taken to be spies.

A new Lieger ambassador has lately gone into England from the King of France, with whom the papists have conferred, and framed him fully to their purpose, and have means to convey letters to him in the King's packet, which letters he will deliver to an Italian, to be delivered to James Taylor, a grocer in Fleet Street, and by him as shall be directed, if he will undertake it; but his answer must be first obtained, which I hope to be made acquainted with, for Fitzherbert is the principal man that has dealt with him.

Charles Paget is now here, writing a book in answer to that against Throgmorton and the Earl of Northumberland's death; but he waits for what shall be printed against William Shelley, and so to print his book in English and Latin; and Clitheroe, the priest, is also here, assisting in it.

I can learn nothing as yet of the cause of the Earl of Arundel's intention to leave England, or that any on this side were acquainted with the matter, except Dr. Allen and Bridge alias Gratley, out of whom I can get nothing as yet, as Dr. Allen has gone to the Spa for the benefit of his health, and we are not certain whether he is alive or dead.

It appears to be true that Charles Paget did go to the late Earl of Northumberland and others in England, to move a rebellion, and to give them notice of the then intended invasion by the King of Spain, the Pope, and the Duke, although the Queen of Scots sent him letters not to proceed, as the time did not fit for the purpose; the Earl of Northumberland sent to him to the same effect, [but he concealed it, and went on his journey,] and Drs. Allen and Parsons laboured with the princes in the conspiracy.

Paget has been blamed by those of the new conspiracy for not dealing in the matter as he was directed, and for discovering it to the Council in England, by which means he has overthrown two great persons, so that they account him a spy, the rather as he has often protested that he never dealt with the Earl or Mr. Shelley on any such matter, notwithstanding he went to England for that purpose. This brings him deeper in suspicion than before; and the great suit which he makes for the release of Thomas Morgan (who is also accounted a spy by all the papists here) brings him further into it, so that they exclude him from their practices, and labour to discredit him with the Duke of Guise, the Pope, King of Spain, and others, as also to keep Morgan in prison; they have much prevailed, though Paget is ignorant thereof. Let me know of the receipt of my letters, and pardon what is amiss, as I cannot peruse what is written. I shall remain at Rouen until I know your pleasure as to lodging with Fitzherbert, by doing of which I must exclude myself from Paget. I hold it best to be familiar with Fitzherbert, as he and his are the principal practisers, and by them I shall know some of Paget's courses. Rouen, 13 Aug. 1585. 42. Thomas Rogers to Sec. Walsingham. I advertised you, by mine of the 3rd and 11th, of such parcels as I had then provided, and will send the rest.

[The following is written in invisible ink.] Since mine of the 11th, my friend has arrived from England, and I have delivered him in writing the state of all things here, which he promises to send you. Lord Morley has been solicited by his mother to come over, either to avoid imprisonment in England for seeming a Catholic, or the peril that may befall him in England, if foreign princes invade it, and make a conquest. It seems she has intelligence of such an intent; but whether she would make her son an agent, or whether she is moved by any of the Princes on this side to call him over, I know not. He has promised to come when she sends for him, and has certified her that 6,000*l.* is the most he can bring over, in money, plate, and jewels. Since then she has sent over one Hanmer, a gentleman, and Ithell, a priest, to fetch him over; they set forward three or four days since to get all things ready, when Mr. Lentroppe, his Lordship's cousin, who lies on this side with a ship of France, will come and fetch him.

I send you verbatim copies of letters delivered me by Bridge, alias Gratley, to send to Henry Donne. The letters I have given to my brother, to be delivered to Donne. One is private, and addressed to Mrs. Paunsford from her husband. My friend thinks Donne should adopt some other means than that of my brother for sending his letters, as he may get into danger through them. If Donne might find means to write to Gratley through me, his or my Lady's letters might declare more secret matter than otherwise will be revealed, as I am still persuaded that Donne was privy to all these proceedings. 43. The Queen to Henry Lord Scrope, Lord Warden of the West Marches, Sir John Selby, Wm. Bowes, and Christopher Dacre. We understand that at a day of truce held at Cocklow in the Middle Marches, according to the ancient treaties and laws of the Borders, Francis late Lord Russell was horribly murdered, to the great discontentment of us, and to the evil example of all others, if remedy may not be had for stay of such practices.

Considering therefore how greatly it would touch us in honour to have a person of that quality murdered, and the peace broken after the assurance given,—a thing of most dangerous consequence—[we] have moved our dear brother and cousin the King of Scots, by our Ambassador resident there, that special commissioners may be appointed by either of us to proceed jointly to find out the executors of the said murder and breach of the peace. Finding that in the part of the said King there is the like forwardness to the prosecution of the offenders, he having already appointed persons to join in commission, we therefore have appointed you our commissioners, to join with his, to inquire by whose procurement, and how and in what manner the said Lord Russell came to his said death, and who were practisers or parties to the said most horrible murder; and such as shall be detected to have been culpable of the said murder, or infringers of the peace, you shall require the commissioners deputed by our said brother to deliver to you, and certify your proceedings herein to our Court of Chancery, there always to remain of record, and also to our Council, that order may thereupon follow. For better execution of the premises, we require all justices, wardens, serjeants, mayors, sheriffs, bailiffs, constables and all other our officers, ministers, and subjects to whom this case shall appertain, to be aiding and assisting you in the due execution of this our commission. You also write that I am to send him to my Lord President at York, who will bring him to London, and I received a similar letter from the President himself. As the young Earl is sickly and weak, and not able to travel without danger of his life, pray allow him to remain with me until the spring, and I will do my best to see him brought up in learning, and keep a schoolmaster for that only purpose, one whom his father made choice of during his life. 45. Thomas Rogers to Sec. Walsingham. The last parcels I sent were of the 18th inst., since which my friend has departed hence. I have never received any advertisement of their receipt; let me know what you have received. I have sent notes thereof by my friends.

[The following is in invisible ink:—] In mine of the 18th, I certified that Dr. Allen was gone to Rome with Morris, a priest. I have since seen, by letters from Parsons of 20 Sept., that he is gone after him with speed, and wills that if his going is discovered, it be given out that he is gone on a pilgrimage, and to sequester himself from all worldly affairs; his going is to forward the invasion of England this winter, and he and Dr. Allen have concluded to sift Batson, the Jesuit in Rome, about his being in England, and to discredit some of the Cardinals there, if they can, about the matters which Aldred deals in.

The enclosed is the last from Rome. I do not know the contents of the cipher, but I have set it down verbatim.

Lord Paget's coming from Rome is to meet with Thomas Throgmorton at Genoa, where they will take shipping for Spain, for furthering the invasion there. Thos. Throgmorton is still here in Paris, attending the coming of Malvoisier, the old French Lieger, hoping by him to hear from the Scottish Queen, and also for money for himself; but he cannot stay long here, as Lord Paget has already come from Rome to meet him. All the rest of the papistry expect his coming, as he brings them answer from the new Lieger about the conveying of their letters to and fro, and also an answer from Arnold, the Frenchman whom I mentioned before, about the Scottish Queen.

The Irishmen who passed Scotland have arrived here, and been in Normandy, with the bishop that made this Irish bishop a priest, and he gave them a few crowns. There was a convocation of bishops here yesterday, of whom the Irishmen begged, alleging they were forced to fly their country through fear of persecution. They also conferred with Lord Hamilton, to whom they brought commendations from the King of Scots, and divers of the nobility there, as they said, and eight letters from the Earl of Arran, Lord Huntley, Maxwell, and others; but being pursued upon the seas, they cast them into the water, and do not know the contents; they will stay here this winter, and go to Rome in the spring, to procure some pension.

VOL. XXIX.

As yet I cannot perceive other than that they come directly a begging.

There is an agreement made amongst the gentlemen; they will not come to conference, so Drs. Gifford, Stillington, and Barrett have returned to Rheims. One Boyle has the direction of the seminary, until the return of Dr. Allen, who has given out that no priest shall be sent into England before he gives order from Rome.

Here is great looking into Aldred's doings, and they are very vigilant upon him, and intend to do him mischief, except he looks warily to his business. Three or four days since, the Pope's Nuncio received letters from Rome, with articles against Charles Arundel, tending that he is a spy for England and maintained from thence, the suspicions arising from his haunting much the English Ambassador here. Upon the coming of these articles, the Nuncio sent for all the gentlemen here, and swore them to answer the articles preferred against Arundel, examined him himself, and is now well satisfied of him, and so returned him to be an honest man, and gave him credit, and his own nag and foot cloth, with one of his servants to bring him to his lodgings. This is supposed to have been done at Rome by Charles Paget. The Pope is the more desirous to be persuaded of Charles Arundel, as he has been commended to him by the Duke of Guise, for a meet man to have the conduct of an army to invade his native country; and Arundel suggested to the Pope certain plots how the country might be invaded. He goes to the Duke of Guise's camp next Friday. The general hope of all the gentlemen papists here is to be in England with a force this winter, or at least before Shrovetide. 47. Thomas Rogers to Sec. Walsingham. I sent two patterns of such stuff as you required, on 18 and 30 Sept., which was all I sent, since I sent by my friend. The merchant who conveyed such parcels as I sent heretofore has sent me word that, in respect of the wars, he will not send any more stuff of such value, lest it should miscarry by soldiers, and he be blamed. I have told him that the value is mistaken by him, though it be fair in show, and that it may pass as before, without peril; nevertheless he will venture no more. You must therefore take some new order, for divers parcels will be ready shortly. I received a letter from my friend lately for other parcels, which I have also bespoken, and will send them when I have safe means. Say whether they come safely to you. [The following is written with invisible ink.] The Irish Bishop, having begged here 50 crowns, has gone towards Rome to procure relief, with two of his company, whereof one is made a priest by the Bishop of Ross; for the other two, one has gone to the Bishop of Saintes, in Normandy, to be kept by alms, and the other remains in Paris, not being [able] to travel. Thos. Throgmorton departed two days since towards Genoa, to meet Lord Paget, and so to Spain, to procure relief (as it is given out). Lord Paget has no great need, as not long since he received 6,000*l.* from England.

The robbing of Mons. Malvoisier upon the seas has undone many papists here, of whose money he has lost above 3,000 crowns, whereof 50*l.* was Thos. Throgmorton's.

The Jesuits have certified lately that they proceed according to their wishes in Scotland, and have reconciled 10,000 of late, and daily expect numbers, and also to gain the King, which is the mark they shoot at, and the cause of their going thither, and the taking of that King is daily expected by the Duke of Guise.

It is not likely that the Prince of Parma will use the Earl of Westmoreland in any matter, but rather Ligons, neither is it promised that he will enter Scotland, but the Duke of Guise; and shortly after the King shall be in the possession of the Jesuits. The most certain hope they have is from Spain, both of men, money, and ships, as is promised by the help of the Pope, who hitherto yielded no comfort of pensions to any, but hopes (in secret) of common aid.

Charles Arundel has gone to the Duke of Guise, whither the Earl of Westmoreland shortly goes, to attend his sending into England. The Earl and the Prince of Parma are at odds, for the Prince has taken away the charge of men that the Earl had in Flanders, whereupon the Earl has forsaken his pension, and is at defiance with the King and the Prince.

It is believed that the King of France is evilly affected towards England, and solicited by the Queen his mother thereto, and that the Duke Pernone [d'Esperson?] has been sent away, for fear he should hinder it, and the Cardinals of Bourbon and Guise remain here at Court; this much was delivered by the Pope's Nuncio to Mr. Tresham, to say to the Prince of Parma from him. Here is as yet no intelligence to be had with the Queen of Scots, but daily hoped for. I cannot fully discover the means, as I have no skill to decipher their letters, but will send copies of some in cipher by my next, and desire to have means to convey your letters with speed, as the Chovins have refused to send any more. The times are likely to be dangerous to those of the religion who are known, and have their letters searched. We expect Allen and Parsons from Rome. [3 $\frac{1}{4}$ pages.]

Restraint having been made by Queen and Council, that no pilchards, corn, or other victuals should be exported to St. Malo or elsewhere in France, lest it should be conveyed to Spain, to the succour of Her Majesty's enemies, there is great fault in the officers. Now there are 12 or 14 ships laden for Spain, and 3 more bound for St. Malo, one belonging to Sir John Gilbert, which is stayed until they enter bonds to bring certificates from Sir John Gilbert and the Customer of Dartmouth, that the goods were lawfully exported. 52. [Thos.] B[arnes] to Sec. Walsingham. Charles Arundel is now here, and I have a vehement suspicion he is framing some plot against England, for these reasons:—At his first coming, he imparted his intent to Thomas Fitzherbert, for I saw a letter from him to Foulgiam, stating that he had come about some matter that would shortly turn to the benefit of all the persecuted here, but he must not say what it was, having sworn secrecy. He has also had secret conferences with Acconcr, the Irishman, left here by the Irish Bishop when he went to Rome, and has been very forward to solicit the gentlemen here to rebellion. He has had conferences with Capt. Gaye, who is towards the Duke of Guise, a portion of which I overheard, unknown to them; which was that Capt. Gage should procure him 500 men, to come into Picardy when he gave notice, and there take shipping, which was promised. I also heard him tell Anthony Rolestone that the Earl, his master, and he had determined to proceed shortly in a manner that would either gain them liberty and lands, or prove the loss of their lives, and thus make an end of their misery; and he asked Rolestone whether he was a good seaman.

I have specially observed that he has order to receive money of the Queen of Scots' agent, and that he has lately pawned or sold all his jewels, to make money for himself. Westmoreland and he are continually very busy about this matter with Don Bernardino, the nuncio, and the Bishop of Glasgow. In all his conferences publicly at his meals, he and Westmoreland are concluded to go to sea, and make great estimation of a certain place in Dorsetshire to land in, near Poole and between Blouvord and Berry, where dwells one Williams, a great friend of theirs, who will help with 100 men; but their greatest friend for help is Richard Feejames, a justice in that part, allied to Sir John Young. This landing place is a hole in a bank, where three or four ships may lie afloat at low water mark, and go out at their pleasure, and except for a full south wind, they may lie there unseen, and land their men there if they list. I find in Arundel's tables a special note to write to the Earl of X, but who he is I cannot say. [$1\frac{1}{2}$ pages. Endorsed by Phelippes.]

Dec. 16.

55. Thomas Rogers to Sec. Walsingham. Charles Arundel, after staying here 10 or 12 days, departed again towards the Duke of Guise, intending to return on Christmas eve. The cause of his coming was to receive 3,000 crowns of the Scottish Queen's officers here, which he laid out in England about her affairs, before coming over. The money has been promised him several times, but only 300 or 400 crowns paid him a year since, and 100 lately, which was the money I mentioned in my letter of the 6th inst. The rest he cannot get yet; Paget and Thos. Morgan hinder it through some old quarrels, which Arundel having grieved over, he had like to have slain Paget with his dagger, in presence of the Bishop of Glasgow and Lords Claudius Hamilton and Westmoreland, but was prevented by Hamilton, and the controversies have been committed to the hearing of Glasgow, Westmoreland, and Hamilton, after Christmas.

A second cause of Arundel's coming hither was to procure money of Don Bernardino and the Nuncio, for furnishing three or four ships of war about St. Malo, wherein he and Westmoreland, with Capt. Gaye, and 600 or 700 men, intended to go secretly into England, upon Somersetshire, there to rob and burn, and to take some gentlemen of account out of their houses, if they can get there, and to ransom them, and return with the spoil; but the matter takes no effect as yet, as Arundel has not his money, and neither Bernardino nor the Nuncio yielded them any comfort. Westmoreland is now sent for again by the Duke de Mayenne, to receive his charge for those wars, which he is ready to do, if he may have money for himself and men. These letters came since Arundel's departure.

The change in Scotland has made many here very melancholy ; they have no news except the general report from England, that the lords who were banished have the King in their custody, which if it proves true, Bernardin told them his master would be twice advised before he invades England, and would not venture to invade without he were sure of a good party, either in England or Scotland, or both.

These words have so deeply impressed these melancholy men that I fear they will be mad ; and they that lately hoped to be Kings are now almost prepared to die beggars. Bernardin further told them that he was persuaded the King would employ his whole forces for the Low Countries, before he began with England ; yet it might be he said that his master would pass by some part of England to burn and spoil, as Sir Francis Drake did in Spain, on purpose to procure Her Majesty to employ her force to defend her own frontiers. He said he approved this device of Arundel's, but could not contribute to the expenses, for want of commission.

There is great expectation of letters from the Jesuits in Scotland, and if they do not yield a good account of their doings, they will lose their credit with all our papists here ; for they, upon the Jesuits' promise in their last letters of 28 Nov., expected that the King would have been in their safe custody, with Huntley and Maxwell ; yet they are not altogether in despair, because they hope Lord Hamilton will prove for their party, and so much his brother, Lord Claudius Hamilton, has assured them, the rather if Lord Maxwell and his brother continue friends ; they also hope that Lord Marr will be made a party for them, if any of the Jesuits, and especially Hayns, may come to him.

We hear from Dr. Allen at Rome that he has spoken once with the Pope, and that he has licence to go to him at his pleasure. He finds the Pope a clement Prince, and well affected to our country, but he fears they will not long have two seminaries, the Pope alleging great poverty ; and for that viaticums are costly, he fears the seminary at Rome will be dissolved, the rather that they cannot live there in so quiet a sort as they might have done ; but yet he hoped to find the Pope in a better vein.

William Tresham, at his departure from this town, had opposed himself directly, with Paget and Throgmorton, against the proceedings of Parsons, as he did not like that gentlemen should be directed by priests ; but a Rheims doctor so well handled him that he has recanted his opinion in writing to Parsons at Rome.

Here is one Geo. Truberfield, who is made great account of to serve a turn, if England should be invaded upon the parts where he dwells. He was of the council for conveying over Roger Yardley. The papists here have some friends very near to Her Majesty, both in her presence and privy chamber ; their names are kept very secret, yet they have promised me that if I will procure means to go home to England, I shall have their secret commendations to them, and they shall serve me with very secret intelligence to send over ; they think me a meet man for such a purpose, as also to receive such letters as they shall send to me in the French packet, and to procure their answers, for the French are slow in their business ; neither have they trusted the French with their secret friends of importance.

This was Arundel's persuasion to me. Paget is more desirous than he that I should procure friends by my father's help to go home, as they were all certified here, by the letters which were intercepted, of the cause of my coming here, which was no matter of importance ; so that he makes no doubt but my father and the rest of my friends, being Protestants, can easily get me home, the matters being no more against me than they are ; and he persuades me the longer I stay here the worse it will be for my coming home, and therefore hastens me greatly, and says he is sorry I should lose my time here, considering that I am able to do good service, and in conscience bound to it. Oh, horrible traitor, who makes no conscience to betray his own country ! but wherein he would use me, if I should go home, I know not. I have deferred for two or three months, promising to cause my father to be dealt with for my coming home in safety, wherefore I leave it to your consideration. Don Bernardino wants to pass letters into England, and I have been asked whether I would receive and deliver his packets in England at my return ; I answered I would reply when I returned, the matter being dangerous.

Cornelius the post had not my note for the money to bring over the books of maps ; what other directions they gave him I know not.

Here are a number of priests resolved to go into England. I am not so confident upon the practices of Charles Arundel before mentioned to be now in hand, but that I will be diligent in surveying his doings and intentions, the rather as Don Bernardino has dealt so earnestly with him for a journey into England, to make some party, as I take it. Charles Arundel will not be known to him of the French convoy, but rather required me to help to convey letters by the ordinary post, if he sends any, so that if they come to my hands, you shall hear of them, as they may discover more than I am able to do. is an orphan, and his father was slain in your service. No doubt but Your Majesty lost a jewel of him, and the poor inhabitants of Northumberland had as great a loss of him as of any nobleman that ever came among them; and for his time, the like of his calling is not to be found that shall be so well thought of with poor and rich as he was, for he was a true subject, and of great value for the defence of Your Majesty and his country, which being known to your enemies in Scotland, was the cause of the shortening of his days. I trust you will not only be good to his young son during his nonage, in all causes concerning his wardship, but also in all matters which in his minority for his profit are to be looked to, that when he shall come to perfect years, he may receive his own, and then he shall be better able to serve you. It is resolved, both from the French and Spanish Kings, with intent to make places of magazine of them, to annoy England. The Isle of Wight is also named. I have begged the Secretary and Council to make known the wants of both islands to the Queen. We need 300 men for each isle against spring. I have sent for 200 double muskets and 40 targets. I have entertained the Princee of Condé, with M. de la Tremoville, Clermont de Amboys, and others, for a month, but now have sent them into England. [1 page.]*

Dec. 26. 61. Advertisements out of Spain, by Jennings of Portsmouth. There are 80,000 men, 250 ships, and 80 galleys preparing in Spain against the end of February; 12,000 soldiers are Tudescos, 10,000 Italians, and the rest Spanish, and are bound for England; 10,000 Almains are coming down into Normandy, to the Duke of Guise. I heard of this both at Dieppe and Rouen. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page.]

Dec. 28. Paris. 62. Thomas Rogers to Sec. Walsingham. The last letters from Rome certify that the new excommunication against England is granted, and will shortly be sent there, to be fixed upon the Court gates and upon Paul's; but who shall be the doer of it I cannot yet learn. Some say it went a week since, by Gilbert Gifford, or some of the priests that went in about that time, but I think it is impossible, for Dr. Allen was then newly arrived in Rome, and had not had audience. I know that Thomas Fitzherbert made Gifford acquainted with the French conveyance for letters, and that he also had conference with Gratley, to confer with Henry Donne, but to what end I know not; neither was I privy to his going into England, until he was gone.

While Dr. Gifford was here two months, Gratley went with him to Rheims, and gave him his directions for England. He is no priest, but has lately been made a deacon. There is news here of his apprehension on the coast, which causes great sorrow, and they are the more willing that I should venture home, by reason of his apprehension. The true reasons I know not.

Charles Arundel is here, and has brought both his two men, horse, and all his apparel, and has no mind to return shortly to the Duke, being malcontent that of all his pay, he has only received 300 crowns. Since his coming, he has conferred with Captains Gaye and Francesco, for 2,000 men to prosecute his roving attempt into England, and they have promised him that more or less shall be ready when he demands them. I am persuaded it will not be long before he sets forward, if he gets the rest of his money out of the Scottish Queen's officers here. He brought earnest letters from the Duke of Guise to them in his favour; I think he will set out about St. Malo. There is some unkindness lately fallen out between Westmoreland and him, as he is more effected to Paget in his late quarrel, so that the two will not join in the practice. Westmoreland is not yet gone to the Duke de Mayenne, nor will do so, as he says, unless he gives him a charge of men; but I do not see how he can provide horses and armour for himself and his men.

Since the coming here of Lewis de Pace, the Spaniard, who has often conferred with the Spanish ambassador, I have heard no more of the conveyance of his packet of letters to England; so I think he [the Ambassador] has either satisfied him, or conveyed his letters for him, or both. Tell me whether I shall deal with him, if required, at my coming away from hence.

To-day the quarrels between the two Charleses here are in hearing, by Glasgow, Hamilton, and Westmoreland. There is great desire that Lord Claude Hamilton may return home, to make some new party in England, which they hope he will be able to do, by help of his brother, Lord Huntley, and others. The Bishop of Glasgow has made him a man meet for the purpose, having made him a perfect papist, though he yet uses his religion secretly. Since the banished lords returned home, the papists here have been very melancholy, the rather as they do not hear from the Jesuits there; but they hope that Secretary Pinnart's son, who is gone into Scotland, will bring them better news. The Scotch Jesuits have their letters conveyed from Scotland into England, to one Boast, a priest in the North parts, who sends them hither by some that come from Newcastle to Dieppe.

All the papists hope that, if the marriage proceeds between Duke d'Espersion and Madame Montpensier, the Duke will so deal with the King that he will not only permit, but aid the Duke of Guise in an attempt against England or Scotland, and join effectually with the King of Spain, in any attempt against it. Espersion promised as much to the Duke of Guise, at his last being at Chalons a month since, as Charles Arundel reports; but all the papists here were persuaded before that both the King and his mother were willing to wink at, and further in secret any attempt against England. It is said that the King and his mother have agreed to try to bring in the Council of Trent to be received in France, and that it shall shortly be conferred upon, both by Council and clergy.

The reason why I do not follow the note for the names which I sent you is, that I did not keep a copy, and as my abode here is likely to be but short, I do not think it material, as the papists want me to procure safe means to go home, that they may employ me there; this I have written more at large to my friend. If he concurs, I would return under your warrant; meantime I will labour to know what affairs they will employ me in. I am per-sueded that the papists here have no safe means to convey any man into England, which makes them the more willing to get men in, by my own industry and the help of my friends, and they wish me safe in London; but I know not whether their business will be worth the accepting. 63. Petition of Hugh Offley, alderman, and 22 other merchants of London trading to Rouen, to Lord Treasurer Burghley. By virtue of your letter to the officers of the Custom-house in London, no entry may be taken of any of us, or other Her Majesty's subjects trading for those parts, whereby we and they are not only stayed from shipping such goods as we have bought upon credit, and which now lie upon our hands, and ought to be spent this winter, but we are also kept from our lawful trade, whereby we maintain ourselves, our families, and credit, and many of us have no other trade whereby to live or pay the clothiers. This is not only to our utter undoing, but it gives great advantage to the Italians and other strangers to take the trade from us. If they once obtain it, being men of great wealth, and many of us but poor, we shall never be able to recover it. Pray be a means to Her Majesty that we may have liberty to trade as before, and meantime send a letter to the officers of Customs for three or four ships, to ship away the goods lying on our hands, and to transport from the free fair, now to be kept at Rouen, the goods we have ordered in return for our merchandise, which, for want of shipping, is like to remain there. 70. Sir Chris. Hatton to Thos. Seckford and Dr. Dale, Masters of Requests. The Queen commissioned the Bishop of London, Lord Chief Justice, Master of the Rolls, and Justice Southcote, whenever I should require them, to examine what expenses I bestowed about my house and buildings at Ely Place, and to certify the same in a tripartite indenture, one part to be enrolled in the Court of Requests, one delivered to the Bishop of Ely, and the third to myself. This they have done, and I send you the certificates relating thereto, and beg that they may be enrolled. [1 page.]

71. [Wm.] Pistor to Sec. Walsingham. As my suit was at first to you that, whatever you should hear of me, you would suspend judgment until you heard my answer, so I now beseech you to consider my proceedings in Her Majesty's service, under my Lord, as they deserve.

First, for my seeking reformation of the intolerable shipping and transporting of iron ordnance, I dare affirm the like travail was never used by any before, nor grew to like effect, and would much more so had it not been so crossed. In former years, 600 or 700 tons has been commonly cast and sold, and no small number conveyed into foreign countries; since August last, which is all the time I have dealt in it, there has not been transported, besides Joachim Ortell's licence, 60 tons, and that very craftily; yet I was the first that discovered it. There has not been in all that time as much more sold to all the English merchants and Low Countrymen for their ships, by reason of the bonds I have taken of them, whereas in former years there has been sold 300 or 400 tons in less time, and without any bonds.

In five or six years before my time, the Council's orders lay unexecuted, and every man did as he liked ; and they that now be well allowed, and are greatly grieved with me, gained very much, and had no blame ; and I that have gained nothing, but sought for honest credit, and to discharge my duty, have not only lost my thanks, but am suspected worthy of blame. All my honest endeavours and true informations are trodden under foot, and the surmises of known bad people are well esteemed.

As it is in this action, so will it be with the rest of my service in that place, except Sir Philip Sydney prevent it, which I hope by his Lordship's and your means, he will do.

During the time my Lord has used my service in that place, I have given my mind wholly to it, and have got such understanding as has enabled me to do profitable service, but it is now likely to be obstructed, and utterly rejected and buried. [1½ pages. See Dom. Eliz., Vol. CXXX., No. 31.]

85. Thos. Rogers to Sec. Walsingham. On Tuesday Chas. Arundel leaves this town, to join the Duke of Guise at Chalons, unless the Duke comes here, and then he will go to Brittany. He told me he was going an important journey to Spain, and could not tell, till he had talked with the Duke of Guise, whether he should go round by Italy or Lorraine. He tells all his practises to Thos. Fitzherbert, and confers with him that was in England on Monsieur's business, and he gives him money. Capt. Gaye has promised to help him with 1,000 or 1,500 men in Brittany. Paget and Arundel are not yet made friends. Westmoreland is ill of an ague, and thinks he shall never make them friends, for the Duke of Guise heard that a gentleman was lately sent from England to murder him, and was countenanced by Arundel, who thinks Paget raised this report, and threatens to kill him, if he can prove it.

Lord Claude Hamilton returns to Scotland, the King having written to him that he wants to ruin the Earls of Angus and Mar. They want him there to make a new faction at his return, and have made him a perfect papist; he dislikes Angus.

Durens, the Jesuit, has written from Scotland that the King is safer than before, and that they have better means to send to him; and that Angus and his company are not likely long to enjoy their abode in Scotland, for Huntley, Hamilton, Maxwell, Lenox, &c. will work their destruction.

It is said that the Kings of Spain and France, with the Pope, Duke of Savoy, and Venetians, leagued to invade England, but deferred four months, on account of the state of Scotland. That the Duke of Savoy would come down to the Low Countries, with 10,000 foot and 2,000 horse, as if to aid the Prince of Parma, and then sail for England, in ships brought from Spain or that are making at Antwerp, of which eight have arrived. The Pope will pay 4,000 Italians, and the King of Spain 4,000 old Flanders soldiers. Westmoreland hopes to be employed in that company, and is therefore loth to go to the Duc de Mayenne. They hope the more in invading England, because my Lord of Leicester is busied in Holland, with the best English soldiers.

Dr. Allen has missed his cardinalship, and is told that no pensions will be granted, and the 3,000 crowns that Pope Gregory gave to the English seminary at Rome are taken away; so that this cold weather many of the priests are preparing to go for England. Morgan and Paget have sent Jonas Meredith, at the Queen of Scots' expense, to Rome, to salve their credit, impaired by Arundel and his party. He sent articles to get Meredith into the Inquisition. Cornwallis is come. The book of maps, which Mrs. Tempest, in London, gave him 10 crowns to buy, will be brought by a Frenchman. There is joy that Gilbert Gifford escaped your hands so easily. He writes that England fears to be invaded. Edmonds the Jesuit writes from London that they hope calmer days in England.

P.S.—Kemp the priest and four others, going from Rheims to England, say, that Dr. Allen has written to Bayle to send most of the seminaries to England, because of the Pope's hard dealing, and the house being indebted 2,500 crowns. [3 pages, endorsed with notes of the contents by Thos. Phelippes.]

89. Cuthbert Collingwood to Hen. Anderson, the Rose, Holborn. If Mr. Fenwick and Nicholas Forster are in London, I am sorry that I came away, as they will inform my Lord Chamberlain and Mr. Secretary that our march is and has been quiet; lest it should so fall out, I write a few notes of disorders done and suffered by our Warden, that you may give them to Mr. Secretary if you think fit.

I am little sorrowful for losing the Earl of Northumberland, who so little esteemed my 30 years' service, and preferred one of no desert and of a month's standing before me. I will never serve under that subject that accounts so small of me as he has done. He shall know that I am able to live in my country without him. Remember both the Earl of Huntingdon and Mr. Secretary of the warrant the latter promised me, which if I may obtain, I will serve Her Majesty as long as I live, and them both under her, and none else. 1586.

Martin Elwood and Robin Elwood, his nephew, with 400 men, burnt down the principal town of Riddesdale, in Sept. 1584, drove away 200 beasts, took 200 prisoners, 100 horses, murdered or killed 12 able men in the pursuit, and ransomed most of those taken. The Elwoods also, in May of the same year, at Burdup in Riddesdale, took away 60 beasts, and in the pursuit 50 prisoners, and 24 horses, most of which paid ransom; the same day Nicholas Forster, base son to Sir John Forster, sent his servants through Riddesdale, and took 160 kine and oxen, and the owners had no recovery.

Sir John Forster has made a new league with all the Elwoods of Liddesdale, for himself and friends, and there is no redress for any offences done by them to any of Her Majesty's tenants and subjects under his rule; if any Englishman seeks revenge, he will force him to make restitution to the Scots, that his own may live in safety, as he delivered Fernihurst and the Elwoods' stocks, &c. 95. Solomon Aldred to Sec. Walsingham. I was prevented from writing through the sudden departure of John Toper, yet I must signify what has passed between Mr. Gratley and me. I supped with him this evening, when he delivered me those things in writing which were concluded of the day before, as also his letters to Dr. Gifford, and another to my Lord Ambassador, and I find that he is of a mind to do such a piece of service as shall satisfy Her Majesty and you.

Dr. Allen is coming from Rome malcontent, as he can get nothing. Father Parsons, like a wily fox, seeing the world is turned reverse on his side, has put himself into St. Andrea at Monte Cavallo, into their spiritual exercises, as they term it, being a house where their young novices are brought up, and those that are in probation. His confederates laboured earnestly to Dr. Allen to labour his coming out, and to affirm to the Pope that he is a member, to the great advancement of the Catholic faith. Mr. Gratley means before he is discovered to go to Rheims, and feel Dr. Allen thoroughly of all matters, and to set a faction between Parsons and him, but he is very careful lest his letters to you should be seen by your servants, through your leaving them open in your chamber, after having read them; I have satisfied him for that matter.

I am marvellously disappointed by John Toper's coming over, as I am assured he is of trust. I thought to have employed him to go to Rheims, and to have found means to deliver Gratley's and my letters, but now I must stay his coming back, for if I should go myself, it would raise great suspicion, and I dare trust no man else but Toper, and they have placed great confidence in me. Pray despatch Toper away with diligence. Richard Lister, old Lister's son who was a prisoner in Rome, is coming over. He has brought me commendations from all my friends. [1 page.]

That she may be better served by those to whom she gives yearly fees, either by themselves or their deputies.

That great riots or other evils may be punished, and the offenders sent for to answer, although the offence may not be complained of.

That such as willingly break the orders of the Council, and depart into other parts of the realm, may be compelled to appear before it; and if they shall keep any house in Wales or the Marches for their safety, and their contempt and offence be great, the sheriff and serjeant-at-arms of the Council may have power to enter and apprehend them.

That the old instructions prohibiting the bearing of long weapons in fairs, sessions, or markets, &c. in Wales, may also extend to the Marches.

That the article of the instructions giving power to punish the reporters of seditious tales may extend to such as publish books, letters, or libels.

That the fee of a minister, being a preacher and resident, may be increased 10*l.* a year.

That the loose liberty of every inferior clerk there, to serve and surcease at pleasure the greatest causes, may be reformed, and her attorney made party thereto.

That the records touching treason or felony may be kept in a certain place by the solicitor.

There are two Scotch barks here, which came laden with wool and felts; also some men of this place who came from the coast of Peru, in ships of Newhaven and Honfleur, and were with Sir Fras. Drake in Domingo. They commend his liberality to them, and say that he prospers in all his enterprises. There are also four barks here, well appointed and ready for sea. Capt. Gerouette was greatly entertained by the Governor when he came to the castle, and had long conference with him. I shall remain here until your further pleasure is known. [1 page.]

April 20. 100. John Foxley to Sec. Walsingham. You say that Her Majesty liked of my affectionate disposition, and has advised that I should remain here, for avoiding suspicion, and that the other party should repair with warrant, who notwithstanding, for just reasons, has resolved to defer access for a time.

Mr. Colerdin's letters and Mr. Aldred inform me of the clemency which Catholics have lately found, and that Her Highness is inclined to moderation, and reunion of her subjects in common amity. This dearest treasure of liberty forces discontented minds to excessive joy. The dangerous tempest escaped makes the port more acceptable. Instead of fear, to find friendship; to enjoy liberty for restraint; life for death suspected is the change of fortune by Divine power which in all countries moves admiration. Peace is the pearl which honest hearts most esteem, and no man thirsts blood except he be deborded to tigerish tyranny.

My opinion is that this prudent relaxation will make men oppressed more sure than any, and cut off the colour which any stranger has had to disturb the State; salving wounds already inflicted, and preventing all occasions of the future. I have laboured to induce many, both English and foreigners, to conceive thus of your happy Government. Some object to the late executions, searchings, imprisonments, and the Parliament laws. My answer is that policy teaches no alteration to be in instanti whole and complete, but to proceed per gradus discretionis; some I satisfied, others I left in suspense. Considering the opposition of religion, persuasions, and occasions, I have often marvelled that you were not extremely cruel; now that you stop the stream of passion with reason, I cannot write your deserved renown, which heroical acts have formed. I always thought it meet for a Christian rather to bear the burden of misery which God permits with patience, than to turn and struggle for revenge, which Christ forbids. This benefit which you give me of writing you boldly I highly regard. Mr. Aldred certified me how willing you were to take anything I wrote in good part, and that you liked me and my doings. If I could, I would recompense this friendly information; but I trust you will perfect what I wish for him. If Mr. Colerdin, of whom I think as of a noble friend, comes presently to Rouen, he may deliver your pleasure to me, and my meaning again to you. [1 page.]

April 22. 101. M. Cat. to [Sec. Walsingham]. I do not forget my promise to you of such service as might witness my duty to religion, Her Majesty's person, and my country's preservation. For performance thereof, I have neither respected danger of my life, nor expense of my poor living, the defect whereof drives me sometimes to a non-plus ; for being the youngest son of a younger brother, my position was only seven feet of inheritance, which has constrained me to seek my living hic et ubique. I have followed arms 15 or 16 years, receiving Her Majesty's pay, until of late passing with Colonel Morgan in the Low Countries, rigour and wrong has been my portion, instead of better payment.

His dislike to me proceeded through a letter which I wrote to Sir Philip Sydney, forewarning him of some affairs so indiscreetly handled by Morgan as to endanger the knight's credit, and hazard public harm to the place of his government. Morgan, perceiving some sudden disgrace, and discovering the cause, not satisfied with depriving me of five months' pay for myself and men, sought to have me murdered. See the reward of the credit I did him, by those letters which in his name I wrote you, concerning the discourse of Mons. St. Aldegonde ; which, although the managing thereof was delivered as from him, yet I count it no robbery to challenge the thanks to myself, if anything worthy thanks was done ; for proof whereof I appeal to Sir Philip and St. Aldegonde.

Now to the fruit of my late weary travels. Not many days since, I arrived in France, to open a way for my further entrance into matters needful to be discovered, for continuance of Her Majesty's and England's security. Coming to Rouen, I consorted with Jacques Servile, searcher of Dieppe, highly favoured by the Governor there. After he had, with French policy, as he supposed, thoroughly sounded me, he brought me acquainted with an Englishman, Thos. Mytley, one of the papists' spies. These two,—resolved that they had found a feather of their own wing, as indeed I seemed to be,—told me that they lived in hope to see the Catholic Church flourish in England again, which I confirmed with like trust. "Marry," quoth Servile, "there lies a block in the way, which, till it be removed, we shall never have our desire effected." "Tush," quoth Mytley, "some resolute man or other will at the last dispatch that matter." Then he began to commend me, protesting that I appeared a man fit to be employed in matters of high moment ; assuring me that if I would return to England, and fetch the commendations of Catholics such as he would name, he would meanwhile procure me to be had in no small regard with his Holiness, at which word they both put off their hats ; and further protested that by means of friends whom they would solicit in my absence, I might make full account to be used, with the assistance of others, for the accomplishment of the great exploit, as they called it ; but therewith they denied to acquaint me, until my return from England.

Servile used to pass four or five times a year to Southsea, landing at Rye with some petty merchandise for a colour, by which means he conveyed letters both ways ; he imparted as much to me ; also that he knew Lady Allen, and had conveyed letters from her to her brother Lord Paget ; also that Tomson, a priest, steward to Mr. Roper near Greenwich, writes many occurrents, as an appointed secretary for that college ; whereby it is apparent that although many of the English papists be absent in person, yet their practices and partners are present even in the Court itself, which is dangerous, for he that is a round papist is a rank traitor.

There arrived on this side not long since a monstrous long-nosed gentleman named Chute, who triumphs of his good success before the Council at Greenwich, and how cunningly he behaved in private conference with you, so gaining your good opinion as henceforth he dares to pass into England upon any enterprise; for you stand fully resolved of his honesty, having permitted his return to France, for his further experience in travel, only upon the assurance of his fidelity; but in truth his vanity is so deciphered there, that you need not doubt him; the subtle papists perceive the weakness of his judgment, and that he is not made of that metal which must serve their turn.

I understand they have lately sent over a professed Jesuit named Jennings, an ingenious fellow, on some great matter; he was to land at Rye or Hastings, but what he had in charge I cannot learn, as all important secrets are referred to my coming back to England, where I mean shortly to be, as well to be instructed in the execution of these things, as to confer with such as I shall be secretly sent to; before coming, I will write you again of what happens meanwhile.

P.S.—Thos. Bromston, Cockett, and divers others have embarked at Dieppe for England, to join in practice with another there. [2½ pages. Signature defaced.]

102. Solomon Aldred to Sec. Walsingham. I wrote from Rouen of Mr. Gratley's grateful acceptance of your letter, also how Dr. Gifford had been sick and discontent; at my departure from Rouen, Gratley wrote a long letter to Gifford, persuading him to come away, and sent it by me, with the letter Gilbert Gifford had written to them both. At my coming to Paris, I dealt with my Lord Ambassador according to your order, who got one to carry all our letters to Rheims effectually and in good order.

I kept your letter and passport until he (D. Gifford) came, and sent him 10 crowns to bring him here, and upon his arrival made it up 30, and four I gave the man that went for him, which was the 10*l.* I received of Mr. Fant. He came on foot, and being weary, I gave him my boots and spurs to return back. The party that went for him arrived on Sunday, and delivered him his letters. He was to preach that afternoon, and his text was pax vobis, at which he made me laugh. After dinner, the scholars looked that he should have gone into his study to provide for his sermon, and mused much to see him walk in the garden, for his mind was running from pax to guerra: he finished his sermon, and next morning came his way, without saying a word to any one, took leave of Mr. Bayly, who supplies Allen's room in his absence, but did not tell him whither he went. He asked him whether he meant to return shortly, when he said yes, or he would write.

Before D. Gifford arrived here, Gratley had found means to come hither without suspicion, and I lodged them both secretly in my lodging that night, and the next day they conferred together;

D. Gifford being somewhat green in the matter, though very willing to inveigh against them, was yet loath so to do it as to hazard his credit, and could hardly be brought to speak with my Lord Ambassador, though very willing, being fearful lest it should be known.

The second night, I brought my Lord secretly to them at my lodging, where they took such satisfaction in his sweet speeches and friendly entertainment, and it gave D. Gifford such courage that, at my last parting, he told me the more he thought of it the more forward he was to perform it; that he has five or six scholars that will follow his course, and that he does not doubt to bring Dr. Allen into this action, after he has set Parsons and him at variance; if it be your pleasure, he shall so proceed. I think my Lord Ambassador will satisfy you of the reason why he does not come presently, as he has signified it to him, and has delivered him a writing which I think you will not dislike.

Gratley is so forward, that he with pain refrains declaring himself an open professor, but bridles himself, that there may be some notable piece of service brought to pass. Upon Gilbert Gifford's coming over, they will join in making a book to justify Her Majesty's proceedings, and will show what just cause has been given to her to proceed as she did, and what just cause she had to proceed more hardly, if her clemency had not been the greater.

I told him what a good opinion you had of Dr. Bagshaw, and that he should be delivered, which he was glad of, and said if he joined them in this action, they would be marvellously strong, as he has an excellent wit, and knows the proceedings of the Jesuits. He wishes Gilbert Gifford might come presently over, that no time may be lost. I asked what credit he had with the Spanish Ambassador to understand the affairs of Spain; he answered very few Englishmen knew his humour better, or could do more with him; and that the Ambassador wanted him to dwell with him, but he utterly hates a Spaniard. Yet he has promised, if it be your pleasure, and it might give no cause of jealousy, to remove from Rouen, and come here and employ himself that way, and deliver to my Lord Ambassador continually the advices. Trust him, for he is sure at your commandment in anything.

Knowing Roger Early, servant or companion to the Earl of Westmoreland, and heretofore servant to Mr. Gilbert, I begged him to return to England. I found him ready, but he doubted, as he broke from the Clink prison when he came away; I assured him I would procure means to salve that sore.

He told me he had dealt with the Earl to submit to Her Majesty's mercy, and used means to bring him to talk with me. He [the Earl] begged me to get my Lord Ambassador to talk with him, and said he had laboured heretofore to speak with him, but he refused. I moved my Lord Ambassador, but he refused until he had an answer from you, but gave me leave to talk with him. When he began to discourse of his lamentable estate, the tears ran down his eyes abundantly; he acknowledged his fault to be very great which he committed in his young days, when his head was green, and he knew not what he did. He said that if Her Majesty would promise him grace, with any small pension to live on, whatever service she should command him to do, whether in war against the Spaniard or any one else, he would do it effectually, and she would find herself satisfied for the past injury. For anything done against her since his flying over, otherwise than the use of his conscience, and to help his necessity, he will abide the trial.

Vol. XXIX.

I dare not write my opinion in this matter, yet I am bound to signify to you the truth. I know that Charles Paget and he were at words within these few days; talking of the favours shown to the Catholics of late, Paget inveighed against them; the Earl replied that if Her Majesty would but give him any promise, though it were with a condition, it should be a very hard one that he would not accept; whereupon Paget replied the Earl talked very simply, as Her Majesty would give him fair promises to bring him into doubt of his head; so they grew more into words, and the Earl told him that if he continued this proceeding, he would not live another year; to which he answered that in Paris, no man could hurt by day, and by night he would be sure not to stir abroad.

As for Thomas Fitzherbert, for whom you promised to procure a discharge for his sureties' bonds, and a warrant for his friend to send and write to him safely, but proceeded no further on account of something you heard about him, I stand the more in doubt of him too; for Bearden told me of speeches which he said Mr. Arundel and Mr. Fitzherbert told him of me, which I never spoke, and yet they said they would justify it to my face; but I knew his lying humour well enough. The gentleman has denied it before my Lord Ambassador, and said that he never heard any such speeches from me, nor ever had such talk with him, and has given me a letter to justify the same to his face, which I send herewith open to Mr. Fant, requesting him to show it him; he has also offered to my Lord Ambassador to clear himself of any charge, or otherwise crave no favour at your hands; which if he do, pray proceed with your good turns towards him; he has many enemies here for this kind of proceeding, and if you give him over, it were a great discomfort.

If Mr. Foster does not come within four days, I mean to go to Lyons. I will omit until the next how I have been abused here, but my Lord Ambassador has the matter under examination. [2 pages.]

110. Edw. Foxley to Sec. Walsingham. Our friend's relation of your goodwill towards us encourages me to continual practice to deserve it. Aldred having told me that my Lord Ambassador was to be acquainted with our dealings, I went to him with the other party, but only imparted our dutiful mind to Her Majesty; impute this rather to Aldred's simplicity than any temerity; Mr. Gilbert's delivering your mind herein defends me from the like error hereafter.

Considering many informations against all Catholics, and some men's turbulent passions, I cannot marvel though you complain of treachery; yet by avoiding bloody fury, God framed your judgment with great wisdom, not to reprove all universally. I protest that I have always borne true devotion to Her Majesty, my country, and you, and never dealt with any otherwise affected.

You write that my reconciling some to Rome is as yet too fresh in some men's memory, for which cause it was Her Majesty's pleasure that I should bear my absence for a time. If the term of reconciling be truly understood, I trust I have given no occasion of displeasure; for reconciliation imports a change of a man's mind from a state of sin to a state of grace, by contrition, and purpose of amendment, with submission to the authentical power of a true priest, authorised by Christ to remit sins (Matt. c.18 and John c. 20); for the action of the instrument is forcible by the principal agent; but they who suggest that reconciliation binds one to the Pope or Rome, excluding obedience to the prince or governor, are either grossly blinded or maliciously incensed; and if their zeal were not qualified with your discretion, they would make the realm an object of derision. June 18. 118. J[ohn Foxley] to [Sec. Walsingham]. Among your sundry Paris. travails for the profit of our country, your concourse with us will prove equal to the chiefest. The painful paths which our wits must walk are difficult; with English and strangers, friends and foes, wise and simple, to plant our own policies, to subvert the opposite, to justify, condemn, excuse, and commend divers actions, past, present, and future, that as our nation's peace might be established, Her Majesty and you might be esteemed the principal pillars of this magnificent building. We must therefore make the best or meanest in every place think well of you both, and relinquish your enemies, for when men's minds are qualified, they are ready to receive any further impression. That we may win all hearts to love and honour you, those impediments are to be removed by you which heretofore, in part of policy, you conceive to be furtherances. I know that you seek not the death or ruin of any subject, but that all should love you, which is the inclination of noble natures. I do not desire that you should deliver some from restraint or disgrace for profit to myself, but that such favours being shown to those who feared the contrary, they might account you the author of their lives and liberties, and other strangers might be informed that you are gracious.

I never knew Dr. Bagshaw, now imprisoned with others, yet for the ability of the man, and many injuries he received of companions, he may be commodiously employed, and must be removed from the place where he is altogether. In breaking the ice, many will censure us, but we will demonstrate none to be true subjects but such as consent to our reasonable meaning. The speedier manner of writing will be by the posts, any letters to D. P. or myself to be folded in a blank, and subscribed to Mr. Wm. Luson, at the sign of the Elephant, Rue de St. Jaques. In my last from Paris, I asked you to send to me to Walter Luson, at the Elephant in St. James's St., Paris; if I sometimes differ from the former resolution, pardon it; I intend your advantage and the profit of my country, persuading myself that in writing to you, I shall please God, and profit myself effectually against my private enemies. The Master and Council of the Court of Wards and Liveries,—not being ignorant of the wilful negligence of the sheriffs and their under sheriffs generally throughout England, in executing precepts out of such Court, which has greatly hindered the receipt of Her Majesty's revenues,—have ordered that the sheriffs or under sheriffs of every shire shall make personal returns of their precepts within four days of every term, and attend to answer any charge that may be made against them thereupon, when appointed by two of the said Council, upon pain of amerçiament, or such other punishment as the said Council think fit. We write this that you may not be ignorant, and desire you to leave it for the sheriffs that come after you. [$\frac{1}{2}$ page.]

125. Thomas Cartwright to Mr. Davison. * When I remember the saying of the Apostle, confirmed by our Saviour, that it is more blessed to give than to take, it causes me to close that hand which necessity would open, and I marvel at those rich and noble men who, instead of sending the fountains of their liberality abroad, behold the gutters of their inferiors come flowing towards them; unless it be that they must receive of many to give to many, which, if done in measure and good choice, has a plentiful defence.

Although I am brought to need for the Lord's cause, keeping thereby company with the Apostles and my Lord himself, who were maintained at others' charges, yet in this receipt from you I have met with a special disadvantage; for in this matter of giving and receiving I have somewhat to exchange. I grant it is somewhat unequal when, for their weighty gold, they receive the light ware of paper and ink; yet as the goodness of gold rises rather on the estimation of men than any virtue in itself, my letters are, by acceptance and an overweening of me, laid in the balance with the gold. When they handle holy things, having regard to the matter and not to the handling, no gold or precious stones may be weighed therewith, and without such merchandise, we shall not arrive at the heavenly kingdom.

Your disadvantage is that my letters can serve you to small purpose, and if they provoke you to write again, the hope, and even the endeavour of any show of recompense is taken from me. I left order with my wife not to be light handed in receiving what might be offered; however she has once come over with a gilt cup and cover; if you will have it so, I thank you, although neither for my bond to you was it needful,—effectual love towards the truth might have commanded whatsoever was in me,—neither for the testimony of your goodwill, which I know to be unfeigned towards me and others that love the truth, which love, with your singular graces, makes me wholly yours. Commend me to your wife, with whom I wish I had been acquainted when I was so near the place where she was. [1 $\frac{3}{4}$ pages.]

126. A. B. to Lord Burghley. Wm. White, a merchant of these West parts, informed me that being at St. Malo last month, he heard that 16 of their ships and barks had been rifled or taken by English men-of-war, and that their hatred of the English was such that our merchants dare not walk about in public. Also that a commandment had come from the King for ships to be got ready for sea from that harbour, and it was supposed for Rochelle. Surely Chaucer's prophecy never took such deep effect in England, and especially in the West parts as now, for theft is made good purchase, and men in authority, to recover their unthriftiness, sell their lands, buy ships, and command the captain and company not to return without assurance of a very great sum, lest they should be losers by that occupation. This was commanded by a man most unfit for any government, but he should be made known to you by any other than myself.

A Briton has been lately taken by this company, which yields them the less commodity because there must be a restitution, as reason and law requires. The party has already complained to you, and I wish Her Majesty or you heard the general complaints of the Commons at it, saying: "I think we shall rob one another shortly; we rob Frenchmen, our friends, and shall be debarred all traffic from thence if this be suffered, and shall smart for wealth wickedly got by a few." I wish you knew the third part of the disorders committed, which are kept from you for gain to a few.

Her Majesty and you have placed Sir Walter Raleigh as Lord Warden of the Stannaries, but amongst so rough and mutinous a multitude, 10,000 or 12,000, the most strong men of England, it were meet their governor were one whom the most part well accounted of, using some familiarity, and abiding amongst them; whereas no man is more hated than him; none more cursed daily of the poor, of whom infinite numbers are brought to extreme poverty through the gift of the cloths to him; his pride is intolerable, without regard of any, as the world knows; and as for dwelling amongst them, he neither does nor means it, having no place of abode; so that in time of service, this head must either fight without a body, or else the members will cut off such a head.

The north parts of Devon sustain a great loss in the want of Sir John Chichester and Sir Arthur Basset, in whose places, if occasion be offered for nominating fit persons, I will set down the best opinion carried of any generally. If any commission comes from you for taking up men by choice of any captain, if the number be 100, he will choose 1,500 unfit rich men, who for rewards are discharged, which practice had lately like to have raised a commotion among the tanners. - July 29. 137. Sir Edward Stafford to Lord Burghley. Having leisure, by Paris. reason of the King's absence, I embraced the opportunity of seeing the country, and I met with the good news of the arrival of Sir Fras. Drake on the English coast, which all here rejoice at,—so well is the Spaniard beloved,—save the Spaniards, who greatly droop at it. It is feared that many who had dealings with the King of Spain will become bankrupt.
- I am sorry to do what I have deferred, hoping by good advice to see better alteration; but seeing you put your trust in me, I must tell you, that my cousin Cecil does but dally, and is loath to come home. Having shown him your last letter, he promised to be ready within 12 or 15 days, and said he lacked money—200 or 300 crowns. I spoke to him that was wont to furnish him in Paris, who refused without order from his father; but upon my assurance, he delivered it. I expect your commands about him, for I will never deceive you. I am afraid that he haunts bad company, and worse perchance than I know of, as he never keeps that of any English, and changes his lodging so often that no one knows where to find him. He has not been to me twice since his coming here, and then only when I sent for him. Pray interpret his doings with love, and not to the worst. It may be he is afraid to return, for fear of your offence towards him for his journey of Italy. Call him home, not with anger but kindness, or he may grow desperate, which I know you would be sorry for. [2 pages. Endorsed by Burghley: "W. Cecil."]
- Aug. 2. 138. The Council to [the Earl of Huntingdon] Lord Lieutenant

within the co. of York, whereof 2,000 are to be calivers, 2,000 pikemen, 1,000 billmen, and 1,000 bowman. Such 6,000 men to be chosen of persons resident within the shire, and of ability to furnish themselves, without any other charge to the country.

The said men are to be sorted in several bands, under ensigns and captains well affected to Her Majesty. The captains to have from 100 to 300 men in charge, according to their degrees and livelihoods; captains unexpert to have lieutenants and under officers appointed them, of more experience. The time of mustering is referred to your Lordship. The Queen is chiefly anxious for the shot to be well trained according to your instructions. 600 horsemen are to be enrolled and reduced into bands, whereof 400 are to be made among the gentlemen, and 200 to be assessed upon wealthy farmers and others of ability. Certificates are to be made of such as refuse to yield to the furnishing of the said horse. The horsemen are to be furnished with cassocks of a suit, and appointed to keep their horses in the stable between this and Hallowtide next, that they may be more ready to be used, as well for service as training.

Every justice of the peace, being of the quorum, is to find two apt persons with petronels on horseback, and those not of the quorum one; certificate is to be made of such as shall refuse to perform this charge of horses. Order is to be taken for good watches to be kept in towns and thoroughfares, and on the beacons, and due regard is to be had to the landing of passengers who repair to this realm.

Search is to be made for priests and seminaries, who are to be apprehended, and order taken for such as spread false rumours, &c. The orders for impeaching the landing of any foreign forces, and relieving the maritime places are to be renewed, and York and Hull are to be dealt with again by his Lordship, for provision of powder and match, to be kept in those places for the defence of themselves and the country. Aug. 9. 139. John Foxley to Sec. Walsingham. As certain knowledge, connatural to human desire, procures gladness, so doubtful anxiety dulls the mind, and consumes the body with sadness. These six weeks I have been void of intelligence from you or P., and therefore was oppressed with sorrow, which the sudden access of P. has abolished. He assures me of your constant affection, and that the cause of his coming was for our removal. I have from time to time advertised of the causes moving him to stay; the chiefest is, that he would be assured of some maintenance out of this company at 63. You answer nothing thereto, nor to that purpose of |-|-| or dealing with wrgceenmet, which makes me conjecture that you mistrust my fidelity. Protestations are mostly used to deceive. I am content to be censured a villain, when my deeds and words disagree towards him whom I account my surest friend, noble in nature, and faithful in promises.

Nevertheless, as one man's judgment differs from another's, you may be led by babbling informers to hate him who loves you, till my own innocency or your wisdom distinguishes between falsehood and truth. If you have those conceits of me, which you may ground on mercenary piddlers and base-minded intelligencers, I cannot long remain in your favour; but if you judge of me as I deserve, you cannot bar me the trust you yield to the best. I remain a true subject to Her Majesty, and most affectionate to you, and will not alter, though you should change to me. [1 page, cyphers interspersed.]

Sept. 8.
St. Sebastian's.

140. A. B. to Rich. May, Secretary to the Merchants. As you made a doubt of my former letters, I will explain my meaning. I gave you notice of a spy employed by the King of Spain, named Don Carolus. He and a great number of others go disguised as shepherds, and are rewarded from the King's purse. In his discourse with my host, he said that the French King did not want to break with Her Majesty, and yet underhand would permit his uttermost forces. If I were in England, I could take some of them in the French ambassador's house. There was one here lately, a jolly fellow, who had been in Flanders, went to England, and now has taken my host's house of Fontarabia for his lodging. He discourses of Sir Fras. Drake's return, of the new row barges that kept the Narrow Seas, and that he had a view of their forces, which he termed terrible; also of the discovery of some Catholics in England, and that things did not fag as it was hoped. He set it down that it was impossible to get Holland or Zealand, or to sufficiently proceed in the course of the Holy League, but first to begin with England, and for the King to bend his forces that way. That he had letters from Don Bernardino de Mendoza, sufficiently advising of the manner; also letters from friends to Lord Paget and Charles Arundel, then at the Court of Spain; but within two days past, Lord Paget took shipping upon this coast, to pass for Nans (Nantes?), but has returned through foul weather; and Arundel, not liking to hazard himself by sea, went overland to Paris. He has been advanced by the King of Spain to 1,200 ducats per annum, and 2,000 ducats, ready coin, for ajuda de costas, and knighted; Lord Paget has likewise a greater pension. These two, with many other English renegades, have had their passports for Flanders "referred to further preferment, according to desert," others are to be resident in France, on pensions from the King of Spain, to set forward any treacherous devices purposed against England.

The Pope promises liberally, inciting the dukedoms of Italy to promise more than they can or will perform. The want of Holland and Zealand troubles their minds, and the invasion of the Indies, with the interruption of their traffic, is a great cross to them. The King would fain be quiet, as one foreseeing, but his priests will not permit it.

John Martines de Recaldo departed with eight ships and 15 pinnaces, &c. for Lisbon on 23d August, having 3,000 soldiers and 1,000 mariners, who went very unwillingly, until, by a solemn oration made by the general, they were persuaded they should want nothing, nor need fear, for God was on their side. They carry 7,000 calivers, 3,000 muskets, and 10,000 pikes, besides their own weapons, as also a large store of powder and shot. They touched at St. Vincent de Barquero, and took in pilots acquainted with the uttermost coast of Ireland, being their accustomed fishing place. At Lisbon they took in more men, and have the company of certain galleons, and stay until the French have done their feat at Riant, which they are gone to besiege, and then consort together for Scotland, passing on the backside of Ireland. They have laid some plot for getting the King of Scots, and bringing him away for a marriage with the King's daughter. Ireland is thought a convenient entrance, as friends abound there. If all be true in the English Pale, the rest are but renegades, and no trust to be had in them. The ships are furnished with six months' victuals, and the Marquis of Sta. Cruce is to govern in person.

I cannot judge their purpose, but surely it is not for their Indies, and their insufficiency of force frustrates all opinion of its being for England. They presume upon friends, either in Ireland or Scotland, for Paget and Arundel, with their accomplices, have trudged up and down, using vehement travail to egg forward the King, I hope to his or their destruction, and that I shall see their huge carts, with the rest of their provision, brought to Her Majesty's ships at Blackwall.

Maurice Fitz-John, Garrett Fitz-John Fitz-Maurice, and other Irishmen have been earnest with the King to send succours for Ireland. His clergy procured rewards for these men, who each have 1,200 ducats yearly stipend, and have been sent with passports to the Marquis of Sta. Cruce to follow his direction. The King consumes his money. Spaniards of best experience grieve at such folly, but their churchmen, who never saw further than their cloisters, will have everything done as they imagine, and because it comes short in forces, they broach not open wars, but secret conspiracies.

The days are now come to govern well at home, and to see to set forth abroad to defend. Many eyes should be forth looking, and many hands everywhere against enemies' fighting. Is there any truth in papistry? No more is there any towards England in them that profess it. The prelates here rule the roast, and so it is in all nations where papacy is professed; therefore, when the King was contradicted at his late being at Aragon,—being urged by some of his prelates to say he would lose Spain, but would have his will of England and Flanders, the Grand Master of Artillery with another, two of his gravest councillors at war, answered him in humility, that they perceived it not to be God's will, and therefore advised him to persuade some good agreement, and keep what he had;—then, by the instigation of those prelates, he commanded each of them to have a mouthful, so that Spain will run itself forth of breath, if ways be taken in England to withstand their doings.

Mallard, one of our church, accompanies them, and they pretend to traffic in rings and jewels. Mallard is not malicious, but is deceived. When they reach Windsor, you should send for Mallard and the other two, and do what you think good for the Queen's safety. They will arrive before this letter. Our Capt. According to your letter, I have charged certain justices of Jersey to appear before Council, to answer the validity of a sentence given by them in the cause between Paine and Fautras. I have tried to compound the matter, but have been prevented by the wilful obstinacy of Paine. His adversary was willing to submit to reasonable terms; but he would submit to no indifferent judges. Such troublesome members should find trouble. Paine, I hear, has gone to England. He will do his adversary and the justices engaged therein a shrewd turn, if it lie in his power. Pray suffer no act prejudicial against them till their arrival, when I will tell you the truth of this matter. [1 page.]

Wagers have been offered that Her Majesty will not live a year, and that the Queen of Scots will reign ere long. The ordinary posts for France, especially those between London and Rouen, should be well looked to, as letters pass from London to Rouen, and so to Paris, and are dispersed from Rouen by their messengers there, who make two crowns of a double letter, and so on rateably, and are many times sent express, in their hose and doublets. Mr. Thinne, an Englishman, is in great favour with the Prince, through his kinswoman waiting on the Prince's woman. He has a pension, procured by her, and licence to be at sea against all English. 147. Henry Earl of Huntingdon to Sec. Davison. Sec. Walsingham writes me that he left order with you to move Her Majesty for my licence to repair to London on business. I am glad that Her Majesty has chosen you for that place, for many respects, but I will only write that I pray God to give you wisdom to see, and fortitude of spirit to execute, so as your whole actions may tend to His glory and the best service of Her Majesty, whom we see many wicked Romanists labouring to cut off, but He that has hitherto preserved her I trust will still vouchsafe to her and us the same mercy still.

My matter was this ; that although Parliament called me to London, and my own business required my presence, yet until I knew her pleasure, I would not stir ; and after things were settled, and the dead of winter arrived, I would desire leave to attend my private affairs, as without some order therein, I cannot continue my service to Her Majesty. This I let you know, but to Her Majesty I desire to have no more said but that I would know whether I may repair to Parliament or stay here ; this it behoveth me to know, that my being absent the day on which I am commanded by the writ to appear may not be offensive to her. 148. ——— to Sec. Walsingham. I send the enclosed, partly concerning the State whereof you are a member ; being a faithful subject, I held it my duty, though it may seem presumptuous in one so mean. You will especially see the malicious minds of some who rather choose to live by begging, thereby to disturb the quietness of our State, than well, as they might have done, by not meddling with matters above their reach, besides the small charity of their great vicar. Though his order, before he came to his present dignity, permits not him that was a friar regular to aid Jesuits, yet to further so general a mischief he is content, with recommendations to divers Princes to aid this enterprize, earnestly wishing they may be maintained, upon devotion and superfluity of divers commonalties. In furnishing their college, they expect no other furniture than the flower of English youth, and will so provide that the vineyard may be full of labourers, as it has been lately ; also books to alienate true subjects' hearts ; to plant and bring up unprofitable weeds ; to send into our country, as they have formerly done, and call from us men of sufficiency to aid them, unless provision be made against calling forth or sending in. Our posts must be well kept by men of sound religion, and void of corruption ; otherwise, notwithstanding statutes and penalties, continual conspiracies are to be looked for. God preserve Her Majesty, and maintain the State in tranquillity. [1 page.]

152. Sir Edward Stafford to Secs. Walsingham and Davison. A letter from Gravelines, dated 18 Oct., states that a boat has returned which carried and landed at the North Foreland a man who has gone to kill the Queen, and that he is one of four who have sworn to die or perform it, and each to attempt it, whatsoever become of those who went before. The writer takes the man to be a Welshman, who has served a councillor or some good officer in the Queen's house, and thus hopes to get in again; he has served the Prince of Parma. Two of the other three are Scotchmen, and the fourth a Frenchman.

The business was contrived at Brussels, but some scruples growing in a matter of conscience, they were resolved by a Jesuit that to save the Queen of Scots, they might lawfully do it, and that if anything was violently done to the Queen of Scots, they might revenge it: whereupon they all took the sacrament that if the Queen of Scots died, they would revenge her death or all die, one after the other; and if she were not dead before they came, then as soon as the Queen had resolved that she should die, they would see if they could make away with her first; but if the Queen of Scots' death was not resolved upon, they would let their attempt fall through.

As the writer has perchance gone to Brussels, and there is no name to the letter, some time must elapse before I can hear further, but meantime Her Majesty should take good heed to herself as to who comes near her. [1 page.]

153. M. de Taffin to Sir Edward Stafford, English Ambassador in France. A courier of Venice, lately come from England, says that the Queen of Scots was sent to the Tower of London, 13 Nov., seemingly for her trial. That the King of Scots has, as it were, consented to it, saying to those who asked him from the Queen of England what he thought she should do, his mother having attempted her life, that if it were so, and she had before been attainted of a similar deed, he would not by his prayers hinder the course of justice. This is hard to believe of a son towards his mother; perhaps the courier gives reports from the Exchange of London.

He says that the Earl of Leicester is expected in England, and that Lord Grey will command in his place in the Low Countries, taking new troops.

The courier was in Utrecht when George Baste, much esteemed by the Prince of Parma, was brought in prisoner, who says Zutphen was parleying, and would soon surrender.

A Flushing courier relates the death of M. [Sir Philip] Sydney, having seen his body on a boat to be transported to England. He was wounded in the leg in two places, and would not allow it to be cut off. It is a great loss for the country.

The fight has been because the Prince of Parma tried to revictual Zutphen, but threw in so little food that it surrendered after a great fort was taken. Four United States' deputies are going to offer the Queen their sovereignty, since the King of Spain tried to do her so ill a turn by means of the Queen of Scots. [2 pages, French.]

157. Henry Earl of Huntingdon to Sec. Walsingham. I am very sorry for the loss of my nephew, your noble son, of whom his friends have not a greater want than Her Majesty and this State; yet what our God willeth, cannot be stayed. My care to get Windsor and the rest was not less than duty required. I saw my best course was to lay the charge upon Wm. Ingleby, both by writing and by speech, when I went into those parts where I was sure he had been lately. As I conjectured, the matter has fallen out, for soon after my return to York out of Netherdale, which is a meet place to harbour such fellows, Ingleby brought Windsor to me, and I have sent him to you, and hope he will be brought safely.

VOL. XXIX.

Since coming here, I have heard that Davy Ingleby is in this country. Next to Netherdale and Knaresborough forest, where his brother William is a great man, it is a most likely place to find him, for as he has here some nigh kinsfolks, he may find some so evilly affected to this State as to do much for him and such like.

This country was never in such bad terms since I knew it as now, and here is a wonderful expectation still that the greatest mischief which the papists mostly thirst for should come to pass, and cannot be avoided; but our God, I trust, will confound them all, and preserve our good Queen from all their malicious treacheries.

There was a great assembly here yesterday, both at sermon and communion, of the Bishopric of Northumberland, and of this town; many of the best calling in all the three places communicated, and some that have of late received seminary priests made not dainty to come to the communion.

Shall I be bold to tell you what is said of the greatest matters in hand? I have no liking to meddle herein, but I think it nearly touches Her Majesty. It is that she has faithfully promised the King of Scots that, whatever the Parliament moves, his mother shall be safe; and Harteley, alias Boast, says that the day of triumph will be on their side shortly. These things are very current amongst the papists here, but God can disappoint them if he sees good. By this I gather that their hope and practices continue; I trust Her Majesty may foresee and prevent the danger, if not for her own sake, for the Church and her people's. Wherever I go, I find that all good Christian subjects pray for her safety, and many that taste little of religion seem to fear her danger still. [4 pages.]

though I cannot deal with the matters which most need redress, yet I will inform myself of the truth thereof, and settle the best order I can, in some little things which here make a great cumber. Of Scotland I hear nothing. It is no small comfort that Her Majesty allows of my labours. [1 page.]

160. Henry Earl of Huntingdon to Sec. Walsingham. Last Tuesday, William, eldest son of Sir John Selby, lay in wait on a moor beyond Morpeth, with 17 or 18 persons, for the coming home of Sir Cuthbert Collingwood. Selby's company consisted of the sheriff of this county, one Strowther and his son, and three or four who came with Strowther, the rest being of the garrison of Berwick. Sir Cuthbert had with him his lady and one daughter, who rode behind two of his men, and there were also with him the Sheriff of this shire [Rob. Clavering] and his brother [Wm.] Clavering, Sir Cuthbert's son and heir, and a younger son, with eight men between the Sheriff and him, 12 persons with himself and the sheriff, besides the poor lady and her daughter, who fell upon her knees down^d from her horse, and with tears desired Selby to let her husband alone, for that time; but he and his company discharged their pistols, shot Sir Cuthbert in the belly, and young Clavering, the Sheriff's brother, in the breast and out at his back, whereof he is dead, but Sir Cuthbert is yet living. More I cannot yet certify, but within a day or two I trust to know the whole. Meantime, I have sent to Berwick, and to Sir John Forster, to lay the country for the apprehension of these outrageous offenders, who have fled to the South. This will stay me here, but the chief cause of my coming hither from Durham was that I was informed that Davy Ingleby and Boast are together, not far from this town. Lord Scrope came hither with me, and stays until Monday. [1 $\frac{3}{4}$ pages.] Annexing,

161. Earl of Huntingdon to Sec. Walsingham. Old Strowther has some land and goods for which there will be suit to Her Majesty, and Mr. Clavering, the sheriff, has lost his brother in this unhappy action, is well given to religion—a rare matter here—and of very good government. I wish Her Majesty would bestow them upon him. He is nephew to Sir John Forster, and allied in the country, but not of good living. This land of Strowther's lies so that in time of war, it yields but small commodity, and your favour towards him would be well bestowed. Pray remember the matter, so that Her Majesty's grant does not pass to any other. [1 page.]

162. Discourse addressed to Lord [Burghley?] of the cause and progress of the troubles between Sir John Selby and Sir Cuthbert Collingwood, showing the good dealings of Sir John Selby.

Eight years since, Sir John Selby punishing Richard Strowther for contempt and disobedience, Sir Cuthbert informed the Earl of 1586.

Huntingdon, Lord President of the North parts, of Sir John's hard usage of the wardenry, whereupon the Lord President wrote him to cease punishing Strowther or his brethren, and to give an account how the wardenry stood; to this Sir John answered, that he was commanded to account to none but the Lord Governor, who wrote to the President and satisfied him therein.

Notwithstanding this, neighbourly friendship was begun five years since between the parties, and continued until two days before the combat should have been held at the Hare Crag; when Sir John received a letter from Sir Cuthbert, accusing him both of high treason and March treason, to which a sufficient answer was made; copies of both letters are extant, and the originals are in the hands of Mr. Clavering, who had them among other papers in Mr. Selby's cloak bag.

William Selby, to satisfy the assembly of the falsehood of Sir Cuthbert's letter, and of his father's innocency, offered to defend the same against any gentleman that would maintain the contrary, which neither Sir Cuthbert nor any of his undertook. His son-in-law, Swynburne, made offer to quarrel, but being brought to the points of his father-in-law's letter, would not take upon him to maintain them.

In the evening, both parties came to Berwick, where Mr. Randolph, then Her Majesty's ambassador, was; and on the way, Sir Cuthbert sent Richard Brandlen of Newcastle, his brother by the mother's side, to Twysill, to know of Sir John Selby whether he had sent such answer as was delivered by his son, who avowed it. The day after, Sir Cuthbert wrote Sir John Selby, to know when he went to Twysill, that he might confer with him about his letter.

Richard Brandlen the same day used speeches to Wm. Selby of like purpose; Sir John intended to give answer in the afternoon, but could not, as Sir Cuthbert went away. An answer was afterwards sent to Eslington. Randolph laboured to appease this new quarrel, and required both parties to forbear information to their friends at Court, purposing that the Commissioners, whose coming was expected, should determine the controversy; the Lords travailed therein, but to their great contempt, Brandlen, set on by Sir Cuthbert, quarrelled with Wm. Selby in the street, and fearing punishment, left the town. Cuthbert, even during the hearing of this matter, threatened that while a Selby and a Collingwood lived, the injury he had received by the answer to his letter should be revenged. He however pretended to abide the order of the Commissioners, who left the matter in no better terms than they found it, through the obstinate wilfulness of Sir Cuthbert.

The matter hung long after this in suspense, and on Sir John Selby's part was forgotten, until Sir Cuthbert and his friends, at the last Lammas assizes, when Wm. Selby was about his affairs, gave out great brag, but no hurt was done.

Two months after, Lady Collingwood with her son-in-law Mr. Clavering, her son Thomas Collingwood, and others, came to Berwick, Sir John and his son Wm. Selby being in Twysill, where some discourtesy was offered to Mr. Saltonstell, servant to the governor of Berwick, by Thos. Collingwood, who thereupon caused Potts his servant to watch Saltonstell in the street, that he might strike him, which he had performed by drawing his sword behind Saltonstell's back, but the bystanders prevented.

Ralph Selby, second son of Sir John Selby, moved with this discourteous usage offered to Lord Hunsdon's servant, unwisely sent a challenge to Thos. Collingwood, which was answered by Isaac Woodrington.

Five weeks after, Ralph Selby accompanied Wm. Carey to Newcastle on his way to London, where he was first quarrelled by Isaac Woodrington, and both being brought before the Mayor and Council, were bound over to keep the peace.

On his return, being without a sword, he was quarrelled by one Conyars, set on by Sir Cuthbert, who struck him in the face. This was a watchword to Wm. Collingwood and Cuthbert Collingwood, brethren, and divers others of Sir Cuthbert's party; Ralph Selby, but for the assistance of the townsmen, had been murdered, and seven of them waited his return home at the five mile brigg, intending to have murdered him.

After this nothing was done until this last accident; it was a mere chance on Wm. Selby's part, as has been proved by trial, Sir Cuthbert, confiding in his number, being the first to draw and fire; he has harboured some of the murderers, and caused Clement Strowther to be assailed by eight of his servants and friends, who shot at and struck him, and left him for dead, and he will now be lame as long as he lives.

The whole week after, the same company, armed and apparelled in a warlike manner, in contempt of law, waited in the highways, &c., to entrap and murder any that appertained to Sir John Selby; Sir John, having power to suppress and punish them, yet forbore to exercise his authority, the cause being his own, and charged his friends to keep quiet, and not to meet them with the like unlawful dealing. Sir Cuthbert employed his credit with the Scots to their hurt, which is March treason in the highest degree. It being clear that the first discourtesy began in Sir Cuthbert Collingwood, and that the injuries, &c. have continued by him and his friends, and that Sir John Selby and his friends are defenders only of their just cause,—in which defence he has received far greater damage and loss than the other in offending, having besides many ruffles and disgraces, and his own friend and kinsman slain by accident,—and seeing that by the mutual consent of both parties the cause is referred to you, as a wise and godly Solomon, Sir John beseeches you so to pronounce your sentence that, where he is now behind hand, both in blood and otherwise, his friends both at home and banished may be restored to their estates without loss or damage; and that you will cause such satisfaction to be made that their reputation may be saved; for although they are in far greater danger of the law than their adversaries, yet in right and conscience they have sustained far greater injury.

[Note by Sir John Selby.] Sir Cuthbert and his friends will deny much of this, but if you will depute indifferent persons to try every point, before whom I and my banished son, with other friends, may plead our cause, we shall so justify our assertions that you will clearly see our innocency and the malice of our enemies. 163. Account of the evidence against Roger Selby, Thos. Mill, and Thomas Dawson, late of Alnwick, and John Strowther of Newton, tried before Henry Earl of Huntingdon, Lord Lieutenant and President of the North Parts, and the other Commissioners of Gaol Delivery, for the murder of Wm. Clavering; with the names of six witnesses for the prosecution, an abstract of their depositions, and the verdict of manslaughter against Selby, Mill, and Dawson, and not guilty against Strowther. With notes that the jury were favourably disposed towards the accused persons, more particularly Strowther; that their verdict was against the law and evidence, and ought to have been one of wilful murder against the whole; and that Hall, one of the jury, said, if Wm. Selby had been taken, their verdict would have been otherwise, but the men being soldiers, and Wm. Selby their constable, they excused them, as acting by his command, although Mr. Attorney said he should only command them in the service, not for unlawful acts. [2 sheets, noted by Lord Burghley.]

The Bastard Barrel, of Thunder in Denmark, going to Rouen laden with rye, was driven by storms into Newcastle, after some of the rye had been thrown into the sea. 165. Earl of Huntingdon to Sec. Davison. I have inquired as diligently as I could of the sortie committed upon Sir Cuthbert Collingwood. Being at Durham on my way towards York, as soon as the matter was brought to me, I returned; and after I had informed myself, and saw that the coroner's quest must find it to be wilful murder, I thought it good both to take course for delivering speedy justice, and to see some order amongst all the parties to this quarrel, for preservation of the peace hereafter, all which was brought to a good end before your letters came. The fact was found by the coroner's inquest, as also by the grand jury before me, to be wilful murder. [1 page.]

Sir Cuthbert Collingwood, and the bearer your servant, with other gentlemen of the country attending me, upon my letters sent for receiving my Lord Lieutenant into Newcastle, returning home towards Newcastle, were met by William son of Sir John Selby and his men, who frayed upon them, and most cruelly murdered Wm. Clavering, my kinsman. Notwithstanding exclamation by the bearer,—being sheriff of Northumberland,—that all men should keep the peace, Selby and his company assaulted them until they perceived Clavering was mortally wounded, when they all fled. 171. Request of Ralph Bowes, of Monk Wearmouth, co. Durham, to Lord Burghley. In 5 or 6 Eliz., sundry pans of iron were devised by advice of some strangers, which being made at Her Majesty's charge, were to have been set up at Portsmouth, but were afterwards carried to Tynemouth; their insufficiency to make good salt being apparent, they were left in Tynemouth Castle, where they have been for more than 20 years, and are now so consumed with rust that they will serve to little other purpose than the repair of other salt pans. Wanting them for that object, will give as much for them as they are worth, and desires that they may be viewed, and a price set upon them. [$\frac{1}{2}$ page, abstract.]

172. Petition of Simon Sprake to Sec. Walsingham, for release of his son, George Sprake, a sea captain, Christopher Nuttall, John Davis, and John Richards, three of his company, and Fras. Being very poor, and unable to pay for all their pardons, Her Majesty granted a pardon for their offences long since, which pardons are lying at Walsingham's house already engrossed. Has been a suitor for their release $1\frac{1}{2}$ year, while his son has been lying in irons in prison, and the others have no friends. Hopes his honour will keep in mind the love of an aged father for his son, the poverty his suit for their release has brought him to, and the misery the poor prisoners live in; and will work their freedom with speed, that they may be employed against Her Majesty's foes. 173. Edw. Grimeston to Sec. Walsingham. Thanks for your letters of commendation to my Lord Ambassador. I have always endeavoured to serve my Queen and country, but the opportunity has not offered. I now present you with copies of certain papists' letters, whereof one may serve for discovering matters touching Her Majesty and the State. They were directed to a cousin of mine here, and although I may seem to transgress the laws of nature in detecting matters which concern my kinsman, yet as country is more dear than kindred, and public weal to be preferred before private amity, I thought myself bound to discover what may trouble the quiet repose of Queen or country. I showed them to my Lord Ambassador, and for the more speedy advertising you, craved the credit of a packet, and to be the messenger of my own advertisements; but as he would not gratify me in that suit, and directed me to send you copies, I think he spoiled me of the fruits of my labour. I hope, during my stay in Paris, to recover more, and will use all diligence in any other action that may be acceptable to you. I intend going to Geneva, where I shall remain to do you service.

P.S.—I received these letters on the 29th ult., but could not send them sooner, by reason of the messenger's long stay in Paris. [$1\frac{1}{2}$ pages.]

2. Note by William Stafford, brother of Sir Edw. Stafford, French Ambassador. On St. Stephen's Day, Dec. [26], I went to the French Ambassador's house in Bishopsgate Street, where I found him sitting by the fire, with Bellievre, but he rose and conducted me to the upper gallery. I desired, as I had many times done before, that by his means I might go with Bellievre into France. He replied, "Tell me, Mr. Stafford, the true occasion why you would go there by stealth?" I told him that if known, I should not pass, but I was discontented, upon some dislike which my Lord of Leicester had conceived of me, and would rather live there poorly than remain here, despised by such a man. He promised me letters of credit to those who would do me good, but said I must continue in my brother's favour, lest I should be suspected. He asked whether there was anybody who for crowns would do an exploit, and upon my asking what, he replied to kill the Queen. Endorsed, with notes by Stafford, touching the means he professed to have adopted to gain the confidence of the French Ambassador, by pretending to be an arrant knave to Prince and country; and particulars of transactions relating to conspiracies against the Queen, e.g., "He demands of me what Babington was,—Shirrell's going to the Queen of Scots,—De Jardin's going into Scotland,—Sir Francis Drake's coming home,—the taking of Babington and the rest; George Gifford named,—the Queen's thought of him touching that practice,—the Lords going down to Fotheringay Castle," &c. &c.

3. Account of a conference had, by command of the Queen, with the French Ambassador at the Lord Treasurer's house, by the Lord Treasurer, the Earl of Leicester, Sir Chris. Hatton, vice-chamberlain, and Secretary Davison, respecting certain statements made by William Stafford, brother to Sir Edw. Stafford, the English Ambassador in France; as also by Du Trappes, servant to the French Ambassador, Cordallion his secretary, and Moody, a prisoner in Newgate; that he, the French Ambassador, had seduced them to conspire to murder the Queen, in order to serve the Queen of Scots, for whom there was else no way but death, and sent his servant Du Trappes to Newgate, to engage Moody for that purpose, when Moody proposed to lay gunpowder under the Queen's bedroom, and explode it.

The Ambassador indignantly denied the accusations, and alleged that the suggestion was made by Stafford himself, and that he threatened him if he did not desist, he would expose him, which he would have done if he had not had more regard for his mother, Lady Stafford, his brother the ambassador in France, and his sister. The Ambassador, though very unwilling, was confronted with Stafford, and told that though no credit should be given to Stafford or Moody, and though the lewd devices proceeded from them, yet as Du Trappes confessed that he made the Ambassador privy to Stafford and Moody's speeches, and the Ambassador himself could not deny but that he understood of such wicked matters from Stafford, and confessed that he threatened him for the same, Her Majesty had just cause to think that the Ambassador did not the part of a good minister to conceal such treasonable offers, and suffer them to have proceeded, if they had not been otherwise discovered.

The Ambassador replied that he was not bound to utter the same, howsoever it might concern the Queen, as he was an ambassador, and thereby bound only to make account of all his doings to the King his master, and to conceal or discover it as he should direct him; but it was answered that in a case concerning the surety or loss of a Prince's life,—yea, if it were the life of any Christian,—he, as a Christian, was bound to withstand such a wicked purpose as the attempt of murder. He stiffly held to the contrary opinion, and repeated an example of late years, of an ambassador to the King of France, to whom a Spaniard had discovered an enterprize against the person of the King of Spain, but who sent word only thereof to the French King; whereupon, after some question in the French King's Council, it was concluded that he did well in not discovering it to the King of Spain; so he made that an example for himself, and then took his departure. 4. Wm. Stafford's report [before the Lords] of his speech to the French Ambassador. "I cannot receive your great words. It is a wicked action that you have begun against the Queen,—to take away the life of such a Prince, when you are here to preserve peace between the Queen and your master. I will not reveal what you say, because it is not forbidden in this kingdom to speak freely." I protest before these Lords here that the affair was begun by you, and continued by Du Trappes, who instigated me to take away the life of such a heretic, and I should be renowned throughout the world, especially by the Dukes of Guise and Parma, relations of the Queen of Scots, and should have a pension of 1,000 crowns from the Pope, and he spoke in the same way to Moody. [1 page, French.]

[Jan.]

5. Note that in 1583 [1587], or the year preceding, a design to attempt the life of the Queen was discovered. The actors were one Moody, an idle profligate fellow, then prisoner in Newgate, and one Stafford, brother to Sir Edw. Stafford, then Ambassador in France, set on, as was alleged, by the French Ambassador Chasteauneuf, through the means principally of one Du Trappes, his secretary, or domestic. The thing seems to have been discovered by Stafford, and through his information, Du Trappes, while on his way to France, was secured at Dover. The French Ambassador, hearing of his servant's seizure, began to stir, but the Queen ordered my Lord Treasurer, the Earl of Leicester, the Vice-Chamberlain, and Secretary Davison to send for him to the Lord Treasurer's house, and open the whole matter to him; not to accuse him with the guilt, but to justify what had been done to Du Trappes, whereof an exact entry or memorandum of all that passed was made by the Lord Treasurer. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page, in Sec. Williamson's hand.]

[Jan.]

6. Notes on the same conspiracy, with the following additions: that Mr. Waad was expressly sent over to acquaint the French King of the apprehension of Du Trappes, who was taken at Rochester; that Stafford and Moody accused Du Trappes, and were confronted with him. That the Ambassador was charged, and councillors sent to converse with him; that he denied and yet justified it; that Stafford declared the Ambassador to have propounded the thing, and Moody and Du Trappes was sent to him, to treat of the delivery of the Queen of Scots, and killing the Queen.

1587.

Also that the French Ambassador appeared to have an ill affection towards Her Majesty, as he harboured Babington the arch traitor, the very day before he was apprehended. Waad was to take this occasion of requesting the King to give up Morgan and Paget, whom it seems the Queen had long demanded, and without satisfaction, as they had been the principal designers against her life. He was also to procure justice in the matter of the arrest of several English ships and goods in France. [$1\frac{1}{4}$ pages.]

7. Note of a letter from St. John de Luz. I hear from Bilboa that a Scotch Ambassador has come to the Court of Spain. That the King is providing great store of men in Castile, and that certain Frenchmen report he has embargoed French shipping in Andalusia, to carry biscuit, &c. to Lisbon, and is making provision of shipping and men in the Straits. The common report is that it is for Ireland, but this is only gathered from circumstances. I hope that they in England are as wise to prevent as they in Spain are envious to purpose. The account made in England of the King and all his Spanish force is less than the fear that the Spanish mariners have of Sir Fras. Drake; and without marvels, the King can do little by sea. Freake, the teller, whose son shall marry our sister Smith, and who endeavours to set her free from us and all the world. My mother's displeasure continues towards you and my brother Lewes, but is moderated towards me and the rest. She sometimes sends for me, and I hope in time God will mollify her heart.

The news in Court this Christmas is not good on your behalf, for it is bruited here of a most heavy displeasure conceived against you by my Lord of Leicester, who has protested he will be revenged of you, and will procure you more enemies, and has revealed to the Lord Treasurer and Secretary Davison some injurious speeches you used of them to him, at your last being with him. Some of the servants of his Lordship and the Secretary have reported that it will be good for you never to return hither, and that if their Lordships are appointed to go over again, it will be too hot for you to tarry there. Your friends fear lest the wonderful power of this man should do you hurt, while there are none to answer for you. We doubt not of your integrity in Her Majesty's service, but fear lest, by means of your adversaries, she should be possessed with some misliking of you in your absence. Entertain your chief friends about her with continually writing to them, and to the Queen herself, of your proceedings. Mr. Vice-Chamberlain and Lord Cobham have asked me for you several times, and were desirous to hear of your well doing. Walsingham has been absent from Court a long time, and is still at Barn Elms. These be men that love you well, and you will do yourself much good in often remembering them with letters.

There has been a new conspiracy discovered of late, practised it is said by William Stafford, Thomas Tindall, one Moody, and Du Trappes, the French Ambassadors' secretary, and it is said the Ambassador is touched with some privity thereof; they will be arraigned to-morrow. Lady Stafford and Drury are commanded from the Court, and it is thought they will hardly be re-admitted. Mr. Waad has gone to France about Her Majesty's service, and William De Vic is gone with him.

A few days since, one Smith was hanged at Tyburn for theft. His apprehension, just about the time of that of the conspirators, caused a most shameful report to be circulated to ruin me, and it was noised all over the city and realm that I was one of the conspirators. This morning I saw a letter from my uncle Robert to my mother, reporting this slanderous speech. I have ever been far from any such humour, and have prayed for Her Majesty's preservation and the confusion of her enemies. I have been forced to forsake the Court for a while, to show myself in the city, and must write into Leicestershire, to satisfy those who stand in doubt thereof. If this report comes to your ears, account it a lie. I pray God to forgive the authors. Commend me to my sister, and thank her for her letters.

P.S.—Lord Cobham sends his hearty commendations, and says he shall shortly trouble you for a licence for mares. [2 pages, endorsed by Wilkes.]

10. Thomas Browne to his cousin, Thos. Barham, at the foot of Holborn Hill. Such have been the troubles here since my coming from Paris, that there never went a post or messenger, but he has been sent back, and our letters taken from him, and sent to the Privy Council at Paris, so that there are two that I wrote you in their hands. There never was such a stir here in France, for Englishmen and their goods; but both English, French, Flemish, Spanish, and all country ships have been stayed this month here. If my goods had not been entered in a Frenchman's name, I should have been in danger of losing them, as others have done, and as yet they are in danger to be lost. To avoid all dangers in this country, as well of my body as goods, I have, by my purse and otherwise, got myself naturalized, and am now, by great friendship, made both free and a burgess of Rouen, both by special grant, with the broad seal of France from the King, as also from the whole Council of Paris, and of this town, whereby I am as free as any merchant to sell or buy, or trade in all France. It has cost me 20*l.*, but I hope it will gain me more.

In my detained letters, I wrote you the full answer of the gentlewoman, who by no means will write to my Lord of Warwick, as she has written twice to my Lady, asking her to be a means to my Lord for her, and for her uncle Moyle to be protected under his Lordship's favour, but never had any answer; so that she thinks it would be vain to write more, especially as there is a proclamation out against her. It is now at least four months since I wrote you how she is altogether governed by Lyby, a new-made priest, and has refused the counsel of two other priests in this town, whereof I carried one on purpose to Paris with me, to persuade with her, but all would do no good. For your part, she neither knows you nor ever heard of any of your name, save your sister Elizabeth, whom she became acquainted with at Lady Mordaunt's. Lyby said he heard of you, and how that you spoke certain words in the great disgrace of Dr. Campion, by means whereof she said she would write nothing. I think her not worthy to have so much good done her as my Lord of Warwick wishes. She still continues at Paris, and is a great suitor to the Spanish Ambassador, to have the pension the King of Spain gave her husband, which she is promised, and so cares little for any friendship out of England. She has made a lease to her uncle Moyle for 31 years, of all her living in England, and he has paid her already 400 French crowns, and must pay her 120*l.* a year sterling during the tenancy.

I lay at Paris six days, only to solicit this good dame, which cost me and those I carried with me 20 French crowns, which had been better saved.

If your mind to do any good that way, your best way is to know some friend of Lyby; he is a Kentish or a Surrey man. I send my two little cousins a pair of amber bracelets each.

19. Sir John Forster to Sec. Walsingham. Hearing that at an ordinary court to be held at Morpeth on the 24th instant, for and in the name of Lord William Howard and Lady Elizabeth his wife, there was likelihood of the peace being broken, through the great assemblage of people on his part, and also on that of Francis Dacre for hindering the same, I thought it better to be present. I found his lordship's officers holding a court, but most of the meanest sort of the inhabitants of Morpeth, who owed suit and service to him, refused to appear, affirming that if there were any court to be held there for Dacre, they would appear.

As Dacre was in town, and had brought certain learned in the law with him, to hold a court for and in the name of Fras. Dacre, Edw. Grey, constable of Morpeth castle, by his lordship's appointment, stayed his proceedings, lest harm might ensue; and with his servants, used all lawful means to prevent the unlawful assembling, and appointed certain men within his charge to stay the repair of such inhabitants as had refused to appear at the court, and offered to go to the house where Dacre was, lest he might execute his determination in holding a court, which would have been very prejudicial to the title of Lord William and Lady Elizabeth to the castle and lordship of Morpeth.

You know the nature of the people, and how affectionately they deal in such matters, without regard to law. I remind you, that the mischief which is feared may be prevented. Lord Wm. Howard and Fras. April 30? 21. "Advertisements touching Sir Fras. Drake's proceedings at Cadiz, sent out of France:—"

Wednesday, $\frac{1}{2}$ April 1587, 5 p.m., the English army was discovered coming right to Cadiz, where Don Pedro de Acugna was, with seven galleons. He sent one to discover who they were, but being fired on, it withdrew; he gave the alarm; the town flew to arms; the women were ordered to the fortress, and in the confusion, 27 were smothered in the press at entering. The avenues most dangerous for the enemy's landing were guarded, and a dispatch sent to the Duke of Medina Sidonia at St. Lucar, and to the neighbouring places for help.

The enemy fired at the ships, and plundered them, then burnt a Genoese ship, laden with very rich merchandise; five of Spain, laden for the Indies, and a great galleon of 700 tons. A bark of the enemy was taken in the port, in which were five or six English, who said that they had come in 13 days from England, intending to sack the town. Don Pedro de Acugna attacked them with his galleys, but was obliged to retire, their artillery carrying further than his.

1587.

Seeing the precautions taken, the enemy did not attempt to land, but were satisfied with burning the ships.

On Thursday the galleons made another attack, but were driven back by the superior artillery. The enemy plundered and burnt a Biscayan vessel of wines, and six or seven Turkish vessels, laden with munitions of war. He next wanted to attack the bridge by which help was to come, but seeing it well defended, made no effort. They tried to sail away, but the wind did not serve. The galleons and the fortress fired on them, but their artillery always made the galleys retire. The Duke of Medina now entered, with 3,000 footmen and 300 horsemen, but the wind was favouring them. The enemy retired on Friday morning ^{20 April}_{1 May}. They took away 2,900 pipes of wine, 10,000 quintals of biscuit, 10,000 loads of corn, and much armour, victuals, and munition, having burnt 19 vessels. Some estimate the damage at 3,000 or 4,000 crowns. It is supposed the army will take the route of the Canary, Madeira, or Terceras islands, and seek the fleet returning from the Indies, which was the first object of Drake's voyage.

Account of Sir Fras. Drake's ships :—

- 2 large war ships, very well made, of 500 tons.
- 2 admirals of the same size.
- 1 large similar ship, of 400 tons.
- 2 war galleons, well made, of 200 tons.
- 7 of 150, well armed and with good artillery.
- 13 fine frigates, of about 50 tons.
- 27 ships in all; but two Englishmen made prisoners, say they have not more than 4,000 men. [$2\frac{3}{4}$ pages.]

May. 26. Account of the disorders between Francis Dacre and Lord William Howard's friends.

On 14 April, Mr. Dacre came to Morpeth, when he was attended by the bailiffs, burgesses, and most of the barony, who promised to pay him their rent and do service. The townsmen told them that a head court for the corporation was to be kept by them on the 24th, as was customary, and that the Lord, or his constable, or some one from him used to sit with them, and required Mr. Dacre to attend, which he promised to do. On the 23rd, Dacre came to the town, with 12 men and two gentlemen, one of whom was learned in the law, and took lodgings at Mrs. Green's, a widow; thereupon the bailiffs with some of the aldermen and other burghesses went and told him that Edw. Grey, constable for Lord William Howard, entered their Moothall two days before, by some sleight, and lodged certain of his men therein, so as to keep them out; and that although they had demanded it several times, they could not get it, nor be suffered to keep their court there, except they would act as he wished them, which they would never do.

Immediately after, troops of horse and a number of Mr. Grey's friends from the Borders came to the town, followed by the Lord Warden and a great company, who rode to the castle, and lodged there; and in the evening, 100 persons came to where Dacre was lodging, and walked up and down the street, and a person went with the bailiff and a serjeant, who were then with Dacre, and told them to assemble the aldermen, and meet Grey at the market cross; the bailiff replied it was too late, and the serjeant, after going out, returned and said he would not go out again for fear of his life.

By daylight next morning, the street where Dacre lodged was lined with 100 men of the Borders, all armed, who walked up and down with Mr. Grey and others, until three p.m., when Dacre went away. In this time the bailiff and certain others of the town who had attorneyed to Dacre offered to go to him, but were stopped by the guard, and carried away by force, although he had willed all who favoured him not to make any tumult.

After this Dacre sent the two gentlemen who came to the town with him to the Lord Warden, to inform him of these disorders, and what evil was likely to ensue if the townsmen would not be ruled by him, but would assemble for his defence against his will, and that his Lordship should forcee the worst, who said he would so do, but did not. About nine o'clock, the Lord Warden, with Mr. Grey, one Felton who said he was appointed steward by Lord Wm. Howard, and others of that faction went into the Tolbooth, and sat upon the bench, and with the other bailiff who had not attorneyed to Dacre, began to call the court, which was against the order of the town, but they rang the bell for warning. The other bailiff, all the aldermen, and the burghesses thereupon came to the Moothall, and being called, flatly refused to sit in court, appear, or make answer but in Dacre's name, and according to the order of the town, and thereupon departed.

Those sitting in the court proceeded in their unorderly course, with the countenance of the Lord Warden, and composed a jury of six, whom they swore to Lord Wm. Howard; one was the Lord of Misrule, and another the common neatherd (?) for the town.

Mr. Birkbeck, a counsellor, required orderly proceedings, that the court might be free, and that those burghesses who would willingly appear in Lord William's name should so do without disturbance of others, and also those who would willingly appear in Dacre's name; but the Lord Warden answered that he would maintain the possession. Birkbeck then required that the guard and unlawful assembly before Dacre's lodging might be removed, that he might come abroad with more security ; he answered that for those matters they might prefer bills at the sessions.

1587.

He then required that the bailiffs, aldermen, and other townsmen might quietly come to confer with Dacre ; he answered that if they should be suffered, they might keep the court with him, and therefore refused ; thereupon they commanded Mr. Birkbeck forth of the court, who, requiring that the premises might be truly certified, departed.

All this time Dacre kept in his lodgings, lest by going abroad, the townsmen should assemble about him ; and he divers times sent to them, and thanked them for keeping themselves quiet, and exhorted them to remain so. Matters thus continued until three p.m., when Dacre with his servants suddenly took horse and left quietly, so that the townsmen should not flock about him. With note that the Lord Warden is uncle to Edw. Grey, and has certain grounds of Lord Wm. Howard, which are worth much to him, and that the serjeant of the town was forcibly taken to the castle by some of Lord William's men, and there imprisoned, for attending upon Dacre. [3½ pages.]

27. The Council to Sir Thos. Leighton, John de Vic being sent by the bailiff and jurats of Jersey, to complain of the arrest of certain French ships there, the case was referred to the Attorney and Solicitor General, and the Judge of the Admiralty, who called before them Richard Wigmore, sent by Sir Thomas Leighton and de Vic, to ask what was the ancient usage. They also asked the opinion of Sir Amias Paulet, who said that all merchant strangers have been from time to time received in the islands of Jersey and Guernsey, free from arrest of lives, ships, and goods. And as to expedience, seeing that it is well known what benefit the crowns of England and France receive in time of hostility, by the neutrality of the isles as a place of common vent, their privileges, grounded upon the same, should be maintained.

Therefore all the ships and goods of the French lately arrested by him should be released, provided the French release those belonging to the isle arrested by them. Yet as strangers trading thither in time of hostility should have the licence of the captain of the isle they think that upon like restraint or other cause of unkindness, notice should be given to those concerned, that they might ask his licence. [1½ pages, copy.] Annexing,

27. 1. "The commodities ensuing of the trade of merchandise in the isles of Jersey and Guernsey, this war time" :—

The islands being weak, and only inhabited by poor labourers and fishermen, have been freed from invasions by this intercourse of merchandise.

The Queen gains a good sum yearly by the customs on cloths, kerseys, tin, and lead exported thither, and by linen and French wares imported thence to England.

The inhabitants gain, by obtaining necessaries, by the money spent among them by merchants, and by the 1587.

profits in petty customs to the captains of both isles, towards supporting their charges, which are doubled in time of war.

Intelligence is thus gained of the state of affairs in France, more full than they gain of us, for they have more intelligence by Flanders from London than from hence. The merchants cause no danger, for they are unarmed, and there are more English than French.

The broad cloths of the West parts of England, which are such as can only be sold in Normandy and Brittany, are disposed of.

The realm is furnished with dowlas, buckrams, pol-davies, and other Breton cloths, and Normandy canvas, in exchange for our merchandise.

Our merchants gain, our vessels and mariners are employed, and our navy maintained. [2 pages.]

Also,

“The damages and discommodities by the disorder of the said trade of merchandise used in the isles;”—

The French King and his subjects receive great profit by that intercourse of merchandise, English goods are abased, and French wares advanced in price. Thus the English merchants selling to a loss have to raise the price of linens and French wares imported by them, causing a dearth of them.

The English merchants now import more than they export, whereby gold and silver are carried away, and the Queen loses the customs which would arise from the goods transported. [1 page.] Also,

“The causes and occasions of these foresaid promised mischiefs, and the remedies of the same,” to similar effect. [Pages 4–11 in a book of 11 written, and 5 blank pages.]

The sheriff, accompanied with Sir Cuthbert, his Lady and daughter, and some of their servants, returning homewards from that service, were met by Wm. Selby of Berwick, and 12 or 13 of his associates, and notwithstanding the presence and petition of the gentlewoman, or special endeavour of the sheriff, by solemn proclamation and other means, to preserve the peace, they executed their fury against Sir Cuthbert, by murdering Wm. Clavering, our late kinsman. By the delay of justice, deeming to escape the due punishment, they colour their bloodshed with terms of accident, and nothing has more disquieted the country, or bred more deadly dissension, than impunity or dangerous delay of the execution of justice upon such outrageous malefactors, amongst whom never any, in our memory, committed force with like contempt of law. 35. Petition of Louis Sanard, factor for Mighel de Bois and Fernandes de Quintanadoines, Lord of Brittany, and divers other merchants of Rouen, to Council, for compensation for the loss of his ship and goods. Sir Thos. Leighton, captain of Guernsey, in February last, sent a number of soldiers and others aboard the Greyhound of Newhaven, which put in there through stress of weather, and was bound from Malaga to Newhaven, with merchandise valued at 12,000 crowns; they took possession of the said ship, and John Herbert, the master, and others, going on shore to speak to the said captain, were detained prisoners, and the French mariners in the ship forcibly expelled, leaving behind all they had therein, and sent away to France without any relief, being driven to beg their bread on the way. The Captain of Guernsey, nothing regarding the sentence of the justices of Guernsey for restitution of the said ship, unloaded her, and sent the goods into various places of England, disposed of the residue, and prohibited, upon pain of death, the master or owners, going to France or England, or sending any letters, lest they should sue for recovery.

Petitioner, having got away from the isle in May last, came to England, and presented a petition to the Council, whereupon they granted him letters of assistance, and a commission from the Admiralty Court for the recovery of the ship and goods, where-with he returned to Guernsey, but could only find of his merchandise to the value of 240 crowns. To learn where the rest was, he requested the justices of the isle to examine several persons who were present at the unloading and sale, and himself drew the interrogatories for their examination, and delivered them to the justice, after being approved by Louis Denis, attorney-general there.

This attorney, being also one of the examinates, was warned before the justice, and upon appearing, he willed petitioner to subscribe his name to the articles, which he did, whereupon the attorney requested to have the interrogatories for 24 hours to consider, when he would bring his answer in writing, which was granted, although he had heretofore perused them. He then asked petitioner what he meant by the following title of the said articles, "Merchandizes depredeés et gastées et decippées par le Sieur Gouverneur," to which petitioner answered that he construed those words thus, "Merchandises made away, unladen by night, wetted, rotted, spoiled, and dispersed in sundry ways by the said Captain and his servants;" but the attorney went and showed it to the Captain of Guernsey, who construed himself to be grievously injured therein, although petitioner protested before the justice, and in the presence of the said Captain, that he never meant it to be injurious to him, or to be so construed by him, it being rather to his interest to procure the Captain's good will and favour. Nevertheless, he continued to give petitioner many outrageous speeches, and threatened that he should be dealt with in such a manner as was not decent for a man of his calling to utter; he thereupon detained petitioner as a prisoner for three weeks, and now has sent him up to the Council, in the custody of one of the officers of the said isle, as a malefactor or villain. As petitioner has lost his principal goods in a free place, against all equity and justice, and not on the seas by pirates, and has spent 150*l.* within these five months in attempting to recover them, he requests an absolute answer, so that he may return home, and spend no more time in the matter. 37. William Thomas to Sec. Walsingham. It is five years since Sir Philip Sydney preferred my suit to you, touching my bill for a bailiwick; pray have me in remembrance, especially being here in service with his Excellency. Upon my last going over with my Lord, you willed Mr. Ferdinando to put you in mind thereof, but I understand the bill, which Mr. Thos. Lake once had in his keeping, cannot be found. It would hinder me if it was lost; it was some trouble to procure, as I had my Lord Treasurer's warrant for the particulars, besides my Lord's letters to the Attorney General, who drew the bill first with his own hand, had a copy made, signed it, and wrote a postscript that it was to be allowed, whereby Her Majesty should have no doubts about signing it.

I have always been ready to serve any of your servants in procuring their suits to my Lord, and some have either got their suit, or some direct answer, but I could never get any of yours to put you in mind of my poor bill. I hope that as you have promised to do it, you will find some time for Her Majesty to sign it.

P.S.—I have had such contrary answers from your men when I demanded the bill, that unless you give order for a search to be made for it, I shall still be delayed. [1 page.]

38. Henry Lord Hunsdon to Lord Burghley. Sundry of this country are greatly grieved that the complaint of some of this country, who maintain none but rogues for driving their malt horses, are like to prevail to put down the course of the passage by water, which has stood this country and Essex in very great charge, whereof I have paid my part, though the least of a great number. I hope Mr. Wrathe's procurement of all these complaints for his private gain, who has therein already dealt very lewdly, shall not prevail so quickly, without further consideration, against an Act of Parliament, and a matter so long in consultation be revoked so suddenly. It were better Mr. Wrathe's mills were pulled down, and he drowned in one of them, than that this Act of Parliament should be overthrown, which cannot be done without another to revoke it. If Robert Wrathe deal thus insolently, choking the river with stakes to overthrow boats, before he may lawfully do it, let him take heed that some wilful fellows do not pull down his mills likewise, without law, though they receive punishment for it.

I write you because you know how beneficial this carriage by water is to the whole country, and how it touches only the benefit of Mr. Wrathe's mills, and some few others, and the maintenance of a few rogues and idle persons that drive their horses, which will serve for no other use. I have reserved the 200*l.* you sent me by my servant Horsman, and as soon as I arrive there, I will send you the captains' and officers' names, and all other things you wrote of. [1 page.]

42. Robert Earl of Leicester to the Queen. A grievous accord it has showed the heavens had made, for so sharp a scourge to light upon poor earthly travellers, my gracious Lady, but more bitter was it when it appears they have fulfilled your displeasure, procured from your sweet self, whose nature has always abhorred so sore revenge ; but if you it were that hath borne that high sway to cause the celestial places to obey your will, we may not wonder to see all earthly creatures so far at your devotion. No doubt they have prepared a blessed place for you, but cursed should they be if they would seek to bereave you from those that here hold you so dear. Well pleased I am that they strive who loves you most, so they let you dwell still with them that I believe will never be weary of your continuance among them, with which condition we, who lately felt the punishment of your stormy clouds, would gladly suffer a greater smart, to have again the fair show of our blessed sun, whose beams giveth both life and light ; and so appealing from the old hag's prophecy, I will pray for this felicity, that we may only enjoy this our shining joy to be our lasting light, Amen.

For sending so far, most sweet Lady, to know how your poor eyes,* doth, I am unworthy to give thanks, only as you have sent to a creature wholly of your own making, so are you to have your full offer of him that is a double bondman ; and no longer will he have life than it shall be found most true ; which having offered already once for all, have no more sacrifice left, but the due obligations which shall never fail, and I trust will be acceptable in the sight of the Highest, to whose most gracious goodness I humbly and most faithfully recommend both life and service. my arrival, I have been able, with the help of his Excellency my Lord here, to dispose of them. Although I could not utter it so that Her Majesty might be a saver, yet you and the Council will find that I have discharged my duty, in respect of the excessive prices the same were charged to me, as likewise the time of the year the beer was brewed, &c., as also the cheese, which was so new that great loss ensued. The salt which was delivered at Lisbon was but Burwage, but one-half the price, and the vinegar delivered for wine vinegar, being made of beer, one-half the price.

I have husbanded as well as in me lay, and desire that Quarles and Mr. Peter for Mr. Bashe may be acquainted therewith, and that Her Majesty be not surcharged, but that they which reap the gain may bear the loss, which they may do and reap a large profit. I have had exclamations from the soldiers of the great prices and badness of the victuals, and the deceits in the beef, both in the weight, which should have been two pounds a piece, but which was generally but one pound or less, and likewise where the hogsheads should have contained 230 pieces, there wanted more or less, every piece being charged to me at $6\frac{1}{2}d.$ I have uttered of these victuals to the captains in Her Majesty's pay to the amount of 639*l.* 17*s.* 10 $\frac{3}{4}d.$, besides 15*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.* to the navy, as appears by the book sent herewith, a copy of which I have delivered to Sir Thomas Sherley, the treasurer here, that it may be defalked upon their pay. The four other particulars mentioned therein, amounting to 54*l.* 9*s.* 2 $\frac{1}{2}d.$, Mr. Treasurer will not defalk, because they are not contained in his lists of the number that have come over this year, although they have all this time been imprested of Her Majesty's treasure, &c. I want your letter to him that he may receive the bills which I have, and to indent with me therefor, so as to be a warrant upon my account; also directions what to do now, as I cannot depart before he receive the bills and indent with me; and if neither you nor his Excellency have further employment for me in these parts, I would gladly return.

I have of your gift the office of collector of the revenues of the dissolved monasteries of Newminster, Alnwick, and Tynemouth Abbeys in Northumberland, and the revenue of the Crown in Berwick, which I have discharged the last 10 years; nevertheless one Felton, an attorney-at-law, three years since procured a grant from you of part of my said collection, viz., the bailiwick of North Shields, parcel of the possessions of Tynemouth, by which grant he has sequestered me, and taken from the Earl of Northumberland, then captain of Tynemouth, the anchorage and other profits. It then pleased you, after examination of the cause, to command Mr. Morley, Allen King, then the Earl's man, and me, being the messengers from you, to call for Felton's patent granted during pleasure, and to cancel it. But by means of my absence in these parts last Michaelmas 12 months, Felton, at the audit at Newcastle, brought his patent to the auditors, and has stayed the fee of 40*s.* a year, which still rests in the Receiver's hands; and as he means to stay it this year, I beseech your letters to Sir Thomas

Nov. 4. 45. John Clopton, receiver of Northumberland, to Lord Burghley. Sledwick. According to your letters of 4 Oct., I delivered 200*l.* to the mayor of Newcastle, with help of friends, for the Lord Chamberlain to pay the soldiers levied for the Borders, and when at Newcastle on the 22nd for the audit, it was still in his hands.

Now that the audit is ended, I think it meet to signify that we have had very ill payment in Northumberland, for divers collectors of Riddesdale and others near the Borders never appeared to account or pay. Mr. Chator and I were at Newcastle at the time of the audit, touching our commission from Mr. Fanshaw's office for inquiring into old debts, but could have no appearance for a jury, nor of gentlemen specially warned to be there, so that we could do little good.

The revenue of the bishopric of Durham and Richmondshire is well answered, save a few who will pay before Christmas, so that I trust, upon coming up at Candlemas, to make good account thereof, as also of most of Northumberland, except a few near the Borders, who have been spoiled by the Scots.

As the time for the bishopric audit is at hand, and as you gave directions to Mr. Calverley that the bishop's officers should continue in their places, I desire your letter to Mr. Bath, the bishop's auditor, to appoint the clerk of the receipt of the Exchequer of Durham to pay me, at the audit, that portion which I receive half yearly of the bishop, towards the pay of Berwick, which is 440*l.*; to make it up 500*l.* for the half year, I receive 60*l.* for Norham and the fishing belonging to it, for the half year. Also to deliver me the balance of the bishop's revenue remaining in the receiver's hands, to be brought up to London, or paid where you shall appoint by a letter to be sent to me at Darlington. Majesty's service upon the Borders ; I have paid my brother 200*l.*, and will send him 400*l.* by 16 January, which is as much as I can do, because, for the safe carriage and more certain payment, I delivered the greatest part the last audit to clothiers, drovers, &c., to be paid in London on 6th February. There are some tenths, rents covenanted by leases without forfeiture, &c., due by divers noblemen and others, &c., that I cannot get in before my account, which is some hindrance. Before your letter came, I had received at divers times from Mr. Clopton 856*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, and paid over by warrant from the Lord Chamberlain, 202*l.* to Lord Scrope and Capt. Knap, and by direction from the Earl of Huntingdon, 97*l.* 10*s.* to Captains Bellasise, Bestow, and Ellerker, for coat and conduct money ; the rest I have ready to pay as the Lord Chamberlain shall appoint. Neither I nor the sheriff have any money to pay Her Majesty, and Sir Fras. 49. John Clopton to Lord Burghley and Sir Walter Mildmay. Upon receipt of yours for payment of money at Newcastle, I sent to my brother Bradell, and went myself to Newcastle, and there, by virtue of my Lord of Huntingdon's letter to Mr. Anderson, delivered him 97*l.* 10*s.* for the coat and conduct money of the 300 soldiers who entered Newcastle on 19 and 20 Nov., and also paid the Mayor 658*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, and Bradell has sent 200*l.*, which is also paid him ; so that the whole sum contained in your letter is discharged, viz., 97*l.* 10*s.* for coat and conduct money, and 858*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* for the pay of the soldiers, which will serve until January. The other 200*l.* he has paid to my Lord Chamberlain, for the pay of the first 200 soldiers, and has returned his Lordship's bill for it.

You ask what more money we can pay over. Before the receipt of your letter, I had delivered over most of my charge, by way of exchange, to clothiers and drovers, to be paid in London 4 Feb., as it would be dangerous to leave all to be brought up with me ; but there is a good portion yet to receive ; part is in Northumberland, which I doubt will not be paid, by reason of the spoils done by the Scots upon the Borders. I trust to have 600*l.* ready by 12 January, and Bradell 400*l.* by the 16th, and there will be the Bishop's rents of about 600*l.* If you direct the Bishop's auditor that the receivers of those lands may pay their money over to me or to the mayor, it will satisfy the 500 soldiers two months' pay more, and one month more for the 200 that came first, who had served a month and 14 days before the last 300 came ; so this will serve them all until 20 March.

I also desire your letters to the executors of the Bishop of Durham, for 120*l.* behind of the 300*l.* that should have been paid to me last May, towards my pay to Berwick, for the first half year,

50. John Clopton to Lord Burghley. I have already certified you that the 300 soldiers entered Newcastle on 19 and 20 Nov.; that I was there on the 16th, before they arrived, and paid Mr. Anderson of Newcastle, for coat and conduct money, 97*l.* 10*s.*, and also told the Mayor that Bradell and I were to pay him 85*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, and left him 80*l.* towards it, which was all I could then spare, as I had to make up 2,000*l.* to the Treasurer of Berwick, for my Michaelmas pay.

That on the 25th, I sent the Mayor as much as made up 55*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, and Bradell having sent me 30 Nov., 200*l.*, I forwarded that with another 100*l.*, which made up 85*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, so that all was with the Mayor before any was due to the soldiers; for the 200 men that first came were paid their month's pay due the 7th or 8th December, with the 200*l.* that I paid in October. We also certified that I should have by 12 Jan., 600*l.*; Bradell, by 16 Jan., 400*l.*, and that 600*l.* might be had of the Bishop's rents by that time.

In answer to your last, touching the Bishop's rents and the Dean and Chapter of Durham, I have conferred with the Bishop's auditor and receiver here, and find that 600*l.* may be certain, 300*l.* presently, and 300*l.* before 12 Jan.; and if John Gates, receiver of the Bishop's rents of Howdenshire, have his charge ready, which they doubt of, it might be 200*l.* more. The Dean and Chapter will have to pay for the subsidy money, 200*l.*; 100*l.* before Christmas, and the other 100*l.* shortly after, and that is all they have to pay; so that all to be had here will be 1,800*l.* or 2,000*l.*, but at present there can only be had 600*l.*, and the Dean and Chapter will require your letter that my acquittance may be their discharge. They offered me 200*l.* this week, but I desire your letter, as also one to John Bath, the auditor, that the receivers may pay the remains of their charge to me, and that my acquittance may be their discharge, so that the auditor may certify against my account what is paid to me. As for the tenths of the diocese of Durham, due last Christmas, the Bishop's executors will pay nothing, but I received 180*l.*, parcel of the 300*l.* due from the Bishop. For the tenths due next Christmas, the executors should be charged with half the tenths of his own lands, as he had the first half year's rent, and the like for his subsidies. Direct to me at Darlington. [3 pages, with marginal notes by Burghley's clerk.]

As you desire me to pay the companies appointed to serve upon the Borders, I am staying here, otherwise I should have gone southward to my friends this Christmas, and so have come up to my accounts. As I am 30 miles from Newcastle, I think it better for the service to lie at Newcastle, but will wait your directions. I wish also to hearken for either merchant or any other here that could carry up and pay any money in London next term, and to stay it, upon security to repay it in London. If I do not come up myself, one of my men shall be there, to receive and pay as cause shall require.

My brother Bradell is 60 miles from me, and if more be had than he has certified, I will write him to do the like where he dwells, and take up money of his neighbours to be repaid in London. I find slackness in payment of money. I trust my Lord Lieutenant will come down, and then I will call the debtors before him. I have of the Bishop's rent and my own charge 400*l.*, and hope within six days to make it up 600*l.*, and send it to Newcastle, to be left in the custody of the Mayor until further directions. 53. Sir Edw. Stafford to Sec. Walsingham. I stayed the bearer, hoping to recover certain papers and ciphers taken in Gilbert Gifford's chamber since he was apprehended, with an English quean that has given the Pope to five or six, and with Cotton, who said he belonged to the Earl of Essex, and came over with your passport, but he never came near me. I had warning by Charles Arundel that there were letters that Phelippes wrote to him, with his answers, as also some ciphers and intercepted letters in cipher, and deciphered. I hear that there were some papers discovered of the death of the Queen of Scots, and of the apprehension of the gentlemen who were executed, which they thought to make great profit of, to Her Majesty's dishonour.

I have done what I could to get these papers into my hands, and Arundel laboured to do so also, and assured me on Friday that I should have them the next day, or it should cost him his life; but on Saturday he fell suddenly sick, and with that extremity that I never saw the like, so that I think this knave Paget and his companions have poisoned him; for you never saw a man in such extremity, he being in a raving and burning fever, and covered with spots. I was with him just now, and the physicians thought it a purple ague, or worse, and had given him over. I hear that by these knaves' means, the Vicar-General to the Bishop of Rome has laid his authority upon him, being a priest, which makes me the more fearful that I shall not get the papers, and hardly get him out, but I will spare no means. If I can and he will, I will send him to England, for if he were away, what letters soever were taken there [could] be said to be counterfeit; but if he remains here to avow them by constraint, they will make their profit of them greatly.

They say they have found out that he kept intelligence with Her Majesty by Phelippes' means. I have set divers ways to give him warning of the taking of his papers, which as yet he does not know, as also to keep his tongue, and not betray himself, as well as to see if he had found any means to get away himself, and hope to-morrow some of those I have set about it will speak with him; to-day, being Christmas-day here, it is impossible.

If God had saved the poor gentleman's life, I should have done well enough, but I do not think he will live until to-morrow morning. Look whom you trust, for without doubt it has been written hither, and those who have written say that they had it from you, that Arundel had a packet of Charles Paget's brought to me, and that I sent it you, and that all I wrote of Paget and Morgan being in an evil predicament with the Spanish ambassador was shown to him, and he takes it to be in Arundel's hand. They have since hated him like a toad. I pray God they have not paid him, as I shall suffer a greater loss than I will write, and such as I would be glad to buy again for 1,000*l*, though I borrowed it of a thousand men, for the benefit of my service here; but whatever I write of him or any one else here, keep to yourself.

P.S.—Arundel is just dead, and I wish I could have bought him again, even for a good deal of money, for Her Majesty's service sake. He never saw me, nor any of mine come in but he had still in his mouth that the Queen should know he was an honest man, and it was the last word he spoke, seeing one of mine, as he was yielding up the ghost; and though he raved, some think that raving words insisted upon somewhat that he had most in his mind, and of which I will some day make you perfectly acquainted, and that it was true that I had a great loss in him. 54. John Clopton to Lord Burghley. I have sent the letters to the Dean and Chapter of Durham, the bishop and his executors, my brother Bradell, John Gates, receiver of Howdenshire, and to Mr. Bath, the Bishop's auditor, for payment of those sums I certified. I hope 2,000*l*. or 1,800*l*. at least will be ready.

When you required the time of the entry of the soldiers into pay, as also how much I had paid for them, you took it to be only 1,058*l*. 13*s*. 4*d*., with the 200*l*. received from Bradell; but I also paid 97*l*. 10*s*. to Mr. Anderson for coat and conduct money, and 480*l*. more to the Mayor, and there is still 200*l*. at Durham which shall also be sent to him. The first 200 soldiers entered Newcastle on 6 October; 100 were appointed to Carlisle and the remainder to Harbottle. The second 300 entered Newcastle on 19 and 20 Nov., and were appointed to the Borders, from which time I conceive they entered into pay.

I understand from the Mayor that, by virtue of the Lord Chamberlain's warrant, he has paid to Capt. Ellerker's company 105*l*. 18*s*. 8*d*. for a month's pay ending the 19th instant, and the like for Capt. Bellasise's company, they being of the 300 that came last. Thus the money being all got together, and left ready at Newcastle, which I hope will be done by 20 Jan., I intend to set

Dec. 55. Sir Edw. Stafford to Sec. Walsingham. I wrote you of the taking of Gifford the priest, for whom I have done what I could to help him out, I did not care how, if he had not discovered that I offered him favour, and he refused it himself, thinking to gain favour, and thereby save himself. If I could have helped him, I would have spared nothing, because his examination and confession may give subject to Her Majesty's enemies to procure a scandalous opinion to be conceived of her and her Council, as they mean to turn a letter or two, and especially one of Phelippes' to him, so as to prove that he was the setter on of the gentlemen who were executed for that enterprize of the Queen of Scots, and then to discover them, and that he was practised to this by you and Phelippes, and they would fain have it with Her Majesty's knowledge.

They have made the Queen-mother acquainted with this, and she has commanded the lieutenant to acquaint the King with it, and promised she would follow it, and the Bishop of Glasgow means to enter into it, and Madam Montpensier will put fire to it, who is the devil of the world, so that I know not how to deal in it; for they lie in wait to see if I do so, so as to make me a party, and to have, as the Queen's minister, intelligence with him in those causes, so as to make the matter more odious,

He has shown himself the most notable treble villain that ever lived, for he has played upon all the hands in the world; I have sent you copies of his answers, of which I have the originals, whereby you may see how vilely he dealt with me, to say that the billet was safe, and yet by word of mouth, sent me word that it was burnt, when it was shown me by one that gave me warning before his letter came to me, that I should receive such a letter from him, demanding me to send Grimston, or somebody to him, to get him a procurer,—which he was made to do, so that as soon as any of mine came with a procurer he should be seized upon, to know what interest I had in him and his cause, and thus make me a party, which he did not fail to do, as you may see by his letter to me; and when he saw I could not be got to do that, but sent him money that he might not starve, and offered to perform anything he should promise to one that would help him to effect his escape, he conferred with them on that also; and then they invented another way to take me, viz., that he should send word that if he could get caution, he could get out, and that he had found an honest Catholic gentleman who would avow the caution, so that I should be no dealer in it, which, as you will see by his letter, he performed to catch me in a trap, but I had warning of it, and gave over dealing with him.

It is an evil wind that blows nobody good; as by his knavish dealing, some would have secured their turn to my affront, and the discredit of Her Majesty, so others that loved me, thinking that

VOL. XXX.

I would not leave anything undone, in respect of the consequence that his getting out was for the public service, and fearing lest I should do the public no good, but myself harm, have, to incense me against him, found means to come by his letters he wrote to Phelippes, and which are the most villainous against me and mine that could be, and of which I am promised copies. In one of these there is the following:—"I cannot directly say the ambassador is a naughty man, and yet probably I can; for haunting with Charles Arundel, the greatest traitor on this side the sea, is a proof he speaks evil, and all his men be nought." I also saw a copy of Phelippes' letter to him, asking him to write of me.

Besides, the villain, to make them believe that he had done service in England to the cause here, and to show that he went about to cozen Her Majesty (for he brags he dealt directly with her, by Phelippes' means, and that you had most of things, but by second hand), and to take away the credit that might have been given to me or any of mine, that might inform Her Majesty from hence, had so discredited me and mine, that we were taken for as bad as any they accounted traitors on this side the sea. For having found commandment from you, as he affirms, and direction from Phelippes, to inquire diligently of me and my actions, and finding that I was a sly child (for so he termed me), and that, under colour of fair speeches and courteous usage of all men, I did nothing but draw wires out of their noses, to know all, and then advertise it, to undo them on this side, and to hang as many as I could of the other side, and that I set Lilly to counterfeit himself among them, only to draw what he could out of them, that I might advertise it into England, but that he had found the humours in England so disposed to hear of me and mine, and by that means has had such good opportunity, that he has so paid me, that whatsoever came from me or mine, there was no more credit given to it than if it had come from any they esteemed the worst on this side.

That I had dealt with Dr. Gifford and Gratley with such fair words that they took me to be a saint, and yet had written all the naughtiness that could be to England against them; that he made Lilly, who was my right hand, worse accounted of than any traitor on this side the sea; and that to make him the more odious, he had assured them he was the deepest Catholic here, and so far gone that he meant to become a friar. That he had private conference with Morgan, Paget, and the Scotch ambassador; that Grimston was a man of evil life, and unfit to be about me, and for the great brotherly love that was between Lilly and him, he kept nothing secret from Lilly that I entrusted him with, and that Lilly discovered it to these persons. That my coachman, whom I used as an instrument to come by divers letters that had been sent from Paget and others, was a common spy for the chiefest enemies the Queen had in this town. That Charles Arundel, who haunted me, was the rankest traitor on this side the seas; that he haunted me by the Spanish ambassador's appointment; that God knew what practice there was between him and me, and that he had promised to discover it, so that he had made me and mine, and all that haunted me, in as bad a case as the worst minded man here, and all under a fair show that I was the least able of any here to do harm, and therefore they might see that it was but to do good that he kept intelligence with England. The gentleman has thus played upon me at will, but as God would have that I should know from what evil fountain all the evil conceits against me have come, and because I know not who are interested in it, but that I have received great wrong, I protest I have neither spoken nor will speak or write to any living creature but yourself. Where my Sovereign may be called in question, I will never stir for anything of my own, however near it may touch me, without I be called in question of my reputation; and then to know how I have been dealt with, I will keep all I have, and as much as I can get to make the matter plain, as I am promised them, but yet I cannot get them.

Phelippes I never saw, although I once had a letter from him, and I never did him good or harm; I take all this to come of his curiosity to show that he was a man of service. I pray God to forgive him, but sure I think the stones on the ground will cry for vengeance against him, not for seeking to make his own credit to undo me, for my own loyalty shall preserve me, but for my poor men, whose reputation is their living, to seek, upon such a varlet's report, to disgrace and undo them; or worse, as it shows by one of his letters, to egg him on to write. I think it is a thing that God will never forgive, in this world or the other, for whatsoever this knave says that he had given him from you to do it, I see him lie in so many things, that I will never believe it, and dare not impute it to anybody but Phelippes, for of him I have seen it in writing, and I will never believe it of you, nor of anybody else that knows and fears God.

If the hard information you once had of me has come from such knaves, you will keep the promise you made me in your letters, and which I build upon,—to believe nothing of me till you have made me acquainted with it, and tried the truth, and to remain my friend. But for the poor men who know all this now, and the wrongs that have been done them, and by whom, and are deeply troubled withal, they will be bound to you for making them some amends by your favourable word to Her Majesty, in letting her know how she and all of you have been abused by these knaves, and procuring her favour and good opinion of them.

I beseech you of one thing, though I will not presently press it, because I will please nobody here, upon this, which is now common in everybody's mouth, to have them think that a fury or discontentment has moved me to ask leave to return; but when I do, I hope you will put your helping hand, for surely though as long as I serve I will do so faithfully, yet I have never served with goodwill in a place where I have seen such mistrust of me as in this, or where I shall be so disgraced, as by these speeches being abroad and these letters coming to the sight of the King, the Queen Mother, and the whole

Council, as these will. It will be seen to my disgrace what a mistrust is made of me at home, what reputation I live in there, and what credit I have, when such persons as Phelippes are countenanced, to set such varlets as he is to look into my actions. I am so much grieved that I rather wish to be dead than alive. I do what I can to cover it, both in respect of my own credit, and Her Majesty's, for though I will do what I can to get as many originals as I can into my hands, both of Phelippes' and of the other knaves, I still affirm that those they avow to be Phelippes' are counterfeits, and the others have been written by practice of the knaves here, to have them to be surprised, and to leave to men's judgments occasions to think amiss both of Her Majesty and all her ministers.

This is the best course that I know for me to take, now that there is no remedy, and that I can deal no more to get the knave out, as he has betrayed me, thinking to help himself; but indeed he has betrayed himself, for they will go near to make it cost him his life, having sent copies of all to the Cardinal, and pressed him to make the Pope write to the King of it, and to use all extremity, and my Lord Paget and his brother, and others that he has touched in his letters, follow it to the utmost for their own credit.

I am promised, if there be any means possible, to get Phelippes' letter containing the chief things, and if he were hanged for the rest, it were not a halfpenny matter. If Chas. Arundel had either not fallen sick as he did, or had lived, I had had all, though he said he be cause of this harm of his. No man on this side served my turn as he did, and never Spanish Ambassador nor his master were better handled. I had the quickest and most correct advertisements out of Spain from him, and the Spanish Ambassador had that credit in him that he hid nothing that was reasonable from him. He continually had letters from Sir Fras. Englefield and Prideaux, which I saw before he deciphered them. To show that he did not dally with me, the advertisements he gave me at first were always confirmed by letters that came to the Venice Ambassador, and the advertisements that B. sent me as they came from their agent. The rest is not to be written of, but you shall know it some day.

I send you a copy of a letter which he wrote in prison to Throgmorton, whereby you will see what a villain he is. I have not the original, as he that brought it dared not be known to have shown it to me, but upon my credit it is word for word; Grinston copied it while he was talking with me. He has promised to do what he can to get it into his hands by stealth, after he has rendered it, and then he will give it to me; but he has given me one he wrote to his brother, who went about to steal the English ships to Dunkirk, and was killed, a copy of which I also send, whereby you may perceive that he was acquainted with the enterprise, and a persuader of it, and by which you will also see the honesty of the man. He sent a letter to Grinston to be sent to Wysden, and bid them put it in a cover to Offley, but I have sent it you. I know it is to Phelippes, for in their cipher they told me it was his name; you can either send it to Phelippes or to Offley for him. As Hachet is named in one of

VOL. XXX.

Phelippes' letters for a director, I have warned him to take heed to himself, and to have his answer ready, for he is an honest man. I have sent Delabero to him, to know what he is and where he is, so as to warn him, and you may see what he writes to me. I have also sent to Bartholomew Martin, as he writes he has promised to do it, but I do not believe him, as he is a very knave, and one of the chief that have betrayed these things, and delivered the letters that he has given. They have a letter of his written to Phelippes of 11 June 1586.

This is all I can at present send you. If I can get the originals or copies, I will also send them. I have written of this to no one but you, and will not, and you show this to what you please. I want Phelippes, though I do not know him, to know how evilly he has dealt with me.

P.S.—They expect letters from him daily, which they make sure account to take, but by whose means I know not, unless it be Bartholomew Martin's.

I have just had the enclosed copies of two of Phelippes' letters to Gifford brought me; the passages interlined being, as they say, in cipher; if I can get the originals I will do so, and Mr. Phelippes must pardon me, being such a statesman as he would fain be, for saying that to hazard to write to such a knave as this is things that may be scanned as these are, is not the greatest discretion in the world. I will not believe it, though Mr. Phelippes' pleasure be to write it to Gifford, that you bid him make those inquisitions of me; for as to one point, you know that I wrote to you that if my Lord of Westmoreland had desired a passport of me to go to England, I could have given him one, and any one else; for being in England, you know what to do with them. I addressed Walton to you; I never gave any passport but I sent them to you. As for Arundel, you know that I wrote you about it, and you advised it, and therefore in the end, I think Phelippes himself is not so honest a man as I made Arundel, nor did the Queen such good service. [6 pages, endorsed by Phelippes.] Enclosing,

55. 1. One whom you had yesterday by the hand [Gilbert Gifford] to Grimston? Thanks for your gentle offers. I trust you will receive thanks again by those better able to reward you. After your departure, I sent to inquire for the gentlemen who commended you hither, with instructions how to contrive my matter for my comfort, which, if you have not received, you must get some faithful unknown Frenchman in the place, who may make his errand to speak with Mons. Viane, Chanoine de Loches en Touraine; then I can easily discover to him how you must proceed. The matter is agreed between us, but the Chanoine must not know whence he comes. In the meantime my case is not great, and the lieutenant said it was a mockery to make so great a show thereof. My only want is money to follow my case, wherewith if you can help me, I will give you a bill of my hand how you shall speedily be paid

[$\frac{1}{2}$ page, copy, headed by Sir Edw. Stafford, "The answer to the first scrawl that I made Grimston write to him in an unknown hand.]

55. II. "Your friend till death, whose hand you know," to Grimston? I am greatly beholden to the gentleman that sent you, whom they make believe of policy that I have abused. What I have done he shall know, but it is not now time. Of the letters taken in my chamber, there were but one or two from England, and those will not hurt me. I do not know how many of mine they have intercepted; they have shown me one of the last which I have answered. I can look for no courtesy at their hands, therefore I must require the gentleman's favour to send me 10 or 15 crowns; for the want of money will undo me. By the next I will send you a bill under my hand to my father, for all adventures. Delabero has come hither several times as a merchant that brings over stockings, but I do not think he is now in town. The gentleman may cause some Catholic to speak to those for me that may do me good, but take heed that I be not known to have any help from you. I have sent your letter where it will never be seen, and pray you do the same with mine; fail me not in my necessity, and I will never forget it, if God gives me liberty. [A lie sent me to the demand of my first billet that I made Grimston write, which he delivered them, and which was shown me.] My Catholic friends in England should solicit Chasteaneuf to write for me. I shall need 20 crowns; I am preparing the bill I spoke of, and let me know some sure house where I may send my letters to be conveyed to you.

P.S.—Know of Martin what letters he has delivered them. [$\frac{1}{2}$ page, copy. The passage in brackets is a marginal note by Sir Edw. Stafford.]

55. III. G. Giff[ord] to [Sir Edw. Stafford]. As you of singular favour prefer me such friendship in my distress, I accept it, with perpetual bond of service to you and yours. I think I cannot be delivered after the order you have insinuated, but I see nothing that may keep me here, if I had means to follow my cause, for all the letters they have taken consist of general terms of acknowledgment of my duty to my Prince, and all that I have done has been by commandment, and that which every subject ought to do. The official is greatly incensed because the lieutenant has examined me, and if I had a procurer tomorrow, we should perceive what would be the end. Pray send Grimston here, or some of your household, that they may speak for a procurer; for without some man either to promise or pay them, they will do nothing. Grimston may come without danger, with the same pretext he did before. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page, copy.]

55. IV. Whom you know to ———. Cover this and direct it to Hugh Offley, as I cannot do it, my keeper overlooking me. The Promoteur du Roy not being here to-day, nothing could be done, so let me understand what you know of the point you wrote about, and see whether Martin has anything for me by the name of Fras. Hartley. Remember me to the gentleman you see daily, with infinite thanks. [½ page, copy.]
55. V. G. Gifford to [Sir Edw. Stafford]. Your courteous help in this my adversity emboldens me to beseech you to persevere in your favour, by which I doubt not in a few days to be delivered. The case now stands that no man pursues against me, but for me to follow by the order of this court all the accustomed ceremonies is very chargeable, and of long durance, so meantime God knows what may befall to keep me longer here. What has hitherto been laid to my charge is of no moment, as it has been promised that I shall be enlarged upon good Catholic sureties; that being granted me, if I may tell my case before our countrymen, I doubt not that they will take up the matter, or at least I will so follow it that I will weary him that undertakes to follow the suit. I can find a French gentleman who shall be reported to have got me the cautions. My case therefore stands in your hands to deliver me, and if you do so, I will always acknowledge it. [¾ page, copy.]
55. VI. G[ilbert] G[ifford] to Mr. Humfrey. The four men who were sent for from Brussels and Italy came here yesterday, and are divided, one to Calais, another to Newhaven, and two to Britanny. Their hire is 1,000 crowns each, and all charges borne. The chiefest places that they are charged with are Plymouth, the Isle of Wight, Dover and Rye, but Fulmouth castles and Tower wharf are mentioned. The time when they go I cannot yet learn. As your long stay has bred jealousy, make as much speed as you may. [½ page.] Paris, 20 Oct. 1587.
55. VII. *Fras. Hartley, alias Gilbert Gifford, to Mr. Wilson. I could never hear of the packet of importance. Let me know by whom you sent. Cordailot will be a good helper sometimes, though Bartolomeo Martin is commonly to be employed. The matter of sending to the English Ambassador in Paris about a letter opened came to Charles Arundel's knowledge; he followed the matter, and said he saw the contents. Gilbert Gifford told Lilly of it, and said he had a letter written to him from a friend, which he supposed to be in the Ambassador's hand, and was therefore desirous to have it. He wrote so much, and desired Lilly to ask if it was * * * him, touching * * *  *to and gave me his letter to that effect, which I showed to Lord Paget and Thos. Throgmorton, and there was an end of the matter, which had like to have bred suspicion. Thereupon the Ambassador by Lilly exhorted * * * * to kill the Queen of England, with great promises; Gifford answered that he would never offend her, but durst not venture further; yet he has sent divers times to speak with Gifford, which he always excused; and honestly I dare not meddle with him, considering his place, yet G. Gifford * * Buckingham? has bewitched him. Lilly seems a new man, and does penance for the past. All marvel that on 23 Oct, when others? came from Rome? there was no resolution of Cardinal Allen's departing.*

*My brother is in Flanders, and has obtained something. He wrote to * * * that 100 ships in six weeks will be ready at Dunkirk. G. Gifford shall hear daily from him, Dr. Gifford is in great disgrace with the Cardinal; this may work some good of him. If * * come again, he may make gain of cloth against Christmas. Pray order five yards of fine cloth to make me a gown. [1 page. The words in Roman letters are in cipher, deciphered; the asterisks signify passages are not deciphered.]*

56. Petition of Francis Le Pappé, merchant of Landenau, to the Council, for restitution to himself and partners, Frenchmen, of goods value 4,690*l.*, laden by them at Seville for London, in the Madeline, but taken by Sir William Courtney's privateer, in spite of their protesting that they were French, and the vessel laden only with goods belonging to French and English. The captain put them in fear of their lives, so they delivered him 12,000 French crowns, and jewels, silks, &c., value 300 crowns, but he still took their ship, and put them naked, except their shirts, on board a French ship which he had before taken. The goods of the English have been restored, but those of the French are still retained. [$\frac{2}{3}$ page.]

57. Petition of Nicholas Vincent, master and part owner of the Margaret of Newhaven, to Council. Returning with his ship, laden with salt from Newfoundland, to Newhaven, was met near Cherbourg by an English ship of war and two barks, commanded by Wm. Hubbard and Nich. Chalden, who, notwithstanding remonstrances made that they were French subjects, boarded his ship, slew two of his company, and wounded and carried away many others, put petitioner and the rest in his cockboat, in their shirts, and exposed them to the raging sea. Arrived at Cherbourg, and found some friends, who counselled him to advertise their Honours of the premises, not doubting but by their good means to obtain recovery of his said ship and goods. Council ordered entire restitution, and commanded Sir Geo. Carey, Governor of the Isle of Wight, and other officers there, to cause delivery of the ship and goods. Going with one of his company and others from London to the Isle of Wight for the recovery thereof, they were met by sundry Englishmen belonging to the said ship of war, and others, who led them aboard such ship, took from them the Council's order and commission, and constrained petitioner, for the safety of his life, to promise never to make any pursuit for the recovery of his said ship and goods. Has escaped their hands, and would rather return to France, and forego all, than go back to the Isle of Wight, with such danger to his life, but prays speedy restitution of such ship and goods, or the value thereof, amounting to 1,650*l.*, without going any more to the Isle of Wight. [$\frac{1}{2}$ page.]

58. W. Sterrell to Thos. Phelippes. You were expected yesterday. We had many lords and lordings at dinner, who spent all the day in music, and you might have done well to come among them. Here was Sir Harry Gray, Mr. Vavasour, and young Mr. Dudley, the great Lord's son, men well known to you. I cannot now tell what time will be fit to come, until the Parliament is adjourned for a day or two. I will write to Owen, if you will send me some brief notes by Painter, and will send the letter to you. My Lord [Earl of Worcester?] does not think there will be any motion of laws but against recusants, and he does not intend assenting to any new device. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page.]

59. Request by Sir Henry Gate to Council, for requisites for Scarborough castle. The ordnance there should be re-mounted, and a supply of small shot, a last of powder, long bows, arrows, pikes, bills, and such things made, and a gunner appointed to attend the ordnance, and the training of such thereabouts as were apt to serve upon any sudden occasion.

With request that as the castle has lately been repaired by the Lord Treasurer's order, and is supplied with defensive furniture, is the refuge for the distressed by sea, and the comfort of the whole coast of that country upon any sudden attempt, and being neglected is very likely to be aimed at by the enemy, both by the example of the traitors who arrived there in the time of Queen Mary, and the unsettled affections of divers of the inhabitants, and as he has been in charge of the castle 17 years, he may have consideration. [$2\frac{3}{4}$ pages.]

60. Abstract of the above, adding that some timber and 200*l.* will be needed for the repairs, and that Sir Henry has served hitherto without fee. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page, noted by Burghley.]

61. Note of the gentry on the Borders. Most of those in Northumberland are cruel oppressors of their tenants, and as a great number of the latter are Scots, if there were any need of service, there would be a great want of both horse and foot. The greater part of the gentry are papists or addicted to papistry, as Sir Cuthbert Collingwood, Sir Thos. Gray and his brother Ralph Gray, Carr of Ford, Thos. Swincowe of Gosewick, Mr. Haggerstone of Haggerstone, and Mr. Phenike of Wallington, a suspected priest. Cuthbert

Swanley, Rob. Penticost, Rob. Alder, Wm. Dawson, Ralph and Rich. Sadler and Rich. James, all merchants of Bristol, and John Roberts, Rob. Barratt and Fras. Poyllis, place not stated, who altogether freighted nine ships with provisions, lead, powder, ordnance, and muskets; value of each cargo from 300*l.* to 2,000*l.* [1 page.]

63. Statement of the annual receipts of Rich. Endorsed with notes that he is divinity reader in Exeter college, Oxford, was made minister by Freak, bishop of Worcester, and preacher by Westfaling, bishop of Hereford. [$\frac{1}{2}$ page, Latin.]

That Lord John Grey, being in possession of the land, cannot otherwise be divested. That the Court of Chancery refuses to decide cases applicable to common law, and if he were dismissed from Chancery, he would be left without remedy. wants satisfaction for 20 lasts of rye, delivered at Newcastle from a Dutchman last year, and sold here at the highest price that rye then fetched. The ship was driven into our port by weather, and forced to cast some of the rye into the sea, to save the ship and men. The captain wanted her unloaded, as the ship had sprung a leak, and as the corn was hot, and could not be carried further, he was the more willing to sell it. He knew the amount it fetched, and might have then had the money, but fearing enemies at sea, he would only accept sufficient to discharge the freight, customs, &c., and a testimonial from the Earl of Huntingdon, as to how the ship put into our haven, which was given him in Latin, a copy whereof, as also of the account of the rye received, and of what he left in our town chamber, we enclose. The sum left here by him was 195*l.* 18*s.* 2*d.*, which with 12*l.* for 30 bolls of rye which Mr. Delaval, keeper of Tynemouth Castle, took up at Shields as his provision, makes 207*l.* 18*s.* 2*d.*, which is ready here to be paid to such person as you may appoint by warrant to receive it. 69. Sir Edw. Stafford to Sec. Walsingham. I have done all that can be to help Gifford out of prison, and persuade him to help and take heed to himself, and for helping of him would have spared nothing, as you may see by what I have written to him, and his answers thereto, whereof I send you copies. I am afraid he will play the knave in many ways, and let himself be won to serve their turns. I hear he had promised it, and will do or say anything they wish; all that I have dealt with him in or done for him he has discovered, and confesses as much, as you may see by his letters, though he would fain colour it handsomely. He assured me verbally and in writing, when he sent for 30 crowns, that he would be delivered within four hours after; and thereupon I sent them, and offered to send anything to get him out, if he would be packing. But it is now eight days since he had it, and I now find that it was but a cozening part to get money of me, and that they were acquainted with it, and that if I had given the name of a burghess to answer for it, it was only that such burghess might have been made to confess upon whose order he had done it, and so have given it abroad that I had intelligence with him in everything, to make the matter of Phelippes' letter more odious, and the probability of what they could prove by it more sensible.

Besides, his discovering the advertisements that I gave him of points he should be examined upon has made them suspicious of some of their own party, so that the papers and letters are now so looked to that I cannot come by them, as I had hoped and was promised, and yet in time I hope to do so. He has besides, to avoid suspicion of themselves, made believe, that some that would have been his best friends are fain to chatter against him, to save their own credit here. I hear that he has accused Cordailot for the convoy by the French Ambassador's, and has brought Arnold in suspicion for dealing with you, and for being the great arm that is spoken of in Phelippes' letter, whereof I sent you a eopy. I also hear that Nau intends to be a party against him, to clear himself of what Phelippes wrote of him; so that I am afraid it will prove a great broil, and that the knave will be an instrument in whatever they will have him; and yet when they have all out of him that they desire, they will hang him if they can, and I think they will put him to a hard plunge, for they mean to take him upon this point,—having letters of his to Phelippes which will go hard against him,—that he became a priest to deceive the world, and said mass after. I have done for him what I may, in respect of the harm he may be made author of; I see however all is deceit with him, and therefore I will meddle no more, without your direction.

I expect your answer about that I wrote you to do for me, about what remains in my hands. To serve their turns, it will be but as a little stick to prop up a great house that is ready to fall. To me it would do a great deal of good, and make me bound to do all the service I can.

P.S.—For the matter of this Abbot, I expect and will obey your will, and thank you for the assurance of believing nothing of me in Buzenval's report; you do me favour and right, for I protest, though he were ashamed I think to show it to you, he had that letter, and showed it. [2 pages, endorsed by Phelippes.] Eneloses,

69. I. Whom you know [Gilbert Gifford] to Grimston. I know not whether you meant this bearer or the other accustomed one, but to avoid double sending, I resolved to send this, whom you may trust with a letter. There is a report that my Lord travails for me; if he does, it cannot hinder or hurt me, for I cannot hinder him doing for me; all that they [lay] to my charge will not hurt me, and if you would go or send to the Greffier, for value of a quarter crown, I dare say you may see it all. They report that a pamphlet written by me has been taken; I was interrogated upon it on St. Stephen's day, and answered that I only made the copy, and knew not the author, but there is no heresy or false opinion therein, if the worst befall. Let me know when I may send to England. There is no man in this town can witness anything dangerous against me, and I have no party but the promoter with whom I can deal, and therefore pray you to well consider my cause, thus briefly declared, until God grants me liberty to discourse more largely. [$\frac{1}{3}$ page, copy.]

69. II. Gifford to Grimston. I doubt the young man is not found, and although he has been dealt with divers ways to betray me, yet I think he has not yielded. I will either send him or the other to you to-day. My matter is all determined, and the only stay is lack of the sum, which, being had, I shall have liberty, if it be not discovered, as I trust it will not. Therefore now is the time, and my life and liberty shall be vowed always to you. Let me know when you send into England. [Scrap attached to the others. Copy.]

69. III. Gifford to Sir Edw. Stafford. What speeches soever my adversaries have given forth of my behaviour towards you, I trust my offence shall not cause you to break with me, the ease standing as it now does, and that it may be done without any prejudice to me, or hindrance to you. My cause is brought to that pass that, for the sum of 30 crowns, I shall have my liberty; but I know not where to find 30 sous, and am therefore forced to fly to you for succour; if you deny me, I must have patience in this place for a long time. I send you herewith a letter and a bill to my father, who is in London, and will repay it presently, were it 300l. If the form does not please you, I will make it in any other sort, so that for your repayment there is no doubt. I beseech you, upon my knees, to help me with the said sum, as it imports my life and liberty; or at least to appoint me some merchant or burgess sufficient for caution, and I will try whether I can find a French gentleman to disburse the sum.

P.S.—I have left space in the bills, that it might be indifferent to you to send them by whom you please, but if you will have it repaid in this town, or delivered to any one in London, I will make them accordingly. [$\frac{2}{3}$ page, copy.]

69. IV. ——— to Gilbert Gifford. The gentleman you wot of will send you the sum you sent for, if you are sure of getting out; you are therefore to write to him to deliver it to the bearer, who is to give a receipt for it, as he will have nothing to do with your father or any one else; thank him for his courtesy, and take knowledge that I have written to you that this was his mind. He bids you take heed what answer you make, for in one of the letters to you that they took in your chamber, there is mention made of a convoy between him that writes to you and you by the way of the French Ambassador's house in England; take heed you do not undo them that have pleased you that way. He also bids me tell you that they have a letter of yours wherein you write that the book was your work in your vacation time; also that you do not deal well with him to confess any dealing of his with you, and that you have confessed all, as also the money you had of him, and in what species. By any means you are to send back this bill by the bearer, or else he will be angry, and perchance send you nothing, as he says all is seen and known.

He also bids me tell you he has not dealt for you, nor will meddle in the matter in any way; but whatever you persuade yourself, he bids you get out with expedition, for if you tarry 24 hours, you will be quite shut up; deceive not yourself. Therefore slip no time for your getting out, and to that purpose he will help you, so that being out, you pack off into your country, or out of their hands; send this bill back or he will do nothing for you. If you will send into England, send to-day. [Noted by Sir Edw. Stafford as copy of a letter that he got Grimston to write to Gifford, in a counterfeit hand.] [$\frac{1}{2}$ page.]

69. v. Gilbert Gifford to Grimston. I cannot now write at large to the gentleman, but will this afternoon without fail. My wit will not deceive me if I have the sum, as you shall see within a few hours. Let this suffice, for I cannot now answer all the points in yours. I send you back your letter, as desired. [$\frac{1}{3}$ page, copy.]

69. vi. Gifford to Sir Edw. Stafford. Whatever my behaviour has been,—grounded upon the opinion that Arundel was the cause of my discovery, wherefore I sought to requite him in breaking his credit with you,—hereafter my tongue shall never utter, nor my pen write anything contrary to your deserts in this time of my distress, which I will never forget. I was so urged, and the matter was made so plain of the receipt of your first benevolence, that I could not but confess it is strange how it came out, for my keeper denied it before the judge, and indeed he knows it not as yet. For the conveyance out of the Ambassador's house in England, it is true I had a letter sent me thereby, as it was written to me in another (?), which letter fell into evil hands, and Phelippes caused this mischief; but I never received any, nor have heard that any other was sent me that way but that, though I desired it; neither know I how it was delivered, but it was easy for them to have dropped the letter into some of the Ambassadors' folks' hands to send me, and so I think it was, for I was expressly commanded not to meddle in the matter, or with the French Ambassador, though Cordailot wrote once to me of late; as yet I have never been asked of this matter.

My Lord Paget and my good cousins Fitzherbert and Throgmorton were here with me, in the official's seat, and in his presence. I asked them whether they were come to judge or confront me, or to be my friends; they replied the latter, and upon my replying that the manner of their coming was strange, and that if they had anything to say to speak then, my lord began to accuse me of writing to England; I answered it was by his own friend's consent, and that I was not alone, whereupon I and Fitzherbert fell to some words, so that the official rose up and came between us, and my cousins departed, and my Lord persuaded me to yield, and I should have all favour. I answered I had already confessed the truth of all, and after a long talk we parted, and since then I have not heard anything further; but I perceive the matter will be long, therefore I have taken another course, by means of the relief you have promised me, as you shall perceive. [$\frac{2}{3}$ page, copy.]

69. VII. Gilbert Gifford to Grimston. I have written as much as I can to the gentleman that he may perceive my state, and therefore hope you will not fail me, but will let your boy bring the money, and will let some one see the bearer of it enter this place for more surety, and I will speak with him apart. The bearer's name is Humbert Chenu.

69. VIII. Receipt by Chenu for 30 crowns from Mr. Grimston, for the use of Mr. Gifford, English prisoner in the prisons of the Bishop of Paris. [$\frac{1}{8}$ page, French.] $\frac{4}{14}$ Jan. 1588.

70. John Clopton to Lord Burghley. I have been to Newcastle, and left 1,200*l.* with the Mayor, for payment of the soldiers, and 150*l.* more in hand, which he requires me to pay for him and his brethren in London, which, with 400*l.* he will receive from my brother Braddel, and some more from my own charge next week will make up the 2,000*l.* required. I talked with him touching his payments, and perceive that the former sum of 858*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* would not serve by 200*l.* to make up this month's pay, ended 6 Jan., for the first 200 soldiers, and for the 300 ending the 20th, but that he must begin with this last sum of 1,200*l.* left with him; I hope to make a report upon the whole, on my coming to London about Candlemas day.

The Bishop's executors have not paid me, alleging that Mr. Gates, Receiver of Howdenshire, whose charge is 400*l.* a year, has paid no part of that charge to the Bishop, and desiring that he may be called upon for the same, towards payment of the Bishop's debts.

P.S.—Gates has just come to the Auditor to account, which done, he will pay the money he has; but for the first half year's charge due to the Bishop, he says there are some reckonings between the Bishop and him, by which it will appear that he owes him nothing. [1 page.]

71. Edward Lewen, Mayor of Newcastle, to Lord Burghley. I have received altogether from Mr. Clopton, Her Majesty's Receiver in the North parts, 1,200*l.*, which is ready to be employed as you shall appoint. The 858*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* I have paid, with some overplus, to Captains Bellasise, Beeston, Ellekar, Ellis, and Knap, who are lying here for the defence of the Borders, upon the Lord Chamberlain's warrant, and I have their acquittances.

P.S.—We have here 195*l.* 18*s.* 2*d.*, and 12*l.* of Mr. Delaval's for 30 bolls of rye that he took for the Castle's provisions, making in the whole 207*l.* 18*s.* 2*d.* This was reserved for rye sold here of strangers, as mentioned in my former letter, and if it please Her Majesty to pay it to those that claim it of right, it shall be done, upon your warrant. Jan. 15. 72. Estimate of the Queen's charge in the Low Countries for a year; ordinary, 133,261*l.* 10*s.*; extraordinary, 1,545*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, besides 1,332*l.* 10*s.* at one per cent. for portage. [2 sheets, endorsed by Burghley.]

Jan. 21. 73. Brief estimate of the Queen's daily, monthly, and yearly charges in the Low Countries; total, one year, 125,389*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* [2 sheets, pasted together.]

Jan. 22. 74. Sir Edw. Stafford to Sec. Walsingham. I send you two letters from Gifford to Grimston, the contents of which I was informed of the day before they arrived, consequently I place more credit in my informer, and advertise you what they informed him with more confidence. He says they gave him [Gifford] leave to write, on purpose either to procure Phelippes to write or send him something, as they would be glad to show something from him since Gifford's imprisonment; and whoever comes or brings him anything will be stayed, and made to confess where they come from. B. made 22 acquainted with it, and would have moved him to take knowledge of it, but 22 was offended with him for persuading him to it. The Pope's Nuncio is now the chief dealer in it, it being taken out of the secular and placed in the spiritual hands. All the papers and letters are taken away from those that had them, so that those who promised I should have copies of his and Phelippes' letters cannot do so; he is shut up close, so that nobody can come at him. Charles Paget follows him up underhand, as he has called him in question in one of his letters to Phelippes, which they have but not openly, so that it may not come to Gifford's knowledge, although Gifford has been told enough of it to set him against him, and has promised them to do and say anything.

Mons. de la Noue has had letters written him from the Princes of Orange of the delivery of Don John de Castile for Villiers, whom you had bought for him, and whom he hoped to keep for the restitution of his son. I am afraid the poor gentleman will take it heavily. [1 page.]

matters out of my charge, being for Carlisle, and reparations for Newcastle, I have forborne signing his bills to be paid by the Treasurer here; therefore, unless you stand for the allowance, he is likely to lose it. I know he disbursed the money out of his own pocket long since. [$\frac{1}{2}$ page.] Enclosing,

76. I. [Sir S. Musgrave to Henry Earl of Huntingdon.] It appears by a schedule of Sir Fras. Walsingham, and an indent of Lord Scrope, that a proportion of munition, powder, &c. was sent to Lord Scrope by the Council's order, the carriage of which, from Newcastle to Carlisle, cost 65l. 18s. 4d.; there were also nails, timber, &c. sent, and sundry reparations made on the storehouses at Newcastle, which you commanded should be omitted in the books.

The sum now demanded by me amounts to 180l. 10s. 6d. I beg your letter to the Lord Treasurer for a warrant to Mr. Clopton, the Receiver, for payment thereof, or for allowance thereof upon the extraordinary charge in the Ordnance Office for this town. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page, copy.]

77. Henry Earl of Huntingdon to Sec. Walsingham. By your letter, it seems the Council expect some certificate from me of the furniture of this country. Ever since my return into these parts, I have bestowed my time in viewing the armour and weapons, and have now gone through every wapentake within the three Borders, save one small one bordering upon Westmoreland, where the people could not travel through the great fall of snow, but I know how the same is furnished. I find that every division is reasonably furnished, and that there will be 6,000 men (the proportion required by Her Majesty's late instructions and former letter from Council for this country) very well furnished, allotting to every 100 men 40 calivers, 25 pikes with corselets, 20 bows, and 15 halberts, or good black bills. All shall be reduced into bands as soon as may be, and assigned to captains, if I have no direction to the contrary. I perceived in every place a cheerful disposition of the people to serve Her Majesty, and to furnish themselves in the best sort they could. I have advertised my Lords of my proceedings. Thanks for your northern and southern news. [1 page.]

78. [Gilbert] Gifford to Throgmorton. You say in your reply to mine that I have never confessed the truth to you or to the Baron. I always wanted all to be declared in public before my accusers, and if they would appear before me, I would answer all. I wrote to the Cardinal to name some one in this town to whom I might declare the origin of these reports, for to tell it to a private person would have been no use, and prejudicial to me, because of some of my friends interested, and of the envy between me and some, especially Charles Arundel, whom I had accused of being a spy of Don Bernardino, but I am willing to be strangled if I cannot prove it.

VOL. XXX.

My intelligence with those in England began last Easter 12 months, with consent of the Cardinal, Charles Paget, Morgan, and others, on pretext of treating an accord between Council and us Catholics. I was sent by them to negotiate an affair begun by the Cardinal, and was pressed to return into England, where I stayed only 15 days, being much frightened, and obliged to disguise myself as a servant of M. Chasteauneuf.

I returned to France, and soon after the last conspiracy was discovered in England, they wrote me that they were sure I was fled away, and asked why; I answered that my father had heard of my return to England, and was much grieved; and fearing lest I should not get leave to return to France if I asked it, I ventured to go without warning them, fearing my father.

Soon after, Savage accused me before Council of having treated with him to assassinate the Queen; on this my father was in great danger of death, and if I had not purged him to those in England, it would have been over with him. I had retired to Pont à Mousson, partly for fear of my person, partly to avoid all opportunity of writing to them, knowing that Walsingham had threatened, and said in anger, "God's death! Never man has been so near cheating me as Gifford." This was because he thought that, under pretext of making a composition between the Catholics and those of the religion, I had conspired the death of the Queen. I sent a letter of excuse, and had a reply that I was condemned of lèse Majesté, but if I would return into the country, I should be received to mercy. To that effect they constrained my father to write to me, but by another way he forbade my returning, and told me that the Chancellor had offered a large sum to get me.

I answered them that I was at my studies, well lodged, and could not return. They would not accept the excuse, and said that at least I ought to persuade Gratley to return. I sent this letter to Gratley, and wrote them word that he was gone into Germany. Some months after, they accused me of giving a letter to my cousin, George Gifford, to persuade him to kill the Queen. I replied that I had only spoken to him once, and that was to tell him that his brother wished him to hasten his intended journey to Constantinople.

Thus I have temporized, to avoid the ruin of my house. I have been often solicited to give them advices, but have excused myself, sometimes pretending not to receive their letters, sometimes promising to try. In their last letter, they complain that I mock them, and bear them little affection. I swear by my baptism that I never wrote them anything that I was not certain had come to their ears before. I have touched no private affairs except my own defence; I have done nothing that I should be ashamed of before the world; nothing for which I had not the consent of the best Catholics. In temporizing with him, I act as docs Charles Arundel, in haunting the house of their ambassador, as Suigo has done by consent of Don Bernardino, and Fitzherbert to Walsingham. What I do is only to know their proceedings, and save my father's life. I have never meddled with affairs of religion, nor of the state of that kingdom, nor offended any Catholic, nor written what is not notorious to everybody.

Soften your heart, dear cousin, and do not let me lose all by the clamours of my adversaries. They accuse me of promising that woman marriage; I never thought nor spoke of such a thing. I am very ill, and have no means if you do not aid me, or at least speak to Mr. Tempest to come and see me. 79. Henry Lord Hunsdon to Sec. Walsingham. I hear that Her Majesty intends to supply Ely and Durham with two bishops, and that the Bishop of Salisbury is to be Bishop of Durham and the Dean of Durham Bishop of Salisbury. If such matters be in hand, I earnestly desire that Dr. Bellamy may have your furtherance for the deanery of Durham; I was a suitor to Her Majesty for him, yet upon earnest request of some of my friends, I surceased my suit therein for Dr. Mathew, who has very hardly requited the same towards me. I shall think it a great favour from Her Majesty to grant me the same, and it will be some credit to me in this country.

P.S.—If Her Majesty has any intention towards me as you told me at my coming away, Bellamy's being dean may stand me in good stead. The Earls of Westmoreland were ever wont to be stewards to the bishops of all their lands, and then their tenants were not so pulled or pilled by the bishops as they have since been, and lately were most pitifully, and it was a great credit to the Earls. If I be placed in the bishopric, I would be glad to be steward to the bishop, which I think he would not refuse, if Her Majesty would but move it to him. [1 page.]

80. Rob. Cecil to his father, Lord Burghley. I will obey your fatherly counsel about my duty to God, and to the Earl [of Derby] whose follower I am. My health is good, especially when I take in the mornings in the top of the castle the hungry air of the seaside, which though cold, is dry, and agrees with my constitution. The wind is contrary to a hasty passage, but the time seems the shorter from my being admitted to the conferences upon the commissions and instructions between the two civilians, one who has joined reading with his travel, the other, of deep learning, slow and sure.

By Mr. Crofts I received a gracious message from Her Majesty, under her sporting name of pigmy, bidding me take care of my health, and looking to hear from me. I have not presumed to write, because I must either write of nothing, or enter into what is subject here to suspicion, and there to misconstruction. I enclose open, for you to see, a letter to my cousin Stanhope, which I know he will show her. I show that I mislike not the name she gave me, only because she gives it. It was interlaced with fairer words than I am worthy of. I will not trouble my lady till my arrival at Ostend.

P.S.—I fear you will find their scruples here troublesome. They were sending Rogers to you thereon, but have resolved their doubts. [1 page.]

- Feb. 24. 82. W. Waad and Thomas Bodley to Sec. Walsingham. We examined Ithell ap Harry, and enclose his examinations. Other questions were put to him, but as he was for the most part with the company, and in work, following his science, he seemed ignorant of Sir William [Stanley's ?] doings. The capacity of the fellow seems not fit for any other matter or purpose. He was employed to carry a letter, and specially picked out that, if he should miscarry, no great matter might be had of him, he being simple, and scarcely able to speak English. We also examined Bray and Burlacy, as they had had conference with him, and Bray had formerly known him in Rome.
P.S.—If you want to sift out Dering's dealings, I have good means to do it, having had some inkling before. [1 page.]
- Feb. 25. 83. Rob. Cecil to Lord Burghley. Their Lordships arrived safe Ostend. an hour ago, and all their company, except Mr. Comptroller, who embarked at Dover on Saturday, and we hope has landed at Calais or Dunkirk. Sir John Conway uses me with favour for your sake, and by his means, I am conveniently lodged as near Lord Derby's house as this bare place can yield. I am content, for it was my own seeking, though I had your toleration, without which I should never think of any journey however pleasant; I shall dispense with inconveniences as well as my betters, yet am not so blind as to think everything good because I desire it. My duty to her ladyship.
The passage was good; we embarked in the Merlin at six p.m., and anchored near the Lord Admiral, who had 40 sail in his fleet, and was aboard the Ark Raleigh till 10 p.m., when he weighed anchor and we hoisted sail. I lay down, and never waked till the cock crew, and we were within an hour of Dunkirk. By 10 we arrived at Ostend. I crave your and my mother's blessing. [$1\frac{3}{4}$ pages.]
- Feb. 27. 84. Thos. Worthington to John Smith at Marchem. I have been to Ypres, and am desired by Capt. Bostock to ride with him to Lisle to see George the prisoner, removed thither from Nieuport, so I must defer coming to you till Lent. Sir Wm. Stanley gives me so cold leave for my journey to France that I will not use it. He has been at Court, and means to go to Bruges. They say the English beggars of peace will come certainly and shortly, with 400 attendants. Besides Derby, Cobham, and Crofts, Amias Paulet, gaoler to the Holy Queen and Martyress, is joined in commission. "Men muse they are so mad and shameless to sue for that they are so impossible to obtain," but if they be now come so near an end of their treaty as we hope and they fear, they will be blind indeed, and play more foolish pranks yet. 86. Walter Browne to Sir John Conway, governor of Ostend. I delivered your letters to my Lord of Leicester, and received the one you sent by the skipper that brought me the fresh salmon, for which I thank you. I have no friends that I can make account of but you, now that my lord and master is in travel.

You ask whether my Lord of Leicester would send any letters, but he and the rest of the Council are so busy in the Parliament, that they themselves cannot tell as yet how the matter will stand in the Low Countries; but the States that have been at the Court have received Her Majesty's answer, and are coming home, and I trust we shall have good news to write you shortly. I intend to come and lead my life with you, as long as you remain in Ostend.

I have been hardly dealt with in London, as men have not paid me in my absence any money; had I received it, I would be at sea with the next wind. Be good to my cook, as I left him there to see the house that you bestowed on me made clean. I long to hear whether the Queen will take the country into her hands or not, also whether all of Ostend were in her pay; as it would encourage me to fly to you if I might. My wife sends commendations, and will also come, as she is weary of London. Commend me to Mr. Sotherman, Capt. Egerton, Dominik, &c. [1 page.]

Rich. March 9.

88. Attorney General Popham and Solicitor General Egerton to Council. We have examined the cause of Jean Carteret's appeal to you, from an order made against him by the bailiff and jurats of Jersey, and find that Carteret, Phil. Journiaulx, and Helier Dumaresq petitioned the Queen for redress of the courts of Jersey, and extirpation of the Court extraordinary there, and got many signatures to the petition, without privity of the governor or bailiff; thereupon the lieutenant committed them to prison, and had them bound to good behaviour. From this sentence Carteret appeals, saying they requested reformation of the Courts from the bailiff; but this seems to be untrue. The petition was not to the bailiff but the Queen, and for extirpation of the Court extraordinary which, though anciently used, he said could not be maintained by law.

We think that there is no just cause of appeal, but he and his confederates deserve reprehension. We return the proceedings, and Carteret's petition. [1 page.] Enclosing,

88. I. Petition of Jean de Carteret of Jersey, for himself, Philip Journiaulx, and others, to Council. Have been imprisoned for petitioning the bailiff of the said island to reform the Courts thereof, and compelled to put in sureties for good behaviour, and their imprisonment allowed by Giles Lemprière, and other jurats. Have appealed, and beg discharge from the said sentence. [¼ sheet.]

88. II. Statement of the matter in question, of which John de Carteret for himself, and Philip Journiaulx complain. That they and others of Jersey requested Helier Dumaresque, a jurat, to frame and present a petition to the Queen, for establishment of such Courts as were formerly held, according to the custom of Normandy and ancient usage, on which account they were imprisoned, and forced to give security for good behaviour. Being jurats, and sworn to permit nothing contrary to their laws and privileges, they appealed according to the charter, to King and Council, against the sentence of Giles Lemprière, and other jurats, approving the imprisonment. The question is whether they should have been imprisoned. [½ sheet.]

88. III. Objections by John De Carteret against the sentence given by the jurats of Jersey against himself and Philip Journiaulx, from which they have appealed:—

The justices say that Carteret and Journiaulx were released from prison 21 Sept. 1587. Carteret denies it. The request to the bailiff for redress was made that day by Helier Dumaresq, a justice, but they were not released till 3 Oct., and then on surety for good behaviour.

The sentence of 24 Oct. declares that they have chosen a private man instead of a public; but the said Helier Dumaresq has been a jurat 15 years.

They did not wish to trouble Her Majesty, for in absence of Sir Amias Paulet, they first resorted to the bailiff, in presence of the lieutenant-governor.

1588.

The sentence declares their imprisonment just, but says they are dissolved of their suretyship of the rolls of heritage; yet this sentence does not satisfy them, being given in the Court of chattell, a lesser court than that of heritage.

The acts passed against them should be of no force, being so contrary and uncertain. [$\frac{2}{3}$ page.]

88. V. Certificate by Nieh. Sallemont and 26 others. On 21 Sept., we requested Helier Dumaresque to petition the Queen for redress of the Courts of Jersey, according to the custom of Normandy and ancient usage, and for abolishing the Court called extraordinary, as prejudicial to the public weal of the island. The bailiff in the courts of heritage and chattel is bound to yield justice, without fee.

The same day, on the discharge from prison of John de Carteret and Phil. Journiaulx, John and Clement Dumaresq, Phil. Meservy and Aaron Hocart became bound for their good behaviour in 200l., Carteret and Journiaulx swearing to save them harmless therein.

On 24 Oct. 1587 Helier Dumaresq, John de Carteret, and Phil. Journiaulx were sentenced to be imprisoned—their sureties being discharged—1. For condemning by petition the Court extraordinary, continued by the States of the isle. 2. For getting signatures to a bill to Her Majesty, without informing the Governor and States of the isle. 3. For electing a private person, unauthorised by the States, for their causes. [$\frac{2}{3}$ page.]

88. VI. Petition of John Carteret of Jersey, prisoner in the Marshalsea, to Lord Chancellor Hatton. That this cause, ready to be reduced to articles, be tried in Jersey, and he released on giving bond for his appearance, the complaints against him not being proved.

March 17. 89. “Barnes’ report of his journey and proceedings since his departure.” I went to Paris, but not finding Lord Paget and others, there being garboils, I returned to Rouen, where I heard from the Bishop of Ross that there were practices to win the King of Scots, or some of his nobles, to adhere to the party of Spain; and that either Holt or some other Jesuit, should go to Scotland about it; and he commended me to Holt for employment, on account of my service to the late Queen of Scots.

In eight days I went to Brussels, where I found Lord Paget, Chas. Paget, Thos. Morgan, &c., who suspected me of discovering some matters concerning the Queen of Scots, and the conspiracy of the gentlemen executed; but I cleared myself by letters commendatory and protestations of that unjust suspicion, and satisfied them why I abode so long here, though in danger of being apprehended, and how I got away at last. Thereon they concluded that

VOL. XXX.

Gilbert Gifford had accused me of the crime which he had himself committed; this was confirmed by letters taken when my cousin Gilbert was apprehended.

After 10 days, when I was restored to confidence, I was taken up on suspicion, for being in the company of Jas. Daniel, who was commended to me by some priests, but was detected as a spy. Lord Paget, Father Holt, Owen, Thos. Throckmorton and Morgan, procured my release the same day. I had conveyed away my papers and ciphers before they searched my house, and rose in their good opinion when there was nothing of sinister meaning found, after so narrow a search. Wishing to recover a copy of my cipher, to deliver some intercepted letters, and to gain directions, I returned hither, pretending private business at Lisle. A Portuguese, who has forsaken Don Antonio, lately arrived at Brussels, and discovered matters of importance about our fleet, for which the Duke of Parma has promised him restitution of what he lost in Portugal for following Don Antonio. The Duke has held musters, and increased Antwerp garrison. Middleton, late an English merchant, now a pensioner of the Duke, dealt with Capt. Morgan to surrender Bergen-op-Zoom, but without success.

Our Cardinal will not come from Rome this summer. Father Parsons is gone from Rome to Spain, and Father Arnold, prior of the English Carthusians, is going from Louvaine to Vienna, by the Pope's order, but the reason of it is not known. Lord Paget is going to the Spa for his health, with his brother Charles and Mr. Liggons.

Our English pensioners are in bare estate, and there are great divisions amongst them. Owen and Tresham so hate each other that the Duke's officers have ordered them to keep their chamber till Lord Paget and Sir William Stanley can pacify them. Those that are poorer envy those that have more. Owen has greatest influence with the Duke and our Cardinal. Some go to Spain for entertainment, for every man that will go with the Armada has 10 crowns a month duly paid.

It is said that my cousin Gilbert, on hope of enlargement, has undertaken the detection of the enterprize of the gentlemen, and the discovery of the intercourse and convoy to the Queen of Scots. I hear that for quarrelling with his keeper, he is removed to a worse prison, or to the dungeon. I shall know more when I return to Brussels, where I shall find Chas. Paget, newly come from France. - March 18. 91. Sir Amias Paulet to Sec. Walsingham. Thanks for favour in the late Jersey cause. The complainant intends to petition for a hearing from the other justices of Jersey not agents before; this is preposterous, done but to delay his punishment, and derogatory to the authority of the justices, gentlemen of the best calling in the isle. The cause will not bear this proceeding; the only question to be decided is whether his appeal or the sentence from which he has appealed is most just. If the justices have pronounced partially or maliciously, they are subject, by the laws of the isle, to grievous punishment ; but if the complainant have appealed unjustly, he ought to smart for his forwardness.

I desire their Lordships' sentence, which I will see executed, but I believe the appeal unjust, and simply from old malice. I am sorry that my infirmity prevents me following this cause in person. [1½ pages.]

Now that I am convalescent, I hope soon to be with you. 93. Michael Gaffney to his cousin Robert Gaffney, in Ireland. Calling to mind time past so evilly spent, I patiently lament, and by daily afflictions am miserably oppressed, through my innumerable offences against God, expecting no end in this world but the most miserable cross. I taste no wealth, but woe rests with me, to which I am persuaded I was predestinated the day I was born. Hope is lost ; think you on your poor desolate cousin, when you are in vestris deliciis ? I am persuaded no ; either because my heinous offences persuade you to the contrary, or, drowned in worldly care, your heart is hardened against a poor orphan. Pity the state of your lost kinsman, if God and your help does not draw shortly near ; for death itself has refused me, and what hope have I in any friend living, since the very enemy will not strike ?

I have kept in bed these 11 months, through a musket bullet that pierced my chest, and killed my fellow that stood behind ; but cursed be that death that left me to languish. My lodging is base, my relief worse, bread and water mixed with a little salt, once in 24 hours ; and this has been my diet this seven months, for want of means to pay for better. The Francisian Friars and Jesuits have paid for me to the apothecary and surgeons 150 guilders, 15*l.* English, through devotion, and I owe them 220 guilders, for which I am so straightly kept ; but I would they had given me a poison to end my days, that I might not have been a burden to you or any other. I will request nothing at your hands from duty, but only for the love of God, and as of your flesh and blood ; as you are wise, if you be charitable, consider my poverty and misery. As I now begin to have health, I am anxious for liberty, and to quit my debt. You will find me at the sign of the Horn, in St. James's Street, Paris.

I have no news, but I can tell you the King of Spain is like to have victory of all Christendom ; so encourage yourselves that are good Catholics, against his coming, for you shall see how the valiant Christian King of Spain will play his part. If you think I may safely write you of the stirs of these countries, send me word, for

94. Opinion of Lord Grey, Sir Fras. Knollys, Sir John Norris, Sir Rich. Bingham, Sir Roger Williams, and others, in reference to a Spanish invasion. Of 16 places named, at which they may most probably land, think Milford, Plymouth, Portland, Isle of Wight, Portsmouth, and the Thames should be fortified; reasons therefor, and whether opposition should be made by fortifications, or gathering troops. Suggestions about the training of garrisons. If a landing is made, all victuals should be removed, and the enemy kept in alarm, but no battle attempted without a good army, the lieutenants of counties acting as colonels. Arrangements for raising a fitting army, in different places where the enemy might land; one army to be specially provided for safeguard of Her Majesty's person. Provisions for armour, training of the troops, &c. The King of Spain is not hopeless of help from popish malcontents; these should be proceeded against severely by martial law. The King of Spain should be made to believe that the armed soldiers are double or treble their numbers, and that there is a determination to land in Portugal or the Indies, which opinion will be fortified by the preparation of ships to go under Sir Fras. Drake. Precautions should be taken that the ships at Rochester be not entrapped. [5 pages.]

95. Lord Chancellor Hatton to Lord Burghley. Her Majesty has just sent Michael Stanhope to me, to signify her pleasure touching the return of the Lord Chamberlain; viz., that if his affairs here may be conveniently dispatched by any of his sons, or any other friend, without danger to his estate, he should not withdraw from his charge, until matters grew to more peaceable terms; otherwise she grants him licence to repair hither for one fortnight only, so that the Marshal and Treasurer both be left there, to supply the place in his absence, with express charge to see the same duly performed according to his directions. The form of your letters must therefore be altered according to Her Majesty's pleasure. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page, copy.]

96. Richard Hakluyt to Lord Burghley. Eight or ten days after my return to Paris from England, the Earl of Westmoreland secretly sent a French servant twice, requesting to speak with me. After I had acquainted my Lord Ambassador with it, I went to know the Earl's will, and found him anxious for your answer concerning his suit to Her Majesty. I told him how willing I found you to move her to be gracious, and that if I had not been so suddenly dispatched, and you had had time to write to Sir Edw. [Stafford] you might have returned him some answer ; he requested me to write and beseech you to let him hear from you soon. He showed unfeigned desire to do some special piece of service, and told me that Morgan the arch-traitor, had come again to Paris, about some bad practices, adding, with deep oaths, that if he might hope from you of Her Majesty's favour, (whom he humbly besought to consider his youth, and ignorance of the subtle trains of the world, when he was drawn into heinous offence), he would hazard his person to prove his affection to her and his country.

He told me that Lord Maxwell of Scotland, who had been in Spain great part of last year, had secretly gone down from hence to the Duke of Parma, accompanied only with the Scot who betrayed Lierre in Brabant. He said that he had good means to understand the practices of Spain by Higginton, an English priest, who was at his devotion, and abiding in this town, and to whom Sir Fras. Englefield writes often on matters of importance, which he would reveal to me or such as you should appoint. He also signified that Mendoza, the Spanish Ambassador, not being able to read the letters sent to him from his master, through decay of sight, is constrained to use a young man to read them to him, with whom his lordship is acquainted, and hopes to draw matters of weight from him. He assured me that the fleet at Lisbon would not stir until the beginning of May, if at all, and that it was himself that gave the first notice of the arrival at Rheims of Holt and Creswell, the two English Jesuits, from Rome.

97. Sir John Selby to Sec. Walsingham. The bearer, my son, according to your order, laid in bond for obeying the award of the arbitrators, who met, but could do no good, by reason of Mr. Clavering's unreasonable demands ; so that we expected nothing but trial at law, if, at the return of the parties this term, you compounded not the matter. Five days since however, Sir Cuthbert Collingwood and Mr. Clavering voluntarily came here, and requested my Lord Chamberlain to end this trouble ; he sent for me, my brother Captain Selby, and my son, and declared what they had said, which we well liked, and a day was appointed for hearing the matter, but broken by Sir Cuthbert and Clavering ; yet they came to the town, as they pretended, for that cause, the very morning that my Lord Chamberlain took his journey towards Court. As he could not hear the cause, he ordered, by their motion, that proceedings at law be deferred until next term ; so that meantime, he may either hear the matter in the country, if he returns before the term, or else the parties repair to London, to have it determined there, if his lordship does not return.

We always have desired and still desire a good end of this trouble, and reconciliation with our neighbours, whereof we should conceive the better hope if your leisure would serve to join with my Lord Chamberlain in this cause ; for as my son offered, when last in London, to abide your order only, so could he be best contented still to do so, and had never sought other means, if this last motion

99. Henry Earl of Huntingdon to Sec. Walsingham. Having enjoyed better health since my letter of the 16th, I have taken another view of the horsemen, as I heard that at their muster on the 11th, they were not so good as I was led to believe; and truly I find the furniture of this country weak, but hope it may in some sort be amended, if I may call upon particular gentlemen, when cause of service needs, to come in person themselves, and bring with them, according to their ability, such a number of men on horseback as they can well furnish. This has been the usual course here in former times, and never any certain number set upon any man until of late years; I find by proof that he who has six good horses is scarcely willing at a muster to show one, unless compelled by law; for all men here have no liking to be inrolled in a muster book, but if called in this sort, will willingly charge themselves to the uttermost.

For petronels or carbines, as some call them, many may be raised, but not in that sort as my Lords directed by their letters of 2 Aug. 1586; for many in the commission of the peace are not able to furnish both a light horse and two petronels, and yet for the service of the country as justices of peace, they are men not to be spared.

Since my last coming, I have earnestly spoken to sundry gentlemen to raise some lancers for defence of the realm against invasion, and found at first many willing, though a service strange to these countrymen, and never required of any here before. But I perceive since that they are most loath to enter into that charge, because they fear they should always hereafter be charged for all kind of service, as other parts of the realm be; if assured that they should only serve towards Scotland, as in former times, they would neither shrink much at this, nor be so backward at the muster of light horsemen. The number of good geldings is much decayed in these North parts, but yet it is far greater than I can get to be seen at any muster, do what I can; and one principal cause is that they are unwilling to come into the muster book, lest they should be called upon for any service in Ireland, or other parts than towards Scotland.

The 400 light horse heretofore certified will be raised, and be better than these two last musters have given me cause to hope.

- June? 104. [— of Hythe to Sec. Walsingham.] We of Hythe cut out a haven at great charge, thinking it would add to the maintenance of our fishing, which has become scarcer and more miserable, through the acts of Roger Stares, bailiff, jurat, and comptroller; John Bridgeman, jurat and innholder; William Dranton, butcher and jurat, and William Tysder, shoemaker and jurat. One night, when Stares was bailiff, certain horses and mares were shipped in a Frenchman's boat, contrary to law, whereupon she was seized by four men in the Queen's name. Dranton being the merchant, went to the bailiff, and called these men rogues and beggars. The bailiff got up and took some men with him, and when those in possession of the boat desired him, in the Queen's behalf, to aid them, he promised to do so; but took them by violence, and carried them to prison, and made out a cocket for the Frenchmen to pass freely. He then kept the men in prison as long as he thought fit, and banished two of them the town, without a passport; the other two were men servants.
- Dranton is also a transporter of tallow, the shipping of which is done at night. Last St. Thomas's day, he shipped some, which being espied by a young man, he went to the searcher; but they hearing of it, conveyed it out of that boat into another belonging to Nicholas Tooke, jurat, living on the other side of the haven, and a carter there brought it home by the back side of the town. Dranton also suffered two shiploads of oats to go out of the haven, before which we had oats at 6*d.* a bushel, but within two market days, they were at 1*s.* 3*d.* a bushel; and oatmeal risen from 1*d.* two quarts to 1*d.* a quart. He has also railed in a bowling green, to maintain unlawful games. He also freighted a boat belonging to Michael Bueland to transport ready killed beef and pork in barrels, and sent his son over with it; if this is suffered, it will cause great dearth, which the poor will rue. This was done on the Sunday before last Christmas, at the same time that the bailiff's tallow was going over; and the young man that betrayed him to the searcher, has been banished the town. Dranton maintains a Fleming, who was three times presented for a vagabond, to the hindrance of a poor English surgeon of the town.

John Bridgeman keeps a common inn, and sells wine contrary to the statute, and carries on baking, and will not suffer any common baker to dwell in the town. He also keeps a house for card and dice playing, &c.; and although the justices of the county will not suffer such things, they are maintained there.

Since 14 April 1568, there have been at least nine score of horses, mares, colts, and geldings shipped over; the merchants that suffered such things are Robert Gilbard, Peter Blewercourt, John Gorram, John Dranton, John Bridgeman, and Wm. Dranton. Whoever speaks against these things has the prison for his reward, and is banished the town; and when the dozen writs were served out of the Exchequer, for honest men of the town to come up to declare the truth, the bailiff, with two of the transporters, came up to London, and arranged with the informer for 30*l.*, so that the matter fell through; and now they transport faster than ever they did. 110. Edward Palmer, priest, to Sec. Walsingham. I should have written before, but my passage was stopped from coming hither until the 2nd, when the Spaniards having notice of the arrival of an English ship, Francisco Dearjola, provider for all the King's armadas made in Guigeaqua, called me before him, and forced me to come hither, to learn the news brought by the English, and what was become of the Spanish army; they had no news of them more than that off Cadiz, they were driven from their anchors by seven English ships which came on them all on fire, and that they were gone to the northward towards Scotland. Having obtained a confirmation of this, I returned with the news, which was little to their comfort, so that I was forced to fly the country; to this time they know no certainty of their armada.

Six days since, Captain Oquendo arrived at the Passage, with six other sail, and brought their testimonials on their sides, whence they came, with the loss of half their men in fighting, famine, and sickness, and crying out against Sir Fras. Drake, that he was a devil and no man. These seven ships report that there were upwards of 40 sail on this coast; that after they departed from before Cadiz, everyone shifted for themselves, and that if they had tarried at sea but three days more, they had been famished. That the Duke is in St. Andera, they having left him about Cape Clear, and that great fault is attributed to him, as also one Francisco Eveito, the victualler of Lisbon, who put to the King's account six months' victuals, and they have not above three months', and the powder has gone no man can tell whither.

Such soldiers as have come home are sent 12 leagues into the country, and are reported to be in labouring men's houses till next spring, when they will be doing again; but I cannot see how, for he has no mariners to send out half the strength he did before. They are still making great provision of beans and biscuit in St. Sebastian's, which may be on account of wheat being very scant and dear in Lisbon and Andalusia, and that, ere the year is gone, there will be great famine among them.

The French King has given licence to all men of his country to carry wheat into Spain, which is an evident sign of scarcity. Six weeks since, nine ships departed from Bilboa, and three from St. Sebastian's, bound for the Groyne, laden with bread, beans, and bacon, which should have gone with other victuals from Lisbon, for the army, if they had had good success, and with 10,000 soldiers for a new supply, and many say they have left the Groyne, but there is no certainty.

There are 14 small barks laden with biscuit and bound for the Groyne, riding at the passage by St. Sebastian's (unless they have had orders to depart since the arrival of Captain Oquendo) and one of the four galleys that was with the fleet bound for England, which put into Bluett in Brittany, by foul weather, and afterwards, coming for Spain, was driven into the Passage. There are also laden in these barks 15,000 pikes, without heads, 10,000 arquebuses, and 5,000 muskets.

All last year Irishmen came to Bilboa, St. Sebastian's, and the Groyne, with French and Scottish ships, laden with wheat, which the King's providers took up for biscuit; likewise some from Waterford with hides; they are all against Her Majesty, and speak villainous words respecting her. In Ireland they freight all strangers, because the wheat they carry forth they enter for Rochelle, or this place, and afterwards go for Spain with it, and so take false testimonials from hence, for two or three crowns, that they discharged here, and their men will not say a word about it, as they would not be kept in work. It would be well if the Queen prohibited the export of any wheat from England this year, by any French or other shipping, for all France is not able to furnish the King of Spain with what he will need.

A month after the fleet departed from the coast of Spain, news came from Don Borlendipo [Bernardino?], the Spanish Ambassador from Paris, that the Spaniards had the victory; I was at the reading of the letters in SS. [St. Sebastian's]. They stated that the Lord Admiral and Sir Fras. Drake had been taken, with the loss of many of Her Majesty's ships, and that Plymouth, the Wight, [South]ampton, and Portsmouth, were in the hands of the Spaniards, who thought to be in London in a few days. Upon this news, the towns made great feasts all that day, running the streets on horseback with rich apparel, and crying out that the great dog Fras. Drake was a prisoner in chains and fetters; and at night, made bonfires and reviled on Her Majesty, and broke all my windows with stones; but since their ships have come to the Passage, they all hang down their heads like cur-dogs, and are ashamed of all they did. The King keeps in the Escorial, and no one dares speak to him, for all the world laughs him to scorn. Many English rebels went in the fleet, and amongst others, Richard Burley, and a brother of his, who I understand is taken; if so, he can discover many things, and serve for a spy between England and Spain, for he has served the King in Flanders, and had 25 crowns a month, and there were many more such in the army.

The ship that this letter goes in is of Liverpool, and the bearer is Thos. Wolfoll, servant to the Earl of Derby. There are also three poor Irish mariners who have been in the Spanish army, and taken per force to serve. The Spaniards took three or four English fishing boats on the north of England, with 14 men, whom they still keep aboard them, and that is all the valiantness they did, and have come home sore beaten. They kept their men under hatches, thinking they would be more secure, but Her Majesty's ships beat them so low with cannon that they destroyed more men than they would have done had they been allowed to come up. The King may pretend to do much, but he has no mariners, and all such as come home say openly that ere they will go again, they will be hanged by the ears. Garsia de Arye, the General of Fontarabia is dead. He was out of the King's favour about the harness (?) that he was to have had, of which I wrote you in my letter sent by Thos. Shoote of London, who was prisoner in Bayonne. The varlet that called himself Her Majesty's son is in Madrid, and is allowed two crowns a day for his table, but cannot go anywhere without his keepers, and has a house for a prison.

Win. Snow, another English rebel, has lately come from the Court to St. Sebastian's to spy out matters, and advise Don Juan de Idiaques, the King's chief councillor; another named Roger Jones remains in the same town. God send them the same success as others have had at Tyburn. The country is full of Irish prelates, and although the King packed many of them into the army, they still increase. They come from France by way of Nantes, and so to Bilboa.

P.S.—The Spanish have news, by way of France, that Sir Fras. Drake is abroad again, with 70 sail, and show great fear of him. A man of 55 took an arquebus in his hand, not thinking it was charged, and in showing his friend how he would serve Sir Fras. Drake, the piece went off, and killed his friend, and the man is now in charge. [3 pages.]

111. Project by Sir Thos. Sherley (?) showing how most part of Her Majesty's treasure may be kept within the realm, and the soldier better used than he is now.

1. Her Majesty now lends to every foot company 20*l.* in ready money, but if she would allow 24*l.*, whereof 8*l.* should be in money and 16*l.* in victuals, there might be saved within the realm 688*l.* per week, or 35,976*l.* a year. [The victualler shall be bound to serve the soldier with as good victuals, and at as reasonable a price as he can buy in the market.]

2. If she continues the clothing of the soldiers, according to the custom of the King of Spain, twice a year, it will amount in the year to 24,000*l.* [It is required every half year.]

3. The pay of 1,000 horse amounts to 30,000*l.* a year, whereof half is paid by weekly imprests. Now if she will assure the parties that the credit they give to the captains and soldiers, in horse, arms, and apparel, not exceeding his full pay, shall be answered here in England every six months, the said parties, upon receipt of the weekly lendings, will pay the value thereof to the Treasurer at War or his deputies on the other side, by which means she will have 30,000*l.* annually within the realm [30*l.* a week to a band of 100 horse]. So that by this project, the whole sum which may be yearly saved within the realm will amount to 89,976*l.*

The soldier cannot be defrauded in victuals; but by receiving his pay at the captain's hands, it often happens he is abridged of what is due to him. There is required, towards the performance hereof, an imprest of 3,000*l.*, besides the magazine remaining. [There is

112. Christopher Coult to Lord Burghley. I am an Englishman, and a traveller for 22 years in divers countries, and have seen many things worth learning; but the grossness of my capacity is such that out of all, I have learned the smallest and least worthy of commendation, which is for a perfect way to find out saltpetre and the making of powder, both good and profitable; and as in this time of trouble there has been want of powder, or it has been at most unreasonable rates, I have wondered thereat, considering the climate of our country, the situation of our ancient buildings, and so many of these prowling fellows who have Her Majesty's commission, but rather take bribes than seek to serve their Prince and country, or else most of them are ignorant in that profession.

As I know you to be a father to our country, a husband to Her Majesty's affairs, and a continual carer for the Commonwealth, I write you that for the service I owe to my Prince and country, I would have come over, but having married a gentleman's daughter of good calling in this country, and being in a powder mill, with freedom to seek and sell saltpetre, I have 300*l.* or 400*l.* a year, so that I cannot so lightly alter my being. Notwithstanding, to pleasure my country, upon good grounds of promised maintenance by Her Majesty or you, as my deserts shall merit, I will show the way to find out more saltpetre and powder than all England shall need, and at reasonable rates, or lose my life.

Dec. 9. Paris. 120. Hen. Cæsar to Sec. Walsingham. As you wish to know the truth concerning Gilbert Gifford the priest, who has now been a year in the Bishop's prison in Paris, I put it down exactly as told me by one of his own calling, and a great companion of his,—William Nicholson. Gifford lived in Paris, and was apparelled as our disguised priests are in England, whereat divers were offended, and every man spoke his pleasure, but especially Miles Hispanicus ille, Sir Chas. Arundel, whom Gifford accused to the Spanish ambassador as a spy for Her Majesty of England, for which Arundel never rested until he had brought the matter to the pass it is, and which could not have been done by any other means than as follows:—

Lilly, alias Ambodexter, being very familiar with Gifford and Arundel, it was thought good by the latter and his counsel, Dr. Piers, alias Skinner, and Bircket, a priest, to fee Lilly, and by his means to get something to lay against Gifford, and prove him to be a spy, as he had accused Arundel of being. Lilly thought it best to get the book which you had, and which was made by Grackley and Gifford against the Jesuits, and touching the authority of the Bishop of Rome, which book has been the occasion of Gifford's troubles in Paris, and of Grackley's in Rome, and which your man Phelippes sent to Lilly. Lilly had 100 crowns for his labour, and 80 paid to him for a surety.

You shall yet further understand how Lilly has abused you. Gifford, a little while before his taking, wrote a book against Dr. Allen's book in defence of Sir Wm. Stanley delivering up Daventry to the Spanish. Gifford delivered the book to his trusty friend Lilly to send to you, but mistrusting him afterwards, demanded to have it again, when Lilly said he had sent it to you, whereas he had delivered it to Sir Chas. Arundel. He also intercepted four packets of letters which Gifford sent you, and others directed to Mr. Hugh Offley. All this has been the cause of Gifford's long imprisonment, although the occasion of his first taking was for being in a suspected house. If Lilly were in England, there would be other matters laid to his charge, but until a man be in danger, no man will speak against him. He has villainously abused you, and for money would betray his country. All that ever he can hear, Pierce has, who is the vilest fellow that lives, and wishes his country as Sodom and Gomorrha. There are two brethren of them here in Paris, one a Sorbonnist, and the other a common priest.

Trust not a Northern Catholic, by any means, if he be a priest, quoniam generatio perversa est, semper exasperans, et infideles filii. If you had heard and seen what I have done, you would never pity them. You have as vile fellows at home as there be here; look to them. They attend but for an occasion, and you would find little mercy with them. Let the King of France be an example to you, who was driven out of his own town by his subjects, and very like to have been driven out of his kingdom. I never knew a priest that would wish well to his Prince and country, but use villainous and intolerable words against her and the present estate. Banish no more, for that is the way to breed traitors; when you have them, keep them not long in prison, unless you know them, as that is but the way to seduce others. As long as they live, their practices will never cease, as one of them vaunted not long since. Sherwood, a priest, a Londoner, banished a year ago, deserved hanging; and there are two brothers of his here now, also priests.

Pray consider of my poor estate, and that I have lived here four years without any help from my friends. If I had wherewith, I might do my country good service, but being poor, I may wish it well, but cannot do that I would do. [2½ pages.]

128. Report to Council of Commissioners J. Delacourt, H. Beauvoir, and J. Essard, touching the complaint of Hugh Perin, of Jersey, against John Dumaresq, late bailiff, and the jurats there, in a matter between Perin and Edm. Richardson.

At the Court of cheefeplays of the manor of Rosell, Perin, as lord of the manor, required possession of certain lands occupied by Richardson his tenant, who had not paid the charges and duties due by his tenure. The seneschal, John Falle, gave sentence that Perin should have the lands until Richardson had discharged his liabilities. Richardson appealed to the bailiff and jurats, alleging that he had offered, not only at the same Court, but at divers other Courts, to yield his duties. Richardson entered his plaint against the judge, when it was ordered that, as the time for sowing the ground was at hand, and the Courts where matters of appeal are decided were shut up, Richardson should repossess the land, as sequestered only, until further order.

After the Courts were open, Richardson obtained an order for the appearance of Falle and Perin, but Perin protested that whatever they should do to Falle should not turn to his prejudice, and declared that he had cause to recuse the said bailiff, as he was his mortal enemy. At another Court, Perin exhibited a bill recusing all the jurats, also alleging that as they were connected by kin, he doubted their indifferency; thus he pretends that they were excluded from the judgment of the cause, and ought to have abstained from the prosecution thereof.

Richardson prosecuting his matter by authority from the bailiff and jurats, notwithstanding the recusation, the seneschal was adjourned in Court, and amerced for not appearing, and the land was ordered to remain in Richardson's possession, provided he discharged all services and duties due for the same. Richardson bringing to Perin certain corn and other grain, which is called campart, being parcel of his due, and Perin refusing it for the above causes, the corn is now thought to be perished, and this is one of the greatest occasions of this controversy, as Richardson means to turn the loss upon Perin, as his landlord.

Richardson proved that not only at the Court where the sentence was given, but at other courts before, he had offered to yield to Perin the duties and services for the said premises, but the seneschal alleged that Richardson had refused to acknowledge a writing containing arrearages of wheat and other rents due to Perin, which writing Richardson had before delivered to Perin, in a Court held upon the manor; and this refusal the seneschal thought sufficient proof that he did not mean to perform his submission, alleging that such arrears were parcel of the duties he had offered, and therefore his proof cannot prevail.

Our opinion is that Richardson should pay all duties due, and a reasonable sum for the service which he ought to have done for time past, rather than stand upon the hard terms of the law.

As for recusation by Perin against the bailiff and jurats, they alleging for confirmation these words contained in the Customary of Normandy, 18th chapter of the 15th book, " Mais si la requeste porte récusation contre si grand nombre des présidents et conseillers de toute la cours que le nombre des nom récusés ne suffit a l'adjudger, en ce cas les non récusés déclareront ne la pouvoir juger, et la renvoyronts au Roy, pour estre les causes de récusation jugées en son conseil, et pourveoir aux parties ainsi que de raison." Perin alleges that not only have they refused to abstain from the judgment, but have reversed the sentence of the seneschal, and condemned him to prison, pretending that the recusations were false, while he affirms the contrary; yet by law they ought not to have imprisoned him, but fined him as the case required, alleging for confirmation thereof, out of the said customary, the following from the 20th chapter of the 9th book, " Et que le proposant sera tenu pour chascun, moisty envers nous, et moisty envers la partie en nos cours inférieures," and in the 18th chapter of the 15th book, " Pour chascun faict de récusation calomnieusement proposé en noz cours souveraines, le proposant sera condamné a xx*l*. Parisis d'amende, moisty envers nous, et moisty envers la partie."

He claims against the bailiff and jurats all costs, damages, and interest, alleging that according to their sentence, he was imprisoned in the castle until he fell sick, and requested the lieutenant of the isle to be enlarged for the recovery of his health, who obtained leave from the bailiff and jurats for a fortnight only, on sufficient surety to surrender at the time limited. Being enlarged, he had refuge to Her Majesty, and obtained a commission from Council, but it being dissolved by the death of one of the commission before they met, he was bound in 100*l*. to sue for another commission on sufficient discharge, requiring time therefor; but the Council misliking this, ordered him to be discharged of the penalty, which otherwise would have been levied upon his goods, at the suit of the Queen's procurer.

The bailiff and jurats answer that they could do no other than administer justice to such as require it; that what was done by them in Richardson's matter was orderly done, and that Perin's bill of recusation cannot be allowed, being full of false accusations. That Perin should have attended the prosecution of the matter until final sentence, when it would have been lawful for him to appeal to Her Majesty, and that by virtue of their privileges, all matters commenced in the isle must be ended there until final sentence be procured, against which sentence it is lawful to appeal from the bailiff and jurats to the Queen and Council, as expressed in the old privileges of the isle, and in the privileges granted by Council 18 June 1565, stating that "no appeal be hereafter received without the copy, as well of the sentence or judgment, as of the whole process of the cause, closed together under the seal of the isle."

John Dumaresq, late bailiff, and the jurats allege that Perin, of his own free will, entered in suit before them in some other cause, about the time he exhibited his bill of recusation, and has done the like ever since he obtained the commission; whereby they conclude that by no law can he pretend any recusation against them, and think themselves exempt of the imprisonment, it being done by the lieutenant of the isle, with advice of the jurats; the enlarging of him was done by the bailiff and jurats, at the instance of the said lieutenant.

Our opinion is that the bailiff and jurats should have remitted the matter to Council, feeling themselves so grievously touched by Perin's bill. We have laboured to bring them and Perin to some good composition, and begged Sir Amias Paulet, the governor, to take pains in the matter; he exhorted all the parties to give over contentions, and acquit each other without claiming recompense, each standing to his own charge; but this Perin refused, alleging that he had sustained very great charges, whereof he looked to be restored, and the mediation has therefore been frustrated. We therefore beg Council to take order therein.

As to other matters depending between divers private persons and Perin, wherein he obtained a reference to us, on the alleged partiality of the late bailiff and jurats, as there is now another bailiff, and some jurats in the room of those dead since the time of the recusation, such doubts ought to be taken away, and we crave that the Council will order such matters to be tried by the common law used in the isle. 10. Father Holt to Cardinal Allen. I impute not hearing from you to broils, whereby the posts pass not free. I long to hear how these violent proceedings are taken in that Court, what censure they put on the Sorbonnist conclusions about those affairs, and especially how the Pope and Cardinals take it.

The friend who went from you to * * * is safely arrived, as Sir Fras. Englefield signifies. He writes that the banns between young W. Copley and Mrs. Th. Pryn were asked on Candlemas day; he has more need of wit than a wife, in these troublesome times, but youth will have its swing.

* * * has been here secretly, and was lodged in the best man's house of this country; he went not abroad, and was seen by few; it is said his coming was to consult or some say it is to get again into his hands which he lost by negligence, and to maintain wars in those parts.

There is here little preparation for war at home, much less abroad.

* * * I do not think the provision is better in * * * although

* * * I am St. Thomas's disciple, and believe when I know what comes.

We hope our state will be mended by your letters to * * *. All are well, and in better case for banished men than divers that look lofty in the Court of England, where [as?] at Geneva, we are not bound to carry baskets of earth to fortify walls, and make buttons for our livings, as they make their brags do in their banishment. Lord Paget is sickly and intends to go to the baths; he wears away apace. The Earl of Westmoreland is in Antwerp, as careless and full of youth as ever.

In England they make haste to set out their fleet.

The long delay in setting forth has given time to prevent in all coasts where they might have done damage; some say it is but for appearance, but I marvel if they spend so much to so small purpose. Some say they are deceived of their expectation, and so driven to put water in their wine, and let all pass if they can keep their own.

March 28. 11. Henry Lord Scrope and John, Bishop of Carlisle, to Sec. Penrith. Walsingham. We have effected the several commissions for finding Her Majesty's estate in the ancient Dacre lands, by attainder of Leonard Dacre, in Cumberland and Westmoreland, and found her entitled to all the lands whereof they were possessed before 9 Hen. VIII., omitting the Greystock lands, and lands purchased since that time. For particulars we refer to the report of Mr. Hesketh and Mr. Lowther.

As for any further course for establishing her possession in the lands, we wait direction. Her Highness has been diligently served in these shires, by the actors in this business. Mr. Hesketh has showed himself very learned, and Richard Lowther and Gerard Lowther have carefully performed all good offices requisite. The sheriffs and gentlemen of both shires have also diligently done their duty; pray take knowledge thereof by your letters, that they may know that their well doing is as well accepted as the contrary would be looked to. March 28. 12. Henry Lord Scrope to John Wolley, secretary for the Latin Penrith. tongue. I receive the Lord Treasurer's and your letter, for detaining the priest apprehended here, will keep him in ward until I hear from Her Majesty's Ambassador in Scotland, of his further behaviour and errands in that realm, and meantime essay to bolt out of him what further matter I can. The feast of St. George now draws near, when I ought to attend Her Majesty, and desire to do; yet as by my late sickness, I am not able to travel, I must pray her dispensation and special licence of absence. Pray send it with expedition, the time being short. [$\frac{2}{3}$ page.]

17. Ambrose Earl of Warwick to Lord Burghley. There is a suit depending before you, in the Court of Wards and Liveries, between Evan Powell, plaintiff, and Edw. Williams, defendant, which concerns my inheritance of the encroached lands, parcel of Snowdon Forest, Carnarvon; and an injunction has been granted against Williams my tenant, to remove him out of the premises. Pray give the cause a new hearing, and if you shall then find just matter, dissolve the injunction. The matter imports me greatly, as I have lands in the said county of good value, and of like nature as this, for which the tenants were willing to compound with me; but hearing that my possession is taken away, by order in the Court of Wards, it moves them to think that I have no interest in any of the lands there, but that they still remain in Her Majesty, whose letters patent I have for the same. I could not hitherto open my title to you, by reason I had it not in my own custody; yet now I hope, if you will grant a new hearing, to satisfy both you and the Court with my evidence which proves the same, and cause you to grant a new order. 18. B. [Thos. Barnes to Phelippes]. A service has been propounded to me by Fathers Holt and Owen, which will be grateful to the best sort of Catholics here, and a commodity to myself, when an alteration happens in England, as is probable shortly; that is to return to London or about Court, advertising of matters demanded, and executing what Card. Allen, Owen, and Holt think necessary. At first I seemed unwilling, but finding that matters of moment would be committed to my charge, I told Father Holt I would undertake the service, though I knew there were others more sufficient. He said he wished me to accept it for old acquaintance, because it was important, and he feared an Englishman who had lately gone over and come again, whom you know I have cause to fear. C. Paget brought news from France that the Master of Gray and his man made special inquiry where I was, as they had letters of importance to send me, which Paget interpreted to be from Mr. Secretary, but that matter is salved by friendship. To frame a more colourable answer, I would I had known of any such letter sent when I was with you.

There is a friar called Arthur with you in London, of whom you make great account; take heed of him, for he corresponds with a Portuguese in Antwerp. Send me instructions; this is an opportunity to enter on a great matter. I want money according to your promise; address it to St. Clares St., Antwerp. If you cannot come soon, send them to E. who will see them conveyed to us; write that they are for the Queen's service, and require him to send them to D. at London. If it be not safe to address an Englishman, direct to him in Dutch, as John Whytsand. Have ample instructions for your addresses in Court or elsewhere for intelligence. I will put them in mind for supply of maintenance. I repose so on your discretion, that I will not trouble you more. [Draft by T. Phelippes, much corrected.]

Half a year since, we recommended to you the cause of one Cross, a poor aged minister, who had long importuned us concerning a cause between him and Edmond Hall, of London. Understanding that you had done nothing, we commanded one of our clerks to remind you to hear it, whereby the party might surcease to be troublesome to us; nevertheless he still daily follows us with great importunity. I marvel what cause he has to complain, considering I never did him any harm, and have never seen him since my coming from London, nor had to do with any matter touching him or his, wherein I have not been upright. If you will have trial hereof, I shall either discharge myself, or never have credit. These informations will prove as false as others that he made before, and if you will direct your letters to any friend he has in Northumberland, I shall either prove his informations false, or else you will think of me as I deserve; and until such time, I beseech you to trust me as well as him.

25. Report of B[arnes]. Was forced, for fear of offence, to come hither, though he could have done better service there. Has brought instructions from Owen, Holt, Lord Paget, Charles Paget, and Morgan, and has several alphabets, and directions for conveyance of letters. The service is laid on him with the privity of Cosmo, the Duke's secretary, whose passport he has, and wishes to repass as speedily as he may. The Duke imputes last year's ill success to the want of intelligence in England. Lord Paget made things difficult and doubtful, while others promised assured conquest, and thus won great reputation of the Duke.

There is little money stirring for the English, unless they can get ready payment of pensions by service.

The English hope the King of Spain will be able to weary us out with expense, having led him to think the effecting what he pretended concerns him in honour, while they laugh in their sleeve at having embarked him in their quarrel. Lord Paget dreams we should yield to a peace, with reasonable conditions for the Catholics at home and abroad, and wishes it in conscience, to avoid the misery ensuing on conquest.

They have little intelligence, or such as makes them condemn the enterprise of Sir John Norris and Sir Fras. Drake; they have none but by Twing at Calais, and another at St. Omer. They can trust none in England, as all platforms fell to the ground on the death of the Queen of Scots. Their next design will be built on other ground than religion; and they harp much on Lady Arabella, despairing of the King of Scots, whom Father Holt calls the cunningest young man ever bred.

Col. Simple was blamed for ordering his man to pass through England.

The last ambassador to England was met on his return at Enchuysen by a Scot, who brought him a secret commission to treat with the Duke of Parma. He spoke discontentedly of his usage here, complaining of our acting, &c.

The Duke [of Parma] was at the Spa, discontent, and in disgrace, because the Duke of Medina imputed the ill success of the fleet to him, as he did to Medina. The Dukes of Pestrana and Prince of Ascoli are at Antwerp, and have a grudge against Parma. The soldiers in field and garrison are 28,000, but the Duke has no money for them. The Marquis de Burgo, with some troops, is going to assist the leaguers in France, and more are to be levied at the King of Spain's charge. The Duke has 120 ships, and they are preparing 300 small boats, seemingly for surprise of some town.

Lloyd, usurping the name of a merchant, and assisted by his father-in-law, Mr. Bavand, an ironmonger, vintner, mercer, and retailer of many commodities, has exhibited a complaint, coloured as a city's cause, against petitioner, inferring slander against petitioner concerning the licence, and has also laid a plot to work the confusion of the merchants, and of all traffic to and from that city. 32. Answers to Owen's instructions [being suggestions for a letter from Thos. Barnes to Owen]:—

[1.] You cannot learn of any promise made to the King of Scots to be declared heir apparent last Parliament, nor of any ground of such opinion, except that the King demanded an authentic writing, under the great seal of England, and the hands of the Commissioners in the cause of his late mother, and also the judges of the realm, that these proceedings do not prejudice his title to the succession; but this is two years since, and nothing came of it, for the King being refused some other things, especially the Countess of Lenox's lands, made no reckoning of this writing, which could not certify his title, if it were not good by law, as in the case of Henry VII., whose attainder was extinct by the crown descending to him.

On the approach of the Spanish fleet, there were certain offers made in the Queen's name by one Ashby, then with the King, but without warrant, and therefore disavowed, which was unkindly taken; but the success of the Spanish fleet, the death of the Duke of Guise, and discovery of Huntley's practices in Scotland, caused such alterations that they were no more spoken of till Lord Wemys, at his being in England, renewed them. The Queen was offended, marvelling that the King was not satisfied, as it seems he now is, and Ashby will bear the penance of his rashness. The offers were a dukedom or earldom in England, a guard of 50 horse and 100 foot; but he was a shallow, wicked man, and overreached by the Chancellor. The King offered to serve the Queen in person, whereupon, and on his dislike of the Spanish party, they reckon him assured to them. They have elected him to the Garter, which will soon be sent by some special man, to whet him to proceed against Huntley, Bothwell, and Crawford, condemned to die ; but the King is rather disposed to keep them in prison or banish them.

2. The Queen and Council do not like the Denmark marriage. Lord Wemys and the Chancellor had brought the King to prefer the sister of the King of Navarre ; but the Earl Marshal and others employed in this matter opposed it, and Wemys had to keep his house. The burghers of Edinburgh are hot for the Denmark marriage, thinking it will better their traffic.

3. There is no faction in England formally opposing the King of Scots.

4. The impediments are from the Queen, who retains her old hardness, and she is so absolute that her Council cannot and dare not seek to restrain her, though they think the King the only fit successor ; nor can any competition defeat him, if he keeps in amity with the Queen ; he has so strongly settled himself in men's good opinions, by his comportment last summer, when the Spaniards were on the coast, and his constancy in the heretic religion. Who forwarder for his causes (notwithstanding the hatred he bore the mother), than Sec. Walsingham ? Lord Hunsdon is wholly for him. He needs not Arabella's marriage to further his title, though he has been scared with her to keep him in order. It has been required that she should not be married without his consent.

5. You cannot discover the intelligence of this State, on account of danger ; Vice-chamberlain Sir Thos. Heneage has all intelligence at present.

[6.] There was no such speaking of banished Catholics last year, nor will they give ear to any such general motion, charging most of the gentlemen abroad with unpardonable offences, as conspiring the death of the Queen, the conquest of the land for a stranger, &c.

[7.] The union and fidelity of subjects is quite contrary to what is conceived abroad. They need not fear the face of a stranger. Last year's attempt was made so odious, that even Catholics would have resisted it, looking for little favour from the merciless Spaniard.

[8.] They condemn the King of Spain's power, and the Catholics abroad who must go a begging if he die, and use hardly those at home, notwithstanding their submissions. They pay penalties for not coming to church, and are restrained to certain places, except by licence of Council, wherein they are coldly heard.

[9.] They assure themselves of France, and are ready to support its King.

[10.] You hear nothing of Capt. Barnes and Peacock.

[11.] Capt. Eton is sent by Walsingham as a leader in this Portugal voyage.

[12.] You do not find the people so changed as is given out, for last year's imminent danger made them think there was good cause to be at charge. Subsidies, loans, and levy of soldiers are but trifles to bear, in respect of former times ; and long peace and husbandry have made them so rich, and they handle the distribution of payments so cunningly. At last Parliament, two subsidies and four tenths were granted, but to be paid in four years, and the assessments are marvellous easy; a man of 50*l.* land assessed at 5*l.*, &c.

1589.

[13.] The late loan has been used with policy; first repaying at the day 60,000*l.* taken up in London; second, sparing all those of account in the country, as having been charged last year, and taxing it on the rich farmer, grazier, clothier, &c., but in small sums of 10*l.* to 30*l.* The greatest grievance you hear is that deputy lieutenants are now and then charged with partiality in appointing the men and the rates.

The soldiers that went lately to Portugal were troublesome to their hosts in Essex and Kent, going away without payment. The army consisted of volunteers, levied at the charge of Norris and Drake, and the rest of the adventurers, specially merchants of London. The Queen, at request of the two knights who undertook Don Antonio's restitution, contributed 20,000*l.* and six ships, and since 10,000*l.* in victuals and munition.

14. The division between Protestants and Puritans is as before about Church government. What has lately been bruited was through a prophecy by Martin Marprelate, which troubles the bishops much, and has given the preachers matter for their sermons, as the book was much read; but it was not made a Council cause; only a strait proclamation was made, at suit of the clergy, for the suppression of all seditious books, and those punished who complained to the Queen of the imprisonment of Anabaptists. Many find fault with the Church, and speak of a reformation like that in Scotland, and seizing the livings of bishops, who are in great contempt. The Queen is incensed against that party, but they will yield no great matter to work on, as long as they are entangled with foreign action.

15. The Queen takes no delight in these wars, but the Council makes peace impossible, saying that last year the Duke of Parma went about to betray them. The people are displeased that war is not proclaimed. There is no appearance of liberty to the Catholics.

16. They do not think the King of Spain can invade them soon, and will never dare it again. They expect disquiet during his life, but think it will not be long. They intend to shut him up by way of Portugal, putting off his traffic to the Indies.

17. It is incredible the number of people given out as in the land; 120,000 footmen, sorted under leaders, and 10,000 horse, and as many more could be raised on need. You have talked with divers on occasion of these matters, and find the realm very populous. Last year's trouble furnished better armour than ever. At every landing place, 12,000 or 15,000 men can descend to the coast within 48 hours. The same lieutenants and deputies continue.

18. No new fortifications are made, except those begun last year at Harwich, Yarmouth, and Tilbury.

Vol. XXXI.

[19.] Plymouth is to be defended by a garrison, lest the town be attempted while their seamen are abroad.

20. The reason why the Lord Admiral was not employed in the late attempt was that it was undertaken by Sir Fras. Drake, at his charge, and that of those who joined with him. The Admiral envied and crossed it, so that it was long ere the fleet went forth. He is not beloved by the seamen, for they impute to his want of courage the not taking the Spanish fleet last year, affirming that it would have yielded upon another fight.

21. There are now abroad with Sir F. Drake six of the Queen's ships, and 120 merchant ships, apparelled for war, beside the Hollanders, and others used for carriage; they were but slenderly victualled, expecting relief out of Barbary, or to get it freely by the sword in Portugal. There went four of the Queen's ships to Scotland, to hinder any succour from the Duke of Parma's sending to help the Catholic noblemen. There is much grudging that there are not more on the Narrow Sea to restrain the Dunkirkers. The common people lay the fault on the Admiral, who they say, for his private gain from letters of reprisal, hinders war being proclaimed. They offer, so they be not subject to the port towns, to free the sea from the Dunkirkers at their own charges. For supply of the Portugal fleet, licence is given for export of corn, powder, &c. on bond for its delivery to the fleet.

The Earl of Arundel has the liberty of the Tower, and it is thought will not be put to death. His charge was that,—whereas Card. Allen and others had practised the invasion of Ireland and England, and the murder of the Queen; and the Pope, under colour of winning men of religion, sent over Jesuits and seminaries to draw men to breach of allegiance, as notified by proclamation; yet the Earl,—knowing Allen to be such a traitor, being present at Campion's arraignment, where these treasons were laid open before the Star Chamber, yet soon after censured Valence who made a rhyme in disgrace of the proceedings against Campion; and though knowing the evil meaning of the Jesuits, harboured Edmonds and Gratly, sent to him by Card. Allen to draw him to a new enterprise against England (after it had been given over by discovery of Fras. Throgmorton) upon letters from Spain, brought by Owen to the Duke of Parma, who intended to execute them after the taking of Antwerp, as shown by letters written by the Cardinal and others to the Queen of Scots; wherein they so far prevailed with the Earl that he submitted to the Cardinal's direction for advancement of the Catholic cause, and prepared to flee the realm, to be a head to draw the discontented to England, when the enterprise was taken in hand, but was prevented and kept in prison.

At the approach of the Spanish fleet, he caused mass to be sung for its prosperity, and had prayers of 24 hours made for the success of the conflict expected at Calais. Whereupon, and by the contents of the bull which the Pope says he has caused to be executed at the solicitation of many principal noblemen, they concluded that he had conspired the invasion of the realm, and deprivation of the Queen, which is treason, and he was found guilty by his peers, Lord Derby, the Lord Treasurer, Marquis of Winchester, Earls of Oxford, Kent, Pembroke, Sussex, Lincoln, &c. 33. Answer to the instructions given by Charles Paget to Owen? [being suggestions for a letter from Thos. Barnes to Chas. Paget]. Similar to articles 1, 2, 12, 13, 14, and 17 in the preceding paper. Also,

You hear of no division in Council about Puritans and Protestants, but some mean persons have been committed for presenting supplications to the Queen on Church matters. They were referred to the Archbishop of Canterbury, as are the suits of recusants and all other matters concerning religion. Publication of Martin Marprélate. A book in rhyme called Mar Martin is sold everywhere and seems to be cum privilegio. You think Lady Arabella's friends unlikely to take part with any new opinion not countenanced by the State. * * * You think they will harken to a peace, considering the Queen's disposition to live at ease, her sparing nature, how hardly she has been brought to countenance Don Antonio's enterprize, and that no war is yet proclaimed, contrary to the desire of the port towus,—who are out of love with going to sea only with letters of marque, of which they must pay a share to the Lord Admiral, of whom they speak very ill,—but you think it will be with no toleration of the Catholic religion. * * *

There is no army prepared. There has been much ammunition sent to Dieppe and Boulogne, and it is continually brought in. Many great and very long brass pieces have been made lately, and a great quantity of metal is delivered to the gun founders. There are 500 men sent to Ostend,—the very scum of the world,—for they will spare none but the refuse for the Low Countries.

Drake had eight score ships of all sorts, but divers Dutchmen were carried by foul weather into Rochelle, where 500 of the men went to serve the King of Navarre, and some returned to England, but part went back with Cross; it seems about 1,000 are cut off. There were 17,000, 750 under Sir John Norris for the land; and under Sir F. Drake, for sea, 4,000 English mariners, 800 Hollanders, and 2,200 gentlemen and soldier adventurers. They were only victualled for six weeks, expecting to be supplied from hence and from those parts, besides what the King of Morocco promised for assistance of Don Antonio. Only five of the Queen's ships are in this voyage, 40 pinnaces, and 15,000 mariners.

There are adventurers strongly appointed for the Indies gone or going from the West Country, under the Earl of Cumberland, Chidley, and others, to pilfer as Cavendish did.

You have always advertised the success of their proceedings at the Groyne. [$3\frac{1}{2}$ pages. Draft by T. Phelippes, much corrected.]

merchants. Sir Thos. Sherley agrees to pay to them 75,155*l.* 12*s.* in six equal portions of 12,525*l.* 18*s.* 8*d.*, between 16 Dec. 1589 and 22 Sept. 1590, and they agree to pay him at Middleburg the like sum, after the rate of 1*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Flemish, per 1*l.* sterling. They covenant, at the receipt of every 12,525*l.* 18*s.* 8*d.*, to procure other merchants of London to become bound to Sir Thomas in 20,000*l.* for the true payment of the money.

Her Majesty allowing weekly to every foot band of 150 men 4*l.* 6*s.* in victuals and 20*l.* in money, Sir Thomas agrees, in consideration of the payment of the said 75,155*l.* 12*s.* without loss by exchange, that the merchants may provide magazines in Flushing, Brill, Bergen-op-Zoom, and deliver victuals weekly to the foot bands after the rates aforesaid, defalking 8*d.* weekly for every soldier absent or deficient.

Her Majesty allowing yearly to every foot band of 150 men 468*l.* 15*s.* for apparel, that is 187*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.* for summer and 280*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.* for winter, which, for 7,600 men comes yearly to 23,700*l.*, Sir Thomas agrees to pay merchants 9,503*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* on 1 April, for summer apparel, and 14,246*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* on 24 Aug. for the winter; they are to provide the apparel according to a pattern delivered by John Fortescue, Under Treasurer of the Exchequer.

Her Majesty also allows certain merchants to give credit to the four horse bands, from 11 October last, for provision for their horses, above their weekly imprests, to be repaid at the end of every six months. The merchants undertake to see that the provisions are as good and as cheap as are to be found in the towns where they shall be delivered, but they are not to deliver more than is due, and are to see their weekly imprests and cheques defalked.

They also agree to provide magazines of good corn, butter, cheese, &c. in the garrisons of Flushing, Brill, Bergen-op-Zoom, and Ostend, and to sell them to the soldier as cheap as sold in the market. In consideration whereof, Sir Thos. Sherley agrees to procure them licence to transport, within one year, to Holland and Zealand 4,000 quarters of wheat, and 4,000 tuns of beer, they paying only the ancient customs.

If Sir Thos. Sherley dies before 22 Sept. next, this contract is to determine, yet so as all reckonings be cleared on both sides; and if any of the merchants die before the same date, the survivors are to procure other merchants to become bound in lieu of those deceased.

If Her Majesty alter or break this contract, Sir Thos. Sherley is to give two months' warning to the merchants; and if the latter desire to relinquish it, they are to give four months' warning, and all reckonings to be cleared on both sides.

If Sir Thomas fail in paying the sums at the days aforesaid, or do not perform all the covenants, this contract shall be void. This or the like contract shall continue for one year ensuing 22 Sept., unless the parties give notice to the contrary two months before. The parties are bound each to the other in 20,000*l.* for due performance. [3½ pages, abstract.]

35. Dr. John Dee to Justice Young, London. God grant this my third letter to you more speed than the other two, which have waited with my servant, Edmond Hill, at Stade, 25 days for passage, two ships being there. The cause of their delay, though they know of the importance of haste, my servant will declare.

The Deputy would gladly do the best, but the wind has not served 36 hours these 25 days. I wish these Low Countries, with their governors, were speedily pacified, reformed, and confirmed in due obedience to Her Majesty, for truly they are at this instant bent to shake off Her Majesty's authority, if they can. They offer to come to an agreement with the Prince of Parma, and he has sent one Ricardoccio—[come] from the King, with full authority to conclude with them as he likes,—by Italy to Spain. It may be this Navarene King of France's true friendship and help may better bridle these Hollanders and Zealanders, and the Hanse cities too, for their aiding of the Spaniard, either in his own country or here in their conspiracies. I fear I shall have to endure this Breamish habitation this winter, as I do not hear a word of the approach of Sir Ed. Kelly, or of Mr. Dye's return. [1 page.]

Having served under Sir William, he requires a free pardon and safe conduct for that offence. He assures me that Capt. Layton, who is coming here, and Wm. Giffre [Jeffery] can answer for his fidelity. Advertise your pleasure, for this gentleman has a good piece of work in hand, which Her Majesty and you will like well of. 38. [— to Thos. Barnes.] There was order left that, on my arrival here, I should repair to the Spa, where Lord Paget was, so that I could write without danger. The advertisements I brought were so well liked that, but for the danger to my person, they would wish me to remain in England, and I may be forced ere long to come over, though I aggravate the danger. It was marvelled that I could not bring any likelihood of hearkening to a peace with toleration of Catholics, which Lord Paget hoped for, and said you would see how you were deceived in the advantage you think to have, and may hereafter be glad to accept the peace, when the commodity of the offer is past. They are incredulous of the people taking in good part the exactions laid on them, and continual charges for the levies made in the country, and say that though the charge be raised on private men, the private purse being the principal supporter of the public, it is a charge to Queen and Crown.]

It is thought the King of France's death will weaken you, for the Catholic party, who took the King's part, being many, are gone to the league, and others to live at home, so you must employ both forces and money to maintain the King of Navarre, who can do little without your succour. On the other side, considering the great wars intended against you, both by Spain and France, the great charges you have been at already, and the discontent of the people herewith, it is supposed that you cannot maintain yourselves, much less help your allies, so they predict the ruin of the King of Navarre and yours.

The Cardinal of England is coming into the Low Countries, by order of the Pope and King of Spain. The Duke of Parma returns shortly to Brussels well revived. Some say the Duke of Parma will go to his camp at Arras, and take Cambray by composition, or besiege it.

I have sent you news of the success of our English armada, as it came from Spain, and a little book lately printed here, to prepare the minds of men in England against the coming of the King of Spain's army, directed to M. Gerard Burghet, Marchant Francais, to avoid danger, but write to me to the old direction, Signor Pages, the Italian, in St. Clares St. I received the letter and money you sent from England by the merchant; Middleton saw me talk with him, and got out of him both my late arrival from England, and what money he had delivered, and told Mr. Owen, but the matter was easily answered. 41. William Haynes to Sec. Walsingham. I have come to Calais, with Roger Billings, lieutenant to the lieut. colonel of Sir Wm. Stanley's regiment, to serve Her Majesty as a true subject. Although I have been subject to the errors of youth, and have offended her laws in some things, yet I have always been faithful to my Queen and country, and will be until death. For faults past, I crave pardon, promising never to offend again, and if Her Majesty forgive me, with your warrant that no man shall trouble me, I will come to England, and make amends for past faults, hoping you will employ me.

On my coming, I will satisfy you of some things concerning Sir Wm. Stanley's regiment, which you will be willing to hear. This is not the first time that I have sent to you by Wm. Geffery [Jeffery] to desire your favour. Mr. Overing can certify you of my good will to my Queen and country, which you shall know when I speak with you. [1 page.]

I have sent him the letter to him, and hope a reply soon. I will write him again; he does not believe what is printed in Paris on the death of the King. I am still living with Mr. Lilly. Gifford cannot leave without much money. Pray take pity on him. [1 page, French.]

44. [——— to Thos. Barnes], addressed to John Whytsand, merchant of London. The Duke of Parma did not come to Brussels, falling anew sick at the Spa, of a surfeit at a banquet made him by the Prince of Liege; he was in danger, but is somewhat recovered, and expected here. It is now said the Cardinal will not stir before spring. I write you now because of the sudden resolution of Sir W. Stanley, who is gone for the Spa to go to Rome, and thence to Spain, with Owen, Chambers, and Rolston. I can learn of no occasion, but a money matter; some conjecture it may be for service in Ireland, if the King of Spain attempt anything there, or for discovery of some matter to further the enterprize for England, which all here talk of as assured for next year; the wisest here say it is on mere discontent at not receiving his pay, and Owen is gone to be his prolocutor, being very perfect in the Spanish tongue and of better audacity to speak. Sir William has always used Owen thus. His regiment remains whole under his lieutenant till his return. I hear he has got 2,000 crowns towards his voyage. All my dealings are referred to Lord Paget, the secretary liking his proceedings about England. I only stay expecting the Duke of Parma.

The continued bruit of the Queen's infirmity, said to be madness, pricks them forward to send me in again, in hope of some alteration that may ensue; but I wait still for letters of moment.

There is here Clement Throckmorton, greatly suspected to be an intelligencer for Sec. Walsingham, so he has no hope to get any pension, and therefore intends to go to Rome to the Cardinal, to whom he may get letters of recommendation from his cousin, Thos. Throckmorton. Several Jesuits have lately arrived here from Ireland, and at the Spa, Stokes, Heath, and Bellamy, who broke out of Newgate. 45.^m Minute for a letter [from Thos. Barnes? to Chas. Paget]. I was glad to hear from you because of the letter left at Paget's, who should get your letters at the post, to avoid danger to your friend in England.

It is well that your coming brought content to them there. Let us hear all that passes among you, particularly about practising the delivery of the castle near Sandwich. One Mainwaring lately sent over upon the rumour of the Queen's death to Sir Wm. Stanley,—a letter of his being intercepted,—has been apprehended, and made prisoner, and has confessed somewhat. Enquire into the cause of his employment; he was delivered by Holt's means, and relieved. Let me know who wrote the book you sent. They feed themselves with false conceits; it will fall into but few hands, and those of the viler sort; but if spread further, the prints are so absurd that every fool could discover the fraud. The Spaniard's tyrannous proud nature is too well known to all sorts for their government to be dejected. The impositions laid on us are trifles in respect of the wealth of the land, and are made supportable by the malice of our enemies.

As to the Portugal voyage, every mean soldier could give the counterfeit Spaniard the lie. The Spaniards may hide it as they will; but they have received notable disgrace. Had the enterprise been conducted with a royal purse, or executed as first intended, it had succeeded.

Say what you hear of their preparations for England; but they cannot be like last season. If the Cardinal comes down, you will discover more of their secret intentions. We hope well of the affairs of France. Great store of ordnance, powder, bullets, and treasure have been sent there. Come over if you have occasion. I shall be absent three weeks, but will take order about your letters, or if you come, will meet you in six days.

If needful, repair to one Miller, at Calais. I am sorry Middleton told them your provision of money; it may hinder a supply; but you may pretend it will only pay old debts. [1 page. Draft by T. Phelippes, much corrected.]

46. Solomon Aldred to Sec. Walsingham. I mean to leave for England in three or four days with M. de Portes' brother, sent to you by M. de Villiers, to conclude all matters. The King of Spain has laboured him much here, but I have done what I could to prevent him; in the end I made him confess that it is dangerous to be under so mighty a prince, who seeks to get all the world into his own hands, and that he still desires to serve Her Majesty, for he fears the King will be overthrown, as numbers are forsaking him.

It is said here that if Her Majesty forsakes him [M. de Portes] he means to submit to some other Prince; I have laboured him hard to send one with me to confer with you and the rest of the Council, for I have passed so great a danger this time, that I would not willingly venture the like again, but you are to command me. Mons. de Mayenne and Mons. de Villiers are great enemies, and De Villiers tells me that if the Duke de Mayenne speeds not this time, he will never be able to make the like again.

The King wrote by me to Mons. de Villiers, Grilion, and De Portes, alias Tiron, the following with his own hand, "Je suis come je etois le tems passé, cependant que je ay la barbe grise," which letter was very well accepted; but they are doubtful of his success. It is wondered that there is no more aid sent to him out of England, considering how much it imports us. The King looks for me back again; but I mean to see you first. The way by land is too dangerous for me, and I had a miraculous escape, for a report of which I refer you to the bearer. [1 page.]

in their own country, unless we should rob and spoil the country as they do, and so make ourselves hateful to them; and as, although they will tolerate it at their countrymen's hands, they will not endure it at ours, such victuallers as will may follow the camp, to transport victuals for the forces.

Also that a paymaster may be appointed to pay the army weekly, and provide them with victuals and other necessaries. Her Majesty having appointed 6,000*l.* to be issued for the coat, conduct, transportation, and pay of 4,000 soldiers, appointed to serve in France for the aid of the French King, under Lord Willoughby, Her Majesty's lieutenant, to be delivered to such person of trust for distribution as we should nominate to you, we have appointed Thomas Fludd as paymaster for the said forces, and require you to order the said sum to be delivered to him, and issued by warrants from us for the said service. [1 page.]

[Sept. 20.]

59. Instructions by the Privy Council to Lord Willoughby, Lord General of the army sent to France. That God may bless both you and the forces under you with success, have a principal care that there be public prayer used in the four regiments twice a day, if convenient, but once at least; charging the colonels to see that both captains and soldiers be present, and use themselves with that reverence that appertaineth, foreseeing that there be no innovation in the use of the Litany, which is to be used Wednesdays and Fridays, nor in the common prayer used in the Church of England.

As most of the late captains, regarding their profit rather than their reputation, have dismissed the best choice of men for money, whereby their bands have not been kept complete, you are specially charged to see such captains as offend therein severely punished. Degrade them as persons infamous and unfit to bear arms, and commit them to prison there, to continue as long as you and your Council of War shall think fit.

And to the end the said abuses may be the better discovered, the captains are to receive their bands in the cities or counties where they are levied, by a muster roll indented, containing the names of the soldiers, and how they are furnished with armour and weapons, that upon their arrival at Dieppe, there may be an exact view taken of the said numbers. If any be wanting without just cause, you shall punish the party offending.

No soldier shall be dismissed, or licensed to return to this realm but by your, or at least the Marshal's passport.

You shall also see due execution of the orders for martial discipline, and cause transgressors to be punished with all severity. As there has hitherto been great spoil made of the armour and weapons which have been sent out of this realm, you are to take precise order for their preservation, that they may be restored to the counties where they were levied, unless they miscarry in fight, and to appoint some special persons to have care of the same.

As some captains have no compassion for such of their soldiers as fall sick, or are hurt in fight,—which greatly alienates the soldiers' love,—and also, under colour of furnishing their soldiers, exact extreme gain of such necessaries as they deliver to them, Her Majesty looks to you to see these abuses reformed, if any such fall out.

You are also to charge the colonels to order the clerks of the bands to see that there is no waste of the victuals committed to their charge for the soldiers' transportation; that the remains thereof, at their arrival, may be laid up at Dieppe, for the use of the soldiers, or sold there without loss to Her Majesty, if the soldier desire rather to have his weekly lendings in money than in victuals; and to the end that these remains may be justly taken, the colonels shall appoint the corporals, captains, and lieutenants, &c., to be present when the view of the said remains are taken, and appoint some discreet persons to make sale thereof, if it be thought meet to sell them, and the money shall be delivered to the paymaster.

You shall also take order that the commissary of the munition certifies to the paymaster how much powder, &c. has been delivered to the several bands, that before any full pay be made, the same may be defalked, according to the rates delivered to the commissary, and contained in a schedule subscribed by us.

Certain persons inhabiting the counties where the regiments have been levied having undertaken to victual them, provided they may be permitted, after the wants of the soldiers have been supplied, to sell the rest to the King's subjects there who are dutifully affected towards him, we think meet that you should give order accordingly, and also see that such victuals are no way abused by any of such regiments, but that they duly pay for all delivered to them. [Sept. 20.] 63. Instructions by Council to Thomas Fludd, paymaster to the army sent into France. After you have disbursed the sums appointed for imprests to the principal officers, captains, and soldiers that are to be sent over, for provision of victuals for their transportation, for coat and conduct money, for emption of part of the munition now to be sent over, and for the charges of transportation, you shall issue the rest of the treasure remaining in your custody by virtue of Lord Willoughby's warrant, as captain-general. When a full pay is made, by virtue of his warrant, you shall inform yourself by Sir Nicholas Parker, commissary-general of the munition, what quantity has been delivered out by him to the bands that are now to go over, that defalcation may be made of the same, according to the rates contained in a schedule delivered to the said commissary.

It is ordered that the clerks of the several bands take charge of the victuals provided to be spent at sea, the remainder, at their arrival at Dieppe, to be put in some storehouse, and viewed by the corporals of the several regiments, captains, and lieutenants. You shall call upon the corporals to see this duly performed, and in case you find any remissness, inform the general, that he may see it duly accomplished.

As it is thought that if any part of the victuals provided for sea remain unspent, the soldiers will be more willing to receive money than victuals, you shall put the general in mind that some be appointed to sell the victuals that remain, provided they be sold without loss, otherwise they shall be issued to the soldiers at such rates as provided, and the money growing out of the sale shall be delivered to you, towards payment of the weekly lendings, after the rate of 6*d.* per day per man. 68. Captain Steven Ellis to Sec. Walsingham. I received the first intimation of the departure of Francis Dacre into Scotland, by a friend, on the 19th inst., the day he departed, and immediately went and told Lord Scrope ; but he would not believe it until I found out that he had left a letter to be delivered to Mr. Lancelot Skelton, and a copy of a letter sent by him to the Queen, which I sent to Lord Scrope, whereupon he advertised you and the Council of his going away. Lord Scrope has not advertised you of his taking his son with him, which is suspected ; it is supposed by his friends here that he means to match his son to some of Her Majesty's unfriends in Scotland. As the Border men here are his favourers, it is very dangerous, particularly as there are no officers to keep such people in subjection. [1 page.]

69. Sir William Drury to Lord Burghley. According to your direction, I repaired to Portsmouth, to receive my regiment and embark them for France, and found that the Earl of Sussex had exercised great care therein, which otherwise would not have been so well done ; yet they had not been furnished by the country with sufficient muskets or corslets, of which we have most need, they being the special strength of my whole regiment. They had not above 20 muskets ; by the Earl of Sussex's means, I have recovered five, but these are mean ones ; if his Lordship had not taken better order, some of our men had gone with coats, and others with none.

When we were ready to embark, there was no money to content the mariners for their transportation, and as they would not go without they were paid, his Lordship saw them satisfied, and did a number of other things wanted for this service ; which if he had not done, I verily believe we should have been here so long that the service would have been unperformed ; by his diligence we are all this day embarked, and ready to set sail for France, and hope to be at Dieppe as soon as any of the other regiments.

P.S.—Upon our coming hither, we found very few or none in these bands sufficient to bear office, and so were driven to discharge some in every band, as occasion served, of which we have made the Lord Lieutenant acquainted, according to your commandment. 70. "Additions to your instructions concerning Scotland." It is now discovered that the King of Scots will not proceed against the condemned noblemen, being offended that the Queen dallies in not sending him the Garter, to which he was elected, nor the pension due, she thinking the money sent for this last action should go in payment. Some say the King must be alienated from her, but will never break with England; others that the Queen knows that the partiality of that realm is so great that she could stop any practice against her there, without the charge of feeding the King and his Court with money.

The Chancellor Maitland, who is for the heretics, is in fear of his fall, which the friends of these noblemen will further, though he has saved their lives, for prevention of the violent attempts that might have been made upon him.

The friends of Archibald Douglas, who are heretics and a great family, especially the two lately made Earls, Angus and Morton, will revenge their kinsman's disgrace, which proceeds from the Chancellor, for he is dismissed from his place of ambassador here, wherein he has wasted his whole substance; it is thought the Queen will relieve him, as he has served her many ways.

The marriage of Denmark will proceed, and hasten the fall of the Chancellor, who would have broken it but for the Earl Marshal and town of Edinburgh.

The fleet that went with Don Antonio are returned, save some left on the coast to watch for prey, and three burnt by the King of Spain's galleys. Half the people that went died in Portugal, or since they returned, of some disorder, but all the commanders are in health. Few are slain in fight, and those killed 10 enemies to one, and speak contemptuously of the Spaniards, and say that but for this mortality, they had taken Lisbon, and would have gone for the islands.

The fleet is stayed at Plymouth to be furnished, when they hear what new exploits the generals will advise upon, though the bad success of this voyage will discourage them. Besides other mischiefs, they were restrained from pillage in Portugal, that the people might be won to join them; others say that this will make people more provident, and that next year France and England joining, Portugal must be had; and they affirm France and England will join, for intercepted letters sent over by M. de Buy to be deciphered in England, discover that the King of Spain is the only support of them of the union. De Buy was in London about a loan of money to the King of France, but was sent back with an excuse of their own great occasions. Rogers is going into Germany to draw the Princes to join the Queen and King of France in a league against Spain; he takes with him 20,000*l*; they have already taken up great sums for the Queen on interest. 71. Alex. King, auditor, to Sec. Walsingham. I delivered Gerard Lowther your letters and message touching the Greystock lands, and he will himself satisfy you at large. He has been ready to further Her Majesty's service in this survey, and should receive thanks. Pray favour Her Majesty's poor tenants upon the Borders, in the baronies of Gillesland and Burgh, by getting officers appointed to preserve them from daily spoils,—to which they are subject for want of a land serjeant and steward,—and keep them from discontent; seeing they now rest well satisfied that they are Her Majesty's tenants, I wish they may receive some present relief, for which they have much called upon me. As I shall not return to London until the 13th inst., having to survey Oswestry, and keep Her Majesty's audit in sundry counties, I write in their behalf. [1 page.]

72. William Chamberlain to his brother, John Chamberlain at Rob. Chamberlain's, St. John's Street, Smithfield, London. The Sunday after you left, we received letters from Normandy and Cherbourg, of certain companies of the League ready to embark for the surprise of our artillery and spoil of the island. Eight or nine ships have been seen hovering suspiciously about the islands. Mr. Morgan, the bearer, was set upon by four of their company at sea, and fought long, in sight of the island. The hurt to their men and his arrival here made them desist from landing at present. The leaguers should not thus boldly stop the passage. It would be the best safeguard if Her Majesty would allow some ships to lie about the islands, and would be the least chargeable to her. [1 page.]

73. Advertisements delivered to Wm. Lumbard by Fras. Lumbard who left Bilboa, 2 Sept., and reached Waterford 7 Oct.

Coming to Bilboa 14 Aug., met Rich. Fowlow of Cashel, co. Tipperary, a student there four years before. He said that Father Parsons and other English students had obtained leave to have a free college at the King's charge at Valladolid, for all English that would come; he knows not with whom Parsons and the rest were conversant in England, but hopes soon to know more about them.

On 1 Aug., 60 of the King's ships left St. Andera for Lisbon, and have arrived there. It is said that Sir Wm. Stanley is coming to Court. Six new ships are building at St. Andera, six at Bilboa, and four at the Passage near Fontarabia, all of 700 to 1,000 tons, to be ready at Easter. A Dutchman is to bring the masts and tackling. It is said that Andreas Doria (employed against the Great Turk ever since the overthrow given by Don John of Austria) is to be general of the King's fleet, but it is said they will not go for England nor France.

P.S.—Don John Alonso of Placentia near Bilboa bought leave of the King to bring all English commodities to that country, except broad cloth. [2 pages.]

76. Francis Dacre to Sir Thomas Heneage, Vice-Chamberlain. Your letter of 20 Feb. did not come to my hands until the 12th instant. I am heartily sorry for Her Majesty's displeasure at my departure, never having, in thought, word, or deed, intended anything which might justly procure it. My reasons are those mentioned in my letter to Her Majesty; and what I now require is enclosed in a letter written by the King to you, at my request, which I beg you to see delivered and to further, when I shall acknowledge myself your deep debtor in this my decayed fortune. I desire to live as the eldest son of Lord Dacre, not having by any act of my own deserved the contrary; and if I may not find this favor, I trust it shall not be displeasing to Her Majesty that I rather choose to live in misery abroad than at home. Whatever becomes of me, I will do nothing derogating from the duty of a faithful subject to Her Majesty. Let me know her further purpose herein with speed, whereby I may be the better able to direct my course in this wretched state of my affairs. [1 page.]

78. Sir Francis Walsingham to the Masters of the Court of Requests. There is a cause depending before you between John Bodie, plaintiff, and the bearer, John Hurte, defendant, touching the performance of an award made between them by arbitrators, wherein the plaintiff, in May last, was enjoined to accomplish every part thereof that concerned him, or in default the matter should be referred to a trial at common law. As the plaintiff has not done so, but seeks to weary the defendant, who is a poor man, with unnecessary delays, pray take course that he may not be longer delayed by his adversary, or that the matter may be dismissed to the common law, which will be the most indifferent way for both parties. 79. John Oseley to his brother Richard Oseley. Courageous courtiers lightly esteem clownish countrymen, being not cavaliers of the city, but vassals of the village, not able to deserve the countenance of such gallants without some great and marvellous present, for which the basest may have gorgeous greetings of the greatest, for the time, though never thought of again; so I, not able to greet your majestical Majesties with so honourable an offering, am never remembered; but what of that? I deserve it not, neither look I for it. But why should I call my unkindness to account when you so unnaturally forget your loving mother? Forget me, only remember her, who is worthy of it. Marvel not to see me preach, for my conscience is pricked to think how little I regard father and mother, yet never so small as you, which I hope they have forgiven; yet I am assured that God (as my father has told me) will suffer my children to do the like. Mark these lines, for I never found my father's words false, and many he has taught me which he thought I would not remember, but I have. Afford me not, for my courtesy, an unkind flout, or for my letter a lip, or for my father's precepts a point, for of those from you both I have had store. You may say, "Physician heal thyself." Every man cannot do that, yet when he tells true diets to be observed, his precepts are not to be condemned. [1 page.]

Nov. 13. 81. Certified copy of the above, with later note [by Sir Edward Westminster. [6 sheets, Latin.]

Nov. $\frac{1}{2}$ 82. [——— to Thos. Barnes], addressed to John Whytsand, merchant, London. I have not answered yours, as, having an ague, I could not have recourse to Antwerp for conveyance of my letters, and I daily expected my despatch, which is deferred till the receipt of letters from Spain.

I cannot learn that Isham ever dealt with any on this side before his imprisonment. Mainwaring went into England, presuming his endurance to have been a sufficient colour of his passage, and that Holt was content to use his intelligence if he might safely pass; but I cannot learn that he committed any great matter to him on the hazard. There are few posts which bring not in letters from the Jesuits.

The author of the pamphlet I send you was not one man, as you may perceive by the diversity of the style; but it was patched up, without consent of the best personages here, by Holt, Owen, Fulgiam, and Verstegan.

Sir Wm. Stanley's going into Spain was for the establishment of his regiment, and procuring his entertainment, without suit and attendance upon the Court here.

I do not think Scotland ever had dealings with the Master of Gray, but Chambers, a Scot, was with him in England, is often at Antwerp, and is a likely man, for he lives prodigally, and yet has no entertainment here. He is a busy fellow, and could not obtain a pension, because he was suspected to be a spy of England.

The Duke of Parma is here, and President Richardot now in Spain, to defend him against the objections of the Spaniards, who detest the government of an Italian. He was charged to speak of my matter to the King of Spain, who, intending to come again next year for England, accepts the opportunity to be informed of the English forces. I am therefore stayed till letters come from Spain; meanwhile the Duke has granted me a pension of 35 crowns, with promise of recompence for my charges in passing to and fro; but money will be very scant so long as the wars continue in France.

VOL. XXXI.

I desire to be delivered of three packets of letters which I have intercepted for you. Jaques, Sir. Wm. Stanley's lieutenant in Ireland, and late prisoner in the Fleet, has come over, has obtained a captain's place, and will have as lieutenant Groins, who lately went away. Yardley is here, and would do anything for money; but his estate is such that no man can deal with him without the Queen's special licence. If you would assign Thos. Hele, a merchant in Antwerp, to be bound for the performance, Hele would grant the matter, for he says most of them that owe the money are knaves, and he would discover them to do them a shrewd turn. Yardley will give me no satisfaction; he goes shortly to the regiment, and will have no dealings with you by letter. If you will have me do anything in it, write me the course I shall take, for I am great with the Earl of Westmoreland, and he has partly imparted the matter to me. All our pensioners of England and Scotland, except a few of the better sort, are to enter companies of horse or foot, or lose their pensions.

Send your letters by Antwerp; but I can make nothing of a good part, because you mistake the cipher.

I will send you another book in press, answering what was written in France of the death of the Queen of Scots, touching me and Morgan sharply, printed by Clitheroe, a priest, under my direction. Present my duty to Sir F. Walsingham.

83. Order of the Court of Exchequer. It appearing upon the hearing of Mr. Hele, counsel for Sir Geo. Carey, that Francis Tregian, lately attainted of præmunire, was seized of divers lands and tenements in Cornwall, which he held of Her Majesty by divers services, and that she conveyed the same to Sir Geo. Carey, to be held as of the manor of East Greenwich in soccage; and that before the time, some of the tenants of the said Sir George had been distrained upon for services due whilst Tregian held the land, and had been discharged:—And it also appearing, by an exemplification of the patent to Carey, that the said tenants were discharged, and that the same lands, and those now required to be discharged, were conveyed to him by one tenure, it is ordered that all the lands conveyed by the said patent, and seized into Her Majesty's hands, for any of the causes aforesaid, be discharged, and the sheriff and all other persons touching the same; and that all mean profits be restored to the said Sir Geo. Rouen. 87. Robert Smith to John Blackborne, merchant, at Sir David Touchy's, Dieppe. You and my friend, Mons. Deshommes, advertised me, that two English ships of war had taken, 20 days since, two ships of Newhaven; one going to St. Lucar, and the other coming out of Spain. Deshommes and I had four bales of white cloth laden in one of the ships. Pray write to some friend at London, especially to Mr. Farrar, to learn the truth, that, by your good means and theirs, either the bales may be recovered, or at least bought by composition at some reasonable rate. They have been marked in the margin.
- The letter which came from Spain states that the King is preparing a great army, which will be ready next spring, half as strong again as that which came into England, so that it is a wonder the English ships durst adventure such an exploit so near so great an army.
- Pray convey the enclosed letters to where they are directed, as there are some bills of exchange in them.
- P.S.—I understand that Robert Bell is a prisoner at Newhaven, and that they demand 2,000*l.* for his ransom. [1 page.]
- Dec. 11. 88. Rates of the monthly entertainment of the captains and other officers of the bands of 4,000 men, as agreed by contract between the French King and Lord Willoughby. No mention is made of the entertainment of his Lordship and the officers of the field, it being left to the King to reward at his pleasure. Sent over 11 Oct., 1589.
- With memorandum that on 6 Dec. 1589, a declaration in French was signed and sealed by the Lord Treasurer of England, and sent to M^r. Beauvoir and Defresnes, the French ambassador confessing to have received of them, for one month's pay for Her Majesty's army in France, 4,657*l.* 4*s.*, his Lordship promising to repay to them so much thereof as was paid by direction of the French King to Lord Willoughby, either in money or victuals, for the relief of the army in France.
- Also note, Dec. 11, that out of this 4,657*l.* 4*s.*, there was delivered to Robt. Bromley, merchant, 825*l.* for apparel, with 1,000*l.* sent by him towards the present relief of the said army; and he was to carry over, upon his own adventure, apparel worth 473*l.* 3*s.* 1*d.*, which he might sell to the King's friends, if Lord Willoughby should not like to accept it. With notes of the prices of certain articles of soldiers' apparel. [2 pages.]
- Dec. 11. 89. Lord Burghley to Robert Bromley, merchant. Upon the arrival in Normandy of such apparel as you are appointed to send over for the English army there, value 825*l.*, which sum you have received of me by imprest, you are to deliver the same to Lord Willoughby, Lord General of the English forces there, and receive his acquittance. You are also to deliver apparel, value 475*l.* 3*s.* 1*d.*, which you are to carry out upon your own adventure; if his Lordship accept it for the use of Her Majesty's subjects, you are to deliver it by his appointment, and receive the money here upon his acquittance; but if he shall not find it needful, then you shall sell what shall not be accepted to any person, English or French, not being enemies to the French King, at the best price you can, that Her Majesty may be satisfied of the money delivered to you, besides all charges incident to the carriage of the apparel. 90. [Thos. Barnes to ———.] Directions in reference to correspondence. Order shall be taken for your relief, and I hope you will not be driven to extremity for want. Isham is at liberty. Mainwaring cannot be brought to confess more. Sir Wm. Stanley is going to Ireland. Order is taken to keep the seas, and strengthen the country with men and martial dignity. We know preparations are made, but they are not thought sufficient for England next year; but we are ready for any alarm. The Queen offers land to raise men. The proceedings of F. (name him with this cipher E.) trouble their designs. What do our bastard countrymen say of our people that serve E.? Our men are sure they had won singular reputation.

Lord Cumberland, Frobisher, and others have brought in many rich Indian prizes. Have an eye to the behaviour of Jaques. Let this J be his cipher. His master's favour saved him from trial at Quinboro', yet he has remained here in discontent. I will see how Yardley deals with us. I procured his liberty on condition of his being bound to do me pleasure. I need not greatly anything the Earl [of Westmoreland?] can do, and it would be more authentic to have the counterpart of the indentures the Earl has, for the thing is partly discovered by another mean here, and the case is not as the Earl thinks, for Higinson (?) and Selby have paid the money to the Queen. The total will be paid, and further sums answerable to the value of the land recovered. Tell the Earl this: I advise him to put somebody in trust to bargain with one here about it. You may undertake to find one if he will trust you with the writings. Do what you can in the matter. Let me have the book by the post. It makes no great matter what they write; we know what we have done, and let them amend themselves as they can. [1 page, draft by Phelippes, much corrected.]

White, Mr. Buckley's factor, at the lodging of Pears Butler, and with a Waterford merchant, who came for Mr. Butler's discharge, brought over a loading of hides, and took back Roman breviaries and mass books. Accounts of meetings with other Catholics in Gray's Inn Lane, and Whitechapel Fields. Cartwright and Roberts have halted with Sir Fras. Walsingham; Cartwright speaks gently of him, but wishes he would attend to weightier matters than apprehending poor priests, whose concern is to win souls. One Noble, who frequents Mr. Thorp's at London Wall, Dr. Atseloe's, and one of the brethren in the Charterhouse, is either a priest or conversant with seminary priests, who daily pass with news, and he gets the first impressions of their books. The Earl of Arundel's servant said that this summer a priest came there to teach Lord William and other gentlemen French, but was obliged to depart, being too much known. Accounts of others. I will seize Cartwright, Roberts, and Scott, if required. Not being suspected, I can gain information from Watson, who lives at Drew's in the Blackfriars, and is conversant with many Catholics. 98. Note that a letter is to be obtained from Mr. Secretary, to command Jas. Bagg, merchant at Plymouth, to send up by the bearer to Mr. Secretary a perfect inventory of all goods, merchandise, &c. brought into that haven by the English army, on their last return from the coast of Portugal, and there landed and sold, with the marks and numbers of everything, as near as he can give, as also what remains thereof unsold. [Scrap.]

99. Instructions for Commissioners appointed to take the accounts of the Portugal voyage. You that were first appointed shall acquaint the others now ordered to join you how far you have proceeded in the account given up by Sir John Norris and Sir Fras. Drake, touching their receipts and disbursements, and certify what has been done therein, for examination of proofs of receipts, payments, and expenses. If the account is not yet finished, you are to advertise the cause, that order may be taken for expediting it.

You shall examine such certificates as Mr. Ashby, Clerk of the Council, shall deliver to you, and thereupon consider how many and what goods were first laden in the ships stayed in Portugal or Spain, and brought in by Sir John Norris and Sir Fras. Drake, or by any other that served in that voyage, belonging to the merchants of the East Countries, or any others; and for your better information therein, you shall call for the examinations taken by a registrar sent down expressly by us, and also examine the pursers and other officers belonging to the said ships.

You are to compare the examinations with the certificates taken by the registrar, and sent by the Commissioners from divers ports of this realm, touching goods found extant when they took a view, as also what has since become of them; and if any have been purloined, as we understand a great part has been, you shall send for such as have embezzled any part thereof, and cause them either to make restitution or to be committed.

You shall take account of all goods sold either in London or elsewhere, how the proceeds have been employed, and what sum remains, and in whose hands, charging the parties not to make payment thereof but upon our warrant, except for necessary charges of unloading or stowage.

As we have appointed John Coniers, one of Her Majesty's auditors for prests, to assist you in this service, the ordering of the accounts should be committed to him, both of the receipts and disbursements made by Sir John Norris and Sir Fras. Drake, and of the disposition of the goods brought in by the ships. Such goods as remain unsold, and are necessary for the navy or the ordnance, must be used to the most profit of Her Majesty and the adventurers, and the money not paid until we, the Lord Treasurer and Lord Admiral, declare our opinion, in respect of certain sums paid out by our order to soldiers and mariners, and also for the charge of bringing home the Queen's ships of war, used in this service by Sir John Norris and Sir Fras. Drake.

You shall acquaint Sir Fras. Drake and Sir John Norris with your doings, and require their advice for the recovery of goods

101. Sir Fras. Englefield to Rob. Tempest, priest, Mignon college, Paris. I am glad to find by yours that none of your letters have been lost, as others have been. Thanks for your endeavours in the transmission of letters. Nothing has come here by way of Don Bernardino for many months, though his own packets have arrived. Pray keep a calendar of the dates of letters received from or sent to me. I will answer about the debts, &c. of the late Mr. Heighington, when I know how he left my things in his charge, but I have no accounts from him for a year, so I know not what I have.

I send you an alphabet (cipher), that you may write more freely what happens among our countrymen where you be; keep it secret. No resolution is yet made for the gentlemen of our nation, so all is uncertain this year, though ships are rigging everywhere for defence, as Drake is said to intend a new voyage this spring. 102. Sir Fras. Englefield to Dr. Barrett, President of the English college at Rheims. My affairs are much disjointed by my letters missing. You know my great loss by the death of Rob. Heighington. I have a letter from his son, the priest, but no information about the things of mine he had in charge. I beg you to take care of that chest of mine which he left in your college's custody, and not suffer it to be opened without my consent, unless Freeman the priest, or Gilbert Dean, my servant, be present to take the charge of what is in it. One of them will be with you when they can get a free passage, but rumour says your city is besieged and battered. [¾ page. The italics are in cipher deciphered by Thos. Phelippes.]

103. Sir Fras. Englefield to the Father Confessor of Syon, at Rouen. I wrote to my lady abess, and now write to you to complain of long silence, not having heard since August, and reports being rank of great troubles in your city and country. I want copies of the letters sister E. Saunders wrote me about the troubles in England, and an account of your two brethren's voyage, from their taking into Rochelle to their return to you. 104. Sir Fras. Englefield to Mr. Hopkins. I heard nothing from you from June to Jan., when I received yours of 20 Nov. with news, some of which was already old. We hear that Bois de Vincennes, Pontoise, &c. are recovered and Paris cleared. Letters are best sent by Thos. Baugh, for though you have credit with Don Bernardino, he forwards them slowly or not at all.

Wm. Heighinton has sent me his father's will, but not the last year's accounts. Thanks for your calling on the dead man in his sickness, and receiving something for me. The son writes only of his father's debts. I have asked for my accounts and papers, &c. I do not object to the sealed bag being opened in Mr. Heighinton's presence; some of the papers may be found there, but charge him to be secret, and let me know what there are. Private affairs.

We hear D. Wendon died rich, and hope he made Rheims seminary his heir; it much needs help. Don Bernardino had appointed some entertainment for 206, if he had remained in Paris, and it was requested that your pay might be where your service is used; but here they lack dispatch, and think nothing of us longer than our papers are in their ears or before their eyes. If it be true that Don Bernardino has lost his sight, he is of no use where he is. I marvel not that Gilb. Gifford wants his case sentenced whilst the affairs of Paris are in so troublesome terms, as his sentence will be more favourable than in a quieter time. Some speak of fresh practices between 200 and Dr. Gifford; send me particulars if you can.

Martin Ayray is provided for by a canon of Toledo, brother to Don Bernardino de Mendoza. I have not therefore promised him money, for after 11 years' consumption, my means decrease. I have received no penny of reward, and my pension does not supply my yearly charges.

The resolutions of this Court are tedious and secret. Our Catholics at home are untoward; they are so persuaded of the King of Spain's intent to conquer them that they resolve to resist his forces, which is proof that the time is not yet ripe for England's reformation.

Signor Cosmo renews your charge to that Court, so you will the less need help, the obtaining which requires incredible toil,—“quia pro absentibus ossa.” [4 pages. The italics are ciphers deciphered by Phelippes.] me a discourse concerning Ff, which had cost him some pains, and he had some books, genealogies, &c. of mine. Private affairs. Letters are intercepted and delayed. I want copies of the parcels you delivered to Hopkins. I do not mistrust him, but he may die.

You have done well to retain my cipher; if your health decay, do as your father did, and burn it ere you die. Send hither by 55 as Don Bernardino does not send. When your health permits, pray write down at large the matter of 75, 78, and Dr. Gifford, at which you hint. It may be of more import than you think, and prevent things which otherwise were past help.

Your father's last accounts were for '88. I think you must have his reckonings, for as long as he was able to write; let me know how much is in his own hand. I refer you to Hopkins, Tempest, &c. for news. This Court depends upon advices from your coasts, where a variety of accidents daily occur. blished at Guernsey and Jersey, and if any goods from Brittany be landed elsewhere, that they be seized to Her Majesty's use. The reason is that those of St. Malo are leaguers, and furnish D. Mercœur with powder and shot. Only the castle is for the King. For a rebellion of the town against the castle, the captain demands 6,000 crowns, whereupon the town raises a custom from the western merchants to repay themselves, and it is feared this will last a long time. Morlaix, a leaguer town, is also heavily charged by D. Mercœur for the wars, so that they have procured safe conducts from the Duke for the western merchants, to get trade thither again, which merchants here refuse to accept; thus they of Morlaix are much weakened, which is a good mean to make them do their duty to their King. 116. "A particular answer to the memorial," brought by —.

1. The King of Scots being chosen of the order [of the Garter] it was stayed by rumour of his underhand dealing with the Duke of Parma.

2. They are jealous about his leaving the realm for Denmark, yet like the match if the Queen assents. He has sent her word from Denmark that he hopes to conclude a league between Denmark, Scotland, and England, for defence of the religion, and thereon Dan. Rogers, Clerk of the Council, goes to Denmark. Earl Bothwell makes show of being at the Queen's devotion, and has asked her to be godmother to his daughter. There is no reckoning made of the Duke of Lenox, he being but a child.

3. They reckon most on Lord John Hamilton, who, strengthened by the Douglasses and others, and backed by England—10,000 foot and 2,000 horse being said to be in the North for his assistance—expects to overmatch any party in Scotland.

4. No speech of Lady Arabella's marriage.

5. There are general musters throughout England, on bruit of preparation in Spain. The whole navy is to repair to Portsmouth, where a staple of victuals is preparing. Next month 20 ships, six being of the Queen's best, under Sir John Hawkins, are to lie on the coast of Ireland. The Earl of Cumberland is to have as many more ships, and the charge of the army.

6. Capt. York, an engineer, is sent to Ireland, to fortify the towns with ravelines and earthworks, there being no time for fortifications; 10,000 men are to go there next month, under the Earl of Ormond and Sir John Norris, and great store of armour and munition is sent.

The Queen, 25 years since, granted the inhabitants a petty custom on merchant strangers' goods, for the erecting of a pier at St. Peter's Port; Council has since ordered a tax on the better inhabitants, if this does not suffice, and the work is now advanced. I want a commission to take up Robert Hill, of Lyme Regis, a master workman, who has hitherto conducted the works. 118. Sir Thomas Leighton to Council. Barks lately come from Brittany report great preparations from Spain, for sending an army into Brittany, whereby great danger would arise to these islands, unless you sent a supply of ordnance and munition for defence of the castle; it is seven years since I had the last supply, and the castle being in the sea, consumes powder, &c. 119. Sir Thomas Leighton to Council. I find by yours of 20 Nov. that John de Vic complains that his house was unseasonably broken open by soldiers from this castle, and an odious proclamation published against him in my name, since which he has been committed to the dungeon, where he yet remains; and this without just cause, and contrary to your orders, and the customs of the isle, which is untrue. He asks a trial before you, as it is not fit that I should be both judge and party.

I did order his house to be searched by the soldiers and constables, &c. for disorderly conduct, and arrogantly refusing to deliver the rolls of this Court to the custody of the bailiff and jurats, till he was justified from a charge of abusing them. He said he would neither obey Sir Thos. Leighton nor the Queen, and then ran away lest he should be apprehended. Thereupon I sent, after the usual custom of governors, to apprehend him. As he could not be found, I made public proclamation against any that should conceal him, and sent boats to Jersey and Alderney to apprehend him. In four days he yielded himself to the bailiff. I put him into the dungeon two days, and then had him lodged in a good chamber till I knew your pleasure, as I would not be his judge. None that in word or deed disobey Her Majesty shall escape punishment where I command. On your command, I delivered him, on bonds for his appearance before you, 29 March. His father-in-law, Nich. Carey, keeps his house, not for fear of like punishments, but from the gout. I would not be a party in such actions, but will send proof that I have ministered no punishment beyond the due of my office.

De Vic has just made his submission, earnestly requesting that this punishment may suffice, and he not be forced to pass into England, to his utter undoing. I think he will not hereafter commit the like. [2 pages.]

120. Sir Thos. Leighton to Sec. Walsingham. I have been vilely abused by M. de Fontaine, governor of St. Malo, who charges me with detaining from him 620 crowns, and threatens this people. The reason is that last November, I imprisoned Captain La Planche, a Breton, accused to me by the Baron de la Monsay and the Viscomte St. Noaille of being a leaguer and traitor, and murderer. He had a safe-conduct from the Duke of Mercœur to transport wheat, &c. to Newhaven, where he had acquittance for its unlading, &c. but I had authority from my Lord Admiral, and the French King's ambassador, to take such as good prize, and committed him to prison, the rather that he was said to have killed or drowned 150 English, when he had the charge of Belle Isle. His coffers and trunks have been examined by the officers, but only 50 crowns in money found.

When he had been a month in prison, M. de Fontaine wrote to me for his deliverance, and I sent him to him, and now he impudently writes to accuse me to the people. If he outrages any of Her Majesty's subjects here, let me not be blamed for taking my revenge. The whole town was never so hot for the league as now, and Fontaine will shortly discover himself in his right colours. I can now justly demand justice of him for three ships of this isle, and their merchandise, &c. taken by him about the time the Scots' Queen was executed. I have shown him many favours, but receive a Frenchman's reward.

P.S.—Capt. Morgan has taken a ship of St. Malo, laden with munition, &c., whereof he left me 1,000 lbs. of powder, 25 calivers, and some match. Fontaine may demand it, but it should not be delivered, except the place were better affected. I have stayed a fine horse, worth 40*l.* to 50*l.*, going from Hampshire into France. [2 pages.]

121. Examination of John Gondsalmus de Lima, before Rich. Young. Was born at Lisbon, where his mother now lives. His parents were Portuguese; after being made a priest at Lisbon, came to England from France, with the King [Don Antonio], five years last September, and has ever since continued with the King as his chaplain. There are three friars attending on the King, viz., Friar Diego, or James, a Franciscan; Friar Joseph; a Dominican; and Friar Lewis, of the order of the Trinity, who have been with him ever since his coming into England.

Was in Flanders and Germany with the King's son, being commanded by the King to attend upon him, and stayed there six months. Thinks he gave the King counsel not to eat eggs or flesh on Fridays, as the Earl of Leicester and others did, and did no evil therein, as he is a Portuguese and a Catholic; has also persuaded the King's son to continue in the Catholic religion, as his father is a Catholic King, and therein did but his duty.

Never caused any man to be punished in the Low Countries for his conscience, or for eating flesh, nor would have gone to King Philip from King Antonio, as he is banished, and dares not go thither.

Knows Robin, the King's Treasurer's boy, but never confessed him, or any other Englishman, as the English Catholics will not trust him that is not King Philip's friend, and his King has commanded him, upon pain of death, not to meddle with the Queen's subjects.

Used to say mass daily before the King, and the friars used to say it to the household; but since the King last came from Portugal, has not done so, as the King left all his furniture at Penecha. When he said mass, the King would not suffer any Englishman to come thither. Has said mass at the French Ambassador's house seven or eight times, but in no other place since his coming into England.

Last August, since he came from Portugal, said mass on the Saturday next after the Assumption, at the French Ambassador's house, he being then in France; but his secretary and the rest of his household were present. On the Sunday following, the King's death being known, commandment came from Council that they should have no mass there; since then, has never said mass there or elsewhere. There were no Englishmen present to his knowledge; thought he might lawfully say mass there, as the Ambassador had licence in his own house. [$1\frac{1}{3}$ pages.]

Showed them the letters, and desired, seeing they were for Her Majesty's service, that they would either send them away, or suffer him, in their company, to go back to his house, to deliver them to one of his servants, or at least to send to one of his servants to come and take them; but they refused (notwithstanding Sharp read the direction, and said it was no feigned excuse), and carried him to a house, where they kept him until 11 o'clock, when Taylor went to deponent's house for his man, who came and received the letters. The letters did not reach the Secretary's hands until 6 p.m., but that was on account of their being carried first to the Court, then to Barn Elms, and last to his house in London. [1 page.]

March 13. 132. The Queen to the Treasurer and Chamberlains of the Exchequer. With advice of our Council, whereof our Admiral was one, we assented to the augmentation of a charge for keeping our ships in harbour, the book of which was subscribed by certain of our Council to whom the case was committed, and thereupon we addressed our warrant for payment of 5,714*l.* 2*s.* 2*d.* yearly, or monthly, to Benjamin Gonson, our Treasurer of Marine Causes, for the keeping and repairing our ships in harbour, and for other charges. Upon conference with our Council and marine officers, we find that our navy being greatly increased, our charges for keeping vessels in harbour is increased 3,259*l.* 7*s.* 2*d.* yearly. The said warrant for 5,714*l.* 2*s.* 2*d.* yearly is therefore to cease, and you shall, after 31 Dec. last, pay in monthly portions to Sir John Hawkins or his deputy, or to the Treasurer of our Navy for the time being, 8,973*l.* 12*s.* 10*d.* a year, for keeping and repairing our vessels in harbour, the money already received since 1 Jan. last, upon the old warrant of 5,714*l.* 2*s.* 2*s.*, being deducted.

Endorsed with calculations [by Sir Robert Cecil] as to the quantity of pikes, muskets, and arquebuses that will be required; and a note that Sir H. Dockwray be admonished that he is too large in his projections. [$1\frac{1}{2}$ pages.]

142. Thomas Digges to Lord Burghley. I am forced to beseech your favour that I may have my pay, so long forborn after others by whom Her Majesty has been damaged are fully paid, or overpaid, whereas I, that never increased her charge one penny, but saved her many thousands, am yet unsatisfied by 1,000*l.*, and have, for want thereof, received such hindrance that I had better have accepted a moiety than my full due now.

I am also engaged for my brother's debts, who complains that he cannot get his due, through Sir Thomas Sherley's malice towards him, whereof I have also had some taste, for doing my duty faithfully. I hope God will move you, and by you, Her Majesty's heart, to have compassion of me that have truly served her, and thereby heaped on myself the irreconcilable malice of some great lucrous persons, who have since done me open wrong, whereof I can have

June 10. London. I found such reports had spread of me, when in Eng-

The division among your nation has been hot, some accusing, others defending Morgan's action, but Chas. Paget's party is like to prevail, and Holt's to fall; yet Morgan is still in prison, because letters were found in his chamber touching the Duke of Parma's proceedings. Our pensioners are all cast, though some that had their pensions by order of the King of Spain or Duke of Parma will be received; but they are in such necessity and discontent that divers seek passports for England before being assured of their grace, and some, as Mr. Lewknor and Capt. Barney, have got leave. If one were at Calais again, to give free pardon to all that would return, most of our nation would be gone.

The Duke of Parma is gone to the Spa for a month, and then will go for France, some say; and there shall go great aid of money and soldiers. Send my orders to Jasper Hunt at Calais, how to endorse my papers at Dover, that I be not discovered, as I was last time. I am to depart in 12 days. [$\frac{2}{3}$ page. July 24. 151. Thomas Digges to Lord Burghley. The injurious surmises invented by some to make you jealous of the office of musters,—which, by my careful endeavours, was first reduced to such perfection, as neither in the Low Countries nor in this realm was ever established better, or comparable,—and the strange practices used to convey those important records out of the hands of officers who faithfully and skilfully served Her Majesty, to others utterly ignorant, or worse, may prejudice Her Majesty many thousands, and was only wrought by such other officers for accounts there as,—knowing that themselves had proceeded most disorderly and confusedly, in few points serving, but many ways breaking the contract made between Her Majesty and the States,—thought there was no other way to cover their errors, but by misconveying these important records of musters, to bring that office into like confusion.

By their malicious surmises, my faithful services have been smallly acknowledged, and nigh 1,000*l.* of my entertainment detained; yet, in discharge of my duty, I have collected and briefly digested such a conference of the different, or rather repugnant, proceedings of the good and bad, in each of these offices of accounts, as if you attentively peruse, and compare them with the actions of such officers as have served, or shall serve, in those important places of military accounts, you will easily discern of what rank they be, and what path they tread; then, I hope, the deceitful malice of the bad shall be bridled, and the honest service of the good receive countenance and comfort. 152. Thomas Digges to Lord Willoughby. I find nothing concerning me in these maimed abbreviates of Mr. Treasurer's accounts, but one sum set down to be paid myself, without warrant, and two other sums paid Capt. Isley, which, as I was his assignee, both for the receipt and payment, concern me. For the 142*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* alleged to be paid me, he never paid me one penny for which he has not good warrant, and he has one from the Earl of Leicester to pay me 400*l.* more than I ever could get of him, which is not mentioned in this imperfect parcel of his accounts, besides 600*l.* more due to me since.

As for the 561*l.* 1*s.* averred to be paid to Capt. Isley without warrant, he never paid that sum for him; what he did pay was paid to myself for him, and upon good warrant. With regard to the 236*l.* 2*s.* 4*d.* alleged to be paid to Capt. Isley by warrant, Mr. Treasurer has such a warrant, and an acquittance for so much; but he never paid it, either to him or any other for him. I know all that was done in that matter, as I was his assignee.

Whatsoever I see, I will not meddle with more than concerns myself, being now no officer, but happily disburdened of that thankless place, where, for my faithful services, I have got so many enemies, and have been lately threatened by Mr. Treasurer that if I be one of the combiners against him, he will so use the matter, as that although he have as many thousands of Her Majesty's treasure as is supposed, there shall be little found due to me; well knowing nevertheless that there is nigh 1,000*l.* due to me, a good part of which he has offered to give his bond to pay. Pardon me if I refuse to irritate so puissant an enemy as can make debts good or bad at his own pleasure. [1 page.]

this army of Spaniards, whom you know to be at sea, execute something against the Queen, or against the King, by means of his rebel subjects; but they, being in intelligence, may assist each other, to the ruin of their enemies.

The King's affairs are in good state. Paris is reduced to obedience. M. de Maine is 10 leagues from the King's army, and holds some towns, but the King has more men-of-war and more towns than his enemies, and I hope the kingdom will soon be at rest. [1 page, French.]

154. Suggestions for a letter to be written by —— to 32 [Thos. Barnes]. You have written twice, though without much to write about, and reckon to overcome ill conceits by his friendship. The well paying of the English there will draw over many more to serve, who grew out of taste with the Spaniards on the casting of our pensionaries. They care not greatly for that here, for some officers of Col. Stanley, who had been drawn from the King of Spain's service during Walsingham's life, suing here for relief or employment, saying they should else be forced to return to that service, were contemptuously bidden to go where they would. Soldiers are generally discontent at little employment. You see no tokens of great poverty; but mean soon to travel out of London and see.

There are no divisions in Court and country likely to breed civil war at home, or prepare a party to join strangers to overthrow the Government; they are only what is usual in Courts, and you see no man likely to become a leader of a faction. Had Leicester lived, there might have been some violent alteration.

You fear things will not fall out as wished for the Queen, who is strong and well; she is gone a progress into Surrey, which will end in three weeks at Windsor.

The Duke's [of Parma?] going into France will trouble those who already speak of the delivery of Paris, and defeat of the Spaniards who entered France,—bruits raised by desire, not truth.

The stirs spoken of in Scotland are only a convention of the nobility. Bothwell, who was gone over the water, intending to depart the land, has returned, and is reconciled to the King. He is an assured enemy of England, being out of taste with them for their misery.

Udal, a Puritan minister, is condemned on the statute of 23 Eliz. for a seditious book, "The Demonstration of Discipline;" but it is thought the Queen will pardon him, because it reaches to life, upon suit of their friends at Court; and leaving the blame of the rigour to light on others, have the honour of clemency wholly to herself. These sharp proceedings make that sect greatly diminish. No secretary yet. The Chancellor is gone to Drayton, and the Treasurer to Burghley; so business is not great when the principal Councillors can be spared. [1 page. Draft by Thos. Phelippes, much corrected.]

Calais. 158. ——— to ———. There have lately embarked from this town for England many English Jesuits; one being warned not to go, on account of the danger, said he had a good warrant. I think he meant a good address and retreat. As they are going to weave factions, and not for religion only, the treasurer-general of Picardy, who took refuge here from the troubles, said some of the Queen's Council should be warned of it. There has passed here Lady Copley, whose husband was banished from England, and is in great credit with the Duke of Alva. As she has obtained the favour of entry into the kingdom, and of her goods, she could instruct the said Jesuits, one of whom was always with her. She is simple enough, and unfit to meddle with such things; but as she is a great bigot, she will know their rendezvous, and should be interrogated about it. [¾ page, French.]

Valladolid. 159. Thos. Still to Dr. Barrett, President of the English College at Rheims. Delay of letters. I will do what I can to serve you. I am sorry His Majesty's pension is stayed from Father Parsons. I will try to aid therein. At first the fathers here wanted nobody but themselves and their scholars in this college; and now I think I had better go, but will stay if Father Parsons thinks it best. Thanks for your offer of a place in your college, but you want no readers there. My Lord, the Father, and you shall dispose of me.
For public affairs, we are wearied with uncertainties. In the college, our chief difficulty will be in the schools, for in three lessons a day, in four years, a scholar will not learn a third part of his divinity. There has been much sickness, but our scholars are all well. Sir William [Stanley] is come to winter here, until His Majesty give order to stir. For the college, we have two large houses, with a garden between; but we shall be put to stabling if you send us any more. The habit is a black cloth gown, such as you wear; for, without a habit, no college in Spain can stand. [1¾ pages.]

I am pleased at your content with my cousin Dr. Gifford, and want to hear that he has returned to you from the Spa. He has been met there by some of his near kindred likely to pervert him, not in religion, but other important matters, in which the enemy has sown cockle seed amongst the good corn of our banished Catholics. Tell me whether he has told you of these provocations. The things of mine which Heighington left in your custody may remain till the ways are less dangerous.

165. Sir Fras. Englefield to Rich. Hopkins, Paris. I am afraid that my last seven months' letters have not reached you, considering how hardly your city is besieged. On 18 Oct. I received yours of May and June, but as your city was delivered in August, we wonder what has become of Mr. Tempest and you, hearing nothing since the Duke of Parma's arrival, and retirement of the Duke of Vendome. With yours, I had one from the good father, a copy of the Sorbonnists' letter to Pope Sixtus, and a French discourse about the compounding of these troubles.

Pray keep with you the little of mine that has come to your hands. As to your arrears in Flanders, the Duke of Parma being so near you, with Holt and Owen in his train, I hope you will find a speedier way than to seek letters to the paymaster from this Court. Our armada went not till 20 Sept. ; the lesser half were at Nantes early in October ; the Almains in Narbonne ; and the Duke of Savoy's force in Provence and Dauphiné ; all well received by the people. The rest of the armada went to Tercera, but we have not heard the result.

Mr. Rolston was 20 days captive in Bayonne, and Mr. Standen is yet prisoner at Bordeaux ; 10 or 12 students from Rheims have arrived at Valladolid, and more are looked for ; there is place for 40. Our colonel will spend part of the winter there. Father Oryton has arrived with the Primate of Ireland. Tell Mr. Smorthwayt not to deliver, without my warrant, my books and papers which the Heighingtons left with him ; if he be unwilling, take charge of them yourself.

Our armada has returned from Tercera without sight of any enemy, which makes me think Hawkins and Frobisher are gone to the Indies. They robbed some poor Portugal ships.

P.S.—We hear good news of Rheims College from 10 students lately come thence to Valladolid. The Duke of Feria is to go to Rome, to congratulate the new Pope as soon as the election is known, and to do the homage for Naples. He has a better Latin tongue than any grandee in Spain, and is equal to the best in other requisite gifts of nature and education. [2 pages.]

172. "Commissaries' Paper." My Lady will not depart till my Lord is fixed in his journey, or be thought to be in Ireland, that the departing may be known to none. Dr. Saunders and all going this voyage are to go to the places near about, and not return here, but only to Proerio, where they are to take ship. My Lord and some soldiers go, as it were, to hunt, and there tarry till the time appointed, every man taking with him what he can; those things that remain to be carried secretly out of the ship, to the appointed place.

VOL. XXXI.

Let it be determined who is meetest to be left here, and let him be instructed what he ought to do, and be a faithful man, and of authority to have the government of all things here, or looked for from Lisbon. A cipher should be left with him, to confer secretly with my Lord.

Let my Lady's place abroad be Mondonedo ; it is secret, and she will be under protection of the Bishop, who will not let her lack. There she shall tarry, not as remaining in Spain, but as looking for the resolution of the matters of Lisbon.

The occasion of the ships, offered to us by God, is not to be lost ; for 1st, we may hear news from Lisbon ; 2nd from other places which may cause us to use the ships ; 3rd, we may determine to send persons or letters by them, though they carry no soldiers. I cannot tell if my Lord should go while the matter of Lisbon hangs in doubt ; for if, a few days after our departure, the ship, money, and weapons come,—and undoubtedly the money will come shortly,—it would be thought unwise to have gone without it. It would very likely not come into Ireland for a month or two, and we had better sit still awhile than have the thing unhandsofely begun. We need not lose the ships. We can make excuses, and delay the shipmen, paying their loss of time. If they will not tarry, we only lose that 25 (sic) which must be paid them to-morrow. If our ship come from Lisbon, no man need tarry, and the more soldiers would do well. If the bark and money had come, some soldiers might be sought in Santiago. If my Lord tarry for the money, we need not borrow. If he depart, and my Lady remain, Saunders cannot tarry, for the Nuncio has bound him to be about my Lord, and he does not know Spanish well enough to be able to speak readily or understand the bargains which the notary makes, and no stranger would treat here with so much authority as a Spaniard would have. He is more necessary in Ireland, for the sake of his name, acquaintance, and Irish tongue ; the letters he may help to write ; his knowledge of the manners of Ireland, and being able to discover the deceits of the English governors and their ministers ; and for the letters which Catholic English and Scottish men may write to him, touching weighty matters, for he knows some of the chief in Scotland.

All that will should follow my Lord, except those necessary for my Lady and the keeping of the ship. It were well to send to the Archbishop for money, which is very needful for the journey, and that my Lord may not have to seek money on his arrival in Ireland. We should buy neither wine, meat, boat, nor anything by the hands of others. [7 pages.]

The keepers of Brigstock Great Park, and such as were left there in the service of Mr. Secretary, with many others, drove the deer into the forest, and having pulled down the barrier in the most convenient places, 120 of the people of Brigstock and Stanyon stood upon the pale, and kept the deer back; nevertheless, 400 or 500 were put into the forest, but the people assembled, killed 9 or 10 deer, and carried them by force to their own houses. I. ——— to [T. Barnes]. I could not write without danger since coming here, being prejudiced by the unadvised speech of Deacon in England, and the assertion of one Edgin that the Lord Treasurer said such wait was laid for me that I could not escape. At my meeting with Chas. Paget, far from having my despatch, I was forced to go with him to Brussels, where after some dispute, I was restored into his old grace, and commanded by Cosmo to attend in some town here where fewest of our nation are, till sent away. Pray learn who set that knave to work to spread such reports of me. The Earl of Westmoreland's man was the principal instrument, upon words the Earl uttered when Paget and he fell out. Let me know the certainty, for the Secretary promises to do wonders in the matter. My answer was that he was incensed to say so by my enemies here, which, on my oath that I was never called in question before my Lord Treasurer or any of the Council, concerning the matter Deacon accused me of, was accepted, and earnestly seconded by Paget.

On the Pope's establishment in his see, he caused Cardinal Madrucci to write to the King of Spain, to request him to continue his zeal to Rome, and to promise assistance in his enterprizes for the Catholics; also Card. Borromeo to write to the Duke of Parma and the Emperor to the like effect. He told Card. Gonzaga that though he had made the schism in the conclave, he would forget all matters, and wished him and the Duke of Mantua to bear their former respect to the Church. Aix in Provence, Marseilles, and six or seven other towns have admitted the Duke of Savoy protector.

The Duke of Parma prepares to go to France. M. la Motte is expected at Brussels, to review the ordnance, &c. The Bishop of Liege was here to congratulate Parma's return, when some of his horse fell a bickering with the boors, and burned some of their villages.

There are letters from Spain in favour of Sir Wm. Stanley's soldiers, and a patent for making his regiment complete with Walloons, but no speech of his coming. Don Bernardino de Mendoza is expected here for Spain, and Taxis takes his place. The King of Spain makes greater preparations for sea than ever, and is having small vessels for transporting men built at Newhaven and Dunkirk. Tell Sir Thos. Heneage that Hummerston is banished, and lies between St. Omer and Gravelines, till he has cleared some private accounts. Fincham, who lies in the same place, is like to be called in question through Lord Cobham's fault; some who came over by my Lord's warrant have discovered him, saying my Lord commended him for his good intelligences, and had sent him money. Yardley is killed in France. Owen was sick but is recovered, though not returned. Father Holt meddles little, and his credit decays. Ambassadors are coming from Germany to the Duke of Parma. Transmission of letters. I came to Garont at request of Thos. Throgmorton's brother, to see his wife, and again about Chas. Paget's letters, and for my despatch, which will not be in haste, for the secretary is sick and this Court tedious. I fear want of money. My pay is not to be had, and half the 20l. I had from you went to discharge debts. Paget has lent me 6l., but I am loath to press him. I will recompense your help by service.

You had better sail from Middleboro' or Flushing, to Ipswich or Harwich. If you stay, I will supply you, in hope that by your signal diligence I may solicit both repayment for myself and reward for you. Try to discover the truth of the Spanish preparations, also what leagues the Catholics there make, and their opinions, &c. of things here. I long to know how Morgan speeds, and wish you recommended to his friends. When Mendoza is in those parts, try to find out something of his designs for England, and their practices in Scotland. The Lord Treasurer is very well. Many adventurers are going to sea with the Earl of Cumberland, and men marching to the coast, to be transported to Brittany. [2¾ pages, all in the hand of Thos. - March 12. 7. Minutes for a letter to be written to J——. There is no such disagreement as you speak of between the King of Scots and the Queen. They agree but too well, the King being most careful not to hinder his succession to the Crown, which they put him in hope of, though they will not assure it.
- The Queen relies chiefly on the Chancellor of Scotland, but opens her purse to few or none, because both the Protestant factions, the Chancellor's, and the Master of Glamis's, seek to fortify themselves by her, and are content with opinion of her favour, and look for no money. Bothwell is thought no friend to England. The King of Scots can furnish no men for the King of Navarre, though he wishes him well, and joined in treaty with the Germans for succour to come thence.
- The loans are to furnish the triple charge this summer in Brittany, at sea, and with the army that comes out of Germany; it will cause less discontent than the last, being assessed according to the subsidy books, whereas the last was at the disposition of lieutenants and their deputies in the shires. Men are willing, because they see the necessity of helping the King of Navarre, and are angry that Council does not help him more roundly.
- The assistance given France with men is only to expel the Spaniards from Brittany. Sir John Norris goes with 4,000 or 5,000 men, part to be taken from the Low Country garrisons, and others to be sent in their places. The Queen is offended with the King for suffering these maritime places to remain in the enemy's hands, and will lend her force to restore them to obedience.

All ships are stayed except those with merchants' goods going to Middleburg and Stade, who are to return by May, when the Lord Admiral will go to sea with the whole navy, probably for the coast of Brittany. Meanwhile the Earl of Cumberland is ready to depart with 16 ships, and Lord Thos. Howard with 30, for the places where the King [of Spain's] treasure is to be met with, the Indies, or islands. Sir W. Raleigh and others are adventurers, and have some of the Queen's best ships, furnished part at her charge, part at their own. Order is taken to satisfy the Hollanders, to the discontent of the adventurers who took their ships prize, but such ravenous hands can hardly get sufficient reparation for remedy. There is a proclamation making it piracy to break bulk till a prize is brought home and found lawful.

They think peace between Spain and Holland ridiculous, and that the King only seeks it to divert them from assisting the King of Navarre.

Hawkins, Frobisher, and Drake are little spoken of. Fenner was to have been employed by Drake, but fell sick, so the adventurers have trusted their ships to my Lord of Cumberland, who offered those of Brittany to furnish some ships at his own charge to expel the Spaniards, but it was resolved my Lord Admiral should go to sea himself,

The not naming a Secretary proceeds from their quietness here, and the Queen's slowness in bestowing places of importance; the great ones about her would each have his friend. The Earl of Essex labours for Davison's restitution; the Treasurer for his son, Rob. Cecil, and is likely to prevail, and the Chancellor concurs, but there is secret opposition, or the Queen is unwilling. Mr. Wotton has been named; the Queen has a liking for Mr. Dyer, who is in Germany. The Treasurer meanwhile executes this office, as almost all other places of the realm, to the discontent of many.

There was a jar between the Treasurer and Archbishop of Canterbury, because the Treasurer said the spiritual courts would fall into the præmunire for taking oaths of men against law. The Archbishop answered stoutly, as if the other affected patronage of the Puritans. The Treasurer was sick for a few days upon it. There is little metal in these men about the Queen, to work on by division: otherwise the State yields occasions enough.

The Earl [of Essex] and Raleigh are as they were when you left, but the Earl is growing into the same vogue of Court; and like enough, if he had a few more years, to carry Leicester's credit and sway.

Sir John Perrott, Sir Thos. Williams, Sir Nich. White, and Phil. Williams are sent to the Tower; some accuse them deeply, others ascribe it to the Chancellor, Sir John's adversary.

8. Henry Lord Scrope to Lord Burghley. I send you the examination of James Clayton, apprehended last Thursday, as he was coming to this town, Although I cannot find any other manifest ill matter than his religion, yet because of the dangerousness of the times, and the bad errands persons of his profession are daily employed in, I committed him to safe custody until I receive your directions about him. I purpose acquainting Mr. Bowes, Her Majesty's ambassador in Scotland, herewith, that he may have a vigilant eye to such men travelling through that realm. [$\frac{2}{3}$ page.] Enclosing,

8. 1. Examination of James Clayton of Townley, co. Lancaster, before Richard Lowther and John Middleton, justices of peace. Was born at Townley, but has not resided there these 16 years. Some part of that time, was with one Delahay of Watringbury, Kent; and for the last six years, has been from one gentleman's house to another, and mostly with John Townley of Townley. Has come direct from Mr. Kemp's house in Chancery Lane, London, where he left Mr. Townley, who also uses Mr. Talbot's house, near to Kemp's, and sometimes his own, which he has taken near Islington. Came to Carlisle in respect of his religion, being a papist and recusant, and intended to go to Scotland, to take shipping for France. Neither Talbot nor Townley was privy to his coming to Carlisle. Was not directed to any one, but meeting by chance at St. Albans with Adam Elwood, going northwards, came with him to Warrington, where they parted. He told examine that if he went to Cuthbert Rumney of Carlisle, and inquired for Adam Elwood or Christopher, his father, he would tell him where they dwelt, and Christopher would guide him into Scotland. Adam Elwood is servant to Edward Fytton, who is with the now Countess of Northumberland.

Knows no one in Scotland, nor was directed to any there; intended to repair to the next and fittest port for his passage into France. Talbot and Townley are recusants; Townley has been one these 20 years. Is not a priest or minister in the Romish church.

Was persuaded by Mr. Parkeson, M.A., of Lincoln College, Oxford, where he was formerly a scholar, to relinquish the established religion, and conform himself to the Roman Catholic faith. Parkeson left this realm 16 or 17 years ago, but has returned two or three times since; upon the first occasion, saw and spoke to him, but on the second was only informed of it by one Hodgson, a recusant, who further persuaded him to be a Catholic, and was also sent beyond seas four years since.

Came from London on Thursday 11 March last; stayed one night at St. Albans, the next night at Stony Stratford, then at Daventry, Lichfield, Talke-on-the-Hill, Warrington (where he met Elwood, who was going to Sir Edward Fytton), Preston, thence to John Branwood's, who married his sister, thence to Lancaster, where, being assize time, he stayed two days, and then went back to Townley to see Mr. Townley's children; thence to Haworth, Repton, Bowes, Penrith, and so to Carlisle, where he was apprehended by Ambrose Carleton.

Has no other means of living than what he has gained in service, and 30l. left him at the decease of his father three years since. Knows no other recusants in England than Sir Wm. Catesby of Warwickshire, and Mr. Tregon, who has been in the Fleet these 20 years.

His object in going to France was to repair to Lorraine, where there are several Englishmen residing, as also Parkenson and Hodgson, who he thought might benefit his condition; has no letters or messages to deliver. When he proceeded Bachelor at Oxford, took the oath of supremacy. [2 pages. Signed by Lord Scrope.]

9. Henry Lord Scrope to Lord Burghley. I have this day received of Sir John Carmichael, the warden opposite here, one Sir Brian O'Rourke, an Irish gentleman, by appointment of Her Majesty's ambassador in Scotland, for safe custody, until I know Her Majesty's pleasure how he is to be disposed of. Seeing his safety so greatly concerns Her Majesty's service, there shall be nothing requisite omitted by me; but as my other affairs prevent me having such a vigilant eye over him as I wish, and as my deputy is shortly to repair to Scotland, to confer with others of all bills to be entered for redress of the late attempts, pray say what is to be done with this prisoner without loss of time, and release me of this burden.

Sir John Carmichael, besides his no small charges in the apprehension and conduction of this prisoner here, has got many enemies in his own country by this service, and the straightening of the opinion of some of his friends, which, with many other good offices, I cannot suffer to slip out of memory; and therefore entreat you to acquaint Her Majesty with his disposition, and accomplishments for any services. 11. Henry Lord Scrope to Lord Burghley. I received yours signifying Her Majesty's pleasure for the safe custody, manner of convoy, and sending of the intelligence of the prisoner O'Rourke; for the further examination of the other prisoner, James Clayton; and for inquiring after Charles Trevor, an Irishman. I have this day delivered O'Rourke to my cousin, Richard Lowther, my deputy, with charge for his safe conveyance to York, and for delivering him to Mr. Purefoy or Mr. Stanhope, which he will have due care to perform. He enters on his journey to-day. As to drawing any matter from him, he will not understand any other language than that of his own country, and I have no person of trust here who could so speak to his understanding. He showed some broken Latin, but nothing to any purpose for expressing his mind in such plainness as were requisite for your true information in the points you required.

Concerning the other prisoner, James Clayton, upon vehement suspicion of his bad and dangerous errands, I committed him to close prison, where I have caused a vigilant eye to be had over him ever since, either for sending or receiving intelligence. He has lately delivered a voluntary confession under his own hand, a copy of which I send, by which you will perceive there rests further matter in the man than at first he could be drawn to set abroad; which, upon my receipt of the interrogatories promised by you to be sent to the Bishop, and by such further travail as I shall make with him myself meantime, will I doubt not more manifestly be set open, to a fuller discovery of the dealings of himself and others of like quality.

Touching Trevor, the other Irishman, I have written to Mr. Bowes, Her Majesty's ambassador in Scotland, to cause a diligent search to be made for him in those parts; but upon the apprehension of O'Rourke, he would seek to shift for himself, and return out of Scotland, as I hear all O'Rourke's other servants did, as soon as he himself was brought from Glasgow. 15. Henry Lord Scrope to Lord Burghley. Last Friday, Gerard Lowther and Mr. Fetherstone, sheriff of Northumberland, brought me three passengers, who were apprehended by them as they were going towards the sea side for Ireland. One, called Landsdale, I cannot perceive to be privy to the practices of the other two, or to have other cause of going that voyage with them than his own preferment. The other two, William and Nicholas Sotheron, brethren, seem to be dangerous practisers, or men of bad and insufferable demeanor. The counterfeited ignorance of the one and the obstinacy of the other will appear from their several examinations.

After their first examination, I caused their packs and trusses to be searched for books, letters, &c., and there was found and brought to me a surplice, wax candles (which I suppose have been hallowed) three pairs of beads with crosses fixed to them, and one Popish manual or English book; also the letters which I send with their examinations. There are three or four other letters brought with them, but as they seem to be on private business, I have detained them myself, as also copies of those sent to you.

In drawing the plot for the apprehension, and in its execution, Mr. Fetherstone has performed such good offices that I must give him the commendations he deserves, and entreat you to give him the thanks; if encouraged, his services may be more profitable hereafter.

Ralph Carr, mentioned in the confession of Nicholas Sotheron, is a great intelligencer with ill-affected persons. I have ordered Talbot Bowes to apprehend him, if he be at Pearcebridge, as it is thought he is; and if you gave like order to some about Newcastle, he might be taken, and discoveries made; if Bowes meets with him, you shall be advertised. Knows neither Roman Catholic nor Recusant, unless one of these in his company, William Sotheron, be such; utterly dislikes the religion, and did not bring any of the copes, vestments, surplices, &c. found in the packs, nor know anything about them. The first letter was to a Mr. John ———, an Irishman, at Dublin. Received another letter from one Awde, a smith of Tursdell, to be delivered to Robert Smith, in Ireland; also two others from Wm. June 2. 16. Lord Burghley to the Captain of Jersey. Sir John Norris has found great good to the service which he has in Brittany by having a few pieces of ordnance. If he had two or three larger pieces for battery cannon, they would greatly serve him. The transporting of them will be more speedy from that isle, where is a store, some of which can be spared for a few months; so we require you to send two or three cannon to any place desired by Sir John, to be restored after the summer service. We have commanded Sir H. Palmer, now serving with our navy there, to take them over, if other shipping cannot be had. [1 page, draft by Burghley.]

Sept. 15 ? 21. Petition of Christopher Sheperson on behalf of his master, Robert Bowes, treasurer of Berwick, to Lord Burghley. Pray consider the losses falling upon my master by want of the occupation of the coal mines at Ufferton, and the salt pans at Sunderland, which have lain waste since they were seized and taken from him. The salt pans are consumed with rust, and the houses and premises decayed, so that great charge must be bestowed in repairing them before the salt works can be set forward. The earth has fallen within the coal pits; the water gate, which cost 2,000*l.*, is stopped, and new shafts must be sunk, which cannot be done until the water gate is cleared. This work will expend much money and time, and must be done before winter and the great floods, or the whole field or coal mine will be in danger of being lost.

I beseech order that these things may be enjoyed by such as shall bestow the charge thereon, and pay Her Majesty the yearly rent of 800*l.*, as has been offered.

Also pray move Her Majesty to call my master from the service in Scotland, where he cannot perform his duties without better maintenance, that he may perfect assurances to be made to her satisfaction, and repair and put in order the coal pits and salt pans, and provide that Her Majesty may have as large a payment as possible.

Let John Walker have the place of comptroller of Customs at Berwick, lately enjoyed by William Walker, and order payment of the money due to my master for diet in Scotland, with some imprest for the time of his abode there. [1 page. See Dom. Eliz., Vol. CCXL., No. 13.]

23. John Kelsterne to William Asley, St. John's London. William Walker having died at Edinburgh, I am moved by my friends, the best Scotch merchants of Edinburgh, to go to Berwick, and labour my friends there for his office, for which they think me fit; Walker had a pension of 10*d.* a day, and besides was comptroller of the port and haven of Berwick; but his dealings with merchants were such that he was more amongst them in Edinburgh than at Berwick. The fee belonging to the office was but 5*l.* yearly, but otherwise it was very beneficial; the merchants in Edinburgh and governors, &c. here wish it for me.

The comptrollership was formerly held by John Allen, who was with Mr. Bowes the ambassador, then with Sir Francis Walsingham, and now depending upon the Chancellor of the Duchy. John Allen sold it to Wm. Walker, and it is supposed that Allen will now make suit for it again. Some suppose Mr. Bowes will sue for it, for a roving boy of 12 years belonging to Walker, and have a deputy for him until he has advanced in years; but the office being in the gift of the Lord Treasurer, it will be disposed of by him.

If my good friend the Clerk Registrar had haply been in Edinburgh, his letter would have stricken it down; but I will still live in hope, and if no luck comes, I would rather end my life with want in England, if I could get food and clothing, than in miserable Scotland, unless this office or other in Berwick happily by your means may be looking towards me.

The bearer, Capt. Selby, is my friend, and if my Lord Treasurer would send for him, I think after he had heard his report, and seen the Clerk Registrar's letters, he would order that in consideration of my advanced age, I might have the same for life, and William Walker's boy the reversion after my decease, his deputy for the time being one of Mr. Bowes' men. In the absence of the Clerk Registrar, Wm. Wilby has written you the enclosed, and I also enclose a letter from the best sort of credit in Berwick to the Lord Treasurer, on my behalf, confirming the effect of the Lord

Clerk Registrar's letters ; send him a speedy answer, that I may not remain longer in suspense, and be compelled to abide in Scotland until the end of the next Parliament, which will be the last day of next November. Capt. Selby is lodging with Mr. Gale, the post of London, in Little Wood Street. He is a master of ordnance and captain of 50 men, and would be glad of a gunner's room, or any other, or the comptrollership of a port.

P.S.—If any other ambassadors or friends of yours come into Scotland at the end of next November, I beseech you to commend them to me, for there is no relief from the present ambassador. If Sir John Selby had been in town, or Mr. Vernon, they would both have subscribed this letter in my behalf. I return to Scotland tomorrow. [3 pages.]

24. Lord Burghley to the Masters of Requests. John Harris and Eliz. Harris, his daughter, are served with process out of your Court, at the suit of Eliz. Harris, widow, and Francis Harris, her son ; the process has been procured by one Owbery, a bad and busy fellow, upon colour of a lease unduly procured out of the Exchequer (which I mean to have cancelled), of a copyhold in controversy between John Harris and Elizabeth, the widow. After many examinations, I wrote to Mr. Townshend, steward of that Manor of Clure, to admit John Harris, and to deliver him quiet possession, and have sent my messenger to bring Owbery before me, to answer to his contempt. I therefore require you to stay further proceedings upon the said process, and charge such as prosecute the charge to appear before me, where they shall be heard, and receive justice. I have been desired by my kinsman, Robert Cotton, who has a matter in the Court of Requests, to speak to some of the masters there, not to yield to any motion of his adversary to have it removed from that Court, as the matter is not great, and his adversary has offered him a composition of 10*l.* ; it were well if the Masters of Requests would make an agreement between the parties. 26. Bundle of papers attached, containing as follows:—
Statement by John Churchill, 26 October 1591, of "the wrongs holden and claimed by John Hare, Esquire, clerk of the Court of Wards, upon the office of Clerk of the Liveries ; viz., his assertion that, the Clerk of Liveries is no officer of the Court of Wards ; his claim of all indentures, books of record, entries of the schedules of liveries, &c. ; his staying the proceedings of liveries by demanding warrants, taking bonds for the fines of liveries, and mean rates of full age ; preventing the Clerk of Liveries perusing the files of offices, although his fees grow by the suing forth of liveries, &c. [2 pages.]¹

Answer of the Clerk of the Wards to the several articles of Mr. Churchill, 4 Nov. 1591, arguing the legal position and duties of the Clerk of the Liveries, as merely an attendant, and not an officer of the Court ; and consequently the groundlessness of his claim to have the records thereof entrusted to him. [10 sheets.]

Reply of John Churchill, on behalf of the Clerk of the Liveries, to the above articles, 22 Nov. 1591 ; that the Clerk of Liveries is an absolute officer of the Court of Wards, but the other points must be proved by evidence. [1 page.]

Endorsed, " 2 Dec. 1591. 1. Articles exhibited by Churchill on the behalf of the Clerk of the Liveries. 2. The answer of the Clerk of the Court. 3. Churchill's reply. 4. Mr. Attorney Morrice, his report to my Lord upon hearing. It is to be known that the cause of exhibiting these articles was this ; Churchill openly in Court charges the Clerk of the Wards that he had done more wrong to the Clerk of the Liveries (being then an infant) than was ever done to any of the Queen's wards ; whereupon the Clerk of the Court complained to my Lord, and he commanded Churchill to article."

27. Request of Sir William Russell, late Governor of Flushing, to Council. Her Majesty having placed Sir Robert Sydney in the Government, I am informed that you intend granting him my company of horse, which I supposed I might have retained, as others in like manner have heretofore done, although they have not personally attended. If this be your pleasure, I beg that before I am discharged, order may be given by you to the Treasurer, that the account may be made up for my said horse company, as for my late governorship and foot company, and payment made of what shall be found due to me, that I may be encouraged to further service. 28. Petition of Jean de Vick and other inhabitants of Guernsey to the Commissioners appointed by the Queen of England and the King of France, for examination and redress of the grievances and offences committed on their subjects interchangeably. The island has at all times enjoyed a free traffic with all nations, as well in times of war as of peace, and the inhabitants have also traded freely in the dominions of the King of France ; and if they have been hindered, on representation of the privilege of the island, they have been relieved. This notwithstanding, your suppliant and other inhabitants, in the time of the league, being in war against none, were taken at sea, carried to St. Malo, and their goods, worth 1,200 crowns judged prize. Thereupon they obtained leave from the Council of England to arrest the goods of inhabitants of St. Malo and other leaguers. This they could have done, many leaguers' ships having arrived in the isle ; but considering the preservation of the privileges of the island, and hoping for justice, they have molested none, and the arrests made by the Governor of the island during the league have been cancelled, and the parties liberated by the justices.

Copies and counterparts of all the leases of Harrouldfelds and Chartshils, and one part of a demise, for which there was to be paid by the heirs of Matthew Poyntz, 200*l.* to his daughter Alice Poyntz, and her husband Pelham Burton, conditionally that such a farm be provided by the said Burton for her jointure.

The leases are of the grounds called Searches, containing 8 acres; Harrouldfelds, 60 acres; Chartshils grange, 60 acres, with ground and a meadow to it of six acres; and a pasture and mead of 12 acres; total, 146 acres. Noted as left by Robert Poyntz. [1 page.]

34. The Queen to Richard Lowther. We understand by your letters to our Treasurer of England, that God has called to his mercy the Lord Scrope, our late Warden of the West Marches towards Scotland, whereof we have great cause to be sorry, in respect of the honourable service that he has long time done us in that office. As you were his deputy there, and have diligently supplied that room,—it being needful, until we appoint a Lord Warden, to have the country kept in good order, and the laws of the Borders towards Scotland duly observed,—we for the present authorise you to use the office of Warden of those West Borders. You are to answer to the people of the opposite wardenry in Scotland reason and justice, according to the laws of the Borders, and to the articles of peace between both the realms, and impart to the gentlemen and other principal men within that wardenry this our pleasure, that they may assist you in all things for our service and preservation of the peace. 35. Brief of the material parts of the estate made by Henry Lord Scrope, 1592, for the establishing of his lands. Certain lands, &c. in cos. Durham, York, and Bucks are to the use of Sir Thos. Scrope and Lady Philadelphia, his wife, during their lives, without impeachment of waste, during the life of Sir Thomas only; remainder to Emanuel Scrope, and his heirs male, with divers remainders over. Other manors and lands in co. York, are to the use of Henry Lord Scrope for life, without impeachment of waste, and then to the said Sir Thos. Scrope, and Lady Philadelphia his wife, with remainder to Emanuel Scrope as before.

The castle and manor of East Bolton, and other manors and lands in cos. York and Notts, to the use of Henry Lord Scrope for life, and then to Sir Thomas, both without impeachment of waste, and after his death to the use of Emanuel Scrope, &c.

Proviso, that any of the persons named in this estate may assign a jointure to his wife, or to the wife of his son and heir apparent, not exceeding 400*l.* a year, excepting the manors, castles, parks, and demesne lands of East Bolton, and the lead mines and coal mines in the manors of East Bolton, Preston, and Ridmer.

Provisoes also of liberty to make leases for their lives or 21 years, reserving present rent and service. To assign lands, yearly value 100*l.*, for the advancement of younger sons, except belonging to manors mentioned; and also to assign lands value 200*l.* a year, for the advancement of daughters; that is to say, if one daughter only, then until she be satisfied, 1,000*l.*; and if more than one, then until every of them be satisfied, 1,000 marks, excepting the lands as before. To sell land value 200*l.* a year, for the ransom of any of the persons named in these limitations, being taken prisoners in the wars. To restrain alienations. Also a proviso that Henry Lord Scrope might alter these estates (which he never did).

The sum of such lands and inheritance as his Lordship is solely seized of is 1,453*l.* 17*s.* 4*d.* The sum of such lands as he is jointly seized of, with Lady Philadelphia his wife for her jointure, is 300*l.* 1*s.* 6*d.*; remainder after the death of his grandmother, uncle, and brother, 244*l.* 5*s.*; and the sum of his leases, over and besides the rent reserved, 424*l.* 18*s.* 2*d.* The two ladies that had jointure are both dead, and there only now remains my Lady, his wife; total, 2,423*l.* 2*s.* 0½*d.* [1¼ sheets.]

June 17.

36. Matters to be considered in the choice of a new warden of the West Marches, and Captain of the castle and city of Carlisle, now void by the death of Henry Lord Scrope, which requires the more speed, because whenever there is any change, the malefactors of the Borders commit great disorders.

1. Whether the office ought to be supplied by one or two officers, as in the time of Edward VI., and before, viz., a warden with a fee of 600 marks, and a captain of the castle and city, with 300 marks; men of sound and loyal disposition, out of all suspicion of ill religion.

2. The warden to be a man of wisdom, and good policy, zealous to suppress offenders, and to defend the true subjects.

3. That he be addicted to make choice of good men to be his officers, and no favourer of malefactors, either from familiarity or kindred.

4. For his better defence, he should have some force of his own in that place, besides the authority of his office; or in executing justice against offenders, and service against the enemy, he may sometimes rest in danger.

These two offices being supplied with two fit men, the one assistant to the other in advice, if the captain's fee, being very small, should be augmented with 100 marks of the warden's fee, or with some other preferment, it might be to the greater honour and better service of Her Majesty. [1 page.]

June ?

37. Considerations [by Mr. Dacre ?] on the same subject, addressed to Lord [Burghley]. The two offices, viz., a warden with 600 marks fee and a captain with 300, were last supplied by Sir Thomas Dacre, having the whole fee of the warden by patent, and Sir Rich. Musgrave, then captain; but there should be a more indifferent division of the fee, allowing the warden 500 marks, which is as much as some wardens have, and 400 marks to the captain, who, in consideration thereof, is to assist the warden.

VOL. XXXII.

For the one office, Sir William Bowes, who is a very near neighbour, should be considered of; for the other, I refer to the better advice of officers in those parts.

If Her Majesty determines to have but one officer for both, I know no nobleman so fit as the Earl of Cumberland. If she appoints any meaner than a nobleman, it may seem better to have two officers than one. If she should appoint either nobleman or meaner man, not skilful of himself in government, but as guided by others, he may confound the government. If she appoints any that choose under officers other than good men, and no favourers of malefactors, it will be the undoing of true subjects, and the overthrow of justice.

The choice of a good officer may be a great help, and Her Majesty will be at less charge than otherwise for the defence of her subjects. I still think that, the case standing as it is with Liddesdale, whoever is officer, there must be some charge, or other means than is yet provided, as may appear by my former papers, touching that cause.

The sooner Her Majesty determines upon an officer, the better it will be for her subjects, and it will breed great harm if it is long deferred. [1 page.]

June ?

38. Note addressed to Lord [Burghley] of great causes to be considered in the appointing of a new warden with expedition, for avoiding the peril to true subjects usual upon the Borders upon change of officers, and which is the more to be doubted if Bothwell is at liberty, and in dislike with the King.

If now, in the time of least danger, the new officer should not be appointed, and settle himself before September, when the great danger begins, the true subjects cannot be defended more than for the last 14 years, when there were known officers.

The hurt once done, which in a very short time may be done, is past hope of redress, as may appear by 14 years' experience; no redress has ever been answered by Liddesdale to any of the true subjects of those Marches, and hurt may be done in one week that will not be recovered in 20 years.

Now is the time for the new officer to make all his provisions, which in winter it will be hard for him to do,—the state of the country considered.

If the peril of the true subjects was before great, it is now greater, until a good officer is appointed. I care not what he is, so that he be good for Her Majesty and the poor subjects. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page.]

June ?

39. Note of the great inconveniences existing in the West Marches, to the impoverishing of a great number of true subjects there. The malefactors and offenders of the English Borders, if of any great surname, are not brought in to answer the law, but permitted to enjoy their habitations and possessions, as if they were no offenders. Those in Liddesdale have not answered any redress to Her Majesty's subjects for 14 years. If the poor subjects there complain, or prosecute any offender of any great surname, they are either murdered or their houses burned, without any punishment, so that no man dares complain or give evidence against such offenders. The ordinary watches, devised as a defence to true subjects, are not observed as in former times. The assistance of the subjects there, in the defence one of another, with hue and cry, which is there termed fray and following, and which should be the chief defence for true subjects, is laid apart; none dares stir out of his own house to aid even his next friend or neighbour. The liberty of marriage, and of daily access and company of the English borderers with the Scottish borderers is not punished or restrained. The general liberty of selling and conveying horses into Scotland is not restrained or punished, whereby true subjects are not well provided to defend or do service, and malefactors are well furnished.

VOL. XXXII.

Thus true subjects, who should be the defence of that Border, are oppressed and impoverished, and likely to be brought into subjection of the great malefactors of both Borders. Choice should be made of a good and fit officer, who will be zealous to sift out offences, without favour or forbearing; to bring in the offenders with the said great surnames, prosecute the law against them, and give evidence himself, as the poor subjects dare not; to reform all the other defects before mentioned; and for the better execution of the same, to retain as inferior officers good men, not bearing any friendship or favour to offenders. This should be with all expedition, as in all like times of change of officers, the Border malefactors commit the greatest offences and disorders against the true subjects, in hope of remission at the placing of a new officer.

This may be instructive to him that shall be appointed, to know the present estate there, and how to reform it. [1 page.]

June? 40. Account by W. Grenville, deputy registrar, of the yearly fees reserved in the letters patent granted to Henry late Lord Scrope, as captain of the castle and city of Carlisle, and Lord Warden of the West Marches; total fees as Captain of Carlisle, and for 20 horsemen attending him, 200*l.*; as Lord Warden, with allowances for two under wardens, and two serjeants, 424*l.* With note that there were divers little fees for watchmen, &c., paid by his Lordship, although not within his patents. [1 page.]

June? 41. Another account, directed to Lord Burghley, of the fees granted to the late Lord Scrope, 6 April 1563, as Captain of Carlisle and Lord Warden of the West Marches; total, 624*l.* With note that Lord Scrope had also granted to him by his patent the office of chief steward of all the lordships, lands, &c., within the West Marches, without any fee. The office consists merely of the commanding of all such of Her Majesty's tenants as are to serve within the said West Marches, and not otherwise. His Lordship had no office as steward in Cumberland or Westmoreland, save the forest of Inglewood, for which office, and as learned steward, he received yearly, 3*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* during his life. Since his death, a new grant has been passed by your Lordship of this office, fee, 3*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* [$\frac{2}{3}$ page.]

June 20. 42. Surrender by Richard Philpot, curate of Brislington, of a presentation to the vicarage of Long Ashton, both co. Somerset, made to him by Her Majesty 3 Dec. 1591; as also of a patent made thereupon under the seal of the Court of Wards and Liveries. [1 page, damaged.]
- June 23. 43. Henry Lord Hunsdon and Thomas Lord Buckhurst to the Masters of Requests. Her Majesty has commanded us to hear a cause between Sir Richard Rogers and George Goring, gentleman pensioner. As depositions were taken in the Court of Requests, of Edward Wymark, and Dodd, a scrivener, which concern this cause, we pray you to direct true copies of them to be sent to us, that we may better understand the truth.
With note by J. Herbert and Julius Cæsar, that as the Privy Council are members of Her Majesty's Council appointed for private suits and requests, he thinks their Lordships may command the Clerk of the Privy Seal appointed to keep the records of the Council to appear, and to bring with him such depositions as they think necessary.
Also postscript by J. Herbert, Jul. Cæsar, and Wm. Aubrey to Rich. Oseley, or to his deputy. Since subscribing the former note, we understand their Lordships have committed the cause to certain gentlemen in co, Dorset; the depositions taken upon the examination of Wymark and Dodd you are to deliver, closely sealed, to Mr. Goring, to be delivered over to the gentlemen of Dorsetshire. - July 3. 45. J. C. to Sir Robt. Cecil. I am glad the letters are come to light, for I feared they might have been embezzled by the pilot, and so turned me to displeasure, if he had returned them to the place whence they came. The drift of his letter is charging us by means of John Garrat, a priest, to make trial of my L[ord] Str[ange], and see how he was affected to that pretence of the Crown, after Her Majesty's death. This matter he would not communicate to any but Garnet and Southwell, who are Jesuits at liberty in England. I brought this letter that my Lord might not think what I told him of my Lord Strange was a chimera. You may see they are greedy of intelligence, and have very sorry and seldom advices, and to supply them, they often invent. I do not know Thos. Payue or Jas. Taylor, but it appears they be the parties at whose houses I might perhaps have some letters at my arrival in London. These men be the conveyers of their intelligence; they might be looked to. I would, if I could, have learned something of greater importance, and I imagined it good service to bring their own hands for confirmation of their pretences; therefore I adventured to bring these letters with me. 46. Thomas Lord Buckhurst to the Dean and Chapter of Christchurch, Oxford. You have heretofore granted the bearer, John Daniel, certain concealed tithes of Deresbury, co. Chester, which grant he offers to surrender, and desires a new lease thereof, together with other tithes, parcel of the parsonage of Runcorn, which he thinks are detained from you under colour of a void lease, as he will prove upon his own charges. Pray renew his former lease, and grant him such other tithes as he will disclose. And as he affirms that he can neither draw a good lease, nor his counsel be satisfied in point of law without your instructions, deliver him a copy of the rental of the said parsonage, and grant him a transcript of the former lease to Richard Brooke, deceased, that his counsel may reserve the old rent, and a third part in corn, according to statute, and also resolve upon the validity of the lease made to Brooke.

With two later notes by Oth. Nicholson, that this letter was shown to Barton Palmer and to Wm. James, D.D., when examined as witnesses on behalf of John Daniel, against Thos. Brooke, plaintiff, the former on 13 Nov. 1594, and the latter in May 1595. [1 page.]

July 12.

47. Christopher Dacre to Lord Burghley. To my discomfort it was objected that I had done no service to deserve; and as seeking without deserving is not to be commended, I put you in mind of good deserts which otherwise might lie hid and never be known.

First, I was in Her Majesty's service at the siege of Leith, Scotland, with the charge of 100 light horsemen, where I did like service as others there having like charge.

I also served Her Majesty against the late rebels in the North, and had charge of 700 of my own tenants and others, and refused the chief of my name and blood, to stand as a true subject, and was at as great charges in service as any of my ability.

I pursued the rebels more than 40 miles, and was the first that brought in any to Her Majesty's lieutenants; I brought in 30, with their feet bound under their horses' bellies.

I could have apprehended the Earls in their flight to Scotland, if my earnest suit to the late Lord Scrope for that liberty had been granted in good time, but it was too long stayed, and afterwards very sorely repented of by him, as he many times said.

For all these services, my chief house was twice broken up and spoiled by the rebels, by procurement of my own kindred of their faction, and part of my lands and towns burnt and destroyed by the Scotch Borderers, their assistants, and I still stand in more danger than any of my countrymen there, if the enemy should prevail.

I was also in Her Majesty's service after the rebellion, with the Earl of Sussex, then lieutenant, with all the power I could make, at the razing of the castles and houses of the Scottish Borders, for resetting of the English rebels.

I have also all my life served for defence of the Border, more to my charge and danger than any other of my country, being the furthest gentleman having any lands, and inhabiting next to the enemy upon that Border.

VOL. XXXII.

For better fortifying and defending true subjects on the Border, I devised and put in execution a fortification there, well liked by all Her Majesty's chief officers in those parts, but stayed for want of contribution; if it had proceeded, it might have been a great defence to true subjects; but some in favour of malefactors, and others for envy towards me, have spoken to the hindrance thereof, and my great pains and charge thereon were without recompense.

I was also one of Her Majesty's commissioners in Scotland to inquire of the murder of the late Lord Russell, where I continued more than ten weeks, for which service some of my fellows were rewarded, but I have not received any recompense.

I was likewise charged as Her Majesty's commissioner, with others, to survey the decays of all her castles and fortresses upon the Borders wherein I had the whole travail for a quarter of a year at my own charge, and have as yet received no recompense.

P.S.—As I return to my own country on Monday next, I desire to have my papers which, with Lord Scrope's letter, I first delivered you, until a warden is appointed, and time better serves for that purpose, as also to know what other service you will command me. Pray peruse this thoroughly, and judge of my deservings. [1½ pages, endorsed by Burghley.]

July 18. 49. Thomas Lord Scrope to Lord Burghley. In yours to my Carlisle. cousin Lowther, you ask how the provision of powder and other munitions which of late years have been sent to this store, under charge of my father, have been expended, as though you had been moved by some unfriends to him and me to call into account my father's doings, and impose a charge thereby upon me. To satisfy you, free my father's doings from suspicion of needless charges or self gain, and lay down an inducement for my own discharge, consider how careful my father has ever been with his own ordinary charges, to disburden Her Majesty's purse of unnecessary expenses; and I assure you that whatever has been expended of this store, was spent in Her Majesty's necessary services, and I trust will be as acceptably taken as it was dutifully meant by my father, who never converted anything thereof to his own private use. For the present, I cannot certify particulars, otherwise than that some portion was delivered to the Scottish King at his last being on this frontier, some to the Lords of Scotland, when Angus and the rest returned out of England, some at Martin's Tower, and other services of these Borders, some to Captain Ellis and other captains, upon their bills, at the time of their service in this place. The several quantities I know not yet, nor what remains were left at the death of my father, as my cousin Lowther immediately afterwards entered into the same, by what warrant I know not, and still keeps the keys, without acquainting me with his doings.

If you wish particular notes of every charge, I shall do my best to collect and send you all that have been made and received of those things; but I rely upon your favourable construction of my father's dealings, and your favour towards me for his sake, and shall entreat a general acquittance of all things delivered into Her Majesty's store to my father's charge in this place, since his acceptance of office, which may be charged upon me by my unfriends in time to come. Sept. 23. 50. Note by Sir Cuthbert Collingwood, H. Anderson, and Robt. Newcastle-upon-Tyne. Wodrington, commissioners for inquiring concerning Recusants, to Sir John Forster, Lord Warden of the Middle Marches. We certify as in our last certificate, with regard to Recusants in Castle Ward, Newcastle, Morpeth Ward, and Tynedale Ward, co. Northumberland, save the following who are no longer Recusants, but attend divine service; John Cutter of Belshaw; Roland Shafto and Ursula his wife, of Stickley; Barbara Lawson of Hartford; and Katherine wife of Geo. Horsley of Horsley, gent. All the rest of the recusants resident within the aforesaid wards have absented themselves, and as the sheriff could not apprehend them upon a former warrant, a new one has been granted. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page.]

Sept. 51. Ralph Bowes to Lord Burghley. I am informed by a friend of a matter wherein you may do me a favour, which is prejudicial to none, and as yet unsought for by any, and within your granting, or at least so as if you grant a lease of it, no other will then seek it. If I happily prevail in this suit, he that has informed me of it is to taste somewhat; I shall most gladly agree, in respect of my good affection towards my mistress, Lady Vere, and my duty towards you for your favour therein, that she have a third part of the benefit thereof, towards supplying part of her extraordinary charges, to whom in the execution of this suit, I vow to be a true servant and just steward, and bring to her such benefits as shall grow due to her, if you shall allow it to be reasonable, and she gives me so much credit; if not, I shall then well like that she appoint some other for herself in that behalf. I forbear setting down the nature of the suit, lest my letter might come to some other's sight, but will attend you when you have read this. [1 page.]

Sept. ? 52. [Ralph Bowes to Lord Burghley.] My nephew Harte has been dangerously sick of this new ague, but is better; nevertheless if he should die, I beseech you to bestow upon me the wardship of his brother, who ever since the death of my sister, has been in my charge, as also a sister of his; he is 18 years of age, somewhat simple, and has been very sickly ever since his mother's death, and I have had much trouble to keep him alive this year, but he is somewhat better. As for the benefit of his wardship and lands, I shall willingly divide it, and deliver a moiety to Mr. Barnard, to be disposed of at your pleasure, and will dispose of the rest and all else as you may think fit. My nephew has no near kindred left on his father's side, but children and aunts, neither has he brother or sister left but those two that remain with me, and a sister married to my Lord Chief Baron's son. I do not make this suit with the hope of my nephew's death, as I shall be most sorry if he dies, not only because I love him dearly, but because he has carried himself so well already in the country that he is beloved of many, and great hopes are had of him. 53. Ralph Gray to Lord Burghley. I advertised you last June of the controversies between Sir Henry Wodrington and myself, for lands in East Chevington, sold by him first to his brother Hector Wodrington, by fine and recovery, 10 years since, and all that time peaceably enjoyed, and afterwards sold by Hector to my brother Henry Gray, by Sir Henry's special consent. Nevertheless, the same lands a year ago being conveyed from my brother to myself, Sir Henry, upon a suggestion first that he had no power to make sale of those lands, and now of late by falsely pretending that he made the estate to his brother Hector upon condition, caused young Henry Wodrington, now after 11 or 12 years' sale, to enter upon my possession, who has done divers outrageous riots upon the same. I indicted him and others that kept the possession against me last assizes at Newcastle, and upon open debating, the justices of assize granted a writ to restore me to the possession, directed to the justices of the peace and the coroners. They repairing thither, guarded with 200 of my own men, as was their desire, were withstood for a long time by William Cardew and others, assembled in one of the chief houses, all sent thither by Sir Henry Wodrington, and very obstinately demeaning themselves against the said justices. After long time spent, and great forbearance used in exhorting, Cardew made special suit to have conference with Henry Wodrington, then at Wodrington, within a mile of the lands in question, for his direction concerning holding or rendering the said possession, and was licensed so to do; upon conference, he was advised to go into the said possession, and to stand to the maintenance of it, which they then kept by force, knowing well that the said justices had authority to restore it to me.

Thereupon Cardew entered into possession, and with his accomplice forcibly maintained the same against the said justices, endangering them with shot out of the house, which they kept by force, till some of my men, at command of the said justices, burst down the doors and walls of the said house, in which action the rioters grievously wounded one of my men, besides strokes to other good subjects, who came as assistants to the justices.

Notwithstanding this, I saved the life of Cardew and his fellows, where they might lawfully have been taken by reason of their resistance, and could hardly do so, one of my men being hurt, and having fallen for dead.

For these causes, and similar abuses offered me by young Hen. Wodrington and his assistants, I have exhibited a bill against them in the Star Chamber; pray favour me therein.

P.S.—I have finished the water wall of Wark Castle, save a little in the basement, and have sufficient stone, lime, sand, and timber for the remaining works of the castle, and daily maintain the workmen and labourers to finish it; but as yet I have only received 200*l.* of the 500*l.*, the valuation price of the work, as certified by two surveys, at my being in London. I pray your furtherance for the remainder. In the estimation of many of good judgment in these parts, the works already done are valued at nearly the whole 500*l.*, and yet for that sum the whole shall be finished, however much it may charge me. 54. John Archbishop of Canterbury to the Masters of Requests. The bearers, Thomas Arnet and his wife, have a cause to be heard before you, which for many years has depended in divers other Courts. 55. The Queen to Lord Burghley. Since the death of Lord Scrope, Warden of the West Borders and Captain of Carlisle Castle, to whom there was paid yearly for the wardenry 424*l.*, and for the captainship 221*l.*, we have committed the present wardenry to Rich. Lowther. We understand that Thomas Lord Scrope has continued in the charge and custody of the castle by itself, and that the charge of the wardenry has been borne by Lowther alone, from the death of Lord Scrope, on 13 June last; and considering that both are to be satisfied for their charges, we will you to direct the Receiver of co. Cumberland, at our audit for the year ending Michaelmas last, to pay to the present Lord Scrope, or to the executors of his father, such sums as were due to Lord Scrope up to the day of his death; and likewise to pay to Rich. Lowther, and to his officers, the sums quarterly due for the wardenry; and to the now Lord Scrope, for his charges in keeping the castle and his under officers, the like sums that should have been paid to his father. As for the charges grown since Michaelmas, when we have determined to whom we shall commit the said office, you shall have further directions. 56. Sir Francis Hastings to the Masters of Requests. Nicholas Shelabere has served a Privy Seal upon two of my neighbours of Stirburne, to appear before you about a nag. I am sorry he has stirred therein, yet as it has come thus far, let it be dealt with by commission here, to the ease of poor men who may well spare their

- Nov. 3. 57. Thomas Hyde [Chancellor] and Ra. Pickhaver [Prebend of Sarum. Salisbury] to Dr. Aubrey and Mr. Herbert, Masters of Requests. The bearer, Steven Tinney, reeve of Sherburne manor, co. Dorset, lent Nicholas Delabere, in May 1591, a nag, which was taken within the manor as a stranger, receiving of him in pawn thereof another nag, until he brought the strayed nag again. Delabere, riding the strayed nag, came to the dean and chapter of Sarum last January, and desired them to bestow the said horse upon him, which we did, and gave him a warrant for it, being utterly ignorant of the custom that the Lord (which we were for the time, by reason of the late vacation of the see of Sarum) should not have the strayed beast, but only the price at which it was valued, and the Reeve should have the beast. Now having this warrant in January, he never delivered the same to this poor man until now after Michaelmas, when he also serves him with a Privy Seal out of the Court of Requests, to appear before you this term. The premises considered, and in the absence of the dean, as we in courtesy gave him the horse, in ignorance of the custom, we beg you will command Delabere to be content with what it was in our power to give, that is, the price of the horse, which this poor man will readily deliver him, whereby you will ease the poor old man of a great trouble, and save us from some obloquy, and give us cause to take more heed to our grants hereafter. There is a suit depending in your Court between the bearer Richard Procter and John Buckman, who has already shifted the matter into three Courts, and so put it off that no hearing has been had, and means to do the same in your Court, either with the help of corrupt witnesses, as he has already done, or some other sinister course. Pray hear the matter, and let it not pass out of Court until it has been determined. [$\frac{1}{2}$ page.]

We confirm our late certificate of our proceedings, by virtue of our commission, against dangerous persons in the wards of Cuckdale, Elendale, Bamborough, Norhamshire, and the [Ferne] islands, save that Margaret wife of Michael Hebborn of Hebborn is reformed, and comes to divine service, and Geo. Collingwood of Broom Park is bound over to answer before the Bishop of Durham. 61. Petition of the bailiffs, burgesses, and commonalty of Scarborough to Sir Robert Cecil, one of the Privy Council. The town is greatly impoverished and decayed by reason of a market created by the late Sir Hen. Gate, and now continued by Edw. Gate, his son and heir, at Seamer, three miles from Scarborough. To suppress it, petitioners exhibited their bill in the Exchequer, which Sir Henry answered, and the cause was referred by the Lord Treasurer to the Earl of Huntingdon, Lord President of the North, who was prevented determining it by the death of Sir Hen. Gate. By continuance of this market, the artificers in the town are ruined, as will appear by articles under the seal of the town, ready to be shown.

The navigation, pier, and the whole force of the town are utterly decaying, notwithstanding that it would be the best harbour for passengers by sea, and a great help to the country round about, if such market was suppressed.

The town yearly pays Her Majesty a fee farm rent of 9*l.* 15*s.* 8*d.*, besides taxes and other benefits accruing to her of great value, but they will no longer be able to do so if the market is continued, as all manner of victuals are continually carried from the town to Seamer. There were formerly three other markets erected near Scarborough, viz., Filey, Sherburn, and Brompton, each farther from the town than this, and less nuisance; yet for maintenance of the town, they were all suppressed in the time of Henry III.

Petitioners hope such market may be abolished, or at least a commission sent to the Earl of Huntingdon, to determine the cause between them and Edw. Gate. [¾ sheet.]

62. Sir John Forster to [Lord Burghley]. No meetings have been kept for a long time, as the opposite warden refuses to make mutual redress for the Burne's bill, and the bill of Titlington, according to the King's command, which was the only cause of the delay of justice; but days of truce were held at Kirkyettam and Kirknewton, on the 3rd and 4th inst., where mutual redress was made, and justice administered on both sides, both for the said two bills, and all others filed according to the treaty of peace and laws of the Marches; and the Laird of Cessford showed himself willing to do justice for the party of Scotland, excepting the Laird of Fernihurst and his friends, who were exempted from his office by the King's commandment, and who likewise promised to make redress for all within his bounds, as also for Liddesdale, as he is appointed deputy keeper of the same, so that the Borders are in very good quietness.

As for the commission to me and others respecting Recusants, &c., what with the sheriff's negligence (as will appear by the enclosed copy of a letter from Mr. Dean and other commissioners of the other division), and the encouragement the papists take, thinking that such commission cannot hurt them in life or living, they daily wax more and more obstinate, and forward in resetting of Jesuits and popish traitors. Information was made to me that certain seminaries were reset at Edlingham and other places; whereupon I sent my men with a commission to search the houses, and lay fire to them, if any resistance was made in a disobedient and rebellious manner, which I presumed to do more than my authority served, for the better accomplishment of Her Majesty's service. My servants searched Edlingham and other places, and found great likelihood of their being there, but there were such secret conveyances and close corners made in walls that, unless they hungered them out, they could do no good; nevertheless I shall use my best endeavours for apprehension of these Jesuits and traitors, who haunt divers places of our country, and especially Edlingham, Estington, Lamendon, and Cartington. I hope it will be no offence to Her Majesty or the Council, if I proceed further than my authority serves, to attach such pestiferous traitors and inciters of the people.

Earl Bothwell's men have obtained the King's pardon, and the Earl himself is in good hope thereof, especially by Her Majesty's means in soliciting the King for him, as he professes himself a firm Protestant, and has the ministers of Scotland on his side, and he is now closely reset in England, and obtains more favour, as he professes to be Her Majesty's friend. Her Majesty's service, according to the Commission against seminary priests, recusants, and disobedient persons, we find not only no appearance of any offender before us, but no return of the last precept directed to the Sheriff; nor himself, nor any minister present, according to their bounden duty,—a kind of dealing strange, and without example in any part of this realm.—If it should pass uncontrolled, it were better the Commission were referred to Council than either purposely or negligently abused, and made utterly void.

We acquaint you with this manner of dealing, and signify that, as we are treated with contempt, we do not purpose to hold any meeting here, but refer the whole proceeding to you, and such as you may call to you; they will yield more obedience to your higher place. We are ashamed to see a course taken so repugnant to Her Majesty's pleasure. [1 page.]

63. Tobie Matthew, Dean of Durham, to Lord Burghley. My oath to Her Majesty, as her sworn servant, has made me presume to send the enclosed to you by the bearer, a man of my own, rather than venture them by post. Since their receipt, the writer would have discovered the whole design to me, but I dared not accept his offer, until it should appear whether the person and his project were fit to be entertained; if you like to confer with Mr. J. Colville, as he desires, you will find him a sufficient and sensible man, well acquainted with his own country, and not ignorant of ours; much used by Sec. Walsingham, right zealous in religion, and unfeignedly devoted to Her Majesty's service. He justifies the Earl of Bothwell, mitigating the deformity of his actions, but the state of Scotland seems to be sore broken already, and is like to grow very dangerous to all the favourers of the good cause there, and perilous to this realm, unless timely seen into, and prevented by some such instrument as dare undertake to do it.

How true these overtures are you can best judge, but they are not only credible, but probable, in the opinion of the best affected. The ministers are wonderfully perplexed, and should be recomforted by some good means. I acknowledge my own imperfections, and indisposition to intermeddle with causes of this quality, and especially with the affairs of Scotland,—a Court and kingdom as full of welters and uncertainties as the moon of changes,—but necessity constrained me. 66. Petition of John [Mey] Bishop of Carlisle, and 11 others, the sheriff and justices of the peace in the West Wardenry of England against Scotland, to Council. Of late, and especially since Michaelmas, there have been so many spoils, robberies, &c., not only by the Scottish Borderers, but with the English also, within this wardenry, that divers gentlemen and others have been invaded in their dwelling houses, and their goods and chattels taken by violence, and carried into Scotland, and the said persons put to their ransoms; and generally most of the gentry and others dwelling within 20 miles above Carlisle are put in fear of their lives, houses, and goods; so that not only they, but the justices of peace and others, are forced to keep their cattle in their houses nightly, and dare not suffer them to feed and depasture upon their grounds; and also to keep a strong watch about their several dwelling houses, besides the ordinary watches heretofore used.

The people of this country have often not only complained to the Warden for redress therein, but have required us, the petitioners, the justices, and sheriffs, to procure them safety, which we are not able to perform; nevertheless we have often repaired to Carlisle, and there conferred with the Warden, and therefore signify the premises to you, for ourselves and our neighbours, who are daily threatened, both by letters and messages, to be robbed and spoiled, and to have their houses burnt, unless they will bestow on the Borderers such money and other things as they require.

It was agreed amongst us and other gentlemen of the country to send up some gentlemen to inform you hereof, but hearing of the Parliament, we have thought meet that those chosen knights of the shire of Cumberland should do it, who of their own knowledge can inform of the particulars, in a great number of spoils and robberies, and show a book wherein most of the same is declared, with the times when they were committed, against whom, and in what sort they were done. Pray take order for reformation of the premises. [1 sheet, parchment, endorsed 20 Feb.]

70. Alex. King, auditor, to Lord Burghley. At the time of the survey of Dacre's lands in 26 Eliz., Her Highness' pleasure was notified to all her tenants of the said lands in Cumberland, that, as they had now become her tenants, they should continue so, and be freed from all exactions, services, and duties to any other person, other than such as by the customs they were bound to do upon the Borders, at command of the Lord Warden; and that using themselves well and orderly, they would find her favour. It was then declared to them how good it would be for them that those lands had come to Her Majesty's hands, so as to be rid of all controversies of late years; and it was to great purpose that this Her Majesty's pleasure was so signified to them, for thereby many who before were addicted to the Dacres,—yea, even to the name of a Dacre,—were brought home to the place where they ought to be and continue.

There is nothing they crave so much as to have officers appointed over them who will defend them from spoil and harrying, which, if granted them, the following benefits are likely to ensue:—1. A singular love and duty towards Her Majesty, for her care over them. 2. A cause to encourage them to perform this service more willingly, whenever they shall be commanded. 3. A means to make them, in a short time, able to provide horse, armour, &c. meet for service, much better than they now have. Having such officers appointed as will see them kept in due obedience, and such as ought to keep able geldings fit for service furnished as they ought, they will soon be able of themselves so to strengthen the Borders as Her Majesty shall not need hereafter to be at any extraordinary charge in those parts.

I presume to set down these things, because of some hard speeches lately given in Burgh Barony and elsewhere, by some of the worse sort of Her Majesty's tenants, that they are now in a worse case than ever, and that Her Majesty makes little better account of them than as of thieves dwelling upon the Borders, and therefore suffers them to be harried and spoiled. If this be true, some course should be taken for their relief, that they may find that it is far better for them to be her tenants than a subject's, lest they should have cause to say, as some have already said, that they lived far more safely when they were Dacre's tenants. Unless the tenants within the baronies of Burgh and Gillesland be preserved from spoil and harrying, they will neither be able to maintain horse and do service upon the Borders, nor to pay their rent. The following officers should be commanded to be resident upon their offices, and charged to perform their duties: Thomas Musgrave, captain of Bewcastle; Thos. Carleton, land serjeant of the barony of Gillesland; John Dalston, marshal steward of Burgh barony; John Synowes, steward of the lordship of the Holme Cultram; and they should be bound in sufficient sureties for their residency, and to keep the tenants in due obedience; to defend them from spoil and theft, and to see that such as are to serve with horses be furnished, and every tenant ready to serve at all times.

As the captain of Berwick has better than 300*l.* a year by Her Majesty's grant and allowances, whereby he is well able to attend his charge, and to keep good geldings, so if the land serjeant for Gillesland and marshal steward for Burgh Barony might be allowed some reasonable fee out of Dacre's lands, they might keep each of them — good geldings. These means would make the Borders so quiet and strong that, without further help, they could defend themselves.

I write thus because Her Majesty's tenants look to me,—being her officer for the said county, and having delivered her pleasure and great favour towards them,—to regard them, and inform you of their distressed estates. Knowing that by their well-doing, Her Majesty will be the better served, loved, and paid her rents, I am the more bold to deliver thus much. [$1\frac{1}{2}$ pages.] Annexing,

March 24. 71. Thomas Lord Scrope to Lord Burghley. Being suddenly amazed at my late being with the [Queen], I could not answer every part of her advice, and so have set down my reply to certain points I omitted. It grieved me that one of my blood had ever lighted into her heavy indignation, but [my] grief was quickly razed by her acceptance of myself. I hope that they which acknowledge her vi[rtues] and have tasted of her grace will endeavour to deface by dutiful be[haviour] the memory of former faults; but for myself, I desire ever to be [cen]sured by my own endeavours, and not by the faults of other men.

The pe[rsons] whom Her Majesty commanded me to use in matters of advice shall be [accep]table, as she has recommended them; [her] service is the scope of all my pains, and no partialities of others shall estrange my love from those that declare their zeal and duty towards her. No man ever undertook a charge with greater desire to deserve her gracious opinion.

I need not use many words in craving your recommendation, because without it, I had [not] had the place which many sued for, but pray help me with such allowance [for my] journey down, the removing of my stuff, and charges of first planting there, as have been granted to other wardens. My chief desire is that, as you were a constant friend to my father in the same place, so you may continue alike to me. [1 page, damaged.]

Doubts having arisen as to whether the assessing and rating of spinners' and weavers' wages be within the meaning of the Statute 5 Eliz., entitled an Act touching divers orders for artificers, labourers, servants of husbandry, and apprentices; Be it enacted that from henceforth, all such shall be within the meaning of the said Act. March. 73. Alex. King, auditor, to Lord Burghley. You directed that I should make a book of the names of Her Majesty's tenants, in cos. Cumberland and Westmoreland, and the rents they paid, that it might appear how many are within the West Marches, to serve with horse for defence of the Borders; but for want of particular surveys of divers manors within my office, and the alteration of tenants where any particular survey is extant, I can neither set down a true note of every tenant's name, nor who they be that are to do service. Letters should be directed to persons accustomed to take the musters of the said tenants,—who best know who are to serve both with horse and nags,—to deliver perfect books as required, by a certain day. Rich. Bell, sometime secretary to the late Lord Scrope, could do it. [$\frac{1}{2}$ page.]

Bolton. 74. Thomas Lord Scrope to Lord Burghley. Wanting provisions, &c. for my household, before I remove to Carlisle, I am forced to remain at Bolton longer than I would, but I shall try to be at my charge a fortnight after Easter. Pray grant a commission to the Bishop of Carlisle, and to the justices and gentlemen there, as is always the case on the death or changing of a Lord Warden, to survey the castle of Carlisle, the houses and buildings, store house, and furniture, now at my entry, so that they may certify you thereon. Hartley. 75. Sir Simon Musgrave to Lord Burghley. Upon my last attendance, I was a suitor for a supply of powder, &c. for Berwick and Newcastle; but as the Queen was going in progress, and you was daily and hourly employed in her affairs, I refrained from prosecuting my suit, until there is great want of powder and other necessaries mentioned in a list enclosed. There are only two lasts of powder in the store houses; most of the other stores are old and unserviceable; what last came from the Tower, was not good, and the powder was deficient in weight. If I may make provision of such kinds as you think good, I will answer of my own goods for the same. [$\frac{3}{8}$ page.] Enclosing,

78. John Bishop of Carlisle to Lord Burghley. In my late letters, I signified that I had in my custody a chest containing evidences and writings of the Dacre lands, found in a search in the house of Denton, a suspected subject ; I have since received letters from the Lord Keeper and Sir Thos. Heneage, to deliver the chest to the Dean of York and Gerard Lowther, for them to select anything that might concern Her Majesty. As only Lowther came to demand the chest, I doubt whether the delivery to one, when commission is given to two,—I being appointed in the first commission, but left out in the second,—might breed me damage, the key still remaining with Denton, and the chest with me, and the things therein pretended to be of great value, and known to be in my custody. Advise me what is best to be done for Her Majesty's service, and the prevention of any trouble to me in time to come. [1 page.] Enclosing,

78. I. Lord Keeper Puckering and Sir Thos. Heneage to the Bishop of Carlisle. Understanding that certain books and writings have lately been found in Denton's house, which may discover persons and causes dangerous to Her Majesty and the State, we have authorised the Dean of York and Gerard Lowther to peruse such books and writings, and select for Her Majesty's service so many as we have directed, which are not imparted to any one. We therefore require you to permit the Dean and Mr. Lowther to privately search and peruse such books and writings, and take into their custody as many as they shall think fit for Her Majesty's service, for which this shall be your warrant. [1 page, copy.]

79. Henry Earl of Huntingdon to Lord Burghley. By yours from Oatlands, it appears that you sent a note to the Exchequer, by Her Majesty's command, of the sums paid to the King of Scots ; and amongst others, there appear two sums of 5,000*l.* and of 6,000*l.* as paid to me, neither of which are mentioned in the note of the Scottish Ambassador, although the receipt of other sums is confessed. Her Majesty wishes me to certify how these two sums were expended.

The first sum is a mistake, as I never received it ; but at the time stated, I received a commission of lieutenantancy from Council, to go to Newcastle, and levy a certain number of horse and foot to be sent to the Borders, the leading whereof was committed to the Lord Chamberlain, whom Her Majesty sent down from Court to Berwick for that purpose. I think those raised were 2,500 foot and 300 or 500 horse, and treasure was sent down for the pay of these soldiers, but I cannot say how much. When Her Majesty commanded the men to be discharged, I received 500*l.* from the Treasurer at Berwick, which he was directed to pay me, and I think the Chamberlain had the like, but until I received authority from Secretary Walsingham and the Treasurer, I did not touch a penny of it, but used what I carried from town with me, and afterwards borrowed in Newcastle when my own was spent.

For the 6,000*l.* said to have been sent to me in August 1588, I remember that Sir Wm. Reed brought 6,000*l.* in gold to Newcastle, and the Council and Secretary Walsingham's letters to me mentioned that sum. Sir Wm. Reed only paid me 5,960*l.*, and stayed 40*l.* for portage; I sent 300*l.* to Mr. Bowes at Berwick, to be paid to the King of Scots, as commanded; 100*l.* to Lord Scrope; and 860*l.* I left at Newcastle with Mr. Anderson, for victuals, &c. provided there by the mayor for Her Majesty's service, in that troublesome and dangerous time, whereof I have a book signed by the mayor and his brethren. For the other 2,000*l.* I am in the mercy of Her Majesty, yet I spent 600*l.* of it in that service, after all my own was consumed. For the 1,400*l.* which remained, I am loath to write the truth; I pray your favour until I may give full satisfaction for my whole debt yet unpaid, and I hope sometime next term to say that to you which you will not dislike. I meant to enter into the matter the last time I was with you, but the time did not well serve. [1 $\frac{3}{4}$ pages.]

80. Henry Earl of Huntingdon to Lord Burghley. I hear from the mayor and others of Newcastle, that Earl Bothwell lately came secretly to that town; and as he may do the like again, they ask whether they should stay him, or let him depart, as they hear he is in displeasure with the King his master. I answered that if such proclamation was made at Carlisle and Northumberland as I was informed, viz., that no man should reset the Earl, upon pain of His Majesty's high displeasure, then I wished the mayor to warn the inhabitants to beware how they did anything contrary to the proclamation. Pray direct what I shall further do, if they or any other should send to me for the like occasion, which I may justly doubt, if the report be true of the Earl being in Northumberland, Tynedale, and Bewcastle, at his pleasure. 83. Henry Earl of Huntingdon to the Council. After my coming into these parts in Feb. last, I had care to perform the charge which Her Majesty gave me, in your presence, when she sat in Council at the Lord Treasurer's house, near the Savoy. For this purpose, after the sitting here in Lent last, I went to Newcastle, whither I required the wardens of all the Marches against Scotland, or their deputies, with sundry of the principal gentlemen of every March, to come to me, which many of them did; and for my better assistance, I took with me Ralph Eure, and others named in the commission which I brought from Her Majesty.

After publication of the commission, I impanelled two juries, one for Northumberland and the other for Cumberland and Westmoreland, as sufficient did not appear to have a jury for every March or county, and therefore joined the two counties in the West Marches together, and the two Marches in the other county; and on my return, I likewise impanelled one for the bishopric of Durham.

What has been effected by these juries I spare as yet to certify, from the imperfections I find, not being fully answerable to the articles given to them in charge. Meantime I send you a brief collection of every certificate made in 26 Eliz., of all or most of those things then and now commanded to be inquired of.

Concerning that which by virtue of the last commission is now certified, I may say that those things which, at the former inquiry in 26 Eliz., were found amiss are in all respects more impaired than amended, so as every part of the Marches, from the East to the West, fronting nearest to Scotland, is in such disorder as, without great care, you will hear of greater spoils, and further within the land than hitherto. I write this much to you, as you heard what Her Majesty said to me. [1 page.] Enclosing,

83. 1. Presentment by a jury, by virtue of a commission of 26 Eliz., of all castles, houses, &c. in Darlington, Chester, Stockton, and Easington wards, bishopric of Durham, which have become decayed or uninhabited since the last presentment, made 27 Hen. VIII., with the names of the offenders, their former and present owners or tenants, and the number of horse and foot that were furnished or maintained by them. Total: castles uninhabited 2, and decayed 1; houses decayed 59, and uninhabited, 12; improved, 3; horsemen decayed, 134; foot, 104. With note that a second presentment, signed by the jury, was sent to the Lord President of York.

draw men from our ships, to save delay, which we could ill spare, as most of the mariners on this coast are gone for the North Sea fishing, and the sickness is so contagious about London, that we dare not take any from the Thames. I have victualled the hoys for a month,—little enough as the winter comes on, and they have to make divers ports, and attend here at their return to fetch home those companies at Dieppe,—and have laid in stores to victual them three days from the islands. I have the Quittance for convoy; it will pass the Isle of Wight to-day, where they will find the crayer attending Lady Leighton, who was to sail on the 20th. The Charles will proceed on this service, if she come to Portsmouth, as I expect, this easterly wind. [1 page.]

86. Anthony Paulet to Lord Burghley. I entreated the bearer, a messenger of the Chamber, to stay here a few days to advertise you how things pass. I have, to the uttermost of my power, sought to effect the transportation of the soldiers, and nothing is wanting but a merry wind. Thanks for your letters, and the warrants for timber and lead. I sent a boat to tell Sir John Norris the Queen's resolution about his companies. I rather wish Poindexter's conversion than his overthrow. I do not think he has had the injustice he informed of; I do not seek his blood, but should be glad if the Queen would pardon him, provided his wilfulness were bridled. I hope to wait on you shortly. 87. Henry Earl of Huntingdon to the Lord Keeper. I send the bearer to Court. I make bold to tell you that I am returned from the North, whither I went for those causes of the Borders with which Her Majesty charged me last February, for my past negligence in them. I began dealing therein last Lent, but could not then bring them to perfection, and if what is now done may be liked, I shall be glad. The books are in hand to be fair written, and I will send you a breviat of them. Meantime I dare say that if Her Majesty, with the advice of my Lords, is not pleased to think of some good order for redress of things amiss, much discontent will arise amongst those that now live in hope to see faults amended, and the countries, especially Northumberland, will soon be wasted. I hope in 18 days to send up all the books; I am compelled to stay for some things that I shall not receive from one of the counties these 10 or 12 days. [1 page.]

88. Thomas Lord Scrope to Lord Burghley. I have received your letters of Her Majesty's pleasure for the stay of my wife, to yield her necessary services to Her Highness, and for my own coming up after Allhallowtide, leaving my office with Sir Robt. Carey. For my wife's attendance still on Her Majesty, the only scope of both my service and desire is that I may administer content to her, whether by my own or my wife's services, assuring you that what degree my wife holds in Her Majesty's good opinion, the like she shall have in my liking. I trust notwithstanding that Her Highness will balance my own estate with her command, and my desires to obey. Pray intimate to her my manifold inconveniences sustained by the separate and so far removed abodes, the one of us from the other, as our separate services require. All which notwithstanding, with freest assent I leave my wife to her attendance on Her Majesty until next spring, and shall do my best till that time in the government of my office here, knowing it will be far from you to advise me to leave the charge thereof with my brother Robt. Carey until next spring, when the troubles of the frontiers may be overpassed; before then I should think myself touched in honour to seem careless for the fullest discharge of my duty, with my best industry and my own presence. I therefore trust Her Majesty will consider the state of all things, and give my wife leave to come down to me the beginning of next summer. Let me hear from you herein soon. [1 page.]

Oct. 16.

89. Tobie Matthew, Dean of Durham, to Lord Burghley. I received your letters, one touching the acceptance of my second in the cause of Earl Bothwell, the other concerning my readiness against seminary priests, &c., which were so favourably written that I know not how to thank you. Mr. Atkinson has made too much of my little in that matter; he dealt very circumspectly in Boast's apprehension, and seems a man of sufficient discretion, courage, and experience to be employed in that kind in such a country, if he be considered as he expects, and as his need requires. Notwithstanding I wish he would rather have only followed the due of his own desert, than have taken upon him to censure so grave, learned, and reverend a man, for slackness in his proceedings. Full little knows the one what the other may be forced sometimes to forbear to do. As you wisely ponder what is the meetest means to amend what is amiss, I will, as of myself, handle the same according to my duty, with all the good means I can.

True it is, for all my Lord Bishop's care and diligence,—which is much more than some would have it seem;—for all my Lord President's travail and charge, which is great and continual;—for all the direction and command of law, which is as much as wisdom and policy can devise;—for all the exhortations and executions thereof from you and Council, which are as effectual and precise as authority in yourselves and sovereignty from Her Highness may prescribe,—yet these remote comers it will be hard to reduce to an equal conformity with other counties and dioceses nearer about the Court, and in the heart of the realm.

Nevertheless, I should hope the brunt were now past, in case this late commission of inquiry against the wives and servants of recusants, when returned to you, be not suppressed, or by respect of persons unevenly handled, but duly executed, yea and—as these times and this place require,—more severely prosecuted, without such intercessions and mediations from above as have heretofore drawn on great inconvenience both to religion and the realm. If my cares and my eyes were not grieved herewith, my pen should not blot the paper at this present, Sed expertus loquor; I could name particulars, but will only say with the Prophet Jeremiah, "Mine eye breaketh, my heart."

As to the schedule of names included in your letter, among other petty mistakings, there is one great error touching Mr. Ewbank's supposed speech with [John] Boast, about July last. I know the man well, and have know him long. He is very honest, learned, sound, and painful in his charge, as well thought of as any of his coat and calling here. He, with his own brother and curate, seven years since, not without danger of life, apprehended Bernard Pattenson, the first seminary priest that ever hand was laid upon hereabout, with Thos. Trollopp, a base-begotten, desperate, and dangerous fellow, who carried in a cloak bag on his horse behind him the priest's massing vestments, books, &c. The priest and his man he carried to York, upon his own charge, where Pattenson broke the castle, and made his escape. Trollopp being indicted here afterwards upon that felony, still remains in Durham Castle, unexecuted, I see not how.

Before or near the time aforesaid, Mr. Ewbank, by my Lord President's appointment, with my privity, had conference once with Boast, in hope to have brought him to his Lordship's hand, the rather as in their youth they had been chamber fellows in Queen's College, Oxford, were countrymen, and had been school fellows before in Westmoreland; but Boast grew jealous of his safety, and they have never met since, until Boast was now taken, where Ewbank was present by my special direction, and behaved so considerately as, without him or his man, Boast percase had not been gotten. I say this to lessen neither the merits of Atkinson nor any other used by my Lord President, but to testify Ewbank's fidelity and aptness for service. If you will try the truth further, I will cause him to wait upon you, to discharge himself of the former imputation, and to say that to you of Boast that all men peradventure cannot charge him with. Annias and Laton for high treason compassed beyond sea. Those at Dorsetshire for having, as Cornelius the priest confessed, been at mass, which is treason, and having received priests, which is felony. 92. Thomas Lord Buckhurst to the Lord Keeper. I understand the title of the parsonage of Runcorn is depending in the Court of Exchequer, between the bearer, John Daniell and Thomas Brookes, who has long enjoyed the parsonage by colour of a void lease, made to him in the name of the dean, with consent of the chapter of Christchurch, Oxford, as may appear to you by a transcript of that lease, under the chapter seal. Such suit, after many rules and dilatory proceedings, is now ready for trial, but Brookes, desirous to protract the cause, and keep Daniell in long suit, seeks an injunction to stay proceedings, upon pretence of equity for his better relief, which, he says, you are induced to grant. As there is a court of equity in the Exchequer, before the Chancellor of that Court, Lord Chief Baron, &c., where he would find his remedy, if any good cause of equity was found, I beg you, as I wish well to Daniell, to grant him your favour. 97. The Queen to the Governors of Guernsey and Jersey. Hearing from Sir John Norris, general of our forces in Brittany, of the great preparation made by the enemy to invade Brittany, and that the French King, for whose defence we have been at great charges to maintain a number of our subjects in Brittany, cannot suddenly assemble forces to make head against them, so that our people would be in danger of overthrow, we wish to revoke them, and yet not so as to seem to abandon the country. We are therefore removing them to Jersey and Guernsey for a time, and have appointed vessels to be imprested in the west country; but these being insufficient, you are to take up as many barks as you can, so as in transporting the soldiers, to make enough to transport 2,000 foot and 200 horse. [I understand certainly there are not 60.] When the shipping arrives from hence, you are to despatch a discreet messenger with our letters to Sir John Norris revoking him and our said troops, give him notice of the shipping you have provided, and ask when and where it is to be sent; and when you know, send off all the vessels under command of the bearer to the place [with some pilots of that island that know the coast].

Meanwhile you must buy victuals at reasonable prices. [The soldiers may be readily victualled at 2d. a day, as I know by late experience, when our soldiers lay there this summer] that the soldiers may live on our pay. If you find that they cannot well be victualled from the common store of the islands, [they may be readily victualled] Council will order victuals to be sent from hence. You are to consult with each other thereon.

You are, with Sir John Norris' advice, to see the soldiers quartered in the islands without trouble to the inhabitants, and keep them in discipline.

We have ordered you 100 tuns of beer and 300 quarters of wheat in case of need [these two kinds are only most necessary], and will supply all other things needful. 1. "A diversity of the faults enquirable upon the frontiers." Decay of divers whole townships lying waste without people, partly by the spoil of the enemy, and partly by fire.

Tenements wherein the tenants were able to serve, some on horseback and some on foot, are now divided into several tenures, either by the landlord, or by the tenants themselves making partition among their children, so as no one tenant has sufficient to maintain the former service.

Some other townships are decayed because the landlords have taken the demesnes into their own hands, and left the rest of the tenants to live as cottagers, without ability to find either horseman or footman; thereby tillage and husbandry are decayed, and the occupiers of the tenements, lacking ground to live upon, spend their lives and breed up their children in thefts and robberies, so that if offered ground to till, they will refuse it.

Divers tenants are overcharged by their landlords with continual carriage for the building of their houses, above the ancient rents and customs, whereby they are not able to continue their usual service by horse or foot.

Divers tenants, by unlawful living, multiply numbers of bastards, whereby the fathers are not able to maintain them, but permit them to live idly upon thefts and stealths, in Scotland or England.

Divers Scotchmen, being no denizens, either get tenements into their hands because they pay dearer than Englishmen, or become servants to the English for small wages, and supply their wants by secret combination with Scots to rob the English dwellings far within the Borders, by reason they be skilful guides.

One great decay of the Borders is that in every wardenry, divers gentlemen of good livelihood, who had their habitations there, and kept good families of horse and foot, removed into the inland country, whereby their houses have become farmholds upon great rents; or what is worse, turned their ground to sheep pastures, &c. There are within the said wardenries, and especially in Northumberland, divers great parishes, whereof many are appropriated to the Bishopric and College of Durham, Carlisle, &c., which are of great value in tithes, and so enhanced as no lands in the wardenries are higher, which are let out to farmers, for great gains made thereby of corn and grain, without keeping any hospitality, or having any to take the cure of the souls of the people.

There are also sundry good benefices, with cure of souls, in possession of divers that keep no residence or hospitality there.

The remedies of these defaults cannot be applied until they are particularly searched out by men charged upon oath to inquire thereof; whether they have grown by the spoil of the Scots; and whether, upon complaints made to the wardens, there has been any redress; and how much of such recompense has been bestowed towards the reparation of such offence, and whether the wardens have not neglected to seek redress.

Inquisition must be made whether the defaults have grown by the landlords, the farmers, or tenants, or by both; where the landlords dwell; what interest the tenants have by leases or copies, and within what time the rents have been raised, and their fines increased; and if the defaults have been in the tenants, whether they can in convenient time reform the disorders. The Act of Parliament prescribes how the same is to be inquired of, and authorises the commissioners to compel reformation at their discretion, by fine, distress, and imprisonment.

Considering these defects are of sundry natures, and of so long time past that the offenders have become unable to reform the faults, and that the length of the three wardenries and the county palatine, —being four whole counties, reaching the whole breadth of England and Scotland,—has more ground than any one or two counties in England, save Yorkshire; and besides that the decays are to be counted in breadth from the frontier 40 miles every way, it is impossible for the three wardens and the Bishop of Durham, or any four persons, to survey these defaults and remedy them, without great care and industry, and therefore the statute has been devised by very good advice, and men of counsel and learning must execute it. [2½ pages.]

2. Henry Earl of Huntingdon to the Council. I sent your letter to the Bishop of Durham, and received answer that he never saw your former one, as to examining Maifield, a Scottish priest, who was to have been sent to him from Berwick, and that he has never heard of the man, nor your former letters. If the intelligence were true, no practice should hinder the better knowledge thereof. [1 page.]

3. Sir Thomas Leighton to Council. On the 12th, Mr. Troughton arrived at Guernsey with five ships, but the other seven were forced into Dartmouth. Troughton brought me the Queen's letter of 11 Sept., and that to Sir John Norris, which I sent off as ordered on the 14th to Pempole, pressing a bark; he had gone on to Lantrigar, whence he wrote to me. I find he wants money for his and the soldiers' debts, and garments for the soldiers. He has not fixed on the fittest place for embarkment. I sent for the best pilots on the island, and they say there is no place so safe for embarkation as Pempole and Brihac.

We have here no ships fit to carry horses; flyboats or hoys are needed; these five ships are only victualled for three weeks longer. The Queen has ordered me to stay all vessels here for this service, but there are only four small ones. I sent her letter to the lieutenant of Jersey, and asked him to let me know what vessels and provisions he could supply.

There are not means to victual soldiers here, for it is the dead time of the year, and last summer was hot and dry, so that the grass was burned, and the soldiers then here ate all the beefs and muttens. Pray appoint victuals for those now coming. We can lodge 1,000 soldiers well.

I have sent into the country to stay all victuals, but have found no store except 60,000 Newland fish, a bark of herrings, and 40 tuns of cider. Let me know soon if Her Majesty's officers will take them, or the merchants will lose their market. The seven ships that went back should be sent again before those here have consumed their victuals.

P.S.—I think Jersey is as destitute of provision as we are, though I have not heard from the lieutenant yet. [1 page.]

4. Sir Thomas Leighton to Lord Burghley. I think the calling of Her Majesty's forces out of Britanny will be quite a discouragement to all there who are well affected to the King of France. The English being withdrawn, they will have to retire to the Spaniard. It would be far easier for the forces there to fortify themselves against the enemy, than for six times the number to re-enter when the Spaniards are masters, as they will be in a few weeks. If the ordnance is to be taken away, vessels with stronger tackling must be sent for it. [1 page.]

I like not your manner of writing to my Lord, for you know I told him I would write myself, and commanded you to stay the warrant; I rather lay it to your charge as a negligence than as a particular unkindness, as I am not apt to fall out with my friends. 6. Sir Thomas Leighton to Lord Burghley. About five days since, Capt. Troughton and I sent another messenger to General Norris, concerning the sending of the ships, but have not as yet received an answer. The victuals of the ships beginning to fail, we should have sent the fleet to Pempole to night, but the bearer, coming from the general in great haste with letters to you, has persuaded us to stay the return of the messenger. I sent off two London ships with garments and provision for the soldiers, and a convoy to waft them, but the wind will not let them depart. I have taken what care I can for feeding those that are to come, but our store will not serve long. Pray have beer, &c. sent.

P.S.—To-day, the 30th, our messenger has returned with Sir John Norris' letters, which I beg you to ponder, especially how troublesome it will be to discharge and recharge the companies. [1 page.] Enelosing,

6. I. Sir John Norris to Sir Thos. Leighton. As soon as Her Majesty's pleasure for transporting of the troops was known, I sent notice to the Marshal at Rennes, and a dispatch to Brest, to which I must have an answer before I can leave the country, and I fear it will be eight or ten days. It will do if the shipping be at Penpole by the 10th of the next month. The spring tides will then be an advantage, and I hope we shall hear of the treasure, or we cannot leave the country without infamy. I have written to Council. All that ever I have is engaged, and we have borrowed of the country gentlemen and merchants 5,000 crowns, and must borrow till our supplies come from England. Even if we left in debt, I doubt whether I should do Her Majesty service to bring so many men to those islands, without a penny to feed them. Let me have your advice.

I have requested that, as this first remove is but a step to carry us away, we may make our shipping for England, as the double shipping of horses especially is troublesome. I fear we shall do you no good, for wherever these troops land, the inhabitants sicken and die extremely.

Capt. Troughton writes that his victuals will not last long; if he wants, pray relieve him. We cannot victual ourselves for want of money, or victuals could be bought reasonably. Tell me whether you are ordered to victual the soldiers. [3 pages.] Pontrieux, 25 Jan. 1594.

Cornwall, given to Henry VIII., 3 June, 1520, by Cardinal Wolsey, Sir John Heron, Baldwin Mallet, and Adam Raleigh, with proviso that if it fell into arrears, the land should be seized for the Crown. It was granted by the Queen, 17 March 1578, to Richard now Sir Richard Bingham for his life, but sold by him, 29 Oct. 1591, to Wm. Rowden of Westminster, and again sold, 28 Feb. 1592, by Rowden to Rich. Geddye, who, 13 May 1592, surrendered the same to the Queen, to obtain a grant for his own life, instead of the life of Sir Rich. Bingham, with right of recovery in case of nonpayment. 16. Henry Earl of Northumberland to Vice-chamberlain Sir Thos. Heneage, at Court. I received the enclosed from my Lieutenant of Tynemouth castle this day, and would have given Her Majesty notice of it myself, but my course of physic prevents. The matter appears to me of small moment, yet not being acquainted with courses of that kind, I would not suffer it to remain unadvertised, lest other constructions might be gathered than I am willing should be. Pray let it be known if necessary; and if not, advertise me according to your best judgment. [1 page.] Enclosing,

16. I. Thos. Power to Henry Earl of Northumberland. I have taken, within your charge of Tynemouth, a Dutchman and a Frenchman, the former being goldsmith and the latter footman to the Queen of Scots, who have stolen and run away from her, with goldsmiths' work, and some neckchains, and bracelets of ragged pearl, &c., as mentioned in the enclosed note, under the goldsmiths' own hand. Lord Bothwell being then in this country, and living at Newcastle, and having intelligence of it out of Scotland, secretly laid in wait for them; and when they came to North Shields, for a passage either to Denmark, France, or Flanders, he seized them, rifled them of the jewels, and sent them away with two of his men, and would have horsed them for Scotland, but the town having notice of his intent, the bailiff sent me word, and would not suffer him to take any men away out of that liberty, without their goodwill. Whereupon I went down and met my Lord by the way, when he dealt with me to have the men delivered to him, as it would be a way to procure him the King's favour again; but I told him I could not avow the delivering of any men out of the realm, without the knowledge of some of the Privy Council, or some other great officer.

I demanded the jewels, but he said he had sent them to Scotland, and would be answerable for them, to which I replied that he had done me the more wrong, and I would advertise it. Since then I learned that he had the jewels with him, and I have got most of them into my hands, but he detains the rest. I want to know the Council's pleasure as to disposing of the jewels and men, who are in the castle at some charge. Lord Bothwell intends going into Scotland in five days. [1 page.]

18. Lionel Maddison, Mayor of Newcastle, to Sir Robt. Cecil. Earl Bothwell was lately in Newcastle, but he did not take jewels from those thieves there that robbed the Scottish Queen, as your letter pretends; the manner of taking those jewels and staying the thieves I have formerly made known to you. According to Her Highness' pleasure, I have inquired who lodged the Earl here, and find that at his last being in this town, he was lodged in the house of John Carr, a common inn; Carr being in prison at York, I have committed his wife to prison till Her Majesty's pleasure is known.

I find that the Earl has heretofore lodged at Wm. Selby's house, but did not lodge there at his last coming. The Earl left on the 14th inst., and I cannot learn that he has lodged in any other houses in this town, save these two. [$\frac{2}{3}$ page.]

19. Sir Robert Carey to Sir Robt. Cecil, at Court. In my last suit to Her Majesty for the West Wardenry, your father and yourself were so much my friends,—although it was my ill-luck to go without it,—that at my last being at Court, I entreated you to stand firm for me for the Middle Marches, when it should fall, which you assured me you would. Sir John Forster, if not dead, is so far past that it is reported he cannot live; there is already a man, Mr. Ralph Gray, waiting for the place, said to be likely to obtain it; but it is impossible for him to get it unless by procurement of your father and yourself, which I am far from believing, as my trust is in you.

True he was my Lord's man, and is well able to live in his country, and is an honest, wise gentleman, but he is unfit for the office. All his friends and kinsfolks are either papists or recusants. Two of his sisters have married notable recusants, Ratcliffe and Collingwood, and his brother Arthur is a recusant. Not a kinsman has he in the whole country but in heart are known to be papists. He is matched with a tribe known to be all recusants, and the worst subjects the Queen has, and some of them have proved traitors; his wife is Ardington's daughter of Yorkshire; Davy Ingleby is her uncle, and was kept in Northumberland by her means many a day unknown, and she has never come to church since he married her.

A principal reason that the Queen would not let my Lord Sheffield have the West Marches was because his wife was a recusant. If he were not such a kind of man, yet how unfit it is for a man of the country to have that office, we have too late an example by Sir John Forster, who, to prefer his own friends, cared not what wrong he did to others. It is your special care in chosing judges of the realm, that their circuit be not where their livings and friends are; much more is it unfit that a man of the country should be a perpetual judge there where none is to control him.

I could allege many other reasons why I think myself fitter for it than he, but I hope I have no such need, and doubt not of your faith and friendship. I have not written to your father; report my letter to him, and you shall find me very ready to acknowledge all good that shall come from you. Let me know by the next post whether I or Mr. Gray shall have your vote. [2 pages.]

June 1. 22. Sir John Forster to Sir Robt. Cecil. I have, as directed, made proclamation throughout my wardenry, prohibiting all men, under pain of punishment, to intermeddle with the resetting or succouring the Earl of Bothwell, so that he is already excluded from my wardenry. Touching the two Scotchmen who stole the Queen of Scots' jewels, and were taken by Earl Bothwell at Newcastle, I went to the Mayor of Newcastle, charging him to keep them in safe custody, and let the jewels be forthcoming. He answers that no such men were taken within the liberties of Newcastle, nor are remaining; nevertheless, I am credibly informed that Mr. Power, captain of Tynemouth, has both the men and jewels in his custody, so that I wait Her Majesty's pleasure therein.

I have advertised Mr. Bowes, Her Majesty's ambassador, of the proclamation about Earl Bothwell, as also that the parties that stole the Queen's jewels have been apprehended, and they and the jewels are forthcoming. The Middle Marches are quiet, but 200 or 300 head of cattle have been lately taken from me, for which I intend getting redress. [1 page, damaged.]

My husband has long been a suitor to your father for the renewal of a lease, now nearly expired, which his late father, Lord Scrope, held of Her Majesty, of certain manors and tenements, parcel of the late Lord Dacre's possessions in Cumberland, for a term of years; but by reason of your father's great affairs, he has not as yet received any direction therein. As the thing he sues for is of no profit or commodity, but only that some of the grounds are very necessary for his provision here at the castle, and that the tenants of the other parts, being so near Carlisle, may be sometimes employed on service to the same, pray further his said suit.

26. Sir John Forster to Lord Burghley. Ralph Gray has informed you of some unkindness offered by me to him, in buying a little farm called Ellicke, which Gray had in lease from John Ellicke. Ellicke and his wife were lately in our country, and offered to sell his inheritance of Ellicke to Mr. Gray and others, and at last came to me, and said that Gray used him hardly in detaining certain arrears of rent due for Ellicke, and would neither buy it himself nor suffer any other to deal therein, and thereupon offered to sell it to me, as adjoining to my own ground. We thereupon covenanted for the same, and I thought Gray would think the same fitter for me than for any other. Now Gray says that I have dealt hardly with him, but if he and I were face to face before you, you would soon perceive whence this grudge proceeds, which I am now forced to declare.

When I searched Gray's house, and Ratcliff's at Cortington, and Thomas Collingwood's at Estington, who married his two sisters, for papistry, according to Her Majesty's commission, I incurred Gray and the others' dislike for accomplishing my duty; but accounted little of it, and would not have been negligent in the execution of Her Majesty's service, even against the nearest friend I have. Gray took a lease of certain tithe lands which I had in possession, and dealt so hardly with me, that divers controversies fell out between us, which were referred to Sir Wm. Reed and three other gentlemen ; but I could neither get the rent of the tithes of Ross and Newstead, which I paid to Her Majesty's receiver, nor any reason at his hands, whereby he forced me to sue him at law for my own. Worst of all, now when it has pleased God to visit me with sickness, which I hope to put off, none of his brethren or folks came to visit me once ; such is their rancour towards me, for suppressing papistry.

Last of all, I understand that he has purchased the tithes of Yerstington, Middleton, Newham, Ulchester, Ross, and Newstead, which I have in lease from Her Majesty for 12 or 14 years to come, whereby he shows his inclination towards me, being my sister's son. Pray have no evil opinion of me for his information, considering whence his grudge arises, and stand my friend as you have hitherto done.

The Middle Marches are quiet ; half the great bill of Tynedale is paid, and order taken for the rest, and all men are at summering, even to the Border bank. [2½ pages.]

The day after, I received a letter from the King of Scots for delivery of the men and things to John Hume, of Huton Hall, deputy warden of the Marches of Scotland, under Lord Hume ; but as a truce was to be kept on that day, between my Lord Deputy Warden of these East Marches and the Warden of the Marches in Scotland, I sent the prisoners, with such things as they had, to Sir John Selby, the Lord Deputy there, the day of truce being kept at the west ford of Norham. He, after filing many bills on both parts, delivered the two prisoners with such things as they had, and I have a bill, under his and Mr. Power's hand for their receipt, a copy of which is enclosed, that you may see the costly and sumptuous jewels that the Queen lost.

32. Sir Robt. Carey to Sir Robt. Cecil. Since coming down, I have been with Sir John Forster, who, contrary to my expectations, spoke to me touching his wardenry, protesting that he would gladly be rid of it, as his age and weakness were such that he was not able to execute the place; and he knows the country is much weakened, and like to grow worse if not better looked to. When I found him in this humour, I told him that, he having served so long in the place, and so well, it were a pity that he should be altogether displaced, and asked him whether he would have an assistant. What with the one's execution, and the other's advice, the country might be brought into a better state. He answered that he would willingly agree, and protested he desired myself before any man living, and would write to the Council, but that he feared the Queen and Council would think that, being grown rich, he desired to live quiet, and not to serve his country.

Do you therefore, with my Lord of Essex and your father, write to him that the Queen, hearing of his weakness and the country's decay, would gladly have disorders redressed, and yet be loath to put him out of the office, and that you think it best that he should write to Council, declaring his weakness, and desire of an assistant; assuring him that the Queen will take it well, and that both she and Council will think the better of him for it. If you send him such a letter, let me hear from you, that I may be with him, and doubt not of good success in my cause. You are the man I wholly depend upon, and you shall ever find me faithful and honest to you, or else let vengeance fall upon me. [$1\frac{1}{2}$ pages.]

35. Thos. Lord Scrope to Lord Burghley. I could not in duty detain the enclosed letters, brought me by Nicholas Curwen, a gentleman loyal both to State and religion, and free from cunning invention. Mr. Sandes, a gentleman likewise well devoted, who happened to be at Curwen's house, witnessed their delivery to him by a Scotchman, whom they brought with them to me. He seems a simple man, and says they were delivered to him by Corson of Dumfries. On coming hither, he was committed, and will remain in ward until I hear from you. The matter in the letters, and manner of delivery of them to Mr. Curwen amazes me, and troubles Curwen, who supposes it a malicious device of some unfriend to him or me. The original letter given to Curwen was directed to Mr. Wade. [1 page.]

36. Petition of the inhabitants of Boston, co. Lincoln, to the Queen. The town, an ancient sea-port, serving the neighbouring country with victuals and merchandise, and profitable in customs, is now decaying; it is the only safe harbour on the Lincolnshire coast, and yet is dangerous, for want of sea marks in Boston Deep, which they are willing to erect and maintain, if allowed an impost on all ships repairing to the said deeps; but as the town is impoverished, by delay of trade and great inundations, this last year, they beg a licence to export 10,000 quarters of grain in six years, paying the usual customs; also to hold lands in mortmain, value 100*l.* yearly, towards the charge of the sea marks; also for freedom from Admiralty jurisdiction, as enjoyed by Yarmouth and Goole. [2 sheets, damaged.]

37. Petition of Ralph Bowes and Thos. Bedingfield to the [Council]. Complain of the infringement of their sole patent for the making of playing cards, by others, who import and sell them secretly; and when they attempt to search for the same, they are so opposed by the officers who should execute the search, that they have lost 1,000*l.*, beside their rent of 1,000 marks. Beg letters to all mayors and officers to assist in the search. [1 sheet.]

Silver, defendants, and went to the George at Basingstoke, Wednesday last. May 3. 43. Sir Francis Godolphin, Thos. Chiverton, Charles Trevanion, General Sessions, Thos. St. Aubin, and Ha. Vyvyan, to John Herbert, Master of Truro, Cornwall. Requests. William Wear, with other inhabitants of Tregony, complain that, being charged by us to restrain divers infected houses within the borough during the infection, they are molested in executing our commands by the widow of Richard Thomas, who of late, upon surmise of great injuries sustained thereby, has disquieted you and the inhabitants. It is only a device of hers to countenance herself in a roguish trade, as appears by her former complaint, of small value and no truth, upon which Wear and others were dismissed, by order of the Court of Requests. Let not like malefactors be animated by her evil example, nor Her Majesty's subjects discomforted in well doing. [1 page.]

May. 44. The Queen to the [Lord Keeper Puckering?]. We have received the petition of the Wardens and Fellows of All Soul's College, Oxford, complaining of great wrong sustained by the delay of a suit long since commenced by them against the late Lord Cromwell, and yet continuing, for the forcible detention of certain lands in Whadborough, co. Leicester, a great parcel of their yearly revenue. They inform us that they have had a verdict in the Court of Common Pleas against Lord Cromwell or his tenants, which was averred in our bench, but no execution has been granted to them; and Lord Cromwell still seeking to prolong the suit, the great charge will impoverish their house. We send their petition, which consists of many other particulars; and though, in a matter otherwise unknown to us, we do not command any process other than the course of our justice may afford, yet as it is the cause of a college which deserves our favour, and as the honour we bear to the princely actions of our progenitors requires at our hands to favour such, we require that they may have in our said Court either a final end, or such favour and expedition as our laws may afford. Guernsey. 47. Sir Thos. Leighton to Sir Robt. Cecil. On my arrival here, I wrote letters of intelligence to your father, but could not send them for the wind. A Guernsey bark from Morlaix says that four Spanish galleys with some smaller vessels were there. They range along the coast of Brittany, and no doubt will come here to spoil. I wish Sir Hen. Palmer were here, with his ship and two pinnaces, to take those vessels, which could land 400 men. Also it is said that the Spaniards do not fortify Crandon, but a place three leagues off. [1 page.]

Guernsey. 48. Sir Thomas Leighton to Lord Burghley. The galleys which were off St. Peter's are now returned to Bluett; they discovered a great fleet of ships off Conquet, and thought it Sir Fras. Drake's, but a galley getting to the windward, and perceiving they were hulks, set upon them, and fought them for a long time, sunk the admiral and vice-admiral, boarded another ship, and blew up 18 Spaniards; upon this the rest of the Flemings tried to run the galley under water, but it retired. The Spaniard lost 120 men in the fight. These galleys meant for the isles, but the wind forced them to the coast of Cornwall. Guernsey. 49. Sir Thomas Leighton to Lord Burghley. Since my arrival here, 28 July, there has been no passage from England, which shows how little we can rely on succour thence. Many years since, Her Majesty granted licence for transporting 700 tuns of beer, for provision of the said castle and isle, or in lieu of every tun, two quarters of malt; but these have not been furnished as, by reason of the late proclamation, the brewers cannot make provision of malt to brew the said complement. I therefore beseech your letters to the justices of the peace in cos. Dorset, Hants, and Wilts, to permit such brewers of Poole as shall be appointed by me to make provision of 1,400 quarters of malt, in those counties only, for furnishing Guernsey. Also that the officers of Guernsey may be authorised to take up 30 tuns of cider in that isle, as the Governor of Jersey does in the other, paying Her Majesty's price, which is 40s. the tun; the same to be only for the castle. With Bristol men he will account on his coming home, and we shall accordingly know then.

He says Block of Taunton must be served with a process, either to pay the 10*l.* a year for which he agreed with you, or leave the place, which if he would do, we might then not only have the 10*l.* paid for Somersetshire, but 10*l.* a year for Dorsetshire, and all of one man; on this point he wished me to speak earnestly with you, for as the case now stands, we lose 20*l.* a year.

My Lord Treasurer and the rest of the Court of Wards gave order that such living as he had to his own use should be accounted for to me, which I find too troublesome, and as Dampart has, with my good liking, passed over the wardship to Mr. Evelyn,—one of the six clerks, who dwells near the ward’s lands, and has a purpose to bestow him in marriage upon one of his own daughters,—I desire, if the Court pleases, that the charge may be removed from me, and committed to Mr. Evelyn, who, I doubt not, will deal very carefully for the child, and I shall be ready to give the ward any help that I may. The commissioners were all present at the assizes, by procurement of Mr. Selby, whom it is sought to dispossess of certain lands at such office, and who desired the commission to sit on the order while he was here, which he cannot well be hereafter without great charge, as he dwells in Kent, and his expenses in coming down to obey the order have been 40*l.* Reginald Heron however, who should have procured the finding of the office, has not shown the order, nor any warrant thereupon out of the Court

66. Dudley Carleton to John Chamberlain at Dr. Gilbert's. Your letter has much revived me. The ague dealt fairly with me; came every third day; held me three hours hot, and the same cold; lasted three fits; left me three weeks ago, and so in fine, proved a right Tertian, leaving me in more perfect health ever since. I am now ready to undertake any journey, were my state of purse as good. This wholly depends on my brother, whom I have always found ready at my needs, so now I make small doubt of being furnished thereby. He will be with you on Friday; entreat him to send me his mind.

I would have come to London this week, but have undertaken an exercise which will cause my stay in Oxford until the last of this month. Salute Mr. Eure's safe return; thank him in my behalf, and promise that he shall always find me at his command.

If you and my brother think I should go before my lady, the fear of sickness will not deter me, yet I am glad I escaped the company of my Lord Ambassador's laundresses, if for no other respects, yet for this, that being at sea, we should have grown so near friends that they would have uttered their stomachs in my bosom. I am ready at the least warning, only my brother must direct my resolutions.

Oxford affords no news, but the scarcity of all other things has bred a general plenty of good wits. Every known dunce preaches learnedly and wittily, and those at whose hands we expect nothing perform great matters. My fat friend, Mr. Harrison, is much abated by the fury of an ague, which handles him so shrewdly that it makes him now and then pray to God, and talk of Heaven.

67. Account addressed to [Lord Burghley as Master of the Court of Wards] of the state of Sir Henry Unton's lands and inheritance, who died without issue, leaving two sisters, Ann, married to Valentine Knightley, who had issue Elizabeth and Anne, and Mary, now a minor, and Cicely married to John Wentworth, who had issue a son named John. The case, as pleaded in the Court of Wards by John Wentworth to the information of Valentine Knightley, states that Sir Henry being seized in fee of certain manors and lands named in cos. Berks and Oxford, conveyed them to Sir Thomas Wroughton, Sir John Harrington, and others, to his own use for life; remainder, except Hatford and Shellingford, to Lady Dorothy his wife, for life, as jointure; remainder to the said trustees, to enable them to pay his debts, until some of the issue male of the said Cicely Wentworth had attained 21, then to such issue and his issue male, with remainder to testator's right heirs.

Hatford and Shellingford manors were left to the feoffees for payment of debts, with remainder to Cicely Wentworth and her heirs male; Lady Unton, yet living, is seized of the other manors and lands, and Wentworth and his wife took letters of administration, and entered into possession of these two manors.

This conveyance Valentine Knightley seeks to impeach, for the benefit of his daughters by his deceased wife, but no office has been found since Sir Henry's death, the evidence not having been brought into the Court of Wards, that all parties might agree upon an office. Sir Henry's debts, said to be 20,000*l.* at least, are partly to be paid by his goods, and partly by his lands; but his goods are only worth 4,000*l.* or 5,000*l.*; his lease of Wadley in Berkshire, worth 500*l.* or 600*l.* a year, is alleged by Knightley to be assured to him, and cannot go towards payment of such debts, but the validity of that assurance, and to what use it was made, is shortly to be determined in Chancery.

Nicholas Payne, Sir Henry Unton's business agent, may know more of the estate. Mr. Churchill says that no livery has been sued of Mr. Wentworth's lands, since Lady Maltravers sued hers after the death of her father, Sir John Wentworth, as both this Mr. Wentworth and his father claimed as purchasers.

Sir Henry died seized of the manors of Aston Rowant, co. Oxford, and Worth, co. Berks, which it is alleged were not assured by him, but descended to the daughters of Valentine Knightley, and to Wentworth's wife, as his heirs. [2 pages, noted by Burghley.]

London. 70. Giovanni Basadonna to Sir Ant. Perez, counsellor of the most Christian King, Paris. I have not heard from you so long, that I thought you had forgotten me. My Lord [Earl of Essex] since his return, has given way to an extraordinary melancholy at his house, Essex house, where you lived, and is so retired that he will neither attend to business, friends, nor servants, nor even go to the rooms of Mr. Bacon; at which that poor gentleman, besides the infirmity of the gout, is much afflicted. I have written already the cause of his retirement, and do not wish to repeat it; I only add that it is hoped that he will shortly be restored to those honours in the Court of which his virtues are worthy. Our King's ambassador came to see him the other day, but my Lord would not meddle in the affair. I think these ambassadors have not power to give security on what they treat.
The Queen is cheerful, and the rest of the Lords well. Essex inquired particularly after you. Lopez also complains of your silence. I want tidings of you to give my Lord. Lopez may be a more convenient instrument, but not more faithful and loving. Mr. Bacon seems low, and would have written but for his gout and many occupations. [2 $\frac{1}{2}$ pages, Italian.]

74. Bill in Chancery between Wm. King, Jas. Sutton, Anth. Brickerstaff, and other copyholders of the manor of Cobham, plaintiffs, and Robert and Francis Gavell, defendants. The plaintiffs claim by prescription that they and their ancestors have been lawfully admitted to their copyhold lands held of the said manor, for the fine of two years' rent to the lords and owners; notwithstanding the defendants, or one of them, being lord of the said manor, now exact certain fines at pleasure.

The plaintiffs used to take at pleasure, without assignment of the lord, the timber growing upon their copyholds, for repairing and new building their tenements, &c.; former lords have never taken such timber, notwithstanding Robert Gavell has lately violated such custom, by carrying away divers trees growing on the copyholds.

When any copyholder demised his or their copyhold, they had licence so to do for a term of years, paying to the lord the fine of 4*d.* per year, but the defendants exact uncertain fines for licence to demise their said copyholds, which if the copyholders refuse to pay, they are denied such right.

The defendants, not confessing any such custom, say that the fines due by surrender or decease of copyholders, are uncertain, and also the fines for licences to demise copyholds, and to be assessed at the pleasure of the lord of the manor, as may appear by the Court rolls; that as to the timber, the copyholders recorded their custom in a Court held upon the manor three years since in this manner; viz., that they claimed timber only for reparations. The defendants know nothing of any custom of felling timber trees; these new found customs have been contrived by King, one of the plaintiffs, a copyholder, by the long suffering of Robt. Gavell, in respect of divers injuries offered him by King, as well in making as in maintaining burrows for conies, and storing them in his copyhold lands, they being prejudicial to the charter warren of the said manor. April 28. 80. Sir Geo. Carew, and four other ordnance officers, to the Ordnance Office. Masters of Requests. A suit depending before you between the bearer, Robert Robinson, and Thos. Aldworth, is to be heard this next term. There is great need of Robinson's service for making saltpetre, to be used by Mr. Evelyn for making gunpowder, which cannot be so conveniently done as in summer, and if he is forced to attend about that suit, his endeavours will be much hindered. We therefore pray that it may be deferred until Michaelmas term. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page.]

April? 81. Brief of the reckonings between Sir Thomas Sherley, plaintiff, and William Beecher, defendant, taken by virtue of a Chancery commission. Sir Thos. so that there remains clear in the plaintiff's hands, 18,198*l.* 6*s.* 1*d.* This sum deducted out of the above remains, leaves a balance due by Beecher of 256,911*l.* 14*s.* 5*d.*, upon which defendant demands allowance of sums disbursed in the Low Countries, for credit, exchange, apparel, and various payments in Brittany and Picardy, leaving a balance in his favour of 1,287*l.* 7*s.* 5*d.*

The Commissioners observe that Sir Thos. Sherley charges Beecher in the above sum of 287,175*l.* 0*s.* 6*d.*, with 3,193*l.* 0*s.* 9*d.* for profit growing by exchange, and chargeable upon Sir Thomas in his great account to Her Majesty ; and Beecher charges Sir Thomas in the sum of 88,722*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.*, with 15,119*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.* for money left in the hands of Sir Thomas, as he pretends, for his gain ; but the Commissioners hold it to have been parcel of Her Majesty's treasure, and taken out of the whole sum charged upon Beecher by Sir Thomas ; and that Beecher and his associates, notwithstanding that they gave this sum to Sir Thomas,—gave their acquittances for the whole sum. And they think that Sir Thomas received this sum of 15,119*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.* by gift or allowance of Beecher, for part of his gain in respect of hazard, and that the same was not kept back, as is pretended by Beecher. Whether it may appertain to Her Majesty or not, the Commissioners leave to the consideration of the Court of Chancery. [1 page.]

May 2. 82. The Queen to the officers of the Exchequer. We therefore require you to pay to the several captains hereunder written, 6*s.* a day, for a month of 28 days beforehand, without account or imprest. With a list of 27 captains. [2 pages, draft.]

85. Sir Anth. Paulet to Sec. Cecil. At my arrival upon my charge, I found all things quiet and orderly, and the people much assured with the presence of the few soldiers sent to this isle from Her Majesty, for the safe keeping of the forts, which lying now raw and imperfect, have the more need to be the better manned. I hope the 50 now here, or the better sort of them, shall not be called away until the places be strengthened, to hasten which, although Her Majesty has not impressed any money this summer for fortifications, I have set forward the works with my own money, choosing rather to want myself, than that her service should want furtherance.

When last with you, I was a suitor for a commission under the great seal, which was granted for some things purporting Her Majesty's service, but not being signed by her on my coming from Court, it has not yet come to my hands.

The bearer, Mr. Carteret, a justice of this isle, will inform you of his suit on behalf of a fatherless child, to have certain lands confirmed by authority, which his predecessors bought of certain commissioners, which being the case of divers other inhabitants of this isle, is as behoveful for their better security as beneficial to Her Majesty, in that every one will give somewhat to so good a purpose.

Our neighbours in Brittany still remain inquiet, especially St. Malo and Dinan, which are grown to such extreme terms one with another, that there is nothing but fire and sword and cruel hostility between them. St. Laurence, lieutenant to the Duke of Merceur, and Governor of Dinan, in an enterprise upon the town of Monfort, lost 500 men, his brother was sore hurt and taken, and he himself escaped with much ado. We hear little out of Spain, and that uncertain, as St. Malo has now no trade. The King has commanded the Ban and Arrière Ban to march towards him out of Normandy.

P.S.—I have entreated my cousin Docly to inform you of a wrong offered to Her Majesty's prerogative touching a ward in this isle, and therefore desire the cause may be removed, and the man sent for. [2¼ pages.]

Aug. 28. Guernsey. 86. Sir Thomas Leighton to Sir Robt. Cecil. I received yours of the 3rd, when oppressed with sorrow by the loss of young St. John, a gentleman I loved most dearly. I guess my wife has told you of it. Thanks for your letter, which was a singular comfort in my affliction, to find that so noble a personage would account of so mean a man as I am.
I send herewith such occurrents as have come to my hands from Brittany. At my departure, Her Majesty granted that my wife should be licensed to come hither next Michaelmas; in consideration of the little comfort I take in this place, pray further my wife's dispatch. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page.]
- Aug. 29. Guernsey. 87. Sir Thos. Leighton to Sec. Cecil. I have been forced to certify the Council of the disloyal dealing of the jurats of this isle, seeking to smother up traitorous speeches uttered by Nicholas Carey. These jurats ought to be punished, so as to learn them to take a greater regard in matters that concern Her Majesty; besides, they have intruded upon the authority of Council, who only are to judge of all cases of treason; yet they have presumed to give a sentence, and to acquit the party accused; the bailiff has been against it, and behaved on this, as on other occasions, like a dutiful servant. I have written to your father concerning Her Majesty's works here, and for the company of soldiers, and have sent the bearer, Michael Leighton, their lieutenant, to solicit you and the rest of my lords, and hope you will hear him. [1 page.]
- Aug. 31. Jersey. 88. Sir Anth. Paulet to Sec. Cecil. Having spent this summer upon my charge here, though with difficulty and impairment of health, yet I hope not unprofitably for Her Majesty's service, and the better ordering of these people, finding my health requires counsel with a physician, which this place does not afford, against my will I beg you to obtain my licence to return to England for some time.
I was forced, by my wife's sickness, to leave her behind when I came over, and as she is not as yet able to take the sea, it increases my desire to pass into England, leaving my uncle to supply my place, who has long executed it well and faithfully, both in my father's and my time. I take no pleasure in often removing, but am forced to seek further remedy for my infirmity, lest it bring me into inability for service. I enclose a letter from a Frenchman, who has been a prisoner in the fleet at Ferrol. Mons. Trembley, having done many good services to the King, his master, was shot dead lately, coming before a strong house. There is talk of a truce in Brittany, but nothing is concluded. There is not a gentleman of worth left in Normandy; all are gone to the King. [$1\frac{1}{2}$ pages.]
- Sept. 6. Guernsey. 89. Sir Thomas Leighton to Sec. Cecil. The wind having held at north since shipping my letters, they could not pass, and the time has brought another note of intelligence, which, although it imparts little more than contained in the other, yet I send as a confirmation. 90. Dudley Carleton to John Chamberlain, at Dr. Gilbert's, St. Peter's Hill. I thought before this my brother would have taken his journey into Hertfordshire, but his businesses have and will detain him until Wednesday week. I send you the epigrams, which I often told you of. The author is Bastard, who has the name of a very good lively wit, but it does not lie this way; for in these epigrams, he botches up his verse with variations, and his conceits so run upon his poverty that his wit is rather to be pitied than commended. 91. The Queen to the Officers of Exchequer. By patent of 16 May, 31 Eliz., we granted to Lord Hunsdon, then our Chamberlain, licence to transport to any foreign parts 20,000 woollen cloths, paying only English customs, viz., 6s. 8d. upon every short cloth. This licence he transferred upon composition to John Robinson, citizen of London, and from him to Robt. Lee, alderman of the said city, Robert How, merchant, Wm. Phillips, and Wm. Sander, a part being reserved to Robinson. He, by virtue thereof, transported in the time limited by the licence, 14,546 long cloths, and 2 yards, which make in short cloths 19,394 cloths and 18 yards; but the rest could not be transported within the time, by reason of other licences granted by us within that time, at the request of some foreign princes; so that there yet remains to be transported 5,453 long cloths and 30 yards, for which they request further time, the time limited by the grant being expired. As they have paid to Lord Hunsdon, upon confidence of our patent, the whole composition agreed upon for 20,000 cloths, our Council, to whom their suit was referred, have found it meet for us to extend our favour to them. We therefore require you to limit, by letters to our officers of the port of London, such further term of years for the transport of the remnant of the cloths as you think meet.

It appearing upon examination that 2,679*l.* 17*s.* 3½*d.* is due to us for arrearages of the customs reserved by our said licence, and the assignees thereof having paid to our use to Thomas Phellippes, late collector of Customs for cloth within the port of London, 742*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.*, which is charged upon his account in our great Pipe Roll, and besought us to be discharged thereof, intending to pay 1,937*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.*, the remainder; we require you to give them discharge for the 742*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.*, and on payment of the larger sum, to release them absolutely. belonged to the late priory of St. John of Jerusalem; annual value, 35*l.* The demesne lands of both manors, and the parsonage were granted to Rich Swift, Frances his wife, and John Crompton, by patent, 26 July 1587; rent 5*l.* 4*s.* 0 $\frac{1}{4}$ d. The quit-rents and royalties, held by a lease granted to John Swift, will terminate in a year, and Rich. Swift, one of the lessees, has lately died. [1 page.]

93. Instructions [by Council] for the Commissioners appointed in Jersey to inquire of such things as the inhabitants petition to be redressed. As the reformation of the things complained of is a matter of moment, carrying an alteration of the ancient laws of the isle, before you enter into your charge, you are to cause notice to be given to the inhabitants of your appointment, and that they are to repair to you, to receive Her Majesty's pleasure. You are to select in every parish a man of discretion to act for the rest, who is to take and report their opinions touching all things requisite for the Commissioners to be informed of. The parties so chosen are to use diligence, that the service be not hindered.

You are to appoint certain days and places for the sitting of the Commission, when the said deputies are to attend, and, after considering things reported by them in the name of their parishes and towns, the Commissioners are to send a certificate thereof to Council.

The articles to be inquired of are:—

1. Whether all lands and revenues of the said isle (four houses only excepted) be, according to the ancient laws and customs of the isle, equally divisible between all the children of the owners?

2. Whether any inhabitant of the isle can, by deed of gift, bargain of sale, legacy, &c. prefer one of his children before the other?

3. Whether any inconvenience grows by such law and custom, and what, and how it may be redressed?

4. Whether the people and Commons of the isle would like it changed?

5. Whether other houses may be conveniently added to the four, to be disposed of in like manner; and if so, what and how much lands and rents may be apportioned to them, to be descendable to the eldest son, and for want of issue male, to the eldest daughter, without partition?

6. Whether for such establishments there may be appointed any fine to Her Majesty, and what sum?

7. Whether for the better provision of armour, powder, &c. for resistance of foreign invasion, with the good liking of the people, any rate may be levied upon every sale of lands and rents made within the isle, and after what rate?

8. Whether the exaction of usury has grown to any excess, and by what means the same may be redressed?

9. Whether the order set down for appeals is duly observed, as meant by Council; to wit, that none should be made out of the said isle for any cause determinable by the laws and customs there, but only from sentences definitive. [3 pages, draft.]

94. Abstract of the petition of the men of Jersey, with the Attorney and Solicitor General's opinion thereon :—

1. All the lands and revenues of the isle are equally divided between the children of the owners, except such as belong to four houses, whereby the houses of the better sort have no continuance, nor almost any credit, the poorer sort are undone, and the service of God and the Prince neglected. Answer.—A commission should be awarded to the lieutenant and some jurats, to consider who of the isle should enjoy this privilege, and which shall be of the better and which of the other; and that the descent for those lands and houses be directed by the four principal houses of that isle; but the tenure to be as it is, and none of those houses to be dismembered; and upon certificate thereof, to have the same reduced to a certainty by patent.

2. That Commissioners may be appointed to establish two houses within the isle, with rent and lands value 100 quarters of wheat of the measure of the isle, descendable to the eldest son, or failing such to the eldest daughter, or to the next heir, without partition. Also six other houses, with grounds and rent value 60 quarters; one house in every parish value 20 quarters; four houses in every parish value 10 quarters; and as many others 5 quarters, as the Commissioners shall think good, at the desire of the inheritors; the party sueing for any such establishment, to pay 8s. a quarter as fine. Answer.—Since it is the suit of the inhabitants, it should be assented to, and some order set down in that behalf, with direction who shall have the receipt thereof, to the use comprised in the petition.

3. That for redress of inconveniences by usury, the statute for usury, with the penalties, may be executed there; the one moiety whereof to be received to Her Majesty's use, and the other to the common stock of the isle. Answer.—It is reasonable to assent to this, being according to the Norman laws, and the usages of the isle.

4. That some penalty be imposed upon such as, contrary to their Lordships' order, appeal out of the isle for any cause determinable by the laws and customs there. Answer.—The party appealing contrary to the order already set down by the Lords to be imprisoned — days by the justices, without bail. [$1\frac{1}{4}$ pages.]

95. Charles Paget to Thos. Barnes. I am sorry our talk in the Capello has no better effect. The Earl of Essex's father was very good to my brother and myself; he may remember the difference between his father and Harcott, wherein I and my brother did him special service, for which he continued thankful to his death. I would be glad to be brought into his good grace; employ yourself to the uttermost to do him pleasure; if you think good, impart our talk in the Capello to him, and though Secretary Cecil does not show himself willing to pleasure me, yet I will not cease to honour and serve him for his virtues. - May 29.
Hackney. 96. Sir Thos. Leighton to Cecil. Enclosed is a note just received by me from Guernsey. [$\frac{1}{2}$ page.]
- June 10. 97. Charles Paget to Barnes. I take great consolation from yours of 22 April and 13 May, but am sorry that I cannot fully show the Queen the honour and love I bear her, so increased by her princely favour that I would spend my life and all I have in her service. I trust to make good by deed what I protest by words; let him who so honourably embraces my cause understand that I shall never be in quiet until I know him, and can acknowledge, by service, so great a benefit as procuring me Her Majesty's favour, which I will declare by writing to him when you advise me. Pray deliver the enclosed to him, and beseech him to peruse and impart it to the Queen, if he thinks good. I shall hear how she likes thereof, and govern myself accordingly.
- The condition of the pardon and enjoying my land is somewhat grievous, both because one naturally desires to live in his native country, and because the world may judge that the Queen has not that sound conceit of me that I desire; nevertheless for the first step, I think myself happy to have obtained so much; if I had not met with so merciful a Princess, I should not have so soon gained my pretences. Therefore, as well for seeing the Queen before I die, as also for establishing of my living, and taking possession thereof, I could wish to have been in England for three months, and then live the rest of my life abroad; yet I leave it to the Queen's good pleasure. Touching the services it is expected I may do, by reason of my acquaintance with the Jesuits, I was never a favourite of theirs, because I have ever disliked the courses of Fathers Parsons and Holt, and have not only told them plainly thereof, but advertised the Cardinals and the Pope of the same, which has made them proceed with great fury against me and some others. Let the Queen be assured that the Jesuits cannot abide to hear of peace, and especially between her and the King of Spain, as it will be the break up of all the plots and practices for England, of which I hope to discover some before long, and to diminish their credit in all parts. They have told the Cardinal that I am altogether too affectionate to the Queen, and seek to disgrace me for travailing so earnestly to effect a peace between the Queen and him; but not prevailing against me, they labour to make a composition with me.
- The Cardinal makes great preparation for the coming of the Infanta. An ambassador arrived out of Denmark complains that Her Majesty does his Master's subjects great wrong, and that he cannot have remedy thereof. He desires the Cardinal's assistance, and offers to procure the King of Scots to join for assailing of the Queen, and besides that, his master will stop the passage against the Queen's subjects and the Hollanders. I suppose his answer will be delayed till it be seen in what sort the Queen will proceed in this peace.

The Duke of Ascot and the Count Arenberg of this country are gone with the Admirante, and Don Louis de Velasco, two Spaniards, to Amiens, as pledges, till the town be delivered into the hands of the King of France. Mons. Richardot and the Audience are gone to take the French King's oath for the performance of peace. Calais, Chastelet, and Capello are to be delivered before 3 July, and Ardres and Dorleance within a month after. Meanwhile they are making up the accounts of the soldiers that mutinied in the two latter towns. Cavaliero Visconte, one of the Cardinal's chamber, was sent to the princes in Germany, to solicit their voices for the Cardinal to be chosen King of the Romans, and have returned with some good hope.

The Cardinal asked me whether the Earl of Essex was inclined to favour the peace, as he had heard otherwise. I answered I thought he was. We hear of some apprehended on suspicion of some design against Her Majesty, which is very much disliked here, as also that the Irish rebels have besieged Dublin.

You do not answer me as to where my nephew [Lord Paget] is, how he does with his suits in law, who has the lease of his living, upon what rent, and what term is to come. Let me know the Queen's resolution, and with the greatest secrecy possible, because Holt and Owen brag that they have intelligence from some that are in credit with the Earl of Essex and Secretary Cecil. Sound if Tresham and Stoners' peace might be made with the Queen. I find them inclined thereto. I am promised a passport for you by the Cardinal, under colour that you desire to come to Antwerp, to buy tapestry and pictures for the Earl of Essex or some other of account; so when you come, you must allege that cause. It will be ready in three or four days, so make all haste to come hither, where I will attend you, and afterwards go to the Spa water for a month. Bring with you some eye glasses and spectacles, a dozen pair of 60 or 55 years' sight, and some gloves. Advertise me when you think to be at Northdam, and your passport shall meet you there. That he be excused coming to church, or his profits will be consumed by the penalty of 20l. a month, and that he be not molested for religion. That he be restored in blood. That the lessee of his lands be compounded with, lest he exact anything of the tenants. That the leases he has bought may be restored.*

He does not presume to capitulate, being an offender, but requests these things. The ease must be put in some counterfeit name. Let Ward be licensed to deal in the causes, as he knows his affairs. The peace with France was proclaimed last Sunday, with great joy and bonfires. [1 page.]

- Nov. 24. 101. Chas. Paget to Barnes. I have advertised you what comfort I received from your letters of 30 September and 29 October, and will say no more till I come, because there be catchpoles that snatch up letters. My affection towards the Queen is suspected, and my enemies take hold thereof to my disadvantage. I wrote you long since what I desired and wished you should do, so that there rests nothing but for you to go forward to the accomplishment of that which I have prayed you to do, and to advertise me thereof in time; if you do not come, let me know how my affairs go forward, as thereupon I shall retire to 24. A tall young fellow came here last September, who seemed acquainted with many Catholics in England; but as he told many true tales, so he told many lies. He said the Earl of Essex sent him over to kill Sir Wm. Stanley, which was taken for a notable lie. He called himself Turner, but I think it was a counterfeit name, for I have heard he was a son of one of the Queen's huntsmen. [$\frac{2}{3}$ page. Copy in the handwriting of T. Phelippes.]

1. Chas. Paget to Thos. Barnes. I expect a letter daily from Barnes, and greatly long for your letters which I will return, and hope you will be at Paris. I have already alleged the reasons that hastened the journey, and discover more daily. I am reported as extremely affectionate to the Queen's proceedings, and a great hinderer of the King of Spain's courses. These be the Jesuit Baldwin and Owen's practices, who have sent the Jesuits into England, to see if they could get anything under my hand, or any other proof, and then I should be charged therewith, but they will come short. Howbeit, since they are at this point, I must think of another place, for my enemies have good credit, and every word they speak brings me in question of disgrace. As you see how things stand, so deal with my debt with the Earl of Essex that it may be ready to be paid; also let him understand that if there should be any exceptions taken to the debt, for any company I shall use at Paris or any favour

I shall accept, I will employ the same to the [credit of] the Earl of Essex. [Abstract by Phelippes, page 5 in a collection of similar abstracts of letters from Paget to Barnes, all of which, with this exception, exist separately, and have been calendared under their respective dates.]

March 10. 2. Wm. Tresham to the Earl of Essex. It may seem strange for one in deep disgrace and exile to seek favour at your hands, yet your singular humanity to some in the same predicament emboldens me to petition you to make me worthy, though unworthy I be, to prevail with the Queen to grant me a pardon, and leave to return to my native country, there to live and serve Her Majesty and the State, as a loyal Catholic subject.

Much might be alleged to lessen my offences, and mitigate her indignation for my treasons and departure from her Court; but it cannot be done without desecrating the deceased, which were unseemly, since they cannot reply; it might be thought that I seek to mask my acts, and defend myself by superfluous pleadings, and anger the mind of my judges. I only aver that I did not leave the Court upon any traitorous felonies; trial had been made of my fidelity, as of gold in the furnace, and I had been sifted like wheat by the Earl of Leicester and others, yet they could not touch my loyalty. Protestations of regret for offences and determination to serve Her Majesty to the end of life if pardon is granted. I willingly relinquish my pension of 40 reals with the King of Spain, with arrears value 500*l.* [$1\frac{1}{2}$ pages. Abstract by Phelippes.]

March 16. 3. [Sec. Cecil] to the Archbishop and Council of York. It has pleased Her Majesty, in these troublesome times of Ireland, to send the Bishop of Limerick to you at York, where he is Dean, to exercise his place for furtherance of her service there, as well in causes of Council as of other commissions. I have special directions to require you and the rest of the Council there to call upon him in your consultations and commissions, and to employ him with others, and yield him such countenance as may be seeming for one of his sort. [$\frac{1}{2}$ page, draft.]

March 26. 4. Sir Thos. Leighton to Sec. Cecil. I enclose advertisements from St. Malo. I trust I shall receive more particularities of Spain by a ship of St. Malo from the Straits, bound for this island. There are five Spanish men-of-war upon the coast of Brittany, three at Roscoe and two at Conquet, only to distress English merchants trading to those parts, and to spy upon these isles, which are but weakly provided to resist any enemy. April 28. 7. [Thos. Phelippes] to Charles Paget, addressed to J. Auguste, Scotchman, Porte St. Michel, Paris. Upon my apprehension of working some notable discovery by you, for the Queen's service and my own comfort, your friend B[arnes] imparting to me confidentially your desire and speech with him in the Capello at Brussels, though others of greater place make light of the overture, I attempted to move the Queen about you, and prevailed so far as I willed him to assure you that your suit would take place, if the substance of your offer were answerable to the show. Therefore I laboured to have one sent to you, especially Barnes, with instructions, but there fell out sundry impediments. Meanwhile, though a man beaten in the affairs of the world, you handled the matter so fondly that it gave offence here, and wrought you in danger in the place where you were. For remedy and prevention thereof, advices and directions were sent you, but they miscarried. You were to blame to publish a private comfort given you touching Her Majesty's conditional inclination as a direct promise, knowing that but for the special hope you gave of some singular service, it had been an unpardonable presumption of me to open my mouth in the matter; as also madness of you to think that even the greatest personage in England dared move Her Majesty for such a grace to be showed to one attainted by the highest Court in the land, of the highest treasons.

You write truly that it should be a most royal and princely, yea divine clemency of Her Majesty to pardon you; but I was ashamed to see how you presumed upon it before it was ripe, and am now afraid as to what will become of it, doubting lest your errors be turned to my disgrace; and as you have addressed yourself to Mr. Edmondes, the Queen's agent, and to Mr. Secretary, a public person, I dare not intermeddle further therein. The truth is it was I who set the matter abroad, intending to have done it by my Lord of Essex, but his Lordship never heard of it. I should have been an instrument between you and Secretary Walsingham, if you had been so happy, by seducing you to your natural obedience, before you fell into the practices of Fr. Throgmorton and that hateful conspiracy of the Queen of Scots, and others, which you must redeem by signal service, otherwise I shall be very sorry

10. Charles Paget to Thos. Phelippes. I little thought to receive such a letter from you, although I am very desirous of the Queen's favour, and told Barnes so, confiding in his using discreet means for obtaining it. I never thought he would have employed you in this matter, because there had been so long silence between us, and besides, my offences being so great, (as you say, which I do not grant), they required one of more credit to blot them out of the Queen's conceit. [I muse much he makes his offences so much lighter than they are.] Thanks for your trouble in my cause. I regret that the pardon and my living, which I understood from B[arnes] had been absolutely granted, must be so with the discovery of some notable matter for the Queen's service, which you say was the ground that moved you to deal with the Queen for me. If I had any such stuff in store, by what is past I am warned to become heedful, and mean not hereafter to take as an excuse for revealing a thing, which ought by the rules of discretion to be secret, that I did not advise you to keep it secret, when the publishing would be dangerous to me, and disappoint the Queen's service. [What the Queen did with his paper I know not. It was an accusation of the Jesuits.]

The substance of my speeches in the Capello was, that if the Queen will grant me a pardon and restore me my livings, I will spend the remainder of my life in her service, my religion excepted. [His speech in the Capello was otherwise, and not so general, whatsoever he says.]

If Her Majesty is well informed of my courses for many years, and my true heart to her and my country; adding thereto her virtuous inclination to pardon, whereby justices resemble God in bestowing pardon on those who repent, I think she may easily grant it me [I know them well enough to be such as merit not grace without very good service] though my offences were as great as you say they are. [He makes his faults over small to have grace.] Princes have often granted such favours to persons who have become more serviceable than those that have never been disgraced.

Being at Paris, I desired Mr. Edmond's furtherance with Her Majesty, and transmission of a letter to Sir R. Cecil. If inconveniences grow thereby, I could not prevent it, having no order from Barnes or you how to govern myself. [He had no inconvenience, but that I told him I could not deal further without commandment.] If there be sincere meaning on all parts, it will rather turn to my good than hurt; whatever errors have been committed proceed from yourselves, but it is I that will feel the smart. [He is too wise in his own conceit.] If you can as easily give satisfaction to those I desire most to satisfy as I can acquit myself, all may go well yet.

Since you embark in my affairs without my privity, for the desire you have to do the Queen service, and your care of my well-doing, end what you have so well begun, and advise me what is fit to do. [2 pages. The passages in brackets are marginal notes by Phelippes.]

12. Chas. Paget to Mr. Barnes. I think that strange what the passenger writes touching the proceedings with the Queen, and that my pardon, of which he made so full an account as granted, should now be doubtful. The speeches in the Capello are not well understood or reported; the errors grew from him in divulging that he wrote to the Earl of Essex that my pardon was granted, and so it was known to my enemies. I thought I had to deal with one who would have as much care of my honour, safety, and profit as myself; if I had not foreseen the inconveniences that have since happened, I might have been entrapped. Mr. Edmond's being the Queen's agent, it might have been thought indiscreet if I had not consulted him in the matter of soliciting her for a pardon. I said nothing more to him than I did in the Capello, and that was, that I most humbly craved Her Majesty's pardon and the enjoying of my living, for which I promised her faithful service for the remainder of my life, my conscience in religion being not interested.

I am taught by the divulging of what was sent to the Earl of Essex, to the hinderance of my conceits for Her Majesty's service, not to enter into particulars unless assured of my grace and living, when I shall deal more freely to acknowledge Her Majesty's divine favour. What I sent to the Earl of Essex, if well noted, had no other meaning. [1 page, abstract by Phelippes.]

14. Wm. Tresham to Barnes. Being advertised of an inhuman plot of my adversaries to entrap me by an ambuscade about St. Omer, I changed my voyage for Calais, and went for Paris. Your letters say that I have long borne arms against the State; this is an error. I have never done this, nor anything to endanger Her Majesty's person; but during my long exile, all my actions and speeches have manifested my affection to my country. I have endured mighty disgraces in defending Her Majesty against the perilous practices and malignant tongues of the unnaturals of the nation. If I would have altered these courses, I should not have wanted dignity in the Court of Spain; but the demanding my passport was taken so ill that I could not recover the tenth of what was due to me unless I would continue in that service; my duty thus commanded me to do so; yet my former zeal never changed; in proof of which, my adversaries, to disgrace me, ever pretended that I was a traverser of the King of Spain's designs for gaining our country, opposed to all the plots of Cardinal Allen and Father Parsons, and an enemy to the Jesuits.

These are the words of the discourse presented against me and other my honourable friends in Spain, sent to Rome, and to the Archduke Albert. Touching compensation, I would do all that in me lies, if I neither solicited nor expected pardon, to advance all loyal designs for the weal of my country, and impugn the contrary, in which none is more ready than myself, as shall appear when Her Majesty employs me. I wish the turbulent Jesuits, the great broilers in matters of State, had no credit here or elsewhere. If their sinister actions were truly deciphered, they would lose all credit in this State, and their plots in other Courts would be weakened or neglected.

If my travelling cordially to ease the State from troubles might compensate my former relinquishments, I would sift my memory and wishes to effect some singular service for the well-being of the whole realm, as for the consolation of the Catholics of our nation, aggrieved with inhuman drifts. You shall receive letters for Sir Anthony Standen, with the copy of my letter long since written to 15. J. Carteret to Sec. Cecil. On 16 July last, the Council wrote to Geo. Paulet, bailiff, and other justices of Jersey, to surcease proceedings in the cause between John Dumaresq and me, upon information given by my adversary that I proceeded to have the cause determined contrary to your former letters to Sir Anth. Paulet, wherein he tries to render me odious. I know of no such letter until the cause was determined, by virtue of your former letters to the bailiff and others, who dealt with all indifferency, and gave their judgments after due examination of my proofs; and the sureties of my adverse party, perceiving the matter so clear on my side, willingly became bound to me, before the justice, for the payment of my charges.

Nevertheless Dumaresq,—knowing the law to be against him, thinking to stay other matters depending between us, and fearing that his doings should be examined before you,—trusts wholly his own kinsmen, who are bent against me, and therefore have chosen in my absence, to assist Sir Anth. Paulet in commission, Amias De Carteret, his own brother-in-law, who has hitherto sought my undoing, so that he is at my suit bound to Her Majesty's peace, and Giles and Hugh Lemprière, near of kin to Dumaresq, and his councillors in this cause, so that they would be both judges and parties against me. As my adverse party is of great authority in the isle, and as they who have dealt for me in this cause are daily injured and threatened, I crave that the controversy may be heard before you, at the Council Table or the Star Chamber. Nov. ? 18. Lady Penelope Rich. to the Queen. I early hoped this morning to have had my eyes blessed with your beauty, but seeing the same vanish to a cloud, and meeting with spirits that did presage by the wheels of your chariot some thunder in the air, I must express my fears to that divine oracle from whom I received a doubtful answer, unto whose power I must again sacrifice the tears and prayers of the afflicted, that must despair in time, if it be too soon to importune heaven when we feel the miseries of hell, or that words directed to your wisdom should out of season be delivered for my unfortunate brother, that all men have liberty to defame us.

If his offences were capital, is he so base a creature that his love and service to you and the State deserved no absolution, after so hard punishments, or so much as to answer in your presence, who would vouchsafe more justice than partial judges, or enemies combined to build his ruin, and glut themselves with revenge, and rise by his overthrow? Unless you check them, the last course will be his last breath, since their evil instruments have sufficient poison in their hearts to infect the service; and when they are in their full strength, they will, like the giants, make war against heaven.

But Your Majesty giving hope is all the comfort I have; which if you hasten not before he take too full a surfeit of disgrace, they will say the spots they have cast upon him are too foul to be washed away, and so his blemished reputation must for ever disable him from serving again his sacred Goddess, whose rare excellencies and perfections should never suffer those fair eyes to turn so far from compassion; but at last (if he may not live at the feet of his admired mistress), yet he may sit down to a private life without imputation of infamy, that their posterities may not repent their fathers were born to so hard destinies, two of them ("viz., Southampton and Essex," marginal note), perishing by their employments in their own country, where they would have done you service to the shedding of their best and last blood, if they had not been wounded behind to death, by the faction that care not on whose necks they unjustly build the wall of their own fortunes; which I fear will grow more dangerous high than it yet discovered, if God does not hinder the work, (as the Tower of Babel), and confound their tongues that understand one another too well.

Lastly, since mercy cannot be far from such beauty, I most humbly beseech you to make it your own work, and not to suffer those to take advantage that lie in ambush, thinking as soon as they discover a relenting, to take the honour upon them as the means of our salvation; not out of charity, but pride, that all must be attributed to them, and so your clemency abused by forcing us to go through purgatory to heaven. Let your power be no more eclipsed than your beauty, and imitate the highest in not destroying those that trust only in your mercy. 19. Minute of proceedings before the Privy Council. This day the Earl of Essex was called before the Lords, and such other earls, barons, and judges of the realm as Her Majesty had appointed Commissioners to hear and determine that cause, at York House; and was charged with divers contempts in his late government in Ireland, and with four more principal than the rest; 1. Making and continuing the Earl of Southampton general of the horse, contrary to Her Majesty's express command; 2. Making so great a number of knights, being commanded to make none but upon very special desert, or of very good ability or living to support that dignity; 3. Contrary to the resolutions taken in Council here,—his Lordship being present and persuading the same, and Her Majesty precisely commanding it,—he left off his journey of the North, and undertook that of Munster, whereby Her Majesty's army was weakened and consumed; 4. Contrary to her express command under her sign manual, he came to England.

In regard of these manifest breaches of command, he was censured by the commissioners to forbear to do anything as a Privy Councillor, Earl Marshal, or Master of Ordnance, and to return to the place whence he came, under such restraint as before, until Her Majesty's pleasure should be further known. 20. Declaration by Greenloe, a priest. Because the Earl of Essex viewed divers havens, and preferred Wallazey lake for a fleet to lie in, there was much talk about it; and because the Lord of Chester preached that this war was great, but the greatest was to come, and he feared near at hand, it was judged that he knew somewhat of war, and what way it should come. Because the Earl sent letters to the Lord of Chester, Chamberlain Warburton, Sir Richard Molineux, Sir Rich Houghton, Mr. Standish, Mr. Boulde and others, to be ready against his coming within a fortnight, we thought if the bishops prophesied, wars drew near. The letter which Sir Thos. Gerard wrote to Sir Richard Molineux no little increased the suspicion; he bade him not to stir until he heard more from him, and then to send Tom Gerard to him. Sir Rich Houghton that year provided 2,000 or 3,000 muskets and calivers, and bade them be ready, under pretence of a search, about the time of these letters and bruits of Her Majesty's death.

Considering all these, we conjecture that by the sign given is meant his prosperous and favourable return. Yet Sir Rich. Molineux, was not to stir until he heard more from Sir Thos. Gerard; ergo when he heard, then he should raise their power; Mr. Boulde, being a dependent of the Earl, and known to have more skill than any here named, I gave him the name as chief agent in the field.

I have before spoken of Sir Thos. Gerard's letter; and if to know of wars to come, and letters of readiness received implicate some secret promise or consent, ergo we say so of the Lord of Chester and Chamberlain, which two can command the city; because the dean's man reported that what the Lord of Chester would have Sir Richard to do, he could get him to do. The dean's unusual conferences with Sir Richard, his riding to Chester, and furnishing himself with new muskets, caused us, when we heard thereof, to judge his spoon to be in that pie.

The aspiring mind of the Earl, with the applause of his cavaliers remembered, what can we conjecture but that his prosperous return would have pricked at the highest mark? Now, alas, our case is so pitiful that if any man tell us recusants anything which afterwards he should be called to account for, we know rather than he would suffer check, discredit, or trouble, he would perjure himself; and if examination should come through a prisoner's confession, they would cry out upon him, as a breaker of faith or disturber of his country, and would neither be found nor avouch the same. Therefore what I lay down cannot be proved, unless we had as free liberty, law, and favour as our adversaries have against us; viz., that Mr. William Bretter, or his disciples, have said that if Her Majesty should grant any toleration to the papists, that she was not worthy to be Queen, and before that should be, they would give bobs, or bobs should be given, which speech of toleration was then greatly in use. Also that the Earl of Essex was the worthiest to be King, and that as the papists look for a change, there would be a change by Michaelmas day, as near as it was, but little to their good. I have been acquainted with Mr. Middleton for about a year, but only saw him twice before this accident, and Mr. Spencer twice or thrice. [1 $\frac{3}{4}$ pages.]

23. Answers to the inconveniences objected against the patent for transportation of cloths unwrought:—

1. It will not decay the art of clothworking in this land, for the following reasons: 1st. No cloth is thereby forbidden to be wrought. 2ndly. It does not license any cloths to be transported unwrought, but those that were forbidden by the statutes of 27 & 33 Hen. VIII. and 8 Eliz., viz., coloured cloths above the price of 3*l.*, and white cloths above 4*l.*; and yet not all those, for it excepts Kentish and Suffolk cloths. 3rdly. Notwithstanding this patent, the clothworkers of this land have the working of all the cloths worn and retailed here; of all made in Kent and Suffolk; and of all usually transported to Muscovy, Denmark, Poland, Barbary, Turkey, Persia, France, Spain, Scotland, and Italy; and if their workmen did not make our cloths usually transported to Germany, Friezland, and the Low Countries less vendible there than when unwrought, they might work all the cloth to be transported, and the merchant would transport no cloth unwrought. 4thly. If the clothworkers' confession, in the late controversy between them and the Merchant Adventurers, be true, they have not usually dressed for Germany, Friezland, and the Low Countries above 500 cloths by the year, and to lose these were no decay to clothworking. 5thly. That sayes, sailing cloths, and others of small value, of which sort are the cloths to be transported under this licence into Germany, Friezland, and the Low Countries, have been tolerated to be carried out, neither rowed nor shorn, as sundry statutes of Hen. VII. and Hen. VIII. show, and manifest the reason; viz., that if this sort of cloths should not pass undressed, it would work to the King an abatement of customs, and to the merchant a loss of 10s. or 12s. a cloth, in the sale beyond seas. Whatever loss in customs or sale happened by the working of this sort of cloths in 5 or 27 Henry VIII., if the same should now be wrought, it would prove thrice as great, both to the Queen and the merchant.

1600.

2. It will not overthrow the art of dyeing, as no cloth is thereby forbidden to be dyed; and the art of dyeing consisting not only in the dyeing of cloths, but also of other commodities, cannot be overthrown, though no cloths vendible in Germany, Friezland, or the Low Countries should be dyed in this realm; neither will the patent hinder the dyer, for that he shall not only continue the dyeing of all the coloured cloths retailed within this realm, and those that are carried to Scotland, France, Italy, Spain, Muscovy, Denmark, Poland, Barbary, Turkey, and Persia; but also those plunkets, azures, and blues carried into Germany, Friezland, and the Low Countries. If he dye truly, and with perfect colours, he may dye as much as he has used to dye, for that which shall pass by this licence is a sort of cloth that never used to be dressed or dyed in this land, nor would be vendible if it were.

3. This licence is no monopoly, for a monopoly is when one kind of merchandise is wholly brought to the hands of one man, and none may get it but at his hands; and this licence, being but a liberty to pass some of those cloths undressed which were before prohibited, cannot savour of a monopoly, for it cannot draw one kind of cloth into the hands of the licensed, much less all cloths; nor can it pass all the unwrought cloths under this patent, for that the Merchant Adventurers were licensed in 5 Eliz. to pass 30,000 cloths yearly unwrought, and there are yet to pass, upon the Lord Admiral's licence, 30,000 cloths. Also all white, at 4*l.* the piece and under, and all plain at 3*l.* and under, may pass without any licence undressed, and all cloths made in Kent and Suffolk are excepted out of this licence.

4. This patent is not of the nature of a subsidy or tribute, but merely a privilege; for a subsidy or tribute is compulsory, but no merchant is compelled by this patent to carry a cloth over the seas undressed against his will, but has liberty to carry any cloths undressed if he will, notwithstanding the statutes prohibiting the same; and so this patent is but a privilege to him that will use it, no man being thereto compelled; and to pay for such licence is no taxation, but to yield quid per quo; 7*s.* for liberty to do a thing otherwise unlawful. And so to do is no new matter, for the like has long been practised among the Merchant Adventurers themselves, and other persons having like licences, as the Lord Admiral, Secretary Walsingham, Lord Hunsdon, Lord Howard, the Earl of Huntingdon, Sir Walter Raleigh, Henry Nevill, Matthew Luliys, and others. And although all cloths should pass over unwrought, as they never shall, yet by reason of the other licences before named, there is no cause that all merchants, and especially the Merchant Adventurers should be privileged under this patent only, or give up their trade.

VOL. XXXIV.

5. This patent can make no breach of liberty to the Merchant Adventurers, for though it licences all persons to transport cloths unwrought, to all places without exception, yet such licence is only of such cloths as the Merchant Adventurers cannot transport but by special licence. Neither is this licence more hurtful to their liberties than the others before mentioned, and they were the persuaders of some of the said patentees to sue for their licences, and bought them when they were obtained; and they may as conveniently trade under this licence as under those.

6. Under the general words of all manner of cloths, no Irish rugs, friezes, kersies, nor any sort of drapery other than broad cloths can be transported, and those stuffs are not forbidden by law to be transported undressed, and therefore need no licence.

7. This patent shall not cause the rates of the former licence to fall, as the 30,000 cloths are divided among the trading brethren of the company without price, and the Lord Admiral's licence, being in the company's hands, is certainly rated, and therefore cannot fall.

8. The making of Kentish and Suffolk cloths cannot be hindered by this patent, for most of the cloths that have vent by this patent are Western white cloths, and experience has long taught us that Kentish and Suffolk cloths, being dyed in the wool and wrought in this land, have always, and are like to continue in as great request in the place where they are vented as the licensed cloths are in the place of their utterance.

With note that the title of this paper is "Objections against the patent for transportation of cloths, with their several answers." [4½ pages, draft, much corrected.] Annexing,

[Jan. 17.]

24. Reasons that it shall not be of any benefit that the Merchant Adventurers should be licensed to transport white woollen cloths, of what price soever, unrowed, unbarbed, and unshorn:—

1. They offer but 1,500*l.* a year for licence to transport whites and blues, Kent and Suffolk cloth excepted, and for other new privileges, while a private man offers 2,000*l.* for licence to transport white only.

2. If they have it, the Queen would be deceived of her customs, but if in a private man's hands, it would be a means to control falsehood in the customs.

3. In private hands the value will appear, as it did in that of overlenghts of cloth to Sir Walter Raleigh, but not in the company's hands.

4. The company would then beat down the price of cloth, and raise that of foreign commodities, and hinder navigation, if they settle at Middleborough.

5. When they had only licence to transport 30,000 cloths yearly, and fewer privileges, they beat down prices so low that divers makers ceased their trade.

6. Thus they brought down the price of wools, and had brought things worse still had not some merchants, contrary to their ordinances, shipped some coarse cloths to Germany. [2 $\frac{1}{4}$ pages, draft. See Calendar, Dom. Eliz. 1600, pp. 383, 384.]

30. [John Petit] to Peter Halyns, alias Thos. Phelippes, London. You use such silence with me as I have small courage to write, doubting miscarriage and misconstruing of my letters. You cannot with reason find fault that I am over cut in my discourse, seeing I send you first a little book of the combat between the Flemings and the French, and a copy of a letter written by Father Parsons to the Earl of Angus in Scotland, by which you may perceive that the Scots still ferret to catch somewhat; also a letter my friend sent me from Brussels, of sundry matters. That point of Father Creighton's being at Rome, and that Doctor with him, I know to be true, and that the Pope hearkens more to that matter than heretofore. Some say the French King meddles in it; I do not believe it, for Kings grow fat when their neighbours wax lean. I hear that the French are troubled for being beaten by the Flemings, and more challenges have been sent to Capt. Grobendonck, Governor of Bois-le-duc, by sundry of the French, but they will not permit any more such combats.

The States' camp lies still about the fort in Bomel isle, where they find more resistance than was looked for, and have lost some men of mark. Don Louis de Velasco has assembled forces to succour it, which he will find difficult, the waters are so high. It is said that they within will hold out for two months, and so the States will gain little by the bargain. One of my acquaintance there that is a merchant told me that one of Holland had bought, in this town Aix la Chapelle, and Cologne, a great store of armour, arquebuses, and muskets for Scotland.

Certain merchants of this town that came from Holland report that the Hollanders have made a new secret league with Her Majesty, who promises not to abandon them, although she makes peace with Spain and the Archduke, but succour them under hand, as she did before Spain and England broke out in open hostility; by which secret promises she stays the Hollanders from yielding themselves to the protection of the French, and so if peace be, it is like to be a patched thing. These subtle services make the French laugh in his sleeve, and grow great more than is convenient for England, with which country France will never have true friendship. [2 $\frac{2}{3}$ pages.]

32. ——— to ———. I hold Beauchamp as unfit to be a king as you do, but there is somewhat in it which time will more discover. Meanwhile take this I write as matter of guess, not of intelligence. The beginning of the Queen's time, there was much ado about a book written by Hales, in favour of the house of Suffolk; Bacon, Lord Keeper, was in trouble and disgrace for it a whole year, by Leicester's means, that could no way induce the countenancing of that house, which had such a cause of hatred to his. But the late Lord Burghley, secretary, rescued his brother-in-law out of the briars, having his hand in the matter, though not apparently, as well as he, as the pleaders for the Queen of Scots' title insinuated by their discourses, giving the cause for that they had, by their marriage, incorporated themselves into that house. You know what measure the Queen of Scots had at the Queen's hands during Burghley's reign, as we may term it, though in the latter time of his trouble, the hatred thereof was derived upon Walsingham, and Burghley had made his way with her; both the beginning came from his head, and his hand gave the greatest stroke for her end.

It were absurd to think that a man of such huge possessions and authority, which he sought to make hereditary, and of that subtlety and experience, seeing the Queen old, and the question of succession every day rudely sounded in their ears, should not consider of that point; that the old fox had not before his eyes the triple deadly feud of a son, a King, and a Scot; that he, delivering his young cub [Sir R. Cecil] lessons for maintaining the greatness he left him, set him down his counsel touching this point. They probably resolved never, if possible, to be at the King of Scots' mercy.

It is true both father and son drew the King from depending of any other saint in this Court but themselves, but they served him to little purpose. Either they would not or durst not do what was required, but shifted things off, and you know the old saying, "Know me not now, and I will not know you when I arrive to my kingdom." They should have foreseen it; certain it is the Scotch King has fore spoken it. Now where should they find a tree to shade themselves under in England? having as little cause to seek a refuge in the other foreign title, which threatened too sharp a reformation for their honour or safety.

The Secretary has found himself grieved with the imputation the libellers put upon him of being an Infantist.* Touching Arabella, I will say more anon; but for that concerns the present,—besides that Shrewsbury, her great kinsman, till of late was wholly Essex's, and had a deadly feud with the Stanhopes, which lasts yet;—no marriage that the Cecilians could build on presented itself. And she being born on this side the water of Tweed only,—the Scottish King being otherwise in every degree jure et dignitate potior,—Arabella, otherwise in descent Scottish, were too nice a point to stand on. They have incorporated themselves anew with the house of Derby, but the right of that branch must be maintained with those quirks of law which cannot carry the people, and is besides in a female, fit enough to make a Queen Jane of, but has not yet been thought of for such purpose I dare say on this side.

It rests therefore, passing over the other titles, that they had most reason to make account of that branch to which, before it was engrafted in the house of Suffolk, they were so much beholden, and which since they have made so much beholden to them. This mutual obligation; the inclination of our country to keep out strangers, and particularly an old beggarly enemy, the Scot, in whose mother's blood the whole State seemeth to have washed their hands; the fair colour given by some former proceedings in favour of the second sister, since the time of King Henry VIII., ratified by his will; the advantage the Queen's disposition to suppress all titles afforded men in their place to advance any title where time served; the opportunity time might minister to prepare for it, prevailing upon the Queen, as she increased in years and diminished in sense, all these might be great motives.

If the Scotch King should happen to go to the other world, what an impediment were there removed, and advantage given to this title, during the minority of a child, and garboils ensuing in that mutinous country. You say he has been fair for it more than once; you know where the suspicion has alighted. All the world takes notice of the occasions taken to lay blocks in his way.

The matter of Valentine Thomas, Ashfield, Sir W. Eure, and others, imprisoned only for being in Scotland, argue no good meaning towards him.

On the other side, as at the beginning, old Burghley served this house's turn, to beat off the storm Leicester's malice raised against it for the marriage, so since their good will to it has been discovered. Beale's negotiation in Germany, about the validity thereof, is winked at. When upon Dr. Aubrey's death, the continuance of the appeal touching the marriage came to light, how soon was Stanhope, special actor therein, released! and, considering the course of our State, how soon the Earl of Hertford discharged, and how easily and privately censured and fined, as he assessed himself! When Beauchamp likewise was to have been transported, how easily was the Queen persuaded to confine him only in the midst of his own kindred! What cause there is of a concurrence of Sir John Stanhope's favour to that blood, mingled by marriage with his own, whose credit with the Queen and inwardness with the Secretary all men know; also of the Admiral's love to the house, though his sister, Hertford's wife, be dead. There is likelihood of Raleigh's concurrence—seeing Essex leans to the Scot—having seated himself in that part of the realm, who is the very Achitophel of all the plots of this age.

You will say this conjecture is not slight of itself, but when there seemed to be some reason of the concurrence of a Catholic party, I so acquainted you with it as I do now with all this, that seeing it is a course in your judgment not to be embraced for the good of the Catholic cause, you may have an eye to it. But for the point, he wants those parts you would require in him; yet Essex being suppressed, which is not unlikely, the party, though his alliance be not with the nobility, will be greater than you think for, of noblemen and gentlemen of good worth, drawn in by the Secretary, the Admiral, and others, if their credit continue, so as he may have the start of all other competitors when the Queen dies, which will be a great advantage—before men can or dare declare themselves—to have the principal force, and the treasure of the realm put into his hands, with the name of a King; and it is not unlikely but, to keep the Catholics from drawing together to oppose, he may, by proclamation, set them free from the rigour of the present laws, and then all designs depending upon reformation of religion will fall to the ground. As for foreign Princes, he of France is most likely to afford what aid he can to keep the Scot from it, for the particular good of France. [2½ pages. In Phelippes' hand, endorsed by him, "A note intercepted touching Beauchamp."]

Waiting in the lobby by the closet, after nine p.m., two of the cellar also waiting there, Captain Thomas Lee came in out of the presence chamber, and went to the farther side of the lobby towards the privy chamber door, and leaned his back against the closet. I went and did the same; he saluted me and I him, but I thought his manner strange, for he moved near me, and looked earnestly at me, with a stern countenance, his colour very pale, and large drops of sweat on his face. He said "it was one of the wonders of God that I was not on Sunday last in Essex House with my Lord, for I have used to go thither often;" "but then I should have been accounted as arrant a villain as any of those which were there; but how could he have helped that? for there are a thousand more that mean no more harm than I do that might have been in the same case."

He then asked if Her Majesty was yet at supper; I said she was not; he asked two or three times if the Lords had come. I asked if he could discover any of their practices in Ireland, as he could never do it at a better time than now; he swore that I should shortly hear of greater villainies than ever. [1 page.]

38. Intelligence of the residences of John Garrat, at the Countess of Arundel's, of Garrard, of the archpriest, &c. Dr. Bagshaw would not return to England, without licence to use his conscience, and wants the Council to breathe awhile, for fear of another persecution ; he knows not what order Council has taken about articles presented to them by the Jesuits, but they have used the priests favourably, sent them to such prisons as they thought best, and given them liberty, on acknowledging themselves the Queen's prisoners. England will never be at peace while Jesuits are in it, as they stir for the King of Spain, who is a dissembler, and acts not from piety, but to get to England himself. He levies a great army only for show. Soldiers have been levied in Italy to seize Geneva, but the King of France and the Swiss oppose it. Mr. Winwood, my deadly enemy, is likely to be agent with the States in Flanders. Mrs. Martin, near Ludgate, said she had seen priests at Court, when Mrs. Lytton was in favour and a maid of honour, and when the Earl of Pembroke favoured her, she would tuck up her clothes, put on a white cloak, and march out of Court like a man, to meet him. Middleton, a priest, and Hill, a pensioner of the King of France, were employed by the King to make his bastard King of England, and marry him to Arabella, but the King of Spain would oppose it. The French King blames M. de Bouillon, employed in that business, that the Princes of Italy did not meet him at Milan. The King has taken 3,000,000 of gold from M. de la Tremouille, chief aider of the Huguenots; he has money enough, and will pull down his subjects when he pleases, being strong and aspiring.

I was advised not to go to England yet, as there never was such a tyrant as the Queen. Thos. Morgan, a favourer of the House of Guise, has gone on some plot between him and the Duke of Savoy against the King. Statement that Blackwell and his associates have levied 12,000*l.* for poor Catholics in England and abroad, but have converted all except 1,000*l.* to other uses. It is known that the Jesuits have money at command; the secular priests have to obey, and none can be admitted to foreign seminaries but those recommended by the Archpriest.

Count Maurice, weary of long wars, has called the States together to make a league with the Archduke, and pay him tribute. In Artois, the Flemings are used rigourously by the Spaniards, and as they speak French, wish to be under the King of France. Father Baldwin said Ostend would soon be delivered, and the English heretics be glad to serve the Duke against their own country; that drunken Count Maurice would yield, and then, Holland, being well furnished with ships and munition, the Duke would use it well, to obtain its assistance against England; and then the King of Spain would be a great King, and pull down those who scorned to be ruled by the Jesuits.

Most of the English are in despair about their pensions, which are two years in arrear, so that they sell 100 crowns for 25*l.* Stanley, Owen, and a few others are paid, and Owen has procured 500 crowns a year from Naples for himself. Douay college has not been paid for two years, yet can afford 500*l.* for building ; Dr. Kellison and others who would not be factious, are put out, but those who will plot against their country and have capacity are pensioned and preferred. John Baptista, a lay brother, displeas'd with their proceedings, forsook the habit. Walpole, the Jesuit, said if the Queen did, Stanley would lead forces into England, and raise the Infanta or some other of his friends to the crown.

I heard at Paris that 5,000 or 6,000 Spaniards were in Ireland. Drs. Bagshaw and Bishop rejoiced at this. They, with Mr. Constable and others, use great means to erect an English college in Paris, as more priests might be made, and their priesthood no treason, they being amongst the Queen's friends. I reprov'd Robinson of Yorkshire, when in Brussels, for reviling the Queen, and was blamed by Baldwin for it, and for speaking against the King of Spain, their defender. I conversed with Capt. Gervass about the probabilities of Count Maurice making peace. I told him that if the Low Country wars ceased, the English pensioners would never be paid a penny. The Spanish nobles say the Archduke is fitter to be a Cardinal than a Prince, being timorous, and extravagant in housekeeping, but pays no pensioners, of which complaint has been made to the King of Spain. The Infanta is more tender towards the Prince of Orange than the Prince, against whom she causes libels to be cast. There is a decent Irish seminary at Douay. I know not what the King of Spain allows them. Watson, the priest, goes gallantly in his gold chain, and white satin doublet, &c., contrary to his priest's habit. Fathers Garrat and Holt have two or three men at their heels, and coaches and horses at pleasure. [$3\frac{1}{2}$ pages.]

40. Account of an intelligencer. A German Lutheran noble was invited to a banquet at Rome, that he might be arrested and sent to the Inquisition, but having notice, he rode away. The Jesuits will have none but elder brethren in their society, nor one of a large family, unless he be politic ; and they have friends with all Princes. The English Jesuits have appointed their places in divers towns in England ; Burghley house they intend for their superior. The four priests gone from Rome are Dr. Cccil, Mr. Bluet, Mr. Minsh, and Mr. Champncy, but they remain in France, fearing bondage in England. Bluet, though a poor Capuchin, has great credit in France. Parsons spoke to the Pope against the four priests, and said they were come over as instruments of Council, whereon the Pope at their audience spoke severely to them ; they wept, but Bluet defended them ; the Pope was appeas'd, and but for the Spanish Ambassador, Parsons had been expelled the college, and his villainy made apparent. But the Pope refused their chief request, which was to depose the Archpriest whom he had appointed, lest he should offend the King of Spain. Parsons maintains a gentleman who speaks many languages, and goes about divers countries on his business, with a couple of horses.

English Jesuits are intelligencers in all chief cities ; Talbot at Loretto, where Englishmen come before going to Rome, tries to influence them for the Jesuits and against the priests, and sends word beforehand to Rome who and what they are, and their letters, if they foolishly give him them. They get copies of all letters of State for their news, and these are sent to Parsons. Young Adams from Venice gives the news of all the world to the Jesuits, all people resorting thither. I know not who gives intelligence from Milan and Bologna. Dr. Thornton is at Placentia, and Hesketh at Perugia; Baldwin at Brussels is the head of all the English in Flanders, and none dares gainsay him. Cowper, though confessor at Douay college, is engaged to look after strangers from England; if they have money, they are admitted to the college, if not, they are shaken off. Father Hungerford at Dunkirk persuades English prisoners to serve the King of Spain; all the letters from England are first brought to him. The other Jesuits in Flanders imitate the Jesuits' factions and treasons. John Love, son of Love the steward of Douay, teaches a French school near St. Paul's, and may be an intelligencer. Butler, late Sir Fras. Vere's master of the horse, left his office, worth 36s. a week, to become Catholic, and enter a college, his parents in Northamptonshire desiring it, and paying his expenses. Fisher, alias Owen, accused Parsons, who had sent him to Naples, of a design to make away with him, but confessed afterwards that it was done at the instigation of the priests; he complained that the English in several towns of Italy did not relieve him. Query, whether the Queen may not seize the property of a person who sells his land, invests the money for his yearly maintenance, goes abroad, becomes a priest, and dies abroad.

Dr. Davies is maintained at Paris by the Flanders Jesuits, to inform them of the proceedings of the English, and the designs of the French King in his wars. Shelton is in such favour that he recovered all the treasure taken in his house when Antwerp was sacked; he lives at Rouen. The Jesuits have all things in common, and one house supplies the want of another. Fernely of Lyons pays Parsons 50*l.* yearly for maintaining his son.

Abstract of the articles of the house or hospital for English Catholic pilgrims in Rome, as authorised by Card. Seaton, protector of the College. Some English pilgrims have travelling money given on their departure. Parsons at Rome has notice in 12 or 14 days of all that happens in England. He receives his letters on Wednesday; and on Thursday calls his secretaries, Walpole, Stephens, Smith, and John Wilson, who write continually till midnight on Saturday. They break open any letters they like; but think it a mortal sin if any of theirs are intercepted. Parsons got fraudulently a ring belonging to a Mr. Bell, which he had pawned for two crowns, though it was worth 10*l.* Laborne in England was formerly acquainted with all his plots; but not liking his ungodly courses, would not be his disciple, on which Parsons, spoke ill of him. describing the appearance, circumstances, or dispositions of the following:—

Dr. Bagshaw at Paris, trying for erection of a new college there.

Mr. Constable, pensioner of the King of France.

Mr. Paget concerned in all the late Queen of Scots' treasons.

Thos. Morgan, secretary to the said Queen, and now for the Duke of Guise.

Mr. Hill, pensioner of the King of France, helping the college.

Dr. Bishop, at Sherborne college, an enemy of Jesuits, but glad of the Spaniards' landing in Ireland.

Dr. Davies, maintained by the Jesuits, an intelligencer of Parsons.

More, a pensioner of Spain, and now serving a Cardinal in France.

Capt. Elliott took an English ship to Spain, served in Flanders, was disappointed of payment, and came to Paris, and is to have charge of two Normandy ships to the Indies.

Gifford and Garrard, both maintained from England, but having served in Flanders.

Dr. Stephens, a great scholar, but so choleric that he is very poor.

Leigh, an Irishman, of whom all the English in Paris are afraid.

Robt. Owen, intelligencer to his brother Hugh and to Parsons, who has stayed at Paris to advertise the Jesuits, during their strife with the priests.

Father Constantine and Polydore Morgan, a Capuchin, at Orleans.

Mr. Shelton, at Rome, pensioner to the King of Spain, correspondent of Parsons, Owen, &c.

Cuddington, at Rome, earnest for the King of Spain and for the sole exercise of the Catholic religion in England.

Stokes, a priest, earnest for the Jesuits, and complaining that the King of Spain's pensioners, by their insolence and extravagance, especially in prison, prevent charity being exercised to other prisoners.

Father Archangel, alias Barlow, at Rome, no meddler with factions.

John Baptista, confessor to Mdme. Gabrielle's sister at New-haven, formerly a Jesuit, but left the habit, and refused to resume it.

Little Church, son of Mr. Church of Colchester, who pays his charges with Dr. Bagshaw; he was taken prisoner when going over as a scholar to St. Omer.

Two sons of Mr. Roper of Kent, with their tutor, probably in Kent. [3 pages.]

42. ——— to Cecil (?). I wrote to you from Paris through Mr. Winwood. The Jesuits, priests, and traitors of England, by Parsons' appointment, have distributed themselves in the chief towns of Christendom, to plot mischief and correspond better. This cursed crew is like Cerberus, the three-headed dog of hell, the heads being at Douay, Rome, and in Spain, but the heart in England. In Flanders are 600 or 700, half priests, scholars, &c., the rest laymen, pensioners, and soldiers; I enclose a list. The most dangerous are Dr. Worthington, President of Douay College, who libels Queen and Council, and the Catholic priests of England, who have appealed from the Archpriest's authority; Hugh Owen, counsellor to the King of Spain and the Archduke; Baldwin, a Jesuit, at Brussels, who gives them daily intelligence from England, sifts all that come over, and tries whether they be sure to the King of Spain and the Jesuits; Derbyshire, prior of the Carthusians at Malines; and Wright, dean of a church near Ghent, champions to the King of Spain's faction, and bitter enemies of the contrary side; Father Hungerford, placed at Dunkirk to convert to the King of Spain the English brought thither taken at sea; Parsons' brother George, at St. Omer, to oversee the English youths in the college.

Names of 10 others in different towns of Flanders, all spies for Parsons. He has not so many for him in France since the Jesuits were banished; but he must have secret friends at Calais, for they have a stipendiary bark that passes across Jesuits, priests, and traitors by night, and sets them on shore far from any town. They repair to Catholic houses in Kent, or to London, disguised as seamen. Notices of 11 agents of Parsons in different towns of France. I have tried to gain over Carpenter at Bayonne, but he has a spiteful heart and satirical brain. I send a book of satires that he has made against those of the religion, whom he accuses of the horrid blasphemy, "De tribus mundi impostoribus." Notices of 10 of Parsons' agents in Italy. In Spain are 40 Jesuits, and nearly 500 jesuited priests, only 60 of whom refused the Archpriest's authority.

In England, beside those in prison, are George Blackwell, the archpriest on the Borders, with his 12 associates, six appointed by the Pope and six by himself, all of whom are required to write accounts of English affairs every six months, and most write weekly to Parsons, but very cautiously. I have failed to intercept their letters, though Laborne, a priest in England, undertakes to do it. Among the colleges they intend to erect in England, none will content them in London but Cecil's brother's house. Among the chief personages threatened are his Honour and the Lord Chief Justice. They are more busy than ever, their enterprise being endangered by the ill-success of the King of Spain, and the discord of the Catholics; one party being for the King of Scots, the other for the King of France.

I send a book on the schism of England, an abstract of Sanders, but with many fresh lies. The author, a Florentine, is like a spider, little, but full of vile poison. I will send, if desired, the books of controversies of priests and Jesuits; two printed at Rome and Dr. Ely's at Paris.

Knows not about those in Spain, but they are many, and to learn the art of treason, they read Parsons' Book of Policies, his Apologies, &c., in their seminaries. Two Jesuits of Sienna spoke of an English Signor Georgio who much frequented their college. George Allen, a soldier, lives at Leghorn only as a spy for Parsons. [1½ pages.]*
42. II. Notes of English priests in different parts of the continent, with remarks on their characters and proceedings. Parsons confesses that he came from Rouen to Spain, to see to whom the Infanta was fittest to be married; to settle the state of England; and the succession to the Crown. [5¼ pages.]
42. III. "The names of all the Englishmen as I know," being a list, with notes, of English lay Catholics abroad. [2 pages.]
42. IV. Further account of the evil proceedings of the Jesuits abroad, and descriptions of many of them, and of their quarrels with the secular priests. All students at college going to England have their expenses paid, and are sent over, and are there to seek directions from the Archpriest Blackwell, who has thousands of pounds at his disposal; for the Jesuits cause men to sell all they have, and give it to them for their intercession with heaven, and no Bishop or Cardinal dares contradict a Jesuit. [4 pages.]

[Dec. 16.] 43. Memorial against the Bill exhibited in the present Parliament, prohibiting the transportation of iron ordnance; showing the fines imposed by the Act, 2 Edw. VI., for its export, and questioning whether this Act is not better than the one now proposed. One plea of the bill is that ordnance is transported to the enemy. This is true; and in 1592, a proclamation was issued against its export, and a patent granted for export of small ordnance, which has brought in 20,000*l.* profit where the Queen had none before. Of the 2,000 tons made yearly before the patent, 1,600 were secretly exported; but since then, by the care of the patentees, only 800 tons are made. Metal for guns can be had elsewhere, as in Westphalia, and if no guns could be had from England, they would be manufactured there. Much of the English ordnance seen in Dunkirk and Spain has been taken in war. [3½ pages.]

which is worth more, she will be paid in an instant, the memory of the King her father continued, she have a place to withdraw to, and, during the time of her living there, save, as I have heard by her officers, nearly 1,000 marks a month.

Touching my land about it, I leave it to her to leave it or take it upon reasonable recompence; but to pay her 600*l.* a year out of my poor living,—the sum not exceeding 8,000*l.*,—I should be 19 years in paying, and I and my wife left in great distress, the house forced to utter decay, and this burden to rest solely upon me, the same growing by another man from whom I had reason to expect a better fortune.

This way I move, as well in regard to my duty to see Her Majesty satisfied of her due, as to covet to maintain myself, so as to live in my old days in some reasonable sort to serve her.

Touching the nature of the debts, and how the mass thereof, being the Florentine's debt, was made by us from a doubtful debt, I leave to your remembrance. [1 page.]

45. Reasons for a toleration in religion to be allowed to Catholics:—Where subjects are alike regarded, they do not envy one another, but equally love their Prince, and hold themselves satisfied with the present estate; but where one party reaps all the favours, and the other is suppressed, it breeds discontent, desire of alteration, and plots and practices to obtain it. A familiar conversation each with the other will increase good living, abate diffidence with their fellows, and purge them of many evils. The comparison of both professions, laid open to every man's eye, will enlighten the understanding to discern the best. The example of France has made us see that it is both possible and not prejudicial, and we may as well brook this imitation as we do all their other fashions of public and private, martial and politic government.

Reasons against this toleration:—The Catholics obtaining this will seek for more. If they once find their party strong, which by these means they will discover, they will attempt the suppressing of ours. We have experience of the Protestants' quiet living under Catholics, in the exercise of their religion, but never of Catholics under Protestants. The Catholics cannot enjoy this exercise without priests, and priests are subject to the Pope, so that Protestant princes lose the command of the best half of their vassals, which reasons of State can never brook.

Cautions:—To have their churches by themselves, and in cities and great towns only in the suburbs. No Jesuits or votaries to be allowed. The priests to give sufficient assurance for their allegiance, by oath and sureties. No recourse to the Pope for any matter. All controversies about their rites to be decided by some chosen among themselves, and allowed by the Prince. All church duties to be paid as they now ought to be, and all decisions for tithes, marriages, wills, &c., to be referred to our spiritual courts as heretofore. All invectives on either side to be severely punished. A little to be given to them at first, to be enlarged, as experience shall teach us. [3½ pages.]

47. Demands made by the masters and owners of ships to the Queen and Council, to continue from 1 February to 31 October:—

1. That we may receive a signification, under Her Majesty's hand, that the contribution may not be continued longer than necessity requires, and the danger of the enemy being passed, we may be freed from the charge, otherwise the coasters will hardly be drawn to contribute at all.

2. That no gentleman or ordinary captain be placed in any of the men-of-war, but mariners only, or owners and men of such condition as will bestow pains to content the coasters, as they shall be directed, and that a list of such men be presented by the coasters to the Lord High Admiral, to make choice therefrom.

3. That we may have commission for taking hoys and carvels most meet for the service, and for pressing gunners, carpenters, and mariners to serve in them, paying Her Majesty's ordinary allowance, with the addition of 4s. a month to the men as a reward, and to officers proportionably, and for taking up needful provisions at reasonable prices.

4. That if any enemy be taken by them, the benefit of the prisoner's ship and goods may be divided amongst the takers, according to the order of the sea.

5. Towards this great charge of waftage, we are willing to contribute 1s. upon every chaldron of coals; and as most of the parties hereto are adventurers and owners, we pray that the rest of the [New]castle traders, viz., those in Lynn, Boston, &c., that make their delivery in England, may pay the like contribution, to be levied at Newcastle.

6. The masters and mariners of these vessels of Yarmouth, Aldborough, Orford, Ipswich, Harwich, and Colchester have already been moved, and are willing to contribute 1s. in the pound out of their wages; and we pray that all other traders to that place may pay the like contribution.

7. Also that the owner of the soil at Newcastle, or the seller of the coals there may pay 6*d.* a chaldron, and neither advance his price nor diminish his measure, as his gain on the retail exceeds all others, without hazard or adventure, and the securing of this trade against the enemy will much increase his benefit. [This clause was left out, as it was thought the owner would oppose the whole work, if he had this charge imposed on him.]

8. That the measure of London, which was altered by Alderman

Ryder, late Lord Mayor, to the great wrong of poor oppressed traders, may be brought again to the ancient measure.

9. That if Her Majesty should employ more than 10 Newcastle vessels, the proportion of the wafters may be abated, or the contribution will otherwise not countervail the charge.

May 10. 6. The King to Attorney General Coke. We have restored to the widow and children of John Littleton, lately attainted of high treason, all lands, goods, &c. by his attainder escheated to the late Queen; Littleton, in his lifetime, assured part of his lands to Sir Charles Davers [Danvers] and others attainted, until he and other sureties were discharged of some debts for which they stood bound for Littleton, which lands escheated to the late Queen by the attainder of Danvers and not of Littleton; yet as they were conveyed but for a security to Sir Charles Danvers and others, for discharge of debts which Littleton's wife has now a mind to pay, we require you to contain all those lands in the grant to the wife and children of the said John Littleton. - May 15. 8. The King to the Lord Treasurer. The customs on silks, the farm of which was granted by the late Queen to Sir Robert, now Lord, Cecil, are no longer payable in strict law, being granted by her only for life; but not doubting their renewal next Parliament, you are to order their payment as usual in the meantime. [$1\frac{1}{2}$ pages, draft.]
- May 16. 9. The King to the Lord Admiral [chief justice in Eyre, south of the Trent]. Her late Majesty granted to John Lidcott the custody of Bagshot Park; he sold his interest to one Furst, who conveyed it to Sir Hen. Guilford, and afterwards sold it again to another, by which double sale great disturbance has grown, and meantime our deer and woods are neglected. As we hold Sir Henry Guilford meetest to have the keeping, and as he has the best right from Lidcott, we require you to order that he be put into quiet possession. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page, draft.]
- May 16. 10. Grant to Simeon Furner of the office of merchant and agent in the East parts for buying pitch, tar, hemp, flax, oakum, sailcloth, cables, ropes, masts, iron, firs, deals, &c. for the Navy; fee, 33*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* yearly. - May 19. 11. The King to the Lord Treasurer. Wm. Lewes, of Bristol, has had for several years the collection of the impost of sweet wines in the port of Bristol, &c., and behaved honestly therein; and having besought continuance in the same under you, to whom we have committed the general collection of the impost, as under Alderman Wood, late Collector General, we have signified our pleasure to Sir Wm. Ryder, whom we have made Collector General of our customs inwards; but it has not taken effect, from your pretending that the right of appointing officers for our collection appertains to you and our butler of England. Wherefore we require you, on his

- May 21. 14. The King to the Officers of Exchequer. Being informed that Sir Francis Knollys, Geo. Blande, Edw. Vachell, 1,484*l.* in gold, 8*l.* in silver, plate value 200*l.*, and two gold chains worth 100*l.* and 100 marks, on pretence that Vachell was convicted of recusancy, and that the late Queen seized all his goods and chattels, and two parts of his lands and tenements;—Question now being made whether the said gold, silver, and plate yet remaining in our Exchequer as in deposito appertains to us or to Vachell, and to whom the rest of the said treasure not yet brought into our Court belongs;—We, not allowing such taking without commission, and pitying the case of the said Vachell, whereof he has made petition to us, grant to Sir Thos. Vachell, his cousin and next heir, all the said gold, money, jewels, and plate, &c., as our free gift. [3 sheets, draft.]
- May 21. 15. The King to the Lord Treasurer. Lord Sandys was fined 5,000*l.* for joining in the attempts of the late Earl of Essex, and has paid 1,000*l.* thereof. Being pleased to pardon him the remaining 4,000*l.*, we wish a plan to be devised for so doing. [½ page draft.]
- May 22. 16. Sept. 28.
Paris.

41. Thomas Morgan to the King. There are two isles called Jersey and Guernsey, depending of the Crown of England. In the latter days of the late Queen, some of the English nation presented one of these isles to the King of France, upon condition of a pension of 2,000 crowns assured them in France, in recompense of their treason. They treated with a marshal of this realm, and he applied an old servant of some very dear to you, to treat with His Majesty in this negociation. His Majesty replied that he well understood the infirmity of the late Queen, and would first see how the affairs of England went forward; yet he commanded the parties to be entertained in good disposition towards his service. The principal negotiator on this side the sea alleged that he had special credit with the government of the isle, and that the governor was much alienated towards the late Queen. I advertise you hereof, that you may give order for conservation of your States, and for the discovery of the traitors, wherein I will help to my uttermost. I have communicated more at large with your ambassador, that he, having a cipher with you, may say more than I can.

VOL. XXXV.

I lately received some letters from the Duchess of Feria, wherein she says that the last she had from me was from Turin, by means of his Highness' ordinary ambassador in that Court, soon after she heard of the death of our Queen, and that the King of Scotland quietly succeeded her in the crown of England. That according to the old affection she bore to His Majesty and his mother, she had written to congratulate him. That since she sent such letters, she had heard, to the increase of her sickness, that some of the English had conspired to offend His Majesty; she asks who they were, hoping they were none of her blood or alliance; and if so, she hoped they would have their deserts; nevertheless, her parents and alliance were dear to her, notwithstanding the distance between them. I never saw these letters the Duchess mentions, and therefore hold them to be lost; but, because she has performed her duty towards you, pray accept her goodwill.

The Duke of Feria, her son, is a great personage, and has been employed in great affairs for His Catholic Majesty, as well in Italy as France, wherein he acquitted himself so well that on his return, he was made Viceroy of Catalonia, and so continued with honour in the charge for some years, and at present he is Viceroy of Sicily. He was married to the Duke de Fantasgo's daughter, one of the greatest and richest Dukes of Spain, and as his son is a toward young gentleman, the House of Feria will be a strong house in Spain.

The Duchess is descended from the Dormers in Buckinghamshire, an ancient house, and allied with the admiral of the realm, the Earl of Pembroke, the Earl of Southampton, Lord Montague, Lord St. John, Lord Sydney, Lord Harrington, and many more. Sir Robert Dormer is the heir of that house, and brother to the Duchess of Feria. You have honoured sundry subjects with titles of honour, and I think it would be for your service to honour Sir Robert with the title of an Earl, he being able to bear the honour; all the good offices done by the Duchess of Feria in your favour, and that of your mother, and the service that she and hers may do you hereafter deserve that grace.

VOL. XXXV.

The advancement of the house of Dormer was handled in the time of Henry VIII., Edward VI., Queen Mary, and the late Queen, and now I hope it is you that is ordained to honour Sir Robert with the title of an Earl, as the title of baron in Spain and these parts is not greatly accounted of.

It is requisite that you should entertain some in the Court of Rome for your service; I know none more fit to serve you than the Bishop of Vaison and Sir Edw. Drummond, persons well practised in the Court of Rome, in good consideration with the best and greatest there, and faithful subjects to you. The Bishop is now upon his return to his charge, in the county of Avignon.

The Marquis de Laguna in Spain is to pass this way towards their Highnesses of Flanders, to condole with them on the death of the Empress, although she has been dead some time. Jean Bapt^a de Tassis, ambassador here for His Catholic Majesty, is to return to Spain, and to serve in a special place.

P.S.—It is not likely that I shall be able to learn the names of the English traitors that have treated, as I have herein stated, as such deceitful fellows would give false names. It is likely they are none of those that traffic between the isles and France, but rather men of some quality, considering they participate, as they say, with the governor, who I take to be Sir Walter Raleigh; but perhaps he was not participant with them in their lewd attempts, unless the devil totally possessed him. By the dexterity of such as have the principal management of your affairs, it may be tried what Englishmen in the isle had the best credit with the governor, and whether any of them were in France about the time of the sickness of the late Queen; because it was always the conclusion of His Majesty to entertain the subject and the English in good disposition towards his service. I think you should change all the principal persons in charge of the said isle, and put some confident subjects in their places; and also foresee that by seeking to try out these traitors, to execute the punishment due to them, they draw no light that their treason is discovered on this side the sea, but rather among some of their own confederates, and loyal subjects to your Majesty of that realm, and of the said isle also. Sir Walter Raleigh's wife was the daughter of Sir Nicholas Throckmorton, who was a Protestant, but yet in his time did very grateful service in England to you and your mother; which should lead you to have compassion upon her in case he suffers death, and his lands and goods be confiscated to your service. Colonel Simple came this way in company of the Marquis de Laguna, to go into Flanders, but the Marquis stays to kiss the King's hand before his departure. [5 pages.]

Sept. 29. 42. The King to [the Lord Treasurer]. Francis Allen, citizen of London, and Wm. - Oct. 24? 53. Hum. Jobson to Mr. Anthony, attendant on Sir Thos. Lake, clerk of the Signet. I want Sir Thomas' signature to a paper for something which my Lord wishes me to have. Sir Julius Cæsar will obtain that of the King.

- Oct. 30. 55. The King to the Warden and Fellows of All Souls College, Wilton. Oxford. We have before written to you in behalf of Francis Mills, concerning a lease of lands in co. Northampton; since which, being informed that Wm. Watts, and his ancestors, have long been tenants thereof, and have a long time to come in the same;—We mean not to move you to expel any ancient tenant, contrary to your liking or orders of your house, or the statutes of this realm, but are content that you continue Watts as your tenant. [$\frac{2}{3}$ page, copy.]
- Oct. 30. 56. The King to [the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster]. Wilton. Some of our servants who had warrants from us to you for leases, &c., within our duchy, say that you have made stay thereof, on pretence of a warrant restraining the passing of leases of duchy lands. Our meaning was not to restrain ourself of passing anything we think fit to grant, but only to stay the making of such as you might make; therefore all for which you have special warrant under our hand, although dated since the restraint, are to pass [$\frac{1}{2}$ page.]
- Oct. 57. Sir Thos. Erskine to Sir Thos. Lake. As His Majesty has granted the office of making the spangles for the coats of his footmen and guard, draw a bill for the same. [$\frac{1}{2}$ page.]

so visible effects to my loyalty to my Sovereign, as I account the violent humours of men no more than the barking of dogs; and therefore, in my own innocency and my master's favour, rest secure. Hume, Master of the Great Wardrobe, to deliver yearly to Robert Le Gris, ordinary groom of the Privy Chamber, a damask or satin gown, bound with velvet and furred, a velvet coat and doublet, a marble cloth coat guarded with velvet, and another of green cloth also bound with velvet, and to pay for the materials for making. With note that in drawing the warrant, the names of John Achmowty, John Gibbs, and John and Geo. Murray are to be inserted in place of Le Gris. [1 page, draft.]

Paris.

61. Sir Anth. Standen to Rob. Persons [Parsons]. I was three days at the Court at Fontainebleau, where I had secret audience with both their Majesties, and lodging given me, with other favours; but as to Evreux, neither he nor any other will be countenanced by this King; such is the misery of the time and vehemency of suspicion in matters of State;—a more miserable heresy than that of Calvin, or any other.

I am weary of this world, to see how things frame. Heresy beginning to take new root at home, dissension and brabbles among our Ecclesiastics, discontent in most Catholics, and no redress from thence; if in the beginning and before the Parliament, there appears no relent, adieu pannier, vendanges sont faites.

All your long discourse in that of 22 Sept. is true, and fit to be delivered to His Majesty, but who shall tie the bell about the cat's neck? I mean to let nothing slip in my power; the nearer I approach, the less comfort I gather, only this: the King is content that most shall have a priest in their houses, but he must not do his function; and forsooth the Jesuits must out, and not only out but leave the government of the colleges abroad,—a matter broached in the late Queen's days.

The Queen is warned from dealing in Catho[lic] causes, and is very assiduous at sermons, so that I am in a stagger what shall become of my tokens, for you know the laws in that case, and the dangers they threaten; yet I will forward with them, and expect what time will work, before I deliver them.

As for yourself, there cannot be one more hateful to the King than you are; and to amend errors, Worthington's inveighing against the King to the English students has heaped more coals, your foes having delivered to His Majesty that he is a dependant of yours, and was set on by you. It seems strange how men should enter into furies against God, to the breaking of their own and others' neck. But it is no more than spitting against the sky, and discovering feeble malice, by which great hurt is done and no good, and all is laid upon that blessed Company (Jesuits), which I have ever honoured, as in my judgment it seems to deserve. If any man that seems to depend upon you have done or uttered anything in favour of Spanish titles, it is all unripped, the persons, places, and times set down, and witnesses ready to urge the parties, viz., starving the Earl of Westmoreland; carrying coin out of the realm; starving priests in prisons; incensing Princes with untruths; disgracing such as would not tread this path; sending home ignorant youths, whereby in disputes, heretics have taken mighty advantages; excluding and driving out of colleges youths and gentlemen that would not become Jesuits, or sent with the consent of the Archpriest, &c. &c., all which Father Persons [Parsons] is charged with, and consequently the company.

I never knew the Canon D. Thornell but at my being in Venice, where his credit was great; at Bologna I was treated, for his sake, in the house Quaranta Bolognetti, and there he told me of his voyage to Rome; by him I wrote to San Marcello, and by the same means demanded His Holiness's blessing; by him I received answer and good words, and all this on his own expense, whereby he has tied me to him; I never discovered in him one jot of faction.

As for Mr. Fitzherbert, his has been a long acquaintance; and while I lived in Tuscany, no Saturday passed without letters to each other. He came to Florence at his own charge, to visit me, out of love, and complained of hard measure, from being tossed from post to pillar; and it was most rueful to hear, in every place where I came, and where English were, of heaps of griefs and miscontents.

As for our King, I gave him his due in all places,—religion only excepted,—and that he had no paragon among men. I have been frank in all matters of our land, the King not being bloodily bent, although he be a stiff Protestant, yet may he be won to tolerate fair means. The Queen, once Catholic and reconciled, the uncovering of those ashes would doubtless take place, and some sparks appear; and churchmen being in the realm, and bloody laws taken away, access may be procured. She is yet young, and given to pastimes and youthful cogitations; to pass from England to Scotland (sic) is a mighty enchantment, but if the Countess of Arundel with some others, creep near her, it is hoped good effects may follow. For those three bloody laws, some about the King who are potent with him of the Scottish nation have made this offer to our Catholics at home; that if they will deposit 30,000 crowns in some sure hands, to the use of these Scots, these three bloody laws shall be annulled, and they will not touch one penny until the matter is effected. Rome has been written to twice, and no answer returned but words.

The hard conceit of your company may be remedied, as you see what has passed in France, and now what is passing, to the Company's honour and many good men's comforts; and what I say of the whole company, I say of yourself;—time and good and true carriage will accommodate all.

I must tell you what passed between Father Cotton and myself, touching you, and the remedy of return to the King's favour; which was that to bring forward two good works, which were two colleges then beginning in Spain, Dolman's book was no more but a shoeing horn, to draw to an end those good works; and that as for Father Persons [Parsons], he neither was nor is Spanish for all that. This and such like must be delivered to His Majesty, and is the cleanliest subterfuge we have. Father Cotton this King brought me to know, and invited me one day to one of the Father's sermons, where I was very near the King. He is continually about His Majesty's person. The first President here, a mighty hinderer of Father Cotton's proceedings, is called with some of the Court before the King; he means to proceed without them, in case they stand obstinate, that is to say, for Lyons, Dijon and La Flesche. I have just received your three conversions from Dr. Davison, which I will read by the way for England. If there be not some order taken for the reconciliation of our clergy, all will be too late to remedy. [4 pages. Endorsed, "A dangerous letter."]

62. The King to the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London. Being informed that some places of aldermen have become void, and that our servant, Sir Baptist Hickes, fears he will be elected, we require you to forbear him, as employed in our service. [$\frac{2}{3}$ page, draft.]

Dec. 26.

63. Warrant to Sir John Stanhope, Vice-Chamberlain and Treasurer of the Chamber, to pay to Rich. Hampton, appointed moletaker in St. James's Park and the gardens and grounds at Westminster, Greenwich, Richmond, Hampton Court, &c., on resignation of Wm. Thornback, the fee of 4*d.* a day and 20*s.* yearly for livery. Altered from a like warrant by Queen Elizabeth for Wm. Thornback, on decease of David Chambers. With request by Will. Moys for the bill to be drawn from Lady Day last, or the poor man will lose his fee. [1 page, copy.]

64. Grant to — Button, appointed assistant, with Sir Jas. Murray, to Sir Lewis Lewknor, in attendance on ambassadors and other strangers, of the fee of 5*s.* 8*d.* a day. [Draft, parchment.]

65. Warrant for a lease in reversion to Sir Roger Aston, of the issues of jurors in the duchy of Lancaster. [1 page, draft.]

66. Pass for Jacob Hansonns de Slosse, a Dane, who has been over to visit England, to return to his own country. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page, Latin.]

67. T. Douglas to Sir Thos. Lake. I send at your request a copy of the old patent, after which the new one is to be drawn, and beg it may be ready to-morrow. Lord Cecil is my friend in the matter. [1 page.]

68. Note of things of which the writer has notice, which are in the King's power to grant, viz., the manor of Somersam, Cambridge-shire, with seven towns thereto belonging, which was lately set to sale by the late Queen, but had no purchasers, as being too great, except for royalty, and for which Oliver Cromwell, who married Sir Horatio Pallavicini's widow, offered a large sum, as well as a release of 30,000*l.* owed to him by the Queen; the manor of Soham, Cambridgeshire, containing 10,000 acres of wastes, besides woods, and lately let to —— Gardner; also those of Langley, in Sussex, Daventry in Northamptonshire, and Minden Hall, Essex.

Endorsed, "Notes of thinges in the Kinge's gift geven to the E. of M. (or W.?) [2 pages.]

Portion of a pedigree of the Royal families of England, from Henry III. to James I., with the collateral branches. [Parchment, much damaged, Case II., Addenda, No. 24.]

69. "Copy of the estreats for Lambeth house, taken out of Mr. Osborne's office in the Exchequer," viz., part of the Duke of Norfolk's house in Lambeth, co. Surrey, held in capite and by knight's service, 40*l.* A stable and gardens formerly held by John Archbishop of Canterbury, 33*s.* 4*d.*; present tenant, Marg. Adams. With notes of sundry demises of the same. [1 sheet.]

70. Account of brass ordnance remaining in His Majesty's castles, forts, &c., viz., at Dover, Sandown, Deal, Walmer, Camber, and Portland castles, and at Portsmouth, Sandfoot, Broncksey, Harwich, Carisbrook, Sandham bay, West Cowes, Hurst, Southsea, Calshot, St. Mawes, Pendennis, Gravesend, West Tilbury, Kingston-upon-Hull, Newcastle, Castle Cornet, Tynemouth, and Rye.

With note that those at Rye are decayed and of little use, and should be replaced. That there are four brass pieces at Hastings, which are claimed by the townsmen, but it is presumed they belong to the King. That in 1589, Mr. Powell, then surveyor of the ordnance, had commission to remove certain brass ordnance, from castles and forts in England, for furnishing seven new ships then made; in performance of which, Geo. Constable was appointed to repair to the castles and forts northward, and Powell, westward. They returned such ordnance to the Tower, but none under a demi-culverin. Some mentioned here may have been brought up by Constable from the North.

It also appears by a survey taken in 1583 of the castles and forts along the coast, that much iron ordnance remained in them, and may yet do, and being unserviceable, might be brought from thence. With the names of the places where they are. [6 pages.]

71. Statement by —— of the manner of his employment in business of special service. Such as offered their service, or were recommended as fit instruments to discover the practices and intentions of our enemies, were sent to me from the Superior, with a note to examine their sufficiency, to agree with them for their allowance, and give them directions what might be learned and heeded in the enemy's Court, in the ports, &c. where they should be appointed to reside, for each place required different directions; and further, to learn them the ways for conveyance of their letters hither, and for speedy knowledge what our enemies did;—a business that in those days required a care not only to have one, but two or more, resident in some especial places.

1603 ?

I continued my endeavours all the time of the wars, dispatching many instruments to those ports and places where our enemies gathered any head of an army, that judgment might be had beforehand of what to do, the better to prevent any harm which might befall unawares to our country. In all which time, though many of our own as other nations were so employed, only one miscarried; he was sent to me to be dispatched to the Groyne in Spain, when the Adelantado was with a great army to come from thence for the west parts of England; he had never been in Spain, nor knew the language or custom of the country. Contrary to my liking, for not displeasing Sir Wm. Waade, clerk of the Council, by whom he was recommended, I provided a ship from Flushing for his passage to the Groyne, and laded in her commodities to give cover to the business; the commodities, value 500*l.*, were all lost with the ship; and the master, with all his mariners and a servant of mine, condemned to the galleys, and the party that was sent was put to death. All this happened by a slight oversight that might have been easily prevented by direction, and I remain without one penny of recompence for my loss, so that, what by that, the postage of letters, and the use of the moneys I disbursed to those employed,—for their pension must be paid to each man in the place of his residence, till dismissed or called home,—with the charge of boat hire to and from Court about this business, and my extraordinary pains therein for so many years, the money given by privy seal, were it for this business only, would hardly equal the same. I never asked anything of my Lord, as he told me I should be well rewarded by the [late] Queen.

The gift of that privy seal was for service in many commissions of reprisal, and in consideration of my endeavours, by knowledge of the language and trades of our enemies, to preserve their goods from being carried away again by colourable claims when taken, lest we, being left empty-handed, might grow weary of the charge of setting forth ships against them, and so lose the chiefest advantage we had against them. I well knew that they laboured by policy and device, what by force and strength they could not, to have the sea open for their trade, knowing their great income thereby would soon consume us.

That the gift might seem less strange, others that were commissioners with me, in one commission only, had the like rewards, whereas I served in many, to my great cost, without one penny of allowance more than that for them all. To approve my endeavours to bring to my Sovereign's coffers, and my discoveries that the danger and practises of enemies might be prevented, with the great labour and pains I have taken therein, I hope words will turn to silence where deeds appear. Jan 2.
Berwick.

1. John Crane to Lord Cecil. You being the only nobleman from whom I have received favour, as I hold the place of Government until His Majesty appoint another, I remind you of things necessary for this town, set down in Her late Majesty's establishment.

First. His Majesty makes some dissolution of the former numbers here, and yet, as I would not have it accounted a dissolution, I continue a watch and ward of 20 soldiers. His Majesty commanded that such as remain in whole pay should do duties appointed by the commander of the garrison, in guarding his ordnance and munition here.

Second, There is a watch tower, overlooking both the town, fields, and seas, in which is an alarm bell, kept by two poor footmen at 4*d.* a day each, to make known to the town what troops of horse they see coming to the town, or what number of ships by sea, that the place be not taken on the sudden.

Thirdly, It was the order of Her Majesty's establishment that variances between soldiers for debts, broils, &c., should be decided by the military commander, and those between a soldier and a townsman by the governor and mayor.

In the last copy of an establishment set down by the Lord Treasurer, the four constables of the horsebands, being over the number of 80 horsemen, are left out, nevertheless they were ancient servitors and men of good worth, commanders of 20 horsemen apiece, and appointed by Her late Majesty to train them, as the captains did their soldiers, and therefore by the Commissioners set down, as other officers of the town, to have whole pay; wherein they doubt not of your favourable consideration. [$1\frac{2}{3}$ pages.]

Jan. 4.

2. Note by Sir Rog. Wilbraham, that His Majesty being informed, by him, that Wm. Barnes, Gentleman of the Chapel, and Petty Canon in Windsor, is dead, has directed a letter recommending Anth. Harrison, also Gentleman of the Chapel, for the place. [$\frac{1}{4}$ page.]

Jan. 4.

3. The King to the Mayor of Coventry. Dr. Wilkes, our chaplain, has told us of his suit to you for the reversion of a lease of Cowdon Farm, of which he is your tenant, and which was granted to you by Henry VIII. ; his suit is reasonable; wherefore we require you to grant him a new lease at the old rent, without fine. [$\frac{1}{2}$ page, draft.]

Jan. 19.

4. Sir John Stanhope to Sir Thomas Lake, or any other clerk of the Signet. Rich. Hampton has got His Majesty's bill assigned for the office of moletaker on surrender of Wm. Thornback; you ask from what time any fee has been received for the place, I certify that there has not been any from me since Lady Day last. [$\frac{1}{4}$ page.]

Jan 24.

5. The King to [Mrs. Jane Shelley]. We lately, upon your suit, delivered you your jointure lands, being our inheritance, which the late Queen refused to do, and we dispensed with your oath, which the law in that case required. But you use our said grant contrary to our meaning, to the undoing of our servant, Wm. Bird,

VOL. XXXVI.

Gentleman of our Chapel. He took leases of your farm and woods of Stondon Place, co. Essex (now parcel of your jointure) from the late Queen, for three of his children's lives, paid fines and bestowed great charges on the houses and barns, paid his rent ever since the death of your husband, and deserved well of you. Yet notwithstanding, since the said grant, you go about to thrust him out of his possession, to his present undoing, having no other house, and to the great danger of his children's future estate. For staying of which your hard course, neither your own conscience, nor our benignity towards you, nor the decree of our Exchequer Chamber yet in force, nor the letters of our Privy Council, nor any reasonable composition offered you by our said servant, move you.

Being a woman of great living and no charge, and having many better houses than his, we marvel that in those lands which you so lately received from us, and which are our inheritance, you offer so hard measure to our servant; whereupon we require you to permit him to enjoy the said farm and woods, and give no cause hereafter of complaint. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page, draft. See Calendar James I., 27 Oct. 1608.]

Jan. 6. Lists of 100 grants, annuities, letters, pensions, warrants, &c. passed during the month, and account of fees received in the Signet Office for them; total, 58*l.* 10*s.* [$2\frac{1}{2}$ pages.]

Jan. ? 7. Notes for the Middle shires:—The Commission is to be amended in two points. One is to have the power invested in one person for apprehension, examination, and commitment; the other to extend it to the co. Palatine of Durham. A warrant for the commissioners' allowance. Abatement of the soldiers in Ferne Island and Carlisle Castle. Distribution of the horses for convenience of the service, &c.

Things to be referred to Mr. Attorney. To explain the word "irreclaimable." To speak with my Lord of Durham touching his liberties in Northumberland, whereunto the Commissioners' jurisdiction should extend. To consider of the letters patent of Holy and Ferne Islands, Carlisle Castle, and the citadel there, and whether the King may not convert the pay there to what use he pleases, notwithstanding the patents. [1 page. Partly by Lord Cecil.]

Jan. ? 8. E. Reynoldes to Owen Reynoldes. Private affairs; disposal of rents, and collecting of debts. I should be glad to hear from Sir Thos. Smith, what good might be done by his means. You might hear of many things in Court, and Mr. Packer has promised to hearken out somewhat fit for me.

We have a fresh alarm here, that my Lady [Countess of Essex] is deceased. If any such thing be, it will puzzle me about my rent, and I shall be exceeding sorry for the loss of her. Let me hear the certainty, as also how Mr. Fowkes, Lady Skinner, and the rest are; Mr. Pepper said they were visited with the sickness.

P.S.—When God shall ease the sickness, I will take a house in London, if I can find one to my liking that has not been visited. [1 page.]

 6. Same proviso for manors of which any forest, chase, or park is parcel.
 7. If any of our castles or chief houses, not reserved for our use, and yet burthensome by fees for the keeping, or charges for repairs, be found to be either situate so remote from our access as very rarely we are like to use them, or so much decayed as without great expenditure they cannot be repaired, or granted on lease for many years, you may sell them in fee-farm, with such of the lands belonging thereto as you think expedient.
 8. If any of our manors have been by sale or gift so dismembered that a fourth part of the yearly rent has been sold or given away, parts of such dismembered manors may be sold.

We have before written you in favour of Sir John Ramsay, gentleman of our bed chamber, for a lease of the priory of Kersey, parcel of your possessions; but you stated that you could not then make any such lease according to the laws. As the time is come in which you may make a lease, being besought by Sir John Ramsay to transfer our intended favour to Sir Wm. Anstruther, gentleman of our privy chamber, we renew our request, and require you to make him a lease of the priory, for as many years as you may by statute, and upon the terms desired for Sir John Ramsay. [$\frac{1}{2}$ page, draft.]
- [April 18.] 24. Copy of the above. [$\frac{1}{2}$ page. See docquet, Calendar James I., 19 April 1604.]
- April 19. 25. The King to [the Bishop of Lincoln]. Dr. Langford, Dean of Hereford, has a benefice called Stokehammond, co. Bucks, in your gift, but being far from his abode, he is willing to leave it to a sufficient preacher. We, in our love to learning and care of having men preferred that have been long students in our Universities, recommend to you Wm. Osborne, M.A., late Proctor of our University of Oxford, a man qualified for a better place. We earnestly desire you to accept this resignation, and to collate Osborne into that benefice, without pretext of any former grant, and willingly to gratify us in this our first small and reasonable request to you. [$\frac{1}{2}$ page, copy; see docquet same date, Calendar James I.]
- [April 19.] 26. Analysis of a proposed Act for the speedy recovery of small debts in London, and reasons for passing it, e.g., that it will take away trials by jury; its decrees will be final, and it is needless, as inferior Courts already exist in Southwark, Westminster, and Middlesex. With answers thereto. [1 sheet.]

- April 24? 28. Act for the better and truer making of all manner of woollen and partly woollen cloths in England; stating the office of the alnagers and collectors of subsidies thereon, &c. [4 sheets, draft.]
- April 26? 29. The King to [the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishops in Convocation]. By our letters of 8 Oct. last to the late Archbishop of Canterbury, which we are assured he imparted to you the bishops, as we willed him, we intimated that the city of Geneva ought to be relieved with a collection to be made in the parishes of this realm. As the success therein is adverse to our expectation, and the speed used not such as the necessity requires, we require you and all others of the Convocation to further its execution, and immediately take order, each of you within your own diocese, &c., that the contents of our letters to the late Archbishop be speedily performed; and charge all others who have to do in this collection to do their endeavours therein, without laying any charge upon the poor city. [1 page, draft.] Also,

- April 26? The King to [the Bishop of London]. By our letters to the late Archbishop of Canterbury, in favour of a collection for relief of Geneva, we appointed that the money arising thereby should be brought monthly to him; but by his decease that direction fails, and there is also one wanting to give direction for proceeding in such collection, in the diocese of Canterbury. We have therefore chosen you, and authorise you to receive the said moneys, to give orders in the diocese for the making of the collection, and in our name to further it in all other dioceses, where needful.  Endorsed, "John Pigeon, for son of Bristow Pigeon, Mr. Grimsdich." [See Calendar, 12 Jan., 26 April, and 16 May 1604.]

- April 28. 30. The King to the Lord Treasurer. Having long owed Sir William Hume 2,000*l.*, we command you to order Sir Wm. Ryder and two others, who have by your appointment the charge of the Carrack's goods in Leadenhall, London, to pay 2,000*l.* to the said Sir William Hume, out of money made by the sale of the pepper, parcel of the said goods, or to deliver him so much pepper from our custom-house in London as shall amount to that sum. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page, draft.]

- April. 31. Note of sums paid from the privy purse for liveries to officers and servants of the household, between April 1603 and April 1604. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page.]

- May 12. 32. Petition of [Sir] James Creichton and [Sir] Geo. Hume to the King, for a grant out of forfeitures accruing by the conviction of engrossers of goods prohibited to be transported. With report thereon by Lord Treasurer Dorset, that the sum is not set down, but rests with His Majesty's pleasure. That the suit is least prejudicial to His Majesty, because it takes nothing out of his coffers or revenue, and would be reasonable if one half the sum which he gives be out of the forfeitures brought into the Exchequer by any informer, and the other half by such informers as shall accrue at the cost and procurement of the petitioners. [1 page, damaged.]

- May 22. 33. Petition of the governors of the free grammar school of St. Bees, Cumberland, to the King for a grant by Act of Parliament of certain messuages and quilletts of the yearly value of 28*l.* 8*s.* 0 $\frac{1}{4}$ d. situated near to the school.

Edmond Grindall, late Archbishop of Canterbury, erected the school, for maintenance whereof, and of three fellows and five scholars at Oxford and Cambridge come from the school, he asked from Queen Elizabeth certain small quilletts of lands and rents within the county, but failed through a question as to Her Majesty's 1604. title to the same. Sir Thos. Chaloner, a special benefactor to the school,—who has given it a very fit close wherein the school is built, with stone and timber, as also the sea coal to be yearly spent there—can certify this, and is now willing to yield to it all the title he has remaining in such quilletts not inrolled.

VOL. XXXVI.

- As there is no other free grammar school within 30 miles of St. Bees, and this is situate over against Kirkeudbright in Scotland it may be a fit school not only for the English, but also to instruct the Scots in our language, for which purpose divers Scottish gentlemen have already sent their children to this school. With order thereon granting the petition; signed by Sir Thos. Chaloner and James Montague, J. Young of Seton, almoner of Scotland, and Jo. Gordon, Dean of Salisbury. [1 page, damaged.]

- [May.] 36. The King to the Lord Treasurer, Earl of Northampton, and Lord Cecil. We have formerly granted power to you by our privy seal to compound with Shelley and his friends for the lands of Wm. Shelley his father, attainted in the time of the late Queen, and you agreed for 11,000*l.*, 10,000*l.* to be paid into our Exchequer, and 1,000*l.* to be given to the Lord of Effingham, for which 10,000*l.* you have taken order. We therefore authorise you to give orders to deliver the 1,000*l.* to Lord Effingham. [1½ pages, draft, damaged. See Domestic James I., Vol. VIII., No. 52.]
- May? 37–39. Warrants to Sir George Hume, master of the wardrobe, for Wm. Wyrley, Windsor, herald (sic), Wm. Wyrley, Rougecroix, pursuivant, and Rich. - May? 40. Paper concerning the bill for enlarging of trades of merchandise, being objections made to it on behalf of the Muscovy, East India, Turkey, and Merchant Adventurers' companies, and answers thereto. [This bill was read in April and reported 21 May 1604.] [2 pages.]
- June 13. 41. Grant—on behalf of Laurence Hyde of the Middle Temple, holding Donington rectory, co. Wilts, by knight's service,—on payment of 40*l.* to Sir Wm. Fleetwood, receiver of the Court of Wards and Liveries, to Robt. Hyde, of Buckland, co. Dorset, Henry and Nich. Hyde of the Middle Temple, and Douglas Castillion of Oxford University, executors of the said Laurence, of the custody of his eldest son Lawrence, in case he is under age on his father's death, or in case of his death also, of Rob. [June 15.] The King to [the owners of parks, chases, &c.] We have appointed Silvester Dodsworth, serjeant of our buckhounds, to keep a kennel of hounds for our use; and we request that you will allow him to train them in your grounds, and desire the gentlemen, your neighbours in the county, to do the same. [June 19.] 44. The King to Lord Treasurer Buckhurst. In consideration of the surrender of a pension of 4s. a day granted by us to Sir John Skinner, and of another pension of 2s. a day to Clement Turner, we grant to Fras. Morison, at suit of Sir John Skinner and Clement Turner, a pension of 6s. a day, provided Fras. Morison bring a certificate from time to time from the paymaster of Berwick, that neither of the said pensions of 4s. and 2s. granted to Skinner and Turner have been paid. [$1\frac{1}{4}$ pages, draft. The doequet of this grant, Calendar 19 June 1604, gives the name as Fynes Morrison.]

June 20. 45. Report on the petition of Sir Thos. Sherley to His Majesty, for parsonages appropriate, tithes, lay prebends, chantries, free chapels, &c. in fee-farm; and for the instalment of the debt due by him to His Majesty. We think that he should only have parsonages appropriate and tithes to the value of 1,000*l.* a year in fee-farm, reserving the old rents; and that he should, in respect thereof, assure to His Majesty a yearly rent of 1,000*l.* out of his manors and lands. And whereas Sir Thomas stood indebted to the late Queen, 22,472*l.* 18s. 5½*d.*, and has since paid 4,086*l.* 11s. 10½*d.*, and also 4,813*l.* 8s. 1½*d.*, so that the remaining debt amounts to 13,572*l.* 18s. 5½*d.*; in respect of His Majesty's favour towards him, and of his poor estate, we have assented that the same shall be paid by 400*l.* yearly out of his manors, lands, &c.; but if the said lands shall not suffice for assuring the said 1,000*l.* and the 400*l.*, that then such further assurance be given as the Lord Treasurer shall think fit.

In regard of all which, Sir Thomas Sherley should be fully acquitted of all extents, debts, &c. to His Majesty, and all conveyances and assurances given by him to the late Queen should be cancelled, and delivered to Sir Thomas upon demand. With request to Sir Thos. Lake, clerk of the Signet, to make a warrant accordingly. [2 pages. Copy signed by Sherley.]

- July 2. 48. Lord Treasurer Dorset and four others of the Council to Sir Thomas Lake. As we well move His Majesty for dispatch of this suit of the Earl of Huntingdon, we pray you present it, with our opinion thereon. [½ page, damaged.]
- July 3. 49. Declaration by the King. Our care for the uniformity of the Church sufficiently appeared in the Hampton Court assembly, wherein no material alterations were insisted on. We hoped all reasonable men would have been satisfied with the issue; but at the late Parliament, questions were renewed about the Common Prayer Book and Church government, and our assent to alterations requested, but which, on hearing our speeches and those of the Upper House, were desisted from, all things needful for establishment of a ministry being already done. We notice therefore that there appears no cause for altering the form of service; we advise conformity, especially of ministers, who have been the chief authors of divisions, and hope they will not omit substantial duties for shadows and semblance of zeal. If they are untractable, they must be compelled by the authority which we are compelled to use for preservation of the Church's authority. Such as have been censured for disobedience may have till 30 November to bethink them of their course, and then either conform or dispose of themselves other ways; as after that, proceedings will be taken against them. All archbishops, bishops, magistrates, &c., to see to the due execution thereof. [10¼ pages, damaged.]

His Majesty approves your judgment in Mr. Stephen Lesieur's suit, and wills you to order a grant, allowing him one moiety of such forfeitures as shall grow above the ordinary rate; a blank to be left for the years; to be filled in by His Majesty at the signing; also a proviso that if His Majesty find any inconveniences arise to his subjects or to himself, the grant shall be revocable. 54. "Notes of my Lord of Lo[ndon] for a proclamation abo[ut] the dis[orders] of the Church." Repetition of the former proclamation from Hampton Court. Abstract of the first proclamation relating to the Communion book, as agreeable to the practice of the Primitive Church; explanations thereof to prevent cavillings; the time granted for opponents' yielding; the King's opinion that all men would have been satisfied therewith, and his pleasure that none should expect any other alteration. Objections made thereto:—As nonconformity brings with it a popular confusion and anarchy into the commonwealth, His Majesty has again granted the ministers a longer time for deliberating, and has appointed his bishops to confer with them in their several dioceses once a month, between this and the last of November,—the uttermost time prefixed for any longer bearing with them,—which is granted that they may perceive how unpleasing any severity is to His Majesty's disposition, while there is any hope of amendment; and that they may not flatter themselves with expectation of prevailing in their seditious course at the next session of Parliament. All factious ministers and their adherents may assure themselves that the King knows their plots, and is so settled in judgment as to the religion established in the realm, that he will never give ear to those that seek to alter it. [2 pages, much decayed. Probably an enclosure in the Bishop of London's letter, see Calendar James I., Vol. VIII., No. 106.]

55. Commission from the King to Thomas Earl of Dorset, Lord High Treasurer of England; Charles Earl of Nottingham, Lord High Admiral and Lord Chief Justice in Eyre South of the Trent; Thomas Earl of Suffolk, Lord Chamberlain of the Household; Edward Earl of Worcester, Master of the Horse; William Lord Knollys, Treasurer of the Household; Edward Lord Wotton, Comptroller of the Household; Sir Geo. Hume, Lord of Berwick, Lord Treasurer of Scotland and Chancellor and Under Treasurer of the Exchequer. We understand that the expense of wood and coal in our house is so great, and the burden thereof to our subjects so grievous, as that it has been the cause of pitiful complaints. To ease our subjects, we are pleased to lay part of the charge upon ourself, by making provision of wood and coal for our house out of such woods of our own inheritance as lie convenient. We therefore give you full lawful power to call before you all persons enjoying any interest in any of our woods within 12 miles of the Thames, or of any other river or creek upon which boats may pass, and which are running into the Thames, and compound with them for their interest in such woods; and after payment, to take into our hands

Aug. 16.

57. The King to Richard, Bishop of Chester, Sir Rich. Lewknor, Chief Justice, Sir Wm. Brereton, Sir Thos. Aston, and John Ireland. Peter Torbocke has lately framed a boat, to travel upon the river Weaver, co. Chester, for his own private gain, to the great annoyance of our subjects, and we doubt whether the passage of the boat may not be prejudicial and hurtful to us, as the river runs along the bounds of our forest of Delamere, wherein he may do both us and them hurt, besides the bearing down and overthrowing of the weirs and fishing in the river, in building of which our subjects have bestowed great costs, and have kept the same time out of mind.

We therefore authorise you to examine whether the river has been navigable heretofore, and whether the passage of the boat may be prejudicial; also to command not only Peter Torbocke, but all others who shall travel with boats on the river, not to pass above Frodsham bridge, except that such as have weirs or fishing in the river may pass and travel with their fishing boats, every man within his own limits, until our pleasure be further known therein. 59. The King to Lord St. John. We hear that since our leaving Bletsoe, your son has hunted with a kennel of hounds, and killed a stag, which is strange, as he could not but know that we are careful of the game, and found the number of deer less than we expected; not that we would have disliked your hunting in your own wood, had you acquainted us therewith, knowing that you may so order it as to have your own recreation, and yet have enough for our pleasure when we come thither; but the present fact is strange, because we had said that on coming to Ashby, we should hunt in those woods. We have also heard that another stag has been driven to bay in Huntingdonshire. We wish to speak with you

He and his ancestors have been farmers and keepers of the said park for 60 years, and you, being one of his nearest kinsmen, obtained of the late Queen a lease in reversion over his head. 84. Declaration on behalf of the King:—

That he had hoped, seeing his subjects know how greatly he delights in hunting, that none would have offered offence to him in his sports. That gentlemen of the better sort have behaved as those who know their duty, but not some of the baser sort. That there have been more offences since his last coming forth to his progress, in and near his own grounds, than even in the late Queen's time; her years being less fit for recreation, the game was less carefully preserved; but the King and his posterity liking this recreation, it seems strange that any should use more licence in his grounds than they would allow in their own.

That such offences show insolence and want of reason, and he wonders,—seeing he has shown his maintenance of the laws of the realm,—that they should think he would not enforce the forest laws, which are as ancient and authentic as the Great charter.

He declares his intention, first to enforce against all stealers and hunters of deer, the penalties authorised by the present laws. To exempt them out of his general pardon. To punish them by fine, &c. To reward informers against such offenders. To debar any person of quality so offending, and from his presence. Those who provoke his displeasure to be proceeded against by martial law; but he hopes that, after such a warning, he shall not have occasion to exercise these penalties. 87. Lady Eliz. Stewart to the King. I was a faithful servant to the late Queen, but not wishing to trouble you amidst your multiplicity of suitors, am the only one left unrewarded. With note that the writer delivered a copy of the list to Lord Burghley, 6 Dec. 1591, and that since then, most of the debts mentioned have been paid. [2 pages.]

their land, it would be more honourable to bestow the same upon servants worthy of reward, reserving the said 2,600*l.* yearly.

2. For other recusants convicted, His Majesty may bestow upon his servants all the benefits of their conviction, reserving such benefit to himself as is at present answered.

3. For recusants not yet convicted, if His Majesty's servants will convict them at their own cost, His Majesty may with honour give all the benefit which the statute gives him to such servants.

4. For recusants not yet known or convicted, who desire, for avoiding the penalty of the laws, to depart the realm, and will for a licence give a benefit to such servants, His Majesty may with honour grant such licence for the number of years desired.

5. If any recusants convicted, paying the 2,600*l.* yearly, desire to depart the realm, and for His Majesty's licence will benefit some of his servants, he may with honour grant such licences, reserving to himself such yearly benefit as he now receives out of the lands of the person convicted. 93. Statement that the law in Scotland does not allow witnesses to the defendant in civil causes; and in criminal causes, selects a jury near the place where the crime was committed, and expects them to decide on their own knowledge; they may call witnesses on the side of the prosecutor if they please, but none on the side of the defender. The judges may also take private depositions and have them read in Court, but not examine witnesses publicly; therefore Sir Wm. Seyton was mistaken in saying in the Lower house that he offered Barret the benefit of witnesses; his offer was that he should have an advocate according to Scottish law. [$1\frac{1}{2}$ pages.]

- Feb. 9. 16. Lord Treasurer Dorset to Sir Thos. Lake. I send you a bill to be signed for the office of alnage, which I long since granted to Michael Haydon, my steward. I now have, with his consent, joined two other of my well deserving servants in the same grant. This is only a confirmation of the former grant of alnage, wherein there are 34 years yet to come, and a special grant of the new draperies in London, to avoid contention between the Duke [of Lenox] and these patentees; because, though I take the law clear that all new draperies fall under the office of alnage, yet the Duke and his counsel question it in other counties, but for London he is agreed that I shall have it. In respect of this, I have willingly yielded to his new grant of all my office of alnage throughout England besides, only reserving to myself this alnage of London.
As by this new grant he may make void all the grants of alnage throughout England, and also avoid mine, it is agreed between him and me that I shall have mine clear. For which, and for this grant from His Majesty to the said patentees, I have caused them to give an increased rent of 36*l.*, besides the ancient rent of 64*l.* Pray get it signed by His Majesty before his departure, and inform him that that manner of grant is more beneficial to him than to the patentees, by this great increase of rent, and no more years reserved than before, which was 36, for it is only a confirmation.
There is a book to pass to one Willowes, who is to pay in almost 4,000*l.* for the manor of Fen Ditton, co. Cambridge, long since sold by the commissioners to one Stead, at 40 years' purchase, but refused by him, and afterwards sold by them to Willowes; further this therefore also, as it will bring in present money. - Feb. 12. The Court, Whitehall. 18. Viscount Cranborne and Sir John Popham to Sir John Fortescue. By the diligence of the directors of His Majesty's Mines Royal, a mine of copper has lately been discovered in the mountains of Lancashire, called Furnes Fcls, at Coniston, far from any dwelling house, which is very beneficial, both by the quantities of copper delivered yearly in the Office of Ordnance, and that by this means we are furnished with copper, with which heretofore the Kings of this realm could not be supplied but by favour of foreign Princes.

Allan Nicolson, who married a sister of the director of these mines, dwelling near the said works, the workmen,—by reason of the often storms and want of succour, there being no other house near the said place but his,—are burdensome to him, and he is often forced to spend his time amongst them for furtherance of the service. As the house he dwells in belongs to the late monastery of Furness, parcel of the Duchy of Lancaster, and he is now a suitor to His Majesty for an increase of years, we request your favour if His Majesty refer the cause to you. Feb. 20. 20. The King to Sir Richard Smith. For relief of the tanners, and for the benefit of the realm in upholding the price of tin to foreign nations, we keep the pre-emption of tin in our own hands, and have written to our Lord Treasurer to deliver you 17,000*l.*, which we require you to carry, with a sufficient guard, to the coinage towns of Devonshire and Cornwall, and there buy to our use all the tin coined in Helston, Truro, and Lostwithiel, by the end of the present month; and in Devonshire and Liskeard in Cornwall, by the end of the Midsummer coinage, giving 28*l.* the thousandweight for the good, with abatement for what is defective. Also for the tin of Devonshire according to our former directions. All which tin, and that already in your custody, we require you to see safely conveyed to London and to places assigned, to be there vented to our use.

We also require you to send to our Treasurer a perfect account of your proceedings, and for your pains, charges, and losses, we have given him warrant to make you full allowance. [1 page, copy.]

Feb. 23. 21. The King to Sir Robert Carey. As we have made choice of your wife, Lady Carey, one of the ladies of the Privy Chamber to the Queen, to have the charge of our second son, the Duke of York, in respect of his tender years, by reason of which her service you will also be tied to residence about our son, we authorise you to take the charge of his family and see things well ordered about his person, and concerning his health. Also to prevent all disorders among his servants, and see that every of them do their duties; and wherein they misbehave, acquaint us or our officers. And of all things needful to be made known to us concerning our said son, you shall inform us, or the Queen, or in our absence, some of our Privy Council. [$2\frac{1}{4}$ pages, draft.]

&c. In the time of the late Queen, the office was granted to one Nelson; he sold it to William Waller, who has made spoil of the game, wasted much timber, &c., oppressed the forest with conies,—surcharged it with beasts, sheep, and swine, which consume the pasture and coppices, the only shelter for deer, and routed up the soil, by means whereof many fawns are killed, and many other deer destroyed, lately upwards of 40, besides what are stolen. All these abuses are proved by the oaths of sufficient witnesses, by virtue of a commission from the Justice in Eyre. Waller is now a prisoner for other causes in the Fleet, where he is likely to remain, and his servants in his absence continue the same disorders.

With reference thereon to the Lord Admiral, and his report that the matters above alleged have been proved; that Waller, deserves to be sequestered, and that the petitioner is a meet man to have the place. [$1\frac{1}{2}$ pages. See Calendar James I., 3 April 1605.]

31. The King to Wm. Garway and 12 other Levant merchants. We of late wrote requiring you and other merchants residing in London and other ports of this realm to meet in London, to resolve how the Levant trade may be reduced to such a government that it may be lawful to as many of our subjects as are disposed to trade into the Levant seas, contributing for support of the trade.

We expressed our meaning to be principally to provide for the future state of the trade, having already eased you of the company of great sums due to us in respect of our late imposition. As we understand there can be no convenient settling of the trade until the debts and arrears of the old trade are cleared, or some good order taken therein,—which are things only belonging to you of the former company, and not to be dealt in by others who are strangers thereto,—we command you to see upon whom the debts and arrears ought to be laid.

If you find any impediment whereby you cannot proceed to clearing the former state of the trade, we require you to certify it to our Council, that some further order may be taken therein, whereby our purpose of enlarging the general liberty of the said trade of the Levant may be better and more speedily effected. 36. The King to the Treasurer and Barons of the Exchequer. In Trinity Term 1593, an order was made, by express command of the late Queen, by the then Lord Treasurer and Barons of the Exchequer, reciting, that Her Majesty had granted to Sir Wm. Drury the receivership of cos. Essex, Herts, and Middlesex, and of the city of London, for due execution whereof, he, Sir Wm. Waldegrave, and 11 others named, became bound in divers sums. That Sir Wm. Drury, at the time of his death, had not paid such sums as he had received, and process was issued against him and his sureties; nevertheless afterwards, at the suit of his executors, Her Majesty commanded a lease of all his lands seized for debt to be granted to Sir Nich. Bacon, at the rent of 200 marks a year; sale of all his goods and chattels to be made to Sir Nicholas Bacon; and all processes against the sureties, and the seizures of the lands, and issues upon the heirs and executors of Sir William to be discharged, and all money received by the sheriffs repaid; and so to remain so long as Sir Nich. Bacon paid every year the 200 marks reserved in the said lease.

The debts of the said Sir Wm. Drury, at Michaelmas 1588, amounted to 3,288*l.* 12*s.* 6 $\frac{3}{4}$ d., whereof there was paid into the Exchequer, out of the issues of his lands seized by the sheriffs of Suffolk and Middlesex, 1,800*l.*, as also 863*l.* 13*s.*, the value of the goods seized for such debt, and sold, so that 2,663*l.* 1*s.* 1*d.* has been paid. There is therefore due to us 625*l.* 11*s.* 5 $\frac{1}{4}$ d., which sum Sir Robt. Drury, son and heir of the said Sir William, has made suit to us to be forgiven. In consideration of his service, and that George Sotherton, deputy receiver to Sir Wm. Drury, had deceived Her late Majesty of 600*l.*, parcel of the said 3,288*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, we pardon Sir Robt. Sept. ? 60. Objections made by English merchants trading with France to Council, against the edict made 20 April 1600:—

Upon the first edition of that law, the merchants perceiving that it would tend to their overthrow, complained to the late Queen, who procured a treaty by commissioners, and a conference on either part. At the next Parliament the Commissioners of England moved the same to the whole Estate, and signified Her Majesty's pleasure for establishing some Act to enforce the making of cloth, if it might be, answerable to the said edict, or to restrain the deceit in cloth; when it was resolved that the drapery of this kingdom could not be drawn to the perfection the edict required; but to satisfy the French King, and avoid deceit in cloth, which was the pretext of that law, an Act was made only tolerating the use of the tenter to strain a wrought broad cloth, one yard in length, and one half quarter in breadth, and a kersey and cotton half a yard in length and a nail in breadth.

Thereupon the execution of the edict was deferred, and the merchants hoped that it would have been repealed. These proceedings show the rigour of the edict, and what course has been taken therein; yet the merchants offer the following further exceptions:—

First. By the edict, all coloured cloth is prohibited to be transported to France unless dyed in the wool, which is impossible in divers colours, for all grain colours, as violets, blacks, tawnies, &c., are wrought upon other colours; and the edict is therein contrary to all former treaties, and even against the custom now used in France, where they dye all or the most part out of white. Besides that in Brittany and Gascony, where the greatest part of English drapery is vented, there are no dyers, nor would any part of France, but Rouen, Paris, and Dieppe, receive cloths of that sort.

Second. Most part of English cloth transported for France is made of the coarsest wools, as kerseys, cottons, and bays, serving for linings, and cannot be made as the edict would enforce. By their laws, all cloth made in France for linings, and exceeding 2s. the French ell, is not subject to search, and may be sold in false colours; two-thirds of our cloth exported is of that sort; but the same law is imposed upon the coarsest English cloth as upon the finest French.

By the edict, the search and seizure of the English drapery is referred to the master and wardens of the Drapers' Company in France, which is very partial; in this kingdom, all matters between merchant strangers and merchants of the realm are inquired of by a jury half English and half strangers; and there are no such master and wardens in France, except at Rouen, Paris, and Dieppe.

Faulty English cloth has no less penalty than confiscation, nor other judges than the merchants' greatest adversaries; so that the merchants would be in continual danger of loss; for since the making of the said edict, cloths viewed and searched according to the edict, and found lawful, being sent to another market, have been confiscated; and the visitors appointed by the edict are so malignant, that they on purpose defer their search.

Lastly, the merchants can conceive no possibility to continue their trade, without continual loss, unless the edict is repealed, and the French King will admit of cloth found to be according to the statute of 43 Eliz. now in force; or else, that by a new Act of Parliament, all tenters and stretching may be restrained in all cloths vendible in France, which is the chiefest matter insisted upon and impugned by the edict, and which will give best satisfaction to the French, and therein procure their safest and firmest trade. when he heard the alarm of taking the horses from Warwick, with the vulgar opinion that it was only a robbery, apprehended disorder of higher nature, from the nature of the place, the insolent manner, and that the kind of horses were heavier, and not breathed or ridden for that trade. Thus no time was lost, and by virtue of his lieutenantancy, he not only got into his hands the munition and armour of all gentlemen about him, either absent from their houses or in doubtful guard, but also sent such directions to the towns about him, that Winter was stricken, and had been taken, but that he was rescued by his companions. They, perceiving that the country before them had notice of them, hastened away with loss, and 16 of their followers were taken by the townsmen, and sent to the Sheriff of Warwick, and from him to London. He also sent the news to the sheriffs of cos. Worcester and Stafford, so that they had time to stand on their guard, and keep watch at ferries and bridges, to intercept all intelligence, the waters then overflowing. Dec. 16. 90. The King to [Sir Thos. Lake?]. We have heretofore granted Westminister. a lease of our park of Plumpton, &c., in our Forest of Inglewood, Cumberland, to our servant John Murray, for 40 years; yearly rent, 121*l.* 6*s.* 3*d.*, payable at two feasts of the year, and under a pain of forfeiture of 10*l.* for every two months wherein the same remains unpaid. But the possession of the said park is withholden from him by Thomas Musgrave, of Beaucastle, and others, against whom he is forced to commence a suit at law, and yet he is charged with payment of the rent, and the forfeiture of 10*l.* for non-payment. We are therefore pleased that he shall not be so charged until settled in possession of the said park, &c. To this purpose we will that you draw a Privy Seal for our signature. Dec. 28. 91. Information of Charles Wren before Wm. James, D.D., Dean Durham. of Durham, Wm. Morton, Robt. Cooper, and John Barnes, justices of the peace:—

Being at his mother's house at Bishop Auckland, on Monday or Tuesday, the 16th or 17th instant, he heard that Eleanor Jackson, a Recusant, wife of Thos. Jackson of that place, spoke certain words on 1 Nov., the first day of Parliament, in Francis Bainbridge's house there. Having drunk a pennyworth or two in the said alehouse, her son came in and told her that was the day that the Parliament began, when she answered, "Then I will drink the other penny for luck's sake, for I hope we shall have good luck this day."

Sent for Fras. Bainbridge and his wife, when the latter confessed that Eleanor Jackson was there that night, and said as before mentioned, and also that that day would either end or mend them. This was spoken before any notice could be given of the treason plotted to be done on the Tuesday. Annexing,

91. I. Examination of Jane Bainbridge of Bishop Auckland. Did not hear Eleanor Jackson name drinking of a penny, but she said that she was well content to pay for her supper that night, though it cost 12 pence, for she hoped that day would either end or mend them.

5 Jan. 1606.

91. II. Like examination of Wm. Sonkey of Bishop Auckland, gentleman. Eleanor Jackson is a papist. On 9 or 10 November last, an open rejoicing was made at Bishop Auckland, for the defeating of the late intended treasons, and the delivery of the King and realm; and she, having been out of town that day, as she came in in the evening, asked why the bonfires were made; being told why, she showed herself not well contented, and going towards her house at Newgate, and seeing her children at a little fire which they had kindled at her door, she beat them and put out the fire, and so misbehaved in that time of rejoicing as was offensive to him and other good neighbours.

13 Dec. 1605.

91. III. Like examination of John Pattison of West Auckland. Eight days after last Michaelmas, being sent by Thos. Jackson, then and yet prisoner in Durham gaol, to Eleanor his wife, at Bishop Auckland, for some relief, she first made her case lamentable, saying that she had not sufficient to sustain herself and her children. Advised her to conform to God's law and the King's, in coming to church, and to abide at home with her children, and not wander daily from one papist's house to another, and set away her husband's goods as she had done; also told her that the papists were past all their hopes. She grasped examine very tight by the waist, and said, "John, thou shalt hear news before Martinmas day, such as thou never heard yet, and then thou will tell me another tale." Paid no respect to this until after the discovery of the late pretended treason, when he thought it his duty to disclose it. [2 pages.]

93. Petition of John Daniell to Lord Chief Baron Fleming. Thos. Chamberlain came to my house 27 May last, with 10 others, to pull down an old house of his adjoining mine; and having broken down the wall, he and his company, in contempt of your order taken in the Exchequer, entered the upper part of my house, broke down two doors, and committed divers other outrages, endangering my life. My wife being then at the Exchequer, upon the said order, when she returned, one of Chamberlain's men, Andrew Williams, came behind her, and forced the key of the door out of her hand, and drew her into the street. Hearing a great noise, I came down into the hall, and found Williams and Chamberlain's wife within the doors of my house, ready to receive the rest of their company; but I forced them into the street, and made fast the door.

I returned to my chamber, and looking out of my window, saw Chamberlain coming towards my door in a great fury; but when he could not open it, he took my key, locked it on the outside, and put the key in his pocket; and seeing me at the window, he threw a tile at my head with such violence as to break the frame of the casement, and so continued throwing, abusing, challenging me to come down to him if I dared, and committing other misdemeanors, as may appear by my bill of complaint, ready to be exhibited in the Star Chamber, but which I am unwilling to put in execution, without your consent and allowance to sue there in formâ pauperis, as in all my other suits.

The order set down was beneficial for Chamberlain, as I had but a month allowed to get another house to dwell in; yet Chamberlain proceeded as aforesaid, and publicly pronounced against me, saying that I had been upon the pillory, and had had my ears cut, and had cozened them out of their house. I request recompense, or licence to take my remedy in the Star Chamber. [$\frac{2}{4}$ page.]

94. Warrant from Council for a letter as follows:—The King to [the Warden of Winchester College]. We lately addressed you in behalf of Lord Say, for a lease in reversion of your impropriate parsonage of Andover; since, upon the petition of Rich. Venables, the present tenant, we find that he and his ancestors have been the tenants 50 years; and that by reason of like letters obtained of the late Queen, they have been driven to pay to strangers great sums, besides the fines and rent due to your college. We therefore, being willing that ancient tenants should be preferred, signify that unless you can take just exception against Rich. Venables for breach of covenant, we require you to dispose thereof to him.

Nevertheless, as we are informed that Venables and his predecessors have, without warrant, felled 1,500 of our timber trees, and spoiled the woods of our Forest of Chute, Hampshire, we give liberty to Lord Say to make proof thereof until the first of November

The Court.

96. The King to ———. Being informed by Dr. Richard Brooke, our chaplain, that entering into bonds by your procurement, in sums amounting to 300*l.* you have suffered the same to be recovered and paid by him, almost to his utter undoing; your estate being able to perform it, it is our pleasure that you repay the said 300*l.* to our said chaplain, with such charges as he has sustained by disbursing thereof; otherwise we cannot but judge you ungrateful towards him, being your own brother-in-law, and we will deny him no lawful means for urging you to do your duty. [$\frac{1}{2}$ page, copy.]

97. The King to [the Lord Treasurer]. Sir Thos. Knyvett came to us this day, as you thought he would, about the 7,000*l.* which we had required him to pay into our receipt, upon reasons received from you. He does not insist upon any promise of ours to release him of that debt, upon condition to discharge us against Martin the workmaster, for all such sums as he pretends to be due by us to him, but only alleges that the payment of this money cannot be warranted to him against Martin, by any other way than by determination of the suit depending between them; and that his acceptance of Martin's release for this sum will prejudice him in the whole which Martin sues for, which is 27,000*l.* Wanting speedy payment of the money, and yet loath to do any subject, and much less a servant of his desert wrong, we think it fit you should propose this matter to our Council, to whom we have also written to examine and hear the parties. If we see upon their report any reason why the money should not be delivered by Sir Thos. Knyvett, we will signify our further pleasure. Meantime consider how our needs for Ireland may be otherwise supplied, if this payment fails; Sir Thos. Knyvett is not to receive any prejudice for not delivering the money upon our former commandment. [$1\frac{1}{4}$ pages, draft.]

98. The King to [the Privy Council]. Upon information by our Treasurer of England that there was remaining in the hands of Sir Thomas Knyvett, warden of our mint, 7,000*l.* detained to our use, out of the profits claimed by the workmaster of the mint upon the working of our moneys; and that the workmaster, in regard of our present use of money, relinquished his claim thereto, and gave the warden a discharge for it; we required the warden to pay the money into our Exchequer. But he has besought us not to press him to the payment thereof, as he can receive no warrant for his discharge against the workmaster's demand, but by judgment in the suit depending between the workmaster and him; and that the workmaster's offer to make him a discharge for the said sum is but a prejudice to him in the whole suit, which is not less than 27,000*l.* If this be true, although our need of money for the present be very urgent, yet we will not supply it with hard measures, much less to a gentleman of his qualities, and to a servant deserving well of us. We have therefore directed our Treasurer to move the matter to you, and to direct the warden and workmaster to attend you ; and when you have heard both sides, if you find the warden's excuse just, and that there is no way for his discharge for the said payment but the determination of the controversy, then our Treasurer is to think of some other way to supply our present need for Ireland. Advise whether it would not be more speedy to determine that controversy by commission than the course of law. [$1\frac{1}{4}$ pages, draft.]

99. Warrant to Sir Thos. Knyvett to deliver 1,000*l.*, not needed by Sir Rich. Martin, to the use of the Queen. [$\frac{2}{3}$ page, draft.]

100. Articles exhibited to Council against Eleazer le Marchant, Helear le Fevre, Leonard le Measurer, and Nicholas Davye, the popular procurers [of Jersey]. They have exhibited untrue and unjust complaints against the governors and justices, pretending them to be for the inhabitants of the island, whereas they had no procuration under the Public Seal, as they ought to have had, by the orders of 1568 and 1598.

They were the principal stirrers of mutiny in the island, in the beginning of His Majesty's reign, and proceedings were had against them before the bailiff and justices there, and they were bound not to depart the island as popular procurers, which bonds they forfeited.

The bailiffs and justices have denied the suits of these procurers, seeing their practices tended only, by factious assemblies and innovations, to the ruin of the country. The consequences of their actions already appear dangerous, for the people are grown so contemptuous of government that they can hardly be contained in obedience, and the reformation intended by the governors and justices is impeached. It is hoped that exemplary justice may be done to them. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page.]

101. Note by Geo. Douglas to ———. The office of Surveyor of issues lost by jurors was given to Sir Hen. Bronker, 20 June 1601, for 12 years ; and for his pains and charges, a moiety of the said issues above 460*l.* I beg the said office in reversion, my book being in all points conformable to the former. 10. Sir Allan Percy to Dudley Carleton. I am sorry that you are so near to be Jack out of office, yet you need not despair of making a fortune, without either digging or begging, for here hath been a sore battle fought last Wednesday, where were overthrown many of the commanders; and I doubt not but by the help of some of my friends, which my attendance at Court hath purchased me, to procure you one, though it be to attend the King's dooges [dogs], which you must rather obtain by favour than merit; your experience hath been so small in such weighty affairs. Think upon this if the rest fail; it is swift, for the dogs run very fleet, and likely the sooner to run to promotion. Let me be partaker of your French news. [1 page.]

11. Sir Thomas Leighton to the Earl of Salisbury. In Guernsey His Majesty has an ancient due called droit d'aubaine, a very ancient flower of his crown, which is that the lands and goods of all foreigners resident within that isle, and dying without heirs of their body, fall to His Majesty. A month since, a Frenchwoman, Rebecca Rowley, died there, and the procurer and receiver seized her goods, and have solicited the justices for sentence to be given for His Majesty, which they have delayed and refused. I request a letter from you and the rest of Council to the bailiff and jurats, to give a definite sentence, that if they judge against His Majesty and their law, his officers may appeal to you for redress.

Furthermore his Majesty, at the late being here of the deputies of that isle, granted the inhabitants authority to levy a petty custom on all merchants, as well subjects as foreigners, for finishing and maintaining a pier there. At my late coming thence, I took order, finding 100*l.* already collected, that the works should be proceeded with this spring; notwithstanding I find, by letters from my lieutenant and His Majesty's procurer, that the bailiff and jurats oppose my order, and seek to draw from the farmers of this petty custom this sum into their own hands. I therefore request that they be enjoined not to touch this money, but that the same be delivered to Peter Carey, my lieutenant, and to James Beauvoir, one of the jurats, to be employed to the use for which it was dedicated. John Locherson asks the office of a commissary for musters in our cautionary towns of Flushing and Brill, in the Low Countries, now supplied by John Sparrowhawk at Flushing and Geo. Thorisby at the Brill. As Locherson has furthered our service, we have granted him the reversion of either place which shall first fall void, with the customary allowances; meanwhile you are to pay him a pension of 20*d.* a day, to begin from March last, out of the checks raised of the captains and companies serving us in Flushing and Brill. Bridgeman and Elizabeth, his wife, sole daughter and heir of Wm. Charleton, of Apley, co. Salop, and of others, complaining of great wrongs offered them by Andrew Charleton, her uncle, who has deprived her of all the lands and goods of her father, because at his death she was but 10 years of age, and now cannot prosecute the recovery of her right by ordinary course of law. We require you, with assistance of two or three of the judges, to examine and determine the cause, and if Andrew Charleton shall not conform to your determination, advertise us thereof. For the settling of controversies among our subjects, touching the bearing of our arms in flags and other ornaments of ships at sea, we send you a form how the same shall henceforth be borne, and desire you to give order to all the officers of the Navy, masters of ships, and others whom it may concern, that from henceforth all our subjects, as well of South as North Britain, shall bear in their maintop the red cross, called St. George's Cross, and the white cross, called St. Andrew's Cross; and in their foretop, our subjects of the South the red cross only, and our subjects of the North in their foretop the white cross only, as they also were accustomed; and that they wear not their said flags in any other form, as they will answer the contrary. Understanding that there are six reversions already granted to take place before Mr. Justinian Povey (of whose petition I enclose a copy), as he has been brought up under one of His Majesty's auditors for 16 years, and is of good state and ability, I do not see how this grant can be prejudicial to His Majesty, nor beneficial for him by any probability, he being first to overlive six persons, whereof five are as like to live as himself. Wherefore according to His Majesty's reference to me, I require you to draw up the grant. [$\frac{1}{2}$ page.] Enclosing,

Also like order, 26 May 1606,—on receipt of the governor's letters, that if the commissioners could not come over, procurers should be sent to treat before His Majesty;—that commissioners are needed to give remedy by inspection and hearing informations upon the place, and therefore they fall back upon their resolution of 24 April. 54. The King to [the Lord Treasurer]. There are certain Crown lands, let by way of custody, not so beneficial to us as other lands demised by lease. You have signified that by demising thereof more benefit might accrue to us, either by improvements or by fines, and moved us for a commission to you and others of our Council for demising of them, which we are prepared to grant.

As we desire to pleasure the Earl of Montgomery, whose expense in our affairs is great, we have resolved to demise some portion of those lands for 60 years, to his benefit; wherefore we command you, when he shall inform of any parcels of the said lands, and has agreed with the tenants for reasonable sums for demises, to order grants thereof to the yearly value of 2,000*l.*, for 60 years, reserving the ancient rents, &c.

We have also given commission to you and others of the Council to compound with divers of our subjects holding lands by estates in tail which are extinct, and the land in right reverted to us, but withheld by undue titles; you are to agree with the tenants for reasonable sums. We are also pleased, for the further relief of the said Earl, to order that out of the first moneys that shall come into the receipt upon such commission, you pay him 200*l.* a year as our free gift. Upon His Majesty's accession, he granted the reversion thereof to Edm. Lassels, then groom of the Chamber. Since then, John Lepton, His Majesty's servant, made suit to His Majesty to be joined in the patent with Mr. Lassels, but the Lord Treasurer affirmed that this would be most inconvenient. 61. Petition of Sir Henry Nevill to Lord Treasurer Dorset, for permission to compound for a lease in reversion for 21 years, of two small tenements of His Majesty, parcel of the manor of Sunning, one for four marks yearly, and the other for 3*l.* 7*s.* 4*d.*; they lie near to him and are commodious. Will give fine and increase of rent proportionably as other tenants do, and the present tenant refuses to deal for them. With report thereon by the Lord Treasurer, that the manor of Sunning is part of the lands mortgaged to the city, so that it is not in the power of the Commissioners, without special warrant from the King, to grant the lease; and if His Majesty gave power to lease it, yet being in mortgage, the lease would be void. 64. Dr. Lionel Sharpe to [the Council]. So many great griefs oppress my heart and stop my speech; the suspicion cast upon my honourable friend Lord Erskine, and the dislike that divers worthy gentlemen are brought into, who intended but to tender their duties, and would do nothing until they had express commandment from the King; most of all your displeasure, and the indignation of the King, which I fear. And all this while, out of my love, I think to serve the King, so that the work itself, though done of never so good an intention, is scarce held good, because done without warrant, and only of my own head, though rising from loyal affection.

I saw the discontent of many breaking forth in speeches and quarrels, and how they have bred a strange disunion of hearts between our nations, and how this disunion has bred jealousies between us, which I have laboured to extinguish by public sermons and private conferences, so far was I from nourishing them. These jealousies have wrought great fear of troubles in others and myself. This fear bred in me a desire fuller of devotion to His Majesty than discretion in me, being so mean a man, to deal with so high matters of State, and to think my care was needful, where your cares are so great, to whom it properly belongs. But out of this excess of love to His Majesty, I entered into this course, to draw the affections of divers knights and gentlemen to the service of the King, and to the defence of all others, both English and Scottish Lords, who were dear and near to him, if need should require, to be ready at one or two hours' warning, to withstand any attempt either against the King or his Court; but not to stir on foot before they had assured their loyal affections to the King, and saw an attempt, and received express commandment from the King for their direction. The names of such as I dealt with I gave in, with most of whom I did not go so far in particular, but only in general that it was a time to show themselves dutiful to the King and State.

The occasion of my forwardness was a sudden commitment of some lords and gentlemen, at such a time of night, by your Lordships, with an order upon the straighter keeping of the Prince's Court. I could not think that they meant anything directly against the King, but others feared, as I found on the morning of 25th June, that there might be something meant against some in the Court, but whom I knew not. When I had won some few gentlemen, as by chance I met them, or had cause to go to them, or they to come to me, upon my return to Court on 26 June, I made an overture of their duties and affections, for His Majesty's service if need required, to Lord Erskine, who was not unwilling to receive them for that purpose, and not for his own strength; and promised, if they came, to acquaint His Majesty with their dutiful affections. He had a list afterwards of some who had been spoken to, and of others who were to be, and of whom we were assured. I named all that I could then remember; one whom I had not spoken to was Sir Robert Chichester whom I assured. I never severed the King from his Lords, both English and Scottish; I joined their safety with the safety of the King, and his safety with theirs, and thought their dangers must be all one.

I never doubted of your care, but showed my private care for you as well as for others. That this was done without warrant and commission from any man, I avow. I cannot but clear Lord Erskine, though I accuse myself. I used Lord Erskine's name to some whom I spoke to, not as warranting me to do this, but as promising he would receive and make know their dutiful affections if they came to him. I made this overture to Lord Erskine rather than to any other Lords, because he was at Court, and of great trust about His Majesty, captain of his guard, one whom I might have easy access to, and to whom I was much beholden; and besides, (which I forgot to speak at the Council Board) one whom I knew to love you, and to be temperate, discreet, religious, and affectionate to the King's service ; so that I thought it was all one to come to him or to you in respect of the general. But in respect of my particular purpose, I held it not all one, for I knew you needed not my service, and would have thought it improper, as you do ; but the lords and gentlemen of Scotland, especially Lord Erskine, would not think it either needless or improper for any of us to show our love and care of them, in doubtful times. As I will never deny in that general care I had this particular contained, to do something for their safeguard, as you and others would have done if any several attempts should have been made upon them all, or any of them,—as many of them doubted because there had been some such thing intended (Cobham), and which if it should have happened or yet happen, would have been very derogatory to the King's honour and danger of his person,—therefore in seeking their safety, every man seeks the safety of the King, and the peace of the kingdoms.

Weigh my actions according to these ends. We read in a heathen, [Plato] that we ought to be more careful lest strangers be hurt amongst us than our own countrymen, because strangers lie most open to injury. Therefore, though I love my own countrymen, being as worthy and loyal a nation as any under heaven, yet if, as it has fallen out, any through their discontent should take upon them to remove the Scottish Lords from the King, I should think that men should prefer the safety of the Scotchmen before the spleen of such Englishmen, and follow the King's will and not the humour of such malcontents, and go rather to the weaker part assailed, than to the stronger part, the assailers. I make no comparison here of worth, but of danger. We are brethren ; we the elder, and they the younger ; it cannot but be grievous to our common father, and dangerous for us, to fall out and not defend one another, if some among us should make any broils, as we see what has been intended since the King came in.

“ Here you but breed jealousies between the King and his Lords, as if they would not be careful enough of this without your care.” Whosoever concludes this, gathers up what I never scattered. I reverence your Lordships, as men that take a most vigilant and fatherly care of all these things, as it appears by a writing of mine, which came into the King's hands last week. “ But why then would you have men brought to Lord Erskine, not depending upon any other English lords, as though you thought such would not be true to the King ?” A thing far from my conceit. These were my two respects ; first, as I said at the Council Board, because it was needless to move them that would come with the lords whom they followed ; but principally because it was not so peculiar a strength as I meant to Lord Erskine, that he might have them still with him, for the King's service and his own safeguard, which could not have been if they had depended upon others too. I sought therefore to such as either were bound to him before for some favours done them, or to such as were willing to be bound to him for this tender of their duties to the King. This was my desire, which Lord Erskine still refused, he intending only, I chiefly the service of the King; but by one means I thought to provide for the safeguard of my Sovereign and of my friend.

I cannot conceive how I should thus cast jealousy between the King and his Lords. It will be asked what danger was there, either to the King, Prince, or Scottish Lords? I took care not for what was, but for what might be, because I thought that unknown mischiefs were most dangerous; "But this bred jealousy between the English and Scotch;" alas, it was bred long before, as I made manifest in that letter which came to the King's hands, whereof I speak. Compare this and that together, and you shall find Sharpe to be an honest man.

I can bring witnesses both out of the King and Prince's Court, that no private man has more laboured to quench jealousy and discord than I have done, by persuading the Scotchmen not to be distrustful of us; which is not to be taken as if they distrusted all, but Jesuits, papists, and malcontents, whose speeches and deeds against them they continually hear of by divers. We are a religious people, lovers of our Kings, and therefore, they should strive to deserve well of us, and we well of them, and to this purpose I have spoken oftentimes.

What wrong do I in this, either to the English or to the Scotch, or what cause give I that any should think that I wrong the King? It is far from my heart to wrong him or your Lordships. If in the manner of doing this I have offended, I crave pardon, first of His Majesty, that I served him by my discretion, and not by his discretion; and next of you, that I took a matter of that nature, improper to me and proper to yourselves; though without any mind of breeding a jealousy of your care, but to show my own care as the King's sworn servant, and in hope to win his favour by doing well, as every good subject strives to do, especially in doubtful and troublesome times, as a very great personage in Court termed them on 25 June.

I know not what testimonies are against me which may mistake or wrest my words. The times were fearful, but no persons that I know, especially not His Majesty, being full of magnanimity and power. I may have said that the King has had good cause of jealousy of some English, for disloyalty and disobedience, but hence to gather that I said he was jealous of all the English were mistaking my words; indefinite propositions may be understood according to the matter in handling. It could never enter into my thoughts to say that the King should be jealous of all the English, when I see such an infinite number of them that dearly love him and his royal seed, and so many noble personages entrusted with his person and great affairs; yet if any honest gentleman with whom I sit should, through not marking, mistake any word or proposition of mine, I hope His Majesty will let me be the expounder of my own mind, and not suffer any mistake to overthrow the full drift of my intention, which is to plant a judgment of the King's excellency in the minds of all; I talk withal to draw all hearts I can. Non solum ad regem sed ad Jacobum; nec ad principem modo, sed Henricum, without whom I would rather be dead than alive: one of them is our joy, and the other our hope.

This is what bred this excess of care and love in me. If out of this excessive care, any word has slipt from me that may occasion misconstruction, let not this error be turned to my undoing; and if there be any hard consequence in this matter which I did not foresee, which the greatness of some lawyer's wit, by strictness of law, whereof I am ignorant, may enforce upon me, I appeal from the King's justice to his clemency. Surely, my Lords, I feel disgrace enough in this my imprisonment for this my unadvised course. If I should die for it, I should die with a good conscience, which is the only thing that comforts me. My life is bitter because I live in your displeasure; more bitter that I fear the indignation of the King. My humble suit, therefore, is that you will pardon the unwitting fault. Mediate to His Majesty for me ut transeat a me calix iste. You have now the full truth.

P.S.—If anything herein confessed is dangerous to me by law, I hope it will not be used against me. [6 pages.]

some of the prebendaries seem, by their own statutes, to assume the right of sub-dean, yet you will find that none of them will farm the revenue, &c. of the deanery, unless they may have it half for nothing. The reason you may soon conceive after you understand what power they take in disposing and concealing the said revenue, by reserving or including that office among themselves. It is unreasonable that a member of the body should be the head, and continue a member also. It is well known that the full moiety of the dean's revenue arises from the exchequer of that church, whereof some one prebendary is always the treasurer for the year, out of which all deductions are first made, before any dividend can be made; by which deductions (as officers' wages and fees, law expenses, reparations of their houses and church, &c.) they will leave a small portion to the dean, if they have the carrying it among themselves, although he ought to have full two parts out of three of all the remainder. Neither can they dispose of any part of the revenue in their exchequer to any uses without the privity of himself or his substitute.

The full rent of all his domains and tithes at the uttermost value does not come to above 400*l.* odd a year, out of which he is also to pay unto the said Exchequer 130*l.* Now if little or nothing should be allowed him from their exchequer, for that he is neither resident to keep hospitality (being one of the many reasons of having any portion of the dividend), nor can be privy to their ordinary disbursements, either by himself or any other than one of them, how soon will the greatest part of his living be withdrawn? Wherefore it were very fit for Mr. Dean to have a clause in his dispensation to appoint a substitute, unless one of the prebendaries will yield him an honest rent for the same, which I think they will never do, standing upon their further advantage of gain the other way.

I will undertake to assure him clearly 1,000 marks a year out of it, and give you near the same sum to make the bargain, so as I may be his substitute during his life, and be enabled with his authority in the country to countenance the place as beseemeth.

P.S.—It will be fit for Mr. Dean to hasten, unless he will lose these harvest fruits and the Michaelmas rent. [2 pages.]

Although it is not ordinary to alter, in causes between subjects and those of other Princes, the usual form of trial in the Court of Admiralty, yet to show the French King how ready we are to give him satisfaction, we have chosen you, with the judge of our said Court and another, to hear and report how in your judgment you find such causes to stand, and how we may give more speedy satisfaction therein than by the ordinary proceedings of the Court. As we have cause to make further sale of some lands, &c. not contained in our entail, we require you, by virtue of our said commission, to make sale in fee-farm of chantry lands, prebends, rectories, tithes, &c., amounting to 2,200*l.* a year, according to previous instructions. 99. Lord Norris to the Earl of Salisbury. I shall not trouble you with any news, because you hear more than I know; but as I am likely to travel homeward by land, I hold it my duty to give you an intimation of my course, and that my journey would be the more pleasing if I knew how to make it of any use in your service. 104. Observations upon the Act for the alnage of narrow draperies. This Act is grounded upon the Statute for woollen cloths, the reasons moving it, and the offences committed, being of the same nature. Also upon the customs of other countries, there being none with whom England traffics where the stuffs are not first alnaged, and sealed with the seal of the country or city. Also, upon necessity, for as the trades of making stuffs began, setting on work a great number of poor, so the vices which crept in with the skill cause the stuffs made to grow into dislike, whereby the trade decays.

It is grounded moreover upon the interest of the Crown, and the right of His Majesty to the fees due for the same; for as he is by Statutes interested in the alnage and subsidy of woollen cloths,—there being at the time of making the same Statutes no other stuffs made in England,—he should have like alnage and subsidy of things made within this realm as his predecessors.

The reasons moving the same are, that none of the narrow draperies made here are full size in length or breadth, viz., 30 yards long, and half an English ell in breadth; they are only 28, 27 $\frac{1}{2}$, or 26 yards long, and scarcely half a yard broad. There can be no reformation of these abuses without alnage and sealing. Our stuffs are not merchantable in other countries, for want of it. The alnagers shall, by this Act, be compelled to make satisfaction for all losses sustained by want of length and breadth of any stuffs whereunto the seal of alnage shall be affixed, which the alnagers of cloth are not subject to.

That it shall be no burden to the subject is apparent, for where size is wanting, the subject is forced to buy a greater proportion than would be necessary, for the want of breadth in most of the stuffs amounts to three or four yards in a piece, besides two or more in the length, for reformation of which the price of the whole piece will be increased but 3*d.* at most.

VOL. XXXVIII.

Some commodities here made come also from beyond seas, alnaged and sealed in so strict a fashion as that, if any defects be in the same stuffs, the same be supplied with plates of silver, stamped with the same seal of alnage, thereby to make good the defects.

The fustian weavers for themselves were petitioners to Her late Majesty for reformation of abuses committed amongst them; the petition was signed by 20 of them, and is now ready to be shown. [2 pages.]

- April 4. 7. The King to Lord Treasurer Dorset. Whereas Sir Simon Musgrave, deceased, late deputy Master of Ordnance in the North, and Sir Richard Musgrave his son, Master of our said Ordnance, for supply of wants in that office, have been forced, through the slackness of the then Treasurer of Berwick, to disburse divers great sums of their own money, for provision of powder, shot, munition, &c. for the use of the late Queen ; by reason whereof there are divers surplusages of guns, powder, &c. surcharged to our use, in an account of the said office, made by the said Sir Richard Musgrave, for 13 years and 16 days, ended 19 September 1604, amounting to 1,614*l.* 3*s.* 9 $\frac{1}{4}$ d., otherwise the store there would have been altogether unprovided ;— And whereas the said Sir Rich. Musgrave, upon the end of his said account for defects of munition, is indebted to us in 1,234*l.* 17*s.* 6 $\frac{1}{4}$ d., which is less than the other debt by 379*l.* 6*s.* 4*d.* ;—Now as, upon the taking of the same account, you refuse to abate the said debt, or to give allowance for the said surplusage of powder, without our special warrant, these are therefore to fully authorise you to give an abatement out of the said 1,234*l.* 17*s.* 6 $\frac{1}{4}$ d., on the sum Sir Richard Musgrave stands charged with, upon determination of his account ; and to satisfy him of the 379*l.* 6*s.* 4*d.* residue, either in money, or else to allow him such quantity of the gunpowder now at Newcastle as you shall think fit and reasonable. Salisbury House. 8. Thomas Wilson to Sir Thos. Lake. Before your last going to the King, you promised me your furtherance in my suit of privilege for printing of certain books, wherein myself and my late dear friend Mr. Golding have taken pains. The bill has been twice drawn and signed by counsel, once in the late Queen's time, who died before it came to signature, and then in 1605, His Majesty's time, but before it could be dispatched, Mr. Golding died ; so that now my suit is to have it renewed to his son and myself, according to the petition enclosed. Mr. Attorney promised me to set his hand to a new bill ; but when I brought it to him, and he saw one of the parties' names was changed since the reference made upon the last petition by Sir Roger Wilbraham, he said he must have a new reference for his warrant. Pray move His Majesty to make a reference accordingly, and I will send you the bill, engrossed and signed by Mr. Attorney. Let it have reference to none but the King's

P.S.—I send you enclosed the old and the new bill which we crave. I imagine that—His Majesty understanding that there is no alteration, but only the granting to two what before was to one,—you will hardly need to use the petition, or remand it to counsel, it having passed them already, as appears by the Lord Chief Baron and Attorney-General's superscription; but if His Majesty will not sign it otherwise, I hope you will recommend it to one of the Masters of Requests. 9. Lord Treasurer Dorset and the Earl of Salisbury to Sir Thos. Lake at the Court, Newmarket. The book which we now send you contains the lease of the customers, yesterday returned from the Lord Chief Justice. Such are the payments which depend upon this establishment, and so many days will yet be required for the writing and passing it under the seal, that we beg you will offer it to His Majesty to sign, and inform him of two particulars; first, that point of tobacco, which the Lord Chief Justice mentions in his certificate, is a perplexed question, somewhat being urged upon them which they plead to be very unequal; and yet, that we may suffer nothing to go to His Majesty's disprofit before all particulars be well examined, we take bond of them to stand to our order and the two Chief Justices', having the law in our own hands, considering the payments which they have made already of 6,000*l.*, and the payments to be made, for which we daily endure clamour.

The second point is, that we have this day heard the Earl of Perth about raising the rates upon linen cloth, which, though a point wherein the farmers were to be respected when they had a lease in being, yet now that the same is in His Majesty's power, we have declared that, in this interim of the farm, His Majesty's grant is not to be held unjust, but shall be overruled for any point of profit to them; it is now to be weighed, either as it may make that commodity, which is most bought by the poor, of higher price, or decay the trade of the Eastern company, besides the stirring of more exception to His Majesty's new rating of his Customs, now in the time of Parliament, when all things of that nature are censured. Assure His Majesty that we will use care either to bring it to a good end, or suppress the noise of it, as well out of duty to His Majesty, as well wishing to that nobleman, who desires some relief with expedition.

For the point of the woods, whereof one Hoord, who is the follower, has reported to have given me, the Treasurer, satisfaction,—which is contrary to something that I, the Earl of Salisbury, have written of exceptions to be taken to his project,—I, the Treasurer, never acknowledged any such satisfaction, but that he is little able to maintain our just replies to the things set down, and yet shall be heard before this particular be rejected, or the matter suffered to fall

Oct. 15. 22. M. St. Sauveur to the Earl of Salisbury. The Commissioners
Guernsey. have arrived, taking Sark in their way, a strong and important place, of which Phil. de Carteret is lord. The many important affairs in Jersey did not permit them to leave before. They proceeded first to seek out His Majesty's revenue, taking the oath of 12 men out of each parish to inquire after the ancient extent, and the book of the receiver, from which they have prepared a rental book. The whole is found worth 1,500*l.* or 1,600*l.*

Then they proceeded to the appeals, numerous, but most of them frivolous, their tediousness needing reformation. Then the difference between the bailiff and procurer, proceeding from an inveterate family hatred, which has caused most of the differences in this island, to the great hindrance of justice among the poor. This the Commissioners have reconciled.

The differences between the Governor and justices are harder to satisfy, and the judgment of the Commissioners does not satisfy the parties. The Governor claims the right by his patent of assembling the public council of the island, for nomination of the bailiff and officers; but they show the great seal of Henry VII. to the contrary. The King has given the Governor the royal revenues, which brings him into many differences with the subjects, and is dangerous in case of hostility with France, lest the Governor (not the present one, who is a worthy man) should from avarice, reduce the garrison to avoid their pay, and sell the corn of the stores. In the late French wars, Calais, Montmelian, and Cambray were so lost.

There should be a receiver who should see the granaries well supplied, and pay all salaries,—Governor, officers, and soldiers;—it would stay many differences, secure the strong places, and bring more to His Majesty's coffers. The reformation of the laws should be done by some judged most fitting by the Commissioners. As to appeals, nothing is settled, but I think they should be allowed to King and Council, as a means of reminding a people so distant of their Prince, and giving them the means of letting them feel the effect of his clemency. Let me have Comines, and a green crystal glass, to do good offices between the small print and my eyes. Concerning the other matter, my anxiety is qualified, because I know my Lord of Salisbury can tell. I may say as our Saviour did of Jerusalem, so as if she appear other than were to be wished, it is but as herself would needs be. Tell me of Tyrone, and some such matters, as I live solitarily, and hear of nothing but my own private, which now is employed only to sell land. I want to accustom myself to ciphers, and if you would send me an alphabet, with the decipherers, I would do no hurt with them. My bookish humour still lasts, although I have no company to confer with in what I read. Bolton has been here of late, and will do me the honour to Christmas it. I suit treatment to my company, and return to my accustomed frugality, having lavished extremely since the late troubles. [1 page.]

34. ——— to ———. If the Commissioners be unsatisfied, either touching the goodness of the wool or whether it has been bought in by any, before Mr. Jenney found and bought it in last year, we desire that the Master of the Feltmakers' Company may be called the next day of sitting, to choose three or four of the better sort to declare their knowledge. By their reports it will appear that it is the best that ever they wrought before, and that as Mr. Jenney first brought it in, it has been and is known as Jenney's wool. For the rest we are ready to perform all comprised in the first instruction.

The Spanish merchants [the merchants of London that trade to Spain] are the most likely to oppose, as they have liberty of bringing in Spanish commodities; but this wool is such as they never heard of until the last year that Mr. Jenney went over, and to his great charge found and fetched it; and is to be distinguished both by the province that breeds the sheep, the remote grounds that feed them, the dye, the price, &c. It is to be considered whether their charter be now in force, as the liberty of trading into Spain which formerly was proper to that company only, is now, by Act of Parliament, conferred upon all the subjects of His Majesty. 35. [Rich. Carnsew] to Mr. Bridgman. Some go about to set up seats in the church of St. Kew, to the annoyance and defacing of the monuments of my ancestors. Mr. Parker, the official, has inhibited them until the cause has been heard, yet notwithstanding, they intend to procure the Bishop's warrant for their erection. Pray move my Lord to stay any such warrant until it be viewed by indifferent men; and if, in their judgment, I cannot give sufficient reasons for the maintaining of my desire, I shall willingly yield. I hear my Lord has received some information against me; but I desire to be heard before I be condemned, and I doubt not but it shall appear that my Lord is abused with idle informations.

P.S.—Deliver what you do for me to the bearer, Arthur Harris, who has promised to solicit my Lord for me. I requested my cousin Langhorne to procure a proctor for me at Exeter assizes. Signify that Mr. Cavill intended to erect pews in St. Kew's church, against the will of many of the parishioners, and thereupon represented the ease to Mr. Parker, my ordinary, who prohibited the churchwardens from allowing it. Yet Mr. Cavill has erected pews where he ought not, without prejudice to me, blemish to my ancestors, disgrace to my posterity, and confusion to many parishioners. He has larger pews, besides those lately erected, than I have, his ancestors being richer than himself. I have two brothers, one an M.A., 24 years old, the other B.L., of 16, two sisters, and a family of 30, and yet no seats for 10 persons. These pews would interfere with the monuments of 14 of my ancestors,—some 300 years' continuance,—and take away the room my family has enjoyed; he pleads having sat there before and his ancestors, but it was only by leave of my ancestors.

39. Memorial of things necessary to be done for the defence of Jersey, Guernsey, Alderney, and Sark, addressed to the Privy Council.

To send two commissioners, from England to join with four dwelling there, to inquire after and certify the things following:—

The state of the islands and the number of soldiers requisite to defend them against sudden invasion. Their answer as to Jersey must be that, as it is the greatest, so it is of the greatest import, and yet the weakest, having many places open for an invader to land in, and no provision to prevent it, so it will take up more men than the rest of the islands, not less than 4,000; for if they do not fortify all places needful, they had as good let all alone. The inhabitants are not to be relied upon, seeing they make no profession of arms, though their hearts are well affected; neither can they be spared from labouring for their sustenance.

Guernsey is not so big, far stronger by nature, and therefore 1,500 men could withstand an invasion, with help of the inhabitants. Alderney is not to be valued with the other two in bigness or goodness, and yet of as great import, to defend it, if we esteem honour and reputation; therefore we assign 1,500 men. The fourth is Sark, and is far inferior to the rest; we think 1,000 men sufficient for it.

Sixty or more ketches, fishing boats, &c. should attend this service, to transport soldiers from one island to another. The Commissioners are to certify what victuals the islands will afford, and what is necessary to supply them out of England. This must be thus answered: That their Lordships cannot expect any quantity of victuals for the relief of 8,000 men, considering the barrenness of those islands that, in the most plentiful years, can do little more than sustain themselves; therefore they must have victuals out of England, and a good proportion always ready to transport as occasion shall be offered, or the garrison increased; and for the present, not less than four months' victuals for 8,000 men, and two months' more ever ready; which may be done without loss, for upon the end of the service, merchant ships will be willing to take the overplus not spent.

As to the number and greatness of the ordnance necessary to strengthen the islands; considering the many weak places, and the little means of resistance, 100 pieces of ordnance, none of them under a sacker, with all sorts of munition, carriages, &c. should be sent over, and disposed at the discretion of the commanders. Concerning pioneers and their number, and nature of their tools, unless in time of harvest or manuring, Jersey can furnish pioneers, but not so many as needful for the other islands. The greatest want will be of tools, which none of the islands can afford in any quantity, and therefore provision of them must be made in England. Comparing these places with Holland, its soil is moorish and wet, and therefore soft and easy to work, but these are stony and hard. Our old English spade, shovels, and pickaxes will be useful, although we do not dislike the Holland spades and hoes, when we work in soft and sandy ground.

As to the number and greatness of the ships to be employed, we refer you to precedents. The number of men-of-war to keep at sea must be according to intelligence had of the preparation of that nation that shall threaten an invasion upon the islands; not to name any country but this in general, and then no Prince can expostulate with the King upon unkindness. But our opinion is that besides His Majesty's ships, and others employed upon this service, the better sort of ships that belong to the Newcastle trade should be fortified with ordnance, as in the last wars with Spain, to resist the Dunkirkers, who are not yet much to be trusted. These ships are most easy for transportation, spacious, of small draught, few men to sail them, and of great strength. They could defend themselves from an easy enemy, such as the Dunkirkers, and will be always ready to take soldiers on board and convey them to these islands, without staying for wafters.

As the islands hereabouts and the coast are full of rocks and other dangers, we will make inquiry for the best and most efficient pilots of the island, and they shall repair to the place you appoint. [3 $\frac{3}{4}$ pages.]

40. Memorial by Sir John Peyton to the Council. The old castle in Jersey, called Mountorgueil, is much decayed, and the new castle called Elizabeth is unfinished. Several pieces of iron and brass ordnance are broken, and most of the iron dangerous to be used, and no carriages have been made for a long time, whereby most of the ordnance is unserviceable. There is also want of powder, munition, &c. A supply is therefore desired. [$\frac{2}{3}$ page.]

42. Lord Chief Justice Fleming and Att.-Gen. Hobart to Sir Thos. Lake. According to His Majesty's pleasure, we have considered the best remedy of the great abuse in dyeing black silks, and find;—first that as well the city of London as the dyers themselves, desire some order that may bind all dyers of such silks throughout England, which are not many, to the same proportion of increase of weight as set by the city ; for if those in London should be bound, and those abroad left at large, they would make gain of the abuse, and those in London be undone by keeping good order. We therefore think, since the dyers are willing, and the city has already taken that course, that recognizances should be taken of all such dyers to observe the orders prescribed by the city, and letters patent granted to that purpose ; with command that no person shall dye, within England or Wales, any raw silk in skeins into the colour called coal black or London heavy weight black, but into that called light weight black ; nor shall augment, by dyeing or otherwise, the weight of any kind of raw silk above the quantity of 6 oz. per lb. avoirdupois of organzine silk, and 8 oz. thrown silk, or any other raw silk, and observe other points already set down by the city. And that no silk be hereafter dyed black till first weighed and numbered, and the contents entered in a book by Mr. Hamond ; nor after it is dyed, be sold till weighed again by him, that it may appear whether it holds this proportion of weight ; and that no fee be taken for numbering, weighing, or entering any such silk, so as the subject may not be charged with impositions thereby.

If His Majesty grant to Hamond, for his travail and expenses therein, the moiety of all the recognizances which, during the term of 21 years, shall become forfeited for these causes, it will make him look more carefully into it ; but that may be in a patent by itself. And that no silk like the London heavy black silk brought from beyond seas shall be uttered in England or Wales, till proved to be dyed without deceit. And that Hamond may search to find out such abuses. And that all dyers shall dye thrown and organzine silk black at the former prices, unless there be just cause, by reason of the prices of the stuff, to increase the price for dyeing. And that Hamond have these privileges for 21 years. If His Majesty grant these things, to avoid all deceit to defraud his good meaning herein, there should be a proviso in the said patent, that if Hamond or any having authority under him collude or practice with any dyers to maintain them in their abuses, or conceal any fraud, this grant shall be void. 48. Sir George Coppin to Sir Thos. Lake. I have been a suitor to the Lord Chancellor and my Lords of Salisbury and Northampton, to request the pardon of the corporal punishment of Thomas Finch and Stephen Partridge, sentenced in the Star Chamber to wear papers on their heads in Westminster Hall, expressing their fine of 1,000*l.* They are willing to give 100*l.* towards the repairing of [the church] and paving of St. Martin's Lane, if their pardon may be passed. Sir Francis Bacon, who would not draw the pardon before he spoke with their Lordships, received their allowance to draw the pardon, which I send herewith.

As you are one of the best benefactors of our parish, and it is a deed of such great charity for the building of a church, and a matter of pity to the poor gentlemen, who are heartily sorry for their offence, and submitted themselves in open Court, I recommend their and our suit to you to be offered to His Majesty, whose mercy flowing to all, I hope shall not be shut up, in a case of two such charitable ends; especially seeing they are to pay 1,000*l.* apiece for a fine, which lights heavily upon them, even to their undoing, being punished besides by long imprisonment, and shame of their offence to His Majesty and the Court. - [Oct. 21.] 62. Statement by ——— [to Council?]. The substance of the former petition, viz.: 1. A term of 31 years to be granted them at 100*l.* rent. 2. The sole venting and making of the fixing stuff, and the dyeing and finishing of true wearing colours in logwood, non obstante any law, so as they be finished with the fixing stuff according to prescription. 3. A peculiar leaden mark. 4. Such dyers as shall use truth to be freed from further tax.
- Upon this the Council sent letters to the Lord Mayor and Recorder, requiring them to call the dyers and drapers before them, and after examining them, to certify what they found. They certified. 1. That the dyers disclaimed the use of any logwood, yet the contrary was proved. 2. A performance by the petitioners of what was contained in the petition. 3. That logwood bettered the dyeing, and that much good to the Commonwealth would result therefrom, if it be provided that the patent shall continue no longer than the contents of the petition are performed.
- We now ask, 1st. Liberty for the sole making and finding of the fixing stuff to such dyers as dye with logwood, and will be deputed assignees to use the said stuff herewith, according to the following prescriptions; upon good grounds of woad or madder or both, to take 18*d.* for a broad cloth or bay, and 9*d.* a narrow cloth, kersey, say, cotton, or stuff, in lieu of finding the fixing stuff which shall make the colours permanent, and to answer the moiety hereof upon account to His Majesty.

2. If this course is not pursued, the dyers would after a while reject any grant that could be made; for men of art, after sometime using the said stuff, will find out the way of making it, and so not only frustrate our hopes, but so enable themselves that it will be very hard to detect those using logwood.

To have deputies with liberty to enter, view, and try all colours suspected to be dyed in logwood, and if such cloths, &c. be perfectly dyed, according to the grant desired, to annex a peculiar seal of lead, whereon shall be imprinted the word logwood; and if the cloths be found otherwise than is prescribed, to seize them to His Majesty's use, and rent off one of the lists, and one moiety thereof to be given those that seize and approve the same.

Lastly, that order be taken in the King's Bench and Exchequer, that no composition be made for offences contrary to the laws, and that no informer be permitted to defraud the true meaning hereof, for 31 years.

Our further reasons are, 1. The dyers denied that they used logwood, yet the contrary was found by cloths shown under their seals; and they also with like impudency persisted before the commissioners for suits.

2. They enter in their books fustic instead of logwood, and more is so entered in one month than there is in the Customs' books in a year.

3. At the relation of one Hunt, an informer, almost all the Dyers' Company are, with their consent, informed against in the Exchequer, by which combination the suits are renewed and continued from term to term, every one of the dyers paying Hunt 4*l.* as an annual rent; and for further proof, Hunt offered to some of the Dyers' Company the like kindness, alleging they should pay him no more quarterly than the Masters of the company did, which was 20*s.* a quarter, which they did.

4. The Dyers' Company would have given way to any request in the petition but one, that is the seal, which we craved privilege for, to notify the truth of our intention; but the dyers will not condescend to any seal, as they would be abridged of their daily deceits, and prejudice the merchants, drapers, and all others that buy false coloured cloths to transport. If such a seal should be, every man may by the seals discern the difference, and so not be over-reached in the goodness of the dye and price as they have been; but if the dyers desist the use of logwood, which many will do, as their falsehoods will be discovered, it would advantage His Majesty much more in his customs, by the importation of madder, woad, cochineal, &c. Wilts, whereof he was then in quiet possession by virtue of a patent of 24 Henry VII., which, by colour of some defect in the penning, you have pretended to avoid. It was not for us to endure that the employment of a person in a place of so great government should be used for an opportunity to cast him forth of so long a continued possession without form of law; and therefore we had just cause, upon the verification of his complaint, to restore him to his possessions, without any examination of the right in point of law; yet, not willing to proceed against you without full information, we referred the cause, with your own consent, to the Lord Chancellor and Lord Treasurer, and we find by their report,—they having heard the cause debated by counsel on both sides, and assisted themselves with the opinions of our chief justice and chief baron,—that the said letters patent are good and available in law.

We therefore require you, without delay, to avoid the possession of the said lands, and permit the said Sir Thos. Lowe quietly to repossess them, until you may, by due course of law, evict him. [$2\frac{1}{2}$ pages, draft.]

72. The King to ———. Having heard of the dissensions in King's College, Cambridge, whereof you are appointed visitor by Henry VI., the founder, we were persuaded, upon our reference of the causes to you, that those controversies should have been ended; but in respect of your putting off your coming again to the college, in regard of the infection, divers of the inferior sort, presuming upon favour to be procured from us, have opposed your authority, and the directions of their governors in the college, which is the more intolerable in students professing religion and learning.

We impute part of these disorders to your remissness, and charge you, at your next repair thither in your visitation, to look to reformation, redress the causes and authors of dissensions, and repress and censure the turbulent or disobedient, or any other notoriously transgressing the statutes of that college, without respect of persons.

Which office, that you may the more freely and thoroughly perform, we will that if, during the time of your visitation, any presume to disobey your authority, especially in anything concerning the statutes of that college,—as for example, keeping possession against order or otherwise, not submitting to that construction thought by you most agreeable to the meaning of the statute, to certify us, or our Council, that we may punish them accordingly.

And therefore, as we wish to provide for the quiet, not only present but future, of that college, we think that a convenient order should be set down by you for preventing or repressing, by local statutes, all future faction; and your order, with injunction of due execution, be committed to the governors of the college, to whose negligence we will impute it, if hereafter there be suffered any such tumultuous dissensions as have offended us, and caused great scandal and evil example in the whole university. For which purposes we, not meaning to be further troubled with these factious complaints, will that these our letters be published by you, read to the whole society, and recorded in the register of the college. 73. The King to [the Lord Privy Seal?]. We are pleased to bestow upon the ambassadors of France, Spain, Venice, and of the States of the Low Countries, certain bucks for their sport, in the time of our absence in our progress. You are therefore to order the keepers of our forests, parks, &c. to deliver to the said ambassadors one brace of bucks each, and to permit them to come to the place in person to kill the same, if they shall think fit, with hounds or bow. We are also pleased to bestow upon the farmers of our customs and the tellers of our Exchequer, a like brace of bucks, to be taken as follows: out of Hyde Park, one brace; the great park at Nonsuch, one brace; the little park of Enfield, one brace; and Enfield Chase, two brace, &c. 74. Statement that on 4 August 1591, Sir Chris. Hatton granted 100*l.* a year out of the manor of Withington and Hough, Lancashire, for 21 years, to Wm. Atkinson, if Nich. Langford, of co. Derby, and Martha his wife, daughter of Sir Robt. Southwell, live so long. Note of payments thereon from Michaelmas 1591, and of the death of the said Martha, 24 October 1594. The rent-charge was expectant on the death of Nich. Langford and his first, second, and third issue male, and he is still living; but the arrears are now extinct and given away, because Langford sold the said rents, for a valuable consideration, to my Lord of Salisbury. Also a fine was levied by Martha for 500*l.*, paid to her by Sir Chris. Hatton. Therefore both Nicholas and Martha having conveyed the lands by fine and recovery, they are no longer liable to rent and arrears, but Mr. Atkinson must seek a recovery from the heirs of Sir Chris. Hatton. [2 pages.]

- April 4. 84. Sir John Peyton to Lord Treasurer Salisbury. According to Mountorgueil the Council's letters, I have paid the money alleged by Sir John Jersey. Spilman to be due to Sir Walter Raleigh, for a fine on a lease of the dismes during the time of his government here, and to avoid further trouble, have advanced the money, accounted to Capt. Farrar, and taken his acquittance. Henry Pike, His Majesty's Receiver in the time of Sir Walter Raleigh and since, has not gathered in the debts due, nor cleared his accounts, partly owing to sickness, but specially because Helier de Carteret and other jurats, &c., having made themselves tenants of divers poor men's heritages that were indebted to His Majesty, seek to shift off payment. Pray send them letters commanding them to pay the arrears, Pyke being a poor man, and all arrears due in Sir Walter's time being now satisfied.

There are divers services, rent-wheat money, &c., denied, which in former time have been paid, the parties out of whose heritages they are due neither allowing of the ancient extents, nor the new extent lately made by the Commissioners. Pray have some surveyor sent hither, with a commission to survey and set out the manors, fees, lands, revenues, &c., belonging to His Majesty, with a true relation of all services and other duties, and return it into the Exchequer to be kept of record, as still practised in the dukedom of Normandy, by means whereof all manner of future questions will be avoided. My special desire is to have the government settled in a just course. If you will allow the party that shall be sent wages, I will bear the rest of his charges, and engage my credit that you will approve of his labours; and if the surveyor, by his endeavour, shall find out anything detracted from His Majesty, it may be employed for his allowance, and in reparation of His Majesty's castles, of the state whereof the bearer, Capt. Farrar, can inform you. [1 page.]

85. Robert Earl of Salisbury to Sir Thos. Lake. I send you a letter from Sir Henry Wotton. He still writes doubtfully of the composition between Rome and Venice, rather to avoid contradiction to his former answer of the composing of that business, than out of any just [cause] to believe that it will continue in rupture; I always embraced a contrary opinion, and other advertisements say that the composition is resolved.

One thing is remarkable in the letter, that the Spanish ambassador, for fear to be thought to have had no part in this composition, talked of the matter upon the stairs' head. That of the Grisons' will likewise have some slubbard end also, for without other conjunction, they cannot war against the King of Spain.

There is another letter which comes from Sir Charles Cornwallis, wherein His Majesty may see nothing but injustice and delay; and yet because the ambassador leiger here has undertaken (long since) to procure satisfaction in all things, we are content to suspend on His Majesty's behalf any further contestation, until he [returns]. fore not contrary to the proclamation against granting protections. They have no other means to satisfy their creditors but by certain low grounds which, at the time of their decay, were of no value, but are now, by their liberty through protections, brought to such value as will satisfy all their debts, being worth 800l. a year, and will improve, for of the 800l. a year, they have improved 500l. within 1½ years.

Nevertheless if Lady Glover, to whom all is mortgaged, is not paid the debt of 8,000l. by the sale of other lands and leases before next Michaelmas, petitioners and the rest of the creditors will lose all, and the poor debtors be utterly undone, unless she will, out of her own disposition, yield them some part thereof.

Towards the payment of the 8,000l., the debtors have already sold to the value of 4,000l., and will make further sale to make up the rest, if they may have liberty to go about it; Lady Glover being thus satisfied, petitioners will use the debtors as instruments in obtaining such lands, they knowing best how things stand, and in getting them conveyed over to petitioners from Lady Glover, and in disposing of them to the best advantage; but if, for want of one protection more, they cannot have such service, they fear such confusion as will hazard the loss of their debts, and disable the debtors from soliciting their creditors so as to clear themselves, notwithstanding there is now sufficient to pay all they owe. There would have been no cause for more protections had not the last been half a year before it could be got to pass the seals. [1 page. See Domestic Calendar, 20 Aug. 1609.]

105. Case of the Master and Fellows of Magdalen College, Cambridge, with reference to a tenement and 10 acres of land in the city of London, belonging to the said university. The college, by its foundation charter, has power to purchase only, and plead and be impleaded in any of the King's Courts, and to do all things according to the Statutes of Lord Audley their founder, of which one of the principal is, that all grants made by them for more than 10 years shall be void. Queen Elizabeth, by patent 29 Jan. 1575, granted the said messuage and garden to Benedict Spinola and his heirs for ever, and the Statute of confirmation of grants made by and to Her Majesty was made in 1575. The premises, by bargain and sale, came from Spinola to Edward Earl of Oxford, father of His Majesty's ward ; and Earl Edward, 4 July 1591, sold the same to John Wolley and Francis Trentham, to have the same assured to Trentham for life, and in default of such assurance, receive the rents for life, the reversion and remainder, and the entire fee simple, to be disposed of for the advantage of Elizabeth, sister of the said Francis Trentham.

Earl Edward, being also seized of lands held of His Majesty, died, leaving Henry Vere, now Earl of Oxford, his son and heir, His Majesty's ward. By an inquisition taken at Guildhall, London, 13 Aug. 1608, it was found that Earl Edward died seized of such messuage and garden, and that Earl Henry, His Majesty's ward, was his son and heir. The complainants have exhibited their petition for traverse of the said inquisition, and for licence to traverse the office. [1 page, much damaged.]

117. Speech of ——— in the House of Commons. I approve the bill for administering the oath of allegiance to all sorts of persons, for distinction between hollow-hearted and loyal subjects, but not this later clause, for husbands to pay for their wives' recusancy. It may be inconvenient to relax penalties ; but in making laws, justice is to be weighed, not conveniency. Such payments are not to be regarded as debts which a husband should pay, but as penalties ; and it is unjust that the punishment should rest where the fault does not rest. Husband and wife, though corporally one, are not one as to affections of the mind, such as religion ; and the husband has command over the body, but not the soul, and should not be punished for what he cannot prevent. I still more dislike the remedy of her being sent to prison and thus separated from her husband. No law should be passed repugnant to the law of God. In the second session of this Parliament, the laws against recusants were debated three days, and it was declared that the meaning of the law was not that the husband should pay for the wife, but that it should be left to the judges. I think this course should be adopted in the present instance, rather than hazard so good a bill, or taint our proceedings with injustice. [$1\frac{1}{2}$ pages.]

118. Means to reform Popish Recusants, addressed to the King :—

1. That all their children who, from their cradles, are trained up in hatred of the truth, be henceforth educated in the knowledge of God and his word, and in obedience to His Majesty and his laws, to which they are strange, many being carried beyond seas in their tender years, to be there corrupted.

2. That as His Majesty has so royally said and written so much in defence of the oath of allegiance, for a trial of his popishly affected subjects, all be required to take the said oath.

3. That no popish recusant have his two parts of his lands in farm, or any other like favour, until he has taken this oath, in presence of the Bishop of the diocese, and two justices of peace.

4. That the laws against seminary priests and Jesuits, the undoubted plotters of the gunpowder and all other treasons, who still work upon weak ones and malcontents, be put in present execution.

5. That all recusants' lands not demised, be collected and answered into the Exchequer by the sheriffs of the several counties, whereby His Majesty may relieve such as he shall see worthy, and meet all frandulent practises. Many will either reform on being thus persecuted, or less repine if it comes to the Exchequer, than if it be left to the courtesy of private men.

6. That as it is generally held, so it be declared by the judges if it be law that the husband is bound to pay for his wife's offence, which will reform many, or bring in good sums.

7. That an Act be made that all recusants be bound to present themselves at the Easter quarter sessions, and summer assizes, to take the oath of allegiance, and enter into bond for their good behaviour; and for not appearing,—sufficient warning being left at their abode,—incur the penalty of præmunire. Without such helps by law, most of them will seldom or ever be met with; such is their perverseness. [$3\frac{1}{2}$ pages, modern copy. See Domestic, James I., Vol. LIII., Nos. 123, 124.] wrong force me to write, as I hear His Majesty is offended with me, being informed that I had falsely taken the name of his ambassador, and said that I had commission from him to the Pope. The report is most untrue; I had been a presumptuous and simple ass to take the name of ambassador, having neither fitting charge, allowance, nor followers. Neither did I deliver any commission to the Pope from His Majesty, but general compliments, whereof I had sufficient warrant, being no more than a number of gentlemen heard out of his own mouth, and have been printed and published in his edicts, as I doubt not but His Majesty has been informed, both by Cardinal Aldobrandini's letter, and by sundry of his subjects, who were in Rome at that time; but especially Sir Harry Carey, whom I desire to be examined on my speeches and actions in Rome. I believed that my pains there had deserved better recompense than to be disgraced as I am.

My letters from Rome to you were a sincere relation of all that passed in that Court. I said nothing more than I had warrant in writing, from one most famous hand, the whole being but courtesies as from one temporal Prince to another. I hear that you have publicly spoken to my disadvantage, which I can hardly believe. Let me know what fault I have committed, and who lay disloyalty to my charge; for whoever they be, His Majesty and his children excepted, the world shall see that I make little account of my life, and that there is no man assured of his, when one interested in it in the highest degree is weary of his own. My affection to His Majesty's service these 15 years is known to most of Scotland, and to many now in England, and shall continue to the end of my life. [1 page.]

126. Attorney General Hobart to Sir Thos. Lake. By misinformation of Mr. Brook, who followed the suit for procuring His Majesty's grant of the next advowson of the church of Hemingford Abbots which should happen after the death of the Marchioness of Northampton, a fault is committed by misnaming the said advowson "Advocatio Ecclesiae de Hemingford Gray, alias Hemingford Abbots," where it should have been "Hemingford Abbots" only; and the manor also should have been "Manerium de Hemingford Abbots" only; for Samuel Brook says that there is one manor and one advowson of Hemingford Gray, and another of Hemingford Abbots. This fault may be amended with His Majesty's privy. [1 page.]

- Aug. 26. 14. James Hussey to Lord Treasurer Salisbury. I send you the enclosed, written by the most learned minister in Jersey. The ministers of Jersey were not long since ready to conform to the divine service and church discipline established in England; but now they have submitted to their brethren of Guernsey, who are not likely to become so conformable.
Spetisbury, near Blandford.
They have often said they intended sending me their new book of discipline, to be delivered to you, but now, fearing I suppose that I should cross their designs, they have chosen Amias Carteret, bailiff of Guernsey, as their agent, who much dislikes the manner of our Church government.
By your letters to the ministers of both islands, you advised them not to send over either their book or deputies, or agree upon any point in that business, without their governor's privity; and now they have agreed upon and subscribed the same, and have employed Carteret as their deputy, not imparting it first of all to the governor.
If occasion may be taken out of this their own desired reformation, it will not be difficult to reduce them all to the uniformity of service and ecclesiastical government used in England; and if it were so, His Majesty would be well pleased. I can prove that from the time of Edward VI. to 17 Eliz., they had the same book of common prayer, printed amongst them in French, which is here used amongst us in English, one of which books is yet in my custody. VOL. XL.

Normandy, 11 miles in length and 5 in breadth, and contains in circuit 34 miles. There are divers bays and inlets of the sea, some being harbours for boats and small ships, among which are divers places where an enemy may easily make descent.

There are 12 parishes, in which the able men are reduced into companies, and ranged under captains. These companies, until lately, had no knowledge in fire-arms; but by degrees have exchanged walch-hooks and slings for calivers and muskets, the owners whereof furnish themselves with powder and match. The parishes have some two, others three field pieces, as falcons, minions, &c., and provide powder and shot for them. The total number of men bearing arms in 1610 was 2,080; but a fourth part of them are only furnished with walch-hooks, which is a kind of forest bill, and with slings; and of this number above 300 are maritime men, whereof more than two parts are commonly at sea.

His Majesty has two castles, Mountorgeuil and Elizabeth. The first, now called the old castle, is built upon the top of a rock joining the sea, with a mount in the middle, called the Upper Ward; is rounded with a strong wall, but nothing flanked, and is commanded by a hill lying near the rampart. The nether part, called the Base-guard, near the outer gate, before my time, lay open and unwallled. Within the inner part of this baseguard is a great granary and victualling house, with other buildings maintained at His Majesty's charge; and there have also been 20 houses maintained by the inhabitants, who, in time of war, had recourse thither for safety; but all are now decayed for want of reparations; yet they are bound by law to maintain them.

Elizabeth Castle is likewise situated upon a rock at the west end of a little isle in the bay of St. Helier's, called the Islet, 400 paces from land, being six hours every tide environed with the sea, and the other six the sands towards the land are dry. This castle was partly built in the latter part of the late Queen's reign, on the importunity of some gentlemen of the country, but it is not half finished; and—the engineer following the skirt of the rock—it is unflanked, and a well of fresh water and the place of the storehouses left out of the fortification. That part which is built is so weakly timbered that every great storm shakes off the slates, so that every year it becomes more uncovered. There is no powder room or granary yet built, and part of the foundations of other rooms now lie unfinished; it is small in circuit, and how tenable if any enemy should possess the islet, I leave to the opinion of military men.

In the garrisons of the castles, during the time Sir Anth. Paulet and Sir Walter Raleigh were governors, were 34 soldiers, besides the receiver and customer, they being accounted of the retinue of the castle; which number, ever since His Majesty's coming to the crown, being a time of peace, I have continued. For better strengthening the garrisons in time of danger, the islanders have been used, upon the Governor's command, to watch within the castles, and have had for their wages 5s. 4d. per quarter, being freed from all services out of the isle. The captains, upon like occasions, are on command to repair with their companies to such places upon the sea coast as the Governor shall direct, and resist any attempt of landing.

The islands of Jersey and Guernsey are not so seated, nor so strong in people as to secure themselves from surprises, or from being forced by an enemy. If there be any other opinion, by conference with martial men the question will be easily resolved.

It has ever been usual for the Sovereign and Council of State, to whom intelligences of wars and dangers are first known, to signify their pleasure to the Governors, and to order the sending thither pinnaces and soldiers, as the islanders cannot make sufficient resistance; and the governors of the island have reinforced the garrisons with soldiers and victuals. The inhabitants, being discharged of other services, and free from all payments and expeditions save their own defence, have been used to deliver cider, beef, mutton, bacon, butter, wood, &c., as also carriages for the supply of the castles and garrisons, at easy prices. - April 20. 32. Mary Baeck to Mrs. Tuerloot. The last post I heard of your husband's death, for which I am heartily sorry; he was a true friend to me, but there is no resistance to God's will. I have taken counsel of merchants what to do with the money which Peter Van Lore had in his hands concerning my children, whereof your husband had administration, and always paid me the interest; he has dealt honestly with me, but I was counselled to write to Peter Van Lore, and to will him to take care that the money come not into the Scotchman's hands. He answered that he had delivered what he had in hand to your husband, as also the interest, about two months before his death, and that I should not fear, for it was in a good man's hand. Thus I know not to whom to write but you, and entreat you to write to John De Bodt, that I may have my interest. He told me to write to you, as he was ready to pay me the money, though it were much, for he knows that I have need thereof. Pray help me, in this time of my necessity, by reason of certain suits, or I shall be thrust from my right, which I hope to obtain. [2 pages. Translation from the Dutch.]

37. Petition of William Weare to Lord Fenton, Captain of the Guard and Lord of the Privy Council, to take order with Sir James Lea, attorney of the Court of Wards, and steward of the manor of Steple Ashton, co. Wilts, that petitioner may be put into quiet possession of the same, and receive the charges which he has been at in defending His Majesty's right, and take the benefit of the same this year, and of the corn he sowed; or else that he may have a copy of the same for three lives, according to the custom of the manor, and he will give 60*l.*, besides his former charges. Has been at great charge in defending His Majesty's right to a tenement and copyhold land in Hinton, parcel of the said manor, rent 9*s.*, it being claimed wrongfully by three persons pretending right therein. It has long been in the occupation of Thomas Towman, whose interest petitioner has, but Towman, 12 days since, cunningly combined with Roger Martin, who wrongfully pretended an interest in the same, and delivered him possession of the premises, whereby he intends to defraud and defeat His Majesty of his inheritance, being parcel of his copyhold of the said manor. Has maintained possession of the premises for His Majesty ever since last Michaelmas, and exhibited a bill in the Court of Exchequer, in the name of Towman, against the said Martin, Wm. Butler, and Thomas Grymes, who claimed the premises from His Majesty, thereby to clear His Majesty's right in the same. [1 page.]

benefit the commonwealth by increase of shipping and mariners, and bringing in commodities formerly imported. They found 21 Hollanders' ships, but sent them all home empty, except three, with whom they compounded. The Hollanders will complain, though not dealt cruelly with, as the Spaniards do with the English in the West Indies, the French in the river Corrida, and the Hollanders in the East Indies. Not a man has been killed, though the ships were shot at to surrender, and the Dutch Admiral's vessel being lost in a fog, the English saved the men, brought them back, and gave them money to go home. The ships have brought a live reindeer for the King. [1 page.]

45. [Bailiff and Jurats of Guernsey] to the Council. Upon an appeal made to you by Laurence De Vic, attorney to Thomas De Vic, his brother, against Falaize, both inhabitants of Guernsey, from a sentence given in this Court, 30 April 1612, concerning an annuity or rent of 11½ bushels of wheat, you were pleased, on report of Sir Francis Bacon and Mr. Geo. Calvert, to send us your letters for execution of your order therein contained, by means of arbitrators nominated according to the said certificate; before which arbitrators De Vic, in his exposition of the said order, not only challenged the whole overthrow of our sentence, but sought to reverse another sentence of 12 bushels of like rent, given in the said Court against him in 1607, and that by express order from His Majesty's late Commissioners here, and confirmed afterwards by you, whereof appeal had never been made.

Upon this challenge the arbitrators disagreed, whereby the case being returned, we, to avoid your further trouble, granted Falaize our letters to Sir Francis and Mr. Calvert, to explain our meaning in the last sentence, and to show reasons wherefore the former was to be irrevocable, and the great inconveniences which, in the pretended reversal thereof, should fall upon the whole state of the laws and privileges of these islands. Being since informed by Falaize that De Vic has again removed the cause before you, requesting an authentic copy of our aforesaid letter, we have granted it to him, and inform you of the matter. 48. Statement that Fras. Gavell, of Cobham, Kent, under a will giving legacies amounting to 1,300*l.* to his children, bound his son and heir and his wife to see them, and his debts amounting to 3,000*l.*, satisfied within one year. If they failed, he devised all his lands in England to Sir Richard Weston and Edmund Gavell, and to their heirs for ever, they paying such debts and legacies, after his wife’s death.

Query? Who made this will? where was it made? and who were at the making thereof? Carleton says he was not at the making, but devised a deed to have carried the whole. Sir Rich. Weston says he was not privy of it. Edmund Gavell says he made it. Observe what moved Edmund to agree that his brother should give his lands to Sir Rich. Weston, and let him be examined, whether Paschall was not present at the making, and her counsel in it.

A little before this, these three men had got Fras. Gavell, in order to pay his debts, as they pretended, to lease his dwelling house, &c. to Sir Fras. Vincent for 12 years, for the 1,300*l.*, whereof 600*l.* was paid in hand, and wasted within three weeks, all in their company, and not 100*l.* of the debts paid; and such care was had that this lease might be enjoyed, that a fee simple of the other moiety of his land was settled upon Sir Francis, with a condition that if Mary his wife should interrupt Sir Francis, then it should be to him and his heirs. His wife had an estate made, through his former love, of the whole for her life, if she should survive him.

By the same practice, in his sickness, on pretence for debts and legacies, they procured him to alter his estate in the whole, and as it was entailed and not devisable, he levied a fine, and so settled a fee simple, and bound his wife and heir to pay within a year, depriving them of all means to do it; for the residue not let to Sir Francis is granted to Mr. Healing for 600*l.*; and yet, if they do not pay the debts and legacies, all his land is devised to Sir Richard Weston and Edmund Gavell, they paying debts and legacies.

The whole practice was to get the land, and only by pretence, for neither debts nor legacies can be required of them until her death, which may not be for these 40 years, and yet all his lands and goods are absolutely given to them.

If she enters upon that part let to Sir Francis Vincent, as she has no other means of maintenance, then the other moiety goes to Sir Francis and his heirs for ever; and if she does not enter, and deprives herself of all maintenance, yet if she and the heir do not pay the debts and legacies within a year, then the whole manor goes to Sir Richard Weston and Edmund Gavell, and their heirs.

officers of State. When the King mounted on horseback, a bishop accidentally fell from his horse, on which a Puritan noble said that at last they had got a bishop down, when he himself fell from his horse and broke his arm, and a Catholic said that so would fall all the Protestants and Puritans of the kingdom. Description of Westminster Abbey and Hall, of the mode of sitting in the House of Lords. Heads of the King's speech. He has married his daughter to the Prince Palatine, on account of religion; and has charged the judges to observe the laws against Papists more rigidly, but does not think fresh laws needful, is no friend to persecution, and thinks experience shows that religions flourish in persecutions. God having taken away Prince Henry, in punishment for their sins, he wishes his grandson to be naturalized, and declared in the succession; England would not thus become a province of Germany, but, as Henry VII. observed in reference to Scotland, would still remain superior; points out the Providence that no issue came of the marriage of either of the two Marys of England with Spain and France, which might have subjected it to those crowns. He requested the usual supplies, and disclaimed having interfered with the elections.

Don Diego Sarmiento de Acunas, the Spanish ambassador, was present by invitation, in a closet near the King, whence he could hear all, and had the Archduke's ambassador with him; he also admitted that of Denmark by courtesy. Don Diego was waited upon by Sir Lewis Lewknor, conductor of ambassadors, who, thinking the King would not leave till 1 o'clock, caused him to be late, so that the King was waiting half an hour, and the other foreign ambassadors; and the Hollanders all saw that he was waited for, as when he appeared, all the people said, "Here comes the ambassador of Spain! now the King will come forth." Some in Parliament found fault with the election of the Attorney-General, an eloquent man, saying that he would repeat their speeches, &c. to the King; others praised his eloquence and capacity, and yet said he would take away their courage. The King, hearing of it, spoke to Parliament, saying that he did not think it any new thing to converse with his counsellor, but left it in their hands, on which they consented to admit him, but made a law that in future none of the King's servants should enter Parliament. They have naturalized the Prince Palatine's son, and made him capable of the succession. [14 pages, Spanish.]

debted to my son-in-law, Owen Smyth, in regard of my receipts of the profits of his lands during his minority, if I should die without directing how such debt should be answered, I might be subject to just rebuke; so, that my wife and daughters may be the better assured, I devise my lands as follows:—

I give to my executors all my lands in Stiffkey, Langham, Morston, and other towns adjoining, from my death until the Michaelmas twelve month after, they paying to my daughter Lady Ann Townshend, 350*l.* a year, with remainder to her and her heirs, provided that Roger Townshend, my grandchild, be not put from her. For default of such issue, the remainder to my second daughter Lady Knyvet and her heirs; remainder to my third daughter Lady Winifred Gawdy and her heirs; remainder to my own heirs. The 100 marks a year paid by me to my daughter Townshend is to be continued with the 350*l.* a year, and time is to be allowed to my executors to dispose of the cattle and other stock for payment thereof. My daughter Knyvet and my daughter Gawdy, with her husband, are to perfect the entail of the aforesaid manors and lands to my daughter Townshend, by giving up such right as is by law cast upon them. I give to my wife for life the manor of Hemesby, with the impropriations, &c.; remainder to my heirs male, and for default thereof, to my daughter Lady Elizabeth Knyvet and her heirs, with further remainders in a conveyance already made by me.

I give my manor of Stanford, with my lease of the impropriation, to my daughters Ladies Knyvet and Winifred Gawdy, for their better maintenance during the life of my wife,—they yielding 20*l.* a year of the profits of the manor to Nathaniel Knyvet, my grandchild; 10*l.* a year to Martin Man, and 5*l.* a year to Wm. Sanders for life;—and after my wife's death, when Hemesby manor comes to my daughter Knyvet, then to my daughter Lady Gawdy and Sir Robt. Gawdy, and her heirs, with the remainders mentioned in the conveyance aforesaid. The aforesaid annuities, with 5*l.* more which I purpose to give to other servants, to be paid by my said two daughters out of Stanford manor, during the life of my wife; and after her death, one half by my daughter Knyvet, out of Hemesby manor. I give my manor of Eccles, with all the lands occupied therewith, to my wife for life, in augmentation of her jointure; remainder to my own heirs.

To my grandchild Roger Townshend and his heirs, my house in Norwich, which I am to have after my sister Mansfield's death, with the copyhold woods, meadow, &c.

To my wife for life the manor of Irmingland, with reversion to my daughter Knyvet for life, remainder to my grandson Thomas Knyvet, on condition that my said daughter pays, within two years after my wife's death, 2,000*l.* to my daughters Townshend and Gawdy; if not paid, the reversion of the said manor to go to my heirs. I know my house and lands in Irmingland, &c. are assured to my wife if she survives me, yet I direct as I have done, hoping that she will be either moved or compelled to make good my will, as it was never intended that the house and land should go otherwise than to my wife, and after her death to her eldest son, for satisfying such money as I was to pay him, for the profits of his lands received by me, and I trusted my wife with that and more, to give her eldest son content if he had outlived me.

Besides, I have given my wife 400*l.* a year more than I assured her before marriage, to content her and not to deprive me in disposing of the inheritance. I have also conveyed to her son Owen Smyth, 100 marks a year in Eccles, which is to come to him if I do not otherwise dispose of it, although he has unkindly provoked me, and they wronged him who advised him thereto, but I hope that God may turn the heart of my wife not to wrong me. I desire the husbands of my daughters to make good these assurances; if they are contentious, a quarrel may be picked, but I hope that God will bless them with better spirits, and that they will be contented seeing the portion they have had in my lifetime, and will receive by my death is great to every one of them, though not in a like greatness; God will bless them best who most desire peace.

The lease of my manor of Mithwould is to be sold for payment of debts. I give to Mr. Percival, minister of Stiffkey 5*l.*, with the right of enjoying his pasture close at 20*s.* a year, so long as he resides in Stiffkey. To the poor of Stiffkey 10*l.*, to be distributed by my executors at their discretion. To my daughter, Lady Townshend, the piece of plate called the heirloom, to go with Stiffkey House, according to my father's gift, if I have no son. To my godson Nathaniel Bacon, son of my brother Edward, 10*l.* To my wife the coach which my son Owen Smyth gave her, and two of my best coach horses at her choice; also the bedstead, with the furniture of tester, curtains, covering and chair, in my best chamber, but not the hangings; and two pillow beers given to me and hereby my mother Hopton.

I appoint my three daughters executors, and my brother Edward supervisor, or failing him, Mr. Jermy and Gwyn, lawyers. My wife's great pearl chain, which cost me 200*l.*, is to be sold for payment of debts, as also the border of diamonds and rubies; if she will give for the pearl and border what they cost me, she is to have them. I give the jewel of diamonds which was my first wife's to my present one for life, with remainder to my daughter Townshend. I give to all my three daughters the jewel of unicorn's horn, according to their mother's direction, that each one may challenge the use thereof when needs require, and my wife may have the use thereof when she needs, but my daughter Townshend is to have the custody thereof for life.

To my supervisor a ring, valued at 20 marks, upon which the following is to be engraved: "Vindicta Domino." To Mr. Gwyn and Mr. Jermy 40*s.* each. To John Norsforth, for diligent service in my sickness, 10*s.* a year for life, payable out of Stanford manor during my wife's life, and afterwards out of Stanford and Hemesby; a like annuity to old John Harrison. To my son-in-law, Sir Robert Gawdy, one of my best geldings. To Barnaby Banyard, 20*s.* a year, payable out of Stanford and Hemesby. I desire that my brother and supervisor see my evidences sorted and distributed between my wife and daughters, as appertains; and where two have interest, the originals to remain with that person to whom the present interest and possession is due. I advise my executors to retain the services of Martin Man for a time, as he knows my debts and estates.

To Jane Morton a piece of gilt plate, value 5*l.*, with the inscription before mentioned, and rings, value 20*s.* a piece, with the same inscription, to my eldest brother and his wife; my brother Edw. My debts to my son Owen Smyth being such, my children, and others, must hold me excused, though I give no greater legacies. I give also to my wife all the goods which were hers before I married her, and also all her jewels, except those directed to be sold; the remainder of my effects and stock to be sold, and the proceeds applied in liquidating my debts and legacies; the balance, if any, between my executors. 64. The King to the Officers of Exchequer. Whereas John Vaughan, late of Kinnersley, co. Hereford, Esquire, was, in October 1611, outlawed in London, at suit of Sir John Molineux, and process awarded out of the Court of Common Pleas, on 30 Jan. 1612, to the sheriff of Gloucester, to extend and take into our hands his goods and chattels, lands and tenements: It is found, by inquisition taken at Colford, co. Gloucester, 2 April 1612, before Robt. Bathurst, then high sheriff, that Vaughan was then seized, in right of Joan, his wife, of the manors of Avenhall, Great Dean, and Ruardean, yearly value, 50*l.*; and of a farm called Nasse, in the parish of Lidney, value, 19*l.*; and of lands, &c. in Blackmorsale, Westbury, Leigh, and Awre, all co. Gloucester, value, 20*l.*; which manors, lands, &c. the said sheriff seized into our hands.

By virtue of another Exchequer process for levying the issues of the said lands, the Sheriff of Gloucester levied to our use 40*l.* of the issues of the lands of John Vaughan so seized. Now as the profits of the said lands are forfeited to us, and remain at our disposition while the outlawry stands in force; and as Sir John Molineux has upon petition shown that the said lands were extended at his charge and procurement, and that he, being but a surety for Vaughan, and John Bagot had paid for them 400*l.*, and had no means to recover the same but from the issues of the lands, we hereby grant to Sir John Molineux 40*l.* already levied of the said lands, and every other sum hereafter to be levied, until he be fully satisfied of the 400*l.* We therefore command you to deliver the same to him without account; and to grant to Rob. Bathurst, late sheriff, and all succeeding sheriffs of Gloucester, a full discharge. [$7\frac{1}{2}$ sheets, draft.]

65. Project of service offered to the Prince [Charles] by Richard Fellows (?), of co. Durham. The Bishop of Durham has in that county jura regalia, and thereby all forfeitures. Your Highness ought to have, within your manors of Barnard Castle, Raby, and Brancepeth, all those immunities which the Earls of Westmoreland, the ancient owners, had. There have been many Acts of Parliament made, stating the penalties due to the Crown for offences committed there, but these penalties are not inquired after, and the execution of those laws is as necessary there as in other parts. You having manors, liberties, &c. there, inheritable to these penalties, should, in regard of the justice and the profit, procure a grant from His Majesty of all those penalties arising by offences done within that county, and not belonging to the bishop. worth 10l. per annum, and were entered upon by Sir Talbot Bowes, though claimed by the then bishop, and by his Lordship given to me, but I would not deal with them, because of the controversy about felons' goods then pending between the Duke of York and the Bishop, and I could have sold my interest for 100l.

One Wheatley, three years since, was convicted of felony at Durham. He had lands in Tudhoe in Brancepeth, which, by reason of the same variance, are not yet taken by either party, although a plain forfeiture in law. This controversy as to whether felons' goods are due to Prince or Bishop not being decided, hinders the taking of such casualties, but the Bishop seemed content, at the conference for these and other demands, that if they were his, the Prince should have them at his own rate, or for a kiss of his hand. Pray resolve this question. Charles Earl of Westmoreland, by fine levied at the assizes at Durham, 15 Aug. 1569, sold lands to H. R. ; he committed rebellion in November following, and was convicted before the proclamations upon the fine were made, which were not ended until two years after. Query, whether these lands were lawfully conveyed or not, though there was a deed of feoffment executed thereupon, with livery and seisin, the treason having been contrived before the sale, though executed afterwards. Bucks and Oxford, we find that those in Barne Wood are the most fit for the service, and approve of his judgment therein, he having marked 600 trees there, and in the other woods but 200 ; although the distance from the waterside is greater in this than the other two places, the quality of the provisions will countervail the charge of carriage. We desire his warrants may be drawn accordingly.

On adjournment the bailiff, 10 jurats, 11 ministers, and 12 constables named were present.

Upon the reply of M. Aaron Messervy, lieutenant, and his resolution not to attend, it was resolved, that the Sieur de Dielamen and the constable of St. Sauveur should go to the lieutenant, and exhort him to lodge in person at Montorgeuil castle, as captains

The parish captains and constables are charged to have their artillery in order, and their soldiers trained, and to present a note of all defects. To meet the expense, the people being poor, one sou is to be raised for three years on every pot of wine sold by the tavern keepers, raising Gascony wine to five sous a pot. The people being ruined by so many taverns, their numbers are to be taken, and the inhabitants to be consulted as to which should be allowed to remain. There shall be a public fast, to implore the protection of Heaven in the present dangers. Endorsed: "From M. St. Sauveur." [1 $\frac{3}{4}$ pages, French.]

Sentence given by the Justice of Jersey, in favour of Jean Herault, bailiff. On 11 Nov. 1615, Elias Dumaresq was appointed judge in his case, and in presence of six jurats, ordered that 100 marks a year be paid him from 5 April 1614, according to his patent, reserving other emoluments borne by the patent; but time is taken to consider the dues which his predecessor, Mr. Paulet, received, and which the Bailiff says are included in his patent.

On 18 Nov., on considering the first and second patent, the Bailiff requiring the emoluments understood by the first patent, as Mr. Paulet had received them, it was decided that the second patent does not annul the first, but confirms it; and that the receiver be ordered to pay Herault the same rights and profits as Paulet had, besides the 100 marks. which are considered not the half of the dues possessed by preceding bailiffs, and they think His Majesty does not wish to diminish the same.

Phil. Maret, receiver of His Majesty, is ordered to bring the rental books of the island, as the Bailiff demands 20s. a year from the tavern keepers for their licenses, and the receiver approves it, in the name of the captain. [$1\frac{1}{4}$ pages, French.]

81. M. de Saint Sauveur to Sec. Winwood. I must let you know the defects in this State. A special commission is needed to inquire thereon and inform His Majesty, that he may provide a remedy. I entreat that some gentleman experienced in arms may be sent, and without private interest. We also want a procurer to plead the King's causes. The present one is unfit; he is receiver of revenues for Sir John Peyton, so that when he does anything to prejudice the King's rights, there is no one to plead against him; the two offices are incompatible for one person. He has been brought up in Spanish seminaries, got pernicious maxims, and refuses to give the ministers an account of his faith, or to receive the sacrament. The bailiff, my predecessor, and the justices protested against him, but violence prevailed over reason. None should hold such a charge who is not of good life and reputation, and should receive the charge from His Majesty, but hold it only during pleasure. All things here are corrupt and in disorder. Pray help that I may exercise my office with respect and authority.

P.S.—Castle Elizabeth has been abandoned by all its guard but one, and he sent on a market day to the taverns to seek his companions, so that the report thereof got abroad. [3 pages, French.]

82. Jean Herault to Sec. Winwood. I send you as required an account of our castles, forces, and political government, and beg expedition of our requests, especially as the people here have no public exchange, so as to provide for their wants, only taxes on the people, who are poor. Pray get the King's leave to levy a tax of a sou on every pot of wine sold by retail, to gain means for building a pier for shelter of their ships, buying arms and munition, and providing for the defence of the country. This would profit the inhabitants, and not oppress the poor; only the richer people drink wine, and the Council of the isle has consented to it.

The late Queen granted a similar duty to those of Guernsey, who have built a beautiful pier with it. Guernsey is less than this isle, and divided into six parishes. The King's revenues average 1,200*l*. There is but one castle, Castle Cornet, where lives the lieutenant of Lord Carew, who is also bailiff, with a porter, gunner, and 14 soldiers. The castle is on a rock running into the sea, and commands the town and port. The inhabitants are better armed and trained than those of this isle. The lieutenant established by Lord Zouch when in Guernsey is an able and virtuous man, experienced in arms, and he takes pleasure in exercising the soldiers and inhabitants. Here we have nobody who knows how to do this. We should have 24 soldiers to guard our castle; 14 would not suffice.

Our government and church discipline are like that isle, but the officers of justice should be nominated by His Majesty, and also the officers and soldiers of the castle. There should be a dean, as in former times, with episcopal power for the institution of ministers, and spiritual affairs, but without right to meddle in any other affairs, as that would only produce divisions and multiply suits. The King's justices have for 40 years taken cognizance of all other causes. The King's arms should be set up in the accustomed places. This I have never been able to obtain from Sir John Peyton, and it will not be done unless the King commands. If Peyton and his agents can amass money enough, they care not how the rest goes.

Aaron Messervy, Peyton's lieutenant, is not a native, though Henry VII. ordered that soldiers should be natives. He is ignorant of arms, never resides in the castle, and is little thought of.

Phil. Maret, brought up in Spanish seminaries, has been chosen King's receiver and procurer, in spite of the opposition of the bailiff and justices, because the offices should not be held by one person, and because he will not receive the sacrament, and abjure his religion learned among the seminaries. I think he has been meant, when you were told that the lieutenant was a Papist, for the lieutenant does nothing without him, and he is disliked by the people. Therefore I sign a request which will be presented to the King for the office of procurer, and another for that of advocate. It is most necessary that these offices be established by the King's authority.

Pray obtain me His Majesty's confirmation of a sentence given by the justices of the isle in my favour, for the ancient rights belonging to my office. I should not have all the charge of government without the means of maintaining it with dignity, whilst the captain, who is obliged to no service and neglects his duty entirely, has 6,000 or 7,000 crowns yearly. 86. Jean Herault to Sec. Winwood. Storms often prevent passage, therefore it is the more necessary that the King's castles be well provided, for if attacked, we could not send word and have help promptly. I hear Peyton has obtained the artillery and munitions which were very needful for the castles, provided experienced officers and soldiers be put to guard them, otherwise it would be arming the enemy to furnish castles and leave them unguarded.

The captain is sending his butler here to be master porter of Castle Elizabeth, an office hitherto filled by gentlemen brought up to war. You say you only wait the return of Sir John Peyton, who is gone to the Baths, to arrange for the safeguard of the King's castles, but I fear you may not see him till the King returns from his progress. I beg at least that, as the exhortations sent to the lieutenant by the estates of the isle have had no effect, and as he is insufficient, you would get the King's Privy Seal for the safety of the castles, till other orders are given. 89. Jean Herault de St. Sauveur to Sec. Winwood. Sir John Peyton and his servants are so vexed at my appointment as bailiff, that they do all in their power to disgrace me and hinder me in my duties, even caluminating me before the people when I am administering justice, so that I have sometimes been obliged to dismiss the assembly. They neglect their own duties, but do all they can to trouble the peace of the State, and disgrace those who obey the King. This you may judge by the late affront offered by Aaron Messervy, lieutenant (being vexed because complaint was made of the feeble guard of the castles, and at the appointment of M. de St. Ouen as King's procurer) to his brother the Sieur of St. Ouen, who is of one of the noblest, most ancient, and loyal families of the island. When through the negligence or unfaithfulness of the captains, the castles have fallen into the enemy's hands, this family have recovered them, and it was through the father and uncle of St. Ouen that Castle Elizabeth was built. He is bound by his tenure to defend it for 40 days, with two others completely armed, in case of siege; yet now the door of it is shut against him in time of peace, as though he were accused of infidelity, and this in presence of the parents of his wife, who had just come to see her. Ignorant people care nothing for the King's service, only to satisfy their passions. St. Ouen could easily have mastered him, but prefers seeking satisfaction through others.

As the quarrel should be decided, I have sent you a copy of his request, begging that a pursuivant may be sent for Messervy, to bring him before Council. [2 pages, French.]

90. Arguments [by M. de St. Sauveur] to show that the office of bailiff in Jersey is of greater dignity than that of captain. The bailiff keeps the King's seal; has the power of the laws, and the captain is interdicted from all jurisdiction, ecclesiastical or secular.

The captain and lieutenant have to seek right before the bailiff in all actions except where the captain and bailiff are against each other.

The bailiff has to see that the captain and lieutenant keep the castles in repair and well guarded.

The captain, by the bailiff's patent, is to obey him in all relating to his office, or that he commands for the King's service, but Sir John Peyton has not, by his patent, any command over the bailiff.

The bailiff gives the oath to the captain, lieutenant, and porter of the castle, and it is always the greater that administers the oath to the less.

1616.

VOL. XL.

None but the bailiff has ever authority to use the plural we.

The bailiff has always had precedence, not only in the Court, but the assembly of the three States, where he, and not the captain, has presided for the King.

From these reasons, it appears that the title of governor and lieutenant of the King belongs rather to the bailiff than to the captain. Note of Acts to prove these points.

As the King has established me bailiff, I trust that he will not allow the rights of my office to be retrenched, so long as I conduct myself faithfully. [$1\frac{2}{3}$ pages, French.]

91. Jean Herault, bailiff of Jersey, to Sec. Winwood. Let me inform you on the point yesterday treated in your presence, about the Common Council of Jersey. Sir John Peyton has taken upon him to preside, a place that has always belonged to the bailiff, though there have been captains of much higher rank than Peyton, as the Duke of Somerset, Sir Hugh and Sir Amias Paulet, Privy Councillors, Sir Ant. Paulet, and Sir Walter Raleigh. This prerogative of my predecessors could not be taken away without greatly prejudicing me; if you think it better for the service that the power of assembling the States should rather belong to the captain than to the bailiff, I will not contradict; but I think this power in the captain would be prejudicial, because:

1st. Force should always be regulated by justice, lest it should emancipate itself from duty. Thus in France the governors of provinces and towns are strictly forbidden to intermeddle with the administration of justice.

2nd. If the assembling of the States is left to the captain, and he neglects it, as Sir John Peyton has done, or treats with the King's enemies, or tyrannizes over the subject, there will be no means of informing the King; for a private person would be too weak to do it, and without the assembly, the inhabitants cannot send to the King, or raise money for the expenses of the journey. This the captains would never permit, as shown by the refusal of Peyton, since the ordinance of Sir Rob. Gardiner and Dr. Hussey.

3rd. The inhabitants have been faithful to the Crown ever since the Conquest, and recovered the castles when lost by the negligence of the captain. In Henry VII.'s time, Sir Richard Hurleston wanted to be lord of the isle, under protection of the French and the Duchess of Burgundy, and to surrender to the [French] King Montor-geuil Castle, of which he was captain; and if he could have prevented the meeting of the States, he would, and the island would have been lost before the King knew it. The taking away of this liberty, which has never been abused, would greatly discontent the subjects. The power to magistrates to convoke assemblies is common. The mayors in England assemble the aldermen and common councilmen, and the bailiff occupies the same place in Jersey. Both officers are nominated by the King; but the captain should be more carefully watched, having more power to do ill.

Pray do not heed the ordinance of the last commissioners, which is not confirmed, because of the opposition of the island. It will cause discord between the officers. It is denying an assembly to say it cannot be without leave of the captain, who is not to refuse unless he sees cause, because he is the judge of his own reason. The captain should always be requested to be present, but not the ancient form changed to please Sir John Peyton. Pray do what will promote public tranquillity. [3 pages, French.]

92. Jean Herault to Sec. Winwood. Thanks for the justice you have had done on Phil. Maret, and the King and Council's resolution to maintain us, without which we could not exercise our office. Maret is proud and presumptuous, and hated of the people, like all others who are advanced by Sir J. Peyton, and have the guard of the King's castles, whilst he is in England, away from his charge. To avoid coming to you, he has informed you that he was at the Baths, hoping for some accident to cause the rule required for the castles of this island to be forgotten. We hear that he is at his house; but talks of going to the Baths and being here at the end of August, so he will probably leave before the King returns from his progress, and thus escape any conference with you. Thus you are deceived, and the service neglected. [1 page, French.]

96. I. Complaint by Sir John Peyton to the King, against John Herault, bailiff of Jersey. He declared at the seat of justice that Your Majesty had given him his land to keep, and that he acknowledged no person as his superior; publicly affirmed himself to be the governor, and Your Majesty's lieutenant, and that I was but captain of the castles, and muster master of the country; and thereupon willed the ministers to alter the form of their prayer, naming the bailiffs before the governor of the island.

He professed that he sought the office of bailiff to deliver the people from the tyranny of governors, and that the master porter of the castle ought to be sworn first to him, and after to me, the governor, and caused his oath to be enrolled otherwise than it was taken in Court, and contrary to all precedents.

He pretends power in himself or his lieutenant to punish the governors, whom he terms captains, personally and capitally, and menaces the ruin of such as uphold the governor's authority. He assumed a power of assembling the States without direction of the governor, which was never before attempted. He has displaced Your Majesty's procurer, whom, by virtue of your patent, I appointed five years since, as all former governors have done, and has sworn one into the place quite unfit for it.

These and other usurpations are most dangerous in a frontier place, so remote from the eye of the State, and so near the duchy of Normandy, whereof it was sometime a member, especially considering his presumptuous and daring spirit. These articles of complaint were certified to me by Aaron Messervy, lieutenant governor there, and John le Hardy, Your Majesty's advocate, whose letters I can produce. [1½ pages, copy.]

Dec. ?

118. Declaration of the reason of the animosities conceived by John Herault, bailiff of Jersey, Sir Philip de Carteret, and others, against Philip Maret, His Majesty's procurer there. The bailiff took offence because Maret insisted upon using, according to custom, the justices' opinion, whether a misdemeanor committed by Philip Bisson was finable or not; whereupon the bailiff went out of Court in great choler, and threatened either to have him out of his office or go out of his own.

For opposing a certain order which the bailiff endeavoured to make, of 1s. impost upon every pottle of wine sold in the isle, it being a royal prerogative. Opposing his claim of a rent belonging to His Majesty, called tavernage, when he told the procurer that he did not understand the duty of his charge. Opposing his claim of a duty, also belonging to His Majesty, called le poids du Roy. Opposing his title of seigneur de St. Sauveur, the said seignory being one of the chief fees belonging to His Majesty in the isle. Opposing his appointing his own judge, when he contested with another man, and his raising his own and some other officers' fees, it being a burden laid upon the people, without warrant from the King. Opposing his assembling the States, contrary to custom and the late Commissioners' orders, without the Governor's consent.

The bailiff sharply rebuked the procurer, because he entitled Sir John Peyton governor. He endeavoured to persuade the procurer in private to surcease those oppositions, stating that Sir John Peyton was an old man, and a stranger in the country, and that he was an islander born, and living among those of the island to whose benefit it would be; but seeing that the procurer stood firm, he joined with Sir Philip de Carteret, who was likewise offended because the procurer was invested with the procuratorship, for which he, Sir Philip, had been an earnest suitor in behalf of Elias Carteret, his brother, and the more because his cousin Joshua Carteret was called in question for concealing calumnious words, uttered against His Majesty. Things standing thus—they exhibited a petition to His Majesty in April 1616, praying for the procuratorship for Elias Carteret, the docquet of which petition was signed by the bailiff, without informing His Majesty that the place was already possessed. Having obtained in this manner a grant thereof, they concealed it, and in the May following, suspended the procurer from his office, binding him over into England, upon a great penalty; and in his absence, installed Elias Carteret, in his room, without convicting the procurer of any misdemeanor committed in the exercise of his office, or that any man had ever complained of him. To cover their project, they have set down in the Court Rolls of the isle His Majesty's grant to the said Elias Carteret, purposely omitted the date, and kept the original secret, so that their practices might not be discovered; notwithstanding, on 14 Sept. last, the bailiff could not repress himself from telling openly at the Court that the said procurator had entered into his office by the window, but that he had put him out by the gate. 119. Memorandum by John Herault, Seigneur of St. Sauveur, and bailiff of Jersey, naming himself Philip de Carteret, Seigneur of St. Ouen, John Perin Seigneur of Rosell, and eight others, jurats and justices of the island, as Commissioners for surveying His Majesty's castles there, and inquiring into the following articles, viz. :—

What officers and soldiers have been kept in Montorgueil Castle for 40 years, and in Elizabeth Castle since the building thereof? What were their abilities, ages, strength, &c., and of what country were they? What were their wages, liveries, and entertainment? What watch and ward did they keep, by night and day, and in what places of the castle; by what men, and how often did they change and visit their watch.

Whether the captains or their lieutenants always resided in the castle. Whether there was not a resident minister to teach and preach the word of God, and minister the Sacrament to the soldiers; what were his wages and entertainment.

How often the soldiers and inhabitants of the country were trained. What officers and men have been and are now usually retained within Montorgueil and Elizabeth Castles, since the time of Sir John Peyton.

With similar inquiries with reference to the present time. What number of gentlemen or servants are kept by Sir John Peyton, when he is there, besides the soldiers of the garrison. What number of soldiers were left to keep Elizabeth Castle on 24 Feb. and 2 March, as also Montorgueil Castle at the time Mons. de Quarantillier arrived in Jersey with his daughter; also what number were left in the castle on 8 March 1615-6. 120. Petition of John Falaize to Sir Ralph Winwood, to hear his counsel, on his appeal in support of a sentence of the Court of Guernsey, relative to a rent of $11\frac{1}{2}$ bushels of wheat due to him by Thos. De Vic. Eight days after the hearing of the cause at Guernsey, when his counsel was gone, he was suddenly warned again before the Attorney General and Mr. Calvert, where his adverse party with his friends and counsel were, and he alone; and they asking him questions, he answered according to his poor discretion, but never consented to anything. The matter then in question was only for $11\frac{1}{2}$ bushels of wheat, which were found for him by the Court. Devic offered him 30*l.* as composition after the sentence, but it cannot be thought that he would consent to lose that and three quarters more, which was no part of the appeal now in question, or in the reference to the committees, and was six years before confirmed to him by Sir Robert Gardner and Dr. Hussey, without admittance of appeal; nor would he give consent to the nomination of the arbitrators named in their Lordships' order, being such as have been parties against him in this business. By Sir Ralph Winwood's favour, was called alone before Sir Roger Wilbraham and Mr. Edmondess, who also thought it not fit to undo that which Mr. Attorney and Mr. Calvert had done. [1 page.]

122. Petition of Amice de Carteret, bailiff of Guernsey, to Lord Zouch, Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, Lord Carew, master of ordnance, and the rest of the Council authorised to determine the controversy between John Briard of Guernsey, merchant, complainant, and Eleazar Marchant, gent., jurat there, defendant.

By ancient charters, all jurisdiction, civil and criminal, is given to the bailiff and jurats, three cases only excepted, viz., treason, counterfeiting money, and laying violent hands upon the bailiff or jurats, executing their said charges; in which cases they are to reserve the judgment to His Majesty. Their laws, in case of delict or misdemeanor, and even of murder, forbid them to admit any party to follow the same, save the next of kin or the person interested; as a servant upon the murdering of his master, or a tenant of his Lord, who shows the wound he received in defence of his master, and pursuit is only allowed by help of the King's procurer there in the Court Royal. The course hitherto pursued in the suit is contrary to the laws of the Isle; the complainant has sought to draw it from that jurisdiction, and has arrogated the whole following of it to himself, without the help of His Majesty's procurer;

and although the bailiff and four jurats enjoined to examine witnesses have proceeded therein, yet, by reason of his opposition, they have only had a bare examination of the persons produced, and recorded the same, without discerning the lawful witnesses from the accusers, or admitting the defendant to any legal exception or proof or confrontation, as earnestly desired, and as directed according to law. Finally, their whole report of the case has been hitherto kept from the knowledge of either party. Requests the suppression of these proceedings, so far as they are against the law. [1 sheet.]

123. Petition of Eleazar le Marchant and John Briard, of Guernsey, to Lord Zouch, Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, and Lord Carew, master of ordnance. The Council being often troubled with their controversies, directed a commission to the bailiff and jurats to examine the same, and referred the final judgment to his Lordship, who ordered copies of the proceedings to be given to each party. Before receiving them however, both moved by God's spirit only, remitted to each other all wrong and offences; and they now request that the proceedings may be cast into the fire, the rather because they were prejudicial to the laws and privileges of the islands. [1 page, signed by both parties.]

124. "Criminal matters in Jersey; ancient precedents." The captain, deputy, and jurats are not to remit the penalty of death without command of the King. The captain is not to allow any soldier to imprison any subject in the castle, but all causes are to be judged by the bailiff and jurats. Matthew Baker violating these rules in November 1518, as Sir John Peyton does now, was prohibited therefrom; judgment quoted, which has since been confirmed by King James. The creation of officers by any but the King was prohibited by Act of Parliament, 2 July 1536. The King's writing to Peyton to put Herauld in possession as bailiff shows that he did not intend to prejudice the law. Lord Zouch and Sec. Winwood, having considered the matter, have certified that the grant to Herauld should stand, and that Peyton should allow him 100 marks pension out of the revenue. The question is whether Peyton's patent is to be allowed to qualify Herauld's. Notes from grants of the office of bailiff from 10 Edw. II., proving the bailiff's independence of the governor, and his enjoyment till lately of land worth 200*l.* a year. Also of trouble from the pretensions of former governors to nominate the bailiff and the dean. [5 written and 7 blank pages.]

125. Notes showing how Jersey was disposed of by Henry VI. and Henry VII., the King retaining the nomination of the bailiff and dean, and the captain not allowed to impose any taxes. [1 page.]

126. Statement to Council. His Majesty has granted Guernsey and Jersey a certain quantity of leather yearly from England, but the custom house of Southampton has a proportion for the use of those islands, and under pretence of that portion, a great deal more is conveyed away, to the prejudice of His Majesty and this kingdom, and no benefit to the said islands; for though they enter into bond to the customers of Hampton to land it in the islands, in order to avoid the forfeiture of the bond, they land their leather at St. Aubin's port in Jersey, and the searcher being corrupt, they get the Lieutenant Governor's hand that it is landed according to the bond. After they have received the certificate, they put the leather aboard again by night, and carry it to St. Malo, and there sell it, whereby His Majesty is wronged of his customs, and his subjects of the commodity.

This might be prevented if all the leather transported to the islands were brought to a common hall in the islands, and there kept, and not suffered to be shipped for France, and then the islanders might be supplied; whereas now they cannot, by reason of the transportation of it into France. If this course were taken, a tenth of the leather that goes out of this kingdom will serve those islands. [1 page.]

127. ——— to [the Council]. Pray take notice of certain particulars intended by the cunning of the commissioners, under colour of the authority of the commission of sewers, though the commissioners are bound, on penalty of 40*l.*, to take the oath truly and indifferently to execute their authority. It is therefore to be noted what walls are specified in their authority, to make use of to themselves in shutting of the King's channel called Cold Harbour, on either side of which there is an ancient sea wall; between the channel and the walls there are some 1,000 acres of land left out by the Lord Abbot of St. Augustine's, which the sea flowed and reflowed upon. The channel has ever been a common sewer for upwards of 20,000 acres. This channel was 100 feet wide, and lay open to the sea, and at low water a man might have gone over it dry footed, until the shutting up of the channels near the several valleys, from 100 to 4 feet. As the commissioners of sewers are to reform all things specified in their commission, it is to be hoped they will do so. [1 page, rough draft.]

128. Answer of the Merchant Adventurers to certain points lately propounded to them by the Privy Council, and a further explanation on others petitioned for. Your Honours, when lately sitting at Hampton Court, commanded our governor, deputy, and others then appearing before you on our behalf, to propound to us the consideration of buying up the cloth in Blackwell Hall, between this and Christmas, with such reservations that we undertook the same, in our answer delivered to you 16 Sept. last. Also the buying up of cloth now in pawn at divers men's houses in London; and a further explanation of two articles in our former remonstrance and petitions, touching a commission for the better execution of the statute for the true making of cloth, and touching the licence for the company to export dyed and dressed cloth to places privileged by His Majesty's grants to us in our first contract.

On 27 Sept. last, we held a general Court, and after much deliberation, agreed to present to you the following:—For the first point of security, although we hoped what we voluntarily offered should have been left to us to be freely performed, yet for your better satisfaction, it was with difficulty agreed that every brother of the company shall, within one week, give his bond to our treasurer for performance of his particular share assigned by the assessment lately made, and that the penalty of such bond shall be as many pounds as the number of cloths in the condition; and if any delay or refuse to enter into such bond, his name shall be returned to you, that he may be dealt with as you think fit. This is yielded for the present, yet with protestation that it be not drawn into a precedent.

The other point, of our going into houses where the cloth is at pawn to buy it up, was also propounded, but it was with one accord agreed to entreat your Lordships to hold us excused, it being a course unusual among merchants, and affording means to the clothiers (now not over well affected to us) both to toil us infinitely, and to expose us to extreme derision. They may easily pretend the cloths which they have sold to their customers to be but pawned, and so make us hunt into their friends' houses to see them, and then make such a price as he that first bought them may make a second again, or we lose our time and labour.

The clothes that are bonâ fide pawned are usually such as have been in the hall and tried the markets there, but for their faultiness could find no buyers; so that by this course we should be forced to buy up the faulty cloth, to the encouragement of bad clothing, and embasing the noblest commodity of our country. The cloth now in pawn is not more than it was heretofore in the settled trade of the old company, when many men made it their trade to let out money upon interest for pawn of cloth, and had for the most part great quantities upon their hands. If we must needs buy up the clothier's cloth, let him bring it, as in former time, into the open market, and he will have the advantage of the frequency and variety of merchants in the public hall; it will be impossible and unseemly for every buyer to go to each private house where cloth lies pawned.

For the articles to be further explained; first for the commission which we desired for execution of the statute for the true making of cloth, without the tedious and chargeable course of a suit at law. Our former petition we take to be reasonable and necessary, for since the making of the said statute, there has not yet been one information preferred by any merchant against a clothier for false cloth making, and yet no man doubts but there has been a greater store of false cloth made since that time; so that there having been no execution of the statute, and yet so much need thereof, it seems time to devise some other means for the same, which we could not better invent than by imitating the course held in the Low Countries; viz., that sworn visitors be appointed to view and tax the faults, and that then the merchant pay himself without suit at law. We take it that this course may be propounded without a Parliament, as the late Queen in 1570 provided the like compendium in other cases, by authorising the then officers of the Court of Exchequer to establish orders needful in the said Court; and among others, one for the avoiding of charges of pleading in some cases, which pleading before was necessary by law. This reformation continued all the residue of her reign, and was confirmed by the Parliament in the first year of our now Sovereign; which precedent, though it differs in the matter, seems not unlike the thing we now desire. Wherefore, since the same does not tend to the violating of the meaning of the statute, but only to its more compendious execution, we pray that this supply may be allowed us, according to that old rule, Quotiens lege aliquid unum vel altrum introductum est, bona occasio est cetera quæ tendunt ad eandem utilitatem, vel interpretatione vel certè jurisdictione, suppleri.

For the liberty we desire for the brethren of our company to carry their dyed and dressed cloth to any place where they are privileged, besides the mart towns, our Court considered whether we might shorten any of our former petition; but we found that there will be no way for the vent of our dyed and dressed cloth unless we may have free liberty to trade into all places where the Hollanders and other merchant strangers used to vent the same cloth dyed and dressed by the Dutch, which first they had bought of the old company white. We do not desire thereby to invade the privileges of any other company, for it is not intended that every brother of the company may carry his cloth to all places of vent out of the Merchant Adventurers' precinct, but the sole Merchant Adventurers to such parts of Germany and the Low Countries as the Court shall order; and those that are also free of other companies, each man respectively to the places where he is privileged by the freedom of his company, subject to the orders of the same in the sale of his cloth. Neither need there follow any confusion of reckoning, for distinguishing the cloths dyed and dressed out of whites from those dyed in the wools (which were the old trade), all our cloth dyed and dressed out of whites (which is the new trade) shall be sealed at the clothworkers' and dyers' stalls, and so, by the officer of the Custom House, passed out by the seals, and then put to the account of this new work; and such as shall not be so sealed may pass upon the old trade as heretofore. We hope you will not tie us longer to the mart towns, but leave us to our liberty as first promised us, so that our own countrymen may have the full manufacture of their native commodity, and the same may find vent, notwithstanding the present combination against it. 1. Order in Council. Sir John Peyton, governor of Jersey, having, in July last, exhibited articles complaining that John Herauld of St. Sauveur, bailiff of Jersey, had usurped upon his office of governor, His Majesty commanded that the bailiff should be called hither, and that we should examine the case. Upon a full hearing, we reported as follows, 18 Feb. :—

We acquit the bailiff of undutifulness to His Majesty or injustice in government, but not of heat of words, for which we gave him a sharp reprehension.

We allow the bailiff 60*l.* for his charges, whereof one moiety is to be paid here before his departure, by Sir John Peyton the younger, and the other by the governor at his return into the island, with all charges due to him for his entertainment.

We think the charge of the military forces should be wholly in the governor, and the care of justice and civil affairs in the bailiff.

His Majesty commanded this report to be published at the Council table, with a declaration of his approval, and an order that for the better manifestation of the truth, an Act should be made thereof, and entered in the Council register; also the bailiff to be dismissed from a chargeable attendance, and repair home to his charge, for exercise whereof it was ordered that, besides his salary of 100 marks a year, he should enjoy such rights, &c. of his said office as his predecessors had done. Endorsed with a list of the members of the Council present. [1 page.]

Feb. ? 2. M. de St. Sauveur to the King. As you found, by the unanimous opinion of Council, that it was better to revoke the power that Sir John Peyton assumes to your prejudice, pray command your order to be put into execution, and your poor servant to be expedited. and since, and take an inventory of what remains; after which you shall inform yourselves whether any of our said provision has been embezzled or sold; and if so, how much, and to whom.

As the strength of that isle consists very much in the quality of the inhabitants, especially if they be trained in military discipline, you shall cause a general muster to be made of them, and view and inventory their armour and munition. You shall then examine the martial and civil government; inquire touching all extortions, oppressions, &c. committed of late years in the martial or civil government, and who are the offenders, and whether by corruption, wilful negligence, or otherwise.

And because this employment will meet with a controversy there long since sprung up, between Philip Maret, the bailiff, and Sir Philip Carteret, on which Maret has often complained that he has been wrongfully deprived of the office of our procurer by our bailiff and the seigneur of St. Ouen, and another invested in his place less able to do us service, he being never convicted of misdemeanor; we require you to give the case a fair and legal hearing, and report to the Council here.

We do not so strictly limit you but that you may receive and inquire upon all articles and informations presented to you, of defects and negligences which have been committed there, either in the martial or civil government, except in matters fully determined here before Council. For the rest, we give you full power to take such order as may best advance our service and content our subjects. [1 $\frac{2}{3}$ pages. Signed by the King and Sir Ralph Winwood.]

Huntingdon, 21 March 1617.

[March 25.] 4. Abstract of the above commission, and also of another to Bird and Conway touching ecclesiastical matters; the erection of a dean; what jurisdiction he should have, what corn or other maintenance he had heretofore, and who now has the same; who is to appoint him, whether the King, ministers, or States of the island; whether our book of common prayer might be placed in every church, so that the people might be acquainted therewith; and whether their youth might be capable of places in the colleges of the universities, and such young students be recommended by the State. [1 $\frac{1}{2}$ pages. Abstract by Sir Wm. Bird.]

March? 5. Description of the [Channel] islands, especially of Jersey. They are parcel of the Duchy of Normandy. Jersey is in circuit 36 Italian miles, divided into 12 parishes and two castles; Montorgueil on the east, on a rock running into the sea, with a port where boats daily arrive from Normandy, 12 miles off; and Castle Elizabeth, built by the late Queen on a little island made by the tides near St. Helier, where the Court and market are held, and where a haven might be built.

The King has a Sovereign Court, composed of the bailiff, 12 jurats, sheriff, procurer, attorney, clerk, prosecutor, and usher; the bailiff presides, and it has jurisdiction in all cases, civil and criminal, except treason, or personal disputes between the captain and jurats, which in ancient times were referred to the Exchequer at Rouen, but now are referred to the King and Council. It has also power to provide for the government of this island.

There is also the Common Council of the island, called the assembly of the three States, composed of the bailiff, by whose mandate it is summoned, 12 jurats, 12 ministers, and 12 constables. It is held when jurats have to be chosen, or any one sent to the King on the affairs of the island, or any danger threatens, or public money has to be raised. Captains,—especially those of quality,—have sometimes been asked to assist, as Sir Amias Paulet, who was a Privy Councillor; whereby his followers, have usurped the power of appointing the bailiff, whom they also make their deputy, and they want the power of calling the assembly, and of exercising a negative voice therein. Peyton's lieutenant wanted the acts of the assembly to pass in his name, but the States declared that none had ever presided but the bailiff. He, as keeper of the seal, &c. ought always to be named by the King; the jurats by the bailiff and States; the sheriff, procurer, and advocate by the King, or by a King's writ, for the offices are of so little value that no one would like the expense of seals. The clerks and other officers of the Court are nominated by the bailiff.

The ecclesiastical discipline of the islands was under the Bishop of Coutances, and the church revenues paid to him, as settled by Edward VI. and confirmed by the late Queen; but since the Reformation, the conduct of the church was ordered to be like that of the reformed churches of Normandy, and the Bishop of Winchester was appointed to have superintendance of the isles.

There was also a dean, with episcopal power for the institution of ministers, but neither he nor the Norman bishops have any civil jurisdiction, only cognizance of the preaching, sacraments, &c. Now there is no dean, for the captain has suppressed him, as he has tried to do the bailiff, to get the power in his own hands; he exercises the power of the dean, is present at church assemblies, and pretends a negative voice. 6. Additional clause to be inserted into the King's letter for Privy Seal loans. You shall understand that, in respect of our opinion of you, and of your more than ordinary love and duty towards us, howsoever it may be that in former time not being able to perform promises in like nature may discourage many, yet you shall no way measure our princely resolution by the precedent accidents, nor doubt of us when we engage that word yet never broken to any, which we hereby give you, for repayment of whatsoever the Privy Seal forms shall assure to you. That which we require of you therefore is, that within 12 days after receipt, you will cause ——— pounds to be delivered to ———, whom we appoint our collector in your county, the loan whereof we desire until Michaelmas twelvemonth, at which time we bind us, our heirs, &c. [1 page, draft.]

7. Speech of Sir Edw. Conway on opening the commission of inquiry into the state of the island of Jersey. The King our Sovereign—having received information of disorders of misgovernment in the martial and civil administration of this island, whereof he has a singular care, and great estimation of the love and loyalty of the inhabitants,—has deputed us to ascertain how you are defended from invasion, how ordered in government, &c.; and to rectify and compose all things, and give him information therein. You have heard our commission, and we doubt not you will acknowledge what a just and loving Prince you have. On Monday next we will begin with the military government, and the governor will prepare accordingly; we will then proceed with the civil, giving you knowledge by the bailiff. 9. Speech of Sir Wm. Bird, D.C.L., on opening the commission of inquiry into the state of the island of Jersey. That which this worthy gentleman to whom I am associated in this commission has delivered to you, in your own proper language, of the princely care His Majesty has of the safety and good government of this his island, though I be not so fit to express to the understanding of all present, for my want of use of the French tongue, yet because I am a witness of what His Majesty out of his own mouth delivered to us, to the effect already spoken, I avow the truth of the same, and promise like diligence in discharge of this trust, without respect of any man, but with a direct aim at the service of His Majesty, and the good government of this country. 10. The Council to Sir Edw. Conway and Sir Wm. Bird, Commissioners at Jersey. Complaint has been made to us by Hugh Hue, of Jersey, that having appealed to us from a sentence given against him by the lieutenant, bailiff, and some of the jurats of that isle, in behalf of Thomas Lemprière, tutor to the children of Peter de Soulemont, although upon hearing of the cause, we ordered the annulling of that sentence, and maintaining the appellant in possession of a certain house and lands, they have not only refused to admit our sentence, or enter it in the Court Rolls,—because the outside was wet and one cover a little broken, though the writing was legible in every part,—but have amerced the appellant, as by the enclosed petition will appear.

As we wonder that there should be any such delay by the ministers of justice in that isle, to admit a sentence of this board in case of appeal, we pray you to examine the complaint, and order that our former letters be entered into the Court Rolls there, for final deter-

- May 14. 11. Account by John Buckerell, master porter, and three others, of ordnance, stores, and provisions in the castle of Mountorgueil, Jersey, including ordnance mounted at the charge of the Governor. [1 page.]
- May 20. 12. Muster roll of 224 men, including officers, bearing arms in St. Saviour's parish, Jersey, delivered to the King's commissioners; signed by Aaron Messervy, captain. Also statement that they have a falcon and falconet, with 120 lbs. of powder, and 6 lbs. of match, 26 balls for the falcon, and 16 for the falconet; and names of 11 men appointed to find horses to draw the pieces and their munition. [French, book of 7 written and 5 blank pages.]
- May 20? 13. Account of the number of inhabitants in 12 parishes named in Jersey, who were charged with muskets and other furniture, in 1608, 1610, and 1617, giving the quantity of arms, munition, &c. for each parish, for each year; with notes of musters in 1549 and 1562. [$1\frac{1}{2}$ sheets.]
- May? 14. Note asking whether Philip Maret has been deprived of his place of procurer; whether he has been called in question and legally convicted of any misdemeanor in exercising the same; and whether Elias de Carteret is as sufficient a man for the place of procurer as Maret. [$\frac{1}{4}$ page.]
- May 27? 15. Request of Philip Maret to Sir Edw. Conway and Sir Wm. Bird, Commissioners in Jersey. Having complained to King and Council of being wrongfully deprived, by the bailiff and seigneur of St. Ouen, of the office of procurer in Jersey, without being convicted of misdemeanor, his Highness referred the examination of my grievances to you, and Sec. [Winwood] dismissed me, telling me that I should have a fair hearing.
- Understanding that you are solicited by my adversaries to alter the course begun of the examinations, by suffering them to produce as witnesses their adherents, and parties interested, contrary to the law of these isles, which will be my utter undoing, I beseech you to notice the following articles.
- The law of Normandy says that, C'est à l'acteur à faire sa preuve et restreinte de tesmoins, which law is practised in the isle. The same law says, qu'on ne doit faire preuve sur preuve; the reason is pour éviter à contradiction, et d'autant qu'on ne plaide qu'à une fin. If, after examination of my witnesses, you are not satisfied, I hope you will call indifferent persons until you are fully informed.
- There is no complaint made against me, whereas my complaint is known to King and Council, and by them referred to examination. I therefore desire that my proof may be prosecuted as was begun, and the rather because my parties have denied my allegations, being read to them in my presence, and have delivered cross articles for my witnesses to be examined upon. If my adverse parties produce any complaint against me, I will confess or deny; if denied, then they may bring forth their proofs. [$\frac{2}{3}$ sheet.]

16. Note of matters that Philip Maret intends to prove against the bailiff of Jersey and Sir Phil. Carteret, for depriving him of his office of procurer. That the bailiff caused an Act to be written in the Rolls, 25 May 1616, wherein, upon the denunciator's record, he taxed him of prejudice to the King's honour, and contempt of justice, notwithstanding the bailiff said that the denunciator deserved to have his ears cut off for his said record.

That he prevented the opinion of the jurats, saying that he could not condemn the procurer in less than 1,000 crowns' fine, and deposing him of his place; and thereupon, with M. St. Ouen, caused an Act to be written, which they signed, but the rest of the jurats refused, when St. Ouen said he would maintain whatever they said or did against the procurer.

That he suspended the procurer against the Council's order. Although their Lordships have allowed three months to the subjects of these parts to attend the board upon their appeals, the bailiff has bound him to appear there within 40 days. Although their Lordships directed that no obstacle be offered to any in having the Acts of Court, he has refused them to the procurer.

In opposition to the Norman law and custom of the isle, he refused exceptions against judges, though offered in writing; and without examination of allegations, condemned the procurer in a fine of 50 crowns, to be applied to the reparation of the sessions' house, which last clause is against His Majesty's extent, and has been added since sentence; it is therefore desired that the said recusations may be tried.

After sentence given, he granted an order to examine allegations then making; he wrote to Amias de Carteret against the procurer, whereby he was arrested in Guernsey; and solicited letters against him, whereby he was imprisoned in England.

That he misconstrued his words, not permitting a full relation of them to be inserted in the Rolls, and calling him estourdi; sending him to prison on his sole authority, and adjudging him to be fettered and manacled, and kept there above five months. Elias de Carteret pretends a grant of the procurer's office, by a patent inserted in the Rolls without date; it is therefore desired that the original patent may appear, and the Rolls be called for, as also that Carteret and the procurer may be examined before Council. [$1\frac{1}{4}$ pages.]

[May 28.]

17. Arguments showing that Maret could not by law pretend any right to the office of King's procurer in Jersey, by nomination of Sir John Peyton, captain:—

1. Sir John Peyton has no such power by his patent.

2. The nomination is reserved to His Majesty, by a special statute of 10 Hen. VII., and the captains are forbidden to intermeddle therein.

1617.

VOL. XLI.

3. His Majesty, upon hearing the cause in controversy between the captain and bailiff, concerning the nomination of the bailiff, declared that the nomination of his officers of justice was an essential mark of his sovereignty inseparable from his royal person, and that the power of nomination had been inserted in the said captain's patent without his knowledge; therefore, confirming the statutes of Henry VII., he has declared the patent of the office of bailiff granted to John Herault of St. Sauveur in reversion, and opposed by the said captain, to be good in law.

Also arguments showing that it would prove inconvenient if the captain had the power to appoint the said procurer, and very prejudicial to the King's service if the same person should execute both the office of procurer and receiver of His Majesty's revenues.

With extracts from the statutes of King John and Elizabeth, to show that the King's Court has power to censure and punish all persons for crimes and misdemeanours without appeal, except the person of the captain, bailiff, and jurats, judgment upon whom is reserved to the King. [$1\frac{1}{2}$ pages, draft, damaged.]

[May 28.] 18. Sentence of justice against Phil. Maret, 25 May 1617, before the bailiff and eight jurats. Maret, as King's procurer, was summoned to attend the Court, but he said he could not come; he was sent for again, and ordered to bring a certain paper, which he had withdrawn; but he again refused to come, whereupon he was ordered to recognize his fault and ask pardon.

The next Tuesday was appointed for doing right to Phil. de Carteret, sieur of St. Ouen and a jurat, against certain slanders of Phil. Maret, who, although it is forbidden to interrupt jurats when giving their opinion, yet interrupted Carteret, pretending that he and his people had tried to kill him (Maret) at night in his house. He confessed to having the paper in question, and promised to give it up the said Tuesday.

On 28 May, the bailiff and jurats being assembled to consider Maret's conduct towards Carteret, chief justice of the island, in interrupting him at Court by accusing him of an attempt at assassination, ordered Maret to make an apology, and fined him 50 crowns; but he, refusing obedience, was ordered, under penalty of 100*l.*, to appear before Council within 40 days, and was meanwhile suspended from his office as procurer, and ordered to give bail for the fine and penalty, which were to be applied to the building and repair of the royal sessions' hall.

On 14 Sept. 1616, Maret was summoned to answer for his actions, and Sir Ralph Winwood's letter read, stating that he had been twice before Council, who sent him and his cause back. Maret contradicts this, and says that he never appeared at the Council table; that his petition has not been read, nor his reasons heard, and that his cause is not returned, but still depends before Council. For this cause, and his refusal to submit to justice, he has been sent close prisoner to the castle, till Council's pleasure be known.

Abstract of privileges granted by King James to the inhabitants of Jersey, giving power to the bailiff and jurats to settle all causes, civil or criminal, in the island, excepting such as by ancient custom are reserved to the Crown. [Latin.]

Orders by Dr. Tertullian Pyne and Rob. Napper, Royal Commissioners in 33 Elizabeth, to the same effect, making the exceptions cases of treason, where however the captain and two jurats have power to arrest the offender, or those where the captain and most of the justices are parties against each other. The bailiff and jurats are to order all criminal causes. Also to settle all accidental things, as the price of provisions, of foreign money, salaries, rents, arbitrations in cases below the value of 10s., &c.; in all which cases no appeal is allowed. [French.]

Order in Council about appeals,—made in 1572, on appeal of Helier de Carteret, Lord of St. Ouen,—after taking the opinions of Gilbert Gerard, Attorney-General, and Dr. Lewis, Judge of the Admiralty.

1. That no appeal be allowed except in cases exceeding the value of 10*l*.

2. Nor until the case has been ordered by a definitive sentence.

3. That without special cause, every appeal be prosecuted within three months after sentence.

4. No appeal to be received without copy of the sentence and process, which the bailiff and jurats are to deliver, if required. [$2\frac{3}{4}$ pages.]

19. Interrogatories by Sir Edw. Conway and Sir Wm. Bird, Commissioners at Jersey, for examination of George Paulet, late bailiff there. Whether he did not receive twenty sous per annum for tavernage? and if so, whether as bailiff, or lieutenant to the governor, as a free gift, or otherwise? Whether he has ever received any fines belonging to that office, and if so, how much and under what colour? Whether he had any rabbits allowed out of the King's warrens, and if so, how many, and whether by virtue of his office or as a free gift? What salt used to be paid to the governor or bailiff, and if there is any record for payment of salt brought into Jersey by strangers? [1 page.]

21. Answer of John Herault to the articles presented to the Commissioners by Hugh Le Fevre. He claims a debt from the late John Herault, father to this John, as assured upon his goods and lands; but all these were handed over to the creditors. Fevre refused a tenement offered to him, and Herault has no lands of his late father's.

VOL. XLI.

1617.

He alleges promises of payment from the father of the late Herault, which is unlikely, because he was accomplice of Herault's loose conduct, drawing him away as a youth of family, and leading him to anticipate his father's property; but Herault dying before his father, Hugh and others were frustrated in their attempt to get the goods, &c.

If he can prove his debt, he can go to law. Has only a ninth part of the property of his grandfather, and cannot act without the co-inheritors. Is quit of all debts of his father, having yielded up everything to the creditors. [1 page, French.]

29. Examination upon interrogatories not given, of John le Hardy of St. Martin's parish, Jersey, His Majesty's advocate, before Sir Edw. Conway and Sir Wm. Bird, Commissioners for Jersey. Maret, upon being sent for by the bailiff and justices, came to the Court, and meantime sent to the denunciator to say he was coming. The bailiff chided the denunciator for varying his record after Maret came in; he also said, before the opinion of the justices was asked, that Maret should be fined 1,000 crowns, and dismissed from his place. There was an Act written on paper tendered to the justices to sign, and refused; whereupon Sir Philip Carteret said he would maintain what was in the paper against Maret. Before any of the justices had delivered their opinion, Maret told the bailiff, that if he had any meaning to proceed against him, he had recusations against some of the justices; notwithstanding the bailiff proceeded to ask their opinion, and then Maret told the bailiff that he had a recusation against the seigneur of St. Ouen, because some of his kindred or servants would have assaulted him.

The custom of the Court is to censure presently any misdemeanor committed there, but the justices may defer it until another day. The opinion of the justices being asked, the cause was put off until another day. Was present in Court when Maret tendered a declaration, which he offered to prove, but was not allowed. Thinks the fine of 50 crowns was not pronounced to be applied to the reparations of the Sessions house at the time of the sentence, or entered in the rolls at that sitting. At Maret's request, went to John Durell, who keeps the acts of the Court, and demanded a copy of the proceedings against Maret, but Durell said the bailiff had commanded him not to deliver them to anyone.

Upon Maret's return out of England, he was present when the bailiff caused the sentence formerly given against him to be read, and asked him whether he would then submit thereto, when he said he could not, because the case was yet depending before the Lords. Thereupon the bailiff pulled out of his pocket, and read a letter from Winwood showing the contrary; nevertheless Maret insisted upon the truth of what he had formerly said. Before the bailiff asked the opinion of the justices, he said Maret should be imprisoned, fettered, and manacled, and told the porter of the castle to take him away and he would answer for it.

Was present in Maret's house when Elie de Carteret, with divers others, came there in the night in a friendly manner, and Maret sent for drink for them; but a quarrel ensued, whereupon Carteret challenged Maret to come out of his house 10 feet if he dared, but Carteret came in again by the persuasion of friends, and they were reconciled. [$2\frac{1}{2}$ pages, draft.]

June 19. 30. Like examination of Peter de La Roque of St. Helier's, sheriff. Was not present in Court at the time stated. Censures are often given at the Court immediately for misdemeanors done there, but sometimes they are deferred. Was present in Court upon Maret's return from England, when the bailiff asked whether he would submit to the sentence formerly pronounced, and there read to him, and he answered that his cause was yet depending before the Council, and that he had not yet been heard by them. Being asked by the bailiff why he was sent back to Jersey, he replied because he had no appeal to show; whereupon the bailiff pulled out a letter of Secretary Winwood's, declaring that Maret had been twice heard; notwithstanding Maret persisted in what he had before affirmed. Then the bailiff called him Etourdi, and said that he was well worthy to be committed to prison in fetters and manacles. [1 pages, draft.]

June 19. 31. Like examination of Benjamin La Cloche of St. Saviour's parish. Was told by Maret that he had sent to the Court to say that he would come presently. The usual course of the Court is to censure offences presently if of small consequence, but sometimes this is deferred. Visited Maret while he was a prisoner in Elizabeth Castle, and saw him walking up and down upon the ramparts, without fetters. Maret told him that he had no liberty to go farther until he received order from Council. [1 page.]

June 19. 32. Like examination of Philip De la Roque of St. Helier's. Was present at the Court, and heard the bailiff command the porter to put Maret in prison with [fetters and manacles] irons. [The words between brackets are struck out]. [$\frac{1}{2}$ page.]

June 19. 33. Answer of John Herault of St. Sauveur, bailiff of Jersey, and Sir Philip de Carteret, seigneur of St. Ouen, to articles exhibited to Sir Edw. Conway and Sir Wm. Bird. Maret for awhile executed the place of procurer without the King's authority, but was subsequently suspended for contempt of Court, and another procurer sworn in by the King's appointment; and Maret, for disobedience and contradicting the Lord's order and Mr. Secretary's letter, was committed to prison. Sir Philip de Carteret was never suitor to Sir John Peyton for the procurer's place for his brother, but Geo. Paulet asking Sir Philip whether he should oppose himself, in case Maret should be presented to that place, he persuaded his said grandfather not to contest against the captain, which his grandfather promised him then. Afterwards Sir Philip was in Court when Maret was presented to be sworn into that place, whereupon Geo. Paulet opposed himself, but Sir Philip dissuaded him, and thereby incurred his grandfather's displeasure, and was blamed by all the people. After the Court had risen, he said to his grandfather, "You promised me not to oppose Maret, and now you see to what inconvenience you are reduced by the same," to which he replied that he could not in conscience give way to Maret's admission.

With regard to the article touching Elie de Carteret and Joshua de Carteret it is desired that the parties may be heard, and Maret enjoined to specify the time when he was assaulted; when he demanded justice from the same; and what were the injuries offered him; it will then appear that Sir Philip never opposed him nor denied him justice.

There has been no impost levied upon the wine, nor any fees raised since the bailiff came to his place, and he has not usurped any right upon the King's fees, and therefore Maret's inferences are malicious. The licence of tavernage has been answered in another part. For the disposition du poids du Roy and of the Alnager, the bailiff, at recommendation of the chief men of the town, appointed John le Vavaseur to take care of the Halls, and see that weights were put there as in former times, and swore him to be Alnager also; as Maret found fault with this, the Commissioners are intreated to judge if he had reason so to do.

Maret was never lawfully appointed procurer by the King's brief, as requisite in law; Mr. Paulet, the then bailiff, opposed his admission, and offered to show good cause why he could not be admitted; the most that Maret could challenge was to supply the place until the King had otherwise disposed of it, which power His Majesty was invested of as a Royal prerogative. It is pretended that the King was not informed that the place was executed by Maret, but the bailiff received divers complaints that the two offices of receiver and procurer were executed by one person, to the vexation of poor subjects; whereupon he certified the same, complaining that Sir John Peyton had preferred Phil. Maret to be both receiver and procurer. The King, being moved therewith, appointed Elie de Carteret procurer; this consideration moved the Lords when this complaint was presented to the King by Sir John Peyton last August, and was referred to their Lordships to clear the bailiff.

It is not the custom for the King's procurer to go, at the time of the arraignment of prisoners, to seek the constables or a jury, but to call them by the window, as all other persons are called, and if they do not appear, they are either amerced or committed to prison, unless the procurer show them special favour, and send to seek them; but for himself to go is never used. The truth is that Maret and John Bisson having between them embezzled certain papers out of the Court, and supposed a false one instead, he was loath to answer for such a fact, or else he would not have refused, being at the hall door, to come to the bailiff when the denunciator called him; his answer showed his disdain, for he said, "He will not come;" and being sent back, found Maret in the market place or in his house, near the hall, and having delivered his message, he returned a worse answer than before, viz., "Je ne suis point actionné; qu'ilz prennent la loy." His coming afterwards covered into the presence of justice, and demanding audaciously who were his parties, not respecting the place, or the honour of the King represented by his justice, showed his presumptuous contempt of the magistrate, who, if he had showed himself senseless of such a public injury, had been worthy of censure himself; as at Rome, if a magistrate had neglected the injury done to him in the execution of his charge, he was blamed. The consequence of Maret's contempt would have been the more dangerous if it had not been censured, as being in a public place and audience, and by one who should have sued the punishment of others offending in that kind. If Maret had given some slight excuse for his offences, he had been excused, but he used many words, and his manner was scornful.

For this contemptuous carriage, the bailiff judging Maret worthy of censure, asked the seigneur of St. Ouen, the first justice of the bench, his opinion, and Maret, hearing that, said, S'il est question d'aller aux opinions, j'ay des recusations, and then the bailiff demanded what recusations; but he did not answer till the seigneur of St. Ouen had almost ended his speech; when perceiving that he concluded against him, he broke out violently, accusing him of attempts to assassinate him. Thereupon the seigneur demanded reparation, as of a wrong done to him as a justice, and then sat down till the other justices delivered their censure against Maret. Then the seigneur insisted on reparation for the wrong offered him by Maret. The bailiff willed the other justices to give their opinion, but they all wished the matter to be remitted to the next Court day, that all the bench might be together.

Maret's affirmation that the bailiff appointed another day is false; he says it is against use to have two acts of one cause in one week, but the cause was not heard twice in one week, as on the first day it was not heard, but appointed to another day; in matters of censure or punishment there is no time limited, but it is referred to the arbitrament of justice. At the day appointed for hearing the cause, he was permitted to say what he could, and was demanded if he could charge the seigneur of St. Ouen, as partaker or acquainted with the assault pretended to have been attempted against him, to which he answered, "No." He also complains that he was secretly amerced; it is the custom of the Court in cases of punishment or of censure, and in matters of importance, to deliberate together in council, and then the bailiff takes his place and pronounces the sentence publicly, as was done in Maret's cause, and it was enrolled in his presence.

Although the Court had sufficient power to punish him for his contempt, and compel him to obey their sentence, the justices had such respect to the place of the King's procurer, which he had executed, that they chose rather to refer his cause to the Lords, to whom he was sent, than to use their authority; and thereupon they sent their sentence, with all the proceedings, to their Lordships, who both punished him there by imprisonment, and remanded him, under penalty of 100*l.*, to acknowledge his offence before the Court, as appears by a letter from Secretary Winwood of 17 July 1616, and by the Lords' letters of 9 Dec. following.

Maret's articles are false recriminations, whereby he hopes to avoid punishment; a more particular answer is contained in what Sir Philip de Carteret has delivered to Council, upon Maret's exceptions against the acts of the Court, and the matter ought now to be reduced to these terms, viz., if he has, as he pretends, been persecuted for doing his duty, in maintaining the King's prerogatives, and persuading the people to receive the English form of prayer; if he has been wrongfully deprived of the office of King's procurer; if he has, querelâ inauditâ, been committed close prisoner with fetters and manacles; and if the sentences of justice have been unjustly given. As however he has maliciously and falsely charged the bailiff and Sir Philip de Carteret with all the said accusations, the Commissioners are desired to order that they may receive such reparation as the quality of the offence, the dignity of their places, and the King's honour and service require. 35. Petition of Philip Maret to Sir Edw. Conway and Sir Wm. Bird, Commissioners at Jersey, to command Joshua de Carteret to appear before them, to confess or deny whether he twice assaulted the petitioner, being procurer of Jersey; and whether he did not beat petitioner's brother, and upon petitioner's demanding redress at the Court, it was refused with threatening words, by the seigneur of St. Ouen, his cousin german; if he denies the same, begs that witnesses may be examined. With order thereon that they have not examined witnesses, or pressed for the party's answer, as a year and a day having elapsed without the matter being prosecuted, the petitioner ought not to be relieved afterwards. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page.]

June 24.

36. Examination of Peter Goupill, of St. Burlade's parish, Jersey, before Sir Edw. Conway and Sir Wm. Bird. Was not in Court when Maret was first sent for. Before Maret went there, he sent examinac's father, John Goupill, now deceased, to signify to the denunciator that he was coming, and a quarter of an hour afterwards he did so, having meantime perused some papers. Heard the bailiff say to the denunciator that he was worthy to lose his ears if he did not make his records right. The bailiff and the seigneur of St. Ouen caused an act to be written, which they signed, which act was offered to Mr. Delamont, one of the justices, who refused to sign it, saying it was not the order so to do, and that the act must be entered on the Rolls; cannot say whether the rest of the justices refused.

Heard Maret say that he had recusations against the seigneur of St. Ouen, as some of his friends had assaulted him and beaten his brother, and that he would prove it. The justices have often presently censured misdemeanors committed in Court. They were asked their opinion of Maret's misdemeanor, but the cause was deferred until another Court day, as they desired the opinion of more justices. Maret was not admitted to make proof of the declaration he then offered in Court. Heard the bailiff pronounce the fine of 50 crowns against Maret, but did not hear any speech of its application to the reparation of the sessions house, and did not see the rolls. Maret appealed after the sentence was given against him. It was publicly read, to the effect that he was suspended from his place of procurer, and fined 50 crowns.

At the request of Maret, went to John Durell, keeper of the Acts, and demanded copies of those touching Maret's fine, &c., but Durell alleged that he had been commanded to the contrary. Was present when Maret attended the Court after his return from England; the bailiff asked him whether he would submit to the sentence, and he answered he would not, because his cause was yet depending before Council. The bailiff then asked him why he was sent back, to which he replied because the Lords were informed that he had not appealed. The bailiff told Maret that he was worthy to be committed to prison, fettered and manacled, and then commanded the porter to take him away. [2 pages, draft.]

June 26.

37. Like examination of Richard Dumaresq to similar purport. Was present when Maret came and offered to take his place with his hat on; the bailiff reproved him, and bade him uncover, when he pulled off his hat. The sentence was that Maret should be fined 50 crowns, to be applied towards the reparation of the sessions house, and ask God, the King, the justices, and the seigneur of St. Ouen forgiveness; upon the bailiff asking him whether he would submit, he replied he would not, to which the bailiff said, "Then I have more to say to you," and so told him he was suspended from his place, and enjoined him to put in surety for 100*l.* that he would appear before Council. Never visited Maret in the new castle, but dined with him many times at the old castle, and visited him in his chamber while he was a prisoner there, but never saw any fetters upon him. [2 $\frac{3}{4}$ pages, draft.]

June 26.

38. Like examination of Nicholas Allin, of St. Helier's, Jersey, to similar purport. Was in Court when the bailiff demanded a paper from Bisson, signed by the Greffier, whereupon Bisson produced one; but being pressed by some of the justices as to whether it was the right one, he said that had been taken away by Maret. The cause was deferred until the Tuesday following, by the opinion of the justices. Thinks the bailiff may defer censure; has known Geo. Paulet, former bailiff, do so.

Was in Court on 28 May 1616, but did not arrive until the justices were going together to confer about their sentence. It was written on paper, while the Court was sitting, and openly read; remembers the contents, but did not hear that the fine of 50 crowns was to be applied to the reparation of the sessions house. Does not remember that Maret appealed until after the sentence was pronounced, and he had been enjoined to appear before Council, and to give pledges of 100*l.* to that purpose, and suspended from his place of procurer; but he then appealed, which implied his request to have his appeal entered; whether he refused to have the same entered that day will appear by the Rolls. Was present in Court when Maret came after his return out of England, used the words alleged against him, and persisted in them, after the reading of Secretary Winwood's letter; notwithstanding the bailiff advised him to take heed how he contradicted anything written in that letter. The sentence of imprisonment was openly pronounced in Court, and Maret was allowed to say what he liked for himself; he charged

39. Like examination of John Vavasour alias Durell, of St. Helier's parish. Was in Court when Maret was censured for injurious words against the seigneur of St. Ouen. The sentence was pronounced openly in Court, and put into the roll that night, before the Greffier went out of the Court. The first act of Saturday was delivered to Maret on Sunday morning, but the second was denied him by examine, by command of the bailiff, until he brought pledges to be bound in 100*l.* for his appearance before Council. June 27.

40. Like examination of John Pain, of Grovile parish, Jersey. Was not in Court on 25th or 28th May 1616, but was present on 14th Sept., when Maret was there after his return from England; remembers that Maret used the words imputed to him, both before and after the reading of the Secretary's letter; and being asked by the bailiff whether he was not sent back to acknowledge his fault to the Court, he answered No, but that one of the clerks of the Council had commanded him to come back, because there was no appeal entered, and he had not copies of the acts to show. The bailiff often moved him to submit to the sentence of the Court, and not to persist in contradicting the Secretary's letter. The sentence was openly pronounced against him in the Court then sitting, and he was quietly suffered to speak what he could for himself. [$1\frac{1}{4}$ pages, draft.]

41. Like examination of Aaron Messervy, of St. Saviours, Jersey, jurat. Being present in Court, heard Maret complain that his brother had been ill treated by Joshua Carteret, to which the seigneur St. Ouen answered, "You have still to do with those of my house, and you will get no good by it, more than others have done before." 42. Petition of John Herault of St. Sauveur, bailiff of Jersey, and Sir Philip de Carteret, seigneur of St. Ouen, to Sir Edw. Conway and Sir Wm. Bird, Commissioners in Jersey. Phil. Maret, last October, for revenge conceived against petitioners,—the King's Court having censured him for contempt and disobedience against the Court and Privy Council, by publicly affirming that their Lordships had committed him to the Gatehouse before they had heard him speak in his own defence, read his petition, or examined his reasons, and that, contrary to Secretary Winwood's letter, he was not remanded back by the Lords, to acknowledge his offence here before the justices;—exhibited a petition to the King, wherein he slandered petitioners, and alleged that for doing his duty in maintaining the King's rights and prerogatives, and for soliciting the people to receive the English form of prayer in this Church, he had been,—by the instigation of the Presbytery and the seigneur of St. Ouen, their chief abettor,—unjustly oppressed by the bailiff, who committed him close prisoner with fetters and manacles, as he was then remaining; which accusations were false, Maret hoping thereby to escape the due punishment of his offences, and win some favour, to petitioners' shame and disgrace.

Beg that as the articles exhibited last August to His Majesty by Philip Maret against the bailiff have been proved to be false, their honours will acquit him as the Council have done, and adjudge him such satisfaction as the gravity of the offence and the dignity of his place requires; and that both parties may receive an equal measure of justice, will appoint a day for the hearing and examination of the points in Maret's petition to the King, and other articles which he has exhibited to them against petitioners, and order that they have all such other accusations as he has presented against them, to make their final answer thereto.

Also that Maret may be enjoined to deliver in writing a declaration of such persons as have usurped the King's rights and prerogatives, and the acts of his endeavours in pursuing the same, and the points wherein he has been unjustly persecuted for the same, and for going about to persuade the people to receive the English form of prayer, and to make due proof of his said allegations. Then all parties shall be called and tried according to the law of the island, and the truth appearing, petitioners may be cleared of all the said calumnies, and the calumniators may receive punishment. 43. Answer of Philip Maret to the exceptions taken by John Herault, bailiff of Jersey, and Sir Philip de Carteret, to his petition to the King, presented 27 Oct. 1616. It is true that the bailiff adjudged me to be fettered and manacled, and commanded the porter to execute the same; notwithstanding the justices being of a different opinion, it was not executed, but I remained in prison above five months. Those that drew the petition conceived I had been procurer for seven years, because I had been so long successively advocate and procurer, which are offices of like nature for the King's service in the Court. The rights of His Majesty, about which the bailiff was offended with Maret, are:—

1. For opposing his entitling himself seigneur de St. Sauveur which is His Majesty's fee, it being unlawful for any man to entitle himself lord of any place whereto he can lay no claim.

2. Whereas one sued in the Court for another man, without letters of procuracy, which is finable for the King, I demanded sentence upon it, but the bailiff was so offended therewith that, without dismissing the Court, he went out and threatened to have me out of my office, or he would go out of his own.

3. For opposing his claim of a rent belonging to His Majesty, called Tavernage.

4. For opposing an order propounded for levying 1s. as an impost upon every pot of wine, which is a power only proper to the Sovereign.

5. For not consenting to many binding ordinances which he proposed to have newly established, I was thought not to like the assumed church government, but to affect the liturgy and conformity to the Church of England, and for a long time I have been persecuted by the Presbytery, and the Consistory of St.

44. Declaration by Sir Edw. Conway and Sir William Bird. M. Maret has delivered certain articles to us against the bailiff which have been openly read, and witnesses examined. The bailiff was charged with divers foul crimes, the proof whereof would have made him unworthy of his charge. We counselled Maret often to be well advised before he made such a charge upon an officer of such quality, and are very ready to do the bailiff justice; but considering the quality of the offences, and the reservation His Majesty has made of Maret's other cause to be definitely decided by him, we refer the determining of this cause also to His Majesty and their Honors, and desire the bailiff to be satisfied with this, considering we but defer his satisfaction to the supreme wisdom and justice of His Majesty and their Honors, who can best measure the quality of the offence, and the punishment thereof. Yet for the respect we owe and bear to the reputation of His Majesty's officer, we declare that we think the bailiff free from all those imputations laid upon him by Maret in the articles delivered to us dated 26 May 1617, and Maret worthy of punishment, the weight and form of which, together with the reparation to be offered by Maret to the bailiff, we may not give any scantling of, lest we should seem to prejudice a cause reserved to our superiors. 45. Petition of the three Estates or Common Council of Jersey, to Sir Edw. Conway and Sir Wm. Bird, Commissioners, for His Majesty's concession to the following articles, viz. :—

1. A grant of power to levy in perpetuum a sou upon every pot of wine sold by retail, in any tavern in the island, towards providing the inhabitants with armour and munition, and contributing towards necessary fortifications about the island, the inhabitants being unable to do either.

2. Power to levy in perpetuum, a petty custom upon all commodities brought into the island, similar to that granted to Guernsey, to build and maintain a good harbour, merchants, &c. often receiving prejudice for want thereof.

3. To renew their license for transportation of English commodities for the use of the inhabitants; with a supply of such as are wanting, and a declaration in special words, of things conceived but in general terms, and especially for the wools.

4. To exempt them, as those at Guernsey, from paying custom for wares and merchandize grown or made in the island, and carried over to England to be dressed, and brought back for the use of the inhabitants.

5. The conservation of the privileges of the island being committed to the bailiff and justices, that His Majesty would order them to have the ordering, as provided by former patents, of licenses for fetching commodities out of England, that former abuses committed therein may be prevented.

6. That His Majesty will confirm the rents heretofore given for maintaining and repairing the churches, and for relief of the poor ; and authorise petitioners to accept such as may be given hereafter.

7. The inhabitants not being able to maintain their poor scholars at the universities to study divinity, that His Majesty will grant some of the places in colleges in his gift for poor scholars recommended to him by petitioners.

8. That he will order that when any benefice become vacant, the constable of that parish shall have the administration of its revenues, which shall be employed, the cure being served, for reparation of the parsonage house, and the overplus kept for the next incumbent, to whom the officers shall be accountable.

9. The island being much weakened by partitions of land and tenements among co-heirs, that the King will grant liberty to such as shall petition him to entail their lands, rents, and tenements.

10. That wards may enjoy the same benefits as in England.

11. That certain fees fallen in, which were originally applied as a stipend for the entertainment of persons of quality, for defence of the island, may be put to fee farm, &c., that being in the hands of particular men, the island may be the better fortified ; and the parties who take them of His Majesty have permission to add so much land and rents thereto as they shall desire, or as shall be thought fitting to remain impartable therewith. 48. Petition of John Briard, of Guernsey, merchant, to Council, for a commission to the bailiff and justices of Guernsey, and four others, to decide a controversy between him and John Baudain, relative to the right to certain property there. Pulled down his old dwelling house in St. Peter's Port, to which there was a small back yard belonging to Baudain. He, by undue practices of Eleazar Marchand and Thomas Marchand, his nephew, jurats, raised a claim thereto; whereupon a supersedeas and sequestration of the possession followed, and the workmen were forced to cease until trial. The place being viewed by the bailiff and justices, Baudain was amerced, and petitioner freed; nevertheless, upon Eleazar's undertaking of the matter, he and his kinsman being judges of the bench, Baudain again made claim, and having got some slender witnesses in his behalf, the major part of the justices, without hearing petitioner, ordered the yard to remain common between Baudain and him. Made an appeal, but the bailiff and jurats barred it, thinking the matter too small. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page. Endorsed by Calvert: "Sieur de la Bastide, escuyer de Monsieur de Luynes.]"

49. Request of Jean Baudain, guardian of Collenette, and Martha his minor daughter, by Martha le Pelley, his late wife, to Amice de Carteret, bailiff of Guernsey, Jean Hérault, bailiff of Jersey, Phil. de Carteret, seigneur de St. Ouen, and Thos. Lemprière. Is summoned before them to answer to Privy Council letters obtained by John Briard, on complaint of injustice done him in the Court of the island, as to possession of an empty space between his house and that of his said daughter, which he wishes to usurp and enclose, and which would block up their best view. Tried to hinder this, and on 8 May 1616, sentence was given that Briard might dig under the ground, but not build on the surface. Did this for conciliation, but has since been blamed for it by the relations and heirs of the daughter. Is unwilling to depart from this sentence, Briard's Council letter having been obtained through false informations. The appeal rather touches the Court itself than Baudain. Doubts not but the jurats can defend their sentence. [$\frac{3}{4}$ sheet, French.]"

July 17. 50. Eight jurats and justices of the Court Royal of Guernsey to Sir Phil. de Carteret, lord of St. Ouen, Amice de Carteret, bailiff of Guernsey, Jean Herault, bailiff of Jersey, and Thos. Lemprière. John Baudain warns us that John Briard has appealed to Council against a sentence given 18 May 1616 between them, and has obtained Council's letters for a review of the cause, and that you have already entered upon it. Pray consider that you should not proceed without communicating the letters to the Court, as such a step is dangerous to the authority of the Court, and against its decision. You of Jersey, having jurisdiction under like charters, should be jealous to commit no action tending to their infraction. We are astonished that the bailiff, who presided over the suit, and pronounced the sentence, meddles with the review, as though he doubted its justice; besides, cases of that nature should not be subjected to appeal. [1 page, French.]
- July 17. 51. John Baudain to the two Carterets, Herault, and Lemprière. I sent you yesterday a remonstrance, stating that I should take my stand entirely on the sentence given in Court, 28 May 1616; but seeing that you proceed in the cause, I have consulted with the relations of my children, some of whom belong to the Court, and they and I agree to beg you not to take it ill that we protest that all the proceedings taken before you in this affair will be null, as we can submit to no other jurisdiction than the Court Royal in this isle. Guernsey. 53. Amice de Carteret, bailiff of Guernsey, John Herault, bailiff of Jersey, Sir Philip Carteret, and T. Lemprière to the Council. According to your commission, dated 31 Aug. 1616, for reviewing a cause brought by John Briard against John Baudain, tutor of his children, wherein a sentence was given by the justices here 28 May 1616, we have called the parties before us, and delivered them copies of our commission. Baudain, by way of answer, presented us a declaration that he might not desist from the said sentence formerly given by the justices. As we thought his answer was not sufficient, we required him, if he had any proofs in support of his cause, to produce them, and attend us at the survey of the place in contention, so that his right appearing, it might be reserved unto him; but he persisted in his resolution, protesting against all our proceedings as a nullity. We also received a writing from most of the jurats of Guernsey, intimating that our proceedings in the commission would be prejudicial to their charters, and the authority of the King's Court here; whereupon, for avoiding strife,—although it appeared to us by view and ancient deeds that the ground in question of right appertains to Briard, and by report of the witnesses we have examined on his behalf, (the defendant having refused to produce witnesses,) that Briard and those of whom he has right

54. Petition of John Briard, of Guernsey, to Council, to confirm the judgment of the bailiff of Jersey and Sir Philip de Carteret, appointed Commissioners by Council to inquire into a controversy between him and John Baudain, Eleazar le Marchant, and Thomas le Marchant, as to the right to a certain yard, which appeared to the Commissioners by deeds, witnesses, &c. to be unjustly detained from petitioner, and they adjudged it to him; nevertheless, Baudain still hinders him, as he has done for more than a year, in finishing his house, whereby he has been damaged in 300*l*.

With reference thereon to Clement Edmondès, clerk of the Council, and his report, that although the Commissioners certify that the property of right belongs to Briard, yet as they received a remonstrance from the nine jurors of Guernsey, that their proceedings upon the commission would be very prejudicial to their charter and the King's Court there, they determined nothing, but left it to the Board. Therefore as the commission was grounded upon a Doleance, the cause not coming hither by way of appeal, the same may be further heard before His Majesty's learned counsel here, and the jurors may send some of their own number to be present.

55. Sir Philip de Carteret to the Council. Please direct your letters to the governor of Jersey or his lieutenant, that a cornet of horse, consisting of 50 of the chiefest and ablest of that island, be raised there for the King's service and their own defence. That the governor or his lieutenant cause the inhabitants to provide themselves with the arms they have been rated at, and return the names of those that refuse, taking bond of them to appear before you within 40 days. Also, that according to a warrant granted by you, a last of powder may be taken out of the stores, as provision for the inhabitants there, they paying the usual price for it. Three demi-culverins of iron were some time since bought by the inhabitants for defence of their landing places, and since then, on account of the peace, two of them were lent to the governor and employed in Elizabeth Castle and St. Aubin's Fort. It is therefore desired that you will order them to be restored to the inhabitants, and that His Majesty will send two others in their place. [1 page, unsigned.]

The rest of his company went in a Hamburg ship which they had taken to Ireland, and there sold many of the goods; but returning for Plymouth, anchored in Cawsam bay, and straying to land at night with 1,700*l.* of the money, were seized by Sir Rich. 68. Sir Philip Carteret to Sir Edw. Conway. I have sent you two brace of cock and two of hen partridges, all that I have been able to take this year; yet I have had two Frenchmen, with a setter, three weeks, and could do no good, as our partridges feed scattering, and at the least noise, run into brakes and hedges. Next year I will increase the number. Out of our small hope of the success of our island business, I entreat you to be mindful of it. Mr. Bailiff and I understand that our parties have a copy of your report to the Lords, and boast that it is much to our disadvantage, but we have not seen it. Pray make us partakers of the same. My wife looks to lie down about July; and at her uprising, we intend to pass the winter in England, when I will wait upon you.

69. Jean Herault, bailiff, to Sir [Edw.] Conway, at Court. Though my cause is just and good for the service, yet I was in danger of ruin through the malice of my enemies, but for your protection. Thanks for your trouble in combatting the corruption of the age. Pray continue your favour, that we may receive the good effects of your commission in this country. Please to confer with the Duke of Lenox and the Lord Chamberlain about the augmentation of my pension, my office being one of labour and dependance. 70. Thomas Olivier to Sir Edw. Conway. Your zeal to religion known to us, and your sincere affection to the church of God have moved me to write you, as our church affairs, so long questioned, are now to be settled upon your reference; for this we praise the Lord, and pray him so to direct the King's heart that those things wanting and out of order among us may be supplied, that the kingdom of Christ may be well established among us; for every kingdom that will not serve the Lord is threatened by the prophet to be destroyed. Also the kingdom of the Lord cannot come, nor his will be done, except that which belongs to him be given him, which is power to rule according to his revealed will, and sufficient maintenance for the upholding of his estate with honour; both which being wanting amongst us, it is to be desired that His Majesty would so kiss the Son of God, by whom kings reign and rule, that our ancient jurisdiction should be set up again, and such maintenance allowed us as is required to encourage us to do the work of the Lord faithfully, and also to procure to us that respect which belongs to ministers.

And because it has pleased God to raise you up as a chosen instrument for effecting the same, that this may be the crown of of all your heroical acts and famous exploits of war, we pray you that, according to those excellent gifts whereby God has enabled you for this work, you would bring it to perfection, what lets soever Satan and the world raise against it. Attempt of the governor to usurp the patronage of benefices, instead of permitting ministers to elect to vacancies, and to assume ecclesiastical authority. Appeal to the King thereupon. But as the governor and others of the company complain that the Garways pass entries and take up goods without their ticket, thus wronging them of the impositions agreed on for defraying ambassadors, &c., the Council ordered 10 May:—1st. 71. Jean Herault, bailiff, to Sir [Edw.] Conway, at Court. Our poverty is such that we have hardly been able to find any one to go over on our affairs, but at last our States have chosen M. Jean Dumaresq. We beg your favour in his affairs, and in the choice of the Commissioners whom he must request from the King, to examine the affairs of the island; for a decision cannot be expected from the whole Council until some of them have examined by way of commission. 72. Sir Phil. Carteret to Council. After a long controversy between Peter de la Rocque, of Jersey, on behalf of himself and his younger brethren, and the heirs of Raulin de la Rocque, elder brother of Peter, you commissioned Sir John Peyton to examine the parties, and end the suit; and if they could not agree, the governor, or in his absence, I, the seigneur of St. Ouen, was to act as umpire.

The parties having chosen arbitrators, they have reduced most part of the plaintiff's demands to a certain sum, with many of the rebatements produced by the defendants, except the rent and arrears of a house demanded by the defendants, the property of which house was claimed by the plaintiff; the decision thereof belonged to the bailiff and justices; but on appeal was ordered by your Lordships. Meanwhile two of the plaintiff's arbitrators died, and the defendants refusing to have any others chosen, I was required by Sir Edward Conway and Sir Wm. Bird, Commissioners in this isle, to nominate other persons in lieu of those dead; which having performed, the defendants used many delays, and not being able to bring them to submit to your order, I have granted execution of those of the plaintiff's demands which are by the arbitrators reduced to a certain sum, subtracting the rebatements; I now entreat you to order a final decision on all differences yet remaining, the cause having lasted 30 years, to the undoing of the plaintiff, who is indebted to many, and ready to be cast into prison. him to call the parties referred to before him, and enjoin them to choose arbitrators of all their controversies. Upon petition to Council, they issued a commission to the governor of Jersey or the seigneur of St. Ouen, to examine a cause between petitioner and the heirs of Raulin de la Rocque, his eldest brother, relative to many demands and sums of money, to nominate arbitrators, and if they could not agree, the governor or seigneur to be the umpire. The arbitrators have determined most of the questions in dispute; but part remain undecided, because the defendants will not choose new arbitrators in the room of those deceased. The controversy has been in hand upwards of 30 years, to the undoing of petitioner. [$\frac{1}{2}$ page.]

May 8. 74. Petition of John Dumaresq, deputy of Jersey, to Council, for the following alterations, for the better defence of the island.

That it shall not be lawful for the governor to quit the isle, except by leave from His Majesty or the Council, and on appointing a sufficient deputy in Montorgueil Castle.

That there be a lieutenant of ability and experience in martial affairs continually entertained in the isle, to whom the care of Elizabeth Castle shall be especially committed.

That an English minister, of good life and approved doctrine, be entertained in Montorgueil Castle, for the instruction of the soldiers.

That the master porters of the castles be men who have borne charge in some martial company, and learned their duties.

That the master gunners be men of experience, and that a competent number of inferior officers and soldiers be kept in garrison in each castle.

That the present insufficient form of watching in the castles be reformed, and the 12 anciently retained to watch before Montorgueil Castle gate be re-entertained, and the court de garde, now demolished, rebuilt.

That competent wages and allowance be ordained for officers and soldiers, and paid quarterly, and that all be natives of England or Wales.

That the governor and all other officers and soldiers of the castles, with their families, live within the castles, as hath been anciently accustomed.

That a muster-master be entertained by the governor, to train the inhabitants in martial discipline, and command be given to the governor to keep a general muster once a year.

That the governor, officers, and soldiers be forbidden to sell, lend, or embezzle the munitions or stores; and command given to the lieutenant, bailiff, and jurats, at the change of every captain or governor, to take an inventory thereof, and certify the same unto the Council chest, having delivered an authentic copy to the governor.

That His Majesty will command the bailiff and jurats to visit the castles once a year, enquire after all contraventions of his orders, and all defects and abuses in the military government, and certify King and Council.

That His Majesty will relieve his poor subjects with some arms, of which there is great want, and they are unable to provide themselves; and that order be given for fortifying the isle and castles.

With regard to the civil government:—That according to a former order of Council and divers precedents, the bailiff be maintained in possession of assembling the Estates of the isle, in which assembly he presides, wherein the governor's presence is always required, and has the primitive voice in all their deliberations.

To give a resolution to that article of the orders of Henry VII., whereby the differences between the governor and bailiff are reserved to the King, the bailiff interpreting it of personal actions only, and the governor extending it to all actions, direct or indirect; and to consider how important it would be for the bailiff, upon every occasion, to repair hither to demand justice. Doubts having been made whether the soldiers are subject to the civil magistrate, that interpretation be given of that article of the orders of Henry VII., whereby they are bound to answer to the law there.

As the office of bailiff is a place of great eminence and authority, exceeding painful, and subject to great expenses, and yet very poor, —whereby poverty and great authority meeting together, the poor people shall be always in danger to receive prejudice;—and as the bailiff, who held his office by patent, enjoyed, when all things were cheaper by one half than they are now, double his present revenue, that Council will be mediators to His Majesty for ordaining to the said office a competent allowance, sufficient to maintain the bailiff with credit.

And whereas Philip Maret has committed divers misdemeanours and contempts towards the bailiff and justices, and has unjustly complained by petition to the King against some of them, and charged the bailiff before the Commissioners with many false accusations, and especially of a foul crime, that Council will order him to make due reparation. Also that Council will grant the inhabitants certain petitions, delivered to the Commissioners by the Estates of the said isle, to be presented to His Majesty. [1½ pages.]

75. Jean Herault, bailiff to Sir [Edw.] Conway, at Court. This state and I owe you many thanks. I have written to my friends to intercede with the King, that you may be joined with the Commissioners to whom he has deputed the regulation of our affairs, that our estate being known, order may be taken. It is wonderful that notwithstanding your coming over here, and representing our feebleness, there is not only no order to remedy it, but the thing is still more neglected. I know I am marvellously disliked for having advertised these things and sought their reformation, but my treatment has been such that no other will dare to follow my example, whatever faults the captain may commit to the King's prejudice. 78. Ordinances to be observed in Jersey, for safe-keeping of the castles, the administration of justice, and general peace and tranquility of the whole island; made upon the report of Sir Edw. Conway and Sir Wm. Bird.

1. Thirty soldiers are to be kept in constant pay in Elizabeth castle, besides the master porter and master gunner, and 20 in Montorgueil castle, besides the minister, master gunner, and porter; which soldiers are to lodge in the castles, and perform watching and warding, &c.

2. The master porter and master gunner of Elizabeth castle are to have 1s. a day each, and those of Montorgueil castle the former pay. The minister to be maintained at the charge of the governor; the soldiers at each castle to have 6*l.* a day payable monthly.

3. As the governor has abated 16s. a year from each soldier, by way of check for negligence in duty, no such check is hereafter to exist; but any soldier deserving it shall be corporally punished or cashiered, and another inrolled in his place.

4. Elizabeth castle being a distance from the island, the governor is to appoint a man of sufficiency and experience to lodge there.

5. As heretofore 12 soldiers of the inhabitants held watch every night in a court de garde, before Montorgueil castle, and were paid by the governor 5*s.* 6*l.* a quarter each, the present governor is ordered to rebuild and set up such court de guard, and renew the watch of the inhabitants.

6. The master porters and master gunners of the two castles are to be men of experience, and all the officers and soldiers natives of England or Wales.

7. Concerning the abuse of the munition, that some has been sold to the inhabitants, by order of the governor, and some taken for the use of shipping employed to Newfoundland, the governor is to furnish the inhabitants out of the stores with powder expedient in times of danger, when they cannot be otherwise supplied, they paying for the same, with which money the stores may be again supplied; but giving out powder for the furnishing ships upon adventure or trade is not be admitted, though the like proportion be returned in specie to the store.

8. An inventory is to be taken of all the munitions and stores in the castles, and certified to Council by the governor; and for the future, the lieutenant, bailiff, and jurats, at the change of every governor, shall do the same, having first delivered an authenticated copy thereof to the succeeding governor, at his admission into his charge.

9. As the arms of the islanders are very defective, and the men ignorant as to using them, it is also ordered that a view be taken of such arms, and the men be mustered and trained twice every year, by the gentlemen porters or some other experienced officers, who are not only to train the companies, but to instruct the serjeants, &c. that they may be able to train each soldier.

As to the civil government, and the points in differences between the governor and the bailiff, it is ordered :—

1. That the bailiff shall take precedence in the Sessions House and seat of justice, and likewise in the assembly of the Estates, as formerly ; and that in all other places and assemblies, the governor shall take precedence.

2. The governor, being trusted with the government of the island, is to be called governor according to his patent, and not captain, and there is to be no assembly of the States without his or his lieutenant's consent, and the governor or his lieutenant is to have a negative voice, in order that no ordinance may be agreed upon prejudicial to His Majesty's service or the interest of the people. The places of the bailiff and governor in such assembly are to be left as formerly.

3. The Council will determine any question between the governor and bailiff according to an ordinance of Henry VII.

4. As to the question between them concerning 7*l.* 4*s.* a year, wages of the old bailiff, which the present one challenges above his 100 marks a year, the governor is to pay it him.

5. The bailiff claims divers rights and profits belonging to his office, but taken from him ; and in lieu thereof, prays some allowance out of the corn, meadow, poultry, and coneyes coming yearly into the receipt in that island ; though he should have further means, being a principal officer, yet as all those profits are granted to the governor, there are no present means to give him relief.

6. He also desires, for preservation of His Majesty's rights, that the records and evidences of the revenues may be delivered to his custody ; it is therefore ordered that all the records, leases, &c., be kept in the public registry of the country, whither the governor and jurats have access, and duplicates sent to the Council, both for deciding controversies and for avoiding all abuses.

7. Philip Maret, sometime procurer, having laid foul and false imputations upon the bailiff of bribery, &c., it is ordered that Maret, having left the isle to live here, return, acknowledge his offence, and make his public submission.

8. For better government of the ecclesiastical charge, it is ordered that a dean be erected, His Majesty giving leave to the governor and States pro hac vice to nominate three grave and learned ministers, out of which he may choose one.

Concerning the petitions delivered by Sir Philip de Carteret, seigneur of St. Ouen, and other justices, in the name of the Three Estates,—

1. As the inhabitants through poverty are not able to provide themselves with armour and munition, or contribute to fortifications necessary for their safety, and have no public purse, they desire authority to levy a sou Tournois upon every pot of wine sold retail in the taverns, to be employed for the use aforesaid; the petition is granted, and the money levied is first to be employed in furnishing the inhabitants with good modern arms, and on the fortifications of Elizabeth Castle; the remainder to be for the defence of the island, with approbation of the governor or his lieutenant, and the bailiff, dean, procurer, and receiver of the isle, in his absence.

2. As for want of a good harbour, their shipping often receives great damage, their request is granted for power to levy a petty custom upon all commodities brought into the island, for maintaining a good harbour, in the same form as granted to Guernsey for building and maintaining the pier; the money to be employed with allowance of the officers above mentioned.

3. They petition to be exempted, as those of Guernsey are, from paying customs for such wares as grow or are made in that island, are brought into England to be dressed, and carried back again for use of the inhabitants. Also for licence for transportation of divers English commodities for the use of the inhabitants, with a supply of such as are wanting, and a declaration in special words of such things as are mentioned only in general words, and especially for wools; and that the bailiffs and justices that have the conservation of the privileges of the island may have the ordering of licences granted to particular persons for fetching commodities out of England; for avoiding abuses, the consideration of these points is referred to the Lord Treasurer and Chancellor of the Exchequer.

4. Their petitions for some of the places in the colleges in His Majesty's gift, for maintenance at the universities of scholars recommended by the three Estates, and also for the same benefit of wardship as is enjoyed in England, are granted.

5. Their desire, as the island is much weakened by the partitions of lands between co-heirs, that they may entail their lands and rents upon their heirs, for better maintenance of their houses, is referred to the King's learned counsel.

6. The rest of their demands, for confirmation of rents heretofore given for reparation of churches, the relief of the poor; also that in the vacancy of any benefice, the constables and parish officers may have the administration of the profits, to be employed for the reparation of the parsonage house, and—the cure being served—be accountable for the overplus to the next incumbent; also that such fees as have fallen into His Majesty's fiscal, and were anciently military stipends for the entertainment of persons of quality, for the defence of the island, may be set to fee farm, &c., are left to further consideration. With note that His Majesty signed the above, and caused it to be sealed with the Privy Signet.

The Council to Sir Thos. Lowe, Governor, and the rest of the Levant Company. Upon petition of the mayor, bailiff, and burgesses of Southampton, concerning the benefit of a statute lately taken from them, by a proclamation published at the suit of the merchants trading to the Levant, prohibiting the importation of sweet wines by any but such as are free of that Company, it was thought fit that as the Company,—by reason of the trouble they found in their trade though the barbarous usage of the Turks—knew not whether they should continue their intercourse, the petitioners should expect a while longer; and if the trade were continued, then receive satisfaction for their loss by that proclamation, or be left to the benefit of the statute, as before the proclamation.

The petitioners, having attended 18 months the issue of that order, now press some answer, for the preservation and safety of that town, being one of the chiefest ports in the western parts, and lately fallen into great decay, for want of this benefit by importation of sweet wines by strangers, which was wholly employed in the reparation of their walls and sea banks. As it is not meant to draw from the Company any charge that may tend to their discouragement, and as the proclamation was grounded upon some information to the Board by that Company, for their own benefit, we wish you to review the matter, and by amicable conference with this bearer, late mayor of that town, to accommodate the business between you. 80. Attorney-General Yelverton and Solicitor-General Coventry to Council. We think the suit by those of the isle of Jersey convenient and necessary, for His Majesty's service, and the general good of that island, and that by this means many good houses may be raised in that isle; nevertheless, we think the greatest entail should not exceed 100 quarters of wheat, Jersey measure, which may be done with the greatest ease, if His Majesty will grant a commission to the governor, bailiff, jurats, and procurer, to give patents under the seal of the bailiwick of that isle, to all who desire to make any such entails, if the officers think the same convenient. 81. Attorney-General Yelverton to Council. The question between the parties is, who should be the tutor to Sarah, an infant orphan to John Godfrey, whether Judith the grandmother, who now appeals, or John Mattingley, who, by election in the island, is chosen tutor, and has had the same confirmed to him by an act in Court there. I have seen the law whereupon the defendants ground their election, and think it is not good because:—

1. By the words of the law, which also agrees with the law of nature, the parent, who in this case is the grandmother, ought to have the tuition.

2. The electors of Mattingley proceeded without calling the grandmother to the election, the choice was made against her will, and she instantly appealed.

3. Mattingley is a stranger in blood, and therefore presumed to be short of that care over the orphan which the grandmother will have.

4. The orphan has suits against Thomas and Barnaby Godfrey, her uncles, for her father's goods, which now belong to her, and likewise for a part of her grandfather's; and Mattingley is brother-in-law to Thomas, and tutor to Barnaby the other uncle, who is yet an infant, and therefore he, as tutor to the orphan of John Godfrey, must demand against himself as tutor to Barnaby, which will be inconvenient, and cannot be without suspicion of partiality, he being allied to Thomas and first tutor to Barnaby.

Since the appeal to you, by order from the Court there, the grandmother is compelled to deliver possession of Sarah's house and evidences to Mattingley, which ought not to be, as the appeal suspends the whole proceedings. I think the appeal of Judith just, and that she ought to be restored to the tuition of Sarah, and of all her possessions, deeds, evidences, &c.; but for any costs to Judith, I think them fit to be spared, because Mattingley did not thrust himself into the tutorship, but came in by election, confirmed by act of Court there. Nevertheless John Dumaresque makes protestation against this, supposing that the act of the bailiff and jurats, formerly made in this cause, is above the law and maxim of that isle. [1 page.]

Remarks on the value and importance of sea-coal or pit-coal, as found in and about Newcastle and Wales; that many of the pits being drowned, they are becoming dearer, being now 9s. instead of 5s. a chaldron in Newcastle, and 6s. 8d. instead of 3s. in Wales; proposal that an increase should be made in the imposts on coals exported, so as to reduce the prices to the English. The Levant Company to the mayor and aldermen of Southampton. We received your letter, and at a general Court considered its propositions, the more willingly induced by your seeming so desirous to conform to reason, and to determine the business with love and friendship, the scope of your desire being either to enjoy the full benefit of an Act of Parliament formerly granted to that town; or that, in default thereof, we would allow you 100*l.* yearly (which is as much as you formerly let the same to farm for) towards the charge of repairing and maintaining your walls, sea banks, &c. In respect of His Majesty's proclamation, published for reasons of State, whereby the whole kingdom receives benefit and safety, we cannot yield to any innovation in what has been done already, neither can we waive the course we have hitherto held; yet we are content, as heretofore we offered to Mr. Longe, one of your aldermen, to allow you 50*l.* a year towards the charge aforesaid, or to take the benefit that may come by strangers in English bottoms; which offer if you accept, we shall confirm; but if you insist on large conditions, we must refer you to such course as you find most fitting. Has not extorted a penny beyond rules, but Sir John wants to reduce him to the payments made hundreds of years ago; has almost 200 prisoners, many of them recusants, and some rich, who yet remain years without paying him, as well as 100 who plead poverty; details Whitbrooke's violent character, and an attack which he made on him in the prison, and contradicts his complaints of ill-treatment. - Aug. ? The Levant Company to ———. Upon receipt of the Council's letter to you, desiring our resolution, that their Lordships might proceed to suppress pirates and robbers at sea, we assembled and considered the project, which two years since, was petitioned to His Majesty by us, and other merchants of the city, that His Majesty would put a reformation therein. But since that time, the trade of our company is so much impaired, what by the trade of India taken away, and now the trade of silk following, that we are not likely to trade for Turkey to the one-third part of that value which we formerly did, and we cannot undergo our usual charges of ambassadors, consuls, &c.
- Besides, as to that little remainder of trade left us, principally of currants, we have caused many tall ships to be built, and adventure in none but extraordinary good ships, and enjoin them so to keep company, both out and home, that we stand in little fear of the pirates; neither have we had any great losses that way. If others keep this course, the pirates would gain little, and fall of themselves. We therefore desire to be spared from any particular charge; but if His Majesty enter into reformation hereof, being a general cause of all his subjects, one place of trade depending upon another, we are ready to be at his pleasure therein. In case the Lords require our answer, pray deliver this. [1 page, copy. Levant Papers, Vol. I, No. 24.]

- Oct. 3. 92. Att. Gen. Yelverton to Council. I have perused Mr. Carteret's two appeals from the sentences of the bailiff and jurats of Jersey on 28 May last, and advise that a commission be granted to indifferent persons of that isle, to examine his proofs and witnesses, and return the same, with their opinion, to you; the rather as it appears in one of the sentences that divers witnesses produced by Carteret to be examined were rejected by the Court, for which I cannot conceive sufficient grounds. - Nov. 7. 94. Att.-Gen. Yelverton to Council. Upon consideration of the petition of Clement Gryn, I think your letter should be sent to the bailiff and jurats, to better examine the validity of the deeds of gift made by Daniel Neel in his sickness, and the witnesses and proofs; and to allow or disallow, according to law and custom there; and after sentence, to allow the party aggrieved to appeal if he sees cause; the said sentence and reasons for the same, with the examinations of the witnesses and other proceedings, to be exemplified under the seal of the isle, and delivered to one or both of the parties, if they desire them, binding them both to appear for final ending of the matter. - Dec. 14. 95. D. Bandinell to Sir Edw. Conway. Thanks for past favours. Jersey. You have spoken to me of the re-establishment of a dean for our churches, and tried to have me nominated, though I am incapable of such a burden. I think you have seen the governor's opposition, and his communing with the Archbishop to decline the recommendation. I am not displeas'd as regards myself, for I prefer a private life and I perceive many difficulties, especially from the governor, unless he approved the nomination. Since my arrival, I have found his disposition towards me quite changed. He has sent for me several times, declares he wishes my advancement, and considers so well of me that he would prefer me to any other. He has shown me his letters to the Archbishop to this effect, and begs me to tell you that he favours my nomination, and that [Sir Fulk] Greville, Chancellor of the Exchequer, knows of it. I must therefore recognize his affection and beg your advice therein.

96. Edward Lord Zouch, George Lord Carew, and Attorney-General Yelverton to Council. In the appeal between John Briard of Guernsey, merchant, and Eleazer Marchant, one of the jurats of that isle, referred to us by His Majesty and you, we find that Briard's action was for charges against Marchant on 8 April last, and the appeal from the sentence given by the bailiffs and jurats thereupon was made on 9 June following, and grounded upon good cause. We think fit therefore that the sentence should be reversed, and that Marchant should pay Briard 30*l.* before next Lady Day, in full satisfaction, to which Marchant consents. The other part of Briard's petition, touching Marchant's misdemeanours, we leave to your consideration. [1 page.]

100. Jean Herault, bailiff of Jersey, to Sir Edw. Conway, at Court. The three means used to ruin an officer are employed against me. Refusing me the means to live suitably to the dignity of my office. Hearing my caluminators without informing me. Subjecting me to extraordinary charges without recompense. The King's service is prejudiced when contempt is put on his officer. I have not given cause for such treatment, but the greatness of my clients, many of whom are heirs presumptive, makes me hardly dare, in my littleness, to appear among them. I am sure the King and Council do not know how things go on. I have all the burden and expense of the government, and the blame if things go wrong; but if any malcontent, of which there sure to be some, appear before Council, his complaint, though a bare allegation, is received as true, and letters of censure written against me before I have been heard. Pray use your influence that complaints be better examined, and that letters be written here to constrain Maret by public proclamations, and to seize his goods till he comes here to make recognizance and submit to justice, and to allow me from his goods a recompense for the costs he has caused me.

Since the governor came, I have behaved to him with all respect, and he has shown me much friendship, but he refuses to pay my wage for the Christmas quarter, saying that he has only to pay to Michaelmas, although my patent says it is to be paid quarterly, and I need it, as my wages are not great.

There is also the tavernage, an ancient right of my office, and gained by my labour, which I cannot get. If I were as rich as the governor, I would not dispute for such trifles, but my entertainment being small, and my charges heavy, I am obliged to do it. The States here have a grudge against M. de St. Ouen and me, for the rate on a pot of wine, which is appropriated to another use than they wished; so that now they want the revocation of the negative law to the States, as a thing contrary to their liberties and usages. They also wish to be maintained in their present form of church government. M. de St. Ouen and I had hindered that once, but they resolve on it, for fear of the erection of a contentious jurisdiction for the dean, after the fashion of England. M. Bandinell, thinking to advance the election of a dean, has hindered it; people thinking that he, who is a stranger, wished to bring about such a change without their consent. However they will submit to the King's wishes. M. de St. Ouen will tell you all. [$2\frac{3}{4}$ pages, French.]

Afterwards, when letters were brought to us from the Parliament of Brittany, requiring that the prisoners might be remanded to them, we sent the letters to you, as a matter not appertaining to us. As to the treaties between England and France, we have none in our custody whereby it is agreed that prisoners shall be remanded upon like occasions; but for the other point in your letter, we find the custom is, when malefactors have been sued here for crimes committed in foreign parts, to administer justice to those who have sued for it. We also find that sometimes malefactors upon request have been reciprocally remanded back, as you may be more particularly informed by Sir Philip de Carteret, to whom we beseech you to give access, to inform you concerning this business, and all other matters concerning the state of this poor island. 103. Sir John Peyton to Council. I crave pardon that I trouble you with my single answer, rather than join in one letter with the bailiff and some of the jurats, for I cannot approve of the bailiff's acknowledging the process in Brittany, with the letters from that Parliament, and publicly attesting the same, such proceedings drawing too near the form of correspondence held between the provincial Parliaments in France, being all under one sovereign; neither should I have recommended such process to you, but left that to those of Brittany who pursue the cause on behalf of the women plaintiffs. I submit to you how far this acknowledging and attesting arrests of French Parliaments may be allowed in precedent here. Some cursory relations—of pirates executed here, of a coiner for putting out false monies in this isle, and of one remanded by Sec. 106. Articles with answers and suggestions to be considered of in the establishment of a dean in Jersey.

That the nomination from time to time of the said dean may not be granted to any, but referred to His Majesty.—This is according to the constitutions of Henry VII., and His Majesty's last edict concerning the nomination of his officers there, as being a royal prerogative.

That the dean may not assume knowledge of such cases as have belonged to His Majesty's Court more than 40 years.—The large extent of his jurisdiction will cause multiplicity of suits, whereby the dean and ministers must be drawn to neglect of their studies preaching the word of God, visiting the sick, &c. Also to draw from the authority of the civil magistrate things that he is accustomed to, and give them to the dean, is a needless alteration; and besides, the dignity of His Majesty's justice and power is more splendid in the civil magistrates than it can be in those of the Church.

That the dean's jurisdiction be limited to spiritual causes, as preaching the word of God, administration of the Sacraments, &c.—This is properly the power that belongs to the Church; and as concerning matters of marriage, bastards, &c., and the probate of wills, which are challenged to belong to the spiritual Courts, the dean might take knowledge of marriage when the question arises concerning degrees of affinity allowed by the word of God, and of bastardy in like sort. Concerning fornication and adultery, the dean may enjoin penance and satisfaction to the Church by the parties, when convicted by the civil magistrate, and if he should neglect his duty therein, the dean may take knowledge of the case. The dean has always had the probate of wills, which consists in approving and verifying the will, but as to its validity, the decision has ever belonged to the civil magistrates, according to the custom of Normandy. The knowledge of tithes has time out of mind belonged to the civil magistrates, as appears by records; nor is it fit that where the King is invested in most part in them, in cases of question, he should be sued out of his own Court, in the spiritual one; for by the custom of Normandy, it is a prerogative of the Prince, that in whatever case he is interested, the knowledge thereof belongs only to himself and his Court, and is forbidden to all others. There are divers controversies about tithes, both between His Majesty's officers there and the ministers, as also between the ministers and the people, in all of which the ministers are parties, and therefore unfit to be judges.

That all causes belonging to the dean's jurisdiction may be determined by the opinion of the ministers.—This has been the ancient custom in that isle.

That the dean may have episcopal power in the institution of ministers.—It will be a great charge for those of the island, that shall be presented to come over into England to receive their institution, and their fitness must needs be better known to the dean residing in the isle than to any Bishop dwelling in this realm. Special care should be taken that the ministry and preaching of the word of God, which has long flourished in that island, may not now, by any alteration, come to be only a dumb and reading ministry.

That the dean may not excommunicate, but upon causes of importance, as rebellion, contumacy, &c., and that by the advice of the ministers.—Since the establishing of the discipline now used in that isle, it has been customary upon contumacy to suspend the offending party from the Communion; and if he continued in his obstinacy, he was excommunicated; so that very rarely, and only upon great cause, has the Church used excommunication, which by this means is a great terror among the people, and therefore should remain as accustomed.

That the dean and ministers may not establish any orders for church government without His Majesty's approbation.—This may be thought necessary to be observed.

That the assemblies of the ministers now in use, as consistories, propositions, and colloquies, may be continued.—Much good arises by these assemblies; for the Consistory—being composed of the minister of the parish, elders, or churchwardens,—by friendly compositions compounds many heartburnings between the parishioners; they also call before them those that live scandalously in the parish, and if they will not conform, they are denounced to the Colloquy. The Proposition is an assembly of the ministers once a month in the town, where they preach by turn, and then they privately censure those that in their conversation or preaching are in any way defective. The Colloquy should be continued as an assembly of the dean and ministers, to judge causes belonging to their jurisdiction; and where they now keep but one in a quarter, they may keep them once or twice a month, so that they be limited to seasons less prejudicial to the people, and on days when the King's Court is not kept.

That the dean may have a competent living out of the revenues which anciently belonged to the Bishop of Coutances.—The charges of the dean increasing, his living must also increase, which cannot be better raised than upon the church livings belonging to the said bishopric; which are these, viz., the first-fruits of the benefices, half the tithes of corn in the parish of St. Sauveur, and the fourth part in the parish of Granville.

That the dean may not exact any fresh fees or duties.—The fees for proving wills are paid to this day, and therefore to be so continued; the rights belonging to him for his seal are not known for certain, therefore he should take only such fees as the King's bailiff does.

That the dean and magistrates may not exact anything of the people for administration of the sacraments, weddings, and burials, other than the parties shall freely give.—None of these have been paid in the island within the memory of man, and are forbidden to be exacted within the duchy of Normandy; the people are also poor, and most of them get their living by work.

That appeals from the dean's Court may be to King and Council, as usual in civil causes.—All ecclesiastical causes brought by appeal before the Lords may be referred to some learned in the civil law, to give their report, and afterwards ordered by their Lordships, whereby the people may not be constrained to sue in the Ecclesiastical Court, nor bound to answer to any writs or summons from them, which would be directly against their privileges. Concerning appeals in matters of small importance, that the poor people may be eased from the great cost of coming over to England, it may be considered whether appeals from the dean might not be ended by the bailiff and justices, joined by commission with the dean and ministers; as also appeals from the bailiff in like causes of small importance, whereby the honour and burden of the Commonwealth should be made equal to church and laity, and the poor people freed from much trouble and expense. [3¼ pages, and 2 blank leaves.]

March? 107. Answer of Sir Edward Conway and Sir Wm. Bird, to a reference made to them by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Winchester, and Secretary Naunton. By our observations of the constitutions of Jersey, the affections of the ministers, magistrates, and people, by examination of the customs of Normandy and Jersey, and the practise thereof, before the last 40 years of novelty in the ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and by conference with Sir Philip de Carteret, we have laboured to find out such limitations as may best conduce to His Majesty's pleasure in establishing a dean; we have not taken up a thought in ourselves, nor discovered any in Sir Philip, to examine what His Majesty may or may not do, but what may make the will of His Majesty most acceptable.

First, it will stand with the desire of the ministers, the liking of the people, and the honour and use of the church discipline, if there be a dean nominated only by the King, which desire they fortify by a constitution of Henry VII., and the power reserved to his present Majesty for nomination of principal officers, in a late edict of his own. It is conceived fit that the dean's power should be sufficient to raise the depressed estate of the ministers, and therefore that he should have power to take knowledge of, and censure all offences against God and church discipline, with limitations required by the laws of the island, and long practised customs.

The dean should take knowledge of blasphemy, apostacy, heresy, schism, incest, adultery, fornication, drunkenness, profanation of the Sabbath, and abuse or profanation of the church or churchyard; but as contentious jurisdictions will be over burdensome to him, as not versed in the canon law, nor having officers, and as those proceedings have long been in the civil Court, and as the dean requests to be free of them, we propound that he may censure and enjoin ecclesiastical satisfaction in this form, if the party accused shall confess the crime. In case of denial, it shall be referred to the civil magistrate for examination, and upon conviction, the dean shall enjoin penance and satisfaction; and if, upon suspension from the Communion, the party do not submit and satisfy, then proceed to excommunication; to which, if they shall be rebellious, the civil magistrate shall use the arm of justice, and apprehend, imprison, and constrain the offenders to obedience. In case of enormous crimes, if the party confess, and the ecclesiastical punishment is not sufficient, the civil magistrate shall proceed according to law. By way of prevention, any of these cases punishable by the bailiff and justices shall be brought before them, before they are brought in question before the dean; and if the parties complained of be found guilty, the bailiff and justices shall, besides the punishment inflicted by them, give notice to the dean, so that he may enjoin such penance as may give satisfaction to the church.

Concerning marriages, whether unlawful in respect of age, defect of reason, precontract, or degrees of affinity, &c., the cognizance is to belong to the ecclesiastical, and the examination and proofs to the civil court, the dean having notice of trial, and leave to be present.

With regard to wills, it is acknowledged that the probate of testaments has heretofore belonged to the dean, and all questions of authenticity and competency of the testator; but questions whether the will was contrary to the custom of the country were referred to the civil Court. By the ancient laws of Normandy, the disposition of the goods of persons dying intestate belonged to the bishop, and should be left to the dean; yet in Sir Hugh Paulet's time, an order was made that in case of children under age, mesnors were to be appointed, at request of the widow or next in blood, by the justices, which mesnors were to give inventories and accounts to the justices. We met with many grievances; some grounded upon the abuse of these mesnors, which we conceive the constitution to be more subject to than if such inventories and accounts were before the dean, if he had sufficient officers, &c.

It is alleged that the decision of all questions concerning titles have belonged to the civil Court, but for reformation of abuses, we propound that, whereas by the lenity, negligence, &c. of some French ministers, divers kinds of tithes in specie have been forborne to be paid, they may henceforth be paid uniformly in every parish.

As to the dean's commission, and the government of himself in its exercise, it is propounded that he be qualified with the power of a bishop's suffragan, that he may thereby be enabled to ordain ministers. The reason is because the poverty of the ministers will not endure the charge in pursuing and attending, and because they fix it, as an immunity sought from the King, to be freed from evocation, except in cases of appeal.

That it may be in his power, upon scandalous crimes, to deprive or depose ministers; but this must be with consent of the greater part of the ministers.

That he hold consistory in the ordinary place of St. Hilary, and that all causes be heard publicly; that he have four ministers at least for his assistance, called by turn, so that none be exempted; and that there be equal partition of pains and honour; yet all or any one, besides the four that are by turn to come, may attend the consistory, and have place and voice. That in all his sentences, he shall have the consent of two of the ministers at least, or the majority of those present, and when there shall be only four, then the case must not concern any of those present.

That it be recommended that appeals be only in cases of great importance, and only to King and Council, except His Majesty will favour his poor subjects by appointing a standing commission in the island, directed to the Governor, bailiff, and a select number of the justices and ministers not concerned in the sentence appealed against, to determine it by majority.

That the dean and ministers may not institute any orders for ecclesiastical government before they are approved by His Majesty or Council; and that before they send the orders, they shall acquaint the governor, bailiff, and justices with them; not that they could stop such addresses, but make exceptions in what shall concern the temporal government.

The dean should have a comely provision, answerable to the dignity of his place, yet we know not well how to set out a provision for him; for in former times the deans were farmers to the bishops or priors at easy rates, and with the suppression of the dean, there was also a suppression of all rights belonging to him, save the fees of his office and seal, which were very small. We have been informed that a [commission was gr]anted in Guernsey and Jersey to provide for the dean, and was executed in Guernsey, and 100 quarters of wheat, some land, and other commodities were appointed him.

The Bishop of Coutances was also possessed in his right of half the tithe sheaves of the parish of St. Saviours, and the four sheaves of the parish of Grovill; but the governor having all things in general terms granted to him, we cannot take upon ourselves to proportion anything, but submit it to you.

It is desired that those fees which belong to the dean may remain as they have been in the Probate of Wills, and for other fees for his seal or summons, he may take such as the bailiff has in like cases.

It is also desired that the dean or ministers may not exact any fees for administration of the sacraments, weddings, or burials, other than such as the people freely give, because among poor people, a little innovation in matter of money will move much.

We propound that the dean may have the option of the best benefice when it falls vacant, and induct some one to it; also the ordering of all vacations, the cure being served, and the houses and remains preserved; and if the governor shall not present within six months, then the dean to be collate, and have the benefit of the first fruits.

There is a book of ecclesiastical discipline in the island, which should be abolished, and instead thereof, a book of sound canons should be conceived by the dean and ministers there, and sent hither to the bishops and Council to be reformed; the governor, bailiff, and justices to peruse such canons, and remonstrate, if necessary, before they are confirmed.

To prevent controversies, or attempts to avoid any part of this reformation in time to come, it is desired that what the Council shall think meet to establish may be ratified by His Majesty, and made authentical under his seal. [8 pages, imperfect.]

Jersey.

108. Jean Herault, bailiff of Jersey, to Sir Edw. Conway. Thanks for your defence of my innocence. The States know it was not my fault that they did not proceed to the election of a dean; but it was through the way of proceeding of the person employed, and the vaunts of Elie Messervy and others, of the power the dean would have, to the prejudice of the people's liberties. I have obtained from them however to be content, provided the power of the dean be limited according to restrictions agreed on between the justice and the ministers, for which please prepare the Archbishop. The articles are:—1. That the dean give judgment according to the plurality of voices of his assistants. 2. That he order nothing for ordination of ministers or church censures, unless seven ministers conform to the sentence. 3. That the King's subjects be not drawn to plead elsewhere than before the ordinary judges. 4. That the authority heretofore possessed by the Court be not diminished.

I have got the justice and ministers to agree on these points; but they would not send them with their other requests, lest it should be said that they had asked for a dean. It only remains to send a commission in the form specified, and declare the limitations, stating also that the King is willing for the use of the ceremonies of the English liturgy to be at the discretion of the ministers. There should be a formal commission, for an Order in Council is not so formal as is needful. The question is of changing the form of government long established here, which should not be without an express commission, and the Council should not be displeased at its being demanded. Pray represent the importance of this point, and assist M. de St. Ouen to gain a favourable answer to his other requests, so as to content the people.

P.S.—Do not let the tidings of the accord between the justice and ministers, about the limitation of the dean's power, seem to come from me. [2 pages. French]

March 18. 109. Sir William Bird to Sir Edw. Conway. I was at Lambeth yesterday, and on moving his Grace for the commission to send for Sir Philip [Carteret?], he told me you had been with them that morning at the Board, and they had given direction according to our desire. He further stated they would expect our answer on Friday, but I replied I doubted whether we should be prepared so soon. I have an appointment this morning with a gentlewoman from the country, on business of my own, and of great weight; but I hope to despatch the matter by dinner time, after which I will come to you. 110. Jean Herault, bailiff, to Sir Edw. Conway. I cannot avoid calumny. The States having delayed to name three ministers for the office of dean, I am blamed as though I had not tried to persuade them; and also for signing the request sent to His Majesty to ask for a continuation of their discipline. Yet by this means, I have effected the King's will with consent of the people, as will appear by the enclosed Act of the States. Had I used compulsion, and pressed it before the affections of the people were prepared, there would have been only discontent. Thus I yielded something to lead them to what was desired. Before M. De la Place left for England, I had gained the ministers and the justice to agree on a request for the limitation of the dean's jurisdiction; my actions are verified not by words but acts. I hope to conduct myself to the glory of God, obey the commands of the King, and well govern the people committed to me.

Let me have some allowance corresponding to the dignity of my place, and my trouble and charges, and induce the Council to lead the King to augment it. I cannot otherwise subsist, as you may know by your own experience here. Recommend my request specially to the Duke of Lenox and Earl of Pembroke, and write the means most suitable to attain my request. You will thus increase my obligations to you. 111. Att.-Gen. Yelverton and Sol.-Gen. Coventry to Council. Fees fallen into the fiscal, were anciently the fees of men of the best sort, out of which men were taken fit for the greatest charge, and officers of the island, as jurats, captains, &c. whereof there is now a miserable defect. For the domains, such as are not fit for the use of the governor, a meet rent being given for them will undoubtedly increase the revenue. For the fees themselves, they are chiefly titles of honour and dignity, with some casualties of small profits, as extracts of Courts baron, profits of termination, &c. due by the law and custom, in lieu whereof a far greater profit may be raised to the King by wardships, by relief, premier seisin, &c. to be paid by those who shall possess them, and they return to His Majesty, with increase of lands, by forfeiture, attainder, or want of heirs.

For better defence of the land, those that take the fees may be tied to serve with a certain proportion of horse or foot, which may be done by commission to the governor, bailiff, procurer, &c., to value the lands,—judging what gentlemen of good families are to be preferred, and what new choice to be made,—and to give a just account ; power to be given to the commissioners to give patents under the seal of the Court of Jersey, for all such lands and fees, and to all such parties as they find good, for advancement of the service, and the ease of those men whose estates can hardly bear travail and cost, until, by His Majesty's establishment of them, they shall be more enabled to do him service.

There are 20 fees in His Majesty's hands, to which the suit stretches that there may be an addition of land and rents impartable, not exceeding the value of 100 quarters, Jersey measure, to be applied to the nobler fees ; and so to the smaller fees, as found good by judgment of the commissioners.

Touching licenses for transportation of commodities, a limitation of the fees may be set down ; that is for the quantity of every licence there may be paid only 1s., and 1s. for the return to the officers of the governor ; and for the record of the licence in the Civil Court 6d., and the return 6d. ; that the raising of fees be not an occasion to multiply the number of licences, or bring in improper instruments for the sake of the price.

If you find it necessary for the service of the island, there can be no inconveniences in the things desired, so as the demesnes be either reserved to His Majesty, or a valuable recompense provided by the commissioners to return to the crown, both for such demesnes as shall be parted with, and for the fees and services which shall be granted away. 112. Jean Herault, bailiff, to Sir E. Conway. The States are delighted with M. de St. Ouen's letter that the King has committed to you the limitation of the dean's jurisdiction, knowing that you will not have their liberties and the authority of the Court royal prejudiced.

The governor is offended that the letter was not addressed to him. I told him not to stand on forms, as he had opposed the commission, and M. de St. Ouen could only write to those who had deputed him. St. Ouen first advised them to accept a dean according to the King's will ; then declared that if they persisted in demanding a continuance of their discipline, they must choose another than he to present their requests. The governor would not assemble the States on the letter of a private man, though I told him that St. Ouen, as a justice, was not a mere private man, and that he had moreover a commission to negotiate the affairs of the country ; also that it concerned these affairs to communicate the letter to the States, as a prompt reply was needed ; but I could not obtain his consent. St. Ouen said that I ought to assemble the States notwithstanding. I did so, and requested the governor to come, but he would not. You may judge therefore what would be the result of the negative voice that he wants to gain for himself, in assembling and dissolving the States. No other governor has claimed it, and why should he take away from the bailiffs the prerogative which they have enjoyed from time immemorial? I hold my office from the King as well as the governor, and he or his lieutenant can be present at the States, if they think good. Be not displeased with my remonstrance, and help St. Ouen to get the revocation of this, as begged by the States.

Another point I want decided. The governor not only himself takes precedence of me everywhere except at the Court, but wishes his son and his lieutenant to take it; in England, no lord from the Court would refuse to give way to the mayor of a town, and as I hold a similar position, I think all but those who hold office from the King should give way to me. In England, though the sheriffs take precedence over others in the provinces, the under sheriffs do not, and the deputy lieutenant does not take precedence of the sheriff, therefore those here who hold no office from His Majesty should not take precedence of me. If my office is rendered contemptible, the King's service is prejudiced. I am blamed for pride, but I consider the dignity of my office. [2 pages, French.]

117. ——— to [Sec. Calvert?]. There are a number of black silk dyers, and there being some abuse in the dyeing, an Act was passed for reformation. The King granted a patent to Christopher Hammond, which his executors sold to Dards and Legg, in which is a forfeiture of all silks dyed contrary to its meaning, one half to go to the King and the other to go to the informer; and the patentee had power to bind all the dyers in recognizances of 300*l.* apiece.

The common council of London also made a statute against all silkmen and dyers, for every pound so dyed 20*s.* The forfeiture or moiety which belonged to the King, Norden, Littleboy's father-in-law, has got, so that Littleboy is the chief minister to his father. The four silkmen, Wm. Legg, Wm. Geare, Jo. Camden, and Christopher Porter, and the four dyers have made a combination among themselves.

Nearly three years since, an agreement was made between the four silkmen and the four dyers that all silk of that nature should be dyed in their four houses, and the rest of the dyers come to work with them, which with much ado was agreed to, until some of them found out that there was some dishonest dealing, whereupon it was broken off. This is the chief cause why Evan Owen, the dyer, is called by Littleboys into the Exchequer, to show cause why he does not satisfy the King the 300*l.*

Every year there is paid to the patentees and Littleboy, for toleration and quietness, between 250*l.* and 300*l.*, collected by Littleboys among the dyers; and this last year, the four silkmen and dyers have undertaken to pay 300*l.* to the patent, and one of the dyers, to secure himself, has got the patent into his own keeping, although he will not be known ; but these silkmen and some of the dyers carry these things so exceeding close that they will not be known to have any interest in it.

Since this last combination, there was never worse silk made by these persons, as can be proved. Littleboy has been asked by some of the dyers why he did not sue such men, but his answer was that they had fined or paid to his patent. Since Evan Owen was bound upon his recognizance, Littleboy has got a bond of 15*l.*, to free him for one year of all trouble of the patent or recognizance ; and yet a little while after, let his patent out to another, who seized upon all Owen's silks, and has divers times since vexed and molested him ; and his silk was kept by Littleboy or his deputy as false wrought or forfeited, and cost Owen 20*l.* to the patentees to get back again. He desires that you will send for Littleboy, to let him know what wrong he has done him, not doing anything more than the rest do ; and as to his dyeing, he can bring a certificate that his ware is as good as any in the trade. 118. Sir Philip Carteret to Sir Edw. Conway. The Sunday after your [departure], I gave my Lord Duke [of Lenox ?] my petition touching the office of bailiff, who obtained a grant thereof,* and leave for me to kiss the King's hands. Last Sunday Mr. Secretary got the King's signature to our Civil [Government] and I am going this morning to fetch the papers. I think there will be nothing done in the Church government, so press that I may be discharged from further attendance. My Lord Archbishop promised me that he would speak to the King, but I know not what answer he has had. I hope we shall reap a good harvest from the fruit of your labours.

The news at Court are that the Duke of Au * * *, viceroy of Naples, has made himself King, and has a great army on foot. The Queen having sent an agent to the Pope, the French ambassador at Rome used all means to win this man to discover his mistress's intents, of which failing, he one evening after supper, took him for an airing in a barge on the river, and shipped him to Marseilles, whereupon the Pope imprisoned the French ambassador. The King has received the news by letters, but I am afraid they are too good to be true. [1 page, damaged.]

122. Rich. Harrison to Dudley Carleton. I should have been glad to know whether your uncle comes over shortly or not; if he does not come this summer, the house might be let now, and the brick wall stay until he can give order for doing it, and resolve upon some things in its building; as whether it shall be close into the river or a little within it, leaving a space of ground between the river and the wall; or whether it shall be set so far out that part of the river might run within the wall, which would be very pleasant and commodious for keeping fish. My Lady Carleton always resolved upon a summer house to be built upon that part of the wall towards the river opposite the great gate, that from thence one might see into the woods. I do not mention this to divert the making of the wall this year, for I have given orders for lime to be brought in, and bespoken workmen in the country (for I dare not, as the time now is, deal with Londoners). After I hear from my Lord Ambassador, they shall go on with what he resolves. Let me hear what kind of gateways or coping to the wall will please him. [1½ pages.]

1. Touching the 57l. supposed to be paid to Conradus. It is agreed that a commission may go to examine witnesses in London, which is already directed to Alderman Prescott and Mr. Williams.

2. Touching the 74l. Mr. Beavor alleges that the arbitrators did not charge Marchant senior therewith, but only allowed the 100l. confessed by him to have been paid to Martin with interest. If more than 100l., with interest has been awarded by the arbitrators, he is content it shall be restored. This may be made to appear by a brief of the account mentioned in the award signed by the arbitrators.

3. Touching the profit demanded by Marchant senior, after the death of his father, mother, aunt, and brother Nathan. Beavor answers that the arbitrators have allowed so much as came to the hands of Marchant junior, or any claiming under his title, and is content, if Marchant junior, or any under him have received more than already allowed, to repay it to Marchant senior. This is to apply to profit received before the award, for if the award were just, no account ought to be given but according to the award.

4. *Touching the moveable goods, Beavor denies that any were taken by Marchant junior from Marchant senior; but for examination of this point, each side shall nominate commissioners, and if matters shall appear to relieve Marchant senior, Beavor consents that he shall be relieved. 127. Statement that His Majesty, by several grants, demised for certain years the benefit of 10s. per cwt. on white starch imported into the realm, and the imposition of 5s. upon every cwt. of white starch made within the realm, for the yearly rent of 333*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* to Henry late Earl of Northampton, with privileges, powers, &c. for the better enabling him to collect the same. Afterwards the Earl surrendered his right, and the King gave him, for his disbursements in settling the business of white starch, 3,206*l.* the amount demanded by him; and in lieu of the benefit he would lose, a pension of 4,000*l.* a year for 12 years, to be paid out of the benefit of the said imposition, or in default thereof out of the Exchequer.

The Earl, upon His Majesty's last proclamation for restraint of making such starch within this realm, surrendered the said grant of 4,000*l.* a year, and had a new patent for 3,000*l.* during life, to be paid out of the customs of Ireland, or in default thereof out of the customs of England.

Since the said restraint, His Majesty has received no benefit either by importation or making of starch, for the starchmakers make it in such quantities that the realm cannot well vent it; so that His Majesty loses the benefit by importation, and also that of all white starch made within the realm, and is besides nearly 20,000*l.* out of purse, and never recovered more than one half-year's rent, amounting to 166*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* [1 page.]

Whereas heretofore, by patent of 9 Aug. 1615, we commanded that thenceforth no dean of the said island should be made but by letters patent, with intent that the dean should be appointed according to ordinance established by Henry VII., whose intention was to challenge to himself and his successors the power of nomination to the said dignity:*

And whereas afterwards, in the reign of the said King, the island was legally annexed to the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Winchester, and some doubt has arisen whether the said letters patent are not derogatory to the jurisdiction of the said bishop; to the end that all doubts may be settled, we signify our former intent, and our will and pleasure now to be, that the right of nomination to the said dignity be reserved to us, leaving the admission, according to law, to the bishop of the diocese.

And we have nominated to the said dignity David Bandinell, minister of St. Brelude's parish, in the said isle, to you the said Bishop of Winchester, willing you to admit him, and you the said governor, bailiff, jurats, and all others to accept him as lawful dean, with all privileges, profits, &c., and to yield him assistance in the exercise of his place. 2. John Herault, bailiff of Jersey, to Council. I received yours of 18 Jan. last, concerning a complaint against me for stopping the passing of appeals from this Court to His Majesty, and arrogating the authority of a supreme judge. There is no party named nor instance specified, and as the same complaint was presented against me by Philip Maret, and examined by the last commissioners, you can know of Sir Edw. Conway and Sir Wm. Bird whether they found any occasion of blame in me for the same. I protest that I never refused any person to appeal in causes permitted, neither can I if I would, as I must in all causes pronounce sentence as it is delivered me by the major voices of my assistants. I acknowledge that when persons have offered to prevent the justices' opinions, and threatened them to appeal if they did not give their opinions to their intent, or offered to appeal without just cause and only to vex their party, I have reprov'd them, and if in that I have offended, pardon me. I was moved thereto only by zeal to do justice. I submit to punishment if you find that I have abused my authority, neglected my duty, or used prevarication.

Pray when any complaint is exhibited to you against me, command the name of the informer, with a copy of his information, to be sent to me, that you may hear my answer before you blame me. Meanwhile pray tender the reputation of a judge, and consider that ill-disposed persons are apt to contemn the authority of those over them, and that it is impossible to a judge, who ought to deliver justice without respect of persons, and to punish the offenders, to avoid all exclamations, especially when there are waiters at the gate to receive malcontents, and to set them on to exclaim against the judge, with promises of assistance and favour. And because by such misinformations you may be surpris'd, and the good intended by appeals be turn'd to the prejudice thereof, pray let special care be taken, upon the examination of any appeal, that nothing be ordered contrary to former directions; as of late a declaration has been obtained from you, altogether differing from the constitutions of Queen Elizabeth for preservation of orphans' goods, which will breed a great inconvenience, and overthrow the estate of all orphans, unless you reform it, for which cause I have herewith sent a true copy of the said constitution. In this island, tutors of orphans are chosen by the relations, but this often leads to improper persons being placed about them, with sinister views; therefore every guardian is henceforth to be chosen by six substantial men of the orphan's friends, and to give good pledge to administer his office to the profit of his pupil; and to be responsible for his goods and inheritance, of which he shall deliver an inventory, within 15*

Petition of Thomas Poindexter, of Jersey, to Council, to receive his complaint by way of Doleance, according to custom, and require the bailiff and jurats to receive him to the prosecution of his action for recovery of his right, notwithstanding any default, and either to admit of his appeal, or summon Aaron Messervy of Jersey to appear before Council within 40 days, to attend the decision as to the validity of a sentence of the said bailiff and jurats.

Last September, brought an action, in continuation of former proceedings, before the jurats, against Messervy, to show his right to a portion of the inheritance of Katherine Lemprière, petitioner's grandmother, to whom he is heir; but the jurats would not receive the action, and adjudged all his proceedings void, only upon default, because he failed, being out of the island, to appear at the Court for Pleas of Inheritance, to prosecute the cause; so that, merely upon this formality, he is in danger of being frustrated of his inheritance, and is refused the course of seeking remedy by appeal to Council. March ? 4. Petition of William Poindexter, of Jersey, to Council, for a letter to Sir John Peyton, jun., and Philip Carteret, jurat of Jersey, commanding them to amend a certificate made by them to Council; and for a warrant to Clement Gallie and his wife, also of Jersey, to attend Council, to determine the difference between them and petitioner. Peyton and Carteret were appointed commissioners for examining the truth of an alleged assault committed by petitioner upon Gallie's wife, and although they certified in his favour, they omitted some material points, by which he is greatly prejudiced; one is that Gallie and his wife were called and were present at the examination of the witnesses produced, and were asked to allege their exceptions, if they had any, but declined. [1 page.]

March 19. Jersey. 5. Sir John Peyton and Philip Carteret to Council. In answer to your letter of 29 Dec., in the case of William Poindexter, wherein we are to certify whether Clement Gallie and his wife were called before us at our examination of the cause, and admitted to make proofs to charge Poindexter; we assure you they were both present, but refused to make proofs against him (insisting upon the sentence of the Court here); they were also allowed to except against any of the witnesses then produced by Poindexter. You ask upon what proofs the sentence was grounded; we cannot learn that any informations or depositions were entered in the rolls, but the sentence only, from which Poindexter offered to appeal and was refused; whereupon we had recourse to the five witnesses, two of whom spoke upon report, upon whose testimony the sentence seemed grounded; they said that Poindexter "avoit mis la main à la femme de Clement Gallie et l'avoit poussée sur le rocher." We have, ac-

6. Sir William Bird to Sir Edw. Conway, Ragley. Thanks for your letters saluting me and my wife. I was told you purposed to see London before this, and we hoped to enjoy your company.

I have been very much tried with our Jersey business, and you would have borne part if you had been here. The Bishop of Winchester was very careful to preserve the jurisdiction of his see, which has forced the poor dean of Jersey to attend here six months about his despatch ; but now all is done, and he is going home dean. You remember we thought the dean was to be erected immediately by the King ; that was the first rub, for the King had heretofore, (been misled by a certain order of Henry VII., at instance of the bailiff), declared the right of making the bailiff, dean, and some other officers only to belong to himself. But a record was found by the Bishop of Winchester, that after these orders, Henry VII. himself presented a dean to the Bishop of Coutances, under his great seal, to be admitted by him ; so that His Majesty has been pleased to declare what right he challenges in the creation of the dean only, notwithstanding that declaration.

That is the first great seal which poor Mr. Bandinell has been forced to take. The next is a presentation to the Bishop of Winchester, also by a bill passed under the great seal ; then he has his institution from the bishop, under his episcopal seal, and thirdly a commission from the bishop, for the exercise of jurisdiction in that isle, by way of corroboration of his jurisdiction, to be exercised according to instructions signed by His Majesty and confirmed under his signet ; so that poor Bandinell has almost as many seals and instruments for his poor deanery as any bishop for a good bishopric in England, and writs of restitution to the temporalities, as bishops have ; he has a letter from my Lord's Grace [the Archbishop of Canterbury], and my Lord of Winchester, in the King's name, to the governor, for such allowance as heretofore belonged to his place.

Sir Philip de Carteret has all this while been in England, but never came up about this business. I have been driven in the instructions, to vary somewhat from that we set down, I and Sir Hen. Martin, the King's Advocate, were commanded to frame the instructions.

Touching your request in behalf of the magistrates of Strat[ford, I have] been careful that their cause should [be heard] fairly and indifferently, and such as follow the cause here shall have right at my hands. The solemnity of His Majesty's coming to a sermon at Paul's, on this Mid-lent Sunday, you will hear of otherwise ; and the expectation before, that he would have declared himself for his son-in-law of Bohemia, made the greater concourse ; but the sum of the sermon was only for re-edifying of Paul's, which, by way of request, His Majesty, by the Bishop of London, proposed to the City, and afterwards himself pressed the mayor and aldermen to it, by a speech made to them in the Bishop of London's house. [2 pages, damaged. The words between brackets are supplied.]

April 11. 7. Account of Sir John Peyton, governor of Jersey, on oath of Richard Amy, clerk of the works, of all monies expended for materials and reparations of Mount Orgueil and Elizabeth Castles, from Michaelmas 1617 to 17 Jan. 1620; total, 94*l.* 17*s.* 5¼*d.* Signed by Sir John Peyton, lieutenant, Hugh Lemprière, lieutenant-bailiff, A. Messervy, Edw. Pavy, and Rich. Amy. [Book of 15 written and 11 blank pages.]

April 15. 8. Account by Elias de Carteret and Philip Lemprière, of the proceedings of the governor and bailiff of Jersey, and others, in the Assembly of the States, upon the establishment of a dean of Jersey.

1. The bailiff said he wondered that the governor either dared or would take upon himself to assemble the States, seeing the Lords had given himself all the temporal power, and left only the martial to the governor. The latter answered that he had assembled them to signify His Majesty's pleasure, and that he had sufficient authority so to do. The bailiff replied that the governor's authority in the States had been granted in his absence, and protested against such ordinances. The governor answered that it was not now time or place to dispute such matters, and that the assembly was to take notice of His Majesty's pleasure concerning the dean.

2. The governor having shown His Majesty's favour towards this island in the ecclesiastical government, long desired by the ministers and people, the bailiff said that there had always been a dean in the island, and that whoever moderated the colloquy or proposition day had the office of dean.

3. The King's patent being delivered by the dean to the governor, the bailiff said it should have been given to him, and took it out of the governor's hands. The dean said it was first directed to the governor; the bailiff answered that he represented the King in that chair.

4. The patent being delivered to His Majesty's procurer to read, he desired that the door of the Sessions House might be opened, as His Majesty's patent signifying his pleasure to his people should not be read with closed doors; this was opposed by some justices, who said that since they were assembled in form of State, it should be read in private. The bailiff took the opinion of the jurats, when it was ordained the door should be opened.

5. The patent read, the oath taken by Mr. Bandinell, and he received as dean, he desired place according to his dignity, when the governor and bailiff appointed him next to them; afterwards the bailiff would have gathered the jurats' voices for his place, and Nicholas Foundain and others being examined as to what place the dean anciently had, they said that he anciently sat at the governor's feet. The dean said he hoped the bailiff would not put him to a lower place than formerly he had appointed him.

6. The dean having taken his oath and place, speaking to the bailiff, and at first uncovering himself, the bailiff said he was too unmannerly, and that when he would speak to him, he should be bareheaded. The dean answered he had already put off his hat, and others of the ministers said that the ministers at the States might speak to him with their hats on, after their first entrance into their speech, as well as the jurats who never move their hats to him at all, which was very ill taken by the bailiff and Mr. Trinity.

7. After this, the bailiff demanded of the dean whether he would challenge his place before any jurats, and said that the other dean, Mr. John Powlett, was inferior to them in place, to which the dean answered, sera temps assez de la disputer quand je la demanderay.

8. The bailiff having demanded and taken the dean's instructions, signed and sealed by His Majesty, would not deliver them back; and when the dean required them, said he would keep them himself, to which the dean replied he hoped he would not use him so, and he should be loath to depart without his directions for discharge of his office.

9. During these disputes, Samuel De la Place, minister of St. Mary's parish, and Daniel Brevin, minister of St. John's parish, rose and protested against the oath that Mr. Bandinell was to take; and said they would not acknowledge him to be their dean, nor their superior in anything; that the word dean was not found in Holy Scripture, and that they had signed and sworn another discipline; and being reprehended for it by the dean, the bailiff said he was to hear all men; whereupon the constable of St. Ouen, using some words of distaste, desired to be discharged of his place, being countenanced by Mons. de la Trinity, which was strongly resisted by the governor and his son.

The two before-mentioned ministers being reproved by some of their fellow ministers for their rashness and presumption, the bailiff said that it belonged to him, and not to any of the assembly, to censure those that spoke anything amiss. [1 $\frac{3}{4}$ pages.]

April 16.

9. David Bandinell to Sec. Calvert. Pray accept my gratitude for past favours. I hope to serve His Majesty to the good of this country. Soon after my arrival, the governor summoned the Assembly to read my patent establishing the office of dean. When he took his place in Court, the bailiff sharply attacked him, saying that he had the right to convoke the States, and that the governor transgressed the King's commandments, though it was replied that ordinances signed by the King determined the contrary. Then the bailiff loaded that amiable personage with contemptuous words, saying that the governor had no authority but in martial affairs. The governor calmly replied that he only desired obedience to the King's commands, though vexed to be so interrupted, and begged the Assembly to hear His Majesty's pleasure, given in my patent. I declared the King's care for the Republic, and gave the governor my patent, but the bailiff kept saying that I should have spoken and given my patent to him. Only one jurat and two ministers were refractory. I was required to take an oath of fidelity to the King, to maintain the privileges of the country, and to do justice to the inhabitants. Then I asked for the place fitting to my office; the governor and bailiff assigned it, but the bailiff wished to discuss whether such a place should be granted me, and he forbade me taking precedence of any of the jurats. Although I had long spoken uncovered, he blamed me as unmannerly for having spoken covered, although the jurats do not uncover in the Assembly. He pressed much the reading of the King's instructions, and tried to take them from me by force. He had exhorted me privately, before the Assembly, to remit to them the jurisdiction and the instructions of the King for peace sake, as he said, and should there be any difference from their jurisdiction, to decide it by the rolls of the temporal Court. In fact he will recognize no power but his own, and will resist all order incompatible therewith. It is necessary to declare the power of the governor, and show more clearly the character of the monarchy. The people are very tractable, and many have congratulated me; all the ministers but two are on our side. I hope success, but it will not be without anxiety. My entertainment will be arranged by the governor, who favours me much. [1 $\frac{2}{3}$ pages, French.]

1620.

10. Sir Philip Carteret to Sir Edw. Conway, Luddington. Mr. Bandinell passed for Jersey eight days since, loaded with three patents, one for the deanery, the second from the Bishop, and the other containing his instructions. I heard from London how these things were managed, whereby I judged that it would prove fruitless labour for me to insist upon that establishment past, and to have consented to anything derogating from it, I thought I should have done you wrong. I choose to lay aloof and not to meddle.

I hear Sir Wm. Bird has been much employed, and would have conferred all authority upon the dean, excluding the ministers, which my Lord of Winchester and others insisted upon much; but Mr. Bandinell opposed it, wherein he did wisely, else he had overthrown himself; and he has obtained a letter to be paid his charges upon the country, as having done them great service. I know not how to avoid in this business either the ill-will of my country, or the distaste of the State here.

Through your favour, I obtained a patent for transportation of commodities to the island, which was drawn by Mr. Solicitor, upon the model of former patents, wherein it was specified that the captain shall grant licences. Sir John Peyton has complained of this, as contrary to the Lords' order, by which he was to be known by the name of governor, and not of captain. Sec. Calvert caused a letter to be written to Mr. Solicitor, to know how this came to pass; he answered that he had drawn it according to former patents;

the books were searched to see if I had not falsified them, and a warrant signed by the Lords to fetch me up, but stayed by means of Sir Clement Edmondes, with whom it yet remains. I wrote a letter which, having been shown to Mr. Secretary, has appeased him. I protest it was unwittingly done, the patent being drawn in one day and in haste, which being according to former precedents, was excusable. By this I learn what I must trust to, if I should commit any error.

The governor and the bailiff stand upon ill terms; I have endeavoured to pacify them, but to no purpose, and if at my coming over, I can effect nothing, there must follow some alteration.

Remember my service to your lady, to whom I have sent herein two of the best receipts in this country to make mead, as also a letter from Jersey how to make hypocras; also a copy of a letter lately come over concerning the Bohemia affairs. It has pleased God to give me a son, and his mother remembers her service to you. [2 pages.]

11. Thos. Stapleton to Fras. Nicholls, Prince's Court of Wards, Fleet Street. I hope soon to pay the 60*l.* which I still owe. The mayor of Macclesfield has not set forth any acres of the common for the use of the preacher, as ordered by Council; the people have petitioned to retain those acres, and for the prince to find the preacher's house, and cease paying the stipend of 50*l.* as they will maintain him; if this be granted, there will be no preacher, for the townspeople would rather pay money for bear-baiting than for any charitable purpose. I hope nothing will be granted away from me, which I hold from the prince during my absence. [1 page, damaged.]

12. Sir Philip Carteret to the Archbishop of Canterbury. On my arrival in Jersey, on the 19th, I found great discontent in many of the people, and much dissension between the bailiff and the dean, all things tending generally to great oppositions, which most expected I should further and maintain. Contrariwise, the few days I have been here, I have discountenanced these proceedings, and am now aiming at such a moderation as may redress things to a settled quietness, and hope shortly to give such an account to you as shall make it appear how much I affect the accomplishment of His Majesty's pleasure; but fearing that meantime some information may be given of these troublesome beginnings, whereby we might incur His Majesty's indignation and your displeasure, I entreat you to free us therein, until I can effect that whereby His Majesty shall receive all contentment. July 19. 15. Sir John Peyton to Council. On receipt of yours of 12 June, I effected the choosing of churchwardens in such parishes as, upon Castle Elizabeth, Jersey. the bailiff's prohibition, had been delayed. I cannot blame the ministers therein, and wish I could as easily clear most of them of excusing the practice of the Liturgy, by His Majesty equally commanded; for notwithstanding the dean's mild proceeding and discreet delay, he has been forced to suspend one of the brethren for unreverent speeches against the Book of Common Prayer; he pleaded pretence of conscience in refusing it, and yet would not accept the dean's offer of rectifying his scruple by argument as to what he or any of the rest could object against the said Liturgy, which the careful dean endeavours by all peaceable and plausible means to advance, and wherein he shall not want my best assistance. [$\frac{2}{3}$ page.]

July 25. 16. Sol. Gen. Coventry and Sir Henry Marten to Council. Upon your reference of the cause depending between the officers of the Isle of Jersey and Hugh Lemprière, Seigneur of the fee Dielament,—concerning an appeal made 18 March 1620 by the said officers, from an interlocutory given by the bailiff and jurats there, upon certain wines found floating in the sea, and brought on shore upon that fee by divers mariners, and there detained by Lemprière, as due to him for one moiety, but claimed by the King's procurer as belonging wholly to His Majesty, in right of his prerogative, salvage excepted;—We have heard both parties, and find that no grant could be produced to maintain Lemprière's pretences, but some usage, whereunto exceptions were taken by the counsel for the officers. Yet as it seems probable that both there and in Normandy, the practise has been very ancient to divide things found floating at sea, and brought by the finders to land, into three parts, the first to the finder or saver, the second to the lord of the fee where the same shall be landed, and the third to the King or lord admiral, we think that this order of division, as most justifiable, ought to be observed for the wines now controverted and landed upon Lemprière's fee; and as for charges of suit, that the procurer and seigneur of the fee bear their own charges. [1 page.]

July 25. 17. Sol. Gen. Coventry and Sir Henry Marten to Council. By virtue of your references of the causes depending between His Majesty's officers of the Isle of Jersey and Eliah Dumaresq, Curator of Daniel Dumaresq, Seigneur of the Lordship of Saumares, John Perrin, Seigneur of the Lordship of Rosell, and Clement Hampton, Seigneur of the Fee of Savalle, causâ viduitatis,—one of which was sentenced by the bailiffs and jurats 4 Sept. 1619, and the other two, on the 18th of March following, were ordered by an interlocutory decree, prejudicial to His Majesty, as the officers conceived,—all which causes concerned wines found floating in the sea, and brought on shore upon the several fees by mariners who saved them, which causes are brought over here upon appeal; as Dumaresq, Perrin, and Hampton have been sufficiently warned to appear to maintain their titles, and the time appointed is long expired, we think fit that the procurer have judgment upon them all three by default for one-third of the wines, and further that each pay the procurer 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, making 40*l.* towards charges of suit. We make a difference between Lemprière, whom we acquitted from charges, and these seigneurs who, deserting their own causes, deserved this moderate condemnation in charges to the King's procurer, to whom we must have adjudged all the controverted wines, salvage excepted, according to his demand, if Lemprière had not, in his own behalf and the others, interposed, and by his allegations and proofs diverted our judgments. Oct. 16. 20. Arguments on the question whether two barrels of wine found in the main sea, and landed on the fee of Saumares, should belong to the King or the Lord of the fee. The reasons for the Seigneur of Saumares' right are that it appears by ancient records that the lords of that fee have always had one half of goods so found and landed, and the finders the other. It was so adjudged for the Seigneur of Saumares in 1593, against Barnaby Godfrey, who having found a butt of wine in the sea, and landed it upon that fee, claimed the whole, insisting upon the words of the law, Que toutes choses trouvées au bal de la mer appartiennent à l'inventeur.

His Majesty in 1607, receiving the now Lord of Saumares to do homage for that fee, by patent confirmed to him all the rights and privileges of his predecessors, since which he has often received the moiety of such goods without opposition.

The reasons why the Curator of Saumares should be heard are, that this cause concerns the interest of a man afflicted by the hand of God, who cannot himself defend his right, and therefore deserves favour. The gentleman to whom the care of his affairs is committed is a jurat in the isle, whose attendance is required there during the term, for the public service, and as tutor to sundry orphans, and Curator of Saumares, for managing whose business he cannot depute another. Not long since, upon these suggestions, Mr. Carteret of Vincheles, having failed to appear here upon summons, obtained an order from Council, repealing a judgment made against him by them.

The Curator of Saumares having received a warrant from Sir Hen. Yelverton, then attorney, to appear here, provided a messenger to be sent over instructed in the cause; but hearing of the attorney's sequestration, he stayed the messenger, expecting that if the procurer should procure other Commissioners, a new warrant should be sent, as Mr. Attorney's warrant was only to attend him. Nevertheless, understanding that the procurer proceeded without him, he sent his messenger; he arriving at Southampton the end of July, met the procurer, who told him that his honor had given judgment in his business; the messenger wanting a re-examination of the business whilst the procurer was here, presented a petition to His Majesty, which was referred to the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of Winchester; but the procurer having then gone over, and the Council not having returned to town, the matter has remained in abeyance. The curator and the wife of the Seigneur of Saumares now petition for a stay of proceedings.

With reference thereon by Secretary Calvert, 19 Sept. 1620, to the Solicitor-General, and his report that this cause and another of the same nature, were referred to the late Attorney-General, and notice given to the parties to attend the reference. That the seigneur appeared, but neither the curator nor any for him, although it is alleged he sent a messenger who lost his way, but of this there is no evidence on oath. The King's procurer attending both causes, the Attorney-General heard the matter debated, but before he resolved upon a certificate, both cases were referred to Sir Hen. Marten and to the writer, who heard the case and certified Council. [$1\frac{1}{2}$ pages.]

The cause of Carvell's being called in question, was a statement reported to the Archbishop of Canterbury, of a meeting held at his house for raising a contribution to the Emperor; on which a clerk of Council, serjeant-at-arms, and several messengers were sent down secretly, who apprehended him in the fields when hawking; but on search of his papers, no ground of suspicion was found. Dr. More was apprehended, because his writing was found among some notes of debtors. Carvell is still detained for further inquiry, and Sir Christ. Heydon, who gave the information about him, is sent for from Norfolk. The Spanish ambassador is gone abroad with an abominable train of dogs, to appear a great lord. [3 pages. 41. Sir Philip Carteret to Sir Edw. Conway. During your absence the bailiff has received great trouble. He implores your aid, and I entreat you to give it, for his zeal to the King's service, and his justice and honesty. His opposition to the dean has given great advantage to those that wish him ill, and the prohibition he granted against choosing churchwardens was the beginning thereof. I could not second him therein, it being directly against the King's instructions; I endeavoured to be mediator in any friendly agreements, but the displeasure he conceived made him neglect my advice. As he is resolved to lease his place, I thought good to write to my brother, to put my Lord Duke [of Lenox] in mind of the promise

42. The Council to Lord Zouch, Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, and Lord Carew, Master of the Ordnance. A reference was made to you in a difference between Eleazar Marchant, jurat, and John Briard, merchant of Guernsey, and by your advice, letters were addressed from the Board to the bailiff and four jurats, requiring them to examine the proofs, and make a certificate; which being returned, we require you, upon view of the said report, and hearing of the parties now here in town, and others whom you shall think good to call before you, to order the matter, without further trouble to this Board. The clerk of the Council is commanded to stay petitioner's commission against Marchant, who ought to have been suspended from his place, until he has cleared himself of the articles charged against him, and who has petitioned for a re-examination; but by his continuance in the seat of justice, the witnesses may be deterred, or made timorous in speaking the truth. 45. Sir Philip Carteret to Sec. Calvert. Having understood long since that the bailiff was to resign his office, I dispatched my brother with letters entreating your favour in obtaining that place, which, at my last being in England, some favours received from His Majesty obliged me to seek for, whereby a large scope might be offered me of derserving well of His Majesty. The King, by means of my Lord Duke, granted me a promise thereof, which I pursued no farther, as I would not seem to attempt against the order His Majesty had taken, that no reversion of offices should pass, which notwithstanding, His Majesty said that he would that I should have it. Unfortunately the bark in which my brother went has miscarried, so that my letters have not come to your hands. I should have surceased my suit, understanding also that the office was promised to another, had not the governor moved my Lord Duke in my behalf; and now, receiving furtherance from Mr. Lieutenant, I entreat your favour. The gentleman that has petitioned for the office of bailiff will find great difficulties in the execution thereof, being unacquainted with the common country language of March ? 46. Petition of Samuel Alford to Council, to direct the Attorney General to examine the evidence and report in a suit between him and John Guille of Guernsey, that their Lordships may terminate it. On 9 Oct. 1619, the bailiff and jurats of Guernsey gave sentence in favour of Guille, whereby petitioner lost 407*l.* paid by him for the defendant 20 years since, besides interest, trouble, and charge of suit sustained both in Little Brittain and in the Isle. Entered an appeal in the register of Council causes, whereupon the Council referred it to Sir Thomas Coventry, now Attorney General, who, from an error in entering the appeal as against John and Thomas Guille instead of John Guille, could not proceed in it. Was however mistaken in warning Thomas to come up by way of appeal, and should only have warned him to come and warrantise his deed made 1 Aug. 1610. [$\frac{1}{2}$ page.]

March 30. 47. Att. Gen. Coventry to Council. On examining an appeal from the Court Royal of Guernsey, prosecuted by Samuel Alford, for revising a sentence by the bailiff and jurats on behalf of John Guille, touching a bond of 407*l.* by him and Samuel le Clarke for payment of 203*l.* 10*s.* to Alford,—I do not find sufficient matter to reverse the sentence given for Guille, but as Alford has been at great loss, though there be no sufficient cause for him to require recompense of Guille, I moved that Alford should discharge Guille of his suit, and in respect thereof, be freed of the cost of this appeal. I found them inclinable, but if Alford shall not conform, then I must remit him to the ordinary course of justice. [$\frac{1}{2}$ page.]

Also for an order to supply plank promised for making platforms for the ordnance.
- In a proportion of munition set down for Jersey in May 1616, 23 field carriages for great ordnance and two stocks for mortar pieces were allowed. Was constrained at his own cost to provide 28 carriages of other natures, as the troubles in France, upon the death of the late King, began; and now, upon repairing to the ordnance officers for allowance of his charge, they declined to make any allowance but for the carriages expressed in the said proportion, having no warrant for the remainder.
- With reference thereon, 12 July 1620, to the ordnance officers, and report of Rich. Morison and three others, 8 May 1621, that they find, by certificate of the master porters, and gunners of Jersey that the petitioner has mounted 28 pieces of ordnance in the castles there, at a cost of 190*l.*; but that, as they exceed the number allowed in the last proportion granted for the castles in April 1616, they can neither make him debentures nor afford him any payment, without a warrant and privy seal. [2 pages.]
- May 31. 52. Order of Lord Zouch and Lord Carew. A cause has long been depending before Council between John Briard, of Guernsey, merchant, and Eleazer Marchant, jurat, concerning misdemeanors charged to the latter, for examination of which Council directed a Commission to the bailiff and certain jurats of the isle; their relation was referred to us, and we ordered the bailiff to furnish each of them with a copy, that they might come the better prepared before us. But both have consented to a settlement of all injuries, and in our presence ratified the same, and have joined in a petition to us—that all remembrance of their discords might be abolished,—to order the suppression of the said proceedings.
- As they allege that the course of proceedings in the cause was like to be prejudicial to the laws of those islands, and as we have also considered how important it is to nourish friendship, we order and determine all the proceedings and copies of the same to become void, and be utterly suppressed. - Sept. 12. 58. Att.-Gen. Coventry to [Council]. Reference is made to me in a cause between Hugh Hue, appellant, and Peter Renouf, defendant, of Jersey. The appellant reclaims lands (bought in fee farm by defendant of Noel Regnault) by way of retreat, as near of kin, because Renouf gave either ware or money in regard of the said fee farm, as is alleged, for which appellant produced a certificate, by which he endeavours to prove the sentence to be erroneous, and the defendant has the hands of divers of the jurats, obtained since the appeal, certifying the contrary. To find out the truth, pray grant a commission to Sir John Peyton senior, governor of the isle, Sir John Peyton junior, his son, Sir Philip Carteret, and David Bandinell, dean there, to examine them on oath, first whether any money or wares were given by defendant more than is mentioned in his deeds; and if there were, whether the same were proved to the judges of the isle, before sentence was given; for if these two points be proved on the part of the appellant, then I conceive the sentence to be erroneous; but if he fails, the sentence is just. - Oct. 10. 59. Sir Philip Carteret to Sir Edward Conway. I crave pardon Jersey. of you and your lady, that having received her commission for canvas, I have not sent it with such speed as she might expect. My brother neglects to send an account, as you commanded; pray write to your lieutenant about it. Thanks for your mare, which was shipped with great difficulty, but she has come safe and sound to me. I thought to have been in London shortly after Michaelmas, but my wife being brought to bed with a boy, winter has encroached so fast on that I defer my journey until March.
- There has been a messenger with letters to the governor, to understand how the orders established by you are observed, concerning the number of soldiers to be in the castles; how the people stand provided with arms and munitions, and what fortifications are necessary. The number of soldiers is complete; the people have been mustered often, but are altogether unprovided of arms, as you well know, and the governor has sent a project for making a base guard in the new castle. The next summer is like to be troublesome about us; the ports near us in Normandy are guarded, so that at the Rodes, a paltry port by us, there are 48 men that watch day and night. Our commerce with the French and theirs with us decrease daily. The governor has written to have one of the King's pinnaces to lie next summer about the island. I hope the State consider these poor places, as we are looked on from France with an ill eye.
- The siege is still before Montauban; it may hold out yet four months. The King has lost 1,000 men of note, besides a great number of soldiers; he is 40,000 strong, but half are weak and sickly; there is great speech of a third party. The Duke of Guise is gone from the army, malcontent; the Prince of Condé is likewise gone to his government, and has had his wife and son from Paris. Soissons and Trimouille have retired; Paris and some other towns are in a fair way to mutiny; the Constable and M. Rohan met at Villemeur, four leagues from Montauban, to treat of peace, but could not agree. The King's fleet has received loss at sea by the Rochellers. [2 pages.]
- Oct. 13. 60. Sir John Peyton, Governor of Jersey to the Council. In Montorgueil Castle, Jersey. acknowledging your care of this remote frontier, I must give a faithful account of my endeavours for its security, both in observing prescribed instructions, and employing the best of my judgment to add what strength the country can afford.
- Upon my first arrival after His Majesty's ordinances of 15 June 1618, I supplied the garrisons to the full number therein specified, the men being all serviceable, lodging, and performing their duties of watch and ward in the castles respectively. Musters and training have been carefully observed, so that for four or five months, every company has been weekly exercised. My directions to my son in my absence for defence of the isle, and how he discharged himself to the general liking of the inhabitants, I send herewith.

The night watch dispersed round the isle consists of 186 persons, the day ward but of 24, placed upon high promontories for discovery, as a store of fishing and other boats of the island are continually abroad when the sea is navigable. The greatest defect is the evil arming of the people, who, though grown through a long peace careless, become now apprehensive of their danger, and seem willing to furnish themselves; so that if 200 muskets, 400 pikes, and a last of powder might be sent hither, they would soon be distributed, and the money returned.

The sou per pot of wine, intended for arming the poorer sort was never levied, for want of authority under the Great Seal; but having received the draft of a patent, I will send it you that it may be sued out under the Great Seal. If His Majesty would command one or two pinnaces to be sent hither, for safeguard of the harbour and coast, the very report would discourage any rash incursion. To give you further information of the state of His Majesty's castles, I herewith enclose my opinion of their defects, and the works necessary to be added, with a plan of the same for Elizabeth Castle. [1 page, copy.]

60. I. Statement of the condition of Jersey. The island is within five leagues of the main of Normandy, having many places where a potent enemy may make his descent, notwithstanding the best resistance that can be made by the inhabitants. These advantages are best prevented by strongly fortifying the castles. The fortifications of Montorgueil Castle are defective, because a bulwark over the iron gate of most consequence was left unfinished by Paul Iry, an engineer sent hither in the time of the league against Henry IV. of France, and through the decay of a round tower in the base guard which commands the pier and harbour there; the charge of these works will be 100 marks.

The parchment plan of the islet sent herewith, and upon which Elizabeth Castle is seated, declares the present state of the castle, and the paper plan the necessary additions; in which, besides the scouring of the well (the only fresh water we have, and an old ruinous church, dangerous to the castle as it now stands, but of great use, being enclosed in the fortifications), much ground for a strong base guard will be obtained.

*The charge for a stone wall, 24 feet high, and 9 feet thick at the foundation, and four at the top, for preventing the fretting away of the earth by the sea at high springs, will amount for 100 poles to 1,500*l*. The earthwork of terrapientating and parapets above the stonework, for safeguard of the soldiers, as also the partition ditch of* the base guard of new work from the rest of the islet, and the raising the bulwark there may be performed by the labour or contribution of the country, and these works perfected will tire the cannon of any enemy.

*The rest of the islet may serve for the inhabitants to build upon, for the safeguard of themselves and their goods. The finishing of the buildings most necessary for soldiers' lodgings within the castle will cost 140*l*. The paving of the high mount, being round and 40 feet in diameter, with Purbeek stone, will amount to 90*l*., a work most requisite for managing the ordnance lying upon it, saving charge of timber platforms, and preventing the mischief of the soak of rain water falling thereon, which now continually decays the buildings below it, and rots their beams and joists. [1½ pages, copy.]*

Oct. ? 61. Account of defects in the execution of the ordinances for Jersey delivered to Sir John Peyton at the Council board, 15 June 1618, with express command to put them in execution. Giving in parallel columns the orders (see Vol. XLI., No. 78, supra), and the defects therein. With note of defects ordered or promised to be remedied, but which continued as they were; and suggestions thereupon, for sending a pinnace to the islands, and some soldiers from the Western counties; also some powder, and money for repair of the castles. The execution of these orders to be looked after by the bailiff and jurats, and lodgings to be built for soldiers at Castle Elizabeth, cost 140*l*. [2 sheets.]

Oct. 27. 62. Henry Lord Danvers to Lord [Zouch?]. You will see, by my answer to letters from Council, the present state of Guernsey Castle, and the reasons why I conceive it were requisite for His Majesty to allow 100 men in garrison there; whereto might be added many more if those did not seem sufficient. For peradventure this young French King will have the same ambition to recover these rags of Normandy that his predecessors showed in the repossessing of Calais; and if their carriage towards Queen Elizabeth in the matter of Newhaven be remembered, we may doubt them most when their subjects of the religion seem reconciled. His Majesty will judge whether a large fortress, with 50 pieces of artillery, is fit to be guarded with 13 warders and one gunner, which may very well provoke any lawless monsieur to invade the King of Great Britain, or tempt some arch pirate to surprise such a place of retreat in that trade of the Narrow Seas. 66. John Browne to Sol. Gen. Heath. The matter between your kinsman and me stands thus; my father has for the last 30 years cast ordnance for the late Queen and the King, and for years maintained the trade alone. At request of the ordnance officers and East India company, I was put to the trade, that I might continue it if my father failed, which I have done, and produced lately two such pieces as I challenge others to do the like. If I may still cast for merchants, if the King want 200 pieces, I will cast them in 200 days.

Mr. Crow has got a patent for sole making of ordnance for merchants; this would confine me to the King's service, which only takes 10 days a year. You know how this patent was obtained, and that the commissioners advised there should be two furnaces for King and merchants, intending me to have one.

You know what Parliament ordered; the knights, &c. to whom it was referred certified in my behalf. If any one thinks he can perform the service without me, let him try. If I have to cease working, and then should be ordered any sudden service, it would take a long time, for I must cut and coal the wood, draw the mine, and work it into ordnance, if it be but for 20 pieces.

If Mr. Crow will join me friendly, there will be work for both. There will be a good quantity of shot needed yearly, but now the town is full. [1½ pages. See Dom. Calendar James I., 24 Dec. 1620.]

being too weak to afford it, the King requested the East India Company to join in the loan, the rather through hope of the trade of silk from Persia by the Caspian Sea, and the benefit of cordage from thence; and Sir Dudley Diggs was sent over with 20,000*l.*, to arrange conditions. Finding the country in much distraction, he returned, sending his secretary Finch on with 10,000*l.*, and bringing home the remainder. The Emperor thereupon took the money without capitulation, to be paid upon treaty with an ambassador, whereupon Finch returned; but his provisions being cast away, he stays at Archangel, and the company do not know their terms with the Emperor. By these charges, losses at Greenland through the Hollanders, and the burning of their warehouse at Archangel, with 10,000*l.* worth of goods, they are in debt 20,000*l.* more than their last three years' stocks will pay, besides the loss of the principal. Thereupon they and the East India Company have agreed to desert that trade.

The inconveniences will be the loss of a hopeful trade which will be taken up by the Flemings. The non-venting of dyed and dressed cloth, shipped out thither in greater quantity than in any other trade. The want of good hemp cordage, which has risen from 20*s.* to 35*s.*, and not so good. The decay of shipping and mariners. For avoiding which some of the company will join to defray the charge of an ambassador to Russia to make all right there, if they may be free from all debts of the old company, and have a proclamation, as granted to the Turkey company, granting them the sole trade. [2½ pages.]

70. Interrogatories to be given to [the judge], as to his conduct in a certain trial. How far Mr. Griffith had bribed? If he had tampered with the witnesses? Whether Sir Peter Mutton did not suspect this? Whether seven of the jury were not illiterate and unable to speak English, and more would have been had if Mr. Cheadle had his desire? Whether Mr. Cheadle made his defence without interruption, and whether his brother, Dr. Cheadle, did not testify for him?

Did not you alone manage the evidence? Did not Sir P. Mutton suddenly address the jury, after Mr. Cheadle's defence? and did not the prosecutor give Cheadle leave to reply? Did not you say that the evidence of poison against Mr. Cheadle was as strong as it could be? Did not Dr. Cheadle's brother go amongst the jury, with papers in his hand, until they were locked up; and after that, was he not found against the wall of the room where they were? What did the jury confer with you about before their verdict? Did you not on the bench declare that Cheadle had found great mercy, and bid him sin no more? Who wrote the letter sent me by Sir P. Mutton and you? Did not Griffith, at Anglesea assizes, complain of the illiterateness and partiality of the jury, and ask you for a commission against them, in reference to the directions given them by Sir P. Mutton?

Did not the Bishop of Bangor swear at the trial that he thought

Bulkley poisoned, contrary to a letter that Mr. Cheadle produced; and did not Griffith inform, last sessions, that that letter was twice presented to the now Bishop of Bangor, who refused to sign it, and Hugh Griffiths, the chancellor, says he does not remember his signing it; and is not Dr. Bayly's testimony that he thought Bulkley poisoned? Did not the jury say publicly they were moved by Dr. Bayly's letter to save Cheadle? Had Lady Bulkley any notice before trial that Prithergh said he was procured by her and Cheadle to poison Sir Richard? The presumptions being so strong, why did you not certify that Cheadle and Lady Bulkley did it? Did Griffith or Cheadle seem to you, at the trial, to have more power in the county? and would Cheadle have been convicted in any county of England? [2¼ pages.]

Also note of the disposal of moneys for charitable uses. Sir Thos. White's gift, of which 40*l.* arrives into the town every five years, to four poor handicraft men, on loan for nine years, gratis. Mr. Elmer's 40*l.* a year among eight handicraft men. Mr. Wheatley, Mr. Burton, and Mr. Freeman's 100*l.* each, to be lent amongst poor tradesmen, but it is lent chiefly to victuallers, and kept longer than the year allowed. The town clerk has taken, without security, the money for poor orphans; and poor men, after giving security, have been kept waiting two or three months, whilst others find favour to keep the money longer than they ought, &c. April ? 76. Petition to the King of Sam. Ward, committed for publishing the picture of [15]88 and 5 Nov. [1605], for freedom and restoration to his functions. This emblem was composed by him,—the English verses and some addition of the printer's excepted,—five years since, in imitation of the preservation of the memories of extraordinary deliverances in coins, arches, &c., and he coupled therein two grand blessings of God to this nation, without any sinister intention, especially that of intermeddling with His Majesty's secret affairs. April ? 77. Petition of Sam. Ward to Council, for discharge from legal and expensive proceedings, and dismissal to his charge, "promising to be more cautelous for the future." Hopes he has given a satisfactory answer to the three articles wherewith he was charged. [$\frac{1}{2}$ page.]

May 4 ? 78. Information of John Beale, constable of St. Botolph's parish without Aldergate, London, to Council. On Sunday 28 April last, I took up two gentlemen, out between 1 and 2 a.m., for being in an affray, and refusing to give up their swords on plea that they belonged to the ambassador of Venice, so I was forced to take their weapons, and lodge them in the Counter. The Venetian ambassador's secretary came to me next day, and demanded their release. I said I was an inferior officer, and referred him to the lord mayor and justices. He said if I would not release them, Council should, and appealed to Council, who ordered their release. They being angry, attacked me on Monday with fists and swords, and they and the secretary threaten me. I appealed to the lord mayor and aldermen, who entreated the sheriffs to attend Council therein, but Council having risen before they came, they begged Sec. Calvert to entreat the ambassador that his followers might keep the peace. They were discharged on Monday 29 April, and I wanted to attend them to the ambassador's, but they would not go with me. With names of witnesses to prove the several facts. [1 sheet.]

81. Sol.-Gen. Heath to Council. I find the sentence given in Jersey, in a cause between Aaron Messervy and François Langloys, for partition of lands lying in that isle, to be just, and the appeal insufficient; the cause of the appeal being that the Court refused to put the plaintiff himself to his oath, whether there were any real agreement to bar the petition. Yet as that isle is governed by civil laws, which differ much from our forms here, by consent of each side, I wrote to the judges of that isle touching that point, and have received an answer under the hands of seven of them, (which is the greater number of the judges of the isle), that the plaintiff by law and custom cannot be put to his oath in this cause. 82. Sir Philip Carteret to Sir Edw. Conway, Ragley. I have deferred visiting you and others in England until July. My brother, who is of your company, has acquainted you of some ill usage received by the lieutenant, and entreated your leave to withdraw to Col. Vere's company; not being acquainted with particulars, I must lay the fault upon my brother, knowing your lieutenant to be so discreet a gentleman, and have written to my brother that he would lose the fruits of so long a service by going into the company of another captain, who in honour will be bound to prefer those that have served him longest. One thing I approve, that he wholly refers himself to you. I know your love to me will blanch at some imperfections, and your wisdom may remedy what is past. I hope at my coming to make an end of what is due that my brother has reserved from your lieutenant. I hope Lady Conway has received the canvas I sent her. I could not get any coarse diaper for board cloths, but will bring what I think fit for her. Direct your lieutenant to advance my brother such sums as he may require, and I will repay them. 83. Sir John Peyton, senior and junior, and Dean David Bandinell to the Council. In the cause between Hugh Hues and Peter Renouf, referred to us by you, the defendant was willing to restore the land and pay 20 crowns in a short time; but the appellant insisting upon far greater allowance, and we having no power to constrain his submission, certify that we find two points mentioned in your letters cleared by the plaintiff's witnesses, viz., that more money was paid than is mentioned in the deeds, and that it was delivered upon oath to the judges, before sentence given. 84. George Lord Carew, Master of the Ordnance, Sir Thos. Edmondson, Sec. Calvert, and Sir Julius Cæsar to Council. According to your order, we have informed ourselves of the present state of the castles and forts in Jersey and Guernsey, and of the proportions of supplies thought fit to be sent thither. We find that in April 1616, a proportion of munition, &c. for supply of the forts of Jersey was directed to be sent thither; whereof, by reason of the non-payment of the ordnance office for divers years, and the artificers not being able to make further supplies on credit, and the stores not being furnished, there yet remains unsupplied two minions of iron, five field carriages, and timber and planks for platforms; value, 187*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.*

We also find, by another proportion ordered by this board and granted at suit of Sir John Peyton, Governor, in Sept. last, for 264*l.* 1*s.* 4*d.*, that divers other field carriages, &c. were to be made and sent to the said forts, and two new powder rooms to be built there; but as the money has not been issued, the supply is not yet made.

For Castle Cornet, Guernsey, we also find that, upon a remain there taken in March of last year, order was likewise given to me, the Master of the Ordnance, to set out a supply for the castle, and in June 1621, warrants were given for its delivery, and for payment of 570*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.*, to defray the emptions, &c.; but nothing has been delivered, because the money has not been issued. We have considered a demand of Lord Danvers for 500*l.*, the remainder of 1,000*l.* granted by Privy Seal for fortifications and buildings in Castle Cornet, and think it should be speedily paid, as much concerning the safety of that place.

If order be taken for issuing the said several sums of 187*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.* and 264*l.* 1*s.* 4*d.* for Jersey, and 570*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.* and 500*l.* for Guernsey, amounting in all to 1,522*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*, the castles and forts in both the said islands will be speedily furnished, according to the proportions above mentioned. June 3. Certificate by John Bonamy, lieutenant of Amice de Carteret, bailiff of Guernsey, that on 13 June 1622, at St. Peter's port, in presence of Thos. Beauvoir, and Eleazar le Marchant, John Allere, sen., and 20 others authorised by the Court of 18 May last, ordained Nich. Le Beir, of Castel parish, as their procurer general in all their affairs in England before King and Council, and to present their request about the enlargement of the common lands of the island, which years ago have been taken by private persons, and to request King and Council to appoint procurers to settle the cause, to whom they promised due obedience. me by a special warrant ; but he neglected to come, notwithstanding a warrant from the provost there. The appellant has appeared, with a certificate testifying the signification thereof, made 3 Nov. last to L'Anglois, but he failed to appear therein. As he has neglected both these warrants, the appellant ought by default to be put in full possession, as before, of the fee called La Hongue Dirvault, being the matter in question, to which L'Anglois pretended some right by an action called nonbaille. He also should pay 10*l.* for costs and charges of suit, being two journies, having contumaciously deserted his own cause. [1 page.]

July 21. 86. Order in Council that, considering how requisite it is that The Court, Theobalds. special care should be taken, in these troublesome and doubtful times in France, of the security of Jersey and Guernsey, Viscount Grandison, Lord Carew, the Treasurer of the Household, and Sir Edw. Conway consider what is most needful for their safety, and certify to the board with expedition. [$\frac{1}{2}$ page, copy.]

Aug. 6. 87. Report of Sol.-Gen. Heath to Council. I have perused the decree made in Guernsey, on behalf of the Seigneur of Saumares plaintiff, and his tenants defendants, and find that he having purchased some tenancies held of his fee, wished to exclude other tenants holding of him of that seignery from commoning in Jerborough, except for the lands lying in that part of the seignery, although they have other lands lying in other places of that seignery. The defendants alleged that they had as good right to common in Jerborough for their lands as the tenants whose lands lie wholly within that seignery. The Court excludes the defendants, for two reasons. One that if all should common, it would overcharge the common ; this bears no weight, for the law would apportion every commoner, without excluding any who had right ; and if that were a reason to exclude any, it would be a greater difficulty to discern which should be excluded. The other reason is that the defendants had not proved their usage of common in that place. As I find that they are not clear on either side, I think a commission should be awarded to ascertain whether the tenants of the fee of Saumares, part of whose lands do not lie in that part of the lordship called Jerborough, have used for 40 years past to common in the common of Jerborough or not. I advise this course the rather because I find the Lord very confident that these tenants have not used to have such common, and the tenants as confident that they have ; and on both sides they are willing to put themselves upon the proof of that point. Aug. ? 88. Instructions to George Archbishop of Canterbury, concerning orders to be put in execution by the bishops within his province, viz.,—to reside in their episcopal houses ; to order the observance by all parties of the declaration for settling all questions in difference ; to be careful in ordinations and appointments of lecturers; to order the afternoon service to be a catechizing; lectures to be gravely conducted by persons willing to take the cure of souls, and read in gowns, not cloaks; none but noblemen to have any private chaplain; notice to be taken of recusants and others who are absent; no bishop appointed to another see to make leases after his appointment, thereby almost undoing his successor, on pain of withholding of the royal assent; and an account to be given on Jan. 2, of the performance of these commands. [Pp. 7-9 in a book of similar documents.] Also,

Aug. 20. Lord Keeper Lincoln to Viscount Annandale. I wish to satisfy you about the offence taken at the King's clemency towards the lay recusants, and my own letter to the judges. The people are as incapable of measuring the deep actions of a prince, as of estimating the size of the sun and stars. The King is so popishly inclined that he has been a most zealous interceder for the Protestants of Europe, and therefore cannot be inclement to papists, but the favour by no means amounts to toleration; and papists set at liberty are still amenable to laws, and are shackled by sureties and recognizances; if they wax insolent, the favour will be withdrawn. The favouring papists is by no means favouring popery. My own letter to the judges has been much misconstrued. [Ibid. pp. 11-17.]

Aug. ? 89. Request of the Bailiff of Jersey to Sec. Calvert. Has been detained a year, absent from home and family. Has often asked and still asks for a copy of the informations against him, that he may answer them. Most of the charges have been twice examined and answered, his accusers condemned for wronging him, and he discharged, as proved by the Council books and report of the Commissioners.

Cannot be justly charged with injustice or corruption; the chief persons of the country have attested his fidelity. Is reproached with being poor and irritable, but his poverty has never led him to a base act, nor irritability to violence.

As to his prohibition sent to the dean, it was better founded than Sir John Peyton's, who contested with the King for the nomination of the bailiff, though a prerogative inseparable from sovereignty, and yet he was not blamed, but allowed to show his reasons. The temporal power has always administered the oath to churchwardens, authorized their commission under the seal, which the bailiff has in charge, and received their accounts, without the dean's interfering. Now to take away from the bailiff the profit of the seal given him for life, and retrench his jurisdiction without his being heard, or having given any cause, and without command from King or Council, and to constrain him to obey laws established to limit the civil magistracy, without giving him an authentic copy, is very extraordinary. When the prohibition was sent to the dean, Sir Phil. de Carteret was in England, and could get no copy of the instructions to the dean to give to the bailiff, who had quitted his prohibition, and ordered the ministers to assist the dean, long before the copy of his instructions was delivered to Carteret.

The King in 1614 forbade the martial officer to meddle with the nomination of the bailiff and officers of justice; yet Sir John Peyton has obtained letters commanding him to establish a deputy for your remonstrant's office, although he is a mortal enemy, and the bailiff had left a lieutenant in his place, the most capable man in the country, and twenty years lieutenant to the last bailiff. Sir John enjoys all the fines, and to give him power to establish the judges places the goods and life of subjects at his discretion.

The ill-opinion conceived of the bailiff should not prejudice his office. He has served the King and late Queen long and faithfully; compounded for the office with George Paulet; been at great charges, &c. Begs if he is to resign, that he may do it with honour, and have his pension assigned on some sure fund. The case is committed to the Duke of Lenox, Earl of Arundel, and your Lordship. Pray let it be expedited. His wages are 100 marks and 7*l.* 14*s.*; his profits about 100*l.*, the whole about 160*l.*, not enough to maintain such an officer as the dignity of his place requires. 91. Sir Thos. Wilson to [Sec. Calvert?]. In reply to your supposition that the [keepership of the paper] office, which I serve, is new and unimportant, I will prove that it was appointed 45 years ago; has been held by Dr. Wilson, Dr. James, and Sir Thomas Lake, and was lastly given to me by my late master [the Earl of Salisbury]. The office contains multitudes of papers, because when Secretaries of State became persons of importance, it was found inconvenient to have the papers in private rooms, or in the hands of servants, who often embezzled them on change of secretaries. I collected several books of documents from them for Lord Treasurers Salisbury and Suffolk; also papers on marriage treaties in Prince Henry's time, papers belonging to the Lord Chamberlain's office, for the Earl of Somerset, and the Lord Duke, now Steward; several secretaries were constantly calling for abstracts, transcripts, &c. Lord Digby had six books made of foreign princes' matches with England; Lord Buckingham, books about the Admiralty, and Earl Marshalship, &c. [2½ pages.]

92. — Ingram, boatswain, to the Committee [of the Levant company?]. I have always spoken of the great charge you were at with regard to the Great James and other ships, sore against my will, but I could not be heard. In taking out the masts we used four shears and 100 men, at a cost of 60*l.* and upwards. Old masts and yards endanger the voyage, and are generally only fit for one or two voyages. Mr. Head the shipbuilder told you that the New Year's Gift with her masts and yards might serve another voyage, but when they arrived in the Indies, they left the ship there for want of them, and the Trades' Increase was lost through the badness of hers. Your own books will show your losses in these things, which have been great, and a grief to me, and Mr. Stuckley has often heard me complain; I hope he and I will have directions from you for an amendment, for men's lives and merchants' ships and goods worth 16,000*l.* or 20,000*l.* ought not to be lost, through venturing with old masts. I hold it proper to have a ship built with the materials in the yard, and the timber and iron out of the Great James will materially assist therein.

Pray consider my services and wants, and amend my salary, as I am a very poor man, and am not paid as others were and are, although my travelling charges, &c. are less. With particulars of savings effected by the writer. [1 sheet.]

95. Statement that 50 years since, there was a church standing in Duke's place, called Trinity or Duke's Place Church; that it was the parish church, had all customary services and churchwardens, and still has sidemen, collectors, constables, head boroughs, and other officers of its own, not meddling with St. Catherine's parish, but being a parish within itself.

After the fall of the church, the inhabitants of Duke's Place had service in the Woodmongers' Hall, then called the Duke's Hall, in Duke's place. They have not had a church of their own since, and so were fain to go to other churches to be christened, married, or buried, for nearness, but not as parishioners. They accounted themselves and were accounted strangers at St. Catherine's free church. They neither had nor challenged pews, nor paid tithes nor any church duties. If they came to Communion, they paid double as strangers, or as they could compound. They were never rated for repairs, nor any of them chosen parish officers. Duke's place has much increased in building and inhabitants these 40 or 50 years.

The King being informed of this three years ago, the Archbishop of Canterbury, at his order, wrote to the lord mayor and aldermen, and thereupon the new church was built on the site of the old, at the city's charge. Creechurch parish has no right to compass Duke's

96. "Necessary matters to consider in the Commonwealth." Arguments as to the causes of the falling of prices. The first is the scarcity of money owing to its debasement, the export of gold, the shifts made in Ireland at crying down the money, and advantages taken by goldsmiths in melting down coins when they can gain by them as bullion.

The second is the overthrow of the vent of cloth; but for this, so much land would have been taken up in pasture that prices would not easily have fallen. Other causes are the drawing of the King's money from exchangers, and restraint of usury. The coin in the kingdom is insufficient for traffic, and the want falls first upon the poor man, who is unable to pay his rents, and thus gentlemen suffer. There should be some device to supply the country more plentifully. [8 pages, damaged.]

2. Edward Lord Denney to his son-in-law, James Earl of Carlisle. With many thanks and earnest suit for holding him so long, I have at length sent you your jewel, Donna Maria's* darling, and my best beloved,† not doubting but with Lady Carlisle's help, with over-making of him, and often fetching him, as we have done, from school, we shall make him in the end a most learned clerk without book. To shut up Christmas withal, I will inform you how the hopes of your son can stand in relation to my poor estate, which done, I will leave it to your wisdom to consider of; meanwhile I grieve to seem importunate, but my comfort is that the sequel will show that it was not for myself but yours; for as Esau said to his brother Jacob, I have enough.

At Christmas last was a twelvemonth, I moved you for your consent to make your son a knight, and you promised to attempt

His Majesty thereabout; so I well perceive your silence all the while was not forgetfulness, but watching the King for a fit season, as you revived the same to me, when His Majesty was last at Theobald's. I renew my desire therein, not for my good but his, whom you wish as well unto as I can do, and more, if that may be. I pray God to give you much comfort of him. This favour to me must be when I am dead, a time when no earthly King can do me either good or hurt, so that you may see I have no other respect to myself, but an honest care to die honestly, which I cannot do, and leave your son my heir, unless this suit be granted me; for being under age, he must be a ward, and then a third part must descend and be subject to a Master of Wards, whose conscience must be more bent to His Majesty's profit than the care of my debts; which part otherwise would pay my debts before his arrival to 21 years, and deliver him a free estate;—the two other parts being my wife's jointure, which I am as much bound in honour to preserve as piously to pay my debts, and save my creditors harmless.

Now there are heirs male nearer to my grandfather's will, from whom all came, and some degrees nearer to him than my daughter's son, which are of full age, upon whom if the inheritance should be left, I am sure they would pay my debts, and secure my kind tenants from danger, which cannot so assuredly be done by a ward. Therefore if I be driven to that necessity, which I must be if your son be not knighted, or I outlive his minority,—which I could wish for his sake, although there be small hope in regard of my age,—I call all the world to witness and yourself, leaving these lines as a testimony, that I do it out of honest ground, and not out of discontentment; for whensoever the deed is signed, it will be sealed with tears, and God shall be my executor, to whom I chiefly will leave him, either with or without means.

Now you may perceive that there is no tie for me to leave the King a wardship after my death, but a mere contingency, liable to my pleasure. Notwithstanding, for James's sake, I would value the favour, as a princely gift from His Majesty, which if I must go without, it will appear that I snatched but at a shadow, and your son must lose the substance; for I will not, by any dishonesty, raise my house with injury to those that have put their estates in hazard for my sake. Pray answer with speed, for I am mortal; the deeds both of the one and the other attend but the sealing, and it shall be my prayer to be kept from the one, and I shall die a swan's death to do the other; howsoever animam liberavi meam. 4. ——— to the King. Projects are often framed upon strong imaginations, and seldom produce the ends projected; but the enclosed project, if rightly followed, will bring great benefit to the commonwealth in general, to the maltsters in particular, and to you a revenue of at least 20,000*l.* a year.

As a matter of such consequence is not to be undertaken but upon assured grounds, the projectors desire a private warrant: 1. To take knowledge how many maltsters there are in England and Wales. 2. How many are maltsters and use malting who, by your laws, ought not to be maltsters, and how many legally. 3. In what places defective and bad malt are made, and the names of the persons who make it. 4. Upon conference with the maltsters, to set down a form for making perfect malt, for the ancient law makers were more jealous in reformation of bad malt than skilful in making thereof. 5. To persuade the lawful maltsters to signify what yearly rent every one of them will give you for suppressing such as use malting against the law.

The projectors will follow this service upon their own charges, and render you an account at Michaelmas term next; then you can acquaint some of your Council, and settle a legal course for appropriating this yearly rent for ever to your service.

With note by the Attorney-General, "This being but an inquiry tending to make the way more even, I like it well, and it will be a good preparation for His Majesty the better to direct his judgment in the proceedings that shall follow." [1 page, copy.] Annexing,

4. 1. Project concerning the abuses in making malt, and the superfluous number of maltsters within the realm. The laws have had special respect for the true making of malt. Acts of 2 & 3 Edward VI. and 37, 35 & 39 Eliz., ordain that none shall make malt unless it lie in steep and on the floor three weeks; shall not mingle good with bad; shall not make it unless well rubbed, trodden, and fanned; shall make it of mowe-burnt or spired barley, or shall wet barley to make malt before 10 Sept. or after 1 May.

Yet the maltsters, on desire of gain, make their malt in eight or nine days, and slackly dry it, so as to have an inordinate increase thereof, by reason whereof in a short space it becomes musty and unwholesome, to the endangering of His Majesty's nobility, and breeding infection among the rest of his subjects, and to the great impoverishing of the brewers.

Great quantities of barley are wasted by the false making of malt, for 15 qrs. of good malt will make more and better drink than 20 of malt falsely made.

at men's houses, whereby the markets are not furnished, the prices are enhanced, and thousands of poor people, who are constrained in these times of dearth to make bread thereof, are prejudiced.

His Majesty, that the great waste of barley might be saved, and the poor sustained with bread at reasonable prices, by proclamation dated 12 Dec. 1608, commanded all justices of peace, &c. to cause the laws concerning malt and maltsters to be put in execution, and to diminish the superfluous number of maltsters. For better reformation thereof, a patent is now sought that none shall convert barley into malt, or make sale thereof without license, except the barley be growing upon his land, or be tithe corn, or rent corn reserved upon any lease or demise.

To restrain the superfluous number of maltsters, none having any trade shall have license to make malt for sale, nor shall any person be licensed to buy barley to convert into malt, without recognizance to observe all the statutes now in force against engrossing and forestalling barley, and making malt; one half of the forfeitures to go to the King, and the other half to the patentee. [1½ page.]

4. II. Another project, stating that according to Mr. Camden's map, Yorkshire contains 563 parishes; Durham, 118; Northumberland, 46; Cumberland, 58; and Westmoreland, 28, in each of which there is one maltster, and in some two, though most people make their own malt; that if a tax of a groat per quarter was levied upon each for all they sold, it must be left to their honesty to make a true return, and advising rather a tax of 20l. yearly, to be paid by every maltster. Many would then give over the trade, and the rest thrive upon it. To pay 500l. a year rent for all, or 200l. for the other four counties, the profit would be a nemo sit. [1 page.]

But when I was gone, the Lords were told that by opposition to Sir John Peyton I had done the King disservice, so the King was moved to give my place to Sir Wm. Parkhurst, and recompence me, but I was not told this.

I got no answer to my petition till 1622, before the progress, when a reference was given me to the Duke [of Buckingham], Lord Arundel, and Sec. Calvert; but I can get no expedition, to the detriment of my reputation and estate.

Pray get my pensions surely assigned, from the time I was sent for, that I may pay my debts; and order Sir J. Peyton to pay me 149*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, arrears of wages and pensions.

I would not contest against King or Lords, but they have been misinformed, and the course taken against me injures the service. You have examined the objections laid to my charge by Sir J. Peyton and the Dean, and know the indignities offered to my place and person. Pray inform the King and Duke therein, and clear me from the imputation of indiscreet and violent behaviour. 14. Petition of Hugh Hue, of Jersey, to Council, for a letter to the judge delegate and jurats of Jersey, to put him into possession of all the lands which Peter Renouf had of Noel Regnault, and to refer the question of costs and charges of his suit to the Attorney General.

In April 1621, appealed from a sentence of the bailiff's deputy and three of the jurats there, when the Council referred the cause to the Attorney-General ; Renouf neglected to appear ; stayed in London for him two months, and was forced to go back, but with a special warrant from the Attorney-General to cause him to appear. Upon his appearance, reclaimed certain lands bought in fee farm by Renouf of Noel Regnault, because he gave either ware or money not mentioned in the deeds for the bargain. Produced a certificate in proof thereof ; Renouf produced another certificate, taking notice of the invalidity of his proof. The cause being difficult, the Attorney-General reported to Council that a commission should be made to Sir John Peyton, governor, Sir John Peyton, junior, Sir Philip Carteret, and David Bandinell, dean ; and letters were sent to them from Council, to examine, first, whether any more money or wares were given by Renouf than is mentioned in his deeds ; and secondly, if the same were proved to the judges of the isle before sentence given ; has fully proved these two points. With reference thereon to the Attorney-General. [1 page.]

inhabitants of Jersey. On appointment of the dean, till we knew more fully what laws and canons were fitting, we commanded the bishop as ordinary to grant a commission to Dean Bandinell, to exercise ecclesiastical jurisdiction according to instructions signed by us, till rules were framed for regular government there as in England. These rules we ordered the dean and ministers to consider of, and communicate to the governor, bailiff, and jurats, that they might offer exceptions to us and Council, if needed.

The dean and minister have presented certain canons, and the bailiff and jurats have sent Sir Philip de Carteret and Joshua and Philip de Carteret, jurats, to except against them. The case has been argued before the Archbishop of Canterbury and Bishops of Lincoln and Winchester, who, by consent of the deputies and dean, have reduced the canons to order. These canons we now ratify, and require that they be duly observed. [2 pages.] Annexing,

[1 page, French and English, modern copy.]

June ? 18. Answer on behalf of the inhabitants of Jersey to the demands of the dean. The King wishing to make a dean, appointed him, being then in England on his own business, and gave him his instructions, to which they willingly submitted. But they think it hard, and without precedent, to be called on to bear the charges he was at for his preferment, and they hope that their charters will free them. They think the dean should be satisfied, as the King has added 100*l.* a year to the deanery, has given him the reversion of a living of 100*l.* a year, and he now has two benefices value 100*l.*

They think they should not bear the charges of one not chosen by themselves, nor liked, being a stranger, who has spent most of his time, without desire of the isle, in getting exemptions of points in

But as your promise is not yet performed, wishing to suppress all discord, I beg that his son may be put in real possession of the exhibition now fallen void. 20. Reasons of the Goldsmiths' Company about the manufacture of gold and silver thread.

The King wishes to have Cheapside and Lombard Street replenished with goldsmiths, which cannot be if the trade be taken away, and gold and silver thread bought in private houses; therefore it is requested that its buying and disgrossing for thread be done only by goldsmiths, in the overt markets. If the finers be allowed to buy gold and silver, there will not soon be 10 goldsmiths left in Cheapside.

If the finers may buy gold and silver to disgross, and then sell it to the wire-drawers, the goldsmiths should also be allowed to prepare it for disgrossing, carry it to the office, pay the duties, and then sell it to the wire-drawers. The goldsmiths will serve the manufacturer as cheaply as the finers, and take none of the King's stock. Some of the finers have been goldsmiths, and are now become rich by withdrawing trade to their houses unlawfully, and if others be debarred from disgrossing, the price of gold and silver will rise. Most of this manufacture, i.e., gold and silver thread, spangles, &c. may be made of silver 11 oz. 14 dwts. fine, which will be well, as the Commonwealth should not be at great charge in refining silver, and the Mint at great charge in alloying it. It is requested that His Majesty's disgrosser may not be a goldsmith, nor a buyer and seller of gold. [1 page.]

The University produced a charter of 26 Henry VIII., allowing them to print all books approved by the Vice-Chancellor and three doctors. The Stationers showed a later charter, granting them the privilege of printing divers books. The King ordered an accommodation. The Vice-Chancellor showed much moderation, and it was at length agreed:—

That all books shall be sold at reasonable prices, or else shall be liable to be rated, the prices having been much raised latterly.

The University shall print, conjointly with the London Stationers, all books except the Bible, book of common prayer, grammar, psalms, psalters, primers, &c., but they are only to set one press on work in any privileged books. The books whereof the first copy is brought to either printers is to go to the party to whom it is first brought.

The University shall print no almanac now belonging to the Stationers, nor any whereof the first copy shall be brought to the Stationers, but they may print prognostications whereof the first copy is brought to their printers.

The Stationers shall not hinder the sale of University books. The University printer shall have liberty, contrary to the order of 17 October last, to sell all the grammars and psalms that he has already printed, and such as are seized by the Stationers shall be restored; but Bonham Norton and others have offered to take them at reasonable prices. On 17 April 1615 the Turkey merchants procured a proclamation from His Majesty, prohibiting all men, denizens or aliens, not free of that company, from importing any of those wines, whereby the benefit of the said Act is taken away. [Venetians may bring in their own ships or in English ships.] The mayor, &c. of Southampton, in Aug. 1615, petitioned His Majesty for relief, and were referred to Council for recompense. Council referred the cause to Secretary Lake, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Master of the Rolls, and Attorney-General, who ordered that the town of Southampton should forbear their suit for a time, by reason of the then troubles in Turkey; and if the company held, satisfaction should be made for their losses; but if the company should be dissolved, then the town should receive the benefit intended by the Act.

The town forbore for 18 months, little profit meantime accruing to them by reason of the proclamation, and then they preferred another petition to Council for relief. Council referred it to Sec. Naunton, Sir Fulke Greville, now Lord Brooke, then Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir Julius Cæsar, the Master of the Rolls, and the Attorney-General. Finding that the proclamation was procured by the said merchants by misinformation to the board, for their private benefit, and that they had not had the sole bringing in of those wines, as they wrongfully suggested, as was plainly proved by the agent for Southampton, their honours ordered that the merchants should make satisfaction to the town of Southampton, so that the board might not be further troubled. This the merchants have not hitherto done, neither has the town, for divers years past, received one penny profit for the same.

The mayor, &c. now desire recompense for the time past, having by means of the proclamation been hindered above 1,000*l.*; also some consideration hereafter, to the yearly value that they formerly received, and have lost by reason of the proclamation, which, with the threatenings of some of the company against the merchant strangers, have put by the latter from their trade, and they are never likely to renew it. The greater part of those wines brought in lately have been brought in English bottoms, and therefore no hindrance to the State. [2½ pages. Levant Papers, Vol. I., No. 38.]

52. Sir Phil. Carteret to Sec. Conway. The absence of the bailiff, and death of the lieutenant bailiff, have left the island destitute of a judge, and the jurats without power to punish offences. So I assembled the States and proposed a judge provisory; most consented, but some quoted the King's edict forbidding the governor to nominate the bailiff and other officers, which I in no wise attempted to infringe. 54. Reasons why the Act 27 Hen. VIII. c. 13, relating to the import and export of cloth, should not be altered. In 3 Hen. VII. the King received for custom and subsidy of wools 1,000*l.* a year, and then cloths of the value of 4*l.* and under went unrowed. For licensing transport of cloth he also received 1,000*l.* a year. Now nothing is received for wools, and if such cloths should now go unlicensed, that vent would be lost, and the Crown be defeated of the advancement of that farm when the lease shall be ended. Considering that by exportation of every sack of wool by an Englishman, the King loses 12*s.*, and by a stranger 22*s.*, and that now the draping and knitting in this land consume all the wool, whereby His Majesty loses the customs of draperies and knitware heretofore imported, and those of the wools exported, it should rather seem reasonable to advance the customs and subsidies of draperies and knitware, than to decay the 1,000*l.* rent yearly, which if the King wants, the Commons must supply, and the merchandise will better bear it than the Commons, and cloths of 7*l.* the piece or under may go by license, which is but 2*s.* 2*d.*

Restraints or impositions are not so proper to the Crown as licences for composition. In all ages, the Kings and Queens of this realm, when policy requires it, have licensed things generally forbidden, for the benefit of trade, and the increase of the customs and subsidies; and [for] 1,000*l.* yearly, His Majesty has already licensed the same sort of cloth to pass over unrowed.

In matters concerning the revenues of the Crown, it will be fitter for the King to license at his pleasure than for one Parliament to set free that which, without another Parliament, the King cannot restrain without much grudging; and it will be better to let the ancient laws stand than make new ones as required. The prices of cloth are so uncertain that whether it be one of 7*l.* or 7*l.* 10*s.* cannot easily be discovered, and this will be a great means to deceive the King in his license. The white cloths now sold for 7*l.* the cloth are longer, heavier, and finer than those sold for 4*l.* in 27 Hen. VIII., as can be proved by witnesses still living.

VOL. XLIII.

If the Act desired should pass as now drawn, it would defeat the privileges of the Merchant Adventurers in a main point, and make others as free for transporting cloths of 7*l.* and under as the licensed men. The farmer of the license, besides his rent of 1,000*l.* a year, is a means to advance the King's customs for cloths 2,000*l.* a year at least. If the Merchant Adventurer could get cloths of 7*l.* and under to go over unrowed without license, the farmer of the license must then give over his farm, and the merchant would then disadvance the customs at his pleasure. 60. John Earl of Bristol to Sec. Conway. The Padre Maestro, having visited my wife, desired to see me. He made great professions of his master's desire of giving His Majesty satisfaction, and that the Ambassadors and he had propositions to make, but could not be admitted to deliver them. I told him I no longer had anything to do in those affairs, but if the propositions would give His Majesty satisfaction, he should apply to those most acceptable to him, as I conceived personal exasperations had been in great part the cause of the disordering of the affairs; and therefore it would be wisdom particularly to apply to the Duke. I would do nothing in this kind without giving His Majesty an account thereof, so pray inform him.

P.S.—I want His Majesty's order concerning my manner of examination. The Ambassadors desired to see my wife, but I have made her put off the visit until I understand whether it may be displeasing. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page.]

They are now urged to pay to Carteret, and other deputies employed for the island, 254*l.* more, which they say should be levied not on them only, but on the whole inhabitants.

In that case, whosoever I shall find either to be my accuser or to oppose my admittance to the King, or Prince's justice, I shall labour to maintain my honour against any opposition. But I hope all parties (when by my answer they shall see my innocency) will join in restoring me to His Majesty and the Prince's favour. I have returned the original articles which you sent me, and which need not go to the Commissioners, as if you date and sign them, it will be sufficient.

70. John Earl of Bristol to Sec. Conway. Pray send me another copy, dated and signed; meantime I will go on framing my answer. I understand His Majesty had appointed the Commissioners that were formerly for the Spanish business to draw up the questions, which will give my cause a fair way not to have questions administered upon particular distastes or to be examined upon opinions and thoughts, rather than upon any omissions or commissions in my employments. My suit to His Majesty is to continue the same course for expediting my cause, and that my answer may likewise come to the hands of the Commissioners, to every one of whom I shall send a copy, as their meeting will be difficult by reason of his often removes. I pray that my cause may come to a fair, public decision. [1 $\frac{3}{4}$ pages.]

73. John Earl of Bristol to Sec. Conway. I have now made ready my answer to the twenty interrogatories. As I have reserved many things to be delivered to His Majesty by word of mouth, and as it will be impossible to clear any doubts which may arise without my presence, I have petitioned leave to present my answer in person, if not as a councillor and faithful servant, yet at least as a supposed delinquent and examine. Although I perceive that my Lord Duke remains little satisfied, notwithstanding my address to him, yet out of his nobleness and love to justice, he has promised to assist in procuring me a fair and speedy trial; for the rest I must rely upon God, His Majesty's justice, and the goodness of my own cause. 74. John Earl of Bristol to the King. Last night I heard from Sir Fras. Cottington, that you did not hold it fit to comply with my petition to be admitted as a delinquent. I moved you not primarily to be admitted as such, but rather to have it in that nature than not at all; but I am most unfortunate to be debarred as a servant, and not admitted as a delinquent. I have sent my answers to the 20 questions. As a clear answer to so many could not be without length, I send you an abstract, which I beg you to give my cousin, Simon Digby (who is sworn clerk extraordinary of your Privy Council); leave to read to you, and which will not take up above half a quarter of an hour. I beg expedition in my cause, for besides the grief of being long debarred your favour, God has sent me a great misfortune, in the death of Sir Robt. 76. John Earl of Bristol to Sec. Conway. The day that the King removed from Theobalds', I received a sad message, being debarred kissing his hands. God knows that my heart is so free from any want of fidelity that a bare narration of the truth will suffice.

My wife likewise brought me leave for some months to tend my private estate, which, through my long absence, and the sudden death of Sir Robt. Seymour who managed it, is much embroiled. I go west next Monday, but shall leave some one always attending upon you, to understand His Majesty's pleasure.

80. The Council [to the receiver of Jersey?]. The bailiff of Jersey having been suspended from his place, and since long attended the hearing of his cause, with allegations for his justification, His Majesty referred his suit to some of this board, who find no means to relieve him but either by granting him a pension of 100*l.* a year, for which he was recommended to His Majesty, or restoring him to his office, and paying him the arrears which remain in the hands of the governor or any other. His Majesty, finding no matter of charge against the bailiff, and holding it not suitable to remove an officer without sufficient cause, is pleased that John Herault be restored to the office of bailiff, with all perquisites, and that the arrear grown due since his sequestration be forthwith paid to him; the execution of all which we, in His Majesty's name, hereby require you to cause to be performed, without question or delay.

For the arrears, His Majesty has already signified his pleasure by his own letters, which he requires may be performed accordingly,

Statement that the Court of heritage (of Jersey) was this day proclaimed, but could not be opened for want of a quorum, some justices being ill and absent, and a difference existing between Phil. Yet as it was important for the Court to be held, the bailiff's lieutenant, by advice of most of the justices, requested Lemprière to take the place and assist; he refused, when the lieutenant-governor, considering the necessity of the service, commanded him to do it provisionally, without prejudice to his rights. This he refused, and therefore was by the majority of justices present sent to the castle. [$\frac{3}{4}$ page, French.]

Sept. 29. 83. Sir Phil. Carteret to Sec. Conway. Two jurats being dead, Jersey. we elected others, but one, Phil. Lemprière of Dilament, refused to act, unless he might have precedence of Phil. de Carteret of Vinchelais; the Court decided that Carteret being long since on the bench, should keep his place provisionally till the matter was settled. For this Lemprière refused to act, even though Michaelmas term came, and though I summoned him in His Majesty's name, and he was thereupon committed to the castle. The Court had to be dismissed, because there were not seven jurats present, at which there was much murmuring. Such contentions injure the King's service.

There are four chief houses in the isle, St. Ouen, Rossel, Saumares, and Trinité, which have always had the precedence; the other gentlemen of the country are sprung from one or another of these, and take precedence according to their nearness to the stock. Lemprière is of the houses of Rossel and Trinité; his father was a jurat, judge delegate, and lieutenant bailiff, and the son pretends the same place as his father in the seat of justice, as holding the fee of Dilament, although Carteret is issued from the first house, has long been jurat, and holds the fee of Vinchelais in capite. I trouble you with this that justice may be done, and no public disobedience suffered. [2 pages.]

97. Petition of Thomas Brensford, merchant, to the King, to order the Company of Turkey Merchants to admit him as their factor marine at Scanderoon in Turkey. Was elected at a general Court by a majority, and his friends offered security for his fairly accounting to the company, and managing the office, but some of the assistants wishing to prefer another, after the election of petitioner, obtained the putting of the election of the other person again to the question, and pronounced him to be duly elected, depriving petitioner of the employment, whereby he might repair divers late great losses. 98. Advertisements from Guernsey or Jersey. The coast is full of pirates. Those of Granville have set out three men-of-war, which will take all that come in and out of the islands, for none will be able to escape them unless His Majesty sends some shipping upon the coast. No boats now come to Jersey or Guernsey from Normandy. Three men have been apprehended at Guernsey, probably spies of Cardinal de Richelieu. They are of Newhaven, and very good pilots. 99. Query about the jurisdiction of the Bishop's Chancellor and his commissaries, as to how the latter are to secure competent recompense if, to avoid controversy, they use the authority of the former by substitution; with opinion of Serjeant George Croke, that no substitution for which money is taken is lawful, but that a bond might be given for the commissaries to execute their office peaceably, and the same with the registrars. Also that the Bishop might supply any defect of non-mention of triennials in the commissaries' patent. [$\frac{1}{2}$ page.]

100. Report [to the Navy Commissioners?] concerning two ships and a pinnace to be employed in the Narrow Seas against the Dunkirkers, that the charge will be 6,500*l.* a year; that on their Lordships' directions that it should be voluntary, the companies of London were consulted, and have promised 678*l.*, but they say that it does not concern them as others, for they go so strong, putting 50 men into a ship instead of 20, that they fear not the Dunkirkers. Order in Council. This day suit was made to us by the Merchant Adventurers, concerning a controversy between them and the Levant Company, touching the import of the growth of the Levant by the Merchant Adventurers, from the parts of their privileges in the Low Countries; and a report of the Attorney-General was presented, whereby it appeared that the Merchant Adventurers, meeting with any of those commodities in Germany or the Low Countries, might import them without violation of the charters of the Levant Company. This report, though drawn up in December 1623, has not been returned until now, because Parliament sitting shortly after, the Levant Company gave way to the said importation. But since then, the Company have stayed certain galls, brought out of the Low Countries by the Merchant Adventurers at the Custom House, which the Merchant Adventurers desire may be delivered up.

We order that the said galls, being twenty bags, imported from Delft by Fras. Man, be delivered to him, he paying the customs, and we will again hear and determine the many controversies between the Merchant Adventurers and the Levant Company. [1 page, copy. Levant Papers, Vol. I., No. 33.]

Order in Council. His Majesty by patent 13 Nov. 1605, gave power to the Levant Company to assemble and make orders for their government, and execute or reform them. The said merchants, for the better receiving and gathering of impositions rated by the Company for maintenance of the Ambassador at Constantinople, &c., agreed that no brother of the Company, or others not free of the same, shall enter any goods into any custom house, to be either laden for or from the Straits or any place of trade in the Levant Seas, (or any other place, being goods of the Levant) without a particular first certified under the hand and seal of their deputy. The merchants praying assistance from this Board for the better observance of the said order, it is ordered that the Lord Treasurer direct his letters to the officers of the ports, not to take any such entry as above specified. Reasons presented to the King by the Levant Company in favour of Sir Thos. Roe's remaining ambassador at Constantinople; that the Company bearing all the charges of the ambassadors, has the right of electing them; that Roe has not yet been four years in his post, for which he is the better qualified by his former embassy to the Great Mogul; and in the troubles of that state, owing to the recent changes of Emperor, his experience and wisdom have greatly benefited the Company. If he were recalled and another appointed, they would be subject to impositions and exactions which would not easily be removed. [Levant Papers, Vol. I., p. 146.]

 March 14. [Lord Treasurer Ley] to the Officers and Farmers of the Customs in the Port of London. The Governor and Company of the Levant Merchants are enabled by patent to ordain orders for the government of the company and all others intermeddling in the trade of the Levant Seas, and for receiving impositions rated by the Company for the maintenance of the ambassador at Constantinople, which patent has since been strengthened by His Majesty's proclamations, and divers orders from Council. The said Company having made suit to Council for assistance for the better observation of their orders, it was ordered by the Board, on 23 Feb. last, that I should direct my letters to the officers of the ports in that behalf. I therefore require you not to take any entry of any person for goods to be either laden to or from the port of London, for any place of trade in the Levant Seas, without a particular thereof first certified under the hand and seal of the deputy of the said Company. 112. Note by the farmers of the patent relating to coals, of the charges and inconveniences which will arise from altering it. The surrender of the patent will have to be enrolled in Chancery. The drawing of the lease by the Attorney-General’s clerks will take above 100 sheets, which will have to be perused, settled, engrossed, examined, passed at the seals, and enrolled in six different places. Several exemplifications will have to be sent to the ports, and 40 deputations to the several ministers employed in the several ports, which will occasion their travelling from afar with their sureties, at great charge. There will also be the charge of altering and renewing all assurances and conveyances among the farmers for the managing of the whole business of the farm, as also for a new privy seal concerning defalcations, new motions, decrees, and orders, &c.

The inconveniences will be the hazard of the whole patent, in the change which may grow by mistaking, miswriting, or omitting, which we have already experienced, to our no little charge ; and great loss by the absence of our deputies from the ports to renew their deputations, and enter into new bonds. The new ordering of the farm will be subject to cavil, and all suits depending in the Exchequer upon forfeited bonds, &c. will be determined, so that we shall be forced to commence new suits.

The inconveniences that will arise by entering into security are, that by foreign war, restraint of traffic, hostility, or insurrection at home, or by the new trade of coals in Scotland, which of late is very much increased, or other casualty, the benefit of the farmers will not raise the 2,000*l.* per annum required, in which case the farmers may have liberty to leave their farm, yet the security of the 2,000*l.* would still continue. That now they give no collateral security for payment of their rent to the King, as they pay it half-yearly beforehand, and therefore no reason they should be urged to worse case than they now are in, by giving security for payment of the 2,000*l.* Admitting the lease were passed reserving only 4,300*l.* to the King for ten years, and entering security for the 2,000*l.* a year, if the lease were forfeited for want of payment of any part of the rent, yet the security remains firm for them all for the payment of 2,000*l.* a year ; if there should be any other inconveniences, either in the changing of the patent or the manner of the security, they hold it

115. Note of the order used in the duchy [of Lancaster] for the King's revenue. At Hilary term, all receivers and accountants make their accounts before the auditor of all sums within the charge of his receipt, and receive a debenture to pay the same to the General Receiver. At the end of the term, a declaration of every receiver's account is taken by the Chancellor, who examines it with the Counsel of the Court; if the receiver has not paid his debt, the Chancellor takes order that he clears his account before his departure out of town, and if there be any money which he cannot receive, process is awarded for levying it.

Upon the declaration of the accountants, there appears what debts remain unpaid; if they be upon bonds which remain in the clerk of the Court's custody, he is ordered to make process of extent against the parties; if they be for debts without bonds, Privy Seals or attachments are awarded. If any farmer is behind with his rent, process is awarded against him, or his lease seized. On Wednesdays and Fridays in every term, the Chancellor and Counsel sit for examination of the King's revenue, and see how the orders and processes are executed, and what has been paid thereupon, &c. If any accountant is in arrear, the clerk has order to make process of extent upon the bonds against the principal, if it may be done; if not, then the sureties are called, and some instalment exacted from them.

122. Verses by a prisoner on the hollowness and time-servingness of human friendships, e.g.,—

If by chance she be from thee torn,
Thou feelest not of their help nor food.
Then think thyself better unborn

123. Verses by H. K., commencing,—

“Mrs. Ann I am your man,” &c.

In another hand are the following:—

“Katherine Kyrie, have a care,

129. Petition of Sir Sigismund Zinzan, equerry in ordinary to the King, for ordinary entertainment, that he may keep two horses to wait upon him, and appear among horsemen, being obliged to live retired for fear of debt, and his old age pinched with greater want than horses. Must have rotted in prison without his yearly gift of 100*l.* [½ page.]

130. Hen. Mervin to Wm. Lake. You want information of the success of the new water engine, for which my son and others have got a patent, on proposition of David Ramsay. I was first asked to take the patent, but not finding in this new engine what might answer great expectations, I thought it better to expose my son's name to censure than my own. It may be useful to supply private houses, fountains in gardens and ships, where the draught is short, but not in mines where the draught is deep, nor in great cities, where the pipes have large dimensions. Mr. Ramsay's prophet may have a new proverb, that "a bird in the bush is worth two in the hand." [1½ pages.]

131. ——— to ———. I never suspected love between you, but for her husband the advice was good, for jealousy lives not on truth but probabilities. Sir Francis Crew's [name erased,] moral armour is betwixt rashness and fear. Will Udall has a place in the Privy Chamber. Private affairs. [1½ pages.]

132. Elizabeth, Countess of Ormond and Ossory, to Mr. Channon, a priest in the church. My woman Everard, your ghostly child, says some wonder how she comes by her clothes and lives so well. I wonder they should, for I can maintain her, without any sinister ways taken by her ; but as my servants should not be suspected by you, I tell you that she has been with me 10 years, and is of honest carriage. I entertain no servant without allowing them what is fit for my service ; whosoever censures her might spend his time more religiously. She thanks you for telling her. Pray show this letter the next time you hear her spoken of. [1 page. See Domestic Calendar, March 26, 1622.]

134. Statement addressed to the Earl of Dorset, that Mr. Sprigg was executor to Mr. Ward, who devised 40*l.* for making a causeway and 200*l.* for charitable uses. 135. Complaints that in spite of a safe convoy granted to Jas. Fullerton to take letters to Scotland, Mr. Walker's servants detained him half an hour, at the Green Dragon, Bishopsgate. That Thos. Walker, postmaster, was also twice beaten and one robbed by Walker and his servants going on like commissions.

136. Information against a Dutch captain, at Mr. Borough's, Limehouse, in keeping of 'a man of Sir Hen. Palmer's, who is suspected of going out with three ships under a commission from Count Maurice, and having sold one, going with the others to Brazil to bring sugars into the Low Countries. [1 page.]

SUPPLEMENT TO UNDATED ELIZABETH.

138. Statement of Jean Dumaresq, bailiff of Jersey, and the jurats and justices. Having examined a paper shown by Hugh Perrin, Sieur de Rosell, to the Queen's Commissioners, to which they were required to reply, they find nothing general to reply to, except on the two first leaves, relating to the practices and laws of the Duchy of Normandy, to which they say:—

That they submit entirely to the laws and customs of the island, as settled by the Queen's progenitors, and recognise no authority superior to her own, and that of those appointed by her. Perrin's supposition that they should depend in anything on Normandy is false, and repugnant to the privileges of the island.

As to the calumnies uttered against them by the said Perrin, it would seem by his silence, now when he has the opportunity he desired, that he wishes to revoke them. They protest their innocence, and their regret at the conduct of Rossel. Signed by Dumaresq and six others. [1 sheet, French.]

CALENDARS OF STATE PAPERS, &c.

[IMPERIAL 8vo., cloth. Price 15s. each Volume or Part.]

As far back as the year 1800, a Committee of the House of Commons recommended that Indexes and Calendars should be made to the Public Records, and thirty-six years afterwards another Committee of the House of Commons reiterated that recommendation in more forcible words; but it was not until the incorporation of the State Paper Office with the Public Record Office that the present Master of the Rolls found himself in a position to take the necessary steps for carrying out the wishes of the House of Commons.

On 7 December 1855, he stated to the Lords of the Treasury that although “the Records, State Papers, and Documents in his charge constitute the most complete and perfect series of their kind in the civilized world,” and although “they are of the greatest value in a historical and constitutional point of view, yet they are comparatively useless to the public, from the want of proper Calendars and Indexes.”

Acting upon the recommendations of the Committees of the House of Commons above referred to, he suggested to the Lords of the Treasury that to effect the object he had in view it would be necessary for him to employ a few persons fully qualified to perform the work which he contemplated.

Their Lordships assented to the necessity of having Calendars prepared and printed, and empowered the Master of the Rolls to take such steps as might be necessary for this purpose.

The following Works have been already published under the direction of the Master of the Rolls:—

THE CHRONICLES AND MEMORIALS OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND DURING THE MIDDLE AGES.

[ROYAL 8vo., half-bound. Price 10s. each Volume or Part.]

On 25 July 1822, the House of Commons presented an address to the Crown, stating that the editions of the works of our ancient historians were inconvenient and defective; that many of their writings still remained in manuscript, and, in some cases, in a single copy only. They added, "that an uniform and convenient edition of the whole, published under His Majesty's royal sanction, would be an undertaking honourable to His Majesty's reign, and conducive to the advancement of historical and constitutional knowledge; that the House therefore humbly besought His Majesty, that He would be graciously pleased to give such directions as His Majesty, in His wisdom, might think fit, for the publication of a complete edition of the ancient historians of this realm, and assured His Majesty that whatever expense might be necessary for this purpose would be made good."

The Master of the Rolls, being very desirous that effect should be given to the resolution of the House of Commons, submitted to Her Majesty's Treasury in 1857 a plan for the publication of the ancient chronicles and memorials of the United Kingdom, and it was adopted accordingly. In selecting these works, it was considered right, in the first instance, to give preference to those of which the manuscripts were unique, or the materials of which would help to fill up blanks in English history for which no satisfactory and authentic information hitherto existed in any accessible form. One great object the Master of the Rolls had in view was to form a corpus historicum within reasonable limits, and which should be as complete as possible. In a subject of so vast a range, it was important that the historical student should be able to select such volumes as conformed with his own peculiar tastes and studies, and not be put to the expense of purchasing the whole collection; an inconvenience inseparable from any other plan than that which has been in this instance adopted.

Of the Chronicles and Memorials, the following volumes have been published. They embrace the period from the earliest time of British history down to the end of the reign of Henry VII.

1. THE CHRONICLE OF ENGLAND, by JOHN CAPGRAVE. Edited by the Rev. F. C. HINGESTON, M.A., of Exeter College, Oxford. 1858.

Capgrave was prior of Lynn, in Norfolk, and provincial of the order of the Friars Hermits of England shortly before the year 1464. His Chronicle extends from the creation of the world to the year 1417. As a record of the language spoken in Norfolk (being written in English), it is of considerable value.

2. CHRONICON MONASTERII DE ABINGDON. Vols. I. and II. Edited by the Rev. JOSEPH STEVENSON, M.A., of University College, Durham, and Vicar of Leighton Buzzard. 1858.

This Chronicle traces the history of the great Benedictine monastery of Abingdon in Berkshire, from its foundation by King Ina of Wessex, to the reign of Richard I., shortly after which period the present narrative was drawn up by an inmate of the establishment. The author had access to the title-deeds of the house; and incorporates into his history various charters of the Saxon kings, of great importance as illustrating not only the history of the locality but that of the kingdom. The work is printed for the first time.

3. LIVES OF EDWARD THE CONFESSOR. I.—La Estoire de Seint Aedward le Rei. II.—Vita Beati Edvardi Regis et Confessoris. III.—Vita Æduardi Regis qui apud Westmonasterium requiescit. Edited by HENRY RICHARDS LUARD, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1858.

The first is a poem in Norman French, containing 4,686 lines, addressed to Alianor, Queen of Henry III., and probably written in the year 1245, on the occasion of the restoration of the church of Westminster. Nothing is known of the author. The second is an anonymous poem, containing 536 lines, written between the years 1440 and 1450, by command of Henry VI., to whom it is dedicated. It does not throw any new light on the reign of Edward the Confessor, but is valuable as a specimen of the Latin poetry of the time. The third, also by an anonymous author, was apparently written for Queen Edith, between the years 1066 and 1074, during the pressure of the suffering brought on the Saxons by the Norman conquest. It notices many facts not found in other writers, and some which differ considerably from the usual accounts.

4. MONUMENTA FRANCISCANA; scilicet, I.—Thomas de Eccleston de Adventu Fratrum Minorum in Angliam. II.—Adæ de Marisco Epistolæ. III.—Registrum Fratrum Minorum Londoniæ. Edited by J. S. BREWER, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London. 1858.

This volume contains original materials for the history of the settlement of the order of Saint Francis in England, the letters of Adam de Marisco, and other papers connected with the foundation and diffusion of this great body. It has been the aim of the editor to collect whatever historical information could be found in this country, towards illustrating a period of the national history for which only scanty materials exist. None of these have been before printed.

5. FASCICULI ZIZANIORUM MAGISTRI JOHANNIS WYCLIF CUM TRITICO. Ascribed to THOMAS NETTER, of WALDEN, Provincial of the Carmelite Order in England, and Confessor to King Henry the Fifth. Edited by the Rev. W. W. SHIRLEY, M.A., Tutor and late Fellow of Wadham College, Oxford. 1858.

This work derives its principal value from being the only contemporaneous account of the rise of the Lollards. When written, the disputes of the school-men had been extended to the field of theology and they appear both in the writings of Wycliff and in those of his adversaries. Wycliff's little bundles of tares are not less metaphysical than theological, and the conflict between Nominalists and Realists rages side by side with the conflict between the different interpreters of Scripture. The work gives a good idea of the controversies at the end of the 14th and the beginning of the 15th centuries.

6. THE BUIK OF THE CRONICLIS OF SCOTLAND ; or, A Metrical Version of the History of Hector Boece ; by WILLIAM STEWART. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by W. B. TURNBULL, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law. 1858.

This is a metrical translation of a Latin Prose Chronicle, and was written in the first half of the 16th century. The narrative begins with the earliest legends, and ends with the death of James I. of Scotland, and the "evil ending of the traitors that slew him." Strict accuracy of statement is not to be looked for in such a work as this ; but the stories of the colonization of Spain, Ireland, and Scotland are interesting if not true ; and the chronicle is valuable as a reflection of the manners, sentiments, and character of the age in which it was composed. The peculiarities of the Scottish dialect are well illustrated in this metrical version, and the student of language will find ample materials for comparison with the English dialects of the same period, and with modern lowland Scotch.

7. JOHANNIS CAPGRAVE LIBER DE ILLUSTRIBUS HENRICIS. Edited by the Rev. F. C. HINGESTON, M.A., of Exeter College, Oxford. 1858.

This work is dedicated to Henry VI. of England, who appears to have been, in the author's estimation, the greatest of all the Henries. It is divided into three distinct parts, each having its own separate dedication. The first part relates only to the history of the Empire, and extends from the election of Henry I., the Fowler, to the end of the reign of the Emperor Henry VI. The second part is devoted to English history, and extends from the accession of Henry I. in the year 1100, to the year 1446, which was the twenty-fourth year of the reign of King Henry VI. The third part contains the lives of illustrious men who have borne the name of Henry in various parts of the world.

Capgrave was born in 1393, in the reign of Richard II., and lived during the Wars of the Roses, for the history of which period his work is of some value.

8. HISTORIA MONASTERII S. AUGUSTINI CANTUARIENSIS, by THOMAS OF ELMHAM, formerly Monk and Treasurer of that Foundation. Edited by CHARLES HARDWICK, M.A., Fellow of St. Catharine's Hall, and Christian Advocate in the University of Cambridge. 1858.

This history extends from the arrival of St. Augustine in Kent until 1191. Prefixed is a chronology as far as 1418, which shows in outline what was to have been the character of the work when completed. The only copy known is in the possession of Trinity Hall, Cambridge. The author was connected with Norfolk, and most probably with Elmham, whence he derived his name.

9. EULOGIUM (HISTORIARUM SIVE TEMPORIS) : Chronicon ab Orbe condito usque ad Annum Domini 1366 ; a Monacho quodam Malmesbiriensi exaratum. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by F. S. HAYDON, Esq., B.A. 1858-1863.

This is a Latin Chronicle extending from the Creation to the latter part of the reign of Edward III., and written by a monk of the Abbey of Malmesbury, in Wiltshire, about the year 1367. A continuation, carrying the history of England down to the year 1413, was added in the former half of the fifteenth century by an author whose name is not known. The original Chronicle is divided into five books, and contains a history of the world generally, but more especially of England to the year 1366. The continuation extends the history down to the coronation of Henry V. The Eulogium itself is chiefly valuable as containing a history, by a contemporary, of the period between 1356 and 1366. The notices of events appear to have been written very soon after their occurrence. Among other interesting matter, the Chronicle contains a diary of the Poitiers campaign, evidently furnished by some person who accompanied the army of the Black Prince. The continuation of the Chronicle is also the work of a contemporary, and gives a very interesting account of the reigns of Richard II. and Henry IV. It is believed to be the earliest authority for the statement that the latter monarch died in the Jerusalem Chamber at Westminster.

10. MEMORIALS OF HENRY THE SEVENTH: Bernardi Andreae Tholosatis Vita Regis Henrici Septimi; necnon alia quædam ad eundem Regem spectantia. Edited by JAMES GAIRDNER, Esq. 1858.

The contents of this volume are—(1) a life of Henry VII., by his poet laureate and historiographer, Bernard André, of Toulouse, with some compositions in verse, of which he is supposed to have been the author; (2) the journals of Roger Machado during certain embassies on which he was sent by Henry VII. to Spain and Brittany, the first of which had reference to the marriage of the King's son, Arthur, with Catharine of Arragon; (3) two curious reports by envoys sent to Spain in the year 1505 touching the succession to the Crown of Castile, and a project of marriage between Henry VII. and the Queen of Naples; and (4) an account of Philip of Castile's reception in England in 1506. Other documents of interest in connexion with the period are given in an appendix.

11. MEMORIALS OF HENRY THE FIFTH. I.—Vita Henrici Quinti, Roberto Redmanno auctore. II.—Versus Rhythmici in laudem Regis Henrici Quinti. III.—Elmhami Liber Metricus de Henrico V. Edited by CHARLES A. COLE, Esq. 1858.

This volume contains three treatises which more or less illustrate the history of the reign of Henry V., viz.: A Life by Robert Redman; a Metrical Chronicle by Thomas Elmham, prior of Lenton, a contemporary author; Versus Rhythmici, written apparently by a monk of Westminster Abbey, who was also a contemporary of Henry V. These works are printed for the first time.

12. MUNIMENTA GILDHALLÆ LONDONIENSIS; Liber Albus, Liber Customarum, et Liber Horn, in archivis Gildhallæ asservati. Vol. I., Liber Albus. Vol. II. (in Two Parts), Liber Customarum. Vol. III., Translation of the Anglo-Norman Passages in Liber Albus, Glossaries, Appendices, and Index. Edited by HENRY THOMAS RILEY, Esq., M.A., Barrister-at-Law. 1859–1862.

The manuscript of the Liber Albus, compiled by John Carpenter, Common Clerk of the City of London in the year 1419, a large folio volume, is preserved in the Record Room of the City of London. It gives an account of the laws, regulations, and institutions of that City in the twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, and early part of the fifteenth centuries.

The Liber Customarum was compiled probably by various hands in the early part of the fourteenth century during the reign of Edward II. The manuscript, a folio volume, is also preserved in the Record Room of the City of London, though some portion in its original state, borrowed from the City in the reign of Queen Elizabeth and never returned, forms part of the Cottonian MS. Claudius D. II. in the British Museum. It also gives an account of the laws, regulations, and institutions of the City of London in the twelfth, thirteenth, and early part of the fourteenth centuries.

13. CHRONICA JOHANNIS DE OXENEDES. Edited by SIR HENRY ELLIS, K.H. 1859.

Although this Chronicle tells of the arrival of Hengist and Horsa in England in the year 449, yet it substantially begins with the reign of King Alfred, and comes down to the year 1292, where it ends abruptly. The history is particularly valuable for notices of events in the eastern portions of the kingdom, which are not to be elsewhere obtained, and some curious facts are mentioned relative to the floods in that part of England, which are confirmed in the Friesland Chronicle of Anthony Heinrich, pastor of the Island of Mohr.

14. A COLLECTION OF POLITICAL POEMS AND SONGS RELATING TO ENGLISH HISTORY, FROM THE ACCESSION OF EDWARD III. TO THE REIGN OF HENRY VIII. Vols. I. and II. Edited by THOMAS WRIGHT, Esq., M.A. 1859-1861.

These Poems are perhaps the most interesting of all the historical writings of the period, though they cannot be relied on for accuracy of statement. They are various in character; some are upon religious subjects, some may be called satires, and some give no more than a court scandal; but as a whole they present a very fair picture of society, and of the relations of the different classes to one another. The period comprised is in itself interesting, and brings us, through the decline of the feudal system, to the beginning of our modern history. The songs in old English are of considerable value to the philologist.

15. The "OPUS TERTIUM," "OPUS MINUS," &c., of ROGER BACON. Edited by J. S. BREWER, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London. 1859.

This is the celebrated treatise—never before printed—so frequently referred to by the great philosopher in his works. It contains the fullest details we possess of the life and labours of Roger Bacon: also a fragment by the same author, supposed to be unique, the "Compendium Studii Theologie."

16. BARTHOLOMÆI DE COTTON, MONACHI NORWICENSIS, HISTORIA ANGLICANA; 449-1298: necnon ejusdem Liber de Archiepiscopis et Episcopis Angliæ. Edited by HENRY RICHARDS LUARD, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1859.

The author, a monk of Norwich, has here given us a Chronicle of England from the arrival of the Saxons in 449 to the year 1298, in or about which year it appears that he died. The latter portion of this history (the whole of the reign of Edward I. more especially) is of great value, as the writer was contemporary with the events which he records. An Appendix contains several illustrative documents connected with the previous narrative.

17. BRUT Y TYWYSOGION; OR, The Chronicle of the Princes of Wales. Edited by the Rev. JOHN WILLIAMS AB ITHEL, M.A. 1860.

This work, also known as "The Chronicle of the Princes of Wales," has been attributed to Caradoc of Llancarvan, who flourished about the middle of the twelfth century. It is written in the ancient Welsh language, begins with the abdication and death of Caedwala at Rome, in the year 681, and continues the history down to the subjugation of Wales by Edward I., about the year 1282.

18. A COLLECTION OF ROYAL AND HISTORICAL LETTERS DURING THE REIGN OF HENRY IV. 1399-1404. Edited by the Rev. F. C. HINGESTON, M.A., of Exeter College, Oxford. 1860.

This volume, like all the others in the series containing a miscellaneous selection of letters, is valuable on account of the light it throws upon biographical history, and the familiar view it presents of characters, manners, and events. The period requires much elucidation; to which it will materially contribute.

19. THE REPRESSOR OF OVER MUCH BLAMING OF THE CLERGY. By REGINALD PECOCK, sometime Bishop of Chichester. Vols. I. and II. Edited by CHURCHILL BABINGTON, B.D., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. 1860.

The "Repressor" may be considered the earliest piece of good theological disquisition of which our English prose literature can boast. The author was born about the end of the fourteenth century, consecrated Bishop of St. Asaph in the year 1444, and translated to the see of Chichester in 1450. While Bishop of St. Asaph, he zealously defended his brother prelates from the attacks of those who censured the bishops for their neglect of duty. He maintained that it was no part of a bishop's functions to appear in the pulpit, and that his time might be more profitably spent, and his dignity better maintained, in the performance of works of a higher character. Among those who thought differently were the Lollards, and against their general doctrines the "Repressor" is directed. Pecock took up a position midway between that of the Roman Church and that of the modern Anglican Church; but his work is interesting chiefly because it gives a full account of the views of the Lollards and of the arguments by which they were supported, and because it assists us to ascertain the state of feeling which ultimately led to the Reformation. Apart from religious matters, the light thrown upon contemporaneous history is very small, but the "Repressor" has great value for the philologist, as it tells us what were the characteristics of the language in use among the cultivated Englishmen of the fifteenth century. Pecock, though an opponent of the Lollards, showed a certain spirit of toleration, for which he received, towards the end of his life, the usual mediæval reward—persecution.

20. ANNALES CAMBRIÆ. Edited by the Rev. JOHN WILLIAMS AB ITHEL, M.A. 1860.

These annals, which are in Latin, commence in the year 447, and come down to the year 1288. The earlier portion appears to be taken from an Irish Chronicle, which was also used by Tigernach, and by the compiler of the Annals of Ulster. During its first century it contains scarcely anything relating to Britain, the earliest direct concurrence with English history is relative to the mission of Augustine. Its notices throughout though brief, are valuable. The annals were probably written at St. Davids, by Blegewryd, Archdeacon of Llandaff, the most learned man in his day in all Cymru.

21. THE WORKS OF GIRALDUS CAMBRENSIS. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by J. S. BREWER, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London. Vols. V. and VI. Edited by the Rev. JAMES F. DIMOCK, M.A., Rector of Barnburgh, Yorkshire. 1861–1868.

The first three volumes contain the historical works of Gerald du Barry, who lived in the reigns of Henry II., Richard I., and John, and attempted to re-establish the independence of Wales by restoring the see of St. Davids to its ancient primacy. His works are of a very miscellaneous nature, both in prose and verse, and are remarkable chiefly for the racy and original anecdotes which they contain relating to contemporaries. He is the only Welsh writer of any importance who has contributed so much to the mediæval literature of this country, or assumed, in consequence of his nationality, so free and independent a tone. His frequent travels in Italy, in France, in Ireland, and in Wales, gave him opportunities for observation which did not generally fall to the lot of mediæval writers in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, and of these observations Giraldus has made due use. Only extracts from these treatises have been printed before, and almost all of them are taken from unique manuscripts.

The Topographia Hibernica (in Vol. V.) is the result of Giraldus' two visits to Ireland. The first in the year 1183, the second in 1185–6, when he accompanied Prince John into that country. Curious as this treatise is, Mr. Dimock is of opinion that it ought not to be accepted as sober truthful history, for Giraldus himself states that truth was not his main object, and that he compiled the work for the purpose of sounding the praises of Henry the Second. Elsewhere, however, he declares that he had stated nothing in the Topographia of the truth of which he was not well assured, either by his own eyesight or by the testimony, with all diligence elicited, of the most trustworthy and authentic men in the country; that though he did not put just the same full faith in their reports as in what he had himself seen, yet, as they only related what they had themselves seen, he could not but believe such credible witnesses. A very interesting portion of this treatise is devoted to the animals of Ireland. It shows that he was a very accurate and acute observer, and his descriptions are given in a way that a scientific naturalist of the present day could hardly improve upon. The Expugnatio Hibernica was written about the year 1188, and may be regarded rather as a great epic than a sober relation of acts occurring in his own days. No one can peruse it without coming to the conclusion that it is rather a poetical fiction than a prosaic truthful history.

Vol. VI. contains the Itinerarium Cambriæ et Descriptio Cambriæ.

22. LETTERS AND PAPERS ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE WARS OF THE ENGLISH IN FRANCE DURING THE REIGN OF HENRY THE SIXTH, KING OF ENGLAND. Vol. I., and Vol. II. (in Two Parts). Edited by the Rev. JOSEPH STEVENSON, M.A., of University College, Durham, and Vicar of Leighton Buzzard. 1861-1864.

The letters and papers contained in these volumes are derived chiefly from originals or contemporary copies extant in the Bibliothèque Impériale, and the Depôt des Archives, in Paris. They illustrate the line of policy adopted by John Duke of Bedford and his successors during their government of Normandy, and such other provinces of France as had been acquired by Henry V. We may here trace, step by step, the gradual declension of the English power, until we are prepared to read of its final overthrow.

23. THE ANGLO-SAXON CHRONICLE, ACCORDING TO THE SEVERAL ORIGINAL AUTHORITIES. Vol. I., Original Texts. Vol. II., Translation. Edited and translated by BENJAMIN THORPE, Esq., Member of the Royal Academy of Sciences at Munich, and of the Society of Netherlandish Literature at Leyden. 1861.

This Chronicle, extending from the earliest history of Britain to the year 1154, is justly the boast of England; for no other nation can produce any history, written in its own vernacular, at all approaching it, either in antiquity, truthfulness, or extent, the historical books of the Bible alone excepted. There are at present six independent manuscripts of the Saxon Chronicle, ending in different years, and written in different parts of the country. In this edition, the text of each manuscript is printed in columns on the same page, so that the student may see at a glance the various changes which occur in orthography, whether arising from locality or age.

24. LETTERS AND PAPERS ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE REIGNS OF RICHARD III. AND HENRY VII. Vols. I. and II. Edited by JAMES GAIRDNER, Esq. 1861-1863.

The Papers are derived from MSS. in the Public Record Office, the British Museum, and other repositories. The period to which they refer is unusually destitute of chronicles and other sources of historical information, so that the light obtained from these documents is of special importance. The principal contents of the volumes are some diplomatic Papers of Richard III.; correspondence between Henry VII. and Ferdinand and Isabella of Spain; documents relating to Edmund de la Pole, Earl of Suffolk; and a portion of the correspondence of James IV. of Scotland.

25. LETTERS OF BISHOP GROSSETESTE, illustrative of the Social Condition of his Time. Edited by HENRY RICHARDS LUARD, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1861.

The Letters of Robert Grosseteste (131 in number) are here collected from various sources, and a large portion of them is printed for the first time. They range in date from about 1210 to 1253, and relate to various matters connected not only with the political history of England during the reign of Henry III., but with its ecclesiastical condition. They refer especially to the diocese of Lincoln, of which Grosseteste was bishop.

26. DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE OF MANUSCRIPTS RELATING TO THE HISTORY OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND. Vol. I. (in Two Parts); Anterior to the Norman Invasion. Vol. II.; 1066-1200. Vol. III.; 1200-1327. By Sir THOMAS DUFFUS HARDY, D.C.L., Deputy Keeper of the Public Records. 1862-1871.

The object of this work is to publish notices of all known sources of British history, both printed and unprinted, in one continued sequence. The materials, when historical (as distinguished from biographical), are arranged under the year in which the latest event is recorded in the chronicle or history, and not under the period in which its author, real or supposed, flourished. Biographies are enumerated under the year in which the person commemorated died, and not under the year in which the life was written. This arrangement has two advantages; the materials for any given period may be seen at a glance; and if the reader knows the time when an author wrote, and the number of years that had elapsed between the date of the events and the time the writer flourished, he will generally be enabled to form a fair estimate of the comparative value of the narrative itself. A brief analysis of each work has been added when deserving it, in which the original portions are distinguished from those which are mere compilations. When possible, the sources are indicated from which such compilations have been derived. A biographical sketch of the author of each piece has been added, and a brief notice has also been given of such British authors as have written on historical subjects.

27. ROYAL AND OTHER HISTORICAL LETTERS ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE REIGN OF HENRY III. Vol. I., 1216-1235. Vol. II., 1236-1272. Selected and edited by the Rev. W. W. SHIRLEY, D.D., Regius Professor in Ecclesiastical History, and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford. 1862-1866.

The letters contained in these volumes are derived chiefly from the ancient correspondence formerly in the Tower of London, and now in the Public Record Office. They illustrate the political history of England during the growth of its liberties, and throw considerable light upon the personal history of Simon de Montfort. The affairs of France form the subject of many of them, especially in regard to the province of Gascony. The entire collection consists of nearly 700 documents, the greater portion of which is printed for the first time.

28. CHRONICA MONASTERII S. ALBANI.—1. THOMÆ WALSHINGHAM HISTORIA ANGLICANA; Vol. I., 1272-1381; Vol. II., 1381-1422. 2. WILLELMI RISHANGER CHRONICA ET ANNALES, 1259-1307. 3. JOHANNIS DE TROKELowe ET HENRICI DE BLANEFORDE CHRONICA ET ANNALES, 1259-1296; 1307-1324; 1392-1406. 4. GESTA ABBATUM MONASTERII S. ALBANI, A THOMA WALSHINGHAM, REGNANTE RICARDO SECUNDO, EJUSDEM ECCLESIE PRÆCENTORE, COMPILATA; Vol. I., 793-1290; Vol. II., 1290-1349; Vol. III., 1349-1411. 5. JOHANNIS AMUNDESHAM, MONACHI MONASTERII S. ALBANI, UT VIDETUR, ANNALES; Vols. I. and II. 6. REGISTRA QUORUNDAM ABBATUM MONASTERII S. ALBANI, QUI SÆCULO XV^{MO} FLORUERE; Vol. I., REGISTRUM ABBATIS JOHANNIS WHETHAMSTEDE, ABBATIS MONASTERII SANCTI ALBANI, ITERUM SUSCEPTÆ; ROBERTO BLAKENEY, CAPELLANO, QUONDAM ASCRIPTUM. Edited by HENRY THOMAS RILEY, Esq., M.A., Cambridge and Oxford; and of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 1863-1872.

In the first two volumes is a history of England, from the death of Henry III. to the death of Henry V., written by Thomas Walsingham, Precentor of St. Albans and prior of the cell of Wymundham, belonging to that abbey. It is printed from MS. VII. in the Arundel Collection in the College of Arms, London, a manuscript of the fifteenth century, collated with MS. 13 E. IX. in the King's Library in the British Museum, and MS. VII. in the Parker Collection of Manuscripts at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge.

In the third volume is a Chronicle of English History, attributed to William Rishanger, monk of Saint Albans, who lived in the reign of Edward I., printed from the Cottonian Manuscript, Faustina B. IX. (of the fourteenth century) in the British Museum, collated with MS. 14 C. VII. (fols. 219-231) in the King's Library, British Museum, and the Cottonian Manuscript, Claudius E. III., fols. 306-331: Also an account of transactions attending the award of the kingdom of Scotland to John Balliol by Edward I., 1291-1292, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI., attributed to William Rishanger above mentioned, but on no sufficient ground: A short Chronicle of English History, from 1292 to 1300, by an unknown hand, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI.:

A short Chronicle from 1297 to 1307, Willelmi Rishanger Gesta Edwardi Primi Regis Angliæ, from MS. 14 C. I. in the Royal Library, and MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI., with an addition of Annales Regum Angliæ, probably by the same hand: A fragment of a Chronicle of English History, 1299, 1300, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI.: A fragment of a Chronicle of English History, 1295 to 1300, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI.: and a fragment of a Chronicle of English History, 1285 to 1307, from MS. 14 C. I. in the Royal Library.

In the fourth volume is a Chronicle of English History, by an anonymous writer, 1259 to 1296, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI.: Annals of Edward II., 1307 to 1323, by John de Trokelowe a monk of St. Albans, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI.: A continuation of Trokelowe's Annals, 1323, 1324, by Henricus de Blaneforde, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI.: A full Chronicle of English History, by an anonymous writer of St. Albans, 1392 to 1406, from MS. VII. in the Library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge; and an account of the benefactors of St. Albans, written in the early part of the fifteenth century, from MS. VI. in the same Library.

The fifth, sixth, and seventh volumes contain a history of the Abbots of St. Albans, and of the fortunes and vicissitudes of the house, from 793 to 1411, mainly compiled by Thomas Walsingham, Precentor of the Abbey in the reign of Richard II.; from MS. Cotton. Claudius E. IV., in the British Museum; with a Continuation, on the closing pages of the Parker MS. No. VII., in the Library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge.

The eighth and ninth volumes, in continuation of the Annals, contain a Chronicle, probably written by John Amundesham, a monk of St. Albans.

The tenth volume relates especially to the acts and proceedings of Abbot Whethamstede, and may be considered as a memorial of the chief historical and domestic events occurring during the first ten years of his second abbacy. The Register was in all probability compiled between 1465 and 1476.

29. CHRONICON ABBATLÆ EVESHAMENSIS, AUCTORIBUS DOMINICO PRIORE EVESHAMLÆ ET THOMA DE MARLEBERGE ABBATE, A FUNDATIONE AD ANNUM 1213, UNA CUM CONTINUATIONE AD ANNUM 1418. Edited by the Rev. W. D. MACRAY, M.A., Bodleian Library, Oxford. 1863.

The Chronicle of Evesham illustrates the history of that important monastery from its foundation by Egwin, about 690, to the year 1418. Its chief feature is an autobiography, which makes us acquainted with the inner daily life of a great abbey, such as but rarely has been recorded. Interspersed are many notices of general, personal, and local history which will be read with much interest. This work exists in a single MS., and is for the first time printed.

30. RICARDI DE CIRENCESTRIA SPECULUM HISTORIALE DE GESTIS REGUM ANGLIÆ. Vol. I., 447-871. Vol. II., 872-1066. Edited by JOHN E. B. MAYOR, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. 1863-1869.

The compiler, Richard of Cirencester, was a monk of Westminster, 1355-1400. In 1391 he obtained a licence to make a pilgrimage to Rome. His history, in four books, extends from 447 to 1066. He announces his intention of continuing it, but there is no evidence that he completed any more. This chronicle gives many charters in favour of Westminster Abbey, and a very full account of the lives and miracles of the saints, especially of Edward the Confessor, whose reign occupies the fourth book. A treatise on the Coronation, by William of Sudbury, a monk of Westminster, fills book iii. c. 3. It was on this author that C. J. Bertram fathered his forgery, De Situ Britanniæ, in 1747.

31. YEAR BOOKS OF THE REIGN OF EDWARD THE FIRST. Years 20-21, 30-31, and 32-33. Edited and translated by ALFRED JOHN HORWOOD, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 1863-1866.

The volumes known as the "Year Books" contain reports in Norman-French of cases argued and decided in the Courts of Common Law. They may be considered to a great extent as the "lex non scripta" of England, and have been held in the highest veneration by the ancient sages of the law, and were received by them as the repositories of the first recorded judgments and dicta of the great legal luminaries of past ages. They are also worthy of the attention of the general reader on account of the historical information and the notices of public and private persons which they contain, as well as the light which they throw on ancient manners and customs.

32. NARRATIVES OF THE EXPULSION OF THE ENGLISH FROM NORMANDY, 1449-1450.—Robertus Blondelli de Reductione Normanniæ: Le Recouvrement de Normendie, par Berry, Hérault du Roy: Conférences between the Ambassadors of France and England. Edited, from MSS. in the Imperial Library at Paris, by the Rev. JOSEPH STEVENSON, M.A., of University College, Durham. 1863.

This volume contains the narrative of an eye-witness who details with considerable power and minuteness the circumstances which attended the final expulsion of the English from Normandy in the year 1450. The history commences with the infringement of the truce by the capture of Fougères, and ends with the battle of Formigny and the embarkation of the Duke of Somerset. The whole period embraced is less than two years.

33. HISTORIA ET CARTULARIUM MONASTERII S. PETRI GLOUCESTRIÆ. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by W. H. HART, Esq., F.S.A., Membre correspondant de la Société des Antiquaires de Normandie. 1863-1867.

This work consists of two parts, the History and the Cartulary of the Monastery of St. Peter, Gloucester. The history furnishes an account of the monastery from its foundation, in the year 681, to the early part of the reign of Richard II., together with a calendar of donations and benefactions. It treats principally of the affairs of the monastery, but occasionally matters of general history are introduced. Its authorship has generally been assigned to Walter Froucester, the twentieth abbot, but without any foundation.

34. ALEXANDRI NECKAM DE NATURIS RERUM LIBRI DUO; with NECKAM'S POEM, DE LAUDIBUS DIVINÆ SAPIENTIÆ. Edited by THOMAS WRIGHT, Esq., M.A. 1863.

Neckam was a man who devoted himself to science, such as it was in the twelfth century. In the "De Naturis Rerum" are to be found what may be called the rudiments of many sciences mixed up with much error and ignorance. Neckam was not thought infallible, even by his contemporaries, for Roger Bacon remarks of him, "this Alexander in many things wrote what was true and useful; but he neither can nor ought by just title to be reckoned among authorities." Neckam, however, had sufficient independence of thought to differ from some of the schoolmen who in his time considered themselves the only judges of literature. He had his own views in morals, and in giving us a glimpse of them, as well as of his other opinions, he throws much light upon the manners, customs, and general tone of thought prevalent in the twelfth century. The poem entitled "De Laudibus Divinæ Sapientiæ" appears to be a metrical paraphrase or abridgment of the "De Naturis Rerum." It is written in the elegiac metre; and though there are many lines which violate classical rules, it is, as a whole, above the ordinary standard of mediæval Latin.

35. LEECHDOMS, WORTCUNNING, AND STARCRAFT OF EARLY ENGLAND; being a Collection of Documents illustrating the History of Science in this Country before the Norman Conquest. Vols. I., II., and III. Collected and edited by the Rev. T. OSWALD COCKAYNE, M.A., of St. John's College, Cambridge. 1864-1866.

This work illustrates not only the history of science, but the history of superstition. In addition to the information bearing directly upon the medical skill and medical faith of the times, there are many passages which incidentally throw light upon the general mode of life and ordinary diet. The volumes are interesting not only in their scientific, but also in their social aspect. The manuscripts from which they have been printed are valuable to the Anglo-Saxon scholar for the illustrations they afford of Anglo-Saxon orthography.

36. ANNALES MONASTICI. Vol. I. :—Annales de Margan, 1066–1232 ; Annales de Theokesberia, 1066–1263 ; Annales de Burton, 1004–1263. Vol. II. :—Annales Monasterii de Wintonia, 519–1277 ; Annales Monasterii de Waverleia, 1–1291. Vol. III. :—Annales Prioratus de Dunstaplia, 1–1297 ; Annales Monasterii de Bermundeseia, 1042–1432. Vol. IV. :—Annales Monasterii de Oseneia, 1016–1347 ; Chronicon vulgo dictum Chronicon Thomæ Wykes, 1066–1289 ; Annales Prioratus de Wigornia, 1–1377. Vol. V. :—Index and Glossary. Edited by HENRY RICHARDS LUARD, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, and Registry of the University, Cambridge. 1864–1869.

The present collection of Monastic Annals embraces all the more important chronicles compiled in religious houses in England during the thirteenth century. These distinct works are ten in number. The extreme period which they embrace ranges from the year 1 to 1432, although they refer more especially to the reigns of John, Henry III., and Edward I. Some of these narratives have already appeared in print, but others are printed for the first time.

37. MAGNA VITA S. HUGONIS EPISCOPI LINCOLNIENSIS. From Manuscripts in the Bodleian Library, Oxford, and the Imperial Library, Paris. Edited by the Rev. JAMES F. DIMOCK, M.A., Rector of Barnburgh, Yorkshire. 1864.

This work contains a number of very curious and interesting incidents, and, being the work of a contemporary, is very valuable, not only as a truthful biography of a celebrated ecclesiastic, but as the work of a man, who, from personal knowledge, gives notices of passing events, as well as of individuals who were then taking active part in public affairs. The author, in all probability, was Adam Abbot of Evesham. He was domestic chaplain and private confessor of Bishop Hugh, and in these capacities was admitted to the closest intimacy. Bishop Hugh was Prior of Witham for 11 years before he became Bishop of Lincoln. His consecration took place on the 21st September 1186 ; he died on the 16th of November 1200 ; and was canonized in 1220.

38. CHRONICLES AND MEMORIALS OF THE REIGN OF RICHARD THE FIRST. Vol. I. :—ITINERARIUM PEREGRINORUM ET GESTA REGIS RICARDI. Vol. II. :—EPISTOLÆ CANTUARIENSES ; the Letters of the Prior and Convent of Christ Church, Canterbury ; 1187 to 1199. Edited by WILLIAM STUBBS, M.A., Vicar of Navestock, Essex, and Lambeth Librarian. 1864–1865.

The authorship of the Chronicle in Vol. I., hitherto ascribed to Geoffrey Vinesauf, is now more correctly ascribed to Richard, Canon of the Holy Trinity of London. The narrative extends from 1187 to 1199 ; but its chief interest consists in the minute and authentic narrative which it furnishes of the exploits of Richard I., from his departure from England in December 1189 to his death in 1199. The author states in his prologue that he was an eye-witness of much that he records ; and various incidental circumstances which occur in the course of the narrative confirm this assertion.

The letters in Vol. II., written between 1187 and 1199, are of value as furnishing authentic materials for the history of the ecclesiastical condition of England during the reign of Richard I. They had their origin in a dispute which arose from the attempts of Baldwin and Hubert, archbishops of Canterbury, to found a college of secular canons, a project which gave great umbrage to the monks of Canterbury, who saw in it a design to supplant them in their function of metropolitan chapter. These letters are printed, for the first time, from a MS. belonging to the archiepiscopal library at Lambeth.

39. RECUEIL DES CRONIQUES ET ANCHIENNES ISTORIES DE LA GRANT BRETAGNE A PRESENT NOMME ENGLETERRE, par JEHAN DE WAURIN. Vol. I.

Albina to 688. Vol. II., 1399-1422. Edited by WILLIAM HARDY, Esq., F.S.A. 1864-1868.

40. A COLLECTION OF THE CHRONICLES AND ANCIENT HISTORIES OF GREAT BRITAIN, NOW CALLED ENGLAND, by JOHN DE WAVRIN. Albina to 688. (Translation of the preceding Vol. I.) Edited and translated by WILLIAM HARDY, Esq., F.S.A. 1864.

This curious chronicle extends from the fabulous period of history down to the return of Edward IV. to England in the year 1471, after the second deposition of Henry VI. The manuscript from which the text of the work is taken is preserved in the Imperial Library at Paris, and is believed to be the only complete and nearly contemporary copy in existence. The work, as originally bound, was comprised in six volumes, since rebound in morocco in 12 volumes, folio maximo, vellum, and is illustrated with exquisite miniatures, vignettes, and initial letters. It was written towards the end of the fifteenth century, having been expressly executed for Louis de Bruges, Seigneur de la Gruthuyse and Earl of Winchester, from whose cabinet it passed into the library of Louis XII. at Blois.

41. POLYCHRONICON RANULPHI HIGDEN, with Trevisa's Translation. Vols. I. and II. Edited by CHURCHILL BABINGTON, B.D., Senior Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. Vols. III. and IV. Edited by the Rev. JOSEPH RAWSON LUMBY, M.A., late Fellow of Magdalene College, Cambridge. 1865-1872.

This is one of the many mediæval chronicles which assume the character of a history of the world. It begins with the creation, and is brought down to the author's own time, the reign of Edward III. Prefixed to the historical portion, is a chapter devoted to geography, in which is given a description of every known land. To say that the Polychronicon was written in the fourteenth century is to say that it is not free from inaccuracies. It has, however, a value apart from its intrinsic merits. It enables us to form a very fair estimate of the knowledge of history and geography which well-informed readers of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries possessed, for it was then the standard work on general history.

The two English translations, which are printed with the original Latin, afford interesting illustrations of the gradual change of our language, for one was made in the fourteenth century, the other in the fifteenth. The differences between Trevisa's version and that of the unknown writer are often considerable.

42. LE LIVRE DE REIS DE BRITANNIE E LE LIVRE DE REIS DE ENGLETERE. Edited by JOHN GLOVER, M.A., Vicar of Brading, Isle of Wight, formerly Librarian of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1865.

These two treatises, though they cannot rank as independent narratives, are nevertheless valuable as careful abstracts of previous historians, especially "Le Livre de Reis de Engleterre." Some various readings are given which are interesting to the philologist as instances of semi-Saxonized French.

It is supposed that Peter of Ickham must have been the author, but no certain conclusion on that point has been arrived at.

43. CHRONICA MONASTERII DE MELSA, AB ANNO 1150 USQUE AD ANNUM 1406. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by EDWARD AUGUSTUS BOND, Esq., Assistant Keeper of the Manuscripts, and Egerton Librarian, British Museum. 1866-1868.

The Abbey of Meaux was a Cistercian house, and the work of its abbot is both curious and valuable. It is a faithful and often minute record of the establishment of a religious community, of its progress in forming an ample revenue, of its struggles to maintain its acquisitions, and of its relations to the governing institutions of the country. In addition to the private affairs of the monastery, some light is thrown upon the public events of the time, which are however kept distinct, and appear at the end of the history of each abbot's administration. The text has been printed from what is said to be the autograph of the original compiler, Thomas de Burton, the nineteenth abbot.

44. MATTHÆI PARIENSIS HISTORIA ANGLORUM, SIVE, UT VULGO DICITUR, HISTORIA MINOR. Vols. I., II., and III. 1067–1253. Edited by Sir FREDERIC MADDEN, K.H., Keeper of the Department of Manuscripts, British Museum. 1866–1869.

The exact date at which this work was written is, according to the chronicler, 1250. The history is of considerable value as an illustration of the period during which the author lived, and contains a good summary of the events which followed the Conquest. This minor chronicle is, however, based on another work (also written by Matthew Paris) giving fuller details, which has been called the "Historia Major." The chronicle here published, nevertheless, gives some information not to be found in the greater history.

45. LIBER MONASTERII DE HYDA: A CHRONICLE AND CHARTULARY OF HYDE ABBEY, WINCHESTER, 455–1023. Edited, from a Manuscript in the Library of the Earl of Macclesfield, by EDWARD EDWARDS, Esq. 1866.

The "Book of Hyde" is a compilation from much earlier sources, which are usually indicated with considerable care and precision. In many cases, however, the Hyde chronicler appears to correct, to qualify, or to amplify—either from tradition or from sources of information not now discoverable—the statements which, in substance, he adopts. He also mentions, and frequently quotes from, writers whose works are either entirely lost or at present known only by fragments.

There is to be found, in the "Book of Hyde," much information relating to the reign of King Alfred which is not known to exist elsewhere. The volume contains some curious specimens of Anglo-Saxon and Mediæval English.

46. CHRONICON SCOTORUM: A CHRONICLE OF IRISH AFFAIRS, from the EARLIEST TIMES to 1135; with a SUPPLEMENT, containing the Events from 1141 to 1150. Edited, with a Translation, by WILLIAM MAUNSELL HENNESSY, Esq., M.R.I.A. 1866.

There is, in this volume, a legendary account of the peopling of Ireland and of the adventures which befell the various heroes who are said to have been connected with Irish history. The details are, however, very meagre both for this period and for the time when history becomes more authentic. The plan adopted in the chronicle gives the appearance of an accuracy to which the earlier portions of the work cannot have any claim. The succession of events is marked, year by year, from A.M. 1599 to A.D. 1150. The principal events narrated in the later portion of the work are, the invasions of foreigners, and the wars of the Irish among themselves. The text has been printed from a MS. preserved in the library of Trinity College, Dublin, written partly in Latin, partly in Irish.

47. THE CHRONICLE OF PIERRE DE LANGTOFT, IN FRENCH VERSE, FROM THE EARLIEST PERIOD TO THE DEATH OF EDWARD I. Vols. I. and II. Edited by THOMAS WRIGHT, Esq., M.A. 1866–1868.

It is probable that Pierre de Langtoft was a canon of Bridlington, in Yorkshire, and that he lived in the reign of Edward I., and during a portion of the reign of Edward II. This chronicle is divided into three parts; in the first is an abridgment of Geoffrey of Monmouth's "Historia Britonum," in the second, a history of the Anglo-Saxon and Norman kings, down to the death of Henry III., and in the third a history of the reign of Edward I. The principal object of the work was apparently to show the justice of Edward's Scottish wars. The language is singularly corrupt, and a curious specimen of the French of Yorkshire.

48. THE WAR OF THE GAEDIHL WITH THE GALL, or, THE INVASIONS OF IRELAND BY THE DANES AND OTHER NORSEMEN. Edited, with a Translation, by JAMES HENTHORN TODD, D.D., Senior Fellow of Trinity College, and Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University, Dublin. 1867.

The work in its present form, in the editor's opinion, is a comparatively modern version of an undoubtedly ancient original. That it was compiled from contemporary materials has been proved by curious incidental evidence. It is stated in the account given of the battle of Clontarf that the full tide in Dublin Bay on the day of the battle (23 April 1014) coincided with sunrise; and that the returning tide in the evening aided considerably in the defeat of the Danes. The fact has been verified by astronomical calculations, and the inference is that the author of the chronicle, if not himself an eye-witness, must have derived his information from those who were eye-witnesses. The contents of the work are sufficiently described in its title. The story is told after the manner of the Scandinavian Sagas, with poems and fragments of poems introduced into the prose narrative.

49. GESTA REGIS HENRICI SECUNDI BENEDICTI ABBATIS. THE CHRONICLE OF THE REIGNS OF HENRY II. AND RICHARD I., 1169-1192; known under the name of BENEDICT OF PETERBOROUGH. Vols. I. and II. Edited by WILLIAM STUBBS, M.A., Regius Professor of Modern History, Oxford, and Lambeth Librarian. 1867.

This chronicle of the reigns of Henry II. and Richard I., known commonly under the name of Benedict of Peterborough, is one of the best existing specimens of a class of historical compositions of the first importance to the student.

50. MUNIMENTA ACADEMICA, OR, DOCUMENTS ILLUSTRATIVE OF ACADEMICAL LIFE AND STUDIES AT OXFORD (in Two Parts). Edited by the Rev. HENRY ANSTEY, M.A., Vicar of St. Wendron, Cornwall, and lately Vice-Principal of St. Mary Hall, Oxford. 1868.

This work will supply materials for a History of Academical Life and Studies in the University of Oxford during the 13th, 14th, and 15th centuries.

51. CHRONICA MAGISTRI ROGERI DE HOUEDENE. Vols. I., II., III., and IV. Edited by WILLIAM STUBBS, M.A., Regius Professor of Modern History, and Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford. 1868-1871.

This work has long been justly celebrated, but not thoroughly understood until Mr. Stubbs' edition. The earlier portion, extending from 732 to 1148, appears to be a copy of a compilation made in Northumbria about 1161, to which Hoveden added little. From 1148 to 1169—a very valuable portion of this work—the matter is derived from another source, to which Hoveden appears to have supplied little, and not always judiciously. From 1170 to 1192 is the portion which corresponds with the Chronicle known under the name of Benedict of Peterborough (see No. 49); but it is not a copy, being sometimes an abridgment, at others a paraphrase; occasionally the two works entirely agree; showing that both writers had access to the same materials, but dealt with them differently. From 1192 to 1201 may be said to be wholly Hoveden's work: it is extremely valuable, and an authority of the first importance.

52. WILLELMI MALMESBIRIENSIS MONACHI DE GESTIS PONTIFICUM ANGLORUM LIBRI QVINQUE. Edited, from William of Malmesbury's Autograph MS., by N. E. S. A. HAMILTON, Esq., of the Department of Manuscripts, British Museum. 1870.

William of Malmesbury's "Gesta Pontificum" is the principal foundation of English Ecclesiastical Biography, down to the year 1122. The manuscript which has been followed in this Edition is supposed by Mr. Hamilton to be the author's autograph, containing his latest additions and amendments.

53. HISTORIC AND MUNICIPAL DOCUMENTS OF IRELAND, FROM THE ARCHIVES OF THE CITY OF DUBLIN, &c. 1172-1320. Edited by JOHN T. GILBERT, Esq., F.S.A., Secretary of the Public Record Office of Ireland. 1870.

A collection of original documents, elucidating mainly the history and condition of the municipal, middle, and trading classes under or in relation with the rule of England in Ireland,—a subject hitherto in almost total obscurity. Extending over the first hundred and fifty years of the Anglo-Norman settlement, the series includes charters, municipal laws and regulations, rolls of names of citizens and members of merchant-guilds, lists of commodities with their rates, correspondence, illustrations of relations between ecclesiastics and laity; together with many documents exhibiting the state of Ireland during the presence there of the Scots under Robert and Edward Bruce.

54. THE ANNALS OF LOCH CÉ. A CHRONICLE OF IRISH AFFAIRS, FROM 1014 to 1590. Vols. I. and II. Edited, with a Translation, by WILLIAM MAUNSELL HENNESSY, Esq., M.R.I.A. 1871.

The original of this chronicle has passed under various names. The title of "Annals of Loch Cé" was given to it by Professor O'Curry, on the ground that it was transcribed for Brian Mac Dermot, an Irish chieftain, who resided on an island in Loch-Cé, in the county of Roscommon. It adds much to the materials for the civil and ecclesiastical history of Ireland; and contains many curious references to English and foreign affairs, not noticed in any other chronicle.

55. MONUMENTA JURIDICA. THE BLACK BOOK OF THE ADMIRALTY, WITH AN APPENDIX. Vol. I. Edited by Sir TRAVERS TWISS, Q.C., D.C.L., Her Majesty's Advocate-General. 1871.

This Book contains the ancient ordinances and laws relating to the navy, and was probably compiled for the use of the Lord High Admiral of England. Selden calls it the "jewel of the Admiralty Records." Prynne ascribes to the Black Book the same authority in the Admiralty as the Black and Red Books have in the Court of Exchequer, and most English writers on maritime law recognize its importance.

56. MEMORIALS OF THE REIGN OF HENRY VI. :—OFFICIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THOMAS BEKYNTON, SECRETARY TO HENRY VI., AND BISHOP OF BATH AND WELLS. Edited, from a MS. in the Archbishopal Library at Lambeth, with an Appendix of Illustrative Documents, by the Rev. GEORGE WILLIAMS, B.D., Vicar of Ringwood, late Fellow of King's College, Cambridge. Vols. I. and II. 1872.

These curious volumes, which are of a very miscellaneous character, were, in all probability, compiled under the immediate direction of Bekynton, and commenced before he had attained to the dignity of the Episcopate. They contain many of the Bishop's own letters, and several written by him in the King's name. Besides these, there are letters sent to himself while he was the Royal Secretary, as well as others addressed to the King. This work will elucidate some obscure points in the history of the nation during the first half of the fifteenth century.

57. MATTHEI PARISIENSIS, MONACHI SANCTI ALBANI, CHRONICA MAJORA. Vol. I. The Creation to A.D. 1066. Edited by HENRY RICHARDS LUARD, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College, Registrar of the University, and Vicar of Great St. Mary's, Cambridge. 1872.

This volume contains the first portion of the "Chronica Majora" of Matthew Paris, one of the most valuable and frequently consulted of all the ancient English Chronicles. It is now published for the first time. The editions by Archbishop Parker, and William Wats, severally commence at the Norman Conquest.

58. MEMORIALE FRATRIS WALTERI DE COVENTRIA.—THE HISTORICAL COLLECTIONS OF WALTER OF COVENTRY. Vol. I. Edited, from the MS. in the Library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, by WILLIAM STUBBS, M.A., Regius Professor of Modern History, and Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford. 1872.

This work, now printed in full for the first time, has long been a desideratum by Historical Scholars. The first portion, however, is not of much importance, being only a compilation from earlier writers. The part relating to the first quarter of the thirteenth century is the most valuable and interesting.

WORKS PUBLISHED IN PHOTOZINCOGRAPHY.

DOMESDAY BOOK, or the GREAT SURVEY OF ENGLAND OF WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR, 1086 ; fac-simile of the Part relating to each county, separately (with a few exceptions of double counties). Photozincographed, by Her Majesty's Command, at the Ordnance Survey Office, Southampton, Colonel SIR HENRY JAMES, R.E., F.R.S., &c., Director. 35 Parts, imperial quarto and demy quarto (1861-1863) boards. Price 4s. 6d. to 17. 1s. each Part, according to size ; or, bound in 2 Vols., 17*l.*

This important and unique survey of the greater portion of England* is the oldest and most valuable record in the national archives. It was commenced about the year 1084 and finished in 1086. Its compilation was determined upon at Gloucester by William the Conqueror, in council, in order that he might know what was due to him, in the way of tax, from his subjects, and that each at the same time might know what he had to pay. It was compiled as much for their protection as for the benefit of the sovereign. The nobility and people had been grievously distressed at the time by the king bringing over large numbers of French and Bretons, and quartering them on his subjects, "each according to the measure of his land," for the purpose of resisting the invasion of Cnut, King of Denmark, which was apprehended. The commissioners appointed to make the survey were to inquire the name of each place ; who held it in the time of King Edward the Confessor ; the present possessor ; how many hides were in the manor ; how many ploughs were in demesne ; how many homagers ; how many villeins ; how many cottars ; how many serving men ; how many free tenants ; how many tenants in soccage ; how much wood, meadow, and pasture ; the number of mills and fish-ponds ; what had been added or taken away from the place ; what was the gross value in the time of Edward the Confessor ; the present value ; and how much each free man or soc-man had, and whether any advance could be made in the value. Thus could be ascertained who held the estate in the time of King Edward ; who then held it ; its value in the time of the late king ; and its value as it stood at the formation of the survey. So minute was the survey, that the writer of the contemporary portion of the Saxon Chronicle records, with some asperity—"So very narrowly he caused it to be traced out, that there was not a single hide, nor one virgate of land, nor even, "it is shame to tell, though it seemed to him no shame to do, an ox, nor a cow, nor a swine was left, that was not set down."

Domesday Survey is in two parts or volumes. The first, in folio, contains the counties of Bedford, Berks, Bucks, Cambridge, Chester and Lancaster, Cornwall, Derby, Devon, Dorset, Gloucester, Hants, Hereford, Herts, Huntingdon, Kent, Leicester and Rutland, Lincoln, Middlesex, Northampton, Nottingham, Oxford, Salop, Somerset, Stafford, Surrey, Sussex, Warwick, Wilts, Worcester, and York. The second volume, in quarto, contains the counties of Essex, Norfolk, and Suffolk.

Domesday Book was printed verbatim et literatim during the last century, in consequence of an address of the House of Lords to King George III. in 1767. It was not, however, commenced until 1773, and was completed early in 1783. In 1860, Her Majesty's Government, with the concurrence of the Master of the Rolls, determined to apply the art of photozincography to the production of a fac-simile of Domesday Book, under the superintendence of Colonel Sir Henry James, R.E., Director of the Ordnance Survey, Southampton. The fac-simile was completed in 1863.

* For some reason left unexplained, many parts were left unsurveyed ; Northumberland, Cumberland, Westmoreland, and Durham, are not described in the survey ; nor does Lancashire appear under its proper name ; but Furness, and the northern part of Lancashire, as well as the south of Westmoreland, with a part of Cumberland, are included within the West Riding of Yorkshire. That part of Lancashire which lies between the Ribble and Mersey, and which at the time of the survey comprehended 688 manors, is joined to Cheshire. Part of Rutland is described in the counties of Northampton and Lincoln.

FAC-SIMILES of NATIONAL MANUSCRIPTS, from WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR to QUEEN ANNE, selected under the direction of the Master of the Rolls, and Photozincographed, by Command of Her Majesty, by Colonel SIR HENRY JAMES, R.E., Director of the Ordnance Survey. Price, each Part, with translations and notes, double foolscap folio, 16s.

Part I. (William the Conqueror to Henry VII.). 1865.

Part II. (Henry VIII. and Edward VI.). 1866.

Part III. (Mary and Elizabeth). 1867.

Part IV. (James I. to Anne). 1868.

The first Part extends from William the Conqueror to Henry VII., and contains autographs of the kings of England, as well as of many other illustrious personages famous in history, and some interesting charters, letters patent, and state papers. The second Part, for the reigns of Henry VIII. and Edward VI., consists principally of holograph letters and autographs of kings, princes, statesmen, and other persons of great historical interest, who lived during those reigns. The third Part contains similar documents for the reigns of Mary and Elizabeth, including a signed bill of Lady Jane Grey. The fourth Part concludes the series, and comprises a number of documents taken from the originals belonging to the Constable of the Tower of London; also several records illustrative of the Gunpowder Plot, and a woodcut containing portraits of Mary Queen of Scots and James VI., circulated by their adherents in England, 1580-3.
