ADDRESS OF THE BISHOP

1922

Brethren of the Clergy and Laity:

Again in the love and service of the Master we look one another in the face at this our annual gathering. Since our last meeting we have lost an unusual number of our Clergy by removals to other Dioceses, and have gained as many by removals to us, and by Ordination. But none of our Clergy have been called away by death, nor have we lost by death, so far as I know, any layman attending our Convention of 1921.

We are assembled in one of the new churches of the Diocese, and one of the most beautiful. It has been consecrated only within the year covered by this report. It was the noble conception of the Rector Emeritus, and owes its beauty chiefly to his fine taste and courageous enterprise, which urged him to an undertaking which to many seemed beyond the power of the congregation to accomplish. But to the present Rector and his enthusiastic supporters must be given the credit, and very great credit it is, of raising the money for completing the payment for the church, in the midst of a financial depression which would have defeated less loyal, self-sacrificing, and generous souls. To old and young, to Rector Emeritus and Rector, we offer our felicitations upon the erection and consecration of so noble and beautiful an expression of their devotion to the cause of Christ and His Church.

An interesting observation to be made in this connection, is that whereas at my Consecration as Bishop in October, 1893, Christ Church, Raleigh, was the only stone church within the limits of the present Diocese of North Carolina, there are now thirteen. I may also mention that within this same time and within the same limits fifty-five new churches have been built, and of these thirty-five are at points where before we had had no church. The building of material houses is not of itself necessarily spiritual growth or gain. Our losses during the year have been about balanced by our gains. On the whole I believe we are better supplied with clergy than are most of our Dioceses, but we are much hindered in our work for lack of an adequate supply of good men. We need at present three or four men for new work. Our work is in most parts of the Diocese undermanned. One clergyman has to do very inadequately work which would keep two or three well employed; and opportunities on all sides are not taken advantage of because we have no laborers to send into neglected parts of the field. This lack is partly supplied by the increasing zeal and activity of our laymen. Nothing in the recent experience of the Church has been more gratifying, or more full of promise for the future of our work, than the readiness of all laymen to cooperate in missionary endeavor. We have not fully developed or appreciated this source of strength and efficiency. Only here and there in the Diocese do we find a clergyman who seems to be using to its full this element of power in aggressive work. But there is a very definite limit to the sphere of the lay missionary, and the work of the Church can never be done, nor its mission accomplished, without the ministrations of those wholly given and ordained to the ministry of the Word and Sacraments. We sadly need more clergymen, and in this day of growing interest and devotion among our lay people, when men and women are showing in so many ways zeal and devotion and a generous liberality in every department of our Church activities, let me remind you, my brethren of the laity, of one duty and opportunity which, it seems to me, you not only neglect, but seem almost wholly to forget. In the first days of the Church, upon the very morrow after Pentecost, we might almost say, where the Apostles in Jerusalem needed men for the ministry, their appeal was to the laity to find and to bring forward proper candidates for holy orders: "Look ye out among you those whom we may put over this business," was the way in which the Apostles went about the work of recruiting men for service of the Church. I think we clergymen in some respects have been too willing to take upon ourselves the responsibilities of the laity; and laymen, in some respects, are willing to have it so. I sometimes think that the clergy are too ready to assume responsibilities of financial management which certainly are the special function of the laity. And in this matter of looking out for suitable men for the ministry, the whole burden is left to the clergy. If we could infuse into the consciousness of the laity a sense of their duty and responsibility in this matter, might we not see a change for the better? I am much inclined to think that here is one direction in which we might turn our endeavors. When all our people feel their responsibility in this matter, they will find out a way of discharging their duty and of sending forward their best men for the work of the ministry. No subject demands more immediate and earnest attention than this. Here lies one great field for effort.

I cannot refrain from saying that the general condition of the Diocese seems to me to be most hopeful. Our parochial and missionary clergy all seem zealous and aggressive, and both men and women throughout the Diocese seem increasingly responsive to the demands of our church work in all its departments. Though the year just passed has been one of business depression, yet that depression has certainly not affected the spirit of our people. Not even do our finances seem to show any falling off in the maintenance of our local enterprises and institutions. In the results of the Nation-wide Campaign is the only mark of failure to come up to the full measure of our financial responsibility. And I cannot help feeling that this partial failure was caused by the fact that so very large a majority of the Dioceses throughout the country seemed to have made no real effort to enter into the scheme proposed. Had all the Dioceses, or the greater part of them, entered vigorously into the Nation-wide Campaign, and raised, at least approximately, their quotas, it would not have been difficult to keep up the interest and liberality of our people. All would have felt that the whole Church was rising to a high conception of responsibility and of duty. There would have been a general feeling that we were united in lifting the Church to a higher plane, and that all were endeavoring to do their just part. But when seven or eight Dioceses alone did their full part, and perhaps half the whole number did less than one half of their just share, it became a practical hardship and injustice upon those who had paid their quotas in full. Under these circumstances we could not, with our best endeavors, hold our people up to the high standard of their first year's achievement. In the whole Church only Texas and the Virginia Dioceses paid up their quotas for 1921. But the Fourth Province still heads the list of the Provinces as paying the highest per cent of the quota of the Province as a whole, and the Diocese of North Carolina, having paid eighty-five per cent of its quota, heads the Dioceses of this Province.

Again we are called upon for a new effort to realize the ideal set before us in this Nation-wide Campaign. Again we must respond loyally, and do our part. Certainly we must all recognize how much we have already gained by what we have attempted in the past. It must be possible to make the whole Church realize the tremendous character of the issues now before the Church and the world; and every noble work nobly attempted takes us a step forward in the path towards better things for the Church and for the world. In our General Convention, to meet in Portland, Oregon, September 6th, the Church will address itself to the task of uniting all Dioceses in a Nation-wide Campaign, and whatever our leaders devise for the better doing of the Church's work, I feel sure we in North Carolina shall do our best to carry through to success.

The most important work of the Diocese is its missionary work. This, under our diocesan organization, is committed to our convocations, working under their several Archdeacons, Bishop Delany being both the Bishop and the Archdeacon of our colored missionary work. He and the Archdeacons of Ral-eight and of Charlotte, will lay before you some brief account of the condition of our diocesan missionary work.

Our institutional work will also be brought before you in the reports of the officers and administrative boards of St. Mary's School, the Thompson Orphanage, St. Augustine's School and our several Church Hospitals. These all demand our continued sympathy and support. But it is most gratifying to see how very greatly our work has developed and strengthened along all these lines. St. Mary's School was never so prosperous. The effort to raise funds for its improvement and its ultimate endowment, is still continuing, and has already produced large results, both in improving the property, and in making a fine beginning for a permanent endowment. The Thompson Orphanage has been very largely benefitted, in handsome new buildings and in greatly increased permanent income, by the loving interest of its many friends as well as by the liberal provision made by the Dioceses concerned with maintenance. Very large and expensive improvements and additions are being made to St. Peter's Hospital, Charlotte; also to the Good Samaritan Hospital in the same city. And in Raleigh during the past few months a popular subscription of over forty thousand dollars has been made for St. Agnes Hospital for Negroes in connection with St. Augustine's School. All these institutions seem, by their good work, to be making a place for themselves in the minds of the public and in the hearts of our church people, so that in a manner they are gradually providing for their own support. Certainly in our annual Conventions we feel much more confidence and much less anxiety in regard to their proper support and development.

There is no subject which commands at this time more general attention than the subject of education. Our Presiding Bishop and Council are pressing upon us our duty in this Department of our Church work. We have in the past often attempted great things, and often we have failed. At this time the very noblest of our educational projects, in all the history of our American Church, stands at the dividing of the ways, hesitating, as it were, between failure and success. And this Convention at its present session must take action which may be decisive as to which path must be trod. I will not speak of all the great hopes and noble lives which have gone to make the past and the present of the University of the South at Sewanee. Something of this you know. You know that this Diocese was concerned in its original establishment, and that it was the vision of two great North Carolina Churchmen, Bishop Polk and Bishop Otey. You know that this Convention has time and again put itself on record as recognizing its responsibility, and in effect pledging itself to do its duty by that institution. The university now calls upon us to do our recognized duty, and thereby enable it to set its foot upon the upward road to permanent security and ultimate success. Its attempt two years ago to raise a fund of one million dollars as a permanent endowment was in a great measure successful. Seven hundred thousand dollars or thereabouts, was pledged on behalf of the constituent Southern Dioceses. The General Education Board now proposes to add the sum of three hundred thousand dollars to the endowment, on condition that the Dioceses complete their full quota. They have further agreed that, if the delinquent Dioceses will assume the obligation of these unsubscribed balances, the Board will recognize their action as securing the full amount, and will thereupon make the promised donation of three hundred thousand dollars. Our unsubscribed balance is nineteen thousand dollars ($19,000). The proposition before this Convention is that we should assume the obligation of paying this sum, and thus, humanly speaking, secure the permanent establishment and the ultimate success of the noblest enterprise for Christian Education ever undertaken by our Church in its history.

There is another important enterprise to which this Convention has committed itself, and upon which I think we should in a measure concentrate our efforts at this time. We must all have been impressed by the great development of the work of our State University at Chapel Hill. It is already in my judgment, the greatest of our Southern institutions of learning, and promises a much greater development in the immediate future. The Church must be prepared to exercise its proper influence in this great intellectual centre. Our facilities for church work are wholly inadequate to the present need. Plans made twelve months ago are found already to have become useless in view of the actual situation. A committee appointed a year ago will doubtless lay before you a scheme of larger dimensions. I shall not go into details. I ask your careful attention to this subject and I believe you will give your support to the broadest and most liberal plans to meet the great duty and opportunity now before us. In a manner I may say that the first great problem presented to me in my administration of the Diocese, was the problem of St. Mary's School. We took that up bravely in the face of much doubt and some opposition, and by God's blessing upon our efforts, St. Mary's School is now what it is—the largest and most important, and most successful Church School for girls in our whole National Church. I have not many years of effective service to look forward to, and I think I should like, as I near the close of my administration, to see a great and beautiful Church, Parish House, and all needed appointments, established at Chapel Hill. As our sister Dioceses were joined with us in the establishment of St. Mary's School, so East Carolina and Asheville will doubtless respond to our action in this matter, and become sharers in the honor of making adequate provision for the worship and work of the Church at the seat of our State University.

Another matter I feel that I must mention. The report of the Diocesan Treasurer shows a new account opened by him, and the disbursements during the last half of the year 1921 of over five thousand dollars in the missionary work of the Diocese. This is derived from a most munificent trust established by a layman of this Diocese whose earnest desire was that as little publicity as possible should be given to his act. I explained to him that, as this money had to be spent and to be accounted for, it was not possible to avoid making public his most generous provision for our Diocesan work. I may add that not only does our Diocesan missionary work receive this most liberal support, but St. Mary's School, the Thompson Orphanage and our work at Chapel Hill, are generously provided for in the same munificent way, with other charitable work in the state, and similar work in the District of Asheville, and also important educational interests of a more general character. I cannot help adding that, so far as my knowledge extends, there has been hardly such another example of generous and judicious giving anywhere in the country, even in this day when the wealthy men of our country have done so much in devoting their wealth to the service of the public, as these noble benefactions of Mr. Lawrence S. Holt.

I must ask the Clergy and People of the Diocese to heed the call which comes to us from our suffering fellow Christians in the countries of Western Asia, the cradle alike of the human race and of Christianity. I know that you have not been heretofore inattentive to their cry. Many of you have been giving generously for their relief. But our Presiding Bishop and other Church authorities are anxious to arouse a more general interest and cooperation in the work of the "Near East Relief" Committee; and at their request I have appointed the Rev. Milton A. Barber, of Raleigh as the special representative in this Diocese of the Near East Relief Association.

And now only one word in conclusion. Three years ago in connection with the twenty-fifth anniversary of my Consecration as Bishop, and when I had just entered upon the seventieth year of my natural life, I asked this Convention to advise me whether the necessities or the wishes of the Diocese called for greater or better Episcopal service and supervision. The Convention very kindly assured me that they thought there existed at that time no necessity or desire for any other such services than I was able to give. I am now three years older, and having taken counsel with the Standing Committee, I feel that I ought to ask the Convention to consider whether a Bishop Coadjutor should not be elected and consecrated for the Diocese. I am assured both by my friends and by my physicians that I should in some considerable degree lessen my habitual exertion. I cannot do this without diminution of Episcopal supervision and ministration. Such diminution would, I am persuaded, be for the disadvantage of our work. I ask therefore that this Convention take into consideration the state of the Diocese, with reference to the proper supply of Episcopal service, and that they take such action as the situation may seem to demand.

JOS. BLOUNT CHESHIRE.
