REHABILITATION

At Walter Reed Army Hospital, Washington, D. C., one of the nation's leading military hospitals, six-hundred young men wounded in Korea are undergoing various phases of rehabilitation. In this process the soldiers are learning to eat, write and work with artificial arms -- walking, dancing and engaging in active out-of-door sports with synthetic legs -- and, earnestly striving to rebuild shattered muscles. In addition, the hospital is offering these veterans daily classes designed to improve their education during their periods of treatment. These include English, history, shorthand, typing, bookkeeping and other practical studies, and are supplemented by college subjects for those seeking higher education.

Sgt. Myroslav Hnatejko, RA 12292522, Hq. Btry, 15th FA, from Rochelle, N. J., enlisted in the American Army in 1947. Sgt. Hnatejko was born in Solena, Poland, and was 15 years old when the invading German Army forced him to leave his home and dig trenches in Czechoslovakia. After a year in forced labor he was sent to Margburg, Austria, where, while being guarded with forty other prisoners, he escaped to Salzburg, then under American control. It took four months to get through the Alps in the cold of mid winter, but it meant his freedom.
