
-

.

T R A V E L S

THROUGH

SYRIA AND EGYPT,

in the years 1783 , 1784, and 1785 ;

CONTAINING
The prefent Natural and Political State of thofe Countries, their Productions, Arts, Manufactures, and Commerce; with Obfervations on the Manners, Cuftoms, and Government of the Turks and Arabs.

ILLUSTRATED WITH COPPER PLATES.

$$
\begin{aligned}
& \text { By M. C-F. Vol NEY: } \\ & \text { TRANSLATED FROM THE FRENCH. } \end{aligned}
$$

$$
\begin{gathered} \text { IN TWO VOLUMES. } \\ \text { VOL. II. } \end{gathered}
$$

L O N D O N:
PRINTEDFORG. G. J. AND J. ROBINSON, PATER-NOSTER-ROW.
MDCCLXXXVII.

$$
\begin{aligned}
& \text { &LCO } 4 \text { H } \\ & \text { HST NIAL } \\ & \text { MEMEAL } \\
& \text { S/BRAR } \end{aligned}
$$

CONTENTS

OFTHE

SECOND VOLUME.

State of Syria continued.

Page
CHAP. XXIV. Of the cultivating, or Sidentary inbabitants of Syria, I
Of. the Anfarions ibid.
Of the Maronites 8
Of the Druzes, : 33
Of the Motoualis 84
Chap. XXV. Summary of the biftory of Daber, fon of Omar, who governed at Acre from 1750 to 1776, 107
Chap. XXVI. Diftibution of Syria into Pachalics, under the Turkifo government, 138
Chap. XXVII. Of the Pacialic of Aleppo, its limits, productions, revewue, forces, and remarkable places —Of the city of Aleppo and its com-merce-Of the cities of Antioch and Skandarosn, or Alexandretta-Of the villages on the frontiers of the defert, Chap. XXVIII. Of the Pachalic of Tripoli, its limits and produciionsOf the cities of Tripoli, Lataka, 83c. 167
Chap. XXIX. Of the Pachalic of Saide, called likereife that of Acre, its limits, pronuctions, $\mathrm{O}^{\circ} \mathrm{c}$.-Of the city of Eairout-Of the country of the Druecs-Of the coment of Mor-banna-Of the Arabic printins-1rels cfabliffucd at this comvent-Ciatclogme of the Arabic books prizted there-Of the city of Saide, the ancient Sidon-Of the village of Sour, the ancient Ty"
-Of the hituation aidd commerce of ancient Tyri-Of the city of Acre -Of the cititis of Tabaria, of Safud and Baluen-Of the tum of the temple ——Oj the fun at Balock, Chap. XXX. Of the Pucloalic of Damalius, its limits, producions, Eic.Of the city of Damafous and its commerce-Of the ruins of Palmyra-Of the cities of Homs, Hama, Apamea, and the ruins on the frontiers of the Defert-Of the country of Nablous -Of the city of Ycrufalem-Of the convent and onder of the Holy Land, its revenues and prefent adninijlration, 249 Chap. XXXI. Of Palefine-Of the cities Yafa, Ramla, and Gaza-Of the adjoining Defert and the ruined cities on the road to Mecca-Of the ancient commerce of the fe countries ly the Red Sea-Of the Defert of Sinai -Of the convent of Sinai, Chap. XXXII. Political Jate of Syria refumed, Chap. XXXIII. Of the government of the Turks in Syria,
Chap. XXXIV. Of the Adminijtration of Jufice, 388
Chap. XXXV. Of the influence of religion, 393
CuAp. XXXVI. Of property, ranks, and conditions,

Chap. XXXVII. State of the Peafants
Page and of Agriculture,

406
Crap. XXXVIII. Of the Aitifins, Traders, and Commerce, Char. XXXIX. Of the Arts, Sciences, and Ignorance of the People,

432
Crap. XL. Of the manners, cufloms, and character of the inhabitants of Syria,

TRAVELS

I N

EGYP T AND S YRIA.

STATE OF SYRIA.

C H A P. XXIV.

SECT. II.
Of the Anferians.

THE firft people who fhould be diftinguifhed from the reft of the inhabitants of Syria among thofe who employ themfelvès in cultivation, are thofe, called in that country by the plural name Anfaria, in Delifle's maps ftiled Enfyrians, and, in thofe of Danville, Naffaris. The territory occupied by thefe Anfaria is that chain of mountains which extends from Antakia to the rivulet called Nabr-el-Kabir, or the Great River. The hiftory of their origin, though little known, is yet inftructive: I fhall give it in VOL. II.

B
the
the words of a witer who has drawn his materials from the beft authorities (a). " In the ycar of the Grecks I202, (A. D. " 89 I ), there lived at the village of Nafirr, " in the environs of Koufa, an old man, who,
" from his faftings, his continual prayers, " and his poverty, paffed for a faint: feve-
" ral of the common people declaring them" felves his partizans, he felected from " among them twelve difciples to propagate
" his doctrine. But the commandant of the " place, alarmed at his proceedings, feized " the old man, and confined him in prifon.
" In this reverfe of fortune, his fituation ex" cited the pity of a girl who was flave to " the goaler, and fhe detemined to give " him his liberty; an opportunity foon " offered to effect her defign. One day, " when the goaler was gone to bed intoxi" cated, and in a profound fleep, the gently
"took the keys from under his pillow, " and, after opening the door to the old " man, returned them to their place un-
" perceived by her mafter: the next day,
" when the goaler went to vifit his prioner,
" he was extremely antonifhed at finding he
(1) Aficmani, Bibliotheque orientalc.
"s had made his efcape, and the more fo " fince he could perceive no marks of or violence. He therefore judicioully con"cluded he had been delivered by an angel, " and eagerly fpread the report, to avoid the "reprehenfion he merited; the old man, on " the other hand, afferted the fame thing to " his difciples, and preached his doctrines " with more earneftnefs than ever. He " even wrote a book, in which, among other " things, he fays: I, fuch a one, of the village "s of Nafar, bave feen Chrijt who is the word of "God, vobo is Abmad, fon of Mobammad, fon "of Hanafic, of the race of Ali; whbo alfo is "Gabriel, and be faid to me: Thou art be webo "readeth, (with underflanding,) thou art the " man who Speaketh truth; thou art the camel "qubich preferveth the faithful from wrath; "thou art the beaft wobich carrietb their bur"then; thou art the (Holy) Spirit, and Joln,
"" the Jon of Zachary, Go, and preach to men that " they make four genuffections in praying; two "before the rijing of the fun, and two before bis " Jetting, turning their faces towards'Jerufalem: " and let them fay, three times: God Almigbty, "God moft bigh, God moft great: let them ob"Serve only the fecond and third feffival; let
"themp furd but two days annually; let them not "reajo the prepuce, nor drink beer, but as much
" wine as they think proper; and, lafly, let them "abrain from the flofb of carnivorous animals.
"This old man, paffing into Syria, propa"gated his opinions among the lower orders " of the country people, numbers of whom " believed in him. And, after a few years, " he went away, and nobody ever knew what " became of him."

Such was the origin of thefe Anfarians, who are, for the moft part, inhabitants of the mountains before mentioned. A little more than a century after this, the crufaders, carrying the war into thefe countries, and marching from Marrah, along the Orontes, towards Lebanon, fell in with fome of thefe Na, $/$ reans, a great number of whom they flew. Willinm of Tyre (b), who reports this fatt, confounds them with the aliglians, and polfibly they might have refembled each other; as to what he adds, that the Franks, as well as the Arabs, cmployed the term aifalines, without being able to give any account of its origin; it is a problem eafy of folution. Haf-
(b) Lib. xx. chap. 30.
faffin ( $c$ ), in the vulgar Arabic, fignifies Robbers of the nigbt; perfons who the in ambugh to kili; and is ftill underftood in this fenfe at Cairo, and in Syria; for which reafon it was applied to the Bîtenians, who flew by furprize. The crufaders, who hi.ppened to be Syria at the time this practice was moft frequent, muft have adopted the ule of the term in queftion. What they have related of the old man of the mountain, is in confequence of an improper tranflation of the phrafe Shaik-el-Djebal, which fignifies Loid of the mountains, the title the Arabs gave to thic chief of the Bâténians, whofe refidence was to the eaft of Kourd-eftan, in the mountains of the ancient Media.

The Anfaria are, as I have faid, divided into feveral tribes or fects; among which we diftinguifh the Shamfia, or adorers of the fun; the Kelbia, or wormipress of the dog, and the Kadmoufia, who, as I am aftured, pay a particular homage to that part in women, which correfponds to the Priapus(d).

$$
\text { B } 3
$$

Mr.
(c) The root bafs, with an afpirated $b$, fignifices to kill, to affafinate, to liften, to furprize ; but the compound bafîs is not to be found in Golius.
(d) I ann affured, likewife, that they hold nocturnal affemblies,
M. Niebuhr, to whom the fame circumftances were related as to me, could not believe them, becaufe, fays he, it is not probable that mankind hould fo far degrade themfelves; but this mode of reafoning is contradicted, both by the hiftory of all nations, which proves how capable the human mind is of the moft extravagant exceffes, and even by the prefent fate of almoft all countries, efpecially of the eaftern world, where we meet with a degree of ignorance and credulity fufficient to receive the moit palpable abfurdities. The whimfical fuperftitions I have mentioned, may the rather be believed ftill to exift among the Anfaria, as they feem to have been preferved there by a regular tranfmiffion from thofe antient times in which they are known to have prevailed. Hiftorians remark that, notwithftanding the vicinity of Antioch, Chriftianity penetrated with the greateft difficulty into thefe countries; very few profelytes were made here, even after the reign of Julian: and from that femblies, in which, after certain difcourfes, they extinguifh the lights, and indulge promifcuous luft, as has been reported of the ancient Gnoltics.
period to the invafion of the Arabs there was not much time for its eftablifhment: in fact, revolutions in opinion feldom take place fo readily in the provinces as in great cities, where the facility of communication diffufes new ideas with more rapidity, fo that they are foon either univerfally received or entirely exploded. The progrefs made by Chriftianity among thefe rude mountaineers, could only ferve to prepare the way for Mahometanifm, more fuitable to their habits and inclimations; and to this abfurd medley of ancient and modern doctrines the old man of Nafar owed his fuccefs. One hundred and fifty years after, Mobammed-el-Dourzihaving, in his turn, formed a fect, the Anfarians did not admire its principal article, the divinity of the Kalif Hakem: for this reafon they remain diftinct from the Druzes, though they refemble each other in feveral points. Many of the Anfaria believe in the Metempfychofis; others reject the immortality of the foul; and, in general, in that civil and religious anarchy, that ignorance and rudenefs which prevail among them, thefe peafants adopt what opinions they think proper, followB. 4 ing ing the fect they like beft, and, frequently, attaching themfelves to none.

Their country is divided into three principal diftricts farmed by the chiefs called Mokaddamim. Their tribute is paid to the Pacha of Tripoli, from whom they annually receive their title. Their mountains are in general not fo fteep as thofe of Lebanon; and, confequently, are better adapted to cultivation; but they are alfo more expofed to the Turks, and hence doubtlefs, it happens, that, with greater plenty of corn, tolacco, wines, and olives, they are more thinly inhaited than thofe of their neighbours the Maronites, and the Druzes, of whom I fhall next fpeak.
SECT. HI.

Of the Maronites.

Berween the Anfarians, to the north, and the Druzes to the fouth, we find an inconfiderable people long known under the name of Maouaima or Maronites. Their origin, and and the minute difference between them and the Latins, whofe communion they follow, have been much difcuffed by ecclefiaftical writers. All that is worth notice, and known with certainty, concerning them, may. be reduced to what follows:

Towards the end of the fixth age of the church, while the fpirit of retirement from the world was equally novel and fervid, a hermit, of the name of Mâroun, lived on the banks of the Orontes, who, by his farting, his folitary mode of life, and his aufterities, became much refpected by the neighbouring people. It feems that, in the difputes which at that time arofe between Rome and Conftantinople, he employed his credit in favour of the weftern Chriftians. His death, far from abating the ardor of his followers, gave new energy to their zeal: it was reported that miracles had been wrought by his remains, and, in confequence, many perfons affembled from Kinefrin, from Aouafem and other places, who built at Hama a chapel and a tomb whence foon arofe a convent, very celebrated in that part of Syria. The quarrels of the two Metropolitan churches encreafed, and the whole empire entered warmly warmly into the difientions of the priefts and princes. Matters were thus fituated, when, about the end of the feventh century, a monk, named John the Maronite, obtained, by his talents for preaching, the reputation of being one of the moft powerful fupporters of the cauie of the Latins, or Partifans of the Pope. Their opponents, who efpoufed the caufe of the Emperor, and were therefore named Melkites, or Royalifts, made at that time great progrefs in Lebanon. To oppofe them with fuccefs, the Latins determined to fond thither John the Maronite: they prefented him accordingly to the agent of the Pope, at Antioch, who, after confecrating him Bifhop of Djebail, fent him to preach in thofe countries. John loft no time in rallying his partifans, and in augmenting their number; but, oppofed by the intrigues, and even by the open attacks, of the Melkites, thought it neceflary to refift force by force; he collected all the Latins, and fettled himfelf with them in Lebanon, where they formed a fociety independent both with refpect to its civil and religious government. This is related by an Hiftorian of the Lower Empire in the following words: "In the eighth year " of the reign of Conftantine Pogonatus, "(A. D. 676), the Mardaïtes, collecting " themfelves together, took poffeffion of " Lebanon, which became the afylum of "" vagabonds, flaves, and all forts of people. "They grew fo powerful there, as to ftop " the progrefs of the Arabs, and to compel "6 the Kalif Moâouia to requeft of the Greeks " a truce for thirty years, obliging himfelf
" to pay a tribute of fifty horfes, one " hundred flaves, and ten thoufand pieces of " gold (e)."

The name of Mardaites, here ufed by this Author, is derived from a Syriac word, fignifying Rebel, and is oppofed to Melkites, or Royalifts, which proves both that the Syriac was fill in ufe at that time, and that the fchifm which rent the empire was as much civil as religious. Befides, it appears that the origin of thefe two factions, and the exiftence of an infurrection in thefe countries, were prior to thefe times, for, from the firft ages of $\mathrm{Ma}-$ hometanifm (A. D. 622), mention is made of petty independent princes, one of whom, named Youfeph, was fovereign of Djebail;
(e) Codrenus.
and the other, called Kefrou, governed the interior parts of the country, which, from him, took the name of Kefroouan. We read likewife of another whomade an expedition againft Jerufalem, and died at a very advanced age at Befkonta ( $f$ ), where he refided. Thus, before Conftantine Pogonatus, there mountains were become the refuge of malecontents, or rebels, who fled from the bigotry of the Emperors and their governors. It tuas doubtlefs for this reafon, and from a fimilarity in their opinions, that Yohn and his difciples took refuge there; and it. was from the afcendancy they acquired, or already poffeffed, that the whole nation took the name of Maronites, which was lefs difgraceful than that of Mardaïtes. Be this as it may, John, having eftablifhed order and military difcipline among the Mountaineers, having provided them with arms and leaders, they employed their liberty in combating the common enemies of the cmpire and their little fate, and prefently became mafters of almoft all the mountains as far as Jcrufalem. The fchifm which took place at this juncture among the Mahometans, facilitated their conquefts. Monouia rebelling

$$
\text { ( } f \text { ) A village of Fefraouan. }
$$

againf Ali at Damafcus, Kalif a Koufa, found himfelf obliged, in order to avoid being engaged in two wars at once, to make, in 678 , a difadvantageous trenty with the Greeks. Seven years after, Abd-el-Malek renewed it with Juftinian II. on condition, however, that the Emperor fhould free him from the Maronites. To this propofal, Juftinian had the imprudence to confent, and was bafe enough to get their chief affaffinated by an ambalfador, whom the too generous man had received into his houfe without fufpicion of treachery. After this murder, the fame agent fucceeded fo well by his intrigues, that he perfuaded twelve thoufand inhabitants to quit their country, leaving a free paffage to the Mahometan arms. Soon after another perfecution menaced the Maronites with total ruin; for the fame Juftinian fent troops againft them under Marcian and Maurice, who deftroyed the monaftery of Hama, and maffacred five hundred monks, after which they carried the war quite into Kefraouân; but happily at this moment, Juftinian was depofed, when on the point of caufing a general maffacre in Confantinople; and the Maronites, authorized by his fuccefior, falling upon Maurice, cut his army to pieces in an engagement wherein he himfelf perifhed. From this period we lofe fight of them till the invafion of the Crufaders, with whom they were fometimes in alliance, and fometimes at varianceIn this interval, of more than three centuries, they loft part of their poffeffions, and were reduced to their prefent limits, paying tribute, no doubt, as often as the Arabian or Turcoman governors were able to compel them. This was the cafe with the Kalif of Egypt, Hakem-Bamr-Ellah, who, about the year ror4, ceded their territory to a Turcoman, Prince of Aleppo. Two hundred years after, Selah-el-din having driven out the Europeans from this country, they were obliged to fubmit to his power, and purchafe peace by contributions. At this period, that is about the year 1215 , the Maronites effected a remion with Rome, from which they never were widely feparated, and which ftill fubfifts. William of Tyre, who relates this, obferves, that they had forty thoufand men able to bear arms. The peace they enjoyed under the Mamlouks was difturbed by Selim the Second, but this prince, occupied by more important -bjects, did not take the trouble to fubject them. This negligence emboldened them; and, in concert with the Druzes, and their Emir, the celebrated Faker-el-din, they made daily encroachments on the Ottomans; but thefe commotions had an unfortunate iffue; for Amurath the Third, fending againft then Ibrahim, Pacha of Cairo, that General reduced them to obedience, in 1588 , and fubjected them to the annual tribute they fill pay.

Since that period, the Pachas, defirous of extending their authority and extortions, have frequently attempted to introduce their garrifons and Agas into the mountains of the Maronites; but being conftantly repulfed, they have been compelled to abide by the treaty. The fubjection of the Maronites therefore only confifts in the payment of a tribute to the Pacha of Tripoli, of whom they hold their country, which he annually farms out to one or more Shaiks $(\xi)$, that is to fay, perfons of eminence and property, who affign their refpective Mares to the dif-
(g) In the mountains, the word Shaik fignifics, properly; a man of property, or country gentleman.
tricts
tricts and villinges. This impoft is levied, chiefly, on the Mulberry-trees and vineyards, which are the principal, and almoft the fole objects of culture. It varies according to the feafons, and the refiftance they can make to the Pacha. Cuftomhoufes are eftablifhed likewife in the maritime towns, fuch as Djebail, and Bâtroun; but the produce of thefe is but inconfiderable.

The form of government is not founded on exprefs conventions, but merely on ufages and cuftoms. This inconvenience would doubtlefs, long ere this, have produced difagreeable effects, but for the intervention of many fortunate circumftances. The principal of thefe is religion, which, placing an infurmountable barrier between the Maronites and the Nahometans, has prevented ambitious men from leaguing themfelves with forigners to enflave their countrymen. The fecond is the nature of the country, which, every where affording ftrong defences, enables every village, and almof every family, to oppofe, by its fingle force, all ufurpation of forereign power. A third reafon may be derived cven from the weaknefs of this fociety, which having always been furrounded by powerful enemies, has only been able to refift them by maintaining union among its members, which union can only exift by abftaining from oppreffing each other, and by reciprocally guarding the fafety of each others perfon and property. Thus the government preferves itfelf in a natural equilibrium, and cuftoms fupplying the place of laws, the Maronites are to this day equally ftrangers to the oppreffion of defpotifm, and the diforders of anarchy.

The nation may be confidered as divided into two clafies; the people and the Shaiks, by which muft be underftood the moft eminent of the inhabitants, who, from the antiquity of their families, and the opulence of their fortunes, are fuperior to the common clafs. They all live difperfed in the mountains, in villages, hamlets, and even detached houfes; which is never the cafe in the plains. The whole nation confifts of cultivators. Every man improves the little domain he pofiefles, or furms, with his own hands. Even the Shaiks live in the fame manner, and they are only diftinguifhed from the people by a bad Pelice, a horfe, and a few flight advantages in food and lodging: they all live

Vol II.
C
frugally,
frugally, without many enjoyments, but alfo with fcw wants; as they are little acquainted with the inventions of luxury. In general, the nation is poor, but no man wants neceffarics; and if beggars are fometimes feen, they come rather from the fea-coaft than the country itfelf. Property is as facred among them as in Europe, nor do we fee there thofe robberies and extortions fo frequent with the Turks. Travellers may journey there, either by night or day, with a fecurity unknown in any other part of the empire, and the franger meets with hofpitality, as among the Arabs; it mult be owned, however, that the Maronites are lefs generous, and rather inclined to the vice of parfimony. Conformbly to the doctrines of Chriftianity, they have only one wife, whon they efpoufe, frequently, without having feen, and, always, without having been much in her company. Contrayy to the precepts of that fane religion, however, they have admitted, or retained, the Arab cuftom of retaliation, and the neareft relation of a murdered perfon is bound to avenge him. From a habit founded on diftrut, and the political ftute of the country, every one, whether Shaik, or peafant, walks continually armed with a fufil and poniards. This is perhaps an inconvenience; but this advantage refults from it, that they have no novices in the ufe of arms among them, when it is neceflary to employ them againft the Turks. As the country maintains no regular troops, every man is obliged to join the army in time of war, and if this militia were well conducted, it would be fuperior to many European armies. From accounts taken in late years, the number of men, fit to bear arms, amounts to thirty-five thoufand. According to the ufual mode of computation, this would imply a population of about a hundred and five thoufand fouls; and, if we add the priefts, monks, and nuns, difperfed in upwards of two hundred convents, and the inhabitants of the maritime towns, fuch as Djebail, Batroum, &xc. we cannot fuppofe it lefs than a hundred and fifteen thoufand.

This number, compared with the extent of the country, which is about a hundred and fifty leagues fquare, gives feven hundred and fixty inhabitants for each fquare league; which will not appear a fmall population, when we confider that great part of Lebanon confifts only of barren rocks, and that the foil, even where it can be cultivated, produces very little.

In religious matters, the Maronites are dependent on Rome. Though they acknowthe fupremacy of the Pope, their clergy continue, as heretofore, to elect a head, with the title of Batrak, or patriarch of Antioch. Their priefts marry, as in the firft ages of the church; but their wives muft be maidens, and not widows, nor can they marry a fecond time. They celebrate mafs in Syriac, of which the greatent part of them comprehend not a word. The gofpel, alone, is read aloud in Arabic, that it may be underftood by the people. The communion is adminiftered in both kinds. The Hof is a fmall round loaf, unleavened, of the thicknefs of a finger, and fomething larger than a crown piece. On it is the impreffion of a feal, which is eaten by the prien, who cuts the remainder into fimall pieces, and, putting them into the cup, adminifters to each perfon with a fpoon, which ferves every body. Thefe priefts have not, as among us, benefices or ftated revenues; but they fublift partly on the produce of their mafies, mafies, the bounty of their hearers, and the labour of their hands. Some of them exercife trades, others cultivate a fmall piece of land; and all are induftrioully employed, for the maintenance of their families and the edification of their flock. Their poverty is recompenfed by the great refpect which is paid them. Their vanity is inceffantly flattered; whoever approaches them, whether rich or poor, great or fmall, is anxious to kifs their hands, which they fail not to prefent; nor are they pleafed that the Europeans withhold this mark of reverence, fo repugnant to our manners, though not thought humiliating by the natives, who are accuftomed to it from their infancy. In other refpects, the ceremonies of the Catholic religion are not performed more publicly, or with lefs reftraint, in Europe than in Kefraouân. Each village has its chapel and its prieft, and each chapel its bell: a thing unheard of in any other part of Turkey. The Maronites are vain of this privilege, and that they may not be deprived of it, will not fuffer a Mahometan to live among them. They affume to themflves, alfo, the privilege of wearing the [^0]Green Turban, which, except in their territories, would coft a Chriftian his life.

Italy itfelf has not more bifhops than this little corner of Syria; they here fill retain the fimplicity of the primitive ages; and may be often met on the roads, mounted on a mule, and followed by a fingle Sacriftan. The greater part of them live in convents, where their food and drefs does not differ from that of the other monks; nor does their ufual revenue exceed fifteen hundred livres, (about fixty-three pounds) which, in this country, where every article of life is cheap, enables them to live comfortably. They, 2s well as the priefts, are chofen from the clafs of monks; and are generally elected for their pre-eminence in learning, which is not difficult to acquire, fince the bulk of the monks and priefts know nothing but the catechifm and the bible. It is neverthelefs remarkable, that thefe two fubordinate claffes are more amiable in their manners, and live more edifying lives; while the bifhops and the patriarch, on the contrary, conftantly engaged in cabals, difputes of precedency, and religious diftinctions, throw the whole country into commotion. Under pretext of exercifing exercifing ecclefiaftical difcipline, according to the ancient rules of the church, they mutually excommunicate each other, and their refpective adherents; they fufpend priefts, interdict the monks, and inflict public penance on the laity; in a word, they have retained the turbulent and intriguing fpirit, which was the fcourge of the Lower Empire. The court of Rome, frequently embarraffed by their difputes, frives to pacify them, in order to preferve the only afylum of her power, remaining in thefe countries. It is not long fince flie was obliged to interpofe in a fingular affair, an account of which may give fome idea of the character of the Maronites.

About the year 1755 , there was, in the neighbourhood of the Jefuit Miffionaries, a Maronite girl, named Hendia, whofe extraordinary mode of life began to attract the attention of the people. She fafted, wore the hair-cloth, poffeffed the gift of tears; and, in a word, had all the exterior of the ancient hermits, and foon acquired a fimilar reputation. Every body confidered her as a model of piety, and many efteemed her a faint; from fuch a reputation to miracles the C 4 tranfitranfition is very cafy, and, in fact, it was foon reported that fhe worked miracles. To have a proper conception of the effects of this report, we muft not forget that the fate of mens minds, in Lebanon, is nearly the fame as in the earlieft ages. There were neither infidels therefore, nor wits, nor even doubters. Hendia availed herfelf of this enthufiafm for the completion of her defigns; and, imitating the conduct of her predeceffors in the fame career, fhe wifhed to become the foundrefs of a new order. In vain does the human heart endeavour to conceal its paifions, they are invariably the fame; nor does the conqueror differ from the monk; both are alike actuated by ambition and the luft of power; and the pride of pre-eminence diplays itfelf even in the excefs of humility. To build the convent, money was neceflary; the foundrefs follicited the pious charity of her followers, whofe contributions were io abundant as in cnable her, in a few years, to erect two vait fonc houfes, which could not have coth lefs than one hundred and twenty thoufand lives (five thoufand pounds). They are called the Kourket, and are fituated on the sidige of a hill, to the north-weft of Antoura, having to the weft a view of the fea, which is very near, and an extenfive profpeet, to the fouth, as far as the road of Bairout, which is four leagues diftant. The Kourket foon filied with monks and nuns. The Patriarch for the time being was director-general, and other employments, of various kinds, were conferred on the different priefts and candidates, to whom one of thefe houfes was allotted. Every thing fucceeded as well as could have been wihed; it is true that many of the nuns died, but this was imputed to the air, and the real caufe was not eafy to be difcovered. Hendia had reigned over her little kingdom near twenty years, when an unforefeen accident threw every thing into confufon. A factor, travelling from Damafcus to Bairout, in the fummer, was overtaken by night near this convent : the gates were fhut, the hour unfeafonable; and, as he did not wifh to give any trouble, he contented himfelf with a bed of ftraw, and laid himfelf down in the outer court, waiting the return of day. He had only flept a few hours, when a fudden noife of doors and bolts awaked him. From one of the doors came Dit three women, with fpades and flovels in their hands; who were followed by two men, bearing a long white bundle, which appeared very heavy. They proceeded towards an adjoining piece of ground, full of ftones and rubbifh, where the men depofited their load, dug a hole into which they put it, and, covering it with earth, trod it cown with their feet, after which they all returnel to the houfe. The fight of men with nuns, and this bundle thus myferion?ly buried by night, could not but furnifh matter of reflection to the traveller. Aftonifhment at firft kept him filent, but, to this, anxiety and fear fooil fucceeded; he, therefore, hafily fet off for Barout at break of day. In this town he was acquainted with a merchant, who, fome months before, had placed two of his daughters in the Kourket, with a portion of about four hundred pounds. He went in fearch of him, ftill hefitating, yet burning with impationce to relate his adventure. They feated themfelves crofs-legged, the long pipe was lighted, and coffee brought. The merchant then prosected to enquire of his vifitor concerning his journey, who anfwered, he had paffed the night near the Kourket. This produced frefh queftions, to which he replied by further particulars, and, at length, no longer able to contain himfelf, whifpered to his hof what he had feen. The merchant was greatly furprized, the circumftance of burying the bundle alarmed him: and the more he confidered it the more his uneafinefs increafed. He knew that one of his daughters was ill, and could not but remark that a great many nuns died. Tormented with there thoughts, he knows not how either to admit or reject the difmal fufpicions they occafion; he mounts his horfe, and, accompanied by a friend, they repair together to the convent, where he afks to fee his daughters;-He is told they are fick; he infifts they fhall be brought to him; this is angrily refufed: and the more he perfifts, the more peremptory is the refufal, till, his fufpicions are converted into certainty. Leaving, the convent, in an agony of defpair, he went to Dair-el-Kamar ; and laid all the circumftances before Saad, Kiaya ( $g$ ) of prince roulef, chief of the mountain. The Kiaya was greatly aftonimhed, and ordered a body of horfe to accompany him, and, if refufed
(g) The title of the minifter of thefe petty princes.
admiffion, to force the convent ; the Kadi took part with the merchant, and the affair was referred to the law; the ground where the bundle had been buried was opened, and a dead body found, which the unhappy father difcovered to be that of his youngeft daughter: the other was found confined in the convent, and almoft dead: fhe revealed a feene of fuch abominable wickednefs, as makes human nature fhudder, and to which, fhe, like her fifter, was about to fall a victim. 'The pretended faint being feized, acted her part with firmnefs; and a profecution was commenced againft the priefts and the patriarch. The enemies of the latter united to effict his ruin, in order to thare his fpoils, and he was fufpended, and depofed. The affair was removed to Rome in 15,6 , and the focicty $d v^{0}$ Propaganda, on examination, difcovered the moft infamolis fcenes of debauchery, and the moft horrible cruelties. It was proved that Hendia procured the death of the nuns, fometimes to get poffeffion of their property, at others, becaufe they would not comply with her defires: that this infamous wornan no: only communicated, but even confecrated the hof, and faid mafs: that ghe had holes urider her bed, by which perfumes were introduced at the moment fle pretended to be in extacy, and under the influence of the Holy Ghoft; that fhe had a faction who cried her up, and publifhed that fhe was the mother of God, returned upon earth, and a thoufand other extravagancies. Notwithftanding this, he retained a party powerful enough to prevent the fevere punifhment fhe merited: fhe has been fhut up in different convents, from whence fhe has frequently efcaped. In $17^{8} 3$, fhe was prefent at the vifitation of Antoura, and the brother of the Emir of the Druzes was deffrous to give her her liberty. Numbers fill believe in her fanctity; and, but for the accident of the traveller, her prefent enemies would not have doubted it. What muft we think of reputations for piety, when they may depend on fach trifling circumftances!

In the fmall country of the Miaronites, there are reckoned upwards of two hundred convents for men and women. Thefe Religious are of the order of St. Anthony, whore rules they obferve with an exactnefs which reminds sus of earlier times. The drefs of the monks is a Ituff made of brown clumfy woollen, much like that of our capuchin friars. Their faod is the fame as that of the peafants, with this exception, that they never eat flefh. They have frequent fafts, and make long prayers, day and night ; the remainder of their time is employed in cultivating the earth, or breaking the rocks to form the walls of the terraces which fupport their vineyards and mulberry plantations. Each convent has a brother fhoernaker, a-brother taylor, a brother weaver, a brother baker; in a word, an artift of every neceffary trade. We almoft always find a convent of women clofe to one of men; yet it is rare to hear of any fcandalous report. Thefe women themfelves lead a very laboriouslife, and it is this activity, doubtlefs, which fecures them againft all the mifchiefs attendant on idlenefs. So far, therefore, from being injurious to population, we may affirm that thefe convents have contributed to promote it, by increafing by culture every article in a proportion greater than its confumption. The moft remarkable of the houfes of the Maronite Monks is Koz-haia, fix hours journey to the eaft of Tripoli. There they exorcife, as in the firft ages of the church, thofe who are poffeffed with devils; for fuch perfons are

Rill to be found in thefe countries. A very few years ago, our merchants at Tripoli faw one of them who put the patience and learning of the monks to the proof: This man, to outward appearance healchy, was fubject to fudden convulfions, which threw him into a kind of madnefs, fometimes fullen, at others violent. He tore, he bit, he foamed at the mouth; his ufual expreftion was, - The fun is ny mother, lit me adore ber. The prie?s almoft drowned him with ablutions, tormented him with fafting and prayer, and, at length, as they repoited, drove out the devil; but, from the account given me by more intelligent oblervers, it appears that thofe pofiefied are no other than perfons afflified with idiotiy, madnefs, and epileplies; and it is worth remarking, that pofiefion and epilepsy are denoted by the fame Arabic word (b).

The Court of Rome, in affiliating the $\mathrm{Ma}-$ ronites, has granted tnem an Horpitium, at Rome, to which they may fend feveral of their youth, to receive a gratuitous euacation. It fhould feem that this inftitution might introduce among them the ideas and arts of Europe; but the pupils of this fchool, limited to an education purely monaftic, bring home nothing but the Italian language, which is of no ufe, and a flock of theological learning, from which as little advantage can be derived; they accordingly foon afimilate with the reft. Nor has a greater change been overated by the three or four miffionaries maintained, by the French capuchins at Gazir, Tripoli, and Bairout. Their labours confift in preaching in their church, in inftructing children in the catechifm, Thomas a Kempis, and the Pfalms, and in teaching them to read and write. Formerly the Jefuits had two miffionaries at their houfe at Antoura, and the Lazarites have now fucceeded them in their miffion. The moft valuable advantage that has refulted from thefe apoftolical labours is, that the art of writing has become more common among the Maronites, and rendered them, in this country, what the Copts are in Egypt, I mean, they are in pofieffion of all the pot: of writers, intendants, and kiayas among the Turks, and efpecially of thote among their allies and neighbours, the Druzes.
(b) Kabal and Kabat. The $K$ here is the Spaniff jota.

$[33]$

Sect. III.

> Of the Druzes.

The Druzes, or Derouz, who engaged the attention of Europe about the end of the fixteenth century, are an inconfiderable people, who, in their mode of life, form of government, language, and cuftoms, bear a ftriking refemblance to the Maronites. Religion conftitutes the principal difference between them. That of the Druzes was long a problem; but the myftery is at length unveiled, and it is now not difficult to give a tolerably accurate account of it, as well as of their origin, with which it is connected. To gain a proper idea of their hiftory, it will be neceflary to trace facts up to their firft fources.

Twenty-three years after the death of Mahomet, the difputes between Ali, his fon-inlaw, and Moaouia, Governor of Syria, occafioned the firt fchifm in the empire of the Arabs, and the two fects fubfift to this day; but, in reality, this difference related only to power ; and the Mahometans, however divided in opinion refpecting the rightful fucceffor of Vol. II, the prophet, were agreed with refpect to their dogmas (i). It was not until the following century that the perufal of Greek books in-

D the
(i) The radical caufe of this great difference was the averfion conceived againft Ali, by Ayefha, wife of Mahomet, becaufe, as it is faid, he had difcovered her infidelity to the Prophet. She never could pardon hina this indifcretion, and, after getting him three times excluded from the Califat, finding that by his intrigues he was likely to fucceed in the fourth attempt, the refolved to deftroy him by open violence. For this purpofe the excited againft him feveral Arab chiefs, and, among others, Amzrou, Governor of Egypt, and Moaouia, Governor of Syria. The latter procured himfelf to be proclaimed Calif, or Succefor, in the city of Damafcus. Ali, in order to difpofiefs him, declared war; but the impropriety of his conduct ruined his affairs. After fome hoftilities, in which the advantages were equal on both fides, he ferifhed at Koufa, by the hand of an A/faffin or Batenion. His partizans elected his fon Hofain in his place; but this young man, ill adapted to fuch difficult circumftances, was flain in a rencounter by the partifans of Moaouia. His death rendered the two fations ftill more irreconcileable. Their hatred prevented their agreeing in the expofition of the Koran. The doctors of the refpective parties took a pleafure in contradicting each other; and hence arofe the divifion of the Mahometans into two fects, who confider cach otber as heretics. The Turks follow that of Onar and Moaouih, whon they hold to be the legitimate fucceffors of the Prophet: the Perfians are followers of Ali, troduced among the Arabs a fpirit of difcuffion and controverfy, to which, till then, they were utter ftrangers. The confequence was, as might be expected, by reafoning on matters not fufceptible of demonftration, and guided by the abftract principles of an unintelligible logic, they divided into a multitude of fects and opinions. At this period, too, the civil power lof its authority, and religion, which from that derives the means of preferving its unity, fhared the fame fate, and the Mahometans now experienced what had before befallen the Chriftians. The nations which had received the religion of Mahomet, mixed with it their former abfurd notions; and the errors which had anciently prevailed over Afia, again made their appearance, though altered in their forms. The Metempfychofis, the doctrine of a good and evil principle, and the renovation after fix thoufand years, as it had been taught by Zoroafter, were again revived among the Mahometans. In this political and religious confufion, every enthufiaft became an apoftle, and every apoftle the head of a feet. No lefs than fixty of thefe were reckoned, remarkable for the numbers of their followers, all differing in fome points of faith,

$$
\mathrm{D}_{2} \quad \therefore \quad \text { and }
$$

${ }_{2}^{5} 6$

and all difavowing herefy and error. Susch was the flate of thefe countries, when, at the commencement of the eleventh century, Egypt became the theatre of one of the moft extravagant fcenes of enthufiafm and abfurdity ever recorded in hiftory. The following account is extracted from the Eaftern writers. In the year of the Hejira, 386 (A. D. 996) the third Calif, of the race of the Fatmites, called Hakem-b'amr-ellah, fucceeded to the throne of Egypt, at the age of cleven years. He was one of the moft extraordinary princes of whom hiftory has preferved the memory. He caufed the firft Califs, the companions of Mahomet, to be curfed in the mofques, and afterwards revoked the anathema: He compelled the Jews and Chriftians to abjure their religion, and then permitted them to refume it. He prohibited the making flippers for women, to prevent them from coming out of their houfes. He burnt one half of the city of Cairo for his diverfion, while his foldiers pillaged the other. Not contented with thefe extravagant actions, he forbade the pilgrimage to Mecca, fafting, and the five prayers; and at length carried his madnefs fo far as to defire to pafs for God himfelf. He ordered a regifter regifter of thofe who acknowledged him to be fo, and the number amounted to fixteen thoufand. This impious pretenfion was fupported by a falfe prophet, who came from Perfia into Egypt; which impoftor, named Mohammad-ben-Ifmael, taught that it was not neceffary to faft or pray, to practife circumcifion, to make the pilgrimage to Mecca, or obferve feftivals; that the prohibition of pork and wine was abfurd ; and that marriage between brothers and fifters, fathers and children was lawful. To ingratiate himfelf with Hakem, he maintained that this Calif was God himfelf incarnate ; and, inftead of his name Hakem-b'amr-ellab, which fignifies, governing by the order of God, he called him Hakem-b'amr-eh, governing by his own order. Unluckily for the prophet, his new god had not the power to protect him from the fury of his enemies, who flew him in a tumult, almoft in the arms of the Calif, who was himfelf mantacred foon after on Mount Mokattam, where he, as he faid, had held converfation with angels ( $k$ ).
(k) Vide El-Makin, Hift. Saracen. Lib. I.

The death of there two chiefs did not fop the progrefs of their opinions: A difciple of Mohammad-ben-Ifmael, named Hamza-benAhmud, propagated them with an indefatigable zeal in Egypt, in Paleftine, and along the coaft of Syria, as far as Sidon and Bery-. tus. His profelytes, it feems, underwent the fame fate as the Maronites; for, being perfecuted by the fect in power, they took refuge in the mountains of Lebanon, where they were better able to defend themfelves; at leaft it is certain, that, fhortly after this era, we find them eftablifhed there, and forming an independent fociety like their neighbours.

The difference of their opinions difpofes them to be enemies, but the urgent intereft of their common fafety forces them to allorv mutual toleration, and they have always appeared united, and have jointly oppofed, at different times, the Crufaders, the Sultans of Aleppo, the Mamlouks, and the Ottomans. The conqueft of Syria by the latter, made no change in their fituation. Selim I. on his return from Egypt, meditating no lefs than the conqueft of Europe, difdained to wafte his time before the rocks of Lebanon.

Soliman II. his fucceffor, inceffiantly engaged in important wars, either with the Knights of Rhodes, the Perfians, the kingdom of Yemen, the Hungarians, the Germans, or the Emperor Charles V. had no time to think of the Druzes. Emboldened by this inattention, and not content with their independance, they frequently defcended from their mountains to pillage the Turks. The Pachas in vain attempted to repel their inroads; their troops were invariably routed or repulfed. And it was not till the year I 588 that Amurath III. wearied with the complaints made to him, refolved, at all events, to reduce thefe rebels, and had the good fortune to fucceed. His general, Ibrahim Pacha, marched from Cairo, and attacked the Druzes and Maronites with fo much addrefs and vigour as to force them into their ftrong holds, the mountains. Diffenfion took place among their chiefs, of which he availed himfelf to exact a contribution of upwards of one million of piafters, and to impofe a tribute which has continued to the prefent time.

It appears that this expedition was the Epocha of a confiderable change in the conffitution of the Druzes. Till the: they had lived in a fort of anarchy, under the command of different Shaiks, or Lords. The nation was likewife divided into two factions, fuch as is to be found in all the Arab tribes, and which are diftinguifhed into the party Kaif, and the party Yamani (l). To fimplify the adminiftration, Ibrahim permitted them only one Chief, who fhould be refponfible for the tribute, and execute the office of civil magiftrate; and this governor, from the nature of his fituation, acquiring great authority, became almoft the king of the republic; but as he was always chofen from among the Druzes, a confequence followed which the Turks had not forefeen, and which was nearly fatal to their power. For the chief thus chofen, having at his difpofal the whole frength of the nation, was able to give it unanimity and energy, and it naturally turned againft the Turks; fince the Druzes, by becoming their fubjects, had not ceafed to be their enemies. They took care, however, that their attacks fhould be indirect, fo as to fave appearances, and only engaged in fecret hoftili-
(l) Thefe factions diftinguifh themfelves by the colour of their flags ; that of the Kaifis is red, that of the Yamanis white.
ties,
ties, more dangerous, perhaps, than open war.

About this time, that is, the beginning of the feventeenth century, the power of the Druzes attained its greateft height; which it owed to the talents and ambition of the celebrated Emir Faker-el-din, commonly called Fakardin. No fooner was this prince advanced to be Chief of that people than he turned his whole attention to humble the Ottoman power, and aggrandize himfelf at its expence; in this enterprize he difplayed an addrefs feldom feen among the Turks. He firft gained the confidence of the Porte, by every demonftration of loyalty and fidelity; and as the Arabs, at that time, infefted the plain of Balbek, and the countries of Sour and Acre; he made war upon them, freed the inhabitants from their depredations, and thius rendered them defirous of living under his government.

The city of Bairout was fituated advantageoufly for his defigns, as it opened a communication with foreign countries, and, among others, with the Venetians, the natural enemies of the Turks. Fakr-el-din availed himfelf of the mifconduct of the Aga, expelled led him, feized on the city, and even had the art to make a merit of this act of hortility with the Divan, by paying a more confiderable tribute. He proceeded in the fame manner at Saide, Balbek, and Sour, and, at length, about the year $16 I_{3}$, faw himfelf mafter of all the country, as far as Adjaloun and Safad. The Pachas of Tripoli and Damafcus could not fee thefe encroachments with indifference; fometimes they oppofed him with open force, though ineffectually, and fometimes endeavoured to ruin him at the Porte, by fecret infinuations; but the Emir, who maintained there his fpies and defenders, defeated every attempt.

At length, however, the Divan began to be alarmed at the progrefs of the Druzes, and made preparations for an expedition capable of crufhing them. Whether from policy or fear, Fakr-el-din did not think proper to wait this form. He had formed connections in Italy, on which he built great hopes, and determined to go in perfon to foliicit the fuccours they had promifed him ; perfuaded that his pretence would encreafe the zeal of his friends, white his abfence might appeafe the refentment of his enemies. He therefore embarked at Bairout, and, after refigning the adminiftration to his fon Ali, repaired to the court of the Medici, at Florence. The arrival of an Oriental prince in Italy, did not fail to attract the public attention. Enquiry was made into his nation, and the origin of the Druzes became popular topics of refearch. Their hiftory and religion were found to be fo little known as to leave it a matter of doubt whether they fhould be claffed with the Mahometans or Chriftians. The Crufades were called to mind, and it was foon fuggefted that a people who had taken refuge in the mountains, and were enemies to the natives, could be no other than the offfpring of the Crufaders.

This idle conceit was too favourable to Fakr-el-din for him to endeavour to difprove it: he was artful enough, on the contiary, to pretend he was related to the houfe of Lorraine; and the miffionaries and merchants, who promifed themfives a new opening for converfions and commerce, encouraged his pretcafions. When an opinion is in vogue, every one difcovers new proofs $-\perp$ of its certainty. The learned in ctymology, ftruck with the refemblance of the names, infifted, that Druzis and Dreux muit be the fame word, and, on this foundation, formed the fyftem of a pretended colony of French Crufaders, who, under the conduct of a Comte de Dreux, had formed a fettlement in Lebanon. This hypothefis, however, was compleatly overthrown, by the remark that the name of the Druzes is to be found in the Itinerary of Benjamin of Tudela, who travelled before the time of the crufades. Indeed the futility of it ought to have been fufficiently apparent, at firft, from the fingie confideration, that had they been defcended from any nation of the Franks, they muft have retained, at leaft, the traces of fome European language; for a people, retired into a feparate diftrict, and living diftinct from the natives of the country, do not lofe their language. That of the Druzes, however, is very pure Arabic, without a fingle word of European origin. The real derivation of the name of this people has been long in our poffeffion, without our knowing it. It originates from the founder of the fect of Mohammad-benIfmael, who was furnamed El-Dorzi, and not El-Darari, as it is ufually printed: the confufion of thefe two words, fo different in our writing, arifes from the figure of the two Arabic letters $r$ and $z$, which have only this difference, that the $z$ has a point over it, frequently omitted, or effaced in the manufcripts ( $m$ ).

After a flay of nine years in Italy, Faker-el-din returned to refume the government of his country. During his abfence, his fon Ali had repulfed the Turks, appeafed difcontents, and maintained affairs in tolerable good order. Nothing remained for the Emir, but to employ the knowledge he could not but have acquired, in perfecting the internal adminiftration of government, and promoting the welfare of the nation; but inftead of the ufeful and valuable arts, he wholly abandoned himfelf to the frivolous and expenfive, for which he had imbibed a paffion while in Italy. He built numerous villas; conftructed baths, and planted, gar-
( $m$ ) This difcovery is due to M. Mitchel, Dragoman, Baratairet of France, at Saide, of which place he was a native: he has written a memoir on the Druzes, of which he gave one of the two copies he had to the Chevalier de Taulès, Conful at Saide, and the other to Baron de Tott? when he was there, in 1777 , to infpect that factory.

[^1]dens; he even prefumed, without refpect to the prejudices of his country, to employ the ormaments of painting and fculpture, notwithiftanding thefe are prohibited by the Koran.

The confequences of this conduct foon manifefted themelves: the Druzes, who paid the fame tribute as in time of war, became diffatisfied. The Yamani faction were roufed; the people murmured at the expences of the prince; and the luxury he difplayed renewed the jealoufy of the Pachas. They attempted to levy greater tribute: hoftilities again commenced, and Fokr-el-din repulfed the forces of the Pachas, who took occafion, from this refiftance, to render him fufpected by the Sultan himfelf. Amurath III. incenfed that one of his fubjects fhould dare to enter into a competition with him, refolved on his deftruction ; and the Pacha of Damafcus received orders to march, with all his forces, againft Bairout, the ufual refdence of Faker-el-din; while forty galleys invefted it by fea, and cut off all communication.

The Emir, who depended on his good fortune, and fuccours from Italy, determined at firft to brave the ftorm. His fon, Ali, who commanded at Safad, was ordered to oppofe the progrefs of the Turkifh army, and in fact he bravely refifted them, notwithftanding the great difparity of his forces ; but, after two engagements, in which he had the advantage, being flain in a third attack, the face of affairs were greatly changed, and cvery thing went to ruin. Fakr-el-din, terrified at the lofs of his troops, afflifted at the death of his fon, and enfeebled by age and a voluptuous life, loft both courage and prefence of mind. He no longer faw any refource but in a peace, which he fent his fecond fon to follicit of the Turkifh Admiral, whom he attempted to feduce by prefents; but the Admiral, detaining both the prefents and the Envoy, declared he would have the prince himfelf. Fakr-el-din, intimidated, took to flight, and was purfued by the Turks, now mafters of the country. He took refuge on the fteep eminence of Niha, where they betieged him ineffectually for a whole year, when they left him at liberty: but, fhortly after, the companions of his adverfity, wearied with their fufferings, betrayed and delivered him up to the Turks, Fakr-el-din, though in the hands of his enemies, conceived hopes of pardion, and fuffered himfelf to be carried to Conftantinople, where Amurath, pleafed to behold at his feet a prince fo celebrated, at firft treated him with that benevolence which arifes from the pride of fuperiority; but foon returning to his former jealoufies, yielded to the inftigations of his courtiers, and, in one of his violent fits of paffion, ordered him to be ftrangled, about the year 163 I.

After the death of Fakr-el-din, the pofterity of that prince fill continued in poffeffion of the Government, though at the pleafure, and as vaffals, of the Turks. This family failing in the male-line at the beginning of the prefent century, the nuthority devolved, by the election of the Shaiks, on the houfe of Shelah, in which it fill continues. The only Emir of that houfe, whofe name deferves to be preferved, is the Emir Melhem, who seigned from 1740 to 1759 ; in which interval he retrieved the loffes of the Druzes, and reftored them to that confequence which they had loft by the defeat of Fakr-el-din. Towards the end of his life, about the year 1754, Melhem, wearied with the cares of Government, abdicated his authority, to live in religious retirement, after the manner of the Okkals; but the troubles that fucceeded occafioned him once more to refume the reins of government, which he held till 1759, when he died, univerfally regretted.

He left three fons, minors: the eldeft of whom ought, according to the cuftom of the country, to have fucceeded him; but, being only eleven years of age, the authority deyolved on his uncle, Manfour, agreeable to a law very general in Afia, which wills the people to be governed by a fovereign who has arrived at years of maturity. The young prince was but little fitted to maintain his pretenfions ; but a Maronite, named Sad-elKouri, to whom Melhem had entrufted his education, took this upon himfelf. Afpiring to fee his pupil a powerful prince, that he might himfelf become a powerful vifir, he made every exertion to advance his fortune. He firft retired with him to Djebail, in the Kefraouan, where the Emir Youfef poffefled large domains, and there undertook to conciliate the Maronites, by embracing every opportunity to ferve both individuals and the nation. The great revenues of his pupil, and the moderation of his expenditure, amply fur. nifhed him with the means. The farm of Vol. II.
the Kefraouan was divided between feveral Shaiks, with whom the Porte was not very well fatisfied. Sad treated for the whole with the Pacha of Tripoli, and got himfelf appointed fole Receiver. The Motoualis of the valley of Balbek had, for fome years before, made feveral encroachments on Lebanon, and the Maronites began to be alarmed at the near approach of thefe intolerant Mahometans. Sad purchafed of the Pacha of Damafcus a permiffion to make war upon them, and, in 1763, drove them out of the country. The Druzes were at that time divided into two factions ( $n$ ): Sad united his intereft with thofe who oppofed Manfour, and fecretly prepared the plot which was to raife the nephew on the ruin of the uncle.

At this period the Arab Daher, who had made himfelf mafter of Galilee, and fixed his refidence at Acre, difquieted the Porte by his progrefs and pretenfions: To oppofe him, the Divan had juft united the Pachalics of Damafcus, Saide, and Tripoli, in the hands of
(n) The party Kaif, and the party Yamani. The names borne at this day by the two families which are at the head of the Djambela, and of the Lefbeks.

Ofman and his children; and it was evident, that an open war was not very remote. Manfour, who dreaded the Turks too much to refift them, made ufe of the pot licy ufual on fuch occafions, pretending a zeal for their fervice, while he fecretly favoured their enemy. This was a fufficient motive for Sad to purfue meafures directly oppofite. He fupported the Turks againft the faction of Manfour, and manœuvred with fo much good fortune or addrefs as to depofe that Emir, in 1770, and place Youfef in his Government.

In the following year, Ali Bey declared war, and attacked Damafcus. Youfef, called on by the Turks, took part in the quarrel, but without being able to draw the Druzes from their mountains, to enter into the army of the Ottomans. Befides their natural repugnance, at all times, to make war out of their country, they were, on this occafion, too much divided at home to quit their habitations, and they had reafon to congratulate themfelves on the event. The battle of $\mathrm{Da}-$ mafcus enfued, and the Turks, as we have already feen, were compleatly routed. The Pacha of Saide, efcaping from this defeat, E 2 and
and not thinking himfelf in fafety in that town, fought an afylum even in the houfe of the Emir Youfef. The moment was unfavourable, but the face of affairs foon changed, by the flight of Mohammad Bey. The Emir, concluding that Ali Bey was dead, and not imagining that Daher was powerfulenough fingly to maintain the quarrel, declared openly. againft him. Saide was threatened with a flege, and he detached fifteen hundred men of his faction to its defence; while himfelf, in perfon, prevailing on the Druzes and Maronites to follow him, made an incurfon with turenty-five thoufand peafants into the valley of Bekaa, and, in the abrence of the Motoualis, who had joined the army of Daher, laid the whole country wafte, with fire and fword, from Balbek to Tyre.

While the Druzes, proud of this exploit, were marching in diforder towards the latter city, five hundred Motoualis, informed of what had happened, flew from Acre, enflamed with rage and defpair, and fell with fuch impetuofity on their army, as to give them a compleat overthrow. Such was the furprize and confufion of the Druzes, that imagining. themfelves attacked by Daher himfelf, and betrayed by their companions, they turned their fwords on each other as they fled. The fteep declivities of Djezin, and the pine-woods which were in the route of the fugigitives, were ftrewed with dead, but few of whom perifhed by the hands of the Motoualis.

The Emir Youref, afhamed of this defeat, efcaped to Dair-el-Kamar, and, fhortly after; attempted to take revenge; but, being again defeated in the plain between Saide and Sour, (Tyre), he was conftrained to refign, to his uncle Manfour, the ring, which, among the Druzes, is the fymbol of command. In 1773, he was reftored by a new revolution; but he could not fupport his power but at the expence of a civil war. In order, therefore, to prevent Bairout falling into the hands of the adverfe faction, he requefted the affiftance of the Turks, and demanded, of the Pacha of Damafcus, a man of fufficient abilities to defend that city. The choice fell on an adventurer, who, from his fubfequent fortune, and the part he is now ading, merits to be made known.

This man, named Ahmad, is a native of Bofnia, and fpeaks the Sclavonian as his mother tongue, as the Ragufan captains, with whom he converfes in preference to thofe of every other nation, affert. It is faid, that flying from his country at the age of fixteen, to efcape the confequences of an attempt to violate his fifter-in-law, he repaired to Conftantinople, where, deftitute of the means of procuring a fubfiftence, he fold himfelf to the flave-merchants, to be conveyed to Egypt ; and, on his arrival at Cairo, was purchafed by Ali Bey, who placed him among his Mamlouks.

Ahmad was not long in diftinguifhing himfelf by his courage and addrefs. His patron employed him on feveral occafions, in dangerous coups de main, fuch as the affafination of fuch Beys and Cachefs as he fufpected; of which commitfions he acquitted himfelf fo well as to acquire the mame of Djeza:ar, which fignifies Cut-thoont (0). With this claim to his friendfhip, he enjoyed the favour of Ali, until it was diturbed by an accident.
(0) This Djezzar is the monfler fo well diferibed by Paian de Tott, in Part IV. of b:s Micmoins. Thic Baron tranfiatis the word Djeazar, Butcher. - He was in the lifgimins of 1787 in open revelt agaim.? the Porte.

This jealous Bey having profcribed one of his benefactors, called Saleh Bey, commanded Djezzar to cut off his head. Either from humanity or fome fecret friendfhip for the devoted victim, Djezzar hefitated, and even remonftrated againft the order. But learning the next day that Mohammad Bey had exe ${ }_{7}$. cuted the commiffion, and that Ali had fpoken of him not very favourably, he thought himfelf a loft man, and, to avoid the fate of Saleh Bey, efcaped unobferved, and reached Conftantinople. He there follicited employments fuitable to his former rank, but meeting, as is ufual in capitals, with a great number of rivals, he purfued another plan, and went to feek his fortune in Syria, as a private foldier. Chance conducted him among the Druzes, where he was hofpitably entertained, even in the houfe of the Kiaya of the Emir Youfef. From thence he repaired to Damafcus, where he foon obtained the title of Aga, with a command of five pair of colours, that is to fay, of fifty men; and he was thus fituated when fortune deftined him to the Government of Bairout.

Djezzar was no fooner eftablifhed there, than he took poffeffion of it for the Turks.

$$
E_{4} \quad \text { Youref }
$$

Youfef was confounded at this proceeding. He demanded juftice at Damafcus; but find$i_{n g}$ his complaints treated with contempt, entered into a treaty with Daher, and concluded an offenfive and defenfive alliance with him, at Ras-el-aen, near to Sour. No fooner was Daher united with the Druzes than he laid fiege to Bairout, by land, whilat two Ruffian frigatcs, whofe fervice was purchafed by fix hundred purfes, cannonaded it by fea. Djezzar was compelled to fubmit to force, and, after a vigorous refiftance, gave up the city, and furrendered himfelf pritoner. Shaik Daher, charmed with his courage, and flattered with the preference he had given him in the furrender, condueted him to Acre, and fhewed him every mark of kindnefs. He even ventured to truft him with a fmall expedition into Paleftine ; but Djezzar, on approaching Jerufalem, went over to the Turks, and returned to Damafcus.

The war of Mohammad Bey breaking out, Djezzar offered his fervice to the Captain Pacha, and gamed his confidence. He accompanied him to the fiege of Acre, and that admiral having deftroyed Daher, and finding no perfon more proper than Djezzar to accomplifh the defigns of the Porte in that country, named him Pacha of Saide.

Eeing now, in confequence of this revolution, fuperior Lord to the Emir Youfef, Djezzar is mindful of injuries in proportion as he has reafon to accule himfelf of ingratitude. By a conduct truly Turkifh, feigning alternately gratitude and refentment, he is alternately on terms of difpute and reconciliation with him, continually exacing money as the price of peace, or as indemnity for war. His artifices have fucceeded fo well that, within the fpace of five years, he has extorted from the Emir four millions of French money, (above a hundred and fixty thoufand pounds), a fum the more aftonifhing as the farm of the country of the Druzes did not then amount to one hundred thoufand livres, (four thoufand peunds).

In 1784, he made war on him, depofed him, and beftowed the government on the Emir of the country of Hafbeya, named Ifinael. Youfef, having once more purchafed his favor, returned, towatds the end of the fame year, to Dair-el-Kamar, and eveil courted his confidence fo far as to wait on him at Acre, from whence nobody expected him to return, but

Djezzar

Djezzar is too cunning to fhed blood while there are any hopes of getting money: he releafed the prince, and fent him back with every mark of friendfhip. Since that period, the Porte has named him Pacha of Damafcus, where he now refides. There, ftill retaining the fovereignty of the Pachalic of Acre, and of the country of the Druzes, he has feized on Sad, the Kiaya of the Emir, and, under pretext of his being the author of the troubles, has threatened to frike off his head. The Maronites, alarmed for the fafety of this man, whom they revere, have offered nine hundred purfes for his ranfom. The Pacha demands a thoufand; and if, as will probably be the cafe, their money be exhaufted by thefe repeated contributions, woe to the prince and his minifter! on their fate depends that of many others; and, indeed, they may be faid to have deferved it, for it was the unfkilfulnefs of the one, and the ambition of the other, which, by inviting the Turks to interfere in the affairs of the Druzes, has given fo fatal a blow to the fufety and tranquillity of the nation that, in the ordinary courfe of things, it will be long before it can poffibly
poffibly recover its former profperity and power.

Let us return to the religion of the Druzes. What has been alrcady faid of the opinions of Mohammad-ben-Ilimael may be regarded as the fubfance of it. They practife nether circumcifion, nor prayers, nor fafting; they obferve neither feftivads, nor prohibitions. They drink wine, eat pork, and allow marriage between brothers and fifters, though not between fathers and children. From this we may conclude, with reaion, that the Druzes have no religion: yet, one clufs of them murt be excepted, whofe religious cuftoms are very peculiar. Thofe who compore it are to the reft of the nation what the initiated were to the profone; they affume the name of Ckkals, which means firitualifts, and beitow on the vulgar the epithet of Diabel, or iynorant ; they have various degrees of initiation, the highet orders of which require celibacy. Thefe are diftinguifhable by the White Tuban they affect to wear, as a fymbol of their purity; and. fo proud are they of this fuppofed parity, that they think themfelves fullied by even touching a profane perfon. if you cat out of their plate, or drink out of their cup, they break them; and hence the cuftom, fo general in this country, of ufing vafes, with a fort of cock, which may be drank out of without touching them with the lips. All their practices are enveloped in myfteries: their Oratories always ftand alone, and are conftantly fituated on eminences: in thefe they hold their fecret affemblies, to which women are admitted. It is pretended they perform ceremonies there in prefence of a fmall fatue refembling an ox or a calf; whence fome have pretended to prove that they are defcended from the Samaritans. But, befides that the fact is not well afcertained, the worfhip of the ox may be deduced from other fources.

They have one or two books which they conceal with the greateft care; but chance has deccived thcir jealoufy; for, in a civil war, which happened fix or feven years ago, the Emir Youfef, who is Djahel, or ignorant, found one among the pillage of one of their oratories. I am affured, by perfons who have read it, that it contains only a mytic jargon, the obfcurity of which, doubtlels, renders it valuable to adepts. ITakem Bamorellah is there fpoken of, by whom they menn God, incarnated in the perfon of the Calif. It likewife treats of another life, of a place of punifhment, and a place of happinefs, where the Okkals fhall, of courfe, be mof diftinguifhed. Several degrees of perfection are mentioned, to which they arrive by fucceffive trials. In other refpects, thefe fectaries have all the infolence, and all the fears, of fuperftition: they are not communicative, becaule they are weak; but it is probable that, were they powerful, they would be promulgators and intulerant.

The reft of the Druzes, ftrangers to this fpirit, are wholly indifferent about religious matters. The Chriftians, who live in their country, pretend that feveral of them believe in the Metempfychofis; that others worfhip the fun, moon, and ftars, all which is poffible; for, as among the Anfaria, every one; left to his own fancy, follows the opinion that pleafes him moft; and thefe opinions are thofe which prefent themfelves moft naturally to unenlightened minds. When among the Turks, they affect the exterior of Mahometans, frequent the Mofques, and perform their ablutions and prayers. Among the Maronites, they accompany them to church, church, and, like them, make ufe of holy water. Many of them, importuned by tine miffionaries, fuffer themfelves to be baptized; and, if follicited by the Turks, receive circumcifion, and conclude by dying neither Chriftians nor Mahometans; but they are not fo indifferent in matters of civil policy ( $p$ ).
( $p$ ) The above account of the Druzes correfponds exactly with the Hifterical Nemoir on that people, tranlated from the manufcript of M. Venture de Paradis, which contains extraEts from their facred books, a catechijm, Suc. The Memoir in queftion, confirms the accuracy of our Author, who had never feen it, nor was acquainted with M. Venture. The latter gentleman and M. Sugufte, a moft amiable man, and a well informed traveller in the eaf, who have juft done the tranflator the honour of a vifit, concur in beftowing the higheft commendations on the prefent work, and do not hefitate to pronounce it the moft accurate modern book that has appeared refpecting Syria and Egypt. To their culogium may be added the diftinguifhed approbation of M. de St. Prieft, the late Ambaffador of the Court of France at Conftantinople, which he has expreflied in the ftrongeft terms. T.

> EGYPT AND SYRIA.

Sect. IV.

Of the government of the Druzes.
THE Druzes, as well as the Maronites, may be divided into two claffes, the common people, and the people of eminence and property, diftinguifhed by the title of Shaiks, and Emirs, or defendants of princes. The greater part are cultivators, either as farmers or proprietors; every man lives on his inheritance, improving his mulberry-trees and vineyards; in forme diftricts they grow tobacco, cotton, and forme grain, but the quantity of the fe is inconfiderable. It appears that, at first, all the lands were, as formerly in Europe, in the hands of a fall number of families. But, to render them productive, the great proprietors were forced to fell part of them, and let leafes, which fubdivifion is become the chief source of the power of the fate, by multiplying the number of perfons interefted in the public weal: there fill exits, however, forme traces of the origin ineq:alit, which even at this day produces pernicious effects. The great property poffelfed by forme families, gives gives them too much influence in all the meafures of the nation; and their private interefts have too great weight in every public tranfaction. Their hiftory, for fome years back, affords fufficient proofs of this; fince all the civil or foreign wars in which they have been engaged have originated in the ambition and perfonal views of fome of the principal families, fuch as the Lefbeks, the Djambelats, the Ifmaels of Solyma, scc. The Shaiks of thefe houfes, who alone poffers one tenth part of the country, procured creatures by their money, and, at laft, involved all the Druzes in their difienfions. It muft be owned, however, that, pofilbly, to this conflict between contending parties the whole nation owes the good fortune of never having been enflaved by its chief.

This chief, called Hakem, or governor, alfo Emir, or Prince, is a fort of a king, or general, who unites in his own perfon the civil and military powers. His dignity is fometimes tranfinitted from father to forl, fometimes from one brother to another, and the fucceflion is determined rather by force than any certain laws. Females can in no cafe pretend to this inheritance. They are already excluded excluded from fucceffion in civil affairs, and, confequently, can ftill lefs expect it in political: in general, the Afiatic governments are too turbulent, and their adminiftration renders military talents too neceffary to admit of the fovereignty of women. Among the Druzes, the male line of any family being extinguinhed, the government devolves to him who is in poffeflion of the greateft number of fuffrages and refources. But the firft ftep is to obtain the approbation of the Turks, of whom he becomes the vaffal and tribatory. It even happens, that, not unfrequently to affert their fupremacy, they name the Hakem, contrary to the wifhes of the nation, as in the cafe of Ifmael Hafbeya, raifed to that dignity by Djezzar; but this conftraint lafts no longer than it is maintained by that violence which gave it birth. The office of the governor is to watch over the good order of the ftate, and to prevent the Emirs, Shaiks, and villages, from making war on each other; in cafe of difobedience, he may employ force. He is alfo at the head of the civil power, and names the Cadis, only, always referving to himfelf the power of life and death. He collucts the tribute, from which, he annually Vol. II.
pays to the Pachz a ftated fum. This tribute varies, in proportion as the nation renders itfelf more or lefs formidable: at the beginning of this century, it amounted to one hundred and fixty purfes, (eight thoufand three hundred and thirty pounds), but Melhem forced the Turks to reduce it to fixty. In 1784, Emir Youfef paid eighty and promifed ninety. This tribute, which is called Miri, is impofed on the mulberry-trees, vineyards, cotton, and grain. All fown land, pays in proportion to its extent; every foot of mulberrics is taxed at three Medins, or three Sols, nine Deniers, (not quite two-pence). A hundred feet of vineyard, pays a Piafter, or forty Medins, and of frefh meafurements are often made, to preferve a juft proportion. The Shaiks and Emirs have no exemption in this refpect, and it may be truly faid, they contribute to the public ftock in proportion to their fortune. The collection is made almoft without expence. Each man pays his contingent at Dair-el-Kamer, if he pleafes, or to the collectors of the prince, who make a circuit round the country, after the crop of filks. The furplus of this tribute is for the prince, fo that it is his intereft to reduce the demands of the Turks, as it would be likewife to augment the impoft; but this meafure requires the fanction of the Shaiks, who have the privilege of oppofing it. Their confent is neceffary, likewife, for peace and war. In there cafes, the Emir muft convoke general affemblies, and lay before them the ftate of his affairs. There, every Shaik, and every Peafant, who has any reputation for courage or underftanding, is entitled to give his fuffrage, fo that this government may be confidered as a well-proportioned mixture of monarchy, ariftocracy, and democracy. Every thing depends on circumftances: if the governor be a man of ability, he is abfolute; if weak, a cypher. This proceeds from the want of fixed laws; a want common to all Afia, and the radical caufe of all the difo.ders in the governments of the Afiatic nations.

Neither the chicf, nor the individual Emirs, maintain troops; they have only perfons attached to the domeftic fervice of their houfes, and a few black flaves. When the nation makes war, every man, whether Shaik or Peafant, able to bear arms, is called upon to march. He takes with him a little bag of

$$
\mathrm{F}_{2} \text { flour, }
$$

flour, a mufket, fome bullets, a finall quantity of powder, made in his village, and icpairs to the rendezvous appointed by the governor. If it be a civil war, as fometimes happens, the fervants, the farmers, and their friends, take uparms for their patron, or the chief of their family, and repair to his fandard. In fuch cafes, the parties irritated, frequently feem on the point of procesting to the laft extremities; but they feldom have recourfe to acts of violence, or attempt the death of each other; mediators always interpofe, and the quarrel is appeafed the more readily as each patron is ubligel to provide his followers with provifions and ammunition. This fyltem, which produces happy effeets in civil troubles, is attended with great inconvenience in foreign wars, as fufficiently anpeared in that of $17^{8} 4$. Djezzar, who knew that the whole army lived at the expence of the Emir Youlef, aimed at nothing but delay, and the Diuzes, who were not difpleafed at being fed for doing nothing, prolonged the operations; but the Emir, wearied of paying, concluded a treaty, the terms of which were not a little rigorous for him, and eventually for the whole nation, fince nothing is more certain than tinat the interefts of a prince and his fubjects are always infeparable.

The ceremonies to which I have been a witnefs on thefe occafions, bar a friking refemblance to the cuftoms of ancient times. When the Emir and the Shaiks had determined on war, at Dair-el-Kamar, cryers in the evening, afcended the fummits of the mountain; and there began to cry with a loud voice: To wear, to warr; take your gans, take your fifio's: noble Sbaiks, mount your borfes; arms yourfelves with the lance and fabre; rendezuous to-morrow at Dair-el-Kamar. Zeal of God! zeal of combats! This fummons heard from the neighbouring villages, was repeated there, and, as the whole country is nothing but a chain of lofty mountains, and deep vallies, the proclamation pafied in a few hours to the frontiers. Thele voices, from the ftillnefs of the night, the long refounding echoes, and the nature of the fubject, had fomething awful and terrible in their effect. Three days after, fifteen thoufand armed men rendezvouzed at Dair-ci-Kamar, and operations might have been immediately commenced.

We may eafily imagine that troops of this kind no way refemble our European foldiers; they have neither uniforms, nor difcipline, nor order. They are a crowd of peafants with fhort coats, naked legs, and mufkets in their hands; differing from the Turks and Mamlouks, in that they are all foot; the Shaiks and Emirs alone having horfes, which are of little ufe from the rugged nature of the country. War there can only be a war of pofts. The Druzes never rifk themfelves in the plain, and with reafon, for they would be unable to ftand the fhock of cavalry, having no bayonets to their mufkets. Their whole art confifts in climbing rocks, creeping among the buhes and blocks of ftone, from whence their fire is the more dangerous; as they are covered, fire at their eafe, and by hunting, and military frotts, have acquired the habit of hiting a mark with great dexterity. They are accuftomed to fudden inroads, attacks by night, ambufcades, aind all thofe coups de main, which require to fall fuddenly on, and come to clofe fight with the enemy. Aident in improving their fuccefs, eafily difpirited, and prompt to refume their courage; daringeven to temerity, and fometimes ferocious, they poffefs above all, two qualities effential to the excellency of any troops; they ftrictly obey their leaders, and are endowed with a temperance and vigour of health, at this day unknown to moft civilized nations. In the campaign of 1784 , they paffed three months in the open air, without tents, or any other covering than a fheep-fkin; yet were there not more deaths or maladies than if they had remained in their houfes. Their provifions confifted, as at other times, of fmall loaves baked on the ahhes, or on a brick, raw onions, cheefe, olives, fruits, and a little wine. The table of the chiefs was almoft as frugal, and we may affirm, that they fubfifted a hundred days, on what the fame number of Englifhmen or Frenchmen would not have lived ten. They have no knowledge of the fcience of fortification, the management of artillery, or encampments, nor, in a word, any thing which conftitutes the art of war. But, had they among them a few perfons verfed in military fcience, they would readily acquire its principles, and become a formidable foldiery. This would be the more eafily effected, as their mulberry plantations and vineyards do not occupy them all the year, and they could afford much time for military exercifes ( $p$ ).

$$
\mathrm{F}_{4} \quad \text { vineyards }
$$

By the laft eftimates, it appears the number of men able to bear arms was forty thoufand, which fuppofes a total population of a hundred and twenty thoufand: no addition is to be made to this calculation, fince there are no Druzes in the cities or on the coaft. As the whole country contains only one hundred and ten fquare leagues, there refults for every league, one thoufand and ninety perfons; which is equal to the population of our richeft provinces. To render this more remarkable, it muf be obferved that the foil is not fertile, that a great many eminences remain uncultivated, that they do not grow corn enough to fupport themfelves three months in the year, that they have no manufactures, and that all their exportations are confined to filks and cottons, the balance of which exceeds very little the importation of corn from the Hauran, the oils of Paleftine, and the rice ( $p$ ) In this leifure time, when the crop of filk is over in Le'banon, a great many Peafants, like our inhabitants of the Limoufin, leave the mountains to get in the harvefts in the plains.
and coffee tiney procure from Bairout.Whence arifes then fuch a number of inhabitants, within fo fmall a fpace? I can difcover no other caufe, than that ray of liberty which glimmers in this country. Unlike the Turks, every man lives in a perfect fecurity of his life and property. The peafant is not richer than in other countries; but he is free, " he fears not," as I have often heard them fay, " that the Agra, the Kaimma"kam, or the Pacha, fhould fend their "Djendis (q), to pillage his houfe, carry off " his family, or give him the baftinado." Such oppreffions are unknown among thefe mountains. Security, therefore, has been the original caufe of population, from that inherent defire which all men have to multiply themfelves wherever they find an eafy fubfiftence. The frugality of the nation, which is content with little, has been a fecondary, and not lefs powerful reafon; and a third, is the emigration of a number of Chriftian families, who daily defert the Turkifi provinces to fettle in Mount Lebanon, where they are received with open arms by the
(q) Soldiers,

Maronites,

Maronites, from fimilarity of religion, and by the Druzes from principles of toleration, and a conviction how much it is the intereft of every country to multiply the number of its cultivators, confumers, and allies. They all live quietly together; but I cannot help adding, that the Chriftians frequently difplay an indifcreet and meddling zeal, too well calculated to difturb this tranquillity.

The comparifon, which the Druzes often have an opportunity of making, between their fituation and that of other fubjects of the Turkinh Government has given them an advantageous opinion of their fuperiority, which, by a natural effect, has an influence on their perfonal character. Exempt from the violence and infults of defpotifm, they confider themfelves as more perfect than their neighbours, becaufe they have the good fortune not to be equally debafed. Hence they acquire a character more elevated, encrgetic, and active; in fhort, a genuine republican fpirit. They are confidered throughout the Levant as refllefs, enterprifing, hardy, and brave even to temerity. Only three hundred of them have been feen to enter Damafcus in open day, and fpread around them terror and carnage. It is remarkable, that though their form of Government is nearly fimilar, the Maronites do not poffefs thefe qualities to the fame degree. Enquiring the reafon, one day, in a company where this obfervation was made, in confequence of fome recent events, an old Maronite, after a moment's filence, taking his pipe from his mouth, and curling his beard round his fingers, made anfwer, "Perhaps the Druzes would be more afraid " of death, did they believe in a future ftate." Nor are they great preachers of that morality which confifts in pardoning injuries. No people are more nice than they with refpect to the point of honour: Any offence of that kind, or open infult, is inftantly punifhed by blows of the kandjur or the muket; while among the inhabitants of the towns, it only excites injurious retorts. This delicacy has occafioned in their manners and difcourfe, a referve, or, if you will, a politenefs, which one is aftonifhed to difcover among peafants. It is carried even to diffimulation and falfehood, efpecially among the chiefs, whofe greater interefts demand greater attentions. Circumfpection is neceffary to all, from the formidable confequences of that retaliation of which I have fpoken. Thefe cuftoms may appear barbarous to us; but they have the merit of fupplying the deficiency of regular juftice, which is neceffarily tedious and uncertain in thefe diforderly and almoft anarchical Governments.

F6 TRAVELSIN

The Druzes have another point of honour: that of hofpitality. Whoever prefents himfelf at their door in the quality of a fuppliant or paffenger, is fure of being entertained with lodging and food, in the moft generous and unaffected manner. I have often feen the loweft peafants give the laft morfel of bread they had in their houfes to the hungry traveller; and when I obferved to them that they wanted prudence, their anfwer was: s God is liberal and great, and all men are " brethren." There are, therefore, no inns in this country, any more than in the reft of Turkcy. When they have once contracted with their guef, the facred engagement of hicad and falt, no fubfequent event can make them violate it: Various inftances of this are related, which do honour to their character. A few years ago, an Aga of the Janiffaries, having been engaged in a rebellion, fled from Damafus, and retired among the Druzes. The Pacha was informed of this, and demanded him of the Emir, threatening to make war on him in cafe of refufal. The Emir demanded him of the Shaik Talhouk, who had received him; but the indignant Shaik replied, "When have you known the " Druzes deliver up their guefts? Tell the "Emir, that, as long as Talhouk hall pre" ferve his beard, not a hair of the head of " his fuppliant hall fall!" The Emir threatened him with force; Talhouk armed his family. The Emir, dreading a revolt, adopted a method practifed as juridical in that country. He declared to the Shaik, that he would cut down fifty mulberry-trees a day, until he fhould give up the Aga. He proceeded as far as a thoufand, and Talhouk ftill remained inflexible. At length, the other Shaiks, enraged, took up the quarrel, and the commotion was about to become general, when the Aga, reproaching himelf with being the caure of fo much mifchief, made his efcape, without the knowledge even of Talhouk ( $r$ ).

The
(r) I have found in an Arabic manufcript, another anecdote, which, though foreign to my prefent fubject, I think too excelient to be omitted.

The Druzes have alfo the prejudices of the Bedouins refpecting birth; like them, they pay great refpect to the antiquity of families ; but this produces no effential inconveniencies. The nobility of the Emirs and Shaiks does not exempt them from paying tribute, in proportion to their revenues. It confers on them no prerogatives, either in the attainment of landed property, or public employments. In this country, no more than in all Turkey, are

[^2]are they acquainted with game-laws, or glebes, or feigniorial, or eccleliaftical tithes, franc fiefs or alienation fines; every thing is held, as I have faid, in freehold: Every man, after paying his miri and his rent, is mafter of his property. In fhort, by a particular privilege, the Druzes and Maronites pay no fine for their fucceffion; nor does the Emir, like the Sultan, arrogate to himfelf original and uni-

* fearching for him to retaliate...-Then I knew, faid Ibra" him, that God had purpofely conducted me to that " place; I adored his decree, and, refigning myfelf to "death, I anfwered,---God has determined to avenge thee, " offended man; thy victim is at thy feet. The rich man, " aftonifhed, replied, .--O! Itranger! I fee thy misfortunes " have made thee weary of life; thou feekeft to lofe it, " but my hand cannot commit fuch a crime..--I do not " deceive thee, faid Ibrahim; thy father was fuch a one; " we met each other in fuch a place, and the affair hap"pened in fuch and fuch a manner." A violent trembling then feized the rich man; his teeth chattered as if from intenfe cold; his eyes alternately fparkled with fury, and overflowed with tears. In this agitation, he remained a long time; at length, turning to Ibrahim---Tomorrow, faid he, deftiny fhall join thee to my father, and God will have retaliated.' But as for me, how can I violate the afylum of my houfe? Wretched ftranger, fly from my prefence! There, take thefe hundred fequins: Begone quickly, and let me never bchold thee more! verfal property : there exifts, neverthelefs, in the law of inheritance, an imperfection which produces difagreeable effects. Fathers have, as in the Roman law, the power of preferring fuch of their children as they think proper; hence it has happened, in feveral families of the Shaiks, that the whole property has centered in the fame perfon, who has perverted it to the purpofe of intriguing and caballing, while his relations remain, as they well exprefs it, princes of olives and cheere; that is to fay, poor as peafants.

In confequence of their prejudices, the Druzes do not choofe to make alliances out of their own families. They invariably prefer their relation, though poor, to a rich ftranger; and poor peafants have been known to refufe their daughters to merchants of Saide and Bairout, who poffefed from twelve to fifteen thoufand piaftres. They obferve alfo, to a certaia degree, the cufom of the Hebrews, which direted that a brother fhould efpoule his brother's widow; but this is not peculiar to them, for they retain that as well as feveral other cuftoms of that ancient people, in common with other inhabitants of Syria, and all the Arab tribes.

In fhort, the proper and diftinctive character of the Druzes, is, as I have faid, a fort of republican fpirit, which gives them more energy than any other fubjects of the Turkifh Government, and an indifference for religion, which forms a ftriking contraft with the zeal of the Mahometans and Chritians. In other refpects, their private life, their cuftoms and prejudices, are the fame with other Orientals. They may marry feveral wives, and repudiate them when they chufe; but, except by the Emir and a few men of eminence, that is rarely practifed. Occupied with their rural labours, they experience neither artificial wants, nor thofe inordinate paffions, which are produced by the idlenefs of the inla bitants of cities and towns. The veil, worn by their women, is of itflif a prefervative againt thofe defires which are the occafion of fo many evils in fociety. No man knows the face of any other woman than his wife, his mother, his fifter, and fifters-in-law. Every man lives in the bofom of his own family, and goes little abroad. The women, thofe even of the Shaiks, make the bread, roaft the coffee, wafh the linen, cook the victuals, and perform all domeftic offices. The men cultivate their lands and vineyards, and dig canals for watering them. In the evening they fometimes affemble in the court, the area, or houfe of the chief of the village or family. There, feated in a circle, with legs crofled, pipes in their mouths, and poniards at their belts, they difcourfe of their various labours, the fearcity or plenty of their harvefts, peace or war, the conduct of the Emir, or the amount of the taxes; they relate paft tranfactions, difcufs prefent interefts, and form conjectures on the future. Their children, tired with play, come frequently to liften; and a Atranger is furprifed to hear them, at ten or twelve years old, recounting, with a ferious air, why Djezzar declared war againft the Emir Youfef, how many purfes it coft that prince, what augmentation there will be of the miri, how many mufkets there were in the camp, and who had the beet mare. This is their only education. They are neither taught to read the Pfalms, as among the Maronites, nor the Koran, like the Mahometans; hardly do the Shaiks know how to write a letter. Buat if their mind be deftitute of ufeful or agreeable information, at leaft, it is not pre-occupied by falfe and turtful ideas; and,

Yol. If. $\dot{x}$ lands
EGYPT AND SYRIA.
without doubt, fuch natural ignorance is well worth all our artificial folly. This advantage refults from it, that their underftandings being nearly on a level, the inequality of conditions is lefs perceptible. For, in fact, we do not perceive among the Druzes that great diffance which, in moft other focieties, degrades the inferior, witheut contributing to the advantage of the great. All, whether Shaiks or peafants, treat each other with that rational familiarity, which is equally remote from rudenefs and fervility. The Grand Emir, himielf, is not a different man from the reft: he is a good country gentleman, who does not difdain admitting to his table the meaneft farmer. In a word, their manners are thofe of ancient times, and that ruftic life, which marks the origin of every nation; and prove the people among whom they are ftill found are, as yet, only in the infancy of the focial fate.
SECT. IV.

Of the Motoualis.

TO the eaft of the country of the Druzes, in the deep valley which feparates their mountains from thofe of Damafcus, we find another fmall nation, known in Syria by the name of Motoualis. The characterinic difinction between them and the other inhabitants of Syria, is, that they, like the Perfians, are of the fect of Ali; while all the Turks follow that of Omar or Mononia. This diftinetion, occafioned by the fchifm, which, in the thirty-fixth year of the Hejira, arofe among the Arabs, refpecting the fucceffors of Mahomet, is the caufe, as I have already obferved, of an irreconcilcuble hatred between the two parties. The fectnries of Omar, who conider themfelves as the only orthodox, affume the tirle of Soinites, which has that fignification, and term their adverfaries Shites, that is Sectaries, (of Ali). The word Motouli has the fame meaning in the dialect of Syria. The followers of Ali, diffistisfied diffatisfied with this name, fubftitute that of Adlicr, which means afferters of fuflice, literally Jupliciarians, a denomination which they have artumed in confequence of a doctrinal point they advance in oppofition to the Sonnite faith. A fmall Arabic treatife, entitled, Theological Fragments concerning the Sects and Religions of the World (s), has the following paffage.
"Thole fectaries who pretend that God " acts only on principles of juttice, conform" able to human reafon, are called Adlia, or "Junticiarians. God cannot, fay they, com" mand an impracticable worfhip, nor or" dain impoffible actions, nor enjoin men to " perform what is beyond their ability; but " wherever he requires obedience, will be" flow the power to obey. He removes the "caufe of evil, he allows us to reafon, and " impofes only what is eafy, not what is dif" ficult; he makes no man refponfible for " the actions of another, nor punifhes him " for that in which he has no part; he im" putes not as a crime what himfolf has "created in man; nor does he require " him to avoid what deftiny has decreed.
(s) Abarat el Motkallamin fi mazaheb our Diannat el Donia.
"This would be injuftice and tyranny, of " which God is incapable from the perfec" tion of his being." To this doctrine, which diametrically oppofes the fyftem of the Sonnites, the Motoualis add certain ceremonies which increafe their mutual averfion. They curfe Omar and Moaouia as rebels and ufurpers; and celebrate Ali and Hofain as faints and martyrs. They begin their ablutions at the elbow, inftead of the end of the finger, as is cuftomary with the Turks; they think themfelves defiled by the touch of frangers, and, contrary to the general practice of the Eaft, neither eat nor drink out of a veffel which has been t:fed by a perfon not of their fect, nor will they even it with fuch at the fame table.

Thefe doctrines and cuftoms, by feparating the Motoualis from their neighbours, have rendered them a diftinct fociery. It is faid, they have long exifted as a nation, in this country, though their name has never been mentioned by any European writer before the prefent century; it is not even to be found in the maps of Donville: La Roque, who left their comntry not a hundred years ago, gives them the name of Airidiens. Be this as it may, in later times, their wars, robberics, fuccefs, and various changes of fortune, have rendered them of confequence in Syria. Till about the middle of this century, they only poffefled Balbek, their capital, and a few places in the valley, and Anti Lebanon, which feems to have been their original country. At that period, we find them under a like government with the Druzes, that is to fay, under a number of Shaiks, with one principal chief, of the family of Harfourh. After the year 1750, they eftablifhed themfelves among the heights of Bekaa, and got footing in Lebanon, where they obtained lands belonging to the Maronites, almoft as far as Befharrai. They even incommoded them fo much by their ravages, as to oblige the Emir Youfef to attack them with open force, and expel them; but on the other fide, they advanced along the river, even to the neighbourhood of Sour; (Tyre). In this fituation, Shaik Daher had the addrefs, in 1760 , to attach them to his party. The Pachas of Saide and Damafcus claimed tributes, which they had neglected paying, and complained of feveral robberies committed on their fubjects by the Motoualis; they were defirous of chaftifing them, but this vengeance was neither certain nor eafy, Daher interpofed, and, by becoming fecurity for the tribute, and promieng to prevent any depredations, acquired allies who were able, as it is faid, to arm ten thoufand horfemen, all refolute and formidable troops. Shortly after, they took pofieffion of Sour, and made this village their principal fea-port. In 1771, they were of great icrvice to Ali Bey and Daher, againft the Ottomans. But Emir Youfef, having, in their abfence, armed the Druzes, ravaged their country. He was befieging the caftle of Djezin, when the Motoualis, rcturning from Damafcus, reccived inteliogence of this invafion. At the relation of the barbarities committed by the Druzes, an advanced corps, of only five hundred men, were fo enraged, that they immediately rufhed forward a mainf the enemy, determined to perifh in taking vengeance. But the furprize and confution they occafioned, and the difcord which reigned between the two factions of Mranfour and youfef, fo much favoured this defperate attack, that the whole amy, confifting of twenty-five thouland men, was compierely owerthrown.

In the following year, the affuirs of Daher taking a favourable turn, the zeal of the Motoualis

Motoualis cooled towards him, and they finally abandoned him in the cataftrophe in which he loft his life. But they have fuffered for their imprudence, under the adminiftration of the Pacha who fucceeded him. Since the year 1777, Djezzar, mafter of Acre and Saide, has inceflantly laboured to deftroy them. His perfecution forced them, in $17^{8} 4$, to a reconciliation with the Druzes, and to enter into an alliance with the Emir Youfef. Though reduced to lefs than feven hundred armed men, they did more in that campaign than fifteen or twenty thoufand Druzes and Mavonites, affembled at Dair-el-Kamar. They alone took the ftrong fortrefs of Mar-Djebaa, and put to the fword fifty or fixty Arnauts ( $t$ ), who defended it. But the mifunderfanding which prevailed among the chiefs of the Druzes having rendered abortive all their operations, the Pacha has obtained poffeflion of the whole valley, and the city of Balbels itfelf. At this period, not more than five hundred families of the Motoualis remained, who took refuge in Anti-Lebanon, and the Lebanon of the Maronites; and, driven as they now are from their native foil, it is probable they will be totally anizihilated, and even their very name become extinct.
(t) The name given by the Turks to the Macedonian and Epirot foldiers.

Such are the different people comprized within the limits of Syria. The remainder of the inhabitants, who are conniderably the moft numerous, are, as I have faid, compofed of Turks, Greeks, and Arabs. It now remains for me to give a fketch of the divifions of the country, ander the Turkifh adminiftration, and to add a few general reflexions on its forces and revenues, its form of government, and the characters and manners of its inhabitants.

But before I proceed to thefe particulars, it may be proper to give fome idea of the commotions, which, in our days, were on the point of producing an important revolution, and erecting an independent power in Syria; I mean the infurrection of Shaik Daher, who for many years attracted the attention of Politicians. A fuccinct narrative of his hiftory muft be the more interelting as it is new, and as the accounts we have feen in the Gazettes of Europe are ill calculated to furnifh a juit iden of the real fate of affairs in thece dinant comentrics.

C H A P. XXV.

Summary of the hititory of Daber, fon of Omer, who governed at Acre from 1750 to 177 b.

SHAIK Daher, who, in our time, has given fo much trouble to the Porte, was an Arabian by birth, decended from one of thore tribes of Bedouins who ufually encamp on the banks of the Jordan, and the environs of Lake Tabaria, (the ancient Tiberias). His cnemies are fond of reminding us that in his youth he was a camel driver; but this circumftance, which does honour to his abilities, by fuggefting the difficulties he muft have encountered in his rife, has betides in this country nothing incompatible with a diftinguifhed birth: it is now, and always will be, ufual with the Arab princes, to employ themfelves in occupations which appear to us: mean. Thus I have already obferved that. the Shaiks themfelves guide their camels, and look after their horfes, while their wives and daughters grind the corn, bake the bread, wafl the linen, and fetch water, as in the times of Abraham, and Homer; and this fimple and laburious life, poffibly, contributes more to happinefs than that liftlefs inactivity, and fatiating luxury which furround the great in polifhed nations. As for Daher, it is certain that he was of one of the mont powerful families of the country. After the death of his fatier Omar, about the beginning of the prefent century, he divided the govermment with his uncle and two brothers. His domain was Safad, a fmall town and ftronghold in the momntains, to the north-weft of the Lake of Tabaria, to which he Mortly after added Tabaria itfelf. There Pocock (u) found him in 1737, occupied in fortifying. himelf againft the Pacha of Damafcus, who, not long before, had ftrangled one of his brothers. In 1742, another Pacha, named Soliman-el-adm, befiegcé him there, and bombarded the place, to the great aftonihment of all Syria, where bombs are but little knorvn, cren at prefent ( $x$ ). In fipite of his courage, Daher was reduced to the laft extremity; when a fortunate, and, as it is alledged, pre-(ii) Pocoche's Travels, vol. ii. p. 6 g.
( $x$ ) Thave feenletters of M. Jean jofeph Biane, a mer chatit of Acre, who was i:n Soliman's ca mp at this time, in whicha circumfantial account is given of his affar.
meditated
meditated incident, relieved him from his embarrafment. A viclent and fudden cholic carried off Solinaan in two days. A fad-el-adm, his brother and fucceffor, wanted either the fame motives, or the fame inclinations, to continue the war, and Daher was unmolefted on the part of the Ottomans. But his activity, and the intrigues of his neighbours, foon gave him other employment. Reafons of intereft embroiled him with his uncle and brother, recourfe was had to arms more than once, and Daher, always victorious, thought it beft to conclude thefe difputes by the death of his competitors.

Invefted then with the whole power of his family, and abfolute mafer of its force, new profpects opened to his ambition. The commerce in which he engaged, according to the cuftom of all the Afiatic princes and governors, made him fenfible of the advantage of an immediate communication with the fea. He conceived that a port in his hands would become a public market, to which ftrangers reforting, a competition would arife favourable to the fale of his commodities. Acre, fituated in his neighbourhood, and under his eye, was fuited to his defigns, fince for feveral years he had tranfacted bufinefs there with the French factors. This town was in reality but a heap of ruins, a miferable open village, without defence. The Pacha of Saide maintained there an $\mathrm{Ag}_{\mathrm{g}}$, and a few foldiers who dared not fhew themfelves in the field; while the Bedouins reaily governed, and were mafters of all the country, up to its very gates. The plain, fo fertile in former times, was nothing but an extenfive wafte, on which the waters ftagnated, and infected the environs by their vapours. The ancient harbour was choaked u:p, but the road of Haifa, which is dependant on it, was fo advantageoully fituated that Daher determined to gain pofieflion of it. A pretext was neceffary, which was foon furnifhed by the conduct of the Aga.

One day, while fome warlike fores, intended to be imployed againt the Shaik, were landing, Daher marched brikly towards Acie, fent a menacing letter to the Aga, which made him take to fight, and en tered the town, where he eftablifhed himfelf, withont refitance: this happened about the yoar 174.0. He was then fixty-tinec years old. This age feems rather too advanced for fuch enterprizes; but when we recollect, chat, in 1775 , at near ninety, he fill boldly mounted a fiery fteed, it is evident he was much younger than that age ufually implics. So bold a meafure could not pafs unnoticed; this he forefaw, therefore infantly difpatched a letter to the Pacha of Saide, reprefenting to him that the affair was entirely perfonal between him and the Ara, and protefting that he was not lefs the very fubmifive fubject of the Sultan, and the Pacha; that he would pay the tribute of the diftrict he now occupied, as had been done heretofore by the Aga; and would undertake befides to reftrain the Arabs, and do every thing in his power to reftore this ruined country. This application, backed by a few thoufand Sequins, produced its effect in the Divans of Saide, and Conftantinople: his reafors were acknowledged jurt, and all his demands granted.

Not that the Porte was the dupe of the proteftations of Daher; it is too much accaftomed to fuch proceedings to miftake them; but it is a maxim with the Turks, not to keep their vaffals in too ftrict an obedience; they have long been convinced, that were they to make war with all rebels, it would be an endlefs labour, and occafion a vaft confumption of men and money; without reckoning the rifk of frequent defeats, and the confequent encouragement to revolt. There plan therefore, is to be patient; temporize ( $y$ ); and excite the neighbours, relations, and children of the revolters againft them; and, fooner, or later, the rebels, who uniformly follow the fame feps, fuffer the fame fate, and end by enriching the Sultan with their fpoils.

Daher, on his part, well knew the real value of this apparent friendhip. Acre, which he intended for his refidence, was deftitute of defence, and might eafily be furprized, either by fea or land; he determined therefore to fortify it. In the year 1750, under pretext of building himfelf a houfe, he erected, on the northern angle towards the fea, a palace, which he provided with cannon. He then built feveral towers for the defence of the fort, and enclofed the town by a wall, in which he leit only two gates.
(j) The Arabs, in reference to this, have a fingular proverb, which admirably pairats this condult: "The Ofmanli, " lay they, catch hares with waggons."

There

Thefe by the Turks were imagined very formidable works, though they would be laughed at in Europe. The palace of Daher, with its lofty and flight walls, its narrow ditch, and antique turrets, is incapable of the fmalleft refiftance: four field pieces would demolifl, in two difcharges, both the walls and the wretched cannon mounted on them, at the height of fifty feet. The wall of the town is ftill more feeble; it has neither fofié, nor rampart, and is not three feet thick. Through all this part of Afia, baftions, lines of defence, covered ways, ramparts, and, in fhort, every thing relative to modern fortification, are utterly unknown. A fingle thirty gun frigate would, without difficulty, bombard and lay in ruins the whole coaft: but, as this ignorance is common both to the affailants and defendants, the balance remains equal.

After thefe precautions, Daher occupied himfelf in effecting fuch a reformation in the country as fhould augment his power. The Arabs of Saker, Muzaina, and other neighbouring tribes, had caufed a defertion of the Peafants, by their inroads and devaftations: he undertook to repel them; and by alter-

[^3]nately employing prayers and menaces, profents and arms, he reftored fecurity to the hubandman, who might now fow his corn, without fear of feeing the harveft deftroyed, or carried off by robbers. The excellence of the foil attracted cultivators, but the certainty of fecurity, that bleffing fo precious to thofe who have lived in a ftate of continual alarm, was a ftill ftronger inducement. The fame of Daher fpread through Syria, and Mahometan and Chrifian farmers, every where defpoiled and harraficd, took refuge, in great numbers, with a prince under whom they were fure to find both civil and religious tolcration. A colony of Greeks emigrated from Cyprus, now nearly defolated, by the oppreffions of the governor, the infurrections they produced, and the cruclty with whick Kior Facha expiated fuch offences ( $\approx$ ). To thefe, Daher affigned a fpot of ground, under the walis of Acre, which they laid out into pardens. The Europeans, who found a ready fole for their merchandize, formed numerous fettlements; the lands were cleared, the waters drained, the air became purer, and the country at once falubrious and pleafant.
(z) When Kior Pacha came to Cyprus, he precinitated a number of the revolters, from the tops of the walls, upon iron hool:c, whene they remained fufpended, till they expired in d.cadful iorments.

To ftrengthen himfelf ftill more, Daher renewed his alliances with the great tribes of the defert, among whom he had difpofed of his children in marriage. This policy had feveral advantages; for, in them, he fecured an inviolable afylim, in cafe of accidents; by this means, alfo, he kept in check the Pacha of Damafcus, and procured excellent horfes, of which he was always paffionately fond. He courted, therefore, the Shaiks of Anaza, of Sardia, and Saker. Then, for the firft time, were feen in Acre, thofe little dry and parched men, unufual, even to the Syrians. He furnifhed them with arms and cloathing: and the defert, alfo, for the firft time, beheld men in clofe dreffes, and armed with mulkets and piftols, inftead of bows and match-lock-guns.

For fome years, the Pachas of Said and Damafcus had been incommoded by the Motoualis, who pillaged their lands, and refufed their tribute. Daher, fenfible of the advantage to be made of thefe allies, firft inH 2 terpofed terpofed as mediator, and, afterwards, in order to accommodate the parties, offered to become fecurity for the Motomalis, and pay their tribute. The Pachas accepted this propofal, which rendered their revenues certain, and Daher was content with the bargain he had made, fince he had fecured the friendinip of a people who could bring ten thoufand horfe into the field.

The Shaik, however, did not peaceably enjoy the fruit of his labours; fince he ftill had to fear the attacks of a jealous fuperior, and his power was haken at home, by domeftic enemies, almoft as dangerous. Agreeable to the wretched policy of the eaft, he had beftowed feparate governments on his fons, and placed them at a diftance from him, in countries which were fufficient for their maintenance. From this arrangement it followed, that thefe Shaiks, feeing themfelves the children of a great prince, wifhed to fupport a fuitable fate, fo that their revcoues foon fell fhort of their expences. Their fubjects were opprefied by them and their agents, and complaints were made to Daher, who reprimanded them; and court flatterers irsitating both parties, a quarrel was the confequence,

Sequence, and war broke out between the father and his children. The brothers, too, frequently quarrelled with each other, which was another caufe of war. Befides, the Shaik was growing old, and his fons, who confidered him as having arrived at the ufual limits of human life, longed to anticipate the fucceffion. He muft neceffarily leave a principal heir to his titles and power; each. thought himfelf entitled to the preference, and this competition furnifhed a frefh fubject of jealoufy and diffention. From motives of narrow and contemptible policy, Daher fomented the difcord; this might indeed produce the effect of keeping his foldiery in exercife, and inuring them to war; but, befides that it was productive of numberlefs diforders, it had the farther inconvenience of caufing a diffipation of treafure, which obliged him to have recourfe to ruinous expedients: the cuftom-houfe duties were augmented, and commerce, oppreffed, loft its activity. Thefe civil wars, befides, were deftructive to agriculture, which cannot be injured, without the confequences being always fenfibly felt, in a ftate fo limited as the fmall teritories of Daher.

Nor did the Divan of Confantinople behold, without chagrin, the increafing power of Daher; and his ambitions views, which were now become apparent, increafed its jealoufy. Its jealoufy was ftill more increafeil by a requeft he prefented. Till that time, he had only held his domains under the title of a renter, and by annual leafe. His vanity was wearied of this reftriction; and, as he poffefied all the effentials of power, he afpired to its titles: nay, perhaps, he thought them neceffary, more effecually to entablifh his authority over his children, and his fubjects. About the year 1768 , he thercfore follicited a permanent inveftiture of his government, for himelf and his fucceffor, and demanded to be proclaimed, Shaik of Acre, Prince of Princes, Governor of Nazareth, Tabaria, and Safud, and Sbaik of all Gulitee. The Porte conceded every thing to fear and money : but this proof of vanity, awakened more and more her jealoufy and difplenfure.

There were, befides, too many caures of complaint, which, though palliated by Daner, could not but increafe this difruft, and rouk a defire of vengeance. Such was the adventure of the celebrated pillage of the Caravan of Mecca, in 1757. Sixty thoufand pilgrims plundered, and difperfed over the defert, a great number deftroyed by fword or famine, women reduced to flavery, the lofs of immenfe riches, and, above all, the facrim legious violation of fo folemn an act of religion, produced a commotion in the empire, which is not yet forgotten. The plundering Arabs were the Allies of Daher, who received them at Acre, and there permitted them to fell their bocty. The Porte loaded him with the bittereft reproaches, but he endeavoured to exculpate himfelf, and to appeafe the Divan, by fending the white banner of the prophet to Conftantinople.

Such alfo was the affair of the Maltere Corlairs. For fome years they had infefted the coarts of Syria, and, under the falfe pretext of a neutral flag, were reccived into the road of Acre: where they unloaded their fpoils, and foid the prizes they had taken from the Turks. No fooner were thefe abofes divulged, than the Mahometans exclaimes againft the facrilege, and the Porte thundered vengeance. Daher pleaded ignorence of the fact, and, to prove he no way favoured a commerce fo difgraceful to the ftate
ftate and to religion, armed two galliots, and fent them to fea, with oftenfible orders to drive off the Maltele. But the fact is, that there galliots committed no hoftilities againft the Maltefe, but ferved, on the contrary, to correfpond with them at fea, remote from all witneffes. Daher did more: he pretended the road of Haifa was unprotected; that the enemy might take fhelter there in fpite of him, and required the Porte to build a fortrefs there, and provide it with cannon, at the expence of the Sultan: his demand was complied with, and Daher, fhortly after, procured the fort to be adjudged ufelefs, demolifhed it, and tranfported the brafs cannon from thence to Acre.

Thefe things kept alive the difcontent and alarms of the Divan, and though thefe were diminifhed by the great age of Daher; the turbulent fpirit of his fons, and the military talents of Ali, the eldeft of them, Atill gave the Porte much uneafinefs: fhe dreaded to fee an independent power perpetuate itfelf, and even become formidable. But, fteady to her ordinary fyftem, refrained from open holtilities, and proceeded by fecret means; fhe fent Capidjis, excited domeftic quarrels, and oppofed agents, capable at leaft of preventing, for a time, the confequences the feared.

The moft perfevering of thefe was that Ofman, Pacha of Damafcus, whom we have feen act a leading part in the war of Ali Bey. He had merited the favour of the Porte, by difcovering the treafures of Soliman Pacha, whofe Mamlouk he was. The perfonal hatred he bore to Daher, and the known activity of his character, were ftill greater recommendations. He was confidered as a proper counterpoife to Daher, and was accordingly named Pacha of Damafcus in 1760. To give him ftill additional weight, his two fons were appointed to the pachalics of Tripoli and Saide; and, to compleat his power, in 1765 , Jerufalem and all Paleftine were added to his apanage.

Ofman perfectly feconded the views of the Porte: As foon as he had taken poffeflion of his government, he greatly annoyed Daher. He augmented the tribute of the lands he held under the pachalic of Damafcus: the Shaik refitted, the Pacha menaced, and it was evident the quarrel would come to a fpeedy ifine. Ofman watched the opportunity to Atrike a blow which fhould bring the matter to decifion: this at length prefented itfelf, and war broke out.

Every year the Pacha of Damafcus makes what is called the circuit ( $a$ ) of his government, the object of which is to levy the miri or impoft on the lands. On this occafron he always takes with him a body of troops, frong enough to fupport his authority. He thought to avail himfelf of this opportunity to furprife Daher; and, followed by a numerous body of troops, took his route, as ufual, towards the country of Nablous. Daher was then befieging a caftle defended by two of his fons: his danger was the greater as he relied on a truce with the Pacha, and he owed his deliverance to his good fortune.

One evening, at the moment he leaft expected it, a Tartar courier (b) brought him fome letters from Conftantinople. Daher opened them, and, immediately fufpending all hofilities, difpatched a horfeman to his children, and defired them to prepare a fupper for him and three of his attendants, for that
(a) This is practifed in almoft all the great pachalics, where the va'als are but in little fubjection.
(b) The Tartais gevform the ofice of couriers in Turkey.
he had affairs to communicate of the laft importance to them all. The character of Daher was known; his fons obey him ; he arrives at the appointed hour ; they fup chearfully together; and at the end of the repaft, he produces his letters and reads them; they were from his fies at Conftantinople, and to the following purport:-" That the "Sultan had deceived him in the lant par" don he had fent him; that he had at the " fame inftant delivered a kat-fberif( $(c)$ againft " his head and property; that every thing " was concerted between the three Pachas, "Ofman, and his fons, to furround and de" ftroy him and his family; and that the "Pacha was marching in force towards Na"c blous to furprife him." The aftonifmment this intelligence excited, may eafily be imagined; a council was immediately held, in which the opinions were divided. The greateft number were for marching with all their forces againft the Pacha; but the eldeft of
(c) Kat-hherif, which words fignify, Noble Signature, is a letter of profeription conceived in thefe terms: "Such a "s one, who art the flave of my Sublime Porte, go to fuch a "one, my flave, and bring lack bis bead to my fect, at the "peril of thy orun.".

Daher's

Daher's fons, Ali, who has rendered himfelf illuftrious in Syria, by his exploits, reprefented, that a large army could not march quick enough to furprife the Pacha; that he would have time to provide for his defence, and the difgrace of violating the truce fall on them; that nothing could be effected but by a coup de main, which he would take upon himfelf. He demanded five hundred horie; his courage was known, and his demand acceded to. He fet off immediately, marching all night, and concealing himfelf during the day; and the following night was fo expeditious, as to reach the enemy early in the morning of the fecond day. The Turks, according to cuftom, were afleep in their camp, without order and without centinels; Ali and his cavalry fell upon them, fabre in hand, cutting to pieces every thing that came in their way. All was panic and tumult; the very name of Ali fpread terror throughout the camp, and the Turks fled in the utmof confurion. The Pacha had not even time to put on his pelifie: fearcely was he out of his tent, before Aii arrived, who made himfelf mafter of his coffer, his fhawls, his peliffes, his poniard, his nerkeel (d), and, to compleat his fuccefs, the kat-fherif of the Sultan. From this moment there was open war, which was carried on, according to the cuftom of the country, by inroads and fkirmifhes, in which the Turks but rarely gained the advantage.

The expences it occafioned foon drained the coffers of the Pacha; and, to reimburfe them, he had recourfe to the grand expedient of the Turks. He levied contributions on the towns, villages, and individuals; whoever was fufpected of having money, was fummoned, baftinadoed, and plundered. Thefe oppreffions had occafioned a revolt at Ramla in Paleftine the very firft year he obtained the government, which he fuppreffed by fill more odious crueltics. Two years after, in 1767, fimilar conduct occafioned a revolt at Gaza; he rencwed thefe proccedings at Yafa, in 1769 , where among other acts of defpotifm, he violated the law of nations, in the perfon of the Refident of Venice, John Damiâni, a refpectable old man, whom he put to the torture, by five hundred Atrokes on the foles of his feet, and, who could only preferve the feeble remains of life, by collecting from his own fortune, and the purfes of all his friends, a fum of near fixty thoufand livres, (twenty-five hundred pounds), for the Pacha. This tyranny is common in Turkey; but as it is not wfually either fo violent, or fo general, fuch cruelties drove the opprefled to defpair. The people began to murmur on every fide, and Paleftine, emboldened by the vicinity of Egypt, now in a flate of rebellion, threatened to call in a foreign protector.
(d) A pipe, in the Pe fian manner, confifing of a large flafk filled with water, through which the f:noke paffer, and is purified before it reaches the mouth.

Under thefe circumfances, Ali Bey, the conqueror of Macea and the Said, tumed his projects of ågrandizement toward Syria. The alliance of Daher, the war with the Ruffians, which entirely occupied the Turks, and the difcontents of the people, all confired to favour his ambition. Iite accordingly publifhed a manifefto in 1770 , in which he declared, that God having beftowed a fignal benedition on his arme, he thought himfelf bound, in duty, to make ufe of them for the relief of the people, and to reprefs the tyranny of Oman in Syria. He immediately difpatched a body of Mamlonks to Gaza, who feized on Ramla and Loud. Their appearance divided the adjacent town of Yafa into two factions, one of which was defirous of fubmitting to the Egyptians; while the other was for calling in Ofman, who flew thither immediately, and encamped near the town. Two days after, Daher was announced, who had likewife haftened thither for the fame purpofe. The inhabitants of Yafa, then imagining themfelves fecure, fhut their gates againft the Pacha; but, in the night, while he was preparing to efcape, a party of his troops, pafing along the fea-fhore, enterce, by an opening in the wall, and facked the city. The next day Daher appeared, and, not finding the Turks, took poffeffion of Ynfa, Ramla, and Loud, without refiftance, in which towns he placed garrifons.

Things thus prepared, Mohammad Bey arrived in Paleftine, with the grand army, in the month of February r771, and followed the Shaik along the fea-coaft to Acre. There, having been joined by twelve or thirteen hundired Motoualis, under the command of Nafif, and fifteen hundred Safadians, led by Ali, fon of Daher, he marched in April towards wards Damafcus. We have already feen in what manner this combined army beat the united forces of the Pachas, and how Mohammad, mafter of Damafcus, and on the point of taking poffeffion of the caftle, on a fudden changed his defign, and again took the road to Cairo. On this occafion, Ibrahim Sabbar, Minifter of Daher, receiving no other explanation from Mohammad, than nenaces, wrote to him, in the name of the Shaik, a letter filled with reproaches, which proved eventually the caufe, or, at leaft, the pretext of a frefh quarrel. Ofman, however, on his return to Damafcus, recommenced his oppreffions and hoftilities; and imagining that Daher, chagrined by the uncxpected news he had received, would not be prepared for defence, he formed the project of furprizing him even in Acre. But fcarcely was he on his march, when Ali, Daher, and Nafif, informed of his intentions, propofed to turn the tables on him: they, therefore, fecretly left Acre, and learning he was encamped on the weftern bank of Lake Houla, arrived there at break of day, took polieftion of the bridge of Yakoub, which they found negligently guarded, and fell on him fabre in hand, in his camp, where they made a dreadful carnage. This, like the affair of Nablous, was a total defeat; the Turks, preffed on the land fide, threw themfelves into the lake, hoping to fwim acrofs it; but the terror and confufion of this multitude (f men and horfes, which mutually embarraffed each other, was fuch that the enemy made a prodigious naughter, while ftill greater numbers perifhed in the water and mud of the lake. The Pacha was thought to be among the number of the latter, but he had the good fortune to efcape, being faved by two negroes, who fivam acrofs with him on their fhoulders. In the interim, Darouihh, fon of Ofmond, Pacha of Saide, had engaged the Druzes in his caufe, and fifteen hundred Okkals had arrived, under the command of Ali-Djambalat, to reinforce the garrifon; while the Emir Youfef, defcending into the valley of the Motoualis with twenty-five thoufand men, laid every thing wafte with fire and fword. Ali Daher and Nafif, on this intelligence, directed their courfe inftantly on that fide, and, on the 21 ft of October, 177I, happened the action in which an advanced corps of five hundred Motoualis entirely defeated the VOL. II. I whole whole army of the Druzes; whore flight Spread terror through Saide, whither they were clofely purfued by the Safadians. Ali Djambalat, defpairing to defend the town, evacuated it without delay; but not before his Okkals had pillaged it in their retreat. The Motoualis, finding it without defence, entered and plundered it in their turn. At length, the chicfs put an end to the pillage, and took pofieflion in the name of Daher, who appointed Derruizla, a native of Barbary, renowned for his bravery, to be his Motfallam, or governor.

The Porte, terrified at the defeats the had met with, both from the Ruffians, and her rebellious fubjects, now offered peace to Daher, on very advantageous conditions. To induce him to confent, the removed the Pachas of Damafeus, Saide, and Tripoli; difavowed their conduct, and follicited a reconciliation with the Shaik. Daher, noweightyfive or cighty-fix years old, was willing to accept this offer, that he might terminate his days in peace; but he was diverted from this intention by his minifter, Ibrahim; who did not doubt, but Ali Bey would, the enfuing winter, proceed to the conqueft of Syria, and that this Mamlouk would cede a confiderable portion of that country to Daher, and in the future aggrandizement of his mafter's power, he hoped the advancement of his own private fortune, and the means of adding frefh treafures to thofe he had already amaffed by his infatiable avarice. Seduced by this brilliant profpect, he rejected the propofitions of the Porte, and prepared to carry on the war with redoubled activity.

Such was the ftate of affairs, when, in the month of February, of the following year, Mohammad Bey reared the ftandard of rebellion againft his patron Ali. Ibrahim, at firft, flattered himfelf this revolt would have no ferious confequences; but he was foon undeceived, by the news of Ali's expulfion, and his fubfequent arrival at Acre, as a fugitive and fuppliant. This ftroke revived the courage of all the enemies of Daher, and the Turkifh faction in Yafa availed themfelves of it to regain their afcendancy. They appropriated to themfelves, the effects left there by the little fleet of Rodoan; and, aided by a Shaik of Nablous, began a revolt in the city, and oppofed the paffage of the Mamlouks. Circumftances now became very critical, as the fpeedy arrival of a large army of Turks was announced, which was affembled near Aleppo: Daher, it may be, ought to have remained in the vicinity of Acre; but imagining his diligence would fecure him from every attack, he marched towards Nablous, chaftifing the rebels as he paffed, and joining Ali Bey, below Yafa, conducted him without oppofition to Acre.

After a rcception fuitable to Arabian hofpitality, they marched together againft the Turks, who, under the command of feven Pachas, and in concert with the Druzes, were befieging Saide. In the road of Haifa were fome Ruffian vefiels, which, profiting by the revolt of Daher, were taking in provifions: the Shaik negociated with them, and, for a prefent of fix hundred purfes, engaged them to fecond his operations by fea. His army, at this time, might confift of five or fix thoufand Safadian and Motouali cavalry, eight iundred of Ali's Mamlouks, and about one thoufand Mograbian infantry. The Turks, on the contrary, united with the Druzes, amounted to ten thoufand cavalry, and twenty thoufand peafants, who, as foon as they received intelligence of the approach of the enemy, enemy, raifed the fiege, and retreated to the north of the town, not intending flight, but to wait for Daher, and give him battle; and the armies engaged the next day, in better order than had hitherto been ufual.

The Turkifh army, extending from the fea to the foot of the mountains, was drawn up in fuatoons, nearly in the fame line. The Okhals, on foot, were pofted on the fea-fhore Echind fome hedges of Nopals, and in trenches they had dug, to prevent a fally from the town, while the cavalry occupied the plain in no little confufion. 'Towards the centre, and advanced a little in the front, were eight cannon, twelve and twenty-four pounders, the only artillery hitherto made ufe of in the open ficld. At the foot of the mountains, and on their declivity, was the militia of the Druzes, armed with mufkets, without entrenchments, and without cannon. On the fide of Daher, the Motoualis and the Safadians, ranged themfelves, fo as to prefent the greateft front poffible, and endeavoured to occupy as much of the plain as the Turks. The right wing, commanded by Nafif, confifted of the Motoualis, and the thoufand Mograbian infantry, intended to oppofe the peafant Druzes. The other, led on by Ali Daher, was left without fupport againft the Okkals; but he relied on the Ruffian boats and veffels, which, keeping clofe in with the fhore, advanced in a line parallel to the army. In the centre, were the eight hundred Mamlouks, and, behind them, Ali Bey, with the aged Daher, who ftill animated his people, both by his words and his example.

The action was begun by the Ruffian veffels; and no fooner had they fired a few broadfides on the Okkals, than they retreated in confufion; the fquadrons of cavalry now advancing, nearly in a line, came within can-non-fhot of the Turks. Inftantly the Mamlouks, anxious to juftify the general opinion of their bravery, galloped full fpeed towards the enemy. The gumers, intimidated by their intrepidity, and feeing themfelves on foot, between two lines of cavalry, unfupported, either by redoubts or infantry, fired their pieces with precipination, and took to flight. The Mamlouks, who fuffered but little from this volley, rufhed in an inftant amid the cannon, and fell headlong upon the cavalry of the enemy. They met blit a feeble refiftance, and, in the confufion which enfued, every one not knowing what to do, or what was paffing around him, was more difpofed to fly than fight. The Pachas firf fet the example, and in an inftant the flight became general. The Druzes, who never engage with good-will on the fide of the Turks, prefently left the field, and hid themelves in their mountains, and in lefs than an hour the plain was cleared. The allies, fatisficd with their victory, would not rifk a purfuit, in a country which would become more difficult the nearer they approached Bairout; but the Ruffian hhips, to punifh the Druzes, procceded to cannonade that town, where they made a defcent, and burnt three hundred houfes.

Ali Bey and Daher, on their return to Acre, determined to take vengeance for the treachery of the people of Nablous and Yafa, and, in the beginning of July 1772 , appeared before the latter city. They firft propofed an accommodation, but the Turkifh faction rejecting every propofition, they were compelled to have recourfe to arms. This fiege, properly fpeaking, was only a bloc kade, nor muft we imagine the affailants made their approaches after the European I 4 method.

TRAVELS IN

method. They had no other artillery, on either fide, than a few large cammon, badly mounted, ill fituated, and ftill worfe ferved. The attacks were carried on neither by trenches, nor mines; and, it muft be owned, that fuch means were not neceffary againft a fight wall, without ditch or rampart. A breach was foon made, but the cavalry of Daher and Ali Bey fhowed no great eagernefs to pafs it; the befieged having defended the infide with ftones, ftalses, and decp holes which they had dug. The whole attack was made with fmall arms, which killed very few, and eight months were wafted in this manner, in fpite of the impatience of Ali Bey, who had alone the conduct of the fiege. At length the befieged, exhaufted with fatigue, and being in want of provifions, furrendered by capitulation. In the month of February 1773, Ali Bey placed a govemor in the town, for Daher, and haftened to join the Shaik at Acre, where he found him occupied in preparations to enable him to return to Egypt, to accelerate which event, Ali contributed all in his power.

They waited only for a fuccour of fix hundred men promifed by the Ruffans, but the impatience of Ali Bey determined him to depart without them. Daher made ufe of every argument to detain him a few days longer. But finding nothing could alter his refolution, he fent fifteen hundred cavalry to accompany him, commanded by Otman, one of his fons. Not many days after, (in April 1773), the Ruffians arrived with the reinforcement, which, though lefs confiderable than was expected, he greatly regretted he could not employ; but this regret was feverely aggravated, when Daher faw his fon and his cavalry return as fugitives, to announce to him their own difafter, and the fate of Ali Bey. He was the more affected at this event, as, inftead of an ufeful ally, powerful in refources, he acquired an enemy formidable from his hatred and activity. This, at his age, was a moft afflicting profpect, and it is highly to his honour, that he bore it with proper fortitude.

A fortunate event combined, at this juncture, with his natural firmnefs, to confole him, and divert his attention. The Emir Youfef, thwarted by a powerful faction, had been obliged to follicit the affiftance of the Pacha of Damafcus, to maintain himfelf in pofeffion poffeflion of Bairout. He had placed there a creature of the Turks, the Bey, Ahmed-elDjezzar, of whom I have fpoken before. No fooner was this man invefted with the command of the town, than he determined to feize it for himfelf. He began by converting to his own ufe, fifty thoufand piafters belonging to the prince, and openly declared he acknowledged no mafter but theSultan: theEmir, aftonifhed at this perfidy, in vain demanded juftice of the Pacha of Damafcus. Djezzar was difavowed, but not ordered to reftore the town. Piqued at this refufal, the Emir complied at length with the general wifh of the Druzes, and contracted an alliance with Daher. The treaty was concluded near Sour, and the Shaik, charmed with acquiring fuch powerful friends, went immediately with them to reduce the rebel. The R.uffian fhips, which, for fome time paft, had never quitted the coaft, now joined the Druzes, and, for a fecond fum of fix hundred purfes, agreed to camnonade Bairout. This double atack had the defired fuccefs. Djezzar, notwitheanding his vigorous refiftance, was obliged to capitulate; he furrendered himdelf to Daher alone, and followed him ta Acre, from whence, as I have related, he efcaped foon after.

The defection of the Druzes did not difcourage the Turks: the Porte expecting great fuccefs in the intrigues fhe was then carrying on in Egypt, ftill entertained hopes of overcoming all her enemies; the again placed Ofman at Damafcus, and gave him an unlimited power over all Syria. The firt ufe he made of this, was to affemble under his orders tix Pachas, whom he led through the vale of Bekaa, to the village of Zahla, with intention to penetrate into the mountainous country. The ftrength of this army, and the rapidity of its march, fpread confternation on every fide, and the Emir Youfef, always timid and irrefolute, already repented his alliance with Daher; but this aged man, follicitous for the fafety of his allies, took care to provide for their defence. The Turks had hardly been encamped fix days, at the foot of the mountains, before they learnt that Ali, the fon of Daher, was approaching to give them battle. Nothing more was neceffary to intimidate them. In vain ware they told the enemy had but five hundred horfe, while they were upwards of five thou-fand ftrong: the name of Ali Daher fo terrified them that this whole army fled, in one night, and left their camp, full of fpoils and baggage, to the inhabitants of Zahla.

After this fuccefs, it might be fuppofed Daher would have allowed himfelf time to breathe, and have turned his attention to preparations for his defence, which was become every day more neceffary; but fortune had determined he fhould no longer enjoy any repofe. For feveral years paft, domeftic troubles had accompanied forcign wars: and it was only by means of the latter, he had been able to appeafe the former. ITis children, who were themfelves old men, were wearied of waiting fo long for their inheritance; and, befides this conftant difpofition to revolt, had real grievances to complain of, which by giving too much reafon for their difcontents, rendered them the more dangerous. For feveral years, the Chriftian Ibrahin, minifter of the Shaik, had engroffed all his confidence, which he finamefully abufed to gratify his own avarice. He dared not openly exervife the tyranny of the Turiss; but he neglected no means, however unjuft, by which he could amafs money. If monopolized ized every article of commerce; he alone had the fale of corn, cotton, and other articles of exportation; and he alone purchafed cloths, indigo, fugars, and other merchandize. His avarice had frequently invaded the fuppofed privileges, and even the real rights of the Shaiks; they did not pardon him this abufe of power, and every day, furnifhing frefh fubjects of complaint, was productive of new difturbances. Daher, whofe underftanding began to be impaired by his extreme old age, did not adopt meafures calculated to appeafe them. He called his children rebels and ungrateful, and imagined he had no faithful and difinterefted fervant but Ibrahim: this infatuation ferved only to deftroy all refpect for his perfon, and to inflame and juftify their difcontents.

The unhappy effects of this conduct fully difplayed themfelves in 1774. Since the death of Ali Bey, Ibrahim, finding he had more to fear than hope, had abated fomething of his haughtinefs. He no longer faw the fame certainty of amafing money by making war. His allies, the Ruffians, in whom all his confidence was placed, began themfelves to talk of peace; and thefe motives determined him likewife to conclude it, for which purpofe he entered into a Treaty with a Capidji whom the Porte maintained at Acre. It was agreed that Daher and his fons fhould lay down their arms, but retain the government of the country, by receiving the Tails, which are the fymbols of this powcr. But it was likewife ftipulated, that Saide fhould be reftored, and the Shaik pay the miri, as he had done formerly. Thefe conditions were extremely diffatisfactory to the fons of Daher, and the more fo becaufe they were concluded without their participation. They deemed it difgraceful again to become tributaries, and were ftill more offended that the Porte had granted to none of them the title of their father; they therefore all revolted. Ali repaired to Paleftine, and took up his quarters at Habroun ; Ahmad and Seid retired to Nablous, Otman among the Arabs of Saker, and the remainder of the year paffed in the fe diffenfons.

Such was the fituation of affairs, when, at the begiming of 1775, Mohmmed-Bey appeared in Paleftine, with all the forces he was able to collect. Gazn, deftitute of ammunition, zition, did not venture to refift. Yafa, proud of the part fhe had acted in former difputes, had more courage; the inhabitants took arms, and their refiftance had nearly difappointed the vengeance of the Mamlouk; but every thing confpired to the deftruction of Daher. The Druzes dared not ftir; the Motoualis were difcontented: Ibrahim fummoned affiftance from every quarter, but he offered no money, and his follicitations had no effect; he had not even the prudence to fend provifions to the befieged. They were compelled so furrender, and the route to Acre was laid open to the enemy. As foon as the taking of Yafa was known, Ibrahim and Daher fled, and took refuge in the mountains of Safad. Ali Daher, confiding in the treaty between himfelf and Mohammad, took the place of his father; but foon perceiving he had been deceived, he took to flight likewife in his turn, and Acre remained in the poffeffion of the Mamlouks.

It would have been difficult to forefee the conequences of this revolution, but the unexpected death of its author, rendered it, of a fudden, of no effect. The flight of the Egyptians, leaving free the country and capital of Daher, he loft no time in returning; but the ftorm was by no means appeafed. He foon learnt that a Turkifh fleet, under the command of Haffan, the celebrated Captain Pacha, was laying fiege to Saide. He then difcovered too late the perfidy of the Porte, which had lulled his vigilance by profeffions of friendihip, while fhe was concerting with Mohammad Bey the means of his deftruction. During a whole year that the Turks had been difengaged from the Ruffians, it was not difficult to forefee their intentions from their motions. Still, however it was in his power to endeavour to prevent the confequences of this error; but, unfortunately, even this he neglected. Deguizla, bombarded in Saide without hope of fuccour, was conftrained to evacuate the town; and the Captain Pacha appeared inftantly before Acre. At fight of the enemy, a confultation was held how to efcape the danger, and this led to a quarrel, which decided the fate of Daher.

In a general council, Ibrahim gave his opinion to repel force by force: his reafons were, that the Captain Pacha had but three large veffels; that he could neither make an attack by land, nor remain at anchor, without danger, before the caftle; that there was a fufficient force of cavalry and Mograbian infantry to hinder a defcent, and that it was almof certain the Turks would relinquifh the enterprize without attempting any thing. In oppofition to him, Degnizla declared for peace, becaufe refiftance could only prolong the war; he maintained it was unreafonable to expofe the lives of fo many brave men, when the fame object niight be effected by lefs valuable means, that is by money; that he was fufficiently acquainted with the avidity of the Captain Pacha, to affert he would fuffer himfelf to be corrupted ; and was certain not only that he could procure his departure, but even make him a friend, for the fum of two thoufand purfes. This was precifely what Ibrahim dreaded; he therefore exclaimed againft the meafure, protefting there was not a medin in the Treafury. Daher fupported his affertion. "The Shaik is in " the right," replied Degnizla; " his fervants " havelong known that his generofity does not " fuffer his money to ftagnate in his coffers; " but does not the money they obtain from him " belong to him? And can it be believed that Vol. II. K
" thus
«s thusentitled to them we know not where to " find two thoufand purfes?" At thefe words Ibrahim, interrupting him, exclaimed, that as for himfelf, no man could be poorer. "Say " bafer," refumed Degnizla, tranfported with rage. "Who is ignorant, that for the laft "fouricen years, you have been heaping up "enormous treafures? that you have mono" polized all the trade of the country; that " you fell all the lands, and keep back the " payments that are due; that in the war of of Mohammad Bey, you plundered the "s whole territory of Gaza, carried away "s ali the corn, and left the inhabitants of "Yafa without the neceffaries of life?" He was proceeding, when the Shaik, commanding filence, protefted the innocence of his Minifter, and accufed Degnizla of envy and treachery. Degnizla inftantly quitted the council, and affembling his countrymen, the Mograbians or Barbary Arabs, who compofed the chief ftrength of the place, forbid them to fire upon the Captain Pacha.

Daher, horvever, determined to fand the attack, made every neceflary preparation; and, the next day, Haffan, approaching the caftle, began the cannonade. Daher anfivered with the few pieces near him; but in fpite of his reiterated orders, the others did not fire. Finding himfelf betrayed, he mounted his horfe; and, leaving the town by the gate which opens towards the gardens on the North, attempted to gain the country; but, while he was paffing along the walls of thefe gardens, a Mograbian foldier fhot him with a mufquet in the loins, and he fell from his horfe, when the Barbary Arabs, inftantly furrounding his body, cut off his head, which they carried to the Captain Pacha, who, according to the odious cuftom of the Turks, loaded it with infults while he furveyed it, and had it pickled, in order to carry it to Conftantinople, as a prefent to the Sultan, and a fpectacle to the people.

Such was the tragical end of a man, in many refpects, worthy of a better fate. It is long fince Syria has beheld among her chiefs fo great a character. In military affairs, no man poffeffed more courage, activity, coolnefs, or refources. In politics, the noble franknefs of his mind was not diminifhed even by his ambition. He was fond only of brave and open meafures; and heroically preferred the dangers of the field K 2 to the wily intrigues of the cabinet; nor was it till he had takeir Ibrahim for his minfter that his conduct was blemifhed with a fort of duplicity which that Chriftian called Prudence. The reputation of his juftice had eftablifhed throughout his fates, a fecurity unknown in Turkey; difference in religion occationed no difputes on this head: he poffeffed the toleration, or, perhaps, the indifference of the Bedouin Arabs. He had alfo pieferved the fimplicity of their cuftoms and manners. His table was not different from that of a rich farmer; the luxury of his diefs never exceeded a few Peliffes, and he never wore any trinkets. The greateft expence he incurred was in blood mares, for fome of which he even paid as high as twenty thoufand livres, (eight hundred and tweanty five pounds). He likewife loved women; but was fo jealous of decency and decorum, that he ordered that every one taken in an act of gullantry, or offering infult to a woman, fhould fuffer death: he had, in fhort, aitained the difficult medium between prodigality and avarice, and was at once generous and ceconomical. Whence was it, tien, that, with fuch great qualities, he did not further extend, and more firmly eftablifh his power? To this quefion a minute knowledge of his adminifration would furniff an eafy anfwer, but I fhall content myfelf with affigning the three principal caufes.

Firf, His government wanted that internal good order, and juftnefs of principle, without which all improvement muft be flow and irregular.

Secondly, The early concefions he made to his children introduced a multitude of diforders, which prevented the improvement of agriculture, impoverifhed his finances, divided his forces, and prepared the downfall of himfelf and his government.

A third and more efficacious caufe than all the reft, was the avarice of Ibrahim Sabbar. This man, abufing the confidence of his mafter, and the weaknefs incident to age, by his rapacity, alienated from him, his children, fervants, and allies. His extortions even lay fo heavy on the people, towards the end of his life, as to render them indifferent whether they returned under the Turkih yoke. His pafion for money was fo fordid that, amid the wealth he was amaffing, he lived only on

$$
\mathrm{K}_{3}
$$

cheefe
cheere and olives; and, fo great was his parfimony, that he frequently ftopped at the fhops of the pooreft merchants, and partook of their frugal repaft. He never wore any 'thing but dirty and ragged garments. To behold this meagre, one-cyed, wretch, one would have taken him rather for a beggar than the minifter of a confiderable fate. By thefe vile practices, he amaffed about twenty millions of French money, (eight hundred and twenty-five thoufand pounds), which fell to the Turks. No fooner was the death of Daher known in Acre than, the public indignation breaking out againft Ibrahim, he was feized, and given up to the Captain Pacha, to whom no prefent could be more acceptable. The report of this man's treafures was general throughout Turkey; it had contributed to animate the refentment of Mohammad Bey, and was the principal motive of the meafures of the Captain Pacha. He no fooner had him in his power than he endeavoured to extort from him a declaration of the fums he pofiefled, and the place where they were concealed; but Ibrahim firmly denied any fuch treafure cxifted. In vain did the Pacha employ carcfies, menaces, and the torture, all were ineffectual ; and it was by other indications Haffan at length difcovered, among the Fathers of the Holy Land, and at the houfes of two French merchants, feveral chefts, fo large, and fo full of gold, that the biggeft required eight men to carry it. With this gold were found alfo feveral trinkets, fuch as pearls, and diamonds, and, among others, the Kandjar of Ali Bey, the handle of which was eftimated at upwards of two hundred thoufand livres, (above eight thoufand pounds). All this was conveyed to Conftantinople with Ibrahim, who was loaded with chains. The Turks, ferocious and infatiable, ftill hoping to difcover new treafures, inflicted on him the moft cruel tortures, to force him to confeffion; but, it is afferted, he invariably maintained the firmnefs of his character, and perifhed with a courage worthy of a better caufe.

After the death of Daher, the Captain Pacha confirmed Djezzar Pacha of Acre and Saide, and committed to him the care of compleating the deftruction of the rebels. Faithful to his inftructions, Djezzar alternately attacked them by fratagem and force, and K 4 fo
fo far fucceeded, as to induce Otman, Seid, and Ahmad, to deliver themfelvers into his hands. Ali Daher alone refufed, and him they wifhed for moft. In the following year ( 1776 ), the Captain Pacha returned, and, in concert with Djezzar, befieged Ali in Dair-Hanna, a fiong hold, about a day's journcy from Acre, but he efcaped them. To free themfelves from their fears, they employed a ftratagem worthy of their character. They fuborned fome Barbary Arabs, who, pretending to have been difmiffed from Damafcus, came into the country where Ali was encamped. After relating their hiftory to his attendants, they applied to the hofpitality of the Snaik. Ali received them as became an Arab, and a brave man; but thefe wretches, falling on him in the night, maffacred him, and haftened to demand their reward, though they were not able to bring with them his head. The Captain Pacha, having no longer any thing to fear from Ali, murdered his brothers, Seid, Ahmad, and their children. Otman alone, on account of his extraordinary talents for poctry, was fpared, and carricd to Conftantinople. Degnizla, who was fent from

EGYPTANDSYRIA.

 137from that capital to Craza, with the title of governor, perifhed on the road, not without fufpicions of poifon. The Emir Youfef, terrified at thefe cvents, made his peace with Djezzar, and, from that time, Galilee, again fubjected to the Turks, only retains an unprofitable remembrance of the power of Daher.

C H A P. XXVI.

The diftribution of Syria into Pachalics, under the Turkib government.

After Sultan Sclim I. had taken Syria from the Mamlouks, he fubjected that province, like the reft of the empire, to the government of Viceroys, or Pachas (a), invefted with unlimited power. The more effectually to fecure his authority, he divided the country into five Governments, or Pachalics, which divifion ftill remains. Thefe Pachalics are thofe of Aleppo, Tripoly, and Saide, lately removed to Acre; that of Damafcus, and, laftly, that of Faleftine, the feat of which is fometimes at Gaza, and fometimes at Jerufalem. Since the time of Selim, the limits of thefe Pachalics have often varied, but their general extent has always been nearly the fame. I fhall now proceed to give a more circumftantial detail of the moft interefting particulars of their prefent fate, fuch as the revenues, productions, forces, and moft remarkable places.
(a) The Turkifh word Pacba, is formed of the two Perfian words Pa-foal, which literaily nignify Vice roy.
C II A P.

C H A P. XXVII.

Of the Pachalic of Aleppo.

THE Pachalic of Aleppo comprehends the country, extending from the Euphrates to the Mediterranean, between two lines, one drawn from Scandaroon to Beer, along the mountains; the other from Beles to the fea, by Mara, and the bridge of Shoger. This fpace principally confifts of two plains; that of Antioch to the weft, and that of Aleppo to the eaft: the north and the fea coaft are occupied by confiderably high mountains, known to the ancients by the names of Amanus, and of Rhofus. In general, the foil of this government is fat and loamy. The lofty and vigorous plants, which hoot up every where after the winter rains, prove its fertility, but its actual fruitfulnefs is but little. The greateft part of the lands lie wafte; fcarcely can we trace any marks of cultivation, in the environs of the towns and villages. Its principal produce confifts in wheat, barley, and cotton, which are found efpecially in the flat country. In the mountains, they rather chufe to cultivate the vine, mulberry, olive, and fig-trees. The fides of the hills towards the fea-coaft are appropriated to tobacco, and the territory of Aleppo, to Piftachios. The pafturage is not to be reckoned, becaufe that is abandoned to the wandering Hordes of the Turkmen and Curds.

140 TRAVELS IN

In the greater part of the Pachalics the Pacha is, as his title imports, at once the Viceroy and Farmer-general of the country; but, in that of Aleppo, he does not poffers the latter office. This the Porte has beftorved on a Mebafiel, or Collector, who is immediately accountable for what he receives. His leare is only for a year. The prefent rent of his farm is eight hundred purfes, which make a million of French money, (above forty thoufand pounds) ; but to this munt be added, the price of the babouches (b), or a prefent of eighty or one hundred thoufind livres, (three or four thoufand pounds), to purchafe the favour of the Vifir, and men in office. For thefe two fums, the farmer reccives all the duties of the government, which [^4]are ; Firt the produce of import and export duties on merchandize coming from Europe, India, and Conftantinople, and on that exported in exchange. Secondly, The taxes paid by the herds of cattle brought every year by the Turkmen and Curds, from Armenia and the Diarbekar, to be fold in Syria. Thirdly, The fifth of the falt works of Djeboul. And, laftly, The Miri, or land, tax. Thefe united may produce from fifteen to fixteen hundred thoufand livres, (above fixty thoufand pounds).

The Pacha, deprived of this lucrative branch of the adminiftration, receives a fixed allowance of eighty thoufand piafters, (eight thoufand three hundred and thirty pounds). This revenue has always been inadequate to the expences; for, befides the troops he is obliged to maintain, and the reparation of the highways and fortreffes, the expences of which he is obliged to defray, he is under the neceffity of making large prefents to the minifters, in order to keep his place; but the Porte adds to the account, the contributions he may levy on the Curds and Turkmen, and his extortions from the villages and individuals; nor do the Pachas come fhort of this calculation. Abdi Pacha, who governed twelve or thirteen yeais ago, carried off, at the end of fifteen months, upwards of four millions of livres, (one hundred and fixty thoufand pounds) by laying under contribution every trade, even the very cleaners of tobacco pipes; and, very lately, another of the fame name has been obliged to fly for fimilar oppreffions. The former was rewarded by the Divan with the command of an army againft the Ruflians; but if the latter has not enriched himfelf, he will be ftrangled as an extortioner. Such is the ordinary progrefs of affairs in Turkey!

Cuftom requires that the commiffion of the Pacha fhould be only for three months; but it is frequently extended to fix, and even to a year. His office is to retain the province in obedience, and provide for the fecurity of the country againft every foreign and domeftic enemy. For this purpofe he maintains five or fix hundred horfe, and about the fame number of infantry. Befides thefe, he has the command of the Janifaries, who are a fort of enrolled national militia. As this corps is found throughout all Syria, it will be proper to fay a few words concerning its conftitution.

The Janifaries I have mentioned confift, in each Pachalic, of a certain number of enrolled men, who muft hold themfelves ready to march whenever they are required. As there are certain privileges and exemptions attached to their body, there is a competition to obtain admiffion into it. Formerly they were fubject to regular exercife and difcipline; but all obfervance of this has fo declined, within the laft fixty or eighty years, that there no longer remains the flighteft trace of their ancient good order. Thefe pretended foldiers are only a croud of artizans and peafants, as ignorant as the reft of that clafs, but infinitely lefs tractable. When a Pacha abufes his authority, they are always the firft to erect the ftandard of fedition. They depofed and expelled Abdi Pacha from Aleppo, and compelled the Porte to fend another in his ftead. The Turkifh government revenges itfelf, it is true, by ordering the moft active mutineers to be ftrangled; but, on the firft opportunity, the Janifaries create other chiefs, and affairs return to their ufual courfe. The Pachas, feeing themfelves thwarted by this national national militia, have had recourfe to the expedient made ufe of in fimilar cafes; tiaey have taken foreign foldiers into their fervice, who have ncither friends nor families in the country. Thefe are of two forts, cavalry and infantry.

The cavalry, who alone merit the name of foldiers, for this reafon aflume the appellation of Daoula or Doleti, and likewife Dolikafles and Laouend, from whence we have formed Leventi. Their arms are flort fabres, pifols, mufkets, and lances. Their head-drefs is a long cylinder of black felt, without edges, ninic or ten inches high, extremcly inconvenient, as it does not fhade the eyes, and eafily falls off their bald heads. Their faddles are made in the Englifh manner, of a fingle fkin ftretched upon a wooden tree; they are bare, but not the lefs incommodious for this, as they fhift the horfeman fo as to prevent him from clinging; in the reft of their accoutrements and cloathing, they refemble the Mamlouks; with this difference, that they are not provided with fo good. Their ragged clothes, their rufty arms, and their horfes of different fizes, make them refemble banditti more than foldiers; and, in fact, the greateft part of them have firft diftinguifhed themfelves in the former capacity, nor have they greatly changed in adopting their fecond occupation. Almoft all the cavalry in Syria are Turkmen, Curds, or Caramanians; who, after exercifing the trade of robbers, in their own country, feek employment and an afylum near the perfon of the Pacha. Throughout the empire, thefe troops are, in like manner, formed of plunderers, who roam from place to place. From want of difcipline, they retain their former manners, and are the fcourge of the country, which they lay wafte, and of the peafants, whom they often pillage by open force.

The infantry are a corps ftill inferior in cvery refpect. Formerly they were procured from the inhabitants of the country by forced inliftments; but, within the laft fifty or fixty years, the peafants of Tunis, Algiers, and Morocco, have thought proper to feek in Syria and in Egypt, that refpect which is denied them in their own country. They alone, under the name of Magarba, Mograbians, or Men of the Weft, compofe the infantry of the Pachas. So that, by a whimfical exchange, it happens, that the foldiery of the Barbary YOL. II.

L
States

States confin of Turks, while that of the Turks is compofed of the natives of Barbary. It is impoflible for troops to be lefs encumbered than thefe ; for their whole accoutrements and baggage are confined to a rufty firelock, a large knife, a leathern bag, a cotton fhirt, a pair of drawers, a red cap, and fometimes dlippers. Their pay is five piaftres (about ten fhillings and ten-pence) per month, out of which they are obliged to furnifh themfelves with arms and cloathing. 'They are maintained at the expence of the Pacha; which, altogether, may be efteemed tolerable encouragement; the pay of the cavalry is double, and each horfeman has, befides this, his horfe and his ration, which is a meafure of chopped ftraw, and fifteen pounds of barley a day. There troops are divided in the ancient Tartar manner, by bairaks, or colours; each bairak is reckoned ten men, but they rarely confift of above fix effectives: the reafon of which is, that the Agres, or commanders of colours, bcing entruited with the pay of the foldiers, maintain as few as poffible, to profit by the deficiency. The fuperior Agas tolerate theie abufes, and partake of the fpoils; nay, the Puchas thamelves difregard them.
and, in order to avoid the payment of the complete number, connive at the rapacity and want of difcipline of their troops.

In confequence of fuch wretched government, the greater part of the Pachalics in the empire are impoverifhed and laid wafte. This is the cafe in particular with that of Aleppo: In the ancient deftars, or regifters of impofts, upwards of three thoufand two hundred villages were reckoned; but at prefent the collector can fearcely find four hundred. Such of our merchants as have refided there twenty years, have themfelves feen the greater part of the environs of Aleppo become depopulated. The traveller meets with nothing but houfes in ruins, cifterns rendered ufelefs, and fields abandoned. Thofe who cultivated them are fled into the towns, where the population is abforbed, but where at leaft the individual conceals himfelf among the crowd from the rapacious hand of defpotifm.

The places which merit moftattention in this Pachalic are, firft, the city of Aleppo, called by the Arabs Halab (c). This city is
the
(c) This is the name of which the ancient geographers made Chalyton: the sh reprefents here the Spanifh jota; and
: 98 TRAVELS IN the capital of the province, and the ordinary refidence of the Pacha. It is fituated in the vaft plain which extends from the Orontes to the Euphrates, and which, towards the fouth, terminates in the defert. The fituation of Aleppo, befide the advantage of a rich and fruilful foil, pofieffes alfo that of a ftream of fiefl water, which never becomes dry. This rivulet, which is about as large as that of the Gobelins at Paris, or the New River near London, rifes in the mountains of Aentab, and terminates fix leagues below Aleppo, in a morafs full of wild boars and pelicans. Near Aleppo, its banks, inftead of the naked rocks which line them in the upper part of its courfe, are covered with a fertile earth, and laid out in gardens, or rather orchards, which, in a hot country, and efpecially in Turkey, cannot but be delightful. The city is in itfelf one of the moft agreeable in Syrin, and is perhaps the cleaneft and beft built of any in Turkey. On whatever fide it is approached, its numerous minarets and domes prefent an it is remarkable, that the mocicrn Greeks fill render the Arabic ba be the fame found of fota; which occafions a thoufond couble meanings in their converfation, as the Arabs have the josa in another letter.
agreeable
agreeable profpect to the eye, fatigued with the continued famenefs of the brown and parched plains. In the center is an artificial mountain furrounded by a dry ditch, on which is a ruinous fortrefs. From hence we have a fine profpect of the whole city, and to the north difcover the fnowy tops of the mountains of Bailan; and on the weft, thofe which feparate the Orontes from the fea; while to the fouth and eaft, the eye can difcern as far as the Euphrates. In the time of Omar, this caftle ftopped the progrefs of the Arabs for feveral months, and was at laft taken by treachery, but at prefent would not be able to refift the feebleft affault. Its night wall, low, and without a buttrefs, is in ruins; its little old towers are in no better condition; and it has not four cannon fit for fervice, not except-ing a culverine nine feet long, taken from the Perfians at the fiege of Bafra (Bafiora). Three hundred and fifty Janifaries, who fhould form the garrifon, are bufy in their fhops, and the Aga fcarcely finds room in it to. lodge his retinue. It is remakable that this, Aga is named immediately by the Porte, which, ever fufpicious, divides, as much as pofiible, the different offices. Within the walls of the caftle is a well, which, by means of a fubterraneous communication, derives its water from a fring a league and a quarter diftant. In the environs of the city, we find a number of large fquare ftones, on the top of which is a turban of fone, which are fo many tombs. There are many rifing grounds round it, which, in cafe of a fiege, would greatly facilitate the approaches of the affailants. Such, among others, is that on which the houfe of the Derviches ftands, and which commands the caial and the rivulet: Aleppo, therefore, cannot be efteemed a place of importance in war, though it be the key of Syria to the north; but, confidered as a commercial city, it has a differemt appearance. It is the emporium of Armenia and the Diarbekar; fends caravans to Bagdad, and into Perfia; and communicates with the Perfian Gulph and India, by Bafra; with Egypt and Mecca by Damafcus; and with Europe by Skandaroon (Alexandretta) and Latakia. Commerce is there principally carried on by barte. The chief commodities are raw or fpun cottons, clumfy linens fabricated in the villages; filk ftuffs manufactured in the city, copper, bourres (coarfe cloths) like thofe of Rouen,

Rouen, goats hair brought from Natolia; the gall nuts of the Kourdeftan, the merchandize of India, fuch as hawls (d) and munlins; and piftachio nuts of the growth of the neighbourhood. The articles fupplied by Europe, are the Languedoc cloths, cochineal, indigo, fugar, and fome other groceries. The coffee of America, though prohibited, is introduced, and ferves to mix with that of Moka. The French have at Aleppo a conful, and feven counting-houfes; the Englifh and the Venetians two, and the merchants of Leghorn and Holland one. The Emperor appointed a conful there, in 1784 , in the perfon of a rich Jew merchant, who fhaved his beard to affume the uniform and the fword. Ruffia has alfo fent one very lately. Aleppo is not exceeded in extent by any city in Turkey, except Conftantinople and Cairo, and perhaps Smyrna. The number of inhabitants has
(d) Shawls arc woollen handkerchiefs, an ell wide, and near two long. The wool is fo fine and filky, that the whole handkerchief may be contained in the two hands clofed : it is faid that no wool is employed but that of lan:bs tarn from the belly of their mother before the time of birth. The moft beautiful flawls come from Cafhmire : their price is from 150 livres (about fix guineas), to 1200 livres (or 501 . fterling).

$$
\text { L } 4
$$

been
been computed at two hundred thoufand; but, in thefe calculations, certainty is imporfible. However, if we obferve, that this city is not larger than Nantes or Marfeilles, and that the houfes confint only of one ftory, we fhall, perhaps, not think it probable they exceed a hundred thoufand. The people of this city, both Turks and Chriftians, are, with reafon, efteemed the moft civilized in all Turkey; and the European merchants no where enjoy fo much liberty, or are treated with fo much refpect.

The air of Aleppo is very dry and piercing, but, at the fame time, very falabrious for a!l who are not troubled with aftimatic complaints. The city, however, and the environs, are fubject to a fingular endemial diforder, which is called the ringworm or pimple of Alcppo; it is in fact a pimple which is at firft inflammatory, and at length becomes an ulcer of the fize of the nail. The ufual duration of this ulcer is one year; it commonly fixes on the face, and leaves a fear which disfigures alrnoft all the inhabitants. It is alledged that every ftranger, who refides there three months, is attacked with it ; experience has taught that the beft mode of treatment is to make ufe of no remedy. Nu reafon is afligned for this malady; but $I$ fufpect it proceeds from the quality of the water, as it is likewife frequent in the neighbouring villages, in fome parts of the Diarbekar, and even in certain diftricts near Damafcus, where the foil and the water have the fame appearances.

Every body has heard of the pigeons of Aleppo, which ferve as couriers at Alexandretta and Bagdad. This ufe of them, which is not fabulous, has keen laid afide for the laft thirty or forty years, becaufe the Curd robbers killed the pigeons. The manner of fending advice by them was this: they took pairs which had youngones, and carried them on hor feback to the place from whence they wifhed them to return, taking care to let them have a full view. When the news arrived, the correfpondent tied a billet to the pigeon's foot, and let her loofe. The bird, impatient to fee its young, flew of like lightning, and arrived at Aleppo in ten hours from Alexandretta, and in two days from Bagdad. It was not difficult for them to find their way back, fince Aleppo ma; be difcovered at an immenfe diftance. This pigeon has nothing peculiar peculiar in its form, except its noftrils, which, infead of being fmooth and even, are frelled and rough.

The confpicuous fituation of Aleppo brings numbers of fea birds thither, and affords the curious a fingular amufement: if you go after dimer on the terraces of the houfes, and make a motion as if throwing bread, numerous flocks of birds will inftantly fly round you, though at firft you cannot difcover one; but they are floating aloft in the air, and defcend in a moment to feize, in their flight, the morfels of bread, which the inhabitants frequently amufe themfelves with throwing to them.

Next to Aleppo, Antioch, called by the Arabs Antakia, claims our attention. This city, anciently renowned for the luxury of its inhabitants, is now no more than a ruinous town, whofe houfes, built with mud and ftraw, and narrow and miry ftreets, exhibit every appearance of mifery and wretchednefs. Thefe houfes are fituated on the fouthern bank of the Orontes, at the extremity of an old decayed bridge: they are covered to the fouth by a mountain, upon the flope of which is a wall, built by the Crufaders. The dif-tance between the prefent town and this mountain may be about four hundred yards, which fpace is occupied by gardens and heaps of rubbifh, but prefents nothing interefing.

Notwithftanding the unpolifhed manners of its inhabitants, Antioch was better calculated than Aleppo to be the emporium of the Europeans. By clearing the mouth of the Orontes, which is fix leagues lower down, boats might have been towed up that river, though they could not have failed up, as Pococke has afferted; its current is too rapid. The natives, who never knew the name Orontes, call it, on account of the fwiftnefs of its ftream, El-aafi (e), that is the Rebel. Its breadth, at Antioch, is about forty paces. Seven leagues above that town it paffes by a lake abounding in fifh, and efpecially in cels. A great quantity of thefe are falted every year, but not fufficient for the numerous fafts of the Greek Chrintians. It is to be remembered, we no longer hear at Antioch, either of the Grove of Daphne, or of the voluptuous fcenes of which it was the theatre.
(e) This is the name which the Greek Geographers have sendered by Axios.

The plain of Antioch, though the foil of it is excellent, is uncultivated, and abandoned to the Turkmen; but the hills on the fide of the Orontes, particularly oppofite Serkin, abound in plantations of figs and olives, vines, and mulberry trecs, which, a thing uncommon in Turkey, are planted in quincunx ( $f$ ), and exhibit a landfcape worthy our fineft provinces.

The Macedonian king, Seleucus Nicator, who founded Antioch, built, alfo, at the mouth of the Orontes, on the northern bank, a large and well fortified city, which bore his name, but of which at prefent not a fingle habitation remains: nothing is to be feer butheaps of rubbifh, and works in the adjacent rock, which prove that this was once a place of very confiderable importance. In the fea alfo may be perceived the traces of two piers, which are indications of an ancient, port, now choaked up. The inhabitants of the country go thither to fifn, and call the name of the place Souaidia. From thence, as we proceed to the north, the fea-coaft is thut in by a chain of high mountains, known to the ancient geographers by the name of Rbofus: which name was probably derived from the Syriac, and ftill fubfifts in that of Ras-elKanzir, or Cape of the Wild Boar, a headland on this coaft.
(f) This mode of planting in 2nincunx, is likewife in ufe among the Druzes, and is particularly mentioned by Baron de Tott.

The Gulph, towards the north-eaft, is remarkable for nothing but the town of Alexandretta, or Skandaroon, of which it bears the name. This town, fitcated on the fea-hhore, is, properly fpeaking, noihing but a village, without walls, in which the tombs are more numerous than the houfes, and which entirely owes its exiftence to the road which it commands. This is the only road, in all Syria, where veffels anchor on a folid bottom, without their cables being liable to chafe: but, in other refpects, it has fo many ferious inconveniencies, that neceffity alonc can prevent the merchants from abandoning it.

Firf, It is infefted, during winter, by a wind, peculiar to this place, called by the French failors le Raguier, which, rufhing from the fnowy fummits of the mountains, frequently forces fhips to drag their anchors feycral leagues.
Secondiy,

Secondly, When the fnow begins to cover the mountains which furround the Gulph, tempeftuous winds arife which prevent veifels from entering for three or four months together.

Thirdly, The road from Alexandretta to Aleppo, by the plain, is infefted by Curd robbers, who conceal themfelves in the neighbouring rocks $(g)$, and frequently attack and plunder the ftrongeft caravans.

Another reafon, more forcible than thefe, is the unwholefomenefs of the air of Alexandretta, which is extreme. It may be affirmed that it every year carries off one third of the creivs of the veffels which remain there during the fummer; nay, fhips frequently lofe all their men in two months. The fenfon for this epidemic diforder is principally from Míay to the end of September: it is an intermitting fever of the moft malignant kind, and is accompanied with obftuctions of the liver, which terminate in a droply. The cities of Tripoli, Acre, and Larneca in Cyprus,
(g) The place they are found in exactly correfponds with the Caffle of Gyndarus, which, in the time of Strabo, was a haunt of robbers.
are fubject to the fame diforder, though in a lefs degree. In all there places the fame local circumftances feem to have given birth to the contagion; the caufe of it in all is to be afcribed to the adjoining morafies, ftagnant waters, and confequent vapours and mephitic exhalations : a convincing proof of this is, that this diforder does not prevail in feafons when no rain has fallen. But, unfortunately, Alexandretta is condemned, from its fituation, to be never wholly exempt from it; for the plain on which the town is built is fo low and flat (b) that the rivulets, finding no declivity, can never reach the fea. When they are fwelled by the winter rains, the fea, fwelled likewife by tempefts, hinders their dircharging themfelves into it; hence their waters, forced to fpread themfelves, form lakes in the plain. On the approach of the fummer, the waters become corrupted by the heat, and exhale vapours equally corrupt, which cannot difperfe, being confined by the mountains that encircle the gulph. The entrance of the bay befides lies to the wert, which, in thofe countries, is the moft unhealthy expofure when it correfponds with the fea. The labour neceffary to remedy this would be immenfe, and after all infufficient; and, indeed, fuch an undertaking would be abfolutely impoffible, under a government like that of the Turks. A few years ago, the merchants of Aleppo, difgufted with the numerous inconveniencies of Alexandretta, wifhed to abandon that port and carry the trade to Latakia. They propofed to the Pacha of Tripoli to repair the harbour at their own expence, provided he would grant them an exemption from all duties for ten yeais. To induce him to comply with their requeft, the agent they employed talked much of the advantage which would, in time, refult to the whole country: "But, what fignifies it to me what " may happen in time, replied the Pacha? I "was yeRterday at Marach, to-morrow, per" haps, I thall be at Djedda; Why fhould I " deprive myleif of prefent advantages, which " are certain, for future bencfits I cannot " hope to partake?" The European factors were obliged therefore to remain at Skanda-roon. There are three of thefe factors, two for the French, and one for the Englifh and Venetians. The only curiofity which they have to amufe ftrangers with confifts in fix or feven marble monuments, fent from England, on which you read: Here lies fuch a one, carried off in the flower of bis age, by the fatal effects of a contagious cir. The fight of thefe is the more diftreffing, as the languid air, yellow complexion, livid eyes, and dropfical bellies of thofe who fhew them, make it but too probable they cannot long efcape the fane fate. It is true, they have fome refource in the village of Bailan, the pure air and excellent waters of which furprizingly reftore the fick. This village, fituated among the mountains, three leagues from Alexandretta, on the road to Aleppo, prefents the moft picturefque appearance. It is built among precipices in a narrow and deep valley, from whence the Gulph of Skandaroon is feen as through a tube. The houfes, leaning againft the fteep declivities of the two mountains, are fo difpofed, that the terraces of the lower ferve as ftreets and courts to thofe above. In winter, cafcades pour down on every fide, which ftun the inhabitants with their noife, and, in their fall, fometimes, rend off large pieces of the rocks, and even throw down the houfes. The cold is very fevere there, during that feafon, but the fummer delightful ; the inhabitants, who fpeak only Turkifh, live on their goats and buffaloes, and the produce of a few gardens which they cultivate. The Aga, for fome years paft, has applied the duties of the cuf-tom-houre of Alexandretta to his own ufe, and rendered himfelf almoft independent of the Pacha of Aleppo. The Turkifh empire is full of fuch rebcls, who frequently die in peaceable poffeffion of their ufurpations.
(b) This plain, which is about a league in breadth, and lies at the foot of the mountains, has been formed by the earth, brought down by the torrents and rains.

Vol. II.

On the road from Alexandretta to Aleppo, at the laft place travellers fleep at, is the village of Martawan, celebrated among the Turks and Europeans, on account of an extraordinary practice of the inhabitants, who let out their wives and daughters for a trifling fum (i). This proftitution, held in abhorrence by the Arabs, feems to me to have
(i) See Baron de Tott's Memoirs. M. du Rocher, now refident of the king of France with the Emperor of Moroceo, has furnifhed me with many catertaining anecdotes refpecting this whimfical cuftom, bat too indelicate for the pref. 'T.
originated
originated in fome religious cuftom, which ought perhaps to be fought for in the ancient worfhip of the goddefs Venus, or to be attributed to the community of women permitted by the Anfarians, to which tribe the inhabitants of Mortawan belong. The Franks pretend that the women are pretty. But it is probable that long abfinence at fea, and the vanity of intrigue, conftitute all their merit; for their exterior announces nothing but the difgufting uncleanlinefs of mifery.

In the mountains which terminate the Pachalic of Aleppo to the north, we find Kles and Aentah, two confiderable villages. They are inhabited by Armenian Chriftians, Curds, and Mahometans, who, notwithftanding the difference of their religions, live in friendihip, and, by their union, are enabled to refift the Pacha, whom they often brave, and enjoy in tranquillity the produce of their flocks, bees, and a few cultivated fpots on which they grow corn and tobacco (k).
(k) Thefe towns fuccefffully revolted in 1780 , againts the tymany of the Sccond Abdi Pacha, mentioned by our author. 'I.

Two days journey to the north-cant of Aleppo is the town of Mambedj, fo celebrated in ancient times, under the names of Bambyce, and Hierapolis (l). No traces remain of the temple of that great goddefs with whofe worfhip Lucian has made us acquainted. The only remarkable monument is a fubterrancous canal, which conducts the water from the mountains of the north for the diftance of four leagues. All this country was formerly full of fuch aqueducts: the Affyrians, Medec, and Perfians, efteemed it a religious duty to convey the water to the defert, in order to multiply, according to the precepts of Zoroafter, the principles of life and of abundarice: we therefore, at cvery ftep, meet with aftonifhing proofs of ancient population. Along the whole road from Aleppo to Hama, we difcover the ruins of ancient villages, cifterns failen in, and the remains of fortreffes, nay even of temples. I particularly remarked a quantity of oval and round hillocks, which, from the nature of the earth, and their fteep afeent on this
(1) The name of Hicrapolis fill fubfifts in that of atinther village, called Yrrabolos, and fituated on the Euphrates.
even plain, evidently appear to have been the work of man. The reader may form fome idea of the labour they muft have coft, from the dimenfons of that of Kan-Shaikoun, which I found to be feven hundred and twenty paces, or fourteen hundred French feet in circumference, and near a hundred feet high. Thefe hillocks, fcattered at regular intervals of nearly a league from each other, are covered with the ruins of citadels, and, probably, were alfo places facred to the adoration of fome deity, according to the well known practice of the ancients, of worfhipping " on " high places." Thefe conjectures feem confirmed by the tradition of the inhabitants, who attribute all thefe works to the infidels. At prefent, infead of that cultivation which might be expected, we meet with nothing but wafte and defolated lands : yet the foil is of a good quality, and the fmall quantity of grain, cotton, and Sefamum it produces, is excellent. But all the frontiers of the Defert are deftitute of fprings and running water. That of the wells is brackifl; and the winter rains, on which the inhabitants place their principal dependance, fometimes fail. For this reafon, nothing can be conceived more melancholy than thefe parched and dufty plains, without trees, and $w$ ithout verdure; or more miferable than the appearance of the ftraw and earthen huts which form their villages; nor can any greater wretchednefs be imagined than that of the peafants, expofed at once to the oppreffion of the Turks, and the robberies of the Bedouin Arabs. The tribes which encamp in thefe plains are called the Mawalis; they are the moft powerful, and the richeft among the Arabs, as they pay fome attention to agriculture, and partake in the trade of the caravans which go from Aleppo, either to Baffora or Damafcus, or to Tripoli by the way of Hama.

$$
\text { M } 3 \text { melancholy }
$$

C II A P. XXVIII.

Of the Pacbalic of Tripoli.

THE Pachalic of Tripoli comprehends the country which fretches along the Miediterranean, from Latakia to the Narh-el-Kelb, and is bounded on the weft by that tortent, and the chain of mountains which overlook the Orontes.

The principal part of this government is hilly; the fea-coaft alone, between Tripoli and Latakia, is a level country. The numerous rivulets which water it contribute greatly to its fertility; but, notwithftanding this advantage, this plain is much lefs cultivated than the mountains, without even excepting Lebanon, with its numerous rocks and pinetrees. Its chief productions are corn, barley, and cotion. In the territory of Latakia tobacco and olives are principally culcivated; but in Lebanon, and the Kefraouan, white mulberry-trees and vineyards.

This Pachalic contains feveral different tribes and religions. From Lebanon to above M 4 Latakia, Latakia, the mountains are peopled by the Anfarians of whom I have before fpoisen; Lebanon and the Kefraouan are inhabited entirely by the Maronites, and the fea-coaft and cities, by Schifmatic Greeks, and Latins, Turks, and defcendants of the Arabs.

The Pacha of Tripoli enjoys all the privileges of his place. The military and finances are in his hands; he holds the government in quality of a farm from the Porte, on a leafe of one year only, at the annual rent of feven hundred and fifty purfes, (thirty nine thoufand pounds); befides this, he is obliged to fupply the Caravan of Mecca with corn, barley, rice, and other provifions, the expences of which are eftimated at feven hundred and fifty purfes more. He is himfelf obliged to conduct this convoy into the Defert, to meet the pilgrims. To indemnify him for thefe expences he receives the Miri, the cuftonis, the farms of the Anfrians and the Kefraouan, and adds to all thefe numerous annual extortions and exactions; indeed had he no more than this laft article, his profits would be confiderable. He maintains about five hundred cavalry, as ill provided as thofe of Aleppo, and a few Mograbian infantry.

The Pacha of Tripoli has always been defirous of perfonally governing the country of the Anfarians, and the Maronites; but thefe people having invariably oppofed by force the entrance of the Turks into their mountains, he has been conftrained to abandon the collection of the tribute to under farmers, approved of by the inhabitants. Their office is not like his, held only for a year, but is difpofed of by auction; whence arifes a competition of wealthy perfons, who perpetually afford him the means of exciting or fomenting troubles in the tributary nation: this adminiftration is the fame we find in hiftory to have been ufual with the ancient Perfians and Affyrians, and which appears to have been frequent in all ages in the eaftern world.

The farm of the Anfarians is at this day divided between three chiefs or Mokaddanin; that of the Maronites is wholly in the hands of the Emir Youfef, who pays thirty purfes (fifteen hundred and fixty pounds) for it. Among the remarkable places in this Pachalic we muft firft mention

Tripoli,

Tripoli ( $n$ ), in Arahic Tarabolos, the refidence of the Pacha. It is fituated on the river Kadifha, at the diftance of a quarter of a league from its mouth, and precifely at the foot of Mount Lebanon, which overlooks and furrounds it with its branches to the eaft, the fouth, and even a little to the north-wert. It is feparated from the fea by a fmall triangular plain, half a league in breadth, at the point of which is the village where the verfels land their goods. The Franks call this village la Marime ( $n$ ), the feneral name given $b_{:}^{\prime}$ them to thefe places in the Levant. There is no harbour but a fimple road, which extends from the fhore to the fhoals called The Rabbit and Pigeon sfands. The bottom is rocky, and mariners are not fond of renaining here, as the cables are foon worn out, and the veffels expofed to the north-weft winds, which are frequent and violent on all this coart. In the time of the Franks, this
(m) A Greck name, fignifying three cities, it having been built by three colonies, from Sidon, Tyie, and Aradus, who each of them formed fettlements fo near each other, that they were foon united into one.
(ii) Such maritime places were by the ancie. ts called Minjuma.
EGPYTANDSYRIA. IX
road was defended by Towers, feven of which are ftill fubfifting, from the mouth of the river to the village. They are ftrong built, but now ferve only as a place of refort for birds of prey.

All the environs of Tripoli are laid out in orchards, where the nopal grows fpontaneoufly, and the white mulberry is cultivated for the filk worm; and the pomegranate, the orange, and the lemon tree, for their fruit, which is of the greateft beauty. But thefe places, though delightful to the eye, are unhealthy. Every year, from July to Scptember, epidemic fevers, like thofe of Skandaroon and Cyprus, rage here: there are owing to the artificial inundations witli which the mulberry trees are watered, in order that they may throw out their fecond leaves. Befides, as the city is open only to the wert, the air dues not circulate, and the fpirits are in a conftant fate of oppreffion, which makes health at beft but a kind of convalefcence ( 0 ). The air, though more humid,
(0) Since my return from France, I have received accounts that in the fpring, 1785 , there raged an epidemical diforder, which defolated Tripoli and the Kefraoman. It was a violent fever, accompanicd with bhue foots, which made is more falubrious at la Marine, doubtlefs becaufe it has room to circulate. It is fill more fo in the iflands; and were the place in the hands of an enlightened government, the inhabitants fhould be invited to live there. Nothing more would be neceffary to inditice them, than to convey water to the village by conduits, as feems formerly to have been done. It is worthy of obfervation, alfo, that the fouthern fhore of the fmall plain is full of the ruins of habitations, and columns broken and buried in the carth, or in the fear fands. The Franks had employed a great number of them in the building their walls, in the remains of which they are fill to be fcen laid crofsways.

172 TRAVELSIN

The commerce of Tripoli confifts almont wholly in indifferent coarfe filks, which are made ufe of for laces. It is obferved, that they are every day lofing their quality. The reafon afiligred for which, by well informed made it fufpected to have an affinity with the plague. What may be efteemed fingular, it was ebferved to attack very few Mahometans, but made its chief ravages among the Chriftians; whence it may be concluded it was in a great meafure oceafioned by the unwholcfome food and meagre diet they live on during Lent.
perfons, is, the decay of the mulberry trees, of which farcely any thing now remains but fome hollow trunks. A ftranger inftantly replies, why not plant new ones? But I anfwer, that is an European obfervation. Here they never plant; becaufe, were they to build or plant, the Pacha would fay, this man has money. He would fend for him, and demand it of him: fhould he deny that he has any, he muft fuffer the baftinado; and fhould he confefs, muft ftill receive it to cxtort from him the acknowledgment that he has ftill more. Not that the Tripolitans are remarkable for their patience; they are, on the contrary, conlidered as extremely mutinous. Their title of Janifaries, and the green turban they wear, in quality of Sherifs, infpire them with the firitit of revolt. Ten or twelve years ago, the extortions of a Pacha droye them to extremities ; they expelled him, and remained eight months independent; but the Porte fent a man well verfed in her maxims, who, by dint of promifes, oaths, and pardons, gained and difperfed them, and concluded by putting to death eight hundred in one day; their heads are ftill to be feen in a cave near Kadifha. Such is the government of the Turks! The commerce of Tripoli is in the hands of the French alone. They have a conful here, and three commercial houfes. They export filks, and fpunges fifhed up in the road; thefe they exchange for cloths, cochineal, fugar, and Weft India coffee; but this factory, both with refpect to imports and exports, is inferior to its fubordinate town Latakia.

The town of Latakia, founded by Seleucus Nicator, under the name of Laodicea, is fituated at the bafe, and on the fouthern fide of a fmall peninfula, which projects half a leaguc into the fer. Its port, like all the others on this coaf, is a fort of bafon, environed by a mole, the cntrance of which is very narrow. It might contain five and twenty or thirty vefiels; but the Turks have fuffered it fo to be choaked up, as fearcely to admit four. Ships of above four hundred tons cannot ride there ; and hardly a year paffes, that one is not franded in the entrance. Notwithftandiag this, Latakia carries on a very great commerce, confifting chiefly of tobacco, of which upwards of twenty cargocs are annually lent to Damietta: the returns from thence are rice, which is bartered in Upper Syria for oils and cottons. In the time of Strabo, inftead of tobacco, the exports confinted in its famous wines, the produce of the hill fides. Even then, Egypt was the market by way of Alexandria. Have the ancients or the moderns gained by this exchange? Neither Latakia nor Tripoli can be mentioned as places of ftrength. They have neither cannon nor foldiers; a fingle privateer would make a conqueft of them both. They are each fuppofed to contain from four to five thoufand inhabitants.

On the coaft, between thefe towns, we meet with feveral inhabited villages, which formerly were large cities: fuch are Djebila, Merkab, fituated on a feep declivity, and Tartoufa; but we find fill more places which have only the half-deftroyed remains of ancient habitations. Among the latter, one of the principal is the rock, or ifland of Rouad, formerly a porverful city and republic, known by the name of Aradus. Not a fingle wall is remaining of all that multitude of houfes, which, according to Strabo, were built with more ftories than even thofe of Rome. The liberty enjojed by the inhabitants had rendered it very populous, and it fubfinted by naval commerce, manufactures, and arts. At prefent the illand is deferted; nor has tradition even retained the memory of a fpring of frefh water in its environs, which the people of Aradus difcovered at the bottom of the fea, and from which they drew water, in time of war, by means of a leaden bell, and a leathern pipe fitted to its buttom. To the fouth of Tripoli is the country of the Kefraouan, which extends from Nahr-cl-kelb; paffing by Lebanon, as faras Tripoli. Djebail, the ancient Byblos, is the moft confiderable town in this territory: it has not, however, above fix thoufand inhabitants. Its ancient port, which refembles that of Latakia, is in a fill woric fituation; fcarcely any traces of it remain. The river Ibrahim, the ancient Adonis, which is two leagues to the fouthward, has the only bridge to be feen, that of Tripoli excepted, from thence to Antioch. It is of a fingle arch, fifty feet wide, and upwards of thirty high; of a very light architecture, and appears to have been a work of the Arabs.

176 TRAVELSIN

Among the mountains, the places mont frequented by the Europeans, are the villages of Eden and Befharrai, where the miffionaries have a houfe. During the winter, many of the inhabitants defcend to the coaft, and leave their houfes under fnow, with fomebody to guard them. Befharrai is in the road to the Cedars, to which it is a journey of feven hours, though the diftance be but three leagues. Thefe Cedars, fo boafted, refemble many other wonders; they fupport their reputation very indifferently on a near infpection; the fight of four or five large trees, which are all that remain, and have nothing remarkable in their appearance; is not worth the trouble it conts the traveller to climb the precipices that lead to them.

On the frontiers of the Kefraouan, a league to the northward of Nahr-el-kelb, is the little village of Antoura, where the Jefuits were eftablifined in a houre, which, though it has not the fplendor of thofe in Europe, is a neat and fimple manfion. Its fituation on the fide of the hill, the limpid waters which refref its vineyards and mulberry trees, the profpect it commands over the valley, and the diftant view it has of the fea, render it a moft agreeable hermitage. The Jefuits attempted to annex to it a convent of young women, fituated it a quarter of a league's diftance in front;

> Vox. II.
but the Greek Chriftians having difpoffeffed them, they built one clofe to them, under the name of the Vifitation. They had alfo built, two hundred paces higher, a feminary, which they wifhed to fill with Maronite and LatinGreek ftudents ; but it has remained deferted. The Lazarites, who have fucceeded them, maintain a fuperior curate, and a lay-brother at Antoura, who do the duties of the miffion with equal charity, politenefs, and decency.

C H A P. XXIX.

Of the Pachalic of Saide, called likervije the Pacbalic of Acre.

TO the fouth of the Pachalic of Tripoli, and on the fame coaft, is a third Pachalic, that, till now, has borne the name of the city of Saide, its capital, but may henceforward affume that of Acre, to which place the Pacha had of late years transferred his refidence. The extent of this government has greatly varied at different times. Before Shuik Daher, it was compofed of the country of the Druzes, and the whole coaft from Nahr-elkelb, as far as Mount Carmel. In proportion a.s Daher obtained power, he infringed on the territories of the Pacha, and reduced him to the city of Saide, from which he was at latt expelled; but after the ruin of Daher, the government refumed its ancient limits. Djezzar, who fucceeded that chief in quality of Pacha for the Turks, has annexed to the Pachalic the countries of Safad, Tabaria, and Balbek, formerly tributary to Damafcus, and the territory of Kaifaria, (the an* cient Cefarea) inhabited by the Arabs of Saker. This Pacha, perceiving the advantage of the works erected by Daher at ficre, transferred his refidence to that city, which is now become the capital of the province.

By thefe different augmentations, the Pa chalic of Acre at prefent includes all the country from the Nahr-cl-kelb, to the fouth of Kaifaria, between the Mediterranean to the wcft, and Anti-Lebanon, and the upper part of the courfe of the Jordan, to the eaft. It derives the more importance from this extent, as it unites the valuable advantages of fituation and foil. The plains of Acre, Efdrelon, Sour, Havuln, and the Lower Bekaa, are jufly boafted for their fertility. Corn, barley, maize, cotton, and fefamum, produce, notwithftanding the imperfection of the culture, twenty and twenty-five for one. The country of Kaifaria polfefles a foreft of oaks, the only one in Syria. Safad furnifics cottons, which, from their whitenefs, are held in as high eftimation as thofe of Cyprus. The ncighbouring mountains of Sour produce as good tobacco as that of Latakia, and in a patt of them is produced a perfume of cloves, which which is referved exclufively for the ufe of the Sultan and his women. The country of the Druzes abounds in wines and filks; in fhort, from the fituation of the coaft, and the quantity of its creeks, this Pachalic neceffarily becomes the emporium of Damafcus and all the interior parts of Syria.

The Pacha enjoys all the privileges of his office; he is defpotic governor, and farmer general. Fie remits to the Porte annually the fixed fum of feven hundred and fifty purfes; but he, as well as the Pacha of Tripoli, is obliged to furnifh the Djerde or provifions for the pilgrims of Mecca. His expences for this article are eftimated likewife at feven hundred and fifty purfes, in rice, corn, barley, &cc. The time limited for his government is a year, but is frequently prolonged. His revenues are, the Miri; the farms of the tributaries, as the Druzes, the Motoualis, and fome Arab tribes; the numerous fees from fucceffions and extortions; and the produce of the cuftoms on the expoits, imports, and the conveyance of merchandize; which article alone amounted to one thoufand purfes (above fifty thoufand pounds), when Djezzar farmed all the har-bours and creeks in 1784 . This Pacha likewife, as is ufual with the Turkifh governors in Afia, cultivates lands on his own account, enters into partnerfhip with merchants and manufacturers, and lends out money for intereft to hufbandmen and traders; the total from thefe various emoluments is effimated at between nine and ten millions of French money, (about four hundred thoufand pounds). If we compare with this his tribute, which, with the fupply of the caravan, amounts only to fifteen hundred purfes, or one million, eight hundred and feventy-five theufand livres, (fe-venty-eight thoufand one hundred and twen-ty-five pounds), we muft be aftonifhed that the Porte allows him fuch enormous profits; but this alfo is a part of the policy of the Divan. The tribute once fettled never varies, only, if the Pacha becomes rich, he is fqueezed by extraordinary demands. He is often left to accumulate in peace; but when he has once amaffed great wealth, fome expedient is always contrived to bring to Conftantinople his coffers or his head.

182 TRAVEIS IN

At prefent, the Porte is on good terms with Djezzar, on account, it is faid, of his former fervices; in fact, he greatiy contributed to the the ruin of Daher: he deftroyed the family of that prince, reftainel the Bedouins of Saker, humbled the Druzes, and nearly annihilated the Moutoualis. Thefe fuccefles have caufed him to te continued in his government for ten years. He has lately received the three tails, and the title of Wazir (Vifir), which accompanies them ( $\hat{\rho}$ ); but the Porte, as ufual, begins to take umbrage at his good fortune. She is alarmed at his enterprizing firit, and he, on his fide, is apprehenfive of the duplicity of the Divan : fo that a mutual diftruft prevails, from which fome important confequences may well be expected. IHe maintains a greater number of foldiers, and in better condition than any other Pacha, and takes care to enroll none but thofe of his own country; that is to fay, Bofhnaks and Arnauts; their number is about nine hundred horfemen. Added to theefe, he has nine thoufand Mograbian infantry. The gates of his frontier towns have regular guards, which is ufual in the reft of Syria.

By fea, he has one frigate, two galiots, and a xcbeck, which he has lately taken from ( $p$ ) Every Pacha of three tails is filed Vifir.
the Maltere. By thefe precautions, apparently intended to fecure him from foreign enemies, he has put himfelf"on his guard againft the ftratagems of the Divan. More than one attempt has been made to deftroy him by Capidjis; but he has watched them fo narrowly, that they have not been able to effect any thing; and the cholic, of which two or three of them have fuddenly died, has cooled the zeal of thofe who take upon them fo ticklifh an employment. Befides, he conftantly maintains fpics in pay, in the Scrai, or palace of the Sultan; and his money procures him plenty of protectors. By thefe means he has juft obtained the Pachalic of Damafcus, to which he had long afpired, and which is, in fact, the moft important in all Syria. He has refigned that of Acre to a Mamiouk, named Selim, his friend, and the companion of his fortune; but this man is fo devoted to him, that Djezzar may be confidered as in poffefiion of both the governments. It is faid, he is folliciting that of Aleppo; which if he procures, he will poffe's nearly the whole of Syria, and the Porte poffibly may find in him a rebel more dangerous than Daher; but, as conjectures concerning fuch events are of little ufe, I fhall pafs, without purfuing them any further, to give fome defcription of the moft remarkable places of this Pachalic (q).

EGYPT AND SYRIA.

The firft that prefents itfelf, as we procced along the coaft, is the town of Berytus, which the Arabs pronource Bairout ( $r$ ), like the ancient Greeks. It is fituated in a plain, which, from the foot of Lebanon, runs out into the fea, narrowing to a point, about two leagues from the ordinary line of the finore, and on the north fide forms a pretty long road, which receives the river of Nahr-elSalib, called alfo Nahr-Bairout. This river has fuch frequent floods in winter, as to have occafioned the building of a confiderable bridge; but it is in fo ruinous a fate as to be impaffable: the bottom of the road is rock, which chafes the cables, and renders it very infecure. From hence, as we proceed weft-
(q) It is afferted on good authority, that Djezzar, dreading a vifit from his old friend, the Captain Pacha, now employed in quelling the revolt in Egypt, has quitted his government, and prudently fled with all his ill-gotten wealth, it is fuppofed, into Bofnia, his native country, at the commencement of the year 1787. T.
$(r)$ This is in fact the true pronunciation of the Greek word Bìput.
ward towards the point, we reach, after an hour's journey, the town of Bairout. This, till lately, belonged to the Druzes; but Djezzar thought proper, as we have leen, to take it from them, and place in it a Turkinh garrifon. It ftill continues, however, to be the emporium of the Maronites and the Druzes, where they export their cottons and filks, almoft all of which are defined for Cairo. In return, they receive rice, tobacco, coffee, and fpecie, which they exchange again for the corn of the Bekaa, and the Hauran. This commerce maintains near fix thoufand perfons. The dialect of the inhabitants is juftly cenfured as the moft corrupt of any in the country; it unites in itfelf the twelve faults enumerated by the Arabian grammarians.

The port of Bairout, formed like all the others on the coaft, by a pier, is, like them, choaked up with fands and ruins. The town is furrounded by a wall, the foft and fandy fone of which may be pierced by a cannon ball, without breaking or crumbling; which was unfavourable to the Rufians in their attack; but in other refpects this wall, and its old towers, are defencelefs. Trwo inconveniencies will prevent Bairout from ever becoming a place of ftrength; for it is commanded by a chain of hills to the fouth-eaft, and is intirely deftitute of water, which the women are obliged to fetch from a well at the diftance of half a quarter of a league, though what they find there is but indifferent. Djezzar has undertaken to conftruct a public fountain, as he has done at Acre; but the canal which I faw dug, will foon become ufelefs. By digging, in order to form refervoirs, fubterraneous ruins have been difcovered, from which it appears, shat the modern town is built on the ancient one. The fame may be obferved of Latakia, Antioch, Tripoli, Saide, and the greater part of the towns on the coaft, which has been occafioned by earthquakes, that have deftroyed them at different periods. We find likewife without the walls to the weft, heaps of rubbifh, and fome fhafts of columns, which indicate that Bairout has been formerly much larger than at prefent. The plain around it is entirely planted with white mulberry trees, which, unlike thofe of Tripoli, are young and flourißhing; becaufe, in the territories of the Druzes, there is no danger in renewing them.

The filk, therefore, produced here, is of the very fineft quality. As we defcend from the mountains, no profpect can be more delightful than to behold, from their fummits or declivities, the rich carpet of verdure, formed by the tops of thefe ufeful trees in the diftant bottom of the valley.

In fummer, it is inconvenient to refide at Bairout, on account of the heat, and the warmth of the water; the town, however, is not unhealthy, though it is faid to have been fo formerly. It has ceafed to be unhealthy fince the Emir Fakr-el-din planted a wood of fir trees, which is fill ftanding, a league to the fouthward of the town. The monks of Mahr Hanna, who are not fyftematical philofophers, have made the fame obfervation refpecting feveral convents; they even affert, that fince the heights have been covered with pines, the waters of feveral fprings have become more abundant, and more falubrious; which agrees with other known facts (s).

The
(s) Dr. Franklin, to whom mankind are indebted for fo much, in every branch of knowledge, has given very fatisfactory reafons for this falutary effect of trees, particularly pines; the fubject has been well treated too by feveral Englifh

The country of the Druzes affords few interefting places. The moft remarkable is Dair-el-Kamar, or Houfe of the Moon, which is the capital and refidence of the Emirs. It is not a city, but a large town ill built, and very dirty. It is fituated on the back of a mountain, at the foot of which flows one of the branches of the ancient river Tamyras, at prefent the rivulet of Damour. It is inhabited by Greek Ca tholics and Schifmatics, Maronites and Druzes, to the number of fifteen or eighteen hundred. The Serai, or palace of the prince, is only a large wretched houre falling to ruin.

I muft alfo mention Zahla, a village at the foot of the mountains in the valley of Bekaa; for the laft twenty years this place is become the centre of correfpondence between Balbek, Damafcus, Bairout, and the interior of the Mountains. It is even faid that counterfeit money is made here ; but the clumfy artifts, though they can imitate the Turkifh piafters, have not been able to approach the workmanfhip of the German Dahlers.

Englifh and French philofophers; among others, by the Marquis de Chaftellux, in his Travels in North America, under the article Virginia, $T$.

I neglected

I neglected to obferve that the country of the Druzes is divided into Katas, fections, or diftricts, which have each of them a diftinet character. The Matra, which is to the north, is the moft ftony, and abounds moft in iron. The Garb affords the moft beautiful pines. The Sabel, or fat Country, which lies next the fea, produces mulberry-trees and vineyards. The Shoulf, in which Dair-el-Kamar is fituated, has the greateft number of Okkals, and produces the finett filks. The Tefach, or diftrict of Apples, which is to the fouth, abounds in that fpecies of frilit. The Sbakif grows the beft tobacco, and the name of Djourd is given to all the higher country and the coldeft of the mountains: to this diftrict in fummer the fhepherds retire with their flocks.

I have already faid that the Druzes had received among them the Greek Chritians and Maronites, and granted them lands to build convents on. The Greek Catholics, availing themfelves of this permiffion, have founded twelve within the laft feventy years. The principal is Mar-Hanna: this monaftery is fituated oppofite the village of Shouair, on a fteep declivity, at the bottom of which a torrent runs in winter into the Nahr-clkelb. The convent built amid rocks and blocks of ftone is far from magnificent, and confifts of a dormitory with two rows of little cells, above which is a terrace fubftantially vaulted; it maintains forty monks. Its chief merit confifts in an Arabic PrintingPrefs, the only one which has fucceeded in the Turkifh empire. This has been eftablifhed about fifty years, and the reader will perhaps not be offended if I fay fomething of its hiftory.

At the commencement of the prefent century, the Jefuits, profiting by the refpect which the protection of France procured them, manifefted, in their houfe at Aleppo, that zeal for the improvement of knowledge which they have every where fhewn. They had founded a fchool in that city, intended to educate the children of Chriftians in the doctrines of the Catholic religion, and enable them to confute heretics; this latter article is always a principal object with the miffionaries; whence refults a rage for controverfy, which caufes perpetual differences among the partifans of the various fects in the eaft. The Latins of Aleppo, excited by the Jefuits, prefently recommenced as here tofore, their difputations with the Greeks; but as logic requires a methodical acquaintance with language, and the Chriftians, excluded from the Mahometan-fchools, knew nothing but the valgar Arabic, they were unable to indulge their paflion for controverfy in writing. To remedy this, the Latins determined to ftudy the Arabic language grammatically. The pride of the Mahometan Doctors at firf refufed to lay open their learning to the Injeideis, but, their avarice overpowerd their feruples; and for a few Purfes, this fo much boafted feience of grammar, and the Naiou, was introduced among the Chrifians. The ftadent who diftinguifhed himfelf moft by his progrefs was named Abd-allah-Zaker, who to his own defire of learning, added an ardent zeal to promulgate his knowledge and his opinions. It is impofible to determine to what length this fpiiit of making profelytes might have been carried at Aleppo, had not an accident rot unufial in Turkey, difurbed its progrefs. The Schifmatics, vexed at the attacks of Abdallah, endeavoured to procure his ruin at Confantinople. The Patriarch, excited by the priefts, reprefented him to the Vifir as a dangerous man; the Vifir, accutomed to thefe difputes, feigned to pay no attention to his complaint; but the patriarch, backing his reafons with a few purfes, the Vifir delivered him a Kat-/berif, or warrant of the Sultan, which, according to cuftom, conveyed an order to cut off Abd-allah's head. Fortunately he received timely warning, and efcaped into Lebanon, where his life was in fafety: but in quitting his country, he by no means abandoned his ideas of reformation, and was more refolutely bent than ever on propagating his opinions. This he was only able to effect by writings; and manufcripts feemed to him an inadequate method. He was no ftranger to the advantages of the prefs, and had the courage to form the three-fold project of writing, founding types, and printing; he fucceeded in this enterprize from the natural goodnefs of his underfanding, and the knowledge he had of the art of engraving, which he had already practifed in his profefs fion as a jeweller. He ftood in need of an affociate, and was lucky enough to find one who entered into his defigns: his brother, who was Superior at Mar-Enana, prevailed on YOL, II.

192  TRAVELS IN

0
him
him to make that convent his refidence, and from that time, abandoning every other care, he gave himfelf up entirely to the execution of his project. His zeal and induftry had fuch fuccefs, that in the year 1733, he publifhed the Pfalms of David in one volume. His characters were found fo correct and beautiful, that even his enemies purchafed his book; and fince that period there have been ten impreffions of it; new characters have been founded, but nothing has been executed fuperior to his. They perfectly imitate handwriting; they exprefs the full and the fine letters, and have not the meagre and ftraggling appearance of the Arabic characters of Europe. He paffed twenty years in this manner, printing different works, which, in general, were tranlations of our books of devotion. Not that he was acquainted with any of the European languages, but the Jefuits had aiready tranflated feveral books, and as their Arabic was extremely bad, he corrected their tranflations, and often fubfituted his own verfion, which is a model of purity and elegance. The Arabic he wrote was remarkable for a clear, precife, and harmoniona file, of which that language bad been thought thought incapabic, and which proves that, fhould it ever be cultivated by a learned people, it will become one of the moft copious and expreffive in the world. After the death of Abd-allah, which happened about 1755, he was fucceeded by his pupil; and his fucceffors were the religious of the houfe itfelf; they have continued to found letters and to print, but the bufinefs is at prefent on the decline, and feems likely to be foon entirely laid afide. The books have but little fale, except the Pfalter, which is the claffic of the Chriftian children, and for which there is a continual demand. The expences arc confiderable, as the paper comes from Eum rope, and the labour is very flow. A little art would remedy the firft inconvenience, but the latter is radical. The Arabic characters requiring to be connected together, to join them well and place them in a right line requires an immenfe and minute attention. Befides this, the combination of the leteres varying according as they occur, at the beginning, in the middle, or at the end of a word, it is neceffary to found a great number of donble letters; by which means the cafes being too muliplied, are not collefted under the hand of a compofitor; but he is obliged to run the whole length of a table eighteen feet long, and feek for his letters in near nine hundred divifions: hence a lofs of time which will never allow Arabic Preffes to attain the perfection of ours. As for the inconfiderable fale of the books, this muft be attributed to the bad choice they have made of them; infead of tranflating works of real utility, calculated to awaken a tafte for the arts indifcriminately among all the Arabs, they have only tranflated myftic books peculiar to the Chriftians, which, by their mifanthropic morality, are formed to excite a difguft for all fcience, and cven for life itfelf. ()f this the reader will judge from the following Catalogue:

Cataldgue of the Books printid at the Con:wht of Mar-hanna-el-Shouar, ir the mokntains of the Druzes.

1. TliE balance of Time, or the Difference between Time and Eternity, by Father Nicremberg, Jefuit.

> ㄱ. N:
2. The
EGYPT AND SYRIA.
2. The Vanity of the World, by Didaco Stella, Jefuit.
3. The Sinner's Guide, by Louis de Grenade, Jefuit.
4. The Prieft's Guide.
5. The Chriftian's Guide.
6. The Food of the Soul.
7. The Contemplation of Paffion Week.
8. Chriftian Doctrine.
9. Explication of the Seven Penitential Pfalms.
io. The Pfalms of David, tranfleted from the Greek.
II. The Prophecies.
12. The Gofpel and Epiftes.

I 3: Les Heures Chretiennes (hourly prayers) ; to which is added, the Chriftian Perfection of Rodriguez, and the Regulation of the Monks; botb printed at Rome.

| 2. Abatil-cl-Aalam. 3. Morfhed-el-Kati. 4 Mor:hed-el-Kahen. 5. Morfhed-cl-Mafihi. 6. Koutel Nafs. 7. Taammol-cl-Afboua. 8. Tãlim-el-Mafihi. 9. Tafîr-el-Sabat. 10. El Mazathir. ir. El Onbouat. 12. El-Endjil oua el Rafayel. I3. El-Soucyat. |  |
| :---: | :---: |
|  |  |
|  |  |
|  |  |
|  |  |

$\mathrm{O}_{3}$
18

In Manufcripts this Convent poffeffes :

1. The Imitation of Jefus Chrift.
2. The Garden of the Monks, or Life of the Holy Fathers of the Defert.
3. Moral Theology of Duzembaum.
4. The Sermons of Segneri.
5. Theology of St. Thomas, in 4 vol. folio, the copying of which coit one thoufand two hundred and fifty livres ( 52 l.).
6. Sermons of St. John Chryfoftom.
7. Principles of Law's, by Claude Virtieu.
8.     * Theological Dirputes of the Monk Ceorge.
9. Logic, tranflated from the Italian, by a Maronite.
10.     * The Light of Hearts, by Paul of Smyrna, a converted Jew.

Ir. * Queftions and Enquiries concerning Grammar, and the Nabou, by Bifhop Germain, Maronite.

1. Taklid-el-Masib. 2. Befan cl Rohoban. 3. Elm el Nia l'Bouzembaoum. 4. Mzouacz Sainari. 5. Lahout Mar Touma. 6. Mawaez Fomm el Dahab. 7. Kawzed e] Naouamis l'Kloud Firtiou. 8. Madjadalat el Anba Djordji. 9. El Mantek. 10. Nour el. Aebab. Ir. El Mataleb wa cl Mebàhes,
2.     * Poems of the fame, on pious fubjects.

I3. * Poems of the Curate Nicholas, brother of Abdallah Zaker.
i4. * Abridgment of the Arabic Dictionary, called the Ocean.
N. B. All, the efe are the productions of Cibriftians; thofe marked with a far * were originally written in Arabic: the following are Mabometan zoorks.
I. The Koran.
2. The Ocean of the Arabic Tongue, tranflated by Golius.
3. The Thoufand Diftichs of Ebn-clMalek, on Grammar.
4. Explication of the Thoufand Diftichs.
5. Grammar of Adjeroumia.
6. Rhetoric of Taftazani.
7. Seffions, or Pleafant Stories of Hariri.
8. Poems of Omar-ebn-el-Fardi, of the amorous kind.
12. Diwan Djermanos. 13. Diwan Ankoula. 14. Moktafar el Kamous.-1. Koran. 2. El Kamous 1'Firowzàbad!. 3. El Alf bait l'Ebn-el-malck. 4. Tafsir el-alfbait. 5. El-Adjiroumia. 6. Elm el Bayan l'Taftazani. 7. Makamat el Hariri. 8. Diwan omar Ebn el fardi.

$$
0_{4} \quad 9 . \text { Science }
$$

9. Science of the Arabic Tongue; a fmall book in the nature of the Synomymes Francais, of Abbé Girard.
10. Medicine of Ebn-Sina, (Avicenna).
II. Simples and Drugs, tranflated from Diofcorides, by Ebn-el-Bitar.
11. Difpute of the Phyficians.
12. Theological Fragments on the different Sects of the World.
13. A Little Book of Tales (of little value) from which $I$ have an extract.
14. Hiftory of the Jews, by jofephus, a very incorrect tranflation.

A fmall book of Aftronomy, on the principles of Ptolemy, and fome others of no value.

This is all the library of the convent of Mar-Hanna, from which we may form an idea of the literature of Syria, fince, excepting one poffeffed by Djezzar, there does not exift another. Among the original books, there is not one, which, in fact, merits a 9. Fakah el Logat. ro. El tob l'Ebn fina. ir. El Mofradat. 12. Daouat el Otobba. 13. Abarat el Motakallamin. 14. Nadim el wahid. I5. Tarik el Yhoud, d'Youfefous.
ranflation. Even the Seffions of Harivi, are only interefting from their ftyle, and, in the whole order, there is but one monk who underfands them, nor are the others found much more intelligible by his brethren in general. In the adminiftration of this houfe, and the manners of the religious who inhabit it, we find fome fingularities which deferve our notice.

Their order is that of Saint Bafil, who is to the orientals what Saint Benedict is to the weftern Chriftians, except that they have adopted a few alterations in confequence of their peculiar fituation, and the court of Rome has given her fanction to the code they drew up thirty years ago. They may pronounce the vows at the age of fixteen, for it has ever been the aim of all Monaftic legiflators to captivate the minds of their profelytes at an early age, that they may more implicitly comply with their inftitutions. Thefe vows are, as every where elfe, vows of poverty, obedience, devotion to the order; and chaftity; and it muft be allowed that they are more Atrictly obferved in this country than in Europe. The condition of the oriental Monks is infinitely more hard than that of the European. We may judge of this from the following defcription of their domeftic life. Every day they have feven hours prayers at church, from which no perfon is exempted. They rife at four in the morning, go to bed at nine in the evening, and make only two meals, viz. at nine and five. They live perpetually on meagre diet, and hardly allow themfelves flefh meat in the moft critical diforders. Like the other Greeks, they have three lents a year, and a multitude of fafts, during which they neither eat eggs, nor milk, nor butter, nor cven cheefe. Almoft the whole year they live on lentils and beans with oil, rice and butter, curds, olives, and a little falt fifh. Their bread is a little clumfy loaf, badly leavened, which ferves two days, and is frefh made only once a week. With this food, they pretend to be lefs fubject to maladies than the peafants; but it muft be remarked, that they have all iffues in their arms, and many of them are attacked by Hernias, owing, as I imagine, to their immoderate ufe of oil. The lodging of each is a narrow cell, and his whole furniture confifts in a mat, a matrafs, and a blanket; but no flreets, for of thefe they have no need, as they fleep with their cloaths on. Their cloathing is a coarfe cotton fhirt ftriped with blue, a pair of drawers, a waiftcoat, and a furplice of coarfe brown cloth, to ftiff and thick, that it will fand upright without a fold. Contrary to the cuftom of the country they wear their hair eight inches long, and, instead of a hood, a cylinder of felt, ten inches high, like thofe of the Turkifh cavalry. Ewery one of them, in fhort, except the Superior, Purveyor, and Vicar, exercifes fome trade either neceflary or ufeful to the houfe; one is a weaver, and weaves fluffs; another a tailor, and makes cloaths; this is a fhoemaker, and makes their fhoes; that a mafon, and fuperintends their buildings. Two of them have the management of the kitchen, four work at the Printing-prefs, four are employed in Book-binding, and all affift at the Bakehoufe, on the day of making bread. The expence of maintaining forty or five and forty perfons, of which the convent is compofed, does not exceed the annual fum of twelve purfes, or fix hundred and twentyfive pounds; and from this fum muft be deducted the expences of their hofpitality to all paftengers, which of itfelf forms a confidera-ble
ble article. It is true, mof of thefe paffengers leave prefents or alms, which make a part of the revenue of the houfe; the other part arifes from the culture of the lands. They farm a confiderable extent of ground, for which they pay four hundred piaftres to two Emirs: thefe lands were cleared out by the firft Monks themfelves; butat prefent they commit the culture of them to peafants, who pay them one half of all the produce. This produce confifts of white and yellow filks, which are fold at Bairout, fome corn and wines $(\rho)$, which, for want of demand, are fent
( $p$ ) Thefe wines are of three forts, the red, the white, and the yellow; the white, which are the moft rare, are fo bitter as to be difagrecable. The two others, on the contrary, are too fweet and fugary. This arifes from their being boiled, which makes them refemble the baked wines of Provence. The general cuftom of the country is, to reduce the muft to two thirds of its quantity. It is improper for a common drink at meals, becaufe it ferments in the ftomach. In fome places, however, they do not boil the red, which then acquires a quality almoft equal to that of Bordeaux. The yellow wine is much eftecmed among our merchants, under the name of Golden Wine (Vin d'or), which has been given it from its colour. The moft efteemed is produced from the hill fides of the Zouk, or village of Mafbeh near Antoura. It is not neceffary to fent as prefents to their benefactors, or confumed in the houfe. Formerly, the religious abrtained from drinking wine; but, as is cuftomary in all focieties, they have gradually relaxed from their primitive aufterity: they have alfo begun to allow the ufe of tobacco and coffee, notwithftanding the remonftrances of the older Monks, who are ever jealous of too much indulging the habits of youth.

The fame regulations are obferved in all the houfes of the order, which, as I have already faid, amount to twelve. The whole number of thefe religious is eftimated at one heat it, but it is too fugary. Such are the wines of Lebanon, fo boafted by the Grecian and Roman epicures. The Europeans may try them, and fee how far they agree with the ancients in opinion: but they fhould obferve, that the paffage by fea ferments boiled wines a fecond time, and burfts the calks. It is probable, that the inhabitants of Lebanon have made no charige in their ancient method of making wines, nor in the culture of their vines. They are difpored on poles of fix, or eight feet high. They are + not pruned as in France, which certainly muft greatly injure both the quantity and quality of the crop. The vintage begins about the end of September. 'The conFent of Mar-hanra snakes about one hundred and fifty Rabia, or earthen jais, containing about one hundred and. ten pints each; the price current in the country, is about feven or ciuht fole, (four nencr; the French pint.
hundred and fifty; to which muft be added; five convents of women which depend on them. The firf fuperiors who founded them, thought they had performed a good work; but at prefent the order repent it has been done, becaufe nuns in a Turkifh country are very dangerous, as they are connected with the wealthicft merchants of Aleppo, Damafcus, and Cairo, who for a ftipulated fums get rid of their daughters by placing them in thefe convents. The merchants likewife beftow on them confiderable alms. Several of them give an hundred piftoles yearly, and even as high as one hundred Lonis d'or, or three thoufand livres (one handred and twen-ty-five pounds), without requiring any other intereft than their prayers to God, that he would preferve them from the rapacity of the Pachas. Eut, as they imprudently attract their notice, by the extreme luxary of their drefs and furniture, neither their prefents, nor the prayers of the religions, can fave them from cxitortion. Not long fince, one of thee merchants yentured to build a houfe at Jumafcus, which coft him upwards of one homded and twenty thonfand livres, (five thonerne pounds: The Pache wherved it, and prefently gave the owner to underftand, he had a curiofity to fee his new houfe, and would pay him 2 vifit, and take a difh of cofEee with him. As the Pacha, therefore, might have been fo delighted with it, as not to have quitted it again, it became neceffary to avoid his politenefs, by making him a prefent of thirty thoufand livres, (feven thoufand five hundred pounds).

Next to Mar-Hanna, the moft remarkable convent is that of Dair Mokalles, or St. Saviour. It is fituated three hours journey to the north-eaft of Saide. The religious had collected there a confiderable number of printed Arabic books, and manufcripts: but Djezzar, having carried the war into thefe diftricts about eight years ago, his foldiers piliaged the houfe, and took away all the books.

As we return to the fea coaft, we muft firft remark Saide, the degenerate offspring of ancient sidon ( $q$ ). This town, formerly the refidence of the Pacha, is like all the Turkifh towns, ill built, dirty, and full of modern ruins,
(q) The name of Sidon ftill fubrits in a fmall village half a league from Saide.

ruins. Its length along the fea frore is about fix hundred paces, and its breadth one humdred and fifty. On the fouth fide, on a fmall eminence, is a fort built by Degnizla. From hence we have a view of the fea, the city, and the country: but a few cannon would eafily deftroy this whole work, which is only a large tower of a fingle ftory, already half in ruins. At the other extremity of the town, that is, to the north wert, is the cartle, which is built in the fea itfelf, eighty paces from the main land, to which it is joined by arches. To the weft of this caftle is a floal fifteen feet high above the fea, and about two hundred paces long. The fpace between this thoal and the caftle forms the road, but veflels are not fafe there in bad weather. The fhoal, which extends along the town, has a bafon enclofed by a decayed pier. This was the ancient port ; but it is fo choaked up by rands, that boats alone can enter its mouth, near the cafle. Fakr-el-din, Emir of the Jruzes, deftroyed all thefe little ports, from Bairout to Acre, by finking boats and ftones to prevent the Turkifh fhips from entering them. The bafon of Saide, if it were emptied, might contain twenty or twenty-five fimall vefiels.

Oin the fide of the fea, the town is abfolutely without any wall; and that which enclofes it on the land fide is no better than a prifon wall. The whole artillery does not exceed fix cannon, and thefe are without carriages and gunners. The garrifon fcarcely amounts to one hundred men. The water comes from the river Aoula, through open canals, from which it is fetched by the women. Thefe canals ferve alfo to water the orchards of mulberry and lemon trees.

Saide is a confiderable trading town, and is the chief emporium of Damafcus, and the interior country. The French, who are the only Europeans to be found there, have a conful, and fiye or fix commercial houfes. Their exports confift in filks, and particularly in raw and fpun cottons. The manufacture of this cotton is the principal art of the inhabitants, the number of whom may, be eftimated at about five thoufand.

Six leagues to the fouth of Saide, following the coaft, we arrive by a very level plain at the village of Sour. In this name we, with difiulty, recognize that of Tyre, which we receive from the Latins; but if we recollect that the $y$ was formerly pronounced ou; and

VoL. II. $f$ obferve,
obferve, that the Latirs have fubfituted the $t$ for the $\theta$ of the Greeks, and that the $\hat{\theta}$ had the found of the Englifn th, in the word think, we fhall be lefs furprifed at the alteration. This has not happencd among the orientals, who have always called this place T Jour and Sozi-

The name of Tyre recalls to the memory of the hiforical reader fo many great events, and fuggens fo many reflections, that I think I may be allowed to enter with fome minutener's into the defcription of a place, which was, in ancient times, the theatre of an immente commerce anci navigation, the nurfe of arts and foiences, and the city of, perhops, the moft induftrious and active people the world has yer feen.

Sour is fituated on a peninfula, which pro.jects from the fhore into the fea, in the form of a mallet with an nval head. 'I his head is a folid rock, covered with a brown cultivable earth, which forms a fmall plain of about eight hundred paces long, by four hundred boad. The ifthmus, which joins this plain to the continent, is of pure fea fand. This difference of foil renders the ancient infular fate of the plain, before Alexander joined it to the flore by a mole, very vifible. The fea, by covering this mole with fand, has enlarged it by fucceffive accumulations, and formed the prefent ifthmus. The village of Sour is fituated at the junction of this ifthmus with the ancient ifland, of which it does not cover above one third. The point to the north is occupied by a bafon, which was a port evidently formed by ait, but is at prefent fo choaked up that children pafs it without being wet above the middle. The opening at the point is defended by two towers, correfponding with each other, between which formerly paffed a chain fifty or fixty feet long, to fhut the harbour. Frome thefe towers began aline of walls; which, afe ter furrounding the bafon, enclofed the whole inland; but at prefent we can only follow its traces by the foundations which run along the fhore, except in the vicinity of the port, where the Motoulis made fome repairs twenty year's ago, but thefe ate again fallen to decay.

Further on in the fea, to the north-weft of the point, at the difance of about three bundred paces, is a ridge of rocks on a level with the water. The fpace which feparates them from the main land in front, $D 2 \quad$ forms forms a fort of road, where vefieis may anchor with more fafety than at Saide; they are not, however, free fiom danger, for they are expofed to the north-weft winds, and the bottom injures the cables. That part of the illand which lies between the villige and the fea, that is the weftern fide, is open; and this ground the inhabitants have laid out in gardens; but fuch is their floth, that theN contain far more weeds than ufeful plants. The fouth fide is fandy, and more covercd with rubbih. The whole village contains only fifty or fixty poor families, which live obfcurely on the produce of their little ground., and a trifling fithery. The houfes they occupy are no longer, as in the time of Strabo, edifices of three or four ftorics high, but wretched huts, ready to crumble to pieces. Formerly they were deiencelefs towards the land, but the Motoulis, who took poficilion of it in 1706 , enclofed it with a wall of twenty feat high, which fill fublifis. The moft remarkable building is a ruin at the fouth-eart corner. This was a Chritian church, built probably by the Crufaders; a part of the choir only is remaining ; clofe to which, amid heaps of fones, lie two benutiful columns, with fhafts of red granite, of a kind unknown in Syria. Djezzar, who has ftripped all this country to ornament his mofque at Acre, wifhed to carry them away, but his engineers were not able even to move them.

Leaving the village on the fide of the ifth-- mus, at a hundred paces from the gate, we come to a ruined tower, in which is a well, where the women go to fetch water. This well is fifteen or fixteen feet deep; but the depth of the water is not more than two or three fect. Better water is not to be found upon the coaft. From fome unknown caufe, it becomes troubled in September, and continues fome days full of a reddifh clay. This feafon is obferved as a kind of feftival by the inhabitants, who then come in crowds to the well, and pour into it a bucket of fea water, which, according to them, has the virtue of reftoring the clearnefs of the fpring. As we proceed along the ifthmus, towards the continent, we perceive, at equal diftances, the ruins of arcades, which lead in a right line to an eminence, the only one in the plain. This hill is not factitious, like thofe of the defert; it is a natural rock of about one hundred and fifty feet in circumference, by forty or fifty

$$
\text { P }_{3} \text { high: }
$$

214

 TRAぞEZSINhigh : nothing is to be difcovered there but a houfe in ruins, and the tomb of a Shaik or Santo:a ( $r$ ), remarkable for the white dome at the top. The diftance of this rock from Sour is about a quarter of an hour's walk. As we approach it, the arcades I have mentioned become more numerous, and are not so high; they terminate by a continued line, and, at the foot of the rock, form fuddenly a right angle to the fouth, and procced obliquely toward the fea: we may follow their direction for above an hour's walk at a horfe's pace, till, at length, we diftinctly perceive, by the channel on the arches, that this is no other than an aqueduct. This channel is three feet wide, by two and a half deep; and is formed of a cement harder than the fones themfelves. At laft we arrive at the well where it terminates, or rather from which it begins. This is what fome travellers have ralled the well of Solomon, but, among the inhabitants of the country, it is knowin only ty the name of Rairct-ain, or, Head of the Spring. They reckon one principal, two lefier, and feveral fmall ones; the whole forming a piece of mafonry which is neither of hewn or rough ftone, but of cement mixed with fea pebbles. To the fouth, this fonework rifes about cighteen feet from the ground, and fifteen to the northwaid. On this fide is a fope, wide and gradual crough to permit carts to afcend to the iop: when there, we difover what is very furpaifing ; for, inftead of finding the watcir low, or no higher than the ground level, it reaches to the top, that is the column which fills the well, is fifteen feet higher than the ground. Befides this, the water is not calm, but bubbles up like a torrent, and ruhes through channels formed at the furface of the well. It is fo abundant as to drive three mills which arc near it, and form a little rivulet before it reaches the fea, which is only four hundred paces diftant. The mouth of the principal well is an octagon, each fide of which is twenty-three feet three inches, the diameter, therefore, munt be fixty-one feet. It has been faid that this well has no bottom; but the traveller La Roqueafferts, that in his time he found it at fix and thirty fa- + thom. It is remarkable, that the motion of the water at the furface, has corroded the interior lining of the well, fo that its edge refts almoft upon nothing, and forms a half arch furpended over the water; among the channels which branch out from it, is a principal one which joins that of the arches I have mentioned: by means of thefe arches, the water was formerly conveycd to the rock, and from the rock, by the ifthmus, to the tower, whence the water was drawn. In other refpects, the country is a plain of about two leagues wide, furrounded by a chain of confiderably high mountains, which firetch from Kafmia to Cape Blanco. The foil is a black fat earth, on which a fmall quantity of corn and cotton are fuccefsfully cultivated.
(r) Among the Mahometne, the word Shaik bears the various fignifications of fanton, bermit, idcot, and madman. They have the fame religious refpect for perfons difordered in their intcllects, which was ufual in the time of David.

Such is the prefent ftate of Tyre, which may fuggeft feveral obfervations relative to the fituation of that ancient city. We know, that at the time when Nabuchodonofor laid fiege to it, Tyre was on the continent; and appears to have ftood near Palce-Tyrus, that is, near the well; but, in that cafe, why was this aqueduit confructed at fo much expence (s) from the rock? Will it be alledged it was built after the Tyrians had removed into the inland? But prior to the time of Salmanafar, that is, one hundred and thirty-fix years before Na buchodonofor, their annals mention it as already exifing. "In the time of Eululæus, " king of Tyre," fays the hiftorian Menander, as cited by Jofephus ( $t$ ), "Salmanafar, king "6 of Affyria, having carriedthe war into Pho-" nicia, feveral towns fubmitted to his arms: " the Tyrians refifted him; but being foon "c abandoned by Sidon, Acre, and Palx"Tyrus, which depended on them, they " were reduced to their own forces. How" ever, they continued to defend themfelves, " and Salmanafar, recalled to Nineveh, left a "part of his army near the rivulets and the " aqueduct, to cut off their fupply of water. "Thefe remained there five years, during " which time the Tyrians obtained water by ". means of the wells they dug."
(s) The piles of the arches are nine fect wide.

If Palæ-Tyrus was a dependence of Tyre, Tyre then muft have been fituated elfewhere. It was not in the ifland, fince the inhabitants did not remove thither until after Nabuchodonofor. Its original fituation muf, therefore, have been on the rock. The name of (t) Antiq. Fudaic, lib, g. c. I4.
this city is a proof of it; for Trour, in Phosnician fignifies rock, and ftrong hold. On this rock the colony of Sidonians citablifhed themfelves, when driven from their country, two hundred and forty years before the building of Solomon's Temple. They made choice of this fituation, from the double advantage of a place which might be eafily defended, and the convenience of the adjacent road, which would contain and cover a great number of veffels. The population of this colony augmenting in time, and by the advantages of commerce, the Tyrians were in want of more water, and confructed the aqueduct. The induftry we find them remarkable for in the days of Solomon, may pertiaps induce us to attribute this work to that age. It murt, however, be very ancient, fince the water of the aqueduct has had time to form, by filtration, a confiderable incruftation, which, falling from the fides of the channel, or the infide of the vaults, has obftrufted whole arches. In order to fecure the aqueduct, it was neceffary that a number of inhabitants fhould fettle there, and hence the origin of Palæ-Tyrus. It may be alledged, this is a facitious fpring, formed by a fubterrancous canal from the mountains; but if fo, why was it not conducted directly to the rock? It feems much more probable it is natural ; and that they availed themfelves of one of thofe fubterranean rivers of which we find many in Syria. The idea of confining this water to force it to rife is worthy of the Phœenicians.

Things were thus fituated, when the king of Babylon, conqueror of Jerufalem, determined to deftroy the only city which continued to brave his power.' The Tyrians refifted him for thirteen years, at the end of which, wearied with endlefs efforts, they refolved to place the fea between them and their enemy, and paffed accordingly into the oppofite ifland, at a quarter of a league's diftance. Till this period the illand muft have contained few inhabitants, on account of the want of water (u). Necefity taught them to remedy this inconvenience by cifterns, the remains of which are ftill to be found in the form of vaulted caves, paved and walled with (u) Jofephus is miftaken, when the fpeaks of Tyre as built in an inand in the time of Firam. In his ufual manner he confounds its ancient with its pofterier flate. See Antio. F̌udaico lib. 8, c. 5o
the utmof care $(x)$. Alexander invaded the caft, and, to gratify his barbarous pride, Tyre was deiftroyed, but foon rebuilt; her new inhabitants profited by the mole, by which the Macedonians had made themfelves a pafiage to the ifland, and continued the aqueduct to the tower, where the water is drawn at this day. • But the arches being in many places wafting, and ferviceable in none, how is it that the water is conveyed thither? This mult be done by fecret conduits contrived in the foundations, and which fill continue to bring it from the well. A proof that the water of the tower comes from Ras-el-aen is, that it is troubled in September as at the tower, at which time it is of the fame colour, and it has at all times the fame tafte. Thefe conduits muft be very numerous; for though there are feveral lakes near the tower, yet the well does not ceafe to fupply a confiderable quantity of water.

The power of the city of Tyre on the Mediterranean, and in the weft, is well known; of this Carthage, Utica, and Cadiz are cele-(x) A conficicrable one has been lately difcovered without the walls, but nothing was found in it, and the Motfal!smo crde:edit to be fhut up.
brated monuments. We know that fhe extended her navigation even into the ocean, and carried her commerce beyond England to the north, and the Canaries to the fouth. Her connections with the eaft, though lefs known, were not lefs confiderable; the iflands of Tyrus, and Aradus, (the modern Barhain) in the Perfian Gulph. The cities of Faran and Pbomicum Oppiduan, on the Red Sea, in ruins even in the time of the Grecks, prove, that the Tyrians had long frequented the coafts of Arabia and the Incian fea; but there exifts an hiftorical fragment, which contains defcriptions the more valuable, as they prefent a picture of difant ages, perfectly fimilar to that of modern times. I fhall cite the words of the writer in all their prophetic enthufiafm, only correcting thofe expreffions which have hitherto been mifunderftood.
"Proud city, that art fituate at the cn"try of the fea! Tyre, who hatt faid, My " borders are in the midit of the feas ; hearken "s to the judgments pronounced againft thee! "Thou haft extended thy commerce to (dif* tant) inlands, among the inhabitants of (un" known) coafts. Thou makeft the fir trees " of Sanir (y) into Chips; the cedars of Le(y) Poffibly Mount Sawrine.
" banon are thy mafts; the poplars of Bifan

* thy oars. Thy failors are feated upon the " box-wood of Cyprus ( $\approx$ ), inlaid with ivory. *Thy fails and ftreamers are woven with * fine flax from Egypt; thy gaments are " dyed with the blue and purple of Hel" las (") (the Archipelago). Sidon and
"Arvad fend thee their rowers; Djabal
" (Djebila) her fkilful fhip-builders; thy " mathematicians and thy fages guide thy " barks; all the fhips of the fea are cmployed
" in thy commerce. The Perfian, the Ly-
" dian, and the Egyptian, rcceive thy wages:
" thy walls are hung round with their buck-
" lers, and their cuirafies. The fons of Ar-
" wad line thy parapets; and thy towers,
" guarded by the Djimedeans (a Phoenician "people), glitter with their brilliant qui-
(z) Box of Katim. By comparing difictent pafinger, we fhall be convinced this word does not mean Greece, but the Ine of Coprus, and perhaps the conatt of Ciliciu, where the box abounds. It agrees particularly with Cyprus, from it analogy with the town of Kitiom, and the people . f the Kiticns, on whom Eululeus made war in the time of Salrnanafar.
(a) In the Ficbrew הwew Elijpa, which locs not difier from Helles, the a cient name of the Ar hipeiato, preferved in Helles-fort.
"s vers. Every country is defirous of trading " with thee. Tarfus fends to thy markets
" iron, tin, and lead. Yonia (b), the country " of the Mofques, and of Teblis (c), fupply "thee with flaves, and brafen veffels. Ar" menia fonds thee mules, horfes, and horfe" men. The Arab of Dedan (between Alep"po and Damafcus), conveys thy merchan" dize. Numerous ifles exchange with thee " ivory and ebony. The Aramean (the Sy" rian) (d) brings thee rubies, purple, em" broidered iwork, fine linen, coral, and agate.
" The children of Ifrael and Judah fell thee "cheefe, balm, myrrh, raifins, and oil, andDa" mafcus fupplies the wine of Halboun, (per" haps Halab, where there are fill vines), and " fine wool. The Arabs of Oman offer to thy " merchants polifhed iron, cimamon, and " the aromatic reed; and the Arabians of
(b) Koun, pleafantly traveflied into javan, though the ancients never knew our $j$.
(c) Tobel, or Teblis, is alfo written Tefis, and lies to the north of Armenia, on the frontiers of Georgia. Thele countries are celchrated among the Greeks for flaves, and for the iron of the Chsclybes.
(i) This name extended to the Cappadocians, and the inlabitithts of the Upper Niefopotanio.
* Dedan
* Dedan bring thee rich carpets. The in " habitants of the Defert, and the Shaiks of "Kedar, exchange their lambs and their " goats for thy valuable merchandize. The "Arabs of Saba and Rama (in the Yemen) "enrich thee with aromatics, precious fones, " and gold ( $\rho$ ). The inhabitants of Haran, " of Kalana, (in Mefopotamia), and of Ad? e " na (near to Tarfus), the factors of the $\cdot$ "Arabs of Sheba (near the Dcdan), the A:" fyrians, and the Chaldeans, trade alro " with thee, and fell thee fhawls, garments " artfully embroidered, filver, mafts, cor" dage, and cedars; yea, the (boatted) vef" Sels of Tarfus, are in thy pay. O Tyre! " elate with the greatnefs of thy glory, and " the immenfity of thy riches; the waves of " the fea hall rife up againft thee; and the " tempeft plunge thee to the bottom of the " waters. Then fhall thy wealth be fiwallow" ed up with thee; and with thee in one day " fhall perifh thy commerce, thy imerchants " and correfpondents, thy failors, pilots, ar(e) This alfo, Strabo liz. 16. fays, that the Sabeans furnifhed Syria with all the gold that country received, before they were fupplanted by the inhabitants of Gerrha, near the mouth of the Euphrates.
" tifis?
" tifts, and foldiers, and the numberlefs peo" ple who dwell within thy walls. Thy " rowers fhall defert thy veffels. Thy pilots " fhall fit upon the fhore, looking forrow" fully toward the land. The nations whom " thou enrichedft, the kings whom thou " didft gratify with the multitude of thy " merchandize, fore afraid at thy ruin, fhall " cry bitterly in defpair; they fhall cut off " their hair; they fhall caft afhes on their " heads; they faall roll in the durt, and la" ment over thee, faying, Who fhall equal "Tyre, that queen of the fea ?" $(f)$.

The vicifitudes of time, or rather the barbarifm of the Greeks of the Lower Empire, and the Mahometans, have accomplifhed this prediction. Inftead of that ancient commerce fo active and fo extenfive, Sour, reduced to a miferable village, has no other trade than the exportation of a few facks of corn, and raw cotton, nor any merchant but a fingle Greek factor in the fervice of the French of Saide, who fcarcely makes fufficient profit to maintain his family. Nine leagues to the South of Sour, is the city of Acre, in Arabic
(f) See Ezekicl, chap. xxyii.

Vol. II.
Q called
called Akka, known in times of remote antiquity under the name of Aco, and afterwards cinder that of Ptolemais. It is fituated at the north angle of a bay, which extends in a femicircle of three leagues, as far as the point of Carmel. After the expulfion of the Crufaders, it remained almoft deferted; but in our time has again revived by the induftry of Daher; and the works erected by Djezzar, within the laft ten years, have iendered it one of the principal towns upon the coaft.

The mofque of this Pacha is boafted as a mafter-piece of eaftern tafte. The bazar, or covered market, is not inferior even to thofe of Aleppo, and its public fountain furpafies in elegance thofe of Damafcus. This laft is alfo the moft ufeful work; for, till then, Acre was only fupplied by a ruinous well; the water, however, is fill, as formerly, of a very indifferent quality. The Pacha has derived the more honour from thefe works, as he was himfelf both the enginecr and artichect: he formed the plans, drew the defigns, and fuperintended the execution. The port of Acre ins one of the beft lituated on the coaft, as it is helte:ed from the north and north-weft winds by the town itfelf; but it is greatly choak:d choaked up fince the time of Fakr-el-din. Djezzar has contented himfelf with making a landing-place for boats. The fortifications, though more frequently repaired than any other in all Syria, are of no importance; there are only a few wretched low towers, near the port, on which cannon are mounted, but thefe rufty iron pieces are fo bad, that fome of them burft every time they are fired. Its defence on the land fide, is only a mere garden wall without any ditch.

This country is a naked plain, longer than that of Sour, but not fo wide; it is furrounded by fmall mountains, which make an angle at Cape Blanco, and extend as far as Carmel. The unevennefs of the country caufes the winter rains to fettle in the low grounds, and form lakes which are unwholefome in fummer from their infectious vapours. In other refpects, the foil is fertile, and both corn and cotton are cultivated with the greateft fuccefs. Thefe articles form the bafis of the commerce of Acre, which is becoming more flourifhing every day. Of late, the Pacha, by an abufe common throughout all the Turkifh empire, has monopolized all the trade in his own hands; no cotton can be Q2 fold fold but to him, and from him every purchafe muft be made ; in vain have the European merchants claimed the privileges granted them by the Sultan; Djezzar replied, that he was the Sultan in his country, and continued his monojoly. Thefe merchants in general are French, and have fix houfes at Acre, with a conful; an Imperial agent too is lately fettled there, and about a year ago, a refident for Rufia.

That part of the bay of Acre in which fhips anchor with the greatef fecurity lies to the north of Mount Carmel, below the villiage of Haifa, (commonly called Caiffa). The bottom is good holding ground and does not chafe the cables; but this hatbour is open to the north-weft wind, which blows violently along ali this coaft. Mount Carmel, which commands it to the foutin, is a flattened cone, and very rocky; it is about two thoufind feet high. We fill find among the brambles, wild vines and olive trees, which prove that induftry has formerly been employed even in this ungrateful foil : on the fummit is a chapel dedicated to the prophet Elias, which affords an extenfive profpect over the feal and land. To the fouth.
fouth, the country prefents a chain of rugged hills, on the tops of which are a great number of oak and fir-trees, the retreat of wild boars and lynxes. As we turn towards the eaft, at fix leagues diftance, we perceive Noffa or Nazareth, fo celebrated in the hiftory of Chriftianity ; it is an inconfiderable village, one third of whofe inhabitants are Mahometans, and the remaining two thirds Greek Catholics. The fathers of the holy land, who are dependant on the Great Convent of Jerufalem, have an Hofpitium and a church here. They are ufually the farmers of the countriy. In the time of Daher, they were obliged to make a prefent to every wife he married, and he took great care to marry almof every week.

About two leagues to the fouth-eaf of Nafra is Mount Tabor, from which we have one of the fineft views in Syria. This mountain is of the figure of a broken cone, eight hundred, or a thoufand yards in height. The fummit is two thirds of a league in circumference. Formerly it had a citadel, of which now only a few fones remain. From hence we difcover, to the fouth, a feries of vallies and mountains, which extend as far as Jerufalem, while, to the eaft, the valley of Jordan, and Lake Tabaria, appear as if under our feet; the lake feems as if enclofed in the crater of a volcano. Beyond this, the eye lofes itfelf, towards the plains of the Hauran ; and then turning to the north, returns by the mountains of Hofbeya, and the Kafinia, to repofe on the fertile plains of Galilee, without being able to reach the fea.

The eaftern bank of Lake Tabaria offers nothing remarkable but the town whofe name it bears, and the fountain of warm mineral waters in the neighbourhood. This fountain is fituated in the open country, at the diftance of a quarter of a league from Tabaria. For want of cleaning it is filled with a black mud, which is a genuine Ethiops Martial. Perfons attacked by rheumatic complaints find great relief, and are frequently cured by baths of this mud. The town is little elfe than a heap of ruins, and not inhabited at moft by more than one hundred families. Seven leagues to the north of Tabarai, on the brow of a hill, ftands the town or village of Safad, the feat of Daher's power. Under the government of this Shaik an Arabian college flourifhed there, in which the Motoualis doctors inftructed youth in the fcience of grammar, and the allegorical interpretation of the Koran. The Jews, who believe the Mefiah will eftablifh the feat of his empire at Safad, had alfo taken an affeation to this place, and collected there to the number of fifty or fixty families; but the earthquake of 1759, deftroyed every thing. and Safad, regarded by the Turks with an unfavourable eye, is now only a village almont deferted. As we afcend from Safad to the north, we follow a chain of lofty mountains, named Djebal-el-Shaik, among which are the fources of the Jordan, and likewife thofe of a number of rivulets which water the plain of Damafcus. The high grounds from whence thefe rivulets flow, form a fmall diftrict called Hafbeya, which is at prefent governed by an Emir, a relation and rival of the Emir Youfef, who farms it of Djezzar for fixty purfes. The country is mountainous, and greatly refembles the Lower Lebanon; the chain of mountains which ftretch along the vale of Bekaa, was called by the ancients Anti-Lebanon, from their being parallel to the Lebanon of the Druzes and Maronites;
and the vale of Bekaa, which feparates then, is properly the ancient Cale Syria, or hoilew Syria. This valley, by collecting the water of the mountains, has rendered it conftantly one of the moft fertile diftricts of all Syria, but the mountains concentrating the rays of the fun, produce likewife a heat in fummer not inferior to that of Egypt. The air neverthelefs is not unhealihy, no doubt becaule perpetually renewed by the north-wind, and becaufe the waters never ftagnate. The inhabitants fleep without injury upon their terraces. Before the earthquake of 1759 , this wholecountry was covered with villages and plantations of the Motoualis; but the deftruction occafioned by this terrible calamity, and the fubfequent wars with the Turks, flave almof deftroyed every thing. The only place which merits attention is the city of Balbek.

Balbek, celebrated by the Greeks and Latins, under the name of Heliopolis, or the City of the Sun, is fituated at the foot of Anti-Lebanon, precifely on the laft rifing ground where the mountain terminates in the plain. As we arrive from the fouth we difcover the city only at the diftance of a league and a half, behind a hedge of trees, over the verdant tops of which appears a white edging of domes and Minarets. After an hour's journey we reach thefe trees, which are very fine walnuts; and foon after, croffing fome ill cultivated gardens, by winding paths, arrive at the entrance of the city. We there perceive a ruined wall, flanked with fquare towers, which afcends the declivity to the right, and traces the precincts of the ancient city. This wall, which is only ten or twelve feet high, permits us to have a view of thofe void fpaces, and heaps of ruins, which are the invariable appendage of every Turkifh city; but what principally attracts our attention. is a large edifice on the left, which, by its lofty walls, and rich columns, manifeftly appears to be one of thofe temples which antiquity has left for our admiration. Thefe ruins, which are fome of the mof beautiful and beft preferved of any in Afia, merit a particular defcription.

To give a juft idea of them, we muft fuppofe ourfelves defcending from the interior of the town. After having croffed the rubbilh and huts with which it is filled, we arrive at a vacant place which appears to have been a Square ;
a Square ( $g$ ); there, in front, towards the wert, we perceive a grand ruin (AA) which confifts of two pavillions ornamented with pilaners, joined at their bottom angle by a wall one hundred and fixty feet in length. This front commands the open country from a fort of terrace, on the edge of which we diftinguifh, with difficulty, the bafes of twelve columns, which formerly extended from one pavillion to the other, and formed a portico. The principal gate is obftructed by heaps of fones; but that obfacle furmounted, we enter an empty face, which is an hexagonal court ( $B$ ) of one hundred and eighty feet diameter. This court is ftrewed with broken columns, mutilated capitals, and the remàins of pilafters, entablatures, and cornices; around it is a row of ruined edifices (cc), which difplay all the ornaments of the richeft architecture. At the end of this court, oppofite the weft, is an outlet ( $D$ ), which formerly was a gate, through which we perceive a ftill more extenfive range of ruins, whofe magnificence ftrongly excites curiofity. To have a full profpect of thefe, we muft

> (s) See the plates.
afeend a flope, up which were the feeps to this gate, and we then arrive at the entrance of a fquare court ( E ), much more fpacious than the former ( $b$ ), from which point of view the drawing of the annexed engraving was taken. The eye is firft attracted by the end of this court, where fix enormous and majeftic columns, render the fcene aftonifhingly grand and picturefque. Another object not lefs interefing, is a fecond range of columns to the left, which appear to have been part of the Periftyle of a temple ( $G$ ); but before we pafs thither, we cannot refufe particular attention to the edifices ( H ) which enclofe this court on each fide. They form a fort of gallery which contains various chambers ( $b \hbar b$ 万), feven of which may be reckoned in each of the principal wings: viz. two in a femicircle, and five in an oblong iquare. The bottom of thefe apartments ftill retains pediments of niches ( $i$ ) and tabernacles ( $l$ ), the fupporters of which are deftroyed. On the fide of the couirt they are open, and prefent only four and fix columns ( $m$ ) totally
(b) It is three hundred and fifty feet wide, and three hundred and thirty-fix in leigth.

deftroyed.

deftroyed. It is not enfy to conceive the ure of thefe apartments ; but this does not diminifh our admiration at the beauty of their pilafters $(n)$ and the richnefs of the frize of the entablature (0). Neither is it poffible to avoid remarking the fingular effect which refults from the mixture of the garlands, the large foliage of the capitals, and the fculpture of wild plants with which they are every where ornamented. In traverfing the length of the court, we find in the middle a little fquare Efplanacie ( I ), where was a pavillion, of which nothing remains but the foundation. At length we arrive at the foot of the fix columns ( $F$ ); and then firt conceive all the boldnefs of their elevation, and the richnefs of their workmanhip. Their finafts are twentyone feet eight inches in circumference, and fifty-eight high; fo that the total height, including the entablature ( 0 ), is from feventyone to leventy-two feet. The fight of this fuperb ruin thus folitary and unaccompanied, at firft ftrikes us with aftonifhment; but, on a more attentive examination, we difcover a feries of foundations, which mark an oblong fquare ( F F) of two hundred and fixtyeight feet in length, and one hundred and i,Tiche.

li.Iabernacles.

View of the SQuare Court of the Temple of the sun at Balbec Y IITebanon .
forty-fix wide; and, which, it feems probable, was the perifyle of a grand temple, the primary purpofe of this whole ftructure. It prefented to the great court, that is to the eaft, a front of ten columns, with nineteen on each fide, which with the other fix, make in all fifty-four. The ground on which it frood was an oblong fquare, on a level with this court, but narrower than it, fo that there was only a terrace of twenty-feven feet wide round the colonnade; the efplanade this produces, fronts the open country, toward the weft, by a floping wall(L) of abous thirty feet. This defcent as you approach the city becomes lefs fteep, fo that the foundation of the pavillion is on a level with the termination of the hill, whence it is evident that the whole ground of the courts has been artificially raifed. Such was the former ftate of this edifice, but the fouthern fide of the grand temple was afterwards blocked up to build a fmaller one, the Periftyle and walls of which are ftill remaining. This temple (G), fituated fome feet lower than the cther, prefents a fide of thirtcen columns, by eight in front, (in all thirty-four), which are likewife of the Corinthian order; their Mafts are fifteen feet eight inches in circumference, and forty-four in height. The building they furround is an oblong fquare, the front of which, turned towards the eaft, is out of the line of the left wing of the great court. To reach it you muft crofs trunks of columns, heaps of ftone, and a ruinous wall by which it is now hid. After furmounting there obftacles, you arrive at the gate, where you may furvey the enclofure ( $g$ ) which was once the habitation of a god; but inftead of the awful fcene of a proftrate people, and facrifices offering by a multitude of priefts, the fly, which is open from the falling in of the roof, only lets in light to fhew a chaos of ruins, covered with durt and weeds. The walls, formerly enriched with all the ornaments of the Corinthian order, now prefent nothing but pediments of niches, and tabernacles of which almof all the fupporters are fallen to the ground. Between there niches is a range of fluted pilafters, whofe capitals fupport a broken entablature; but what remains of it, difplays a rich frize of foliage refting on the heads of fatyrs, horfes, bulls, &uc. Over this entablature was the ancient roof, which was fifty-feven feet wide, and one hundred and ten in length. The walls which fupported it are thirty-one feet high, and without a window. It is impofiible to form any idea of the ornaments of this roof, except from the fragments lying on the ground; but it could not have been richer than the gallery of the Perifyle: the principal remaining parts contain tablets in the form of lozenges, on which are reprefented Jupiter feated on his eagle; Leda careffed by the fwan; Diana with her bow and crefcent, and feveral bufts which feem to be figures of emperors and empreffes. It would lead me too far, to enter more minutely into the defcription of this aftonifhing edifice. The lovers of the arts will find it defcribed with the greateft truth and accuracy in a work publifhed at London in 1757, under the title of Ruins of Balbek. This work, compiled by Mr. Robert Wood, the world owes to the attention and liberality of Mr. Dawkins, who in 1751 vifited Balbek, and Palmyra. It is inpoffible to add any thing to the fidelity of their defcription.

Several changes however lave taken place fince their journey: for example, they found nine large columns ftanding, and, in $17^{84}$, I found round but fix ( $F$ ). They reckoned nine and twenty at the lefier temple, but there now remain but twenty; the others have been overthrown by the earthquake of 1759 . It has likewife fo fhaken the walls of the leffer temple, that the flone of the foffit (i) of the gate has flid between the two adjoining ones, and defcended eight inches; by which means the body of the bird fculptured on that frone, is fufpended, detached from its wings, and the two garlands, which hung from its beak and terminated in two Genii. Nature alone has not effected this devaftation; the Turks have had their fhare in the deftruction of the columns. Their motive is to procure the iron cramps, which ferve to join the feveral blocks of which each column is compofed. Thefe cramps anfwer fo well the end intended, that feveral of the columns are not even disjointed by their fall; one, among others, as Mr. Wood obferves, has penetrated a flone of the temple wall without giving way; nothing can furpafs the workmanfhip of thefe columns; they are joined without any coment, yet there is not room for the blade of
(i) The Soft is the crois flone at the top of a gate.
a knife
a knife between their interftices. After fo many ages, they in general ftill retain their original whitenefs. But, what is ftill more aftonifhing is, the enormous ftones which compore the floping wall. To the weft ( L ) the fecond layer is formed of fones which are from twenty-eight to thirty-five feet long, by about nine in height. Over this layer, at the north-weft angle ( $M$ ), there are three ftones, which alone occupy a fpace of one hundred and feventy-five feet and one half; viz. the firft, fifty-eight feet feven inches; the fecond, fifty-eight feet eleven, and the third, exactly fifty-eight feet, and each of thefe are twelve feet thick. Thefe ftones are of a white granite, with large hining flakes, like Gypfe; there is a quarry of this kind of fone under the whole city, and in the adjacent mountain, which is open in feveral places, and, among others, on the right, as we approach the city. There is fill lying there a fone, hewn on three fides, which is fixtynine feet two inches long, twelve feet ten inches broad, and thirteen feet three in thicknefs. By what means could the ancients move thefe enormous maffes? This is doubt-
Vol. II.
R
lefs

242 irRAVELS IN

lefs a problem in mechanics curious to refolve. The inhabitants of Balbek have a very commodious manner of expiaining it, by fuppofing thefe edifices to have been conftructed by Djenoun, or Genii, who obeyed the orders of king Solomon, adding, that the motive of fuch immenfe works was to conceal in fubterrancous caverns valt treafures, which ftill remain there. To difcover thefe, many have defcended into the vaults which range under the whole edifice; but the inutility of their refearches, added to the oppreffions and extortions of the governors, who have made their fuppofed difcoveries a pretext, have at length difheartened them; but they imagine the Europeans will be more fuccefsful, nor would it be poffible to perfuade them but what we are poffefed of the magic art of deftroying Talifmans. It is in vain to oppofe reafon to ignorance and prejudice: and it would be no lefs riduculous to attempt to prove to them that Solomon never was acquainted with the Corinthian order, which was only in ufe under the Roman emperors. But their tradition on the fubject of this prince may fuggeft three important obfervations.

Firf, that all tradition relative to high antiquity, is as falfe among the orientals as the Europeans. With them, as with us, facts which happened a hundred years before, when not preferved in writing, are altered, mutilated, or forgotten. To expect information from them with refpect to events in the time of David or Alexander, would be as abfurd as to make enquiries of the Flemifh peafants concerning Clovis or Charlemagne.

Secondiy, that throughout Syria, the Mahometans, as well as the Jews and Chriftians, attribute every great work to Solomon: not that the memory of him fill remains by tradition in thofe countries, but from certain paffages in the Old Teftament; which, with the gofpel, is the fource of almoft all their tradition, as thefe are the only hiftorical books read or known; but as their expounders are very ignorant, their applications of what they are told, are generally very remote from truth: by ain error of this kind, they pretend Balbek is the houfe of the foreft of Lebanon, built by Solomon; nor do they approach nearer probability,
bability, when they attribute to that king the well of Tyre, and the buildings of Palmyra.

A third remark is, that the belief in hidden treafures has been confirmed by difcoveries which have been really made from time to time. It is not ten years fince a fmall coffer was found at Hebron, full of gold and filver medals, with an ancient Arabic book on medicine. In the country of the Druzes, an individual difcovered, likewife, fome time fince, a jar with gold coin in the form of a crefcent; but as the chiefs and governors claim a right to thefe difcoveries, and ruin thore who have made them, undef pretext of obliging them to make reftoration, thore who find any thing endeavour carefully to conceal it; they fecretly melt the antique coins, may, frequently bury them again in the fame place where they found them, from the fame fears which cauled their firft concealment, and which prove the fame tyranny formerly exifted in the fe countries.

When we confider the extraordinay magnificence of the temple of Balbek, we cannot but be aftonifhed at the filence of the Greek and Roman authors. Mr. Wood, who has carefully examined all the ancient writers, has found no mention of it, except in a fragment of John of Antioch, who attiibutes the conftruction of this edifice to Antoninus Pius. The infcriptions which remain corroborate this opinion, which perfectly accounts for the conftant ufe of the Corinthian order, fince that order was not in general ufe before the third age of Rome; but we ought by no means to alledge as an additional proof, the bird fculptured over the gate; for if his crooked beak, large claws, and the caduceus he bears, give him the appearance of an eagle, the tuft of feathers on his head, like that of certain pigeons, proves that he is not the Roman eagle: befides that the fame bird is found in the temple of Palmyra, and is therefore evidently an oriental eagle, confecrated to the fun, who was the divinity adored in both thefe temples. His worfhip exifted at Balbek, in the moft remote antiquity. His ftatue, which refembled that of Ofiris, had been tranfported there from the Heliopolis of Egypt, and the ceremoR 3 nies
nies with which he was worfhipped there have been defcribed by Macrobius, in his curious work chetitled Saturnalia (k). Mr. Wood fuppofes, with reafon, that the name of Baltek, which in Syriac fignifies City of Bal, or of the Sun, originated in this wornip. The Greeks, by naming it Heliopolis, have, in this inftance, only given a literal tranflation of the oriental word, a practice to which they have not always adhered. We are ignorant of the flate of this city in remote antiquity; but it is to be prefumed that its fituation, on the road from Tyre to Palmyra, gave it fome part of the commerce of thefe opulent capitals. Under the Romans, in the time of Auguftus it is mentioned as a garrifon town; and there is fill remaining, on the wall of the fouthern gate, on the right, as we enter, an infcription which proves the truth of this, the words Kenturia Prima, in Greek characters, being very legible. One hundred and forty years after, Antoninus built (k) He there calls it Heliopolis, a city of the Afyrians, the antents frequently confounding were that nation with the Syrians.
there the prefent temple, inftead of the ancient one, which was doubtlefs falling into ruins; but Chrifianity having gained the afcendency under Conftantine, the modern temple was neglected, and afterwards converted into a church, a wall of which is now remaining, that hid the fanctuary of the idols. It continued thus until the invafion of the Arabs, when it is probable they envied the Chriftians fo beautiful a building. The church being lefs frequented fell to decay; wars fucceeded, and it was converted into a place of defence, battlements were built on the wall which furrounded it, on the pavillions and at the angles, which fill fubfift ; and from that time, the temple, expofed to the fate of war, fell rapidly to ruin.

The fate of the city is not lefs deplorable; the wretched government of the Emirs of the houfe of Harfoufhe, had already greatly impaired it, and the earthquake of 1759 compleated its deftruction. The wars of the Emir Youfef, and Djezzar, have rendered it ftill more deferted and ruinous; of five thoufand inhabitants, at whioh number they were eftimated in 1751 , not twelve hundred are now remaining, and all thefe poor, without induftry or commerce, and cultivating nothing but a little cotton, fome maize, and wate!-melons. Throughout this part of the country, the foil is poor, and continues to be fo, both as we proceed to the north, or to the fouth-eaft, toward Damafcus.

248 TRAVELSIN

C If A P. XXX.

Of the Pacbalic of Damafcus.

THE Pachalic of Damafcus, the fourth and laft of Syria, comprehends nearly the whole eaftern part of that country. It extends, to the north, from Marra, on the road to Aleppo, as far as Habroun, in the foutheaft of Paleftine. It is bounded to the weft by the mountains of the Anfarians, thore of Anti-Lebanon, and the upper part of the Jordan; then croling that river in the country of Bifan, it includes Nablous, Jerufalem, and Habroun, and enters the defert to the eaft, into which it advances more or lefs, according as the country is capable of cultivation; but in general it does nof extend to any confiderable difance from the latter mountains, except in the diftrict of Tadmour or Palmyra, toward which it ftretches full five days journey.

In this vaft extent of country, the foil and its productions are very various; but the plains of the Hauran, and thofe on the banks of the Orontes, are the moft fertile: they produce
produce wheat, barley, doura, fefamum, and cotton. Thie country of Damafcus, and the Upper Bekaa, are of a gravelly and poor foil, better adapted to fruits and tobacco, than any thing elfe. All the mountains are appropriated to olive, mulberry, and fruit trees, and in fome places to vines, from which the Greeks make wine, and the Mahometans dried raifins.

The Pacha enjoys all the privileges of his poft, which are more confiderable than thofe of any other Pachilic; for befides the farm of all the cuftoms and impoits, and an abfolute authority, he is alfo conductor of the facred caravan of Mecca, under the highly refpected title of Emir Hadj (l). The NLahometans confider this office as fo important, and entitled to fuch reverence, that the perfon of a Pacha who aciquits himfelf well of it, becomes inviolable even by the Sultan: it is no longer permitted to floed bis blood. But the Divan has invented a metho? of fatisfying its vengeance on thofe who are protected by this
(l) The caravan of Mecea bears exclufively the name of Hadj, which fignifies pilgrimage : the others are called fimpiy Kafle.
privilege, privilege, without departing from the literal expreffion of the law, by ordering them to be pounded in a mortar, or fmothered in a fack, of which there have becn various inftances.

The tribute of the Pacha to the Sultan, is no more than forty-five purfes (two thoufand three hundred and forty-three pounds) ; but he is charged with all the expences of the Hadj: thefe are eftimated at fix thoufand purfes, or three hundred and twelve thoufand five hundred pounds. They confift of provibons of corn, barley, rice, '&cc. and in the hire of camels, which muft be provided for the efcort and a great number of pilgrims. Befides this, eighteen hundred purfes muft be paid to the Arab tribes, who dwell near the road, to fecure a free paffage. The Pacha reimburfes himfelf by the miri, or duty upon lands, either by collecting it himfelf, or by farming it out, as he does in many places. He does not receive the cuftoms, thefe are collected by a Deftar-dar, or mafter of the regifters, and are appointed for the pay of the Janifaries, and governors of caftles, which are on the route to Mecca. Befides his other emoluments, the Pacha is the heir of all the pilgrims who die on the journey, and this is not the the leuft of his perquifites; for it is invariably obferved that thofe are the richeft of the pilgrims. Befides all this, he has the profits he makes by lending money for intereft to merchants and farmers, and taking from them whatever he thinks proper, in the way of balfe, or extortion.

His military eftablifmment confifts in fix or feven hundred Janifaries, better condition( $d$, and more infolent, than in other parts of the country ; as many Barbary Arabs, who are naked, and plunderers as they are every where, and in eight or nine hundred Dellibaches, or horfemen. Thefe troops, which in Syria pafs for a confiderable army, are neceffary, not only by way of efcort for the caravan, and to reftrain the Arabs, but likewife to enable him to collect the miri from his own fubjects. Every year, three months prior to the departure of the Hadj, he makes what is called his circuit ; that is, he travels through his vaft government, at the head of his foldiers, and raifes contributions on the towns and villages. This is feldom effected without refiftance; the ignorant populace, excited by factious chiefs, or provoked by the injuftice of the Pacha, frequently revolt, and pay the fums levied on them with the murket ; the inhabitants of Nablous, Bethlehem, and Habroun, are famous for this refractorinefs, which has procured them peculiar privileges; but when opportunity offers, they are made to pay ten-fold. The pachalic of Damafcus, from its fituation, is more expofed than any other to the incurfions of the Bedouin Arabs; yet it is remarked to be the leaft ravaged of any in Syria. The reafon affigned is, that inftead of frequently changing the Pachas, as is practifed in the other governments, the Porte ufually beftows this pachalic for life: in the prefent century it was held for fifty years by a rich family of Damafcus, called El-Adm, a father and three brothers of which fucceeded each other. Afad, the last of them, whom I have before mentioned in the hiftory of Daher, held it fifteen years, during which time he did an infinite deal of good. He had likewife eftablifhed fuch a degree of difcipline among the foldiers as to prevent the peafants from being injured by their robberies and extortions. His paffion, like that of all men in office throughout Turkey, was to amafs money, but he did not let it remain idle in his coffers, and, by a moderation unheard of in this country, required no more intereft for it than fix per cent ( $m$ ). An anecdote is related of him which will give an idea of his character: Being one day in want of money, the informers, by whom the Pachas are conftantly furrounded, advifed him to levy a contribution on the Chriftians, and on the manufacturers of fuffs. "How much do you think " that may produce?" faid Afad. "Fifty " or fixty purfes," replied they. "But," an"' fwered he, " thefe people are by no means " rich, how will they raife that fum ?" "My "Lord, they will fell their ruives jewels; "and, befides, they are Chriftian dogs." "I'll flew yor," replied the Pacha, "that I "am an abler extortioner than you." The fame day he fent an order to the Miffi to wait upon him focictly, and at night. As foon as the Nufti arrived, Afad told him, " he was informed he had long led a "very irregular life in private; that he, " though the hand of the law, had indulged " himfelf in drinking wine and eating pork, ( $\%$ ) In Syria and in Egypt, the ordinary intercft is from twelve to fifteen, nay, frequently from twenty to thirty per cent.
"contrary to the precepts of the moft pure " book; affuring him, at the fame time, he " was determined to inform again? him to ss the Mufti of Stamboul (Conftantinople), " but that he wifhed to give him timely no" tice, that he might not reproach him with " perfidioufnefs." The Mufti, terrified at this menace, conjured him to defift; and as fuch, ofiers are an open and allowed traffic among the Turks, promifed him a prefent of a thoufand piattes. The Pacha rejected the offer; the Mufti doubled and trebled the fum, till at length they ftrike a bargain for fix thoufand piaftres, with the reciprocal engagement to obferve a profound filence. The next day, Afad lends for the Cadi, and addrefies him in the fame manner; tells him he is informed of feveral flagrant abufes in his adminiftration; and that he is no firanger to a certain affair, which may perhaps cont him nis head. The Cadi, confounded, implores his clemency, negociates like the Mufti; accommodates the matter for a like fum, and retires, congratulating himfelf that he has cfcaped even at that price. He proceeded in like manner with the Wali, the Nakib, the Aga of the Janifaries, the Mohtefeb, and, after after them, with the wealthieft Turkifh and Chriftian merchants. Each of thefe, charged with offences peculiar to their fituations; and, above all, accufed of intrigues, were anxious to purchafe pardon by contributions. When the fum total was collected, the Pacha, being again with his intimates, thus addrefied them, "Have you heard it reported, in "Damafcus, that Afad has been guilty of " extortion?" "No, Scignior." By what " means, then, have I found the two hun"dred purfes I now thew you ?" The informers began to exclain in great admiration, and enquire what method he had employed. " I have fleeced the rams," replied he, " and " not fkinned the lambs and the kids." After fifteen years reign, the people of Da mafcus were deprived of this man; by intrigues, the hiftory of which is thus related : About the year 1755, one of the black emmuchs of the feraglio, making the pilgrimage of Mecca, took up his quarters with Afad; but not contented with the fimple hofpitality with which he was entertained, he would not return by Damafcus, but took the road to Gaza. Hofein Pacha, who then was Governor of that town, took care to give him a fumptuous entertainment.
tertainment. The eunuch, on his return to Conftantinople, did not forget the treatment he had received from his two hofts; and, to Shew at once his gratitude and refentment, determined to ruin Afad, and raife Hofein to his dignity. His intrigues were fo fuccefsful that, after the year 1756 , Jerufalem was detached from the government of Damafcus, and beftowed upon Hofein, under the title of a Pachalic, and the following year he obtained that of Damafcus. Afad, thus depofed, retired with his houfehold into the defart, to avoid fill greater difgrace. The time of the caravan arrived: Hofein conducted it, agreeable to the duty of his ftation; but, on his return, having quarrelled with the Arabs, concerning fome payment they claimed, they attacked him, defeated the efcort, and entirely plundered the caravan, in 1757 . On the news of this difafter, the whole empire was thrown into as much confufion as could have been occafioned by the lofs of the moft important battle. The families of twenty thoufand pilgrims, who had perifhed with thirft and hunger, or been flain by the Arabs; the relations of a multitude of women who had been carried into flavery; the merchants interefted in the plundered caravan, all demanded vengeance on the cowardice of the Emir Hadj, and the facrilege of the Bedouins. The Porte, alarmed, at firft profcribed the head of Hofein; but he concealed himfelf fo well, that it was impoffible to furprife him; while he, from his retreat, acting in concert with the Eunuch his protector, undertook to exculpate himfelf, in which, after three months, he fucceeded, by producing a real or fictitious letter of Afad, by which it appeared that this Pacha had excited the Arabs to attack the caravan, to revenge himfelf of Hofein. The profcription was now turned againft Afad, and nothing but the opportunity wanting to carry it into execution.

Voi. II.

The pachalic, however, remained vacant : Hofein, difgraced as he was, could not refume his government. The Porte, deliring to rovenge the late affront, and provide for the fafety of the pilgrims in future, made choice of a fingular man, whofe character and hiftory deferve to be noticed. This man, named Abd-allah-cl-Satadji, was born near Bardad, in an obfcure ftation. Entering very young into the fervice of the Pacha, he had paffed the firft years of his life in camps and war, and been prefent, as a common foldier, in all the campaigns of the Turks againft the famous Shah-Thamas-Kouli-Khan; and the bravery and intelligence he difplayed, raifed him, ftep by ftep, even to the dignity of Pacha of Bagdad. Advanced to this eminient poit, he conducted himfelf with fo much firmnefs and prudence, that he reftored peace to the country from both foreign and domeftic wars. The fimple and military life he continued to lead requiring no great fupplies of money, he amaffed none; but the great officers of the Seraglio of Conftantinople, who derived no profits from his moderation, did not approve of this difintereftednefs, and waited only for a pretext to remove him.

This they foon found. Abdallah had kept back the fum of one hundred thoufand livres (above four thoufand pounds), arifing from the eftate of a merchant. Scarcely had the Pacha received it, before it was demanded from him. In vain did he reprefent, that he had ufed it to pay fome old arrears of the troops; in vain did he requeft time: the Vifir only preffed him the more clofely; and, on a fecond refufal, difpatched a black eunuch, fecretly provided with a kat-fierif, to take off his head. The eunuch, arriving at Bagdad, feigned himfelf a fick perfon travelling for his health; and, as fuch, fent his refpects to the Pacha; obferving the ufual forms of politenefs, and requefting permiffion to pay him a vifit. Abd-allah, well acquainted with the practices of the Divan, was diftrunful of fo much complaifance, and furpected fome fecret mifchief. His treafurer, not lefs verfed in fuch plots, and greatly attached to his perfon, confirmed him in thefe fufpicions; and, in order to difcover the truth, propofed to go and fearch the eunuch's baggage, while he and his retinue fhould be paying their vint to the Pacha. Abd-allah approved the expedient, and, at the hour appointed, the treafurer repaired to the tent of the eunuch, and made fo careful a fearch, that he found the kat-herif concealed in the lapelles of a peliffe. Immediately he flew to the Pacha, and, rending for him into an adjoining room, told him what he had difcovered ( $n$ ). Abdallah, furnifhed with the fatal writing, hid it in his bofom, and returned to the apartment; when refuming, with an air of the greateft indifference, his converfation with the eunuch :" "The more I think of it," faid he, "Seignior Aga, the more I am aftonifh"ed at your journey into this country; Baj" dad is fo far from Stamboul, we can boart " fo little of our air, that I can fcarcely be" lieve you have come hither for no other " purpofe but the re-eftablifhment of your " health." "It is true," replied the Aga; "I am alfo commiffioned to demand of you "fomething on account of the four thoufand " pounds you received." "We will fay no"thing of that," anfwered the Pacha; "but " come," added he with an air of firmnefs, "confers that you have likewife orders to " bring with you my head. Obferve what "I lay, you know my character, and you " know my word may be depended on: I " now affure you that, if you make an open "declaration of the truth, you fall depart s. without the leaf injury." "The eunuch now began a long defence, protenting that he came with no fuch black intentions. "s By my bect," faid Abd-allah, "confefs to "s me the truth:" the eunuch fill denied. "By your berd;" he fill denied: "Take S 3 care,

$$
S_{2} \quad \text { head. }
$$

[^5] with this treafurer, and had feen Abd-allah at Jerufalem.
"care, By the bead of the Sultan ;" be fitil perfifted. "Be it fo," fays Abd-allah, the " matter is decided : thou haft pronounced thy: " doom;" and drawing forth the kat-fherif, " Know you this paper? Thus you govern at " Conftantinople! Yes, you are a troop of " villains, who fport with the lives of who" ever happen to difpleafe you, and fhed, " without remorfe, the blood of the fervants " of the Sultan. The Vifir mu\{ have heads: " he fhall have one; off with the head of " that dog, and fend it to Conftantinople." The order was executed on the fpot, and the eunuch's retinue, difmiffed, departed with his head.

After this decifive ftroke, Abd-allah might have availed himfelf of his popularity to revolt; but he rather chofe to retire among the Curds. Here the pardon of the Sultan was fent him, and an order, appointing him Pacha of Damafcus. Wearied of his exile, and deftitute of noney, he accepted the commifion, and fet out with one hundred men who followed his fortune. On his arrival on the frontiers of his new government, he learnt that Afad was encamped in the neighbourhood: he had heard him fpoken of as the greateft man in Syria, and was defirous of feeing him. He therefore difguifed himfelf, and, accompanied only by fix horfemen, repaired to his camp, and defired to fjoak with him. He was introduced, as is ufual in thefe camps, without much ceremony; and, after the cultomary falutations, A fad enquired of him whither he was going, and whence he came? Abd-allah replied, he was one of fix or feven Curd horfemen who were feeking employment, and hearing Satadji was appointed to the Pachalic of Damafcus, were going to apply to him; but being informed on their way that Afad was encamped in the neighbourhood, they had come to requeft of him provifions for themfelves and their horfes. With pleafure, replied Afad; but do. you know Satadji ? Yes. What fort of a man is he ? Is he fond of money? No; Satadji cares very little for money or peliffes, or fhawls or pearls, or women ; he is fond of nothing but well-tempered arms, good horfes, and war. He does juftice, protects the widow and the orphan, reads the Koran, and lives on butter and milk. Is he old? faid Afad. Fatigue has made him appear older than he is: he is covered with wounds; he has re reived a blow with a fabre, which has made him lame of his left leg; and another, which makes him lean his head on his right fhoulder. In fhort, faid he, haftily rifing, he is, in fhape and features, exactly my picture. At thefe words Afad turned pale, and gave himfelf up for loft; but Abd-allah, fitting down again, faid to him, Brother, fear nothing; I am not fent by a troop of banditti; I come not to betray thee: on the contrary, if I can render thee any fervice, command me, for we are both held in the fame eftimation with our mafters; they have recalled me, becaufe they wifh to chaftife the Bedouins; when they have gratified their revenge on them, they will again lay plots to deprive me of my head. God is great; what be bas decreed will come to pars.

With thefe fentiments, Abd-allah repaired to Damafcus; where he refored good order, put an end to the extortions of the foldiery, and conducted the caravan, fabre in hand, without paying a piaftre to the Arabs. During his adminiftration, which lafted two years, the country enjoyed the moft perfect tranquillity. The inhabitants of Damafcus fitil fay, that under his government they flept in fecurity with open doors. He himfelf, frequently difguifed as one of the poorelt of the people, faw every thing with his own eyes. The acts of jurtice he fometimes did, in confequence of his difcoveries under the fe difguifes, produced a falutary circuinfpection. Some inftances are ftill told, by the people with pleafure. It is faid, for example, that being on his circuit at Jerufalen, he had prohibited his foldiers from either taking, or ordering any thing without paying. One day, when he was going about in the difguife of a poor man with a little plate of lentiles in his hand, a foldier, who had a faggot on his Moulders, would force him to carry it. After fome refiftance, he took it on his back, while the Delibafle following him, drove him on with imprecations. Another foldier, knowing the Pacha, made a fign to his comrade, who inftantly took to flight, and efcaped through the crofs freets. After proceeding a few paces, Abd-allah no longer hearing his man, turned round, and vexed at miffing his aim, threw his burthen on the ground, faying, The rafcally knavifh dog! he has both robbed me of my hire, and carried off my plate of lentiles. But the foldier did not long efcape; for, a few days after, the Pacha, again furprifing him in the act of robbing a poor woman's garden, and ill treating her, ordered his head to be ftruck off upon the fpot.

As for himfelf, he was unable to ward off the deftiny he had forefeen. After efcaping feveral times from hired affaffins, he was poifoned by his nephew. This he difcovered tefore he died, and, fending for his murderer: Wretch that thou art, faid he, the villains have feduced thee, thou haft poifoned me to profit by my fpoils: it is in my power, before I die, to blaft thy hopes, and punifh thy ingratitude; but I know the Turks; they will be my avengers. In fact, Satadji had fcarcely breathed his laft before a Capidji produced an order to ftrangle the nephew: which was executed. The whole hiftory of the Turks proves that they love treafon, but invariably punifh the traitors. Since Abdallah, the Pachalic of Damafcus has paffed fucceffively into the hands of Selik, Ofman, Miohammed, and Darouih, the fon of Ofman, who held it in 1784. This man, who has not the talents of his father, refembles him in his tyrannical difpofition, of which the following is a ftriking inftance. In the month of November.

November, 1784 , a village of Greek Chriftians, near Damafcus, which had paid the miri, was called upon to pay it a fecond time. The Shaiks, appealing to the regifter, refufed to comply; but a night or two after, a party of foldiers attacked the village, and flew one and thirty perfons. The wretched peafants, in confternation, carried the heads to Damafcus, and demanded juftice of the Pacha. After hearing their complaints, Darouifh told them to leave the heads in the Greek church, while he made the neceffary enquiries. Three days elapfed, and the heads putrify ing, the Chriftians wifhed to bury them; but to effeet this the Pacha's permiffion was neceffary, for which they were under the neceffity of paying forty purfes, or above two thoufand pounds.

About a year ago, (in 1785), Djezzar, availing himfelf of the credit his money had procured him at the Porte, difpoffefied Darouifh, and governs at prefent at Damafcus, to which it is faid he is endeavouring to add the pachalic of Aleppo. But it is not probable the Porte will confent to grant him this, as fuch an increafe of power would render him mafter of all Syria; but befides that the neceffity of obferving the Ruffians leaves the Divan no leifure to confider thefe affairs, it concerns itfelf but little about the revolt of the governors, fince conftant experience has proved, that, fooner or later, they never fail to fall into the fnares that are laid for them: Nor is Djezzar likely to be an exception to this rule; for though not dertitute of talents, and efpecially cunning ( 0 ), his abilities are unequal to the tafk of conceiving and accomplifhing a great revolution. The courfe he purfues is that of all his predeceffors: he only concerns himfelf with the welfare of the public, fo far as it coincides with his private intereft. The Mofque he has built at Acre, is a monument of pure vanity, on which he has expended, without any advantage, the fum of thrce millions of French livres, (one hundred and twenty five thoufand pounds) : his Bazar is undoubtedly of more utility; but before he began to build a market for the fale of corn and vegetables, he fhould have paid fome attention to the flate of agriculture, by which they are to be produced,
(o) Baron de Tott has cal!ed Djezzar a lion: I think he would have defined him better by calling him a wolf.
duced, and this is in a very languifhing condition indeed, except clofe to the walls of Acre. The principal part of his expences confifts in his gardens, his baths, and his white women: of the latter he poffeffed eighteen in 1784, and the luxury of thefe women is moft enormous. As he is now growing old and has loft the relifh for other pleafures, he regards nothing but amaffing money. His avarice has alienated his foldiers, and his feverity created him enemies even in his own houfe. Two of his pages have already attempted to affaffinate him; he has had the good luck to efcape their piftols, but fortune will not always favour him; he will one day fhare the fate of fo many others, and be taken by furprize, when he will reap no other fruit from his induftry in heaping up wealth, than the eagernefs of the Porte to obtain poffeflion of it, and the hatred of the people he has oppreffed. Let us now return to the moft remarkable places in this Pachalic.

The firft that prefents itfelf is the city of Damafcus, the capital and refidence of the Pachas. 'The Arabs call it el-Sbam, agreeable to their cuftom of beftowing the name of the country on its capital. The ancient Oriental name of Demeflok is known only to geographers. This city is fituated in a vaft plain; open to the fouth and eaft, and fhut in toward the weft and north by mountains, which limit the view at no great diftance; but in return, a number of rivulets arife from there mountains, which render the territory of Damafcus the beft watered and moft delicious province of all Syria; the Arabs fpeak of it with enthufiafm; and think they can never fufficiently extol the frefhnefs and verdure of its orchards, the abundance and variety of its fruits, its numerous freams, and the clearnefs of its rills and fountains. This is alfo the only part of Syria where there are detached pleafure houfes in the open country. The natives muft fet a higher value on thefe advantages, as they are more rare in the adjacent provinces. In other refpects, the foil, which is poor, gravelly, and of a reddifh colour, is ill adapted for corn; but is on that account more fuitable to fruits, which are here excellently flavoured. No city affords fo many canals and fountains ; each Foufe has onc; and all thele waters are furnifhed by threc tivulets, or branches of the fame river, which after fertilizing the gardens for a courfe of three leagues, flow into a hollow of the Defert to the fouth-eaft, where they form a morafs called Bebairat-el-Mardj, or the Lake of the Meadow.

2;0 TRAVELSIN

With fuch a fituation it cannot be difputed that Damafcus is one of the moft agreeable cities in Turkey; but it is fill deficient in point of falubrity. The inhabitants complain with reafon, that the white waters of the Barrada are cold and hard; and it is obferved that the natives are fubject to obftructions; that the whitenefs of their fkin is rather the palenefs of ficknefs, than the colour of health; and that the too great ufe of fruit, particularly of apricots, occafions there, every fummer and autumn, intermittent fevers and dyfenteries.

Damafcus is much longer than it is broad. M. Niebuhr, who has given a plan of it, makes it three thoufand two hundred and fifty toifes, or fomething lefs than a league and a half in circumference. Comparing thefe dimenfions with thofe of Aleppo, I fuppofe that Damafcus may contain eighty thoufand inhabitants. The greater part of thefe are Arabs and Turks; the number of Chrifians are eftimated at above fifteen thoufand, two thirds of whom are Schifmatics. The Turks never fpeak of the people of Damafcus without obferving, that they are the mof mifchievous in the whole empire; the Arabs, by a play on words, have made this proverb: Shaini, Boominl, The man of Damafcus, wicked: on the contrary, they fay of the people of Aleppo, Halubi, tchelebi, The Aleppo man, a fetit maitre. From a prejudice arifing from the difference of religions, they alfo add, that the Chriftians there are more vile and knawih than elfewhere; doubtlefs, becaufe the Mahometans are there more fanatic and more infolent. In this they refemble the inhabitants of Cairo; like them, they detef the Franks, nor is it polfible to appear at Damafcus in a European drefs; our merchants have not been able to form any eftablinment there; we only mcet with two Capuchin Miffionaries, and a phylician who is not permitted to practife.

This hatred the people of Damafcus bear the Chriftians, is maintained and increafed by their communication with Mecca. Their city, fay they, is a holy place, fince it is one of the gates of the Caaba: for Damafcus is the rendezvous for all the pilgrims from the north of Afia; as Cairo is for thofe from Africa. Their number every year amounts to from thirty to fifty thoufand; many of them repair here four months before the time, but the greatef number only at the end of the Ramadan. Damafcus then refembles an immenfe fair; nothing is to be feen but ftrangers from all parts of Turkey, and even Perfia; and every place is full of camels, horfes, mules, and merchandize. At length, after fome days preparations, all this vaft multitude fet out confufedly on their march, and, travelling by the confines of the Defert, arrive in forty days at Mecca, for the feftival of the Bairam. As this caravan traverfes the country of feveral independent Arab tribes, it is neceffary to make treaties with the Bedouins, to allow them certain fums of money for a free paffage, and take them for guides. There are frequent difputes on this fubject between the Shaiks, of which the Pacha avails himfelf to make a better bargain; but in general the preference is given to the tribe of Sardia, which encamps to the fouth of Damafcus, along the Hauran; the Pacha VOL. II.
fends
fends to the Shaik a mace, a tent, and a peliffe, to fignify he takes him as his chief conductor. From this moment it is the Shaiks, bufinefs to furnifh camels at a ftated price; thefe he hires likewife from his tribe and his allies; the Pacha is refponfible for no damages, and all loffes are on his own account. On an average, ten thoufand camels perifh yearly; which forms a very advantageous article of commerce for the Arabs.

It muft not be imagined that the fole motive of all thefe expences and fatigues, is devotion. Pecuniary intereft has a more confiderable fhare in this expedition. The caravan affords the means of engrofing every lucrative branch of commerce; almoft all the pilgrims convert it into a matter of fpeculation. On leaving their own country, they load themfelves with merchandize, which they fell on the road; the fpecie arifing from this, added to what they have brought with them, is conveyed to Mecca, where they exchange it for mullins and India goods from Malabar and Bengal, the fhawls of Cafhmire, the alocs of Tonquin, the diamonds of Golconda, the pearls of Barhain, fome pepper, and a great quantity of coffee from the Yemen. Sometimes the Arabs of the Defert deceive the expectation of the merchant, by pillaging the ftragglers, and carrying off detached parties of the caravan. But in general the pilgrims arrive fafe; in which cafe their profits are very confiderable. At all events they are recompenfed in the veneration attached to the title of Hadji, (Pilgrim); and by the pleafure of boafting to their countrymen of the wonders of the Caaba, and Mount Arafat; of magnifying the prodigious crouds of pilgrims, and the number of victims, on the day of the Bairam; and recounting the dangers and fatigues they have undergone, the extraordinary figure of the Bedouins, the Defert without water, and the tomb of the prophet at Medina, which, after all, is neither fufpended by a load-ftone, nor the principal object of their pilgrimage. Thefe wonderful tales produce their ufual effect, that is, they excite the admiration and enthufiafm of the audience, though, from the confeffion of fincere pilgrims, nothing can be more wretched than this journey. Accordingly, this tranfient admiration has not prevented a proverb, which does little honor to thefe pious travellers.

Diftruft thy neigbbour, fays the Arab, if be bas made a Hadj; but if he bas made two, make bafte to leave thy boufe: and, in fact, experience has proved that the greater part of the devotees of Mecca are peculiarly infolent and treacherous, as if they wifhed to recompenfe themfelves for having been dupes, by becoming knaves.

By means of this caravan, Damafcus is become the centre of a very extenfive commerce. By Aleppo the merchants of this city correfpond with Armenia, Anadolia, the Diarbekar, and even with Perfia. They fend caravans to Cairo, which, following a route frequented in the time of the patriarchs, take their courfe by Djefr-Yakoub, Tabaria, Nablous, and Gaza. In return, they receive the merchandize of Conftantimople and Europe, by way of Saide and Bairout. The home confumption is balanced by filk and cotton ftuffs, which are manufactured here in great quantities, and are very well made; by the dried fruits of their own growth, and fweetmeat cakes of rofes, apricots, and peaches, of which Turkey confumes to the amount of near a million of livres, (about forty thoufand pounds). The remainder, paid for by the courfe of exchange, occafions a confiderable circulation of money in cuftom-houfe duties, and the commiffion of the merchants. This commerce has exifted in thefe countries from the moft remote antiquity. It has flowed through different channels, according to the changes of the government, and other circumftances; but it has every where left very apparent traces of the opulence it produced.

The Pachalic of which I am fpeaking, affords a monument of this kind too remarkable to be paffed over in filence. I mean the remains of Palmyra, a city celebrated in the third age of Rome, for the part it took in the differences between the Parthians and the Romans, the power and fall of Odenatus and Zenobia, and its deftruction under Aurelian. From that time hiftory preferved the name of this great city, but it was merely the name, for the world had very confufed ideas of the real grandeur and power it had pofieffed. They were fcarcely even fufpected in Europe, until towards the end of the laft century, when fome Englifh merchants of Aleppo, tired with hearing the Bedouins talk of the immenfe ruins to be found in the Defert, refolved to afcertain the truth of thefe extraordinary relations. The firft attempt was made in 1678 , but without fuccefs; the adventurers were robbed of all they had by the Arabs, and obliged to return without accomplifhing their defign. They again took courage in 169I, and at length obtained a fight of the antiquities in queftion. Their narrative, publifhed in the philofophical tranfactions, met with many who refufed belief; men could neither conceive nor perfuade themfelves that in a foot fo remote from any habitable place, fuch a magnificent city as their drawings defcribed could have fubfifted. But fince Mr. Dawkins publifhed, in 1753 , the plans and views he himfelf had taken on the fpot in 1751, all doubts are at an end, and it is univerfally acknowledged that antiquity has left nothing, either in Greece or Italy, to be compared with the magnificence of the ruins of Palmyra.

I fhall give a fummary of the relation of Mr. Wood, the companion and editor of the journey of Mr. Dawkins ( $p$ ).
(p) Ruins of Palmyra, by Robert Wood, 1 vol. in folio witis fifty plates, London 1753 .
"After learning at Damafcus that Tad" mour, or Palmyra, depended on an Aga " who refided at Haflia, we repaired, in four " days, to that village, which is fituated in " the Defert, on the route from Damafcus " to Aleppo. The Aga received us with " that hofpitality which is fo common in thefe " countries amongft all ranks of people, " and, though extremely furprized at our " curiofity, gave us inftructions how to fatif" fy it in the beft manner. We fet out "from Haffia the IIth of March i 75I, " with an efcort of the Aga's bert Arab " horfemen, armed with guns and long " pikes; and travelled in four hours to "Sudud, through a barren plain; fcarce " affording a little browzing to ante" lopes, of which we faw a great number. "Sudud is a poor fmall village, inhabited by " Maronite Chrifinans. Its houfes are built, " of no better materials than mud dried in " the fun. They cultivate as much ground " about the village as is neceffary for their " bare fubfiftence, and make a good red " wine. After dinner, we continued our " journey, and arrived in three hours at T 4 OOwareen,
"Owareen, a Turkifh village, where we " lay.
"Owareen has the fame appearance of " poverty as Sudud; but we found a few " ruins there, which ihew it to have been " formerly a more confiderable place. We " remarked a village near this entirely aban" doned by its inhabitants, which happens
" often in thefe countries; where the lands
" have no acquired value from cultivation,
" and are often deferted to avoid oppreffion.
"We fet out from Owareen the 12 th, and " arrived in three hours at Carietein, keep" ing always in the direction of a point and " a half to the fouth of the eaft. This " village differs from the former, only by " being a little larger. It was thought pro" per we fhould ftay here this day, as well
" to collect the reft of our efcort which the "Aga had ordered to attend us, as to pre" pare our people and cattle for the fatigue
" of the remaining part of our journey; for,
" though we could not perform it in lefs
" time than twenty-four hours, it could not " be divided into ftages, as there is no water ${ }^{6}$ in that part of the Defert.
" We
"We left Carietein the isth, being in os all about two hundred perfons, with the * fame number of beafts of carriage, confift" ing of an odd mixture of affes, mules, and " camels. Our route, was a little to the eaft " of the north, through a flat fandy plain, " without either tree or water, the whole " about ten miles broad, and bounded, to our "right and left, by a ridge of barren hills, " which feemed to join about two miles " before we arrived at Palmyra.
"The I4th, about noon, we arrived at the " end of the plain, where the hills feemed to " meet. We find between thefe hills a vale, " through which an aqueduct (now ruined) " formerly conveyed water to Palmyra. In " this vale, to our right and left, were feveral " fquare towers of a confiderable height, " which, upon a nearer approach, we found "wcre the fepulchres of the ancient Palmy"renes. We had fcarce paffed thefe venera" ble monuments, then the hills opening, " difcovered to us, all at once, the greatert " quantity of ruins we had ever feen $(q)$, and, " behind them, towards the Euphrates, a flat
(3) Thouch thefe travellers had vifited Grecce and Italy. "wafte

TRAVELSIN

" wafte as far as the eye could reach, without " any object which hhewed either life or " motion. It is fcarce poffible to imagine " any thing more ftriking than this view. " So great a number of Corinthian pillars, " with fo little wall or folid building, " afforded a moft romantic variety of prof" pect."

Undoubtedly the effect of fuch a fight is not to be communicated; but, to enable the reader to form a better idea of it, I annex the perfpective view. To have a juft conception of the whole, the dimenfions muft be fupplied by the imagination. This narrow fpace muft be confidered as a vaft plain, thofe minute fhafts, as columns whofe bafe alone exceeds the height of a man. The reader muft reprefent to himfelf that range of crect columns, as occupying an extent of more than twenty-fix hundred yards, and concealing a multitude of other edifices behind them. In this fpace we fometimes find a palace, of which nothing remains but the courts and walls; fometimes a temple whofe periftyle is half thrown down; and now, a portico, a gallery, or triumphal arch. Here ftand groups of columns, whofe fymmetry is deitroyed
deftroyed by the fall of many of them; there we fee them ranged in rows of fuch length, that fimilar to rows of trees, they deceive the fight, and affume the appearance of continued walls. If from this ftriking fcene we caft our eyes upon the ground, another, almoft as varied, prefents itfelf: on all fides we behold nothing but fubverted fhafts, fome whole, others fhattered to pieces, or diflocated in their joints; and on which fide foever we look, the earth is Atrewed with vaft flones half buried, with broken entablatures, damaged capitals, mutilated frizes, disfigured reliefs, effaced fculptures, violated tombs, and altars defiled by duft.

The following are the references to the annexed plate.

A, a Turkih caftle, now deferted.
$B$, a fepulchre.
C, a ruined Turkifh fortrefs.
D, a fepulchre, from whence begins a range of columns which extend as far as $R$, upwards of twelve hundred yards.

E, an

E, an edifice fuppofed to be built by Dioclefian.
$F$, Ruins of a fepulchre.
$G$, columns difpofed in the form of the periftyle of a temple.

H , a grand edifice of which there remain only four columns.

I, Ruins of a Chriftian church.
K , a range of columns which feem to have formed part of a portico, and which terminate in the four large pedeftals marked L.

L, four large pedeftals.
M , the cell of a temple with part of its perifyle.

N , a fmall temple.
$O$, a number of columns which have the falfe appearance of a Circus.

P, four magnificent columns of Granite.
Q, columns difpofed in the form of the periftyle of a temple.
$R$, an arch, at which the portico which begins at D terminates.
$S$, a large column.
T, a Turkilh Mofque in ruins, with its Minaret, $t$.

U , huge columns, the largeft of which, with its entablature, has been thrown down.

V , little inclofures of land where the Arabs cultivate olive-trees and corn.
$X$, Temple of the fun.
Y, fquare towers, built by the Turks where the portico formerly ftood.
$Z$, wall which formed the enclofure of the court of the temple.
&t. &t. & . Sepulchres difperfed over the valley, without the walls of the city.

But I mult refer the reader to the plates of Mr. Wood, for a more particular explanation of thefe various edifices, and to make him fenfible of the degree of perfection to which the arts had arrived in thofe remote ages. Architecture more efpecially lavifhed her ornaments and difplayed her magnificence in the temple of the fun, the tutelar deity of Palmyra. The fquare court which enclofed it, was fix hundred and feventy-nine feet each way, and a double range of columns was continued all round the infide. In the middle of the vacant fpace, the temple prefents another front of forty-feven feet, by one hundred and twenty-four in depth. Around it runs a perifyle of one hundred and forty columns, and, what is very extraordinary, the gate faces the fetting and not the rifing fun. The foffit of this gate which is lying on the ground, prefents a zodiac, the figns of which are the fame as in ours. On another foffit is a bird fimilar to that of Balbek, fculptured on a ground of ftars. It is a remark worthy the obfervation of hiftorians, that the front of the portico has twelve pillars, like that of Balbek; but what artifts will efteem ftill more curious is, that thefe two fronts refemble the gallery of the Louvre, built by Perrault, long before the exiftence of the drawings which made us acquainted with them; the only difference is, that the columns of the Louvre are double, whereas thofe of Balbek and Palmyra are detached.

Within the court of this fame temple, the philofopher may contemplate a feene he will efteem ftill more interenting. Amid thefe hallowed ruins of the magnificence of a powerful and polifhed people, are about thirty mudwalled huts, which contain as many peafant families, who exhibit every external fign of extreme poverty. So wretched are the prefent inhabitants of a place once fo renowned and populous. Thefe Arabs only cultivate a few olive-trees, and as much corn as is barely neceffary for their fubfiftence. All their riches confift in fome goats and theep they feed in the Defert. They have no other communication with the reft of the world than by little caravans, which come to them five or fix times a year from Homs, of which they are a dependency. Incapable of defending themfelves from violence, they are compelled to pay frequent contributions to the Bedouins, who by turns harrafs and protect them. The Englifh travellers inform us, "Thefe peafants are healthy and well " Thaped, and the few diftempers they are " fubject to, prove that the air of Palmyra " merits the eulogium beftowed on it by " Longinus, in his epiftle to Porphyry. It "feldom rains there, except at the equinoxes, " which are accompanied alfo by thofe hur" ricanes of fand, fo dangerous in the De"fert. The complexion of thefe Arabs is " very fwarthy from the exceffive heat; but "this does not hinder the women from " having beautiful features. They are veiled; " but are not fo fcrupulous of fhewing their " faces as the eaftern women generally are;
" they dye the end of their fingers red, (with " henma), their lips blue, and their eye" brows and eye-lafhes black; and wear " very large gold or brafs rings in their ears " and nofes."

It is impofible to view fo many monuments of induftry and power, without enquiring what age produced them, and what was the fource of the immenie riches they indicate; in a word, without enquiring into the hiftory of Palmyra, and why it is fo fingularly fituated, in a kind of ifland feparated from the habitable earth, by an ocean of barren fands. The travellers I have quoted, have made very judicious refearches into this queftion, but too long to be inferted here; I muft again refer the reader to that work, to fee in what manner they diftinguifh two forts of ruins at Palmyra, one of which muft be attributed to very remote ages, and are only rude, unfhapenmaffes; while the others, which are the magnificent monuments fo often mentioned, are the work of more modern times. He will there fee, in what manner they prove from the fyle of architecture, that thefe latter muft have been erected in the three centuries preceding Dioclefian, clefan, in which the Corinthian was preferred to every other order. They demonfrate with great ingenuity, that Palmyra, fituated three days journey from the Euphrates, was indebted for its wealth and fplendor to the advantage of its polition on one of the great roads, by which the valuable commerce that has at all times fubfifted between India and Europe was then carried on; they have proved, in fhort, that the Palmyrenes were at the height of their profperity, when, become a barrier between the Romans and the Parthians, they were politic enough to maintain a neutrality in their difputes, and to render the luxury of thofe powerful empires fubfervient to their own opulence.

Palmyra was at all times a natural emporium for the merchandize coming from India by the Perfian Gulph, which, from thence by way of the Euphrates or the Defert, was conveyed into Phœnicia, and Afra Minor, to diffufe its varied luxuries among the nations with whom they were always in great requeft. Such commerce muft neceffarily, in the moft early ages, have caufed this fpot to be inhabited, and rendered it a place of importance, though at firft of no great celebrity.

VOI. II.
U
celebrity. The two fprings of frefh water $(r)$ it poffeffes, were, above all, a powerful inducement in a Defert every where elfe fo parched and barren. Thefe doubtlefs were the two principal motives which drew the attention of Solomon, and induced that commercial prince to carry his arms to a place fo remote from the ordinary limits of Judea. "He built ftrong walls there," fays the hif" torian Jofephus $(s)$, to fecure himfelf in " the poffefion, and named it Tadmour, "which fignifies the Place of Paim-trees." Hence it has been inferred that Solomon was its firft founder; but we fhould, from this paffage, be rather led to conclude that it was already a place of known importance. The palm-trees he found there are not the trees of uninhabited countries. Prior to the days of Mofes, the journies of Abraham and Jacob, from Mefopotamia into Syria fufficiently prove a communication between thefe countries, which muft foon have made Palmyra
(r) Thefe waters are warm and fulphurcous, but the inhabitants who, excepting thefe fprings, have none but what is brackiin, find them very good, and they are at leatt wholefome.
(s) Antiq. Jud. lib. 8. с. 6.
flourih. The cinnamon and pearls mentioned in the time of the Hebrew legiflator, demonAtrate a trade with India and the Perfian Gulph, which mult have been carried on by the Euphrates and Palmyra. At this diftance of time, when the greater part of monuments of thefe early ages have perifhed, we are liable to form very falfe opinions concerning the fate of thefe countries in thofe remote times, and are the more eafily deceived, as we admit as hiftorical facts antecedent events, of an entirely different character. If we obferve, however, that men in all ages are united by the fame interefts and the fame defires, we cannot help concluding, that a commercial intercourfe muft early have taken place bet!ween one nation and another, and that this intercourfe muft have been nearly the fame with that of more modern times. Without therefore going higher than the reign of Solomon, the invafion of Tadmour by that prince, is fufficient alone to throw a great light on the hiftory of this city. The king of Jerufalem would never have carried his attention to fo diftant and detached a fpot, without fome powerful motive of intereft, and this intereft could be no other than that of an extenfive commerce, of which this place was already the emporium. This commerce extended itfelf to India, and the Perfian Gulph was the principal point of union. Various facts concur in corroborating this laft affertion; nay, neceffarily force us to acknowledge the Perfina Gulph as the centre of the commerce of that Ophir, concerning which fo many falfe hypothefes have been framed. For, was it not in this Gulph that the Tyrians carried on a flouriming trade from the moft remote ages, and are not the illes of Tyrus and Aradus fufficient proofs of the fettlements they made there? If Solomon fought the alliance of the Tyrians, if he food in need of their pilots to guide his veffels, muft not the object of their voyage have been thofe places which they already frequented, and to which they repaired from their port of Pbanicum oppidum, on the Redfea, and perhaps from Tor, in which name we may difcover traces of that of their own city. Are not pearls, which were one of the principal articles of the commerce of Solomon, almoft the exclufive produce of the coart of the Gulph, between the ines of Tyrus and Aradus, (now called Barhain), and Cape Mafandoum?

Mafandoum? Have not peacocks, which were fo much admired by the Jews, been always fuppofed natives of that province of Perfia which adjoins to the Gulph? Did they not procure their monkeys from Yemen, which was in their way, and where they fill abound? Was not Yemen the country of Saba, (or Sheba,) the queen of which brought frankincenfe and gold to the Jewifh king? And is not the country of the Sabeans celebrated by Strabo for procucing great quantities of gold? Ophir has been fought for in India and in Africa; but is it not one of thore twelve Arabian diftricts, or tribes mentioned in the genealogical annals of the Hebrews? And ought it not therefore to be looked for in the vicinity of the:countries they inhabit, fince this genealogical geography always obferves a certain order of fituation, whatever Bochart and Calmet may have faid to the cuntrary? In fhort, do we not diftinctly perceive the name of Ophir, in that of Ofor, a town of the diftrict of Oman, on the pearl coaft? There is no longer any gold in this country; but this is of no confequence, fince Strabo pofitively afferts, that in the time of the Seleucidæ, the inhabitants of Gerrha, on the road to Babylon obtained confiderable quantities from it. On weighing all thefe circumftances, it muft be admitted that the Perfian Guiph was the centre of the moft extenfive commerce of the ancient eaftern world, and that it was with a view of communicating with it by a fhorter or more fecure route, that Solomon turned his attention towards the Euphrates; and that, from the convenience of its fituation, Palmyra muft from that period have been a confiderable city. We may even reafonably conjecture, when we reflect on the revolutions of the following ages, that this commerce became a principal caufe of thofe various wars in Lower Afia, for which the barren chronicles of thofe early times affign no motives. If after the reign of Solomon, the Affyrians of Niniveh turned their ambitious views towards Chaldea, and the lower part of the Euphrates, it was with the intention to approach that great fource of opulence the Perfian Gulph. If Babylon, fiom being the vafial of Niniveh, in a fhort time became her rival, and the feat of a new empire, it was becaufe her fituation rendered her the emporium of this lucrative trade; in fhort, if the kings of this great city waged perpetual wars with Jerufalem and Tyre, their object was not only to defpoil thefe cities of their riches, but to prevent their invading their trade by the way of the Red-fea. An hiftorian $(t)$ who has informed us that Nabuchodonofor, before he laid fiege to Jerufalem, took poffeffion of Tadmour, clearly indicates that the latter city acted in concert with the two neighbouring capitals. Their gradual decline became, under the Perfian empire, and the fucceffors of Alexander, the efficient caufe of the fudden greatnefs of Palmyra in the time of the Parthians and Romans; fhe then enjoyed a long peace, for many centuries, which allowed her inhabitants to erect thofe monuments of opulence whofe ruins we fill admire. They the more readily adopted this fpecies of luxury, as the nature of the country permitted no other, and from the natural propenfity of merchants, in every nation, to difplay their wealth in magnificent buildings. Odenatus and Zenobia carried this profperity to its greateft height ; but by ato ( $t$ ) John of Aartioch.
U 4
tempting
tempting to exceed its natural limits, they at once deftroyed the equilibrium, and Palmyra, Atripped by Aurelian of the power the had acquired in Syria, was befieged, taken, and ravaged by that emperor; and loft in one day her liberty and fecurity, which were the principal fources of her grandeur. From that period, the perpetual wars of thefe countries, the devaftations of conquerors, and the oppreffions of defpots, by impoverithing the people, have diminifhed the commerce and deftroyed the fource which conveyed induftry and opulence into the very heart of the Deferts: the feeble channels that have furvived, proceeding from Aleppo and Damafcus, ferve only at this day to render her defertion more fenfible and more compleat.

Leaving thefe venerable ruins, and returning to the inhabited world, we firft meet with Homs, the Emefus of the Greeks, fituated on the eaftern bank of the Orontes: this place, which was formerly a frong and populous city, is, at prefent, only a large ruinous town, containing not more than two thoufand inhabitants, partly Greeks, and partly Mahometans. An Aga refides here, who who holds, as a fub-renter of the Pacha of Damafcus, the whole country as far as Palmyra. The Pacha himielf holds this farm as an appenage deriving immediately from the Sultan. Hama and Marra are held in the fame manner. Thefe three farms pay four hundred purfes, or five hundred thoufand livres (above twenty thoufand pounds); but they produce nearly four times that fum.

Two days journey below Homs, is Hama, celebrated in Syria for its water-works. The wheels are in fact the largeft in this country, being thirty-two feet in diameter. Troughs are faftened to the circumference, and fo difpofed as to fall in the river, and when they reach the vertex of the wheel, difcharge the water into a refervoir, whence it is conveyed by conduits to the public and private baths. The town is fituated in a narrow valley on the banks of the Orontes, contains about four thoufand inhabitants, and poffeffes fome trade from its fituation on the road from Aleppo to Tripoli. The foil, as throughout this whole diftrict, is well adapted to wheat and cotton; but agriculture, cxpofed to the rapine of the Motfallam and the Arabs, is in a very languifhing condition. An Arab Shaik, Shaik, named Mohammad-el-Korfan, is become fo powerful of late years, as to impofe arbitrary contributions on the country. He is fuppofed to be able to bring into the field thirty thoufand horfe-men

Continuing to defcend the Orontes, by an unfrequented route, we arrive at a marlhy country, where we meet with a place interefting from the change of fortune it has undergone. This place, called Famia, was formerly one of the moft celebrated cities of Syria, under the name of Apamea. "It was there," fays Strabo, "that the Seleucidæ, " had eftablifhed the fchool and nurfery of "s their cavalry." The foil of the neighbourhood, abounding in pafturage, fed no lefs than thirty thoufand mares, three hundred ftallions, and five hundred elephants; inftead of which the marfhes of Famia at prefent foarcely afford a few buffaloes and fheep. To the veteran foldiers of Alexander, who here repofed after their vistories, have fucceeded wretched pealants, who live in perpetual dread of the oppreffions of the Turks and the inroads of the Arabs. The fame profpect is repeated on every fide throughout thefe diftricts. Every town, every village is built of materials furnifhed
nifhed by ruins, and founded on the rubbift of ancient edifices. We continually meet with fuch ruins, both on the defert, and returning along this road, as far as the mountains of Damafcus; and even as we pafs to the fouthward of that city in the immenfe plains of the Hauran. The pilgrims of Mecca, who traverfe the latter for five or fix days journey, affures us they find, at every. ftep, the veftiges of ancient habitations. They are, however, lefs remarkable in thefe plains, for want of durable materials. The foil is a pure earth without ftones, and almoft without pebbles. What is faid of its actual fertility, perfectly correfponds with the idea given of it in the Hebrew writings. Whereever wheat is fown, if the rains do not fail, it repays the cultivator with profulion, and grows to the height of a man. The Pilgrims affert, alfo, that the inhabitants are ftronger and taller than the reft of the Syrians. They muft differ from them likewife in other refpects, on account of the climate, for this part of the country is fo exceffively hot and dry, as to refemble Egypt more than Syria. In the defart, as they have no running waters nor wood, they make their fires with dung, and build huts with pounded earth and ftraw. They are very tawny; they pay a tribute to the Pacha of Damafcus, but the greateft part of their villages put themfelves under the protection of fome Arab tribes; and when the Shaiks are prudent, the country profpers, and enjoys fecurity. The mountains, however, which border on thefe plains to the Weft and North, are ftill more fecure, on which account a number of families of the Druzes and Maronites, wearied with the troubles in Lebanon, have of late years taken refuge there, and built $d e a$, (u) or villages, where they freely profefs their religion, and have priefts and chapels. An intelligent traveller would here, no doubt, be able to make various interefting difcoverics in antiquities and natural hiftory; but no European has been hitherto known to have penetrated thefe receffes.

As we approach the Jordan, the country becomes more hilly and better watered; the valley through which this river flows abounds, in general, in pafurage, efpecially in the upper part of it. As for the river itfelf, it is very far from being of that importance which we are apt to affign to it. The Arabs, who are ignorant of the name of Jordan, call it el-Sharia. Its breadth, between the two principallakes, in few places excceds fixty or eighty feet; but its depth is about ten or twelve. In winter it overflows its narrow channel, and, fwelled by the rains, forms a fheet of water fometimes a quarter of a league broad. The time of its overflowing is generally in March, when the fnows melt on the mountains of the Shaik; at which time, more than any other, its waters are troubled, and of a yellow hue, and its courfe impetuous. Its banks are covered with a thick foref of reeds, willows, and various fhrubs, which ferve as an afylum for wild boars, onces, jackals, hares, and different kinds of birds.
(u) Hence the Spanifh word, aldcu.

Croffing the Jordan, half way between the two lakes, we enter a hilly country, anciently celebrated under the name of the kingdom of Samaria, but at prefent called the country of Nablous, its capital. This town, fituated near to Sichem, and on the ruins of the Neapolis of the Greeks, is the refidence of a Shaik, who farms the tribute, for which he is accountable to the Pacha of Damafcus, when he makes his circuit. The fate of this country is fimilar to that of the Druzes, with this difference, that its inhabitants are fuch zealous Mahometans as not willingly to fuffer any Chriftians among them. They are difperfed in villages among the mountains; the foil of which is tolerably fertile, and produces a great deal of corn, cotton, olives, and fome filks. Their diftance from Damafcus, and the difficulty of invading their country, by preferving them to a certain degree from the oppreffions of the government, enables them to live in more peace and happinefs, than is to be found elfewhere. They are at prefent even fuppofed the richeft people in Syria; which advantage they owe to their political conduct during the late troubles in Galilee and Paleftine; when the tranquillity in which they lived, induced many perfons of property to take refuge there. But, within the laft four or five years, the ambition of certain Shaiks, encouraged by the Turks, has excited a fpirit of faction and difcord, the confequences of which have been almoft as mifchievous as the oppreffions of the Pachas.

Two days journey to the fouth of Nablous, following the courle of the mountains, which at every ftep berome more barren and rocky, we arrive at a town, which, like many others already mentioned, prefents a ftriking example of the viciffitude of human affairs: when we behold its walls levelled, its ditches filled up, and all its buildings embarraffea with ruins, we fcarcely can believe we view that celebrated metropolis, which, formerly, withftood the efforts of the moft powerful empires, and, for a time, refifted the arms of Rome herfelf; though, by a whimfical change of fortune, its ruins now receive her homage and reverence; in a word, we with difficulty recognize Yerufalem. Still more are we aftonifhed atits ancient greatnefs, when we confider its fituation, amid a rugged foil, deftitute of water, and furrounded by dry channels of torrents, and fleep heights. Remote from every great road, it feems neither to have been calculated for a confiderable mart of commerce, nor the centre of a great confumption. It overcame however every ob: ftacle, and may be adduced as a proof of what popular opinions may effect in the hands of an able Leginature, or when favoured by happy circumitances. The fame opinions fill preferve to this city its eeble exiftence. The renown of its miracles perpetuated in the Eaf, invites and retains a certain number of inhabitants within its walls. Mahometans, Chriftians, Jews, without diftinction of fects, -ll make it a point of honour to fee, or to have feen, what they denominate the noble and boly city $(x)$. To judge from the refpect the inhabitants profefs for the facred places it contains, we fhould be ready to imagine there is not in the world a more devout people; but this has not prevented them from acquiring, and well deferving, the reputation of the vileft people in Syria, without excepting thofe even of Damafcus. Their number is fuppofed to amount to twelve or fourteen thoufand.

Jerufalem has from time to time had Governors of its own, with the title of Pachas; but it is in general, as at this day, a dependency of Damafcus, from which it receives a Motfallam, or deputy Governor. This Motfallam farms it and receives the revenucs arif-
(x) The Orientals never call Jerufalem by any other name than El-Kods, the Holy. Sometimes adding the Epithet El Sberif, the noble. This word El-Kods feems to me the etymology of all the Cafius of antiquity; which like Jerufalem were high places, and had Temples, or Holy-places erected on them.
ing from the Miri, the Cuttoms, and efpecially from the follies of the Chriftian inhabitants. To conceive the nature of this laft article, it muft be underfood, that the different communions of fchifinatic, and catholic Greeks; Armeni?ns, Copts, Abyfinians and Franks, mutually envying each other the poffefion of the holy places, are continually endeavoring to outbid one another in the price they offer for them to the Turkifh Governors. They are conftantly aiming to obtain fome privilege for themfelves, or to take it from their rivals: And each feet is perpetually informing againft the other for irregularities. Has a church been clandeftinely repaired; or a proceffion extended beyond the ufual limits: has a Pilgrim entered by a different gate from that cuftomary: all thefe are fubjects of accufation to the Government, which never fails to profit by them, by fines and extortions. Hence thofe hatreds, and that eternal jangling, which prevail between the different convents; and the adherents of each communion. The Turks, to whom every difpute produces money, are, as we may imagine, far from wifhing to put an end to them. They all, Vol. II. X in in whatever fation, derive fome advantagt from thefe quarrels: fome fell their protection, others their intereft. Hence a fpirit of intrigue and cabal, which has diffafed venality through every clafs; and hence perquifites for the Motfallam, which anmally amount to upwards of one handiod thoufund piafters. Every pilgrim pays him an entrance fee of ten piafters, and another for an efcort for the journey to the Jordan, without reckoning the fines impored in confequence of the imprudencies committed by theie furangers during their fay. Each convent pays him fo much for the privile, ef of proceRions, and fo much for all repairs the yundertake, befides prefents on the accettion of a new furperior, or a new Mictiailam; not to speak of private giatifications to obtain fecret trifies they follicit; all which is carried to a great length among the Turiks, wio are as woll verfed in the art of fqueezing money is the moft abie law practitioners in Earope. Befides all this, the Motfallam collects dutes on the exportation of certain fingular commodities from Jerifaicm, I mean bials, icüis, fimetuaries, cropicin, fafions, agmis-de"'s, fompataries, &xc. of which near three hundred cheits whefs are fent off amually. The fabrication of thefe utenfils of piety procures fubfiftence for the greateft part of the Chriftian and Mahometan families of Jerufalem and its neighbourliood; men, women, and children are employed in carving, and turning wood and coral, and in embroidering in filk, with pearls, and gold and filver thread. The convent of the Holy-land, alone, lays out annually to the amount of fifty thoufand piafters in thefe wares, and thofe of the Greeks, Armenians, and Copts, taken together, pay a nill la:ger fum. This fort of commerce is the more advantageous to the manufacturers, as their goods coft them little befide their labour; and the more lucrative for the fellers, as the price is enhanced by fuperfition. The e commodities, exported to Turkey, Italy, Fortugal, and more efpecially to Spain, produce a return of confiderable fums, cither in the form of alms or payments. To this the convents join another not lefs important article of traffic, the rijits of the pilgrims. It is well known that at all times the devout curiofity of vifiting the boly places, has conducted Chritians of every country to Jerufalem. There was even a time when the X 2 minifters minifers of religion taught it was indifpenfibly neceffary to falvation, and this pious zeal pervading all Europe, gave iife to the Crufades. Since their unfortunate infue, the zeal of the Europeans cooling every day, the number of pilgrims has diminifhed; and is now reduced to a few Italian, Spaniih, and German monks, but the caic is different with the Orientals. Faithful to the spirit of paft times, they continue to confider the journey to Jerufalem as a work of the greateft merit. They are cren foandalized at the relaxation of the Franks in this refpect, and fay, they have ali become heretics or infidels. Their prjefts aidd monks, who find their advantage in this fervor, do not ceafe to promote it. 'The Greeks, efpecially, declare that the pils rimage erferes plenary indulgerice, not only for the pajt, but even for the future; and tiout it alyoives not onlj from manther, incept, and pederafity; hio even fiom the necleot of fafting and the non-olfervance of feltivals, which ar far more beinous officiois. Such great encouragments are not without their effect ; and evcry year a crowd of pil(rams, of both fexes and aril ages, fet out from the Murea, the Archipelago, Conftantinople, ple, Anatolia, Armenia, Egypt, and Syria, the number of whom in I784, amounted to two thoufind. The monks, who find, by their regifters, that formerly ten or twelve thoufand annually made this pilgrimage, never coafe exclaiming that religion rapidly decays, and that the zeal of the faithful is nenrly extingुuifhed. It muft be confeffed, however, that this zeal is rather expenfive, fince the mof moderate pilgrimage never cofts lets than four thoufand livres, (one hundred and fixty-fix pounds), and fone of them, by means of offerings, amount to fifty or fixty thoufind, (twenty-five hundred pounds).

Yafa is the port where the pilgrims difembark. They arrive in November, and repair without delay to Jerufalem, where they remain until after the feftival of Eafter. They are lodged confufedly, by whole families, in the cells of the convents of their refpective communions; the monks take efpecinl care to tell them that this lodging is gratuitous; but it won!d be neither civil, nor very fafe to depart without making an offering greatly exceeding the ufual price of apartments. Beides this, it is impolible to dif$X^{3}$ penfe penfe with paying for mafies, fervices, exorcime, &ic. another confiderable tribute. The pilgrim muft alfo purchafe crucifixes, beads, agnus-dei's, &ic. On Palm-funday, they go to purify themfelves in the Jordan, an expedition which likewife requires a contribution. One year with another, it produces to the governor fifteen thoufand Turki!h fequins, or four thoufand fix hundred and eighty-feven pounds ( $y$ ), about one half of which is laid out in the expences of the efcort, and the fums demanded by the Arabs. The reader muft confult particular relations of this pilgrimage, to form an ilca of the tumultuous march of this fanatic multitule into the plain of Jericho; the indecent and fuperfitious zeal with which they throw themfelves, men, women, and children, naked into the Jordan; the fatigue they undergo before they reach the borders of the Dead-iea; the melancholy infpired by the fight of the gloomy rocks of that country, the mof favage in nature; their retum and vifitation of the holy places; and the ceremony of the now
(3) Ant the rate of fix finilings and threc-pace the fequis, fire,
fire, wobluch defiends from beaven on the boly Sinturidyy, brousbt by an angel. The Orientals ftill believe in this miracle, though the Franks acknowledge that the priefts retire into the Sacrify, and cffect what is done by very natural means.

Eafter over, each returns to his own country, proud of being able to rival the Mahometan in the title of Pilgrim (z); nay, many of them, in order to diftinguin themfelves as fuch, imprint on their hands, wrifts, or arms, figures of the crofs, or fpear, with the cypher of Jefus and Mary. This painful, and lometimes dangerous, operation ( $a$ ) is performed with needles, and the perforations filled with ghanpowder, or powder of antimony, and is never to be effaced. The Mahometans have the fime practice, which is alfo to be found among the Indians, and other favages, as it was likewife among feveral ancient nations with whom it had a connection with religion, which it ftill retains
(z) The difference between them is, that thofe of Mecca:are called Foaljes, and there of Jerufalem Mokoif, a name formed from that of the city, El-Kods.
(a) I have feen a pilgrim who had loft an arm by it, the cubital nerve beins wounded in the operation.
wherever it prevails. So much devotion does not however exempt thefe pilgrims from the proverbial cenfure thrown upon the Hadjes; fince the Chrifians fay likewife: bewne of the pilgrimes of forufokem.

We may weil fuppofe that fo great a multitude, refiding at Jerufalem for tive or fix months, muft leave behind them confiderable fums; and reckoning oilly fifteen hundred perfons, at one hundred piftoles cach, we fhall find they cannot expend lefs than a million and a half of livres, (fixty two thoufand five hundred pounds). Part of this money is paid to the inhabitants and merchants for neceffaries, and there lofe no opportunity of impofins upon ftrangers. Water in $1^{\AA_{4}}$, coft twenty fols (ten-pence) a fack. Another partgoes to the governor and his fubalterns, and the remainder is the profit of the convents. Great complaints are made of the improper ufe the Schifmatics make of this money, and their luxury is fpoken of as a great fcandal, their cells being ornamented with porcelain and tapentry, nay even with fabres, kandjars and other weapons. The Armenians and the Eiranks are much more modeft; with the former, who are poor, it is a virtue of necer-fity; but with the latter, who are not fo, it is prudence.

The convent of thefe Franks, called Sairit Sauveur, is the principal relicious houfe of all the Miffions of the IIOly Land which are in the Turkifh empire. Of thefe they reckon feventeen, compoled of Francifcans of every nation, but who are commonly French, ItaIian, and Spanifh. The general adminiftration is entrufted to three individuals of thefe nations, but fo that the fuperior muft be always a native fubjest of the Pope; the Agent, a fubject of the Catholic king, and the Vicar, a fubject of his moft Chriftian majefty. Each of thefe adminiftators has a key of the general treafury, that the money may not be touched without common confent. Each of them is aflifted by a fecond, called a Diforect: thefe fix and a Purtugnaie Difcrcet, form together the Direotory, or fovereign Chapter, which governs the convent and the whole order. The firft legiflators had formerly fo balancel the powers of thefe adminiftrators that it was impofiible for the whole to be governed by the will of one; but as all governments are fubject to sevolutions, fome circumftances which happened a few years fince, lrave changed the nature of this. The following is a fhort hiftory of the tranfiction.

About twenty years ago, in confequence of fome irregrularities incident to all great adminiftrations, the convent of the Holy Land incured a debt of fix hundred purfes, or thirty-one thoufand two hundred and fifty pounds. This was daily encrening, the expenditure continuing to exceed the receipts. It would have been an eafy matter to liquidate this at one froke, as the treafury of the holy fepulchre poffefis, in diamonds, and all forts of precious ftones, in chalices, crucifixes, golden ciboires, (buxes containing the Hoft,) and other prefents of Chritian princes, to the amount of upwards of a million of lives; but befides the averion which the minifters of temples have, at all times, to alienate ficred tings, it might be goud policy in the prime cure, not to thew the Turks, nor even the Chriftians, too great refources. The fituation was embairafing; and it became dill more fo from the murmurs of the Spanith agent, who loukly complained of being alone obliged to fuftuin the buthen of the debt, fors in fact, he it was who furnifined the mot mof confuierable funds. Under thefe circumftances, J. Ribadeira, who occupied this poft, died, and chance beftowed the fucceffion on a man, who ftill more impatient than himfelf, determined at every hazard to apply a remedy; and he fet about the execution of his project with the more zeal, as he promifed himfelf private advantages in the meditated reform. He therefore prepared his plan; and addreffing himfelf directly to the king of Spain, by means of his confeffor, reprefented to him:
"That the zeal of the Chritian princes " having greatly cooled of late years, their " ancient largefies to the convent of the Holy "Land were confiderably diminifhed; that his " moft Faithful Majefty had retrenched more " than one half of the forty thoufand dol" lars he was accuftomed to beftow; that " his moft Chriftian Majefty, thinking tile " proteftion he granted fufficient, fearcc" ly paid the three thoufand livres he had " promifed; that Italy and Germany daily " became lefs liberal, and that his Catholic "Majefty was the only fovereign who con. " tinued the benefactions of his predecef"fors." He alro ftated, on the other hand, that, " the expences of the eftablifhment " not having fuficred a proportionable di" minution, a deficiency had been incurrer, " which rendered it neceffary to have re"courfe to an-amnual loan, that by this " means a confiderable debt was contracted,
" which daily encreafing, menaced the in" ftitution with final ruin; that anoong the " caufes of this debt, the pilgrimase of the " monks who came to vifit the holy pl. ees
" muft be particularly taken iisto accolmi, " that it was neceflary to defray the expences
" of their journey, their pafinge by fen, their " tribute, and bourd at the convent for two " or three jears, &xc. That it fo happened, "that the greateft part of theie monks came " froin thofe very ftates which had with"drawn their bounties; that is, from Por" tugal, Germany, and Italy; that it feemed
" unreafonable for the king of Spain to pay "for thofe who were not his rubjects, and "that it was a fill greater abufe to fee the ad" miniftration of theie funds entrufted to a " chapter, almoft wholly compofed of "foreigners. The petitioner, infifting on " this laft article, prayed his Catholic ma" jenty to interpofe in the reformation of the " abufes,
" abufes, and to entablifh new and more equi" table regulations, the plan of which he " lubmitted, Sxc."

Thefe reprefentations produced the defired effect. The king of Spain firft declared himfelf Efpecial Protector of the order of the Holy Lend, in the Levant; and then named the petitioner, $\mathfrak{F}$. Juan Ribeira, his Royal Agent; he gave him, in quality of this office, a feal, with the arms of Spain, and entrufted him with the fole management of his gifts, without being accountable to any other than himfelf. From that moment, J. Juan Ribeira, become a plenipotentiary, fignified to the confintory that henceforward he hould have a private treafury, diftinct from the common ftock; that the latter fhould continue, as heretofore, charged with the general expences, and that, in confequence, all the contributions of the different nations fhould be paid in there; but as that of Spain bore no proportion to the others, he fhould apply no more than what was adequate to their refpective contingents, retaining the furplus for his private treafury; that the pilgrimages, henceforth, fhould be at the expence of the nations from whence they came, except the fubjects of France, the care of whom he took upon himiclf. By this reguiation, the pilgrimages, and the greatert part of the general expences being limited, the difburfements are more proportionable to the receipts, and they have begun to priy of in the debt; but the monks do not view with a favourable eye the agent thus become independent; nor can they pardon him for concentring in himfelf alnoft as much wealth as is poffefed by the whole order: for, in cight years, he has received four condiats, of contriburins from Span, eftimated at eight hundred thoumd dollars. The money in which thefe contributions are puid, confiling in Spanif dollares, is uftully put on board a French hap which conveys it to Cypras, under the care of two monis. From Cyprus, part of thefe dollarsare fent to Contantinople, where they are fold to advantage, and converted into Turkin coin. The other part gocs directly by the way of Yafa to Jeruialem, where the inhabitants expect it with as much anxiety as the Spaniards look for the galleons. The agent pays a cortais fum into the general treafary, and the remainder is at his difpofal. The ules he makes of it, confift, firf, in a penfion of three thoufand liveres to the French

Vicar

Vicar and his Difereet, who, by this mans, procure him a majority of fufrages. Secondly, in prefents to the governor, the Mufti, the Kadi, the Nakib, and other great officers, whofe credit may be of ure to him. He has likewife to fupport the dignity of his office, which is by no means a trifing cxpence; for he has his private interpreters, like a conful, his table and his Janifaries; he alone, of all the Franks, mounts on horleback in Ierufalem, and is attended by a body of cavalry; in a word, he is, next to the Motfaliam, the firft perfon in the country, and treats with the powers of it, upon a footing of equality. We may fuppofe, however, that fo much refrect is not for nothing. A fingle vifit to Djezzar for the church of Nazareth, colt thirty thoufand Pataques, (above fix thoufand fivehundred and forty-two pounds). The Mahometans of Jerufalem who defire his monev, feek his friendmip. The Chriftians who follicit alms from him, dread even his indifference. Happy the family he felcets for his favourites, and woe to the man who has the misfortune to difpleafe him ; for his hatred can difplay itfelf either by open or indirect means: a hint to the Wrali enfures the baftinado, nado, without the victim knowing whence it procceds. So much power made him difdain the cuftomary protection of the ambarfador of France, and nothing but fuch an afrair as he had lately winh the Pacha of Damafcus, could have reminded him that this protection is more cfficacious than twenty thonfind Sequins. His agents, proud of his protection, abule their authority, like all fubalterns. The Spanith monks of Yafa and Ramla, treat the Chrifians who depend on them with a rigour which is very far from cvangelicai: they excommanicate them in the open church, abufing them by name; they thaceten the women who have been indiifcrect in talking of them; and oblige them to do public penitence, with a taper in their hands; they deliver over the intractable to the Turke, and refuife every fuccour to thecir families: in fhort, they offerd againt the cuftoms of the country, and all decorum, by vifiting the wives of the Chrifians, who Should only be feen by their very near relations, and by remaining with them, withont witnefies, in their apartments, under pretence of confefling them. The Turks are not able to conceive fo much liberiy without an abufe of it. The Chriftians, who are of the fame opinion, murmur at it, but do no more. Experience has taught them that the indignation of the RR. PP. (reverend fathers) is attended with dreadful confequences. It is whifpered, that, fix or feven years ago, they piocured an order from the Captain Pacha, to cut off the head of an inhabitant of Yafa who oppofed them. Fortunately the Aga took upon himfelf to furpend the execution, and to undeceive the Admiral; but their animofity has never ceafed to perfecute this man, by every kind of chicanery. Not long ago, they follicited the Englif ambaffador, under whofe protection he has placed himfelf, to furrender him to a punifhment, which in fact was only an unjuft revenge.

Letus now quit thefe details, which, however, very properly defcribe the prefent fituation of this country. When we leave Jerufalem, we only find three places in this part of the pachalic which merit attention.

The firf is Raba, the ancient Jericho, fituated fix leagues to the north-eaft of Jerufalem, in a plain fix or feven leagues long, by three wide, around which are a number of barren mountains, that render it extremely hot. Here formerly was cultivated the balm of Mecca. From the defcription of the Hadjes, this is a Ahrub, fimilar to the pomegranate-tree, with leaves like thofe of rue: it bears a pulpy nut, in which is contained a kernel that yields the refinous juice we call balm or balfam. At prefent there is not a plant of it remaining at Raha; but another fpecies is to be found there, called Zckkoun, which produces a fiveet oil, alfo celebrated for hcaling wounds. This Zakkoun refembles a plum-tree; it has thorns four inches long, with leaves like thofe of the olive-tree, but narrower and greener, and prickly at the end; its fruit is a kind of acorn, without a calix, under the bark of which is a pulp, and then a nut, the kernel of which gives an oil that the Arabs fell very dear: this is the fole commerce of Raha, which is no more than a ruinous village.
Vol. II. Y barren

The fecond place deferving notice, is Bait-cl-labm, or Bethlehem, fo celebrated in the hiftory of Chriftianity. This village, fituated two leagues fouth-eaft of Jerufalem, is feated on an eminence, in a country full of hills and vallies, vallies, and might be rendered very agreeable. The foil is the beft in all thefe diftricts; fruits, vines, olives, and fefamum fucceed here extremely well; but, as is the cafe every where elfe, culcivation is wanting. 'They reckon about fix hundred men in this village capable of bearing arms upon occafion, and this often occurs, fometimes to refift the Pacha, fometimes to make war with the adjoining villages, and fometimes in confequence of inteftine diffentions. Of there fix hundred men, about one hundred are Latin Chriftians, who have a Vicar dependent on the great convent of Jerufalem. Formerly their whole trade confifted in the manufacture of beads; but the reverend fathers not being able to find a fale for all they could furnifh, they have refumed the cultivation of their lands. They make a white wine, which juftifies the former celebrity of the wines of Judea, but it has the bad property of being very heady. The neceflity of uniting for their common defence prevails over their religious differences, and makes the Chriftians live here in tolerable harmony with the Mahometans, their fellow citizens. Both are of the TRAVELSINparty Yaimani, which, in oppofition to that called Kaif, divides all Paleftine into two factions, perpetuallyat variance. Thecouragc of thefe peafants, which has been frequently tried, has rendered them formidable through all that country.

324

The third and laft place of note is Hubroun, or Hebron, feven leagues to the fowth of Bethlehem; the Arabs have no other name for this village than El-kalil ( $(\hat{c})$, the well beloved, which is the epithet they ufually apply to Araham, whofe fepulchral grotto they frill fhew. Habroin is feated at the foot of an eminence, on which are fome wretched ruins, the miffhapen remains of an ancient caftlc. The adjacent country is a fort of oblong hollow, five or fix leagues in length, and not difagreeably varied by rocky hillocks, froves of fir-trees, Atunted oaks, and a few plantations of vines and olive-trees. Thefe vineyards are not cultivated with a view to make wine, the inhabitants being fuch zealous iNahometans as not to permit any Chrifians to live among them: they are only of ufe to procure dried raifins which are badly prepared, though the grapes are of an excellent kind. The peafants cultivate cotton, likewife, which is fipun by their wives, and fold at Jerufalem and Gaza. They have allo fome foap manufactories, the Kali, for which is fold them by the Bedouins, and a very ancient glafs-houfe, the only one in Syria. They make there a great quantity of coloured rings, bracelets for the wrifts and legs, and for the arms above the elbows ( $c$ ), befides a variety of other trinkets, which are fent even to Comfantinople. In confequence of thefe manufactures, Habroun is the mof powerful village in all this quarter, and is able to arm eight or nine hundred men, who adhere to the faction Kaifi, and are the perpetual enemies of the people of Bethlehem. This difcord, which has prevailed throughout the country,
(1) Tac $K$ is hereufd for the Spminin Ista.
(c) Thefe rings are often more than an inch in diameter; they are paffed on the arms of children, and it often happens, as I have frequently feen, that the arm growing bieger than the ring, a ridge of fleth is formed above and below, fo that the ring is buried in a deep hollow and cannot be got off, and this is confidered as a beauty.
from
from the earlieft timcs of the Arabs caufes a perpetual civil war. The peafants are inceflantly making inroads on each other's lands, deffroying their corn, dourra, fefamum, and olive-trees, and carrying off their fheep, goats, and camels. The Turks, who are every where negligent in reprefling fimilar diforders, are the lefs attentive to them here, fince their authority is very precarious; the Bedouins, whofe camps occupy the level country, are continually at open hoftilities with them, of which the peafants avail themfelves to refift their authority, or do mifchief to each other, according to the blind caprice of their ignorance, or the intereft of the moment. Hence arifes an anarchy, which is ftill more dreadful than the defpotifm which prevails elfewhere, while the mutual devaftations of the contending parties render the appearance of this part of Syria more wretched than that of any other.

Proceeding from Hebron towards the weft, we arrive, after five hours. journey, at fome eminences, which, on this fide, form the laft branch of the mountains of Judea. There the traveller, wearied with the rugged cuuntry he has quitted, views with pleafure the vaft plain which extends beneath his feet, to the fea that lies before him. This is the plain which, under the name of Falafin, or Paleftine, terminates, on this fide, the country of Syria, and forms the laft divifion concerning which it remains for me to Speak. TRAVELS IN

CHAP. XXXI.

Of Palyfinc.

Pazestine, in its prefent fate, comprehends the whole country included between tie Mediterrancan to the weft, the chain of mosiatains to the caff, and two lines, onc drawn to the fouth, by Kan Youncs, and the other to the north, between Kaifaria and the rivulet of Yafa. This whole tract is almoft entirely a level plain, without cither river or rivulet in fummer, but watered by feveral torrents in winter. Notwithftanding this drynefs the foil is good, and may even be termed frtile, for when the winter rains do not fail, every thing fprings up in abundance; and the earth, which is black and fat, retains moifure fufficient for the growth of grain aid vegctables during the fummer. More dourra, feramum, water-melons, and beans, are fown here than in any other part of the country. They alfo raife cotton, barley, and wheat; but though the latter be moft eftemed, it is lefs cultivated, for fear of too much inviting the ava.ice of the Turkin governors, and the rapacity of the Arabs. This country is indeed more frequently plundered than any other in Syria, for being very proper for cavalry, and adjacent to the Defert, it lies open to the Arabs, who are far from Catisfied with the mountains: they have long difputed it with every power eftablifhed in it, and have fucceeded fo far as to obtain the conceffion of certain places, on paying a tribute, from whence they infert the roads, fo as to render it unfafe to travel from Gaza to Acre. They might even have obtained the cntire pofferinon of it, had they known how to avail themfelves of their ftrength; but, divided among themfelves by jaring interefts, and family quarrels, they turn thofe weapons on eachother which they fhould employ againft the common enemy, and are at once enfeebled by their difregard of all good order and government, and impoverifhed by ticir fpirit of rapacity.

Paleftine, as I have faid, is a diftrict independent of every Pachalic. Sometimes it has governors of its own, who refide at Gaza under the title of Pachas; but it is ufually, as at prefent, divided into three appenages, or Melkana, viz. Yafa, Loudd, and Gaza.

The former belongs to the TV alda, or Sultana Mother. The Captain Pacha has received the two others as a recompenfe for his fervices, and a reward for the head of Daher. He farms them to an Aga, who refides at Ramla, and pays him two hundred and fifteen purfes for them, viz. one hundred and eighty for Gaza and Ramla, and thirty-five for Loudd.

Yafa is held by another Aga, who pays one hundred and twenty purfes to the Sultana. For this he reccives the whole miri and polltax of the town, and fome adjacent villages; but the chief part of his revenue arifes from the cuftom-houfe, as he receives all the duties on imports and exports. Thefe are pretty confiderable, as it is at Yafa that the rice of Damietta is landed for Jerufalem, and the merchandize of a fmall French factory at Ramla; it is the port likewife for the pilgrims of the Morca and Comitantinople, and the produce of the coaft of Syria; from hence alfo all the fpun cottons of Paleftinc, and the commodities exported from this country, along the conf, are hipped. The forces this Aga maintains, are only thirty mufkcwers, home mad foci, who forcely fufice as a guard
guard to two wretched gates, and to keep off the Arabs.

As a fea-port, and place of Atrength, Yafa is nothing; but it is capable of becoming one of the moft important on the coaft, on account of two fprings of frefh water which are within its walls, on the fea fhore. Thefe fprings enabled it to make the obftinate refiftance it did in the late wars. The port, which is formed by a pier, and at prefent choaked up, might be cleared out, and made to contain twenty veffels of three hundred tons burthen each. Thofe which come there at prefent, are obliged to caft anchor at fea, at near a league's diftance from the fhore; where they are by no means fafe, the bottom being a bank of rock and coral, which extends as far as Gaza.

Before the two late fieges, this was one of the moft agreeable towns on the coaft. Its environs were covered with a foreft of orange and lemon trees, citrons, and palms, which here firft begin to bear good fruit (d). Beyond it the country abounds in olive trees, as large as walnut trees; but the Mamlouks having cut them all down for the pleafure they take in deftroying, or to make fires, Yafa has loft its greateft convenience and ornament ; fortunatcly it was impoffible to deprive it of the rivulets that water its gardens, and nourifh the young fuckers, which have already begun to firoot.
(d) We meet with fome after having paficd Acre, but their fruit ripens with difficulty,

Three leagies to the caft of Yafa is the village of Loudd, the ancient Lydda, and Diofpolis. A place lately ravaged by fire and fiword would have precifly the appearance of this village. From the huts of the inhabitants to the Serai, or palace of the Aga, is one continued heap of rubbih and ruins. A weekly market, however, is held at Loudd, to which the peafants of the environs bring their fpun cotton for fule. The poor Chriftians who diwell here, niew, with great veneration, the ruins of the church of St. Pcter, and make Atrangers fit down on a column, which, as they fay, that Saint once refted on. They point out the place where he preached, where he prayed, &ic. The whole country is full of fuch tiaditions. It is impoffible to ftir a ftep without being hewn the traces of fome afootle, fome martyr, or fome virgin; but what what credit can be due to thefe traditions, when experience proves that the hifory of Ali Bey and Daher is already difputed and uncertain?

One third of a league to the fouthward or Loudd, along a road lined with nopals, ftands Ramla, the ancient Arimathea. This town is almoft in as ruinous a fate as Loudd itfelf. We meet with nothing but rubbifh within its boundaries; the Aga of Gaza refides here in a Serai, the floors and walls of which are tumbling down. "Why," faid I, one day, to one of his Sub-Agas, " does he not at leaft "repair his own apartment?" "Yes," replied he, " but if another fhould next year " obtain his place, who would repay him "the expence?"

He maintains about one hundred horfemen, and as many Barbary foldiers, who are lodged in an old Chriftian church, the nave of which is ufed as a fable, and in an ancient kan, which is difputed with them by the fcorpions. The adjacent country is planted with lofty olive trees, difpofed in quincunces. The greateft part of them are as large as the walnut trees of France; but they are daily perifling through age, the ravages of contending tending factions, and even from fecret mifo chief; for, in thefe countries, when a peafant would revenge himfelf of his enemy, he comes by night, and faws or cuts his trees clofe to the ground, and the wound, which he takes care to cover, draining off the fap like an iffue, the olive tree languifhes and dies. Amid thefe plantations, we meet, at every ftep, with dry wells, cifterns fallen in, and vaft vaulted refervoirs, which prove that, in ancient times, this town muf have been upwards of a league and a half in circumference. At prefent it farcely contains two hundred families. The little land which is cultivated, by a few of them, belongs to the Mufti, and to two or three perfons related to him. The reft content themelves with finning cotton, which is chiefly purchafed by two Freirch houfes eftabilined there. They are the laft in this part of Syria, there being none either at Jerufalem or Yafa. At Ramla there is alfo a forp manufactory, which is almof all fent into Egypt. I muft not forget to mention that the Aga built here, in 1784 , the only windmill i have feen in Syria or Egypt, though they are haid tu have been originally invented in thefe countries. It was completed after the plan, and under the direction, of a Venetian carpenter.

334 TRAVELSIN

The only remarkable antiquity at Ramla is the minoret of a ruined mofque on the road to Yafa. By an Arabic infcription it appears to have been built by Saif-el-din, Sultan of Egypt. From the fummit, which is very lofty, the eye follows the whole chain of mountains, which begins at Nablous, and fkirting the plain, lofes itfelf toward the fouth. In this plain, between Ramla and Gazn, we meet with a number of villages, badly built, of dried mud, and which, like their inhabitants, exhibit every mark of poverty and wetchednefs. The houfes, on a nearer view, are only fo many huts, fometimes detached, at others ranged in the form of cells around a court-yard, inclofed by a mud wall. The women have there, as elfewhere, feparate apartiments. In winter, they and their cattle may be faid to live together, the part of the dwelling alloited to themfelves being only raifed two feet above that in which they lodge their beafts. The peafants are by this means kept warm, without buining wood; an œconomy indifpenfable in a country abfolutely deflitute of fual.

336 TRAVELS IN

As for the fire neceffary for culinary purpofer, they make it or dung kneaded into calses, which they dry in the fun, expofing them to its rays on the walls of their huts. In fummer their lodging is more airy, but all their furniture contifts in a fingle mat, and a pitcher for drinking. The environs of thefe villages are forwn at, the proper feafon, with grain, and water melons; all the reft is a defert, and abandoned to the Bedouin Arabs, whofecd their flocks on it. At every ftep we meet with ruins of towers, dungcons, and cafles with foffés, and fometimes a garrifon, confifting of the lieutenant of an Asa, and two or three Barbary fuldiers, with rothing but a fhirt and a mufket; but more frequently they are inhabited by jackals, owls, and fcorpions.

Among the inhabited places may be diftinguilhod the village of Mefmia, four leagues from Ramb, on the road to Gaza, which fumifhes a great deal of fpun cotton. At the diftance of a hoort league to the eaft, is a detached cminence, called for that reafon ElQicll. It is the carital of the tribe of Wahidia, one of the Shaiks of which, named Eakir, was aiminnated three years ago by the Aga of Gaza, at an entertainment to which he had invited him. On this hill are found many remains of habitations and caverns, fuch as are to be met with in the fortifications of the middle ages. This muf have been at all times a favourite fituation, from its fteepnefs, and the fpring which is at the bottom. The channel through which it flows, is the fame that lofes itfelf near Afkalon (Afcalon). To the eaft, the foil is rocky, but covered with fcattered firs, olives, and other trees. Bait-djibrim, the Betha-Gabris of Antiquity, is an inhabited village not quite three quarters of a league to the fouthward. Seven hours journey from thence, toward the fouth-weft, is another village of the Bedouins, called the Hefi, which has in its neighbourhood an artificial fquare hill, above feventy feet high, one hundred and fifty wide, and two hundred long. The whole afcent to it has been paved, and on its fummit we ftill find the remains of a very ftrong citadel.

As we approach the fea, three leagues from Ramla, on the road to Gaza, is Yabna, the ancient Jamnia. This village has nothing remarkable, but a factitious eminence like that of Hefi, and a rivulet, the only one in thefe diftricts

> VoL. II.

Z
which
which does not dry up in fummer. Its whole courfe is not more than a league and a half. Before it reaches the fea, it forms a morafs called Roubin, where the country people had begun a plantation of fugar canes, which made the moft promifing appearance ; but, after the fecond crop, the Aga demanded a contribution, which compelled them to defert it.

Leaving Yabna, we meet fucceffively with various ruins, the moft confiderable of which are at Ezdoud, the ancient Azotus, famous at prefent for its fcorpions. This town, fo powerful under the Philiftines, affords no proofs of its ancient importance. Three leagues from Ezdoud is the village of E1Majdal, where they fpin the fineft cottons in Paleftine, which, however, are very clumfy. On the right is Azkalan, whofe deferted ruins are every day, removing farther from the fea, by which it formerly was wafhed. This whole coaft is daily accumulating fands, infomuch, that moft of the places which it is known anciently were fea ports, are now four or five hundred paces within land; of this Gaza is an example.

Gaza, called by the Arabs Razza, with a flrong guttural pronunciation of the $r$, is compofed compofed of three villages, one of which, under the name of the Ciafle, is fituated between the two others, on an inconfiderable eminence. This caftle, which might have been ftrong for the time in which it was built, is now nothing but a heap of rubbiff. The Serai of the Aga, which makes a part of it, is in as ruinous a ftate as that of Ramla; but it has the advantage of a moft extenfive profpect. From its walls, we view at once the fea, from which it is feparated by a fandy beach, a quarter of a league wide, and the country, whofe date trees, and level and naked afpect, as far as the eye can difcern, reminds us of Egypt; and, in fact, in this latitude, the foil and climate both appear to be truly Arabian. The heats, the drought, the winds, and the dews, are the fame as on the banks of the Nile; and the inhabitants have the complection, fature, manners, and accent of the Egyptians, rather than thofe of the Syrians.

The fituation of Gaza, by fitting it for the medium of communication between thefe two nations, has rendered it at all times a town of fome importance. The ruins of white marble fometimes found there, prove it was formerly the abode of luxury and opulence; nor was it unworthy of this preference. The black foil of the furrounding country is extremely fertile, and the gardens, watered by limpid ftreams, produce, even yet, without art, pomegranates, oranges, exquifite dates, and ranunculus roots, in great requeft, even at Conftantinople. It has, however, fhared in the general deftruction; and, notwithftanding its proud title of the capital of Paleftine, it is no more than a defencelefs village, peopled by at moft only two thoufand inhabitants. The manufacture of cottons is their principal fupport; and, as they have the exclufive fupply of the peafants and Bedouins of the neighbourhood, they may keep going about five hundred looms. There are likewife two or three foap manufacturies. The article of afhes, or kalis, was formerly a confiderable commerce. The Bedouins, who procured thefe afhes, by fimply burning the plants of the defert, fold them at a reafonable rate; but frince the Aga has monopolized this commodity, the Arabs, compelicd to part with it at his price, are no longer anxious to collect it ; and the inhabitants, conftrained to purchafe at his pleafure, neglect making foap.

$$
\mathrm{Z}_{2} \text { merly }
$$

Theie

Thefe afhes, however, are an object worthy of attention, from the quantity of alkali they contain.

A branch of commerce more advantageous to the people of Gaza, is furnifhed by the caravans which pafs and repafs between Egypt and Syria. The proviiions they are obliged to take for their four days journey in the defert produce a confiderable demand for their flour, oils, dates, and other neceffaries. Sometimes they correfpond with Suez, on the arrival or departure of the Djedda fleet, as they are able to reach that place in three long days journey. They fit out, likewife, every year, a great caravan, which goes to meet the pilgrims of Mecca, and conveys to them the convoy or Djerda of Paleftine, and fupplies of various kinds, with different refrefhments. They meet them at Maon, four days journey to the fouth-fouth-eaft of Gaza, and one day's journey to the north of Akaba, on the road to Damafcus. They alfo purchafe the plunder of the Bedouins; an article which would be a Peru to them, were thefe accidents more frequent. It is impoffible to afcertain the profits they made by the plunder of the great caravan in 1757. Two-thirds of upwards of twenty thoufand camel loads, of which the Hadj, or caravan of pilgrims, was compofed, were brought to Gaza. The ignorant and famifhed Bedouins, who know no value in the fincft fuffs, but as they ferve to cover them, fold their callmmire, fhawls, callicoes, mullins, firfakes, Perfian fuffs, coffec, and gums, for a few piaftres. We may judge from the following fory, of the ignorance and fimplicity of thefe inhabitants of the deferts. A Bedouin of Anaza having found, amongt his booty, feveral bags of fine pearls took them for doura, and had them boiled to eat them; but feeing that they did not foften, was on the point of throwing them away, when an inhabitant of Gaza gave him in exchange for them a red bonnet of Faz. A fimilar incident happened in 1779, at the time of the pillage of the caravan which M. de St. Germain accompanied; 2nd but the other day, in 1784 , the caravan of Barbary, confifting of upwards of three thoufand camels, was likewife pilliged, and the quantity of coffee difperfed by the Bedouins throughont Palentine, was fo great, as to caufe the price of that article to fall fuddenty to one half of what it was before; and it would would have fallen fill more, had not the Aga prohibited the fale of it, in order to compel the Bedouins to deliver it all into his hands. A monopoly of this fort in the affair of 1779 , produced him more than eighty thoufand piaftres. One year with another, adding thefe cafualties to his other extortions, to the miri, the cuftoms, the twelve hundred camel loads, which he purloins from the three thoufand he floould furnifh for the Mecca convoy, he raifes, one year with another, a revenue full double the hundred and eighty purfes he pays for his farm.

Beyond Gaza there are only deferts. It muit not, however, be underfood, that the country becomes fuddenly uninhabitable; we fill continue, for a day's journey, along the fea coaft, to meet with fome cultivated fpots and villages. Such is Kan-younes, a fort of caftle, in which the Mamlouks keep a garrifon of twelve men. Such alfo is El-Arifh, the laft foot where water, which can be drank, is to be found, until you arrive ai Salahia in Egypt. El-Arith is three quarters of a league from the fea, in a fandy country, as is all that coaft. Returning to the defert, by the eaft, we meet with other ftrips of cuitivable

344

 TRAVELS INland, as fir as the road to Mecea. Thefe are little vallies, where a few peafants have been tempted to fettle by the waters, which colleet at the time of the winter rains, and by fome wells. They cultivate palm-trees and doum, under the protection, or rather expofed to the rapine, of the Arabs. Thefe peafants, feparated from the reft of mankind, are half favages, and more ignorant and wretched than the Redouins themfelves. Incapable of leaving the foil they cultivate, they live in perpetual dread of lofing the fruit of their labours. No fooner have they gathered in their harveft, than they haften to fecret it in private places, and retire among the rocks which border on the Dead Sea. This country has not been vifited by any traveller, but it well merits fuch an attention; for, from the reports of the Arabs of Bakir, and the inhabitants of Gaza, who frequently go to Mann, and Karak on the road of the pilgrims, there is, to the fouth-eaft of the lake Afphaltites, within three days journey, upwards of thirty ruined towns, abfolutcly deferted. Several of them have large edifices, with columns which may have belonged to ancient temples, or at leaft to Greek churches.

The Arabs fometimes make ufe of them to fold their cattle in; but in general avoid them, on account of the enormous fcorpions with which they fwarm. We cannot be furprifed at thefe traces of ancient population, when we recollect that this was the country of the Nabatheans, the moft powerful of the Arabs; and of the Idumeans, who, at the time of the deftruction of Jerufalem, were almoft as numerous as the Jews, as appears from Jofephus, who informs us, that on the firft rumour of the march of Titus againft Jerufalem, thirty thoufand Idumeans inftantly affembled, and threw themfelves into that city for its defence. It appears that, befides the advantage of being under a tolerably good government, thefe diftricts enjoyed a confiderable fhare of the commerce of Arabia and India, which increafed their induftry and population. We know that, as far back as the time of Solomon, the cities of $A t$ form Gaber (Efion-Geber), and Ailah (Eloth) were highly frequented marts. Thefe towns were fituated on the adjacent gulph of the Red Sea, where we fill find the latter yet retaining its name, and perhaps the former in that of El-Akabor, or the End (of the Sea).

There

Thefe two places are in the hands of the Bedouins, who, being deftitute of a navy and commerce, do not inhabit them. But the pilgrims of Cairo report that there is at ElAkaba a wretched fort, with a Turkifh garrifon, and good water; an advantage truly valuable in thefe countries. The Idumeans, from whom the Jews only took their ports at intervals, muft have found in them a great fource of wealth and population. It cvens appears, that they rivalled the Tyrians, who alfo poffeffed a town, the name of which is unknown, on the coaft of Hedjaz, in the dcfert of Tih, and the city of Faran, and without doubt El-Tor, which ferved it by way of Port. From this place the caravans might reach Paleftine and Judea in eight or ten days. This route, which is longer than that from Suez to Cairo, is infinitely fhorter than that from Aleppo to Baffora, which requires five and thirty or forty days, and poffibly in the prefent ftate of things would be the bett, if the pafiage by Egypt fhould remain eitirely fhut up. Nothing more vould be neceffary, than to make an agreement with the Arabs, treaties with whom are infinitely more fecure than with the Namlonks.

The Defert of Tih, which I have juft mentioned, is that into which Mofes conducted the Jews, and kept them for a whole generation, to initiate them in the art of war, and transform a multitude of fhepherds into a nation of conquerors. The name $E l-T$ ib feems to have a refercince to their hiftory, as it fignifies the Country of Wandering; but we muft not imagine this to be in confequence of tradition, fince the prefent inhabitants are foreigners, and men in all countries find it difficult to recur even to their grandfathers; it is from reading the Hebrew books and the Koran, that the name of El-tih has been given this tract by the Arabs; they alfo call it Barr-el-tour-Sina, which fignifies Country of Mount Sinai.

This defert, which is the boundary of Syria to the fouth, extends itfelf in the form of a peninfula between the two gulphs of the Red Sea; that of Suez to the weft, and that of ElAkaba to the eaft. Its breadth is ordinarily thirty leagues, and its length feventy. This great fpace is almoft whoily occupied by barren mountains which join thofe of Syria, on the no:th, and, like them, confint of calcareous ftonc: but as we advance to the fouthward, they they become granitous, and Sinai and Horeb are only enormous maffes of that ftonc. Hence it was the ancients called this country Arabiu Petrea. The foil in general is a dry gravel, producing nothing but thorny acacias, tamarifks, firs, and a few fcattered fhrubs. Springs of water are very rare, and thofe few are fometimes fulphurcous, and Thermal, as at Hammam-Faraoun, at others brackifh and difagreeable, as at El Naba oppofite Sucz; this faline quality prevails throughout the country, and there are mines of foffil falt in the northern parts. In fome of the vallies, however, the foil becoming better, as it is formed of the earth wafhed from the rocks, is cultivable after the winter rains, and may almoft be ftiled fertile. Such is the vale of Djirandel, in which there are cven groves of trees. Such alfo is the vale of Faran, in which the Bedouins fay there are ruins, which can be no other than thofe of the ancient city of that name. In former times every advantige was made of this country that coald be obtained from it ( $c$ ), but at prefent, (e) M. Nicbur difcovered, on a mountain, fome tombs with hierogiyphics, which may induce us to believe the Fgyptians had mede fettlements in thefe countries.
abandoned
abandoned to nature, or rather to barbarifm, it produces nothing but wild herbs. Yet, with fuch fanty provifion, this Defert fubfifts three tribes of Bedouins, confining of about five or fix thoufand Arabs, difperfed in various parts. They are called by the general name of Tawara, or Arabs of Tor, the bent known and moft frequented place in the country. It is fituated on the eafern ide of the branch of Suez, in a fandy and low ground, as is all this coaft. Its whole merit confifts in a pretty good road for fhipping, and water which may be drank; the Arabs alfo bring fome thither from Sinai, which is zeally good. The fhips of Suez lay in their provifions here when they fail to Djedda. There is nothing further to notice except that we find here a few palm-trees, the ruins of a wretched fort without a garrifon, a fmall Greek convent, and fome huts of poor Arabs, who live on fifh, and ferve as failors for wages. There are alfo, to the fouthward, two fmall villages of Greeks, who, are equally poor and miferable. As for the fubfiftence of the three tribes, it is derived from their goats, camels, fome acacia gums fold in Egypt, and their robberies on the roads of Suez, Gaza, and Mecca.

Thefe Arabs have no mares, like the other tribes, or at leaft they bring up very few; but they fupply the want of them by a fort of camel, which they call Hedjina. This animal is of the fame fhape with the common camel, with this difference, that he is made much more flender, and moves quicker. The ordinary camel only goes a foot pace, and meafures his fteps fo flowly, that he hardly advances thirty-fix hundred yards an hour; the Hadjina, on the contrary, trots at pleafure, and, from the length of his paces, eafily goes two leagues an hour. The great advantage of this animal is to be able to continue this pace thirty or forty hours fucceffively, almoft without reft, and without eating or drinking: he is made ufe of by couriers, and for long journeys which require expedition; if he has once got the ftart by four hours, the fwifteft Arabian mare never can overtake him; but one muft be accuftomed to the motion of this animal; his jolts foon flay the fkin, and difable the beft rider, in fpite of the cumions with which they
they ftuff the faddle. All that we have heard of the fwiftnefs of the dromedary, may be applied to this animal. He has however only one bunch; nor do I recollect, out of five and twenty or thirty thoufand camels, I may have feen in Syria and Egypt, ever to have obferved a fingle one with two.

But the moft confiderable profits of the Bedouins of Tor arife from the pilgrimage of the Greeks to the convent of Mount Sinai. The fchifmatics have fo much faith in the relics of faint Catharine, which they fay are depofited there, that they doubt of their falvation if they have not vifited them at leaft once in their lives. They repair thither even as far as from the Morea, and Conftantinople. The rendezvous is at Cairo, where the monks of Mount Sinai have correfpondents, who treat with the Arabs ior a convoy. The ordinary price is twenty-eight pataques, (fix pounds two and fix-pence) each paffenger, exclufive of provifions. On their arrival at the convent, the Greeks perform their devotions, vifit the church, kifs the relics and images, mount on their knees more than one hunded fteps of the hill of Mores, and conclude by making an offoring, the value of which is not fixed, but rarely amounts to leis than fifty pataques $(f)$.

4 . which

TRAVELS IN

Except at the time of there vifitations, which only take place once a year, this convent is the moft delert and favage abode in nature. The adjacent country is nothing but a pile of rugged and naked rocks. Mount Sinai, at the foot of which it is feated, is a peak of granite which feems to overwhelm it. The houfe is a fort of fquare prifon, whofe lofty walls have only one window, which, though very high up, ferves likewife by way of door; for, to enter this convent, you muft get into a bafket, which the monks leave fufpended at the window, and occafionally hoift up with ropes. This precaution arifes from their fear of the Arabs, who might force the convent if the ufual entrance was by a door: they never open the only one there is, except on a vifit from the bifhop, at all other times it is kept clofely fhut. This vifitation fhould take place every two or three years; but, as it neceffarily occafions a confiderable contribution for the Arabs, the monks evade it as much as poffible. They do not, however, fo eafily efcape the daily diftribution of a certain quantity of provifions; and the quarrels which arife, on this fubject, frequently draw on them a hower of ftones, and even mulket-fhot from the difcontented Bedouins. They never ftir into the country, but, by dint of labour, have made a garden, on the rocks, with earth they have brought thither, which ferves them to walk in. They cultivate excellent fruit there, fuch as grapes, figs, and efpecially pears, of which they make prefents, and which are highly efteemed at Cairo, where they have no fuch fruit. Their domeftic life is the fame with that of the Greeks and Maronites of Lebanon, that is, it is entirely devoted to ufeful works, or to religious duties. But the Monks of Lebanon enjoy the inertimable advantage of liberty and fecurity, which is not poffeffed by thofe of Sinai. In other refpects, this confined and melancholy fate Vol. II. A a of exiftence is that of all the monks, in the country of the Turks. Thus live the Greeks of Mar-Simeon to the north of Aleppo, and of Mar-Saba on the Dead-fea; this alfo is the life of the Copts in the convents of the defert of Saint Macarius, and in that of Saint Anthony. Every where their convents are prifons, with no other light than a window by which they receive their victuals; and every where are they built in difmal places, deftitute of whatever can give pleafure, and where nothing is to be found but rocks and ftones, without either grafs or mofs, and yet they are full of monks. There are fifty at Sinai, five and twenty at Mar Saba, and upwards of three hundred in the two Deferts of Egypt. I one day enquired the reafon of this, in a converfation with one of the fuperiors of Mar-hanna, and afked him, "What could induce men to engage in a " mode of life fo truly miferable?" "What," faid he, " are not you a Chriftian? Is not this the path which leads to heaven?"-" But," replied I, " we may alfo obtain falvation " without renouncing the world; (and be" tween ourfclves, father,) I do not perceive " that the monks, though they are pious, * poffefs that ancient fervour which through" out life, kept its eyes fixed on the hour " of death." " It is true," faid he, "we " have no longer the aufterity of the ancient " Anchorites, and in reality this is one rea"f fon why our convents are fo full. You " who come from a country where men live " in fecurity and abundance, may confider our " life as an infupportable felf-denial, and our "، retreat from the world as a facrifice. But, "s in the fituation of this country, perhaps, os the cafe is different. What can we do? " Turn merchants! We fhould then be over"s whelmed with the cares of bufinefs and " our families, and, after having worked hard "f for thirty years, comes the Aga, the "Pacha, or the Cadi; we are brought to " trial without even the fhadow of a crime; " witneffes are fuborned to accufe us; we "s are baftinadoed, plundered, and turned " into the world as naked as the firft day " we entered it. As for the peafant, his " cafe is ftill worfe, the Aga oppreffes him, " the foldier pillages him, and the Arabs "s rob him. Shall we become foldiers? the " profeffion is laborious and dangerous, and " how it will end not very certain. It may
(f) To the fe pilgrims we muft attribute the infriptions and clumfy figures of affes, camels, sic. engraven on thefe rocks, which have from thence acquired the name of Djelil Alokatich, or Written Mountain. Mr. Worticy Monntague, who travelled a great deal in thefe countries, and carefully cxamined thefe inferiptions, is of this opinion. M. Cour de Gebelin, author of Ic Monde Primitif, has loft his labour, in endeavouring to difoover fome myfterious meaning.
" poffefs

$$
\text { A a } 2 \text { feem }
$$

" feem hard perhaps to Shut ourfelves up " in a convent ; but, at leaft, we live there in or peace, and, though in a flate of habitual
"abftinence and porcrty, we perhaps poffefs
" and enjoy more than we fhould if we had
" continued in the world. Obferve the " fituation of the peafants, and look at ours.
"We poffefs every thing they have, and even
" what they have not; we are better clad,
" and better fed; we drink wine and coffee:
" and who are our monks but the children
"s of peafants? You talk of the Copts of "Saint Macarius and Saint Anthony! Be si affured their condition is much better than " that of the Bedouins and Fellahs who fur-
" round them."
I own I was aftonifhed at fo much franknefs, and juft reafoning; but I felt, more forcibly than ever, that the humen heart is moved by the lame fprings, in cvery fituation. The defire of happinefs is every where the motive, whether fought in hope or actual enjoyment, and there is always the moft to gain in the part which it adopts. The difcourfe of this monk may fuggeft many other reflexions, and hew how far the fpirit of retirenent from the world is connected with the fate of any government; from what caufes and under what circumftances it muft originate, be predominant, decline, &uc. But I fhall now conclude this geographical view of Syria, and refume, in a few words, what I have faid of its revenues and forces, to enable the reader to form a compleat idea of its political ftate.

C H A P. XXXII.

Political fate of Syria refumed.

SYRIA may be confidered as a country compofed of three long ftrips of land of different qualities: one of thefe, extending along the Mediterranean, is a warm, humid valley, the healthinefs of which is doubtful, but which is extremely fertile; the other, which is the frontier of this, is a mountainous and rude foil, enjoying a more falubrious temperature; the third, which lies behind the mountains to the eaft, combines the drynefs of the latter with the warmth of the former. We have feen by what a happy combination of the properties of climate and foil this province unites in a fmall compafs the advantages and productions of different zones, infomuch, that nature feems to have defigned it for one of the moft agreeable habitations of this continent. It may be reproached, however, like almoft all hot countries, with wanting that frefl and animated verdure which almoft perpetually adorns our fields; we fee there none of that gay carpeting of grafs and flowers which decorate the meadow;
dows of Normandy and Flanders, nor thofe clumps of beautiful trees which give fuch richnefs and animation to the landfcapes of Burgundy and Brittany. As in Provence, the land of Syria has almoft always a dufty afpect, which is only enlivened here and there by firs, mulberry-trees, and vineyards. This deficiency is lefs the fault of nature, poffibly, than that of art; had not thefe countries been ravaged by the hand of man, they might perhaps at this day have been fhaded with forefts. Thus much is certain, and it is the advantage of hot over cold countries, that in the former, wherever there is water, vegetation may be perpetually maintained and made to produce an uninterrupted fucceffion of fruits to flowers, and flowers to fruits. In cold, nay even in temperate climates, on the contrary, nature benumbed for feveral months, lofes in a fterile flumber the third part, or even half the year. The foil which has produced grain, has not time, before the decline of the fummer heat, to mature vegetables; a fecond crop is not to be expected, and the hufbandman fees himfelf condemned to a long and fatal repofe. Syria, as we have feen, is exempt from thefe inconveniences;

$$
\text { Aat } 4 \quad \text { if }
$$

if therefore it fo happens, that its productions do not correspond with its natural advantages, this is lefsowing to its phyfical than political fate. To fix our ideas on this head, let us refume, in a few words, what we have already explained in detail of the revenues, forces, and population of the province.

Firm the fate of the contributions of each pachalic, it appears, that the annual fum paid by Syria into the Kafna, or Treafury of the Sultan, amounts to two thoufand three hundred and forty-five purfes, viz.
For Aleppo - -800 Purfes
Tripoli -750
Damafcus - $\quad 43$
Acre - $\quad 750$
Paleftine -
Total 2345

Which, are equal to $2,931,250$ lives, (122,135f. Bs. id.)

To this fum mut be added, firft, the cafual inheritance of the fortunes of the Pachas, and of individuals, which may be eftimated at one thoufand purfes, annually; fecondly, the poll tax paid by the Chriftians, called

Karadji, which is almoft every where diftinct from the other taxes, and is accountable directly to the Kafna. This capitation does not take place in the countries which are fub-let, as thofe of the Maronites and Druzes, but is confined to the Rayas, or immediate fubjects. The Capitation tickets are from three and five, to eleven piafters a head. It is difficult to eftimate the total produce, but allowing one hundred and fifty thoufand to pay the tax, at the mean rate of fix piafters, we have the fum of $2,250,000$ livres; and we cannot be far from the truth, if we compute the total of the Sultan's revenue from Syria to be $7,500,000$ livres, ( $312,500 \mathrm{f}_{0}$ )

Let us now eftimate what the country produces to thofe who farm it, and we fhall have

| For Aleppo | 2,000 Purfes |  |
| ---: | ---: | ---: |
| Tripoli | - | 2,000 |
| Damafcus | 10,000 |  |
| Acre - | 10,000 |  |
| Paleftine | 600  Total$\underline{24,600}$ |  |

Which make $30,750,000$ livres, ( $\mathrm{I}, 28 \mathrm{I}, 250$. ) This fum muft be confidered as the leaft we can allow for the produce of Syria, the profits of the Sub-Farms, fuch as the countries of the Druzes, the Maronites, the Anfarians, \&c. not being included.

The military eftablifhment is by no means proportionable to what in Europe we fhould expect from fuch a revenue; all the troops of the Pachas united cannot amount to more than 5,700 men, both cavalry and infantry, viz.

The conftant forces of the country then confift in three thouland four hundred cavalry, and two thoufand three hundred Barbary infantry. It is true, that, in extraordinary cafes, thefe are joined by the Janifaries, and that the Pachas enlift vagabond volunteers from every quarter, which form thofe fudden armies we have feen collected in the wars of Daher and Ali Bey: but the fketch I have given of the military fkill of thefe armies, and the difcipline of fuch troops, may convince us, that Syria is ftill worfe defended than Egypt. We muft, however, allow the Turkifh foldiers two ineftimable good qualities; a frugality which enables them to fubfift in the mone exhaufted country, and a bodily health capable of enduring the greateft fatigues. This is the effect of the hardfhips to which they are inured, by their manner of living. Continually on horfeback, and in the field, lying on the earth, and fleeping in the open air, they do not experience that contraft between the luxurious life of cities, and the fatigue of camps, which is fo fatal to the foldiers of polifhed nations.

EGYPT AND SYRIA. $3^{6} 3$

Syria and Egypt, compared with refpect to the facility with which they may be attacked or defended, differ almoft in every point. Egypt is protected from a forergn enemy on the land. fide by her deferts, and on that of the fea, by her dangerous coaft, coaft. Syria, on the contrary, is open on the fide of the continent by the Diarbekar, and expofed alfo on that of the Mediterranean by a coaft every where acceflible. . It is eafy to nake a defeent in Syria, but very difficult to land in Egypt: Egypt once invaded is conquered; Syria may refint Egypt when conquered is extremely difficult to keep, and cafily loft; Syria is fo eafily defended, it is impoffible it fhould be loft. Lefs flill is neceffary to conquer one, than to preferve the other. The reafon is, that Egypt being a countiy of plains, war there makes a rapid progrefs ; every movement brings on a battle, and every battle is decifive; Syria, on the contrary, being a mountainous country, war there muft be a war of pofts, and every lofs may be repaired.

364  TRAVELSIN

The fubject of population, which remains to be difcuffed, is infinitely more difficult than the two preceding ones. Calculations of this kind can only be made from analogies always liably to error. The beft way will be to compute from two extremes, the populoufners of which is pretty well known. The part of the country which is beft peopled, pled, is that of the Maronites and Druzes, and gives nine hundred inhabitants for each fquare league, which computation will alfo $f_{\text {erve }}$ for the countries of Nablous, Hafbeya, Adjaloun, the territory of Damafcus, and fome other places. The other, which is the leaft populous, is that of Aleppo, which gives from three hundred and eighty to four hundred inhabitants to each fquare league, which eftimation will fuit the greater part of Syria. Calculating from thefe materials by a method too tedious to explain here, it appears to me that the total population of Syria may be eftimated at $2,305,000$ fouls, viz.

For the Pachalic of Aleppo - 320,000 that of Tripoli, not including the Kefraouan - 200,000 the Kefraouan - - II5,000. the country of the Druzes 120,000 the Pachalic of Acre - 300,000 Paleftine - - 50,000 the Pachalic of Damafcus $1,200,000$
Total 2,305,000

Let us fuppofe iţ two millions and a half, and fince Syria contains about five thoufand two hundred and fifty fquare leagues, at the rate of one hundred and fifty in length, and thirty-five in breadth, we fhall have upon an average four hundred and feventy-fix inhabitants for every fquare league. So feeble a population in fo excellent a country, may well excite our aftonifhment, but this will be ftill encreafed if we compare the prefent number of inhabitants, with that of ancient times. We are informed by the philofophical geographer, Strabo, that the territories of Yamnia and Yoppa in Paleftine, alone, were formerly fo populous, as to be able to bring forty thoufand armed men into the field. At prefent they could fcarcely furnifh three thoufand. From the accounts we have of Judca in the time of Titus, and which are to be efteemed tolerably accurate, that country muft have contained four millions of inhabitants; but at prefent, there are not, perhaps, above three thoufand. If we go ftill farther back into antiquity, we fhall find the fame populoufnefs among the Philiftines, the Phœenicians, and in the kingdoms of Samaria, and Damafcus. It is true that fome writers, writers, reafoning from what they fee in Europe, have called in quertion thefe facts; feveral of which, indeed, appeared to be difputable; but the comparifons on which they build, are not on that account the lefs erroneous; firft, becaufe the lands of Afia in general are more fertile than thofe of Europe; fecondly, becaufe a part of thefe lands are capable of being cultivated, and in fact are cultivated, without lying fallow or requiring manure ; thirdly, becaufe the Orientals confume one half lefs for their fubfiftence than the inhabitants of the wettern world, in general; for all which reafons it appears, that a territory of lefs extent may contain double and treble the population. Thefe authors exclaim againft the armies of two and three hundred thoufand, furnifhed by ftates, which in Europe would not produce above twenty or thirty thoufand; but it is not confidered that the conftutions of ancient nations were wholly different from ours; that thefe nations were purely cultivators; that there was lefs inequality, and lefs idienefs than among us; that every cultivator was a foldier; that in war, the army frequently confifted of the whole whole nation, and, in a word, that their fate was that of the prefent Maronites and Druzes. Not that I wifh to appear an advocate for thofe rapid populations, which from a lingle man, are made to pour forth in a few generations, numerous and powerful nations. In thefe relations there are a multitude of miftakes in words, and errors of Copyifts; but admitting only what is conformable to experience and nature, there is nothing to contradict the great population of high antiquity; without appealing to the pofitive teftimony of hiftory, there are innumerable monuments which depofe in favour of the fact. Such are the prodigious quantity of ruins difperfed over the plains, and even in the mountains, at this day deferted. On the moft remote parts of Carmel are found wild vines and olive-trees, which muft have been conveycd thither by the hand of man; and in the Lebanon of the Druzes and Maronites, the rocks now abandoned to firtrees and brambles, prefent us in a thoufand places with terraces, which prove they were anciently better cultirated, and confequently much more populows than in our days.

EGYPT AND SYRIA. 369

It now only remains for me, to collect the general facts fcattered through this work, and thofe I may have omitted, in order to form a compleat defcription of the political, civil, and moral ftate of the inhabitants of Syria.

C H A P. XXXIII.

Government of the Turks in Syria.
THE reader muft already have been convinced from the various traits that have been laid before him, that the government of the Turks in Syria is a pure military defpotifm; that is, that the bulk of the inhabitants are fubject to the caprices of a faction of armed men, who difpofe of every thing according to their intereft and fancy. To form a more perfect conception of the fpirit with which this faction governs, it will be fufficient to confider by what title they claim poffeffion.

When the Ottomans, under Sultan Selim, took Syria from the Mamlouks, they confidered it only as the fpoil of a vanquifhed enemy; as a poffeffion acquired by the law of arms and war. Now, according to this law, among barbarous nations, the vanquifhed is wholly at the difcretion of the victor, he becomes his llave; his life, his property, belong to his conqueror; he may difpufe of all as mafter, he owes his captive nothing, and. accords what he leaves him as a favour. Such was this law among the Greeks and

Romans,

Romans, and among all thofe focieties of robbers whom we have honoured with the name of conquerors. Such, at all times, was that of the Tartars, from whom the Turks derive their origin. On thefe principles, even their firft focial ftate was formed. In the plains of Tartary, the hordes, divided by intereft, were no other than bands of robbers, armed for attack or defence, and to feize, as fair booty, whatever they might covet. Already, all the elements of their prefent fate were formed; continually wandering and encamped, they were at once fhepherds and foldiers; each horde was an army; now, in an army, laws are but the orders of the chief, thefe orders are abfolute, and fuffer no delay, they muft proceed from. one will, and from a fingle head: hence, a fupreme authority in him who commands; and, a paffive fubmiffion in him who obeys. But as in the tranfmiffion of thefe orders, the inftrument becomes an agent in his turn, the confequence is, a fpirit at once imperious and fervile, which is precifely that exhibited by the Turkifh conquerors. Proud, after their victory, of being one of the conquering people, the meaneft of

$$
\mathrm{Bb}_{2}
$$

the
the Ottomans treated the moft illuftrious of the vanquifhed with the lofty fuperiority of a mafter; and this fpirit diffufing iefelf through every rank, we may judge of the diftance from whence the Supreme Chief looks down upon the croud of flaves beneath him. The fentiments he conceives of them cannot be better pourtrayed than in the formulary of the titles aflumed by the Sultans in their public acts: "I," fay they, in their treaties with the kings of France, "I, who " am, by the infinite grace of the great, juft, " and omnipotent Creator, and by the " innumerable miracles of the Chicf of Pro" phets, Emperor of Powerful Emperors, the " Refuge of Sovereigns, the Diftributor of " Crowns to the Kings of the Earth, Ser" vant of the two thrice facred Cities, (Mecca " and Medina), Governor of the Holy City " of Jerufalem, Mafter of Europe, Afia, " and Africa, conquered by our victorious " Sword, and our terrific Lance, Lord of " the Two Seas, (the White and Black "Seas), of Damafcus the Odour of Paradife, " of Baguad the feat of the Caliphs, of the "Fortreffes of Belgrade, Agria, and a mul" titude of Countries, Iflands, Straights;
" Nations, Generations, and of fo many " victorious armies, which repofe beneath the " Ahade of our Sublime Porte; I, in fhort, "who am the Shadoro of God on Earth, " Sx."

From fuch exalted grandeur, how muft the Sultan look down on the reft of mankind? In what light muft he view that earth which he pofieffes, and diftributes, but as a domain of which he is abfolute mafter? What muft the people he has fubdued appear, but flaves devoted to his fervice? And what the foldiers he commands, but fervants by whofe meanshe retains thefe flaves in obedience? Such is the real character of the Turkifh government. This empire may be compared to a plantation in one of our Sugar Illands, where a multitude of flaves labour to fupply the luxury of one Great Proprictor, under the infpection of a few rervants who take good care of themfelves. There is no difference, except that the dominions of the Sultan being too vaft for a fingle adminiftration, he is obliged to divide it into fmaller plantations, and feparate governments, adminiftered in the fame mode as the united empire. Such are the provinces under the government of the Pachas. Thefe B b 3 provinces
provinces again being too extenfive, the Pachas have had recourfe to further fubdivifion, and hence that feries of fubalterns, which, ftep by ftep, defcends to the loweft employments. In this gradation of authority, the object in view being invariably, the fame, the means employed never change their nature. Thus, power being abfolute and arbitrary in the monarch, is tranfmitted abfolute and arbitrary to all his fub-delegates. Each of thefe is the exact image of his next fuperior. It is fill the Sultan who dictates and commands, under the varied names of Pacha, Motfallam, Kaiem-Makam, and Aga, nor is there one in this defcending feale, even to the Delibaflee, who does not reprefent him. It is curious to hear with what infolence the loweft of thefe foldiers, giving his orders in a village, pronounces: It is the will of the Sultan; it is the Sultan's siliafure. The reafon of this infolence is eafily explainet: for the bearer of the orders of the Suitan becomes, for that moment, himfelf the Sultin. It is not difficult to conceive what muft betie confequence of fuch an adminiftration, fince all experience invariably proves, that moderation is the mont difficult of virtues; and fince cren thofe men who preach it moft fervently, frequently neglect to practife it; how numerous muft be the abufes of unlimited power in the great, who are ftrangers both to forbearance and to pity, in upfarts proud of authority and eager to profit by it, and, in fubalterns continually aiming at greater power. Let us judge therefore, how far certain fpeculative writers are juftified in infinuating, that defpotifm in Turkey is not fo great an evil as we imagine, fince, from its refiding in the perfon of the foverign, it can only affect the great by whom he is immediately furrounded. It is certain, to ufe the expreffion of the Turks, that the fabre of the Sultan does not defoend upon the duft; but this fabre he entrufts to the hand of his Vizir, who delivers it to the Pach'a, from whom it paffes to the Motfallam, to the Aga, and even to the loweft Delibathe ; fo that it is, in fact, within the reach of the vileft retainer to office, and its deftructive edge defcends even on the meaneit heads. This erroneous reafoning arifes from the ftate of the people, at Conitantinople, to whom the Sul$\tan$ is more attentive than to thofe of the provinces; but this attention, which his own perfonal fafety renders neceffary there, is paid to no other part of the empire; and, even there, it may be faid to be attended with difagreeable effects; for, if Conftantinople is in want of provifions, ten provinces are famifhed for a fupply. Yet, which is of mont impor tance to the empire, the capital or the provinces? In cafe of war, by which muft foldiers be furnifhed, and by which fed? To the provinces therefore muft we look to difcover the real effects of defpotifm, and, in Turkey, as every where elfe, we muft be convinced that arbitrary power in the fovereign is fatal to the ftate, as from the fovereign it muft neceffarily devolve upon his fubalterns, and become more abufed the lower it defcends; fince it is a maxim verified by conftant experience, that the flave, become mafter, is the mof rigorous of Tyrants. Let us now examine the abufes of this adminiftration, as far as it refpects Syria.

$$
\text { B b } 4
$$

In each government, the Pacha, being the image of the Sultan, is, like him, an abfolute defpot. All power is united in his perfon; he is chief both of the military and the finances, of the police and criminal juftice. He has the power of life and death; he has the power of making peace and war; in a word, he can do every thing. The main object of fo much authority is to collect the tribute, that is, to tranfmit the revenue to the great proprietor who has conquered, and who pofities the country by the right of his terrific lance. This duty fulfilled, no other is required from him; the means employed by the agent to accomplifh it is a matter of no concern; thofe means are at his difcretion; and fuch is the nature of his fituation, that he cannot be delicate in his choice of them; for, in the firlt place, he can neither advance, nor eren maintain himfelf, but in proportion as he can procure money. Secondly, The place he holds depends on the favour of the Vifir, or fome other great officer; and this can only be obtained and fecured by bidding higher than his competitors. He muft therefore raife money to pay the tribute, and alfo to indemnify himfeif for all he has paid, fupport his dignity, and make a provifion in cafe of accidents. Accordingly, the firft care of a Pacha, on entering on his government, is to devife methods to procure money, and the quickeft are invariably the ben. The cfablifhed mode of collecting the miri and the cunoms, is to appoint one or more principal principal farmers, for the current year, wlio, in order to facilitate the collection, divide it into leffer farms, which are again fubdivided, even to the fmalleft villages. The Pacha lets there employments to the beft bidder, wifhing to draw as much money from them as poffible. The farmers, who, on their fide, have no object in taking them but gain, ftrain every nerve to augment their receipt. Hence an avidity in thefe delegates always borde:ing on difhonefty; hence thofe extortions to which they are the more eafily inclined as they are furc of being fupported by authority; and hence, in the very heart of the people, a faction of men interefted in multiplying impofitions. The Pacha may applaud himfelf for penetrating into the moft hidden fources of private profits, by the clear fighted rapacity of his fubalterns; but what is the confequence? The people, denied the enjoyment of the fruit of their labour, reftrain their indufty to the fupply of their necefiry wants. The hufbandman cnly fows to preferve hinifelf from farving; the artift labours only to bring up his family; if he has any furplus, he carefully conceals it. Thus the arbitrary power of the Sultan, tranfmitted to the Pacha, and and to all his fub-delegates, by giving a free courfe to extortion becomes the main fpring of a tyranny which circulates through every clafs, whilf its effects, by a reciprocal reaction, are every where fatal to agriculture, the arts, commerce, population ; in a word, every thing which conftitutes the power of the ftate, or, which is the fame thing, the power of the Sultan himfelf.

This power is not fubject to lefs abufes in the army. Perpetually urged by the want of money, on which his fafety and tranquillity depend, the Pacha has retrenched, as far. as poffible, the ufual military eftablifhment. He diminifhes the number of his troops, leffens their pay, winks at their diforders; and difcipline is no more. Were a foreign war now to happen, were the Ruffians to appear again in Syria, as in the year 1772, who would defend that province for the Sultan?

It fometimes happens, that the Pachas, who are Sultans in their provinces, have perfonal hatreds againft each other. To gratify there, they avail themfelves of their power, and wage fecret or open war, the ruinous confequences of which are fure to be felt by the fubjects of the Sultan.

It alfo happens, that thefe Pachas are tempted to appropriate to themfelves the power of which they are the depoitaries. The Porte, forefecing this, endeavours to provide againft their defection, by various means. The employments are divided, and particular officers maintained in the caftles of the capitals, as at Aleppo, Damafcus, and Tripoli; but fhould a foreign enemy appear, what benefit would refult from this divifion? Every three months Capidjis are fent, who keep the Pachas in alarm, on account of the fecret o:ders of which they are the bearers; but not unfrequently the Pachas, as cunning as themfelves, get rid of thefe troublefome finies. The Porte, in fhort, often changes the refidence of the Pachas, that they may not have time to form connections in the country; but as all the confequences of a bad form of government have a mifchievous tendency, the Pachas, uncertain of to-morrow, treat their provinces as mere tranfient poffeffions, and take care to make no improvement for the benefit of their fucceffors: on the contrary, they haften to exhauf them of the produce, and to reap in one day, if poffible, the fruit of many years. It is thuc, thefe irregularities, every now and then,

then, are punifhed by the cord, one of the practices of the Porte which beft difplays the fpirit of its government. When a Pacha has laid wafte a province; when, in confequence of repeated acts of tyranny, the clamours of the people have reached Conftantinople, woe be unto him if he be without a protector, or fparing of his money! At the end of the year, a Capidji arrives, producing the firman of prorogation : fometimes bringing with him a fecond or third tail, or fome other frefh mark of favour; but, whilft the Pacha is celebrating a feftival on the occafion, an order appears for his depofition, then another for his exile, and frequently a kat-fherif for his head. The oftenfible reafon is always for having oppreffed the fubjects of the Sultan: but the Porte, by taking poffeffion of the wealth of the extortioner, and reftoring nothing to the people, leaves fufficient room to think that the government is far from difapproving a fyftem of robbery and plunder which it finds fo profitable. Every day, therefore, affords frefh examples of opprefiive and rebellious Pachas; and if none of them have hitherto fucceeded in forming a ftable and independent government, it is lefs owing to the wife meafures of the Divan,
$3_{38}^{82}$ TRAVELS IN Divan, and the vigilance of the Capijis, than their own ignorance in the art of governing. In Afia, thofe moral means are never employed, which, in the hands of able legiflators, have frequently raifed powerful fates on foundations at firft extremely feeble. The Pachas regard nothing but money; nor has repeated experience been able to make them fenfible that this, fo far from being the pledge of their fecurity, becomes the certain caufe of their deftruction. They are wholly devoted to amaffing wealth, as if friends were to be purchafed. Afa, Pacha of Damafcus, left eight millions of livres (above three hundred and thirty thoufand pounds), and was betrayed by his Mamlouk, and fmothered is the bath. We have feen what was the fate of Ibrahim Sabbar with his twenty millions. Djezzar is following the fame courfe, and will end in the fame way. Not one of them has ever thought of infpiring and promoting that difinterefted love of the public welfare, which in Greece and Italy, nay, even in Holland and Switzerland, has enabled the lower claffes of people to enter into a fuczefsful conteft with the greateft empires. The Emirs and Pachas all imitate the Sultan: all regard the country they govern as their private property, and their fubjects as their domentics; while they, in their turn, fee in their fuperiors only imperious mafters; and fince they are all alike, of what importance is it which they ferve? Hence, in thefe ftates, the cuftom of employing foreign in preference to national troops. The chiefs are diftrufful of the people, confcious that they do not merit their attachment; their aim is not to govern, but to tyrannize over the country, and by a juft retaliation, their country fees their ruin with indifference. The mercenaries, too, whom they keep in pay, faithful to their views of intereft, fell them to the enemy, to profit by their fpoils. Daher had maintained for ten years the wretch who murdered him. It is a tuth worthy of remark, that the greater part of the African and Afiatic ftates, efpecially fince the days of Mahomet, have been governed on thefe principles, and that no part of the world has exhibited fo many commotions in its provinces, or revolutions in its empires. Ought we not then to conclude, that arbitrary power in the fovereign is no lefs fatal to the military ftrength, than the finaaces of a nation. But let us proceed $38_{4} \quad$ TRAVELS IN to enquire what are its effects on the civil govcrnment of Syria.

The Pacha, as being the image of the Sul$\tan$, is the head of all the police of his government; under which title muft be comprehended criminal juftice. He poffeffes the moft abfolute power of life and death, and this he exercifes without formality, and without appeal. Wherever he meets with an offence, he orders the criminal to be feized, and the executioner, by whom he is accompanicd, ftrangles him, or takes off his head upon the fpot; nay, fometimes, he himfelf does not difdain this office. Three days before my arrival at Sour, Djezzar had ripped up a Mafon with an axe. The Pacha frequently Atrolls about difguifed, and woe to the man whom he furprizes in a fault! But, as he cannot be prefent every where, he commits this duty to a deputy, called the Wali, whofe office refembles that of the Officiers de Guet in France. Like them he patroles night and day; keeps a watchful eye on the feditious; apprehends robbers; and, like the Pacha, judges and condemns without appeal. The criminal bends his neck; the executioner frikes; the head falls, and the body is carried off in a leathern fack. This officer has a multitude of fpies, who are almoft all of them thieves, and by their means knows every thing that paffes. It is not, therefore, aftonifhing, that cities like Cairo, Aleppo, and Damafcus, fhould be fafer than Genoa, Rome, or Naples; but how dearly is this fafety purchafed! and how many innocent lives are facrificed to the partiality and injuftice of the Wali and his agents!

The Wali prefides likewife over the police of the markets; that is, he infpects their weights and meafures; and, on this head, his feverity is extreme: for the fmalleft deficiency in the weight of bread, meat, debs, or confectionary, he inflicts five hundred ftrokes of the baftinado, and, fometimes, even death. Examples of this are frequent in the great cities, yet is there no country wherein falfe weights are more common; all the dealer has to do is to keep a Charp look-out for the paffing of the Wali, and Mohtefeb, or infpector of the market. As foon as they appear on horfeback, the deficient weights are put out of the way, and others produced. The dealers alfo bargain with the fervants who precede Vol. II. C c there thefe two officers; and for a certain fum can enfure impunity.

The office of the Wali by no means extends to thofe various objects of utility which are under the regulation of our police. No attention is paid either to the cleanlinefs o: the falubrity of the cities. They are never paved, fwept, or watered, either in Syria or in Egypt. The ftreets are narrow and winding, and almoft always encumbered with rubbih. Travellers are, above all, fhocked at the fight of a multitudt of hideous dogs, which have no owner. They form a fort of independent body, fubfifting on public alms. They are quartered by families and diftricts, and fhould one of them happen to pafs his limits, a combat enfues, which is extremely troubiefome to paffengers. The Turks, who fhed the blood of man fo readily, do not kill thefe dogs, though they avoid touching them as unclean. They pretend they enfure the fafety of the cities by night; but this is more owing to the Wali, and the gates with which every ftreet is fecured. It is alledged, likewife, that they devour the carrion; but in this they are affifted by a great number of jackalls, which are concealed by hundreds

$$
\text { EGYPT AND SYRIA. } \quad 387
$$

hundreds in the gardens, and among the ruins and tombs. We muft not expect either walks or plantations in the Turkifh cities. In fuch a country, life, doubtlefs, will appear neither fecure nor agreeable; but this alfo is the confequence of the arbitrary power of the Sultan.

C H A P. XXXIV.

$$
\text { Of the Adminitration of } \mathcal{F u f t i c e} \text {. }
$$

THE adminiftration of juftice in civil fuits, is the only fpecies of authority which the Sultans have with-held from the executive power of the Pachas; whether, from a fenfe of the enormous abufes which might refult from it, or from knowing that it required more time and information than fall to the thare of thefe their deputies. Other officers are appointed for this purpofe, who, by a wife regulation, are independent of the Pachas; but as their jurifdiction is founded on the fame principles with the reft of the government, it is attended with the fame inconveniencies.

All the magiftrates of the empire, called Cadis, or judges, depend on one principal chief, who refides at Conftantinople. The title of his dignity is Cadi-el-nkar (g), or Judge of the Army; which title alone indicates, as I have already obferved, that the power is entircly military, and refides wholly in the army and its general. This grand Cadi names the judges of the capital cities, fuch as Aleppo, Damafcus, Jerufalem, &c. Thefe judges again name others in the places within their dependency. But what is the qualification required? Always money. All thefe employments, like thofe of the government, are fold to the beft bidder, and farmed in the fame way from year to year. What is the confequence? That the farmers endeavour to recover the money advanced; to obtain interef, and alfo a profit. What therefore can we expect from fuch difpofitions in men who hold the balance of juftice in their hand, and decide on the property of their fellow citizens?

> (g) Cornmonly called Cadi Lefier.

The tribunal whence thefe Cadis iffue their decifions, is called the Mabkama, or Place of Judgment. Sometimes it is at their own houfes; but never is it at a place which correfponds with the idea annexed to fo facred an employment. In an empty mean apartment, the Cadi is feated on a mat, or wretched carpet. On each fide of him are his clerks, and fome domeflics. The door is open to every body; the parties appear ; and there, without interpreters, advocates, or attornies, each pleads his own caufe. Squatted on the ground, they fate the facts, difcufs, reply, conteft, and argue again in their turns. Sometimes the debates are violent; but the cries of the clerks, and the ftaff of the Cadi, foon reftore order and filence. Gravely fmoking his pipe, and twifting the end of his beard round his finger, this judge liftens, interrogates, and concludes by pronouncing a fentence without appeai, which at moft allows but two months delay. The parties are never very well fatisfied; they retire, however, with refpect, and pay a fee, eftimated at one tenth of the litigated property, without murmuring at the decifion, as it is invariably dictated by the infallible Koran.

$$
\mathrm{Cc}_{3}
$$

It muft be owned this fimplicity of juftice, which does not confume the property, either in preliminary, acceffary, or fubfequent expences; and this proximity of the fovereign tribunal, which does not compel the pleaders abfence from his place of refidence, are two ineftimable advantages; but it cannot be denied that they are counterbalanced by too many abufes. In vain have fome writers, to render more confpicuous the vices of our legal cuftoms, boafted the adminiftration of juftice among the Turks. Thele commendations, mendations, founded on a fuperficial knowledge of the theory of Mahometan jurifprudence, are not juftified, when we confider what is actually practifed. Daily experience proves, that there is no country wherein juftice is more corrupted than in Egypt, Syria, and, no doubt, all the reft of the Turkifh empire (b). Venality is no where more open, nor more impudent. The parties may bargain for their caufe with the Cadi, as they would for any common commodity. Inftances of great fagacity and equity, no doubt, are to be found; but they are rare, which is the very reafon why they are fo celebrated. Corruption is habitual and general; and how is it poffible to be otherwife, where integrity may be ruinous, and injuftice lucrative; where each Cadi, deciding without appeal, fears neither a revifion of his fentence, nor punifhment for his partiality; and where, in fhort, the want of clear and precife laws, affords a thoufand ways of avoiding the thame of an evident injuftice, by opening the crooked paths of commentaries and interpretations?
(h) See, on this fubject, the obfervations of Sir James Porter, the Englifh minifter at Conftantinople.

Such is the ftate of jurifprudence among the Turks, that there exifts no public and acknowledged code, where individuals may inftruct themfelves in their refpective rights. The judgments given are, in general, founded on unwritten cuftoms, or on the frequently contradictory decifions of the Doctors. The collections of thefe decifions are the only books wherein the judges can acquire any notions of their duty; and in them they find only particular cafes more calculated to confound than enlighten their ideas. The Roman law in many particulars has ferved as a bafis for the determinations of the Mahome$\tan$ Doctors; but the great and inexhaurtible fource to which they recur, is the mof pure book, the depofitory of ail knowledge, the code of all legijlation, the Koran of the Prophet.

C H A P. XXXV.

Of the influence of religion.

IF the object of religion among the Turks were fuch as it ought to be among all nations; did it teach the çreat, moderation in the exercife of their power, and the vulgar, toleration amid the diverfity of opinions, it would ftill be a matter of doubt whether it could fufficiently correct the vices of which we have been fpeaking; fince the experience of all men proves that morality only influences conduct, fo far as it is feconded by civil laws. But nothing can be worfe calculated to remedy the abufes of government than the fpirit of Iflamifin: we may on the contrary, pronounce it to be their original fource. To convince himfelf of this, the reader has only to examine their revered book. In vain do the Mahometans boaft that the Koran contains the feeds and even the perfection of all political and legiflative knowledge, and jurifprucience: nothing but the prejudice of educati $n$, or the interef of fome fecret partiality can dictate, or admit fuch a judgment. Whoever reads the Koran, mutt be obliged to confers, that it conveys no notion, either of the relative duties of mankind in fociety, of the formation of the body politic, or of the principles of the art of governing; nothing, in a word, which conflitutes a legillative code. The only laws we find there may be reduced to four or five ordinances relative to polygamy, divorces, flavery, and the fucceffion of near relations; and even thefe form no code of jurifprudence, but are fo contradictory, that they cannot be reconciled. by the altercations of the doctors. The reft is merely a chaos of unmeaning phrafes; an emphatical declamation on the attributes of God, from which nothing is to be learnt; a collection of puerile tales, and ridiculous fables; and, on the whole, fo flat and faftidious a compofition, that no man can read it to the end, notwithfanding the elegance of M. Savary's tranflation. But fhould any general tendency or femblance of meaning be vifible through the abfurdities of this delirious effufion, it is the inculcation of a fierce and obftinate fanaticifm. We are wearied with the perpetual recurrence of the words impious, incredulous, enemies of God and the Prophet; rebels againgt God and the Proploct ; devotion towards God and the Prophet. Heaven is open to whomfoever combats in their caufe; Houris ftretch out their arms to martyrs ; the imagination takes fire, and the profelyte exclaims, "Oh Ma" homet; thou art the meffenger of God; " thy word is his; he is infallible; thou canit " neither err nor-deceive me: go on, I follow " thee." Such is the fpirit of the Koran, and it is vifible in the very firt line. "There " is no doubt in this book; it guides without " error thofe who believe without doubting, "who believe in what they do not fee.'" What is the tendency of this, but to eftablifh the moft abfolute defpotifm in him who commands, and the blindeft devotion in him who obeys? and fuch was the object of Mahomet. He did not wifh to enlighten men, but to rule over them; he fought not difciples, but fubjects; and obedience, not reafoning is required from fubjects. It was to lead them the more eafily that he afcribed all to God. By making himfelf his minifter, he removed every fufpicion of perfonal intereft; and avoided alarming that diftrufful vanity which is common to all men; he feigned to obey that he might exalt obedience; he made himfelf but the firft of fervants, with a certainty that every man would ftrive to be the fecond, and command the reft. He allured by promifes, and terrified by menaces; and, as every novelty is fure to meet with opponents, by holding out the terrors of his anathemas, he left them the hope of pardon. Hence, in fome paffages we find an appearance of toleration; but this toleration is fo rigid, that fooner or later, it muft lead to abfolute fubmiflion; fo that in fact the fundamental fpirit of the Koran continually recurs, and the moft arbitrary power is delegated to the meffenger of God, and by a natural confequence to his fucceffors. But by what kind of precepts is the ufe of this power manifefted? "There is only one " God, and Mahomet is his prophet. Pray " five times a day turning towards Mecca. "Eat not in the day time during the whole " month of the Ramadan. Make the pil" grimage of the Caaba, and give alms to the " widow and orphan." Here is the profound fource from whence mutt fpring all the fciences, and every branch of political and moral knowledge. The Solons, the Numas, the Lycurgufes; all the Legiflators of antiquity have have in vain exhaufted their genius to explain the relations of mankind in fociety, to declare the duties and rights of every clafs, and every individual: Mahomet more able or more profound than they, refolves all into five phrafes. It certainly may be fafely afferted, of all the men who have ever dared to give laws to nations, none was more ignorant than Mahomet; of all the abfurd compofitions ever produced, none is more truly wretched than his book. Of this, the tranfactions of the laft twelve hundred years in Afia, are a proof; for were I inclined to pafs from a particular fubject to general confiderations, it would be eafy to demonftrate, that the convulfions of the governments, and the ignorance of the people, in that quarter of the globe, originate more or lefs immediately in the Koran, and its morality; but I muft confine myfelf to the country we are now confidering, and, returning to Syria, explain to the reader, the fate of its inhabitants, relative to religion.

The people of Syria in general, as I have already faid, are Mahometans or Chrititians: this difference of worfhip is productive of the mof difagreeable effects in their civil ftate. Treating each other mutually as rebels, infidels, and impious, the followers of Jefus Chrift and Mahomet, are actuated by a reciprocal averfion which keeps alive a fort of perpetual war. We may readily conceive the exceffes to which the prejudices of education may carry the vulgar, at all times violent; and the government fo far from interpofing as a mediator in thefe diffentions, foments them by its partiality. Faithful to the fipirit of the Koran, it treats the Chriftians with a feverity, which difplays itfelf in varied forms. Mention has been fometimes made of the toleration of the Turks; the following is the price at which it is purchafed:

All kind of public worthip is prohibited the Chriftians, except in the Kefraouan, where the government has not been able to prevent it. They camot build any new churches; and if the cild ones fall to decay, they are not allowed to repair them, unlefs by a permiffion which cofts them very dear. A Chriftian cannot ftrike a Mahometan without rifk of his life, but if a Mahometan kill a Chriftian, he efcapes for a ftipulated price.
price. Chriftians muft not mount on horfeback in the towns; they are prohibited the ufe of yellow flippers, white fhawls, and every fort of green colour. Red for the feet, and blue for the drefs, are the colours affigned them. The Porte has juft renewed its ordinances to re-eftablifh the ancient form of their turbans; they mult be of a coarfe blue muflin, with a fingle white border. When they travel, they are perpetually ftopped at different places to pay Rafars(i), or tolls, from which the Mahometans are exempt: in judicial proceedings, the oath of two Chriftians is only reckoned for one; and fuch is the partiality of the Cadis, that it is almoft impoflible for a Chrifian to gain a fuit; in fhort, they alone are fubject to the Capitation, called Karadji, the ticket of which bears thefe remarkable words: Djaza-elras, that is (redemption) from cutting off the bead; a clear proof of the title by which they are tolerated and governed.

Thefe diftinctions, fo proper to ferment hatred and divifions, are diffeminated among the people, and manifeft themfelves in all the intercourfe of life. The meanert Mahometan will neither accept from a Chriftian, nor return the falute of Salam-alai$k(k)$, health to thee, on account of the affinity between the word Salam and Eflam, (Iflamifin), the proper name of their religion, and Moflem, (Muffulman) the name of the perfon who profefies it: the ufual falutation is only good morning, or good evening, and it is well too, if it be not accompanied with a Djaour, Kafir, Kelb, i. e. impious, infidel, dog, expreffions to which the Chriftians are familiarized. The Mahometans even affect to mortify theni, by practifing before them the ceremonies of their worhip. At noon, at three c'clock, and at fun-fet, as foon as the criers from the tops of the minarets announce the time of prayer, they appenat the doors of their houfes, where, after making their ablution, they, gravely fpread a mat or carpet, and turning themfelves towards Mecca, crofs their arms upon their breafts, feretch them towards their knees, and begin nine proftrations, down to the ground, reciting the preface to the Koran. In converfation, they frequently make a break
(k) Or, Sala.m-alai-rom, health to you. Hence the wo:d Salamalek.

EGYPT $\Lambda$ ND SYRIA. 40 .
by their profeffion of faith, "There is but " one God, and Mahomet is his prophet." They talk perpetually of thair religion, and confader themfolves as the only faith;iul to God. To confute tizem, the Chritians, in their tum, afied great devotion; and hence that oflentation of piety which forms one of the principal characeriftics of the Orientals; but the heart makes no facrifice, and the Chritians retain a deep remembrance of all there infults, and only wait a favourable opportunity to feck their revenge. The effects of this were vifble in the time of Daher, when, proud of the protection of his minifter, in many places they affumed a fuperiority over the Mahometans. The exceffes they committed on that occafion fhould ferve as a leffon to any European power, which may hereafter obtain poífefion of countries inhabited by Greeks and Mahometans.
VoL. II.
Dd
CHAP.

C H A P. XXXVI.

Oj property, rathes, and conditions.
TIIE Sultans having arrogated to themfeives, by right of conquef, the property of all the lands of Syria, the inhabitants can no longer pictend to aimy real, or even perfomal property; they have nothing but a temporary poififion. When a father wies, the inheritance reverts to the Sultan, or his riclegate, and the children can only redecm the fuccefmon by a contiderable fum of money. Hence ariles an indifference to landed eftates, which proves fatal to agricultare. In the towns, the poftefion of houfes is in fome meafure lefs uncertain and lefs runous; but every whare the preference is given to profery in money, as more eafy to hide from the rapine of the Defpot. In the tributary countries, fuch as thofe of the Druzes, the Maronites, Eafbeya, sic. there exitts a real property founded on cufoms, which their petty princes dare not violate; on which account the inhabitants are fo attached to their eftates, that it is very rare to hear of an alienation of landis among them. There is neverthelefs one method, even under the Turkifh adminiftation, of fecuring a perpectual ufus-fraitur, which is by making what is called a Wakf; that is an endowment or donation of an eftate to a Mofque. The proprietor then becomes the irremoveable guardian of his property, on condition of a fine, and under the protection of the profeffors of the law; but this act has this inconvenience, that, inftead of protecting, the men of the law frequently devour the property: and, in that cafe, to whom are they to look for redrefs, fince the embezzlers of the property are at the fame time the diffributors of juftice? For this reafon, thefe lawyers are almoft the only landholders, nor do we fee, under the Turkifh government, that multitude of fmall proprietors, who conftitute the flrength and riches of the tributary countries.

What I have faid of conditions in Egypt, will apply equally to Syria: they may be reduced to four or five ; the cultivators or peafants, artifans, merchants, military men, and thofe who fill the different departments of the law and juridical offices. Thefe various claffes again may be comprehended under two others: the people, which includes the peafints, artilums and mercinants; and the govemment, compoled of the military, and legal and jurlicial ohicers. Accorbing to the principles of their religion, the power inould refide in thim latter oudcr; bett fince the difpotionion of the Calipias by their licutenants, a ditinction has t.iver place between the fenitual and temporal rower, which has lefe but an illufory authonity to the interpreters of tiac law: fuch is that of the Grand Muíti(l), who reprefents the Caliph, among the Tulks. The real power is in the hands of the Sultan, who reprefents the lieutenant oi reneral of the army. That fivourable projudice, however, winch the people entertain for dethroned polvers, fill preferes to the profehors of the law, a cratit of which they ahmot always arail themfelres, io form a parly of oppofition ; the Sultan is awed by it at Confantinople, nor do the Eachas vanture too openiy to thimart it in their provinces. In each city tinis party is headed by the Miffit, who derives his authority from that cencerar reljiun.

$$
\mathrm{Dd}_{2} \quad \text { again }
$$

EGYPTAND SYRIA.
of Conftantinople; his employment is hereditary and not venal, which fingle circamfance has preferved more energy in this body than in all the others. From the privileres they enjoy, the families which compore it bear a confideable refembiance to our nobility, although its tric type be the ammy. They refemble alfo our magiftracy, our clergy, and even our citizens, as they are the only perfons in that country who live on their rents. From them to the peafantry, the artilans, and traders, the defcent is fudden, yet, as the condition of thefe three clafics form the true fandard of the police and powei of an empire, I fhall felect the particulars beft calculated to enable the reader to form jurt ideas.

$$
\mathrm{Dd}_{3} \quad \mathrm{CII} A
$$

CHAP. XXKVII.

State of lise Ierginits cans' of Agriculture.

IIN Syria, and even throughont the Turkih empire, the peatints, like the other inhabitants, are deemed llares of the the Sultan; but this term only conveys the meaning of our word fubjects. Though mafter of their lives and properties, the Sultan does not fell men; he does not limit them to a certain foot. If he beftows an appanage on fome grandee, it is not faid, as in Rufia and Poland, that he gives five hundred or a thoufand peafants; in a word, the peafants are opprefied by the tyranny of the government, but not degraded by the fervitude of feodabity.

When Sultan Sclim had conquered Syria, in orier to render the collection of the revenue more caty, he eftablimed a fingle territorial tribute called the miri. It fhould fiem, that this Sultan, notivithftanding the ferocity of his charaiter, undertood the importance portance of favouring the hufbandman, for the miri, compared with the cxtent of the lands, is an infuitely moderate import ; and it was the more fo at the time in which it was fixed, as Syria was then better peopled than at prefent, and perhaps alfo poffefled a greater trade, as it lay on the moft frequented route to India, little ufe having been yet made of the pafiage by the Cape of Good Hope. That this tax might be collected regularly, Selim gave orders to prepare a defar, or regifter, in which the contingent of each village flould be fet down. In fhort, he eftablifned the miri, at an invariable rate, and ordered it fhould neither be augmented nor diminifher. Moderate as it was in its original eftablifhment, it could never be oppreflive to the people; but by abufes inherent iil the conftitution of the Turkifh government, the Pachas and their agents have found the fecret of rendering it ruinous. Not daring to violate the law eftablinhed by the Sultan refpecting the immutability of the impof, they have introduced a multitude of changes, which, without the name, produce all the effects of an augmentation. Thus, having Dd 4 the the greateft pait of the land at their dhipofal, they clog their conctions with burthenfome conditions; they exact the half, nay even two thirds, of the crop; they monopolize the feed and the cattle, fo that the cuitivators are under the neceflity of purchaning from them at their own price. The harvert over, they cavil about lofics, and pictended robberies, and as they have the power in their hands, they carry off what they think proper. If the feafon fails, they ftill cyact the fame frm, and to pay themfelves, expofe every thing the foor penfant poffeffes to fale. Happily, his perfon at leart remains free, for the Turks are ignomat of the refinement of imprifuniag for debt the man who has no longer any property. 'To thefe conftant opprefions are added a thoufind accidental extortions. Sometimes the whole village is laid under contribution for fome real or inaginary offence; and fometimes a fervice of a new kind is introduced. A prefent is exaded on the accellion of each yovernor; a contribution of grafs is demanded for his horfes, and barley and flraw for his cavaliers: they mut provide, likewife, for all the the foldiers who pals, or who carry orders, and the govemors talse care to multiply thefe commifions which are a faving to them, but inevitable ruin to the peafants. The villages tremble at every Lawird who appears; he is a real robber uncer the name of a foldier: he enters as a conqueror, and commands as a mafter: Dogs, Rubbic; breai, coffer, tobacco; I muft bave liarley, I muft bwie meat. If he cafts his cyes on any potitry, he kills thera; and when he takes his departure, adding infult to tyranny, he demands what is called kera-el-dars, the hire of his grinders. In vain do the peafants cxclaim againft this injuftice; the fabre impofes filence. Juftice is remote and difincult of accefs; nay, complaints are even dangerous. What is the confequence of all thefe depredations? The peorcr clafs of inhabitants ruined, and unable any longer to pay the miri, become a burtinen to the village, or fly into the cities: but the miri is unalterable, and the fum to be levied muft be found fomewhere, their portion falis on the remaining inhabitants, whofe buithen, though at firft light, now becomes infupportable. If they are vilited by a two years drought
drought and famine, the whole village is ruined and abandoned; but the tax it fhould have paid is levied on the neighbouring lands. They proceed in the fime manner witis the Faradji of the Chriftians. Its amount having been eftimated at the time they were firft numbered, it murt always produce the fame, though thofe who pay fhould be lefs numerous. Ifence it hanpens that this capitation is fometimes carried from three, five, and elcven piafters, at which it was firt fixed, to thirty-five and forty; which abfolutely impoverifhes thofe on whom it is raifed, and obliges them to leave the country. Thefe burthens are more efpeciaily oppreflive in the countries beftowed as an appanage, and in thofe which are expoled to the Arabs. In the former, the Titulary, grcealy to augment his revenue, delegates full power to his Leffee to augment the taxes, and he is well feconded by the avidity of the fubalterns. Thefemen, refining on the arts of wringing money from the people, have contival to impole duties en every commodity hrought to market, on catries, the conveyance of geods, and cicen the burthen of an.
ars. It is remarked that thefe exactions have made a rapid progrefs, efpecially in the laft forty years, from which time they date the decline of agriculture, the depopulation of the country, and the diminution in the quantity of fpecie carried to Conftantinople. With refpect to the Bedouins, if they are at war, they pillage as enenies; and if at peace, devour every thing they can find as guefts; hence the proverb, Avoid itse Bedouin, qubetber friend or enemy. The leaft wretched of the peafants, are thofe of the countries which raife themfelves a certain fipulated. fum, as is done by the Druzes, the Kefraouan, Nablous, &cc. yet even there they are liable to be oppreffed and impoverifhed by various abufes. But nothing is more deftructive to Syria, than the fhameful and exceffive ufury cuftomary in that counfry. When the peafants are in want of moncy to purchafe grain, cattle, &c. they can find none but by mortgaging the whole, or part of their future crop, greatly under its value. The danger of letting money appear, clofes the hands of all by whom it is poffefiedos and if it is parted with it muft be from the hope of a rapid and exorbitant gain ; the moft moderate intereft is twelve per cent, the ufual rate is twenty, and it frequently rifes as high even as thirty.

From all thefe caufes we may eafily conceive how miferable munt be the condition of the peafants. They are every where reduced to a little flat cake of barley or dourra, to onions, lentile, and water. They are fo little acquainted with dainties, that they efteem frong vii, and rancid fat as delicacies. Not to lofe any part of their corn, they leave in. it all forts of wild grain, even tares ( $m$ ), whichoccafion vertigoes, and dimnefs of fight for feveral hours, as I have myfelf experienced. In the mountains of Lebanon and Nablous, in time of dearth, they gather the acorns from the oaks, which they eat, after boiling or roafting them on the a hes. The tiuth of this has been authenticated to me among the Druzes, by perfons who have thenselves made ure of them. We muft therefore no longer accufe the poets of hyperbole; but it will only be the more difficult to believe that the golden age was the age of abundance.
(m) In Arabic Ziwan.

By a natural confequence of this mifery, the art of cultivation is in the moft deplorable fate; the hufbandman is deftitute of inftuments, or has very bad ones; his plough is frequently no more than the branch of a tree, cut below a bifurcation, and ufed without wheels. The ground is tilled by affes, and cows, rarely by oxen; they would befpeak too much riches; beef is therefore very fcarce in Syria and Egypt, where, befides, it is always lean and bad, like all the meat of hot countries. In the diftricts expofed to the Arabs, as in Paleftine, the countryman muft fow with his mufket in his hand. Scarcely does the corn turn yellow, before it is reaped, and concealed in Matnoures, or fubterraneous caverns. As littie as poffible is employed for feed com, becaufe they fow no more than is barely neceffary for fubfiftence; in a word, their whole induftry is limited to a fupply of thcir immediate wants; and to procure a little bread, a few onions, a wretched blue fhirt, and a bit of woollen woollen much labour is not neceflary. The peafant lives therefore in diftrefs; but at leaft he does not enrich his tyrants, and the avarice of defpotifm is its own punifhment.

C H A P. XXXVIII.

Of the Artigans, Ticaders, and Commerce.
TIIE clafs of men who give yalue to commodities, by manufacturing them, or bringing them into circulation, is not fo ill treated in Syria, as that which produces them; the reafon of which is, that the property of the artifans and traders, confifting in perfomal effects, is more concealed from the ferutinizing eye of government than that of the peafants; befides which, the artifts and merchants, collected in the towns, efcape more enfly, in the crowd, from the rapacity of their rulews. This is one of the principal caufes of the populoufnefs of the towns in Syria, and even throughout Turkey. While in other countries, the cities are in fome meafure the overflow of the country, there they are the effect of its defertion. The peafants, expelled from their villages, fly thither for refuge, and find in them tanquillity and cven a degree of eafe and plenty.
plenty. The Pachas are more particularly attentive to this laft article, as on it depends their perional fafety; for befides the immediate effects of a fedition, which might he fatal to them, the Porte would not pardon thean for cadangering the fafty of the cmpire, for want of fupplying the peopic with bread. They take cure therefore to keep provifione cheap in all the conflerable towns, and efpecially in that in which they refluc: if there be a dearth, it is always leaft felt there. In cafe of a failure in the harvent, they prohibit the exportation of grain, and oblige every perfon who polfeffes any, to fell it at the price they fix under pain of death; and if there be none in the province, they fend for it to other countries, as was the cafe at Damafcus in November 1784. The Pacha placed guards on all the roads, jemmitted the Ambs to pillage every carriage going out of the country, and fent orders into the Mauran, to empty all the difatmazeres, fo that winle the pearants were dying witi hunger in the viliages, the people of Demafcus paid for their becad but two paras, or two fuls and a half, (one peniy farthing), the French pound, and thought it dear cven at that price; but as in the political machine no part is independent of the reft, it was not puflible to give fuch a mortal wound to agriculture, without its being felt by the arts and commerce. The reader will judge from a few details, whether the government be not as negligent in this as in every other particular.

Commerce in Syria, confidered as to the manner in which it is carried on, is fill in that ftate of infancy which characterizes barbarous ages and uncivilized countries. Along the whole coaft there is not a harbour capable of admitting a veffel of four hundred tons, nor are the roads fecured by forts. The Maltefe corfairs formerly availed themfelves of this want of vigilance, to make prizes clofe in with the fhore; but as the inhabitants made the European merchants refponfible for fuch accidents, France has obtained from the Order of Malta a prohibition to their corfairs from appearing within fight of land; fo that the natives may peaceably carry on their coafting trade, which is tolerably brifk, from Latakia to Yafa. In the interior parts of the country, there are neither great roads nor canals, nor even bridges over the greatelt part [^6]of the rivers and torrents, however neceflary they may be in winter. Between town and town, there are neither pofts nor public conveyance. The only convenience of this kind is the Tartar courier, who comes fromConftantinople to Damafcus, by way of Aleppo. This courjer las no relays but in the large towns, at very great diftances; but in cale of need he may difmount the very firft horfemen he meets. He leads with him, according to the cuftom of the Tartars, a fecond horfe in hand, and has frequently a companion for fear of accidents.

The communication between onc town and another is maintained by curriers, who have no fixed time of departure. This arifes from the abfolute neceffity of forming troops, or caravans; nobody travels alone, from the infecurity of the roads. One mint wait for feveral travellers who are going to the fame place, or tuke advantage of the pafiage of fome çreat man, whoaflumes the office of protector, but is more frequently the opprefior of the caravan. Thefe precautions are, above all, neceffary in the countrics expofed to the Arabs, fuch as Paleftine, and the whole frontier of the defert, and even on the road from Alcppo to Skandaroon, on accomint of the Curd robbers. In the mountains, and on the coaft, between Latakia and Carmel, we may travel with more fafety; but the roads in the mountains are extremely bad, as the inhabitants are fo far from levelling them, they endeavour to render them more rugged, in order, as they fay, to cure the Turks of their defire to introduce their cavalry.

It is remarkable, that we never fee either a waggon or a cart in all Syria; which arifes, no doubt, from the apprehenfion of having them feized by the minions of government, and fuffering a great lofs at one ftroke. Every thing is conveyed on the backs of mules, affes, or camels; all which animals are excellent here. The two former are employed in the mountains, and nothing can equal their addrefs in climbing and fliding over the flopes of the craggy rocks. The camel is more made ufe of in the plains, becaufe he confumes lefs, and carries more. His ufual burthen is about feven hundred and fifty pounds. His food is every thing you chufe to give him; ftraw, brambles, pounded dates, beans, barley, \&xc. With a fingle pound of food, and as much water in a day, he will travel for weeks together. In the whole way from E $\subset 2$

Cairo

Cairo to Suez, which is a journey of forty or forty-fix hours, including the time of repofe, they neither eat nor drink; but thefe faftings, repeated, exhauft them as well as other animals. Their breath then becomes foetid. Their ordinary pace is very flow, not exceeding thirty-four or thirty-fix hundred yards in an hour. It is needlefs to prefs them, they go no quicker; but by allowing them to reft, they will travel from fifteen to eighteen hours a day.

There are no inns any where; but the cities, and commonly the villages, have a large building called a Kan, or Kervan-Serai, which ferves as an afylum for all travellers. Thefe houfes of riception are always built without the precinets of the towns, and confift of four wings round a fquare court, which ferves by way of inclofure for the beafts of burden. The lodgings are cellis, where you find nothing but bare walls, duif, and fometimes fcorpions. The keeper of this Kan gives the traveller the key and a mat; and he provides himfelf the reft. He muft, therefore, carry with him his bed, his kitchen utenfils, and even his provifons ; for frequently not cven bread is to be found in the villages. On this account the Orientals contrive their equipage in the mof fimple and portable form. The baggage of a man who wifhes to be completely provided, confifts in a carpet, a matrafs, a blanket, two faucepans with lids, contained within each other; two difhes, two plates, and a coffee-pot, all of copper, well tinned; a fmall wooden box for falt and pepper; fix coffee cups, without handles, in a leathern box; a round leathern table, which he fufpends from the faddle of his horfe; fmall leathern pouches, or bags for oil, melted butter, water and brandy, (if the traveller be a Chritian) a pipe, a tinder-box, a cup of cocoanut, fome rice, dried raifins, dates, Cyprus cheefe, and above all, coffee-berries, with a roafter, and wooden mortar to pound them. I an thus particular to prove, that the Orientals are more advanced than we, in the art of difpenfing with many things; an art which is not without its merit.

Our European merchants are not contented with fuch fimple accommodations. Their journeys, therefore, are very expenfive, and confequently not frequent; buteven the richeft natives of the country make no difficulty in paffing part of their lives in the manner I have defcribed, on the roads of Bagdad, Befw fora, Cairo; and even of Confantinople. Travelling is their education, their fience and to fay of any man he is a merchant, is to pronounce him a traveller. They find in it the sivantage of purchaing their goods at the firft hand, procuring them at a cheaper rate, enfuring their fafety by efcorting them themfelves; preventing many accidents, and obtaining fome abatement of the numerous tolls. They learn, in hort, to undertand weights and meafures, the extreme diverfity of which renders theirs a very complicated profeffion. Each town has its peculiar weight, which, under the fame denomination, differs from that of another. The Rothe of Alcppo weighsabout fix pounds, Paris weight; that of Damafcus five and one quarter; that of Saide lefs than five; that of Ramla near feven. The Derbemalone, that is the drachm, which is the firft element of thefe weights, is the fame every where. The long meafures vary lefs; only two are known, the Egyptian cubit (Draa Mafri), and the cubit of Conftantinople (Draa Stamborii).

$$
\mathrm{E} \mathrm{e}_{3} \quad \text { have }
$$

Coin is fill more fixed ; and you may travel over the whole empirc from Kotchim to Afounn, Afounn, without experiencing any change in its denomination or its value. The moft fimple of thefe coins is the Para, called alfo a Medin, a Paddu, a İdia, or a Mefria. It is of the fize of an Englifin filver threcpence, and is only worth five liards (a little above a halfpenny). After the para, follow fucceffively pieces of five, ten, and twenty paras; then the Zolata, or Iflote, which is worth thirty; the Piafore, called Kerfo-afadi, or Piaftre of the Lion, worth forty paras, or fifty French fols (two hiillings and a penny); and, is moft generally ufed in commerce; and, laftly, the Abou-Fell, or Piafter of the Dog, which is worth fixty paras. All thefe coins are filver, but with fuch a mixture of copper alloy, that the abou-kelb is as large as a crown of fix lives, though its value be only four livres five fois (Three and fixpence halfpenny). They bear no image, becaufe of the prohibition of the Prophet, but only the cypher of the Sultan on one fide, and on the other thefe words: Sultan of the two Continents, Kakan (0), (i. e. Lord) of the two Seas, the Sultan, Son of the Sultan $N$.

(o) Kakan is a Tartarian word.

$$
\mathrm{E} \mathrm{e}_{4} \quad \text { Aruck }
$$

firuck at Staimboul, (Conflantinople), or at Malf (Cairo) ; which are the only two cities where there is a mint.

The gold coins are the fequin, called $D a-$ bab, or piece of gold; and alfo Zabr-Mahaboub, or Well-beloved Flower. It is worth three piaftres of forty paras, or feven livres ten fols (fix fhillings and three-pence); the half fequin is only worth fixty paras. There is likewife a fequin, called Fondoucli, which is worth one hundred and feventy paras; but it is very rare. Befides thefe coins, which are thofe of the whole Turkifl cmpire, fome of the European fpecie has as much currency; fuch are the filver dahlers of Germany, and the gold fequins of Venice. The dollars are worth in Syria from nincty to ninety-two paras, and the fequins from two hundred and five to two hundred and eight. Thefe two coins are worth from eight to ten paras more in Egypt. The Venetian fecquins are in great requeft from the finenefs of their flandard, and the practice they have of employing them for womens trinkets. The fathion of thefe trinkets does not require much art ; the piece of gold is fimply pierced, in order to fufpend it by a chain, likewife of gold, which flows upon the breaft, 'The more fequins there are attached to this chain, and the greater the number of thefe chains, the more is a woman thought to be omamented. This is the favourite luxury, and the emulation of all ranks. Even the female peafants, for want of gold, wear piaftres or fmaller pieces; but the women of a certain rank difdain filver; they will accept of nothing but fequins of Venice, or large Spanifh picces, and crufadoes. Some of them wear two or threc hundred, as well lying flat, as ftrung one on another, and hung near the forehcad, at the edge of the head-drefs. It is a real load: but they do not think they can pay too dearly for the fatisfaction of exhibiting this treafure at the public bath, before a croud of rivals, to awaken whofe jealoufy conftitutes their chief pleafure. The effect of this luxury on commerce, is the withdrawing confiderable fums from circulation, which remain dead; befides, that when any of thefe pieces return into common ufe, having loft their weight by being pierced, it becomes neceffary to weigh them. The practice of weighing money is general in Syria, Egypt, and all Turkey. No piece, however effaced, is refufed there; the merchant chant draws out his fcales and weighs it, as in the days of Abraham, when he purchafe? his fepulchre. In confiderable payments, an agent of exchange is fent for, who counts paras by thoufands, rejects a great many pieces of falfe money, and weighs all the fequins, either feparately or torether.

Almoft the whole commerce of Syria is in the hands of the Franks, Greeks, and Armenians: formerly it was engroffed by the Jews. The Mahometans take little part in it ; not that they are prevented from engaging in it by the prejudices of their religion, or by indolence, as fome political writers have imagined; but from the obftacles thrown in their way by their own government. The Porte, conftant to its ufual fyftem, inftend of giving a decided preference to the Turkifh fubjects, finds it more lucrative to fell their rights and induftry to foreigners. Some of the European fates have, by treaties, obtained a diminution of cuftom-houfe duties to three per cirt. while the merchandife of the fubjects of the Sultan pays frictly ten, or, when favoured, feren par cint. Befides this, the duties once paid in any port, the Frank is not liable to pay a fecond time in another. But the cafo is different with the Ottoman fubject. The Franks, too, having found it convenient to employ Latin Chriftians as agents, have procured them a participation of their privileges, and they are no longer fubject to the power of the Pachas, or amenable to Turkifh juftice. They cannot be plundered; and whoever has a commercial procefs with them, muft plead before the European conful. With fuch difadvantages, is it furprifing that the Mahometans fhould relinquifh commerce to their rivals? Thefe agents of the Franks are known in the Levant under the name of Baratary Drogmans; that is, privileged Interpreters ( $p$ ). The barat, or privilege, is a patent, of which the Sultan makes a prefent to the ambaffadors refiding at the Porte. Formerly thefe ambaffadors, in their turn, made prefents of them to particular perfons in each factory ; but within the laft twenty years they have been made to underftand, it is more lucrative to fell them. The prefent price is from five to fix thoufand livres (two hundred or two hundred and fifty pounds). Each Ambaffador has fifty, which are renewed on the death of the poffefor, and form a pretiy confiderable perquifite.
( $p$ ) An interpreter in Arabic is called Terdjeman, of which our old writers have made Truchement. In Egypt it is pronounced Tergoman; of which the Venetians have mave Dragommo, and the Frerch converted into Drogman.

France has the greateft trade to Syria of any European nation. Her imports confift in five principal articles; ift, The cloths of Languedoc. 2dly, Cochineal from Cadiz. 3dly, Indigos. 4thly, Sugars. And, 5 thly, Went India coffce, which is in great requeft with the Turks, and which they mix with that of Arabia, more efteemed indeed, bit too high priced. To thefe muft be added hardware, caft iron, theet lead, tin, Lyons laces, foap:, Sic.

The returns confint almoft wholly in cottons, either fpun or raw, or manufactured into coarfe ftuffs; in fome filks of Tripoli, the others being prohibited; in gall nuts, in copper and wool, which come from countries out of Syria. The Factories, or as we call them, Echolies (7), of the French, are feven
(1) This whimfical name of Echelles (in Englifh ladders) Iras adapted by the inhabitants of Provence, from the Italian feven in number, i. e. Aleppo, Skandaroon, Latakia, Tripoli, Saide, Acre, and Ramla. The fum of their imports amounts to $6,000,000$ of livres $(2.50,000 \%$.) viz.

For Aleppo and Skandaroon, 3,000,000 Saide and Acre, - $\quad 2,000,000$
Tripoli and Catagie, - $\quad 400,000$ Ramla, - - 600,000

Total, 6,000,000

All this commerce paffes through the fingle channel of Marfeilles, which poffefles the exclufive privilege of fending fhips to, and receiving them from, the Levant, notwithftanding the remonftrances of the Province of Languedoc, which furnifhes the principal commodities. Strangers, that is, the natives of Turkey, are prohibited from carrying on their commerce, except through the medium of the Marfeilles factors, eftablifhed in their country. This prohibition was abolianfcala, a corruption of the Arabic word kalla, which fignifies a place proper to receive veffels, a road, a harbour. At prefent the natives fay, as the Italians, fonla, radia.
lifhed
lifhed in 1777, for feveral reafons fet forth in the ordinance ; but the merchants of Marfeilles made fuch reprefentations, that, fince the month of April, 1795, matters have again been placed upon their former footing. It is for France to determine how far this trade is to her intcreft. Confidered relatively to the Turkin empire, it may be averred, that the commerce of the Turks with Europe and India, is more detrimental than advantagcous. For the articles exported being all raw unwrought materials, the empire deprives iticlf of all the advantages to be derived from the labour of its own fubjects. On the other hand, the commodities imported from Europe and India, being articles of pure luxury, only ferve to increare the diffipation of the rich, and the fervants of government, whilf, perhaps, they aggravate the wretched comaition of the people, and the clafs of cultivators. Under a government which pays no refpect to property, the defire of maitiplying enjoyments, cannot but irritate cupidity, and increafe oppreffion. In order to procure more clothes, furs, laces, fugars, flawls, and India goods; there muft be more money, cotton, and filks, and more extortions. A momentary advantage may have accrued to the fates which furnifh thefe objects of luxury; but are not the advantages of the prefent moment borrowed from the wealth of future times? And can we hope long to carry on an advantageous commerce with a country which is precipitately haftening to ruin?

EGYPTAND SYRIA. $43^{8}$

C H A P. XXXIX.

Of the Arts, Sciences, and Ignorance of the Pcopli.

THE arts and trades in Syria afford room formany confiderations. Firf, The different kinds of them are infinitely lefs numerous than with us; we can fearcely reckon twenty, even including the moft neceffary. In the firft place, the religion of Mahomet having profcribed every fort of image and figure, there exifts neither painting, nor foulpture, nor engraving, nor any of thofe numerous profeffions which depend on them. The Chriftians alone purchafe, for the ufe of their churches, fome piftures of the Greeks at Conftantinople, who, in point of tafte, are real Turks. In the fecond place, a multitude of our trades are rendered unnecefiary, from the fmall quantity of furniture ufed by the Orientals. The whole inventory of a wealthy family confifts in a carpet for the feet, in mats, cuhions, matrefies, fome fmall cotton cloths, copper and wooden platters for the table, a few ftewing pans, a mortar, a portable mill, a little porcelain, and fome plates of copper tinned. All our apparatus of tapeftry, wooden bedfeads, chairs, frools, glaffes, defks, bureaus, clofets; our buffets with their plate, and table fervices; in a word, all our cabinet and upholftery work, are luxuries totally unknown to them, fo that nothing is fo fimple as a Turkifh removal. Pococke is of opinion that thefe cuftoms originate in the wandering life formerly led by the anceftors of there nations; but they have had fufficiont time to forget this fince they have become fettled; and we fhould rather fearch for the caufe of it in the nature of their government, which reduces every thing to what is frictly neceffary. Their cloathing is not more complicated, though much more expenfive. They are ftrangers to the hats, perukes, hair-dreffing, buttons, buckles, focks, laced ruffles, and all that fuperfluity with which we are furrounded. Cotton or filk fhirts, which even the Pachas, do not count by dozens, and which have neither ruffles nor wrintbands, nor plaited collars; an enormous pair of breeches, which ierve alfo by way of ftockings; a handkerchief on the head; another round the waift, with [^7]the three large folds of cloth and calico I have mentioned in defcribing the drefs of the Mamlouks, compofe the whole wardrobe of the Orientals. Their only articles of lixury are goldfmith's work, which is confined to womens trinkets, faucers for coffec wrought like lace, the ornaments of their harnefs, their pipes, and the filk ftufis of Aleppo and Damafcus. In paffing through the ftreets of the towns, you meet with nothing but a number of beaters of cotton on tenters, retailers of fuffs and mercery, barbers to fhave the head, tinners, lockfimiths, fadlers, and efpecially fellers of little loaves, hardware, grain, dates, and fweetmeats, but very few butchers, and thefe ill fupplied. There are alfo in the great towns a few wretched gunfmiths, who can only repair fire-arns, for not one of them can caft a piftol barrel; as for gun-powder, the frequert occafion they have to make ufe of it, has excitcd the induttry of the peafants in general to makic it, but there is no public manuractury.

In the villages, the inhabitants, limited to mere neceffaries, have no arts but thofe without which they cannot fubfig; every one endeavours to fupply his own wants, that he may not be obtiged to thare what he has with others. Each family manufactures the coarfe cottons with which they are cloathed. Every houfe has its portable mill, with which the women grind the barley or the Dourra for their fuftenance. The flour from thefe mills is coarfe, and the little round loaves made of it, ill leavened and badly baked; but they preferve life, and that is all which is required. I have already obferved how fimple and cheap their inftruments of hufbandry are. In the mountains they do not prune the vines, and they no where ingraft trees; every thing, in fhort, reminds us of the fimplicity of ancient times, which, poffibly, as at this day, was only the ignorance of poverty. When we enquire the reafon of their want of induftry, the anfwer is uniformly the fame: "It is good enough: That is fuf" ficient: What end would it anfwer to do " more?" They are in the right, fince they would not be permitted to reap the benefit of their labours.

Secondly; The fate of the arts in thefe countries, and the manner in which they are exercifed, are interefting, as they preferve almof, in every refpect, the difcoveries and meth ods of ancient times. For example, the ftuffs manufactured at Aleppo are not o Arabian invention ; this art is borrowed from the Grceks, who themfelves, doubtlefs, imitated the ancient Orientals. The dyes they ufe are, probably, as old as the time of the Tyrians, and they carry them at this day to a perfection not unworthy of that people; but the workmen, jealous of their art, make an impenetrable myftery of the procefs. The manner in which the ancients fecured the harnefs of their horfes againes the frokes of the fabre, was undonbrody the home which is now made ure of at Aleppo and Damafcus, for the head falls of their brilies $(r)$. The fmall filver plates with which the leather is lined, hold together without mails, ad are fo jointed, that without depriving the leather of its pliancy, there remains no interfice for the edge of the weapon.

The coment they make ufe of, is no doube that of the Greeks and Romans. To make
(r) On this fubject, I fhall obferve, that the Mamlouks of Cairo cxhibit crery year at the proceffions of the Caravan, conts of mail, helmets, and vizors, braflets, and all the armour of the time of the Croifales. 'There is alfo a collection of ol. arms in the mofque of the Dervifes, : Wabe auve wain, on the banks of the Nile.
it properly, they take care only to ure the lime when boiling: they mix with it one third of fand, and another of athes and pounded brickduft. With this compofition they form wells, cifterns, and vaults, which the water cannot pafs throush. I have feen a fingular fecies of the latter in Paleftine that deferve to be defcribed. The vault is built with cylinders of brick, eight or ten inches long. Thefe cylinders are hollow, and may be about two inches diameter within. They are in a flight degree tapering, the wideft end is clofed, the other open. To form the roof, they are ranged by the fide of each other, with the clofe end expofed to the weather: they are faftened with plaifter of Jerufalem or Nablous, and four workmen can compleat the roof of a chamber in a day. The firfi rains uiually penetrate it; but a coat of oil is then laid over it, which effectually keeps the water out. The cracks withinfide are clofed by a layer of plaifter, and the whole forms a durable and very light roof. With thefe cylinders they build the walls at the edges of the terraces on the houre tops, throughout Syria, to prevent the women, who wiah and dry their linen there, from being Ff feen.
feen. The ufe of them has been Iately introduced at Paris; but the invention is of great antiquity in the eaf. .

We may afirm the fame of the manner of working the jron mines in Lebanon, on account of its great fimplicity. It is the method now employed in the Pyrences, and known under the name of the Catalonian Forge. The furnace confints in a fort of chimney formed in the fide of a fteep declivity. The funnel is filled with wood; which is fet fire to. The bellows is applied to the inferior mouth, and the iron ore poured in from above; the metal falls to the bottom, and is taken out by the fame mouth at which the fire is lighted. Even their ingenious wooden niding locks may be traced hack to the time of Solomon, who mentions them in his fong.

To their mufic we muft not afcribe fo high an antiquity. It does not appear to have an earlier origin than the age of the Califs, under whom the Arabs applied themfelves to it with the more ardour, as all the learned men of that day added the title of Mufician, to that of Phyfician, Geometrician and Aftronomer; yet, as its principles were borrowed from the Greeks, it might afford matter of curious obfervation to adepts in that fcience. Such perfons are very rarely to be met with in the eaft. Cairo is perhaps the -nly place in Egypt or in Syria, where there are a few Shaiks who underftand the princim ples of the art. They have collections of airs which are not noted in our manner, but written in characters, all the names of which are Perfian. They have no mufic but vocal; for they neither know nor efteem inftrumental, and they are in the right; for fuch inftuments as thicy have, not excepting their flutes, are deteftable. They are ftrangers likewife to any other accompaniment than the union, and the continned bafe of the Monochord. They are fond of finging with a forced voice in the high tones, and one muft have lungs like theirs to fupport the effort for a quarter of an hour. Their airs, in point of character and execution, refemble nothing we have heard in Europe, except the Seguidillas of the Spaniards. They have divifions more laboured even than thofe of the Italians, and cadences and infiexions of tones impofible to be imitated by European throats. Their performance is accompanied with fighs and gefures, which paint the pafions in a more lively manner than we fhould venture to allow. They may be faid to excel moft in the melancholy ftrain. To behold an Arab with his head inclined, his hand applied to his ear, his eyebrows knit, his eyes languifhing; to hear his plaintive tones, his lengthened notes, his fighs and fobs, it is almort impofible to refrain from tears, which, as their expreffion is, are far from bitter: and indeed they muft certainly find a pleafure in fhedding them, fince among all their fongs, they conftantly prefer that which excites hem moft, as among all accomplifhments finging is that they moft admire.

$$
\text { Ff } 4 \quad \text { geftures, }
$$

Dancing, which with us holds an cqual rank with mufic, is far from being held in the fame eftimation by the Arabs. This art, among them, is branded with a kind of fhame; a man cannot practife it without dinnomour (s), and the eyercife of it is only permitted to women. This judgment will appear to us fevere, but before we condemin it, it muft be confidered, that in the eaftern
(s) The facred dance of the Dervifes, the motions of which are fuppofed to imitate the revolutions of the itars, muft be excopted.
worlt, dancing is not an imitation of war, as among the Greeks, nor a combination of graceful attitudes and movements, as with us; but a licentious imitation of the utmont wantonnefs of love. 'This is the fpecies of dance which, brought from Carthage to Rome, announced the decline of her republican manners, and which, fince revived in Spain by the Arabs, ftill fubfifts there under the title of the Fandango. Notwithfanding the freedom of our manners, it would be difficult, without wounding the ear, accurately to defcribe it: it will be fufficient to fay that the female dancer, with her arms extended, and an empaffioned air, finging and accompanying her fong with caftanets, which fhe holds between her fingers, executes, without changing her place, all thofe motions of the body which paffion itfelf carefully conceals under the veil of night. Such is their licentiournefs, that none but profitutes venture dance in piblic. Thofe who make a profeffion of it are called Rawazi, and thofe who excel, affume the name of Alma, or proficients in the art. The moft celcbrated are thofe of Cairo. A late traveller, (M. Savary,) has drawn a flattering picture of them; but I confefs

I confefs the originals did not produce the fame enthufiafm in me. With their yellow limen, their tawny fkins, their naked pendent breafts, their blackened eyelafles, their blue lips, and their hands fained with hemna, thefe Alma only reminded me of the Baccbantes of the Porcberons ( $t$ ); and if we reflect that, even among the moft polifned nations, this clafs of women retain not a little vulgarity, it is not credible, that among a people, where the moft fimple arts are fill in a ftate of barbarifm, they can hew much refinement and delicacy in one which requires the moft.

The intimate connection between the arts and fciences, leaves no room to doubt that the latter are ftill more neglected, or to confefs the truth, totally unknown. The barbarifm of Syria, as well as that of Egypt, is compleat; and, from the fimilarity which is ufually found in the different provinces of the fame empire, we may form the like judgment of all the countries under the dominion of the Turks. In vain have fome perfons denied this afier-
(t) Winc-houfes without Paris, and frce from the city dusties ; the refort of the populace---the iden might, perhapss be better conveyed by the term Bacchont's of Bilingsate.
tion; in vain do they talk of colleges, places of education, and books: thefe words in 'T'urkey convey not the fame ideas as with us. The age of the Califs is paft among the Arabs, and yet to begin among the Turks. Thefe two nations have at prefent neither geometricians, aftronomers, muficians, nor phyficians. Scarcely can we meet with one of the latter who knows how to bleed with a fleam; when they have ordered a cautery, applied fire, or prefcribed fome common recipe, their knowledge is exhaufted: and confequently the valet de chambre of an European is confulted as an Efculapius; where indced fhould phyficians be formed, fince there are no eftablifhments of the kind, and anatomy is direct ly repugnant to the prejudices of their religion? Aftronomy might gain more admirers, but by aftronomy they underitand only the art of difcovering the decrees of fate by the motions of the ftars, and not the profound fcience of calculating their revolutions. The monks of Mar-Hanna, who are poffeffed of books, and maintain a correfpondence with Rome, are not lefs ignorant than the reft. Never, before my arrival among them, had they heard that the earth turned round the fun, and this opinion was very near giving great offence to the brotherhood; for the zealots, finding that it contradieted the Holy Bibie, were inclined to treat me as a heritic: fortunately the Yicar General had good Senfe cnough to don!st, and to fay: "Without " blindly crediting the Franks, we muft not " too haftily deny all they affert; for every " thing they bring us, the produce of their " arts, is fo infinitely fuperior to our own, " that they may poffibly difcover things " which are beyond our ideas." I efcaped by not taking the blame of this novel hypothefis on myfelf, but reftoring the difiovery to our modern philofophers, who are efteemed by the monks at this day, as Vifionaries.

A great difference then fiould be made between the prefent Arabs, and thofe of the times of El-Mamoun, and Aroun-el-Rafchid, and it muft be admitted that, even of them, we have fommed very extravagant ideas. Their empire was too foon deftroyed to fuffer them to make any great progrefs in the fuiences. What we fee happen in our days in fome of the Europenn ftates, proves that they require ages to become eftablithed in any country. And from what we know of the Arabian writers, do we not conftantly find them either the tranflators, or echos of the Greeks? The only fcience which is peculiar to them, and the only one they continue to cultivate, is that of their orvn language; but, by the ftudy of language, we mult not underfand that philofophical fpirit of refearch which, in words, inveftigates the hiftory of ideas, in order to perfect the art by which they are communicated. Among the Mahometans, the fudy of the Arabic is only cultivated on account of its connection with religion; and this is in fact very confined, for the Koran is "the immediate word of God:" but, as this word only retains the identity of its nature, fo far as it correfponds with the meaning of God and his prophet, it is a matter of the greateft moment to learn, not only the exact fignification of the words employed, but, likewile, the accents, inflexions, fighs and paufes, in fhort, all the moft minute niceties of profody and reading; and it is impoffible to form an idea how complicated all this is without having heard their declamation in the Mofques. As for the principles of the language, thofe of the grammar alone take feveral years to acquire. Next is taught the Nabou, a part of grammar which may be defined, the fcience of terminations foreign to the vulgar Arabic, which are fuperadded to words, and vary according to the numbers, cafes, genders and perfons. When this is attained, the fudent is reckoned among the lcarned. Eloquence is next to be ftudied, and that requires whole years; for the mafters, myfterious like the Brachmans, difcover the fecrets of their art only by degrees. At length, they proceed to the fudy of the law and the Fakah, or Science, per excellentiam, by which they mean theology. Now, if we conlider that the perpetual object of thefe fudies is always the Koran, and that it is necerfary thoroughly to be acquainted with all the myftical and allegorical fignifications afcribed to it, and to read all the commentaries and paraphrafes upon it, of which there are two hundred volumes on the firft verfe; if we reflect that it is requifite to difpute on thoufands of ridiculous cafes of confcience; fuch as, if it be allowable to mix mortar with impure water, whether a man who has an iffue be not in the cafe of a defiled woman; as alfo to be able to dornes the various queftions, whether whether the foul of the prophet was not created before that of Adam; whether he did not counfel God in the creation; and what was the counfel he gave; it cannot but be allowed, that one may pafs one's whole lifetime in learning a great deal, and knowing nothing.

As for the inftruction beftowed on the vulgar, as the profeffors of the law do not perform the function of our vicars aid priefts, as they neither preach, nor catechize, nor confefs, it may be pronounced that they receive none: all the education of children confifts in attending private mafters, who teach them to read the Koran, if they are Mahometans, or the Pfalms, if Chritians, and a little writing, and reckoning from memory: this continues till they arrive almoft at manhood, when each of them chufes fome profeffion, in order to marry and gain a livelihood. The contagion of ignorance infects even the children of the Franks, and it is a maxim at Marfeilles, that a Levantin muft be a diffipated youth, idle, and without emulation, and whofe whole knowledge will be confined to being able to fpeak feveral languages,
guages, though this rule, like all others, has its exceptions.

In examining the caufes of the general ignorance of the Orientals, I hall not fay with a late traveller, that it arifes from the difficulties of the language, and of reading and writing; undoubtedly the difficulty of the dialects, the perplexity of the characters, and the defects of their alphabet, multiply the obftacles to inftruction. But habit furmounts them, and the Arabs attain as perfect a facility in writing and reading, as the Europeans themfelves. The real caufe is the few means of inftuction they pofieds, among which muft be firit reckoned the farcity of books. With us nothing is io common as this valuable affiftance: nothing fo general among all ranks as the practice of reading. In the Eaft, on the contrary, nothing is fo rare. There are but two libraries throughout Syria, that of Marhanna, of whech 1 have fpoken, and that of Diezzar at Acre. The reader has feen how infignificant the former is, both with refpect to the number and the choice of its books. I hall not fpeak of the latter as an eye witnefs; but two perfons who have feen it, have affured me, that it did not contain more than three hundred dired volumes; yet thefe are the fpoils of all Syria, and among others, of the Convent of St. Sauveur, near Saide, and of the Shaik Kairi, Mufti of Ramla. At Aleppo, the houre of Bitar is the only one which poffeffes any books, and thofeare aftronomical, which nobody underftands. At Damafcus the lawyers hold even their own fcience in no eftimation. Cairo alone is rich in books. There is a collection of very ancient ones at the Mofque of El-azhar, and a confiderable number is in daily circulation; but Chriftians are forbid to touch them. Twelve years ago, however, the monks of Mar-Hanna defirous of procuring fome, fent one of their number thither to purchafe them. By a fortunate accident he got acquainted with an Effendi, with whom he became a favourite, aild who wifhing to obtain from him fome leffons in Aftrology, in which he thought him an adept, procured him fome books. In the face of fix months this monk affured me, that upwards of two hundred paffed through his hands; and on my enquiring on what fubjects, he replied, treatifes on grammar, the Nahou, eloquence, and the interpretation of the Koran; but very few Vol. II. Gg hiftories, hiftories, or even tales. He had never feen two copies of the Arabian Nights Entertainments. From this ftate of facts, we are certainly authorized to affirm, not only that there is a fcarcity of good books in the eaft, but that books of any kind are very rare. The reafon of this is evident. In thefe countries every book is a manufcript ; the writing of which is neceffarily flow, difficult, and expenfive. The labour of many months produces but one copy. That muft be without erafure, and is liable to be deftroyed by a thoufand acccidents. It is impoffible therefore for books to multiply, and confequently for knowledge to be propagated. If we compare this fate of things with what pafies among ourfelves, we cannot but be deeply impreffed with the advantages of printing. We fhall even be convinced, on reflexion, that this art alone is pofiibly the main fpring of thofe great revolutions, which, within the laft three centuries, have taken place in the moral fyftem of Europe. The prefs, by rendering books common, has diffufed a more equal fhare of knowledge through every clafs; and by rapidly communicating ideas and difcoveries, has produced a more fpeedy improvement provement and more univerfal acquaintance with the arts and fciences: by its means, all thofe who occupy themfelves in literary purfuits, are become a body perpetually affembled, who purfue without intermiffion the fame labours. By printing, every writer is become a public orator, who addreffes himfelf not only to his city, but to his nation, and to all Europe. If in this new fpecies of popular aflemby he has lof the advantage of declamation and gefture to excite the paffrons, he is amply indemnified by that of having a more felect atidience, and being able to reafon with more temperance; and if the impreffion he makes be lefs lively, it is certainly more durable. Since the difcovery of the art of printing, therefore, fingle men have been feen to produce, by the mere effects of their writings, moral revolutions in whole nations, and have obtained an influence over the minds of men, which has even awed and controuled the authority of the reigning powers.

Another very remarkable effect of the prefs, is that which it has had on hiftory. By giving a general and rapid publicity to facts, it has rendered their certainty more eafy to be afcertainca; whercas, when books were written by hand, the collection made by one man, producing only one copy, could be feen and criticized by only a very frall number of readers; and thefe readers are the more to be fufpected, as they muft depend on the choice of the author. If he thould permit conies to be taken, they multiply and fpread very flowly. In the mean time witneffes drov off, proofs which might once have been produced lofe their force, contradifions fart up, and a wide field is opened to crror, pafion, and mifreprefentation. This is the caute of all thofe montaons relations with which the hifories of anticuity, as well as thofe of Modem Afia, abound. If among thofe hifories twe fiad fome which bar frik ing marks of probability, they are thote :whof writers were cither cye-witnefies of the facts they relate, or public men who wrote to ais enlightened people, able to contradiot then whenever they departci from truth. Such was Caint, the principal actor in the events rifi.ted in his own memoirs; fuch was Xenofhon, the genemal of the ten thoufand, whofe able retreat he has fo well defcribed; fuch wa; Jo'ybius, the rriend and companion of Scipio, the conqueror of Carthage; fuch alfo were Salluit and Tacitus, who had been confuls; Thucidides, the commander of an army, and Hcrodotus, fenator, and deliverer of Halicarnaffus. When hiftory on the contrary is only a collection of ancient events, delivered down by tradition; when thefe facts are merely collected by individuals, it is neither of the fame fpecies, nor does it bear the fame character. How great is the difference between the preceding writers and Livy, Quintus Curtius, and Diodorus Siculus! Fortunately, however, for them, the countries in which they wrote were civilized, and pub. lic information might ferve to guide them refpecting recent facts. But when nations were in a flate of anarchy', or groaning under fuch a defpotifm as prevails at this day in the eaft, writers, abforbed in that ignorance and credulity which ever accompany fuch a ftate, might boldly commit their errors and prejudices to hiftory; and we may remark, that it is in the productions of fuch ages and nations that we meet with all the monfters of fiction, while in polifhed periods, and in the hands of origina! writers, the annals of hiftory only prefent us with a narGo 3 rative rative of facts fimilar to thofe which are daily paffing before our eycs.

$$
\text { Gg } 2 \quad \text { afcertained. }
$$

This influence of the prefs is fo efficacious, that the eftablifhment of Mar-Hanna alone, imperfect as it is, has already produced a fenfible difference among the Chriftians. The art of reading and writing, and even a fort of information, are more common among them at prefent, than they were thirty years ago. Unfortunately their outfet has been of that kind, which long retarded the progrefs of improvement, and excited innumerable diforders in Eurone. For bibles and religious books being the firft which proceeded from the prefs, the general attention was turned towards theological difcuffions, whence refulted a fermentation which was the fource of the Schifms of England and Germany, and the unhappy political troubles of France. If inftead of tranflating their Buzembaum, and the Mifanthropical reveries of Nieremberg and Didaco Stella, the Jefuits had printed and difperfed books of practical morality and. public utility, adapted to the fate of the Kefraouan and the Druzes, their labours might have produced in thofe countries, and even through all, Syria, political confequences which which might eventually have changed its whole fyftem. At prefent, all hope of fuch improvement is over, or at le ft greatly retarded; the firft fervor has been fpent on ufelefs objects. Befides, the monks are poor, and if Djezzar takes it into his head, he will deftroy their prefs. To this he will probably be induced by the fanaticifm of the profeffors of the law, who, without very well knowing what they have to dread from the prefs, have, notwithftanding, conceived an averfion to it; as if folly poffeffed the natural inftinct of divining what may prove its deftruction.

The fcarcity of books, and the want of the means of information are then, as I have juft faid, the caufes of the ignorance of the Orientals; but thefe muft, after all, be regarded merely as acceffaries: the radical fource is fill in the government, which not only does not encourage the propagation of knowledge, but exerts cvery effort to ftifle it in the birth. Under the adminiftration of the Turks, there is no profpect of obtaining rank or fortune through the channel of the arts and fciences, or polite literature. The talents of the moft diftinguifhed geometri-

$$
\text { Gg } 4 \quad \text { cians, }
$$

456 TRAVELS IN

cians, aftronomers, or engineers of Europe, would not preferve their poffeffor from languifhing in obfcurity, or groaning beneath the perfecution of tyranny. If fcience, therefore, which itfelf is acquired with fo much difficulty and labour, can only make us regret its inutility, and even expofe us to danger ; it is better never to poffefs it. For this reafon, the Orientals are ignorant, and munt neceffarily be fo, from the fame principle which makes them poor, as they may apply with juftice to fcience, what they fay of the arts: "What good purpore will it aniwer to " do more?"

C H A P. XL.

Of the manners and character of the inbabitants of Syria.

OF all the fubjects of obfervation any country affords, the moral character of its inbabitants is unqueftionably the moft important; but it muft likewife be acknowledged, it is at the fame time the moft difficult: for it is not fufficient to make a barren enquiry into facts; the effential object is to inveftigate their various caufes and relations; to difcover the open or fecret, the remote or immediate fprings, which produce in men thofe habits of action we call manners, and that uniform difpofition of mind we name character. Now, to fucceed in fuch an enquiry, it is neceffary to communicate with the men we wifh to know; we muft place ourfelves in their fituations, in order to feel by what agents they are influenced, and the confequences which refult; we mutt live in their country, learn their language, and adopt their cuftoms; condi*ons feldom complied with by travellers; and which wh: $h$, even when they are, ftill leave to be furmounted numerous difficuities, which arife from the nature of the thing itfelf; for we have not only to combat the prejudices we may meet in our way, but to overcome our own; arainft which we can never be fufficiently on our guard; habits are powerful, facts liable to be mitaken, and error eafy. The obferver, then, fhould be circumfpect though not timid, and the reader, obliged to fee with the eyes of others, fhould watch attentively both the reafoning of his guide, and the deductions he may be inclined to draw himfelf.

When an European arrives in Syria, or indeed in any part of the caftern world, what appears mof extraordinary to him, in the exterior of the inhabitants, is the almoft total oppofition of their manners to our own: it feems as if fome premeditated defign had determined to produce an infinity of the moft ftriking contrafts between the people of Alia and thofe of Europe. We wear hoort and clofe drefies; theirs are long and ample. We fuffer our hair to grow, and fhave the beard; they let the beard grow, and have the head. With us, to uncover the head is a mark of refpect; with them, a naked head is a fign of folly. We falute in an inclined. pofture ; they upright. We pafs our lives erect; they are almort continually feated. They fit and eat upon the ground; we upon raifed feats. With refpect to language, likewife, their manner of writing is directly contrary to ours, and the greateft part of our mafculine nouns are feminine with them. To the bulk of travellers thefe contrafts only appear whimfical; but it may be interefting to philofophers, to enquire into the caufes of fo great a diverfity of habits, in men. who have the fame wants, and in nations which appear to have one common origin.

Another diftinguifhing characteriftic, no lefs, remarkable, is that religious exterior obfervable in the countenances, converfation, and geftures of the inhabitants of Turkey. In. the ftreets, every one appears with his ftring of beads. We hear nothing but emphatical exclamations of Ya Allab! O God! Allab akbar! God moft great! Allah taala, God moft high! Every inftant the ear is ftruck with a profound figh, or noify eructation which follows the pronouncing of fome one of the ninety-nine epithets of God.; fuch as $\mathcal{Y}_{\text {a rani! }}$ Source of riches! Ya fobban! O moft to be praifed! Ya mafour! O impenctrable! If a man fells bread in the ftreets, he docs not cry bread, but exclaims Allab Ferim, God is liberal. If he fells water, he cries, Allab djawad, God is generous; and fo of other articles. The ufual form of falutation is, God preferve thee; and of thanks, God protect thes: in a word, God is in every thing, and every where. Thefe men then are very devout, fays the reader? Yes, but without being the better in confequence of this devotion, for I have already obferved, their zeal is no other than a feirit of jealoufy, and contradiction arifing from the diverfity of religions; fince in the Chriftian a profeflion of his faith is a bravado, an act of independence; and in the Mahometan, an act of fuperiority and power. This devoutnefs, therefore, merely the offspring of pride and profound ignorance, is no better than a fanatic fupcrftition, and the fource of innumerable diforders.

There is ftill another characterific in the exterior of the Orientals, which attracts the attention of an oblerver: I mean their grave and phlegmatic air in every thing they do, or fay. Inftead of that open and cheerful countenance, which we either naturally poffefs or affume, their behaviour is ferious, auftere, and melancholy; they rarely laugh, and the gaiety of the French appears to them a fit of delirium. When they fpeak, it is with deliberation, without geftures, and without pafion; they liften without interrupting you; they are filent for whole days together, and by no means pique themfelves on fupporting converfation. If they waik, it is always leifurely, and on bufinefs; they have no idea of our troublefome activity, and our walks backwards and forwards for amufement. Continually feated, they pafs whole days mufing, with their legs crofied, their pipes in their mouths, and almoft without changing their attitude. It fhould feem as if motion were a punifhment to them, and that, like the Indians, they regard inaction as offential to happinefs.

This obfervation, which may be extended to the greater part of their habits and cuftoms, has, in our time, given occafion to a very fummary fyitem of the caufes of the $p=-$ culiar character of the Orientals, and feveral other nations. A celebrated writer, refleting on what the Greeks and Romans have faid of Afratic effeminacy, and the accounts given by travellers of the indolence of the Indians, is of opinion, that this indolence forms the diftinguifhing character of the inhabitants of thofe countries; purfuing his enquiries into the common caule of this general fact, and finding, that all thefe nations inhabit what are called hot countries, he has attributed the caufe of their indolence to heat; and affuming the fact as a principle, has laid it down as an axiom, that the inhabitants of hot countries muft neceffarily be indolent, inert of body, and from analogy, likewife inert of mind and character. He goeseven ftill farther ; remarking, that unlimited monarchy is the moft habitual ftate of government among thefe nations; and confidering defpotifm as the effect of the fupinenefs of a people, he concludes, that defpotifm is as much the natural government of thefe countries, and as neceffary as the climate under which they live. It fhould feem as if the feverity, or, more properly fpeaking, the barbarity of the inference fhould have put men upon their guard againft fuch erroneous principles: yet this fyftem has been received with great applaufe in France, nay, even throughout Europe; and the opinion of the author of the Spi it of Laws, is become among the moft numerous clafs of reafoners, an authority from which it is prefumptuous to differ. This is not the place to write a formal treatife completely to overthrow this error: befides that fuch a refutation already exifts in the work of a philofopher, whofe name is at leaft equal to that of Montefquieu. But in order to raife fome doubts at leaft in the minds of thofe who, without giving themfelves time to reflect, have adopted this opinion, I fhall offer a few objections which the fubject naturally fuggefts.
EGYPTANDSYRIA.

The doctrine of the general indolence of the Oriental and fouthern nations, is founded on that opinion of Afiatic effeminacy originally tranfmitted to us by the Greeks and Romans; but what are the facts on which that was built? Were they fixed and determinate, or did this opinion rely on vague and general ideas like the fyftems of the moderns? Had the ancients a more accurate knowledge of thofe countries in their time, than we have obtained in ours; and are we juftified in founding on their report an hypothefis difficult to eftablifh from our own more minute examination? But, admitting the facts as we receive them from hiftory, were the Affytians, whofe ambition and wars during five hundred years, threw Afia into confufion; the Medes, who fhook off their yoke, and difpoffeffed them; the Perfians who, under Cyrus, within the fpace of thirty years, extended their conquefts from the Indus to the Mediterranean; were thefe inert and indolent people? May we not oppofe to this fyftem the Phœnicians, who, for fo many centuries, were in poffeffion of the commerce of the whole ancient world; the Palmyrenians, of whofe induftry we poffefs fuch ftupendous monuments; the Carduchi of Xenophon, who braved the power of the Great King in the very heart of his empire ; the Parthians, thofe unconquerable rivals of Rome; and even the Jews, who, limited to a little ftate, never ceafed to fruggle, for a thoufand years, againft the moft powerful empires? If the men of thefe nations were inert, what is activity? If they were active, where then is the influence of clinate? Why in the fame countries, where fo much energy was difplayed in former times, do we at piefent find fuch profound indolence? Why are the modern Greeks fo debafed amid the very ruins of Sparta and Athens, and in the ficlds of Marathon and Thermopylæ? Will it be alledged, that the climate has changed? Where are the proofs? Suppofing this true, it muft have changed by irregular: fits; the climate of Perfia muft have altered greatly from Cyrus to Xerxes; that of Athens from Ariftides to Demetrius Phalereus; and that of Rome from Scipio to Sylla, and from Sylla to Tiberius. The climate of the Portugueze muft have changed innce the days of Albuquerque; and that of the Turks fince Soliman? If indolence be peculiar to the fouthern countries, whence is it that we have feen Carthage in Africa, Rome in Italy, and the Buccaneers at St. Domingo? Why do we meet with the Malays in India, and the Bedouins in Arabia? Why, too, at the fame period, and under the fame fky, do we find a Sybaris near Crotona, a Capua in the vicinity of Rome, and a Sardes contiguous to Miletus? Whence is it, that we fee, under our own eyes, and in Europe ivelf, northern governments as languid as thofe of the fouth? Why, in our own empire, are the fouthern more active than the northern provinces? If the fame effects are obfervable under direcily contrary circunia ftances, and difierent effects under the fame circumfances, what becomes of thefe pretended principics? What is this influence of climate? and what is to be underftod by activity? Is it only to be accorded to warlike nations? and was Sparta, when not engaged in war, to be efteemed inert? What do we mean by hot countrics? Where are we to draw the line of cold and temperate? Let the partifans of Montefquieu afcertain this, that we may henceforward be enabled to determine the quantity of encrey in a nation by the temperature, and at what degree of the thermometer we are to fix its aptitude to flavery or freedom!
VoL. II. If h obfervable

But a phyfecal obfervation has been called in to corroborate this pofition; and we are told that heat abates our Atrength; we are nore indolent in fummer than in winter: the inhabitants of het countries, therefore, muft be indolent. Let us fuppofe this true, Whence is it then, that, under the fame influence of clinante, the tyrant poffefies more energy to opprefs, than the people to defend themfelves? lout, is it not evident that we reafon like the inhabitants of a country where cold is more prevalent than heat? Were a fimilar thefis to be maintained in Egypt and Africa, it would there be faid, the cold prevents motion, and obftructs the circulation. The truth is, that our fenfations are relative to our labits, and that bodies affume a temperament analogous to the climate in which they live; fo that they are only affected by the extremes of the ordinary medium. We hate fweating; the Egyptian loves it, and dreads nothing fo much as a failure of perfpiration. Thus, whether we refer to hiftorical, or natural facts, the fyftem of Montefquieu, fo fpecious at firft fight, turns out, when examined, to be a mere paradox, which has owed its fuccefs only to the impreffion made by the novelty of the fubject, at the time the Spirit of Laws appeared, and the indirect flattery it offered to thofe nations by which it was fo favourably received.

To give precifion to our ideas, refpecting the queftion of activity, a fhorter and more certain method than thefe far-fetched and equivocal reafonings would have been, to have fudied nature herfelf, and to have cxamined the origin and motives of activity in man. If we purfue this mode of inveftiga$\mathrm{Hh}_{2}$ tion.
tio, we fhall perceive that all action, whether of body or mind, has its fource in our neceflities; and augments as they increafe. We may follow its gradations from the rudeft beginnings, to the ftate of the mof mature improvement. In man yet favage, hunger and thirft awaken the firft exertions of the foul and body. Thefe are the wants which prompt him to run, fearch, watch, and employ cunning or violence, as he finds them neceffary : all his activity depends on the means of providing for his fubfiftence. Is that eafily obtained, has he fruit, game and fifh, within his reach, he is lefs active, fince by putting forth his hand, he can fatisfy himfelf; and being fatisfied, nothing invites him to fir, till the experience of various enjoyments has awakened in him defires which become new wants, and new motives of activity. On the other hand, are the means of fupplying his neceffities difficult to be obtained; is game hard to be found, and poffeffed of agility to avoid him; are the fith wily, and do the fruits foon decay; man is forced to be more adive ; he muft exercife his body and his mind, to maintain life; he muft become fwift like the beafts, wily like the finh, and provident in preferve preferve his fruits; he muft endeavour the improvement of his natural faculties. He, therefore, beftirs himfelf, he thinks, he meditates; he conceives the idea of bending the branch of a tree to form a bow, and pointing a reed to make an arrow, he faftens a handle to a fharp ftone, and procures him a hatchet; he then labours to make nets, to fell trees, to hollow out their trunks, and build canoes. Already has he provided for his moft urgent neceflities ; already the experience of a multitude of fenfations has made him acquainted with enjoyments and fufferings; and his activity is redoubled to remove the one, and multiply the other. He has felt the pleafure of being fhaded from the heat of the fun; he builds himfelf a cabin: he has experienced that a fkin fecures him from the cold; $h_{e}$ makes himfelf clothing: he has tafted brandy and fmoaked tobacco; he likes them, and wifhes to have more ; but to procure them he muft bring beavers fkins, elephants teeth, gold duft, \&cc. He redoubles his activity, and carries his induftry fo far as to fell even his fellow creature. In fuch a progrefs, as in the primary caufe, it muft be acknowledged, that activity has little or no $\mathrm{Hh}_{3}$ connection connection with heat; only the inhabitans of the north being reputed to ftand more in need of nourifmment than thofe of the fouth, it may be alledged, that they muft confequently be poffeffed of more activity ; but this difference in neceffary wants, has very narrow limits. Befides, is it well afcertained, that an Efquimaux or a Samoyede, requires really a greater quantity of aliment, than a Bedouin or an Ichthyophagus of Perfia? Are the favages of Brazil and Guinea lefs voracious than thofe of Canada and California? Let my opponents beware: the facility of obtaining a great quantity of food, is perhaps the primary caule of voraciouinefs; and this facility, efpecially in a favage ftate, depends lefs on climate than on the nature of the foil, and its richnefs or porerty in prafturage, in forefts, and in lakes, and confequently in game, filh, and fruits; circumftances which are found indifferently under every parallel.

From thefe reflections it appears, that the nature of the foil has a real influence on activity. We muft perceive, that in the focial as in the favage ftate, a country, in which the means of fubfiftence are fomewhat difficult to be procured, will have more active, and more induftrious indu? rious inhabitants; whe in another where nature has kwinted cvery thing, the people will be indolent and inactive. And this is perfectly conformable to hiRorical fact; for we always find the conquering nations pour, and iffuing from lands either barren, or difficult of cultivation, while the conquered people are inhabitants of fertile and opulent countries. It is even worthy of obfervation, that thefe needy conquerors, eftablifhed among rich nations, thortly lofe their energy, and become efieminate. Such was the cafe with the Perfians, who, under Cyrus, defcended from the Elymais, into the fertile fields watered by the Euphrates; fuch were the Macedonians under Alexander, when tranfplanted from Mount R hodope to the plains of Afia; fuch the Tartars of Djenkis-kan, when fettled in China and Bengal ; and fuch the Arabs fo victorious under Mahomet, after the conqueft of Spain and Egypt. Hence we may affirm, that it is not as inhabitants of hot, but as inhabitants of rich, countries that nations are inclined to indolence ; and this maxim is exactly conformable with what we obferve in fociety in general, fince we fee there is always leaft activity among the more opulent clafles; but as this fä-

Hhad
tiety

4,2 TRAVELSIN
tiety and poverty do not exift for all the individuals of a nation, we muft recur to reafons more general, and more efficacious, than the nature of the foil; I mean the focial inflitutions, called Govemminent and Religion. Thefe are the true fources and regulators of the activity or indolence of individuals, and nations. Thefe are the efficient caufes, which, as they extend or limit the natural or fuperfluous wants, limit or extend the activity of all men. A proof that their influence operates in fpite of the difference of climate and foil, is, that Tyre, Carthage, and Alcxandria, formerly poffeffed the fame induftry as London, Paris, and Amfterdam ; that the Buccaneers, and the Malayans have difplayed equal turbulence and courage with the Normans; and that the Ruffians and Polanders have the apathy and indifference of the Hindoos, and the negroes. But as their nature varies and changes with the pafions of men, their influence changes and varies in very fhort intervals of time. Hence it is, that the Romans, commanded by Scipio, relembled fo little thoie governed by Tiberius; and that the Greeks, of the age of Arifides and Themiftocles, H ere fo unlike thofe of the time of Conftantine. Let us examine what paffes within ourfelves. Do we not experience, that our activity has lefs dependence on phyfical caufes, than the actual circumftances of the fociety of which we are members? Are our defires excited by neceffary or fuperfluous wants, both our bodies and minds are animated with new life; paffion infpires us with an activity ardent as our defires, and perfevering as our hopes. Are thefe hopes difappointed, defire decays, activity languifhes, and difcouragement induces apathy and indolence. This explains why our activity varies with our conditions, our fituations, and the different periods of our life. Why does the man, who was active in his youth, become indolent in his old age? Why is there more activity in capital and commercial cities, than in towns without commerce, and in the country? To awaken activity there muft be objects of defire; and to maintain it, the hope of arriving at enjoyment. If thefe two effentials are wanting, there is an end to individual and national activity. And fuch is the condition of the Orientals in general, and particularly of thofe of whom we are treating. What fhould induce them to move, if no motion procures them the hope of an enjoyment equivalent to the troube they muft ta'su? How can they be otherwife than indient in their mof fimple habits, if their fucial inflututions render it a fort of neceffity?

The molt intelligent obfervict antiquity, after having made the fame remull on the Affatics of his time, has affigned the fume reafon. "As to the effeminacy and now " lence of the Afiatics, (fyss he in a pafaçe " which well deferves to be cited) (a), if " they are lefs warlike, and more gentle in " their manners than the Europeans, no " doubt the nature of their climate, mo:c " temperate than ours, contributes greatly to " this difference. But we mult not forget " the form of, their governments, which are " all defpotic, and fubject to the arbitrary " will of their kings. Men who are not " permitted the enioyment of their natural
" rights, but whofe paffions are perpetually
" under the guidance of their mafters, will "never be found courageous in battle. To 's them the rifiss and advantages of war are
" by no means equal. Obliged to forfake
(a) Hipproiratcs de aüre, lo cis ct aquis.
" their friends, their country, their families;
" to tupport cruel fatigues, and even death " itfelf, what is the recompence of fo many " facrifices? Dangerand death. Thcir mafters " alone enjoy the booty and the fpoils they " have purchafed with their blood. But let " them combat in their own caufe, and reap " the reward of their victory, or feel the " fhame of their defeat, they will no longer " be deficient in courage; and the truth of " this is fufficiently proved by both the "Greeks and Barbarians, who, in thofe " countries, live under their own laws, and " are free; for they are more courageous than " any other race of men."

This is precifely the deffition of the Orientals of our days; and what the Grecian philofopher has faid of fome particular tribes, who refifted the power of the Great king and his Satraps, correfponds exactly with what we have feen of the Druzes, the Maronites, the Curds, the Arabs, Shaik-Daher, and the Bedouins. It muft be admitted, the moral character of nations, like that of individuals, chiefly depends on the focial ftate in which they live; fince it is true, that our acions are governed by our civil and religious laws, and fince our habits are no more than a repetition of thofe actions, and our character only the difpofition to act in fuch a manner, under fuch circumftances, it evidently follows, that every thing depends on government and religion. In all the obfervations I have made, I have never failed to remark the influence of thefe two caufes operating more or lefs immediately. This will become ftill clearer, when confidered more circumftantially.

I have faid that the Orientals, in general, have a grave and phlegmatic exterior, a flayed and almoft liftlefs deportment, and a fetious, nay, even fad and melancholy countenance. Were the climate or the foil the radical caure of this, the effect would be the fame in every individual. But that is not the cafe: Under this general character, there are a thoufand peculiar minute varieties in different claffes and individuals, arifing from their fituation, relative to the influence of government, which differs in its effects on thefe claffes, and thefe individuals. Thus we obferve that the peafants fubject to the Turks are more gloomy than thofe of the tributary countries; that the inhabitants of the country are lefs gay than thole of the towns; and that that thore on the coaft are more cheerful than fuch as dwell at a greater diftance from it ; that in the fame town, the profeffors of the law are more ferious than the military, and thefe again more fo than the people. We may even remark, that, in the great cities, the people have much of that diffipated and carelefs air they ufually have with us; becaufe there, as well as here, inured to fuffering from habit, and devoid of reflection from ignorance, they enjoy a kind of fecurity. Having nothing to lofe, they are in no dread of being plundered. The merchant, on the contrary, lives in a fate of perpetual alarm, under the double apprehenfion of acquiring no more, and lofing what he pofieffes. He trembles left he fhould attract the attention of rapacious authority, which would confider an air of fatisfaction as a proof of opulence, and the fignal for extortion. The fame dread prevails throughout the villages, where each peafant is afraid of exciting the envy of his equals, and the avarice of the Aga and his foldiers. In fuch a country, where the fubject is perpetually watched by a defpoiling government, he muft affume a ferious countenance for the fame reafon that he wears ragged clothes, and makes a public parade of eating cheefe and olives. The fame caufe, though it has a Iefs influence on the lawyers, is not, however, without its effect on them ; but the infolence in which they have been educated, and the pedantry of their manners, render it unncceffary to affign any other.

With refpect to their indolence, it is not furpiiling that the inhabitants of the cities and the country, fatigued with labour, fhould have an inclination to repofe. But it is remarkable, that when thefe people are once in action, they excet themfelves with a vivacity and ardour almof unknown in our climates. This is more particularly obrervable in the fea ports and commercial towiss. An European cannot but admire with what activity the failors, with their naked arms and legs. handle the oars, bend the fails, and perform every mancuvre; with what ardour the porters unload a boat, and carry the hearieft couffes (b). Always finging, and anfivering by couplets to one who directs their labour, they perform all their motions in cadence, and redouble their exertions by mak-

[^8]ing them in time. It has been faid, on this fubject, that the inhabitants of hot countries have a natural propenfity to mufic; but in what confifts its analogy with the climate? Would it not be more rational to fay, that the hot countries we are acquainted with, having made a confiderable progrefs in improvement and knowledge long before our cold climates, the people have retained fome traces of the fine arts which were formerly cultivated among them. Our merchants frequently reproach this people, and efpecially thole of the country, with not labouring fo often, nor fo lone, as they are able. But why fhould they labour beyond their wants, fince the fuperfluity of their induftry would procure them no additional enjoyments? In many refpects, a man of the lower clafs of people refembles the favages; when he hasexpended his ftrength in procuring a fubfiftence, he takes his repofe; it is only by rendering that fubfintence lefs difficult to acquire, and by exciting him with the temptation of prefent enjoyments, that he can be induced to exert an uniform activity; and we have feen, that the Turkifh government is of a directly contrary tendency. As to the fedenta...
fedentary life of the natives, what motive has a man to beftir himfelf in a country where the police has never thought either of laying out walks, or encouraging plantations; where there is no fafety without the towns, nor pleafurc within their precincts; where every thing, in fhort, invites to ftay at home? Is it aftonifhing that fuch political maxims fhould have produced fedentary habits? And muft not there habits, in their turn, become the caufes of inaction?

The comparifon of our civil and domentic ftate, with that of the Orientals, will furnifi ftill further reafons for that phlegm which conftitutes their general character. One of the chief fources of gaiety with us, is the focial intercourfe of the table, and the ufe of wine. The Orientals are almoft ftrangers to this double enjoyment. Good cheer would infallibly expofe them to extortion, and wine to a corporal punifhment, from the zeal of the police in enforcing the precepts of the Koran. It is with great reluctance, that the Mahometans tolerate the Chriftians in the ufe of a liquor they envy them; wine, thercfore, is not habitual or familiar, except in the Kefraouan, and the country of the Druzes:
and their repafts there have a cheerfulnefs which brandy does not procure even in the cities of Aleppo and Damafcus.

A fecond fource of gaiety among us, is the free intercourfe between the two fexes, which prevails more particularly in France. The effect of which is, that even without any particular views, the men endeavour to obtain the good opinion of the women, and ftudy to acquire the manners moft likely to enfure it. Now, fuch is the nature, or fuch the education of the fex, that the firft merit in their eyes is to be able to amufe them; and nothing is fo certain of fucceeding with them, as fprightlinefs and mirth. Hence we have contracted a habit of trifling, politenefs and frivolity, which is become the diftinguifhing character of the French nation in Europe. In Afia, on the contrary, the women are rigoroully fecluded from the fociety of men. Conftantly fhut up in their houfes, they have no communication but with their hufband, their father, their brother, or at moft with their coufin-german. Carefully veiled in the fureets, they dare hardly fpeak to a man, even on bufinefs. Every body muft be ftrangers to them: it would be indecent to fix Voi. II. I i your your eyes on them, and you muft let them pais you, as if they were fomething contagious in their nature. And indeed this is nearly the idea of the Orientals, who entertain a general fentiment of contempt for that fex. It may be afked, what is the caule of this? The lime which operates on every thing; the laws and government. In fact, Mahomet, paffionately fond as he was of women, has not, however, done them the honour of treating them in his Koran as appertaining to the human fpecies; he does not fo much as make mention of them either with refpect to the ceremonies of religion, or the rewards of another life; and it is even a fort of problem with the Mahometans, whether women have fouls. The government is fill more unjuft towards them; for it denies them the poffeftion of any landed property, and fo completely deprives them of every kind of perfonal liberty, as to leave them dependent all their lives on a hufband, a father, or a relation. In this ftate of flavery, having nothing at their dipofal, we cannot fuppofe it very necelfary to folicit their favour, or to adopt that gaiety of manners they find fo captivating. The government and laws are, no doubt, the efficient caufe of this fequeftration of the women ; and, perhaps, were it not for the facility of divorces, and the dread of feeing a wife or daughter carried off by fome powerful man, the Afiatics would be lcis anxious to conceal them from ftrangers.

This fituation of the women among the Orientals, occafions a great contraft between their manners and ours. Such is their delicacy on this head, that they never fpeak of them; and it would be efteemed highly indecent to make any enquiries of the men refpecting the women of their family. We muft be confiderably advanced in familiarity with them, to enter into a converfation on fuch a fubject; and when we then give them fome account of our manners, it is impoffible to exprefs their amazement. They are unable to conceive how our women go with their faces uncovered, when, in their country, an uplifted veil is the mark of a proftitute, or the fignal for a love adventure. They have no idea how it is poffible to fee them, to talk with them, and touch them, without emo tion, or to be alone with them without proceeding to the laft extremities. This aftonifhment will fufficiently thew what opinion they entertain of their females; and we need not hefitate to conclude they are abfolutely ignorant oflove, in our fenfe of the word. That defire on which it is founded, is with them ftripped of all thofe acceffories which conftitute its charm; privation is there without a facrifice, vietory without a combat, and enjoyment without delicacy; they pafs at once from torment to fatiety. Lovers there are prifoners, always watching to deceive their keepers, and always alert to feize the firft opportunity, becaufe it feldom happens, and is foon loft. Secret as confpirators, they conceal their good fortune as a crime, becaufe it is attended with no lefs fatal confequences. Indifcretion can fcarcely avoid the poinard, the piftol, or poifon. Its deftructive confequences to the women render them implacable in punifhing, and, to revenge themfelves, they are frequently more cruel than their hufbands and their brothers. This feverity preferves a confiderable degree of chaftity and decorum in the country; but in the great towns, where there are more refources for intrigue, as much debauchery prevails as among us; only with this difference, that it is more concealed. Alcppo, Damafcus, and above all, Cairo, are not fecond

EGYPT AND SYRIA.

fecond in this refpect to our provincial capitals. Young girls are referved there as every where elfe, becaufe the difcovery of a love adventure would coft them their lives; but married women give themfelves up to pleafure with the more freedom, to indemnify themfelves for the long and ftrict reftraint they have endured, and becaufe they have often juft reafons for revenging themfelves on their mafters. In fact, from the practice of polygamy permitted by the Koran, the Turks, in general, are enervated very early, and nothing is more common than to hear men of thirty complaining of impotence. This is the malady for which they chiefly confult the Europeans, defiring them to give them Madjoun, by which they mean provocatives. This infirmity is the more mortifying to them, as ferility is a reproach among the Orientals: they fill retain for fecundity all the efteem of ancient times; and the beft wifh you can make a young girl, is that fhe may foon get a hufband, and have a great number of children. From this prejudice they haften their marriages fo much, that it is not rare to fee girls of nine or ten years old married to boys of twelve or thirteer. It muft however be confeffed, that the apprehenfions of libertinifin, and the feverity with which that is punifhed by the Turkifh police, greatly contribute to thefe premature unions, which muft likewife be reckoned among the caufes of their early impotence. The ignorance of the Turks will not fuffer itfelf to be perfuaded on this head, and they are fo irrational as to force nature, at the very time their health is impaired by excefs. This alfo is to be afcribed to the Koran, in which the amorous prophet has taken care to infert a precept inculcating this fpecies of daty. Montefquieu, therefore, is in the right, to affign polygamy as one of the caufes of depopulation in Turkey; but it is one of the leaft confiderable, as there are few but the rich who allow themfelves a plurality of women; the common people, and efpecially thofe of the country, content themfelves with one; and perfons are fometimes to be met with, even among the higher ranks, who are wife enough to imitate their example, and confefs that one wife is quite fufficient.

$$
\text { I i }_{3} \text { narried }
$$

What we are able to learn of the domefic life of the hufbands who have feveral wives, is neither calculated to make their lot envied, nor to give a high idea of this part of Mahomet's legiflation. Their houfe is a perpetual fcene of tumult and contention. Nothing is to be heard but quarrels between the different wives, and complaints made to the hufband. The four legal married women complain that their flaves are preferred to them, and the flaves, that they are abandoned to the jealoufy of their miftreffes. If one wife obtains a trinket, a token of favour, or permiffion to go to the bath, all the others require the fame, and league together in the common caufe. To reftore peace, the polygamift is obliged to affume the tone of a defpot, and from that moment he meets with nothing but the fentiments of flaves, the appearance of fondnefs and real hatred. In vain does each of thefe women proteft the loves him more than the reft ; in vain do they fly, on his entering the apartments, to prefent him his pipe and his flippers, to prepare his dinner, to ferve him his coffee; in vain, whilf he is effeminately fretched out upon his carpet, do they chace away the flies

$$
\text { I i } 4 \quad \text { which }
$$

which incommode him; all thefe attentions and carefles have no other object than to procure an addition to their trinkets and moveables, that if he fhould repudiate them, they may be able to tempt another hufband, or find a refource in what becomes their only property. They are merely courtezans, who think of nothing but to ftrip their lover before he quits them; and this lover, long fince deprived of defires, teized by feigned fondnefs, and tormented with all the liftlefsnefs of fatiety, is far from enjoying, as we may well imagine, an enviable fituation. The contempt the Turks entertain for their women, arifes from this concurrence of circumftances, and it is evidently the effect of their own cuftoms. For how fhould the women retain that exclufive love, which renders them moft eftimable, when fo many fhare in the affections of their huband? How fhould they poficfs that modefty which conftitutes their greaten virtue, when the mont fhocking feenes of debauchery are daily before their eyes? How, in a word, fhould they be endowed with the manners requifite to make them amiable, when no care whatever is taken of their education? The Crreeks at leaft derive this advantage from religion, that, being permitted to take but one wife at a time, they enjoy more domeftic peace, though perhaps without approaching nearer to real happinefs.

It is remarkable, that in confequence of the difference in religion, there exifts between the Chriftians and Mahometans of Syria, and indeed of all Turkey, as marked a difference of character as if they were two diftinct nations, living under different climates. Travellers, and our merchants, who on account of the habits of intimacy in which they live with both, are ftill better qualified to decide, agree that the Greek Chriftians are in general wicked and deceitful, abject in adverfity, infolent in profperity, and efpecially remarkable for levity and ficklenefs: the Mahometans, on the contrary, though haughty even to infolence, poffels however a fort of goodnefs of lieart, humanity, and juftice; and above all, never fail to manifert great fortitude under misfortune, and much firmnefs of character. This contraft between men, living under the fame fky, may appear furprifing; but the prejudices of their education, and the influence of the government under which they live, fufficiently account for it. The Grecks, treated by the Turks with all the haughtineis and contempt they fhew to their flaves, cannot but at laft affume the character perpetually afcribed to them: they have been obliged to practire deceit, to efcape from violence by cunning, and they have recourfe to the meaneft flatteries, becaufe the weak muft ever court the ftrong; they are diffemblers and mifchievous, becaufe he who cannot openly revenge himfelf, difguifes his hatred; cowardly and treacherous, fince he who cannot attack in front, naturally ftrikes behind; and infolent in profperity, becaufe they who attain wealth or power unworthily, are eager to revenge themfelves by returning all the contempt they have reccived in the purfuit. I was one day obferving to a very fenfible monk, that among all the Chriftians, who in more modern times have been advanced to eminent fations in this country, not one of them has hewn himfelf worthy of his good fortune. Ibrahim was meanly avaricious; cioue; Sad-el-Kouri irrefolute and pufillanimous, his fon Randour, ignorant and infolent, and Rezk, cowardly and deceitful: his anfwer was, word for word, as follows: "The Chriftians have not bands proper " to manage the reins of government, be" caufe, during their youth they have been " continually employed in beating cottoin. " They refemble thofe who walk for the firf " time on high terraces, they grow giddy at " feeing themfelves fo exalted, and as they " are afraid they fall be forced to return to " their olives and cheefe, they are in hafte " to make all the profits they can. The "Turks on the contrary, are accuftomed to " govern; they are mafters habituated to " their authority, and ufe it as if there was " no fear of their being deprived of it." We muft not forget, at the fame time, that the Mahometans have the prejudices of fatalifm inftilled into them from their birth, and have a full perfuafion that every thing is predertined. Hence they experience a fecurity which moderates both defire and fear, and a refignation by which they are equally prepared for good and evil; they are habituated in a kind of apathy, which equally prevents them from regretting the paft or providing againft the future. Does the Mahometan fuffer by any misfortune? Is he plundered? Is he ruined? he calmly fays, " It was writ" ten," and fubmits, without a murmur, to the moft unexpected tranfition from opulence to poverty: Even on the bed of death, nothing difturbs the tranquillity of his refignation, he makes his ablution, repeats his prayers, profeffes his belief in God, and the prophet ; he tranquilly fays to his fon; "turn " my head towards Mecca," and dies in peace. The Greeks, on the contrary, who believe that God may be prevailed on to change his purpofe, by vows, farting, prayer, and pilgrimages, live in the perpetual defire of obtaining fome new bleffing, the fear of lofing fome good they already pofiefs, or tormented by regret for fome duty omitted. Their hearts are a prey to every contending praffion, nor do they avoid their deftruative effects; but fo far as the circumftances in which they live, and the example of the Mahometans enfeeble the prejudices of their childhood. We may add a remark equally true of both religions, that the inhabitants of the inland cuuntry have more integrity, fimplicity, and generofity, and are in every refpect of more amiable manners than thofe upon the fea-coaft, no doubt becaufe the latter, continually engaged in commerce, have contracted, by their mode of life, a mercantile fpirit, naturally inimical to all thofe virtues which are founded on moderation and difintereftednefs.

After what I have faid of the manners of the Orientals, we fhall be no longer aftonifhcd that their whole character partakes of the monotony of their private life, and of the ftate of fociety in which they live. Even in the cities where we fee moft activity, as Aleppo, Damafcus, and Cairo, all their amufements confift in going to the bath, or meeting together in coffece-houfes, which only refemble ours in name. There, in a large room, filled with fmoak, feated on ragged mats, the wealthier clafs of people pafs whole days in fmoaking their pipes, talking of bufinefs, in concife phrafes, uttered at long intervals, and frequently in faying nothing. Sometimes the dullnefs of this filent affembly anembly is relieved by the entrance of a finger, fome dancing girls, or one of thofe ftory tellers they call Nafloid, who, to obtain a few Paras, relates a tale, or recites verfes from fome ancient poet. Nothing can equal the attention with which they liften to this orator; people of all ranks have a very extratordinary paffion for this fpecies of amufement. A European traveller is not a little furprized to fee the Turkifh failors, when the weather is calm, affemble on the deck, and attentively liften for two or three hours together, to a declamation, which the moft unexperienced ear mult at once perceive to be poetry, from the exactnefs of the meafure and the continually recurring rhymes. It is not in this alone that the common people of the eaft excel ours in delicacy. The populace even in the great cities, notwithftanding the turbulence of their difpofitions, are never fo brutal as we frequently fee them with us, and they have the great merit of not being addicted to drunkennefs, a vice from which even our country peafants are not free. Perhaps this is the only real advantage produced by the legifation of Mahomet: unlefs we may add the prohibition of games of chance, for which the Orientals have therefore no tafte; chefs is the only amufement of this kind they hold in any eftimation, and we frequently find among them very fkilful players.

Of all the different fpecies of public exhibitions, the only one they know, and, which is common at Cairo alone, is that of ftrollers, who fhew feats of ftrength like our rope-dancers, and tricks of flight of hand like our jugglers. We there lee fome of them eating flints, others breathing flames, fome cutting their arms or perforating their nofes, without receiving any hurt, and others devouring ferpents. The people, from whom they carefully conceal the fecrets of their art, entertain a fort of veneration for them, and call thefe extraordinary performances, which appear to have been very ancient in thefe countres, by a name which fignifies prodigy or miracle. This propenfity to admiration, and facility of believing the moft extraordinary facts or tales, is a remarkable feature in the character of the Orientals. They admit, without hefitation or the leaft fhadow of doubt, the moft wonderful things that can be told them, and if we regard the tales current among them, as many prodigies happen every day as have been afcribed to the age of the Genii and Fairies; the reafon of which no doubt is, that being totally ignorant of the ordinary courfe of phyfical and moral caufes, they know not the limits of probability and impoffibility. Befides, having been accuftomed from their earlieft youth to believe the extravagant fables of the Koran, they are wholly deftitute of any ftandard of analogy, by which to diftinguifs truth from fa' fehood. Their credulity therefore arifes from their ignorance, the imperfection of their education, and the nature of the government. To this credulity the extravagance of imagination which fome have fo much admired in their romances, is in a great meafure to be attributed ; but though they were deprived of this fource, their works would ftill pofeefs many brilliant ormaments. In general, the Orientals are remarkable for a clear conception, an eafy expreffion, a propriety of language in the things they are acquainted with, and a paffionate and nervous ftile.

They have particularly a tafte for moral fentences, and their proverbs fhew they know how to unite the juftiefs of obfervation, and profundity of the thought to an ingenuity and force of expeffion. Their converfation appears at firf to have a fort of coldnefs, but when we are more accurtomed to it, we find ourfelves greatly attached to them. Such is the good opinion with which thofe who have had mof commanication with them have been imprefied, that the greater part of our travellers and merchants, who have known them beft, allow that they find in them a people of a more humane and generous character, and poffefling more fimplicity, and more refined and open manners, than even the inhabitants of European countries, as if the Afiatics, having been polifned long before us, fill preferved the traces of their early improvement.

But it is time to terminate thefe refiexions; I fhall only add one more, which is perfonal to myfelf. After having lived near three years in Egypt and Syria; after having been habituated to fpectacles of barbarifm and devaftation; on my return to France, the fight of my own country had almoft the fame Vol. II. Kk effect effect on me as that of a foreign land; I could not avoid feeling a kind of furprize, when, traverfing our provinces from the Mediterranean to the ocean, inftead of thofe ruined countries and vaft deferts to which I had been accuftomed, I faw myfelf tranfported as it were into an immenfe garden, where cultivated fields, populous towns, and country feats continually fucceeded each other during a journey of twenty days. When I compared our elegant and folid buildings, to the brick and mud-walled cottages I had left behind me, the opulence and induftry of our cities to the ruinous and defolate condition of the Turkifh towns, the plenty, peace, and power of this kingdom, to the poverty, anarchy, and feeblenefs of the empire of the Turks; to admiration fucceeded pity, and to pity philofophical meditation. "Whence," faid I to myfelf, " fo ftriking a contraft " between countries fo much alike? Why fo " mroch life and activity here, and there fo " muchindolence and neglect? Why fo great " a difference between men of the fame "fpecies?" Then, remembering that the countrics I had feen fo defolate and barbarous, were once flourithing and populous, a fecond reffection fucceeded almoft involuntarily. "If " formerly," faid I, " the fates of Afia en" joyed this fplendor, who can affure us that " thafe of Europe will not one day expe"rience the fame reverfe?" This thought appeared to me diftreffing, yet perhaps it may be ufeful. For let us fuppofe that at the time when Egypt and Syria were at the fummit of their glory, fome one had delineated to the people and governments of thofe countries, their prefent deplorable frate; let us fuppore he had faid to them, "Such is the " humiliating decline which muft be the " confequence of fuch and fuch political "errors: thus flall injudicious laws deprive " you of all your wealth and all your power." Is it not probable that thefe governments would have taken care to avoid thofe fatal miftakes, which murt conduct them to fuch entire deftruction? What they have not done, it is in our power to do: their example may be a leffon to us. The great utility of hiftory is, that by reviving the memory of part events, it enables the prefent time to anticipate the coftly fruits of experience. Travels, in this fenfe, are no lefs ufeful, and have this advantage; that as they treat of prefent objects, the obferver obferver is better able than the pofthumons hiflorian, to difcover the relations and canfes of facts, and to cxplain the whole working, however complicated, of the political machine. By exhibiting together with the prefent fate of a countiy, the mature of the Gubfifting government, the narrative of the traveller may develope the caufes of its greatnefs and decline, and furnifh us with means to determine the actual duration of the empire. Seen under this point of view, Turkey is a country more efpecially inftrutive. The account I have given of it, fhews how the abufe of authority, by caufing the mifery of individuals, becomes cventually defructive to the power of a fate; and what we may fafely venture to predict, will foon prove, that the ruin of a nation fooner or later recoils on thofe who have been the caufe of it, and that the errors or crimes of thofe who govern cannot fail of their punifhment, even from the very mifery and wretchediefs of thofe whom they have governed.

THE E ND.

$1 \mathrm{~N} \quad \mathrm{D}$ E X.

A.

ABdallah el Satadji, hiftory of, II. 258. Behaviour to a Eunuch fent to the Porte for his head, II. 259. Vifit paid by him to A fad, II. 252. Juftice and good adminiftration of, II. 264 Murdered by his Nephew, II. 266

Abdallah Saker, contrives and eflablifhes a printingprefs at Mar-Hanna, II. 192
Abdi Pacha, treafures amaffed by, II. 142
Abou-kelb, (a kind of requin) value of, I. 423
Aboudahab, furname given to Mohammad Bey, I. 125
Acorns eaten by the peafants in Syria, II. 412
Aco, fee Acre.
Acre, (Pachalic of its limits, different at different times, II. 179. Prefent boundarics of, II. 180. Productions and trade of, ibid. Revenues and tribute of the Pacha, II. I81. Forces of the Pacha, II. 183.
(City of) II. 225. Harbour of, II. 226. 228. Commerce of, II. 227
Adjeroud, I. 214. Not the ancient Arfinoe, ibid.
Adlia, who, Il. 85
Adonis, (river) fee Ibrahim. VOL. II

Aentab, village of, II. 163
Agent of the Holy Land, power and dignity of, II. 319
Agriculture, fate of in Syria, II. 413

Ahmad Djezzar, fee Djezzar.
Air, drying quality of in Egypt, I. 70
Akka, fee Acre.
Ailah, (Eloth) II. 345.
Aleppo (Pachalic of) limits, foil, and produce of, II. 139. Revenue of the Pacha of, II, I40. Forces of the Pacha, II. 142. Ancient and prefent population of the Pachalic of, II. 147

- City of defcribed, II. 147. Strength of, II. 149. Trade of, II. 150. Populoufnefs of, II. 151. Air and climate of, II. 152
Alexandria, prefent flate of, I. 6

Alexandretta, II. 157. Inconveniences of the road of, ibid. Extreme unwholefomenefs of, II. 158, 161
Aldea, etymology of the Spanifh word, II. 300
Ali, origin of the feat of, II. 34
Ali Bey, birth and education of, I. 114. Promoted to the rank of Cachef, I. 118. Is cxiled, I. 119. Recalled, ibid. Rebels againft L 1 the

I N D E X.

the Porte, I. 1zo. Pro. jeets to transfer the India trade to the port of Djedda, I. 121. Forms ail alliance with Shaik Deher, I. 123. Thikes Damafcus, I. 127. Sudden retreat of Mohammad Bey, I. 128. Refolves the ruin of Mohammad Bey who cfeapes from Cairo, 1 . 131. Obliged to take refuge with Daher, I. 133. Sets out toreturn to Cairo, I. 135 . Is defeated and taken prifoner, I. 136. His death, I. 137. Reflections on his condrest and cha-acter, ibid. Remarks on the accountgivenof him by M. Savary, and the Hiftory of the Revolt of Ali Pey, I. 1r.t. Anecdote of him and a janifary, I. 142 Ali D:her, fon of Shaik 1)aher, caturace and abil ties of, IF. 103. Attacks and defeatsorman Pacha, ibid. Treacheronfly murdered, II. 136

Alma, account of the, II. 441
Amediens, who, II. 102
Americans and itrabs compaiced, II. 409
Anfarians, origin of, II. I. Superlition of, 11.5. Tribute paid by, II. 169
Ant:.ri, what, 1.109
Antiuch, prefent thate of, II. 154
$\underline{\text { (lake of) I. } 3 \text { Io }}$
Antoura, 1.317.11.32.11.177
Apamea, fee Fomia.
Arab, fiquification of the word, I. 3 39
Arabiclangu:ge, remarkson, 1. 3 (14

Arabs of Egypt, I. 75

- African, I. 76
———Bedouins of Egypt, I. 76

Bedouins of Syria, I.
377. Manners. of, II. +11

Armathea, fee Ramla.
Aradus, fee Rouad.
Armies, Turkith, confufion and irregularity of, 1. 124, 125
Arinoe, (antient) where fituated, 1.213
Arts, ftate of, in Egypt, I. 204
———in Syria, II. $43^{2}$
Afad, Pacha of Damaicus, hittory of, II. 253. IIIs method of raifing money II. 254. Deprived of his goverament by intrigues, II. 256

Aflafins, who, II. 4
Aghaltites, (iake) I. 310
Athiourn Geber, (Efion Geber) I1. $3+5$
Axios, River) derivation of the name, II. 155 Ayoun Bicy, treachery of to Niohammad Hey, I. ${ }_{3} 2$
Azotus, fec izzioud.

B.

Bahouches, (irice of the) mizaning of inai exprefion, 11.140

Bahr-belama, 1. 32
Bait-djibrim, II. 337
Bailan, village of, 11. : 6 I Bairout, 11. 185. Tiade of, II. 186. Port of, itid.

Bait-cl-laham, (Bethlehem) prefent thate of, 11. $j_{2} 2$ Batbec, ruins of, deferibed, II. 232 Changes that have taxen place ince they were

I $\mathrm{N} \quad \mathrm{D} \quad \mathrm{E} \quad \mathrm{X}$.

w te vifited by Wood and Datwkins, 11.239. Preient fate of the city of, 11 . 247 3iain of Judea, II. 322
barr-el-Sham, the name given to Syria by the Arabs, 1. 2.58

Barrada, (river) IT. 271
Barataire, what, il. 45 . Note 11. 427

Duterians, IT. 5
Beard and Mutachios, the want of, rifatacefulamong the Turks, 1. 118
Bea ty, Turkifh idens of, I. 108. Of the lecorgiaia women, ibid.
Bedouins of Errypt, I. $7^{6}$ of Syria, I. 377. Perfons of, I. 391 . Manners cf, I. 380, 39t. Surpitize of fome at light of the fea, I. 391. Extrantdinary abofinence of, 1.39 .3 Caufes and manner of thcir making war, I. 39.4. Curten: of retaliation in cafe of blood, I. 305. Their depradations on the pea. fants, 1. 399. Government of $1 .+\mathrm{for}$. Arts and learning of, I. 405. Hofpitality and generolity of, 1. 412 . Religion of, I. 414. Anecdotes of the ignorance of, II. 342

Behairat ei Mardj, II. $=7$ : Bekaa, valley of, II. 2 §z
lieniche, I. 169
Berket el LIadj, I. 213
Berytus, fe Baircut.
liefle rrai, village of, II. 176
Betha Gabris, II. 337
Bethlehem, II. ;22

Deys of Ligypt, ofice and power of, 1. 105
Brds, fingular amufement they afford at Aleppo, 11. $15+$
Blindnefs extremely common at Grand Cairo, I. 240. caufes of, I. 241 Books in an unknown languarse, found near Damietta, 1. 284
Bourres, what, II. 1 jo
Bread and Sali, facres cngagement of, 11. -6
Brioge over the river ibrahim, II. 175.

Byblos, fee Djebail.

C

Cadi cl afkar, office of, II. 388
Cairo, (Grand) defcribed, I. 233
Caimacan, who, I. 198
Camel defcribed, I. 388. Great utility of that animal in the deters, ibid, 11.419
Camps of the Dedouin Arabs defcribed, I. 397
Canal, (ancient) of Sucz, I. 212
Caracoulonk, who, I. 162
Caravan of M. cca, account of, II, 273. Trade carried on by, II. 274. Pillacedin 1767,11. 103. 257
Corduchi, (antint) the modern Curds, I. 373
Carmel, mount, 11. 208
Carts, valley of, I. 14
Cafius Monnt, I. 292
Caufes, manner of trying in Turkey, iI. ${ }^{38} 9$
Cedars of Lebanon, I. 292. II. 177 112

Cnalyber,

I N D E X.

Chalybon, (antient) the fame with Aleppo, II. 147
Cheops, founder of the great pyramid, I. 280
Chritians, how treated by the 'I'urks in Syria, II. 399. Unfit to govern in Turkey, 15.449. Compared with the Mahometans, Il. 448
Climate of Egypt, 1. 67

- (of Syria) I. 3 3. Varicties of, I. 314
-- (influence of) re-
- marks on, I. 194. II. 461

Clutids, obfervations on, I. 343
Clyfmn, of the Grecks where fituated, I. $21 \hat{3}$
Coele Syria, the prefent Valley of Bekat, 11. 23z Coffice, duties on, I. 220
Coftan, what, f. log Coins, Turkifl, account of, II. $4=2$.

Commerce, fatc of, in Eigypt, 206 ——— of the Enctinn with Cairo, I. 225 worn of the Hench in Egypt, I. 228

-     - of the French in Syria, II. 428
Conduits, what, II. 318
Copts, I. 78. Etymolugy of the name, I. 79.
Curn, exportation of, prohibited in Egypt, I. 220. Remarked by Pococke to be detrimental to agriculture, ibid.
Couffe, what, II. 478
Credulity of the Turks, II. 495
Cubit (Egyptian) length of, 1. $3^{8}$

Curds, manners of the, 2.372 . language of, 1. 376

Cuftoms, (Head conmiffioner of in Egjpt) price of his contract, I. 222
Cultom-houfes and impoits in Egypt, I. 222
D.

Dahab, (a coin) II. 423
Daher Shaik, fummary of the hiftory of, II. 107. Said to have been originally a camel driver, ibid. Seizes on Acre, I. 1:0. Titlesar. fumed by, I. 112. Defeats Ormanl’acha of Damaícus, I. :c9. Joins Ali Bey, 1. 116. Takes Yafa, I. 120. Death and character of, I. 131
Dair el Kamar, town of, II. 189
Dair Mokialies, convent of, II. 207

Damaicus(Pachalic of) limits and produce of, II. 249. Revenues of the Pacha of, II. 250. Tribute of, II. 251. Privi'eges of the Pacha of as Emir Madj, II. 2j0. Forcesaf, II. 252

- (City of) delightful fituation of, 11.2(19. Di. menfions and populoufuefs of, II. 271 . Charafer of the inhabitanis of, 11.272 . Commerce of, II. $2-6$
-     - called Ei Sham by the Arabs, I. 23 S. Mittake of M. Savary concerningits name, ibid.
Damnur, (Rivulct of) the anticat 'Tamyrus, 11.1 (.)
Diemoniacs, flill found in Syria, 11. 30
Dances, Turkifh, II. 440
Daoula, who, II. $1+4$ Darouif.

I $\mathrm{N} \quad \mathrm{D} \quad \mathrm{E}$ X.

Darouifh, Pacha of Damafcus, anecdote of, II. 266
Dea, what, II. 303
Dead Sea, I. 310
Debs, what, II. $3^{85}$
Deftar, what, II. 147
Deftardar, who, II. $25{ }^{1}$
Degnizla, I. 134. II. 128.136
Deleti, who, II. 144
Delibafhes, who, II. 144
Delta, enlargement of the, I. 21. 46. Rife of the, I. 35, 46. Mitake of M. Savary concerning the inundation there, I. $4^{2}$
Derhem, what, II. 42 =
Dervifes, facred dance of, II. 440
Deferts of Arabia and Syria, caufes of their fterility, 1 . 385. Defcription of, $38 j$

Diofpolis, fee Loudd.
D) ifeales of Egypt, I. 240

Djahel, fignification of the word, II. 59
Djazzel Raz, meaning of the words, II. 399
Djebail, the antient Byblos, 11. 176

Djeb:1a, II. 175
Djebel el Shaik, II. 231
Djebel Mokattab, opinion of WortleyMontague concerning the infcriptions and figures found there, II. 352. Their meaning miftaken by Courde Cicbelin, ibid.
Djendis, fignification of the word, 11. 73
Djerda, what, II. 341

1) jerm, what, 1. 209

Ljezzar, hifory and adventures of, 11. 53. Signification of the word, 1I. 54. Becomes Pacha of Saide, 11. 57. and of Damaicus, II. 58. Great power acquired by him in Syria, II. 184. Said to be fled with his treafures into Bofnia, ibid. Note, character of, II. 267

Djirandel, vale of, II. $34^{8}$
Djouba, I. 109
Djourd, a dintiat of the Drufes, II, $19^{\circ}$ Dogs, numerous at Grand Cairo, I. 239. Never known to go mad in Egypt or Syria, ibid. Without owners, II. 386
Doura, what, I. 318
Drogman, derivation of the word, 11. 427
Drufes, origin and hiffory of, II. 93. Account of their celebrated Emir Fakr el din, II.41. Abfurdity of fuppoling them frung from the Crufaders, II. 43. True eiymology of their name, 1I. 44. Keligion of, II. 59. Government of, II. 53. Tribute paid by them to the Turks, II. 66. Manner of declaring war, II. 69. Population and pro:duce of the country of, II. 72. Manners and character of, II. 74. 8 I E.

Earihquakes, frequent in Syria, I. 304. Deftruction caufed by one in 1759 , ibid.
Echelles, derivation of the worì, II. 392
Eden, village of, II. 176
Ligypt, general appearance of, I. 10. Nature of the foil of, I. 13, Ancient line of the finore of, accordL 13

I N D E X.

ing to Herodotus, T. 28. Winds of, I. 55. Clim.ate and ar of, I. 64. Various inhabitants of, I. 73. Afpect of, 1.259. Ditcoverics which inght be made if it were under another government, 1. 284
Egyptians, character of, T. 202
El Aafi, (the Orontes) fignificat on of the name, 11. 155
El Adm, a family of Damafcus long in the poffeffion of the Pachalic, II. 253
El Akaba, II. 345
El Arith, II. 343
El-baloua, gululi of, defcribed, I. 198
Elias, chapel of the prophet on Monnt Carmel, H. 228
Elifha, the ancient name of the Archipelago, II. 222
E1 M..jdal, II. $33^{8}$
ElSham, fee Damafcus.
El Sharia, fee Jordan.
E. 1 Tell, II. $33^{\circ}$

El'Tor, II. 340
Emefa, fee Homs.
Emir, fignification of the word, 1. 400
-powei of, among the liedouin Arabs, 1. 400.402
Emer Hadje, what, II. 250. Great privileges of, ibid.
Engaddi, Grottoes of, 1. 293
Engelifin, trade of the, to Cairu, I: 225
Enfyrians, fee Anfarians.
Ermenaz, i. 301
Eftan, meaning of, I. 90
Ezdoad, (the ancient Azotus) If. $33^{8}$

| F. | Hahroun, II. 324 |
| :--- | :--- |
| Fah, what, II. $44^{5}$ | Hadje, whai, 11. 25 n |

Hadje, whisi, 11. $25^{n}$
ITail,

I $N$ D X .

Fail, form of in Egypt, I. Hittory of the revole of Ali 353
Frakem, or chiof of the Danzes, power and authority of, II. $\sigma_{4}$ Hakem b'amr ellah, I. 100. Account offroin El Makin, 1I. 36
Hilaio, Arabic name of the city of Aleppo, II. 147
Hama, II. 9. Water works there, II. 297
Mammın, an Arah Shaik, forms an independent power, I. 121. Deftroyed by: Ali Bey, ibid.
Mainza ben Ahmud propagates the doatrines of the impofer Hakem b'amrcllah, IT. $3^{3}$ Halb:ya, diltrit of, II. 231
liafin bey unites with other Beys, againft Morad and 1brahim, I. 153
Hafan Pacha dcfeats Shaik Dahre, and fends his head to Conitantinopie, II, 131
Haflafin, fignification of the worn, 11.4
IIchron, II. $3^{2} 4$
Hedjina, a kind of camel, II. 350. Great fwiftnefs of, ibid.
Hendia, (a Maronite girl) hittory of, II. 23
Hefi, II. 337
Hicrapolis, fee Mambedj.
Hillocks, remarkable insytia, II. 164

Hippocrates, quotation from concerning the indolence and effeninacy of the iffatics, II. 474
Kories, the Mamlouks only permitted to ride tiom in Egypt, I. 168

Bey, rewarks on, I. 1100
Hons, (the ancient Emefia). II. 296

Hofie in Pacha, why promoted to be Pacha of Damafcus, II. 2j6. Profcribed, I1. 258
Hunming bird found in Syria, İ. $32 z$

I.

Jackalls, numerous in Syria, I. 321 II. 386

Janifary, gencrofity of one to Ali Bey, I. 142
Janifaries in Syria, account, of, II, 143. Arms and drel's of, II. 144
Ibrahim, Kiaya of the Janiffaries, great power acquiredby, I. 112 Ibrahim Bey, I. 165.
ibrahim fon of Solomon, remarkable anecdote of, II. 78
Ibrahim Sabbar, miniter of Daher, avarice and meanncfs of, II. 124. 133. Vait fortune anaffed by II. 134. death of II. I 35
Ibrahim, (river) the ancient Adonis II. 175
Jericho II. 321
Jerufalem, prefent fate of, II. 302. Epithets givea it by the Orientals, If. 30+. Profits made by the governor from the pilgrimages and holy places, If. 305
Ignorance of the Orientals, caures of, II. 448
Impotence common in Tur. key, II. 48 s $\mathrm{L}_{4}$ John

I N D E X.

Imprifonment for debt unknown in Turkey, II. 408 Inhabitants, various, of Egypt, I. 73

$$
\text { I. } 356.366
$$

Inns, Turkifh, defcribed, II. 420
Intereft, cuftomary rate of, in Syria and Eigypt, II. 254
Inundation in Egypt, various heights of explained, I. 36. Seafon of, 1. 52. Cautes of, I. 53
John the Maronite, account of, II. 10
Jordan, (River) I. 309. II. 300
Iron forges of Syria, II. 438
Iflota, (a coin) II. 423
Ifmael Bey leagues himfelf with other Beys, againft Morad and Ibrahim, I. 153
Ithmus of Suez, whether practicable to cut through 1t, I. 210
Juftice, adminiftration of in Turkey, II. 388, 390
Jufticiarians, jrinciples of the, II. 85

K.

Kabila, fignification of the word, I. 401
Kadmoutia, (a feat of theinfaria:ss) fingular fuperliitions of, II. 5 .
Kaifi, party, what, II. 50
Kakan, meaning of the word, I1. 423
Kali, I. 9
Kalidj, 1. 9
Kalkafundas, account of the alteration of the Mekias, trom, I. 39. His micaring miftaken by Pococke, $Y$. 40
Kamfin, or hot wind, I. 60
Kan, what, II. 420
Kan-younes, II. $3+3$
Kandjar, what, I, 141
Kan Shaikoun, II. 165
Karadj, what, I. 237.1I.399.
Oppreffive manner of levying, 11.410
Kata, (a coin) II. 423
Katas, what, II. 190
Katim, ancient name of the Ifle of Cyprus, II. 222
Kat fherif, what, II. 107
Kelbea, (a fect of the Anfarians) II. 5
Kera el dars, what, II. - 40 g
Kerfh afadi, (a coin) II. 423
Keryan Serai, what, II. 420
Keftaouan, origin of the name of, II. 12. Boundaries of the country of, II. 176
Kiaya, what, II. 27
Kior Pacha, c:uelty of, IT. 9.

Kles, village of, II. 163
Kolzoumi, I. 213
Koran, the code of legiffation in Turkey, II. $3^{89}$. Spirit and tendency of, 11. 393.
Precepts of, II. 396. Number of commentaries on the firft verfe, $11.44^{6}$ Kourket, a monaffery of the Maronites, hiftory of the ${ }_{3}$ II. 24 hoz-haia, II. ${ }^{\circ} \mathrm{O}$ Lengaage of Egypt, remarks on, I. 83

- Dificult of exprefing the founcis of aforeign one",

$$
\text { I. } 85
$$

—— of Syrin, I. $3^{6}=$ Language

I $\mathrm{N} \quad \mathrm{D}$ E X.

Languages Spoken in the Ruffian empire. Dr. Pallas ordered by the Emprefs to make a chection of them, I. 376

Laodicca, fee Latak:a.
Latakia, (the ancient Laodicea) II. 174. Harbours of, ibid. Trade of, ibid.
Lawend, who, II. 144. 409
Learning of the Turks, II. $44^{2}$
Lebanon, mount, I. 293. Height of, I. 294. Compared with the Alps and Pyrenees, I. 295. Cedars of, I. 292. Wines of, II. 20.4

Legend of the Turkifh coin, II. 423

Ieventi, whn, II. 144
Library of Mar Hanna, catalogue of, II. 200
——of Djezzar, II. 200
Libraries in Syria, II. 448
Locults, prodigious numbers of, I. 315 . Their dreadful devaftation, ibid,
Loudd, II. 332
Lydda, fee Loudd.
M.

Madjoun, fignification of the word, II. $4^{8} 5$
Magarbe orMograb:ans,who, I. 75 . II. 145

Mahkama, what, II. 389
Mahometane, external devnticn of, II. 400
Mah metanifin, remarks on, II. 393

Mahamed ben Ifmael, a pretended prophet joins the impoiner Haitem b'amr cllah, II. 37
Majuma, if the ancients, what, II. 1;0

Manbedj, the ancient Hierapolis, II. 164. Aqueduct of, ibid.
Mamlouks, origin of, I. 96. 102. Derivation of the name, I. 103. Military conftitution of, I. $165^{\circ}$ Drefs, I, 168. Horfe accoutrements, I.171. Arms, J. 174. Education and exercifes, I. 175. Military ikill, I. 17 8. Difcipline, I. 181. Manners, I. 184. Government, I. 186
Manfour, Emir of theDruzes, II. 49

Marine, (la) village of,II. 1 - 0
Marra, II. 297
Mardaites, who, II. 11
Mar Elias el Ruum, I. 298
Mares, high prices paid for by Shaik Daher, II. 132. Ufefulnefs and valuc of to the Bed uin Arabs, I. 406 Strange affertion that they do not neigh, ibid.
Mar Hanna el Shouar, (Convent of) II. 190. Account of the Arabic printingprefs there, II. 191. 454. Catalogue of the library of, II. 204
-Mrnks of, rules and life of, II. 203
Maronites, origun and hiftory of, II. 8. G vernment of. If. 15. Manners and cuft.ms of, II. 17. Religi n of, II. 20. Manners u:f the clergy, II. 22. Rules of their m.nks, II. 29. Tribute paid by, II. 169
Mar un, the hermit, 11. 9
Martawan, village of, II. 16z. Sngular licentious cuit ms of the inhabitants of, ib:d.

Marvellous,

I $\mathrm{N} \quad \mathrm{D} \quad \mathrm{E} \quad \mathrm{X}$.

Marvellous, pafien of the Turkof.r the, II. $49^{6}$
Mafr, 1. 233
Matmoures, what, II, 413
Matacub, fignification of the wid, I. $4^{12}$
Matra, a difrict of the Druzes. II. 190

Mecia, pligrimage to, expences of, II. 25 1. Trade carried on by, II. 274
Medals, ancient, found at Hebren, II. $2 f 4$
Medin, (a coin) II. 423
Mehaflel, what, 1I. 140
Mekins, or Niiometer, I. 39
Melhem, Enir of the Druzes, 1. 48

Me!kana, what, If. 329
Melkites, who, 11. 10
Merkab, II. 175
Mefria, a coin, 11. 423
Mcimia, II. 336
Nivetelis, ivî. Savary's prítions enncerning, cortro. viried, 1. 2j Metcorologiad rbfervations, Syria ac matryweiladaptcd fir, I. 327
Miltary cperati ns of the Turks, confufinn and difcrder: of, I. $1=6$
Mir, I. z=z. II. 66. Cannet tee increafed or áminifined, 11. 407

Nu minaries, eficets of thatr laborers among the Narc'Mles, II, $3=$ Mivegrabrans, who, IT. I15. Arme and ders of, 11. 145. Payef, ibe?
Mohsmmad Bey, furramed Aboudahab, favnuric of Ali Bey, e mimand the ammo. II: I, 12\%. Fiis preertate retreat fremor mafcer, 1. 128. Cátic of the enmity between him and Ali Bey, !. 131. Defeats Ali Bey and takes h ms prifner, 1. ij6. Afis permifion of the Porte to make war ou Daher, I. 143. Beficges Yafa, I. 145. Crueliy of, after tohing that place, I. 149. Death rf, I. 151
Mohammed el Koufan, II. 298
Mokaddamim, who, II. 8. II. 169

Mokatiom mount, I. it
Mokodf, who, II. 311
Money, Turkifh, II. 422. Always werghed, ib d.
Moals of Yata and Ramla, infoleace and tyranny of, II. $3=0$

Mon fic life, real ns why embraced in Syria, II. 354
Moncefqueu, his fyitem if the influence of climate c n:rowcred, 15. 461
Mrad Bey, defeats Ali Bey and takes him prifoner, 1 . 136. Divises the anthonty with lbrahim Bey aficr the death of Nicham $\quad . .2$, I. 552. Diffentions and difputes between it m and the ather Beys, I. 153
M frue of flwere, afrt of h-fpital fr the bl nd, at Cairy, I. 241
ivi hodjir, fignification of the wiod, 1. $41=$
Mutuali, meaning of the w. rd, II. 84

Mutoualis, manners, ch.iracter, and hifory of, 1I. 8 4. Firehundred defear twenty five houfand Druzes and Maronites, 1I. 113

Motion,

I $N \quad D \quad E \quad X$.

Motion of the earth never h art of by the monks of Mar Hanna, 11. 4+4
Mount S.nai, Convent of, II. 35 t . Pilgrimace of the Greeks to, ibid. Life fohe M nks of, II. 353 Mountains of Syria, I. 201. Romantic tcenes they prefent, I. 297. Struature of, I. 301

Mufick, Turkim, II. 438

N.

Nablous, country and town of, II. 301
Nahou, what, II. 446
Nahr Bairout, If. 18;
Nahr el kabir, II. 1
Nahr el kelb, I. 298
Nahr ell leben. I. 297
Nähhr el Sulib, I. 297. II. 185
Najd, great defert fo cailed, I. $3^{3}$;

Naih:d, who, II. 494
Natireans, fee Anlarians.
ivandris, fee Anfarions.
Nafra, (Nazareth) II. $2=9$
Natr n, lakes of defcrived, I. 15
Natareth, fee Nafra
Negres, remarl on the countenances of, J. 80. The ancent Egyptians real negroes, ibid.
Nerkeel, what, II. 109
N:ebuhr, M. antiqu tee difcovered by, at Rufetta, I. 30 Nife, vencration in which it is held by the Egyptians, I. 18. Method of Purifying is waters, I. 20. Pallage of Herodotusconc. rning its antient courfe explained, I. 31. Varicus heights to which it is fupp fed to have rifen explaned, I. ${ }^{6} 6$
Nilumeter, variuus divifions of the, I. 39 0.

Ofor, IT. 29:
Ogouzans, 1. 9 z
Oklals, who, 11. 59
Old man of the muuntain, If. 5
Ophir, remaiks csicerning, II. 292

Orontes, (river) I. 309. II. 155
Oinan made Pacha of Damafcuit uppeti the power of Daher, II. 50. Defeated by Daher, II. 109. Hy his intrigues prevail on Mohaminad Bey to retr at from Damafcus, I. 128
Ofmanles, I. 94

P.

Pachas, power of, 11.376 .384. Political c induct of the Portetwards, II. 380
Pacha of Egypt, little rea! power of, I. 162
Paleftine, 1 mits, foil, and productions of, II. 328. Divifion of, II. 329
Pale Tyrus, 11. 2:6, 217 , 218
Pallas, Dr. ordered by the Emprefs of Ruffia to make a colicetion of all the lan. guages fooken in that emFire, 1. 376
Palmyra, account of the ruins of, II. 277. 282. Account of the journey of Wood and Dawkinsto, from Wood's Puins of Palnyra, II. 279. Defcription of the preient inhabitants

I N D X.

inhabitants fromWood, II. 287. Remarks on, II. 289

Pearants of Egypt, capable of fupporting great fatigue, 1. 202

- of Syria, II. 406. Hard fare of, II. 412
Peoplc, (common) of Egypt, condition of, I. I 87
Pcripiration, profufion and neceffity of in Egypt, I. 68
Pharos, paffage in Homer and M. Savary's ripinion concerning it confidered, I. 24
Phoenicum, oppidum, 11. 292
Pigenns of Alcppo, manner of fending advice by, II. 153 Pilgrimage to Jerufalem, efficaciurnefs of, according to the Greeks, II. 308. Account of, ibid ——— to Mecca, fee Caravan.
Plague, not native in Egypt, I. 253 Pr grefs of it in that country, ibid. and in Syria, I. 256

Plants, exotic will not naturalize in Egypt, I. 71 Polygamy, remarkson, 11.485
Pompey's pillar, I. 6
Population of Cairo and Egypt, I. 236
Pofethion and Epilepfy denoted by the fame word: $n$ Arabic, II. $3^{\text {r }}$
Printing, advantagcous confequences of the mvention of, il, $45^{\circ}$
Propirty, nature of in Turkey, 11. 402
Proverb (Arabic) concerning the Turks, 11, 90 the in habitants of Damafcus, II. 27:2
Mecca, II. a? ${ }^{7}$
——— the Eedouins, H. 411
Provifions, care of the Pachas to keep them cheap in the great towins, II. 416
Ptolemais, See Acre
Pyramid, ctymology of the word, I. 279
Py ramid of heads erected by Mohammad Bey, after taking Yafa, I. 150
Pyramids, obfervations on the, I. 271. Dimenfions of the great one, according to a late menfuration, I. 273 . For what purpofe erected, I. 275 . The great one founded by Cheops, I. zso. Method of forming an idea of their prodigious fize, 1. $2 & 2$
R.

Rab:a what, II. 205
Rabb:t and pigeon iflands, II. 170

Rafars uhat, II. 399
Raguer (le) winu fo called, 1i. 157
Raha (the ancient Jericho) II. $3=1$

Rain, joy of the people when it falls 'n Egypt, I. 56
Ramla (the ancient Aisimathe::) prefent llate of, If. 333. Artiquity at, II, 335 Ralclaen, Il. $=14$
Rar 1 Kanzir, 11.157
Kaf-el-tin, I. 6
Rawazi, who, II. 4.41
Rava, meaning of the word, il. 301
Recifters of births or deathe. prejudices of the Tu:ks againt, 1. 2'3T

Religion

I. N D E X.

Religion of the Turks, obfe:vations on, 11,393
Retaliation, cultom of among the Egyptians and Arabs, I. 203

Rhofus, mountain of, II, 157
Ribei:a (J. Juan) Agent of the Holy Land, his reprefentations to the King of Spain, II. 315
Rofetta, beauty of, I. 9
Rotle, what, II. 4.22
Rouad, II, 17
Ruins, quantities of, in $S y-$ ria, 11. 298

S.

Sabber, fignification of the wora, 1. 144
———, See Ibrahim
S.hel, a difirict of the Drufes, II. 190

Sad el houri, hinory of, If. 79
Safad, II, 230
Safadians, who, I. 125
Saide, Pachatic of. See Acre
——City of, (the ancient Sidon) defeription of, 11. 207. Hanbour of, li. 208. Strength of, 11.2 \%. Trade o:, ibid.
Salmmalek, derivation of the word, II. 400
Samarmar, a kind of bird which deftroys the locuft: [. 307
Sanilin, or fummit of Lebanor, extentive vie.s from, I. 295. Fị̧urative exprefion of the Arabian poit, coricarniag, 1. $3^{16}$. Ohe reations on the clouds there, I. $3+7,350$
Saureur, St. convert of, II. j:3
Sevary, Mi finions of, coniruverted, l. al. Remarlis on his account of Ali Bey, I. 116

Scandaroon, Sec Alexandretta
Sea, furprife of the Bedouin Arabs at feeing it, I. 391
Seed time in Syria, when, 1. 325

Seleucia, ancient, fmall remains of, II. 156
Sequins, value of, II. 424 worn as an ornament by the Turkifh women, ibid.
Serradjes, what, I. 167
Shaik, meaning of the word, I. IO6. II. 15.214.

Shaik Daher. See Daher.
Shaik el Beled, who, I. 106
Shaik ei Djebal, who, II. 5
Shaiks of the Bedouin Arabs, I. 4.00 . Simplicity of their manners, I. 405. Converfation of the author with one, 1.415
Shakif, a dinrict of the Drazes, II. 190
Shamfia, a felt of the Anfarians, II. 5
Shawls, II. 151
Shocting fars, inules killed by, 1. 355
Shont, a diftrict of the 1)ruzes, II. 190

Shiites, II. 84.
Sidon. See Saide
Siege of Yafa, titange manner in which it was conduncd, $1.1+6$
Slaves, ciffercut degrees of eftimatirn in which the Turks hold thofe of differentations, I, 117
Strall pox very fatal in Esupt, I. 243 , llow tre:ted th re, itid.
Soldier, Turliht, good qua-

Sonnites,

I N D E X．

Sonnites，II．St•
Soundia（he ancient Se－ leucia）11． 156.
Sour（the ancient Tyre）II． 21：．Harbour of，ibit． －lqueduct and well there． 11．213，Sce Tyre
Sues，whether practicable to cut a canal through the ilhmas off 1．210．Ac－ count of the ancient canal of，［．212．Nut the an－ cient Aminne，I． 213. Commerce of，Y．214．Bar－ rian fituation of， $1,210$. Catle of，ibid．Road of， 1． 217
Suitan，tities affumed by， 11． 372
Sytia，boundaries of，J．zis？． Ceneral appearance of the country，1．230．Climate of．I．313．Virious pro－ dutions of，I． 317 ．Ani－ mals of，I． 32 i ．Air of， 1．322．Wints of，I． 326. Various races of inh：oi－ tents of，I．3j6．Suil and climate of，11． 3 ：8．An－ nual tribute puat to the treafury of the Sultan， I！．360．Produce of，to thefe who tarm it．If． j 6 I ． Ahiliany cilnolmancat ef， 11．$j 62$ ．Populacion of， 11．jóq．Ancient posu－ loutacts of，11， 365
Sywians，complexir ns and per－ fons of，1．： 60
Syrinc（anticus）no lenger fpacel in any purt of Syria，I：$j^{t} j$
＇T．
Tabaria（iake）I．jo．Li．Tarkmen，I．gr．Manners 107．$=30$

Tabor，mount，II．229．Prof－ pea from，ibid．
Tales and declamations，fond－ net＇s of the＇Turks for，I！． $49+$
Tainyras（river）．Sec Damour Tar（Retaliation in cafes of blood）frictref，with which it is purfued by the Bc－ dicuin Arabs，I． 395
Tarabaloc．Sec 1 rivoly．
Tarcar couricr，IT． 418
＇Iawara（Arabs of T＇or）II． 349
Telah，a diatrict of the Druzes，I！， 190
Tents of the Bedouin Arabs deribed，1． 397 Thander，obfersations on， in Syria and Egypt，i． 352
—．．．，cauics of，1． 353
Tiberias（laloc）．See Ta－ baria，
Tih，defert or，II． 347
＇Tobel，or Teblis，where，II． 2ころ
Tomis，Turkinh，I． 102
I＇raditions of the Eatiern countries，remarks on the， 11．$=43$
Travels，their utility，II． 497
Travellers，exaggerations of， I． 266
Travelling，manner of，in ＇Iumber，I1．千 个：～
Trees，fuluerious effet of， 11． 188
Trial ，how conducted in Turkey，15． 389
Tripoli Pachalic of，limits， fuil，and jroductions of， 11．167．Revenues and ficres of the Pacha of， 11．： 68

City of．II．${ }^{163}$. Commerce or， 11.172 ind cuitcmen of，I． 369 Turks，

I N D E X.

Turks, origin of the, $I$, go Wind, fyftem of its cafes, 'Tyre (now Sour) fignificasion of the name of. IF. 2 IS. Hiftorical account of, ibid. Power and trade of, 1!. 2zo. Mittake of Jofephus, concerning, II. 219. Prophecy concerning, II. 220. See Sour

U.

Villages, number of, in Egypt, 1. 238
Vifitation, convent of the, Il. 178
Volcano antiently in Syria, I. 303 .

Unlucky, days fuperftition of the Turks concerning, I. 215

USury exceffive, in Syria, II. 411.

> W.

Wakf, what, 11. 403
Wald, who, II. $33^{\circ}$
Wali, office and authority of, II. 384
Wiandering life of the Arabs and other erratic tribes, caufes of it, I. 381.
War, manner of declaring it, among the Dries, II. 69
Water pouts in Syria, 1. 340. Caufes of, ibid.

Weights, 'Turkifin, account of, 1I. 386
l. 330

Winds in Egypt, obfervations on the, 1. 55. Hot, or Gamin, I. 60
—_- _in Syria, observations on the, I. $3=6$
Windmill, the only one the Author had pen in Syria and Egypt, where, II. 334 Women, remarks on the fate of, in the Eat, II. 48 :

Y.

Yabna (the ancient Yamnia) II. 337

Yafo, the flange manner in which the liege of it was conducted, I. 146

- trade and revenue of, II. 330. Harbour of, II. 33 I

Yamani party, what, II. 50
Yafula, a feat among the Curds, their religious primciples, I. 375
Yemen, fignification of the word, I. 288
Yerabolos, II. 164

$Z$.

Zahla, village of. II. 189
Zahr mahabou's (a Turkif coin) 11. 424
Ziwan, what, II. 412
Zakkoun, a species of balm, II. 322

Zolata (a Turkifh coin) valaue of, II. $4=3$ $\mathrm{E} R \mathrm{R} A \mathrm{~T}$.
Vor. I. Page 15, line 16, for Tabcuga, read Haouataf:

- 45, - 4, for zuaggons, read rubech carriages.

45, 3, of the note for ruaggons, read chariots.
I 53 , 16, for be bad for bis colleagues, read and bis colleagues.

- 226 , 25 , for tbe mone, read them ore.
— 290 , 3 , from the bottom for gently teey, read tiey gently.
Vo1. II. - $377,-4$ & 6 of the nute, for alpbabee, read alp —29, lif line, dele a fuff made.
- 65 , - 12 , for tributcry, read tributary.
- 66 , - 16, dele of.
—177, - 3 , for urder frorv, read under tbe fiose.
—— 181, - 4, ior quanti:y, read numbcr.
—224, ——firt line of the note dele TLis alfe.
—4cc, note for Salam alai ron, read Su!ari ala! kom.
—425, lat line, for effased, read defoced.

[^0]:    C 3
    Creen

[^1]:    + Barataire, is a fubject of the Turkifh government, privileged by one of the European Minifers, in amity with the Porte, and by that means placed upon a footing with the Franks, with refpect to the payment of duties, &cc. Each Minifter poffefies a certain number of thefe Barats at his difporint, which he cannę: excesd. T.

[^2]:    "In the time of the Califs, fays the author, when Ab " dalah, the Joedder of blood, had murdered every defcend"ant of Ommiah, within his reach, one of that family, "s named Ibrahim, the fon of Soliman, fon of Abd-el-Ma" lek, had the good fortune to efcape, and reach Koufa, "s which he entered in difguife. Knowing no perfon in "s whom he could confide, he fat down under the portico of "s alarge houfe. Soon after the mafter, arriving, followed by * feveral fervants, alighted from his horfe, entered, and, "f feeing the itranger, alked him who he was. I am an un" fortunate man, replies Ibrahim, and requeft from thee "s an afylum. God protect thee, faid the rich man ; enter, "s and remain in peace. Ibrahim lived feveral months in " this houfe, without being queftioned by his hoft. But, "s aflonifhed to fee him every day go out on horfeback, and " return, at the fame hour, he ventured one day to enquire "s the reafon---I have been informed, replied the rich man, "s that a perfon named Ibrahim, the fon of Soliman, is con"cealed in this town; he has flain my father, and I am fearching

[^3]:    Vol. IT.
    H
    nately

[^4]:    (b) Turkifh nippers.

[^5]:    (n) I have thefe facis from a perfon who was intimate

[^6]:    Vol. II.
    Ee
    of

[^7]:    Vol. II,
    Ff
    the

[^8]:    (b) Sacks made of fraw, grcatly ufed in Afia.

