

PLINY

BY AUSTIN DOBSON

Ipsâ varietate tentamus efficere, ut alia aliis, quædam fortasse omnibus placean

PLINY TO PATERNUS

NEW YORK
DODD, MEAD AND COMPANY

1898

P 11
216

18502

Copyright, 1898,
BY DODD, MEAD AND COMPANY.

TWO COPIES RECEIVED.

University Press :
JOHN WILSON AND SON, CAMBRIDGE, U. S. A.

64650 no. 4. 98

CONTENTS

CHAPTER I

Introduction	1
Chapter I	10
Chapter II	20
Chapter III	30
Chapter IV	40
Chapter V	50
Chapter VI	60
Chapter VII	70
Chapter VIII	80
Chapter IX	90
Chapter X	100
Chapter XI	110
Chapter XII	120
Chapter XIII	130
Chapter XIV	140
Chapter XV	150
Chapter XVI	160
Chapter XVII	170
Chapter XVIII	180
Chapter XIX	190
Chapter XX	200

Published by [Publisher Name]

Oliver Goldsmith.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
GOLDSMITH'S POEMS AND PLAYS	7
ANGELO'S "REMINISCENCES"	33
THE LATEST LIFE OF STEELE	57
THE AUTHOR OF "MONSIEUR TONSON"	87
BOSWELL'S PREDECESSORS AND EDITORS	109
AN ENGLISH ENGRAVER IN PARIS	144
THE "VICAR OF WAKEFIELD" AND ITS ILLUS- TRATORS	165
OLD WHITEHALL	183
LUTTRELL'S "LETTERS TO JULIA"	203
CHANGES AT CHARING CROSS	220
JOHN GAY	239
AT LEICESTER FIELDS	275
MARTEILHE'S "MEMOIRS"	306

MISCELLANIES.

GOLDSMITH'S POEMS AND PLAYS.

THIRTY years of taking-in; fifteen years of giving-out; — that, in brief, is Oliver Goldsmith's story. When, in 1758, his failure to pass at Surgeons' Hall finally threw him on letters for a living, the thirty years were finished, and the fifteen years had been begun. What was to come he knew not; but, from his bare-walled lodging in Green-Arbour-Court, he could at least look back upon a sufficiently diversified past. He had been an idle, orchard-robbing schoolboy; a tuneful but intractable sizar of Trinity; a lounging, loitering, fair-haunting, flute-playing Irish "buckeen." He had knocked at the doors of both Law and Divinity, and crossed the threshold of neither. He had set out for London and stopped at Dublin; he had started for America and arrived at Cork. He had been many things: a medical student, a strolling musician, an apothecary, a corrector of the press, an usher at a Peckham "academy." Judged by ordinary standards, he had wantonly wasted his time. And yet, as things fell out, it is doubtful whether his parti-coloured experiences were not of more service to him than any he could have obtained if his progress had been less erratic. Had he fulfilled the modest expectations of his family, he would probably have remained a simple curate in Westmeath, eking out his "forty pounds a year" by farming a field or two, migrating contentedly at the fitting season from the "blue bed to the brown," and (it may be) subsisting vaguely as a local poet upon the tradition of some youthful couplets to a pretty cousin, who had married a richer man. As it was, if he could not be said to have "seen life steadily, and seen it whole," he had, at all events, inspected it pretty closely in parts; and, at a time when he was most impressible, had preserved the impress of many things, which, in his turn, he was to re-impress upon his writings. "No man" — says one of his biographers¹ — "ever put so much of himself into his books as Goldsmith." To his last hour he was drawing upon the thoughts and reviving the memories of that "unhallowed time" when, to all appearance, he was hopelessly squandering his opportunities. To do as Goldsmith did would scarcely enable a man to write a "Vicar of Wakefield" or a "Deserted Village,"—certainly his practice cannot be preached with safety "to those that eddy round and round." But viewing his entire career, it is difficult not to see how one part seems to have been an indispensable preparation for the other, and to marvel once more (with the philosopher Square) at "the eternal Fitness of Things."

¹ Forster's Life, Bk. ii., ch. vi.

The events of Goldsmith's life have been too often narrated to need repetition, and we shall not resort to the well-worn device of repeating them in order to say so. But the progress of time, advancing some things and effacing others, lends a fresh aspect even to masterpieces; for which reason it is always possible to speak of a writer's work. In this instance we shall restrict ourselves to Goldsmith's Poems and Plays. And, with regard to both, what strikes one first is the extreme tardiness of that late blossoming upon which Johnson commented. When a man succeeds as Goldsmith succeeded, friends and critics speedily discover that he had shown signs of excellence even from his boyish years. But setting aside those half-mythical ballads for the Dublin street-singers, and some doubtful verses for Jane Contarine, there is no definite evidence that, from a doggerel couplet in his childhood to an epigram not much better than doggerel composed when he was five and twenty, he had written a line of verse of the slightest importance; and even five years later, although he refers to himself in a private letter as a "poet," it must have been solely upon the strength of the unpublished fragment of "The Traveller," which, in the interval, he had sent to his brother Henry from abroad. It is even more remarkable that—although so skilful a correspondent must have been fully sensible of his gifts—until under the pressure of circumstances he drifted into literature, the craft of letters seems never to have been his ambition. He thinks of turning lawyer, physician, clergyman,—anything but author; and when at last he engages in that profession, it is to free himself from a scholastic slavery which he seems to have always regarded with peculiar bitterness, yet to which, after a first unsatisfactory trial of what was to be his true vocation, he unhesitatingly returned. If he went back anew to the pen, it was only to enable him to escape from it more effectually, and he was prepared to go as far as Coromandel. But Literature, "toute entière à sa proie attachée," refused to relinquish him; and, although he continued to make spasmodic efforts to extricate himself from the toils, detained him to the day of his death.

If there is no evidence that he had written much when he entered upon what has been called his second period, he had not the less formed his opinions on many literary questions. Much of the matter of the "Polite Learning" is plainly manufactured ad hoc; but in its references to authorship and criticism, there is an individual note which is absent elsewhere; and when he speaks of the tyranny of publishers, the petty standards of criticism, and the forlorn and precarious existence of the hapless writer for bread, he is evidently reproducing a condition of things with which he had become familiar during his brief bondage on the "Monthly Review." As to his personal views on poetry in particular, it is easy to collect them from this and later utterances. Against blank verse he objects from the first, as suited only to the sublimest themes, — which is a polite way of shelving it altogether; while in favour of rhyme he alleges — perhaps borrowing his illustration from Montaigne — that the very restriction stimulates the fancy, as a fountain plays highest when the aperture is diminished. Blank verse, too (he asserts), imports into poetry a "disgusting solemnity of manner" which is fatal to "agreeable trifling,"—an objection intimately connected with the feeling which afterwards made him the champion on the stage of character and humour. Among the poets who were his contemporaries and immediate predecessors, his likes and dislikes were strong. He fretted at the fashion which Gray's "Elegy" set in poetry; he considered it a fine poem, but "overloaded with epithet," and he deplored the remoteness and want of emotion which distinguished the Pindaric Odes. Yet from many indications in his own writings he seems to have genuinely appreciated the work of Collins. Churchill, and Churchill's satire, he detested. With Young he had some personal acquaintance, and had evidently read his "Night Thoughts" with attention. Of the poets of the last age, he admired Dryden, Pope, and Gay, but more than any of these, if imitation is to be regarded as the surest proof of sympathy, Prior, Addison, and Swift. By his inclinations and his training, indeed, he belonged to this school. But he was in advance of it in thinking that poetry, however didactic after the fashion of his own day, should be simple in its utterance and directed at the many rather than at the few. This is what he meant when, from the critical elevation of Griffiths' back parlour, he recommended Gray to take the advice of Isocrates, and "study the people." If, with these ideas, he had been able to divest himself of the "warbling groves" and "finny deeps" of the Popesque vocabulary (of much of the more "mechanic art" of that supreme artificer he did successfully divest himself), it would have needed but little to make him a prominent pioneer of the new school which was coming with Cowper. As it is, his poetical attitude is a little that intermediate one of Longfellow's maiden, —

"Standing, with reluctant feet,
Where the brook and river meet."

Most of his minor and earlier pieces are imitative. In "A New Simile," and "The Logicians Refuted" (if that be his) Swift is his acknowledged model; in "The Double Transformation" it is Prior, modified by certain theories personal to himself. He was evidently well acquainted with collections such as the "Ménagiana," and with the French minor poets of the eighteenth century, many of which latter were among his books at his death. These he had carefully studied, probably during his continental wanderings, and from them he derives, like Prior, something of his grace and metrical buoyancy. The "Elegy on the Death of a Mad Dog," and "Madam Blaize," are both more or less constructed on the old French popular song of the hero of Pavia, Jacques de Chabannes, Seigneur de la Palice (sometimes Galisse), with, in the case of the former, a tag from an epigram by Voltaire, the original of which is in the Greek Anthology, though Voltaire simply "conveyed" his version from an anonymous French predecessor. Similarly the lively stanzas "To Iris in Bow Street," the lines to Myra, the quatrain called "A South American Ode," and that "On a Beautiful Youth struck blind with Lightning," are all confessed or unconfessed translations. If Goldsmith had lived to collect his own works, it is possible that he would have announced the source of his inspiration in these instances as well as in one or two other cases, — the epitaph on Ned Purdon, for example, — where it has been reserved to his editors to discover his obligations. On the other hand, he might have contended, with perfect justice, that whatever the source of his ideas, he had made them his own when he got them; and certainly in lilt and lightness, the lines "To Iris" are infinitely superior to those of La Monnoye on which they are based. But even a fervent admirer may admit that, dwelling as he did in this very vitreous palace of Gallic adaptation, one does not expect to find him throwing stones at Prior for borrowing from the French, or commenting solemnly in the Life of Parnell upon the heinousness of plagiarism. "It was the fashion," he says, "with the wits of the last age, to conceal the places from whence they took their hints or their subjects. A trifling acknowledgment would have made that lawful prize which may now be considered as plunder." He might judiciously have added to this latter sentence the quotation which he struck out of the second issue of the "Polite Learning," — "Haud inexpertus loquor."

Of his longer pieces, "The Traveller" was apparently suggested to him by Addison's "Letter from Italy to Lord Halifax," a poem to which, in his preliminary notes to the "Beauties of English Poesy," he gives significant praise. "There is in it," he says, "a strain of political thinking that was, at that time, new in our country." He obviously intended that "The Traveller" should be admired for the same reason; and both in that poem and its successor, "The Deserted Village," he lays stress upon the political import of his work. The one, we are told, is to illustrate the position that the happiness of the subject is independent of the goodness of the sovereign ; the other, to deplore the increase of luxury, and the miseries of depopulation. But, as a crowd of commentators have pointed out, it is hazardous for a poet to meddle with "political thinking," however much, under George the Second, it may have been needful to proclaim a serious purpose. If Goldsmith had depended solely upon the professedly didactic part of his attempt, his work would be as dead as "Freedom," or "Sympathy," or any other of Dodsley's forgotten quartos. Fortunately he did more than this. Sensibly or insensibly, he suffused his work with that philanthropy which is "not learned by the royal road of tracts and platform speeches and monthly magazines," but by personal commerce with poverty and sorrow ; and he made his appeal to that clinging love of country, of old association, of "home-bred happiness," of innocent pleasure, which, with Englishmen, is never made in vain. Employing the couplet of Pope and Johnson, he has added to his measure a suavity that belonged to neither ; but the beauty of his humanity and the tender melancholy of his wistful retrospect hold us more strongly and securely than the studious finish of his style.

"Vingt fois sur le métier remettez votre ouvrage," said the arch-critic whose name, according to Keats, the school of Pope displayed upon their "decrepit standard." Even in "The Traveller" and "The Deserted Village," there are indications of over-labour; but in a poem which comes between them — the once famous "Edwin and Angelina" — Goldsmith certainly carried out Boileau's maxim to the full. The first privately printed version differs considerably from that in the first edition of the "Vicar;" this again is altered in the fourth; and there are other variations in the piece as printed in the "Poems for Young Ladies." "As to my 'Hermit,'" said the poet complacently, "that poem, Cradock, cannot be amended," — and undoubtedly it has been skilfully wrought. But it is impossible to look upon it now with the unpurged eyes of those upon whom the "Reliques of Ancient Poetry" had but recently dawned, still less to endorse the verdict of Sir John Hawkins that "it is one of the finest poems of the lyric kind that our language has to boast of." Its over-soft prettiness is too much that of the chromo-lithograph, or the Parian bust (the porcelain, not the marble), and its "beautiful simplicity" is in parts perilously close upon that inanity which Johnson, whose sturdy good sense not even friendship could silence, declared to be the characteristic of much of Percy's collection. It is instructive as a study of poetical progress to contrast it with a ballad of our own day in the same measure, — the “Talking Oak” of Tennyson.

The remaining poems of Goldsmith, excluding the “Captivity,” and the admittedly occasional “Threnodia Augustalis,” are not open to the charge of fictitious simplicity, or of that hyper-elaboration which, in the words of the poet just mentioned, makes for the “ripe and rotten.” The gallery of kit-cats in “Retaliation,” and the delightful bonhomie of “The Haunch of Venison,” need no commendation. In kindly humour and not unkindly satire Goldsmith was at his best, and the imperishable portraits of Burke and Garrick and Reynolds, and the inimitable dinner at which Lord Clare’s pasty was not, are as well known as any of the stock passages of “The Deserted Village” or “The Traveller” though they have never been babbled “in extremis vicis” by successive generations of schoolboys. It is usually said, probably with truth, that in these poems and the delightful “Letter to Mrs. Bunbury,” Goldsmith’s metre was suggested by the cantering anapests of the “New Bath Guide,” and it is to be observed that “Little Comedy’s” invitation is to the same favourite tune. But it is also the fact that a line of the once popular lyric of “Ally Croaker,” —

“Too dull for a wit, too grave for a joker,” —

has a kind of echo in the — “Too nice for a statesman, too proud for a wit” — of Burke's portrait in “Retaliation.” What is still more remarkable is that Gray's “Sketch of his own Character,” the resemblance of which to Goldsmith has been pointed out by his editors, begins, —

“Too poor for a bribe, and too proud to importune.”

Whether Goldsmith was thinking of Anstey or “Ally Croaker,” it is at least worthy of passing notice that an Irish song of no particular literary merit should have succeeded in haunting the two foremost poets of their day.

Poetry brought Goldsmith fame, but money only indirectly. Those Saturnian days of the subscription-edition, when Pope and Gay and Prior counted their gains by thousands, were over and gone. He had arrived, it has been truly said, too late for the Patron, and too early for the Public. Of his lighter pieces, the best were posthumous; the rest were either paid for at hack prices or not at all. For “The Deserted Village” Griffin gave him a hundred guineas, a sum so unexampled as to have prompted the pleasant legend that he returned it. For “The Traveller” the only payment that can be definately traced is £21. "I cannot afford to court the draggle-tail muses," he said laughingly to Lord Lisburn; "they would let me starve; but by my other labours I can make shift to eat, and drink, and have good clothes." It was in his "other labours" that his poems helped him. The booksellers, who would not or could not remunerate him adequately for delayed production and minute revision, were willing enough to secure the sanction of his name for humbler journey-work. If he was ill-paid for "The Traveller," he was not ill-paid for the "Beauties of English Poesy" or the "History of Animated Nature."

Yet notwithstanding his ready pen, and his skill as a compiler, his life was a treadmill. "While you are nibbling about elegant phrases, I am obliged to write half a volume," he told his friend Cradock; and it was but natural that he should desire to escape into walks where he might accomplish something "for his own hand," by which, at the same time, he might exist. Fiction he had already essayed. Nearly two years before "The Traveller" appeared, he had written a story about the length of "Joseph Andrews," for which he had received little more than a third of the sum paid by Andrew Millar to Fielding for his burlesque of Richardson's "Pamela." But obscure circumstances delayed the publication of the "Vicar of Wakefield" for four years, and when at last it was issued, its first burst of success—a success, as far as can be ascertained, productive of no further profit to its author—was followed by a long period during which the sales were languid and uncertain. There remained the stage, with its two-fold allurements of fame and fortune, both payable at sight, added to which it was always possible that a popular play, in those days when plays were bought to read, might find a brisk market in pamphlet form. The prospect was a tempting one, and it is scarcely surprising that Goldsmith, weary of the "dry drudgery at the desk's dead wood," and conscious of better things within him, should engage in that most tantalising of all enterprises, the pursuit of dramatic success.

For acting and actors he had always shown a decided partiality.¹ Vague stories, based, in all probability, upon the references to strolling players in his writings, hinted that he himself had once worn the comic sock as "Scrub" in "The Beaux' Stratagem;" and it is clear that soon after he arrived in England, he had completed a tragedy, for he read it in manuscript to a friend. That he had been besides an acute and observant playgoer is plain from his excellent account in "The Bee" of Mademoiselle Clairon, whom he had seen at Paris, and from his sensible notes in the same periodical on "gestic lore" as exhibited on the English stage. In his "Polite Learning in Europe," he had followed up Ralph's "Case of Authors by Profession," by protesting against the despotism of managers, and the unenlightened but economical policy of producing only the works of deceased playwrights; and he was equally opposed to the growing tendency on the part of the public — a tendency dating from Richardson and the French comédie larmoyante — to substitute sham sensibility and superficial refinement for that humourous delineation of manners which, with all their errors of morality and taste, had been the chief aim of Congreve and his contemporaries. To the fact that what was now known as "genteel comedy" had almost wholly supplanted this elder and better manner, must be attributed his deferred entry upon a field so obviously adapted to his gifts. But when, in 1766, the "Clandestine Marriage" of Garrick and Colman, with its evergreen "Lord Ogleby," seemed to herald a return to the side of laughter as opposed to that of tears, he took heart of grace, and, calling to mind something of the old inconsiderate benevolence which had been the Goldsmith family-failing, set about his first comedy, "The Good-Natur'd Man."

¹ This is not inconsistent with the splenetic utterances in the letters to Daniel Hodson, first made public in the "Great Writers" life of Goldsmith, where he speaks of the stage as "an abominable resource which neither became a man of honour, nor a man of sense." Those letters were written when the production of "The Good-Natur'd Man" had supplied him with abundant practical evidence of the vexations and difficulties of theatrical ambition.

Even without experiment, no one could have known better than Goldsmith upon what a sea of troubles he had embarked. Those obstacles which, more than thirty years before, had been so graphically described in Fielding's "Pasquin," — which Goldsmith himself had indicated with equal accuracy in his earliest book, — still lay in the way of all dramatic purpose, and he was to avoid none of them. When he submitted his completed work to Garrick, the all-powerful actor, who liked neither piece nor author, blew hot and cold so long that Goldsmith at last, in despair, transferred it to Colman. But, as if fate was inexorable, Colman, after accepting it effusively, also grew dilatory, and ultimately entered into a tacit league with Garrick not to produce it at Covent Garden until his former rival had brought out at Drury Lane a comedy by Goldsmith's countryman, Hugh Kelly, a sentimentalist of the first water. Upon the heels of the enthusiastic reception which Garrick's administrative tact secured for the superfine entanglements of "False Delicacy," came limping "The Good-Natur'd Man" of Goldsmith, wet-blanketed beforehand by a sombre prologue from Johnson. No first appearance could have been less favourable. Until it was finally saved in the fourth act by the excellent art of Shuter as "Croaker," its fate hung trembling in the balance, and even then one of its scenes — not afterwards reckoned the worst — had to be withdrawn in deference to the delicate scruples of an audience which could not suffer such inferior beings as bailiffs to come between the wind and its gentility. Yet, in spite of all these disadvantages, "The Good-Natur'd Man" obtained a hearing, besides bringing its author about five hundred pounds, a sum far larger than anything he had ever made by poetry or fiction.

That the superior success of "False Delicacy," with its mincing morality and jumble of inadequate motives, was wholly temporary and accidental is evident from the fact that, to use a felicitous phrase, it has now to be disinterred in order to be discussed. But, notwithstanding one's instinctive sympathy for Goldsmith in his struggles with the managers, it is not equally clear that everything considered, "The Good-Natur'd Man" was unfairly treated by the public. Because Kelly's play was praised too much, it by no means follows that Goldsmith's play was praised too little. With all the advantage of its author's reputation, it has never since passed into the répertoire, and, if it had something of the freshness of a first effort, it had also its inexperience. The chief character, Honeywood, — the weak and amiable "good-natur'd man," — never stands very firmly on his feet, and the first actor of the part, Garrick's promising young rival, Powell, failed, or disdained to make it a stage success. On the other hand, "Croaker," an admitted elaboration of Johnson's sketch of "Suspirius" in the Rambler, is a first-rate comic creation, and the charlatan "Lofty," a sort of "Beau-Tibbs-above-Stairs," is almost as good. But, as Garrick's keen eye saw, to have a second male figure of greater importance than the central personage was a serious error of judgment, added to which neither "Miss Richland" nor "Mrs. Croaker" ever establishes any hold upon the audience. Last of all, the plot, such as it is, cannot be described as either particularly ingenious or particularly novel. In another way the merit of the piece is, however, incontestable. It is written with all the perspicuous grace of Goldsmith's easy pen, and, in the absence of stage-craft, sparkles with neat and effective epigrams. One of these may be mentioned as illustrating the writer's curious (perhaps unconscious) habit of repeating ideas which had pleased him. He had quoted in his "Polite Learning" the exquisitely rhythmical close of Sir William Temple's prose essay on "Poetry," and in "The Bee" it still seems to haunt him. In "The Good-Natur'd Man" he has absorbed it altogether, for he places it, without inverted commas, in the lips of Croaker.¹

But if its lack of constructive power and its errors of conception make it impossible to regard "The Good-Natur'd Man" as a substantial gain to humourous drama, it was undoubtedly a formidable attack upon that "mawkish drab of spurious breed," Sentimental Comedy, and its success was amply sufficient to justify a second trial. That Goldsmith did not forthwith make this renewed effort must be attributed partly to the recollection of his difficulties in getting his first play produced, partly to the fact that, his dramatic gains exhausted, he was almost immediately involved in a sequence of laborious taskwork.

¹ In the same way he annexes, both in "The Hermit" and "The Citizen of the World," a quotation from Young.

Still, he had never abandoned his ambition to restore humour and character to the stage ; and as time went on, the sense of his past discouragements grew fainter, while the success of "The Deserted Village" increased his importance as an author. Sentimentalism, in the meantime, had still a majority. Kelly, it is true, was now no longer to be feared. His sudden good fortune had swept him into the ranks of the party-writers, with the result that the damning of his next play, "A Word to the Wise," had been exaggerated into a political necessity. But the school which he represented had been recruited by a much abler man, Richard Cumberland, and it was probably the favourable reception of Cumberland's "West Indian" that stimulated Goldsmith into striking one more blow for legitimate comedy. At all events, in the autumn of the year in which "The West Indian" was produced, he is hard at work in the lanes at Hendon and Edgware, "studying jests with a most tragical countenance" for a successor to "The Good-Natur'd Man."

To the modern spectator of "She Stoops to Conquer," with its unflagging humour and bustling action, it must seem almost inconceivable that its stage qualities can ever have been questioned. Yet questioned they undoubtedly were, and Goldsmith was spared none of his former humiliations. Even from the outset, all was against him. His difference with Garrick had long been adjusted, and the Drury Lane manager would now probably have accepted a new play from his pen, especially as that astute observer had already detected signs of a reaction in the public taste. But Goldsmith was morally bound to Colman and Covent Garden; and Colman, in whose hands he placed his manuscript, proved even more disheartening and unmanageable than Garrick had been in the past. Before he had come to his decision, the close of 1772 had arrived. Early in the following year, under the irritation of suspense and suggested amendments combined, Goldsmith hastily transferred his proposal to Garrick; but, by Johnson's advice, as hastily withdrew it. Only by the express interposition of Johnson was Colman at last induced to make a distinct promise to bring out the play at a specific date. To believe in it, he could not be persuaded, and his contagious anticipations of its failure passed insensibly to the actors, who, one after another, shuffled out of their parts. Even over the epilogue there were vexatious disputes, and when at last, in March, 1773, "She Stoops to Conquer" was performed, its leading actor had previously held no more exalted position than that of ground-harlequin, while one of its most prominent characters had simply been a post-boy in "The Good-Natur'd Man." But once fairly upon the boards neither lukewarm actors nor an adverse manager had any further influence over it, and the doubts of every one vanished in the uninterrupted applause of the audience. When, a few days later, it was printed with a brief and grateful dedication to its best friend, Johnson, the world already knew with certainty that a fresh masterpiece had been added to the roll of English Dramatic Literature, and that "genteel comedy" had received a decisive blow.

The effect of this blow, it must be admitted, had been aided not a little by the appearance, only a week or two earlier, of Foote's clever puppet-show of "The Handsome Housemaid; or, Piety in Pattens," which was openly directed at Kelly and his following. But ridicule by itself, without some sample of a worthier substitute, could not have sufficed to displace a persistent fashion. This timely antidote "She Stoops to Conquer," in the most unmistakable way, afforded. From end to end of the piece there is not a sickly or a maudlin word. Even Sheridan, writing "The Rivals" two years later, thought it politic to insert "Faulkland" and “Julia” for the benefit of the sentimentalists. Goldsmith made no such concession, and his wholesome, hearty merriment put to flight the Comedy of Tears, — even as the Coquecigrues vanished before the large-lunged laugh of Pantagruel. If, as Johnson feared, the plot bordered slightly upon farce — and of what good comedy may this not be said? — at least it can be urged that its most farcical incident, the mistaking of a gentleman’s house for an inn, had really happened, since it had happened to the writer himself. But the superfine objections of Walpole and his friends are now ancient history, — history so ancient that it is scarcely credited, while Goldsmith’s manly assertion (after Fielding) of the author’s right “to stoop among the low to copy nature,” has been ratified by successive generations of novelists and playwrights. What is beyond dispute is the healthy atmosphere, the skilful setting, the lasting freshness and fidelity to human nature of the persons of his drama. Not content with the finished portraits of the Hardcastles (a Vicar and Mrs. Primrose promoted to the squirearchy), — not content with the incomparable and unapproachable Tony, the author has managed to make attractive what is too often insipid, his heroines and their lovers. Miss Hardcastle and Miss Neville are not only charming young women, but charming characters, while Marlow and Hastings are much more than stage young men. And let it be remembered—it cannot be too often remembered—that in returning to those Farquhars and Vanbrughs “of the last age,” who differed so widely from the Kellys and Cumberlands of his own, Goldsmith has brought back no taint of their baser part. Depending solely for its avowed intention to “make an audience merry,” upon the simple development of its humorous incident, his play (wonderful to relate!) attains its end without resorting to impure suggestion or equivocal intrigue. Indeed, there is but one married woman in the piece, and she traverses it without a stain upon her character.

“She Stoops to Conquer” is Goldsmith’s last dramatic work, for the trifling sketch of “The Grumbler” had never more than a grateful purpose. When, only a year later, the little funeral procession from 2, Brick Court laid him in his unknown grave in the Temple burying-ground, the new comedy of which he had written so hopefully to Garrick was still non-existent. Would it have been better than its last fortunate predecessor?—would those early reserves of memory and experience have still proved inexhaustible? The question cannot be answered. Through debt, and drudgery, and depression, the writer's genius had still advanced, and these might yet have proved powerless to check his progress. But at least it was given to him to end upon his best, and not to outlive it. For, in that critical sense which estimates the value of a work by its excellence at all points, it can scarcely be contested that "She Stoops to Conquer" is his best production. In spite of their beauty and humanity, the lasting quality of "The Traveller" and "The Deserted Village" is seriously prejudiced by his half-way attitude between the poetry of convention and the poetry of nature — between the gradus epithet of Pope and the direct vocabulary of Wordsworth. With the "Vicar of Wakefield" again, immortal though it be, it is less his art that holds us than his charm, his humour, and his tenderness, which tempt us to forget his inconsistency and his errors of haste. In "She Stoops to Conquer," neither defect of art nor defect of nature forbids us to give unqualified admiration to a work which lapse of time has shown to be still unrivalled in its kind.

ANGELO'S "REMINISCENCES."

IN the year 175— (it is not possible to fix the date more precisely), there was what would now be called a public assault of arms at one of the great hotels of pre-revolutionary Paris. Among the amateurs who took part in it— for there were amateurs as well as professionals— was a foreign protégé of the Duke de Nivernais, that amiable and courteous nobleman who subsequently visited this country at the close of the Seven Years' War, in the character of Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary from His Most Christian Majesty, Louis XV. The stranger, who was in the prime of life, was of graceful figure and address, and his name had been no sooner announced than an English lady, then visiting the French capital, and possessed of great vivacity and considerable personal attractions, stepped forward and presented him with a bunch of roses. He received it with becoming gallantry, fastened it carefully on his left breast, and forthwith declared that he would defend it against all comers. What is more, he kept his promise. He afterwards "fenced with several of the first masters, not one of whom," says the narrator of the story, "could disturb a single leaf of the bouquet." The lady was the celebrated Mrs. Margaret Woffington, then in the height of her fame as a beauty and an actress; the gentleman was an Italian, travelling for his pleasure. He was the son of a well-to-do merchant at Leghorn, and and he was called Dominico Angelo Malevolti Tremamondo.

Shortly after the foregoing incident, Signor Dominico Angelo Malevolti Tremamondo ("I love" — says Goldsmith of Miss Carolina Wilhelmina Amelia Skeggs — "to give the whole name!") transported his foil and his good looks to this country. In addition to his proficiency as a fencer, he was "a master of equitation," having been a pupil of the then famous scientific horseman, Teillagory¹ the elder. These were accomplishments which speedily procured for him both popularity and patrons in London. He became in a few months écuyer to Henry Herbert, tenth Earl of Pembroke, who was not only an accomplished cavalier himself, but was then, or was soon to be, lieutenant-colonel of Elliot's Light Horse, a crack dragoon regiment, which, by the way, numbered among its corporals the future Astley of the Westminster Bridge Road Amphitheatre. Lord Pembroke had private manèges both in the neighbourhood of his house in Whitehall Gardens (part of the present No. 7), and at his family seat of Wilton, near Salisbury. At first his écuyer confined himself to teaching riding; but a chance encounter at the Thatched House Tavern with Dr. Keys, a well-known Irish fencer, in which he vanquished his antagonist, determined his choice of the calling of a maitre d'armes. His first pupil was the Duke of Devonshire. Later he was engaged by the Princess of Wales to instruct the young princes in horsemanship and the use of the small sword, for which purposes premises were provided in Leicester Fields, within two doors from Hogarth's dwelling in the east corner. Before many years were over, Dominico Angelo — for he seems to have discarded first one and then the other of his last two names — set up a riding school of his own in Soho. But previously to all this, and apparently not long after his arrival in London, he had fallen in love with, and taken to wife, the daughter of an English naval officer. Judging from the picture of her which Reynolds painted in 1766, the bride (who was a minor) must have been as handsome as her husband. The marriage took place in February, 1755, at St. George's, Hanover Square, the register of which duly records the union, by license of the Archbishop of Canterbury, of Domenico Angelo Malevolti, bachelor, and Elizabeth Johnson, spinster. The pair had a son, the Henry Angelo from whose disorganised and gossiping "Reminiscences"¹ most of the foregoing particulars are derived.

¹ Here and elsewhere we correct Angelo's spelling.

Harry Angelo, so he was called, is not explicit as to the date of his birth, which probably took place at the end of 1755 or the beginning of 1756. It seems at first to have been intended that he should enter the Navy; and, as a matter of fact, he was actually enrolled by Captain Augustus Hervey (Lady Hervey's second son) on the books of the Dragon man-of-war in the capacity of midshipman, thereby becoming entitled, at an extremely tender age, to some twenty-five guineas prize money. After a short period under Dr. Rose of Chiswick, the translator of Sallust, he went to Eton, where his father taught fencing; and at Eton he remained for some years. Two of his school-fellows were Nathan and Carrington Garrick, the actor's nephews ; and young Angelo had pleasant memories of their uncle's visits to Eton, where, being a friend of the elder Angelo, he would regale all three boys sumptuously at the Christopher inn, and amuse them with quips and recitations.¹ Harry Angelo had even the good fortune, while at Eton, to be taken to that solemn tomfoolery, the Stratford Jubilee of 1769, in which his father doubled the part of Mark Antony with that of director of fireworks. Another occasional visitor to the school, magnificently frogged and braided after the fashion of his kind, was the Italian quack Dominicetti, also a family friend, who treated the boys royally. But perhaps the most interesting memories of young Angelo's Eton days are those which recall a holiday spent at Amesbury with his father and mother, as the guest of the Duke and Duchess of Queensberry. In his old age he could clearly picture the tall, thin figure of the taciturn Duke, in high leather gaiters, short-skirted frock, and gold-laced hat ; and he well remembered the Duchess, then nearly eighty, but still energetic and garrulous, in a Quaker-coloured silk and black hood. He also remembered that he was allowed (like Gay before him) to fish for carp in the Amesbury water.

¹ "Reminiscences of Henry Angelo, with Memoirs of his late Father and Friends," 2 vols., London: Colburn and Bentley, 1830.

¹ Apparently Garrick often did this. Once, at Hampton, he read Chaucer's "Cock and Fox" to the boys after supper, and then, having recited Goldsmith's "Hermit," fell asleep in his arm-chair. Thereupon Mrs. Garrick, taking off her lace apron, fondly placed it over his face, and motioned her young friends away to bed.

When he was entering his seventeenth year, Harry Angelo was sent to Paris to learn French. He was placed en pension in the Rue Poupé with a M. Boileau, a half-starved mattre de langue, who, since he is seriously likened by his pupil to the Apothecary in "Romeo and Juliet," must really have resembled the typical Frenchman as depicted by Smollett and Rowlandson. Boileau was a conscientious teacher, but a miserable caterer; and young Angelo, after narrowly escaping collapse from starvation and close confinement, was eventually removed from his care. He passed, in the first instance, to a M. Liviez, whose wife was English, and (notwithstanding an undeniable squint) of a shape sufficiently elegant to have served as the model for Roubillac's figure of Eloquence on the Argyll tomb at Westminster Abbey. M. Liviez had been a dancer, and ballet-master at a London theatre. At this date he was a bon vivant, who collected prints. He was also subject to fits of hypochondria (probably caused by over-eating), when he would imagine himself Apollo, and fiddle feverishly to the nine Muses, typified for the nonce by a hemicycle of chairs. As both he and his wife preferred to speak English, they made no pretence to teach their lodger French; but, from the point of commissariat, the change from the Rue Poupé to the Rue Battois was "removal from Purgatory to Paradise." While Angelo was in Paris, Garrick sent him an introduction to Prévile, whom Sterne describes as "Mercury himself," and who was, indeed, in some respects Garrick's rival. Prévile knew Foote; and when Foote came to the French capital, he invited Angelo to a supper, at which Prévile was present. Foote, binding Angelo to secrecy, delighted the company by mimicking their common acquaintance, the great Roscius; and Prévile in his turn imitated the leading French comedians. All this was not very favourable to proficiency in the French language, which Angelo would probably have learned better in M. Boileau's garret. On the other hand, under Motet, then the champion pareur of the Continent, he became an expert swordsman — able, and only too willing, to take part in the encounters which, in the Paris of the day, were as common as street rows in London. But apart from swallowing the button and some inches of a foil when fencing with Lord Masseurene in the Prison of the Abbaye (where that nobleman was unhappily in durance for debt), he seems to have enjoyed an exceptional immunity from accidents of all kinds.

He returned to London in 1775. His home at this time was at Carlisle House,¹ in King's Square Court (now Carlisle Street), Soho. It was a spacious old Caroline mansion of red brick, which had belonged to the Howard family, and had been bought by Dominico Angelo from Lord Delaval, brother of Foote's patron, the Sir Francis to whom he dedicated his comedy of "Taste." There were lofty rooms with enriched ceilings; there was a marble-floored hall; there was a grand decorated staircase painted by Salvator's pupil, Henry Cook. In this building, at the beginning of 1763, its new owner had opened his fencing school, and subsequently, in the garden at the back, had erected stables and a manège, which extended to Wardour Street. Between pupils, resident and otherwise, and troops of friends, Carlisle House must always have been well filled and animated. Garrick, who was accustomed to consult the elder Angelo on matters of costume and stage machinery, was often a visitor, and presented his adviser with a magnificent silver goblet (long preserved by the Angelos as an heirloom), which held three bottles of Burgundy. Richard Brinsley Sheridan and his father were also friends, and it was from Dominico Angelo that the younger man, as a boy at Harrow, acquired that use of the small sword which was to stand him in such good stead in his later duel with Captain Mathews. Wilkes, again, resplendent in his favourite scarlet and gold, not seldom looked in on his way from his Westminster or Kensington houses; and Foote, the Chevalier D'Éon, and General Paoli were constant guests. Horne Tooke, who lived hard by in Dean Street, was another intimate; and, when he was not discussing contemporary politics with Wilkes and Tom Sheridan, would sometimes enliven the company by singing a parody on "God save the King," which was not entirely to the loyal taste of the elder Angelo. Bach of the harpsichord,¹ with Abel of the viol-da-gamba, were next-door neighbours and free of the house ; Bartolozzi the engraver, and his inseparable Cipriani, were on an almost equally favoured footing. Another habitué was Gainsborough, whose passion for music is historical, and from whom any one could extract a sketch in return for a song or a tune. The walls of Abel's room were covered by drawings acquired in this manner, and pinned loosely to the paper-hangings, — drawings which afterwards fetched their price at Langford's in the Piazza. Besides these, came Philip de Louthembourg, whom Dominico Angelo had introduced to Garrick as scene painter for Drury Lane ; and Canaletto, whom he had known at Venice ; and Zoffany ; and George Stubbs, the author of the "Anatomy of the Horse," who carried on his studies in the Carlisle House Riding School, no doubt taking for model, among others, that famous white charger Monarch, of which the presentment survives to posterity, under King William III. of immortal memory, in West's "Battle of the Boyne."¹ "All the celebrated horse painters of the last, and some of the veterans of the present age," says the author of the

¹ Not to be confounded with Carlisle House on the other side of Soho Square, which was occupied from 1760 to 1778 by the enterprising Mrs. Teresa Cornelys, whose ballroom was in Sutton Street, on the site of the present Roman Catholic Church of St. Patrick.

¹ This was John Christian Bach, Bach's son, familiarly known as "English Bach." Angelo calls him Sebastian, but John Sebastian Bach died in 1750. Bach and Abel jointly conducted Mrs. Cornelys' concerts.

¹ The "Battle of the Boyne" was engraved by John Hall, Raimbach's master. See post, "An English Engraver in Paris."

"Reminiscences," "were constant visitors at our table or at the manège." Lastly, an enthusiastic, though scarcely artistic, amateur of the Carlisle Street stud was the corpulent "Hero of Culloden," — otherwise "Billy the Butcher." If not the greatest, he was certainly the heaviest prince in Christendom, since he rode some four-and-twenty stone, and, as a boy, Harry Angelo well remembered the significant sidelong dip of the carriage when His Royal Highness poised his ponderous body on the step.

An establishment upon the scale and traditions of Carlisle House (and there was also a "cake-house" or country-box at Acton, for which Zoffany painted decorations) could only have been maintained at considerable expense. But in this respect Dominico Angelo seems to have been unusually fortunate, even for a foreigner. Within a short period after his arrival in England his income, according to his son, was over two thousand a year; and this sum, in the height of his prosperity, was nearly doubled. After Harry Angelo's account of his life in Paris, his records, always disconnected, grow looser in chronology; added to which, it is never quite easy to distinguish his personal recollections from the mere floating hearsay of a retentive but capricious memory. One of his earliest experiences, however, on returning to England, must have been his attendance, in December, 1775, at the trial, in the Old Bailey, of Mrs. Margaret Caroline Rudd, for complicity in the forgery for which the Brothers Perreau were subsequently hanged.¹ His description of this fair-haired siren suggests a humbler Becky Sharp or Valérie Marneffe, and there can be little doubt that, as he implies, she owed her undeserved acquittal to the "irresistible power of fascination" which captivated Boswell, and interested even his "illustrious Friend." Another incident at which Angelo assisted shortly afterwards, and which it is also possible to place precisely, was the riot that, in February, 1776, accompanied the attempt to produce at Drury Lane Parson Bate's unpopular opera of "The Blackamoor wash'd White." Angelo was one of a boxful of the author's supporters, who were forced to retire under the furious cannonade of "apples, oranges, and other such missiles," to which they were exposed. But a still more important theatrical event was his presence on that historic June 10, 1776, when Garrick bade farewell to the stage. He and his mother were in Mrs. Garrick's box, and the two ladies continued sobbing so long after they had quitted the house as to prompt the ironic comment of the elder Angelo that they could not have grieved more at the great man's funeral itself. Harry Angelo was also a spectator of the progress to Tyburn, in the following February, of the unfortunate Dr. Dodd, to whom, and to the horrors of "Execution Day" in general, he devotes some of the latter pages of his first volume. "His [Dodd's] corpse-like appearance produced an awful picture of human woe. Tens of thousands of hats, which formed a black mass, as the coach advanced were taken off simultaneously, and so many tragic faces exhibited a spectacle the effect of which is beyond the power of words to describe. Thus the procession travelled onwards through the multitude, whose silence added to the awfulness of the scene." Two years later Angelo witnessed the execution of another clergyman, James Hackman, who was hanged for shooting Lord Sandwich's mistress, Miss Martha Reay. The murder—it will be remembered—took place in the Piazza at Covent Garden, as the lady was leaving the theatre, and Angelo, according to his own account, had only quitted it himself a few minutes before. He afterwards saw the body of the hapless criminal under dissection at Surgeons' Hall, — a gruesome testimony to the truth of Hogarth's final plate in the "Four Stages of Cruelty."

¹ One wonders whether Thackeray was thinking of this cause célèbre in "Denis Duval," where there is a Miss Rudge and a Farmer Perreau. Angelo, it may be added, was present at the hanging at Tyburn of M. de la Motte, an actual character in the same book.

The above, the Gordon riots of '80, and the burning in '92 of Wyatt's Pantheon, are some of the few things in Angelo's first volume which it is practicable to date with certainty. The second volume is scarcely more than a sequence of headed paragraphs, roughly parcelled into sections, and difficult to sample. Like his father (who died at Eton in 1802), he became a "master of the sword," and like him, again, he lived upon terms of quasi-familiarity with many titled practitioners of that art, — being, indeed, upon one occasion the guest of the Duke of Sussex at the extremely select Neapolitan Club, an honour which — as the Prince of Wales was also present — seems to have been afterwards regarded as too good to be believed. Like Dominico Angelo, also, he had an extensive acquaintance with the artists and actors of his day. He had himself learned drawing at Eton under the Prince's master, Alexander Cozens, the apostle of "blottesque," and had studied a little with Bartolozzi and Cipriani. He had even ventured upon a few caricatures, in particular one of Lady Queensberry's black protégé, Sou-bise; and he was intimate with Thomas Rowlandson, whom he had known from boyhood, and followed to his grave in April, 1827. When Rowlandson was on his continental travels, Angelo was living in Paris, and he possessed many of the drawings which his friend executed at this time. In London they were frequently companions at Vauxhall and other places of amusement, where Rowlandson's busy pencil found its field of activity; and together they often heard the chimes at midnight in the house at Beaufort Buildings inhabited by Rowlandson's fat Mæcenas, the banker Mitchel, one of whose favourite guests was Peter Pindar. Angelo gives a good many anecdotes which have been utilised by Rowlandson's biographers; but perhaps the least hackneyed record of their alliance is contained in the pages which describe their joint visit to Portsmouth to see the French prizes after Lord Howe's victory of the 1st June, 1794. Angelo got down first, and went on board the largest French vessel, the Sans Pareil (80 guns). He gives a graphic account of the appalling devastation, — the decks ploughed up by the round shot, the masts gone by the board, the miserable boyish crew, the hogshead of spirits to keep up their courage in action, the jumble of dead and dying in the 'tween decks, and above all, the terrible, sickening stench. On Howe's vessel, the Queen Charlotte, on the contrary, there was scarcely a trace of battle, though another ship, the Brunswick, had suffered to a considerable extent. Rowlandson joined Angelo at Portsmouth, and they witnessed together the landing of the prisoners. Afterwards they visited Forton, where, upon leaving one of the sick wards, Rowlandson made a ghastly study of a dying "Mounseer" sitting up in bed to write his will, a priest with a crucifix at his side. By this time Angelo had had enough of the horrors of war, and he returned to town, leaving Rowlandson to go on to Southampton to make — so he says — sketches of Lord Moira's embarkation for La Vendée. Here, however, the writer's recollection must have failed him, for Lord Moira's fruitless expedition was nearly a year old. What Rowlandson no doubt saw was his Lordship's departure for Ostend to join the Duke of York. Angelo speaks highly of the — for Rowlandson — unusual finish and spirit of these drawings, with their boatloads of soldiers and studies of shipping. They were purchased by Fores of Piccadilly, but do not appear to have been reproduced. There is, however, at South Kensington a sketch by Rowlandson of the French prizes coming into Portsmouth, which must have been made at this date.

Another associate of Angelo, and also of Rowlandson, was John (or more familiarly, Jack) Bannister, the actor. Bannister and Rowlandson had been students together at the Royal Academy, and had combined in worrying, by mimicry and caricature, gruff Richard Wilson, who had succeeded Frank Hayman as librarian. In the subsequent pranks of this practical joking age, Angelo, who had known them both from boyhood, often made a third; and he was present upon an occasion which was as unfeignedly pathetic as Garrick's famous farewell, — the farewell of Bannister to the stage. Many of the anecdotes contained in the entertainment which preceded this leave-taking — namely, "Bannister's Budget," — were included by permission in the "Reminiscences;" and Angelo, who had learned elocution from Tom Sheridan, and was an excellent amateur actor, more than once played for Bannister's benefits, notably at the Italian Opera House in 1792 as Mrs. Cole in Foote's "Minor," and in 1800 before the Royal Family at Windsor as Papillon in "The Liar," also by Foote. On this latter occasion the bill records that Mr. H. Angelo, "by particular desire," obliged with "A Solo Duet; or, Ballad Singers in Cranbourn Alley." These were by no means his only dramatic essays. At the pretty little private theatre which, in 1788, that emphatically lively nobleman, Richard, seventh Earl of Barrymore, erected at Wargrave-on-Thames, he was a frequent performer. His first, or one of his first parts, was that of Dick in Vanbrugh's "Confederacy," when Barrymore played Brass; and a later and favourite impersonation was Worsdale's rôle of Lady Pentweazel in Foote's "Taste." Angelo is careful, however, to explain that the exigencies of his professional engagements did not permit him to go to the full length of the Wargrave Court of Comus — some of whose revels must have closely resembled that "blind hookey" by which the footman in "The Newcomes" described the doings of Lord Farintosh. As he seems, nevertheless, to have accompanied Barrymore to low spouting clubs like Jacob's Well; to have driven with him at night through the long straggling street of Colnbrook, while his sportive Lordship was industriously "fanning the day-lights," i.e. breaking the windows to right and left with his whip; and to have serenaded Mrs. Fitzherbert in his company at Brighton, — he had certainly sufficient opportunities for studying the "caprices and eccentricities" of this illustrious and erratic specimen of what the late Mortimer Collins was wont to describe as the "strong generation." Besides acting at Wargrave, he had also often joined in the private theatricals at Brandenburgh House, then the Hammersmith home of Lord Berkeley's sister, that Margravine of Anspach whose comedy of "The Sleep-Walker" Walpole had printed at the Strawberry Hill Press. Lastly, he was a member of the short-lived Pic-Nic Society inaugurated by Lady Buckinghamshire, an association which combined balls and private plays with suppers on the principle of the line in Goldsmith's "Retaliation", —

"Each guest brought his dish, and the feast was united."

Lady Buckinghamshire, a large personage, with a good digestion and an unlimited appetite for pleasure, was one of the three card-loving leaders of fashion satirised so mercilessly by Gillray as "Faro's Daughters," — her fellow-sinners being Lady Archer and Mrs. Concannon. But whatever may have happened over the green tables at St. James's Square, "gaming" — says Angelo — "formed no part of the plan of the Pic-Nics." Not the less, they had their element of chance. It was the practice to draw lots for furnishing the supper, an arrangement which, if it sometimes permitted the drawers to escape with a pound cake or a bag of China oranges, as often imposed upon them the enforced provision of a dozen of champagne or a three-guinea Perigord pie.

It would take a lengthy article to exhaust the budget of these chaotic memories, even if one made rigid selection of those incidents only in which the writer affirms that he was personally concerned. Not a few of the stories, however, are common property, and are told as well elsewhere. For instance, Angelo repeats the anecdote of Goldsmith's "Croaker," Shuter, who, following—for his "Cries of London"—a particularly musical vendor of silver eels, found to his vexation that on this particular occasion the man was unaccountably mute. Questioning him at length, the poor fellow explained, with a burst of tears, that his wife had died that day, and that he could not cry. This is related in Taylor's "Records," and no doubt in a dozen places besides. Similarly, the anecdote of Hayman the painter, and the Marquis of Granby, both gouty, having a bout with the gloves previous to a sitting, is to be found in the "Somerset House Gazette" of "Ephraim Hardcastle"

(W. H. Pyne); and it has been suggested, we know not upon what authority, that Pyne had a good deal to do with Angelo's chronicles. Be this as it may, there are plenty of anecdotes which are so obviously connected with the narrator that, even if all the make-weights be discarded, a residue remains which is far too large to be dealt with here. We shall confine ourselves to the few pages which refer to Byron, whom Angelo seems to have known well. Byron, who had been one of Angelo's pupils at Harrow, had interested himself in establishing Angelo as a fencing master at Cambridge, where he entertained him and Theodore Hook at dinner, seeing them off himself afterwards by the London stage, duly fortified with stirrup cups of the famous St. John's College beer. When later Byron left Cambridge for town, Angelo seems to have taken great pains to find a book which his noble friend wanted in order to decide a wager, and his eventual success increased the favour in which he stood. He was subsequently in the habit of giving Byron lessons at the Albany in the broadsword, — a fearsome exercise which was chosen in view of the pupil's tendency to flesh, and for which he elaborately handicapped himself with furs and flannels. Of these relations between Angelo and Byron at this date a memento is still said to survive at Mr. John Murray's in Albemarle Street. It is a screen made by Angelo for his patron. On one side are all the eminent pugilists from Broughton to Jackson; on the other the great actors from Betterton to Kean. When Byron left the country in 1816 the screen was sold with his effects, and so passed into the pious hands of its present possessor.

Reference has already been made to what Mr. Egerton Castle accurately describes as Angelo's "graceful ease" in eluding dates, and it should be added that he gives very few particulars respecting his personal history or his professional establishments. At first, it may be assumed, he taught fencing at his father's school in Carlisle Street. Later on, the salle d'armes which he mentions oftenest is that formerly belonging to the Frenchman Redas in the Opera House buildings at the corner of the Haymarket, almost facing the Orange Coffee House, then the chosen resort of foreigners of all sorts. When the Opera was burned down in 1789, these rooms were destroyed, and Angelo apparently transferred his quarters to Bond Street. Under the heading "My Own Boastings," he gives a list of his titled and aristocratic pupils to the year 1817, and it is certainly an imposing one. "In the year of [Edmund] Kean's benefit" [1825?] he strained his thigh when fencing with the actor, and was thenceforth obliged "to bid adieu to the practical exertions of the science." His last years seem to have been passed in retirement at a village near Bath, and from his description of his means as "a small annuity" it must be presumed that he was poor. He had been married, and he speaks of two of his sons to whom the Duke of York had given commissions in the army; but that is all he says on the subject. Beside the two volumes of "Reminiscences," he compiled another miscellany of memories entitled "Angelo's Pic-Nic," to which George Cruikshank contributed a characteristic frontispiece. He also published a translation in smaller form of his father's "École des Armes," a magnificent subscription folio which had first appeared in 1763.¹ The translation was by Rowlandson, and the book so produced was afterwards inserted under the head Escrime in the "Encyclopédie" of Diderot and D'Alembert. Rowlandson also etched twenty-four plates for Angelo on the use of the Hungarian and Highland broadsword, which were put forth in 1798-9 by T. Egerton of the Military Library near Whitehall, the adventurous publisher who subsequently issued the first three novels of Jane Austen.

¹ Dominico Angelo, Lord Pembroke, and the Chevalier D'Éon stood as models for the illustrations to this book, which were designed by Gwynn the painter. They were engraved by Grignon, Ryland, and Raimbach's master, Hall.

THE LATEST LIFE OF STEELE.

ONE of the things that most pleased Lord Macaulay in connection with his famous article in the Edinburgh on Miss Aikin's "Life of Addison," was the confirmation of a minor statement which he had risked upon internal evidence. He had asserted confidently that Addison could never have spoken of Steele in the "Old Whig" as "Little Dickey;" and by a stroke of good fortune, a few days after his article appeared, he found the evidence he required. At a bookstall in Holborn he happened upon Chetwood's "History of the Stage," and promptly discovered that "Little Dickey" was the nickname of Henry Norris, a diminutive actor who had made his first appearance as "Dicky" in Farquhar's "Constant Couple." Norris — it may be added — must have been a familiar figure to both Addison and Steele, because, besides taking a female part in "The Funeral," he had played Mr. Tipkin in "The Tender Husband," which contained "many applauded strokes" from Addison's hand; and, only three years before Addison wrote the "Old Whig," had also acted in Addison's own comedy of "The Drummer." But the anecdote, with its tardy exposure of a time-honoured blunder, aptly illustrates the main function of the modern biographer who deals with the great men of the last century. Rightly or wrongly — no doubt rightly as regards their leading characteristics — a certain conception of them has passed into currency, and it is no longer practicable to alter it materially. A "new view," if sufficiently ingenious or paradoxical, may appear to hold its own for a moment, but, as a rule, it lasts no longer. Swift, Addison, Pope, Steele, Fielding, Goldsmith, Johnson, remain essentially what the common consent of the past has left them, and the utmost that latter-day industry can effect lies in the rectification of minute facts, and the tracing out of neglected threads of inquiry. Especially may it concern itself with that literary nettoyage à sec which has for its object the attenuation, and, if possible, the entire dispersing, of doubtful or discreditable tradition.

Of this method of biography, the "Life of Steele,"¹ by Mr. George A. Aitken is a favourable, and even typical, example. That Mr.

¹ The Life of Richard Steele. By George A. Aitken, 2 vols., London: Isbister, 1889.

Aitken is an enthusiast is plain ; but he is also an enthusiast of exceptional patience, acuteness, and tenacity of purpose. He manifestly set out determined to know all that could possibly be known about Steele, and for some five years (to judge by his first advertisements) he laboured unweariedly at his task. The mere authorities referred to in his notes constitute an ample literature of the period, while the consultation of registers, the rummaging of records, and the general disturbance of contemporary pamphlets and documents which his inquiries must obviously have entailed, are fairly enough to take one's breath away. That in these days of hasty research and hastier publication such a train of investigation should have been undertaken at all, is remarkable ; that so prolonged and arduous an effort should have been selected as the diploma-work of a young and previously untried writer, is more remarkable still. It would have been discouraging in the last degree if so much industry and perseverance had been barren of result, and it is satisfactory to find that Mr. Aitken has been fortunate enough to add considerably to the existing material respecting Steele. In the pages that follow it is proposed, not so much to recapitulate Steele's story, as to emphasise, in their order, some of the more important discoveries which are due to his latest biographer.

Richard Steele, as we know already, was born at Dublin in March, 1672 (N. S.), being thus about six weeks older than Addison, who first saw the light in the following May. Beyond some vague references in the Tatler, nothing definite has hitherto been ascertained about his parents, although his father (also Richard Steele) was reported to have been a lawyer. But Mr. Aitken's investigations establish the fact that one Richard Steele, of Mountain (Monkstown), an attorney, was married in 1670 to a widow named Elinor Symes. These were Steele's father and mother. Steele himself tells us (Tatler, No. 181) that the former died when he was "not quite five years of age," and his mother, apparently, did not long survive her husband. The boy fell into the charge of his uncle, Henry Gascoigne, secretary to the first and second Dukes of Ormond. Gascoigne, concerning whom Mr. Aitken has recovered many particulars, had married a sister of one of Steele's parents. Through Ormond's influence his nephew was placed, in November, 1684, upon the foundation at the Charterhouse. Two years later he was joined there by Addison. It was then the reign of Dr. Thomas Walker, afterwards "the ingenious T. W." of the Spectator, but nothing has been recovered as to Steele's school-days. In November, 1689, he was elected to Christ Church, Oxford, with the usual exhibition of a boy on the Charterhouse foundation, and he matriculated in March, 1690, — Addison, then a demy at Magdalen, having preceded him. Letters already printed by Mr. Wills and others show that Steele tried hard for a studentship at Christ Church; but eventually he became a post-master at Merton, his college-tutor being Dr. Welbore Ellis, to whom he subsequently refers in the preface to the "Christian Hero." Of his intercourse with Addison at Smithfield and Oxford no record has come to light, and it is therefore still open to the essayist to piece the imperfections of this period by fictitious scores with the apple-woman or imaginary musings on the Merton terraces. But, in any such excursions in search of the picturesque, the fact that Steele was older instead of younger than Addison cannot safely be disregarded.

Why Richard Steele quitted the University to become a "gentleman of the army" still remains obscure. His University career, if not brilliant, had been respectable, and he left Merton with the love of "the whole Society." Perhaps, like his compatriot Goldsmith, he preferred a red coat to a black one. At all events, in 1694, his restless Irish spirit prompted him to enlist as a cadet in the second troop of Horse Guards, then commanded by his uncle's patron, James Butler, second Duke of Ormond. When he thus "mounted a war-horse, with a great sword in his hand, and planted himself behind King William the Third against Lewis the Fourteenth" he lost (he says) "the succession to a very good estate in the county of Wexford in Ireland;" for which, failing further particulars, we may perhaps provisionally read "castle in Spain." His next appearance was among the crowd of minstrels who, in black-framed folio, mourned Queen Mary's death. Already he had written verse, and had even burned an entire comedy at college. The chief interest, however, of "The Procession," which was the particular name of this particular "melodious tear," was its diplomatic dedication to John, Lord Cutts, himself a versifier, and what was more important, also the newly appointed colonel of the Coldstream Guards. Cutts speedily sought out his anonymous panegyrist, took him into his household, and eventually offered him a standard in his regiment. There is evidence, in the shape of transcripts from the Blenheim MSS., that Steele was acting as Cutts' secretary circa 1696-7 (a circumstance of which, by the way, there is confirmation in Carleton's "Memoirs"¹); and it has hitherto been supposed that by his employer's interest — for Cutts gave him little but patronage — he became a captain in Lucas's Fusiliers. Here, however, Mr. Aitken's cautious method discloses an unsuspected error. Steele is spoken of as a captain as early as 1700, and "Lord Lucas's Regiment of Foot" (not specifically "Fusileers") was only raised in February, 1702. If, therefore, before this date Steele had any right to the title of captain, it must have been as captain in the Coldstream Guards. Unfortunately, all efforts to trace him in the records of that regiment have hitherto proved unsuccessful. Neither as captain nor as ensign could its historian, General MacKinnon, though naturally watchful on the point, find any mention of his name.

By 1700 the former post-master of Merton had become a seasoned man about town, a recognised wit, and an habitual frequenter of Will's. "Dick Steel is yours," writes Congreve to a friend early in the year. Already, too, there are indications that he had begun to feel the "want of pence which vexes public men." From this, however, as well as his part in the coffee-house crusade against Dryden's "Quack Maurus," Blackmore, we must pass to Mr. Aitken's next rectification. That Steele fought a duel is already known. That it was forced upon him, that he endeavoured in every honourable way to evade it, and that finally, by misadventure, he all but killed his man, have been often circumstantially related. But the date of the occurrence has always been a mystery. Calling Luttrell and the Flying-Post to his aid, Mr. Aitken has ascertained that the place was Hyde Park, the time June 16, 1700, and the other principal an Irishman, named Kelly. Luttrell's description of Steele as "Capt. Steele, of the Lord Cutts regiment," is confirmatory of the assumption that he was a captain in the Guards. Whether this was his only "affair of honour," or whether there were others, is doubtful; but it is not improbable that the repentant spirit engendered by this event, for his adversary's life long hung trembling in the balance, is closely connected with the publication, if not the preparation, of the "Christian Hero," which made its appearance a few months later.

¹ "At the time appointed" (says Carleton, writing at the date of the Assassination Plot of 1696) "I waited on his lordship [Lord Cutts], where I met Mr. Steel (now Sir Richard, and at that time his secretary), who immediately introduced me." ("Memoirs," 1728, ch. iii.)

Upon the scheme of this curious and by no means uninstrucive manual, once so nearly forgotten as to be described as a poem, it is not necessary to linger now. But it may be noted that it was dated from the Tower Guard, where it was written, and that the governor of the Tower was the Lord Lucas in whose regiment Steele became an officer.

The year of which the first months witnessed the publication of the "Christian Hero" witnessed in its close the production of Steele's first play, and, inconsequently enough, the one was the cause of the other. It was an almost inevitable result of the book that many of the author's former associates were alienated from him, while others, not nicely sensitive to the distinction drawn in Boileau's ami de la vertu plutôt que vertueux, maliciously contrasted his precepts with his practice. Finding himself "slighted" (he says) "instead of being encouraged, for his declarations as to religion," it became "incumbent upon him to enliven his character, for which reason he writ the comedy called 'The Funeral,' in which (though full of incidents that move laughter) Virtue and Vice appear just as they ought to do." In other words, Steele endeavoured to swell that tide of reformation which Collier had set flowing by his “Short View of the Immorality and Profaneness of the English Stage,” and he followed up his first effort of 1701 by the “Lying Lover” (1703) and the “Tender Husband” (1705), the second of which was avowedly written “in the severity Collier required.” His connection with the purification of the contemporary drama, however, would lead us too far from the special subject of this paper, — the revised facts of his biography. Among these, the order of the plays as given above is an important item. Owing to some traditional misconception, the “Lying Lover,” which was a rather over-emphatic protest against duelling, was believed by all the older writers to be the last of Steele’s early dramatic efforts. As a natural consequence, its being “damned for its piety” was made responsible for the author’s long abstinence from the task of theatrical regeneration. Unfortunately for logic, the facts which, in this instance, Mr. Aitken has extended rather than discovered, are diametrically opposed to any such convenient arrangement. The “Tender Husband,” and not the “Lying Lover,” was the last of Steele’s first three plays, — that is to say, the moralised Collier mixture was succeeded by a strong infusion of Molière, while, so far from leaving off writing for the stage, there is abundant evidence that, but for other cares and more absorbing occupations, Steele would speedily have proceeded to "enliven his character" with a fresh comedy. Indeed, in a very instructive suit against Christopher Rich of Drury Lane, which Mr. Aitken has exhumed from the Chancery Pleadings in the Record Office, mention is made of what may well have been the performance in question. It was to have treated a subject essayed both by Gay and Mrs. Centlivre, the "Election of Gotham."

The Chancery suit above referred to, which arose out of the profits of the "Tender Husband," began in 1707. Early in 1702 Steele had become a captain in Lucas's, and between that date and 1704 must have spent a considerable portion of his time at Landguard Fort, doing garrison duty with his company. He lodged, according to report, in a farmhouse at Walton. Mr. Aitken prints from various sources several new letters which belong to this period, together with some account of another in the long series of lawsuits about money with which Steele's biography begins to be plentifully besprinkled. In an autograph now in the Morrison collection, we find him certifying with Addison to the unimpeachable character of one "Margery Maplesden, late Sutler at the Tilt-yard Guard," and we get passing glances of him at the Kit Cat Club and elsewhere. Perhaps we are right, too, in placing about this date the account of his search for the "philosopher's stone." The details of this episode in his career rest mainly upon the narrative of Mrs. De la Rivière Manley, the author of that "cornucopia of scandal," the "New Atalantis;" but there is little doubt that there was ground for the story, since Steele himself, in later life, printed, without contradiction, a reference to it in Town Talk, and it is besides connected with the next of Mr. Aitken's discoveries. According to "Rivella," an empiric, who found the sanguine Steele "a bubble to his mind," engaged him in the pursuit of the magnum arcanum. Furnaces were built without delay, and Steele's available resources began to vanish rapidly. In these transactions Mrs. Manley's husband played an ambiguous part, and, if we are to believe her, she herself impersonated the Dea ex machina, and warned Steele that he was being duped. It was not too soon. He only just saved his last negotiable property, his commission, and had to go into hiding. "Fortune," Mrs. Manley continues, "did more for him in his adversity than would have lain in her way in prosperity; she threw him to seek for refuge in a house where was a lady with very large possessions; he married her, she settled all upon him, and died soon after."

This — and to some extent it is a corroboration of the story — was Steele's first wife, who until now has been little more than a shifting shadow in his biography. Her actual personality still remains veiled; but Mr. Aitken with infinite pains has ascertained her name, and a number of facts about her family. She was a West Indian widow called Margaret Stretch, who had inherited an estate in Barbados of £850 a year from her brother, Major Ford. Steele married her in the spring of 1705, and buried her two years later. There is some indication that her death was caused by a fright given her (when enceinte) by Steele's only sister, who was insane; but upon this point nothing definite can be affirmed. Looking to the circumstances in which (as narrated by Mrs. Manley) the acquaintanceship began, it is not improbable that the personal charms of the lady had less to do with the marriage than the beaux yeux de sa cassette. In any case Steele can scarcely escape the imputation which usually attaches to the union of a needy bachelor with a wealthy widow, and, as will presently be seen, he was not long inconsolable.

Whether, even at the time of the marriage, the Barbados estate was really productive of much ready money may be doubted. But in August, 1706, Steele was appointed Gentleman Waiter to Queen Anne's consort, Prince George of Denmark, and a few weeks after his wife's death, through the recommendation of Arthur Mainwaring, one of the members of the Kit Cat Club, Harley, then a Secretary of State, gave him the post of Gazetteer with an increased salary of £300 a year. "The writer of the 'Gazette' now," says Hearne in May, 1707, "is Captain Steel, who is the author of several romantic things, and is accounted an ingenious man." As "Captain Steele" he continued for many years to be known, but it is assumed that he left the army before his second marriage, which now followed. To his first wife's funeral had come as mourner a lady of about nine and twenty, the daughter of a deceased gentleman of Wales, and the Miss Mary Scurlock who has since become historical as the "Prue" of the well-known Steele letters in the British Museum. That she was an heiress, and, as Mrs. Manley says, a "cried-up beauty," was known, though in the absence of definite pictorial assurance of the latter fact, it has hitherto been difficult to see her with the admiring eyes of the enthusiastic writer who signs himself her "most obsequious obedient husband." But while unable to add greatly to our knowledge of her character, Mr. Aitken has succeeded in discovering and copying her portrait by Kneller, a portrait which sufficiently justifies her husband's raptures. In Sir Godfrey's "animated canvas," she is shown as a very beautiful brunette, in a cinnamon satin dress, with a high, almost too high, forehead, and dark, brilliant eyes. Steele's phrase "little wife" must have been a "dear diminutive," for she is not especially petite, but rather what Fielding's Mrs. James would style "a very fine person of a woman," and she has an arch, humourous expression which suggests the wit with which she is credited. From the absence of a ring it has been conjectured that the portrait was taken before marriage. But Kneller was much more likely to have painted Mrs. Steele than Miss Scurlock, and the simple explanation may be either that rings were neglected or that the hands were painted in from a model. As in the case of Mrs. Stretch, Mr. Aitken has collected a mass of information about Mrs. Steele's relations. His good luck has also helped him to one veritable find. In her letter to her mother announcing her engagement, Miss Scurlock refers scornfully to a certain "wretched impudence, H. O.," who had recently written to her. This was manifestly a rejected but still importunate suitor, although the precise measure of his implied iniquity remained unrevealed. From documents now first printed by Mr. Aitken, it seems that his name was Henry Owen of Glassalt, Carmarthenshire, and that he was an embarrassed widower of (in the circuitous language of the law) "thirty, thirty-five, or forty years of age at the most" — that is to say, he was over forty. Miss Scurlock had known him as a neighbour from childhood, and for four or five years past, at Bath, at London, and at other places, he, being a needy man with an entailed estate, had been besieging her with his addresses. Only two years before her engagement to Steele, finding her obdurate, he had trumped up a suit against her for breach of contract of marriage, which apparently was not successful. The "Libel" and "Answer," which Mr. Aitken prints from the records of the Consistorial Court of London, are more curious than edifying, and tend to show that Owen was rather a cur. But the whole story is useful indirectly as suggesting that Miss Scurlock's constitutional prudery was not the only reason why she surrounded Steele's worship of her with so much mystery. Abhorrence of "public doings" in "changing the name of lover for husband" was certainly superficially justifiable in the circumstances. A gentleman who had brought a suit against her in 1704 for breach of contract, and was still pestering her in August, 1707, with his unpalatable attentions, was quite capable of putting awkward obstacles in the way of that other ardent wooer from Lord Sunderland's office in Whitehall, who, in order to pay his court to "the beautifullest object in the world," was confessedly neglecting the "Gazette" and the latest news from Ostend.

According to the license the marriage was to have taken place at St. Margaret's, Westminster; but the registers of that church, as well as those of St. James's, Piccadilly, and St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, have been fruitlessly searched for the record, and it is clear that, for some days, the ceremony was kept a secret, pending the arrival from Wales of Mrs. Scurlock's consent. It probably took place on the 9th of September, 1707, the day after the license was granted. In the previous month of August, Steele had rented a house, now no longer standing, in Bury Street, close to the turning out of Jermyn Street. This was a quarter of the town described by contemporary advertisements as in close proximity "to St. James's Church, Chapel, Park, Palace, Coffee and Chocolate Houses" — in other words, it was in the very heart of the beau monde; and here Steele, moreover, would be within easy distance of the Court, and the Cockpit at Whitehall. He appears to have begun his establishment upon the lavish footing of a gentleman whose expectations are larger than his means, and whose wife's dignity demands, if not "the gilt coach and dappled Flanders mares" of Pope's Pamela, at least a chariot, a lady's-maid, and an adequate equipment of cinnamon satin. On paper his yearly income from all sources, Mrs. Scurlock's allowance not included, was about £1250. But by far the largest portion of this was derived from the Barbados property, which, besides being encumbered by legacies, seems to have made irregular returns. His salary as Gazetteer was also subject to "deductions," and as with the modest pay of a captain in Lucas's he had dabbled in alchemy, he was probably considerably in debt. The prospect was not a cheerful one, either for him or for "Prue," as he soon begins to call his more circumspect better-half, and the signs of trouble are speedily present. Always irrepressibly sanguine, and generally without ready money, he is constantly turning some pecuniary corner or other, not without anticipations and borrowings that bring their inevitable train of actions and bailiffs. All this has to be gently tempered to the apprehensive "Prue," who, to her other luxuries, contrives to add a confidante, described as Mrs. (probably here it means Miss) Binns. Meanwhile her husband, bustling to and fro, now detained in his passage by a friend (and a "pint of wine"), — now, it is to be feared, attentively "shadowed" by the watchful "shoulder-dabbers," — scribbles off, from remote "blind taverns" and other casual coigns of vantage, a string of notes and notelets designed to keep his "Absolute Governess" at Bury Street minutely acquainted with his doings. Through all of these the "dusky strand" of the "West Indian business" — in other words, the protracted negotiation for the sale of the Barbados property — winds languidly and inextricably.

Steele's letters to his wife, accessible in the reprints by Nichols of 1787 and 1809, are, however, too well known to need description, and although Mr. Aitken has collated them with the originals, he does not profess to have made any material addition to their riches. As they progress, they record more than one of the various attempts at advancement with which their writer, egged on by his ambition and his embarrassments, is perpetually preoccupied. To-day it is a gentleman-ushership that seems within his reach, to-morrow he is hoping to be Under-Secretary, vice Addison promoted to Ireland. Then the strange disquieting figure of Swift appears upon the scene, not, as it seems, to exercise its usual power of fascination over "Prue," by whom — Swift declares later — Steele is governed "most abominably, as bad as Marlborough." With April, 1709, comes the establishment of the Tatler, and we enter upon thrice-gleaned ground. The period covered by "Mr. Bickerstaff's Lucubrations" and their successor, the Spectator, lighted as it is by stray side-rays from the wonderful "Journal to Stella," offers few opportunities for fresh illumination. Mr. Aitken's account of the inception of the two papers, and of their several imitators, is copious and careful, but beyond printing from the Blenheim MSS. some interesting accounts of Tonson, bearing upon the sale of the collected editions, and, from the British Museum, an assignment to Buckley the bookseller of a share in the Spectator, he adds nothing that is absolutely new to what has already been collected by Drake, Percy, Chalmers, Nichols, and other writers. With respect to the unexplained cessation of the Tatler, he apparently inclines to the view that it was in some sort the result of an understanding with Harley, by which Steele, having been deprived of his Gazetteership as a caution, was allowed to retain, quamdiu se bene gesserit, his recently acquired appointment as Commissioner of Stamps. But it is not probable that we shall ever know much more of a transaction concerning which Addison was unconsulted, and Swift uninformed. With all his customary openness, Steele could, if he pleased, keep his own counsel, and he seems to have done so on this occasion.

Nor are we really any wiser as to the reasons for the termination of the Spectator in December, 1712, except that we know it to have been premeditated, since the Guardian was projected before the Spectator ceased to appear. From the Berkeley letters among Lord Egmont's MSS., we learn that Steele was once more dallying with his first love, the stage; and from the same source that, either early in February or late in January, the death of his mother-in-law had put him in possession of £500 per annum. To this improvement in his affairs is doubtless traceable that increased spirit of independence which precipitated what all lovers of letters must regard as his disastrous plunge into politics. Whatever the origin of the Guardian, and however sincere its opening protests of neutrality, the situation was far too strained for one who, having a journal at his command, had been from his youth a partisan of the Revolution, and had already made rash entry into party quarrels. Before May, 1713, he was involved in bitter hostilities with Swift, arising out of a Tory attack on the Nottinghams for their desertion to the Whigs. A few weeks later found him insisting upon the demolition, under the Treaty of Utrecht, of the harbour and fortifications of Dunkirk, which demolition, it was shrewdly suspected, the Ministry were intending to forego. In June he had resigned his Commissionership of Stamps, and in August he was elected member for the borough of Stockbridge. Almost concurrently he issued a pamphlet entitled "The Importance of Dunkirk consider'd." Swift, henceforth hanging always upon his traces, retorted with one of his cleverest pamphlets, "The Importance of the Guardian considered," and the "underspur-leathers" of the Tory press began also to ply their pens against Steele, who by this time had dropped the Guardian for a professedly political organ, the Englishman. Shortly afterwards he issued "The Crisis," a pamphlet on the Hanoverian succession, which Swift followed by his masterly "Publick Spirit of the Whigs."

No sooner had Steele taken his seat in the House in February than he found that in the eyes of those in power he was a marked man. He was at once impeached for seditious utterances in "The Crisis," and, though he seems to have made an able defence, was expelled. Then, after a few doubtful months, Queen Anne died, his party came into power, and his troubles as a politician were at an end. In his best pamphlet, his "Apology for Himself and his Writings," he has given an account of this part of his career.

That career, as far as literature is concerned, may be said to close with the publication of the "Apology," in October, 1714. Not many months afterwards, on presenting an address, he was knighted by King George. During the rest of his life, which was prolonged to September, 1729, when he died at Carmarthen, he continued to publish various periodicals and tracts, none of which is of great importance. In December, 1718, Lady Steele died, and four years later her husband produced a fourth comedy, that "Conscious Lovers" which honest Parson Adams declared to be (in parts) "almost solemn enough for a sermon," but which is nevertheless, perhaps by reason of Cibber's collaboration, one of the best constructed of his plays. Part of Mr. Aitken's second volume is occupieced by Steele's connection, as patentee and manager, with Drury Lane Theatre, concerning which he has brought together much curious and hitherto unpublished information. Other points upon which new light is thrown are the publication of "The Ladies Library," the establishment of the "Censorium," Steele's application for the Mastership of the Charterhouse, Mr. John Rollos and his mechanical hoop-petticoat, the failure of Steele's once famous contrivance, the Fish-Pool, his connection with the Dyers, etc. But it would be impossible to schedule in detail the numerous instances in which Mr. Aitken has been able either to supplement the existing material or to supersede it by new. A careful and exhaustive bibliography is not the least of his achievements.

As regards Steele's character, Mr. Aitken's inquiries further enforce the conclusion that in any estimate of it, considerable allowance must be made for the influence of that miserable and malicious contemporary gossip, of which, as Fielding says, the "only basis is lying." For much of this, Steele's ill-starred excursion into faction is obviously responsible. "Scandal between Whig and Tory," said the ingenuous and experienced author of the "New Atalantis," "goes for nothing," and apart from her specific recantation in the dedication to "Lucius," this sentiment alone should suffice to discredit her, at all events in the absence of anything like corroborative evidence. The attacks of Dennis and the rest are as worthless. We know that Steele was not "descended from a trooper's horse," and we know that he was not "born at Carrickfergus" (whatever social disqualification that particular accident may entail). Why should we listen to the circulators of these or other stories — those of Savage, for example? With respect to Swift, the most dangerous because the most powerful detractor, it is clear, from the way in which he speaks of Steele and Steele's abilities before the strife of party had estranged them, that, if they had never quarrelled, he would have ranked him only a little lower than Addison.¹ And if Steele has suffered from scandal and misrepresentation, he has also suffered from his own admissions. The perfect frankness and freedom of his letters has been accepted too literally. Charming and unique as they are, they leave upon many, who do not sufficiently bear in mind their extremely familiar character, an ill-defined impression that he was over-uxorious, over-sentimental. But a man is not necessarily this for a few extravagant billets-doux, or many irreproachable persons who now, in the time-honoured words of Mr. Micawber, "walk erect before their fellow-men," would incur the like condemnation. Again, it is, to all appearance, chiefly due to the careless candour of some half-dozen of these documents that Steele has been branded as a drunkard. The fact is that, in an age when to take too much wine was no disgrace, he was neither better nor worse than his contemporaries; and there is besides definite evidence that he was easily overcome—far more easily than Addison. As regards his money difficulties, they cannot be denied. But they were the difficulties of improvidence and not of profligacy, of a man who, with Fielding's joy of life and Goldsmith's "knack of hoping," always rated an uncertain income at its highest and not at its average amount, and who, moreover, paid his debts before he died. For the rest, upon the question of his general personality, it will suffice to cite one unimpeachable witness, whose testimony has only of late years come to light. Berkeley, who wrote for the Guardian, and visited Steele much at Bloomsbury (where he saw nothing of Savage's bailiffs in livery), speaks expressly, in a letter to Sir John Perceval, of his love and consideration for his wife, of the generosity and benevolence of his temper, of his cheerfulness, his wit, and his good sense. He should hold it, he says, a sufficient recompense for writing the "Treatise on Human Knowledge" that it gained him "some share in the friendship of so worthy a man." The praise of Berkeley — Berkeley, to whom Pope gives "every virtue under heaven," and who is certainly one of the noblest figures of the century — outweighs whole cartloads of Grub-street scandal and skip-kennel pamphleteers.

¹ Swift's extraordinary pertinacity of hatred to Steele cannot wholly be explained by his sense of Steele's ingratitude. Steele had wounded him hopelessly in his most vulnerable part — he had laughed at his pretensions to political omnipotency, and he had (as Swift thought) also challenged his Christianity.

With Steele's standing as a man of letters we are on surer ground, since his own works speak for him without the distortions of tradition. To the character of poet he made no pretence, nor could he, although — witness the Horatian lines to Marlborough, which Mr. Aitken now dates 1709 — he possessed the eighteenth-century faculty of easy octosyllabics. Of his plays it has been said that they resemble essays rather than dramas, a judgment which sets one wondering what would have been the critic's opinion if Steele had never written the Spectator, and the Tatler. It is perhaps more to the point that their perception of strongly marked humorous character is far more obvious than their stage-craft, and that their shortcomings in this latter respect are heightened by Steele's debatable endeavours not (as Cowper says) "to let down the pulpit to the level of the stage," but to lift the stage to a level with the pulpit. As a political writer, his honesty and enthusiasm were not sufficient to secure him permanent success in a line where they are not always thrice-armed that have their quarrel just; and it is no discredit to him that he was unable to contend against the deadly irony of Swift. It is as an essayist that he will be best remembered. In the past, it has been too much the practice to regard him as the humbler associate of Addison. We now know that he deserves a much higher place; that Addison, in fact, was quite as much indebted to Steele's inventive gifts as Steele could possibly have been indebted to Addison's sublimating spirit. It may be that he was a more negligent writer than Addison; it may be that he was inferior as a literary artist; but the genuineness of his feelings frequently carries him farther. Not a few of his lay sermons on anger, pride, flattery, magnanimity, and so forth, are unrivalled in their kind. He rallied the follies of society with unflinching tact and good-humour; he rebuked its vices with admirable courage and dignity; and he wrote of women and children as, in his day, no writer had hitherto dared to do. As the first painter of domesticity, the modern novel owes him much. But modern journalism owes him more, since—to use some words of his great adversary—he “refined it first, and showed its use.”

Mr. Aitken's book has been described in the title to this paper as the “latest” Life of Steele. It will probably be the “last.” No one, at all events, is likely to approach the subject again with the same indefatigable energy of research. To many of us, indeed, Biography, conceived in this uncompromising fashion, would be a thing impossible. To shrink from no investigation, however tedious, to take nothing at second-hand, to verify everything, to cross-examine everything, to leave no smallest stone unturned in the establishment of the most infinitesimal fact—these are conditions which presuppose a literary constitution of iron. It is but just to note that the method has its drawbacks. So narrow an attention to minutiae tends to impair the selective power, and the defect of Mr. Aitken's work is, almost of necessity, its superabundance. It will be said that his determination to discover has sometimes carried him too far afield ; that much of these two handsome volumes might with advantage have been committed to the safe-keeping of an appendix ; that the mass of detail, in short, is out of proportion to its actual relevance. To this, in all likelihood, the author would answer that his book is not designed (in Landor's phrase) to lie —

“ With summer sweets, with albums gaily drest, Where poodle snifts at flower between the leaves ; ” that he does not put it forward as a study or critical monograph ; but that it is a leisurely and conscientious effort, reproducing much out-of-the-way information which is the lawful prize of his individual bow and spear ; and that, rather than lose again what has been so painfully acquired, he is prepared to risk the charge of surplusage, content if his labours be recognised as the fullest and most trustworthy existing contribution towards the life and achievements of a distinguished man of letters who died nearly one hundred and seventy years ago. And this recognition his labours undoubtedly deserve.

THE AUTHOR OF "MONSIEUR TONSON."

"NEVER have a porch to your paper." Acting upon this excellent maxim of the late Master of Balliol, we may at once explain that "Monsieur Tonson" is the title of a long-popular recitation. It recounts, in rhyme of the Wolcot and Colman order, how, in the heyday of hoaxes and practical joking, a wag, called King in the verses, persecutes an unhappy French refugee in St. Giles's with repeated nightly inquiries for an imaginary "Mr. Thompson," until at length his maddened victim flies the house. And here comes in the effective point of the story. After a protracted absence abroad, the tormentor returns to London, when the whim seizes him to knock once more at the old door with the old question. By an extraordinary coincidence the Frenchman has just resumed residence in his former dwelling.

Without one thought of the relentless foe,
 Who, fiend-like, haunted him so long ago,
 Just in his former trim he now appears :
 The waistcoat and the nightcap seemed the same,
 With rushlight, as before, he creeping came,
 And KING'S detested voice astonish'd hears, — the result being that he takes flight again, “and ne'er is heard of more.” The author of this jeu d'esprit was John Taylor, the oculist and journalist ; and it originated in a current anecdote, either actually founded on fact or invented by a Governor of Jamaica. After a prosperous career in prose, Taylor versified it for Fawcett, the comedian, who was giving recitations at the Freemasons' Tavern. It had an extraordinary vogue ; was turned by Moncrieff into a farce (in which Gatti, and afterwards Matthews, took the leading part of Monsieur Morbleu, the Frenchman) ; was illustrated by Robert Cruikshank, and still, we are told, makes furtive appearance in popular “Reciters.” By describing himself on the title-page of his memoirs as “Author of ‘Monsieur Tonson,’” its writer plainly regarded the poem as his passport to fame ; and whether one agrees with him or not, it may safely be taken as a pretext for some account of the gossiping and discursive volumes which contain his recollections.

John Taylor's grandfather, also John, was a person of considerable importance in his day, being indeed none other than the notorious oculist, or "Ophthalmiater," known as the "Chevalier" Taylor. Irreverent persons seem to have hinted that, as a matter of fact, this new-fangled Ophthalmiater meant no more than old Quack "writ large;" and one William Hogarth, generally on the side of the irreverent, hitched the Chevalier into a well-known satirical etching which collectors entitle indifferently "Consultation of Physicians" or "Company of Undertakers." Here the gifted recipient (as per advertisement) of so many distinctions "Pontifical, Imperial, and Royal," appears ignobly with Mrs. Sarah Mapp, the Epsom bone-setter, and that famous Dr. Joshua Ward, referred to by Fielding, whose pill (like a much-vaunted nostrum of our own day) had the property of posting at once to the part affected. Yet the Chevalier, despite inordinate vanity, and a fondness for fine clothes which made him fair game for the mocker, was undoubtedly a man of ability. "He has a good person, is a natural orator, and has a facility of learning foreign languages" — says Dr. King, who met him at Tunbridge; and apart from the circumstance that he had been a pupil of Cheselden the anatomist, he was really a very skilful operator for cataract, and wrote a long list of works or pamphlets on the eye. He was a familiar figure in the different Courts of Europe for his cures, real and imaginary, the story of which he relates — without showing any “remarkable diffidence in recording his own talents and attainments,” says his grandson — in three volumes of Memoirs,¹ having a longer title-page than that of “Pamela.” Judging from his own account (which should probably be taken with the fullest allowance of cautionary salt), his experiences must have been peculiar, and his visiting list unusually varied. He asserts, without much detail, that he knew Lord Bath and Jack Sheppard; Mary Tofts, the Godalming rabbit-breeder, and Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough.

¹ “The History of the Travels and Adventures of the Chevalier John Taylor, Ophthalmiater . . . Author of 45 works in different Languages: the Produce for upwards of Thirty years, of the greatest Practice in the Cure of distempered Eyes, of any in the Age we live [sic] — Who has been in every Court, Kingdom, Province, State, City, and Town of the least Consideration in all Europe, without exception. Written by Himself . . . Qui Visum Vitam Dat. London: J. Williams, 1761-2.” This must not be confounded with the “Life” in two volumes published by Cooper in 1761, a coarse catchpenny invention by Lord Chesterfield’s profligate protégé, the bricklayer poet, Henry Jones.

He also professed acquaintance with Marshals Saxe and Keith ; with Pöllnitz of the " Virginians ;" with Theodore, the bankrupt King of Corsica ; with Boerhaave, Albinus, Linnæus, Pope, Voltaire, Metastasio, La Fontaine, etc. (If the fabulist be intended, there is clearly some mistake, since La Fontaine departed this life about eight years before the Chevalier was born.) He was a witness, he says, of the execution of Counsellor Christopher Layer for high treason, and he affirms that he was actually present in the Old Bailey upon that memorable occasion when Blake (alias Blue-skin) tried to cut the throat of Jonathan Wild. Having seen many men and cities, and full of honours — chiefly of foreign manufacture — the Chevalier died in a convent at Prague in 1780. At the time of his death, it may be noted, the famous Ophthalmiater was himself blind. He can scarcely be said to have wanted a vates sacer, for Churchill mentions him in " The Ghost : " —

Behold the CHEVALIER —
As well prepar'd, beyond all doubt,
To put Eyes in, as put them out.

And Walpole gave him a not very happy epigram : —

Why Taylor the quack calls himself Chevalier,
'T is not easy a reason to render ;
Unless blinding eyes, that he thinks to make clear,
Demonstrates he's but a Pretender.

His only son, John Taylor the Second, was also an oculist, but not of equal eminence, although one of his cures — that of a boy born blind — obtained the honours of a pamphlet by Oldys the antiquary, and a portrait by Worlidge the etcher. At the Chevalier's death John Taylor applied for the post, which his father had held, of oculist to the King, but the appointment was given to the Baron de Wenzel, one of the Chevalier's pupils, who had been fortunate enough to operate successfully on the old Duke of Bedford, of "Junius" notoriety. To John Taylor the Second succeeded John Taylor the Third, the "Author of 'Monsieur Tonson.'" Beginning life as an oculist, like his father and grandfather, he achieved considerable reputation in that capacity, and by good luck obtained at Wenzel's death the very appointment which his father had failed to secure. But in mid-career he relinquished his profession for journalism. For many years he was proprietor and editor of the Sun newspaper, and in 1827 he also published a couple of volumes of prologues, epilogues, sonnets, and occasional verses. His chief reputation, however, was that of a raconteur. "In his latter days," says the Literary Gazette, in its obituary notice of May 19, 1832, he "was, perhaps, as entertaining in conversation, with anecdote, playfulness, and satire, as any man within the bills of mortality." Many of his good things are preserved in the two volumes of "Records of My Life" which appeared shortly after his death,¹ to the compilation of which he was impelled by the perfidy of a former partner and the invitation of an "eminent publisher," presumably Mr. Edward Bull, of Holles Street, whose imprint the volumes bear. His recollections are set down without any other method than a certain rough grouping; they have the garrulity and the repetitions of the advanced age at which they were penned; but they contain, in addition to a good deal that he had heard from others, much that had come within his own experiences. As he professes strict veracity, it is from the latter class that we shall chiefly make selection, beginning as in duty bound, with the anecdotes of literary men.

¹ "Records of my Life; by the late John Taylor, Esquire, Author of 'Monsieur Tonson.'" 2 vols. London: Bull, 1832. The copy belonging to the present writer contains, besides inserted photographs, "Addenda" by John Stirling Taylor, the author's son.

Concerning Johnson and Goldsmith he has not much to say beyond the fact that, as a boy, he had once delivered a letter for the latter at the Temple, but without seeing him. It is, however, to the "Author of 'Monsieur Tonson'" that we owe the historic episode of the borrowed guinea slipped under the door, which recurs so prominently in all Goldsmith's biographies; while he tells one anecdote of Johnson which, as far as we can discover, has escaped Dr. Birkbeck Hill. According to Dr. Messenger Monsey, physician of Chelsea Hospital — a rough, Abernethy sort of man, whom his admirers compared with Swift — upon one occasion, when the age of George III. was under discussion, Johnson burst in with a "Pooh! what does it signify when such an animal was born, or whether he had ever been born at all?" — an ultra-Jacobital utterance which the Whig narrator did not neglect to accentuate by reminding his hearers that to this very "usurper" Johnson subsequently owed his pension. But as Monsey did not like the Doctor, and Taylor calls him a "literary hippopotamus," the incident is probably exaggerated. Then there is a story of Dr. Parr, in which is concerned another of the Johnson circle, Edmund Burke. During the Hastings trial Parr was effusive (Taylor says "diffusive") about the speeches of Sheridan and Fox, but silent as to Burke's, a circumstance which led that distinguished orator to suggest interrogatively that he presumed Parr found it faultless. "Not so, Edmund," was the reply, in Parr's best Johnsonese; "your speech was oppressed by epithet, dislocated by parenthesis, and debilitated by amplification," — a knock-me-down answer to which "Edmund" made no recorded rejoinder. There is a touch of the lexicographic manner in another anecdote, this time of Hugh Kelly, the stay-maker turned dramatist and barrister, who was so proud of his silver that he kept even his spurs upon the sideboard. Examining a lady at the trial of George Barrington, the pick-pocket, Kelly inquired elaborately, "Pray, madam, how could you, in the immensity of the crowd, determine the identity of the man?" As he found that his question was wholly unintelligible to the witness, he reduced it to "How do you know he was the man?" "Because," came the prompt reply, "I caught his hand in my pocket." Taylor apparently knew both the Boswells, father and son, and, indeed, playfully claims part-authorship in the famous "Life" upon the ground that he had suggested the substitution of "comprehending" for "containing" in the title-page; and certainly — if that be proof —

“comprehending” is there, and “containing” is not.¹ He had also relations with Wilkes, whom he praises for his wit and learning. For his learning we have the evidence of his “Catullus,” but his wit seems, like much wit of his day, to have been largely based upon bad manners. Once a certain over-goaded Sir Watkin Lewes said angrily to him, “I’ll be your butt no longer.” Wilkes at once mercilessly retorted, “With all my heart. I never like an empty one.”

Wolcot and Caleb Whitefoord of the “Cross Readings,” Richard Owen Cambridge and Richard Cumberland — all figure in the “Records.” Taylor thinks that the famous Whitefoord addition to “Retaliation” was really by Goldsmith — a supposition which is not shared by modern Goldsmith critics. Of Wolcot there is a lengthy account, the most striking part of which refers to his last hours. Taylor asked him, on his death-bed, whether anything could be done for him. “His answer, delivered in a deep and strong tone, was, ‘Bring back my youth,’” after which futile request he fell into the sleep in which he died. Cambridge Taylor seems to have known but slightly, and apart from a long story, for the authenticity of which he does not vouch, has nothing memorable to say of him, except that he declared he had written his "Scribleriad" while under the hands of his hairdresser, — a piece of fine-gentleman affectation which recalls Molière's poetaster. But Taylor tells a story of Cumberland which is at least well invented. Once — so it runs — Cumberland stumbled on entering a box at Drury Lane Theatre, and Sheridan sprang to his assistance. "Ah, sir!" said the writer of the "West Indian," "you are the only man to assist a falling author." "Rising, you mean," returned Sheridan, thus, either by malice or misadventure, employing almost the exact words which, in the Critic, he had put into the mouth of "Sir Fretful Plagiary," — a character admittedly modelled upon Cumberland himself. Sheridan, too, supplies more than one page of these recollections, and their writer professes to have been present when he (Sheridan) spoke as follows concerning a pamphleteer who had written against him: "I suppose that Mr. — thinks I am angry with him, but he is mistaken, for I never harbour resentment. If his punishment depended on me, I would show him that the dignity of my mind was superior to all vindictive feelings. Far should I be from wishing to inflict a capital punishment upon him, grounded on his attack upon me ; but yet on account of his general character and conduct, and as a warning to others, I would merely order him to be publicly whipped three times, to be placed in the pillory four times, to be confined in prison seven years, and then, as he would enjoy freedom the more after so long a confinement, I would have him transported for life."

¹ For exact title, see post, “Boswell’s Predecessors and Editors.”

At the date of the above deliverance, the scene of which was a tavern in Portugal Street, — perhaps the now vanished Grange public house, — Sheridan was lessee of Drury Lane Theatre. In later years Taylor was to become acquainted with another Drury Lane magnate, Lord Byron, with whom he corresponded and exchanged poems. Concerning Lady Byron he reports that Mrs. Siddons, whom he regarded as an unimpeachable authority, assured him that if she had no other reason to admire his Lordship's judgment and taste, she should be fully convinced of both by his choice of a wife, — a sentiment which should certainly be set down to the credit of a lady who is by no means overpraised. Among the Portugal Street roisterers was Richard Wilson, the painter. According to Taylor he must have been vintner as well, since most of the wine came from his cellar in Lincoln's Inn Fields (Great Queen Street), the company having condemned the tavern beverages. Apart from the fact that Wilson's "favourite fluid," like Churchill's, was porter, this particular is more out of keeping with his traditional lack of pence than another, also related by Taylor, in which he says that, upon one occasion, having procured Wilson a commission, he was obliged to lend him the money to buy brushes and canvas. With artists, however, Taylor's acquaintance was not large. He knew Peters the academician, afterwards the Rev.; and he knew Ozias Humphry the miniaturist, who in his old age became totally blind. With West and his rival Opie (who, like Wilson, lived in Queen Street) he was apparently on familiar terms, and he was often the guest of the former at the dinners which the Royal Academy of that day were accustomed to have on the anniversary of Queen Charlotte's birthday. Of West he speaks warmly; does not mention his vanity, and attributes much of his baiting by Peter Pindar to that satirist's partiality for Opie. Fuseli, another resident in Great Queen Street, and Northcote, also flit through the record; and there is reference to a supper at Reynolds's, where it was idly debated whether Johnson would have written the "Reflections on the French Revolution" better than Burke, and where — on the topic De mortuis — Reynolds propounded the practical dictum that "the dead were nothing, and the living everything," — a sentiment which shows him to have been in agreement with the On doit des égards aux vivants of Voltaire. But, on the whole, the annalist's memories of artists are of meagre interest, and the only compact anecdote related of a member of the profession refers to the architect known popularly as "Capability" Brown. Once when Lord Chatham, disabled by the gout, was hobbling painfully down the stairs of St. James's Palace, Brown had the good fortune to assist him to his carriage. Lord Chatham thanked him, adding pleasantly, "Now, sir, go and adorn your country." To which Brown the capable retorted neatly, "Go you, my Lord, and save it."

Of anecdotes of actors and actresses the Author of "Monsieur Tonson" has no lack. As already stated, he was much in request for prologues and epilogues; he was an active and intelligent dramatic critic, and he was, moreover, intimate with most of the leading players of his day. To make any adequate summary of so large a body of theatrical gossip would be difficult; but a few stories may be selected concerning some of the older men. Of Garrick, whom Taylor's father had seen when he first came out at Goodman's Fields, and regarded as the Shakespeare of actors, he tells a number of stories which, unfamiliar when the "Records" were published, are now fairly well-known. Taylor was, however, the first, we believe, to record that effective anecdote of Mrs. Clive, who, watching Garrick from behind the scenes, between smiles and tears, burst at last into emphatic and audible expression of her belief that he could "act a gridiron;" and Taylor also says that once, when his father was performing an operation for cataract, Garrick, who was present, so enthralled the nervous patient by his humour, that he forgot both his fears and his pain. Of Garrick's Lady Macbeth, Mrs. Pritchard, Taylor, deriving his information from his father, speaks highly, and considers that Johnson degraded her memory by describing her as "an ignorant woman, who talked of her gownd." (Mrs. Pritchard had acted the heroine in the great man's Irene, and it is possible that he was prejudiced.) To Macklin, another celebrated Macbeth, — being, indeed, the first who performed that part in the old Scottish garb, — Taylor makes frequent reference. He saw him in Iago, in Sir Paul Pliant of the Double

Dealer, and in other characters ; but held that he was “too theoretical for nature. He had three pauses in his acting — the first, moderate ; the second, twice as long ; but his last, or ‘grand pause,’ as he styled it, was so long that the prompter on one occasion, thinking his memory failed, repeated the cue . . . several times, and at last so loud as to be heard by the audience.” Whereupon Macklin in a passion rushed from the stage and knocked him down, exclaiming, “The fellow interrupted me in my grand pause !” Quin, Macklin’s rival, was also given to inordinate pauses, and once, while acting Horatio in Rowe’s “Fair Penitent” (the play in which George Primrose of Wakefield was to have made his début), he delayed so long to reply to the challenge of Lothario that a man in the gallery bawled out, “Why don’t you give the gentleman an answer, whether you will or no ?” Taylor cites a good many instances of Quin’s gourmandise, and of his ready, but rather full-flavoured wit. He is perhaps best when on his dignity. Once at Allen’s of Prior Park (Fielding’s “Allworthy”), the imperious Warburton attempted to degrade the guest into the actor by insidiously pressing Quin to recite something. Quin accordingly spoke a speech from Otway’s “Venice Preserved” which contained the lines, —

"Honest men

Are the soft easy cushions on which knaves Repose and fatten," — delivering them with so unmistakable an application to Allen and Warburton respectively that he was never again troubled by the divine for a specimen of his declamatory powers. Another story told by Taylor of Quin may be quoted, because it introduces Mrs. Clive. She had invited Quin to stay at Cliveden (Little Strawberry), of which the appointments were on as minute a scale as those of Petit-Trianon. When he had inspected the garden, she asked him if he had noticed a tiny piece of water which she called her pond. "Yes, Kate," he replied, "I have seen your basin, but did not see a wash-ball." Taylor seems surprised that Walpole should have been so much attracted to Mrs. Clive, whose personal charms were small, and whose manners, he alleges, were rough and vulgar. He quotes, with apparent approval, some unpublished lines by Peter Pindar, criticising the epitaph in which Walpole declared that Comedy had died with his friend: —

"Horace, of Strawberry Hill I mean, not Rome,
Lo! all thy geese are swans, I do presume;
Truth and thy verses seem not to agree;

Know Comedy is hearty, all alive;
 The Comic Muse no more expired with Clive
 Than dame Humility will die with thee."

But one need no more swear to the truth of an epitaph than of a song. Catharine Clive had both humour and good-humour; her indefatigable needle was continually employed in the decoration of Walpole's Gothic museum, and it may be concluded that he knew perfectly what he was about. As a near neighbour, a blue stocking might have been wearisome, a beauty dangerous, and she was probably of far more use to him than either.

Except for the "gridiron" anecdote, however, Mrs. Clive does not play any material part in Taylor's chronicle. With a later luminary, Miss Farren, he was not actually acquainted, although he had met her once with Lord Derby (whom she ultimately married), and had admired her genuine sensibility in Miss Lee's "Chapter of Accidents." But he seems to have been on intimate terms with Mrs. Abington, both in her prime and also in her decline, for he was present when she degraded herself by acting Scrub in the "Beaux' Stratagem;"¹ and he had dined with her at Mrs. Jordan's, when she talked unceasingly and enthusiastically of Garrick, — a circumstance which, considering the trouble she had given him in his lifetime, may perhaps be regarded in the light of an expiatory exercise. Taylor also knew Mrs. Siddons, of whom he speaks warmly, saying that he had been intimate with her for years, and had "many of her letters, with which even her request would not induce him to part." He was, as a matter of fact, connected with the Kemble family by marriage, his first wife, Mrs. Duill, having been a Miss Satchell, whose sister had married Stephen Kemble, a huge Trulliber of a man who could act Falstaff without stuffing, and had gone through all the experiences of a strolling player, even to lurching in a Yorkshire turnip-field.¹ Of John Kemble, and Charles Kemble and his wife there is much in the "Records," but most of it has grown familiar by repetition. There is also much of other actors and actresses, as might be expected from one who had seen Dodd as Sir Andrew Aguecheek, Lewis as Mercurio, "Gentleman" Smith as Charles in the "School for Scandal," and Palmer — Lamb's

¹ There is a caricature of Mrs. Abington in this part by James Sayer.

¹ Stephen George Kemble died in June, 1822. While manager of the Newcastle Theatre, he was on intimate terms with Thomas Bewick, who engraved a portrait of him as Falstaff for a benefit ticket.

Jack Palmer — as Sneer in the “ Critic.” Taylor’s portrait, in the poem called “ The Stage,” of the last-named performer may serve as an example of its writer’s powers as a rival of Lloyd and Churchill : —

“ Where travell’d fops, too nice for nature grown,
 Are sway’d by affectation’s whims alone ;
 Where the sly knave, usurping honour’s guise,
 By secret villainy attempts to rise ;
 Or where the footman, negligently gay,
 His master’s modish airs would fain display ;
 But chiefly where the rake, in higher life,
 Cajoles the husband to seduce the wife,
 And, fraught with art, but plausible to sight,
 The libertine and hypocrite unite —
 PALMER from life the faithful portrait draws,
 And calls unrivall’d for our warm applause.”

In the foregoing plunges into the Taylorian bran-pie, we have, as promised at the outset, depended rather upon the writer’s personal experiences than upon his miscellaneous anecdotes. But we have by no means exhausted the personal experiences. Not to mention political magnates like Lord Chatham and Lord Chesterfield, whom we have almost entirely neglected, there are many references to characters difficult to classify, but no less diverting to recall. As a boy, Taylor had seen Coan, the Norfolk dwarf of Churchill’s Rosciad ("Whilst to six feet the vig'rous stripling grown, Declares that GARRICK is another COAN"), then lodging at a tavern in the Five Fields (now Eaton Square) kept by one of the Pinchbecks who invented the metal of that name; and he remembered the boxer Buckhorse, a debased specimen of humanity, whose humour consisted in permitting the Eton and Westminster boys to punch his battered features at the modest rate of a shilling the blow.¹ He had also visited the famous Mrs. Teresa Cornelys, when that favourite of the Nobility and Gentry had fallen upon evil days, and was subsisting precariously as a purveyor of asses' milk at Knightsbridge; he had known intimately a certain Mr. Donaldson, who, like Horace Walpole, had gone in danger of his life from the "gentleman highwayman," James Maclean; and at Angelo's in Carlisle Street, Soho, he had frequently met the Chevalier D'Eon in his woman's dress, but old, and equally decayed in manners and means. It is singular that the Author of "Monsieur Tonson," with all his dramatic proclivities, should never have attempted a play. As far as can be ascertained, however, his sole contribution to stage literature, prologues and epilogues excepted, was the lines for the rhyming Butler in Mrs. Inchbald's "Lovers' Vows," that version of Kotzebue's "Das Kind der Liebe" which figures so conspicuously in Miss Austen's "Mansfield Park." "Lovers' Vows" would appear to be fertile in suggestion, for it was in playing this piece that Charles Kean fell in love with his future wife, Miss Ellen Tree, sister of the musical Maria (Mrs. Bradshaw), who lives for ever in Henry Luttrell's happy epigram: —

¹ Buckhorse can hardly have been familiar with Roman law. But twenty-five pieces of copper (about the value of a shilling) was the legal tender, or solatium, for a blow on the face (cf. the story of Veratius in Gibbon's forty-fourth chapter).

"On this Tree when a nightingale settles and sings,
The Tree will return her as good as she brings."

BOSWELL'S PREDECESSORS AND EDITORS.

WRITING to Pope in July, 1728, concerning the annotation of the Dunciad, Swift comments upon the prompt oblivion which overtakes the minor details of contemporary history. "Twenty miles from London nobody understands hints, initial letters, or town facts and passages; and in a few years not even those who live in London." A somewhat similar opinion was expressed by Johnson. "In sixty or seventy years, or less," he said, "all works which describe manners require notes." His own biography is a striking case in point. Almost from the beginning the editorial pen was freely exercised upon it, and long before the lesser term he mentions, it was already — to use an expressive phrase of Beaumarchais — "rongée d'extraits et couverte de critiques." With Mr. Croker's edition of 1831 it might have been thought that the endurable limits of illustration and interpretation had been reached, and for some time, indeed, that opinion seems to have obtained. But within a comparatively brief period three other editions of importance have made their appearance, each of which has its specific merits, while four and twenty years ago was published another (reissued in 1888), which had, at least, the merit of an excellent plan. Boswell's book itself may now, in Parliamentary language, be taken for "read." As Johnson said of Goldsmith's Traveller, "its merit is established, and individual praise or censure can neither augment nor diminish it." But the publication, in Colonel Grant's excellent brief memoir, of the first systematic bibliography of Johnson's works, coupled with the almost simultaneous issue by Mr. H. R. Tedder, the able and accomplished librarian to the Athenæum Club, of a bibliography of Boswell's masterpiece, affords a sufficient pretext for some review of Boswell's editors and predecessors.

Johnson died on the evening of Monday, December 13, 1784. According to a letter dated May 5, 1785, from Michael Lort to Bishop Percy, printed in Nichols' "Literary Illustrations," the first Life appeared on the day following the death. But this is a manifest mistake, as reference to contemporary newspapers, or even to the pamphlet itself, should have sufficed to show. At p. 120 is an account of Johnson's funeral, which did not take place until Monday, December 20. Moreover, the portrait by T. Trotter, for which Johnson is said to have sat "some time since," is dated the 16th, and in an article in the Gentleman's Magazine for December it is expressly stated that the book "was announced before the Doctor had been two days dead," and appeared on the ninth morning after his death. It may even be doubtful if this is strictly accurate, as the first notification of the pamphlet in the Public Advertiser appears on Thursday, the 23rd, and promises its publication that week. Its title is "The Life of Samuel Johnson, LL.D., with Occasional Remarks on his Writings, an Authentic Copy of his Will, and a Catalogue of his Works, &c.," 1785. It is an octavo of iv-144 pages, and its publisher was the G. Kearsley, of 46 Fleet Street, who issued so many of Goldsmith's works. Its author, too, is supposed to have been the William Cook who subsequently wrote recollections of Goldsmith in the European Magazine for 1793. In Kearsley's advertisement great pains are taken to avert the possible charge of catchpenny haste, by the statement that the book had been drawn up for some time, but had been withheld from motives of delicacy. This anticipatory defence is, however, somewhat neutralized by a communication in the Gentleman's Magazine for December, in which certain of its errors are excused upon the ground of "hurry." It professes, nevertheless, to be "a sketch, warm from the life," and, although speedily superseded by more leisurely efforts, is certainly not without interest as the earliest of its kind, even if it be not quite so early as it has hitherto been affirmed to be.

Cook's Life was followed by articles in the European and the Gentleman's Magazines for December, which, according to the fashion of those days, appeared at the end and not at the beginning of the month. That in the European Magazine, which was more critical than biographical, was continued through several numbers, and contains nothing to distinguish it from the respectable and laborious journey-work of the period. The sketch in the Gentleman's Magazine is of a far more meritorious character, and was from the pen of Tom Tyers, the "Tom Restless" of the Idler, and the son of Jonathan, "the founder of that excellent place of publick amusement, Vauxhall Gardens." Tyers had really known Johnson with a certain degree of intimacy, and even Boswell is obliged to admit that Tyers lived with his illustrious friend “in as easy a manner as almost any of his very numerous acquaintance.” He has certainly not caught Johnson’s style, as his memories are couched in abrupt shorthand sentences which are the reverse of Johnsonese. But apart from a certain vanity of classical quotation, with which he seems to have been twitted by his contemporaries, “Tom Restless” writes like a gentleman, and is fully entitled to the praise of having produced the first animated sketch of Johnson, who, from a sentence towards the close, appears to have anticipated that Tyers might be one day “called upon to assist a posthumous account of him.” Mr. Napier says that Tyers continued his sketch in the Gentleman’s Magazine for January, 1785. This is not quite exact, and is indeed practically contradicted by Mrs. Napier, since in the valuable volume of “Johnsoniana” which accompanies her husband’s edition, she prints no more than is to be found in the December number. What Tyers really did was to insert a number of minor corrections in the annual supplement to the Gentleman’s Magazine, and in the following number.

Without a close examination of contemporary advertisement sheets it would be difficult to fix precisely the date of publication of the next biography. It is a small duodecimo of 197 pages, entitled "Memoirs of the Life and Writings of the Late Dr. Samuel Johnson." The title-page is dated 1785. In the Preface mention is made of assistance rendered by Thomas Davies, the actor-bookseller of Russell Street, Covent Garden, who is described as "the late." The book must therefore have appeared after Thursday, May 5, when Davies died. Its author is supposed to have been the Rev. William Shaw, "a modest and a decent man," referred to in Boswell as the compiler of "an Erse Grammar," subsequently issued in 1788 as "An Analysis of the Gaelic Language." Colour is given to this supposition by the fact that another of the persons who supplied information was Mr. Elphinston, by whom Shaw was introduced to Johnson, and by the references made to the Ossianic controversy, in which Shaw did battle on Johnson's side against Macpherson. For the book itself, it is, like most of the pre-Boswellian efforts, Tyers's sketch excepted, mainly critical, and makes no attempt to reproduce Johnson's talk or sayings.

Chit-chat and personal characteristics are, however, somewhat more fully represented in what — neglecting for the moment Boswell's "Journal of a Tour to the Hebrides" — may be regarded as the next effort in the biographical sequence, the famous "Anecdotes of the Late Samuel Johnson, LL.D., during the Last Twenty Years of his Life," by Hesther Lynch Piozzi, which was published in March, 1786. Written in Italy, where she was then living, it was printed in London. Its success, as might perhaps have been anticipated from the author's long connection with Johnson, was exceptional. The first edition, like that of Fielding's "Amelia," was exhausted on the day of publication, and other editions followed rapidly. Boswell, as may be guessed, was not well disposed towards the work of his fortunate rival, and in his own book is at considerable pains to expose her "mistaken notion of Dr. Johnson's character," while his coadjutor, Malone, who tells us that she made £500 by the "Anecdotes," plainly calls her both "inaccurate and artful." We, who are neither editors nor biographers of Boswell, need not assume so censorious an attitude. That Mrs. Piozzi, by habit of mind, and from the circumstances under which her narrative was compiled, was negligent in her facts (she even blunders as to the date when she first met Johnson) may be admitted, and it is not inconceivable that, as Mrs. Napier says in the "Prefatory Notice" to her "Johnsoniana," her account would have been "more tender and true if it had been given by Mrs. Thrale instead of Mrs. Piozzi." But the cumulative effect of her vivacious and disconnected recollections (even Malone admits them to be "lively") is rather corroborative of, than at variance with, that produced by Johnson's more serious biographers. Her opportunities were great, — perhaps greater than those of any of her contemporaries, — her intercourse with Johnson was most unrestrained and unconventional, and notwithstanding all its faults, her little volume remains an essential part of Johnsonian literature.

Boswell, whose magnum opus we are now approaching, so fills the foreground with his fame that the partial obliteration of his predecessors is almost a necessary consequence. In this way Sir John Hawkins, whose "Life of Samuel Johnson, LL.D.," 1787, comes next in importance to Mrs. Piozzi's "Anecdotes," has suffered considerably; and his book, which immediately after Johnson's death was advertised as "forthcoming," is, to use the words of a recent writer, "spoken of with contempt by many who have never taken the trouble to do more than turn over its leaves." That the author seems to have been extremely unpopular can scarcely be denied. Malone, who accumulates a page of his characteristics, says that Percy called him "most detestable," Reynolds, "absolutely dishonest," and Dyer, "mischievous, uncharitable, and malignant," to which garland of dispraise the recorder adds, as his own contribution, that he was "rigid and sanctimonious." Johnson, too, styled him "an unclubable man." But against all this censure it must be remembered that he was selected as one of the first members of "The Club" (to whose promoters his peculiarities can scarcely have been unknown, for he had belonged to the earlier association in Ivy Lane), and that Johnson appointed him one of his executors. Boswell, whose vanity Hawkins had wounded by the slight and supercilious way in which he spoke of him in the "Life," could scarcely be supposed to feel kindly to him; and though he professes to have modified what he said of this particular rival on account of his death, we have no means of knowing how much he suppressed. He gives, nevertheless, what on the whole is a not unfair idea of Hawkins's volume. "However inadequate and improper," he says, "as a Life of Dr. Johnson, and however discredited by unpardonable inaccuracies in other respects, [it] contains a collection of curious anecdotes and observations which few men but its authour could have brought together." What is commendatory in this verdict is not exaggerated, and those who care enough for Johnson to travel beyond Boswell will certainly find Hawkins by no means so "ponderous" as Boswell would have us to believe. Many of the particulars he gives are certainly not to be found elsewhere, and his knowledge of the seamy side of letters in Georgian London was "extensive and peculiar."

To speak of Hawkins after Mrs. Piozzi is a course more convenient than chronological, as it involves the neglect of an intermediate biographer. But the "Essay on the Life, Character, and Writings of Dr. Samuel Johnson," from the pen of the Rev. Joseph Towers, which comes between them in 1786, has no serious import. It treats more of the writings than the character and life, and, except as the respectable effort of an educated man, need not detain us from Boswell himself, whose first offering at the shrine of his adoration was made in September, 1785, when he published the "Journal of a Tour to the Hebrides with Samuel Johnson, LL.D." The tour, of which Johnson had himself given an account in his "Journey to the Western Islands of Scotland," had taken place as far back as 1773, and Boswell's journal had lain by him ever since. But the manuscript had been lent to different persons, — to Mrs. Thrale among the rest. "I am glad you read Boswell's journal," said Johnson to her; "you are now sufficiently informed of the whole transaction, and need not regret that you did not make the tour to the Hebrides." A more emphatic testimony is contained in the "Journal" itself. Johnson, we are told, perused it diligently from day to day, and declared that he took great delight in doing so. "It might be printed," he said, "were the subject fit for printing," and further on he forbade Boswell to contract it. In his dedication to Malone, whose acquaintance he made in Baldwin's printing office while correcting the proofs, Boswell showed that he was conscious of the strong point of his work, "the numerous conversations, which (he said) form the most valuable part." In the third edition, dated August, 1786, the success of the book justified an ampler note of gratification: "I will venture to predict, that this specimen of the colloquial talents and extemporaneous effusions of my illustrious fellow-traveller will become still more valuable, when, by the lapse of time, he shall have become an ANCIENT; when all those who can now bear testimony to the transcendent powers of his mind shall have passed away; and no other memorial of this great and good man shall remain but the following Journal, the other anecdotes and letters preserved by his friends, and those incomparable works, which have for many years been in the highest estimation, and will be read and admired as long as the English language shall be spoken or understood." Whether this variation of Exegi monumentum is justifiable or not — and certainly some of the "incomparable works," have but faintly fulfilled their promise of perpetuity — Boswell's accentuation of his distinctive excellence, his admirably characteristic records of conversations, is unanswerable evidence of a settled purpose and a definite aim.

On a fly-leaf of the "Tour to the Hebrides" (not as Mr. Napier seems to suppose, confined to the third edition) was announced as "preparing for the press" the greater work by which the "Tour" was succeeded in 1791. At first it was to have been comprised in one quarto volume, but it ultimately made its appearance in two. The publisher was Charles Dilly, in the Poultry, and the title-page ran as follows: —

"The Life of Samuel Johnson, LL.D., comprehending an Account of his Studies and numerous Works, in chronological Order; a Series of his Epistolary Correspondence and Conversations with many eminent Persons; and various original Pieces of his Composition, never before published. The whole exhibiting a View of Literature and Literary Men in Great-Britain, for near half a Century, during which he flourished."

In the dedication to Sir Joshua Reynolds, referring to the earlier book, Boswell dwells upon a difference of treatment which distinguishes the "Life" from its predecessor. In the "Tour" he had, it seems, been too open in his communications, freely exhibiting to the world the dexterity of Johnson's wit, even when that wit was exercised upon himself. His frankness had in some quarters been mistaken for insensibility, and he has therefore in the "Life" been "more reserved," and though he tells nothing but the truth, has still kept in his mind that the whole truth is not always to be exposed. In the Advertisement which succeeds he enlarges upon the difficulties of his task, and the labour involved in the arrangement and collection of material; and he expresses his obligations to Malone, who had heard nearly all the book in manuscript, and had revised about half of it in type. Seventeen hundred copies of it were printed, and although the price in boards was two guineas, between May (when the book appeared) and August twelve hundred of these had been sold. Boswell, who gives this information to his friend Temple, in a letter dated the 22nd of the latter month, expected that the entire impression would be disposed of before Christmas.

This hope, however, does not appear to have been realised, since the second edition in three volumes octavo, considerably revised, and including "eight sheets of additional matter," was not published until July, 1793. During the progress of the work through the press many additional letters and anecdotes had come to hand, which were inserted in an introduction and appendix. These numerous improvements were at the same time printed in quarto form for the benefit of the purchasers of the issue of 1791, and sold at half-a-crown, under the title of "The Principal Corrections and Additions to the First Edition of Mr. Boswell's Life of Dr. Johnson." As in the "Tour to the Hebrides," the success of his labours inspired their author with a greater exultation of prefatory language. Referring to the death of Reynolds, which had taken place in the interval between the first and second editions, he says that Sir Joshua had read the book, and given "the strongest testimony to its fidelity." He has Johnsonised the land, he says farther on, and he trusts "they will not only talk but think Johnson."

He was still busily amending and retouching for a third edition when he died, on May 19, 1795, at his house, then No. 47, but now (or recently) No. 122, Great Portland Street. His task was taken up by Malone, who had been his adviser from the first, and under Malone's superintendence was issued, "revised and augmented," the third edition of 1799. From the fact that it contains Boswell's latest touches, this edition is held to be the most desirable by Johnson students. Boswell's friends contributed several notes, some of which were the work of the author's second son, James, then a student at Brasenose College, Oxford. Fourth, fifth, and sixth editions followed, all under the editorship of Malone. Then, shortly after the publication in 1811 of the last of these, Malone himself died. Seventh, eighth, and ninth editions, all avowedly or unavowedly reproducing Malone's last issue, subsequently appeared, the ninth having some additions by Alexander Chalmers. Then came what is known as the "Oxford" edition, by F. P. Walesby, of Wadham College, which contained some fresh recollections of Johnson and some stray particulars as to Boswell, whose portrait, for the first time, is added. A tiny issue in one volume, small octavo, beautifully printed in double columns at the Chiswick Press, is the only one that needs mention previous to the historical edition by the Right Honourable John Wilson Croker, published in 1831.

As will be seen, the foregoing paragraphs deal more with Johnson's earlier biographers than with the main subject of this paper, Boswell's editors. But the earlier biographers are, if not the chief, at least no inconsiderable part of the material employed by those editors, and by none more conspicuously, more ably, and at the same time more unhappily, than by the one whose labours attracted the censure of Macaulay and Carlyle. What is most distinctive in Boswell is Boswell's method and Boswell's manner. Long before, Johnson had touched upon this personal quality when writing of the Corsican tour. "Your History," he said, "is like other histories, but your Journal is in a very high degree curious and delightful. . . . Your History was copied from books; your Journal rose out of your own experience and observation. You express images which operated strongly upon yourself, and you have impressed them with great force upon your readers." From less friendly critics the verdict was the same. Walpole, though caustic and flippant, speaks to like purport; and Gray, who has been "pleased and moved strangely," declares it proves what he has always maintained, "that any fool may write a most valuable book by chance, if he will only tell us what he heard and saw with veracity." This faculty of communicating his impressions accurately to his reader is Boswell's most conspicuous gift. Present in his first book, it was more present in his second, and when he began his great biography it had reached its highest point. So individual is his manner, so unique his method of collecting and arranging his information, that to disturb the native character of his narrative by interpolating foreign material, must of necessity impair its specific character and imperil its personal note. Yet, by some strange freak of fate, this was just the very treatment to which it was subjected.

From the very outset indeed, it would seem, his text was considerably "edited." Boswell, like many writers of his temperament, was fond of stimulating his flagging invention by miscellaneous advice, and it is plain from the comparison of his finished work with his rough notes, that in order to make his anecdotes more direct and effective he freely manipulated his reminiscences. But it is quite probable — and this is a point that we do not remember to have seen touched on — that much of the trimming which his records received is attributable to Malone. At all events, when Malone took up the editing after Boswell's death, he is known to have made many minor alterations in the process of "settling the text," and it is only reasonable to suppose that he had done the same thing in the author's lifetime, a supposition which would account for some at least of the variations which have been observed between Boswell's anecdotes in their earliest and their latest forms. But the admitted alterations of Malone were but trifles compared with the extraordinary readjustment which the book, as Malone left it, received at the hands of Mr. Croker. Not content with working freely upon the text itself—compressing, omitting, transposing, as seemed good in his eyes—by a process almost inconceivable in a critic and littérateur of admitted experience, he liberally interlarded it with long extracts and letters from Hawkins, Piozzi, Cumberland, Murphy, and others of Boswell's predecessors and successors, and so turned into an irregular patchwork what the author had left a continuous and methodical design. Furthermore he incorporated with it, among other things, under its date of occurrence, the separate volume of the "Tour to the Hebrides," having first polled and trimmed that work according to his taste and fancy. Finally, he added — and this is the least questionable of his acts — an inordinate number of footnotes. Many of these, it must be conceded, are of the highest value. Penned at a time when memories of Johnson and his contemporaries were still fresh in men's minds, and collected by a writer whose industry and curiosity were as exceptional as his equipment and opportunities, they must always remain an inestimable magazine of Johnsoniana. Their worst fault is that they are more a warehouse than a treasury, and that they exhibit less of literary resource than literary incontinence.

But if the intrinsic worth of Croker's voluminous annotations has survived the verbal artillery of Macaulay and Carlyle, it has luckily been otherwise with his remodelling of Boswell's text, the principles of which were virtually abandoned in the second edition of 1835. Unfortunately, the execution of this concession to popular opinion was only partial. Although the majority of the passages added to the text were rearranged as foot-notes or distributed into appendices, the Scotch "tour" still upreared itself in the midst as a huge stumbling-block, while the journey to Wales and the letters of Johnson and Mrs. Thrale were retained. In 1847, when Mr. Croker prepared his definite edition, he continued impenitent to this extent, although he speaks in his "Advertisement" of abridgment and alteration. Nay, he even acquiesced in the perpetuation of another enormity which dates from the edition of 1835 (an edition which he only partly superintended), the breaking up of the book into chapters. This was a violation of Boswell's plan which it is impossible to describe except as an act of Vandalism. "Divisions into books and chapters," says Mr. Napier, unanswerably (if somewhat grandiloquently), "are, as it were, articulations in the organic whole of a literary composition; and this special form cannot be super-induced merely externally." Yet, all these drawbacks to the contrary, Mr. Croker's edition enjoyed a long popularity, and the edition just referred to was reprinted as late as 1876.

It would be beyond our province to trace the post-Crokerian issues of Boswell's book, which, with the exception of an illustrated edition under the superintendence of Dr. Robert Carruthers, author of the life of Pope, were mainly reprints of Malone. But from what has gone before, it will be surmised that the presentation, as far as practicable, of Boswell's unsophisticated text must sooner or later become the ambition of the modern editor. In this praiseworthy enterprise the pioneer appears to have been Mr. Percy Fitzgerald. In May, 1874, acting with the encouragement and countenance of Carlyle, to whom his work was dedicated, he published with Messrs. Bickers an edition of Boswell's "Life" in three volumes, of which the object was to exhibit Boswell's text in its first published form, and at the same time to show the alterations made or contemplated by him in the two subsequent editions with which he was concerned. Thus the reader was enabled to follow the process of revision in the author's mind, and to derive additional satisfaction from the spectacle of the naïf and highly ingenuous motives which prompted many of Boswell's rectifications and re-adjustments. As was inevitable in such a plan, the "tour to the Hebrides" was placed by itself at the end, an arrangement which had also been followed by Carruthers; the "Diary of a Tour in Wales," which Mr. Croker had turned into chap. xlvi. of his compilation, disappeared altogether; and the interpolated letters knew their place no more. The division into chapters also vanished with the restoration of the original text, which, together with Boswell's spelling, punctuation, paragraphs, and other special characteristics, were religiously preserved. By this arrangement, taken in connection with the foot-notes exhibiting the variations, the reader was placed in the position of a person having before him at one view the editions of 1791, 1793, and 1799, as well as the separate "Corrections and Additions" issued by Boswell in 1793. Mr. Fitzgerald also appended certain notes of his own; but, wherever they occurred on the same page as Boswell's work, carefully fenced them off by a line of demarcation from what was legitimate Boswell. Upon these notes, generally brief and apposite, it is not necessary to dwell. The noticeable characteristic of Mr. Fitzgerald's edition is its loyalty to Boswell, and for that, if for that only, the lovers of Johnson owe him a deep debt of gratitude.¹

In 1880, six years after the first appearance of the above edition of Boswell's "Life," Mr. Fitzgerald published, under the title of "Croker's Boswell and Boswell," a volume which was apparently the outcome of his earlier labours in this field. With the first part of this, which treats mainly of the feud between Macaulay and Croker, and the peculiarities and defects of the latter as an editor, we have no immediate concern. But the second part, which exhibits Boswell at his work, collects much valuable information with respect to his method of note-making, and, with the assistance of the curious memoranda belonging to the late Lord Houghton, published in 1874 by the Grampian Club under the title of "Boswelliana," shows how much judicious correction and adroit compression went to produce these "literary and characteristical anecdotes . . . told with authenticity, and in a lively manner," which, as Boswell explained to his friend Temple, were to form the staple of his work. Other chapters of equal interest deal with Boswell's strange antipathies and second thoughts, both of which themes, and the former especially, are of no small importance to the minute student of his labours. We have mentioned this book of Mr. Fitzgerald's, because, among the many productions of his indefatigable pen, it is the one which has always interested us most, and it is obviously, as he declares in his preface, written con amore.

¹ Mr. Fitzgerald's edition of Boswell was re-issued in 1888, with a new and interesting preface, to which was added the valuable Bibliography by Mr. H. R. Tedder, referred to at the beginning of this paper.

That the reproduction of Boswell neat—to use a convenient vulgarism—had attracted closer attention to the defects of Croker's concoction may be fairly assumed, and the volume just mentioned probably, and certainly among specialists, enforced this impression. Accordingly, in 1884, a new edition of the "Life," upon which the editor, the late Rev. Alexander Napier, vicar of Holkham, had been engaged for many years, was issued by Messrs. George Bell and Sons. It was illustrated by facsimiles, steel engravings and portraits, and was received with considerable, and even, in some quarters, exaggerated, enthusiasm. In this edition the arrangement of Boswell's text was strictly followed, and the tours in Wales and Scotland were printed separately. Many of Croker's notes were withdrawn or abridged, and Mr. Napier, in pursuance of a theory, which is as sound as it is unusual, also omitted all those in which his predecessor had considered it his duty "to act as censor on Boswell" and even on Johnson himself. The editor's duty, said Mr. Napier, "is to subordinate himself to his author, and admit that only which elucidates his author's meaning. . . . It cannot be the duty of an editor to insult the writer whose book he edits. I confess that the notes of Mr. Croker which most offend are those in which, not seldom, he delights — let me be allowed to use a familiar colloquialism — to snub 'Mr. Boswell.'" In this deliverance no reasonable reader can fail to concur. Besides the editing of Croker, however, Mr. Napier added many useful notes of his own, as well as some very interesting appendices. One of these reproduces the autobiographical sketch of Johnson prefixed by Richard Wright of Lichfield, in 1805, to Miss Hill Boothby's letters; another deals with that mysterious "History of Prince Titi" which figures in Macaulay's review of Croker's first edition; a third successfully dissipates the legendary account of a meeting between Ursa Major and Adam Smith, which represents those "grave and reverend seignors" as engaged in competitive Billingsgate. "Carleton's Memoirs," Theophilus Cibber's "Lives of the Poets," and the daughters of Mauritius Lowe are also treated of in this, the newest part of Mr. Napier's labours.

But his edition also includes a valuable supplement in the shape of a volume of "Johnsoniana," collected and edited by Mrs. Napier, whose praiseworthy plan is to avoid merely fragmentary "sayings" and "anecdotes," and, as far as possible, to give only complete articles. Thus Mrs. Napier opens with Mrs. Piozzi's book, and then goes on to reprint Hawkins' collection of apophthegms, the Hill Boothby correspondence, Tyers' sketch from the Gentleman's Magazine, the essay published by Arthur Murphy in 1792 for his edition of Johnson's works, and various recollections and so forth collected from Reynolds, Cumberland, Madame D'Arblay, Hannah More, Percy, and others. But her freshest trouvaille is the diary of a certain Dr. Thomas Campbell, an Irishman who visited England in 1775, and, after the fashion of the time, recorded his impressions. This diary has a curious history. Carried to Australia by some of its writer's descendants, it was peaceably travelling towards dissolution when it was unearthed behind an old press in one of the offices of the Supreme Court of New South Wales. In 1854 it was published at Sydney by Mr. Samuel Raymond, and from that date until 1884 does not seem to have been reprinted in England. Dr. Campbell had some repute as an historian, and it was he who prepared for Percy the memoir of Goldsmith which, in 1837, was in the possession of Mr. Prior, and formed the first sketch for the straggling compilation afterwards prefixed to the well-known edition of Goldsmith's works dated 1801. Campbell's avowed object in coming to London was to "see the lions," and his notes are sufficiently amusing. He lodged at the Grecian Coffee House, and at the Hummums in Covent Garden, where once appeared the ghost of Johnson's dissolute relative, Parson Ford, the “fortem validumque combibonem Lætantem super amphora repleta” of Vincent Bourne's hendecasyllabics; he saw Woodward in Hoadly's "Suspicious Husband," and Garrick as Lusignan and Lear, in which latter character Dr. Campbell, contradicting all received tradition, considered "he could not display himself." He went to the auction-rooms in the Piazza; he went to the Foundling and the Temple and Dr. Dodd's Chapel; he went to Ranelagh and the Pantheon, where he watched those lapsed lovers, Lady Grosvenor and the Duke of Cumberland, carefully avoiding each other. He dined often at Thrale's, meeting Boswell and Baretti, and Murphy and Johnson. With the great man he was not impressed, and his portrait affords an example of Johnson as he struck an unsympathetic contemporary. According to Dr. Campbell this was his picture:—

“He has the aspect of an Idiot, without the faintest ray of sense gleaming from any one feature — with the most awkward garb, and unpowdered grey wig, on one side only of his head — he is for ever dancing the devil's jig, and sometimes he makes the most driveling effort to whistle some thought in his absent paroxisms.

He came up to me and took me by the hand, then sat down upon a sofa, and mumbled out that 'he had heard two papers had appeared against him in the course of this week — one of which was — that he was to go to Ireland next summer in order to abuse the hospitality of that place also [a reference to the recently published "Journey to the Western Islands"].' His awkwardness at table is just what Chesterfield described, and his roughness of manners kept pace with that. When Mrs. Thrale quoted something from Foster's 'Sermons' he flew in a passion, and said that Foster was a man of mean ability, and of no original thinking. All which tho' I took to be most true, yet I held it not meet to have it so set down." From this it will be perceived that Dr. Campbell was of those who identified the "respectable Hottentot" of Chesterfield's letters with the "great Lexicographer," an identification which Dr. Birkbeck Hill, in "Dr. Johnson: His Friends and His Critics," has successfully shown to be untenable.

Towards the close of 1884 Mr. Napier's edition was reissued in the "Standard Library," making six small volumes, in which some only of the portrait illustrations of the first issue were reproduced. The chief addition consisted of a series of seven letters from Boswell to his friend

Sir David Dalrymple. Extracts from this very interesting correspondence, bearing upon Boswell's first acquaintance with his Mentor, had appeared in the volume of "Boswelliana" already mentioned, but they had been but extracts. Mr. Napier gave the letters in extenso. Two years later Professor Henry Morley published, in five exceedingly handsome volumes, what, from the fact of its decoration by portraits from the brush of Sir Joshua, he christened the "Reynolds" edition. In common with all Professor Morley's work, the editing of this issue was thoroughly straightforward and sensible. A new and noticeable feature was the prefixing to each of the prefaces of the different editors a succinct account of the writer. At the end came an essay entitled the "Spirit of Johnson," to which can scarcely be denied the merit claimed for it by a competent critic of being "one of the best descriptions of Johnson's character that has ever been written." There were also elaborate indices, of which one can only say in their dispraise that they were less elaborate than that prepared by the editor who follows Professor Morley. Like Mr. Napier, Mr. Morley was largely indebted to Croker, and like Mr. Napier he freely pruned his predecessor's luxuriance.

Colonel Francis Grant's excellent little memoir in the "Great Writers" series deserves mention, because, although exceedingly unpretentious, it is the work of one who, to borrow Boswell's epithet for Malone, is certainly "Johnsonianissimus." It is impossible to turn his anecdotal pages without seeing that he is steeped in the literature of the period, and that, for him, the personages of the Boswellian drama have all the reality of living friends. His volume, too, includes a valuable bibliography by Mr. John P. Anderson of Johnson's works, which, in point of time, preceded the special bibliography of Boswell's "Life" in Mr. Fitzgerald's reprint. And this brings us to the last work on our list, the sumptuous edition by Dr. George Birkbeck Hill, issued in 1887 from the Clarendon Press, a work which was received with an almost universal chorus of praise.

That Dr. Birkbeck Hill's book is "un livre de bonne foi," there can indeed be little doubt. He is well known as a devoted worshipper at Johnson's shrine. He has been for years a persistent reviewer of books on this subject (especially Mr. Fitzgerald's), and his essays (collected in 1878 from the Cornhill and other periodicals under the title of "Dr. Johnson: His Friends and His Critics"), bear that unmistakable stamp which denotes the writer who has not crammed his subject for the purpose of preparing an article, but who has, so to speak, let the article write itself out of the fulness of his resources. Besides these he edited, in 1879, Boswell's "Journal of a Tour to Corsica" and his correspondence with Andrew Erskine. But he has crowned his former labours by this sumptuous edition with its excellent typography, its handsome page, and its exhaustive index, which last, we can well believe, must have cost him, as he says, "many months' heavy work." That he himself executed this "sublunary task," as a recent writer has described it, is matter for congratulation; that he has also verified it page by page in proof almost entitles him to a Montyon prize for exceptional literary virtue. Our only regret is that his "Preface" is touched a little too strongly with the sense of his unquestioned industry and conscientiousness. However legitimate it may be, the public is always somewhat impatient of the superbia quæsitâ meritis. Moreover, it is an extremely difficult thing to display judiciously, and, after all, as Carlyle said of Croker's attempt, the editing of Boswell is "a praiseworthy but no miraculous procedure."

This note of self-gratulation in Dr. Birkbeck Hill's introductory words is, however, but a trifling drawback when contrasted with the real merits of a work which, in these days of piping-hot publication, has much of the leisurely grace of eighteenth-century scholarship. The labour — not only the labour of which the result remains on record, but that bloomless and fruitless labour with which everyone who has been engaged in editorial drudgery can sympathise — must have been unprecedented. Nothing could be more ungracious than to smear the petty blot of an occasional inaccuracy across the wide field which has been explored so observantly — certainly it could not be the desire of those who have ever experienced the multiplied chances of error involved by transcription, press-correction, revision, and re-revision. At the same time we frankly own that we think Dr. Birkbeck Hill's edition has not escaped a dangerous defect of its qualities. It unquestionably errs on the side of excess. "I have sought," he says, "to follow him [Johnson] wherever a remark of his required illustration, and have read through many a book that I might trace to its source a reference or an allusion." And he has no doubt been frequently very fortunate, notably in his identification of the quotation which Johnson made when he heard the Highland girl of Nairne singing at her spinning-wheel, in his solution of “loplolly,” and in half a dozen similar cases. But, as regards “remarks that require illustration,” there are manifestly two methods, the moderate and the immoderate. By the one nothing but such reference or elucidation as explains the text is admissible; by the other anything that can possibly be connected with it is drawn into its train, and the motley notes tread upon each other’s heels much as, in the fairy tale, the three girls, the parson, and the sexton follow the fellow with the golden goose. To the latter of these methods rather than the former Dr. Birkbeck Hill “seriously inclines,” and almost any portion of his book would serve to supply a case in point. Take, for instance, the note at page 269, vol. i., to the verse which Boswell quotes from Garrick’s well-known “Ode on Mr. Pelham.” Neither Malone nor Croker has anything upon this, and as Boswell himself tells us that Pelham died on the day on which Mallet’s edition of Lord Bolingbroke’s works came out, and as the first line of his paragraph gives the exact date of the event, it is difficult to see what ground, and certainly what pressing need, there could be for further comment. Yet Dr. Birkbeck Hill has no less than four “illustrations.” First he tells us, from Walpole’s letters, that Pelham died of a surfeit. This suggests another quotation from Johnson himself about the death of Pope, which introduces the story of the potted lampreys. Then comes a passage from Fielding's "Journal of a Voyage to Lisbon," to the effect that he (Fielding) was at his worst when Pelham died. Lastly comes a second quotation from Walpole, this time from his "George II.," in which we are told that the king said he should now "have no more peace," because Pelham was dead. The recondite erudition of all this is incontestable, but its utility is more than doubtful. Dr. Birkbeck Hill's method is seen more serviceably at work in a note on Reynolds's visit to Devonshire in 1762. First we get a record how Northcote, "with great satisfaction to his mind," touched the skirt of Sir Joshua's coat, and this quite naturally recalls the well-known anecdote how Reynolds himself in his youth had grasped the hand of the great Mr. Pope at Christie's. The transition to Pope's own visit as a boy of twelve to Dryden at Will's Coffee House thus becomes an easy one. "Who touched old Northcote's hand?" says Dr. Birkbeck Hill. "Has the apostolic succession been continued?" and then he goes on to add: "Since writing these lines I have read with pleasure the following passage in Mr. Ruskin's 'Præterita,' chap. i. p. 16: 'When at three-and-a-half I was taken to have my portrait painted by Mr. Northcote, I had not been ten minutes alone with him before I asked him why there were holes in his carpet.' Dryden, Pope, Reynolds, Northcote, Ruskin, so runs the chain of genius, with only one weak link in it."

This is an excellent specimen of the concatenated process at the best. We are bound to add that there are many as good. We are moreover bound to admit that the examples of its abuse are by no means obtrusive. Dr. Birkbeck Hill, in short, has done his work thoroughly. His appendices — e. g. those on Johnson's Debates in Parliament, and on George Psalmanazar — are practically exhaustive, and he has left no stone unturned in his labour of interpretation. If in the result of that labour there is something of what Croker called "surplusage," it must also be conceded that Boswell's famous book has never before been annotated with equal enthusiasm, learning, and industry.¹

¹ Since this paper was first published, Dr. Birkbeck Hill has largely supplemented his Johnson labours by two volumes of letters (1892), and two more of "Johnsonian Miscellanies" (1897). There have also been several other issues of Boswell's "Life," — notably an edition in one volume by Mr. Fitzgerald, which is a marvel of cheapness, — but that of Dr. Birkbeck Hill is still unrivalled in its kind.

AN ENGLISH ENGRAVER IN PARIS.

IT is a curious fact — and, if it has not been already recorded, must assuredly have been remarked — that Fate seems always to provide the eminent painter with his special and particular interpreter on steel or copper. Thus, around Reynolds are the great mezzotinters, MacArdell, Fisher, Watson, Valentine Green. Gainsborough has his nephew Gainsborough Dupont; Constable his Lucas. For Wilson there is Woollett; for Stothard there are Heath and Finden. To come to later days, there is Turner with his Willmores and Goodalls, and Landseer with his brother and (no pun intended) his Cousens. Similarly, for Wilkie (after Burnet), the born translator into dot and line seems to have been Abraham Raimbach. It was Raimbach who engraved “The Rent Day,” “Blind Man’s Buff,” “The Village Politicians,” and the majority of Sir David’s chief works, and it is of Raimbach that we now propose to speak. Concerning his work as a craftsman, these pages could scarcely be expected to treat; and his life, the life of a man occupied continuously in a sedentary pursuit, and residing, like Stothard, almost entirely in one place, affords but little incident to invite the chronicler of the picturesque. But he nevertheless left behind him a privately printed memoir, of which a portion at least is not without its interest, — the interest attaching to every truthful record of occurrences which time has pushed backward into that perspective which transforms the trivial. In 1802 he went to Paris for a couple of months. The visits of foreigners to England have not been unattractive; and the visit of an Englishman to France, shortly after the Revolution, may also — with a few preliminary words as to the tourist — supply its memorabilia.

Raimbach was born on February 16, 1776, in Cecil Court, St. Martin's Lane, Westminster, a spot remarkable — as far as we can remember — for nothing but the fact that Mrs. Hogarth mère had died there some forty years before. His father was a naturalised Swiss; his mother a Warwickshire woman, who claimed descent from Richard Burbage, the actor of Shakespeare's day. His childhood was uneventful, save for two incidents. One of these was his falling, as a baby, out of a second-floor window, when he was miraculously "ballooned" by his long-clothes; the other, his being roused as a little boy of four by the roar of the Gordon rioters as they rushed through the streets, calling to the sleeping inhabitants to light up their windows. After a modest education, chiefly at the Library School of St. Martin's — where Charles Mathews the Elder was his schoolfellow, and Liston afterwards held a post as master — he was formally apprenticed to Ravenet's pupil, John Hall, historical engraver to George the Third, and popularly regarded as the legitimate successor of Woollett. Hall was a man of more than ordinary cultivation, one of whose daughters had married the composer Stephen Storace, — the Storace who wrote the music to Colman's "Iron Chest," and (as Raimbach recollected) superintended the rehearsals thereof from a sedan-chair, in which, arrayed in flannels, he was carried on to the stage. Hall in his day had been introduced to Garrick; and he was sometimes visited by John Kemble, who impressed the young apprentice with his solemn and sepulchral enunciation, and his manifest inability to forget, even in private life, that he was not before the footlights. Another remembered visitor was Sheridan, nervously solicitous lest Hall, who was engraving his portrait, should needlessly emphasise that facial "efflorescence" — so familiar in Gillray's caricatures — which the too-truthful Sir Joshua had neglected to disguise.

Sheridan, however, could only have appeared occasionally in the altitudes of Hall's study. But the three flights which ascended to it were often climbed by other contemporaries. Benjamin West (whose "Cromwell dissolving the Long Parliament" Hall engraved), Opie and Northcote, Flaxman and Westall, all came frequently on business and pleasure, while the eclectic arts were represented by George Steevens (the Shakespeare critic), John Ireland, (the Hogarth commentator), and Dibdin's "Quisquilius," George Baker, the print-collector and laceman of St. Paul's Churchyard. These, with Storace and his theatrical circle, must have made variety enough in a wearisome craft (for Hall's larger plates were many months in hand), and their conversation and opinions no doubt conspired to fill the young apprentice with a life-long interest in art and the stage. When at length, in August, 1796, his period of servitude came to an end, the professional outlook was by no means a cheerful one. The French Revolution was engrossing all men's thoughts, and the peaceful arts — that ars longa of the engraver in particular — were at their lowest ebb, the only patrons of prints being the booksellers. Young Raimbach's first definite employment was on Cooke's "Tales of the Genii," a task which, it may be added, was even more precarious than usual, inasmuch as it was Cooke's custom, by prearrangement, not to pay for the work if he did not approve it when finished. Fortunately, in this instance, he did approve, and Raimbach continued from time to time to reproduce for him in copper the designs for books of Thurston, the elder Corbould, and Madame D'Arblay's clever cousin, Edward Burney. He had long been an assiduous Royal Academy student, and he speedily "doubled" his profession by miniature-painting, in which — "having," as he modestly says, "some facility of execution and the very common power [?] of making an inveterate likeness" (at three guineas a head) — he attained considerable success. Then, at the end of 1801, he procured a commission to execute three plates from Smirke's paintings for Forster's "Arabian Nights." He had for some time been lodging with a French modeller in Charles Street, and by this means had improved an already respectable acquaintance with the French language. With the proceeds of his three plates in his pocket, about £70, he set out in July, 1802, for a fortnight's visit to Paris.

The short-lived Peace of Amiens, patched up by the Addington ministry, had been signed in the preceding March, and the route to the Continent, closed for ten or twelve years, was again open. The result was a rush across the Channel of all sorts and conditions of Englishmen, eager to note the changes resulting from the Revolution. Among these, the number of painters was considerable, — West, Turner, Flaxman, Shee, and Opie being all included. Securing a passport from the Secretary of State's office — a preliminary precaution which, in those days, meant an outlay of £2,5s. — Raimbach set out via Brighton and Dieppe. Competition, at this time, had reduced the coach fare to the former place to half a guinea inside. On July 9 he embarked for Dieppe in a little vessel, landing in France on the following day during a glorious sunrise, but drenched to the skin. His first impressions of the French were not unlike those of Hogarth fifty years before. The filth and slovenliness of the people, the number and shameless importunity of the beggars, the dragging of loaded carts and the bearing of heavy burdens by the weaker sex — all these, with the brusque revolutionary manners and the savage sans-culottism of the men, were things for which not even the long ear-pendants and picturesque Norman caps of the women could entirely atone. From Dieppe the traveller proceeded to Rouen in a ramshackle cabriolet, drawn by two ill-matched but wiry horses which went better than they looked. At Rouen he arrived in time for a bread riot, promptly suppressed by the soldiery; and he inspected several churches, among others St. Maclou, being no doubt attracted thereto by the famous door-carvings of Jean Goujon. Then, on the impériale of a diligence, he made his way through the delightful landscape of Northern France, by Pontoise and St. Denis, "cemetery of monarchs," to Paris, which he reached on the evening of the 12th.

At Paris he took up his quarters in that "dirtiest and noisiest of streets," the Rue Montorgueil, where, twenty-two years before, Béranger had been born. Here he was keenly sensible of those exhalations in which the French capital competed with the "Auld Reekie" of the eighteenth-century, although, in this instance, they were blended and complicated with another odour, that of cookery. But, notwithstanding an abhorrence of "evil smells" quite equal to that of Queen Elizabeth, he speedily became acclimatised, and pleasantly appreciative of the bright, cheerful, many-coloured life of the Parisian boulevards and the social attractions of the table d'hôte. In the capital, too, he found that the people were less brutal, short-spoken, and surly than in the provinces, and that the Revolution, which had disfigured their palaces and monuments,¹ had not wholly effaced their traditional politeness. On the second day after his arrival took place the annual fêtes of July in memory of the destruction of the Bastille. There were to be reviews and illuminations, fireworks on the Pont Neuf, dancing and mâts de cocagne in the Champs-Élysées and Place Vendôme, and free plays and concerts in the Tuileries gardens. But the weather was finer than the show. "The fireworks on the bridge would not go off; the concert in the garden could not be heard, and the illuminations, though in good taste, were not sufficiently general to mark a decided national feeling." It is consoling to our insular self-esteem that neither this celebration, nor that inaugurating Bonaparte as First Consul, which took place shortly afterwards, could be compared, in the opinion of this observer, with the Jubilee of George the Third, or the Coronation of George the Fourth, at both of which he subsequently assisted.

¹ The Tuileries still bore the words, "dix d'Août" painted in white letters wherever the cannon-balls had struck. Arthur Moore was looking on (Journal, 1793, i. 26).

He was naturally anxious to get a glimpse of the famous First Consul, but of this he had little hope, as Bonaparte seldom appeared in public except at a review or a theatre, and in the latter case always without previous announcement. After fruitless attempts to see the "modern Attila" at the Opera and Théâtre Français, Raimbach was at length fortunate enough to effect his object at an inspection of the garrison of Paris in the Place du Carrousel, where he paid six francs for a seat at a first-floor window. After five-and-thirty years he still remembered vividly the small, thin, grave figure, — in the blue unornamented uniform, plain cocked hat, white pantaloons and jockey boots, — which, surrounded by a brilliant staff (among whom the Mameluke Roustan was conspicuous by his eastern costume), rode rapidly down the lines at a hand-canter on Marengo, made a brief speech to the soldiers, saluted them with military formality, and then passed back under the archway of the Tuileries. Napoleon at this date was about thirty-two. Raimbach never saw him again, and beyond a casual inspection of the ladies of the Bonaparte family at Notre Dame, enjoyed no second opportunity of studying the ruling race. But there were many things of compensating interest. At the Jardin des Plantes, for instance, there was an enormous female elephant, which had been transferred by right of conquest from the Stadtholder's collection at the Hague, and had brought its English keeper with it into captivity. Then there were the noble halls and galleries of the Louvre, crowded with the fruits of French victories ("les fruits de nos victoires!"), statues and pictures of all countries, and all exhibited free of charge to an exultant public. The Apollo Belvedere from the Vatican was already installed, and while Raimbach was still at Paris arrived the famous Venus de' Médiçi. Probably so splendid a "loan collection" had never before been brought together.

It was this no doubt which attracted so many English artists to Paris, where French spolia-tion enabled them to study comparatively a pictorial collocation which nothing but the Grand Tour could otherwise have presented to them. Here, in all their glory, were Rembrandt and Rubens, with the best of the Dutch and Flemish schools. Raphael's glorious "Transfiguration;" the great rival altarpiece of Domenichino, the “Communion of St. Jerome;” Correggio’s “Marriage of St. Catherine,”—all these, together with many of the choicest specimens of the Carracci, of Guido, of Albano, of Guercino, were at this time to be seen in the long gallery of the Louvre, which Raimbach not only visited frequently, but drew in almost daily. In the magnificent Hall of Antiques, besides, he made the acquaintance of more than one contemporary French painter. Isabey, the miniaturist; Carle Vernet; his greater son, Horace, at this time a bright boy of thirteen or fourteen, were all then living in apartments adjoining the galleries, and in some cases at Government expense. To the illustrious leader of the new Imperio-Classical School, which had succeeded with its wide-striding and brickdust-coloured nudities to the rosy mignardises of Fragonard and Boucher, Raimbach was not, however, introduced. M. Jacques Louis David, whose friendship with Robespierre had not only acquainted him with the interior of a prison, but had also brought him perilously close to the guillotine itself, was for the moment living in prudent seclusion, dividing his attentions between his palette and his violoncello. Meanwhile, a good example of his manner, “The Sabines” (which Raimbach calls “Rape of the Sabines”), executed immediately after his release from the Luxembourg, and popularly supposed to allude to the heroic efforts which Madame David had made for her husband's safety, was at this time being exhibited to a public who were divided between enthusiasm for the subject and indignation at the door-money — door-money apparently having never before been charged for showing a picture. Of David's pupils and followers, Gérard, Girodet, Gros, Guérin, Ingres, and the rest, Raimbach also speaks, but, as in the case of the master himself, more from hearsay than personal experience. On the other hand, one of his own compatriots, Benjamin West, the favourite painter of George the Third (Of modern works he makes a jest Except the works of Mr. West), was very much en évidence in public places. He had succeeded Reynolds as President of the Royal Academy, and the diplomatic French notabilities were doing their best to flatter him into the belief that Bonaparte was not only the greatest of men but of art collectors. Indeed, the First Consul himself favoured this idea by personally commending West's own "Death on the Pale Horse," the finished sketch of which he had brought with him from England to exhibit at the Salon. West, whose weakness was "more than female vanity," was by no means backward in acknowledging these politic, if not perfidious, attentions, which he accepted without suspicion. "Wherever I went," he said simply, "people looked at me, and ministers and men of influence in the State were constantly in my company. I was one day in the Louvre—all eyes were upon me, and I could not help observing to Charles Fox, who happened to be walking with me, how strong was the love of Art and admiration of its professors in France." Fox, whose reputation as an orator and a patriot had preceded him, was naturally the observed of all observers, and he was besides the object of special attentions on the part of Bonaparte.

Fox's chief mission to Paris, according to his biographer, Lord Russell, was to search the archives for his "History of the Revolution of 1688." But transcribing the correspondence of Barillon did not so exclusively occupy him as to divert him from the charms of the Théâtre Français, or, as it was at this time called, the "Théâtre de la République." Fox went frequently to see that queen of tragedy Mlle. Duchesnois, of whom it was said, "qu'elle avait des larmes dans la voix."¹ He saw her in "Andromaque" and "Phèdre," and as Roxane in "Bajazet." Raimbach also, as might be anticipated from the schoolfellow of Charles Mathews and the admirer of Kemble, did not neglect the French theatres, which, he notes, were at this time more numerous than in all the other capitals of Europe put together. At the Grand Opéra, then rechristened "Théâtre de la République et des Arts," he heard the opera of "Anacréon," in which the principal male singer was François Lays, or Lais, and the foremost female that Mlle. Maillard to whom tradition assigned the part of the Goddess of Reason at the celebration of 1793, which celebration, indeed, had been arranged by Lais with the prophet of the cult, Chaumette. Raimbach, however, thought little, as a singer, of the lady, who had just succeeded to the place of her preceptress, the accomplished Mlle. St. Huberti, who, as Countess d'Entraigues, was cruelly murdered with her husband at Barnes Terrace some few years later by an Italian valet.¹ But he was charmed with the vocalisation of Lais, and delighted with the ballet, which included the elder Vestris ("Diou" de la danse) and Mme. Gardel. In particular the young engraver remembered an English hornpipe, executed in a jockey's dress by one Beaupré, which excelled anything of the kind he had ever seen in his own country. At the Théâtre Français, — possibly because his tastes lay rather in comedy than tragedy, — Raimbach says nothing of Racine and Mlle. Duchesnois. But he speaks of Monvel, the sole survivor of the old school of the Lekains and Prévilles and Barons, as still charming in spite of age and loss of teeth; and he also saw that practical joker and pet of the Parisians, Dugazon, who must have been almost as diminutive as Addison's "little Dickey," Henry Morris.¹ But after Prévile he was the prince of stage valets, and despite a tendency to exaggeration (which Raimbach duly chronicles), almost perfect in his own line. Another stage luminary mentioned by Raimbach is Monvel's daughter, Mlle. Mars, at this time only three-and-twenty, and not yet displaying those supreme qualities which afterwards made her unrivalled in Europe. But she was already seductive as an ingénue; and her performance of Angélique in "La Fausse Agnès" of Néricault Destouches (which Arthur Murphy afterwards borrowed for his farce of the "Citizen)," is declared by Raimbach to have been "replete with grace and good taste." Finally, Raimbach saw the First Consul's tragedian, Talma, then in the height of his powers, and continuing successfully those reforms of costume and declamation which he was supposed to have learned in England. John Kemble, who was also visiting Paris, where he was hospitably entertained by the French actors, was now in his turn taking hints from Talma, for it was observable that when he got back to London he adopted Talma's costume for the Orestes of the "Distressed Mother."

¹ Thackeray, who applies this to Gay, quotes it of Rubini.

¹ In 1812. There is an account of this tragedy in the "Walk from London to Kew" of Sir Richard Phillips, 1817.

¹ It was Dugazon who cajoled the original Bartholo of the Barbier, Desessarts (who was enormously fat), into applying for the post of elephant to the Court. When the irate Desessarts afterwards challenged him, Dugazon, by gravely chalking a circle upon his adversary, and proposing that all punctures outside the ring should count for nothing, turned the whole affair into ridicule.

The Italian Opera, of course, was not open, and of the remaining actors Raimbach says not very much. At the Vaudeville he saw Laporte, the leading harlequin of the day, and at Picart's Theatre in the Rue Feydeau witnessed what must have been the "Tom Jones à Londres" of M. Desforges, in which Picart himself, who was a better author than actor, took the part of the so-called "Squire Westiern." This representation, as might be expected, was amusing for its absurdities rather than its merits. But it can hardly have been more ridiculous to an Englishman than Poinciset's earlier Comédie Lyrique, where Western and "l'ami Jone" pursue the flying hart to the accompaniment of cors de chasse and the orthodox French hallali. Another (unconsciously) theatrical exhibition which Raimbach occasionally attended, was the Tribunat, one of the new Legislative bodies that at this time held its sittings in the Palais Royal, then, on that account, re-christened Palais du Tribunat. Here he met with the notorious Lewis Goldsmith, not, as afterwards, the inveterate assailant of Napoleon, but for the moment actively engaged in editing a paper called "The Argus; or, London Reviewed in Paris," which attacked the war and the English Government. At the Tribunat Goldsmith pointed out several of the minor men of the Revolution to Raimbach. But it was a colourless assembly, wholly in the power of the imperious First Consul, and its meetings had little instruction for a stranger. Goldsmith, however, was not the sole compatriot Raimbach met in the Palais Royal. In the salons littéraires he came frequently in contact with Thomas Hol-croft, of the "Road to Ruin." Holcroft had married a French wife, had a family, and was engaged in preparing those "Travels in France," which Sir Richard Phillips afterwards published. Holcroft was a friend of Opie (then also in Paris), who painted the portrait of him now at St. Martin's Place; but from Raimbach's account he must have been far more petulant and irritable than befitted the austere philosopher of his writings. Of another person whom Raimbach mentions he gives a rosier account than is given generally. At the Café Jacob in the Rue Jacob, an obscure cabaret in an obscure street, was frequently to be seen the once redoubtable Thomas Paine, then about sixty-five. Contemporaries represent him at this date as not only fallen upon evil days, but dirty in his person and unduly addicted to spirits. That the general appearance of the author of the "Rights of Man" was "mean and poverty-stricken," and that he was "much withered and care-worn," Raimbach admits, and he moreover adds that "he had sunk into complete insignificance, and was quite unnoticed by the Government." But he also describes him as "fluent in speech, of mild and gentle demeanour, clear and distinct in enunciation," and endowed with an "exceedingly soft and agreeable voice"— words which, in this connection, somehow remind one of Lord Foppington's philosophic eulogy of Miss Hoyden. Certainly they scarcely suggest the red-nosed and dilapidated personage who drank brandy and declaimed against Religion in his cups with whom modern records have acquainted us.

Raimbach's remaining experiences must be rapidly summarised. He attended the Palais de Justice, and was much impressed by the French forensic oratory. Concerning the oratory of the pulpit he is not equally enthusiastic, observing, indeed, that he should think the cause of religion derived little support from the eloquence of the clergy. But it must be remembered that at this period most of the priests were expatriated, and many of the churches were still used as warehouses and stables. One close by him in the Rue Montorgueil was, as a matter of fact, employed as a saddler's shop. He was much interested in the now dispersed collection brought together in the Musée des Monuments in the Petits-Augustins by M. Alexandre Lenoir, the artist and antiquary. This consisted of such monumental efforts as had escaped the fury of the Terror — escaping, it should be added, only miserably mutilated and defaced. Lenoir, who had received a severe bayonet wound in attempting to defend the tomb of Richelieu, had admirably arranged these waifs and strays, and the collection of eighteenth century sculpture was especially notable, as were also the specimens of stained glass. Among Raimbach's personal experiences came the successful consumption at Véry's in the Palais Royal of a fricassée of frogs. But this was done in ignorance, and not of set purpose, as in the case of the epicure, Charles Lamb, who speaks of them as "the nicest little delicate things." Raimbach's return to England, somewhat precipitated by the fury of the First Consul at the attacks upon him in the Morning Chronicle, was made by the Picardy route. At Calais he spent a day at the historical Lion d'Argent,¹ where Hogarth and so many of his fellow countrymen had been before him, and he reached Dover shortly afterwards, giving, with his party, three ringing cheers at once more treading upon English soil. He had been absent two months instead of two weeks. His impressions de voyage, which occupy nearly half his "Memoirs," would have gained in permanent charm if he had described more and reflected less. All the same, his trip to Paris as a young man in 1802 was the one event of his career, for though he went abroad again on two or three occasions, received a gold medal from the Salon in 1814, for his engraving of "The Village Politicians," was fêted by Baron Gérard in 1825, and made a Corresponding Member of the Institute ten years later, the rest of his recollections are comparatively uninteresting, except for his intercourse with Wilkie, of whom he wrote a brief biography. He died in January, 1843, in his sixty-seventh year.

¹ Mrs. Carter (Memoirs, i. 253) says, in June, 1763: "I am sorry to say it, but it is fact, that the Lion d'Argent at Calais is a much better inn than any I saw at Dover."

THE "VICAR OF WAKEFIELD" AND ITS ILLUSTRATORS.

NOT many years since, à propos of a certain volume of epistolary parodies, the paragraphists were busily discussing the different aspects which the characters of fiction present to different readers. It was shown that, not only as regards the fainter and less strongly drawn figures, — the Frank Osbaldistones, the Clive Newcomes, the David Copperfields, — but even as regards what Gautier would have called "the grotesques," — the Costigans, the Swivellers, the Gamps, — each admirer, in his separate "study of imagination," had his own idea, which was not that of another. What is true of the intellectual perception is equally true of the pictorial. Nothing is more notable than the diversities afforded by the same book when illustrated by different artists. Contrast for a moment the Don Quixotes of Smirke, of Tony Johannot, of Gustave Doré; contrast the Falstaffs of Kenny Meadows, of Sir John Gilbert, of Mr. Edwin A. Abbey. Or, to take a better instance, compare the contemporary illustrations of Dickens with the modern designs of (say) Charles Green or Frederick Barnard. The variations, it will at once be manifest, are not the mere variations arising from ampler resource or from fuller academic skill on the part of the younger men. It is not alone that they have conquered the inner secret of Du Maurier's artistic stumbling-blocks—the irreconcilable chimney-pot hat, the “terrible trousers,” the unspeakable evening clothes of the Victorian era: it is that their point of view is different. Nay, in the case of Barnard, one of the first, if not the first, of modern humorous designers, although he is studiously loyal to the Dickens tradition as revealed by “Phiz” and Cruikshank, he is at the same time as unlike them as it is well possible to be. To this individual and personal attitude of the artist must be added, among other things, the further fact that each age has a trick of investing the book it decorates with something of its own temperament and atmosphere. It may faithfully endeavour to revive costume; it may reproduce accessory with the utmost care; but it can never look with the old eyes, or see exactly in the old way. Of these positions, the “Vicar of Wakefield” is as good an example as any. Between its earlier illustrated editions and those of the last half century the gulf is wide; while the portraits of Dr. Primrose as presented by Rowlandson on the one hand and Stothard on the other are as strikingly in contrast as any of the cases above indicated. We shall add what is practically a fresh chapter to a hackneyed history if for a page or two we attempt to give some account of Goldsmith's story considered exclusively in its aspect as an illustrated book.

To the first edition of 1766 there were no illustrations. The two duodecimo volumes "on grey paper with blunt type," printed at Salisbury in that year "by B. Collins, for F. Newbery," were without embellishments of any kind; and the sixth issue of 1779 had been reached before we come to the earliest native attempt at any pictorial realisation of the characters. In the following year appeared the first illustrated English edition, being two tiny booklets bearing the imprint of one J. Wenman, of 144 Fleet Street, and containing a couple of poorly-executed frontispieces by the miniaturist, Daniel Dodd. They represent the Vicar taking leave of George, and Olivia and the Landlady—a choice of subjects in which the artist had many subsequent imitators. The designs have little distinction but that of priority, and can claim no higher merit than attaches to the cheap adornments of a cheap publication. Dodd is seen to greater advantage in one of the two plates which, about the same date, figured in Harrison's "Novelist's Magazine," and also in the octavo edition of the "Vicar," printed for the same publisher in 1781. These plates have the pretty old-fashioned ornamental framework which the elder Heath and his colleagues had borrowed from the French vignettists. Dodd illustrates the episode of the pocket-book, while his companion Walker, at once engraver and designer, selects the second rescue of Sophia at the precise moment when Burchell's "great stick" has shivered the small sword of Mr. Timothy Baxter. Walker's design is the better of the two; but their main interest is that of costume-pieces, and in both the story is told by gesture rather than by expression.

So natural is it to associate the grace of Stothard with the grace of Goldsmith, that one almost resents the fact that, in the collection for which he did so much, the task of illustrating the "Vicar" fell into other hands. But as his first relations with Harrison's "Magazine" are alleged to have originated in an application made to him to correct a drawing by Dodd for "Joseph Andrews,"¹ it is probable that, before he began to work regularly for the publisher, the plates for the "Vicar" had already been arranged for. Yet it was not long before he was engaged upon the book. In 1792² was published an octavo edition, the plates of which were beautifully engraved by Basire's pupil and Blake's partner, James Parker. Stothard's designs, six in number, illustrate the Vicar taking leave of George, the Rescue of Sophia from Drowning, the Honey-suckle Arbour, the Vicar and Olivia, the Prison Sermon, and the Family Party at the end. The best of them, perhaps, is that in which Olivia's father, with an inexpressible tenderness of gesture, lifts the half-sinking, half-kneeling form of his repentant daughter. But though none can be said to be wanting in that grace which is the unfailing characteristic of the artist, upon the whole they are not chefs-d'œuvre. Certainly they are not as good as the best of the "Clarissa" series in Harrison; they are not even better than the illustrations to Sterne, the originals of which are at South Kensington. Indeed, there is at South Kensington a circular composition by Stothard from the "Vicar" — a lightly-washed sketch in Indian ink — which surpasses them all. The moment selected is obscure; but the persons represented are plainly the Wakefield family, Sir William Thornhill and the 'Squire. The 'Squire is speaking, Olivia hides her face in her mother's lap, Dr. Primrose listens with bent head, and the ci-devant Mr. Burchell looks sternly at his nephew. The entire group, which is admirable in refinement and composition, has all the serene gravity of a drawing by Flaxman. Besides the above, and a pair of plates to be mentioned presently, Stothard did a set of twenty-four minute head-pieces to a Memorandum Book for 1805 (or thereabouts), all of which were derived from Goldsmith's novel, and these probably do not exhaust his efforts in this direction.

¹ Pye's "Patronage of British Art," 1845, pp. 247-8.

² An imaginary frontispiece portrait of the Vicar, prefixed to a one-volume issue of 1790, has not been here regarded as entitling the book to rank as an "illustrated" edition. There is no artist's name to the print.

After the Stothard of 1792 comes a succession of editions more or less illustrated. In 1793 Cooke published the "Vicar" in his "Select Novels," with a vignette and plate by R. Corbould, and a plate by Anker Smith. The last, which depicts "Olivia rejecting with disdain the offer of a Purse of Money from 'Squire Thornhill," is not only a dainty little picture, but serves to exemplify some of the remarks at the outset of this paper. Seven-and-twenty years later, the same design was re-engraved as the frontispiece of an edition published by Dean and Munday, and the costumes were modernised to date. The 'Squire Thornhill of 1793 has a three-cornered hat and ruffles; in 1820 he wears whiskers, a stiff cravat with a little collar, and a cocked hat set athwartships. Olivia, who disdained him in 1793 in a cap and sash, disdains him in 1820 in her own hair and a high waist. Corbould's illustrations to these volumes are commonplace. But he does better in the five plates which he supplied to Whittingham's edition of 1800, three of which, the Honeysuckle Arbour, Moses starting on his Journey, and Olivia and the Landlady, are pleasant enough. In 1808 followed an edition with a charming frontispiece by Stothard, in which the Vicar with his arm in a sling is endeavouring to reconcile Mrs. Primrose to Olivia. There is also a vignette by the same hand. These, engraved at first by Heath, were repeated in 1813 by J. Romney. In the same year the book appeared in the "Mirror of Amusement" with three plates by that artistic Jack-of-all-trades, William Marshall Craig, sometime drawing-master to the Princess Charlotte of Wales. There are also editions in 1812, 1823, and 1824, with frontispieces by the Academician, Thomas Uwins. But, as an interpreter of Goldsmith, the painter of the once-popular "Chapeau de Brigand" is not inspiring.

In following the line of engravers on copper, soon to be superseded by steel, we have neglected the sister art of engraving upon wood, of which the revival is practically synchronous with Harrison's "Magazine." The first edition of the "Vicar" decorated with what Horace Walpole contemptuously called "wooden cuts," is dated 1798. It has seven designs, three of which are by an unknown person called Eginton, and the remainder by Thomas Bewick, by whom all of them are engraved. Eginton may be at once dismissed; but Bewick's own work, notwithstanding his genuine admiration for Goldsmith, arouses no particular enthusiasm. He was too original to be the illustrator of other men's ideas, and his designs, though fair specimens of his technique as a xylographer, are poor as artistic conceptions. The most successful is the Procession to Church, the stubbornness of Blackberry, as may be imagined, being effectively rendered. Frontispieces by Bewick also appear in editions of 1810 and 1812; and between 1807 and 1810 the records speak of three American issues with woodcuts by Bewick's trans-Atlantic imitator, Alexander Anderson. Whether these were or were not merely copies of Bewick, like much of Anderson's work, cannot be affirmed without inspection. Nor, for the same reason, is it possible to refer with certainty to the edition illustrated by Thurston and engraved by Bewick's pupil, Luke Clennell, of which Linton speaks in his "Masters of Wood Engraving" as containing a "'Mr. Burchell in the hayfield reading to the two Primrose girls,' full of drawing and daylight," which should be worth seeing. But the triumph of woodcut copies at this date is undoubtedly the so-called "Whittingham's edition" of 1815. This is illustrated by thirty-seven woodcuts and tailpieces engraved by the prince of modern wood-engravers, John Thompson. The artist's name has been modestly withheld, and the designs are sometimes attributed to Thurston, but they are not entirely in his manner, and we are inclined to assign them to Samuel Williams. In any case, they are unpretending little pieces, simple in treatment, and sympathetic in character. The Vicar Consoled by his Little Boys, and the Two Girls and the Fortune-teller, may be cited as favourable examples. But the scale is too small for much play of expression. "Whittingham's edition" was very popular, and copies are by no means rare. It was certainly republished in 1822 and 1825, and probably there are other issues. And so we come to that most extraordinary of contributions by a popular designer to the embellishment of a popular author, the "Vicar" of Thomas Rowlandson.

Rowlandson was primarily a caricaturist, and his "Vicar" is a caricature. He was not without artistic power; he could, if he liked, draw a beautiful woman (it is true that his ideal generally deserves those epithets of "plantureux, luxuriant, exubérant" which the painter in "Gerfaut" gives to the charms of Mlle. Reine Gobillot); but he did not care to modify his ordinary style. Consequently he illustrated Goldsmith's masterpiece as he illustrated Combe's "Doctor Syntax," and the result is a pictorial outrage. The unhappy Primrose family romp through his pages, vulgarised by all sorts of indignities, and the reader reaches the last of the "twenty-four coloured plates" which Ackermann put forth in 1817, and again in 1823, as one escaping from a nightmare. It is only necessary to glance at Stothard's charming little plate of Hunt the Slipper in Rogers's "Pleasures of Memory" of 1802 to see how far from the Goldsmith spirit is Rowlandson's treatment of the same pastime. Where he is most endurable, is where his designs to the "Vicar" have the least relation to the personages of the book, as, for example, in "A Connoisseur Mellowing the Tone of a Picture," which is simply a humorous print neither better nor worse than any of the other humorous prints with which he was wont to fill the windows of the "Repository of Arts" in Piccadilly.

It is a relief to turn from the rotundities of Rowlandson to the edition which immediately followed — that known to collectors as Sharpe's. It contains five illustrations by Richard Westall, engraved on copper by Corbould, Warren, Romney, and others. Westall's designs are of the school of Stothard — that is to say, they are graceful and elegant rather than humorous; but they are most beautifully rendered by their engravers. The Honeysuckle Arbour (George Corbould), where the girls lean across the table to watch the labouring stag as it pants past, is one of the most brilliant little pictures we can remember. In 1829, William Finden re-engraved the whole of these designs on steel, slightly reducing them in size, and the merits of the two methods may be compared. It is hard to adjudge the palm. Finden's fifth plate especially, depicting Sophia's return to the Vicar in Prison, is a miracle of executive delicacy.

Goldsmith's next illustrators of importance are Cruikshank and Mulready. The contributions of the former are limited to two plates for vol. x. (1832) of Roscoe's "Novelist's Library." They are not successes. The kindly Genius of Broadgrin is hardly as coarse as Rowlandson, but his efforts to make his subjects "comic" at all hazards are not the less disastrous, and there is little of the Vicar, or Mrs. Primrose, or even Moses, in the sketch with which he illustrates the tragedy of the gross of green spectacles; while the most salient characteristic of the somewhat more successful Hunt the Slipper is the artist's inveterate tendency to make the waists of his women (in the words of Pope's imitation of Prior), "fine by defect, and delicately weak." Mulready's designs (1843), excellently interpreted by John Thompson, have a far greater reputation, — a reputation heightened not a little by the familiar group of pictures which he elaborated from three of the sketches. Choosing the Wedding Gown, the Whistonian Controversy, and Sophia and Burchell Haymaking, with their unrivalled rendering of texture and material, are among the painter's most successful works in oil; and it is the fashion to speak of his illustrated "Vicar" as if all of its designs were at the same artistic level. This is by no means the case. Some of them, e.g., Olivia measuring herself with the 'Squire, have playfulness and charm, but the majority, besides being crowded in composition, are heavy and unattractive. Mulready's paintings, however, and the generally diffused feeling that the domestic note in his work should make him a born illustrator of Goldsmith, have given him a prestige which cannot now be gainsaid.

After Mulready follows a crowd of minor illustrators. One of the most successful of these was the clever artist George Thomas; one of the most disappointing, because his gifts were of so high an order, was G. J. Pinwell. Of Absolon, Anelay, Gilbert, and the rest, it is impossible to speak here, and we must close this rapid summary with brief reference to some of the foreign editions.

At the beginning of this paper, in enumerating certain of the causes for the diversities, pleasing or otherwise, which prevail in illustrated copies of the classics, we purposely reserved one which it is more convenient to treat in connection with those books when "embellished" by foreign artists. If, even in the country of birth, each age (as has been well said of translations) "a eu de ce côté son belvé- dère différent," it follows that every other country will have its point of view, which will be at variance with that of a native. To say that no book dealing with human nature in the abstract is capable of being adequately illustrated except in the country of its origin, would be to state a proposition in imminent danger of prompt contradiction. But it may be safely asserted, that, except by an artist who, from long residence or familiarity, has enjoyed unusual facilities for assimilating the national atmosphere, no novel of manners (to which class the "Vicar" must undoubtedly be held to belong) can be illustrated with complete success by a foreigner. For this reason, it will not be necessary here to do more than refer briefly to the principal French and German editions. In either country the "Vicar" has had the advantage of being artistically interpreted by draughtsmen of marked ability; but in both cases the solecisms are thicker than the beauties.

It must be admitted, notwithstanding, for Germany, that it was earlier in the field than England. Wenman's edition is dated 1780; but it was in 1776 that August Mylius of Berlin issued the first frontispiece of the "Vicar." It is an etching by the "Berlin Hogarth," Daniel Chodowiecki, prefixed to an English reprint of the second edition, and it represents the popular episode of Mr. Burchell and the pocket-book. The poor Vicar is transformed into a loose-lipped, heavy-jowled German pastor in a dressing-gown and slippers, while Mr. Burchell becomes a slim personage in top-boots, and such a huntsman's cap as stage tradition assigns to Tony Lumpkin. In the "Almanac Généalogique" for 1777, Chodowiecki returned to this subject, and produced a series of twelve charming plates — little marvels of delicate execution — upon the same theme. Some of these, e. g., the "Conversation brillante des Dames de la ville" and "George sur le Théâtre (sic) reconnoit son Père" — are delightfully quaint. But they are not illustrations of the text — and there is no more to say. The same radical objection applies to the illustrations, full of fancy, ingenuity, and playfulness as they are, of another German, Ludwig Richter. His edition has often been reprinted. But it is sufficient to glance at his barefooted Sophia, making hay, with her straw hat at her back, in order to decide against it. One crosses out "Sophia" and writes in "Frederika." She may have lived at Sesenheim, but never at Wakefield. In like manner, the insular mind recoils from the spectacle of the patriarchal Jenkinson studying the Cosmogony in company with a tankard of a pattern unmistakably Teutonic.

In France, to judge by certain entries in Cohen's invaluable "Guide de l'Amateur de Livres à Vignettes," the book seems to have been illustrated as early as the end of the last century. Huot and Texier are mentioned as artists, but their works have escaped us. The chief French edition, however, is that which belongs to the famous series of books with "images incrustées en plein texte" (as Jules Janin says), inaugurated in 1835 by the "Gil Blas" of Jean Gigoux. The "Vicaire de Wakefield" (Bourgueleret, 1838), admirably paraphrased by Charles Nodier, was accompanied by ten engravings on steel by William Finden after Tony Johannot, and a number of small woodcuts, entêtes and culs-de-lampe by Janet Lange, Charles Jacque, and C. Marville.¹ As compositions, Johannot's contributions are effective, but highly theatrical, while his types are frankly French. Of the woodcuts it may be sufficient to note that when the Vicar and Mrs. Primrose discuss the prospects of the family in the privacy of their own chamber, they do so (in the picture) from two separate four-posters with twisted uprights, and a crucifix between them. The same eccentricities, though scarcely so naïvely ignorant, are not entirely absent from the work of two much more modern artists, M. V. A. Poirson and M. Adolphe Lalauze. M. Poirson (Quantin, 1885) who, in his own domain, has extraordinary skill as a decorative artist, depicts 'Squire Thornhill as a gay young French chasseur with many-buttoned gaiters and a fusil en bandoulière, while the hero of the "Elegy on a Mad Dog" appears in those "wooden shoes" (with straw in them) which for so long a period were to English cobblers the chief terror of a French invasion. M. Lalauze again (Jouaust, 1888), for whose distinguished gifts (in their place) we have the keenest admiration, promotes the whole Wakefield family into the haute noblesse. An elegant Dr. Primrose blesses an elegant George with the air of a Rochefoucauld, while Mrs. Primrose, in the background, with the Bible and cane, is a grande dame. Under the same treatment, the scene in the hayfield becomes a fête galante after the fashion of Lancret or Watteau.

¹ To the edition of 1843, which does not contain these woodcuts, is added one by Meissonier.

Upon the whole, dismissing foreign artists for the reason given above, one is forced to the conclusion that Goldsmith has not hitherto found his fitting pictorial interpreter. Stothard and Mulready have accentuated his graver side ;

Cruikshank and Rowlandson have exaggerated his humour. But no single artist in the past, as far as we are aware, has, in any just proportion, combined them both. By the delicate quality of his art, by the alliance in his work of a simplicity and playfulness which has a kind of parallel in Goldsmith's literary style, the late Randolph Caldecott seemed always to suggest that he could, if he would, supply this want. But, apart from the captivating play-book of the "Mad Dog," and a frontispiece in the "Parchment Library," Caldecott contributed nothing to the illustration of Goldsmith's novel.¹

¹ The foregoing paper, which appeared in the "English Illustrated Magazine," for October, 1890, was afterwards reprinted as the Preface to Mr. Hugh Thomson's admirable illustrated edition of the "Vicar" (Macmillan, same year).

1. Lodgings belon.^g to his Majesty
2. To his Royal Highness
3. His Highness's Prince Rupert
4. The Duke of Richmond
5. The Duke of Monmouth
6. The Duke of Ormond
7. The Duke of Albe-mart
8. The Earl of Bath

9. The Earl of Lauderdale
10. The Lord Peterborough
11. The Lord Gerrard
12. The Lord Crofts
13. The Lord Belassis
14. The Lord Chamberlain

15. The Lord Keeper
16. The Council Office
17. Sir Edm^d Walker
18. The Treasury Chambers
19. The King's Laboratory & Bath
20. The Lord Arlington's Office

21. Sir Robert Murray
22. The Wardrobe
23. Her Majesty's apartments
24. The Maids of Honor
25. The Countess of Suffolk
26. The Queen's Wardrobe

27. Mad^{am}
28. The La^{dy}
29. The Co
30. The Co
31. M^{rs} K
32. Coun^{ty}

* In this spot King Charles the 1st was beheaded. London. Published as the Act directs, November 30. 1 of WHITEHALL, taken in the Reign of CHARLES 2^d. 1680.

1. To Sir John Mordaunt
 2. To Sir John Mordaunt
 3. To Sir John Mordaunt
 4. To Sir John Mordaunt
 5. To Sir John Mordaunt
 6. To Sir John Mordaunt
 7. To Sir John Mordaunt
 8. To Sir John Mordaunt
 9. To Sir John Mordaunt
 10. To Sir John Mordaunt
 11. To Sir John Mordaunt
 12. To Sir John Mordaunt
 13. To Sir John Mordaunt
 14. To Sir John Mordaunt
 15. To Sir John Mordaunt
 16. To Sir John Mordaunt
 17. To Sir John Mordaunt
 18. To Sir John Mordaunt
 19. To Sir John Mordaunt
 20. To Sir John Mordaunt
 21. To Sir John Mordaunt
 22. To Sir John Mordaunt
 23. To Sir John Mordaunt
 24. To Sir John Mordaunt
 25. To Sir John Mordaunt
 26. To Sir John Mordaunt
 27. To Sir John Mordaunt
 28. To Sir John Mordaunt
 29. To Sir John Mordaunt
 30. To Sir John Mordaunt
 31. To Sir John Mordaunt
 32. To Sir John Mordaunt
 33. To Sir John Mordaunt
 34. To Sir John Mordaunt
 35. To Sir John Mordaunt
 36. To Sir John Mordaunt
 37. To Sir John Mordaunt
 38. To Sir John Mordaunt
 39. To Sir John Mordaunt
 40. To Sir John Mordaunt
 41. To Sir John Mordaunt
 42. To Sir John Mordaunt
 43. To Sir John Mordaunt
 44. To Sir John Mordaunt
 45. To Sir John Mordaunt
 46. To Sir John Mordaunt
 47. To Sir John Mordaunt
 48. To Sir John Mordaunt
 49. To Sir John Mordaunt
 50. To Sir John Mordaunt
 51. To Sir John Mordaunt
 52. To Sir John Mordaunt
 53. To Sir John Mordaunt
 54. To Sir John Mordaunt
 55. To Sir John Mordaunt
 56. To Sir John Mordaunt
 57. To Sir John Mordaunt
 58. To Sir John Mordaunt

33. Colonel Darcy
 34. Sir Philip Killigrew
 35. Captain Cook
 36. Mr. Kirke
 37. Mr. Hyde
 38. Mr. Povey
 39. Mr. Chiffinch
 40. Sir William Killigrew
 41. Sir Francis Clinton
 42. Dr. Frazer
 43. Father Patricks
 44. To Mr. Bryan

45. Sir Henry Wood
 46. Sir George Carteret
 47. The Officers of Jewel Office
 48. The Quarter Waiters
 49. Sir John Trevor
 50. To Mr. Lightfoot

51. To Mr. Vane
 52. To Mr. Lisle
 53. Sir Isaac Neale
 54. The Kings Musick House
 55. To Mr. Early
 56. To Sir Stephen Fox
 57. To Mr. Churchill
 58. To Mr. Dupper

OLD WHITEHALL.

NOW, when the widening of Parliament Street promises to afford an adequate approach to St. Stephen's, and another imposing range of buildings has arisen at Spring Gardens to match the Foreign and India Offices, it may be worth while to linger for a moment upon some former features of this much-changing locality. In such a retrospect, the Old Banqueting-House of Inigo Jones naturally becomes a prominent object. Its massive Northamptonshire stone and classic columns invest it with a dignity of which the towering pile of Whitehall Court can scarcely deprive it ; and it seems to overlook Kent's stumpy Horse Guards opposite much as a nobleman with a pedigree might be expected to survey a neighbour of a newer creation. And yet, impressive though it is, it represents but an insignificant portion of the architect's original design, the imaginative extent of which may be studied in Campbell's "Vitruvius Britannicus" and elsewhere. As a matter of fact, the present Banqueting-House was only one out of four similar pavilions in a vast structure of which the ground plan would have extended from the river bank to a point far beyond the Horse Guards, and would have occupied all the space on either side of the road from Horse Guards Avenue to the Mews of Richmond Terrace. It included no fewer than seven splendid internal courts, and the façades towards the park and the Thames — the latter especially — were of great beauty. But the scheme was beyond the pocket of the first James, for whom, in 1619, it was designed; and a cheaper modification, reaching only to the roadway, and prepared twenty years later, fared no better with Charles I. The Banqueting-House, which was built in 1619–22, and is common to both schemes, is consequently all that was ever executed of what, in its completed form, would have been a palace among palaces, surpassing the Louvre and the Escorial.

Apart from its existing employment as a military museum,¹ the Banqueting-House to-day serves chiefly as a landmark or key by help of which its ancient environments may be mentally re-constructed. With Gibbons' fine bronze statue of James II., now erected in the enclosure at the side of Gwydyr House,¹ it practically constitutes the sole surviving portion of Old Whitehall as it appears in John Fisher's famous "Survey and Ground-Plot" of 1680;² and about it was dispersed irregularly that pell-mell of buildings dating from Henry VIII. and Elizabeth, which, in Jacobean and Caroline days, was known as "our Palace of Westminster." Roughly speaking, this aggregation might be defined geographically as bounded on the north³ by St. James's Park; on the south by the Thames; to the east by Scotland Yard and Spring Gardens, and to the west by Richmond Terrace Mews. It was traversed throughout its entire extent by the old roadway leading to Westminster Abbey, and this divided it into two portions, the larger and more important of which lay on the side of the Thames. From Scotland Yard to the Banqueting-House the road was fairly wide and open; but at the western end of the Banqueting-House it suddenly narrowed, passing through the gate popularly ¹ This originally stood at the back of the Banqueting-House in Whitehall Gardens; but was moved to its present site in 1897.

¹ I. e., that of the Royal United Service Institution.

² There are anachronisms which seem to indicate an earlier date.

³ By "north," "south," etc., the north and south of Fisher's plan are here intended.

known as Holbein's, and afterwards entering King Street through a second or King Street Gate. "K[ing] Cha[rles]," the Marquis of Normanby told Evelyn, "had a desigine to buy all King Street, and build it nobly, it being the streete leading to Westm^r." Once, too, when Evelyn had presented him with a copy of his "book of Architecture," he sketched a rough plan for the future building of Whitehall itself, "together with the roomes of state, and other particulars." But His Majesty's promises were better than his performances; and he had more pressing and less worshipful ways of spending his money.

It will be convenient to speak first of that part of the palace buildings which lay to the north of King Street and the road to Charing Cross. Here was the old Cockpit, which, in the time of Fisher's Plan, was included in the apartments of Monk, Duke of Albemarle, and from which the Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery saw the first Charles walk from St. James's Palace to the scaffold. Later it became the Privy-Council Office, where, in Anne's reign, Harley was stabbed by Guiscard. Here also was the Tennis Court; and (fronting the Banqueting-House) the Tilt-Yard, where with such "laudable Courtesy and pardonable Insolence," Sir Roger de Coverley's ancestor defeated his opponent.¹ On the site of the present Treasury, and looking upon the street, were the apartments of the Dukes of Monmouth and Ormond; to the left of these, the quarters of Captain Henry Cooke, "Master of the Children [choir boys] of the Chapel Royal." The remainder of the buildings on this side seem to have been chiefly occupied by Albemarle, though the Duchess of Cleveland had kitchens near the Tennis Court, while between the Horse Guard Yard and the Spring Garden were the rooms of one of the maids of honour, Mrs. Kirk, under whose auspices took place some of those lively and scandalous petits soupers, of which record is to be found in the veracious pages of Anthony Hamilton. At the back of all these buildings stretched St. James's Park, where Charles II. made many improvements, and built his famous decoy for waterfowl. In Evelyn's days this must have almost attained the proportions of a menagerie. "Here," says he, "was a curious sort of poultry not much exceeding the size of a tame pidgeon, with legs so short as their crops seem'd to touch y^e earth; a milk-white raven; a stork which was a rarity at this season, seeing he was loose and could flie loftily ; two Balearian [Balearic ?] cranes, one of which having one of his leggs broken and cut off above the knee, had a wooden or boxen leg and thigh, with a joynt so accurately made that y^e creature could walke and use it as well as if it had ben natural ; it was made by a souldier. The parke was at this time stored with numerous flocks of severall sorts of ordinary and extraordinary wild fowle, breeding about the Decoy, which for being neere so greate a citty, and among such a concourse of souldiers and people, is a singular and diverting thing. There were also deere of severall countries, white ; spotted like leopards ; antelopes, an elk, red deere, roebucks, staggs, Guinea goates, Arabian sheepe, &c. There were withy-potts or nests for the wild fowle to lay their eggs in, a little above y^e surface of y^e water.”¹

¹ Spectator, No. 109.

Thus we come to that larger and more important portion of Old Whitehall which lay to the south of the road between Westminster and Charing Cross. To the west of the Banqueting-House, and corresponding in width to the distance between the two great gates, was the Privy Garden, where in May, 1662, Mr. Pepys, to his great solace and content, saw my Lady Castlemaine’s laced smocks and linen petticoats floating gaily to the breeze. According to Hatton, the Privy Garden occupied about three and a quarter acres, and (as the plan shows) was laid out in sixteen grass-plots with statues in the centre of each. To the north a wall separated it from the roadway, to the west was a line of trees, and to the east a straggling range of buildings nearly at right angles to the Banqueting-House. Here lived Evelyn's friend, Sir Robert Murray; and here were the apartments of the Lord Chamberlain, where, in November, 1679, Evelyn witnessed the re-marriage of his Lordship's daughter, a child of twelve years old, to the Duke of Grafton, the king's natural son by Barbara Palmer. Here, again, were the Council Office, the Lord Keeper's Office, and the Treasury. Opposite the Treasury, in the central walk of the garden, was a famous dial, which had been set up in James's reign, but had fallen into ruin in that of his grandson. By King James's order it was fully described in a quarto published in 1624, by one Edmund Gunter, and it was of it that Andrew Marvell wrote the bitter lines:—

¹ “Memoirs of John Evelyn,” etc., 1827, ii. 234.

“ This place for a dial was too insecure,
Since a guard and a garden could not it defend;
For so near to the Court they will never endure
Any witness to show how their time they mispend.”

To the south of the Privy Garden, and communicating with the Bowling Green, which lay to the west of it (presumably on the site now occupied by Richmond Terrace), was the famous Stone Gallery. On its northern side were domiciled the Earl of Lauderdale, Lord Peterborough, Prince Rupert, and Mr. Hyde; and somewhere in its vicinity, although not indicated upon Fisher's plan, doubtless because granted subsequently to the date of its execution, must have been the "luxuriously-furnished" lodgings of that "baby-faced" (but not guileless) Breton beauty, Louise Renée de Kéroualle. This, indeed, is clear from Evelyn's diary. "4th Oct. [1683] . . . Following his Majesty this morning thro' the gallerie, I went, with the few who attended him, into the Dutchesse of Portsmouth's ¹ dressing-roome within her bed-chamber, where she was in her morning loose garment, her maids combing her, newly out of her bed, his Mat^y and the gallants standing about her; but that which engag'd my curiosity was the rich and splendid furniture of this woman's apartment, now twice or thrice pull'd down and rebuilt to satisfie her prodigal and expensive pleasures, whilst her Mat^{ys} does not excede some gentlemen's ladies in furniture and accommodation. Here I saw the new fabriq of French tapissry, for designe, tenderness of worke, and incomparable imitation of the best paintings, beyond anything I had ever beheld. Some pieces had Versailles, St. Germain's and other palaces of the French King, with huntings, figures and landskips, exotiq fowls, and all to the life rarely don. Then for Japan cabinets, screenes, pendule clocks, greate vases of wrought plate, tables, stands, chimney furniture, sconces, branches, braseras, &c. all of massie silver, and out of number, besides some of her Matys best paintings." "10 April [1691]. This night a sudden and terrible fire burnt down all the buildings over the stone gallery at White-hall to the water-side, beginning at the apartment of the late Dutchesse of Portsmouth¹ (w^{ch} had ben pull'd down and rebuilt no lesse than three times to please her)."

¹ From an autograph in the French National Archives, she signed herself "L. duchesse de Portsmout."

Between the Stone Gallery and the old river-line, now obliterated by the Embankment, and covering a site which extended as far as Whitehall Palace Stairs, were the apartments of the King, the Queen, the Duke of York, and the great officers of the Court. The King's rooms, in suggestive proximity to those of the Maids of Honour, and with the notorious Chiffinch conveniently at hand, were to the left of the Privy Stairs; those of Catherine of Braganza, which, on the plan, look small and unimportant, lay to the right. Neither Pepys nor Evelyn gives us much information with regard to this part of the Palace. Mention is indeed made by them and others of the Shield Gallery, the Matted Gallery, the Boarded Gallery, the Vane Room, the Robe Chamber, the Green Chamber, the Theatre, the Adam and Eve Gallery (which took its name from a picture by Mabuse), and so forth; but the indications are too vague to enable us to fix their locality with certainty. By favour, however, of "an ancient woman who made these lodgings cleane, and had all y^e keys," Evelyn seems to have minutely examined the King's private library, with which, though he spent three or four days over it, he was not greatly impressed. "I went," he says, "with expectation of finding some curiosities, but though there were about 1000 volumes, there were few of importance which I had not perus'd before." He found, nevertheless, a folio MS. containing the school exercises of Edward VI., together with his Journal, which Burnet afterwards made use of in his "History of the Reformation."¹ Towards Whitehall Stairs, between the Banqueting-House and the river, were the Great Hall, and the Chapel where King of Chichester, and the witty South, and the eloquent Stillingfleet preached to a unedified congregation, and where inquisitive Mr. Pepys "observed," on a certain Sunday in October, 1660, "how the Duke of York and Mrs. Palmer did talk to one another very wantonly through the hangings that parts the King's closet and the closet where the ladies sit." An old view of Whitehall, from the Thames, gives a fair idea of its aspect at this time. To the right are the Chapel and Hall, with the loftier Banqueting-House appearing above them, and Holbein's gate just distinguishable at its side. To the left is the covered Privy Stairs, whence the Royal Barge with its flags and trumpeters is just putting off. Here it must have been, that, little more than two months before Charles II.'s unexpected death, Evelyn witnessed the water celebration which took place in front of the Queen's apartments:—

¹ What Evelyn intends by "late" is not clear, as the Duchess did not die until 1734. Probably he only means that she had withdrawn to France.

"[Nov.] 15, [1684] Being the Queene's birthday, there were fire-works on the Thames before White-hall, with pageants of castles, forts, and other devices of gyrandolas, serpents, the

¹ "Memoirs of John Evelyn," etc., 1827, iii. 33-35.

King and Queene's armes and mottos, all represented in fire, such as had not ben seen here. But the most remarkable was the several fires and skirmishes in the very water, which actually mov'd a long way, burning under the water, now and then appearing above it, giving reports like muskets and cannon, with granados and innumerable other devices. It is said it cost £1,500. It was concluded with a ball, where all the young ladys and gallants daunced in the greate hall. The court had not ben seene so brave and rich in apparell since his Matys's restauration." ¹ To this may succeed that memorable and oft-cited entry, which occurs only a few pages farther on, when Charles was lying dead: "I can never forget the inexpressible luxury and prophanenesse, gaming and all dissoluteness, and as it were total forgetfullnesse of God (it being Sunday evening) which this day se'nnight [25 January, 1685] I was witnessse of, the King sitting and toying with his concubines, Portsmouth, Cleaveland and Mazarine, &c., a French boy [François Duperrier] singing love songs, in that glorious gallery, whilst about 20 of the greate courtiers and other dissolute persons were at basset round a large table, a bank of at least 2,000 in gold before them, upon which two gentlemen who were with me made reflexions with astonishment. Six days after was all in the dust !” The next three lines with their note of official anti-climax are not so generally reprinted : — “ It was enjoyn’d that those who put on mourning should wear it as for a father, in y^e most solemn manner.”

¹ "Memoirs of John Evelyn," etc., 1827, iii. 121-2.

From Whitehall Palace Stairs a roadway went, past the Chapel and Great Hall, through a wide open court to the Palace Gate, close to what was the site of the old Wardrobe (afterwards Lord Carrington’s). To the right of this road, and extending as far as Scotland Yard, were groups of inferior buildings and offices, — kitchens, butteries, pastries, spiceries, bake-houses, slaughter-houses, charcoal-houses, and the like, — traces of which may still be identified. The present Board of Trade, and the adjacent buildings in Horse Guards Avenue, occupy portions of the sites of the Wine-Cellar, Hall, and Chapel ; the Confectionary is said to have been a white house between the former Museum of the United Service Institution and Lord Carrington’s stables, and the old Beer Buttery long existed near the gates of Fife House, the place of which is now covered by part of Whitehall Court.

Standing in the entrance to Horse Guards

Avenue (once Whitehall Yard), one may still, with the aid of an old view or two, and Fisher's indispensable plan, obtain a fair idea of the place in the time of the Stuarts. Opposite — where the Scottish Office and Horse Guards are at present — was the boundary wall of the old Tilt and Horse Guard Yards. To the left, immediately in front of the Banqueting-House, extended a row of posts, a little in advance of which — “in the open street before Whitehall” — was the spot where, after much controversy, Charles I. is now allowed to have been beheaded. At right angles to the façade a line of buildings ran out to Whitehall Gate. These, which also looked into the Privy Garden, were, as already explained, the apartments of Lord Arlington, the Lord Chamberlain. Of Whitehall Gate itself, — for, according to Mr. Wornum, we are scarcely justified in styling it Holbein's, — Pennant, who seems to have seen it, gives the following account: — “To Holbein was owing the most beautiful gate at Whitehall, built with bricks of two colours, glazed, and disposed in a tessellated fashion. The top, as well as that of an elegant tower on each side, were [sic] embattled. On each front were four busts in baked clay, which resisted to the last every attack of the weather: possibly the artificial stone revived in this century. These, I have been lately informed, are preserved in a private hand. This charming structure fell a sacrifice to conveniency within my memory: as did another in 1723, built at the same time, but of far inferior beauty. The last blocked up the road to King's-Street, and was called King's-Gate. Henry built it as a passage to the park, the tennis court, bowling-green, the cock-pit, and tilting-yard; for he was extremely fond of athletic exercises; they suited his strength and his temper."¹

Both these gates were engraved by Vertue in the "Vetusta Monumenta" published by the Society of Antiquaries. The so-called Holbein's Gate, which long survived the buildings that connected it with the Banqueting-House, was pulled down in August, 1759, to make room for Parliament Street. The Duke of Cumberland had it removed to Windsor, with the intention of re-erecting it at the top of the Long Walk, and his Deputy Ranger, Thomas Sandby (the architect), was to have made some additions at the sides, the designs for which are still to be seen in J. T. Smith's "Westminster." But, as seems generally the case after removals of this kind, nothing was ever done in the matter. Meanwhile the medallions of which Pennant speaks were dispersed. Three of them, according to Smith, were, when he published his book, at Hatfield Peverell in Essex; two more got worked into keepers' lodges at Windsor. These, said Cunningham in 1849, "are now, by Mr. Jesse's [i. e. the late J. Heneage Jesse's] exertions, at Hampton Court, where they are made to do duty as two of the Roman Emperors, described by Hentzner, in his Travels, as then at Hampton Court." They are of Italian workmanship, and may probably be attributed to John de Maiano.

¹ "Some Account of London," 3d ed., 1793, pp. 99, 100.

Those who, having sufficiently examined the Palladian exterior of the Banqueting-House, and duly noted the famous weather-cock on the eastern end, which James II. is said to have set up to warn him of the approach of the Dutch fleet, desire farther to inspect the interior, can easily do so, since (as already stated) the building is now a museum. Its chief feature of interest is the ceiling, which represents the apotheosis of James I. It is painted black, partly gilded, and divided into panels by bands, ornamented with a guilloche. Of the three central compartments, that at one end represents the British Solomon on his throne, "pointing to Prince Charles, who is being perfected by Wisdom." The middle compartment shows him "trampling on the globe and flying on the wings of Justice (an eagle) to heaven." In the third he is "embracing Minerva, and routing Rebellion and Envy." These panels, and others at the sides, were painted by Rubens in 1635, with the assistance of Jordaens. They were restored by Cipriani. In 1837, the whole building, which had been closed since 1829, was refitted and repaired under the direction of Sir Robert Smirke.

It would occupy too large a space to trace the history of the Banqueting-House from its first erection to its Georgian transformation into an unconsecrated chapel, seductive as it might be to speak of it as the theatre of Ben Jonson's masques and the buffooneries of Cromwell. In Charles II.'s time, to which, in the foregoing remarks, we have mainly confined ourselves, it was the scene of many impressive ceremonies and state receptions. It was in the Banqueting-House that Charles begged his Honourable House of Commons to amend the ways about Whitehall, so that Catherine of Braganza might not upon her arrival find it "surrounded by water;" it was in the Banqueting-House that he gravely went through that half solemn half ludicrous business of touching for the evil; it was in the Banqueting-House that, coming from the Tower of London with a splendid cavalcade, he created at one time six Earls and six Barons. Under its storied roof he magnificently entertained the French Ambassador, Charles Colbert, Marquis de Croissy, on which occasion he presented Mr. Evelyn, from his own royal plate, with a piece of that newly-imported Barbadian luxury, the King-pine;¹ it was here also that he received the Russian Ambassador with his presents of "tapisstry" and sables, and the swarthy envoys from Morocco, with their scymetars and white alhagas, and their lions and "estridges" [ostriches]. But perhaps the brightest and most vivid page in connection with this famous old building is that in which Samuel Pepys relates what he saw from its roof on the 23rd of August 1662:—

" . . Mr. Creed . . and I . . walked down to the Stylyard [Steel Yard] and so all along Thames-street, but could not get a boat: I offered eight shillings for a boat to attend me this afternoon, and they would not, it being the day of the Queen's coming to town from Hampton Court. So we fairly walked it to White Hall, and through my Lord's [Lord Sandwich's] lodgings we got into White Hall garden, and so to the Bowling-green, and up to the top of the new Banqueting-House¹ there, over the Thames, which was a most pleasant place as any I could have got ; and all the show consisted chiefly in the number of boats and barges ; and two pageants, one of a King, and another of a Queen, with her Maydes of Honour sitting at her feet very prettily ; and they tell me the Queen is Sir Richard Ford's daughter. Anon come the King and Queen in a barge under a canopy with 10,000 barges and boats, I think, for we could see no water for them, nor discern the King nor Queen. And so they landed at White Hall Bridge [Privy Stairs] and the great guns on the other side went off. But that which pleased me best was, that my Lady Castlemaine stood over against us upon a piece of White Hall, where I glutted myself with looking on her. But methought it was strange to see her Lord and her upon the same place walking up and down without taking notice one of another, only at first entry he put off his hat, and she made him a very civil salute, but afterwards took no notice one of another ; but both of them now and then would take their child, which the nurse held in her armes, and dandle it. One thing more ; there happened a scaffold below to fall, and we feared some hurt, but there was none, but she of all the great ladies only run down among the common rabble to see what hurt was done, and did take care of a child that received some little hurt, which methought was so noble. Anon there came one there booted and spurred that she talked long with. And by and by, she being in her hair, she put on his hat, which was but an ordinary one, to keep the wind off. But methinks it became her mightily, as every thing else do." ¹

¹ In the Breakfast Room at Strawberry Hill, Horace Walpole had a picture representing Rose, the Royal gardener, in the act of presenting to Charles II. the first pineapple raised in England. It (the painting) was attributed to Danckers; and had belonged to a descendant of one of the firm of London and Wise, Nursery-men, mentioned in the fifth number of the Spectator.

¹ No doubt still so called by habit, as it succeeded to an earlier Banqueting-House which was burnt in January, 1619.

Evelyn's last entry respecting the old palace is as follows : " 2 [4 ?] Jan. [1698]. . . . White-hall burnt, nothing but walls and ruins left." Thus it comes about that the Banqueting-House (which, notwithstanding the above, escaped), besides being the sole relic of a never-existent Whitehall, is also the sole relic of the Whitehall that was.

¹ Pepys' "Diary," by Wheatley, ii (1893), 316, 317.

LUTTRELL'S "LETTERS TO JULIA."

NOTHING ('t is a melancholy truism) fades with such rapidity as the reputation of the mere favourite of society. If he be a dandy his name, perhaps, may linger here and there in the circular of a fashionable tailor; if a wit, his sayings, although — like those of Praed's Belle — "extremely quoted" during his lifetime, scarcely survive his contemporaries and boon-companions. It may be that he secures to himself some notice from posterity by posthumous "Memoirs" put together by a friend — perhaps a valet; or he may leave behind him some literary legacy which now and then is disinterred from the shelves of the British Museum Library (if, indeed, it has found an asylum there) by an enquirer curious in forgotten follies, or anxious to elucidate the caricatures of Gillray and "HB." But, as a rule, if he does not die early, he passes "into the line of outworn faces," and his place knows him no more. Only from a magazine obituary, or a stray paragraph in a provincial paper, does one learn, half-a-century afterwards, that an old valetudinarian has died at Bath, or Cheltenham, or Boulogne, who, in his earlier days, was a favourite with the Prince Regent, a well-known habitué of Brooks's and White's, a member of the Neapolitan Club, and a frequent figure at Crockford's. These remarks, applicable, it should be observed, more exactly to the Georgian than the Victorian era, are mainly prompted by the difficulty experienced in obtaining particulars respecting the career of the once-famous wit and writer of vers de société, whose chief work forms the subject of this paper. Yet, if we may trust a manuscript note in our copy of the "Letters to Julia," the author of that book and "Crockford House" attained the ripe age of eighty-six; and seventy years ago no one was better known in the higher classes of society as — to use a phrase which would have been employed in the days when "Pelham" was penned — a man of the world du meilleur crû. The friend of Jekyll and Lord Alvanley, of Mackintosh and Sydney Smith, of Lord Holland and Jeffery, of Greville, of Moore, of Rogers; a wit with the wits, a scholar with the scholars; fairly earning a hearing, even in those days of "Whistlecraft" burlesques and "Two-penny Postboys," as a writer of sparkling verse; an admirable talker and a polished gentleman — HENRY LUTTRELL must have been one of the most delightful of social companions. Yet, secluded in those inner circles to which admission was as difficult as getting on the list of "Almack's," he lies entirely beyond the range of the ordinary life-taker; and the few references to his character and works are only to be found sparsely scattered through the pages of contemporary, and, alas! often unindexed "memoirs." In Lady Holland's life of Sydney Smith, for example, there are some brief references to his lightness of hand, his willingness to be pleased, his amusing Irish stories. "Luttrell," says Smith, warning Lady Davy against overlooking the difficulties and embarrassments of life, "before I taught him better, imagined muffins grew. He was wholly ignorant of all the intermediate processes of sowing, reaping, grinding, kneading, and baking." This is not much of a contribution to a portrait, no doubt; but it affords a hint of that sublime and generally affected indifference to the homelier phenomena of life which forms an indispensable part of the equipment of the man of the world, — du meilleur crû. Yet, although we find Rogers regretting his attachment to, and monopoly by, "persons of mere fashion," Luttrell, it is only fair to infer, must have been considerably more than this. Everywhere, by happy allusion, and fine turns of expression, his work shows an intimate knowledge of classic authors ; and, as might be anticipated, of Horace in particular.

“Tickler,” in the “Noctes Ambrosianæ,” calls him “one of the most accomplished men in all England—a wit and a scholar.” “Of course you know Luttrell,” said Byron to Lady Blessington ; “he is the best sayer of good things, and the most epigrammatic conversationist I ever met. There is a terseness and wit, mingled with fancy, in his observations that no one else possesses, and no one so peculiarly understands the apropos. Then, unlike all, or most other wits, Luttrell is never obtrusive ; even the choicest bons mots are only brought forth when perfectly applicable, and they are given in a tone of good breeding which enhances their value.” “None of the talkers whom I meet in London society,” says Rogers, “can slide in a brilliant thing with such readiness as he does.” The impression here given is rather of a wit than a humourist ; there is more in it of Chamfort or Rivarol than Thackeray or Sydney Smith ; but, in default of more definite information, it enables us to form an idea of the easy, fluent causeur, touching all topics lightly, quick to catch the fleeting fancy and crystallise it into an epigram, to turn a dull corner with an adroit quotation from the classics (such things were possible formerly), to light up a mediocre story with a happy setting ; — able and ready, in short, to give that sparkling ripple to the flow of conversation which made the gifted possessor of these rare qualities the envy of diners-out, and the delight of hostesses. The more conventional type of such a character Luttrell has himself sketched in easy octosyllabics : —

How much at home was Charles in all
The talk aforesaid — nicknamed small !
Never embarrassed, seldom slow,
His maxim always "touch and go."
Chanced he to falter ? A grimace
Was ready in the proper place ;
Or a chased snuff-box, with its gems
And gold, to mask his has and hems,
Was offered round, and duly rapped,
Till a fresh topic could be tapped.
What if his envious rivals swore
'T was jargon all, and he a bore ?
The surly sentence was outvoted,
His jokes retailed, his jargon quoted ;
And while he sneered or quizzed or flirted,
The world, half-angry, was diverted.

It would be of no service to reproduce here any of the half-dozen good things of Luttrell that linger in Moore's "Diary." Many of these are of that class whose prosperity lies emphatically in the ear of the listener; and we are too far removed from the speaker to be able to revive those niceties of manner and delivery which were essential to a just appreciation of them. With his verse the case is different. That, at least, was intended to be read; and although some of the allusions are necessarily obscure, we can, by a slight effort, place ourselves in the position of the audience to whom it was originally addressed. We must frankly confess, however, that, doubtless from the absence of those individual advantages of address and opportunity which gave him grace as a conversationalist, Luttrell's work, easy and polished though it be, scarcely impresses one as commensurate with the praise he received from his contemporaries. But of this the reader must judge from the specimens here reproduced.

The "Letters to Julia,"¹ Luttrell's longest and most ambitious effort, is an amplification of that pleasant little ode in the first book of Horace, in which Lydia is enjoined by the poet not to ruin Sybaris by a too exclusive attachment to her apron-strings. The reader who recalls the sixteen lines of the original, may perhaps wonder how it was possible to expand so brief a lyric into a poem of two hundred pages. And, indeed, under the digressions of the author, the primary motive almost entirely disappears. But as he himself gives us the above explanation of the origin of his work, we are bound to regard it. His first conception, he says, was "by filling up such an outline on a wider canvas, to exhibit a picture, if imperfect not unfaithful, of modern habits and manners, and of the amusements and lighter occupations of the higher classes of society in England."

¹ In the first edition of the poem, issued in 1820, it bore the title of "Advice to Julia," and the lady addressed corresponded more exactly with the Lydia of Horace. But we are dealing with the later edition of 1822, published under the title we quote above, and in this we are told that "the first Julia must be forgiven and forgotten."

Viewed in this aspect, it matters little how the idea was first suggested. In the four epistles of which the book consists, the parts of Lydia and Sybaris are taken by Charles, a man of fashion and pleasure, embarrassed, as a matter of course, but "at the head of the suprême bon ton;" and Julia, a young widow of two-and-twenty, rather lower in the social scale, but rich and spoiled by flattery, who quite intends to marry her desirable admirer whenever it suits her to do so, but in the meantime subjects him to all the petty tyrannies of coquetry and caprice. The writer of the letters is a cousin of the lady, who undertakes to remonstrate with her upon her harsh treatment of her lover. In this task, thanks to numberless digressions, he manages to ramble from "Almack's" to Newmarket, from Brighton to Paris—where you will—sketching lightly picture after picture of the fashionable life of the first quarter of the century. Now he amplifies cur vitat olivum into a score of lines, descriptive of his recreant hero's avoidance of Moulsey and the Fives Court; of—— rubbing, racing and raw meat;

now mourns that no longer —

with pliant arm he stems

The tide or current of the Thames ;

now laments his abdication of his proud supremacy as a dresser, and master of the awful mysteries of the Cravat of our grandfathers. Readers will recall the anecdote of Brummell's tray-full of failures in the following :

Yet weak, he felt, were the attacks

Of his voluminous Cossacks ;¹

¹ Those trowsers named from the barbarians
Nursed in the Steppes — the Crim-Tartarians,
Who, when they scour a country, under Those ample folds conceal their plunder.

In vain to suffocation braced
 And bandaged was his wasp-like waist ;
 In vain his buckram-wadded shoulders
 And chest astonished all beholders ;
 Wear any coat he might, 't was fruitless ;
 Those shoes, those very boots were bootless
 Whose tops ('t was he enjoined the mixture)
 Are moveable, and spurs a fixture ;
 All was unprofitable, flat,
 And stale without a smart CRAVAT,
 Muslined enough to hold its starch ;
 That last key-stone of Fashion's arch !

"Have you, my friend," I've heard him say,
 "Been lucky in your turns to-day ? —
 Think not that what I ask alludes
 To Fortune's stale vicissitudes.
 Or that I'm driven from you to learn
 How cards, and dice, and women turn,
 And what prodigious contributions
 They levy, in their revolutions :
 I ask not if, in times so critical,
 You've managed well your turns political,
 Knowing your aptitude to rat.
 My question points to — your Cravat.
 These are the only turns I mean.
 Tell me if these have lucky been ?

How strange their destiny has been !
 Promoted, since the year fifteen,
 In honour of these fierce allies,
 To grace our British legs and thighs.
 But fashion's tide no barrier stems ;
 So the Don mingles with the Thames !

If round your neck, in every fold
 Exact, the muslin has been rolled,
 And, dexterously in front confined,
 Preserved the proper set behind ;
 In short, by dint of hand and eye,
 Have you achieved a perfect tie ?

“ Should yours (kind heaven, avert the omen !)
 Like the cravats of vulgar, low men,
 Asunder start — and, yawning wide,
 Disclose a chasm on either side ;
 Or should it stubbornly persist,
 To take some awkward tasteless twist,
 Some crease indelible, and look
 Just like a dunce’s dog’s-eared book,
 How would you parry the disgrace ?
 In what assembly show your face ?
 How brook your rival’s scornful glance,
 Or partner’s titter in the dance ?
 How in the morning dare to meet
 The quizzers of the park or street ?
 Your occupation’s gone, — in vain
 Hope to dine out, or flirt again.
 The LADIES from their lists will put you !
 And even I, my friend, must cut you ! ”

This is a good sample of Luttrell’s lighter manner. Here is another — a wail from “ Almack’s ” over the substitution of tea for supper : —

“ How niggardly,” they cry, “ to stoop
 To paltry black and green from soup !
 Once, every novice could obtain
 A hearing over iced Champagne,

And claret, ev'n of second growth,
Gave credit to an amorous oath.
But now, such lifeless love is made
On cakes, orgeat, and lemonade,
That hungry women grow unkind,
And men too faint to speak their mind.
Tea mars all mirth, makes evenings drag,
And talk grow flat, and courtship flag ;
Tea, mawkish beverage, is the reason
Why fifty flirtings in a season
Swell with ten marriages, at most,
The columns of the Morning-Post."

We might easily multiply extracts of this kind. And jaunty and fluent as are the above passages, there are others which suggest that the author had a first-rate talent for natural description and quiet landscape, points which here and there seem to rise above his pictures of men and women — or rather, belles and exquisites. Here is a picture of a storm in the Park, which is close and effective, and quite as truthful in its realism as Swift's "City Shower": —

How suddenly the day's obscured!
Bless me, how dark! — Thou threatening cloud,
Pity the un-umbrella'd crowd.
The cloud rolls onward with the breeze.
First, pattering on the distant trees
The rain-drops fall — then quicker, denser,
On many a parasol and spencer ;
Soon drenching, with no mercy on it,
The straw and silk of many a bonnet.

Think of their hapless owners fretting,
 While feathers, crape, and gauze are wetting !
 Think of the pang to well-dressed girls,
 When, pinched in vain, their hair uncurls,
 And ringlets from each lovely pate
 Hang mathematically straight !
 As off, on every side, they scour,
 Still beats the persecuting shower,
 Till, on the thirsty gravel smoking,
 It fairly earns the name of soaking.
 Breathless they scud ; some helter-skelter
 To carriages, and some for shelter ;
 Lispering to coachmen drunk or dumb
 In numbers — while no numbers come.

And what dweller in London will not recognise the accuracy of this : —

Have you not seen (you must remember)
 A fog in London — time, November ?
 That non-descript elsewhere, and grown
 In our congenial soil alone ?
 First, at the dawn of lingering day
 It rises, of an ashen grey,
 Then, deepening with a sordid stain
 Of yellow, like a lion's mane,
 Vapour importunate and dense,
 It wars at once with every sense,
 Invades the eyes, is tasted, smelt,
 And, like Egyptian darkness, felt.
 The ears escape not. All around
 Returns a dull unwonted sound.
 Loth to stand still, afraid to stir,
 The chilled and puzzled passenger,

Oft-blundering from the pavement, fails
To feel his way along the rails,
Or, at the crossings, in the roll
Of every carriage dreads its pole.

Here again — in a picture of the Serpentine in winter — are some lines which to us appear to be thoroughly successful in their choice and economy of epithet : —

What time the slanting wintry sun
Just skirts th' horizon, and is gone ;
When from his disk a short-lived glare
Is wasted on the clear cold air ;
When the snow sparkles, on the sight
Flashing intolerable white ;
And, swept by hurried feet, the ground
Returns a crisp and crushing sound.

The main defect of the " Letters to Julia " is its length. One of the poet's contemporaries (Kenney, the creator of Jeremy Diddler) complained indeed, that, besides being too long, it was " not broad enough ; " but with the absence of the latter dimension, we need not quarrel. In point of even execution, and that air of reticent good breeding which Byron declared to be characteristic of the author's style in speaking, little is wanting. The purpureus pannus is, in truth, carefully kept out of sight ; and yet, notwithstanding the strict observance of the Hora-tian precept, there is a certain lack of colour and variety, which begets an impatient desire for discordance of some sort. One is reminded, in turning over the pages of faultlessly rhymed couplets, of that "Cymodocée" of Chateaubriand, in which there was not a single elision, and concerning which the irreverent said, — "Tant pis pour Cymodocée !" That the poem treats solely of trivial pursuits and amusements cannot justly be counted as a defect, since the author's intention was to depict the habits of the merely fashionable world. This his graver contemporaries fully recognised when they nicknamed the book, "Letters from a Dandy to a Dolly." A less excusable fault is, that Luttrell nowhere opposes to his picture of frivolity any hint of higher or worthier employment ; nor is there, as in these days there assuredly would be if the theme were treated by a modern, any subtle indication of a graver side to the story, or any skilful suggestion as to the unreality of so-called pleasure as an object in life. But these differences are in some respects due to changed conditions of society, and altered points of view. We are sadder than our forefathers, and if we have no longer their hearty appetites, we are not so willingly grave that we do not occasionally envy them their high spirits.

Little room remains to speak of Luttrell's lesser effort of "Crockford House," even if it came within our scheme. The defect of tediousness is more conspicuous in it than in the former work, although the motive—denunciation of the prevailing vice of Play—is a better one. But the author seems to have had a doubt about making it public, since, according to Moore, he consulted Lord Sef-ton, Mr. Greville, and others, as to the expediency of a man of the town publishing such an attack upon the high priest of the gaming table,— "a deference to society," says Moore (rather unexpectedly, considering his antecedents), "for which society will hardly thank him." With "Crockford House" are printed some lines on Rome and the dirtiness of that Imperial City. A rhyming tour de force on "Burnham Beeches," and a few more of Luttrell's fugitive verses are included in the late Mr. Locker Lampson's "Lyra Elegantiarum," where is also to be found the admirable little epigram upon Miss Ellen Tree, which has already been reproduced in these pages.¹ Here, from the same collection, is a graver specimen:—

¹ See ante, "The Author of Monsieur Tonson."

“O Death, thy certainty is such,
 The thought of thee so fearful,
 That, musing, I have wondered much
 How men are ever cheerful.”

There is a compactness about this which makes us wish for some other brief examples of Luttrell's serious style. It is his plans that are long, not his art. If, instead of amplifying “Lydia, dic per omnes,” he had simply translated it, or “Vixi puellis,” or “Vitas hinnuleo,” or any of the lighter of Horace's odes, we should have had nearly perfect versions, for no man could have done them better.

We add one more of his lesser pieces, because the first lines alone are generally quoted. They are the quatrains to Moore about his “Lallah Rookh.” Luttrell wrote them in the name of Rogers, whose “Human Life” Lord Lauderdale was said to have by heart : —

“I'm told, dear Moore, your lays are sung
 (Can it be true, you lucky man ?)
 By moonlight in the Persian tongue,
 Along the streets of Ispahan.

“'Tis hard, but one reflexion cures,
 At once, a jealous poet's smart :
 The Persians have translated yours,
 But Lauderdale has mine by heart.”

Not the least piquant thing connected with this little jeu d'esprit, so carefully transferred to his Preface and Diary by the author of the "Irish Melodies," is, that Luttrell's informant was none other than Thomas Moore himself.¹

¹ Henry Luttrell was a natural son of Colonel Luttrell, afterwards second Earl of Carhampton. He died as late as December, 1851. Those who desire further particulars concerning this "Old Society Wit" will do well to consult a most interesting paper with that title in Temple Bar for January, 1895, by a charming writer of reminiscences, the late Mrs. Andrew Crosse.

CHANGES AT CHARING CROSS.

LOOKING from that "coign of vantage," the portico of the National Gallery, upon what Peel called "the finest site in Europe," it is impossible not to think of its vicissitudes. With the exception of St. Martin's Church, which is comparatively modern, the only antiquity now left to link the present with the past is the statue of Charles I., riding unhasting, un-resting, to his former Palace of Westminster, and dating from a day when Trafalgar Square was but an irregular range of houses surrounding a royal mews. Only a quarter of a century ago stood in its vicinity an older relic still. If the stones that formed the fine Jacobean frontage of Northumberland House could have spoken, they would have pleaded that they knew of a remoter time when, in place of the royal martyr proclaiming from his pedestal, in Waller's turn-coat line, that had risen the time-honoured cross which marked the last halting place of Queen Eleanor's body in its progress to the Abbey. The old Cross again had more ancient memories than Northumberland House. It could recall a falconry — not unhaunted of a certain rhyming Clerk of Works called Geoffrey Chaucer — which was long anterior to the royal mews ; and it remembered how — “ Ere yet, in scorn of Peter’s pence,

"Rebellion, though successful, is but vain,"

And number’d bead, and shrift,
Bluff Harry broke into the spence
And turn’d the cowls adrift,” —

the hospital of St. Mary Rounceval had preceded the great palace of the Percies.

In any retrospect of Charing Cross, Queen Eleanor’s monument forms a convenient starting point, and from Ralph Agas’s well-known survey of 1592 we get a fair idea of its environment in the reign of Elizabeth. At this date there were, comparatively speaking, few buildings in its neighbourhood. On the river side, indeed, houses straggled from the Strand towards Whitehall ; but St. Martin’s was actually “ in the fields,” Spring Gardens was as open as “ St Jemes Parke,” and where to-day stand Covent Garden and Her Majesty’s Theatre, laundresses laid their clothes to dry. Along Hedge Lane, which began at the present Union Club and followed the line of Dorset Place and Whitcomb Street, you might, if so minded, carry your Corinna through green pastures to eat tarts at Hampstead or Highgate, passing, it may be, on the road, Master Ben Jonson from Hartshorne Lane (now Northumberland Street), unconscious for the moment of any other "humour" in life than the unlimited consumption of blackberries. By the windmill at St. Giles's you might find him flying his kite, or (and why not, since the child is father to the man?) displaying prematurely his "Roman infirmity" of boasting to his ragged playmates of the parish school.

But to the sober antiquary the pleasures of imagination are forbidden; and the Cross itself has yet to be described. Unfortunately, there are no really trustworthy representations of it, and even its designer's name is uncertain. It was long ascribed to Pietro Cavallini, to whom tradition also attributes the monument of Henry III. in Westminster Abbey. What is undoubted, however, is that it was one of several similar crosses erected by the executors of Eleanor of Castile; that it was begun by one Richard de Crundale, cementarius, and after his death continued by another of the family; and that its material came from Caen in Normandy, and Corfe in Dorsetshire. From Agas's map it seems to have been octagonal in shape with tiers of niches; and it was decorated with paintings and gilt metal figures modelled by Alexander Le Imaginator. It stood from 1296 until, by vote of May the 3rd, 1643, the Long Parliament, in the same iconoclastic spirit which prompted the removal of the "Golden Cross" sign as "superstitious and idolatrous," decreed its demolition. "The parliament," says a contemporary Royalist ballad, still to be found in Percy's 'Reliques,'

"The parliament to vote it down
Conceived it very fitting,
For fear it should fall, and kill them all,
In the house as they were sitting.
They were told, God-wot, it had a plot,¹
Which made them so hard-hearted,
To give command, it should not stand,
But be taken down and carted.'"

Other verses bewail its disappearance as a familiar landmark :—

"Undone, undone, the lawyers are,
They wander about the towne,
Nor can find the way to Westminster,
Now Charing-Cros is downe."

¹ This was Waller's plot of June, 1643, to disarm the London militia, etc., for which Tompkins and Chaloner were executed.

As a matter of fact, it was not actually "taken down and carted" till the summer of 1647. Part of its stones, says Charles's biographer, William Lilly, went to pave Whitehall, and others were fashioned into knife-hafts, "which, being well polished, looked like marble." Sic transit gloria mundi!

Its site remained unoccupied for seven and twenty years. But here, in the interval, the regicides met their fate. Harrison, Cromwell's chaplain Peters, John Jones, Carew, and others, all suffered "at the railed space where Charing Cross stood." Pepys, between an account of the wantonness of Mrs. Palmer and the episode of "a very pretty lady" who cried out at the playhouse "to see Desdemona smothered," has the following entry of Harrison's death, which he witnessed: — "13th [October, 1660]. I went out to Charing Cross to see Major-general Harrison hanged, drawn, and quartered; which was done there, he looking as cheerful as any man could do in that condition. He was presently cut down, and his head and heart shown to the people, at which there was great shouts of joy. It is said, that he said that he was sure to come shortly at the right hand of Christ to judge them that now had judged him; and that his wife do expect his coming again. Thus it was my chance to see the King beheaded at White Hall, and to see the first blood shed in revenge for the King at Charing Cross."

Grave John Evelyn has also his record:—
"17 [October, 1660]. Scot, Scroope, Cook, and Jones suffered for reward of their iniquities at Charing Crosse, in sight of the place where they put to death their natural Prince, and in the presence of the King his sonn, whom they also sought to kill. I saw not their execution; but met their quarters mangl'd and cutt and reeking as they were brought from the gallows in baskets on the hurdle. Oh, the miraculous providence of God!"

For further particulars of these dismal butcheries the reader is referred to the State Trials. In the years to come, less gruesome sights succeeded. From the overseers' books of St. Martin's, Mr. Peter Cunningham discovered entries of sums paid in 1666 and 1667 by "Punchinello, y^e Italian popet-player for his Booth at Charing Cross," and in 1668 there are similar records for the "playhouse" of a "Mounsr. Devone." Then, in 1674, the present "noble equestrian statue" as Walpole styles it, was erected, not too promptly, by Charles II.

Its story is singular, — almost as singular as that of the statue of the Merry Monarch himself, which loyal Sir Robert Viner, "Alderman, Knight and Baronet," put up in the old Stocks Market. It appears to have been executed about 1633 by Hubert Le Sœur, a pupil of John of Bologna, for the Lord High Treasurer Weston, who intended it to embellish his garden at Roehampton. By the terms of the commission it was to be of brass, a foot larger than life, and the sculptor "was to take advice of his Maj. (Charles I.) riders of greate horses, as well for the shape of the horse and action as for the graceful shape and action of his Maj. figure on the same." Before the beginning of the Civil War, according to Walpole, the statue, cast but not erected, was sold by the Parliament to John Rivett, brazier, dwelling at the Dial near Holborn Conduit, who was strictly enjoined to break it up. Rivett, whose "faith was large in time," carefully buried it instead, and ingenuously exhibited some broken brass in earnest of its destruction. Report further says that, making capital out of both parties, he turned these mythic fragments into knife and fork handles, which the Royalists bought eagerly as relics, and the Puritans as tokens of the downfall of a despot. In any case there is evidence to show that the statue was still in Rivett's possession in 1660, and it is assumed that it passed from him or his family to the second Charles. Strype says that he presented it to the King, which is not unlikely. The pedestal, finely carved with cupids, palms, armour, and so forth, is attributed to Grinling Gibbons. Somewhere near it was the Pillory where, every 10th of August, for several successive years, stood the infamous Titus Oates. Edmund Curll, too (upon that principle which makes Jack Sheppard one of the "eminent" persons buried in St. Martin's), was once its "distinguished" occupant, for one of his scandalous publications; and later Parsons of the Cock Lane Ghost suffered here those amenities so neatly described by Robert Lloyd in his "Epistle to Churchill": —

"Thus, should a wooden collar deck
Some woefull 'squire's embarrass'd neck,
When high above the crowd he stands
With equidistant sprawling hands,
And without hat, politely bare,
Pops out his head to take the air;
The mob his kind acceptance begs,
Of dirt, and stones, and addle-eggs."

To the right of King Charles's statue, upon a site now traversed diagonally by Northumberland Avenue, stood, until 1874, the last of the great riverside mansions, Northumberland House. Its façade extended from the statue towards Northumberland Street, and its gardens went back to Scotland Yard, into which it had a gate. Northampton House, as it was first called, was built about 1605 for Henry Howard, Earl of Northampton, by Bernard Jansen and Gerard Christmas—Christmas, it is supposed, being responsible for the florid gateway or “frontispiece.” From the Earl of Northampton it passed to the Suffolks, and changed its name to Suffolk House, a name which it retained until 1670, when becoming the property of the Percies it was again re-christened. Londoners, except upon such special occasions as Exhibition years and the like, saw little of the place beyond the façade. Its original plan was a quadrangle, uncompleted at first on the garden-side. Algernon Percy, tenth Earl of Northumberland, added a new river-front, and a stone flight of stairs, which Mr. Evelyn regarded as clumsy and “without any neat invention.” In the interior its chief glory was a double state-staircase with marble steps. There was also a state-gallery of magnificent proportions, a drawing-room decorated by Angelica Kauffman, and a tapestry-chamber by Zuccarelli. The pictures which, with the wonderful stiff-tailed leaden lion so long familiar to passers by, are now transferred to Sion House at Isleworth, including Titian’s famous Cornaro family (Evelyn's "Venetian Senators"), and a number of minor masterpieces. One of the show-curiosities was a Sèvres vase nine feet high, presented to the second Duke of Northumberland by Charles X. of France.

It would be easy to accumulate anecdote around this ancient dwelling-place. From this "house with stairs" by Charing Cross set out that merry marriage procession of Boyle and Howard, which Suckling has immortalised in the "Ballad on a Wedding;" and hence, too, Mr. Horace Walpole, with a hackney-coach full of persons of condition fresh from the opera, started to interview the Cock Lane Ghost. Here again, in the fire of 1780, great part of the library of the Duke's chaplain and relative, Dr. Percy, was destroyed in his apartments, where, doubtless, he often received Reynolds and Johnson. Goldsmith, also, among others, made one very characteristic visit to the same spot, though not on this occasion as the guest of the Bishop of Dromore. Let him tell the story in his own words, apud Washington Irving:—

"I dressed myself in the best manner I could, and, after studying some compliments I thought necessary on such an occasion, proceeded to Northumberland House, and acquainted the servants that I had particular business with the duke. They showed me into an ante-chamber, where, after waiting some time, a gentleman, very elegantly dressed, made his appearance; taking him for the duke, I delivered all the fine things I had composed in order to compliment him on the honour he had done me; when, to my great astonishment, he told me I had mistaken him for his master, who would see me immediately. At that instant the duke came into the apartment, and I was so confounded on the occasion, that I wanted words barely sufficient to express the sense I entertained of the duke's politeness, and went away exceedingly chagrined at the blunder I had committed." ¹

Fronting Northumberland House, a little to the left, and at some distance from the site of the present hotel of the same name, stood, until the advent of railroads brought about its downfall as a posting-house, that older Golden Cross,² whose idolatrous sign scandalised the Puritan House of Commons. But the sign must have been soon restored, for it is distinguishable in Canaletto's view of 1753, though the carriage at the door probably hides the long water-trough which, sixty years since, old Londoners still remembered as giving the place something of the air of a country inn. From the Golden Cross, houses extended northward to St. Martin's Church—Duncannon Street being as yet to come. Trafalgar Square and the space now occupied by the National and National Portrait Galleries was covered, as far back as Hemings' Row, by buildings surrounding the King's or royal mews. In the days before Agas's map this had been a falconry, dating from Richard II. or earlier; but in 1534, when Henry VIII.'s stables at Lomsbery (Bloomsbury) were fired and burned, the royal stables were transferred to the buildings at Charing Cross, which, nevertheless, retained their old name of mews (i. e., a mewing place) which they first had "of the King's falcons there kept." Here, in the Caroline days, the famous stallion "Rowley" "champed golden grain" like the horses in the "Iliad," and gave his nickname to a king. Here, too, M. St. Antoine taught the noble art of horsemanship. In 1732, William Kent rebuilt the façade. At this date, as shown in a plan in the British Museum, dated 1690, it still consisted of the "Great Mews," the "Green Mews," and the "Back Mews." It continued to be used for stabling until 1824, when the royal stud, gilt coach, and other paraphernalia were transferred to Pimlico. In 1830, after serving as a temporary shelter to Mr. Cross's menagerie, then ousted from Exeter Change, and to the homeless Public Records of Great Britain, it was pulled down. Not many traditions haunt its past which need a mention here. Its northeastern side, if we may trust Gay's "Trivia," was a chosen resort of thieves and gamblers. "Careful Observers" (he says), "studious of the Town," and it may be observed that the ill-famed rookery, known in Ben Jonson's day as the "Bermudas" and later, by convenient euphemism, as the "C'ribbee Islands," was close to St. Martin's Church, where it survived until 1829. At the Upper Mews-Gate stood a convivial house of call, celebrated in song by "bright broken Maginn;"¹ and hard by, from 1750 to 1790, ¹ "I miss already, with a tear,

¹ "Oliver Goldsmith: a Biography," 1849, p. 166.

² In that half-authentic, half-romantic book, the "Wine and Walnuts" of Ephraim Hardcastle (Pyne the Artist), he makes Hogarth catch a cold while sketching from the inn window the pageant of the proclamation of George III. at Charing Cross.

"Pass by the Meuse, nor try the Thimble's Cheats;"

The Mews-Gate public house,
Where many a gallant grenadier
Did lustily carouse;
Alas! Macadam's drougthy dust
That honoured spot doth fill,
Where they were wont the ale robust
In the King's name to swill."

“Honest Tom Payne” kept the little old book-shop, “in the shape of an L,” once so well known to book-lovers in the last century.¹

Towards 1829-30 the neighbourhood of Charing Cross began to assume something of its present aspect. Already, four years earlier, the College of Physicians, leaving its home in Warwick Lane, had taken up its abode in a handsome building at the bottom of Dorset Place, close by the newly-erected Union Club. Then, about 1830, the ground was cleared for Trafalgar Square, and the C’ribbee Islands and the rookeries were “blotted from the things that be.” In 1832, the present National Gallery was begun. Nelson’s Column followed, in 1840-9, and then, many years after, was finally completed by the addition of Landseer’s lions. Since the National Gallery first became the laughing-stock of cockneys, it has been more than once enlarged; and even at the present moment further extensions at the back, of considerable importance to the picture-seer, are said to be in contemplation. But it is needless to dwell at any length upon the present aspect of the place. It is too modern for the uses of the antiquary; and it may be doubted if time can ever make it venerable. In justice to its unfortunate architect, Wilkins, it must, nevertheless, be added that his work was done under most unfavourable restrictions. He was vexatiously hampered as to space, and Carlton House having been demolished, it was an express condition that he should avail himself of its fine Corinthian portico.

¹ See “The Two Paynes” in “Eighteenth Century Vignettes,” Second Series, pp. 199-202.

The only other building near Charing Cross which deserves notice is St. Martin's Church. This, however, will better be reserved for treatment on some future occasion in conjunction with St. Martin's Lane. But Spring Garden, or Gardens, part of which has already disappeared under the new Admiralty buildings, requires and deserves a final paragraph. It lies to the southwest of the Cross, and according to old definitions had a frontage extending from the end of the Haymarket to Wallingford House (the present Admiralty). In the days of James I. and Charles I. it was a pleasure-ground attached to Whitehall Palace, taking its name from one of those jets d'eau, the delight of seventeenth century topiarians, which suddenly sprinkled the visitor who unwittingly pressed it with his foot. It contained butts, a bathing-pond, and apparently part of the St. James's Park menagerie, since the State papers contain an order under date of the 31st January, 1626, for payment to Philip, Earl of Montgomery, of £72, 5s, 10d, for "keeping the Spring-Gardens and the beasts and fowls there." One of the favourite amusements of the place was bowling, and it was while Charles was watching the players with his favourite Steenie, who lived at this date in Wallingford House, that an oft related incident took place: — "The Duke put on his hat; one Wilson, a Scotchman, first kissing the Duke's hand, snatched it off, saying, 'Off with your hat before the King!' Buckingham, not apt to restrain his feelings, kicked the Scotchman; but the King, interfering, said, 'Let him alone, George; he is either mad or a fool.' 'No, sir,' replied the Scotchman, 'I am a sober man; and if your majesty would give me leave I will tell you that of this man which many know, and none dare speak.'"

Whether his majesty permitted the proffered revelation, so significant of the popular estimate of Buckingham, history has not recorded. But the garden at this time (1628) must have been private, for it was not until two years later that Charles threw it open by proclamation, appointing one Simon Osbaldeston "keeper of the King's Garden called the Spring Garden and of His Majesty's Bowling-green there." Four years after, it had grown so "scandalous and insufferable" a resort that he closed it again. It must, however, have been reopened, for in June, 1649, Mr. Evelyn tells us that he "treated divers Ladies of my relations, in Spring Garden;" and though Cromwell shut it up once more, it could not have been for long, as ten years after Evelyn's date it was still offering its sheltering thickets to love-makers, and its neats' tongues and bad Rhenish to wandering epicures.

With the Restoration ends its history as a pleasure-ground. To the disgust of the dwellers at Charing Cross, houses began to arise upon it; and its frequenters migrated to the newer "Spring Garden" at Vauxhall. By 1772, when Lord Berkeley was permitted to build over the so-called "Wilderness," its last traces had disappeared. But "the whirligig of time brings in his revenges," and Lord Berkeley's house in its turn has now made way for the office of the Metropolitan Board of Works, and that again for the London County Council.

As a locality Spring Gardens—the Spring Gardens of brick and mortar—has been unusually favoured with distinguished inhabitants. Here Cromwell is said to have had a house; and it was "at one Thomson's," next door to the Bull Head Tavern, in the thoroughfare leading to the park, that his Latin secretary, John Milton, wrote his "Joannis Philippi Angli Responsio," etc. Colley Cibber's home, for several years, was hard by; so also was the lodging occupied by the author of the "Seasons," when he first came to London to negotiate his poem of "Winter." In Buckingham Court lived and died sprightly Mrs. Centlivre, whose husband (her third) was yeoman of the mouth to Anne and George I. Locket's ordinary — the "Lackets" of my Lord Foppington and the "stap-my-vitals" fine gentlemen of Vanbrugh's day — stood on the site of Drummond's Bank. Two doors from it, towards Buckingham Court, was the famous "Rummer" Tavern kept by Matthew Prior's uncle, Samuel Pryor, also or formerly landlord of that Rhenish Wine House in Cannon Row where Dorset first discovered the clever young student of Horace whom he helped to turn into a statesman and ambassador.¹ The "Rummer" appears in Hogarth's "Night" ("Four Times of the Day," 1738), which gives a view of the statue with the houses behind. Hogarth's "Rummer," however, is on the left, whereas the tavern (according to Cunningham) was, after 1710, removed to the right or Northumberland House side. Probably in the plate, as in the one of Covent Garden in the same series, the view was reversed in the process of engraving.

¹ See Matthew Prior, in "Eighteenth Century Vignettes," Third Series, p. 229.

Hogarth's name recalls another memory. It was in an auctioneer's room in Spring Gardens (now part of the offices of the London County Council) that the Society of Artists of Great Britain held their famous second exhibition of 1761, for the catalogue of which Wale and Hogarth made designs. Hogarth was also a prominent exhibitor, sending, among other oil paintings, "The Lady's Last Stake" (Mr. Huth's), the "Election Entertainment" (Soane Museum), and the ill-fated "Sigismunda," the last of which is now gaining, in the National Gallery, some of the reputation which was denied to it in the painter's lifetime.

JOHN GAY.

NO very material addition, in the way of supplementary information, can now be made to the frequently reprinted "Life of Gay" in Johnson's "Poets," or to the genial and kindly sketch in Thackeray's "English Humourists."¹ Gay was born at Barnstaple in 1685, and baptised at the Old Church of that town on the 16th September. He came of an ancient but impoverished family, being the younger son of William Gay, who lived at the "Red Cross," a house in Joy Street, which, judging from the church-rate paid by its occupants, must have been one of the best of the ¹ This is still practically true. But in an excellent edition of Gay's "Poetical Works," prepared for the "Muses' Library," in 1893, the late John Underhill, a Barnstaple man and a Gay enthusiast, besides making certain biographical rectifications, contrived to discover a few new facts. "Some details that have not been known to former writers" were also supplied by Mr. George A. Aitken in an interesting paper prompted by Mr. Underhill's volumes, and contributed to the Westminster Review for January, 1894.

Barnstaple dwellings. He lost his father in 1695, his mother — whose maiden name was Hanmer — having died in the previous year. He thus became an orphan at the early age of ten, and in all probability, fell into the care of a Barnstaple uncle, Thomas Gay. He was educated at the free grammar school of his native place, where his master was one Rayner, afterwards succeeded by the “Robert Luck, A. M.,” whose “Miscellany of New Poems” was published in 1736 (four years after Gay’s death) by Edward Cave. One of the pieces was a Latin version of Prior’s “Female Phaeton,” and its author, in an English introduction to his work, inscribed to Gay’s patron, Charles Douglas, Duke of Queensberry and Dover, sought to associate himself with his pupil’s metrical proficiency.

“O Queensberry ! cou’d happy Gay
This Off’ring to thee bring,
'T is his, my Lord (he ’d smiling say)
Who taught your Gay to sing.”

It is, moreover, asserted that Gay’s dramatic turn was stimulated by the plays which the pupils at Barnstaple were in the habit of performing under this rhyming pedagogue. Of his schooldays, however, nothing is known with precision ; but it is clear from his subsequent career that he somewhere obtained more than a bowing acquaintance with the classics. There is still preserved, in the "Forster Library" at South Kensington, a large paper copy of Maittaire's "Horace" (Tonson and Watts, 1715), which contains his autograph, and is copiously annotated in his beautiful handwriting. This of itself should be sufficient to refute the aspersions sometimes cast upon his scholarship ; for it affords unanswerable evidence that, even at thirty, and perhaps at a much later period, he remained a diligent student of the charming lyricist and satirist, who, above all others, commends himself to the attention of idle men. In his boyhood, however, it must be assumed that Gay's indolence was more strongly developed than his application, for his friends could find no better opening for him than that of apprentice to a London silk mercer. With this employment he was speedily dissatisfied. Dr. Hill Burton, in his "History of the Reign of Queen Anne," implies that he ran away ; but there is nothing to show that he took any step of so energetic a character. His nephew, the Rev. Joseph Baller, in the little publication entitled "Gay's Chair," explains that, "not being able to bear the confinement of a shop," his uncle became depressed in spirits and health, and therefore returned to his native town, taking up his residence, not, as before, with Thomas Gay, but with his mother's brother, the Rev. John Hanmer, the Barnstaple Nonconformist minister.

That Gay should have found the littering of polished counters with taffeties and watered tabbies an uncongenial occupation is not surprising, especially if be added thereto that thankless service of those feminine "silk-worms" who (as Swift says in the "City Shower") "Pretend to cheapen Goods, but nothing buy." Yet it is to be feared that the lack of energy which was his leading characteristic would have equally disposed him against any continuous or laborious calling. When his health was restored, he went back to town, living for some time (according to Mr. Baller¹) "as a private gentleman" — a statement which is scarcely reconcilable with the modest opening in life his family had selected for him. Already he is supposed to have made some definite essays in literature, and the swarming taverns and coffee-houses of the metropolis afforded easy opportunities of access to notabilities of all sorts. He had besides some friends already established in London. Fortescue, Pope's correspondent, and later Master of the

¹ "Gay's Chair," 1820, p. 17.

Rolls, had been his schoolmate at Luck's; while another of Luck's alumni was Aaron Hill, the playwright. According to a time-honoured tradition, Gay acted for some time as Hill's secretary. But Hill himself was only embarking in letters when, in May, 1708, Gay published, as an eight-leaf folio, his first poem of "Wine," the purport of which may be gathered from the Horatian —

"Nulla placere diu, nec vivere carmina possunt, Quæ scribuntur aquæ potoribus," — of its motto, a moot theory which seems to have "exercised" the author throughout his life-time, since he is still discussing it in his last letters. "I continue to drink nothing but water," he tells Swift two years before his death, "so that you can't require any poetry from me." The publisher of "Wine" was William Keble, at the Black-Spread-Eagle in Westminster Hall, and it was also pirated by Henry Hills of the "brown sheets and scurvy letter," referred to in Gay's subsequent "Épistle to Bernard Lintott." "Wine" professes to "draw Miltonic air," but the atmosphere inhaled is more suggestive of the "Splendid Shilling" of John Philips. Gay did not reprint the poem in his subscription edition of 1720, perhaps because of its blank verse ; but the concluding lines, which describe the breaking up of a “ midnight Modern Conversation ” at the Devil Tavern by Temple Bar, already disclose the minute touch of “ Trivia ” : —

“ now all abroad
 Is hush’d and silent, nor the rumbling noise
 Of coach or cart, or smoky link-boys’ call
 Is heard — but universal Silence reigns :
 When we in merry plight, airy and gay,
 Surpris’d to find the hours so swiftly fly
 With hasty knock, or twang of pendent cord,
 Alarm the drowsy youth from slumb’ring nod ;
 Startled he flies, and stumbles o’er the stairs
 Erroneous, and with busy knuckles plies
 His yet clung eyelids, and with stagg’ring reel
 Enters confused, and mutt’ring asks our wills ;
 When we with liberal hand the score discharge,
 And homeward each his course with steady step Unerring steers, of cares and coin bereft.”

As it is expressly stated that the Bordeaux — the particular vintage specified — was paid for, it is clear that, at this time, Gay must have succeeded in finding either a purse or a paymaster. It is equally clear from his next ascertained production that he had acquired more than a slight familiarity with the world of letters. A year after the publication of “ Wine ” Steele established the Tatler ; and in May, 1711, when the Spectator was two months old, Gay favoured the world with his impressions of "the Histories and Characters of all our Periodical Papers, whether Monthly, Weekly or Diurnal," in a threepenny pamphlet, entitled "The Present State of Wit, in a Letter to a Friend in the Country." This, which Mr. Arber has reprinted in volume vi. of his "English Garner," is of more than fugitive interest. It disclaims politics upon the ground that it does not care "one farthing either for Whig or Tory," but it refers to the Examiner as "a Paper which all Men, who speak without Prejudice, allow to be well Writ." At this time Swift evidently knew nothing of his critic, for he tells Stella that "the author seems to be a Whig" . . . "Above all things, he praises the Tatlers and Spectators; and I believe Steele and Addison were privy to the printing of it. Thus is one treated by these impudent dogs" [with whom his relations were strained]. Apart from his disclaimer of politics, nevertheless, Gay, if he was anything, was a Tory, and Swift was wrong. But Gay was clearly well informed about the secret history of Steele's ventures, and he gives an excellent account of the "Esquire's [i. e. Bickerstaff's] Lucubrations." "He has indeed rescued it [Learning] out of the hands of Pedants, and Fools, and discover'd the true method of making it amiable and lovely to all mankind.¹ In the dress he gives it, 't is a most welcome guest at Tea-tables and Assemblies, and it is relish'd and caressed by the Merchants on the Change ; accordingly, there is not a Lady at Court, nor a Banker in Lumbard-Street, who is not verily perswaded, that Captain Steele is the greatest Scholar, and best Casuist, of any Man in England." From other passages it is also plain that the writer (like Swift) knew who was Steele's unnamed colleague, for he speaks of Addison's assistance as "no longer a Secret," and compares the conjunction of the two friends to that of Somers and Halifax "in a late Reign." It may consequently be concluded that he had at least made Steele's acquaintance, and that the set of the Tattlers in four volumes on royal paper, which Tonson at this time transmitted to Gay "by Mr. Steel's Orders," is at once a confirmation of the fact and a tacit recognition of the welcome compliments contained in "J. G.'s" "Present State of Wit."

But "Mr. Isaac Bickerstaff" was not the only notability to whom Gay had become known. In July, 1711, we find Pope sending Henry Cromwell his "service to all my few friends, and to Mr. Gay in particular," and in the same year Gay wrote the already mentioned "Epistle to Lintott," which contained among other things, reference to the harmonious "Muse" of the young author of the "Pastorals" and the recently-issued "Essay on Criticism."

¹ These words seem like an echo of the passage from Blackmore's Preface to "Prince Arthur," which Steele quotes admiringly in Spectator No. 6.

"His various numbers charm our ravish'd ears,
His steady judgment far out-shoots his years,
And early in the youth the god appears," sang this panegyrist in one of those triplets that Swift abominated. But Pope, who saw the lines in manuscript, accepted the flattering unctio without reserve, and the epistle accordingly, in the following May (1712), made its appearance in Lintott's famous "Rape of the Lock" Miscellany, to which Gay also contributed the Story of Arachne from Ovid. He was still, it seems, unknown to the general public, for the contemporary announcement of the book, while giving "bold advertisement" to such lesser lights as Fenton, Broome, and Henry Cromwell, refrains from including his name among the eminent hands who contributed to the collection. Nor is it probable that his reputation had been greatly served by the "tragi-comical farce" he had issued a week or two before under the title of "The Mohocks,"—i. e., the midnight revelers whose real (or imaginary) misdeeds were at that time engaging public attention. It was inscribed to Dennis the critic, who was informed (in his own vocabulary) that its subject was "Horrid and Tremendous," that it was conceived "according to the exactest Rules of Dramatick Poetry," and that it was based upon his own "Appius and Virginia." Notwithstanding an intentionally ambiguous title-page,¹ it was never acted, and its interest, like others of Gay's efforts, is purely "temporary."

Before 1712 had ended, Pope was able to congratulate his new ally upon what promised to be a material stroke of good fortune. He was appointed "Secretary or Domestic Steward" to the Duchess of Monmouth,—that "virtuous and excellent lady," as Evelyn calls her, whose husband had been beheaded in the year of Gay's birth. The exact amount of dependence implied by this office is obscure, and it is differently estimated by different narrators. It is more material to note that Gay must already have been engaged upon his next poeti-

¹ The following is the advertisement in the Spectator for 10th April, 1712:—

"This Day is Published, The Mohocks. A Tragi-Comical Farce. As it was Acted near the Watch-house in Covent-Garden. By her Majesty's Servants. Printed for Bernard Lintott; at the Cross-Keys between the two Temple-Gates in Fleet-Street."

cal effort, perhaps his first serious one, the Georgic called "Rural Sports," which he inscribed to Pope. It was published by Tonson on the 13th January, 1713. To the reader of the post-Wordsworthian age, its merit is not remarkable, and Johnson anticipated the toujours bien, jamais mieux of Madame Guizot, when he described it as "never contemptible, nor ever excellent." Mr. Underhill, indeed, goes so far as to deny to it any experimental knowledge of country life; and, as a matter of fact, Gay himself admits that he had long been a town-dweller. Still his childhood must have been passed among rural scenes, and it is by no means certain that if he had written his verses at Barnstaple he would — writing as he did under Anna Augusta — have written them in a different way. We suspect that the germ of the objection, as often, is to be traced, not so much to the poem itself, as to certain preconceived shortcomings in its author. Johnson's disbelief in Goldsmith's ability to distinguish between a cow and a horse no doubt coloured his appreciation of the "Animated Nature;" and Swift (whom Mr. Underhill quotes) doubted if Gay could tell an oak from a crab tree. "You are sensible," Swift went on, "that I know the full extent of your country skill is in fishing for roaches, or gud-geons at the highest." With such a testimony before us, criticism of "Rural Sports" easily becomes a foregone conclusion. Nevertheless, it deserves more consideration than it has received.

Apart from the production at Drury Lane, in May, 1713, of a deplorable play, "The Wife of Bath," and the contribution to Steele's Guardian of two brightly written papers on "Flattery" and "Dress" (Nos. 11 and 149), Gay's next ascertained work was "The Fan." It is one of the contradictions of criticism that this poor and ineffectual poem should have been received with greater favour than the (relatively) far superior "Rural Sports." Gay's mythology is never very happy (Mr. Elwin roundly styles it "stupid"), and he always writes best with his eye on the object. Pope, however, interested himself in "The Fan," and even touched on that "little modish machine" in parts, — circumstances which give it a slender interest. A week or two later appeared Steele's "Poetical Miscellany," in which Gay is represented by "A Contemplation upon Death," and by a pair of elegies ("Panthea" and "Araminta"). But his first individual performance, "The Shepherd's Week," belongs to the early part of 1714. This again is closely connected with his friendship with Pope. Pope, smarting under the praise which Tickell had given in the Guardian to the Pastorals of Ambrose Philips, and not content with perfidiously reviewing Philips himself in the same periodical, now contrived to induce the author of "Rural Sports" to aid the cause by burlesquing his rival in a sequence of sham eclogues, in which he was to exhibit the Golden Age with the gilt off, "after the true ancient guise of Theocritus." "Thou wilt not find my Shepherdesses" — says the Author's "Proeme" — "idly piping on oaten Reeds, but milking the Kine, tying up the Sheaves, or if the Hogs are astray driving them to their Styes. My Shepherd gathereth none other Nosegays but what are the growth of our own Fields; he sleepeth not under Myrtle shades, but under a Hedge, nor doth he vigilantly defend his Flocks from Wolves" [this was a palpable hit at Philips!] "because there are none." Like Fielding's "Joseph Andrews," the execution of "The Shepherd's Week" was far superior to its avowed object of mere ridicule. In spite of their barbarous "Bumkinets" and "Grubbinols," Gay's little idylls abound with interesting folk-lore and (wherever acquired) with closely studied rural pictures. We see the country girl burning hazel nuts to find her sweetheart, or presenting the faithless Colin with a knife with a "posy" on it, or playing at "Hot Cockles," or listening to "Gillian of Croydon," and "Patient Grissel." Nor are there wanting sly strokes of kindly satire, as when the shepherds are represented fencing the grave of Blouzelinda against the prospective inroads of the parson's horse and cow, which have the right of grazing in the churchyard; or when that dignitary, in consideration of the liberal sermon-fee, "Spoke the Hour-glass in her praise — quite out."

From a biographical point of view, however, the most interesting part of "The Shepherd's Week" is its dedicatory prologue to Bolingbroke, a circumstance which, according to Swift, constituted that "original sin" against the Court which afterwards interfered so much with Gay's prospects of preferment. But its allusions also show that the former mercer's apprentice had already made the acquaintance of Arbuthnot, and probably of some gentler critics, whose favour was of greater importance. "No more," says the poet,

"No more I'll sing Buxoma brown,
Like Goldfinch in her Sunday Gown;
Nor Clumsilis, nor Marian bright,
Nor Damsel that Hobnelia hight.
But Lansdown fresh as Flow'r of May,

And Berkly Lady blithe and gay,
And Anglesey whose Speech exceeds
The voice of Pipe, or oaten Reeds ;
And blooming Hide, with Eyes so rare,
And Montague beyond compare."

"Blooming Hide, with eyes so rare," was Lady Jane Hyde, daughter of the Earl of Clarendon, and elder sister of the Catherine who was subsequently to be Gay's firmest friend.

The Scriblerus Club, to which his friend Pope had introduced him, and for which he is said to have acted as Secretary, had also done him the greater service of securing him an even firmer ally in Swift, and it was doubtless to his connection with this famous association, of which Lord Oxford was an occasional member, that he was indebted for his next stroke of good fortune. By June, 1714, he had resigned, or been dismissed from, his position in the household of the Duchess of Monmouth. But in that month, with the aid of his new friends, he was appointed Secretary to Lord Clarendon, then Envoy Extraordinary to the Court of Hanover, and there exists a brief rhymed appeal or "Epigrammatical Petition" from the impecunious poet to Lord Oxford (in his capacity as Lord Treasurer) for funds to enable him to enter upon his duties.

I'm no more to converse with the swains,
 But go where fine people resort ;
 One can live without money on plains,
 But never without it at court.

If, when with the swains I did gambol,
 I array'd me in silver and blue ;
 When abroad, and in courts, I shall ramble,
 Pray, my lord, how much money will do ?¹

He got, not without difficulty, and probably through the instrumentality of Arbuthnot (who handed in his memorial) a grant of £100 for his outfit ; and he also got, from Swift in Ireland, a letter of fatherly advice exhorting him to learn to be a manager, to mind his Latin, to look up Aristotle upon Politics, and Grotius " De Jure Belli et Pacis." For a brief space we must imagine him strutting in his new clothes through the clipped avenues of Herrenhausen, yawning over the routine life of the petty German Court, and perfecting himself in the diplomatic arts of " bowing profoundly, speaking deliberately, and wearing both sides of his long periwig before." Then the death of Queen Anne put an end to all these halcyon days. What was worse, the " Shepherd's Week," as already stated, had been dedicated to Bolingbroke, and Bolingbroke — ill-luck would have it — was not in favour with ¹ Letter from Gay to Swift, June 8, 1714.

Her Most Gracious Majesty's successor. In this juncture, as a course which "could do no harm," Pope, who seems always to have treated Gay with unfailing affection, counselled his dejected friend "to write something on the King, or Prince, or Princess," and Arbuthnot said ditto to Pope. Gay, cheering up, accordingly, set about an "Epistle to a Lady [probably Mrs. Howard, afterwards Lady Suffolk]: Occasion'd by the arrival of Her Royal Highness [i. e. the Princess of Wales, whom he had seen at Hanover]." In this he takes opportunity to touch plaintively upon the forlorn hopes of needy suitors: —

"Pensive each night, from room to room I walk'd,
To one I bow'd, and with another talk'd;
Enquir'd what news, or such a Lady's name,
And did the next day, and the next, the same.
Places, I found, were daily giv'n away
And yet no friendly Gazette mentioned Gay."

The only appreciable result of this ingenuous appeal was that Their Royal Highnesses came to Drury Lane in February, 1715, to witness Gay's next dramatic effort, the tragic-comi-pastoral farce of the "What d' ye Call it," a piece after the fashion of Buckingham's "Rehearsal," inasmuch as it parodies the popular tragedies of the day, and even roused the ire of Steele by taking liberties with Addison's "Cato." Without the "Key" which was speedily prepared by Theobald and Griffin the actor, its allusions must at first have fallen rather flat upon an uninstructed audience, especially as its action was grave and its images comic. Gay's matter-of-fact friend, Cromwell, who saw the gestures but, being deaf, could not hear the words, consequently found it hopelessly unintelligible. But it brought its author a hundred pounds, and it contains one of his most musical songs "'T was when the seas were roaring." A few months after its publication in book form, Lord Burlington sent the poet into Devonshire, an expedition which he commemorated in a pleasant tributary epistle published in 1715 with the title of "A Journey to Exeter." He had two travelling companions, no needless precaution when Bagshot Heath swarmed with "broken gamesters" who had taken to the road, and he describes delightfully his impressions de voyage, — the fat and garrulous landlord at Hartley-Row, the red trout and "rich metheglin" at Steele's borough of Stockbridge, the "cloak'd shepherd" on Salisbury Plain, the lobsters and "unadulterate wine" at Morecombe-lake,¹ and last of all, the female barber at Axminster: —

¹ A writer in the Athenæum for Dec. 1, 1894, points out that this is a mistake. Gay must have stripped

The weighty golden chain adorns her neck,
 And three gold rings her skilful hand bedeck:
 Smooth o'er our chin her easy fingers move,
 Soft as when Venus stroak'd the beard of Jove."

Incidentally, we learn that Gay could draw, for he sketches the "eyeless" faces of his fellow travellers asleep in two chairs at Dorchester. Also that, at thirty, he was already stout: —

You knew fat Bards might tire,
 And, mounted, sent me forth your trusty Squire.

It must have been about this time that Gay composed another poem, somewhat akin to the Exeter epistle, inasmuch as both were probably influenced by the verses on "Morning" and "A City Shower," which Swift had contributed to Steele's Tatler. Indeed, in the Preface to "Trivia; or, the Art of Walking the Streets of London," which appeared at the end of January, 1716, Gay specially refers to hints given to him by Dr. Swift. The theme is an unexpected one for an author whose tastes were certainly not pedestrian ("any lady with a coach and six horses would carry him to Japan," said the Dean later); but it has still its attraction to "the lobster of his scarlet mail" a little farther on, at Charmouth. But these references to food at least confirm Congreve's dictum of Gay, — "Edit, ergo est." the antiquary and the student of the early eighteenth century. Every one who desires to realise the London of the first George, with its signs and its street cries (that ramage de la ville, which Will. Honeycomb preferred to larks and nightingales), its link boys and its chairmen, its sweeps, small-coal men, milk-maids, Mohocks, and the rest, must give his days and nights to the study of "Trivia." He will obtain valuable expert advice as to the ceremony of taking or giving the wall; learn to distinguish and divide between a Witney Roquelaure and a Kersey Wrap-Rascal; and, it may be, discover to his surprise that there were umbrellas before Jonas Hanway:—

Good housewives all the winter's rage despise,
 Defended by the riding-hood's disguise:
 Or underneath th' umbrella's oily shed,
 Safe thro' the wet on clinking pattens tread.

It is consoling to think that Gay made some £40 by this eighteen-penny poem, and £100 more by the subscriptions which Pope and others, always jealously watching over his interests, obtained to a large paper edition. But it is impossible to commend his next production, of which, indeed, it is suspected that he did no more than bear the blame. Although he signed the advertisement of the comedy entitled "Three Hours before Marriage," it is pretty sure that he had Pope and Arbuthnot for active coadjutors. But whether Pope libelled Dennis as "Sir Tremendous," or Arbuthnot Woodward, or Gay himself the Duchess of Monmouth as the very incidental "Countess of Hippokoana" (Ipecacuanha?) — are questions scarcely worthy of discussion now. It is sufficient that the piece was both gross and silly. It failed ignominiously on the boards in January, 1717, and is not likely to be consulted in type except by fanatics of the fugitive like George Steevens, who reprinted it in the "Additions to Pope" of 1776.

During all this period Gay seems to have been vaguely expecting Court favour, and to have suffered most of the discouragements of hope deferred. Yet, if the Court neglected his pretensions — and it nowhere appears that they were very well grounded — he always found friends whose kindness took a practical form. Lord Burlington had sent him to Exeter; in 1717 Pulteney carried him to Aix as his Secretary, a trip which furnished the occasion of a second Epistle. Then, in 1718, he went with Lord Harcourt to Oxfordshire, where befell that pretty tragedy of the two haymakers struck dead by lightning, which sentimental Mr. Pope made the subject of a fine and famous letter to Lady Mary Wortley Montagu, who, unluckily for sentiment, received it in anything but a sentimental spirit. Both the journeys to Aix and Exeter were reprinted in the grand quarto edition of Gay's poems which Tonson and Lintott published in 1720, with a frontispiece by the eminent William Kent, and with a list of subscribers rivalling in number and exceeding in interest that prefixed to the Prior of 1718. Those munificent patrons of literature, the Earl of Burlington and the Duke of Chandos, took fifty copies each! In the second volume were included a number of epistles and miscellaneous pieces, many of which were published for the first time, as well as a new pastoral tragedy called "Dione." One of the ballads, "Sweet William's Farewell to Black Ey'd Susan," was long popular, and is still justly ranked among the best efforts of the writer's muse. Of the thousand pounds which Gay cleared over this venture his friends hoped he would make provident use, suggesting purchase of an annuity, investment in the funds, and so forth. But Craggs had given him some South Sea Stock, and to this he added his new windfall, becoming in short space master of £20,000. Again his well-wishers clustered about him with prudent counsels. At least, said Fenton, secure as much as will make you certain "of a clean shirt, and a shoulder of mutton every day." But the "most refractory, honest, good-natur'd man," as Swift calls him, was not to be so advised. He was seized with the South Sea madness, and promptly lost both principal and profits.

Among the other names on the subscription list of the volumes of 1720 are two which have a special attraction in Gay's life, for they are those of his kindest friends, the Duke and Duchess of Queensberry. The lady was the charming and wayward Catharine Hyde, — the "Kitty" whose first appearance at Drury Lane playhouse as a triumphant beauty of eighteen Prior had celebrated in some of his brightest and airiest verses, and whose picture, as a milkmaid of quality, painted by Charles Jervas at a later date, is to be seen at the National Portrait Gallery. As already stated, Gay had written of her sister Jane (by this time Countess of Essex) as far back as 1714; and it may be that her own acquaintance with him dated from the same period. In any case, after her marriage to the Duke of Queensberry in 1720, she appears to have taken Gay under her protection. "He [Gay] is always with the Duchess of Queensberry" — writes Mrs. Bradshaw to Mrs. Howard in 1721; and five years afterwards the poet himself tells Swift that he has been with his patrons in Oxfordshire and at Petersham and "wheresoever they would carry me." In the interval he is helping Congreve to nurse his gout "at the Bath," or living almost altogether with Lord Burlington at Chiswick or Piccadilly or Tunbridge Wells, or acting as secretary to Pope at Twickenham ("which you know is no idle charge"), or borrowing sheets from Jervas to entertain Swift in those lodgings which had been granted to him by the Earl of Lincoln, and were taken from him by Sir Robert Walpole. It says much for the charm of his character that he knew how to acquire and how to retain friends so constant and so diverse. But though his life sounds pleasant in the summary, it must have involved humiliations which would have been intolerable to a more independent man. According to Arbuthnot, the Burlingtons sometimes left their protégé in want of the necessaries of life, and neither they nor his other great friends were very active to procure him preferment. "They wonder," says Gay piteously to Swift in 1722, "at each other for not providing for me; and I wonder at them all." From a letter which he wrote to Pope two years later, it is nevertheless plain that somebody had given him a lottery commissioner-ship worth £150 per annum, so that, for a man whose claims were not urgent, he can hardly be said to have been culpably neglected.

Previously to his appointment as a lottery commissioner he had been seriously ill. The loss of his South Sea Stock preyed upon his spirits; and his despondency "being attended with the cholic" — in the unvarnished language of the "Biographia Britannica" — "brought his life in danger." Upon his recovery, and pending the postponed advancement he was always "lacking" ("the Court keeps him at hard meat," wrote Swift in 1725), he produced another play, "The Captives," which ran for a week in January, 1724, the third or author's night being expressly commanded by his old patrons, the Prince and Princess of Wales. Then at the request of the Princess, he set to work upon the "Fables" by which his reputation as a writer mainly survives. "Gay is writing Tales for Prince William," Pope tells Swift. After many delays, partly in production by the press, partly owing to Gay's own dilatory habits, the first series appeared in 1727,¹ and was well received, although, if Swift is to be believed, their “nipping turns” upon courtiers were not best welcomed where the poet most needed encouragement. To this it is perhaps to be attributed that when George II. came at last to the throne nothing better was found for Gay than the post of gentleman-usher to the little Princess Louisa—a child under three. By this time he was more than forty, and he had self-respect enough to think himself too old. He therefore politely declined the nomination. With this, however, his long deferred expectations finally vanished. “I have no prospect,” he wrote with tardy sagacity to Swift, “but in depending wholly upon myself, and my own conduct. As I am used to disappointments, I can bear them; but as I can have no more hopes, I can no more be disappointed, so that I am in a blessed condition.”

¹ A second series of sixteen fables was published in 1738, after his death, from the manuscripts in the hands of the Duke of Queensberry.

Strangely enough, when he penned this in October, 1727, he had already completed what was to be his greatest dramatic success, the famous “Beggar’s Opera,” which, produced at Lincoln’s Inn Fields on the 29th of January, 1728, for a season overthrew Italian song,—“that Dagon of the Nobility and Gentry, who had so long seduced them to idolatry,” as the “Companion to the Playhouse” puts it, — and made its Author’s name a household word. How it first occurred to Swift what “an odd pretty sort of thing a Newgate Pastoral might make;” how friends hesitated, and Cibber rejected, and the public rapturously applauded; how it was sung at street corners, and painted on screens; how it procured its “Polly” (Lavinia Fenton) a coronet, and made Rich (the manager) gay, and Gay (the author) rich — all these things are the commonplaces of literature. At Mr. John Murray’s in Albemarle Street may still be seen one of the three pictures which William Hogarth painted of that all conquering company, and which, years afterwards, was engraved by another William — William Blake. The Coryphæus of the highway (Walker) appears in the centre, while “Lucy” (Mrs. Eggleton) pleads for him to the left, and “Polly” (Miss Fenton) to the right. Scandal, in the person of John, Lord Hervey, adds that the opera owed a part of its popularity to something in the dilemma of Macheath “between his twa Deborahs” which irresistibly suggested the equally equivocal position of Walpole between his wife and his mistress. This is probably exaggerated, as is also the aid which Gay is reported to have received from Pope and others,¹ but it accounts in a measure for the fate which befell Gay's next enterprise.

That some attempt to perpetuate so signal a success as the "Beggar's Opera" should not be made was scarcely in the nature of things; and Gay set speedily about the preparation of a sequel, to which he gave the name of the popular heroine of the earlier piece. But "Polly" was saved from the common fate of continuations by the drastic action of the Lord Chamberlain, taken, it is surmised, upon the instruction of Walpole. When it was almost ready for rehearsal, the representation was prohibited. The result of this not very far-sighted step on the part of the authorities was of course to invest its publication as a book with an unprecedented and wholly fictitious interest. Friends on all sides, and especially those opposed to the Court, strained every nerve to promote the sale. The Duchess of Marlborough (Congreve's Henrietta) gave £100 for a copy; and the Duchess of Queensberry, who had the temerity to solicit subscriptions within the very precincts of St. James's, was forbidden to return to them. Thereupon the Duke, nothing loth, threw up his appointments, as Vice Admiral of Scotland and Lord of the Bedchamber, and followed his lady, who delivered a Parthian shaft in the shape of a very indiscreet and saucy letter to His Majesty King George. In all this, it is plain that Gay's misfortune was simply made the instrument of political antagonisms: but, for the moment, his name was on every lip. "The inoffensive John Gay" — writes Arbuthnot to Swift under date of March 19, 1729 — "is now become one of the obstructions to the peace of Europe, the terror of the ministers, the chief author of the Craftsman, and all the seditious pamphlets, which have been published against the Government. He has got several turned out of their places; the greatest ornament of the court banished from it for his sake;¹ another great lady [Mrs. Howard] in danger of being Chassé [sic] likewise; about seven or eight duchesses pressing forward, like the antient circumcelliones in the church, who shall suffer martyrdom on his account first. He is the darling of the city . . . I can assure you, this is the very identical ¹ "The gay Amanda let us now behold,

¹ Pope — "semper ardentis acuens sagittas" — was supposed to have pointed some of the songs. But he told Spence that neither he nor Swift gave any material aid in the work ("Anecdotes," 1858, pp. 110, 120).

In thy Defence, a lovely banish'd Scold."

"The Female Faction," 1729.

John Gay, whom you formerly knew, and lodged with in Whitehall two years ago." The gross result was that Gay gained about £1200 by the publication of "Polly" as a six shilling quarto, of which Bowyer, the printer, in one year struck off 10,500 copies; by the representation of the "Beggar's Opera" he had made, according to his own account, "between £700 and £800" to Rich's £4000.

During a great part of 1728 Gay resided at Bath with the Duchess of Marlborough. After the prohibition of "Polly," he appears, as usual, to have fallen ill, and to have been tenderly nursed by Arbuthnot. "I may say, without vanity, his life, under God, is due to the unwearied endeavors and care of your humble servant," writes this devoted friend to Swift. Then the Queensberrys took formal charge of John Gay and henceforth he lived either at their town house in Burlington Gardens (where now stands the Western Branch of the Bank of England), or at their pleasant country seat of Amesbury in Wiltshire. The Duke kept the poet's money; the Duchess watched over the poet and his wardrobe.¹ "I was a long time," he says in 1730, "before I could prevail with her to let me allow myself a pair of shoes with two heels; for I had lost one, and the shoes were so decayed, that they were not worth mending." Elsewhere it is — "I am ordered by the duchess to grow rich in the manner of Sir John Cutler.¹ I have nothing, at this present writing, but my frock that was made at Salisbury, and a bob-perriwig." In an earlier paper in these volumes² we have given some account of the joint letters which at this period Gay and his kind protectress wrote to Swift in Ireland, and they present a most engaging picture of the alliance between the author of "The Hare and Many Friends" and the grande dame de par le monde of the last century. Most of them were written from Amesbury (where nothing but a summer house now remains of the buildings as they were in Gay's time), and their main theme is the invitaand Mme. de Hervart. "D'autres prenaient soin de lui" — says M. Taine. "Il se donnait à ses amis, sentant bien qu'il ne pouvait pourvoir à lui-même. Mme. d'Hervart, jeune et charmante, veilla à tout, jusqu'à ses vêtements," etc. . . . "Ses autres amis faisaient de même." Are all fabulists congenitally feckless?

¹ In these characteristics Gay seems to have imitated La Fontaine, who, after living twenty years with Mme. de la Sablière, passed at her death to the care of M.

¹ Cf. Pope's Epistle "Of the Use of Riches," ll. 315-34.

² See "Prior's Kitty," in "Eighteenth Century Vignettes," First Series.

tion of Swift to England. The final epistle of the series is dated November 16, 1732; and in this Gay reports that he has "come to London before the family to follow his own inventions," which included the production of his recently written Opera of "Achilles." A few days later, he was attacked by a constitutional malady to which he had long been subject, and died on the 4th of December. After lying in state in Exeter Change, he was (says Arbuthnot, who had again nursed and attended him) "interred at Westminster-Abbey, as if he had been a peer of the realm;" and the Queensberrys erected a handsome monument to his memory. By other friends he was mourned as sincerely, if not as sumptuously. Pope, who had always loved him, felt a genuine sorrow, and five days elapsed before Swift at Dublin could summon courage to open the boding letter which announced his death. His fortune, of which his patrons had made themselves the voluntary stewards, amounted to about £6000. It was divided between his sisters, Mrs. Baller and Mrs. Fortescue.

His last letter to Swift had ended: — "Believe me, as I am, unchangeable in the regard, love and esteem I have for you." The words reveal the chief source of his personal charm.

He was thoroughly kindly and affectionate, with just that touch of clinging in his character, and of helplessness in his nature, which, when it does not inspire contempt (and Gay's parts saved him from that), makes a man the spoiled child of men and the playfellow of women. He had his faults, it is true : he was as indolent as Thomson, as fond of fine clothes as Goldsmith ; as great a gourmand as La Fontaine. That he was easily depressed, was probably due in a measure to his inactive life and his uncertain health. But at his best, he must have been a delightfully soothing and unobtrusive companion — invaluable for fêtes and gala days, and equally well adapted for the half lights and unrestrained intercourse of familiar life. “You will never” — writes Swift to the Duchess of Queensberry, “be able to procure another so useful, so sincere, so virtuous, so disinterested, so entertaining, so easy, and so humble a friend, as that person whose death all good men lament.” The praise is high, but there is little doubt that it was genuine. Pope's antithetical epitaph, despite the terrible mangling it has received at the hands of Johnson, may also be quoted : —

“Of manners gentle, of affections mild ;
In wit a man ; simplicity a child ;
With native humour temp'ring virtuous rage,
Formed to delight at once and lash the age :

Above temptation, in a low estate,
 And uncorrupted, e'en among the great :
 A safe companion, and an easy friend,
 Unblamed through life, lamented in thy end,
 These are thy honours! not that here thy bust
 Is mixed with heroes, or with kings thy dust,
 But that the worthy and the good shall say,
 Striking their pensive bosoms — Here lies Gay.”

The monument in Westminster Abbey, for which the above was composed, bears, in addition, a flippanant couplet of Gay's own which can only have been — as indeed it is stated to have been — the expression of a passing mood.

To attempt any detailed examination of Gay's works is unnecessary. Those which are most likely to attract the nineteenth century reader have been mentioned in the course of the foregoing pages. Stripped of the adventitious circumstances which threw the halo of notoriety around them, his two best known plays remain of interest chiefly for their songs,¹ which have all the qualities songs possess when the writer, besides being a poet, is a musician as well. This lyric faculty is also present in all Gay's lesser pieces, and is as manifest in the ballad on Molly Mog of the "Rose" Inn at Wokingham, as in "Black-Ey'd Susan" or "'T was when the Seas were roaring." In his longer poems he is always happiest when he is most unconstrained and natural, or treads the terra firma of the world he knows. The "Fan," the miscellaneous "Eclogues," the "Epistles," are all more or less forced and conventional. But exceptions occur even in these. There is a foretaste of Fielding in "The Birth of the Squire;" and the "Welcome from Greece," in which he exhibits Pope's friends assembling to greet him after his successful translation of the "Iliad," has a brightness and vivacity of movement, which seems to be the result of an unusually fresh inspiration. It is written, moreover, in an ottava rima stanza far earlier than Tennant's or Frere's or Byron's. The "Tales" are mediocre, and generally indelicate; the "Translations" have no special merit. In the "Fables" Gay finds a more congenial vocation. The easy octosyllabic measure, not packed and idiomatic like Swift's, not light and ironical like Prior's, but ambling, colloquial, and even a little down-at-heel, after the fashion of the bard himself, suited his habits and his Muse. An uncompromising criticism might perhaps be inclined to hint that these little pieces are by no means faultless ; that they are occasionally deficient in narrative art, that they lack real variety of theme, and that they are often wearisome, almost unmanly, in their querulous insistence on the vices of servility and the hollowness of Courts. On the other hand, it must be admitted that they are full of good nature and good sense ; and if not characterised by the highest philosophical wisdom, show much humorous criticism of life and practical observation of mankind. They have, too, some other recommendations, which can scarcely be ignored. They have given pleasure to several generations of readers, old and young ; and they have enriched the language with more than one indispensable quotation. “ While there is life, there ’s Hope,” “ When a Lady ’s in the Case,” and “ Two of a Trade can ne’er agree,” — are still part of the current coin of conversation.

¹ One of the couplets of the “Beggar's Opera” bids fair to live as long as Buridan's two bundles of hay. “How happy could I be with either, Were t'other dear Charmer away!” — was, not long since, employed by Sir William Harcourt in the House to illustrate a political dilemma. Whereupon Mr. Goschen neatly turned the laugh upon the Leader of the Opposition by continuing the quotation — “But while you thus tease me together, To neither a word will I say!”

AT LEICESTER FIELDS.

IT is with places as with persons ; they often attract us more in their youth than in their maturer years. Apart from the fact that these papers are mainly confined to the Eighteenth Century, this threadbare truth affords a sufficient excuse for speaking of Leicester Square by its earlier, rather than by its existing name. And, indeed, the abiding interest of the locality lies less in the present than in the past. Not even the addition to the inclosure of busts and a Shakespeare fountain has been able to regenerate entirely the Leicester Square that most of us remember, with its gloomy back streets, — its fringe of dingy cafés and restaurants, — its ambiguous print- and curiosity-shops, — its incorrigibly-unacclimatised Alhambra, whose garish Saracenic splendours scale and peel perpetually in London's imber edax. If we call anything forcibly to mind in connection with the spot, it is a certain central statue, long the mock of the irreverent, — a statue of the first George, which had come of old, gilded and magnificent, from "Timon's Villa" at Canons, to fall at last upon evil days and evil tongues, to be rudely spotted with sacrilegious paint, to be crowned with a fool's cap, and, finally, to present itself to the spectator in the generally dishonoured and dilapidated condition in which, some twenty years ago, it was exhibited by the late John O'Connor on the walls of the Royal Academy. But when, travelling rapidly backwards, past the Empire and the Alhambra, past Wylde's Globe and the Panopticon, past Burford's Panorama and Miss Linwood's Needlework, we enter the last century, we are in the Leicester Fields of Reynolds and Hogarth, of Newton and John Hunter, — the Leicester Fields of Sir George Savile and Frederick, Prince of Wales, of Colbert and Prince Eugene. This is the Leicester Fields of which we propose to speak. Leicester Square and its notorieties may be left to the topographers of the future.¹

¹ The name "Leicester Square" — it is but right to say — is also of fairly early date. In "A Journey through England," 4th ed., 1724, 1. 178, the writer, speaking of the space before Leicester House, says: "This was till these Fourteen Years always called Leicester Fields, but now Leicester Square." There is, however, abundant evidence that the older name continued to be freely used throughout the century. For example, in 1783, Mrs. Hogarth's

It is in Ralph Agas his survey of 1592 (or rather in Mr. W. H. Overall's excellent facsimile) that we make our first acquaintance with the Fields, then really entitled to their name. According to Agas, the ground to the north-west of Charing Cross, and immediately to the east of the present Whitcomb Street (at that time Hedge Lane), was formerly open pasture land, occupied — in the plan — by a pair of pedestrians larger than life, a woman laying out clothes, and two nondescript quadrupeds, of which one is broken-backed beyond the licence of deformity. The only erections to be discovered are the King's Mews, clustering together for company at the back of the Cross. Sixty years later, judging from the map known generally as Faithorne's, the ground had become more populated. To the right of St. Martin's Lane, it is thickly planted with buildings; to the left also a line of houses is springing up and creeping northward, while in the open space above referred to stand a couple of lordly mansions. One, on a site which must have lain to the north of the present Little Newport Street, is Newport House, the town residence of which house is advertised as "The Golden Head in Leicester Fields," and it is "at his house in Leicester Fields," in 1792, that Malone makes Reynolds die.

Mountjoy Blount, Earl of Newport ; the other, which occupies ground now traversed by Leicester Place, is Leicester House. Its garden at the back extended across the eastern end of Lisle Street, and its boundary wall to the north was also the southern boundary wall of the old Military Garden where King James's son, Prince Henry of Wales — whose gallant and martial presentment you shall see figured in the fore front of Michael Drayton's "Poly-Olbion," — had been wont to exercise his troops, and make the now-discredited welkin ring with the shooting-off of chambers, with alarums, and points of war.

Leicester House the first was built about 1632-6 by Robert Sydney, second Earl of Leicester, the father of Algernon Sydney, and of that beautiful Dorothy, afterwards Countess of Sunderland, whom Van Dyck painted, and Waller "Petrarchised" as Sacharissa. The site (Swan Close)¹ was what is known as Lammasland, and from the Overseers' Books of the Parish of St. Martin's in the Fields, the Earl seems not only to have paid "Lammas" for "the ground that adjoins to the Military Wall," but also "for the field that is before his house" — i. e. Leicester Fields. This latter probably extended to the present Orange Street, so that the grounds of the old mansion may be roughly said to be bounded by the Mews on the south, and by the Military Garden on the north. Few memories cling about the place which belong to Lord Leicester's lifetime. When not engaged in embassies and the like, he was absent at his other and more famous seat of Penshurst in Kent, and Leicester House was "To Let." One of the earliest of its illustrious tenants was that quondam "Queen of Hearts" (as Howell calls her), the unfortunate Elizabeth of Bohemia, who, already smitten with her last illness, died there in February, 1662, after a few days' residence, "in the arms" (says Evelyn) "of her nephew the King" [Charles II.]. Another tenant, some years later, was Charles Colbert, Marquis de Croissy, the French Ambassador, a brother of Louis the Fourteenth's famous minister and financier; and Pepys records, under date of 21st October, 1668, that he was to have taken part in a deputation from the Royal Society to Lord Leicester's distinguished lessee. But having unhappily been "mighty merry" at a house-warming of his friend Batelier, he arrived too late to accompany the rest, and was fain to console himself (and perhaps to do penance) by carrying his wife to Cow Lane, Smithfield, in order to inspect a proposed new coach, with the splendours of which "she is out of herself for joy almost," although, from the sequel, it was not the one ultimately purchased.

¹ Cunningham failed to identify Swan Close. But from a letter in the State Paper Office, quoted in "Temple Bar" for June, 1874, it would seem that this was the actual site of the building.

Pepys, as will be seen, did not actually enter Leicester House, at all events upon this occasion. His brother diarist was more fortunate. Going in October, 1672, to take leave of the second Lady Sunderland (Sacharissa's daughter-in-law), whose husband had already set out as ambassador to Paris, grave John Evelyn was entertained by Her Ladyship with the performances of Richardson the fire-eater, who, in those days, enjoyed a vogue sufficient to justify the record of his prowess in the "Journal des Sçavans" for 1680. "He devour'd brimston on glowing coales before us," says Evelyn, "chewing and swallowing them; he mealted a beere-glasse and eate it quite up; then taking a live coale on his tongue, he put on it a raw oyster, the coal was blown on with bellows till it flam'd and sparkl'd in his mouth, and so remain'd till the oyster gaped and was quite boil'd; then he mealted pitch and wax with sulphur, which he drank downe as it flam'd; I saw it flaming in his mouth a good while ; he also tooke up a thick piece of yron, such as laundresses use to put in their smoothing-boxes, when it was fiery hot, held it betweene his teeth, then in his hand, and threw it about like a stone, but this I observ'd he car'd not to hold very long ; then he stood on a small pot, and bending his body, tooke a glowing yron with his mouth from betweene his feete, without touching the pot or ground with his hands ; with divers other prodigious feates." ¹

Lord Leicester closed a long life in 1677, and many other tenants afterwards occupied the mansion in the Fields. Under Anne it was the home of the German Ambassador, or "Imperial Resident," who lived in it far into the reign of the first George. At this time, judging from a water-colour bird's-eye view in the Crace Collection at the British Museum, it was a long two-storied building, with attics above, a courtyard in front, and a row of small shops or stalls extending on either side of its entrance gate. Behind came the garden, stretching northward, and decorated in the Dutch fashion with formal trees and statues. Hither, on a Saturday in January, 1712, conveyed unostentatiously in a hackney coach from Whitehall Stairs, came Eugene of Savoy, who, by desire of the Emperor Charles VI., had just crossed from the Hague in Her Majesty's "Yacht 'Fubs'" (Captain Desborough), with the intention of preventing, if possible, what Prior calls that "vile Utrecht Treaty." His mission was to be fruitless from the outset, for at the Nore he was greeted with the news of Marlborough's disgrace, and his presence in England had little or no effect upon the pending proposals for peace. But for two months he was to be fêted and lionised by the nobility in a way which — modest warrior and discreet diplomatist as he was — must have taxed his resources as much as a campaign in Flanders. His admirers mobbed him on all occasions. "I could not see Prince Eugene at court to-day," — writes Swift to Mrs. Johnson at Dublin, — "the crowd was so great. The Whigs contrive to have a crowd always about him, and employ the rabble to give the word when he sets out from any place." Elsewhere Swift had said — "I hope and believe he comes too late to do the Whigs any good." At first His Highness's appearance prepossessed him. He is not ill-looking, "but well enough, and a good shape." Later on, he has revised his opinion. "I saw Prince Eugene at court to-day very plain. He is plaguy yellow, and literally ugly besides." A great Tory lady, Lady Strafford (wife of that haughty Envoy to the Hague who declined to serve with Prior in the Utrecht negotiations) goes farther still. She calls him — her Ladyship spells far worse than Stella — a "fritfull creature," and adds, "the Ladys here dont admire Prince Eugene, for he seemes to take very little notis of them," — a sentiment in which we may perhaps detect a spice of the "spretæ injuria formæ."

¹ "Memoirs of John Evelyn," etc., 1827, ii. pp. 375-6.

Much, indeed, depends upon the point of view, political and otherwise. To Steele, with his military instincts and quick enthusiasm, the great Captain, who surprised Cremona and forced the trenches of Turin, comes surrounded with an aura of hyperbole. "He who beholds him," he writes in "Spectator," No. 340, "will easily expect from him anything that is to be imagined or executed by the Wit or Force of Man. The Prince is of that Stature which makes a Man most easily become all Parts of Exercise; has Height to be graceful on Occasions of State and Ceremony, and no less adapted for Agility and Dispatch; His Aspect is erect and compos'd; his Eye lively and thoughtful, yet rather vigilant than sparkling: His Action and Address the most easy imaginable, and his Behaviour in an Assembly peculiarly graceful in a certain Art of mixing insensibly with the rest, and becoming one of the Company, instead of receiving the Courtship of it. The Shape of his Person, and Composure of his Limbs, are remarkably exact and beautiful." Burnet, as staunch a Whig as Steele, writes more moderately to the same effect. "I had the honour to be admitted at several times, to much discourse with him; his Character is so universally known, that I will say nothing of him, but from what appeared to myself. He has a most unaffected Modesty, and does scarcely bear the Acknowledgments, that all the World pay him: He descends to an easy Equality with those, with whom he converses; and seems to assume nothing to himself, while he reasons with others: He was treated with great respect by both Parties; but he put a distinguished Respect on the Duke of Marlborough, with whom he passed most of his Time.¹ The Queen used him civilly, but not with the Distinction, that was due to his high Merit: Nor did he gain much ground with the Ministers."²

¹ It was for Marlborough, no doubt, that the Prince sat to Kneller. The portrait, in which he wears the Order of the Golden Fleece over a rich coat of armour, and holds a marshal's baton, was mezzotinted by John Simon in 1712.

² "History of His Own Time," ii. (1734), pp. 589-90.

Eugene's stay at Leicester House was brief ; but it must have been fully occupied. "Je caressais beaucoup les gens en place," he writes in his "Mémoires," and it is clear that, however attentive he may have been to his fallen comrade-in-arms of Blenheim and Oudenarde, he did not omit to pay assiduous court to those in power. "He has been every day entertain'd at some great man's," says gossiping Peter Wentworth. Lord Portland gives him "dinner, musick and a dancing" all at once ; the Duke of Shrewsbury has Nicolini to sing for him ; the Duke of Buckingham turns out the militia in his honour. And so forth. He, in his turn, was not backward in responding. "Prince Eugene," says Lady Strafford, "has given an order to six ladys and six men. The ladys are the four Marlborough daughters and the Duchess of Bolton and Lady Berkely. 'Tis a medall — Cupid on won side with a sword in won hand and a fann in the othere, and the othere side is Cupid with a bottle in his hand with a sword run through it. And the motto's are in French which I dare not write to you but the English is 'won don't hinder the othere' ["L'un n'empêche pas l'autre"]." He had arrived in London on January 5, and he returned to Holland on March 17, carrying with him nothing but the diamond hilted sword ("very rich and genteele, and the diamonds very white," says Lord Berkeley of Stratton), which, at a cost of £5000, had been presented to him by Queen Anne.¹ After this Leicester House continued to be the home of the German Resident, apparently one Hoffmann, whom Swift calls a "puppy." But he had also called Hoffmann's predecessor, Count Gallas, a "fool," and too much importance may easily be attached to these mere flowers of speech. About 1718, the house, being again to let, was bought for £6000 by George Augustus, Prince of Wales, who had quarrelled with his father; and a residence of the Princes of Wales it continued for forty years to come.

This was perhaps the gayest time in its history.

¹ If he received royal gifts, he was also princely in his acknowledgments. According to Hearne (Doble, 1889, iii. 329), he paid twenty guineas for Joshua Barnes's quarto "Homer" of 1711, and fifteen guineas for Whiston's "Heretical Book." He also paid thirty guineas for Samuel Clarke's edition of "Cæsar's Commentaries (Tonson, 1712)," then just published with a magnificent portrait of Marlborough, to whom it was dedicated. A large paper copy of this, sumptuously bound, fetched sixteen guineas at Dr. Mead's sale of 1754-5; but though it is praised by Addison in "Spectator," No. 367, as doing "Honour to the English Press," Eugene certainly gave too much. Probably he meant to do so. "Je fis des présens," he says ("Mémoires," 1811, p. 107); "car," he adds significantly, "on achète beaucoup en Angleterre."

From the precision and decorum of St. James's, people flocked eagerly to the drawing-rooms and receptions of Leicester House, where the fiddles were always going. "Balls, assemblies and masquerades have taken the place of dull formal visiting," writes my Lord Chesterfield, "and the women are more agreeable triflers than they were designed. Puns are extremely in vogue, and the license very great. The variation of three or four letters in a word breaks no squares, inasmuch, that an indifferent punster may make a very good figure in the best companies." He himself was one of the most brilliant luminaries of that brilliant gathering, delighting the Prince and Princess by his mimicry and his caustic raillery. Another was that eccentric Duchess of Buckingham, who passed for the daughter of James II. by Catharine Sedley, Countess of Dorchester, and who always sat in a darkened chamber, in the deepest mourning, on the anniversary of King Charles's execution. Thus she was discovered by Lord Hervey, surrounded by servants in sables, in a room hung with black, and lighted only by wax candles. But the most attractive figures of the Prince's Court are the youthful maids of honour, — charming, good-humoured Mary Bellenden, Mary Lepel (to whom an earlier paper in these volumes has been devoted),¹ and reckless and volatile Sophia Howe. Pope and Gay wrote them verses, — these laughing damsels, — and they are often under contemporary pens. Miss Bellenden married Colonel John Campbell, and became a happy wife; the “beautiful Molly Lepel” paired off with John, Lord Hervey, whose pen-portrait by Pope exhausts the arts of “conscientious malevolence,” while poor Sophia Howe fell in love, but did not marry at all, and died in 1726 of a broken heart.

When, in June, 1727, George II. passed from Leicester House to the throne of England, another Prince of Wales succeeded him, — though not immediately, — and maintained the traditions of an opposition Court. This was Frederick, Prince of Wales. Bubb Dodington, afterwards Lord Melcombe, was the Chesterfield of this new régime, and Miss Chudleigh and Lady Middlesex, its Bellenden and Lepel. Political intrigue alternated with gambling and theatricals. One of the habitués was the dancing master Desnoyers, whom Hogarth ridiculed; and French comedians made holiday. “The town,” says an historian of the Square, “was at this time full of gaiety — masquerades, ridottos, Ranelagh in full swing, and the Prince a prominent figure at all, for he loved all sorts of diversion, from the gipsies at Norwood, the conjurors and fortune-tellers in the bye-streets about Leicester Fields, and the bull-baits at Hockley-in-the-Hole, to Amorevoli at the Opera, and the Faussans in the ballet. When the news came of the Duke of Cumberland having lost the battle of Fontenoy in May, 1745, the Prince was deep in preparation for a performance at Leicester House of Congreve's masque of "The Judgment of Paris," in which he played Paris. He himself wrote a French song for the part, addressed to the three rival goddesses, acted by Lady Catherine Hammer, Lady Fauconberg, and Lady Middlesex, the dame régnante of the time. It is in the high Regency vein : —

¹ See “Mary Lepel, Lady Hervey,” in “Eighteenth Century Vignettes,” Third Series, pp. 292-322.

“ Venez, mes chères Déesses, Venez, calmez mon chagrin ;
 Aidez, mes belles Princesses,
 À le noyer dans le vin.
 Poussons cette douce ivresse
 Jusqu'au milieu de la nuit,
 Et n'écoutons que la tendresse
 D'un charmant vis-à-vis.”

“ What signifies if Europe Has a tyrant more or less, So we but pray Calliope Our verse and song to bless ” — proceeds this Anacreontic performance ; and Walpole copies out its entire five stanzas to send to Mann at Florence. They miscarry, he says, "in nothing but the language, the thoughts and the poetry," — a judgment which is needlessly severe.

In March, 1751, an end came to these light-hearted junketings, when His Royal Highness quitted the scene almost precipitately from the breaking of an abscess in his side, caused by the blow of a cricket-ball at Cliveden. The Princess and her children continued to live in Leicester Fields until 1766. Meanwhile, to the accompaniment of trumpets and kettledrums, the old house witnessed the proclamation of George III., and the marriage, in its great drawing-room, of the Princess Augusta to Ferdinand, Hereditary Prince of Brunswick, one of the most popular heroes ever huzzaed to by an English mob. After this last occurrence, the only important event connected with royalty in the Fields is the death at Savile House on 29th December, 1765, of one of the princes. "The King's youngest brother, Prince Frederick," writes Walpole (with one of those Gallic affectations of phrase which roused the anger of Macaulay) "is dead of a dropsy and consumption : he was a pretty and promising boy."

The Savile House above referred to stood next to Leicester House on the west. Savile House, too, was not without its memories. It was here that Peter the Great had boozed with his pot companion, the Marquis of Caermarthen, who occupied it when the Czar made his famous visit to this country in 1698. More than one English home bore dirty testimony to the passage of the imperial savage and his suite, the decorous dwelling of John Evelyn, in particular, at Sayes Court, Deptford, being made "right nasty." There is, however, no special record of any wrong to Savile House beyond the spilling, down the autocratic throat, of an "intolerable deal of sack" and peppered brandy. In January, 1718, the house was taken by the Prince of Wales, and when, a little later, Leicester House was vacated by Lord Gower, a communication was opened between the two, the smaller being devoted to the royal children. It belonged originally to the Aylesbury family, and came through them to the Saviles, one of whom was the Sir George Savile who is by some supposed to have sat for Goldsmith's Mr. Burchell. Sir George was its tenant in the riots of '80, when (as Dickens has not failed to remember in "Barnaby Rudge") it was besieged by the rioters because he had brought in the Catholic Bill. "Between Twelve and One O'clock Yesterday morning [June 6th] " — says the " Public Advertiser " — " a large Body [of rioters] assembled before Sir George Savile's House in Leicester Fields, and after breaking all the Windows, destroyed some of the Furniture." They were finally dispersed by a party of the Horse Grenadier Guards, but not before they had torn up all the iron railings in front of the building, which they afterwards used effectively as weapons of offence. Burke, who had also supported the Bill, was only saved from a like fate by the exertions of sixteen soldiers who garrisoned his house in Charles Street, St. James's Square. With the later use of Savile House, as the home of Miss Linwood's Art Needlework, which belongs to the present century, this paper has nothing to do.

Moreover, we are straying from Leicester House itself. Deserted of royalty, it passed into the hands of Mr., afterwards Sir Ashton Lever (grand uncle of Charles Lever the novelist), who transferred to it in 1771 the miscellaneous collection he had christened the " Holophusikon " — a name which did not escape the gibes of the professional jester. His omnium gatherum of natural objects and savage costumes was, nevertheless, a remarkable one, still more remarkable when regarded as the work of a single man. It filled sixteen of the rooms at Leicester House, besides overflowing on the staircases, and included, not only all the curiosities Cook had brought home from his voyages, but also a valuable assortment of bows and arrows of all countries contributed by Mr. Richard Owen Cambridge of Twickenham.¹ Its possessor had been persuaded that his treasures which, in their first home at Alkrington near Manchester, had enjoyed great popularity, would be equally successful in London. The result, however, did not justify the expectation (an admittance of 5s. 3d. per person must have been practically prohibitive), and poor Sir Ashton was ultimately "obligated" as Tony Lumpkin would say, to apply to Parliament for power to dispose of his show, as a whole, by lottery. He estimated his outlay at £50,000. Of 36,000 tickets issued at a guinea each, only 8000 were taken up. The lottery was drawn in March, 1786, and the winner was a Mr. Parkinson, who transferred his prize to the Rotunda at the Southern or Surrey end of Blackfriars Bridge, changing its name to the Museum Leverianum. But it was foredoomed to misfortune, and in 1806 was dispersed under the hammer. A few years after it had crossed the river, Leicester House in turn disappeared, being pulled down in 1790.¹ In 1791 Lisle Street was continued across its garden; and a little later still, Leicester Place traversed its site, running parallel to Leicester Street, which had existed long previously, being described in 1720, "as ordinarily built and inhabited, except the west side, towards the Fields, where there is a very good house."

¹ See "Cambridge the Everything," in "Eighteenth Century Vignettes," Third Series, pp. 178-204. In an out-house of the "Holophusikon," it may be added, were exhibited (stuffed) Queen Charlotte's elephant and female zebra — two favourites of royalty, which, during their lifetime, had enjoyed an exceptional, if not always enviable, notoriety.

Leicester Place and Leicester Street, — like Leicester Fields itself, — directly preserve the memory of what Pennant aptly calls the "pouting-place of Princes." But there are other traces of Leicester House in the nomenclature of the neighbourhood which had grown up about it. One of the family titles survives in "Lisle Street"; another in "Sidney Alley." Bear Street again recalls the Leicester crest, a bear and ragged staff, while Green Street (one side of which has been recently rebuilt), according to Wheatley and Cunningham, derives its name from the colour of the Leicester Mews, which stood to the south of the Fields. The central inclosure seems to have been first systematically laid out — though it had long been railed round — about 1737. Eleven years later arrived from Canons (Lord Burlington's seat at Edgeware) that famous equestrian statue of George I., which Londoners so well remember. At the time of its erection it was lavishly gilt, and was one of the popular sights of the Town. By some it was attributed to Buchard; by others to Van Nost of Piccadilly, once a fashionable statuary (in lead) like Cheere of Hyde Park Corner. The horse was modelled upon that by Hubert Le Sœur which carries King Charles I. at Charing Cross.

¹ A house in Lisle Street, looking down Leicester Place, still (1898) perpetuates the name, and bears on its façade in addition the words, "New Lisle Street, MDCCXCI." It is occupied by a foreign school or schools ("Écoles de Notre Dame de France").

Considering its prolonged patronage by royalty, Leicester Fields does not seem to have been particularly favoured by distinguished residents. Charles Dibdin, the song-writer, once lived in Leicester Place, where in 1796 (on the east side) he built a little theatre, the Sans Souci; and Woollett, of whose velvety engravings Mr. Louis Fagan, not many years ago, prepared an exhaustive catalogue, had also his habitat in Green Street (No. 11), from the leads of which he was wont — so runs the story — to discharge a small cannon when he had successfully put the last touches to a "Battle of La Hogue," or a "Death of General Wolfe." Allan Ramsay (in his youth), Barry, and John Opie all once lodged in Orange Court (now Street); and here — at No. 13 — was born, of a shoemaker sire and a mother who cried oysters, into a life of many changing fortunes, that strange Thomas Holcroft of the "Road to Ruin." In St. Martin's Street, next door to the Congregational Chapel on the east side, lived Sir Isaac Newton from 1710 until January, 1725, or two years before his death at Kensington. Few traditions, however, connect the abstracted philosopher (he was nearing seventy when he came to the Fields) with the locality, beyond his visits to Princess Caroline at the great house opposite.¹ But there was one member of his household, a few years later, who must certainly have added to the attractions of the ordinary two-storied building where he superintended the revision of the second and third editions of the "Principia." This was his kinswoman, — the "jolie nièce" of Voltaire, — the "famous witty Miss Barton" of the "Gentleman's Magazine." At this date she was "Super-intendant of his domestick Affairs" to Charles, Earl of Halifax, who, dying in 1715, left her £5000 and a house, "as a Token" — so runs the bequest — "of the sincere Love, Affection, and Esteem I have long had for her Person, and as a small Recompence for the Pleasure and Happiness I have had in her Conversation." This, taken in connection with the fact that, since 1706, she had been in receipt of an annuity of £200 a year, purchased in her uncle's name, but for which Halifax was trustee, has led to the conclusion that the relation between the pair was something closer than friendship, and that, following other contemporary precedents, they were privately married.¹

¹ A so-called Observatory on the roof, now non-existent, was for many years exhibited as Newton's. Recent authorities, however, contend that this was the fabrication of a later tenant. But it should be noted that Madame D'Arblay, who also lived in the house, and wrote novels in the room in question, seems to have had no doubts of the kind. She says ("Memoirs of Dr. Burney," 1832, i. 290-1) that her father not only reverently repaired the Observatory when he entered upon his tenancy of No. 35 [in 1774], but went to the expense of practically reconstructing it when it was all but destroyed by the hurricane of 1778.

¹ See "Newton : his Friend : and his Niece," 1885, by Professor Augustus de Morgan, which labours, with much digression, but with infinite ingenuity and erudition, to establish this satisfactory solution of a problem in which the good fame of Newton cannot be regarded as entirely unconcerned.

Be this as it may, Catherine Barton is also interesting as one of the group of gifted women to whom Swift extended the privilege of that half-patronising, half-playful, and wholly unconventional intimacy which is at once the attraction and the enigma of his relations with the other sex. He met her often in London, though not as often as he wished. "I love her better than any-one here," he tells Stella in April, 1711, "and see her seldomer." He dines with her "alone at her lodgings"; he goes with her to other houses; and, Tory though he has become, endures her vivacious Whiggery.

When, at Halifax's death, Catherine Barton, in all probability, returned to her uncle's house, Swift had already gone back to Ireland, and there is no reason for supposing that, although he had lodgings "in Leicester Fields" in 1711, he ever visited his friend in St. Martin's Street. In August, 1717, Mrs. Barton married John Conduitt, M. P., Newton's successor as Master of the Mint, and when in town continued to reside with her husband under Newton's roof. And though Halifax was dead, and Swift in exile, and Prior "in the messenger's hand," there can be little doubt that during her brief widowhood(?) and second wifehood, those friends who had clustered about the former toast of the Kit Cats must still have continued to visit her. The chairs of Lady Worsley and Lady Betty Germaine must often have waited in the narrow entrance to St. Martin's Street, while the ladies "disputed Whig and Tory" with Mrs. Conduitt, or were interrupted in their tête-à-tête by Gay and his Duchess. After Sir Isaac — a long while after — the most notable tenant of the old house was Dr. Charles Burney, author of the "History of Music," and of Fanny Burney. Indeed, it was in this very building — with the unassuming little chapel on its right where "Rainy Day" Smith had often heard Toplady preach — that a mere girl in her teens — no, ungallant Mr. Croker discovered her to have been actually a young woman of five-and-twenty — wrote that "Evelina" which, in 1778, took the Town by storm. There were panelled rooms and a painted ceiling in the Newton-Burney house of yore, but it could scarcely be here that the little person whom in her graver moments Mrs. Piozzi nicknamed the "Lady Louisa of Leicester Square" danced round an unmetaphoric mulberry tree with delight at her success in letters, as there are no traces of a garden. At present, in this quiet backwater of street traffic, where Burke and Johnson and Franklin and Reynolds all came formerly to visit their favourite authoress, nothing is discoverable but a dingy tenement with dusty upper windows, with a ground floor that is used as a day school, and a front of stucco'd red brick upon which the blue tablet of the Society of Arts has something of the forlorn effect of an order of merit upon a chimney-sweep.

Turning out of St. Martin's Street on the north another tablet is discernible in the angle of the Fields to the right upon the comparatively modern red brick façade of another school, known as Archbishop Tenison's. Here, at one of the many signs of the "Golden Head," lived William Hogarth.¹ The golden head in his case was rudely carved by himself out of pieces of cork glued together, and represented Van Dyck. To this, says Nichols, succeeded a head in plaster; and this again, when Nichols wrote in 1782, had been replaced by a bust of Newton. About the interior of the house very little seems to be known, but, as it was rated to the poor in 1756 at £60, it must have been fairly roomy. In the later days, when it formed part of the Sablonière ¹ There was even another, in Hogarth's day, in the Fields itself. "At the Golden Head," on the south side (Hogarth's was on the east), lived Edward Fisher, the mezzotint engraver, to whom we owe so many brilliant plates after Reynolds.

Hotel, before the hotel made way for the existing school, there were traditions of a studio, probably far less authentic than those of Sir Isaac's observatory. Not many years after Hogarth first took the house, the square was laid out (it had long been railed in), and he is said to have been often seen walking in the inclosure, wrapped in his red roquelaure, with his hat cocked on one side like Frederick the Great. His stables, when he set up the fine coach which Charles Catton decorated for him with the famous Cyprian crest that figures at the bottom of "The Bathos," were in the Nag's Head Yard,¹ Orange Street. He had—as we know—a country box at Chiswick; but he was at home in Leicester Fields. His friends were about him. Kind old Captain Coram had lodgings somewhere in the neighbourhood; Pine, the "Friar Pine" of "Calais Gate," lived in St. Martin's Lane; beyond that, in Covent Garden and its vicinity, were George Lambert the scene painter, Saunders Welch the magistrate, Richard Wilson, Fielding, and a host of intimates. It was in Leicester Fields that Hogarth died. He had been driven there from Chiswick on the 25th of October, 1764, cheerful, but very weak. "Receiving an agreeable letter from the American Dr. Franklin," says Nichols, [he] "drew up a rough draught of an answer to it; but going to bed, he was seized with a vomiting, upon which he rung his bell with such violence that he broke it, and expired about two hours afterwards in the arms of Mrs. Mary Lewis, who was called up on his being taken suddenly ill." He is buried in Chiswick churchyard, where some years subsequently a monument was erected to his memory, with a well-known epitaph by Garrick. After Hogarth's death his widow continued to keep up the "Golden Head," and Mary Lewis sold his prints there. Richard Livesay, the engraver, was one of Widow Hogarth's lodgers, and the Scotch painter, Alexander Runciman, was another. If the house had any further notable occupants, they may be forgotten.

¹ The site of the Nag's Head — an ancient and wooden-galleried inn — is now [1898] occupied by the new premises of Messrs. Macmillan and Co.

Mrs. Hogarth herself died in 1789. Six years before her death she had a next-door neighbour in the Fields, who, in his way, was as illustrious as Hogarth or Reynolds. This was John Hunter, who, in 1783, became the tenant of No. 28,¹ and at once began extending it backward towards Castle Street (now the Charing Cross Road) to receive his famous museum of Comparative and Pathological Anatomy. Hogarth had then been dead for nearly twenty years ; and it is unlikely that the painter knew much of the young surgeon who was subsequently to become so celebrated ; but he was probably acquainted with his brother, William Hunter of Covent Garden, who attended Fielding in 1754. William Hunter had just died when John Hunter came to Leicester Fields. John lived there ten years in the height of his activity and fame, and it was during this period that Reynolds painted that portrait of him in a reverie (now in the Council Room of the College of Surgeons), which was engraved by William Sharp. He survived Sir Joshua but one year.

¹ Now rebuilt by the Alhambra Company as part of their premises.

The house of Reynolds was at the opposite side of the Square, at No. 47, now Puttick and Simpson's auction rooms. He occupied it from 1760 to 1792. We are accustomed to think of Hogarth and Reynolds as contemporaries. But Reynolds was in the pride of his prime when he came to Leicester Fields, while Hogarth was an old and broken man, whose greatest work was done. Apart from this, there could never have been much real sympathy between them.

Hogarth, whose own efforts as a portrait-painter were little appreciated in his lifetime, must have chafed at the carriages which blocked up the doorway of his more fortunate brother; while Reynolds, courtly and amiable as he was, capable of indulgence even to such a caricaturist as Bunbury, could find for his illustrious neighbour, when he came to deliver his famous Fourteenth Discourse, no warmer praise than that of "successful attention to the ridicule of life." These things, alas! are scarcely novelties in literature and art. It is pleasanter to think of No. 47 filled with those well-known figures of whom we read in Boswell and Madame D'Arblay; — with Burke and Johnson and Goldsmith and Gibbon and Garrick; — with graceful Angelica, and majestic Siddons, and azure-stockinged Montagu; — with pretty Nelly O'Brien and charming Fanny Abington; — with all the crowd of distinguished soldiers, sailors, lawyers, and literati who by turns filled the sitters' chair¹ in the octagonal painting-room, or were ushered out and in by the silver-laced footmen. Then there were those wonderful disorderly dinners, where the guests were so good and the feast so indifferent ; where there were always wit and learning, and seldom enough of knives and forks ; where it was an honour to have talked and listened, and no one remembered to have dined. Last comes that pathetic picture of Sir Joshua, when his sight had failed him, wandering sadly in the inclosure with his green shade over his eyes, and peering wistfully and vainly for the lost canary which had been wont to perch upon his finger.

¹ This, with the carved easel given to him by Gray's friend Mason, is preserved at the Royal Academy. His palette is said to be in the possession of Messrs. Roberson and Co., of 99, Long Acre.

When Reynolds died, Burke wrote his eulogy in the very house where his body lay. The manuscript (which still exists) was blotted with its writer's tears. Those royal periods in which the great orator spoke of his lost friend are too familiar to quote. But after Sir Joshua, the interest seems to fade out of the Fields, and one willingly draws one's pen through the few remaining names that are written in its chronicles.

MARTEILHE'S "MEMOIRS."

THE ADVENTURES OF A BOOK.

THE threadbare dictum of Terentianus Maurus touching books and their destinies, was never more exactly verified than by the story of the record which gives its title to the present paper. In the year 1757 was issued at Rotterdam, by J. and D. Beman and Son of that Batavian city, a little thick octavo of 552 pages, on poor paper with worse type, of which the following is the textual title: — "Mémoires d'un Protestant, Condamné aux Galères de France pour Cause de Religion; écrits par lui même: Ouvrage, dans lequel, outre le récit, des souffrances de l'Auteur depuis 1700 jusqu'en 1713; on trouvera diverses Particularités curieuses, relatives à l'Histoire de ce Temps-là, & une Description exacte des Galères & de leur Service." In 1774 a second edition of the book was published at the Hague, to be followed four years later by a third. In the Rotterdam impression the names of some of the personages and localities had been simply indicated by initials; in the third issue of 1778 — the author having died not many months before — these particulars were inserted at full. It then appeared that the "Memoirs" — concerning the authenticity of which, from internal evidence, there could never have been any reasonable doubt — were those of a certain Jean Marteilhe of Bergerac on the Dordogne, in the Province of Périgord in France, and that they had been edited and prepared for the press from Marteilhe's own manuscripts by M. Daniel de Superville — probably the second of that name, since Daniel de Superville, the elder, a notable personage among the leaders of the Reformed Church, had long been dead when the work appeared in its first form.

Circulating chiefly among the members of a proscribed community, and published in a foreign country, these remarkable autobiographical experiences, notwithstanding their three editions, had been practically lost sight of in France until some thirty years ago; and the account of their revival — as partly recorded in a lengthy note to the excellent "Forçats pour la Foi" of M. A. Coquerel Fils — is sufficiently curious. About 1865, according to M. Coquerel, copies of the volume were so rare as to be practically unobtainable. There was none in the Bibliothèque Nationale of France; and the only example known in Paris belonged to a Protestant banker, M. Félix Vernes, by whom it had been lent occasionally to historical students and connoisseurs. At Amsterdam there was a second copy in the library of M. Van Woortz, and it was believed that other copies existed in Holland. There was also, or at all events there is now, a copy at the British Museum. Meanwhile, the book had greatly impressed the fortunate few into whose hands it had come. Michelet, who makes mention of it both in his "Louis XIV. et le Duc de Bourgogne," and his "Louis XIV. et la Révocation," spoke of it in terms of the highest enthusiasm. It was written, he said, "comme entre terre et ciel." Why was it not reprinted? he asked. The reply lay no doubt in the difficulty of procuring a copy to print from; and its eventual reproduction was the result of an accident. In a catalogue of German books, M. François Vidal, pastor of the Reformed Church at Bergerac, came upon the title of a work purporting to relate the history of a fugitive Camisard. Himself a native of the Cevennes, and therefore specially interested in the subject, he sent for the volume, only to discover that, instead of relating to the "fanatics of Languedoc" (as Gibbon calls them), it was really an account of a Perigourdin Protestant who, after the Revocation, more than a century and a half earlier, of the Edict of Nantes, had fled from that very Bergerac in which he (M. Vidal) was then exercising his calling. He had seen some extracts from M. Vernes' copy of Marteilhe's "Memoirs," as those extracts had been made public in the Journal of an Historical Society (the Bulletin de la Société de l'Histoire du Protestantisme français), and he felt convinced that, notwithstanding certain (to him) transparent disguises of personages and localities, he was reading, in German, the story of Jean Marteilhe. He accordingly wrote, through the publisher of the German book, to its author, who proved to be the copious Dr. Christian Gottlob Barth, the founder of the Calwer Verlags-Verein in Wurtemberg, and a well-known writer on theological subjects. Dr. Barth informed M. Vidal that the material for the adventures of his supposititious Camisard, whom he had christened Mantel, had been derived from F. E. Rambach's "Schicksal der Protestanten in Frankreich," a work published at Halle in 1760, and alleged to be no longer procurable. Thereupon M. Vidal set about reconstructing the history in the light of this discovery. He translated Barth's summary into French, restored to Marteilhe the name of which Barth, with nothing but initials in his source of information, had been ignorant, and then (having by good luck chanced upon a copy of the Rotterdam edition at Le Fleix, not many miles from Bergerac), incorporated with his version some of the more striking passages of the original record. Why he did not at once substitute that original for the summary, is, in all probability, to be explained by difficulties in the way of obtaining prolonged access to the Le Fleix copy. But the revelation of Marteilhe to France, even in mangled form, was still to be deferred. A portion of M. Vidal's book had no sooner made its appearance in L'Église Réformée, a journal issued at Nîmes, than that journal was suddenly suppressed. In 1863 he therefore printed on his own account what he had written, in the form of a small 12mo pamphlet. One result of this publication—to which he still somewhat unaccountably gave the title of "La Fuite du Camisard"—was to stimulate search for further copies of the original "Memoirs," another of which was found soon after in La Vendée, and was acquired by the Bibliothèque Nationale. Finally, in 1865, the Société des Écoles du Dimanche printed the complete text from the copy of M. Vernes with four fancy illustrations by the marine artist, Morel-Fatio,¹ and a Preface and Appendices by M. Henri Paumier. Of this, four thousand copies were sold between 1865 and 1881, in which latter year a new and revised edition, with a second Preface by M. Paumier, was put forth. In the interim, an English version was published under the auspices of the Religious Tract Society, which, in addition to a translator's Preface, gave some further particulars respecting Marteilhe himself, said to be derived from an article in the Quarterly Review for July, 1866, though they are there admittedly taken from M. Coquerel. To these again, some slight supplementary contributions were made by the French editor in his new and revised edition of 1881. The translation of the Religious Tract Society was also issued in New York in 1867 by Messrs. Leypoldt and Holt under the title of "The Huguenot Galley-Slave."

¹ M. Antoine Léon Morel-Fatio, whose illustrations are not reproduced in the English and American edi-

From what has been stated, it will be seen that, previously to the issue by the Société des Écoles du Dimanche, no edition of the original "Memoirs" had been published in France.

tions, should have been well qualified for his task. He is described as the "Horace Vernet of the sea-piece," and was a worthy rival of Isabey and Gudin. He died of grief at the Louvre in 1871, when the Prussians entered Paris.

But it will also be observed that, as early as 1760, or only three years after their first appearance in the United Provinces of the Netherlands, those "Memoirs" had been incorporated in abridged form with Rambach's "Schicksal der Protestanten in Frankreich." What is perhaps even more remarkable is that—as M. Coquerel and the English translator of 1866 did not fail to point out—they had been translated earlier still in England, where, indeed, they appear to have attracted immediate attention in their first form, since the Monthly Review for May, 1757, includes them in its "Catalogue of Foreign Publications." They must have been "Englished" shortly afterwards, for, in February, 1758, Ralph Griffiths of the "Dunciad" in Paternoster Row, the proprietor of the Monthly Review, and Edward Dilly of the "Rose and Crown" in the Poultry, issued conjointly, in two volumes 12mo, a version entitled "The Memoirs of a Protestant, Condemned to the Gallies of France, for His Religion. Written by Himself." To this followed upon the title-page a lengthy description of the contents, differing from that of the French original, in so far as it laid stress upon the fact that the "Protestant" was "at last set free, at the Intercession of the Court of Great Britain";—and the work was further stated to be "Translated from the Original, just published at the Hague [Rotterdam?], by James Willington." For this enigmatical "James Willington," whose name as an author is otherwise entirely unknown to fame, it has long been the custom to read "Oliver Goldsmith." Goldsmith, in fact, was actually engaged as a writer of all work upon the Monthly Review when the Rotterdam edition was announced among its foreign books. To the same May number in which that announcement appeared, he supplied notices of Home's "Douglas," of Burke "On the Sublime and Beautiful," and of the new four-volume issue of Colman and Thornton's Connoisseur. He continued to work for Griffiths' magazine until the September following, when, for reasons not now discoverable with certainty, he ceased his contributions to its pages.

What appears to be the earliest ascription to his pen of the English version of the "Memoirs" of Marteilhe is to be found in the life prefixed by Isaac Reed to the "Poems of Goldsmith and Parnell," 1795. Here he is stated to have received twenty guineas for the work from Mr. Edward Dilly. The next mention of it occurs in the biographical sketch by Dr. John Aikin in the "Goldsmith's Poetical Works" of 1805.

Dr. Aikin says (p. xvi.) that Goldsmith sold the book to Dilly for twenty guineas. Prior ("Life of Goldsmith," 1837, i. 252) confirms this, upon the authority of Reed; and he further alleges, though without giving his authority, that Griffiths "acknowledged it [the translation] to be by Goldsmith." Forster follows suit (1848, p. 107; and 1877, i. 129) by stating that "the property of the book belonged to Griffiths," and that "the position of the translator appears in the subsequent assignment of the manuscript by the Paternoster Row bookseller to bookseller Dilly of the Poultry, at no small profit to Griffiths, for the sum of twenty guineas." Reed, it will be observed, says that Goldsmith received the twenty guineas; Aikin, that Goldsmith sold the book; Prior, as usual, writes so loosely as to be ambiguous, and Forster, although, in his last edition, he cites Reed and Aikin as his authorities, affirms that Griffiths sold it to Dilly. None of these statements would seem to be exactly accurate. The translation of the "Memoirs of a Protestant" was in reality sold by the author — much as, some years since, it was ascertained that the "Vicar of Wakefield" was sold¹ — in three separate shares. By the kindness of the late Mr. Edward Ford of Enfield, a devoted student of Goldsmith, the present writer was favoured with a transcript of Goldsmith's receipt for one of these shares from the hitherto unpublished original in Mr. Ford's possession.¹ It runs as follows :—

¹ See the Preface to the facsimile Reproduction of the First Edition, Elliot Stock, 1885.

LONDON, Jan^y 11th, 1758

Rec'd of Mr Edward Dilly six pounds thirteen shillings and four pence, in full for his third share of my translation of a Book entitled Memoirs of a Protestant condemned to the Gallies for Religion, &c.

OLIVER GOLDSMITH.

£ 6 13s. 4d.

From this document—the signature only of which is in the handwriting of the poet—two things are clear,—first, that Goldsmith himself sold the book to Dilly and two others, one being Griffiths, whose name is on the title-page; and, secondly, that the translation was by Goldsmith and not by James Willington.

But why, it may be asked, was the name of Willington (an old Trinity College acquaintance of Goldsmith) put forward in this connection? The question is one to which it is not easy to give an entirely satisfactory answer. Mr. Forster, it is true, does not feel any difficulty in replying. "At this point," he says, "there is very manifest evidence of despair." But it is a characteristic of Mr. Forster's sympathetic and admirable biography that it occasionally appears to be written under the influence of preconceptions, and the evidence he mentions, however manifest, is certainly not produced. Mr. Forster fills the gap with eloquent disquisition on the obstacles in the path of genius, and so conducts his hero back to Dr. Milner's door at Peckham.¹ How Goldsmith subsisted in the interval between his ceasing to write regularly for the Monthly Review and his return to his old work as an usher, is no doubt obscure. But it is probable that there was little variation in his manner of living, although his labours were not performed under surveillance in the Back Parlour of the "Dunciad." It has been discovered that about this time he was contributing portions of a "History of Our Own Times" to the Literary Magazine; and it is also conjectured that these were not his sole contributions to that and other periodicals. Moreover, the version of Marteilhe's "Memoirs" must have been made in the last months of 1757, since the above receipt is dated January 11, 1758, and the book was published in the following February. In addition to this, he was again, by his own account, attending patients as a doctor. "By a very little practice as a physician, and a very little reputation as a poet" — he tells his brother-in-law, Hodson, in December, 1757, "I make a shift to live." He was in debt, no doubt; but he had already, says the same communication, "discharged his most threatening and pressing demands." Upon the whole, — Mr. Forster's "very manifest evidence" not being forthcoming, — it must be concluded that Goldsmith's position after ceasing to write for the Monthly Review (though not for Griffiths) was much what it had been before that event, perhaps even better, because he was more free; and this being so, we are driven to the commonplace solution that, even in his Salisbury Square garret, he was too conscious of those higher things within him to care to identify himself with a mere imitation "out of the French," executed for bread, and not for reputation ; and that he put Willington's name to the book in default of a better. He gave evidence of his genius in his most careless private letter ; he could not help it ; but the man who subsequently refrained from signing the " Citizen of the World," may be excused from signing the translated " Memoirs of a Protestant."

¹ This interesting relic now [1898] belongs to his son and successor, Mr. J. W. Ford, of Enfield Old Park.

¹ "Time's devouring hand," it may be noted here (for the Chronicler of the fugitive must make his record where he can), has now removed all trace of Dr. John Milner's Peckham Academy, which stood in Goldsmith Road (formerly Park Lane), opposite the southern end of Lower Park Road. "Goldsmith House," as it was called latterly, was pulled down in 1891. A sketch of it appeared in the Daily Graphic for 24th February in that year.

That the translation produced under these conditions might have been better if the translator had taken more pains, is but to turn Goldsmith's bon mot against himself. "Verbum verbo reddere" was scarcely his ambition, and those who wish for plain-sailing fidelity will do well, if they cannot compass the French original, to consult the rendering prepared for the Religious Tract Society.¹ The chief merits of the version of 1758 are first, that it is a contemporary version, demonstrably from Goldsmith's pen ; and secondly, that it is Goldsmith's earliest appearance in book-form. It is not only characterised by its writer's unique and peculiar charm, but it is as delightful to read as any of his acknowledged journey-work. Even Griffiths of the " Dunciad," who reviewed it himself in the Monthly Review for May, 1758, cannot deny its merits in this respect. Speaking of the "ingenious Translator," he remarks that he "really deserves this epithet, on account of the spirit of the performance, tho'," he adds, grudgingly, "we have little to say in commendation of his accuracy. Upon this latter count, it may be observed that in one instance, at least, inaccuracy is excusable. In telling, early in the book, the story of the abjuration by Marteilhe's mother of her Huguenot faith, Goldsmith makes her add to her declaration that she was "compelled by Fear." This is manifestly inexact, seeing that the French original runs: "Elle ajouta ces mots: la Force me le fait faire, faisant sans doute allusion au nom du Duc" (i. e. the Duke de la Force). All this, as we know, must have been Greek to Goldsmith, because the names in the editio princeps of 1757, from which he was working, were not given at full. But it must certainly be admitted that he deals freely with his text, occasionally suppressing altogether what he regards as redundant, and now and then inserting supplementary touches of his own. Speaking of the soup prepared in the gaol at Lille he says: "Even Lacedæmonian black Broth could not be more nauseous." There is nothing in the text of this classic dietary, and what is more, Marteilhe would scarcely have used the simile. Elsewhere the decoration is in what Matthew Arnold used to call the "Rule Britannia" vein. Of the valiant captain of the Nightingale who held his own so long against the galleys in that memorable engagement which plays such a moving part in Marteilhe's record, the writer says: "Ce capitaine, qui n'avait plus rien à faire pour mettre sa flotte en sûreté, rendit son épée." This Goldsmith translates: "At last the captain gave up his Sword without further Parley, like a true Englishman, despising Ceremony, when Ceremony could be no longer useful."

¹ This rendering, however, is incomplete, inasmuch as it omits the " Description of the Galleys," etc., about ninety of the final pages of the original.

Dealing in this place rather with the story of the book than its contents, it would be beyond the purpose of our paper to linger longer upon the extraordinary interest and simple candour of Marteilhe's narrative. But the mention just made of the captain of the Nightingale reminds us that some further particulars respecting this obscure naval hero were not long since brought to light by Professor J. K. Laughton.¹ His name (which Marteilhe had forgotten) was Seth Jermy, and he had served as a lieutenant at the battle of Barfleur. He became captain of the Spy brigantine in January, 1697, and five years later was appointed to the command of the

¹ English Historical Review, January, 1889, pp. 65-80.

Nightingale, a small 24-gun frigate, chiefly employed in convoying corn-ships and colliers between the Forth, the Tyne, the Humber, and the Thames. In this duty he was engaged up to the fight with the French galleys, which took place, not, as Marteilhe says, in 1708, but in 1707. In August, 1708, Captain Jermy returned from France on parole and was tried by court-martial for the loss of his ship. The following are the minutes of the trial from documents in the Public Record Office:—

“At a court-martial held on board her Majesty's ship the Royal Anne at Spithead, on Thursday, 23 Sep. 1708; Present: The Hon. Sir George Byng, Knight, Admiral of the Blue Squadron of her Majesty's fleet. . . .

“Enquiry was made by the Court into the occasion of the loss of her Majesty's ship the Nightingale, of which Captain Seth Jermy was late commander, which was taken by six sail of the enemy's galleys off Harwich on 24 Aug. 1707. The court having strictly examined into the matter, it appeared by evidence upon oath that the Nightingale was for a considerable time engaged with a much superior force of the enemy, and did make so good a defence as thereby to give an opportunity to all the ships under his convoy to make their escape; and it is the opinion of the court that he has not been anyway wanting in his duty on that occasion ; and therefore the Court does acquit the said Captain Jermy and the other officers as to the loss of Her Majesty's said ship Nightingale."

Beyond the fact that he was exchanged against a French prisoner a little later, served again, was superannuated, and died in 1724, nothing further seems to be known of Captain Jermy. But of the captain who succeeded him on the Nightingale when that ship passed by capture into French hands — the infamous renegade whom Marteilhe calls "—— Smith,—" Professor Laughton supplies data which, since they are included only in one very limited edition of the "Memoirs," may here be briefly set down. After chequered experiences in the service of her Majesty Queen Anne, including a court-martial for irregularities while commanding the Bonetta sloop, Thomas Smith, being then, according to his own account, a prisoner at Dunkirk, yielded to solicitations made to him, and entered the service of the King of France. In November, 1707, he was made commander of the captured Nightingale. In the December following, being in company with another Dunkirk privateer, the Squirrel, he was chased and taken by the English man-of-war Ludlow Castle,

Captain Haddock. Smith was brought to London, tried for high treason at the Old Bailey (2nd June, 1708), and found guilty. "On 18th June he was put on a hurdle and conveyed to the place of execution. . . . Being dead he was cut down, his body opened and his heart shown to the people, and afterwards burnt with his bowels, and his body quartered." And thus Marteilhe, when he came to London in 1713 to thank Queen Anne for her part in his release, may well, as he avers, have seen Smith's mangled remains "exposed on Gibbets along the Banks of the Thames."

Marteilhe's story, it may be gathered, differs in some respects from the official account disinterred from the Public Records. But the discrepancies are readily explained by the fact that much which he related must have been acquired at second hand. Speaking from his personal experience, he is accurate enough. What is known of him and his book, beyond the date at which it closes, needs but few words. "The author [of the 'Memoirs']," says Goldsmith in his Preface of 1757, "is still alive, and known to numbers, not only in Holland but London;" and it is quite possible that in one or other of these places, Goldsmith himself may have seen and conversed with him. An Aver- tissement des Libraires prefixed to the Rotterdam edition, but not reproduced by Goldsmith or M. Paumier, is equally confirmatory of the authenticity of the book: “Des Personnes de caractère, & dignes de toute créance, nous ont assurés, que cet Ouvrage à été véritablement composé par un de ces Protestans, condamnés aux Galères de France pour cause de Religion, & qui en furent délivrés par l’intercession de la Reine ANNE d’Angleterre peu après la paix d’Utrecht. Les mêmes Personnes nous ont dit, qu’elles ont eu des liaisons personnelles avec l’Auteur; qu’elles ne doutent pas de sa bonne foi & de sa probité; & qu’elles sont persuadées, qu’autant que sa mémoire a pu lui rappeler les faits, cette Relation est exacte.” Opposite the word “créance,” in the British Museum copy, is written in an old hand, “Mrs. Dumont & De Superville.” As Daniel de Superville Senior was dead in 1757, the De Superville here mentioned was no doubt his son of the same Christian name, — a doctor, who, as above suggested, was probably the editor of Marteilhe’s manuscripts. After this come naturally the details given, from Coquerel and elsewhere, in M. Paumier’s second Preface, and already referred to. Marteilhe, we learn, did not reside permanently in the Netherlands — “that Land of Liberty and Happiness,” as Goldsmith renders "Ces heureuses Provinces" — but for some time was in business in London. He died at Cuylenberg, in Guelderland, on the 4th November, 1777, at the age of ninety-three. Little is known about his family; but it is believed that he had a daughter who was married at Amsterdam to an English naval officer of distinction, Vice-Admiral Douglas.

GENERAL INDEX.

GENERAL INDEX.

A.

- ABBAYE, the Prison of the, 40.
Abbey, Edwin A., 166.
Abel, 41, 42.
Abington, Mrs. Fanny, 104, 304.
Absolon, 177.
Achilles, Gay's, 270.
Ackermann, 174.
Adam and Eve Gallery, the, 192.
Adams, Parson, 79.
Addington ministry, the, 149.
Addison, Joseph, Goldsmith's admiration for and imitation of, 12, 15; Letter from Italy to Lord Halifax, 15; 57, 58, 60, 61, 76, 77, 81, 82, 84, 158, 245; Cato, 256; 286.
Addison, Life of, Miss Aiken's, 57.
Admiralty buildings, the new, 234.
Agas, Ralph, 221, 222, 231, 277.
Aguecheek, Sir Andrew, Dodd as, 105.
Aiken, Miss, Life of Addison, 57.
Aikin, Dr. John, 313, 314.
Aitken, George A., Life of Richard Steele, 57-86; 239.
Aix, 259, 260.
Albano, 154.
Albany, the, 53.
Albemarle, Duke of, 186, 187.
Albemarle Street, 54.
Albinus, 91.
Alembert, D', 55.
Alexander Le Imaginator, 223.
Alhambra, the, 275, 276.
Alhambra Company, the, 302.
Alkrington, 293.
Allen's, of Prior Park, 102, 105.
Allworthy, Fielding's, 102.
"Almack's," 205, 210, 212.
Almanac Généalogique, the, 179.
Alvanley, Lord, 204.
Amelia, Fielding's, 115.
America, 7.
Amesbury, 37, 38, 268, 269.
Amiens, the Peace of, 149.
Amorevoli, 289.
Amsterdam, 308, 325.
Anacréon, 157.
Analysis of the Gaelic Language, an, 114.
Anatomy of the Horse, Stubbs', 42.
Anderson, Alexander, 173.

- Anderson, Mr. John P., 138.
Andromaque, Duchesnois in, 157.
Anecdotes of the late Samuel Johnson, LL. D., 115.
 Anelay, 177.
 Angelica, 304.
Angélique, Mlle. Mars as, 159.
 Angelo, Dominico, episode with Mrs. Woffington, 33, 34; a "master of equitation," 34; his school in Soho, 35; his marriage, 35, 36; his son, 36; visits to Eton, 37; 41, 42; his visitors, 41-43; 45; death of, 46; his École des Armes, 55.
 Angelo, Henry, Reminiscences of, 33-56; his birth, 36; in the Navy, 36; at Eton, 36; a visit to Amesbury, 37; in Paris, 38, 39; an expert swordsman, 39, 46; returns to London, 40; his visitors, 41-43; early experiences of, 44-46; intimacy with Rowlandson, 47-48; other associates, 49; an excellent amateur actor, 49; his dramatic essays, 50; the "Pic-Nic Society," 51; anecdotes, 52; Byron his pupil, 53; his "graceful ease" in eluding dates, 54; My Own Boastings, 54; Angelo's Pic-Nic, 55.
 Angelo's, 107.
Angelo's Pic-Nic, 55.
Animated Nature, 249.
 Anne, Queen, 70, 79, 186, 237; History of the Reign of, 241; 254, 281, 286, 322, 323, 324.
 Anspach, the Margravine of, 51.
 Anstey, Christopher, 19.
Appius and Virginia, 248.
 Apollo Belvedere, the, 153.
Apology for Himself and his Writings, Steele's, 79.
Arabian Nights, Forster's, 148.
Arachne, the Story of, 247.
Araminta, Gay's, 250.
 Arber, Mr., 245.
 Arblay, Madame D', 134, 148, 296, 304.
 Arbuthnot, 252, 254, 255, 259, 262, 267, 268, 270.
 Archer, Lady, 51.
Argus, the, 160.
 Argyll tomb, the, 38.
 Aristotle, 254.
 Arlington, Lord, 196.
 Arnold, Matthew, 320.
 Assassination Plot, the, 63.
 Astley, 35.
As to my Hermit, Goldsmith's, 17, 26, 37.
Athenæum, the, 256.
 Athenæum Club, the, 110.
 Augusta, Anna, 249.
 Augusta, Princess, 290.
 Austen, Jane, 56, 108.
 Australia, 134.
 Axminster, 256.
 Aylesbury family, the, 291.
- B.
- BACH, John Christian, 41.
 Bach, John Sebastian, 41.

- "Bach Mews," 231.
 Bagshot Heath, 256.
Bajazet, 157.
 Baker, George, the print-collector, 147.
 Baldwin, 119.
Ballad on a Wedding, Suckling's, 229.
 Baller, Rev. Joseph, 241, 242.
 Baller, Mrs., 270.
 Balliol, the Master of, 87.
 Bank of England, the, 268.
 Bannister, John, 49.
Bannister's Budget, 49.
 Banqueting-House, the old, 183, 184, 185, 186, 188, 189, 193, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202.
 Barbados, 69, 70, 74, 75.
Barbier, the, 158.
 Baretti, 135.
 Barillon, 156.
Barnaby Rudge, Dickens's, 291.
 Barnard, Frederick, 166.
 Barnes, Joshua, 286.
 Barnes Terrace, 157.
 Barnstaple, 239, 240, 249.
 Barons, 158.
 Barrington, George, the pick-pocket, 95.
 Barry, 296.
 Barrymore, the Earl of, 50.
 Barth, Dr. Christian Gottlob, 309.
Bartholo, Desessarts as, 158.
 Bartolozzi, the engraver, 42, 46.
 Barton, Catherine, 297, 298.
 Basire, 169.
 Bastille, the, 151.
 Bate, Parson, The Blackamoor wash'd white, 44.
 Batelier, 279.
 Bath, 55, 72, 90, 204, 268.
Bathos, the, 301.
Battle of La Hague, 296.
Battle of the Boyne, West's, 42.
Baxter, Mr. Timothy, 168.
 Bear Street, 294.
 Beaufort Buildings, 47.
 Beaumarchais, 109.
 Beaupré, 158.
Beau-Tibbs-above-Stairs, 25.
Beauties of English Poesy, Goldsmith's, 15, 20.
Beaux' Stratagem, the, 22, 104.
Becky Sharp, 44.
 Bedford, the Duke of, 92.
Bee, The, periodical started by Goldsmith (1759), 22, 26.
 Beer Buttery, the, 195.
Beggar's Opera, Gay's, 264-268, 272.
 Bell, Messrs. George, and Sons, 132.
 Bellenden, Mary, 287, 288.
 Beman and Son, Messrs., 306.
 Béranger, 150.
 Bergerac, 307, 308, 309, 310.
 Berkeley, Lord, 51, 82, 83, 236, 286.
 Berkeley letters, the, 77.
 Berkely, Lady, 285.
 Berlin, 178.
 "Bermudas," the, 232, 233.
 Betterton, 54.
 Bewick, Thomas, the engraver, 105, 172, 173.
 Bibliothèque Nationale of France, the, 307, 310.

- Bickers, the Messrs., 129.
Bickerstaff, Mr. Isaac, 246.
Bickerstaff's Lucubrations, 245.
 Billingsgate, 133.
Billy the Butcher, 43.
 Binns, Mrs., 75.
Biography of Charles I., Lilly's, 224.
Birth of the Squire, Gay's, 273.
Blackamoor wash'd White, the, 44.
Blackberry, 173.
Black-ey'd Susan, Gay's, 260, 273.
 Blackfriars Bridge, 294.
 Blackmore, 64.
 Black Spread-Eagle, the, 243.
 Blake, 91.
 Blake, William, the engraver, 169, 265.
 Blenheim, 285.
 Blenheim MSS., the, 62, 76.
 Blessington, Lady, 206.
Blind Man's Buff, Raimbach's, 144.
 Bloomsbury, 83, 231.
 Blount, Mountjoy, Earl of Newport, 278.
 "Blue-skin," see Blake, 91.
 Boarded Gallery, the, 192.
 Board of Trade, the, 195.
 Boerhaave, 91.
 Boileau, M., description of, 38.
 Boileau, Nicholas, 17, 65.
 Bolingbroke, Lord, 141, 252, 254.
 Bolton, Duchess of, 285.
 Bonaparte, 151, 152, 155, 160.
 Bond Street, 54.
Bonetta, the, sloop, 322.
 Boothby, Miss Hill, 133.
 Boswell, James, 44, 110, 112, 114; Journal of a Tour to the Hebrides, 114, 118; 115, 116, 117, 118, 119; Life of Johnson, 120-134; death of, 123; 135, 136, 137; Journal of a Tour to Corsica, 139; 304.
Boswelliana, 131, 137.
 Boswells, the, 95.
Boswell's Predecessors and Editors, 96, 109-143.
 Boucher, 154.
 Boulogne, 204.
 Bourgueleret, 180.
 Bourne, Vincent, 135.
 Bowling Green, the, 190, 197, 201.
 Boyle, 229.
 Bradshaw, Mrs., 108, 262.
 Brandenburgh House, 51.
 Brasenose College, 123.
Brass, 50.
 Brick Court, No. 2, 31.
 Brighton, 50, 149, 210.
 British Museum, the, 70, 76, 231, 281, 308.
 British Museum Library, the, 203.
 Brooks's, 204.
 Broome, 247.
 Broughton, 54.
 Brown, "Capability," 100.
 Brummell, 210.
Brunswick, the, 48.
 Brunswick, Prince of, 290.
 Buchard, 295.
 Buckhorse, the boxer, 107.

- Buckingham Court, 237.
 Buckingham, Duke of, 235,
 255, 285.
 Buckingham, Duchess of, 287.
 Buckinghamshire, Lady, 51.
 Buckley, 76.
 Bull, Mr. Edward, 93.
 Bull Head Tavern, the, 237.
 Bunbury, 304.
 Burbagé, Richard, the actor, 145.
Burchell, Mr., Goldsmith's,
 168, 170, 173, 176, 179, 291.
 Burford's Panorama, 276.
 Buridan, 272.
 Burke, Edmund, 18, 19, 94, 95,
 100, 292, 299, 304, 305, 313.
 Burlington Gardens, 268.
 Burlington, Lord, 256, 259, 260, 262, 295.
 Burnet, 144, 192; History of the Reformation, 193; 284.
 Burney, Dr. Charles, 296, 299.
 Burney, Edward, 148.
 Burney, Fanny, 299.
Burnham Beeches, 217.
 Burton, Dr. Hill, 241; History of the Reign of Queen Anne, 241.
 Bury Street, 73, 75.
 Butler, 108.
 Butler, James, 62.
 Byng, Sir George, 321.
 Byron, 53, 54, 98, 206, 215, 273.
 Byron, Lady, 98.
- C.
- CAEN, in Normandy, 222.
 Caermarthen, Marquis of, 291.
- Cæsar's Commentaries*, Clarke's, 286.
 Café Jacob, the, 161.
 Calais, 163.
Calais Gate, 301.
 Caldecott, Randolph, 182.
 Calwer, Verlags-Verein, the, 309.
 Cambridge, 53.
 Cambridge, Richard Owen, 96;
 the Scribleriad, 97; 293.
Cambridge the Everything, 293.
 Camisard, 308, 309, 310.
 Campbell, Vitruvius Britanni- cus, 183.
 Campbell, Colonel John, 288.
 Campbell, Dr. Thomas, 134, 135, 136.
 Canaletto, 42, 230.
 Cannon Row, 237.
 Canons, 276, 295.
 Canterbury, the Archbishop of, 36.
Captives, the, Gay's, 263.
Captivity, Goldsmith's, 18.
 Carew, 224.
 Carhampton, the Earl of, 219.
 Carleton House, 234.
Carleton's Memoirs, 63, 133.
 Carlisle House, 40, 43.
 Carlisle House Riding School,
 the, 42.
 Carlisle Street, 54, 107.
 Carlyle, Thomas, 124, 127, 129, 139.
 Carmarthen, 79.
 Caroline, Princess, 296.
 Carracci, the, 154.
 Carrickfergus, 81.

- Carrington, Lord, 195.
 Carruthers, Dr. Robert, 128, 129.
 Carter, Mrs., 163.
Case of Authors by Profession, Ralph's, 22.
 Castle, Mr. Egerton, 54.
 Castle Street, 303.
 Castlemaine, Lady, 188, 201.
 Catherine of Braganza, 192, 199.
 Catholic Bill, the, 291.
Cato, Addison's, 256.
 Catton, Charles, 301.
Catullus, 96.
 Cavallini, Pietro, 222.
 Cave, Edward, 240.
 Cecil Court, 145.
Censorium, the, 80.
 Centlivre, Mrs., 67, 237.
 Cevennes, 308.
 Chabannes, Jacques de, Seigneur de la Palice, hero of Pavia, 14.
 Chalmers, Alexander, 76, 123.
 Chaloner, 223.
 Chamfort, 206.
 Champs-Élysées, the, 151.
 Chandos, the Duke of, 260.
Chapeau de Brigand, Uwins's, 172.
 Chapel, 74.
Chapter of Accidents, Miss Lee's, 104.
 Charing Cross, 186, 188, 220, 221, 224, 225, 229, 230, 231, 233, 236, 277, 295.
 Charing Cross, the, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 229, 230, 234.
 Charing Cross Road, 303.
Charles, 209; Smith as, 105.
 Charles I., 184, 186, 196, 220, 224, 225, 226, 227, 234, 235, 287, 295.
 Charles II., 187, 193, 194, 199, 200, 225, 227, 279.
 Charles VI., Emperor, 282.
 Charles X., 229.
 Charles, Earl of Halifax, 297.
 Charles Street, 148, 292.
 Charlotte, Princess of Wales, 171.
 Charlotte, Queen, 99, 293.
 Charmouth, 257.
 Charterhouse, the, 60, 80.
 Chateaubriand, Cymodocée, 216.
 Chatham, Lord, 100, 106.
 Chaucer, Geoffrey, 37, 221.
 Chaumette, 157.
 Cheere, 295.
 Chelsea Hospital, the, 94.
 Cheltenham, 204.
 Cheselden, the anatomist, 89.
 Chesterfield, Lord, 90, 106, 136, 287.
 Chetwood, History of the Stage, 57.
 Chichester, the King of, 193.
 Chiffinch, 192.
 Chiswick, 36, 262, 301.
 Chiswick Press, the, 124.
 Chocolate House, 74.
 Chodowiecki, Daniel, 178, 179.
 Christ Church, Oxford, 61.
Christian Hero, the, 61, 65.
 Christie's, 142.
 Christmas, Gerard, 228.
 Chudleigh, Miss, 288.
 Churchill, Charles, the satire of,

- 12; 91; The Ghost, 91; 99, 106; the Rosciad, 106.
- Cibber, Colley, 237, 265.
- Cibber, Theophilus, 79; Lives of the Poets, 133.
- Cipriani, 42, 46, 199.
- Citizen*, Murphy's, 159.
- Citizen of the World*, The, Goldsmith's, 26, 318.
- City Shower*, Swift's, 213, 242, 257.
- Clairon, Mademoiselle, 22.
- Clandestine Marriage*, Garrick and Colman's, 23.
- Clare, Lord, 18.
- Clarendon, the Earl of, 253.
- Clarendon Press, the, 138.
- Clarissa* series, 169.
- Clarke, Samuel, 286.
- Clennell, Luke, 173.
- Cleveland, the Duchess of, 187, 194.
- Clive, Mrs. Catherine, 101, 103, 104.
- Cliveden, 103, 290.
- "Club, the," 117.
- Coan, the Norfolk dwarf, 106, 107.
- Cock and Fox*, Chaucer's, 37.
- Cock Lane Ghost, 227, 229.
- Cockpit, the old, 74, 186, 197.
- Coffee House, 74.
- Cohen, 180.
- Colbert, Charles, Marquis de Croissy, 200, 276, 279.
- Coldstream Guards, the, 62, 63.
- Cole, Mrs., 49.
- College of Physicians, 233.
- College of Surgeons, the, 303.
- Collier, 65; Short View of the Immorality and Profaneness of the English Stage, 66.
- Collins, B., 167.
- Collins, Mortimer, 51.
- Collins, William, Goldsmith's appreciation of the work of, 12.
- Colman, 23, 28, 87; Iron Chest, 146.
- Colman and Thornton, 313.
- Colnbrook, 50.
- Combe, 174.
- Comédie Lyrique*, Poinciset's, 160.
- Communion of St. Jerome*, Domenichino's, 154.
- Company of Undertakers*, 89.
- Comus*, 50.
- Concannon, Mrs., 51.
- Conduitt, John, 298.
- Conduitt, Mrs., see Barton, Catherine.
- Confectionary, the, 195.
- Confederacy*, Vanbrugh's, 50.
- Congreve, William, 22, 63, 257, 266, 289.
- Connoisseur*, Colman and Thornton's, 313.
- Conscious Lovers*, Steele's, 79.
- Constable, 144.
- Constant Couple*, Farquhar's, 57.
- Consultation of Physicians*, 89.
- Contarine, Jane, Goldsmith's verses for, 10.
- Contemplation upon Death*, Gay's, 250.
- Cook, 293.
- Cook, a criminal, 225.
- Cook, Henry, the painter, 40.
- Cook, William, 111, 112.

- Cooke, Tales of the Genii, 148; 170.
 Cooke, Captain Henry, 187.
 Cooper, 90.
Copperfield, David, 165.
 Coquecigrues, 30.
 Coquerel, M. A., Fils, 307, 311, 312, 324.
 Coram, Captain, 301.
 Corbould, George, 175.
 Corbould, R., 148, 170, 171, 175.
 Corfé, in Dorsetshire, 222.
 Cork, 7.
Cornaro family, Titian's, 229.
 Cornelys, Mrs. Theresa, 40; her concerts, 41; 107.
Cornhill, the, 138.
 Coromandel, 10.
 Correggio, Marriage of St. Catherine, 154.
 Corsica, King of, 91.
Costigans, the, 165.
 Council office, the, 189.
 Cousens, 144.
 Covent Garden, 23, 28, 45, 114, 134, 221, 238, 301, 303.
Coverley, Sir Roger de, 187.
 Cow Lane, 280.
 Cowper, William, 13; pioneer of the new school, 13; 84.
 Cozens, Alexander, 46.
 Crace collection, the, 281.
 Cradock, 17, 20.
 Craggs, 260.
 Craig, William Marshall, 171.
 Creed, Mr., 200.
 Cremona, 283.
 "C'ribbee Islands," 232, 233.
Cries of London, 52.
Crisis, the, Steele's, 78, 79.
- Critic*, the, 97, 106.
Croaker, Shuter as, 24; 25, 26.
Croaker, Ally, 18, 19.
Croaker, Mrs., 25.
Crockford House, Luttrell's, 204, 217.
 Crockford's, 204.
 Croissy, Marquis de, 200, 279.
 Croker, John Wilson, 109, 124, 126, 127, 130, 131, 132, 133, 137, 139, 141, 143, 299.
 Cromwell, Henry, 246, 247, 256.
 Cromwell, Oliver, 199, 224, 236.
 Cross, Mr., 232.
 Crosse, Mrs. Andrew, 219.
Cross Readings, 96.
 Cruikshank, George, 55, 166, 176, 182.
 Cruikshank, Robert, 88.
 Crundale, Richard de, 222.
 Cumberland, Duke of, 135, 197, 289.
 Cumberland, Richard, West Indian, 27; 31, 96, 97, 126, 134.
 Cunningham, Peter, 198, 225, 238, 278, 295.
 Curll, Edmund, 227.
 Cutts, Lord, 62, 63, 64.
 Cuylenberg, 325.
Cymodocée, Chateaubriand's, 216.
 Czar, the, 291.
- D.
- Daily Graphic*, the, 316.
 D'Alembert, see Alembert, D'.
 Dalrymple, Sir David, 137.
 Danckers, 200.
 D'Arblay, Madame, see Arblay, Madame D'.

- Das Kind der Liebe*, Kotzebue, 108.
 David, Jacques Louis, 154; The Sabines, 154; 155.
 David, Madame, 155.
 Davies, Thomas, 114.
 Davy, Lady, 205.
 Dean and Munday, Messrs., 171.
 Dean Street, 41.
Death of General Wolfe, 296.
Death on the Pale Horse, West's, 155.
Debates in Parliaments, Johnson's, 143.
 Delaval, Lord, 40.
 Dennis, the critic, 81, 248, 259.
 D'Entraigues, see Entraigues, d'.
 D'Éon, see Éon, D'.
 Deptford, 291.
 Derby, Lord, 104.
 Desborough, Captain, 282.
Desdemona, 224.
Deserted Village, Goldsmith's, 9, 15, 17, 18, 19, 27, 32.
 Desessarts, 158.
 Desforges, M., Tom Jones à Londres, 159.
 Desnoyers, the dancing master, 288.
 Destouches, Néricault, La Fausse Agnès, 159.
 Devil Tavern, the, 244.
 Devone, Monsieur, 225.
 Devonshire, 142, 256.
 Devonshire, the Duke of, 35.
 Dial, the, 226.
Diary of a Tour in Wales, 129, 132.
- Dibdin, Charles, the song-writer, 147, 295.
Dick, 50.
 Dickens, Charles, 166, 291.
 "Dickey, little," Addison's, 158.
Dicky, 57.
 Diderot, 55.
 Dieppe, 149, 150.
 Dilly, Charles, 120.
 Dilly, Edward, 312, 313, 314, 315.
Dione, 260.
Distressed Mother, the, Kemble's, 159.
 Doble, 286.
Dr. Johnson; His Friends and His Critics, Hill's, 136, 138.
Doctor Syntax, Combe's, 174.
 Dodd, the actor, 105.
 Dodd, Daniel, the miniaturist, 167, 168.
 Dodd, Dr., execution of, 45.
 Dodd's Chapel, Dr., 135.
 Dodington, Bubb, 288.
Dodsley's Freedom and Sympathy, 16.
 Domenichino, Communion of St. Jerome, 153.
 Dominicetti, the Italian quack, 37.
 Donaldson, Mr., 107.
Don Quixote, Smirke's, 165; Tony Johannot's, 165; Gustave Doré's, 165.
 Dorchester, 257.
 Dorchester, Countess of, 287.
 Dordogne, 307.
 Doré, Gustave, 165.
 Dorset, 237.
 Dorset Place, 222, 233.

- Double Dealer*, the, 101.
Double Transformation, The,
 Goldsmith's, 13; Prior the model for, 13.
 Douglas, Charles, 240.
Douglas, Home's, 313.
 Douglas, Vice-Admiral, 325.
 Dover, 163.
 Dover, the Duke of, 240.
Dragon, the, man-of-war, 36.
 Drake, 76.
 Drayton, Michael, 278.
Dress, Gay on, 250.
 Dromore, Bishop of, 229.
Drummer, the, Addison's, 58.
 Drummond's Bank, 237.
 Drury Lane, 23, 28, 42, 44, 67.
 Drury Lane Theatre, 80, 97, 98,
 250, 255, 261.
 Dryden, John, Goldsmith's admiration for the work of, 12;
Quack Maurus, 64; 142, 143.
 Dublin, 7, 9, 60, 270, 282.
 Dublin street-singers, Gold-smith's ballads for, 9.
 Duchesnois, Mlle., 156, 158.
 Dugazon, 158.
 Duill, Mrs., 105.
 Du Maurier, 166.
 Dumont, Mrs., 324.
 Duncannon Street, 231.
Dunciad, Griffith's, 312, 313,
 316, 318.
Dunciad, Pope's, 109.
 Dunkirk, 78, 322.
 Duperrier, François, 194.
 Dupont, Gainsborough, 144.
 Dutch school, the, 153.
 Dyer, 117.
 Dyers, the, 80.
- E.
- EATON SQUARE, 107.
Eclogues, Gay's, 273.
Ecole des Armes, the elder
 Angelo's, 55.
Écoles de Notre Dame de France, 294.
 Edgeware, 295.
 Edgeware, 27.
Edinburgh, the, 57.
 Edward VI., 192.
Edwin and Angelina, Gold-
 smith's, 17.
 Egerton, T., 56.
 Eginton, 172.
 Egleton, Mrs., 265.
Église Réformée, P., 310.
 Egmont's MSS., Lord, 77.
Eighteenth Century Vignettes,
 Dobson's First Series, 269;
 Second Series, 233; Third
 Series, 237, 288, 293.
 Eleanor, Queen, 220, 221, 222.
Election Entertainment, the, 238.
Election of Gotham, the, 67.
Elegy, Gray's, 12; Goldsmith's criticism of, 12.
Elegy on the Death of a Mad
Dog, Goldsmith's, 14, 15, 181, 182.
 Elizabeth of Bohemia, 279.
 Elizabeth, Queen, 150, 185, 221.
 Elliot's Light Horse, 34.
 Ellis, Dr. Welbore, 61.
 Elphinston, Mr., 114.
 Elwin, Mr., 250.
 Embankment, the, 191.
 Empire, the, 276.

- Enfield Old Park, 315.
 England, 22, 178.
English Garner, 245.
English Historical Review, the, 320.
English Humourists, Thackeray's, 239.
English Illustrated Magazine, 182.
Englishman, the, 78.
 Entraigues, Count d', 157.
 Entraigues, Countess d', 157.
Epigrammatical Petition, Gay's, 253.
Epistle to a Lady, Gay's, 255.
Epistle to Bernard Lintott, Gay's, 243, 247.
Epistle to Churchill, Lloyd's, 227.
 Éon, the Chevalier D', 41, 55, 107.
Erse Grammar, Shaw's, 114.
 Erskine, Andrew, 139.
Escrime, 55.
 Escorial, the, 184.
Essay on Criticism, 247.
Essay on the Life, Character, and Writings of Dr. Samuel Johnson, Towers', 118.
 Essex, 198.
 Essex, Countess of, 261.
 Eton, 36, 46, 107.
 Eugene, Prince, 276, 282, 283, 284, 285, 286.
European Magazine, the, 111, 112.
Evelina, 299.
 Evelyn, John, 186, 187, 188, 189; his Diary, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194; 200, 202, 225, 228, 229, 236, 279, 280, 281, 291.
 Exeter, 256, 259, 260.
 Exeter Change, 232, 270.
- F.
- Fables*, Gay's, 263, 273.
 Fagan, Mr. Louis, 295.
Fair Penitent, Rowe's, 102.
 Faithorne's map, 277.
False Delicacy, Hugh Kelly's, 24.
Falstaff, Sir John, Stephen Kemble's, 105; Kenny Meadows', 165; Sir John Gilbert's, 165; Edwin A. Abbey's, 166.
Fan, the, Gay's, 250, 273.
 Farintosh, Lord, 50.
Faro's Daughters, 51.
Farquhar, Constant Couple, 57.
 Farquhars, the, 31.
 Farren, Miss, 104.
 Fauconberg, Lady, 289.
Faulkland, 29.
 Faussans, the, 289.
 Fawcett, 88.
Female Faction, the, 267.
Female Phaeton, Prior's, 240.
 Fenton, 247, 261.
 Fenton, Lavinia, 265.
 Ferdinand, Prince of Brunswick, 290.
 Fielding, Henry, his burlesque of Richardson's Pamela, 20; Joseph Andrews, 20, 168, 169, 251; Pasquin, 23; 30, 58, 71, 80, 82, 89, 102, 115; Journal of a Voyage to Lisbon, 142; 273, 301.

- Fife House, 195.
 Finden, William, the engraver,
 144, 175, 180.
 Fisher, Edward, the mezzotinter, 144, 300.
 Fisher, John, 185.
 Fisher's Plan, 185, 186, 190, 196.
 Fish-Pool, the, 80.
 Fitzgerald, Mr. Percy, 129, 130, 131, 138, 143.
 Fitzherbert, Mrs., 50.
 Five Fields, the, 107.
 Fives Court, the, 210.
 Flanders, 282.
Flattery, Gay on, 250.
 Flaxman, 147, 149, 170.
 Flemish school, the, 153.
 Florence, 290.
Flying-Post, the, 64.
 Fontenoy, the battle of, 289.
 Foote, Samuel, The Handsome
 Housemaid; or, Piety in Pat-tens, 29; 39, 40, 41; Taste,
 40, 50; Minor, 49; The Liar, 49.
 Foppington, Lord, 162, 237.
Forçats pour la Foi, Coquerel's, 307.
 Ford, Mr. Edward, 315.
 Ford, Mr. J. W., 315.
 Ford, Major, 69.
 Ford, Parson, 135.
 Ford, Sir Richard, 201.
 Foreign Offices, the, 183.
 Fores, of Piccadilly, 48.
 Forster, Biography of Gold- smith, 8; Arabian Nights, 148; 314, 315, 316, 317.
 "Forster Library," the, 241.
- Fortescue, 242.
 Fortescue, Mrs., 270.
 Forth, the, 321.
 Forton, 48.
 Foster, Sermons, 136.
 Foundling, the, 135.
Four Stages of Cruelty, the,
 Hogarth's, 46.
 Fox, Charles, 95, 156; History of the Revolution of 1688, 156.
 Fragonard, 154.
 France, 180, 229.
 Franklin, Benjamin, 299, 302.
 Frederick, Prince of Wales, 276, 288, 290.
 Frederick the Great, 301.
Frederika, 179.
Freedom, Dodsley's, 16.
 Freemasons' Tavern, the, 88.
 French Revolution, the, 147,
 149, 151.
 Frere, 273.
Friar Pine, the, 301.
 "Fubs," the Royal yacht, 282.
Fuite du Camisard, la, Vidal's, 310.
Funeral, the, Steele's, 57, 65.
 Fuseli, 99.
- G.
- GAINSBOROUGH, 42, 144.
 Gallas, Count, 286.
Gamps, the, 165.
 Gardel, Mme., 158.
 Garrick, Carrington, 36.
 Garrick, David, 18, 23, 24, 28, 31, 36, 40; his farewell to the stage, 45, 49; 101, 105, 107,

- 135; Ode on Mr. Pelham, 141; 146, 302, 304.
- Garrick, Mrs., 37, 45.
- Garrick, Nathan, 36.
- Garrick and Colman's Clandestine Marriage, 23; Lord Ogleby, 23.
- Gascoigne, Henry, 60.
- Gatti, 88.
- Gautier, Theophile, 165.
- Gay, John, 12, 19, 38, 67, 156, 232; Life of, 239; birth of, 239; Poetical Works, 239; education of, 240; his school-days, 240, 241; apprenticed to a silk mercer, 241; Wine, 243; Epistle to Bernard Lintott, 243; the Present State of Wit, 245, 246; his appointment to Monmouth, 248; Rural Sports, 249; The Wife of Bath, 250; on Flattery and Dress, 250; the Fan, 250; A Contemplation upon Death, 250; Panthea, 250; Araminta, 250; The Shepherd's Week, 250; his appointment to Hanover, 253; his Epigrammatical Petition, 253; Epistle to a Lady, 255; What d' ye call it, 255; a Journey to Exeter, 256; Trivia, 257, 258; Three Hours before Marriage, 259; his ballads, 260; his financial ventures, 260, 261; his friendship for the Queensberrys, 261, 262; the Captives, 263; the Fables, 263; his royal appointment, 264; Beggar's Opera, 264; the play prohibited, 266; jumps into prominence, 267; cared for by his friends, 268, 269; Achilles, 270; death of, 270; characteristics of, 271; his epitaph, 271; summary of his work, 272-274; 288, 299.
- Gay, Thomas, 240, 242.
- Gay, William, 239.
- Gay's Chair*, 241.
- Gazette*, the, 70, 73.
- Gentleman's Magazine*, the, 111, 112, 113, 133, 297.
- George I., 79, 237, 258, 275, 281, 295.
- George II., 16, 142, 264, 267, 288.
- George III., 94, 146, 152, 155, 230, 290.
- George IV., 152.
- George, Prince of Denmark, 70.
- George Augustus, Prince of Wales, 286.
- Georgian London, 118.
- Gérard, Baron, 155, 164.
- Gerfaut*, 174.
- Germaine, Lady Betty, 299.
- Germany, 178.
- Gibbon, 107, 304, 308.
- Gibbons, Grinley, 184, 227.
- Gigoux, Jean, 180.
- Gilbert, Sir John, 165, 177.
- Gil Blas*, Gigoux's, 180.
- Gillray, 51, 147, 203.
- Girodet, 155.
- Glassalt, 72.
- Gobillot, Mlle. Reine, 174.
- God Save the King*, 41.
- "Golden Cross," 223, 230, 231.

"Golden Head," the, 300, 302.
 Goldsmith, Henry, 10.
 Goldsmith, Lewis, 160.
 Goldsmith, Oliver, story of, 7-9; Vicar of Wakefield, 9, 17, 21, 32; Deserted Village, 9, 15, 17, 18, 19, 27, 32; late appearance of his literary genius, 9; Poems and Plays, 9-32; Ballads for Dublin street-singers, 9; Verses for Jane Contarine, 10; no evidence that he wrote in his youth, 9, 10; The Traveller, 10, 15, 17, 18, 19, 20, 32; circumstances responsible for his literary career, 10; lawyer, 10; physician, 10; clergyman, 10; dislike of scholastic work, 10; return to it after a first trial of writing, 10; takes up the pen again to escape from it, 10; his efforts to relinquish the pen, 10, 11; literature claims him until death, 11; wrote little previous to his second period, 11; literary opinions formed earlier, 11; Polite Learning in Europe, 11, 15, 22, 26; his criticism of publishers, 11; his views of poetry in the Monthly Review, 11; objects to blank verse, 11; favours rhyme, 11; champion of character and humour, 12; likes and dislikes of his predecessors, 12; belonged to the school of Addison, Swift, and Prior, 12; belief in poetry directed at the many, 12; criticism of Gray's writings, 12; his advice to Gray, 13; his opinion of his contemporaries and predecessors, 12; his poetic attitude, 13; A New Simile, 13; The Logicians Refuted, 13; The Double Transformation, 13; his acquaintance with the minor French poets, 13; his translations, 13, 14; Life of Parnell, 15; Beauties of English Poesy, 15, 20; introduction of politics into his works, 15, 16; humanity in his poems, 16; Edwin and Angelina, 17; Poems for Young Ladies, 17; As to Any Hermit, 17, 26, 37; criticism of, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18; Captivity, 18; Threnodia Augustalis, 18; Retaliation, 18, 19; the Haunch of Venison, 18; Letter to Mrs. Bunbury, 18; Little Comedy, 18; his poetry, 19; financial returns, 19, 20; his life a treadmill, 20; History of Animated Nature, 20; in pursuit of dramatic success, 21; letters to Hodson, 21; The Beaux' Stratagem, 22; the Bee, 22, 26; the Good-Natur'd Man, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 29; obstacles, 23, 28; the Citizen of the World, 26; She Stoops to Conquer, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31; the Grumbler, 31; his death, 31; summary of his work, 32; his Croaker, 52; 58, 61, 82, 94, 96, 110, 111, 134, 168,

- 172, 174, 176, 177, 181, 182,
229, 230, 249, 271, 291, 304,
313, 314, 315, 316, 317, 319,
323, 324, 325.
"Goldsmith House," 316.
Goldsmith Road, 316.
Goldsmith's Poetical Works, 313.
Goodall, 144.
Goodman's Fields, 101.
Good-Natur'd Man, The, Gold-smith's first comedy, 21, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 29.
Gordon rioters, the, 146.
Gordon riots, the, 46.
Goschen, Mr., 272.
Goujon, Jean, the door-carver, 150.
Gower, Lord, 291.
Grafton, Duke of, 189.
Grampian Club, the, 131.
Granby, the Marquis of, 52.
Grand Opera, the, Paris, 157.
Grant, Colonel Francis, 110, 138.
Gray, Thomas, Goldsmith's criticism and advice to, 13;
Sketch of his own Character,
19; 304.
Great Britain, Public Records of, 232.
Great Hall, the, 193, 195.
"Great Mews," 231.
Great Queen Street, 99.
Great Writers, 21.
Grecian Coffee House, the, 134.
Greek Anthology, 14.
Green, Charles, 166.
Green, Valentine, the mezzotinter, 144.
- Green-Arbour-Court, 7.
Green Chamber, the, 192.
"Green Mews," 231.
Green Street, 294, 295.
Greville, 204, 217.
Griffin, the actor, 19, 256.
Griffiths, Ralph, 12, 312, 313,
314, 315, 317, 318.
Grignion, the engraver, 55.
Gros, 155.
Grosvenor, Lady, 135.
Grotius, 254.
Grub-street, 83.
Grumbler, The, Goldsmith's,
31.
Guardian, the, 77, 78, 82, 250.
Guelderland, 325.
Guercino, 154.
Guérin, 155.
Guide de l'Amateur de Livres à Vignettes, Cohen's, 180.
Guido, 154.
Guiscard, 186.
Guizot, Madame, 249.
Gunter, Edmund, 189.
Gwydyr House, 185.
Gwynne, the painter, 55.
- H.
- HACKMAN, James, execution of, 45.
Haddock, Captain, 323.
Hague, the, 153, 282, 283, 306.
Halifax, Earl of, 15, 246, 297, 298.
Hall, John, 42, 55, 146, 147.
Halle, 309.
Hall of Antiques, the, 154.
Hamilton, Anthony, 187.

- Hammersmith, 51.
 Hampstead, 222.
 Hampton Court, 198, 201.
Handsome Housemaid, The; or, Piety in Pattens, Foote's, 29.
 Hanmer, Lady Catherine, 289.
 Hanmer, Miss, 240.
 Hanmer, Rev. John, 242.
 Hanover, Court of, 253.
 Hanoverian succession, the, 78.
 Hanway, Jonas, 258.
 Harcourt, Sir William, 259, 272.
 "Hardcastle, Ephraim" (W. H. Pyne), 52, 230.
Hardcastle, Miss, 30.
Hardcastles, the, 30.
Hare and Many Friends, the, 269.
 Harley, 77, 186.
 Harrison, 168.
 Harrison, Major-General, 224, 225.
 Harrison, Mrs., 224.
 Harrow, 41, 53.
 Hartley-Row, 256.
 Hartshorne Lane, 222.
 Harwich, 321.
Hastings, 31.
 Hastings trial, the, 94.
 Hatfield Peverell, 198.
 Hatton, 189.
Haunch of Venison, The, Goldsmith's, 18.
 Hawkins, Sir John, 17, 116, 117, 118, 126, 133.
 Hayman, Frank, 49, 52.
 Haymarket, the, 54, 234.
 Hearne, 286.
 "Hearts, the Queen of," 279.
 Heath, 144, 168, 171.
 Hebrides, the, 114, 118, 119.
 Hedge Lane, 221, 277.
 Hemings' Row, 231.
 Hendon, 27.
 Henrietta, Congreve's, 266.
 Henry III., 222.
 Henry VIII., 185, 197, 231.
 Henry, Prince of Wales, 278.
 Hentzner, 198.
 Herbert, Henry, Earl of Pembroke, 34, 55.
Heretical Book, Whiston's, 286.
 Her Majesty's Theatre, 221.
Hermit, Goldsmith's, 37.
Hero of Culloden, the, 43.
 Hervart, M. and Mme. de, 269.
 Hervey, Captain Augustus, 36.
 Hervey, Lady, 36, 288.
 Hervey, Lord, 265, 287, 288.
 Highgate, 222.
 Hill, Aaron, the playwright, 243.
 Hill, Dr. George Birkbeck, 94, 136, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143.
 Hills, Henry, 243.
Hippokekoana, Countess of, 259.
History of Animated Nature, Goldsmith's, 20.
History of Music, Burney's, 299.
History of Our Own Times, 316.
History of the Reformation, Burnet's, 193.
History of the Revolution of 1688, Fox's, 156.
History of the Stage, the, Chetwood's, 57.
 Hoadly, Suspicious Husband, 135.

- Hockley-in-the-Hole, 289.
 Hodson, Daniel, 21, 317.
 Hoffmann, 286.
 Hogarth, William, 35; Four Stages of Cruelty, 46; 89, 149, 163, 230, 237, 238, 265, 276, 288, 300, 301, 302, 303, 304.
 Hogarth, Mrs. William, 276, 302.
 Hogarth, Mrs. (mère), 145.
 Holbein's Gate, 186, 193, 196, 197.
 Holborn, 57.
 Holborn Conduit, 226.
 Holcroft, Thomas, 160; the Road to Ruin, 161; Travels in France, 161; 296.
 Holkham, 132.
 Holland, 285, 308, 323.
 Holland, Lady, Life of Sydney Smith, 205.
 Holland, Lord, 204.
 Holles Street, 93.
 "Holophusikon," Lever's, 292, 293.
 Home, 313.
Homer, Barnes's, 286.
 Honeycomb, Will., 258.
Honeywood, Powell as, 25.
 Hook, Theodore, 53.
 Horace, 206, 208, 209, 218, 237.
Horace, Maittaire's, 241.
Horatio, Quin as, 102.
 Horse Grenadier Guards, the, 292.
 Horse Guards, the, 62.
 Horse Guards Avenue, 184, 195.
 Horse Guard Yard, the, 187, 196.
 Houghton, Lord, 131.
 Howard, Henry, Earl of Northampton, 228, 229.
 Howard, Mrs., 255, 262, 267.
 Howard family, the, 40.
 Howe, Lord, 47, 48.
 Howe, Sophia, 288.
 Howell, 279.
 Hoyden, Miss, 162.
Huguenot Galley-Slave, the, 311.
Human Life, Rogers', 218.
 Humber, the, 321.
 Hummums, the, 134.
 Humphry, Ozias, the miniaturist, 99.
 Hunter, John, 276, 302; his museum of Comparative and Pathological Anatomy, 303.
 Hunter, William, 303.
 Huot, 180.
 Huth, Mr., 238.
 Hyde, Catherine, 253, 261.
 Hyde, Lady Jane, 253, 261.
 Hyde, Mr., 190.
 Hyde Park, 64.
 Hyde Park Corner, 295.
- I.
- Iago*, Macklin as, 101.
Idler, the, 112.
Iliad, Homer's, 231, 273.
 "Imperial Resident," the, 281, 286.
 Imperio-Classical School, the, 154.
Importance of Dunkirk Consider'd, the, Steele's, 78.
Importance of the "Guardian" Considered, the, Swift's, 78.

- Inchbald, Mrs., 108.
 India Office, the, 183.
 Ingres, 155.
 Ireland, 62, 76, 136, 298.
 Ireland, John, the Hogarth commentator, 147.
Irene, 101.
Irish Melodies, 219.
Iron Chest, Colman's, 146.
 Irving, Washington, 229.
 Isabey, the miniaturist, 154.
 Isleworth, 228.
 Isocrates, 13.
 Italian opera, the, 159.
 Italian Opera House, the, 49.
 Ivy Lane, 117.
- J.
- JACKSON, 54.
 Jacob's Well, 50.
 Jacque, Charles, 180.
 Jamaica, Governor of, 88.
 James I., 184, 189, 198, 234.
 James II., 184, 198, 278, 287.
 James, Mrs., 71.
 Janin, Jules, 180.
 Jansen, Bernard, 228.
Jardin des Plantes, the, 153.
 Jeffery, 204.
 Jekyll, 204.
Jenkinson, 179.
Jeremy Diddler, Kenney's, 215.
 Jermy, Seth, 320, 321, 322.
 Jermyn Street, 73.
 Jervas, Charles, 261, 262.
 Jesse, J. Heneage, 198.
 Johannot, Tony, 165, 180.
 John, Lord Cutts, 62.
 John, Lord Hervey, 265, 288.
 John of Bologna, 226.
 Johnson, Elizabeth, marries Dominico Angelo, 36; her son, 36.
 Johnson, Mrs., 282.
 Johnson, Samuel, 9, 16, 17, 28, 29, 30; prologue to The Good Natur'd Man, 24; Suspirius, 25; 58, 94, 99, 101, 109, 110, 111, 112; Memoirs of, 114; Anecdotes of, 115; 116, 117, 118; Essay on the Life, Character, and Writings of, 118; Journey to the Western Islands of Scotland, 118; 119; Boswell's Life of, 120-134; 135; His Friends and His Critics, 136; the Spirit of, 137; 142; Debates in Parliament, 143; 229; Poets, 239; 249, 272, 299, 304.
Johnsoniana, Mrs. Napier's, 113, 115, 133.
Johnsonian Miscellanies, Hill's, 143.
 Jones, Henry, 90.
 Jones, Inigo, 183.
 Jones, John, 224, 225.
 Jonson, Ben, 199, 222, 232.
 Jordaens, 199.
 Jordan, Mrs., 104.
Joseph Andrews, Fielding's, 20, 168, 169, 251.
 Jouaust, 181.
Journal des Sçavans, the, 280.
Journal of a Tour to Corsica, Boswell's, 139.
Journal of a Tour to the Hebrides, Boswell's, 114, 118, 120, 121, 122, 126, 129.

- Journal of a Voyage to Lisbon*, Fielding's, 142.
Journal to Stella, 76.
Journey to Exeter, Gay's, 256.
Journey to the Western Islands of Scotland, Johnson's, 118, 132, 136.
Judgment of Paris, the, 289.
Julia, 30, 208, 209.
Junius, 92.

K.

- KAUFFMAN, Angelica, 228.
 Kean, Charles, 108.
 Kean, Edmund, 54, 55.
 Kearsley, G., 111.
 Keats, John, 16.
 Keble, William, 243.
 Keith, Marshal, 91.
 Kelly, 64.
 Kelly, Hugh, False Delicacy, produced by Garrick at Drury Lane, 24, 25; 27; A Word to the Wise, 27; 29, 31, 95.
 Kemble, Charles, 105.
 Kemble, John, 105, 146, 157, 159; the Distressed Mother, 159.
 Kemble, Stephen George, 105.
 Kenney, Jeremy Diddler, 215.
 Kensington, 296.
 Kent, 279.
 Kent, William, 231, 260.
 Kent's Horse Guards, 183, 184.
 Kéroualle, Louise Renée de, 190.
 Kew, 157.
 Keys, Dr., 35.
 King, Dr., 89.

- King's Mews, the, 220, 221, 231, 277, 279.
 King's Square Court, 40.
 King Street, 186, 197.
 King Street Gate, 186, 197.
 Kirk, Mrs., 187.
 Kit Cat Club, the, 68, 70, 299.
 Kitty, Prior's, 261, 269.
 Kneller, 71, 284.
 Knightsbridge, 107.
 Kotzebue, 108.

L.

- Ladies Library*, the, 80.
 "Lady Louisa of Leicester Square," the, 299.
Lady's Last Stake, the, Huth's, 238.
La Fausse Agnès, Destouches', 159.
 La Fontaine, 91, 268, 271.
 Lalauze, M. Adolphe, 181.
Lallah Rookh, Moore's, 218.
 Lamb, Charles, 105, 163.
 Lambert, George, the scene painter, 301.
 "Lammas," 278.
 Lammasland, 278.
 La Monnoye, 14.
 La Motte, M. de, 44.
 Lampson, Mr. Locker, 217.
 Lancret, 181.
 Landguard Fort, 67.
Landlady, the, 167, 171.
 Landor, 86.
 Landseer, 144, 233.
 Lange, Janet, 180.
 Langford's, 42.
 Languedoc, 308.

- La Palice, Seigneur de, see Chabannes, Jacques de.
 Laporte, 159.
 La Sablière, Mme. de, 268.
 Lauderdale, the Earl of, 190, 218.
 Laughton, Professor J. K., 320, 322.
 La Vendée, 48.
 Layer, Counsellor Christopher, 91.
 Lays (Lais), François, 157.
 Lear, Garrick as, 135.
 Lee, Miss, 104.
 Le Fleix, 310.
 Leghorn, 35.
 Leicester, Earl of, 278, 279, 281.
 Leicester Fields, 35, 275-305.
 Leicester House, 276, 278, 279, 280, 281, 285, 286, 287, 288, 289, 290, 291, 292, 293, 294.
 Leicester Mews, the, 295.
 Leicester Place, 278, 294, 295.
 Leicester Square, 275, 276.
 Leicester Street, 294.
 Lekains, the, 158.
 Lenoir, M. Alexandre, 162.
 Lepel, Mary, 287, 288.
 Le Sœur, Hubert, 226, 295.
Letter from Italy to Lord Halifax, Addison's, 15; Goldsmith's The Traveller suggested by, 15.
Letters from a Dandy to a Doll, 216.
Letters to Julia, Luttrell's, 203-219.
Letter to Mrs. Bunbury, Goldsmith's, 18.
 Lever, Sir Ashton, 292, 293.
 Lever, Charles, 292.
 Lewes, Sir Watkin, 96.
 Lewis, the actor, 105.
 Lewis, Mrs. Mary, 302.
 Leyboldt and Holt, Messrs., 311.
Liar, the, Foote's, 49.
 Library School of St. Martin's, the, 146.
 Lichfield, 133.
Life of Goldsmith, Forster's, 8.
Life of Parnell, Goldsmith's, 15.
Life of Samuel Johnson, Boswell's, 120-134; the Oxford edition, 123.
 Lille, 319.
 Lilly, William, 224.
 Lincoln, Earl of, 262.
 Lincoln's Inn Fields, 98, 264.
 Linnæus, 91.
 Linton, 173.
 Lintott, Bernard, 243, 247, 248.
 Linwood's Art Needlework, Miss, 276, 292.
 Lion d'Argent, the, 163.
Lions, Landseer's, 233.
 Lisbon, 142.
 Lisburn, Lord, 20.
 Lisle Street, 278, 294.
 Liston, 146.
Literary Gazette, the, 93.
Literary Illustrations, Nichols', 110.
Literary Magazine, the, 317.
Little Comedy, Goldsmith's, 18.
Little Dickey, 57.
 Little Newport Street, 277.
 Little Strawberry, 103.
 Livesay, Richard, the engraver, 302.

- Lives of the Poets*, Cibber's, 133.
 Liviez, M., 38.
 Lloyd, Robert, 106, 227.
 Locket, 237.
Lofty, 25.
Logicians Refuted, The, Goldsmith's, 13; Swift the model for, 13.
 Lomsbery, 231.
 London, 7, 34, 35, 39, 40, 47, 72, 87, 109, 115, 134, 157, 159, 214, 258, 275, 285, 293, 294, 323, 325.
 London and Wise, Messrs., 200.
 London County Council, 236, 238.
 London militia, 223.
 Longfellow, Henry Wadsworth, 13.
 Long Parliament, the, 223.
 Long Walk, the, 197.
 Lord Chamberlain, the, 189, 196, 266.
 Lord Keeper's Office, the, 189.
Lord Ogleby, Garrick and Colman's, 23.
 Lort, Michael, 110.
Lothario, 102.
 Louis XIV., 62, 279.
Louis XIV. et la Révocation, 308.
Louis XIV. et le Duc de Bourgogne, Michelet's, 308.
 Louis XV., 33.
 Louisa, Princess, 264.
 Louthembourg, Philip de, 42.
 Louvre, the, 153, 154, 156, 184.
 "Lovers' Vows," Mrs. Inchbald's, 108.
 Lowe, Mauritius, 133.
 Lower Park Road, 316.
 Lucas, Lord, 65, 144.
 Lucas's Fusileers, 63, 67.
Lucius, 81.
 Luck, Robert, 240; Miscellany of New Poems, 240; 243.
Lucy, Mrs. Eggleton as, 265.
Ludlow Castle, the, English man-of-war, 322.
Lumpkin, Tony, 30, 179, 293.
Lusignan, Garrick as, 135.
 Luttrell, Colonel, 219.
 Luttrell, Henry, 64, 108; Letters to Julia, 203-219; opinions of, 205-216; Crockford House, 217; fugitive verses, 217; his lesser pieces, 218, 219.
 Luxembourg, the, 155.
Lydia, 208, 209.
Lying Lover, the, Steele's, 66.
Lyra Elegantiarum, 217.
 . M.
 MABUSE, 192.
 MacArdell, the mezzotinter, 144.
 Macaulay, T. B., 57, 124, 127, 130, 133, 290.
 MacKinnon, General, 63.
 Mackintosh, 204.
 Macklin, 101, 102.
 Maclean, James, the "gentleman highwayman," 107.
 Macmillan and Co., Messrs., 182, 301.
 Macpherson, 114.
Madame Blaise, Goldsmith's, 14.
 Magdalen, 61.
 Maginn, 232.
 Maiano, John de, 198.

- Maillard, Mlle., 157.
 Mainwaring, Arthur, 70.
 Maittaire, Horace, 241.
 Malone, 115, 116, 119, 121, 123,
 128, 138, 141, 277.
 Manchester, 293.
 Manley, Mr., 68.
 Manley, Mrs. De la Rivière, 68,
 69, 70.
 Mann, 290.
Mansfield Park, Miss Austen's,
 108.
 Mantal, 309.
 Maplesden, Margery, 67.
 Mapp, Mrs. Sarah, the Epsom bone-setter, 89.
 Marengo, 152.
 Marlborough daughters, the, 285.
 Marlborough, Duchess of, 90,
 266, 268.
 Marlborough, Duke of, 76, 83,
 282, 284, 286.
Marlow, 31.
Marriage of St. Catherine, Cor-reggio's, 154.
 Mars, Mlle., 158.
 Marteilhe, Jean, Memoirs of, 306-325.
 Marvell, Andrew, 189.
 Marville, C., 180.
 Mary, Queen, 62.
 Mason, 304.
Masters of Wood Engraving,
 Linton's, 173.
 Mathews, Captain, 41.
 Mathews, Charles, the elder,
 146, 157.
 Matted Gallery, the, 192.
 Matthews, 88.
 Maurus, Terentianus, 306.
- Mazarine, 194.
 Mead, Dr., 286.
 Meadows, Kenny, 165.
 Meissonier, 180.
 Melcombe, Lord, 288.
Memoirs, Carleton's, 63.
Memoirs of a Protestant, 306-325.
*Memoirs of the Life and Writings of the late Dr.
 Samuel Johnson*, 114.
Memorandum Book for 1805,
 170.
Ménagiana, Goldsmith's acquaintance with, 13.
Mercutio, Lewis as, 105.
 Merry Monarch, 225.
 Merton, 61.
 Metastasio, 91.
 Metropolitan Board of Works,
 the, 236.
 Mews, the, of Richmond Terrace, 184.
 Michelet, 308.
 Middlesex, Lady, 288, 289.
 Military Garden, the old, 278.
 Military Library, the, 56.
 Millar, Andrew, 20.
 Milner, Dr. John, 316.
 Milton, John, 237.
Minor, Foote's, 49.
Mirror of Amusement, 171.
Miscellany of New Poems,
 Luck's, 240.
Mr. Bickerstaff's Lucubrations,
 76.
 Mitchel, the banker, 47.
Mohocks, the, 247, 258.
 Moira, Lord, 48.
 Molière, 66, 97.

- Molly Mog, Gay's ballad on, 273.
Monarch, the famous white charger, 42.
 Moncrieff, 88.
 Monk, Duke of Albemarle, 186.
 Monkstorm, 60.
 Monmouth, Duchess of, 248, 253, 259.
 Monmouth, Duke of, 187, 248.
 Monsey, Dr. Messenger, 94.
Monsieur Tonson, the author of, 87-108; 217.
 Montagu, Lady Mary Wortley, 260.
 Montagu, 304.
 Montaigne, 11.
 Montgomery, Earl of, 186, 235.
Monthly Review, the, 11, 312, 313, 316, 317, 318.
 Monvel, 158.
 Moore, Arthur, 151.
 Moore, Thomas, 204; his Diary, 208, 217; Lallah Rookh, 218; 219.
Morbleu, Monsieur, 88.
 More, Hannah, 134.
 Morecombe-lake, 256.
 Morel-Fatio, Antoine Léon, the marine artist, 310, 311.
 Morgan, Professor Augustus de, 297.
 Morley, Professor Henry, 137.
Morning, 257.
Morning Chronicle, the, 163.
 Morocco, 200.
 Morris, Henry, 158.
 Morrison collection, the, 67.
Moses, 171, 176.
 Motet, the champion pareur, 39.
- Moulsey, 210.
 Mountain, 60.
 Mulready, 176, 177, 181.
 Murphy, Arthur, 126, 134, 135; the Citizen, 159.
 Murray, Mr. John, 54, 265.
 Murray, Sir Robert, 189.
 Musée des Monuments, the, 162.
 Museum Leverianum, the, 294.
My Own Boastings, Angelo's, 54.
 Mylius, August, 178.
Myra, lines to, Goldsmith's, 14.
- N.
- NAG'S HEAD YARD, 301.
 Nairne, the Highland girl of, 140.
 Nantes, the Edict of, 309.
 Napier, Rev. Alexander, 113, 120, 128, 132, 133, 136, 137.
 Napier, Mrs., Johnsoniana, 113, 115, 133.
 National Gallery, the, 220, 231, 233, 238.
 National Portrait Gallery, the, 231, 261.
 Neapolitan Club, the, 46, 204.
 Nelson's Column, 233.
 Netherlands, the, 312, 324.
Neville, Miss, 31.
New Atalantis, the, 68, 80.
New Bath Guide, Anstey's, 18.
 Newbury, F., 167.
 Newcastle Theatre, the, 105.
Newcome, Clive, 165.
Newcomes, the, 50.
 New Lisle Street, 294.
 Newmarket, 210.
 Newport, the Earl of, 278.

- Newport House, 277.
New Simile, A, Goldsmith's, 13;
 Swift the model for, 13.
 New South Wales, 134.
 Newton, Sir Isaac, 276, 296, 298, 299, 300, 301.
Newton: his Friend: and his Niece, 297.
 Nichols, 75, 76, 110, 300, 302.
 Nicolini, 285.
Night, Hogarth's, 237.
Nightingale, the, 320, 321, 322.
Night Thoughts, Young's, Gold-smith's interest in, 12.
 Nîmes, 310.
 Nivernais, the Duke de, a foreign protégé of, 33.
Noctes Ambrosianæ, the, 206.
 Nodier, Charles, 180.
 Nore, the, 282.
 Normanby, Marquis of, 186.
 Normandy, 222.
 Norris, Henry, 57.
 Northampton House, 228.
 Northcote, 99, 142, 143, 147.
 Northern France, 150.
 Northumberland, Duke of, 228, 229, 230.
 Northumberland Hotel, 230.
 Northumberland House, 220,
 221, 227, 229, 230, 238.
 Northumberland Street, 222, 227.
 Norwood, 289.
 Notre Dame, 153.
 Nottingham, the, 78.
Novelist's Library, Roscoe's,
 176.
Novelist's Magazine, Harrison's, 168, 169, 172.
- O.
- OATES, Titus, 227.
 O'Brien, Nelly, 304.
 O'Connor, John, 276.
Ode on Mr. Pelham, Garrick's, 141.
 Old Bailey, the, 44, 91, 323.
Old Whig, the, 57, 58.
 Oldys, the antiquary, 92.
Oliver Goldsmith; a Biography,
 230.
On a Beautiful Youth struck blind with Lightning, Gold-
 smith's, 14.
On the Sublime and Beautiful,
 Burke's, 313.
 Opera House buildings, the, 54.
 "Ophthalmiater," 89.
 Opie, John, 99, 147, 149, 296.
 Orange Coffee House, the, 54.
 Orange Street, 279, 296, 301.
Orestes, 159.
 Ormond, the Dukes of, 60, 62, 187.
 Osbaldeston, Simon, 235.
Osbaldistone, Frank, 165.
 Ossianic controversy, the, 114.
 Ostend, 48, 73.
 Otway, 102.
 Oudenarde, 285.
 Overall, Mr. W. H., 277.
 Ovid, 247.
 Owen, Henry, 72.
 Oxford, 61.
 Oxford, Lord, 253.
 Oxfordshire, 259, 262.
- P.
- PAINE, Thomas, 161; Rights of Man, 161.

- Palace, 74.
 Palais de Justice, the, 162.
 Palais du Tribunal, see Tribunal, the.
 Palais Royal, the, 160, 163.
 Palmer, Barbara, 189, 193, 224.
 Palmer, Jack, the actor, 105, 106.
Pamela, Pope's, 74.
Pamela, Richardson's, 20.
 Panopticon, the, 276.
 Pantagrue, 30.
Panthea, Gay's, 250.
 Pantheon, the, 135.
 Paoli, General, 41.
 Parchment Library, 182.
 Paris, 22, 33, 38, 39, 43, 47, 145, 149, 150, 153, 164, 210, 280, 307.
Paris, Congreve's, 289.
 Park, 74.
 Parker, James, 169.
 Parkinson, Mr., 293.
 Park Lane, 316.
 Parliament Street, 183, 197.
 Parnell, 313.
 Parr, Dr., 94, 95.
 Parsons, 227.
Pasquin, Fielding's, 23.
Pastorals, the, 247.
 Paternoster Row, 314.
Patronage of British Art, 169.
 Paumier, M. Henri, 311, 324.
 Pavia, 14.
 "Payne, Honest Tom," 232.
Paynes, The Two, Dobson's, 233.
 Peckham, 8.
 Peckham Academy, 316.
 Peel, 220.
Pelham, 204.
 Pelham, Mr., 141, 142.
 Pembroke, Earl of, 186; see also Herbert, Henry.
 Pennant, 196; Some Account of London, 197; 198, 294.
 Penshurst, 279.
Pentweazel, Lady, 50.
 Pepys, Samuel, 188, 192, 193, 200; his Diary, 201, 202; 224, 279, 280.
 Perceval, Sir John, 83.
 Percies, the palace of, 221, 228.
 Percy, Algernon, Earl of Northumberland, 228.
 Percy, Thomas, 17, 76, 110, 134, 223, 228.
 Perreau, the Brothers, 44.
Perreau, Farmer, 44.
 Peterborough, Lord, 190.
 Peters, Cromwell's chaplain, 99, 224, 225.
 Petersham, 262.
 Peter the Great, 291.
 Petits-Augustins, the, 162.
 Petit-Trianon, 103.
Phèdre, Duchesnois in, 157.
 Philip, Earl of Montgomery, 235.
 Philips, Ambrose, Pastorals, 251.
 Philips, John, Splendid Shilling, 243.
 Phillips, Sir Richard, Walk from London to Kew, 157.
 "Phiz," 166.
 Piazza, the, 42, 45, 135.
 Picart, M., 159.
 Picart's Theatre, 159.
 Piccadilly, 48, 73, 175, 262, 295.
 Pic-Nic Society, the, 51.

- Pimlico, 232.
 Pinchbecks, the, 107.
 Pindar, Peter, 47, 99, 103.
Pindaric Odes, Thomas Gray's, 12; Goldsmith's criticism of, 12.
 Pine, 301.
 Pinwell, G. J., 177.
 Piozzi, Hesther Lynch, 115, 116, 118, 126, 133, 299.
 Place du Carrousel, the, 152.
 Place Vendôme, the, 151.
Plagiary, Sir Fretful, 97.
Pleasures of Memory, Rogers', 174.
Pliant, Sir Paul, Macklin as, 101.
Poems for Young Ladies, Goldsmith's, 17.
Poems of Goldsmith and Parnell, 313.
Poetical Miscellany, Steele's, 250.
Poetry, Temple on, 26.
Poets, Johnson's, 239.
 Poinset, Comédie Lyrique, 160.
 Poirson, M. V. A., 181.
Polite Learning in Europe, Goldsmith's, 11, 15, 22, 26.
 Pöllnitz, 91.
Polly, Miss Fenton as, 265; 266, 268.
 "Poly-Olbion," Drayton's, 278.
 Pont Neuf, 151.
 Pontoise, 150.
 Pope, Alexander, Goldsmith's admiration for the work of, 12; 13, 16, 19, 32, 58, 74, 83, 91, 109, 128, 142, 143, 176, 242, 246, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 253, 255, 258, 259, 260, 262, 263, 266, 269, 270, 271, 273, 288.
 Portland, Lord, 285.
 Portsmouth, 47, 48, 49.
 Portsmouth, Duchess of, 190, 191, 194.
 Portugal Street, 98.
Poultry, the, 120, 312, 314.
 Powell, as Honeywood, 25.
 Praed, W. M., 203.
Præterita, Ruskin's, 142.
 Prague, 91.
Present State of Wit, Gay's, 245, 246.
 Prévile, 39, 158.
Primrose, George, 102, 167, 169, 179, 181.
Primrose, Mrs., 30, 171, 176, 180, 181.
Primrose, Olivia, 167, 169, 170, 171, 173, 177.
Primrose, Sophia, 168, 169, 173, 175, 176, 179.
Primrose, Doctor, 30, 167, 169, 170, 171, 173, 175, 176, 179, 180, 181.
Prince Arthur, 246.
Prince Titi, History of, 133.
Principia, the, 297.
 Prior, Matthew, Goldsmith's admiration for and imitation of, 12, 13; accuses him of plagiarism, 15; 19, 134, 176, 237; Female Phaeton, 240; 260, 261, 269, 273, 282, 283, 298, 314.
 Prior Park, 102.
 Pritchard, Mrs., 101.
 Privy-Council Office, the, 186.

Privy Garden, the, 188, 189, 190, 196.

Privy Stairs, the, 192, 193, 201.

Procession, the, 62.

Procession to Church, Bewick's, 173.

Prue, 70, 74, 75, 76.

Pryor, Samuel, 237.

Psalmanazar, George, 143.

Public Advertiser, the, 111, 292.

Publick Spirit of the Whigs, Swift's, 78.

Pulteney, 259.

Punchinello, 225.

Purdon, Ned, Goldsmith's epitaph on, 14.

Puttick and Simpson, Messrs., 303.

Pye, 169.

Pyne, W. H., 53, 230.

Q.

Quack Maurus, Dryden's, 64.

Quantin, 181.

Quarterly Review, the, 311.

Queen Charlotte, the, Howe's vessel, 48.

Queensberry, the Duchess of, 37, 47, 261, 266, 267, 268, 270, 271.

Queensberry, the Duke of, 37, 240, 261, 263, 267, 268, 270.

Queen Street, 99.

Quin, the actor, 102, 103.

Quisquilius, Dibdin's, 147.

R.

RACINE, 158.

Raimbach, Abraham, 42, 55;

engravings of, 144; birth of, 145; childhood of, 145; education of, 146; apprenticed to Hall, 146; his first definite employment, 148; in Paris, 149; a view of Napoleon, 152-163; returns to England, 163; his Memoirs, 163; his death, 164.

Ralph, Case of Authors by Profession, 22.

Rambach, F. E., 309.

Rambler, 25.

Ramsay, Allan, 296.

Ranelagh, 135, 288.

"Rape of the Lock," Miscellany, Lintott's, 247.

Raphael, Transfiguration, 153.

Ravenet, 146.

Raymond, Mr. Samuel, 134.

Rayner, 240.

Reay, Miss Martha, 45.

Records of My Life, Taylor's, 52, 93.

Redas, the Frenchman, 54.

"Red Cross," the, 239.

Reed, Isaac, 313, 314.

Reflections on the French Revolution, 100.

Rehearsal, Buckingham's, 255.

Religious Tract Society, the, 311, 318.

Reliques of Ancient Poetry, Percy's, 17, 223.

Rembrandt, 153.

Reminiscences, Angelo's, 33-56.

Rent Day, Raimbach's, 144.

"Repository of Arts," 175.

Restless Tom, 112, 113.

- Retaliation*, Goldsmith's, 18, 19, 51, 96.
 Reynolds, Sir Joshua, 18, 35, 99, 100, 117, 121, 134, 137, 142, 143, 144, 155, 229, 276, 277, 299, 300, 302, 303, 304, 305.
 Rhenish Wine House, the, 237.
 Rich, Christopher, 67, 265, 268.
 Richard, Earl of Barrymore, 50.
 Richard II., 231.
 Richardson, the fire-eater, 280.
 Richardson, Samuel, Pamela, 20; 22.
 Richelieu, the tomb of, 163.
Richland, Miss, 25.
 Richmond Terrace, Mews, 184, 185, 190.
 Richter, Ludwig, 179.
Rights of Man, Paine's, 161.
Rivals, The, Sheridan's, 29.
 Rivarol, 206.
Rivella, 68.
 Rivett, John, 226.
Road to Ruin, Holcroft's, 161, 296.
 Robe Chamber, the, 192.
 Roberson & Co., Messrs., 304.
 Robespierre, 154.
 Rochefoucauld, 181.
 Roehampton, 226.
 Rogers, 174, 204, 205, 206, 218; Human Life, 218.
 Rollos, Mr. John, 80.
Romeo and Juliet, 38.
 Romney, J., 171, 175.
Rosciad, Churchill's, 106.
 Roscius, 39.
 Roscoe, 176.
 Rose, the Royal gardener, 200.
- Rose and Crown*, the, 312.
 Rose, Dr., of Chiswick, 36.
 "Rose" Inn, the, 273.
 Rotterdam, 306.
 Roubillac, 38.
 Rouen, 150.
 Roustan, Mameluke, 152.
 Rowe, Fair Penitent of, 102.
 Rowlandson, Thomas, 38, 47, 48, 49, 55, 167, 174, 175, 176, 182.
 "Rowley," stallion, 231.
Roxane, Duchesnois as, 157.
 Royal Academy, the, 49, 99, 148, 155, 276, 304.
Royal Anne, the, 321.
 Royal Society, the, 279.
 Royal United Service Institution, the, 184, 195.
 Rubens, 153, 199.
 Rubini, 156.
 Rudd, Mrs. Margaret Caroline, trial of, 44.
Rudge, Miss, 44.
 "Rummer" Tavern, the, 237.
 Runciman, Alexander, the painter, 302.
 Rupert, Prince, 190.
Rural Sports, Gay's, 249, 250, 251.
 Ruskin, John, Præterita, 142, 143.
 Russell, Lord, 156.
 Russell Street, 114.
 Ryland, the engraver, 55.
- S.
- ST. ANTOINE, M., 231.
 St. Denis, 150.
Sabines, the, David's, 154.

- Sablionière Hotel, the, 300.
 "Sacharissa," Waller's, 278, 280.
 St. George's, Hanover Square, 36.
 St. Germain's, 191.
 St. Giles, 87, 222.
 St. Huberti, Mlle., 157.
 St. James's Church, 73, 74.
 St. James's Palace, 100, 186.
 St. James's Park, 185, 187, 221.
 St. James's Park menagerie, 234.
 St. James's Square, 51, 292.
 St. John's College beer, 53.
 St. Maclou Church, the, 150.
 St. Margaret's, 73.
 St. Martin's Church, 220, 221, 225, 227, 231, 232, 234.
 St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, 73.
 St. Martin's Lane, 145, 234, 277.
 St. Martin's, the Parish of, 278.
 St. Martin's Place, 161.
 St. Martin's Street, 296, 298, 299, 300, 301.
 St. Mary Rounceval, hospital of, 221.
 St. Patrick, the Roman Catholic Church of, 40.
 St. Paul's Churchyard, 147.
 St. Stephen's, 183.
 Salisbury, England, 35, 167.
 Salisbury Plain, 256.
 Salisbury Square, 317.
 Salon, the French, 156, 164.
 Salvator, 40.
 Sandby, Thomas, the architect, 197.
 Sandwich, Lord, 45, 201.
- Sans Pareil*, the French vessel, 47.
 Sans Souci Theatre, the, 295.
 Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough, 90.
 Satchell, Miss, 105.
 Savage, 81, 83.
 Savile, Sir George, 276, 291.
 Savile House, 290, 291, 292.
 Saxe, Marshal, 91.
 Sayer, James, 104.
 Sayes Court, 291.
Schicksal der Protestanten in Frankreich, Rambach's, 309, 312.
School for Scandal, 105.
 Scot, 225.
 Scotland Yard, 185, 195, 228.
 Scottish Office, the, 196.
Scribleriad, the, 97.
 Scriblerus Club, the, 253.
 Scroope, 225.
Scrub, Mrs. Abington as, 104.
 Scurlock, Miss Mary, marries Richard Steele, 70, 71, 72.
 Scurlock, Mrs., 73, 74.
Seasons, the, 237.
 Sedley, Catharine, Countess of Dorchester, 287.
 Sefton, Lord, 217.
Sermons, Foster's, 136.
 Sesenheim, 179.
 Seven Years' War, the, 33.
 Sharpe, 175.
 Shaw, Rev. William, 114.
 Shee, 149.
Shepherd's Week, Gay's, 250, 251, 252, 254.
 Sheppard, Jack, 90, 277.
 Sheridan, Richard Brinsley, The

- Rivals*, 29; 41, 95, 97, 98, 146, 147.
 Sheridan, Tom, 41, 49.
She Stoops to Conquer, Goldsmith's, 27; first production of, 28; its success, 29, 30, 31; his last dramatic work, 31; his best production, 32.
 Shield Gallery, the, 192.
Short View of the Immorality and Profaneness of the English Stage, Collier's, 66.
 Shrewsbury, Duke of, 285.
 Shuter, as Croaker, 24, 25; anecdote of, 52.
 Siddons, Mrs., 98, 105, 304.
 Sidney Alley, 294.
Sigismunda, 238.
 Simon, John, 284.
 Sion House, at Isleworth, 228.
Sir Tremendous, 259.
Sketch of his own Character, Gray's, 19.
Sleep-Walker, the, 51.
 Smirke, Sir Robert, 148, 165, 199.
 Smith, Adam, 133.
 Smith, Anker, 170.
 Smith, "Gentleman," the actor, 105.
 Smith, J. T., 197; Westminster, 197; 198.
 Smith, "Rainy Day," 299.
 Smith, Sydney, 204; Lady Holland's Life of, 205; 206.
 Smith, Thomas, 322, 323.
 Smithfield, 61, 280.
 Smollett, 38.
Sneer, Palmer as, 106.
 Soane Museum, the, 238.
Société des Ecoles du Dimanche, the, 310, 311.
 Society of Antiquaries, the, 197.
 Society of Artists of Great Britain, the, 238.
 Society of Arts, the, 300.
 Soho, 35, 40, 107.
Some Account of London, Penant's, 197.
 Somers, 246.
Somerset House Gazette, the, 52.
 Soubise, 47.
South American Ode, A, Goldsmith's, 14.
 Southampton, 48.
 South Kensington, 49, 170, 241.
Spectator, the, 60, 76, 77, 83, 187, 200, 244, 246, 283, 286.
 Spence, 266.
Spirit of Johnson, the, 137.
 Spithead, 321.
Splendid Shilling, the, Philips's, 243.
 Spring Gardens, 183, 185, 187, 221, 234, 235, 236, 238.
Spy, the, brigantine, 320.
'Squire, the, 170, 177, 181.
Squire Westiern, Picart as, 159, 160.
Squirrel, the, privateer, 322.
 Stadtholder's collection, the, 153.
Stage, the, 106.
Standard Library, the, 136.
 Steele, Richard, the elder, 60.
 Steele, Richard, the latest Life of, 57-86; The Funeral, 57; birth of, 60; his early life, 60; at the Charterhouse, 60; the Christian Hero, 61, 65; at

- Christ Church, 61; at Merton, 61; his intercourse with Addison, 61; a "gentleman of the army," 61-63; his duel, 64; the Lying Lover, 66; the Tender Husband, 66; his chancery suit, 67; duped, 68; his marriage, 69; death of his wife, 69; appointed Gentleman Waiter to Prince George, 70; Gazetteer, 70; his second marriage, 70-73; his lavish living, 74; his income, 74; his letters to his wife, 75; Commissioner of Stamps, 77; dallying with the stage, 77; death of his mother-in-law, 77; his controversy with Swift, 78; in politics, 78; impeached, 79; Apology for Himself and his Writings, 79; knighted, 79; his death, 79; Conscious Lovers, 79; death of Lady Steele, 79; his connection with Drury Lane Theatre, 80; new light on the work of, 80; his character, 80; branded as a drunkard, 82; his standing as a man of letters, 83; the Tatler, 244; 246, 250; Poetical Miscellany, 250; 255, 256, 257, 283, 284.
- Steele, Lady, 71; death of, 79.
- Steel Yard, the, 200.
- Steenie. 235.
- Steevens, George, the Shakespeare critic, 147, 259.
- Stella, 245, 283, 298.
- Sterne, 39, 169.
- Stock, Elliot, 314.
- Stockbridge, 78, 256.
- Stocks Market, 226.
- Stone Gallery, the, 190, 191.
- Storace, Stephen, 146, 147.
- Stothard, 144, 145, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 174, 175, 181.
- Strafford, Lady, 283, 285.
- Strafford, Lord, 283.
- Strand, 221.
- Stratford Jubilee, the, 37.
- Stratton, 286.
- Strawberry Hill, 200.
- Strawberry Hill Press, the, 51
- Stretch, Margaret, marries Richard Steele, 69; her death, 69 71.
- Strype, 227.
- Stuarts, the, 196.
- Stubbs, George, 42.
- Suckling, 229.
- Suffolk, Lady, 255.
- Suffolk House, 228.
- Suffolks, the, 228.
- Sun, The*, 92.
- Sunderland, Countess of, 278; the second, 280.
- Sunderland, Lord, 73.
- Superville, M. Daniel de, 307, 324.
- Surgeons' Hall, 7, 46.
- Survey of 1592*, Agas', 221, 222, 223.
- Suspicious Husband*, Hoadly's, 135.
- Suspirius*, Johnson's, 25.
- Sussex, the Duke of, 46.
- Sutton Street, 40.
- Swan Close, 278.
- Sweet William's Farewell to*

- Black Ey'd Susan*, Gay's, 260.
- Swift, Jonathan, Goldsmith's admiration for and imitation of, 12, 13; 58, 76, 77, 78; the Importance of the "Guardian" considered, 78; Public Spirit of the Whigs, 78; 81, 84, 94, 109; City Shower, 213, 242; 243, 245, 246, 247, 249, 252, 253, 254, 257, 261, 262, 263, 264, 265, 266, 267, 268, 270, 271, 273, 282, 286, 298.
- Swivellers*, the, 165.
- Sybaris*, 209.
- Sydney, 134.
- Sydney, Algernon, 278.
- Sydney, Dorothy, 278.
- Sydney, Robert, Earl of Leicesters, 278.
- Symes, Elinor, 60.
- Sympathy*, Dodsley's, 16.
- T.
- TAINÉ, M., 269.
- Tales*, Gay's, 273.
- Tales of the Genii*, Cooke's, 148.
- Talking Oak*, Tennyson's, 18.
- Talma, the tragedian, 159.
- Taste*, Foote's, 40.
- Tatler*, the, 60, 76, 83, 244, 245, 246, 257.
- Taylor, "Chevalier," see Taylor, John, the elder.
- Taylor, John, the elder, 89-92.
- Taylor, John, the Second, 92, 101.
- Taylor, John, the Third, 88; Monsieur Tonson, 87, 88; his grandfather, 89; his father, 92; an oculist, 92; in journalism, 92; as a raconteur, 93; Records of My Life, 52, 93; anecdotes of literary men, 93-100; anecdotes of actors and actresses, 100-106.
- Taylor, John Stirling, 93.
- Tedder, Mr. H. R., 110, 130.
- Teillagory, the elder, 34.
- Temple, the, 94, 135.
- Temple Bar*, 219, 278.
- Temple, Sir William, on Poetry, 26, 122, 131.
- Tender Husband*, the, Steele's, 57, 66.
- Tenison, Archbishop, 300.
- Tennant, 273.
- Tennis Court, the, 186, 187, 197.
- Tennyson, Lord Alfred, Talking Oak, 18.
- Texier, 180.
- Thackeray, W. M., Denis Duval, 44; 156, 206; English Humourists, 239.
- Thames, the, 184, 185, 193, 201, 321, 323.
- Thatched House Tavern, the, 35.
- Théâtre de la République, the, see Théâtre Français.
- Théâtre de la République et des Arts, the, see Grand Opera, the.
- Théâtre Français, the, 152, 156, 158.
- Theobald, 256.

- Theocritus, 251.
 Theodore, King of Corsica, 91.
 Thomas, George, 177.
Thompson, Mr., 87.
 Thompson, Mr. Hugh, 182.
 Thompson, John, 173, 176.
 Thomson, 271.
Thornhill, Sir William, 170,
 171, 181.
 Thrale, Mrs., 116, 118, 127, 136.
 Thrale's, 135.
Three Hours before Marriage,
 Gay's, 259.
Threnodia Augustalis, Gold-
 smith's, 18.
 Thurston, 148, 173.
 "Tickler," 206.
 Tilt-Yard, the, 186, 196, 197.
 Tilt-yard Guard, the, 67.
 "Timon's Villa," 276.
Tipkin, Mr., 57.
 Titian, 228.
 Tofts, Mary, the Godalming rabbit-breeder, 90.
To Iris in Bow Street, Gold-
 smith's, 14.
Tom Jones à Londres, Des-forges', 159.
 Tompkins, 223.
 Tonson, 76, 249, 286.
 Tonson and Lintott, Messrs., 260.
 Tonson and Watts, Messrs., 241.
 Tooke, Horne, 41.
 Toplady, 299.
 Tower Guard, the, 65.
 Tower of London, the, 65, 200.
 Towers, Rev. Joseph, 118.
Town Talk, 68.
 Trafalgar Square, 220, 231, 233.
Transfiguration, Raphael's,
 153.
Translations, Gay's, 273.
Traveller, The, Goldsmith's,
 10, 15, 17, 18, 19, 20, 32,
 110.
Travels in France, Holcroft's,
 161.
 Treasury, the, 187, 189.
Treatise on Human Knowledge, the, 83.
 Tree, Miss Ellen, 108, 217.
 Tremamondo, Dominico Angelo
 Malevolti, see Angelo, Do-minico.
 Tribunat, the, 160.
 Trinity College, 7.
Trivia, Gay's, 232, 244, 257, 258.
 Trotter, T., 111.
 Tuileries Gardens, the, 151, 152.
 Tunbridge, 89.
 Tunbridge Wells, 262.
 Turin, 283.
 Turner, 144, 149.
'T was when the Seas were roaring, Gay's, 260, 273.
 Twickenham, 262, 293.
Twopenny postboys, 204.
 Tyburn, 44, 45.
 Tyers, Jonathan, 112.
 Tyers, Tom, 112, 113, 114, 133.
 Tyne, the, 321.
 U.
 UNDERHILL, John, 239, 249.
 Union Club, 221, 233.

Upper Mews Gate, 232.
 Ursa Major, 133.
 Utrecht, the Treaty, 78, 282, 324.
 Uwins, Thomas, 172.

V.

Valerie Marneffe, 44.
 Vanbrugh, 31; Confederacy, 50;
 237.
 Van Dyck, 278, 300.
 Vane Room, the, 192.
 Van Nost, 295.
 Van Woortz, M., 308.
 Vatican, the, 153.
 Vauxhall, 47.
 Vauxhall Gardens, 112, 236.
 Vendée, La, 310.
Venetian Senators, Evelyn's,
 229.
 Venice, 42.
Venice Preserved, Otway's, 102.
 Venus de' Médiçi, the, 153.
Veratius, Gibbon's, 107.
 Vernes, M. Félix, 308, 309, 310.
 Vernet, Carle, 154.
 Vernet, Horace, 154.
 Versailles, 191.
Verses, Goldsmith's, for Jane
 Contarine, 10.
 Vertue, 197.
 Véry's, 163.
 Vestris, the elder, 157.
Vetusta Monumenta, the, 197.
Vicar of Wakefield, Goldsmith's,
 9, 17, 21, 32, 166, 167, 168,
 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174,
 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180,
 181, 182, 314.

Vidal, M. François, 308, 309,
 310; La Fuite du Camisard, 310.
Village Politicians, Raimbach's,
 144, 164.
 Viner, Sir Robert, 226.
Virginians, the, 91.
Vitruvius Britannicus, Campbell's, 183.
 Voltaire, 14, 91, 100, 297.

W.

WADHAM COLLEGE, 123.
 Wakefield, 102, 179.
Wakefield family, 170.
 Wale, 238.
 Wales, 70, 73.
 Wales, the Prince of, 46, 263.
 Wales, the Princess of, 35, 263.
 Walesby, F. P., 123.
 Walker, 265.
 Walker, the engraver, 168.
 Walker, Dr. Thomas, 60.
Walk from London to Kew,
 Phillips', 157.
 Waller, 220, 223, 278.
 Wallingford House, 234, 235.
 Walpole, Horace, 30, 51, 91,
 103, 107, 124, 141, 142, 172,
 200, 225, 226, 229, 290.
 Walpole, Sir Robert, 262, 265, 266.
 Walton, 67.
 Warburton, 102, 103.
 Ward, Dr. Joshua, 89.
 Wardour Street, 40.
 Wardrobe, the old, 195.
 Wargrave Court, 50.
 Wargrave-on-Thames, 50, 51.

- Warwick Lane, 233.
 Watson, the mezzotinter, 144.
 Watteau, 181.
 Welch, Saunders, the magistrate, 301.
Welcome from Greece, Gay's, 273.
 Wenman, J., 167, 178.
 Wentworth, Peter, 285.
 Wenzel, Baron de, 92.
 West, Benjamin, Battle of the Boyne, 42 ; 99 ; Cromwell dissolving the Long Parliament, 147 ; 149, 155 ; Death on the Pale Horse, 155.
 Westall, Richard, 147, 175.
West Indian, Richard Cumberland, 27, 97.
 Westmeath, 8.
 Westminster, 73, 107, 145, 188.
Westminster, Smith's, 197.
 Westminster Abbey, 38, 185, 221, 222, 270, 272.
 Westminster Bridge Road Amphitheatre, 35.
 Westminster Hall, 243.
 Westminster, Palace of, 220.
Westminster Review, the, 239.
 Weston, Lord High Treasurer, 226.
 Wexford, the county of, 62.
What d' ye Call it, Gay's, 255.
 Wheatley, 202, 295.
 Whigs, the, 78.
Whistlecraft, 204.
 Whiston, 286.
 Whitcomb Street, 222, 277.
 Whitefoord, Caleb, 96.
 Whitehall Bridge, 201.
 Whitehall Court, 183, 195.
 Whitehall Gardens, 35, 185, 201.
 Whitehall Gate, 196.
 Whitehall, Old, 56, 73, 74, 188, 201, 202, 221, 224, 225.
 Whitehall Palace, 234.
 Whitehall Palace Stairs, 191, 193, 195, 282.
 Whitehall Yard, 196.
 White's, 204.
 Whittingham, 170, 173.
Wife of Bath, the, Gay's, 250.
 Wild, Jonathan, 91.
 Wilkes, 41, 91.
 Wilkie, Sir David, 144, 164.
 Wilkins, 234.
 William III., King, 42, 62.
 Williams, J., 90.
 Williams, Samuel, 173.
 Willington, James, 313, 315, 318.
 Willmore, 144.
 Will's Coffee House, 142.
 Wills, Mr., 61, 63.
 Wilson, Richard, the painter, 49, 98, 99, 144, 235, 301.
 Wilton, 35.
 Wiltshire, 268.
 Windsor, 49, 197, 198.
Wine, Gay's, 243.
Wine and Walnuts, Hardcastle's, 230.
 Wine-Cellar, the, 195.
Winter, 237.
 Woffington, Mrs. Margaret, 34.
 Wokingham, 273.
 Wolcot, 87, 96.
 Woodward, 135, 259.
 Woollett, 144, 146, 295.

- | | |
|---|--|
| Word to the Wise, A, Kelly's,
27.
Wordsworth, William, 32.
Worldidge, the etcher, 92.
Wornum, Mr., 196.
Worsdale, the Lady Pent-
weazel of, 50.
Worsley, Lady, 299.
Wright, Richard, 133.
Wyatt's Pantheon, burning of, 46.
Wylde's Globe, 276. | Y. YORK, the Duke of, 48, 55, 191, 193.
Young, Edward, Goldsmith's
acquaintance with, 12; Night Thoughts, Goldsmith's interest in, 12 ; 26. Z. ZOFFANY, 42, 43.
Zuccarelli, 228. |
|---|--|

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

0 013 760 874 1

