Rocky Site No Longer Advised-Gravel Said to Be the Ideal Soil. Strange as it may seem, after 2,000 years of talk and song about the ada rock, one of the very things that modern builders tell us to avoid in selecting a site is rock. That is princi-pally because of the great cost of excathrough the cellar walls, making the cellar damp; or it might undermine the foundations.

Again rock often contains springs. If spring were opened during blasting would mean either that the water would have to flow through the cellar or be deflected—a costly operation. A house built upon a rock also vibrates during thunder storms.

Clay is perhaps more to be avoided than rock, says the Circle. Clay collects water and spreads under pressure. It expands in wet or frosty weather and contracts in summer. Frozen clay clings to brick or stone and often causes dislocation of cellar walls and piers.

Also it is impervious to water. Thus an underground layer of clay will pre-vent the proper drainage of rain water and leave the soil foul and sodden. Finally, it is exeremely costly to exca-vate. Undesirable for building pur--er-commissions are mighty poses also are made land, sand and silt. Made land is not always stable.

Gravel is the ideal soil for building purposes. It is porous and drains per-fectly. At the same time it is suffi-ciently stable to support foundations. "I have suffered with piles for thirty-six years. One year ago last April I be-gan taking Cascarets for constipation. In the course of a week I noticed the piles began to disappear and at the end of six weeks they did not trouble me at all. Cascarets have done wonders for me. I am entirely cured and feel like a new man." George Kryder, Napoleon, O. A gravelly elevation is the ideal building site.

Depressions or levels between rocks are likely to retain water, even though the depression is slight and the elevations distant. The ground water thus retained stands at a level. Small gravelly élevations form islands, as it were, in a subterranean lake, and upon them houses may be built with perfect safety. The cellar floor will be above the ground water level and no rain water will drain into the cellar.

Every business day afternoon in New York City a short, stocky man with a wooden box under each arm rushes up and down Park row into saloons, nickolodeons, cigar stores and restaurants, where small change is needed. He is known as the "Park Row Change Man" and carries from $100 to $200 in small change on each trip he makes.

This money is arranged in rouleaus, or rolls, stamped and sealed, in amounts varying from $1 to $10, and made up of pennies, nickels, dimes, quarters and half dollars. These he sells at an average profit of five cents a roll, shopkeepers being glad to pay this for the accommodation. The Park row dispenser of lubricants, food, ci-gars and other necessary things is always ready to take all the change he can get. "The Change Man of the Row" has two assistants who gather all the small coin they get from the circulation rooms of the big newspaper offices, subway and elevated stations, and "The Firm of Change Artists" handles hun-dreds of dollars a day from which they derive a tidy weekly income.

THE GIRL AT THE DESK.

"I think," declared Mrs. Brewster to her daughter, "that women are just about as mean to other women as they can possibly be. Men are bad enough, goodness knows, when they get to teaspally because of the great cost of task while. Now up at the fight a cellar in rocky soil is Another objection to rocky soil is that water will not soak through rock and so runs down it. Some of this while. Now up at the fight morning there was an example of what I mean." She pulled off her gloves and sat down to tell the story. "What happened, mother?" inquired

her daughter, quietly continuing her sewing

"Why, when I went to the desk to return my book, there was a woman there, planted right in front of it. She was looking hard at the girl, just as if a young woman suffering from a nershe thought she was about the wretch-edest person in the world. Then I heard her say book has been three days due,' the girl answered.

"'Why don't you?' I heard the wom-an ask. 'I should think you might.' "'I don't know. It's the rules. They are pasted in the front of each book.' "That made the woman pause a minute. Then she said that she didn't read the rules, and she thought she needn't pay the fine, because how could she be expected to know when the book was due if she didn't read the rules? I saw that the librarian was nearly going to say something, but she checkherself just in time. "The woman said, 'Well, I think you are very unjust, and I shall speak about it to a friend of my husband's, who is one of the trustees—Mr. James C. Wilson. I shall leave my card here to-day and pay the fine to-morrow.'

"I stepped up to the desk," continued Mrs. Brewster, "and laid down my book. 'I am so sorry,' I began, thinking that the poor girl would be nearly crying with mortification. She look kind of red about the eyes. She But just then she made a funny noise, and saw she was laughing! "'Do excuse me,' she said, 'but I have such a sense of humor that I can't keep my face straight when a-a-person like that talks like that!'

MUSIC SOOTHES THE SICK.

Hospital Patients Greatly Benefited by a Kind-Hearted Player. The gifts that some of us possess for doing good to others was strikingly shown a few days ago in an uptown hospital. A student who was an expert mandolin player had called on a friend who was a patient in the insti-tution, and at the sick man's request he had brought his instrument. The patient's room was one of many that opened off a reception room. Among the patients on the same floor was a sufferer from the morphine habit, who at frequent intervals had to be given a potion to quiet his nerves. As the time approached for him to receive this he would become so nervous that he would almost rave. Not far away was vous breakdown. She was rarely at rest.

lest person in the world. Then I heard er say: "I didn't receive a card. How was to know that it was overdue?" "We don't send out cards till the "Generation of the hospital. Mellowed by distance, the music of the mandolin, played by "State of the mandolin, played by a master hand, sounded like that of a violin. The effect on the patients was noticeable at once. The morphine user, who had been begging for his potion, paused to listen and forgot the craving for the drug. It was the same with the young woman. Instead of picking at the counterpane she lay perfectly still, fearful of missing a note from the sweet melody that floated in through her open door. Then came "Home, Sweet Home," and as some of the patients lay with closed eyes from under many a lid there stole a tear as the sufferers thought of the homes to which some of them might never return. Again and again did the musician favor his eager audience with selections, classical or ropular. Even the nurses and physiropular. clans felt soothed and benefited as the result of the efforts of the obliging stu-dent. The thanks of his score of hearers shone from their eyes as the young man left the room of his friend and took the elevator for the first floor.

"That did our patients more good than lots of the medicine they take," remarked one of the physicians. "It is a pity that some rich man does not provide enough money so that the sick and injured in our hospitals could be soothed at frequent intervals by as good music as that which we have just
